The man denied the allegations and said Hardison made the accusations to get custody of one of their children. A review of the cell phone camera footage contradicted Hardison's claims of rape and showed the two had consensual sex, police said.

Hardison was arraigned on the charge yesterday, the same day she and five others faced a preliminary hearing on charges they assaulted another man Hardison had accused of sexual assault.'

New Zealand Teenager admits making up false rape claim because she liked the attention

anthony · 6 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Auckland, May 4 (IANS) A New Zealand teenager has admitted she falsely accused a man of raping her.

Christchurch District Court Judge Stephen Erber Tuesday told the 19-year-old student that her lies had “devalued the currency” for women who made genuine complaints of rape, New Zealand Herald reported.

Erber said that people may look at other women’s complaints sceptically because of her actions.

The teenager pleaded guilty in court to the charge of making a false statement.

“In explanation, she stated she did it because she liked the attention,” Constable Michael Tualii, the police prosecutor, was quoted as telling the court.'

Two Women Face Charges for False Report

anthony · 6 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two women are now facing felony charges after filing a false rape report this weekend in Fort Smith. Police arrested 19-year-old Heather Smith and her 21-year-old roommate Jeni Melton, after they claimed two unidentified men came into their apartment and raped Smith.
...
The women told police they had left Roosters around 3 a.m. and shortly after they arrived at their residents on Birnie Avenue, two men came into their home uninvited. According to the report, one suspect pinned Melton to the floor, while the second raped Smith in a back bedroom.
...
After several interviews and a 12-hour investigation, both men were released and will not face any charges. An additional witness to the incident came forward and police discovered major discrepancies in the initial allegations.

Smith and Melton were re-interviewed, arrested and charged with Filing a False Police Report, which is a felony. Both are being held in the Sebastian County Detention Center without bond.'

Canada: Women's program cuts raise feminist ire

anthony · 6 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Harper government's latest showdown with women's rights groups, suggests the time has come for Canadian women -- and men -- to reclaim the word feminist. Bring it back to its mainstream roots.

A day after Conservative Senator Nancy Ruth warned aid groups that they risk a backlash if they don't "shut the f--up," news reports revealed Status of Women funding for at least 14 women's groups wasn't renewed for the current fiscal year.

According to the government, these organizations are victims of limited resources, even though they do valuable work that advances the cause of women's health, rights and equality.

So what does feminism have to do with it?

If the word were used properly, there would be less of a divide that occurs when programs rightly or wrongly get cut. Feminism simply means a belief that all people are equal, regardless of gender.

Most voting Canadians are feminists, they just might not know it. Even many men are feminists by the true definition of the word. Anyone who believes it's wrong to discriminate against the opposite sex because of their gender, falls into this category, whether they want to admit it or not.'

Harvard Crimson: Men Champion Women's Cause

anthony · 6 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'eminism is a word that some people wouldn't touch with a 10-foot pole. Though it is sometimes perceived as a unilateral campaign against men, women's rights and gender equality groups are increasingly presenting it as a movement in which people of all genders can be involved. Many scholars, activists, and student leaders are coming to redefine the term. Many of these are men.

"As a guy, I'm happy to be a feminist," says Hugo Van Vuuren '07, a workshop leader at the Office of Sexual Response and Prevention and the co-founder of MenSpeakUp, a website that promotes gender equality. "All it means is that you believe in equal rights."
...
Both Marine and Castro Samayoa suggest ways for men to become respectfully involved and supportive of feminism.

Marine says that men can be more effective by confronting other men about issues of gender equality.

"When a man addresses another man about a problem in society, he may be more likely to see it as something pertinent to his own life than if a woman brought it up," she says.

Castro Samayoa notes that men, like those coming from the middle of the bell curve, need to have their assumptions about feminism challenged in order to take an active stance in the movement.'

Kansas U takes steps on Title IX issue

anthony · 6 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kansas Athletics has reached an agreement with the government addressing a complaint that it discriminates against male athletes.

KU will have to submit documentation and a plan to ensure it is in full compliance with the law as part of the agreement, which resolves a Title IX complaint filed last November.

The agreement doesn't mean KU is out of compliance with Title IX, but was a mutually agreed upon course of action to resolve the complaint between KU and the Office of Civil Rights, which oversees Title IX regulations.

Ron Neugent, a Wichita dentist and former KU swimmer who was a member of the 1980 Olympic team, filed the initial complaint against KU using the civil rights legislation long used to bring about equality for women.

At Kansas Athletics today, unlike many cases in the past, men are the under-represented gender. Though men and women are enrolled at KU in about equal rates, women comprise nearly 55 percent of the total student-athletes at the university.

KU eliminated its men's swimming and men's tennis programs in 2001, citing budget concerns at the time.'

"Meet the Unemployable Man"

Matt · 7 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The betting is that the Labor Department's Friday snapshot of the job market will show that employers added workers in April, perhaps even that the unemployment rate fell.

That would be good news, but not good enough. It's hard to exaggerate how bad the job market is. Here's one arresting fact: One of every five men 25 to 54 isn't working.

Even more alarming, the jobs that many of these men, or those like them, once had in construction, factories and offices aren't coming back. "A good guess...is that when the economy recovers five years from now, one in six men who are 25 to 54 will not be working," Lawrence Summers, the president's economic adviser, said the other day.
...
For 50 years, the fraction of men with jobs in what once were prime earning years has been trending down. Over the same decades, the share of women who work has been rising, a significant social change that lately has cushioned the blow of Dad's unemployment for many couples.

Women have suffered less in this recession. They were more likely to be in health care and other jobs that weren't hit as hard as construction and manufacturing. They are increasingly likely to have the education so often required to get or keep a good job these days.
...
Each approach has shortcomings. So does doing nothing. Sidelining a huge part of an entire generation of men would waste human potential, create economic misery for their families and fuel political discontent.'

Why is Hollywood hot for circumcision?

anthony · 7 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'News of Sandra Bullock's choice to have her adopted son circumcised has tickled the Jewish media: Isn't it cool that non-Jews are getting their kids circumcised, too? And not just the snip-n-clip way, but the Jewish way, with a mohel.

What makes it more interesting, though, is that a high-profile celeb like Bullock is taking up the ritual during a period of sharp decline. According to a 2008 L.A. Times article, ritual circumcision of American boys dropped from 85% in 1965 to 56% in 2005. Unless performed for religious reasons, the story said, many parents chose to opt out because of questionable medical benefits and the stigma of genital mutilation. Then came a startling new development when a study out of Africa found that circumcised males were "51% to 60% less likely to acquire HIV from heterosexual vaginal sex with an infected woman."'

UK scientist discusses general measured IQ differences between the sexes

Anonymous · 8 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is my contention - based on a lifetime of academic research - that there is an explanation and I advance it all too aware of the howls of feminist outrage I am about to unleash. So, here goes: one of the main reasons why there are not more female science professors or chief executives or Cabinet ministers is that, on average, men are more intelligent than women. Nor do the shocks to the noisy advocates of equal opportunities stop there, I'm afraid.
...
For instance, at the near-genius level (an IQ of 145), brilliant men outnumber brilliant women by 8 to one. That's statistics, not sexism.

In this context, Professor Greenfield's indignation that only one in ten science professors is female doesn't seem all that bad. It also goes some way to explaining why, in almost 110 years of Nobel Prize history, only two women have ever won the Prize for physics, only four have won the Prize for chemistry and why no women at all have ever won the coveted Fields Medal for mathematics in eight decades of trying.
...

By all means, take steps to ensure that boys and girls get the same opportunities in education, but let's also accept that those same opportunities will not produce the same outcomes. Men will always outnumber women in certain fields and vice versa.

My argument isn't based on crude chauvinist doctrine (although I'm quite sure my opponents will disagree) but on decades of research, relatively simple statistics and an understanding of the law of averages.

Of course, just because men, on average, are more intelligent then women, doesn't mean there are no individually brilliant women around.

If I'm right, it doesn't mean there will be no female professors of physics; it just means we should accept that there will be fewer of them. Nor does it mean that a woman will never win the Fields Medal for mathematics; it just means that we live in a world where such an event is very, very unlikely.

I realise my views are unfashionable, just as I realise the juggernaut of sexual equality and political correctness will take an awful lot of stopping.'

Not content to allow MGM, now the AAP wants to curb the prohibition on FGM, too

Matt · 8 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA email:

We thought America's baby girls were safe from genital cutting, until now...

Last week, the American Academy of Pediatrics issued a new policy statement proposing changes to the Female Genital Mutilation (FGM) Act, a law that has prohibited any form of FGM in the United States since 1996.

But now the AAP wants to change the law to allow a "ritual nick" of girls' genitals, so families whose cultures accept FGM don't send their daughters overseas for the full genital cutting procedure.

At Intact America, we know that any form of genital cutting of babies is wrong – ethically, morally, and medically.

We can't afford to allow our leaders to destroy the progress we've made in outlawing genital mutilation for our baby girls. We must act quickly – send a message demanding that the AAP revoke its policy statement IMMEDIATELY.

For years, we've been focused on male circumcision because we believed the horror of female genital mutilation had been outlawed forever in the United States.

But now those protections are at risk.

We must do EVERYTHING in our power to stop the AAP from sanctioning the cutting of our baby girls.

Tell the AAP to revoke its statement immediately and remind the members of its Committee on Bioethics that any form of genital cutting, whether male or female, is unnecessary, harmful, and ethically wrong.

You can also go one step further by spreading the word to your friends and family or sharing this action on Facebook and Twitter.

Thank you for all your help in this critical moment.

Sincerely,

Georganne Chapin
Executive Director, Intact America
www.intactamerica.org

On this Mother's Day, consider why it was originally conceived

Matt · 8 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Origins discussed here. Originally it seems it was meant as a way to unite mothers against war so their sons would not be killed (and what MRA wouldn't support that?), yet it fast morphed into what it is now: another commercialized holiday. In contrast, Father's Day remains just another typical day at the shop.

I can't include an excerpt from the MSNBC page since it's a Flash presentation, but the part of the Wikipedia entry on it referring to Julia Ward Howe is here. It says she was a feminist and indeed, maybe she was. I doubt she was quite the same type of feminist though as we see today (who cares nothing about what happens to men in war), given she was forming her new holiday around the idea of saving men from war. Excerpt:

'The "Mother's Day Proclamation" by Julia Ward Howe was one of the early calls to celebrate Mother's Day in the United States. Written in 1870, Howe's Mother's Day Proclamation was a pacifist reaction to the carnage of the American Civil War and the Franco-Prussian War. The Proclamation was tied to Howe's feminist belief that women had a responsibility to shape their societies at the political level.'

The MSNBC Flash story shows how one of Howe's daughters became so incensed at how her mother's vision of Mother's Day was exploited and misused that it eventually drove her insane, leading her to die in a mental institution.

Other people, it seems, fast learned that one could make a fortune off of a general concept of a day to honor mothers rather than so much as a penny off the actual intention of the holiday, which was to keep their sons from getting killed in war. So they discarded this inconvenient truth and rushed to their cash registers. And there you have the priorities of nymphotropism laid bare, fast translated into profits.

Obama nominates Elena Kagan for Supreme Court

Matt · 10 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. My prediction of 4/22 was wrong. I didn't think he'd tap a person already in his administration for the position. She's currently the US solicitor-general, who is the top lawyer for civil cases the United States is involved in either as a plaintiff, respondent, or appellant. But, he did. One part of the prediction I did get right though was that the nominee would be female. No man would even be considered under the current "paradigm of thinking" that pervades Washington at the moment.

Ms. Kagan's Wikipedia entry is here. As I mentioned in my comments of 4/22, there is nothing in the entry regarding her views on repro. rights, but Obama did say he would nominate someone with a strong history of supporting them. She has never been a presiding judge in her career, so it's unlikely she can have developed an "official record" one way or another.

Obviously she still has the confirmation process to go through. When that will happen, I don't know. But I do know this: This is a very good window of opportunity for MRAs to get male repro. rights issues voiced to her and to our representatives.

Undoubtedly she will be asked questions about her views regarding many things and like other candidates for the SC, undoubtedly she will avoid answering them, saying she has no specific cases before her, etc., etc. But if even one of those questions asks her of her views regarding the imbalance of repro. rights between men and women under the law, it will at least get the issue on the tube. At the moment, it doesn't get any air time at all.

So stay tuned! There's an opportunity here for activism we don't want to pass up.

UK: Facebook hacker jailed after falsely accusing boyfriend of rape

anthony · 10 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Zoe Williams was described as "really wicked" by the judge, who jailed her for four months.

A court heard she tried to set up her ex-boyfriend partner after accused him of raping her several times after the end of their five-year relationship in 2007.

After the false allegations, the man was arrested and held in custody for eight hours as he protested his innocence.

Williams, 23, of Chard, Somerset, later admitted concocting the message and prosecutor Caroline Bolt said the rape allegations were not proceeded with.

Williams, who has since married and has a baby, admitted attempting to pervert the course of justice at Taunton Crown Court.

She was caught when police seized her computer and proved she had written a message warning herself to drop the rape allegations.

Ed Boyce, mitigating, said: "She felt the police were not taking seriously the complaints of rape she made to them, so she decided to invent this message and sent it to herself in the hope that it would strengthen her complaint. It has done completely the opposite and she regretted what she did."'

"90 feared dead after Siberian mine blast" - no mention of "men"

Matt · 11 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The "forbidden word" is of course not even mentioned in the article. Was there even one female miner in the blast? Excerpt:

'Rescuers were searching desperately for 58 people still missing in a Russian coal mine yesterday as the death toll from twin methane blasts rose to 32.

Hopes were fading of finding survivors more than 450 metres underground at the Raspadskaya pit in Siberia, Russia's largest underground mine. Eighteen of the victims have been rescuers who died in the second explosion on Sunday after going in search of miners trapped by the first blast late on Saturday.

Twelve miners died and 71 were hurt in that explosion as 370 people worked underground at the mine in the Kemerovo region. Sergei Shoigu, the Emergency Situations Minister, said that the body of the 31st victim, a rescue worker, had been recovered as a large-scale search mission resumed.

He said that 30 teams of rescuers were searching "in all directions" in the mine after power and ventilation supplies were restored following the second explosion. But he cautioned that high methane levels and rising floodwater in the mine's deepest shafts were hampering their work, adding that the rescue mission had 48 hours at most to find anyone alive.'

"Partner Abuse": Peer-reviewed journal launched

Matt · 11 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

A new peer-reviewed journal on DV has been announced here, which aims to be apolitical in its approach to the matter. One article published in its second issue entitled "Gender Symmetry or Asymmetry in Intimate Partner Victimization? Not an Either/Or Answer" can be downloaded from here (sorry about the pop-up ad, but it's on a free hosting site). People involved especially in DV issues, this new journal should be a great resource for you. Article excerpt:

'Gender differences in physical victimization, sexual victimization, injury, fear, and depressive symptoms were assessed in a representative community sample of 453 young couples. The prevalence of any physical victimization experienced by women and men did not differ (29% vs. 30%), but men reported more severe physical victimization than women. No difference in prevalence of overall injury was observed, but more women reported severe injury than men. Almost twice as many women as men reported being sexually victimized (28% vs. 15%). Physically victimized females reported more fear of their partners than physically victimized men and than nonvictimized women. Physically victimized men and women, sexually victimized men and women, and physically injured men and women all had more depressive symptoms than those men and women who were not victimized or injured. Severely victimized women were 3 times more likely than severely victimized men to have depression scores in the clinical range (27% vs. 9%). In sum, whether one finds gender symmetry regarding aggression and its correlates depends on more than simple prevalence of aggression by men and women.'

Melissa Huckaby finally confesses, pleads guilty to murder of girl

Matt · 11 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Finally after a year of lying about it, she comes clean and confesses to the crime - in exchange for having the rape and drugging charges dropped. Story here. Excerpt:

'STOCKTON, Calif. -- A California Sunday school teacher accused of kidnapping, raping and killing an 8-year-old playmate of her daughter, then stuffing the body in a suitcase, pleaded guilty Monday to murder.

Melissa Huckaby, 29, entered the guilty plea in San Joaquin County Superior Court to a charge of first-degree murder with a special circumstance of kidnapping.

As part of a deal with prosecutors, all other charges -- including two involving rape and lewd or lascivious conduct with a child under 14 -- were dropped, according to Assistant Court Executive Officer Sharon Morris.

The initial charges in the grand jury indictment last year would have made her eligible for the death penalty if convicted. Her trial had been set to begin in October.'

Golf and fishing are equal-opportunity employers for liars

Matt · 11 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This is not really even an MRA point-up; more along the lines of humor. Everyone it seems is susceptible to lying/cheating at two things: golf and fishing-- yet even women. Bad that it happened, good she got caught before she threw the game too much, lesson learned (if she's smart). Excerpt:

'We've brought you plenty of stories of noble, honest golf efforts in recent months, including last week's tale of a college golfer who deliberately shanked a shot to allow his competitor to win, so it's only fair we tell you a story that didn't turn out quite so well.

Annie Brophy, a senior golfer at Notre Dame playing in Saturday's NCAA Central Regional, busted out of the gate at the difficult Otter Creek Golf Course in Indiana with an astonishing 30 on the front nine, including five birdies and an eagle.

Well, at least it would have been amazing -- had it actually happened. Turns out that while Brophy was keeping an accurate score on her own card, she was flat-out making up scores for volunteers to post as she went along. You know, just like the rest of us do when we're playing with family.

...NCAA rules officials caught up with Brophy on the 11th hole to keep an eye on her -- and what they saw confirmed their suspicions that something freaky was going on.
...
After just a couple more holes, the NCAA had had enough. They caught her on the 14th hole and yanked her off the course, disqualifying her for unsportsmanlike conduct. Nancy Cross, chair of the NCAA Division I Women's Golf Committee, indicated that she believed Brophy simply was having a little fun, and had no idea of the effect her number-jumbling was having on the rest of the field.

Book reviews: "The Emotionally Unavailable Man: A Blueprint for Healing" and "The Male Brain"

Matt · 11 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Reviews by J. Steven Svoboda:

"The Emotionally Unavailable Man: A Blueprint for Healing"

The Emotionally Unavailable Man: A Blueprint for Healing. By Patti Henry. Highland City, Florida: Rainbow Books, Incorporated. 2004. 177 pp. (men's book) + 83 pp. (women's book).www.allbookstores.com. $16.95. Also available from same publisher as set of 9 unabridged CD's for $24.95.

Psychotherapist Patti Henry has finally written her first book, and it turns out to be good enough and different enough to justify being reviewed here despite its appearance in 2004. (Henry only sent me the review copy recently and I was previously unaware of this book.) "As a psychotherapist in private practice…" she writes, "men keep coming to my office, one after another, hurting, wounded… but mostly unhappy…. They feel like they are trapped, dying somehow. They feel like little boys in grown up bodies." As we read the book, we come to realize that virtually all men are in some ways emotionally unavailable.

Henry believes that what she calls our culture's "tradition of teaching our little boys to cut off from their feelings" helps create problems that interfere with men's emotional development. And so we have ended up in a situation today where "women seem to have gained some advantage over the last 60 years. They have their emotions---little girls are not taught to cut of from that part of themselves—and they have the business world, too. Men, however, have arrived somewhat at a disadvantage. They have the business world. Period."

The author really grasps in a way I do not remember ever seeing concretized so particularly how women can—intentionally or otherwise—create what she calls a "hurricane" that is "powerful and it is relentless," that shames and terrifies men and shuts them down. There are many ways to avoid the hurricane, but it is often hard for men to do as it may feel familiar from a childhood hurricane created by a raging, addicted, or overly powerful parent. Also, many ways to avoid the hurricane are dysfunctional and counterproductive--raging, overreacting, passive aggression, running away. If men can learn to face the storm, they can bring themselves into full adulthood. Henry writes that to face the storm, we need certain tools, including the realization that we are not victims, the realization that we also have needs, and the need to set healthy boundaries.

Just the realization, "I am not a victim" can be such a powerful statement to release us into adulthood, as Henry relates it did for her. As far as boundaries go, Henry provides an apposite metaphor: "I liken good relationships to sending a fax. You send your partner a fax and you get to keep the original." She then gives the reader seven detailed steps in setting and enforcing meaningful, realistic boundaries.

Most of us had programming laid in at childhood that may not be serving us any more. One of Henry's more inspired metaphors: allowing your (often counterproductive) childhood programming to continue to run things is like letting a five-year-old drive your car.

Chapter 8 contains no fewer than—count 'em!—twenty-eight suggested methods for reconnecting with one's feelings, each explained in detail. Clearly, this author really cares. Suggestion 2: Inventory your losses. Suggestion 5: Write a letter to each of your parents. Suggestion 10: Think About Your Own Children (but why does the author assume all readers necessarily have kids?). Suggestion 14: Practice One-Sentence Confrontations. Suggestion 21: Pray, Sit with Nature, Meditate. Henry earns a lot of points in my book for repeatedly urging readers to attend the Mankind Project's New Warrior Weekend, which--as is probably true for virtually every man who has done it—is one of the most important, powerful things I ever did.

Henry provides a fair amount of atypical advice, as when she counsels her readers not to take items off the table. In other words, if there is some issue that keeps coming up between you and your partner, it needs to be worked out, no matter how trivial it seems, and should not be submerged as it is bound to surface later in a more virulent form. Another example is her advice not to compromise, to go for a win-win but never to agree to something just to end a conflict when your agreement is not genuine. "Compromise doesn't work when it means we take turns losing," she memorably summarizes, later adding even more succinctly, "DO NOT say yes to something when the answer is no." Finally, Henry believes in the occasional use of retraction, when you agree to something that you later realize just doesn't work for you and when there is an important principle at stake for you that you can't override and be true to yourself. The author provides a memorable story of how she uninvited her mother to witness the birth of her child!

This is literally a two-sided book. Start reading from one side and it's a book for men; start from the other side and it's a shorter book for women. Everything I have discussed so far is from the men's book, and really Henry's focus is on men. The women's book enables female partners of emotionally unavailable men to support their partners during the process she outlines. She does provide some memorable points in the women's book too. For example, don't wait to start your life until you have a partner. When you have a partner, neither make him your "project" nor live parallel lives with him. Rather, stay connected while holding onto your individuality. The author also looks at and even lists the numerous "secondary gains" that can hold us back from improving a relationship due to comfort and vested interest in the status quo, even though it may be miserable. She also provides sage advice on overcoming resistances, on creating safety for one's partner, and on how love in a relationship should be conditional, not unconditional (another unconventional yet wise point in her favor).

Some examples fall flat or just don't seem to quite fit. But those that do are often stunning. The other odd thing I noticed is the author's repeated assumption all her readers have kids, which doesn't interfere with the flow of the book or invalidate her points but is just a bit jarring.

Henry's originality means that the numerous examples are fresh, often taken from the author's own life or those of her clients (suitably anonymized of course), or even from Sea World (her example of how Shamu is incrementally changed to do the trick where he leaps out of the water is simply stunning). In a word, what is most special about this book is its sympathy for men—Henry really gets men—and its originality. This is a book not to be missed—and you can listen to it in the car if you prefer that to reading.

"The Male Brain"

The Male Brain. By Louann Brizendine, M.D. New York: Broadway Books, 2010. www.crownpublishing.com. 271 pp. $24.99.

Psychiatrist Louann Brizendine, currently of the University of California, San Francisco and formerly of Harvard Medical School, has published the predictable followup to her bestselling book The Female Brain. This may be the most accessible book I have ever read that has slightly more than half its length taken up with appendices, notes, references, and the index. In 135 easy-to-read pages, Brizendine lays out the basic functioning of the male brain. Despite the number of books addressing these general topics, the author stands out due to her knack both for memorable formulations of information and for bringing up little-discussed aspects of the brain and tying them into everyday aspects of life to which we can relate.

Her prefatory material is fabulous in itself. We get two pages summarizing the ten principal areas of the male brain, followed by a three-page "cast of neurohormone characters" that sets the tone as it gives us the list of players as if we were in the theatre: "Testosterone—Zeus. King of the male hormones, he is dominant, aggressive, and all-powerful…." Or the less familiar "Mullerian Inhibiting Substance (MIS)—Hercules. He's strong, tough, and fearless. Also known as the Defeminizer, he ruthlessly strips away all that is feminine from the male…." One more: "Androstenedione—Romeo. The charming seducer of women. When released by the skin as a pheromone he does more for a man's sex appeal than any aftershave or cologne." Next are two pages summarizing the phases of a man's life.

Then the book proper begins! Brizendine explains that male and female brains to differ considerably. "In the female brain, the hormones estrogen, progesterone, and oxytocin predispose brain circuits toward female-typical behaviors. In the male brain, it's testosterone, vasopressin, and a hormone called MIS (Mullerian inhibiting substance) that have the earliest and most enduring effects…. We have learned that men use different brain circuits to process spatial information and solve emotional problems." The author aligns her chapters with the different principal phases of a male brain's life---the boy brain, the teen boy brain, the mating brain, the brain below the belt, the daddy brain, manhood, and the mature male brain.

In the chapters on the boy brain and the teen boy brain, the doctor provides tales drawn from her own experiences raising boys. By the time we get to the mating brain, things are really starting to heat up. She provides a detailed travelogue of an imaginary train trip along the brain circuits of "the male brain in love." One key area of the brain involved in pair bonding is the ventral tegmental area or VTA, whose cells manufacture dopamine, "the brain's feel-good neurotransmitter for motivation and reward…. Filled with dopamine, the train would speed along his brain circuits to the next station, the NAc, or nucleus accumbens, the area for anticipation of pleasure and reward." And later, "[a]s the train sped into the final station, the caudate nucleus, or CN, the area for memorizing the look and identity of whoever is giving you pleasure," we'd see al the tiniest details about the woman who started the train going in the first place.

Interestingly, to reach orgasm, "both men and women must first turn off a few parts of the brain—like the amygdale, the brain's danger and alert center—and the areas for self- consciousness and worrying—the anterior cingulated cortex, or ACC." Now there's a topic that I haven't heard feminists talk about much. Although I had heard this before, I appreciated the author's reminder that, women's complaints that men don't care enough about them to stay awake and cuddle to the contrary, "the truth is that the hormone oxytocin is to blame for a man's so-called postcoital narcolepsy."

Being a father myself, it is fascinating to read about the daddy brain and then to consider how nature has equipped males to do such different tasks—fight, conquer a woman, and then nurture children. Certain brain circuits are designed to induce men to fall in love with their children. "[C]lose physical contact releases oxytocin and pleasure hormones in dads, too, bonding parent to child." And of course, as the author reminds us, men are critical to a child's well-being. Active discipline from fathers plays a crucial role in a child's success in life, and a girl's close relationship with her father can set the stage for getting along well with men throughout her life.

In the manhood chapter, the author explains that both men and women have both a mirror-neuron system (MNS) and a temporal-parietal junction system (TPJ) but the female brain stays in the MNS longer while the male brain quickly switches over to the problem solving, action-oriented TPJ. These different brain circuits function adaptively and helpfully, for the most part, even though in modern society we may sometimes deny certain aspects of the behaviors they produce. The TPJ induces men to, for example, aggressively stare down guys they may catch checking out their wives, and women— whatever they may say—generally feel flattered by such behavior. Like it or not, "[r]esearch shows that angry men get noticed more—not only by other men but also by women." Not only that, but "couples who argue have a better chance of staying together."

Finally, the mature male brain has grown in comfort with its established rank in whatever hierarchies apply to the man's life, and it feels less called to prove itself than it did when it was younger.

What a great book! A quick, easy, and pleasant read, yet a very enlightening and instructive one. The model of integrating small amounts of core text with large quantities of prefatory and supplementary material is one other authors should consider adopting. Don't miss this fabulous work. Three cheers!

Scientists to test ultrasound as a male contraceptive dschmidt · 12 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. University of North Carolina researchers are investigating using ultrasound as a safe, reliable, reversible birth control method for men. Excerpt:

'Scientists are beginning tests to see if ultrasound can be used as a reversible contraceptive for men.

Based on early work, University of North Carolina experts believe a blast of ultrasound to the testes can safely stop sperm production for six months.

With a grant of $100,000 from the Bill & Melinda Gates Foundation they will push ahead with more clinical trials.

The researchers ultimately hope it could offer a new birth control option to couples throughout the world.

Lead researcher Dr James Tsuruta said: "We think this could provide men with up to six months of reliable, low-cost, non-hormonal contraception from a single round of treatment.'

F&F: 2 More Bills Pass California Senate Judiciary Committee

Matt · 12 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers & Families has co-sponsored and/or been instrumental in introducing and working for the passage of five family court reform bills in the current California legislative session. Our bills address child custody reform, child support reform, protection from family court financial abuses, and others. Below is our progress:

1) SB 1188–Passed Senate Judiciary Committee by unanimous consent

2) SB 1355–Passed Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously

3) AB 2416–Passed Assembly by unanimous consent, passed Assembly Judiciary Committee by unanimous consent

4) SB 578–Passed Senate Judiciary Committee

5) SB 580–Passed Senate Judiciary Committee

These victories did not happen by accident. They are the result of months and years of planning and lobbying by Fathers & Families' legislative representative Michael Robinson and assistant legislative representative Nicole Silverman.'

Relatedly: Mass. Shared Parenting Bill Clears Next Hurdle, Is Extended by Judiciary Committee

Abuse Arrest Policies Push Gender Bias: Report

Matt · 12 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, May 12 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- Biased domestic violence arrest policies are violating the civil rights of innocent Americans and allowing abusers to go free, according to a report released today. The report, "Predominant Aggressor Policies: Leaving the Abuser Unaccountable?" charges such policies violate 14th Amendment equal protection guarantees and worsen the cycle of violence.

The analysis is published by SAVE – Stop Abusive and Violent Environments, and is available online: http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/Predominant-Aggressor-Policies [.pdf file]

The report analyzes domestic violence policies in 23 states designed to guide law enforcement personnel in arrest decisions. The document calls on states with predominant aggressor laws to repeal such policies.

The predominant aggressor report follows SAVE's recent release of "Assaulting our Rights: How Domestic Violence Laws Curtail Our Fundamental Freedoms," which concludes abuse laws result in the curtailment of civil liberties of over 2 million Americans each year:
http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/SAVE-Assault-Civil-Rights [.pdf file]

Research shows men and women are equally likely to instigate acts of partner aggression: http://www.csulb.edu/~mfiebert/assault.htm. But in Roanoke, Va., police officers are instructed to assess the "Height/weight of parties," a criterion that openly biases the officer to arrest the male.'

Women increasingly susceptible to "men's diseases"

Matt · 12 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kay McCaw was under unbearable pressure. She was going through a divorce, selling her home and working 16 hours a day.

'I was coming home from work, crying with exhaustion and stress, then pulling myself together and getting onto the computer until two in the morning,' says the 45-year-old from Frimley, Surrey.

'My job as a PA for an international tobacco company involved dealing with people across different time zones all over the world and there was no respite from the e-mails and faxes.

...

While it's well-known that job stress is linked to heart problems in men, as the Mail reported last week, researchers have found it affects women, too.

A Danish study showed that women in high-pressure jobs are twice as likely to suffer from heart disease, with those under 50 at greatest risk.

Stress is thought to have a direct effect on the heart rate. It's also indirectly linked to heart disease.

'People who are stressed are more likely to drink too much, to smoke, to eat junk food and to avoid exercise,' explains Fotini rozakeas, a cardiac nurse at the British Heart Foundation. These are all classic risk factors for heart disease.'

Point being that it's what one does and is expected to do that shortens one's expected lifespan. In the past, society just expected men to drop dead of things like heart attacks, etc. Now that women are beginning to experience the same thing, maybe, just maybe, society will start paying more attention to the problem of work-life balance - well, at least for women, anyway.

How Your Son Could End Up on the Sex Offender List

Matt · 12 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let's say your son turns 18. He gets a job at the local carnival, running the ride where the kids lie face down and spin around till they shriek with delight (or puke). Before each ride he has to buckle the kids in so they don't fly out. But then -- tragedy strikes.

Oh, don't worry. Nobody goes flying. They're buckled just fine. But one girl does tell her mother, "He touched my bottom!"

...

The next day the police take him in for questioning. They ask him the same thing, this time with the videotape running. He gives them the same answer.

It is considered his confession. He is convicted of "Indecent Assault and Battery on a Child." He goes to jail for nine months. He is put on the Sex Offender Registry -- for life.

Meantime, a few years later, your younger son is now 18. He's at the urinal in the school bathroom during a weekend service project. A girl too young to read bursts in and he yells, "Out out out! Get out!" She starts crying and leaves. Her mom is concerned. The police are called. Was he in the men's room with a girl?

Well, yes. Since everyone agrees the girl was not touched, he is convicted of "Visual Sexual Aggression Against a Child" -- the crime of having a child see his genitals. He does six months in jail. He's placed on the Sex Offender Registry for the next 10 years.'

YouTube: Canadian Senator Ann Cools telling police the truth about DV

Matt · 12 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Marc A.:

Canadian Senator Ann Cools was the first black women in the Canadian Parliament and did lots of work for battered women and gender equality. But, like Erin Pizzy, Patricia Overberg and many others, she eventually saw the myths, lies and distortions being propagated by the movement she was part of. Since then, she has spoken out for battered men for years. Here she is a few years ago talking to Toronto Police Services about how the domestic violence shelter movement is spreading myths, how in reality men and women initiate the violence at equal rates, and about gender-selective prosecution. Years ago, NCFM awarded Senator Cools its annual Award for Excellence in the Advancement of Men's issues.

Ed. note: Another YT channel highlighting men's issues holds this same video.

Disabled lawyer faces sexual harassment charges over uncontrollable spastic movements

Matt · 12 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. First off, those not knowing what cerebral palsy is should read about it here, with an emphasis on reading about its symptoms. A person with a bad case of this is indeed subject to spastic and uncontrolled movements. If they result in embarrassing situations, then they do. People who have any understanding of this will know it and act accordingly.

But since the person in this case with the condition is male and the person inconvenienced and/or embarrassed (nay, offended) by the symptoms thereof is female, he is facing criminal charges for exhibiting symptoms of a nervous system condition over which he has no control.

In short, this is about as clear-cut a case of legalized oppression of males as I can imagine. It is in the same category of what happened to black men if they even so much as accidentally looked at a white woman during the days of slavery here in the US. Article:

'A disabled lawyer accused of touching the rear end of a Taxi and Limousine Commission judge is blaming it on his cerebral palsy.

Queens prosecutors have charged Hippocrate Mertsaris, 35, with sexual abuse and sexual harassment for allegedly grabbing the woman's inner thigh and buttocks during a meeting in her Kew Gardens offices.

Mertsaris' lawyer, Wyatt Gibbons, admits his client touched the woman but denies it was sexual.

"He whacked her in the butt but it wasn't sexual abuse," Gibbons said. "He has spastic movements."

Gibbons says the East Elmhurst man uses a wheelchair and gets around with the help of a health care aide.

"If he was starving to death and had a hamburger in front of him he couldn't lean over to pick it up," Gibbons said.

A hearing on the matter is scheduled for June 15.'

IA makes its 25k signature goal, delivers petition

Matt · 12 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA newsletter:

'In late April, I spoke via conference call with Dr. Peter Kilmarx, Chief of HIV/AIDS Prevention at the Centers for Disease Control, and several other officials from the CDC, to urge them to refrain from recommending routine circumcision for baby boys. I told them Intact America had a petition from thousands of you who felt the same way.

On May 6th, we followed up by sending 25,278 signatures to the CDC to drive home the message.

I want to thank you and the tens of thousands of intactivists who added your names to this petition calling for the protection of our baby boys.

It's not over between us and the CDC. We'll be in touch to let you know its response to our petition.'

IA's website is http://www.intactamerica.org/

Teacher cleared of molestation: ‘Nobody wins’

Matt · 12 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

In this case, the teacher was female. Read the story. See how quickly such things spin out of control. And after half a million bucks to legal defense and two years under suspicion and scrutiny, finally she is found not guilty at trial, but of course will be suspect for life - just like any man in that position. Whether a man would have been exonerated under the same circumstances however is highly doubtful. Excerpt:

'Now that a jury has said “not guilty,” now that she is finally free of allegations of child abuse that have hung over her for two years, a former kindergarten teacher from Georgia can reveal that one of the three children who testified against her was her own daughter.

“My own daughter,” Tonya Craft confirmed to TODAY’s Meredith Vieira Wednesday in New York.

“The only thing she had ever said was that I had put medicine on her,” Craft added. But taken along with the testimony of two other young girls, it seemed momentous to prosecutors.
...
Late Tuesday afternoon, the 37-year-old Craft had nearly collapsed in a Ringgold, Ga., courtroom as the jury that had listened to five weeks of testimony declared her not guilty on all 22 counts of molestation and abuse lodged against her two years ago when she was a kindergarten teacher at Chickamauga Elementary School.

The charges had torn the small town apart. Craft’s attorney, Demosthenes Lorandos, who joined his client on TODAY, told Vieira that he had rushed her out of the courtroom after the verdict because of death threats that had been made against her.
...
“I want to make people aware that this can happen anytime, anywhere, to anyone, and just to get it right; to have qualified individuals interviewing the children,” she said. “To parents, if there is a situation that you wonder about, take them to the proper people. Just get it right for the children, because children that are a part of false allegations are just as devastated as children that truly are molested.”'

Japan: Mother of falsely accused groper who killed himself seeks justice

Anonymous · 12 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The venue he chose was one he knew well from his university days – a platform at Waseda subway station. Not long before, he had had a dreadful misadventure. At JR Shinjuku Station, he'd been jumped by two male university students whose female companion – all three had been drinking – accused him of groping her. They beat him and dragged him to a police station, where police interrogated him throughout the night.

Harada's mother, so suddenly bereft of her only son, continues to seek eye witnesses at Shinjuku Station.

For nearly an hour after the police released him early on the 11th," says Naomi Harada, 53, "my son wandered around central Tokyo. He is extremely nearsighted and wasn't wearing his contact lenses, so he wouldn't have been able to see much. He was studying English, and generally carried an IC recorder about with him. It was switched on. My son's voice is on it, muttering something through tears. I can't make out what he's saying."'

Teacher's brutal attack on boy, 13, at U.S. school posted on YouTube

Broadsword · 13 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A schoolteacher has been fired after she brutally attacked a 13-year-old pupil in front of a classroom full of students, according to US reports.

Shocking video footage appears to show Sheri Davis dragging, kicking and slapping sixth grader Isaiah Johnson after squaring up to him as he cowered in a corner.

The alleged beating is thought to have lasted almost a minute and was filmed on a mobile phone by another pupils before being posted on YouTube.

Officials at Jamie's House Charter School, a centre for children with disciplinary issues in Houston, Texas, are reportedly 'horrified'.

The 40-year-old teacher has been sacked and bosses have apologised to the youngster and his furious mother, Alesha Johnson.

Police have been called in to investigate amid public outcry, which came after the video was obtained by Ms Johnson and aired on Houston's Fox News channel.

Some children can be heard laughing on the tape as Isaiah struggles to defend himself against the teacher.

'I was on the wall like this trying to get away from her and she started hitting me, banging my head to the wall and kicking me,' Isaiah said.

'The teachers piled up and they were looking over each others shoulders just watching.'"

UK: Girl, 8, tells court she lied about being raped by ten-year-old boys

Broadsword · 13 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A girl of eight yesterday said she had lied about being raped by two ten-year-olds.

The youngster told the Old Bailey she had wanted to play with the boys because she thought it would be 'fun'.

She said she made up the rape claim because she was worried she wouldn't get any sweets if her mother found out she had been 'a bit naughty'.

The boys, now aged ten and 11, are believed to be the youngest ever in Britain to face trial for rape.'

Family of 13-YO boy beaten by teacher sues teacher and school

Matt · 14 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Good for them - don't wait on it. Go immediately for justice. Make teachers who think it's fine to abuse kids think twice. If they can't handle the job, they should quit. I do hope criminal charges will be brought against her as rapidly as civil ones are. The story:

'HOUSTON - The family of a 13-year-old whose beating by a Houston charter school teacher was caught on a classmate's cell phone video has filed a lawsuit against the teacher and the school.

Science teacher Sheri Lynn Davis was fired Monday night from Jamie's House Charter School. Her dismissal came after video of Reagins' beating became public.

The lawsuit was filed Thursday on behalf of Isaiah Reagins by his mother, Alesha Johnson.

His family says the boy suffered a black eye and other bruises. Johnson says she's taken her son out of the school.

Davis' attorney, Chip Lewis, says he and his client will have a Friday news conference.

A spokeswoman for the school said she couldn't comment on the lawsuit but that school officials feel they handled the situation appropriately after learning of it.'

Police: Missing Woman "Overwhelmed by Stress"

anthony · 14 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Nancy Salas was idolized and adored by family and friends as a successful student about to graduate from the University of California, Los Angeles. They didn't know she hadn't been enrolled since 2008.

Police say it was pressure from family and friends that prompted her disappearance and her claim that she'd been abducted at knifepoint.

"It's a tragic story," Glendale police Sgt. Tom Lorenz said. "She didn't know how to handle it and she fled."
...
She told police she'd been abducted by a man at knifepoint during her run and was taken to Merced by bus and train, he said.

Back home in her parents' tiny living room late Thursday, a tearful Salas spoke to her family, friends and about 40 people who helped search for her. KMEX-TV was the only news organization allowed inside.

Salas choked back tears and thanked them for their "unconditional love," but she didn't explain exactly why or how she ran away.
...
Salas stuck with the story that she'd been abducted until shortly before she was set to be reunited with her family at the Glendale police station, Lorenz said. She then admitted that she made it up and fled because she felt intense pressure from her family and friends.'

Study: Women in top jobs are viewed as 'better leaders' than men

Broadsword · 15 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Women in executive positions are perceived as better leaders than men, according to a new study.

The prevailing stereotype that women in business are too sensitive or not as competent can stop them from advancing through the so-called 'glass ceiling'.

However, once a woman has shattered that barrier, these qualities actually work in her favour, according to a Duke University researcher.

The research, published in the Journal of Applied Psychology, found top women executives were credited with responsibility for their own success. They were viewed as both more competent and more relationship-oriented than men.

This led them to be perceived as more effective leaders than their male counterparts.
Lead researcher, Professor Ashleigh Rosestte, said: 'In business environments, even if women are thought to be sufficiently competent, they are frequently thought to be not very nice.

Lead researcher, Professor Ashleigh Rosestte, said: 'In business environments, even if women are thought to be sufficiently competent, they are frequently thought to be not very nice.

'But on the tiptop rungs of the corporate ladder, competence and niceness may have a certain level of compatibility for women top leaders.'"

The New Sheriffs of Wall Street

Matt · 15 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Time gleefully reports here. The gender of watchdog group leaders will of course change the outcome of future possible ways that the financial system we have can get gamed by greedy people (er, sorry, that should read "greedy men"). But when that turns out to be false, next will be an insistence that financial institutions be led by women and that will fix the problem, since they have less testosterone. After that fails, the insistence will be traders and others making the deals be women now instead of men. We may see laws barring the number of men as a percentage that can be hired into such positions. Outlandish idea? A lot of things were considered outlandish until only recently.

"Testosterone-fueled". I must have read that phrase a hundred times going through articles on the financial mess the world of banking and finance has gotten us into. Meanwhile I would like to point out that speculative home purchasing and decisions about complex financial instruments made in ignorance are not subject to genderal factors, but for those seeking simple answers to complicated questions, anything, it seems, will do. Excerpt:

A few weeks back, at an event to celebrate the role of women in finance, Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner tried to get things started with a joke. He said he had recently come across a headline that asked, "What If Women Ran Wall Street?"

"Now that's an excellent question, but it's kind of a low bar," Geithner continued, deadpan amid rising laughter. "How, you might ask, could women not have done better?"

It is rarely noted that the financial wreckage littering our world is the creation, almost exclusively, of men, not women. And no wonder: to this day, each of the large banks, from Citigroup to Goldman Sachs, employs fewer than a handful of women in senior positions, and only 3% of Fortune 500 companies have a woman as CEO. Embarrassing tales of a testosterone-filled trading culture tumbled out of the what-went-wrong probes as the Great Recession took hold.

In itself, Geithner's joke was not extraordinary for Washington, where self-deprecating fare is the norm. But what happened next drove home a deeper point: the lectern in the marbled hall at the U.S. Treasury known as the Cash Room was cleared away so that a panel of women could take their seats. Among them was Sheila Bair, the chair of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) and one of the first federal regulators to publicly sound the alarm about the collapse three years ago. She sat next to Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) chair Mary Schapiro, the first woman to hold that post and the deciding vote to initiate the agency's recent lawsuit against Goldman Sachs. Across the stage sat Elizabeth Warren, chair of the panel bird-dogging the Troubled Asset Relief Program (TARP) bank bailout and the chief advocate for new consumer-finance regulations that banks and their allies have spent millions to oppose. Suddenly, something else became clear: these women may not run Wall Street, but in this new era, they are telling Wall Street how to clean up its act.'

UK: As pregnancies on the frontline soar, MoD tells women soldiers: Carry a condom

Broadsword · 16 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The Ministry of Defence has launched a campaign warning female soldiers to carry condoms after an alarming number of pregnancies at bases in Afghanistan.

Adverts in the Army's official magazine Soldier warn 'on deployment, there'll be 50 blokes to each woman' and urge female squaddies, medics and administrative staff to use a condom or 'face something you really don't want to hear.'

Officially, a 'no-touching' rule bans military personnel from having sex in a war zone. But, according to senior officers, provided sexual relationships are between soldiers of a similar rank and do not impact on operations commanders often turn a blind eye.
...
A Freedom of Information response last year revealed that between January 2003 and February 2009, at least 102 British servicewomen posted to Iraq had been sent home after it was found they were to become mothers.

Over the same period the number of female soldiers who had discovered they were pregnant while in theatre in Afghanistan was 31.'

IVF Will Become Better Than Sex As A Means Of Reproduction, Scientists Have Predicted

Broadsword · 16 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Thirtysomethings could routinely conceive babies using IVF within a decade because it will have become better than sex as a means of reproduction, scientists have predicted.

According to a new report, advances in IVF technology mean it will be possible to produce embryos with a success rate of virtually 100% and cultivate them in computer-controlled storage facilities.

The advance will ease the pressure on couples who have delayed having children until their late thirties or forties, perhaps to pursue a career.

They may routinely opt for IVF rather than sex to reproduce, giving themselves a greater chance of conceiving through IVF than young adults in peak condition, who have only a one-in-four chance a month of conceiving naturally.

Among over-35s, the chance of natural conception falls to less than one in 10. Modern fertility techniques have meant the healthiest couples already have a 50:50 chance of success using IVF, but the authors of the report, just published in the journal Reproductive BioMedicine Online, say this is just the beginning.

They point to rapid advances in artificial reproduction for farm animals, which have led to a near-100% success rate in the production of cattle embryos and claim the technology could easily be adapted for humans."

Domestic Violence Awareness Day: Saturday June 5th 2010 in London, Ontario (Canada)

Matt · 16 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S:

Presented by London Equal Parenting Committee

Tickets will be available at the door or can be purchased online at canadianepc.com

You can also contact Brad at lepcinfo-at-gmail.com

See the event page at http://www.canadianepc.com/lepc/

Women marrying men with less education, income

anthony · 17 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Academic and workplace strides among women are outpacing those of men in the United States and the gains are affecting who educated women marry, sociologists say. Studies find women are marrying men with less education. The income balance is shifting in American households.

If dating is a numbers game, then single ladies should consider this: A Pew Research Center report this year noted a surge in women between the ages of 30 and 44 making more money than their husbands. Women made more money than men in 22 percent of married couples surveyed in 2007, compared with 4 percent in 1970. While men make more money overall and hold more management positions, women are making greater gains.

"The supply of men has changed," said D'Vera Cohn, senior writer at the Pew Research Center's Social and Demographic Trends project. "The pool of college educated men isn't growing as rapidly as it is for women."
...

The recession has shaken some traditional gender expectations, said several marriage and family experts. About 4.7 million jobs were lost among men during the recession, according to April figures from the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Two million women lost their jobs, the report said, leaving more women to become sole supporters of their families.
...
But most educated women prefer to secure a partner on the same educational level -- or higher. A woman with a master's degree may marry someone without an advanced degree, but he will likely have a bachelor's degree, said Christine B. Whelan, author of the book "Why Smart Men Marry Smart Women." Since the couple is the same social class, the educational differences matter less.'

Ireland: Lecturer fights sanctions after showing colleague bat-sex article

anthony · 17 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A UNIVERSITY lecturer disciplined after he showed a female colleague an article about the sex life of fruit bats is demanding his sanctions be reversed.

Dr Dylan Evans, who lectures in behavioural science at University College Cork (UCC) School of Medicine, says the university president Professor Michael Murphy has imposed harsh sanctions on him for showing an article from a peer-reviewed scientific journal to a colleague.

Now, UCC is at the centre of an embarrassing international debate on political correctness.

The university refused to officially comment on his claim that a two-year period of intensive monitoring and counselling had been imposed. But a copy of the president's letter posted online confirms the sanctions.

A UCC spokesman agreed that an investigation had been held into an allegation of sexual harassment. The investigation was completed and the spokesman would not make any further comment.
...
The president then wrote to Dr Evans saying that he was requesting him to engage in training and counselling and to complete a period of monitoring and appraisal.

"Behaviour of this type is utterly unacceptable and should any further complaint of sexual harassment made against you be upheld, I will have no hesitation but to proceed with the university's disciplinary procedures," he wrote.'

CBS video: Discrimination Against Women in Healthcare

Anonymous · 18 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

'Before healthcare reform was passed, the U.S. did not have national protection against sexual discrimination in healthcare or insurance. Dr. Jennifer Ashton talks with Marcia Greenberger, founder of the National Women's Law Center, about protecting women's rights.'

F & F's Holstein Squares off Against Leading Child Support Officials on NPR (Audio Available)

Matt · 18 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'The call-in lines were jammed as Fathers & Families' Board Chairman Ned Holstein, M.D., M.S. debated two Ohio child support officials on NPR in Cleveland May 14. To listen to audio of the show, click here. Dr. Holstein is on from 25:30 to 40:30.

To comment on the NPR website, click here.

The show, The Sound of Ideas on Cleveland's NPR affiliate WCPN 90.3 FM is hosted by Cleveland Plain Dealer columnist Regina Brett.

Holstein debated Jennifer Bheam, the Director of the Summit County Child Support Enforcement Agency and John Galonski, Chief Assistant Prosecutor for Child Support, Summit County.

Holstein expressed Fathers & Families' view that while we believe all parents should support their children both emotionally and financially, the war on so-called "deadbeat dads" is often just a war against low-income/minority/hard luck fathers. This is particularly true in the recession.'

UK: Law firm unfairly axed male lawyer because it feared discrimation claim if it got rid of his pregnant colleague

Matt · 18 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A male lawyer was wrongfully sacked because his bosses feared they would be sued if they fired his female colleague while she was on maternity leave.

In a rare instance of a man claiming sex discrimination, John de Belin won £123,000 in damages after one of Britain's biggest law firms 'deprived him of his livelihood'.

Mr de Belin, 45, was one of two associates facing redundancy from Eversheds' property division in Leeds. The other was Angela Reinholz, 40.

To decide who would be sacked, the firm undertook an assessment of both Mr de Belin's and Mrs Reinholz's abilities, including financial performance, discipline history and absence records.

Mr de Belin was fired in February 2009 after losing by just half a point, scoring 27 out of 39 in the exercise against Mrs Reinholz's 27.5.

But he later learned that the test score had been 'unfairly inflated' to the advantage of his female colleague.

He also discovered that Mrs Reinholz was given the maximum possible score for her ability to swiftly secure 'lock-up' payments from clients - even though she was at home on maternity leave during the period of time she was being assessed.

The Leeds employment tribunal ruled that this effectively tipped the balance in her favour and Mr de Belin lost out.'

New Dads, Too, Can Suffer Depression

Matt · 19 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This has been reported a couple times already here on MANN (search on "postpartum" in our search box) but each time, new information is revealed. Good to see interest in it continues. How men are affected when a new baby comes into their lives is important. After all, having babies ain't all about mommy, is it? Excerpt:

'It's not just new moms who get postpartum depression. More than one in 10 fathers become depressed after the birth of their child, too, according to a new study that researchers said underscores the need for more awareness of men's depression.

Postpartum depression in mothers has been well-recognized, but much less attention has been focused on how new fathers fare. That's because women are usually the primary care givers and postpartum depression was considered a condition likely linked to hormonal changes in pregnancy. Experts say treating depression, whether it's in the mother or father, is important because it raises the risk for long-term behavioral and psychiatric problems in the child.

Researchers from the Eastern Virginia Medical School in Norfolk sought to get an accurate estimate for what percentage of men experience depression in the year after their child was born, using commonly accepted depression measures. They conducted a statistical review of 43 previously published studies involving 28,000 male and female adults.

Some 10.4% of fathers experience depression during the postpartum period, the analysis showed. In the general population, 4.8% of men are believed depressed at any given point in time, according to government data.'

Should alleged rapists be protected until proven guilty?

anthony · 19 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Given that some women will make false rape allegations, shouldn't the law protect the identity of both the alleged culprit and victim before the courts issue a verdict?
It should, says Dr. Zein Kebonang, a legal expert and former law lecturer at the University of Botswana who is now operations director at Botswana-UPenn Partnership.

It shouldn't, counters Mpho Mahopolo of Women Against Rape (WAR), a Maun-based NGO.

Kebonang says that once made, the allegation becomes a stigma that attaches itself to the falsely accused for the rest of his life. He suggests that largely has to do with the fact that the court of public opinion is notoriously unforgiving.

"It doesn't matter whether the court clears you of the charges; in the eyes of the public there will always be lingering doubt. And all it takes is just an accusation. Even if you are cleared before the case reaches court, people would say that you bought the victim off. That is why I feel that it is important to protect the identity of the alleged culprit in the same way that the law protects that of the victim," he says.

Conversely, Mahopolo does not think that it would be proper to equate the rights of the culprit with those of the victim. Her argument is that if the identity of the alleged culprits was protected, rape cases would skyrocket. The theory she advances is that criminally lustful men would rape with impunity.'

Ed. Note: The Sunday Standard is published in Botswana.

Canada: A case for men's studies

anthony · 19 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Search the University of Toronto faculty for experts on the study of women and you'll find more than 40 academics with research interests including "women's mental health," "women and religion" and even "women's fast pitch."

Conduct the identical search for "men" as a research topic and discover two lonely academics, both of whom specialize in gay men.

Of the genders, it seems feminine distinctions have become overwhelmingly more fascinating to the academe.

Witness the well-entrenched women's studies departments in universities across Canada and the United States — important academic centres of inquiry that have provided a steady pulse for the feminist movement.

Now have a look for men's studies programs.

Or, don't bother.

I looked.

As far as anyone in the field can tell, there's only one in North America, located at Hobart and William Smith Colleges in Geneva, N.Y. which offers a minor in the field.

Add to that barren ground an array of individual, off-the-radar courses here and there, usually located in women's or "gender studies" departments.

It all amounts to male myopia in the ivory tower in which boys and men are studied through a distinctly feminist prism, says a group of North American academics who are taking their grievances public.

"The landscape has essentially been controlled by women's studies," says Dr. Lionel Tiger, a Canadian professor of anthropology at Rutgers University in New Jersey. "Men's studies are a branch plant phenomenon when, and where, they exist."

The overpowering orthodoxy of men's studies is that if you're male, you're bad or in need of remedy, says Tiger, a native Montrealer who taught at the University of British Columbia for five years.'

Police: Girl made up kidnapping report

Matt · 19 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'The Batavia Police Department said reports of the abduction of a 14-year-old girl Monday were false and that no abduction occurred.

In a written statement, police said after an extensive police investigation and investigations by the Child Advocacy Center and the Batavia City School District, it was determined the reported victim found herself in a situation where she felt she needed to alter the facts regarding her whereabouts.'

Radio Interview on Abused Men - May 19 at 10 PM EST

Matt · 19 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email from Philip Cook:

For those interested in tuning in, I will be interviewed tonight (Wed., 5/19/10) at 10PM EST/7PM PST on the G.L. Henderson internet radio show. Subject: Abused Men-The Hidden Side of Domestic Violence. The show airs LIVE every Wed 10pm EST on http://www.artistfirst.com/ to listeners in over 142 nations.

Beating Caught on Tape: Teacher Speaks

anthony · 20 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Essentially, the woman and her lawyer blame the victim and school system for her violent outburst. Her lawyer claims the teacher was not trying to hurt the child but just wanted to get his attention by intimidating him. The teacher also places blame on the boy's mother for not being more active in her son's life. This woman seems void of any sense of accountability and appears to have a million excuses for her actions.

No-Fault Divorce Creates Strange Bedfellows

anthony · 20 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Proponents of no-fault divorce say that forcing couples to accuse each other of wrongdoing, abuse, infidelity, neglect, can make a difficult process even worse -- not only for the couple but for the children involved and also can lead to tremendous legal costs. "No one cares about no-fault divorce until their marriage is falling apart and they find out, "Oh, my god, there is no no-fault option," said Sen. Liz Krueger, who supports the Hassell-Thompson legislation, "Couples find out they have to allege something that may not really be true."

Bing said the legislation will decrease domestic violence by helping the abused partner get out of a bad marriage quickly. "I think for years there was concern that women in a lesser financial situation than their spouse would be in a bad position," said Bing, "But we've seen it work in other states, and it has reduced rates of domestic violence and the cost of divorce, because people aren't spending years in litigation."

The National Organization for Women, though, fears the bill, if passed, would put women at a disadvantage.

"We all know that divorce often plummets women into poverty. And when women live in poverty, their children are affected too. All we are asking is that the ... legislature take steps to protect the lives of women and children in divorce situations," Marcia Pappas, president of National Organization for Woman-NYS said in a March speech.'

Protests against male undergraduate students grabbed national attention

anthony · 20 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OAKLAND -- From where Mills College students Jessica Brennan and Claudia Cinelli lounged on the edge of the campus' lush Toyon Meadow earlier this week, it's easy to see what's different here from most college campuses: Male students are in short supply. Twenty years ago this month, the meadow was the epicenter of an emotional fight over a proposal to make college undergraduate programs coed. It was a fight that attracted national attention.

Fearing for Mills long-term security if it didn't enroll 1,000 undergraduate students -- it had less than 800 at the time -- the school's board of trustees decided in May 1990 to admit men for the first time in the college's 138-year history. The decision had an immediate backlash: more than 300 students boycotted classes, blockaded administration buildings and sparked a national discussion about the value of women-only education.

Sixteen days later, the school board reversed its decision, and the undergraduate school remained women only. Graduate programs have been offered to men and women since the 1920s.

Brennan and Cinelli called those student fighters "strong, proud Mills women" who helped cement the campus as a place that promotes confidence, individuality and success for female students.

"There is something about a classroom full of opinionated, educated women," Cinelli said. "I think we challenge each other in a way that's more powerful than a coed college. I am so thankful for them for leaving us with an all-women college."
...
As officials prepare for Mills commencement Saturday -- with a keynote address by House Speaker Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif. -- they are using the 20th anniversary of the boycott to highlight women's achievements, from inroads in science and art to journalism and politics...'

UK: Rape case defendants to be given anonymity

Broadsword · 20 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Defendants in rape cases are to be granted anonymity in an unexpected move that women's groups immediately branded an insult.

...

The announcement over anonymity for defendants in rape trials turns the clock back 30 years to the 1970s, when the Sexual Offences Act introduced anonymity for those accused of rape. It was later repealed. Officials said that details of the change had yet to be decided. It is expected that the ban will be lifted after a suspect is convicted.

The proposal provoked anger among campaigners. Ruth Hall, of Women Against Rape, said that the decision was an insult and a backlash against the rising number of rape reports. "More attention needs to be paid to the 94 per cent of reported cases that do not end in conviction rather than the few that are false," she said. "If men accused of rape got special rights to anonymity, it would reinforce the misconception that lots of women who report rape are lying. False rape allegations are extremely rare but receive disproportionate publicity.""

A report by Baroness Stern earlier this year recommended that independent research should first be done into the scale of false rape allegations.'

Must-Attend Webinar for Anyone Who Wants to see VAWA reauthorization amended

Matt · 21 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

If you don't sign up for this free Webinar, don't complain if the VAWA reauthorization doesn't address the fact that you can't see your kids because your ex made a false accusation of domestic violence.

Pre-register here: https://www.jwi.org/SSLPage.aspx?pid=1094. Be sure your questions and comments during the Webinar are polite and constructive!

Scheduled participants include Lynn Rosenthal, White House Advisor on Violence Against Women and Judge Susan B. Carbon, Director of the Office on Violence Against Women in the DOJ.

There is no charge for this webinar!

This is your opportunity to ask questions of the leading advisors and federal agencies on the implementation of VAWA from a funding & policy perspective.

Date/time: Thursday, June 3, 2010 12:00-1:00 PM EST

Register Now: https://www.jwi.org/SSLPage.aspx?pid=1094. Page reads:

'Join us as Lynn Rosenthal and Judge Susan B. Carbon brief us on the federal government's initiatives on domestic violence and sexual assault.

Lynn Rosenthal is the White House Advisor on Violence Against Women. Ms. Rosenthal was Executive Director of the New Mexico Coalition Against Domestic Violence (NMCADV) and the former Executive Director and President of the National Network To End Domestic Violence from 2000 to 2006.

Judge Susan B. Carbon is the Director of the Office on Violence Against Women in the Department of Justice. Judge Carbon chaired New Hampshire's Fatality Review Committee. She also served as faculty for the National Judicial Institute on Domestic Violence- a partnership of the US DOJ Office of Violence Against Women, the Family Violence Prevention Fund, and the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges.

Agenda:

1. Innovative federal domestic violence and sexual assault projects
2. Grant program & funding streams available
3. Q & A's

The opinions, findings, conclusions, and recommendations expressed in this webinar and handouts are those of the author(s) and do not necessarily reflect the views of Jewish Women International.'

Book review: "Partnership Parenting: How Men and Women Parent Differently"

Matt · 21 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Written by Steven J. Svoboda, via email:

Partnership Parenting: How Men and Women Parent Differently—Why It Helps Your Kids and Can Strengthen Your Marriage. By Kyle Pruett, M.D. and Marsha Kline Pruett, Ph.D. Foreword by T. Berry Brazelton, M.D. Cambridge, Massachusetts: Da Capo Press, 2009. 219 pages. $15.95. www.dacapopress.com. Review by J. Steven Svoboda

Kyle Pruett, M.D., a Yale Child Study Center psychiatrist and author of such outstanding books as Fatherneed: Why Father Care is as Essential as Mother Care for Your Child and The Nurturing Father: Journey toward the Complete Man, and his wife Marsha Kline Pruett, Ph.D., a Smith College Social Work professor, have co-authored an engaging and excellent book on gender differences in parenting. The Pruetts devote the first half of their book to promoting the marital partnership, devoting separate chapters to the pithy topics of becoming parents together, “cuddling vs. the football hold” or why parenting differences are not deficiencies, building a partnership that works, managing conflict and fighting fair, valuing your spouse’s contribution, and assumptions and actions. In the second half of the book, such critical aspects of parenting are addressed as discipline, “care and feeding,” co-parenting and sleeping children, safety, and education. A brief, pithy epilogue provides pointers on divorce prevention.

The sub-title partially captures the book’s thesis, in that the Pruetts analyze the typically quite distinct parenting styles of mothers and fathers, finding each extremely helpful to children’s development but more importantly, discovering the wonderful synergy that can often evolve from two different individuals’ approaches to supporting the education, growth and happiness of the children they love. However, in the authors’ view, it is critical that parents maintain an external alliance with each other in their interactions with their children, reserving debates over parenting approaches for private discussions. As a second, somewhat unusual and arguably even surprising thread, Partnership Parenting shows that realization of the sexes’ complementary strengths can help foster a deep appreciation of the other parent, which can only serve to fortify the fabric of a partnership. In the authors’ own words:

Learning to identify gendered parenting differences and sort out which are problematic and which are emblematic of two parents acting in concert is what this book is about. We hope to help you recognize that the problem is really the solution; that the difference is the pathway to happily-ever-after and to co-parenting as true partners.

But the Pruetts’ book is not a book of sweeping generalities. As they say, the devil is in the details, and the authors are very good indeed on details as well as on tracking the larger picture created by assembling those small tidbits of information. So we learn in detail about how and why fathers’ bodies go through hormonal changes starting in the last months of pregnancy and extending into the first three months of a baby’s life, with testosterone levels dropping and prolactin levels rising. Intriguingly, a father’s average weight gain during a pregnancy usually comes within ounces of the baby’s birth weight!

The authors address the potentially endless warfare over which partner does more for the family, ultimately showing that there can be only losers in such a discussion and that all good parents do whatever it takes to accomplish tasks within their respective bailiwicks. Probably no generalization about the sexes is always true, but as a rule, fathers tend to provide excitement, to be less predictable in their interactions with their children, to rev their kids up, and to enjoy higher popularity during fun times, while mothers are generally more predictable, tend to calm and nurture their children, and tend to be sought out when it’s time for bed or when love is needed after an injury. Dads may tolerate more risk-taking by their children as they play and may be more open to having their body used as a jungle gym or a wrestling opponent, whereas mothers may feel that after carrying the baby, giving birth, and nursing, their bodies have been well used up by the children already. “For fathers, feeling physically close to their children is a novelty to be explored." Mothers can frankly both admire and be jealous of the father's different role with their kids. Also, mothers "can be more ambivalent than they expected about having a very involved father. Although they appreciate the support, on some level they may not want to share this beloved baby's heavenly attentions with anybody—even him…" This can lead to gatekeeping behavior by the mother, a topic the authors look at in great detail, even including a "Gatekeeper Quiz for Moms." Fathers are also called to account and asked to search their souls and ascertain if they are truly, fully carrying out the commitments they undertake. (For what it's worth, every single one of the authors' assertions listed in this paragraph happen to be true of myself and my wife.)

The Pruetts allude to fathers' relative invisibility in studies of child development, which "have focused exclusively on the mother-child pair" with dads, if considered at all, being seen as "assistants—able or otherwise." Kyle Pruett—for although individual sections of the book are not signed by the co-authors with one name, I think we can assume he was instrumental to this section—reminds us loudly and clearly that fathers should not feel compelled to strive to be imitation mothers, but rather to find their own style of parenting. Interestingly, one study showed that "father engagement was linked to fewer behavioral problems in sons, better psychological health and cognitive outcomes for daughters, less delinquency, and a higher standard of living for families with lower incomes." We are also convincingly shown that most children with involved fathers "do not think their fathers are second-class parents." Involved fathers lead to stronger verbal skills for both boys and girls and also—fascinatingly--mathematical skills for girls are higher even when the fathers are not themselves particularly good at math. Even more powerfully, a longitudinal study whose subjects initially were five-year-old children and that re-evaluated its subjects more than two decades later as adults found that "the single most powerful predictor of whether those children wee empathetic adults was their fathers' involvement in their childhood."

The authors intersperse several enlightening exercises throughout the book, including a "Parenting Profile" that addresses five separate issues—parental views on development, expectations, spoiling, discipline, and relationships. Also, Appendix A includes a thorough questionnaire containing no fewer than 83 (!) questions regarding "Ideas about Parenting," designed to be taken by both father and mother, who can then compare their different answers. The Appendix then can become a concrete learning tool about similarities and differences in beliefs about marriage.

The Pruetts are to be congratulating for taking on the thorny issue of discipline, on which there are of course widely differing views among different parents across the US (and sometimes even within couples). They recommend what they call authoritative parenting, rather than the less effective options of authoritarian and permissive parenting: "Stick to your guns but recognize your child's feelings may be different from your decision, give a brief explanation for your rationale if appropriate, and maintain our loving, affectionate stance. Do not equate being firm with being cold, tough, or harsh." The authors frown on what they call "bribery," because "once you add the M&Ms as dessert or reward for eating broccoli, a child's motivation to eat his greens—minus the goodie—is dead in the water." Instead, "One way to encourage children to behave in a positive, pro-social manner is to use positive reinforcements."

Readers are also given some cheerleading and some sage advice on arguing fairly with one's spouse rather than fighting with him or her. "Give a good, honest reason for why you see things differently. If she doesn't buy it, find a better one. Also, make sure he feels that he too can win some of the time… Choosing your arguments is every bit as important as choosing your battles." And when your child is down, fall back on "your parental magic trio, the three things that always help… humor… music… and the vastly underappreciated back rub."

We also get some useful, specific advice. "When your children are around eight years old, both parents should have a serious conversation with them about playing with fire, followed up by a trip to the fire station." This might seem obvious to some parents but will definitely not occur to everyone. (Our son is eight and a good friend is a fireman and yet this thought never occurred to us.) I agree with the authors' enthusiasm for team sports. "[O]ften the most valuable thing kids learn from team sports is how to manage failure, loss, and erratic rule enforcement in a social context—pretty good preparation for life, eh?" While the topic has become a common one, still I appreciated the authors' attention to the issue of television. They mince no words in showing that TV "teaches kids to care progressively less and less about the consequences of interpersonal violence" and also diminishes children's interest in reading and in creative and imaginary play.

I encountered just one slightly disappointing moment, when the authors puzzlingly suggest without citation or explanation that a "bad marriage is particularly toxic for women." There are in fact reasons to suspect the precise opposite of this statement is true. In any event, this superlative book will amply repay the reader's attention by educating and supporting his or her efforts to accomplish two goals that all too often are not addressed together: 1) to build a sustainable, productive partnership and 2) to raise healthy, happy, productive, well-adjusted children. The authors clearly care deeply about supporting parents' and children's well-being. Don't miss this fabulous work!

Jailed father hunger strikes to protest child support

Matt · 21 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Kenyon Eastin, 41, is on day four of a hunger strike from within the Tooele County Jail, protesting the treatment he has received in Utah divorce court.

That's according to man's girlfriend of three years, Niki Hammond, of Stansbury Park (pictured at right with Eastin). Eastin first went to jail for 15 days in January 2009, but was released due to overcrowding. The jail is still over-crowded--Tooele County Sheriff Frank Park even admits the facility is violating people's civil rights due to the crowd--but 3rd District Judge Stephen Henriod sent Eastin back to jail Friday for 30 days for contempt of court and non-payment of child support. Hammond says Eastin can not afford to hire and attorney and has not been appointed one by the court.

That's despite documents from the Office of Recovery Services that show Eastin not only made regular payments for each month of 2009, but paid $500 above those payments toward his arrears total. According to his court docket in his divorce, Eastin owed $9,596 in arrears as of March 19, 2009, the most recent data available.'

Letters: State can hold delinquent moms accountable, too

Matt · 21 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here.

'Slackers are not only the fathers in divorce cases. When the courts have awarded the father placement of the kids of a relationship, they receive little help from the local child support system.

Kids are the most important part of this equation, and they should have their rights treated adequately. That is not the only abuse that some males are receiving from the state's child support system.

Some of the delinquent parties are women who run businesses in which they hide most of their income so they don't have to fund their children through child support payments.

I feel that the state should look into the treatment of fathers who have been raising their children, not receiving support and not given a fair deal.

I feel that there should be a website, if there is a problem that can be addressed and can be brought out, so each parent and, most importantly, the children can be treated fairly.

James Vanderloop,

Kaukauna [link added]'

Florida Educator Sends Nude Picture to Teen, Police Say

anthony · 21 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An assistant principal at a Florida middle school sent a topless photo of herself to a 14-year-old boy, police say.

Lauren Shreve Tilo, a 30-year-old assistant principal at Middleton High School in Tampa, allegedly sent a cell phone picture of her breasts to the teenager on May 7 after meeting him while playing the popular online game World of Warcraft, MyFoxTampaBay.com reports.

Tilo and the boy were initially just friends before they began exchanging text messages about "conducting sexual acts to one another," according to an arrest report filed in Manatee County, where deputies say they learned of the allegations when the unidentified boy told his guidance counselor.
...
"It concerns us anytime any teacher does anything against the law, but when an adult teacher has this type of interaction with a teenager, it's an additional concern," Cobbe said.'

Sexual assault = Rape (proposed legislation in India)

johndias · 21 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If this bill becomes law in India, the penalty for kissing an unwilling victim (i.e. sexual assault) will be identical to the penalty for raping them. Of course, consent is defined subjectively by the victim and need not be substantiated, making such a law rife for abuse. Note the section in the bill which results in life imprisonment for putting one's tongue in the victim's mouth. Excerpt:

'MUMBAI: Drastic changes proposed to strengthen rape and sexual assault laws, so that women have more protection, will almost blur the difference between the two crimes. In fact, reactions to the draft bill, sent to the Union home ministry, have termed it "anti-men" with wide scope for misuse.

While there were indications earlier that the draft might propose a gender-neutral law, the draft uploaded by the ministry to invite responses from the public shows that the amendments specifically target crimes by men against women. Women activists told TOI that the proposals were long-pending and necessary.

Under the draft bill, if a man forcibly even puts his finger into a woman's mouth —or lets his tongue enter her mouth during a kiss — he could end up in jail for sexual assault with the sentence being no less than the punishment for rape, which is seven years to life. The draft bill also seeks a stricter age of consent, raising it from 16 to 18.'

Mother stages fake arrest of 5-YO son because he played with matches

Broadsword · 22 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An American mother persuaded police to stage a fake arrest of her son when she caught him misbehaving.

But far from being a criminal matter the 'offence' was that he was playing with matches - and the boy was just five years old.

Appalled neighbours looked on, unaware the whole thing was a stunt, as officers handcuffed the crying child - who was barely tall enough to reach the wheel of their patrol car - and put him on the back seat.

They threatened him by saying: 'You want to go to jail?' over and over again before finally releasing him back to his mother.
...
'I hope it scared him to not play with matches or lighters again. That was the whole point of it, it was to make him afraid he was going to jail.'

Witnesses disagreed, with one neighbour bursting into tears as she recounted the incident.

'That's not a way to treat a child, that's not a way to teach a lesson to a little boy,' said the woman, in her 30s, said.'

UK: Jail for ‘twisted’ addict nurse Rachel Baker who killed patient, 97

Matt · 22 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The manager of a care home whose drug addiction led directly to the death of an elderly patient was jailed today for ten years.

Rachel Baker, 44, stole patients’ drugs, forged medical records and then lied to investigators looking into a series of suspicious deaths of residents of Parkfields, a residential home in Butleigh, Somerset.

The investigation led to the exhumation of the bodies of three former residents to the distress of their families. Police investigated the circumstances surrounding the deaths of 12 of Baker’s patients and charged her with the murder of two.

After a ten-week trial during which the extent of Baker’s addiction to prescription drugs was revealed she was convicted only of the manslaughter of 97-year-old Lucy Cox. She was found not guilty of the manslaughter of another elderly woman, Francis Hay, and not guilty of murdering the two women.'

UK: Pakistani who 'killed husband' in 20ft Kashmir fireball gets £1,300-a-month benefits in Britain

Matt · 22 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Pakistani woman living on benefits in the UK despite facing a murder charge in her home country was yesterday facing demands from MPs to return there to stand trial.

Bushra Ferozdin Butt, 35, spent ten months in custody after she was accused of pouring kerosene over her husband Amjad Hussain, 36, and setting him alight.

She was eventually bailed by a judge and travelled to Luton, where she had lived with Mr Hussain for nine years.

Although not a British citizen, she had previously been granted indefinite leave to remain in the UK, which entitles her to £330.70 a week in council tax and housing benefit - equivalent to an annual salary of £22,000 before tax and National Insurance.'

The Economist: "Fighting off rivals may be responsible for masculine traits"

anthony · 22 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WHEN two drunken men fight over a woman, alcohol and stupidity may not be the only things at work. Sadly, evolution may have shaped men to behave this way. Almost all of the traits considered to be masculine—big muscles, facial hair, square jaws, deep voices and a propensity to violence—evolved, it now seems, specifically for their usefulness in fighting off or intimidating other men, allowing the winner to get the girl.

That, at least, is the contention of David Puts, an anthropologist at Pennsylvania State University, in an upcoming paper in Evolution and Human Behavior. Dr Puts is looking at how sexual selection gave rise to certain human traits. A trait is sexually selected if it evolved specifically to enhance mating success. They come in two main forms: weapons, such as an elk's horns are used to fight off competitors; and ornaments, like a peacock's tail, which are used to advertise genetic fitness to attract the opposite sex.

...

It is a disturbing idea to modern minds, harking back to old stereotypes about violent cavemen battling with clubs while a passive woman, fetching in furs, waits helplessly to see who will win her. But Dr Puts emphasises that evolutionary biology is not destiny. Regardless of our evolutionary past, in modern societies men and women freely choose their mates. However, understanding the evolutionary pressures that made men the way they are could help us better understand male violence, including murder, domestic abuse, gang violence and perhaps even warfare.'

Danica Patrick: "It’s not my fault"

Matt · 23 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I have nothing against Danica Patrick. I have nothing against women competing in NASCAR or anyplace else. What annoys me is when they think they can compete on the same terms as men but then when things don't go their way, invoke "female privilege" to try distance themselves from the issue.

In legal matters as we know here on MANN this is called a "pu$$y pass". In other less-significant cases, I'd call it the "princess pass". Danica needs to lose the princess pass if she is going to be taken seriously--finally. She has the skills to compete. She is not the best driver in the world but neither are 99.9% of the men driving out there either. All she needs to do is cease and desist whining when things don't go her way. Whining from male drivers in intolerable. Likewise should it be from female ones. Excerpt:

'So frustrated that she threw her crew under the bus. "This is the worst car I've ever had," she said, according to USA Today's Nate Ryan on Twitter. "There's no stability or grip. It's just scary, really scary ... It's awful, really awful. I think I'm still shaking." And when her comments were played over the track PA, she was booed.

“I wasn’t flat out the last two laps and I was scared to death flat on the first two. I’ve never been bad here before. I’ve never been outside the top 10 on a finish or qualifying, so, it’s not my fault. The car is not good.”

Danica Patrick being booed? What the heck?

Maybe Danica's candor -- or whining, as some may prefer -- is rubbing fans the wrong way. Danica has always been confident, and unafraid to tell it like she sees it. That makes her likeable to some, and unlikable to others.'

From the That-can't-be-only-boys-act-that-way files

Matt · 25 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'MAY 24--For the second time in recent weeks, a chapter of the Pi Beta Phi sorority is being accused of drunkenly trashing a facility during a formal dance. At a March 6 party sponsored by the group's Ohio University chapter, attendees engaged in sex acts, used plates as "missiles" during food fights, vomited on carpets, defecated in urinals, and tried to tear off the clothes of a female bartender, according to a letter written by the director of the West Virginia art center where the formal was held. In her April 6 letter to the sorority, a copy of which you'll find below, Abby Hayhurst, head of the Parkersburg Art Center, reported that catering staff witnessed "a couple engaging in sexual congress, while surrounded by a cheering throng," and that a bathroom sink was broken as a result of "one of your members and her date attempting to have sexual relations on it, an act which was witnessed by the event's caterer, who walked in on them." The art center, which reported the damage to the Parkersburg Police Department, is seeking about $47,000 from the sorority, which contends that the art center has exaggerated its damages.'

Leading Opponent of Recognizing Parental Alienation Apologizes to Fathers & Families for Defamatory Remarks

Matt · 25 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Clinical Psychiatry News board member Dr. Paul J. Fink makes a shockingly irresponsible assertion in his recent column. He writes that family court reform groups seeking to have parental alienation disorder seriously considered for inclusion in the DSM-5 are doing so because they “don’t like to be interfered with when they are sexually abusing their children”…

A group of 50 mental health experts from 10 countries are part of an effort to add Parental Alienation Disorder to the fifth edition of the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM V), the American Psychiatric Association’s “bible” of diagnoses. This scientific coalition is led by psychiatrist William Bernet, who explains that adding PAD to DSM “would spur insurance coverage, stimulate more systematic research, lend credence to a charge of parental alienation in court, and raise the odds that children would get timely treatment.”
...
In response, Dr. Fink, to his credit, apologized and retracted his defamatory statement in the latest issue of the Clinical Psychiatry News. Dr. Fink wrote:

> I apologize for suggesting that all fathers who accuse mothers of PAS are sexually abusing their children. That was clearly an overstatement that I retract. Admittedly, I got carried away when writing the article…I had absolutely no intention of impugning Dr. Bernet, his colleagues, or Fathers & Families in any way. I hope we can all come to an agreement about what constitutes alienation, how to deal with PAS, and how to proceed in court hearings when someone alleges that one or another parent is an alienator or an abuser.

Two Essays on "The Pink World"

Matt · 25 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via eamil:

Please distribute / publish the following two articles (also attached in word file form).

Thank you,
Alan Millard

Kentucky Fried Chicken “Pink Bucket”--a Sex Discriminatory Campaign.

A campaign by KFC is now underway to generate money to fund research to find a cure for women’s cancer. Why do we accept the battle against cancer, in any light, only against women’s cancer? Is this not a form of sex discrimination applying to a cure? Sure, women’s cancer is a terrible thing, but so is men’s (prostate) cancer. Why discriminate?

An equal effort to battle both should be a given. The sex discrimination is high-lighted by featuring the pink-colored bucket. Despite the grave numbers of male victims of prostate cancer, this sexist example is included amongst other discriminatory efforts, even by government agencies, including the U.S. Postal Service, in which case it failed to equally represent/support male cancer. Indeed, men’s health is not given nearly the concern to women’s health, and less effort is made to secure it. Although male (prostate) cancer and female (breast) cancer have an equal mortality rate, equal financial support wasn’t even arranged by the federal government for males in a postal campaign for cancer treatment, amounting to a mere government sham for men. Apparently to appear equal, “ . . . the U.S. post office issued a breast cancer and a prostate cancer stamp. The breast cancer stamp cost 40c with seven cents going to breast cancer research.” The first run of 200 million produced $14 million for breast cancer. “The prostate cancer stamp cost 33c with no proceeds earmarked for prostate cancer research” (Hise, The War Against Men, 2004, 92 & 93). This is the same criminal mindset that has allowed the implementation of the Violence Against Women Act. All these examples demonstrate efforts favoring one segment of people within society (women) over another (men).

Last Call for this Must-Listen Webinar!

Matt · 25 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Page here:

Lynn Rosenthal, White House Advisor on Violence Against Women and Judge Susan B. Carbon, Director of the Office on Violence Against Women in the DOJ

There is no charge for this webinar!

This is your opportunity to ask questions of the leading advisors and federal agencies on the implementation of VAWA from a funding & policy perspective.

Thursday, June 3, 2010
12 to 1 pm ET

Register Now

Join us as Lynn Rosenthal, White House Advisor on Violence Against Women, and Judge Susan B. Carbon, Director of the Office on Violence Against Women in the Department of Justice, brief us on the federal government's initiatives on domestic violence and sexual assault.

There will be 25 minutes for Q & A's. Questions may be emailed in advance to gelias@jwi.org or asked during the webinar on the screen provided.

Agenda:

1. Innovative federal domestic violence and sexual assault projects
2. Grant programs & funding streams available
3. Q & A's

Lynn Rosenthal is the White House Advisor on Violence Against Women. Ms. Rosenthal was Executive Director of the New Mexico Coalition Against Domestic Violence (NMCADV) and the former Executive Director and President of the National Network To End Domestic Violence from 2000 to 2006.

Judge Susan B. Carbon is the Director of the Office on Violence Against Women in the Department of Justice. Judge Carbon chaired New Hampshire's Fatality Review Committee. She also served as faculty for the National Judicial Institute on Domestic Violence - a partnership of the US DOJ Office of Violence Against Women, the Family Violence Prevention Fund, and the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges.'

Asian Male Domestic Violence Victims: Services Exclusive for Men

Matt · 25 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email, from abusegate Bob. Abstract here. Excerpt:

'The main reasons abused men do not seek social services include their strong endorsement of social/cultural values and avoidance of gender role conflict. Through internet-based service connections, we did not find sources in Asia, Australia, or New Zealand that advertised programs exclusively for male victims of domestic violence (DV). Nine social services in Hong Kong and Singapore describe their work with men in DV situations, but the main focus is “men as perpetrators.” Targeting men as victims, 32 sources in Canada, the United States, and the United Kingdom describe services designed especially for male DV victims. Findings demonstrate that services for male victims must address such factors as secretiveness, cultural values, masculine identity, tolerance, shame, and loss of face.'

You can also download the whole article here.

Defendant's Gender Affects Length of Sentence

Anonymous · 26 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In her study of simulated short criminal cases, Angela S. Ahola shows that gender and appearance affect our judgments of personality, occupation, morals, and reliability and create a frame of reference for our behavior. Among other things, it was shown that judges and lay assessors both assessed and judged accused individuals of the same gender as themselves more severely than the opposite gender. On the other hand, prosecutors, lawyers, police officers, and law students, regardless of their own gender, evaluated male defendants more harshly than women defendants. What's more, among female members of this category, that is, those without a convicting role in the legal process, differences were seen in their evaluations depending on the looks of the accused.

"Most people have a need to get some conception of people they meet in everyday life. This is normal in everyday life. But if the same preconceptions, or so-called harmless everyday conceptions, play a role in the system of justice, this means that people are not equal before the law. In that case, we lose part of the fundamental security that a functioning rule-of-law society provides," says Angela S. Ahola.'

Abusegate: Making History: Come to Washington DC June 24-25

Matt · 26 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Folks, we're really excited about our upcoming lobby-fest. Please help us spread the word, and come to DC if you can.

++++++++++++++++++++++++++

On June 24-25, we're going to make history. Those days, pro-family advocates with meet with key staffers in the U.S. Senate and the House of Representatives to talk about reforming the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). And for the first time ever, we will be presenting specific legal language that we want included in the VAWA re-authorization.

The event will include an pre-event teleconference on June 16 and a gala dinner celebration on June 24. Free lodging is available on a first-come, first-served basis. The deadline for pre-registration is Friday, June 11. Email your name, organization, and cell phone number to: rohara-at-saveservices.org.

June 24-25, we're going to make history. Will you be there?

Jurors in tears as they clear student of rape - then discover another man falsely accused by same 'victim' had killed himself

Matt · 26 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman drove a man to suicide by crying rape and forced a second innocent man to consider taking his life after falsely accusing him of a similar sex attack.

Despite being exposed in court as a serial liar, legal restrictions mean the 21-year-old woman can never be identified.

A jury took only 45 minutes to clear medical student Olumide Fadayomi, 27, of rape.

But several jurors at Sheffield Crown Court broke down in tears when the judge revealed the 'victim' had a history of crying rape.

Judge Patrick Robertshaw launched a stinging attack on the Crown Prosecution Service for making Mr Fadayomi stand trial.'

Germany: Man wants to serve time in women's jail to care for his daughter

ItsDan · 26 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A GERMAN man facing jail is pleading with justice authorities to sentence him to a female prison so he can care for his eight-week-old daughter behind bars.

Jan Wagner, 34, has been sentenced to a year inside for repeatedly driving a car without a licence.

But the Leipzig car mechanic is terrified of his daughter being put into care while he does his time - hence the request to be the only man in an all-female facility.'

UK: Pregnant teenager sets up boyfriend then watches him get tortured and murdered

Broadsword · 27 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former football star was tortured and murdered after his pregnant girlfriend set him up to be attacked by two thugs so she could watch the savage beating for pleasure.

Chelsea Platt, 18, despised Martin Hyde, 22, and enjoyed seeing him bullied and humiliated.

When Mr Hyde got caught up in a petty row over £15, sadistic Platt lured her lover into the clutches of two thugs who ambushed him as he followed her down the street.

Platt later watched unfazed as Mr Hyde was viciously assaulted at her own flat during a two hour beating during which his killers shouted: 'I want a spade so we can watch him dig his own grave and put him in it.'

The victim - who played trials for Stockport County - was eventually frogmarched to a country park where he was battered to death, stabbed in the back and neck with what was believed to be a chisel and thrown into a river.'

Hunt for woman who married 11 U.S. servicemen... then stole all their money and went on the run

Broadsword · 27 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Police are hunting for an American woman who is accused of marrying 11 servicemen and then swindling them out of their savings.

Bobbi Ann Finley is believed to have been stalking, conning and stealing from American soldiers for nearly 20 years.

Now, with warrants already out for her arrest in Washington, Nebraska and Texas, the army has hired a special investigator to track her down.

Her methods are cold-blooded and simple: She allegedly trawls U.S. military bases for lonely men who are due to be deployed overseas.

Then she tells them that she is the daughter of a Marine Corp general who is owed a large inheritance - but she can only claim it if she is married.

After they are married and the groom departs for deployment, the spending spree begins.

Finley allegedly cleans out their homes, maxes out their credit cards, and writes bad cheques before skipping town.'

UK: Mother must give up half of her house to the lover who left 17 years ago

Broadsword · 27 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A homeowner was yesterday ordered to give her ex-lover half the value of her £245,000 house, 17 years after they split and despite him never making a mortgage payment on it.

Patricia Jones, 55, was told that despite the time lapse her former boyfriend was entitled to 50 per cent of the three-bedroom home. The Court of Appeal branded the case ‘a cautionary tale’ for unmarried couples who buy property together without making formal legal agreements.

Had the couple been married and split up, their assets would have been divided in a divorce settlement overseen by the courts. Three senior judges heard that Miss Jones paid the deposit on the house when she bought it with her then-boyfriend, ice cream salesman Leonard Kernott, in 1985.

She also paid the mortgage for the eight years that they lived together, although Mr Kernott gave her £100 a week towards ‘expenses’.

...

Appeal Court judge Lord Justice Wall said: ‘This is a cautionary tale, which all unmarried couples who are contemplating the purchase of a residential property as their home, and all solicitors who advise them, should study.’

...

The Appeal Court said Miss Jones was not entitled to any of his house, as it was bought after they split up, but ruled that he was entitled to half of their former home - a share worth more than £109,000 once the mortgage has been paid.

Sir Nicholas, sitting with two other judges, said the couple bought the Thundersley house in both their names and had agreed then that it belonged to both of them.'

UK: Two young boys convicted of raping an 8-year-old girl

Hunchback · 27 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Recently there was a story posted about two 10-year-old boys accused of raping an 8-year-old girl. She later recanted, admitting that she lied to avoid missing out on sweets. Readers were outraged that the judge told her she'd "done nothing wrong." End of story?

No.

The Crown continued with the prosecution as if nothing had happened and on Monday...the innocent 10-year-old boys were CONVICTED of attempted rape!

I thought this flagrant injustice against young boys would galvanize the MRM much like the Emmett Till murder galvanized the civil rights movement. To date the MR blogsphere has been strangely silent on this.

Hollywood.com writer skewers "Sex and the City" misandry

johndias · 27 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The writer (C. Robert Cargill) criticizes the misandry that he encounters and notices whenever a movie critic says anything negative about the Sex and the City movie franchise. Good for him. Comments for this article at his Web site are wide open! Excerpt:

'In the new film Sex and the City 2, heroine Carrie Bradshaw suffers a crippling blow to her ego as she discovers her brand new book – a book about married life and wedding vows – is utterly destroyed by a review in the New Yorker. Distraught, she turns to her three best friends and over drinks it is decided that the reviewer, a man, simply cannot stand the thought of a powerful, liberated woman. Problem solved. No, really. That's the last we hear of that subplot. It is actually the first of three subplots (out of five total) that are resolved this way in the new film. Men are sexist pigs that are the root of all of our problems. Drink up ladies!

Now, on the surface, I'm fine with this. While it's a terribly unsatisfying way to wrap up a subplot (as well as ultimately serving nothing but reinforcing negative stereotypes), a movie can and will say what it wants. And it's not like there aren't actually sexists out there that are, in fact, threatened by powerful, liberated women. Sex and the City brings that ugliness out in droves, filling comment sections with 10-year-old South Park jokes about the age of the women and their appearance. But at the same time, the series (and others like it, like Twilight) also brings out an ugly spate of misandry, as male critics, like myself, are deluged with hate mail, comments and rampant, misdirected sexism stemming from negative reviews of female-tooled entertainment.'

The Foundation for Male Studies seeks survey input

Matt · 28 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Dear Male Studies Supporter,

We are contacting you because you were interested or may have participated in our April 7 symposium on Male Studies: A New Academic Discipline.

In order to help The Foundation for Male Studies with its grant requests and fund raising efforts, and to increase its support channels, we've created a brief yet important survey on the need for Male Studies.

Please take just a few minutes and provide us with your feedback by visiting:

http://www.surveymonkey.com/s/9TH97BP

Your participation will be greatly appreciated and beneficial to the Foundation for Male Studies and its endeavors to create programs at colleges and universities.

Sincerely,

Joseph Notovitz
Director of Communications

Man, woman get up to 20 years in incest case

Anonymous · 28 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. He is the stepfather, she the natural mother. She seeks to escape jail time by blaming the manipulative husband. Judge will have none of it. Excerpt:

'A married couple who both admitted guilt to parental incest were each sentenced today in Clark County District Court.

Judge James M. Bixler sentenced Frederick Vonseydewitz to eight to 20 years in prison and his wife, Mary Vonseydewitz, was sentenced to four to 20 years. They each had pleaded guilty to charges stemming from allegations of sexually abusing their children, a boy and a girl, when they were minors.

Crying, Mary Vonseydewitz told the judge she was sorry and said her husband had manipulated her. Her attorney asked for probation for her instead of time in prison, But Bixler had little sympathy for her.

"Mary, to be perfectly honest with you, I could easily find justification for holding you more responsible, because, despite the fact that he may be manipulative, he may have led you into this, there's one glaring fact that is impossible to ignore," Bixler said. "He was the stepfather in this situation. You were these children's mother. To say what happened is disgusting and egregious is not even close to how bad this was. ... You crossed the most sacred line ever in what you did to these kids. Let there be no mistake. They may be able to forgive you, but I'm not."'

'Sack Tapping' -- A Schoolyard Game Turned Ugly

anthony · 28 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Gone are the days when bullies merely gave wedgies. The newest fad in schoolyard violence? A quick slap to the testicles.

In the game of "sack tapping" or "ball tapping," as it is called, a boy will try to slap or flick the groin of another boy to inflict discomfort or pain.

The "game" has gotten out of hand, however, according to Dr. Scott Wheeler, a pediatric urologist in Minnesota.

In recent years he's seen an increasing number of young boys coming in with serious damage to the testicles because of a "tap" that hit too hard.

"For some reason, [this game] is popular," Wheeler says. "It's not just bullies, it's kids doing it to their friends. It's rare that bullies target the testicles, they just beat up people."

...

In some cases, trauma sustained by sack tapping can be severe enough to rupture a testicle, an injury that can require surgery or even the amputation of the testicle, says Wheeler.

This fad is no joke, Wheeler says, "It's just ridiculous that boys are doing this."'

Relatedly: Teenager Has Testicle Amputated After 'Tapping' Game

Canada: Falsely accused Quebec teacher struggles to cope

Anonymous · 28 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Quebec elementary school gym teacher says he is struggling to rebuild his life after having been falsely accused of sexual touching.

A rumour began circulating at Henri Fournier's school in February 2008 involving 19 girls between the ages of eight and 13 who accused him of inappropriately touching girls, sometimes in front of other students.

Officials at Notre Dame de l'Assomption Elementary School in Chateauguay, south of Montreal, took the allegations seriously and suspended Fournier without pay.

He was eventually arrested on 34 charges of sexual touching and spent a week in custody. The case gained a great deal of media attention.
...

Situations like Fournier's have the effect of discouraging men from a career in teaching younger children, even while elementary schools are desperate for more men to act as role models, said McGill University education professor Jon Bradley, who is doing research on males in the education system.

'The number of males coming into the elementary ed program at McGill University is five per cent," said Bradley. "The number of males who have been in my research group who are still in elementary five years after graduation is zero per cent."'

Abusegate: DV Dimwits Beware! “Adopt-a-Politician” Campaign to be Launched Next Week

Matt · 28 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Is your elected official a DV Dimwit when it comes to voting for every loony domestic violence bill that comes along?

This coming week, Abusegate, Investigate! will launch a high-profile campaign: “Adopt-a-Politician, Help Clean up Washington.” The campaign will list about 20 Washington incumbent politicians – Senators and Representatives – who just don’t get it when it comes to VAWA reform. The objective is simple: Target them for defeat on November 2, 2010.

We will invite Abusegate supporters to “adopt” one or more of these politicians, and do everything in their power to secure their defeat.

Tired of the DV Dimwits in Washington DC? Ready to bring about true change? Then jump on the “Adopt-a-Politician” bandwagon!

Source:
http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/2010/05/27/dimwitted-lawmakers-beware-adopt-a-politician-campaign-to-be-launched-next-week/

AAP retracts policy statement proposing changes to FGM law

Matt · 28 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA email:

"Thanks to you and other intactivists, our message has been heard! Yesterday afternoon, the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) officially retracted its recent policy statement, which proposed changes to the Federal law banning any form of FGM in the United States.

In the past few weeks, you've sent more than 14,000 letters demanding that the AAP retract its statement. Thanks to your hard work, America's baby girls remain safe from genital mutilation.

But the AAP's mission is to protect all children.

We've designed a powerful new ad to make sure the AAP gets the message that any form of genital cutting of children is wrong, regardless of gender."

Useless, jobless men – the social blight of our age

Broadsword · 29 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The problem affects the whole of society because of the striking correlation between male joblessness and single motherhood, particularly in the old industrial cities. In Liverpool, male unemployment rose from 12 per cent in 1971 to 30 per cent in 2001. In 1971 11 per cent of families were headed by a single parent; by 2001, 45 per cent were. Similar patterns can be seen in Birmingham, Strathclyde and Newcastle. The epidemic of male joblessness after the collapse of manufacturing industries coincided with an increase in female employment and welfare support to mothers who found that they could manage alone.

Overlooked by society, irrelevant to employers, unwanted by women who can raise families on benefits without their help, the man who has no work or a series of short-term jobs is a problem. Without steady work, he will struggle to acquire a family: unemployed men are less likely to marry or cohabit than employed ones. Without a stable relationship, he is less likely to grow into a good family man and raise good sons. The taxpayer has become the father: one in four mothers is single and more than half live on welfare. A lot of these women describe the real fathers of their children as “useless” or worse. The men have no role.
...

Robert Rowthorn, Professor of Economics at Cambridge, has shown that female and male worklessness have been going in opposite directions for 30 years, well before this latest “mancession”. His research suggests that half the rise in lone parenthood in the past 30 years may be due to male unemployment. He believes that governments must start to focus on these men, and question the feminisation of education and the workplace. It is no solution, he says, to say that women don’t need men or that men should become more female. Nor is it any good waiting for economic growth to dig them out of poverty. Those men need a chance, not a benefits system that undermines them."

Cops in Canada warn that high school boys seek to have 'young girl parties', all without evidence

Anonymous · 29 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

In British Columbia, the cops issued a warning that high school senior boys were using face book to find young girls to attend parties. The high schoolers it says seek to engage in sexual activity with the girls at these parties. However the story itself states there appears to be no evidence, no investigation, and no proof, only rumours. Based on that, the cops put every high school boy in that area under suspicion of being a sex criminal. Excerpt:

'Chilliwack police are warning parents about a group of high school boys who have been trying to lure pre-teen girls via Facebook to parties where they would get them drunk and sleep with them.
...
Last week, RCMP in Surrey warned parents that Grade 11 and Grade 12 boys at Lord Tweedsmuir Secondary School in Cloverdale had started a Facebook page to seduce eighth-grade girls.

They called the group the LGS Club the Little Girl Slayers Club.

I cant [sic] tie a definitive connection between whats going on in the (two schools), Wolbeck said.

At this point we havent formally engaged in any investigation ... We dont have specific people or events to tie to it.

Wolbeck said police are cautioning parents to be vigilant about where their teenagers are going and with whom.'

I've lived in Canada my whole life, and the increased attacks on teens and boys in this country by government agencies is out of control. I have to say the future looks darker with each passing day. June 5, 2010 I'll hopefully be in London, Ont. for the DV Awareness Day. Go to http://www.canadainepc.com/lepc for more info. I'm hoping this event will make me feel somewhat better about where my country's future is going. By the way, London Ont. is only 2 hours or so from Detroit, Toronto and about the same from Buffalo, in case anyone was wondering. There will be some interesting speakers.

Dennis Hopper dies of the man cancer

Anonymous · 30 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Actor Dennis Hopper Dies at 74 After Suffering From Prostate Cancer

"Hopper died Saturday at his home in the Los Angeles beach community of Venice, surrounded by family and friends, family friend Alex Hitz said. Hopper's manager announced in October 2009 that he had been diagnosed with prostate cancer."

I will miss the offbeat character roles Mr. Hopper took on. While often outrageous, his characterizations were always entertaining. The individuals he created on-screen were as unique as he was. RIP Dennis Hopper.

Memorial Day thoughts

Matt · 31 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Here in the US, it's Memorial Day. Like any other holiday, it's too easy to forget the real meaning of it. (Too often it's viewed as just another chance to have a long week-end or enjoy a cook-out.) But by no means is Memorial Day like any other holiday.

Most other holidays commemorate an individual or a very small set of them (Presidents Day, for example, commemorates certain of our past presidents), or they commemorate a single event (religious holidays are often like this). But Memorial Day commemorates a very large group of people and not just for one event but for many. In this case, that group is veterans, most especially those killed or wounded in action.

The fact that the overwhelming number of veterans are men seems to get lost in the language around the event, too, just as with men's occupations replacing the word "men" while referring to them in news reports, a phenomenon discussed here on MANN already.

I don't find Memorial Day a happy occasion. To me, it's a day to remember that millions of men the world over have been killed or wounded in wars that the vast majority of them wished they had not been in. Nonetheless, some wars must be fought (which ones are debatable), so those who have had the burden of wearing the uniform should be honored in particular on this day. But glorified? I would deny warfare leads a man to glory. If he is very lucky, he may just get out of it with his life.

Central Kenya worst hit by boys' poor learning

anthony · 31 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The boy child education in Central Kenya is the worst hit in the country, according to Gender and Children's Affairs minister Esther Murugi.

Addressing education stakeholders at Rurii stadium in Kiria-ini where she officiated the second Mathioya district education and prayer day at the weekend, the minister said the province had recorded an enrolment of 10,000 pupils less than that of girls.

The minister attributed the discrepancy to irresponsible fathers who had neglected their role of guiding boys.

She said a recent survey in the province revealed that men spend only 15 minutes per week with their sons leaving parental responsibility entirely to their wives.

Consequently, the minister said, teenage boys had begun emulating what they see their mothers do among them braiding hair and piercing ears.

"That's why you see young men behaving like females," said Ms Murugi.'

Why more girls get the grades while boys struggle in our schools

anthony · 31 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Far more boys than girls in Snohomish County either barely scrape by or flunk their high school classes, according to a Herald analysis of grade point averages.

Through last June, just under half of the county's girls — 48.8 percent — had a grade point in the solid A to B range of 3.0 or above. A third of boys — 33.4 percent — could make the same claim.

At the same time, nearly a third of boys had a grade point average of 1.99 or less, the C-minus to F range, compared to fewer than 1 in 5 girls.

The data also shows that high school girls tend to earn higher grades in all core subjects, including math, at all grade levels despite the fact that boys scored slightly higher in that discipline on last year's state WASL exams.
...
Gurian makes the case that girls and boys are programmed differently. Girls tend to be more verbal learners; boys, more spatial, mechanical and physical. While most children can learn either way, many others struggle in the traditional classroom.

“These kids are not going away. They are our sons,” Gurian said. “This particular type of learner is vast. There are millions of them.”

Ed. note: Snohomish County is in the state of Washington.

Royal Dutch Medical Society: Circumcision of boys unnecessary and risky

anthony · 31 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The circumcision of boys is reportedly almost always unnecessary and medically risky. The Royal Dutch Medical Society (KNMG) has published recommendations advising doctors to discourage parents from having their sons circumcised. Jewish and Islamic organisations have reacted angrily.
...
More than 46,000 Dutch doctors and trainee doctors are members of the society. They call circumcision for non-medical reasons “an infringement of a child’s right to autonomy and the right to bodily integrity”. And they say there are unnecessary risks.
...
The growing number of circumcisions among boys has not led to any kind of serious discussion in the Netherlands, in marked contrast with the circumcision of the daughters of African immigrants. The excision of girls’ labia minora and/or clitoris is almost universally condemned as genital mutilation.

So now the doctors have set their sights on the circumcision of boys. Medical ethicist Gert van Dijck says doctors will invoke children’s rights to emphatically discourage parents from requesting the procedure.

“We are asking doctors to actively and urgently warn parents that there are no medical advantages to circumcision and that there is a risk of complications. This way, we are hoping to achieve a culture change via the parents, so that they will eventually stop doing it.”'

Wounded soldier billed by military for medical equipment

anthony · 31 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'VALENCIA COUNTY (KRQE) - A New Mexico father said his son's purple heart is tarnished now that the military is billing him for equipment the wounded soldier left behind on the battlefield when he was airlifted to safety.

Gary Pfleider said it's still hard for him to talk about the day he found out his son was hit by a sniper while serving in Iraq in 2007.

...

Gary's son, Gary Pfleider II, must now wear a brace and walk with a cane around his home in Oregon. The soldier remembers that incident a little differently.

...

Several months ago, the soldier who now has a purple heart, scars and a brace to show his bravery received a bill in the mail.

It totals over $3,000, which includes interest, for equipment Gary II took to the battlefield and the military said he is still responsible for—items like his canteen and even some grenades.

...

"I mean what do they want, the soldiers to go, get wounded and say not-ah you're not moving me until I get my gear," Gary Sr. said.'

MND: How to Build a Man Bomb

anthony · 31 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'And now, in keeping with the annals of our rigorously ignored history, we are setting about the business again of orchestrating a future catastrophe. After a bloody revolution for our freedom, the scourge of slavery, an even bloodier civil war, and a civil rights campaign that we handled with police dogs, riot guns and water cannons, we have put ourselves right back on the course of an inescapable social crisis.
...
A recent Wall Street Journal article, Meet the Unemployable Man, predicts that over the next several years, one in six men between 18 and 54 years old, or 18 million, will be unemployed, and unemployable.

That is 18 million men who will look for work and find none; millions of others who once carried briefcases or hammers and nails, but who will, in the days ahead, push brooms make French fries. There will be 18 million men who become the other guy. And that is in addition to the millions of other guys that are already walking among us.
...

The members of the matriarchy, like social terrorists, are partnering with and guiding government toward the inevitable explosion, and when it goes off, they will be the first to point the finger at men, even at MRA's, for the fallout.

It won't help them, though. Because whatever tragic end this comes to, it will not be at the hands of MRA's, it will be in spite of our efforts to prevent it.

If the streets erupt again, as they have so many times before, they will be filled with average men who never heard of the men's rights movement. They will just be poor men, many of them young and fatherless due to the current system, acting out their rage against a world that includes and idealizes women, but that treats them like social pariah.
...
It is a testament to men, and an exposure of lies perpetrated against them by gender ideologues that we have come this last half century without blood in the streets. It has always been in men's nature to take care of others better than themselves, and they have proved that with their silence in the face of so many constant abuses. Betting on that silence to continue when men are hungry is foolish.
...
And because of that I write this genuinely afraid. The men's movement, the only bomb squad we have, had better catch on in grand fashion, I think. And even if it does, we better hope it happens before the society we live in finds itself at ground zero when the clock ticks down.'

Marla Gurecki-Haskins Is Latest Female Teacher Accused of Sex With Student

anthony · 31 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A female schoolteacher in the small Western New York town of Canandaigua has been accused of a sexual relationship with a 17-year-old male student, among other misdeeds.

Marla Gurecki-Haskins, a striking brunette that makes it easy to see how young boys would be taken with her, allegedly performed oral sex on the student in a classroom. She's also accused of encouraging two 16-year-old boys -- via cell phone, text, and email -- to engage in sexual conduct, says the Times Union.

She's pleaded not guilty to a felony count of disseminating indecent material to a minor and three misdemeanor counts of official misconduct and endangering the welfare of a child, according to CBS. As if that's not enough, even more charges may be filed.

If convicted, she'll join the ranks of perhaps the most famous female teacher sex case, Mary Kay Letourneau, excuse me, now Mary Kay Fualaau, the last name of the 13-year-old boy, Vili, she had sex with while working as a schoolteacher in Washington State. She was 35, and a married mother of four at the time. She divorced, did her time, and she and Vili now have two children together; she waitresses in a bar where her husband DJs.'

Ed. note: Original off-linked story is gone, mysteriously. However the story is covered by another local paper here.

Men’s gymnastics a target for college athletics cutbacks

anthony · 31 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'IOWA CITY — Tom Dunn jokes that it will take the rest of his tenure as Iowa’s men’s gymnastics coach just to clean out his desk.

For 31 years Dunn, 60, led the Hawkeyes, once taking them to a second-place finish at the NCAA championships. He will retire next month, witnessing his sport change dramatically over his tenure. And that’s no joking matter.

Since 1988, 49 colleges have dropped men’s gymnastics, and just 17 teams compete annually for a combined NCAA title, including one Division III school. It’s a sport where expenses soar past revenues, and the combination of gender-equity and economic issues have made it vulnerable on the chopping block.

“We did obviously lose a ton of teams over the 20 years, but recently it hasn’t been an epidemic by any means,” Dunn said.'

Violence Against Women Act: turning the unwary into political roadkill?

anthony · 31 May 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Question: What do lawmakers Arlen Specter, Alan Mollohan, Barbara Boxer, and Orrin Hatch have in common?

Answer: They are all high-profile supporters of the federal Violence Against Women Act whose political fortunes have plummeted in recent months.

...

Most lawmakers who support the Violence Against Women Act sincerely believe the law is doing good. But according to a recent report, "Assaulting our Rights: How Domestic Violence Laws Curtail our Fundamental Freedoms" (http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/SAVE-Assault-Civil-Rights), VAWA is dealing a devastating blow to our constitutional protections, with two million Americans having their civil liberties trampled upon every year.

Over time, that builds up into a tsumani of disenfranchised voters who are tired of business as usual in Washington DC. And that's why many lawmakers are thinking long and hard about reflexively supporting the Violence Against Women Act this time around.'

F&F: Mom, Son Reunited After 2-Year CPS Nightmare

Matt · 1 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. CPS extremism sometimes whacks decent moms as well as dads. Excerpt:

'The case that's dropped jaws all across the U.S. and Canada is finally coming to an end. Judge Kip Leonard is finally allowing Noah Kirkman to return to his native Calgary after two years in foster care in Oregon. Read about it here (Yahoo, 5/29/10).

I and countless others have written outraged pieces about the case. Noah Kirkman is now 12 years old. When he was taken into foster care by Oregon authorities two years ago, he had not been abused; he had not been neglected. No one has ever claimed that his mother Lisa Kirkman (pictured) or his stepfather John Kirkman has ever been anything but a good parent to him. That's reflected in his grades which are straight A's despite Noah's severe ADHD.

No, in their zeal to substitute foster care for parental care, Oregon child welfare authorities decided that Lisa Kirkman had abandoned her son. How did they figure that? Well, he was living with his stepfather in Oregon, that's how. Make sense to you? After all, John has been the boy's steadfast and true dad for 10 of his 12 years on this earth. How Oregon child welfare workers and Judge Leonard concluded that a boy, who's never been abused or neglected in any way and who's living with his stepfather, had been abandoned is one for the record books. In all the annals of state intervention into families, has there ever been a case more arbitrary or capricious?'

Shoplifter Profile: Rude, Messy Men Most Likely to Steal, Study Finds

anthony · 1 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Late for appointments? Rude to your wife? Maybe the security guards should ask you to check your bags on the way into a store.

Some personalities are more prone to shoplifting than others, finds a study published in the June issue of the British academic journal Personality and Individual Differences. Its authors conclude that men who are "unpleasant and antisocial" or "disorganized and unreliable" are more likely to shoplift than anyone else.

"There's this sterotype of elderly women stealing tins of salmon, but that's not what we found," says Vincent Egan, a psychology professor at the University of Leicester who co-authored the study. "My results suggest dishonest consumer behavior is narrowly associated with how unpleasant and disorganized you are."'

All the subjects identified in the study as shoplifters were men. Outgoing youths were also more prone to steal, maybe because they don't fully understand the consequences of their actions and may get "carried away by the moment," says Egan.'

Canada: Feminism blamed for rising female violence

anthony · 1 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Northern Territory researcher says studies show women can be just as violent as men and social changes are behind a reported rise in violence among young women.

A senior lecturer in psychology at Charles Darwin University, Dr Peter Forster, says there is no truth to the argument that testosterone levels make men more aggressive.

He says social factors such as the rise of feminism in the last few decades could be behind the rise in violence amongst women.

"We've now taken away the expectation that women will behave differently to men," he said.

"It used to be that one of the biggest differences was that women were more peaceful, they were peacemakers.

"[But] that kind of inhibition to be violent has gradually diminished to the point where it no longer inhibits women at all."

Feminism: No Longer about Equality

anthony · 1 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feministing's Jessica Valenti has a new op-ed in the Washington Post, and she has decreed that to qualify as a feminist one must believe that American women are oppressed. She writes:

> Feminism is a social justice movement with values and goals that benefit women. It's a structural analysis of a world that oppresses women, an ideology based on the notion that patriarchy exists and that it needs to end.

The article, titled "The fake feminism of Sarah Palin," targets the Alaska governor for daring to call herself a feminist; Valenti also throws in shots at the Independent Women's Forum, Kathryn Lopez, and Christina Hoff Sommers for failing to get just how much American women still suffer.

NY Times: Gender Gap for the Gifted in City Schools

anthony · 1 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When the kindergartners at the Brooklyn School of Inquiry, one of New York City's schools for gifted students, form neat boy-girl rows for the start of recess, the lines of girls reach well beyond the lines of boys.
...
Educators and experts have long known that boys lag behind girls in measures like high school graduation rates and college enrollment, but they are concerned that the disparity is also turning up at the very beginning of the school experience.

Why more girls than boys enter the programs is unclear, though there are some theories. Among the most popular is the idea that young girls are favored by the standardized tests the city uses to determine admission to gifted programs, because they tend to be more verbal and socially mature at ages 4 and 5 when they sit for the hourlong exam.
...
Biases and expectations among adults are often in play when determining which children count as gifted, and fewer boys appear to end up in gifted programs nationally. A 2002 study by the National Academy of Sciences reported that boys were "overrepresented in programs for learning disabilities, mental retardation and emotional disturbance, and slightly underrepresented in gifted programs," said Bruce A. Bracken, a professor at the College of William & Mary who wrote one of the two exams that the city uses to test gifted children. He said the implications of the study were "disturbing."'

Female Genital Mutilation and Circumcision: Comparable?

anthony · 1 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The AAP makes a valid point on the comparison of FGM/C to male circumcision: "Health educators must also be prepared to explain to parents from outside North America why male genital alteration is routinely practiced here but female genital alteration is routinely condemned." Male circumcision is more invasive than the "ritual nick" proposed by the AAP, yet most Americans don't bat an eye at the procedure. In fact, after my son was born (and not circumcised), a nurse expressed surprise that he wasn't cut. Meanwhile, Jewish families celebrate the ritual with a gathering at home eight days after the birth.

Male circumcisions have been performed under similarly brutal circumstances as FGM/C, and like FGM/C, historical reasons cited for circumcision have included cleanliness and control over sexuality. Religious observance plays a part in both procedures as well. Those defending the AAP's revised stance have cited these points as reasons to legalize FGM/C. What's good for the gander ought to be good for the goose too.

As I see it, the difference lies primarily in the prevailing attitudes behind the two practices. Male circumcision is a religious ritual for some, and a matter of social convention for others. FGM/C is also a religious ritual for some, but one that is rooted in oppression and subjugation. Regional and international human rights organizations campaign actively against FGM/C in any form, including the medicalization of the procedure as proposed by the AAP.'

Politi: Exonerating others now focus of former Duke lacrosse player Reade Seligmann

anthony · 1 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Four years later, the moment that ripped his world apart has given him direction to help others.

Four years later, the scared kid from Essex Fells who was falsely charged in the notorious Duke lacrosse rape case is gone, replaced with a confident young man already working to change the legal system.

Remember Reade Seligmann?

His mug shot was plastered on the cover of Newsweek four springs ago with the headline: “Sex, Lies and Duke.” He was facing 30 years in prison for a crime he did not commit — a crime, it was later proven, that never took place.

He will graduate from Brown University today. Seligmann, now 24, will leave the Ivy League school with a joint degree in history and public policy and attend law school in the fall, where he will pursue a career focused on reducing the number of innocent people behind bars.'

Rape claims are falsified at an alarming rate

anthony · 1 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With the surfacing of yet another falsified rape allegation, this time by UC nursing student Kristen Lamb of Lebanon, Ohio, many are left questioning just how many rape claims are fabricated. Statistics show that such fake claims happen at an unfathomable rate.

The false allegations of Lamb's are not unusual, unfortunately. A 1994 study conducted by Purdue University professor Eugene Kanin, Ph.D. found that 41% of forcible rape allegations made during a multi-year period were false. While the Kanin Study has its critics, the findings of falsehood in the report were all based upon confessions by the alleged victims that their claims were fabricated.

The Kanin Study found three primary reasons for women making false rape claims, all reported by the women themselves: providing an alibi, a means of gaining revenge, and a platform for seeking attention or sympathy.

Regardless of the reasons for the false claims, a fabricated rape claim carries some of the most damaging, far-reaching consequences. For example, when a woman claims rape and names a particular man as her assailant, the accused male is typically arrested after a short investigation. After arrest, the man's face is plastered across media outlets locally, sometimes even regionally. The alleged victim, however, remains shielded with her name and identity hidden by media, police and prosecutors.'

Canada: Fast-track domestic violence cases

Anonymous · 1 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A B.C. panel has issued 19 recommendations for preventing domestic violence deaths, including fast-tracking cases through the courts and flagging those at high risk of resulting in serious harm or death.
...
The panel also called for more consistency and better sharing of information between government agencies when dealing with domestic violence.
...

The recommendations come from a study of 11 deaths resulting from domestic violence in B.C. between 1995 and 2009.
...
Many of the recommendations are similar to those made at a 2009 coroner's inquest into a Victoria-area murder-suicide that resulted in the deaths of five people.

The inquest was examining the case of Peter Lee, who in September 2007 killed his estranged wife, Sunny Park, their six-year-old son and Park's parents, before committing suicide at the family home in Oak Bay east of Victoria.

The province's chief coroner has given government and law enforcement agencies one month to respond to the recommendations.'

Canada: Myths of domestic violence

Anonymous · 2 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To inaugurate a Domestic Violence Awareness Day conference in London, Ont., this coming Sunday, a vigil and commemorative ceremony will be held for Dave Lucio.

Dave Lucio's life was cut tragically short three years ago this Sunday by a .40-calibre Glock pistol bullet to his head. The lethal shot was fired by Kelly Johnson, a woman he had broken up with the previous day after a three-year intimate relationship. When she pulled the trigger, Lucio was driving a van with Johnson sitting beside him. Johnson then turned the gun on herself. The circumstances therefore left no room for doubt about who perpetrated the crime.

Although by no means the first time a Canadian man had been killed by a present or former intimate partner — one-third of Canada's approximately 70 annual intimate partner homicides are men killed by women — the case made waves because both the killer and the victim were police officers (Lucio a retired superintendent).

The story gathered wider cultural significance because then-London police chief Murray Faulkner (he has since retired) treated the case as a bilateral tragedy rather than a homicide. According to contemporary news reports, he went in person to comfort the family of Johnson — the killer — but didn't even bother to call the parents of Lucio, the victim.'

UK: Anti-violence campaign targets 'abusive' attitudes

anthony · 2 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A TV advert shows "abusive" behaviour towards a woman, including being leered at and enduring sexist comments.

Social Justice Minister Carl Sargeant said while that could seem harmless to men, women can feel threatened.

Welsh Women's Aid said tackling "widespread social attitudes" was crucial.
...
"Any behaviour that intimidates a woman should not be tolerated. If the campaign makes people stop and think then it will have served its purpose."
...

Adele Baumgardt, Wales commissioner for the Women's National Commission, said: "Gender discrimination affects women in Wales daily and can leave them feeling intimidated and even frightened.

"We need to change how men perceive women, challenge inappropriate attitudes and show men how damaging these can be. I hope that this campaign will give victims the confidence to come forward and ask for help."'

Woman stabs nine in China train rampage

anthony · 2 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BEIJING (AFP) - – A woman armed with a knife went on the rampage on an overnight passenger train in northeastern China, stabbing and wounding nine people as they slept, state media reported on Wednesday.

The attack, which occurred in the early morning Tuesday on a train in Heilongjiang province, is the latest in a wave of violent attacks by lone assailants that has shocked the country.

The woman, who was not identified, went from berth to berth stabbing sleeping passengers until she was wrestled to the ground and restrained by other travellers, said Dongbei, a news website covering China's northeast.

The woman was estimated by witnesses to be about 40 years old, but no other details about her were provided.

The train had been travelling from the provincial capital of Harbin to the city of Hebei. The victims received treatment when the train stopped in the city of Jiamusi, but the report did not say how serious their injuries were.'

Alimony - It is Unconstitutional

Matt · 3 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email from The Alliance For Freedom From Alimony, Inc.:

Alimony Statutes' Background

There is no common law right to alimony. It is merely a statute that must conform to state and federal constitutional provisions.

Alimony originated because of coverture, i.e. a wife was viewed as property of the husband and herself was not entitled to own property., thus the idea that if the couple separated the husband was responsible for the cost of living of the wife.

Coverture was abolished by most states in their constitutions and statutes to guarantee wives the right to buy, own and sell property. It created opportunities of economic equality for wives.

The doctrine of necessaries, the idea that a husband was responsible to third parties for the debts of their wives, was abolished in many states based on equal protection grounds. The law in many states is that neither party in a marriage is responsible for the debts of the spouse to third parties. This effectively makes the parties in marriage economic independents. Some states have made both parties in a marriage responsible for the debts of the spouse to third parties thereby solving the equal protection issue by keeping the doctrine but making it gender neutral.

Australia: Susan Falls not guilty of murder of husband

anthony · 3 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Sunshine Coast mother has been found not guilty of murdering her husband.

It took the jury less than two hours to decide Susan Falls had not murdered her husband, Rodney Falls.
...
Mr Falls' sister, Kim Page, stormed out of court swearing.

"You'll get yours," she said.

Another man also left the court saying "she got away with it" and slammed the door behind him.

The jury accepted Mrs Falls' argument that she was a victim of years of sustained abuse.

Justice Applegarth took several hours to sum up the case to the jury, beginning his address to them yesterday afternoon and continuing from 10am today.
...
He told jurors Mrs Falls' defence lawyers did not have to prove she was acting in self defence when she shot and killed Rodney Falls, but rather the prosecution must prove she wasn't acting in self defence at the time.

The onus of proof was on the Crown, he reminded them.

He also told jurors they must consider Mrs Falls state of mind at the time.

“Was she in fear of did she do what she did out of hatred and revenge, that's the essence of the prosecution case,” he said.'

Australia: Warning over Susan Falls acquittal: 'It's not open season on abusive husbands'

anthony · 3 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE acquittal of a woman who shot and killed her violent husband should not signify "open season" on abusive partners, a lawyer who heads a women's prisoner support group said yesterday.

The comment came after a jury took only 90 minutes to find Susan Falls, 42, not guilty of murdering her husband Rodney, 41, at their Caloundra home in May 2006.

Ms Falls was also cleared of manslaughter.

The former Sunshine Coast woman admitted killing her husband but claimed she did so in self-defence after suffering more than 20 years of violent abuse.

Lawyer Debbie Kilroy, founder of women prisoner support group Sisters Inside, said the verdicts should not encourage the public to take the law into their own hands.

"This does not mean 'open season'," Ms Kilroy said.

"I think (the Falls verdict) is a message to all battered women and victims of serious domestic violence that there is justice in the legal system," she said.
...
Ms Falls' family and supporters sobbed with joy when the verdict was read out while Rodneys Falls' family - including sister Kym Page - stormed out of the courtroom.

Outside court Ms Page said: "Why doesn't every man and woman just go out and (kill) their husbands?"'

A Hidden Crime: Domestic Violence Against Men Is a Growing Problem

Matt · 4 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amid the media frenzy over Tiger Woods and Bengals receiver Chris Henry, a key aspect of both stories slipped through the cracks: Like millions of other men, Woods and Henry were -- allegedly at least -- the victims of domestic violence perpetrated by their wives or girlfriends. Beyond its brutal physical and psychological costs, domestic violence against men exacts a cruel economic toll at the personal, societal and national levels.

For the most part, the media, authorities and average citizens see domestic violence as a crime that is committed by men and victimizes women. Consequently, funding to combat the problem has overwhelmingly been spent on programs that support women.

...

And yet, more than 200 survey-based studies show that domestic violence is just as likely to strike men as women. In fact, the overwhelming mass of evidence indicates that half of all domestic violence cases involve an exchange of blows and the remaining 50% is evenly split between men and women who are brutalized by their partners.'

Father-Son Poem: For Justin

Matt · 4 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Poem here. A total keeper.

For Justin

Remember that I love you, know I'll always care, whatever path your life may take,
feel that I am there.

As we rock, my little man,
soothe your tears away,
the little fingers on your hand,
are only small today.

A day may come when dark skies, make you feel all hope has gone,
so in time, the sun will shine,
to cast your shadow long,

Look to see that shadow,
look, learn and find,
behold, your silhouette is first,
with mine, a step behind.

Flexing our Political Muscle: Abusegate Targets 20 Lawmakers for Defeat on Nov. 2

Matt · 4 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Today, Abusegate is releasing a list of 20 politicians targeted for defeat on November 2. The lawmakers are being targeted as part of the "Adopt-a-Politician, Clean up Washington!" campaign.

These lawmakers – Democrats and Republicans – have a record of promoting biased and harmful domestic violence legislation in Congress, such as the International Violence Against Women Act. These Senators and Representatives have turned a cold shoulder on our repeated requests to reform VAWA.

The list of 20 incumbents targeted for defeat is shown below. We invite persons to "adopt" any of the targeted politicians and work to elect their opponents:
http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/2010/05/27/adopt-a-politician-heres-how-to-get-your-candidate-elected/

Complete information about the "Adopt-a-Politician, Clean up Washington!" campaign can be seen here.

Letter from India: "The Problem of Working With Men" arindamp · 4 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the 1990s, it became popular to talk about “engendering development.” The stated goal was to include more women in the development process, to right historical gender inequalities and make sure that aid money flowed equally to both sexes.

These are laudable goals. But what often goes unspoken in the practice of engendered development is that aid agencies want to work with women not just because they have traditionally been excluded, but also because men are harder to work with.

Indeed, in many ways, and in striking contrast to women, men often represent something of an impediment to development. As Jerald Moris, who has been working in rural development for more than 20 years, said to me: “Working with women’s groups is more efficient.” He added that a rupee spent on women goes further than on men.
...
He laughed when he told me all this; the irony wasn’t lost on him. Still, he said that in his view development was a “holistic” process. You couldn’t have real progress without including men.

It is perhaps hard to feel sorry for men: they drink, beat their wives, neglect their families.

But if the goal of development is to overcome obstacles to progress, then, precisely because they are often difficult and obstructionist, it would seem that men have to be part of the process.'

More Wives Look to Upgrade Engagement Rings

anthony · 4 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When Elizabeth Robichaux Brown got married nine years ago, she made a vow to love her husband, for better or for worse, until their dying days.

She did not make that same kind of commitment to her ring.

So, a few months ago, she did what more and more women are doing: She gave her original engagement ring an upgrade, placing two stones which she calls "the twins" on each side of her solitaire diamond.

"When I first got my ring, it was like, 'OK, I like this ring.' But I knew that eventually I would make it a different type of ring," she said. "I got a carat-and-a-half pear when I got married, but I always knew I wanted two pears on the side."

While Brown added on, some women are trading in their original engagement rings and wedding bands for something else. No longer seen as a symbol to be worn for an eternity, rings are being upgraded like some people trade in cars or remodel an aging kitchen.'

Feministing: 'Feminism and male circumcision'

anthony · 4 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I recently had a baby boy (my second) and of course the topic of circumcision came up. I educated myself on circumcision and how it is totally medically unnecessary to circumcise a healthy baby's penis and felt that doing so would pretty much amount to mutilating him for no other reason than because everybody else is doing it too. Unfortunately when I made up my mind about it, it was already too late. He was getting circumcised at that doctor's appointment.

My husband reported that our son seemed fine- that although we were told they wouldn't use pain relief he believes they did because he seems a-ok. That was until the first diaper change..and every diaper change after that for the next four days when my baby would shake and scream in pain...
...
I am now firmly on the side against circumcision and only wish I had actually looked deeper into this before my sons were circumcised. I honestly went along with the crowd on it and thought it was just one of things you do to your sons, get them circumcised.

If one of our rallying cries is bodily autonomy and we'd raise all hell when AAP briefly decided to allow "nicking" of female newborn genitals, does being against male circumcision become a feminist issue on the grounds of bodily autonomy or is it the universal right of a parent to SONS to do with their child's genitals as they please?'

The Masculinity Conspiracy: Chapter 2 now online

Anonymous · 5 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The Masculinity Conspiracy is a free online book about masculinity. Chapter 2 (History) is now online: http://masculinityconspiracy.com

This chapter examines how the theme of history is mobilized in the conspiracy via two books: Manliness by Harvey Mansfield, and Sex, Ecology, Spirituality: The Spirit of Evolution by Ken Wilber.

I show how these books promote a masculinity of fixed characteristics that is biologically determined and bound by history.

I then offer some different ways of thinking about masculinity and history in order to counter the conspiracy.

UK: Cameron in U-turn on rape case anonymity which could now only apply until suspects are charged

Matt · 5 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Plans to give anonymity to men accused of rape have been dramatically scaled back.

Two weeks ago, the coalition pledged to give men the same protection as their accusers, whose identities are never revealed.

But yesterday David Cameron indicated the accused would be named if prosecutors brought charges.

His comments, at Prime Minister's Questions, suggested any suspects released by police without charge would have their names permanently shielded from the public.'

Abusegate: 10 Reasons why Barbara Boxer will soon be Toast

Matt · 5 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Yesterday we launched the “Adopt-a-Politician: Clean up Washington!” campaign, listing 20 Senators and Representatives we are targeting for defeat on November 2: http://abusegate.mensnewsdaily.com/2010/06/04/adopt-a-politician-10-reasons-why-barbara-boxer-has-got-to-go/. Every one of these lawmakers has been unsympathetic to our repeated requests to reform the Violence Against Women Act.

And one politico is the undisputed champion in terms of her long-standing, unwavering, and dogmatic support for anti-family domestic violence laws: Senator Barbara Boxer of California. That makes Ms. Boxer the numero uno target for our Adopt-a-Politician campaign.'

[Please see the full page at the link above for the rest of this article]

Men's Rights Group Defeats "the Barbara Boxer Clone of India"

Matt · 5 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Boxer's feminist clone was defeated in India today.

The Indian Version of Barbara Boxer (Former Women's Minister Renuka Choudhury) is defeated once again today. She passed and implemented the second domestic violence law in India in 2006.

As per latest reports she was denied nomination to India's upper house of Parliament. Just a few days back, she was a clear favorite even with a section of media backing her.

From an activist in India:

http://economictimes.indiatimes.com/news/politics/nation/Jairam-Ramesh-gets-RS-ticket-Renuka-loses-out/articleshow/6009539.cms

"Former minister for women and child development Renuka Chowdhury, whose name was being touted as a possible candidate, lost out in the race."

Unlike US senate elections, in India the state senators elect proportionate 1/3rd members for India's Upper House in every 2 years for a full term of 6 years.

The Ruling Congress Party headed by Sonia Gandhi was not so strongly represented in State Senates and hence it requested for support from some smaller Political parties. Our members started massive fax and email campaign to these smaller political partners of the ruling party in last few days. All these small efforts added up to existing lobbies.

http://legalfighter.wordpress.com/2010/05/30/open-letter-opposing-renuka-chaudhary-as-rajya-sabha-member/

Next, we are working to get the chairperson of Indian National Commission for Women (NCW) Girija Vyas (a PhD from University of Delaware) sacked.

Best Regards
Anil

Egypt to strip men married to Israelis of citizenship

Matt · 6 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The feminist assertion that men have more rights than women, especially in societies that are (supposedly) patriarchal, is false. The latest example of this can be found here. If men are so powerful, why is it that the fundamental right to belong as part of the most basic political body a modern state can have (ie, the right of citizenship), can be summarily discharged simply for having married "the wrong kind of woman" -- or indeed, for any other reason that happens to become fashionable to those in charge? Excerpt:

'CAIRO (AFP) – A Cairo court on Saturday upheld a ruling to strip Egyptian men married to Israeli women of their citizenship in a case that has highlighted national sentiment towards Israel.

Judge Mohammed al-Husseini, sitting on the Supreme Administrative Court, said the interior ministry must ask the cabinet to take the necessary steps to strip Egyptian men married to Israeli women, and their children, of their citizenship.

The court said that each case should be considered separately, in a ruling that cannot be appealed.

The ruling reflects Egyptian sentiment towards Israel, more than 30 years after Egypt signed an unpopular peace deal with the Jewish state.

Before reading the verdict, Husseini said the case would not apply to Egyptian men married to Arab Israeli women.

"The case for (Egyptian) men married to Israeli Arab women is different to those married to Israeli women of Jewish origin because (Israeli Arabs) have lived under Israeli occupation," Husseini told the court.'

'Come for the Pizza, Stay for the Deconstruction of Masculinity'

anthony · 7 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Getting teenage boys to engage in gender theory can require a soft approach. The vague title of the clubs—“Men of Strength”—dodges the activist implications of the D.C.-based organization that runs them: Men Can Stop Rape. At the beginning of each school year, MOST facilitators arrive on campus and lure in participants. “Last year, we were hanging out outside school, and some people were like, ‘we need some males over here to eat some free pizza,’” says Eugene, a 16-year-old junior at Foggy Bottom’s School Without Walls. At that first MOST meeting, Eugene and a dozen other guys were fed pizza and offered free movie tickets; over the next school year, they came back each Tuesday for the pizza, and gradually advancing conversations on gender. Now, “I kind of like to keep the MOST club secret from other dudes,” says Eugene. “We all have this strong connection with each other . . . But also, if you bring more people in, then there are fewer slices.”'

St. Petersburg Times: Inside Tampa domestic violence shelter, there's quite a storm

Matt · 7 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TAMPA — Joanne Lighter was hired at the Spring of Tampa Bay to position Florida's largest domestic violence shelter for the future. Tampa's beloved charity had churned through executives and interim executives for nearly 10 years. It needed new phones and computers, but also stability and a long-range plan.

Two years later, Lighter has left a trail of broken relationships and hurt feelings through Tampa's philanthropic community.

Donors have pulled support and fundraisers have been scrapped. The Spring's mission is "in peril," as the chairman of the board wrote to donors in April, and the shelter could soon have to turn victims away.

Lighter says she is doing the job the board gave her, and that change is hard.

Lighter's critics — including former Spring employees, volunteers and board members — say she is verbally abusive, has fired good people and is dragging down an important Tampa institution that provided emergency shelter for more than 2,000 domestic violence victims last year.'

Abusegate Targets Anti-Family Lawmakers for Electoral Defeat

Matt · 7 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

This press release went out to about 20,000 media outlets today:

WASHINGTON / June 9, 2010 – Twenty national lawmakers, known for their advocacy of policies that promote false allegations and serve to break-up families, have been targeted for electoral defeat in November.

The 20 lawmakers are supporters of discriminatory laws such as the International Violence Against Women Act that are known to violate fundamental civil rights and escalate partner tensions. The 20 Democratic and Republican lawmakers are listed at the end of this press release.

“Domestic violence laws that promote ‘false allegations’ of domestic violence contribute to the destruction of families. Such laws remove the right of many children to know one of their parents, and often their grandparents,” explains Sheryle Hutter of Colorado. “Thanks to such laws, my son hasn’t seen his daughter for 10 years, and I have not seen my grandchild for more than 3 years.”

The use of false abuse allegations to gain a tactical edge in child custody cases has been extensively documented: http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/VAWA-A-Culture-of-False-Allegations

A growing number of civil rights organizations are questioning “get-tough” domestic violence laws. The Washington Civil Rights Council has described the Violence Against Women Act as the “biggest civil rights roll-back since the Jim Crow era.” Last year the Connecticut chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union successfully challenged a case in which a man falsely-accused of domestic violence was denied the right to a hearing.

Women’s groups such as Concerned Women for America have also expressed concerns with what it calls violence against women “misinformation.” In May 5, 2010 testimony to the Senate Judiciary Committee, Concerned Women for America warned that abuse-reduction programs need to “take the ‘gender’ politics and ‘politically-correct’ agenda out of the public policy solutions.”

The effectiveness of domestic violence programs is likewise being challenged. According to Department of Justice official Angela Moore Parmley, “We have no evidence to date that VAWA [Violence Against Women Act] has led to a decrease in the overall levels of violence against women.”

Research shows women are as likely as men to initiate physical abuse against their intimate partners: http://www.csulb.edu/~mfiebert/assault.htm. But VAWA-funded programs may present misleading statistics.
++++++++++++++++++++
Senators:
Barbara Boxer - California
Mark Kirk - Illinois
Russ Carnahan - Missouri
Arlen Specter - Pennsylvania
Patty Murray - Washington

Representatives:
Vic Snyder – Arkansas
Lucille Roybal-Allard - California
Jeff Miller – Florida
Jim Marshall - Georgia
Walt Minnick - Georgia
John Tierney - Massachusetts

Donna Edwards - Maryland
Larry Kissel – North Carolina
Paul Hodes – New Hampshire
Rush Holt – New Jersey
Ben Luján – New Mexico
Mary Joe Kilroy - Ohio
David Wu – Oregon
Ted Poe - Texas
Steve Kagen - Wisconsin

CNN: Kids of lesbians have fewer behavioral problems, study suggests

Anonymous · 8 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A nearly 25-year study concluded that children raised in lesbian households were psychologically well-adjusted and had fewer behavioral problems than their peers.

...

Funding for the research came from several lesbian, gay, bisexual, and transgender advocacy groups, such as the Gill Foundation and the Lesbian Health Fund from the Gay Lesbian Medical Association.

Dr. Nanette Gartrell, the author of the study, wrote that the "funding sources played no role in the design or conduct of the study."

...

Wright questioned the objectivity of Gartrell's research, saying the author can "cherry pick people who are involved and the info they release."

"In essence, this study claims to purport that children do better when raised by lesbians," she said.

Studies have shown that children thrive having both a mother and a father, Wright said.

"You have to be a little suspicious of any study that says children being raised by same-sex couples do better or have superior outcomes to children raised with a mother and father," she said. "It just defies common sense and reality."'

The Atlantic: 'The End of Men'

anthony · 8 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even more unsettling for Ericsson, it has become clear that in choosing the sex of the next generation, he is no longer the boss. “It’s the women who are driving all the decisions,” he says—a change the MicroSort spokespeople I met with also mentioned. At first, Ericsson says, women who called his clinics would apologize and shyly explain that they already had two boys. “Now they just call and [say] outright, ‘I want a girl.’ These mothers look at their lives and think their daughters will have a bright future their mother and grandmother didn’t have, brighter than their sons, even, so why wouldn’t you choose a girl?”

...

In feminist circles, these social, political, and economic changes are always cast as a slow, arduous form of catch-up in a continuing struggle for female equality. But in the U.S., the world’s most advanced economy, something much more remarkable seems to be happening. American parents are beginning to choose to have girls over boys. As they imagine the pride of watching a child grow and develop and succeed as an adult, it is more often a girl that they see in their mind’s eye.

...

Earlier this year, for the first time in American history, the balance of the workforce tipped toward women, who now hold a majority of the nation’s jobs. The working class, which has long defined our notions of masculinity, is slowly turning into a matriarchy, with men increasingly absent from the home and women making all the decisions. Women dominate today’s colleges and professional schools—for every two men who will receive a B.A. this year, three women will do the same. Of the 15 job categories projected to grow the most in the next decade in the U.S., all but two are occupied primarily by women. Indeed, the U.S. economy is in some ways becoming a kind of traveling sisterhood: upper-class women leave home and enter the workforce, creating domestic jobs for other women to fill.'

From Here & Back Again: Boys versus Girls

anthony · 8 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today, there still seems to be a held belief that girls suffer discrimination in schools, even to the point that teachers and school administrators, when shown empirical evidence, will not believe that it is boys who have suffered and are suffering.

According to the National Center for Education Statistics, slightly more girls than boys actually enroll in high-level math and science courses, girls outnumber boys in student government and honor societies, on school newspapers and in debating clubs.

Girls read more, test higher in music and art, study abroad more and are more actively engaged in school.

Guess where boys are ahead. Yes, in sports, but the gap is closing rapidly.

Girls also go on to college more than boys, and one silly prediction was made that at the present rate of change, the last boy to receive a bachelor's degree will be in 2062.

Boys have the dubious distinction of being diagnosed with attention-deficit disorder three times more than girls, are more involved in crimes, alcohol and drugs and commit suicide about five times more often than girls. These statistics do not apply to just urban or rural poor schools, but across the board.'

UK: Night on domestic violence focuses on male victims

anthony · 8 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A conference about domestic violence against men and a candle-light vigil to honour slain London police officer David Lucio will be held Saturday.

Monday marks the third anniversary of Lucio's death. The retired London police superintendent was shot by acting police inspector Kelly Johnson, with whom Lucio had broken off a relationship.

The conference will focus on "the rarely talked about reality of domestic violence against men," according to a news release.

Lucio's father, Doug Lucio, will speak at the conference about his views about his son's treatment by London police after his death.'

Ex-Wife Gets Jail For Alienating Kids From Dad

Anonymous · 9 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"In a startling development, a Long Island mother has been found in contempt during a custody fight with her ex-husband.

It's a decision that could have her spending summer weekends in the slammer.

Ted Rubin and Lauren Lippe were divorced seven years ago, and over the years Rubin said his ex-wife has been vengefully programming his children to hate him.

It's a case of parental alienation that isn't being taken lightly. Now Lippe is going to jail. "

NY Times: Daring to Discuss Women in Science

anthony · 9 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The House of Representatives has passed what I like to think of as Larry's Law. The official title of this legislation is "Fulfilling the potential of women in academic science and engineering," but nothing did more to empower its advocates than the controversy over a speech by Lawrence H. Summers when he was president of Harvard.

This proposed law, if passed by the Senate, would require the White House science adviser to oversee regular "workshops to enhance gender equity." At the workshops, to be attended by researchers who receive federal money and by the heads of science and engineering departments at universities, participants would be given before-and-after "attitudinal surveys" and would take part in "interactive discussions or other activities that increase the awareness of the existence of gender bias."

I'm all in favor of women fulfilling their potential in science, but I feel compelled, at the risk of being shipped off to one of these workshops, to ask a couple of questions:

1) Would it be safe during the "interactive discussions" for someone to mention the new evidence supporting Dr. Summers's controversial hypothesis about differences in the sexes' aptitude for math and science?

2) How could these workshops reconcile the "existence of gender bias" with careful studies that show that female scientists fare as well as, if not better than, their male counterparts in receiving academic promotions and research grants?'

Is it our fault men won't give up seats for mothers-to-be?

Broadsword · 9 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"When it comes to excuses, I like to think I've heard them all.

But this one beggars belief: according to a new survey, the reason why a tired, aching, heavily pregnant woman is left to stand on public transport - and, yes, we've all seen her -is because those healthy young men, sitting so very comfortably nearby, are just too embarrassed to offer her their seats.

They are, apparently, tormented by the thought that she might not actually be pregnant. Just fat. So better by far not to risk insulting her.

OK, chaps. If that's your story, you stick to it.

But now tell us this: why do you also neglect to offer your seat to a woman where there's no room for doubt? Because, say, she's elderly? Or carrying a child? Or struggling with shopping?

Or - if this isn't too radical a thought for you - simply because she's a woman?"

DAHMW Fundraiser in Honor of Father's Day

Matt · 9 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

A great way to show dad you care is by donating to a cause that specializes in helping men.

The DAHMW, 10 years old now, receives no federal or state funding. We have no paid employees.

Our volunteers donated over 14,000 hours last year to keep our helpline running and bring public awareness to this issue. We rely solely on the generosity of donations. Your donation of $10, $15 or $20 will help us keep our toll free helpline and website up and running. Everyone who donates will receive grateful acknowledgment through the Thank You Page on our Website. We'll post you and your dad's name, unless your prefer to remain anonymous. In order to donate, please click on the yellow "Donate" button on the Support Us page or go to our Facebook cause page at: http://www.causes.com/causes/207697

--
Jan Brown, Founder & Executive Director
Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women
http://www.domesticabusehelpline.org/

"Everything you are against weakens you. Everything you are for empowers you."
– Dr. Wayne Dyer
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=gdUYPcEgooc

Australia: Man sets himself on fire in front of Brisbane Supreme Court building after family court ruling

Matt · 9 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A MAN is believed to have set himself on fire outside of Brisbane's iconic Supreme Court complex after an unfavourable family court decision, according to witnesses at the scene.

The incident happened just after 2pm after the man, believed to be in his 40s, had been sitting in front of the iconic marble Law Courts sign for some time.

Witness reported hearing a bang and seeing flames as would-be rescuers ran to the man's aid.

Emergency workers at the scene say the man is in a critical condition - with burns to 90 per cent of his body.

Sources investigating the incident said the man had earlier been at the Federal Courts for family matter and may not have received the outcome he was after.

Two witnesses, Kylie Pannel and Kylie Beard, who were both close to tears, said they could not believe what happened just 3m from them.

"He said absolutely nothing," Ms Pannel said. "He was so quiet it wasn't funny."'

F&F Helps Defeat Radical Bill from Opponents of Recognizing Parental Alienation

Matt · 9 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'The Northern California-based advocacy group the Center for Judicial Excellence is one of Fathers and Families' main legislative opponents. This increasingly powerful and well-funded group has been the prime mover behind California AB 612, a bill that would exclude evidence of Parental Alienation from family law proceedings and prevent target parents of Parental Alienation from raising PA as an issue in their cases. Last year Fathers and Families' legislative representative Michael Robinson helped build a professional coalition to scuttle AB 612.

The CJE claims that there's a "crisis" in family courts, and that courts are handing over custody of children to physically and sexually abusive fathers. They promote reforms which will make it easier to deny parents shared custody or visitation rights based on unsubstantiated abuse claims.

Recently Assemblymember Jim Beall, Jr. (D-San Jose), a close ally of the CJE's who sponsored AB 612, did a gut and amend of AB 2475. The amended bill added Section 43.94 to the Civil Code to remove quasi-judicial immunity from court-appointed practitioners such as custody evaluators, parenting coordinators, therapists, minor's counsels, special masters, and others. The amended bill, which was sponsored by the CJE, was done in response to a perceived problem of evaluators supposedly recommending to judges that they place children with physically and sexually abusive parents.'

Netherlands: Unemployed women given £1,000 makeovers to help them find a solvent husband

Broadsword · 10 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Women on the dole are being offered a £1,150 fashion and beauty makeover and membership to a dating agency to help them find a wealthy husband.

Dutch jobseekers are being given a new hairstyle and outfit and tips from a lifecoach on how to attract a new partner.

The scheme has been slammed by local politicians who criticised the deal as unethical and a waste of taxpayers money.

Under the scheme, the women will be given instructions on how to present themselves socially and offered a place on an exclusive matchmaking website called Mens & Relatie (People and Relationships).

They will have professional photographs of their new image to boost their dating profile.

The scheme is being offered by three councils in Friesland, in the north of the Netherlands.

They estimate that if 70 women find a solvent husband, the council can save £330,000 on welfare payments."

Canada: Alberta targets domestic violence

Anonymous · 10 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Alberta government is spending $2.4 million on programs to fight domestic violence in the province, the province's justice minister said Thursday.

Minister of Justice and Attorney General Alison Redford made the announcement at a conference in Calgary — a city that saw nine domestic homicides last year, well above the national average.

"Last spring a young woman was murdered in the home that she shared with her children and her common-law husband," Redford said.

"To know that women have died and that children are impacted is a tragedy. And it's not a tragedy that we can let happen. We need to make sure that there is a consistent message out there that if kids or parents need help — even if it's someone who is abusing — that they are able to reach out and get that help."'

Domestic Violence: Why Some Women Have Real Reason to Fear the World Cup

badgerb · 10 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The rise in domestic violence on Super Bowl Sunday was proved a hoax. Not to be outdone, a female professor in England has warned women are at risk during the World Cup. See article here. Excerpt:

'ScienceDaily (June 10, 2010) — An expert at Royal Holloway, University of London is urging victims of domestic violence to have a plan in place should their partners turn violent during the World Cup, and to avoid the temptation of turning to drink themselves.

The World Cup can be a time of fear and worry for victims of domestic abuse as heightened emotions fuelled by alcohol come into play and instances of domestic violence attacks increase. Figures from the Home Office report that during the 2006 Football World Cup there was a 25% average increase in domestic violence on the five England match days in the tournament.

Professor Paula Nicolson, from the Department of Health and Social Care at Royal Holloway, who specialises in studying domestic violence, says it is now widely recognised that the inevitable alcohol consumption during large-scale sporting events increases men's violence towards their female partners.'

Group raises concerns over Title IX, men's soccer

anthony · 11 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With the World Cup approaching, an organization that advocates Title IX reform released a report lamenting the lack of growth in men's soccer at top athletic programs.

Only 59 percent of Division I programs offer men's soccer, according to the College Sports Council's study. That's a far cry from the 93 percent that offer women's soccer and the CSC says the disparity is because of Title IX and the way schools try to comply with it.

That conclusion was met with a stern rebuttal from both the NCAA and the Women's Sports Foundation, with the latter group saying the law tries to create equal opportunities for male and female athletes but does not force schools to forsake certain sports or offer others.

The CSC's report, released Thursday, points out that there were 197 men's soccer teams in Division I in 2008-09, the same number as in 1995-96. Over that same period, the number of women's teams increased from 189 to 310.

"Men's soccer has really been harmed," said Eric Pearson, chairman of the CSC. "Since 1996, the growth of the sport at the collegiate level has been held back."

Study: Men More Affected than Woman by Ups and Downs of Relationships

Anonymous · 12 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Contrary to popular belief, men are more affected by a rocky relationship than their female counterparts, according to new research from Wake Forest University.

Research shows that women have a harder time coping with a breakup, but the guys are the ones who feel more stress and strain when the relationship hits a rough patch, researchers found. On the upside, men also get more of a psychological and emotional boost when the relationship is healthy.

"Common wisdom says that women are more hurt by problems in a relationship," says Robin Simon, lead researcher on the study and a sociologist at Wake Forest, "but we found that the benefits of support [in a relationship] and the disadvantages of strain are exaggerated for the men."

"Men are more sensitive than we often think they are," she says.'

As Women Rise in Politics, Fault Lines Change

anthony · 12 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Hillary Clinton ran for Senate in 2000, her Republican rival, Rick Lazio, walked over to Clinton during a debate waving a pledge he demanded she sign; the subsequent outrage over what was seen as an invasion of Clinton's personal space both solidified Clinton's support among women and underlined that gender remained very much an issue in politics.

"...you can't make a point forcefully if you're a man and the person you are making a point with is a woman," Lazio said at the time in response to the anger directed towards him. He added: "I just think that that's sexist."

Yet in the 2010 races, male politicians had no problems aggressively challenging their female opponents, and the female candidates were more likely to highlight their business experience than their gender.
...

In a lament of the "fascist feminist" movement, meanwhile, Cassy Fiano - who appears on her blog in a tank top, pointing a gun and smiling - wrote that women like Brown "champion strong, empowered women, yet they consistently try to instill a victim mentality in women."

The question of victimhood arose more than once in Haley's South Carolina primary, though it wasn't necessarily clear who was the victim in question. Haley aggressively denied two allegations she had engaged in extramarital affairs and resisted being cast as a victim after a political rival criticized her using a racial slur. Her success appears to have been rooted in part in her deft handling of the situations: Even if she benefited from the sort of rallying-around effect that boosted Clinton in 2000, she never appeared to be seeking it out.'

"Abusegate" passes 100,000 Google search hit milestone

Matt · 12 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'In an ongoing effort to track the dissemination of information about Abusegate, we periodically do a Google search on the word “abusegate.”

For the first time, “abusegate” has exceeded the 100,000 milestone. As of today, “abusegate” has 102,000 hits on Google.

Keep spreading the word, Abusegate, Investigate! One of these days, Congress will take the hint.'

Canada: The new heavyweight champions

Anonymous · 13 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Could this be the future? Very likely. At every age and income level, women are more likely than ever before to be the major or sole breadwinner in the family. The reason is not that more women are working, but that fewer men are. Three-quarters of the people who lost their jobs in the U.S. recession were men, and the hardest-hit sectors were the male worlds of construction, manufacturing and finance. Many of those jobs aren't coming back. In the city of Hamilton – once known as Steeltown – just 2 per cent of the population still works in steel. In Sudbury, the town that nickel built, Inco's unionized labour force has shrunk from 12,000 to around 3,300 souls, who are currently locked in a futile long-term strike with their foreign owner.
...
All evidence suggests the gender shift is permanent. It would be nice to report that the sons of the striking nickel workers have gone off to university to become metallurgical engineers. But they have not. Just 18 per cent of Canadian males between 18 and 21 are currently attending university. Their sisters, though, are doing fine. They outperform their brothers in school and are far more focused on getting the credentials that will land them jobs as dental hygienists, bank clerks, office managers and nurses.
...

Men and women also behave differently once they get there. Here's what guys typically do in first-year university: play video games, work out, watch TV, party. Here's what girls do: study.

"If men were operating rationally in an economic sense, they should be flooding into higher education," says Tom Mortenson, a senior scholar at the Pell Institute for the Study of Opportunity in Higher Education in Washington. But people don't always operate rationally. And so we have that most modern of stereotypes – the aimless, slacker man-boy who isn't really qualified for anything and can't quite latch on to the job market.

As women bring home more and more of the bacon – and sometimes the whole hog – what will men do? How will relationships between the sexes be renegotiated? How will men figure out new ways to be a man? I have no idea. But for the first time since women relied on men to chase away the lions and bring home a tasty side of mastodon, it's all up for grabs.'

In divorce, should the father have equal custody rights to his children?

Matt · 13 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is a scientific fact that children do ENORMOUSLY better in joint custody arrangements. The only reason this is resisted by the existing for-profit divorce industry is there are easily $50 billion in annual legal fees in custody battles and also the states are paid billions more annually in matching child support funds under The Social Security Act Title 4d. This has the perverse incentive of making it profitable to force either parent out of a child's life.

See www.FathersUnite.org www.BestInterestOfCh ildren.organd thousands of other sites and organizations now available to fight this evil divorce industry which hides the facts to maintain the status quo and their multi-billion per year boondoggle.
...
It's a Fact Here's why: 63% of youth suicides are from fatherless homes. (Source: U.S. D.H.H.S., Bureau of the Census). 90% of all homeless and runaway children are from fatherless homes. 85% of all children that exhibit behavioral disorders come from fatherless homes. (Source: Center for Disease Control). 80% of rapist motivated by displaced anger come from fatherless homes. (Source: Criminal Justice and Behavior, Vol. 14, pp. 403-26). 71% of all high school dropouts come from fatherless homes. (Source: National Principals Assoc. Report on the State of High Schools). 85% of all youths sitting in prisons grew up in a fatherless home. (Source: Fulton County Georgia jail populations, Texas Dept. Of Corrections, 1992). These statistics translate to mean that children from fatherless homes are: 5 times more likely to commit suicide 32 times more likely to run away 20 times more likely to have behavioral disorders 14 times more likely to commit rape 9 times more likely to drop out of high school 20 times more likely to end up in prison.'

Call for Papers - Male Studies Conference - October 2010

Matt · 13 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The following link is the first official Call for Papers for the First Annual Conference on Male Studies to be held in October, 2010 at Wagner College on Staten Island, New York:

http://call-for-papers.sas.upenn.edu/node/37177

Wagner College will host the first annual Conference on Male Studies, on Friday and Saturday, October 1-2, 2010. Six themes representing several disciplines will be addressed by panels and individual presenters:

▪ The deep biology of the experience of being male (genetics, biology, psychoneuroendocrinology, paleoanthropology);

▪ Literacy and education of boys and college males (pedagogy, sociology);

▪ Socioeconomic factors leading to males' over-involvement in the criminal justice system, underemployment and limited opportunities as fathers, resulting from changes in child custody law (economics, forensics, law, public policy);

▪ Misandric representations of boys and mature males in the media and advertising (media studies including cinema, television and internet, and advertising);

▪ Accounts of the experience of being male (history, literature, autobiography);

▪ Pressing issues related to the emotional well-being of boys and older males, most notably depression and suicide (clinical psychology, medicine and psychiatry, social work).

Specialists in all of the above disciplines as well as related areas of research will present position papers or engage in carefully organized panel discussions of the themes. We expect participants to include scholars from more than 12 countries who participated in the April 7, 2010 inaugural teleconference and webinar broadcast.

Proceedings of the conference will be published in the first issue of a new journal, Male Studies, in 2011.

Please submit your proposal as a (1) single authored paper, (2) panel (naming colleagues who would be willing to participate with you), or (3) a workshop. The two-day conference will be interdisciplinary and international in scope.

In your proposal, indicate the specific discipline(s) your proposal represents. Include current contact information.

As a reminder, as mentioned on the Call for Papers, please send your documents to mgroth@wagner.edu.

Also, please forward this message to other scholars with whom you work or have worked.

Proposals will be accepted until August 31.

All Best,

Miles Groth, PhD, Convener

UK: Female bodyguards to get lighter 'baby' guns

Broadsword · 13 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Police bodyguards protecting the Royals and the Prime Minister are being armed with 'baby' guns in a bid to recruit more women officers to the role.

...

In a report to the Metropolitan Police Authority, John Bunn, a senior detective in the Yard's counter-terrorism command described 'considerable improvements' in the work of SO1, the specialist protection unit.

He wrote: 'A diversity forum and work strands following best Metropolitan police service practice have been established, for example changing the type of firearm used to accommodate smaller hands, changes in recruit[ment] advertising, female-only insight days and mentoring under-represented groups expressing an interest in SO1.'

...

Patrick Mercer, former chairman of the Commons sub-committee on counterterrorism, told the Sunday Times: 'I hope the judgment has been made on effectiveness and not on some contorted view of equality.'

Cathy Young: "Right to be feminist" redwoodwriter · 13 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE LATEST Sarah Palin controversy has to do with feminism. In a recent article in the Washington Post, feminist author and blogger Jessica Valenti blasted the former vice presidential candidate for “adopting the feminist label.” Valenti believes that any talk of a conservative version of feminism is a cynical right-wing ploy to fool women into supporting reactionary antiwoman policies. But while Palin may be far from the best spokeswoman for conservative feminism, the idea itself is essential to feminism’s health.

If feminism is typecast as a left-wing movement, this automatically limits its appeal in a country with center-right politics. Feminist writer Naomi Wolf noted this nearly two decades ago when she urged the movement to drop litmus tests that excluded millions of women because of their positions on environmental policy, guns, gay rights, or abortion. Wolf argued that the beliefs of conservative and Republican women who champion female autonomy and achievement should be “respected as a right-wing version of feminism.”

...

Who owns feminism today? Many feminists are incensed when the label is appropriated by women who question the Violence Against Women Act, or who argue that the pay differential between women and men is due largely to women’s more family-focused personal choices, not discrimination. Yet critiques of the conventional feminist paradigms of such problems as domestic violence and the gender gap in pay have been made both by many dissident feminists and by many scholars and researchers. To reject them out of hand as incompatible with feminism is not only ideologically intolerant, it also suggests an unwillingness to even consider factual claims that are at odds with dogma.'

Canada: Calgary boy back home after 2 years in U.S.

Anonymous · 13 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 12-year-old Calgary boy is back on Canadian soil after being shuffled through a series of foster homes in the U.S. for nearly two years.

The boy, who cannot be named now that he has returned to Canada, has been in foster care in Oregon since he was picked up by police for biking without a helmet while on a summer vacation with his stepfather in 2008.

U.S. officials didn't recognize the boy's stepfather as his legal guardian, so the boy was sent to a foster home.

After a lengthy legal battle, a U.S. judge ruled in May the boy would be allowed to return to Canada.

He arrived at Calgary airport on Friday afternoon, where he was reunited with his mother.'

Barbara Kay: First, kill the husband. Second, claim sympathy as a widow

Anonymous · 14 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It used to be that the definition of hutzpah was a man who had murdered his parents pleading for mercy from the court because he was an orphan.

We have for our delectation an update on this definition out of Sacramento, California, in a story about a woman – the wife of a police detective, to add spice to the narrative — who, disgruntled over the loss of custody of her children to the husband (and going by the stats on this subject, she must be a piece of work to begin with to have lost custody in today's mother-friendly courts) hires a motorcycle gang hit man to off her husband.

Or she thinks she did. Members of the hit man's gang tape damning conversations with her and alert the police, who arrest her and eventually convict her for solicitation to murder. The story doesn't say why, but I'm thinking the gang probably has enough problems with the police, and don't need the aggravation of a furious vendetta from their proposed victim's colleagues.

But get this: Later in divorce court, after being released from prison in 2004, the would-be murderer is awarded half the couple's property, $70,000, just as though they were any other divorcing couple with, say, "irreconcilable differences." I guess you don't get more "irreconcilable" that when one partner tries to whack the other and fails.'

Abusegate: NM Rep. Ben Lujan Calls Abusegaters “Domestic Violence Deniers”

Matt · 14 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Monday, June 14, 2010

Recently Abusegate announced the names of 20 Senators and Representatives we are targeting for electoral defeat on November 2. One of those persons is Ben Lujan, Democratic congressman of New Mexico, who is a co-sponsor of the family-destructive International Violence Against Women Act.

So when Lujan found out his name was on our list, he issued a press release in which Lujan’s campaign manager called Abusegate a “fringe” organization that represents “domestic violence deniers” — see below.

Rep. Lujan may believe there are good reasons to support the International Violence Against Act. But engaging in political name-calling does little to burnish his image as a lawmaker who is working to help New Mexico families, as he claims on his website.

Rep. Lujan should apologize for his demagoguery — call his Washington office at 202-225-6190. Or shoot him an email at https://forms.house.gov/lujan/webforms/issue_subscribe.htm

Action Alert: Boston Globe Calls for MA Courts to Be ‘Monitored Closely to Ensure That Fathers Get Fair Treatment'

Matt · 14 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Boston Globe’s Sunday lead editorial Child-custody cases demand discretion, not new laws (6/13/10) focuses on Fathers & Families’ shared parenting bill HB 1400. The editorial arose out of contacts between Fathers & Families’ Board Chair Ned Holstein, MD, Massachusetts shared parenting activist Dr. Peter Hill, and the Globe. The Globe had previously endorsed shared parenting in principle in its 2008 editorial A fair role for fathers (Boston Globe, 2/23/08) after meeting with Dr. Holstein.

The new editorial has positives and negatives. Among the positives, it says “No one can argue against the goal of giving fathers a large presence in their children’s lives.” Moreover, it makes an important call for Massachusetts family courts to “be monitored closely to ensure that fathers get fair treatment, and that, as much as possible, both parents get ample time with their children.”

However, the editorial disappoints in failing to endorse a presumption of shared parenting and/or HB 1400 as a solution, calling our bill “too broad an approach to a challenging issue that demands nuanced, case-by-case decisions based on the best interests of the child.” As Dr. Holstein explained to the Joint Committee on the Judiciary in his testimony on HB 1400, the bill isn’t too broad and “does not limit judicial discretion, mandate 50/50 parenting or any other specific parenting schedule, increase parental conflict or re-litigation, diminish protections against domestic violence, nor discard the best interest of the child standard”. To read Holstein’s written and spoken testimony, please click here.
...
We urge all Fathers and Families supporters to write to the Boston Globe about their editorial and in support of shared parenting by clicking here (letters@globe.com). To post a comment on the story on the Globe website, click here. To volunteer to be a part of Fathers and Families' work, click here.

Action Alert: Atlantic Monthly Denigrates Dads for Father's Day

Matt · 14 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To commemorate Father's Day, the Atlantic Monthly published the anti-father article Are Fathers Necessary? A paternal contribution may not be as essential as we think (July/August 2010). It's no surprise that author Pamela Paul's arguments are factually flawed. Fathers & Families Board member Robert Franklin, Esq. explains:

> Pamela Paul tells Atlantic Monthly readers that "there's nothing objectively essential about his (dad's) contribution." Of course she could have said that about anyone; no one's "contribution" is "objectively essential." That Paul chose fathers about whom to make the observation speaks volumes about her bias in the matter.
>
> Paul's article takes off from an analysis of data on parents and children by Judith Stacey, a professor of sociology at New York University, and Timothy Biblarz, a demographer from the University of Southern California, that was published in the Journal of Marriage and the Family. Its purpose is to explain what effect (if any) parental gender has on children. The authors conclude that parental gender seems to make no difference in outcomes for children. That's the "bottom line" of the study; Paul missed it.

...
Write a Letter to the Editor of The Atlantic Monthly by clicking here.

The Sperm-Donor Kids Are Not Really All Right

Stinger503 · 14 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Kids Are All Right, due out in July, is being praised for its honest portrayal of a lesbian couple, played by Julianne Moore and Annette Bening. But what seems most revelatory about the movie is its portrayal of their two teenage children who track down their sperm donor biological father and insist on forging a connection with him. Finally, we have an exploration of how children born from such procedures feel, because in fact it turns out that their feelings about their origins are a lot more complicated than people think.

...

We set out to change that. We teamed up with professor Norval Glenn of the University of Texas at Austin to design and field a survey with a sample drawn from more than 1 million American households. One of us (Karen Clark) found out at age 18 that she had been conceived through anonymous sperm donation in 1966. The other (Elizabeth Marquardt) has completed studies on topics such as the inner lives of children of divorce and has been profoundly absorbed by the stories of adult donor offspring since she first began hearing them in comments to posts she wrote on the FamilyScholars blog in 2005.

...

The results are surprising. While adoption is often the center of controversy, it turns out that sperm donation raises a host of different but equally complex—and sometimes troubling—issues. Two-thirds of adult donor offspring agree with the statement "My sperm donor is half of who I am." Nearly half are disturbed that money was involved in their conception. More than half say that when they see someone who resembles them, they wonder if they are related. About two-thirds affirm the right of donor offspring to know the truth about their origins.'

Canada: Sometimes unequal works

Anonymous · 15 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This private member's bill, introduced by Conservative MP Maurice Vellacott, would amend the Divorce Act to mandate "equal shared parenting" when parents split up. Courts would start from the presumption that parents share time with the kids and decision making on a 50-50 basis, and put the legal onus on parents to show that such an arrangement would not be in the child's best interest.

Before I had a baby, I would probably have supported this legislation. Who would deny a child the right to the equal love and care of both parents? Why do mothers get custody so much more often than fathers?
...
When it comes to very young children, the presumption of the bill contradicts the first law of every parenting book on Earth: Disrupt a baby's routine as little as possible. Expert after expert advises parents to establish one sleep routine, nap routine and meal routine, and to ease young children slowly into transitions, such as moving house or mommy going back to work. They further warn that vacations — or any time away overnight from home — will prove disruptive. Indeed, what parents haven't returned from a trip with their tots only to find that they suddenly won't sleep through the night, or cling to your leg like Saran Wrap?
...

Which brings us back to Bill C-422. Equal shared parenting would mean that very young children could be constantly shuttled back and forth between their parents' homes. Breast here, bottle there, stay-at-home parent here, daycare there. This type of endless transitioning will do them no favours — in fact, it can do a lot of damage. Courts can already order these kinds of arrangements, even without shared parenting rules, and there is mounting evidence that the stress hurts a young child's ability to attach to either parent, and to other people in general.

Bill C-422 would make this type of arrangement even more common at a time when other jurisdictions are questioning this model. Case in point: The Australian government, which four years ago introduced mandatory equal parenting legislation, is currently under pressure to revise its laws in the wake of several damning reports. Researchers found that not only were some children at risk of being placed in violent situations, but even children who were physically safe felt depressed, stressed and confused, and suffered adjustment problems. They also found that some fathers' motivation in seeking shared custody was not to bond with their children, but to reduce the amount of child support they had to pay.
...
I hope our lawmakers will allow other fractured families the same latitude, and defeat Bill C-422 or amend it to respect the needs of very young children, and other special circumstances. Until then, happy birthday Zara, and happy Father's Day, Ian. You both deserve the best celebrations a daughter and dad can have.'

Handling of 'abduction' case involving teen has been absurd

ItsDan · 15 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here, excerpt:

'He saw a 3-year-old girl without a parent. If he had it to do all over again, if he could see the cops, the handcuffs, the TV cameras and the jail cell all awaiting him, I imagine the last thing he would have done was try to help her.

But he did.
...
But look at the evidence.

We have the little girl's mother losing track of her daughter.

We have Edwin's mother not taking the girl from Edwin and turning her over to a store employee.

And we have Edwin in handcuffs.

I'm not sure the problem here is with the 14-year-old.

Interestingly enough, the girl's mother never did press charges. But the Sheriff's Office decided it would, ultimately settling on a charge of false imprisonment.

"He was in custody of the child and had no authority to be so," said Capt. Angelo Nieves. "The thing is to make clear we have not charged him with an offense that did not occur."

Congratulations.'

Canada: Barbara Kay: Happy Seed Provider's Day, Dad

Anonymous · 15 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Adult children conceived during the wave of sperm donorship in the early 1980s and early 1990s are now telling their stories. They were wanted and loved children, but because of the way they were conceived, there is a world of hurt and anger out there.

Alana Sveta is a New York based, 20-something college dropout working with an independent film team on a screenplay based on her life as a "donor kid." In an email interview she wrote that she is obsessed with her genetic heritage, to which she attributes substance abuse and intimacy issues.
Before researching her own genetic history, Alana struggled for years to understand her deep misandry. Men, she discovered, were not her problem; rather it was being raised as if the missing half of her genetic identity were superfluous to her sense of self-worth. "It never occurred to me how truly robbed I was until I started spending time in other people's homes watching how their fathers interacted with them." Discussing her feelings of loss with her mother was difficult; she didn't want to appear ungrateful or critical of her mother's decision.
...
Many donor kids do find their genetic fathers through such sites as donorsiblingregistry.com. Alana knows a few facts, but they haven't panned out. She holds the "childish fantasy" that her blond, blue-eyed father of Polish provenance will see her finished film and reach out to her.'

Aragon, Spain: Law passed for shared parenting

Hulkmania · 15 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article (English translation) here. Excerpt:

'Today it is approved, in Cortes de Aragon, the new law of Shared Safekeeping. We want to pay a tribute to Antonio Henar, unquestionable leader of the fight by Custodia Shared in Aragon. (it follows….)

In this new Law it is observed, like preferred norm to be used by the judges, Shared Custodia.

Antonio Henar, throughout more than 10 years has presided over the APFS of Aragon, with its seriousness, its sobriety and its good one for doing realised multitude of action, manifestations, meetings and different directed activities from the attainment of Shared Custodia in Aragon.'

Ed. note: Original article in Spanish here. Wikipedia on Aragon here.

Only 14 of world's 1,000 billionaires are self-made women

Broadsword · 15 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Only 14 of the world's 1,000 billionaires are self-made women, and only seven of them had no help from relatives, a new list has found.

In a list of the world's richest self-made women, American business magazine Forbes published the names of 14 women who have accrued $1 billion or more thanks to their own entrepreneurship rather than inheriting part or all of their fortune.

Seven of the women on the list were Chinese, Harry Potter author JK Rowling was the only British-born woman, and of the fourteen, at least five built their business empires with the help of husbands and brothers or sometimes both.

By contrast, Forbes said that 665 of the world's 1,011 dollar billionaires, including the three wealthiest men on the planet, Carlos Slim, Bill Gates and Warren Buffett, were self-made men. That, it said, meant that the 'female billionaires' club' accounted for two per cent of the total number of self-made billionaires.

The magazine cited experts who put the shortage down to wildly differing attitudes to female achievement and equality around the world and the fact that women often had more nuanced less mercantile goals than men when it came to building a business."

How To Fight False Allegations Of Abuse Made By Your Ex-Wife

Matt · 16 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email from Jeremy S: Article here. Excerpt:

'It's sickening what some women will do in order to give themselves an unfair "edge" in court. Some exes tend to file and make false allegations of abuse by their ex-husband against their children. This is done in order to add drama and concern in the courtroom, and is done in hopes that the case will be turned in their favor.

Fortunately, by handling a false abuse allegation properly, you can easily have this thrown out or ignored by the court altogether. The idea behind making the false allegations is so that the ex-wife can get the upper hand in the courtroom and is used to try to get the courts to favor their case. Unfortunately, it can do exactly the opposite. Remember, the ex-wife has the burden of proof. If she cannot prove anything in regards to abuse, it will make her look foolish and irresponsible.'

Some of his accompanying comments:

"This advice in the article below is offered as such in the context of Law in other countries. Sadly the advice here while made in good faith and in full appreciation of the law in other countries, it is seldom applied here in Canada. Once an allegation is made here the man is pretty much regarded as being guilty and is judged to be so until proven innocent. And this at tremendous cost, not only in terms of money. The police almost always lay charges immediately after an allegation and from then on it's a 50/50 thing as to whether the Dad or married or unmarried man will be found guilty and sentenced or not."

Why 'Feminism' Should Be Erased from the American Lexicon

anthony · 16 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Instead, second-wave feminism relied on the power of government instead of the power of the individual. These feminists also refused to acknowledge that there are differences between men and women. Recognizing this fact is an affirmation of a biological reality, not patriarchy.

Unfortunately, these attitudes incline second-wave feminists towards victimhood. And that attitude makes the genuine equality which we all desire harder to achieve.

...

Second-wave feminists prefer to blame discrimination. However, sometimes, discrimination is not to blame, and so-called "solutions" predicated on an assumption of discrimination and that expand government power would do more harm than good to millions of American women. Is it really that hard to believe there are women who knowingly take jobs that pay less so they can have more time to care for aging parents or spend more time with their children and families?

The best way to advance women—which should be the goal of all self-described feminists—is to educate women about the consequences of the personal decisions women make. Another goal should be to liberate the marketplace to offer more and better opportunities for women. Finally, a goal of all self-described feminists should be to promote equal opportunity for women and men so that none of us are ever denied what abolitionist and suffragist Sara Grimke referred to as our "essential rights."

...

Given the gains women have made and the country we live in today—and the counterproductive agenda embraced by the most vocal self-proclaimed "feminists" of today, maybe it is time to simply retire the word from the American lexicon.'

No good black men?

Anonymous · 16 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt (found on p. 2 of the article):

'Black women have outperformed black men in just about every domain in life, and we're now seeing that phenomenon with whites as well," my brother said.

That means women will "need marriage less and expect more from it," and become less willing to settle for someone who is not an intellectual or professional equal, a social match and emotional partner.

If black women are angry, it's because they're tired of settling, of making accommodations for men who are — and these are my words — beneath them.'

Women more prone to emotional stress than men 'because of sensitivity to hormone'

Broadsword · 16 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Members of the fairer sex are more sensitive to a key stress hormone - with even small amounts sending their emotions into a whirl, research shows. Men, in contrast, are relatively immune to even high amounts of the chemical.

...

Researchers say the U.S. study could help explain the differences in the way men and women control their emotions.

Women have higher rates of depression, post-traumatic stress disorder and other anxiety problems than men.

However no one has yet been able to pinpoint a biological reason for the difference.

The study focused on a stress hormone called corticotropinreleasing factor (CRF) which helps control the body's reaction to stress.

CRF is known to play a role in human psychiatric conditions.

...

'Pharmacology researchers investigating CRF antagonists (blocking agents) as drug treatments for depression may need to take into account gender differences at the molecular level,' said Dr Valentino.'

Feminist Video Game Where Women Get To Kill 'Sexist' Men

Broadsword · 16 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

There's a new Video game out called 'Hey Baby'. You play a female and walk around the street killing men who make 'sexist' comments. Video here. Excerpt from their website:

"Ladies, are you sick and tired of catcalling, hollering, obnoxious one-liners and creepy street encounters? Tired of changing your route home to avoid uncomfortable situations?

IT'S PAYBACK TIME, BOYS....."

Men and Gender Neutral Domestic Violence versus Domestic Violence Policy

Matt · 17 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.: Article here. Excerpt:

'Sometimes a situation isn't as clear as some would like you to believe. Since the male perspective on domestic violence is rarely told and often suppressed, this article will examine anecdotal evidence to place the contemporary use and abuse of domestic violence in perspective. To paraphrase an African proverb: "The hunter will always be the hero until the lion gets his paws on the pen."

...

Unfortunately, domestic violence policy has historically been utilized to unfairly structure a one sided biased conversation against men. One must understand that when VAWA was enacted, men were not in the equation. They were merely an afterthought. If anyone has noticed, Jerry Springer makes millions of dollars based mostly on female violence. However, those violent behaviors are being passed off as entertainment, not crimes of domestic violence or assault. Has anyone ever heard of a single domestic violence advocate protesting the Jerry Springer show? What's happening on the Jerry Springer show isn't funny or entertaining! However, female violence seems to be the primary focus of the Jerry Springer show.

...

Broadening the scope of domestic violence changes the image of the domestic violence suspect. A gender neutral domestic violence policy would allow VAWA funding to portray women as abusers as well as men. Which reverts back to what Chris Brown had said in his interview with Vibe Magazine. More importantly, it allows anyone involved in a gay male relationship to receive the needed services and funding that comes with being a victim. After all, VAWA funding is need based, not gender based. Domestic violence in the absence of gender neutrality is an antiquated law that must be revisited. The everlasting words of the Reverend Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. written while confined in the Birmingham Jail ring true on this subject: "An injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere."'

Group calls for international boycott of family court systems worldwide

Matt · 17 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From http://www.interpaal.com/

INTERNATIONAL PRESS RELEASE

INTERNATIONAL BOYCOTT OF FAMILY COURTS

Today 16th June 2010, sees the historic launch of a global human rights campaign by the 'International Parents Alliance' (INTERPAAL), calculated to bring to an end the crises in international family law, responsible for the destruction of millions of parent/child relationships worldwide. By presenting all past, current and future victims, with the opportunity to make a compelling personal statement, the voiceless have now been given a voice.

The attached 'International Boycott of Family Courts' campaign document (.pdf file) finally provides a historic global rallying point and valuable support, to all those demanding that governments uphold their human rights obligations, to effectively protect the parent/child relationships of their citizens.

Working in their capacity as a solution based think tank, 'INTERPAAL' first focused on clearly identifying the (4) prime causal factors responsible for destroying so many parent/child relationships. Importantly, all four prime causal factors were unmistakably found to be inter-related, as are the numerous secondary effects.

Next they produced a legal, non-violent, gender-neutral campaign model, based on equality and social justice for all. The resulting document sets out the four (4) non- negotiable core demands considered absolutely vital to achieve effective change. The global alliance makes this historic 'International Boycott of Family Courts' campaign document freely available in 11 different languages.

Millions of dispossessed biological parents, victim children as well as every extended family member around the world, now have the means to make a self-empowering personal protest in support of their human rights, and so join this grass roots rebellion, against the wholesale destruction of families.

The 'International Boycott of Family Courts' document can be used in many areas of family justice activism, will be widely available on-line, and accommodates the urgent desire of every concerned citizen to be able to personally pressure their elected representatives into supportive action.

Beginning today, the boycott will continue until international family laws comply with every responsible parents' fundamental human right to be a parent, ensuring each parent obtains the protection of a legal equal parenting right to remain part of his/her biological children's lives.

Widespread support for a grass roots rebellion is illustrated by Sir Bob Geldof 's recent comments on the family justice system. Sir Bob accused the family courts, of state-sanctioned kidnap and challenges the moral credibility of the family law industry by asking, 'How long before just one of them admit they have it all wrong and apologize to their myriad of victims?

Sir Bob perhaps prophetically points out: 'In the near future the family law under which we endure, will be seen as barbaric, criminally damaging, abusive, neglectful, harmful to society, the family, the parents and the children in whose name it purports to act'.

For all international media enquiries please contact our Media Unit at: media-at-interpaal.com

---
Ed. note: Non-English versions of the boycott pledge document are available at the sponsoring group's web site.

UK: Lesbian 'mother' cannot be forced to pay maintenance

Broadsword · 17 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Mr Justice Moylan said the former couple never went through a civil partnership ceremony and as the law stands, the woman who did not have the child could not be defined as a "parent".

He said the woman, identified only as B, was a "social and psychological" parent of the child born in 2000.

But he said the law differentiates between "natural" parent and a legal one.

"I have come to the clear conclusion that those against whom orders can be made... are confined to those who are a parent in the legal meaning of that word."

The judge said B had won an order in the courts for shared residence with the child and had therefore acquired parental responsibility.

"This might appear a persuasive point save for the fact that the mere obtaining of parental responsibility is clearly not intended to make someone a legal parent when they would not otherwise be such."

The judge added: "In some respects the outcome in this case may seem objectively surprising.

"However, in my view it is for the legislature to determine who should be financially responsible for children if it is to extend beyond those who are legal parents..."

Seattle police officer under investigation after being assaulted by women

Matt · 18 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A Seattle police officer is under investigation after he was videotaped punching a 17-year-old girl after trying to ticket her and her friends for jaywalking.

The incident occurred on Monday afternoon when Officer Ian Walsh stopped four women who were jaywalking on a main road close to a pedestrian bridge in Seattle, Washington. According to a statement released by the police force, a 19-year-old woman began walking away when the officer asked the women to step over to his car. Things soon escalated with the 19-year-old yelling at the officer, the statement says. When the officer tried to arrest the 19-year-old, another 17-year-old woman got involved.

The statement:

"The second female subject placed her hands on the officer's arm, causing the officer to believe she was attempting to physically affect the first subject's escape. The officer pushed the second subject back, but she again came at the officer, at which time he punched her."

Both women were cited for jaywalking, and the 17-year-old was arrested and brought to a youth detention centre for investigation of assault on an officer. She was later released.

Police said no one was hurt.'

Abusegate: Submit Testimony for Today's Hearing on Fatherhood Promotion

Matt · 18 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

All -

An important hearing is being held today on Capitol Hill on ways to promote parental involvement. As we know, false allegations of domestic violence are a commonly-used tactic to deprive fathers of their parental rights.

Each year, 2-3 million restraining orders are issued in this country. So submit your testimony on the need to curb evidence-free restraining orders! The deadline to receive your thoughtful and polite testimony is July 1.

Congressman Jim McDermott (D-WA), Chairman of the Subcommittee on Income Security and Family Support of the Committee on Ways and Means, announced today that the Subcommittee will hold a hearing to evaluate the effectiveness of responsible fatherhood programs. The hearing will take place on Thursday, June 17, 2010, at 10:00 a.m. in B-318 Rayburn House Office Building. In view of the limited time available to hear witnesses, oral testimony at this hearing will be from invited witnesses only. However, any individual or organization not scheduled to appear may submit a written statement for consideration by the Subcommittee and for inclusion in the record of the hearing.

BACKGROUND:
Up to $50 million in Federal funds per year is now available in competitive grants to States, territories, Indian tribes, and public and non-profit community organizations to operate Responsible Fatherhood Initiatives. The program is designed to promote responsible fatherhood through: parenting activities, fostering the economic stability of fathers, marriage promotion, and collaborating with non-profit fatherhood promotion organizations to develop and advance media campaigns to encourage parental involvement. Funding for the program expires on September 30, 2010.

President Obama included a proposal in his FY2011 budget to redirect funds from the current Healthy Marriage and Responsible Fatherhood Programs into a new Fatherhood, Marriage, and Families Innovation Fund. The new program would provide competitive grants to States to develop, implement, and evaluate comprehensive responsible fatherhood programs and comprehensive family demonstrations that improve child well-being by improving the outcomes for families experiencing severe barriers to self-sufficiency. The proposal would provide $500 million in FY2011 and $150 million per year for FY2012 through FY2015.

In announcing the hearing, Chairman McDermott stated, “I look forward to hearing how Responsible Fatherhood Initiatives have helped men play a bigger role in the lives of their children, and how the program might be built upon to improve the overall well-being of vulnerable children and their families.”

FOCUS OF THE HEARING:
The hearing will focus on the effectiveness of Responsible Fatherhood Programs in improving the relationship between non-custodial parents and their children, as well as their ability to provide financial support.

DETAILS FOR SUBMISSION OF WRITTEN COMMENTS:
Please Note: Any person(s) and/or organization(s) wishing to submit for the hearing record must follow the appropriate link on the hearing page of the Committee website and complete the informational forms. From the Committee homepage, http://waysandmeans.house.gov/, select “Hearings.” Select the hearing for which you would like to submit, and click on the link entitled, “Click here to provide a submission for the record.” Once you have followed the online instructions, complete all informational forms and click “submit” on the final page. ATTACH your submission in compliance with the formatting requirements listed below, by close of business Thursday, July 1, 2010. Finally, please note that due to the change in House mail policy, the U.S. Capitol Police will refuse sealed-package deliveries to all House Office Buildings. For questions, or if you encounter technical problems, please call (202) 225-1721 or (202) 225-3625.

FORMATTING REQUIREMENTS:

The Committee relies on electronic submissions for printing the official hearing record. As always, submissions will be included in the record according to the discretion of the Committee. The Committee will not alter the content of your submission, but we reserve the right to format it according to our guidelines. Any submission provided to the Committee by a witness, any supplementary materials submitted for the printed record, and any written comments in response to a request for written comments must conform to the guidelines listed below. Any submission or supplementary item not in compliance with these guidelines will not be printed, but will be maintained in the Committee files for review and use by the Committee.

1. All submissions and supplementary materials must be provided in Word or WordPerfect format and MUST NOT exceed a total of 10 pages, including attachments. Witnesses and submitters are advised that the Committee relies on electronic submissions for printing the official hearing record.

2. Copies of whole documents submitted as exhibit material will not be accepted for printing. Instead, exhibit material should be referenced and quoted or paraphrased. All exhibit material not meeting these specifications will be maintained in the Committee files for review and use by the Committee.

3. All submissions must include a list of all clients, persons, and/or organizations on whose behalf the witness appears. A supplemental sheet must accompany each submission listing the name, company, address, telephone, and fax numbers of each witness.

The Committee seeks to make its facilities accessible to persons with disabilities. If you are in need of special accommodations, please call 202-225-1721 or 202-226-3411 TTD/TTY in advance of the event (four business days notice is requested). Questions with regard to special accommodation needs in general (including availability of Committee materials in alternative formats) may be directed to the Committee as noted above.

Common-law wife charged in man's slaying

Matt · 18 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'EDMONTON -- A man found dead in his Edmonton home Sunday was stabbed to death, say police, who've now charged his common-law wife with second-degree murder.

Results of an autopsy completed Tuesday revealed that Rodney Petryk, 44, was fatally stabbed.

Police were called to Petryk's 12245 93 St. house just before midnight Sunday and found him dead.

Neighbours said officers had been to the residence several times before.'

"Slate" author slanders fathers

Anonymous · 18 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Writing for Slate, anti-male author Katherine Reynolds Lewis transforms a positive Boston College study (.pdf file) on the expanding role of fathers into a defamation of fatherhood entitled "Why Do Dads Lie on Surveys About Fatherhood?"

After making an inappropriate comparison between the self reported parenting time of the fathers in the study to Census Bureau statistics, Lewis falsely concludes: "The answer, it turns out, is that the men in the Boston College study were probably lying about how they spend their time."

In a comment to Lewis' article, the authors of the BC study flatly reject her conclusion: "As a qualitative research study, we sought to chronicle these men's personal experiences as fathers and professionals. While we did not validate their self-reported estimates of time spent in parenting activities through other sources (e.g. their spouses or direct observation) as one might do in a time-use study, that was never our intent. We therefore have no basis to state that these numbers are accurate or inaccurate."

Israel: Men jailed, women not: protest arrest and detention double-standards

Matt · 18 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Dozens of Israeli men were in jail on Friday a day after ultra-Orthodox Jews staged their largest protest in 10 years in support of parents who defied a supreme court ruling on school integration.

But 22 mothers of pupils at an ultra-Orthodox girls' school in a West Bank settlement were given a stay of arrest while the court considered a plea to let them stay at home to care for their young families.

Settlers' news website Channel 7 and public radio said Judge Edmund Levy decided that the court would reconvene on Sunday to discuss the request.

Israeli media said that some of the mothers were pregnant, while others had children with special needs. Ultra-Orthodox families generally have large families, far above the average of the secular Israeli population.'

Patriarch games - The role of the father

Broadsword · 18 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Dads – do you feel a bit of a spare part? Do you see yourself in relation to your kids as about as useful as a stick of furniture – one of the lesser used pieces, like the side table in the guest bedroom? Well, the good news, delivered in a BBC documentary just in time for Father's Day, is that those traditional dad activities, such as talking over your children's head with long words and complex sentences, or swinging them around so that their shoulders threaten to come out of their sockets, are biologically useful. Fathers make evolutionary sense – and not just as reconstructed pseudo-mummies, or "new dads".

"There's a lot of talk at the moment about the absence of fathers, and a curiosity about what it is that fathers actually do," says child psychologist Laverne Antrobus, presenter of "The Biology of Dads", a one-off documentary in BBC Four's Fatherhood season. "In some ways, parenting has been merged. Fathers have been invited to be like mothers rather than to be like fathers – this idea of everything being about nurture. So I wondered what it must be like for fathers who think, 'What do I do that's unique and a bit different?'" Antrobus has collated the latest academic research on the subject, including the already well understood role of the kind of rough-and-tumble games preferred by fathers, which teach toddlers the boundaries of aggression and discipline.

Less well known is the part fathers play in language development – conversing with their toddlers, seemingly inappropriately, as if with a fellow adult. "Mums are constantly adapting their vocabulary so a child knows the word, but dads spur them on," says Antrobus. "They not only use longer words, but they encourage more complex uses of language, such as wit and sarcasm."

The secret to happiness - speak to your father

Broadsword · 18 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Young people who said they talked seriously to their dads "most days" gave themselves an 87 per cent score on a happiness scale compared with 79 per cent for those who said they hardly ever spoke to their fathers in this way.

The findings, from an analysis of research from the British Household Panel survey into 1,200 young people in Britain aged between 11 and 15, were released by the Children's Society to coincide with Father's Day this weekend.

Nearly half of young people - 46 per cent - said they "hardly ever" spoke to their fathers about important topics compared with 28 per cent who hardly ever spoke to their mothers about the things that matter most.

Only 13 per cent confided in their father "most days", according to the analysis.

The study, commissioned by the Children's Society and undertaken by the University of York, showed that young people talk less to their fathers about important issues as they get older."

Innocent man jailed for 3 years over false rape claim - despite police knowing 'victim' was a fantasist

Broadsword · 18 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"A man jailed when a woman falsely cried rape told of his fury yesterday after learning that police knew the woman was 'unreliable'. Warren Blackwell, 40, spent three years in jail as a convicted sex attacker until his 'victim' was unmasked as a fantasist who had accused other blameless men.

...

The woman - named under Parliamentary privilege as Shannon Taylor - said he indecently assaulted her outside a social club in the early hours of January 1, 1999, after a New Year's Eve party. A report revealed yesterday that officers were told Taylor was 'unreliable', ' unstable' and craved attention - but they failed to disclose it at his trial.

...

The mistake led to an appalling miscarriage of justice which saw father-of-two Mr Blackwell jailed in October 1999 for three years, which was later increased to five, despite no forensic evidence to back up the claims. His conviction was quashed in September 2006 when it became clear that not only did Mr Blackwell not commit the crime, it never took place.

...

In 2006, Lord Campbell-Savours used Parliamentary privilege to name the woman. Taylor, who is said to have made seven other false sex attack allegations, including one against her father, would otherwise have kept her identity secret for life. But she was not prosecuted for perjury, because prosecutors decided she was too ill. Taylor kept changing her name and moving, so police forces did not realise they were dealing with the same woman.'

Swedish Father Rights Action targeting politicians in the Riksdag (Parliament) launched

Anonymous · 18 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

By Ulf Andersson, PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

International Press Release

Swedish Father Rights Action targeting politicians in the Riksdag (Parliament) launched

In a joint co-operation action for the upcoming election in Sweden on September 19th these groups:

PappaManualen, http://www.pappamanualen.se/
PappaOmbudsmannen, http://www.pappaombudsmannen.se/
Daddys-Sverige, http://www.daddys-sverige.se/
PappaRättsGruppen, http://www.dads-r-us.se/have sent 10 questions about fatherhood in PDF format, to the politicians in the Riksdag (Parliament) and politicians in the 290 municipalities and additionally 130 authorities.

With the support of modern research and statistics we hope that common sense and a humble attitude will apply.

This is probably by far the most extensive action in the fathers' rights history in Sweden.

The link to the questions (in Swedish, please use Google Translate) http://www.pappamanualen.se/valspecial/

Man killed by wife and two children for trying to watch the World Cup on TV

fondueguy · 18 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here from The Huffington Post about a domestic dispute over what to watch on TV that turned deadly. Excerpt:

'JOHANNESBURG -- Police say a South African man who wanted to watch a World Cup match nstead of a religious program was beaten to death by his family in the northeastern part of the country.

David Makoeya, a 61-year-old man from the small village of Makweya, Limpopo province, fought with his wife and two children for the remote control on Sunday because he wanted to watch Germany play Australia in the World Cup. The others, however, wanted to watch a gospel show.

"He said, 'No, I want to watch soccer,'" police spokesman Mothemane Malefo said Thursday"That is when the argument came about.

"In that argument, they started assaulting him."
...
"He was always a happy man, never violent," Makoeya's nieces, Miriam and Anna, told the Daily Sun newspaper. "On Saturday, we saw him the last time at a funeral.""

Now just imagine if it was the husband who killed the wife while she was trying to watch something besides the World Cup. I'd bet that many people in the media would try to make a connection between major sporting events and domestic violence as a way of bashing masculinity. This connection was already erroneously made shortly before Word Cup as shown here; incidentally it was a man that was killed over a simple domestic dispute which happened to involve the World Cup.

The myth of the tyrannical dad

Matt · 18 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every night when 98-year-old Lily Barron goes to bed, she looks at the large framed photographs that line her bedroom wall and says a prayer for her father, "the most important man in my life. I loved every inch of him."

Lily's dad was a miner who lived with his wife and four young children in the town of Blackwood in south Wales. In his attitudes to his children, he was in some ways surprisingly modern. He never smacked them, he read bedtime stories, and he cuddled and kissed them every day. Twice-married Lily remembers him as "the loveliest and gentlest man I ever knew".

This image of the gentle and loving Edwardian working class father is at odds with our general perception of fathers in the past. We tend to picture them as tyrannical patriarchs whose children were seen and not heard and lived in fear of father's punishments. It is only in recent decades - or so we imagine - that dads have become approachable, caring and committed to the wellbeing of their children. Nothing could be further from the truth.'

Origins of Father's Day

Matt · 18 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From an ACFC email, here. [As an aside, also therein mentioned was an article written by a young woman who blogged on the effects of feminism on society here.] Excerpt:

'Sunday is Father's Day.

Ever wonder how it began? Although many think it's a holiday made up by Hallmark, it actually has roots in Spokane, Washington dating back to 1909.

That's when 27-year-old Sonora Smart Dodd was listening to a Sunday church sermon about mothers and honoring them.

Dodd was just 16 hen her father, Civil War veteran William Jackson Smart, was left to raise his six children alone after their mother died in childbirth.

Smart ran a farm in rural eastern Washington state.

After the sermon, Dodd began her campaign believing the entire nation should show more respect to fathers.

She persuaded the local ministerial association and YMCA to pass a resolution in support of Father's Day and the first local holiday was observed on June 19th, 1910.

June was picked because Dodd wanted to celebrate the holiday in the month her father was born.

States and organizations began lobbying Congress to declare an annual Father's Day and in 1916, President Woodrow Wilson approved the idea.

But it wasn't until 1924 when President Calvin Coolidge made it a national event, and until 1966 when President Lyndon Johnson signed a presidential proclamation declaring the third Sunday of June as Father's Day.'

Women professionals 'to earn more than men by 2024'

Broadsword · 20 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'US government statistics show that women in 35 per cent of professional dual-income homes are now making more than their husbands. That proportion was only 28 per cent five years ago.

Maddy Dychtwald, a Californian demographer, attributed the trend – affecting professions such as lawyers and doctors - to a combination of employers being more amenable towards women staff, declining birth rates and the US recession's comparatively light impact on female workers.
...
She said: "It's role reinvention. It's a full-blown paradigm shift, one that gives both men and women more options when it comes to pursuing their careers, providing for their families and expressing their own talents and strengths."'

UK: Debt: 'Men are emerging as the new underclass'

Broadsword · 20 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The Consumer Credit Counselling Service (CCCS) blamed the trend on a combination of rising unemployment, slow pay growth and higher household cost. The group said despite men typically having lower debt levels than in previous years and earning more than women, they were generally less able to repay what they owed than women, while many struggled just to meet their basic living costs.

...

Malcolm Hurlston, chairman of the CCCS, said: "Men have been hard hit by the recession and are emerging as the new underclass. Debt alone is no longer the problem. It is loss of income and other rising costs.

"This deterioration in the economic circumstances for men, still the main breadwinner in most homes, has serious implications for many households."

The charity said it had seen the number of men contacting it for help soar from 146,00 in 2007 to 221,000 last year, a 51pc jump. It added that the number of women seeking help had increased by only half this amount over the period, although women were still more likely to contact it than men, accounting for 52pc of its caseload.

...

Men who contacted the charity during 2009 owed an average of £26,957, down from nearly £30,000 in 2008, but still significantly higher than the £21,915 that women typically owed.'

UK: Fathers 'should be paid' to stay with partner and children

Broadsword · 20 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers who stay with their partner to look after their children should be paid up to £2,000 a year in tax credits, Frank Field, the government's 'poverty tsar', has said.

The Labour MP, who is leading the coalition's review of poverty, wants reform of the tax credits system to end discrimination against two-parent families.Mr Field wants tax credits to include more married and cohabiting couples with children. If his proposals are accepted almost two million families could benefit.
...
Under the current system, brought in by Labour, a single mother can lose more than £200 a week in benefits and tax credits if she lives with a partner. The system has led to claims that couples are worse off living together than they would be living apart. Mr Field said his "Second Parent Premium" would encourage couples to stay together.
...

Mr Field, once Tony Blair's welfare reform minister, told the Sunday Express: "We should pay fathers to stay with their families, not pay them to live apart, which is what we do now. We have a tax and benefits system that discriminates against two parents, yet this is what most people aspire to.

"Under the existing system, it doesn't pay people on low incomes to stay together as a couple if they have children or for single mothers to move in with new partners.'

A Good Father's Day Gift

Matt · 20 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A good Father's Day gift would be to reform the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), make it gender-neutral, and assure men that family courts will accord them constitutional rights equivalent to those enjoyed by murderers and robbers. VAWA will be coming up for its five-year reauthorization later this year, and that will be the time to hold balanced hearings and eliminate VAWA's discrimination against men.

VAWA illustrates the hypocrisy of noisy feminist demands that we kowtow to their ideology of gender neutrality, to their claim that there is no difference between male and female, and to their opposition to stereotyping and gender profiling. VAWA is based on the proposition that there are, indeed, innate gender differences: Men are naturally batterers, and women are naturally victims.
...

Feminists have changed state laws to include a loosey-goosey definition of family violence. It doesn't have to be violent -- it can simply be what a man says or how he looks at a woman.

Domestic violence can even be what a woman thinks a man might do or say. Definitions of violence include calling your partner a naughty word, raising your voice, causing "annoyance" or "emotional distress," or just not doing what your partner wants.
...
Reforming VAWA is today's basic civil rights issue. All persons accused of domestic violence, men and women, are entitled to have fundamental constitutional rights in court, including due process and the presumption of innocence until proven guilty by clear and convincing evidence.'

Presidential Proclamation--Father's Day

Matt · 20 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Document here. Excerpt:

'From the first moments of life, the bond forged between a father and a child is sacred. Whether patching scraped knees or helping with homework, dads bring joy, instill values, and introduce wonders into the lives of their children. Father's Day is a special time to honor the men who raised us, and to thank them for their selfless dedication and love.

Fathers are our first teachers and coaches, mentors and role models. They push us to succeed, encourage us when we are struggling, and offer unconditional care and support. Children and adults alike look up to them and learn from their example and perspective. The journey of fatherhood is both exhilarating and humbling it is an opportunity to model who we want our sons and daughters to become, and to build the foundation upon which they can achieve their dreams.'

Great words. I just wish the legal system as well as this and previous administrations acted like they believed them.

"Some dads don't deserve the title"

badgerb · 21 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

According to an unsigned editorial in the Ottawa Sun some dads don't deserve the title.
The comment field is not moderated so have at it people though be respectful and not sink to the level of the commentators blatant misandry. Article here. Excerpt:

Yesterday was Father's Day, a B-list occasion when compared to Mother's Day, or even Valentine's Day.

This is no secret.

Yes, we're a day late and a penny shy.

But so what?

Fathers will understand this, especially if yesterday passed with little or no fanfare -- with only a card, perhaps, or some cheap cologne.
...

It should be noted that not all dead-beat dads are wearing that label by choice.

Too many child advocate offices and provincial family responsibility offices have pushed many fathers over the brink by garnisheeing wages way beyond reasonableness, thereby forcing them into untenable positions.

These agencies must lighten up, and wake up to the reality that one cannot get financial blood from a stone once the stone has bled out.

Diminishing the role of fathers in the lives of their children through bureaucracy will only make matters worse.

Do yourself a favour if you are a non-believer.

Go sit in young offenders court, and then wander across the hall into family court.'

Man jailed by courts after courts bankrupt him

badgerb · 21 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. He couldn't pay child support because the courts took away his driver license. He lost his job because he could not drive so he could not pay child support and they threw him in jail. Deadbeat Dad my ass. Excerpt:

'Jeff Dolan spent Father's Day in jail, locked away for failure to pay child support. Deadbeat dads don't garner a lot of sympathy. But you don't need to study Jeff's case for long before you realize that he's anything but a deadbeat. Instead, he's a man hopelessly ensnared in a crushing bureaucratic machine: He's in jail because he couldn't pay child support, but he couldn't pay child support because he was unemployed ... and he was unemployed because the court took his driver's license for failure to pay child support ... after he went bankrupt paying his court costs.

There is no good news in this story, but there is some dark irony. Jeff, who despite a learning disability graduated high school and held down several construction jobs in his home state of Minnesota, was also a volunteer at a local sexual violence crisis centre. One of his jobs there, on top of fielding telephone calls from sexual assault survivors, was to talk to high school classes. One thing he taught was "male privilege" — the notion that society favours men in many varied, sometimes subtle ways, thus enabling sexual violence.'

OVW Head Deserves Credit for Taking First Step to Inclusiveness

Matt · 21 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

In her June 18 message, Office of Violence Against Women director Susan B. Carbon highlighted the recent DoD advisory. Carbon writes (see key sentence in bold):

Last week, the Department of Justice clarified that the criminal provisions of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) apply with equal force in cases when the victim and perpetrator are of the same sex. The Department is working to ensure that all U.S. Attorney offices are aware of the law's applicability to LGBT relationships. In addition to publishing an Office of Legal Counsel opinion on the subject, the Department has provided notice of the opinion to the U.S. Attorney offices. This confirms that Department of Justice prosecutors have access to all available tools to protect victims of domestic violence and stalking whether they be in same sex or opposite sex relationships. This does not represent a change in the law, nor will it narrow or otherwise impact VAWA's existing criminal applications. Rather, it clarifies to the extent that there was any doubt that VAWA is inclusive and protective of women and men, regardless of sexual orientation or gender identity. Read more: http://www.justice.gov/olc/2010/vawa-opinion-04272010.pdf

This is the first time the OVW has made an official statement recognizing the existence of male victims of domestic violence. It's an important first step to turning things around.

We encourage you to send a positive note to Judge Carbon thanking her for her work to assure VAWA is gender inclusive in its programs and services. Here's her email: OVW.Director-at-usdoj.gov

Abusegate: Tell your Representative, "Fix VAWA Now!"

Matt · 21 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

On Saturday, Phylllis Schlafly published a column, actually a call to arms, titled, "A Good Father's Day Gift" -- below. The article outlines a series of needed reforms to the family-destructive Violence Against Women Act.

AND TODAY WE MUST ACT. Telephone your Representative in Congress at 202-224-3121.

State your name and town of residence, and then say these 3 words: "Fix VAWA Now!"

Later this week a team of lobbyists will be coming to Washington and meeting with staffers, so your phone call is critical to getting elected officials on-board with our VAWA reform campaign.

Be polite, but be firm: "Fix VAWA Now!"

F & F Writes Column for Cleveland Plain Dealer Criticizing ‘Deadbeat Dad’ Raids

Matt · 21 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Father’s Day ‘Deadbeat Dad’ Raids Unfairly Target Hard-Luck Dads (Cleveland Plain Dealer, 6/19/10), Ned Holstein, M.D., M.S. and I criticize the annual tradition among some sheriffs and attorneys general of launching “deadbeat dad” raids in honor of Father’s Day.

We suggest you write a Letter to the Editor of the Cleveland Plain Dealer by clicking here and also post a comment on the piece here.

Dr. Holstein and I wrote:

> That most “deadbeats” are really dead broke can be seen by taking a look at the “Most Wanted Deadbeat Parent” posters put out by many attorneys general and county sheriffs. For example, authorities in Ohio recently launched a highly-publicized campaign against “deadbeats,” yet the Ohio Department of Job & Family Services’ “Most Wanted” poster features only blue-collar workers of limited means.

Canada: Abusive mother of 8 jailed for 4 years

Anonymous · 22 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Montreal mother of eight has been sentenced to four years in prison for assaulting five of her children.

The woman, who cannot be named to protect the identity of her children, was found guilty of assault and assault with a weapon in April.

The 44-year-old single mother showed no reaction as the sentence was handed down Monday at the Montreal courthouse.
...
In the 44-year-old woman's case, court was told the beatings began after each of her children, who are from seven different fathers, turned five.
...

Some of the children endured violence for more than a decade before they were taken away from their mother by youth protection officials.

Officials intervened three years ago after the woman's 14-year old daughter complained to police.
...
Defence lawyer Mary Raposo told the court the woman misses her children and is doing everything she can to get them back.

She recommended a three- to six-month sentence so that the woman can continue her rehabilitation.

Instead, the judge accepted the Crown's recommendation for a sentence of four years.'

Australia: Example of anti-Male job advertising

Anonymous · 22 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Posting here. Excerpt:

'Accounts Receivable / Finance Clerk
...
Quest Retail Technology (www.quest.com.au) is a dynamic division within the Radiant family. The Quest product and service offering supply POS solutions to Stadiums and Arenas The Quest product has over 57,000 terminals installed in more than 20 countries around the world; in a diverse range of applications including Bars, Clubs, Restaurants, Fast Food, Stadiums, Arenas, Convention Centers, Race courses, Theme Parks, Cinemas and Franchises

We are currently seeking a mature thinking team player to join our small team of women.

The main responsibilities for the role will include:
...
EEO Statement
As an equal opportunity employer, Radiant Systems is committed to providing equal opportunity employment opportunities to candidates and employees without regard to race, religion, creed, age, sex, height, weight, marital status, ancestry, or any other characteristic protected by law.'

South Africa Debuts Anti-Rape Female Condom, seeks testing "during World Cup"

anthony · 22 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ehlers, a 62-year-old physician, lab researcher and hematologist -- and a mother of two daughters -- spent the next four decades developing a female condom with jagged latex hooks that latch onto the skin of an attacker. Dubbed "Rape-aXe," the condom is inserted with an applicator like a tampon, and it clenches a man's penis and causes "immense discomfort" without drawing blood. It can only be removed by medical professionals, who are being familiarized with the device in order to contact South African police when they see one.

"I'm not out for vengeance. It doesn't leave permanent damage to the penis, but there will be tiny little scars to remind him of what he's done -- something his wife or future wife might ask him about," Ehlers said.

The new condom was patented in 2007, and Ehlers hopes to begin selling it in South African pharmacies and grocery stores soon. It's being evaluated by the country's Bureau of Standards and would sell for about $2.50. Meanwhile, Ehlers has distributed samples to 100 unnamed women across South Africa this week, for initial testing during the World Cup.'

Orlando police today will discuss false rape report

anthony · 22 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Concerned about three recent false rape allegations, Orlando police cautioned residents that lying wastes money, time and keeps real victims from reporting true crimes.

"We want victims to continue to report crimes, but we want real victims," Sgt. Art Eld of the Orlando Police Department's sex crimes division said at a press conference today. "We don't want to spend useful resources chasing ghosts."

Filing false rape reports stirs unnecessary fear in the community, wastes thousands of public dollars and keeps real victims from telling their stories, he said.

Police officials made their plea public Tuesday, a day after 18-year-old Samaria Renford claimed three masked men raped her Monday in Rosemont.'

Woman in court for false rape charges

anthony · 22 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'LEBANON, Ohio -- Twenty-one-year-old Kristen Lamb of Franklin Avenue, accused of making a false rape report, was in court Monday. She is facing misdemeanor counts of inducing panic and making false alarms.

She was granted a court-appointed attorney, and did not enter a plea.

Lamb said she was raped in a wooded area north of her home. But police became suspicious after Lamb could not give specific details about the alleged assault.

Her parents told the judge that she had been though a series of stressful events recently, which included losing a boyfriend and pressures from college.

But her father admitted she will have to face the consequences for her actions. Lamb is a student at the University of Cincinnati.

Her next court hearing is set for Monday, June 21.'

UK: Woman admits false Norwich rape claim

anthony · 22 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Strory here. Excerpt:

'A woman who made a false rape claim to police cost taxpayers £15,000, a court heard yesterday.

Bernadette Core, 29, of Friarscroft Lane, Wymondham, admitted attempting to pervert the course of justice between October 2009 and February 2010 by making a false allegation of rape when she appeared at Norwich Crown Court.

The court heard that Norfolk police spent £15,000 on the investigation before establishing that she made up the incident.

The charge came after she made a 999 call to Norfolk police in the early hours of October 4 claiming she had been raped at an house in Norwich.

Two men were arrested and interviewed by police but further investigations established that no crime had taken place.'

“Men’s rights” group targets Luján

anthony · 22 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A group that tries to promote “men’s rights” is targeting Rep. Ben Ray Luján over his support for the International Violence Against Women Act. In a press release issued this week the Luján campaign called the group named Abusegate, Investigate “radical domestic violence deniers” and attached the full text of a group’s press release in which it lists the lawmakers being targeted by the group.

“Ben Ray Lujan has been a strong proponent of legislation to protect women from domestic violence,” said Aaron Trujillo, Luján’s campaign manager. “He’s going to keep standing up for women, regardless of pressure from fringe organizations like Abusegate, Investigate. I only have one question, does Tom Mullins welcome the support of domestic violence deniers?”

Mullins denied knowledge of the group when contacted by the Santa Fe New Mexican’s Steve Terrell.

“I’ve never heard of this group at all,” Mullins told Terrell. “It sounds like it is possibly a democrat group creating an issue to benefit Lujan?”

In this case, it looks like a group that Luján relishes being opposed by.'

International Violence against Women Act Faces Stiff Opposition From Unexpected Quarter

anthony · 22 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Human life is full of sufferings. However concern for fellow human beings must always be accompanied by Compassion. Concern without compassion is called fraud.On Feb 04, 2010, Senator John Kerry and others reintroduced I-VAWA (International Violence against Women Act) in Senate and US House of representatives. This bill if passed will fund 1 Billion Dollars for forcing Governments across 10 to 15 countries for stringent laws and policies to prevent violence against women. This bill is handled by Senate and House Foreign Affairs Committees.

Within two weeks of introduction of the bill in both Senate and House, the members of Save Indian Family Foundation and the Civil Liberties Groups in US started opposing it saying that this bill will not help the abused women, but will only lead to Civil Liberties Violations by jailing of innocent men, women and children under gender biased laws in many countries including India. They wanted statutory language in this bill to prevent this one billion dollars getting into vested interests, agencies and NGOs, who undermine civil liberties.'

Essay: "Men Give, Women Take"

Anonymous · 22 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Commentary
Men Give, Women Take
By David Johnson

"All animals are equal but some animals are more equal than others." -- George Orwell in Animal Farm.

Men are in many ways, second class citizens. And they are quickly becoming third and fourth class citizens. There is a very good explanation for this: biology, coupled with social evolution. Our species developed very large brains, which unfortunately caused a problem: the brains were too large to fit through the birth canal. As a result, much brain development had to occur after birth. This left human infants nearly totally helpless for the first few years of life. This put a tremendous burden on mothers---so great a burden, that the species was unlikely to survive without a drastic change. That change came in a deal mothers and fathers made with each other. Basically, mothers gave fathers sexual access and fidelity in exchange for protection and support from the fathers. In short, if a little less accurately, women demanded help from men, and men gave it to them. This allowed two adults to work together to raise the nearly helpless children, thereby dramatically increasing the chances that their genes would survive to subsequent generations.

This helped to make the human species a very successful one. But it also bred into men and women some traits that are causing some trouble now. Women were looking for men who were protective, generous, and able to provide. Men without these traits were ignored and shunned by women. And the genes of these men were less likely to reach future generations. This put evolutionary pressure on men to develop traits of generosity, competence, and protectiveness. Men became chivalrous, offering support and help to women. At the same time, women were developing the complementary traits of asking and demanding help from men. This put evolutionary pressure on women to become demanding, self-indulgent, entitled, picky, critical, and nagging. In short, men gave and women took. Although not in all men and all women all the time, these traits are certainly still evident in people today.

Even though this situation helped with the survival of the species, it hardly resulted in an egalitarian human society. Women demanded to be put on a pedestal and men put them there. Evolution is hardly fair. But certainly people can be. Both men and women need to realize that even though evolution may have given them these undesirable traits, they are free to consciously reject them in order to form an egalitarian society. There are certainly many traits that evolution has encouraged in us, yet as civilized human beings we have explicitly rejected: violence, rape, murder, larceny, bullying, etc. And now we can add the "men give/women take" traits. We must realize that women demand more than equality, and that men are likely to give it to them. Both men and women must demand absolute equality of opportunity for an egalitarian society to exist.

Up until recently, this "men give/women take" dynamic was expressed more in a personal manner, one person to another. But with the advent of feminism, women now demand a larger political dimension as well---a macro version of putting women on a pedestal. And men are allowing them to have it. This is resulting in men's second class status---or worse. In this area too, women are demanding more than equality and men are giving it to them. Feminists say they are all about equality, but feminism is really just a wider example of women taking. This aspect of feminism adds new meaning to the phrase "the personal is political." All must understand that it is natural for both sexes to see equality between men and women when the situation is really skewed in women's favor and to men's disadvantage. Both men and women must be conscious of these tendencies and fight to be completely egalitarian.

That's it, that's the premise of this article. If you accept it, you do not have to read further, since the rest of this article is just supporting evidence. You may now continue with your life, all the while being careful not to participate in the "men give/women take" dynamic. But if you do not accept my premise, please read on. I will present many examples of the second class status of men, but where both men and women refuse to acknowledge and change them. Instead, the attention, sympathy, help, and focus are going to women.

Probably the biggest example of men's lower status is actual length of life. Men die on average 5 years earlier than women in the United States. (Most of these examples will be from the U.S., but I'm sure comparable examples exist elsewhere.) That's 7% less life. There is no big outcry, no attention, and no concern. Those all go to women, who we value more.

Some would argue that this shorter longevity is due to men's risk-taking. Certainly this is true to some degree, but please consider this: of the top 15 causes of death in the U.S., 14 have higher age-adjusted death rates for men. Here are some of the male to female ratios: heart disease 1.8, cancer 1.4, stroke 1.2, pneumonia 1.5, diabetes 1.2, accidents 2.4, suicide 4.2, and homicide 3.8. The one exception is Alzheimer's disease and its female to male ratio is only 1.1.

Let's examine some of these. In the past, the medical establishment did focus more on heart disease in men. But that does not seem to be true today. Women and feminism apparently cannot accept men getting more attention or help than women. So now, the battle cry for heart disease is that more women die of it, even though the numbers are very close. In 2003 the death rates were 236.2 women versus 235.0 men per 100,000. Missing in this battle cry is the fact that men generally die about 10 years younger, which is why the age-adjusted ratio is 1.8 men versus women. But still the "Go Red for Women" campaign, which focuses only on women, is getting nearly all of the public attention concerning heart disease.

One aspect of the accident ratio is work-related deaths. Roughly 95% of people killed at work are men. Certainly employers and government could do much better at providing safe conditions for all workers. Perhaps they do not because so few women are employed in the death occupations. This "glass cellar" is the flip side of the "glass ceiling." If more women died on the job, perhaps men's chivalry would force more safety provisions. Or perhaps, the women workers would be more demanding of safer conditions. But because the vast majority of deaths are men, there is little concern. Another way to see this lack of concern is to pay attention to the language used. Recently 29 men were killed in a mining accident in West Virginia. Most of the news reports hid their sex by referring to them as "miners" or "workers." However, when women are killed, on the job or otherwise, the news reports emphasize their gender. The most glaring recent example of this effect was Neda Agha-Soltan, killed during the election protests in Iran. Thirty-three other people (I'm guessing nearly all were men) were killed that day during the protest, but the pretty woman became the "Angel of Iran" and received all of the attention. This is another example of men's lower value.

Military personnel also illustrate this lower worth. Men make up approximately 98% of U.S. soldiers killed in Iraq. I suspect we would be much less likely to start wars if we knew more female soldiers were likely to die in them. And even though we have not had a military draft in over 30 years, we still require only men to register for the draft and suffer the penalties for failure to do so.

Prevention of suicide is another area where government and society do far too little. Even though women attempt suicide twice as often as men, men succeed about four times as often as women. (But again, women receive all of the attention. Phoebe Prince recently committed suicide after being bullied at high school. Her death dominated the media for weeks.) Women's suicide attempts seem to be more cries for help. But perhaps, with the constant degrading that men receive in life and in the media, they do not feel they can---or deserve to---receive any help. This is an example of just how powerless men really are.

The age-adjusted homicide ratio of 3.8 is just one example of the broader problem of men being victims of crime two to three times more often than women. But one would be hard-pressed to realize this given the far greater attention female crime victims receive. For example, our legislators have instituted a Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), where female victims receive billions in government aid not available to males, and feminist groups are paid to "educate" (I would say "propagandize") the public. Also, the news media (e.g., Nancy Grace and Jane Velez-Mitchell's War on Women) are constantly highlighting a missing or murdered woman. Sometimes I think the media get together to designate a female victim of the week---usually a young pretty white woman. And heaven help those women who are designated but turn out not to be dead or in real trouble. How dare they embarrass the media and female victimhood by not being real victims! Recent examples of these non-victimized women include runaway mom Tiffany Tehan, runaway bride Jennifer Wilbanks, Crystal Mangum who falsely accused members of the Duke lacrosse team of rape, Audrey Seiler who faked her own abduction, and Susan Smith who murdered her two sons but blamed it on a black man who supposedly carjacked her car.

What disease gets more attention, more funding, more donations, and more sympathy than any other? I do not think there is any question that the answer is breast cancer. Is it just coincidence that this most-attention-getting disease is one that, for the most part, affects only women? As I said before, men lose more years of their lives than women to cancer, yet breast cancer, specifically in women, receives most of the attention. Susan G. Komen For the Cure has more than 184 corporate sponsors including 3M, 7-Eleven, Ask.com, Belkin, BMW, Coffee-Mate, Cross Pens, Dell, Dove Chocolates, Dr Pepper/Snapple, Energizer Batteries, Evian, Frederick's of Hollywood, GUESS, Hallmark, Hanes, Hewlett-Packard, Huggies, Kitchen Aid, Kyocera, LPGA, Lowe's, Microsoft, NAPA auto care, NBC Today Show, Purina, Nordstrom, Oreck, Payless shoes, Pepperidge Farm, Perdue Farms, Pier One, Princess Cruises, Quilted Northern, REMAX, Clorox, Tracfone, Victorinox Swiss Army, Chapstick, Yahoo, and even the Zeta Tau Alpha Fraternity. Komen also has 15 sponsors that contribute $1 million per year, including American Airlines, Bank of America, Coldwater Creek, Ford, General Mills, Holland America, Lean Cuisine, Mars, New Balance, and Yoplait. It is not just Komen; other organizations are devoted to breast cancer awareness including the Breast Cancer Research Foundation, Avon Foundation Breast Cancer Crusade, BreastCancer.Org, and National Breast Cancer Foundation. But it does not stop there. There are countless events, fun runs, men wearing pink ties, college basketball teams wearing pink uniforms, federal research money of around $840 million, pink skyscrapers, everyone wearing pink ribbons, pink ribbons on products, pink ribbons on return address labels, pink ribbons on fenders, breast cancer research developments in the news, a postage stamp that donates to breast cancer research---breast cancer awareness is absolutely everywhere. Even Major League Baseball, the NFL, the NBA, and the NHL have jumped on the bandwagon. Yet, I do not recall the WNBA promoting prostate cancer awareness. This is all part of "men give/women take."

One would think that since men live shorter lives and have worse health, that society would be focusing on men's health. But again, women seem to be getting most of the attention. Women have two medical specialties, men have none. Women spend twice as much on healthcare as men do. (Health care reform now dictates that insurance companies must charge the same amount for men and women---i.e., men will be subsidizing women's healthcare.) A google search of "women's health" on government websites gets 657,000 hits, while "men's health" only gives 41,100 hits. Many hospitals now have Women's Centers, but few have Men's Centers. Many hospitals also provide community classes of interest mostly to women.

The focus on breast cancer is part of a broader phenomenon of giving more charity to women than to men. CBS recently aired public service announcements called CBSCares. Here are the gender-specific topics that I found on their website: Breast Cancer, Menopause, Ovarian Cancer, Osteoporosis, Domestic Violence (I do not consider this woman-specific but most people do), Women's Heart Disease, and Prostate Cancer. Obviously, CBSCares much more for women than it does for men.

Many charities focus on women or have special programs just for women. For example, examining the partners of United Way of Greater Los Angeles, I found thirty-five that helped substantially more women than men, or offered special programs only for women. Only one partner slanted its aid substantially more to men. Large Charities show a similar pattern. CARE originally helped the poor, now it is more for poor women. Vital Voices (started by Hillary Clinton), Global Fund for Women, Catalyst, and Women For Women International focus only on women. Amnesty International, American Red Cross, American Lung Association, ACLU, Human Rights Watch, Catholic Charities USA, and Habitat for Humanity have major special programs just for women but none just for men.

Governments also focus on women. Perhaps the main reason for this is that there are generally more female than male voters. (In the 2008 Presidential election, approximately 8 million more women voted.) This has given women tremendous political power to institute their demands into law above and beyond normal "men give/women take."

A politician, male or female, must pander to his or her female constituency in order to be re-elected. This has resulted in much bureaucracy favoring women, even while most of the legislators have been men. None of the following have comparable bureaus, initiatives, or websites for men: The Women's Bureau in the Dept of Labor, The Office of Women's Business Ownership, Women Owned Businesses, The National Women's Business Council, WomenBiz, The Office on Women's Health, The National Women's Health Information Center, The Office of Research on Women's Health, The Women's Health Initiative, Smokefree Women, Bright Futures for Women's Health and Wellness Initiative, National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day, The Office of Global Women's Issues, The Center for Women Veterans, The Women Veterans Health Strategic Health Care Group, Women in Development, Women of NASA, White House Council on Women and Girls, International Women of Courage Awards, Women in Science and Technology, and The Office on Violence Against Women which enforces VAWA, which I mentioned earlier. Federal government websites for women include: Women in the Senate, Women in Congress, Women's History Month, Women's Cancers, History of Women and the Environment, Women in Physics, Women in Agriculture, Women's Resources (at HUD), and Women in Ichthyology. State and local governments similarly focus on women. Our governments---made up mostly of men---are doing a lot of pandering to women.

Legislation and the courts also focus on women. I mentioned earlier the Violence Against Women Act. There is no Violence Against Men Act even though men are victims of violence more often. The Women's Educational Equity Act promotes education for women and girls even though men and boys are doing worse. Title IX forces quotas on the one extra-curricular activity dominated by boys---sports---and ignores all the other activities where girls dominate. Gender Bias Task Forces were formed to examine bias against women in the legal field, even though men are given longer prison sentences for the same crimes and men are more likely to receive the death penalty if they murder women than if they murder men. The "reasonable woman" sexual harassment standard punishes a man, not for his actions, but for how a woman perceives his actions, or how much she dislikes him. The Battered Woman Syndrome Defense allows women to get away with murder. Domestic violence aid goes almost exclusively to women even though about one-third of those injured are men. Protection orders, rape shield laws, and indefinite detention of sexual offenders are protections for women that violate due process.

Non-governmental organizations exhibit a similar pattern. There are numerous women's organizations stretching from mainstream subjects to the bizarre. A subject search of "women" on the Associations Unlimited website lists 835 national and regional women's organizations. A similar search for "men" only gives 23 groups. Some of the women's organizations listed are National Organization for Women, American Association of University Women, White House Project, Camping Women, Women in Toys, U.S. Women's Curling Association, National Peach Partners, Feminist Teacher Editorial Collective, Museum of Menstruation and Women's Health, Professional Football Players Mothers' Association, and Women in Wind Energy. The ironic thing about these women's groups is that they were forming at the same time that women were attacking and integrating the few major male organizations (e.g. Jaycees, Elks, and Rotary Clubs.) And even more ironic was when Martha Burk, the head of the National Council of Women's Organizations demanded entry of women into the all-male Augusta Golf Club---"hypocrisy" does not seem to be in her vocabulary.

And as with charities, many general groups pander to women. For example, the Sierra Club has outings just for women but none just for men. The National Rifle Association has a subgroup for women. My local Trek bicycle shop sponsors two weekly bicycle rides, one for everyone, and one for women only. A local outdoors store sponsors outdoors-type classes, some of them just for women. It appears women prefer their own company, whereas men are fine being around women.

Probably the most telling example of this is the Y's. Both the YMCA and the YWCA were originally sex-segregated. But in the last thirty years, they have gone in very different directions. The formerly men's YMCA is now about as gender-neutral as it can get. As a matter of fact, it now has slightly more female members than male. The women's YWCA, on the other hand, still has a strictly female membership (although males can join as "associates" with no voting rights), and in a political sense, perhaps even more segregated than it was originally.

After all, it was once headed by Patricia Ireland, the former President of NOW. This is an example of women's self-indulgence.

Colleges show this pattern as well. Most all-male colleges changed to coeducational by 1970. Two stragglers, VMI and The Citadel, received much attention when they were forced to admit women. Univsource.com lists only 5 current all-male colleges but 65 all-female schools. Three of the women's colleges listed are public schools. Douglass is basically a women's college inside Rutgers University. Although Texas Woman's University and Mississippi University for Women are technically coed to satisfy federal law, in every other way, they are public women's colleges that admit a few men. Their mission statements, coursework, and gender-specific names are evidence of this. Again, there has been a concentrated effort to end all-male colleges even while all-female schools have flourished.

Another area where women have tremendous power on top of their "men give/women take" power is in advertising media. Women often complain that they only make 80 cents for every dollar men make, and that this discrepancy gives men economic power over women. However, people do not get power from making money; they get power from spending it. And women determine where 80 cents of every consumer dollar is spent. (The fact that men make most of the money while women spend most of it is more proof of "men give/women take.") Because women spend most money, advertisers aim their ads at women. In order to get more women to look at these ads, all advertising media also necessarily aim at women. As a result, television, magazines, newspapers, radio, websites, etc. necessarily slant their content toward women. Men are not going to get a fair shake in any of these media.

Let's examine television. Television commercials are notorious for presenting nearly all negative characters as male. Any rude, stupid, obnoxious, incompetent, insensitive, or mean people in commercials are almost always men, even in ads aimed at men. Also, people slapped, kicked, hit, or hurt in commercials are likely men. This shows how biased and slanted television is. Advertisers do not want to risk offending women. And apparently, women are easily offended. For example, after the most recent Super Bowl, some women complained that some ads showed anger toward women. I found this odd because I counted 61 acts of violence against men in the ads, but only 7 acts of violence against women. And there was a qualitative difference in the violence as well. The violent acts against women consisted of 4 head slaps, two tackles, and a playful punch in the arm. But the violence against men included being punched in the groin, zapped by an electric dog collar, head slammed on a car, a clubbing, a stabbing, an electrocution, decapitations, and historical footage of two actual men being shot. On top of this, quarterback Mark Sanchez did a CBSCares spot on women's heart disease. But even as imbalanced as the ads were, women still "took" offense, and men "gave" a pass on complaining.

Television content follows a similar pattern. Most programming is aimed at women, with sports being the main exception. The morning news shows have constant features for women. The daytime soap operas and talk shows are obviously aimed at women, as are the evening gossip, singing, dancing, and bachelor programs. Sit-coms are all basically "men behaving badly," where superior women are laughing at bumbling men. Dramas are becoming, more and more, chick shows. Even cop shows are mostly "damsels in distress" with men doing the distressing---a description which also applies to the Nancy Grace and Jane Velez-Mitchell shows. Olympic Games coverage is more and more about human interest stories instead of actual competition. Channels for women include Lifetime, We, Oxygen and coming soon, Oprah, as well as Food, Home and Garden, and Hallmark. Even the evening news shows are becoming women's programming with only a few minutes of hard news followed by human interest stories, women's news, gender war segments (in which women always win), and breast cancer updates. (I'm betting Brian Williams will be the last male news anchor on the big three networks.)

I am amazed at how the media can always find women to heighten a news story's human interest value. For example, in the recent exposure of mismanagement of 200 graves at Arlington National Cemetery, one of those involved was an Air Force nurse whose remains were moved without notification of the family. I am guessing that the rest of the graves involved were of male soldiers. But guess who was highlighted in all of the news stories? In the four reports that I saw on this, three mentioned her by name and the fourth discussed her situation. No men were discussed or named. What are the chances of this occurring by coincidence? Even if a tragic news story only involves male victims, reporters will focus on the victims' wives, mothers, or sisters to make the story personal. We do not value men.

There is some research (Rudman and Goodman) indicating that women are biased toward women, while men do not show a bias toward either gender. That is, women prefer and like women better than they like men, while men have no preference. This gives a new perspective on which gender is the chauvinistic one. This has always been obvious to me. Women's best friends always seem to be other women, who they can talk to on the phone for hours, sharing secrets that their husbands do not know. Women always need to go to the restroom in packs. And as I mentioned earlier, women tend to form groups with other women, while men have no problem with mixed groupings.

This bias also shows in voting, where 5 to 10% of women will vote for women candidates just because they are women. Some of these candidates then show an extreme bias toward women once they are in office. Hillary Clinton is quite up front with her advocacy for women. It has been speculated that she accepted the position of Secretary of State so that she could better continue her promotion of women. Ruth Bader-Ginsberg has long been a legal advocate for women, and now is on the Supreme Court. Many women who were influenced by women's studies courses in college are now obtaining power in government as well as industry. I think that male politicians' favoritism toward women has been bad enough, but what happens when female politicians get the power to "take" what they want without going through a middleman? Will it be worse?

Perhaps Sweden, which has nearly equal numbers of men and women in Parliament and as ministers, could inform us on this. In Sweden domestic violence receives special punishment. Prostitutes receive social-service aid while johns receive jail time. Affirmative action for college admissions is being terminated even though 60% of university students are women. Gender quotas have been instituted in government offices and in the arts. Female genital mutilation, illegal since 1982, is punishable even while performed with the patient's permission or performed legally in another country. Male genital mutilation has some restrictions but is legal. Parents receive up to 480 days of paid parental leave with penalties if each parent does not take at least 60 days. Government-run day care is available for children at age one. Businesses must charge the same rate for services regardless of gender (e.g., haircuts, laundry services.) Tax rates are among the highest in the world at nearly 50% of GDP---this is an indication that women are also "taking" from the government as well as from men.

The following measures have been proposed and are being contemplated in Sweden: comparable worth, polyamory, fathers forced to take equal parental leave, gender quotas on the members of boards of publicly-traded companies, a man tax, Antioch College-like dating rules where men must ask permission for all sexual activity, gender quotas for day-care workers, and gender-neutral names. These were being seriously considered. But three incidents occurred that caused a backlash, which put these proposals on the back burner for now. A government official said men were animals. A government shelter network published portions of the SCUM Manifesto. And a song at a political party convention contained the lyrics "Fucking men, we're going to chop you to bits." These proposals will probably seriously be considered again soon. It seems that if Sweden is any indication, men should be concerned about women abusing their political power. And men should also be concerned with how much of feminism is plain bigotry.

Of course, relationships also exhibit the "men give/women take" dynamic. Men must initiate relationships, pay for dates, open doors, and then beg on one knee with the bribe of a diamond to initiate more giving during the marriage. This is another area where women make exceptions to their demands for equality. But there is another aspect to men's and women's give and take during marriage. Men must "give in" while women "take control." Psychologist John Gottman, the marriage therapy guru, has stated that "the biggest revelation we've had about how conflicts are best resolved in successful marriages" is if husbands yield to their wives. That is, the key factor in whether a relationship will be happy and successful is whether the husband listens to and obeys his wife. In a statement that shows women's demanding nature, Gottman also says that women bring up over 80% of marital conflicts while men tend to avoid these stressful discussions---it's no wonder, if the men have to "give in." It appears there is some truth in the old saying: "If Mama's not happy, nobody's happy." (To be fair, it is evident in a deeper reading of Gottman's research that both men and women must listen to their partners and yield to some degree for successful marriages. However, both Gottman and the media presented men as the bad guys who need to change.)

Consider other aspects of male/female relationships. Women often demand major changes in their husbands after the wedding. And if the husbands do not change enough, please remember that two-thirds of divorces are initiated by women---people who are more demanding are less likely to have those demands met. And wives are encouraged to divorce since they usually receive child custody, half of the community property, and continuation of many aspects of the husband's responsibilities (e.g., alimony, child support, house payments, lawyers' fees) while the wife's marital duties end. Also consider that women usually marry up, that is, even wealthy women tend to find wealthier men---the "men give/women take" dynamic is not going to work well if she has more than he does.

I mentioned earlier that women now have more economic and political power than men. But women have always dominated in sexual power. This potent power has been responsible for the demise of many, many men. Just think of some of the powerful men recently who have risked everything because of this compelling force: Tiger Woods, Kobe Bryant, David Letterman, Hugh Grant, Jesse James, George Rekers, Jim Bakker, Jimmy Swaggart, Ted Haggard, Bill Clinton, John Edwards, David Vitter, Eliot Spitzer, Mark Sanford, Bob Packwood, John Ensign, Jim Gibbons, Larry Craig, and Mark Souder. And again, at the same time that women were demanding that men give up their economic and political power, women have been hypocritically augmenting their sexual power over men. Women have done this with tighter clothing, more skin exposure, breast implants, fat lips, other cosmetic surgeries, better cosmetics and hair dyes, botox, tanning beds, exercise, etc. Women's sense of entitlement is unbounded.

(The odd thing about marital fidelity is that studies indicate cheating wives are almost as numerous as cheating husbands. So why do we only hear about cheating men? Is it because of women's control of the media? Or is it, as Whoopi Goldberg said recently, that women blab more? Or is it women's self-indulgence and chauvinism? Think of the 15 women who voluntarily came forward to admit to affairs with Tiger Woods---all received fame and/or fortune and little public ridicule.)

At the same time that women were increasing their sexual power, women were demanding laws to also increase protection of that power. Sexual offenses get special treatment. For example, Sexual Offender laws impose special restrictions on offenders for their lifetimes which are not seen in any other types of crime. Offenders also risk continued imprisonment even after serving their sentences. Sexual harassment laws are rigged to punish only men's behavior. This allows women to be sexual at work. Also, rape shield laws exclude an alleged victim's personal life from the trial, something not seen in other types of trials. And the media do not identify alleged victims of sexual crimes. Prostitution laws are becoming more and more like Sweden's, where johns are punished and prostitutes are helped. Men's pornography is shunned and restricted, while women's pornography---bodice rippers, romance novels, magazines like Cosmo, etc.---is perfectly acceptable.

It is a woman's world. Here are a few more quick indications of that.

A lot of books are aimed at women. A subject heading search for "women" in the Los Angeles Public Library catalog resulted in 14,962 items. A subject heading search for "men" only gave 1,753 items.

It is similar for magazines. The 2009 News Media Directory lists 11 pages of magazines for women, but only 1 page of magazines for men.

The women's department in almost any department store will be right inside the front door. The men's department is likely to be in the basement. Department store catalogs and flyers also usually have women's items in the front, while men and kids may get a page and a half in the back.

Mother's Day became an official holiday in 1914---Father's Day waited until 1972.

Why does menopause get so much more attention than the other change of life, puberty? Perhaps menopause is more complicated and serious than puberty. Perhaps. But I have to think that we focus so much more attention on menopause because only women experience it.

Here is a portion of the mission statement for WAPC. “Women Against Prostate Cancer (WAPC) is a national organization working to unite the voices and provide support for the millions of women affected by prostate cancer, and their families.” Even when talking about prostate cancer, the concern and focus is on women.

One way that women receive more aid is by portraying themselves as victims. But women in the United States have very little left in which they can claim victimhood. So women and their helpers in the media show us female victims in third-world countries, where we are less likely to know that men are just as victimized if not more so. This encourages women here to continue to be perceived as victims.

This is not to say that women in the United States do not portray themselves as victims every chance they get. The U.S. Preventive Services Task Force recently made recommendations concerning screening for both breast cancer and prostate cancer, based on the idea that the drawbacks of screening may outweigh the benefits in certain circumstances. The USPSTF recommended that women in their 40s should consult with their doctors to determine if screening were necessary, and then receive biannual screening from age 50 to age 75. The USPSTF also recommended that men under 75 years old should consult with their doctors to determine if prostate cancer screening would be beneficial for them. The USPSTF recommended that screening end at age 75 for both men and women. These recommendations were controversial, but the mammogram recommendation caused a media firestorm. Women accused the USPSTF of sacrificing women's lives to save money. There was no such firestorm with the prostate cancer recommendations.

This may also be related to women's intrinsic value. Feminist Simone de Beauvoir had it wrong in her famous quote: "One is not born, but rather becomes, a woman." Instead, women are valued just for being. They receive worth and men's chivalry just for being women. They are put on a pedestal just for being women. Men must earn their trip to the pedestal. And as a result, men's pedestal is a little higher. This results in 3 levels. Nearly all men are in the lowest level---no pedestal. All women occupy the middle level. And just a few high-achieving men make it to the highest level. It is men who must earn their value, by being the best, richest, highest status, etc. All women have doors held open for them, but only a few men earn that privilege. This three-tiered system allows women to be shameless opportunists. If they want to play the victim, they can point to the few high-status men and complain of the unfairness that women are seen as inferior to men. But when it suits their purpose, women can also assume superiority by looking down on what they see as those callous, violent, rude dogs that are the vast majority of men. This is why the books The Second Sex (by de Beauvoir) and The First Sex (2 separate books, one by Elizabeth Gould Davis, and the other by Helen Fisher) are about women.

Here's another look at the double standards of sexual harassment. Women are very sexual. Muslims acknowledge this with severe restrictions on women's dress. We in the West have few restrictions but do not see women's excessive sexuality because we have become accustomed to it. However, consider that we do not allow 5 year-old girls to wear makeup because it is inappropriate for them to be sexual. But if makeup is sexual on a 5 year-old girl, it is also sexual on an adult woman at work. If a woman's dress is sexy, that is just a euphemism for sexual. Why do we allow women's sexual appearance at work, but penalize men if they do anything sexual at work? (Consider the recent case of Deborahlee Lorenzana who is suing to allow women to be sexual at work.) Here is another approach. Traditionally, women's power base has been sexuality, while men's has been economic. It is now unacceptable to tell a sexual joke at work (because women do not want their power denigrated), yet it is perfectly acceptable to tell an economic joke at work. "Men give/women take" allows women to get away with much hypocrisy.

It is natural for an oppressed group to overreact and develop a "super pride" when coming into equality. For example, blacks did this in the 1960s with the expressions "black pride" and "black is beautiful." This super pride lasted a few years but eventually died down to a realistic level. However, women's super pride has not died down after 40 plus years and does not look like it will. Any accomplishments by women receive more attention than deserved, and women exhibit exaggerated pride. Examples include Billie Jean King, Danica Patrick, Jessica Lynch, Kimberly Munley, Beardstown Ladies, Xena Warrior Princess, "girls rule" slogan, referring to God but not the devil as "she," and Helen Reddy's "I am woman, hear me roar." Also, images of Rosie the Riveter seem more prevalent now than during World War II. It seems like almost every year is another "The Year of the Woman." And we constantly hear in the media about the "first woman" to do something. The first black or first Hispanic rarely gets any attention.

Here are a few quotes showing women's super pride. Sally Field while accepting an Emmy said, "If mothers ruled the world, there would be no goddamn wars in the first place." Former Governor of Texas, Ann Richards, borrowed from a Frank and Ernest comic strip when she said, "Ginger Rogers did everything Fred Astaire did, only backwards and in high heels." (Rogers was a fine dancer, but even I can tell she was not in the same league as Astaire.) Dee Dee Myers in her book, Why Women Should Rule the World, advocated for more women in power positions in government with this, "We'd have more representative government; a stronger economy; and a healthier and more sustainable planet. We'd be better able to resolve conflicts and keep the peace. We'd have stronger families." And later she said, "Women are just more practical than men." These expressions of super pride show women's self-indulgence.

Many products of a general nature are promoted, explicitly or implicitly, as only for women. Why would companies exclude half of the population from buying their products? I guess this panders to women's exaggerated pride---if the product is for men too, then it is not good enough for women. In the olden days it was Ice Blue Secret, Special K, Virginia Slims, and Gerotol. More current examples include Activia yogurt, Curves cereal, Crystal Light, Correctol laxative, Hemorid hemorrhoid cream, Living Well Lady fitness, and most all hair coloring and skin creams. Protein bars are a telling example of this phenomenon. PowerBar and Clif both had protein bars for everyone, but then introduced Pria and Luna bars just for women. They have no bars just for men.

Pandering to women's pride carries a risk. Because of women's sense of entitlement, it appears women are more likely to sue for any bad results, real or imagined, and may be more likely to win because of the chivalry and entitlement of judges and juries (e.g. Activia, Victoria Secret, Fen Phen, Vioxx, Fosamax, Bendectin, Yaz, Norplant, and McDonald's hot coffee.) Probably the best example is breast implants. Even though there was no scientific evidence that silicone breast implants caused any major diseases, manufacturers still paid $3.4 billion into the largest class action settlement up to that time.

In a time of overpopulation and dwindling resources, it is imperative that we reduce our consumerism. Certainly women reign when it comes to extravagant consumption. As I said earlier, women spend 80 cents of every consumer dollar. They are more likely to go shopping for fun, and throw away items just because they are out of style. Of course, men also need to stop any consumption which only shows off their ability to provide for women.

Some are complaining that men are becoming just as whiny, extreme, and self-indulgent as feminists. Although true in a few individual men (me, perhaps), it is certainly not true in general. Because of chivalry, men will never be as demanding and whiny as women and feminists.

Women often use shame to control men. Be warned that some entitled women and chivalrous men may try to shame anyone who believes any of the ideas in this article. But shame is not a valid argument, it is an ad hominem. Do not respond to it. (Secretary of State Madeleine Albright used this tactic a few years ago by questioning Fidel Castro's cojones. Is shame the kind of diplomacy we can expect from women?)

Feminists have relied on distortion and outright lies to accomplish their goals. One quarter of women are victims of rape or attempted rape, women are paid 80 cents per dollar men make for equal work, domestic violence is almost exclusively men battering women, battering of women increases during the Super Bowl, battering causes most birth defects and miscarriages, spousal abuse is responsible for 20 to 35% of women's trips to emergency rooms, hundreds of thousands of women die of eating disorders each year, and men were able to legally beat their wives with sticks the thickness of their thumbs, are all examples. Feminists make little effort to correct such myths which are then often used to influence public policy.

But the big lie of feminism is that it is for equality of the sexes. As I have shown in this article, feminism has little to do with equality---the word "feminism" itself proves this. (It is a little like saying that we should use the word "catism" when we want to show that cats and dogs are equal pets.) But because most everyone believes the lie, men's side of the issue has been totally ignored and closed out. Besides, feminism can no longer promote equality by fighting for women since women are now superior.

The result of this big lie and the "men give/women take" dynamic is that our sons are second class citizens, at best. Both men and women must be vigilant to stop men's chivalry and women's entitlement. We must do this for our sons and an egalitarian society.

Ed. note: I don't often publish an essay of this length when submitted anonymously. However it was too well-written and had too many good points not to. I used Google to see if parts of it were out there on the web and I didn't didn't find any, so I will assume it is an original piece by a man named David Johnson. If you Google that name, you may come up with this story. I have no idea if this is the same David Johnson or not. I do know that it is a very common name, however, and you will get plenty of other David Johnsons in Google search results also. Heck, Wikipedia has a rather long list. Maybe it's by one of them!

Canada: Divorced B.C. father kept from seeing child

Anonymous · 22 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Geesing said his ex-wife has been allowed to bar him from his daughter because a court order requiring her to co-operate is unenforceable.
...
...He and his wife separated in 2008, when the girl was eight years old. Since then, he said, his wife has tried to shut him out of his daughter's life completely.

"When I phone, I get the message 'She doesn't want to talk to you,'" said Geesing. "On her 10th birthday, I left flowers on her doorstep — that's it."

Geesing has had no contact with his child since March 2009.
...
"Why am I supposed to be the lesser parent?" asked Geesing. "The default [in the courts] should be equal, shared parenting. That should be the default."'

Abusegate: Call your reps in support of lobbying to happen on Thursday and Friday

Matt · 23 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

On Thursday and Friday, an army of citizen-lobbyists will be meeting with Senators and Representatives to discuss long-overdue changes to the Violence Against Women Act. These persons, who are taking time off from work and paying their own expenses to come to Washington DC, need the backing of thousands of pro-family supporters from around the country.

Please call your Senators today at 202-224-3121. Tell the receptionist who answers these 3 words: “Fix VAWA Now!”

If you do not know the names of your two Senators, the operator at the Capital Switchboard can tell you: 202-224-3121.

Australia: Hidden epidemic of women beating up men

Anonymous · 23 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WOMEN beating up their men - physically, emotionally or financially - has become a hidden epidemic because men are too scared of being labelled wimps if they cry for help.

A new study has found for male victims of "intimate partner abuse", the cumulative effect of repeat "knees in the nuts" or being heaped with scorn is a damaging erosion of self-worth.

But a typical response to men who do complain is, "C'mon, you're a bloke - get over it".

Similar to the pattern of abuse of women by men, it often starts with verbal, financial and psychological abuse, but over time escalates to physical and sometimes even sexual abuse.

The issue is even more under-reported for men than women, because men fear either being seen as wimps or not being believed, the study says.'

Abusegate: Half a Billion Dollars for False Accusations

Matt · 24 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

According to a recent estimate, innocent Americans spend half a billion dollars each year to defend themselves against false accusations of domestic violence. The full calculations are shown here.

This is simply outrageous.

Today, we're asking everyone who reads this message to contact Sen. Orrin Hatch, one of the leading proponents of the Violence Against Women Act, and leave this short and sweet message: "Fix VAWA Now!"

Telephone: 202-224-5251
Email form here.

If we don't take bold action now, don't complain if VAWA doesn't get reformed.

"My Story"

Anonymous · 24 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This isn't a news story. This is my attempt at writing something about my story. I wanted to get some opinions from other men about it. I thought this might be a good place to do that. I want to improve this. I wanted to write something that would be kind of like a newspaper article you might read about my story. I wanted to express events as I lived them with minimal coloring on my part. I also have a brief coda after the essay about things that I think might help in the future. Please give me your impressions on that too. If you wish to email me with constructive comments, I can be reached at rlaspari-at-hotmail.com.

I know most men who are dads are working dads. One thing to keep in mind is how different my story would be if I were a stay-at-home mom instead of a stay-at-home dad. I think the differences indicate the different treatment men and women get.

I was a stay-at-home dad. I still am a stay-at-home dad, but it is not the same. I cannot be a stay-at-home dad much longer.

I have been a stay-at-home dad since before my son was a year old, and always the primary parent responsible for his care. Even before I was a stay-at-home dad I was the parent who took my son to doctor visits or stopped by to see him during lunch break. When my son did not adjust well to his daycare, I wanted to stay home with him. His mother wanted to continue working. So I quit my job to become a stay-at-home dad. When my son was three and a half years old, his mother filed for divorce.

I do not know why she filed for divorce. We argued more towards the end, but no more than many couples who stay married and work things out. I have since learned that in families with children, women file for divorce the majority of the time. College educated women, like my son's mother, file the vast majority of the time. I did not want a divorce, but I had no say in the matter. With a divorce forced upon me, I would have preferred a collaborative divorce to an adversarial one; but, I had no say in the matter. I would have preferred to gradually change my son's residential schedule over changing it abruptly, but I had no say in the matter. The divorce process was unilateral.

After my son's mother filed, she presented me with a large stack of papers. Among other things in these papers, she wrote her opinions of my parenting ability. I learned that she was accusing me of some form of “emotional abuse” as well. This enabled her to bring papers before a judge for “immediate relief” prior to presenting them to me. I was fortunate that no immediate relief was granted. I have since learned that many men are not so lucky. We both argued with each other, and she was the only one to ever be physical in these arguments; but, only she leveled accusations of abuse.

In her papers she requested to be named the primary parent, and I be given visitation. I had a chance to respond, and she then had the final say with a response to my response. Lawyers took these papers to the court. They spoke in front of a commissioner with each of us standing next to our respective lawyers. Her lawyer spoke for about 5 minutes. My lawyer responded for about 5 minutes. Again she was granted the final say when her lawyer spoke for another 5 minutes. Immediately after this the commissioner ruled, and my son was taken from me half the time.

This was the “temporary arrangement” until the entire process was complete. The process took almost a year and a half to complete. Another part of the ruling was the commissioner telling me I should find work. I asked for a revision hearing to try to have this custody schedule revised. It was not revised, and I was told at the revision that I need to pay half the mortgage on the house until it is sold.

Throughout the divorce process I heard the phrase “best interests of the child.” The court used the phrase often. My son's mother used the phrase often. I was coerced into signing documents with the phrase. Until the hearing my son saw me every day. We spent all day together most days. I would lie next to his bed every night to help him fall asleep. My son cried and cried and cried during the first weeks when he was taken from me. He didn't sleep well when he was away. He was only 3. He still asks his mother if I can come over with him when she picks him up. The courts say they only act in the best interests of the child.

After filing for divorce, my son's mother wanted to put him in daycare. I thought it would be a foregone conclusion that, if there was a parent that is willing and able to stay home it would be allowed, but because his mother wanted daycare, there needed to be a hearing. My son has certain special needs that led to his mother and I to have him evaluated by the university when he was 2, and by the public school system soon after. They made certain specific recommendations for schooling and care that I wanted to carry out. Both my son and I were fortunate for this. The court was compelled to follow the recommendations. I believe without these recommendations my son would be in daycare today in order to comply with the mother's wishes. The type of preschool I requested for my son was one where parents assist the teacher. My son's mother said it should not be assumed that I would be the parent to do this. I made no such assumption. Nevertheless, the commissioner ruled that my son's mother could replace me whenever she wanted and as often as she wanted, as long as she gave me one week's notice. I was worried she would exercise this privilege all the time, and I would not get to participate at my son's preschool; but, she rarely did.

My son's mother requested a parenting evaluator. My lawyer told me I had to agree to this. Our parenting evaluator was a social worker. The evaluator writes a report with recommendations when he finishes, and my lawyer said the court almost always follows these recommendations. My lawyer also said the parenting evaluator will ask me to sign forms to waive my rights to privacy and confidentiality so that he can talk to doctors, therapists, teachers, and anyone else he might feel is relevant. My lawyer told me I should sign whatever the evaluator wants me to sign. When I met with the evaluator, I did. I was told by many, including my lawyer, that it is a good idea to keep a daily journal of what I did with my son and how I interact with his mother and her family. According to the evaluator, my journal consisted of over 500 typed pages. I don't know what he did with it, and it was never returned to me. I had two meetings with the evaluator. During the first meeting the evaluator spoke with me in an office. I told the evaluator I wanted to stay home with my son until he started kindergarten. He told me that children of divorce have to go to daycare. During the second meeting he watched me play with my son for half an hour through one-way glass. I am proud of my parenting skills, but this was still frightening for me. I felt violated by this evaluation.

Eventually, my son's mother and I “settled.” I have since learned most adversarial divorces end with a settlement, and not a trial where information about the proceedings is made publicly available. I was afraid of the extra costs of a trial, and I was afraid that worse things could still be done to me and my son. I found nothing particularly “amicable” about our settlement. We reached an agreement where I only got to see my son half the time, but I could stay with my son during times when his mother was working. Since the divorce I have had the chance to meet several divorced mothers through single parent groups. They had custody arrangements where they had their children at least 70% of the time – often more. They collect child support. I did not meet any stay-at-home mothers who had their children only 50% of the time. According to the most recent US census 5 out of 6 custodial parents are women. All the single mothers I have met so far initiated their divorces.

I noticed something else about the divorced women I met. They have a tendency to speak in the passive voice. Family court uses similar language. I asked one woman about her custody arrangement. She said it didn't make sense for her husband to have custody. I recognized the passive voice. I asked her if that was what her husband wanted. She said he just wanted whatever he could get. The passive voice extends to the description of the process – phrases like “the divorce was finalized on this date” or “we're divorced” – not “I divorced” or “I initiated the divorce.” The other person is thus put in the position of having to ask awkward questions for more information. It reminds me of governments that know they are doing bad things and wish to deflect attention and criticism. “People are being detained.” Who is detaining them? They are being detained. Some of these women also accused their husbands of abuse of one form or another. It seemed incongruous to me because, like my own ex-wife, these same women often seemed aggressive, angry, and intimidating to me – but they all had a seemingly instinctive and masterful grasp of social language.

People have been using passive language in divorce for a long that now. A friend of mine recently told me that my description reminded him of the separate conversations he had to endure as a teenager once a long time ago. The mom explained that it was just something that developed, that it was nobody's fault. But the dad explained, she filed for divorce. Active versus passive voice. Same stuff, different decade. The courts encourage the use of passive voice when speaking to children, or an active voice with “we” to indicate the parents are on the same page about what is happening. The courts say to use the active voice would constitute blaming the other parent. To adhere to this standard leaves the parent who did not want a divorce (most often dads) in the position of saying he is ok with a scenario in which he is not permitted to have as active a role with his children as before. In effect, parents are supposed to tell the kids: I won't see you as much, and I'm ok with it, and it's no one's fault -- thus making these parents appear either callous or foolish.

Throughout the divorce I was told that I should seek work, and that I should be able to find work. This presupposition affected how assets and obligations would be divided. Income was “imputed” to me. I have been out of the workforce for nearly 5 years, and unemployment is very high. Finding work will be a challenge for me. If I need to move out of a state for work, I will be at the mercy of my ex-wife. I have been told that if it went before a court, I would lose what custody I have if I move. My ex-wife has a good job and is worth between 1 and 2 million dollars. I am worth a small fraction of that. Child support is determined based on the percentage of overnights the child spends with a parent. If the number of overnights are equal, no child support is warranted. I will not be getting child support. I have recently spoken with a divorced mom who decided to allow the dad to see his son half the time. In her case they determined child support based on the disparity of incomes. She gets $1000 a month. If I am forced to move because I can only find a job out of state, the likely outcome will be my seeing my son only for most of the summer -- and I would have to pay my millionaire ex-wife child support. I would be reduced from a full-time, stay-at-home dad to a dad who only gets contact with his son for maybe three months out of the year.

I was a stay-at-home dad. I still am a stay-at-home dad, but it is not the same. I cannot be a stay-at-home dad much longer.

So that's my story. It is probably not a particularly gripping one if you haven't lived it. As for me, I still take medication for anxiety as a result of all of it. As a stay-at-home dad I went from full time with my son to half the time. I worry I might lose more time in the future. Working dads often go from part time to virtually no time. There are things that people can do to make a difference in the future though. The first thing is to talk about it and build awareness. Everything about divorce is designed to keep people from talking about it. That's similar to any corrupt process. The only way to fight it is to talk about it more. Statistically speaking, men do not recover from divorce (Even if they remarry problems remain.). They die younger and have more physical, mental, and financial problems. Statistically speaking, children do not recover from divorce. They have deficits relative to other children, and they grow up feeling like they can never be themselves or never truly be at home. They have different selves for different homes. They feel they have to grow up sooner. They are more likely to have all sorts of problems. Remarriage does not help them and may make things worse. Statistically, the only time divorce benefits children is when there is violence or threats of violence in the home. Yet as a society we make it easy and condone and even sometimes encourage people to do this to their children. Though I use the word "people," the vast majority of people who file for divorce when children are involved are women. Ask them whether they filed. Watch for passive language. Watch for gender bias. Gender bias is still rampant through the process, even in states where the language has finally been changed to be gender neutral.

Many people recognize the system is broken and want to fix it. The best idea I have heard is this one: a rebuttable presumption of custody of any minor children to the respondent. What that means is if someone files for divorce when there are kids involved, there will be a presumption that the other parent gets custody of the kid. This would greatly reduce the number of divorces with kids. All of a sudden, the divorcer could not use the kids as pawns, and would face the possibility that she might not get custody herself. The divorcer could still get custody if there is evidence that the other parent did something bad, like abuse the kids or something -- but we would have the presumption of innocence first -- something we really like having in most other areas of the justice system. That presumption of innocence is still elusive in family court.

Even if we could enact this change to the family court system, it might still be subverted so long as the basic undercurrent of prejudice against men remains. Men are inherently as good at parenting as women. Men need just as much protection under the law as women. So long as people reject these notions of equality, the people who enact and enforce these laws will find ways to make sure women continue to receive favorable treatment at the expense of men and children.

Requirements for counseling prior to divorce would also be a good idea -- but first we would need to change the secular counseling system as well. Right now it adopts a "divorce neutral" attitude despite mounting evidence that divorce is harmful in a multitude of ways. It is equivalent to having a neutral attitude towards whether the earth is round or flat.

We need to see to it that society has support structures for men equal to those women have. In my own case, at one point I went to my local community college's women's center for help because there is no equivalent men's center. They were kind and tried to help, but did not have much they could offer me. The best word I can come up with to describe how I felt going through this process is rape. I felt raped, and I felt like I had to watch my son being raped as well. I felt we were violated, and I felt one person violently imposed her will on us with the aid of the court. I find it hard to believe we have support systems in place for the rapists, but not the victims.

There is a lot that needs to be changed, but there are entire industries built on keeping things as they are. The only hope for change is if people get over the built-in discomfort and start talking about it more.

Canada: Are men obsolete? Ask Sebastian Junger

Anonymous · 24 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More females than males are attending university. The ranks of middle managers are being filled by women (watch the glass ceiling shatter, eventually).

Boys are adrift, as one book title puts it. "Failure to launch" has become a cultural cliché.

In two areas, mind you, men still reign supreme: engineering and janitorial work.

And war. Yes, let's not forget that.
...
Hence the basis for all these articles and books asking the question "are men obsolete?" And for all the commentary that tells us that women function so much better in modern society, with their co-operative ways, bureaucracies and book clubs.

In the end, to confess, your evolutionary dodo isn't quite sure himself what to make of the question. Are we men obsolete?

I will have to take it up with a female supervisor, one of the many so deftly staffing the ranks of the public broadcaster.'

BA compensates man 'humiliated' over child seat policy

MichaelClaymore · 25 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Remember the guy who was angry at British Airways' policy of not letting men sit next to unaccompanied kids? He received a settlement from them and now the policy is "under review". Not a watershed, but good news nonetheless. Story here. Excerpt:

'BA has compensated a passenger who was "humiliated' over its policy of not allowing single male flyers to sit next to solo child travellers on its planes.

British Airways cabin crew told Mirko Fischer to move after he swapped seats with his wife and ended up sitting next to a boy he did not know.

Mr Fischer, 33, accused staff of harassing him and said the policy contravened the Sex Discrimination Act.

BA apologised to the businessman but denied the policy was discriminatory.

A spokesman told the BBC the policy was now under review.

A consent order detailing a settlement between the parties was drawn up at Slough County Court on Wednesday.'

New PM of Australia has strong feminist creds

Matt · 26 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S. The new PM of Australia is Julia Gillard. (Story here). She has strong feminist credentials. Her Wikipedia entry is here. Excerpt:

'Moving to Melbourne, in 1983, Gillard became the second woman to lead the Australian Union of Students. Gillard was also formerly the secretary of the left-wing organisation, Socialist Forum. Members of the Socialist Forum lobbied for the scrapping of the ANZUS treaty, making Leningrad a sister city of Melbourne, and introducing a super-tax on the rich.

From 1996 to 1998, Gillard served as Chief of Staff to John Brumby, at that time the Victorian Opposition Leader. She was responsible for drafting the affirmative action rules within the Labor Party in Victoria that set the target of preselecting women for 35 per cent of winnable seats within a decade. She also played a role in the foundation of EMILY's List, the pro-choice fund-raising and support network for Labor women.'

Related article Gillard's ascension a giant leap for womankind

Australia: Sex discrimination chief wants power to initiate investigations

Matt · 26 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sex Discrimination Commissioner Elizabeth Broderick says her office should be given the power to initiate investigations into sexual harassment in the workplace.

Ms Broderick says some workplaces need to be investigated even if there is no specific complaint from a worker.

She says sex discrimination is often built into work cultures and is difficult to tackle.

"We should be able to look at maybe organisations, maybe sectors where we know sexual harassment is more prevalent and really work to provide some more systemic response than relying on an individual complaint," she said.

Ms Broderick has also called for the Federal Government to ensure women make up at least 40 per cent of all Government-appointed boards.'

"Motherhood: the new oppression"

Anonymous · 26 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It seems to me that if you had deliberately devised a plot to oppress women, it couldn't get more diabolical than this. Highly educated, progressive and enlightened mothers don't need men to oppress them. They're perfectly capable of oppressing themselves!

Today, the baby has become "the best ally of masculine domination," argues Elisabeth Badinter, a controversial French feminist. Her new book (Le Conflit: La Femme et La Mère, translated as Conflict: The Woman and the Mother) argues that the moral requirements of modern motherhood – especially the back-to-nature, eco-mommy trend – have struck a blow to women's freedom. "Women's lives have grown more difficult in the last 20 years," she told The New York Times. "Professional life is ever harder, ever more stressful and unattractive, and on the other hand, there is an accumulation of new moral duties weighing on women."'

Paglia on modern middle-class sexual malaise

Matt · 27 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Op-ed here. Excerpt:

"...Although a Food and Drug Administration advisory panel recently rejected an application to market the drug flibanserin in the United States for women with low libido, it endorsed the potential benefits and urged further research. ...
...
...In the discreet white-collar realm, men and women are interchangeable, doing the same, mind-based work. Physicality is suppressed; voices are lowered and gestures curtailed in sanitized office space. Men must neuter themselves, while ambitious women postpone procreation. ...
...
Meanwhile, family life has put middle-class men in a bind; they are simply cogs in a domestic machine commanded by women. Contemporary moms have become virtuoso super-managers of a complex operation focused on the care and transport of children. But it’s not so easy to snap over from Apollonian control to Dionysian delirium.

Nor are husbands offering much stimulation in the male display department: visually, American men remain perpetual boys, as shown by the bulky T-shirts, loose shorts and sneakers they wear from preschool through midlife. The sexes, which used to occupy intriguingly separate worlds, are suffering from over-familiarity, a curse of the mundane. There’s no mystery left.'
...

Pharmaceutical companies will never find the holy grail of a female Viagra — not in this culture driven and drained by middle-class values. Inhibitions are stubbornly internal. And lust is too fiery to be left to the pharmacist."

What I notice here is that when it comes to any finger-pointing she does, it's at societal trends or at men. No mention of women being responsible for themselves and their own sexual desires. This is actually retrograde thinking, not even "progressive" in the 1970's sense. More like a page taken from the 1950s: Men are responsible for women's arousal state; it's on men to "get them aroused". Nothing like the song getting sung four decades ago.

Another feminist attack on Australia's shared parenting

Anonymous · 28 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

You may be interested in this report (.pdf file) in which the experiences of 22 women are used to attack Australia's shared parenting rules.

I am a regular reader but did not post this at the site as for personal reasons I don't want my name associated with this particular tussle. Articles in newspapers supporting his absurd study are here. Excerpt:

'Minister for Women, Jodi McKay, today launched the No Way to Live report at NSW Parliament House.

The report by senior lecturer at the University of Sydney, Dr Lesley Laing, looks at how Australias family law system responds to victims of domestic violence, Ms McKay said.

Importantly the research and resulting report moves beyond an analysis of the law itself and analyses the way the law supports victims, many of who we know are women.

As well as being informative, the report is a testament to the courage, resilience and great dignity of the 22 women whose experiences are told in the report.

Ms McKay said building a well informed evidence base is critical to reducing domestic violence and that is why this report is so important. The No Way to Live report provides first hand experiences of how the Family Law System has assisted and responded to victims of domestic violence, Ms McKay said.

It also highlights the key role support services play in the family law system and that workers need comprehensive and ongoing training to ensure they provide the best response to victims.'

A birth control pill for men is in the works

Anonymous · 28 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The female birth control pill, commonly referred to as 'The Pill,' is not 100 percent effective, and some women's bodies don't react well to the extra hormones. Now, finally, a new birth control option for men is in the works, which would allow partners to share the responsibility, and let guys be in control of whether or not there will be any surprises in the procreation department.

Prof. Haim Breitbart of Israel's Bar-Ilan University authored a breakthrough paper in 2006 describing how sperm survive in the uterus. Now the biochemist is taking those findings and using them against sperm. He's developed a number of novel compounds that have no affect on male sex drive, but succeed in impairing the reproductive ability of the sperm. If all goes according to his plan, a new male birth control pill could be on the market within the next five years, he tells ISRAEL21c.

So far, the new pill dubbed the Bright Pill (a play on Brietbart's name) has been tested on animal models in a pre-clinical setting, and has been found to work wonderfully on mice. "What we found is that by treating the mice with our molecule we can get sterility for a long period of time; in the lower dose, about one month, and in the higher dose we found three months of sterility.'

ABC Boston Does Special on F & F's Shared Parenting Bill

Matt · 28 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog post here. Excerpt:

'Ned Holstein, M.D., M.S., Chair of the Board of Fathers and Families, discussed Fathers and Families' shared parenting bill HB 1400 on ABC's Boston affiliate WCVB on Tuesday, June 22. The story also featured longtime F & F member Rob Derosier, who told WCVB about his long, hard fight to remain a meaningful part of his daughter's life after his divorce. To watch the story, click here.

...

From ABC's synopsis:

> A bill before the Massachusetts legislature would change the direction of child custody decisions, making shared and equal parenting the norm.
>
> When Rob Derosier welcomed his daughter into the world 10 years ago, he never expected that after divorce he'd become a mere visitor in her life.
>
> "It's the first time you have to drive up to a house and pick her up, and then drive up to the house and drop her off," said Derosier. "That's when it really hits home, when you realize your daughter really isn't yours anymore."

UK: Cameron's poverty guru targets feckless men

Broadsword · 29 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Britain should stop its obsession with getting single mothers into work and pursue unemployed fathers, David Cameron's poverty adviser said last night. Frank Field, the Labour MP commissioned to carry out a review of poverty, blasted young dads who feel jobs paying less than £300 a week are not worth their while.
...
He said that in many households, the role of the father as the breadwinner had been taken over by the taxpayer. Speaking at a lecture to the Attlee Foundation, a charity working in disadvantaged areas, he claimed the debate about poverty had been 'feminised', letting feckless fathers off the hook for living off benefits and failing to support their families.
...
He said men who refused to take a job offered to them should have their benefits cut altogether.

'The reason why we have so many single mums is because we have so many single dads who cannot fulfil what most single mothers want from their partners, and the children from their fathers', he said.

For a large section of what used to be the core of the Labour vote - working-class women - what they say they most want is a husband or partner in work which allows them their private domain of the family.'"

'Abduction' case against teen reaches new low with evil smear campaign

Stinger503 · 29 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is frightening to watch the power of the state unleashed to destroy a 14-year-old boy.

He is Edwin McFarlane, the bumbling teen whose attempt to help a 3-year-old girl find her mother June 10 at a Burlington Coat Factory has him facing a first-degree felony charge of false imprisonment.

The case never has made sense. And confronted with the possibility they made a mistake in a high-profile arrest, Orange County sheriff's detectives and now state prosecutors have waged a campaign to save face by distorting evidence and smearing the kid.

When I began questioning the arrest, the Sheriff's Office told me surveillance cameras proved Edwin never contacted his mother before leaving the store with the girl, as she claimed. I checked the videos and found this wasn't true.'

Abusegate: What is a False Allegation Worth? Join our July 22 Lobbying Effort

Matt · 30 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

The Violence Against Women Act spends $444 million each year. And VAWA-funded programs cause about 2 million false allegations. So each false DV allegation costs the American taxpayer $222 annually.

And now, President Obama is proposing to increase VAWA funding by a whopping $130 million!

The next Washington DC lobbying event will be held Thursday, July 22, the day before the Family Preservation Festival begins. Our message will be plain and simple: Stop the false allegations of domestic violence!

If you are a parent, grandparent, or other family member who has seen the harmful effects of false allegations on children, you need to come!

To pre-register, send your name, email address, organization name, and cell phone number to: rohara-at-saveservices.org

An orientation teleconference will be held in advance. Deadline for pre-registration is July 12.

Canada: New Study on Dating Violence

Anonymous · 30 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

A new study by Statistics Canada using police arrest data is being widely circulated in the Canadian Media.

Some places:

http://www.ottawacitizen.com/life/Abused+women+still+partners+dependable/2905307/story.html

http://www.vancouversun.com/life/Dating+violence+increases+most+grown+women/3215995/story.html http://www.cbc.ca/health/story/2010/06/29/dating-violence.html

My commentary/criticism:

Police statistics on domestic violence are not representative of society and are just bad statistics.

There is a lack of willingness for boys to report violence as it is embarrassing, as well as reluctance for police to press charges against girls.

Alternate source material can be found in Dominance and symmetry in partner violence by male and female university students in 32 nations (.pdf file) by Murray Straus.

'Women on Top?'

anthony · 30 June 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Don't worry, gentlemen. "The End of Men," Hanna Rosin's much discussed Atlantic cover story, isn't really about the end of men. It's about men's declining economic ability to dominate women and various sociocultural consequences of that fact—but who'd read a piece with an unsensational message like that? Women are surging forward educationally, entering the professions and the burgeoning service fields in great numbers, having children on their own, putting up with less crap from boyfriends and husbands—we all know that. Men are taking less than half the BAs, have suffered from the decline of manufacturing and other traditionally male jobs, and have lost some of their domestic privileges and some of their cultural prestige—we all know that too. It may even be, as Rosin claims, that women are particularly well suited to the postindustrial economy, where brains, self-discipline, the ability to work well with others and verbal skills matter more than brawn and testosterone-fueled thrill-seeking. It takes a clever picker of statistical and anecdotal cherries, though, to make plausible Rosin's claim that we are on the verge of becoming a matriarchy.'

UK: Specialist unit reports more male forced marriages

Broadsword · 1 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The government unit dealing with forced marriages received 65% more calls about male victims last year than the previous year, figures show.
...
Professionals working with young people were urged to be vigilant during summer, a time when incidents increase.

Men accounted for 14% of the total number of forced marriage cases, numbering 1,682, referred to the Forced Marriage Unit (FMU) last year.

However, due to under-reporting, the figures are thought to be well below the actual number of forced marriages.'

Kagan nomination hearings in full swing

Matt · 1 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Schlafly on Kagan here. As a reminder to one and all, the Kagan nomination hearings in the Senate are in full swing. MRAs/FRAs may have reason to be concerned. She is by some accounts a committed feminist and the article implies she admires a judge who felt it was a judge's role to make law from the bench. I will refer you to the Senate Judiciary Committee web site for contact information should you have a desire to voice any concerns you may have. Excerpt:

'When Kagan was dean of Harvard Law School, she presented a guest speaker who is known as the most activist judge in the world: Judge Aharon Barak, formerly president of the Israeli Supreme Court.

The polar opposite of the U.S. Constitution, which states that "all legislative powers" are vested in the elected legislative body, Barak has written that a judge should "make" and "create" law, assume "a role in the legislative process" and give statutes "new meaning that suits new social needs."

Barak wrote that a judge "is subject to no authority" except himself, and he "must sometimes depart the confines of his legal system and channel into it fundamental values not yet found in it." Channel? Does he mean he channels in a trance, as Hillary Clinton supposedly channeled discourse with the long-deceased Eleanor Roosevelt?
...
Kagan showed her feminist extremism when she served as the lead White House strategist advising President Clinton to veto the Partial-Birth Abortion Ban Act. Ten years later, substantially the same act was passed by Congress, signed by President Bush and upheld by the Supreme Court.'

RADAR ALERT: NPR Gives Raped Males The Unworthy Victim Treatment

Matt · 1 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

[Alert on-line here]

Last week, June 23, Attorney General Eric Holder missed the deadline for issuing standards to prevent prison rape.

Men being raped in prison is so accepted by mainstream America that Saturday Night Live's writers saw nothing wrong with doing 4-1/2 minutes of ass-rape jokes in a sketch called "Scared Straight" that ended with Betty White saying emphatically, "Wizard of Ass"! Blogger Scott Starnes states the attitude explicitly. Under a graphic stating "Ass-Rape: It's Always Funny," Starnes asks: "Who honestly cares about criminals being ass-raped in prison?"

Ignorant callousness is an obvious problem for reformers trying to eliminate prison rape. But an even more insidious problem is the media's treatment of male victims as unworthy of concern, as NPR's Morning Edition recently did.. NPR chose to ignore the fact that 90% of incarcerated individuals are male, and instead focused their story solely on a female-prisoner's experience of prison-rape. This form of bias is so subtle that most listeners won't even notice it. But it is a classic example of the very media bias described by Noam Chomsky and Edward Herman in their book Manufacturing Consent, in which they write:

> Our hypothesis is that worthy victims will be featured prominently and dramatically, that they will be humanized, and that their victimization will receive the detail and context in story construction that will generate reader interest and sympathetic emotion. In contrast, unworthy victims will merit only slight detail, minimal humanization, and little context that will excite and enrage.

Australia: Court affirms licence to kill as another "battered woman" walks free

Matt · 1 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On 4th March 2006, Claire Margaret McDonald gasped and burst into tears as a Victorian Supreme Court jury found her not guilty of the execution style murder of her husband, Warren John McDonald.

The court was told that McDonald had donned camouflage gear and lay in wait with a high-powered rifle for her husband to approach. She fired six shots, mortally wounding her husband.

McDonald successfully used the "battered woman syndrome" defence, claiming she had suffered years of abuse at the hands of her husband.

Within days, Queensland woman, Susan Falls, having probably read the media reports of Heather McDonald's stunning acquittal, decided to execute her abusive husband in the same fashion, in what prosecutors would describe as a cunning, calculated murder.'

UK: Scottish Parliament debates male DV victim-related spending

Matt · 1 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week a hugely significant and historic debate took place in Scotland when the Parliament got round to finally discussing domestic violence against men. As highlighted in the discussions it's quite shameful that it took 11 years after the initial Liberal Democrat proposal to actually have the debate, particularly given that debating "violence against women" is quite literally an annual event.

The debate itself makes fascinating viewing and a number of those taking part really should be commended for their knowledge of the issues and determination to expose the truth with particular credit going to Mike Rumbles of the Lib Dems. The most positive aspect of the proceedings was the recognition of how badly the Scottish Parliament was failing male victims. It was noted that the Scottish Executive had spent some £100 million helping females victims, compared to £28,000 on men. Feminists moan about all sorts of inequalities such as supposed discrimination in pay, yet even with their skills at fiddling the figures I doubt they can find any area where the disparity in government spending between the sexes amounts to more than 350,000%. As noted in the debate, such a lack of funding means there's no actual helpline based in Scotland for men, and further still no services that victims can be referred to one they call the helpline. It's akin to setting up a "999" call centre but neglecting to employ any fireman, police or paramedics.'

UK: BBC Radio 5 live to launch Men's Hour

Broadsword · 1 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BBC Radio 5 live is to launch Men's Hour, an alternative to Woman's Hour aimed at the opposite gender.

Hosted by Culture Show presenter Tim Samuels, the programme will have "leading males" from sport, entertainment and politics chatting about issues that affect men.

According to the BBC, the show will bring "real candour to the challenges of relationships and life, alongside irreverent manly chatter". Louie Spence of Sky1's Pineapple Dance Studios will be a regular weekly guest.
...
Regular features will include Questions You Daren't Ask Your Doctor and Midlife Music Crisis. According to Samuels, the six-part series - which begins on 18 July - will celebrate "modern man's mix of swagger and neurosis".
...
"It's about capturing the spirit of when good mates sit around nowadays," he said.

"Amidst all the banter you can actually open up about what's on your mind without being ripped apart."'

Calgary dad mourns murdered daughter

Matt · 2 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'James Shelswell said he was looking forward to Clare growing older, and the far-off day when he might finally bond with the child he surrendered when she was only four months old.

Instead, Shelswell will fly this week from Calgary to Abbotsford B.C., to attend Clare's funeral.

On Sunday, Clare was murdered, her throat slashed open after an apparent domestic dispute between her mom and step-dad over how to discipline the kids.

Peter Wilson, 29, is charged with killing his step daughter.

And now, all that's left for her biological dad is to say goodbye to the stranger who was once his baby girl.
...
In Calgary, Shelswell, who is re-married with two kids, is a man whose fury is mixed with remorse.

He laments that he didn't have enough money to fight back with a lawyer, back when his wife took their Calgary-born daughters away to B.C.

He says he settled into a pattern of paying child support, and looking forward to yearly visit with his girls — the last, a happy trip to Vancouver, included the aquarium and McDonald's.'

Open letter from Intact America to the AAP appears in the Washington Post

Matt · 2 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Below is the open letter Intact America placed in the July 1, 2010 issue of The Washington Post. Please tell the American Academy of Pediatrics Task Force on Circumcision that the AAP simply must stand by its oath to "protect all children," and recommend against routine infant circumcision. Read the press release about the ad.'

UK: A chance to suggest laws that should be repealed

Broadsword · 2 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The UK government has set up a website that will supposedly allow people to suggest repealing unnecessary laws and restore civil liberties. Whether this is just a publicity stunt or not it might be worth taking the chance to suggest that some feminist inspired laws be repealed.

Barbara Kay: You're male. You must be a pervert

Matt · 3 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an interesting news item out of Britain, a man has received about £3,000 in costs and damages combined for sex discrimination by British Airways (BA).

Mirko Fischer, 33, and his pregnant wife were on a London to Luxembourg flight in April 2009. Deciding she preferred the window, she exchanged her middle seat with her husband, thus seating him adjacent to a child travelling alone.

A flight attendant, who later claimed ignorance of the fact that Mr. Fischer was with his wife, informed him that he must return to his original seat, as it was BA policy not to allow adult men to sit next to an unaccompanied minor. After some discussion, Mr. Fischer did ultimately return to his seat, unwilling to make a spectacle of himself, but felt "embarrassed, humiliated and angry."

For its part, BA conceded fault in not realizing Mr. Fischer was with his wife, but defended the general policy. A spokesman said, "We had 75,000 children fly with us last year and it is an issue we take very seriously."

BA is not the only airline with that policy. It's a common practice. In a September 2007 post in these pages in which I mused over airline inconsistencies in profiling discrimination — yes to all adult men, no to potential terrorists — I quoted an expert witness in aviation disputes: "You have to make generalizations for the safety of a child." She cited what is apparently a well-known adage in airline circles: "No regulation in aviation takes effect without somebody's blood on it."

The only inference to draw from that statement is that unaccompanied minors have been physically abused on airplanes by adult men in the past, and therefore the policy is well justified. If that is indeed the case, then airlines have opened the door in principle to profiling in general.

Yet strangely, even though there's "somebody's blood" – more than 3,000 somebodies to be precise – on the lack of a profile policy monitoring the kind of people most likely to shed more blood, airlines still frisk little old ladies and pointedly ignore the terror profile guy with the one-way ticket and the nervous manner.'

Woman "allegedly" stabs husband to death in domestic argument

Matt · 3 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A Livingston County woman is being charged with second degree murder after she allegedly stabbed and killed her boyfriend after a domestic dispute Friday in Nunda.

Krista S. Kiblin, 20, of Nunda, Livingston County, allegedly stabbed her boyfriend Joseph P. Garcia, 18, of Arkport, Steuben County in the chest with a pair of scissors, according to a news release from the Livingston County Sheriff's Office. Garcia was transported to Strong Memorial Hospital, where he died from his injuries.

Kiblin was remanded to Livingston County Jail where she will be held without bail until a later court date.'

Family court system: root cause for a soldier's suicidal despair

Anonymous · 5 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Terrence Popp, operator of http://www.secondclasscitizen.org/, who writes simply: I would like you to view this video. Search under secondclasscitizen.org to see more similar videos.

UK: Majority of £8billion raised from tax and benefit changes to come from female taxpayers

Broadsword · 5 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Women are set to bear the brunt of the Coalition's budget cuts, with the majority of the £8billion raised from tax and benefit changes to come from female taxpayers.

Research commissioned by shadow welfare secretary Yvette Cooper showed that £6billion - more than 70 per cent - of the revenue raised will come from women and just £2billion from men.

The revelation prompted Miss Cooper to label the budget measures as the 'fiercest attack on family support in the history of the welfare state.'

'This Budget seems to be reaching back to a pre-war approach to families,' she said.

The research was carried out by the independent House of Commons Library which analysed money raised up until 2014-15 through measures such as raising the personal tax allowance, increasing capital gains tax and the freezing of benefits."'

UK: Student jailed over false rape claim made 'so she could get more time to do her homework'

Broadsword · 5 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"A student has been jailed for 18 months for falsely claiming a cleaner had raped her - so she could get an extension on her university course work. Temitope Adenugba, 24, was struggling to meet a deadline whilst studying at Oxford Brookes University last year.

...

She phoned police to tell them she had been abused as a child, before complaining she had also been subjected to a serious sexual assault as she slept in her university digs. When officers attended her halls of residence to take a statement, Adenugba pointed at cleaner Kunle Ogunmola and said: 'Can't talk here, that's the man who raped me.'

...

Mr Ogunmola was arrested, before a subsequent police investigation exposed a catalogue of lies and her claims later proved to be complete fantasy. The lie was created in a bid to get an extension on her end-of-term coursework, the court heard.

...

Sentencing her to 18 months in prison at Oxford Crown Court on Friday, Recorder Rabinder Singh said: 'It's extremely easy to make an allegation of rape when there's no foundation whatsoever.

'It's likely to have the perverse impact of guilty men walking free.'"

UK: Unemployment for male graduates far worse than for female graduates – findings of a HEPI report

Broadsword · 5 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

"An analysis by HEPI (published today, 4 July 2010) of the most recent data available reveals that graduate unemployment has worsened sharply for both male and female graduates in just one year and has increased by 25 per cent from 11.1 per cent in December 2008 to 14.0 per cent in December 2009. But the unemployment position appears to be far worse for males than for females: in December 2009 17.2 per cent of young male graduates were unemployed compared to 11.2 per cent of female graduates.

...

However, the HEPI report makes clear that the graduate employment picture needs to be understood in the context of the lower participation, higher drop-out and higher unemployment rates for men. Combined, these factors mean that just under half (44 per cent) of the graduate jobs are held by men, even though the male population is larger. To the extent that men are disadvantaged, their disadvantage appears to arise from their lower participation in higher education, and their subsequent performance there. Women appear to have the advantage over men when it comes to participation in HE and their subsequent HE performance, but there is one key respect in the transition to work where they appear to be at a disadvantage."

Will Our Churches Speak for Men?

Matt · 5 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Dec 2009, but still a good pointer for those involved in church work. Article here (.pdf). Excerpt:

'International Men's Day probably went unnoticed by most people—just like a social problem that has been overlooked, or ignored, or deliberately suppressed for far too long, by both secular and Christian segments of society. 19 November 2009 saw the quiet launch of the 'One in Three Campaign' (www.oneinthree.com.au), which aims to help many silent victims: men who are the victims of domestic violence.
...
According to those behind the One in Three Campaign, 'we could no longer retain our moral or intellectual integrity by ignoring the authoritative and growing body of data that indicates males are a substantial proportion of victims of family violence and abuse. While welcoming the advances that have taken place over recent decades to support women and children suffering from violence, we acknow ledge that there is a complete lack of programs, services and support to help men in the same situation.'

New York State wrap-up: no fault passed, noteworthy absences

Matt · 5 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Without a state budget passed and the governor of New York making good on his promise to veto by July 9 each and every unsigned spending item (a whopping 6,900 of them) placed before him, the New York State legislature somehow managed to find time to allow no-fault divorce. This is not bad in and of itself; what is bad is the presumptions made around it, as reflected in the article reporting it. Left undone was the reclassifying of the regulation of post-first-trimester abortions as a matter of public health instead of a criminal matter, but noticeably absent is any mention of a guarantee of the (purported) father's right to an equivalent form of discretionary choice. Excerpt:

'Every action by the Assembly and Senate in the past three months has been done under a pall of the state's $9.2 billion deficit and the inability of lawmakers and Gov. David Paterson to negotiate a budget, which was due April 1.
...
On Thursday, the Assembly gave final passage to legislation that would implement no-fault divorce in New York, something every other state allows. Companion bills passed by both houses would require counsel fees to be awarded at the onset of the divorce process and set up guidelines for interim spousal support. Proponents of the bills say they would ensure that the spouse with less money, often the woman, gets adequate financial support. They would allow divorce after six months and the resolution of all financial issues, rather than require a finding of fault, such as adultery, or a separation agreement and one year living apart.

No-fault divorce would benefit all litigants because they would "no longer be forced to testify before a judge and sometimes before a jury about why a marriage failed" or lie to the courts to get out of a marriage quickly, said Annette Hasapidis, co-chairwoman of the Women's Bar Association's Legislation Committee.
...
Other issues left undone at the Capitol include:
...
Abortion: Move the regulation of abortion from the criminal code to the public-health code, guarantee a woman's right to control her reproductive health and use or refuse contraception, and permit abortions after viability if the fetus or the woman's health is in danger. It would update the state's abortion laws, which pre-date the federal Roe v. Wade decision.'

UK: NHS uses thousands of taxpayers' cash to train jobless women to become stand-up comedians

Broadsword · 5 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"NHS bosses have been slammed today after spending thousands of taxpayers' cash training jobless women to become stand-up comedians.

Health bosses have launched the scheme to pay for council tenants to attend the lessons to help them make friends.
...
The course is supposed to be for women who are at risk of developing mental health problems - but a spokesman admitted participants had not had to provide proof of this.
...
Kat Bailey, Women and Theatre's spokesperson, said: 'The scheme is aimed at unemployed women, many of them single mums from deprived areas, who are at risk of isolation.
...

'None of the women have existing mental health problems.'
...
Public spending watchdog the Taxpayers' Alliance said it was unlike anything it had ever heard of before.

Chief executive Mark Elliot said: 'It is ridiculous to spend NHS resources on something like stand-up comedy.

'It would be laughable, if it wasn't for the fact that this money is sorely needed elsewhere.

'It is crazy to have a health service that runs stand-up comedy classes while people die for lack of funding for medicines.'"

Husbands can be jailed for insulting wives under new French law

anthony · 6 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The law – the first of its kind – means that partners who make such insults or threats of physical violence faces up to three years in prison and a €75,000 (£60,000) fine.

French magistrates have slammed the new legislation as "inapplicable", as they argue the definition of what constitutes an insult is too vague and verbal abuse too hard to prove.

Nadine Morano, the junior family minister, told the National Assembly that "we have introduced an important measure here, which recognises psychological violence, because it isn't just blows (that hurt), but also words."

Miss Morano said the primary abuse help line for French women got 90,000 calls a year, with 84 per cent concerning psychological violence.

But men now also have the right to report their wives verbal abuse in a domestic row.

It will apply to both married couples and cohabiting partners.

The bill, which has been unanimously approved by French MPs, defines mental violence as "repeated acts that could be constituted by words," including insults or repeated text messages that "degrade one's quality of life and cause a change to one's mental or physical state."'

Mom charged in kids' mutilation may get freedom

Matt · 7 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'EVANSTON, Wyo. – A woman who has spent 20 years in a mental institution for beheading and mutilating her two young daughters because she said they were evil clones may soon get supervised release.

The Wyoming State Mental Hospital in Evanston has asked a judge to place Laura Lee Rice in a group home or an apartment on the hospital's campus, saying she has not shown signs of violent behavior and is a low risk to re-offend, The Gillette News Record reported Sunday.

Rice, 58, was declared criminally insane and found not guilty by reason of mental illness in the deaths of her daughters, who were 15 and 4 months old when they were killed in 1989.

Police found the children's decapitated bodies in plastic bags at Rice's home south of Gillette. After the children were killed, Rice cut various parts of their bodies in an effort to determine whether the girls were clones, authorities said.'

Alimony Reform: F & F Helps Introduce SB 1482 to Protect Alimony Obligors from Abuses

Matt · 7 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families recognizes that sometimes alimony (and alimony increases) are appropriate, particularly when a parent, usually a mother, has had to make large career sacrifices to care for children. This is especially relevant if the children have school-related problems or other special needs. However, Fathers and Families is also concerned about the abuses experienced by California spousal support obligors.

Some obligors assert that their exes are voluntarily unemployed or underemployed, or are artificially lowering their earning capacity because they'd rather keep collecting large amounts of tax-free alimony. SB 1482, a bill recently introduced by Senator Rod Wright (D-Los Angeles), helps solve this problem by allowing obligors to request vocational examinations for the recipients of alimony payments, and requiring judges to follow the examiner's estimate of the recipient's earning ability when calculating alimony.

Also, current law places no time limit on how long potential alimony recipients have to file for increases after their children reach the age of majority and child support ends. This can create many problems for alimony obligors, who can be hit with stiff increases well after their children have emancipated. SB 1482 solves this by placing a time limit on the obligee.'

Swedish feminist party burns money in protest of 'wage gap'

Mr VanHuizen · 7 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Swedish feminist party has publicly burned 100,000 Swedish kronor ($13,000; £8,500) in a protest against unequal pay.

The Feminist Initiative party said the money represented the sum Sweden's women miss out on every minute in comparison to men.

The party hopes to win its first seat in parliament in elections on 19 September.'

Defeat wasteful spending in Congress/sound off on VAWA

MR · 8 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

A government web site named Youcut says it's looking for ways to cut wasteful spending in government. Description:

'YouCut is designed to defeat the permissive culture of runaway spending in Congress. We need your help in identifying which program and spending cuts should be featured on this website each week. Use the form below to submit your ideas for YouCut - by working together, we will be able to change Washington's culture of spending into a culture of savings.'

I sent them this:

"Defund the billions for the Violence Against Women Act. There are already laws in place against assault and other violence. VAWA is redundant and a major part of the Democrat welfare state. VAWA follows and promotes the radical feminist religion. Under it, false allegations abound, destroying the lives of innocent men for the sake of VAWA programs and services (housing, etc.). End this family destroying nightmare. Show me Republicans are pro-family."

Woman in custody dispute kills own baby

MichaelClaymore · 8 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. She shot the baby in the head, shot the husband in the gut, then shot herself in the head. Mother love - you just cant beat it. Excerpt:

'THE woman suspected of shooting dead her eight-month-old son and wounding her ex-husband had reportedly been involved in a custody fight.

Shortly before 8pm on Tuesday, 22-year-old Gracemere mother Jade Quilligan is thought to have shot her eight-month-old son Anthony.

She is also believed to have shot her ex-husband in the stomach.

As her son was carried to a neighbour's house in a desperate attempt to save his life, Ms Quilligan left in a ute, which hit a tree 10km down the road.

She died at Rockhampton Base Hospital where, The Courier-Mail understands, scans revealed she had a gunshot wound to the head.'

'For a year in prison I was treated like the scum of the earth, but I was innocent of rape'

Broadsword · 9 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In his cell at HMP Addiewell, Jason Duncan knew it was only a matter of time before the story he had concocted for his own safety would fall apart. Falsely accused of rape, the 22-year-old steel worker had decided it was better to tell fellow inmates that he was in prison for a shooting.

...

"In prison, if you are in for anything relating to a sex offence you are the lowest of the low," he explained. "My lawyers and even the prison staff told me that I would be in serious danger if other prisoners found out what I was charged with. So I concocted this story about being a career criminal who was in over a shooting. People seemed to believe it, but when my name was in the paper they realised why I was really there. I didn't leave my cell again."

Jason and his friend Chris Hoey were charged with rape in March 2009. A woman accused them of bursting into her flat and raping her at knifepoint. In reality, the woman – whom Jason knew – had invited them into her home following a night out.

...

"Being accused of something I did not do was a nightmare," he said. "But when people in prison found out what the allegation was my life became unbearable. They would put razor blades under the door and urinate into my cell. They threatened me and my family.

"I was in a cell for 23 hours and 45 minutes a day for my own safety. The only time I was allowed out was for 15 minutes at night time when all of the other prisoners were asleep.

"Eventually I had to be transferred to Barlinnie for my own safety. I told the other prisoners the shooting story, which worked for a while, but then one of the guys from Addiewell was transferred too and it started again. I was put on suicide watch and I refused to eat. When I went out on the wing, people would point and say, 'there's the monster'.'

UK: Women will be the losers if the Government allows rape anonymity

Broadsword · 9 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Anonymity for men accused of rape was introduced in 1976 but reversed in 1988 because it hampered police investigations. The proposal to reintroduce it relies on the sexist myth that women are quick to lie about rape.

Nothing is further from the truth. It is extremely hard for women to report rape, and 90 per cent never do. Those who report often say it was to protect others. But many are disbelieved or dismissed by police and prosecutors and even urged to withdraw – no wonder the conviction rate for reported rape remains 6.5 per cent.

Worse: any woman whose rapist was not pursued or convicted can be accused of making a false allegation and prosecuted, especially if she has reported rape in the past. (Since rape is common, many women are vulnerable to such charges.) Such prosecutions of women, seized on by the media, inflate the already unreliable figures on false allegations. How many of them are miscarriages of justice which no government has so far acknowledged, let alone addressed?

...

Proposing to grant anonymity to men accused of rape is fuelling a backlash against rape victims who dare to report. It reaffirms the still-too-common belief that women should stop "making a fuss". It discourages women from coming forward, and increases the likelihood that those who do will be disbelieved and prosecuted while their attackers remain free to rape again.

But women will not be pushed back to the 1970s. The huge public outcry against this proposal is the proof. '

Baskerville: "Women on Top"

Matt · 11 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gender politics is becoming too conspicuous to ignore. Triumphalist proclamations of female political dominance now appear in ostensibly detached scholarly journals. The trend is real, but it represents much more than 'the macho men's club' getting its just comeuppance for causing the financial crisis, as Reihan Salam writes in the prestigious journal Foreign Policy. On the cover of the august Wilson Quarterly, Sara Sklaroff sees fresher salads and smaller bus seats as evidence that 'women are taking over.' That journals with pretensions to serious scholarship address on this frivolous level what may be the most profound power shift since the fall of the Roman Empire demonstrates that important questions are not being asked. Salam, Sklaroff, and other prophets of a feminine future are quick with predictions, but they ignore the trends already well advanced in the present. The sexualisation of politics — and the politicization of sex — is the most profound social trend of the last forty years, with roots going back at least a century. In importance it far exceeds (though is also connected to) the challenge radical Islam presents to Western society. The emergence of women into top positions of power is only the tip of the iceberg. More far-reaching are the vast shifts in political power at all levels from the family to the United Nations.
...

The feminization of politics and law enforcement is global. Quasi-governmental organizations like the United Nations and the European Union were created to prevent armed aggression and war. As they prove themselves either incapable for that task or irrelevant, they have found new missions for themselves, creating their own social work bureaucracies similar to those found in Western governments, which they also propagate among less developed countries. Most of these emphasize the politics of women and children. Here too we see, on several fronts, attempts to criminalize ideologically incorrect behaviour, even matters not previously considered crimes and even when beyond the reach of any effective judiciary. Innovations like the International Criminal Court, the Convention on the Rights of the Child, and measures against human trafficking are all efforts to take complex political, economic, and social problems such as underdevelopment, poverty, and war and reclassify them as crimes whereby alleged malefactors can be prosecuted by politicized tribunals that lack the detachment and due process protections found in developed judiciaries.

'The axis of global conflict in this century will not be warring ideologies, or competing geopolitics, or clashing civilizations,' writes Salam. 'It won't be race or ethnicity. It will be gender.' He may well be right. But cheerleading for political trends is seldom a constructive substitute for unbiased inquiry. If we are to avoid the 'very violent' future Salam predicts as a result, we should stop gloating and start understanding.'

UK: Without any fear for the future, boys have given up their ambition

anthony · 12 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers of boys have a perennial subject of conversation. Is it us, our parenting skills or the wider society that is creating so many disaffected, troubled and disengaged young men? One friend of mine has hit on the theory that boys have lost their fear at the same time as having misplaced any sense of ambition. With the two great animators of human motivation – fear and greed (at its best, ambition) – knocked out we have a growing army of underperforming, unnecessarily idle and too often unemployed young men. Unable to motivate themselves, they just stew.

Young men's underachievement when compared with women has multiple causes – but a growing inability to find motivation, whether growing up on a social housing estate or in a top boarding school is, I think, one of them. The roots of this simultaneous collapse in ambition and loss of fear are hard to fathom and much contested, but they are there for all to see. It has been apparent in boys' GCSE and A-level results for some time. Now, as the Observer reports, it is extending into work. Graduate male unemployment on the most recent figures is rising so much faster than women's that it is more than half as high again – 17.2% compared to 11.2%.'

Commentary is found here. Excerpt:

'I have been a teacher for 25 years. There was a time when boys embraced education because they saw it as a pathway to success in professional life or rejected it in favour of going off to be successful plumbers or farmers. I interviewed boys and, whatever they thought of education, they had some idea of what they wanted to do in life. Now, when I speak to boys, I rarely get any plans for the future. If they are not "discovered" on a talent show or talent-scouted for a football club, they see no point. There is no success for them any other way.'

UN Creates What May Become a Billion Dollar Agency for Radical Feminism

anthony · 12 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK, July 8 (C-FAM) Last Friday the General Assembly voted to consolidate four separate United Nations (UN) bodies dedicated to women's issues into one new gender equality entity called "UN Women." The resolution capped a victory for radical feminists who lobbied for years for the new entity and is the latest in an overall push to bring women's issues even more onto the UN agenda.
...
The framework for UN Women is the Beijing Platform for Action, which calls for an end to discrimination against women especially highlighting education, employment, political participation and human rights. An Under-Secretary-General appointed by UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon will head the new body and member states are calling for a prompt appointment before the General Assembly meets in September. Many are speculating that former Chilean President Michelle Bachelet will be chosen. Bachelet is a socialist who promoted reproductive health and women's rights during her political career. The Under-Secretary-General will hold a 4-year term with a possibility of one renewable term.

The Gender Equality Architecture Reform (GEAR) campaign, a coalition of radical feminist groups and abortion advocates, has relentlessly lobbied to create a UN super-agency to deal with women's issues. Charlotte Bunch, executive director of the Centre for Women's Global Leadership and the leading advocate of the GEAR campaign, said, "We have high expectations for this new agency [...] The coalition of women's groups and other social justice, human rights and development organizations that played a pivotal role in this effort will now turn its efforts toward ensuring that the new body has the human and financial resources necessary to succeed."'

Libs Sneer at Men Who Grieve for Their Aborted Children

anthony · 12 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Progressives are at their most depraved and nakedly evil when expressing their contempt for human life. The concept of sympathy cards for men who lose children to abortion has induced liberal blogger Amanda Marcotte to cough up this clot of bile:

Anti-choicers [are] pretending that they just discovered they oppose abortion because it violates men's rights over their uterine property (established by the "poke it/own it" law laid down in beer commercials).

It's not about a child's life; it's about who "owns" a woman's uterus, according to the left's bizarre and heartless politics.

The charming Marcotte (formerly John Edwards's official blogger) sneeringly offers some sympathy cards of her own, like this one [Warning: link target is NSFW].

It doesn't get any better in the comments section. Here's a gem:

If a man tried to pull that crap with me, I'd tell him that if he cares about the embryo so much then he should get to work on inventing a way to transfer the pregnancy into his own body. Oh, you don't really want this thing to leech off your body for several months? Well, I don't either.'

UK: Teen jailed over false rape claim -- 'Troubled' young woman is jailed for 18 months

anthony · 12 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A TEENAGER who made false claims she was raped by a stranger in Torquay has been sent to prison for 18 months.

Nikita Kirk, 18, of Godwell Road, Ivybridge, called 999 from a public phone box to say a man she did not know had attacked and raped her.

The stranger was arrested, put into custody and tested for blood.

Exeter Crown Court was told yesterday his 'horrific' ordeal lasted four days before Kirk admitted she made up the whole story.

Sentencing her, Judge Graham Cottle said Kirk had no mental health problems and was simply a compulsive 'attention seeker'.

The court was told that on February 10, Kirk called police to make a 'totally false' report that a man had attacked her.

To support her accusation, she caused injuries to herself.

She took police to an address which she claimed was connected to the attack and identified a man who she said had taken cocaine before raping her.

David Gittins, prosecutor, said the man strenuously denied any part in the attack and offered to take blood tests to prove he had not taken drugs despite a fear of needles.

Four days later Kirk told police the allegation had been false.

At a previous court hearing she admitted one count of perverting the course of justice.'

Jon Stewart's 'Daily Show' is not sexist, female staffers write in open letter

anthony · 12 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For a sexist pig, Jon Stewart sure is charming, according to his female colleagues.

More than 30 female "Daily Show" staff members -- including Samantha Bee and newly hired correspondent Olivia Munn -- released an open letter Tuesday slamming reports that the satirical news show is discriminatory.

"While rampant sexism at a well-respected show makes for a great story, we want to make something very clear: the place you may have read about is not our office," the letter states, addressing itself to the "Dear People Who Don't Work Here."

The lengthy diatribe comes in response to Irin Carmon's blog entitled "The Daily Show's Woman Problems," which was appeared on Jezebel.com on June 23.

Carmon criticized the Comedy Central show after it hired Munn early last month, claiming female correspondents are a "short-lived phenomenon." To back up her claims that the "Daily Show" is a "boys' club," Carmon interviewed several former female employees who did not feel they were treated fairly.'

Tacoma advocate for domestic violence victims faces ethics case

anthony · 12 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Did the City of Tacoma's top advocate for domestic violence victims act responsibly to protect a woman who reached out to escape the escalating abuse of an estranged husband?

Or, did Gloria China Fortson, acting on unfounded abuse allegations, butt into a custody battle, overstep her authority and misuse city funds to help the woman break the law?

A city investigation last year found the latter, concluding that the longtime victims' advocate broke city ethics rules in 2007 by helping a client leave the state with her children.

In the midst of a custody dispute, a judge had granted Keisha Jackson's request to take her children to visit her ailing father in Florida with one condition: That she return within three weeks. Instead, Jackson – driving a van rented with city funds by Fortson – absconded with her children and was gone for more than seven months.
...
Although city officials have noted that criminal abuse charges are not required to receive domestic violence services – so as not to discourage victims from seeking help – the investigator concluded: "Evidence fails to substantiate that domestic violence issues regarding Mr. Jackson ever existed and further indicates Keisha Jackson's representations of such as self-serving in the context of a custody dispute."

Barbara Kay: Action on honour killings

Anonymous · 12 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Barbara Kay has done the human rights community another service with her recent column "Action on honour killings". She defines and differentiates between cultural violence (in the form of honor killings which are primarily directed at women and girls in an attempt to enforce social/cultural standards) and domestic violence which affects everyone. Both are serious issues which need attention, but as most men's activists know any issue that can be used to politicize domestic violence gets altogether too much free press. Excerpt:

'Domestic violence, or “Intimate Partner Violence (IPV),” as the latter name more precisely defines it, is a problem between two adults — both heterosexual and homosexual — who have difficulty dealing with intimacy issues and lash out at their partners. The violence may be initiated by either party, and carries no ideological implications. The problem is not cultural, but psychological in origin, and, however distressing to those who are its victims, is neither a collective problem nor the result of systemic misogynistic values in Canadian culture.

Honour-related abuse, on the other hand, is a collective problem, because it is based in cultural values adhered to by whole communities. Those abused, almost invariably female, and most often daughters (not a feature of western domestic violence), are the victims of a conspiracy, sanctioned and facilitated throughout a network of kinship collaboration.'

The World Cup Abuse Nightmare

Matt · 13 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Do brutal attacks on women by their husbands or boyfriends surge during the World Cup? According to a May 25 press release by England's Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO), "cases of domestic abuse increase by nearly 30% on England match days." The shocking 30 percent figure was from a study prepared and publicized by the British Home Office. Determined to stem the assaults, officials flooded pubs and the airwaves with graphic warnings. "Don't let the World Cup leave its mark on you," warned a poster distributed by the West Yorkshire Police. It showed the bare back of a cowering woman marked by bruises, cuts, and the imprint of a man's shoe. News stories with titles such as "Women's World Cup Abuse Nightmare" informed women that the games could uncover, "for the first time, a darker side to their partner."
...
In that roiling sea of media credulity, Ken Ringle, a reporter at the Washington Post, did something no other reporter thought to do: He checked the facts. He quickly discovered that there was no evidence linking football and domestic violence. The source for the 40 percent factoid was a mistaken remark by an activist at a press conference in Pasadena, Calif. Today, what has come to be known as the Super Bull Sunday hoax, is a staple in discussions of urban legends. Could the World Cup Abuse Nightmare be a copycat fraud?

"A stunt based on misleading figures," is the verdict of BBC legal commentator Joshua Rozenberg and producer Wesley Stephenson. They recently investigated the alleged link between the televised World Cup games and violence in the home for their weekly program Law in Action. On June 22 — day twelve of the 2010 World Cup — they aired the story. It included an interview with a prominent Cambridge University statistician, Sheila Bird, whom they had asked to review the Home Office study and its finding of a 30 percent increase in domestic abuse. She found it to be so amateurish and riddled with flaws that it could not be taken seriously. ...'

Barbara Kay: The truth on domestic violence just isn't sexy enough

Matt · 13 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sociologist Joel Best once said, "A bad statistic is harder to kill than a vampire." And no field is more rife with bad statistics than domestic violence.

It would seem that the best time to launch a bad statistic about domestic violence is during massively attended sporting events. A gullible public seems to think that high levels of testosterone on a playing field plus alcohol just naturally translates into an astronomical escalation of male fans beating up on their wives and girlfriends.
...
Why do these myths persist? Because they make great copy and because there is something mesmerizing about a statistic that freezes journalistic brains, especially when the statistics bolster common cultural biases or trends. And one especially pejorative but persisting cultural trend is the impunity with which all men can be demonized. The moral of these hoaxes is to view statistics that paint a negative picture of unusually high numbers of men with deep suspicion.'

"Woman jailed for making threats ... to herself"

Matt · 13 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SANTA ANA – A 25-year-old Santa Ana woman was sentenced to a year in jail Friday for sending hundreds of threatening text messages – to herself.

Jeanne Mundango Manunga's criminal problem was that she blamed the harassing text messages on an ex-boyfriend and his sister-in-law, and reported them to the police.

They were arrested on false charges of making criminal threats and required to post thousands of dollars in bail. The sister-in-law was arrested three times, and spent some time in custody before she could gather enough funds to pay the bail on her third arrest.

A jury convicted Manunga of three felony counts of false imprisonment by fraud or deceit and two misdemeanor counts of making a false police report in May.'

The New Republic: The Post-Gender Justice

anthony · 14 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After reaching milestones in academia and the Obama administration, Kagan has been invited to speak on issues related to women in the legal profession, but, on these occasions, she has concentrated on the data and avoided statements about sex discrimination. In discussing gender disparities in the law, she has focused on women's choices, such as how women opt to "move around in different areas" rather than aim for "the pinnacle," and how "many of the issues that women face in the workplace are issues for men as well." What's more, when Kagan has spoken on women's issues, in contrast to O'Connor, Ginsburg, and Sotomayor, she has steered clear of discussing the way gender affected her legal career. For example, in a panel moderated by O'Connor about women practicing before the Supreme Court, in which the challenges facing women lawyers were aired extensively and each of the other panelists addressed her personal struggles, Kagan was notably mum on how gender affected her professional experience — with the exception of whether to don the traditional "morning coat" of the solicitor general. In a speech to the New York City bar association on the status of women in the legal profession, Kagan likewise kept quiet on her own experience related to the topic. About her time as dean, Kagan told the university-run Harvard Gazette that she did not perceive differential treatment from colleagues on account of her gender. Her gender, she said, is "not something I think about on a daily basis, and it's something that in many ways has seemed remarkably not relevant in the job."'

European Commission study highlights gender inequalities in education

anthony · 14 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Indeed, the study found that only a few countries address boys' underachievement as a policy priority, while only some countries have special programmes for improving boys' reading skills and girls' achievement in mathematics and science. Researchers also highlighted that government initiatives that aim to inform parents about gender equality issues and involve them more closely in promoting gender equality in education are rare in the EU.
...
In general, the study showed that girls tended to receive more attention than boys, in particular where vocational studies were concerned. 'Although interesting individual initiatives and projects exist, overall national strategies to combat gender stereotypes in career choices and initiatives aimed at boys are lacking,' the study found.
...
Policies aimed at removing gender inequalities in higher education tend to target females to increase their numbers in engineering and science, and to boost their presence among teaching staff. The fact that the proportion of women among teaching staff in higher education institutions declines with every step on the academic career ladder has prompted about a third of the countries to implement policies to address this problem, noted the study.'

Woods case and paternity fraud frequency

anthony · 14 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Cases like this are fair more common than many people think. Paternity fraud is a term that was introduced by men's rights groups to describe when a mother names a man as the biological father even though she knows (or suspects) he is not actually the father. This paternal discrepancy happens when a man believes he is the father of a child, but the child is identified as biologically being fathered by another man.

In an article published several years ago in the Journal of Epidemiology and Community Health it was reported that close to 1 in 25 fathers are unknowingly raising another man's child. These figures are startling to many men and more and more people are turning to DNA paternity testing services to scientifically determine paternity.

In some jurisdictions there are limited opportunities for men to challenge the assumption of paternity. In some areas the husband of a woman who gives birth is said to be the father regardless of whether he actually is the biological parent. Other places have time limits on paternity challenges by the assumed father.'

Kentucky Supreme Court: Biological Dads Have ´Inherent, Equitable Rights´

anthony · 14 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The following is an article by Fathers & Families Board Member, Robert Franklin, Esq.:

"Given the unusual facts of this case, and recognizing the inherent, equitable rights of biological parents who are deprived of parenting through no fault of their own, the grant of joint custody to Trevor cannot prevent Cahill from going forward with his paternity action."

That´s the Supreme Court of Kentucky writing in this case (Leagle, 6/17/10). Let me repeat the key words: "recognizing the inherent, equitable rights of biological parents who are deprived of parenting through no fault of their own…" Let me be clear; those words have the power to blaze trails into the law governing paternity fraud and adoption where none have gone before. They were written by the highest court in the state.

For twelve years I have studied the many ways in which fathers can be deprived of their rights by family courts and family law. One of the easiest ways is for mothers to keep the truth about paternity secret from dads. Over the years, I have read scores of cases in which a father was deprived of his parental rights through that simple expedient. Not once in all that time has there been a case that recognized the "inherent, equitable rights" of fathers." Not once in all that time have I read a case that recognized the simple principle that rights cannot be lost without some action on the part of the individual whose rights they are. I´ve said it before: the most heinous mass murder has, literally, greater due process rights than the most upstanding single father.'

Sentencing nears for woman who had teen's baby

anthony · 14 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'INDIANAPOLIS -- When Shannon Ellis became pregnant two years ago, it was a surprise to family members. They had been told her husband had undergone a vasectomy.

But Ellis and her husband told friends and family the husband had had the procedure reversed.

That wasn't the case.

The truth, confirmed by a DNA test, was criminal. The father, the test showed, was a 14-year-old relative of Ellis' husband.

Shannon Ellis, then 34, had coaxed the boy into having sex with her on several occasions in 2007 and 2008. She is facing felony charges of sexual misconduct with a minor and already has entered into a plea agreement.

"This has damaged him for life," the teen's mother said. "She took away so many 'firsts' for him: becoming a father, seeing his child get her first tooth and taking her first step. Shannon needs to pay for what she did."

Ellis will be sentenced next month. The plea agreement caps her jail time at a maximum of 10 years. The prosecutor has not asked for minimum jail time.

The boy's mother fears the judge will go easy on the woman "who stole my son's childhood" because Ellis is a woman.'

Divorce battles go digital in the age of Facebook

Stinger503 · 14 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If you're divorced or in the process of a divorce you should definitely lock down your Facebook and other social sites. Excerpt:

'Facebook and other social networks, such as Twitter, Flickr, Photobucket and MySpace, are becoming the latest legal tool in divorce and child-support battles.

Lawyers and private investigators collecting background on a client's ex-spouse are trolling the websites as a quick and easy way to catch someone doing something they don't want brought up in court -- snapshots of snuggling with a mistress, seminude photos with children nearby or drunken party pictures from a bar on a weekend a child is visiting.

"It's happening a lot," said lawyer Mark O'Mara.

Orlando lawyer Diana Tennis remembered a case in which her client was fighting for more time with his child. Tennis came across a Facebook picture of the opposing parent's new boyfriend proudly posing with a gun he'd just purchased.

"It can be used as leverage," she said, adding that's not the image the opposing parent wanted to portray before a judge.'

F&F: 36 States Have Now Passed Child Custody Bills to Protect Military Parents

Matt · 14 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here.

'Because of problems in the family court system, when a divorced or never-married military parent deploys overseas, they often face the possibility of losing their custodial arrangement and their relationship with their children. Fathers and Families and its legislative representative Michael Robinson have been at the forefront of this issue, successfully working to pass military parent legislation in dozens of states.

In 2003, Fathers and Families publicized the heartbreaking case of Lt. Gary S., a San Diego-based US Navy SEAL who had his child permanently moved from California to the Middle East against his will while he was deployed in Afghanistan after the September 11 terrorist attacks.

The first success on this issue occurred in 2005 under Robinson's leadership with the passage of California SB 1082. SB 1082 addressed the way parents who serve are often taken advantage of in custody and family law matters while they are deployed, and helped resolve the child support nightmare many mobilized reservists face.'

Update on Men's Experiences with Partner Aggression Project

Matt · 14 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Abusegate Bob:

Dear colleagues and friends,

Emily Douglas and I are proud to share with you our first published article from our project on men's experiences with partner aggression. It was published this month in the journal Partner Abuse, and is attached. We have another article about to be released in a month or two in the Journal of Aggression, Conflict, and Peace Research, and we will share that when it is released. A draft of that article, along with recent conference presentations and media mentions can be found on our webpage: http://www.clarku.edu/faculty/dhines/results.htm

All the best,

Denise A. Hines, Ph.D.
Research Assistant Professor
Clark University

"If You're Not a Feminist, then You're a Bigot."

Anonymous · 15 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This was the headline video in the newsletter email I received today from the Big Think website.

Video and transcript both provided.

Feminist Attorney, Gloria Allred: "There is No In Between"

Hines and Douglas publish on men’s experiences with partner abuse

TWSchuett · 15 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Denise Hines and Emily Douglas have published the first article from their project on male victims of partner abuse entitled "A Closer Look at Men Who Sustain Intimate Terrorism by Women", appearing in "Partner Abuse", Volume 1, Number 3 and Men's Experiences with Partner Aggression Project can also be accessed through the Men’s Experiences with Partner Aggression Project website.

More at New Perspectives on Partner Abuse.

Ed. note: Already discussed on MANN here, but the foregoing gives a bit more information.

UK: Headteacher appoints two head girls as boys fail to make the grade

Broadsword · 15 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The accolade of being chosen as head boy or girl is often the proudest moment of a pupil's young life.

But one mixed comprehensive has dispensed with its tradition of having one of each - because the boys are not up to scratch.

For the first time since it was founded in 1959, Acle High School in Great Yarmouth, Norfolk, will have two head girls. And in a further snub to the boys, the two deputy positions have also been filled by girls.
...

Headmaster Tim Phillips admitted many pupils had objected to his decision but insisted it was right.
...
'I believe there is a wider issue of why the strongest boys don't put themselves forward for senior positions and we will be looking to work on that with students.'
...
Those who applied had to submit an application and be interviewed by the head and two teachers. Ten girls and two boys were selected.

'Of these, the strongest by a long way were all the girls, so we chose two head girls and two deputy head girls,' said Mr Phillips.'

BBC "Men's Hour" airs July 18th

fondueguy · 16 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

A reminder that the new BBC Radio segment Men's Hour airs for the first time this Sunday.

With respect to the first episode, "Including features such as Thought for the Gay, Questions You Daren't Ask Your Doctor, M Music Crisis, Token Women, and Hoover the Studio or Apologise for Feminism"

The segment, which has already been referred to here, will feature host Tim Samuels. He has been quoted in an interview saying this about the show "I don't think men's magazines have moved on very far from the laddism of the '90s, so there's nowhere that really caters to what I think the modern man is. He's a mixture - a more complicated creature who wants to talk about emotions and feelings. I don't think there's currently space in the media to talk intelligently about relationships, work or the pressures of life. That's what we're trying to do."

I'm still not sure how the show will play out; whether it will be serious or not. However some intelligence and backbone has already been shown by the host who made some comments which recognized misandry and were critical of Feminism.

Canadian Mother Who Strangled Daughter Won't Be Jailed, Judge Rules

anthony · 16 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A judge's decision to free a Canadian mother convicted of strangling her 14-year-old daughter with a head scarf has prompted growing outrage from victims' advocates groups.

A suspended sentence was given to Aset Magomadova, 40, by Court of Queen's Bench Justice Sal LoVecchio on Thursday, stunning a national victims' group based in Toronto, the Vancouver Sun reports.

"I really strongly disagree," said Joe Wamback, founder and chairman of the Canadian Crime Victims Foundation. "It sends a message to the rest of the community and the world that her daughter's life was valueless."'

Ed. note: Barbara Kay comments here. Excerpt:

'Apparently Magomadova's lawyer really got to the judge with an account of the defendant's "catastrophic" background in war-torn Chechnya, where her husband was killed in conflict while she was pregnant with a son who later was born with Muscular Dystrophy.

I would venture to say that many killers have a "particular situation." Robert Latimer springs to mind. Robert Latimer was a white Canadian male of European extraction, so perhaps his "particular situation," that of watching his profoundly disabled daughter Tracy, a victim of Cerebral Palsy, suffer the agonies of the damned for years in spite of every possible medical intervention available (which amounted to, in Latimer's words, "mutilation and torture"), could not quite compete with the sad tale of a Muslim widow from Chechnya with an irritating daughter and a son with Muscular Dystrophy.

Latimer was convicted of second degree murder, but the judge in his second trial opted for leniency on the grounds that he acted from "compassion," ordering a light sentence of one year in jail and one under house arrest. Not good enough for the Saskatchewan Court of Appeal, which insisted on the full weight of the law being applied, namely a life sentence. Latimer pleaded to the Supreme Court of Canada that he had had no choice but to end her suffering. Nope, the Supreme Court said, Latimer had other options and a ten-year sentence was not "excessive."'

"A Voice For Men's" latest

Matt · 16 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Read it here. Excerpt:

'People that were familiar with my writing before the re-launch of this site will probably recall some of my work regarding a newly branded concept of masculinity that I have coined as belonging to the Zeta Male. For those not familiar with it, I give it a fairly complete treatment in the essay The Plague of Modern Masculinity.

In a nutshell, though, zeta masculinity describes a form of manhood that is counter biological in that it is a consciously chosen path of self preservation vs. the genetic mandate to sacrifice where it concerns women. To say it is anti chivalrous is an understatement, and to say it is anti female is a misconception, unless you consider treating women as your equals to be anti-female.

More to the point, though, zeta masculinity is, in its simplest form, a recognition that the modern sociosexual world is both hostile and dangerous to men, and that the traditional male role in that modern world is one of being used and literally nothing else. And in practice, zeta masculinity is actually doing something about it. It calls for men to let their consciousness of the real world guide their perceptions and their actions where it concerns women. It's longhand for not thinking with your dick, or being led around by the currently destructive instinct to protect without due consideration of your actions.'

Killer Japanese mum spun kid in washing machine

Matt · 16 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A JAPANESE woman arrested for allegedly strangling her five-year-old daughter to death has told police she also used to trap the child inside a running washing machine, it has been reported.

Junko Egashira, 34, was arrested last month after she allegedly killed her daughter Mone, Fukuoka police say.

The woman admitted that she had several times covered Mone's mouth with adhesive tape, tied up her hands and legs and made her sit in a water-filled washing machine, sometimes turning the machine to spin, the Asahi daily reports.'

UK: Violence against women 'should end', says Home Secretary

Broadsword · 17 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The home secretary has said the coalition government aims to end violence against women and girls. Theresa May, also minister for women, pledged more funding for an existing pilot scheme that helps immigrants who are victims of domestic violence.

Ms May told a Women's Aid conference she would also look into using fines criminals pay towards victims' services to open more rape crisis centres.

They would also devise "real solutions" for preventing violence, she added.

The annual conference, organised by Women's Aid, included delegates mainly from the charity's membership of more than 370 regional domestic and sexual violence services.

Following the speech Women's Aid chief executive Nicola Harwin said they were looking forward to working with the government.

...

Ms May told the conference: "As both home secretary and minister for women and equalities I believe I have a unique opportunity to bring about real change to the lives and the status of women in this country, and my ambition is nothing less than ending violence against women and girls."

Next week the Home Office is to host a cross-government ministerial violence against women meeting to discuss a new approach to tackling the issue.'

Ed. note: Many people on this side of the pond may not know what the Home Secretary does or the significance of the office in the UK. Read about it here. For US readers, imagine taking selected powers from the Secretaries of State, Defense, Interior, and Health and Human Services and mixing them into one. It's no minor office and the powers thereof are quite significant.

Woman Charged With Molesting Daughter's Friends

anthony · 17 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Chicago Ridge officials are not commenting after a village employee was charged with holding parties at her home where she allegedly sexually assaulted four teenage boys while providing them marijuana and alcohol.

Cathleen M. Miller, 40, of the 5800 block of West 109th Street in Chicago Ridge, is charged with three counts of criminal sexual assault and one count of criminal sexual abuse, according to Cook County State's Attorney's office spokesman Andy Conklin. At the Bridgeview courthouse on Tuesday, Miller was ordered held on $900,000 bond, he said.

Miller, who is employed as a secretary for the Chicago Ridge Village Hall, was arrested Monday following an investigation by police and the state's attorney's office, according to Chicago Ridge police.

Chicago Ridge Mayor Eugene Siegel declined to comment on the case in a statement released Thursday, except to say his "thoughts and prayers are with the victims and their families, as well as with Miller's family."

Police said the victims were four boys between the ages of 14 and 15.'

"End Game- The Beginning"

Matt · 18 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let's face it. Pussy is power. It always has been. Pussy power is so great that women can have an entire world of men working like dogs and handing over their money, yielding seats on life boats, opening their doors, acting like trained seals for their approval, agreeing with whatever bullshit comes out of their mouths, and at the same time have those men nodding and agreeing when women claim that men have all the power and need to do more to make things better for women.

True to their unfortunate nature, men will pass laws, lock each other up and brutalize each other to make sure that all these feminine biddings are done.

If that isn't power, I'll eat my hat. And if you don't believe me, ask Sampson, Dillinger, Bill Clinton, John Edwards, Tiger Woods, the Duke Three, The Hofstra Five or any of about a million men, from average to "powerful," who have had their heads handed to them by even the weakest of women.

Clinton was outwitted by a 19 year old bimbo, with a little help from feminist governance. And if he had been a Republican, whoa Nelly, his ass would have been fried to a crisp.'

UK: MRA comedy writing group in London looking for collaborators

Anonymous · 18 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

If you're a pro-equality MRA (male or female), and able to attend a weekly brainstorming meeting in Central London on a Tuesday evening for two hours, we would like to hear from you - our mission: To manufacture the ultimate MRA stand up comedian.

A lot of comedians appear to be MRAs at heart, but can usually only manage about two jokes on the subject before moving to safer ground. For a standup to deliver solely MRA material for several minutes will be a challenge - but we have a unique plan to get the most out of the group dynamic, to produce material far beyond the sum of our parts. You may be good with concepts and set-ups, or you may be good with language, or you may be good with punch-lines. Whatever you have to offer, we would like to hear from you.

If interested, email with a little bit about yourself - and please have a go at completing in your own way, the following sayings: Behind every great man... ? A woman needs a man like a... ? Boys will be... ? No woman... ? It's a man's... ? Hell hath no fury... ?

Contact: mrastandup-at-hotmail.com

Intact Boys and Men...Born right, no need to cut!

Anonymous · 18 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I am happy to see a site that helps Men to improve their lives. I am a woman, wife and mother of both a boy and a girl. I believe in equal rights for everybody. I also believe that we are born with what nature intended for us to have. When I was pregnant with my son, I was asked if I would have him circumcised. I researched the procedure and found absolutely no proven benefit to cutting a male's foreskin. I did however find many proven potential side effects of cutting, from increased sensitivity to pain, infection, amputation to death! After researching the matter, my husband and I agreed that it would be sick to have our son's perfect anatomy mutilated for no reason. I am writing this to create some more awareness of this very important Male-Rights issue. It's time people started to think about their Sons' health and well being and choose to protect their sons from unnecessary genital mutilation. I am a Proud Mother of a Healthy, Happy, Intact Boy!

Years and marriages later, they still pay

Matt · 19 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Steve Niro got married in 1981 at age 23 and divorced less than five years later. At the time of the divorce, he and his wife were in their late 20s, and both were working. Niro remarried nearly 15 years ago, but he's still paying his alimony.

Two years ago, Niro's youngest son graduated from college, ending child support payments and leaving his former wife with alimony of $65 a week. "The next thing I know, I get summonsed to court for alimony adjustment," he says. A probate court judge increased the alimony to $700 a week even though the couple had divorced nearly a quarter of a century ago — five times longer than they were married.

"I paid child support. I paid college. I was never late. I fulfilled my obligations," says Niro, 52, a Milford native who works for an environmental engineering firm in Portland, Maine. "I just have to hope that legislators in Massachusetts have enough sense to pass a law that puts guidelines on alimony because the courts don't exercise any common sense or logic."

Niro and other men — and women — like him say the state's alimony law is archaic, reflecting an era when women kept house and men provided. Today, with women making up nearly half the workforce, they say alimony should be a temporary boost, not a lifetime subsidy.'

UK: Women on top? You've got to be joking

Broadsword · 19 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"What a depressing week it has been to be female. A psychopathically violent woman-beater and murderer is lionised. A film director who drugs and then sodomises a 13-year-old girl is let off. A famous actor tells his ex-partner she deserves to be "raped by a pack of niggers". And the Catholic Church elevates women's ordination to the same level of offence as child abuse. Thanks, chaps.

...

The real problem is that 21st-century Britain still undervalues women, and particularly older ones. Open any newspaper, look at any billboard, switch on the TV or read a magazine and you will search almost in vain for a picture of a woman over 50. Girls may be doing better than boys at school, but it is ridiculous to claim that men are being marginalised. They still have the best jobs, the most money and the preponderance of power. And when women make any progress, however small, that is exaggerated to suggest that they are somehow taking over from men.

For at least 20 years, we have been fed newspaper articles telling us "The Future is Female". But the future has always failed to materialise. The present is still overwhelmingly male and women's advances are still over-amplified. I'll start to feel sorry for men when they are wildly outnumbered on company boards, wiped off TV in their forties, routinely earning less than women, and not just being murdered by their jealous partners, but being blamed for it."

Suit: Woman offered 14-year-old sex, drugs on flight

Matt · 20 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Chicago area father claims in a lawsuit that Southwest Airlines failed to protect his teenage son from an older female passenger who made sexual advances and offered him illegal drugs during a flight two years ago.

The incident occurred on a July 2008 flight from Chicago's Midway Airport to Orlando, according to the lawsuit filed Monday in Cook County Circuit Court.

The boy, who was 14 at the time, asked flight attendants to switch his seat multiple times but "was emphatically told no," the lawsuit said.'

Fathers in jail not as important for parenting as moms, according to L.A. County

Anonymous · 20 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

"Los Angeles County's launched a new program to make it easier for kids to visit their incarcerated mothers. It's intended to help mothers and children as incarceration rates rise."

and

"Through the program, social workers with the Department of Children and Family Services and the nonprofit Friends Outside facilitate visits between mothers and children. They hope to eventually extend the program to fathers."

New anti-HIV gel: Wither men in the discussion?

Matt · 21 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I caught the PBS News Hour tonight at 10:00 EST here in the US. In the second half of the show, Dr. Anthony Fauci was interviewed from the AIDS 2010 summit in Austria. Two things he said leapt out at me: first he mentioned that along with circumcision of the male (fast forward to time mark 6:10 in the video), HIV spread risk to women could be substantially cut along with consistent use of the gel. Is there definitive evidence to show that circumcision in men cuts HIV transmission risk? I have yet to see it. And even if it did, if the sexes were reversed, would people be advocating for the same treatment of women? All our sex organs are essentially made from the same type of skin and in both cases, there are lots of places germs and viruses can wait for their turn to go elsewhere. In this case, by the same logic, one must argue for female circumcision if one argues for male. No one dares do that.

The second thing that leapt out at me was that there was absolutely no discussion of how men are at risk of catching HIV from women or other men. Men are being treated as if they are Typhoid Marys, themselves not infected by HIV, but immune to it, merely the vector of transmission. This is a not-so-subtle disregard of men's humanity. I also noticed, along with this gynocentric attitude toward approaching the problem of AIDS, that he ignores the idea entirely (as I am sure others are) that men would be willing to use the gel themselves in the same way that lubricants are used for sexual intercourse.

The entire tone of the interview excluded men utterly from consideration in so many ways it is hard to keep up. But at least in these two major ways, there are demonstrable objections to be made.

Dr. Fauchi can be contacted at Anthony.Fauci-at-nih.hhs.gov. As always, be concise but hit all the points, and of course, be polite. :)

SAVE's Special Report in Journal of Aggression, Conflict, and Peace Research

Matt · 21 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

SAVE's Special Report that documents the massive civil rights abuses occurring under VAWA has just come out in the July issue of the Journal of Aggression, Conflict, and Peace Research.

Be sure to share this article with your lawmakers, lawyers, and others who care about civil rights.

Israel: Man jailed for rape because he "deceived" woman into thinking he was Jewish

Anonymous · 21 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Palestinian man has been convicted of rape ‘by deception’ after having consensual sex with a woman who had believed him to be a fellow Jew.

Sabbar Kashur, 30, who had introduced himself as Daniel, was only charged with the offence when she later realised he was an Arab.

A court in Jerusalem made international legal history by jailing the delivery driver for 18 months despite acknowledging it had not been ‘a ‘a classical rape by force’.

Texas mothers who killed their children

Matt · 21 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S. who comments: "And please note in 5 of the 6 cases they were deemed insane. How many Fathers would have been so diagnosed had they been the murderers-rare though an incident such as that would be?" Article here. Excerpt:

'Darlie Lynn Routier, 40, of Rowlett is on death row for the June 1996 stabbing death of her 5-year-old son, Damon. She also was charged with killing his older brother, Devon, who was 6, but was not tried in that case. She has long contended that an unidentified intruder attacked them all, killing her boys and stabbing her, as well. Prosecutors say Routier killed her kids because they interfered with the lifestyle she wanted to live.

Andrea Yates, 46, of Houston drowned her five children in June 2001, believing she was protecting them from Satan. A jury found her not guilty by reason of insanity and she was ordered into a state mental hospital.'

Barbara Kay: Pygmies in the world of sexology

Matt · 21 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This just in! A conservative man in Toronto has been convicted of rape after consensual sex with a liberal woman, who assumed he too was liberal because he was wearing Birkenstocks and carrying a backpack with a Greenpeace logo on it.

Even though the sex was fine, when she found out he was a card-carrying member of the Conservative Party and was using his nephew's backpack as a ploy to arouse her lust (the sandals really were just for comfort), she accused him of rape. The courts found that indeed the man had committed "rape by deception."

Okay, that isn't true. But this is: a 30-year old delivery man, Sabbar Kashur, was sent to jail for 18 months for having hooked up under the Jewish name of "Daniel" with a Jerusalem woman in 2008. They met on the street, repaired to a nearby office building, and went at it. The woman had no complaints about the sex until it was revealed the guy wasn't Jewish. Then she screamed rape.

As if there weren't enough to keep men in a state of panic, this international legal first not only makes a mockery of the well-established principle that consent, once given, cannot be retroactively withdrawn under the rubric of buyer's remorse, but has the effect of declaring racism a virtue, and makes a racist the victim in a clearly victimless act.'

Australia: Dads In Distress marks ten years

Matt · 21 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The DID web site is here. A special on the organization was aired July 19, 2010 on Dads On the Air. The show is available for downloading as an .mp3 file.

Congratulations to DID for its 10-year anniversary, and may there come a day when they are no longer needed!

Rep. Joe Baca signs on as cosponsor of Men and Families Health Care Act of 2009

Matt · 22 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

A sixth representative has signed on as a co-sponsor of HR 2115, The Men and Families Health Care Act of 2009. Undoubtedly this bill will not be passed in 2010 given the few number of cosponsors it has, so it is very important that anyone who has signed on be thanked and supported in their courageous stand to cosponsor it. Bill summary is found here.

Rep. Baca's govtrack.us entry is here and he can be contacted here.

Why So Much Harsher toward Men?

Matt · 22 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent 2008 Gallup poll in Great Britain finds that 33% of women "often or very often" feel resentful of men, compared to 14% of men who often feel resentful of women. So fully a third of women carry with them an ongoing resentment toward their opposites, as compared to about a sixth of men. By my own careful calculations, that is a truckload of anger.

Most men are so involved with the accusations and with the anger itself, the harm it does, and the unfairness of it all, that we seem to miss a fundamental question. Just where does such a truckload of anger come from? Is it simply an unfortunate and unintended outcome of our modern culture? Are women treated worse than men? Or is it somehow programmed into human nature? I suggest that women are naturally more inclined to condemn their opposites, and perhaps more surprisingly, that men themselves are harsher toward men than toward women.
...
Chivalrous standards are harsher toward men than toward women. It is not merely a matter of cultural happenstance, which could go the other way just as easily. Women are born to expect something for their favors, and men are born to support those who can carry their genes into the next generation. Innate inclinations contribute to our chivalrous standards, and harsher treatment towards men serves to enforce those standards.

Innate leanings do not mean that something cannot be changed, only that passions run high and must be managed. Advocates for more equal treatment for men wrestle against a chivalrous moral imperative that most of the population hardly knows exists. We should wish them well.'

Australia: Former primary teacher molested boys in tent

Matt · 22 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Victorian County Court has heard a former primary school teacher molested two Grade 3 students in a backgarden tent while her family was at home.

After a three week trial, a jury found 59-year-old Josephine Greensill from Altona Meadows guilty of nine counts of indecent assault.

Yesterday, the Crown urged a judge to jail her for at least five years for the offences committed in the late 1970s.

She was a 29-year-old teacher at a school in Melbourne's outer east when she invited the 8-year-old boys to her home.

While her then husband and three children were inside the house, she had sex with the boys in a tent outside.'

"Urkel" Actor Cleared of Battery Charges

Stinger503 · 23 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(NewsCore) - The actor who played geek Steve Urkel on TV sitcom “Family Matters” has been cleared of charges related to allegations he punched his baby’s mother in the breast in front of the child in California, TMZ reported Thursday.

Jaleel White, 33, was accused of punching Bridget Hardy in one of her breast implants while they were driving with their daughter in the car on Pacific Coast Highway three weeks ago, sources told the entertainment website.
...
However the LAPD said there was not enough evidence to pursue the case and White was cleared of charges.

A representative for White denied the allegations saying, "There was absolutely no battery ... no abuse ... and the incident never happened."

"This is just a ploy in an ongoing custody battle over their young daughter to tarnish his name,” he said.
...
White is most famous for his role as a child actor playing Steve Urkel on “Family Matters” -- an American sitcom about a middle-class African-American family living in Chicago, which was canceled in 1998 after nine years.'

Abusegate lobbying event report

Matt · 23 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Yesterday 12 people gathered on Capitol Hill (in advance of the Family Preservation Festival) to meet with staffers to put the kabosh on President Obama request to INCREASE federal funding for DV programs in 2011 by an additional $130 MILLION.

By the end of the day, we held 20 face-to-face meetings in the House, and distributed this flyer to all 435 Representatives and 100 Senators.

So please spread the word – call your elected officials at 1-202-224-3121 to say NO to extra funding for DV programs until the false allegations stop!

Texas mom tells 911 she used wire to kill children

Matt · 23 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DALLAS (AP) - A suburban Dallas woman accused of killing her two young children told a 911 operator that she first tried to poison them because they were autistic and she wanted "normal kids," then choked them with a wire until they stopped moving, according to the recorded call.

Irving police on Wednesday released recordings of the 911 call after Saiqa Akhter was charged with capital murder in the death of her 5-year-old son, Zain Akhter. Police said the children were attacked at the family's apartment Monday night.

Another capital murder charge is pending in the slaying of her 2-year-old daughter, Faryaal Akhter, who died Tuesday night, police spokesman David Tull said.'

Domestic Violence: Going beyond physical abuse into every aspect of life

Matt · 24 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To outsiders, an abusive relationship could seem like a black and white situation.

But, experts on domestic violence say those relationships are complicated, all shades of gray.

Someone may see a couple where one of the partners — statistically more often than not the man — is abusive and the other a victim as rocky, tumultuous, volatile or dysfunctional.

But, that's not how experts define it. It goes well beyond the surface, well beyond the visible bruises and apparently petty arguments, and is about far more than what outsiders may think.

"The way we talk about domestic violence behaviorally is that we see it as a pattern of coercion and assaultive behaviors that one person uses to gain power and control over their intimate partner," said Merril Cousin, executive director of the King County Coalition Against Domestic Violence.'

Housewives, Prostitutes and Beggars

Matt · 24 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Undoubtedly, you'll get a good laugh from this. Excerpt:

'I recently participated in a TV discussion on why prostitution is on the rise in the country. I shared the panel with a closet feminist and a radical feminist, both of whom were of the opinion that prostitution was better than marriage since the house is unsafe for a woman, and she would at least get paid for her services if she were a prostitute.

I returned home thinking about their wise utterances and went to bed discussing the same with my husband.

I said, “For decades, feminists have claimed that one out of three women is unsafe in her own house. They have told us horrendous tales about how it was daily grind for men in the country to abuse, assault, set afire and murder their wives. They lobbied for laws which would facilitate a woman breaking her shackles and barging out of the “tyrannical household” or throwing her alleged oppressors out, whichever is convenient. They ensured that every woman who had a problem “clearly understood” that all her problems were because of men, marriage and the household.”
...
All of a sudden my husband had an epiphany and said, “A WHOREHOUSE!”

“YES,” I agreed, “This is brilliant! It is neither the house nor the street. It is something in between – the utopia that my feminist friends on TV spoke so highly of. They have to be right. That’s where they think our women would be safest, well paid and properly fed, and that’s why prostitution, with the more fashionable label of ‘commercial sex’, is on the rise.”
...
While I was still marvelling at this astounding progress, I saw a news item which said that the recent Government Census clubbed housewives, prostitutes and beggars into a group. What a timely gesture by the Government!
...
Feminists have not only taught women to shun all the age-old encumbrances imposed by marriage and family but also to shed all inhibitions associated with parasitic living. Accordingly, there is no trace of shame in these modern liberated women, but it is with a sense of pride and entitlement that they artfully exact money, thus claiming their rightful inclusion by the Government in the club.

The feminists reduced housewives into prostitutes and beggars long ago. The Government has just made it official by grouping them in the Census.

Why, then, is the Supreme Court cross about it? Beats me!'

Germany: Justice Minister seeks to enact presumed joint custody for unmarried fathers

Matt · 25 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Fathers who are not married to the mothers of their children could soon automatically have equal rights over their children, with Justice Minister Sabine Leutheusser-Schnarrenberger preparing to change the law in their favour.

The idea is to introduce a presumption of joint custody over children, rather than the current presumption of a mother's right to sole custody, according to a report in the Passauer Neue Presse newspaper.
...
"Children should have the right that their fathers taken on responsibility and make joint-decisions over important things in their lives," Stephan Thomae, family rights expert from Leutheusser-Schnarrenberger's Free Democratic Party.

He said unmarried parents would share custody unless the mother – or presumably, the father - convinces a court to grant her sole custody over the child.'

UK: Huge leap in bankruptcy among women

Broadsword · 25 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of British women going bankrupt has risen almost fivefold in the past 10 years, with new figures revealing a 28 per cent increase in the past year alone. In some cases, according to insolvency experts, the surge is down to the "irresponsible spending" of women trying to emulate glamorous celebrities, while others are being driven to financial ruin by unemployment, pay inequality and childcare costs.

New figures from the Insolvency Service show that women now account for 40 per cent of all bankruptcies, rising from 6,042 in 2000 to 29,680 in 2009.

Younger women are finding it particularly difficult to manage their money, with those between the ages of 25 and 44 making up almost two-thirds of female bankruptcies. In 2009 17,595 declared themselves bankrupt, up from 13,575 in 2008.

...

"These figures show that more and more young women have levels of debt incurred through trying to maintain lifestyles that are unsustainable," says Graham Horne, deputy chief executive of the Insolvency Service. "It is critical that all young people are aware of the impact that irresponsible spending can have. Filing for bankruptcy or obtaining a debt relief order should be viewed as a last resort."

Women's rights organisations have countered that, far from being profligate or financially illiterate, they simply "earn less, own less and have lower earning potential" than men. Experts have pointed to the effects on finance of divorce – after which women are overwhelmingly left poorer than men – single motherhood and career breaks to look after children.

...

"It was ridiculously skewed before; when I started 20 years ago, I would hardly ever see women going bankrupt," Ms Brittain says. "The rise is partly because there are more women starting their own businesses, which should be encouraged."'

UK: Work experience at the Foreign Office? Not if you're a middle class white male

Broadsword · 25 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"William Hague was last night plunged into a row over new Foreign Office rules which ban white males from gaining work experience at his department.

The Foreign Secretary was challenged to explain why his official work placement schemes specifically ban white, middle-class males from applying for the £367-a-week positions.

Under the tightly-drawn rules, only women, people from ethnic minorities and the disabled are entitled to apply for a chance to work at one of the great offices of state.

The placements give students a head start in the battle to win coveted jobs in the diplomatic service and possibly rise through the ranks to become an ambassador.Only one category of non-minority male applicants stand a chance – those whose families are poor enough to entitle them to qualify for a full student maintenance grant.

The bizarre 'middle-class male' ban came to light after Tory MP Dominic Raab was contacted by an irate - constituent who tried to obtain work experience at the department.

Esher MP Mr Raab, an international lawyer who worked at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) for six years, said last night: 'I am raising this issue on behalf of a disappointed constituent barred from even applying for Foreign Office work experience because he did not fit the social quota criteria."
...
There was 'absolutely no discrimination' in the department's normal job recruitment process, she insisted.

But in a later statement, the FCO said the work experience schemes would now 'be placed under review'.'

UK: Rape charge anonymity pledge dropped

Broadsword · 26 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Plans to change the law to grant anonymity to men charged with rape in England and Wales have apparently been dropped by the Ministry of Justice.

The ministry said it had not ruled out anonymity between arrest and charge.

But Justice Minister Crispin Blunt has said he would rather put pressure on the media not to name suspects than bring in a new law.

Labour welcomed the apparent U-turn but said the government's handling of the issue had been "lamentable".

The plan to grant anonymity to rape suspects was a surprise inclusion in the government's coalition agreement in May.

It had not been in the Conservative or Liberal Democrat election manifestos, although it had been Lib Dem policy since 2006.

The coalition agreement pledged to "extend anonymity in rape cases to defendants", with ministers stressing the need to "protect anyone who may be wrongly accused from harmful stigma".'

UK: Pfizer Life launches Man M.O.T

Broadsword · 26 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Excerpt from their site:

"The Man MOT (Monday Opportunity to Talk) online surgery is here every Monday evening from 6pm-11pm to offer men a free and secure service where they can talk to a GP anonymously, and in confidence.

The fully qualified GPs can discuss specific aspects of your health but if you'd just like to find out more about general health matters, feel free to look around the site as lots of the information can be downloaded or printed.

The surgery will also be running a series of specialist sexual health and relationship clinics hosted by sexual health expert Tracey Cox and Relate counsellors. This follows recent research highlighting that two in five men (42%) would feel most confident turning to the internet for advice if they experienced any sexual performance problems.

Our GP's can talk to you about any health problem, suggest the best course of action to take, and direct you to appropriate health services if necessary. However, as they do not have access to your medical records and are not able to perform a clinical examination, they cannot give individualised medical advice or offer a specific medical diagnosis.

Canada: Mad Mel - “Nothing wrong with him that a Louisville Slugger couldn't fix”

Anonymous · 26 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nothing wrong with him that a Louisville Slugger couldn't fix

...

Wait. Is it the Year of the Pig? It feels that way, given Mel Gibson’s raging return to the public eye these last few months. His has been a comeback that will finally threaten to decertify the axiom that there is no such thing as bad publicity.

With his fifth obscene telephone rant to his comely partner, Oksana Grigorieva, the talk of the town, he appears to be starring in one of those films whose style he has always gravitated to – end-of-the-world tales of ragged heroism, fatal flaw firmly in place.

...

Gibson snarled that Grigorieva needed a bat to her head, as she held her baby, and, horribly, listened. I like real pigs. As for the Gibson kind, there’s nothing that a Louisville Slugger couldn’t improve in his gigantic, cruelty-riven head.'

From a previous article at The Globe and Mail:

'If a man is unfaithful…"I desperately hope that one of these days some humiliated spouse will whack the guy with a frying pan. I'd give good money to see that." -- Margaret Wente

F&F: Victory—Crucial Bill from Opponents of Recognizing Parental Alienation Defeated

Matt · 27 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families and its legislative allies have succeeded in killing one of the worst family law bills in modern history–California's AB 612. The bill, put forward by the well-funded advocacy group Center for Judicial Excellence (and supported by the California National Organization for Women), would have banned Parental Alienation from being mentioned in any way, shape, or form in a California family court. Because of California's tremendous influence in shaping the laws of other states, this loss would have led to a mushrooming of similarly damaging legislation in other states.

Fathers and Families' legislative representative Michael Robinson helped cobble together a coalition of family law professional organizations and experts to oppose the bill. We were able to bottle the bill up in the Senate Judiciary Committee last year and keep it there until last week, when it died. To learn more about the bill, see our co-authored column Preventing courts from considering parental alienation will harm kids (Capitol Weekly, 2/25/10).'

Canada: Mother sues son she abandoned at age 15 for parental support

Matt · 27 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When Ken Anderson was just 15, his mother, Shirley, made it clear: She didn't want him anymore.

Ken's father, a long-haul trucker, had been transferred from Osoyoos, B.C., to the province's Kootenay region. Although their marriage was rocky, Shirley followed, taking second-youngest son Darryl with her.

Ken was left behind. He had plenty of time to think about it as he wiped bug splatter off car windshields and pumped gas at the local station to make a buck. He says he can't even remember how many couches he slept on, or how he kept himself going. He just knows he never got to go to a prom, finish high school or even think about college.

The way he sees it, he never really had a mother.

On Aug. 3 and 4, Ken, now 46, will face off in B.C. Supreme Court against the woman who gave birth to him.

Shirley Anderson, 71, is suing Ken and four of his five siblings for parental support. The case has been dragging on for years, but the August hearing should complete it.'

Man who committed mercy killing years ago denied expanded parole because he's a man

Anonymous · 27 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. As unbelievable as it might seem, a man who was convicted in the "mercy killing" of his severely disabled child has been denied increased parole for no reason other than being male, despite the fact that he poses no danger to the community. Whatever your feelings on euthanasia, the institutionalized sexism he's facing in the Canadian penal system is an affront to human dignity.

From the article:

Although the parole board indicated Latimer is "successfully reintegrating into the community," it says his case does not meet the test of "exceptional circumstances" for expanded leave.

The board says it may consider expanded leave to "be responsive to the needs of female, aboriginal, ethnic minority or special needs offenders."

Apparently men need not apply for equal treatment under Canadian law. It isn't enough of an injustice for men to serve radically longer sentences for the same crimes; they're also being denied parole rights on the basis of their gender.

If Mr. Latimer were Mrs. Latimer, he'd be on full parole right now.

All Parties in the Swedish Riksdag (Parliament) have answered 10 questions about Fatherhood

Anonymous · 27 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

International Press Release

For reference, first published in English here.

All answers from the seven parties in the Swedish Riksdag will be revealed and published on August 4th 2010 on http://www.pappamanualen.se/valspecial/

(Site in Swedish, please use Google Translate)

Submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen, The Fathers Rights Group in Sweden
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Baskerville: Amnesty International’s commitment to freedom is questionable

MR · 27 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Dr. Stepehn Baskerville writes on LewRockwell.com: Human Rights or Wrongs?
Amnesty International’s commitment to freedom is questionable

"In recent years Amnesty has become a mouthpiece for the radical feminist agenda, to the point of pushing programs that violate human rights. Amnesty’s campaign against "domestic violence," for example, is a prescription for criminalizing the innocent on a huge scale."

Canada - Man punched for finishing sandwich the_captain · 27 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 27-year-old Chatham woman is charged after allegedly punching her boyfriend in the face after he ate her sandwich.

Chatham-Kent police said officers responded to a domestic dispute on Queen Street Monday evening.

A man made his girlfriend a sandwich and she ate half. The man asked if he could finish the sandwich and she agreed, police said.

A short time later, the woman got mad that the sandwich was missing and allegedly punched the man in the face.

Later that night, police said the two got into an unrelated argument and she allegedly punched him in the chest.

She faces two charges of assault.

She was held for a bail hearing.'

UK: Sister of dead solider sold his war medals on eBay to fund luxury cruise

Broadsword · 27 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This is why men die for their country... article here. Excerpt:

'The sister of a war hero who died in Afghanistan sold his uniform and medals to an eBay trader to fund a luxury cruise for herself.

Corporal Rob Deering left his elder sister everything in his will, including four war medals, his uniform and an engraved memorial shell casing from his funeral.

But Elaine Deering, a single mother of one, sold it all for £1,100 and put the money towards a trip round the Mediterranean.

The 37-year-old, who is unemployed, said: ‘I’m on income support and I’m very hard up, so I did what I thought was best.’

Now the man who bought the mementos – which include medals from Corporal Deering’s service in Kosovo, Iraq and Afghanistan, as well as an International Security Assistance Force medal – has returned them to the hero’s fiancee Gemma Polino.

Corporal Deering, a Royal Marine with the Commando Logistic Regiment, died in December 2008 as he raced to help injured comrades whose armoured Viking personnel carrier had been blown up by insurgents.

The 33-year-old was killed in a second explosion as he approached the vehicle in Afghanistan’s notorious Helmand province. He left everything to his sister, who also claims she was forced to sell the mementos to help look after her 14-month-old son.'

UK: Spotlight to be on male DV victims in new campaign

Matt · 27 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MEN who fall victim to abusive women and children are to be targeted by a new domestic violence campaign.

Victim Support say that they are seeing more and more men asking for help and that it is time to encourage other husbands and boyfriends to come forward.They are preparing to launch the campaign in the next few weeks as part of a drive to raise awareness about the support available.'

--
Ed. note: This entry was updated on 7/30/10. The "Jersey" in the story the Isle of Jersey, not the state of New Jersey in the US. Sorry for any confusion.

Ex-Teacher Nude Photo Plea: No Jail for Melinda Dennehy

anthony · 27 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DERRY, N.H. (CBS/AP) Former high school teacher Melinda Dennehy won't be going to jail after pleading guilty Monday to a charge she e-mailed nude photographs of herself to a 15-year-old student at Londonderry High School.

"I am truly sorry for my actions and poor judgment," Melinda Dennehy said in court after the judge agreed to her negotiated plea to a misdemeanor charge of indecent exposure. She originally faced a felony count.
...
Dennehy, 41, of Hampstead, could have faced up to seven years in prison if she had gone to trial on the felony. As part of her plea agreement, Dennehy's one-year jail sentence was suspended for two years on condition she remain on good behavior and have no contact with the teen or his family, or go to the school. She resigned three weeks after she was charged in March.'

Are squad cars in fact white horses?

Matt · 29 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With all respect to the dangerous and often thankless work done by police everywhere, and with great appreciation for your public call to address this problem, isn't there something else that these false reports cause?

Like the lives of men devastated, their reputations and well being destroyed? Like innocent men behind bars?

I found it troubling that it appears you did not mention this, especially given the reality that so many men have ended up in prison, falsely convicted and paying an egregious price for lies that have been all too often carried to the courts by police that are either poorly trained, overly chivalrous or under skilled at what they are paid to do. I say that because something else that sheds light on these tragedies was also mentioned by Channel Two, but for some reason was not quoted from you or another direct source. The story said, "Cops said they don't want to arrest the women, but feel they must."

...

Are the officers on your force confusing their squad cars with white horses, or has it been a matter of routine policy in the past to give women who make false allegations a pass on their crime?'

Woman charged in France over babies' bodies

anthony · 29 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Paris, France (CNN) -- A woman has been charged over the discovery of the bodies of eight newborn babies at two locations in northern France, the French Interior Ministry said Thursday.

Gendarmes found the remains in the village of Villers-au-Tertre, south of Lille, some in a home and others in the garden of another home.

The woman has admitted giving birth to and killing the babies and has been charged with voluntary manslaughter, prosecutor Eric Vaillant said. But her husband has not been charged after telling investigators he knew nothing of the pregnancies and deaths, he said.

The couple are in their mid-forties. The woman is a nursing assistant while her husband is a member of the local council, a neighbor told AFP.'

Obama Missing Historic Boy Scout Jamboree for Fundraisers, 'View' Taping

anthony · 29 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'President Obama will make history as the first sitting president on a daytime talk show when he visits with the ladies of "The View." But he'll be missing out on another historic occasion -- the Boy Scouts' Jamboree marking the group's 100th anniversary, right in the president's backyard.

The Jamboree kicked off this week at Fort A.P. Hill in Virginia, where organizers had invited the president to speak to the 45,000 scouts in attendance. All three of Obama's predecessors have made it to one Jamboree while in office.
...
But while the Jamboree lasts until next Tuesday, the president is sending his regards via a videotaped message.
...
The Jamboree is held once every four years. This year's festivities mark the organization's 100-year anniversary -- scouts are scheduled to visit Washington, D.C., and other regional attractions in connection with the celebration.
...

Though Obama typically reserves his exclusive interviews for network and cable news shows, he appeared on "The View" as a candidate. "The View" is hosting the president as part of its "Red, White & View" series highlighting political guests. Creator and co-host Barbara Walters said Obama's appearance, along with the past appearance of First Lady Michelle Obama, shows "The View" can play the role of news source.'

Starting August 1st - Help the Domestic Abuse Helpline Create the First US National Public Awareness Campaign on Male Victims

Anonymous · 29 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

First National Public Awareness Campaign on Male Victims in the USA

Studies have shown that men who are in relationships with abusive partners do not necessarily see themselves as victims of domestic violence. Domestic violence has been so narrowly define in our society as violence against women by men that men who suffer physical, emotional, psychological, financial, and/or sexual abuse at the hands of their intimate partners don't recognize the signs. They will usually write it off as their partner having a bad day or feel that they must have done something to cause the abuse.

Further, agencies that offer supportive services and shelter to victims of domestic violence do little to encourage abused men to come forward and seek help. Few (10% or less of the over 2,000 domestic violence shelter agencies in the country) agencies offer outreach and services (shelter, legal, counseling, support groups, transitional housing) to male victims.

We are hoping to change that with the first national public awareness campaign in the USA on male victims of domestic violence. WE NEED YOUR HELP! We have entered the Pepsi Refresh Project. We are seeking a $250,000 award from Pepsi for our project idea. The public decides who wins the funding through voting for their favorite project ideas. With that funding we will send outreach materials about male victims (brochures, posters, booklets and placards)to 7,500 agencies such as; police departments, ER's, and mental health counseling centers, throughout the country who work with victims of domestic violence.

VOTING BEGINS AUGUST 1st Remember, the public determines, through voting on their favorite project ideas at the Pepsi site, who wins. Please go to http://www.refresheverything.com/ sign up (takes just two minutes or less), click on the Health section and under the 250K look for "Give Under served Victims of Domestic Abuse a Lifeline." Vote for us daily throughout the month of August. Ask your friends and family members to do the same. VOTE AUGUST 1st - August 31st Thanks for your support!

Jan Elizabeth Brown
Founder and Director, Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women
http://www.dahmw.org/

Women more optimistic than men about economic outlook

anthony · 29 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Text excerpt:

'There is a widening divide between men and women when it comes to their outlook for the economy and their own financial situations in the next twelve months, according to a new nationwide survey issued today by Citigroup and conducted by Hart Research Associates.

While optimism for the future was found to have declined overall, women's confidence held almost steady while men have turned increasingly sour since March, the study found.

“Many women are CFOs of their households, controlling the purse strings on purchases, so their positive near-term outlook on the economy may be a positive indicator for recovery,” said Lisa Caputo, Chairman and CEO of Citi's Women & Co., a division of Citi dedicated to helping women achieve their financial goals. “However, it’s clear they have tempered expectations that recovery and stability for their households may remain in the far distant future.”'

"Pregnancy Denial" cited as possible cause for French women who kill their babies

anthony · 30 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The question is as horrifying as it is important to ask: Why are a rising number of French women killing their newborn babies? Finding the answer has become a matter of urgency following the discovery on Wednesday of eight infants allegedly smothered to death and buried by their mother in northern France. And with that case marking at least the fifth instance of multiple infanticide reported in France since 2003, it has become vital for the nation to confront the phenomenon that appears to be behind it all: a mental condition known as pregnancy denial.
...
Experts explained those cases as resulting from pregnancy denial, an often misunderstood and minimized condition. According to Michel Delcroix, a former gynecologist who served as a court expert in the Courjault trial and others involving pregnancy issues, pregnancy denial is a quasi-schizophrenic condition in which women either don't realize or cannot accept that they are with child — not even enough to have an abortion. Whether these women are afflicted with the condition before they deliver or as they're suddenly giving birth, Delcroix explains, the psychological denial is so strong that they refuse to believe they're pregnant even when the reality confronts them.

"These women are so convinced pregnancy is impossible that once the child they never wanted arrives, they don't accept it as real and get rid of it to restore order to what they believe is nonpregnant reality," Delcroix says. "However terrible its consequences, pregnancy denial acts in infanticide cases much as a psychotic state that drives someone to kill another person does. Yet we still try women for what they do during pregnancy denial when we don't try psychotic killers deemed not responsible for their actions." Delcroix and others who are fighting for pregnancy denial to be medically and legally recognized as an illness argue that improving ways to identify and treat these women makes more sense than simply punishing the crimes they commit as a result of it.'

Obama calls on Senate to pass the Paycheck Fairness Act

anthony · 30 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'On July 20, 2010, President Obama called on the Senate to pass the Paycheck Fairness Act (H.R. 12, S. 182). You may read the full text of the bill here: http://www.govtrack.us/congress/bill.xpd?bill=h110-1338. In his renewed push for passage of this legislation -- which followed the Senate's refusal in 2009 to accept similar provisions in the House version of the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act -- President Obama characterized the Paycheck Fairness Act as “a common sense bill that will help ensure that men and women who do equal work receive equal pay.” Passage of the PFA in its present form would result in sweeping changes to the Equal Pay Act (“EPA”).'

Ed. note: A paid subscription is required for Lexology access, so we'll have to take the submitter's word for it.

Domestic Violence Center Shut Down for Being a Total Fraud

Matt · 30 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Fulton-based resource center for battered women has been ordered by the state to shut down all operations. This shouldn't be terribly difficult since the Battered Mother's Resource Fund (BMRF) never actually did anything anyway.

Missouri Attorney General Chris Koster said in a news release that the BMRF, which is owned by Phillip Baney, solicited donations to help victims of domestic violence, but never actually implemented any of the programs it advertised, including community outreach seminars, a national database of shelters and other organizations that provided assistance to battered women and children, a Mother's Assistance Fund and a ranch for kids who had been harmed by domestic violence.

"Most heart wrenching is that BMRF may have prevented domestic violence victims from reaching out for legitimate assistance by claiming that most domestic violence shelters separate mothers from their children," Koster said in the press release. "This is not true and it is a dangerous statement that could keep a domestic violence victim from seeking assistance for fear of losing her children. Every domestic violence shelter in Missouri accepts children."'

California Courts Uphold Order Making Homeless Man Pay Child Support and Lose Inheritance, Reports NCFM

Matt · 31 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'LOS ANGELES/EWORLDWIRE/July 30, 2010 --- National Coalition For Men (NCFM) attorney Marc E. Angelucci reports that on July 28, 2010, the California Supreme Court declined to review a Court of Appeal decision that forced Hari Wilburn, a homeless man, to pay tens of thousands of dollars in child support for a child even though DNA excludes him as the dad and he never acted as the dad.

On August 17, the probate court in San Diego will hear the mother's request to intercept Wilburn's inheritance from his deceased mother in order to pay the child support order.

Wilburn was represented at the appellate level by Angelucci. NCFM is a nonprofit organization that addresses how sex discrimination affects men and boys and that helped change California law in 2005 to help protect men from false paternity claims.

In 1991, Cathy Tate named Wilburn as the father of her five-year-old child Alexis in a restraining order proceeding. Wilburn, who was homeless, was never personally served, and there is no record of any service except by mail to Wilburn's mother's address, which is not legally proper. Nonetheless, the court found Wilburn was served, issued a restraining order and ordered Wilburn to pay child support. Wilburn was not present.'

Woman accused of burning 9 with chemical, including an infant

Matt · 31 July 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Another "Staff"-reported story so brief the whole thing can be placed here without a break. Now if the accused were male, well...

'A Rochester woman is accused of throwing a caustic chemical on a group of nine people, including an infant, on the porch of a home on Sawyer Street on Thursday.

Rose Colquhoun, 40, is charged with nine counts of second-degree assault. Rochester police said Colquhoun's daughter had an ongoing dispute with one of the victims at the Sawyer Street home.

The victims were treated for burns at Strong Memorial Hospital and released.'

UK: Sisters jailed for manslaughter

Broadsword · 1 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Two 'despicable' sisters were jailed for manslaughter after one of them stabbed her boyfriend and the other let him bleed to death. Samantha Brown, 20, knifed Dean Darvill, 23, in the groin after he accused her of having a lesbian affair.

She fled the scene barefoot after stabbing the maintenance worker, leaving him bleeding to death on the floor.
...
The couple went to Toni's house with another friend to spend the evening drinking, the court heard. Samantha went upstairs with the friend for several hours, and at 1am Mr Darvill discovered them in 'a compromising position', police sources said.

A furious row erupted during which he accused them of having an affair, and Samantha picked up a carving knife from the kitchen. She plunged it into her boyfriend's upper thigh, severing several arteries, before running away. As Mr Darvill stumbled and fell to the floor, he pleaded 'get me an ambulance'.

But mother-of-two Toni refused, and instead made an attempt to bandage him up.
...
'Samantha decided to settle a drunken argument by using violence against the person she was supposed to love.

'Toni's failure to get help for Dean as he lay dying on her doorstep is incomprehensible.'"

The Masculinity Conspiracy: Chapter 3 now online

Anonymous · 1 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The Masculinity Conspiracy is a free online book about masculinity. It argues that nearly every assumption about masculinity in contemporary society is wrong. The result is nothing short of exposing a worldwide conspiracy that has been preventing humanity from reaching its fullest potential. Chapter 3 (Sexuality) of The Masculinity Conspiracy is now online.

"Chapter 3 (Sexuality) of The Masculinity Conspiracy is now online.

This chapter examines how the theme of sexuality is mobilized in the conspiracy via two books: Earth Honoring: The New Male Sexuality by Robert Lawlor and The Way of the Superior Man: A Spiritual Guide to Mastering the Challenges of Women, Work and Sexual Desire by David Deida.

It shows how these books promote a masculine sexuality of fixed characteristics.

It then offers some different ways of thinking about masculine sexuality in order to counter the conspiracy."

Sarah Palin shows her misandry

MR · 1 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

When Palin was running for V.P., I was very upset with Palin's embrace of Hillary's misandrist, gender feminist talking points about the gender wage gap. Now we see this overtly misandrist comment from Palin, Palin: Obama lacks 'the cojones' to tackle immigration. Excerpt:

'Former Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin said Sunday that Arizona Gov. Jan Brewer (R) has "the cojones" that President Obama "does not have" to take on illegal immigration. Appearing on "Fox News Sunday," Palin blasted Obama for suing Arizona to block the state's controversial new law without addressing "sanctuary cities" -- in which local law enforcement are prohibited from asking people about their immigration status.'

Forget the immigration issue, the bigger issue is Palin's misandry against American men, IMO. Are men only valued for their "cajones" in Palin's eyes? Would a man get away with this kind of sexist language against a woman, or would he be driven out of the mass media sphere?

Mother accused of starving 3 kids gets life term

Matt · 1 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DALLAS (AP) — A mother whose three children were found starving after being shut away in a hotel bathroom for as long as nine months was sentenced to life in prison Friday after changing her plea to guilty in the middle of her trial.

Abneris Santiago, 31, had faced between five years and life in prison on a felony charge of injury to a child.

Police rescued Santiago's 11-year-old daughter and 10- and 5-year-old sons from a bathroom at an extended-stay hotel along one of Dallas' busiest freeways in July 2009. The children, whose skeletons were visible beneath their flaky, stretched skin, were near death from chronic starvation. Authorities say the girl was repeatedly sexually assaulted by her mother's boyfriend.

Alfred Santiago was convicted Tuesday of injury to a child and continuous sexual abuse. He was sentenced to two 99-year sentences, to be served concurrently.'

On Jury Nullification and Rape

Matt · 1 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With the possible exception of the sexual molestation of a child, rape is a crime that evokes the most visceral of responses from the average person. And for good reason. Sex that is physically forced or obtained by threat of harm sadistically reduces victims to their most helpless state, and leaves lingering damage that may well last the remainder of a persons life.

It is fitting then, that we seek to justly punish those guilty of the crime, but also that we proceed with caution and diligence, ever observing the rule of law in the process. That rule of law is integral to maintaining order; to preventing justice from being circumvented by political motives or mob rule; to ensure, as should be ensured in a just society, that the rights of the accused are protected with vigor and transparency.
...
And the same people, after reading account after account of innocent men being imprisoned, raped, tortured; destroyed, on lies, will reveal the utter depravity of their indifference by refusing to face what is happening or acknowledge that it even matters.

Their idea of justice is just as corrupt and selfish as the false accuser. They want only punishment, and only where it suits them, at any cost. They care less for the rights of men than Mike Niphong, and their objections should be discarded as quickly as they are raised.'

Frenchman, 80, freed after year in wife's laundry prison

Matt · 1 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ARROU, France (AFP) - An 80-year-old Frenchman was recovering in a state of shock in hospital on Saturday after being freed from a year locked in a laundry room by a wife half his age and her alleged lover.

French paramilitary police rescued the unnamed man from his home in the village of Arrou, southwest of Paris, on Wednesday, blinded, malnourished and physically abused by the ordeal at the hands of his own family.
...
"The victim suffered violence and ill-treatment," local gendarme commander Bruno Arviset told journalists. "The man ate twice a day, mostly pastries that were past their sell-by date."

His wife, 45, was jailed on Saturday pending trial after being charged with physical abuse, illegal detention and taking advantage of a vulnerable person, a judicial source said.'

Phyllis Schlafly: The Awesome Power of Family Courts

Matt · 1 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From June, but timely. Article here. Excerpt:

'The month of June when we observe Father's Day is a good time to review some of the injustices committed against fathers by family courts. Family courts routinely deprive divorced fathers not only of their own children, but even many constitutional rights.

For example, do you think judges should have the power to decide to which religion your children must belong and which churches they may be prohibited from attending? In December 2009 a Chicago judge did exactly that.

Cook County Circuit Judge Edward Jordan issued a restraining order to prohibit Joseph Reyes from taking his three-year-old daughter to any non-Jewish religious activities because his ex-wife argued that would contribute to "the emotional detriment of the child." Mrs. Rebecca Reyes wants to raise her daughter in the Jewish religion, and the judge sided with the mother. Joseph Reyes' divorce attorney, Joel Brodsky, when he saw the judge's restraining order, said, "I almost fell off my chair. I thought maybe we were in Afghanistan and this was the Taliban."'

UK: Feminist Group in legal challenge to 'unfair' Budget

Anonymous · 1 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The government is facing a legal challenge to its Budget from a leading women's rights group which claims it could be unlawful. The Fawcett Society has filed papers with the High Court seeking a judicial review of the austerity package. It claims the coalition could have failed to fully assess whether its savings proposals would increase inequality between men and women. It says £5.8bn of £8bn savings outlined in the Budget would come from women.

The Fawcett Society said the cuts would hit women far harder than men and described the Budget as "blatantly unfair".

...

It says women in public sector jobs would be more likely to be hit by pay freezes and job losses. Cuts in benefits and tax credits were also likely to hit them disproportionately.

The group said public sector cuts would hit women particularly hard since 65% of such workers were women.

Ceri Goddard, its chief executive, said: "Successive governments have failed to give enough consideration to how their policies will impact on equality between men and women, but this Budget shows a whole new level of disregard for the importance of equality law and everyday women's lives.'

N.Y. Woman Accused of Stabbing Nieces, Ages 7 and 9

anthony · 2 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A New York woman is accused of stabbing her two young nieces in a bloody rampage while baby-sitting the girls, then calling 911.

Police said Lisa Turkki, 39, repeatedly stabbed Maeve and Annabel Kelly, ages 7 and 9, at her sister and brother-in-law's house in Katonah, N.Y. house, while the couple attended a concert down the street Saturday night, the Journal News reported.

The house is directly across the street from Martha Stewart's farm.

Police received the 911 call from the house around 9:22 p.m. ET and found the girls in a scene officers called "quite horrible."

"There was a lot of blood in the kitchen area," said Lt. Jeffrey Dickan of the Bedford police.'

Your Vote is Needed to Help Under-Served Victims of Domestic Violence

Anonymous · 2 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Your Vote is Needed to Help Under Served Victims of Domestic Violence

The Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women is seeking a $250,000 award from Pepsi for our project to bring public awareness to under served victims of domestic violence. This funding will enable us to send outreach materials (brochures, posters, booklets and placards) to 7,500 agencies that work with victims of domestic violence across the country.

In order to obtain this $250,000 award we need your help. The public determines, through voting on their favorite project ideas at the Pepsi site, who wins. Please click on this link to vote for our project idea: http://www.refresheverything.com/helpdomesticviolencevictims

That is the direct link to our project idea, “Give Under Served Victims of Domestic Violence a Lifeline,” located under the 250K category.

VERY IMPORTANT NOTE: After you click the link for voting, you will be taken to our Pepsi page. Once there, click the “Vote for this idea” button where you will be prompted to register or sign in. After signing in you MUST CLICK THE “VOTE” BUTTON AGAIN to cast your vote (the “vote” button will disappear and say “Good Job”, “Way to Go” or something like that if you voted correctly).

FACEBOOK MEMBERS: You can also go to the Pepsi Refresh FB page and get an app there to vote.

Voting is from Aug. 1 to Aug. 31. Remember to vote DAILY! Please post this notice to your Facebook and MySpace page, your blog and anywhere else you deem appropriate. Ask your friends and family members to vote and do the same. Thank you for helping us to bring awareness and services to victim and their families.

Jan
Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women
email: dahmwagency-at-gmail.com
Business line: 207-683-5758
http://www.domesticabusehelpline.org/
"Everything you are against weakens you. Everything you are for empowers you."
– Dr. Wayne Dyer
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=gdUYPcEgooc

Man dead, woman charged in Winnipeg stabbings

Matt · 3 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A multiple stabbing early Saturday left a 62-year-old man dead and a teenage girl wounded, Winnipeg police report.

Mary Ellen Thomas, 30, is charged with second-degree murder, aggravated assault and several counts of failing to comply with a recognizance order.

The dead man, Michael Allan, had just met a woman earlier that night and taken her to a residence at 851 Nassau St., where they got into an argument and the stabbing occurred, police said.

The alleged attacker later went to a convenience store at Osborne Street and Morley Avenue, near where an 18-year-old woman was stabbed several times, police said. She was treated in hospital and released.'

SAVE Releases New Report on DV Revenue Streams

Matt · 3 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Abusegate Bob:

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments – SAVE – has just released a new Special Report that documents the revenue streams of the $4 billion a year domestic violence industry. The report, "Estimated National Expenditures for Domestic Violence Prevention and Control," answers questions such as:

1. Which federal initiatives support domestic violence programs and services?
2. What are the total federal expenditures on domestic violence?
3. Where do non-federal DV revenues come from?

The 7-page report is an essential resource for any person who wants to get an inside look at the finances of the domestic violence industry. The report is available at:
http://www.saveservices.org/pdf/SAVE-Estimated-National-Expenditures-for-DV.pdf

"Why It Is Wise to Worship a Woman"

el cid · 4 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I've always heard that women are more complicated than men. Turns out, they're fairly simple. They just want one thing: to be worshiped--you know, kinda like the Roman emperors did.

This article explains how men can get started:

"First...create an altar in your room dedicated to Divine Feminine. Put only symbols of the feminine on it. I have a painting called "Beatrix" by Dante Gabriel Rossetti. I have a statue of Quan Kin. Populate your altar with anything that reminds you of the feminine, and spend a few minutes of the day in worship. Yes, worship. Adoration. Devotion. Offer up rose petals. Offer poems. Offer everything, and beg Her to reveal Her innermost essence to you. This will work miracles whether you're single and waiting to meet the right woman or whether you're already in relationship and long to meet your woman in a deeper way."

The comments confirm this is what women really want. No wonder the divorce rate is so high.

Idea that women are overburdened by professional and domestic duties is a myth

Broadsword · 4 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Wives who claim their husbands should help out more around the house because women work a "double shift" at the office and in the home are misguided, according to research.

If both paid work and unpaid duties such as housework, care and voluntary work are taken into account, husbands actually contribute more than their fair share to the household, experts found. According to a study of how people use their time, men in Britain spend marginally longer on "productive" work each day than women.
...
While many wives scale back their working hours or drop out of employment after having children, husbands will often work overtime to earn more income for the family.
...
Dr Catherine Hakim, who carried out the study, said: "This data overturns the well-entrenched theory that women work disproportional long hours in jobs and at home in juggling family and work.

"Feminists constantly complain that men are not doing their fair share of domestic work. The reality is that most men already do more than their fair share."'

Code Red Alert from the Family Research Council

Matt · 4 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Abusegate Bob:

Code Red Alert from the Family Research Council

I-VAWA Trumps?

When a piece of legislation is sponsored by this quartet- Sens. John Kerry (D-Mass.), Barbara Boxer (D-Calif.), Susan Collins (R-Maine), and Olympia Snowe (R-Maine)--it's a safe bet that the bill won't be family-friendly. Unfortunately, that's the case with the International Violence Against Women Act (IVAWA). Although its name suggests the contrary, S. 2982 would actually promote violence--against the unborn. Among other things, IVAWA would directly support the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) despite its financial partnership with countries like China that encourage forced abortion and sterilization. What's worse, IVAWA uses the guise of "women's rights" to push for the ratification of extreme treaties like CEDAW, the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women--which would pressure countries to perform abortions in violation of their deep moral beliefs or traditions.

As if that weren't bad enough, the bill would create a new office for "Women's Global Issues" under an administration that views abortion as an integral part of reproductive health. If approved, this new headquarters could be used as an extension of the President's personal mission to overturn pro-life laws abroad. Last but not least, IVAWA doesn't include a ban on funding activities like prostitution and sex trafficking, two industries that clearly lead to violence against women! Tomorrow, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee is scheduled to hold a hearing on S. 2982, though Senator Roger Wicker (R-Miss.) might be successful in delaying it for further review. Help us protect women by encouraging the Committee to completely kill this bill.

Contact:
U.S. Senate Committee on Foreign Relations

Democratic Staff Phone: (202) 224-4651

Republican Staff Phone: (202) 224-6797

Australia: Yet another example of anti-male job advertising

Minuteman · 5 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to posting here. Excerpt:

'Receptionist/Girl Friday

We are a busy Heavy Vehicle Smash Repairer in the Northern Suburbs.

A full time position as our Receptionist/Girl Friday has become available. The role presents the opportunity to have a hand in all facets of our business. You are responsible to the Office Manager however will be required to also assist other staff.'

RADAR ALERT: "Erring on the Side of Hidden Harm"

Matt · 6 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

RADAR is proud to announce a new line of reports, the RADAR Signature Reports. Unlike RADAR's Special Reports, the RADAR Signature Reports will be attributed to particular authors. RADAR invites writers of journal-quality material to submit articles for consideration.

The first report in this new series is "Erring on the Side of Hidden Harm: The Granting of Domestic Violence Restraining Orders," by David N. Heleniak, Esq. (http://www.mediaradar.org/docs/RADARsignatureReport-ErringOnTheSideOfHiddenHarm.pdf) The article, originally published in the journal Partner Abuse, argues the following:

"In deciding whether to enter a domestic violence restraining order, many judges think about their careers in addition to the merits of the cases before them. While the damage to parent-child relationships and to children's mental health caused by the overzealous entering of restraining orders is seldom if ever reported by the media, the harm caused by overtly violent acts following the failure to enter restraining orders most certainly is. In regards to restraining orders, the phrase 'erring on the side of caution' is often invoked. It is more accurate, however, to characterize the judge's behavior as 'erring on the side of hidden harm.' Rather than judges, juries — one time judicial actors — should decide when domestic violence restraining orders are warranted."

Please read the report and share it with anyone you think might find it interesting.

Thank you for your continued support.

++
Date of RADAR Release: August 3, 2010

R.A.D.A.R. – Respecting Accuracy in Domestic Abuse Reporting – is a non-profit, non-partisan organization of men and women working to improve the effectiveness of our nation's approach to solving domestic violence.
http://www.mediaradar.org/

Stephen Baskerville: "Sexual Statism"

Matt · 6 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'In “The End of Men,” the cover story of the July/August Atlantic, Hanna Rosin describes “how women are taking control of everything.” Suggesting that “the economics of the new era are better suited to women,” Rosin believes the fair sex are winning the struggle for the survival of the fittest. In what is apparently cause for celebration, she writes, “three-quarters of the 8 million jobs lost were lost by men” in the ongoing Great Recession. “The worst-hit industries were overwhelmingly male and deeply identified with macho: construction, manufacturing, high finance.” She contends that the economic crisis “merely revealed—and accelerated—a profound economic shift that has been going on for at least 30 years.”

The Atlantic used the same issue to ask, “Are Fathers Necessary?” Pamela Paul cites a widely publicized study purporting to prove that fathers are harmful in rearing children and that lesbians do it better. The study is politics camouflaged as social science—its authors acknowledge that the parenting virtues they extol are defined “in part in the service of an egalitarian ideology.” Their message echoes Rosin’s: within the home, as in the national economy, men are unreliable at best and pathological at worst. The Atlantic assures us that the decline of men is the product of impersonal forces against which we are powerless to respond, even if we wished to—which apparently we do not.

Rosin, whose essay is #1 on the magazine’s “Biggest Ideas of the Year” list, certainly identifies an important trend. But the phenomenon she describes is the result not of inexorable social forces but of conscious political decisions. The end of men is the consequence of the most profound trend in public life today: the sexualization of politics and the politicization of sex.'

Castration drug given to kids as autism therapy

anthony · 6 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Maryland medical group has started treating autistic children in South Florida with shots of a drug used for chemical castration, a therapy widely panned by mainstream experts.

The group gives children the cancer drug Lupron to stop their bodies from making testosterone, saying the drug helps expel toxic mercury and quells aggressive or sexually explicit behavior by kids with excessive levels of the male hormone.

A Boca Raton mother who just put her 18-year-old son on the drug said it seems to help.

But numerous physicians, researchers and therapists insist there's no proof mercury causes autism, that Lupron removes mercury or that autistic kids have excessive testosterone. What's more, the drug carries a risk of bone damage, stunted growth and heart trouble, and can render children impotent.

"Not only is there no scientific backing whatsoever for Lupron treatments, there are several major concerns for the children's health," said neurologist BethAnn McLaughlin, an adviser to the Dan Marino Foundation autism group in Weston and the mother of two developmentally disabled children.

"These people are preying on the fears of parents. We cannot be using these children who are so vulnerable as guinea pigs in a medical experiment."'

UK: Feminism? Forget it, sisters

Broadsword · 6 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The long night of modern feminism might be about to end. A glimmer of light is flickering in the encircling gloom.

A study published this week by Dr Catherine Hakim of the London School of Economics has found that men do slightly more work than the women they live with when employment and domestic work are measured together. This is the first time I can remember in 40 years that an authoritative study on a key issue of so-called gender politics has come out with a self-evident truth that runs directly contrary to orthodox feminist ideology. The fact that it has been written and published by a woman makes it even more delightful.

Ever since the late Sixties, it has been an incontestable article of faith in the feminist creed that men are lazy, slobbish, barbaric, barely civilisable and incapable of switching on the vacuum cleaner without breaking it – and eternal shame on Alistair Campbell and his partner Fiona Miller for boasting about the fact that he lives up to that mould-encrusted cliché.

It has been an essential tenet in the feminist catechism – endlessly repeated on Woman's Hour and in the Guardian – that men exploit and oppress women at home and in their domestic arrangements in the same way that men put women down at work and in the wider society."

'Gender bending' chemical in food tins may cut male fertility

Stinger503 · 7 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A ‘gender bending’ chemical in food and drinks containers could be behind rising male infertility, scientists say.

Men with high levels of Bisphenol A (BPA) in their bodies are more likely to have low sperm counts, according to a study.

BPA is widely used to harden plastics and is found in baby bottles, CD cases, plastic knives and forks and the lining of food and drink cans.

The chemical mimics the female sex hormone oestrogen and interferes with the way hormones are processed by the body.

Although some animal studies have shown it is safe, others have linked it to breast cancer, liver damage, obesity, diabetes and fertility problems.'

Men being shorted mental health services

Matt · 7 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To help ensure safety for every citizen, the mental health community can contribute to a better understanding of all types of family murder and suicide. Why are 3,000 Canadian men committing suicide annually? This is four times the rate for women. 2 What is the impact of family separation on the mental health of fathers?

Dr. David Crawford and Professor John Macdonald of the University of Western Sydney reported that the pain of separation and divorce is having an alarming effect on the health of Australian males. They conclude relationship breakdown and divorce are leaving many men, especially fathers, emotionally broken and unable to cope, contributing to high rates of suicide and harm of others.
...
Dr. Paul Links, professor of psychiatry and chair of suicide studies at the University of Toronto, reports that difficult divorces or loss of children fit the profile of loss leading to suicide. Divorced men kill themselves twice as often as single or married men, 5 and since men in general commit suicide four times as frequently as women, 2 divorced men commit suicide eight times more often than women in the general population. Yet, little is known about male suicidal behaviour in Canada.'

Canada: Police look for mother accused of abducting son

Matt · 7 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Toronto police are looking for a 23-year-old woman who they allege abducted her son during a parental visit.

Emila Sardaru and her one-year-old son, Robin Stanciu, were last seen July 23 at around 10 p.m. near Dawes Road and Danforth Avenue.

Police are asking for the public's assistance to find them.

They say Sardaru is of Romanian descent and speaks limited English.

She is described as white, about five feet and five inches tall. and about 165 pounds.'

As submitter-via-email Jeremy S. commented: "What, no Amber Alert?"

NPR intern stabbed on way to work; woman arrested

Matt · 7 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON (AP) — Authorities say a woman has been charged in the stabbing of a 20-year-old NPR intern as she walked to work in northwest Washington.

Police say 24-year-old Melodie Brevard of Washington was arrested shortly after the attack about 9:30 a.m. Wednesday at Seventh and I streets in Chinatown. She has been charged with assault with intent to kill.

D.C. police spokesman Lt. Nick Breul says three people restrained Brevard after the attack until officers arrived. He says officers responded quickly because they had been investigating a suspicious package nearby.'

My goodness, this cannot be right... a woman just wouldn't do something so random and violent! Uh-huh. My guess is she will get "psychiatric attention" and never face criminal charges.

Innocent Man Freed After 27 Years

Matt · 8 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Imprisoned for 27 years for a rape he did not commit, Michael Anthony Green walked out of a US jail a free man and in the process was able to leave behind some of the anger that fuelled his survival behind bars.

Accompanied by his lawyer, Mr Green walked out of jail and into the arms of about 20 family members who cheered him.

"Live life," Mr Green said, when asked what he is going to do now.

Mr Green, 44, was released after the Harris County District Attorney's Office reopened his case and new DNA tests it commissioned showed he did not commit the 1983 rape of a woman who was abducted.'

The "Women's Sexual Peak" myth discussed

Matt · 8 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some years ago I was at a night club with a group of men and women. Naturally the conversation turned to sex. One woman, in her late forties, said, in a good natured way, “It’s a shame that by the time men really learn what they are doing in bed, their equipment doesn’t work like it used to.”

“I understand how you feel,” I said, in an equally jovial tone, “By the time women start learning what they are doing in bed their looks start fading.”

...

There was a silver lining, though. It did spark a rather lively round of verbal sparring with the rest of the people at the table. And I am sure that it was a discussion that has been echoed millions of times at millions of night club gatherings.

Why is it that men and women hit their sexual peaks at such radically different ages?

And the answer is, of course, that they don’t. It is just another one of the myriad of lies we enable women to live for the sake of not disturbing their self image- and perhaps for the sake of getting in their pants in leaner times.

Where else but the current gender Zeitgeist can a woman with crows feet, sagging breasts, reduced sexual hormones, a vagina that does not lubricate as it once did, more difficulty conceiving and less ability to attract sexual partners of their preference, stand up and say “I am in my sexual prime,” and have everyone in their presence nod their head in agreement?'

Only in a world where we tell women whatever they want to hear, no matter how ridiculous.

...

Women, feminists in particular, have long lamented the male beauty standard. They claim it drives women to extremes like surgery and eating disorders, and results in damaged self esteem, all because men want women to look a certain way.

But of course, once you peel back the layers of victimized drivel and get to the core of the matter, you find that women drive themselves to do these things, biology leading them by the nose, because that is their quickest route to personal power, and because they don’t rise above it and find relevance in other ways.

...

When women collectively quit worrying about sexual primacy and start focusing on their own innate human potential, when they learn to value their own accomplishments more than they value what they can sexually manipulate out of men, the plastic surgeons will be out of business and their bad self esteem, rather than their personal significance, will be facing expiration.'

Slovenia: Woman Gets Fined for Slapping Her Boyfriend

Anonymous · 9 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From the article:

'Slovenia, 25th July 2010

Hello, police, I need help, my girlfriend beat me up!

An unusual incident occurred yesterday on the Slovenian coast. A young man called the police, because his girlfriend allegedly beat him up.

Men physically assaulting their spouses for various reasons often make the news, but a woman attacking her partner is something rare.

The unusual incident occurred yesterday on the coast, when the police were called after a young couple had an argument. The 23-year-old man from Izola called them, because his 26-year-old girlfriend slapped him twice during their argument.

The woman will have to pay a fine.

When they arrived, the police found only the young man. His girlfriend had driven off prior to their arrival. Koper PD representative stated that the unknown woman will be fined for the assault.'

Source (in Slovenian) here. Google translation here.

Since nobody here probably understands Slovenian, let me just add that the average tone of the comments follows the "he should just suck it up", "where are his cojones," etc. mentality.

The Booming Domestic Violence Industry

anthony · 9 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mapping the full extent of the domestic-violence industry is not easy, because it's a cottage-industry, spread out in hundreds of places. State and federal money goes to well over a hundred institutes, clinics, programs for counseling or outreach or coordination or training, computer databases, coalitions, shelters, PR agencies and other groups.

Most would say that's just fine: Domestic violence is ugly and ought to be dealt with. But others are beginning to wonder if the huge industrial cure is as bad as the disease.

One of many critics is John Flaherty, co-chairman of the Fatherhood Coalition. "This industry is an octopus," he said recently. "It's got its tentacles in more and more parts of everyday life. It's a political movement. Many of its employees are, directly or indirectly, damaging children. This industry doesn't answer to anybody. They're in it mainly for the money -- and the children be damned." The industry's problems may be about to increase, because it is becoming clear through scientific research that the whole premise of the movement and the industry it spawned -- that "domestic violence" means bad men hitting helpless, innocent women -- is just plain wrong.

The truth about violence in the home is that it's pretty much a 50-50 thing. Respected social scientists Murray A. Straus and David Gelles have been publishing research for years that shows the standard Only-Men-Batter story-- probably visible on a billboard near you -- just doesn't match reality. Women and men attack each other about equally in the home. Solid research now shows that women begin the physical fighting in their homes about half the time. Equally solid research shows that mothers are responsible for 65 per cent of physical abuse of children.'

Father camping out by courthouse, advertising rally

anthony · 9 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RACINE - A father who thinks the family court system has let him down is planning to host a rally for fathers' rights on the Racine County Courthouse steps.

Ricardo Martinez, 34, of Racine, says he is expecting 150 people to join him at 9 a.m. on Wednesday, Aug. 18.

"It's not right," said Martinez. "This cannot be right what they are doing to men. There is no equality."

When Martinez and his ex-wife divorced, joint custody was granted for their six- and seven-year-old sons, he said. His time with them was supposed to be on Wednesdays, some weekends and holidays.

Since he has become an advocate for father's rights, Martinez said he has had even less contact with his children. His complaints about the situation have fallen on deaf ears, he claims.

"I'm stuck with a system that doesn't want to help me," he said.

Unemployed and evicted from where he was living, Martinez said he has been sleeping on the lawn of the courthouse at 730 Washington Ave., sometimes in a tent, draped with a sign announcing the rally.

The Journal Times was unable to contact Martinez' ex-wife for comment.

...

"The bottom line is: all we're asking is to be treated equally," said Steve Blake, the president of Dads of Wisconsin, a statewide nonprofit advocacy group based out of Oxford. "If we could get enough people to show up at a rally like this, it would be helpful."'

Atlanta lawyer wins $11 million lawsuit for family in botched circumcision

anthony · 9 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The maker of an instrument used in circumcisions claimed that injury was impossible with its use, but after an infant lost a portion of his penis during an operation with the Mogen clamp, a judge awarded $10.8 million in damages against the company.

The judgment handed down Friday in New York involves an Atlanta lawyer who has been crusading against circumcision as a dangerous and unnecessary practice.

Attorney David Llewellyn won a similar case in Atlanta last year and the injury behind that prior lawsuit in Fulton County Superior Court put the New York clamp manufacturer on notice about the danger of the device, his current lawsuit said.

The baby in the current case, identified in court documents only as L.G., lost the entire glans, or head, of his penis after it was pulled into the jaws of the clamp, according to a federal magistrate's order. On Friday, U.S. District Judge Jack B. Weinstein ordered Mogen Circumcision Instruments of New York to pay $10.8 million in compensatory and punitive damages to the Florida boy, now 3, and his parents.'

UK: Essex circumcision doctor barred from surgery by GMC

anthony · 9 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Dr Aziz Chaudry's fitness to practise was impaired as a result of his misconduct, a panel found.

The hearing concluded the standard of care given to five boys in 2006 was not that expected of a registered medical practitioner.

The patients all received circumcisions at his private clinic in Clacton.

The panel also found he failed to provide adequate details to the boy's families and to warn them of possible complications.
...
His procedures revealed failings in notifying the patients' GPs about the circumcisions, and inadequate record keeping, the GMC concluded.

The GMC imposed conditions on his registration which will remain in place for 12 months.

The doctor, who was trained in Pakistan and claimed to have more than 20 years' experience, was told he cannot carry out any surgical procedures for the next 12 months, including circumcisions.'

Britons 'trapped in false rape sting by blonde Swede on Greek island’

anthony · 9 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Men have been warned to be on their guard after the 26-year-old woman claimed a total of €800,000 (£666,315) in insurance after lodging allegations of rape on the island of Kos.

It is believed that her victims include at least four Britons, according to a lawyer representing one of the falsely accused.

An international hunt involving Greek and Swedish police and Interpol has failed to find the woman, described as an attractive blonde.'

Related, here.

UK: Boxing legend Pat Clinton's son released after false rape claim on Greek holiday

anthony · 9 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BOXING champion Pat Clinton's son was held for three days in Greece over a false rape accusation.

Sean Clinton, 19, and a friend were on holiday with a group in Crete when a woman tourist accused them.

But after an agonising three days in custody, they were told there was no case to answer.

It is understood police found no evidence to prove that even consensual sex had taken place.

Last night, Sean was back home with his mum Carol in Kilsyth, Stirlingshire.

And former world flyweight champion Pat, known as "the boy from Croy" during his career, revealed they were considering suing his accuser.'

Lying about rape is as hurtful as the crime itself

anthony · 9 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Many feminists argue that the problem of false accusations is so minuscule that to discuss it extensively is a harmful distraction from the far more serious problem of rape. On the other side are men's-rights activists, claiming that false accusations are as much of a scourge as rape itself."

Bull's-eye. Whenever false rape allegations spin in the news cycle, as a father, my soul stands on a razor blade betwixt that divide: Knowing how false accusations can color police response should — God forbid — my daughter ever need a sympathetic ear; and fearing for my son in a world where the right words from the wrong lips can destroy reputations and land you behind bars.

Researchers have struggled to pinpoint the prevalence of false rape claims. Estimates range widely from about 2 percent to 90 percent. However, the most trusted studies put the figure between 8 and 10 percent.

False claims are a headache for Nicole Quinn, who is at the helm of the Victim Service Center of Orange County. They undercut the already arduous task of persuading real rape victims to come forward.'

Update from Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women

Anonymous · 9 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Thanks to those of you who are voting daily for the Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women to win 250K from the Pepsi Project challenge. We are currently holding steady at 204- we still have a long way to go and a short time to do so!

I have heard from a couple of people that they have had trouble at the Pepsi site with casting their votes. I have written to Pepsi about the problem and they suggested that I encourage you to contact them so that they may troubleshoot with you. Contact the Pepsi Refresh Hotline at 1-800-768-2784 between 8 am and 8 pm (EDT).

Just 2 minutes a day over the next 23 days--give under served victims of domestic violence a lifeline

Vote online here
Text your vote: Text: 101761 to Pepsi (73774)

2 minutes...that's it! Go here to sign up and click "vote for this idea" and text your vote: Text: 101761 to Pepsi (73774)

The Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women is seeking a $250,000 award from Pepsi for our project to bring public awareness to under served victims of domestic violence. Read what we plan to do with this grant on the Pepsi site

We need your help because the public determines, through voting on their favorite project ideas at the Pepsi site, who wins.

VOTE DAILY throughout the month of August

The name of our project idea, “Give Under Served Victims of Domestic Violence a Lifeline,” located under the 250K Health category.

VERY IMPORTANT NOTE: After you click the link for voting, you will be taken to our Pepsi page. Once there, click the “Vote for this idea” button where you will be prompted to register or sign in. After signing in you MUST CLICK THE “VOTE” BUTTON AGAIN to cast your vote (the “vote” button will disappear and say “Good Job”, “Way to Go” or something like that if you voted correctly).

Don't forget you can text your vote: Text: 101761 to Pepsi (73774)

FACEBOOK MEMBERS: You can also go to the Pepsi Refresh FB page and get an app there to vote.

Voting DAILY thru Aug. 31st. Help us spread the word---post this notice to your Facebook and MySpace page, your blog and anywhere else you deem appropriate. Ask your friends and family members to vote and do the same. Thank you for helping us bring awareness and services to under served victims.

"Gender schemas"?

Matt · 10 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Jeremy S., article here. Excerpt:

'When we speak of gender we are highlighting our psychological and social conceptions of what it means to be a man or women. "Gender Schemas" refers to our intuitive hypotheses about the behaviour, traits, and preferences of men and women and boys and girls. Correspondingly, the term "gender roles" refers to expectations, to our ideas about how men and women are expected to behave.

All the signs have been there during this campaign. Physiognomy is well and truly at play, and more. We have covered her ear lobes, her marital status, her hair, her clothes, her choice not to have children and so on.
...
Gillard's gender should be her greatest strength, not a political weakness. But tackling gender schemas requires more insight and more thought than dropping shiny policy baubles. She needs the electorate to see her seated at the head of the table and to be comfortable with that image. Holding babies and kicking footballs with kids falls a long way short of what's needed to gain true popular acceptance.'

F&F: Ask Gov. Schwarzenegger to Sign F & F's SB 1188 (Child Custody Reform)

Matt · 10 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Short version: Fathers and Families' mission is to protect children's right to the love and care of both parents after divorce or separation. We often hear from parents who have been driven to the margins of their children's lives because their disability/partial disability is being used to deny them custody or visitation. SB 1188 will protect these parents—to write a letter to Governor Schwarzenegger asking him to sign SB 1188, click here.

Please send your letter whether you are a California resident or not. Your letter will be hand-delivered to the Governor's office by our Sacramento legislative representative. You may use our form letter or write your own.'

Study finds similar personality types in male and female domestic violence perpetrators fondueguy · 11 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'New research published in the August edition of the American Psychological Association's Journal of Abnormal Psychology, is providing a better picture of the roles played by gender, personality and mental illness in domestic violence.

...

Walsh and colleagues Marc Swogger (University of Rochester), Brian O'Connor(UBC), Yael Schonbrun (Brown University), Tracie Shea (Brown University), and Gregory Stuart (University of Tennessee-Knoxville) analyzed data drawn from the MacArthur Violence Risk Assessment Study to examine normal personality psychopathic characteristics, and mental illness among 567 civil psychiatric patients, including 138 women and 93 men with histories of domestic violence.

"Although both men and women engage in substantial levels of domestic violence, fewer studies have examined female perpetrators," says Walsh. "These new findings are among the first to highlight similarities between subtypes of domestically violent men and women."'

UK: Men make better bosses than 'loose cannon' women, say two-thirds of workers

Broadsword · 11 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Men are overwhelmingly seen as better bosses, a surprising new survey has revealed.

Two thirds of the nation's employees, both male and female, agree they would rather work for a man than a woman.

Female bosses were accused of being bitchy, hormonal and incapable of leaving their personal lives at home.

A third of those polled claimed women in charge are 'loose cannons' - ready to stab colleagues in the back at any time, and who constantly feel threatened by other people in positions of authority.

By contrast, both male and female workers believe male bosses were less likely to get involved in office politics, were easier to reason with and rarely suffered from mood swings.

Men are also said to be more straight-talking than women and rarely talk about others behind their backs, it emerged.'

Hiring preferences: attractive women have the edge

Matt · 11 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Read this article carefully. Excerpt:

'Good looks can kill a woman's chances of snaring jobs considered "masculine," according to a study by the University of Colorado Denver Business School.

Attractive women faced discrimination when they applied for jobs where appearance was not seen as important. These positions included job titles like manager of research and development, director of finance, mechanical engineer and construction supervisor.'

And so you think you know the gist of the article. But read on:

"In every other kind of job, attractive women were preferred. This wasn't the case with men which shows that there is still a double standard when it comes to gender."
...

Take Back the Sports Page?

Anonymous · 12 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

"Take Back the Sports Page?" by Christina Hoff Sommers appeared in today's American. Your readers might find it interesting. Excerpt:

'The political wing of the women's sports movement is in trouble. These activists are accustomed to challenging timid bureaucrats and university administrators. But in taking on TV sports coverage, they are challenging the market itself.

...

According to the report, coverage of women's professional teams has "nearly evaporated" and a "deepening silence" has enveloped women's professional soccer, basketball, golf, field hockey, and softball. "Nothing short of stunning" says author Michael Messner, a feminist sociologist at USC. "This is simply intolerable."

...

But the heavy focus of news and highlights shows on men's sports is not only fathomable but obvious—that is where the fans are. And that is where advertisers expect to find customers for "male" products such as beer, razors, and cars. Men's professional sports are a fascination (obsession is more like it) to many millions of men, because they offer extreme competition, performance, and heroics. Women's professional sports, however skilled and admirable, cannot compare in Promethean drama.

Even women prefer watching male teams. Few women follow the sports pages and ESPN, but many enjoy attending live games—featuring male athletes. According to Sports Business Daily, 31 percent of the NFL's "avid fans" are women.

"Violent women are funny"

fibtastic · 12 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Watch this. This woman freaks out because she can't get McNuggets. And these people are news people?

Update: SAVE's Social Media Initiative

Matt · 13 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

The last several weeks I've been telling you about SAVE's upcoming Social Media initiative. Well, the long-awaited moment has finally arrived:

Check out SAVE's resources for victims and survivors of domestic violence here

Sign up for our new Facebook page for victims and survivors here

Participate in our Online Support Group for victims and survivors here

“WikiProject Feminism”

Matt · 13 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Wikipedia is the world’s largest online encyclopedia. Now, Wikipedia has set up an interest group it calls “WikiProject Feminism” (I’m not kidding – see for yourself: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Wikipedia:WikiProject_Feminism) The idea behind WikiProject Feminism is to promote feminist concepts and myths throughout Wiki-world.

So no surprise, many DV entries in Wikipedia are biased and false. So two stalwart individuals – Dr. Don Dutton and Andy Stachura – have volunteered to comb through these sites – see list below -- and make them right based on SAVE’s Special Reports.

If you become aware of other examples of biased Wikipedia DV entries, please shoot an email to Andy: andy.stachura-at-yahoo.com

Jennifer Aniston: Men optional when having kids

anthony · 13 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"Jennifer Aniston has lost a friend in right-wing news pundit Bill O'Reilly.

He's said she was being 'destructive to our society' for saying that women don't need to wait for a man to have a child.

The 60-year-old Fox News TV rottweiler lashed out on his show at the remark by the 41-year-old actress.

Aniston told a press conference for her new film The Switch: 'Women are realising it more and more knowing that they don't have to settle with a man just to have that child.

'Times have changed and that is also what is amazing is that we do have so many options these days, as opposed to our parents' days when you can't have children because you have waited too long.'"

UK: Revealed: The gender gap in British business

Broadsword · 13 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The lack of women at the top of Britain's biggest companies is laid bare today as research by The Independent reveals the full extent of the gender imbalance in UK boardrooms.

When the former trade minister Lord (Mervyn) Davies was appointed to look into the problem last week, the coalition Government admitted that only 12 per cent (139) of the directors of FTSE 100 companies are female. But the situation is far worse.

Because several of them hold multiple positions, in fact there are only 120 individual women on boards, out of the total pool of 1,100 directors. And just 20 of them – 6 per cent – are the executive directors who run the company on a daily basis, compared with the 309 who are male.
...

Elsewhere in Europe, the picture is very different. The leader is Norway, where at least 40 per cent of company directors are now women, thanks to laws introduced in 2006. The strategy is spreading fast. Spain has a 40 per cent quota, although it is not yet legally mandated. Italy, France, Finland, Germany and Sweden have all either set similar recommended levels, or have legislation going through parliament. And Europe's Fundamental Rights Commissioner, Viviane Reding, last month warned that unless more European boardroom seats are filled by women by 2011, she will impose a legal quota.
...
Such is the antipathy for overt regulation that insiders expect Lord Davies's recommendations will follow the Australian example, using the "soft power" of lobbying efforts and mentoring programmes rather than the blunt instrument of a quota.

So far, the results look better. In the first six months of 2010, 31 women have been appointed to major companies' boards, compared with just 10 in the whole of last year.'

UK: Why have Western feminists been so muted in their criticisms of Iran?

Broadsword · 14 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The fate of the 43-year-old Iranian woman sentenced to death by stoning took a sinister turn yesterday when she appeared on Iranian state television to confess to her “crimes”. Her lawyer fears she will now be executed imminently, probably hung by the neck until she is dead.

...

Yet the response of feminists in the West has been strangely muted.

Hillary Clinton lost no opportunity to brandish her feminist credentials during her campaign to become the Democratic Party’s Presidential nominee in 2008 and even went so far as to blame her failure to beat Barack Obama on the “glass ceiling”. Unfortunately, the concrete ceiling of Ashtiani’s jail cell hasn’t inspired any comparable rhetoric. All she has said is that she’s “troubled” by Ashtiani’s case.

At least Hillary Clinton was able to bring herself to mutter this mild rebuke. No other prominent feminist has spoken out about Ashtiani’s case, unless you include Yoko Ono who has signed the petition calling for her to be freed. We’ve heard nothing from Germaine Greer, nothing from Gloria Steinem, nothing from Jane Fonda, nothing from Naomi Wolf, nothing from Clare Short, nothing from Harriet Harmen.

We know why, of course. Almost no one on the left, with the honourable exception of Christopher Hitchens, dares to breath a word against any Islamic country for fear of being branded “Islamophobic”. Thus, a brutal dictatorship is able to torture and murder thousands of innocent women, safe in the knowledge that the self-styled keepers of the West’s conscience will remain silent.

...

Could the West’s self-appointed defenders of women’s rights have done anything to prevent the wholesale slaughter of their sisters in the developing world if they’d taken up their cause? Could a feminist outcry today about the plight of Sakineh Mohammadi Ashtiani do anything to prevent her death? We will never know, but it’s hard to avoid the conclusion that their continuing silence reveals the moral bankruptcy of their movement.'

FDA approves ella as 5-day-after emergency contraceptive

anthony · 14 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'he Food and Drug Administration approved a controversial new form of emergency contraception Friday that can prevent a pregnancy as many as five days after sex.

The decision to allow the sale of the pill, which will be marketed under the brand name "ella," was welcomed by family-planning proponents as a crucial new option to prevent unwanted pregnancies. But critics condemned the decision, arguing that it was misleading to approve ella as a contraceptive because the drug could also be used to induce an abortion.
...
Critics, however, are convinced it will and fear that a woman who does not realize she is pregnant will use the drug, unwittingly giving herself an abortion. They also worry that men will slip ella to unsuspecting women. And, the critics say, a woman might knowingly use ella to try to abort a fetus, putting herself at risk for potentially serious complications that have been reported among a small number of women using RU-486 and possibly damaging her developing child if it doesn't work.'

Hark, Abusers and Pets -- Another DV Myth is Born

Matt · 14 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

The domestic violence industry shows a remarkable propensity to conjure up the most creative claims and then present them as scientific "fact." In this article, the author makes this claim: "In fact, studies have shown that up to 48 percent of women delay leaving an abusive home out of fear that their pets will be harmed if left behind."

But when you realize that the great majority of women in abuse shelters are poor and often homeless, the notion that half of them can't flee an abusive situation because of a pet is flat-out absurd.

No surprise, the author conveniently forgets to provide the source of her claim. Maybe if every Abusegater were to contact Allie Phillips at PAWSprogram@americanhumane.org and ask her to provide the reference for her "statistic," the lies might begin to stop.

Enjoy.

'PAWS® Program
Guest Author - Allie Phillips, J.D. Vice President of Human-Animal Strategic Initiatives, American Humane Association

I am very pleased to be bringing this article to you all. I have many requests for programs like this or people escaping abuse don't want to leave their pets behind.

Prior to joining American Humane in 2007, Allie Phillips was an assistant prosecuting attorney and handled cases involving battered women who had pets that were also at risk for harm. As she describes in this article, she was inspired by her experiences to develop American Humane's PAWS Program to help both the human and the animal victims of abuse.
...
Thus, the Pets and Women's Shelters (PAWS) Program was born in February 2008. In December 2008, Paula Abdul (singer, songwriter, dancer, and most notably a judge on American Idol) signed on to be the spokesperson for PAWS. "The relationship I have with my dogs is not only very special to me, but also a great source of comfort and peace of mind," said Abdul. "The PAWS Program is a critical way of providing a transition for abused women and children into a safer and better life. I feel privileged to be involved with this extremely important and necessary program."'

Source: http://www.bellaonline.com/articles/art67965.asp

Update from Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women on the Pepsi Project Competition

Anonymous · 15 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Day 14 and we are stuck between #183 and #185

Hello Mensactivism Members and Supporters,

I am in hopes that you all are continuing to online and text message vote for us to win the Pepsi competition daily. For those of you who aren't aware or aren't voting (perhaps because you don't know about it or don't know enough about it)...read on...

I have been an advocate for men who are or were in relationships with abusive women for 13 years now. In 2000 I founded the only national non profit in the USA with a toll free helpline that specializes in offering supportive services and public awareness to male victims of domestic violence.

For the last ten years, this all volunteer virtual non profit has worked to bring more public awareness and services to this much maligned under served group of victims with less that 15K in donations annually most years. We aren't able to do as much as we would like given our financial constraints, but we have housed men and their children, purchased bus tickets so that men can escape violent women, bought food, clothing, back to school items and offered other emergency services. My husband and I have even paid for a rebuilt engine so a dad staying in a safe house with us could use his car to find a job.

I tell you all this not to pat myself on the back...I could care less about accolades, I tell you this to help you understand how vital what I am about to ask you is to the future of services and awareness for male victims and survivors.

We are in the Pepsi Refresh Project for the month of August. Our proposal on the Pepsi site requests a grant of $250,000 from Pepsi to do a national public awareness campaign on male victims. We have also included $25,000 for services for abused men and their children and stipends for our volunteers who help with this huge project.

To my knowledge there has never been a public awareness campaign of this size for male victims so this could very well be the start of better things to come.

Please consider supporting our Pepsi project idea by voting daily online and via text messaging and asking your friends and family to do the same. Our notice with more information is below. I thank you in advance for any assistance you can give. Please feel free to contact me if you have any questions: dahmwagency-at-gmail.com (Jan Brown)

Just 2 min. of your time a day over the next 16 days--give under served victims of domestic violence a lifeline

2 minutes...that's it! Go to: http://pep.si/bTXG4P sign up and click "vote for this idea" daily and text your vote: Text: 101761 to Pepsi (73774)

The Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women is seeking a $250,000 award from Pepsi for our project to bring public awareness to under served victims of domestic violence. Read what we plan to do with this grant on the Pepsi site: http://pep.si/bTXG4P

We need your help because the public determines, through voting on their favorite project ideas at the Pepsi site, who wins. VOTE DAILY throughout the month of August.

The name of our project idea, “Give Under Served Victims of Domestic Violence a Lifeline,” located under the 250K Health category.

VERY IMPORTANT NOTE: After you click the link for voting, you will be taken to our Pepsi page. Once there, click the “Vote for this idea” button where you will be prompted to register or sign in. After signing in you MUST CLICK THE “VOTE” BUTTON AGAIN to cast your vote (the “vote” button will disappear and say “Good Job”, “Way to Go” or something like that if you voted correctly).

Don't forget you can text your vote: Text: 101761 to Pepsi (73774)

Voting DAILY thru Aug. 31st. Help us spread the word---post this notice to your Facebook and MySpace page, your blog and anywhere else you deem appropriate. Ask your friends and family members to vote and do the same. Thank you for helping us bring awareness and services to under served victims.

Actress Jennifer Freeman Allegedly Attacked Husband Earl Watson

anthony · 15 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A vicious fight on Aug. 1 was almost the beginning of the end for Jennifer Freeman and Earl Watson's marriage. According to nydailynews.com, when Freeman got a text message late at night on Sunday, Aug. 1,, Watson "became suspicious" and "took her phone to check the message."

In a flash, Freeman became enraged, and hit Watson in his face. Then, in a sudden rush of aggression, Freeman bit down on Watson's hand. According to Watson, this bite was responsible for "breaking the skin, leaving teeth marks and drawing blood." Freeman continued on a violent rampage as she supposedly "proceeded to bite down on [Watson's] chest." She then attempted to "attack Watson with an iron," which Watson managed to pry out of her hand. After the attack, Watson petitioned for a divorce from Freeman but he recently withdrew it.
...

But, unfortunately, when domestic violence happens once, it will often happen again. Whether this episode with Freeman was the first physical fight or not, Freeman became violent very quickly. If Freeman is going to attack attack her husband because he looked at her phone, then there is a good chance that her anger may be triggered again. If violence continues, I really hope that they split."

Washington Post letter to the editor: 'Domestic violence is not just a man thing'

anthony · 15 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here.

'It is unfortunate that Terry O'Neill, president of the National Organization for Women, described domestic violence in terms of men only when quoted in the Aug. 10 Associated Press Style story "Controversial song features abuse." By doing so, she mischaracterized a significant problem.

Domestic violence is not the province of one gender; abusers can be male or female, heterosexual or homosexual. Although abuse by males is widely recognized, abuse by females is generally not. As a consequence, male victims face problems because of the general lack of recognition of their plight.

Additionally, Ms. O'Neill should not have resorted to playground name-calling by saying that "it's only 2-year-olds and violent men who use violence to get what they want." This trivializes an important issue.'

UK: Warning after Bournemouth woman jailed for false rape

anthony · 15 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police have warned that malicious reports of false rapes will not be tolerated after a woman was jailed for 15 months after lying to detectives.

Cheryl Moss, 26, falsely claimed that a 19-year-old man had raped her in an alleyway near St Peter's Road, Bournemouth, in November 2009.

Moss pleaded guilty to perverting the course of justice and was sentenced last week at Bournemouth Crown Court.

Dorset Police said the investigation used valuable time and resources.

Despite being shown CCTV footage of the man the mother of four had been with all night and that sex had been consensual, Moss maintained her allegations were true.'

Silver Spring Township woman filed false rape report after smoking crack, police say

anthony · 15 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When Mike Obrock got home Wednesday morning after a night on the town with Donna F. Miller, police said, he had a message on his answering machine from her, saying she had a wonderful time and asking why he didn't love her.

Maybe it was because -- according to court documents -- she punched him in the mouth and hit him with her crutch when he tried to drop her off in the parking lot of the Camp Hill Shopping Center. Or perhaps it was because of the false report police said Miller filed claiming she had been raped.

Miller, 50, of the 400 block of Hiltonhead Avenue, was arrested yesterday morning by Camp Hill police and charged with resisting arrest, false alarms to a public safety agency, fictitious reports and false reports to police. She was arraigned in front of District Judge Richard S. Dougherty and committed to Cumberland County Prison in lieu of $7,500 bail, court documents state.'

Female Teacher Says She's Guilty of Having 'Sex' with Student

anthony · 15 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PLEASANT RIDGE, KAN - A high school teacher from Lansing accused of having sex with a student admitted her mistake on Friday and entered a plea to avoid a trial.

While Shannon Young plead guilty to having a sexual relationship with a student at her school, the young man's parents aren't pleased with the sentence she's expected to get because it doesn't involve jail time.

Young, 36, was an English teacher and a volleyball coach at Pleasant Ridge High School in Easton, Kansas during the 2009-2010 school year.

...

"If this was not a consensual relationship, this case would have been charged differently. The only thing that made it illegal was Ms. Young's status as a teacher," Young's lawyer Debra Snider said. "Otherwise, this would not have been an illegal set of actions at all."

Todd Thompson, the Leavenworth County attorney, says the teen's parents are outraged by what happened to their son.

...

While jail is unlikely, Young will be required to register as a sex offender for the next ten years. Young will learn her fate when she's sentenced on September 8.'

Sperm-donors' kids seek more rights and respect

Broadsword · 15 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK – Katrina Clark and Lindsay Greenawalt have much in common. Bright women in their 20s, raised by single mothers, keenly curious about the men whose donated sperm helped give them life. Clark's search for her father succeeded after only a month, though with a bittersweet aftermath. Greenawalt is still searching, seven years after she started — persisting despite doubts and frustrations.
...
"I've dreamt of you since I was a little girl," Greenawalt wrote to her unknown dad in a Father's Day blog posting in June. "There are so many things I want to know about you."
...
Since 2008, Greenawalt, 25, has been chronicling her quest on a blog, "Confessions of a Cryokid." One of the most wrenching entries came last Thanksgiving, when she addressed the oft-repeated refrain that donor-conceived children ought to be grateful they were born.

"If I had to choose between being conceived with half of my identity and half of my kinship deliberately denied from me for eternity — or never being born — I'd choose never being born," she wrote. "We were created to carry a loss. A loss that no human being should have to endure."'

Liz Jones steps out of character

Anonymous · 15 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. My jaw dropped. Was this the same Liz Jones who is consistently bashing men in the Femail section now having a go at her own gender? I thought it was too good not to share. Excerpt:

'Yet another bit of woman bashing took place last week. According to a survey of 3,000 employees, women bosses are incapable of leaving their personal lives at home and are eager to bitch about colleagues behind their backs.

Yet men, on the other hand, according to research commissioned by the recruitment firm UKJobs.net, never bring their personal lives to work (I can confirm this. I sat opposite a man for three years and only realised his wife had just given birth to their fourth child when one day he stood up, then keeled over, exactly like a felled tree).

Most tellingly, the survey found men in the workplace are simply not as moody.
...

While this column will probably lose me the few remaining stalwart friends I have, I must say that women complain too much: they moan and they whine and they feel sorry for themselves.

Young women are by far the worst culprits: they've come of age in a time when they think they 'deserve' a nice life, rather than having to work for one.
...
Women generally are, as the survey found, 'loose cannons', expending a great deal of energy on office politics (not real politics, mind; when I gave a female employee the afternoon off to find her polling card and vote, she said she couldn't go because she hadn't had her roots done).

The pretty ones always, always, always use their looks to get ahead, but even the ugly ones still manage to slope off on maternity leave.

I feel sorry for men in the workplace. Only the gay ones are allowed to sulk, or wear interesting clothes, or secrete hot, hormonal tears.'

Mexican woman granted asylum for domestic abuse

Matt · 15 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

' SAN FRANCISCO — A Mexican woman who claimed she was beaten and raped for decades by her common-law husband has won the right to stay in the United States in a case that experts say makes clear that domestic violence is valid grounds for asylum.

The Department of Homeland Security found that the case of the woman known only as L.R. met the stringent standard necessary to win asylum. An immigration judge found in her favor on Aug. 4, and the decision was announced this week by her attorneys.

"The point has been made, very loud and clear, that cases such as these involving domestic violence, and even more broadly, gender-based violence against women, are valid cases," said Karen Musalo, L.R.'s attorney and the head of Hastings Law School's Center for Gender and Refugee Studies at the University of California. The name of the applicant was withheld to protect her privacy.

What makes this case remarkable is that traditionally asylum has been given to individuals being persecuted by a government; applicants had to show they suffered persecution because of their religion, political beliefs, race, nationality or membership in a particular social group.'

"Male and female ability differences down to socialisation, not genetics"

Broadsword · 16 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"It is the mainstay of countless magazine and newspaper features. Differences between male and female abilities – from map reading to multi-tasking and from parking to expressing emotion – can be traced to variations in the hard-wiring of their brains at birth, it is claimed.

...

In fact, there are no major neurological differences between the sexes, says Cordelia Fine in her book Delusions of Gender, which will be published by Icon next month. There may be slight variations in the brains of women and men, added Fine, a researcher at Melbourne University, but the wiring is soft, not hard. "It is flexible, malleable and changeable," she said.

In short, our intellects are not prisoners of our genders or our genes and those who claim otherwise are merely coating old-fashioned stereotypes with a veneer of scientific credibility. It is a case backed by Lise Eliot, an associate professor based at the Chicago Medical School. "All the mounting evidence indicates these ideas about hard-wired differences between male and female brains are wrong," she told the Observer.

"Yes, there are basic behavioural differences between the sexes, but we should note that these differences increase with age because our children's intellectual biases are being exaggerated and intensified by our gendered culture. Children don't inherit intellectual differences. They learn them. They are a result of what we expect a boy or a girl to be."'

Superheroes send out wrong message to boys

Broadsword · 16 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Watching superheroes beat up villains may not be the best image for boys to see if society wants to promote kinder, less stereotypical male behaviours, they claim.

Unlike the comic heroes of the past who often held ordinary day jobs and believed in social justice, the new breed of Hollywood superheroes are aggressive, sarcastic and rarely speak about the virtue of doing good for humanity. Dr Sharon Lamb, of the University of Massachusetts, said that modern depictions of superheroes like Iron Man are often playboy millionaires who are only ruled by selfish goals.
'''

"There is a big difference in the movie superhero of today and the comic book superhero of yesterday," Dr Lamb told the annual Convention of the American Psychological Association.

"Today's superhero is too much like an action hero who participates in non-stop violence; he's aggressive, sarcastic and rarely speaks to the virtue of doing good for humanity.

"When not in superhero costume, these men, like Ironman, exploit women, flaunt bling and convey their manhood with high-powered guns.'''

CNN: Good relationship with dad can help fight stress

anthony · 16 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new study presented at the annual convention of the American Psychological Association reveals that men who had positive relationships with their fathers are better equipped to deal with the stress of everyday life than men who did not remember their dads fondly.

"A big take-home message is that if there is a father present in a child's life, he needs to know how important it is to be involved," said Melanie Mallers of California State University, Fullerton.

Researchers interviewed 912 men and women during an eight-day period about their psychological and emotional state that day. Participants also had to answer questions about their relationships with their mothers and fathers growing up, and how much attention their parents gave them.

The major finding of the study is that men who said they had bad relationships with their fathers in childhood were more likely to be distressed by the stressful incidents of daily life.

Study authors did not see this effect as commonly in women. Mallers thinks that's because women are engaging in other kinds of coping skills, relying on a network of other people besides their parents for support. Men, on the other hand, learn instrumental coping skills from their fathers, she said.
...
Participants who had a good relationships with both parents in childhood tended to have fewer stressful incidents in their lives over the eight-day period than those who had poor parental relationships.'

NY governor signs no-fault divorce bill

anthony · 16 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) - Unhappy New York couples who want to get divorced fast will no longer have to persuade a court that they have been abused, abandoned or cuckolded to be released from their bonds.

Gov. David Paterson announced Sunday that he has signed a bill making New York the last state to enact some version of no-fault divorce, meaning that people trying to leave a marriage will be spared the painful task of attacking their estranged spouse in court.

Previously, under a system the governor called "outdated," New York judges could only grant a divorce quickly on grounds of cruelty, adultery, abandonment or imprisonment. In other words, somebody had to be blamed for the breakup.
...

The new measure requires only that one spouse swear under oath that a relationship has broken down for at least six months.

The change had been opposed by the New York Catholic Conference, which had said it made marriage disposable, and the state chapter of the National Organization of Women, which worried that it could make it easier for wealthy men to hide assets during a divorce proceeding.'

Top Norwegian doctor wants circumcision phased out

anthony · 16 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's against important medical ethics and is unnecessary. There's no medical reason for having it done, it's painful for some days afterwards, and there's a possibility of complications," he tells The Foreigner.

Male circumcision is a Jewish and Muslim religious tradition that goes back thousands of years. He takes issue with the some of the physical beliefs surrounding it.

"The old tradition doesn't use an anaesthetic. It's argued the infant's nerve system hasn't developed by the time it's performed on the eighth day, so it couldn't feel pain. But this has been shown to be wrong. Infants do feel pain, they just can't express it."

Markestad, a specialist in children's diseases, doesn't believe banning the procedure is the answer, however. He claims this will lead to the practise disappearing underground, leading to boys suffering even more.'

UK: 'The trouble with boys'

anthony · 16 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the next 10 days getting on for half a million boys across the country will receive, from the school office or by text or in the traditional brown envelope, their GCSE or A-level results. In our secular culture it is about as close as most of them will get to a public rite of passage. The facts of the grades will invariably come accompanied by a sentence that many of the boys may well have spent much of their lives up to this point trying quite hard to avoid. The sentence, or a variant of it, will be delivered by a parent, or a teacher, or by a sly voice in their head: "So, son, what are you thinking of doing with the rest of your life?" Twenty-five years on, that question still can bring a cold sweat to the back of my neck, a rush of unfocused and competing possibilities, and the echo of a reflexive response: "Christ, I dunno. Don't ask me…"

One of the headlines that will no doubt accompany this year's results, as it has for results of the past decade or more, is the fact that boys have performed in these exams less well than girls (or conversely that girls' grades have tended to rise, while boys' have marked time). That trend has lately seen 64% of girls achieve five A*-C grade GCSEs while only 54% of boys reach that benchmark. It has also seen half of young women participating in some form of higher education, but only 37% of young men. These trends are being felt in the (ever shrinking) jobs market, where even among recent graduates men are 50% more likely to be unemployed than women; that, in turn, is reshaping domestic arrangements across the county. More than a quarter of British men aged between 25 and 29 currently live with their parents (the figure for women is 12%), and a tenth are still in the family home at 35.'

Livermore woman accused of 'sex' with teen boys

anthony · 16 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The 42-year-old Livermore mother accused of sexually assaulting two teenage boys first made an advance at one of them when he was 14 and was dating her daughter of the same age, authorities said.

After the incident in December 2008, authorities said, Christine Hubbs sent sexual text messages to the boy and gave him cash, expensive gifts and cellular telephones to maintain contact with her.

The allegations, contained in a police affidavit, were revealed Monday as Hubbs appeared in an Alameda County courtroom in Pleasanton to face charges that have stunned her suburban city.

The mother of three was arraigned on 67 felony counts, including unlawful sex with a minor and exhibition of lewd material to a minor.

Wearing a jail-issue jumpsuit, she flashed a quick smile at her husband - who waved at her from the second row - but cried as the hearing wore on and a judge ordered her bail set at $4.3 million. She did not enter a plea.'

Politico: 'Good ol' boys' in Warren's way?

anthony · 16 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As President Barack Obama closes in on picking a new federal consumer protection chief, critics' arguments against liberal favorite Elizabeth Warren are getting louder.
...
But some of Warren's supporters see a deeper problem at work against her — in their view, the Treasury Department is a stodgy old boys club poised to blackball Warren from getting the post, in part, because she's a woman.

Now, they're trying to turn that argument on its head. The National Organization for Women, liberal activists and some lawmakers are trying to pressure Obama into choosing Warren, by arguing that Warren would provide much-needed balance to an economics team that they say is too male-dominated, like Wall Street itself.

Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner "fell on the side of the good ol' boys system that got us into this mess. Elizabeth Warren fell on the side of trying to fix this mess," NOW President Terry O'Neill said in an interview. She said Geithner and top Obama economist Larry Summers are "imbued" with the "notoriously sexist" culture of Wall Street.
...
Rep. Jackie Speier (D-Calif.), one of the most outspoken advocates for Warren on Capitol Hill, agrees there's a gender issue at Treasury.

"I think there's a problem there. ... It's a Wall Street cultural problem. Wall Street is populated by testosterone-driven men," she said. "The president and Secretary Geithner should spend some quality time developing a plan to increase the number of women at Treasury."'

UK: The Shropshire schools with no male teachers

anthony · 16 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Official government statistics reveal the staffrooms of 68 primary schools and nurseries in the region are populated solely by women.

They show the classrooms of some 17 primaries and one nursery school in the Telford and Wrekin area have no male teachers.

In the rest of the county, the children at a total of 51 primary schools are only taught by female staff.

Nationally, 4,226 schools in England – 3,340 primaries and 386 nurseries – have no male staff, according to the latest data for 2009.

This is despite a long-running government campaign to encourage men back into what is now seen as a female profession.

Men also tend to shun working with younger children over fears they will be accused of paedophilia.

It means many children have no regular contact with an adult man until they go to secondary school aged 11.

But experts say it is vital for boys – particularly those who may not have a father at home – to have positive role models as they grow up.'

Man almost crushed to death; By-standers laugh

anthony · 16 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Bengaluru: In a shocking incident, a young man of 21 years age was almost crushed between the hydraulic doors of a Marco Polo bus in Bangalore on Sunday evening, the 1st August 2010.

Prannoy David Roy, a resident of Kaggadasapura, Bengaluru was returning after attending a mass at Indiranagar when the incident happened. Rao boarded the bus numbered 314 E bearing registration number KA 01 F 4550 at around 7:30 PM.

However, what was more shocking than the above callous behavior of the Govt. servants was the reaction of the few bystanders who were laughing at the condition of the man instead of helping him.
...
Mithun Kumar, Men's Rights Activist from Bengaluru reacting sharply to the attitude of the fellow passengers said, "Everyone has only expectations from young men but no one understands their problems and pains. The real issue is the lack of awareness of men's issue and unnecessary negative portrayal of men in media and otherwise. These problems can only be solved if men too have a ministry for their welfare and a national commission for themselves. The Govt. of India should think about it"'

Adoption rulings may boost birth father's rights

anthony · 16 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Adoptive parents often don't worry much about challenges from an alleged birth father who wasn't married to the mother.

If the man didn't meet the 30-day deadline for signing the state's putative-father registry, offer support during the pregnancy or establish paternity before the adoption was filed, he might have little chance to halt the placement.

But two recent Ohio Supreme Court rulings in favor of birth fathers are putting putative-father laws on shaky ground, some observers say.

"I don't think it's hit people yet just how pervasive this might be," said Susan Eisenman, an Upper Arlington adoption lawyer. "If the guy doesn't want the adoption to go forward, all he has to do is file a paternity suit. Even if he's done nothing for the child, he can stop it."
...

In the two cases the court decided by 4-3 rulings last month, neither father had paternity legally determined before the adoption proceedings began, according to Ohio Supreme Court documents.

One man, whose child was placed for private adoption in Lucas County, had signed the registry on time. Another had not signed the registry but had been involved with the mother and sought to contest the adoption of his daughter by the woman's new husband in Hamilton County.

Kenneth Cahill, attorney for the biological father in the Hamilton County case, said his client had an established relationship with his child. The girl was nearly 2 years old by the time her new stepfather filed to adopt.

"The legislative history of the putative-father registry didn't fit the facts of this case," Cahill said. "To use a technicality to say that a parent-child relationship is going to be terminated doesn't sit well."'

Putting a happy face on having no dad

rlaspari · 16 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I have nothing to say. This is just too awful for words. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (CBS/AP) It's a sign of the times if ever there was one.

A New York woman who's moving to Florida has been ordered to use the Skype computer program so her children can have long-distance, on-line visitation with their father.

State Supreme Court Justice Jerry Garguilo made the ruling after Debra Baker of Coram, N.Y., told the court she is moving to Venice, Fla. The unemployed bookkeeper explained her house is in foreclosure.

Garguilo ordered the Bakers' children, ages 6 and 9, to communicate three times a week with their father on Long Island using the video-conferencing program.'

UK: Men paid less than their wives are 'five times more likely to cheat'

Broadsword · 16 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Well-paid wives beware - men who are financially dependent on their other halves are more likely to be unfaithful, research shows.

And the greater the earning gap, the more likely the man is to cheat, the study suggests.

It found that house husbands whose wives work all day were five times more likely to have an affair than those who contribute an equal amount of money to the partnership.

It is unclear why but it may be that their male pride is wounded by their wife or live-in girlfriend being more successful than them - and having an affair is a way of reasserting their masculinity.

Some house husbands may find the temptation of being surrounded by 'yummy mummies' on school runs just too much to bear.

With recent British research revealing that nearly at third of women are earning more than their men, the finding could raise suspicion in millions of homes.'

Pop star 'sorry' for HIV deceit

anthony · 17 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Nadja Benaissa, 28, was appearing at a court in Darmstadt, near Frankfurt.

The former girl band singer is accused of having unprotected sex on five occasions without letting her lovers know she was infected with the virus, which causes AIDS.

One of her partners was subsequently confirmed as being HIV positive.

Benaissa is facing between six months and ten years in prison.

The ex-member of all-female pop group No Angels, was arrested last April and charged in February this year with causing bodily harm.'

Murder charges sought against mom in children's deaths

anthony · 17 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- Unemployed, single and apparently fed up with criticism from her mother, a 29-year-old Orangeburg, South Carolina, woman suffocated her two toddlers with her bare hands before strapping them into car seats and submerging her car in a river, authorities said Tuesday.

Shaquan Duley is facing two counts of murder in the deaths of her sons, ages 1 and 2, said Orangeburg County Sheriff Larry Williams. She is set to appear in court Wednesday.

"She was a mother that was unemployed. She had no means of taking care of her children," Williams told reporters. "She lives with her mother and her mother was a very, I guess, firm individual. ... She often talked with her daughter about, I guess, maybe being more of a mother or being more reliable."

Mother and daughter argued the night before the children's bodies were found early Monday in Duley's Chrysler sedan, submerged in the Edisto River, he said.'

Million Father March helps promote education

anthony · 17 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'GARY Keanu Patterson knows why men are important in his life.

"The father or father figure will try to keep you out of trouble," the 14-year-old freshman at West Side Freshman Academy said. "He will lead you away from drugs, alcohol and having a child before it's time."

Patterson joined elected officials, school representatives and local leaders at Gary's Boys & Girls Club on Monday to promote the Million Father March. The event, which begins on the first day of school, calls on men to walk children to school and continue their involvement in and out of the classroom throughout the school year.

In Gary, students return to school Wednesday.

"Statistics show when a father is involved in a child's life, they fare better in school," said Bennie Muhammad, executive director of the Gary Commission on the Social Status of Black Males, which is organizing the city's participation in the event. "Women make women and men make men. We're asking men to be a part of their child's life."'

New York Schools get a big fat F when it comes to teaching black male students, report says

anthony · 17 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The city is one of the 10 worst-performing large school districts in the nation when it comes to African-American boys.

The Schott Foundation for Public Education study looked at graduation rates, performance on national tests and participation in gifted and Advanced Placement classes - and the picture is devastating.

National tests showed 9% of New York's black male eighth-graders were reading at grade level in 2009, compared with 10% in 2003.

In 2008, only 28% of male blacks graduated high school in the city, the same rate as in Philadelphia and Jefferson Parish in New Orleans. White male graduation rates in New York were 50% that year. The city graduation rates were based on the rigorous Regents diploma.'

"Princess culture is in danger of turning a generation of girls into overspending narcissists"

Scottie · 17 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A communications professor at Creighton University in Nebraska, Shuler decided to take a sabbatical to study what academics are starting to call "princess culture" -- young girls inundated by films, books, toys, clothes and enabled by friends and family who encourage them to see themselves as bona fide blue-bloods.

Little girls have always swanned around in mom's castoff party frocks while pretending to boss the staff. But observers are concerned about what princess culture is doing to little girls. And what will happen when little princesses grow up to be insufferable adolescents and adults who demand constant adulation and access to a bottomless pot of spending money.

"When she's 15 and you say 'She's a princess,' that's not good. So where's the transition?" asks personality psychologist Jean Twenge, co-author of The Narcissism.
...
It's easy to think the corporate world is simply imposing products on an unsuspecting world, but it's more complicated than that, says Cook. Disney's princess merchandising touched a nerve that already existed, as well as a sweet spot for selling stuff to little girls and their elders who are willing to extend princess-hood far past the primary school years.

"There was something going on with these girls," Cook says. "So many young girls want to maintain the princess persona past the boundary of playtime. Part of play can be powerfully educational and transformative. But eventually you have to put it down. What concerns me is the lack of boundaries."'

F&F: 2nd CAMPAIGN: Ask Gov. Schwarzenegger to Sign AB 2416

Matt · 17 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Short version: At Fathers and Families we receive many letters from divorced or separated military servicemembers with painful but preventable family law problems. California AB 2416 will help protect the loving bonds that servicemembers share with their children—to write a letter to Governor Schwarzenegger asking him to sign AB 2416, click here.

MorenoPlease send your letter whether you are a California resident or not. Your letter will be hand-delivered to the Governor's office by our Sacramento legislative representative. You may use our form letter or write your own.

Full version: At Fathers and Families we receive many letters from divorced or separated military servicemembers with painful but preventable family law problems.

Many parents serving in Afghanistan, Iraq, or other distant locales are anguished that custodial parents have impeded or completely eliminated their contact with their children. When the deployed soldier calls his children at the court-specified time, nobody answers. Letters are written, but they never reach the children.'

The Picture for Men: Superhero or Slacker

Anonymous · 18 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

The Picture for Men: Superhero or Slacker: Recent scholarship and popular journalism both suggest an unappealing future for American boys: You're screwed.

At the end of the fourth season of the critically loved and chronically underwatched Friday Night Lights, the former football star Tim Riggins martyrs himself for the sake of his brother and newborn nephew. For much of the season, he and his brother Billy have been stripping down stolen cars and making the type of fast cash they cannot make legitimately. Tim wants the quick cash to fund his desire to buy a bit of sun-drenched Texas countryside, and Billy needs it for his new duties as a father.

...

In the show, the character of Tim Riggins is a poster child for what Hanna Rosin has provocatively referred to, in a recent Atlantic cover story, as "The End of Men." Rosin argues that in our postindustrial society, women are succeeding in a way in which men cannot keep up. Women are attending and graduating from college and professional schools at a higher rate, and women are entering and ascending in the work force in greater numbers and more successfully.'

Death of infant twins ruled homicide

Matt · 19 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Thirteen-month-old twins Kimora and Kamari Roberson were underweight and overheated when they died in their Far South Side home, officials said on Friday.

The sisters, who each weighed only about 13 pounds, died of hyperthermia, environmental exposure and failure to thrive due to maternal neglect, according to the Cook County medical examiner's office.

The deaths were ruled homicides, and the babies' mother, Regina Lofton, 21, was charged on Friday with felony child endangerment resulting in the death of a child.'

Australia: Jailed mums keeping in touch with kids

Matt · 19 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tonight in New South Wales, more than 700 women will spend the night behind bars, and some will have their children in custody with them.

The mothers and children's program at the Emu Plains Correctional Centre in western Sydney has been operating since the late 1990s.

The minimum security complex has now started a program to help women maintain a link with their children on the outside.

Nearly two years ago, Cindy MacDonald was convicted of firearms offences, and since then she has been held inside the Emu Plains Correctional Centre.'

Body of French Chef Found Stuffed in Freezer

Matt · 19 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(Aug. 12) -- The former girlfriend of a famous French chef has confessed to punching him to death and then hiding his body in a freezer for the past two years, prosecutors say.

The police raided the apartment the two used to share in Lyon, southwest France, after Guylene Collober, 51, confessed to her daughter on Tuesday that "something unfortunate" had happened to the 71-year-old Jean-Francois Poinard in 2008, The Globe and Mail reported today.

The daughter told police. When they arrived at the apartment, Collober collapsed in tears saying, "I think you'll find what you're looking for."
Jean-Francois Poinard - his body found stuffed in freezer.

The body of Poinard, a retired restaurateur who was regarded as one of the country's best chefs in the 1970s and 1980s, was found in a fetal position wrapped in plastic bags, The Globe and Mail reported.'

Phyllis Schlafly: The Feminist Left Goes Global on Our Money

Matt · 19 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Click here to find out more!

Just when we thought President Obama had reached the ultimate in seizing extravagant power by appointing a Health Care Czar (Donald Berwick) to exercise life-and-death surveillance over Medicare and Medicaid, Congress is now trying to give him a czar with global powers. It would be a czar over worldwide women's issues.

Based in the State Department, her statutory title will be "Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues." Her task will be to assure a "gender integration" perspective in all State Department policies and programs.

The breath-taking reach of her powers is openly stated in the bill's first section: "The Ambassador shall coordinate and advise, and where relevant lead -- (1) State Department activities and policies, including as they affect programs and funding relating to prevention and response, including gender integration and women's development internationally as relates to prevention and response."'

Steep Drop Seen in Circumcisions in U.S.

Matt · 19 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite a worldwide campaign for circumcision to slow the spread of AIDS, the rate of circumcision among American baby boys appears to be declining.

A little-noted presentation by a federal health researcher last month at the International AIDS Conference in Vienna suggested that the rate had fallen precipitously — to fewer than half of all boys born in conventional hospitals from 2006 to 2009, from about two-thirds through the 1980s and ’90s.

Last week, officials at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention cautioned that the figures in the presentation were not definitive. But they are already stirring a sharp debate on the Internet.

The numbers were presented to the AIDS conference by a C.D.C. researcher, Charbel E. El Bcheraoui. The presentation was not covered by any mainstream news outlets, but a report by the news service Elsevier Global Medical News, along with a photograph of a slide from the presentation, quickly made the rounds of the blogosphere.'

Thanks to IA for the heads-up. Despite all the push for MGM from "scientists", it's good to see the public rejecting the attempts at brainwashing and sticking with common sense. Nonetheless, we're not done 'til MGM is done.

Paris teens charged in bare-breasted robberies

anthony · 19 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Paris, France (CNN) -- French police believe they've gotten to the bottom of a series of robberies in which teenage girls exposed their breasts to distract men withdrawing money from Paris cash machines.

Two teenagers have been charged with three hold-ups, but they will be prosecuted as juveniles since they are under 18, according to the Paris prosecutor's office.

Police say that on August 7, a man inserted a card into a cash machine in central Paris to withdraw money when two young females approached him and asked for money. The girls waved a newspaper at the man in an attempt to distract him, but the technique didn't work.

So the girls tried another strategy: One of them bared her breasts and put her hand on the man's genitals while the other took the opportunity to withdraw 300 euros, police said.'

endabuse.org sets sites on teenage and pre-teen boys

Matt · 19 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Teen boys wearing sweats with “Awaiting Instructions” emblazoned on the front? What is all this crap from something called the Family Violence Prevention Fund about?

“Respect Girls”? what do you think of this horrible ad de-balling innocent teen and pre-teen looking boys? Why should young teens wear t-shirts or sweats with the words: “Awaiting Instructions” pasted across the front?

Since when are young boys abusing anyone? Do these children look like abusers? This gives new meaning to child abuse!

“Awaiting Instructions”? From whom? For What? Where did this come from? What did this poor kid do to be branded an abuser and told to await instructions?

Looks like the folks at the Family Violence Prevention Fund, (endabuse.org) want to turn our young boys into feminized Zombies, ball-less geldings, waiting to be awoken by a superior race and given some type of instructions.'

Allstate Foundation propagates false DV stats

Matt · 20 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Nearly everyone has heard the expression, "You're in good hands with Allstate." And now the Allstate Insurance Company has set up a domestic violence grant program.

But its website features the usual parade of one-sided and flawed statistics:

"Each day in the U.S. three women die as the result of domestic violence."
"More than one in four women will experience domestic violence in her lifetime."

To see the real truth of domestic violence, see this Fact Sheet: "Seven Key Facts about Domestic Violence"

Complain to Allstate now: 1-800-255-7828
Or email: http://messaging.allstate.com/corp.aspx

But don't complain just once -- do it every hour today until Allstate posts balanced information on its website.

WikiLeaks Founder Falsely Charged with Rape in Sweden

Stinger503 · 21 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Update: Swedish prosecutors have canceled the arrest warrant issued for Assange. “Chief prosector Eva Finné has come to the desicion that Julian Assange is not suspected of rape,” the Swedish Prosecution Authority has announced.

...

“According to Expressen, the Australian is facing charges leveled from two women. The media report suggests that Assange has been charged in absentia, based on recent claims leveled against him,” reports OneIndia this morning."'

Men Wear Bras So Women Can Go Topless

anthony · 22 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Women in nine U.S. cities -- Seattle, New York, Chicago, Miami, Los Angeles, Denver, Honolulu, San Francisco and Austin, Texas -- will gather in public spots on Aug. 22 to put the hot-button issue front and center by wearing little more than strategically placed stickers.

In addition, male supporters of the cause will show their support by wearing bras and bikinis.

"It's a matter of fairness," Go Topless director Nadine Gary said. "We want equal topless rights for all or none."

Gary believes that the right for women to go topless should be guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution. "The Supreme Court won't stop us," she added

Although other countries, such as Gary's country of origin, France, tolerate topless women, she wants it to be in the legal books so there is no wiggle room.
...
Meanwhile, Gary is getting support from, not surprisingly, men.

"Guys are great," she said. "They understand this issue, and we get lots of cooperation from males."'

UK: Woman who urinated on graves of servicemen sought

Matt · 22 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. They died for her right to piss on their graves and then have sex in public nearby? Not so sure about that. Excerpt:

'A hunt was on Sunday for the woman branded "Britain's most disgusting person" for urinating on a war memorial after she fled court following a public shaming by elderly veterans.

An arrest warrant is out for Wendy Lewis, 32, who was given a "guard of dishonour" by angry veterans when she appeared at Blackpool Magistrates Court.

She was caught on security cameras relieving herself on the seaside town's Cenotaph, before performing a sex act on a man nearby.

Lewis was found guilty of outraging public decency and was due to be sentenced Friday.

But after turning up 40 minutes late at court, she vanished before her case began.

Veterans wearing smart uniforms and campaign medals lined up outside to give her a slow handclap. They shouted "Disgusting!" at she went inside.

"It is unforgivable what she did in the face of these dead men," said former Royal Marine James Baker, 88, who was one of few from his unit who survived the Normandy Landings.

"It can be neither forgiven nor forgotten by the ex-services' community and the wider community as well.

"If she had expressed remorse, and meant it, we could forgive then, if not forget. But I'm sorry, she is just beyond the pale."'

Domestic Violence- An Introduction

Matt · 22 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Jeremy S.:

Domestic Violence- An Introduction

Part 1 of 3
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=HO5kLprp3Qg

Part 2 of 3
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Nu7z_v2NNPI

Part 3 of 3
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=QNf4hmWBtrk

These are must-see clips.

How Women Batter Men and the Role of the Feminist State

Matt · 22 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

A study discussed here, while the study link is here (.pdf file). Excerpt:

'Over the last twenty-five years, leading sociologists have repeatedly found that men and women commit violence at similar rates.
...
...the literature consistently suggests that only men commit domestic violence. Either explicitly, or more often implicitly, through the failure to address the subject in any objective manner, female violence is denied, defended and minimized.

I assert in Part III that today's refusal to react is a product of the feminist control over the issue of domestic violence. Female violence presents both a threat to feminist theory as well as to the practice of domestic violence law. Notwithstanding such concerns, today's myopic understanding of domestic violence has serious implications.'

CNN reporter finds it amusing when boys cry

Anonymous · 23 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Chelsea, who until recently honed her pitching arm in Plant City, Florida's Little League program, told CNN Sunday that she feels "really honored and blessed" to be recognized on a national level at such an early age.

In addition to her Hall of Fame achievement, Chelsea was also recently featured on ESPN's "E:60" series.

Chelsea, who says she has been pitching since she was 7 years old, boasts a fastball in the mid-60s (miles per hour) and a baffling knuckleball that has been known to make her male opponents shed a tear.

"Yeah, when I strike them out with the knuckleball, sometimes they'll throw their helmets and start crying," she laughs. "It's just really funny to watch."

Reporter giggles happily at around 1:20.

Autism: A woman's face on a largely male problem

rlaspari · 24 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

NPR has a tendency to subtly favor women over men. I remember a story they ran about the current recession -- which has affected men more heavily than women -- where they still tied it into a woman's story somehow.

Today, I saw a piece they ran on autism here. It's a decent piece overall, and autism unquestionably affects women. However, autism affects males at least 4 to 5 times more often than females. Yet, NPR chose to put a female face on autism.

Also, in this piece it's clear NPR spoke with researcher Simon Baron-Cohen. However, NPR never mentioned one of his main theories regarding autism -- that it can be viewed as a sort of "excessive maleness" in the brain. Baron-Cohen even theorizes that a possible cause of autism may be excessive testosterone exposure while in the womb.

There is no mention of any of this in this story. There is no indication that autism is a profoundly male problem.

F & F Alimony Reform Bill Goes to Governor; Schwarzenegger Signs F & F's SB 1188

Matt · 24 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CA Legislature Passes F & F's SB 1482 to Protect Alimony Obligors from Abuses

Many alimony obligors assert that their exes are voluntarily unemployed or underemployed, or are artificially lowering their earning capacity because they'd rather keep collecting large amounts of tax-free alimony.

Senator Rod Wright's (D-Los Angeles) SB 1482, which recently passed the full California legislature and is now on Governor Schwarzenegger's desk for signature, helps solve this problem. The bill allows obligors to request vocational examinations for the recipients of alimony payments, and requires judges to follow the examiner's estimate of the recipient's earning ability when calculating alimony.'

Plotting ex-wife gets 7-14 years in jail

Matt · 24 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BRENTWOOD – Kristin Ruggiero will spend 7 to 14 years in state prison for what police say was part of a years-long ploy to use the criminal justice system against her ex-husband, who was thrown in jail and nearly lost his career during a bitter divorce.

Judge Kenneth McHugh said Ruggiero's attempt to set up her ex-husband and use the legal system as a weapon was unlike any other case he has seen.

"There's a lot of people, usually women, who have been subjected to abuse by their significant others," McHugh said, during Ruggiero's sentencing yesterday. "As a result of her actions, their cases, their safety, their security has been damaged. The web for this is much greater than what has just happened to Mr. Ruggiero."
...
While Jeffrey Ruggiero was being investigated, his ex-wife called him at all hours and taunted him over the phone, according to court testimony.

"She mocked him. She laughed at him. (She said) 'I took all your money, I took your daughter and now I am going to take your career'," Assistant County Attorney Jerome Blanchard said in court yesterday.'

Rape charge stayed amid questions

Stinger503 · 25 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A strange turn of events saw the Crown stay a sexual assault charge following four days of trial and after the accused man had waited 26 months in custody for a judge and jury to hear his case.

James Ferris, 36, walked out of Superior Court a free man yesterday when the prosecutor told Justice Kim Carpenter-Gunn the Crown had re-evaluated its case in light of new developments and no longer believed there was a reasonable prospect of obtaining a conviction.

The rape trial went off the rails earlier yesterday when Ferris's lawyer, Peter Boushy, told the judge what he'd learned from a colleague in the legal community about the 27-year-old female complainant.'

Another case of deadly LGBT domestic violence in Massachusetts

Matt · 25 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Massachusetts murder has once again focused attention on LGBT domestic violence.

A Brockton woman walked into that city's police station on Aug. 9 and allegedly confessed to killing her ex-girlfriend's Alcoholics Anonymous sponsor because the woman allegedly had come between the couple.

Eunice Field, 54, told police she killed Lorraine Wachsman, 62, at Wachsman's Bridgewater condo, according to Assistant District Attorney Thomas Flanagan.

Field left a note for her ex-girlfriend, Renee Williams, in the Brockton apartment they shared stating that she killed Wachsman, a retired school teacher, "for taking away the love of her life", Flanagan said at Field's Aug. 10 arraignment. The prosecutor said Field stabbed Wachsman three or four times in the back and neck with a serrated knife.'

Boston jury convicts woman of setting fire that killed girlfriend's two children

Matt · 25 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Boston jury on Feb. 16 convicted a woman for setting a fire that killed her girlfriend's two young daughters nearly two years ago.

The Suffolk County jury convicted Nicole Chuminski on two counts of second-degree murder in connection with Acia and Sophia Johnson's deaths. The panel also convicted her of arson for setting the blaze and two counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon (smoke and flames) for injuries the girls' mother and brother sustained.

A judge will sentence Chuminski on Feb. 18. She faces a mandatory life sentence with the possibility of parole after 15 years on each murder conviction.'

Business Insider: 15% Of Women Have Slept With Their Bosses, 37% Promoted For It

Matt · 25 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Research from the Center for Work-Life Policy shows mid-level, professional women need powerful, senior executives to help promote them to the next level of management.

The problem is this: More often than not, superiors are males who are married.

Enter, sex.

In that same CWLP study, 34% of executive women claim they know a female colleague who has had an affair with a boss. Furthermore, 15% of women at the director level or above admitted to having affairs themselves.

And worse, 37% claim the action was rewarded: they said that women involved in affairs received a career boost as a result.'

German court finds female HIV singer guilty; no jail time

anthony · 26 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DARMSTADT, Germany — A German girl band singer broke down in tears Thursday as a court found her guilty of causing bodily harm to her ex-boyfriend by having unprotected sex with him despite knowing she was infected with HIV. She was not sentenced to jail time.

Nadja Benaissa, a member of No Angels, was given a two-year suspended prison sentence and 300 hours community service after she was convicted in a Darmstadt administrative court. She faced a possible ten years behind bars.

The court ruled that the 28-year-old had infected a former boyfriend with the virus that causes AIDS by having unprotected sex with him.

"We have to remember that she was a lot younger than she is now, she had a turbulent life, and the acts were committed a long time ago," he told Associated Press Television News. "I think a suspended sentence is justified."'

Wal-Mart asks Supreme Court to block giant gender bias lawsuit

anthony · 26 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Retail giant Wal-Mart on Wednesday asked the US Supreme Court to overturn a lower court ruling allowing more than 1.5 million women employees of the company to join together in what would become the largest class-action employment lawsuit in history.

The lawsuit filed by six women in 2001 charges that Wal-Mart engaged in gender discrimination by paying female employees less than men, and in passing women over for promotions that went to men. It seeks billions of dollars in damages.

Gender discrimination lawsuits are usually litigated one employee at a time. But courts may allow plaintiffs who were harmed under similar circumstances by the same person or company to join together in a common class of litigants to pursue their lawsuit.'

Australia: Honoured campaigner forced to sleep in car

Matt · 27 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A man recognised with one of the nation's highest honours for his work with divorced and separated fathers is now living on the street.

Tony Miller, the founder of Dads in Distress, will accept his Order of Australia medal in Sydney today.

He says he has been sleeping in his car on the New South Wales mid-north coast because he lost his housing and is unable to work due to stress.

Mr Miller says there an urgent need nationally for refuges for homeless men.

"It's not about me," he said.

"The reality is there's a lot of blokes out there, a lot of people out there that are homeless and I'm asking the government to look at that situation.

"Where are the men's shelters in this country? There's women's shelters all over the country and rightly so, but there are no men's shelters in this country. Where does a bloke go when it all hits the roof?"'

Woman Charged With Slashing Leonardo DiCaprio's Face to Stand Trial

anthony · 27 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LOS ANGELES – A judge ordered a woman to stand trial on a charge of slashing Leonardo DiCaprio's face with glass during a 2005 party.

Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Edmund Willcox Clarke ordered Aretha Wilson to face one count of assault with a deadly weapon. The charge includes an allegation that Wilson, 40, caused great bodily injury.

The details and extent of DiCaprio's injuries were not made public, although the judge, who has reviewed photos of the injuries to the actor's ear and neck, said Thursday that "this would not be an injury that would be called trivial or moderate, in my view."'

British Airways changes 'discriminatory' seating policy for men

Matt · 29 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'British Airways has changed its seating policy after a businessman complained of being treated like a "child molester" when sitting next to a boy he did not know.

The airline has confirmed to The Sunday Telegraph it has altered its procedures to protect unaccompanied minors – the aviation industry term for children flying without a parent or guardian.

It follows the case of Mirko Fischer, a hedge fund manager who was told to move seats by cabin crew under an internal rule that prevented adult males sitting next to unaccompanied children.'

IA: August News: U.S. Circumcision Rate Drops to Just 33%!

Matt · 29 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This email action form is from an IA newsletter:

'The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) Task Force on Circumcision has been meeting to finalize its policy on routine male circumcision. Having recently retracted its policy statement calling for a lift of the Federal ban on female genital cutting – and with U.S. circumcision rates at an all-time low – the AAP must now stand up and protect the rights of ALL children to an intact body.

While the AAP prepares to go public with its statement, it's critical that it hear directly from people who oppose circumcision. Remind them that it's wrong – morally, medically, and ethically – and that doctors took an oath to "do no harm.'

U of Chicago Social Srvc Admin report: Black Men Among Most Disadvantaged, Least Helped in U.S.

fondueguy · 29 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

A blog post here, repors on a new book from the University of Chicago's School of Social Service Service Administration. Excerpt:

'Among disadvantaged people in the United States, the most needy and least helped are probably African-American men, according to a new book from the University of Chicago's School of Social Service Administration.
...
The book is a collection of studies, which details the disadvantages that black men face and suggests ways they can be helped. The contributors are leading scholars in social work and other related fields from around the country. Among the findings reported in the book:

• Black male youths are likely to grow up in single-parent homes. The boys often don't have fathers residing in the home to serve as role models. Without paternal involvement, boys are more likely to develop ideas about what it means to be a man based on negative media portrayals and depictions, which leads them to be emotionally uninvolved and apprehensive.
...

• Black boys are more likely to experience difficulty in school and are less likely to graduate than any other group.
...
Despite their problems, few programs are designed specifically to help black males, and social workers may not view them as part the families and communities that the workers serve, with the result that black males' individual needs go unaddressed.
...
"Many communities discourage single men from living in public housing, which signals negative value and worth as individuals and members of families who need places to live," Johnson said. The plan can help men move forward and become fully participating members of society."'

It's just another hole in Feminism's supposed plight for "diversity" and the underrepresented.

Allstate not listening-- time for action

Matt · 30 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Last week we alerted persons about Allstate Insurance Company's flawed DV statistics: http://www.allstate.com/foundation/about-domestic-violence.aspx. Many responded, but as seen from the four responses below, Allstate still doesn't understand that DoJ crime reports provide a biased depiction of DV.

So folks, it's time we send a powerful message to Allstate: CANCEL YOUR POLICY…AND DO IT NOW!

++++++++++++++++++

Dear Mr. A:

You recently contacted us regarding the Allstate Foundation's on-line resources about ending domestic violence, and your e-mail was brought to my attention. Thank you for sharing your feedback, which is important to us. I would like to take a moment to personally respond to your concerns.

In regard to The Allstate Foundation Domestic Violence Program, I think it would be helpful to first share some background information regarding our involvement with this worthy cause. The Allstate Foundation joined with the National Network to End Domestic Violence (NNEDV) in 2005. Since this partnership began, we have been committed to promoting economic empowerment strategies that can help to reduce the domestic abuse that plagues many households. Also, the programs the Allstate Foundation supports have positively influenced many lives and were chosen based on research provided by the United States Department of Justice.

However, please keep in mind that even though the Allstate Foundation is unable to financially support certain programs it doesn't mean we don't recognize that both men and women may be living in abusive situations.

We appreciate your comments, and we thank you for taking the time to contact us.

Honest feedback like yours helps us to more fully understand the issues that are being faced by so many every day.

Edith Briggs
Allstate Customer Resolution Specialist
1-800-570-6206 EXT 4561

++++++++++++++++++++++

Dear Mr. B:

You recently contacted us regarding the Allstate Foundation's on-line resources about ending domestic violence, and your e-mail was brought to my attention. Thank you for sharing your feedback, which is important to us. I would like to take a moment to personally respond to your concerns.

In regard to The Allstate Foundation Domestic Violence Program, I think it would be helpful to first share some background information regarding our involvement with this worthy cause. The Allstate Foundation joined with the National Network to End Domestic Violence (NNEDV) in 2005. Since this partnership began, we have been committed to promoting economic empowerment strategies that can help to reduce the domestic abuse that plagues many households. Also, the programs the Allstate Foundation supports have positively influenced many lives and were chosen based on research provided by the United States Department of Justice.

Also, thank you for suggesting Fiebert ML. References Examining Assaults by Women on their Spouses or Male Partners. California State University, 2010. (http://www.csulb.edu/~mfiebert/assault.htm), Archer J. Sex Differences in Aggression Between Heterosexual Partners: A Meta-Analytic Review. Psychological Bulletin Vol. 126, No. 5, 2000), (Stith S, Smith DB, Penn CE, et al. Intimate partner physical abuse perpetration and victimization risk factors: A meta-analytic review, and Aggression and Violent Behavior Vol. 10, 2004. pp. 65-98) as additional resources related to domestic violence. However, since we do not currently support these organizations, we can not provide links for them on our web pages.

However, please keep in mind that even though the Allstate Foundation is unable to financially support certain programs it doesn't mean we don't recognize that both men and women may be living in abusive situations.

We appreciate your comments, and we thank you for taking the time to contact us.

Honest feedback like yours helps us to more fully understand the issues that are being faced by so many every day.

I'm going to close your file for now but please reply to this e-mail at your earliest convenience if you have any questions. I can be reached between the hours of 9:15 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. Eastern Standard Time.

Sincerely,

Victor Rice

Allstate Customer Resolution Specialist

CES@Roanoke ASAP
1-800-570-6206, x4523
1-866-224-5548, fax
abz6l@allstate.com

++++++++++++++++++++++

Dear Mr. C,

You recently contacted us regarding the Allstate Foundation's on-line resources about ending domestic violence, and your email was brought to my attention. Thank you for sharing your feedback, which is important to us. I would like to take a moment to personally respond to your concerns.

In regard to The Allstate Foundation Domestic Violence Program, I think it would be helpful to first share some background information regarding our involvement with this worthy cause. The Allstate Foundation joined with the National Network to End Domestic Violence (NNEDV) in 2005. Since this partnership began, we have been committed to promoting economic empowerment strategies that can help to reduce the domestic abuse that plagues many households. Also, the programs the Allstate Foundation supports have positively influenced many lives and were chosen based on research provided by the United States Department of Justice.

However, please keep in mind that even though the Allstate Foundation is unable to financially support certain programs it doesn't mean we don't recognize that both men and women may be living in abusive situations.

We appreciate your comments, and we thank you for taking the time to contact us.

Honest feedback like yours helps us to more fully understand the issues that are being faced by so many every day.

I'm going to close your file for now but please reply to this e-mail at your earliest convenience if you have any questions. I can be reached between the hours of 9:00 am and 5:30 pm Eastern Standard Time.

Sincerely,

DEJA HATCH
CUSTOMER RESOLUTION SPECIALIST
1-800-995-2572 EXT. 4573
ALLSTATE INSURANCE COMPANY

++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++

Dear Dr. D,

Thank you for taking the time to look into our domestic violence program and for your clear passion to fight this issue that impacts so many people. We try to keep our program gender-neutral and certainly do not wish to exclude any victims of domestic violence, male or female. We believe our program and website reflect this commitment. While we acknowledge that domestic violence impacts both men and women, our work is guided by studies by the U.S. Department of Justice studies and many others showing that women comprise the vast majority of domestic violence victims. One such study found that women make up 84% of spouse abuse victims and 86% of abuse victims by a boyfriend or girlfriend.[1]

We hope this helps to clarify our position on the issue. Thank you for your comments.

Sincerely,

The Allstate Foundation

Australia: More Rorts for "Victims" of DV - Female Ones Only Of Course

Anonymous · 31 August 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The gravy train for victims of DV (female only) just gets longer and longer here in Australia. Universities in Australia are mostly publicly-funded so it is only a small step until this becomes a mandatory benefit for all female public servants. Just another way for taxpayers' (mostly men) money to be handed over to females. Of course no mention of male victims of DV even though it is becoming almost impossible for the media, governments and academics to keep denying the irrefutable truth. -- Great Southern Lander

Excerpt:

'Victims of domestic violence will get an extra 20 days of paid leave a year as part of a historic clause in an enterprise agreement.

In a first for Australian workplaces, the Public Service Association of NSW has been negotiating with the University of NSW to allow its workers to take special leave to attend court, counselling or a doctor.

The union has also written to Premier Kristina Keneally, urging her to include the domestic violence provisions in the award that covers many of the state's 300,000 public servants.

Ms Keneally asked the Department of Premier and Cabinet to meet the union. Preliminary talks were held this month to discuss a statewide domestic violence clause.

The clause will also ensure bosses cannot sack or suspend an employee if their attendance or work performance suffers because of domestic violence. Human resources staff will receive training in domestic violence issues.'

Ed. note: For those not familiar with the term "rort": http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Rort

UK: Boys 'being held back by women teachers' as gender stereotypes are reinforced

Broadsword · 1 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Women teachers are holding back boys by reprimanding them for typically male behaviour, according to a study out today.

They are reinforcing stereotypes that boys are ‘silly’ in class, refuse to ‘sit nicely like the girls’ and are more likely to indulge in ‘schoolboy pranks’.

Women teachers may also unwittingly perpetuate low expectations of boys’ academic achievement and encourage girls to work harder by letting them think they are cleverer.
...

The study of primary schools in the county suggests that under-performance among boys in most national exams could be linked to lower expectations.

The research mainly implicates women teachers, since nearly 90 per cent of primary school teachers are female. It warned that school staff find boys’ play, such as wielding toy guns, ‘particularly challenging and difficult’.

Boys are punished and urged to conform to a more feminine style of play instead of being taught how to play responsibly with their preferred toys.'

Gay men and the men's rights movement

Matt · 1 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Latest from "A Voice For Men" here. If you're a gay man, don't let the article headline fool you. Read on. Excerpt:

'If you have spent any real amount of time reading the articles, and in particular the comments in men's movement forums, then you are aware of an often anti-homosexual attitude that has been prevalent for quite some time.

On a political level, some of the resentment is understandable. Gay activists have aligned themselves with feminists, and, while marching in misandric lockstep, have draped themselves in victim couture and made their grab for special government considerations. The resultant draconian intrusions and bullying on behalf of gays and other special interest groups is a core issue in the men's movement, and for good reason.

They have no idea who their real enemies are. No, not a freaking clue. And that ignorance sets up them up to lose more rights than they could ever hope to gain.
...

Gay men have invented new technology, built cities, researched cures for disease, made profound contributions to the arts, literature and philosophy, excelled at athletics and participated wholly in every aspect of the development of civilization as we know it.
...
... We live in a culture that doesn‘t regard gay men as men. So, it would stand to reason that a movement of social awareness and enlightenment, proffering that men who are gay are no less men than men who are straight, would have been in order. And it would have served a purpose not dissimilar from what we see in the men's movement today- to wit, that holding men to standards and expectations based on sex, while relieving women of their corresponding expectations, has led directly to their systematic, conscripted misuse as human beings.'

Zimbabwe: Man gets death threats for refusing circumcision

Minuteman · 2 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Zimbabwean man has fled his homestead after receiving death threats for refusing to be circumcised, it has been reported

Mr Patrick Chauke (46), who comes from Masekesa village under Chief Tshovane in Chiredzi, said he fled his home last month after receiving death threats from the chief and his council for refusing to be circumcised.

“I am a victim of harassment and fear that they will kill me. On 27 July this year, the chief sent his man to take me to the bush for circumcision and threatened to kill me if I refused,” he said.'

Creem: Acting in the best interests of children of divorce

Anonymous · 2 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Amid all the acrimony that has been recently raised by media coverage of fathers' rights activists seeking divorce reform, it is crucial to keep focus on the single most important tenet underpinning the entire discussion: the best interests of the children of divorce must be the priority in determining appropriate child custody arrangements.

Based on what you've recently seen or heard, or if you read last week's guest column by Ned Holstein, you might conclude, because I practice law part time when not engaged in my full-time job as your state Senator, that I am so conflicted that the only interests I take into account are those of divorce lawyers!

Not only have these claims been dismissed by both the State Ethics Commission and Common Cause (a leading government watchdog organization), but in my one year as Senate chairman of Judiciary, I appointed a task force that I expect will write consensus alimony reform legislation to be taken up and hopefully passed by the Legislature in next year's session.

I support divorce law reform. I believe that the best way to achieve it is by bringing all involved parties together to respectfully consider their various viewpoints and work toward agreement. After all, that's what leadership is about — bringing people of differing views together to reach consensus so that we can all move successfully forward.'

Australia: Ombudsman finds domestic violence campaign 'misleading'

Matt · 3 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A national men's group is claiming victory over what it calls a feminist agenda on domestic violence.

An independent investigation has upheld the group's complaint about a public awareness campaign in South Australia.

The Ombudsman's inquiry found parts of the $870,000 campaign contained errors.

The Don't Cross The Line campaign has been running in newspapers, on television and radio and on a website.

The Ombudsman in South Australia found some statistics initially published on the site were false and misleading.'

Canadian Researcher: 'We must abandon the claim that the (family) court has been acting in children's best interests'

Anonymous · 3 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Glenn Sacks' blog, here. Excerpt:

'How many times have you heard or read the phrase "the best interests of the child?" If you read much about family law and family courts, the probable answer is "more times than I can count." Indeed, establish a Google Alert for the phrase and you'll get links to several articles, court cases, op-eds, etc. a day, every day of the week. In Canada the "best interests of the child" has been raised by the Supreme Court to a level of importance that trumps even constitutional considerations.

So, with the phrase in such common usage and so vital to custody decisions, you might think that it (a) means something and (b) those using it know what it means.

But to an astonishing degree, you'd be wrong on both counts. In fact, the phrase is more intuitive, a shoot-from-the-hip type of locution. It's like a Rohrschach inkblot test; the interpretation given to it by the user reveals more about the user than about the phrase itself. That's the point attorney Chris Gottlieb was making in the New York Times recently when she referred to determinations of the "best interests of the child" as being made "subjectively, inconsistently and often erroneously."'

Obama Administration Spending $63 Billion on ‘Woman-Centered’ Global Health Care Program

anthony · 3 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNSNews.com) – The Obama administration is focused not just on health-care reform in the United States – but also on improving health care systems around the world, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton announced on Monday.

The new plan has a “woman- and girl-centered approach,” according to an administration fact sheet.

Speaking at Johns Hopkins University, Clinton outlined the six-year, $63-billion Obama administration initiative to bring global health care services “to more people in more places.” The administration’s Global Health Initiative has “everything” to do with foreign policy, she said.
...
Clinton also said the administration was “moving beyond” the ABC (Abstinence, Be faithful, Correct contraceptive use) anti-AIDS approach adopted during the Bush years to an “A to Z approach to [HIV] prevention” that includes measures such as “male circumcision [and] the prevention of mother-to-child transmission” as well as better HIV screening and education.'

'Alpha-Male' Role in Hollywood Is a Dying Trend, Experts Say

anthony · 3 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So, is this shift in Hollywood's leading men from macho to meek a reflection of a changing society in which women are becoming more independent, earning more money and perhaps don't want a more dominant partner? It could be so, according to an article published earlier this year by the Wall Street Journal, based on studies by FaceResearch.org, the online psychology laboratory of the Face Research Laboratory at the University of Aberdeen in Scotland. The study concluded that the majority of the 4,800 female participants were more attracted to the more feminine-featured males.

"In America today, we're seeing a lot more boys disconnected with their own sense of masculinity, due in large part due to higher divorce rates, dad's working longer hours – the strong father figure is often not around and that's why the 'geek' has become much more mainstream," explained psychiatrist Dr. Paul Dobransky, author of "Masculinity Code."

However, Dobransky doesn't believe the ultra-masculine man is endangered – he's just evolving.

"Hollywood makes its movies to appeal to women, they're the prime consumers. Women want to see what empowers them, and the 'Rambo' type of film is not exactly food for the soul for ladies who can't really relate to it. [This] is why it's not made much anymore," he said. "These days, the superhero film is a substitute for the super-masculine action film."'

Carey Roberts: Domestic Violence Fairytales Threaten Constitutional Protections

anthony · 3 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kristin Ruggiero of New Hampshire figured it would be a slam dunk. The gambit worked like a charm during the divorce hearing; now she would bring the case to criminal court.

Her husband Jeffrey, an officer in the U.S. Coast Guard, was an incorrigible batterer, at least that's what she led to the judge to believe. That got him convicted of criminal threatening, and she won custody of their 7-year-old daughter.

But Kristin Ruggiero wasn't finished.

One day, the woman bragged to her startled ex, "I took all your money, I took your daughter, and now I'm going to take your career." She went out and purchased a disposable cell phone and registered it in Jeffrey's name. Then she sent herself a passel of threatening text messages.

Apparently Kristin didn't realize that in criminal court, allegations are subjected to a higher standard of proof. And all of a sudden the nefarious scheme to frame her ex-husband came crashing down.

Last week Kristin Ruggiero was convicted on 12 counts of falsifying physical evidence and sentenced to 7-14 years in prison.

This tale is not so much about a distraught woman sorely in need of psychological help. Rather, it's a story of a police department, a prosecutor, and a judge that allowed themselves to be duped by a conniving perjurer. And it's about a criminal justice system that has all but abandoned due process in a frenzied attempt to curb domestic violence.

Like everything in the law, the problem begins with definitions. The Violence Against Women Act, passed during the first term of the Clinton administration, includes a definition of domestic violence that is so wide you could drive a Mack truck through it.

States picked up on the loophole, and now most states include within their definitions of abuse, actions like making your partner "annoyed" or "distressed."'

SAVE launches social media initiative

Matt · 4 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Today Stop Abusive and Violent Environments – SAVE – is launching our new Social Media initiative:

1. SAVE for Victims and Survivors: http://www.saveservices.org/victims-and-survivors
2. SAVE for DV Service Providers: http://www.saveservices.org/service-providers
3. SAVE for Policymakers: http://www.saveservices.org/policymakers
4. SAVE for Persons Falsely-Accused: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused

For each group, we have assembled:

1. An extensive array of resources, information, and advice
2. Facebook page to receive announcements, updates, and Alerts
3. Yahoo page for discussion

A new era of VAWA reform is about to begin! Catch the Wave!!

Sacrifices Of Veterans Largely Unappreciated

redwoodwriter · 4 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

In this account of a veteran with PTSD, which he suffers from thanks to his military experience, you get a sense for how difficult it can be for returning veterans. And in many cases they live with these problems (missing limbs, psychological trauma, etc.) for the rest of their lives. We owe these guys a lot for what they do and did for our country. We need to more widely discuss how they are having difficulty when they return (drugs, homelessness, etc.), and what services they need. Excerpt:

'We hear 28 died in a mine, but we don't even say 28 men, we might say 28 coal minors. We say 8 soldiers died today. Not eight MALE soldiers, just 8 soldiers. If a bombing kills "just men" we give a number, "32″ died, but if women die we say "including 2 women" because women dying make the story more "special". MRA's (Men's rights activists) have noticed this for years. In my dream I got closer and noticed each face more closely, so young. Too young to die which is what I thought of the "boys" who got out of basic training with me in 1966? Silly boys, funny boys, some mean and some kind boys but all trying to be tough soldiers. I was a tough soldier. I grew up as a tough boy.
...

I don't want to read about young boys training to be warriors in foreign countries while our sons are getting fat drinking beer, eating chips and playing video games and flunking out of class no good for work or war. At heart I am still a warrior who remembers the boys from basic training who went to war and then came home to colleges where they learned that warriors were scum and men are pigs and women don't beat children or each other or men. America is being educated by liars and they end up running the country, for however much longer we have a country. Memorial day. Those who don't remember their history are doomed to repeat it. Here's to you Lewis Puller, your brothers, and the tens of thousands valient warriors who gave their live for us. You are in our hearts and prayers this Memorial Day 2010.'

Zeta Game - Hypergamy Crossroads

Matt · 4 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Latest from "A Voice for Men" here. Excerpt:

'In the last part of the Zeta Game series, I covered the fundamental concept of hypergamy- the natural tendency in women to benefit from reducing men to a purely utilitarian role in their lives. I also touched on the notion that the innate programming in men to protect and provide (and thus compete for women's attention) plays directly into the hypergamous gambit, most often resulting in men participating in their own misuse and exploitation.

In short, the way men compete for a higher rank among women is to place their blood, sweat and assets, even their own bodies, at the woman's disposal- no matter how capricious or trivial her desires may be.

The fundamental problem with this arrangement is that hypergamy is not guided by any set of constraining ethical principles. It is, in fact, so utterly devoid of a moral compass that one of the major tools in the woman's hypergamous repertoire is to shame men into sacrificing for them- and to quietly laugh at them as they do it.

We have often seen this referred to in MRM literature as women's propensity for pathological self centeredness and to get what they want from men by any means necessary- up to and including the use of law enforcement and the judiciary. We have pointed to their "sense of entitlement," where it concerns their dealings with men, and noted what seems to be a compassionless disregard for the consequences of their selfish actions.

The evidence of this is clear for many men from the most mundane aspects of day to day life, where they are confronted with women who insist on making marriage and home, or even transient relationships, all about them- to family courts where so many women seem to revel in the sight of their families (and their own children) being ripped to shreds simply because it gives them a an opportunity for petty personal revenge- and financial gain.
...
Hypergamous behavior is a product of paleomammalian hard wiring, plain and simple. It stems from 3,000,000 years of successful human evolution, and it is present, to greater or lesser degrees, in the behavior of all women. You can complain about it, look down on it, judge it and hate it all you want, but it is not going to change by trying to reason with it. You might as well be trying to talk someone out of the urge to eat when they are hungry.

I think the truth of this has been such an ingrained part of male consciousness for so long that it has been buried in our unconscious, and we have slipped into the worst coping strategies possible for dealing with it. We ignore it and/or deny it. We even endear and defend it. But what very few of us ever do is confront and control it.'

Girl, 4, weighed 15 pounds at death

anthony · 5 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'New York (CNN) -- The mother of a 4-year-old girl found dead in her Brooklyn home Thursday morning was charged Friday with second-degree assault, reckless endangerment and endangering the welfare of a child, according to police.

Marchella Pierce weighed just 15 pounds and had marks on her hands and ankles when police found her unconscious in her family's apartment, according to CNN affiliate WABC-TV.

Her mother, Carlotta Brett-Pierce, was also charged with criminal possession of a controlled substance, criminal uses of drug paraphernalia and unlawful possession of marijuana after a small quantity of controlled substance and marijuana were recovered from the apartment, authorities said.

WABC said the girl was hospitalized following her premature birth and nourished with a feeding tube. She came home in February, the station said. The New York Times said detectives were trying to determine whether the girl had been bound to a bed after they found marks on her ankles that appeared consistent with twine that was found tied to the head- and foot-boards of a small bed.'

"Girl Revolt"

Stinger503 · 6 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Tons of misleading information for example: "Girls, females between the age of 13 and 19, are perhaps the most oppressed group in consumer society. As a previous generation of feminists made clear, Western culture is marked by widespread violence against women. And despite the media blackout, which continues to this day, most people know at least one female who has either developed an eating disorder or been sexually assaulted."

Sadly this was written by a man.

UK: Police track down teenage girl filmed throwing live puppies into a river

anthony · 6 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A girl shown in a video throwing puppies into a fast-flowing river has been traced, police in Bosnia said today.

The teenager, wearing a hooded top, caused worldwide outrage when she was shown online apparently killing six newborn puppies by throwing them into the river one by one.

Police in the central Bosnian town of Bugojno said they had found the girl from leads given by animal protection groups in the country.

MailOnline knows the name of the girl involved but has decided not to publish to protect her safety.

The girl's parents will soon be questioned, police said. Under Bosnian law, people can be fined up to £4,000 for animal cruelty.

Such was the international fury it prompted Transformers movie director Michael Bay to offer a $50,000 (£32,500) reward for the prosecution of the young woman.'

Obama to Call for Major Infrastructure Spending

anthony · 6 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I see this as an MRA issue because the construction industry has been hit hard by the recession which has contributed to a high rate of male unemployment. The original stimulus package was hijacked by feminists because they felt putting money into male dominated professions was sexist even though those industries are suffering the most. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON -- Vowing to find new ways to stimulate the sputtering economy, President Barack Obama will call for long-term investments in the nation's roads, railways and runways that would cost at least $50 billion.

The infrastructure investments are one part of a package of targeted proposals the White House is expected to announce in hopes of jump-starting the economy ahead of the November election. Obama will outline the infrastructure proposal Monday at a Labor Day event in Milwaukee.

While the proposal calls for investments over six years, the White House said spending would be front-loaded with an initial $50 billion to help create jobs in the near future.

The goals of the infrastructure plan include: rebuilding 150,000 miles of roads; constructing and maintaining 4,000 miles of railways, enough to go coast-to-coast; and rehabilitating or reconstructing 150 miles of airport runways, while also installing a new air navigation system designed to reduce travel times and delays.'

A Voice for Men: "Nothing Makes a 'Gina Tingle Like a Killa"

Matt · 6 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On July 24th of this year, I posted "Patriarchy for Dummies," on this site. In it, I proffered that there was an element to the normal female psyche that gravitated toward violent, dangerous- murderous men. I used Scott Peterson and Joran van der Sloot, and the numbers of women sending them marriage proposals in prison as prima facie evidence that supported my contentions. I also pointed to the fact that van der Sloot went on a sexual rampage, attracting scores of attractive young women after he skated on the Holloway murder.
...
While it is true that women's selections have shifted somewhat in keeping with modern realities, it only demonstrates that growing numbers of them will select the guy who controls, and sometimes kills, other men, than settle for the guy of lesser status. How many people is President Obama getting killed right now? How much trouble would he have getting laid? How many women would jump his bones if Michelle herself were in the same room screaming bloody murder?
...
I suppose that is far as you need to go when staying locked in a cyclical pattern of man hating is your primary goal in life. But for people who want to understand this sometimes crazy, mixed up thing we call the human condition, a little more perspective is in order.

Men are violent largely because being violent, or having the capacity for it, gets them a few significant rungs up on that sexual selection ladder- because those are the men that women select. Those are the men that turn them on.'

"Sex Differences: Why Won't Men Commit?"

Matt · 6 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This channel was off-linked from the previously-posted story. There are a number of good pro-MRA channels on YT; this is just one of them. What stood out for me was this one entry and the link can be sent to any woman you know who is complaining about how her boyfriend "won't commit" and she doesn't understand why not. Good work!

TIME: Workplace Salaries: At Last, Women on Top

anthony · 7 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The fact that the average American working woman earns only about 8o% of what the average American working man earns has been something of a festering sore for at least half the population for several decades. And despite many programs and analyses and hand-wringing and badges and even some legislation, the figure hasn't budged much in the past five years.

But now there's evidence that the ship may finally be turning around: according to a new analysis of 2,000 communities by a market research company, in 147 out of 150 of the biggest cities in the U.S., the median full-time salaries of young women are 8% higher than those of the guys in their peer group. In two cities, Atlanta and Memphis, those women are making about 20% more. This squares with earlier research from Queens College, New York, that had suggested that this was happening in major metropolises. But the new study suggests that the gap is bigger than previously thought, with young women in New York City, Los Angeles and San Diego making 17%, 12% and 15% more than their male peers, respectively. And it also holds true even in reasonably small areas like the Raleigh-Durham region and Charlotte in North Carolina (both 14% more), and Jacksonville, Fla. (6%).
...

Significantly, the conditions that are feeding the rise in female wages — a growing knowledge-based economy, the decline of a manufacturing base and an increasing minority population — are dominant trends throughout the U.S. "This generation [of women] has adapted to the fundamental restructuring of the American economy better than their older predecessors or male peers," says Chung. While the economic advantage of women sometimes evaporates as they age and have families, Chung believes that women now may have enough leverage that their financial gains may not be completely erased as they get older.'

She-wolves in sheeps' clothing

Matt · 8 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female child abusers are the 21st century equivalent of lesbians in the Victorian age: not legislated against because they do not exist. The nature of woman being incapable of “deviancy”, as the bigoted Victorians said. Hence in New Zealand, the Accident Compensation Corporation was unable to accept claims from boys sexually abused by women, until the law changed in 2005. Prior to that the perpetrator of “sexual indecency” had to be male.

However, statistics indicate that female child abusers not only exist, but in numbers approaching those of males. In New Zealand, 48 per cent of child abusers for 2006, where the perpetrator gender was known, were women. In the USA in 2002 63 per cent of all child abuse, from neglect to sexual abuse, was perpetrated by the mother. In 40 per cent of cases the mother acted alone.

The UK's Lucy Faithfull Foundation estimates women are responsible for 10 per cent of all child sexual abuse and that 5-20 per cent of pedophiles are women. Meanwhile in New Zealand, 40 per cent of the 1,200 men helped by the Christchurch-based Male Survivors of Sexual Abuse Trust (MSSAT) in 2010, were sexually abused by women when they were boys.'

When $450 an hour isn't worth it: Divorce lawyer who has had it with all the misery retires from lucrative but draining career

Matt · 8 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Family law lawyer Sandy Morris had just helped finalize a difficult divorce when a box arrived at her Toronto office tied up with a big, gold bow. Inside was a strange gift from her elated client – a mounted fish with teeth like a shark.

"It was a barracuda," says Morris in an explosion of laughter. "I couldn't bring myself to throw it away. I'm sure he meant it in a really nice way, but I kept it in my office behind some books because I was embarrassed."

...

The barracuda's bite wasn't lost on Morris, who colleagues considered a workaholic and a "toughie" in the courtroom. She knows many people think of divorce lawyers as "sharks" more intent on racking up big billings than brokering peace. But Morris is adamant she has seen very little of that.

Instead, she blames legislative changes 10 years ago and "the dirty little secret you will not find in any self-help book or website" – that there is such a shortage of judges and court resources devoted to family law cases in some parts of Ontario. This is "increasing conflict" by leaving separated couples in a horrendous sort of legal limbo, living in the same house and unable (or unwilling) to agree on division of assets and even support payments without a judge's ruling.

The "inequalities" have become so acute that Morris and some colleagues talked of launching a Charter challenge based on the notion that couples are "being denied equal access to justice based solely on where they happen to live."

The province has been pressing Ottawa to appoint more judges; six were appointed at the end of last year. Attorney General Chris Bentley recently introduced family law reform legislation aimed at making divorce simpler and less expensive, said a spokesperson for his office.

...

This month the three will launch Women4Women, offering help from seminars to legal advice to a hand to hold on the road ahead.

Morris has seen too many lives devastated, which is why, she suspects, remarkably few of her family law colleagues are divorced.

"I think a lot of divorce lawyers stay married and work on their relationships because they know how awful divorce can be."'

F&F: Holstein Debates Leading MA. Senator on F & F's Shared Parenting Bill

Matt · 8 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Item here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families Board Chairman Ned Holstein, MD, MS debated Massachusetts state Senator Cynthia Creem, co-chair of the Joint Committee on The Judiciary, on the subject of family court reform and HB 1400, Fathers and Families' shared parenting bill.

Creem is currently in the middle of a hotly contested electoral battle to save her state Senate seat. The Creem-Holstein debate began with Dr. Holstein's column Senator Creem and Mr. Rudnick, Help our children (Newton Tab, 8/24/10). Senator Creem fired back at Holstein with her column Acting in the best interests of children of divorce (Newton Tab, 8/31/10). Creem wrote:

> Sharing custody equally can be hard, especially when parents live a great distance apart, or where limited incomes make it difficult for both parents to maintain a home for the child. Some find that consistency and stability for the child is more important than a rigid 50-50 split of parenting time. Often, even parents who reach an agreement voluntarily don't opt for shared physical custody.

South Africa: Murky dealings in circumcision KLamp tender

Minuteman · 8 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The decision by the KwaZulu-Natal health department to award a tender for the supply of a controversial circumcision device, the Tara KLamp, has been obscured by a cloud of mystery.

The department, the supplier, a rival supplier and the device's inventor remain tight-lipped about how and why the health department procured the device.

The Mail & Guardian reported in June that the Malaysian-made KLamp had been flagged as unsafe by independent experts in 2004, that no further randomised control trials (RCTs) on the device had since been conducted and that the device was not approved by the World Health Organisation.'

The Entire Assange-case from Swedish perspective

the_captain · 8 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every text has a story to tell. Here is how the Assange story goes according to the analysis we made during its events unfolding.

As many know I have written several analyses in swedish regarding the Assange-case. However us people discussing this case forgot one thing. The case really is about Mr Julian Assange and the future of Wikileaks in Sweden. Most of the people involved do not understand swedish language.
...
The first news in Expressen is the double rape suspicion and warrant in absence against founder of Wikileaks (issued Friday 17.00) by the prosecutor on call Kjellstrand. Internet is divided in two sides, the CIA-conspiracy side claiming innocence and the Feminist-male-bashing side claiming guilty. None of them have basis for their claim. Wikileaks twitter refers to being warned for dirty tricks.

The case is very similar to the case of the former secretary of Labor S-O Littorin accused of hiring a callgirl. The accusation in media itself caused harm before even reaching court.'

Australia: Sentence for babysitter in child death case 'inadequate'

Matt · 8 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Child welfare advocates have called for a review of the case of a Hobart woman sentenced to nine months for assaulting a four-year-old boy who died in her care.

Fiona Maree Garth pleaded guilty to assaulting Liam Osborne at her Claremont home last year.

The 38-year-old was babysitting Liam and struck him five times because he was playing up in the bath.

Liam was later found dead and covered in bruises.

A murder charge against Garth was dropped after it was revealed Liam had an undiagnosed heart condition which could have killed him.'

SAVE Special Reports on False Accusations now available

Matt · 8 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via Abusegate Bob:

SAVE has just released three updated Special Reports* on False Accusations:

1. Incentives to Make False Allegations of Domestic Violence
2. How False Allegations Harm Families and Children
3. What is the Cost of False Allegations of Domestic Violence?

The reports can be found here: http://www.saveservices.org/special-reports/

Want the answer to practically any question on false allegations? This is the place!

---
* All in .pdf format

New Resources for Victims of Domestic Violence Available

Matt · 10 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / September 9, 2010 – October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, and this year the theme is “Domestic Violence: Understand the Truth, Stop the Abuse.”

To help abuse victims, S.A.V.E. has recently established an Online Support Group for survivors of domestic violence. The Support Group is designed to assist persons in their journey from hurting to healing to helping. Available in a Yahoo group format, the group is open all to victims and survivors of domestic violence.

In addition, S.A.V.E. has published a series of 11 tip sheets designed to help persons who are recovering from an abusive relationship. The sheets include a self-assessment checklist, safety plan, restraining order tips, and more. One sheet highlights how false allegations of abuse rob true victims of needed services and protections.'

Australia: After almost three years, missing son finally surfaces

Matt · 10 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Almost three years after his son went missing, former NSW deputy fire chief Ken Thompson has learnt the six-year-old boy is in Amsterdam.

Andrew Thompson was three years old when he was abducted in Sydney by his mother, Melinda Stratton, on April 24, 2008, after a custody battle.

Ms Stratton eluded the Australian Federal Police, Interpol and missing children's organisations until she was picked up on Monday after attempting to enrol Andrew in school.'

'Third wave' of feminism urged by prominent Canadian women

Anonymous · 10 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Influential Canadian women say the promise of equality that was dangled before them during the 1960s and '70s has never been fully met and a "third wave" of feminism is needed to revive the drive.

Governor-General Michaëlle Jean, who is soon to depart the office she has held for the last five years, called about 200 of the women she met on her travels through Canada to a conference at Rideau Hall this week to talk about women's security. The event is something her aides say she has been planning since the very first tour she took as Vice-Regent.

The women (and a handful of men) representing a broad cross-section of Canada – business and political leaders, aboriginal leaders, activists and scholars – touched on the matter of security, both physical and economic. But at a time when Canadian women with a postsecondary education still earn on average just 63 per cent of the salary of similarly educated men, it was the equality gap between men and women that dominated the discourse.'

Woman held after 2 shot dead at Kraft cookie plant

anthony · 10 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PHILADELPHIA — Minutes after a woman was suspended from her job at a Kraft Foods plant and escorted out, she returned with a handgun and opened fire, killing two people and critically injuring a third before being taken into custody, police said.

The woman in custody is Yvonne Hiller of Philadelphia, a local police official said Friday on condition of anonymity because the official was not authorized to speak publicly before a scheduled news conference. No charges have been announced.'

Shelter for newly separated husbands opens in Switzerland

johndias · 10 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It's not a DV shelter for men, but rather a shelter for men who have essentially been evicted from their homes by their wives (and probably also by the State). It's also not free ($166 USD per week), but they make it a point to foster camaraderie between the male residents by limiting the numbers of residents living in a given facility, and they also provide rooms for the children of fathers to stay in order to foster an uninterrupted relationship. What impresses me is that they are recognizing that male pain exists and are also identifying the cause of that pain -- family breakup, an outcome sought by wives 80 percent of the time according to this article. Excerpt:

'GENEVA (Reuters) – A trickle of newly separated Swiss fathers looking for shelter and help after marital breakdown have been finding a warm bed and a sympathetic ear from a pilot project on the shores of Lake Zurich.

Protestant pastor Andreas Cabalzar has founded Switzerland's first shelter for newly separated fathers in the Swiss village of Erlenbach, not far from Geneva.

Unique in Switzerland, the project has seen the numbers of applications to stay in the house increasing every week.'

Help for the Falsely-accused Available

Matt · 11 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

Each year two million Americans are falsely accused of domestic violence. And many of these persons are arrested for a “crime” they never committed!

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments – SAVE – has just published a series of resources to help the falsely accused:

1. Yahoo discussion group to share information and ideas
2. Facebook page to receive announcements and Alerts
3. Practical advice on:
    a. how to recognize the warning signs
    b. how to deal with a restraining order
    c. how to defend against the allegation
    d. whether to file a counter-suit

Plus, it’s all free!

Come to http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/ -- you don’t have to face a false allegation alone!!

Canadian Symposium on PAS to be held in New York City October 2-3, 2010

Matt · 11 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Web site here. Not just for Canadians! Excerpt from the About page:

'On behalf of The Canadian Symposium For Parental Alienation Syndrome and the Organizing Committee, Welcome to our website!

The Canadian Symposium For Parental Alienation Syndrome (C.S.P.A.S.), is an educational organization. We host international conferences for Mental Health Professionals, Family Law Lawyer's and numerous other professionals who are dedicated and assisting children in the prevention and treatment of Parental Alienation & Parental Alienation Syndrome.
...
This is a valuable opportunity to obtain an updated educational understanding on Parental Alienation at The Mount Sinai Hospital, School of Medicine and a chance to meet with your colleagues, in one of the greatest cities in the world -NYC.

All of the speakers at our symposium are experts in Parental Alienation - from the field's of Psychology, Psychiatry and Family Law.'

Video by ManWomanMyth: "Misandry -- Rape"

johndias · 12 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Another great video was just made by ManWomanMyth, this one entitled Misandry -- Rape. Check it out.

Kenya: Infants targeted [with Mogen clamps] in Kenya circumcision project

Minuteman · 12 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to story here Excerpt:

'UNIM project coordinator Dr June Odoyo said the new initiative is being piloted at New Nyanza General hospital, Kisumu, Siaya and Kombewa district hospitals.

Dr Odoyo said already they have trained health workers, mostly nurses, in the selected hospitals on how to circumcise the infants.

He explained that the nurses will use special gadgets known as a Mogen clamp to perform the circumcision at birth.

He says the new initiative is cheaper and heals faster and should be embraced by parents.

Speaking during a media training on male circumcision in Kisumu, Dr Odoyo said acceptance is low among the mothers besides resistance from the Luo Council of Elders.'

Playboy model nearly kills everyone on plane, no charges filed

Matt · 12 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. So, she knew she had anxiety issues and flew in a plane without medicating herself anyway. She forgot to. Well, no matter, she almost brought the plane down while trying to 'stabilize herself', presumably on the emergency door handle? And guess what? No charges. Fellas, don't YOU try this. Now as for the (male) flight attendant who, while the plane was on the ground, merely harangued the passengers then jumped down the escape chute-- he is facing felony charges. Is there a double-standard at work here? You betchya! Excerpt:

'A Playboy model was detained after claims she tried to open a plane door mid flight after she suffered an anxiety attack.
...
Tiffany Livingston, 21, reportedly suffered the attack as she was aboard the JetBlue Flight 522 from Orlando to Newark when passengers claim she tried to open the door at 10,000ft.

She was detained when the plane landed but was released hours later. Federal investigators who interviewed her after the flight concluded that she was not trying to open the door, instead she was trying to stabilise herself following the panic attack which was caused by turbulence.

A source close to Miss Livingston told the New York Post: “She said she’s gone through this before, but never this bad, and didn’t have ... her medication”.'

Miami: Baby Gets Circumcised Against Family's Wishes

Minuteman · 13 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Mario Viera is just four weeks old. When he was born, his mom says she told doctors at South Miami Hospital several times that she did not want Mario circumcised.

"It's a big hospital," said Vera Delgado, Mario's mother. "It's a good hospital, and I thought he's safe, he's good there."

But eight days after his birth, without his mother even present, doctors performed the surgery.

"I was crying. I spent that day and the next day crying," Delgado told CBS4's Gio Benitez exclusively.

It turns out every man in Mario's family is uncircumcised. It's a family tradition.'"

Also covered here. Excerpt:

"Vera Delgado gave birth to her son, Mario Viera, at South Miami Hospital, seven weeks ago. Mario spent 10 days in intensive care for complications related to his birth. During this time, hospital staff asked Delgado and her husband if they wanted Mario to be circumcised. "Every time that the doctor asked if we're going to have the circumcision on him, we always say no. Always. All the time, we always say no because we always think that it was unnecessary surgery for him," said Delgado."

UK: Judges ordered to show more mercy on women criminals when deciding sentences fondueguy · 13 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Judges have been told to treat female criminals more leniently than men when deciding sentences.

New guidelines declare that women suffer disadvantages and courts should ‘bear these matters in mind’.

The rules say women criminals often have poor mental health or are poorly educated, have not committed violence and have children to look after.

‘Women’s experiences as victims, witnesses and offenders are in many respects different to those of men,’ according to the Equal Treatment Bench Book.

‘These differences highlight the importance of the need for sentencers to bear these matters in mind when sentencing.”

UK: The new girl power: Why we're living in a young woman's world

Broadsword · 13 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to success – success in the narrowly quantifiable terms of job, house, income – being female is increasingly important. The difference it makes can be seen as early as primary school. Girls now outstrip boys at age seven – when, according to recent government statistics, they overtake at basic maths and literacy. They do it again at GCSE, again at A-level, and again at university. Almost half of all female school-leavers go on to higher education, compared with 37 per cent of young men. When they graduate, most find jobs: just over 10 per cent struggle, in contrast with 20 per cent of men.

...

Reared as I was on a robust diet of feminism, it is difficult to feel too much sympathy. Having seen our mothers playing second fiddle to their bread-winning husbands for so long, being forced to join the hand-wringing over Our Troubled Boys feels like rather a raw deal. When I drop my friend Charlotte Coles, a civil servant, a text asking if she is around, she messages me straight back: "Women Rule OK!" Charlotte came top of our (mostly male) politics class at university. A ferocious hard-worker, she would start planning her course work long before most of our peers remembered they had any.

...

The sooner, then, that Bekhradnia's reforms – the progressive maternity leave, yes, but also the abandonment of our round-the-clock work culture – are introduced, the better. For our sake and for men's. Speaking of whom: what's to become of them? Unless you believe in some supremacist notion of women's inherent superiority (and, though it's tempting, come on), things are bound to work out in the end. With the right kind of help (the meaning of which is, well, a whole other subject) they will, eventually, catch up. After all, if we can do it, why can't they? '

UN chief to launch new strategy for women's, children's health

anthony · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'UNITED NATIONS, Sept. 13 (Xinhua) -- During the upcoming UN Summit on the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs), Secretary- General Ban Ki-moon will announce a new plan for improving the health of women and children in developing countries, he told reporters here Monday.

Ban will launch a new Global Strategy for Women's and Children' s Health on Sept. 22 at a special event featuring leaders from both private and public sectors.

Ban said that the UN has chosen to focus on women's and children's health because it is important to "put our resources where they will have the greatest impact."
...
The UN estimates that the new plan could save 16 million lives by 2015.'

Feminism going too far in Spain, "men's lib" claims

anthony · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Madrid (dpa) - Women's rights need to be defended, most Spaniards agree - but do men need their own liberation movement as well?

Prime Minister Jose Luis Rodriguez Zapatero's progressive women's rights policies have sparked a debate on whether his campaign for the equality of the sexes has gone too far.

Spain's gender legislation 'discriminates against men,' who are not protected adequately from female violence against them, men's rights activist Domingo Gonzalez Alonso claims.
...
Zapatero, a self-confessed feminist, took a strong stance in favour of gender equality by appointing Spain's first half-female cabinet after his election victory in 2004.

After winning a second term in 2008, Zapatero created Spain's first Equality Ministry.

Legislation adopted in 2004 turned Spain into one of the most progressive European countries regarding women's rights, the government says.

The law defines gender violence exclusively as male violence against women. Violence exercised by women against men comes under ordinary criminal law.

Men should be penalized more severely than women for similar acts of domestic violence, the Constitutional Court confirmed in a recent ruling.
...
The government has rejected making shared custody the national norm. Irresponsible fathers could claim custody of their children only for economic reasons, government gender violence delegate Miguel Lorente Acosta pointed out.'

Facebook fling ends in jail for false rape claims

anthony · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Elizabeth Wilkinson was jailed for 12 months for wrongly claiming David Lord raped her four times, as revenge for him spurning her advances.

After he refused to take a one-night stand further, Wilkinson bombarded him with more than 80 threatening text messages before telling police that he raped her four times.

Mr Lord, a 23-year-old father-of-two, last night spoke of his relief as Wilkinson began her jail term.

He revealed he twice tried to kill himself, once by hanging, as he struggled with the stigma of being an alleged rapist.

‘I just couldn’t handle it. Mud sticks,’ he said. ‘All I want now is closure and to rebuild my life.

‘I think she thoroughly deserved to go to prison for what she put my children through.’

Wilkinson, a 21-year-old from Oswaldtwistle in Lancashire, pleaded guilty at Burnley crown court of perverting the course of justice. She had sent Mr Lord a Facebook message in September, telling him he looked ‘sexy’, after he had been into her shop.'

Hughsonville woman charged with making false rape claim

anthony · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'HUGHSONVILLE — A 22-year-old woman was arrested on Saturday for falsely reporting that she was raped in her ground floor apartment last week, according to State Police.

The woman contacted police on Sept. 2., claiming that she was sexually assaulted by a masked man, dressed all in black, who broke into her apartment on Route 9D in the early hours that day, said police.

The woman provided police with a detailed description of her alleged attacker. A brief on the attack appeared in the Journal on Sept. 3.

Police said within days of reporting the incident, the woman admitted that she fabricated the story.

The Hughsonville woman was charged with third degree false reporting of an incident and making a punishable false written statement, both misdemeanors. She was issued a ticket to appear in Town of Wappinger Court at a later date.

The Journal does typically print the names of individuals charged with misdemeanors.'

U.S. Senate committee to hold hearing on rape investigations

anthony · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Concerned that police departments nationwide fail to fully investigate rapes, a congressional committee will examine the issue next week at a hearing spurred partly by a Baltimore Sun examination of the systemic underreporting of sex crimes.

The Senate Crime and Drugs subcommittee has asked representatives of the Office of Violence Against Women to appear in Washington to discuss the problem, as well as a Pennsylvania woman jailed by police who erroneously accused her of making a false rape report.

The Sun reported in July that Baltimore for years led the nation in the percentage of rape cases in which police concluded that the victim was lying, with more than 3 in 10 cases determined to be "unfounded." Other cities have seen disturbingly high percentages of uninvestigated or dropped race cases in years past, and a women's advocate in Philadelphia pushed for the congressional hearing after the Sun's investigation reignited concerns.'

Three Missouri women who killed husbands to be paroled

anthony · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"Three Missouri women convicted of murdering their husbands years ago learned today that they will be released from prison on parole because of claims of spousal abuse.

Vicky Williams, 55, and Roberta Carlene Borden, 65, will be released on Oct. 15, according to their lawyers and relatives. Ruby Jamerson, 57, will be released in 2013. All were serving life sentences from cases that date to the 1970s or 1980s.

For a decade, a group of attorneys called the Missouri Battered Women's Clemency Coalition has argued for the women's release, claiming they were driven to kill after suffering abuse at the hands of their husbands.

At the time the women were arrested, the group argues, there were few resources for battered women, domestic violence was poorly understood and evidence of abuse was not routinely presented at trials.
...
Many relatives of the slain spouses have disputed the claims of abuse and argued that the women were only conning their way to freedom.'

Domestic violence shooting sends man to the hospital

anthony · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'TROTWOOD, Ohio -- A man was hurt in a Sunday morning shooting in Trotwood.

Police responded to a domestic violence call around 10 a.m. at 7667 Old Dayton Road.

Sgt. Joseph McCrary told the Dayton Daily News that while officers were on their way, "the female grabbed the gun and shot the man. The wound is in the upper right leg. We're still investigating whether the shooting was intentional, or an accident."

The man was taken to Miami Valley Hospital for treatment.

Police have not released the names of the two people involved.

The woman was being questioned at Trotwood Police headquarters.'

SAT scores improve slightly among public school students but fewer boys are taking the test

anthony · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oregon students' SAT scores remained steady this year in reading and writing, according to data released by The College Board on Monday.

Math scores dropped slightly overall, but among public school students – who make up 88 percent of Oregon test takers – the news was a little brighter. Public school students in the class of 2010 scored two points higher in reading and writing than in 2009.

At the same time, the scores for Oregon public students revealed a decline in the number of boys taking the college entrance exam. Overall, more Oregon students took the SAT than ever before. But, a nearly three percent jump in test-taking by girls overshadowed a one percent drop among boys.

Susanne Smith, spokeswoman for the Oregon Department of Education, said the decline is alarming when coupled with the other indicators that show boys are struggling academically.

Oregon girls are performing as well as boys on state math tests, but boys are trailing girls in reading performance. Male students in Oregon have higher dropout rates and lower graduation rates than their female peers.

"The gender gap on assessments is an area of concern for educators," Smith said, "and our schools are focusing on instructional and curriculum strategies that resonate with male learning styles."

The state does have a narrower gender gap on state tests than the national average.'

UK: More than 40% of domestic violence victims are male, report reveals

anthony · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'About two in five of all victims of domestic violence are men, contradicting the widespread impression that it is almost always women who are left battered and bruised, a new report claims.

Men assaulted by their partners are often ignored by police, see their attacker go free and have far fewer refuges to flee to than women, says a study by the men's rights campaign group Parity.

The charity's analysis of statistics on domestic violence shows the number of men attacked by wives or girlfriends is much higher than thought. Its report, Domestic Violence: The Male Perspective, states: "Domestic violence is often seen as a female victim/male perpetrator problem, but the evidence demonstrates that this is a false picture."

Campaigners claim that men are often treated as "second-class victims" and that many police forces and councils do not take them seriously. "Male victims are almost invisible to the authorities such as the police, who rarely can be prevailed upon to take the man's side," said John Mays of Parity. "Their plight is largely overlooked by the media, in official reports and in government policy, for example in the provision of refuge places – 7,500 for females in England and Wales but only 60 for men."'

Canada: Murder is Murder, Psychosis is Psychosis

Anonymous · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This month, the Ontario Court of Appeal will decide if a mother on trial for killing her infant child can employ a defence of post-partum depression, and be sentenced to the lesser crime of infanticide as a result. Regardless how the case is decided, it raises the troubling question of why, under Canadian criminal law, infanticide is defined as a lesser crime than murder.

Without a doubt, post-partum depression and its more serious variant, post-partum psychosis, are real and serious mental health problems, the latter condition particularly so. However, there is no reason why these need to be treated differently from any other form of psychological impairment, or madness, recognized as mitigating factors in criminal cases. If a woman is so incapacitated by one of these conditions that she cannot be held responsible for her actions, then her defence should be the general one available to all those who plead not criminally responsible on account of mental disorder. Or, if convicted, her condition could be introduced at the sentencing phase under the general procedures available to all convicted criminals. There is no need to classify her condition by reference to her status as a woman or parent.

Moreover, the nation has long outgrown the antiquated thinking behind making the notion that a baby's death at a mother's hands is a less serious crime than ordinary homicide. In a society that spends over a billion dollars a year on neonatal care to keep struggling infants alive — and which does not hesitate to remove infants from parental custody if they are in danger of harm — it is incongruous to treat "infanticide" as a crime punishable by a maximum of just five years in prison.'

UK: The patriarchy is dead ... but the kyriarchy lives on

Broadsword · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

From reclaiming the F word to objecting to objectification – there's a new feminist army determined to finally flatten the patriarchy. But here's the really radical news: patriarchy is dead. It's dead simplistic, dead inaccurate, and no longer a useful way of framing gender inequality in the UK. Forget about castrating patriarchy – it's time to corral kyriarchy, the system identified by Harvard theologian Elisabeth Schussler Fiorenza, which explains how ethnicity, class, economics and education, as well as gender, intersect to oppress us all, men as well as women.

So, kyriarchy: the substitution of one elitist, etymological hair-splitting term for another, I hear my newly estranged sisters cry – just what feminism needs. But this is a neologism with a difference. Where patriarchy – literally, rule of the father – explains only how traditional male authority dictates to, and subjugates women, kyriarchy (from the Greek: kyrios – lord/master; archion – dominion/rule) relates how each of us, whatever our gender, is a bundle of privileges we can all too readily abuse by invoking the "master power", whether that's as a black female barrister, a mixed-race trans male teacher, or a white immigrant male labourer. At the same time, the term's connotations of elite authority perfectly tap into the legacy of oppression that western feminists, from Mary Wollstonecraft to Germaine Greer, have dedicatedly derided.

Men falsely confessing to rape under duress

Matt · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The headline tries to make it sound general, but the article clearly is about this phenomenon. Rule #1: When accused of a crime, keep your damn mouth shut, no matter how persistent and annoying your interrogators are. Excerpt:

'KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Eddie Lowery lost 10 years of his life for a crime he did not commit. There was no physical evidence at his trial for rape, but one overwhelming factor put him away: he confessed.

At trial, the jury heard details that prosecutors insisted only the rapist could have known, including the fact that the rapist hit the 75-year-old victim in the head with the handle of a silver table knife he found in the house. DNA evidence would later show that another man committed the crime. But that vindication would come only years after Mr. Lowery had served his sentence and was paroled in 1991.
...
But more than 40 others have given confessions since 1976 that DNA evidence later showed were false, according to records compiled by Brandon L. Garrett, a professor at the University of Virginia School of Law. Experts have long known that some kinds of people — including the mentally impaired, the mentally ill, the young and the easily led — are the likeliest to be induced to confess. There are also people like Mr. Lowery, who says he was just pressed beyond endurance by persistent interrogators.'

A Voice for Men asks "When is it OK to punch your wife?"

Matt · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'It might be easy to think that the title to this piece is simple provocation, a tool to inspire people, perhaps mislead them, through sparking an angry reaction or just plain morbid curiosity, into taking a look at what this article is about.

Even though the thrust here is slightly different than the title would imply, there is no deception here at all. The question is serious, and the answer, to be certain, is so clear it need not take an entire article to address.

When is it O.K. to punch your wife? Well, anytime you are defending yourself from her physical attack. You have the right, at that moment, legally and morally, as is explicit in every legal model I know of, to use whatever force is necessary to protect yourself.
...
In the real world, where we actually live, the preponderance of people, from your friendly neighborhood patriarch to his twin sister the Gloria Steinem clone, see this type of dialog as a reason to go nuclear. In fact, I knew that the title would be provocative precisely because we live in a culture where I am not supposed to even ask such a thing. It's like asking when it is OK to hunt an endangered species, or steal a senior citizens social security check, or joke about children with cancer.'

Canada: Cop engaged in affair with suspect's wife receives temporary demotion

Matt · 14 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEWMARKET, Ont. - The York Region cop he blames for framing him and ruining his life stood before the police board and received a slap on the wrist.

For carrying on an affair with Sherry Major while investigating her claims of sexual assault against her estranged husband, Staff-Sgt. Terry Jordan was handed an 18-month demotion to sergeant Wednesday.

“This is a very unfortunate situation that has had an impact on all of us as police officers,” said York Regional Police chief Armand La Barge following the disciplinary ruling by Supt. Karen Noakes. “Obviously it’s very upsetting and disappointing.”'

Women arrested after kidnapping incident involving AK-47

Anonymous · 15 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police arrested four Greeley women who are accused of kidnapping a man, demanding cash and threatening him with an AK-47 rifle and a knife.

The incident occurred in Greeley over the weekend, and arrest reports and an affidavit released Tuesday showed the women are facing numerous charges...
...
The two women with the highest bonds — Loya and Valencia — were held on higher bond because of their direct threats to the victim, according to affidavits.

Two men may also be involved in the incident, police said, but they haven't been arrested yet.'

Shannon Sharpe Accuser Drops Charges, Paper Says

anthony · 16 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CBS/AP) A restraining order against CBS analyst and former NFL tight end Shannon Sharpe has been "voluntarily dismissed," according to the Denver Post.

Last week, Michele Bundy filed a temporary restraining order against Sharpe. According to legal documents, Bundy claimed Sharpe forced her into sex and threatened her life.

The Post reports that Bundy withdrew her complaint Wednesday, according to the Fulton County Superior Court.

Sharpe, who was never charged or arrested, had decided to "step aside" from his gig as football analyst for "The NFL Today" until the matter was resolved.

According to the Post, acquaintances of Bundy were not shocked by her allegations.

"She's been infatuated with Shannon Sharpe for years to the point I think she was kind of stalking him," Thayne Davis of Roxborough told the Post. "She moved to Georgia to be closer to him. She has some insane idea in her head that he's going to be in a relationship with her."

UK: Council tells Bath school to 'admit boys or close'

anthony · 16 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:
'A Bath school is pressing ahead with an application to become an all-girls academy, against the local council's wishes.

The Conservative-run Bath and North East Somerset (Banes) Council wants Oldfield School to admit boys and has now given it an ultimatum.

Banes said the school has until 1700 on Friday to change its mind or the council will close Oldfield and open a new co-educational school on the site.

The school has not yet commented.

Oldfield is still waiting to hear whether Education Secretary Michael Gove will grant it academy status, taking it out of local authority control.'

Guilty verdict in '09 stabbing, 5 years for Murder

Anonymous · 16 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who had faced a possible life prison sentence for the 2009 stabbing that left a housemate dead instead will spend up to five years behind bars.

After about 35 minutes of deliberation, jurors found Melinda Ann Chatelain, 40, guilty of negligent homicide, a far less serious charge than the second-degree-murder conviction prosecutors sought. Negligent homicide carries up to five years in prison. She is scheduled for sentencing Oct. 12 in state District Court Johnny Walker's courtroom.'

Australia: Yet another example of anti-Male jobs advertising

Minuteman · 17 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to posting here. Excerpt:

'Distribution Network Query Co-ordinator

DISTRIBUTION NETWORK QUERY COORDINATOR
Permanent part-time (0.7 FTE)
ASX listed company
...
Salmat is an organisation who believes that our people are at the heart of every Salmat solution with the 'right fit' fundamental to the Salmat vision. With a raft of Salmat Staff Benefits available, fun events and a true EEO Employer with the Salmat Women in Leadership Council, we provide workplace flexibility and really encourage employee input as to how we can do things better!'

Police: Washington state woman made up acid attack story

anthony · 17 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- A 28-year-old woman who said an unknown assailant threw a cup of caustic liquid in her face has admitted her injuries were self-inflicted, Vancouver, Washington, police said Thursday.

Bethany Storro was being interviewed by detectives, and whether she will be charged will be up to prosecutors, police said.

"She is extremely upset," said police Commander Marla Schuman. "She is very remorseful. In many ways it got bigger than she expected."

Police would not speculate on Storro's motives, only saying the August 30 incident did not occur as she described and that there were discrepancies in her account, including wearing sunglasses in the evening.'

"Punish false accusers, too"

Matt · 17 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'Re: "Woman admits lying about rape," The Journal, Sept. 11.

This article caught my eye. Sadly it says a lot about the inequities of the approach to criminal law and the gender bias that is pervasive in the system.
...
The accuser admitted in court she lied and the accused had never raped her as alleged. An innocent man spent almost two years in jail based on her false accusation, finally recanted.

However, his name was included in the article and hers was not.

It seems that the false accuser is entitled to anonymity while the true victim, the accused, was not.'

Legal system slammed for failing families

Matt · 17 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At one of the most stressful periods of their lives, separating couples are driven to the poorhouse by a family law system that fails to deliver workable solutions while their children are often hurt by a system that doesn't take their opinions into account, a report by the Law Commission of Ontario says.

In one of the most in-depth looks at what ails family law in many years, the report indicts the system for draining parents' bank accounts, ignoring expert advice in favour of simplistic solutions and leaving children out of the process.
...
While battling an ex-partner in court can be costly – cases that go to trial can ding the participants for well over $100,000 – the report's authors said there is substantial concern judges cannot or will not step in to stop overly litigious spouses from wearing down an ex-partner through "legal bullying."'

Slain Ontario girls found holding hands

Matt · 17 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BARRIE, Ont. - Minutes after a mother calmly called police saying her children were dead, officers found 19-month-old Sophia Campione in bed, dressed in her Tinkerbell pyjamas, holding hands with her three-year-old sister Serena, court heard Thursday.

Between their lifeless bodies lay a photo album and a rosary.

The Crown alleges their mother, Frances Elaine Campione, 35, drowned them in October 2006 so their father could not get custody.'

"A Voice for Men" on Death Row Inequities

Matt · 17 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"m not just fascinated by the Lewis case because executions of women are rare. Though they are, exceedingly. Since the death penalty was reinstated in 1976, there have been over 1,200 executions in the United States. A whopping 11 of them, or less than 1%, were women. Lewis will, if not saved by the Supreme Court or the Virginia Governor, be the first dead woman walking in that state in 98 years.

This stands in pretty stark contrast considering women commit, by DOJ estimates, 10% of all murders, are involved in 35% of all domestic homicides (are involved means, like Lewis, they get other people to kill for them) and nearly 30% of murders where the victim was another family member.

On death row, it seems, the vagina exemption is almost a given.'

DNA test catches stalker who made false rape allegations

anthony · 19 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A man falsely accused of drugging and raping his stalker has spoken about how he was cleared of the falsified claims after new DNA evidence proved the allegations had been made up.

As reported by The Independent, Dr Jan Falkowski endured four years of being bombarded by text messages, being accused of rape and death threats made to his fiancé.

"My life was going fairly well, I was quite happy with things, no major problems, and then suddenly everything changed overnight, literally, without any warning," said Dr Falkowski.

After his stalker, whose identity was unknown, threatened to have his fiancé killed if they got marred, Dr Falkowski and the police staged a fake wedding. They caught Maria Marchese sending 20 to 30 frantic texts near the scene of the wedding, and she was arrested.

However, the Crown Prosecution Service said there wasn't enough evidence to charge her, despite the fact that Ms Marchese had a shrine dedicated to Dr Falkowski in her home.'

Germany: Four dead in woman's killing rampage

Matt · 19 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BERLIN — Four people died and a policeman was seriously wounded in a town in southwestern Germany on Sunday, after an explosion in an apartment building and a shooting in the neighboring hospital that authorities believe are linked, a prosecutor said.

Two people were found dead in an apartment building that burst into flames after an explosion Sunday afternoon, Loerrach prosecutor Dieter Inhofer told ZDF public television.

Another woman, allegedly armed with a weapon, was seen running from the blast into the neighboring St. Elisabeth hospital, where she reportedly opened fire, killing a member of the hospital staff, Inhofer said.

The woman then turned her gun on officers responding to the shooting and was killed in an exchange of gunfire, Inhofer said. One police officer was seriously wounded, Inhofer said, but authorities believe there were no other victims in the hospital.

"There was a very heavy exchange of gunfire in the hospital that had the potential to be very dangerous, but based on what we know right now ... no one else was injured," Inhofer said.'

Teacher Accused of Sex With Student Takes Plea

Matt · 21 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Canandaigua, NY - A school teacher accused of sex crimes with three students accepted a plea deal Monday morning. Marla Gurecki-Haskins, 36, was accused of having sexual contact with a 17 year-old male student in her classroom during the school day. She also faced criminal charges for trading sexually explicit text messages with two other male students, both were just 16 years-old.

Gurecki-Haskins plea deal includes a 45-day jail sentence of which her lawyer expects his client will serve just 30 days. The deal also includes three years probation and she must surrender her teaching license while also resigning from Canandaigua Academy. Because Gurecki-Haskins is pleading guilty to two misdemeanor crimes (Official Misconduct and Endangering the Welfare of a Child) she is not required to register as a sex offender.'

Forty-five days. That's all. For betraying the trust not just of ordinary citizens but of parents who entrust their kids with "teachers" like this one, and of committing a crime that would have landed a man in jail for years, what does she get? Forty-five days in jail, assuming she actually serves that time at all.

Is the CBC's purpose to find the truth or to hide the truth?

Anonymous · 21 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

There are times when I read stories covered by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (CBC) and I can't help but think that CBC reporters are either lazy, stupid, or are deliberately out to hide the real story instead of truly reporting on it.

Take this story. What really happened here? Did this police officer really sexually assault a woman, or not? Why were the charges dropped? Why is it that the police officer - who hasn't been found guilty of anything - gets his name published and therefore his reputation smeared, while his accuser remains anonymous? How is it "in the accuser's best interests" to drop the charges? Was she lying? Is it a case of mistaken identity?

The crown has decided it's "not in the public's best interests" to continue. What the hell does that mean?

Whoever the internal censor is in the CBC, they are doing a hell of a good job.

Australia: Mother brags on public radio about having son circumcised and is portrayed as heroic victim

Minuteman · 21 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link here (text and audio). Excerpt:

BARBARA MILLER: These days it's the exception when an infant boy in Australia is circumcised for non-religious reasons.

Sydney woman Sally said she thought long and hard about the pros and cons of having the procedure done when she had a baby boy earlier this year. She decided to go ahead, but wasn't prepared for the backlash.

SALLY: It was a terrible decision because I didn't feel like I could talk to other mums about it and when I did ask mums who did have sons and I mean, it had never been a question on my mind because I had two girls, most of them hadn't and a number of women were quite aggressive about it and quite, you know, confronting about it.

BARBARA MILLER: Sally says one factor in her decision was evidence from studies in sub-Saharan Africa that circumcision can reduce the rate of HIV-AIDS transmission in heterosexuals.'

Newsweek: 'Men’s Lib'

anthony · 21 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What’s the matter with men? For years, the media have delivered the direst of prognoses. Men are “in decline.” Guys are getting “stiffed.” The “war on boys” has begun. And so on. This summer, The Atlantic’s Hanna Rosin went so far as to declare that “The End of Men” is upon us.

There’s certainly some substance to these claims. As the U.S. economy has transitioned from brawn to brain over the past three decades, a growing number of women have gone off to work. Men’s share of the labor force has declined from 70 percent in 1945 to less than 50 percent today, and in the country’s biggest cities, young, single, childless women—that is, the next generation—earn 8 percent more than their male peers. Women have matched or overtaken men as a percentage of students in college and graduate school, while men have retained their lead in alcoholism, suicide, homelessness, violence, and criminality. Factor in the Great Recession, which has decimated male-heavy industries like construction and manufacturing, and it’s no wonder so many deadline anthropologists are down on men. But while the state of American manhood has inspired plenty of anxious trend pieces, few observers have bothered to address the obvious question: if men are going off the rails, how do they get back on track?
...
But suggesting that men should stick to some musty script of masculinity only perpetuates the problem. For starters, it encourages them to confront new challenges the same way they dealt with earlier upheavals: by blaming women, retreating into the woods, or burying their anxieties beneath machismo. And it does nothing to help them succeed in school, secure sustainable jobs, or be better fathers in an economy that’s rapidly outgrowing Marlboro Manliness.'

American Thinker: The Wage Gap Myth

anthony · 21 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sometimes you just have to feel sorry for President Obama. Having recently appointed Austan Goolsbee to his economic team, feminists are outraged that Obama chose a man to replace Christina Romer. "Many women have become the sole breadwinners, but because of the wage gap, as the sole breadwinner they can't provide for their families as men can," Terry O'Neill, head of the National Organization for Women, said. "If you had half of the economic advisers being women, I think that perspective would come to the forefront."

In one sense, O'Neill is right about a wage gap -- on average, women earn about 80 cents to a man's dollar. Could this mean feminists and Democrats actually have a point on this one? Not a chance. In lieu of the recent 39th anniversary of "Women's Equality Day" and O'Neill's remarks, it is imperative we revisit the wage gap myth. As much as special-interest groups and the media love to parrot the 80 cent statistic, it is hardly due to gender discrimination.'

Women exceed men in earning Ph.D.s in US in 2009

Matt · 21 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'For the first time, more women than men in the United States received doctoral degrees last year, the culmination of decades of change in the status of women at colleges nationwide.

The number of women at every level of academia has been rising for decades. Women now hold a nearly 3-to-2 majority in undergraduate and graduate education. Doctoral study was the last holdout - the only remaining area of higher education that still had an enduring male majority.

Of the doctoral degrees awarded in the 2008-09 academic year, 28,962 went to women and 28,469 to men, according to an annual enrollment report from the Council of Graduate Schools, based in Washington.'

UK: Malone's Extraordinary School For Boys

Matt · 21 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Gareth Malone has never been one to shy away from a challenge. He made his name on TV as the choirmaster in BBC Two's The Choir, a series which saw him bring together people from all walks of life and turn them into accomplished singers.

However back in April Gareth took on one of his toughest challenges yet, as he took over the reins of a primary school class for a term, helping to reinvigorate the educational experience for a group of 39 boys from an Essex school. Many of these likely lads hadn't been fulfilling their educational potential, a story that can be found up and down the country as boys continue to lag behind girls in terms of literacy.

With the head teacher's full consent, Gareth sets to work attempting to meet the challenge of increasing the boys' reading age by six months in just eight short weeks. It's a tough ask, and TV's Mr Nice's efforts make for fascinating viewing. You'll marvel at his tricks, which include special lessons, cleverly devised competition and infectious enthusiasm.'

Father-son bond a key to young men's development

Matt · 21 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Technology changes. The economy changes. But some things never change. Some fathers still take time out with their sons – fishing, playing sports or video games, tinkering on cars. Even in challenging times, these unshakable dads are forging family ties, modeling manhood and fatherhood, and delivering life's most important lessons.

"The bonding between a father and son is important in terms of relationships and how they'll (boys will) generalize and translate to relationships with other males," said Rob Goldman, a psychologist who works for the Suffolk County Probation Department in New York.

It's also beneficial in helping keep boys out of trouble. There's a correlation between children who wind up in the juvenile justice system and incarcerated dads or fathers who abandon their children, he said.

"It's very, very important to be engaged and enrolled in their children's lives," Goldman said. "If they feel the caretaker isn't there for them, the child is going to have relationships that can be very destructive and erratic for them."'

Woman Gets 34 Years for Torturing/Assautling Children

Anonymous · 22 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CLEVELAND, Ohio --The Cleveland mother who tortured her 8-year-old son for four years will spend 34 years in prison.

And the boy's father, who did nothing to protect the child and eight siblings, was sentenced Tuesday to 26 years. Cuyahoga County Common Pleas Judge Kathleen Ann Sutula ignored a plea agreement between Andreia Huffman, 37, her husband, Jason Dunikowski, 32, and county prosecutors that called for 19- and 17-year sentences.
...
"Torture is not allowed in our society," Sutula said, while looking at photographs of the boy's swollen, broken nose, bruised legs and red wrists that had been bound every night with duct tape.

"Anyone who thinks the sentences are harsh, hasn't seen the evidence."'

Two female teachers accused of "sex with minors"

Matt · 22 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two Boiling Springs teachers are facing charges after deputies say they threw parties for teenagers that involved alcohol, marijuana and sex.

Sarah Jane Lindsay, 42, of 438 Maplecroft St., and Audrey Beidleman Grabarkiewicz, 44, of 230 Sandy Drive, were taken into custody by Spartanburg County sheriff's deputies Monday. Police had been investigating since a parent came forward with a complaint in July.

Lindsay, a teacher at Boiling Springs Elementary, is charged with nine counts of contributing to the delinquency of a minor and criminal sexual conduct with a minor between 11 and 14 years old.

Grabarkiewicz, a preschool teacher at Lake Bowen Baptist Church, is charged with 10 counts of contributing to the delinquency of a minor. Investigators said Grabarkiewicz also had “sexual relations with some of the victims,” but, because they were older than 16, she will not be charged, according to a statement from the sheriff's office.'

Women and the Death Penalty

anthony · 23 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Teresa Lewis, a 41-year-old Virginia woman who admitted murdering her husband and his son, has run out of appeals and is set to be executed Thursday. Her co-conspirators were given life without parole, and Lewis' attorneys have argued that new evidence shows they were actually the masterminds of the plot -- therefore her sentence is unfair. She also has an IQ of 72, which means she's borderline mentally retarded.

Nearly all the stories I've seen mention how rare it is for women to be executed; she would be the only woman to be executed in the country in five years -- in Virginia it's been nearly a century. I understand the desire of news writers to point out rarities; it makes the story more important. But in this case, it also implies that most of the 1,226 other executions the United States has carried out since 1976, the vast majority of which are of men, are normal.'

Local group pushes for all-male school

anthony · 23 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Members of an Annapolis organization are so concerned about boys' academic performance that they want to create an all-male school.

Brian Tucker of Concerned Citizens for Successful Students approached the county Board of Education last week about tailoring an academic program specifically for male students. It would operate either as an entire school or as an academic initiative geared just toward boys. The plan is in its early stages and the group is discussing it with county officials.
...
There has been an ongoing debate about the value of single-sex education and whether both boys and girls benefit from it equally.

The National Organization for Women opposes such efforts, saying they "increase sexism and exacerbate feelings of superiority toward women," according to the group's website. But officials of the National Association for Single Sex Public Education support the concept, offering training to teachers so they can provide opportunities that do not exist in coed environments.'

4 Dead, 1 Wounded in Shooting at Seattle Home

anthony · 24 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SEATTLE -- A woman fatally shot three people and herself at a Seattle home Thursday, injuring another woman who fled into the front yard and told officers: "My mom has gone crazy," police said.

Officers responded to a report of gunshots at about 1:30 p.m. and could still hear shots being fired from the house when they arrived, police spokesman Sean Whitcomb said. A man in his 50s ran into the house. Two more shots were fired and he ran back out, telling officers his wife had shot herself.

When police were able to go inside, they found the four dead, including a woman in her 50s they believe was the shooter, Whitcomb said.

He said police don't believe anyone else was involved.

In addition to the older woman, the dead included two women in their late teens and a man in his 30s, police said. Their relationships were not immediately known.'

NY woman found guilty of fatally poisoning boyfriend with antifreeze mixed into margaritas

Matt · 24 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CANANDAIGUA, N.Y. - A woman has been found guilty of manslaughter in death of her boyfriend, who drank a jug of margaritas laced with antifreeze at their apartment in western New York.
...
Cynthia Galens was charged with murder in January, three months after Air Force veteran Thomas Stack died from complications of ethylene glycol poisoning. But a grand jury opted in February for a less severe first-degree manslaughter charge.

The 52-year-old Galens has been on trial for four days. The trial began Monday.

Investigators say she told them Stack was emotionally and physically abusive and she decided to exact revenge by pouring a shot glass of the toxic automotive chemical into a margarita mix. Stack died four days later.

Galens says she intended to make him sick, not kill him.'

Harry Reid and Comparable Worth

anthony · 24 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some bad ideas never die. On Tuesday, during Senate debate, Majority Leader Harry Reid announced that, “I’m going to do my utmost to see if we can find a way to have a vote on the Paycheck Fairness Act. It is so fair to do that, to do a better job of equalizing pay between men and women when they do the same work. It seems fairly basic and fair.”

Senator Reid has apparently not read the bill. In addition to the 2009 “Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act,” this latest Democratic pre-election pandering to the trial lawyers and some women’s organizations is creating an administrative and legal nightmare for any employer trying to manage his or her workforce. It could totally upend criteria for hiring and setting pay. What do President Obama and the Democrats consider “unfair” about paying workers more if they have more experience, more education, or specific skills?

...
The first serious problem with this legislation is that, by changing the affirmative defenses allowed for employment decisions, it allows discrimination claims to be made for reasons other than discrimination. The burden of proof would be on employers to show that a seniority or educational qualification, for example, was “job-related” and a “business necessity.”

The bill also allows employees whose work situations or locations are not comparable to have their pay compared. For example, the pay of a worker in a high cost-of- living city could be compared to the pay for a worker for the same company in a locale with lower living costs. Reasonable people can see that locality pay differentials do not demonstrate gender discrimination.'

Hollywood Feminism: Women Smart, Men Dumb

anthony · 24 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism is a Crock – and Other True Stories." That's the title for a book I'd like to write someday. The reason I say feminism is a crock is because it has morphed from "equal rights for all" to "women are better than men, and if you disagree you're a sexist pig who should be castrated." It's also morphed into a sexual free-for-all: what used to be sauce for the gander (and those ganders were usually considered cads) is now sauce for the goose. This image is being perpetuated by pop culture and entertainment, and women are more and more frequently being portrayed as strong through their sexuality, not through their actual accomplishments. Is this the standard to which we want our daughters to aspire?
...
Fast forward to 2010. Many would say the fight for equal rights has pretty much been won. Girls can dream of going to college and becoming airline pilots, electrical and biological engineers, teachers, doctors – the list is almost endless. In fact, more women graduate with college degrees than men – perhaps due in part to more focus being put on girls than boys in school to "make up for" previous inequality and also what is being called the feminization of society (what Rush Limbaugh calls "chickification").

And for years, the entertainment industry has done its part for the last 20 or 30 years by portraying men as bumbling but lovable fools who wouldn't be where they are if it weren't for the very attractive, smart-as-a-whip women they somehow managed to marry. Television's Home Improvement and King of Queens are two of the more recent examples. And, of course, commercials like this one. So even if the woman did commit the sin of marrying, she always had the redeeming quality of having the upper hand in just about any situation.'

Man Up or Man Down? Newsweek Redefines Masculinity

anthony · 24 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We've arrived at another crossroads," declares Newsweek — and this one represents a crisis for masculinity. As the magazine's current cover story asserts, "The prevailing codes of manhood have yet to adjust to the changing demands on men." With this cover story dedicated to "rethinking" masculinity, Newsweek launches itself into a very relevant cultural conversation.

"Man Up!" is the message the magazine conveys on its cover, though by the time a reader actually reads the article, he or she may be forgiven for having little idea of what this means. If, indeed, the traditional male is "an endangered species," where does this leave men?

Writers Andrew Romano and Tony Dokoupil get right to the heart of that matter when they ask, "What's the matter with men?" They, then, point to the recent recession, which we now know has led to a significant and seemingly permanent change in the workforce — and largely at the expense of men. By some estimates, eight out of ten jobs lost in the recession were in sectors of the economy that are traditionally dominated by men, such as construction and manufacturing. In 1945, the male share of the labor force was 70 percent. Now it is less than 50 percent. In the nation's largest cities, women often make more than men on average do. Women now outnumber men at virtually every level of higher education, starting with a six to four advantage in undergraduate registrations. The list goes on.
...
The message is plain — men will have to redefine masculinity as they take on "girly" jobs, transform themselves into nurturers, and celebrate a fully egalitarian society in terms of gender. Working for a female boss will become standard, as will the expectation that a stay-at-home father is as common as a stay-at-home mom.'

Real Life: The curse of masculinity

anthony · 24 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Every major non-geological disaster in history has been man-made, from climate change to the credit crunch and from warfare to genocide.

"Men's denial of vulnerability and the need to consume and acquire are intricately connected."

Masculinity, argues Jukes, is like an illness acquired in early boyhood. It is, he believes, built on a 'fault' created during the Oedipal crisis and is hugely destructive.

"It is like two sides of a divide. One side is a boy's relationship with his mother, and later the pressure not to be so deeply attached to the mother because it is seen as feminising.
...
"Maleness and masculinity are not the same thing. Masculinity is a psychological, socially based construct whereas maleness is a biological given," he says.

As a result, believes Jukes, masculinity is "incredibly destructive" to many men who suffer, but must never allow themselves to acknowledge, feelings of isolation, loneliness and fear.
...
"Men are the ones who gamble, who commit most of the crime, rape and murder, and who indulge in risky sex."

Much of male behaviour -- the quest for power and status, chronic sulking, workaholism, risk-taking, infidelity -- is a paradoxical defence against men's overwhelming feelings of weakness, vulnerability and humiliation, Jukes argues.
...
"You have to start by educating fathers to raise their children to be non-masculine, and to value vulnerability and tenderness in little boys."'

Virginia's execution of a woman may signal shift in national thinking

anthony · 24 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Virginia put to death a 41-year-old woman Thursday night, the first execution of a female in the country in five years and the first in that state for nearly a century.
...
Legal scholars attribute the "gender bias" in executions to women's lower propensity to kill and the tendency of those who do to kill a husband, lover or child in the heat of emotion, seldom with the "aggravating factors" states require for a death sentence. Lewis pleaded guilty to having arranged the killings to collect $250,000 in insurance money on her stepson.

"The way capital punishment statutes are written inadvertently favor women. They make it a worse crime if a homicide is committed during a felony, like robbery or rape, which are rarely involved in women's homicides," said Victor Streib, a Northern Ohio University law professor who has spent 30 years researching condemned women. "It's also easier to convince a jury that women suffer emotional distress or other emotional problems more than men."'

The male college drop-out rate and Title IX

Anonymous · 24 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'There now are more collegiate rifle teams for women than there are for men. More schools offer women's equestrian teams than men's water polo teams. Quinnipiac has seven sports for men and 14 for women. UCLA has a swimming team for women but not for men.
...
To achieve gender equity amid enrollment shifts and reduced revenue, colleges have been chopping men's sports, with at least half a dozen on the endangered list and a couple facing extinction.

"Every April, you hear about the spring slaughter," said Minnesota men's gymnastics coach Mike Burns, whose program is one of 17 remaining in a sport that numbered 124 in 1972.
...
With female students now outnumbering males at most schools and the number of big-roster football programs rising from 497 in 1981 to 633, colleges are finding it more difficult to keep their programs in balance. In 2006, James Madison, which has a 60-40 female-male ratio, dropped 10 sports, including women's gymnastics, fencing, and archery.'

Running: A race against gender - Can men and women race fairly?

Broadsword · 24 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Can men and women ever compete fairly in a sport like running? Yes, but it requires a little bit of maths know-how. "What time did you get?" It is the first question runners ask of each other when the race is over. But is it the right question? You see, distance running is unfair.

Men experience this unfairness as they get older. Ten miles into a half-marathon, older men can only struggle on with growing irritation as younger men - men who would not have stood a chance against them in their prime - sail past. For women, the feeling of injustice comes as soon as we start racing.

Men have bigger hearts and can take in and move around oxygen much more efficiently than women can. So men can beat us even if we are "better" runners. So is it possible to adjust for age and sex to level the playing field? To solve this maths problem I challenged my 52-year-old colleague David Lewis to race against me, a 28-year-old woman, in the Great North Run half-marathon.

...

Alan's numbers give us the secret to a fair race. For example: if you compare the best possible time for men and women over a half marathon you get a factor of 0.8995. The age-factor for a 48-year-old man is also 0.8995.

So a young woman (younger than 30) can race against a 48-year-old male happy in the knowledge that it is a fair contest.

"Of course, it is fair anyway," says Alan. "If he runs faster than you, he runs faster than you. That's the nature of a race."

I chose to ignore that bit, as David and I made our way to Newcastle.

UK: Education apartheid: More middle-class families send their sons to private school, but not their daughters

Broadsword · 24 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

There was a time when middle-class families would prioritise their son's education over their daughter's. After all, a well-brought-up young lady from a good family could marry well, while her brother would be expected to provide for his own family. It's a tradition most people would assume had long since died out, yet, as the Daily Mail discovered, many modern parents with limited funds are choosing to buy their boy's education, while putting their girl through the state system.
...
Psychologist Tim Francis says: 'In the state sector, we have a culture of conformity that does not exist in the private sector. The National Curriculum decrees that all pupils progress at the same level and suppresses individuality and "boisterousness".

'The teaching is pitched at the average child - any pupil who doesn't fit that mould misses out. You need to be a square peg in a square hole to survive the state system. It needs a radical re-think to allow every child, regardless of their sex, to achieve. Parents shouldn't have to play Russian roulette with their children's education and choose one sex above the other.' Girls appear to be better equipped to deal with this need for conformity within state education. Boys, however, are falling way behind girls in terms of academic achievement.

Social commentator James Delingpole is much more blunt about what, he believes, is the real reason behind parents favouring sons over daughters.

'Girls can always marry a rich man,' he says. 'If a girl is middle-class and reasonably educated in the state system, the chances are she will marry well anyway.

'Boys, like it or not, are much more likely to end up earning their family's crust as the breadwinner. Girls, being more sophisticated, socially adept and devious, are much more capable of negotiating the complexities of the state system than boys. It may not be liberated or politically correct, but it's true.'

James, who lives in London, has faced this tough choice himself. Unsurprisingly, he chose to send his elder son to a private day school, while his daughter is educated in the state sector.

'It is still very much a taboo subject, and most parents will do anything rather than admit they are singling out their son,' he says.

'But ever since the credit crunch, increasing numbers of middle-class parents are finding themselves in this nightmarish situation.'

James says the decision was made for him because his son was struggling at his state school.

'My son is bright, but one day he came home from school and said he wished he was more stupid, because he'd get more attention.

'My feeling is that the state system is woefully geared against boys. Almost all the teachers are female, and a kind of ideological feminisation has crept into the system.

'Boys aren't built to sit still and conform in class. They are boisterous - they need to run about and they need to be challenged.

'Bright girls can be popular, but bright boys are made to feel like geeks and have to conform with the "thick" boys to be "one of the lads". It is a simple fact that the state sector is failing boys.'

"Real Men Do Apologize"

Anonymous · 25 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men, according to conventional wisdom, are stubbornly unwilling to apologize. Countless pop psychology books have referenced this reluctance, explaining that our egos are too fragile to admit we're wrong, or we're oblivious to important nuances of social interaction.

Sorry to disrupt that lovely feeling of superiority, ladies, but newly published research suggests such smug explanations miss the mark. Writing in the journal Psychological Science, University of Waterloo psychologists Karina Schumann and Michael Ross report that men are, indeed, less likely to say "I'm sorry." But they're also less likely to take offense and expect an apology from someone else.'

Abusegate Update: Capitol Hill activism

Matt · 25 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From Abusegate Bob:

This flyer was distributed to all 435 Representatives and 100 Senators on Capitol Hill on 9/23/10. The flyer highlights the fact that mandatory arrest policies in 20 states are the cause of 600 intimate partner homicides each year.

A Voice for Men: "Shrugging Misandry"

Matt · 25 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The men's movement has long carried with it a strong undercurrent of frustration. We lack organization, have made all but inconsequential progress on the political and legal fronts, and remain on the outside of an impenetrable wall around the mainstream media. Countless times the ambitions of MRA's start up in a flash and falter as just as quickly. Uncle Zed himself has dubbed our tendency to undermine any emergent leaders, and each other, as The Circular Firing Squad.

In other words, we are doing just fine, thank you very much.

The negatives are real, but let's put a little perspective on this. First, it is critically important to consider that any movement a mere 40 or 50 years old is in its infancy. For women, it was 72 years between Seneca Falls and the 19th amendment; almost 50 years after that before mainstream feminism took hold, and still another 25 or so years before gender activists really started getting the power to destroy families and generally fuck up everything else they touched. That is roughly 150 years from inception to the resultant destruction.'

It's OK for girls to play on boys' teams, but...

Matt · 25 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Well, good for her! Can a boy at that high school run on the girl's track team, too? Excerpt:

'She didn't make a tackle, or even break up a pass. Still, Northwestern (Fla.) High School's Jaline DeJesus made history in the Miami school's 38-12 victory over Hialeah Miami Lakes on Thursday night, becoming the first girl to play in a game for one of the top-ranked teams in Florida's highest division, 6A. In fact, Northwestern stacks up well with the best programs in the entire country, too; the Bulls are currently ranked No. 71 in the RivalsHigh 100.

Perhaps equally notable was the position in which DeJesus played: cornerback. Traditionally reserved for a team's best or quickest athletes (or both), the Miami Herald reported that DeJesus was an able substitute at defensive back for the final minute of Northwestern's victory after being promoted from the Northwestern junior varsity for the game. Considering the fact that DeJesus was filling in for Northwestern seniors Jermaine Reve and James Davis, that's saying something.'

Bernard Chapin announces idea for Men's Voting Block

Matt · 26 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Announced on A Voice for Men here. Excerpt:

'Our good friend Bernard Chapin has come up with a plan for some real activism. A men's voting block. It is such a good idea that I really can't imagine why no one has done this before. Here is the Inferno-meister himself to explain it, and a link to the Facebook page under the vid.'

So long, Harriet Harperson

Matt · 26 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Well I doubt we shall see the very last of her any time soon, but the perilous edge on which the UK teetered it seems has been (at least for now) if not avoided, then delayed. Excerpt:

'It took her 30 years to get to the top of the Labour Party but, after just 137 days, her reign is over. Harriet Harman took a final wander through the grand rooms accorded to the Leader of the Opposition in Parliament last week, looking almost wistfully at the view across the Thames, before vacating in preparation for the arrival of the new Labour leader. She will return to the other end of the shadow cabinet table with her colleagues next month, but at least she will have the consolation of having reached the top of a particularly treacherous career ladder.'

UK: Childhood casualties of the family courts

Anonymous · 27 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers still have the odds stacked against them when it comes to custody battles in the family court system, but are warring parents forgetting what and who they are fighting for?
...
When Paul returned home from a six-month tour of duty in Afghanistan, he found his key no longer fitted his front door.

"My wife had changed the locks on the house I was paying the mortgage on, and my kids were inside with her new bloke," he said. "I can't tell you what I felt, trying to make sense of it all. It was a bad dream. She had a lawyer lined up to talk about money and they seemed stunned when I said I wanted contact.

"I had kids because I wanted to be a dad. I am a dad, not a sperm donor."

His little boys were then aged three and 18 months. He hasn't seen them for almost two years and struggles on with his legal battle.'

Canada: "It's time to blow up Divorce Court"

Anonymous · 27 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ontario Chief Justice Warren recently recommended “dramatic” changes to the family law justice system that would deny litigants access to the courts if they didn’t go through mediation or arbitration first.

“(O)nly in the event that the alternative dispute resolution process is unsuccessful would access to the costly, time-consuming, adversarial and sometimes acrimonious court process be available to litigants” Justice Winkler said earlier this month in a speech marking the opening of Ontario courts for the current session.

Apparently fine-tuning the system is of little value and a new approach, “a fresh conceptual approach,” is required.

But a report on family law by the Law Commission of Ontario questioned the effectiveness of mediation. It’s no big surprise that our family justice system was found to be lacking, indeed the title of the report refers to our “Broken Family Justice System.”

Apparently mediation isn’t a cure for what ails the system. Mediation only works when both sides want it to work. Of course, mediation can be expensive and not all mediators are effective.

...

Instead of more mediation, we need to deal with the high costs of litigation by lowering fees and providing more money to lower-income litigants. Flexible payment plans would also be nice.

So what’s the answer: More mediation, more money or dealing with the high costs of litigation? What if it’s none of the above?

If we recognize that the current system is costly, time-consuming and often acrimonious, why don’t we come to the obvious conclusion? Perhaps we need to blow up the system and build a new, improved system from the ground up. What better place to start than with our cherished adversarial system?'

Two women charged in domestic violence cases el cid · 27 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Two women were recently charged in separate cases. One case involved a lesbian couple. The other involved a woman who convinced a boyfriend to beat up her 62-year-old ex.

Hell does occasionally freeze over. Excerpt:

'Two Denver women were formally charged today in separate domestic-violence cases.

Annette Martinez, 47, was charged with second-degree assault resulting in serious injury. She allegedly kicked her partner of 10 years in the face on Wednesday, breaking her nose, according to the Denver District Attorney's Office.

Sophia Newson-Westlund, 47, allegedly drove to her ex-husband's home on Sept. 19 and lured the 62-year-old out of his house.

Another man who was with Newson-Westlund punched and beat her ex-husband repeatedly. Newson-Westlund was charged with third-degree assault of an at-risk adult.'

UK: Council outlaws mother-in-law jokes

anthony · 28 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Despite surviving from Roman times, the humour no longer considered acceptable, according to officials at the London Borough of Barnet.

The edict was issued in a 12-page booklet entitled Cultural awareness: General Problems which came to light through a Freedom of Information request.

It states: “Humour can be incredibly culture-specific, and is very open to misinterpretation or even offense [sic] by other cultures. And don’t forget when you don’t know what people are laughing at, it is very easy to imagine that they are laughing at you.”

The guide adds: “British mother-in-law jokes, as well as offensively sexist in their own right, can also be seen as offensive on the grounds that they disrespect elders or parents.”

Barnet, the second largest population of the 33 London boroughs, where women outnumber men by 170,000 to 161,500, had been accused of a “sense of humour by-pass” by writer John Sessions.'

Mariage rates in US hit record low in 2009

Matt · 29 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Great mention of the economy, yet no mention of The Great Unspeakable Marriage Strike, but somehow with plenty of misandry squeezed in there, too. Excerpt:

'Fewer Americans are married than at any time in recorded history, according to Census data released Tuesday.

Just 52 percent of adults 18 and older said they were married in 2009, compared with 57 percent in 2000. For the first time, the 46.3 percent of adults aged 25 to 34 who said they had never married outnumbered the 44.9 percent who were currently married.

The recession was causing more adults to linger outside the church before walking down the aisle, experts said.

"Men's employment has taken a big hit, and when the guy doesn't have a stable job, couples are more hesitant about tying the knot," said Brad Wilcox, director of the National Marriage Project at the University of Virginia, noting that employed men are "not getting drunk on a Wednesday night; work is helpful to civilize a man."'

Canada: Female judge rules to decriminalize activites around prostitution

Matt · 29 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I wonder how women's studies professors can find a way to make this all about the Evil Patriarchy? A female judge rules in favor of the plaintiffs: three prostitutes just chomping at the bit to ply their trade publicly. You can practically hear the gears grinding away as The Machine tries desperately to find some kind of output that has a man to blame for it all. Excerpt:

'A Toronto judge has struck down Canada's prostitution laws, effectively decriminalizing activities associated with the world's oldest trade.

"These laws, individually and together, force prostitutes to choose between their liberty interest and their right to security of the person as protected under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms," Justice Susan Himel of Ontario's Superior Court of Justice said in Tuesday's landmark decision.
...

Rona Ambrose, minister for status of women, said the Conservative government is "very concerned" about the court decision and is considering an appeal.
...
"This is wonderful," dominatrix Terri-Jean Bedford told reporters at the University Ave. courthouse.

Bedford and prostitutes Valerie Scott and Amy Lebovitch had asked the court to strike down Criminal Code provisions dealing with prostitution, contending the laws violate their constitutional right to security of the person and freedom of expression.'

Canada: Teacher found not guilty of sex charges

Anonymous · 29 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Morinville, Alta., teacher on trial for sexual assault has been found not guilty of all charges.

Michael Dubas, 55, faced two charges each of sexual assault, sexual interference and sexual exploitation involving two female students at G.H. Primeau School in the town about 30 kilometres northwest of Edmonton. In delivering his decision in St. Albert provincial court Friday afternoon, Judge Brian Fraser said he believed Dubas when he denied touching the girls.

"In my opinion, Mr. Dubas, you have suffered a tremendous injustice," the judge said.

...

The girls, who cannot be identified under a publication ban, alleged Dubas groped them in two separate incidents in February and October of 2009.

Fraser said the testimony of one of the girls was unreliable and pointed to a surveillance video showing the hallway at the time she said she was groped. The video showed no evidence the attack occurred, the judge said.'

In my opinion, Mr. Dubas should wait until these two girls are 25, then sue them for everything they've got!

"Too Few Women In Tech? Stop Blaming The Men"

Matt · 30 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But I'm not going to do that. Instead I'm going to tell it like it is. And what it is is this: statistically speaking women have a huge advantage as entrepreneurs, because the press is dying to write about them, and venture capitalists are dying to fund them. Just so no one will point the accusing finger of discrimination at them.

That WSJ article also criticizes Y Combinator for having just 14 female founders out of their 208 startups to date. But I know that Y Combinator wants – really, really wants – female founders and that there just aren't very many of them. I know this because Y Combinator cofounder Jessica Livingston has told me how excited they are to get applications from women, and that they want to do everything they can to get more female applicants. What they probably won't admit, but I suspect is true anyway, is that the rate of acceptance for female applicants is far higher than for male applicants.

The problem isn't that Silicon Valley is keeping women down, or not doing enough to encourage female entrepreneurs. The opposite is true. No, the problem is that not enough women want to become entrepreneurs.'

IA: AAP meeting this week-end

Matt · 30 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA newsletter:

'With the American Academy of Pediatrics conference happening this weekend, it's more important than ever to write to the AAP and demand that they listen to America's parents, and the rest of the world: circumcision is not an effective tool against AIDS, it isn't medically necessary, and it inflicts needless pain and suffering on helpless infants. Email them here.'

Canada: "Strict laws protect women"

Anonymous · 30 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The author, Andrea Mrozek, is a Conservative Christian and Manager of Research and Communications for the Institute of Marriage and Family Canada.

'For the one smiling face of dominatrix Terri-Jean Bedford there are thousands upon thousands more who are weeping, waiting for the despair to end, living lives filled with drugs, sedatives, physical and sexual abuse and suicidal thoughts.

Their stories were ignored in Justice Susan Himel's decision to overturn Canada's prostitution laws on Tuesday.

Reasonable evidence was likewise ignored, evidence that shows lax prostitution laws increase the exploitation of women, help organized crime and increase human trafficking.

Parliament has 30 days to decide how to act on this decision. It must be overturned, and failing that, something more stringent put in its place. Following the path of Sweden by criminalizing Johns is one possible solution, with considerable support among women's groups and anti-human trafficking activists across the globe.

The Swedish model prosecutes the buyer.

"A person who obtains casual sexual relations in exchange for payment shall be sentenced," reads the law, "…to a fine or imprisonment for at most six months."'

"Dad and buried"

Matt · 30 September 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Column here. Excerpt:

'We live in an era where it's no longer acceptable to make fun of particular groups.

Except men, of course.

Curiously, while we are expected to treat others with sensitivity and respect, men are still fair game.
...
And if the mass media portray men as idiots, it's not surprising that such misconceptions end up colouring people's views of men in real life.

Case in point: the long-standing myth that men are incapable fathers. Tiptoeing into that cultural minefield is Luc Bouchard, provincial co-ordinator of the Alberta Father Involvement Initiative.

His mission? To convince the skeptics that just because men parent differently doesn't mean they're bad dads — and to help social service agencies design parenting programs that reach out to dads as well as moms.'

Senate Committee Cancels I-VAWA Hearing; Passage of Bill Considered Unlikely This Year

Matt · 1 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email submission:

This afternoon the Senate Foreign Relations Committee was scheduled to hold a mark-up hearing on the proposed International Violence Against Women Act (S. 2982). The purpose of the hearing was to consider any final amendments on the bill before a vote by the Committee, and subsequent referral to the entire Senate for a vote.

But just minutes before the hearing was scheduled to begin, committee Chairman John Kerry of Massachusetts announced the hearing would be canceled. Senate insiders believe the cancellation marks a decision by Sen. Kerry to avoid an embarrassing defeat of the bill. Sen. Kerry was a lead sponsor of the bill, along with senators Barbara Boxer (D-CA), Olympia Snowe (R-ME), and Susan Collins (R-ME).

While Sen. Kerry may attempt to secure passage of the bill during the upcoming “Lame Duck” session of Congress, Senate insiders believe such a move is unlikely.

A coalition of women’s organizations, men’s groups, pro-family advocates, and victim advocacy organizations had lobbied against the bill, saying it would promote a gender ideology, discriminate against male victims, and do little to address the known causes of domestic violence. The Save Indian Family Foundation also worked against I-VAWA’s passage, noting “India and other countries have had extensive experience with such abuse-reduction laws, which have had a disastrous impact on our society.”

The International Violence Against Women Act has also been introduced in the House (H.R. 4594). The House Foreign Affairs Committee has not scheduled a mark-up hearing on the bill.

Barbara Kay: Who’s oppressing who?

Matt · 1 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In its earliest and most benign form – the political campaign to achieve equality under the law and equality in economic opportunities – feminism was a necessary and welcome reform movement. No rational person could be less than delighted to see barriers to a full range of educational and career options for women fall by the wayside.

The feminism I take exception to today is not the mild and blameless right of a woman to self-actualize that all women absorb by osmosis from the cultural air we breathe, but the radical ideology that has come to dominate the movement’s academic and institutional elites over the last 40 years.

This is an ideology that sees the relations between the sexes as a never-ending antagonistic power struggle, with women as eternal victims and men as eternal oppressors. It is an ideology that explains away the moral failings of women as the fault of a patriarchal “system”, but holds men responsible for their actions. And most important, it is an ideology that shortchanges children by privileging the rights and importance to children of mothers over fathers.

That kind of feminism is so deeply entrenched in our society’s cultural elites and the institutions they dominate — really it is the defining ideology of our era — that whether she wants to or not, no thinking woman can escape the necessity of negotiating some kind of relationship with its claims.'

Are men being robbed of their masculinity?

Anonymous · 1 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

The best thing that ever happened to me was losing my balls..."

Barry Munday utters the words to a rugged – and horrified – guy sitting next to him at the bar. An aspiring ladies' man, Mr. Munday suffers an injury to his testicles, learns he's a father and grows into a better man in the film named after him, opening Oct. 1 in theatres.

The movie is just the latest in a string of emasculating offerings in popular culture. In April, bloggers seized on an oxytocin-laced "cuddle spray," rumoured to entrance your guy into snuggling after sex instead of cozying up with ESPN.'

Article on Men's Reproductive Rights in Elle

el cid · 1 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I accidentally came across this article in Elle magazine about men's reproductive rights. It actually does a fairly good job of presenting both sides of the issue. It includes quotations from Mel Feit and Kim Gandy (ex-president of NOW). Excerpt:

"Feit's list of grievances range from sexist social standards—why should men still be expected to foot the bill on dates? Why is crying or showing weakness verboten for them?—to what he considers discrimination enforced by the state: men's lack of reproductive rights combined with unfair child support laws. "Reproductive choice isn't a fundamental right if it's only limited to people who have internal reproductive systems," Feit says. "If it only applies to women, it's a limited right and that weakens it." In his view, Planned Parenthood's motto—"Every child a wanted child"—should apply to both people who make the baby."
...
"Still, it seems dicey for women to argue that our distinct biology gives us special rights, considering our long history of being discriminated against based on that same biology. And I wonder about the practical costs of excluding men. The assertion that women have unquestioned dominion over reproductive decisions seems to help cement the notion that fathers are minor players in the life of a family. Yet women are crying out for men to assume a larger share of the burdens (and joys, hopefully) of parenthood."'

College's First-Year Men to Attend Presentation on Campus ‘Rape Culture’

Geredeth · 2 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tonight [9/27/10] at 7 p.m., first-year men at Hamilton College will be attending a mandatory presentation of "She Fears You," a program at which they will be pressed to acknowledge their personal complicity in a "rape culture" on Hamilton's campus and to change their "rape-supportive" beliefs and attitudes. First-year men were informed via e-mail that attendance was required and that they needed to bring their ID cards. "She Fears You" will be presented by Keith Edwards, "a national speaker and trainer on diversity and social justice and college men's issues."

"She Fears You" is based on the theory that men need a "combined cognitive and emotional intervention" in order to change their "rape-supportive beliefs."'

"Children of Divorce" documentary covers PAS

Matt · 2 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Documentary web site here. There is no text describing it on the site, but well worth watching.

A Voice for Men: "Pat Tillman: Dying Like a Real Man"

Matt · 2 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In going through the recent tribute here to Pat Tillman, the former NFL star that gave up a lucrative career in football to serve his country, I found myself nodding my head a lot. I also experienced a kind of sick feeling. There were many references to his bravery and sacrifice as indicators of quintessential masculinity.

In an age where men struggle to find the increasingly elusive meaning of manhood, the Tillman story should prove helpful, but only in discerning a path to avoid.

...

There is a lot of talk these days about making men good fathers, husbands and citizens. Much of this, of course, is predicated on the egregious myth that men are none of these things to begin with, and that their lives do not need or deserve compassionate attention simply for the sake of improving their lot in life. Everything we want men to be is somehow meant for the benefit of others. However well intended (and sometimes not), these efforts are doing little more than regarding men as human appliances.

...

These recently added notions of real manhood, mostly about housework and enhanced chivalry, seem to define our only real interest in changing men. After all, sacrifice and death, as they apply to the male role, are pretty severe forms of limitation themselves. But that fact, inconvenient to a society that lauds phony equality, goes largely ignored. So while we gave women suffrage, we just gave men more suffering.

The natural result of the liberation of women from the mandates of their sexual role should have been to do the same for men. And that alone would have brought women commensurate responsibilities and burdens with their increased rights. It would have, most unfortunately, brought them the increased death and suffering men have long endured. As we can plainly see, that did not happen, and it removes all credibility from the cause that purported to establish a more equal society.'

Human Male: Still A Work In Progress

Anonymous · 2 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article: Researchers at MIT showed that genes on the Y chromosomes are changing at a rapid pace. Excerpt:

'"The Y chromosome looks like it has a lot of life left in it," says David Page, an author of the study and director of the Whitehead Institute at MIT. In fact, he says, the Y chromosome looks to be "the most evolutionary dynamic part of our genome."

That's a dramatic reversal from just a few years ago, when scientists were suggesting the human Y chromosome was in trouble and might be headed for extinction. In 2000, for example, a team from the University of Edinburgh presented evidence that that Y chromosome had become "genetically degenerate."'

UK: Circumcision clinic run by female doctor seeks clients specifically for non-medical reasons

Minuteman · 3 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to clinic site here. Excerpt (emphasis not added):

'The Haven Surgery now offers a circumcision service for male babies for religious or cultural reasons, from the ages of 4 - 24 weeks.

This service is not for circumcisions for medical reasons

...
She will be assisted by a female nurse.

...
Should you wish to take advantage of this special service, please contact the Haven Surgery by telephone.'

Australia: RRACP rejects endorsing routine infant male circumcision

Minuteman · 3 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Albeit, in its usual convoluted, weasel-word manner. Link to statement here (.pdf document). Excerpt:

'Recently there has been renewed debate regarding both the potential health benefits and the ethical and human rights issues relating to infant male circumcision.

Circumcision is generally a safe procedure but there are risks of minor complications and some rare but serious complications.
...
Ethical and human rights concerns have been raised regarding elective infant male circumcision because it is recognised that the foreskin has a functional role, the operation is non-therapeutic and the infant is unable to consent.

After reviewing the currently available evidence, the RACP believes that the frequency of diseases modifiable by circumcision, the level of protection offered by circumcision and the complication rates of circumcision do not warrant routine infant circumcision in Australia and New Zealand. However it is reasonable for parents to weigh the benefits and risks of circumcision and to make the decision whether or not to circumcise their sons.'

Event to focus on boys' education

Anonymous · 3 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A free public event focusing on boys' educational performance and needs will take place on Oct. 7 at the Santa Rosa Junior College Petaluma campus.

"Why Boys Fail: An Evening About Educating Boys," will be presented from 6:30 p.m. to 9 p.m. at the Carole L. Ellis Auditorium of the college campus, at 680 Sonoma Mountain Parkway.

Richard Whitmire, author of the book, "Why Boys Fail," will be the keynote speaker and Petaluma resident Joe Manthey will give a Powerpoint presentation, "A Brain-Based Approach to Academic Success for Boys."

The event is designed for parents and others who care for, educate or make policies affecting the lives of boys.

Manthey contends that the educational problems facing boys often are not understood.'

University Prep follows growing trend of single-sex schools

Matt · 3 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Once virtually unheard of in the public system, single-sex schools such as University Prep are becoming more common as educators look for new ways to help students learn and to bridge the achievement gap between white and minority students. In 1996, there were just three single-sex public schools in the United States. Now, more than 540 public schools have at least one single-sex classroom, and about 100 cater exclusively to one gender.

The growth follows a wave of research that suggests boys and girls learn differently, and that educators can tap into those differences to help students do better academically. The model is becoming popular in urban school districts such as Rochester, which have struggled for years to help students — particularly African-American boys who tend to lag behind their female classmates — do better.

"Across the country, especially in urban settings, girls outperform boys on state assessments and more often girls ultimately graduate from high school," said University Prep principal Joe Munno. "I said, 'let's target the group where we can have the most impact.'"'

Hamilton College update

Anonymous · 4 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Thanks for bringing attention to "She Fears You."

Here's the latest--see top headline at http://www.thefire.org/

Adam Kissel

Male reproductive rights -- a mother fights back

Anonymous · 4 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is an article I found interesting. There are women fighting for this cause as well. I am one of them. Excerpt:

'Do Men Really have Equal Rights?

It is a question I really never thought of until recently. It was just last week, in fact, that I was sitting in a court room waiting for my 18 year old son's hearing to end. He was taken to court to pay child support for a child he did not want and did not agree to have, who he was, in fact, tricked into fathering by a dishonest young woman. Unfortunately, he was the "winner" of the paternity test (We were told it could have been one of three boys). I told my son he wasn't a winner at all, because being the winner of the DNA test he just lost everything that he doesn't even have yet.

While waiting in the filled court room, I sat there alone with my thoughts and worries about what was about to happen. Since he is 18 years old, I wasn't allowed to sit with him. He is considered an adult in the eyes of the court. An 18 year old boy with braces on his teeth, a sweet smile, and who still enjoys watching cartoons in the morning. As an adult, he is uneducated, underemployed, and naive enough to be duped by a pretty girl; damn, he doesn't even have his driver's license yet.'

Terri Stoddard: 'Let's stop this PSA from airing'

anthony · 4 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here, as follows:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=tqfp2aKj02w

According to an email I received these PSAs are running in Georgia. I've written to every TV station there informing them that these PSAs are not accurate. If you'd like to do the same, here are some of the addresses (the rest had fill-in forms on their websites).

Claim: Abusive fathers are successful in winning sole child custody about 70% of the time.

Analysis: This figure appears to be an embellishment of a claim in a 1989 report by the Gender Bias Committee of the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court which claimed that in 70% of cases, fathers (not abusive fathers) were successful in winning some form of child custody, though not necessarily physical custody or sole custody.

New DV shelter for women only includes clubhouse and 2-year-rent-free apartments

Matt · 5 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PHOENIX - The Sojourner Center celebrated the grand opening of its newest campus for victims of domestic violence Saturday.

The Phoenix campus is a transitional facility, designed to help women get back out on their own by living in a community setting.

The campus houses 29 one, two and three bedroom apartments and a clubhouse in a gated complex.

“This brings everything together so the women can really create that sense of community, a real neighborhood where neighbors help neighbors, and women look after each other,” said Connie Phillips, Executive Director of Sojourner Center.'

Living in a Car After False DV Charges

Matt · 5 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ATLANTA- A year ago, after 20 years of marriage, my ex-wife falsely accused me of striking her. I didn't touch her.

As a result of her lie, I have experienced arrest, incarceration, conviction, and loss of freedom. I am penniless and lived in my car for three months. I ate out of trash cans.

I now have temporary accommodation courtesy of a Veteran's Administration program for homeless men. I am 44-years-old.'

Pup-drowning Blonde gets Off

anthony · 5 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The blonde girl who was filmed hurling puppies into a river to drown will not face animal cruelty charges, furious animal rights campaigners have announced.

Police in Bugojna, Bosnia, have dropped plans to prosecute the youngster because they say she is not old enough to face court.

The decision was revealed by angry animal rights campaigners PETA in Germany, today (Tuesday).

They say local police and animal care groups claim all the pups were rescued from the fast flowing Vbras river by an onlooker.

But PETA spokeswoman Nadja Kutscher said: "This is outrageous. The puppies that the old woman was with were completely different ones to those thrown into the river in the video.'

Father’s incarceration associated with elevated risks of marijuana and other illegal drug use fondueguy · 5 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a recently published study in the journal Addiction, researchers from Bowling Green State University report evidence of an association between father’s incarceration and substantially elevated risks for illegal drug use in adolescence and early adulthood.

The number of persons incarcerated in the United States has sharply risen over the past several decades, from about 250,000 in 1975 to 2,250,000 in 2006. So too has the number of children with incarcerated parents, particularly fathers. The consequences of father’s incarceration for their children, families, and communities are of increasing concern to researchers, policy makers, and practitioners.

...

Given that having a father in prison is an increasingly common event, this study’s findings suggest that a substantial number of young people in the USA are at risk for drug use. Increased drug use is closely linked to a number of adverse outcomes, including illegal drug market activity, increased crime and incarceration rates, lost work productivity, and costly substance abuse treatment. “Long-term drug use may exacerbate many other problems faced by disadvantaged youth, including mental health issues, delinquency, dropping out of school, domestic violence and poverty,” says the study’s lead author, Dr. Michael Roettger, a Postdoctoral Fellow with the National Center for Family and Marriage Research. Roettger notes that “this is of particular concern within poor and minority communities where incarcerations are disproportionately located.”'

F&F Action Alert: Tell Major Media Outlets, DSM Committee that PAS is Real and Harms Children

Matt · 6 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Alert here. Excerpt:

'Short Version: A new national Associated Press article covers the heated debate over Parental Alienation. We want you to write a letter to the DSM committee explaining that Parental Alienation is very real and needs to be taken seriously by our family courts–to do so, click here. Also, please write a Letter to the Editor concerning the AP article–click here and choose the email address of the appropriate newspaper(s).

Action Alert–We Want Your Participation

A new national Associated Press article discusses Parental Alienation and whether family courts should consider target parents' claims of being alienated from their children by their ex-spouses. Led by psychiatrist William Bernet, a group of 70 mental health experts from 12 countries are part of an effort to add Parental Alienation to the fifth edition of the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders (DSM-V), the American Psychiatric Association's "bible" of diagnoses. To ensure that the DSM-V Task Force is aware of the scope and severity of Parental Alienation, thousands of our supporters responded to our Action Alert earlier this year to write to the DSM-V Task Force.'

"The Leadership Council" and PAS

Matt · 6 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

An anonymous submission mentioned "The Leadership Council", a group I never heard of before, and very generically-named at that. I Googled the phrase and discovered such a group indeed exists and is working to discredit FRAs' efforts around PAS issues, among other things. The PAS-related page is here. From their Mission page:

'The Leadership Council is a nonprofit independent scientific organization composed of respected scientists, clinicians, educators, legal scholars, journalists, and public policy analysts.
...
Goals
...
- To correct misinformation on psychological science used to serve vested interests or used as evidence in important cases affecting legal rights related to mental health issues.
- To improve coordination among professionals, develop guidelines, encourage research, further interdisciplinary professional education, and provide guidance, support, and encouragement for professionals in the field of traumatic studies.'

Boy back with mum who taped him to wall

Minuteman · 6 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An American toddler is back living at home with his mother after she and her boyfriend were jailed for duct taping him to a wall.

The 22-month old boy was originally placed in the custody of the US state of Nebraska after photos emerged of the abuse.

But the boy has now been put back in the custody of his 18-year-old mother Jayla Hamm, ABC News reports.'

Australia: Clinic opens in Melbourne to treat victims of female genital mutilation

Minuteman · 6 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to story here In full:

'A new clinic opens at the Royal Women's Hospital this week, providing services to reverse acts of female circumcision.

A landmark de-infibulation clinic opens at the Royal Women's Hospital this Friday.

The clinic provides a discreet half-day procedure to reverse female circumcision - commonly known as Female Genital Mutilation - or just simply FGM.

Richelle Hunt takes an exclusive tour through the facility just as it prepares to open for service, speaking to Dr Khai Mohhammed-Noor, who is responsible for developing this Australian-first service.

For more information about this service, call the Women's Health Information Centre on 8345 3037 and ask to be referred to the FARREP Program.'

Swimming World: Time For A Change of Title IX

anthony · 6 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PHOENIX, Arizona, October 4. IT is time for a change. Specifically, Title IX needs to be changed. Unfortunately, the wrongs that Title IX set out to right 38 years ago are now being inflicted on our sons. While this particular forum is focused on swimming, you could easily substitute many other sports that are suffering the same fate.

The factual evidence is quite compelling. I believe the reason there is not a greater outcry, is that people are just not aware of the situation. But the time has come for some righteous indignation about what is happening to our sons.

The standards are not equitable. Male high school swimmers need to perform at an elite level if they want to be considered for a college swimming scholarship. Girls, on the other hand, can still receive a scholarship to an NCAA Division I program even if they don't have a Junior National cut.
...
Each year, our college age sons are losing access to universities and scholarships all across America. It's probably too late to make a difference for them. But think of all the novice boys out there, learning their strokes, going to age group meets, usually being beat by their female teammates until at least 12 or so. Who will be their advocate?'

US woman faked being a boy to date girl

Minuteman · 7 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to story here. Excerpt:

'A 31-year-old Ohio woman has admitted to posing as a teenage boy so she could date a teenage girl, pleading guilty to misdemeanor sexual imposition.

A prosecutor's spokesman says Patricia Dye also pleaded guilty on Wednesday to misdemeanor attempted sexual imposition and contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

A judge in Warren County Juvenile Court in Lebanon sentenced Dye to six months in jail.
...
Dye's lawyer says Dye feels remorse and has learned from the experience.'

Tuskegee, Guatemala, Nuremburg and Disposable Men

el cid · 7 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This column discusses the syphilis experiments conducted on the Tuskegee Airmen and on Guatemalan prisoners. In Tuskegee, researchers deliberately withheld treatment from black airmen known to have syphilis. In Guatemala, researchers deliberately infected male prisoners with syphilis and then treated it in hopes of determining the effectiveness of the cure.

In both experiments, the subjects were men. As Warren Farrell points out, it's easy to recognize the racism of conducting illicit medical experiments on black airmen--but it's easy to miss the sexism.

Feminists have often complained women were left out of medical experiments, citing this as proof we don't care enough about women. The truth is just the opposite: we leave women out because we care more about women than men. The columnist who wrote this piece is, I believe, a feminist--but she voices no complaints about the lack of women as test subjects.

A Misinformation Masterpiece: "Thank Goodness for the Good Men"

Matt · 8 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

This is a masterpiece of DV misinformation, on the surface claiming to praise men, but essentially ignoring the existence of male victims. Note that she never refers to “Good Women” who take a stand against female abusers.

Here’s her email if you want to point out the bizarre logic: randy-at-randysusanmeyers.com, or post your comment on the Huffington Post. Excerpt:

'Where are the signs in the men's rooms asking: Are You Hurting The Woman You Love? Underneath those words there could be a number to call -- a hotline where men can learn to change -- because the way I see it (even in my most hopeless moments, like when I read about an 80-year-old woman being raped by a gang of young soldiers) we can learn to be better.

I pray, especially in this month of Domestic Violence Awareness, that men will notice all the strong and good men preaching against using violence against women as a tool in war -- whether they be the wars in our homes or the wars in our streets.'

Female college graduate circulates cahier of men she had sex with, sparks legal and social debate

anthony · 8 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I really can't think of anything to write for this video.

Custody battle story at salon.com exposes depths of nymphotropism fibtastic · 8 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Of course by the end of this story we're supposed to pity the woman who abandoned her child but continued to collect child support from her ex-husband while he raised the child. Excerpt:

'"She abandoned us," my client had told me. She was never the kind of woman you marry, he'd said. He should have known. They'd been married less than a year when she packed her clothes in a single cardboard box and drove off, leaving him. Leaving their infant daughter.

So when I pushed my way through the ancient revolving door of the common pleas court, I was ready to hate her.
...
I was ready for her. When was the last time you saw your daughter? Six years. You've never seen her? No. Have you called her? No, I haven't. Do you know her phone number? No. So you haven't seen her since she was a baby? No. What school does she go to? I don't know. You don't know the name of her school? That's what I just said. Are you working? Yes, I'm a bartender. How long have you been at your current job? Six months. And before that? Before that, what? Before that, where did you work? I was unemployed. For how long? Two years. Before that, what did you do? I did some bartending. Why haven't you tried to see your daughter? I just couldn't.
...

The promise of tears on the witness stand was the only time the woman came close to crying. She didn't cry when she signed the judgment entry. And she didn't cry when the magistrate asked her if she understood the agreement. She said yes, she understood and agreed to everything, and she picked up her purse and walked away, leaving behind the one gift she could give her daughter: freedom from a future of pain.
...
My husband emerged from the kitchen with the baby on one hip and smiled at me. "Did you win?"

I nuzzled my cheek against my daughter's. "No."'

Stacy Bannerman's Domestic Violence Hoax

Matt · 9 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week Stacy Bannerman, well-known advocate for military families, published an article titled, "Husbands Who Bring the War Home:" Author of When the War Came Home, Bannerman has been credited with helping to secure passage of the Military Family Leave Act in 2009.
...
As a columnist who specializes in the field of domestic violence and who has spoken with countless victims of abuse, I found myself feeling increasingly unsettled as I worked my way through her engaging yet enigmatic essay.

The question of the veracity of her claims is paramount because the partner abuse field is strewn with the battlefield debris of half-truths, misrepresentations, and utter fabrications. University of New Hampshire researcher Murray Straus has written of domestic violence researchers who "have let their ideological commitments overrule their scientific commitments." And University of Pennsylvania School of Social Work Dean Richard Gelles has coined the whimsical phrase about the ubiquitous partner abuse "factoids from nowhere."'

The big list: Female teachers with students

Matt · 9 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Had a reader mention it via email tonight, so in case you don't know about it, it is found here.

"It’s Time to Start Negotiating"

fondueguy · 10 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Someone had recently told me that bogs on men's rights and anti-Feminism are gaining popularity in Sweden. I asked if there were any Swedish blogs with postings in English and I got some examples including PelleBilling.com. The blog owner is an M.D. in Sweden and has been on TV, done interviews, and given lectures on men's issues. His post, here, succinctly brings large and historical issues to the individual level in a very useful and widely applicable way. Excerpt:

'The story of humanity is one where collective negotiation between the sexes has always been the norm. Tribes didn’t succeed by having each man and woman quarrel about what tasks to perform. Men and women simply did what needed to be done in order to survive and to secure the wellbeing of their offspring. In traditional nation states men would support and protect the family, while women would give birth to children and work in the home. Roles were simple, efficient and clear-cut, with each sex respecting the other for the important role they fulfilled. However, the social fabric of the past is very much in the past, and it’s a new day with a completely new set of rules.

You may not have learned it in school, and your parents may not have taught you, but relying on traditional gender roles to get you where you want is uncertain at best. In this day and age we need to turn to individual negotiation, something that men especially need to start becoming aware of. Women have already made this transition to a much greater extent, thanks to the women’s movement. Women are more aware of their choices, and evolutionary speaking women have always had to think about how good a deal they can get when interacting with men.
...

Men, on the other hand, still believe that they need to perform their traditional duties in every area of life, and are rarely fully conscious of what they offer and what they get in return. If you are a man reading this, I therefore offer you this checklist of things to become aware of in your everyday life...'

Woman who has sex with boy honored as 'Person of Month'

Matt · 10 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Alabama city is coming under heavy fire from some local residents for celebrating a convicted sex offender – a female teacher who admitted to raping a 15-year-old male student – as its "Person of the Month."

The controversy involves Pelham, Ala., a city of approximately 21,000 people, which is honoring Emily Morris for promoting a fundraiser at the city's high school to help battle cancer.

But just five years ago, when she was a resident of Pelham, Morris was arrested on a variety of charges for allegedly having intercourse with a teen boy at Leeds High School where she taught. The state of Alabama has listed her as a sex offender.

Now, the former instructor who avoided a potential 20-year jail sentence by pleading guilty to second-degree rape in exchange for one year behind bars and four years probation, is featured as "Person of the Month" in the June edition of Pelham Magazine, the official publication of the city, which is mailed out to local residents.'

MTV, Teen Mom and domestic violence against men

Matt · 10 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'I realize that few of the readers of this blog would be watching "Teen Mom" on MTV; however, if you caught the September 28th episode when Amber beat the crap out of her ex-fiance Gary, you would realize why this episode is so important in at least making an attempt to expose the blatant domestic violence against men.

Reluctantly, I admit that I watch and was sucked into this show on a fairly regular basis. I was shocked when I saw Amber attacking Gary a number of times and then finally, in the Sept. 28th episode, she hit him in the head and tried to kick him down a flight of stairs while he carrying down a TV to put in his car....
...
I must say I was surprised that MTV broadcast the domestic violence PSA for an abused man after the show. It was subtle but well-done. Kudos to MTV for exposing this taboo topic. They could have played it down and ignored it but they caught Amber's abuse on tape for all of the world to see. Yes, I know if the roles were reversed, the man would be in jail with no questions or apologies but at least it's a start.'

Teens drink spiked booze and immediate suspicion is on date-rape intent

Matt · 10 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. If a person intends to drug another person for "nefarious reasons" they usually do so very selectively and not in a way likely to draw attention to what they are doing. Dumping a desultory drug into a general mix of booze that a mix of people has access to just doesn't fit the M.O., yet the very first thing they can come up with is that this was an attempt to create a mass-drugging for "date-rape" purposes. The police "caught" one couple in the act of having sex someplace in the house only to find out that they are in fact a couple and undrugged. Other than that, they have nothing else to say but that some jerk/jerks spiked a common source of drinks. And the immediate suspicion? An attempt to drug females for the purposes of raping them.

Spiking the drink bowl has been around for a long time. It is a bad thing to do. However the spiking used to be done with things like vodka or gin. Today that is not enough; college kids need to use actual drugs to spike alcoholic drinks to have the same unexpectedly-loosened-up-party effect the stereotypical punch bowl-spikers of the 1950s were after. In both cases, those doing it were committing crimes. The point here though is that in the old days, the spiker, if caught, was in trouble for spiking the punch bowl because that is what he had done wrong. Now the suspicion is that he is out to do what, go on a mass-raping spree in front of everyone in the house?

When the person(s) who did this (and indeed, they could as well be female as male, though you wouldn't know that by the article) are caught, they ought to face serious criminal charges. The charges should include poisoning, but attempted date rape, without any further evidence of intent? I guess we'll have to wait and see, but what is most outrageous about this report aside from its content is the presumption around the motivations of the perps and the sex of same.

Let's Commemorate the Chilean miners

Anonymous · 11 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Within the next week all the miners who have been trapped underground for over 2 months in Chile will hopefully be rescued. Miraculously it appears that there will be no loss of life and, hopefully, no lasting physical effects, although the psychological effects of being trapped for so long may take longer to come to terms with. We frequently refer to the sacrifices which men make by undertaking hard, dirty and often dangerous jobs and the fact that well over 90% of all workplace fatalities are men. It is high time that we recognised these men in the same way that women are fond of recognising their achievements. The men's movement should designate the anniversary of the date on which the last miner is freed as the day on which we recognise these men. What better day to choose than the anniversary of an event which could so easily have been an appalling tragedy, but which will now be a cause for celebration?

Malcolm - Cardiff, Wales

(Submitted and published originally as Letter to the Editor on www.glennsacks.com)

Australia: Adelaide public hospital still hosting circumcision information despite ban

Minuteman · 12 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link here (.pdf document).

The Adelaide Women's and Children's Hospital continues to host the following pamphlet of after-care instructions for the infant-only plastibell circumcision device, despite a ban on cosmetic circumcision of infants in South Australian public hospitals, in effect since 2007.

Excerpt:

'Plastibell
Is commonly used in infants 6 months and younger. A plastic ring is tied around the foreskin and the excess skin is trimmed. The ring separates and falls off after approximately 10 days.
...
PLASTIBELL CIRCUMCISION: No special dressing is required. A dark brown or black ring around the plastic ring is normal, which will disappear when the ring falls off. The plastic ring usually falls off after 2-8 days. If the plastic ring has not fallen off within 10 days take your son to your local doctor. Some bruising and swelling is to be expected.'

Australia: Mum punished [abused] kids out of "fear"(?)

Minuteman · 13 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

There's always someone else to blame...

Link here. Excerpt:

'A mother has given evidence that she choked and hit her five, small starving children if they tried to get food because she was scared of another woman who hated them.

The mother has admitted she watched her five kids, aged four to seven, beg for dog food because they were so hungry.

The mother, who cannot be named for legal reasons, was giving evidence in a Supreme Court trial in Adelaide of three men who are accused of mistreating the five children from late February 2008 to June 2008.'

Australia: Penis burning wife guilty of manslaughter

Minuteman · 13 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

It's all just a big joke to yahoo7. Link to article here. Excerpt:

'An Adelaide woman who killed her husband after trying to set his penis on fire has been found not guilty of his murder, but guilty of manslaughter.

A Supreme Court jury, after deliberating for nine hours over two days, ruled Rajini Narayan guilty of her husband's manslaughter after clearing her of murder in a majority verdict, Adelaide Now reports.

Nayaran, who threw petrol and a lit candle on the back of on Satish Narayan, said she was only trying to burn the tip of his penis, and she had no intention of killing him.

Satish died 20 days after his wife confronted him about a suspected affair in their Unley home in December 2008.

The prosecution argued the affair, and two decades of beatings, were the motivating factor in the crime - a claim Narayan denied.'

Confronting Sexist Language

Anonymous · 13 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Tom Jacobs has a nice article about confronting sexist language. Please feel free to link - Janice

Excerpt:

'A woman who bristles when a male friend or colleague uses sexist language has to make a quick decision: Call him on it, or not? Although she might be personally offended, she may be reluctant to speak up, anticipating his response will be dismissive or defensive.

Research just published in the Journal of Experimental Social Psychology suggests such fears may be overblown. It describes a carefully structured study in which college-age males are confronted over the use of sexist language — and respond with heightened sensitivity regarding gender issues.'

--
Ed. note: I posted this so MANN folks could comment in the article about how important it is NOT to assume that only men may make "sexist" comments in the form of assuming the sex of a person based on their line of work, etc. Whenever we encounter these kinds of articles where is is assumed that men are the ones doing the sexist action in question, I feel that MRAs have to reply vigorously to it so the author can reconsider his or her point of view and perhaps learn a few things.

"Buyer's Remorse" and Rape

el cid · 13 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This story provides partial transcripts regarding Ken Buck's decision not to prosecute an alleged rape. Similar stories have also appeared in the Huffington Post and Salon (though I don't have links to those stories.)

Ken Buck is the Republican candidate for the Colorado senate seat. His opponent is Democrat Michael Bennet. Apparently, someone from ProgressNow tracked down the alleged victim in this case and obtained a recording she made of her interview with Buck.

Given the totality of the evidence, Buck decided not to prosecute. He also consulted with members of the Boulder DA's office, who concurred with his decision. He told the alleged victim the jury would likely view this as a case of "buyer's remorse." That last comment has stirred a lot of controversy and Buck's being accused of being "insensitive" to women.

The story raises issues that are of likely interest to readers of this forum.

Australia: Female retirement home worker charged with sexually assaulting elderly man

Minuteman · 15 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A woman will face court over allegations she sexually assaulted an elderly man in a retirement home in inner Sydney.

The 53-year-old Lidcombe woman, who is an employee at the facility in Albion Street at Surry Hills, sexually assaulted an elderly man at the centre on Friday, October 1, police say.'

Australia: Couple jailed for sex with son aged nine

Minuteman · 15 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Alas, some are more equal than others. Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A married Sydney couple have been jailed for "disturbing" sex crimes against their nine-year-old son.
...
At Sydney's Downing Centre District Court on Friday, Judge Anthony Garling sentenced the man to serve a minimum nine years' jail.
...
"It is hard to imagine a greater breach of trust than what the male offender has committed," Judge Garling said.
...
The woman was sentenced to serve at least three years and nine months in jail after pleading guilty to sexual intercourse with her son and two counts of committing an act of indecency.
...
"She blames her husband and I am satisfied that he did have some domination over her. However, she seems to believe it is acceptable to carry out sexual acts with her nine-year-old son.'

F&F Action Alert: Bill Seeks to Raise Child Support Levels in Terrible Economy

Matt · 15 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Action Alert here. Excerpt:

'Short Version: Ohio SB 292 will raise child support levels in the face of the worst economy since the Great Depression. Fathers and Families of Ohio is working to defeat SB 292 this legislative session but we need your help—please fill out our form here and we will send your letter to all appropriate legislators.

Background Information: Senator Shirley Smith (D-Cleveland) and Senator Bill Seitz (R-Cincinnati) have introduced Ohio SB 292 into the current Ohio legislative session. While the bill does have some significant positives, it has some very ugly negatives. These are all detailed here.'

Psychiatrist facing 20 years in prison for brainwashing patient into killing husband

Matt · 15 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A psychiatrist has been accused of using sex, drugs and hypnosis to persuade a patient to kill her husband.

Mary Hein is facing up to 20 years in jail after using her skills to manipulate a patient into committing murder.

The 45-year-old is alleged to have told the patient they would share her husband's $500,000 life insurance policy if he carried out the killing.
...
The patient told police Hein said they would be a couple after her husband was dead and they could live comfortably off the husband's half a million dollar life insurance policy.

Hein was arrested after the man went to police and the therapist was secretly recorded plotting her husband's murder.

The respected psychiatrist has been charged with sexual exploitation by a therapist, one count of solicitation of first-degree intentional homicide and one count of obstructing an officer.'

'Abused Men In Scotland' launched Oct. 15, 2010

Matt · 15 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Web site: http://www.abusedmeninscotland.org/. From the Why AMIS link:

'Men In Scotland (MIS) was initially set up as a blog and forum to accompany our ePetition to the Scottish Parliament on male victims of domestic abuse. We are setting up this new website, Abused Men In Scotland (AMIS) to provide information and support for men in Scotland who experience domestic abuse or violence and anyone willing to help. We added the word 'abused' to the name to clarify the purpose of the charity.

In order for support services for men to be properly established we felt there was a need first to raise an awareness and understanding of the problem - particularly for our policy makers and service providers. The current focus of government and other agencies on domestic abuse/violence as ‘violence against women’ has had the unintended consequence of leaving men on the receiving end of domestic abuse/violence and their children unacknowledged and unsupported.'

Scottish police record record number of male victims of domestic abuse

Matt · 17 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'AMIS today publishes statistics from the 8 Scottish police forces that show an increase of around 9.4% in the number of incidents that they recorded as domestic abuse or violence with a man as the victim in 2009-10 compared to 2008-9. The statistics also reveal a reduction of 6.1% in the number of incidents recorded with a woman as victim compared to 2008-9.

Within the acknowledged limitations of police statistics* one in six of recorded victims was male yet the reality remains that after 10 years of the Scottish Parliament there are virtually no support services in Scotland designed to help men and their children affected by domestic abuse or violence.'

Watch the dynamics: conservative and liberal women

Matt · 17 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Ahh, women and politics: vis-a-vis one another.

It's been a staple of western politics that it is hard for men to run against women in political races (when indeed they do run) since there is a "code of conduct" toward women that men are expected to adhere to even as women are not expected to adhere to any such thing. For example, muck-racking and character assassination can be pursued by female candidates (even this season we have seen a certain female politician tell her opponent to "man up", while such a thing isn't even possible for him to say to her), while if a man engages in anything close to that, he will be accused of being any number of things, from sexist to abusive-- anything but doing what electoral politics is, unfortunately, largely about: whatever you can do to win the seat short of finding yourself locked up for it.

The machinery, however, seizes up when the political pundits or candidates are all female. Watch the dynamics when this is the case. Read these two articles: Dowd and Perino -- and consider the content and the various prejudices and assumptions embodied in them. What is found herein is not unrelated to the same dynamic that occurs when male and female candidates or pundits have a clash of ideas or interests. The same appeals to gender-based stereotypes occur, only here, it is within the same gender.

If this were a Feminist Hooey Machine, you could hear the gears start to grind and see smoke come out of it. This is because Feminist Hooey Machines need males as grist. When they are fed females, they seize up and start to emit smoke. The only people capable of fixing them are, of course, men-- we have to be the grist or else they have nothing to feed on.

UK: Cabal of doctors seeking to reinstate non-therapeutic circumcisions on the NHS

Minuteman · 18 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From July 2010, but it seems to have been missed on these pages. Link to article here.

ABSTRACT:

'Introduction Male circumcision for religious reasons is not available in the NHS. In this report, we present the results of an investigation conducted by the Thames Valley Health Protection Unit (TVHPU) at an unregulated circumcision 'camp' in Oxford in 2006.

Methods A detailed investigation was initiated following notification by a general practitioner of two children with circumcision-related complications at a 'camp'. Telephone interviews were conducted with the 'camp' organizers, the operating surgeon, GPs and paediatric surgeons. A field visit was carried out by TVHPU staff to assess implementation of infection control practices.

Results Thirty-two children were circumcised over a 3 day period in the library of an Islamic faith school by a single, medically qualified individual. Among the 29 children with follow-up information, 13 (44.8%) developed complications requiring medical intervention. Information obtained from interviews and the field visit confirmed the lack of implementation of standard infection control practices.

Conclusion This incident highlights the harm associated with circumcision in young children by unregulated operators due to lack of compliance with best surgical and infection control guidance. There is an urgent need for commissioning circumcision services for religious reasons in the NHS.'

Australia: Female drunk-driver of crashed vehicle had children in boot (trunk)

Minuteman · 18 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A Melbourne woman who allegedly drove drunk and crashed her car with seven children aboard — including three in the boot — has begged the public to forgive her.

"I know I've done the most stupidest thing you could ever imagine," she told Nine News this morning.

"Please forgive me. Please, it's all I can say. There's nothing else I can say."

The 35-year-old woman had a 10-year-old boy in the front passenger seat, two 14-year-old girls and a boy, 15, in the back seat and three boys — two aged 14 and a 15-year-old in the boot of her 1992 Mitsubishi Magna.'

Father-son team sends iPhone into outer space (video) johndias · 18 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. How's this for a father-son project? A great dad and his young son worked together on a project to send an iPhone into outer space, carried there by a weather balloon. The entire journey was filmed by the iPhone, including the descent following the explosion of the balloon in space. They used the iPhone's GPS capability to retrieve it, and uploaded the entire video of both the ascent and descent here:

http://vimeo.com/15091562

Now THAT'S a great dad!

I am astounded that even in space, the proximity to the earth's atmosphere was still close enough to carry sounds. You can actually hear the sounds of the iPhone jostling around, you can hear the wind on the ascent and descent, and you can even hear the sound of the weather balloon when it pops, initiating the descent.

Male Studies: Back for Round 2

Matt · 19 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK: The Foundation for Male Studies will focus on the research and programs needed to reverse the downward spiral now effecting virtually all aspects of the lives of men and boys, at the Second Annual International Conference on Male Studies - Looking Forward to Solutions, April 6, 2011.

Edward M. Stephens, MD, FMS' Founder and Chair says that in addition to the conference's solution-geared presentations by leading authorities, the Foundation is calling for papers from academics on how to best deal with increasing levels of male unemployment, depression, suicides, high school and college dropout rates and related problems.

Marianne Legato, MD and Tom Mortenson will co-chair the conference at the New York Academy of Medicine. Dr. Legato, founder and director of Columbia's College of Medicine Partnership for Gender-Specific Medicine, edited the first text on gender medicine, and founded the journal, Gender Medicine. A widely acclaimed author of works on men's and women's health, her most current book is Why Men Die First. Mr. Mortenson is senior scholar at the Pell Institute for the Study of Opportunity in Higher Education and the recipient of major national awards for contributions to educational research.'

Australia: Mother jailed for prostituting teenage daughter

Minuteman · 19 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A mother-of-two has been jailed for prostituting her teenage daughter in a case a judge says involved "an extreme breach of trust".

The girl says she was subjected to physical and mental abuse and forced to take illicit drugs when known by the name 'Layla' and working at Sydney's Liaisons escort agency between November 2008 and December 2009.

She was aged 16 and 17 at the time. The girl's mother has admitted changing a birth certificate so the child could work for the agency as an 18-year-old.

At Wollongong District Court on Tuesday, the 43-year-old woman, who cannot be named for legal reasons, was sentenced to serve at least 18 months' jail after pleading guilty to charges of obtaining a benefit from child prostitution and causing a child to participate in prostitution.'

Australia: Victorian Children's Minister unsure of checks on children

Minuteman · 19 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'Victorian Children's Minister Lisa Neville admits not knowing how many times her department has checked on three children - one of whom accidentally took an ecstasy tablet - since they were reunited with their mother.

The children's grandmother, who cannot be identified, told ABC Television on Monday her three grand-daughters, all aged under eight, have been exposed to violence, criminal activity, drug use and sexual abuse in their mother's care.

The woman says her daughter is not capable of looking after the children, who were placed in care of the Department of Human Services (DHS) - when the youngest child accidentally took ecstasy - but were returned to their mother in March.

She said the girls at times went for days without food.

The woman said that in April, a Victorian DHS officer told her that the department had "forgotten" to apply to court for a new protection order allowing its workers access to the children.'

Australia: Western Australian government apologises to unwed mothers

Minuteman · 19 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who was handcuffed to a bed, drugged and forced to give up her newborn baby for adoption says an official apology has helped her regain her "selfhood".

The West Australian government on Tuesday issued a public apology to women who had their babies taken from them by authorities from the 1940s to the 1980s because they were unwed.

WA is the first state or territory to issue such an apology.
...

Dr Hames said the apology was not about compensation for the mothers or a criticism of parents who adopted the children.

"What they (the mothers) say to me is not that they want compensation. It is that they want to have somebody recognise that what happened to them was wrong and, hopefully, will never ever happen again," he said.

Premier Colin Barnett was to move a motion in parliament on Tuesday acknowledging that previous government policies were unsupportive of pregnant, unmarried women and failed to help them.'

Sign petition for Medicare coverage of Prostate Cancer treatment

fondueguy · 19 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The petition is linked from ustoo.org, and found on this page. Excerpt:

'I am asking the Us TOO network of survivors, family members and support group chapters to raise your voices in support of Medicare reimbursement for FDA approved cancer drugs.

On April 29, 2010, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved Provenge for the treatment of men with asymptomatic or minimally symptomatic metastatic, castrate resistant (hormone refractory) prostate cancer.

We celebrated the new treatment option for men with advanced disease. But now there is a problem.

Dr. Mark Moyad has brought to our attention that the agency that oversees Medicare coverage, the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS), wants to review the appropriateness of covering this new prostate cancer treatment.

We believe that if the FDA approves a treatment option, that Medicare and insurance companies should provide unrestricted access and coverage for it!
...
The goal is to collect thousands of signatures from across the country, so we can present them at the CMS public meeting in Baltimore on Wednesday, November 17, 2010.'

Canada: Globe and Mail - Failing Boys

Anonymous · 19 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The Globe and Mail is running a week-long series titled "Is 'failing boys' too simplistic a notion?". Friday, Oct 22 at 12 noon (EDT) is a live discussion with Dr. Wayne Martino of UWO (Canada).

Knowing the ideological nature of UWO academics, I did a bit of further research on Dr. Martino.

His course curriculum in the UWO education department include discussion topics such as white male power and feminist, queer and critical pedagogies.

Quoting from Dr. Martino's paper "What About the Boys, Issues of Masculinity in Schools"

"In this sense feminist educators and theories also inform the perspectives on boys and schooling elaborated in this book. Such perspectives have contributed significantly to producing valuable insights into the links between gender and power"

"In line with the positions taken up in that report, we believe that policy formulation and curriculum development in schools must avoid the popularist tendency to assert a binary oppositional and ‘competing victims’ perspective on the factors impacting on the social and educational experiences of boys and girls"

"the issue that needs to be addressed is the investment that many boys, men and schools have in promoting a particular version of masculinity which is to their detriment in the sense that it limits them from developing a wider repertoire of behaviours and ways of relating. Until a commitment is made, particularly by men and boys themselves, to addressing the role that sexuality, homophobia and misogyny continue to play in how many of them define and negotiate their masculinities, we believe that very little will change."

Reading: http://www.mcgraw-hill.co.uk/openup/chapters/0335206239.pdf

The endangered male teacher

Matt · 19 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new study says male elementary teachers live in a steady state of anxiety, with 13 per cent reporting they had been wrongly accused of inappropriate contact with students. Part 2 of a six-part series.

The male elementary teacher is the spotted owl of the education system, the leatherback turtle, the Beluga.

His presence is so endangered that in many public schools his numbers can be counted on a single hand. In some schools, it requires no hands at all.

“It is now possible for a child in Canada to go through elementary school and high school and never see a male at the front of the class,” says Jon Bradley, an associate professor of education at McGill University, where men make up just five per cent of the elementary teachers in training.'

Rape Culture: Female Scam, Male Nightmare

Matt · 19 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rape culture is a term used within women's studies and feminism, describing a culture in which rape and other sexual violence against women is common and in which prevalent attitudes, norms, practices, and media condone, normalize, excuse, or encourage sexualized violence.

That is just one of the definitions for rape culture I found online. It is as good a definition as any for something that does not, and never has, existed. And it has been taking its rightful place alongside a nonexistent gender wage gap, nonexistent employment discrimination, nonexistent media bias and a nonexistent domestic violence crisis that only affects women, continuing the litany of nonexistent feminist outrages.

This collection of imagined slights and hurts form the basis of Lie Culture. And it is nothing new. We have been lying to women since the first one asked, “Does this mastodon hide make my ass look fat?” Rather we have been lying to women since the first one started crying and getting cold in the bedroom when being told the truth. And that trump card, issued in the name of survival biology, has long ensured that for the most part, women will not be inconvenienced with reality. And nor will men who want to remain on their “good” side.'

Canada: Lottery proposed to fund divorce reform

Matt · 19 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With nearly four in 10 marriages expected to end in divorce, a trip down the aisle is a bit of a gamble. A game of chance.

And in keeping with that theme, Ontario's largest lawyers' organization is suggesting a novel way to pay for changes to the expensive and time-consuming family justice system.

A provincial lottery.

In a report presented to Attorney General Chris Bentley on Monday night, the Ontario Bar Association — along with two mediators' associations — is also proposing a "user charge" be added to the cost of marriage licences issued in the province.'

China: Mother who beat daughter to death for not memorising a poem spared prison

Minuteman · 20 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who beat her five-year-old daughter to death while trying to get her to memorise a poem has been spared jail by a court.

Tan Hongying, from Beijing, was sentenced to three years in prison by a court in eastern Zhejiang province on Tuesday — but the sentence was suspended and she was instead given five years probation, the Beijing Morning News reports.

The report did not say why the court in the city of Jiashan handed down such a light sentence.'

Pre-nups now recognised in UK (but only when he wants to claim off her)

Malcolm · 20 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Would you believe it? For years pre-nups have not been recognised in law in the UK on grounds of public policy. That has now changed with this case and, you've guessed it, this volte-face came about when a man was trying to claim from his ex-wife. Notice how there's also plenty of wiggle room for judges not to enforce pre-nups in future, if they, i.e. when a woman's claiming offf her ex. Looks like a typical piece of backward reasoning, i.e. reach a decision and then construct an argument to justify it.

Another aspect of the case which was reported when the Court of Appeal decision was announced, but was not commented on, was that the marriage broke down in 2003 after he gave up his lucrative banking career to pursue a less well-paid, but evidently more satisfying, career as a university researcher, at Oxford, not some tin-pot university. The couple clearly did not need his banking salary to fund their lifestyle, so clearly either she felt that he was 'sponging' off her, or her view of him changed when he was no longer an ambitious, go-getting banker. Of course women make career decisions based on job satisfaction, rather than money all the time and that is empowering, as this article demonstrates.

Add this to the list: Boys are failing in education

anthony · 20 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is it time we addressed the need for affirmative action programs for men?

What's that you say? Preposterous? Men still tend to out-earn women for the same work. They overwhelmingly outnumber women as CEOs and members of Congress, and have the edge in just about every other prestige career.

True enough. But consider what statistics tell us about trends in male and female educational attainment. It ain't pretty, boys. For those who are concerned about the future of this country, the red flags are up.

Women earn high school degrees at higher rates than men, and they earn more college and post-graduate degrees as well. That holds true for all races and ethnicities. While women have used the last few decades to advance in educational attainment, men have slipped.'

Man Cleared of Rape Wins $18.5 Million Jury Award

anthony · 20 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(Oct. 20) -- A jury has awarded $18.5 million to a New York City man who spent more than 20 years in jail for rape before he was cleared by DNA evidence.

The amount awarded Tuesday to Alan Newton is among the largest given to a wrongfully imprisoned person in New York City, The New York Times reported.

The jury ruled that the city violated the constitutional rights of Newton, 49, who was released from prison about four years ago.
...
A spokeswoman for the city's Law Department said the city was "disappointed" and planned to appeal.'

20 Women Arrested in Swedish Child Porn Raid

anthony · 20 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'STOCKHOLM -- Swedish police say they have arrested 23 people in a nationwide raid against a child pornography ring, including 20 women.

Police spokesman Sven-Ake Petters called the raid "unique" and said he has never come across so many female suspects in a child pornography investigation before. He says arrests were made at 12 different locations across Sweden on Wednesday and include women aged between 38 and 60.

Police uncovered the network during the investigation of a man in Dalarna, western Sweden, who was charged last month with breaking child pornography laws.

Petters says there were no immediate clues as to why so many women were involved but that police will now investigate computers and mobile phones that were seized during the raid.'

Australia: Federal bureaucrats' unsure how to meet Labor governments targets for women on public boards

Minuteman · 21 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpts:

'Federal government departments are unsure about how to meet Labor's goal of having more women on public boards, a Senate hearing has been told.

Labor promised, during the election campaign, to have 40 per cent female representation by 2015.

But government departments are still deciding how to implement these gender diversity objectives, said Cate McKenzie, the group manager of women's affairs within the Department of Families, Housing, Community Services and Indigenous Affairs.

"And really, without that information at this point, we're unable to say which particular strategies the departments will be employing," she told a Senate estimates committee.'

Jobs and Economic Security for America's Women Report

anthony · 21 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Thursday, the National Economic Council will release a report on the impact of the recession on women and how the Obama administration's economic policies benefit American women. The report lays out the economic landscape facing women today and details some of the many ways the administration is committed to making sure the government is working for all Americans especially American women.
...
• Since women are nearly 50 percent of the workforce, the recession's economic impacts on women are even more consequential for the economy than they would have been in past recessions. As a result of the recession that started in December of 2007, women have lost jobs and seen their median annual earnings fall. Further, women have faced increased economic insecurity as housing prices declined and states and municipalities have cut back on the provision of social services.

• Women face a number of longer-term challenges such as the wage gap and female underrepresentation in higher levels of management. Further, specific groups of women like single mothers, older women and minorities face additional challenges.'

New Report on Women in the Economy Is Tone-Deaf and Misguided

anthony · 21 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The National Economic Council just released “Jobs and Economic Security for America’s Women,” and the report is, in many ways, about as ho-hum as you can get: women’s increased role in the economy and as family breadwinners, women’s gains in education, and the challenges women face, such as the much ballyhooed “wage-gap.” Naturally, this assessment is followed up with a list of the initiatives the administration has launched or plans to launch. But there is something notable about the report: It exemplifies everything that’s wrong with this White House in terms of both tone-deafness and policy.

...

It’s fine to do an analysis of how one particular group of Americans is faring, and the group doesn’t always need to be most disadvantaged one. Yet in focusing on women’s economic challenges, the report misses one of the largest factors that determines women’s financial security: men’s economic prospects. Men’s deteriorating employment greatly impacts married women and women with children who depend on fathers for support. Few people (outside of women’s studies departments) see the world in terms as a war between the sexes. Women’s and men’s fates are inexorably tied in family finances, so to ignore men’s bleaker economic situation makes this report more an exercise in politicking than a useful analysis of women’s current economic challenges.'

UK: False High Wycombe rape report woman 'cautioned'

anthony · 21 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 20-year-old reported being attacked in High Wycombe in the early hours of Sunday.

But following an investigation detectives found the incident had never taken place.

The woman was arrested on suspicion of wasting police time on Tuesday and after admitting making up the attack was cautioned by officers.

...

"Not only do false rape allegations cost a great deal of public money, but they result in officers having less time to investigate real crimes."'

UK: Woman, 21, faces jail after crying rape

anthony · 21 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A YOUNG woman faces jail for crying rape after her lies wasted 235 hours of police time and inflicted 15 weeks of misery on an innocent man.

Samantha Merry, 21, of Bells Chase, Great Baddow, admitted trying to pervert the course of justice at Chelmsford Crown Court on Monday after she made the false rape claim earlier this year on March 3.

A 37-year-old from Chelmsford was arrested at his house and was kept on bail for 15 weeks until police dropped the charges.

Merry, a former Boswells School pupil, was bailed until November 15 and Judge Anthony Goldstaub QC told her: "Sort out your affairs on the assumption you're likely to be sent to prison."'

Female sex teachers expose bad law

anthony · 21 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The increasing number of affirmed accusations against female school teachers for having consensual sex with under-age boys ought to bring the complex and often taboo subject of statutory rape under scrutiny.

Statutory rape is a broad, non-technical term for “rape” by way of legal statute. Its pretense is that adolescents under a certain age, usually between 14-18 depending on the state, are deemed unsuited to give consent to sexual relations of any kind and to anyone, not just older partners.

...

The infamous LaFave saga does not define all “female sex predator” cases; many involve legitimate manipulation and physical and mental abuse, often instigated by an adult holding a position of authority. Surely it is appropriate that LaFave, due to her professional obligations and position of power, pay the professional and social consequences of being barred from teaching and having to register as a sex offender, but current protocols of legal recourse are drastically out of bounds.

The same rule applies if the gender roles are switched. The circumstances of any inappropriate sexual relationship should guide the response, not numbers. For instance, if a 16-year-old girl is legally permitted to give consent and abort her fetus, it is not easily defended that such a person is legally prohibited from giving sexual consent to a much older man. This analogy is not perfect because statutory rape involves a second actor who is sometimes in a position of power over the consenter, but it is suggestive.'

"Why Men Won't Commit"

Matt · 22 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

On "A Voice For Men", here. Please enjoy the comments.

What About Economic Security and Jobs for America's Men?

Matt · 22 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'The National Economic Council released a report today ("Jobs and Economic Security for America's Women") "on the impact of the recession on women and how the Obama administration's economic policies benefit American women. The report lays out the economic landscape facing women today and details some of the many ways the administration is committed to making sure the government is working for all Americans especially American women."

And yet, measured by job losses and unemployment rates, it was men, not women, who suffered such a hugely disproportionate share of the economic hardship of the last recession—such that it is now frequently referred to as the "Great Mancession." In a statement last June to a House Ways and Means Subcommittee based on my report "The Great Mancession of 2008-2009," I testified that "there has probably never been a previous recession in U.S. history where the negative effects of unemployment and job losses fell so disproportionately on one gender."'

Standards of Proof for DV by State

Matt · 22 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Supplied by a reader, file available for download here. Heck in some states, it's durned near anything!

F & F Passes 7 Bills in 2010, as Schwarzenegger Signs 3 More

Matt · 22 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From an F&F newsletter here. Excerpt:

'This year Fathers and Families led the passage of seven different family law bills nationwide, as Governor Schwarzenegger recently signed the remaining three California F & F bills. F & F was also instrumental in helping defeat three harmful bills. The seven bills we were instrumental in passing include:

1. Alimony Reform (CA. SB 1482): Parents who face alimony increases after their child support ends will now be able to demand a vocational examination for their ex-spouses, and judges are required to calculate alimony based on the examiner's estimate of the ex-spouse's earning capacity.'

The World´s First International Anti-Feminist Meeting in Zürich, Switzerland, October 30th 2010

Anonymous · 22 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Page here.

Organized by The Anti-Feminist Interest Group (IGAF, Interessengemeinschaft Antifeminismus)
English-translated announcement here

Media:
"It´s a historical moment"
Interview with Ulf Andersson from PappaRättsGruppen, translated, here
and
"The Anti-feminists are charging", translated, here.

Switzerland was neutral in World War II (1939 – 1945). Now, the Swiss are leading the worldwide resistance against Feminism. Very admirable!

Story submitted by Ulf Andersson,
PappaRättsGruppen, Sweden
(http://www.dads-r-us.se/)

Dallas Mother Ruled Insane, Not Guilty of Throwing Sons From Overpass

anthony · 22 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'DALLAS -- A Dallas woman accused of throwing her two children from a freeway overpass and then jumping off the 20-foot-high span has been found not guilty by reason of insanity.

A judge in Dallas ruled Thursday in the trial of Khandi Busby, who was charged with attempted murder and injury to a child. The judge then ordered her to spend roughly 30 days in a state mental institution, MyFoxDFW.com reports.

Investigators say the boys were ages 6 and 8 when they were injured after being thrown from the highway overpass on March 12, 2008. They were treated and placed in foster care, where they remain.

Defense attorney David Pire says Busby felt God had told her to throw her sons off the bridge to protect them from Satan.

Relatives say Busby is bipolar and had stopped taking her medication.'

1968 Playboy Playmate Victoria Vetri Tried to Kill Boyfriend, Cops Say

Matt · 22 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Except:

'1968 Playboy Playmate of the Year Angela Dorian has been charged with attempted murder after she allegedly shot her boyfriend from close range in their Hollywood apartment Saturday night, TMZ has learned.

66-year-old Dorian -- aka Victoria Rathgeb -- aka Victoria Vetri -- (currently 5'5", 110 lbs) was arrested late Saturday night -- and is still behind bars. Bail has been set at $1,000,000.

Law enforcement sources tell us ... they believe Dorian and her BF were having an argument that turned physical -- and that's when Dorian grabbed a handgun and fired at least one shot into her boyfriend's upper body.'

A Debate On Domestic Violence

Matt · 22 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From A Voice For Men, here. Excerpt:

'David Futrelle of the blog Manboobz has agreed to enter a debate on the subject of domestic violence with me here at A Voice for Men. Since Mr. Futrelle maintains a blog in which he asserts that MRA's have pretty much everything wrong, and in which he specifically claims he will, concerning MRA's, "dismantle their rickety logic and dubious statistics," it should follow that he will do just that on the subject of DV, starting right now.

During the brief negotiations it was decided that my excellent centerpiece article on domestic violence, and the research it was based on, will serve as the object of his dissent. For readers convenience I am posting the video version of that article and the research links here as well.'

Obama Woos Female Voters Ahead Of Midterms

anthony · 23 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Obama continued his final major campaign push before the midterms with events in Seattle and San Francisco on Thursday.

Accompanied by women who own businesses, Obama spoke in one family's backyard about the economy's effects on women, and outlined ways he said his policies have helped them, such as the first piece of legislation he signed –- the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act.

"Things like equal pay for equal work aren't just women's issues, they're middle-class family issues," he said. "Because how well women do will help determine how well middle-class families do as a whole."'

Rep. Maloney Applauds White House Report on Women and the Economy

anthony · 23 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, DC – Rep. Carolyn Maloney (D-NY), Chair of the U.S. Congress Joint Economic Committee (JEC) and a senior member of the House Financial Services Committee, applauded the Administration's newly-released report, "Jobs and Economic Security for America's Women," prepared by the National Economic Council (NEC).

"Women's economic equity and success are integral to getting our economy thriving again," said Rep. Maloney. "But as this report and the work of the Joint Economic Committee have pointed out, we still have significant challenges."'

Angle, Reid and The “Man Up” Meme: The Pitfalls Of Gendered Attacks

anthony · 23 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The American male has lately been undergoing an identity crisis: there’s the clearly self-conscious Men’s Rights movement, a shifting economy in which women are tops, and the optimal male has been brought down to size. And that’s okay. This gender-bending upheaval should be an opportunity to expand the definition of not only a good “man,” but what it means to be a good person.

Apology, responsibility, honesty, these attributes and more are part of what make an exemplary human, that perhaps Utopian character we — I hope — all hope to emulate. Surely playing on a man’s male vanity can work in some situations, like telling a man to take care of his child, but such tactics should be used sparingly, because accountability isn’t about masculinity. It’s about being an adult.

If Reid’s campaign wanted to send a powerful, progressive message, they would have said, “Angle needs to reclaim her humanity,” rather than trying to play on phrase that perpetuates unseemly gendered stereotypes. With “man up” becoming a political go-to, perhaps we can use this opportunity to celebrate traits that aren’t for “men” or “women.” They’re for all of mankind.'

Australia: 'Lowering veil on men's rights'

anthony · 23 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LAST week the Perth District Court imposed a Muslim cultural practice on a group of non-Muslim men.

Judge Shauna Deane told the men - all journalists - to leave her court so a Muslim woman could feel free to give evidence in a fraud trial without wearing her niqab.

Deane had earlier ruled that Tasneem, whose last name has been suppressed, had to remove her face-covering veil so the jury could read her face as well as hear her words.

But the male journalists were ejected, despite applications from the Seven, Nine and Ten networks to let them stay.

No doubt Deane thought this a fair compromise. Tasneem's Muslim beliefs - in this case, that a woman not show her face to men outside her family - were infringed upon only to the extent required for justice to operate fairly.

Male jurors could see her, but male journalists not.

But what of traditional Australian values? What of a man's right to see justice being done? To report it? To be free of sexual discrimination at work?'

Report: Woman accused of false rape claims heads to court today

anthony · 23 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman accused of filing a false rape claim is expected to appear in an Orange County courtroom today.

Emily Marie Riker, 21, of Orlando, told a security guard at a convenience store in June that someone had pulled her into a vehicle and raped her, but deputies said her story was inconsistent and did not match the physical evidence.

She faces charges of filing a false claim to a law-enforcement officer.

Riker later said she lied because she was angry with the man she had been with, according to the Orange County Sheriff's Office.'

Teacher arrested for allegedly raping student

anthony · 23 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DUNCAN, OK -- A former school band instructor is accused of having a sexual relationship with a student. The female instructor was arrested Thursday night in Marshall County and was brought back to Stephens County the next day. Court records allege the relationship started in 2008 and lasted about a year and a half. The band instructor resigned her position last May.

Friday afternoon, Stephens County deputies picked up Christyn Raincrow, a former band instructor at Empire Public Schools.

She was charged with second-degree rape by instrumentation and forcible sodomy of a 17-year-old female student.'

Author examines how schools shortchange boys

anthony · 23 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Maryville, Mo. — Peg Tyre — who had made something of a career out of studying how schools deal with, and sometimes fail, their boy students — spoke to a full house Wednesday evening at the Ron Houston Center for the Performing Arts as part of Northwest's Ploghoft Lecture Series.
...
Tyre said as she began wondering about a perceived failure of many boys to do well in school, she decided to go to the data. She noted that boys are expelled from school five times more often than girls, and that, as a group, exhibit a far higher number of behavioral problems.

"From the data, I found that 70 percent of special education students are boys," she said.

"Girls typically make As and Bs while boys make Cs and Ds. Boys do less homework. Boys are more apt to be involved in violent activities. The difference we see between boys and girls now will affect how kids live their lives now and in the future."

She continued her lecture by saying that perfectly normal little boys play and fantasize around violence. As a result, teachers see potential Columbine shooters.'

The smarter sex: Does it matter if girls do better than boys?

anthony · 23 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys will perform just as you expect them to, it seems. If you tell them they aren't as intelligent as girls and are less likely to do well in tests, that is exactly what will happen. So says the latest salvo in the battle of the sexes that has preoccupied educationalists for decades.

A study published at the British Educational Research Association conference tested two classes of youngsters. One (mixed) class was told that boys generally performed worse in tests than girls; lo and behold, those boys did exactly that.

In the other class of 10-year-olds no such information was imparted, and the performance of the two sexes in a reading test showed greater parity. This is in line with the Pygmalion theory of education, as highlighted in the 1968 US study Pygmalion in the Classroom, which showed that if you split pupils randomly into two groups labelled "improving" and "not improving", the "improving" group will improve and the other one will not.'

'Why boys fail' is subject of Oct. 26 program

anthony · 23 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Concord — Why are men enrolling in and graduating from colleges at lower rates than females? Why are boys falling behind in school? Richard Whitmire, a former editorial writer and a veteran education reporter, has done extensive research on these questions, concluding that the world has become more verbal, but boys haven't. Author of a new book, "Why Boys Fail," Whitmire will speak at the Fenn School on Tuesday, Oct. 26, at 7 p.m.

The biggest culprit in boys falling behind, Whitmire says, isn't video games, pop culture, or female-dominated schools. Rather, it is that boys are usually thrust into a bewildering new school environment that demands high-level reading and writing skills before boys are capable of handling them.

In "Why Boys Fail," Whitmire examines the sources and repercussions of the problem, and provides inspiring case studies of schools where realistic approaches of preparing students, both boys and girls, are being used with success. Educators have called "Why Boys Fail" a "thoughtful and positive call to action" and say that Whitmire has "unearthed clues that will help us better serve male learners in particular and all students in general."'

Male Serf Gets Spat Upon But Will Only Serve 6 Months In Prison

Luek · 23 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A man was spit upon and his life threatened by a female at a restaurant when her brat almost ran into a door he was exiting. He defended himself but was sentenced to 6 months in prison for hitting her after she first assaulted him. Excerpt:

'CLAYTON COUNTY, Ga. -- The defense took the stand Friday in the trial against a man accused of beating a woman at a Morrow Cracker Barrel restaurant.

Army reservist Tasha Hill said Troy Dale West hit, kicked and screamed racial slurs at her after she asked him to be careful and not let the door hit her daughter. West originally faced numerous charges including, aggravated assault and false imprisonment, but a judge sentenced him to serve six months after listening to testimony.

West told the jury he never wanted to harm Hill and never hit her with a closed fist. He testified he only hit Hill with his open hand after she spat on him and kept kicking him.
...

He said Hill threatened him and then spit on him.

“She says, ‘I'm a U.S. Military soldier. I'll kill you,’” West said.

Though Hill denies the spitting, Cracker barrel customers said they saw it happen.

“I saw her spit in his face and he wiped it out and by the time he wiped it out, he hit her,” said witness Leon Oswalt.

The defense also called two teenagers to the stand who said Hill threatened to kill them after she accused them of breaking into her home.
...
Prosecutor Jason Green asked West if it’s OK to hit a woman. While West admitted it’s normally not OK he said, “There is occasion that it could be OK.”

West pleaded to four misdemeanors and was sentenced to 36 months, with six months to serve.'

IA: When will pediatricians stop cutting our baby boys?

Matt · 23 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA newsletter:

'Last year, the American Academy of Pediatrics said it would come out with recommendations on infant circumcision "soon"—and yet they remain silent. With the recent news that the U.S. circumcision rate is down to just 33%, America's pediatricians have been put on notice: circumcision is an antiquated, violent, and unnecessary procedure that has NO health benefits. Write to the AAP today and remind pediatricians they took an oath to do no harm—which means they MUST start listening to America's parents, and stop cutting baby boys. Email the AAP.

Taiwanese bride bemoans lack of men and marries herself

Matt · 23 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. In case anyone has any doubts about just how nuts certain women have become living with the effects of feminism/post-feminism/neo-post-feminism/etc. As always, I welcome insightful commentary. :) Excerpt:

'(NewsCore) - A Taiwanese woman left uninspired by the standard of men on offer in her city will finally tie the knot -- with herself, Shanghai Daily reported early Saturday.

Chen Wei-yih has bought a flowing white bridal grown, planned a lavish reception and even hired a wedding photographer to mark her unusual matrimony, which takes place next month

Lonely Chen, 30, told local media she was urged to wed by friends and loved ones but could not find a decent husband in Taipei, Taiwan's largest city.'

American Electra: Feminism's ritual matricide

Matt · 24 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From the Oct. issue of Harper's, an article by Susan Faludi. Only part of it is available to non-subscribers but you'll get the idea. Some things never change, and inter-generational "issues" always seem to be in every enclave of human endeavor. (Seems NOW was very close to having a 20-something for a president at their last election! Who'da thunk it?) One day I hope the MRA/FRA cause will be far enough along to have its own version of this! Excerpt:

'No one who has been engaged in feminist politics and thought for any length of time can be oblivious to an abiding aspect of the modern women's movement in America—that so often, and despite its many victories, it seems to falter along a "mother-daughter" divide. A generational breakdown underlies so many of the pathologies that have long disturbed American feminism—its fleeting mobilizations followed by long hibernations; its bitter divisions over sex; and its reflexive renunciation of its prior incarnations, its progenitors, even its very name. The contemporary women's movement seems fated to fight a war on two fronts: alongside the battle of the sexes rages the battle of the ages.

How many times have we heard women say, "No older woman helped me in my career—my mentors have all been men"? How many surveys report that young women don't want, and distrust, female bosses? How often did we hear during the last presidential election that young women were recoiling from Hillary Clinton because she "reminds me of my mother"? Why does so much of "new" feminist activism and scholarship spurn the work and ideas of the generation that came before? As ungracious as these attitudes may seem, they are grounded in a sad reality: while American feminism has long, and productively, concentrated on getting men to give women some of the power they used to give only to their sons, it hasn't figured out how to pass power down from woman to woman, to bequeath authority to its progeny. Its inability to conceive of a succession has crippled women's progress not just within the women's movement but in every venue of American public life. The women's movement cycled through a long first "wave," and, in increasingly shorter oscillations, a second and third wave, and some say we are now witnessing a fourth. With each go-round, women make gains, but the movement never seems able to establish an enduring birthright, a secure line of descent—to reproduce itself as a strong and sturdy force. At the core of America's most fruitful political movement resides a perpetual barrenness.'

Report: Trenton woman accused of taunting dying 7-year-old loses custody of children

anthony · 24 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It's been a rough month for Jennifer Petkov. The 33-year-old Trenton woman accused of bullying 7-year-old Kathleen Edward lost custody of two of her children this week, according to Fox 2.

The television station reports a Wayne County Probate Court judge has ruled Petkov's eight-year-old daughter and five-year-old son should live with their father until further notice.

The father, who had a relationship with Petkov prior to her current marriage, filed for an emergency hearing shortly after Petkov made national headlines by admitting on camera that she posted disturbing images on Facebook of Kathleen, who is in the final stages of Huntington's Disease, and her mother, who died of the degenerative brain condition.

The story went viral and Petkov soon found herself and her home the target of death threats, broken eggs and unwanted pizza deliveries. Last week, she allegedly tried to run over another neighbor, Tana Boling with her car. She was arraigned on felonious assault and reckless driving charges, but her attorney said video evidence contradicts Boling's story.'

Australia: Princess Academy to be subsidized by Church

Minuteman · 25 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

So much for all girl's schools responding to public demand. Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A BAILOUT from the Uniting Church will not save prestigious girls' school Annesley College from potential redundancies and lesson-sharing with other schools next year.

Yesterday, the Uniting Church revealed a last-minute reprieve for the financially-unstable school, vowing to underwrite the servicing of any loans required by Annesley to fund its normal operations for two years.

This has secured the future of the 108-year-old college until 2013, but its future beyond that date remains uncertain.

At present, the college will be operating on 307 enrolments for next year - short of the church's original offer to give the school $1 million to keep it operating providing it could guarantee at least 350 students.'

Community service for girl who made false rape claim

anthony · 25 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 17-year-old girl has been given a 60 hour suspended community service sentence for falsely claiming she had been drugged, raped and made pregnant by an ex boyfriend last year.

The boy spent four days in custody after the girl made the accusations. It was not until April 2010 that the girl finally admitted she had made up the story.

The public prosecution department had called for a one month suspended jail term.'

"Hiccup Girl" arrested for murder

fibtastic · 25 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Three years ago, Jennifer Mee became a national sensation as the poor "Hiccup Girl," cursed with a three-week case of hiccups.

She appeared on national morning shows and thousands of suggestions from well-wishers poured in with remedies.

Now, Jennifer Mee, 19, has a much worse situation on her hands: The St. Petersburg, Fla., resident has been arrested and charged with first-degree murder.

According to the St. Petersburg police, Mee "lured" a man to an address, where two other men shot and killed him. All three suspects have admitted their involvement, police said. A conviction can lead to the death penalty.'

Michael Kimmel addresses conceptions of masculinity

anthony · 25 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Kimmel tackled the issue of gender visibility. Women make their gender visible, he said, while men are blind to their gender because it is a societal privilege. Men define themselves in relation to women, so therefore masculinity can only be characterized as non-femininity.

Finally, Kimmel talked about the discord between women's advances in claiming their sexuality and sexual agency, and the last tenant of masculinity, "giving 'em hell." Here, Kimmel largely addressed safe sex and rape. To men, based on masculine ideals, safe sex is an oxymoron. Sex, to men, is hot, passionate and explosive; safe sex, in the minds of men, takes away all of these ideas. According to Kimmel, the difference today between men's and women's sexuality is that for women, safe sex is a precondition.
...
Until this precondition is guaranteed and observed, "unless a woman knows that her bodily integrity will be upheld, she can't get to a point where she is comfortable." Men, Kimmel said, have a huge role to play in this issue: men control the use of their bodies, and can end date and acquaintance rape. Kimmel ended with the idea that gender equality is the only way men can have the type of relationships they desire with women and with their families.'

Fathers' rights are ignored when moms abandon babies

anthony · 25 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here.

'Re: "Calgary needs an Angel's Cradle," Editorial, Oct. 21.

Is creating an Angel's Cradle really going to solve the problem of abandoning infants? Or is it going to increase the number of children discarded? I believe it will increase the number of children left, and it will be allowing a parent to potentially get out of a situation when times get tough. And what parent is really going to go and drop her child off at a hospital, in front of other people, and then just walk away so easily? It is obvious that if they are ditching their child in the first place it is because they are trying to do it secretly, and discreetly, for some reason. Also, the father in this situation is given no chance to care for his child, because of the mother's actions. Isn't it the father's right to be able to care for his child if he wants to? This type of government involvement could potentially help, yet at this stage is giving the wrong message to unwilling parents. If a parent really does not want her child, there is something called adoption. That's a good place to start.'

Woman pleads guilty to murdering husband in long-awaited trial open

Anonymous · 26 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The long-awaited second-degree murder trial of a woman suspected of shooting her wealthy former husband in 2004 is set to begin Oct. 25.

Forty-6-year-old Jan Waters is accused of killing 52-year-old Alan Waters in his Baton Rouge home after a long-running custody battle and dispute over money.'

Related article on same case here. Excerpt:

'A trial scheduled for Monday had all the makings of a made-for-TV movie, as the ex-wife of a wealthy man was accused of killing him in cold blood in their million dollar home in the Shenandoah area, but she shocked the courtroom when she pleaded guilty to manslaughter.

Jan Waters' walk into court was her last as a free woman for years to come. She confessed to shooting her ex-husband, Alan Waters, in the chest on May 21, 2004. As the facts of the case were read aloud in court, Waters collapsed on one of her attorneys.'

Woman charged with baby murders

Minuteman · 26 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A US woman who allegedly stowed the remains of four children in her closet and threw the bones of another into a landfill has been charged with five counts of murder.

Michele Kalina, 44, had previously been charged with abuse of a corpse on August 9 after her daughter discovered containers with the tiny bodies inside a closet of their Philadelphia apartment.

Berks County District Attorney John Adams said Kalina gave her family strict orders not to open the living room closet.

But Kalina's daughter broke that rule and made the gruesome find.'

Baby Injured During At-Home Circumcision

ItsDan · 26 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 3-month-old child was taken to a hospital in critical condition after his mother attempted to circumcise him at home, police said.

Portland police Sgt. Pete Simpson said officers arrived at a home at Northeast 127th Avenue and Burnside Street at about 2 a.m. Sunday to assist medics after a call of an injured child.

Police said they learned the mother had attempted to perform a medical procedure on the infant.
...
No arrests have been made at this point, Simpson said.'

Lawyer for 'Hiccup Girl' May Use Tourette's Syndrome Defense in Murder Case

anthony · 27 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. -- The lawyer for a young Florida woman who was known for unstoppable hiccups and is now accused of murder said Tuesday he may present an unusual defense in her case: His client has Tourette's Syndrome.

Jennifer Mee, 19, was charged Sunday with first-degree murder after police said she lured a 22-year-old man to a meeting where he was robbed and shot a day earlier. St. Peterburg Maj. Mike Kovacsev said police do not believe she fired the gun.

Mee was briefly famous in 2007 because she couldn't stop hiccuping. Her attorney, John Trevena, said she was diagnosed with Tourette's Syndrome, a neurological disorder that can cause involuntary movements and speech problems.

"Hiccups are a symptom of Tourette's," Trevena said, declining to be more specific about how the condition might have affected his client's behavior.

Trevena said Mee, who has never been arrested before, is distraught and is being held without bond in a protective confinement wing at the Pinellas County Jail because she is a high-profile inmate.'

India: Mum throws baby from hospital window

Minuteman · 27 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'An Indian woman who gave birth prematurely to twins has been arrested in Mumbai for allegedly throwing one of her children from a hospital window, police and hospital officials said.

The woman dropped the baby girl from a ground floor bathroom window of the KEM Hospital in central Mumbai early on Tuesday morning. The infant was found but had suffered head injuries and later died.

The girl's mother initially claimed that her daughter had been stolen but security camera footage showed her going into the toilet with the baby and emerging without her.'

Mother accused of killing daughters with samurai sword

Minuteman · 27 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A Californian mother has faced court accused of killing her twin daughters with a samurai sword.

Monica McCarrick, 28, allegedly stabbed her three-year-old girls, set fire to her apartment and then stabbed herself on October 12.
...
She has since left hospital and been sent to prison, where she is bound to a wheelchair and wears bandages for her injuries.

She has pleaded not guilty to charges of murder, child abuse, arson, and destruction of evidence.'

UK: Woman charged with subway push murder

Minuteman · 27 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. In full:

'A 34-year-old woman has been charged with the murder of a 63-year-old man pushed under a London Tube train while he was wearing women's clothes.

The victim, from central London, was struck by a train at King's Cross underground station at rush hour on Monday evening.

His companion, from north London, was arrested at the scene.

Nina Kanagasingham, 34, will appear at City of Westminster Magistrates' Court on Thursday.'

Miranda Devine asks: Why are all men made to feel like fiends?

GaryB · 28 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here, on News.com.au. Miranda Devine isn't much of a friend to guys, but this article says a lot, both in the article itself and most importantly in the comments being added. Clip:

'ONE sunny morning last week a 55-year-old advertising executive and father was walking to work on Sydney's North Shore when he came across a toddler wandering by himself just 10m from busy Military Rd (in North Sydney), no guardian in sight. "Where's your mummy," he asked the small boy, who didn't respond and kept walking towards the dangerous thoroughfare.

Against his instinct, the man did not pick up the boy, for fear of being accused of being a paedophile abductor. Instead, as the child kept moving towards danger, he called to a lady in a nearby shop to ask if the boy was hers. She ran outside and chased the toddler down. In the commotion the mother emerged from a nearby shop, apparently unperturbed.

But the man was angry. "What would have got her upset is if I had picked the boy up when I saw him, which was my first instinct," he said.'

The comments are great - the odd woman saying we're just being drama queens or 'hey we suffer too', but mostly it's men agreeing that we're getting the shaft from society. Good to see men standing up and adding their voices to the mix!

Woman shakes and kills baby over Farmville interruptions

Stinger503 · 28 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Full article here. Excerpt:

'A Jacksonville mother charged with shaking her baby to death has pleaded guilty to second-degree murder.

Alexandra V. Tobias, 22, was arrested after the January death of 3-month-old Dylan Lee Edmondson. She told investigators she became angry because the baby was crying while she was playing a computer game called FarmVille on the Facebook social-networking website.

Tobias entered her plea Wednesday before Circuit Judge Adrian G. Soud. A second-degree murder charge is punishable by up to life in prison.'

Action request from SAVE

Matt · 28 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

All –

The President has unveiled a new domestic violence program that is transparently designed to sway the upcoming November 2 election. WE MUST ACT NOW.

On Thursday and Friday, Oct. 28-29, we are asking you to telephone your Senators and Representative in Washington DC at 1-202-224-3121 and deliver this simple message: “Stop playing politics with Domestic Violence. Speak out against President Obama’s untested DV plan. We need abuse prevention programs that are based on sound science, and do not ignore half of all abuse victims.”

Don’t call just once. Call several times, spacing your calls about an hour apart.

And for extra emphasis, send an email to White House Domestic Violence czar Lynne Rosenthal: public@who.eop.gov with the same message. Politely direct Ms. Rosenthal to SAVE’s plan to improve domestic violence programs at http://www.saveservices.org/policymakers/what-needs-to-be-done-to-strengthen-domestic-violence-laws/

We’re hopping mad about this politically-calculated display of DV bias, and we’re not going to take it lying down.

Say it politely, and do it now.

President Obama Is Playing Politics With Domestic Violence Issue, Groups Warn

Matt · 28 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Oct. 28 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- Domestic Violence experts are criticizing President Obama's pre-election unveiling of a new domestic violence initiative, saying the effort represents a concoction of unproven strategies that betray the needs of women.

The Obama plan will promote wider use of restraining orders -- but research shows such orders are flatly ineffective in preventing future violence: http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/Why-DV-Programs-Fail-to-Stop-Abuse

The Independent Women's Forum has said such orders "lull women into a false sense of security," since a piece of paper is unlikely to deter a batterer intent on maiming a victim. Former Judge Milton Raphaelson of Massachusetts notes, "Few lives, if any, have been saved, but much harm, and possibly loss of lives, has come from the issuance of restraining orders and the arrests and conflicts ensuing therefrom."

According to a report issued Tuesday by the National Coalition of Anti-Violence Programs, lesbian and gay persons are nearly twice as likely to experience domestic violence as persons in heterosexual relationships. The report also documents cases of discriminatory practices and "verbal and sexual harassment of shelter staff towards lesbian clients:" http://www.avp.org/documents/2009DV-IPVREPORTFINAL2.pdf'

NOW refuses comment on Gawker's Christine O'Donnell sex smear

Matt · 28 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Noting like politics to make everyone just wee less than true to their stated cause(s)... but NOW fairly excels at it! Excerpt:

'Following gossip website Gawker's publication of an anonymous story alleging a one-night encounter between the author and Republican senatorial candidate for Delaware Christine O'Donnell, the National Organization for Women has refused comment. "We're going to pass on this one," Mai Shiozaki told The Examiner. I asked if this is generally a topic they try to stay away from. "Thanks, we're passing."

NOW played a prominent role in demanding Anita Hill's charges against then-Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas "be heard in a public forum." But that was politically convenient — after all, one of NOW's "important missions" is "fighting the right wing."

Similarly, the California chapter of NOW stood by Democrat gubernatorial candidate Jerry Brown, even as it had initially been critical of him and his campaign for referring to his Republican opponent, Meg Whitman, as a "whore" in a private conversation that was recorded and released to the public. The president of the chapter merely dismissed it as a poor choice of words, but ultimately justified it: "The very troubling issue that is embedded in that call is what prompted the description of Meg as a 'whore' is basically that she sold out Californians for an endorsement and a $450,000 independent expenditure campaign."'

Feministing comments on mother accused of murdering baby over farmville game

anthony · 29 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is no doubt that this story is absolutely appalling and quite sad. The natural reaction is to ask how a mother could be so evil to kill her baby over a video game? But it can't be just that simple. While I do not condone her behavior, what jumped out at me was that this woman must have been experiencing some severe postpartum depression. I am not excusing her actions but postpartum depression is real and often underestimated.

Women are expected to be all exuberant and glowing with the birth of their new baby but sometimes reality come crashing down on new moms. While they truly love their babies, sleep deprivation, hormonal fluctuations, or painful breastfeeding can trigger unpleasant feelings and hopelessness.

Tobias is a young woman and I wonder what type of support she had in raising her baby. There is no mention of the baby's father or family in the story, only that she pleaded guilty to spare her family the pain of a trial. I also wonder what type of access she had to doctors and/or therapists, and if she had information or resources about postpartum depression. Was there anyone she could talk to about her feelings? Was she predisposed to depression anyway? Maybe her cries for help were dismissed as "baby blues." My point here is that situations like this may be preventable when women are given support in childrearing and accurate information before the baby is born.'

Uganda poised to pass death-sentence law against (male) homosexuals

Matt · 29 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. When governments seek to "outlaw homosexuality", the vast majority of those persecuted are men. Societies of all kinds seem much less threatened by female homosexuality than male, even while male homosexuality is more often discussed in public forums. The persecution of men because of their sexuality is just another form of persecuting men, plain and simple. In this case, the penalty for being gay isn't just prison for some period of time, or a fine, or just public censure, but death. Excerpt:

'Gay Ugandans have faced a fortnight of attacks and intimidation, say human rights campaigners, after a local newspaper published a list of the country's "top 100 homosexuals". As well as naming gay Ugandans – complete with photographs and addresses – Rolling Stone newspaper also claimed that a deadly disease was attacking homosexuals in Uganda, and said that gays were recruiting one million children by raiding schools.

Activists say a number of Ugandans have been attacked since the Rolling Stone newspaper published the front-page story on 9 October under a banner that read, "Hang Them".

...

The newspaper's managing editor, Giles Muhame, maintains that the article was in the public interest. "We felt there was a need for society to know that such characters exist amongst them. Some of them recruit young children into homosexuality, which is bad and needs to be exposed," he said.

"They take advantage of poverty to recruit Ugandans. In brief, we did so because homosexuality is illegal, unacceptable and insults our traditional lifestyle."

The article in Rolling Stone emerged about a year after the Ugandan MP David Bahati introduced a bill that would have imposed the death penalty for some homosexual acts and life imprisonment for others.

Drawn up following a visit to Uganda by leaders of Christian ministries from the US, the legislation was quietly shelved after an international outcry. However, gays in the conservative country – where 85 per cent of the population of 32 million are Christian and 12 per cent Muslim – believe the proposed law has still had an impact on their way of life.'

Prepare for SAVE's Mandatory Arrest Campaign

Matt · 29 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

In preparation for our upcoming Stop Mandatory Arrest campaign, SAVE has compiled a listing of the citations of the laws in the 21 states with mandatory arrest:
http://www.saveservices.org/what-are-the-state-laws-that-mandate-arrest-for-dv-assault/

We also encourage you to check this page out in preparation for your state legislature's upcoming session in early 2011, so you can prepare your plan of action. For more information about SAVE's upcoming campaign, visit:
http://www.saveservices.org/protect-victims-stop-mandatory-arrest/

Middle-aged school employee charged with sexual assault of boy

anthony · 30 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CALGARY — Just weeks after being charged with sexual assaulting a 15-year-old boy and being ordered to stay away from him, a Calgary school employee allegedly met with the victim, landing her in jail for several weeks.

Now, Calgary police are trying to ensure the school employee — who is in her late 40s — and the teen remain apart. But neither are co-operating.

“We believed the relationship wasn’t going to end contrary to charges being laid,” said acting staff Sgt. Mark Hatchette, adding it was the victim’s family who contacted police about the relationship.

“We are doing our due diligence and that’s all we can do. We put specific conditions in place to protect victims and then we follow up.”

Police say the woman, who was an employee with the Calgary Board of Education, was charged in late July with sexual assault, sexual interference with a young person and sexual interference by a person in authority.'

Men's group says feminism now infringing on their rights

anthony · 30 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here, which includes an embedded link to the audio report. Excerpt:

'It's not easy being an unreconstructed bloke these days. Spare a thought for René Kuhn, former president of the right-wing Swiss People's Party in Lucerne. He's the one made headlines a while back for saying Swiss women are frumpy and don't wear enough make-up.

Now he's saying feminism is an attack on men's rights and he's having to hold a planned anti-feminism meeting in secret. The meeting was due to be held in the canton of Zurich, in Uitikon, but after protests and a paint attack on the town's community hall this week, the venue pulled out of hosting the meeting. WRS's Jo Fahy reports:

The anti-feminist meeting's organisers declined to go on air but confirmed they've employed a private security firm and will only inform conference attendees of the event's new location.'

Letter-to-the-Editor shows political activism for MRA issues

anthony · 30 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'George Miller and Barbara Boxer are running for re-election this year and it is time to reflect on what they have done. I met George Miller once and found him abrasive and two-faced. And I was not surprised when I saw Barbara Boxer pleading for usurping respect on a web feed. Perhaps she would prefer "her highness" instead of senator. The most important matter is that Barbara Boxer and George Miller have unstintingly supported the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) while ignoring the plight of abused men.

The VAWA programs have been ineffective in reducing partner abuse and placed those women at a greater risk of violence. What had happened was that the framers of the VAWA decided to falsify the numbers by substituting their own statistics. This became evident when their totals exceeded 100 percent. Of course their most striking statistics included men who were dead and boys who have not been born.
...
The VAWA allows women to refuse to appear in court or testify in matters of rape or domestic violence. Women may refuse the rape kit protocol and still claim rape though the purported episode occurred years before. This also applies to domestic violence and its forensic testing protocol. When one segment of society has rights that exceed those of others, then that society cannot continue to exist. This notion has recurred repeatedly in our history and yet Boxer and Miller have refused remove the inequalities that remain among people.'

UK: Pupils make more effort with male teachers as they are seen as 'more fair'

Broadsword · 30 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Pupils try harder for male teachers, according to an official study.

They make more effort to please them, display greater self-esteem and are more likely to believe they are being treated fairly.

The findings are particularly significant as more than a quarter of primary schools do not have a single male teacher.

With the number of male secondary school teachers also dwindling, it is feared that some youngsters could go throughout their entire education without experiencing the benefits of being taught by a man.

Researchers from Westminster University, the London School of Economics and the graduate business school INSEAD carried out an experiment involving 1,200 pupils aged 12-13 in 29 schools.

The study, commissioned by the Department for Education under Labour, was aimed at discovering what shaped youngsters' effort, motivation and educational achievement.
...
Both boys and girls also showed greater confidence in their ability. Researchers said the findings were 'new and significant' as the effects were evident for every male teacher in the experiment.'

More on Swiss antifeminism event

anthony · 30 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Somewhere in Switzerland on Saturday around 150 men's rights activists will be gathering at a secret location for the "first international antifeminism meeting".

Amid plans by feminist activists to hold protests, the venue was changed and the new location kept under wraps until the last minute.

...

Addressing the day-long conference will be IGAF founder René Kuhn, and speakers from a German gender policy initiative, the Swiss men's political party, an interest group for divorced men and European and Swiss men's and father's rights groups.

Andersson described it as a "very special" and "historic moment".

"The major goal is not to come to conclusions about anything but mostly to meet like-minded people. As you have seen, there are forces trying to stop us from having this meeting," Andersson told swissinfo.ch.

...

In a written statement prepared for Saturday's meeting, Andersson has drawn up five key beliefs of antifeminists: "opposing the feminist hatred of men, valuing the nuclear family, believing in the child's rights to both its parents after a divorce or a separation, looking at the individual and not judging people by their gender, and accepting that men and women are different and counting that as assets".

...

While the Swiss Federal Office for Gender Equality is not worried about the event happening within the country's borders, director Patricia Schulz told swissinfo.ch that she was concerned by "this movement's denunciation of all women who do not correspond to its limited vision of what constitutes a 'real woman'. There is a very high risk of discrimination in the ideas of this movement."'

Australia: 'Why Masculinity Trend Pieces Must Also Die'

anthony · 30 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the Sydney Morning Herald there is a new breed of man. He is "chivalrous, but not patriarchal. He is well-groomed without being pretentious or dandy. He'll open the door for someone - not because they're female - but because it's a nice thing to do. He doesn't mind meeting his mates at the pub, but he has no qualms inquiring about the riesling." He is the Modern Day Gentleman or MDG for short. A composite of traditional male ruggedness and new age intellectualism that's epitomized, apparently, by comedian Charlie Pickering. And he is completely fabricated for the purposes of this article.

Here's the thing. The problem with trend pieces on masculinity, much like trend pieces on hipsters, is this notion that a large group of rational adults willingly subscribe to a singular and static code of conduct. They don't. And when it comes to trend pieces on masculinity, that margin for error extrapolates to half the fucking population and all we're left with is vague anecdotal evidence about how the modern man behaves and what it is he stands for. “It means being a little more considered and a little more responsible for who you are and what you do,” Pickering claims of the new Australian male. “It is reclaiming some of the classical idea of what it means to be a man.” What? What does that even mean? Were men less responsible a few years ago?
...
To be an Australian male in 2010 you have to fulfill two prerequisites. You have to be male and you have to be Australian. Nothing more, nothing less. The rest (dating, your job, how many friends you have, respect) will take care of itself and it will have nothing to do with how tight your suit is.'

Huffington Post: Ten Steps the Democrats Need to Take to Win the Votes of Women

anthony · 30 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When will the women of this nation stop accepting "guilt gifts" from the men in their lives who act abusively?

When will we say "enough is enough" and turn a deaf ear to half-hearted, mealy-mouthed apologies that provide poor salve for hateful and hurtful actions and words?

When will we finally deliver the tough love and consequences for improper behavior?

I'm posing these questions in large measure because October is National Domestic Violence Month. Yet, more specifically, I want to shed light on the ugly abuse women have been experiencing in the political arena this election season as well as election cycles past.

...

If the Democrats want women to turn out and vote, they need to make some extra efforts to address our needs. Here are ten concrete and measurable steps the DNC can and should immediately take to win women back:

1.Set an annual goal of the exact number of women in the House and Senate each year, and provide funding in a manner that will achieve those goals. Publically announce targets and whether they were reached. For example, 20008 women comprised 17% of the US Congress, in 2010 our goal is for women to comprise 20%, 2012, 24% etc.

...

10.Introduce and pass a law to require publicly traded companies to have target of 30- 50% female board members.'

Rights vs. Interests

Matt · 30 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Normally I don't pen my own essays but for this topic, especially as we here in the US are heading now into a major political election season that underscores such matters, I felt this was a good time.

'MRA' stands for "Men's Rights Activist", while "FRA" stands for "Fathers' Rights Activist". It is hard to be one without being the other and for all intents and purposes they mean the same thing. The word "Rights" is represented in both acronyms. (And likewise, "Women's Rights Activist" also has the same word in it.) This word is thrown around all the time not just by activists in this realm but in many others. Indeed, the word "rights" seems to be a very common word when people seek to appeal to an innate sense of or a defined scope of justice.

But consider that, especially when talking of adults, all of us have the same rights. Consider that parents of both sexes have equal rights regarding the children they have. Consider that to bodily and other forms of human integrity and dignity, we all have the same rights. The playing field then, from a philosophical standpoint, is equal. We all have equal rights. Once that is accepted then, what is there left to make adjudications over? Will not one set of rights cancel out the other set of rights? Yes, that is exactly what happens. So the only thing left to consider then is the interests of the parties involved.

As men, what we don't have is an equal representation of our interests in practical ways because institutions and people within our societies are not recognizing this fact, or they simply believe we are not entitled to equal consideration because we are men, which is bigotry/misandry in action. This is where (and why) our activism comes into play. To say we are pursuing our rights isn't correct since we have them already. What we want is our interests to be fairly considered when weighed against the interests of another person/people who also have the same rights as we do. We have as full and complete claim to insisting that we have our interests fairly and judiciously considered as weighed against another person's because indeed, we do have the exact same rights as they do.

Having clarified this point, then, I believe it is entirely acceptable for male voters specifically to lobby candidates on matters that directly impact the support of our interests as men and fathers in the same way that women have been doing now for almost 50 years. Men it seems to me just don't view themselves as a voting block, while women do. The press also sees them as a voting block and reports on them as such. If men's interests are going to get defended and fairly represented in institutions of all kinds as well as in the court of public opinion, men need to start making men's issues political issues and vote accordingly. Otherwise, we'll never get anywhere with this stuff.

Yemen: Woman suspected of sending parcel bombs arrested

Minuteman · 30 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'Yemeni police have arrested a woman on suspicion of mailing a pair of bombs powerful enough to take down aircraft, officials said on Saturday as details emerged about a terrorist plot aimed at the US that exploited security gaps in the worldwide shipping system.

Investigators were hunting the Arabian Peninsula nation for more suspects tied to al-Qaeda and several American officials identified the terrorist group's top explosives expert in Yemen as the most likely bombmaker.

The explosives, addressed to synagogues in the Chicago area, were pulled off planes in England and the United Arab Emirates early on Friday morning, touching off a tense search for other devices.'

Australia: Nurses banned from 'flirting, off-colour jokes'

Minuteman · 30 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'Nurses have been banned from flirting with patients under new ethics guidelines for hospitals.

The rules also crack down on sexual innuendo, “off-colour” jokes and offensive language, The Sunday Telegraph reported.
...
The guidelines come after the number of complaints made about NSW nurses with “professional boundary issues” almost tripled in the year to June 2009, compared with the previous year.

Figures from the NSW Nurses and Midwives Board reveal there were 17 complaints made in 2009, while there were a total 47 complaints over the past five years.'

UK: Woman abandons starving pets to eat one another

Minuteman · 31 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Let's hope they catch the basd! Excerpt:

'Four cats and a pet dog survived living alone in squalor by eating one another, a British court has heard.

The owner of the animals, Lorraine Peake, left them when she moved from her home in Bolton in the country's north-west in March this year, the Daily Mail reports.

The 48-year-old said she paid a man $80 to check on the animals — but could not provide any more details when pressed by the RSPCA.'

NY Post: 'Stifled by feminism'

anthony · 31 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Republican Sharron Angle famously told Sen. Harry Reid to "man up" during a Nevada debate this month -- the implication being that Reid is a wuss, or not man enough to do his job. You'll get no argument from me, but I did note Reid didn't fire back at his opponent. That's because feminists have taught him well.

When faced with whether or not to make a disparaging remark about the female gender, most men know to keep their mouths shut.

In politics today, women can do and say whatever they want about the opposite sex, but men can't do likewise. "You can't come back on gender grounds to a female candidate," says Kathleen Hall Jamieson, director of the Annenberg Public Policy Center at the University of Pennsylvania.
...

The double standard -- that women have free rein when it comes to gender issues but men don't -- is evident on every front.
...
Indeed, the power feminists have had in this country is so great -- and so destructive -- Americans can't even admit there are biological differences between men and women. You may recall what happened in 2005 when Larry Summers, then Harvard University's president, suggested the underrepresentation of women in the top levels of science and engineering could be due to a "different availability of aptitude at the high end" and the different career choices women freely make as a result of their maternal proclivities.
...
In the meantime, buried beneath the surface lies the truth: American feminism has been a disaster. According to a 2007 report from the National Bureau of Economic Research, "As women have gained more freedom, more education and more power, they have become less happy."

Does that mean freedom, education and even power are bad for women? No. But the fact that women in America (and the men in their lives) have been conditioned to believe they are second-class citizens, in need of special attention and support, has not made women any happier. On the contrary, it has driven a wedge between the sexes -- and made wusses out of men.

It's time for the men of America to man up and fight back.'

Obama Pleads for Women's Vote

anthony · 31 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Barack Obama's pandering to the feminists makes him look like the suitor who is unwilling to face up to his beloved's announcing she will marry another man. In desperation, he showers her with expensive gifts, hoping to win back her favor.

...

Obama's principal plan to nail down the loyalty of the feminists is to pass the Paycheck Fairness Act (PFA). It has already passed the House and Majority Leader Harry Reid plans a Senate vote in a mischievous Lame Duck session.

This bill would amend the Equal Pay Act (EPA) to shift decision-making about wages and salaries from employers to judges and juries, a longtime goal of the feminists who want wages to be based on subjective motions of "worth" rather than on market rates. The Paycheck Fairness Act (PFA) would also reward another Obama constituency by opening a lucrative channel for trial lawyers to file class-action lawsuits against employers and collect punitive damages in unlimited amounts.

The PFA would give the courts the power to micromanage all personnel decisions. That's a goal the feminists have sought for nearly 30 years under the slogans "pay equity" and "comparable worth."

...

For example, a woman earning less than a more experienced man could argue that work experience is not a "bona fide" factor because the employer could have eliminated the disparity by the "alternative employment practice" of training the woman for the job.

...

The NEC report pegs its argument to the feminists' false whine that women are paid only "77 cents for every dollar paid to men." And, the White House brought out Valerie Jarrett to threaten that bad Republicans in Congress would take away benefits for women.'

Women stay away from math out of their own free choice

anthony · 31 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ever wondered why there are such few women in math-intensive fields? Two psychological scientists at Cornell University believe women aren't innately poor at math; instead they choose to stay away from the subject.

Stephen Ceci and Wendy Williams reviewed all of the evidence and concluded that the main factor is women's choices-both freely made, such as that they'd rather study biology than math, and constrained, such as the fact that the difficult first years as a professor coincide with the time when many women are having children.

But girls' grades in math from grade school through college are as good as or better than boys', and women and men earn comparable average scores on standardized math tests.

Williams and Ceci also reviewed research on sex discrimination and decided that it is no longer a major factor. In fact, one large-scale national study found that women are actually slightly more likely than men to be invited to interview for and to be offered tenure-track jobs in math-intensive STEM fields.

"When you look at surveys of adolescent boys and girls and you say to them, 'What do you want to be when you grow up,' you never see girls saying, 'I want to be a physicist or an engineer,'" Ceci said.'

UK: A crisis of masculinism

anthony · 31 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Prior to August 2010, British Airways had a policy whereby they would not allow adult male passengers to sit next to unaccompanied children on flights, even if the man was travelling with others. Many other airlines still enforce such erroneous policies, which are doing nothing short of presuming all men to be potential paedophiles. I don't recall any similar rule being applicable to women. More to the point, no rule of this kind should have been implemented whatsoever. Such political correctness gone mad has even resulted in one airline (British Airways) trying to separate a man from his own children on one occasion, namely a certain Boris Johnson.

Women's rights are always at the forefront of the political agenda, and rightly so, but what about the rights of men? Is it really fair that men should be treated as potential sex offenders because of the sinister actions of a devious minority?

...

Unless some radical form of change takes place in the near future, the downward spiral of attitudes towards men is set to continue. It will only be a matter of time until male suicide rates multiply, male teachers surrender to bureaucracy, and we are reduced to an apartheid-style society where men have few or no rights.

Men and women should undoubtedly have equal rights, but it is important not to cross that fine line of equality.'

U Delaware Women's Studies Dept. receives grant for concentration in domestic violence

anthony · 31 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'9:22 a.m., Oct. 26, 2010----The Department of Women's Studies at the University of Delaware has been awarded a grant from Verizon Delaware that will be used to start a new undergraduate concentration in domestic violence and to prepare students to earn certification in the field.

The three-year, $187,000 grant also will allow UD to offer an intensive 10-week summer practicum in which students will work with community agencies throughout Delaware, gaining firsthand experience in such areas as providing services to domestic violence victims. The Delaware Coalition Against Domestic Violence (DCADV) announced the grant this week; a formal presentation will be made at the coalition's annual Purple Ribbon public-awareness event on Oct. 28 in Wilmington.

“Women's Studies students are often interested in careers involving domestic violence, from direct services for victims to public-policy advocacy,” said Jessica Schiffman, assistant professor of women's studies and associate chair of the department. “In the internship program we already offer, I get more requests from students for domestic violence placements than any other type, and there's a growing demand from community agencies as well.”'

U of Tulsa Women's Studies Dept. examines female incarceration through film

anthony · 31 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Tulsa's Women's and Gender Studies (WGS) program is hosting a three-night film festival this week examining the unique conditions and tribulations facing incarcerated women.

"Women and Incarceration" is this year's theme for the many WGS events to take place on campus. Oklahoma incarcerates more women per capita than any other state in the nation. The WGS program will feature two films each night on Oct. 5, 6 and 7.

On Tuesday, the two feature films will focus specifically on incarcerated mothers. "Prison Lullabies" follows the stories of four women serving prison sentences for nonviolent crimes.

Arrested pregnant, all of these women have given birth at the Taconic prison facility. The facility allows mothers to keep their children for the first 18 months if they participate in counseling sessions ranging from child care to anger management and drug rehabilitation.
...
"Blind Spot: Murder by Women" features individual interviews with six women convicted of murder. "Blind Spot" delves into the unique insights examining the circumstances leading to violence and the emotional, psychological and spiritual consequences of murder.'

John Wayne’s masculine identity crisis?

anthony · 31 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On the Facebook page for the Foundation for Male Studies, the up-and-coming academic group spearheading this movement, articles abound justifying the need to address this supposed crisis. One such article involves the decreasing ratio of men to women attending four-year colleges and universities, and another addresses the statistic that women “for the first time ever” make up the majority of the workforce due to layoffs associated with the economic recession.

In a recent New York Times article, male-studies proponent and resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute Christina Hoff Sommers says that “male-averse attitudes are widespread in the United States” due in part to feminist studies and the fact that masculinity has become a social taboo.
...

So, what does Stanford have to think about this new branch of study?

According to intended feminist-studies major Miranda Mammen ‘14, “feminist studies, women’s studies and gender studies across the country are doing a really good job of tackling what it means to be a man and conventional constructions of masculinity. I think it’s a misconception that they only study women, because the study of women’s roles necessarily includes men.”

“My biggest problem with the male studies phenomenon…is that it’s an explicitly anti-feminist platform,” she continued. “The creators of male studies have argued that the presence of feminist and gender studies is harmful to them, which is really ridiculous.”'

Unemployment stats show good news -- unless you a man

anthony · 31 October 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One thing the rates don't reflect is the disproportionate number of men who are receiving unemployment insurance.

"If you look, 80 percent receiving unemployment insurance payments are male, whereas they are just about 50 percent of the population," he said. "The issue is that the big hits in jobs have been in construction and manufacturing that are heavily male and the gains have been in health care and education that are more female.

"People are using the term 'mancession,' " he said.

Nationally, first-time claims for unemployment fell 21,000 to 434,000, the third straight decline. The report boosted early Wall Street trading that actually ended the day slightly lower.

An Associated Press survey of leading economists out this week said there was an expectation that the national unemployment rate at 9.6 percent will lower to about 9 percent by the end of the year. Many sources expect that Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke will announce next week the Fed's plans to purchase Treasury bonds to try to further lower interest rates.'

Female Yemeni bombing suspect released

Matt · 1 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'Authorities in Yemen have released on bail a 22-year-old female engineering student whose name and phone number were on the shipping documents for the two bombs sent to the United States.
...
A Yemeni official briefed on the investigation said the suspect "is not allowed to leave the country pending further questioning."

The official said the shipping agent who received the packages was called in to identify her and said Samawi "was not the person who signed the shipping manifesto."
...
But as her fellow students mounted a protest Sunday at a university, her lawyers questioned why anyone involved in the plot would use their real name and phone number to ship a bomb.'

Men’s Matters radio show available for download

Matt · 1 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'The hard work has been done by James Williams, the presenter of the radio show “Men’s Matters”, at ExpressFM in Portsmouth, UK. He has, of his own volition and independently of me, adapted the Feminism series of films to make it suitable for radio, and then broadcast it at ExpressFM virtually in its entirety.

This is absolutely unheard of in any mainstream media and is nothing short of an historic achievement!

As anyone familiar with men’s issues will know, the genuine viewpoints expressed by men’s rights advocates and any views that are remotely anti-Feminist are simply not allowed to be aired and so this radio broadcast is undoubtedly a first in Britain and a phenomenal achievement.'

Australia: Female crime boss ready to call it quits

Minuteman · 1 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

She's made here fortune from a life of crime, and most of here Male family members have spilled blood for her, so this "matriarch" is ready to retire. Link to article here. Excerpt:

'The matriarch of the Chaouk family has "put her foot down" and urged her relatives to end their deadly dispute with the rival Haddara clan.

Cancer-stricken widow Fatma Chaouk is "sick and tired and dying" and does not want to see any more family members killed, barrister Tas Roubos told the Victorian County Court on Monday.

Mrs Chaouk's change of attitude comes after the death of her husband Macchour, who was gunned down in the backyard of the family's western Melbourne home in August.'

Hong Kong discrimination against men gets probe

anthony · 1 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hong Kong's Equal Opportunities Commission says men are discriminated against in the workplace.

"We're not out to stir up trouble," says Commission Chairman Lam Woon-Kwong. "For lower-educated men, even the young ones, finding a job is difficult. Even if they get one, the salary is low."

The service industry in particular prefers to hire women for posts such as cashier. Ironically, part of the reason is unequal salary expectations -- women are generally willing to work for lower pay.

In the 1980s, when Hong Kong lost its competitive edge in manufacturing, many factories relocated to the Chinese mainland. With them went male-dominated factory employment.

Now, low-level white-collar jobs are also being lost to the mainland.

Hong Kong men with low-education levels find it difficult to get hired. And while there are many welfare programs for women in Hong Kong, social initiatives for men are lacking.'

Obama’s domestic violence initiative neglects male victims of abuse

anthony · 1 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In honor of Domestic Violence Awareness Month, President Barack Obama introduced his administration’s new “government-wide” domestic violence initiative this week.

Missing from his words about a renewed focus on victims, however, was half of the population: men.

When looking at violence within intimate relationships, men are often viewed primarily as perpetrators, yet this is not always the case. Martin S. Feibert, psychology professor at the University of California, Long Beach, has highlighted more than 270 scholarly investigations, empirical studies and reviews, “which demonstrate that women are as physically aggressive, or more aggressive, than men in their relationships with their spouses or male partners.”

Equity feminist and Reason magazine contributing editor Cathy Young told The Daily Caller that while the cause was a good one, she was disappointed to see male victims excluded from the president’s equation, for just that reason.'

4-YO boy growing hair long for cancer victims denied entry into pre-K

anthony · 2 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Renee Szablewski is a good, churchgoing Catholic. She wants her 4-year-old son, Jack, to grow up to be one, too.

That's why Szablewski was so upset last month with St. Dominic, a parochial school in Brick, N.J. The principal at the school barred Jack from his pre-kindergarten class because his hair was too long.

"That's Christian? That's Catholic?" Szablewski fumed during a telephone interview with TODAYshow.com Monday.

Jack's early lesson in how tough life can be actually began when at the tender age of 16 months, his grandfather died of lung cancer. Renee Szablewski decided to honor her father by letting her son's hair grow out so that he could donate his locks to be used in wigs for children who lose their own hair to cancer radiation treatment.'

Newsweek: "Women Will Rule the World"

Matt · 2 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When historians write about the great recession of 2007–08, they may very well have a new name for it: the Mancession. It's a term already being bandied about in the popular media as business writers chronicle the sad tales of the main victims of the recession: men. They were disproportionately represented in the industries hit hardest during the downturn, including financial services, manufacturing, and construction, and their higher salaries often put them first in the line of fire. Men are the victims of two thirds of the 11 million jobs lost since the recession began in 2007; in August 2009, when U.S. male unemployment stood at 11 percent (versus 8.3 for women), it was the largest unemployment gender gap in the postwar era. Those numbers have improved, a bit—new unemployment figures show men at 9.9 percent and women at 7.8—but not enough to stop Larry Summers, the president's top economic adviser, from speculating recently, that "when the economy recovers, five years from now, one in six men who are 25 to 54 will not be working."

If they are lucky, they'll have wives who can take care of them. American women are already the breadwinners or co-breadwinners in two thirds of American households; in the European Union, women filled 75 percent of the 8 million new jobs created since 2000. Even with the pay gap factored into the equation, economists predict that by 2024, the average woman in the U.S. and a number of rich European countries will outearn the average man. And she'll be spending that money: as a new book on female economic power, Influence, points out, American women are responsible for 83 percent of all consumer purchases; they hold 89 percent of U.S. bank accounts, 51 percent of all personal wealth, and are worth more than $5 trillion in consumer spending power—larger than the entire Japanese economy.'

Australia: Schoolboy hung by neck on pole in act of bullying, gov't does nothing

Minuteman · 2 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. In full:

'A South Australian schoolboy has reportedly been hung from a pole by his neck in an apparent incident of bullying.

The Adelaide Advertiser says the education department is looking into the event at Para Hills High School in Adelaide's north which took place in September when the 13-year-old was tethered to a pole by three other students by a velcro strap around his neck.

The boy's mother's told the paper that the school didn't tell her about the incident which caused her son to lose his voice for two weeks.'

Follow-up article here. Excerpt:

'A teenage boy who was hung from a pole by his neck by school bullies has been abandoned by the South Australian government, the Liberals say.
...
Two months after the assault at Para Hills High School the boy's mother still hasn't seen the perpetrators held accountable, counselling for her son or a proper investigation, Mr Pisoni said in a statement on Tuesday.'

UK: Surrey woman jailed for false rape claim, theft

anthony · 2 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Kate Woodhead made her claim against Paul Joseph after he told her their 18-month relationship was over, Guildford Crown Court was told.

The 31-year-old, from Ripley, told police Mr Joseph had drugged her before attacking her.

She then stole belongings of his worth about £25,000.

Judge Neil Stewart said he had no option but to send her to prison.
...

The court heard Woodhead, who ran livery stables in Surrey, went to police with a friend in April 2009 and made the false allegation.

She then stole property including an expensive stereo and art prints, and transferred ownership of her ex-boyfriend's sports car and motorcycle to her own name.

Mr Joseph was arrested and questioned by police but the rape allegation was dropped when officers became suspicious that Woodhead had made it up.

Judge Stewart said the offences were part of a "deliberate and vindictive" campaign waged against Mr Joseph.

He added: "These offences therefore must be seen as devious and manipulative and you are wholly unrepentant."'

Disabled boy, 16, found to be teacher's sex slave

anthony · 2 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 16-year-old disabled boy doing Grade Four at a primary school in the Manzini region, has become a sex slave to one of the female teachers who also acts as his benefactor, it has been revealed.

This situation is now stressing the boy's mother, who had never suspected the teacher's intentions when she offered to help the child with fees and other needs.

As a result, she is said to be looking for a way to save the teenager from further damage, especially because he has already suffered from venereal diseases. The other problem is that the boy's peers think of him as very successful because he is able to share gifts with them.

Sources within the area say the young man stays with the mother in the village nearby, but friends always help him out in the evenings to spend quality time with the teacher.

The boy is presently complaining of sharp pains in the spinal cord, a suspicion that this could be a development from his previous encounters with venereal diseases.'

SAVE asks "How do DV Laws Contribute to Over-Criminalization?"

Matt · 3 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Are you aware of a growing number of conservative and liberal groups that are saying our nation's laws are over-criminalizing America? Groups like the Heritage Foundation, ABA, ACLU, Cato Institute, National Assn. of Criminal Defense Lawyers, and others are saying we have gone way overboard in criminalizing everyday conduct, like whether you can arrest an 8-year-old boy for playing 'cops and robbers' at school.

In support of next week's campaign to "Protect Victims: Stop Mandatory Arrest," SAVE has just released a new Policy Briefing that summarizes the issue: http://www.saveservices.org/how-do-dv-laws-contribute-to-over-criminalization/. (Also see http://www.saveservices.org/how-do-we-know-that-our-approach-to-domestic-violence-has-become-over-criminalized/)

Feel free to share with lawmakers and others.

South Africa: Prisoners (and priests!) to be circumcised

Minuteman · 3 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'The KwaZulu-Natal government will soon start circumcising prisoners to reduce HIV infections among inmates, says health MEC Dr Sibongiseni Dhlomo.

“We will soon start circumcising prisoners in our campaign to reduce infections,” he said.

A total of 10, 229 male circumcisions had been done since the provincial government started the male medical circumcision programme in April this year.

Dhlomo said the department had a target of 2.5 million circumcisions by June 2014. Previously circumcisions among Zulus were conducted traditionally. With the permission from King Goodwill Zwelithini, government would be conducting them medically.
...
Dhlomo said they would also circumcise priests.

“We believe that if we circumcise them, they will encourage members of their congregations to test.” '

Australia: Mother cheered as son aged five downed alcohol shots

Minuteman · 4 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A mother who gave her five-year-old alcohol cheered as he downed shots of home-brewed liquor, a Victorian court has heard.

Kylie Eastwood, 34, is accused of giving her son several shots of home-made grappa, which tests later found had a 44 percent alcohol content, the Herald Sun reported.

The father of the five-year-old said he confiscated the bottle when he found his son drinking from it with a shot glass at their home in the town of Moe, east of Melbourne.'

Paycheck Fairness Act vote scheduled for November 17

anthony · 4 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Paycheck Fairness Act is poised to see action, following the re-introduction of the bill (S. 3772) in September by Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid (D-NV). The bill is scheduled for a lame-duck (post-election) vote in the Senate on November 17, 2010. The Senate will vote on whether to debate the bill. This is known as a cloture vote and 60 votes are needed to move the bill forward. With the balance of power in the Senate teetering, the election on November 2 of three new Senators (from West Virginia, Illinois and Delaware), who may be seated for the lame-duck session, could affect the cloture vote.

If passed, the Act would expose employers to far greater liability than now exists. Employers must act now to make sure their concerns are heard.
...

The proposal would fundamentally change the Equal Pay Act of 1963 (EPA). The EPA prohibits employers from paying women less than men for performing the same or “substantially equal” work in the same “establishment,” except for specific reasons.

Under the proposed law, to defend against discrimination claims, employers must demonstrate that any pay differential is based on a “bona fide factor other than sex, such as education, training, or experience,” and is “consistent with business necessity,” among other requirements. Further, the legislation would expose businesses to unlimited compensatory and punitive damages and weaken the EPA’s procedural requirements for class action litigation. The bill also seeks to broaden the definition of “establishment.” (See Paycheck Fairness Act Would Negatively Impact Businesses, Jackson Lewis Partner Cautions.)'

What's the Alternative to Tucker Max?

anthony · 4 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While it's thrilling that there is also a movement of young men all who want to tear down the patriarchy right alongside women, it's dangerous that they don't have a clear picture of what they want to build in its place. At the conference, one young man spoke up against the notion of a new "feminist masculinity," explaining that he feared it would be one more box that young men felt they had to fit into. There's a lot of validity to his argument, but I fear that the old adage is true: We can't be what we can't see. Models help us try on various identities and find one that is truly authentic. The more publicly feminist-aligned men we have, the more opportunities the next generation has to find a positive, masculine gender identity that actually fits.

Many young men, it seems, are stuck in stage one of gender consciousness. They want to prove that they are one of the "good ones" and separate themselves from all the gendered behaviors and beliefs that they now see as oppressive. That, or they wallow in guilt. (This is not unlike the stage many white kids get stuck in upon fully realizing their role in perpetuating racism.) At worst, this point of view is paralyzing. At best, it leads to burnout. It's not until privileged folks, men in this case, can own the ways in which they have a self-interest in resisting systems of oppression that their work becomes sustainable.'

Editorial: Feminist theology and feminism, R.I.P.

anthony · 4 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yesterday my students and I discussed Mary Daly, the Boston College professor, feminist theologian, and professional provocateur who died earlier this year. Judging by our discussion, feminist theology has died too, and feminism with it.

Our reading for the day was a selection from Daly's second book, Beyond God the Father (1973), which decries a sexist cycle that has patriarchal cultures creating patriarchal divinities who then sanctify in turn the patriarchal cultures that gave them birth. "If God is male," Daly writes, "then the male is God."
...
But there was little celebrating (and only a little more life) in my classroom yesterday. Hardly any of my students showed any sympathy for Daly's critique of the "Superfather in heaven," and, when I asked for a show of hands, only four of my hundred-plus students were willing to out themselves as "feminists."
...
When I asked my students why they don't want to call themselves feminists, they spoke of bra-burners man-haters and Femi-Nazis, which is to say that in the war of the words which was the feminist movement, feminists seem to have lost perhaps the most important battle: the battle over the meaning of the word feminism itself.'

Paving a Rocky Road: Removing Barriers to Men's Engagement

anthony · 4 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While men alone are certainly not the solution, this change cannot come without large numbers of men and women working together. We can "pave to the way" to gaining the support of larger numbers by removing barriers that traditionally keep men from engaging in a topic which touches us all.

This conference will broaden the ways our movement seeks to engage those who identify as male in ways that do not continue to marginalize across gender, sexual orientation, race and class, while challenging us all to explore the intersections of oppression and violence.

We will explore ways to include those beyond the "choir" across the professional experience in the field, connecting the secular movement with work faith communities are doing, and by hearing about the work and experiences of young people becoming the new generation of leaders.'

Australia: Mother killed two year-old son to 'expel evil spirit', found not guilty

Minuteman · 5 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'An Adelaide woman killed her two-year-old son by standing on his mouth and chest because she believed he had been taken over by an evil spirit, a court has heard.

Rachael Cherie Hadley, 23, was found not guilty in the South Australian Supreme Court on Friday of murdering the boy, with Justice Kevin Duggan finding her mentally incompetent at the time.

Duke Hadley died from asphyxiation with Justice Duggan saying his mother believed she was saving him, rather than hurting him.

...

"She believed she was expelling an evil spirit from him and that she expected him to recover," the judge said in summarising two medical reports.'

Australia: Female puppy killer banned from owning a pet

Minuteman · 5 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A West Australian woman has been banned from ever owning a pet after she pleaded guilty to killing a puppy by repeatedly throwing it against a wall.

Tracie Marie Beal was sentenced in Mandurah Magistrates Court on Thursday for ill treating an animal.

The 28-year-old Mandurah woman had admitted that on the night of January 19 she was given a small, six-week old puppy by a friend.

Beal then took the puppy home and after a short time she became upset and repeatedly threw it against a wall, killing the animal.'

More DV law issue summaries from SAVE

Matt · 6 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE, via email:

On Tuesday we witnessed a political cataclysm take place across the nation. Whether you are Republican or Democrat, liberal or conservative, now is the time to capitalize on this dramatic shift in the political landscape.

To assist in your efforts to reform state DV laws, SAVE has posted a series of state-level summaries:

* Civil Protective Orders: Domestic Violence
* Standards of Proof for Civil Protective Orders
* Statutes Prohibiting Mutual Protective Orders
* Child Custody and Domestic Violence
* Mediation and Domestic Violence
* DV Arrest Policies
* Misdemeanor Crimes of Domestic Violence
* Other charts from the American Bar Association

To access these summaries, visit http://www.saveservices.org/policymakers/

SAVE Report a Valuable Tool in Understanding DV Industry

Matt · 6 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Since domestic violence and allegations of domestic violence are a big part of what's wrong with family law as it relates to child custody, I thought I'd do a piece on this study entitled "Are Abuse Shelters Helping the True Victims of Domestic Violence?" It comes to us courtesy of the organization Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE).

It doesn't pretend to be an in-depth treatment of anything; rather, it simply sketches some of the many problems, questions and issues that attend domestic violence and the system of shelters in this country.

Like many other people and organizations, SAVE is dead serious about domestic violence. It's so serious in fact that it wants people to know what DV is, who does it, who the victims are and, most importantly, how to effectively deal with the problem. In other words, in all those ways, SAVE is at odds with the DV industry generally.'

Canada: At Dad Camp, guys ‘man up’ or get the boot

Anonymous · 6 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In one corner: six reluctant, badass fathers-to-be in their 20s. In the other: New York psychologist and family therapist Jeff Gardere (“Dr. Jeff”), whose job is to transform them into grown-ups ready to face fatherhood. They meet on Dad Camp, one of the latest offerings from the parenting wing of the reality-TV genre, airing for the first time in Canada.'

Salon: "The soft war against women"

anthony · 7 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the run-up to the midterm elections, a bevy of conservative female candidates invoked feminism in one way or another, but all backed policies harmful to women. In the process, they became media darlings. Palin, who wasn't running herself but helped get a number of candidates on the ballot across the country, opposes abortion and sex education. ...
...
The 2010 Year of the Woman was mainly about candidates who supported policies traditionally advanced by white men. This is not just an isolated political accident. It is part of a pattern that has dire consequences for women.

At first glance, it may seem like a wonderful time to be female -- a time of empowerment and achievement: the "You Go, Girl!" era.

But there is another, even stronger current running beneath the surface of society that carries a very different message. The warning today is far more subtle than it was in the early "Backlash" days, when the argument was that women simply could not and should not do what men could do. Now, the message is, "Yes, indeed, you can do it all, and often better than men. But beware!"

Vancouver police cleared in man's beating

Matt · 7 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Remember this particular case? Here is how it ends... for now. I have a feeling it won't, though. Excerpt:

'Two Vancouver police officers who faced an allegation of abuse of authority have been cleared by Delta police investigating the incident.

The accusation was made after the officers went to the wrong entrance of a home when investigating a domestic-violence call around 2:15 a.m. on Jan 21.

A woman called 911 to report that her husband was drunk and had assaulted her.

When plainclothes officers arrived at the address provided, they believed Yao Wei Wu, 44, was their suspect and used force to arrest him, resulting in injuries to Wu’s face, legs and back.

On Feb. 1, Delta police began to investigate what happened.

A report prepared by a senior Delta police investigator found that, although Wu had seen the officers’ badges and knew they were police, he resisted arrest, prompting the officers to pull him to the ground, where he hit his face. He was also punched in the shoulder a number of times.'

Dateline interviews Mary Winkler

Matt · 7 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. For those new to the case, read some about it on Wikipedia here. She has consistently claimed she was a battered woman and that she didn't mean to kill her husband. The Dateline site story has comments, one from user shatteredmen which follows in part, with minor edits:

'Mary said the shot gun went off "accidentally". Did the phone get unplugged accidentally? Did the reservations for her get away get made accidentally too? Did she accidentally write 17 THOUSAND dollars of hot checks for which she and Matt were to meet the authorities at the bank the day he was shot to talk about paying it back? (The last I knew, writing checks for money you knew you did not have was a crime but she got away with that too.) What would YOU do if you accidentally shot someone? Would you watch them bleed to death or would you call 911? Also, there was NO EVIDENCE of abuse and I contend there is a good chance Matt did not even know about the high heels that were used to prove his abuse. He is no longer here to defend himself as she trashes his name more and more.

Sarah Palin and NOW

Matt · 7 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Hard to know where Sarah Palin is at vis-a-vis feminism today. I do know she is reported as having said misandrist things, more often in rooms filled with female supporters, but not as much in mixed-sex gatherings. Makes no difference to me if she is just "playing to the audience," if that is the excuse you want to make for her, since in either case, it still isn't right. (If a person wants to "play to the audience" and if that audience happens to be a bunch of Nazis, is something the speaker says that is patently racist forgivable for the "playing to the audience" reason?) Nonetheless, following is the excerpt:

'Furthermore, we discovered that during the last national conference of NOW, which took part in Indiana from June 19-21, 2009, the "pro-Palin feminists" gained the majority - reportedly with a very slim margin of only eight votes!

...

Palingates has obtained the complete set of so-called "On-Site Credentials" for the last annual NOW conference in Indiana 2009. With these documents and other background conversations, it's possible for us to understand how the system worked - and we were also able to establish with these documents without any doubt that both Shelly Mandell and Elaine Lafferty were delegates at the last annual NOW conference in June 2009.

At this point in time, Elaine Lafferty had already received more than $ 53,000 from the McCain/Palin campaign and had written several pro-Palin articles. In addition, Elaine Lafferty had received more than $ 12,000 from SarahPAC, the checks of which had been sent to Shelly Mandell's home address.'

New Life for Men on College Campuses

Matt · 8 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From A Voice for Men, here. Excerpt:

'The lives of most boys and men are now more unfulfilling than ever before in postmodern America. It is situation the beginnings of which arguably can be traced back to the post-World War II generation of men. That is an important history to be told. In general, misandry—typically dressed down in the media in the tatters of bad jokes—has by now produced two generations of males born since 1975 who feel less than welcome at home, in the workplace, and especially at school.

This state of affairs is slowly coming into focus in our public collective sensibility even while the slack water of a turning tide has made it seem that things are at a standstill for men and boys. They are not. A movement is underway that is proactive. It is taking hold in colleges and universities, even as the enrollment of young men in college nationwide (now at about 39%, an all-time small proportion of male post-secondary students) continues to decrease. Significant spaces are opening up: men's centers where small groups of young males can meet informally to talk about what is important to them, their doubts and concerns, their hopes and aspirations.'

Germany: Family Minister Schröder locked in blazing feminism row

anthony · 9 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The radical feminist tendency to reject relationships between men and women was not a solution for inequality, she said.

“I believe that early feminism at least partially overlooked that partnership and children bring happiness,” she told the magazine.

The minister also rejected the idea of quotas to improve women’s standing in the workplace, calling it a “political capitulation.” She blamed some women’s own choices for the fact that they earned less than men.

“The truth is this: Many women prefer to study German philology and humanities, while men study electric engineering – and that has consequences when it comes to wages. We can’t forbid companies from paying electric engineers more than a philologist.”

Schröder told Der Spiegel that a new part of her policy would be providing more support to boys, who are falling behind girls in schools. Government policies have neglected boys and men, she said.'

Barbara Kay: Courts get a new way to discriminate against fathers

Anonymous · 9 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"They throw guys in jail for non-support all the time, and when they do, the guys serve the whole 30, 60 or 90-day sentence (the term keeps lengthening), even though cocaine dealers routinely get out of jail after serving half their time."

Ontario's Family Responsibility Office, which is responsible for ensuring that custodial parents don't get stiffed for child support payments by the non-custodial parent, has a lot of power.

Starting Dec. 1, someone (read "father") in arrears on their support payments can have their car impounded. That's about the stupidest punishment for non-payment one can imagine, since most people need their cars in order to work. As Lloyd Gorling, a father's rights activist put it, "How are you going to make support payments if you can't get to work? If you can't make support payments, does the government really think you're going to be taking a taxi every day to work?"'

The Supreme Court hears custody law fibtastic · 10 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Full story here. Excerpt:

"Tomorrow [was Nov. 10] the Supreme Court will consider whether American fathers have the same rights as American mothers to ensure that their children are citizens at birth. Under the 14th Amendment, "all persons born in the United States are ... citizens of the United States." But the status of children born to American parents beyond U.S. borders is less certain. In the case Flores-Villar v. United States, the Justice Department is defending the constitutionality of a law that treats some of these children differently depending on whether their mother or their father is a citizen."

German feminist calls family minister 'hopeless' and 'incompetent'

Broadsword · 10 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The interview article with the German Family Minister can be viewed here, and the follow up article here. Excerpt:

"Germany's leading feminist campaigner and its minister for families, pensioners and women have locked horns over the role of feminism in relationships and the workplace, unsparingly attacking each other's views in a row that has escalated into a nationwide debate.

Alice Schwarzer, considered the country's foremost women's rights campaigner, labelled Kristina Schröder "hopeless" and "incompetent" after Schröder said she thought some of her views were wrong.

Schröder, 33, of the Christian Democratic union, was recruited by Angela Merkel and became the youngest woman ever in a German cabinet. She told Der Spiegel that she could not agree with certain views expressed by Schwarzer, including that "heterosexual sex was hardly possible without the subjugation of women".

Schröder said: "It's absurd to define something that is vital to the survival of humanity as subjugation." She said she was unconvinced by the feminist argument that rejecting heterosexual relationships in favour of homosexuality was a "solution to the disadvantage to women", and blamed boys' underperformance in school on the disproportionate number of female carers and teachers. She also rejected the idea of quotas to improve the standing of women in the workplace."

Woman in antifreeze margarita death jailed

Minuteman · 11 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to artilce here. Excerpt:

'A woman drew a 23-year prison sentence on Wednesday for killing her alcoholic boyfriend by lacing a jug of margarita cocktails with antifreeze at her apartment.

"It's not as if you were captive in this house," Judge William Kocher said in imposing a near-maximum penalty on Cynthia Galens, who maintained that victim Thomas Stack was emotionally and physically abusive.

"It's just senseless what you did."
...
Galens was charged with murder in January, three months after Stack, a 48-year-old Air Force veteran, died from complications of ethylene glycol poisoning.
...
Based on his history of alcoholism, bipolar disorder and depression, state police deemed his death an accident or possibly a suicide.'

Feminists Suing Over Sports Gap

jayhammers · 11 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'The Irvine Unified School District is the latest target of the feminist assault on any institutions not dictating exact equality in athletics. The National Women's Law Center, wielding Title IX, has filed complaints against the school district for allegedly discriminating against girls in federally funded sports programs.

Evidently, there is a roughly 10% sports participation gap between boys and girls in the district, and, what's worse, it has even grown in recent years.

Although feminists would probably never admit it, girls simply aren't as interested in sports as boys. If they were, one might think they would have actually invented some competitive sports over the years, but I can't think of one single competitive sport created by women. '

Canada: Marriage tames men, think-tank says

Anonymous · 11 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

News story here. Excerpt:

'OTTAWA - Marriage should be promoted as a way to civilize men and cut down on social ills such as crime, substance abuse and homelessness according to an Ottawa think-tank.

An Institute of Marriage and Family Canada paper cites marriage as helping men become more nurturing, improving their health outcomes and even making men better workers.

The paper quotes Ottawa Senators general manager Bryan Murray as saying marriage improves the games of his players.

“You’re more committed. You have something to go home to,” Murray told a reporter in October. “I think these guys start to realize that there are other people depending on what they do with their lives.”

Status of Men, authored by the institute's research manager Andrea Mrozek, looks at what role the decline of marriage may play in the lagging results educators and sociologists are seeing in boys.'

The report entitled "Status of Men" was written by religious conservative Andrea Mrozek and can be found here in .pdf format.

Embattled Ohio Father Reunited with Son Illegally Taken in Adoption Battle

Matt · 12 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'After three years of legal battles, Ohio father Benjamin Wyrembek has finally been reunited with the little son who was wrongfully taken from him. In Ohio high court right to unite father, son (Toledo Blade, 10/24/10), Fathers and Families Board Member Robert Franklin, Esq. recently explained:

> This month, the Ohio Supreme Court finally cleared the way for Benjamin Wyrembek of Swanton to be united with his biological son, who will turn three years old this week. That should have happened long before now.
>
> But for almost three years, attorneys for an adoptive couple in Indiana who have raised the child since birth have kept the case tied up in court, separating father and son.

Re-sentencing starts in Texas husband stabbed case

Matt · 12 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HOUSTON (AP) — A woman who tied her husband to the bed, stabbed him 193 times and buried his body in the backyard is lying when she claims she did so after years of abuse, prosecutors told jurors Monday during her sentencing hearing.

Susan Wright, 34, is being re-sentenced for the 2003 murder of her 34-year-old husband, Jeffrey. She was initially sentenced to 25 years in prison, but the Texas Court of Appeals last year tossed the sentence, agreeing with Wright that her trial lawyers were deficient because they failed to present testimony from witnesses that would have bolstered the abuse claims.

During her opening statement Monday, Harris County prosecutor Connie Spence told jurors Wright lied about being physically abused by her husband to try to justify the killing.

She said it was only after Wright killed her husband that began telling family and friends that she had been abused. Wright even went to police and took out a restraining order against Jeffrey Wright after stabbing him to promote her false story of abuse, Spence said.

"There were 193 stab wounds inflicted from head to toe," Spence said. "There were wounds to the head, face, neck, chest, abdomen, sexual organ, thighs. These were all inflicted to the front of Jeffrey Wright's body...consistent with somebody restrained, on his back."'

A nice satire on pro-circumcision blogs and articles

Minuteman · 12 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'How To Write About Circumcision
A guide for bloggers and journalists
...
Circumcision is really, really trivial, so it doesn't really matter what you write. Flippancy is essential. Make sure you use the word "snip" at least once, and any wordplay, such as "snip the tip" is guaranteed to cause hilarity. Because circumcision is so trivial, anyone who opposes it may be ridiculed.
...
Mention the African HIV-circumcision trials and imply they prove that circumcising developed-world babies will reduce their chance of getting HIV by "up to 60%" (or 70% or 80%, whatever you're happy with)
...

By all means interview couples who decided to circumcise their sons. You can safely attribute any frivolous reasons you happen to support to them. Bathroom splatter, zipper injury, teasing by friends, all belong here.
...
By all means interview doctors who make their living from circumcision. Their motives are purely altruistic, as they will tell you themselves.'

Circumcision Ban May End Up on San Francisco Ballot

anthony · 12 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CBS) The city that will soon outlaw toys in McDonald's Happy Meals could have a measure banning circumcision on next November's ballot, reports CBS San Francisco.

"It's genital mutilation," said Lloyd Schofield, the author of a San Francisco ballot measure that would make it a "misdemeanor to circumcise, excise, cut or mutilate the…genitals" of a person under 18.

Baby boys in San Francisco may be relieved but not everybody agrees with a proposed ban.

"I just had him circumcised 3 weeks ago," said Heather Wisnicky of Sacramento, mother of Tyler, a 6-week-old baby boy. "It's a health issue. It's cleaner," she said.

Scientists with the Centers for Disease Control are still studying whether circumcisions are healthier, and have promised recommendations to the public. Meanwhile, according to the New York Times, a CDC researcher reported a sharp drop in the number of American parents choosing circumcision in hospitals - from 56 percent in 2006 to less than 33 percent last year.'

Understanding the ripple effects of underachieving boys

anthony · 12 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In American schools, boys are underachieving and girls are excelling. This gender gap in academic achievement is evident as early as kindergarten. The longer students are in school, the wider the gap becomes.

Boys are more likely than girls to earn poor grades, be held back a grade, have a learning disability, form a negative attitude toward school, drop out or get suspended or expelled.

The education gender gap is affecting colleges, the workforce, the marriage rate and the fatherlessness rate in America.

...

This shift means that women will increasingly get the highly paid jobs while men will experience a drop in earnings. This is already happening. Men in their 30's are the first generation to earn significantly less than their fathers' generation did at the same age. As jobs that require little education increasingly shrink, more and more men will become unemployed.

As the gap continues to grow, fewer college-educated women are able to find college-educated men to marry. Many of these women are choosing not to marry at all rather than marry non-college-educated men who are likely to earn significantly less than they do.

...

The National Center for Fathering found that 72 percent of Americans think that fatherlessness is the most significant social problem facing our nation. America is the world's leader in fatherless families.'

The Family Minister vs. the Feminist: German Women at War

anthony · 12 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'They are perhaps the most high-profile women in Germany after Chancellor Angela Merkel: Kristina Schröder, the young, glamorous minister for families, women and pensioners, and Alice Schwarzer, the seasoned feminist intellectual and campaigner. And they're embroiled in an unseemly, vitriolic war of words over sex, the role of women and feminism. Played out in the mass media, the slanging match is providing titillating fodder for the press — but many German women fear it is also undermining their ongoing struggle for equality.

It all started when Schröder — at 33 the youngest member of Merkel's cabinet — attacked the 1970s feminist movement, telling Der Spiegel news magazine on Nov. 7 that early feminism "overlooked the fact that partnership and children can provide happiness." The conservative minister, who's known for her prim and proper attire, went on to say: "For me, emancipation will only be truly reached if a woman can wear make-up and skirts without having her abilities doubted as a result."'

UK: How feminism could improve judicial decision-making

anthony · 12 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Can judges be feminists? Should judges be feminists? On one view the answer is easy: no. We don't want our judges to be activists. We don't want them to promote their own political agendas. We want them to do their job. We want them to apply the law.

...

The Feminist Judgments Project offers a vision as to what the law might look like if there were (more) feminist judges, and in doing so, challenges our thinking about law and judging. More than 50 academics, practitioners and activists have come together to produce 23 alternative feminist judgments in a series of key cases in English law.

In R v A (No 2), for example, instead of rules restricting the use of sexual history evidence in rape trials being overturned by an all-male House of Lords (itself the subject of a legal challenge by the Fawcett Society), the feminist judgment by Clare McGlynn upholds the restrictions, challenging the assumption at the heart of the case: that a woman who has agreed to have sex with a particular man is – simply by virtue of that fact – more likely to do so again at another time.'

"Woman Utters Line Never Previously Recorded In A Police Report"

Matt · 13 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I hesitated to post this due to its graphic content but the lesson here is too important not to pass along, especially for newcomers to MANN: Anyone is capable of 1) attempted/actual rape, 2) assault, and 3) gross, disgusting conduct (just in case item 1 doesn't cover it sufficiently). Excerpt:

'Meet Melissa Lee Williams. The West Virginia woman, 41, is facing assault and weapons charges after allegedly waving a knife at two men who declined her demands to engage in sexual conduct at a motor inn.
...
This is when Melissa Williams allegedly “produced a lock-back folding knife,” opened it, and pointed the weapon at her estranged husband. She then reportedly uttered a line never before memorialized in a police report: “Somebody is going to eat my py or I’m going to cut your fg throat.”

When Deputy Mellinger arrived on the scene he observed Williams--who, like the two men, appeared to be intoxicated--nude from the waist down. After pocketing a knife that was on the coffee table in front of Williams, Mellinger arrested her for domestic assault and brandishing a deadly weapon.'

UK: Why are so many wives telling their husbands to have the snip?

anthony · 13 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women are used to being in control of contraception and it's often difficult to let go of that, even when it's their husband's fertility, not their own, in question.

'Having to take the Pill is a burden,' says Gina. 'You don't know the long-term effects. I don't fancy the coil or implants, so a vasectomy seems the easiest thing to do.

'Contraception is a woman's problem, but it would be so much easier if the man played his part.'

Feminist author Natasha Walter agrees. 'It's funny it's still women having to think about contraception all the time and men shying away from it,' she says.

'Perhaps it's because men think it would impinge on their masculinity, which, of course, it wouldn't. Why shouldn't men, once they have completed their families, take this step?'

But if a woman wouldn't consider being sterilised, how can she expect her husband to do so? 'If Paul tried to force me to have be sterilised I wouldn't feel that was fair. So perhaps it's not fair for me to expect it the other way around,' says Gina.'

"Beware the January Divorce"

Matt · 13 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From three years back, essay here. An oldie but a goodie... excerpt:

'Unlike gender-blind wealth and life destroyers — alcoholism, drug addiction, gambling, and catastrophic illness — divorce will disproportionately eviscerate the wallets, parental power, and dignity of men.

Because family courts (I call them female-ly courts) generally favor women, who have overwhelmingly unfair reproductive, custody, paternity, alimony, child-support, and homestead advantages, a man's biggest nightmare is becoming the respondent in a divorce, especially in January.

If your marriage is already teetering when December arrives, it's time to beware the January divorce. By the Sunday of the Super Bowl, there's a high probability that your wife will have served you divorce papers. That's right: women bring 70% of divorce actions, to improve their odds of taking the kids and the houses.'

Zambia: School boys targeted in national Male circumcision "strategy"

Minuteman · 14 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'Recently, the Education Post visited Kafue Boys Secondary School where close to ten pupils registered to get circumcised at a local health centre without the consent of school authorities.

Confirming the development, school headmistress Catherine Mutale expressed disappointment at the decision by personnel at the health centre to enlist the pupils for circumcision without the school authorities' approval.
...
...a parent to one of the pupils had also called the school earlier inquiring on how their child had been circumcised without their approval.

'We found posters promoting circumcision stuck on trees and by the time the deputy head pulled them out ,the pupils had already read the message on the posters and were booked in for circumcision the next day," Mutale said.'

Ed note: The title for the article "Boys see circumcision as a license for unprotected sex" is new. The original title is the subject line of this post. Note the misandrist nature of the change.

"No One Can Change Men but Men"

Anonymous · 15 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'...Men are stereotyped as walking erections who would "f--k mud." Even psychology's "theory du jour," evolutionary psychology/psychobiological theory" (Buss, et al.) puts men in the position of being obliged to spread their DNA as far and as widely as possible. Middle-aged men owe it to the species to reproduce with 22-year-old females of the requisite waist-to-hip ratio – rape as a "reproductive strategy," etc. We assume that male humans are sexual predators. ...Here's the problem: I don't see men doing a whole lot to undo those stereotypes. As I say to my students every semester: No one can change these stereotypes except men. And not enough of them are stepping up. If enough good men become tired of the stereotypes about their gender, they will fight to change them – no doubt being accused of being pussies all the way. ...'

Exclusive excerpt from 'The Last Boy': Mickey Mantle finally opens up about childhood sexual abuse

anthony · 15 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The two Micks were as puzzling as they were unnerving. Lowy thought, "There was something from a very early age that happened to him."

Something Mantle had never confided to his wife. One night, long after they had separated, they spent an evening in Dallas watching a TV movie about a child who had been sexually molested. "That happened to me," he said.

He told her that often when [his parents] Mutt and Lovell went out to a Friday-night barn dance, her teenage daughter, Anna Bea, babysat for her half siblings. He was four or five years old when she began molesting him, pulling down his pants and fondling him while her friends, "teenagers and older," giggled and smirked, Merlyn Mantle told me. "They started playing with him," she said. "And, of course, he got an erection. They laughed at him. He remembered how embarrassed he was." That was the only time they ever spoke about it. "It could have been why he turned out the way he did," she told me.'

The gentler side of killer mom's estranged husband

Matt · 16 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BARRIE, Ont. — "Daddy, daddy!" cried little Serena Campione, her chubby little arms raised in the air, running with glee when she spotted her father.

Leo Campione quickly wiped the telltale tears from his eyes and smiled broadly as he raised his little daughter in the air and then hugged her tightly.

...

It was the first time in over a month since the 33-year-old Toronto father had seen his children.

And it was the last time he would see them alive. Two weeks later they would be dead, drowned by their mother, Elaine Campione.'

Turn up the Heat: Tell Sen. Leahy three times to "Stop Mandatory Arrests!"

Matt · 16 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Every year one million Americans are arrested on charges of domestic violence. But only 30% of these persons are ever convicted of the “crime”. Which means about 700,000 Americans are wrongfully arrested for DV each and every year!!

Knowing that mandatory arrest also puts victims at greater risk, who in the right mind would support mandatory arrest??? The illogical domestic violence industry, that’s who!!

And who’s going to change this ridiculous state of affairs? We are!

On Tuesday, November 16, we are asking you to make 3 phone calls (or send 3 email messages) to Sen. Leahy, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Call Sen. Leahy’s office today. Tell him to STOP MANDATORY ARREST! Phone his office: 202-224-4242

Or send an email: http://leahy.senate.gov/contact/ — for the Message Topic, select “Law Enforcement”

P.S. Keep track of how many times you contact Sen. Leahy this week. Then let SAVE know how many messages you sent – HONOR SYSTEM!! Send the count of your messages by midnight Thursday, Nov. 18 to info-at-saveservices.org. The winner of the contest will receive a free copy of “Domestic Violence: Intervention, Prevention, Policies, and Solutions” by Richard Davis.

P.P.S. See SAVE’s Special Report on Arrest for Domestic Violence:
http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/Justice-Denied-DV-Arrest-Policies

UK: Mother killed autistic son with bleach

Minuteman · 16 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A British mother killed her 12-year-old autistic son by making him drink bleach because she was scared social services would take him away from her, a court has heard.

Satpal Kaur-Singh, 44, forced her son Ajit to drink bleach just hours after social services met with her and warned he could be taken away because of concerns about her parenting skills.

...

But, both the defence and prosecution agreed Kaur-Singh had an abnormality of the mind when she killed her son, and her initial charge was reduced from murder to manslaughter due to diminished responsibility.'

San Francisco Circumcision Ban Unconstitutional, Professor Says

anthony · 16 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'San Francisco can have its proposed circumcision ban, or it can have the First Amendment. But it can't have both. That's the opinion of Peter Keane, dean emeritus at Golden Gate University School of Law and a constitutional law professor.

The potential ballot measure is the brainchild of Lloyd Schofield, an anti-circumcision crusader and foreskin-regeneration activist. While he has said he hopes his potential ballot measure leads to "a flood of legislation protecting baby boys from forced genital mutilation," Keane says 80 years of Supreme Court cases will, ahem, nip that in the bud.

"It's not Constitutional. It would be a violation of the First Amendment right to Freedom of Religion -- religions like Judaism that require [circumcision] as an essential part of the belief system."'

Does empowering women really make men less 'relevant'?

anthony · 16 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of course, as the traditionalists see it, feminism made the fatal mistake of empowering women. In the last five decades, women have gained a plethora of rights; women have access to birth control, to education, to economic opportunity. As women have become more powerful and independent, the thesis goes, men began to question not only old chivalric codes, but the whole need for self-restraint. Why should men continue to protect women when women insist on being able to take care of themselves? The greatest benefit of the "old ways" was that a man could have his ego and his self-esteem boosted by knowing that he was needed by the fragile, delicate, vulnerable women in his life who relied absolutely on his strength and self-control.
...
Male privilege is not a guarantor of either happiness or health, and trying desperately to play the part of protector and provider has robbed generations of men of both. Feminism, in concert with these many new and exciting reproductive and contraceptive technologies, offers men a chance to rethink and re-evaluate their worth and their purpose. It offers them an opportunity to be intimate allies with their female partners, to forge relationships based on more than duty and dependency. It gives men a chance to be loved for the wholeness of who we are, rather than solely for what we can provide.'

Apparent "mandatory arrest" nets tamale throwing female

MR · 16 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Meet Adyan Sanchez.

The Florida woman was arrested Saturday morning for domestic battery after allegedly assaulting her boyfriend with a plate of tamales. Sanchez, 30, told cops that she tossed the corn-based projectiles at her boyfriend after he called her a “bitch” in front of the couple’s one-year-old son.

According to a police report excerpted here, deputies responded to a 911 call from the Bradenton home shared by the couple. Upon their arrival, officers found the alleged victim, Roberto Olvera, with “tamale sauce all over his pants.”'

Stop Feminists' Job Killing Legislation

Matt · 17 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

On Election Day, Americans spoke out against the radical liberal agenda in Washington, D.C. Voters demanded a Congress that will strengthen the economy and create more jobs.

But, the liberal left is still pandering to feminists and trial attorneys at the expense of American jobs by bringing the so-called “Paycheck Fairness Act” to a vote during the Lame Duck Session that begins Monday, November 15th.

The “Paycheck Fairness Act” would stifle job creation, send existing American jobs overseas, and burden employers with expensive paperwork and frivolous lawsuits.

Your calls are urgently needed to stop the feminists from causing unemployment rates to rise even higher!

A Powerhouse of Lies in New Zealand

Matt · 17 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was a spiel I was used to. When men die on the job, they are not men. They are “workers,” “firefighters,” “soldiers,” and other professional labels designed to distract us from the idea that they are human beings. Sometimes, they are even reduced to something as generic as “personnel.”

Anything but men.

And of course I listened to this with the certainty that if by any chance any of those “workers” happened to be female, I would have heard the now ubiquitous woman inclusion. The tour guide would have to work from an amended script, telling us that 16 “workers” died, including one woman.
...
But what got to me, what made my skin crawl and turn a bit crimson, I am sure, was on the wall behind me; a backlit testimonial standing above the row of exciters in the machine hall.

{image}

It’s worth reading and thinking about. There I was, standing above the plant’s machine hall, housed in a space carved out of a million metric tons of solid rock, listening to a female plant employee tell me about the “workers” that died building her place of employment, with a glowing sign on the wall behind me that cast the men who did it all like a bunch of drunks and derelicts.'

Taking aim at a grieving dad

Matt · 17 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Leo Campione was not on trial.

Leo Campione was a victim, the father of two little murdered girls, killed by their mother's hand.

Leo Campione had pleaded with child welfare officials to remove those children from his estranged wife's custody, terrified the youngsters might come to harm — fears that were sadly, gruesomely, realized when Elaine Campione took their lives.

But on the day of Elaine's reckoning, found guilty by a jury on two counts of first-degree murder, the judge in the case implicitly aimed his condemnation at . . . Leo.

"It is more than disconcerting to think that if Ms Campione had not been so abused, so used and discarded as a person, her two daughters could still be alive."

This is a breathtaking rearrangement of the facts as court heard them.'

Wall Street Journal: Washington's Equal Pay Obsession

anthony · 17 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women in the workplace don't face rampant pay discrimination, and yet the Senate may soon pass a bill—already passed in the House—premised on the erroneous charge that they do. The Paycheck Fairness Act (PFA) would be a harmful addition to the many federal laws that already protect women and men from labor-market discrimination.

The original Equal Pay Act of 1963 made it illegal for firms to pay different wages to women and men who performed equal work on jobs in the same establishment. Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act outlawed discrimination against women and minorities in all aspects of employment, including hiring, promotion and compensation. Additional protections came with the 1978 Pregnancy Discrimination Act; the 1991 amendments to Title VII, which boosted penalties for discrimination; and the 2009 Lilly Ledbetter Act, which essentially eliminated the time limit for filing discrimination claims.

Paycheck Fairness Act Will Fatten Paychecks for Trial Lawyers, not Women

anthony · 17 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The study concludes that “the differences in the compensation of men and women are the result of a multitude of factors and that the raw wage gap should not be used as the basis to justify corrective action. Indeed, there may be nothing to correct. The differences in raw wages may be almost entirely the result of the individual choices being made by both male and female workers.”

And yet the Senate will vote this week on “The Paycheck Fairness Act,” which according to the American Association of University Women is a critical piece of legislation that “can help create a climate where pay discrimination is not tolerated, and give the new administration the enforcement tools it needs to make real progress on pay equity.”

But the government’s own report by the Department of Labor concludes that there is no gender wage gap or pay discrimination once all relevant variables that impact wages are considered. And another recent study found that single, childless women between the ages of 22 and 30 out-earn their male counterparts by as much as 21 percent in large cities, and by 8 percent on average in urban areas, largely because young women are better educated than young men. This is more evidence that labor markets operate efficiently and discrimination against women has largely been eliminated by competitive market forces and the enforcement of existing laws by federal agencies, and additional federal antidiscrimination legislation is therefore unnecessary.'

Barbara Kay: When a mother is on trial, the father is the accused

Anonymous · 17 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The trial was over, But Judge Stong added comments after the verdict announcement suggesting that if had the power to overturn the jury's verdict, he would. He said, "It is more than disconcerting to think that if Campione had not been so abused, so used and discarded as a person, her two daughters could still be alive…" Judge Stong was determined that even if it is Campione that gets locked up, Canadians would know that the real villain, morally speaking, is Leo Campione, the father of the dead girls (even though his alleged abusiveness was entirely based on his wife's allegations and never proved), and it is actually the "discarded" Elaine Campione who is the victim.

Judge Stong felt such personal animus against the grieving father that he wanted to deny Mr. Campione and his parents their opportunity to read a victim-impact statement, standard practice even with mandatory- sentencing cases. He only relented under strong pressure from the prosecutor, who reminded the judge that the murdered girls had been "an extremely important part of [Mr. Campione's] life."'

Paycheck-fairness bill blocked in Senate

anthony · 17 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Report here.

'WASHINGTON (MarketWatch) -- A bill aimed at stamping out wage discrimination was blocked Wednesday as too few senators voted to move forward with the legislation. The Paycheck Fairness Act needed 60 votes to move forward, and only captured 58. The bill would have amended the Equal Pay Act to limit the defense that employers can use to respond to charges of wage discrimination based on sex, among other actions. Supporters said stronger laws are needed to erase the persistent wage gap between men and women, while critics said the bill could hurt businesses and workers. According to the Labor Department, in 2009 the median weekly earnings of women who were full-time wage and salary workers were $657, compared with $819 for men. There's disagreement over how much of the gap is attributable to sexism.'

Mandatory Arrest: Time for the Body Count

Matt · 18 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Mandatory Arrest policies cause the deaths of 600 DV victims each year, and result in the false arrest of 700,000 persons each year: http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/Justice-Denied-DV-Arrest-Policies

Now, Stop Abusive and Violent Services (SAVE) is working to change VAWA so it incentivizes states to remove these stupid policies.

On Monday, we asked you to contact Sen. Patrick Leahy, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, once. On Tuesday, we asked you to contact Sen. Patrick Leahy three times. On Monday, we asked you to really cut loose, and contact the good senator eight times! (And if you make a few extra calls on Thursday, that's perfectly fine with us!)

So how many times did you voice your strong disapproval of Mandatory Arrest this week?

Send your count by midnight Thursday, Nov. 18 to info-at-saveservices.org, along with your name and mailing address. The person who made the most calls and sent the most messages will be mailed a free copy of "Domestic Violence: Intervention, Prevention, Policies, and Solutions" by Richard Davis.

That's right, we're going do whatever it takes to stop harmful Mandatory Arrest policies! We won't stop until we succeed.

++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++

Call Sen. Leahy's office today. Tell him to STOP MANDATORY ARREST!

Politely phone his office: 202-224-4242

Or send an email: http://leahy.senate.gov/contact/ — for the Message Topic, select "Law Enforcement"

Police issue violations to men for teaching children to play chess in a public park

ItsDan · 18 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Nice that the parents aren't actually standing up to say the rule is wrong, just that it should have been a warning. Excerpt:

'Parents at a Manhattan park are outraged that the NYPD slapped summones on a group of chess players who have mentored their children.

Cops in the 34th Precinct hit seven men with violations on Oct. 20 for using the stone chess tables inside a playground at Inwood Hill Park.

The playground is off-limits to adults without minors with them under Parks Department rules.

The summonses - first reported on DNAinfo.com - cited the men for failing to obey park regulation signs. They have to answer the charges in Criminal Court on Dec. 28.

"When people are just playing chess, I don't see a real reason for a summons for that," said Joanna Johnston, whose 7-year-old son learned the game from the men.

"A warning would have been sufficient."'

'virtual visitations' becoming the norm in divorce settlements

Matt · 19 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Though video chats are still a privilege for most, they're becoming a right for an increasing number of Canadian parents.

"Virtual visitation" will soon be fully entrenched in the language of divorce, as more and more broken families are subject to court orders for everything from parent-child Skype calls to scheduled instant-messaging sessions.

For now, this kind of plugged-in parenting is enforced primarily with couples facing distance hurdles — father on the East Coast, mother on the West Coast, for example. But with six U.S. states having included virtual visitation in their legislation, and Canadian courts ordering it on a case-by-case basis in nearly every jurisdiction, experts predict it won't be long before digital rights are a fixture in custodial agreements of every stripe.'

UK: Number of DV assaults on men has tripled over last 10 years

Matt · 19 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE number of domestic abuse attacks on men has TRIPLED in ten years, new figures showed yesterday.

The total number of incidents of violence in the home has dropped for the first time in a decade to 51,926 - 1,000 a week.

But there were 8,604 cases against men - 16 per cent of all attacks - compared to 2,869 in the year 2000, when they made up 8 per cent of the total. Housing and Communities Minister Alex Neil put the rise down to more males coming forward to report cases.

He said: "It is encouraging to see reported domestic abuse incidents are on the decrease. We're also pleased that more men are finding the courage to come forward." But Labour's justice spokesman Richard Baker said Holyrood's recent decision to scrap jail terms under three months could mean most abusers escape jail.'

"Marriage: What's It Good For?"

Matt · 19 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Predictably, no mention at all of how the law courts have made so many men just plain scared to get married, much less see a reason why (which is one reason the article does in fact mention, but about people of both sexes). Excerpt:

'In fact, statistically speaking, a young man of [Prince] William's age — if not his royal English heritage — might be just as likely not to get married, yet. In 1960, the year before Princess Diana, William's mother, was born, nearly 70% of American adults were married; now only about half are. Eight times as many children are born out of wedlock. Back then, two-thirds of 20-somethings were married; in 2008 just 26% were. And college graduates are now far more likely to marry (64%) than those with no higher education (48%).

When an institution so central to human experience suddenly changes shape in the space of a generation or two, it's worth trying to figure out why. This fall the Pew Research Center, in association with TIME, conducted a nationwide poll exploring the contours of modern marriage and the new American family, posing questions about what people want and expect out of marriage and family life, why they enter into committed relationships and what they gain from them. What we found is that marriage, whatever its social, spiritual or symbolic appeal, is in purely practical terms just not as necessary as it used to be. Neither men nor women need to be married to have sex or companionship or professional success or respect or even children — yet marriage remains revered and desired.'

'A Husband Spurned'

anthony · 19 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Violence Against Women Act has been a lifeline for countless abused women. The act, first passed in 1994 and due to be reauthorized next year, contains a host of programs including stiffer penalties for batterers, funding for women's shelters, and the creation of a national domestic violence hotline.

But the law has a potential flaw, too: A small fraction of the time, it may also provide incentive for immigrant husbands and wives to fake domestic abuse.

Hundreds of American men say their foreign wives exploited a section of VAWA that helps victims of spousal abuse to remain in the United States even if they exit their marriage. The spurned husbands say their immigrant spouses have lied to police, judges, and women's shelters in their efforts to manufacture evidence of abuse.
...

Brannon says he was a victim of a provision in VAWA that allows battered immigrant women and men to receive green cards and other benefits. He believes Elena never loved him at all and that she had planned to accuse him of domestic abuse from the first moment they made contact online.'

A Plea from the Founder of the Domestic Abuse Helpline

Matt · 19 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

I sent a note earlier this month about helping us out by going to the Pepsi Refresh website and voting for our all volunteer agency (since 2000) that specializes in offering supportive services to under served victims i.e. male victims. We are losing the Pepsi challenge, not enough people are voting daily for us to win.

If you truly want to see under served victims receive services (toll free helpline, hotel and safe housing emergency shelter, food, clothing, transportation costs etc) from an agency that really cares about them please take a few seconds out of your day for the rest of November to vote for our agency to win beginning today. Info on how to do so is below.

Will you take 2 seconds each day in November to help victims of domestic violence?

Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women (DAHMW) has entered the Pepsi project challenge for November in attempt to win a $50.000 grant from Pepsi so that we can offer more services to victims. DAHMW is a nationwide ALL VOLUNTEER non profit agency that offers supportive services to victims of intimate partner violence. In literally just 2 seconds each day in November you can help us win. Here's how:

Use your cell phone to Text 103820 to 73774 (Pepsi). Pepsi will confirm that they received your vote. Keep the text you sent them in your sent box and go in daily, open it up and press send. That's all you need to do to help us win $50,000! Standard text messaging charges apply.

You can read more about our Pepsi project and vote for us online too here: http://pep.si/aC5cuP

Thanks in advance for your help, please pass our need on to your friends and family members.

Sincerely,
Jan Elizabeth Brown
Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men an Women
Helpline: 888-743-5754
dahmwagency-at-gmail.com
http://www.dahmw.org/
You can help a worthy cause without driving to the store or donating a penny! Shop online at over 730 name brand stores this holiday season and a percentage of the amount you spend will go to the Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women!
http://www.iGive.com/DAHM
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=gdUYPcEgooc

Female jailer captain charged with rape

Matt · 19 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Released "on her own recognizance"?? If this had been a male police jailer captain, you can bet the story would be a lot longer and the guy'd still be behind bars or would need to make some outrageous bail amount to get out. Excerpt:

'A captain with the Monroe County Sheriff's office today was arraigned on rape charges in Monroe County Court.

Catherine A. McLaughlin, 53, was indicted by a Monroe County grand jury with three counts of third-degree rape, a felony, 13 counts of official misconduct and one count of unauthorized use of a computer, both misdemeanors. The indictment was unsealed this morning in front of Monroe County Judge Frank Geraci, said Cpl. John Helfer of the Monroe County Sheriff's Office.

Assistant District Attorney Bill Gargan said McLaughlin pleaded not guilty this morning and was released on her own recognizance.'

Fake doctor jailed for giving breast exams in bars

Matt · 20 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SALMON, Idaho (Reuters) - An Idaho judge has set bond at $100,000 for a Boise woman police say posed as a physician and duped at least two other women into having their breasts examined by her at Boise-area nightclubs.

Kristina Ross, 37, remains in Ada County Jail in Boise on two felony counts of practicing medicine without a license.

Police say Ross introduced herself to victims -- one at a downtown Boise bar and the other at a nightclub in a Boise suburb -- as a plastic surgeon named Berlyn Aussieahshowna, a name that turned out to be bogus.'

Ruby Ann Ruffolo's found guilty, faces life in jail

Matt · 20 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'After seven years of legal wrangling, Ruby Ann Ruffolo of Saanich was found guilty of the first-degree murder of her husband Thursday and sentenced to life in prison with no possibility of parole for 25 years.

The Victoria courtroom, filled with John Ruffolo's extended family and friends, burst into applause after B.C. Supreme Court Justice Mary Humphries took her seat and immediately announced she had found Ruffolo guilty of killing John by sedating him with amitriptyline and injecting him with a lethal dose of heroin on Oct. 19, 2003.

Ruffolo, 54, who appeared nervous and teary-eyed as she sat in the prisoner's box before the verdict, gasped and lowered her head. Behind her, in the front row, the couple's 20-year-old daughter, Jovanna, sobbed in the arms of a friend.'

UK: Would-be glamour girl who cried rape to clear drug debt is jailed for 18 months

Matt · 20 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A young woman who had ambitions of becoming a glamour model falsely accused a man of raping her as part of a ‘wicked’ scam to clear her £3,000 drug debt.

Samantha Merry, 21, claimed that she had been sexually assaulted by the man in a brutal attack which allegedly happened in front of a group of people.

Her victim was arrested in front of his partner and their children at 4am and driven to a police station where intimate swabs were taken and he was held in a cell for 23 hours.'

Australia: Killer lesbian wants compensation for bike crash

Minuteman · 21 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who bludgeoned a 16-year-old girl to death with her lesbian lover has applied for publically-funded compensation for injuries she received from a road accident before the murder.

Valerie Parashumti was 16 when she was hit by a car while riding a bike in Perth in 2004, the Sunday Times reports.

Parashumti was taken to hospital with leg injuries but court-ordered medical assessments during her 2008 murder trial showed she may have also suffered frontal lobe damage to her brain.

She now could be compensated up to $337,000 for pain and suffering following the crash, and there is no limit to damages that could be paid to her for future medical treatments and loss of earnings.'

UN Convention on the Rights of the Child - 21 Years Old

Matt · 21 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Convention on the Rights of the Child, New York, 20 November 1989:

Article 18: "States Parties shall use their best efforts to ensure recognition of the principle that both Parents have common responsibilities for the upbringing and development of the Child. ..."

This is the first UN world resolution giving to children the right of co-parenting (shared parenting between father and mother).

Please watch a short movie to celebrate and wish the return of Father and Fatherhood in the Society

Best regards,
F.BARZAGLI
fatherhood-at-email.it
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Fabio_Barzagli#Ethical_and_social_contribution

'Intactivists' to San Francisco: Ban circumcision

anthony · 22 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- In the California city that banned Happy Meal toys,outlawed sitting on sidewalks during daylight hours and fined residents for not sorting garbage into recycling, compost and trash, Lloyd Schofield wants to add a new law to the books in San Francisco: A ban on all male circumcisions.

Those who violate the ban could be jailed (not more than one year) or fined (not more than $1,000), under his proposal. Circumcisions even for religious reasons would not be allowed. At this point, Schofield's proposal is an idea that would have to clear several hurdles to be considered.

Schofield and like-minded advocates who call themselves "intactivists" seek to make it "unlawful to circumcise, excise, cut, or mutilate the whole or any part of the foreskin, testicles, or penis" of anyone 17 or younger in San Francisco.

The circumcision debate has passionate advocates on each side.'

Papua New Guinea: Boy gang raped by women

Minuteman · 22 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A 17-year-old village boy has been gang raped by 10 knife wielding women in Papua New Guinea, police say.

Southern Highlands Province police commander Teddy Tei told AAP the gang of women attacked the schoolboy just outside the provincial centre of Mendi on Friday.

"This is a serious matter and police are trying to identify who these animals are," he said.

"More than 10 women with kitchen knives attacked him and four women had sexual intercourse with him".

The boy went to hospital for treatment, he said.

Police commander Tei said he feared the women may have infected the young man with HIV/AIDs.'

Reality TV "star" charged with DV

anthony · 22 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Anderson, Ind. police have formally charged Teen Mom star Amber Portwood for attacking Gary Shirley, her ex-fiance and father to her daughter Leah, 2. (HollywoodLife.com first reported the news.)

Portwood, 20, has been charged with two felony counts and one misdemeanor count of domestic violence and battery. If convicted, the reality star faces up to three years in jail and fines of up to $10,000.

Authorities launched their criminal investigation seven weeks ago after an episode of the MTV show aired in which Portwood hit Shirley, 24, numerous times. Using both that footage and unaired tapes, police charge that Portwood attacked her beau on three separate occasions.

Documents report that, on Aug. 14, 2009, she shoved, slapped and choked Shirley -- all while young Leah watched nearby. On June 14, 2010, she was taped slapping, punching and kicking Shirley. Finally, on July 18, she was again caught slapping and punching him as Leah watched.'

"Good Morning America" story on YT here.

NCFM sets up booth in Bangalore, India for International Men's Day

Anonymous · 22 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

The National Coalition For Men now has a chapter in Bangalore, India that is very active. Here are pictures of their recent booth for International Men's Day.

Australia: Woman charged with attempted murder of twin

Minuteman · 23 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

There's always a sympathy card to be played. Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A Victorian anorexic woman has appeared in court charged with the attempted murder of her identical sister.

Geelong Magistrates Court was told Rachel Wallmeyer was trying to strangle twin sister Clare when police arrived at the apartment they share in Grovedale, the Geelong Advertiser reports.

The 40-year-old was also charged with recklessly causing injury and unlawful assault.

Police prosecutor Sergeant Peter Beard said both women were "extremely intoxicated" when police were called to their flat at 10.30am on Saturday morning.
...
However, police are likely to remove the attempted murder charge against Rachel and replace it with a lesser charge, the Advertiser reports.'

A Voice for Men: "Kimmel & Bits, Kimmel & Bits"

Matt · 23 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What Kimmel fails to grasp in his concepts is that men's "idea of masculinity" has been socially criminalized and legislated as such. It is a street level experience that is less political and much more personal. Men no longer possess a concept of themselves that would offer a safe place to start or belong in the social equation. Men in fact are found guilty before a crime is ever committed. That guilt is assigned to masculinity only in the proximity of women, only in a social construct that includes women. It is less about a zero sum game than a negative sum prosecution for being a man. While many men may support doctrines such as Kimmel's and support a feminist cause, they are only one finger point away from the truth. The role they play in their own lives is leased to them by women and requires no notice, evidence or reason under the law to terminate that agreement.

It would be equally true to identify that the "idea of femininity" has not changed in the female mind. Where it may have served the female cause for equality to rail for shared custody of children, they are steadfast in denying it, arguing their cause by criminalizing fathers. Such a paradigm as fathering may well represent a strong role model for change in male consciousness it is however not supported by women or their lick spittle legislators. This is the societal privilege for which Mr. Kimmel speaks that ultimately renders men invisible, particularly to their children. It is increasingly the case that young men are simply opting out of the social collaboration with women in an effort to hedge risk. It is specifically the area of risk in which maleness and masculinity reside and in this area where equality is silent. It is against issues such as these that evidence the real strides made are in fact not by women but by ministries of government, their funding and your tax dollars.'

Ohio Senator Calls F & F of Ohio, Begins Dialogue on Child Support Reform

Matt · 23 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'[State of Ohio] Senator Shirley Smith yesterday called Donald Hubin, Ph.D., Chairman of Fathers and Families of Ohio's Executive Committee, to open up a dialogue about Senate Bill 292, the child support legislation that Senator Smith sponsored.

F & F of Ohio has been actively campaigning in the legislature and the media against certain aspects of the bill, which will raise child support obligations in the middle of the worst economy since the Great Depression. To participate in F & F of Ohio's campaign against the bill, please click here.'

Battlelines: science, sex, brains and gender

anthony · 23 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Audio and transcript included. Excerpt:

'Boy or girl? Blue brain or pink brain? Dr Cordelia Fine's new book, Delusions of Gender: The Real Science Behind Sex Differences, and Professor Rebecca Jordan-Young's latest, Brainstorm: The Flaws in the Science of Sex Difference, have raked over research data and mined the controversies on how male and female brains differ -- no holds barred.'

Report: Teacher Pregnant With Student's Child

Michael · 23 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Notice it isn't called "rape". Excerpt:

'FORT WORTH, Texas -- Police suspect a teacher accused of having sex with a 16-year-old student, may be pregnant with the teen's child.

25-year old Jennifer Riojas is in police custody charged with sexual assault of a child.

The 9th grade teacher taught science at Carter-Riverside High School before resigning last month.

She was arrested after the student came forward fearing he may be the father of Riojas' baby.'

Huffington Post: Dating Violence? Maybe Not But MTV's 16 & Pregnant Does Not Make Me LOL

anthony · 23 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MTV's Teen Mom "star" Amber Portwood was officially charged last week with two felony counts and one misdemeanor for domestic violence and battery. The charges against Amber were derived from footage recorded by MTV during the shoot.

This news came immediately on the heels of an episode of MTV's 16 & Pregnant, which featured yet another unhealthy relationship segment. A young woman, Markai, physically attacked her boyfriend James, after learning that he cheated on her in the beginning of their relationship. On the show, James attempts to escape Markai's aggression but she pursues him.

After the segment, an information card popped up on the television screen with a link to loveisrespect.org, "If you or someone you know is in an abusive relationship, please visit loveisrespect.org." Seems harmless enough. But for some reason, MTV's seemingly responsible move to provide a help resource spurred hundreds of alarming tweets that reinforce the dire need for us to educate people (young and old) about the reality of dating violence.'

UN resolution fails to include homosexuals in fundamental human rights declaration

Matt · 24 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

"A Voice for Men" article here. This is of particular significance to MRAs since gay men are overwhelmingly the typical target for such murderous acts, not lesbians-- when indeed, no one should be the target of such acts at any time. Excerpt:

'The United Nations has been a long time ally of gender ideologues, promoting feminist politics on a global level and creating countless committees and funding organizations dedicated to women's causes. Intertwined in the language from many of those organizations are statements of support for the gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered citizens of nations across the world.
...
On the 17th of this month, the nations of the U.N. voted to remove sexual orientation from a resolution condemning summary and arbitrary executions. The resolution admonishes member nations to protect the right to life of all people, and calls on states to investigate killings based on discriminatory grounds. For the past 10 years, the resolution included sexual orientation in the list of discriminatory grounds on which killings are often based.

But the specification of gays was removed by a vote of 79 for, 70 against, 17 abstentions and 26 absent. It effectively issued an international gay hunting license for the numbers of nations that consider homosexuality to be a criminal offense, often looking the other way when gays are murdered, and including the 5 or so nations that treat it as a crime punishable by death.'

Health Check: The boy who was raised a girl

anthony · 24 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Biologically it is sex hormones, physical appearance and the sex chromosomes - XX for a woman, XY for a man - which dictate whether someone is male or female.

But what happens if you bring up someone who was a boy as a girl?

There was a case just like this in the 1960s, a case which ended in tragedy.

Twins Bruce and Brian Reimer were born in Canada as two perfectly normal boys. But after seven months, both were having difficulty urinating.

Acting on advice, the parents, Janet and Ron, took the boys to the hospital for a circumcision.

The next morning, they received a devastating phone call - Bruce had been involved in an accident.

Doctors had used a cauterizing needle instead of a blade, and the electrical equipment had malfunctioned and the surge in current had completely burned off Bruce's penis.'

On You Tube: Radical Feminist Statements

anthony · 24 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

A woman recites some of the most hateful comments made by feminists over the years. Many of these names are found in Women Studies text books and are looked upon in a positive manner. Some feminists will defend these comments by suggesting such quotes are -- 'taken out of context.'

Boys will be boys — if they don’t want to be the victims of bullying

anthony · 24 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In both cases — increases in bullying among boys AND girls — I think the root cause is the same: the forced androgynization (yes, I just made up that word) of our society, especially in the schools.

Consider, for example, that little boys in America are exposed almost exclusively to women in the classroom. My 16-year-old didn’t have a male teacher until sixth grade. My seventh-grader still hasn’t had one, if you don’t count health and P.E. Most of their administrators have also been women.

I’m not saying women don’t make great teachers and school administrators. They do. And it’s certainly not their fault that more men aren’t beating down the door to teach 7-year-olds.

But one result is that boys learn, in school, almost exclusively feminine values, such as that fighting is always bad. In fact, that’s probably an understatement: they actually have the aggression drilled out of them from an early age.

This has a direct influence on the increase in bullying. When I was a kid, my dad taught me never to start a fight but to finish one if necessary. That meant, at school, we took care of bullies ourselves. So bullying really wasn’t much of a problem, at least not for long.
...
At the same time that our schools are trying to turn little boys into little girls, society is telling girls that they can be just like boys in every way. Not only can they pursue any career that a male can pursue, including professional wrestling and combat infantry, but they can also dress like boys, be sexually aggressive like boys — and fight like boys.'

Salon.com: Is female-on-male violence on the rise?

anthony · 26 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Inherent in the above is some suggestion of perverse 21st century gender parity: Both partners are equally to blame, both partners are equally abusive; women are strong enough to punch, women are not -- or no longer -- the only victims. When we hear of a woman who hits, we hear rumblings that women are "becoming more violent," that this is the dark price we pay for female empowerment. As in, hey, feminism, thanks a lot. But are women really becoming "as violent as men"? And is that even the question we should be asking in the first place?

People who support women's rights, and who have worked for decades to get male-on-female domestic violence taken seriously, may find this conversation not just eye-rolling, but deeply troubling. As expert Jill Murray, author, most recently, of "But He Never Hit Me," puts it: Equating the scope, incidence and danger of male vs. female domestic violence "stands to negate everything we've been trying to fight for, all the work we've done."'

The UN’s War on Gender

anthony · 26 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently, the United States Senate held the first round of hearings on the ratification of the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW). Despite having been adopted by the UN General Assembly in 1979, the treaty has never been ratified by the Senate.

The National Organization for Women (NOW) and other supporters claim, “in agreeing to ratify CEDAW, countries agree to take concrete action to improve the status of women and girls.” NOW applauds countries such as France for improving “maternity leave and child care for women working outside the home” after having ratified the UN Women’s Treaty.

...

In a misguided attempt to promote equality, the UN Women’s Treaty calls for the complete elimination of sex roles, and all policies – no matter how effective – recognizing gender differences. According to feminist author Christina Hoff Sommers, if implemented in the United States, CEDAW “would be a weapon for hard-line feminists in groups like NOW to wield against the rest of us.” The Treaty’s egalitarian feminist provisions threaten both the advancement of women and “the privacy, well-being, and basic freedoms of Americans.”'

Court urged not to jail genital burner

Matt · 27 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A court has been urged not to jail a woman who burnt her husband to death in what her lawyer has called a momentary lapse of control.

Rajini Narayan was found guilty of manslaughter for dousing her husband, Satish, in petrol and lighting it with a candle at their home at Unley in Adelaide two years ago.

Defence lawyer Lindy Powell said the woman should be sentenced on the basis that she had planned to burn his penis as a minor circumcision after learning he had been having an affair.'

Australia: Woman's school-run sex with 14-year-old boy

anthony · 28 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A YOUNG woman told a 14-year-old boy's mother she was driving him to school before taking him to her home and having sex with him, a court heard.

Kimberley Annette Gale, 24, of Hillside, pleaded guilty in the County Court to two counts of sexual penetration of a child under 16.

Her lawyer, Amy Wood, told Judge Sue Pullen her client had had a difficult childhood and the attention of the boy, plus moving back home to live with her mother and stepfather, had made her feel "like she was 16 again".'

UK: Shoplifter who mowed down policeman told 'Take 7-week trip-of-a-lifetime before we lock you up'

anthony · 28 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'After mowing down a policeman in an attempt to escape justice, shoplifter Saphhia Da-Silva was expected to face the full wrath of the British legal system.

But instead magistrates have adjourned sentencing – so she can enjoy a pre-booked seven-week holiday to Australia.

Da-Silva was spotted shoplifting at a Gap store and was followed to her car by two police community support officers.
...
Her case had been adjourned for pre-sentence reports, and a sentencing hearing would have likely been held in mid-December.

But the mother-of-two's planned seven-week trip Down Under, on a visa, is from November 28 to January 15 so Ashford magistrates agreed to adjourn the date until January 31.'

India: Women force men to do sit-ups on train

ItsDan · 28 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A GROUP of male passengers travelling in a female-only carriage on New Delhi's new metro system were ordered to do sit-ups on the platform by the furious women, according to reports.

At least one carriage is reserved for women on every metro train in the Indian capital, where female residents and tourists have complained about sexual harassment on public transport for decades.

The metro has also become severely congested with the lines expanding into the suburbs over the last year and most regular carriages packed to capacity.

The Times of India said on Saturday police led a crackdown at a station in Gurgaon, a booming satellite development on the outskirts of Delhi, after a series of complaints - and women passengers joined in the action.

"Not only were the unruly commuters made to shell out a fine of 250 rupees ($A5.50), angry women slapped some of them and forced them to do sit-ups," the Times reported.'

Columnist: 'Sexist' tax cut would benefit Ireland as a whole

anthony · 28 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The revelation in the news yesterday of an IMF proposal to lower the income tax rate of Irish women returning to the workforce by five percentage points, was greeted with bemusement swiftly followed by derision.

A number of angry men were quick to cry foul, branding the initiative "sexist". One popular daytime radio presenter described it as a "tax cut for the girls" and went so far as to speculate that any additional take-home pay resulting from what he branded a "sexist law" would be spent on "shopping and hair". A secondary, more measured, debate arose between women with children, who tentatively suggested that there might be some merit in a measure that counteracted the prohibitively high cost of childcare in Ireland, and women without children, who felt that they would be disadvantaged.'

Position Vacant: Men’s Counsellor -DV Perpetrators

Minuteman · 29 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to posting here. Excerpt:

'12 Month position based in Coober Pedy.

We are currently seeking an enthusiastic energetic and positive person to work with male perpetrators of Domestic/Family Violence. The person will provide case management, support, Community Development and work within a Strength Based Practise.

The successful applicants will need to have:
...'

£56m lottery winner ordered to pay £2m to ex-wife even though she left him for another man... TEN YEARS ago

anthony · 29 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A lottery winner has been left appalled after the wife who left him for another man ten years ago was able to grab £2million of his winnings.

Nigel Page, who won the £56million Euromillions jackpot earlier this year, is said to have been planning a generous gift to his former wife.

But this wasn't enough for Wendy Page, 43, who decided to take legal action against him for more.'

Foundation for Male Studies April 6 Conference to Focus on the Deteriorating Status of Boys and Men

Anonymous · 29 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'The Foundation for Male Studies will focus on the research and programs needed to reverse the downward spiral, which is now affecting virtually all aspects of the lives of men and boys, at the Second Annual International Conference on Male Studies – Looking Forward to Solutions, April 6, 2011.

Edward M. Stephens, MD, FMS' Founder and Chair says that in addition to the conference's solution-geared presentations by leading authorities, the Foundation is calling for papers from academics on how to best deal with increasing levels of male unemployment, depression, suicides, dropping out of school and related problems.

Marianne Legato, MD and Tom Mortenson will co-chair the conference at the New York Academy of Medicine. Dr. Legato, who founded and directs Columbia's College of Medicine Partnership for Gender-Specific Medicine, edited the first text on gender medicine, and founded the journal, Gender Medicine. A widely acclaimed author of works on men's and women's health, her most current book is Why Men Die First. Mr. Mortenson is senior scholar at the Pell Institute for the Study of Opportunity in Higher Education and the recipient of major national awards for contributions to educational research.'

On YouTube: Men beaten off women's train in India

anthony · 30 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Here's the video to an earlier post from India about women making men do sit ups because of harassment accusations during a train ride. The harassment claims haven't been substantiated so this could just be the result of men entering the women-only train because of over crowding. Much worse than the sit-ups is footage of police escorting the men off the train at gunpoint while female passengers strike them. I heard about the video after watching 'Countdown' with Keith Olbermann. He played the footage and cracked jokes.

UK ballet teacher admits abducting teen she was accused of seducing

anthony · 30 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A BRITISH ballet teacher with a budding career in showbusiness was warned today that she faces a possible jail sentence after pleading guilty to abducting a teenage pupil.

Sarah Pirie, 27, was an aspiring dancer, actress and choreographer and had appeared in TV dramas Waterloo Road and Hollyoaks when she met the 15-year-old boy during one of her classes at a dance school.

She was initially accused of having sex with the youngster at a succession of hotels in Manchester and across the UK's North West over a three-month period between March and June last year.

But the dancer learned that she would no longer have to face the five charges of sexual activity with a youngster when she made a brief appearance before Judge Michael Byrne at Preston Crown Court.

Instead she changed her plea to guilty on a single count of abducting the teenager on May 22 last year. She was freed on bail until January 7 when she will be sentenced.'

Child Murder: It Must be the Husband's Fault

Matt · 30 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

On A Voice for Men, here. Excerpt:

'"Ju know, they say eet was the hoosbands fault," announced the thirty something Mexican immigrant who was cutting my hair that day, two months before 9/11 changed the world. The big story of the moment was not about terrorists or toppled buildings, but about Andrea Yates, the Houston area mother of five that snuffed the life out of all of her children a mere half hour from where I live. And my stylist, using up every word of almost English in her repertoire, was attempting to 'splain to me how the whole mess could rightly be hung on the man.

"Oh, yeah?" I asked, unsurprised at the stupid remark, but too far into the haircut to get up and walk. "Who are they?" I was instantly pissed and made no effort to hide it.

She looked a bit nonplussed, then shrugged and said, "Somebody say eet on the noose." She sounded less self assured; feebly attempting to distance herself from the remark. Apparently, the language barrier didn't prevent her from picking up the tone in my voice.
...
Ontario's Elaine Campione was really mad at her estranged husband, so she murdered their two daughters, Serena 3, and Sophia, 19 months, by drowning them both in the bathtub. It was reminiscent of the Yates case, only the attempts to issue this woman a py pass were significantly less veiled, and, so far, less successful.'

We Need to Stop Excusing Women's Violence

Matt · 30 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'For the past few weeks one of the the stars of MTV's hit show, "Teen Mom," Amber Portwood, has been the focus of a whole lot of media attention for her domestically violent behavior caught on tape towards the father of her toddler child Leah and boyfriend, Gary Shirley.

Every news outlet from CBS to CNN to TMZ has written or spoken about the on-camera verbal and physical assaults that Amber has directed towards Gary. Gary, to his credit, has never physically retaliated.

Although I don't know Gary personally I know thousands of "Gary's" in similar situations. Gary, like other men in these situations who do not hit women or defend themselves against a woman's violence, know the rules of the game i.e. if a woman hits you stand there in take it because if you defend yourself you're going to jail. There is no excuse for abuse, unless it's a woman doing the abusing.'

Women in prison: a growing population

anthony · 30 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'...women are the fastest-growing prison population in the state, in the country, and in the world.

Why? It's hard to say. Overall, the prison population has boomed since the 1980′s, so it only seems natural that the numbers of women would increase as well–but proportionally, women still outnumber men compared to 30 years ago. One common explanation is the increasing participation of women in the narcotics industry, whether as users or dealers. Others contend that women are often arrested as accessories to crimes involving their husbands and boyfriends.
...
As the population of women in prison continues to grow, it'll be interesting to see how correctional institutions evolve to respond to this population's needs–will the system become more rehabilitative? More focused on sustaining famiy relationships during incarceration? Will they not change at all? Should they change at all?'

Slate: "How to Buck Up the Science Ladies"

anthony · 30 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, researchers at the University of Colorado published a psych experiment that seems almost too good to be true. They showed that two 15-minute writing exercises, administered to an intro physics class early in the semester, could substantially boost the scores of female students. Even more curious: the exercises had nothing to do with physics. Instead, students were asked to write about things that mattered to them, like creativity or relationships with family and friends. How could a few paragraphs on personal values translate into enduring better mastery of pulleys and frictionless planes?
...
...Stereotype threat is a universal offender: It can sabotage white men on the basketball court or men more broadly on a test of social sensitivity. Whenever people are made to worry that they might confirm a negative assumption—for instance, that girls can't do math or that white men can't jump—they may be less likely to do their best. Frustratingly, the stereotypes they want so badly to avoid instead may instead become self-fulfilling....
...

Of course, stereotype threat isn't the only reason that women remain underrepresented in math and science. Previously, some of the co-authors of the new study found that differences in background explained 60 percent of the disparity between their male and female students' physics scores, with the men more likely to have taken physics in high school. After giving the affirming writing exercises, the researchers did another analysis that controlled for differences in prior math scores, which correlated with who'd done more or less past math and physics coursework. This time, they found no statistically significant gender disparities in the scores for the standardized physics test or other physics exams.'

Grandmother charged with murder after girl thrown

Matt · 30 November 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 50-year-old woman accused of throwing her granddaughter to her death off a parking garage walkway has been charged with murder.

Carmela Dela Rosa allegedly threw two-and-a-half-year-old Angelyn Ogdoc off a sixth floor outdoor walkway at Tysons Corner Center around 7:15 p.m. Monday, Fairfax County Police spokesperson Tawny Wright tells WTOP.

Dela Rosa was arraigned Tuesday morning at Fairfax County Circuit Court. She is due back there on Jan. 4.
...
Dela Rosa, of Fairfax, was walking with other family members Monday when she picked up and threw the girl off the walkway in a matter of seconds, Wright says.'

"Abuse-Prone Women Around the World Need Help, Research Shows"

Matt · 2 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Hundreds of studies conducted in the United States have examined the nature and extent of domestic violence. For example, a U.S. Centers for Disease Control survey reported that among young adults, half of all partner aggression was mutual, and 71% of the instigators of nonreciprocal partner violence are female.

But what about partner aggression in other countries?

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) has just published a new Policy Briefing: What is the Profile of Domestic Violence Around the World? (http://www.saveservices.org/policymakers/what-is-the-profile-of-domestic-violence-around-the-world/)

The briefing summarizes the findings from 6 community surveys of intimate partner aggression conducted in 38 countries throughout the world.

In 28 countries, female-initiated violence was the more typical pattern: Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Canada, China, Germany, Great Britain, Guatemala, Hong Kong, Hungary, India, Israel, Jordan, Lithuania, Malta, Mexico, Namibia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Romania, Singapore, South Africa, Swaziland, Switzerland, Taiwan, Russia, United States, and Zambia. In 4 countries, male-initiated violence was more common than female-initiated aggression: Greece, Portugal, Tanzania, and Venezuela. And in 4 countries, the violence rate between the sexes was found to be equal: Iran, Japan, Scotland, and Sweden.

These surveys lend further support to the conclusions from the meta-analysis by Dr. John Archer that “Women were slightly more likely than men to use one or more acts of physical aggression.”

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE)
P.O. Box 1221
Rockville, MD 20849
http://www.saveservices.org/
info-at-saveservices.org
"From Hurting, to Healing, to Helping."

Opinion: Abuse a Human Problem

Matt · 2 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Column here. Excerpt:

'Your "Upcoming Trial for Alleged Wife Killer Sheds Light on Larger Problem" story was sexist, stereotyping men as violent oppressors and women as innocent victims, and made a false claim.

Your sentence, "That attitude keeps many immigrant women — and they are, overwhelmingly, women — from reporting abuse" misleads the reader that the vast majority of domestic violence victims are women.

Although men under-report domestic violence more than women in both crime reports and crime surveys, the two-sex survey data consistently shows women initiate domestic violence as often as men, that 38 percent of injured victims are men, that women use weapons more often than men, and that self-defense does not explain female violence. California State University summarizes almost 200 of these studies at http://www.csulb.edu/~mfiebert/assault.htm.'

Woman and family convicted of trafficking in and holding slaves

Matt · 3 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. And not just her, but her husband and children. But this is a rare case of actually holding the primary criminal, if she is female, primarily accountable. Excerpt:

'Nicole's journey started in 2002, when she was barely 12, in her small village in western Ghana. She and about 20 other girls were held in plain sight, but always under the watchful eyes of their captors.
...
The girls' families sent them to the United States after being assured they would receive a better education. But once they arrived, they were forced to work in hair braiding shops across the Newark area -- just a short drive from New York City, right in the shadow of the Statue of Liberty.
...
"My dad ... worked hard so I could go to school, so when my auntie came and told my family that I could go to a school in the U.S. ... they trusted her," she said. "Everyone was happy about it."

The girls worked in the salons right out in the open, in front of customers. They were on their feet all day, sometimes for more than 12 hours, weaving intricate and elaborate hair braids, seven days a week.

This went on for more than five years.
...
The traffickers convicted in this case were a mother, father and son who also came from West Africa, according to court documents and law enforcement officials.
...
More than two years later, Akouavi Afolabi; her husband, Lassissi Afolabi; and their son, Dereck Hounakey, were convicted of running the trafficking ring. Akouavi Afolabi was the ringleader, while her husband and son were accomplices, according to court documents.'

Australia: Jury convicts woman in rape case

Minuteman · 3 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A woman has been found guilty of raping another woman in a toilet cubicle at an inner Brisbane hotel.

Anne-Marie O'Loughlin, 25, had pleaded not guilty in the Brisbane District Court to two counts of rape, deprivation of liberty and sexual assault.

A jury on Friday afternoon found O'Loughlin guilty of two rape charges and deprivation of liberty.

She was found not guilty of the sexual assault charge.'

Australia: Student of All-Boys School Wins Coveted Writing Award

Minuteman · 4 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Blackfriars Priory School student, James Lawler, is the winner of “The Bic Young Australian Writer of the Year Award” for 2010. An initiative of not-for-profit community organisation, Children’s Charity Network, The Australian Children’s Literary Board aims to promote and recognise literary excellence via this national competition open to young writers from Years 3 to 12.

With approximately 20,000 entries, the school community is extremely proud of this accomplishment. James’ story “As I Stumble on Trembling Legs” tells the tale of a day working in the frenetic pace of a fast food restaurant. Tinged with humour, James builds dramatic tension in this story based on his own experiences in the industry.'

A Voice for Men: Some Words on Abortion and the MRM

Matt · 5 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'First there is the problem of political affiliation. As already stated in the rough draft of the policy I wrote, the AVfM position on mainstream politics is clear. They won't be part of the equation here except to point out that all popular political groups are misandric and antithetical to the cause.

Abortion is highly polemicist, with the mainstay of its opponents squarely on the neoconservative religions right. Socons, as we call them. It's a group with more nuts than a pecan orchard, and few of them would love nothing more than to have all men chained into a state sanctioned marriage (between one man and one woman, of course), which is to say they would ultimately make slaves of all of us.

Sometimes the enemy of my enemy is just another enemy.

My personal opinion is that the MRM should not officially embrace causes that will attract mainstream political ideologues. My personal decision is that AVfM won't, for sure. It will be more in keeping with policy here to run them off with a stick.
...
Abortion is a universally polarizing and defining issue, one that can be used to dismiss, anyone, at any time, as a religious zealot bent on the control of women. That comes the territory when your main cause happens to be anti abortion, but it is not like the MRM needs any more of that.'

IA Action Alert: We're Making a Difference

Matt · 5 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From an Intact America email:

We're making a difference! Well over a year ago, the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) said it would come out with a recommendation in favor of routine infant circumcision. Soon after, the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) formed its Task Force on Circumcision, with the same plans for a recommendation.

But neither has recommended anything... which means they're listening to us.

Thousands of intactivists throughout the country have signed our petition and sent letters demanding that our baby boys be kept intact—and it's working. We HAVE to keep up the pressure and tell the AAP what the majority of American parents already know: circumcision is an outdated, harmful, and unnecessary procedure that has NO health benefits. And it needs to stop. Now.

Tell the AAP to stop cutting our babies!

"Maybe it's time to let women rule world"

Stinger503 · 5 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

"Statistics this holiday season are appalling. Studies show that men are 11 times more likely to commit murder. They cause 98 per cent of sexual assaults, 93 per cent of armed robberies and one in three women worldwide is either physically or sexually abused by men.

Consider the treacherous Ponzi affairs in recent years. It's the dastardly deeds of Bernard Madoff, Earl Jones and others who have wiped out the life savings of thousands of honest people. They are all men. So is there any way to change men's behaviour and make them more civilized?
...

Judged bashes Probation Department for gender bias in favor of leniency for girls

anthony · 5 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Queens judge is blasting the city's Probation Department for going easier on teenage girls than boys - even when they commit the same crimes.

Family Court Judge John Hunt accused probation of gender bias for trying to spare all but the most violent girls from prison time and the scarlet letter of the juvenile delinquent.

Hunt analyzed the cases of eight teenagers who had come before him - four boys and four girls - and found that probation routinely recommended tougher treatment for boys.'

Court to Weigh Legal Aid in Contempt Cases

Matt · 7 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court agreed on Monday to decide whether poor people who face incarceration for civil contempt are entitled to court-appointed lawyers.

In a series of decisions starting with Gideon v. Wainwright in 1963, the Supreme Court has held that poor people facing the loss of liberty for crimes must be provided with lawyers. The question in the new case, Turner v. Price, No. 10-10, is whether that right also applies where incarceration is meant to be coercive rather than punitive.

The South Carolina Supreme Court ruled in March that Michael D. Turner, who was held in civil contempt and sentenced to a year in prison for failing to pay child support, had no constitutional right to a lawyer. The point of the sentence was to make Mr. Turner pay rather than to punish him, the court said.'

The Wikileaks sex files: How two one-night stands sparked a worldwide hunt for Julian Assange

Matt · 8 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Making no statement at all about Assange's Wikileaks-related activities, this story tells more about how one man's misfortune at gasp having sex with two different women within 48 hours can lead to an Interpol warrant. Pay close attention to the details. Excerpt:

'The Stockholm police want to question him regarding the possible rape of a woman and separate allegations from another Swedish admirer, with whom he was having a concurrent fling. But there remains a huge question mark over the evidence. Many people believe that the 39-year-old Australian-born whistleblower is the victim of a U.S. government dirty tricks campaign.

...

An attractive blonde, Sarah was already a well-known ‘radical feminist’. In her 30s, she had travelled the world following various fashionable causes.

While a research assistant at a local university she had not only been the protegee of a militant feminist academic, but held the post of ‘campus sexual equity officer’. Fighting male discrimination in all forms, including sexual harassment, was her forte.

...

Indeed, it has been suggested that the two women had discussed approaching a tabloid newspaper to maximise Assange’s discomfort. By now, the authorities realised they had a high-profile case on their hands and legal papers were rushed to the weekend home of the chief prosecutor, who dismissed the rape charge.

She felt that what had occurred were no more than minor offences.

But the case was now starting to spin out of control.

Sarah next spoke to a newspaper, saying: ‘In both cases, the sex had been consensual from the start but had eventually turned into abuse.’

...

The two women then instructed Claes Borgstrom, a so-called ‘gender lawyer’ who is a leading supporter of a campaign to extend the legal definition of rape to help bring more rapists to justice.

As a result, in September the case was reopened by the authorities, and last month Interpol said Assange was wanted for ‘sex crimes’.

...

Earlier this year, Sarah is reported to have posted a telling entry on her website, which she has since removed. But a copy has been retrieved and widely circulated on the internet.

Entitled ‘7 Steps to Legal Revenge’, it explains how women can use courts to get their own back on unfaithful lovers.

Step 7 says: ‘Go to it and keep your goal in sight. Make sure your victim suffers just as you did.’ (The highlighting of text is Sarah’s own.)'

F&F: MA Knocks Down Interest on Overdue Child Support by 50%

Matt · 8 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'The Massachusetts Department of Revenue has decided to knock down the interest on overdue child support by 50%. This is a move for which Fathers and Families has long advocated and agitated, both publicly and by Board Chairman Ned Holstein, MD, MS during his service on the Massachusetts Child Support Task Force. While interest rates still remain too high, we commend the DOR for this action.

Fathers and Families has long fought to reform Massachusetts child support, and was successful in lowering noncustodial parents' child support by an estimated $200 million a year from 2001 to 2007. Holstein and numerous Fathers and Families members testified earlier this year at the DOR hearing considering the issue.'

CNN: 'For women, a seat at the table'

anthony · 8 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The world is at "an unprecedented moment when the power dynamics between men and women are shifting," Rosin said. This year, women became the majority of the American work force and they're beginning to dominate professions such as medicine, the law and accounting, according to Rosin.

The image of American manhood, the Marlboro man, has been replaced by the Old Spice guy, whom Rosen called a parody of manhood. She said 75 percent of couples in American fertility clinics are requesting to have girls rather than boys -- and some Asian cultures are showing a greater openness to preferring female children.

As America continues to shift from a manufacturing to a service and information economy, Rosin noted, women are better positioned to thrive, since jobs require skills other than physical strength.

Visiting a college in Kansas, Rosin spoke to a female student, who summed up her view of changing gender dynamics this way: "Men are the new ball and chain."'

Lawyer: Assange Faces 'Tough Climate' in Feminist-Friendly Sweden

anthony · 8 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(Dec. 8) -- Julian Assange, facing extradition to Sweden on sex crime allegations, may be in more trouble than he realizes in a country where feminism is a powerful force and courts often favor the woman in rape cases, one of the country's top defense lawyers said today.

...

Borgstrom, who represents Assange's two accusers, insisted in a news conference today that the allegations against the WikiLeaks founder are legitimate and not set up by the CIA or the U.S. government. Borgstrom's website was hacked by WikiLeaks supporters and unavailable for most of the day.

...

One of Assange's two accusers is also known for her strong feminist views, having once written a treatise on how to take revenge on men. Both she and Borgstrom have been active in the Social Democratic Party.

"Some of the laws regarding rape are rather extreme, and the way they are applied in court is sometimes unbelievable," Samuelson told AOL News. "To be accused of a sex crime in Sweden is considered very serious. Swedish courts tend to believe what the woman says."'

Yippee, we're all abusers now!

Matt · 9 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'Domestic violence has been plummeting in recent years. In 1976, the toll of men and women killed by their partners registered 2,944 deaths. Now it's half that number.

But what comes as good news to American families turns out to be a mixed blessing for the domestic violence industry. After all, the Abuse Mavens don't want to see their generous paychecks trimmed!

So a few years ago someone ginned up this grand scheme: Let's exponentially broaden the definition of domestic violence.

And sure enough, the 2005 reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act featured this open-ended definition: "The term 'domestic violence' includes felony or misdemeanor crimes of violence." The law's artful use of the word "includes" sent a clarion signal to lawmakers throughout the country — an expansive range of conduct could now be considered to constitute abuse.'

UK: It’s Christmas, so watch out for rapists

anthony · 9 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Posters warning of the alleged cab rape threat have also been plastered around the streets, pubs and clubs of London. Online ads have been created and leaflets are being distributed to members of the public in ‘hotspot areas’. In the coming weeks, everywhere you turn in London, there will be a reminder that the office Christmas party or a night on the town with your mates could end in a nightmarish sex attack.

Since its launch in 2003, the Safer Travel At Night initiative has targeted diverse groups of women who might be at risk of having too much fun - from professional women going out for Christmas dos to newly arrived students in London. The campaign deploys the politics of fear in the most impertinent way, exploiting women’s fear of sexual assault. The end result will likely be that women feel more unsafe, nervous and suspicious when they go out.'

Ex-Arizona beauty queen gets prison time for conspiracy to commit kidnapping and aggravated assault

anthony · 10 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TUCSON - A former beauty queen and University of Arizona law school student accused of orchestrating the kidnapping and torturing of her ex-boyfriend is going to prison.

Pima County prosecutors say 28-year-old Kumari Fulbright was sentenced Thursday to two years in prison and six years' probation.

She pleaded guilty last December to conspiracy to commit kidnapping and aggravated assault as part of a plea agreement that stipulated the prison sentence. The Arizona Daily Star says it was up to a judge to decide how long Fulbright should be on probation following her release.'

What You Should Do If your Wife or Girlfriend Threatens to Call the Police and Make False Allegations

anthony · 10 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Ultimate Relationship Deal-Breaker for Men: False Allegations and Threatening to Call the Police discussed why false allegations of abuse and threats to call the police by your wife or girlfriend are abusive, why some high-conflict and personality disordered women engage in these behaviors and why it should be a clear sign that you need to protect yourself from further abuse and most likely end your relationship.

If your partner has threatened to call the police as an intimidation/control tactic, don't kid yourself. You're in an abusive relationship and, as the image to the right states, false allegations of abuse ARE abuse. The following list includes some basic precautions you may want to consider if you're the target of these kinds of threats and behaviors.'

Men and Violence: Blaming the Blameless

Anonymous · 10 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The scholars at the Society for the Psychological Study of Men and Masculinity (SPSMM), a division of the American Psychological Association, have for some time been asserting a simple philosophy about violence and all other manner of social woes. It comes in two parts.

Men are the problem. Men are the solution.

Most recently, they posted an article tellingly titled, “Violence is a Men’s Issue,” to goodmenproject.com. It is another in a continuation of efforts on their part to promote the idea that “toxic definitions of masculinity,” are the root culprit of much of our cultural violence, and that we must band together as men and confront each other till the problem is ameliorated.

All the article does, in reality, is provide a prime example of an egregiously thoughtless worldview, driven not by concern about violence, but by a mandate to promote a blind and sexist political ideology.'

CNN trumpets: "8 dumb mistakes men make with women"

anthony · 10 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'5. Mr. Tight Wad

Being cheap is so not sexy. Taking her out on a first date? Try this: pay. Who cares if it's politically correct and if she reaches for the bill. It doesn't have anything to do with money. It has everything to do with generosity. Chicks like it when you pay for stuff. Go figure.

...

8. Our toilet, our rules

If you come over to our house, spend the night, and leave the toilet seat up, we will get up in the middle of the night, sit on the toilet, and fall into the cold, wet water. After that moment, we will always associate you with that moment of falling in the toilet.

This is not the message you want to send. Put down the toilet seat. It's better than sending roses.'

Canada: Social Services Ministry 'out of control', ex-official claims

Matt · 10 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former assistant deputy minister in Saskatchewan's ministry of Social Services is lashing out against his former employer, claiming the department is dysfunctional and children are routinely placed in risky environments.

"I can tell you, from a person who had access to every document [and attended] every meeting .... that it is a ministry out of control," Tim Korol told CBC News Thursday.

Korol was a top official in the ministry for just under 12 months before he left in June of 2009. He was originally hired, he said, to provide advice on how to improve the province's child welfare system, especially family interventions and placing children in foster homes.'

New concerns for missing child last spotted in Toronto

Matt · 10 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The father of a missing 6-year-old girl last seen in Toronto is asking the public for help after new concerns about the child's safety were brought to police.

Police say a Toronto healthcare professional who treated Pearl Rose Gavaghan da Massa — known in Toronto as Belle Flaherty — said the child showed "signs of trauma, social isolation and continued upheaval."

The news confirmed the desperate father's fears about the wellbeing of his child, who he hasn't seen in over two years.

An international arrest warrant remains in effect for Helen Gavaghan, the girl's mother.'

UK: Reading woman convicted of false rape allegations

anthony · 11 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Reading woman has been convicted of making false rape claims.

Emma Blunden, 21, told police she had been raped in a Newbury hostel in 2008, and, in February 2010, alleged an attack by three men at a Reading house.

A total of four men were arrested following her allegations.

Det Con Clare Larkworthy said: "False reports of rape distract officers from dealing with victims of genuine crimes."'

UK: 16 year old jailed after false rape claims

anthony · 11 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Merthyr Crown Court heard how the 16 year old girl had consensual sex with a 20 year old man after a night out in a nightclub, but told police that she had been abducted and raped by three men.

All three men were arrested as a result of the girl's claims.

In court the girl admitted lying and perverting the course of justice and Judge Mr Recorder Jeremy Jenkins QC sent the teenager to a young offender's institution for six months.

The judge also ordered that the girl was not to be named and as part of her rehabilitation her anonymity should stay intact, although all three men were named in court.'

UK: Female teacher jailed for 'sexual affair' with 15 year-old pupil

anthony · 11 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A teacher has been jailed for 20 months after she had an affair with her 15-year-old pupil.

Yeoman engaged in a 14-month affair with the pupil after initially contacting her through an internet chat website.

The pair exchanged text messages and eventually embarked on a sexual relationship when the girl was 15.

Louise Yeoman, 29, admitted carrying out 10 offences against the teenage pupil while working at a school in Wakefield, England in 2009 and 2010.

The English teacher admitted three charges of sexual activity with a child involving touching the girl, including one using a sex toy and two charges of inciting the teenager to engage in sexual activity with her.'

Forbes: On Sexual Harassment: Hey Ladies, Man Up!

anthony · 11 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But while workplace sexual harassment is very real, Browne says there is also a predilection for women to equate hostility as harassment. Roughly 12,000 sexual harassment charges filed each year in the U.S., according to the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

Browne's work on sexual harassment is controversial, and the basis of his argument is this: Women seek to be treated equally to their male counterparts at work. In fact, the federal law Title XII, which is invoked in sexual harassment cases, interprets harassment as a form of sexual discrimination—of treating women differently than men. And while some women have had to endure foul, crude or sexually raw working conditions in the form of language, intimidation or degradation, Browne argues that men have long subjected each other to the very same abuses at work.

He continues: This behavior is a part of the male tool kit for competitive situations–a means of weeding out the strong from the weak that dates back to the era of hunter-gatherers.

The upshot is that if women want to be treated as true equals, then they better get used to it.'

Field hockey teams face gender membership issue

anthony · 11 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Both Seminary and Mifflinburg maintain they never recruited boys to play, but that they did not want to deny an opportunity to boys who were clearly interested in the sport.
...
“We cannot prohibit boys from playing on girls’ teams, or girls from playing on boys’ teams,” said assistant executive director Melissa Mertz. “The local schools set the policies, and the PIAA can’t overrule that. These are things we wouldn’t choose to get involved in.”

But the issue is a polarizing one, and in the wake of Seminary’s state championship run, it’s become a hot button topic in the field hockey community.

Everyone generally agrees that having a boy on a girls’ team is a competitive advantage, even if the boy isn’t as skilled as Seminary’s Tietze or Mifflinberg’s Catherman.
...
The inherent physical advantage has led coaches such as Penn Manor’s Matt Soto to establish a rule against letting boys play on his girls’ field hockey team.'

Relatedly: Mythbuster: Legally speaking, boys can be kept off girls' field hockey teams

Sexes hold different interests

anthony · 11 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While there were several good points made in Friday's article, "PSU addresses disparities," one of the main focuses of the article — the number of tenured men and women — should not be the basis for determining equality. There are interest disparities between genders that lead to a numerical equality in some positions to be unreasonable. This seems to be overlooked in most situations. If there were 100 positions available in a field, and 150 men and 100 identically qualified women applied for those positions, the equal outcome would be that 60 men and 40 women get positions.

However, an outside eye could see that the system was biased towards men. The truth is that men and women cannot have identical lives. Men do not have to leave work to give birth, and generally women are the primary caregivers for children. That leads to a higher number of men in the workforce. If every profession expected an equal number of male and female employees, then any male would be disadvantaged compared to an equally qualified female. Similar disparities can be seen in athletics. Title IX requires equal funding for men and women in sports.

While that would look to create equality, consider this: Dave and Diane come from equal backgrounds. Both take up rowing in high school and have similar success. Both hope to row in college. However, there is no men's NCAA rowing championship. That exists only for women, created in 1997 to help schools reach Title IX requirements. Is this equality? Ask Dave.'

"What Would You Do?": Woman Drops Powder in Date's Drink

anthony · 11 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption: "Woman Drops Powder in Date's Drink. 'If you saw a woman apparently drug her date's drink, would you warn him?'"

Amanda Knox appeal: 'This is all an enormous mistake'

Matt · 11 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'Knox, 23, broke down several times as she addressed the court for almost twenty minutes in an emotional and quivering voice, as she stressed she had nothing to do with Meredith's brutal murder.

The American also dismissed the prosecution's view of her saying she was not the "dangerous, diabolical, jealous and uncaring" person she had been described as at her original trial, telling the court: "That girl is not me."

Knox also expressed her sympathy towards Meredith's heartbroken family and friends and said: "I am very sorry that Meredith is no longer here.'

Save the Date: Super Bowl Hoax: The Continuing Distortions about Intimate Partner Abuse

Matt · 11 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is pleased to announce an upcoming event to commemorate the Super Bowl Hoax. “Super Bowl Hoax: The Continuing Distortions about Intimate Partner Abuse” will feature a series of presentations designed to highlight how domestic violence half-truths and misrepresentations continue to the present day. The event will be held on Thursday, January 27, 2011 in Washington DC.

These distortions of fact have become deeply imbedded in American culture, and cause harm to the many offenders and victims of domestic violence who are being denied the services and protections they need.

The event will be held at the Heritage Foundation, 214 Massachusetts Ave NE, Washington DC 20002. The event will be held 12:00 – 1:30pm. Attendance is free, and advance registration is required. Email your name, organization, and telephone number to Teri Stoddard, Event Manager: tstoddard-at-saveservices.org.

The Super Bowl Hoax, which occurred in 1993, falsely claimed that more women are victims of domestic violence on Super Bowl Sunday than any other day of the year. The public outcry arising from the hoax spurred passage of the Violence Against Women Act the following year. A complete account of the Super Bowl Hoax can be seen here.

A Voice for Men: A Response to Christopher Kilmartin

Matt · 11 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog post here. Excerpt:

'As you can also see here in the comments to my original article, Kilmartin, a member of the Society for the Psychological Study of Men and Masculinity (SPSMM), aka Division 51 of the American Psychological Association, an organization of gender activists, posted a comment expressing his frustrations at what he called my "distortions," of the subject. He also posted a list of studies and invited me to scrutinize them, saying "After you read them, I will look forward to your reasoned criticism of the scholarship."

I think this presents a unique opportunity. First, it is good to see the people of SPSMM reach outside their insulated academic enclave and take their ideology into forums where disparate views are allowed and encouraged. I also note that while I do not agree with some of the material presented in The Good Men Project Magazine, I am encouraged that its management is clearly not interested in an editorial orthodoxy and is willing to showcase a badly needed discussion directly in view of the public. Their support for this could provide a unique opportunity for increased public awareness of some very serious issues.

So rather than just respond to the studies posted by Kilmartin to this site at this time, I am opting to wait until he, or anyone else from SPSMM has had the opportunity to rebut the current article posted there from me.'

UK: Young women move ahead of men in the salary stakes as pay gap shrinks

anthony · 12 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young women have reversed the gender gap and raced ahead of men in the pay stakes.

Landmark official figures showed yesterday that a woman in her 20s working full-time will typically earn 2.1 per cent more than a man in her age group.

...

The turning of the tables comes after a decade in which younger women – increasingly better educated and better motivated than men – have been remorselessly narrowing the historic pay differentials between the sexes.

The achievement appears to be a death blow to the long-standing argument of equality campaigners that women are paid worse than men because they suffer from discrimination and disadvantage on the part of employers.

...

A spokesman for the Government Equalities Office said: ‘The narrowing of the gender pay gap is very welcome but it still remains too large, which is why the Government is committed to promoting equal pay and taking measures to end discrimination in the workplace.’

The insistence that the Government must act to close a pay gap that, for many women, no longer exists brought a scathing response from some critics.

Economist Ruth Lea, of the Arbuthnot Banking Group, said: ‘There is no pay gap for women who do not have children, and for women under the age of 40 the gap is now trivial.

‘We always knew that single women were paid just as well as men. The idea that women are discriminated against was always a fantasy. I think the equality lobby will be running out of things to say.’'

New Yahoo Group: Male Positive Media

mens_issues · 13 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Male Positive Media is a place for those who are interested in viewing or ordering various media (TV, video, music, movies, books, articles and art) that portray men and boys in a positive light. Members are encouraged to submit their own examples of male-positive media for others to enjoy.

With the excess of negative portrayals of males in the mainstream media (MSM), this group is a much-needed refuge for those who would like a more upbeat representation of males.

Please keep submissions on topic and refrain from posting media that represents males in a negative stereotypical manner as those coming here will want to avoid such portrayals.

Yahoo News asks: "Does Obamacare discriminate against men?"

fondueguy · 13 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi famously told the American people that Congress needed “to pass the [Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act] so that you can find out what is in it,” and with each passing day Americans are learning more and more about what their government has planned for them.
...
Of the many new boards, agencies, and programs the law creates, those implemented for the benefit of women are among the most common, a fact some say renders the law inherently unequal.

There are at least 7 new agencies and departments devoted solely to women while there is not one office for men or male specific ailments.
...

Men’s health advocates long have pushed for an Office of Men’s Health to act as a companion to the Office on Women’s Health, established in 1991. Instead of rectifying that disparity, the new healthcare law intensified it.
...
Scott Williams, vice-president of the Men’s Health Network, told TheDC that women have done a fantastic job raising awareness for their health concerns and have left men in the proverbial dust. Williams believes that much of the blame for the lack of focus on men lays squarely at the feet of, well, men.'

I wonder how much this inequality will be brought to bare by those who have already expressed opposition to Obamacare.

WikiLeaks founder victim of feminism

anthony · 13 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What is more fascinating are the rape charges emanating from Sweden against WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange. While I find Assange both conceited and flippant, from what we know of the sexual assault allegations, he would appear to be a victim of the gender war against men.
...
Two women with whom Assange had sex during a recent speaking-tour stop in Stockholm seem to have had second thoughts about sleeping with him after they learned they had shared him within a matter of days of one another.
...
The paper learned that "Sarah," Assange's first conquest in Sweden, was an official with a centre-left political party, a known radical feminist, a disciple of one of Sweden's most vehemently feminist academics, a former campus sexual equity officer and a webmistress who, until recently, maintained a website devoted to "7 Steps to Legal Revenge," about how women can use the courts to get back at unfaithful lovers.
...
The two women insist jealousy is not their motivation for accusing Assange. Yet both are represented by the same lawyer, who is a leading crusader for broadening Sweden's legal definition of rape so that more men can be successfully convicted.'

Editorial: Is feminism about justice and humanity, or just about women?

anthony · 13 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Unless feminism is not about justice and humanity. If feminism is about women, however, then the condition of men is irrelevant.

If far more men have suffered economic hardship in the recession, there should be rejoicing that they are returning to work. It ought not be an occasion to suggest that sexism is coming into play so the goal of having women as secondary citizens is affected. Men are not trying to “snag” a woman's job. Men are simply trying to find work, any work, including work that had been done formerly by another man.

Today, “A Doll's House” would need rewriting. Nora might put it this way: “Before everything else, I'm a woman. I want women to gain power notwithstanding the real conditions of the world. It is only women who concern me. Men may be human, too. I'm not sure.”'

Duke false accuser in court for domestic abuse charges

anthony · 13 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DURHAM -- When Cpl. John Tyler got to the small Lincoln Street apartment just after midnight in February he was responding to a 911 call placed by a scared 9-year-old girl, he testified Thursday.

"Once the telecommunicator heard the screaming, the complainant appeared to be scared and hung up," Tyler said describing the information he had as he entered Crystal Mangum's apartment.

Tyler was the second witness to testify Thursday in Mangum's trial, in which she faces multiple felony charges related to the Feb. 17 domestic violence call. The charges include arson, injury to personal property, resisting arrest and contributing to the delinquency, abuse or neglect of her children.

Attorneys spent five days weeding through 40 potential jurors to pick 12 and two alternates who could try Mangum without prejudging her credibility because of her false rape accusations in the Duke lacrosse case.

"That residence had a fire started in it while [Mangum's three children] were in it - by her," prosecutor Mark McCullough said, pointing at Mangum. "This case is not complicated."'

ABC: 'John Boehner Cries. Again. A Lot'

anthony · 13 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The article examines whether women are held to a different standard when showing emotion. What do you guys think? Excerpt:

'"This is not exactly the first impression you want to make to the American people," said Republican strategist Ed Rollins. "We've seen his sensitive side enough already. But a sensitive side isn't what the country wants to see in a strong leader. He's got to show strength and leadership and a willingness to stand up to the president. You never saw Pelosi crying"
...
"For men, it is a sign of compassion. For women, it's a sign of weakness. It's the double standard that worries me," said Democratic strategist and ABC News consultant Donna Brazile.

Hillary Clinton cried briefly at a campaign stop in New Hampshire in 2008. She was criticized, by some, for manufacturing the tears as a way to appeal to women voters.'

SAVE continues intensive lobbying efforts in DC

Matt · 14 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Today SAVE lobbyists had a total of 8 meetings in the House and Senate to discuss needed changes to the upcoming VAWA reauthorization bill. Tomorrow, we have 15 more meetings scheduled. SAVE is now recognized as a major “player” in the VAWA reauthorization debate.

We are also distributing this flyer on I-VAWA. We are 99.9% sure that we have stopped I-VAWA, but we’re not going to give any opportunity for the bill to slip through the 111th session of Congress at the last minue. And beginning Jan. 3, it will be a whole new ball game.

Make plans now to attend our Jan. 27-28 lobbying event in Washington DC, and to attend the Super Bowl Hoax commemoration event on Jan. 27 at the Heritage Foundation. For more information, contact tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

The Masculinity Conspiracy: Chapter 4 now online

Anonymous · 14 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

MEDIA RELEASE

What if the biggest conspiracy in human history had gone completely unnoticed?

What if that conspiracy was responsible for some of the biggest problems the world faces today?

Wouldn't you want to know? Wouldn't you want to do something about it?

Well guess what: You can.

The Masculinity Conspiracy is a free online book about masculinity. It argues that nearly every assumption about masculinity in contemporary society is wrong. The result is nothing short of exposing a worldwide conspiracy that has been preventing humanity from reaching its fullest potential.

Chapter 4 (Relationships) of The Masculinity Conspiracy is now online.

This chapter examines how the theme of relationships is mobilized in the conspiracy via two books: Double Your Dating: What Every Man Should Know About How to Be Successful with Women by David DeAngelo and Men Are From Mars, Women Are From Venus: A Practical Guide for Improving Communication and Getting What You Want in Relationships by John Gray.

It shows how these books promote masculine relationships of fixed characteristics.

It then offers some different ways of thinking about masculine relationships in order to counter the conspiracy.

http://masculinityconspiracy.com

Jessica Valenti Calls for End to Presumption of Innocence, Due Process

Matt · 14 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From A Voice for Men:

"Read that again. It's not hyperbole. Under the plan proposed by some Swedish legal experts, once a woman cries "rape," the accused male would be sent away to prison for many years unless he could prove consent." Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Jessica Valenti's take on the Assange sex case in last Sunday's Washington Post was more of the same old same old, a mish-mash of the usual feminist victim blather about America's supposed tolerance of rape.

But then, just as we are nodding off, Valenti tosses a bucket of ice water on us by -- it seemed to me (you read it and decide for yourself) -- at least tacitly endorsing what would be the most unjust, inhumane, morally grotesque law in our entire jurisprudence. Read carefully what she says:

"...we should look to [Swedish rape laws] as a potential model for our own legislation.

"In fact, some activists and legal experts in Sweden want to change the law there so that the burden of proof is on the accused; the alleged rapist would have to show that he got consent, instead of the victim having to prove that she didn't give it."

Valenti, who, by the way, is not above resorting to the cheap feminist trick of calling a rape accuser "the victim" (which means, of course, that the accused must be a "rapist"), seems to at least tacitly endorse turning the most fundamental act of intimacy, an act that has been performed countless times every minute of every day of every year since the beginning of time the world over, into a presumed felony.
...
The misandry underlying this proposal is so vile, so breathtaking, that it ought to frighten anyone who possesses a Y-chromosome, and anyone who loves someone who possesses a Y-chromosome. All of us need to be alert to the fact that this proposal lurks out there, and that there are committed zealots in this country who would love for it to be the law of our land.'

F&F: Ohio Bill to Increase Child Support Fails to Pass

Matt · 14 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'SB 292, the bill to increase Ohio child support obligations by an average of 27%, has failed to pass. Thanks to all of you who participated in our Campaign to Defeat Ohio Bill to Raise Child Support Levels in Worst Economy Since the Great Depression.

In working against SB 292, Fathers and Families of Ohio conferred with legislators and interested stakeholders, garnered extensive media coverage, and organized opposition.'

Sweden appeals UK granting bail for Julian Assange

Matt · 14 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LONDON – A British judge ordered Julian Assange released on 200,000 pounds ($316,000) bail Tuesday, but the WikiLeaks founder will remain in custody for at least two more days after Swedish prosecutors challenged that decision.

Assange has spent a week in a U.K. jail following his surrender to British police over a Swedish sex-crimes warrant. He denies any wrongdoing but has refused to voluntarily surrender to Sweden's request to extradite him for questioning — arguing that he could be questioned from Britain.

In a day of courtroom drama, the 39-year-old Australian was first told by a judge that he would be freed, then less than two hours later was informed he had at least another 48 hours in custody.

Britain's High Court will hear the Swedish appeal, but it wasn't clear exactly when.'

Australia: Athlete found guilty of infanticide

MichaelClaymore · 14 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'As court officers attended Lane in the dock, the judge temporarily adjourned the hearing but told the jurors they would return shortly as he wished speak to them.

The verdict came after the jury deliberated for a week after a four-month trial.

Earlier, the jury also found Lane guilty of three counts of making a false statement on oath in relation to documents dealing with her adopting out two other babies.
...
Tegan was the second of three babies she carried to term and delivered without those closest to her even suspecting she was pregnant.

She put her first and third babies up for adoption but a year ago Lane was charged with Tegan's murder.'

Police: WABC weather gal in 'rape' lie

anthony · 15 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WABC/Channel 7 weather babe Heidi Jones was arrested for perpetrating the ultimate snow job -- falsely claiming to cops that a man had tried to rape her while she was jogging in Central Park, sources said yesterday.

Jones, who anchors the station's weekend evening weather coverage and fills in on "Good Morning America," was charged Monday with filing a false report, a Class A misdemeanor. If convicted, she could face up to a year in jail or a $1,000 fine.

...

Jones spun a story that proved to be as unreliable as a five-day forecast, telling police last month that she was assaulted in September while pounding the pavement in the city's back yard, the sources said.'

Former Ohio State teaching assistant to be charged with attempted murder, kidnapping

Matt · 15 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Ohio State teaching assistant will be charged with attempted murder and kidnapping after she allegedly shot her ex-fiancé and then forced him into her car Tuesday morning, Dublin police said.

Thirty-year-old Melissa "Missie" Stredney of 3081 Wakefern Place in Columbus taught a lab section of chemistry 122 before OSU fired her in February 2009 after receiving reports of misconduct.

Dublin police received a 911 call at 7:53 a.m. Tuesday saying a woman with a gun was trying to force a man into her silver Chevrolet Cavalier in the back parking lot of NCO Financial Systems at 5626 Frantz Road.

Police spotted and pulled over the car a mile from the scene and took Stredney into custody.'

SAVE launches state DV Legislative Project

Matt · 17 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Much of the mischief of the DV industry takes place at the state level.

So last night SAVE launched our state Domestic Violence Legislative Project, with 18 persons from 11 states on the call, with considerable enthusiasm and gusto! The DVLP is a growing network of advocates who are working to establish DV laws and policies that protect victims, safeguard families, and respect due process.

We have set up a webpage to highlight this important new initiative

Our next teleconference will be Wednesday, January 19. If you would like to join the state DV Legislative Project, contact Teri Stoddard at tstoddard-at-saveservices.org.

"Burqa bungle" in Australia points up MRA issues

Matt · 17 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. The MRA issues here? She plays the woman card twice (or has it played for her): first she says the officer touched her, which was shown by the film to not be true. Undoubtedly she would not have made that accusation had the officer been female. Secondly, after she is exposed as a liar, a man speaking on behalf of the local Muslim community asserts she ought not to be put in jail because she is the mother of seven children. No man could try making that claim and not get laughed off the stage or told he should have thought of that before committing the crime.

Assange released from jail on bail

Matt · 17 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A London court granted Julian Assange bail Thursday and he walked out of jail a free man. For now. Assange is still under house arrest and faces an extradition hearing in Janurary. Our correspondent explains what's next for Assange and any U.S. charges against him.

Julian Assange walked out of jail on Thursday, his first freedom in nine days.
...
So far, Assange is not facing charges related to WikiLeaks. A hearing on Sweden's extradition request will be held next month. For now, Assange is required to stay at a friend's 10-bedroom mansion, where he is free to use the internet.'

Canada: Judge lets loose on family law itself in opinion

Matt · 17 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Judge Quinn's 31-page decision boils over with the frustrations of a family-law judge who is called upon time and again to referee bouts between couples who were once in love. He even takes a shot at family law itself, saying that spousal support is "the roulette of family law – blindfolds, darts and Ouija boards being optional."

And he anticipates criticism of his tone: "The parties repeatedly have shown they are immune to reason. Consequently, in my decision, I have tried ridicule as a last resort."

In a novel twist, Judge Quinn granted the wife, Catherine, sole custody of the feuding couple's 13-year-old daughter. However, he ordered Larry to pay Catherine just a dollar a month in spousal support.

Judge Quinn expressed disgust with the way Catherine has induced her daughter to detest her father. "The harm is irreparable," he said. "Generally, it is unwise to place an immature 13-year-old in charge of her life. Here, however, Catherine and [her current partner] have engineered an alienation that is so complete as to leave the court with no feasible option."'

Child's face lashed with metal dog leash, court told

Matt · 17 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A woman who beat an eight-year-old girl with the metal end of a dog leash plans to become a midwife, the Adelaide District Court has heard.

Tara Jefferson, 20, has pleaded guilty to intentionally causing harm to a child.

The court heard she struck the girl in the face with the leash at least 10 times.

It was told Jefferson had a fight with the child's father and took her anger out on the child while she was caring for her.

The court heard the woman is now four months' pregnant and intends studying midwifery, but the criminal proceedings may affect her career prospects.

She will be sentenced next month.'

Feminists slam the "rape apologism" of Michael Moore and Keith Olbermann johndias · 17 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Looks like the online radical feminists are on the warpath (1, 2, 3, 4, 5) to a couple of well-known political lefties, Michael Moore and Keith Olbermann, for their defense of Wikileaks' Julian Assange (Assange has been bogusly accused of sex crimes by two female groupies in Sweden, one of whom is a known radical feminist). I'm actually with Moore and Olbermann on this one insofar as they have defended the reputation of Assange. But another part of me is snickering in glee at the microscope that the feminists are putting on their usually apologist male supporters on the political left. These two male lefties, dogmatic ideologues themselves, sowed an alliance with even more dogmatic feminist ideologues, and are now reaping what they sowed. And in typical deference by such males to their feminist masters, Olbermann has compliantly shut down his Twitter account.

As a men's rights activist and an opponent of feminist ideologues, I am feeling so validated right now.

Duke lacrosse accuser convicted of child abuse

Matt · 18 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DURHAM, N.C. -- A woman who authorities said falsely accused three Duke University lacrosse players of rape four years ago has been found guilty by a North Carolina jury of misdemeanor child abuse and damaging property.

A Durham County jury on Friday convicted 32-year-old Crystal Mangum of contributing to child abuse or neglect, injury to personal property, and resisting a public officer stemming from a February confrontation with her live-in boyfriend. Mangum was sentenced to time already served before she was released on bail earlier this year.

The jury deadlocked 9-3 on a felony arson charge, and Superior Court Judge Abraham Jones declared a mistrial.'

Legislative goals for 2011 announced by Fathers & Families

johndias · 20 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Full summary here. Considering that Fathers & Families had a 100% success record for the year of 2010 (with 5 out of 5 legislative goals accomplished), I eagerly anticipated their forthcoming announcement for their legislative priorities for 2011. Well, they just announced them, and it's an ambitious list. If you want to help them, you can either register as an activist and/or donate.

Here's a shortened overview of their 2011 legislative agenda:

1. Combating Parenting Time Interference [more]

2. Curbing Alimony Abuses [more]

3. Combating False Accusations of Domestic Violence and Child Abuse
- Requiring a Domestic Violence Restraining Order Advisement [more]
- Removing the Innocent from Child Abuse Registries [more]

4. Making Child Support Fair
- Interest on Arrearages [more]
- Helping Those Trapped by the System Get Their Lives Back

5. Battling Paternity Fraud
- Protecting Minors from Paternity Fraud [more]
- Helping Defrauded Fathers Get Justice

6. Protecting Those Who Serve [more]

7. Combating Parental Alienation

Breaking Bad: The Male as Designated Criminal

Matt · 21 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From A Voice for Men, here:

'In her 1989 book, Defining Rape, feminist author Linda Brookover Bourque argued for a shift in the burden of proof in rape cases to the defense, which would entail that the defense establish, with a preponderance of evidence, that it was most likely that a woman alleging rape against her gave clear assent to engage in sex. This argument is made on page 178 of her book.

This is not an argument in favor of men obtaining consent before having sex. No, she means to alter the principal of western jurisprudence in which the accused is innocent until proven guilty through evidentiary proceedings. Bourque proposes a new, improved system in which for accusations of rape, guilt is assumed by the court, and the accused must present overwhelming evidence of innocence.

Article 11 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights which was adopted in 1948 by the United Nations General Assembly by unanimity, describes the principle of presumption of innocence as follows:

Everyone charged with a penal offence has the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty according to law in a public trial at which he/or she has had all the guarantees necessary for his defense.
...
One question which springs to mind is, will feminist ideologues shaping the retooling of western law flinch at the subjugation of their brothers, fathers, and sons? I suspect the answer is no. But do feminist scholars and law makers recognize the consequences of rendering a social class who have traditionally been problem solvers, inventors, philosophers and shapers of their surroundings into legislated criminals by identity?

To that I suspect the answer is also: no.'

Glenn Beck: Julian Assange in the Crosshairs

anthony · 21 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Transcript here. Excerpt:

'But let me just call woman number one. She met Assange at a seminar hosted by the Swedish Brotherhood Movement.

She is well-known in radical circles, and in college, was protege of the militant feminist academic holding the post on-campus of campus sexual equity officer - whatever that is.

In the past, woman number one has also had a blog posting that has since been removed called "The Seven Steps to Legal Revenge." That explained how a woman can use courts to get their - to get back on unfaithful lovers. "Step Seven" says go to it and keep your victim in sight. Make sure your victim suffers just as you did.

OK. So, here she is. We know who she is. She is a radical, uber leftist. She is at this panel where he has been invited to speak. Now, remember, this is in August. He was invited to be the key speaker at the seminar on war and the role of the media. This is about the time when Assange was threatening to release more confidential documents.

Now, she claims that she was raped. Really? Because it doesn't show here. And here's why I say that - because the very next evening, she put together a party in honor of him at the apartment that was held after the seminar. Got it? The next day Assange speaks at the seminar.'

Gather News Pokes Fun at Abused Man

Anonymous · 21 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

A blog entry "Gather News Pokes Fun at Abused Man" is here and takes the reader through looking at a blogger's jocular approach to a news story of a woman setting fire to her boyfriend's crotch, and a few other examples from a different perspective. What if the target were a woman? Would it still be funny? The conclusion is that, of course, whatever is abuse when done to a woman or child, is also abuse when done to a man. Excerpt:

'The lighthearted mood of both the story and the comments is even worse... how many people find this as funny simply because the victim was a man? Would it be funny for a man to set his girlfriend's crotch on fire after an argument? Even though the post makes a few token comments lightly condemning the act (also with an attitude of humor) it sickens me to see this action laughed at. The same would not be occurring if a man had done this to a woman, a parent had done this to an argumentative, disobedient child, or if a human had done the same to a dog for making her angry. Why is it funny just because it happened to a man? What if it were your son, your brother, or one of your friends who was assaulted? Would it be as funny then?'

Armed woman interrupts TV newscast in US

Minuteman · 22 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A gun-wielding woman burst into a North Carolina television station Tuesday forcing the evening newscast off the air, though no one was injured, the station said.

After a brief standoff with a police SWAT team that surrounded the building of ABC Charlotte affiliate WSOC-TV, the woman was taken into custody. ABC News said she had pulled out a gun and put it to her head, though police later learned the gun was not loaded.

A CBS affiliate in Charlotte, WBTV, identified the woman as Wendy Naidas.'

Ed. note: Also covered here.

SAVE 2010 Report: An amazing year

Matt · 23 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Below is SAVE's annual report for 2010 - WOW! Is everyone ready for 2011? VAWA is up for reauthorization!

++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++++

A. WEBSITE/SOCIAL MEDIA:
Website Development:
Did extensive upgrades and enhancements to the SAVE website: http://www.saveservices.org/

Social Media:
Established Landing Pages, detailed content, and Facebook/Yahoo pages for
1. Victims/Survivors
2. DV Service Providers
3. Policymakers
4. Persons Falsely-Accused
Website traffic averages close to 100 persons per day. Falsely-accused Facebook page has 3,000-5,000 Post Views per day.

B. PUBLICITY:
Campaigns:
April: Turning the Tide
October: Domestic Violence Awareness Month
November: Protect Victims: Stop Mandatory Arrest

Radio Interviews:
Held 40 interviews around the country – estimated listenership: 2 million persons

Press Releases:
Issued 4 press releases

Established the SAVE Award for DV Prevention – awarded to Antelope Valley Domestic Violence Council

C. LEGISLATIVE:
Lobbying Events:
Held 9 lobbying events throughout the year with an estimated 600 face-to-face staff meetings held

Worked to prevent passage of the following harmful bills (final outcome to be known upon adjournment of Congress):
Security and Financial Empowerment (SAFE) Act
International Violence Against Women Act (I-VAWA)

Distributed over 7,000 flyers to staffers in the House and Senate

Special Reports:
Released one new report: Predominant Aggressor: Allowing Abusers to Go Unaccountable?

Updated 14 other Special Reports

Coalition Building:
Strengthened and broadened the VAWA Reform Coalition

Established the State Domestic Violence Legislative Project – now in 11 states

Developed the VAWA Reform Agenda for 2011

D. ADMINISTRATIVE:

Received 501c3 designation from the IRS

Staffing:
Hired paid staff to advance Social Media efforts and implement other SAVE projects
Conducted successful fund-raising activities

Boy, 13, Busted For Illegal Marker Possession

Matt · 23 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

More from the it's-illegal-to-be-a-boy dept, here. Excerpt:

'DECEMBER 22--A 13-year-old boy was arrested Friday for using a permanent marker while in class at his Oklahoma City middle school, a violation of an obscure city ordinance.

According to an Oklahoma City Police Department report, the boy was spotted “in possession of a permanent marker” by Roosevelt Middle School teacher DeLynn Woodside. The 50-year-old educator told cop Miguel Campos that the student was “writing on a piece of paper, which caused it to bleed over onto the desk.”
...
Campos reported that he allowed Woodside, a seventh grade math teacher, to “sign a citation” against the boy, who was then transported to the Community Intervention Center, a juvenile holding facility. A police sergeant subsequently “booked the marker into the property room.”

A police spokesman referred to the student’s bust as a “citizen’s arrest” effectuated by Woodside.'

Women leading men in new jobs

anthony · 23 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON -- Employers are looking for more highly educated workers, and the bulk of available jobs are in nursing and retail. One American demographic fits that bill.

Women will drive economic recovery in the U.S., according to a new Bank of America Merrill Lynch report. They tend to be better educated than men, and women tend to dominate the industries that are hiring the most workers.

Unemployment rates for last month show there are more out of work men, at 10.6 percent, than women, at 8.9 percent. However, the employment gender gap should disappear once the economy revs up, according to other economists.

"Men saw disproportionate job loss, so it makes sense they would have disproportionate gain," Heidi Shierholz of the Economic Policy Institute tells the Huffington Post.

Shierholz says men dominate jobs related to construction and manufacturing, which took a hard hit during the recession.'

False Claim Of Rape Might Put WABC Weather Girl In Jail

anthony · 23 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The public watches the weather forecast everyday to see if we need a coat or an umbrella and we tend to believe what the forecaster tell us. But WABC weather girl, Heidi Jones, told police that she was a victim of rape as she was jogging in Central Park in September. Jones reported the rape because the same Hispanic man reappeared in November and sexually assaulted her. The police think that this weather forecaster should not be believed.

When she reported the two attacks the police found discrepancies in her accounts. Eventually, the 37-year-old Good Morning America weather girl allegedly admitted that she made the stories up.
...
A false rape claim is very serious and anyone who falsely accuses someone of this deserves whatever the law feels they should get.'

Boys aren't learning to read -- and it's a global problem

anthony · 23 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Conventional wisdom holds that boys excel in math and girls in reading. Truth be told, boys excel in neither, according to a report released this month by the Center for Education Policy. The report, which analyzes test results from 40 states, reveals that boys lag well behind girls in literacy skills - while only tying them in math.

That gap is why many colleges are overflowing with women, while guys are becoming scarcer and scarcer on campus.

American boys, we tell ourselves, must be falling victim to anti-academic influences: hip hop, mind-numbing video games and too much time watching SportsCenter.

But the issue is far more complicated. Earlier this month, results of 65-country comparison called the Program for International Student Assessment revealed that girls tie boys in math while soaring ahead of them by an astounding 39 points on reading skills. SportsCenter, last time we checked, has a limited audience in Albania, the country with the largest gender gap in reading.

And that's not even the worst news. In 2000, the last time we had comparable international reading scores, boys were only 32 points behind. In only nine years, boys - around the world - have slipped another seven points further behind girls.'

Only circumcised men are allowed to attend South African harvest festival

anthony · 23 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Durban, Dec 22 (IANS) Believe it or not, men are allowed to take part in a South Africa harvest festival only if they are circumcised. This is an effort to prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS.

The annual 'first fruit ceremony' involves a bull that is beaten to death in a sacrificial ritual. This year some 10,000 males participated and all of them were circumcised. The men came from the KwaZulu-Natal region.

This year's event marks 20 years since the ceremony was revived by King Goodwill Zwelithini and one year since male medical circumcision was introduced in the province, government news agency BuaNews reported.

The king lays stress on medical circumcision as part of efforts to address the HIV/AIDS cases. Zwelithini again urged young men to live responsibly and continue the fight against HIV, poverty, drugs and alcoholism.'

European court bolsters fathers' rights

anthony · 23 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The European Court of Human Rights granted a Nigerian man access to his children on Tuesday, overturning a series of German court rulings and potentially strengthening unmarried fathers' rights.

The court, based in Strasbourg, France, was ruling on a case in which successive German courts had denied the man the right to see his twin daughters, who were born after the man had a relationship with a married German woman.

It found that the decisions by the courts had breached the man's rights. Germany must now pay the man €5,000 for damages and a further €4,000 in legal costs. The ruling also establishes a precedent that unmarried fathers in Germany have a right to see their children even after a relationship breaks down.

While the father had not established a relationship with the girls, he had nevertheless shown a "serious interest" in them, the court decided.'

Attorney submits parental rights case to U.S. Supreme Court

anthony · 23 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'UTICA — Suspended Utica attorney Leon Koziol filed a petition with the U.S. Supreme Court on Tuesday asking it to hear his case challenging New York's custody and support laws.

The case, if heard, will address the constitutional limits affecting domestic relations litigation, whether the state promotes "institutional discrimination on account of gender" in custody cases, and whether the state has retaliated against Koziol for his criticism of the custody system, a news release stated.

Koziol, an outspoken advocate for fathers' rights, had his law license suspended indefinitely earlier this year for failure to pay child support. He also recently filed a civil lawsuit against the New York State Unified Court System and more than 20 other defendants relating to his ongoing custody battle.

The Supreme Court is the highest court in the country and hears only a fraction of the cases submitted each year.'

Single fathers feeling trapped in one-sided system

anthony · 23 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Single fathers lose more than the stereotypical house, car and bank account.

They lose their families, their confidence, and in some cases, even their means of making a living. What's more, any success they have is garnished without prejudice.

The stigma of the deadbeat dad, the father that is never there for his kids, still remains as strong as ever, though a large part of what perpetuates it is a social justice system that assumes fathers as providers, breadwinners and supporters, without needing support themselves.

But what happens when, in order to meet those obligations, the father's standard of living suffers greatly? What happens when failing to meet those obligations results in not only punitive family law measures, but the degradation of the individual who is suffering to make ends meet?'

Footballers, nude photos and a teenage girl

GaryB · 23 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

See this story here on the Sydney Morning Herald, and further footage for anyone not following this story.

This is an interesting story, mostly for the way the worm has turned. A couple of days ago a story blew up that seemed relatively normal (for Australia, at least) - nude photos turn up of a pro footballer, in this case released by a teenager. At first the stories were what you'd normally expect here - gee, another footballer messing up, why can't they keep it in their pants, etc.

But the worm quickly turned. Rather than crawling into a corner and kissing his life goodbye, the footballer and his club have fought back. It looks like some young girl has gotten hold of the photos and is now releasing them out of spite - she'll only say that the footballer treated her 'badly' (read 'he wouldn't have sex with me', I think). Now, she's being dragged back to face court, and the club and the players are talking legal action and law suits, and suddenly she wishes she'd done this anonymously and is scared for what might happen. From her side it's the same old story, not a thought for the lives she is destroying, just poor her now that she might have to face the music - but from the point of view of the media and from seeing men stand up for themselves, this is excellent - I hope they throw the book at her and sue her pants off!

The lessons unilateral divorce teaches children

rlaspari · 26 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

I was surprised to see a good article article about some of the bad lessons unilateral (I mean, "no-fault") divorce teaches children written by a woman. However, if in college educated households 90% of all divorces are initiated by women, that means there are still 10% of them where the woman did not initiate. I guess the author is one of those 10%. Regardless, it's refreshing to see an article that examines the harm no-fault divorce is causing and why it needs to be reformed.

Royal Marines hire film-makers to help attract more men

Broadsword · 26 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

HOLLYWOOD film-makers have been recruited by the Royal Marines to attract more young men to the elite fighting corps. Two successful big-screen talents have produced a series of advertisements to sell the excitement and adventure of wearing the Marines' Green Beret. Shane Hurlbut, the director of photography on last year's - Terminator Salvation, has teamed up with Nanny McPhee director Susanna White to shoot the four 30-second commercials which are being screened on television and in cinemas.

...

A senior source said: "We have seen a lot of young men, both Marines and officers, quit in the past couple of years and the pressure to maintain manpower within the units has increased. In addition, we went through a phase this year when every week we were looking for men to replace injured soldiers with 40 Commando in Helmand.

"These men are known as Battle Casualty Replacements and are vital to any operation.

"Next year we will see the entire Brigade deploy and that will mean more Battle Casualty Replacements. I don't think the public is aware of the cost of the war on young men's mental state and the injuries sustained. If you are a young corporal in Helmand who is leading fighting patrols day in, day out, in which he and his men face the lottery of stepping on a roadside bomb, the pressure, after six months, is immense.

"We had young Marines going on patrol with tourniquets strapped to their legs ready for use in case they got zapped. When they get home, if they have not been injured, many feel that they do not want to go back as the chance of escaping injury in a second or third tour is unlikely as the odds fall, so they leave."

"You are what your father ate"

fondueguy · 26 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Here is an article reporting on a recent study by researchers at the University of Massachusetts Medical School and the University of Texas at Austin. I found this article interesting as it purports that a father's environmental history impacts the health of his offspring, and seems to be an evolutionary adaptive strategy.

Based on animal studies and limited human studies it appears that fathers are passing on environmental information to their offspring and that this is impacting the expression of their child's genes. Most talks about environmental experiences of the parent having a direct impact of the child's health have revolved around pregnant mothers. In short, fathers pass on more than just their genes at conception and this should be taken into account when considering people's health. It will be interesting to see what future research yields and the possibilities of health-related interventions with fathers-to-be. Typically, I only see them being targeted at mothers, which I believe has larger societal implications.

Making Medical Male Circumcision Work for Women: A new report from the Women's HIV Prevention Tracking Project

Minuteman · 27 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The new report from AVAC and ATHENA Network's Women's HIV Prevention Tracking Project is an unprecedented collection of voices from Kenya, Namibia, South Africa, Swaziland and Uganda, documents women's perspectives on male circumcision for HIV prevention.

The report is based on the input of approximately 500 women in HIV-affected communities who were reached by WHiPT country teams with questionnaires and focus groups designed to elicit knowledge, opinions and recommendations. The teams worked in urban and rural settings and sought out communities with and without traditional circumcision practices. There was a specific focus on perceptions in settings where female genital mutilation is also practiced.

The report provides reason for the cautious rollout of medical male circumcision (MMC) while offering recommendations on how to program its scale-up to ensure MMC is safe and beneficial to whole communities—including men and women.'

Wife cheats, husband finds out - husband faces charges

GaryB · 27 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

This story is amazing! Excerpt:

'A US man who says he learned of his wife's affair by reading her e-mail on their computer faces trial on felony computer misuse charges. Leon Walker, 33, of Michigan, used his wife's password to get into her Gmail account. Clara Walker filed for a divorce, which was granted this month.
...
Mr Walker told The Oakland Press of Pontiac that he was trying to protect the couple's children from neglect and calls the case a "miscarriage of justice." Oakland County Assistant Prosecutor Sydney Turner says the charge is justified and the case will go ahead on February 7.
...
Privacy law writer Frederick Lane told the Detroit Free Press the law typically is used to prosecute identity theft and stealing trade secrets. He says he questions if a wife can expect privacy on a computer she shares with her husband.'

Of course, the wife who rifles her husband's computer and empties his bank account before filing for divorce is perfectly entitled - she's his wife, of course, everything is "shared". This story screams it out - men aren't equal, we don't own anything unless the wife agrees.

Mainstreaming Misandry in TV Sitcoms and Commercials

Matt · 28 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

List here, courtesy of Marc Rudov. Bookmark and send it around!

Male victims get lost in domestic-abuse data

Matt · 28 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — When Adele Freeman fired five .38-caliber bullets into her boyfriend in 2000, she contributed to an often-overlooked statistic within the sometimes-deadly world of partner abuse: namely, that more than one-third of all homicides each year connected to domestic violence are perpetrated by women.
...
The fact of female abusers and male victims is often lost in the discussion of domestic violence. In fact, women's advocates have used selective statistics — the same federally funded survey that found women are equally as abusive to men — to bolster their plea for funding and services.

That absence of attention to the men's side of the coin has contributed to an imbalance of services for men who are victimized in abusive relationships.'

MTV Teen Mom out of jail

anthony · 29 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Indianapolis — Teen Mom Amber Portwood is out of jail but not out of trouble. The MTV reality star spent Monday night in the Madison County Jail and faces charges of domestic battery and child neglect.

Anderson police started investigating 20-year-old Portwood after video of her hitting her boyfriend aired on MTV. The network handed over raw footage to Anderson Police as part of the investigation. The video shows Portwood hitting Gary Shirley, the baby's father, several times.

Police arrested Portwood Monday in Anderson on two counts of felony domestic battery and one count of felony child neglect, because one of the alleged attacks happened in front of their daughter Leah.'

Related: Teen Mom Amber Portwood: MTV Made Me Hit Gary!

Assange: "Sweden is The Saudi Arabia of Feminism"

anthony · 29 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a recent interview, Julian Assange joined defenders who have blamed feminism, writ large, for his recent sexual assault charges, saying that he "fell into a hornets' nest of revolutionary feminism." He added that one of the women who claims that she was sexually assaulted by him took a "trophy photo" of him lying naked in her bed (so clearly, she's a liar).
...
It doesn't take a "revolutionary feminist" (who clearly want to castrate all men, starting with Assange) to see that there is a difference between flirting and wearing a revealing sweater and consenting to unprotected sex, or even between enthusiastically participating in protected sex the night before and objecting to being forced into a much riskier form of intercourse in the morning. Assange claims that the two women became angry when one contacted the other and found out that he had slept with both of them, but their anger is justified, since he had had unprotected sex with both of them.'

CNN Opinion: Why men act out against women

anthony · 29 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's time for those of us who are good men to start acknowledging the role that male socialization plays in domestic and sexual violence. As good men, we must begin to acknowledge and own our responsibility to be part of the solution to ending violence against women and girls.

What is a good man?

A good man is a man who believes women should be respected. A good man would not assault a woman. A good man believes in equality for women. A good man honors the women in his life. A good man, for all practical purposes, is a nice guy. We believe this to be the majority of men.'

Canada: Atlantic Ballet focuses on domestic violence

Anonymous · 29 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Atlantic Ballet's latest production is an effort to raise awareness about domestic abuse.

Susan Chalmers-Gauvin, CEO of the Moncton, N.B.-based ballet company, says Ghosts of Violence will be on tour across the country.

"The most shocking statistic, I think, is the fact that the largest number of women killed are under the age of 25 years, so we really would like to be able to reach out to that younger demographic," said Chalmers-Gauvin.'

What Would a Post-Masculinized Military Look Like?

anthony · 29 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hmm. Let me humbly offer one: it's really about civil-military relations, not military culture or raison d'etre per se. A post-masculinized military, as I imagine it, would differ from the system she's critiquing not in its ability to use violence (in other words, I don't share Laura's view, finally, that it would look like a 'cross between the peace corps and a chain gang.') And it would not merely be constituted by who is in the military or what kind of masculinity the military privileges in its soldiers (though these things matter). More significantly, one would know a post-masculinized military system by the character of the military's relationship to the civilian world it serves. And I would argue with Sjoberg that there is further (beneficial) work to do, but also that we are heading in the right direction faster that she might acknowledge.'

Libraries to get sex predator awareness video-- with no female perps in it

Matt · 30 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Not just the libraries, but police depts., too. And guess what-- seems all the perps are men and portrayed as, you guessed it, relatives and friends. No mention at all of aunts, sisters, or female teachers. Excerpt:

'A new video coming to libraries statewide shows the faces of four sex predators, men who became nightmares for parents after winning their trust and access to their children.

While parents fear strangers, trusted acquaintances are almost always the culprits, said Tina Stanford, narrator and director of state Office of Victim Services.

"As a former prosecutor and crime victim advocate who has dealt with sex offenders and seen the impact of their crimes on their victims, none of footage in this video surprises me," she said.

Based on reported crime data, the FBI estimates one-quarter of U.S. children are molested, and about one-third of the victims will report it, but on average 15 years after the abuse occurred.'

SAVE announces Accreditation service for DV Training, Education, and Public Awareness programs

Matt · 30 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

TEPA Accreditation Program Promotes Evidence-Based Policy and Practice

Our nation's decades-long effort to curb domestic violence rests on the three-legged stool of criminal justice programs, shelter services, and training, education, and public awareness. Criminal justice programs and shelters are already monitored by a variety of regulatory and professional oversight bodies.

But how do we know that abuse information that is disseminated to police officers, judges, and the general public is accurate, unbiased, and up-to-date? Philip Cook, author of Abused Men, believes "there is more false, falsely famed, or disingenuously deceptive information about domestic violence than another other significant public and social issue."

To address this need, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments – SAVE – has established the TEPA (Training, Education, and Public Awareness) Accreditation Program. The program provides a Good Housekeeping-type "Seal of Approval" to educational programs offered by professional and trade organizations, state domestic violence coalitions, abuse shelters, and governmental entities. SAVE expects the accreditation program will promote evidence-based policies and more effective abuse-reduction programs.

For more information about the TEPA Accreditation Program, see: http://www.saveservices.org/policymakers/

SAVE is a 501c3 organization devoted to ending domestic violence.

She-wolves in sheeps' clothing

Matt · 30 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female child abusers are the 21st century equivalent of lesbians in the Victorian age: not legislated against because they do not exist. The nature of woman being incapable of “deviancy”, as the bigoted Victorians said. Hence in New Zealand, the Accident Compensation Corporation was unable to accept claims from boys sexually abused by women, until the law changed in 2005. Prior to that the perpetrator of “sexual indecency” had to be male.

However, statistics indicate that female child abusers not only exist, but in numbers approaching those of males. In New Zealand, 48 per cent of child abusers for 2006, where the perpetrator gender was known, were women. In the USA in 2002 63 per cent of all child abuse, from neglect to sexual abuse, was perpetrated by the mother. In 40 per cent of cases the mother acted alone.

The UK's Lucy Faithfull Foundation estimates women are responsible for 10 per cent of all child sexual abuse and that 5-20 per cent of pedophiles are women. Meanwhile in New Zealand, 40 per cent of the 1,200 men helped by the Christchurch-based Male Survivors of Sexual Abuse Trust (MSSAT) in 2010, were sexually abused by women when they were boys.'

Woman Charged in Death of Fifth-Grader

Matt · 30 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A family acquaintance has been charged with capital murder in the case of Jonathan Foster, a 12-year-old Texas boy last seen Christmas Eve before a burned body believed to be his was found Tuesday, according to local media reports.

Mona Yvette Nelson, 44, an acquaintance of Foster's family, was named a person of interest early Wednesday and questioned by police, ABC News station KTRK in Houston reported. The Harris County, Texas, District Attorney's Office later told KTRK that it had accepted capital murder charges against Nelson.
...
"The body ... is that of a child, but it was so badly burned that we can't determine the gender or identification," Houston Police Department spokesman Kese Smith told ABCNews.com. "The Medical Examiner's office has that unfortunate task to determine, and until that happens, we are treating these two incidents as separate cases.'

Daughter, wife of AZ official accused in sex case

anthony · 30 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PHOENIX – The daughter of a county supervisor has been arrested on suspicion of sexual misconduct with the same teenage boy that her mother is accused of sexually abusing over a three-year period, police said Thursday.

Rachel Katherine Brock, 21, was arrested Wednesday on three counts of sexual conduct with a minor and one count of transmitting obscene material as part of an ongoing investigation surrounding her mother, 48-year-old Susan Brock.

...

In Rachel Brock's initial court appearance, acting attorney John Rock argued that the judge should free her on bond because there appeared to be no physical evidence to support any of the charges. Rock also said the teen would have been asked if he had been a victim of any other sexual abuse when Susan Brock was arrested in October.

...

A third woman, Christian Hart Weems, 37, was arrested in the case Tuesday on suspicion of obstructing a criminal investigation and conspiracy to commit computer tampering. She's accused of deleting potentially incriminating e-mails between the boy and Susan Brock. Police say Weems is a friend of Susan Brock.'

Maid Service Only For Women That Have Cancer

dooquidis4ever · 31 December 2010 · Archived copy · Original http://www.cleaningforareason.org/

I guess men don't get cancer. What is up with these women-only deals?

NJ Woman Charged With Setting Boyfriend on Fire

anthony · 1 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A Camden County, N.J., woman was in police custody Saturday charged with setting her boyfriend on fire on New Year's Eve.

Richard King Jr. was in stable condition in a Philadelphia burn center after a blanket he was using was set on fire, local newspaper the Courier-Post reported.

Police in Audubon, Pa., said Pamela Rozzelle, 50, was charged with second-degree aggravated arson and second-degree aggravated assault.

Rozzelle told police she could not find her car keys and tried to wake King, who was asleep on a couch. Rozzelle said she then lit a cigarette and a match fell onto a blanket that covered King, which in turn lit on fire, according to the report.'

Psych studies ordered for jailed homeschooling dad

anthony · 2 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Unspecified psychological studies or evaluations have been ordered for a jailed father who, in violation of the procedures of the government-run social services that instructed police officers to abduct his then-7-year-old son because he was being homeschooled, took him home for a visit.

Details are sketchy about the local court hearing, held just before Christmas, in the Gotland, Sweden, case involving Christer Johansson, but a Swedish broadcast station website reveals that Johansson is accused of kidnapping or unlawful detention for the Thanksgiving week incident in which he took his son, now 9, with him following a social services-supervised visit.
...
Government authorities then awarded custody of Domenic to social services because he was being homeschooled, and he has been allowed visits with his parents only about once every five weeks since.'

Two of the latest from A Voice for Men

Matt · 2 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

The Core Values of Feminism and Christopher Kilmartin and the Frozen Vagina. Excerpts:

'With this piece I take you close to the edge without dropping off. I take you as close as I can to feminist thought while still having a brain left to think with. Won't you come with me on a tour of this haunted mansion, the feminist cranium? I don't pretend to have distilled feminist thought in its entirety. You'll notice that many of these bleed together, but like the female mind, things aren't so distinct and separate.'

and

'Kilmartin, the real postmodern man among men, lays out the plain, simple and unassailable facts as only a men's studies scholar could, or would. He writes,

Men's violence is the single most serious health problem for women in the United States. It causes more harm than accidents, muggings, and cancer combined. For women aged 15-44, an estimated 50% of emergency room visits are the result of violence at the hands of their husbands, boyfriends, ex-husbands, or ex-boyfriends.

Did you get that? The most serious health problem for women in the United States! Half of all women who visit the ER for treatment got there because some bastard was beating her! And we are wasting time on pink ribbons and breast cancer fundraisers?'

Canada: N.B. case fuels debate over domestic violence

Anonymous · 4 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'After a night of drunken revelry that escalated into a violent street fight, Crystal-Dawn MacKenzie grabbed a knife from her neighbour's kitchen, yelled "I'm going to kill him" and stabbed her common-law husband in the collarbone.

If the knife had moved just a centimetre in either direction, Patrick Andrew Thomas likely would have lived, a pathologist later testified. But the 29-year-old bled to death on a downtown Saint John street.

Eight months later, Ms. MacKenzie walked out of a New Brunswick court a free woman after a nine-woman, three-man jury in Saint John acquitted the 28-year-old mother of three of second-degree murder, accepting that she had finally snapped after years of abuse at the hands of Mr. Thomas.

The Crown filed an appeal last week, a rare move for a jury trial. Prosecutors are arguing that the judge erred in his definitions of murder and self-defence and that Ms. MacKenzie had alternatives to killing her husband to escape his violence.'

City rings in new year with killing of man by woman as he tried to break up fight

Matt · 4 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

So feminists insist men start fights and women are the peacemakers. Sometimes, sure. Other times, not. In this case, a father of 7 is killed trying to break up a fight between two women. Charges she faces? Manslaughter, and assault. Excerpt:

'Rochester, N.Y. - The family of James Singleton, 46, said the way they understand it, Singleton was simply trying to break-up a fight between two women when he was stabbed early Saturday morning.

Rochester Police Investigators say Singleton was stabbed in the leg with a piece of broken glass and that the wound severed his femoral artery; Singleton died at the hospital Saturday night.

Monday morning Nancy James, 52, pled "not guilty" at her arraignment in Rochester City Court. James is charged with manslaughter for Singleton's death and with assault for stabbing the other woman, Patria Brown.'

That's not all from Rochester this year in the woman-on-man stabbings front. Another one here.

Foundation for Male Studies needs support

Matt · 4 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

The Foundation for Male Studies needs your help. FMS is working hard to add courses of study, centers and departments to the educational institutions of this nation - to spread the understanding of all aspects of boys and men - from anthropology to education to biology to psychology. We must do something now to stop the tide of lack of understanding, misdirected behavior that is prevalent from the youngest of boys all the way up to their maturity as men.

Many statistics prove that looking away will ultimately lead to a meltdown in our society. Here are just a few:

* According to the US Census Bureau, more women are going to college today than they did a decade ago, while the percentage of men attending college is decreasing relative to women;

Texan declared innocent after 30 years in prison

Matt · 5 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DALLAS – A Texas man declared innocent Tuesday after 30 years in prison had at least two chances to make parole and be set free — if only he would admit he was a sex offender. But Cornelius Dupree Jr. refused to do so, doggedly maintaining his innocence in a 1979 rape and robbery, in the process serving more time for a crime he didn't commit than any other Texas inmate exonerated by DNA evidence.

"Whatever your truth is, you have to stick with it," Dupree, 51, said Tuesday, minutes after a Dallas judge overturned his conviction.'

"The Bachelor" gets slapped, says he "deserved it," gives slapper roses

Matt · 5 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Watch it here. As long as we have men who are ready to excuse violence done to them (publicly, no less), then does the movement really stand a chance against the tide of self-loathing so many men have internalized? If you didn't find that clip very disturbing, then may I suggest you consider the idea that you are like a fish that has been swimming in dirty water for so long, he doesn't even know clean water when he sees it.

F&F: Time Magazine Urges Changes to Hague Convention to Help Mothers Who Abduct Their Children

Matt · 5 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

In Protecting Kids: Rethinking the Hague Convention (12/10/10), Time magazine uses a study that's so bad as to be almost spurious to promote the article's astonishing anti-father bias.

The Hague Convention was originally drawn up in 1980 to address the problem of parents absconding with children across international borders. Time asks:

> So what happens, three decades later, when research indicates that 68% of the abducting parents in cases under this treaty are mothers — and that many of them are fleeing abusive spouses?

To which the obvious answer should be, "Nothing." Without evidence showing that the courts aren't competent to deal with claims of abuse by parents, why should the Convention be changed?

Hong Kong Bachelor Skips Marriage & Goes Directly For Surrogate Mother

redwoodwriter · 5 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The story describes how an affluent Hong Kong businessman skipped marriage and used a surrogate mother to get his three new sons. One quote from the article, offered by a surrogate mother brokering agency employee in California:

"She says about 40% of clients are single men who pay anywhere from $20,000 to $35,000 for a surrogate mother, "depending on her experience.""

Perhaps men have been for too long thinking they needed to get married to have children? Want to avoid all the legal hassles, financial jeopardy, and emotional trauma associated with marriage, but you still want to have kids? Maybe using a surrogate is the way to go? Feminism, and all its efforts to make marriage inhospitable and unattractive, seems to be pushing men into this. At the same time feminism seems to be objecting to the use of surrogates, in part because women often think that the surrogates are forced to do this for money.

New York Meteorologist Who Allegedly Made Up Attack Story Appears in Court

anthony · 5 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK -- A TV meteorologist told police she concocted claims of being attacked because she was under personal and professional stress and wanted attention, a court document released Wednesday shows.

Heidi Jones said nothing as she appeared briefly in a Manhattan court Wednesday to answer misdemeanor charges of false reporting. Her lawyer, Paul F. Callan, said she would fight the charges and had been "unfairly characterized and vilified" in some press reports on her case.

Jones, who has been suspended from her job at New York's local ABC station, told police Dec. 1 that she'd been attacked in Central Park in September and then again outside her apartment in November, according to a court complaint prosecutors filed Wednesday.'

Swaziland: Youths blackmailed into circumcision through pool

Minuteman · 6 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'POOL- THE much anticipated ‘Circumcise’ Pool Challenge tournament, which was scheduled for this coming weekend has now been postponed to January 22.

The E30 000 Population Services International (PSI) Swaziland sponsored tournament will be open to circumcised players only.

It was initially slated for November 27 last but had to be postponed to January 8 this year after it was felt that some of the would-be- players were not able to circumcise for them to be eligible to enter the competition, as they were held up at school.
...
The tournament, meant to encourage pool players to embrace a healthy lifestyle was launched at the Swaziland National Sports Council offices about three months ago.'

'Fathers at risk' in Government's legal aid cut

Broadsword · 6 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Hundreds of men will face false allegations of domestic violence and child abuse because of legal aid reforms, barristers warned today.

Under cuts announced by Justice Secretary Ken Clarke, aid for divorce cases will be withdrawn with the exception of those involving accusations of violence and abuse.

Peter Lodder, chairman of the Bar Council, said the changes created “a perverse incentive” for unjustified claims.

“We already get far too many unjustified allegations of this sort and our fear is that there is going to be an enormous increase of this sort of allegation,” he said.

“Just imagine the unscrupulous lawyer, or adviser, telling a woman that the only way that she's going to get legal aid is if she says that she's been knocked about or that there is a problem with the children.”'

What women really want: to marry a rich man

Broadsword · 6 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The idea that women dislike being financially dependent on men is a myth, with more choosing to “marry up” now than did so in the 1940s, according to Dr Catherine Hakim from the London School of Economics.

After decades of gender equality campaigning many women now find it hard to admit that they want to be a housewife more than they want a successful career of their own, she said.

...

...Dr Hakim criticised David Cameron for backing the idea of quotas to ensure that more women gain seats on the boards of leading companies. Men dominate top positions because many women simply do not want long careers in business, she said.

Despite 40 years of reforms to promote gender equality at work, a woman’s financial dependence on a man “has lost none of its attractions”, she said.

In a 52-page report published by the Centre for Policy Studies think tank, Dr Hakim continued: “Women’s aspiration to marry up, if they can, to a man who is better-educated and higher-earning, persists in most European countries.

...

An analysis of figures for Britain shows that in 1949, 20 per cent of women married husbands with significantly higher levels of education than their own.

By the late 1990s, the proportion of women who were “marrying up” had almost doubled to 38 per cent. Similar patterns are seen across much of Europe, the US and Australia.'

New Zealand car rental site offers women-only discounts

anthony · 6 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Read it here. From the site:

"Women are better drivers than men. It's a fact. That's why, on girlsdrive women get a better deal, with low rates from NZ's top car providers, as well as further discounts on insurance. We've also hunted down the best places to unleash your plastic around NZ."

US: Father fights for son's repatriation after kidnapping mother caught rlaspari · 7 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'New Yorker Michael McCarty was in a custody battle with his ex-wife Manuela Antonelli when she kidnapped their son Liam--now 9--and took him to her native Italy. That was 2007.

Four years later, McCarty is still fighting to get his son back. Two years after the abduction, Antonelli was deemed an unfit parent by Italian courts (she was diagnosed with psychiatric problems), and Liam was placed in an orphanage in that country. She then kidnapped him again; when she was subsequently arrested, Liam was placed in foster care.

Though McCarty has full legal custody of his son in the U.S., Italian Child Services will not allow him to take his son home. McCarty opened up to Matt Lauer on the Today Show about his ongoing struggle.'

Classifieds-for-women-only site opens dooquidis4ever · 8 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Here we go again... classified service for women only: http://www.ladiesloop.com/

"Stop posting on sketchy classified ad sites with people that have other motives. Join LadiesLoop, a free women's only service that allows for a more comfortable classifieds experience for women. Our network of local women's ads is a great place to connect, exchange, and help other women."

Cops: Woman raped boy, 13, she met online

anthony · 8 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'SANTA ANA, Calif. — A 36-year-old California woman has been arrested on suspicion of child molestation and rape for allegedly flying across the country to have sex with a 13-year-old boy she befriended online, authorities said Friday.

Rachel Ann Hicks, of Lake Forest, was taken into custody Friday by Orange County sheriff's investigators.

A Maryland state trooper contacted an Orange County sheriff's investigator on Tuesday and reported that the woman initially "met" the boy in September in an X-Box live chat room. The online relationship progressed to phone calls, texting, e-mails and sending sexually explicit images and movies between one another, the sheriff's office said in a press release.
...
Based on new information, investigators are seeking to identify a second possible victim, a California boy under the age of 18, authorities said.'

SAVE announces Super Bowl Hoax Anniversary event in Washington, DC

Matt · 8 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

On Thursday, Jan. 27, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) will host a conference to commemorate the Super Bowl Hoax, and to highlight the continuing misrepresentations of the domestic violence industry.

The keynote speaker will be Christina Hoff-Sommers, author of Who Stole Feminism? Other speakers will include Phil Cook, author of Abused Men, and Mr. Carl Starling, a man who was falsely accused of domestic violence as a result of the DV myths.

The event will be held 12:00-1:30pm at the Heritage Foundation, 214 Massachusetts, Ave, NE, Washington DC. Complete registration information is found in this flyer. The conference is being held as part of a 2-day lobbying event on Capitol Hill.

The meeting will conclude with an announcement how to stop the torrent of misleading and false information from the DV industry.

This will be a historic event – don't miss it!

A Voice for Men: "Welcome New York Times Readers"

Matt · 8 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you came here after seeing A Voice for Men mentioned in the New York Times, welcome. You were led here after reading the following:

“Lurking around the edges of the male studies movement, moreover, in Web[sic] sites like Paul Elam’s A Voice for Men, is a certain amount of anti-feminist hostility, if not outright misogyny,” or so says Times writer Charles McGrath.

Please allow me to take a brief moment to demonstrate how fallacious this statement is, and why.

First, and it seems silly to have to say this, we are not “lurkers” here, though I give McGrath due credit for creativity with dark metaphors. Very compelling.

I support the concept of male studies, and I have been personally enthused about the efforts of the Male Studies Foundation since my days as Editor-in-Chief at mensnewsdaily.com. I have no official relationship with The Foundation and am much more concerned with an array of issues other than Male Studies.'

US: 'Mother,' 'Father' Changing to 'Parent One,' 'Parent Two' on Passport Applications

anthony · 8 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The words “mother” and “father” will be removed from U.S. passport applications and replaced with gender neutral terminology, the State Department says.

“The words in the old form were ‘mother’ and ‘father,’” said Brenda Sprague, deputy assistant Secretary of State for Passport Services. "They are now ‘parent one’ and ‘parent two.’"

A statement on the State Department website noted: “These improvements are being made to provide a gender neutral description of a child’s parents and in recognition of different types of families.” The statement didn't note if it was for child applications only.
...
“Changing the term mother and father to the more global term of parent allows many different types of families to be able to go and apply for a passport for their child without feeling like the government doesn’t recognize their family,” said Jennifer Chrisler, executive director of Family Equality Council.'

Australia: Couple aborts twin boys in favor of having girl

GreatSouthernLander · 9 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A COUPLE so desperate for a baby girl that they terminated twin boys are fighting to choose the sex of their next child.

The couple, who have three sons and still grieve for a daughter they lost soon after birth, are going to the Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal to win the right to select sex by IVF treatment.

They say they want the opportunity to have the baby daughter they were tragically denied.

An independent panel, known as the Patient Review Panel, recently rejected the couple's bid to choose the sex of their next child using IVF.

They have gone to VCAT in a bid to have that decision overturned.'

Ed. Note: Submitter's comments are posted in the first comment for this story.

Woman reportedly told police she stabbed husband ‘because he drives me nuts’

anthony · 9 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BANGOR, Maine — A local woman allegedly told police Thursday that she stabbed her husband because “I can’t stand him, and he drives me nuts.”

Cynthia Dorion, 57, of Bangor was charged with aggravated assault, assault with a dangerous weapon, and domestic violence assault after she allegedly stabbed her husband in the back with a knife at about 6:50 p.m. Thursday in the couple’s kitchen.

The attack appeared to be unprovoked, Greg Campbell, assistant district attorney for Penobscot County, said Friday.

Dorion allegedly was intoxicated when she stabbed her husband.

She was released Friday morning from the Penobscot County Jail after posting $1,500 cash bail, according to jail personnel.

Information about the man’s injuries was unavailable Friday.'

Titanic: Women and Children first? Think again

fondueguy · 9 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Here is an article reporting on the casualty figures from the Titanic divided into class, age group, and gender. Excerpt:

'First of all, if you were a man, you were outta luck. The overall survival rate for men was 20%. For women, it was 74%, and for children, 52%. Yes, it was indeed "women and children first."

But what about class? Well, third class women were 41% more likely to survive than first class men. And third class men were twice as likely to survive as second class men.'

Something left unmentioned but can easily be calculated from the figures is that a third class woman had a 35% greater chance of being saved than a third class child.

Judge orders that five-year-old girl must sleep over at father's home

GaryB · 10 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. For once, a judge (a female one too!) that seems to be pushing through the crap and making a sensible decision. Excerpt:

'A JUDGE hearing a dispute over access to a five-year-old child has said the girl should no longer sleep in the same room as her mother or half-sister, so that she is better prepared to stay overnight with her father with whom she has never lived.

The Family Court ordered the girl have overnight visits to her father from January even though a family consultant said in October that she would not be confident "for some considerable time" to stay overnight. Another psychologist had recommended the child be given "no less than two years" to adjust to sleepovers at her father's home.'

Two years??!!!! The article is relatively strong on the mother's reasons why this shouldn't happen, but it does add in a couple of points from the father near the end. But good news that at least one judge is doing the right thing.

F&F: Misguided DV Groups Back Discredited Battered Mothers Custody Conference

Matt · 11 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Eighth Annual Battered Mothers Custody Conference was held over the weekend in Albany, New York. Several misguided domestic violence advocacy groups, including the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence and the National Network Against Domestic Violence, co-sponsored the conference. Sadly, this is a prime example of a serious problem afflicting most domestic violence organizations, one which tarnishes the often noble work they do—their consistent failure to recognize and acknowledge false abuse accusations.

For years the Conference, which is also co-sponsored by the National Organization for Women of New York State, has promoted a parade of child custody cases which they use to support their claim that “protective parents” frequently are losing in family court because the courts hand child custody to batterers who employ false claims of Parental Alienation. They advocate reforms which will make it easier to deny fathers shared custody or visitation rights based on unsubstantiated abuse claims.'

CNN piece asks: Are women leaving men behind?

anthony · 11 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Opinion special here. Excerpt:

'Why is this? As one fertility expert surmised in my Atlantic story: These mothers "look at their lives and think their daughters will have a bright future their mother and grandmother didn't have, brighter than their sons even, so why wouldn't you choose a girl?"

In certain segments of society, men are struggling to stay relevant in this rapidly changing economy, as manufacturing jobs disappear. Women, meanwhile, are making many more of the decisions: how to raise the children, manage the money, even whether to get married at all.

Let me say this again: This is not feminist gloating. It's not any kind of value judgment. It just is. Women are in so many ways filling the roles that men traditionally filled.

Many of the changes happening are obviously beneficial to women: They have more economic freedom and power than ever. But many of the changes are not all that positive for women.

With more freedom and power comes the burden of managing, heading households alone, being ever more perfect. And the stresses show up in reports of increased rates of unhappiness, alcoholism and even violence among women. Plus, the prospect of women rising is quite threatening to men in many places, so the transition can look ugly.'

Texas Woman Charged in Alleged Murder-for-Hire Plot

anthony · 11 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Texas woman tried to hire an undercover officer to kill two people living with her estranged husband, so he would return home, police say.

Wise County Sheriff's deputies on Friday arrested 39-year-old Gloria Ann Ames after she allegedly made the deal and exchanged money with the officer, MyFoxdfw.com reports.

Ames, of Chico, Texas, was charged with two counts of solicitation of capital murder and was being held in the Wise County Jail on a $1 million bond, according to the station.

During a jailhouse interview on Monday, Ames allegedly said that she had been married 10 times and that desperation drove her to the crime.'

Assange case: Has feminism gone too far?

anthony · 11 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many in Sweden reject claims that Assange, who appeared in a London court Tuesday, is the victim of a U.S.-led conspiracy. Instead, the country has been gripped by a very public and often explicit discussion about intimate behavior and relationships. The case has even made some question whether feminism has been taken too far in this supposed bastion of gender equality.

...

Feminism is a mainstream concept in Sweden and the country has among the toughest sex crime laws in the world. In fact, lawyers have been known to joke that a man must get written permission before having sex.

...

Pelle Billing, a M.D. who lectures and writes on gender and men's issues, worries that Sweden's rape and domestic violence laws make it difficult for men to get a fair trial.

...

"So how is man supposed to know what the boundaries are if the women don't know?" Billing asks. According to him, feminism in Sweden has stopped being about equal rights and has begun to infringe on men's rights.'

DOJ OVW soliciting commentary

Matt · 12 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email from SAVE:

All –

The DoJ Office of Violence Against Women (OVW) has a National Advisory Committee that meets periodically to give recommendations.

The Committee has a meeting coming up on Jan. 28 in Washington, DC. If you can't attend in person, you can submit written testimony. Here's how:

Persons unable to obtain reservations to speak during the meeting are encouraged to submit written comments, which will be accepted at the meeting location or may be mailed to the NAC, to the attention of:

Catherine Poston, Attorney Advisor
Office on Violence Against Women
United States Department of Justice
145 N Street NE, Suite 10W 121
Washington, DC 20530

Telephone: (202) 514–5430
E-mail: Catherine.poston@usdoj.gov
Fax: (202) 305–2589

For more information, see: http://origin.www.gpo.gov/fdsys/pkg/FR-2011-01-11/pdf/2011-365.pdf

Be sure your testimony is factual, objective, and polite.

Position Vacant: Senior Women's Health Promotion Officer

Minuteman · 12 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to posting here. Excerpt:

'Indicative Total Remuneration: $70,972 - $79,411 (pro rata) - Perm P/T
...
Services are gender specific and designed to address complex health needs that result from the intersection between violence, mental health and wellbeing. WHS addresses these issues through a range of strategies including counselling, group work, community development, health promotion, training, education and sector development.
...
You will have experience in gender analysis training or you would have provided gender related training in a health care setting'

"The Disneyland Daddy" offers toxic view of dad in post-divorce shared parenting scenario

Anonymous · 12 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mike gets the kids every other weekend and every Wednesday. The kids love going to Dad's because there are "no rules." They get to do pretty much whatever they want. Weekends are filled with video games, trips to the mall, pizza and movie outings. And candy. Lots and lots of candy. Wednesday nights are TV nights. The kids never do their homework on Wednesday nights because, after a long day, Mike wants to kick back. He doesn't want to have to deal with questions about homework. Vicki resents Mike's free-for-all parenting and calls him "The Disneyland Daddy."

When Mike drops off the kids at Vicki's apartment on Sunday night, they are wound up, bubbling about all the things they did with Dad over the weekend and not wanting the fun to end. Within minutes, excitement turns to disrespect, when Vicki asks them to help with chores and get to their homework. They talk back, act out and tune their mother out. Sunday nights with mom turn into screaming matches and tears. The anxiety always spills over into Monday morning, when she has to get the kids out of bed and get to work on time.'

UK: Domestic violence policy is a 'war on men' claims Tory

Matt · 13 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A TORY councillor has vowed not to campaign for his party until it reverses a policy designed to combat domestic violence.
Portsmouth City Councillor James Williams (pictured) announced he will not work for the Tories outside his own Nelson ward unless it withdraws the new 'Go' orders.

The orders give senior police officers on-the-spot rights to remove men suspected of committing acts of domestic abuse from their homes for 48 hours. Courts can then extend that to two weeks.

The policy was designed by the last Labour government, but is now being piloted in three areas of the UK by Home Secretary Theresa May. There is no equivalent policy aimed at women. Cllr Williams says the orders challenge freedom and are part of a feminist war on men.'

Third of young Japanese men not interested in sex

Broadsword · 13 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Japan's birth rate stands at 1.21 per family, far below the rate of 2.08 babies that is required for a stable population.
...
According to the survey of 671 men and 869 women, issued by the Ministry of Health, Labour and Welfare, 35.1 per cent of men aged 16 to 19 said they are not interested in or averse to sex, more than double the 17.5 per cent of men in the previous study in 2008.

"Obviously, the most important reason for Japan's declining birth rate is that people are not having sex," Dr. Kunio Kitamura, head of the Japan Family Planning Association, told The Daily Telegraph.

"Combined with the rising number of elderly people, this population imbalance is a major problem," he said.'

Arizona Shooter Left To Deal With Mental Problems Entirely By Himself

redwoodwriter · 13 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

A story in The Wall Street Journal describes the postings that Jared Lee Loughner typed to a group of about 50 online gamers located around the world. Readers will remember that he is alleged to be the shooter a shooting rampage that took place in Tucson, Arizona. This article goes on at length describing Loughner's trouble with the legal system, his trouble with women, his trouble finding a job, and his trouble dealing with mental illness. Loughner cries for help repeatedly, but all he gets are some suggestions to handle it himself. He is left entirely on his own, although he shows bizarre behavior which is clearly publicly evident. For example, he was suspended from and later withdrew from a community college, allegedly for off-topic outbursts during a math class. If he were a woman, there would be all sorts of support offered to him, all sorts of safety nets would have been deployed. In some respects this sorry case reveals how little support there is for men in today's American culture. And of course the media spin includes shaming and blaming words, implying that he should have been able to handle it all himself. These words include descriptions of how his posts were "peppered with displays of misogyny."

Inside Britain's first refuge for male victims of domestic violence

Broadsword · 13 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One resident will forever carry the scars from near-fatal stab wounds, while another sits silently in the corner with a face etched with fear.

Both have fled to this safe house to escape violent partners. Both have done so in fear of their lives and — shockingly — both are men: members of a growing band of British male domestic abuse victims.

Jay is a soft-spoken, gentle, 22-year-old labourer from Cardiff who was repeatedly punched by his 32-year-old girlfriend. He tells me he'd be on the streets if it wasn't for the help he's getting here now.

'People don't think men get hit, but we do. People don't think men suffer, but we do,' he tells me.

'At first I didn't speak about the violence because of the stigma, but in the end I did and it was social services who helped me come here. I had nowhere else to go.'

The 'here' is an unremarkable looking terrace house in a valley in Powys, midWales.

Founded in 2006, it houses Britain's first refuge exclusively for men and their children fleeing violent partners.

There are 4,000 refuge places for women in Britain, and only 20 for men, most of them at this centre run by the Montgomery Family Crisis Centre.

...

'We've had a man who was deliberately run over by his partner,' Jane says sadly.

'Other men who had been stabbed, men with severe head injuries, burns and slashes . . . to name but a few.'

More than 400 men have asked for refuge here. Often it is police who tell them about the refuge while they're recovering in hospital. Residents have come from as far afield as London, Devon, Lancashire and Nottingham and have included a judge, several policemen, and Army veterans.'

NY Times: 'One Man’s Losing Fight Against Ladies’ Nights'

anthony · 14 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Manhattan lawyer who has filed a series of antifeminist lawsuits in recent years -– with little success — has suffered his latest defeat: the United States Supreme Court refused to hear what he calls his “ladies’ night lawsuit.”
...
The suit, filed in federal court, was dismissed, and so was a subsequent appeal. Mr. Den Hollander then submitted a petition to the United States Supreme Court on the same issue. He said he received word on Wednesday that the court had refused to hear the case.
...
Terry O’Neill, president of the National Organization for Women, said that Mr. Den Hollander reminded her of Bobby Riggs, who challenged Billie Jean King to a “battle of the sexes” tennis match in 1973 and then lost.

“He was one of the best things to happen to women’s tennis because he started a national conversation about the inequality of prize money and other issues, for women.”

Regarding Mr. Den Hollander’s “ladies night” lawsuit, she said, “Let’s face it: ladies nights are not actually for the ladies – they’re about men, for men — so why he’s complaining about that I don’t understand.”

Ms. O’Neill caught herself. “I guess I’m getting sincere in the face of a ludicrous argument,” she said.'

Police book woman into jail for DV on same day she was released from lock-up for DV

anthony · 14 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Prescott police arrested a woman Tuesday evening on misdemeanor charges of assault per domestic violence and criminal damage per domestic violence, and booked her into the Yavapai County Jail in Camp Verde on the same day she had been released after allegedly threatening her mother and kicking her brother as they drove her home from jail.

The mother told the officer they picked up her daughter from the jail earlier that day after a 27-day lockup, and during the trip back to town her daughter had continuously yelled, argued, swore and threatened them with physical harm and death, according to the police report. The brother told the officer that the woman had kicked him in the face.
...
After an officer arrived at the Circle K and spoke with them, he saw the woman jump out of the car and run toward Highway 89. The officer handcuffed the woman, and she reportedly swore, yelled, spit, insulted and threatened the officer and continued on the way to the police department and in the booking room.'

Australia: NSW Youth Center plans female-only cardio oasis

dooquidis4ever · 15 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Here are the feminists again creating women-only deals! When will it ever end? Excerpt:

'FAIRFIELD-CABRAMATTA PCYC will build a new female-only cardio oasis and upgrade its facilities after it received a $54,000 boost under the State Budget.

The organisation was among 11 others in the area receiving $400,000 as part of the State Government's $35 million Community Building Partnership program.

Fairfield-Cabramatta PCYC manager Jeannie Banks said the money would also go towards upgrading the kitchen and constructing a new carpark.

"We will be spending $17,500 on buying a fridge and microwave, as well as upgrading the kitchen which will actually comply with OH&S," she said. "We will also spend $11,500 on the demolition of the old dilapidated house next door and build a new carpark for our staff. We will then look at increasing it to hold more activities for the community.'

Ed. note: 'PCYC' means 'Police and Community Youth Clubs'. See here.

'The land of easy money': How the Somali woman who lied about gang rape describes Britain

Matt · 15 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who lied about being gang raped in Somalia to claim more than £250,000 in benefits had moved to Britain after boasting it was the ‘land of easy money’.

Ayan Abdulle was jailed this week after investigators discovered that the story she used to win asylum – and later UK citizenship – was a pack of lies.

Now the Daily Mail can reveal the full scale of her fraud and how easily she was able to milk the benefits system for years.

Abdulle, who also used the fake name Amina Muse and is from Somalia, was living in Gothenburg when the authorities insisted immigrants learn Swedish if they wanted to continue to claim handouts.'

Suzanne Moore: 'It's time to get angry'

anthony · 16 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Children say the cutest things! Over Christmas one of mine told me that years ago she asked me why I was a feminist. It was on the way to school and I am not a morning person. Possibly she was expecting something about equal pay. Apparently I snapped: "Because men do horrible, horrible things". She was alarmed.

That was bad of me wasn't it? A little sexist? Warping the mind of a young girl. She is now grown up and thinks it's funny. It's probably not in any childcare manual and the right answer would have been stuff about wanting equal opportunities. Or I could have replied that anyone with a brain, man or woman, would see the necessity of feminism. I could have been "inclusive".

Nowadays, saying bad stuff about men is not how feminism conducts itself. We all lurve men. We are all smiley for fear of being labelled man–haters. And what is the result of this people-pleasing, ultra-feminine, crowd–sourced sexual politics? Sod all.
...
God, how I miss those troublesome women like Andrea Dworkin and Shulamith Firestone. They may have been as batty as hell but they had passion. And balls. They were properly furious at the horrible things men do to women. Who in their right mind, male or female, isn't? Your mother, your sister, your daughter are being told to stay inside and not complain too much. Take up knitting or vajazzling maybe?'

Ed. note: Wikipedia on this lovely person.

Women arrested for multiple counts of animal abuse

Matt · 16 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Their mouths were muzzled and wrapped in so much tape they couldn't breathe, bark or eat. Their fur was matted with filth and the house was crammed with so much trash, it hid the floor.

A Long Island mother and daughter were arrested yesterday after more than a dozen tortured dogs and cats were rescued from a filth-riddled Rockville Centre home that included more than two dozen decomposing animal remains, cops said.

...

Faith Ross, 54, a secretary, and Francesca Maselli, 24, a nursing-home aide, pleaded not guilty and were being held at the Nassau County Jail on more than $75,000 bail each on three felony animal-cruelty counts.

...

Ross' ex-husband, Louis Maselli, said he has had no contact with daughter Francesca for more than a decade because Ross cut her off from him and his family after the courts refused to require visitation.

"My daughter was taken away from me when she was 11 and taught to hate me and my family," he told The Post. "I gave up, finally, after 10 years of phone calls and letters."'

UK: Police probe false rape claim

anthony · 17 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A teenage boy arrested on suspicion of rape has been released without charge.

The 17-year-old, from Slough, was arrested in connection with the rape of a 13-year-old girl in Tilehurst in November.

The schoolgirl, from Tilehurst, was attacked inside a car in a car park after accepting a lift as she walked along Northumberland Avenue, in Whitley, on Tuesday, November 16.

Det Sgt Elton Evans, from Reading CID, said: “Thames Valley Police now believes this incident to be a false report of rape and an investigation into the circumstances is continuing.”'

Australian readers: Now is the time to tell your GP that you resent having been circumcised

Minuteman · 17 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

In September 2010, the 'Medical Journal of Australia' (MJA) published an editorial entitled "The case for boosting infant male circumcision in the face of rising heterosexual transmission of HIV" (here).

The e-version of this editorial is behind a paywall on the MJA site, but you can get the jist of the editorial - and how it was used in the mainstream media - from this ABC article: here (the smirking female journalist adds a particularly sick resonance to the story).

According to a recent article in the professional publication 'Australian Doctor' (homepage), "Circumcision row erupts" - also behind a paywall but reproduced in full on The Intactivism Pages website: here - the MJA editorial resulted in a 'barrage of angry letters' from doctors (eight letters were actually published).

The 'Australian Doctor' article (also by a female journalist) only directly quotes the circumcision advocates from the original MJA editorial, and lets the advocates have the last word:

"Parents have a duty to help prevent renal damage, physical, inflammatory and hygiene problems, STIs and cancers in their sons and their sons' future sexual partners. They can do this by arranging for their sons to be circumcised,"

An alarmist editorial, which likely would never have passed the peer-review process to which research articles are subjected, was converted into an easily digestible press-release and picked up by mainstream media outlets to be fed directly to parents, by-passing the mainstray of Australian medical opinion.

Now is the time to talk to your GP about your resentment at having being circumcised. Doctors need to understand the damage of circumcision to give them the resolve to resist demands from parents, hold the editors of medical publications accountable to the high standards expected of practitioners in the medical profession, and to induce them to write letters and articles rejecting the practice of circumcision.

If enough men speak up to their doctors, the attention focused on this issue in Australia could finally induce researchers to conduct quality research into the long-term physical and psychological harm of circumcision and publish in the peer-reviewed literature which forms the basis of medical decision-making.

Where women of India rule the roost and men demand gender equality

Broadsword · 18 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

The Khasi, who number about 1 million in India's north-eastern state of Meghalaya, carry on the matrilineal tradition. The youngest daughter inherits, children take their mother's surname, and once married, men live in their mother-in-law's home.

"Only mothers or mother-in-laws look after the children. Men are not even entitled to take part in family gatherings. The husband is up against a whole clan of people: his wife, his mother-in-law and his children. So all he can do is play the guitar, sing, take to drink and die young," Pariat concludes gloomily.

Men are the weak sex in Meghalaya, but Pariat hopes the Syngkhong Rympei Thymai (SRT) campaign [roughly "a wedge to shore up a shaky table"] will promote reform of family structures. Indeed he wants to achieve more than mere equality. "Men are endowed with natural leadership. They should protect women, who in return should support them," he says.
...
In the state capital Shillong, women wear skirts to church, put on lipstick and drive their cars with their windows open, listening to music. Many are happy to stay single. In a country where the pressure to get married is everywhere, they are an exception.

"Why bother with a husband? I already have a family and I want to concentrate on my career," says Rosanna Lyngdoh, 38, who lives with her extended family in a house with 21 bedrooms.

SAVE Report: Most Abuse Programs Slice and Dice the Truth

Matt · 18 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Jan. 18, 2011 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- The majority of domestic violence education programs supported by the federal government do not provide a truthful depiction of the problem of partner abuse, according to a report released today. The document, "Most DV Educational Programs Lack Accuracy, Balance, and Truthfulness" concludes that nine out of 10 training, education, and public awareness programs fail to meet minimum standards of objectivity.

The report is issued by Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE), a victim advocacy group working for evidence-based solutions to domestic violence. The full report can viewed here: http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/SAVE-DV-Educational-Programs

The SAVE report highlights a Centers for Disease Control survey that shows teenage girls are more likely than boys to be perpetrators of dating violence. But the Department of Justice inexplicably uses the CDC survey to justify the need to "engage men and youth in preventing crimes of violence against women," according to the DoJ website.'

Gordon Brown: Global 'youth' unemployment a ticking time bomb

Matt · 18 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

What he really means to say is that the long-term HE-cession that years of neglecting male needs for education and job training will soon become such a problem that pols/ex-pols like him won't be able to drive around in their fancy cars without being encased in bullet-proof windows. My, what a world we are making for ourselves. Article here. Excerpt:

'Gordon Brown will warn on Thursday that the world faces youth unemployment of "epidemic proportions", as he urges joint action by the G20 group of developed and developing nations to tackle rising joblessness.
...
"Unemployment is an international timebomb for both developed and developing worlds," Brown will say in the Ted Kennedy/John Harvard memorial lecture.

With some labour market analysts predicting that under-25 joblessness in the UK will edge closer to the 1 million level in today's figures, the former prime minister will say: "The world faces global youth unemployment of epidemic proportions."'

The man is the woman of Swedish Wahhabism

anthony · 19 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you're even a casual consumer of the news, you're no doubt aware of the plight of men in Sweden. If you're a man in Sweden, your rights are not your own. You must have a female guardian -- no matter how old you are. You can't leave your neighborhood -- indeed, your own house -- without your guardian's permission. She has the right to veto your marriage; indeed, you've probably heard of the 42-year-old Swedish doctor who's suing his mother to allow him to marry. You are not to have contact with women you are not related to without family supervision. Indeed, you're not even allowed to drive.

Do you like sports? You can't play 'em. Interested in politics? You can't participate in 'em. Want education? You can get it -- but it's heavy on your responsibility as a man to serve women. And if you're assaulted by a woman, you'd best not report it -- a man who was kidnapped and assaulted by seven Swedish women was famously sentenced to six months in prison and a whipping for being in the presence of women he was unrelated to -- and when Men's Rights Activists complained, the sentence was doubled.'

The Futurist: 'Misandry Bubble'

anthony · 19 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Executive Summary : The Western World has quietly become a civilization that undervalues men and overvalues women, where the state forcibly transfers resources from men to women creating various perverse incentives for otherwise good women to conduct great evil against men and children, and where male nature is vilified but female nature is celebrated. This is unfair to both genders, and is a recipe for a rapid civilizational decline and displacement, the costs of which will ultimately be borne by a subsequent generation of innocent women, rather than men, as soon as 2020.'

UK: Reading woman jailed for false rape claim

anthony · 19 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Emma Blunden, 21, told police she had been raped in a Newbury hostel in 2008 and claimed she was attacked by three men at a Reading house in February 2010.

A total of four men were arrested following her allegations.

Blunden, of College Piece, Mortimer, was convicted of two counts of perverting the course of justice in December at Reading Crown Court.

Det Sgt Elton Evans, of Thames Valley Police, said: "I think this sentence sends out a very strong message to people who falsely report any type of crime, not only rapes.

"Making false reports of crime is a very serious offence and Blunden has made false allegations about very serious incidents on two separate occasions."'

Ireland: False rape claim woman gets suspended sentence

anthony · 19 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A woman who falsely claimed she was raped in Bushy park in Dublin has been given a suspended three year sentence.

Liz Jameson rang 999 in the early hours of the morning in March 2009 saying she had been raped by two men who had grabbed her while out walking.

A month later she retracted her claims, saying an 11 year addiction to prescribed medication had resulted in a merging of reality and fantasy. She also told Gardai she lied about having terminal cancer.

During sentencing today the judge was told she's "more mad than bad".'

UK: Woman faces prison for false rape claim

anthony · 19 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nicola Osborne told police she was attacked by a man who forced her into a car after pulling up alongside her as she walked in Fratton Road, Fratton, in the early hours.

The 32-year-old claimed he drove her to a nearby park and raped her before her back to Fratton Road at about 3am on July 5 last year.

...

Addressing Osborne, Judge Price said: 'The offence to which you have pleaded guilty is a very serious offence indeed.

'It is almost inevitable that you will be going to prison.'

Ask Dad: I Want My Man to Get Circumcised

anthony · 19 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Travesty here. Excerpt (have barf bucket handy):

Q:'I'm very much in love with a new man. I think he's the one. Marriage material. There's just one little problem. He's uncut, and I hate to say it, but it really grosses me out. I want him to get circumcised, but how could I possibly ask?'

A:'So let's set aside the merits. I think you've really hit on something here. A truer test of devotion you will not find. His saying "I love you," giving you a ring, buying you a house, all good signs to be sure. But cutting off part of his body, in the most sensitive and nerve-wracking spot possible? That, my dear, is true love. If he'll do it, you've got a keeper.'

Position Vacant: Administration Officer - Leaders Institute of SA (LISA)

Minuteman · 20 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to posting here. Excerpt:

'The Leaders Institute of South Australia is the State's premier leadership development organisation. We are a not-for-profit organisation that offers unconventional, unmatched and unforgettable opportunities for personal and professional growth and community engagement. Our programs include the Governor's Leadership Foundation (GLF) Program, the High Impact Women in Leadership Program, the Edge Program and the Governor's Leadership Foundation Alumni Think-tank program.'

From the LISA website:

'Research undertaken by the South Australian Government's Office for Public Employment found that in the SA public sector only 24% of all applications for executive positions came from women and that women were significantly under represented at a senior level (ASO6 and above).

"It has already been recognised many changes are required in order for women to comprise half of public sector employees in the executive levels (including chief executives) by 2014, an objective of the State's Strategic Plan", said Christine Locher, Locher Human Resources, Executive Chair. "While progress is being made, there's still a long way to go as current growth rates show that it will take over 20 years for women to make up 50% of the executive workforce in the public sector. Studies show that organisations and companies with greater gender diversity at a senior level, perform better financially, so there's evidence to support the view that increasing women's representation within the public sector will make it more efficient. Women often have very different leadership qualities from men and the qualities being sought for executive roles need to be considered carefully. There are many issues to consider and this program will provide senior women with a chance to develop their unique leadership capacity, connect with other women from a diversity of sectors and consider barriers including individual and organisational. Our aim is to build leadership capacity among women and this needs to be undertaken in tandem with any systemic change." '

Joint Physical Custody Moves Forward in Minnesota

Anonymous · 20 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cautious optimism, admittedly. But those of us who have long rooted for Olson's tireless efforts on behalf of families will take what we can get.

"Nothing is ever a sure thing, and there are always surprises at the Legislature," said Olson, volunteer founder of the nonpartisan Minnesota-based Center for Parental Responsibility (www.cpr-mn.org). "But there is a strong degree of confidence among legislators that JPC will pass both the House and the Senate this session."

JPC is Joint Physical Custody, a bill presuming equally shared parenting after divorce. It's a nod to dads, who are too often marginalized in custody disputes.
...
Olson isn't slowing down. She was on her way Wednesday night to yet another meeting with another group of lawmakers interested in implementation of JPC, "who wanted to be sure they really understood and none of us were shooting from the hip." She was more than happy to oblige.'

Advance invitation: Foundation for Male Studies Conference

Matt · 21 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This is an advance invitation.

On April 6, 2011, the foundation is having their Second Annual Conference on Male Studies, Looking Forward to Solutions. This global web-broadcast conference will gather scholars representing a wide range of academic disciplines including anthropology, education, history, medicine, politics and psychology – and have them present captivating findings at the New York Academy of Medicine. The current condition of males as well as real-time solutions will be laid out to a live audience in over 10 countries. Moderated by Guy Garcia, an award-winning journalist, novelist and multimedia entrepreneur, and author of The Decline of Men: How the American Male is Tuning Out, Giving Up, and Flipping Off His Future, this conference promises to capture the interest of many professionals including professors, students, physicians, psychologists, politicians, health care specialists, authors and educators.

Please visit http://www.malestudies.org/ for more details.

To grab an onsite or online seat at this conference, use this link to register. Please note that onsite seats are limited to the first 25 registrants.

Please forward this to colleagues and friends who may be interested, or share this on Facebook.

Sincerely,

Joseph M. Notovitz
Director of Communications

Top 10 Unhinged Reactions to the Arizona Shooting (Plus Hanoi Jane)

anthony · 21 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We spend a lot of time at The Feminist Hawks' Nest exposing modern femisogynists for what they are: fake feminists and man-haters with no interest whatsoever in furthering anything beyond their own pro-abortion, socialist agenda. The "feminists" stole feminism, a movement rooted in equality for all women and which sought to make men and women equals, and turned it into a completely warped version of what it used to stand for. Instead of seeking equality between men and women, femisogynists engage in virulent man-hating. Instead of empowering women, femisogynists do all they can to make women feel like perpetual victims in need of government protectors. Instead of accepting that women have different opinions and political ideas, they shun any woman who does not strictly adhere to their approved politics: pro-abortion and big government. Are all women pro-abortion Democrats? No, but they've got an agenda to push, and therefore, a pro-life conservative cannot be a feminist to them. Only certain women count to these "feminists," and we at The Feminist Hawks' Nest have tried to expose this and reclaim feminism for what it should be: a movement that speaks for all women, not just some, and seeks equality, not hate.

Unsurprising, when the femisogynists saw an opportunity to smear the so-called patriarchy and conservative women all at once, they gleefully leapt on board. Again, it matters not to them that there is absolutely no evidence to back up their claims. They've got an agenda to push, remember?'

Student: Teacher's LAPD Husband Threatened Life Over Sex Affair

anthony · 21 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Southern California middle school teacher seduced and molested a 14-year-old student in a sexual affair that lasted several months, until the teacher's husband, a Los Angeles police officer, discovered the relationship and threatened to kill the boy, his family claims in a lawsuit.

The suit, filed Tuesday, claims LAPD officer National Beck threatened to kill the teen and his family with his police department-issued weapon in retaliation for the affair.

The incident allegedly occurred when Beck found his wife, Amy Beck, and the boy in his Burbank, Calif., home and she confessed to the relationship.

Amy Beck met the boy while he was in her sixth-grade class at David Starr Jordan Middle School in Burbank, according to court documents. While the boy was working as her teaching assistant, the family claims that "defendant Beck began a coordinated campaign designed to seduce the victim into having a sexual relationship with her and ultimately began sexually molesting and abusing the victim," the suit alleges.'

Smoking linked to earlier male deaths

RandT · 21 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Smoking is the main reason why on average men die sooner than women across Europe, according to research.

World Health Organization figures on death rates reveal tobacco-related illness accounts for up to 60% of the gender health gap in most countries.

In the UK, women live an average of four years longer than men, although in recent years the gap has been closing.

Second to smoking, alcohol accounts for about 20% of the disparity, the journal Tobacco Control reports.'

New Study in Kenya finds no association between male circumcision and lowered HIV rates

Anonymous · 21 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It's a small sample but still a significant finding, and isn't the only one with this result. Will the World Health Organization pay attention? Excerpt:

'Using a population-based survey we examined the behaviors, beliefs, and HIV/HSV-2 serostatus of men and women in the traditionally non-circumcising community of Kisumu, Kenya prior to establishment of voluntary medical male circumcision services. A total of 749 men and 906 women participated. Circumcision status was not associated with HIV/HSV-2 infection nor increased high risk sexual behaviors. In males, preference for being or becoming circumcised was associated with inconsistent condom use and increased lifetime number of sexual partners. Preference for circumcision was increased with understanding that circumcised men are less likely to become infected with HIV.'

Proposed Bill Would Create Domestic Violence Registry

Anonymous · 21 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'RICHARDSON (CBSDFW.COM) – Veronica Galaviz of Richardson is nine months free of the man who tried to first kill her before then taking his own life. Prior to that horrific night, Galaviz said that she spent years being verbally and then physically abused.

But a bill that has been proposed by State Representative Trey Martinez Fischer of San Antonio seeks to create a domestic violence registry, similar to the current sex offender registry. “Once you’ve been in an abusive relationship, you have some trust issues,” Galaviz said. “You always have some doubts, and this would be one way to relieve some of those doubts.”'

SAVE Expands its Fight for Fact-Based DV Policies

Matt · 21 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) continues to do battle with the beast VAWA. Here's its latest press release.

SAVE is having a press conference at the Heritage Foundation offices in Washington, DC on January 27th at which Christina Hoff Sommers will speak. Why that date? It's the anniversary of the Great Super Bowl Hoax who's timely death no one laments.

You remember the Super Bowl Hoax. That was when radical DV advocates decided that a recent study done by professors at Old Dominion University showed that the bete noire of the DV industry - sports and testosterone enraged men - went crazy on Super Bowl Sunday and beat up their wives and girlfriends.'

Robert Franklin: Case shows need for fathers' rights

anthony · 22 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Jan. 4, a trial court in Bakersfield terminated the parental rights of 17-year-old Christian Diaz. The court didn't terminate Diaz's rights because he's a bad person; he's not. He has no criminal record, no record of drug or alcohol use; he's on the football and baseball teams at his school and holds down a part-time job.

What lost Diaz his son was the fact that he's single. Had he been married to his girlfriend, he'd have had all the rights of any other father, but Diaz, like 40 percent of all new fathers nationwide, is unmarried.

And under California law that means that he, unlike married fathers and all mothers married or single, must take special steps to prove that he's qualified to be his child's father.
...
For decades now, we have rightly promoted the cause of gender equality in many areas of life. It is past time that the state of California made its laws on parental rights gender-neutral. The welfare of children depends on it.'

San Francisco man hopes to bring about ban on circumcision

anthony · 22 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At his website that presents the proposed bill and a picture of a happy baby, Schofield calls for the residents' support that "will help us to protect all infants and children in San Francisco from the pain and harm caused by forced genital cutting," adding that "damage ranges from excruciating pain, nerve destruction, loss of normal, natural and functional tissue, infection, disfigurement and sometimes death."

According to the bill, performing circumcision will be made a misdemeanor punished by a 1000 dollars fine or jail time for up to a year, or both.

The only exception in Schofield's vision will be made if the surgical operation "is necessary to the physical health of the person on whom it is performed because of a clear, compelling, and immediate medical need with no less-destructive alternative treatment available, and is performed by a person licensed in the place of its performance as a medical practitioner."

The parents in the United States can't totally make up their mind, and physicians are more hesitant to give them a recommendation. According to a quite recent report, in 2006 65% of the male babies were circumcised in the US (Jewish population is only about 2%), however, in 2009 the numbers dropped to 32.5%.'

Chicago Teacher Sentenced For Molesting Football Player

anthony · 22 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CHICAGO (STMW) – A former teacher was sentenced to two years of sex offender probation Wednesday after she admitted she molested a teenage student from the private Christian West Side high school where she taught.

Kathryn Vail-Wesley, 24, received the sentence after she pleaded guilty to one count of aggravated criminal sexual abuse for the late 2008 incident involving the then 17-year-old male.

Vail-Wesley sexually assaulted the victim both at her home and in her classroom at Chicago Hope Academy, according to Cook County prosecutors

The case drew headlines in 2009 when the victim's mother revealed her son was forced out of school following revelations of the assault.'

Don't Save the Princess

Anonymous · 22 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This ingenious little video doesn't fit any standard MANN category. It appears to be a simple computer game, but in reality it's a story about a demanding "princess" who exhausts the labor and finances of the men in her lives. By all means, watch "DON'T SAVE THE PRINCESS," but play the real game only if you dare!

Teacher suspended for standing by while 2nd-graders perform 'sex acts'

Matt · 22 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. No mention of the teacher's gender. Statistically it's safe to assume the teacher is female but there is a chance that it's a he and not a she. Stay tuned. In any case, it's beyond disgusting. Excerpt:

'OAKLAND (CBS 5) — A teacher at Oakland's Markham Elementary School has been suspended indefinitely after school officials said a pair of second-graders performed sex acts on each other in class – with the teacher present.

"I think everyone is taken aback over this shocking incident," Troy Flint, the spokesman for the Oakland Unified School District, told CBS 5. "Of course, it is hard to understand how that could have occurred."

...

In one case, several students apparently took off their clothes and were naked in the classroom. In the second incident, a boy and girl reportedly engaged in oral sex in front of their classmates.

Flint indicated that the suspended teacher, whose name was not released by the school district, was present for both of the incidents.

Flint and Markham principal Pam Booker said they were limited in terms of the details they could release at this time because of the ongoing investigation into the matter.'

Israel: Blasting feminists, Kadima MK appoints herself champion of men's rights

anthony · 23 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kadima MK Yulia Shamalov Berkovich, speaking recently at a conference organized by a lobby group dedicated to preserving the Israeli family unit, delivered a scathing attack on feminist values, insinuating that complaints of sexual harassment are often ungrounded.

"I've never been sexually harassed," she told the conference organized by Familists in Ramat Gan last month. "When a man flatters me, I'm happy. It's part of the natural balance of nature." The full speech can be viewed on the group's website.

The organization, headed by Gil Ronen, is dedicated to "saving and rejuvenating the Israeli family unit," according to its website. Its members see their mission as combating so-called "genderists," whose true agenda, they believe, is persuading women to leave their husbands and take their money and children. The group says its mission is to support "the sanctity of marriage between man and woman," and for that to happen, a man must be a man and a woman must be a woman.'

Crisis Control Center tackles domestic violence this Super Bowl season

anthony · 23 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Football fans across the nation are patiently waiting for that historical day in American history when their football champion is finally named. While the beloved commercials are playing on the television and the dogs are out grilling at half-time, the local Crisis Control Center in Durant will be tackling domestic violence in their first ever “Tackle Domestic Violence” fundraiser.

Advocate for the Crisis Control Center Anna Marcy said their board members have done it again and the center is very excited to *start the fundraiser which is geared to raise money for the program. She said with recent budget cuts statewide, their board members have went above and beyond to make sure their center does not suffer any financial loss.
...
Crisis Control Center board member Tim Boatmun said the organization does not care how you celebrate your Super Bowl Sunday as long as you are thinking of those in need. He said the weekend has one of the highest incidences of domestic violence and sexual assault than any other weekend during the year. Boatmun said such factors as alcohol and betting help contribute to these high numbers.'

---
*Ed. note: Emphasis added.

Study: Ninety percent of domestic violence education programs lack accuracy

anthony · 23 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A report released today by Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) shows nearly all federally-funded domestic violence education programs fail to meet minimum standards of accuracy, balance, and truthfulness. "At most one in 10 domestic violence training, education, and public awareness materials and programs are accurate, balanced, and truthful," reports SAVE.
...
If you're wondering how we got here, it has to do with a radical ideology, the lack of oversight, and the creation of myths, hoaxes and lies. Have you ever read that 95% of domestic violence victims are women? How about, "Domestic violence is the number one reason women go to the emergency room"? Do you think that more domestic violence occurs on Super Bowl Sunday than any other day of the year? None of these statements are true.

This distorted view of domestic violence has left many abused men with nowhere to turn. "One crisis call from an older gentleman will always stick out in my mind," recalls Lindi Jo Hall, a former hotline worker writing on facebook. "He was ashamed to go and file a police report, for fear of being belittled or looked down on by local police. His wife had broken his arm by twisting one too many times behind his back."'

Australia: Do men get a rough deal?

anthony · 24 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Seems a bit rich these days to claim there is a “glass ceiling” for female jobs. Load of cobblers, isnt it? I mean, Australia has a female Prime Minister and a female Governor-General.
...
The National Council of Women thinks so and no surprise there. I recently chatted with Victorian leader Jennie Rawther who pointed out that, among other things, women at the end of World War 1 had to give up their jobs to returning servicemen -- even though their husbands may have been killed in combat. There was no widow’s pension, nor child support.

Sounds tough but Age reader Steve Hills of Rosebud is not impressed. “There is overwhelming evidence that female health, safety and female lives were held as more valuable than men’s lives,” he says. “Men’s lives were routinely regarded as disposable. The view that women alone were discriminated against is an ignorant one.”
...
Hills is not alone in his jaundiced view of an anti-male world.
...
On the men’s rights website mensactivism.org the list of alleged discrimination is a long one.'

Woman Arrested For Sending Boy, 12, Into The Cold

anthony · 24 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HILL DISTRICT (KDKA) – A woman was arrested after allegedly kicking her 12-year-old son out into the cold early Sunday morning in the Hill District.

According to the criminal complaint, officers were called to the corner of Chauncey Street and Webster Avenue for a juvenile not wearing shoes at 2:22 a.m.

...

Cosby was taken into custody after officers noticed “glassy blood shot eyes” and alcohol on her breath.

The 12-year-old boy stated that his mother had come home from a bar and started yelling at him. He then made her food and she continued to yell and forced him to leave the house.'

Opinion: 'A painless, lifesaving surgery'

anthony · 24 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On to the pernicious myth that male circumcision, a 30-second procedure, is a "mutilation" and the obscene canard that it is the equivalent of sexist FGM. FGM is a horribly protracted and painful cutting of girls under terrifying circumstances, with the specific intention of eliminating the capacity for sexual pleasure, and rightly considered a criminal action. According to UNICEF, at least 100 million women have been genitally mutilated. Compared to their uncut peers, these women are 69% more likely to hemorrhage after childbirth, and up to 55% more likely to deliver a dead or mortally ill baby. For every 100 deliveries, the WHO estimates FGM kills one or two more children.
...
"Mutilation" is a disgusting word to apply to the excision of a non-essential bacteria trap, nearly painless and instantly forgotten (those who claim otherwise are fantasizing; no credible study demonstrates lasting effects). Unlike ordinary circumcised men, FGM victims know they have been mutilated in the real sense of the word. Feminists constantly remind us that men have all the power. If true, how is it that after so many thousands of years -- coincidentally up to the advent of the sexual revolution and the privileging of erotic freedom over ethical mating -- so many millions of intelligent and even powerful Jewish and Muslim males never spoke up about their alleged victimhood?'

Kentucky man goes to doctor for circumcision and his whole penis is removed

anthony · 24 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Phillip Seaton says when he awoke from the surgery, he discovered that the doctor had removed his entire penis.

The doctor who performed the surgery, Frankfort Urologist Dr. John Patterson says he removed Seaton's penis because he discovered a cancerous growth on it. He says he performed the procedure to keep it from spreading.

But the lawsuit alleges that the doctor was not given authorization to remove his penis. It indicates that performing the procedure deprived Seaton the opportunity to get a second opinion.

The cancer turned out to be a stage one cancer, considered by many medical experts to be treatable.'

Watch Oprah's All Stars Candidly Chat About Penises

anthony · 24 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Videos here.

'On Ask Oprah's All Stars, Dr. Oz, Dr. Phil and Suze Orman address audience concerns. Tonight, a lesbian couple asked if they should circumcise their son; instead, they received loads of frank penis talk from Orman and host Gayle King.

Here are three individual clips from the segment—which ran about six minutes total—during which Dr. Oz attempted to explain the pros and cons of circumcision to the couple, who are expecting a son in just a few short weeks.

In the first, King interrupts Dr. Oz before he can begin to address the couple's question by asking him, "Don't you think penies look better circumcised?"

And finally, another "Uncut penises are gross!" moment from King, with a bonus from Orman.'

Over 1,000 undergo male ‘cut’ in US-funded drive

anthony · 24 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Bukoba. A total of 1,158 men in various Lake Victoria islands have been circumcised in the four weeks as part of efforts to curb the spread of HIV in Kagera Region.

The International Centre for Aids Care and Treatment Programmes (ICAP-Tanzania) in collaboration with the Ministry of Health and Social Welfare are conducting a male circumcision drive at two designated government hospitals in the region.

As of June 2010, over 1,000 males aged between 10 and 55 had been circumcised at Rubya and Kagera regional hospitals while 1,158 others were circumcised in the four weeks preceding the official launch of the male circumcision campaign on Saturday.

The campaign is being supported by the American people through the US President’s Emergency Plan for Aids Relief (Pepfar).'

.....

US President’s Emergency Plan for Aids Relief (Male Circumcision)

'PEPFAR recognizes that medical male circumcision can be an important part of HIV prevention programs. At the same time, it is important that male circumcision be safely provided and that it be integrated into, and not substituted for, a comprehensive HIV/AIDS prevention program. Given the possible misperception that circumcision eliminates HIV transmission risk, MC efforts must reinforce the ABC approach Abstain, Be faithful and correct and consistent use of Condoms and must be linked to voluntary HIV counseling and testing, as well as screening and treatment of sexually transmitted infections (STI).'

I guess all men are still rapists huh?

Proud_to_be_a_man · 24 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original Unbelievable claptrap... the video that accompanies it is hilariously bad...

Oh how I hate being a man. I mean... all I can think of is having sex with every woman I see! And forcing myself on them if they don't co-operate!!! It's terrible...

Sheesh...

And yes, it was paid by MY taxes! Disgusting...

Feminists are obnoxious bigots and men have a raw deal: Tory MP calls for male equality

Broadsword · 24 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are increasingly the victims of ‘obnoxious bigotry’ by women and should start ‘burning their briefs’ in protest, according to a rising Tory star.

Dominic Raab, a new MP tipped for high office, said men were getting a ‘raw deal’ from the cradle to the grave following years of anti-discrimination legislation favouring women.

He pointed out women in their 20s are now paid more than their male peers, who work longer hours, retire later and die earlier.

Mr Raab, the 37-year-old MP for Esher and Walton in Surrey and a former chief of staff to David Davis, called for an end to what he called feminist bigotry.'

Newsweek: 'Why Female Politicians Are More Effective'

Broadsword · 24 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some dubbed it "The Year of the Woman." But despite "mama grizzly" talk and a crop of high-profile female candidates, last year's elections resulted in no net additions to the female ranks of the Senate and, for the first time since 1978, a net loss in the House. In fact, more than 90 years after the first woman was elected to Congress, female politicians still hold less than a fifth of all national seats, and do only slightly better at the state level. But that's more than just a blow for diversity and equality, according to a forthcoming study in the American Journal of Political Science—because women also rank as the most effective lawmakers in the land.

The research is the first to compare the performance of male and female politicians nationally, and it finds that female members of the House rout their male counterparts in both pulling pork and shaping policy. Between 1984 and 2004, women won their home districts an average of $49 million more per year than their male counterparts (a finding that held regardless of party, geography, committee position, tenure in office, or margin of victory). The spending jump was found within districts, too, when women moved into seats previously occupied by men, and the cash was for projects across the spectrum, not just "women's issues."'

Women Need Not Fear: Event to Spotlight Super Bowl Hoax

Matt · 25 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Jan. 24, 2011 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- Christina Hoff Sommers, author of Who Stole Feminism? will headline a press conference to be held in Washington, DC on Thursday, January 27, 12:00 – 1:30pm. The conference, "Super Bowl Hoax Anniversary," will reveal how the original domestic violence hoax was engineered, and document how the abuse industry continues to distort the truth of partner abuse.

Other panelists include Philip Cook, author of Abused Men, and Carl Starling, who was himself a victim of a false accusation of domestic violence.

The Super Bowl Hoax, which occurred on January 28, 1993 falsely claimed that more women are victims of domestic violence on Super Bowl Sunday than any other day of the year. The disinformation scheme spawned many other myths about intimate partner aggression. A full account of the incident can be seen here: http://www.snopes.com/crime/statistics/superbowl.asp'

Title IX backlash: Girls basketball loses crowds when boys play first

anthony · 25 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Becca Quinn knew her priority should be focusing on her basketball game with a cross-district rival. But it was impossible to ignore the hundreds of fans streaming past her toward the exits.

In fact, her Forest Hills Northern team's game against Forest Hills Central was delayed to allow for the sweeping exodus right after the 6 p.m. boys game.
...
The crowd of more than 1,600 would eventually dwindle to about 300 for the nightcap.

The scenario has left the girls and their coaches using words like "embarrassed" and "humiliated," but the conference's athletic directors, wary of legal pressure over a possible Title IX violation, say they have little choice to but to schedule the girls as the late game every other year.

The commission, which operates under the state Department of Civil Rights, argued that as part of Title IX compliance, girls should have equal access to Friday's second game — what it called the "marquee" game.'

Reverse discrimination killed choice for UD men

anthony · 25 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I am the parent of a son who by his own admission was probably the least talented runner on the team, but thrived with the experience of four years of University of Delaware cross country, while also thriving as a student.

I am angry, frustrated and sad that the government-mandated reverse discrimination of Title IX has eliminated the program that did so much to form what he is today. I suppose the injustice of discrimination because of race, gender, etc., always produces this kind of indignation, but my, how painful it feels.

Shame on UD and our elected representatives in Washington who are responsible for this reverse-discrimination quota of 42 percent male athletes inflicted on the men of UD who, through no fault of their own, were born male in 21st century America.'

CNN: Why homeless women have it worse than men

anthony · 25 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Danielle Berger: Your program focuses on women. Why women, not men?

Roseanna Means: There are so many things that women have to deal with more so than men do -- reproductive years, and then mammograms, then menopause. A lot of women's health is preventive care, and if women lose out on those screening tests, their lives are in danger.

In the world of homelessness, there are lots of emotional issues, psychiatric issues, women who have been beaten up so many times they can't connect the dots. They don't have an address. They don't have a phone. They're all sitting in a shelter together, but they're not necessarily friends. There's not a common bond of, "We're all in this together." Everybody is struggling. Everybody's isolated. Everybody's miserable.'

Wrongfully-Accused Men Call For End Of Death Penalty

anthony · 25 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two fathers, wrongly accused in the murders of their children, on Friday called for an end to the death penalty in Illinois.

Kevin Fox, who was falsely accused of raping and killing his daughter Riley, and Jerry Hobbs, who was falsely accused of killing his daughter Laura and her friend Krystal Tobias, said the system is too flawed to be allowed to continue.

"There are just too many gaps to do that to a person," said Hobbs, who was released from custody late last year.

Illinois legislators earlier this week passed a measure to repeal the state's death penalty. Gov. Pat Quinn hasn't said whether he will sign it into law.'

"89%"

Anonymous · 25 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

A blog entry from man in Portland, OR describing injustice in child support. Excerpt:

'Cry foul and ring the bell, fathers who love your children!
We are accountable, bullied, and jailed for child support
While there is no accountability to how the money is spent.
Believe it.
We have three-quarters of our salary sent to her
On a faceless check that bears no credit to the father.'

SAVE announces Twitter feed

Matt · 26 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Do you like to Twitter?

SAVE now has a Twitter feed, which will keep you in the domestic violence loop. About once a day, you'll receive news, announcements, press releases, and updates.

Here's our Twitter address: SAVEservicesorg

Come Twitter with SAVE!

Police: 90-year-old man fends off female robbers

anthony · 26 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HENDERSONVILLE, Tenn. — Police said a 90-year-old man in Sumner County put up a fight after three women attempted to rob him Monday.

The incident occurred outside the Verizon store on Indian Lake Boulevard just before noon.

Hendersonville police said three women followed the elderly man to the store and held him up with a gun when he got out of his car

The man knocked the weapon out of one of the robbers' hands, grabbed it and ran into the store.'

Woman Accused of Mowing Down Cousin After Facebook Feud

anthony · 26 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Long Island, New York, woman allegedly mowed down her cousin twice with a minivan after a Facebook-fueled catfight over a man -- leaving the victim helpless in the middle of a busy road on a freezing night, sources said.

Giselle Penagos, 21, required emergency surgery Monday to fix a broken leg and shattered pelvis after she and her cousin Melanie Spanopoulos sparred viciously over a cyber-Casanova during a wild car ride.

Luckily, an unidentified man rescued Penagos as she lay bleeding in Elmont, New York, early Monday morning and rushed her to her father's house in Queens.'

UK: Female teen who kicked Man to death jailed

Minuteman · 27 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A former public schoolgirl who kicked and stamped on a gay civil servant during a deadly homophobic attack was jailed for seven years for his manslaughter.

Ruby Thomas, 19, hurled obscene abuse at 62-year-old Ian Baynham during the drink-fuelled assault in London's Trafalgar Square in September 2009.

Mr Baynham died 18 days later in hospital. Police found his blood smeared on Thomas's handbag and the ballet pumps she was wearing as she kicked him.

The Old Bailey heard how she screamed "f---ing faggots" and smiled as she "put the boot into" Mr Baynham after he was knocked to the ground by another teenager, Joel Alexander.
...
Judge Richard Hawkins increased Thomas's sentence from six years to seven years because of the homophobic nature of the attack.'

F & F Honors Senator Wright, Assemblyman Cook for Their Work for Family Court Reform

Matt · 27 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families has named Senator Rod Wright its “California Senator of the Year” and Assemblyman Paul Cook its “California Assemblyman of the Year” for 2010.

In giving the award to Wright (pictured on the left receiving a plaque from F & F legislative representative Michael Robinson), we praised his "inexhaustible passion and leadership on behalf of children of divorce or separation and mothers and fathers with disabilities, as well as [his] efforts to improve the quality of life for all parents and their children."'

'Kids are all right with just mom'

Matt · 27 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Married, two-parent households are not always best for children, according to a new study by UC Irvine economist David Neumark.

His research shows the increased incarceration of minority men in the U.S. has contributed to more single-parent minority households and fewer minority high school dropouts. The findings are surprising, he says, as they contradict both liberal and conservative views as well as current public policy initiatives.

“Previous research has found that children who grow up in an environment other than a married, two-person household are more likely to repeat a grade, be expelled or suspended, or receive treatment for an emotional problem,” Neumark says. “Our research shows that policy efforts to create more married, two-parent households won’t necessarily improve outcomes for children and – depending on which spouse is available – may even worsen them.”'

Fatherless Boys Three Times More Suicidal

fondueguy · 27 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Researchers from the University of Toronto studied 6,647 adults, including almost 700 who had been under the age of 18 when their parents divorced and found men from divorced families were three times more likely to have seriously considered suicide than adult males whose parents had not divorced.

The multiplier effect in boys whose parents had divorced is over 50% higher than in girls according to the research published in the journal Psychiatry Research.

The link between parental divorce and suicidal ideation is no longer significant among women who do not experience these childhood stressors. But even without these stressors, adult men who were children when their parents divorced still had a twofold increased risk of suicidal ideation compared to men from intact families.

The reason behind why men appear more distressed by their parents' divorce than women was not determined from the study, but researchers suggested that male development is negatively affected by the loss of close contact with their father at a young age.
...
The findings echo recent research by the Prince's Trust showing that young men without a male role model are three times more likely to be depressed and demonstrate once again that Dads Make A Difference to boys' mental health and wellbeing.'

Are men victims of obnoxious feminism?

fondueguy · 27 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

The first half of the article is written by Dominic Raab, here. Dominic Raab, a new Tory MP, was recently featured in an earlier post on his call to end "feminist bigotry". He has stuck his neck out, it's time for us to support him. Excerpt:

'Earlier this week I wrote that from cradle to grave, men are getting a raw deal. Men work longer hours, die earlier, but retire later than women. I also noted that while some say we should be less precious about light-hearted banter between the sexes, you can't have it both ways. If sexism is wrong, the same standards apply to men and women. On the other hand, if you buy into the whole Men Are From Mars, Women Are From Venus theory of gender difference –with all its pseudo science -you can't complain about inequalities of outcome that flow both ways from those essentially sexist distinctions.
...
The (male) journalist asked what right I had to debate the issue as a white middle class man. This is ludicrous. Aside from the fact that I am elected to represent all my constituents –irrespective of race, gender or religious belief –since when did we segregate public debate according to social criteria? The fact is that the remaining pay gap is symptomatic of a broader common challenge that couples go through together -namely striking the right work-family balance. Rather than pitting couples against each other –in an outdated struggle of the sexes –we should be debating a common problem.

But, if hard-line feminists want to push the point, let's get some perspective. Pay is just one element of the employment bargain. The data also shows that, overall, men work longer hours, commute further, have a greater risk of redundancy and derive less job satisfaction. Still sound like women are getting short-changed?

And, while we are on the subject, what about the blatant discrimination against men? Men work longer in life, die earlier –yet the state pension age won't be equalised for another seven years. Young boys are educationally disadvantaged compared with girls, while paternal rights of access to children following a break-up are routinely flouted with impunity. Don't get me started on Sheila's wheels and women-only gyms –whether objectively justifiable or not, can you imagine men getting away with either? What Emmeline Pankhurst used to call 'the double standards of sex morals' have come full circle. As I said, perhaps now is the time to burn our briefs.'

Australia: Baby Boy dies malnourished and dehydrated-- all concerned about mother's problems

Minuteman · 28 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'The mother of a three-month-old boy who died malnourished and dehydrated has broken down in tears during a Perth inquest, forcing an adjournment so she could seek legal advice.
...
The Legal Aid representative said Ms Hughes was "terribly upset" and felt she could not properly convey her thoughts and feelings to the coroner.

Ms Hughes gave evidence that her mother, Diane Kelly, introduced her to drugs at the age of 14 or 16.
...
She said her father had encouraged her to reconcile with her mother, telling her: "You've only got one mum".

She said she had made bad business choices and became tens of thousands of dollars in debt and even considered filing for bankruptcy at one stage.

She also said she had been convicted of stealing as a servant.'

Happy ending, but illustrates problems facing Dads el cid · 28 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This column tells a story with a happy ending, but it also illustrates the problems dads go through.

The child (Nina Marie) was placed in foster care but the father was not notified after mom lied and said he was out of the country. He found out where his daughter was and contacted Social Services. He was told to attend a hearing, where the judge told him he could be considered for custody under certain conditions. Basically, he spent a year attending parenting classes and visiting his daughter--proving himself worthy--before the judge awarded him custody.

The good news is he finally received custody. The bad news is all the time he lost with his daughter while she was in foster care.

Article ignores paternity fraud data

Marc A. · 28 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

In claiming false paternity is rare, Marlene Zuk ignores important data from the American Association of Blood Banks showing 30% of 300,000 annual DNA tests are negative. NCFM posted that data at http://www.ncfmla.org/pdf/na-fraud.pdf

Marlene only talks about false paternity overall, which is hard to measure because most men don't get tested. The 30% figure, on the other hand, is a solid and consistent figure every year. It's not randomized, so it can't be projected onto the general population. But it gives us a raw number. It tells us at least 100,000 men are misidentified as dads every year in the U.S. alone, especially because that's only from accredited labs (at unaccredited labs, the percentage of negative results is about 22%), and these figures only count the men who get tested - most do not.

The bottom line is that hundreds of thousands of men are misidentified as dads every year. That's not insignificant, Marlene.

Criticising partner, denying them money and shouting is domestic abuse, rules UK court

anthony · 31 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'BRITAIN'S Supreme Court has ruled that shouting constitutes as domestic violence and anyone who raises their voice at their partner could be thrown out of their home, the Daily Mail reported Thursday.

Leading a bench of five judges, Lady Brenda Hale made the ruling in the case of Mihret Yemshaw, 35, who had applied for free housing entitled to victims of domestic abuse.

Ms Yemshaw said her husband had yelled at her in front of their two children and did not give her money for housekeeping.

However, her request was rejected by officials in Hounslow, West London because her husband had never hit her or threatened physical violence.

Wednesday's judgment means Hounslow council will be required to reconsider Ms Yemshaw's case.

Under the landmark ruling, denying money to a partner or criticising them could also count as abusive behavior.'

Illinois Teacher Ashley Blumenshine Arrested for Sex in Car with Student

anthony · 31 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 27-year-old female teacher is under arrest in Illinois, accused of having sex with one of her students.

Police say they found Ashley Blumenshine and the 16-year-old boy in a car in a department store parking lot on Tuesday. Blumenshine was in the front seat, the teen in the back.

"The person in the back was partially unclothed," said Plainfield Police Chief William Doster.

Assistant Will County State's Attorney Mary Fillipitch said they admitted that they had just engaged in consensual sexual intercourse. It appears the alleged affair has been going on for about a month.

Blumenshine is charged with aggravated criminal sexual abuse, a felony punishable by three to seven years in prison.'

Substitute Teacher Charged With Student Sex Crimes

anthony · 31 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BAY CITY, Mich. -- A substitute teacher at Bay City Central High School was arrested and charged with having sexual relationships with students at the high school.

According to a news release issued by Bay City police, the 41-year-old Midland woman met the students while working as a contracted substitute teacher for Central High School.

Police began an investigation after a female student reported to a school administrator on Friday that a male student was involved in a sexual relationship with a sub.

Detectives from the Bay City Police Department were called in, and as the investigation progressed, more victims were identified.'

Female Teacher's Arrest on Sex Charge Stirs Response

anthony · 31 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some allege school administrators know about inappropriate relationships between teachers and student and don't do anything about it. Others blame the teenage victim, pointing out that someone had to drive that second car there. Some ask why are cops wasting their time shining lights in parked cars to begin with?

There is more than one person out there saying laws regulating sex between students and female teachers are too strict. Who wrote these laws, one wondered, the Taliban? One person commenting online, who sounds like a school girl, says she knows more than one friend who is having an affair with a male teacher.

Many writers laud the victim as the luckiest teenage boy on earth. At least the victim was a male, said another, implying, I assume, that an illegal heterosexual affair with a minor is at least better than a homosexual one.

A lot of posters offer thoughts of sympathy for the families of both the accused and the victim. There is one who tells about his or her own struggle to land a teaching job, and many who marvel about how Blumenshine could squander her education and her career on so foolish a caper.'

Loveland teacher arrested on charges of having 'sex' with boy

anthony · 31 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Courtney Renee Bowles, 31, of Fort Collins also faces charges of sexual assault on a child by one in a position of trust and contributing to the delinquency of a minor, according to the Larimer County arrest report.

She remained in custody at the Larimer County Detention Center on Saturday afternoon.

Bowles was arrested at North Lake Park, where a Loveland police officer contacted the vehicle at 10:40 p.m. for being in the park after it was closed.

"The initial investigation suggests this was an isolated incident with no indication of any other victims," according to the Loveland news release.'

In contrast -- Capital teacher arrested on eight counts of 'rape', story here.

DA: Wife Killed Husband After Finding Hickey

anthony · 31 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MEDFORD (CBS) – A woman was ordered held without bail Monday charged with killing her husband in Medford.

Police found 34-year-old Troy Burston wounded outside a home on Exchange Avenue at 10:40 p.m. Sunday. He was not wearing a shirt and had been stabbed in the chest.

He was rushed to Lawrence Memorial Hospital where he died.

Police arrested his wife, 39-year-old Shawntina Burston.

Investigators say the two had come home from a birthday party and began arguing and hitting each other. She allegedly found a hickey on his neck and stabbed him with a cooking knife.

“This is another troubling incident of domestic violence turned fatal,” Middlesex District Attorney Gerry Leone said in a statement Monday.

“We allege that the victim was fatally stabbed by his wife during an argument, sadly leaving two young children behind.”'

Bond denied for Florida mom charged in kids' deaths

anthony · 31 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- Police opened, and then dropped, an investigation of physical abuse involving a Florida mother against her teen daughter, closing the case weeks before the woman admitted killing the girl and her brother because they were "mouthy."

Julie K. Schenecker, 50, is charged with two counts of first-degree murder in the deaths of her 13-year-old son, Beau Powers Schenecker, and her 16-year-old daughter, Calyx Powers Schenecker.

She was denied bond at a court appearance Monday, a court spokesman said.

"Our belief was that she didn't snap -- she planned this," Tampa, Florida, police spokesperson Laura McElroy told HLN's Vinnie Politan on Monday.'

UK: So why is it all right for women to be sexist about MEN?

anthony · 31 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While at the same time, and this is the shame of it, we ourselves are fair game for women. While sexism from men is the outstanding social crime of the modern world, women can say absolutely whatever they like about us.

For make no mistake: sexism is alive and well in this country and applauded in all quarters — as long as it is practised by women. And they are allowed to say the most terrible, terrible things.

Only last week, for example, Jo Brand, the newly crowned Best Female TV Comic at the British Comedy Awards, was on Have I Got News For You and replied to the question 'What's your favourite kind of man, Jo?' by saying: 'A dead one.' Oh, how the audience fell about. And the other contestants, all male, chortled away too.

I'm not saying it wasn't funny. I'm just saying we live in a world where the thorough-going awfulness, uselessness and superfluity of the male sex is such a given, that a frontline television comic can get big laughs by saying she'd prefer it if we were all dead.'

False rape report results in $500 fine for former student

anthony · 31 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Rebecca Diamond, a former SDSU student, pleaded guilty to false reporting and was sentenced with a $500 fine.

In December, she reported to the SDSU Police Department that she was sexually assaulted, and then later repealed the report. She appeared in court Jan. 10 and was sentenced with a $500 dollar fine.

Along with the fine, Diamond was sentenced to 90 days in jail with 85 days suspended.

Clyde Calhoon, Brookings County states attorney, said Diamond has served her five days, and the conditions on which the days are suspended are that she must "remain law-abiding" and "contribute 50 hours of community service."'

UK: Lowestoft: Student made false rape claim

anthony · 31 January 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A HAIR and beauty student who falsely accused a man of raping her to gain sympathy was given a six- month community supervision order yesterday.

Because of her false accusation Jemma Knights wasted 37 hours of Lowestoft police's time.

The 18-year-old pleaded guilty to wasting police time at Lowestoft Magistrates' Court.

Magistrates heard Knights, who lives in support housing in Lorne Road, Lowestoft, told police in July she had been raped.

Mitzy Bond, prosecuting, said Knights had falsely claimed she was raped to try and make friends with someone at the college she was going to.

Knights had hoped to make friends by gaining the other's person sympathy.'

Australia: Department of Health & Ageing - "National Male and Women's Health" Initiative

Minuteman · 1 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Australia, where it's now official that women are women, and men are "males". Link to department site here. Excerpt:

'National Male and Women's Health

The Government has committed to developing National Male and Women's Health Policies, to ensure that specific health needs of both men and women are addressed.

The policies will be developed in consultation with state and territory governments, health service providers, consumer and advocacy groups and the community.

National Male Health Policy - For more information or the opportunity to provide comments on the development of the National Male Health Policy

National Women's Health Policy - For more information or the opportunity to provide comments on the development of the National Women's Health Policy

Page last modified: 28 January, 2010'

Tasha Kheiriddin: Affirmative action in the family room? No thanks.

DenisP · 1 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ah, the joys of new motherhood. You are perennially exhausted. The baby cried again last night; even when she goes right back to sleep, you don't. You haven't showered in three days; your hair is a mop; you pray no one comes to visit, because the last thing you want to do is be social.

And now, mothers have to worry about "maternal gatekeeping" too? Gee, thanks.

Ohio University researcher Sarah Schoppe-Sullivan studied 112 middle-class of toddlers, and found that couples where mothers did more caregiving and fathers did more playing experienced less conflict than those who assumed more gender-neutral roles. Her conclusion?

She suggested parents may be subconsciously bothered when parenting roles conflict with their pre-conceived ideas.

From the mother's point of view, it could be a function of "maternal gatekeeping," Schoppe-Sullivan said.

"For mothers, maybe, it's hard to give up some control to the father," she said. "That could be a total social effect, but there could some sort of biological underpinning to it."'

VAWA Is an Excellent Target for Spending Cuts

anthony · 1 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While the U.S. House is trying to figure out how to cut wasteful and/or extravagant federal spending, members should be mindful of Reagan's advice to begin by cutting programs that are harmful. One that fits this definition is the billion-dollar-a-year Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), now up for re-authorization.

This week is the 18th anniversary of an event that precipitated passage of VAWA in 1994. It's known as the Super Bowl Hoax, the assertion made on Jan. 28, 1993, in Pasadena, Calif., with fulsome media coverage, that more women are victims of domestic violence on Super Bowl Sunday than any other day of the year.

That radical feminist fairy tale lacked even a shred of truth. It was designed to feed the feminist anti-male and anti-masculine prejudices that men are naturally batterers, women are naturally victims, sports fans are prone to aggression and macho posturing, and football is especially guilty.'

Barbara Kay: Science confirms the obvious — dads should make time to play

DenisP · 1 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new study out of Ohio State University seems to suggest that traditional gender roles work out better for families than interchangeability of parents and tasks. The study only involved 112 families, so it is hardly what can be called conclusive proof. But its findings will probably ring a bell with old-timers like me, or even new-timers who aren't politically correct.

After watching the target families interact with their children during caregiving tasks and while involved in play and various projects like building toy structures or drawing pictures, the study authors said that families in which fathers were more involved in play activities had more of what researchers called supportive interaction — i.e. "behaviours that are warm and co-operative between the parents."

These findings make sense. In their infancy, children are usually far more dependent on their mothers than their fathers. Certainly infants can be cared for by fathers, but if Nature intended infant care to be egalitarian, she would not have had the woman carry the child for nine months prior to birth, produce hormones and chemicals that reinforce bonding with the baby and produce the child's food in her body, ensuring close bodily contact with the infant many times a day for extended periods.'

Super Bowl-domestic violence myth persists

anthony · 1 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Though long ago debunked, the myth that more women fall victim to domestic violence on Super Bowl Sunday still persists — ironically, according to some experts, to the detriment of women.

The myth dates back to 1993 when, like a game of telephone, anecdotal evidence became conflated into a statistical fact parroted throughout the media without confirmation. That year, The Associated Press and CBS labeled Super Bowl Sunday a “day of dread” for women across the country. Women advocates spoke of a “flood” of calls to domestic abuse hot lines and media mailings warned women “Don’t remain at home with him during the game.”
...
“If you look at these myths they almost all promote this idea that women are victims and men are brutes. The ‘Super Bowl hoax,’ for example, depicts the average guy sitting in his couch watching the Super Bowl as a violent predator and I think this promotes prejudice,” Sommers said. “This view has been popular among hard line gender activists who want to depict masculinity as pathological.”'

N.D. professor says 'bee' violates Title IX

anthony · 1 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FARGO — A longtime judge for the state's National Geographic Bee claims he was punished for complaining that the annual contest was unfair to girls, and he's taking his case to federal court for the second time in three years.

Minot State University professor emeritus Eric Clausen is suing the National Geographic Society and five other groups. He says he believes the bee violates federal laws on gender equity because a large majority of the state winners are boys.

Clausen claims the NGS retaliated against him by warning him not to interfere and refusing to fund a North Dakota geography program.'

National Geographic Bee

Female Teacher Gets Massages From Students -- Only Receives 5 Day Suspension

anthony · 2 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Cheryl Grampa, a teacher at Cooper City Elementary School, allegedly had a unique reward system for her students.

Give her a massage. Get a treat.

It's unclear how long the 12-year veteran has employed the massage learning technique, but the Broward School Board suspended Grampa on Tuesday, reports the Sun-Sentinel.

Grampa, 45, will miss five days of school without pay for her actions, which stems from a massage request during the 2009-2010 school year.

Grampa "engaged in inappropriate conduct and contact with a minor student ranging from soliciting and allowing students to massage her, in exchange for rewards, allowing students to touch her in an inappropriate manner and failing to take reasonable and corrective action with respect to improper touching," according to a formal complaint by the School Board.

The woman has not been charged with a crime, but whatever she did rubbed officials the wrong way.'

Mom admits strangling daughter at NY college

anthony · 2 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) -- A woman who said she strangled her 18-year-old daughter because she "pushed my last button" pleaded guilty Tuesday to first-degree manslaughter.

Her husband, who discovered the body, wept during the court session.

Stacy Pagli, 38, had been charged with murder in the Feb. 22 killing of her daughter Marissa at Manhattanville College in Purchase.

But her lawyer, Allan Focarile, claimed Pagli was under "extreme emotional duress" at the time of the killing. Her mental state was the focus of pretrial hearings, and psychiatrists for both sides eventually agreed.

In exchange for her guilty plea, Pagli is to be sentenced to 20 years in prison. Sentencing was set for April 5.'

The Second Annual Conference on Male Studies: Looking Forward to Solutions

Matt · 2 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here. Excerpt:

'Distinguished experts will discuss the problems, challenges and solutions to the rapidly deteriorating status of men and boys in education, employment, mental and physical health, family structure and related areas. The conference will cover the impact of males' problems in the post-modern era, as well as their effect on both genders, and the presenters' views on steps to reverse current trends.

The conference will deal with virtually all areas defining contemporary life from advertising and education – to medicine, psychology and sociology – and represent a range of academic disciplines from anthropology, education and history – to medicine, government and psychology.

...

The conference moderator is Guy Garcia, author of The Decline of Men, a former vice-president of AOL, and the winner of awards for journalism.

In addition to this conference's global webinar audience (early registration is $25.00 per person), we also have a limited number of seats at the conference site, with an early registration fee of $200 per person.

Please share this preliminary program with any friends or colleagues who might be interested in attending or joining online.'

"Crisis Control Center tackles domestic violence this Super Bowl season"

anthony · 2 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Football fans across the nation are patiently waiting for that historical day in American history when their football champion is finally named. While the beloved commercials are playing on the television and the dogs are out grilling at half-time, the local Crisis Control Center in Durant will be tackling domestic violence in their first ever “Tackle Domestic Violence” fundraiser.

Advocate for the Crisis Control Center Anna Marcy said their board members have done it again and the center is very excited to start the fundraiser which is geared to raise money for the program. She said with recent budget cuts statewide, their board members have went above and beyond to make sure their center does not suffer any financial loss.

...

Crisis Control Center board member Tim Boatmun said the organization does not care how you celebrate your Super Bowl Sunday as long as you are thinking of those in need. He said the weekend has one of the highest incidences of domestic violence and sexual assault than any other weekend during the year. Boatmun said such factors as alcohol and betting help contribute to these high numbers.'

Denver Woman Accused of Knowingly Spreading HIV

anthony · 2 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 45-year-old Denver woman was arrested Tuesday and accused of knowingly spreading HIV while allegedly working as a prostitute, Fox 31 reports.

Prosecutors say Frances Woodke -- who has known for years that she is HIV positive -- offered sex to an undercover police officer for $23.

Woodke is being charged with two misdemeanors -- prostitution and solicitation for prostitution -- and a felony count of prostitution with knowledge of AIDS, according to the station.

The woman has pleaded guilty twice before to attempted prostitution with knowledge of AIDS -- spending time in prison for the charges in 2000 and again in 2008, according to the Denver district attorney's office.'

Canada's courts are softer on women

Anonymous · 3 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Commentary here.. Excerpt:

'No, I wasn't surprised at what a citizen of Adler Nation posted on my Facebook page.

And if you knew what Bill was posting about, neither would you. Here's the post:

"This is great. Let's all get drunk, take some prescription medication and take my beater and plow into everyone on the street. The courts will set me free and maybe I can claim damages too.

"Thank you Manitoba justice for protecting the criminals as usual. She must just be laughing at home right now and having a toast to the judge. This would never happen to a male."

Bill was reacting to the story covered in Sun newspapers this week about a Winnipeg woman, 52-year-old Joan Henderson, who consumed six double rum and Cokes while playing VLTs at a local restaurant.

She then got behind the wheel of her Dodge Neon and minutes later drove — no brakes applied — into 29-year-old Michael Pacheco. He was just doing his job at the time, picking up some road signs as part of a city street-cleaning crew.

...

If Michael Pacheco had been drinking doubles, then gambled on a safe drive home and smashed his car into a mother, bringing her within inches of death and a life of constant psychological and physical anguish, do any of you think Michael Pacheco would have received the same sentence as Joan Henderson?

If your answer is yes, my guess is Bill is among millions of Canadians who think you must have just been hit by a fast-moving vehicle, or you have a drinking problem.'

The Super Bowl Prostitute Myth: 100,000 Hookers Won't be Showing Up in Dallas

Anonymous · 3 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The alarm bells reached peak decibel in November, when Dallas Police Sergeant Louis Felini told the The Dallas Morning News that between 50,000 and 100,000 prostitutes could descend on the metroplex for the Super Bowl. The call to outrage had sounded.

His estimate was astonishing. At the higher figure, it meant that every man, woman and child holding a ticket would have their own personal hooker, from the vice presidential wing of FedEx to Little Timmy from Green Bay.
...
That leaves the outside world to speculate—usually with stats only appreciated after eight beers near closing time. Professors pitch junk studies whereby every runaway girl is a potential prostitute.

Advocacy groups take those numbers and fan them by the thousands, buffing them with lurid anecdotes of "sex slaves" and "victims of human trafficking." The fervent simply can't believe that isolated cases are just that: isolated.

But it's hard to kindle interest in the world's oldest profession. So they latch onto the occasional news story or CNN special. After all, children in distress sell.

"Underage girls make better victims, better poster children," says McNeill, a former librarian with a master's from LSU. "I'm 44. What kind of believable victim would I make?"

The study by the Dallas Women's Foundation shows how the numbers are baked. It hired a company to gauge the percentage of juvenile hookers in Dallas. Its scientific method: Look at online escort ads and guess the ages of the women pictured!'

UK: Man accuses shop assistant colleague of 'bottom-slapping', sues employer

Matt · 4 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"For decades it has enjoyed a reputation as the respectable department store of choice for the middle classes.

But John Lewis was yesterday revealed as the unlikely setting for a rumpus that could have come straight from a script for Are You Being Served?

A male shop assistant, Konstantinos Kalomoiris, 40, has accused a female colleague of repeatedly slapping him on the bottom.

And when he told her to stop he said she replied: 'I do that to all the boys.'"

Canada: Sex attack hoax case closes with no charges against perp

Matt · 4 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'There was no doubt a great deal of relief in Barrhaven, as well as head-scratching, this week when that January attack was revealed to have been a hoax. Ottawa police, who canvassed the neighbourhood and viewed video footage from the OC Transpo park-and-ride where the girl said she was dumped after the attack, say they have closed the case and that the claims made by the girl are unfounded. They have not charged the 16-year-old, who had described the man she said forced her at gunpoint into his vehicle in detail.

Some in the neighbourhood are now calling on the girl to apologize for the effect the hoax had on the community, especially the heightened sense fear that the streets were no longer safe because a rapist was on the loose. The incident must have shaken the community.'

US Supreme Court to Hear Child Support Case

Matt · 4 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

F&F reports here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families has for many years publicized the terrible child support problems often faced by low income obligors, and we've had some legislative success on the issue. Nevertheless, the problem remains acute, particularly due to the recession.

The injustice is typified by the case of Jeremy Lavine, one of three Fathers and Families supporters quoted in a national Associated Press article on the issue.

Lavine worked in the real estate industry and had a $1,100 a month child support obligation based on a $4,500 a month income. Like so many in the real estate industry, his income dropped precipitously, yet the Florida Department of Children and Families told him his industry was going to bounce back and refused to give him a downward modification. The kicker? Lavine's kids live with him 50% of the time.'

"Hot Sauce Mom" Charged with Child Abuse

Matt · 4 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CBS) A mother in Alaska has sparked outrage for allegedly punishing her son with hot sauce and cold showers. Now, she's the one facing punishment: charges of child abuse.

CBS News Correspondent Betty Nguyen reported on "The Early Show" Thursday a disturbing home video started it all.

Jessica Beagley, a 36-year-old mother of six, is seen disciplining her adopted son by making him hold hot sauce in his mouth. The reason for the severe punishment? He'd lied.

In the video, Beagley can be heard saying, "What happens when you lie to me?" The boy answers, "I get hot sauce. You get hot sauce."'

NFL Must Tackle Super Bowl Abuse Myth

anthony · 4 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell has recently joined the 15th anniversary team of the National Domestic Violence Hotline, along with other sports figures. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Feb. 4, 2011 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- A victim rights group is calling on the National Football League to denounce the myth that Super Bowl Sunday is a "day of dread" for victims of abuse. Stop Abusive and Violent Environments – SAVE – believes such claims foster hysteria and trivialize the problem of domestic violence.

The myth dates back to 1993 when a group of activists charged Super Bowl Sunday was "biggest day of the year for violence against women." The myth was later refuted by the Washington Post: http://www.snopes.com/crime/statistics/superbowl.asp

Still, groups like the Crisis Control Center in Texas are using the falsehood to promote its fund-raising efforts. According to a recent Crisis Control Center statement, Super Bowl weekend has "one of the highest incidences of domestic violence and sexual assault than any other weekend during the year."'

Domestic Violence Myths Help No One

Anonymous · 4 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Read the whole article, by Christina Hoff Sommers, at USAToday. Excerpt:

'"The facts are clear," said Attorney General Eric Holder. "Intimate partner homicide is the leading cause of death for African-American women ages 15 to 45."

That's a horrifying statistic, and it would be a shocking reflection of the state of the black family, and American society generally, if it were true. But it isn't true."

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Justice Department's own Bureau of Justice Statistics, the leading causes of death for African-American women between the ages 15–45 are cancer, heart disease, unintentional injuries such as car accidents, and HIV disease. Homicide comes in fifth — and includes murders by strangers. In 2006 (the latest year for which full statistics are available), several hundred African-American women died from intimate partner homicide — each one a tragedy and an outrage, but far fewer than the approximately 6,800 women who died of the other leading causes.'

Wrongly imprisoned man freed after 38 years

Matt · 4 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. There is no significant text associated with this story. I will mention that the reason (ostensibly) he remained in prison was not due to a false or wrong conviction but because paperwork was mislaid and he could not get a new trial. For this he was kept in jail for 38 years despite being acquitted. What had he been acquitted of? Rape. Did anyone care to get him a new trial or really try too hard to get him out of jail? Apparently not.

Personally, I think the real reason he was kept there was that he was a man charged with rape, and a black one to boot. That's about it.

Teacher not criminally responsible for sex with teen student: court

Scottie · 5 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Perhaps she was mentally deficient at the time, but given the description of her actions, I am finding it hard to believe she didn't know what she was doing is wrong. It's not like she made one mistake. She made many over a long period of time. Excerpt:

'SASKATOON — Family and supporters of a teacher from Shell Lake, Sask., sighed with relief in a Saskatoon courtroom Friday after a judge declared her not criminally responsible, due to mental illness, for a sexual relationship with a 15-year-old former student.

Michelle Francoeur was in an extreme “manic state” and lacked the capacity to make rational decisions when she agreed to have sex with the teen boy on several occasions between Sept. 1 and Nov. 20, 2008, Queen’s Bench Justice Duane Koch found.

“The criminal law does not want to punish people who were suffering a mental disorder at the time of the act,” Crown prosecutor Mitch Piche said outside court.'

Wife admits to drunken killing of husband

Anonymous · 5 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Edmonton woman who fatally stabbed her common-law husband in the back while drunk and then blamed others – including her daughter – has now owned up to it.

Norma Elaine Janvier, 40, pleaded guilty Friday in Court of Queen's Bench to a reduced charge of manslaughter for the Sept. 25, 2008, killing of David Owen O'Donnell, 57.

Janvier had been charged with second-degree murder, however the Crown consented to accepting a guilty plea to the lesser and included offence.

According to agreed facts, Janvier and O'Donnell had been together for about three years and were living at an apartment in north Edmonton at the time of the stabbing.'

NY Post: 'Bring any guy to his knees'

anthony · 6 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If men are dogs, then here's how you collar them.

The dating-advice duo behind "The Man Whisperer" book promise in their step-by-step guide that getting your guy to follow your every command involves shedding feminism -- part-time.

Donna Sozio and Samantha Brett suggest women can tame their beasts by simply smiling more and shutting their mouths.

...

'CASE #1: CAN I GET HIM TO TAKE ME TO DINNER?

I decide to Man Whisper to the unsuspecting dog in my life and discover that keeping my personality on a leash seems to work.

This, of course, is hard for a feminist shrew like me who has happily violated their every relationship communication rule, like never nagging or talking up my achievements.

I closely adhere to the instructions: identifying what I want, posing the issue effectively and adding a benefit for my man. I wrap myself in sunshine.'

Super Bowl, Misandry, and the Media

Anonymous · 7 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From Rebel Words.

Best ad promoting misandry and spousal abuse awards goes to:
Pepsi Max's Love Hurts. American males: take note. You are being kicked, having your heads slammed into the table, having things thrown at you, and having things shoved in your mouths. Enjoy.

...and the list of social media-male bashing is long.

Husband Suing Ex-Wife For Wrongful Death of Son

el cid · 7 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This story concerns a man whose wife intentionally smothered their 6-month-old son. He subsequently divorced her and is now suing her for wrongful death. He's being raked over the coals by commentators, but I can understand his reasoning. Excerpt:

'The husband of Superior's Stephanie Rochester - charged with smothering their 6-month-old son to death last year - is suing her for wrongful death, claiming her actions were "intentional" and have caused him "loss of companionship."

In the lawsuit, filed in Boulder District Court last week, 29-year-old Lloyd Rochester alleges Stephanie Rochester, 35, placed blankets over their son Rylan's head, causing him to suffocate.

Stephanie Rochester - who has pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity - "was under the erroneous belief that Rylan had autism," according to the lawsuit. She "believed that Rylan's condition would emotionally and financially ruin her life."'

Georgia State Lawmaker Seeks To Redefine Rape Victims As 'Accusers'

Matt · 8 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON -- A Republican state legislator in Georgia doesn't like the term rape "victim." In fact, he has introduced a bill mandating that state criminal codes refer to these people as, simply, "accusers" -- until there's a conviction in the matter.

According to the legislation introduced by state Rep. Bobby Franklin (R-Marietta):

To amend Titles 16 and 17 of the Official Code of Georgia Annotated, relating to criminal law and criminal procedure, respectively, so as to change the term "victim" to the term "accuser" in the context of a number of statutes making reference to circumstances where there has not yet been a criminal conviction; to provide for related matters; to repeal conflicting laws; and for other purposes.'

Predictably, the tone of the article is very much against the idea, despite the doctrine of innocent until proven guilty. Said before, said again: Men are guilty even when proven innocent.

A Voice for Men: On March 1, 2011 Men Will Speak...

Matt · 8 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thirty days ago I brought up the idea of an internet radio show for MRA's that focused on men's rights and the state of men and boys in modern western culture. The idea was to have a more prominent platform than a blog or website could provide, and to create a launch pad for other activism.

At the time I did some research on the idea and determined that a reasonable start up amount for this kind of venture would be $4,500.00. To be honest, I was not encouraged. The men's movement is populated with a lot of disenfranchised, impoverished men, many of whom have been stripped of assets and livelihood by the western worlds system of feminist governance.

Add to that the fact that we tend to be a contentious group that operate more or less separately from each other and it would appear a recipe for a quick failure.

But that was before $7,634.00 was donated, as well as many hours of vital expertise, from graphic design to sound engineering to show production to original music.

In short, hell just froze over. A Voice for Men Radio will begin broadcasting on March 1st, 2011, a mere three weeks away. And we have already developed the resources across the net to make that launch day something to remember.'

Tell Attorney General Holder: "Speak the Truth!"

Matt · 8 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Attorney General Eric Holder (the first African-American to hold the position), claimed in a 2009 speech: "Intimate partner homicide is the leading cause of death for African-American women ages 15 to 45." (http://www.justice.gov/ag/speeches/2009/ag-speech-091019.html) The problem with his shocking statement is that it is not true. As revealed in a recent USA Today editorial, the Centers for Disease Control reports the leading causes of death for African-American women in this age group are cancer, heart disease, unintentional injuries, and HIV disease," (http://www.usatoday.com/news/opinion/forum/2011-02-03-sommers04_st_N.htm)

So why has this myth remained on the Justice Department website for well over a year?

Victims of intimate violence are best served by the truth. Contact Attorney General Eric Holder today and ask him to speak honestly about domestic violence.

Contact Attorney General Holder TODAY:

* Email: AskDOJ-at-usdoj.gov
* Telephone: 202-514-2000
* Fax: 202-307-6777

Explain to Attorney General Eric Holder that you expect the Department of Justice website to contain only truthful information. Tell him to remove his inaccurate claim immediately, and to establish a Task Force to verify the truthfulness of domestic violence information at the Office of Violence Against Women and elsewhere on the DoJ website.

Chiliean Woman calls in bomb threat to keep boyfriend off plane dooquidis4ever · 8 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. It turns out that the maximum she could face is 61 days in jail. Prosecutors decided not to invoke the more severe anti-terrorism law after hearing the couple's story. What would have happened had this been a man? Excerpt:

'SANTIAGO, Chile – People are capable of doing many things for love. What Grace Guajardo did forced the evacuation of more than 300 people from a plane moments before takeoff.

Authorities say she phoned in a false bomb threat to keep her boyfriend from flying off to a new job.

"I'm sorry, but I did it for love," Guajardo said Monday after she was charged with making a false bomb threat.

Freed pending trial, she faces up to 61 days in jail if convicted. Prosecutors decided not to invoke the more severe anti-terrorism law after hearing the couple's story.'

Female gym teacher accused of sex acts with football players

anthony · 8 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MASON — A female Mason high school gym teacher is accused of having sexual misconduct with five students, most of them football players at the school.

A Warren County grand jury on Friday indicted Stacy Schuler of Springboro on 16 counts of sexual battery, a third-degree felony; and three misdemeanor counts of offenses involving underage persons.

Schuler, who will turn 33 next week, allegedly had sexual contact with the students on five different occasions between August and December, according to officials with the Warren County Prosecutor's Office. She also allegedly bought alcohol for the students, according to the indictment.'

NYT - Social Scientist Exposes Sex Bias

liberty · 8 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It has been revealed that some of the world's pre-eminent experts on bias discovered an unexpected form of it at their annual meeting. No mention of identifying misandry as a primary social issue occurred in this (obvious) discovery, though. Excerpt:

'"This is a statistically impossible lack of diversity," Dr. Haidt concluded, noting polls showing that 40 percent of Americans are conservative and 20 percent are liberal. In his speech and in an interview, Dr. Haidt agued that social psychologists are a "tribal-moral community" united by "sacred values" that hinder research and damage their credibility — and blind them to the hostile climate they've created for non-liberals.

"Anywhere in the world that social psychologists see women or minorities underrepresented by a factor of two or three, our minds jump to discrimination as the explanation," said Dr. Haidt, who called himself a longtime liberal turned centrist. "But when we find out that conservatives are underrepresented among us by a factor of more than 100, suddenly everyone finds it quite easy to generate alternate explanations."

...

"Thus," they conclude, "the ongoing focus on sex discrimination in reviewing, interviewing and hiring represents costly, misplaced effort. Society is engaged in the present in solving problems of the past." Instead of presuming discrimination in science or expecting the sexes to show equal interest in every discipline, the Cornell researchers say, universities should make it easier for women in any field to combine scholarship with family responsibilities.'

Call to Action: Help stop circumcision at Darwin GP Super Clinic - Deadline 15 Feb 2011

Minuteman · 9 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Please download the document from the following link and type your name, title and e-mail address in the allocated spaces on the covering letter and e-mail to gpsuperclinics@health.gov.au with the subject line 'GP Super Clinics Consultation Registration Form' (before Tuesday 15 February 2011 0730 GMT):

http://rapidshare.com/files/447000283/Darwin_15February2011_.doc

Please leave a reply so that I can gauge the number of submissions made.

The submission reads:

'I am writing to ask you to protect boys from the harmful practice of male genital mutilation, also known as circumcision. As you may already know, circumcision removes the most sexually sensitive parts of a boy's penis, including the foreskin, the frenulum, and the ridged band of nerves [1].

The male foreskin is also designed to protect the glans of the penis throughout a man's life, ensuring that the internal mucosal tissue remains moist and sensitive (much the same way that a woman's clitoral hood protects the clitoris). In addition, the foreskin acts as a natural gliding mechanism to reduce chafing and dryness during intercourse [2].

Although girls have been legally protected from all forms of genital cutting since the 1990s, nearly 15% of boys in Australia are still circumcised without their consent [3].

The Royal Australasian College of Physicians [4] advises against routine male circumcision, and no national medical association in the world recommends that boys be forcefully circumcised for preventive health reasons.

Recently you may have heard about several African studies which purport to show a link between male circumcision and reduced transmission of the HIV/AIDS virus, the methodology and conclusions of which have been seriously questioned within the academic literature [5]. While adults are certainly free to choose this elective surgery if they feel it will make them safer (after being fully informed of the risks and consequences), that does not mean that healthy normal infants and children should be forced to undergo circumcision simply because it might offer some possible medical benefit in the future.

By the same token, minors should not be forcefully circumcised to satisfy the religious, cultural, or cosmetic preferences of their parents.

I watch with great sadness as this mutilating procedure continues to be forced upon helpless male victims. With all that we now know about the harm that male circumcision causes, why do we let it continue? Why are girls protected from this practice but not boys?

For the sake of men's sexual health, human rights, and citizen equality, I urge you to take a stand against male genital mutilation.

Please mandate that GP Super Clinics:

• Must not offer among their services the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision;
• Must not permit on their premises individuals or organisations promoting the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision;
• Must not allow their facilities to be used for the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision.; and
• Must not stock or allow on their premises literature or other material promoting the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision.

References

1. Morris L. Sorrells, James L. Snyder, Mark D. Reiss, Christopher Eden, Marilyn F. Milos, Norma Wilcox, Robert S. Van Howe Fine-touch pressure thresholds in the adult penis British Journal of Urology International, Volume 99 Issue 4 Page 864 – 869 April 2007 http://www.nocirc.org/touch-test/bju_6685.pdf

2. Taylor, J.P., A.P. Lockwood and A.J.Taylor The prepuce: Specialized mucosa of the penis and its loss to circumcision Journal of Urology (1996), 77, 291-295 http://www.cirp.org/library/anatomy/taylor/

3. Medicare Australia https://www.medicareaustralia.gov.au/statistics/mbs_item.shtml

4. http://www.racp.edu.au/index.cfm?objectid=65118B16-F145-8B74-236C86100E4E3E8E

5. Lawrence W Green, Ryan G McAllister, Kent W Peterson & John W Travis Male circumcision is not the HIV 'vaccine' we have been waiting for! Future HIV Therapy May 2008, Vol. 2, No. 3, Pages 193-199 http://www.futuremedicine.com/doi/full/10.2217/17469600.2.3.193

Assange's lawyers want Swedish prosecutor to testify

anthony · 9 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'London (CNN) -- Lawyers for Julian Assange wrapped up their case against his extradition to Sweden on Tuesday and challenged a Swedish prosecutor to "come to London" to defend her handling of the sexual misconduct allegations facing the WikiLeaks founder.

"Today, we have seen a Hamlet without the princess -- a prosecutor who has been ready to feed the media within information, but has been unwilling to come here," Assange attorney Mark Stephens told reporters outside a south London courtroom. Stephens called on Swedish prosecutor Marianne Ny to attend the extradition hearing when it resumes Friday and "subject yourself to the cross-examination."'

Radical feminism: what it is and why we're afraid of it

anthony · 9 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So what is radical feminism? Historically, radical feminism was a specific strand of the feminist movement that emerged in Europe and North America in the late 1960s. Distinctive to this strand was its emphasis on the role of male violence against women in the creation and maintenance of gender inequality (as argued by the likes of Susan Brownmiller, Andrea Dworkin and Catherine MacKinnon). And while a minority of radical feminists – most infamously Valerie Solanas – were hostile to men, radical feminism was much more instrumental in generating widespread support for campaigns around issues such as rape, domestic violence and sexual harassment.'

'Women Being Nice is Genetic'

anthony · 9 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recently conducted study has stated that women tend to be generally nice in nature, whereas men have to work towards being more courteous to people. The latest finding might come off to be as unacceptable for half of the people. But, the study by researchers at the University of Edinburgh has stated that people being nice depends on their genes.

Apparently, women happen to be more pro-social and that being nice is already in their system. For the study, around 1,000 pairs of twins were quizzed on topics revolving around how happy they were to perform extra duties at work. Apart from that they were also asked, if they'd pay more for better healthcare.'

Where are the boys?

anthony · 9 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A common refrain among coeds these days, as college attendance and graduation rates among males are tanking across the nation.

More and more, American teenage boys seem to be falling behind their female peers in educational attainment, causing a gender schism and disrupting the social pecking order. Curiously, the drop in attendance by males seems to correspond to the rate of increase in female-headed single-parent households nationwide. The ultimately more important question might be, Where are the fathers?

In an educational system dominated by women, and with relatively few male role models in the schools, boys start to tune out of school around early adolescence; especially boys whose interests do not center around sports — the only aspect of education with a strong concentration of adult male teachers.'

The Foundation for Male Studies' 2nd Annual Conference on Male Studies: Looking Forward to Solutions

Matt · 10 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

See blog post here. Excerpt:

'Less than two months away, The Foundation for Male Studies' 2nd Annual Conference on Male Studies: Looking Forward to Solutions will be unveiled to participants on site as well as through connected computers.

During the past month, the Foundation has been committed to promoting, encouraging and engaging individuals through email blasts, press releases and personal phone calls - to capture as many participants as possible and get them to sign up for our upcoming conference on April 6.

If you have registered for the conference, please accept my sincerest thanks for supporting us. If you haven't, I hope you will consider this consortium of scholars and professionals well worth the small $25.00 participation fee, and will register here.'

Debate fires up over presumption of joint custody

Matt · 10 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A fundamental change to the very basis on which post-separation parenting is viewed is being urged by some members of the legal and mental-health professions while others fiercely oppose the idea.

In fact, the introduction of a presumption of continued joint custody after separation is a measure that provokes strong opinions on both sides of the argument. Garry Wise of Wise Law Office in Toronto says that bringing in a presumption of joint custody would be an “across-the-board” approach to family law reform that would reduce the number of cases coming before the courts.

“This would be the biggest solution of all. What we do not have is a legally sanctioned culture of joint parenting at the federal level under the Divorce Act or the provincial level. We have an anachronism of a custody/access-based system that evolved one or more generation ago when one parent was at home and one parent was working.'

Male Baby as Future Rapist Sparks Furor and More

Anonymous · 10 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Josh Jasper thought his television commercial, which depicts a baby as a future rapist, would teach viewers about violence prevention.

Instead, thanks to YouTube, the ad has triggered an international firestorm and death threats for the Dubuque man, who heads a nonprofit advocacy group for victims of sexual assault and domestic violence.
...
The ad contrasts a smiling baby with the following script: “He’s tough. He’s strong. He’s aggressive. He’s powerful. He raped his girlfriend. But he wasn’t always this way. What are you teaching your son? …”

Jasper said the ad was intended to make a point that people are not born violent, but are conditioned to be that way. He said donations paid for the commercial, which has aired for nearly a year on televisions in northeast Iowa and parts of Illinois and Wisconsin.'

A global conspiracy against St Julian?

anthony · 10 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Granted, the grounds for the two women's sex accusations look pretty shaky, and Sweden's rape laws, widely regarded as the strictest in the world, are deeply problematic. Sweden has an image as a sexually liberated society, but the idea of women's sexual empowerment has become skewed. In Sweden, it is widely regarded as understandable for a woman to feel assaulted or taken advantage of if she hasn't given active consent every step of the way during a sexual interaction. This outlook appears to infuse the accounts of the two Swedish women who have accused Assange of sexual molestation and unlawful coercion.'

Maryland teacher is charged with choking, punching first-graders

anthony · 10 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A first-grade teacher at a Silver Spring elementary school was charged with several counts of assault Tuesday, when authorities accused her of choking and, in some cases, punching half the 16 students in her class.

The incidents happened in December, in her class full of 6- and 7-year-old students, Montgomery County police said. None of the students was harmed seriously enough to require medical treatment or show visible injuries, law enforcement officials said.'

Charges filed against woman for false report of rape

anthony · 10 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Albany woman is on her way to jail right now charged with falsely reporting she was raped Wednesday morning.

A manhunt was launched after Jaques Williams reported she was raped at the Superior Creek Lodge Motel on North Slappey.

But just moments ago police charged her with making false statements and false report of a crime.'

UK: Woman cautioned over false Crowthorne rape claim

anthony · 10 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The 19-year-old called police on 6 November last year reporting she had been attacked in Church Road West in Crowthorne.

Officers began an inquiry but failed to find any evidence to support the claim.

Last week they spoke to the woman again who admitted the claim was false. She was cautioned.'

Deputies: Girl lied about being raped

anthony · 10 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Volusia County deputies are contemplating charges against a 13-year-old girl they say falsely reported she had been raped, they said today.

The teen Tuesday told law officers she was sexually assaulted near Phonetia Drive in DeLand about 9:05 p.m. She said a man approached her from behind while she was walking her dog and dragged her into some woods at knifepoint.

Deputies quickly determined the story was a hoax, they said. The girl had been with a 13-year-old boyfriend, a sheriff's spokesman said.'

Wikipedia Is Male-Dominated. That Doesn't Mean It's Sexist.

anthony · 10 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The gender imbalance among Wikipedia contributors is not even news. The Wikimedia study came out in August 2009 and was covered by the Wall Street Journal at that time. In the 17 months (which the Times rounds down to "about a year") that this report has been searing the Times' consciousness, the paper has come up with exactly zero new facts to explain the contributor imbalance. Instead, the paper recycles Women's Studies bromides about a female-hostile society, providing a striking display of contemporary feminism's intellectual decadence.
...
The idea that these gender imbalances represent gatekeeper bias was demonstrably false even before the Wiki reality check. Any female writer or speaker who is not painfully aware of the many instances in which she has been included in a forum because of her sex is self-deluded. Far from being indifferent—much less hostile—to female representation, every remotely mainstream organization today assiduously seeks to include as many females as possible in its ranks. ...'

British Airways nixes anti-male seating policy

Matt · 11 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'REGULAR Gulliver readers will undoubtedly recall the case of Mirko Fischer, the hedge fund manager from Luxembourg who sued British Airways after it forced him to change seats because of an internal policy that forbade seating adult men next to unaccompanied minors. (Mr Fischer ended up in the position by switching seats with his pregnant wife so that she could look out the window.) Last month, Mr Fischer won his lawsuit against the airline over what my colleague described as "this sexist bit of nonsense," and a court awarded him costs and £750 in damages. (He donated the money to child-protection charities.) Now it seems Mr Fischer has won again. British Airways has changed its policy and will now "ensure that the seating of unaccompanied minors is managed in a safe but non discriminatory manner," a spokesman told the Telegraph.'

B.C. teacher sex trial told of 200 encounters

Matt · 11 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Vernon, B.C., elementary school teacher is on trial for allegedly having more than 200 sexual encounters with one of her students.

Deborah Ashton, now 45, was charged in 2008 with invitation to sexual touching, sexual assault and touching for sexual purposes a person under 14 years of age.

The alleged victim was 12 when the purported relationship began in 2003.

Their sexual relations continued for two years and would take place either at her home, where she lived with her husband and two children, or at the boy's home, Crown prosecutor Neil Flanagan told the court Wednesday.'

"relationship"? "relationship"?? "relationship"???!

Man wrongly accused of being deadbeat dad

Matt · 11 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TORONTO - Karl Rosier and his 12-year-old son were on the verge of being evicted from their new apartment, but they're breathing a little easier thanks to an 11th-hour decision by the Family Responsibility Office to return the East York man's assets.

The 34-year-old says he tried repeatedly to explain to the government agency, which accused him of owing $10,141 in child support, that his son lived with him and he couldn't provide for him if his bank account was frozen.'

Commentary: 'Why I am not a feminist'

anthony · 12 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of course, I now realize that the businesswoman who demanded the plane be held up for HER whim was merely epitomizing the essence of feminism: IT'S ALL ABOUT ME. It didn't matter how many other people on that plane missed their connections or were late for critical appointments. This woman got HER way, and that's all that counted.

It's the ME mentality of feminism that bugs me. As I see it, just about everything associated with feminism is meant to promote the agenda that it's all about women: their needs, their wants, their goals, their career ambitions, and everyone else be damned. Who cares how many are inconvenienced as long as her desires are met? Who cares about her husband's needs? Who gives a rip about the needs of her children?'

Huge Gender Degree Gap at Ages 22-23: National Crisis, Title IX, Government Funding? Probably Not

anthony · 13 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now that's a huge gender disparity in college completion at ages 22 and 23, but I predict:

1. This gender degree gap will receive almost no media attention, and certainly no attention from the gender activists, who demonstrate a selective concern for only those gender imbalances that favor men.

2. There will be no calls for government studies, or increased government funding to address the problem, and nobody will refer to this persistent gender degree gap as a "crisis."

3. President Obama will not address the issue by signing an Executive Order creating the "White House Council on Men and Boys," like he did for women and girls.

4. Neither Obama nor Congress will address the gender degree gap by invoking the Title IX gender-equity law, like they have considered using for the gender gap in some college math and science programs.

5. Nobody will blame the gender degree gap on structural barriers from grades K-12 that discourage men from attending or graduating from college, like they do for explaining the gender gap for women in math and science.'

Women Likely to Continue Outpacing Men in Education

anthony · 13 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young women are outpacing men in educational attainment and there's little sign males will make up ground any time soon.

Nearly one in four women had earned a bachelor's degree by the time they reached age 23, compared to just one in seven men, the Labor Department said Wednesday. And while a growing share of professions are expected to require a college education in the future, men don't appear poised to make up the education gap.

The Labor Department's report was based on a long-term survey of Americans born between 1980 and 1984. The results are from the latest round of questioning, which took place in 2008 and 2009 when respondents ranged from 23 to 29-years-old.

Because the same percentage of males and females — 16% — were enrolled in college at age 23 "it is unlikely the gap in educational attainment will close in the next few years," according to the report.'

UK: Mercy for domestic abuse victims who lie about rape

anthony · 13 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women who make false allegations of rape after suffering domestic violence by their partners could escape prosecution under new guidelines published today.

Others who have suffered prolonged intimidation and abuse, or were pressured into retracting their claim by their alleged attacker, will also be less likely to be charged.

*Young or immature women who make false accusations without realising the seriousness of their actions are similarly unlikely to be prosecuted, along with those whose claims do not lead to a man being detained or charged.

The reforms, announced today by the Director of Public Prosecutions, Keir Starmer QC, follow a ruling by Court of Appeal judges last year over the case of a 28-year-old woman who had earlier been jailed at Mold crown court for perverting the course of justice.'

---
*Ed.: Emphasis added

Woman’s false abuse allegations exposed in San Francisco court

anthony · 13 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is not often charges will be dropped midtrial — and even less often that a jury will applaud and offer to write letters to try to help the accused retrieve their job.

But that is what happened in a felony domestic violence case in San Francisco Superior Court this week when prosecutors gave up on the case after the alleged victim kept switching her story on the stand, the Public Defender’s Office announced Thursday.

The San Francisco man, 24-year-old kitchen manager Francisco Garcia, was accused by his former girlfriend of smashing her head into a wall multiple times and threatening to kill her and their toddler.

But Garcia said the woman only made the allegations after he told her he would go to court for a custody arrangement for their child. She took the news poorly and told him things were going to “get really bad for him,” Deputy Public Defender Eric Quandt said in a news release.'

Rapper J-Kwon Jailed for Child Support, Child Wasn't His

insdel2005 · 13 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article Here. Excerpt:

Hip Hop News 24-7 recently interviewed rapper J-Kwon about his interesting child support situation. During an interview with Miss Georgia, J-Kwon informed listeners that he'd been paying $2,500 per month in child support for seven years for a child that was eventually determined not to be his.

The artist goes on to say that he was jailed for not making the child support payments, which derailed his entire career by killing his ability to earn income.

He also said that when it was determined that he wasn't the child's father, the courts provided no remedies whatsoever for him to retrieve the tens of thousands of dollars he'd paid over a seven-year period.

J-Kwon is now saying that he plans to start a foundation for Fathers who are having their rights violated by the child support system. I support his initiative, because many of us forget about the millions of fathers out there who are doing all they can to have access to their kids and trying to do the right thing, but are left alienated by deceptive Mothers and a court system that would rather see a man in jail than with his own children.'

Judge orders former NFL player to surrender championship ring to pay ex-wife's attorneys insdel2005 · 13 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

"You see him playin on any given Sunday, win the super bowl but drive off in a Hyundai." - Kanye West

Article here. Excerpt:

Former NFL defensive end Chidi Ahanotu was forced by a judge this week to surrender his 2002 NFC championship ring to help pay a $130,000 debt to his ex-wife's lawyers, The Tampa Tribune reported.

Ahanotu, who played for the St. Louis Rams the year the team was upset by the New England Patriots in the Super Bowl, will have to give up his ring or risk being jailed. He has been resistant to part with the memento, claiming it's only worth $500, not the $10,000 his ex-wife's lawyers believe they can get for it.

But that's not all. Mainstream media writers can't resist putting together an article about divorce or child support without adding in a little misandry at the end:

Oh, that pesky American court system, forcing a man to pay his exorbitant debts. How dare they! What's next, holding him accountable for lying in court about giving the ring to his brother?

Look at the bright side, Chidi. If Mike Martz had used Marshall Faulk properly in that upset loss to the Patriots, you'd also be giving away a Super Bowl ring.

How exactly did her decision to run up costly lawyers fee's become "his debts"? After all they are no longer together. Oh yea, the same "pesky American court system" that forced him to sell his Superbowl ring, forced him to become liable for ex-wife's lawyers fees.

Lady golfers unhappy about law to end sex discrimination

Broadsword · 13 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

It was meant to put women on a par with men.

Women golfers have long faced restrictions at their local courses on what times they could play and which bars they could drink in. Often they were blocked from becoming club captain.

So when Harriet Harman introduced the Equality Act to give women more rights in work places and social settings, golf clubs were seen as ripe for reform. But the drive by Labour's leading feminist seems to have landed in the bunker. Many women golfers say that, following the changes, which have brought an end to men-only tee-off times at many clubs, they now have to pay more for membership.

Although the legislation was passed by Parliament just before last year's election and came into force in October, many of its effects are only now being felt, with golf clubs forced to rewrite their own rule books. As well as allowing ladies to play on whatever day they want, clubs are also having to admit women to "men only" bars and restaurants in clubhouses, and some are abolishing the traditional post of club captain. Others are even planning to scrap "husband and wife" contests, replacing them with "mixed competitions" in which civil partners can also compete.

Kirstie Thirde, from the English Golf Partnership which incorporates governing and professional bodies, said many women were unhappy that they must now have the same unrestricted membership terms as men, meaning that they lost their ladies' discount.

Mrs Thirde backed the Act but admitted: "Many golf club ladies don't want equality."

"The solution to Britain's laddish boardrooms"

Broadsword · 13 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Deutsche Bank's Josef Ackermann's deliciously impertinent comments that having women on company boards would make them more feminine, more "colourful and more beautiful" has caught the world on the hop and both sexes gasping at his gall.

In Germany, Silvana Koch-Mehrin of the FDU-EU told Handelsblatt: "If Mr Ackermann wants more colour in the executive committee he should hang some paintings on the wall."

Speaking from Oslo, Benja Stig Fagerland, the businesswoman who helped the Norwegian government to get half of its board positions filled by women, said she didn't know whether to laugh or cry. She decided to laugh, adding: "Although there are a lot of men using this pretty argument to hide their fear that there are some bright women coming into business who are challenging their competencies."

...

He made the remarks while being asked his view on Germany's proposal for a mandatory quota for women on boards. German ministers want 30 per cent of executive positions in the country's biggest companies to be filled by women, beginning in 2013; it's a move which the Chancellor, Angela Merkel, says she's against but the opinion polls show it has popular support. At present, only 2.2 per cent of executive positions are held by women in DAX 100 companies. But, tearing away the headlines, what Mr Ackermann actually said was far more interesting than the hype and should endear him to womankind, for he also said that having more women on boards is good for the "bottom line". And it's this fact, that more women on top does impact the bottom line, that has given this latest drive for more women in business some serious traction.'

Canada: B.C. man tells trial he saw teacher in bed with 12-year-old

Matt · 13 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'VERNON, B.C. — A British Columbia man told a courtroom Thursday that he remembered seeing his 12-year-old friend in bed with their teacher.

The man was testifying in the trial of Deborah Louise Ashton, 45, who is charged with having numerous sexual encounters with the boy over a two-year period beginning in 2002.

The friend told the B.C. Supreme Court jury that he was on a school trip, staying in cabins outside of Vernon, when he saw Ashton in bed under the covers with the boy.

"They went to bed together. When I woke up, they were side-by-side," the man told the court.'

UK: One in five victims of abuse in Cheshire is male

anthony · 14 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cheshire Police released the statistic as they launched a campaign to urge male victims to report abuse.

Officers said they were raising the issue in the run-up to Valentine's Day, "when relationships are at the forefront of everyone's mind".

...

Assistant Chief Constable Phil Thompson said: "Domestic abuse knows no boundaries and it can happen to anyone at any time regardless of gender, age and sexuality.

"Men in particular find it hard to speak out if they are being abused, but we want to reassure anyone who may be suffering at the hands of another, that domestic abuse is an issue that we take extremely seriously - whatever time of the year.'

"One older woman who is totally into Justin Bieber"

anthony · 14 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Could you imagine the outrage if a male celebrity made similar comments about a 16 year old girl? Excerpt:

'HollywoodNews.com: Justin Bieber loves older women and there might just be one who loves him back, other than his rumored girlfriend Selena Gomez.

In case Bieber wants the attention of an older woman, Jennifer Love Hewitt would be happy to give it to him, states Digital Spy. When she was on George Lopez's show, she admitted she is definitely a fan.

"He's so cute, he's so cute with his little dance moves and that little swoosh!" Hewitt said about his most famous attribute.

And while Hewitt is still pretty young herself, she wouldn't mind being his older woman: "I would like to be Bieber's puma!"'

Do Female Sex Offenders Receive a Lighter Punishment Compared to Males?

anthony · 14 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sentencing for an Okaloosa sex offender has sparked a lot of discussion. 31-year old Michelle Kemp had sex with a 15-year-old boy but she will not be going to prison. The lawyers on both sides of the case insist, when it comes to sex crimes, the judicial system is not sexist.

Michelle Kemp was arrested back in August 2009 for having sex with a 15-year-old. The boy's family decided not to press charges if the relationship stopped-- but it didn't. In December, Kemp drove more than 100 miles from her home in Crestview to pick the boy up at a drug treatment center in Bay County, where the two had sex again.
...
It was a very different case for Tim McGarry. The former Thomas Drive Fire Chief is serving a 40-year sentence for having sex with underage girls. The disparity in treatment makes some wonder if the judicial system is sexist when it comes to sex crimes.

District 1 Chief Assistant State Attorney Bill Bishop says no.

"We don't make any distinction one way or another whether or not someone who commits a sexual offense is a male or a female. We make our decisions based on the evidence we have available and the witnesses we have available to prosecute" Bishop says.'

New law requires colleges to teach about sexual assault

anthony · 14 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'House Bill 101, passed in November, requires schools, among other things, to establish a program that includes information on drug- and alcohol-fueled sexual violence; medical treatment and evidence collection; the possibility of pregnancy; and sexually transmitted diseases.
...
The National Sexual Violence Research Center in Enola, northwest of Harrisburg, estimates 20 percent to 25 percent of women are victims of forced sex during their time in college, and 90 percent or more of those victims do not report the assault.
...
Robert Morris University has a program called CURE -- College and University Rape Education -- aimed at first-year students, which addresses topics such as date-rape drugs and how to report an assault.'

Dartmouth College sexual assault fictitious, no false report charges to be filed

anthony · 14 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HANOVER – No one tried to rape a Dartmouth College student in her dormitory room, a police investigation concluded.

Police Chief Nicholas Giaccone, asked if anyone is going to be charged with filing a false police report, said, "Not at this time." He would not release the name of the individual who filed the report but said it was a Dartmouth College student.

For several days, police investigated the report of the alleged sexual assault that was said to have happened about 10:25 p.m. on Sunday when a man entered a student's room, pushed her down and removed her pants. The assailant reportedly fled after the woman kicked and screamed.'

V-Day: Valentines and vulgarity

anthony · 14 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Instead of embracing love this February 14th, feminists have called on us to embrace Vagina Day.

Why have some feminists hijacked Valentine's Day with disconcerting words like "vagina" and "c"?

...

Firstly, many of the monologues are not real:

"Some of the monologues are close to verbatim interviews, some are composite interviews, and with some I just began with the deed of an interview and had a good time" (Ensler 7).

In "The Little Coochi Snorcher That Could," a 16-year-old girl is seduced by a 24-year old woman with vodka and is later raped. The original text states that the victim was a 13-year-old girl who venerated rape: "If it was rape, it was a good rape."

Moreover, men are portrayed as sex-driven beasts. In "Because He Like to Look at Vaginas," a guy named Bob is portrayed as one who fixates on vaginas:

"Turned out the Bob loved vaginas. He was a connoisseur" (Ensler 55).

Additionally, this monologue diminishes the importance of men in society:

"Our self-hatred is only the internalized repression and hatred of the patriarchal culture" (Ensler 53).

...

Feminist Camille Paglia similarly expressed disdain for the play.

"The perversion of feminism that Ensler represents -- turning Valentine's Day, the one holiday celebrating romantic harmony between the sexes, into a grisly memento mori of violence against women -- has been well demonstrated by the ever-alert Christina Hoff Sommers...," she wrote.'

Teenage female teen lied about jogger attack

Minuteman · 15 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A Twilight fan has admitted lying to police about an assault to hide the vampire-inspired role-playing behind bite marks on her body.

The 15-year-old US teen at first claimed that bruises and bites on her body were caused by someone who attacked her while she was jogging, the Smoking Gun reports.

Her imaginary assailant jumped out of the bushes, knocked her to the ground and tried to remove her shirt.

But the girl, from Marathon in Florida, supposedly was able to fight off the attacker.

When officers determined the jogging attack as described by the teen could not have caused the marks left on her neck and arms, she admitted the story was a fake.'

Assange Attack on Sweden, Prosecutor May Give Appearance of `Mud Slinging'

anthony · 15 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Julian Assange's U.K. lawyers, seeking to block the WikiLeaks founder's extradition to Sweden on rape claims, may have chosen the wrong tactic by criticizing Swedish justice and labeling the prosecutor behind the case as a "radical feminist," lawyers say.

Witnesses at hearings last week in London said Swedish rape trials are secretive and portrayed prosecutor Marianne Ny as a "crusader" on gender issues who had a hand in shaping Sweden's "harsh" rape laws. The tactic may be a sign of desperation and is unlikely to stop Assange's extradition, said Neill Blundell, a lawyer with Eversheds LLP in London.

...

"Extreme feminism has taken over more and more" in Swedish society, said Peter Haglund, a defense lawyer who has represented more than 150 accused rapists since 1985. "Men are seen as fundamentally evil."'

False rape report wasted police time, authorities say

anthony · 15 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HARRISBURG, Pa. (WHTM) - Authorities who accuse a Herndon woman of fabricating a report that she was raped at a Dauphin County shopping center said valuable police time was wasted on the investigation.

Twenty-nine-year-old Amber Adams has admitted to investigators that she was not forced into a car and raped in the parking lot of the Paxton Square Shopping Center on Jan. 29, according to Lower Paxton Township police.

"We had people that just scoured video trying to find the perpetrator's vehicle, hours and hours and hours and hours were spent, not only by us, but by civilians out at the shopping center," Lt. Gary Seefeldt said.'

England: female chaplain sentenced for false rape charge against priest

anthony · 15 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A female Catholic chaplain at John Henry Newman College in Birmingham, England, has confessed that she fabricated a rape charge against a priest with whom she had worked on an earlier assignment.

Father Patrick Udoma had been ousted from his post as a pastor in Birmingham after Emma Templeton filed rape charges. But when police discovered dozens of text messages on her cell phone that supported the priest's defense: that they had a short, consensual affair.

A court has sentenced Templeton to 10 months in prison for filing the false charge, but suspended the sentence.'

MaleSurvivor.org

Matt · 15 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Discovered this site: http://malesurvivor.org/ and thought it needed sharing. From their History page:

'In October of 1988 the first professional Conference on Male Sexual Victimization was held in Minneapolis. This ground-breaking conference, organized by a few dedicated mental health providers, brought together professionals who wanted to better understand and treat adult male survivors of childhood sexual abuse. At that time, only limited information could be offered to those who participated. But those present had great enthusiasm and the clear recognition that the conference was a necessary and valuable resource, where professionals could share practical information and ask questions. And it was a safe place for some to acknowledge their own sexual victimization.'

Push for mandatory paternity testing in Australia

GaryB · 16 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This story in The Australian is interesting. Quote:

'A men's rights group has called for mandatory paternity testing of all babies after government figures revealed almost 600 instances of men compelled to financially support children they did not father.

Since changes to child support laws four years ago, there had been 586 cases of men successfully using DNA testing to show they were not biologically related to children they had been financially supporting, the federal government has revealed to The Australian.

In the overwhelming majority of these cases, the courts have not forced mothers to pay back the money they have received.

Of the 586 cases, only 74 mothers have been told to pay back the money. Those reparations total in excess of $533,000.'

It's quoted in the article that up to one third of men who seek paternity testing find they are not the father. Mind you, the article also includes an interview with the head of the president of the sole parents union - who immediately tries to quash the idea. I heard her interviewed on radio where she blatantly stated that most men who seek paternity testing are trying 'get out of their parenting responsibilities one way or another'.

What's more interesting for me is how the press reports this. I did a quick news hunt and turned up several stories over the past couple of years where women had their babies swapped at a hospital and took the wrong one home. When this was discovered and reported, the mothers were horrified that they'd been raising another woman's baby, and the news coverage was extremely sympathetic. Now I know this isn't the same thing as having paternity fraud put upon you, but it's pretty damned close - and when PF is reported (if it is at all) there seems to be no coverage of the emotional damage done to the man at all.

Is Science Saturated with Sexism?

anthony · 17 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In “Understanding Current Causes of Women’s Underrepresentation in Science,” Cornell professors Stephen Ceci and Wendy Williams provide a thorough analysis and discussion of 20 years of data. Their conclusion: When it comes to job interviews, hiring, funding, and publishing, women are treated as well as men and sometimes better. As Williams told Nature, “There are constant and unsupportable allegations that women suffer discrimination in these arenas, and we show conclusively that women do not.” Put another way, the gender-bias empress has no clothes.

For more than a decade, passionate activists in groups such as the American Association of University Women, the National Council for Research on Women, and the Committee on Maximizing the Potential of Women in Academic Science have insisted that women scientists are victims of pervasive sex discrimination, and they have produced a mountain of advocacy research to prove it.

...

But a misplaced focus on discrimination is now the law of the land. At the behest of the women’s groups, Congress held several hearings throughout the last decade on the “crisis” of sexism in the sciences. Scholars like Ceci and Williams played no role — only true believers were brought in as expert witnesses. Sen. Ron Wyden (D., Ore.), an early convert to the view that American science is saturated with sexism, was successful in bringing the Title IX equity program into the science lab.'

U California axes men’s gymnastics and baseball

anthony · 17 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men’s NCAA gymnastics will take another hit next year when the University of California at Berkeley eliminates the sport. As it is, only a dozen NCAA teams exist, thanks in large part to the implementation of Title IX. Cal is axing men’s gymnastics (but keeping women’s gymnastics) as a cost-cutting measure; their men’s baseball team is also being cut. It’s a shame that a program that brought us Graham Ackerman is being eliminated, but with the pressures from a slumping economy and Title IX, an NCAA void of men’s gymnastics is the world we live in.'

We've seen numerous cuts to men's sports due to Title IX, but none as significant as this baseball program, a program that's produced numerous major league players.

Notable Berkeley alumni who've made it to the major leagues include former MVP and possible hall of fame inductee Jeff Kent. Current Arizona Diamondback Xavier Nady is another alumnus. Berkeley has also won two national baseball championships.

Rwanda: Elastrator-like circumcision device being tested

Minuteman · 17 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The PrePex system works through a special elastic mechanism that fits closely around an inner ring, trapping the foreskin, which dries up and is removed after a week. A study conducted by the Rwandan Ministries of Defence and Health in 2010 found the device to be safe and effective.

"You don't need a sterile environment, you don't need anaesthetic, you don't need to use an operating theatre," Agnes Binagwaho, permanent secretary in Rwanda's Ministry of Health, told IRIN/PlusNews.
...

"In Africa, where we lack medical infrastructure, we feel it is the best way to go," she added.

Although cost-effectiveness studies are still under way, Binagwaho said the elimination of factors such as anaesthetic and highly trained staff as well as the gains made by the shorter healing time meant it was likely that the PrePex system would be cheaper than traditional clinical male circumcision.

"Three or four hours after circumcision, a man can be back at work," she said. "This means that the economy does not suffer because men have taken several days off work to heal."
...
Rwanda's HIV prevention strategy includes a plan to circumcise an estimated two million adult men within two years; only 15 percent of Rwandan men are circumcised, according to the government.'

American Boy forfeits championship by refusing to wrestle girls in major high school tournament

Minuteman · 17 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A standout high school wrestler in the United States has refused to compete against a girl at a major tournament because he says grappling with girls conflicts with his religious beliefs.

Year 10 student Joel Northrup, the son of a church minister, forfeited any chance of becoming champion when he defaulted on his match against year nine student Cassy Herkelman at the Iowa state high school wrestling tournament.

Northrup, who is home-schooled but was wrestling for a local high school, said in a press release that he withdrew because he does not think boys and girls should compete in the sport.

"I have a tremendous amount of respect for Cassy. However, wrestling is a combat sport and it can get violent at times," he said.
...
It is unfortunate that I have been placed in a situation not seen in most other high school sports in Iowa," he said.'

Please send this complaint to the Australian Press Council -- Deadline is 3 Mar 2011

Minuteman · 18 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Please download both of the documents from the following links, type your name and e-mail address in the appropriate fields of the Word document and then e-mail both documents to complaints@presscouncil.org.au with the subject 'Complaint Forms' (before 3 March 2011 0730 GMT).

http://rapidshare.com/files/448407846/Complaint_03Mar2011_.doc

http://rapidshare.com/files/448407994/AdelaideNow_2011__03Mar2011_.html

Important: The above procedure is based on the Australian Press Council's own guidelines and must be followed for a successful submission.

Please leave a reply so that I may gauge the number of complaints sent.

Thank you in anticipation.

California Woman Held for Duct-Taping Toddler

anthony · 18 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HESPERIA, Calif. -- A California woman is under arrest after authorities say she duct-taped her 2-year-old son

San Bernardino County deputies say 19-year-old Danyella Higgins was arrested Tuesday on suspicion of cruelty to a child.

Deputies went to the home of the Hesperia woman after a photo was sent to her friend showing her 2-year-old son with duct tape around his hands, feet and mouth. The recipient called authorities.'

Canada: Common law couples deserve fair shares when separating, top court rules

DenisP · 18 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Supreme Court of Canada made it easier today for common law couples who split up to claim a fair share of property or assets they played a substantial role in building.

Ruling unanimously on two cases that involved estranged common law couples, the Court emphasized that when one partner has contributed substantially to a business, property or the success of the other's career, they should gain a benefit that properly reflects their contribution.

The Court stressed the importance of adopting a flexible approach when it comes to assessing the relative role of each partner and working out a dollar amount that reflects those roles.'

VAWA Reform -- Call to Action

Matt · 19 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This coming week, Congress will be out of session. Senators and Representatives will be back in their homes district, holding meetings with constituents.

The main topic of discussion will be the federal budget. Earlier this week, President Obama proposed a budget that would produce a $1.1 trillion deficit for 2012. The Obama budget proposal includes over $777 million for VAWA and other domestic violence programs.

It is critical that we take action TODAY and contact your lawmaker's local office and request to set up a meeting this coming week. I am attaching a hand-out that you can use – or use your own handout. If we implement the recommendations spelled out on the flyer, we will be able to help more true victims, remove dangerous mandatory arrest policies, remove false allegations, and save taxpayer money!

To get your lawmakers' phone number, just do a Google search under the person's name, or look in the phone book.

Folks, this is the real deal. Either we act now, or we wait until 2016 when VAWA comes up for reauthorization.

The SAVE Team

Australia: Female Anchor Sexually Harasses Male Anchor

Stinger503 · 19 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

I wonder if she's going to lose her job like those Sky Sports broadcasters? Fat chance. Notice that it's on Channel Ten's Youtube page too.

Teenage boys asked to masturbate for high school "experiment"

Minuteman · 21 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Jamie Oliver's new TV series has been criticised in Britain after two teenage boys were asked to give sperm samples they later studied in a science class.

The controversial scenes will air on Channel 4 next month as part of Jamie's Dream School, a reality television program that follows the progress of troubled teens sent to a school run by celebrities.

As part of the seven-week series, celebrities were asked to devise classes in their specialty for the school's 20 students.

In his class, scientist Professor Lord Robert Winston asks two boys aged 16 to 18 to leave the room to produce a sperm sample.

His students are then asked to compare the samples under a microscope with the sperm of animals, including horses and pigs.'

S. Dakota: Bill aimed at helping fathers in custody cases moves ahead

Matt · 22 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A House panel Wednesday recommended passage of a bill that would make it easier for fathers in South Dakota to earn shared custody in divorce proceedings.

The House Committee on the Judiciary approved House Bill 1255 on an 8-5 vote. The legislation now will get a hearing on the House floor.

Sen. Dan Lederman, R-Dakota Dunes, introduced the bill. If it passes, judges would be required to begin divorce proceedings with the assumption that joint custody will be awarded to parents. South Dakota law now provides for a child's primary caregiver to be awarded primary custody at the start of a divorce.
...
South Dakota would be the eighth state to endorse shared parenting if the measure passes, Lederman said.'

Australia: Dr Elizabeth Celi talks about men's health, domestic abuse and social bias against men

Matt · 22 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. A bit old, added 11/14/2009, but still very relevant.

Teen Dating Violence: Girls are much more likely to be the sole perpetrator than boys fondueguy · 22 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Journal from the National Institute of Justice here along with charts showing the rates of perpetration of teen dating violence by gender here. Excerpt:

'These findings are generally consistent with another study that looked at more than 1,200 Long Island, N.Y., high school students who were currently dating. In that 2007 survey, 66 percent of boys and 65 percent of girls who were involved in physically aggressive relationships reported mutual aggression. [7] Twenty-eight percent of the girls said that they were the sole perpetrator; 5 percent said they were the sole victim. These numbers were reversed for the boys: 5 percent said they were the sole perpetrator; 27 percent the sole victim. In a third study, teen couples were videotaped while performing a problem-solving task.

Researchers later reviewed the tapes and identified acts of physical aggression that occurred between the boys and girls during the exercise. They found that 30 percent of all the participating couples demonstrated physical aggression by both partners. In 17 percent of the participating couples, only the girls perpetrated physical aggression, and in 4 percent, only the boys were perpetrators. [8] The findings suggest that boys are less likely to be physically aggressive with a girl when someone else can observe their behavior.
...
The study of seventh, ninth and 11th graders in Toledo, for example, found that a majority of the boys and girls who were interviewed said they had a relatively "equal say" in their romantic relationships. In cases in which there was a power imbalance, they were more likely to say that the female had more power in the relationship. Overall, the study found that the boys perceived that they had less power in the relationship than the girls did. Interestingly, males involved in relationships in which one or both partners reported physical aggression had a perception of less power than males in relationships without physical aggression. Meanwhile, the girls reported no perceived difference in power regardless of whether their relationships included physical aggression. [18]'

Perpetrator Relationships of Child Fatalities, 2006

fondueguy · 22 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Pie chart from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Resources here.

How Do Filicide Offenders Differ From Other Murderers?

fondueguy · 22 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ScienceDaily (May 28, 2009) —People who commit filicide, the killing of their own child, are no more psychotically disordered than other homicide offenders. Research published in the open access journal BMC Psychiatry has shown that prevention of filicide cannot remain the task of psychiatry alone, but health care and society at large must work to prevent the danger.

Hanna Putkonen from Vanha Vaasa Hospital, Finland, worked with a team of Finnish researchers to compare the psychosocial history, index offence, and psychiatric morbidity of filicide offenders with other homicide offenders. She said, "The novel results of this nationwide study reinforce the general impression that filicide offenders are a distinct group of homicide offenders. However, they did not emerge as mentally disordered as has previously been supposed".'

SF May Ban Infant Circumcision

anthony · 22 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Self-described "civil rights advocates" say that a ballot proposition to ban circumcision is on track for gathering signatures, meaning that San Franciscans may vote on the measure this November.

The proposed law is being spearheaded by local resident Lloyd Schofield, according to the San Francisco Examiner.

It's part of a national push to end the procedure, which some say is steeped in tradition but poses risks and has little medical benefit. The American Academy of Pediatrics and the American Medical Association do not recommend routine circumcision.

Getting on the ballot is the easy part -- only about 7,000 signatures are required. Once it's there, advocates will have to convince voters that snipping off body parts is a bad idea.'

Lady Gaga Poses in Raunchy Photo Shoot With Young Boy

anthony · 23 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A one-minute, behind-of-the-scenes video of the shoot, which was photographed by celebrity Terry Richardson (who also shot the controversial “Glee” pictures for GQ last year) features Gaga fondling her breast, licking her bicep, attempting to pull her t-shirt down over her lady parts, and seductively straddling a skateboard between her legs.

However, around the 47-second mark a male toddler randomly enters the equation – wearing a “Supreme” t-shirt while holding Lady Gaga’s hand, and doing a “thumbs up” as seemingly instructed by Richardson.

At this point, the 24-year-old songstress is donning a sexy black bra/panties set, fishnets and is doused in silver jewelry.'

Delaware running community protests university decision

anthony · 23 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'On Sunday morning, more than 100 members of the Delaware running community participated in the Save Our Sport Run to protest university officials' decision to remove the men's track and field and cross country teams from varsity status. Event organizer Kevin Kelly, a former assistant cross country coach at the university, said the run was also a celebration of cross country and track and field alumni.

"Were it not for our alumni, we would not have great spirit, we would not have reached this pinnacle," Kelly said in a speech before the four-mile run began.'

AVFM: AG Holder Loses His Grip on the Truth

Matt · 24 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the more recent episodes of this digital deceit is emanating from the office of Attorney General of the United States, Eric Holder. The AG, to put it succinctly, is lying to the American people. What's more, he quite obviously knows he's lying and has no intention whatsoever of stopping. Either that or the man is too incompetent to clean the office of the Attorney General, much less occupy it.

The case demonstrating this is simple and irrefutable, beginning with words from Holder himself.

"The facts are clear," he says, "Intimate partner homicide is the leading cause of death for African-American women ages 15 to 45."

To begin with, we must assume that a man in Holder's position would not make such a claim out of ignorance. Common sense, along with the certitude of his unambiguous claim would indicate that he has, at his beck and call, a wealth of cutting edge research and all the manpower needed to analyze it.'

AIG Resolves Duke University's 2008 Lacrosse-Stripper Lawsuit

Matt · 24 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feb. 23 (Bloomberg) -- American International Group Inc. has resolved a lawsuit filed by Duke University over expenses tied to the school's dispute with lacrosse team members falsely accused of sexually assaulting a stripper.

The university and the unit of New York-based AIG that sold insurance coverage to Duke "agree to the dismissal" of the claims, according to a joint filing yesterday in U.S. District Court in Durham, North Carolina. The court document didn't disclose terms of the settlement.

The school was seeking reimbursement of costs from confidential settlements with three members of the team who were exonerated after they were accused of rape by a woman invited to a 2006 party. AIG, the bailed-out life and property-casualty insurer, had offered $5 million to Duke, Joseph O'Neil, a lawyer for the insurer, said in December 2008.'

Women Are Probably Going To Hate The Men's Version Of The Feminist Revolution

anthony · 24 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A couple of days ago, I was having a conversation with a friend of mine who could fairly be described as a feminist. Not a conservative feminist — a feminist in the traditional sense of the word.

I remarked to her that over the last few decades, women's ideals, in everything from dating, to careers, to their life in general, have changed quite a bit while men's ideals, hopes and dreams have been much more static over that same time period. She agreed and said feminism hasn't done a good job of "helping men" reach their potential. My response to that was that when it finally arrives, she probably won't like the men's revolution any more than most men enjoyed the feminist version.'

Fathers and Families Supports Appeal of Half-Million-Dollar Child Support Order

Matt · 25 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families has agreed to be a signatory to an amicus brief in an appeal of a half-million-dollar child support order to the Indiana Court of Appeals.

Ned Holstein, MD, MS, Founder and Chair of the Board of Fathers and Families, reviewed the brief at the request of the Indianapolis law firm of Bose, McKinney & Evans, LLP, who incorporated some of his suggestions.'

Wikileaks' Julian Assange to be extradited to Sweden

Matt · 25 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Wikileaks founder Julian Assange should be extradited to Sweden to face sexual assault allegations, a judge has ruled.

At Belmarsh Magistrates' Court in south London, District Judge Howard Riddle said the extradition would not breach Mr Assange's human rights.

Mr Assange said the ruling, which he will challenge, was due to a "European Arrest Warrant system run amok".'

Earthquakes cause domestic violence, apparently

Minuteman · 25 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'Australians are among bogus officials who are going door-to-door in quake-struck Christchurch scouting out appliances to steal from stressed and vulnerable locals.

When 300 Australian police touch down in the city on Friday their main task will be to bring rising rates of theft and domestic violence under control.

...

There had also been a spike in domestic violence similar to one seen after the first quake that hit on September 4.'

2006 Swedish television documentary: "Gender War"

Matt · 25 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Disturbing 2006 Swedish television documentary called "Gender War" (Könskriget) on YouTube. Subtitles in English, make sure "cc" button is activated if cannot see English subtitles. The whole thing is only a couple hours, but parts are difficult to navigate as they are not laid out on YouTube in order, so I put them in order below. I asked the user to re-upload in less parts to make it more accessible.

http://www.youtube.com/user/figaropravda#p/u/11/Yta55u2zP2U http://www.youtube.com/user/figaropravda#p/u/5/isMK21PY7wc http://www.youtube.com/user/figaropravda#p/u/10/Rb2fcl4e3UI http://www.youtube.com/user/figaropravda#p/u/4/xfIHJkvag8k http://www.youtube.com/user/figaropravda#p/u/9/wkgE4YSArIA http://www.youtube.com/user/figaropravda#p/u/3/pKTlv2a35ZM http://www.youtube.com/user/figaropravda#p/u/8/ffaoPCWGIjI http://www.youtube.com/user/figaropravda#p/u/2/H50mgIXVj5U http://www.youtube.com/user/figaropravda#p/u/7/f98fY7NDKM8 http://www.youtube.com/user/figaropravda#p/u/1/02EfQvqFtoM http://www.youtube.com/user/figaropravda#p/u/6/-hgxHaSqzn4
http://www.youtube.com/user/figaropravda#p/u/0/RKKVb_vJ2Bc

UK: Mother-of-three jailed for falsely claiming she was abducted and raped after one-night stand

anthony · 26 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother-of-three was jailed for falsely claiming she had been abducted and raped because she was worried her husband would find out that she had a one-night stand.

Nicola Osborne, 32, told police she had been bundled in a car by a stranger and taken to a public toilets where she was forcibly raped.

Today the mother, from Portsmouth, Hampshire, was jailed for 18 months after her lie unraveled.'

Arizona lawmaker talks about fight leading to girlfriend's arrest

anthony · 27 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Calmly, 43-year-old Bundgaard told us he never hit or hurt Aubry Ballard, his girlfriend of seven months.

Bundgaard said Ballard started throwing his clothes out of the car and when he stopped to retrieve the items, she tried to get into the driver's seat.

That's when Bundgaard admits he pulled his on-again-off-again 34-year-old girlfriend out of the car.

"I asked her to get out the driver's seat and when she wouldn't then I physically removed her from the driver's seat," Bundgaard said.

Bundgaard said he never hit her, but tonight said he's the one with the black eye and fat lip.

"I've never hit a woman, don't abuse women, wasn't raised like that," he said.

Police arrested Ballard for one count of assault, but under the Arizona state constitution, Bundgaard couldn't be arrested for a misdemeanor while the legislature is in session.'

The Lousiest Family Court Order

rlaspari · 27 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

People who have been through this know about it. It just happened to me, and I will have to write about it to add to my story. If you haven't been through this you need to learn about it before it happens to you one day. Excerpt:

'Let's discuss the bad, no, let's make that the absolute worst, court order in family law cases where kids are involved: The temporary order of protection, more affectionately known as the TOP.

First, a disclaimer: Some TOPs have validity, and some actually work. There are people who seriously need to be protected from abusive or threatening individuals, and are at imminent risk of harm. The resulting TOP will work if the respondent has a lingering remnant of respect for the law, or fear of repercussion -- like arrest or imprisonment -- if s/he violates the order. (Many doubt that a simple piece of paper will dissuade a truly violent person from his/her intended harm.) And the TOP is better yet if the police are quick to enforce it. These are the meritorious orders. Who in their right mind can quarrel with them?

But bogus TOPs are more often the norm, and they hurt everyone.'

Man Receives Oral Sex, Ordered to Pay Child Support

Anonymous · 27 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Decisions like this seem to signal, rather unfairly, we think, that a man can be held legally and financially responsible for any unilateral actions his partner takes to conceive a child, no matter how absurd or unforeseeable those actions are.

And Dr. Phillips seems to have been treated particularly unfairly. He didn't even have intercourse which, is the one and only act that, outside of fertility clinics, can foster a reasonable expectation of conceiving a child. In fact, without intercourse (and outside of fertility clinics) creating a life is, simply, impossible. There was no way, short of checking what his partner did with his semen after oral sex (do you know anyone who does that?) that he could have known that he could possibly father a child.

But the courts don't care about how the egg was actually fertilized: because at the end of the day, there's a child now involved. And the concern, from a legal perspective, is whether or not the child will be adequately cared for, regardless of its conception.

Lesson to be learned: If you don't want any babies, use protection – and make sure your partner isn't hiding a test tube under the pillow.'

Why Are Men Angry?

anthony · 28 February 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That's the bait; here comes the switch. Women may want equality at the conference table and treadmill. But when it comes to sex and dating, they aren't so sure. The might hook up as freely as a Duke athlete. Or, they might want men to play Greatest Generation gentleman. Yes, they want men to pay for dinner, call for dates—a writer at the popular dating website The Frisky titled a recent piece "Call me and ask me out for a damn date!"—and open doors for them. A lot of men wonder: "WTF??!" Why should they do the asking? Why should they pay for dinner? After all, they are equals and in any case, the woman a guy is asking out probably has more cash in her pocket than he does; recent female graduates are making more than males in most large cities.'

SAVE's special report: The Use and Abuse of Domestic Restraining Orders

Matt · 1 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

SAVE has just posted a Special Report, The Use and Abuse of Domestic Restraining Orders (.pdf file): http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/VAWA-Restraining-Orders

This is the report's most important conclusion: 60% of DV restraining orders are unnecessary or false. Begin to make plans now for June – False Allegation Awareness Month.

Sincerely,

The SAVE Team

SAVE and the Domestic Violence Victim Protection Act

Matt · 1 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

SAVE has recently developed language to remove funding for mandatory arrest policies. Since mandatory arrest is associated with 600 lives taken each year, we are calling our bill the Domestic Violence Victim Protection Act: http://www.saveservices.org/policymakers/domestic-violence-victim-protection-act-of-2011/

The language in this model bill can be adopted for use at the state level.

Sincerely,

The SAVE Team

"Educated Women Get Paid Less Than Uneducated Men"

Matt · 1 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Getting into college -- the more competitive the better -- ensures you will have a successful life, or so you're told.

Throw gender and other factors into the mix, however, and the picture becomes less clear.

One recent study shows a disappointing return for elite colleges, especially for women. Another study shows a disproportionate disadvantage for college binge drinkers that are women.'

Check out some of the comments, which show people are not taking the half-truths lying down.

Woman gets probation after having sex with 16 year old boy

Anonymous · 1 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 26-year-old Redwood City woman who had a sexual relationship with the 16-year-old son of her day care employer pleaded no contest Tuesday to reduced charges of trespassing, according to the San Mateo County District Attorney's Office.

In return for her plea, Vanessa Craighead will be placed on probation and prohibited from working with minors in the future.

Craighead worked as a preschool teacher at a day care operated by the mother of her teenage victim. In October 2009, she accompanied her boss' family on a trip to Disneyland and shortly afterward started a sexual relationship with the 16-year-old, according to the district attorney's office.'

Why does this woman get any choice in the matter? Even if the victim doesnt want to testify against her, they have the evidence and admission of the rape.

So why does she get off and is not required to be registered as a pedophile?

EU court bans insurance sex discrimination arindamp · 1 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BRUSSELS: The European Union's highest court on Tuesday barred the insurance industry from charging different rates for men and women, saying the widespread practices amounts to sex discrimination against millions.

The ruling ordered changes effective December 21, 2012, to auto insurance, life insurance, medical coverage and other plans, potentially affecting tens of millions of customers across the continent. For example, many women driver would see their car insurance costs rise even though they are considered safer on the road.'

Wall Street Journal: "Strides by Women, Still a Wage Gap"

anthony · 1 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Women have not only caught up with men in college attendance but younger women are now more likely than younger men to have a college or a master's degree," wrote Valerie Jarrett, a senior adviser to President Barack Obama, and Christina Tchen, chief of staff to first lady Michele Obama, in a foreword. "Yet, these gains in education and labor force involvement have not yet translated into wage and income equity."

The report depicts a sea change in women's roles over the past few decades, away from child-rearing and housekeeping to serving as a pillar of family finances and America's economy. Still, single-mother households are more common than those with single fathers, a big reason why women are more likely than men to be poor, despite higher unemployment among men. And women continue to lag behind men in science and math-oriented occupations, as well as in earnings.'

2nd Conference on Male Studies: Solutions - Update

Matt · 1 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

This is an invitation to a timely and highly relevant symposium, sponsored by the Foundation for Male Studies: The Second Annual Conference on Male Studies: Looking Forward to Solutions, at the New York Academy of Medicine on April 6, 2011 - to on-site and on-line participants from across the globe.

As a concerned academician, educator, student, mental or physical health professional, counselor, law enforcement specialist or media professional, mother or father concerned with the deteriorating performance and status of males nationally and globally in terms of education, physical and mental health, employment, and personal relationships, you will want to be part of this historic event.

Why? Because allowing the unbridled continuation of current trends can only have cataclysmic results in all phases of our personal, national and global affairs.

Click here to register.

Event info here.

Study: Scientists develop first reliable test for prostate cancer

fondueguy · 1 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Guildford - Scientists at the University of Surrey have developed a unique urine test, which is twice as effective at diagnosing cancer that has developed in the prostate than the current prostate specific antigen (PSA) test.

The findings are being hailed as a major breakthrough in the early diagnosis of prostate cancer in men. The urine test is so accurate it could be in use to screen all men over 50 within twelve months. Scientists have found a protein called E-N-2, which is only produced by prostate cancer cells. The new test identifies E-N-2, and detects 60 to 70 per cent of cancers.'

Good timing because March* is Prostate Cancer Awareness Month.

---
*In the UK. In the US, it's September. Too bad it's not all 12 months, though.

American Airlines still catering to women dooquidis4ever · 2 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

I contacted them as to why they have a special site for women only (http://www.aa.com/women/) and not men. No answer yet.

Good Morning America: 'It's Official: Women Win Battle of Sexes'

anthony · 2 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. The (male) author of the book "Man Down" outlines the many ways in which women have men beat in all possible critical ways imaginable. You be the judge.

Study: Women Are in Charge at Home

anthony · 2 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men might throw their weight around at the office, but at home, women are the bosses.

A study, which was just released, finds that wives have more power than their husbands in making decisions and dominating discussions.

"The study at least suggests that the marriage is a place where women can exert some power," said lead author David Vogel, a psychologist at Iowa State University (ISU). "Whether or not it's because of changing societal roles, we don't know."

The results counter past research.'

Mom Charged After Son's Body Found in Oven

anthony · 2 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'JACKSON, Miss. – A Mississippi mother was arrested Wednesday in the death of her 3-year-old son after authorities said they found the child's burned body in an oven.

Washington County Coroner Methel Johnson said police found Tristan Robinson's body inside the electric oven at his mother's apartment shortly after midnight. Johnson said the child had been burned in the oven, but an autopsy was ordered to determine whether he died before or after being put there.

Greenville Police Chief Freddie Cannon said Terrie A. Robinson, 24, was charged with murder. She was to be arraigned Thursday in Greenville, a city of about 35,000 residents in the Mississippi Delta.'

"My ego is less bruised than my respect for network news"

anthony · 2 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During the interview with Guthrie I shared that I am underwhelmed by government reports like this. Too often studies about women are produced under the assumption that women are a victim class in need of extra attention from government, including special reports. While the White House study touched on the fact that women are healthier, more educated and have more choices today than ever before, the real “story” — and the reason NBC devoted the lead segment of the nightly news to the report — was to discuss inequalities that still exist between men and women.

Let me start by busting the myth of the wage gap, which states that women earn 76 cents on the dollar for doing the same job as a man. Let’s be clear — even the American Association of University of Women and the Department of Labor have acknowledged that if you look beyond the raw data, and control for variables such as education, time taken off from the workplace, and career choices, the wage gap largely disappears.'

Canada: Court upholds infanticide defence

Anonymous · 3 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TORONTO — The Court of Appeal for Ontario has ruled that mothers who kill their babies may use an infanticide defence and cut time off their sentence.

The court ruled Wednesday that a woman can be charged with infanticide even if there is evidence of murder.

"If the Crown proves that the accused committed a culpable homicide, the jury must then decide the nature of the culpable homicide. The jury should be told to consider infanticide first," the ruling says.

"If the Crown fails to negate at least one of the elements of infanticide beyond a reasonable doubt, the jury should be instructed to return a verdict of not guilty of murder, but guilty of infanticide."'

Police: Woman Lied About Being Raped, Cut With Razor

anthony · 3 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'UNIONTOWN, Pa. -- State police said a Fayette County woman made up a report that she was bound with a dog collar, cut with a razor, beaten and raped last month.

Trooper Heather Clem of Uniontown said Leah Dawn Saluga, 30, has entered an unspecified treatment program and will be charged with making a false report to police on Feb. 20.

Police said Saluga claimed she was raped by a man dressed in women's clothes who was walking his dog in a wooded section of Luzerne Township.'

White House, Women's Wages, Myths

anthony · 3 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But the White House, in thrall perhaps to ultra-feminists, opened its discussion of women's pay by using a sensational headline-grabbing comparison, 75 cents on the dollar, and it did capture many of the headlines.
...
Since full time means 35 or more hours a week, the table compares men who work 50 hours with women who work 37.

And women do work less than men. The report states on page 27 that "women of every educational level and at every age spend fewer weeks in the labor force a year than do men." In addition, "on the days that they worked, employed married women age 25-54 spent less time in labor market work and work related activities than did employed married men in the same age group-7 hours and 40 minutes, compared to about 8 hours and 50 minutes."'

More DV double-speak from Sen. Harry Reid (Action Alert)

Matt · 4 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Remember Sen. Harry Reid's wacko-bizarro comment last year about unemployed men – but not unemployed women – being abusers? Well, Mr. Reid is at it again…

On Tuesday, Sen. Reid released a statement for Women's History Month. First he talks about ensuring that women are "treated equally to men."

Then in the very next paragraph, he talks about renewing VAWA "which has helped millions of women affected by violence." Nothing about abused men being "treated equally to women."

Mr. Reid needs to hear from a couple thousand upset Americans. And if you want to make three, or four, or five calls to his office, that's perfectly fine. Here's his phone number: 202-224-3542. Tell him VAWA is also supposed to help the millions of men affected by violence.

The SAVE Team

++

Senator Reid Releases Statement on Women's History Month

March 1, 2011

Washington, D.C.—Nevada Senator Harry Reid today made the following statement recognizing Women's History Month:

"Since our nation was founded, pioneering women have helped shape it and make it strong. From the first homesteaders in the foothills of the Sierra Nevadas to Sarah Winnemucca, the first Native American woman to publish in English, to Imogene Evelyn Young Ford, an advocate for women's civil rights in Carson City, they have fought to make Nevada and this country a better place to live.

"Efforts to ensure that women are treated equally to men in all walks of life have yielded progress. In recent years, Congress passed landmark legislation to ensure equal pay for equal work, passed health insurance reform that will end discrimination against women with preexisting conditions such as breast cancer and protected Title IX programs that create opportunities for female students in America.

"But we can do more. This year we will work to reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act, which has provided resources and support to victims of domestic violence and their children. I am committed to protecting this law, which has helped millions of women affected by violence.

"As we reflect this month on the contributions American women have made to our shared history and celebrate their influence on the path of our state and our nation, we will also continue our work to ensure that every person – regardless of gender – has the same opportunity to live her dreams."

Source:
http://www.rgj.com/article/20110301/NEWS/110301036/1321/Senator-Reid-releases-statement-on-Women-s-History-Month

Proposal for a White House Council on Boys to Men

fondueguy · 4 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The White House is finally gearing up to create the equivalent of the White House Council on Women and Girls. Dr. Warren Farrell, with the assistance of 28 prominent authors, educators, researchers and practitioners, has drafted the Proposal for a White House Council on Boys to Men.
...
Hopefully this can be an important building block for putting men's issues on the political agenda in the US, and around the world.

I met Dr Farrell last summer, and I believe he is just the right person for this kind of work, so it's great to see that President Obama trusted him with the task of drafting this very important document.'

Testicular cancer rise and sperm quality fall 'due to chemicals'

Broadsword · 5 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sperm quality significantly deteriorated and testicular cancers increased over recent years, a Finnish study says.
...
The University of Turku research suggests environmental reasons, particularly exposure to industrial chemicals, may be behind both trends.

A UK expert said chemicals may affect the development of male babies.
...
"Our findings further necessitate the efforts to identify reasons for the adverse trends in reproductive health to make preventive measures possible."'

UK: Bad girls: An investigation into a new breed of young women

Broadsword · 5 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently, a former armed robber offered to show me how teenage girls are moving in on the drugs market.

As we stood on a city street corner, he dialled a number and asked the person who replied if they had ‘a little ting’ for him — street slang for a parcel of drugs.

Within minutes, a slim and pretty girl, aged no more than 15, had appeared at our side.
...

He admitted he was astonished — even envious — of the ‘success’ girls like this were enjoying as drug dealers on his estate.

‘They’ve got money on them all the time. They always dress sharp. They may be only 14 or 15, but they never wear the same trainers more than two days in a row.’

Our experience on a North London street corner is no aberration — it’s symptomatic of what’s happening all over the country.
...
While criminal offences by young men have fallen, those committed by girls aged 10 to 17 have increased by 25 per cent over the past three years.

Worse still, their violent offences have gone up by a staggering 50 per cent.
...
The courts bear this out. In April last year, two attractive 17-year-olds, Ruby Thomas and Rachael Burke, went on trial for attacking a man in Trafalgar Square, in the centre of London. Their male companion had knocked him down because he was gay.

The girls then kicked him in the head and stamped on his chest. He later died of brain damage. They also repeatedly punched in the face a man who tried to intervene.

Thomas, who’d attended the £12,000-a-year Sydenham High School for Girls, joked about their vicious attack the next day on Facebook. One onlooker likened the level of the girls’ violence to ‘a scene from the film Clockwork Orange’.

Then there was the case of a teenage girl gang from East London, calling itself Girls Over Men, which decided to punish a 16-year-old girl for disrespecting the gang leader’s mother.

Several of its members abducted the girl at knifepoint and took her to an alley, where they slashed the clothes from her body. One whipped her with a belt while another took photos on a mobile phone.

Jailing these girls, Judge William Kennedy said the attack was ‘ferocious, deliberate and chilling’.
...
Numerous studies both here and in the U.S. have shown that a sense of abandonment after a divorce or separation can stunt girls emotionally. Without a father’s love and attention, and a sense that they’re valued, young girls tend not to thrive.

They’re more likely to have sex earlier, to become single mothers and to fail to form or maintain relationships. From a young age, they’ll aggressively seek attention from men. As one study poignantly put it, they are ‘clumsily erotic’.

The explosion in single mothers means that far more girls than before are growing up without a father.

Four out of ten children born in 2000 to single mothers had no contact at all with their fathers by 2003.

This means we’re going to see increasing numbers of these fatherless girls joining gangs and becoming violent.'

Action Alert: Respond to San Francisco Weekly Hit Piece on Parental Alienation

Matt · 5 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

F&F Action Alert here. Excerpt:

'The new front page San Francisco Weekly story California Family Courts Helping Pedophiles, Batterers Get Child Custody is a one-sided attack on the legitimacy of Parental Alienation that dismisses the widespread problem of false accusations of domestic violence and child abuse in family court proceedings. Write a Letter to the Editor of the SF Weekly and tell them your thoughts and experiences by clicking here.

We also suggest you comment on the piece on the SF Weekly website by clicking here and scrolling to the bottom of the page.'

Please help prevent circumcision at Mackay GP Super Clinic (Deadline 9 March 2011)

Minuteman · 7 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Please download the Word document from the following link and type your name, title and e-mail address in the allocated spaces on the covering form and e-mail to gpsuperclinics@health.gov.au with the subject line 'GP Super Clinics Consultation Registration Form' (before Tuesday 15 February 2011 0730 GMT).

http://rapidshare.com/files/451395415/Mackay_09March2011_.doc

Important: The above procedure is based on the Australian Department of Health and Ageing's own guidelines and must be followed for a successful submission.

Please leave a reply so that I can gauge the number of submissions made.

For more information on the Australian Commonwealth GP Super Clinics program, please see http://www.health.gov.au/gpsuperclinics

Ova-Fusion and the Elimination of the Male

Broadsword · 8 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Are men expendable? After millennia of vigorously hoisting their species to the top of the food chain, is XY now a barrier to additional progress? Has the ball game for “dudes” expired? Will the future be self-reproducing super-women? With males… extinct? Kaguya indicates Yes. In 2004, the first bi-maternal mammal was artificially created in Tokyo via parthenogenesis, a process in which an altered ovum, acting like a sperm, attached itself to another ovum to form an embryo that successfully matured.

...

In the 1970s and 1980s lesbian separatist science fiction writers began imagining methods of creating a sustainable culture without needing men for procreation. In 1975, The Female Man, by Joanna Russ, presented the “merging of ova” in a female society. The Y Chromosome, by Leora Gom (1990), also had females multiply via “ova-fusion,” a procedure eerily forecasting Kaguya’s emergence.

...

Personally, I’m not that attached to my gender. Am I a traitorous “mangina”? If my species turns into small healthy super-femmes running around for 130+ years, that’s all right by me.

Maybe they’ll keep a bullpen of short-lived testosterone studs around for sexual services, 24/7, old-style. Or is that just my deluded fantasy, because I want to be one of those guys? It’s more likely that all heterosexual activity will be performed with male sexbots.

But so what? Personally, I’m tired of today’s gender polarity, the boy-girl chasm, with segregated shopping and play, the dominance-submissive flirting games, the mating and marriage manuals, the seduction rituals, the opening lines, the Mars and Venus dichotomy. Yeah, I’m sick of it. I’m ready to try something else.'

Australian government announces grants to support new and established Men's "Sheds"

Minuteman · 8 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

A new shed will do them good. Link to media release here. Excerpt:

'Older and disadvantaged men in South Australia, Victoria, Queensland, New South Wales and Western Australia will soon have more help to meet and find social support with Australian Government Grants for Men's Sheds.

New sheds will be established in South Australia, Victoria and New South Wales with another 16 established Men's Sheds around the country to receive a grant to assist them to develop and upgrade their workspaces and buy equipment and tools or to employ staff help manage a shed's operation (see table attached).

Minister for Indigenous Health, Warren Snowdon, said Men's Sheds play an important role by providing meeting places for men to stay connected within the community, while helping their physical and mental wellbeing.

"Based on the traditional backyard shed, Men's Sheds provide a relaxed place for men to meet and continue a hobby, learn new skills, or just pop in for a chat and a cuppa," Mr Snowdon said.

"Isolation, loneliness and depression are major health issues for many Australian men, which is compounded by the male culture of not talking about feelings or emotions and not taking as active an interest in their own health and wellbeing as they should.

"Men's Sheds can play a significant role in reducing these problems by connecting men with each other and their communities without pressure. Most sheds also undertake community work, so there's an opportunity for men to be involved in something meaningful and make a positive contribution to the community."'

SAVE Tells Congress to Cut $26 Million for No-Drop Prosecution

Matt · 8 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This flyer is being distributed to all Senators and Representatives on Capitol Hill. The flyer explains why mandatory arrest is a bad idea, and how Congress can save $26 million from domestic violence programs.

Feel free to distribute – and to adopt for use at the state level, as well.

The SAVE Team

Couple confesses to killing boy who wet his pants

Luek · 9 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ORLANDO -- Orange County Sheriff's deputies say a couple beat a 3-year-old child to death because he peed his pants.

Robin Greinke, 26, and Steven Neil, 33, were arrested Thursday night on charges of child abuse, first-degree murder and child neglect.

Investigators said on Feb. 28 the couple punched and struck the boy for more than an hour after he urinated on himself.

"They were upset with him and they tossed him and spanked him and punched him," said Chris Dillon, a homicide investigator.

After the attack subsided, deputies said Neil and Greinke then ordered pizza and watched a movie.

It wasn't until around 5 a.m. on March 1 that the couple called 911. Greinke told investigators she made the call because her son was wheezing and she couldn't sleep.'

Australia: female head of crime family convicted of murdering relative - smiles for cameras

Minuteman · 9 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'Even as a convicted murderer, Judy Moran put on a show for the cameras.

With a smile and a wave to the assembled media, the gangland widow known for her blow-waved tresses and flamboyant dress headed off to jail on Wednesday for orchestrating her brother-in-law's execution.

Earlier, she looked down, her face reddened and she clasped a tissue in her hands as a Victorian Supreme Court jury declared it had found her guilty of murdering Des "Tuppence" Moran.

She pursed her red lips and appeared stony-faced in a courtroom packed with lawyers and journalists.

At 66, Moran, who has already buried two husbands and two sons to gangland murders, may now spend the rest of her days behind bars for killing off another Moran.'

UK: 'Work is like slavery' says teenage girl who 'can't be bothered' to get a job

Broadsword · 9 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

A young woman on benefits says she 'can't be bothered' to look for work because it's like being a slave. Sorche Williams, 19, who has been arrested eight times and expelled from two schools, expresses her views in a new BBC3 documentary. In it, she brags about using her parents' and taxpayers' money to pay for drink on nights out.
...
The workshy teenager, who has a criminal record for attacking a police officer, receives £350-a-month in benefits but admits she spends most of her weekly handout on cheap alcohol at student nights. Williams reveals that she receives her benefits on a Tuesday, which suits her because it is usually student night at bars and clubs and the drinks are cheaper.
...
Williams, who has no qualifications after she was expelled from two schools, is featured in the series Working Girls, which tells of young British women who choose to live on benefits rather than seeking a job.'

Canada: Woman arsonist nearly kills prominent former labor leader boyfriend

Matt · 10 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'She was a rising star in management at General Motors. He was a former top union leader at the car maker's Oshawa plant. But their romance went up in flames when she was charged with setting his house on fire — with him in it.

"It's quite a story," says Jim Hoy, who woke up at 5:30 a.m. to the smell of smoke that day in June 2009. "Nobody believes it."

Turns out there's much he didn't know about the woman he proposed to six months into their love affair, according to Hoy, who says his brother has acquired the movie rights to the tale.

It was only the day before her arrest, Hoy says, that he learned her husband was still very much alive, contrary to what she'd told him.'

Please help prevent circumcision at Tynnum GP Super Clinic (Deadline 14 March 2011)

Minuteman · 10 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Please download the Word document from the following link and type your name, title and e-mail address in the allocated spaces on the covering form and e-mail to gpsuperclinics@health.gov.au with the subject line 'GP Super Clinics Community Consultation Registration Form' (before Monday 14 March 2011 2300 GMT).

http://rapidshare.com/files/451846753/Wynnum_14March2011_.doc (link will be deactivated after deadline)

Important: The above procedure is based on the Australian Department of Health and Ageing's own guidelines and must be followed for a successful submission.

Please leave a reply so that I can gauge the number of submissions made.

For more information on the Australian Commonwealth GP Super Clinics program, please see http://www.health.gov.au/gpsuperclinics

Please help prevent circumcision at Caboolture GP Super Clinic (Deadline 14 March 2011)

Minuteman · 10 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Please download the Word document from the following link and type your name, title and e-mail address in the allocated spaces on the covering form and e-mail to gpsuperclinics@health.gov.au with the subject line 'GP Super Clinics Community Consultation Registration Form' (before Monday 14 March 2011 2300 GMT).

http://rapidshare.com/files/451850474/Caboolture_14March2011_.doc (link will be deactivated after deadline)

Important: The above procedure is based on the Australian Department of Health and Ageing's own guidelines and must be followed for a successful submission.

Please leave a reply so that I can gauge the number of submissions made.

For more information on the Australian Commonwealth GP Super Clinics program, please see http://www.health.gov.au/gpsuperclinics

Judge slams prosecutors, SBI in Durham case

DenisP · 11 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Durham prosecutors and the State Bureau of Investigation broke state laws and violated both the U.S. and state constitutions as they sought the death penalty against a Durham man in the death of his girlfriend's daughter 13 years ago, according to a judge's written order that was signed today.

The state intentionally kept information from the man, Derrick Allen, that would have helped his defense.

Those multiple violations by prosecutors and the SBI were willful, flagrant, deceptive, intentional and fraudulent, according to the order by Durham County Superior Court Judge Orlando Hudson, the senior resident judge in Durham.'

The Trouble With Focusing on Women and Girls

anthony · 12 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It may come as a surprise that International Women's Day was met with lukewarm enthusiasm at ForbesWoman headquarters. Feelings ranged from "but we cover women everyday," to "what the heck is international women's day?" to "yawn."

Call it girl power ennui, but something about "celebrating" a holiday by hashing and rehashing the trials and troubles of women throughout the world just didn't get our juices flowing. As the rest of the female world shared congratulations on the landmark 100th anniversary of International Women's Day, I couldn't shake the feeling that there was something a little unfair about the whole thing.

...

So why does the world (myself included) place to much emphasis on the empowerment of women and girls? Well, maybe it's simply become politically correct. But according to Ogden, it's a problem: "The "women first" approach has been increasingly captured by overly simplistic thinking about the poor and anti-poverty programs — with easily foreseeable, and already evident, negative consequences."'

Bohl: Be a man, our culture will value you less

anthony · 13 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As of late there has been a lot of hubbub about gender roles. I can hardly seem to escape the noise about them. Talk of the role of women in society is everywhere. At Iowa State we have a women's studies program that "focuses on the study of issues and scholarship relevant to women and gender, challenges existing systems of knowledge and forges new scholarship based on the centrality of gender as a category of analysis," and "seeks to improve critical thinking and to question prevailing assumptions."

Since we lack any men's study courses, and apparently as a university care little for issues and scholarship relevant to men and gender, I'd like to beg a critical question of such a nature, an answer for which may hopefully be found using gender as a category of analysis. The question I beg is, "If men and women are equal under the law, why is a woman's life worth more than mine in our modern, equal society?" If you find fault with my words, consider the following: How often have you heard the phrase "... even women and children were killed"? Strange, is it not, that we cringe so at the thought of the deaths of women and children, but are conditioned to accept the violent deaths of men?

...

Young men have always been society's most disposable members. Strong enough for battle and harsh labor, yet not wise enough to lead or instruct; young, fully grown, average men are the natural choice for the literal and metaphorical bearing of society's heaviest burdens. It would seem that young men have naturally inherited a gender role from necessity herself. An efficient culture is a more successful one, and while women could work and fight like men, it was discovered that young men could be used most effectively for those pursuits; perforce, young men have become the archetypal laborers, soldiers and heroes. Society long ago deemed us the most disposable and least valuable of her constituents.'

Satire: Obama Says U.S. Needs Progress For Men's Equality

anthony · 13 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A little fantasy editing of this Bloomberg news article article:

"President Barack Obama said women men have made great some strides toward full equality with men women over the past 50 years, yet more progress is needed to close an economic, college degree, and labor market gender gap.

In his weekly radio and Internet address, Obama said women men are still more likely than men to live in poverty, are: a) are underrepresented in math and engineering education for college degrees at the associate's, bachelor's and master's levels, b) are underrepresented by academic field for degrees in biology, communication, education, English, foreign languages, health professions, psychology, public administration, social sciences, visual arts, optometry, pharmacy, osteopathic medicine, veterinary medicine, osteopathic medicine, and naturopathic medicine, and c) earn, on average, 75 8 percent as much as men less than women for the cohort of unmarried, childless workers under 30 who live in large cities, and d) are 20 percent more likely to be unemployed than women (over the last year).'

WND: "Deadbeat moms"

anthony · 14 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The White House isn't the only arena in which feminists rule. The feminist elite, aka the women in the media, love to interview women who portray themselves as victims. On the "Today" show last week, Americans were introduced to Rahna Reiko Rizzuto, author of the memoir "Hiroshima in the Morning." Published by The Feminist Press, it is the story of one woman's journey toward "self-discovery" ("Eat, Pray, Love," anyone?) after leaving her husband and two boys behind en route to Japan.

During the interview, the sympathy for Rizzuto was palpable. Never mind that this mother admitted on national television that she never wanted her children in the first place. To the feminist elite – the professors, lawyers, journalists, writers, judges, actresses, bureaucrats, psychologists and activists who use their platform to promote their leftist views – women like Rizzuto are victims. "I realized that I had lost myself, and I wanted to give myself priority," she says. So Rizzuto left her husband of 20 years – as well as her two boys, ages 3 and 5.

There's a name for men who do this: deadbeat dads. Americans would never tolerate a man saying he needed to leave his wife and kids so he could find himself. If that happened, men would be called things editors won't allow me to put on paper. But when a woman does it, well, she's merely taking back her identity motherhood cruelly eradicated.'

5 Ways Feminism Has Ruined America

anthony · 14 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The bottom line, says Venker, is that, "Feminism has sabotaged women's happiness." Worse, she adds, it's flipped male-female relationships upside down. Just one example: Men more than ever are seeking love, marriage and kids while women want independence.
...
The book is controversial, especially in liberal circles, for lines like this: "Unfortunately, once feminism came along, women abandoned their pedestal in droves and decided they wanted to share the man's pedestal with him. They claimed they wanted both sexes on the same pedestal to represent equality and prove men and women are the same. Instead, they found themselves in conflict. Since there isn't enough room on a pedestal for both of them, feminists pushed men off to make room for themselves." She added, "That's not equality. That's matriarchy."
...
'From the book and our recent interview, Whispers has pulled this list:

Five Ways That Feminism Has Ruined America

1. It hurt marriage. Women want to wait so that they can keep their identities longer and men are finding easy sex, taking away a big reason for marriage.

2. Undermines child rearing. More kids are in childcare where discipline is lax resulting in a "epidemic" of bad kids, childhood obesity, and bullies.

3. Two-income trap. With both husband and wife working it's hard to live without life's luxuries.

4. Undermines college sports. Title IX has ended many male-only sports at some colleges.

5. Emasculates men. It's better to be a wuss than speak up or mouth off and face charges of harassment or chauvinism.'

"Harriet Harman"

anthony · 14 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Few politicians attract as much vitriol as Harman, 60. From commentator Rod Liddle's column asking "So – Harriet Harman, then. Would you? I mean after a few beers obviously," to the Daily Mail mocking her as Harriet Harperson for her perceived political correctness, the verbal attacks can, at times, look like a warning to women not to enter politics.

Yet, in spite of this, she has not just stood her ground but continued to push feminist policies, and ceaselessly worked to encourage more women to follow in her footsteps. Entering parliament when 97% of the members were men (and she was seven months pregnant) in 1982, her first question to Margaret Thatcher was to ask why there were no after-school clubs in the school holidays. And from then on her determination to push pro-women policies has not wavered. She set up the first parliamentary Labour party women's group, and fought for women-only shortlists, while during her time as the country's first female solicitor general she made tackling domestic violence a priority. During a brief spell in charge of the country in 2009, while Gordon Brown was on holiday, she suggested reviewing rape laws to improve conviction rates and teaching children about domestic violence. And last year, she demanded that half the shadow cabinet be made up of women. Her explicit support of feminism and equality ("That's what I'm in politics for: to champion the cause of fairness, of social justice, and of women") has always caused derision in the rightwing press (the Daily Mail called it an anti-male blitzkrieg).'

Breadwinners now begging for scraps: Men 55 and older face soaring unemployment

anthony · 14 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'KINGS MOUNTAIN — Allan Nichols describes himself as a well-read, self-motivated native Cheesehead. He has a law degree, spent time with a chamber of commerce, was a corporate lobbyist and spends his nights teaching himself astronomy.

But, since July 2006, that hasn't been enough to get Nichols, 58, a job.
...
And he's not alone. Nationwide unemployment in 2001 among people 55 and older seeking full-time work stood at 442,000. In 2009, that number quadrupled to 1,624,000. And it continues to rise, with 2010 at 1,816,000.

But the story within the story is who's out of work. Year after year, roughly 50 percent of the annual average is attributed to the white male demographic.

Nichols refers to it as a 'manpression,' as older, white male, experienced middle management workers can't find footing in today's economy.

"We were the breadwinners," he said. "Now, we're begging for scraps."'

UK: Sexism is dead, say most British WOMEN

anthony · 14 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It may come as a surprise to those who feel they've hit the glass ceiling or heard one too many blonde jokes.

Most women do not believe that Britain is a sexist place, a poll has revealed.

Fewer than four in ten say they have experienced derogatory remarks or behaviour because of their gender.

And the majority of men and women think both sexes are equally capable of handling challenging and traditionally male tasks, such as making a safe emergency landing in an aeroplane.

The results of the survey, carried out for a group of charities and pressure groups, suggest that most women are far more concerned with solving day-to-day practical problems in their lives than fighting a battle for equality.'

Relatedly, Sexism as a 'war' among women.

Can We Degenderize Domestic Violence?

anthony · 15 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This gap is being interpreted as sex discrimination by men's rights activists. It does, in fact, have legal consequences: in 2008, a California court of appeal ruled 3-0 that domestic violence programs that offer services to only women and their children, but not to men, violate the state constitution. "These men … are similarly situated to women as to the need for domestic violence services," wrote Justice Fred K. Morrison. The court acknowledged that women are affected by domestic violence more than men, so programs do not need to provide equal kinds of services, but must help anyone who comes to their doorstep.

This is legal precedent has national implications and is sparking an emotionally-charged debate over whether domestic violence programs should be gender neutral. Advocates who work with women's organizations argue that the gender disparity is still significant, and that social change to protect women, who represent the majority of domestic violence homicide cases, will lead to better care for male victims. While those who argue for gender neutrality say that it's time to rethink the traditional rhetoric about domestic violence, which pits males versus females, and focus on supporting all victims.'

Top 10 Men’s Rights Issues

anthony · 15 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The editors at the Good Men Project Magazine asked if I could write a piece on the top 10 issues for men’s rights activists (MRAs). As I am only one man, I felt I could not speak for the rest of the community on how we prioritize issues. So I came up with 17 things we consider problems men face and set up a poll. (I would like to thank everyone who voted, especially from Men’s Rights Reddit.)

It is important to note that the poll is far from perfect. It has a small sample size, and the ability to pick a single issue did not go over well with many MRAs—in their mind, the goals of the movement aren’t so easily prioritized—they’re all important and interconnected. That said, while this poll isn’t perfect, it does, to some degree, reflect the distribution of priorities among those MRAs who participated.'

Action Alert: Stop Family Court Financial Abuses by Passing SB 528 & SB 917 in Oklahoma

Matt · 15 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

F&F alert here. Excerpt:

'Short Version: Veterans' groups have contacted Fathers and Families and asked us to do a rapid campaign in support of Oklahoma's SB 528 and SB 917–bills to protect 2.5 million active and reserve military servicemembers from spousal support abuses.

We want you to email and fax a letter in support of the bill by clicking here. You only need to enter your name, email address, phone #, and city & state to participate, and we will send an email and a fax to all relevant legislators.'

Military sends two planes to evacuate Czechs from Japan- women and children first

anthony · 16 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Prague, March 15 (CTK) - The Czech military has sent two special flights with a total capacity of 130 people to Tokyo to bring back Czechs from the earthquake and tsunami-hit Japan, with women and children having priority, Prime Minister Petr Necas and three ministers decided Tuesday.

Necas and the defence, foreign and culture ministers, Alexandr Vondra, Karel Schwarzenberg and Jiri Besser, respectively, decided that the Czech embassy in Japan will say who will board the planes, military staff spokeswoman Jana Ruzickova told CTK.'

Who Ever Said That Feminism Was About Your Happiness?

anthony · 16 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Happiness doesn't feature in the more radical agendas either, such as the New York Radical Feminists manifesto, which prescribed that women construct "healthy, independent, assertive" alternative selves, and lives. Robin Morgan saw liberation as an "oppressed people raising their consciousness toward something that is the other side of anger, something bright and smooth and cool." But not happy, per se.

Happiness isn't just a rare word. It wasn't feminism's backbeat or its implied manifesto, either.

Betty Friedan wrote in "The Feminine Mystique," Surely there are many women in America who are happy at the moment as housewives. But happiness is not the same thing as the aliveness of being fully used."'

Boy culture not a fit with school systems

anthony · 16 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boy culture is out of sync with school culture. There are several reasons for this, including zero tolerance policies that are too often taken to extremes, the lack of male teachers (the statistics are shocking, having dropped from 14 percent to 7 percent in the elementary classroom in the past decade), and the compression of the curriculum.

Even more, boy culture is not socially accepted more generally and, consequently, boys quickly come to feel that they aren't good at school, where the friction tends to be the most obvious.

The results are startling — globally in the most recent set of tests, boys scored lower than girls in early literacy skills in every country tested. Several authors have done a wonderful job of explaining these problems and discussing them in clear terms, including Peg Tyre ("The Trouble with Boys"), Ralph Fletcher ("Boy Writers: Reclaiming Their Voices") and Richard Whitmire with his work on "Why Boys Fail": http://blogs.edweek.org/edweek/whyboysfail.'

Mother molested her 2-year-old daughter: 20 years imprisonment, 10 years monitoring

Anonymous · 16 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Media Reference here. The Feminists deny that there really are female pedophiles, and very often claim that all men are rapists, women beaters and pedophiles. Excerpt:

'A MOTHER-of-four has been jailed for 20 years for molesting her two-year-old daughter under instructions from a teenage Walsall pervert.

Julie Carr, aged 33, filmed the horrific abuse live on a webcam from her home in Mars Hill, Maine, North East America, for Nicholas Wilde.

“What you have done is violate the most basic bond of society — the bond between a mother and her child, the bond between a mother and her daughter,” US Judge John Woodcock told Carr before sentencing her.'

News submitted by
Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Woman gets 30 days for rape of 14 year old boy

David A. DeLong · 16 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A woman threw a party, gave alcohol to minors, and then raped a 14 year old boy while she was at it. What did our society do to send a message to its taxpayers? The judge gave her 30 days in jail. I would like to see the history of the judges cases whereby men were faced with the same crime, and a comparison of the judges sentences. I would bet that there would be enough evidence to prove sexual bias in the sentences. Any sharp lawyers out there? Would this be possible? Excerpt:

'ASTORIA, Ore. (AP) — An Astoria woman has been sentenced to 30 days in jail for raping a 14-year-old boy at a party.

The Daily Astorian reports that 35-year-old Julie Diane Green pleaded no contest last Friday to rape and endangering the welfare of a minor.

Prosecutors said Green held a party for her children and their friends last August, allowed several minors to drink alcohol and then had sex with one of the visiting 14-year-olds.'

SAVE: $84 Million to Stereotype Men as Abusers

Matt · 17 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Each year the federal government spends $84 million for DV education and training programs that smear men as abusers and batterers.

It's time to pull the funding for this nonsense, until these programs get accredited. This flyer was passed out to all the Senators and Representatives on Capitol Hill today.

Help spread the word.

The SAVE Team

Japan's Fukushima 50: Heroes Who Volunteered to Stay Behind at Japan's Crippled Nuclear Plants

Matt · 17 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

File this under 'male disposability', and once again notice the fact that they are all men. While this article actually refers to these men as men, I have seen others that have referred to them just as 'workers'-- invisible behind their occupations and prescribed gender roles as all-around disposable "heroes". Such "nameless" bravery deserves better, don't you think? Excerpt:

'They are the nameless brave men who are working as the last line of defense at Japan's crippled Fukushima nuclear plants. They stayed behind while everyone else was sent nearly 15 miles away and radiation soars to menacing levels.

There are 200 of them and they work in shifts of 50, earning the inaccurate nickname the Fukushima 50.

At one point, even these men were pulled back 500 yards from the deteriorating nuke plants, but this morning it appears the crisis team was heading back in.

A 27-year-old woman whose Twitter name is @NamicoAoto tweeted earlier this week that her father had volunteered for Fukushima duty.'

Mother 'bit off boyfriend's testicles' in drunken 4AM attack

Proud_to_be_a_man · 17 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother-of-four has appeared in court accused of biting off her boyfriend's testicles in a drunken attack.

Martin Douglas, 45, underwent emergency surgery to reattach his genitals after the alleged attack by Maria Topp.

Mr Douglas, a DJ, called 999 in excruciating pain and operators struggled to understand what he was saying.

Paramedics who attended his flat in Newcastle called police and Topp was arrested.

She has since appeared in court charged with GBH over the February 18 incident in which Mr Douglas was also injured in the arm, the Daily Mirror reported.

The victim was forced to spend several days in hospital recovering from his injuries.'

International Women's Day: a critic writes

Mr VanHuizen · 18 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"I wrote yesterday about International Women's Day, saying that despite the improvements of recent decades, women are still not treated as the social, legal or economic equals of men. It's particularly the case in many parts of the developing world, but, I said, a problem in Britain as well, as the gender pay gap shows.

Unsurprisingly some of you disagreed. One of the ones who did so intelligently (and calmly, which was a rare treat) was Elly, author of the Quiet Riot Girl blog and holder of a PhD in gender equality studies. I offered her the chance to respond, which she's done. I'll reprint an extract here – you can read the rest of it on her blog.

'[The gender pay gap] may already have been eradicated. It depends who you ask. According to Catherine Hakim, a scholar in the field of gender and employment, equality legislation has been successful and "these demands [by feminists] for further change rest on faulty assumptions and outdated or partial evidence. For the latest academic research and cross-national comparative studies show that most of the theories and ideas built up around gender equality in the last few decades are wrong."'"

Rape Liar Victim Suing New York City For $30 Million

anthony · 18 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The innocent man who was wrongly imprisoned for nearly four years because of false rape charges is now suing the city for his ordeal. William McCaffery is seeking $20 million in compensatory damages, as well as another $10 million for what he calls "conduct...so outrageous as to exceed the bounds of all common and civilized decency."

McCaffrey was sentenced in 2006 after Biurny Peguero Gonzalez testified that he and two other men raped her at knife point in a van parked in Upper Manhattan in September 2005. She later recanted that statement, and admitted she made the whole thing up in order to cover for a fight with some of her female friends. McCaffrey says in his suit that cops knew he didn't inflict bite wounds on Peguero, which was used as evidence against him at trial: "Aware that this fact would provide an alternate explanation for the cause of Ms. Peguero's injuries, defendants...told the young women that the true nature of their fight was insignificant and instructed them not to mention it," says the suit, which names specific police and prosecutors.'

Goshen College student fabricates rape

anthony · 18 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'After hundreds of hours investigating an abduction and rape from the Goshen College campus in January, officers now say the victim fabricated the story.'

Ed.: Also see here.

A classic

el cid · 18 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This is from the comments section of "Illegal Guardians." A link would be better but the comment is too hard to find amid all the others. But I think it's a classic compilation of male/female 2x standards:

Men seeking equal treatment = “backlash”
Women seeking equal treatment = “feminism”
Discrimination against men = “equal opportunity”
Discrimination against women = “discrimination”
A woman with grievances = “victim”
A man with grievances = “angry”
Open discussion of gender issues = “misogyny”
Men looking for equal treatment in the courts = “abuse”

Consensual sex between a man and woman = “rape”
Heated discussion between a man and woman = “domestic violence”
Women receiving preferential treatment/privileges = “equality”
A numeric majority of the human species = “minority”
Any woman = “victim”
Any man = “oppressor”
Any child = “property”
A woman talking about hating men = “empowerment”
A man talking about hating women = “hate speech”
A sexually predatory woman dressed like a hooker = “liberation”
A man with any interest in sex = “rapist”
A woman who wants to be with her children = “mother”
A man who wants to be with his children = “abuser”
A woman who forces children under her care/authority into sex = “the child was lucky”
A man who forces children under his care/authority into sex = “pedophile”
A shelter providing emergency services to abused women = “women’s shelter”
A shelter providing any services to abused men = “prison”
Female genital mutilation = “sexual repression”
Male genital mutilation = “acceptable custom that protects women from HIV”
A man assaulting a women = “(domestic) violence”
A woman assaulting a man = “humor”
A man who beats his female partner = “batterer”
A woman who beats her male partner = “victim”
A disposable slave = “man”
A human being = “woman”
Hating women = “a crime”
Hating men = “a viable political act” – Robin Morgan

Distorting or lying about reality = “feminist analysis”
Biology = “lies”
Reality = “discrimination”
Any power a man has = “patriarchy”

Any power a woman has = “empowerment”
Pornography pleasing to lesbians = “erotica”
Pornography pleasing to men = “exploitation and degradation of women”
Person who says feminists are wrong = “hate criminal”
Woman-firster and advocator of any measure against men = “feminist”
Patriarchy = “bad”
Matriarchy = “good”
Male leader = “backwards”
Female leader = “improvement”
Pro-lesbianism and female, anti-male = “feminist ideology”
Same standards, honest competition = “unfair”
Female sexuality = “nurturing”
Male sexuality = “objectifying”
Female virgin = “pure”
Male virgin = “pathetic”
Female modesty = “noble”
Male modesty = “creepy”
Pandering to male audiences = “sexism”
Pandering to female audiences = “fulfilling a niche”
Women standing up for themselves = “empowerment”
Men standing up for themselves = “chauvinism”
Woman proud of her appearance = “confident”
Man proud of his appearance = “vain”
Innate female advantages = “complementary”
Innate male advantages = “sexist”
Women’s space = “safe haven”
Men’s space = “patriarchal breeding ground”
Women discussing their issues = “therapeutic”
Men discussing their issues = “whining”
Female intellect = “pioneering”
Male intellect = “masturbatory”
Man obeying a women = “respect”
Women obeying a man = “slavery”
Men being sexually critical = “shallow”
Women being sexually critical = “having standards”
Female rage = “indignation”
Male rage = “insecurity”
Male abuse of power = “direct consequence of patriarchy”
Female abuse of power = “indirect consequence of patriarchy”
Unemployed woman = “homemaker”
Unemployed man = “loser”
Female indulgence = “happiness”
Male indulgence = “selfishness”

'Lovely' Ky. woman accused of horrific war crimes

anthony · 18 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'STANTON, Ky. — The arrest of a Croatian woman in small-town Kentucky for alleged war crimes two decades ago in the former Yugoslavia "brings her long run from justice to an end," a U.S. marshal said.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Robert E. Wier ordered that Azra Basic, 52, be held without bond pending an April 1 status hearing and appointed her a lawyer.

...

As a soldier in the Croatian army, she killed a prisoner and tortured others by forcing them to drink human blood and gasoline, authorities said.

...

Court documents accuse her of numerous other atrocities, including: Setting a prisoner ablaze, pulling out prisoners' fingernails with pliers, ripping off a man's ear with pliers and carving crosses and the letter "S" into another man's flesh.'

Behaviour drugs given to four-year-olds prompt calls for inquiry

Broadsword · 19 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Children as young as four are being given Ritalin-style medication for behavioural problems in breach of NHS guidelines, the Guardian has discovered, prompting the leading psychological society to call for a national review.
...
There are no reliable figures for how many children under six have been given Ritalin. But Professor Tim Kendall, joint director of the National Collaborating Centre for Mental Health, who chaired the Nice guideline committee, confirmed that he had heard reliable reports of children in nursery and pre-school being prescribed medication unnecessarily, and that it was often parents who were putting pressure on GPs. He said: "There are two reasons why parents go shopping for a diagnosis. The first is to improve their child's performance at school, and the second is to get access to benefits. There are always GPs that will do it, but it's wrong to give a child a diagnosis without also consulting schools and teachers."

In one case seen by the Guardian, a five-year-old from the West Midlands was found to be receiving a double dose of methylphenidate, commonly known by the brand name Ritalin, the drug used to treat ADHD, despite his school insisting that he is "among the best-behaved children in his class".

In notes seen by the leading educational psychologist in the case, the boy's headteacher reports that the school does not believe he has ADHD, but that the medication is being prescribed "to help mum at home".'

Dallas Craigslist Job Listing: Women-Only Office Assistants

Anonymous · 19 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

I haven't yet come across a job listing on Craigslist for a networking specialist that requires the applicant to be a young man. But one cosmetic surgeon in Dallas, TX openly states that the position can only be filled by a young woman.

http://dallas.craigslist.org/dal/etc/2273453884.html

"Dallas cosmetic surgeon/ Med Spa Medical Director needs a part time assistant for office as well as personal assistance. Our atmosphere and type of clientele requires the applicant to be an attractive and polished young lady with a professional and sweet demeanor."

Submitted by Gogonostop

Meet the unlikely "heroine" whose lovers made her a billionaire - and who she repaid by landing them in jail

Broadsword · 20 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At the gilded gates of a colonial mansion in China's seaside city of Qingdao, giggling young couples pose for snapshots, craning their necks to peer in at the sumptuous grounds and gossip about the scandalous liaisons of the female billionaire who lived there.

'I think she's amazing,' says 24-year-old legal secretary Yan Lili, who made a trip after reading Li Wei's story on the internet.

'She has proved that women can have real power in China as well as men.'

Like many Chinese tycoons hailed as establishment role models, Li Wei has risen from a penniless background to unimaginable wealth. Indeed, she is the most unlikely of heroines for at least three reasons.

First, she is a woman in a society that has traditionally expected female subservience. Second, she made her money through liaisons with at least 15 lovers in the world of business and politics. And third, she has engaged in tax evasion and corruption to build a fortune estimated at more than £1billion. Yet while her lovers were jailed for corruption, China's Queen of Mistresses testified against them, sat out four years in detention and was then released this year, with most of her wealth intact.'

If men are doing it, it must be bad

el cid · 20 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This editorial states the obvious: if men are doing it, it must be bad.

"Seventy percent of Colorado's registered users are men, a sign that the state's culture of pot use has little to do with medicine."

Men are nefarious liars who obviously are using medical marijuana for something other than pain. The possibility men may end up in chronic pain more often than women is not even explored. We all know men are just plain bad.

Female made false robbery and rape claim to cover-up murdering co-worker

Minuteman · 21 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A US sports store worker who told police she was raped and beaten in a robbery in which her co-worker was killed has been charged over the violent attack.

Brittany Norwood, 28, was arrested on Saturday and will appear in court today over the death of Jayna Murray, whose body was found out the back of a Lulemon Athletica store in Bethesda, a small town just northeast of Washington DC.

Norwood, 28, had portrayed herself as another victim in the robbery-turned-murder, telling police that two masked men entered the shop after it closed on March 11.'

Update on the 2nd Conference on Male Studies

Matt · 21 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Our Second Annual International Conference on Male Studies: Looking Forward to Solutions is only 16 days away, and there's just one week left for the early registration discount.

There has never been any better reason to register right now:

1. You can be a part of a global conglomerate - participants from 16 universities - organizations and individuals, professionals and students - from countries including Germany, Australia, Canada, France, United Kingdom, Italy, India and the U.S.

2. Learn from a team of renowned experts about the problems boys and men face today, and how to stop the trend of lower accomplishment in school, higher suicide and incarceration rates, an anti-mail biased legal system, an international media that shames and belittles boys and men - and what these visionaries are doing and recommend doing to make our society better for both genders.

3. Get exclusive access to post-conference materials, including a collection of brilliant poster submissions, the live conference recording, videos and transcripts.

4. Registrants also will get invited to participate at no charge in our upcoming Male Studies online breakout sessions - where you can communicate with our Founder, plus guest experts in fields of psychology, sociology, anthropology, and more.

Take advantage of our early-registration discount, and pay only $25.00 for all this ($200.00 for live, onsite entrance).

The Program:

The male's shortfall in education and its impact on male employment prospects
Tom Mortenson

The Future of Fatherhood
Gordon E. Finley, PhD, Professor of Psychology at Florida International University.

The Current Muddled State of Gender Affairs and the Future
Michael Gilbert, Senior Fellow at the Annenberg Center for the Digital Future / University of Southern California, and author of The Disposable Male

Why Men Die First
Dr. Marianne Legato

From Primeval to Postmodern Man: A Revolutionary Theory
Paul Nathanson, PhD, Senior Researcher
Katherine Young, PhD, James McGill Professor of the McGill Faculty of Religious Studies;
Co-authors of a four volume series on misandry, the hatred of men.

Advertising: Past and Current Depictions of Males and their Consequences
Matthew Willcox and Matthew Palmer, Draftfcb.
Mr. Willcox is a Director of Strategic Planning at the agency and was instrumental in helping Levi Strauss and Company brand Dockers, develop the "Wear the Pants" campaign that dealt with male roles and image. Mr. Palmer is the lead strategist on the Miller Lite brand and a member of the team responsible for producing its "Man Up" ad campaign.

The opportunity to hear from such a collection of luminaries in one place, for such a reasonable cost - is unprecedented. Don't miss this rare opportunity.

Visit http://www.malestudies.org/events.html to learn more.

Please lodge this important anti-circumcision government submission (Deadline 31 March 2011)

Minuteman · 21 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This is a response to the consultation questions on page 80 of the government White Paper Healthy Lives, Healthy People: Our strategy for public health in England.

The deadline for submissions is 31 March 2011 1600 GMT.

This submission can be made by anybody from any country around the world.

There are two options for making submissions.

Option 1.

Download and save the Word document from the following link (Select 'NO' when prompted to upgrade to RapidPro, click 'Slow Download' on the left and then click 'Download Now!'):

http://rapidshare.com/files/453616002/Response_WhitePaper_31March2011_.doc

Open the Word document, type your name and email address (optional) in the appropriate fields, save and close the document. Email the Word document to publichealthengland@dh.gsi.gov.uk with the subject heading "Public Health White Paper Response".

Option 2.

To make a submission using the Department of Health's on-line submission form, click on the following link and then cut and paste the responses below into the appropriate fields.

http://consultations.dh.gov.uk/healthy-people/healthy-people/consultation/intro/view

Question 5. Role of GPs and GP practices in public health: Are there additional ways in which we can ensure that GPs and GP practices will continue to play a key role in areas for which Public Health England will take responsibility?

There has been a concerted effort in the professional literature, from a small cabal within the medical fraternity, to argue the case for reinstating non-therapeutic circumcision at the expense of the NHS, frequently using professed concern for the well-being of boys of certain ethnic or religious backgrounds receiving circumcision in non-medical settings, as a pretext [1], a call loudly echoed in sections of the mainstream media [2]. Regardless of whether it is performed in a medical or non-medical setting, a significant number of boys subjected to the practice of circumcision fulfill the DSM-IV criteria for a diagnosis of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder [3]. The British Medical Association advises against routine male circumcision [4], and no national medical association in the world recommends that boys be forcefully circumcised for preventive health reasons. The Royal Dutch Medical Association's very up-to-date policy on circumcision states that "KNMG is calling upon doctors to actively and insistently in form parents who are considering the procedure of the absence of medical benefits and the danger of complications", and that there is a good case for making it illegal [5]. It is therefore imperative that Public Health England mandate that all staff, contractors, agencies, facilities and departments under it's auspices, including GPs and GP practices: Must not offer among their services the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision; Must not permit on their premises individuals or organisations promoting the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision; Must not be refer patients explicitly for the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision; Must not be employed or associated with any facility offering the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision; Must not allow their facilities to be used for the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision; and Must not stock or allow on their premises literature or other material promoting the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision. References/Links: 1. Paranthaman K., Bagaria, J & O'Moore, E. (2010) The need for commissioning circumcision services for non-therapeutic indications in the NHS: lessons from an incident investigation in Oxford J Public Health first published online July 14, 2010 , 2. Campbell, D. (2010) NHS urged to offer circumcisions to avoid botched operations in The Guardian Sunday 11 July 2010 , 3. Samuel Ramos and Gregory J. Boyle. Ritual and Medical Circumcision among Filipino boys: Evidence of Post-traumatic Stress Disorder Humanities & Social Sciences papers (2000). Available at: , 4. British Medical Association. The law and ethics of male circumcision: guidance for doctors. London: BMA, 2006 , 5. KNMG (2010) Non-theraputic circumcision of male minors Question 6. Public health evidence: What are the best opportunities to develop and enhance the availability, accessibility and utility of public health information and intelligence?

The White Paper states among it's objectives “Starting well, through early intervention and prevention, is a key priority for the Government, developing strong universal public health and early education with an increased focus on disadvantaged families. This approach, proportionate universalism, was advocated in the Marmot Review into health inequalities.” (p. 32). A priority area demanding early intervention and prevention by Public Health England, is reducing the incidence of the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision. There has been a concerted effort in the professional literature, from a small cabal within the medical fraternity, to argue the case for reinstating non-therapeutic circumcision at the expense of the NHS, frequently using professed concern for the well-being of boys of certain ethnic or religious backgrounds receiving circumcision in non-medical settings, as a pretext [1], a call loudly echoed in sections of the mainstream media [2]. Regardless of whether it is performed in a medical or non-medical setting, a significant number of boys subjected to the practice of circumcision fulfill the DSM-IV criteria for a diagnosis of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder [3]. Further, circumcision removes the most sexually sensitive parts of a boy’s penis, including the foreskin, the frenulum, and the ridged band of nerves [4]. The male foreskin is also designed to protect the glans of the penis throughout a man’s life, ensuring that the internal mucosal tissue remains moist and sensitive (much the same way that a woman’s clitoral hood protects the clitoris). In addition, the foreskin acts as a natural gliding mechanism to reduce chafing and dryness during intercourse [5]. Female genital mutilation has been illegal for a number of years now [6]. There has been little incentive for the medical profession to investigate the long-term affects on men's sexual and psychological health and well-being, but the growth of groups such as NORM-UK (an organisation registered with the Charities Commissioners for England and Wales), suggests that a substantial number of men genuinely resent being circumcised [7]. To best develop and enhance the availability, accessibility and utility of public health information and intelligence regarding the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision, it is imperative that Public Health England establish a central information store of the harm caused by male circumcision, which will form the basis for establishing a dictate that staff, contractors, agencies, facilities and departments under it's auspices, including GPs and GP practices, will not perform nor refer patients for circumcision; and to make use of the insights of behavioural science to research and implement strategies which discourage parents from subjecting their sons to the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision, without lending to it's prestige by implying that it is a practice worthy of it's own policy statement or the subject of a legitimate 'debate'. Refernces/Links: 1. Paranthaman K., Bagaria, J & O'Moore, E. (2010) The need for commissioning circumcision services for non-therapeutic indications in the NHS: lessons from an incident investigation in Oxford J Public Health first published online July 14, 2010 , 2. Campbell, D. (2010) NHS urged to offer circumcisions to avoid botched operations in The Guardian Sunday 11 July 2010 , 3. Samuel Ramos and Gregory J. Boyle. Ritual and Medical Circumcision among Filipino boys: Evidence of Post-traumatic Stress Disorder Humanities & Social Sciences papers (2000). Available at: , 4. Morris L. Sorrells, James L. Snyder, Mark D. Reiss, Christopher Eden, Marilyn F. Milos, Norma Wilcox, Robert S. Van Howe Fine-touch pressure thresholds in the adult penis British Journal of Urology International, Volume 99 Issue 4 Page 864 – 869 April 2007 5. Taylor, J.P., A.P. Lockwood and A.J.Taylor The prepuce: Specialized mucosa of the penis and its loss to circumcision Journal of Urology (1996), 77, 291-295 , 6. LASSL (2004)4: Female Genital Mutilation Act 2003, DoH, published 27.2.2004 , 7.

Question 7. Public health evidence: How can Public Health England address current gaps such as using the insights of behavioural science, tackling wider determinants of health, achieving cost effectiveness, and tackling inequalities?

Recently, there has been a string of mainstream media items favourable to male circumcision, which amount to nothing less than a marketing campaign to motivate parents to have their sons circumcised [1-4]. Many of these articles draw upon established marketing concepts (in turn derived from insights of behavoiural science), most notably, the use of “experts”. An “expert”, in a marketing context, is an individual who, because of their occupation, or perceived experience, is uniquely placed to lend credence to the product or service that an advertisement promotes [5]. In the context of promoting circumcision to parents, such “experts” generally include medical practitioners who work at private circumcision clinics [2,4] and religious officials [3]. Following complaints from the public, the Press Complaints Commission has reached resolutions noting the inappropriate implication in media items that religious officials are qualified to offer medical advice in regard to circumcision, the minimisation of the inherent risks of circumcision as a medical procedure, and the implication that circumcision is of minimal discomfort through the impression that it is legitimate practice to conduct the procedure without anaesthesia [6,7]. Both the hospital and doctor (who is also a Consultant Urological Surgeon at Royal Liverpool University Hospital NHS Trust) featured in a recent episode of the Channel 4 television series Embarrassing Bodies [4], are linking to the video on the Channel 4 website from their respective web-pages [8,9], effectively by-passing the General Medical Council Guidelines about how medical practitioners should promote and publish information about their services [10]. It is unsurprising that such symbiotic relationships should form between private doctors seeking to promote their practice and mainstream media outlets who want to appease advertisers by keeping such a high-profile controversial social issue alive, since advertising is the force which has historically sustained all commercial media [11]. Regardless of whether it is performed in a medical or non-medical setting, a significant number of boys subjected to the practice of circumcision fulfill the DSM-IV criteria for a diagnosis of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder [12]. Further, circumcision removes the most sexually sensitive parts of a boy’s penis, including the foreskin, the frenulum, and the ridged band of nerves [13]. The male foreskin is also designed to protect the glans of the penis throughout a man’s life, ensuring that the internal mucosal tissue remains moist and sensitive (much the same way that a woman’s clitoral hood protects the clitoris). In addition, the foreskin acts as a natural gliding mechanism to reduce chafing and dryness during intercourse [14]. To counteract the mainstream media marketing of circumcision to parents, it is appropriate that Public Health England mandate that staff, contractors, agencies, facilities and departments under it's auspices, including GPs and GP practices, will not perform nor refer patients for circumcision; and should use the insights of behavioural science to research and implement strategies which discourage parents from subjecting their sons to the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision, without lending to it's prestige by implying that it is a practice worthy of it's own policy statement or the subject of a legitimate 'debate'. References/Links: 1. Campbell, D. (2010) NHS urged to offer circumcisions to avoid botched operations in The Guardian Sunday 11 July 2010 , 2. Renton, A. (2010) It protects men (and women) against fatal diseases and sexual infections. So, should all boys be circumcised? in TheDaily Mail , 3. Rich, B. (2010) To snip or not to snip? in The Guardian , 4. Channel 4 (2011) Embarrassing Bodies Series 4 Episode 4 , 5. Schiffman, L Bednell, D O’Cass, A Paladino, A Kanuk, L (2005) Consumer Behaviour 3rd Edition Pearson Education Australia, Australia: Frenchs Forest , 6 Press Complaints Commission (2011) Parkes vs The Guardian , 7. Press Complaints Commission (2010) Warren vs Daily Mail , 8. , 9. , 10. General Medical Council (2011) Good Medical Practice: Providing and publishing information about your services , 11. Cunningham, S & Turner, G (2002) The Media & Communications in Australia Allen & Unwin, Australia , 12. Samuel Ramos and Gregory J. Boyle. Ritual and Medical Circumcision among Filipino boys: Evidence of Post-traumatic Stress Disorder Humanities & Social Sciences papers (2000). Available at: , 13. Morris L. Sorrells, James L. Snyder, Mark D. Reiss, Christopher Eden, Marilyn F. Milos, Norma Wilcox, Robert S. Van Howe Fine-touch pressure thresholds in the adult penis British Journal of Urology International, Volume 99 Issue 4 Page 864 – 869 April 2007 , 14. Taylor, J.P., A.P. Lockwood and A.J.Taylor The prepuce: Specialized mucosa of the penis and its loss to circumcision Journal of Urology (1996), 77, 291-295

Question 8. Public health evidence: What can wider partners nationally and locally contribute to improving the use of evidence in public health?

A priority area demanding early intervention and utilisation of public health evidence by Public Health England, is reducing the incidence of the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision. There has been a concerted effort in the professional literature, from a small cabal within the medical fraternity, to argue the case for reinstating non-therapeutic circumcision at the expense of the NHS, frequently using professed concern for the well-being of boys of certain ethnic or religious backgrounds receiving circumcision in non-medical settings, as a pretext [1], a call loudly echoed in sections of the mainstream media [2]. Recently, there has been a string of mainstream media items favourable to male circumcision, which amount to nothing less than a marketing campaign to motivate parents to have their sons circumcised [2-5]. Many of these articles draw upon established marketing concepts (in turn derived from insights of behavoiural science), most notably, the use of “experts”. An “expert”, in a marketing context, is an individual who, because of their occupation, or perceived experience, is uniquely placed to lend credence to the product or service that an advertisement promotes [6]. In the context of promoting circumcision to parents, such “experts” generally include medical practitioners who work at private circumcision clinics [3,5] and religious officials [4]. Regardless of whether it is performed in a medical or non-medical setting, a significant number of boys subjected to the practice of circumcision fulfill the DSM-IV criteria for a diagnosis of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder [7]. Further, circumcision removes the most sexually sensitive parts of a boy’s penis, including the foreskin, the frenulum, and the ridged band of nerves [8]. The male foreskin is also designed to protect the glans of the penis throughout a man’s life, ensuring that the internal mucosal tissue remains moist and sensitive (much the same way that a woman’s clitoral hood protects the clitoris). In addition, the foreskin acts as a natural gliding mechanism to reduce chafing and dryness during intercourse [9]. A recent statement from the British Association of Paediatric Urologists on behalf of the British Association of Paediatric Surgeons and The Association of Paediatric Anaesthetists admitted that some doctor's under it's charge “have been willing to provide non therapeutic circumcision without charge rather than risk the procedure being carried out in unhygienic conditions.” [10]. In it's statement on the law and ethics of male circumcision, the British Medical Association has concluded that “it is for society to decide what limits should be imposed on parental choices.” [11]. There has been little incentive for the medical profession to investigate the long-term affects on men's sexual and psychological health and well-being, but the growth of groups such as NORM-UK (an organisation registered with the Charities Commissioners for England and Wales), suggests that a substantial number of men genuinely resent being circumcised [12]. It would therefore be appropriate to invite appropriately registered charity organisations such as NORM-UK to partner with Public Health England to contribute to compiling and improving the use of public health evidence to counteract the mainstream media marketing of circumcision to parents and discourage parents from subjecting their sons to the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision, without lending to it's prestige by implying that it is a practice worthy of it's own policy statement or the subject of a legitimate 'debate'. References/Links: 1. Paranthaman K., Bagaria, J & O'Moore, E. (2010) The need for commissioning circumcision services for non-therapeutic indications in the NHS: lessons from an incident investigation in Oxford J Public Health first published online July 14, 2010 , 2. Campbell, D. (2010) NHS urged to offer circumcisions to avoid botched operations in The Guardian Sunday 11 July 2010 , 3. Renton, A. (2010) It protects men (and women) against fatal diseases and sexual infections. So, should all boys be circumcised? in TheDaily Mail , 4. Rich, B. (2010) To snip or not to snip? in The Guardian , 5. Channel 4 (2011) Embarrassing Bodies Series 4 Episode 4 , 6. Schiffman, L Bednell, D O’Cass, A Paladino, A Kanuk, L (2005) Consumer Behaviour 3rd Edition Pearson Education Australia, Australia: Frenchs Forest , 7. Samuel Ramos and Gregory J. Boyle. Ritual and Medical Circumcision among Filipino boys: Evidence of Post-traumatic Stress Disorder Humanities & Social Sciences papers (2000). Available at: , 8. Morris L. Sorrells, James L. Snyder, Mark D. Reiss, Christopher Eden, Marilyn F. Milos, Norma Wilcox, Robert S. Van Howe Fine-touch pressure thresholds in the adult penis British Journal of Urology International, Volume 99 Issue 4 Page 864 – 869 April 2007 , 9. Taylor, J.P., A.P. Lockwood and A.J.Taylor The prepuce: Specialized mucosa of the penis and its loss to circumcision Journal of Urology (1996), 77, 291-295 , 10. British Association of Paediatric Urologists (2007) MANAGEMENT OF FORESKIN CONDITIONS Statement from the British Association of Paediatric Urologists on behalf of the British Association of Paediatric Surgeons and The Association of Paediatric Anaesthetists. , 11. BMA (2006) The law and ethics of male circumcision - guidance for doctors , 12.

Question 9. Regulation of public health professionals: We would welcome views on Dr Gabriel Scally's report. If we were to pursue voluntary registration, which organisation would be best suited to provide a system of voluntary regulation for public health specialists?

An area which raises questions about the professional conduct of some medical practitioners, is the continuing practice of the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision. There has been a concerted effort in the professional literature, from a small cabal within the medical fraternity, to argue the case for reinstating non-therapeutic circumcision at the expense of the NHS, frequently using professed concern for the well-being of boys of certain ethnic or religious backgrounds receiving circumcision in non-medical settings, as a pretext [1], a call loudly echoed in sections of the mainstream media [2]. Recently, there has been a string of mainstream media items favourable to male circumcision, which amount to nothing less than a marketing campaign to motivate parents to have their sons circumcised [2-5]. Many of these articles draw upon established marketing concepts (in turn derived from insights of behavoiural science), most notably, the use of "experts". An "expert", in a marketing context, is an individual who, because of their occupation, or perceived experience, is uniquely placed to lend credence to the product or service that an advertisement promotes [6]. In the context of promoting circumcision to parents, such "experts" generally include medical practitioners who work at private circumcision clinics [3,5] and religious officials [4]. Both the hospital and doctor (who is also a Consultant Urological Surgeon at Royal Liverpool University Hospital NHS Trust) featured in a recent episode of the Channel 4 television series Embarrassing Bodies [5], are linking to the video on the Channel 4 website from their respective web-pages [7,8], effectively by-passing the General Medical Council Guidelines about how medical practitioners should promote and publish information about their services [9]. A recent statement from the British Association of Paediatric Urologists on behalf of the British Association of Paediatric Surgeons and The Association of Paediatric Anaesthetists admitted that some doctor's under it's charge "have been willing to provide non therapeutic circumcision without charge rather than risk the procedure being carried out in unhygienic conditions." [10]. Regardless of whether it is performed in a medical or non-medical setting, a significant number of boys subjected to the practice of circumcision fulfill the DSM-IV criteria for a diagnosis of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder [11]. Given questions raised about the professional conduct of some medical practitioners with regard to the continuing practice of male circumcision, whatever system of voluntary regulation may be implemented, it is appropriate that Public Health England mandate that staff, contractors, agencies, facilities and departments under it's auspices, including GPs, GP practices and other public health specialists, will not perform nor refer patients for the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision. References/Links: 1. Paranthaman K., Bagaria, J & O'Moore, E. (2010) The need for commissioning circumcision services for non-therapeutic indications in the NHS: lessons from an incident investigation in Oxford J Public Health first published online July 14, 2010 , 2. Campbell, D. (2010) NHS urged to offer circumcisions to avoid botched operations in The Guardian Sunday 11 July 2010 , 3. Renton, A. (2010) It protects men (and women) against fatal diseases and sexual infections. So, should all boys be circumcised? in TheDaily Mail , 4. Rich, B. (2010) To snip or not to snip? in The Guardian , 5. Channel 4 (2011) Embarrassing Bodies Series 4 Episode 4 , 6. Schiffman, L Bednell, D O'Cass, A Paladino, A Kanuk, L (2005) Consumer Behaviour 3rd Edition Pearson Education Australia, Australia: Frenchs Forest , 7. , 8. , 9. General Medical Council (2011) Good Medical Practice: Providing and publishing information about your services , 10. British Association of Paediatric Urologists (2007) MANAGEMENT OF FORESKIN CONDITIONS Statement from the British Association of Paediatric Urologists on behalf of the British Association of Paediatric Surgeons and The Association of Paediatric Anaesthetists. , 11. Samuel Ramos and Gregory J. Boyle. Ritual and Medical Circumcision among Filipino boys: Evidence of Post-traumatic Stress Disorder Humanities & Social Sciences papers (2000). Available at:

Question 10. Cross cutting issues: Please use this section if you want to comment on any cross cutting issues

Creating incentives for medical researchers to investigate the long-term affects of circumcision on men's sexual and psychological health and well-being.

Question 11. Summary: What do you think the top 5 issues are in implementing the White Paper vision and related strategy and proposals?

1: Mandate that staff, contractors, agencies, facilities and departments under it's auspices, including GPs and GP practices, will not perform nor refer patients for circumcision.

2: Use the insights of behavioural science to research and implement strategies which discourage parents from subjecting their sons to circumcision, without lending to it's prestige by implying that it is a practice worthy of it's own policy statement or the subject of a legitimate 'debate'.

3: Establish a central information store of the harm caused by male circumcision to counteract the mainstream media marketing of circumcision to parents.

4: Partner with appropriately registered charity organisations in researching and compiling a data-store of long-term affects of circumcision on men's sexual and psychological health and well-being.

5: Creating incentives for medical researchers to investigate the long-term affects of circumcision on men's sexual and psychological health and well-being.

Please explain your answer:

There has been a concerted effort in the professional literature, from a small cabal within the medical fraternity, to argue the case for reinstating non-therapeutic circumcision at the expense of the NHS, frequently using professed concern for the well-being of boys of certain ethnic or religious backgrounds receiving circumcision in non-medical settings, as a pretext [1], a call loudly echoed in sections of the mainstream media [2]. Regardless of whether it is performed in a medical or non-medical setting, a significant number of boys subjected to the practice of circumcision fulfill the DSM-IV criteria for a diagnosis of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder [3]. Further, circumcision removes the most sexually sensitive parts of a boy's penis, including the foreskin, the frenulum, and the ridged band of nerves [4]. The male foreskin is also designed to protect the glans of the penis throughout a man's life, ensuring that the internal mucosal tissue remains moist and sensitive (much the same way that a woman's clitoral hood protects the clitoris). In addition, the foreskin acts as a natural gliding mechanism to reduce chafing and dryness during intercourse [5]. Recently, there has been a string of mainstream media items favourable to male circumcision, which amount to nothing less than a marketing campaign to motivate parents to have their sons circumcised [2,6,7,8]. Many of these articles draw upon established marketing concepts (in turn derived from insights of behavoiural science), most notably, the use of "experts". An "expert", in a marketing context, is an individual who, because of their occupation, or perceived experience, is uniquely placed to lend credence to the product or service that an advertisement promotes [9]. In the context of promoting circumcision to parents, such "experts" generally include medical practitioners who work at private circumcision clinics [6,8] and religious officials [7]. Following complaints from the public, the Press Complaints Commission has reached resolutions noting the inappropriate implication in media items that religious officials are qualified to offer medical advice in regard to circumcision, the minimisation of the inherent risks of circumcision as a medical procedure, and the implication that circumcision is of minimal discomfort through the impression that it is legitimate practice to conduct the procedure without anaesthesia [10,11]. Both the hospital and doctor (who is also a Consultant Urological Surgeon at Royal Liverpool University Hospital NHS Trust) featured in a recent episode of the Channel 4 television series Embarrassing Bodies [8], are linking to the video on the Channel 4 website from their respective web-pages [12,13], effectively by-passing the General Medical Council Guidelines about how medical practitioners should promote and publish information about their services [14]. It is unsurprising that such symbiotic relationships should form between private doctors seeking to promote their practice and mainstream media outlets who want to appease advertisers by keeping such a high-profile controversial social issue alive, since advertising is the force which has historically sustained all commercial media [15]. The British Medical Association advises against routine male circumcision [16], and no national medical association in the world recommends that boys be forcefully circumcised for preventive health reasons. The Royal Dutch Medical Association's very up-to-date policy on circumcision states that "KNMG is calling upon doctors to actively and insistently inform parents who are considering the procedure of the absence of medical benefits and the danger of complications", and that there is a good case for making it illegal [17]. Female genital mutilation has been illegal for a number of years now [18]. There has been little incentive for the medical profession to investigate the long-term affects on men's sexual and psychological health and well-being, but the growth of groups such as NORM-UK (an organisation registered with the Charities Commissioners for England and Wales), suggests that a substantial number of men genuinely resent being circumcised [19]. A recent statement from the British Association of Paediatric Urologists on behalf of the British Association of Paediatric Surgeons and The Association of Paediatric Anaesthetists admitted that some doctor's under it's charge “have been willing to provide non therapeutic circumcision without charge rather than risk the procedure being carried out in unhygienic conditions.” [20]. In it's statement on the law and ethics of male circumcision, the British Medical Association has concluded that “it is for society to decide what limits should be imposed on parental choices.” [16]. It is therefore imperative that Public Health England mandate that all staff, contractors, agencies, facilities and departments under it's auspices, including GPs and GP practices: Must not offer among their services the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision; Must not permit on their premises individuals or organisations promoting the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision; Must not be refer patients explicitly for the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision; Must not be employed or associated with any facility offering the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision; Must not allow their facilities to be used for the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision.; and Must not stock or allow on their premises literature or other material promoting the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision. To best develop and enhance the availability, accessibility and utility of public health information and intelligence regarding the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision, it is imperative that Public Health England establish a central information store of the harm caused by male circumcision, which will form the basis for establishing a dictate that staff, contractors, agencies, facilities and departments under it's auspices, including GPs and GP practices, will not perform nor refer patients for circumcision; and to make use of the insights of behavioural science to research and implement strategies which discourage parents from subjecting their sons to the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision, without lending to it's prestige by implying that it is a practice worthy of it's own policy statement or the subject of a legitimate 'debate'. To counteract the mainstream media marketing of circumcision to parents, it is appropriate that Public Health England mandate that staff, contractors, agencies, facilities and departments under it's auspices, including GPs and GP practices, will not perform nor refer patients for circumcision; and should use the insights of behavioural science to research and implement strategies which discourage parents from subjecting their sons to the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision, without lending to it's prestige by implying that it is a practice worthy of it's own policy statement or the subject of a legitimate 'debate'. It would therefore be appropriate to invite appropriately registered charity organisations such as NORM-UK to partner with Public Health England to contribute to compiling and improving the use of public health evidence to counteract the mainstream media marketing of circumcision to parents and discourage parents from subjecting their sons to the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision, without lending to it's prestige by implying that it is a practice worthy of it's own policy statement or the subject of a legitimate 'debate'. Given questions raised about the professional conduct of some medical practitioners with regard to the continuing practice of male circumcision, whatever system of voluntary regulation may be implemented, it is appropriate that Public Health England mandate that staff, contractors, agencies, facilities and departments under it's auspices, including GPs, GP practices and other public health specialists, will not perform nor refer patients for the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision. Given the dearth of research in this area, it would be appropriate for Public Health England to create incentives for medical researchers to investigate the long-term affects of circumcision on men's sexual and psychological health and well-being. Links/References: 1. Paranthaman K., Bagaria, J & O'Moore, E. (2010) The need for commissioning circumcision services for non-therapeutic indications in the NHS: lessons from an incident investigation in Oxford J Public Health first published online July 14, 2010 , 2. Campbell, D. (2010) NHS urged to offer circumcisions to avoid botched operations in The Guardian Sunday 11 July 2010 , 3. Samuel Ramos and Gregory J. Boyle. Ritual and Medical Circumcision among Filipino boys: Evidence of Post-traumatic Stress Disorder Humanities & Social Sciences papers (2000). Available at: , 4. Morris L. Sorrells, James L. Snyder, Mark D. Reiss, Christopher Eden, Marilyn F. Milos, Norma Wilcox, Robert S. Van Howe Fine-touch pressure thresholds in the adult penis British

Journal of Urology International, Volume 99 Issue 4 Page 864 – 869 April 2007 , 5. Taylor, J.P., A.P. Lockwood and A.J.Taylor The prepuce: Specialized mucosa of the penis and its loss to circumcision Journal of Urology (1996), 77, 291-295 , 6. Renton, A. (2010) It protects men (and women) against fatal diseases and sexual infections. So, should all boys be circumcised? in The Daily Mail , 7. Rich, B. (2010) To snip or not to snip? in The Guardian , 8. Channel 4 (2011) Embarrassing Bodies Series 4 Episode 4 , 9. Schiffman, L Bednell, D O'Cass, A Paladino, A Kanuk, L (2005) Consumer Behaviour 3rd Edition Pearson Education Australia, Australia: Frenchs Forest , 10. Press Complaints Commission (2011) Parkes vs The Guardian , 11. Press Complaints Commission (2010) Warren vs Daily Mail , 12. , 13. , 14. General Medical Council (2011) Good Medical Practice: Providing and publishing information about your services , 15. Cunningham, S & Turner, G (2002) The Media & Communications in Australia Allen & Unwin, Australia , 16. British Medical Association. The law and ethics of male circumcision: guidance for doctors. London: BMA, 2006 , 17. KNMG (2010) Non-theraputic circumcision of male minors , 18. LASSL (2004)4: Female Genital Mutilation Act 2003, DoH, published 27.2.2004 , 19. 20. British Association of Paediatric Urologists (2007) MANAGEMENT OF FORESKIN CONDITIONS Statement from the British Association of Paediatric Urologists on behalf of the British Association of Paediatric Surgeons and The Association of Paediatric Anaesthetists.

"Manning Up" Book Harshly Judges Young Men Going Their Own Way

redwoodwriter · 22 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Kay Hymowitz, author of "Manning Up: Has The Rise Of Women Turned Men Into Boys?" offers her judgments about young men in this interview. She praises the recent advances women have made relative to men. Then she condemns and shames young men which, she says, aren't "grown up" until they are on their own, making the big bucks, married, and having children. In this humble contributor's estimation, what she's saying is "if men aren't doing what women want them to, i.e., following the female dream scenario, then they aren't grown up." I say that these young men are doing what makes the most sense, given the hostile legal and social environment surrounding dating and marriage. More specifically, young men are going their own way, and not doing what the women want them to do. So I receive this interview as a complaint about the fact that men aren't supporting women like they used to do... and women don't like it. Excerpt:

'So the child-man is the young guy who finds himself in this new era of preadulthood and doesn't quite feel himself a man, and is of course not a child, but is still very attached to many of his adolescent pleasures, and hangs out a lot with his bros.'

Suzanne Venker: Feminism Doesn’t Liberate Women

anthony · 22 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Author Suzanne Venker doesn’t think the feminist movement liberated women.

In fact, she thinks the movement has sabotaged American women’s happiness. Venker writes “according to a 2007 report from the National Bureau of Economic Research, as women have gained more freedom, more education, and more power, they have become less happy.”
...
The saddest part of this misguided view of human nature is that it hasn’t made women any happier. In fact, it has done just the opposite. According to a 2007 report from the National Bureau of Economic Research, “As women have gained more freedom, more education, and more power, they have become less happy."'

Guys, man up and get vaccinated: HPV is your responsibility

anthony · 22 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The human papillomavirus is a man's issue.

That's undeniable after Monday's release of a new report that revealed that half of American men might be infected with human papillomavirus . Until then, HPV was thought by most to be a woman's virus because it causes cervical cancer. That was never true; HPV, which is spread through sexual contact, should always have been as much a male concern as a female concern.

...

The vaccines, a miracle of cancer prevention, were approved for females and everyone breathed a sigh of relief. When they were approved for boys and men ages 9-26, the news was largely met with "Why bother? Women can get the vaccination." Now, though, it's obvious to everyone that HPV is a male issue, too. So get vaccinated or if you are the parent of a boy, have him vaccinated (parents of girls should have them vaccinated too, of course).'

Wendy McElroy: War of the Genders

anthony · 23 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Overwhelmingly, both disciplines adhere to a specific form of feminism that was labeled “gender feminism” by Christina Hoff Sommers, author of The War Against Boys: How Misguided Feminism Is Harming Our Young Men. As Sommers observed, “somewhere along the line, conventional masculinity became politically incorrect. In some circles, it's treated as a pathology in need of a cure.”

A foundational premise of gender feminism (and thus a premise of Men’s Studies) is that male culture or “the patriarchy” oppresses women through institutions such as the free market and through dynamics such as the social construction of gender identity. Gender is considered to be a social creation, not a biological one, and traditional masculinity is seen as inherently abusive to women.
...
Whatever the truth of the politics, Male Studies is not going away quietly or soon. A second conference is scheduled for April 6 the New York Academy of Medicine. An academic journal is in the offing: Male Studies: An Interdisciplinary Journal will be launched in 2011.'

Female 'shot at neighbour after denied kiss'

Minuteman · 23 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

(The quotation marks were in the original article headline and seem to be an editor's device to further distance the perpetrator from her actions.)

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A 92-year-old US woman has been arrested for allegedly shooting at her neighbour after he refused to give her a kiss.

Gun-toting grandmother Helen Staudinger fired her 350 semi-automatic pistol at 53-year-old Dwight Bettner when he rejected her advances, WESH.com reported.

Mr Bettner had asked her to leave his home, in Marion County, Florida, but she said she would only go if he kissed her. She left angry when the man declined, telling her to "get your [expletive] out my house", it is claimed.

The police arrest report added: "She appeared to have the impression that there was a relationship between them.

"The defendant said she came home, got her gun, and went back to shoot his car that he loved so much."'

Australia: Tenders sought - "Australian Longitudinal Study on Male Health"

Minuteman · 23 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

In case any readers happen to have expertise in this area. Link to posting here. Excerpt:

'The Department of Health and Ageing is seeking tenders from capable and experienced organisations for the design and establishment of the Australian Longitudinal Study on Male Health and commencement of the first wave of data collection. The Australian Longitudinal Study on Male Health (the Study) was announced in 2010 with the release of the National Male Health Policy. The development of the Study stems from priority area five of the Policy, which focuses on building a strong evidence base on male health to inform policies, programs and initiatives. Over time, the Study will provide a national research resource of current and valid information on male health. The Study will examine the health and wellbeing of Australian males with a focus on the social, economic, environmental and behavioural factors that affect the length and quality of life of Australian men and boys. Information from the Study will be used to inform policies and service provision.'

"Men May Be Jerks...But Women Are Insane"

anthony · 23 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Men may be jerks," my husband likes to occasionally declare, "but women are insane." I hate to admit it, but he's right-and anyone who has spent two years living in a sorority house filled with alpha girls (I'm raising my hand) can attest that this is true.

Women are likely going nuts for a number of reasons. For instance, it's quite tiring and stressful, not to mention impossible, to try to have the brilliant job, the perfect family, shiny hair and manicured hands. Some women say they want total "equality" but still want guys to pick up the check. But perhaps another reason women are losing it is that they're repeatedly told that they're no different than men-and many believe it, particularly in the realm of sex ...

None of this excuses bad behavior from men, as Hymowitz points out. But the fact is that women who are sick of child-men will have little luck trying to change the knowledge economy. They're certainly happy that birth control and feminism are here to stay. The one thing they can change, however, is their own behavior, their standards, and their expectations.'

Mexico advises workers on sexist language

Broadsword · 24 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Manual for the Non-sexist Use of Language is being distributed to government offices across Mexico.

It seeks to reduce comments that enforce gender stereotypes, as well as the default use of the masculine form in the Spanish language.

The manual was written by a body that tackles violence against women.

In its introduction, the manual describes itself as "a tool to familiarize federal public workers with the use of non-sexist strategies in the Spanish language".

It discourages the use of phrases such as: "If you want to work, why did you have children," and: "You are prettier when you keep quiet".

It also advises against referring to women as possessions, as in phrases such as "Pedro's woman".'

Update: Action Alert: Stop Family Court Financial Abuses by Passing SB 528 & SB 917 in Oklahoma

Matt · 24 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Update, 3/16/11–After a tough fight, both SB 528 and SB 917 passed out of the Oklahoma Senate on 3/15. They now head to the House of Representatives. We will keep you informed of continuing developments. Your response to our 3/14 call to action was overwhelming, and we thank all of our members and supporters who participated.

Together with you in the love of our children,

Glenn Sacks, MA Executive Director, Fathers and Families

Ned Holstein, M.D., M.S. Founder, Chairman of the Board, Fathers and Families'

IA: Tell Doctors to Put Down the Knife

Matt · 24 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'Every day, thousands of doctors across the country take newborn baby boys from their parents and subject them to a medically unnecessary, painful, life-altering surgery—circumcision.

Parents place their trust in their children's doctors, and it's the doctors' responsibility to tell them: (1) no medical organization in the world recommends circumcision; (2) the foreskin is a normal, important body part; and (3) babies are people with rights, and no baby has consented to circumcision.'

Abuse Hysteria in Maine: The Ghost of Michael Nifong

Matt · 27 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During the early hours of March 14, 2006, a group of Duke University lacrosse players allegedly raped and sodomized a Black woman. Over the next 13 months, the sleepy town of Durham, North Carolina became witness to a succession of prosecutorial accusations, full-throated media warnings, and castration marches.

On April 12, 2007, the state Attorney General declared the three lacrosse players innocent of all charges. Two months later, prosecutor Michael Nifong was disbarred on grounds of engaging in fraud, dishonesty, and deceit.'

Deputies: 17-year-old girl assaults mother with gun to get new vehicle

Matt · 28 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 17-year-old girl was charged Friday with aggravated assault with a deadly weapon, unlawful possession of a firearm and battery after deputies say she pulled a gun on her mother during an argument.

Rachel Anne Hachero was upset because her mother wouldn't co-sign on a vehicle purchase, according to a Lee County Sheriff's Office report.

The teen's mother told investigators Hachero threatened to kill her when she refused to co-sign for the vehicle.

Hachero then confronted her mother at home with a gun and pistol-whipped her head, according to the report.'

UK: 80% of women graduates 'won't repay loan' after tuition fees rise

Broadsword · 29 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Around four in five female graduates will never repay their student loan under the Coalition's new tuition fees regime, it emerged yesterday.

An analysis of the student loan system shows that middle-income men who will finally pay-off their loan at the age of 47-50, will bear the brunt of the cost of higher education.

The figures show that between 70 and 80 per cent of women – up to 150,000 a year – will never repay their full loan, compared with 20 to 30 per cent at present. And when loans are written off, 30 years after graduation, the average woman will still owe £26,500.

Under the new regime, graduates will not have to pay off their loan until they earn £21,000 and women will not have to pay anything when they take time off to raise children.'

AV4M: The Movement to Disbar Mary N. Kellett

DenisP · 29 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vladek Filler is about to face trial for a second time on the charge of raping his wife, Ligia. He was brought to trial the first time by Bar Harbor prosecutor Mary N. Kellett, who has sought to imprison Mr. Filler despite the fact that she knows that there is no physical evidence that he ever committed a crime, and despite the fact that his accuser Ligia Filler, has proven to be a violent criminal, a liar who has been caught in false allegations against her husband, and a physical and emotional abuser of her husband and children with a history of severe psychiatric problems.

Ligia Filler has been referred to as “certifiable” by sheriff’s department personnel who she repeatedly threatened to kill.

Mary Kellett’s professional conduct in this case breeches virtually all canons of legal ethics where it concerns prosecutors, from intentionally misleading jurors to avoiding pretrial discovery to actually asking a law enforcement officer to refuse to comply with a valid subpoena in order to help her conceal exculpatory evidence.'

Walmart Gets Punked by Frivolous Lawsuit

anthony · 30 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Walmart is getting sued by 6 women for sex discrimination; this despite the fact that most of the employees are women. The ambulance-chasing shysters fomenting this case succeeded in getting “class” status for their few plaintiffs from the notorious 9th Circuit Court of Appeals. One of the primary tests for certifying a lawsuit as a “class” is for the court to determine whether the named plaintiffs are sufficiently representative of the class. Additionally, the court must determine if actual discrimination occurred and that this discrimination was likely to be widespread and effect a large class; in this case, a half of million female employees.

This sad case began with a few hapless women who couldn't qualify as managers, but wishing they were managers. These people are rolling the dice with their litigation lottery scam. These women ended up telling sad stories of how they didn't get their promotions to manager due to discrimination (yes, it’s true, Wal-Mart has a strict policy against promoting morons). This is not a tort, unless those people can show, with evidence, that they were passed over because they were a woman. In the Walmart case, the attorneys for the plaintiffs used a combination of sob stories, anecdotal evidence and statistics. The statistics showed nothing.'

Salon.com: Is the men's rights movement growing?

anthony · 30 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are three issues that they constantly talk about as evidence of reverse discrimination against men.

1. Divorce alimony issues: Women are more likely to be believed in divorce court than men.

2. Custody issues: Women are more likely to get custody, despite the fact that men are excellent fathers.

3. Men have to register for the draft. Women can volunteer. Despite the fact that it's an all-volunteer army, they still argue that there's discrimination against men in the military.'

Women’s studies professor suggested as possible DNC chair

anthony · 30 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As Democratic National Committee chair Tim Kaine is expected to announce this week whether he will step down from his position to run for a senate seat in Virginia, Georgetown professor Donna Brazile has been suggested as a possible replacement.

Brazile, an adjunct assistant professor in the women’s studies program, currently serves as the chair of the DNC’s Voting Rights Institute. She became the first African-American to direct a major campaign when she served as the manager of Al Gore’s presidential bid in 2000, has experience as Congresswoman Eleanor Holmes Norton’s chief of staff and press secretary, and as a campaign strategist for Carter-Mondale and the Reverend Jesse Jackson.'

Jobs where women are earning more than men

anthony · 30 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Step aside, guys. Women are moving up the payroll. According to a March “Women at Work” report by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, the gender wage gap continues to narrow. Women earned 81 cents for every dollar earned by men in 2010, up from 76 cents in 2000. Moreover, recent reports suggest that young urban women now earn 8 percent more than male peers, likely due to higher college graduation rates.
...
At the same time, there is some evidence that men are discriminated against in female-dominated jobs. A 2010 study found that men were less likely to be called for an interview in fields with 65 percent or more female workers, an attitude which may be reflected in wages. Employment researcher Laurence Shatkin, author of 2011 Career Plan, says that discrimination or feelings of not fitting in could cause higher turnover rates among men in these jobs, which wouldn’t allow them to gain seniority and would negatively affect wages.'

CNN Money: Single young males are tax scofflaws and children's piggy-bank robbers

Matt · 31 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

The Feminist Hooey Machine is up and running at all times of year, tax time included! Here is the latest. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (CNNMoney) -- The typical American tax cheat is male, single and under the age of 45.

At least that's what an annual survey by DDB Worldwide Communications Group found.
...
While only 15% of Americans surveyed fessed up to fudging their tax returns, 64% of those people were men, according to the survey of consumer attitudes and behavior. Thirty-five percent were single (47% when including people who have been divorced or widowed), and 55% were under the age of 45.
...
Tax cheaters are even more likely to steal money from a child. The survey found that while only 3% of non-cheaters would ever take money from their child's piggy bank, 28% of cheaters said they would.'

Woman uses 5-year-old son as shield against Taser

Matt · 31 March 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A domestic dispute that boiled over at a business led to a woman being arrested for disorderly conduct after she used her son as a shield against being Tasered.

According to Glendale police:

A 36-year-old Milwaukee woman was arrested for disorderly conduct/domestic violence at the service area at Andrew Toyota, 1620 W. Silver Spring Drive, at 12:15 p.m. March 24.

When police arrived, the woman was holding the hand of her 5-year-old son while shaking her finger in the face of her boyfriend, an employee of Andrew, while yelling, “Give me my weed back!” She also wanted her keys back.

The boyfriend, a 28-year-old Milwaukee man, gave her the keys but denied to her and police that he had her $5 bag of marijuana. She struggled with police, refused to give her name and held her son in front of her to avoid being Tasered.

The boyfriend, who is not the 5-year-old’s father, said the two had been living together for three months, but when asked what the woman’s last name was said he wasn’t sure.

He also said he didn’t want her arrested but police told him they had no choice because she hit him with an open hand and pushed him several times.'

UK: David Willetts blames feminism over lack of jobs for working class men

Broadsword · 2 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. A counter argument to Willetts statement can be found here. Excerpt:

'The universities minister David Willetts has been criticised after making comments that appear to blame educated working women for the lack of jobs available to aspiring working class men.

Willetts said feminism was probably the "single biggest factor" for the lack of social mobility in Britain, because women who would otherwise have been housewives had taken university places and well-paid jobs that could have gone to ambitious working-class men. The Conservative minister made his comments before the launch of the government's social mobility strategy next week. Looking at reasons for social mobility, he said: "The feminist revolution in its first round effects was probably the key factor. Feminism trumped egalitarianism. It is not that I am against feminism, it's just that is probably the single biggest factor."
...
"It is delicate territory, because it is not a bad thing that women had these opportunities," he said. "But it widened the gap in household incomes, because you suddenly had two-earner couples, both of whom were well-educated, compared with often workless households where nobody was educated."'

Judge allows Duke lacrosse lawsuit to go forward

anthony · 2 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three former Duke lacrosse players falsely accused of rape five years ago can pursue a lawsuit against the ex-county prosecutor and police investigators who handled their case, a federal judge in North Carolina ruled Thursday.

U.S. District Judge James Beaty said in his decision that the players can pursue claims such as malicious prosecution, concealment of evidence and fabrication of false evidence. He dismissed several other accusations, such as intentional infliction of emotional distress.

Richard Emery, an attorney for one of the former players, Reade Seligmann, said they are prepared to vigorously pursue the case.

"The opinion is what I would call, overall, a ringing success for the boys," Emery said. "We're glad that we're moving ahead with the case."'

Former Duke lacrosse accuser arrested for stabbing boyfriend

anthony · 4 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Crystal Mangum, the woman who famously claimed she was raped by a group of Duke lacrosse players in 2006, has now been accused of stabbing her boyfriend.

The 32-year-old was arrested Sunday morning after reportedly seriously injuring her 46-year-old lover, and was charged with assault with a deadly weapon with intent to kill inflicting serious injury.
...
Since then, Mangum has been convicted of a series of misdemeanors, including charges of child abuse and resisting arrest in December.

Those charges stemmed from a February 2010 incident involving a different boyfriend, in which she was charged with slashing the tires of his car, smashing his windshield and setting a pile of his clothes on fire in his apartment while her children were in the home. The police were also present, having already arrived on the scene.

Mangum's latest legal battle began on Sunday morning, when officers responded to reports of a stabbing and found a man with knife wounds his torso, according to the Raleigh News-Observer.'

Representative expresses fear that legislation could be used to fuel false accusations

anthony · 4 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, April 1, 2011 /Christian Newswire/ -- On March 31, 2011, the Ways and Means Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives conducted a voting session (called a "mark up") on H.R. 1232. This bill would prevent a number of federal tax credits and tax deductions from being used for abortion, or for health plans that cover abortion, but contains exceptions for abortions sought in cases of rape, incest, or to save the life of the mother.

During debate, one member of the committee, Rep. Ron Kind (D-Wisconsin), indicated that he opposed the bill in part because it "could lead to some very perverse unintended consequences," specifically, that women would falsely accuse boyfriends or husbands of rape in order to continue to qualify for a tax-subsidized abortion.'

Time: Obama Administration Takes a Stand on Sexual Violence and Schools

anthony · 4 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vice President Joe Biden gave a heartfelt, hour-long speech at the University of New Hampshire today. The topic was sexual violence, and the occasion was the unveiling of new guidance to go along with Title IX, the federal civil rights law that prohibits sex discrimination, that spells out responsibilities that all federally-funded schools have when it comes to what Biden called the "dirty, little secret": Women are abused and raped in America, on college campuses and elsewhere.

Domestic violence awareness has been a favorite cause of Biden's for decades, and he's helped pass laws related to abuse in general. But Monday's event marked an unprecedented extension of the federal government's reach into schools. "All universities are probably going to say the right thing, but I think some of them have become more complacent than others," says Lisa Maatz, policy director for the American Association of University Women. The guidance, she says, is "supposed to help [schools] really understand what their role, what their responsibility is, so there are no questions, so there are no excuses."

...

The Vice President spoke directly to the male college students gathered there, as representatives of boys their age everywhere. He told them they needed to respect women and had to say or do something if their peers were acting otherwise. "If you want to measure your manhood," he said in a bellowing, raspy tone, "measure it on the gumption you have to speak up."'

Abuse Hysteria in Maine: This Week's Alert

Matt · 4 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

SAVE has sent a letter to District Attorney Carletta M. Bassano calling for the immediate dismissal of the case of State of Maine v. Vladek Filler: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/BassanoLtr4.4.2011.pdf

This case represents a bizarre miscarriage of justice that threatens to undermine public respect for law:

- The allegation of marital rape does not meet the probable-cause standard.
- Ligia Filler is a proven child abuser.
- Ligia Filler is a documented false accuser.
- The Maine Department of Health and Human Services sided with the defendant in a concurrent child custody dispute.
- Continued prosecution of the case is likely to harm the children.
- The case has become so tainted with bias that justice can no longer be served.
- The continued prosecution of this case re-victimizes the true victims of violent crime.

86% of the victims of female sexual predators aren't believed fondueguy · 5 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

An article from The Canadian Children's Rights Council, a non-governmental educational and advocacy organization concerned with Canadian children's human rights and responsibilities, reports on female sex offenders and highlights key features here. Excerpt:

'86% of the victims of female sexual predators aren't believed, so the crimes go unreported and don't get prosecuted.
...
Finally, there is an alarmingly high rate of sexual abuse by females in the backgrounds of rapists, sex offenders and sexually aggressive men -59% (Petrovich and Templer, 1984), 66% (Groth, 1979) and 80% (Briere and Smiljanich, 1993). A strong case for the need to identify female perpetrators can be found in Table 4, which presents the findings from a study of adolescent sex offenders by O'Brien (1989). Male adolescent sex offenders abused by "females only" chose female victims almost exclusively.'

Government Office ‘falsified' figures on Domestic Violence –Ombudsman finds fondueguy · 5 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'South Australia’s Office for Women presented erroneous statistics, such as 95 per cent of domestic violence involves a male perpetrator and a female victim, the ombudsman found. Raw data show that, overall, at least one in three victims are male.

Men’s Health Australia spokesman Greg Andresen said the SA Ombudsman’s report should make the Gillard Government think twice about rolling back the shared parenting reforms introduced to family law by the Howard government —which effectively guarantee fathers some level of access to their children in the event of marital breakdown.

...

“But the problem is that when governments roll out programs relating to children, what gets rolled out is a program for women, not one that has equal regard for men and women.'

womenshealth.gov article on men and HPV

Minuteman · 6 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Half of U.S. Men Infected With HPV, Study Reveals

TUESDAY, March 1 (HealthDay News) -- A new international study finds that half of adult males in the United States and elsewhere may be infected with human papillomavirus (HPV), a sexually transmissible virus linked to cervical cancer and other tumors.

The finding could help public health experts determine the value of widespread HPV vaccination of males, the study authors say.

"The incidence of genital HPV infection in men was high and relatively constant across age groups in Brazil, Mexico and the U.S.A.," concluded Anna R. Giuliano, of the H. Lee Moffitt Cancer Center and Research Institute in Tampa, Fla., and colleagues. "The results from this study provide much needed data about the incidence and clearance of HPV infection in men."

The study, which was funded by the U.S. National Cancer Institute and published in the March 1 online edition of The Lancet, also found that having multiple female or male sex partners greatly increased a man's risk of HPV infection and that, each year, about 6 percent of men are newly infected with HPV16, the virus that causes cervical cancer in women and also causes cancers in men.'

India: Female pilot gets bail while male pilots rot in jail arindamp · 6 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This is just one example of blatant sexism by the Indian judiciary. Excerpt:

'Moving the bail application, the accused stated that she was a 40-year-old unmarried woman who was the only support for her aged parents. Counsel Aggarwal also stated that the women in the country should be given a special status and the accused being an unmarried woman could not be kept in jail.

Allowing the plea, ASJ Bhatnagar said, "Since the accused is a female and she has already joined the investigation and her custodial interrogation is not required... it is hereby ordered that in the event of arrest, the accused be released on bail."'

Rwanda Chief Justice advocates for men's rights

Matt · 6 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Deputy Chief Gender Monitor in the Gender Monitoring Office (GMO), Ramathan Barengayabo, was yesterday sworn in at the Supreme Court.

The swearing in, which was presided over by Chief Justice Aloysia Cyanzayire, also saw the swearing-in of Sam Kanyemera Kaka as a Commissioner in the National Human Rights Commission.

Cyanzayire urged Barengayabo to always strive to promote gender.

"Gender equality is a cross-cutting issue; we should not only promote women's rights, whenever men's rights are violated you should also intervene. What we are targeting is a totally balanced society," Cyanzayire said.'

NCFM helps the San Diego YMCA to Stop Charging Boys More than Girls for Skateboarding

Matt · 6 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of our NCFM members discovered that the YMCA was charging boys more than girls for skateboarding at the YMCA's skateboard park. Our Secretary Al Rava investigated and we thought it best to send the "Y" a letter.

The YMCA for decades has provided a wide range of beneficial services to the young and old. We felt it would be in their best interests to discontinue such discrimination since it's illegal in California and they could be sued, which would necessarily mean less money for programs.

...

Dear Mr. Crouch:

Upon receipt of your letter, the Mission Valley YMCA discontinued promoting its skate park to girls by offering a discounted admission fee. The sole purpose of such discount was to encourage girls to engage in a sport that has long been male dominated. We will find an alternative approach to promote gender equality.'

NCFM in 'Cycling News'

Matt · 6 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sea Otter Classic organizers proposed for the first time in its history a celebration of Ladies Day on April 17, 2011, the final day of its annual multi-day cycling festival including racing, riding, demos and expos in Monterey, California. What they didn't expect was backlash from the National Coalition for Men (NCFM).
...
NCFM President Harry Crouch was unhappy that men were not included and complained of unequal treatment."Men and boys over the age of 12 had to pay $10 admission," read a statement in an article on the NCFM organization's website.

Crouch took issue with the fact that the event would be charging men for something women received for free and with the help of his lawyers, showed how it was a violation of several California laws, and Monterey County's The Herald then published an article on the topic.
...
The Sea Otter Classic responded officially to Crouch via its lawyer Andrew H. Swartz. Yohannan shared the letter with Cyclingnews. "This is in response to your letter dated March 18, 2011 addressed to our client The Sea Otter Classic. First I want to thank you for presenting this issue to my client's attention. The Sea Otter Classic is proud of its full compliance with all laws including the anti-discrimination laws to which you refer in your letter. I can assure you that women and men have been and always will be treated equally at this and all subsequent Sea Otter Classic events and men will not pay a higher entry fee. Should you need any further information please feel free to contact me."'

Please lodge this anti-circumcision submission with the CDC (Deadline 15 April 2011)

Minuteman · 8 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This is a response to the document "Draft Action Plan--A Public Health Action Plan To Combat Antimicrobial Resistance" [Docket No. CDC-2011-0002] (http://www.regulations.gov/#!documentDetail;D=CDC-2011-0002-0001).

The deadline for submissions is 15 April 2011.

This submission can be made by anybody from any country around the world.

Instructions:

Download and save the PDF document from the following link (Select 'NO' when prompted to upgrade to RapidPro, click 'Slow Download' on the left and then click 'Download Now!'):

http://rapidshare.com/files/456408970/CDC-2011-0002_15Apr2011.pdf

Go to the following regulations.gov submission page:

http://www.regulations.gov/#!submitComment;D=CDC-2011-0002-0001

Enter your name in the appropriate fields (Optional). Click browse under '3. UPLOAD FILE(S)' to upload the saved PDF document from your harddisk. Click 'Submit'.

Acknowledgement: This document is a slightly modified version of the Doctors Opposing Circumcision (DOC) Special Statement "Epidemic Methicillin-Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus: Dramatically Increased Risk for Circumcised Newborn Boys" (http://www.doctorsopposingcircumcision.org/DOC/mrsa.html). From the DOC Publications page: "Doctors Opposing Circumcision publishes statements, which may be downloaded, printed, photocopied, handed out, mailed, attached to e-mail, and used as necessary."

Please leave a reply so that I may gauge the number of submissions made.

UK: Fire brigade relaxes strength and fitness test to make entry easier for women

Broadsword · 10 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fire chiefs have made the 'ladder lifting' tests that all new recruits must go through easier to allow more women and less-strong men into the service.

Previously, potential firefighters had to extend a 100kg ladder by themselves in 20 seconds to qualify.

However, now they are only required to life a 30kg weight over their head.

Strenuous runs, where candidates had to complete increasing fast sprints in what's known as a 'beep test,' have also been scrapped, along with having to carry a 12 stone person 100 yards in less than a minute.'

Female reporter denied access to men's locker room redwoodwriter · 11 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

A female sports reporter was denied access to the men's locker room at the Augusta National Golf Club. She makes quite a ruckus about equal access, and how this is unfair. These complaints are so hypocritical. Male sports reporters are not allowed in women player's locker rooms. This incident reveals how totally whipped American males are. American men give American women anything they want, no matter what the personal price may be: "Personal privacy? ... Oh, OK, I'll give that up too in the name of "feminism" and their definition of equal access" (no matter how twisted that may be). Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- A female sports reporter blasted the all-male Augusta National Golf Club on Monday, a day after a security guard wouldn't let her in to interview one of the stars of the recent Masters tournament.

Tara Sullivan, a reporter with The Bergen (New Jersey) Record, tried to join other reporters Sunday evening in the club's locker room to interview Rory McElroy, a 21-year-old from Northern Ireland who gave up a big lead at the close of the four-day competition. But a security guard said she couldn't come in because she was a woman.'

Homeless men paid to get beaten up by women for video sales

GaryB · 12 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This story shocks me. Homeless men were paid peanuts to get beaten to a pulp by women on video so the videos can be sold on a fetish site. What's the betting they were quietly told not to hit back? Excerpt:

'A video company paid homeless men $US50 to be filmed while scantily clad women punched, kicked and whipped them, according to a lawsuit filed in a Florida court.

Lawyers for two homeless men said the website www.shefights.net sells videos on the internet of the so-called "beatdowns," starting at $US2.99 for a two-minute "sparring session" clip and increasing in price to $US33.99 for a 33 minute clip of two women beating a man.

The lawsuit contends the beatings violate a state hate crimes law that specifically protects the homeless and that the producers are exploiting the poverty of transients for whom any cash is hard to come by.

"What type of society would allow this to happen?" said Neil Chonin, the lawyer for the homeless men. "This company preyed on people who are desperate."'

Interestingly, the words 'homeless men' are used regularly, rather than 'the homeless' or 'homeless people' - note the word MEN.

Please lodge this anti-circumcision submission with the US State Department (deadline 24 Apr 2011)

Minuteman · 13 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This is a response to the document "Agency Information Collection Activities; Proposals, Submissions, and Approvals: Biographical Questionnaire for U.S. Passport" [Docket No. DOS-2011-0055].

The deadline for submissions is 24 April 2011.

This submission can be made by anybody from any country around the world.

Instructions-

Go to the following regulations.gov submission page:

http://www.regulations.gov/#!submitComment;D=DOS-2011-0055-0001

Enter your name and details in the appropriate fields (Optional). Copy & Paste the text below into the 'TYPE COMMENT' field. Click 'Submit'.

"RE: Docket No. DOS-2011-0055. I am writing to ask you to remove intrusive questions about circumcision status from the proposed supplemental Biographical Questionnaire form "DS-5513". Such inquiries intrude into the personal privacy of U.S. Citizens who merely seek to apply for a passport. The State Department's inquiry into circumcision status will only serve to discriminate against immigrant groups who are typically intact (non-circumcising). This proposed line of questioning appears to be in response to a defeat in court in the case of Castelano v. Clinton, and seems targeted at the Latino community. Such questioning may place pressure on immigrant families to circumcise their children in the belief that it may help conform to the State Departments expectations. Additionally, the form does not distinguish between male and female circumcision. Female circumcision has been made illegal by U.S. Title 18 Part I Chapter 7 Section 116 of September 30, 1996. Hence, the form may also encourage female circumcision, a violation of Federal law. The veracity of circumcision status will be difficult to ascertain in the absence of a medical examination. Medical researchers also have found that men recruited for medical studies have often incorrectly stated they were intact ("uncircumcised"), when actually they were circumcised. Such innocent errors may subject the applicant to fines and imprisonment, according to the warning provisions on the form."

Acknowledgement: The above text is a slightly modified version of an alert email sent by Tony from Intaction.org.

Please leave a reply so that I may gauge the number of submissions made.

Nova Scotia: Hitmen an option for battered women to use

Stinger503 · 13 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Don't go to the police if you're being abused! Just hire a hitman! Excerpt:

'Battered women have won an important legal victory after Nova Scotia's highest court concluded a woman "living in a state of terror" was understandably driven to try to arrange for her abusive husband's murder.

In the landmark decision, the court said the law must be sensitive to the unique plight of women whose lives and well-being are endangered by brutal spouses.

The judges upheld the acquittal of 39-year-old school teacher Nicole Ryan, who had negotiated with an undercover police officer to kill her grossly abusive, estranged husband.

"Ms. Ryan was compelled to take the action she did by normal human instincts and self-preservation," the judges said in a 3-0 decision. "It would be inappropriate, under these circumstances, to attribute criminal conduct to her."'

'They want their men back': Syrian women protest mass arrests

anthony · 13 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'AMMAN — Hundreds of women from a Syrian town that has witnessed mass arrests of its men marched along Syria's main coastal highway on Wednesday to demand their release, human rights activists said.

Security forces, including secret police, stormed Baida on Tuesday, going into houses and arresting men aged up to 60, the activists said, after townsfolk joined unprecedented protests challenging the 11-year rule of President Bashar al-Assad.

The women from Baida were marching on the main highway leading to Turkey chanting slogans to demand the release of some 350 men, the Syrian Observatory for Human Rights said.'

UK: Teenage girls are targeted by 'new generation of domestic abusers', top prosecutor warns

Broadsword · 13 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new generation of wife beaters have made teenage girls the most likely targets for their abuse, a top prosecutor has warned.

Women aged between 16 and 19 are now more at risk than any other age group as part of a 'whole new generation of domestic violence', Keir Starmer, Director of Public Prosecutions, said.

In a bid to tackle abuse, every domestic murder in England and Wales will be automatically reviewed from today to ensure lessons are learned.'

Men’s Shelter Gets Government Grant in Canada

Matt · 13 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This past week, Earl Silverman’s DV shelter in Calgary announced that it took in and housed its first male victim that had been both referred and funded by a $1,000 grant from the local provincial government. This is a huge deal in Canada. For the first time, a Canadian government agency has recognized male victimization from female-perpetrated violence, funded a male victim with a grant, and referred him to a shelter that it recognizes as legitimate and worthy of funding. Outstanding, Earl Silverman. I hope that the man who sought out your help is able to pick up his life and carry on, and thanks to your help and the assistance of the provincial government he has a solid shot at doing just that.'

WSJ: There Is No Male-Female Wage Gap

Matt · 13 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tuesday is Equal Pay Day—so dubbed by the National Committee for Pay Equity, which represents feminist groups including the National Organization for Women, Feminist Majority, the National Council of Women's Organizations and others. The day falls on April 12 because, according to feminist logic, women have to work that far into a calendar year before they earn what men already earned the year before.

In years past, feminist leaders marked the occasion by rallying outside the U.S. Capitol to decry the pernicious wage gap and call for government action to address systematic discrimination against women. This year will be relatively quiet. Perhaps feminists feel awkward protesting a liberal-dominated government—or perhaps they know that the recent economic downturn has exposed as ridiculous their claims that our economy is ruled by a sexist patriarchy.

The unemployment rate is consistently higher among men than among women. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that 9.3% of men over the age of 16 are currently out of work. The figure for women is 8.3%. Unemployment fell for both sexes over the past year, but labor force participation (the percentage of working age people employed) also dropped. The participation rate fell more among men (to 70.4% today from 71.4% in March 2010) than women (to 58.3% from 58.8%). That means much of the improvement in unemployment numbers comes from discouraged workers—particularly male ones—giving up their job searches entirely.'

Boy, 10, Escapes as Mother Drives Her Family Into Hudson

Matt · 13 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 10-year-old boy escaped and swam ashore after his mother deliberately drove their minivan off a boat ramp and into the Hudson River in Newburgh, N.Y., on Tuesday night, the police said. The mother and three younger children who were trapped in the minivan died.

The police said the driver's-side window was down when the doomed minivan was towed from the water, suggesting that the boy, identified as La'Shaun Armstrong, had crawled past his mother as he scrambled to get out.

Michael Ferrara, the Newburgh police chief, identified the mother as LaShanda Armstrong, 25. Inside, along with Ms. Armstrong, were her three young children, identified by the police as Landen Pierre, 5; Lance Pierre, 2; and Lainaina Pierre, 11 months old. All had died, Chief Ferrara said.

He said the 10-year-old had been in the minivan when Ms. Armstrong steered the car off the boat ramp and into the river a few blocks from the row-house apartment where they lived. La'Shaun "managed to hit the power windows," Chief Ferrara said, and "climbed out before the vehicle sank."

Newburgh officials described a tragedy that unfolded rapidly around dinnertime on Tuesday night. Chief Ferrara said that a relative of Ms. Armstrong's had called the police around 7:30 p.m., "saying they believed LaShanda Armstrong was involved in a domestic dispute" with the father of three of her four children. Chief Ferrara said the caller reported hearing "tussling in the background."

He said officers were sent to her home, but it was too late: No one was there.'

Father Who Was Shot 3 Times by Mother Can't See Their Son, But Mother Can

Matt · 13 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This may be the single most outrageous case I've come across. I first wrote about Peter Spitz last December here. He's the Colorado man whose wife Teresa got up in the wee hours of one morning in 2004, bundled up their young son and took him to a neighbor's. She then returned to her house, put a pillow over her sleeping husband's head and shot him with a .38. But he wasn't dead, so she shot him two more times. Then she murdered his mother who lived with them.

Despite all that, Peter lived. He's permanently blinded and has lost his sense of smell.

Peter is an ex-marine and an all around stand-up guy. So when Teresa was tried for murdering his mother and attempting to murder him, he testified on her behalf. He thought she was insane and said so under oath. She was acquitted of the charges by reason of insanity.'

Woman In False Rape Case Goes To Jail

anthony · 14 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CINCINNATI -- A woman who lied to a grand jury about being raped by her ex-boyfriend went to jail Wednesday night, Cincinnati court officials said.

Melinda Denham, 25, admitted in a letter that she made a false rape claim that sent ex-boyfriend Shannon Hudson to jail for two months, prosecutors said.

"I really can't say she (Denham) cleared my name because it (rape charge) is going to follow me wherever I go," Hudson said.'

Univ. to revise sexual misconduct policies

anthony · 14 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University will alter its sexual misconduct policies following the Department of Education's clarification of Title IX regulations, a member of the Office of the Vice President and General Counsel said Tuesday.

The revised specifications, released April 4 in a "Dear Colleague" letter from the Office for Civil Rights to schools and universities receiving federal funding, outline procedures for handling sexual misconduct that are mandatory for compliance with Title IX. As administrators determine the details of a new University-wide Committee that will begin hearing sexual misconduct cases from across Yale on July 1, they will take into account requirements in the DOE advisory that are not currently in place at Yale.
...
According to disciplinary procedures published online, the Executive Commmittee — which currently reviews disciplinary cases of sexual misconduct within Yale College — requires a "clear preponderance of the evidence" to establish that sexual misconduct has taken place. Because this standard requires more evidence to prove that sexual misconduct has occurred than the "preponderance of the evidence" standard required by the Title IX clarifications, which amounts to about 51 percent certainty that the accused party is guilty, Sawyer said, the University will immediately switch to the latter.'

Are One in Five College Women Sexually Assaulted?

anthony · 14 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine that there were a “terrible and alarming trend” of sexual violence on college campuses against female students. Imagine that 20 percent of college women were victims of rape or attempted rape — a rate of sexual assault astronomically higher than anything seen in America’s most violent cities (in Detroit, for example, there were 36.8 rapes per 100,000 inhabitants in 2009, a rate of 0.037 percent). If 18-year-old girls were in fact walking into such a grotesque maelstrom of sexual violence when they first picked up their dormitory room key, parents and students alike would have demanded a radical restructuring of college life years ago. There would have been a huge surge in all-girls colleges to protect female students from these outrageous levels of sexual violence; those colleges that did still admit boys and girls together would have been forced to prove to worried parents that the boys they were admitting were not rapists — perhaps allowing parents to interview these aspiring monks before they were accepted. Just to be on the safe side, administrators would provide round-the-clock protection for their female students.

...

And yet, according to Vice President Joe Biden, the Justice Department, and the Education Department’s Office of Civil Rights, college is in fact a nightmarish gauntlet of sexual violence and abuse. “There is a terrible and alarming trend in the country of sexual violence [on campuses],” Russlynn H. Ali, assistant secretary of education, told the New York Times. Ali’s Office of Civil Rights is investigating Yale for maintaining a “sexually hostile environment.” Somehow that sexually hostile environment did not discourage thousands of the country’s most academically gifted females from beating down the doors to get in; the acceptance rate at Yale this year was 7.35 percent, the lowest rate ever.'

White House Council on Boys to Men

anthony · 14 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two years ago President Obama created a committee by executive order to advise and focus exclusively on the needs and welfare of the American woman. Feminists cheered the creation of a White House Council on Women and Girls but others questioned, why – when women and girls are outperforming men by nearly every empirical measurement – create a council for women but not for men?
...
The White House's disinterest has frustrated some who see the crisis facing America's boys as a serious issue.

"The White House has yet to agree to even a meeting on this topic," council proposal commission member and American Enterprise Institute scholar Christina Hoff Sommers marvelled.

The proposal identifies five major components of the "crisis" facing boys: education, emotional well being, fatherless homes, physical health, and employment.'

Duke lacrosse accuser's boyfriend dies after stabbing

anthony · 14 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Durham, N.C. — Family members of a man who was stabbed in his home April 3 say he died Wednesday evening. Crystal Mangum, the Durham woman who falsely accused three Duke University lacrosse players of rape in 2006, has been charged with assaulting him.

Durham police confirmed Thursday morning that Reginald Daye, 46, had died.

"The case remains under investigation, and we do anticipate upgrading the charges. However, no new charges have been filed at this time," police spokeswoman Kammie Michael said in an e-mail to WRAL News.

Police said Mangum, 32, stabbed Daye in the torso with a kitchen knife during a dispute at 3507 Century Oaks Drive early on April 3.'

China: No money, no honey

Matt · 14 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

BEIJING — In the realm of eligible bachelors, Wang Lin has a lot to recommend him. A 28-year-old college-educated insurance salesman, Mr. Wang has a flawless set of white teeth, a tolerable karaoke voice and a three-year-old Nissan with furry blue seat covers.

...

But by the exacting standards of single Chinese women, it seems, Mr. Wang lacks that bankable attribute known as real property. Given that even a cramped, two-bedroom apartment on the dusty fringe of the capital sells for about $150,000, Mr. Wang's $900-a-month salary means he may forever be condemned to the ranks of the renting.

...

Zhang Yanhong, a matchmaking consultant at Baihe, one of the country's most popular dating sites, said many disheartened men had simply dropped out of the marriage market. "This fixation on real estate has twisted the popular notion of love and marriage," she said. "Women are putting economic factors above everything else when looking for a mate and this is not a good thing for relationships or for society."

...

Many women are unapologetic about their priorities, citing the age-old tradition in which men provided a home for their brides, even if that home came with a mother-in-law. There are also other concerns, including the instability of starting a family in rented premises and the endless badgering of parents. Status also plays a role, but so, too, do fears that those who put off buying will be priced out of the market indefinitely.

Male Victims of Domestic Abuse May Show Signs of PTSD

Matt · 14 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TUESDAY, April 12 (HealthDay News) -- Men who are victims of domestic abuse by their female partners can develop psychological trauma, such as post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), depression and suicidal thoughts, new research finds.

Researchers looked at a group of 302 men who sought professional help after experiencing what the researchers called "intimate terrorism," which refers to high levels of violence and controlling behavior by female partners.

Another 520 men took part in a telephone survey that asked about their relationships. Sixteen percent of these men said they had experienced minor acts of violence and mental abuse during arguments with their female partners. This type of abuse was referred to as "common couple violence."'

Australia: woman who left mother to rot on kitchen floor walks free.

Minuteman · 15 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A woman who left her maggot-infested mother to rot on the kitchen floor has avoided jail after a judge said his conscience wouldn't allow him to lock her up.

Mary Pyrczak, 51, allowed her 72-year-old mother, Kateryna, to lie dying in her own faeces on the floor of her Melbourne home for a week in November 2008.

Parts of Mrs Pyrczak's body were gangrenous, her foot was infested with maggots, and her toes were blackened and mummified, the Victorian Supreme Court heard on Friday.

Pyrczak, who is an obsessive compulsive and with a longstanding phobia of medical professionals, had pleaded guilty to manslaughter.'

UK: More girls than boys join Scouts

Broadsword · 15 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Robert Baden-Powell pioneered the Scouts movement a century ago, girls clamoured to join but he insisted that it should be boys only.

So he might be rather dismayed at today's news: for the first time more girls than boys are joining the scouts.

More than 4,000 girls signed up last year, making them the majority of recruits for the first time since the Scouts widened its scope to include both genders 35 years ago.
...
It was after Baden-Powell decided that Scout troops should not be mixed that the Girl Guides were founded in 1909.

A spokesman for the Scouts said that separation of the sexes was out-of-date now. 'Most young people go to co-educational schools and Scouts give them an opportunity to work together outside school as well,' he said.

In the year up to the end of January the Scouts had 4,330 girl recruits and 3,796 boys.'

'Sympathetic' judge sentences cancer med-withholding mom to 8 -10 years

anthony · 15 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LAWRENCE, Mass. - A Massachusetts woman convicted of attempted murder for withholding cancer medications from her autistic son was sentenced to eight to 10 years in prison.

Kristen LaBrie wept and expressed remorse before a judge announced her punishment Friday in Lawrence Superior Court. She said she misses her son every day.

Authorities say LaBrie stopped filling Jeremy Fraser's cancer medication prescriptions. The boy died in 2009 at age 9. Prosecutors argued that he had an 85 to 90 percent chance of surviving had he received the proper treatment.
...
Judge Richard Welch said he had sympathy for the "tremendous pressures" LaBrie faced as a single parent raising a severely disabled child. But he said withholding the boy's treatment was "an extended, secretive and calculated act that chills the soul."'

Father forced to fight for parental rights after murder acquittal

anthony · 15 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Las Vegas, NV (KTNV) – A man cleared of murder by child abuse charges in two criminal trials has found himself in Family Court, and prosecutors say they won't let him live with his own children until he admits his guilt.

The Family Court case against Victor Fakoya was set before the criminal trials. But his attorney says after the first trial ended in a hung jury and Fakoya was acquitted of criminal charges in the second trial, Child Protective Services showed up at his door and told him to get out.

CPS reportedly told Fakoya that he couldn't live with his two daughters until he takes a child abuse class that ends with an admission of guilt.

Meaning, Victor Fakoya could lose his parental rights if he doesn't admit to a crime for which he's been cleared.

"Should he not admit that he's responsible for killing a child," says defense attorney Kristina Wildeveld, "his children, his rights to his children will be terminated. And that is the ultimate tragedy. This, I actually think is worse than the murder trial."'

NY Post: 'How Yale became a sexual cesspool'

anthony · 15 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Drawing the loudest outcry are a 2006 episode in which frat pledges chanted, "No means yes! Yes means anal!" in front of the Yale Women's Center (a refrain they reprised in 2009), and a 2008 stunt in which frat members posed for a photo in front of the center with a sign proclaiming "We love Yale sluts."

But before you shed a tear for Yale or its feminists, consider the role that both have played in saturating the campus with vulgar sexuality. In an effort to foster "dialogue" and "acceptance" of every possible sexual choice or act, they've drenched students, faculty and administrators in images and vocabulary of graphic sexuality.

The Women's Center has hosted screenings of lesbian pornography, workshops on drag and talks about "sex toys and how to get the most out of them." In 2006, the event "Who's on Top" was intended to address lack of "discussion about the act of penetrative sex itself" and to explore feminist Andrea Dworkin's theory "that intercourse and patriarchy are inseparable." The center even throws naked parties to boost Yale women's sense of body image.

...

So, can school administrators find the spine to stand up to the agitators on their campuses and impose some standards of sexual decency? They'll face charges of censorship, especially at public schools, but they don't have to grant official imprimatur to hypersexual groups and activities or let them use college facilities. They needn't be puritans, just insist on the basic norms that govern life outside the academic bubble.

University administrators have a choice to make: Go toe-to-toe with the feminists in their student bodies and faculties -- or with the feds' inquisition squads.

Maybe we should feel sorry for Yale after all.'

MLB sees first player on new paternity leave list

anthony · 16 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (AP) — Texas Rangers pitcher Colby Lewis is the first player to go on Major League Baseball's paternity leave list.

A player can be on the new list for 24 to 72 hours. Lewis' wife, Jenny, gave birth to daughter Elizabeth Grace on Wednesday in Bakersfield, Calif.

Lewis is expected to rejoin the Rangers on Monday and take his next start Tuesday night at home against the Los Angeles Angels.'

'Swedish women fake rape to claim payouts'

anthony · 16 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Swedish woman accused of trumping up rape accusations while on holiday in Greece exemplifies a persistant view in the Mediterranean country that Swedish women bring false rape complaints to get payouts from special 'rape insurance'.
...
One of the reasons given for the case having been dropped was that it had become common for holidaying women, especially Scandinavians, to say that they had been raped during their stay in Greece to claim insurance money upon their return.

Anna resigned to trying to move on with her life.

But she was later contacted by a Greek public prosecution office, which informed her that she was being countersued for making false rape accusation and libel.'

Genital Integrity – Circumcision

anthony · 16 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Royal Dutch Medical Association recently declared that male circumcision is an infringement of a child's rights to bodily integrity and personal autonomy, that its risks are underplayed, and that to reject all forms of forced female genital cutting while allowing forced male genital cutting is ethically inconsistent. It also analyzes the flawed distinctions made between female genital mutilation and non therapeutic male circumcision, and it finds that "there is growing concern regarding complications, both minor and serious, which can occur as a result of circumcising a child," from bleeding, infection, meatal stenosis (urethral stricture) and panic attacks to the risk of death. In relation to long term sexual damage, the paper points out that the foreskin is an important erotogenic structure, and that the history of its removal is, "rooted in the desire to control male sexuality"'

Make Sure Paternity: 'Are You my Daddy?'

Matt · 16 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Omelia Elliott owns a beauty salon on Genesee Street, but her business right next door is a whole different world.

"It would've been funny if you all would've been here at 3 o'clock," Elliott told YNN. "We watch Maury everyday: 'Are you my daddy?' "

Omelia works with her mother O.J. Rouse at "Make Sure Paternity," a business with the slogan, "Are you my daddy?"

"People walk in and come in and we swab the child and sometimes the child, then the father," explained Elliott, "and send that in to a DNA lab."

She said that five to ten people walk into those offices every week. Some go for immigration reasons, verifying a parent-child relationship for permanent residency in the United States. Most people, however, visit the business to prove who a child's real father is.'

Man Hatred is OK at the University Of New Hampshire

anthony · 16 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This story dates back to 2005 and think it was posted on MANN. I thought I'd resubmit the story because of the irony Joe Biden chose The University of New Hampshire to make his recent speech about sexual misconduct. Excerpt:

'...Monologues by members of the FAL poked fun at feminist stereotypes and set the tone of an evening of sarcasm and wit.

"Hello, my name is Mary Man-Hating-Is-Fun," one participant said. "I am 23 years old, and I am what a feminist looks like. Ever since I learned to embrace my feminist nature, I found great joy in threatening men's lives, flicking off frat brothers and plotting the patriarchy's death. I hate men because they are men, because I see them for what they are: misogynistic, sexist, oppressive and absurdly pathetic beings who only serve to pollute and contaminate this world with war, abuse, oppression and rape."

Members of the FAL wore scissors around their necks, as members of the audience lightheartedly sang a song about castration.'

Colorado woman charged with having 'affair' with boy, 15; coroner says boy committed suicide

anthony · 16 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'CANON CITY, Colo. — Authorities say a 15-year-old Colorado boy took his own life after a 30-year-old woman allegedly had a sexual relationship with him.

The Canon City Daily Record reports Brenda Lynette Harding of Canon City was arrested Friday on charges of sexual assault on a child.

An arrest warrant affidavit says Harding was the teen's caregiver last summer and was a friend of the teen's stepmother.

The teen lived Buena Vista and was reported missing April 2 while visiting family in Canon City. His body was found in Canon City on April 4.

The Fremont County coroner ruled he died from an overdose of a painkiller and a muscle relaxant.

Harding was jailed under $15,000 bail. It's unclear if she has a lawyer. No phone number for her could be found.'

Did Hamilton College take 'political correctness to the extreme'?

anthony · 16 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CLINTON — A national free-speech group recently recognized Hamilton College — but not in a positive way.

The college was named a recipient of a 2011 Jefferson Muzzle, a distinction given over the past 20 years to institutions responsible for “affronts to free expression,” according to the Thomas Jefferson Center for the Protection of Free Expression, located in Virginia.

The college took “political correctness to the extreme” by requiring male first-year students to attend a presentation in September called “She Fears You” where men were “asked to acknowledge their complicity in a ‘rape culture’ … and to change their ‘rape supportive’ beliefs and attitudes,” according to the center.

Female freshmen also were required to attend an event — a one act play called “Fresh,” which the Jefferson center characterized as having a theme of acceptance and support.'

American University derails $300,000 sexual assault prevention grant

anthony · 17 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The proposed education program would require all new students to attend a seminar and an individualized break-out session on the topics of "healthy relationships, consent, relationship violence, stalking, sexual assault and risks correlated with increased use of drugs and alcohol." Incoming students would also be required to complete surveys about sexual assault at two points during the year. In order to ensure compliance with the policy, students who failed to attend the training or complete the surveys would be blocked from registering for classes for the next semester.

That sanction proved a deal-breaker for Vice President of Campus Life Gail Hanson, who informed grant supporters this week that she would not sign off on the application, which is due to the Department of Justice on March 31. In an e-mail, Hanson questioned "whether it is appropriate to place stops on students' registrations if they fail to complete a required sexual assault education program." Hanson added that "it would be exceptional for us to enforce that requirement through registration stops, as the grant proposal currently provides" and urged the campus to revisit the grant proposal next year after locating "an alternative approach."'

Is Yale University Sexist?

anthony · 17 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last month, 16 Yale students and recent graduates filed a confidential complaint with the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights alleging that in violation of Title IX—which bans sex discrimination in schools—Yale maintains a hostile environment for women that denies them equal access to educational opportunities. The Office for Civil Rights has already begun to investigate. If it finds Yale in violation, the university could lose approximately $500 million in federal funding.

Is the complaint really plausible?

In the classroom, on the athletic fields and elsewhere throughout campus life, women at Yale are prospering. In 2010, female undergraduates outnumbered male undergraduates 2,663 (50.5%) to 2,616 (49.5%). Yale aggressively recruits, promotes and retains female faculty. Four of the university's top eight administration officers are women. The dean of Yale College is a woman. So is the dean for special projects.

More broadly, women's gains in higher education over the past 50 years testify to the friendliness of the environment. In 1960, women earned 10% of doctorates nationwide; by 2009, they earned 52%. In 1960, women earned 35% of bachelor's degrees and 32% of master's degrees; today they earn 57% and 60%, respectively. In 1960, total fall enrollment in degree-granting U.S. institutions was 36% female; today it is roughly 57%.'

Moms killing kids not nearly as rare as we think

anthony · 18 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's the headline du jour whenever a horrific case emerges of a mother killing her kids, as Lashanda Armstrong did when she piled her children into her minivan and drove straight into the frigid Hudson River.

Our shock at such stories is, of course, understandable: They seem to go against everything we intuitively feel about the mother-child bond.

But mothers kill their children in this country much more often than most people would realize by simply reading the headlines; by conservative estimates it happens every few days, at least 100 times a year. Experts say more mothers than fathers kill their children under 5 years of age. And some say our reluctance as a society to believe mothers would be capable of killing their offspring is hindering our ability to recognize warning signs, intervene and prevent more tragedies.'

Deputies: False rape claim part of extortion plan

anthony · 18 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PALM HARBOR - A 19-year-old woman was arrested Wednesday on charges she falsely claimed her father raped her, to win a larger percentage of a sum associated with legal action they were involved in.

Brittany Joy Davis, whose permanent address is in Lake Worth, was charged with extortion. She was being held at the Pinellas County Jail on $10,000 bail.

...

The plan was for her to claim her father raped her, and then, following his arrest, approach him about a larger portion of the monetary award, Nestor said. Once he agreed to her terms, the plan was for her to drop the rape allegation, Nestor said.'

Duke denies wrongdoing in lacrosse lawsuits

anthony · 18 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Durham, N.C. — Duke University has denied all allegations made in lawsuits by dozens of former lacrosse players impacted by false rape claims.

More than three dozen players who were never indicted in a 2006 investigation accused the university of fraud, negligence, conspiracy and obstruction of justice.
...
The university immediately ended the lacrosse team's season and forced the coach to resign, and investigators collected DNA samples from all of the players.
...
Irving Joyner, a law professor at North Carolina Central University and a close observer of the case, said he believes third-party liability is a major part of the defense. Under that theory, Duke maintains that any wrongdoing was caused by Crystal Mangum and Nifong – two people not connected to Duke in any way.'

UK: Girls' behaviour in class is 'deteriorating'

anthony · 18 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A survey of teachers, heads and other school staff across the UK found that 44% believed girls' behaviour had worsened in the past two years.

This compares with 43% for boys, says a survey of 859 members of the Association of Teachers and Lecturers.

But 68% of staff in the survey said boys' behaviour is more difficult.

Half of the surveyed staff thought boys' behaviour had got worse over the past five years, and 48% thought girls' behaviour was worse.

...

One secondary school teacher who contributed to the study said: "Boys are more physically aggressive and usually to other pupils, with girls it is more name calling, less fighting."

For girls, most staff said bullying such as isolating another pupil from a friendship group, spreading rumours, making snide looks and comments, were the biggest problems (44%).'

Title IX and the baseball dilemma

anthony · 18 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The room for growth in college baseball is undeniable. However, the college market will not mature due to the unfortunate restrictions imposed by Title IX. Title IX was amended in 1972 to create opportunities for women in sports. There are now 15 women's sports at UNC. It has clearly served its purpose, but it is antiquated and needs reform.

Title IX now does nothing more than squander opportunities by often forcing athletic departments to cut other sports. The financing issues raised by Title IX serve to further generate the win-at-all-costs mentality in college basketball and football by forcing profit maximization in so-called amateur athletics.

One of UNC's top pitchers, Greg Holt, wrote to me, "I think that Title IX is something that is hindering baseball (from) becoming a potential revenue sport. If a softball player can receive a full scholarship then I feel as if a baseball (player) should be able to receive the same amount." Holt's reference to the scholarship allocation is easily explainable.

Football and basketball are needed to fund the other 26 non-revenue varsity sports. Consider the fact that UNC's women's basketball team lost $1.86 million two seasons ago. These expenses mean less resources for men's baseball, fewer scholarships and lower operating budgets.'

Sarah Palin: GOP leaders need to "fight like a girl" johndias · 18 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here, video here. Looks like Sarah "it starts here" Palin is trying to make a go for the presidency. It's just too bad she think she needs to pander to the female ego as the means of achieving that goal. Quote (6:15-6:34):

"What we need is for you to stand up, GOP, and fight. Maybe I should ask some of the Badger women's hockey team, those champions, maybe I should ask them if we should be suggesting to GOP leaders they need to learn how to fight like a girl!"

SAVE Offers Condolences Following the Tragic Death of Reginald Daye, Victim of Duke Lacrosse Accuser

Matt · 18 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / April 18, 2011 – Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is offering its condolences to the family and friends of Reginald Daye. “Reggie” Daye, 46, succumbed April 13 after girlfriend Crystal Mangum stabbed him in the chest with a kitchen knife. Mangum is the woman who falsely accused three Duke University lacrosse players of rape in 2006.

Daye’s nephew said the couple had been arguing over rent money. The argument got so heated that someone called police who made a visit to the apartment, but left before the stabbing incident occurred. Mangum is being held on a $300,000 bond.

“Reggie” Daye was born on November 3, 1964 in Durham, North Carolina. He was employed by Scotts Painting and Decorating Company. His hobbies included painting, fishing, and cheering on the Dallas Cowboys.'

Accuser in Duke lacrosse scandal indicted in boyfriend's murder

Matt · 18 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A woman who falsely accused three Duke lacrosse players of raping her five years ago was indicted today on a charge of first-degree murder in the stabbing death of her boyfriend, the News & Observer reports.

Crystal Mangum has been in jail since April 3, when police charged her with assaulting Reginald Daye, 46. He died Wednesday in the hospital.

In spring 2006, Mangum, who was working as a stripper for an escort service, alleged that the lacrosse players sexually assaulted her during a private party. Prosecutors determined the allegations were false, and the case was dismissed.

Last year, Mangum was convicted of setting a fire at home with her three children inside.'

16-year-old girl charged as an adult in sex attack

anthony · 19 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'VALPARAISO | Prosecutors opted Monday to exercise their right to charge a 16-year-old Valparaiso girl as an adult on accusations of handcuffing, confining for hours and sexually assaulting a 17-year-old boy last week.

April Kuchta, of the 300 block of Roseland Terrace, was charged with felony counts of criminal deviate conduct, criminal confinement, intimidation and sexual battery, as well as a misdemeanor battery charge.

The seriousness of the first two offenses provide the option for adult charges without the more typical waiver process, said Deputy Prosecutor Tim Haraminac.

Kuchta was transferred Monday from juvenile detention to the Porter County Jail.'

C-Span Video: Wage gap between men and women

anthony · 19 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

'Carrie Lukas talked about the wage gap that exists between men and women. In a recent op-ed, Ms. Lukas argued that while labor surveys show women earn 77% of what men earn for equal work, other data suggests that women earn, on average, as much or even more than men. She also responded to telephone calls and electronic communications.'

Women who travel for sex: Sun, sea and gigolos

Matt · 19 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fast-forward 30 years, and the reality of sex tourism is anything but tender. Today beach resorts in developing countries such as Kuta in Bali, Negril in Jamaica and Boca Chica and Sosua in the Dominican Republic have become Third World pick-up spots for women tourists. Tour companies even market package deals as sex holidays for single and unaccompanied women. Forget Shirley Valentine, these women - who range from grandmothers to teens - don't want a long-term relationship. And there's plenty of live flesh on sale.

...

For others, this is exploitation pure and simple. Even where no money is exchanged, this sort of behaviour destabilises local communities and families. Ignorance and lack of concern about the abject poverty and lack of choice that characterises the men's lives leads the women to romanticise their actions. It is true that women sex tourists are still outnumbered by the legions of men who travel to Thailand and the Philippines for sex with prostitutes. Charities such as Amnesty and Unicef have no official policy on female sex tourism, preferring to focus on protecting trafficked women and children. Chris Beddoe, director of Ecpat UK, the children's rights organisation that campaigns against child sex tourism, believes: "If both adult partners are open and honest about what they're getting out of it, that's one thing. But it's another thing to continue the fantasy when there's a denial of the power that money brings to that relationship that creates a culture of dependency and exploitation.'

...

They interviewed 240 women holidaying in Negril, and two similar resorts in the Dominican Republic. Almost a third said they had engaged in sexual relationships with local men. Though 60 per cent admitted to certain "economic elements" to their liaisons, they did not perceive their sexual encounters as a prostitute-client transaction. Instead they insisted they were helping the men, and the local economy, by giving them money and gifts. When asked to describe "boyfriends", most emphasised how for them black Jamaican men possessed bodies of great sexual value. One 42 year-old English woman who travelled at least three times a year to Boca Chica in the Dominican Republic said: "I'm not naïve. I've been around the block. I come for sex - of course the sun, but mostly the sex. I'm not coming to live and set up house with a guy. I just want some fun and good sex."

...

It is a nasty twist that the countries where this sort of tourism is most rife are ex-slave colonies. Many are still dealing with the fallout of colonialism. All the hotels, restaurants, cars and glass-bottomed boats in Negril are owned by Americans. The urban economy doesn't even belong to the local people.'

The Real Bullies of Yale University

anthony · 19 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The recent saga at Yale University — regarding a complaint to the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights by a group of female Yalies that the University "has failed to eliminate a hostile sexual environment on campus" — reminds me of the brouhaha over comments made by former Harvard University president Larry Summers.

When Summers suggested the under-representation of women in the top levels of science and engineering may be due to a "different availability of aptitude at the high end," his feminist colleagues hammered him until he resigned – even though Summers actively sought ways to encourage more women to pursue these areas of study.

That's how feminists operate — they're bullies. As a result, colleges and universities (along with businesses and government) are forced to spend shocking amounts of time and money pacifying this powerful group of Americans. If allegations of a hostile sexual environment on Yale's campus come to fruition, the University stands to lose billions of dollars in federal funding.'

N.Y. Domestic Violence Registry Proposal Met With Big Concerns

DenisP · 19 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MINEOLA, N.Y. (CBSNewYork) — It's a controversial idea from some local lawmakers — registering domestic violence offenders, just like those convicted of sex crimes, on a state-wide database.

Their names, addresses and photos would be made public.

But would that put victims in greater danger?'

Australia: First female convicted of 'defensive homocide' for bashing husband to death

Minuteman · 20 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Victorian grandmother who killed her husband after he constantly demanded kinky sex has been jailed for 11 years.

Eileen Mary Creamer, 53, was the first Victorian woman to be found guilty of defensive homicide.

She bashed her husband David, possibly with a South African tribal stick, before stabbing him in the abdomen during a fight at their Moe home in February 2008.

During her Victorian Supreme Court trial, Creamer said her husband made constant demands for unusual sex that she felt she could not refuse. They included her having sex with other men in front of him.
...
Justice Coghlan noted that Creamer spent the night with her lover in the days before she killed her husband.'

F&F: Family courts and underage boys in paternity cases

Matt · 20 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

F&F article here. Excerpt:

"One of the most pernicious injustices in the family court system is the way child support enforcement agencies manhandle underage boys, often manipulating them into signing paternity declarations as minors without parental consent or legal counsel. Thomas Rodriguez (pictured) is one of these young men.

Fathers and Families has helped introduce two paternity fraud bills in the the California legislature this year, one of which (SB 377) will address the injustices faced young men like Thomas. In Thomas' support letter to Senator Rod Wright (D-Los Angeles), the bill's author, he explains:

'I am writing to you in support of SB 377, because when I was 17-years-old I was victimized by the problem which the bill addresses.

The hospital manipulated me into signing a paternity declaration when my former girlfriend gave birth to a son she said was mine. There was no parental consent nor did I have access to legal counsel or advice. I was never informed of the legal implications of what I was being asked to sign and I did not fully understand them. I thought that because I was a minor, there couldn't be serious legal implications. I have since learned differently.'"

'Angry Men'

Matt · 20 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

I came across this web site and thought I'd share it. Watch the video, you will I am sure get a lot out of it. The amount of baggage that so many men are carrying around even to this day astounds me, and I have heard all kinds of stuff in my day. Whenever someone wonders where a man's anger comes from, the answer is usually pretty straightforward: it's somewhere in his past.

Disclaimer: I have no affiliation in any way with the owner of the web site. I just thought the video he produced was some damn good $hit.

Pregnant woman sent to jail for lying about being raped

anthony · 20 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman has been jailed after she falsely accused her ex-boyfriend of raping her.

Melinda Denham, 25, from Ohio, accused Shannon Hudson of raping her at her father's home after they had broken up and did not own up to the crime until he had spent two months in jail.

On Wednesday, a judge ordered she spend six months in prison, a rarity on a conviction for Ohio's lowest level felony, which usually results in probation.'

Teen girl charged as adult in sex attack on disabled boy

Anonymous · 21 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CBS/WBBM) VALPARAISO, Ind. - April Kuchta, the older of two girls who allegedly held an Indiana boy against his will and sexually assaulted him, will be tried as an adult.

The prosecutor's office filed four felony charges and one misdemeanor Monday against the 16-year-old, reports CBS station WBBM.

The highest level felony Kuchta was charged with - Class A criminal deviate conduct - carries a sentence of between 20 and 50 years, reports the station.

The other felony charges against Kuchta include criminal confinement, sexual battery and intimidation, and misdemeanor battery, the station reports.'

Violent women

Matt · 22 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Another example of women acting badly--- in this case, beating the bejeesus out of another woman. Note the men in the area do next to nothing to stop it. Why? Fear of being accused of being violent to the attacking women, perhaps? We can only speculate.

When feminists talk about women not being 'inherently violent' or some other such nonsense, this is yet another video you can send to them.

NFL star player stabbed by wife, undergoes surgery

Matt · 23 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Miami Dolphins wide receiver Brandon Marshall is recovering in Broward General Hospital after he underwent surgery for stab wound and he is expected to make a full recovery.
...
The wound was reportedly caused by a woman, but Marshall's agent would only say, "This is a very difficult time for Brandon and family, thankfully he will make a full recovery ... We simply ask that his privacy is respected."

UPDATE: Marshall's wife, Michi Nogami-Marshall, was arrested last night on a domestic violence charge of aggravated assault with a deadly weapon and is currently being held on $75,000 bond.'

Dead Suit Walking

Matt · 23 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Newsweek gleefully asks "Can Manhood Survive the Recession?" Fewer publications enjoy watching and reporting on the decline in the status and fortunes of men more than Newsweek/Time, do they? I'll be so glad when they finally go out of business. Excerpt:

'Two coasts. Two men who can't find jobs. And one defining moment for the men in the gray flannel suits who used to run this country. Or at least manage it.

Capitalism has always been cruel to its castoffs, but those blessed with a college degree and blue-chip résumé have traditionally escaped the worst of it. In recessions past, they've kept their jobs or found new ones as easily as they might hail a cab or board the 5:15 to White Plains. But not this time.

The suits are "doing worse than they have at any time since the Great Depression," says Heidi Shierholz, a labor economist at the Economic Policy Institute. And while economists don't have fine-grain data on the number of these men who are jobless—many, being men, would rather not admit to it—by all indications this hitherto privileged demo isn't just on its knees, it's flat on its face. Maybe permanently. Once college-educated workers hit 45, notes a post on the professional-finance blog Calculated Risk, "if they lose their job, they are toast."'

The Worst Thing A Woman Can Do In Divorce Proceedings: The Abuse Of Orders of Protection

Matt · 23 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Orders of Protection are critical to the safety of many. Some people claim that they are simply pieces of paper that mean nothing. Detractors point to horrible stories where people are abused or murdered despite having an order in place.

I disagree–although we only hear of the tragic endings, orders of protection carry an authority that at least some, if not many, abusers grudgingly respect. I believe these orders have saved countless from horrible mistreatment that would otherwise have occurred.

However, it is also an unfortunate truth that because they are incredibly easy to obtain, orders of protection are misused, often against men. And this false practice clogs the system unnecessarily, preventing true victims from having their cases thoroughly examined and depleting victim-assistance resources.

In matrimonial practice, men are drastically more likely to be the spouse who has an order enforced against them at the beginning of a separation or divorce. When a man has had an order of protection issued against him, many automatically think that he must have done something horribly threatening or dangerous to his partner or family in order to have a judge feel compelled to issue an order.'

F&F: West Virginia Supreme Court: False Allegations of Abuse Can Terminate Rights

Matt · 25 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With any luck, this case will be a harbinger of things to come. Here's an article about the case (The West Virginia Record, 4/24/11).

By itself, it's not definitive regarding fathers' rights in custody matters, but it points a direction in which I suspect courts will go more and more in future cases. In a nutshell, the Supreme Court of West Virginia ruled that false allegations of child abuse can be used to terminate custodial rights.

Now, the reasons the decision doesn't control fathers' rights is that it involves grandparents. Likewise, it's based only in part on their false allegations of abuse. Still, the reasoning is there to give falsely accused parents a leg up in custody cases.'

Action Alert: Gender Studies Lawsuit in London

Matt · 26 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An egalitarian MRA is bringing a damages claim against an elite university's Gender Studies department which he attended as a student, but was forced to withdraw from due to the persistantly sexist anti-male nature of the course. His legal claim is based on Sex Discrimination law, Breach of Contract, Misleading Advertising and Misrepresentation – and he is looking for pro bono support from a lawyer or barrister, or assistance from a 'McKenzie friend' – someone not necessarily legally qualified, but who can nevertheless offer advisory support and strategy in court.

The university's promotional literature did not warn of the one-sided anti-male learning materials that would form the bulk of the curriculum – and the university's prospectus and regulations, forming part of the contract, specifically rule out discriminatory learning materials and practices – so the facts of the case are uniquely strong – on a number of fronts – and a successful litigation here will help bring about real improvements for the future inclusion of men and men's equality issues within gender studies, and all other academic fields.'

Attractiveness and hirability

Matt · 27 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former prom queens and cheerleaders looking for work might want to leave their photos off their resume and their public Facebook profile. According to a new academic study, hiring managers scanning resumes from female job applicants granted more interviews to “plain-looking” women or women who didn’t include a photo with their resume, than they did for attractive women whose resume included a photo.
...
So what gives? Here’s a hint if you haven’t yet figured it out: Who is typically in charge of screening? Yep, young women. After the survey was complete, the researchers contacted the firms they had sent applications to and determined that 24 of the 25 firms had a female employee between the ages of 23-34 doing the screening. The authors conclude that one of the major factors at play here is that “female jealousy of attractive women in the workplace is a primary reason for the punishment of attractive women.”'

Turning feminist theory into a visceral rape deterrent

anthony · 28 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Africa, your vagina can get spikes for $2. No longer just a revenge dream, this device — called Rape-aXe — was actually distributed for free last year at the World Cup in South Africa. A psychological weapon as well as a physical one, Rape-aXe evokes a terror that was a staple of ancient folklore among cultures as different as the Egyptians, Greeks, Indians, Chinese, Polynesians, and Native Americans: teeth down there!

Complete with sharkskin-like barbs that catch onto an invading penis, causing pain and preventing urination, and requiring specialized medical professionals to remove, the Rape-aXe is a real-world application of feminist theory. It's a practical response to the harsh environment in which women around the world conduct their daily lives. While it may not yet be available in the United States, the Rape-aXe is an example of a new, forceful, even primal, phase of the women's rights movement, worth examining as Portland observes its annual Take Back the Night rally.'

Woman to be charged with making false rape report

anthony · 28 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A woman is expected to be charged with filing a false report with police after she reported an attempted rape on April 18, Boaz Police Chief Terry Davis said.

The woman allegedly told police the attempted rape occurred on Butler Avenue, where she said she pulled over for a vehicle flashing its headlights at her after she left Walmart.

The investigation is continuing, Davis said, but the woman is expected to be charged with filing the false report because it has been determined the incident did not happen.'

Abuse Shelters Not Serving True Victims -- Petition Calls for Accountability

Matt · 28 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / April 27, 2011 – Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is calling for accountability in domestic violence shelter operations. Abuse shelters have become filled with drug-abusers and homeless persons who have not been physically abused. As a result, true victims are being denied services.

The SAVE petition calls on Rep. Gwen Moore of Wisconsin, co-chair of the Congressional Caucus for Women's Issues, to require that abuse shelters:

1. Assure real victims get the priority they deserve by requiring evidence of violence or credible proof of imminent violence.
2. Not engage in discriminatory practices.
3. Offer anger management and substance abuse services by qualified staff.
4. Assure a safe and respectful environment for victims and their children.'

F & F Helps Introduce Spousal Support Bill in California

Matt · 28 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families has helped introduce SB 481, a California bill to curb the common family court practice of issuing “double dipping” spousal support orders.

SB 481 will correct an inequity in California law wherein the same stream of income is counted twice in a family law action — once for purposes of valuing that income stream as a division of property, then again for spousal/partner support purposes when the spouse/partner receives the income in the future. Under this bill, family law courts would have to consider the impact of double counting of income when making a spousal/partner support order.'

Divorced father struggling to change system

anthony · 29 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Knize went through a nasty divorce a few years ago, and, based on his own experience, he feels judges in divorce cases "have an inherent bias against men."

"Basically the judiciary has worked hard to erode (father's) civil rights on many levels. In my divorce case my person, property and papers were what I wanted protected, and they were all broken in the divorce. There was nothing I could make a free choice of in my life."

"Basically the child remains with the mother right away until further notice, and the father may not see the child for the first year after the divorce," Knize said. "That's unconscionable."'

Equal Pay for Women Act Brings Battle of the Sexes to Life in Louisiana

Matt · 29 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BATON ROUGE, La. - Rep. Barbara Norton has reintroduced the “Equal Pay for Women Act,” which would give the state power to correct and eliminate discriminatory wage practices based on sex for comparable work.

The bill would grant employees, who believe they are underpaid because of their gender, the opportunity to petition for a wage increase. After the employee files a written complaint, the employer has 90 days to rectify the situation. After 90 days, the employee could initiate a civil lawsuit against the employer to recoup back wages and damages.

“Regardless of the job, if a woman has the same qualifications as a man, I see no reason why they should not make the same amount of money,” says Norton.

The proposal comes on the heels of U.S. Census Bureau data that shows full-time female employees make 77 cents for every dollar earned by men, while Louisiana’s women earned less than 70 cents when compared to their male counterparts.'

Position Vacant: Fulltime Male Staff Anthropologist

Minuteman · 30 April 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to posting here. ??? Excerpt:

'Australian Cultural Heritage Management is seeking written expressions of interest for a suitably qualified and experienced Male Consultant Anthropologist to join our Adelaide team. ACHM is an Adelaide-based cultural heritage consulting firm specialising in:
...
There is a full-time position available. The position will be responsible for providing anthropological services in South Australia and Western Australia with some potential work in Victoria, but will be based in the Adelaide office.'

Circumcision Ban Appears Headed For San Francisco Ballot

anthony · 1 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SAN FRANCISCO (CBS SF) – A proposal to criminalize male circumcision in San Francisco was submitted to the city this week with enough signatures to put the ban on the ballot for the November election, but local religious groups said Thursday that they plan to strongly oppose the initiative.

Lloyd Schofield, who has organized a campaign to ban circumcision in San Francisco, submitted 12,265 signatures to the city's Department of Elections on Tuesday, exceeding by more than 5,000 the amount necessary to put the initiative on the November ballot.

Schofield said he believes male circumcision is wrong, and likened it to female circumcision practices that are already banned in the U.S.'

San Francisco MGM Bill:
http://www.sfmgmbill.org/Site/Home.html

Video: Male Baby Getting Circumcision

anthony · 1 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Male circumcision has been getting a lot of media attention lately because of the proposed ban in San Francisco. Supporters of the practice include religious leaders and people who still think its beneficial because of hygiene. STD / HIV prevention has been inconclusive. I suspect most people debating this issue have never actually seen a baby circumcised.

WARNING This video is EXTREMELY graphic! This is only meant for responsible individuals looking to further educate themselves on MGM. You Tube requires an age verification before viewing it.

Woman faces charges in home circumcision

anthony · 2 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) - A woman accused of attempting to circumcise her baby at home using a box cutter and a pair of pliers faces assault and criminal mistreatment charges.

Keemonta Peterson, 29, of Portland, told police she decided to circumcise her baby at home after reading the Bible. She said she watched some YouTube videos about circumcisions before making the attempt in October, according to The Oregonian.

After the 3-month-old boy suffered two hours of uncontrolled bleeding, she called 911 and the baby was rushed to a hospital where he was initially listed in critical condition. The boy appeared to have recovered with no permanent injury.

According to the prosecutor, a doctor described the baby's condition upon arrival at the hospital as life-threatening, and the pain as immense.'

Please lodge this anti-circumcision submission with USAID (deadline 9 May 2011)

Minuteman · 2 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This is a response to the document “Participation by Religious Organizations in USAID Programs” [regulations.gov Docket No. AID_FRDOC_0001, FR Doc No: 2011-6974] (http://www.regulations.gov/#!documentDetail;D=AID_FRDOC_0001-0136).

The deadline for submissions is 9 May 2011.

This submission can be made by anybody from any country around the world.

Instructions:

Download and save the PDF document from the following link (Select 'NO' if prompted to upgrade to RapidPro, click 'Slow Download' on the left and then click 'Download Now!'):

https://rapidshare.com/files/460252487/AID_FRDOC_0001_9May2011.pdf

Go to the following regulations.gov submission page:

http://www.regulations.gov/#!submitComment;D=AID_FRDOC_0001-0136

Enter your details in the required fields. Click browse under '3. UPLOAD FILE(S)' to upload the saved PDF document from your harddisk. Click 'Submit'.

Please leave a reply so that I may gauge the number of submissions made.

UK: "Quotas and women-only shortlists aren't popular, but they work"

anthony · 2 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Quotas, women-only shortlists and any form of positive discrimination are often disliked equally by men and women, but they work. The alternative is waiting for the great promised land of meritocracy to start. I'd give it time. We are in fact still operating in the realms of hundreds of years of male-only shortlists and men giving people that remind them of themselves (other men) promotions. Rwanda has a bigger proportion of women in its parliament then we do. At the current rate of success the Fawcett Society estimates it will take Labour 20 years to get to 50% female candidates, the Lib Dems 40 years and the Tories 400.
...
Feminism is, in the end, about choices for women. Those choices are not expanding any more. It's not all about being a high-flying executive. Indeed, many younger women, having seen their mothers' generation over-stretched, may well opt out of the having-it-all means doing-it-all scenario. Nonetheless, young women cannot assume that the rights won by their mothers' generation are extended to them. Especially in the field of employment. The push for equality stopped years ago. We have stalled. Women need to wake up to what has really happened.'

F & F's Holstein Discusses Armstrong Case on Nationally-Syndicated Lars Larson Show

Matt · 3 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families Board Chair Ned Holstein, MD, MS criticized the anti-father bias in the media coverage surrounding the Lashanda Armstrong triple murder on the nationally-syndicated Lars Larson Show on Friday, April 29. According to Talkers Magazine, Larson has an audience of 2.25 million listeners, and his show is heard on over 200 stations nationwide.

Armstrong is the New York woman who drove herself and her four children into the Hudson River, killing herself and three of the kids. The oldest child, who managed to get free, said his mother held the other children down as the car sank.'

Colleges Cut Men’s Programs to Satisfy Title IX

anthony · 5 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When the University of Delaware announced this year that it was demoting its men’s track and cross-country teams to club status, the news was sad but not surprising to many who follow college sports.

Delaware is one of dozens of universities that have eliminated low-profile men’s teams like wrestling, gymnastics and swimming in an effort, the universities say, to comply with Title IX, the federal law that bans sex discrimination in education.

But in cutting the men’s varsity track team, Delaware took the practice a step further. The university did not make the argument that it needed to cut the team to immediately comply with the law — after all, it plans to add a women’s golf team in the fall. Instead, officials say they are ending the track program, which has its 100th anniversary this year, out of concern that they could not remain compliant in the future. '

The Fan: College scramble to meet outdated Title IX quotas

anthony · 5 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Before Title IX it was common in sports played by both genders, such as basketball and soccer, for the men's coach to get paid five times what the women's coach was paid, and for the men's teams to fly to exotic places while the women took a bus to the next state. Doing away with such blatant discrimination gave women a chance to have as rewarding a college life as the men, and increased their visibility so that others wanted to join them.

But when the government steps in with good intentions, it often goes overboard. Sports are just one of the many offerings at a school, and shouldn't be regarded as more important than the others. No one cares if more women than men choose to take dance or more men opt for the challenging "Principles of Coaching Basketball 101."

For a woman who wants to play a certain sport and study chemistry in college, it might be hard to discern whether a college's chemistry department is any good, but much easier to tell if its very public sports teams are suitable. Colleges are competing for students, and women are entering college in greater numbers than men. So it doesn't require government quotas anymore to encourage schools to do the best for the athletes and pre-med scholars alike.'

Wrestlers pulling for university to keep their sport

anthony · 6 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Brown wrestling program feels its being targeted for elimination because the school wants to reduce the number of recruited athletes.
...
If Brown reduces its number of female athletes the school must stay in compliance with Title IX - a law that promotes gender equity in college sports.

The program feels its being targeted to reduce the number of male athletes because the sport doesn't have a female counterpart.

"To be honest, most of the kids were shocked because as (Goldberger) spoke we didn't fit most of the criteria that he talked about," Cowman said. "That's why we feel that we can fight this."

The team, alumni and friends of the program have been active drumming up support since the committee made its recommendation.'

Charges: Mom Pushed Child In Stroller Down Stairs

anthony · 6 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MINNEAPOLIS (WCCO) – A mother has been arrested after allegedly pushing her baby in a stroller down a flight of stairs at the Lake Street light rail train station Tuesday evening.

Police said the incident happened during an argument between the mother, 26-year-old Lisa Marie Martin, and her boyfriend. When officers arrived, they found the boyfriend holding the 4-month-old baby as Martin yelled at him. His face was bloodied. A crowd had gathered around them.
...
Martin was then seen pushing the stroller down the steps. The stroller tipped over before it could reach Martin's boyfriend, and the baby fell out onto the concrete stairs.'

Brooklyn Toddler Dies After Circumcision

anthony · 7 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'New York City's Office of the Chief Medical Examiner is investigating the death of 2-year-old Jamaal Coleson, Jr. following a circumcision Tuesday at Manhattan's Beth Israel Medical Center.

"They gave him anesthesia, and after the circumcision he woke up he was fine," said Jabbar Coleson, Jamaal Jr.'s uncle, who lives in Jonesboro, Ga. "He asked to eat, he asked for something to drink, and then he started complaining about pain in his stomach."

Jabbar said his nephew was in the outpatient ward when doctors noticed something was wrong. But four hours passed before the toddler was rushed to the emergency room, he said.

The case, which has been reported as an accidental death to the New York State Department of Health, highlights the extremely rare complications of the procedure performed widely throughout the United States.'

'Guy Ritchie was circumcised for Madonna': A Kabbalah spiritual leader claims director underwent surgery for then-wife

anthony · 7 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'There are many things a man would do for the woman he loves but not every man would consider losing part of his manhood.

But Guy Ritchie is said to have agreed to say sayonara to his foreskin to please his then-wife Madonna.
...
The mother-of-two who co-founded the modern Kabbalah Centre in L.A. is reported to have said that Madonna: ‘keeps a kosher home, she observes Shabbat, she circumcised her son and had her [ex-] husband circumcised’.'

Philippine city holds 'circumcision party' to promote safe practices, establish world record

anthony · 7 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MANILA, Philippines — Hundreds of boys in a Philippine city turned out Saturday for a daylong "circumcision party" to provide a safe, free procedure for a rite of passage that most local males undergo as preteens.

Some boys cried in their mothers' arms while others bit their shirts to stifle sobs as doctors carried out the surgery on dozens of makeshift operating tables inside a sports stadium in Marikina city east of Manila. Outside, other boys lined up to await their turn.

"I'm a big boy now," one boy who had just finished the surgery bragged.
...
As of mid-afternoon, nearly 1,500 boys aged 9 years and up had been circumcised while many were still waiting in line, city health officer Dr. Alberto Herrera said.
...
Vice Mayor Jose Fabian Cadiz says the city has applied for a Guinness World Record for most people at a circumcision event.'

Kenya: Plea to ICC over forced male circumcision

anthony · 7 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NAIROBI, 25 April 2011 (IRIN) - A global advocacy group for gender-based violence survivors has called on the International Criminal Court to reconsider its refusal to recognize forced male circumcision as a form of sexual violence in a case against alleged organizers of Kenya's 2007-2008 post-election crisis.

Brigid Inder, executive director of The Hague-based Women's Initiatives for Gender Justice, said the judges' decision to classify forced male circumcision under "other inhumane acts" was "a misstep" that failed to take into account the element of force and purpose of the crime.

"We don't agree with the judicial decision; we think it's a wrong classification," Inder told IRIN.

Her comments followed allegedly inflammatory statements by leading politicians that have raised concerns among civil society groups in Kenya that the crime could be repeated in the 2012 elections.'

'Feminist Whining About Science Sexism'

anthony · 7 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For the last ten years, the feminists have been whining that women scientists are victims of sex discrimination. The essence of feminism is to complain that an oppressive patriarchy is preventing women from earning more money and getting the academic appointments and recognition they think they ought to have. The National Science Foundation and other experts have refuted the feminists' crybaby act, but the feminists ignore the evidence and continue to proclaim their victimhood and demand taxpayers' money to remedy it.

The feminists got Congress to hold hearings on the fictitious "crisis" of sexism in the sciences, hearing only from feminist witnesses. Congress then created a program (called ADVANCE) that awarded millions of dollars to feminist university professors for anti-bias centers and workshops. This is just another feminist racket to get government to pursue their anti-male agenda. The feminists control academia and are skilled in getting grants of taxpayers' money.'

Website: 'The Boys Initiative'

anthony · 7 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

http://www.theboysinitiative.org/

'The Boys Initiative is a groundbreaking national campaign to shed light on disturbing trends in recent years pertaining to boys' and young mens' achievement. The spark for the initiative was the now well documented decline in their academic performance over the past two decades. This is part of a disturbing trend of their decline in other areas impacting physical and emotional health, performance, accomplishment and social adaptation.'

Do Fraternities Cause Rape Culture?

anthony · 7 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The horrifying part of it all is that, for the most part, fraternity members are allowed to get away with their absurd behavior, with people taking a “boys will be boys” approach to the whole thing while turning a blind eye to the darker assault-driven side of their behavior. People treat the rumors of frat house rape as just that; rumors that shouldn’t really be given much credence.

Rape is very much a part of college life, though, no matter how much we want to ignore it. Studies suggest as many as one in four college-age women are the victims of rape. A full 10% of these rapes are believed to have taken place in fraternity houses. As is typical with rape, however, very little of it gets reported, possibly as low as 10%, and in even fewer cases the perpetrator is ever brought to justice.

An important question following that setup is where do you draw the line? Even if you shutter every fraternity house across every college campus in the country, you still can’t stop groups of men from living together. Are fraternities themselves responsible for these higher rape numbers, or is this the ugly product of what happens when large groups of college age men are allowed to congregate with few rules or accountability for their actions?'

A better way to see more non-anti-male ads on TV bikeking8 · 7 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Boycotts and letters may have some marginal effect on media's misandry. However, it seems more and more likely that giving public recognition to marketing departments who don't follow the crowd in this manner might be even more effective in squashing modern culture's affinity for male bashing. Commercials like Pledge's newest spot could be a shining example of how marketing campaigns can deliver effective advertising without male bashing while even displaying gasp! gender equality. If the people responsible for that Pledge commercial were given some public support/recognition for gender equality, they'd eat it up. And let's face it, society takes marketing to heart most of the time and sometimes uses it as a template for behavior: "Well in this commercial/movie the girl got her way all the time by having a temper tantrum and screaming - that must be acceptable, right?".

Another point that must be made is for the need to dig up comparable commercials from the days when there actually was male chauvinism and a glass ceiling. If direct comparisons (or better yet, mirror images) of modern male-bashing commercials can be found, this approach has a high likelihood of completely nullifying most feminist arguments for modern misandry in the media. Wouldn't that be a lot easier than trying to out-scream the feminist movement?

When did the building of affordable housing become a gender issue?

Anonymous · 8 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

When did the building of affordable housing to those in need become a gender issue?

Why am I asking this question you ask? Well on FaceBook today, where I am a fan of Habitat for Humanity, I received a notification about Lowe's sponsored "Women Build week." I followed the link back hoping to find that this idea was initiated by Lowe's as a promotional stunt but instead found an entire division of Habitat devoted to the "women build" program that traced it's history back 20 years. I am surprised and very disappointed to learn that an organization that I have participated with since I was in high school is not as egalitarian as I had presumed.

The Women Build FAQ pages address this issue as such:

"Does Habitat promote feminist issues?
We believe that decent, affordable housing is not a feminist issue. It is a quality of life and basic human dignity issue facing families everywhere.

The Women Build department of Habitat for Humanity International has one mission: empower women to take action against poverty housing conditions. The more people we can train to become effective volunteers, the better equipped we will be to fight poverty housing. Women Build brings together women from all walks of life to address in a concrete way the housing crisis facing millions of women and children across the globe.

Women Build is not about excluding men [except apparently in the preceding sentence]. It is about including women and opening new doors of opportunity. Men are often involved in our training programs and build projects in supportive roles and as subcontractors when women from the necessary trades are not available."

While I agree with the first paragraph of this statement, the rest is a non sequitur. If you desire more people to be trained to become effective volunteers, shouldn't we be "empowering" women and men? If we value inclusiveness, then shouldn't we bring together women and men from all walks of life? My experiences with working on Habitat builds consisted of working alongside women and men, from young teens to retired seniors and they are some of the most rewarding experiences of my life. It baffles me why Habitat seeks to prevent men from participating in some of their builds. The most disconcerting part of this statement is the omission of men in the list of those effected by the housing crisis.

But wait, there's more! Through the Women Build page I have found that Habitat also has a "Girls Build" program targeted towards preteen girls. In the following statement explaining the importance of Girls Build, could you please explain to me why this statement applies to our daughters but not to our sons?

"The Importance of Girls Build
Today's girls face pressures from peers and society that are different fro those of just a generation ago. Making the right decisions in the face of these influences can be difficult for any girl. For girls growing up in lower socio-economic conditions, the pressures and the risks are much greater.

Girls Build provides a fun learning environment to builds girls' confidence in making successful decisions about their future. Girls Build is also a great way to involve girls who want to get involved in Habitat's ministry in some way but are not yet old enough to work on a build site."

Disbar Assistant District Attorney Mary Kellett for Prosecutorial Misconduct

MR · 9 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

"The petition is coming down in less than a week and we will be short of 1,000 signatures," writes Paul Elam at "A Voice for Men". Elam is asking people to step up and sign if they have not, and to post links to the petition as widely as possible. "An innocent man's life and future are on the line..." writes Elam.

Recent mass-circumcision in the Phillipines: The picture says it all

Matt · 9 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Picture and article here. The original page in Dutch is found here.

Club's entry charges on the basis of sex withdrawn

Mr VanHuizen · 10 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This is something that happened recently in my city (Christchurch); a new club opened up called Club 22 (a lot of bars/clubs have been opening since the massive earthquake here) - founded by a 20 year old girl. This particular club decided it would charge $5 entry fee for women and for men a ridiculous $22 to get in - with the claimed intention of apparently "to stop the drunk, stupid boys from ruining other people's enjoyment" and essentially creating a continuous ladies' night out bar.

Here was the original article, noticeably the media doesn't seem to have a problem with this kind of discrimination.

Apparently though, there was some outcry and some complaints and they decided to simply charge both men and women $5: http://www.stuff.co.nz/the-press/news/4867257/Clubs-playing-field-levels-out. So yeah, ultimately this kind of discrimination is hard to stop on a legal level simply because it falls into a grey area of the law. Of course, if you did just this in the reverse case or on the basis of any race there'd be national outcry.

Comment from the founder: 'We weren't trying to be sexist, we're not man-haters, we're not a gay bar or a gentlemen's club as one person called us, we're a bar for everyone.'

Right, sure.

Guinness World Records rejects Philippines mass circumcision 'record attempt'

Minuteman · 10 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to press release here.

'It has been bought to our attention that a circumcision event in the Philippines last Saturday has supposedly been approved by Guinness World Records.

Guinness World Records would like to clarify that it does not, under any circumstances, monitor, endorse or recognise this kind of 'record attempt'. The organisers of the event have no approval from Guinness World Records to use its trademarks in connection with this event and any claim to officially recognise this event will be rejected.'

Excedrin Product Boycott

Anonymous · 10 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

I'm not sure how this has not made it on your list! I believe this video was made in poor taste. Any similar depiction of a loving wife being portrayed as an incompetent clown would cause an uproar and most likely end up on "the view." I have sent a letter to the company. Let me know what you guys think. Thanks!

"Matriarchy Movement" seeks taxpayer funding in Switzerland

Anonymous · 10 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No, you are not dreaming. This is an IRL nightmare. Excerpt from translation:

'Environmental degradation, financial crisis, the unilateral accumulation of wealth: all the consequences of modern patriarchy - the destruction of a male-dominated society. At least, it seems the German Heide Goettner-Abendroth, one of the central figures of the matriarchy movement, which has been investigating the 1980 female-dominated societies and propagated.

Of 12 to 15 May guesting the seventy-year-Goettner Abendroth and her radical feminist movement in St. Gallen, to discuss how to achieve results and implement policy from the matriarchy. The event - consisting of lectures and spiritual rituals - is supported by the City of St. Gallen financially. Patrons are represented in the eastern Swiss politicians, including the Free Democratic Party National Councillor Marianne Kleiner and the FDP Councillor Erika Forster. Professionals in the prevention of champagne are appalled that the event is officially supported. "Goettner-Abendroth represent a dogmatic belief, the claims to the truth and not tolerate other opinions," says Georg Otto Schmid, head of the Protestant sects relinfo.ch Observatory. The feminists group back in the vicinity of a fundamentalist religious movement. "The authorities would also do not in the sense of encouraging the Muslim Central Council financially," says Schmid.'

Story submitted by:

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

F&F: Massachusetts Action Alert: Shared Parenting Bill to Be Heard

Matt · 11 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Alert here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families' Shared Parenting bill (H02684) will have its public hearing by the Joint Committee on the Judiciary on Wednesday, May 18 at the State House in Boston. We want your help for this critical hearing. We need you to:

1) Call the members of the Judiciary Committee (as well as your local legislators) and let them know that you support H02684.

The contact info. for all Committee Members is here. To find your own state senator or representative, click here. Tell us how your interactions went by writing to us at FathersandFamilies@FathersandFamilies.org.'

Ad Council’s sexism hurts good cause; feminist bias in ads clouds message

Matt · 11 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'...This is not the first time, if there is on thread that runs through this organization’s ads it’s an effort, sometimes subtle, often overt, to disparage men and boys and cast women as superior, physically, mentally and even emotionally.

The Ad Council is known for creating the ads we see on T.V. or hear on the radio known as Public Service Announcements, (PSA’s) that stations run perhaps for free or at a reduced rate, usually to support some social cause that usually would not have the money for an ad campaign on the scale arranged for by the Ad Council. They usually have some ad agency do the creative work based upon their direction or guidance. I’m not sure exactly how much public funds, if any, are involved, either directly or indirectly.
...

One of the more outrageous campaigns created under the Ad Council was for something called “The Family Violence Protection Fund”. However, this time the cause was not so worthy, the campaign and the Fund provided misleading or even false information and was so biased and twisted it came close to promoting child abuse.

This campaign depicted pre-teen boys as “abusers in waiting” that needed correction or instruction to prevent them from becoming abusers of women which would be only natural in the minds of the feminists at the Ad Council.
...
Now the Ad Council takes aim at “man’s best friend” and the iconic and historic relationship and image of loyalty and friendship: a boy and his dog.'

New Study: Premature Ejaculation 5x more likely in circumcised men

Matt · 11 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

A new study shows that circumcised men are almost five times more likely to suffer from premature ejaculation. (Tang WS, Khoo EM. Prevalence and correlates of premature ejaculation, J Sex Med 2011)

DNA Testing Could Free Men Of Child Support

anthony · 12 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DALLAS (CBSDFW.COM) – DNA testing has released hundreds of wrongfully convicted prisoners. It could also exonerate another group – men who've been paying child support for children they do not believe are theirs.
...
Senate Bill 785 would end the relationship, releasing him from child support payments through DNA testing.
...
Both the House and the Senate passed this bill unanimously. If the govenor signs the bill, it would go into effect immediately.'

Vienna man chooses jail over alimony

anthony · 12 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'VIENNA - A Vienna man would rather sit in jail than pay alimony to his ex-wife, hoping it forces a change in state paternity laws.

Monday, Sean Keefe, 37, was sentenced to six months in the North Central Regional Jail for refusing to pay his ex-wife $1,800-a-month court-ordered alimony.

"I didn't kill anybody. I didn't assault anybody. And I didn't steal from anybody and I am going to jail. I am in jail," Keefe said in a YouTube video posted Saturday.

Keefe alleges two years after he divorced his ex-wife, he discovered he was not the father of the couple's youngest son.

"Just before our divorce was finalized I was told I should have a DNA test performed. I was told there was zero-percent chance I was his biological father," he stated on the video. Caroline Keefe, Sean's wife, provided The News and Sentinel copies of the test results.'

Dartmouth sororities announce new policy

anthony · 13 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Notice the incident cited for the implementation of this new policy. The female student initiated the conflict. Absolutely no mention of any accountability on her part. Excerpt:

'The eight presidents of Dartmouth's Panhellenic sororities unanimously decided that their houses will boycott all social events held in conjunction with a fraternity in which a member has assaulted a female student if internal adjudication is not taken against the individual in a timely manner, Sigma Delta sorority president Danielle Levin '12 said in an interview with The Dartmouth. The boycott, which will continue until the fraternity in question internally tries the perpetrator of the assault, was enacted following a violent incident at a fraternity's physical plant on Saturday, according to Levin.
...

The violent argument occurred between a female member of the Class of 2013 and a male member of the Class of 2011 in the fraternity's basement on Saturday night, Levin said. The female student threw a drink in the face of the male student — who was a member of the fraternity in question — and he threw a glass bottle at her in response. He then pushed her against the wall until other members of the fraternity pulled him away, according to Levin.

Levin said she did not know if the female student, who was also a member of a Greek organization, had been injured. The new initiative will apply to acts of violence against all female students regardless of their membership status in a Greek organization, Levin said.'

"What Every Son Should Know About Love Marriage and Divorce" by Aaron Burleson M.D.

Anonymous · 13 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

In his new book warning young men about the dangers of marrying unwisely, Dr. Burleson examines the biology of love and mating, helping the reader to understand why some unions are bound to fail before they even start. The book shows by example how every action can result in unintended consequences and elucidates the tell tale red flags which can signal a divorce in the future.

The book sets out some basic principles for choosing a mate with emphasis on vetting her thoroughly before taking the plunge into marriage. A checklist that every man should go through carefully prior to marriage is provided.

The middle chapters contain advice on keeping the marriage healthy by avoiding the common pitfalls, which may lead to divorce. Finally the author gives examples of how not to make the same mistakes so many other men have when dealing with a marriage on the rocks from infidelity, mental illness, or other common problems. Included in this section are suggestions as to how information can be collected objectively because dealing with these problems without the appropriate intelligence can be disastrous.

The final chapter on Divorce sets out in stark contrast the consequences of choosing your mate unwisely, ignoring the red flags, failing to properly vet your prospective mate or failing to take appropriate precautions prior to matrimony.

Think of this book as the fatherly advice you should have gotten from your dad and surely would have if someone had told him.

For More Information go to lovemarriagedivorce4men.com
EMail Dr. Burleson:Email Dr. Burleson

Ed. note: I presume the submitter of this story is the author of the book, but cannot know for sure. In any case the posting of this item is neither an endorsement nor non-endorsement for his work. It is posted because it draws attention to the importance of being very careful about who, if indeed anyone, you choose to marry, as the stakes these days are, as we all know too well, very high.

ACFC's "Save the Turnips" Campaign off to a good start

Matt · 13 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From an email from ACFC:

'The Facebook Campaign to confront Child Support Agencies and their inhumane practices toward child support payers is off to a rousing start. Over 300 people 'liked' thesavetheturnips page in the first 24 hours. But there's more…One basis of this campaign is disgust over how child support officials identify child support payers as 'turnips.' We provided a link to a National Child Support Enforcement Association (NCSEA) training program titled: "Getting Blood from a Turnip: New Farming Techniques for Increasing Your Yield."

Apparently folks at NCSEA got the message, sort of. Within hours of the start of the 'Save the Turnips' campaign NCSEA programmers had changed the website and pulled the reference to obligors as 'Turnips.' Of course, we thought you would like to see those 'before and after' alterations. The NCSEA is apparently still farming, just not specifically 'turnips.'

Would that undoing the decades of damage these people have done to families through their campaigns to vilify child support obligors was as easy as altering a webpage.'

The Facebook Group page for this campaign is http://www.facebook.com/savetheturnips.

Woman convicted of murdering baby using microwave oven

Minuteman · 14 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'Jurors in an American woman's third trial have found her guilty of burning her baby daughter to death in a microwave oven.

China Arnold, 31, was convicted of aggravated murder in the death of 28-day-old Paris Talley in August 2005. Arnold could receive the death penalty. The sentencing phase will begin on Monday next week.

Arnold's first trial ended in a mistrial.

She was found guilty in the second trial, but that conviction was reversed last year. An appeals court found there was misconduct by prosecutors and the trial court made an error by not allowing a material witness to testify in Arnold's defence.

Prosecutors have said Arnold intentionally put the baby in the microwave after a fight with her boyfriend. The defence had argued someone else was responsible.'

UK: Female teacher groomed girls for sex

Minuteman · 14 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A female UK drama teacher groomed a 13-year-old girl for sex then started a relationship with another student months after their affair ended.

Caroline French, 38, has been jailed for three years at the Preston Crown Court in Lancashire, after being found guilty of three indecent assaults and one count of indecency with a child, the BBC reports.

The court heard the Blackpool resident exchanged rings with the first teenager, a Lancashire student, and asked her to call her "Danny," to keep their affair secret.

Their affair became sexual when the student was 15 and continued for three months from January to April 2004.

A few months after the relationship ended French became intimate with another girl she taught at a different school, the court heard.'

The Flipside of Feminism: After four decades of male bashing, why are women still so unhappy?

Matt · 15 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Book review here. Excerpt:

'It's been about four decades since the Women's Liberation Movement began, yet recent statistics from the National Bureau of Economic Research claim women are more unhappy today than before the movement began.

Is the Feminist Movement to blame?

A new book by Suzanne Venker and Phyllis Schlafly "The Flipside of Feminism" explores this issue.

On their website, the overview section begins:

"What if everything you've been told about women in America is wrong? What if what your college professors taught you – along with television, movies, books, magazine articles, and even news reports – have all been lies or distortions?"

"…after all, they [men] are just brutal oppressing knuckle draggers so we need a whole new movement for that…"'

Avoiding resentment when she out-earns him

anthony · 16 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'Dear Carolyn:

What's your opinion on women who grossly out-earn their partners? I'm a raging feminist yet have difficulty with the fact that I make much more than my boyfriend. He doesn't have a college degree, so his lifetime salary ceiling is capped. If we ever buy a home together, I'll have to pay more — but he can fix almost anything. Then I shudder to think "he's earning his keep."

How do people avoid resentment? If I made $250,000, I'd care less, but I don't want to face a lifetime of struggling with bills and never feeling financially secure (especially once we have kids) while dealing with the fact that he can't contribute equally.'

Carolyn replies:

'The lenses through which you're viewing this situation aren't doing you any good. Making it a male-female issue is a loser, because it's breathtakingly unfair; you can't demand/expect/capitalize on equal opportunity ("feminism") and then be dismayed at or disparage the men you out-earn. The inevitable consequence of a bias-free system is that roughly half of the women in hetero couples will have to get used to the idea of making more than their sweetumses.'

Australia: 13 New Services to Support Aboriginal Fathers

Minuteman · 16 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to media release here. Excerpt:

'Minister for Indigenous Health Warren Snowdon today announced stronger and prouder involvement in parenting will be promoted among Aboriginal men at 13 organisations in a new Australian Government initiative.

“The $7.4 million in Strong Fathers Strong Families projects announced today for New South Wales, South Australia, Queensland and the Northern Territory will enable the rollout of antenatal programs that will engage Aboriginal males and help them prepare for fatherhood.

“Fathers, grandfathers, uncles and other significant male relatives are crucial in the lives of their children. A solid connection to family and culture gives children a great advantage in their early developmental years.'

NIH announce dangerous changes to clinical trial protocols in search for HIV vaccine

Minuteman · 17 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Will continue pushing for more circumcision regardless. Link to press release here. Excerpt:

'To speed the pace at which promising HIV vaccine candidates become viable for evaluation in large clinical trials, NIAID is exploring the use of innovative or adaptive clinical trial designs that let scientists quickly modify ongoing trials in response to data acquired during the study. Such flexibility in trial design will allow the research community to maximize efficiencies in studying vaccine candidates.
...
No matter how effective a preventive HIV vaccine is, however, we will need to evaluate and administer it in combination with other biomedical and behavioral HIV prevention tools. No single HIV prevention strategy will control and ultimately end the HIV/AIDS pandemic. That is why it is important for NIAID to continue supporting promising research on vaginal and rectal microbicides, pre-exposure prophylaxis (PrEP) and expanded HIV testing with linkage to care. That is also why public health workers will continue to advocate and implement scientifically proven HIV prevention strategies such as condom use, medically supervised adult male circumcision, harm-reduction strategies for injection drug users and the prevention of mother-to-child transmission of HIV.'

SAVE E-lert: Maine Prosecutor Files Motion to Muzzle SAVE

Matt · 17 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From a SAVE email alert:

Following our May 12 E-lert, SAVE learned that during Thursday's pre-trial hearing in the Filler case, the State of Maine prosecutor filed a motion to impose a gag order on SAVE and other organizations seeking to get the truth out about prosecutor Mary Kellett. Clearly, SAVE's well-subscribed petition, high-profile press conference, and other efforts to publicize the case are proving to be a major irritant to Mary Kellett...and well they should!

The judge viewed the motion as a puny attempt to revoke SAVE's First Amendment rights, and quickly denied the motion. And once again, the methods of prosecutor Mary Kellett and her proxies have been exposed for all to see.

Texas Teacher Allegedly Had Sex With 5 Students

anthony · 18 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ARLINGTON, Texas -- A suburban North Texas high school teacher has been accused of having sex with five 18-year-old students at her home and was released on bond Monday.

Brittni Nicole Colleps, an English teacher at Kennedale High School, is charged with five counts of having an inappropriate relationship between a student and teacher -- a second-degree felony.

It is a criminal offense for teachers to have sex with a primary or secondary school student, no matter the student's age. A conviction carries a penalty of anywhere from two years to 20 years in prison per count.

The Arlington woman was booked into the city jail after turning herself in Monday morning and posted a $125,000 bond for her release that afternoon, police spokeswoman Tiara Ellis Richard told The Associated Press.'

Australia: Harbour Bridge protest: who is Mick? (Bridge limbe For My Kids? Any time!)

GreatSouthernLander · 18 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

I can't believe that this hasn't been covered here yet. There was a lot of comment (90% positive) on the day but, it has since been ignored. A retrospective article by a major newspaper would seem warranted. Excerpt:

'The disgruntled father whose Sydney Harbour Bridge protest ground half of the city to a halt this morning was almost killed during an alleged bikie shootout last year.

Michael Fox, who went by the name "Mick" on two radio stations today, was caught up in an incident in April 2010 in which a high-ranking Nomads bikie was allegedly murdered.'

Washington Times: Guys got it made? Think again, say advocates

anthony · 18 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"“If just one sex wins, both sexes lose.”

These words, presented Tuesday at an event in Washington sponsored by the Boys Initiative, are intended to start a national conversation aimed at improving the outcomes for American boys and men in school, work, marriage and health.

The figures are stark: Compared to girls, boys are less educated and more medicated. One in five men of prime working age is not working. Men have a life expectancy five years shorter than women. Male suicide rates start out equal to females, but steadily rise over the lifespan.

America ranks No. 1 in the world for the number of men in their 50s and 60s with college degrees, but it ranks only ninth for these degrees among men in their 20s and 30s, Thomas Mortenson, education analyst and board member of the Boys Initiative, said in a report released at the event.

This is a “shameful record” and shows that the United States is not preparing its young men to compete in a global economy, said Mr. Mortenson. “For God’s sake, people, wake up.”"

Woman pleads guilty to false rape report

anthony · 18 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An MCI-Framingham inmate pleaded guilty yesterday in Framingham District Court to filing a false rape report last year in Hopkinton.

Andrea Davio-Michaud, 40, admitted to filing a false police report, but she will not face more jail time.

Judge Martine Carroll sentenced her to six months at MCI-Framingham, to be served concurrently with her existing sentence.

...

They questioned Davio-Michaud's husband, who told them his wife has falsely claimed being raped at least four other times over the past 15 years, and that she would often injure herself to add credibility to her story, the police report said.

Davio-Michaud confessed to making up the story.'

Woman charged with filing false rape report

anthony · 18 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 22-year-old woman who accused a co-worker of raping her has been charged with filing a false report of a crime, McDuffie County sheriff's Maj. Ronnie Williamson confirmed Tuesday.

Chelsea Ann Johnson of Dearing told police that Donteveous Coleman, a co-worker at Zaxby's, dragged her into a restroom at the Washington Road restaurant on April 25 and raped her.

Coleman, 27, of Thomson, has been released, Williamson said, but the charge against him has not been formally dropped. That will require court action, Williamson said.
...
Johnson was arrested Friday and released the next day on a $6,050 bond, Williamson said.'

"'Our boy problem' a 'disturbing trend' as boys and young men fall behind girls in education"

anthony · 18 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mortensen released a report Tuesday titled "Economic Change Effects on Men and Implications for the Education of Boys," in which he explains how men have not adapted well to the changing economy.

He points out that women are more likely than men ages 25 to 29 to have a high school diploma, that women are more likely than men to continue going to college after the first year and that there have been more women than men enrolled in college since 1981.

"Mortenson argues that teaching styles and discipline policies cause boys to disengage sooner than girls and drop out at higher rates," Education Week reported, adding that the focus in schools on test preparation and writing disengages boys faster than girls.'

CBS 6 Investigation: Botched circumcisions soar in Central Virginia

anthony · 18 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'RICHMOND,Va— For some it's a cosmetic or health decision. For others, it's a religious covenant.

Regardless of the reason, a majority of baby boys born in the Greater Richmond Area today are being circumcised.

While circumcision is one of the most common procedures performed, a number of things can and do go wrong.

Traci Stevens knew she didn't want her second baby to go through what her first son did. Stevens says, "My husband said over and over, 'Something's wrong.'"

Pediatric urologist Dr. Boyd Winslow confirmed what the Stevens feared, their first son's circumcision had been done wrong in the hospital and needed to be repeated. To spare their second born, Jonah, the same heartache, the Stevens took him directly to Dr. Winslow a month after he was born. Stevens says, "Jonah didn't cry one bit when it was done, so I was very happy with that."'

F&F: Massachusetts Action Alert: Shared Parenting Bill to Be Heard

Matt · 18 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Alert here. Excerpt:

Fathers and Families' Shared Parenting bill (H02684) will have its public hearing by the Joint Committee on the Judiciary on Wednesday, May 18 at the State House in Boston. We want your help for this critical hearing. We need you to:

1) Call the members of the Judiciary Committee (as well as your local legislators) and let them know that you support H02684.

The contact info. for all Committee Members is here. To find your own state senator or representative, click here. Tell us how your interactions went by writing to us at FathersandFamilies@FathersandFamilies.org.

GA Gov. Signs F & F-Inspired Child Custody Bill

Matt · 18 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'At Fathers and Families we receive many letters from divorced or separated military servicemembers with painful but preventable family law problems. Currently, Georgia is one of the few remaining states that has no protections in statute.

To address these problems, Department of Defense Liaisons Office legislative representatives and Fathers and Families legislative representative Michael Robinson worked to introduce Georgia's SB 112 and HB 282. Both bills largely mirror Fathers and Families' California AB 2416, which was passed into law last fall. Many months in the making, the bills will help protect military parents' child custody rights during and after deployments.'

SAVE request "Like"s for their Facebook page

Matt · 18 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE: Want to reform state-level DV laws? Visit SAVE's new Facebook page for the Domestic Violence Legislative Project, and then hit the "Like" button!

A note on 'hateful commentary'

Matt · 18 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

The MANN admins list got an email from a reader who said he felt some of the comments left by others here were hateful/vile and he gave some examples. All in all, I agreed with him re those exaamples. Following was my reply:

"Thanks for your note. I agree there are some really hateful and bigoted things in comments on our site. The MANN admins have discussed this issue at length in the past and have concluded that when we start censoring one comment, there is no end to where it goes. We think that as offensive something is, it tarnishes the poster far more than the site itself. This issue has come up a lot before in legal circles on other forums, such as newspaper forums.

Anyway, MANN admins concluded that to keep from injecting our own editorial bias into comments (we have it in what we post, since all editorial decisions re posted/printed content in newspapers or, as in our case, aggregation sites, is inherently biased), that there would be only one rule: No personal attacks against other posters. That is because personal attacks drive members away and more than that, they turn the subject matter from ideas to personalities. We want to stay focused on ideas, not personalities.

But I will say I understand your POV. The good news about these folks who post the hateful stuff is that the post usually goes nowhere. People usually don't reply to it, for they understand that that is 'feeding the trolls'. By editing out the hateful commentary, that would also be feeding the trolls and making them into martyrs. As it stands, we are simply starving them for attention and they only look bad.

I hope this clarifies some on the whys and hows of MANN editorial policy. In fact I think this is such an important issue to point out that I will take my reply to you and post it as an item, though I will not post your original note to the MANN list."

Book reviews by J. Steven Svoboda

Matt · 18 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

How Obama's Gender Policies Undermine America

How Obama's Gender Policies Undermine America. By Diana Furchtgott-Roth. New York: Encounter Books, 2010. www.encounterbooks.com. 47 pp. $5.99. Review by J. Steven Svoboda.

How Obama's Gender Policies Undermine America by Diana Furchtgott-Roth is the sixteenth in a series of small chapbooks Encounter Books is offering in a fascinating new publishing program. In this increasingly screen-oriented age, the concept of promoting paper books by putting out small, inexpensive, pocket-sized pamphlets on topics of political interest is a fascinating endeavor that should be supported.

Furchtgott-Roth is the author of two excellent books, Women's Figures: An Illustrated Guide to the Economics of Women in America and the more recent The Feminist Dilemma: When Success is Not Enough.

In fewer than fifty small-sized pages, writing accessibly so that the entire chapbook can probably be read in fifteen to thirty minutes by most readers, the author makes her case that the federal government is hurting our economic strength by attempting to ensure equality of outcome for women in the marketplace and not just equality of opportunity. "Equal outcomes is a pernicious goal for government policy, one that smacks of central planning and heavy official intrusion into private decision making, such as what to study and what vocation to pursue."

NYC mom admits to voodoo fire that burned daughter

anthony · 19 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK — Prosecutors say a New York City woman admitted setting fire to her young daughter during a voodoo ritual by pouring flammable liquid on the girl's head and igniting it, scarring her body.

Marie Lauradin (lah-hahr-DAHN') pleaded guilty Wednesday to first-degree assault by pouring the liquid on her then-6-year-old daughter at their Queens home in 2009.

Prosecutors say Lauradin poured the accelerant on her daughter's head and in a circle on the floor as part of a voodoo practice involving a loa, or spirit.'

Mother Reportedly Confessess to Killing Boy Found Dead in Maine

anthony · 19 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The mother of a young boy found dead on the side of a desolate road near the Maine-New Hampshire border reportedly has confessed to killing the boy, MyFoxBoston.com reported.

The woman, who the TV station identified as Julianne McCrery, reportedly told a Massachusetts state trooper that she killed her son and was contemplating killing herself, MyFoxBoston.com reported Wednesday evening , citing unnamed sources. FoxNews.com could not independently confirm the report with police.

Earlier Wednesday, without identifying the woman, a Massachusetts State Police spokesman confirmed that a woman was being questioned by police, and she was moved late in the afternoon from the Concord Barracks to a nearby hospital for a mental evaluation.'

San Franciscans to vote on male circumcision ban this November

anthony · 19 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'San Francisco voters will decide whether to ban male circumcision in the November 8 municipal election.

Activists gathered enough signatures to put a proposal on the ballot, the city's election board confirmed Wednesday.

The measure aims to prohibit all male circumcisions in San Francisco. Led by Lloyd Schofield who is part of a Bay Area “inactivist” group, the advocates want to eliminate the surgery and liken it to "male genital mutilation."

Schofield and the "inactivists" seek to make it "unlawful to circumcise, excise, cut, or mutilate the whole or any part of the foreskin, testicles, or penis" of anyone 17 or younger in San Francisco. Under the proposal, a person who violates the proposed ban could be jailed (not more than one year) or fined (not more than $1,000). Exemptions for religious reasons would not be allowed.'

Feminism -- schools are their playgrounds (Part II)

anthony · 19 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We don't recognize feminism in our thinking or our behavior, yet we are constantly bombarded by its ideals through entertainment media, books, movies, in the workplace and, most importantly, the public school system.

In "Save the Male," Kathleen Parker wrote, "Boys learn early that they belong to the 'bad' sex and their female counterparts to the 'good.'"

Despite obvious differences between males and females, feminism aimed to teach girls to aspire to be masculine and boys to be feminine. Public schools have become the focus of increasing girl-centered education and decreasing the natural inclinations of boys.'

"Everyone from Fox News to feminists is turning the arrest of DSK into a piece of medieval theatre"

anthony · 19 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here.

'I am no fan of Dominique Strauss-Kahn, still less of the Socialist Party of France that he is a member of or the nation-wrecking IMF that he currently runs. Yet I can't help feeling that his arrest on charges of sexual assault is being turned into a modern-day medieval drama, a kind of reality-show version of the witch trials of old, in which DSK has been assigned the role of all-purpose hate figure rather than suspect in a crime.
...
And feminists hate DSK because… well, because he is a man, and even worse than that he's a man who has reportedly flirted and engaged in saucy dialogue with his female staff in the past. The speed and thoroughness with which feminist writers have drawn a link between DSK's everyday workplace demeanour and the alleged rape of a maid has been extraordinary, as if there is a natural and logical link between sexist banter at work and the violent and criminal degradation of a woman. One writer says that what will really be on trial in NYC is the "sexual behaviour" of men in general and the "wider question of the behaviour of men in power". DSK's alleged actions apparently spring from "the sexism and snobbery of French politics". Such commentary is a reminder of feminist commentators' willingness to indulge and spread national stereotypes when it suits them and of their keen abandonment of the concept of innocent until proven guilty in any case involving allegations of rape. I mean, DSK must be guilty, right? He's French, he's powerful and he talks down to women. Lock him up.'

UK: Feminist judge resigns after Philip Roth wins Man Booker International Prize

anthony · 19 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Carmen Callil, one of three judges, claimed Roth did not deserve to make the shortlist let alone win the £60,000 prize.

Miss Callil, an author and founder of the feminist publishing house Virago, complained: “He goes on and on and on about the same subject in almost every single book. It's as though he's sitting on your face and you can't breathe”.

She was overruled by fellow judges Justin Cartwright, the South African novelist, and Rick Gekoski, a rare book dealer and writer.

Miss Callil complained: “I don't rate him as a writer at all. I made it clear that I wouldn't have put him on the longlist, so I was amazed when he stayed there. He was the only one I didn't admire – all the others were fine.
...
Roth’s career spans 50 years and includes a Pulitzer Prize awarded in 1998. However, his style has alienated feminists who have objected to his focus on explicit male sexuality.

The 78 year-old’s books have been described as almost pornographic and often feature older men and their sexual exploits.

Feminists have argued that his female characters are portrayed as less than human to which his response has been that he “writes about the lives of men”.

Women don't need federal Affirmative Action programs

anthony · 19 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women in 21st century America live five years longer than men; face an unemployment rate that is over a full percentage point lower; are awarded a substantially larger share of high school diplomas, BAs, MAs, and Ph.D.s; and show lower rates of incarceration, alcoholism and drug abuse.

Contrary to what feminist lobbyists would have Congress believe, girls and women are doing well.

With these data before us, reasonable individuals should be holding conferences on how to help men. Policymakers should require that government contractors hire men to bring down their unemployment rate. Health reform bills should feature Offices of Men's Health to assist men in living to the same age as women.

Unfortunately, the reverse is occurring. Congress and President Obama continue to advocate policies that favor women over men. The financial regulation bill has mandated 29 offices to help the advancement of women.'

UK: 'This rape debate is demeaning to women'

anthony · 19 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Sexual Offences Act 2003 declared that consent must be ‘active, not passive’; in rape cases, consent is now taken to mean agreement rather than the absence of a refusal. So if a woman goes along with sex, but doesn’t make it explicitly clear that she is actively consenting to it, it can be deemed to be rape. The government has even moved towards ensuring that no agreement can be taken as consent if it is given under the influence of alcohol. As Cavendish pointed out: ‘In our zeal to protect women, are we going to legislate so that a drunken man is accountable for his deeds, but a drunken woman is not? Why do we encourage women to see themselves as victims?’ Absolving women who engage in sexual liaisons – whether drunk or sober – of responsibility for their actions is not liberating; it’s demeaning.

...

Women are done no favours by these changes. They are being treated as feeble dimwits who have constantly to be asked for their consent, to be checked on every step of the way to make sure they’re okay. It is curious that self-described feminists are propounding such a paternalistic view of women as unable to make their own minds up, as too weak and silly to say ‘no’ to men, and as putting themselves at risk by drinking and flirting and potentially knocking out their critical faculties, leading them to wake up in a strange bed without having first given their ‘active consent’.

SAVE: Make your Voice Heard at the False Allegation Summit, June 2, Washington DC

Matt · 19 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From a SAVE email:

SAVE will be sponsoring a False Allegations Summit on June 2 in Washington, DC. The Summit will kick off False Allegations Awarenesss Month. All victims of false abuse allegations are invited to attend this historic event.

The Summit will be held at the Fairfax Hotel on Embassy Row, 2100 Massachusetts Avenue, NW, Washington, DC. from 1pm to 4pm.

The Summit will feature:

- Release of a national survey of false allegations
- Statements by stakeholder organizations
- Accounts by victims of false allegations
- Release of Model Language to Stop False Allegations

Pre-registration is necessary. Please send your name and organization, if appropriate, to tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

In addition, if you are interested in making a victim statement, please indicate that fact in your registration. We will be limiting the number of victim statements to 10, so register soon!

Friends, family members, and others are also welcome to attend. We are expecting to get good media coverage, so make every effort to attend this historic event!

Sincerely,

Teri

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

P.S. For more information on False Allegations Awareness Month, visit http://www.saveservices.org/false-allegations-awareness-month/

Woman 'deliberately runs over daughter'

Minuteman · 20 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. The quotation marks in the title are from the original headline and appear to an editorial device to separate women from their actions. Excerpt:

'A US mother has been arrested after she deliberately ran down her daughter in a supermarket carpark, police allege.

Ohio woman Michelle Touma, 41, allegedly swerved her van to hit her daughter Emily, 19, running over her foot, the Sandusky Register reports.

Touma had been arguing with her daughter as she drove her to her job at a nearby Taco Bell outlet.

Her daughter began shouting and hitting the bonnet of the car when Touma tried to drop her off early.

Police said Touma then swerved the van so she could strike her daughter in the head.

"The mum said that she was going to drive by with the window down and smack her daughter in the back of the head," a police spokesman said.'

Mary Dejevsky: A feminist presumption of victimhood impairs justice

anthony · 20 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rape is rape is rape – and a very serious crime. Let's get that over with. Most people also have a very clear idea of what constitutes rape – and if they don't, and they find themselves sitting on a jury in a rape trial, they will be put right pretty quickly by the judge and the prosecuting lawyers. The difficulty in recent years has been less and less judicial practice than the propagation of a hardcore feminist view intent on broadening the definition of rape and presuming guilt rather than innocence. The lines between rape, sexual assault and personal "mistakes" risk as a result becoming blurred.'

Another way in which school isn't treating boys well

Matt · 20 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Bullying. When it happens to girls, it makes the news. Boys? This story speaks for itself. Perhaps the only reason it made the news is because it was a sub who was there that day. Excerpt:

'A 12-year-old Dallas student was bound to a chair with duct tape and beaten by four classmates as a substitute teacher stood and ignored the attack, according to the victim's mom.

The Dallas school district is investigating the charges made by Keneshia Richardson, who claims the attackers wrapped tape around her son's mouth to keep him from shouting.

"It was uncalled for," Richardson told The Dallas Morning News, adding her son had trouble breathing.

The woman said his hands were taped to the chair, he was wrapped with a telephone cord, and the attackers knocked him to the ground. The boy's shirt was torn as well, she claimed.'

Title IX Winners and Losers

Anonymous · 20 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Title IX has provided many athletic opportunities for women, often at the expense of mens' sports programs. The personal stories of the male athletes affected by these cuts are often marginalized.

I recently wrote a book about the plight of the 1999 Providence College baseball team. It was the last year the sport was played at the school. The program was eliminated due to Title IX concerns. The team had been having great success throughout 90's, and in their final season the team rallied to show the school that they were making a mistake. They won the Big East championship but lost the sport anyway.

STRIKE IX is the title of the book, and it tells the individual stories of the players who were affected by the Title IX decision at Providence College.

It's available in paperback, but is also available also electronically on Nook and Kindle.

An interview I did on a local sports show with Marc DesRoches, the team's star pitcher that year can be viewed here.

Experts Call for Expanding Boys' Career Options

anthony · 21 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the nearly four decades since Title IX of the federal Civil Rights Act barred sex discrimination in education, educators and policymakers have encouraged more girls to study and enter traditionally “male” careers, from science and technology to architecture and law.

With male-dominated fields like construction now stagnant, however, experts argue that the situation may be reversed: American schools don’t do enough to encourage boys to explore careers in traditionally female-dominated fields, such as health care and education.

Experts at a forum hosted Tuesday by the Washington-based Boys Initiative called for the creation of a White House Council on Boys to Men, similar to the existing White House Council on Women and Girls, to organize policies and support.'

Poetry for Mensactivism.org

Matt · 21 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Submitted via email: Link to a poetry site http://poetwarrior.org.uk/. Some people find poetry inspiring and why shouldn't they? Some of the greatest causes in history have been moved along by poetry and song. So I hope you enjoy this man's work.

Elementary school teacher jailed for 'making sex tape with daughter's 16-year-old boyfriend'

anthony · 21 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An elementary school teacher has been jailed after admitting making a sex tape with her daughter's 16-year-old boyfriend.

Michelle McCutchan,38, confessed to having sex with the teen on at least five occasions and setting up a video camera to film two of the romps.

The mother of one also sent the teen nude pictures of herself as well as sexually explicit texts during their five month affair.'

School Employee Arrested for Alleged Sex Assault

anthony · 21 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MILWAUKEE - The Milwaukee County sheriff's office is investigating after a staff member at a Milwaukee school was arrested on a sexual assault allegation.

The Milwaukee Archdiocese says that a female staffer at St. Charles School was arrested, and that the victim was a teenage boy who's a student at school.

The sheriff's office says a juvenile from the school made the complaint against a staff member at the school.

The suspect was booked into the County Correctional Facility-Central on Wednesday. Formal charges have not been filed.'

Women-Only Hotel Floors

dooquidis4ever · 22 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Why is this tolerated? Isn't this illegal discrimination? What would happen if we had men-only hotel floors? Excerpt:

'There is a new trend in hotels geared at women who are business travelers or women to just travel for pleasure. This new trend is making whole floors of hotels a woman only floor.

If all goes according to plan Grand Rapids Michigan will be the first city in the United States that has a hotel where an entire floor is dedicated to women business travelers. This looks at first glance to be a great idea but is it really? Some women are calling it sexist and discriminatory. Some call it kindness and a welcome change.

The hotel is a Marriott hotel which is known to cater to business people of both sexes. This new hotel will have twenty four floors and only the 19th floor will be reserved for women only. ...
...

As a woman I can see two sides to this issue. Sure I see the pros and the cons of this but where will this end? How much is too much? I think the only thing that will make it equal is to have men only hotels so that the men aren't being hit on by the women. After all it is not just men who hit on women, women being equal hit on men as well. Is this hotel prepared to make a male only floor within its hotel?
...
I think it goes beyond a kindness to woman as some people are saying. Sure it is nice to be pampered and feel safe but when will it end. Will there be woman only hotels on the proverbial horizon for America? What would women who fraught hard for our equal rights say if they seen this latest "advance"? There is a huge difference between being protected and being segregated. Segregation does not work; America's fore fathers have already tried that.'

When is a rape not a rape?

Kratch · 22 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"As a serving policeman, there are several things I am not allowed to talk about.

There are plenty of operational secrets we cannot discuss, but I'm not referring to those. I'm talking about the taboo subjects. The 'detection' rate for rape is one of these.

It's very frustrating to sit and listen to pundits talking about the low number of rape convictions in Court, when as police officers we all know what lies behind these poor numbers.

For example, I couldn't possibly tell you that out of every ten rapes which are reported in Ruraltown, at least eight turn out to be nonsense. To be fair, eight out of ten of everything reported at Ruraltown police station is nonsense, why should rape be any different?
...
So who suffers when Charlene drops by the nick to accuse Wayne of raping her because she is hacked off that he used her child benefit money for drugs? ...

The next genuine rape victim to walk into the police station, that's who. The next genuine victim who may face the cynical looks and delayed reaction from officers who have just finished dealing with the last ten Charlenes.'

The Military's Secret Shame

Matt · 23 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

A Newsweek article from April, which I only just saw. Men have the right to be free from assaults of all kinds, whether it be from men or women, and the governments under which they live (for good or bad) have a duty to ensure this. Article here. Excerpt:

'Blake Stephens, now 29, joined the Army in January 2001, just seven months after graduating from high school. The verbal and physical attacks started quickly, he says, and came from virtually every level of the chain of command. In one of the worst incidents, a group of men tackled him, shoved a soda bottle into his rectum, and threw him backward off an elevated platform onto the hood of a car. When he reported the incident, Stephens says, his platoon sergeant told him, “You’re the problem. You’re the reason this is happening,” and refused to take action. “You just feel trapped,” he says. “They basically tell you you’re going to have to keep working with these people day after day, night after night. You don’t have a choice.” His assailants told him that once deployed to Iraq, they would shoot him in the head. “They told me they were going to have sex with me all the time when we were there,” he says.

Stephens twice attempted suicide. His marriage fell apart. He became paranoid and explosive. In June 2003 his mother wrote a letter to Sen. Barbara Boxer, detailing her son’s “continued humiliation.” “Congressional inquiries have been know [sic] to jeopardize a soldier’s rank and standing,” Boxer’s office responded. “There is no way for our office to administratively protect your son’s military standing once a congressional examination is in progress.” The following August, Stephens was discharged for his “physical condition.”

Fear of a ruined career is a major factor preventing victims from coming forward. In 2010 the Pentagon anonymously surveyed active-duty soldiers who had been sexually assaulted about why they declined to report their attacks. Almost half the responding men said they kept silent because they didn’t want anyone to know, a third said they didn’t think anything would be done, and almost 30 percent said they were afraid of retaliation or reprisals.'

The Cure for the Modern Male Malaise: The 5 Switches of Manliness

Matt · 23 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A few weeks ago, I caught the premiere of the Discovery's Channel's "Human Planet," a television show about the ways people have adapted to survive in Earth's most extreme environments. Perhaps a better name for the program would have been "Man Planet," as the show primarily chronicled the incredible feats of men around the world – men the tentacles of civilization have barely grazed. There were men mining sulfur from an active volcano; men diving dozens of feet and holding their breath for five minutes at a time to spear fish on the ocean floor; men initiating their sons into manhood by teaching them how to train eagles to hunt. Even seemingly pedestrian tasks like taking your kids to school were fraught with danger; a father escorted his children on a 60 mile journey through the Himalayas, watching for potential avalanches and walking over a frozen river that could have cracked open at any moment.

...

Over tens of thousands of years, our manly ancestors evolved unique psychological traits that helped them survive and thrive in a dangerous, hardscrabble world. While we like to think that we're cultured and sophisticated and quite a distance beyond all that, all men still have these primitive psychological traits embedded deep inside them. As we can see from a show like "Human Planet," there are still men who live this way right now. The modern society we enjoy today represents a mere blink in the long history of humanity.

And so we have a mismatch, where for men in the developed world the inner elements of masculinity remain unchanged, while the outer landscape in which those elements exist has been dramatically altered. Instead of spending most of our time outside each day, we spend the majority of it inside. Instead of braving the elements, we spend our time in climate-controlled environments. Instead of making things with our hands, we select items from the hundreds that line the aisles of gigantic stores. Instead of hunting down our dinner, we buy our meat pre-cut, in Styrofoam containers. Instead of being looked to as leaders of the tribe, we see ourselves lampooned in the media as bumbling and inept.

The primal elements of masculinity sit within us like a well-trained regiment of soldiers that is ready and itching to fight, but sits waiting restlessly, and endlessly, in reserve. Core aspects of the male psyche lie dormant, and men find themselves as square pegs trying to fit into a round hole. Having butted up against this mismatch over and over again, men are feeling angry and restless, losing their motivation, and giving up.'

Woman tried to sell girl's virginity

Minuteman · 24 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A US woman has been charged with offering her 11-year-old daughter's virginity to a man in exchange for $US10,000 ($A9,517).

The woman was charged on Monday in Utah's 3rd District Court with two counts of aggravated sex abuse and two counts of sexual exploitation of a minor. KTVX Channel 4 reports that court documents claim she made the offer after the man asked about oral sex with the girl.

Police say the woman and the daughter would model lingerie for the man. The offer was discovered by the woman's boyfriend, who found multiple text messages discussing the proposal.'

Australia: Chivalry will be the death of some

Minuteman · 24 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A good Samaritan bashed when he tried to help a woman involved in an argument after an AFL game in Melbourne says he'd do it again.

David, who did not want his surname used, was leaving the Carlton-Geelong game on Friday night when he saw a couple arguing on the walkway between Etihad Stadium and Southern Cross railway station.

The 41-year-old from Ocean Grove intervened when he saw the man push the woman, but was punched in the face a number of times and kicked by the man.

He was helped up from the ground by a friend but the man attacked him a second time.

Constable Hannah Smith said the woman was hysterical and kept screaming for the attack to stop but also tried to hold David's friend back.

Nursing a badly-bruised eye and bruised ribs, David described his attacker as "a gutless wonder" but said he had no regrets about helping.

"It's what you do," he told reporters on Tuesday.'

Mom kills children-- will the dad be blamed?

el cid · 24 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Another very sad story about a mother who killed her children. It's a choice that perplexes me: why a parent, mom or dad, would choose to kill their kids--and, alas, we know dads do the same thing. In a related story, some commenters are already trying to blame Dad, claiming he was abusive. It seems to be part of our culture--women are never to blame for their choices, but some man is. Women are full adults when it comes to their rights, minors when it comes to moral culpability. Or at least it seems, especially as the media did its best to blame the father for the mother who drowned her own kids in the Hudson. In the end, however, it's just plain sad. And I don't know how to prevent these things. Does anyone? Excerpt:

'CASTLE ROCK — The mother arrested Monday for the murder of her two children called police at 7:48 a.m. to report that she was trying to commit suicide.

When asked by a police dispatcher whether there were any children in the home, the mother replied: "They are in heaven."

When police arrived at the Founders Village home of Kelli Lynn Murphy, they found 9-year-old Liam and his sister, Madigan, 6, dead in their bedrooms. Castle Rock Police Chief Tony Lane said the bodies had no visible signs of injury.'

Ten Things You Can Do for False Allegations Awareness Month

Matt · 24 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From a SAVE email:

June is False Allegations Awareness Month. So here are some ideas on how to get involved, and turn the corner on a major legal problem:

1. Learn the facts: http://www.saveservices.org/false-allegations-awareness-month/false-accusations-of-domestic-violence-by-the-numbers/

2. Pass out copies of the FAAM flyer: http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/False-Allegations-Shortchange-True-Victims

3. Order a FAAM poster, T-shirt, or baseball cap: http://www.zazzle.com/savemerchandise

4. Ask your local newspaper, radio station, or blogger to cover the issue

5. Set up a table during a local event, pass out FAAM flyers

6. Register to attend the False Allegations Summit, June 2 in Washington, DC: tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

7. Help fix the laws, join the Domestic Violence Legislative Project: http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp

8. Send some $$$ for the FAAM radio campaign: http://www.saveservices.org/contribute/

9. Send a letter to your state attorney general: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/FA-Letter-to-AG.pdf

10. Reach out to someone you know who has been falsely accused.

Let's make this fun and really get the word out!

Sincerely,

Teri

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Boy's body found in Maine identified, mom arrested

Matt · 24 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Caption:

'Texas mother Julianne McCrery is scheduled to be arraigned Thursday in connection with the murder of her 6-year-old son Camden Pierce Hughes in New Hampshire. Her attorney said Thursday that McCrery is suicidal and wants to "be in heaven with her son." McCrery, 42, of Irving, Texas, was arrested in Massachusetts Wednesday night on a fugitive of justice charge. That charge stems from a warrant New Hampshire police issued charging McCrery with second-degree murder in the death of Camden on May 14.'

F&F: MA Shared Parenting Action Alert: We Need Your Phone Calls

Matt · 24 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Action alert here. Excerpt:

'Hundreds of supporters of family court reform packed the Joint Committee on the Judiciary hearings last Wednesday. Numerous determined supporters of Fathers and Families' Shared Parenting bill (H02684) testified–some waiting all day up to 10 PM at night to do so–and their words were powerful and engendered much agreement and sympathy.

Now we need you to:

1) Call your state representative and ask him or her to call House Chair Eugene L. O'Flaherty and Speaker of the House Robert A. DeLeo and ask them to pass the bill. The phone numbers and email addresses of all House members can be found here.

Poland: Nuns jailed for child abuse and beatings

Minuteman · 25 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'An appeals court in Poland is sending a Catholic nun to prison after she was convicted of beating children at a home for troubled youths and allowing one resident to be sexually abused by other children.

A lower court had given the nun a suspended two-year sentence, but the three-judge appeals court on Tuesday increased that to two years in prison at the request of prosecutors.

...

The appeals court also upheld an eight-month suspended prison term the lower court had given another nun, identified only as Bogumila L, who was convicted of verbally insulting children at the centre.'

State paternity laws promote identification of parents

anthony · 25 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If a new mother hopes to keep the father out of her child's life by leaving his name off the birth certificate, will she succeed?
...
But, she cannot expect to receive court-ordered child support unless she identifies the father.

When paternity becomes an issue in court, it is usually because one parent - generally the mother - wants financial help for the child's expenses from the other parent. If the man she identifies as the father does not want to pay, he can request a paternity test and the court will order it.
...
A mother can refuse to identify the father for the birth certificate. But if the man knows of the birth, he can sign an affidavit of parentage at the hospital that will have the legal effect of recognizing him as the father. He has 60 days to change his mind and sign a revocation or rescission of parenthood. After that, if he wants to revoke his affidavit, he would have to prove that fraud, duress or a material mistake of fact was involved in his assumption of the responsibilities of fatherhood.'

Ed. note: This is an article written pertaining to Maryland law. Paternity laws vary from state to state.

Casey Anthony Defense Strategy: Blame Her Dad

anthony · 25 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This isn't an uncommon defense for women accused of a crime. Somehow there must be a man to blame while the accused is portrayed as a victim. Excerpt:

'Sexual assault. An accidental drowning. A cover up. That is the explosive defense strategy declared before the jury in opening statements in the sensational Casey Anthony first-degree murder trial.

Anthony, now 25, is accused of killing her daughter Caylee in June 2008, and not reporting her child allegedly missing for 31 days, eventually telling Orlando, Fla., investigators that Caylee had been kidnapped by her baby sitter.

...

Prosecutors then called George Anthony onto the witness stand, the state's first witness in this death penalty trial. Immediately, prosecutors had to address for the jury the equally stunning revelation -- according to the defense -- that Casey Anthony was a victim of sexual abuse by her father beginning when she was 8 years old. And, in another bombshell, that Casey's brother Lee also sexually fondled his sister.

"Did you ever sexually molest your daughter Casey?" asked prosecutor Jeff Ashton.

"No sir," replied George Anthony.'

Adultery and the Alpha Woman

Matt · 25 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Whether her husband and three children would agree with her is doubtful. But then, Erica's not alone. In fact, she's just one among a growing band of women who've been dubbed the Alpha Adultresses.

These high-earning, successful women are every bit as willing as men to use their power to attract younger lovers for quick flings.

Newspapers are crammed with sex scandals involving powerful men. This past week alone, Dominique Strauss-Kahn — of late the world's most powerful banker — has been accused of rape, megastar Arnold Schwarzenegger has admitted having a love-child with his housekeeper and the scandal surrounding MP Chris Huhne's past indiscretions continues to rumble on.

However, a new academic study suggests women are inherently no more virtuous than men. It's just that, in the past, they have lacked the confidence or opportunity to stray.

Like men, women are finding that power is a potent aphrodisiac. And just like men, they are giving in to the thrill of illicit lunchtime assignations and the sheer excitement that accompanies their transgression.

Nor do they feel any more guilty or ashamed about it than a man would — if anything, less so.

Professor Joris Lammers, of Tilburg University in the Netherlands, who conducted an anonymous survey of more than 1,500 readers of a business magazine, has found being powerful makes women more prone to be unfaithful.'

MSN: Why women have the upper hand in the workplace

anthony · 25 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ask any married couple which spouse remembers family birthdays, when the car is due for an oil change and the name of that great restaurant they went to last week, and chances are both will say it's the wife who serves as the pair's memory.

While many a wife may chalk this up to their husband's laziness, remembering detailed information may just be one of the many things that women are naturally better at than men, at least according to a new book called "Man Down: Proof Beyond a Reasonable Doubt that Women are Better Cops, Drivers, Gamblers, Spies, World Leaders, Beer Tasters, Hedge Fund Managers, and Just About Everything Else," by Dan (yep, he's a guy) Abrams, a legal analyst for NBC News and columnist for Men's Health magazine.

In his book, Abrams provides hundreds of studies and statistics to back up his claims that women best men in a lot of areas. Some -- like memory -- were already suspected, while others -- like driving -- were more surprising considering the common view is to the contrary.'

Special-Ed Teacher Admits To Raping 15-Year-Old Boy

anthony · 26 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 42-year-old female special-ed teacher in Queens yesterday pleaded guilty in Queens Supreme Court to the third-degree rape of a 15-year-old boy. As punishment, in addition to surrendering her teaching license and registering as a sex offender, the teacher, Christine Williams, is expected to be sentenced to 90 days in jail and ten years probation in July. Williams had sex with the boy (who was not her student) at least twice last year in her Jamaica, Queens, home.'

UK: Women-only sauna sessions at Colchester Leisure World spark row

anthony · 26 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MEN at Colchester's Leisure World have called for an end to women-only sauna and spa sessions.

A petition pinned to the wall of male changing rooms calls on Colchester Council to axe two female-only sessions on Tuesday mornings and Thursday evenings at Aqua Springs.

The spa facilities include a central pool, steam room, saunas, ice cold-pool and a new salt inhalation room.

Gary Reeve, 26, of High Woods, attends the Leisure World gym three or four times a week and said he often used the saunas.

He said: "It's a bit sexist. Women want equality, so I don't see why they should get special treatment."'

'Why Marriage Is Dead And Monogamy Is A Mirage'

anthony · 26 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men of power (and those that want to be like them): If you intend to play Russian Roulette with your life by having unprotected sex with any available vagina, why bring other lives into the wager by making a public commitment to another human being? And women – why do we silently put up with it – while pretending we don't want the same thing?

Yes, women cheat – but when it happens, you would never know. I bet Jackie Kennedy had a few pool boys and stable grooms stowed away for the hard times when Jack was out banging Marilyn. When Tammy Faye Bakker watched her bible-backed empire crumble to pieces because her husband used church funds to pay off his side piece, I bet she had a pair of strong, young arms to weep into. Men of power create bonds with the most intelligent, charismatic women in the world, who join forces with them because they also want to attain the pinnacle of success. That takes passion and fire. Could that kind of energy just wither away while a wandering man gorges himself on human flesh? I doubt it.

So I applaud these women for the secret affairs they were certainly having – because they could get what they wanted and keep the peace. Today's male philanderers should take note. When women cheat, they won't leave a paper trail. They don't have outside children. They don't perform acts that border on rape, drawing media glare. I don't judge cheating men for cheating. I judge them for being sloppy.'

Who spends the most years in retirement?

fondueguy · 26 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here, including a graph comparing the retirements of men and women in various countries. Excerpt:

'Early retirement. That's what most people want, unless you're lucky enough to love working. When you have the luxury of retiring early though, why not take advantage? According to OECD estimates for life expectancy and retirement ages, in countries like Mexico, it is common for men to work up to the last year of their lives. On the other hand, women in Austria spend an average of 26 years in retirement.

In the United States the average years in retirement is 10 years for men and 16 years for women (mostly because men typically die earlier)—among the least in the world.'

If you do the math you'll see that men retire later in life and die sooner!

Married men earn a third more than their single counterparts

fondueguy · 26 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Married men earn nearly one third more than single males because they work harder, new research reveals.

Tying the knot means men get paid seven per cent more than unmarried men even if differences in age, education and experience are taken into account.
...
Experts say the pay gap could be because men develop a stronger work ethic after they marry.
...
Results indicate that a lower level of pay satisfaction induces married men to put more effort into their work, which leads to higher wages,' said academics at the University of Bielefeld in Germany.'

Two New York City Police Officers Acquitted of Rape

Matt · 26 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two New York City police officers on Thursday were found not guilty of raping a drunken woman who had been helped into her apartment by the officers while on patrol.

The verdict brings to an end a criminal case that drew outrage across the city when the officers were indicted in 2009, and provides some measure of vindication for the officers, Kenneth Moreno and Franklin Mata.

The officers were convicted of three counts of official misconduct for entering the woman's apartment, but the jury found them not guilty of all other charges, including burglary and falsifying business records.

The police commissioner, Raymond W. Kelly, said on Thursday that the officers would be fired immediately — up till now, they have been suspended with pay.

"The guilty verdicts involved violations of the officers' oaths of office and as a result warrant immediate termination," Mr. Kelly said. "Both officers will be terminated today."'

New DNC Boss Calls GOP 'Anti-Women'

Matt · 26 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an emotional assault on the Republicans, new Democratic Party Chairwoman Rep. Debbie Wasserman Shultz today called the GOP agenda "anti-women" and "a war on women" that will backfire on Republicans in the 2012 election and provide a cushion for President Obama's re-election bid.

"It's just so hard for me to grasp how they could be so anti-women as they are," she said at a breakfast roundtable with reporters.

"The pushback and the guttural reaction from women against the Republican's agenda out of the gate, the war on women that the Republicans have been waging since they took over the House, I think is going to not only restore but possibly helps us exceed the president's margin of victory in the next election," added the popular Florida congresswoman.

The basis of her charge was the recent vote to defund Planned Parenthood and Title 10 funding for clinics that perform abortions.'

$500 Million Obama Administration Program Will Help Kids 'Sit Still' in Kindergarten

anthony · 26 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I wonder if this 'early learning initiative' is just an attempt to increase the number of boys taking ADHD drugs in order to assimilate them to an education system that is geared more towards the biological learning style of girls. Excerpt:

'(CNSNews.com) – Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius told CNSNews.com on Wednesday that the administration's new $500 million early learning initiative is designed to deal with children from birth onward to prevent such problems as 5-year olds who "can't sit still" in a kindergarten classroom.

“You really need to look at the range of issues, because if a 5-year-old can’t sit still, it is unlikely that they can do well in a kindergarten class, and it has to be the whole range of issues that go into healthy child development,” Sebelius said during a telephone news conference on Wednesday to announce the Race to the Top Early Learning Challenge.'

SAVE: Please thank Dr. Phil for doing show on abusive women

Matt · 26 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From a SAVE email:

Today, Dr. Phil ran a show on Angry Women, Scared Husbands. Below is the show description from his website:

'You may know that one in four women will become a victim of domestic violence, but did you know that one in nine men will too? Violence against men is rarely talked about and under-reported. Dr. Phil continues his campaign to end the silence on domestic violence with two couples willing to open up about their abusive relationships. Steve says his wife, Monica, punches him and recently pushed him down a flight of stairs. He says he's not only afraid of her abuse, he's afraid of how he may retaliate in the heat of anger. The couple has nine children between them – two of whom are severely disabled – and they're worried about the effect their explosive arguments have on their kids. Then, Charlie worries she'll get so angry at her new husband, Gary, that she'll lash out and inadvertently kill him. Gary says that everything he does makes his wife mad, and he just can't win. Can these women learn to control their tempers and stop the chaos before something tragic happens?'

Please send Dr. Phil an email TODAY to thank him for courageously covering this important topic: http://drphil.com/plugger/respond/?plugID=9164

Underage sex study reveals selective prosecution of boys

Matt · 27 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email: This new study (.pdf file) on statutory rape laws found minor teens are being prosecuted and labeled "sex offenders" for consensual close-in-age sex with each other, and some states only prosecute the boys. For example, in Arizona a 13-YO boy was convicted of having consensual sex with his 15-YO girlfriend. In Texas a 17-YO boy was given 10 yrs in jail for consensual oral sex with a 15-YO girl. Excerpt:

'In some states, a gender bias in prosecuting offenders is especially prominent when both partners of a sex act are under the age of consent. Under a number of jurisdictions if both partners are minors then they are both considered to be victims and offenders of the crime at the same time. In these cases, according to the law of their respective states, the prosecution of each teen would have been called for. However, it is more common to see the prosecution of only the male. For example, in California where the age of consent is 18, a 16 year old male was prosecuted for having consensual sex with his 14 year old girlfriend. Moreover, in Arizona a 13 year old boy was convicted of having consensual sex with his older, 15 year old, girlfriend.'

Texas lawmaker tries to intimidate male colleagues with veiled threats of reprisal

anthony · 27 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is another example of female politicians thrusting themselves and women in the role of victim. As a result, they blame every man who doesn't agree with them. An example of their arrogance is evident when Rep. Senfronia Thompson told the men if they don't stand up for women, they shouldn't show up in the chamber tomorrow. Her comments were met with applause. Excerpt:

'AUSTIN -- A dramatic scene played out on the House floor Thursday when several female state representatives complained of a disrespectful and insensitive attitude toward women in the chamber.

The final straw for Rep. Senfronia Thompson, D-Houston, was fliers from the Texas Civil Justice League designed to lobby against an insurance bill. The fliers contend that amendments added to the bill would expand the "nanny state" in Texas. One flier featured a graphic depiction of a baby nursing from a woman's breast. Thompson mentioned more than once during her speech that her bill was about regulation of consolidated insurance programs and had nothing to do with women's issues.

...

Thompson repeatedly spoke directly to male House members, urging them to denounce such political messages.

"Men, if you don't stand up for us today, don't you walk in this chamber tomorrow," Thompson said.'

Ban on Circumcision Could Become Law in Santa Monica

Matt · 27 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SANTA MONICA, Calif. -- Circumcising a boy under the age of 18, even for religious reasons, may soon be against the law in Santa Monica.

A proposed ban on circumcision is already on the November ballot in San Francisco.

Now supporters of the MGM Bill, which stands for male genital mutilation, are hoping to do the same in Santa Monica.'

Court: Running over husband with SUV five times is not evidence of premeditated murder

Matt · 27 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Well, perhaps ten times would be premeditate then? The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court on Tuesday, May 24, in a rare use of its powers ruled that a women who ran over her husband five times with a minivan should not be convicted of first-degree murder according to the Boston Globe.

According to the court, apparently the woman's mental issues were responsible for the way she killed Richard Rutkowski. Even though the wife called her husband "retarded" and predicted killing him by saying something like: "You will be dead very soon", the court did not believe this was evidence of premeditation.

The wife began by throwing her husband's close out the window of a Palmer, Massachusetts building to the parking lot below. She then got into a minivan and drove over her husband who was standing in the parking lot. She then proceeded to back up and run over him again, about five times.'

"Lara Croft, the Navy SEAL? Maybe someday"

Broadsword · 27 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

All is not fair in war. The justifications used to keep women out of combat and special ops units are the same paternalistic, discriminatory excuses used in favor of upholding racial segregation in the military and, more recently, the “don’t ask, don’t tell” policy regarding gays and lesbians. In short, they have little to do with individual capability and reveal far more about ingrained ideas and misconceptions regarding psychology, sexuality and physiology.

...

Lastly, and perhaps most convincingly, there are the physical requirements. Special ops forces such as those in the SEAL program have to pass a screening test and then go through the notoriously difficult, six-month-long BUD/S (which stands for Basic Underwater Demolition/SEAL) training that has a staggeringly high attrition rate even among males. (About 80 percent of applicants drop out before training is completed.) But standards of physical fitness in women are rising rapidly. Joseph Collins, a former Army colonel and professor of national security strategy at the National War College, says that while teaching at West Point, although he and his fellow instructors could identify differences between men and women on physical tests, they were surprised by how quickly female athletic performance increased over time.

“Men do sort of have an absolute advantage over women in, say, upper-body strength, but the extent to which that really makes sense as an issue, I don’t know,” he says. “My sense is that there are some women who would love to challenge the forces and see if they could get through. And I know some who are so fit that they probably could.”

“The physical requirements are extreme,” concedes Lory Manning, a retired Navy captain and the director of the Women in the Military project of the Women’s Research and Education Institute. “But I know some women who could probably meet them, some very strong and fit women. Remember, we used to think women couldn’t go into space.”

Manning and Collins make a point of emphasizing that, if and when women are allowed to undergo BUD/S training, they’ll have to be held to the same physical standards as their male counterparts. Otherwise, Manning says dryly, “it would just be the ladies’ auxiliary.”

Chinese men find mortgages a prerequisite for marriage

Broadsword · 27 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Like many young men Yang had chosen to decorate his home with pictures of beautiful women - so far so predictable. What was intriguing were the other images - a series of flyers and posters advertising the "Water Villas of Beijing", luxury homes with huge stone columns, surrounded by fountains and pools - a stark contrast with Yang's current circumstances.

He is saving to buy himself an apartment but not just because he wants a nicer home. Here in China there is an intimate connection between Yang's two obsessions.

"If I don't own my own home", he explained to me, "no decent Chinese girl is ever going to consider marrying me."
...
Chinese women are very practical, he told me: "You need to have your own house to be an eligible bachelor, so I have to go through this to be able to afford it."

It is this link between owning property and finding a wife which is an issue for the world economy. It is a key reason why the Chinese save so much of their money. Chinese people save more than a third of their total incomes, way more than Americans, for example, who currently set aside just 5% of their incomes.

Many countries have been urging China to boost domestic demand. They want the Chinese government to persuade its citizens to save a little less and to spend a little more in the hope that they will buy more products from abroad. But so long as it is near impossible to find a wife without first buying a property, then it is going to take a lot to persuade young Chinese men like Yang Jiahe and Gong Benru to stop squirreling away their money.'

Canada: No consent in unconscious sex case, Supreme Court rules (even when consent is given beforehand)

Anonymous · 27 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'People cannot consent in advance to sexual activity that takes place while they are unconscious, the Supreme Court ruled Friday.

The closely watched case involved an Ottawa man and his live-in partner of nine years who engaged in erotic asphyxiation.

In a split 6-3 decision issued Friday, the court restored the man's conviction for sexual assault for performing a sex act on his girlfriend while she was unconscious.

"Parliament's definition of consent does not extend to advance consent to sexual acts committed while the complainant is unconscious," Chief Justice Beverley McLachlin wrote for the majority.

"The legislation requires ongoing, conscious consent to ensure that women and men are not the victims of sexual exploitation, and to ensure that individuals engaging in sexual activity are capable of asking their partners to stop at any point."
...
They also stressed the fact that the complainant approached the police only after a domestic squabble. She later recanted, which they claimed ought to have ended the matter. To the Crown, however, a recantation is a red flag often signalling that a woman has been pressured to drop her allegations.'

Also reported at CBC:
http://www.cbc.ca/news/canada/story/2011/05/27/pol-scoc-sex-consent.html

Microlender takes time to highlight male lendees

Matt · 28 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From an email from kiva.org, a microlender:

'Men are a minority on Kiva. The microfinance industry has always focused more on finding and funding women (which is great!) But with Father's Day around the corner, we want to focus on the men of Kiva.'

And then they highlighted some of the male lendees that are seeking loans.

With misandry as bad as it is and many organizations just plain scared to mention men much less point them out as clients (no fear when pointing out female clients, mind you-- the announcements are everywhere), I think Kiva.org deserves a round of applause. Please drop them an email using their contact form telling them you appreciate the effort at highlighting some of their male clients, especially around Father's Day, for many of these men are just trying to do what men have been at for millenia now-- be providers to wife and children, and often thanklessly so.

Why are so many female teachers having 'affairs' with their students?

anthony · 28 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is it all about the cougar effect?

Out of the dailymailco.uk comes an interesting article posing the question why are so many US female teachers having affairs with their students?

dailymailco.uk: As school years go, this one has been riddled with sex scandal.

But it’s not droves of male teachers who are being arrested and charged for having sex with their under-age students – it’s females.And as yet another young, female teacher is this week arrested for allegedly having sex with her 16-year-old student, the MailOnline asks: what’s happened to America’s female teachers?'

Female first to earn men's tour card

Matt · 29 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Good for her. But the bigger issue is this: Having men on the LPGA is forbidden, while women on the PGA is not. Need I go into detail about this and the many other similar double-standards? Male-only events and spaces: bad. Female-only events and spaces: good. About sums it up. Excerpt:

'Canada's Isabelle Beisiegel has become the first female golfer to earn a playing card on a men's professional tour.

The 32-year-old Montreal native finished equal ninth Friday in the Canadian Professional Golf Tour's Spring Qualifying School to take one of the last two nonexempt spots.

Beisiegel had a 4-under 68 in the third round, then closed with a 75 in rainy conditions to finish at 8-over 296. She opened with rounds of 75 and 78.

"I still can't believe it. It's a little overwhelming," Beisiegel said. "I went into today just trying not to get ahead of myself. I focused on thinking about where I was and not what could happen. I was assured in the fact that no matter what happened it was going to be OK."'

Ex-cop's wife says 'lying' rape accuser should be locked up

anthony · 29 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'They should lock her up and throw away the key.

The bitter wife of an NYPD cop who beat a rape rap sneered yesterday that her husband's accuser is a money-grubbing liar who should be jailed herself.

"She can go to hell," ranted Julia Moreno, wife of veteran cop Kenneth Moreno, 43, who was acquitted last week along with partner Franklin Mata, 29, after a sensational two-month trial.

"She should go to jail for this," the wife barked in a bitter attack sure to outrage the accuser's legions of supporters. "She had two days to make up this story with her lawyer friends before she went to the hospital."

Video evidence showed Moreno, a 17-year veteran, and Mata, who had three years on the force, helped the woman upstairs, spent seven minutes inside, and then returned three more times during the night to check on her. The pair, who used the woman's own key to get back inside, admitted in court to faking a 911 call in the accuser's neighborhood to cover up one of the return trips.

...

"I know him. He's the guy on the force that they call to take home partners' girlfriends when they're too drunk. He's trusted by everyone. He's been on the force 18 years without ever having any incident with women," she said.

Moreno and Mata face a June 28 sentencing, in which each could still face up to two years behind bars on the official-misconduct convictions.'

Man spends 27 years wrongly imprisoned writing songs

Matt · 29 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Thanks again to the Innocence Project! Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- Prison-issued toilet paper is what musician William Michael Dillon used to write down most of his songs, including "Black Robes and Lawyers," which has just been released on iTunes.

"I was arrested for murder on August 26, 1981, for a crime I didn't commit," Dillon tells his audience as he starts strumming his guitar. "I was released on November 18, 2008. Thank you to the keepers of justice."

According to Dillon, justice prevailed when he was released from prison after 27 years. He is now on the Innocence Project of Florida's list of 13 prisoners exonerated by DNA evidence.

It was Dillon's life story and not his music that moved Grammy Award winning music producer Jim Tullio to invite Dillon to his Chicago studio to record the songs he wrote in prison.'

Aspiring rap artist dies after being 'punched for $5 bet'... by 22-year-old woman who now faces charges over his death

Matt · 30 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is posted more as an object lesson: a woman's greatest strength is her veneer of weakness; a man's greatest weakness is his veneer of strength. Anyone who allows himself to be struck by anyone else for any amount of money is playing with fire. I doubt the woman who delivered the fatal blow will see any time from a conviction, given that the person who died was literally asking for it (but if she had been a he and vice versa, well, my prediction would then be different). Excerpt:

'A 22-year-old woman allegedly killed an aspiring rap singer with a single punch for a $5 party bet.

Tiffany Startz is accused of killing John 'Fatboy' Powell with a single blow to the face and has been told she has to stand trial.

The 25-year-old had agreed to be hit in the face by Starr in return for $5.

After being struck and collecting his money he walked away to talk with friends, only to collapse minutes later from a burst artery in his neck.

An autopsy ruled that he had died from a brain haemorrhage caused by blunt force trauma.
...
Startz, who is 5'5" and weighs 142lbs, was charged with reckless conduct and battery charges stemming from the incident last September in Joliet, Illinois.'

genderfairness.com: "1 in 4 women are sexually assaulted at your college? Didn't happen at mine."

anthony · 30 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Koss wanted to find out how extensive rape was in American colleges. Turns out there were not enough so she tried to convince come college women that because they had been drinking and had sex it was rape. Some of those same women kept on drinking with their rapists and being raped. Stupid women? Brutal men? Or just life in the fast lane when you are young?

Unwanted sexual attention is also included with rape to inflate numbers. OK, the nerd made a clumsy pass "You look great in those jeans, want to go out?" Unwanted. The handsome athletic student whose father owns a silver mine says "You look great in those jeans, want to go out?" And she goes. Most unwanted sexual attention is not about rape or sexual assault, just the wrong women at the wrong time with the wrong guy. Hardly a sex crime. And if women can't deal with that then how will they ever become fire-persons, police persons, and army persons?'

Crying Rape

Matt · 30 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'People often assume that self-described liberals are more supportive of due process than self-described conservatives. That certainly isn't the case when we talk about the illiberal bureaucrats who run the United States Department of Education.

The notion that an adult charged with a felony should be put on trial using the same standard of evidence used for someone who has been issued a parking ticket is absurd. In fact, it is more than absurd. It is offensive to well-established principles of due process and fundamental fairness.

Recently, however, the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) has announced new guidelines that will force due process to take a back seat to political correctness. These guidelines will apply to sexual harassment and felony sexual assault cases.

The OCR has decided to teach universities something they already know; namely, that sexual assault and sexual harassment are serious offenses. In the process, however, they are putting innocent students at risk of being wrongly convicted of offenses that could potentially destroy their careers and reputations.

According to the new OCR guidelines, any college that accepts federal funding or federal student loans (close to 100% of our nation's colleges) must now employ a "preponderance of the evidence" standard of proof in sexual harassment and sexual assault cases. This lowered standard replaces the traditionally accepted standard of proof beyond a reasonable doubt, which, according to most triers of fact, is close to 100% confidence of guilt. In contrast, "preponderance of evidence" means the campus judiciary only needs to be 50.01% confident that a person is guilty of a given offense – even if that offense is rape, which, regardless of degree, is always a serious felony.'

Newspaper sorry after its gallery of 'top 10 hottest female sex offenders' causes outrage

anthony · 30 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A newspaper has been forced to apologise after its list of the 'top 10 hottest sex offenders' caused an outcry.

The Houston Press yesterday published the article featuring who they believed were the 10 'hottest' women in a huge Texas-wide sex offender database.

Alongside the women's mugshots, the online article also listed the women's crimes and the age of their victims - one was as young as two years old.

The tone of the article was jokey and in most cases years old mugshots of the offenders were used.

It suggested readers may want to 'click the link' of the women before sending 'any marriage proposals' suggesting that they might not look quite as 'hot' now.

Unsurprisingly the article triggered a deluge of complaints from readers.'

Gaddafi snatch squads took hundreds of men and boys from Misrata

Matt · 30 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Anyone recall Secretary of State Clinton's claim that women have always been the primary victims of war? Read this. Oh, and this, too, then ask yourself just how misinformed/biased one has to be to come to this conclusion. Excerpt:

'The lifting of the siege of the embattled Libyan city of Misrata has revealed the disappearance of hundreds of people with many of them suspected victims of snatch squads loyal to the Gaddafi regime, relatives and rights workers said yesterday.

A desperate search has begun for "the disappeared", many of whom were reported to have been taken away to regime prisons or killed during some of the fiercest fighting of a three-month rebel uprising that has reduced parts of the city to rubble.

Witness accounts gathered by The Independent and rights groups indicate that there was a systematic attempt to kidnap men from parts of the city.'

Investigators: Polk deputy tied naked children to desk, beat them with paddle

anthony · 30 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Polk County sheriff's deputy filmed herself strapping naked children to a desk and spanking them with sex toys, then sent the videos to a boyfriend she met on a fetish website, investigators said.

On Thursday, 45-year-old Robin Leigh Pagoria was charged with aggravated child abuse, production of child pornography, promotion of child pornography and possession of child pornography.

According to an arrest report, the two children, described only as girls between the ages of 10 and 18, described in graphic detail multiple spanking sessions.

Investigators say Pagoria cut the legs off one end of the desk she used for the spanking. To keep the girls from moving, she handcuffed their arms and tied their ankles to the desk, deputies said.
...
Investigators said they found evidence of two videos on Pagoria's phone. In both, deputies said the victims' genitals and buttocks were the clear "focal point."

According to the Sheriff's Office, the videos were about 10 minutes long, and showed the children suffered "substantial" wounds. They could be heard screaming in the videos, investigators said.'

Judge, jury and executioner

Proud_to_be_a_man · 31 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. She claims to have been raped. He claims she was furious that he didn't want to settle down with her. I tend to believe him. And his penis was unable to be reattached. Sickening. Excerpt:

'A woman cut off a man's penis as he allegedly attempted to rape her and took it to a police station as evidence against him.

Monju Begum, 40, attacked the man in Bangladesh after he burst into her shack and reportedly launched his sex attack.

The victim then wrapped up the penis in polythene before handing it over to officers, police said.
...

The married father-of-five is expected to be arrested once he has recovered.
...
Speaking from hospital, Mr Mazi told the BBC he had been having an affair with the woman, who was his neighbour.

'We were having an affair and recently she suggested that both of us can go and settle down in Dhaka,' he said.

'I refused and told her that I cannot leave my wife and children, so she took revenge on me.'

Surgeons later tried to reattach the penis but they were unable to do so because several hours had passed before it was taken to the hospital.'

Petition to reject the proposed SaVE Act absent amendments to protect presumed innocence

Anonymous · 31 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'To the Members of the United States Congress:

The proposed Campus Sexual Violence Elimination Act (SaVE Act) (S.834) should be rejected unless it is amended to adequately protect the interests of the presumptively innocent who are accused of sexual assault and related offenses.

Although as a scientific matter, the frequency of false complaints of sexual assault and similar offenses to police or institutional authorities varies widely depending on the study and is impossible to state with precision, false reporting of such offenses is a significant problem to a distinct segment of the population.

The goal of holding sexual offenders accountable for their misconduct is one that is universally shared by all civilized people. However, the SaVE Act, in its present form, should be rejected because it unduly enhances the risk of holding innocent persons responsible for such offenses in furtherance of the objective to hold true offenders accountable.'

Feminism, Pt 3 - Manhood Criminalized

anthony · 31 May 2011 · Archived copy · Original

You can file this under female ally. Uploaded by christy0misty on Mar 7, 2011.

Gingrich Tells F & F Activists, Audience That Family Law System Has an ‘Extreme Anti-Male Bias’

Matt · 1 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A contingent of Fathers and Families’ Election Campaign 2012 activists attended the Portsmouth, New Hampshire Seacoast Republican Women’s Breakfast with Newt Gingrich on Wednesday. F & F member Deanna Marchand (pictured) asked Gingrich:

Family courts generally allow fit loving fathers only a few days a month with their children. This is not only harmful to children since it’s so important level of involvement by both parents in their lives, but it’s also a terrible civil rights violation when the government dictates how much time a father or mother can spend with his or her children. What are your thoughts on family court reform?

In response, Gingrich criticized the family law system for its “extreme anti-male bias.”

Gingrich added that he was “in favor of fathers having rights…We live in an age that is very different than 50 years ago and I think that it is very often very important…that we have a much greater sensitivity that both sides, both parents, both have rights and have responsibilities…”'

Boys, 7, punished for playing soldiers after teachers brand making pistol shapes with their fingers 'unacceptable'

anthony · 1 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Teachers reprimanded two seven-year-old boys for playing army games - because it amounted to 'threatening behaviour'.

The youngsters were disciplined after they were spotted making gun-shapes with their hands.

Staff at Nathaniel Newton Infant School in Nuneaton, Warks., even told the boys' parents to 'reprimand' them.

A father of one of the boys said: 'This is ridiculous. How can you tell a seven-year-old boy he cannot play guns and armies with his friends.'

All Systems 'GO' for False Allegation Awareness Month

Matt · 1 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Today is the first day of False Allegations Awareness Month, a time to spotlight the travesty of 2 million false allegations of domestic violence that are made every year against innocent persons.

In Washington DC, we're gearing up for tomorrow's False Allegations Summit, where we will release the results of the first-ever national survey of false abuse allegations. The Summit will also feature statements by stakeholder organizations such as the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers and the American Coalition for Fathers and Children. Wrapping up the event will be testimonies by persons who have themselves been falsely accused of abuse.

If you're in Washington DC tomorrow, drop by. We're at the Fairfax Hotel, 2100 Massachusetts Ave, NW, at the Dupont Circle Metro stop. The show begins at 1pm.

What do you have planned for False Allegations Awareness Month in your area? It's not too late to pass out flyers, distribute the press release (attached), or contact your newspaper editor. And check out all these FAAM resources: http://www.saveservices.org/false-allegations-awareness-month/

Attached press release:

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Teri Stoddard, 301-801-0608, tstoddard@saveservices.org

June 2 Summit to Probe Problem of False Allegations of Abuse

WASHINGTON / May 31, 2011 – Following the recent publication of a stunning Washington Post account of a Fairfax teacher falsely accused of sexual assault, the upcoming June 2 False Allegations Summit will highlight the problem of wrongful accusations.

At least 6 sympathetic editorials about false allegations of abuse were published following the Washington Post story.

The False Allegations Summit will be held June 2 at the Fairfax Hotel on Embassy Row, 1:00 to 4:00pm. The event will feature the findings of the first-ever national survey of false abuse allegations, statements by stakeholder organizations, and victim testimonies.

Presenting organizations will include the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, Home School Legal Defense Association, American Coalition for Fathers and Children, National Coalition for Men, and Encounters International.

Four victim statements will highlight the personal, social, and financial toll that a wrongful accusation can inflict. One of the victims testifying at the Summit will be Cheryl Shanks of New Jersey, who was falsely accused of abuse by her former immigrant husband so he could obtain a Green Card.

"Standards of proof have become so diminished that anyone can file a claim and destroy the good reputation of an innocent person," recounts SAVE spokesman Philip Cook. "And the real victims of abuse, the persons who are desperate for help, find themselves squeezed out in the process."

The Summit is the kick-off to False Allegations Awareness Month in June. More information on the observance can be seen here: http://www.saveservices.org/false-allegations-awareness-month/

The Washington Post investigation documented repeated instances of misconduct by the lead detective in the Fairfax County case. The story, "Falsely Accused Teacher Fights to Reclaim Life," published on May 15, 2011, can be viewed here:

http://www.washingtonpost.com/local/fairfax-teacher-sean-lanigan-still-suffering-from-false-molestation-allegations/2011/03/04/AFVwhh3G_story.html

About 2 million false or trivial allegations of domestic violence are made each year, according to a SAVE report:
http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/False-DV-Allegations-Cost-20-Billion

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is a victim advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to partner abuse: www.saveservices.org

Canada: Boy abducted 7 years ago found in U.S.

Matt · 1 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A boy allegedly abducted seven years ago in Grand Forks, B.C., has been found with a woman in Chandler, Ariz., police say, according to a published media report.

The child, Valor Heath Howell, now 10, and the woman were located in a Chandler laundromat after police were called about a woman creating a disturbance.

The woman is believed to be the boy's mother, the report from Phoenix broadcaster KPHO quotes police as saying.

When police arrived and questioned the woman, they found out she is connected to a missing child report and the child with her is the victim, according to the report.'

Christina Hoff Sommers: Feminism by Treaty: Why CEDAW is Still a Bad Idea

anthony · 1 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On November 18, 2010, a surprisingly large and boisterous crowd gathered in a U.S. Senate chamber to witness new hearings on a decades-old United Nations treaty. Guards had to caution the excited attendees to keep their voices down. Senator Richard Durbin, chair of the Senate Subcommittee on Human Rights and the Law, requested that another room be opened to accommodate the large gathering of feminist leaders, human-rights activists, lawyers, lobbyists, and journalists. "Women have been waiting for 30 years," said Durbin in his opening statement. "The United States should ratify this treaty without further delay."

The treaty in question — the Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) — commits signatory nations not only to eliminating discrimination but also to ensuring women's "full development and advancement" in all areas of public and private life. The document was adopted by the General Assembly and submitted to UN member states in 1979. Since then, nearly every nation has ratified what many now call the "Women's Bill of Rights" or the "Women's Magna Carta." The only holdouts are three Islamic countries (Iran, Sudan, and Somalia), a few Pacific islands — and the United States. "Look at the company we are keeping in refusing to ratify this treaty," said a dismayed Senator Durbin. "We can do better."

...

Helms's watch is now long over, and treaty supporters can see daylight. President Barack Obama and Vice President Joe Biden are strong supporters. So are key Senators John Kerry, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and Barbara Boxer, chairwoman of the subcommittee with jurisdiction over it. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton is an enthusiast, as is Harold Koh, former dean of the Yale Law School and now the State Department's chief legal adviser. An influential advocate of "transnational jurisprudence," Koh invokes the sad irony that "more than half a century after Eleanor Roosevelt pioneered the drafting of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, her country still has not ratified . . .CEDAW."

...

The question the Senate has to consider is not, as Chairman Durbin suggested at the November hearing, "Should the United States stand with oppressed women of the world?" Of course we should, and we do. No nation on earth gives more to foreign aid or has more philanthropies and religious groups dedicated to women's causes. Voters across the political divide welcome innovative programs to help women struggling with repressive governments and barbaric traditions such as child marriage, dowry burnings, genital cutting, and honor killings. What the senators have to answer are two more basic questions. One, is CEDAW a necessary and worthy addition to an already vibrant national effort to help the world's women? Two, for better or worse, how will ratification affect American life?

...

Even more telling, the UN Division on the Advancement of Women, the agency that monitors the treaty's implementation, is emphatic that the document is obligatory, not hortatory: "Countries that have ratified or acceded to the Convention are legally bound to put its provisions into practice." Moreover, many American legislators — and judges — will sincerely feel we are obligated to bring our laws in line with a treaty we have agreed to honor.

But, according to the ABA and Amnesty, as well as Durbin, Biden, Boxer, and Koh, these arcane questions of international law are irrelevant. Because American laws are already in full or near-full compliance with the treaty, it will have few if any domestic consequences. This argument brings us to the most striking feature of the discussion: the treaty's most engaged and knowledgeable proponents — activist women's groups — disagree with the for-export-only argument emphasized by public officials and human-rights groups like Amnesty. NOW, the Feminist Majority Foundation, and their sister organizations actually agree with conservative critics that CEDAW would have a dramatic impact on American laws and practices.

...
If the United states ratifies CEDAW there will be a three-ring circus each time we come up for review. American laws, customs, and private behavior will be evaluated by 23 UN gender ministers to see whether they comply with a feminist ideal that is 30 years out of date. The Committee will pounce on all facets of American life that fail to achieve full gender integration. That many American mothers stay home with children or work part-time will be at the top of their list of "discriminatory practices." Committee members like Cuba's Magalys Arocha Dominguez will want to know what our government has done to change our patterns of behavior. The American delegation will then enter a "consultative dialogue" with the Committee to develop appropriate remedies.

They will get plenty of help from organizations like now, the Feminist Majority, and the American Association of University Women. Groups of which Americans know little or nothing will take CEDAW as a legal mandate to implement their worldview. If ratified, the treaty would give these organizations a license to sue, reeducate, and resocialize their fellow citizens. Gender quotas, comparable-worth pay policies, state-subsidized daycare, and other initiatives that have failed again and again to win democratic support would instantly be transformed into universal human rights. And the women's groups would have new allies: UN officials and international NGOs would join them in cultivating American pastures under the legal and moral authority of the Women's Treaty.
...
CEDAW contains many worthy and indeed noble declarations, but its key provisions are 1970s feminism preserved in diplomatic amber. Releasing those aged provisions in 21st-century America would be strange at best, and at worst they could seriously compromise the privacy, well-being, and basic freedoms of Americans. At the November hearing, Senator Durbin called on his colleagues to "ratify this treaty without further delay." For the past 31 years, our legislators have wisely delayed ratification. Today's Senate should continue to follow that example.'

"The sea lion solution to sexual harrassment: keep fewer males around"

anthony · 1 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

“Most colonial pinnipeds [fin-footed animals] form extreme clusters of breeding females that cannot be entirely explained by the distribution of sites for reproduction. Avoidance of male harassment has been postulated as an important determinant of reproductive aggregation in this group of mammals. Female gregariousness can reduce harassment by resident males by two mechanisms; directly by the ‘dilution effect’ or indirectly because resident males that defend large female groups are less harassing. In order to investigate the relationship between male harassment and female gregariousness in relation to the size of breeding groups, we analysed the behaviour of dominant males and their females in a breeding colony of Otaria flavescens. Females in large breeding groups received less harassment by resident males due to dilution effects and because males that defended a large group interacted less frequently with females than males with small groups.”

Reuters: 'Power, sex and conventional wisdom'

anthony · 2 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the first public comments on the Schwarzenegger affair came from a prominent woman, former Michigan governor Jennifer Granholm, who suggested it showed that the United States needed more female politicians. “Another guy guv admits 2 cheating on his wife. Maybe we need more women governors. Guys: keep ur pants zipped,” she tweeted.

The message reflects conventional wisdom – men are more prone to sexual misbehavior and adultery than women. “I’m confident predicting there would be fewer sex scandals if women were in power,” former White House Press Secretary Dee Dee Myers wrote in her 2008 book “Why Women Should Rule the World.”
...
A study by Dutch researchers comes to a different conclusion – power, not gender, is the main driver of infidelity.

“Power … increases infidelity among women as it does among men,” according to the study, by a team from the universities of Tilburg and Groningen. Its findings suggest that “women in high-power positions are as likely to engage in infidelity than men.”'

Police: Mom Charged For Beating Kid Who Ate Her Pot

anthony · 2 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Tampa, Florida - A Tampa mother is behind bars after beating her one-year-old child for eating her marijuana.

Tampa Police say India Couch, 22, faces drug and felony child abuse charges. Investigators say the child was left unsupervised, found the pot in her mother's purse and ate an undisclosed amount of the drug.

Police said after Couch realized what the child had done, she beat the child with a sandal. They said she also hit the toddler hard enough to leave welts.'

Rihanna shown murdering rapist in music video

Minuteman · 2 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Another contrived bit of "entertainment" where a male gets exactly what it deserves. Link to article here. Excerpt:

'Rihanna's new promo for Man Down has come under attack from activists at a TV parents group for graphically depicting the murder of a rapist.

The singer, who was beaten in 2009 by her then-boyfriend Chris Brown, premiered the video on US cable network BET on Tuesday.

In the promo the singer shoots a man at a railway station. A series of flashback images then show her grappling with him outside a nightclub as he tries to attack her.

Rihanna took to Twitter after the premiere to address the "underlying message" of the video, warning young female fans to stay safe and beware of predatory men.
...
"If Chris Brown shot a woman in his new video and BET premiered it, the world would stop. Rihanna should not get a pass," a PTC representative adds.'

"Missing men" and the job market

Matt · 2 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Read this carefully and you are bound to note a number of interesting things. Excerpt:

'Longer-term trends are working to keep the participation rate down. The Congressional Budget Office expects the participation rate to fall steadily to 63 percent by 2021 as baby boomers retire.

The share of men 20 and older in the labor force peaked long ago, at 89 percent in 1952. It's been falling ever since and is now under 74 percent.

...

The share of women working or looking for work, after expanding from the early 1950s through the mid '90s, has plateaued at about 60 percent, where it was in April. The CBO notes that more women with high-income husbands and those with young children have been staying out of the job market.'

Massachusetts Governor Patrick refuses display of banner honoring fathers

Matt · 2 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What you won't hear in the media, is now he has kicked fathers again where it hurts. Patrick taking a cue his buddy, also from Chicago, Obama, who denigrated fathers at least on two Father's Days in the past with his speeches, has really done something truly inexplicable.

Massachusetts Governor Deval Patrick has refused a request to hang a banner in the Massachusetts State House honoring fathers this coming Fathers Day.'

SAVE: 11% Falsely Accused of Abuse, Survey Shows

Matt · 2 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Teri Stoddard, tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

11% Falsely Accused of Abuse, Survey Shows

WASHINGTON / June 2, 2011 – A national survey of 10,000 Americans reveals 11% report they have been falsely accused of abuse. The first-ever survey of its type probed persons' first-hand experiences with false allegations of child abuse, domestic violence, and sexual abuse. The study was commissioned by Stop Abusive and Violent Environments, a victim advocacy organization.

The survey results headlined a False Allegations Summit, which was held today at the Fairfax Hotel in Washington, DC.

Conducted May 2-4, 2011, the survey also found 15% of respondents personally knew someone who has been falsely accused of abuse. In 81% of the cases the falsely accused person was a male, and in 70% of cases the false alleger was a female. Twenty-six percent of the wrongful accusations were made in the context of a child custody dispute.

"This survey shows tens of millions of Americans have been falsely accused of abuse," explains SAVE spokesperson Natasha Spivack, "These persons were stamped with the scarlet Abuser label, leaving them to wonder whatever happened to the notion of 'innocent until proven guilty'."

The Summit featured statements by leading stakeholder organizations, including the National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, Home School Legal Defense Association, American Coalition for Fathers and Children, National Coalition for Men, and Encounters International.

The National Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers statement spotlighted the "immense, often irreparable harm caused to our clients by false allegations, not only to reputation and personal relationships, but often to the accused individual's livelihood and even heath."

The Summit also included the emotion-wrought testimonies by four victims of false allegations of abuse.

The False Allegations Summit is being held in the wake of a recent Washington Post front-page article about Sean Lanigan, a local school teacher who was falsely accused of sexual molestation by a 12-year-old student. The article triggered editorial commentaries and citizens' expressions of disbelief and outrage.

The full survey results can be viewed here: http://www.saveservices.org/false-allegations-awareness-month/survey-results/. The False Allegations Summit is the kick-off to False Allegations Awareness Month in June. More information on the observance can be found here: http://www.saveservices.org/false-allegations-awareness-month/.

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is a victim advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to partner abuse: www.saveservices.org

Disparate sentencing in Jaycee Dugard case

Matt · 2 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. He earned every year he got sentenced to and has no business ever getting released from jail. But his wife who is as far as any reasonable person can see as guilty as he is gets only 36 years in jail, which with "good behavior" will probably become something substantially less. Excerpt:

'PLACERVILLE, Calif. -- A serial sex offender was ordered Thursday to spend the rest of his life in prison after the California woman he kidnapped, raped and held captive for 18 years said he and his wife-accomplice had stolen her life.

Victim Jaycee Dugard was 11 when she was abducted by Phillip and Nancy Garrido as her stepfather watched her walk toward a school bus. She gave birth to two daughters fathered by Garrido while he held her in a secret backyard compound.
...

Garrido, who was on parole for a 1976 rape when Dugard was abducted, pleaded guilty to kidnapping and 13 sexual assault charges, including six counts of rape and seven counts of committing lewd acts captured on video.

His plea was part of a deal with prosecutors that saw Nancy Garrido sentenced to 36 years to life after pleading guilty to kidnapping and rape.
...
In the statement, Dugard called Phillip Garrido a liar and said what Nancy Garrido did to her was evil. She said she hoped both of them would have as many sleepless nights as she had.

"There is no God in the universe that would condone your actions," Dugard said in a portion of the statement directed to Nancy Garrido.
...
Dugard was grabbed by Nancy Garrido from the South Lake Tahoe street where her family lived and forced into a car driven by Phillip Garrido on June 10, 1991. The abduction occurred as Dugard's stepfather watched her walk to a school bus stop.'

"Accomplished feminist" now executive editor of the NY Times

Matt · 2 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Well, according to Eleanor Smeal, anyway. You thought the Times had a sort-of-kind-of feminist bent before? Hold onto your hats! Well, we'll see, I guess. In any case, congratulations to Ms. Abramson and good luck to her in her new position. (She has a lot of challenges in front of her getting the Times competitive in a digital -- ie, free -- news age. And indeed, the Times is not alone in this.)

'Statement by Eleanor Smeal, Publisher of Ms. and President of the Feminist Majority:

The selection of Jill Abramson, an accomplished feminist, as executive editor of The New York Times, which is not only the most influential newspaper in the United States, but also the premier online news platform, smashes a barrier to women's achievement in print and digital media.

This is all the more important because it comes at a time when women's rights are under attack in Congress and state legislatures. Additionally, women are still only one-third of executive editors and one-fifth of presidents, publishers and CEOs of major U.S. newspapers. Globally, women hold only 27 percent of top news management positions. Hopefully the elevation of Jill Abramson to the pinnacle of The New York Times will spur the advancement of women in management throughout the industry.'

NY Times article: http://www.nytimes.com/2011/06/03/business/media/03paper.html
Wikipedia article: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Jill_Abramson

June is Men's Health Month

Minuteman · 3 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

And the Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality is here to remind you that your problems are all your own fault. Link here.

'Learn the Facts

When you get a preventive medical test, you're not just doing it for yourself. You're doing it for your family and loved ones:

* Men are 24 percent less likely than women to have visited a doctor within the past year and are 22 percent more likely to have neglected their cholesterol tests.
* Men are 28 percent more likely than women to be hospitalized for congestive heart failure.
* Men are 32 percent more likely than women to be hospitalized for long-term complications of diabetes and are more than twice as likely than women to have a leg or foot amputated due to complications related to diabetes.

* Men are 24 percent more likely than women to be hospitalized for pneumonia that could have been prevented by getting an immunization.

The single most important way you can take care of yourself and those you love is to actively take part in your health care. Educate yourself on health care and participate in decisions with your doctor. This site will help you get started.

Source: Healthcare Cost & Utilization Project and Medical Expenditure Panel Survey data.'

"The Blue Pimpernel" Reveals How Women´s Shelter In Sweden Works

Anonymous · 3 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Translated blog post here. Excerpt:

"Since the early 2000s, I work part time at a shelter in mid-Sweden. And it is part of the task for the job to try to tilt and twist the facts to help women against their ex-men. Most women, indeed virtually all my colleagues and people on the board, are totally unscrupulous and unconscionable, and men openly to make every effort to get former men / cohabiting couple convicted of incest, pedophilia, rape, women and child abuse, plus it is then either nothing morally wrong with the kidnapping of children by fathers sentenced to custody / visitation with."

Original story here.

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Spanking, DV, and anti-father laws

Anonymous · 3 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But now we have rampant fatherlessness, (Mattapan Shootings) and glorify single mothers and feminism.
...
Now before you get all excited, I'm talking about reasonable punishment, not serious abuse. However, where we draw the line is getting more and more blurred.

In my opinion that line is getting pushed more and more too far to the "teaching" and "time-out" side. A screaming two-year-old is not in a classroom nor is she a lawyer, but I see plenty of folks in the supermarket, church or fancy restaurants addressing them as if they are equals a the Harvard University Debating Society.

Sometimes it's hard for me to figure out who needs the spanking more, parent or child.
...

By the way, in Massachusetts, they have a name for it, it's called "Wine, Dine, and two-oh-nine" as in Chapter 209 A for the liberal application of "domestic abuse" petitions where a woman can get a restraining order against just about any male for merely leaving the toilet seat up. Often where no real abuse has occurred but merely to gain the upper hand in divorce, alimony or determination of child custody arrangements and the attendant financial benefits.
...
In summary, some kids, not all, some times, not for each act, need a gentle spanking once in a while, hopefully from a responsible live-at-home father not an out-of-control, emotional single mom who has to balance work and child raring with laundry and shopping.

What do you think?'

Project Males symposium June 24 on the Decline of Latino Males in Education

Anonymous · 4 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

There is still time to sign up & support for this symposium. In addition to focusing on Latino males specifically, this group often presents statistics, data, and new perspectives on the decline of men of all races in college. An acquaintance of mine is on the team spearheading this project, and from what I have seen I know that they are doing a lot of good work. The aims of the group, as cited from their website:

"To explore innovative ways to establish mentoring links between Latino male role models, current UT Latino male students, and younger Latino males within the Austin area and surrounding communities. The Project will be inter-generational, and it will have a strong focus on leadership development, community engagement, and service, all of which research suggest are critical to the academic success and retention of male students of color in both secondary and post-secondary education."

Good minds, and more importantly good hearts, are working on this project. Feel free to lend them your support.

- Gogonostop

Efforts to Ban Circumcision Gain Traction in California

Matt · 5 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SANTA MONICA, Calif. — When a group of activists proposed banning circumcision in San Francisco last fall, many people simply brushed them aside. Even in that liberal seaside city, it seemed implausible that thousands of people would support an effort to outlaw an ancient ritual that Jews and Muslims believe fulfills a commandment issued by God.

But last month, the group collected the more than 7,100 signatures needed to get a measure on the fall ballot that would make it illegal to snip the foreskin of a minor within city limits. Now a similar effort is under way in Santa Monica to get such a measure on the ballot for November 2012.

If the anticircumcision activists (they prefer the term “intactivists”) have their way, cities across the country may be voting on whether to criminalize a practice that is common in many American hospitals. Activists say the measures would protect children from an unnecessary medical procedure, calling it “male genital mutilation.”'

Safeway raising money for prostate cancer during June

fondueguy · 6 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Safeway shoppers and employees joined together each year in June to raise money to fund critical research programs aimed at finding a cure for prostate cancer. By making donations when shopping at local stores, the fundraising program is making a huge impact, raising $50 million since it began in 2000.
...
"Prostate cancer has a 90 percent cure rate. Screenings, early detection and education can save lives," said Safeway Chairman, President and Chief Executive Officer Steve Burd. "During the month of June we hope to make a difference by not only encouraging screenings, but by raising funds to help find a cure for this disease."'

More info: Supposedly you will see a small sign above the credit card swipe saying that 1 in 6 men are diagnosed with prostate cancer and when you check out you will be asked if you want to donate.

Also, last year Safeway raised $11.6 million.

US: Women behind 95% of Sexual Misconduct in Juvenile Facilities

Anonymous · 6 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Translated article here. Article in original Swedish here. Excerpt:

U.S Department of Justice, Bureau of Justice Statistics, Special Report: Sexual Victimization in Juvenile Facilities Reported by Youth, 2008-09

'Highlights
...
- Approximately 95% of all youth reporting staff sexual misconduct said they had been victimized by female staff".'

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Widow is raising awareness of the penile cancer which killed her husband

Proud_to_be_a_man · 6 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This fine woman is spreading the word about the horrors her poor husband went through when diagnosed with penile cancer. It's true about the lack of support for male cancers here in the UK. A woman gets a pimple on her breast and she's almost mobbed by agencies wanting to support her etc., etc. A man gets penile cancer and he's virtually told 'Oh, it'll have to be chopped off, but here's a leaflet to explain it all...' Excerpt:

'To mark male cancer awareness month Health Wales and Tenovus have joined forces to encourage men to be aware of the signs and symptoms of cancer. In the first of four articles, Health Editor Madeleine Brindley spoke to Wendy Gane about her husband's dying wish to spread the word about penile cancer

MIKE GANE was a private man but he was adamant he wanted his wife of 15 years Wendy to raise awareness of the disease that killed him.

Six months after his death, Wendy is doing just that – she wants men and the medical profession to know about penile cancer and she wants better services for the small numbers of men who are diagnosed with the disease every year.

“He said you have to do this because of the other men who could suffer after him,” the 52-year-old said.'

In Making Campuses Safe for Women, a Travesty of Justice for Men

Matt · 6 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'American courts take exacting precautions to avoid convicting an innocent person of a crime. It was therefore startling to read the April 4, 2011, directive on sexual violence sent by the U.S. Department of Education's assistant secretary for civil rights, Russlynn H. Ali, to college officials across the country. In an effort to make campuses safe and equitable for women, Ali, with the full support of her department, advocates procedures that are unjust to men.
...
"We will use all of the tools at our disposal including ... withholding federal funds ... to ensure that women are free from sexual violence," Ali told NPR last year. One such tool is the standard of proof that college disciplinary committees use when determining guilt. Many colleges employ a "beyond a reasonable doubt" or a "clear and convincing" standard. (Roughly speaking, "beyond a reasonable doubt" requires a 98-percent certainty of guilt; clear and convincing, an 80-percent certainty.) Ali, however, orders all colleges to adopt the far-less-demanding standard of "preponderance of the evidence." Using that standard, a defendant can be found guilty if members of a disciplinary committee believe there is slightly more than a 50/50 chance that he committed the crime. That standard will make it far easier for disciplinary committees to try, convict, and punish an accused student (almost always a male).'

Jilted ex-boyfriend puts up abortion billboard

el cid · 7 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This story tells of a man who protested the abortion of his child by putting up a billboard. The woman is complaining it's a violation of her right to privacy. The issue I find interesting is not abortion but whether the woman can deny the man his right to express his opinion. Perhaps more interesting are the comments. One issue being discussed is whether men should have any reproductive rights. A lot of man-haters are saying no. Excerpt:

"A New Mexico man's decision to lash out with a billboard ad saying his ex-girlfriend had an abortion against his wishes has touched off a legal debate over free speech and privacy rights.

The sign on Alamogordo's main thoroughfare shows 35-year-old Greg Fultz holding the outline of an infant. The text reads, "This Would Have Been A Picture Of My 2-Month Old Baby If The Mother Had Decided To Not KILL Our Child!"

Fultz's ex-girlfriend has taken him to court for harassment and violation of privacy. A domestic court official has recommended the billboard be removed.'

But Fultz's attorney argues the order violates his client's free speech rights.

Voodoo mom sentenced to 17 years in prison for burning daughter

Matt · 7 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A monster mom tried to soften her tale of setting a six-year-old daughter on fire in a voodoo ritual even as she pleaded guilty to the "barbaric" crime today — but a Queens judge would have none of it as he coaxed the truth from her and then sentenced the woman to 17 years behind bars.

Marie Lauradin, 29, pleaded guilty to assault last month for setting little Frantzcia Saintil on fire in a ritual called "Loa." But in a pre-sentencing report she changed her story, saying she was merely "rubbing [Frantzcia] down with alcohol because she was sick with fever when a nearby candle fell and set her on fire."
...
"Did you douse your child with accelerant and light her on fire?" the judge said as he began to quiz Lauradin about what happened to the little girl.

"Yes," she said through an interpreter.

"The only demonic presence this child had to worry about was her mother," the judge said, lashing into her.'

Australia: Mother put drug in son's bottle: court

Minuteman · 8 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'An Adelaide woman allegedly killed her sick five-year-old son by putting methadone in his cordial bottle, a court has heard.

The 44-year-old woman appeared at the Holden Hill Magistrates court on Wednesday charged with manslaughter and administering prescription medication to the boy.

Police prosecutor Jessica Esplin said the woman's two older sons, aged 15 and 16, had told police their mother had given their younger brother the drug during the night after mother and child had been coughing.

"(The older boy) states that some time during the morning he woke with his mother yelling...(that) his brother was not breathing," she said.'

Australia: Baby killer said she was a 'bad mother'

Minuteman · 8 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who drowned her two-year-old daughter in a Sydney river had thought she was a bad mother and wanted to die with the child, a judge has been told.

After the drowning, the woman asked officers: "Do I get to go to jail soon? I deserve to be locked up forever."

The woman, who suffers from a mental illness, pleaded guilty in the NSW Supreme Court on Wednesday to the manslaughter of her two-year-old daughter in March 2010.
...
"Help me, help me, I've killed my daughter," she said to a man walking past with a mobile phone. He ignored her and kept going.'

Woman Pushing to Ban Circumcision in California City Drops Proposal

anthony · 8 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The proponent of a ballot measure to ban circumcision in a California city has dropped the effort following claims of anti-Semitic themes and imagery, including a comic book that featured a "Monster Mohel."

Jena Troutman, the Santa Monica woman who submitted the proposal to the Santa Monica city clerk last month, said she has withdrawn the measure to prohibit "Genital Cutting of Male Minors." ...

Troutman, a lactation consultant and mother of two, told FoxNews.com that her focus was "never about religion" when she submitted the initiative, which was written by a San Diego-based group called MGMbill.org, the same organization that authored the measure to ban circumcision that will appear on the ballot in San Francisco this November.
...
"I respect and appreciate the Jewish religion and people's delicate feelings about their religious customs," she said, adding that she originally sought a religious exemption for the proposed ban but ultimately declined to include one since it would have been unconstitutional.

Still, "bodily integrity and genital autonomy" are human rights, she said.'

High School Teacher Accused Of Sexting Students

anthony · 8 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MUNHALL (KDKA) — A Steel Valley high school teacher is accused of sexting her male students.

Many of the messages 29-year-old Jennifer Smith is accused of sending to students are just too graphic to outline.

Police say she asked the five male students to erase the photos and the messages.

...

Police uncovered a message from the youngest boy in the criminal complaint. Smith allegedly sent him a text that she, “was thinking about him and missed him and that he looked sexy at baseball practice.”

The language grew more explicit, saying she, “wanted to perform oral sex on him after school in her class and have sex with him over her desk.”'

Presidential Candidate Johnson Tells F & F Activists, Audience That Family Law System ‘Is Ripe for Reform’

Matt · 8 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A contingent of Fathers and Families’ Election Campaign 2012 activists attended two New Hampshire GOP events over the weekend and asked presidential candidate Gary Johnson, a former two-term governor of New Mexico, about family court reform.

In Nashua on June 5, Johnson told F & F activists Roy Corbeil, a grandfather, and Seth Diamond:

“Anything I could do on the federal level I would do, as president, to address [this] real inequality. I recognize it, having been Governor of New Mexico. It’s a huge issue…the courts rule…usually [if not] always against the fathers…[in these rulings, fathers rights'] are obliterated, they’re nonexistent. I recognize that…I’m open to ideas [on fixing it].”'

April 6 Male Studies Conference videos

Matt · 8 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

With growing failures of males in education, staggering problems within our legal system regarding males, ever-increasing disproportionate suicides of males and continuing marginalization of males, we've never needed your help as much as we do now, to continue our work toward a better future. Our upcoming 2012 conference will tackle many solutions to improving the state of males in our society. And our goal of placing a Chair of Male Studies at a major university is a strong priority. But we need your support. Please consider donating as much as you can to help us. Visit http://www.malestudies.org/donate.html.

Meanwhile, all our efforts have paid off - we now have professionally-edited, high-quality videos of our Conference that took place at the Academy of Medicine on April 6. This footage includes the presenters as well as their slides.

As promised, I will continue following up with the presenters to acquire all the responses to your questions during the conference.

Thank you for your patience and consideration, and for staying by our side.

You can view the videos here:

Conference part 1 - http://www.vimeo.com/23289124
Conference part 2 - http://www.vimeo.com/23294130

Feel free to share.

Israel: Fathers file petition against Israel in UNHRC

Matt · 8 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Five fathers who feel they have been systematically denied their basic human rights by the Israeli authorities and the justice system during long and drawn-out custody battles with the mothers of their children filed a petition with the United Nations Human Rights Council on Monday against the State of Israel.

The five individual complaints, which all detail years of court rulings and decisions by the authorities to deny or limit the fathers' access to their children, were filed collectively by the Coalition for Children and Family Israel (CCF), a non-profit organization that unites several bodies engaged in fighting for father's rights.

Collectively, the petitions allege that Israel's family laws and practices violate international conventions, deny men involved in divorce cases their basic human rights and accuse state-run authorities and courts of purposely disengaging fathers from their children.'

Woman admits false rape report

anthony · 9 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

A Braidwood woman, who falsely claimed she was raped and kidnapped last year pleaded guilty Wednesday to disorderly conduct.
...
Partyka told Manhattan police she was abducted and raped, according to court documents.

She actually got into a fight with her boyfriend at a Manhattan bar and didn't return home until two days later, when she made the false report to police, according to a spokesman for the state's attorney's office.'

Mothers struggle against gender gap in schools

anthony · 9 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tammy Mobley's son and daughter both attend college. But while Mobley is equally proud of both children, the Ross resident acknowledges that getting into college was much more difficult for her son than for her daughter.

That's not because her son is any less intelligent or hard-working than her daughter, said Mobley, the co-chairwoman of the Marin Moms of Boys Initiative. She believes his difficulties arose because modern methods of education favor students who can sit still, stay on task and keep track of many assignments at the same time.

In other words, she says, education favors girls.

"I noticed, when my daughter was in the eighth grade and my son was in the sixth, that they were having completely different experiences at school," Mobley said. "Girls have a desire to please. They have no trouble asking for help. And to be successful in school these days, you need to be organized. All of that came easily to my daughter, but was not as natural for either of my sons."

Mobley and the other members of her group say they've been inspired to act in part by the efforts of the Boys Initiative, a new national campaign to address a perceived gender gap in academic achievement and social adjustment. The project has been spearheaded by Mill Valley resident Warren Farrell, author of seven books on men's and women's issues and chairman of the Commission to Create a White House Council on Boys to Men.'

The invisible domestic violence – against men

anthony · 9 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If the empirical research is correct in suggesting that between a quarter and half of all domestic violence victims are men, a question follows: why has women's domestic violence towards men been unreported for so long, and what has changed in the last five years to make it more visible?

One reason may be the feminist movement. Feminism took up the cause of domestic abuse of women in the 1970s, with the world's first women's refuge being opened by Erin Pizzey in 1971. Feminism understood domestic violence as the natural extension of men's patriarchal attitudes towards women, leading men to feel they had the right to control their partners, using violence if necessary. Feminists campaigned successfully to bring the issue into the public arena, thereby securing resources to establish services to help victims. This activism and advocacy led to governmental and public acceptance that "domestic violence" was synonymous with violence against women.'

Gov. Deval Patrick: Still Snubbing Dad

MikeTrueman · 10 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Blog posting here. Excerpt:

'"With little more than a week to go before Father's Day the Patrick administration's lead officials still refuse to give the ok to a Father's Day banner at the State House. The latest excuse according to those who have called his State House office is that the banner did not meet the 'standards' required. In fact, we were told the banner and the Father's Day message was fine by John Billera, head of the Bureau of State Office Buildings, but that The Fatherhood Coalition was 'political' and political signs are banned. Nothing could be further from the truth as both the organization (a non-profit not allowed to engage in political activities), and the Father's Day message are anything but political. Gov. Patrick's refusal to honor fathers is thus inexplicable.
...
Gov. Patrick's number is 1 888 870-7770 or 617 725-4005. Inquiries are best directed to Mr. Mo Cowan, chief of staff.'

Russell Crowe on circumcision: 'barbaric and stupid'

Broadsword · 10 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Russell Crowe caused a Twitter row this morning when he declared circumcision was 'barbaric and stupid'.
...
The Oscar winner, who is currently on holiday in Italy, staunchly defended his viewpoint as he was bombarded with both criticism and praise by his followers.
...
He finally attempted to finish the row by reiterating his views: 'I will always stand for the perfection of babies, I will always believe in God, not man's interpretation of what God requires.

'Last of it, if you feel it is your right to cut things off your babies please unfollow and fk off, I'll take attentive parenting over barbarism."

Why Men Are Prey To Investment Fraud

Matt · 10 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Rarely do you see a video like this one. It speaks the plain truth about a topic not much discussed. Especially in this day and age, it can be easy to start seeing dollar signs when a smooth talker comes along. Don't let yourself fall victim to another Bernie Madoff type of scam artist just because society expects you to be Richie Rich in grown-up duds.

Two women accused of threatening to accuse man of rape if he didn't give them car

Luek · 11 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. These felons got released on their on recognizance. It is vital that men and boys in this area of the state watch out for these criminals and don't fall prey to them. Excerpt:

'POTSDAM -- Two Potsdam women are accused of threatening to falsely accuse a man of rape if he didn't give them a car.

Village police say that Christine L. Laraby, 45, and Miranda L. Laraby, 17, threatened a man that they would report to police that he had physically abused and raped Miranda Laraby if he did not sign over his vehicle to the defendants with a note saying that they had paid him $500 cash for it.

Police say the defendants subsequently took possession of the man's 1997 Subaru Legacy.'

Police warn of teen girls committing strong arm robberies

Matt · 11 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Funny, I wonder why the picture they are using is of a man trying to snatch a purse from a woman rather than a girl trying to rob another girl, or at least something looking like that? Excerpt:

'CHICAGO Police have issued a community alert on the Southwest Side warning residents of strong arm robberies committed by two 16-year-old girls.

The first robbery happened on May 27 about 3:20 p.m. in the 5800 block of South Troy, police said. A 15-year-old girl was approached and the teens grabbed a gold necklace from her.

In the second robbery, which happened in the 5500 block of South Mozart, a 15-year-old girl was robbed of a gold chain and a gold heart ring, police said.'

Warrant: Teens tied up, smothered foster mom

Matt · 11 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. There could be an alternate explanation about what happened here since the girls are not yet in custody/have been found. Possibly the mother was killed and they were kidnapped? Without the actual girls apprehended/found, it's hard to say. In any case keep an eye on this one, I am sure developments will follow. Innocent 'til proven guilty, or at least until found.

'ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. – Arrest documents say two 15-year-old girls accused of killing their foster mom in New Mexico put her in a chokehold, tied her hands and feet and then smothered her with a pillow.

Fifty-three-year-old Evelyn Miranda was found dead Wednesday in San Patricio.

The Albuquerque Journal reports a neighbor heard strange noises at about 4 a.m. He went to check his livestock and noticed lights were on at Miranda's home and her van was missing.

The neighbor told Lincoln County authorities he knocked on the door but got no answer so he went inside, where he found the woman's body on a bed.

An arrest warrant affidavit alleges one of the girls told authorities she put Miranda in a chokehold while the other tied her up.

Each girl is charged with an open count of murder, which lets prosecutors determine the degree of the charge at a later date.'

Push leads to twenty five story fall that kills man

MR · 11 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Woman Accused of Pushing Husband from 25th Floor Window. Is it possible for a smaller woman to push a 6'4" military man to his death? Police are saying this is a premeditated crime. The prior restraining order the male victim took out shows he had concerns about his safety.

Have you lost your faith in men?

Minuteman · 12 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to "article" here. Excerpt:

'Perhaps it's just me but is anyone else losing faith in men? Is your confidence that your relationship will endure, unmarred by infidelity, for the rest of your life, rapidly diminishing? Anyone else starting to think that maybe it's only a matter of time until it happens to you?

Amid the latest reports of Arnold Schwarzenegger's love child, debauchery seems to be the flavour of our current new stories with male politicians, business leaders, sporting stars, celebrities and members of the armed forces at the centre of the storm.
...
Tiger Woods reportedly had at least nine mistresses, Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi and his cabinet have allegedly treated their country's political system as one big bachelor party, Ricky Nixon (the most recent football personality to grace our media) still has a lot of explaining to do and countless other public figures have had their reputations tarnished by some form of sexual indiscretion.'

Opinion: Why Lagarde should be IMF chief: Women make better leaders, sans Weiner-like libido

anthony · 12 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During an appearance last fall on ABC's "This Week" and following tough talk on fiscal austerity and the evils of budget deficits, Lagarde dove headlong into the squishy topic of gender leadership. Her cardinal thesis: Women are better leaders than men. “We don’t necessarily project our own egos into cutting a deal, [getting] our point across, convincing people, reducing them to…a partner lost in the process.”

Then with a hint of mettle she cut to the chase: “We inject less libido, less testosterone.”
...
Lagarde’s gender braggadocio is supported by empirical data. Leadership studies consistently show women outperform men in the key area of decision-making: They tend to use a more democratic, participative style, while men take a more autocratic, directive approach. These studies conclude that women’s traditional approach to negotiation, mediation, facilitation, and communication is more effective than men’s traditional insistence on power and control.'

Video: Weiner Scandal: A Victory for Women Leaders?

anthony · 12 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Article excerpt:

'"Often women are seen as more honest, more sincere, as harder working," Clarke said. "This may be an opportunity for more women to step into those positions."

ABC's Claire Shipman, co-author of "Womenomics", says there are numerous studies that show that a company with more women in senior positions will be more profitable.

"In every decision, diversity leads to better decisions," Shipman said. "In other words, a group of all white men are not going to reach the best decision."'

Why Cross-Examination Rights Matter in Campus Sexual Harassment Cases under Title IX

anthony · 12 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As part of its broader attack on safeguards against false accusations, the federal Education Department is urging colleges to strip students and faculty of the right to cross-examine their accusers in disciplinary proceedings over alleged sexual harassment. In an April 4 letter from Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights Russlynn Ali, the Education Department said that it “strongly discourages schools from allowing the parties personally to question or cross-examine each other during the hearing.”

This is perverse, since the subjective nature of the legal definition of harassment means that there is no category of cases in which cross-examination is more useful or essential to ensure due process. To legally qualify as sexual harassment under Title IX, or racial harassment under Title VI, speech must be severe and pervasive enough to create a hostile learning environment for the listener, and interfere with the listener’s education, both in subjective and objective terms, according to court rulings like the Supreme Court’s 1999 Davis decision. Transitory offense is not enough. If the accuser admits on questioning that she did not really view the offensive speech as being a “big deal,” or was not shocked or surprised by it, that probably rules out the existence of a subjectively hostile environment. Indeed, a federal appeals court dismissed a racial harassment claim for just that reason in Newman v. Federal Express Corp., 266 F.3d 401 (6th Cir. 2001).'

Obama, Planned Parenthood and Obamacare

MikeTrueman · 12 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Black American birth rate is below that of sustainability, that means if the domestic Black birth rate does not change, and it is likely to decline, American Blacks will be extinct. ...

The scourge of fatherlessness in America, particularly in the inner-city and among blacks has not been helped by Obama's disparagement of men and fathers and his often repeated glorification of single motherhood. Obama's repeated bashing of men, especially black men, accusing them of abandoning their children while at the same time his policies actually encourage single parent homes and reward mothers who eject fathers from the home and thus from the lives of their children.'

18-year-old continues fighting for custody of son adopted to another family

Matt · 13 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Next Sunday millions of families will be celebrating Father's Day, acknowledging the man who raised, loved and cared for them. Fathers hold a special place in a child's life. Dads can become involved in their child's sports, while others enjoy teaching their kids new skills or just spending precious time together. One young father admits it will be a difficult day for him.

"It's going to suck," said 18-year-old Christian Diaz.

...

After a lengthy court battle, a Kern County Superior Court Judge ruled in January in favor of placing the baby with the adoptive parents. Diaz has never been able to see or hold his son, whom he has named Liam. The decision was a hard one for Diaz and his mother, Guadalupe, to accept. And it's taken an emotional toll on the family.

"He's been stressed over the court's decision denying him his father's rights," said Guadalupe, who also lost in having her first grandson.

...

He has gotten help along the way.

The National Coalition for Men is supporting Diaz. And a nonprofit group devoted to family court reform called Fathers and Families got wind of the story and obtained the services of Marc Angelucci, a Glendale family law attorney to help out during the appellate process at no cost to Diaz.

Angelucci is convinced the Kern County Court erred against Diaz in several ways.'

NCFM helps save the New Hampshire Commission on the Status of Men

Matt · 13 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Long time NCFM member Mike Geanoulis announced that the New Hampshire Commission of the Status of Men (CSM) appears to have withstood efforts to sunset its authorization. CSM is arguably only one of four legislatively enacted bodies of its type in the United States.

Mike reports that even though the New Hampshire Legislative Committee to Study Boards and Commissions Committee on Committees (NHCOC) recommended closure of the CSM the Committee of Conference agreed to extend CSM two years and add two more seats to the — one appointment each from the House and Senate leadership. HB380 will be revised accordingly and resubmitted to the floor of the House and Senate.'

"Guilty Until Proven Innocent" released

Matt · 13 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

A new documentary has been released about fathers and the (so-called) family court system. The site is here. Caption:

'In his most provocative documentary to date filmmaker Janks Morton turns his lens to the crisis in America's family courts. Utilizing the stories of five men Morton unveils the untold story of how family court processes yield millions of fatherless children. The massive machine of family courts directly impact the lives of nearly one third of our nation's citizens, with little oversight and limits on its enormous power. It is a system riddled with conflicts of interest where the 'best interest of the child' is often an afterthought.

Guilty Until Proven Innocent is the beginning of a necessary national dialogue.'

Death upheld for Kuwait woman for wedding carnage

Matt · 13 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Remember this one from a while back? Apparently the ruling has been in appeal for some time and they finally decided on it. You may wonder why I am posting this one. The issue here is that it is so rare that a woman is sentenced to death and that this sentence is upheld, whether this be in a western or another country, that it is positively newsworthy. Men being sentenced to death isn't news, however, it's par for the course. Excerpt:

'KUWAIT CITY (AFP) – Kuwait's supreme court on Sunday upheld a woman's death sentence for setting ablaze her husband's wedding tent, killing 57 women and children.

Nasra Yussef Mohammed al-Enezi, 24, was condemned to death by a lower and appeals courts for the apparent act of revenge against her husband for taking a second wife.
...
The August 15, 2009 inferno engulfed the women-and-children-only tent in minutes and triggered a stampede. The final death toll was 57, including Saudis and stateless Arabs.

If Enezi is hanged, she would be the first Kuwaiti woman to be executed in the Gulf state's history. Three foreign women have been hanged.
...
The last execution in the emirate dates back to mid-2007 although dozens of convicts are on death row.'

Tennessee will hear paternity fraud case

ItsDan · 14 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Tennessee Supreme court has agreed to hear a case that could decide whether a man has legal grounds to sue for being duped into supporting a child that turns out to be fathered by someone else.

Legal experts believe it may be the first time for the state's highest court to decide whether paternity fraud is grounds to sue.

The court could give a man the right to recover some of the expense of caring for the child and win damages for emotional suffering for the paternity fraud. Lawyers say it's unlikely the man would be able to recover past child-support payments.'

The Masculinity Conspiracy: chapter 5 now online

Anonymous · 14 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Chapter 5 (Fatherhood) of The Masculinity Conspiracy is now online. This chapter examines how the theme of fatherhood is mobilized in the conspiracy via two books: Wild Things: The Art of Nurturing Boys by Stephen James and David Thomas, and Better Dads, Stronger Sons: How Fathers Can Guide Boys to Become Men of Character by Rick Johnson.

It shows how these books promote fatherhood as being defined by fixed characteristics. It then offers some different ways of thinking about fatherhood in order to counter the conspiracy.

http://masculinityconspiracy.com/

Australia: DIY Male Health Toolboxes for Men's Sheds

Minuteman · 14 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to media release here. Excerpt:

'The Australian Government is funding DIY Male Health Toolboxes to be sent to men's sheds around the country.

The announcement by the Minister for Indigenous Health, Warren Snowdon, was made as he launched Men's Health Week with Australian Men's Shed Association Patron Tim Mathieson in Canberra today.

"These are actual metal toolbox that will contain a combination of health promotion materials featuring resources suitable to a shed environment.

"We know that men don't always feel comfortable picking up a brochure in public – so these promotion materials such as carpenter's pencils, tape measures, and magnetic clips will be more subtle and hopefully infiltrate sheds with positive health-related messages."

Mr Mathieson and Mr Snowdon today joined Brumbies players for free health checks provided by ACT Divisions of General Practice at the Sea Scout's Men's Shed in Tuggeranong.

Mr Snowdon said he was also pleased to launch a new report funded by the Australian Government and conducted by the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare (AIHW) which suggest many males remain at risk of poor health.

"These toolboxes are a timely reminder for men to address some of the very serious issues raised in AIHW's The Health of Australian Males report.

"This report shows some disturbing data, including that less than five per cent of males eat sufficient fruit and vegetables and two-thirds of adult males are overweight or obese.

"Men need to make a difference to their own health by taking positive health action – now.'

Norway: Female Pedophiles Cause Children More Harm

Anonymous · 14 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Translation in English here. Original Article in Swedish here. Excerpt:

'Women who are sexually abusing children causing their victims more injuries than men. It writes the Norwegian newspaper Bergens time. They quote four researchers at the Psychology Faculty at the University of Bergen, who has written an article about it in the Journal of the Norwegian Psychological Association.

Women abuse is similar to those of male sex offenders, writes Bergen's time, but women's abuse often occurs in close relationships, and, therefore, more detrimental to the children.'

News submitted by:

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

The real cost of Feminism: Fatherless children, poverty, unemployment, crime and taxes

MikeTrueman · 14 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Forty years of unchecked Feminism has achieved Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg's goal of "eliminating" clearly defined gender roles that have been in place for thousands of years.

The cost to almost every aspect of our society is staggering.

Women now can get "pit-stop" divorces where husbands and fathers are ejected from the home as swiftly as pit crews remove worn tires from a racing car. New tires are added, the gas tank is filled in a flash, and she's off again, this time with the kids in tow, leaving fathers in a cloud of dust, unable to see their kids, usually due to a bogus restraining order. She, off to her next conquest never having to worry about paying because it's daddy's speed pass she swipes at the pump.

It's no wonder some 20 million American children are fatherless.

...

The goals of the Feminist agenda have resulted in discrimination against men and the destruction of the traditional family:

"The feminist notion that women should be independent of men, followed by affirmative-action/female quotas in employment, tended to carry out the goal stated by Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg that the concept of husband-breadwinner and wife-homemaker "must be eliminated." These feminist ideas and practices demean marriage by discriminating against men and also against fulltime homemakers." -Phyllis Schlafly — The Cost to Taxpayers of Missing Fathers'

Dept. of Ed. Regulation will Trigger a Glut of False Allegations

Matt · 15 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From a SAVE email:

In the name of curbing campus sexual assault, the U.S. Department of Education (DED) now requires all colleges that receive federal funding to use the "preponderance of evidence" standard of proof, instead of the long-accepted "clear and convincing" standard. In addition, the DED regulation forbids charged students from cross-examining their accusers.

Seldom does an issue unite the Left and Right into a single chorus of disbelief and scorn. To date, the DED letter has been the focus of over a dozen critical editorials appearing in both the liberal and conservative media. For example:

Nathaniel Zelinsky: Title IX and the Death of Free Speech at Yale - May 19
Christina Hoff Sommers: In Making Campuses Safe for Women, a Travesty of Justice for Men - June 5
Wendy McElroy: Dumbing Down the Charge of Rape - June 7

SAVE is calling on the DED to withdraw its Dear Colleague letter and replace it with a guidance that respects civil rights and due process. And we want you join us. Here's where to file a complaint:

E-mail: You can file a complaint with the Office for Civil Rights, using the following e-mail address: ocr-at-ed.gov.

Online: You can also file a complaint with OCR using their complaint form at the following website: http://www.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/complaintintro.html.

Thank you for your help!

Sincerely,

teri

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
Teri Stoddard, Program Director
www.saveservices.org

P.S. Help us grow our efforts....forward this E-lert to a friend!

UK: "Feminism is so passe. It's the boys who need help now"

anthony · 15 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

In the Western world, the feminist argument has been definitively won — and all the silly and, frankly, somewhat pathetic ‘slut walks’ in the world won’t refute that.

As far as I can tell, the new feminism aims to make men share more of the childcare. And, of course, it’s true that children prevent many women from going further in their careers. But it’s also true that it’s usually the woman’s choice. The maternal instinct is so powerful that most mothers want to do a larger share of the childcare.
...
For years, girls have outstripped boys at school and at university, and more women than men are entering formerly male-dominated professions such as medicine and law. The latest figures show that girls do better than boys at GCSE and in further education — 20 per cent more girls go on to university than boys, and are more likely to get a good degree.

Nothing will convince me that boys are inherently more stupid than girls. No, the reason boys are lagging behind girls is because they’re the ones who are being discriminated against. It is they who are being kept back by the system.'

Blatant Anti-Male Bigotry: OK With ABC News

anthony · 15 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Christiane Amanpour led a jaw-dropping round table discussion on her ABC Sunday morning talk show, as four female guest commentators discussed how the convergence of Former IMF director Dominique Strauss-Kahn's attempted rape charges and Rep. Anthony Weiner's travails has created a possible tipping point in which the nation will come to the realization of a fact that these women have known all along: women are just plain better than men when it comes to leadership, management, decision-making, and conflict resolution

The sweeping generalities, stereotyping, and flat pronouncements of male inferiority were unrestrained. "Women seek power to do something, men seek power to be something," said Amanpour at one point, to summarize an exchange. "Testosterone really is a problem," a guest said to unanimous head nods. Claire Shipman, an ABC correspondent kindly given the chance to peddle her nauseatingly-titled new book, "Womenomics," spouted various studies showing that women in power achieved uniformly better results than those bumbling male counterparts: better hedge fund profits, better corporate performance, pretty much everything. "Men just compete for the competition," another of Amanpour's distinguished guests declared, to no objections or qualifications from the assembled experts of the Superior Sex. "Men aren't attracted to powerful women," added Amanpour.'

Witch-Hunting Males - 2011

MR · 15 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

False accusations against males have reached epidemic proportions in America's legal system. The root of the problem stems from gender feminism's political ideology, pushing a misandrist agenda. Here in time for False Accusation Awareness Month is "Witch-Hunting Males 2011 - - - profiteering through false accusations "

Woman Raped And Murdered Toddler - Charged With First Degree Murder

Anonymous · 16 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman allegedly raped and threw her boyfriend's 17-month-old daughter against a blunt object, killing her, it emerged today.

Molly Jane Roe, 24, of Bells, Tennessee, is accused of throwing Maleeya Marie Murley while looking after her.

The toddler was rushed to hospital with a severe brain injury but died several hours after being admitted.

A medical examination also revealed she had been subject to a sexual assault before she died.'

Also covered here.

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Modern fathers face changing roles, says Pew study

el cid · 16 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Here's an article that summarizes the status of fathers in today's world. Mostly bad news, with one researcher wondering if kids are better off. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — Nearly half of American dads under 45 this Father's Day say they have at least one child who was born out of wedlock. And the share of fathers living apart from children is more than double what it was not so long ago.

In encouraging news, though, among married fathers, children are said to be getting more attention from both parents at home than ever before.

A Pew Research Center report highlights the changing roles of parents as U.S. marriage rates and traditional family households fall to historic lows.

For example, college-educated men who tend to marry and get better jobs are more involved with their children than lesser-skilled men struggling to get by.

"When a father can't provide monetarily for his offspring, he often becomes estranged," said Beth Latshaw, an assistant sociology professor at Appalachian State University who researches changing paternal roles. She pointed to an economic advantage for college graduates hired at companies with better benefits and family-friendly policies, contrasted with the situation for the larger ranks of low-wage workers.'

Right on schedule: a father-shaming article on the cusp of Father's Day johndias · 16 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It's like clockwork. Every year at Father's Day, we have some tl who fancies himself as a caped crusader and demands that fathers stop being such bad fathers, and for once start being good fathers. Anyone care to give Jeff Pearlman a piece of your mind?

A father's day wish: Dads, wake the hell up!

...
Excerpt #1: "Really, wake the hell up. Now. I understand that most of you have 9-to-5 jobs, that you leave tired and come home tired and just wanna chill in front of SportsCenter with a bowl of chips. But, seriously, you have no remote idea: Being a stay-at-home parent is exhausting. At the office, you can hide. You can take lunch. You can pretend you're working while scrolling the Internet for Yankees-Blue Jays and, ahem, Lindsay Lohan news."

Excerpt #2: "For you, I offer these 10 commandments of righteous fatherhood. Pay close attention, because, behind your back, people are pitying your wife:"
[a nauseating list follows]

Do fathers know best? 5 ways dads are better parents

Matt · 16 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Nice but it could have been a lot better. Still, for the MSN Moms section, not bad. Excerpt:

'Father's Day is clearly an afterthought on the holiday calendar. Which is too bad, because when push comes to shove, dads are better than moms.

Tacked on at the last minute –- Mother's Day was officially recognized in 1914, while dads didn't get an official day until 1972 (proclaimed by Richard Nixon, of all people) -- Father's Day is the family slacker of the phony holidays created by greeting card companies.

There are lots of pros and cons for either parent, of course, and the margin isn't big, and there's lots of credit to go around. And it's not a competition. But: Let's say it is! Dads are better. If your mind isn't so incredibly blown that you need to take some deep breaths and sip some cool water, read on:'

Candidates Pawlenty, Huntsman Tell F & F Activists 2 Parent Involvement After Divorce Is Crucial

Matt · 16 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A contingent of Fathers and Families' Election 2012 Campaign activists attended New Hampshire GOP events over the weekend and asked presidential candidates Tim Pawlenty and Jon Huntsman about family court reform.

F & F member Jeff Oligny asked Minnesota Governor Tim Pawlenty, a popular presidential candidate, about family court reform. Oligny, a member of the New Hampshire House of Representatives, told Pawlenty:

> In today's family law system, most non-custodial parents only get to spend a few days a month with their children. This is devastating for a lot of children who love both of their parents and want to spend time with them. How do you plan on fixing it?

A United Nations Treaty Will Undermine Both the Family & the US Constitution

Matt · 16 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Indeed, human rights conventions like the CRC can even transform the very nature of treaties, especially in the United States. At the time of the American founding, treaties were forged between sovereign states and were clearly limited to matters of foreign policy, such as alliances and trade. That is why the Constitution provides for them to be concluded by the president and Senate alone, without the participation of the more democratic House of Representatives.

Modern human rights conventions, however, increasingly govern not just nation-states but also sub-national groups and even individuals. Whereas in most countries treaty enforcement is carried out as part of a nation's foreign policy, in America a ratified treaty becomes by constitutional stipulation the "supreme law of the land," equal to the Constitution itself. That means that domestic courts are automatically required to enforce its provisions, without recourse to international tribunals.

Treaty-making thus presents a loophole through which various interest groups can effectively legislate American domestic policy while bypassing the people's elected lawmakers in the House of Representatives and in state legislatures. "Other nations preserve their right of sovereignty and the people's right to self-government," says Michael Farris of the Home School Legal Defense Association. "The U.S. is unique in forfeiting the right of self-government to ratified treaties."'

Deadbeats, Duds and Doofusses: Dads in the Media

Matt · 16 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'These are tough times to be an American dad, and indeed, an American man. The recession, or "mancession," as it's been called, hit men harder than women; male unemployment was 8.9 percent compared to 8 percent for women in May. Adding insult to injury, leftwing journalists have sniggered about the plight of the "beached white male." In 2010, women became the majority in the work force for the first time in history. More women receive college degrees than men do.

Culturally, in article after magazine article, on TV and in films, fathers and men in general are portrayed as hapless bumblers at best, abusive deadbeats at worst.

Sure, dads are useful as sperm donors as the media proudly tells us of "career women" who "can have it all" including a baby without a husband. They're useful as ATMs, too even some more practical feminists will admit. But to the Washington Post, they're blustering know-it-alls, in detergent ads they're prudish kill-joys, and household annoyances on a par with muddy dogs. Googling the phrase "Who needs men?" draws 355,000 results, including big stars crowing about artificial insemination. The rise of "gay chic" and the relentless smudging of traditional gender lines have devalued manliness, even as male politicians, entertainers and star athletes highlight the less-than-admirable male traits in scandals.'

Man Immolates Self in front of Courthouse

Matt · 16 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Anywhere in the mainstream media? Not that I can see. The story is here. Excerpt:

'I just got back from the Cheshire county courthouse, the site of yesterday's self-immolation. As I was walking out, they were painting over the scorch marks they attempted to wash away earlier in the morning.
...
Thomas James Ball, born 2/21/53 and his wife at the time, Karen Louise Ball (maiden name Primiano), born 3/2/65 had begun divorce proceedings about a decade ago. It was alleged that Ball had committed domestic violence against his 4 year old daughter at the time, Melissa. Karen had called Monadnock Family Services after the incident and was allegedly told that if she did not report the incident to police, that she would be arrested for child abuse. She called Jaffrey PD out of fear of what the government people would do to her family (steal her kids if they were both arrested) and because of their mandatory arrest policy in domestic violence cases, Thomas was arrested. He was found not guilty of simple assault in Cheshire Superior Court, despite slapping his daughter multiple times and causing bleeding. The Jaffrey PD apparently admitted that pressing forward as a domestic violence case was a mistake. His wife's testimony shows he did not have a history of violence. Thomas figured he'd get to see his kids again after the not guilty. He figured wrong. The court continued to press for counseling at Monadnock Family Services (MFS) prior to allowing Thomas unsupervised visits with his kids. Of course, this is a huge racket for MFS, who likely is paid for every one of the cases they are sent by the court, either by the people involved or by the state of NH.'

One news story, here.

Will Obama's speech this Father's Day promote the lie or tell the truth about fathers?

MikeTrueman · 17 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'20 Million children in America are growing up fatherless, Obama continues to place the blame not on those responsible, but on fathers.

Growing up fatherless tends to lead to flawed development and psychological issues, namely the narcissistic personality disorder so obvious in our president who himself, grew up fatherless. Fatherless children leading other fatherless children.
...
Previously, on Father's day, Obama made a speech in a Chicago church urging black fathers to be more engaged in raising their children. Read full text of Obama's Father's Day Speech.

As usual we find the truth to be the opposite of what Obama says as well as the "conventional wisdom" or what I call the "conventional ignorance".'

Women Should Stop Male-Bashing, says the Author of a New Book

anthony · 17 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Alex Dalton, author of the new book Women Are No Good Either, says too many women have a negative view of men today, and it's causing them to give up hope that they'll ever find someone to marry. He argues that women should stop calling men "dogs" and learn to judge men individually in a more positive light. "For years, I've heard women talk about how sad the dating scene is," said Dalton. "Ask any man, and he'll tell you that finding a good woman is just as hard."

Dalton wrote Women Are No Good Either to disprove the notion that all men love to cheat and break the rules in relationships. According to Dalton, men are dishonest with women who encourage them to be dishonest. Therefore, women are partly to blame for their own problems with men. "Think of all the men who have been dumped for being too nice," said Dalton. "Those guys can't win with women."

Children as young as 10 vomit to lose weight, with highest rates in boys

fondueguy · 18 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Children as young as ten are making themselves vomit in order to lose weight and the problem is more common in boys than girls, according to a study of nearly 16,000 school pupils published online early, ahead of print publication, by the Journal of Clinical Nursing.

The findings have prompted researchers to issue a warning that self-induced vomiting is an early sign that children could develop eating disorders and serious psychological problems, such as binge eating and anorexia.
...
“Our study found that children as young as ten were aware of the importance of weight control, but used vomiting to control their weight” concludes Dr Liou. “This reinforces the need for public health campaigns that stress the negative impact that vomiting can have on their health and encourage them to tackle any weight issues in a healthy and responsible way.'

SAVE creates flyer regarding James Ball

Matt · 18 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Flyer here. Feel free to make copies and hand it out as you see fit. News of this man's struggle and final end has to be spread. Excerpt:

'Following a 10-year battle to clear his good name, Thomas Ball took his own life on June 15, 2011 in front of the Cheshire County, New Hampshire courthouse. Ball was a 21-year military veteran with no prior history of violence.

The saga began when Ball physically disciplined his child, cutting her lip. CPS warned the mother, Karen Ball, to report the incident to the police, or face a child abuse charge. The police department mistakenly classified the action as “domestic violence” and arrested the man.

With a divorce now imminent, everything seemed to go downhill. Out of a job since 2009 and now facing a jail sentence for falling behind on child support payments, Thomas Ball felt he had run out of options.
Following are excerpts from an article published at FreeKeene.com. The entire article can be read at http://freekeene.com/2011/06/16/thomas-james-ball-self-immolated-in-protest-of-the-justice-system/'

NOW Mute on Obama Calling Congresswoman ‘Cute’

Matt · 18 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNSNews.com) – Conservative women’s groups see a double standard in the reaction--or lack of it--from the media and liberal feminists to President Barack Obama using terms such as “cute” to describe Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz (D-Fla.), chairwoman of the Democratic National Committee, but said they are not offended by his language.

However, the National Organization of Women has been mute on the matter.

NOW President Terry O’Neill, says spokeswoman Latoya Veal, did not have time to comment on the matter.
...
“What do you guys think of our new DNC chair, Debbie Wasserman Schultz?” the president asked the audience. “We are so thrilled to have her. You want Debbie on your side. She’s a mom, she’s got that cute smile and all that, but she is tough. Don’t mess with Debbie. We are so glad of her leadership.”

Though Obama's remarks were meant to be complimentary, feminists, the media and Democrats would have reacted differently if a conservative politician had said this, said Charlotte Hayes, a senior fellow at the Independent Women’s Forum.'

REEL Dads: Hollywood's Father's Day gift to dads, check out some classic "Great Dad" movies

MikeTrueman · 18 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here.

'With all the negative publicity Dad is getting recently, I thought I'd provide something positive for this weekend.

Thanks to the Patriot Ledger and GateHouse News Service here is a list of films you may want to check out on Netfilx. My favorite is To Kill a Mokingbird (1962).

REEL DADS: Films that feature memorable fathers'

New Danish study: male circumcision causes sexual problems for both sexes

Matt · 18 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Study abstract here.

'Abstract
BACKGROUND:

One-third of the world's men are circumcised, but little is known about possible sexual consequences of male circumcision. In Denmark (~5% circumcised), we examined associations of male circumcision with a range of sexual measures in both sexes.
METHODS:

Participants in a national health survey (n = 5552) provided information about their own (men) or their spouse's (women) circumcision status and details about their sex lives. Logistic regression-derived odds ratios (ORs) measured associations of circumcision status with sexual experiences and current difficulties with sexual desire, sexual needs fulfilment and sexual functioning.
RESULTS:

Age at first intercourse, perceived importance of a good sex life and current sexual activity differed little between circumcised and uncircumcised men or between women with circumcised and uncircumcised spouses. However, circumcised men reported more partners and were more likely to report frequent orgasm difficulties after adjustment for potential confounding factors [11 vs 4%, OR(adj) = 3.26; 95% confidence interval (CI) 1.42-7.47], and women with circumcised spouses more often reported incomplete sexual needs fulfilment (38 vs 28%, OR(adj) = 2.09; 95% CI 1.05-4.16) and frequent sexual function difficulties overall (31 vs 22%, OR(adj) = 3.26; 95% CI 1.15-9.27), notably orgasm difficulties (19 vs 14%, OR(adj) = 2.66; 95% CI 1.07-6.66) and dyspareunia (12 vs 3%, OR(adj) = 8.45; 95% CI 3.01-23.74). Findings were stable in several robustness analyses, including one restricted to non-Jews and non-Moslems.
CONCLUSIONS:

Circumcision was associated with frequent orgasm difficulties in Danish men and with a range of frequent sexual difficulties in women, notably orgasm difficulties, dyspareunia and a sense of incomplete sexual needs fulfilment. Thorough examination of these matters in areas where male circumcision is more common is warranted.'

The Incalculable Value of Fatherhood

MikeTrueman · 19 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'But the financial cost of those issues pales in comparison to the hurt and anguish it causes in people's lives. The tears and broken dreams of a family that once was or never was are incalculable. The damage done to children who grow up without a father and all that a father brings (not just in a paycheck) cannot be underestimated. Phyllis Schlafly takes a look at some of these in her recent column.

While the absence of a father usually pulls down his children, his presence usually makes the child infinitely better off. For instance, studies have found that the father's presence makes a child's academic success more likely, not just in school but in higher education.

So the next time someone tries to tell you that fathers don't matter–that families don't matter, for that matter–remember that research backs up what we already instinctively know: they are invaluable to society.'

A special Father's Day message from Senator Marco Rubio

Matt · 19 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Wow what a breath of fresh air!

Viewpoint: Legal system forces divorced dads out of kids' lives

Matt · 19 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'It's often been said that nothing is more American than motherhood, apple pie and Chevrolet. This commonly used phrase reflects the reality that even in an era of inclusion, acceptance and equality in American culture, fatherhood can't compete with the sanctity of motherhood.

As working moms have scored more and more success in the workplace, gender roles within the family unit have blurred in today's world. Many dads have enthusiastically jumped headlong into the frenetic pace of family life, deftly handling the rapid-fire schedule and commitments like Barry Sanders weaving through defenders in the backfield: Getting their kids ready for school, working a full day at the office, scurrying home to prepare a quick meal, helping with homework then running off to coach their kids' sports teams.

While recent years and cultural shifts have allowed some dads to display their skills on the home field, many Michigan children never get the opportunity for their dads to play such a meaningful role in their lives.

As we celebrate Father's Day this year, there's sad news to report. Almost 40 percent of U.S. children today can expect to live in a household without their biological father, according to the National Fatherhood Initiative.'

Working dads spending more time at the office

Matt · 19 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As part of its annual Father's Day survey, CareerBuilder found that today's dads have reason to celebrate and also plenty to worry about.

According to the survey, 84 percent of working dads who were laid off over the last 12 months say they have already found full-time employment. When dealing with layoffs, this news is about as good as you can get. On the other hand, long hours continue to be problematic when trying to spend quality time with children. The survey finds that 22 percent of working fathers are on the job more than an average of 50 hours per week. Last year this figure was only 19 percent.

The result of these longer workweeks can be seen when 39 percent of working fathers spend two hours or less with their children daily, and for 16 percent it's one hour or less. These figures are also not surprising when you consider that 20 percent of working fathers bring home work at least three nights each week.'

Cost to taxpayers of missing fathers

Matt · 19 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Poverty is massively greater for children living with a single, divorced or cohabiting parent than with parents who are married to each other. The poverty rate for single parents with children is 37 percent, but only 6 percent for married couples with children.

Marriage breakdown is a double-edged sword. At the same time that it forces government to become the financial provider for millions of children and their caregivers, it also reduces the government's tax receipts to pay for the handouts.

Income tax day now divides us into two almost equal classes: those who pay for government services and freeloaders. In 2009, 47 percent paid no federal income taxes, and the bottom 40 percent receive cash or benefits financed by the 53 percent who do pay income taxes.

...

Since the federal government created the child-support bureaucracy, the majority of divorces have been initiated by women. They confidently expect that pro-feminist family courts will award them a steady income for which they will never be held accountable.

The more child support that divorced fathers are ordered to pay, the more federal funds flow through the hands of the states, which compete for federal bonuses given to states that collect the most child support. It is profitable to state bureaucrats to make sure that fathers are permitted to see their own children only a few days per month so support payments can be set at the highest possible level.

Women have discovered they can use a request for an order of protection against their husband as "the gamesmanship of divorce" (in the words of the Illinois Bar Journal) to get sole child custody plus generous so-called child support. It's easy to get such orders without any evidence of abuse or even a threat, without notice to the husband and with no danger of prosecution for perjury.

Federal and state laws and subsidies that undermine marriage are the biggest fiscal as well as cultural issue of our times.'

Happy Father's Day to some, Hang Tough to others

Matt · 19 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

At MANN we know this is a joyful day for some readers and a very sad day for others. To those fortunate enough not to have been thrown under the bus of the Nanny State, we hope you enjoy this day. For those who have been given the shaft, hang in there and remember that for each act of injustice done to men/fathers, another man comes over to our cause.

The more the powers that be dish out the abuse, the more resistance they will get.

Column: "Irresponsible and selfish" men who "abandon" their children

el cid · 19 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Here's a column that makes me want to pull my hair out. The writer, Vincent Carroll, completely blames the breakdown of the family and the rise in the number of out-of-wedlock births on fathers. Fathers are simply "abandoning" their families because they're "selfish and irresponsible." Of course, the newspaper picked Father's Day to publish the article. Excerpt:

'Sooner or later, we always seem to give a pass to destructive behavior, so long as the victims are children and they aren't actually abused. If millions of men neglect or abandon their kids, it can't be because they're irresponsible or self-centered, or because they've embraced a large and growing sub-culture that no longer puts the welfare of children first.

No, it must be the economy that made them do it.

"When a father can't provide monetarily for his offspring, he often becomes estranged," Beth Latshaw, an assistant sociology professor at Appalachian State University, told The Associated Press in a recent article on "the changing role of parents as U.S. marriage rates and traditional family households fall to historic lows."

Welcome to Father's Day 2011, when "nearly half of American dads under 45 . . . say they have at least one child who was born out of wedlock."'

The President’s Fatherhood Pledge

anthony · 19 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Site here. Excerpt:

'Why take the President’s Fatherhood Pledge?

Fatherlessness is a growing crisis in America, one that undergirds many of the challenges that families are facing. When dads aren't around, young people are more likely to drop out of school, use drugs, be involved in the criminal justice system, and become young parents themselves.

President Obama grew up without his dad, and has said that being a father is the most important job he has. That's why the President is joining dads from across the nation in a fatherhood pledge – a pledge that we'll do everything we can to be there for our children and for young people whose fathers are not around. When you take the President's Fatherhood Pledge, you'll receive updates, tips and resources from fatherhood organizations, prominent dads and other supporters of responsible fatherhood around the nation.'

Sweden vs. Britain: The Foolish Lead The Blind

Anonymous · 19 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Reference here.

Britain´s PM David Cameron:
”Runaway fathers are like drink-drivers”

David Cameron is also the leader of the Conservative Party, Tory.

In Sweden, mothers receive child benefit of 1.050:- SEK/GBP 95/USD 154 per child – each month. Our Primeminister Fredrik Reinfeldt, at that time in 2005 as the leader of the Swedish Conservative Party, Moderaterna, said: ”There are women who are separated from men with alcohol problems who, with this, could be forced to receive half the child benefit in order to finance continued alcohol abuse,” said Reinfeldt.”

Source:
The Local – Split child benefit ”unfair to mothers”

The issue of split child benefit is once again on the political agenda in Sweden.

Comment by Ulf:
Shared custody is a very different issue from split child benefit. But with two European Conservative Primeministers comparing fathers to alcoholics, there´s a long way ahead of us towards equal parenting.

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID) sloppy with numbers, advocating adult circumcision

Minuteman · 20 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Some information I came across through subscriptions to HHS and Office of Inspector General (OIG) mailing-lists that may not have been released elsewhere. It would appear that whether in their accounting standards or health statistics, a lax culture with regard to numbers and record-keeping is beginning to encroach on NIAID, and they are seeking to make this laxity the new standard. Please forward to anyone who may be interested in further pursuing or making use of this information.

"Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract N01-AI-15416 With the University of California at San Francisco Audit (A-03-10-03120)". Link to OIG report:

http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003120.pdf (PDF file, 4.9M)

Excerpt:

'NIAID initially funded only $35.3 million of the $134.8 million Contract obligation with fiscal year 2001 appropriations. NIAID obligated a total of $99.5 million in violation of the bona fide needs rule: $19.5 million of fiscal year 2002 appropriated funds, $22.4 million of fiscal year 2003 appropriated funds, $23.4 million of fiscal year 2004 appropriated funds, $22.7 million of fiscal year 2005 appropriated funds, and $11.5 million of fiscal year 2006 appropriated funds. In addition, when it awarded a fiscal year 2007 Contract modification for nonseverable services, NIAID initially funded only $40.3 million of the $220.5 million contract obligation with fiscal year 2007 appropriations. Because the Contract was a nonseverable service contract, which represents a single undertaking and provides for a single outcome, NIAID was required to record the full amount of the Contract using fiscal year 2001 or fiscal year 2007 appropriated funds. By not doing so, NIAID potentially violated the Antideficiency Act. NIAID complied with the purpose requirements of appropriations statutes.
...
In written comments on our draft report, NIH agreed that an Antideficiency Act violation had occurred but did not concur with our findings and recommendations regarding the characterization of the Contract as a nonseverable service contract. While the Contract may contain severable elements, we maintain that, on balance, the Contract is nonseverable. We determined that the Contract was overall nonseverable based on the language describing the tasks included in the statement of work.'

NIAID announce dangerous changes to clinical trial protocols in search for HIV vaccine (and will continue advocating for more circumcision regardless):

http://www.niaid.nih.gov/news/newsreleases/2011/Pages/HVAD2011.aspx?utm_source=feedburner&utm_medium=feed&utm_campaign=Feed%3A+aidsgovnews+%28AIDS.gov+News+and+Events%29

Excerpt:

'To speed the pace at which promising HIV vaccine candidates become viable for evaluation in large clinical trials, NIAID is exploring the use of innovative or adaptive clinical trial designs that let scientists quickly modify ongoing trials in response to data acquired during the study. Such flexibility in trial design will allow the research community to maximize efficiencies in studying vaccine candidates.
...
No matter how effective a preventive HIV vaccine is, however, we will need to evaluate and administer it in combination with other biomedical and behavioral HIV prevention tools. No single HIV prevention strategy will control and ultimately end the HIV/AIDS pandemic. That is why it is important for NIAID to continue supporting promising research on vaginal and rectal microbicides, pre-exposure prophylaxis (PrEP) and expanded HIV testing with linkage to care. That is also why public health workers will continue to advocate and implement scientifically proven HIV prevention strategies such as condom use, medically supervised adult male circumcision, harm-reduction strategies for injection drug users and the prevention of mother-to-child transmission of HIV.'

UK: Female Prison Workers Had Sex Parties With Inmates

Anonymous · 20 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two female prison workers have been suspended over claims that they held debauched sex parties with prisoners in their cells.

It is believed the women, one of whom has a young son, took part in a 'swinging circle', regularly swapping their partners who were inmates of the Camp Hill section of HMP Isle of Wight.

It is also alleged that one of the women met an inmate for sex at her house when he was allowed out on day release.'

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Last statement sent to Sentinel from self-immolation victim

Matt · 20 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Editor's note: On Thursday morning, June 16, The Sentinel received a "last statement" via mail from a man who insinuated that he planned to set himself on fire in front of the Cheshire County Court House, and an explanation of why he intended to do so. Through further reporting, The Sentinel is confident this is from the victim of Wednesday afternoon's fire, although police have not yet received confirmation of his identity. The 15-page statement is printed in full, except for two redacted items: The names of the man's mother and his three children. Details will be posted as they become available.

Last Statement

by Tom Ball

A man walks up to the main door of the Keene N.H. County Courthouse, douses himself with gasoline and lights a match. And everyone wants to know why.

Apparently the old general was right. Death is not the worst of evil.

I am due in court the end of the month. The ex-wife lawyer wants me jailed for back child support. The amount ranges from $2,200. to $3,000. depending on who you ask. Not big money after being separated over ten years and unemployed for the last two. But I do owe it. If I show up for court without the money and the lawyer say jail, then the judge will have the bailiff take me into custody. There really are no surprises on how the system works once you know how it actually works. And it does not work anything like they taught you in high school history or civics class.

I could have made a phone call or two and borrowed the money. But I am done being bullied for being a man. I cannot believe these people in Washington are so stupid to think they can govern Americans with an iron fist. Twenty-five years ago, the federal government declared war on men. It is time now to see how committed they are to their cause. It is time, boys, to give them a taste of war.

There are two kinds of bureaucrats you need to know; the ones that say and the ones that do. The bridge between them is something I call The Second Set of Books. I have some figures of the success of their labors. You and I are in these numbers, as well as our spouses and children. But first let me tell you how I ended up in this rabbit hole.'

Position Vacant - Research Fellow: Gender Equality and Decent Work

Minuteman · 21 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to posting here. Excerpt:

' * Centre for Work + Life, Magill Campus
* Part time (0.8 FTE), 4 year contract
* Total remuneration package: $80K - $95K pro rata

Put your qualifications and experience into practice by conducting research and providing day-to-day management for the ARC Discovery project 'From Margins to Mainstream: Gender Equality and Employment Regulation'.

Utilising your excellent research, interpersonal and organisational skills you will plan and oversee research activities, including analysing relevant regulation, case law and policy across Australia, Canada, The Netherlands and the United Kingdom, and manage project deadlines and stakeholder relationships.

As part of the Work, Gender Equality and Regulation research program at this high performing research centre, you will develop and write high level academic publications, conduct literature searches in multi-disciplinary databases and disseminate project findings in public and stakeholder forums and at academic conferences.

This is an exciting opportunity to join UniSA; an outward looking University which fosters an intellectually rigorous environment.

For further information, please contact Associate Professor Sara Charlesworth, Principal Research Fellow, Centre for Work + Life on: +61 8 xxxx xxxx or email: Sara.Charlesworth@unisa.edu.au

Applications close: 9.00am Monday 27 June 2011'

CDC and PEPFAR also criticised in new Office of Inspector General (OIG) report

Minuteman · 21 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From an OIG mailing-list email I received a few minutes ago.

Could the circumcision-as-HIV/AIDS-preventative lobby be about to implode on itself?

As usual, please forward to anyone who may be able to pursue or make use of this information.

"Review of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Oversight of the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds for Fiscal Years 2007 Through 2009 (A-04-10-04006)" http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region4/41004006.pdf (1.6 MB)

Excerpt:

'Our review found that CDC did not always monitor recipients' use of President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) funds in accordance with departmental and other Federal requirements. CDC implements PEPFAR, working with ministries of health and other public health partners to combat HIV/AIDS by strengthening health systems and building sustainable HIV/AIDS programs in more than 75 countries in Africa, Asia, Central and South America, and the Caribbean. HHS receives PEPFAR funds from the Department of State through a memorandum of agreement.

There was evidence that CDC performed some monitoring of recipients' use of PEPFAR funds. However, most of the award files did not include all required documents or evidence to demonstrate that CDC performed required monitoring on all cooperative agreements. Of the 30 cooperative agreements in our sample, the award file for only 1 agreement contained all required documents. The remaining 29 award files were incomplete. In addition, 14 of 21 files were missing audit reports. (A report was not yet due for 9 of the 30 cooperative agreements.) The lack of required documentation demonstrates that CDC has not exercised proper stewardship over Federal PEPFAR funds because it did not consistently follow departmental and other Federal requirements in monitoring PEPFAR recipients.

We recommended that CDC follow departmental and other Federal requirements in monitoring recipients' use of PEPFAR funds. CDC concurred with our recommendation and described the corrective actions it had taken to strengthen internal controls and to foster a strong internal control environment.'

The War Against Girls

Matt · 21 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Review here. Excerpt:

'Mara Hvistendahl is worried about girls. Not in any political, moral or cultural sense but as an existential matter. She is right to be. In China, India and numerous other countries (both developing and developed), there are many more men than women, the result of systematic campaigns against baby girls. In "Unnatural Selection," Ms. Hvistendahl reports on this gender imbalance: what it is, how it came to be and what it means for the future.

In nature, 105 boys are born for every 100 girls. This ratio is biologically ironclad. Between 104 and 106 is the normal range, and that's as far as the natural window goes. Any other number is the result of unnatural events.

Yet today in India there are 112 boys born for every 100 girls. In China, the number is 121—though plenty of Chinese towns are over the 150 mark. China's and India's populations are mammoth enough that their outlying sex ratios have skewed the global average to a biologically impossible 107. But the imbalance is not only in Asia. Azerbaijan stands at 115, Georgia at 118 and Armenia at 120.'

I commented as follows:

'The author makes a mistake in saying that the gender ratio is fixed and anything other than that ratio is due to unnatural causes. A lot of 'natural' things can influence any given current sex ratio. Examples include pre-conception influence by endocrine-disrupting chemicals on the gamete production in men (ie, sperm-production), tending to favor production of either X or Y-bearing sperm (near the Great Lakes there is a relative abundance of female births specifically for this reason). Also, diseases could come along and for whatever reason only men or women as a class are being largely exposed to them (eg: men gone off to a foreign land to war could be exposed to and die from diseases they got in camp or found in that land for which they have no antibodies). This is not to detract from the point he is making about selective abortions based on sex. Indeed, he is right. That is going on in India and China to this day and there is a word for it when people of either sex are targeted for their sex. It is known as 'gendercide'. The right to have an abortion without restriction based on arbitrarily-set values is a double-edged sword. It's fine when the society that allows it agrees with the values of the aborting mother, but not so fine when it doesn't. But we cannot have our cake and eat it too. What, outlaw the abortion of girls but not boys? The author also fails to mention that here in the US and the west in general, the typical aborted fetus is male. Does this also constitute gendercide and should there not also be a book on this topic? Finally, the tone of his article seems to be hostile to the idea of men being in a substantial majority in any given community and says it is because we are inherently more violent. Nothing could be further from the truth. Situations of scarcity, not gender dominance, beget violence-- otherwise by his logic, monasteries would be very violent places indeed! Men, due to social norms, are more likely to go to, explore, or be sent to places of scarcity much more frequently than women. It's that scarcity factor that is the primary factor in violence among otherwise well-adjusted people, not gender.'

SAVE: Shock Lingers Over Suicide of Thomas Ball, Falsely Arrested for DV

Matt · 21 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Following a 10-year battle to clear his good name, Thomas Ball took his own life on June 15, 2011 in front of the Cheshire County, New Hampshire courthouse. He killed himself by lighting himself on fire. Ball was a 21-year military veteran with no prior history of violence.

The saga began when Ball physically disciplined his child, cutting her lip. CPS warned the mother, Karen Ball, to report the incident to the police, or face a child abuse charge. The police department mistakenly classified the action as "domestic violence" and arrested the man.

With a divorce now imminent, everything seemed to go downhill. Out of a job since 2009 and now facing a jail sentence for falling behind on child support payments, Thomas Ball felt he had run out of options.

An article about this tragic event can be read at http://freekeene.com/2011/06/16/thomas-james-ball-self-immolated-in-protest-of-the-justice-system/

Another is here: http://lewrockwell.com/grigg/grigg-w219.html.

SAVE has posted a flyer that you can send to your lawmakers here: http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/Self-Immolation-Case-Lays-Bare-Inhumane-Abuse-System. Find your lawmakers here: http://www.USA.gov/.

Mother 'killed boy over broken TV'

Minuteman · 21 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A New York woman beat her five-year-old son to death after he broke their television, police allege.

Kim Crawford, 21, was charged with murder after she allegedly smacked her son Jamar on the back and stomach, lacerating his pancreas and intestine in the process, the NY Daily News reported.
...
The boy vomited and complained of agonising pain for five days before Crawford decided to seek medical help, fearing she would be arrested if she took him to hospital.'

Bride arrested for biting husband

Minuteman · 21 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to article here. Excerpt:

'The 30-year-old bride followed her husband to a nearby hotel where she pushed him and bit his left shoulder.

The fight continued at the couple's home, where she ripped off his shirt and bit him again on his right arm, Broward County Court heard.

Mr Keeler asked Judge John Hurley for leniency, stating his wife may have been drunk at the time of the attack.

"For newlyweds, this is not starting things off on the right foot, for sure," Judge Hurley said.

"I hope this is a small bump in the road and you two can iron it all out and have a nice long life together."'

Ibbetson: Testosterone vs. Estrogen - Feminists Examine Evil and Good

Anonymous · 22 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Note: When opening the link, you may be presented with an aggressive request to subscribe and no clear way to dismiss the dialog box. The way to get rid of it is to click the link that says you are already a subscriber, then use your browser's Back button to return to the page. Excerpt:

'The current mentality forwarded today is that feminists don't bash men. That's just something angry males say when faced with the undeniable logic forwarded by the women's movements. If you are a reasonable male and wish to avoid an argument you will keep your eyes forward and just nod in agreement. The first problem with such a statement is that it is seldom placed to scrutiny with how feminists truly act. Second, these kinds of propositions are almost always void of half of humanity's thoughts on the issue. Yep, very few men other than the occasional token male academic feminist get to chime in on the subject.

An example of the common feminist disconnect with reality is seen in ABC's This Week with Christiane Amanpour. During the program Roundtable: Sex and Politics, Amanpour brought together a feminist coven to discuss the after-effects of the Anthony Weiner sexting incident. Strangely enough, the group discussed the good fortune of Weiner's adulterous actions as it was seen as fortuitous to the feminist movement. Considering that Weiner's spouse was victimized by the New York democrat's philandering, this is contradictory enough. But guess why this wife's pain was seen as a feminist gain? Amanpour would lead her all-female roundtable through a discussion of the evils of testosterone and how the Weiner scandal could open new inroads for more females in politics. Here is where many a clear-thinking man and woman will start to really look askew at the feminist mindset.'

Feds crack down on campus flirting and sex jokes

Matt · 22 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When I was growing up it was widely believed that colleges and universities were the part of our society with the widest scope for free expression and free speech. In the conformist America of the 1950s, the thinking ran, few people dared to say anything that went beyond a broad consensus. But on campus anyone could say anything he liked.

Today we live in an America with enormous cultural variety in which very few things are considered universally verboten. But on campus it's different. There saying something considerably milder than some of the double entrendres you heard in cable news coverage of the Anthony Weiner scandal can get you into big trouble.
...

Lukianoff and FIRE have an admirable record of defending students' and faculty members' free speech regardless of their point of view, but anyone familiar with their work knows that the most frequent targets of campus disciplinary groups are male, conservative, religious or some combination thereof.

I wonder whether there is some connection between this and the dwindling percentage of men who enroll in and graduate from college. Are we allowing -- and encouraging -- our university administrators to create an atmosphere so unwelcoming and hostile to males that we are missing out on the contributions they could make with a college or graduate degree?

Education Secretary Arne Duncan has shown an admirable openness to argument and intellectual debate. Perhaps someone will ask him whether he wants his department to be encouraging kangaroo courts and marsupial justice on campuses across the country.'

F & F's Glenn Sacks Debates Dad-Bashing 'Married Single Moms' Survey on MSNBC Live

Matt · 22 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'F & F's Glenn Sacks debated the new dad-bashing 'Married Single Moms' survey on MSNBC Live on Friday, June 17.

The survey's promoters, ForbesWoman.com and TheBump.com, claim in their highly-publicized press release that many mothers feel their husbands do so little that, though married, they're really like single mothers who have to do all the work.

To watch the debate, click here.

In the show's opening we're told that 92% of mothers feel "overwhelmed" and 70% resent their husbands. Alison Bernstein, Senior Editor of TheBump.com, then explained that "even working moms feel like they're taking the majority of work on their shoulders."'

Petition: Expose the Hidden World of Male Victims of Domestic Violence

Matt · 22 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'* In America, a woman is abused by her male partner EVERY 15 SECONDS.
* In America, a man is abused by his female partner EVERY 15 SECONDS.
* 75% of victims killed by their partners are women...24% are men
* There are hundreds of battered women's shelters in the U.S.
* There are ZERO shelters for abused men. Male victims are redirected to homeless shelters.'

Please Help: Debunking the gender wage gap myth

Mr VanHuizen · 22 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

A recent article appeared in the New Zealand Herald here of which Alasdair Thompson, chief executive of the Employers and Manufacturers Association correctly pointed out the gender wage gap is a result of personal choice such as women taking the time to have children. He is currently under attack by those who paint the wage gap as purely discrimination - when there is no evidence for that - particularly by Catherine Delahunty (Green MP) and Helen Kelly (Council of Trade Unions) who are both backing unnecessary amendments to the Equal Pay Act.

So what I want you to do, via Facebook: write a message to Catherine Delahunty (here) and Helen Kelly (here) debunking the gender wage gap in regards to discrimination. Use US data too (e.g. Department of Labor stats*) to show that it has been debunked internationally despite the myth being perpetrated.

Please take a short moment to write a message to them, OTHERWISE we're going to see more people getting forced to resign because of feminism and the gender wage gap myth being used to stir anger and excessive regulations in the business world. Thanks.

Added by editor:
* See http://www.consad.com/content/reports/Gender%20Wage%20Gap%20Final%20Report.pdf

'Anti-feminist' Zurich conference threatens to stir controversy

Anonymous · 23 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

'Another anti-feminist conference being held in Switzerland this weekend promises to ruffle a few feathers. Last year, a similar gathering caused so much of a flap it had to be moved to a secret location. This time round, the conference set for Zurich features Monika Ebeling, dubbed an “ex-feminist” by the media. Ebeling says she wants to address the “bitterness” between the sexes. WRS’s Jo Fahy explains what all the fuss is about.'

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

7-year-old Boy Drives Car 20 Miles To See Dad

anthony · 23 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CASEVILLE (WWJ/AP) A 7-year-old Michigan boy who drove a car at high speeds for 20 miles has been charged with unlawful use of a vehicle.
...
Still in his pajamas, the boy led police on a 50 mile-an-hour chase before he managed to stop the car, driving nearly 20 miles.

“The young man when he was spoken to by the officers said they wanted to see his father,” said Rutkowski. “He was leaving his residence which I believe is somewhere in Sheridan Township and driving nearly 20 miles over to Caseville, in Caseville Township, which is on the western part of our county.”'

Casey Anthony Trial: Cindy Anthony Searched for Chloroform on Computer

anthony · 23 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Cindy Anthony, the mother of Casey Anthony, testified in an Orlando courtroom this afternoon that she was the one who did computer searches for chloroform, stunning prosecutors who hope to use the searches to link Casey to the alleged premeditated murder of her daughter, Caylee.

...

Computer analysts have previously testified that someone from the Anthony family home searched under Casey Anthony's profile for things such as "chloroform," "neck breaking" and "household weapons."

Cindy Anthony said today that she searched for "chloroform," "alcohol," "acetone," "peroxide" and "inhalation."'

Washington Times: Men's 'apology' video to women touching, 'creepy'

anthony · 23 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. [The video this article refers to is here.] Excerpt:

'An eight-minute video on YouTube in which "conscious men" apologize to the women of the world is drawing tears and praise — as well as verbal brickbats — from around the world.

"The response has been extraordinary," said Arjuna Ardagh, one of the two men behind the "Dear Woman" video, which had more than 280,000 views a few days after it was posted.

Women have been mostly positive, he said, but there has been "aggressive hatred" from many men.
...
But many men were shocked out of their La-Z-Boys.*

"While these hamsters are apologizing for all the bad things men have done, please permit me to take credit for all the good things," tallentjack told YouTube, listing the Internet, steam engine, printing, penicillin, automobile, periodic table, calculus, fantasy football, astronomy, soft-serve ice cream, television and radio as men's gifts to women and the world.
...
Some women weren't receptive either.

"This is so creepy! If my husband acted like this, it would make me sick," doggletts wrote on YouTube. "This is just sanctimonious pap. The women I know don't have any wish or need for such patronizing 'apology,'" wrote chipmunkstew, who described herself as a "pretty hardcore feminist."'

* An article on this topic just can't seem to avoid taking a swipe at men all at the same time portraying an alternate view, can it?

Top Power Foods for Men

anthony · 23 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Slideshow here. Caption:

'Celebrate Men's Health Month with eight healthy foods that don't just fill you up, but actually target specific parts of your body. Patricia Bannan, registered dietitian and author of Eat Right When Time is Tight, gives us fresh facts. Click through and eat up.'

Egyptian men’s revolution stage demonstration for child custody

anthony · 24 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'About ten men gathered on Tuesday in front of the Cabinet offices to protest the law which grants mothers child custody in cases of divorce. Rami Imam, a Television director, says fathers are allowed only three hours a week with their children when the mother has custody.

The men standing held a banner reading “Egyptian men’s revolution for changing family laws”. Walid Zahran, a lawyer and the founder of the Egyptian Men’s Revolution Movement, says they are planning on setting up an NGO to defend men’s rights and to fight for changing the family laws which only benefit women when it comes to child custody.'

Uganda: Women want say in circumcision of spouses

anthony · 24 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WOMEN are complaining that they are not being involved in the decisions to circumcise their children and husbands, a study report revealed last.

The report on women's perceptions on medical male circumcision (MMC) for HIV prevention in Kampala and Kapchorwa districts was launched on Friday by Health Rights Action Group (HAG) and Mama's Club, a psychosocial support group For HIV Positive Mothers.

"A man suddenly returns home with a circumcision wound without consulting the wife yet women feel, as stakeholders, that they should be consulted regarding such matters," Marion Natukunda the Programme manager for Mama's Club, said.

While presenting the report last Thursday at Katikati restaurant, Nankunda said women would like to have their babies circumcised but are not allowed to make such decisions. When their husbands are not supportive, it often leads to domestic violence. The study was done in Kampala and Kapchorwa.'

'In praise of circumcision: Curbing male barbarism'

anthony · 24 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men may soon complain that they're being objectified.

In recent weeks, national public discourse has steadily focused on the male sex organ. First, California ballot measures advocating for the ban of male circumcision caught national attention, sparking intense debate between proponents of the religious ritual ("It has health benefits!") and those who oppose it ("It's genital mutilation!"). And then, in a discomfiting display of his own Semitic snip, Rep. Anthony Weiner (D-N.Y.) injudiciously Tweeted a picture of his package to an online coquette, unleashing a flurry of online-liaison confessionals and prompting calls for him to resign from Congress.

...

"Circumcision is the indelible symbol that a man can be more than just an animal," Rabbi Ed Feinstein, senior rabbi at Valley Beth Shalom, said. "The fact that you seal your connection with God and with tradition into that organ makes it incredibly difficult for that organ to be used as a weapon of manipulation or destruction. For men, this is the center of being: Is masculinity to be defined in terms of power and violence, or control and strength? What you see in the news is what happens when men make the wrong choice."

...

What powerful and public men crave may not be merely sex but a release from responsibility. Sometimes the only way to feel like a man is to act like one. Properly understood, circumcision is the sole barrier between instinct and utter ruin, and men could use a pointed reminder that sometimes inertia is more intelligent than impulse.'

Circumcision funds cut amid state budget woes

anthony · 24 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DENVER — A nationwide debate about circumcisions for newborn boys, combined with cash-strapped public health budgets, has Colorado taking sides with 17 other states that no longer fund Medicaid coverage of the once widely accepted procedure.

For years, Colorado lawmakers considered doing away with funding for circumcisions under Medicaid — a move that would save the state $186,500 a year.

Now facing a seismic budget shortfall estimated to be $1 billion at the beginning of this year, lawmakers finally approved the change, which takes effect July 1.'
...
The matter of circumcisions has gotten contentious in California, where San Francisco will be the first city to hold a public vote in November on whether to ban the practice.'

Honoring Men: A Manifesto for Conscious Women

Anonymous · 24 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Last fall, Arjuna Ardagh and Gay Hendricks shared the Manifesto for the Conscious Man on Facebook and then, more recently, a video, called “Dear Woman.” Arjuna also posted The Art of Worshiping Women at the Huffington Post. These pieces triggered strong reactions in many, ranging from appreciation to anger and everything in between.

The intention was clearly to honor women. And, many women felt acknowledged, and appreciated the collective apology from men. Yet, it was also inadvertently dishonoring, and even insulting, to many men, including my husband John.

We could say men have just as much to be honored for, and women have just as much to apologize for. Maybe even more.

In any regard, we decided to balance out the story here.

While John wrote the first draft, together we shaped it into “The Manifesto for the Conscious Woman.” We submitted this to the Huffington Post in December 2010, but they felt it was too “edgy” and “not a fit” for their audience. We’re now sharing the Manifesto at my Everyday Inner Peace blog, because one of the biggest keys to inner peace is recognizing and acknowledging reality “as it is.” We may like reality or we may be repulsed by reality. Regardless, “seeing clearly” is where sanity begins.

To all the men in the world, I truly honor you.

And for all the ways my sisters and I have caused you suffering, hardship or pain, I offer up a collective apology. Just as Arjuna and Gay offered to women some time ago.

Here’s to our collective healing between genders. There is clearly a lot of pain we’ve inflicted both ways.

This manifesto is written in the spirit of truth. If parts seem harsh, perhaps it’s because we are so used to politically correct talk these days and we recoil from straight talk when we hear it. Besides we had to toss in a little humor to keep it interesting. Please know everything said here is based in fact.'

Angela Epstein: Absent fathers can't be likened to killer drivers

Matt · 24 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'And what a message it was. Doubtless leaving wife Sam and a team of hired help holding the fort (and the baby), David Cameron declared war on absent fathers, storming that they should be stigmatised by society in the same way as drink drivers.

I realise that having Nick Clegg yoked round his neck like a clingy girlfriend has put our prime minister under unimaginable stress.

...

How does an absent father compare with a reckless driver who, fuelled by a tank full of booze, turns his car into a killing machine?

Perhaps our esteemed leader should pay a visit to the Partington home of Amanda and Phil Peak, whose two boys Arron, 10, and Ben, eight, were killed after drunken footballer Luke McCormick ploughed into their family car at 100mph on the M6.'

Rwandan is first-ever woman convicted of genocide

Matt · 24 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ARUSHA, Tanzania — The U.N. Court trying suspects of the 1994 Rwanda genocide found a female former government minister and her son guilty of war crimes on Friday and gave both life sentences, marking the first time a woman has been convicted of genocide.

Pauline Nyiramasuhuko, Rwanda's former minister for family and women affairs, and her son, Arsene Ntahobali, a former militia leader, were both found guilty of genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity, including rape.

The first media reports from the Anti-Feminist Meeting in Winterthur, Switzerland, Saturday, 25th June 2011

Anonymous · 26 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Main Page about the Media Reports at The Anti-Feminist Interest Group (IGAF) here

Selected links
Radio Basel
Winterthur:100 participants in the anti-feminism meeting

Landbote
Anti-feminism meeting remained undisturbed

Tages-Anzeiger
100 men and some women against the ”feminist ideology”*

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

---
* Ed note: Please note from this source:
"The IGAF plans to participate in the national elections in the canton of Zurich, as Urs Bleiker, president of the anti-feminists said. The third anti-feminism meeting will take place in autumn next year in Germany."

Good for them! Getting MRA issues on the political scene requires just this kind of activism.

The Top 5 Killers of Men

Matt · 26 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Heart disease is the number one killer of men, claiming the lives of nearly 400,000 fathers, friends, brothers, and sons every year. Often, the difference between life and death is razor thin—remembering to pop an aspirin, not delaying your trip to the E.R.

This week is National Men's Health Week, which was created by Congress in 1994 to raise the awareness of the health threats uniquely facing men. To commemorate, we've put together a list of the most popular ways to die as a man in America. Collectively, these diseases kill nearly one million of us annually. And, chances are, your lifestyle or genetic profile puts you at risk for at least one of them.

But, as Jeff Hale learned, our fates are not sealed. If you understand your risks, and learn how to negate them, you can outrun the reaper. Here's how:'

New campaign will use "manspeak" to help men deal with suicidal thoughts

el cid · 26 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This article reports on a new program to help men avoid suicide. It states working men are the most likely to take their own lives--a rare admission for an article on suicide, as most state numbers but rarely gender. This seems like a good program. Excerpt:

'If you think it's hard for a guy to ask for directions, then consider how much harder it is to ask for help with suicidal thoughts.

The group most likely to take their own lives is the same demographic least likely to seek out a mental-health professional.

"This is double jeopardy for working-age men," said psychologist Sally Spencer-Thomas, executive director of The Carson J. Spencer Foundation.

Article labels intactivists as 'bigots'

el cid · 26 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This column by Vincent Carroll calls those who oppose circumcision "bigots"--basically, anti-Semitic bigots. Carroll posted a father's day column about "selfish and irresponsible" dads who abandon or neglect their kids. About 4 years ago, he wrote a column against a law giving relief to men who were the victims of paternity fraud, saying they were "picky types" who wanted their children to be their own (unlike, I suppose, mothers who are more than happy to take home another mother's child from the hospital). The guy is starting to get on my nerves. Excerpt:

"Who would have thought that circumcision — circumcision, for heaven's sake — would be the next frontier for busybodies determined to impose their choices on the rest of us?

What prompts this musing is an article in Thursday's Denver Post by Diane Carman of the Solutions Health Policy Network reporting that Colorado will soon drop coverage for circumcision under Medicaid. That's fair enough, I suppose, since the procedure is purely discretionary in most cases.

What caught my eye, however, was the news that Matthew Hess, a notorious anti-circumcision zealot, "said Colorado also has a bill ready to go, if a sponsor can be found. The measure would amend the existing law outlawing female genital mutilation, extending the same protections to males."

Australia: woman set another alight in shopping precinct

Minuteman · 27 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to story here. Excerpt:

'A woman allegedly doused another woman in petrol and set her alight in a busy inner-city Perth shopping precinct yesterday afternoon.

The frantic 37-year-old woman was seen running into a toilet block off Rokeby Road, Subiaco, with her clothes on fire.

Emergency services were called to the trendy cafe strip, where they found the woman hiding inside the toilet block nearby.

A police spokesman told ninemsn the woman suffered burns to seven percent of her body and was taken to Royal Perth Hospital in a stable condition.

A woman who was working in a nearby book store told The West Australian newspaper she could smell smoke coming from toilet block.'

Letter to the Editor - Sometimes fathers forced out

el cid · 27 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. The Post published my letter about Vincent Carroll's column in which he claimed millions of selfish and irresponsible fathers abandon their children. Here's the letter:

"I'm sorry to hear The Denver Post did not get the memo about the purpose of Father's Day: to celebrate fathers. Instead, The Post chose to publish a dad-bashing column by Vincent Carroll, who blames "millions" of "irresponsible or self-centered" dads for neglecting or abandoning their children.

Carroll makes no distinction between a father who abandons his children and a father forced out of his children's lives by a custody ruling favoring mom. As long as we view these two as the same, we will never solve the problem of family breakdown.

Perhaps next Father's Day, The Post could publish a piece that actually celebrates dads."

"Cows More Important Than Children in Australia"

Anonymous · 27 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

News release here. Excerpt:

'On 30th May 2011, the community, media and Government were outraged, when confronted by the cruelty inflicted on Australian cattle in Indonesia, and it brought immediate Government action. Within days a whole industry was closed down and a valuable export trade was stopped in its tracks.

Three days earlier on the 27th May 2011, the Government released the ABS Family Characteristics Survey 2009-10, which indicates that since 1975 almost 24% of Australians have been denied meaningful contact with their biological families, as a result of deep-rooted Family Law policy failure. Yet now one month later, we have still not seen one word in the press and there is not a sign of any community, media or Government outrage.

Instead a deafening silence greets the news of crippling emotional cruelty being inflicted on Australian children and their powerless families. It would appear the health and wellbeing of the nations' cows is much more important than the health and wellbeing of the nation's children and families.'

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Do something, or just say 'boys will be boys'?

anthony · 27 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Readers don't know why Oregon boys drop out of school or skip college at higher rates than girls. They're not sure why boys get suspended, expelled and labeled with learning disabilities so often, either -- or why metro-area boys were so unlikely this June to be valedictorians.

They have a few theories, though. Mostly, they wish people would stop dodging the topic long enough to brainstorm solutions.

"Most times when I talk to people about this problem, they always think I am portraying women as the villain," said Portland father Kevin Sayre, 50. He doesn't intend to seem sexist when sounding the alarm about boys lagging behind. He just worries that if we continue to ignore or fail boys, more of them will grow into bored and unemployed men.'

IA: It's Time to Put the International Medical Community on Notice

Matt · 27 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA Newsletter:

JUNE 2011
IT'S TIME TO PUT THE INTERNATIONAL MEDICAL COMMUNITY ON NOTICE

Next month, health professionals from across the globe are gathering in Rome for the International AIDS Society's Annual Conference. Intact America will be there to give a voice to the millions of boys and men around the world who are at risk of being needlessly cut in the name of bogus science. Someone has to speak the truth: circumcision does not prevent AIDS.

With all the media focus on circumcision, we NEED to be prepared for this conference, so we can distribute educational materials to the hundreds of people we'll be talking to—people who are determining HIV policy around the world.

But we have to get our orders in for the pamphlets, banners, and signs by TOMORROW so they can be printed and shipped in time for the conference.

Make your tax-deductible gift today to help us remind the medical community that circumcision does NOT prevent AIDS!

With your help we can get there!

Time to ban male circumcision?

Matt · 27 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'San Francisco voters will decide later this year whether, like its female counterpart, male infant circumcision should be outlawed. If passed, article 50 — the "Genital Cutting of Male Minors" — would make it unlawful to circumcise, cut, or mutilate the foreskin, testicles, or penis of another person aged under 18. The bill includes an exemption for cases of medical necessity, but not for custom or ritual, which has profound implications for the many Jews and Muslims who consider it an essential part of their religious or cultural practice.

Unsurprisingly, the bill has attracted considerable controversy. Some regard it as a modern manifestation of western antisemitism, while certain feminist groups consider the idea of comparing male and female genital cutting to be both offensive and unsubstantiated.
...
According to research, the sexual damage caused by female and male genital cutting can be extensive. ....

...Some circumcised men describe feelings of loss, anger, distrust, and grief, while others have reported problems with subsequent intimacy, long-term post-traumatic stress disorder, and a sense of powerlessness.
...
Article 3 of the European Convention on Human Rights outlaws the kind of "harm" that circumcision can cause; article 14 forbids the discrimination that prevents baby boys from enjoying the same protection of their genitalia as baby girls. In the 21st century, it is time to remember that men, too, can be victims of unjust hegemonic systems tolerated in the name of tradition, culture or religion. If we oppose female genital mutilation, has the time not come for us also to oppose male genital mutiliation?'

Malecare.org seeks reviews

Matt · 27 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Dear Friends,

If you love the work of Malecare Cancer Support, then tell the world!

You may or may not realize it, but Malecare has grown to become America's largest men's cancer survivor support and advocacy national nonprofit. Malecare is a 13-year-old all volunteer organization, and our mission is to help men and their families make informed decisions about prostate cancer detection and treatment through support, education and advocacy.

You have an exciting opportunity to help Malecare make even more of a difference in our community. GreatNonprofits -- a site like Amazon Book Reviews or TripAdvisor -- is a website where people can share their stories about nonprofits that have touched their lives.

GreatNonprofits is currently conducting a Health Campaign, and if Malecare can get 10 reviews before the end of this week, we can be on their Top-Rated Health Nonprofits List and gain increased visibility to donors.

Won't you help us raise visibility and support for our work by posting a review of your experience with us? All reviews will be visible to potential donors and volunteers. It's easy and only takes 3 minutes! Go to:

http://greatnonprofits.org/organizations/reviews/malecare

With your help, we can gain greater visibility in the community.

Our goal is to reach 10 reviews by June 30!

Be sure to choose "Health" from the drop-down list of campaigns when posting your review.

Thanks,

Darryl Mitteldorf
Malecaredarryl-at-malecare.org

South African Medical Association denounces infant male circ as illegal and unethical

Matt · 27 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The South African Medical Association just denounced infant male circumcision as unethical and illegal and expressed "serious concern that not enough scientifically-based evidence was available to confirm that circumcisions prevented HIV contraction and that the public at large was influenced by incorrect and misrepresented information. The committee reiterated its view that it did not support circumcision to prevent HIV transmission." Excerpt:

'(PRETORIA, SOUTH AFRICA) — The South African Medical Association sent a letter response last week to NOCIRC-SA—the South African chapter of the National Organization of Circumcision Information Resource Centers— denouncing male infant circumcision as "unethical"and "illegal." The letter was signed by Ms. Ulundia Berhtel, head of the Human Rights, Law & Ethics unit, and Obo Chairperson of the Human Rights, Law & Ethics Committee.

IA: Tell Doctors to Put Down the Knife

Matt · 27 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA Newsletter:

ACT NOW: TELL DOCTORS TO PUT DOWN THE KNIFE!

Have you made your voice heard yet?

The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP), the American Academy of Family Physicians (AAFP), and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG) all acknowledge that infant circumcision is NOT MEDICALLY NECESSARY, but their members are responsible for nearly all the infant circumcisions performed in the United States.

We need them to acknowledge this ethical disconnect, to recommend that parents leave their sons intact, and to REFUSE TO PERFORM CIRCUMCISIONS.

Send a message to America's doctors by writing today!

Another three-sentence report of a woman killing a man

Matt · 27 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. In contrast, a story also on that same page of two women caught smuggling drugs takes up six paragraphs. Excerpt:

'About 1:50 a.m. Saturday, a 31-year-old man was found stabbed on Post Avenue. He died shortly after. A 30-year-old woman is in custody in relation to that incident.'

"Incident"? It's just an "incident"? Guess it is if the victim is male and the perp is female.

Missing man found buried in wife's flowerbed

Minuteman · 28 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Such a sweet old lady. Link to article here. Excerpt:

'A man who disappeared 14 years ago has been found buried in his wife's flowerbed in North Carolina.

Police only started searching for David Ellis Bostic after his wife died last year, aged 78, and they realised she had been collecting his social security payments, NY Daily News reports.

Last month investigators found the US man's remains buried in the garden that his wife Ruth Huber Bostic lovingly tended up until her death.

Police say the autopsy revealed nothing suspicious about Mr Bostic's death but they are still investigating the case.

In the 1990s Mrs Bostic told her neighbours that her husband had a stroke and they believed he had gone to live in a nursing home.

Mrs Bostic's neighbours said her house fell into disrepair after her husband disappeared but the old woman continued caring for her garden and they often caught her talking as she tended her violets and hosta plants.'

Swedish School Takes Gender Equality Too Far For Little Kids

anthony · 28 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For some parents, it would be like finding nirvana. In Sweden there exists a school where there is no gender. The kids don't learn about "he" or "she." And the books are all about homosexual couples, lest mother or father be seen as "better."

It sounds like a load of manure to me. Yeah, I said it. Egalia is being touted as the new wunderkind on the educational playground. It's a place where they're creating children who believe in gender equality because inside the walls of Egalia, gender doesn't exist.

Uh huh. But outside of Egalia, gender does exist. And just as scientists have found that by ignoring race completely, parents end up raising little racists, by ignoring gender entirely, here's betting the kids coming out of Egalia at age 7 are going to be brimming with their own mal-formed thoughts on gender. It's the way kids work. They're narcissistic beings, and the way they are -- their gender, their race, their way of eating, talking, etc. -- is best in their minds. It takes someone, an adult, telling them about the richness of alternate choices, the opposite gender, in this case, for them to embrace something different.'

Market Watch: 'Women are better investors, and here’s why'

anthony · 28 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women, on the other hand, do almost everything better. We've known this intuitively for a long time. If you didn't, just ask your wife or your mother. But now there’s a raft of evidence that suggests women are better at everything — including investing.

...

“Women were more likely than men to have a greater desire for self-control,” the study concluded.

In other words, they trade less and earn more.

“Women were more likely than men to have a greater desire for self-control,” the study concluded.

In other words, they trade less and earn more.

“Women tend to have lower composure and a greater desire for financial self-control, which is associated with a desire to use self-control strategies. Women are also more likely to believe that these strategies are effective.”'

International Women's Day in Sweden: Girls Had Cream Buns And Boys Had Crispbread At School

Anonymous · 28 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Reference Swedish School Takes Gender Equality Too Far For Little Kids

If you think this is bad, what do you think about favoring the girls at school by giving them cream buns (semla) while the boys are having crispbread (knäckebröd) to celebrate the International Women´s Day?

Story here.

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Bristol Palin On Good Morning America: Virginity Was 'Stolen'

anthony · 28 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Is Bristol Palin engaging in parental alienation? Her claim that her virginity was 'stolen' is obviously unsubstantiated and Levi Johnston is entitled to his side of the story. It seems as if he's not getting the benefit of the doubt and as a result is being punished by losing time with his child. Excerpt:

'When her mother, Sarah Palin, was thrust into the spotlight as John McCain's vice presidential candidate, Bristol Palin had to come out with a secret, that she was about to be a teen mom. Now she's revealed her whole story in her book, "Not Afraid of Life," and there are plenty of surprises.

Bristol Palin doesn't accuse the father of her baby, Levi Johnston, of date rape, but does say she felt her virginity was stolen. She was drunk and to her, that's how it felt.

In the book, she refers to Levi Johnston as the "gnat" who is constantly "spreading false accusations about our family." When asked how her son might react to this description of his father when he grows up, Palin is not concerned. She says already he has less contact with Trip than he's entitled to.'

Norwalk woman charged with making false rape report that resulted in arrest of two men

anthony · 28 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Norwalk Police arrested a 20-year-old woman on a warrant Monday for falsely accusing two city men of violently raping her.

Brittany Reith, of 7 Commerce St., was charged with falsely reporting an incident concerning serious injury or death and making a false statement. She was held on $5,000 bond and given a court date of July 8.

Reith made a sworn, written statement to police after showing up more than 12 hours late to the apartment that she shares with her boyfriend and telling him that she'd been kidnapped by three men, held against her will and repeatedly raped, according to court documents.

As a result of Reith's statement, patrol officers arrested two men -- Anthony Lee and Joseph Gay -- on April 7 for felony sexual assault and battery charges. Lee, a former standout Norwalk High School basketball player, had no criminal record. Gay had prior drug dealing convictions, but police never arrested him for a violent crime.'

Why Boys Are Failing in an Educational System Stacked Against Them

anthony · 28 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to Whitmire, children are forced to use literacy skills much earlier than in the past, and boys develop these skills later than girls. In the world of "Kindergarten is the new first grade," boys are struggling mightily to keep up. When it comes to writing, the gender divide is even greater. NCLB and our hyper-focus on standardized test scores is worsening, not ameliorating, the academic struggles of boys, and subsequently increasing the numbers of boys who turn off to school and eventually drop out.

According to Gurian, boys learn by doing and by moving their bodies through space. The more emphasis is placed on the development of early reading skills, and the less emphasis is placed on a healthy amount of movement and experiential learning, the more disadvantageous our schools will be for males.'

Blagojevich jury: 11 women, one man

Matt · 28 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I am not saying that the verdict was wrong. The point of this post is that there was once a time people complained vehemently at the lack of women in juries because any woman put on trial would undoubtedly have a gender bias against her since all or most of the jurors were men. In this case, a man faced 11 women and one man. Why didn't the attorneys take the oft-heard principle that juries should be representative of the population of eligible jurors in mind when choosing this jury? They could not find five more men to be seated as jurors in this trial? Excerpt:

'This time, there was no holdout juror.

It may have taken parts of 10 days to talk through the counts, but a federal jury of 11 women and one man on Monday overwhelmingly convicted former Gov. Rod Blagojevich.

In the end, they found him guilty on 17 out of 20 counts, including fraud, extortion and bribery.

One juror who wanted to acquit the ex-governor said she couldn’t ignore the mountain of evidence facing him.'

Time: Why Women Are Better at Everything

Anonymous · 28 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is why I don't subscribe to Time magazine. How utterly stupid. This inane anti-male bigotry seems to have no end in the liberal mainstream media. Excerpt:

'Recently in the Wall Street Journal, MarketWatch columnist David Weidner noted that women "do almost everything better" than men — from politics to corporate management to investing.

Weidner cites a new study by Barclays Wealth and Ledbury Research, which found that women were more likely than men to make money in the market, mostly because they didn't take as many risks. And why are they risk-averse? Because they're not as overconfident as men, the study found.'

Woman killed, then took dead baby out while shopping

anthony · 30 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CHICAGO - A CHICAGO woman is accused of strapping her baby's corpse into a sling and taking him shopping after killing the three-month old in a drunken rage, local media reported on Wednesday.

Ken Blackman Jr had been dead for eight to 14 hours when the woman wrapped up her shopping trip and went to visit a neighbour, who noticed blood on the baby blanket and called 911.

Prosecutors told the Chicago Sun Times that Toyrianna Smith, 20, beat and suffocated her baby because he wouldn't stop crying on June 22.'

A look at fathers' rights in New Hampshire's court system

Matt · 30 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Personal stories told with passion are the mark of fathers who decry the role the legal system has played in their families' lives.

Fathers' rights activists make headlines from time to time. Their actions can be silly, as in the case of British activists who periodically dress as comic book superheroes and scale public buildings. Or, they can be tragic, as in Thomas J. Ball's recent public suicide outside the Cheshire County Court House in Keene.
...
Peter G. Hill, a spokesman for the Massachusetts Fatherhood Coalition, lays out his group's legislative agenda: shared custody laws, stricter requirements for issuing restraining orders, and reform to child support policies that can land cash-strapped fathers in jail.
...
In 2002, New Hampshire established its Commission on the Status of Men, the only panel of its kind in the country.

The advisory group of five residents works to raise awareness on issues ranging from prostate cancer to gender stereotypes in education. It recently sponsored an essay contest with the theme "Why My Dad is Important to Me" in honor of Father's Day.'

Schoolgirls plot murder for inheritance

Matt · 30 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TWO English schoolgirls, along with their mother, brother and his girlfriend have been accused of using bricks to kill their granddad to get their inheritance early. The Daily Mail reported that they allegedly searched the Internet for 'the easiest way to kill an old person.'

The sisters aged 14 and 15, their 48-year-old mother, 18-year-old brother and also his 16-year-old girlfriend. Their 89-year-old granddad was suffering from dementia.
...
The jury was told that the 89-year-old man had given his adopted daughter lavish gifts, including a car, in the months leading up to the attack but that she was not prepared to wait for her inheritance

So, when he stepped outside he was set upon by his grandson and then hit by his granddaughters who were 'armed with bricks' in plastic bags. After the alleged attack, one of the granddaughters phoned 999 and said the pensioner had slipped and fallen.'

Strauss-Kahn Case Seen as in Jeopardy

Matt · 30 June 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. So does he get his old job back? Does he get his chance at becoming the president of France again? No and no. Another man destroyed by false allegations. Wonder if the many feminists and their supporters will now write mea culpa columns to go with their attack-writings of the not-so-recent past. Answer again is: No. And the new head of the IMF quipped that it is better that a woman be in such a position because women "make better leaders". Well we know for sure of one woman who doesn't make a very good liar: that is the false accuser in this case. Excerpt:

'The sexual assault case against Dominique Strauss-Kahn is on the verge of collapse as investigators have uncovered major holes in the credibility of the housekeeper who charged that he attacked her in his Manhattan hotel suite in May, according to two well-placed law enforcement officials.

Although forensic tests found unambiguous evidence of a sexual encounter between Mr. Strauss-Kahn, a French politician, and the woman, prosecutors do not believe much of what the accuser has told them about the circumstances or about herself.

UK: Lawyer's fiancee 'did not tell family of heart attack'

Minuteman · 1 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The fiancée of a wealthy UK lawyer did not tell his family he had died of a heart attack, because she claimed he had wanted to keep his death secret, a court has heard.

The family of Owen Davies, 45, went four months without knowing he had died in Paris after his Belgian fiancée Natalie de Vleeschauwer allegedly gave them the impression he was still alive, the Daily Mail reported.

"Not this year. There's a problem. I will explain later," a message sent from Mr Davies' phone replied.
...
Ms de Vleeschauwer has also refused to disclose the location of Mr Davies' ashes.'

Sharon Osbourne would 'chop' Arnold Schwarzenegger's penis off

Proud_to_be_a_man · 1 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. A male celebrity making 'humorous' comments about savagely mutilating a woman would soon find himself persona non grata. I LOATHE the way certain women seem to think that male genitals are virtually disposable! To be destroyed at a whim. They seem to think that emasculation is no big deal. Excerpt:

'Sharon Osbourne would 'chop' Arnold Schwarzenegger's penis off if he were her husband.

The 58-year-old TV star has claimed the former Governor of California ' who fathered a son with his employee Mildred Baena 13 years ago, despite being married to Maria Shriver ' should be more respectful to his family and says she would have removed his manhood and forced Mildred to clean it up.
...
"I would have chopped his willy (penis) off. Arnie's willy would have been down the disposal unit spinning around, that's where it'd be - and I'd make her clean it up. That mop would have been wrapped around her head."'

The No-Baby Boom

Matt · 2 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No mention of other factors, such as fear of divorce. Excerpt:

'Considering the state of the economy, it should come as no surprise that the ranks of the child-free are exploding. The Department of Agriculture reports that the average cost for a middle-income two-parent family to support a kid through high school is $286,050 (it's nearly half a million dollars for couples in higher tax brackets). ... Unless you're among the less than 2 percent of Americans who farm for a living and might conceivably rely on offspring for free labor, children have gone from being an economic asset to an economic liability.

But for the child-free, the benefits go beyond dollars and cents. There's less guilt, less worry, less responsibility, more sleep, more free time, more disposable income, no awkward conversations about Teen Mom, no forced relationships with people just because your kids like their kids, no chauffeuring other people's kids in your minivan to soccer games you find less appealing than televised chess.
...
This isn't just an American trend. Global birth rates dropped from six children per woman to 2.9 between 1972 and 2008 as people migrated to cities. One Italian mayor has resorted to bribery to restock his town, offering couples $15,000 for each child they produce. Germany's baby shortage results in an annual population loss of 100,000. And the sheep-to-human ratio in New Zealand, which currently stands at 10 to 1, seems sure to increase, since a staggering 18 percent of adult men there have elected to get vasectomies.'

The sacrifices of America's Founding Fathers

Matt · 2 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

On this Independence Day week-end here in the US, many feminists would still have us believe that the Founding Fathers of the United States were simply "privileged oppressor white males" who decided paying taxes was too much to bear and for this reason started a hugely-destructive war all so they could live in continued comfort but without paying taxes. The truth is much different. Their reasons were laid out in the Declaration of Independence, so if anyone bothers to read it, they can find the reasons there. Now what happened to the Founding Fathers after the war started, that is another matter. Most people have no idea.

Regardless of what you may think of his son, Rush Limbaugh III (ie, the radio personality), his father, also a radio personality and public orator, wrote and spoke about what happened to the Founding Fathers after they declared war on Britain. (I am not attributing the foregoing discussion to his authorship, since I cannot say if he was the author or not; I am simply saying that according to his son, he used to deliver the foregoing as a speech.) I also want to stress to our British readers that this is not a dig at you or your wonderful nation, as the US's Founding Fathers themselves were quick to point out that their quarrel was with the King of England reigning at the time, not with the people of England. (As we all know, a nation's government, especially if that government is a single individual, and its people are usually if not always different in character and disposition. This is a problem that for millenia Mankind has been trying to resolve, all to disappointing effect.)

A discussion of what happened to the Founding Fathers is here. Excerpt:

'Of those 56 who signed the Declaration of Independence, nine died of wounds or hardships during the war. Five were captured and imprisoned, in each case with brutal treatment. Several lost wives, sons or entire families. One lost his 13 children. Two wives were brutally treated. All were at one time or another the victims of manhunts and driven from their homes. Twelve signers had their homes completely burned. Seventeen lost everything they owned. Yet not one defected or went back on his pledged word. Their honor, and the nation they sacrificed so much to create is still intact.

And, finally, there is the New Jersey signer, Abraham Clark.

He gave two sons to the officer corps in the Revolutionary Army. They were captured and sent to that infamous British prison hulk afloat in New York Harbor known as the hell ship Jersey, where 11,000 American captives were to die. The younger Clarks were treated with a special brutality because of their father. One was put in solitary and given no food. With the end almost in sight, with the war almost won, no one could have blamed Abraham Clark for acceding to the British request when they offered him his sons' lives if he would recant and come out for the King and Parliament. The utter despair in this man's heart, the anguish in his very soul, must reach out to each one of us down through 200 years with his answer: "No."

The 56 signers of the Declaration Of Independence proved by their every deed that they made no idle boast when they composed the most magnificent curtain line in history. "And for the support of this Declaration with a firm reliance on the protection of divine providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor."'

NY Maid may have been hooker; case against IMF Chief unravels; another false rape charge?

MikeTrueman · 2 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I agree that Dominque Strauss-Kahn, the former head of the International Monetary Fund is a scumbag, politically and probably personally as well.

However, in terms of the recent charges against him, the worst thing he may be guilty of is not choosing the right escort agency.

The New York Post has the story here: Maid cleaning up as 'hooker'

For me the case gave off a stench that even the greenest rookie detective could smell. I know through my years as a detective and security consultant to a top hotel chain, that that big red "S" does not stand for "Sheraton", (rather a more familiar three-letter word starting with "S" and ending with "x") and hotels and hookers go together like coffee and cigarettes, usually with red lipstick found on the butts.

The point is we are so intimidated by the militant radical feminist movement that we immediately jump to conclusions when it comes to sex crimes. "Innocent Until Proven Guilty" except when it comes to any type of abuse or sex related allegations against men. Even with all the recent evidence indicating we should be skeptical, having false rape allegations taken seriously today is still as easy as putting on a clean pair of panties.'

"Imperfect accusers common in sex assault cases"

Matt · 2 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. And the race is on (not too surprisingly, found on MSN.com) to question the credibility of those questioning the credibility of the accuser in the Strauss-Khan case. Next of course is an effort to question the questioning of the questioning. Try to keep up. Only way not to get so confused in the shuffle is to stick to facts: she was lying about when and where she was after the alleged attack, and was caught discussing the ways she hoped to make money off the accusation with a boyfriend who was in jail for moving dope. And still, some doubt the doubters? This is called 'nymphotropism in action' for those looking for a phrase to describe it. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK — The rapidly dissolving case against former IMF chief Dominique Strauss-Kahn faces challenges fairly common in sexual assault prosecutions, namely a less-than-perfect accuser.

So while Manhattan prosecutors face a more difficult task now that the accuser has been found to have lied on several occasions including about what happened immediately after the purported attack, it is too soon to consider the case closed.

"This would not be the first case where an important prosecution witness turned out not to be the angel or pure victim that the prosecution initially thought. Nor would it be the first case a prosecution's office took a case to trial where a witness had real credibility issues," Columbia Law School Professor Daniel Richman said.'

7 reasons why women cheat

Matt · 3 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Not that much different from why men cheat, are they? And, women are no less likely to cheat than men, according to this other article. Excerpt:

'You've probably heard that men cheat for physical reasons, women for emotional reasons. Sure, there's some truth to that, but when we asked real women around the country to share why they strayed from their boyfriends, we learned they had a whole host of explanations — from bad kissing to sheer revenge. Read on for the truth about why women have given in to temptation.

Reason #1: There's no passion
...
Reason #2: To delay a breakup
...
Reason #3: Because absence doesn't make the heart grow fonder
...
Reason #4: To avoid being left out in the cold
...
Reason #5: To make a break from a bad relationship
...
Reason #6: To find that missing piece
...
Reason #7: To give him a taste of his own medicine'

Men’s Matters has returned after a 4-month break

Matt · 3 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Men’s Matters has returned after a 4 month break due to political matters. Listen online at 93.7 Express FM (Listen Again) at: http://www.expressfm.com/player/od/#. Although the June edition went out live on 28th June, the Feb. one is what is available at the moment. To hear it, click on the Mens Matters icon and then again when it is in the window. The show lasts about 45 minutes.

The February edition:

· A discussion with a man who lost his daughter to his abusive ex-partner. He will be giving his views on the devastating effect on fatherlessness
· Comments on Women and Trust
· Comedy sketch: Ali G vs Naomi Wolf
· Idris Francis critic of Association of Chief Police Officers
· The UK coalition government’s betrayal of men through the imposition of Go Orders – direct influence by feminists or not?

James Williams
Men’s Matters
Express FM

Nine years later, writer to file charge against Strauss-Khan

Matt · 4 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Nine years later. Amazing timing. Excerpt:

'PARIS (Reuters) - A French writer will file a legal complaint against former IMF chief Dominique Strauss-Kahn on Tuesday alleging that he tried to rape her during an incident nine years ago, her lawyer told Reuters Monday.

The move comes just as a U.S. case against Strauss-Kahn on charges of attempted rape and sexual assault of a hotel maid seems close to collapse after prosecutors acknowledged she had lied under oath and changed her story.

The turnabout in the New York case has prompted some calls for the former Socialist finance minister to make a political comeback in France.

Lawyer David Koubbi said the complaint by Tristane Banon, 32, would relate to an incident that took place when she went to interview Strauss-Kahn, a former French finance minister, in an apartment in Paris. She was 22 at the time.

"Tristane Banon will file a complaint Tuesday for attempted rape in Paris," Koubbi said.

"These acts are extremely serious," he added. "These events were combined with a violence that was absolutely striking for these kinds of situations."

The move by Banon, a journalist and author of a book and two novels, will follow Strauss-Kahn's release from house arrest in New York Friday after prosecutors said they now doubted the credibility of his Guinean-born accuser.'

Ending the Alimony Guessing Game

Matt · 4 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. How about getting rid of alimony altogether, or is that too rad an idea? Excerpt:

'FAMILY law reform is gaining momentum in New York State: last month lawmakers legalized same-sex marriage, while last year they adopted no-fault divorce, allowing couples to end a marriage without a demonstration of wrongdoing. In separate legislation adopted at the same time, New York also became one of the few states to adopt a formula for setting certain alimony awards, making them fairer and predictable. The rest of the country should do the same.

According to the Internal Revenue Service, former spouses pay around $9 billion in alimony each year. The amounts and payment schedules are usually decided by family court judges using a list of factors, including the length of the marriage, the ages and health of the spouses, their financial situations, their earning potential and their contributions to the marriage, financial and otherwise.

These criteria are sensible enough. But judges are on their own in deciding how to prioritize the various factors and how to translate them into dollar amounts, resulting in wildly inconsistent alimony awards. When asked how much alimony a lifelong homemaker married to a doctor deserved, judges in an Ohio survey estimated as little as $5,000 a year and as much as $175,000.'

VAWA Joe may be out as VP-- but in as Sec'y of State

Matt · 4 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Keep your eye on this one. If he becomes the next SoS (assuming a) Obama wins re-election and b) what is considered in this article actually happens), then I-VAWA will undoubtedly become a major priority for the second Obama term. SAVE and MRAs in general will then have their work cut out for them, as if we don't already.
Excerpt:

'A Prominent Republican is joining a prominent Democrat in predicting that Gov. Cuomo will become President Obama's running mate for vice president next year.

Former New York GOP boss William Powers, credited with playing a key role in electing Rudy Giuliani mayor and George Pataki governor, was effusive in his praise of Cuomo's successes in the just-ended legislative session, and in his prediction of the freshman governor's political future.
...
"I don't think there's any doubt Obama is going to pick him as his running mate. The president is in trouble and [Vice President Joseph] Biden doesn't bring anything to his ticket.

"The president will call him up later this year and say, 'Andrew, you have to do this for the good of the country.' What's Andrew going to say, 'No?'"
...
Former San Francisco Mayor Willie Brown earlier this year also predicted that Obama would pick Cuomo to replace Biden, who he claimed would be named by the president to replace Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton.'

The Masculinity Conspiracy: Chapter 6 now online

Anonymous · 4 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Chapter 6 (Archetypes) of The Masculinity Conspiracy is now online. This chapter examines how archetypes are mobilized in the conspiracy via two books: Iron John: A Book About Men by Robert Bly, and King, Warrior, Magician, Lover: Rediscovering the Archetypes of the Mature Masculine by Robert Moore and Douglas Gillette. It shows how these books promote archetypes as being defined by fixed characteristics. It then offers some different ways of thinking about archetypes in order to counter the conspiracy.

http://masculinityconspiracy.com/

A Gillibrand Campaign: More Women in Politics

anthony · 5 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For decades, women in elective office felt compelled to blur the distinctions between them and men: presenting themselves as tough and able while largely concealing their softer qualities. But like many political women of her generation, Ms. Gillibrand feels no such constraints, regularly talking about the demands she faces as a mother and a wife.

In fact, Ms. Gillibrand goes a step further, arguing that an infusion of women into the political system would go a long way toward changing the tone in Congress, a male-dominated world of fiercely clashing egos.

“We tend to be more results-oriented and less concerned with getting the credit,” Ms. Gillibrand explained. “The female approach is more conciliatory and less combative. We tend to use a more civil tone.”

Casey Anthony (found) not guilty of murder

Matt · 5 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

In case you couldn't see it coming, read it here. It should come as no surprise. Excerpt:

'Casey Anthony is not guilty of first-degree murder in the killing of her two-year-old daughter Caylee Marie.

After deliberating for less than 11 hours over two days, a 12-member jury decided this afternoon that prosecutors did not prove Casey Anthony was guilty of capital murder in the death of the toddler.
...
The verdict means 25-year-old Casey Anthony was found not guilty of all charges except for four misdemeanor counts of providing false information to a law enforcement officer.
...

American Heart Association: Take Action for the Women Close to Your Heart

Minuteman · 6 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Another Men's health concern hijacked. Link here.

'Help Advance the HEART for Women Act in the Senate!

Help us improve the prevention, treatment, and diagnosis of our nation's No. 1 killer of women by taking action! The HEART for Women Act was just introduced in the Senate and we need your help to build support for this important bill. Send a quick message urging your Senators to become co-sponsors today!

Dear Member of Congress:

As a constituent and an advocate with the American Heart Association, I am writing today to ask you to take a stand against the No. 1 killer of women in the U.S. by co-sponsoring the HEART for Women Act.

The Heart disease Education, Research and Analysis, and Treatment (HEART) for Women Act would:

• Make sure that healthcare data reported to the federal government is classified by gender, race and ethnicity.

• Require the U.S. Health and Human Services Secretary to submit an annual report to Congress on the quality of and access to care for women with CVD.

• Expand eligibility for funding to all 50 states for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's WISEWOMAN screening program for low-income, underinsured uninsured women. Currently the program is available in only 20 states.

Every 60 seconds, someone's mother, daughter, wife or sister dies from heart disease, stroke or other forms of CVD in the U.S., claiming the lives of more than 422,000 American women each year. I think you will agree that we cannot allow this alarming trend to continue.

Please do your part to help fight our nation's No. 1 killer of women by becoming a co-sponsor of the HEART for Women Act today!'

Reactions to the Anthony verdict

Matt · 6 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Just a couple:

http://www.thedailybeast.com/articles/2011/07/05/casey-anthony-trial-marcia-clark-says-the-verdict-was-worse-than-the-o-j-simpson-case.html

I wonder how anyone can doubt the delusive effects of nymphotropism after watching this exchange: http://video.foxnews.com/v/1039530737001/oreilly-vs-geraldo-on-casey-anthony-verdict/

SAVE: Partner Violence Reduction Act Brings Hope to Victims

Matt · 6 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

On Monday, July 11, SAVE will unveil much-needed and long-overdue reforms to the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). The Partner Violence Reduction Act (PVRA) addresses lack of due process, gender bias, loose definitions, false allegations and more.

The Partner Violence Reduction Act:

1. Gives first priority to real victims and reduces false allegations by narrowing definitions and distinguishing between "alleged" victims and "adjudicated" victims.

Over 11,500 victims have signed a petition demanding to know why shelters are "refusing victims the resources and services they desperately need."

2. Makes the law gender-inclusive and bans discriminatory policies.

The 2005 renewal of VAWA states: "Nothing in this title shall be construed to prohibit male victims of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking from receiving benefits and services under this title." Six years later, rampant gender bias continues unchecked.

3. Removes harmful mandatory arrest, predominant aggressor, and no-drop prosecution policies, thus helping to restore due process.

Mandatory arrest and no-drop prosecution policies are linked to an increase in partner homicides. And due to predominant aggressor provisions, over three-quarters of arrestees are male, even though half of the perpetrators are female.

4. Dramatically expands the use of counseling programs that have been shown to be effective in reducing abuse.

Family interventions can change the entire family unit, so further abuse will not continue, and children will not transfer dysfunction from their family into their adult relationships. We need more counseling and less incarceration.

5. Funds a multi-site research study of the effectiveness of restraining orders.

Concerns about widespread due process violations related to restraining orders have been voiced in legal circles for many years.

6. Assures legal assistance is provided both to alleged victims and alleged offenders, thus restoring the Constitutional guarantee of "equal treatment under the law".

Approximately 2 million persons have their constitutionally protected rights compromised each year by domestic violence laws and policies. While accusers receive free legal assistance, few of the accused get the same.

7. Requires third-party accreditation of all domestic violence training, education, and public awareness programs.

Less than 10% of domestic violence educational materials meet minimum standards of accuracy, balance, and truthfulness. One judge admitted that the information presented at a domestic violence seminar he attended "blew up...all my concept of constitutional protections."

8. Curbs immigration fraud.

The Violence Against Women Act has been documented to facilitate immigration fraud. Anyone who enters the country illegally and can produce a restraining order, even with no hard evidence of abuse, will likely to be approved for a work permit and permanent residency.

You can help promote PVRA. Send this flyer on the need to limit definitions to your legislators today.

Teri C. Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments

SAVE is a non-partisan 501(c)3 victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to domestic violence.

Uganda's President Rejects Circumcision for HIV Prevention

Matt · 7 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PRESIDENT Yoweri Museveni has cautioned Ugandans not to consider male circumcision as the remedy and automatic control of HIV/AIDS infection.

He said messages promoting the practice were misguiding and may put the lives of many people in danger since it had not been proven to be scientifically true.

...

He said if male circumcision was the answer to HIV prevention, then Ugandans who conduct circumcision as a traditional belief or a religious practice would not contract the disease.

He, however, said there is proof that these people had contracted HIV and the disease prevails in their communities.'

Casey Anthony to Be Released From Jail Next Week

Matt · 7 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

She got one year for each count of making a false statement, sentences served consecutively. However since she has already been locked up for almost four years, guess what? She walks next week. Story here. And guess who's still in jail? Strauss-Khan. He has an accuser, like Casey Anthony, who is a pathological liar, but he nonetheless remains locked up on charges shown at this point to be utterly unbelievable... a nymphotropic Twilight Zone if there ever was one. Excerpt:

'Casey Anthony, acquitted of killing her daughter Caylee, will be released from jail next Wednesday, her attorney told ABC News.

Anthony, 25, was ordered today to remain in jail after Judge Belvin Perry sentenced her to four years in jail and a fine of $4,000 on her conviction of lying to law enforcement officials.

The judge gave her four consecutive jail sentences, but she has already served nearly three years and would get credit for time served as well as good behavior. Perry originally estimated Anthony could be freed in late July or early August, but Anthony's attorney Jose Baez told ABC News that she will be released July 13.

Anthony entered the courtroom with her long hair down, as opposed to the tight ponytails she has been sporting throughout the trial. Visibly relaxed before the sentencing, Anthony chatted with her attorneys, laughed and even winked a few times. As the proceeding began, her demeanor became much more reserved and she looked downcast as the judge read the sentence.'

Feminists exposed by rush to judgment

anthony · 8 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In their desperation to avenge all women victims of sexual assault they gleefully seized on highly dubious and probably fabricated rape claims of one (apparently wealthy, according to mysterious bank transfers) African immigrant woman against a rich, powerful white man.

Rushing to judgment before any substantial investigation or trial, and aided and abetted by a New York Police Department and a prosecutor bent on re-election, they recklessly trashed the reputation of one man for their own ideological ends, even making bizarre links with France's burka ban.

In their eyes, Dominique Strauss-Kahn had become the grotesque symbol of all that was rotten in the state of patriarchy (and especially in "sexist" France) and therefore not worthy of the minimum presumption of innocence before proved guilty.'

Woman who lied about rape sentenced to 16 to life for murders

anthony · 8 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman whose false rape allegation led to the shooting deaths of two men was sentenced today to 16 years to life in prison.

Priscilla Ramirez, 21, could have been sentenced to as much as 32 years to life for her convictions on two counts of second-degree murder. Sacramento Superior Court Judge Steve White instead set the 16-year minimum term and said he would leave it up to the state Board of Parole Hearings to determine how long she may serve beyond then, based on her performance in prison.

Ramirez made the false rape allegation to her cousin, Philip Perez Gonzales Jr. The cousin and a friend of his, Michael Lee Armstrong, then went over to the Seavey Circle apartment of her boyfriend, Everett Antonio Taylor, 28, on July 21, 2009, to rough him up. While they were there, Armstrong shot and killed Taylor, 28, and another man, Deshawn Dante Holloway, 35.'

Dominique Strauss-Kahn Vs The American Anti-Male Justice System

anthony · 8 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even when the accuser is discovered to be a fraud, such as in the Duke Lacrosse case, the media still for the most part keeps the accuser's identity a secret. And even after the fake-rape discovery, the media still never hounded the fraudulent accuser as they had hounded the accused. And many of these prosecutors who would perp-walk an innocent man will not prosecute a fraudulent accuser, even though the accuser committed perjury, and caused tremendous damage against the accused and their families -- not to mention a tremendous waste of taxpayers' money prosecuting the case. The woman who falsely accused the Duke Lacrosse students was never prosecuted for perjury (and even if she had been, a perjury conviction wouldn't be enough considering she could have imprisoned these innocent men for 15 years of their lives).'

Petition Alert: Create "Caylee's Law"

Matt · 8 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Letter:

'Greetings,

On July 5, 2011, at 1:15 pm CST, Casey Anthony was found not guilty of first degree murder in the death of her daughter Caylee Anthony. The only charges she now faces are four counts of falsifying police reports, each of which only carries a 1 year prison term. Since she has been in jail since August 2008, she will be out of jail ENTIRELY too soon.

I'm writing to propose that a new law be put into effect making it a felony for a parent, legal guardian, or caretaker to not notify law enforcement of the disappearance of a child within 24 hours, so proper steps can be taken to find that child before it's too late.

This way there will be no more cases like Casey Anthony's in the courts, and no more innocent children will have to go without justice.

The case of Caylee Anthony was tragic, and there is no reason for another case like this one to hit the courts. Let's do what is necessary to prevent another case like this from happening.'

Tests will confirm whether cat died from heroin overdose; Woman arrested

Matt · 8 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BOULDER, Colo. – A Boulder woman has been arrested for allegedly killing a cat by blowing heroin smoke into its face, according to Boulder Police.

21-year-old Danielle Blankenship was arrested Tuesday around 11:30 a.m. on charges of cruelty to animals, third degree assault, and domestic violence. She is being held in the Boulder County Jail on $1,500 bond.

Police say they were responding to a domestic violence call in the 1100 block of 30th St. Tuesday morning after Blankenship's boyfriend called police to report that she hit him in the face.
...
Police asked if the cat, named Muffin, had been hit or kicked accidently, to which Blankenship told officers that she would never hurt the cat.

Animal control then took the animal to get help at the Humane Society of Boulder Valley where vets began treating it for poisoning.'

No, dads, get some sleep

Matt · 8 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- You work exhausting hours trying to hold onto your job and provide for your family in a scary economy. When you get home, you help prepare dinner, play with the kids, help with homework, read goodnight books. Then there are chores around the house and, finally, a chance to crash and have a little time with your wife -- unless you had to bring work home. You squeeze in however many hours of sleep you can.

And when you get to work the next morning, what's waiting for you online? A column on CNN.com by a dad who works from home informing you that he has "been sent here today, on behalf of the stay-at-home mothers of the world" to tell his "fellow pops" that it's time to "wake the hell up."

According to him, "most" dads have "have 9-to-5 jobs," "just wanna chill in front of SportsCenter with a bowl of chips" when they get home and "have no remote idea" how hard their stay-at-home wives are working. You see, at your job you can "pretend you're working while scrolling the Internet for Yankees-Blue Jays and, ahem, Lindsay Lohan news."

The idea that anyone thought this was an appropriate message for Father's Day is preposterous.'

ACFC: "Guilty Until Proven Innocent" Premiers Tuesday, July 26th in Washington, DC

Matt · 8 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

"Guilty Until Proven Innocent" Premiers Tuesday, July 26th in Washington, DC

Many who've seen Janks Morton's new documentary GUPI, have positively commented on the film and how it captures the essence of fathers' experiences in family court. From custody issues to child support to access interference to false abuse allegations, the film portrays family court through fathers' eyes.

You are cordially invited to attend the premier showing of 'Guilty Until Proven Innocent' on July 26, 2011 at the Avalon Theater in Washington, DC. If you can't be there in person you can still participate and help make the evening a tremendous success. Please read on and learn how you can be part of this history making event. There will be a panel discussion after the film with Janks Morton and several other special guests.

Tickets are reasonably priced at $10.00 each. If you live in the area and can attend go to http://www.gupifilm.com/ and order online. Here is a flyer you can download and print or circulate via the internet to let others know about the film.

Help Reach Congress

If you're not in the area, you can still be a significant part of this night. We want as many people from Capitol Hill to see the movie as possible. If you are not able to attend, buy a ticket(s) for a legislator. Next week an invitation will be hand-delivered to the office of each legislator when someone who lives outside the local area purchases a ticket. We will start by inviting each state's two Senators and then extend the invitations to members of the House of Representatives. You can see exactly how many members of your federal delegation (Senate and House Reps) are in Washington at this link. Order tickets here.

Become an Event Sponsor

Each individual who purchases 10 or more tickets, will be recognized as a premier co-sponsor and be listed in the event program and on the ACFC website. All you need to do is enter the number of tickets you want in the quantity box on the order page and press the update button. We'll use your state and zip code information to determine which legislators to invite.

Please purchase tickets as soon as possible. Invitations to Congress need to be distributed early next week.

Use this Coupon when Ordering

On the order page enter PREMIERSH-OFFER (make sure to include the -) in the coupon box and all shipping and handling costs will be waived on your ticket order. If you are attending in person, print out your email confirmation and bring it with you to the theater, that's your ticket. For those who have sponsored tickets for legislators, we will have that record on hand.

The Avalon Theater is located at 5612 Connecticut Ave. NW Washington, DC 20015.

Please email questions to gupifilm-at-gmail.com

Thanks in advance for participating, let's pack the house. Help spread the word by forwarding this message to your family and friends.

There has been a significant amount of shared parenting and family law activity recently. We'll send an update soon. Stay tuned.

ACFC

'Horrible Bosses' plays with the theme of emasculation, in all its extremes

anthony · 9 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's a scene in Horrible Bosses in which Jennifer Aniston, playing a dentist who habitually sexually harasses her weakling male hygienist (Charlie Day), repeatedly says the word "pussy." Her character is trying to intimidate his, while the filmmakers attempt to shock the audience with the spectacle of this lady rom-com specialist dropping slang for vagina. But it's not shocking to hear an adult woman say "pussy" in an R-rated movie. What's shocking is that the intimidation gambit works: Day's Dale is so afraid of Aniston's Julia, as both a professional superior and a sexual threat, that hearing her refer to her own intimate anatomy sends him into physical convulsions of revulsion.
...
In fact, the specter of would-be powerful white dudes getting raped emerges in Horrible Bosses so often that it transcends subtext to become the film's primary subject. On the film's continuum of emasculation, professional subordination is the midpoint, and sexual violation looms ahead as the dreaded final destination. What passes for comedy here doesn't have a chance against a thesis so scary and sad.'

Ed.: Also submitted by anthony, another review here.

Israel: Bill Nixes Divorced Dads' Rights to Public Housing

anthony · 10 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bill that is currently in advanced legislation stages would deprive divorcing fathers living in public housing of any rights to their own homes. The bill would transfer all rights to the home to the spouse who has custody of the children – who, in Israel, is the mother in over 90% of divorce custody cases. In some cases, the result would be that a disabled man with no property would be thrown into the street.

Public housing in Israel is granted to a limited number of disadvantaged families that do not possess homes. These include couples in which the husband or wife needs to use a wheelchair for mobility, or has some other serious disability. The homes are rented for very low sums and can be bought after a certain period of time.

In practice, the proposed law would make it possible to deprive a disabled husband of his right to any part of his home, even if the right to reside in that home was granted to the couple based on his disability.'

Carrie Lucas: 'Title IX: Over the Hill at 39'

anthony · 10 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Schools that don't have the money to start new teams for girls, or simply can't recruit enough women to join existing teams, have instead eliminated men's teams to make the numbers work. That means that thousands of would be male athletes have denied the opportunity to play sports because of Title IX.

And that's a sad and unnecessary thing. It surprises no one outside of far left gender studies departments that just about all surveys and data shows that men are more likely than women to express an interest in playing (or watching) sports. And in fact, sports are about the one extracurricular activity that male participation outpaces girls. Women dominate academic teams, student governments, art programs, theater, student newspapers, and just about everything else on college campus. Why then is Title IX only applied to the one area-sports-where men still have an edge?

Sadly, instead of rethinking this approach, many in the Department of Education seem to want to double down on it, and use Title IX to achieve gender parity in academia as well. What subjects are the Title IX enforcers looking at? Naturally, they are only concerned with math, science, engineering and technology-those few disciplines where men out number women.'

Court system unfair to men hurt by domestic abuses

anthony · 10 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Violence Against Women Act is gender biased only recognizing the female. Despite a continual barrage of reports about how epidemic domestic violence has become, most men and women are law abiding citizens, loving spouses and caring parents. DV advocates promote the myth women live in constant terror of violence from men, fanning the flames of gender warfare. Nearly 40 percent of domestic violence victims are men (Family Law week; regalmag.com) Gender feminists contend they can't assert power and control over men so she is the victim of his abuse giving women the right to file unproven accusations for restraining orders ruining the man, his good name and reputation. Parental kidnapping laws are ignored keeping the woman from facing felony, contempt and refusal to abide by custody decree charges; Jobs and Family Service step in using tax payer money to assist by moving women and children to another state where she can again file lies protected through VAWA and state agencies. Years pass, the mother continues abuse keeping children from having contact with their father depriving him of all his parental rights. She can break the law and still keep custody.'

Michele Bachmann: Don't Call Her a Feminist

anthony · 10 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Unlike Sarah Palin, who has brandished the feminist moniker and spoken of an “emerging conservative feminist identity,” Bachmann told me in an interview Tuesday that she wouldn't call herself a feminist—instead, she simply described herself as “pro-woman and pro-man.” When I pressed her on the matter, the Minnesota congresswoman said she sees herself as an “empowered American.”

Bachmann seemed loath to engage in the kind of girl-power rhetoric utilized by Palin and Hillary Clinton, who both invoked the perennial—and so far unbreakable—presidential glass ceiling.

Said Bachmann: “I'm a woman comfortable in her own skin. I grew up with three brothers. My parents didn't see us [as] limited [by gender]. I would mow the lawn and take out the trash; I was making my own fishing lures. I went along with everything the boys did.”

...

In late 2010, when conservative pundit S.E. Cupp told CNN's Larry King that she thought Bachmann should run for president, the panel erupted in giggles. King was puzzled: “Are you kidding or do you mean that?”

Nobody should be laughing now.'

Husband forced to marry to avoid unwanted baby

GaryB · 10 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This guy wanted to dump his girlfriend, but she told him she was pregnant - and, if he didn't marry her, she'd have the baby. Knowing that would mean 18 years of slavery, she told him his only option was to marry her. Amazingly though, a judge actually lets the guy off the hook when he comes to the court and asks for a divorce. And women wonder why guys are avoiding marriage... Excerpt:

'A MAN who claimed he was forced into marriage by his girlfriend after she promised she'd terminate her pregnancy has been granted a divorce after a judge found he'd been "under duress" when he agreed to wed her. The unnamed couple were in an on-off relationship for six years from 2004, and lived together for six months in 2008. The Family Court heard that last September, the man told his girlfriend he wanted to break up, only to be told by her that she was expecting his child. The man said she told him: "I'm possibly not going to terminate the pregnancy unless you marry me." "(I said) to her, 'I don't want to get married', and she replied, 'Well, I'm not terminating the pregnancy unless we get married'," he told the court.
...
The pair wed two months later, but the husband said: "I felt therefore there was nothing I could do but to marry her to ensure she undertook the termination." His wife told him a short time later that she'd had the abortion, and the pair split up on Christmas Day.'

"Oh the hilarity"

Proud_to_be_a_man · 12 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. As usual, reverse the sexes in this story and you can't imagine there being so much hilarity to be had. Excerpt:

'A Russian man who tried to rob a hair salon ended up as the victim when the female shop owner overpowered him, tied him up naked and then used him as a sex slave for three days.

Viktor Jasinski, 32, admitted to police that he had gone to the salon in Meshchovsk, Russia, with the intention of robbing it.

But the tables were turned dramatically when he found himself overcome by owner Olga Zajac, 28, who happened to be a black belt in karate.

She allegedly floored the would-be robber with a single kick.

Then, in a scene reminiscent of Quentin Tarantino's Pulp Fiction, police say Zajac dragged the semi-conscious Jasinski to a back room of the salon and tied him up with a hair dryer cable.

She allegedly stripped him naked and, for the next three days, used him as a sex slave to 'teach him a lesson' - force feeding him Viagra to keep the lesson going.'

SAVE requests: "Sign petition for Partner Violence Reduction Act"

MR · 12 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Build public awareness and put pressure on lawmakers by signing the SAVE's petition to enact the Partner Violence Reduction Act . SAVE would like to get 1,000 signatures in the first month, and 3,000 signatures eventually.

The Partner Violence Reduction Act:

1. Gives first priority to real victims and reduces false allegations by constraining definitions and distinguishing between an allegation and a judicial finding of domestic violence.

2. Makes the law gender-inclusive and removes discriminatory policies.

3. Seeks to protect and restore families when the abuse is minor.

4. Removes harmful mandatory arrest, predominant aggressor, and no-drop prosecution policies, thus helping to restore due process.

5. Allows legal assistance to be provided both to the alleged victim and alleged offender.

6. Improves the accountability of domestic violence organizations.

7. Curbs immigration fraud.

8. Removes provisions that violate the Constitution and restores civil rights to the accused.

Police: Woman Cut Off Husband's Penis, Threw It in Garbage Disposal

Matt · 12 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman was in custody Tuesday for allegedly poisoning her estranged husband, cutting off his penis with a 10-inch kitchen knife and throwing it in the garbage disposal.

Lt. Jeff Nightengale said the crime occurred Monday night at the man's Garden Grove home. According to authorities, this was the first time police have ever been called to the home. No neighbors reported any signs of fighting or screaming.

Catherine Kieu Becker, 48, was booked for aggravated mayhem, false imprisonment, assault with a deadly weapon, administering a drug with intent to commit a felony, poisoning, and spousal abuse. She was being held at the Orange County Jail.'

F4J's Matt O'Connor on Hunger Strike

Matt · 12 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A campaigner for fathers rights has started a hunger strike on the Prime Minister's doorstep.

Fathers 4 Justice (F4J) founder Matt O'Connor has started the strike outside the Oxfordshire home of David Cameron and it is expected to last "weeks", a F4J spokeswoman said.

The 44-year-old, from Andover in Hampshire, is demanding that Mr Cameron honours pre-election pledges made to the organisation about ensuring that grandparents have a right to see their grandchildren and for a legal assumption of shared parenting.

He also wants Mr Cameron, a father of three, to retract comments he made to a newspaper describing some dads as "runaways".'

Dr. Phil will be at tomorrow's VAWA hearing... What about you?

Matt · 12 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE via email:

Cue lights and cascading drum roll...SAVE has now released the Partner Violence Reduction Act (PVRA): http://www.saveservices.org/pvra

After years of discussion and debate, it's now a reality...the Partner Violence Reduction Act will amend the Violence Against Women Act so all victims are served, false accusations stop, and the discrimination comes to an end.

And as luck would have it, the Senate Judiciary Committee is holding a hearing tomorrow, Wednesday, July 13, beginning at 10am Eastern time, about the Violence Against Women Act.

One of the featured witnesses will be -- you guessed it -- Dr. Phil of Oprah Winfrey fame! You can watch the live Webcast here:

http://judiciary.senate.gov/hearings/hearing.cfm?id=3d9031b47812de2592c3baeba61af68b

The Committee is inviting testimony from all concerned individuals...including you! So today we're asking you to submit your testimony. Share your DV horror story, say something nice about the PVRA, whatever. We ask that you say it politely, preferably in one page or less.

Address your testimony to Sen. Patrick Leahy, chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, and email it to Anya McMurray at Anya_McMurray-at-Judiciary-dem.senate.gov. They need to receive your statement no later than Wednesday, July 20. Send a cc to me at tstoddard-at-saveservices.org if you would like us to consider posting your testimony on the SAVE website.

And, be sure to sign our Partner Violence Reduction Act petition:

http://www.change.org/petitions/hope-for-victims-support-the-partner-violence-reduction-act

Game on!

teri

P.S. When you watch the Webcast, look for the persons wearing T-shirts saying, "I was FALSELY ACCUSED of Domestic Violence." Wonder who that could be??

Teri C. Stoddard, Program Director

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments

SAVE is a non-partisan 501(c)3 victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to domestic violence.

Mostly female jury seated for Roger Clemens trial

anthony · 13 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON - (AP) -- An overwhelmingly female jury with little interest in baseball will decide whether former pitching star Roger Clemens lied to Congress when he said he never used performance-enhancing drugs.
...
The two sides threw out the maximum number of 20 people before the jury of 10 women and two men along with four alternates were seated. The jurors themselves were not told who among them are alternates but they were told to avoid news and sports programs. To keep the panel from encountering the dozens of journalists at the courthouse, the judge told them they will meet off site each day, ride a bus to a back entrance and use nonpublic corridors. They will be served breakfast and lunch in what was once a judge's chambers so they don't have to use the cafeteria where reporters, attorneys and Clemens himself take their meals.'

Men with cancer more likely to die than women

anthony · 13 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Artcile here. Excerpt:

'LOS ANGELES — Men who are diagnosed with cancer are more likely to die from the disease than women, due to a higher initial risk and later detection, U.S. government research showed.

The National Cancer Institute study looked at a database of 36 different types of cancer from 1977 to 2006.

It found the highest male-to-female mortality rate ratios for cancers like lip, where 5.5 men died for each woman patient, and esophageal, where 4 men died for each woman patient.

For lung cancer, which is the leading cause of cancer deaths for both men and women, the research found 2.3 male deaths for each female death.'

'Look, Kitten, I Am Too A Feminist! Fauxminism and Men'

anthony · 13 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's great when men identify as feminists. Really, it is. It's great when anyone identifies as a feminist. What's more important, however, is actually sticking to the tenets of that identity and philosophy. This is important for feminists from all walks of life, but it becomes particularly paramount when men claim the title of feminist. Many a woman-identified feminist is unwilling to speak out against men who self-ID with the movement for fear of alienating them from the cause all together – or worse – becoming the man-hating stereotype. However, it's time to speak the unspeakable. I am totally ok with being labeled a man-hater if it means that feminism can better serve those it is meant for. So here goes: fauxminism in male, masculine-identified allies is a problem, and it needs addressing.
...
Feminist men need to understand that their liberation from standards of masculinity goes hand in hand with smashing patriarchal misogynistic social structures. Instead of listing off the problems that he feels feminists aren't addressing (and thus expecting women to drop everything and mommy him – a sexist expectation in the first place), he can either begin to address them himself or try to recognize how intersectionality affects oppression. The fact of the matter is that feminists should not have to dedicate 50% of time and resources to men's issues.

So yes, men have issues. However, in no way, shape, or form are they of the same caliber as the problems and oppression facing women. If he is intent on making feminism about men, or inflating the issues that men face in order to play Oppression Olympics with the women he is conversing and organizing with, he is a fauxminist. Seriously: the minute he mentions the draft just stop listening.'

HHS HealthBeat - Girls' DASH for better weight

Minuteman · 14 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

It seems that the authors of this 'study' obtained access to NIH grants by making a commonsense and fairly mundane public health message (eating fruit and vegetables is good for you) gender specific. Link here. Emphasis added:

'From the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, I'm Ira Dreyfuss with HHS HealthBeat.

Teenage girls shouldn't have to worry about hypertension. But an eating pattern created to control hypertension seems to help them prevent excess weight gain, too.

At Boston University Medical Center, Jonathan Berz looked at 10 years of national survey data on about 2,300 girls, starting at age 9.

Berz says girls who ate closer to the National Institutes of Health's DASH plan – which stands for Dietary Approach to Stop Hypertension – tended to gain less weight. But he says:

``This sample of American girls were not eating nearly enough fruits and vegetables. And increasing the amount of these foods, plus whole grains and low-fat dairy, is likely to result in less weight gain." (9 seconds)

The study in Archives of Pediatrics and Adolescent Medicine was supported by the National Institutes of Health.

Learn more at hhs.gov.

HHS HealthBeat is a production of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. I'm Ira Dreyfuss.

Last revised: July 13, 2011'

Dr. Phil Testifies On Domestic Violence To Senate (video)

anthony · 14 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Extremely disappointing. He mentioned false accusations but only spoke about a man falsely accusing his wife. His only comments about men were them being the sole abusers. Excerpt:

'Phil McGraw, host of the talk show "Dr. Phil," made his debut on Capitol Hill Wednesday, testifying at a Senate Judiciary Committee hearing to review the 1994 Violence Against Women Act .

"Every 15 seconds a woman is abused in this country," McGraw, a psychologist, told lawkmakers. "This means that 228 women will be victimized during the first hour of this hearing."
...
Another witness, Julie Poner of Indianapolis, told senators she had been falsely accused of domestic abuse by her ex-husband, a Czech citizen, during the course of his immigration process. She appealed to senators to include provisions in the reauthorized bill that would require deeper investigation of abuse allegations related to people going through the immigration process. The fifth witness at the hearing, Eileen Larence, is director of homeland security and justice at the Government Accountability Office.'

Overheard on CNN.com: Cutting off men’s 'junk' isn’t funny

anthony · 14 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'VinProfessor said, “Why do people think violence against men is funny, but violence against women is horrifying?” Fnordian72 said, “Couldn't be.... SEXISM.... could it?” oneoarout said, “When a puppy is beaten, we're horrified. When a rat gets stepped on by a cow, we laugh. Get it?” Bubba01 said, “Because men do most of the violence, and reversals are funny. Also, it's either laugh or scream . . .” JustinCase4u said, “Because men usually deserve it ... however nobody deserves what happened to this guy unless you molested a bunch of children.”

NoSaint1 said, “Nobody would be laughing if it was a man who mutilated a woman's clitoris! It is really sickening how men are treated by women and the media. She'll get a fraction of the time in jail that a man would get. Just watch and see.”'

Sexism is a two-way street

anthony · 14 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are a few things women have to give up - and one of them is sexism.

I'm not talking about being the victim. I'm talking about being the perpetrator. It's something that's become known as "reverse sexism", or more over-dramatically, "man bashing". This is when women denigrate, mock or objectify men or otherwise treat them in such a way that, if the roles were reversed, feminist groups would be up in arms.

A case in point that has long annoyed me is the phrase "all men are bastards". It's a phrase emblazoned on T-shirts, desk diaries, posters, calendars and is even the name of a knife block in the shape of a man with knives stabbing through it.

Some say it's all meant to be a joke but really, it's sexism. And if you disagree, just imagine what your reaction would be to a man walking around with a shirt saying "all women are bitches". It's the same sentiment, only the gender has changed. And we know that any company that created a knife block in the shape of a woman, complete with knives stabbed through the head, chest, groin and leg (as in the male version) would be branded as encouraging violence against women and run out of business.'

Brian Copeland: Domestic Violence is Never Funny

anthony · 14 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"She's just livin' the dream."

That's the text that I received from a woman friend this morning in regard to the grisly Catherine Kieu Becker story out of Garden Grove, California.

Ms. Becker allegedly served her estranged husband a drugged meal. When he passed out, she tied him to the bed and waited for him to regain consciousness. As he watched in horror, Becker allegedly cut off his penis with a knife and put it down the garbage disposal.

She is being held on $1 million bail on charges of "aggravated mayhem" that could land her in prison for life.

Her statement to law enforcement at the scene: "He deserved it."

As I surf around cyberspace and listen to the comments of some of the women I know, there are jokes and laughter. Of course, some women are appalled and shocked, but many more find the mutilation to be a source of amusement.

Personally, I am disgusted and furious by the double standard.

"Imagine," I asked one female acquaintance, "If this situation were reversed and it was a man who drugged a woman, tied her up, hacked off a breast and destroyed it. Would you find that to be the same 'thigh slapper?'"'

Penis Assault Highlights Domestic Violence Against Men

anthony · 14 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A California woman is in jail, accused of drugging her husband and cutting off his penis.
...
This sort of attack is notable more for its severity than its rarity. Wives and girlfriends abuse and assault their partners far more often than people realize, but the genitals are rarely targeted. The most infamous penis attacker was Lorena Bobbitt, who severed her husband John's penis with a knife in 1993.

Despite popular belief, studies have shown that men and women are equal-opportunity domestic abusers. Women assault men almost as often as men assault women when you look at actual numbers of incidences regardless of severity. Men, however, usually cause greater injury than women do because they are often physically stronger.

Female abusers often use weapons or drugs to assist in the attacks. In this case, Becker allegedly used both drugs and a kitchen knife to assault her husband.

Domestic abuse in general is underreported, and many experts believe that domestic abuse by women is reported even less often, partly because men are embarrassed to admit that they have been abused by a woman.'

Action Alert: Opponents of Shared Parenting Fire Back at F & F in Boston Globe Sunday Magazine

Matt · 14 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Alert here. Excerpt:

'The Boston Globe Sunday Magazine ran a feature interview (pictured, right) with Fathers and Families' Board Chairman and founder Ned Holstein, M.D., M.S. on Father's Day.

In the piece — Fighting dad (6/18/11) — Holstein discussed our shared parenting bill H02684, which has been endorsed by nearly a third of the Massachusetts legislature. Holstein explained:

> Women's groups are also against [the bill], but they can't turn out a crowd on this issue. The public understands this is good for children…Judges still award [physical] custody to mothers by default; fathers still see their children every other weekend and maybe Tuesday nights. It's a cookie-cutter solution that has outlived its usefulness.

The consequences of this, Holstein noted, include:

> There is evidence showing adverse outcomes [for kids]. They feel terrible, they long for the missing parent, and begin to draw conclusions that they're not worthy.

Predictably, there's now a blowback against Holstein and F & F from opponents of the interests of children of divorce–the domestic violence group Jane Doe Inc., and a divorce attorney, Laura W. Gal.'

Another study (Korea): circumcision damages sexuality

Matt · 14 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Study here. Excerpt:

'RESULTS
There were no significant differences in sexual drive, erection, ejaculation, and ejaculation latency time between circumcised and uncircumcised men. Masturbatory pleasure decreased after circumcision in 48% of the respondents, while 8% reported increased pleasure. Masturbatory difficulty increased after circumcision in 63% of the respondents but was easier in 37%. About 6% answered that their sex lives improved, while 20% reported a worse sex life after circumcision.

CONCLUSION
There was a decrease in masturbatory pleasure and sexual enjoyment after circumcision, indicating that adult circumcision adversely affects sexual function in many men, possibly because of complications of the surgery and a loss of nerve endings.'

Woman 'humiliated' by failing riot police test wins up to £30k

Broadsword · 15 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For 30 years it has been used to test the fitness of officers who police riots and other outbreaks of serious public disorder.

The so-called 'shield run' involves officers covering a distance of 500 metres in less than two minutes, 45 seconds while wearing full riot gear and carrying a shield.

But when Inspector Diane Bamber, 51, failed to meet the time limit, she claimed she had been left humiliated.

She brought a sex and age discrimination case against her force, Greater Manchester Police, and now stands to win up to £30,000 after an employment tribunal ruled in her favour.

The landmark case has opened the door for thousands of other women officers to claim payouts and has triggered a review of specialist police training across the country.
...
The Mail on Sunday understands that the Association of Chief Police Officers is now reviewing the lawfulness of the physical training formats for 13 specialist operational roles, including those for firearms officers, which could discriminate against women and older officers.'

New milk ads risk the wrath of women with 'Everything I Do Is Wrong' campaign

Broadsword · 15 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The firm behind the famous 'Got Milk' campaign has risked the wrath of millions - by claiming it is men who suffer the most from premenstrual syndrome.

From August billboard ads commissioned by the California Milk Processor Board will appear across the state as part of their new 'Everything I Do Is Wrong' promotion.

Each show confused men holding cartons of milk accompanied by tag lines such as ‘I'm sorry I listened to what you said and NOT what you meant,’ or ‘I apologize for not reading between the RIGHT lines.’

...

The board's executive director, Steve James, said the internet, radio and billboard campaign is meant to encourage open conversations between men and women about an awkward subject.

‘It was certainly not meant to be offensive,’ he insisted. ‘None of the humour is aimed at women. The humour is aimed at how clueless men are in dealing with emotional situations. All of the humour is built around men's cluelessness,’ he added.'

Casey Anthony plans to appeal convictions for lying

Matt · 15 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ORLANDO, Fla (Reuters) - Casey Anthony will appeal her convictions on four charges of lying to detectives who investigated the disappearance and death of her 2-year-old daughter Caylee, a notice filed on Friday by her attorneys said.

A Florida jury acquitted 25-year-old Anthony earlier this month of killing Caylee, whose skeletal remains were found in woods near the Anthony family home after a five-month search.

Anthony was convicted of misdemeanor charges of lying to detectives searching for her then-missing daughter in 2008. Among other lies, Anthony said she left Caylee with a nanny named Zenaida Fernandez-Gonzalez at an Orlando apartment complex.

Anthony was sentenced to the maximum of four years in jail on four counts of providing false information to a law enforcement officer. She will be released on Sunday, less than two weeks after her sentencing date after credit for time served awaiting trial and good behavior.'

TV show "The Talk" - Talk News: Woman Cuts Off Husband's Private Part

Anonymous · 16 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video here*. Do you even know this hatred towards men is being aired on national television?

What's Men's Activism doing about it?

*Update: CBS has taken their clip off-line. This is of course because they are too cowardly to show the world what sleaze-bags they are. But we know what sleaze-bags they are and they cannot hide from us, so here is another place you can find the disgusting clip. (The first 4:45 of the clip is commentary; the actual offensive material starts at that point.)
Update 2: With this update I point you to another YT clip from A Voice For Men radio with the offending scene as well as some outstanding commentary. Listen and learn about how hundreds of these mutilations go on every year and are largely unpublicized.

Germaine Greer: If men want to play men-only games, let them

Broadsword · 16 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women are ineligible for membership of Royal St George's Golf Club, where this year's Open Championship is being held. As a feminist, I should be outraged at this example of male misogyny.

I should be chaining myself to a tree and shrieking insults at all and sundry, which would have the unintended effect of persuading the club members (as if they needed any persuading) that they were right to exclude women from membership. A raging harridan can expect little welcome from "an assembly of good fellows" who have formed a club in order to have the right to exclude people whose company they do not enjoy.
...
...Chaining yourself to the railings would be a total waste of time. You'd be better advised to start another, better club for women, but it will be a long time before you find men chaining themselves to your railings. They don't want to be where you are. Women want the company of men much more than men want the company of women. In this country, something in the order of 3.5 million men are passionate anglers. What can be the appeal of hours spent crouching under an umbrella on a cold, muddy river-bank? The absence of women, that's what.'

Woman Attacks Female Judge In Court

Anonymous · 16 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. A woman defendant physically attacks a female judge. So why is this unusual? Her husband had asked the court to issue a domestic violence order against her for his protection. I think he got it.

U.S. Navy posts feminist-produced poster advising sailors ‘don’t assault people’

Matt · 16 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A poster about sexual assault displayed on the U.S. Navy’s Facebook page is causing quite a stir. Titled “Sexual Assault Prevention Tips,” the poster advises readers not to assault anyone.

“When you see somebody walking by themselves, leave them alone!” it reads. “If you pull over to help someone with car problems, remember not to assault them!”

The poster doesn’t stop there.

“USE THE BUDDY SYSTEM! If you are not able to stop yourself from assaulting people, ask a friend to stay with you while you are in public,” the poster continues. “Don’t forget, you can’t have sex with somebody unless they are awake!”'

PHS “Tuskegee/Guatemala” HIV/AIDS STD Study redux 2011

Matt · 16 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email. Very long, of greatest interest to people and organizations focused on anti-circ measures, but still of interest to all MRAs. As follows:

PHS “Tuskegee/Guatemala” HIV/AIDS STD Study redux 2011

Accurate clinical outcomes require scientific data that meet the highest standards for research bioethics. Unfortunately (see attached): PHS (ASH: Dr. Koh), NIH (Drs. Collins, Kington, Star), and CDC (Drs. Frieden, Arias, Fenton) do not appear to understand what these standards entail as to “publication bias”, nor is there an adequate oversight/enforcement mechanism or Standard/PHS Code of Research Bioethics Conduct (Nicholas Steneck) as it pertains to “publication bias” adversely impacting reliability of all outcomes research based on federally funded science. Please review this PHS violative research bioethics conduct and refer for corrective Action as CDC considers “universal” circumcision in the U.S. (http://www.foxnews.com/story/0,2933,541970,00.html) and DHHS/USAID/UNAIDS implements universal circumcision in Africa.

As you are aware, the recently convened President Commission on Bioethics (http://blog.bioethics.gov/2011/05/19/could-another-guatemala-case-happen/) was tasked with reviewing evidence of global violative research bioethics conduct. I am contacting you in response to President Obama’s tasking of the President’s Commission on Bioethics to review this ongoing case of PHS global violative research bioethics conduct which has disparate impact/treatment in persons of African descent:

Geena Davis Lobbies for Bill to Improve Image of Women in Media

anthony · 16 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Academy Award winning actress Geena Davis joined Senator Kay Hagan (D-NC) and Congresswoman Tammy Baldwin (D- WI) on Capitol Hill on Wednesday to introduce a bill that would support efforts to improve the image of girls and women in the media.

“I am proud to join with Sen. Hagan and Rep. Baldwin to promote gender equality and positive portrayals of women and girls in the media,” Davis said in a statement. “What children see affects their attitudes toward male and female roles and impacts the value they place on girls and women in society. The Healthy Media for Youth Act will help ensure we are creating a positive media environment for all our children.”

The legislation would provide grants to encourage and support media literacy programs and youth empowerment groups, facilitate research on how depictions of women and girls in the media affect youth. It also would establish a National Taskforce on Women and Girls in the Media, intended to develop voluntary standards that promote healthy, balanced, and positive images of girls and women in the media.'

Woman charged with severing husband's penis gets mental evaluation

anthony · 16 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Garden Grove woman charged with cutting off her husband's penis is undergoing a psychiatric evaluation Thursday at the Orange County Jail.

Catherine Kieu Becker appeared in court Wednesday but did not enter a plea. The evaluation is fairly common in cases involving a unusually violent crime like this one.

"Given the nature of the offense, it's standard operating procedure," said Orange County sheriff's spokesman Jim Amormino.

...

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity because the case was ongoing, said the couple had argued earlier in the day and that the wife was angry at the husband over a relationship. Police said that when they confronted the woman, she said her husband "deserved it."'

~~Ed note: This is yet a different case from the one we have been discussing recently here on MANN.~~ -- Turns out that indeed, this is the same woman. So the chances of her getting away from liability for this on account of 'mental incapacity' have just gone up quite a bit. Men get prison, women get shrinks. Little changes.

Facebook Poster on Sexual Assault Has Navy Revamping Its Message

anthony · 16 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A controversial posting on the U.S. Navy's Facebook page meant to raise awareness on sexual assault prevention has followers asking, "Is this some kind of joke?"

The Navy says it's for real.
...
Facebook followers seemed stunned and at times offended by the obvious nature of the tips. The comment page is overflowing with followers who have harsh words for the Navy, many questioning its judgment.
...
The poster was not actually the brainchild of the Navy, but of a feminist blog called TumblinFeminist, whose most recent entry states, "I honestly feel as though you can not by definition be a feminist and be a Christian, unless you are a bad Christian- or a bad feminist. Christianity is inherently and undeniably sexist among countless other things."'

Please lodge this anti-circumcision submission with the Peace Corps (Deadline 25 July 2011)

Minuteman · 17 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This is a reply to the document “Agency Information Collection Activities; Proposals, Submissions, and Approvals” [regulations.gov Docket ID: PC-2011-0009] (http://www.regulations.gov/#!documentDetail;D=PC-2011-0009-0001).

Instructions:

Copy and paste the text below and email to pcfr-at-peacecorps.gov with the subject heading "Response to regulations.gov Docket ID: PC-2011-0009":

"Dear Denora Miller

Thank you for the opportunity to respond to the changes proposed in the document “Agency Information Collection Activities; Proposals, Submissions, and Approvals” [regulations.gov Docket ID: PC-2011-0009]. The focus of this response shall be on the Peace Corps promotion of the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision. Due to the fundamental human rights violations and physical injury caused by male circumcision, and for the sake of boy's and men’s sexual health, human dignity, and citizen equality, the Peace Corps must ensure that the proposed information collection activity screens out and excludes those individuals motivated exclusively (or near exclusively) to promote or participate in the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision.

The harm caused by circumcision

Circumcision removes the most sexually sensitive parts of a boy’s penis, including the foreskin, the frenulum, and the ridged band of nerves [1]. The male foreskin is also designed to protect the glans of the penis throughout a man’s life, ensuring that the internal mucosal tissue remains moist and sensitive (much the same way that a woman’s clitoral hood protects the clitoris). In addition, the foreskin acts as a natural gliding mechanism to reduce chafing and dryness during intercourse [2].

Regardless of whether it is performed in a medical or non-medical setting, a significant number of boys subjected to the practice of circumcision will later fulfill the DSM-IV criteria for a diagnosis of Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder [3].

No national medical association in the world recommends that boys be forcefully circumcised for preventive health reasons, not even in Israel, where the Journal of the Israeli Medical Association published an article highlighting the high prevalence of urinary tract infections among boys who had undergone ritual circumcision [4].

The Royal Dutch Medical Association's very up-to-date policy on circumcision states that "KNMG is calling upon doctors to actively and insistently inform parents who are considering the procedure of the absence of medical benefits and the danger of complications", and that there is a good case for making it illegal [5].

Circumcision tourism

Government tourism departments, tourism publications and private tourism agencies are actively promoting the spectacle of mass circumcision of boys and young men in public, frequently as an event separate from any other cultural celebrations. Tourism Malaysia actively promote sites where circumcision ceremonies are performed [6]. Public circumcisions being performed to entertain tourists have also been documented in Uganda, Madagascar, Kenya, Thailand and Tanzania [7-11]. An article and accompanying 'pictorial special' in Phuket Wan magazine left no doubt about the tourist market that public mass circumcision of boys and young men is aimed at:

'IT IS THE DAY the foreskins have to go. About 30 young boys are set for this once-in-a-lifetime occasion, under the knife.

...

Most seem to be extremely tolerant of public exposure of their bodies, as do their parents. This is, after all, a special occasion, a Sunrat, when boys aged four to nine lose their foreskins and join the path to adulthood.' [10]

Private tourism operators are not above appealing to that section of the tourist market drawn to such events:

'The extremely rare event that I was fortunate enough to witness is not only soul building, pride rearing and so completely admirable...it is, in a way, even beautiful.
If you would like more information on how to expereince (sic) something similar yourself, please contact...' [11]

Proponents of 'medical' mass circumcision programs have also acknowledged a fascination with 'traditional' and 'tribal' circumcision practices [12] and articles in the mainstream media of popular celebrities participating in medical missions exclusively (or near exclusively) to perform circumcisions have sought to legitimize this form of 'tourism' [13].

PEPFAR and the Peace Corps

The 'About Us' page of the Peace Corp website site enthusiastically extols the Peace Corps role in 'contributing to the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief' [14]. In an AIDS.gov blog post dated May 26 2011, the Director of the Office of National AIDS Policy acknowledged the role of the Peace Corps in helping PEPFAR 'scale up adult male circumcision' in Swaziland [15]. Inexplicably, the position of the Peace Corp has changed from recognizing unnecessary surgical procedures including circumcision as a risk factor for transmitting the HIV/AIDS virus in Uganda [16], to one of enthusiastic endorsement of circumcision as an HIV/AIDS preventative [17].

Action required

Due to the fundamental human rights violations and physical injury caused by male circumcision, and for the sake of boy's and men's sexual health, human dignity, and citizen equality, the Peace Corps must ensure that the proposed information collection activity screens out and excludes those individuals motivated exclusively (or near exclusively) to promote or participate in the harmful male genital mutilation known as circumcision.

References/Links

1. Morris L. Sorrells, James L. Snyder, Mark D. Reiss, Christopher Eden, Marilyn F. Milos, Norma Wilcox, Robert S. Van Howe Fine-touch pressure thresholds in the adult penis British Journal of Urology International, Volume 99 Issue 4 Page 864 – 869 April 2007 http://www.nocirc.org/touch-test/bju_6685.pdf

2. Taylor, J.P., A.P. Lockwood and A.J.Taylor The prepuce: Specialized mucosa of the penis and its loss to circumcision Journal of Urology (1996), 77, 291-295 http://www.cirp.org/library/anatomy/taylor/

3. Samuel Ramos and Gregory J. Boyle. Ritual and Medical Circumcision among Filipino boys: Evidence of Post-traumatic Stress Disorder Humanities & Social Sciences papers (2000). Available at: http://epublications.bond.edu.au/cgi/viewcontent.cgi?article=1120&context=hss_pubs

4. Toker O, Schwartz S, Segal G, Godovitch N, Schlesinger Y, Raveh D (2011) A costly covenant: ritual circumcision and urinary tract infection. Isr Med Assoc J. 2010 May;12(5):262-5 http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/20929075

5. KNMG (2010) Non-theraputic circumcision of male minors http://knmg.artsennet.nl/web/file?uuid=579e836d-ea83-410f-9889-feb7eda87cd5&owner=a8a9ce0e-f42b-47a5-960e-be08025b7b04&contentid=77976

6. Tourism Malaysia (2011) Istana Maziah, Terengganu http://www.tourism.gov.my/destinations/detail.php?theme=CH&map_code=istanamaziah&state=terengganu

7. Famous Worlds (2011) Uganda Famous Landmarks http://famouswonders.com/category/uganda/

8. Mapsoftheworld.com (2011) Festivals in Madagascar http://travel.mapsofworld.com/madagascar/festivals-in-madagascar/

9. Bruner, M & Kirshenblatt-Gimblett (1994) Maasi on the Lawn: Tourist Realism in East Africa in Cultural Anthropology Vol. 9 No. 4 (Nov., 1994) 435-470 http://www.nyu.edu/classes/bkg/tourist/maasai.pdf

10. Morison, A. (2010) Phuket's Mass Circumcision: Photo Special in Phuket Wan April 8, 2010 http://phuketwan.com/entertainment/phukets-mass-circumcision-photo-special-12341/

11. Stephen, B (2005) The Cutting Edge - Observation of a Maasai Male Circumcision Ceremony in Ezine Articles http://ezinearticles.com/?The-Cutting-Edge----Observation-of-a-Maasai-Male-Circumcision-Ceremony&id=84778

12. Curtis, D (2008) Florida Gators star quarterback Tim Tebow's legend grows when 'Dr. Tebow' assists with surgical procedures on a missionary trip to the Philippines. in Orlando Sentinel http://articles.orlandosentinel.com/2008-05-05/sports/tebow05_1_tim-tebow-philippines-general-santos-city

13. Henry, M (2010) Q & A: Rebecca Plank in Harvard School of Public Health AIDS initiative spotlight newsletter Winter 2010 http://www.aids.harvard.edu/news/spotlight/archives/v7i1_q&a_rebeca_plank.html

14. Peace Corps (2011) About Us Peace Corp website http://www.peacecorps.gov/index.cfm?shell=about

15. Crowley, J S (2011) My Visit to Swaziland: The Country with the World's Highest HIV Prevalence Rate on blog.AIDS.gov website http://blog.aids.gov/2011/05/my-visit-to-swaziland-the-country-with-the-world%E2%80%99s-highest-hiv-prevalence-rate.html?utm_source=feedburner&utm_medium=feed&utm_campaign=Feed%3A+aids%2Fgov+%28Blog.AIDS.gov%29

16. Peace Corps (2000) hiv/aids: integrating prevention and care into your sector Information Collection and Exchange Publication No. M0081 http://multimedia.peacecorps.gov/multimedia/pdf/library/M0081.pdf

17. Peace Corps (2011) Peace Corps/Uganda Supports PEPFAR in Delivering Facts about HIV to 25,000 Ugandans http://www.peacecorps.gov/index.cfm?shell=resources.media.press.view&news_id=1683 "

Electronic tagging could help fight violence against women

anthony · 17 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Experts confirm that Turkey is seeing a rise in the number of violent attacks against women by men, and women's rights groups suggest that one measure in the prevention of such violence could be the electronic monitoring of known abusers.

Although new laws and public awareness campaigns against domestic violence are being extensively employed, Turkey has so far failed to effectively address this seemingly growing problem.

Experts say a number of preventive measures, including family counseling, monitoring access to violent Internet content, and addressing alcohol-related or psychological issues, should be taken to keep domestic violence from occurring in the first place. However, the most important legal weapon battered women have is their confidence in the response of the authorities the first time they report abuse. But what happens after a woman's attacker is released? Experts say where restraining orders and other legal edicts fail, electronic handcuffs could work to prevent recurring domestic violence.

...
Tarhan said electronic tagging, which enables authorities to monitor the movements of a potential offender by attaching an electronic device to the person, is used extensively to track known abusers in many countries. “This greatly facilitates monitoring people who have no anger management skills. It would work. If this could be applied in Turkey, we would definitely see results. The potential abuser would be afraid to go to prison, and this could prevent violence. Of course, this can only be implemented by court order.”
...
Federation of Women's Associations of Turkey President Canan Güllü recently proposed the establishment of centers which would provide legal and medical assistance to female victims of violence in Turkish provinces. The prime minister has given the green light for the centers to open as part of the basic health services department of the Ministry of Health. Güllü also emphasized that police and the judiciary must have open and effective lines of communication at all times in order to prevent violence against women.'

Beauty salon is ‘sexist’ claims bodybuilder

anthony · 17 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HE HAS the bulging biceps and the glistening bronze tan.

But Hampshire bodybuilder Andrew Blohm got a shock when he tried to indulge himself in a bit more of the personal beauty treatment.

The 5ft 6in bodybuilder wanted to look his best for the Solent City Bodybuilding Competition but claims he is the victim of sexism when a beauty salon refused to serve him.

He said: “I just wanted a facial and to stick my feet in a bowl of fish. They gave me all the details about the treatment but I was then told I could not have them done because I was a man.”'

Austin Scott's lawsuit over false rape claim is tossed by federal judges

anthony · 17 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A federal judge issued a ruling Monday dismissing former Penn State University and Parkland High School running back Austin Scott's civil lawsuit against police, prosecutors and his accuser in a 2007 rape case.

The lawsuit claimed that Scott was the victim of conspiracy and malicious prosecution when he was charged with rape in October 2007. The lawsuit, which sought $150 million in damages, also claimed that authorities knew about Desiree Minder's questionable credibility and withheld that information.

While the federal claims were dismissed, Scott's lawyer, Benjamin Lichtman, said he might bring the case to the Third Circuit Court of Appeals. There are also several state claims, such as false arrest and malicious prosecution, that U.S. District Judge William W. Caldwell refused to address and dismissed without prejudice.'

Putting together a sports team of winners? Men need not apply

anthony · 17 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If I was asked to assemble a team of American athletes to compete against similarly composed teams from the rest of the world in any sport, the most important decision would be the easiest.

I would take a team of women.

I would take our women not only because Title IX has empowered them into a huge advantage over the rest of the world, but also because they consistently win in ways that our men sometimes neglect or ignore.
...
Go ahead, pull my man card. This is as plain as the grit in Abby Wambach's stare, and anyone who watches both men's and women's sports knows it.
...
Men often complain about misfortune, women often figure out a way around it. Men sometimes take shortcuts, women make the extra pass.'

A Feminist Economist Speaks Out: Deficits are a Grrrl's Best Friend

Broadsword · 17 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Listen up, sisters! Deficit hawks will eat your lunch, your kids, your jobs and your retirement. An economy without a deficit is like a fish without water. Reducing the U.S. federal deficit will make unemployment and poverty worse–way worse. And that means that women's economic condition will deteriorate even further. Today's deficit hawks (and way too many Democrats are flying with this flock), fundamentally and deliberately misinform by insisting on a fictional symmetry between private sector (household and corporate) bookkeeping and the U.S. federal debt.

...

The mantra that "the budget must be balanced" is a throwback to the 19th century, originating from the same outmoded economic thinking that justifies women's lower wages.

Here are the facts: U.S. government borrowing creates interest-bearing assets. The bonds are bought with dollars, the interest on them is paid in dollars and, at maturity, the bonds are paid off in dollars. Since the U.S. government is both sovereign in its own currency and the sole issuer of dollars, it can never run out of them. How could it?

Don't think printing presses here: Federal debts are paid off by Treasury clerks making a few clicks on computer keyboards—keyboards identical to the one I'm typing on now.'

Time.com: Sex, Lies, Arrogance: What Makes Powerful Men Behave So Badly?

Matt · 17 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Dated May 19, 2011, we missed this one. Look at the cover of the issue, here. Could it be any more offensive? Hardly a peep of objection that I can see. Heck, no one even seems to have noticed. Excerpt:

'But in any event, the arrest of Strauss-Kahn in New York City for allegedly trying to rape a hotel maid has ignited a fierce debate over sex, law, power and privilege. And it is only just beginning. The night of Strauss-Kahn's arraignment, former California governor Arnold Schwarzenegger admitted that the reason his wife Maria Shriver walked out earlier this year was the discovery that he had fathered a child more than a decade ago with a former member of the household staff. The two cases are far apart: only one man was hauled off to jail. But both suggest an abuse of power and a betrayal of trust. And both involve men whose long-standing reputations for behaving badly toward women did not derail their rise to power. Which raises the question: How can it be, in this ostensibly enlightened age, when men and women live and work as peers and are schooled regularly in what conduct is acceptable and what is actionable, that anyone with so little judgment, so little honor, could rise to such heights?
...

The Guardian on The Rape of Men in Congo

Anonymous · 18 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

A friend of mine sent me this. Excerpt:

'Sexual violence is one of the most horrific weapons of war, an instrument of terror used against women. Yet huge numbers of men are also victims. In this harrowing report, Will Storr travels to Uganda to meet traumatised survivors, and reveals how male rape is endemic in many of the world's conflicts.

...

Of all the secrets of war, there is one that is so well kept that it exists mostly as a rumour. It is usually denied by the perpetrator and his victim. Governments, aid agencies and human rights defenders at the UN barely acknowledge its possibility. Yet every now and then someone gathers the courage to tell of it. This is just what happened on an ordinary afternoon in the office of a kind and careful counsellor in Kampala, Uganda. For four years Eunice Owiny had been employed by Makerere University's Refugee Law Project (RLP) to help displaced people from all over Africa work through their traumas. This particular case, though, was a puzzle. A female client was having marital difficulties. "My husband can't have sex," she complained. "He feels very bad about this. I'm sure there's something he's keeping from me."

...

Because there has been so little research into the rape of men during war, it's not possible to say with any certainty why it happens or even how common it is – although a rare 2010 survey, published in the Journal of the American Medical Association, found that 22% of men and 30% of women in Eastern Congo reported conflict-related sexual violence. As for Atim, she says: "Our staff are overwhelmed by the cases we've got, but in terms of actual numbers? This is the tip of the iceberg."

...

Considering Dolan's finding that "female rape is significantly underreported and male rape almost never", I ask Stemple if, following her research, she believes it might be a hitherto unimagined part of all wars. "No one knows, but I do think it's safe to say that it's likely that it's been a part of many wars throughout history and that taboo has played a part in the silence."

As I leave Uganda, there's a detail of a story that I can't forget. Before receiving help from the RLP, one man went to see his local doctor. He told him he had been raped four times, that he was injured and depressed and his wife had threatened to leave him. The doctor gave him a Panadol.'

- Gogonostop

Why are we afraid of male sexuality?

anthony · 18 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is there anything good to be said about male sexuality? That might seem a daft question. Apparently it brings a lot of pleasure and excitement to the lives of men and women alike, it's inspired some of the greatest art, music and literature through the ages and has played a fairly substantial role in sustaining our species and populating the planet. Nonetheless you'll need to search very, very hard to find any positive appraisal of male heterosexuality.

Since the era of the permissive society and the mainstreaming of modern feminism, western society has gone a long way towards liberating women's sexuality. Younger women have, to an unprecedented extent, been encouraged to believe they can be as sexual as they like and to experience and express their desires as they wish. Even the age-old proscriptions on female promiscuity have been largely broken down, exemplified by the glorious flowering of the SlutWalk movement.

Simultaneously, and perhaps not coincidentally, male sexuality has been increasingly seen as a problem. You can hear it in the gentle, dismissive mockery that says men are simple creatures who "only want one thing" or, at the extreme, outright vilification. The male gaze threatens, male desire is aggressive. Our primal instincts are pathologised with the jargon of gender studies. Righteous and necessary efforts to reduce sexual crimes have had the unwelcome effect of teaching generations of men that our sexuality can be dangerous and frightening.'

Dr. Phil's Blooper Shows Need for DV Accreditation

Matt · 18 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Dr. Phillip McGraw, aka "Dr. Phil," was the lead witness at last Wednesday's Senate VAWA hearing. His testimony featured this forehead-slapper: "Domestic violence is now the most common cause of injury to women ages 15 to 44."

But the National Hospital Ambulatory Medical Care Survey says the leading cause of injuries to women is motor vehicle accidents. Domestic violence is ninth on the list, accounting for a grand total of 2.2% of all injuries to women. (You can see the complete listing here: http://www.responsibleopposing.com/facts/leadcaus.html)

Unfortunately, such wild distortions are commonplace. According to the SAVE report, "Most DV Educational Programs Lack Accuracy, Balance, and Truthfulness," 90% of DV educational and training programs fold, spindle, or otherwise mutilate the truth: http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/SAVE-DV-Educational-Programs

The solution? Accreditation. SAVE's Partner Violence Reduction Act features this requirement for federal grantees:

"Applicants must certify that all training, education, and public awareness training programs and activities, including each of its instructional manuals, curricula, handouts, and other informational content, are currently accredited by an independent Training, Education, and Public Awareness Accreditation Organization, as defined in Section 3(a)(29) of this Act; that the Training, Education, and Public Awareness Accreditation Organization is allowed to conduct audits of said training and education sessions; and that evidence of said accreditation is made publicly available on the organization's website."

This week we are asking you to contact Sen. Leahy's office and urge him to include the requirement for DV accreditation in the upcoming VAWA reauthorization. In your email, mention the gross inaccuracy of Dr. McGraw's testimony and ask that your request be included as public testimony for the July 13 hearing of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Email your testimony to Anya McMurray at Anya_McMurray-at-Judiciary-dem.senate.gov. Make sure your statement is respectful and polite.

The deadline to receive public testimony is this coming Wednesday, July 20.

Teri C. Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments

SAVE is a non-partisan 501(c)3 victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to domestic violence.

First-Place Sweep by American Girls at First Google Science Fair - Gender not a factor?

Matt · 19 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

And girls are doing so poorly in math and science? Article here. Note how one of the judges says gender was not a factor but that he was 'secretly very pleased' that all the winners were girls. Gender, not a factor? Excerpt:

'Girls swept all three age categories in the competition, a contrast to generations past when women were largely excluded* from the science world.

“Personally I think that’s amazing, because throughout my entire life, I’ve heard science is a field where men go into,” Ms. Bose said. “It just starts to show you that women are stepping up in science, and I’m excited that I was able to represent maybe just a little bit of that.” She will start her senior year of high school in the fall.

“At the end, we were like, ‘Yeah, girl power!’ ” said Naomi Shah of Portland, Ore., who won the age 15-16 category with a study of the effects of air quality on lungs, particularly for people who have asthma. Ms. Shah recruited 103 test subjects, performed 24-hour air quality measurements at their homes and workplaces and had each blow into a device that measured the force of their breath.
...

Vint Cerf, Google’s chief Internet evangelist and one of the judges, said that gender did not play a role in deciding the winners. “This was a gender-neutral evaluation of all the work that was done,” he said. Nonetheless, “I was secretly very pleased to see that happen,” Dr. Cerf said. “This is just a reminder that women are fully capable of doing same or better quality work than men can.”'

*"excluded"? Umm, what? Some names: Marie Curie, Joy Adamson, Maria Agnesi, Elizabeth Garrett Anderson, Virginia Apgar, Clara Barton, Laura Maria Caterina Bassi, Ruth Benedict, Elizabeth Blackwell, etc., etc., etc., and the list goes on. You'd think certain people actually wanted people to think women were in fact excluded from the sciences for... what reason? You decide.

No Murder Charge for Wife of Accused Pharmacy Killer, Indicted on First-Degree Robbery

anthony · 19 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An indictment was unsealed Tuesday charging Melinda Brady with first-degree robbery in connection with the pharmacy massacre that claimed four lives and stunned Long Island last month, prosecutors said.

She will not face murder charges in the quadruple killings on Father's Day.

Police say Brady, a known pain pill addict and the wife of accused killer David Laffer, was the getaway driver in the shootings. Prosecutors say the pair hatched a plan to rob a Medford, N.Y. pharmacy of painkillers; Laffer is also accused of gunning down four people inside.

Suffolk County District Attorney Thomas Spota said Tuesday that Brady could not be charged with murder because she was not aware her husband had a gun when he went into the pharmacy.'

CNN: Would female leaders solve debt crisis?

anthony · 19 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Odds are that if there were more women in these discussions, the crisis would have been resolved by now.
...
Women use both sides of their brain more effectively and thus are naturally hardwired to be better communicators, more creative problem solvers and in moments of stress, less likely to walk out of meetings -- debt-ceiling variety and others -- than men.

Furthermore, testosterone not only prompts a fight-or-flight response to stress, it suppresses oxytocin, the hormone that encourages bonding and positive social behavior.
...
Nearly 85% of the people in Congress are men. So if you ever wonder why these debt ceiling negotiations appear to have an inordinate amount of chest-pounding and tree spraying, that number -- more than the $14 trillion we owe -- seems like the best place to start.'

F&F: Holstein Criticizes New Ohio Supreme Court's Lesbian Partner/Child Custody Decision in Columbus Dispatch

Matt · 19 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

"Fathers and Families has no position on same-sex marriage. But we do have a position on same-sex 'divorce.'

Once a child has bonded with two adults as her parents, she is deeply and often permanently hurt by the sudden, court-ordered absence of one of her parents, regardless of the parents' sexual orientation…"

Fathers and Families Board Chairman Ned Holstein, MD, MS criticizes the new Ohio Supreme Court's lesbian partner/child custody decision in his new column Kids with two parents need both, even in breakup (Columbus Dispatch, 7/18/11).

We suggest you write a Letter to the Editor of the Columbus Dispatch, a 200,000 circulation newspaper in Ohio's capital, by writing to letters-at-dispatch.com.

Giuliani Tells F & F: ‘Family Courts Absolutely Need Reform’

Matt · 19 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families’ Election 2012 Campaign activists attended New Hampshire GOP events this week and asked former New York mayor Rudy Giuliani, a 2008 and potential 2012 presidential candidate, about family court reform. Giuliani told F & F activist Shawn Gliklich, MD “family courts absolutely need reform,” and expressed interest in meeting with F & F.

Giuliani told Dr. Gliklich that he sees family law as a state matter, rather than a federal one. Giuliani is for the most part correct, however, there are many things the federal government could do to promote shared custody and undermine the current sole custody to mom norm.

The federal government helps shape states’ policies in many areas by the disbursement or withholding of federal reimbursement funds. It works the same way with family law—the federal government reimburses the states billions of dollars each year in child support collection funds. A pro-shared parenting administration could greatly encourage shared parenting by tying those funds to progress in enacting shared parenting laws, implementing and encouraging shared parenting arrangements, and enforcing visitation orders.'

‘The Talk’ ladies under fire for laughing at Catherine Kieu story

anthony · 20 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The ladies of “The Talk,” CBS’s answer to “The View,” have come under fire for laughing during a segment about Catherine Kieu, the California woman accused of cutting of her husband’s private part and disposing of it in a particularly gruesome way after he asked for a divorce.

“I don’t know the circumstances,” host Sharon Osbourne said. “However, I do think it’s quite fabulous.” What sounded like the entire audience began to laugh.

The other panelists — Leah Remini, Julie Chen, Holly Robinson Peete and Sara Gilbert — didn’t revel in the story quite as much. But all of the hosts let out at least a small chuckle during the conversation.

Gilbert pointed out that the conversation could be perceived as sexist. “Not to be a total buzz kill,” Gilbert began, “but it is a little bit sexist. If somebody cut a woman’s breast off, nobody would be sitting laughing.”

“It’s different,” Osbourne said, before comparing the two parts of the anatomy.'

Female high school teacher accused of having sex with five male students changes plea to not guilty because of insanity

anthony · 20 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former high school physical education teacher accused of having sex with five male students is changing her plea from not guilty to not guilty by reason of insanity.

Stacy Schuler, 33, of Springboro, Ohio, had been indicted on 16 counts of sexual battery and three counts of offenses involving underage persons.

She allegedly had sexual relations at her home with the five students, mostly football players at the high school, on five separate occasions from August to December of 2010.
...

Unmarried Schuler, 33, will have to be examined by one or more psychologists or psychiatrists, the Dayton Daily News reports.

Under Ohio law, a person is considered insane if they are suffering from a mental defect and doesn't know right from wrong.

Mr Rittgers said the examination of Schuler will be to determine if she is competent to stand trial.'

Study: Women bigger sexters than men

anthony · 20 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is it pride in pulchritude? Is it pressure from the opposite sex? Or might it even be that not so many people like to see men naked?

In an intellectually titled piece of research--"Let My Fingers Do the Talking: Sexting and Infidelity in Cyberspace"--Diane Kholos Wysocki, a professor of sociology and women's studies at the University of Nebraska at Kearney, and Cheryl D. Childers, a professor of sociology at Washburn University, create a snapshot that some might find intuitive and some might find depressing.

Their numerical conclusions appear clear: two-thirds of the women surveyed said that they sexted. Only half of the men did. And women were more likely to send nude pictures of themselves out across the Internets. One might imagine that this correlates just vaguely with the preponderance of images of naked women in magazines wrapped in plastic, or that appear on the Web's vast number of sexually explicit sites.
...

Our two professors, however, feel excited that their work seems to point out not just a technological tendency but some deeper vein in our culture.

"Cheating is alive and well, and sexting is on the rise." Dr. Wysocki told The New York Times. "But I don't believe the Internet is causing people to cheat. There seems to be something going on with marriage that's the bigger social issue. Before, people would just get a divorce. For some reason, people are staying and cheating instead."'

Birth control coverage, HIV testing proposed for most health insurance plans excludes men

anthony · 20 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I'm assuming men will not be covered for domestic violence counseling. Last I checked, men also get HIV and would certainly benefit from an annual wellness exam. Excerpt:

'Virtually all health insurance plans could soon be required to offer female patients free coverage of prescription birth control, breast-pump rentals, counseling for domestic violence, and annual wellness exams and HIV tests as a result of recommendations released Tuesday by an independent advisory panel of health experts.

The health-care law adopted last year directed the Obama administration to draw up a list of preventive services for women that all new health plans must cover without deductibles or co-payments. While the guidelines suggested Tuesday by a committee of the National Academy of Sciences' Institute of Medicine are not binding, the panel conducted its year-long review at the request of Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius.'

Video - Wendy Williams Claims 'Penis Disposal' Was 'Efficient'

anthony · 20 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'Wendy Williams, the American television personality, chatting with reporters outside Boa's Steakhouse in Beverly Hills, Los Angeles. Williams, wearing an elegant purple dress, was quizzed on the recent story about a Californian woman drugging her husband and chopping off his penis before dumping it in the garbage disposal.

Williams sympathized with the woman, saying, "When you cross a woman.all is fair". She later joked, "It was more efficient then throwing it in a field, where they could pick it up. Dispose of it the right way". Los Angeles, California - 15.07.2011'

Wendy William's web site: http://www.wendyshow.com/
Contact info: here.

Woman Throws Husband's Penis in Disposal: Hey, While You're At It ...

anthony · 20 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If I had a nickel for every time my wife threatened to knock me out, cut off my penis and throw it in the garbage disposal...

I heard the news yesterday. Well actually I overheard it. Some gals around the office were chortling about the husband in Garden Grove whose wife doped his victuals, strapped him to the bed, hacked off his willy with a carving knife and chucked the severed member in the disposal because "he deserved it." I didn't learn the details of the story until I got home last night and it seemed to me such a grizzly thing oughtn't to provoke workplace giggles, but ought or not, there's a good dose of funny about it.'

Tell UNAIDS & the WHO: Circumcision does not prevent AIDS!

Matt · 20 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Key policy makers from around the world are convening THIS WEEK in Rome for the International AIDS Society's annual conference. Thanks to the generosity of Intact America's supporters, we are there, calling upon the governing bodies of the World Health Organization (WHO) and UNAIDS to acknowledge the truth: circumcision does not prevent AIDS.

It's critical that UNAIDS and the WHO stop supporting mass circumcisions, and accept the fact that there are other, better ways to fight the HIV epidemic. We've created a petition to help them get that message.

Will you make your voice heard, and sign our petition today?

We know that safe sexual practices and abstinence—not circumcision—prevent HIV. But the practice of mass circumcision persists. That's why we'll be on the ground in Rome, talking with health professionals and community activists, and telling them the truth about circumcision:

- Circumcision is NOT a vaccine
- Other effective means exist to prevent HIV transmission
- Male circumcision puts women at risk
- Mass circumcision campaigns squander limited resources

We need your help to make sure that UNAIDS and the World Health Organization get the message that the mass practice of circumcision is an unethical and dangerous distraction in the battle against HIV and AIDS.

Sign our petition today, and help us change the way the world thinks about circumcision!

Thank you for your continued energy and support!

Sincerely,

Georganne Chapin
Executive Director, Intact America
www.intactamerica.org

Seems we are not alone in our disgust toward The Talk/CBS and in our demands for redress

Matt · 20 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Google these words (without quotes): "the talk cbs penis sexism" and see the results. There are several Facebook Group pages set up in an effort to get an appropriate level of apology from CBS (one is here). Another Facebook Group has specific instructions on how to complain to the FCC (Kris, this one's for you!) about the episode here. Let's keep the momentum going!

My own take is that heads need to roll over this issue. Apologies don't strike me as good enough. Osbourne needs to go, possibly others. As for the audience that day-- well, they need male-issues sensitivity training, but I doubt they'll get it any time soon.

A Voice for Men: How Funny is a Mutilated Vagina?

Matt · 20 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are many who deny we live in an age where maleness, where masculinity has been so devalued as to be commonly regarded as Subhuman. Where male sexuality is treated with such revulsion and contempt, that major television personalities feel completely free to make light...no, to outright revel in glee at a man being poisoned, tied up, and having his penis cut off, then ground to a pulp, by his wife, because he wanted a Divorce.

These same major television personalities that ROUTINELY cry about 'Battered Women' are making light of the poisoning, kidnapping, and torture of a man for wanting a Divorce. In an age of No Fault Divorce, which was instituted at Feminist behest. They do not hide their glee at all, in fact Sharon Osbourne (the wife of Ozzy) even makes mixing motions with her hands, simulating a garbage disposal, and calls the whole thing 'delightful'.

The appalling hatred of men is not only not hidden, but outright FLAUNTED.'

UK: Teen girl diet ticking time bomb

Minuteman · 21 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

The madness spreads. Link here. Excerpt:

'Teenage eating habits are poor, with teenage girls worse, risking long-term effects on their health according to new Department of Health data published today.

The National Diet and Nutrition Survey, which was led by the National Centre for Social Research and MRC Human Nutrition Research, found that teenage girls are only eating half their recommended portions of fruit and veg. And just 56 per cent of teenage girls are getting enough iron in their diet.

While both teenage boys and girls are failing to get their recommended 5-a-day of fruit and veg, girls eat on average half a portion less each day than boys. The findings build on previous surveys and highlight that poor eating habits risk storing up a number of potential problems for later life, such as heart disease and some cancers.'

Sharon Osbourne Makes Insincere Apology about Laughing at the Cutting Off of Men's Penises

anthony · 21 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here

'Sharon Osbourne is controversial, there's no doubt about it. So when a new story surfaced, telling of how Catherine Becker lopped off her man's penis and tossed it in a garbage disposal, she had to have her say.

And like any other normal person on the planet, Sharon doesn't think it's a good idea to sever your guy's goody parts. Good. I mean, who does that?!??

Firstly, on the show, Sharon had a laugh at the man's expense, saying that she thinks "it's quite fabulous", after admitting that she doesn't know the circumstances or why he filed for divorce. She also referred to it as "hysterical".
...
Now, she has issued an apology, saying, "I do not condone genital mutilation and I didn't mean any harm by laughing about it and I'm sorry that I offended people cause that's not my intention or the intention of the show – it's not what we are about."'

Forbes: Feminism Can’t Divorce Its Debt To Capitalism

anthony · 21 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While feminism today spans the political spectrum, its most radical proponents were spawned by the same cultural Marxism covered here previously. Feminism ostensibly focused on promoting women, but in practice attacked the traditional family through the sexual revolution, abortion on demand and no-fault divorce. None of which elevates women.

Feminism as exemplified by NOW, and many Women’s Studies professors at universities, interpret life by dividing society between oppressors and oppressed. Like many of their leftist comrades, these self-proclaimed women’s advocates inevitably champion dependence on government intervention or wealth redistribution: gender based affirmative action, legislating away the “wage gap,” and publicly funded daycare.
...
As capitalism endured growing pains, early factories were not the bastions of comfort and ergonomics workers know today. Labor was difficult and often dangerous. Hours were demanding. Conveniences were rare. Early cottage industries and even many factories such as the textile mills in Lowell, Mass., mainly employed women, but young ladies desiring better lives smartly extricated themselves from the workplace.

The Industrial Revolution showered great wealth on many families opening previously unattainable opportunities. Women often sought husbands capable of affording them the chance to manage the home. Finally, women could stay home and care for their own children instead of fighting their way through the world.

But the markets marched onward. Modern workplaces improved — air-conditioned offices, ergonomic tools, shorter hours and better compensation — and timesaving inventions such as vacuums, microwaves and dishwashers improved the dynamics of housework. Free markets birthed advances like baby formula and disposable diapers, further extending the feasible alternatives.

As housework became less consuming and workplaces became more appealing wives opted back in. Today both spouses can enter the workforce while maintaining comfortable living conditions and regular diets. Whether parents stay home and who that might be is nobody else’s concern, but bashing ancestors for not following paths that didn’t then exist is foolish.'

Male bashing on TV must stop

anthony · 21 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm getting tired of TV depicting men as small-minded, beer-drinking, softball-playing, girl-ogling, knuckle-dragging oafs who can't do anything for themselves.

More and more, ad agencies, the companies that hire them and the networks are depicting men and dads who can't function in society without help. And while we need help from the women in our lives from time to time, there are plenty of high functioning guys in real life who hold down jobs, who make excellent decisions and who don't waste their days playing video games and sitting on their couch eating salami sandwiches.'

Sharon Osbourne demonstrates innate(?) female misandry on The Talk

anthony · 21 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Commentary here.

No felony charge for woman, 61 accused of 'groping a TSA agent's left breast'

anthony · 21 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 61-year-old woman who was been arrested for groping a female Transportation Security Administration agent's breast will not face felony charges.

An Arizona district attorney has decided to turn the case of Yukari Miyamae - who allegedly violently groped a TSA agent's breast in a Phoenix airport - over to city prosecutors.

Ms Miyamae was at Sky Harbor Airport in Phoenix flying home to Colorado when she allegedly grabbed the agent's 'left breast through her clothing, squeezing and twisting it with both hands without the victim's permission,' according to police.'

Stop the Presses: Rep. Poe Calls for Gender-Neutral VAWA

Matt · 21 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

This news just hit the street...Rep. Ted Poe (R-TX) has just called for making the Violence Against Women Act gender neutral.

According to a Washington Times article, Congressman Poe "says he would now support re-writing the legislation as gender neutral....I'm open to changing the name. Domestic Violence Act. I like that phrase."

The article goes on to note, "Mr. Poe also supports replacing the word 'woman' in the legislation to a non-gender specific term like 'person' or 'men and women' or 'men or women.'"

We urge each person reading this Elert to contact Rep. Poe's office right away at 202-225-6565 and express your support for making VAWA gender-inclusive.

SAVE's Partner Violence Reducation Act calls for all provisions of VAWA, including its name, to be made sex-neutral. Rep. Poe is the first national lawmaker to speak out publicly in support of such a change.

The full Washington Times article can be seen here:
http://www.washingtontimes.com/blog/watercooler/2011/jul/21/picket-vawa-supporter-capitol-hill-looks-have-law-/

Sincerely,

Teri

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Is Prison Better for Black Men's Health?

anthony · 21 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. A federal office dedicated to men's health is long overdue. Excerpt:

'Public health researchers from Vanderbilt University studied death patterns among prisoners and found that Black men in prison die at much lower rates than Black men who are not in prison.

In the American Journal of Epidemiology, the authors wrote:

"Based on the relatively poor health of incarcerated populations and the high mortality rates seen after release, one might predict that inmates would also suffer from high mortality while incarcerated. A recent Bureau of Justice Statistics report, however, showed that while incarcerated, inmates aged 15–64 years experience 19 percent lower mortality than comparably aged controls in the general population; among Blacks, mortality for prisoners is 43 percent lower than age-adjusted mortality for the general Black population."

Forty-three percent is shocking and somewhat ridiculous. What about prison—a place where 850,000 Black men and women million [sic] Black men are housed—is "better" for Black men's lives?

Well the no-duh answer is that health care for Black men in this country is so horrible and so scarce that too many Black men go undiagnosed with their ailments and are not on needed treatment. It seems like the only place where many Black men are accessing health care is when they are locked up.'

Got apology? Milk board cans 'sexist' campaign

Matt · 22 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Not quite a win-- the prevailing idea is that the sexism is directed against women when it is in fact directed against both sexes while making men out to be buffoons and helpless dolts. Excerpt:

'California milk producers have yanked a widely criticized ad campaign that poked fun at premenstrual syndrome and the way men supposedly suffer from the monthly cycles of their wives and girlfriends.

"Over the past couple of weeks, regrettably, some people found our campaign about milk and PMS to be outrageous and misguided — and we apologize to those we offended," the California Milk Processor Board says on its website. "Others thought it funny and educational. It has opened up a topic that affects women, of course, but also relationships."

Instead of abandoning the campaign completely, the milk producers are extending it by seeking to capitalize on the controversy surrounding it. They've put up a new website titled "got discussion?" featuring pro and con views and inviting people to join the discussion.

The original campaign, titled "Everything I Do Is Wrong," directed men to a website that featured pictures of puzzled men and aimed to help them with a color-coded "current global PMS level," a "video apology enhancer" and a "mistake verification system," among other features.'

Climate Change Could Hurt Teen Girls The Most

Broadsword · 22 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LONDON (AlertNet) - At the intersection of two of the world's most vulnerable groups – children and women - adolescent girls may end up bearing the biggest burden of climate change impacts, according to a new report.

In times of economic hardship - often caused by droughts, floods or other natural disasters - girls regularly suffer from a lack educational opportunities, sexual violence, and early and forced marriages, all consequences of what the report calls “the double jeopardy brought on by gender and age.”

While recent research shows that women and children deserve special attention in climate change legislation, “girls often fall out between both camps,” according to Kanwal Ahluwalia, a co-author of the study and an expert in gender-equality policy with Plan UK, a children’s charity.

In many countries, women’s relatively stifled freedoms put them in harm’s way when it comes to climate change, she said.'

Mother fed alcohol to four-year-old and 10-month-old children

Minuteman · 23 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A mother allegedly let her four-year old son chug a bottle of beer and fed her 10-month-old daughter booze in a Connecticut playground.

Juliette Dunn, 29, has been charged with two counts of risk of injury to a child and two counts second-degree assault after a neighbour saw her in the playground and complained to police on June 28, the Connecticut Post reports.

A 33-year-old woman who was with Ms Dunn in the playground, Lisa Jefferson, was arrested on the same charges.

The children were taken to Bridgeport Hospital where they both tested positive for alcohol. The baby girl also tested positive for cocaine.

Witnesses told police they had seen Ms Jefferson hand the beer to her friend's son and order him to scull it, calling him an "alcoholic" when he finished.'

Sharon Osbourne: “I Hope Homme’s Penis Falls Off!”

anthony · 23 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This dates back to 2007 but I'm noticing a trend.

'Sharon Osbourne has let rip on Queens Of The Stone Age frontman Josh Homme, saying that she hopes his manhood drops off and gets eaten by, am, his mum.

Sharona vicious tirade, which well bring you more of in a second, follows Hommes remark about Ozzfest, the festival run by Mr Osbourne, aka Ozzy.

The QOTSA man said that he'd never play the festival again because They treat bands like sh*t.

In response, Sharon raised the bar on bad taste, and wished him the following: "I hope he gets syphilis and dies, Sharon cheerfully told Blender magazine. "I hope his dick fu*king falls off so his mother can eat it."

Ouch.'

The Noble Lie, Feminist Style

anthony · 23 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The phenomenon of false rape allegations is an ultimate feminist taboo; indeed, leading feminist legal theorist Catharine MacKinnon has stated that “feminism is built on believing women’s accounts of sexual use and abuse by men.” In some instances of political correctness run amok at universities, students and professors have been accused of “harassment” for so much as raising the possibility of false accusations in class or in online discussions. While orthodox feminists grudgingly admit that women sometimes make false reports of rape, they insist that such cases represent a minuscule share of all complaints and that to give them much attention is to perpetuate misogynistic “rape myths” and revictimize real victims.

...

Nonetheless, the fact remains that women do lie about rape much more often than the feminist party line allows. Advocacy literature typically claims that about 2 percent of rape complaints are found to be false, the same rate as for reports of other violent crimes. But that figure seems to have no basis in research. According to the FBI, about 9 percent of rape reports are dismissed as “unfounded,” without charges being filed. While advocates claim that this is often because the authorities lack proof or distrust reports of acquaintance rape, dismissals due to insufficient evidence usually occur further down the pipeline. Generally, an “unfounded” complaint is one in which the accuser recants or her story is contradicted by available evidence.

...

While Kanin has cautioned against generalizing from his research, his conclusion that “false rape accusations are not uncommon” is supported by other evidence. Some years ago, a Washington Post investigation in Virginia and Maryland found that nearly one in four rape reports in 1990-91 were rejected as unfounded, and many of the women in those cases admitted they had lied when the newspaper contacted them. In several surveys of prosecutors and law enforcement officials, estimates of the share of rape complaints that turn out to be false have ranged from one in eight to one in five.'

Bryant Gumbel sees a women’s sports double standard

anthony · 23 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the wake of the U.S. women’s soccer team losing the World Cup final to Japan last weekend, Bryant Gumbel of HBO Sports asked: “Can we stop coddling women in sports? Are we now so fearful of being labelled sexist that we can’t objectively assess the efforts of female athletes?”

Most [male] American reporters did adopt the ‘Gee, they-kick-the-ball-pretty-well-for-girls’ approach, dodging serious criticism of the U.S. players dropping the WC Final. Others followed Mitch Albom of the Detroit Free Press, extolling the high calibre of the tournament, saying he’s now a convert to women’s soccer. Few besides Gumbel ripped the team for allowing the underdog Japanese to win - a distinction they shared with Japan’s other victims, it might be added.

“Had a men’s team turned in a similar performance,” Gumbel said on the season premiere of HBO’s Real Sports, “papers and pundits nationwide would have had a field day assailing the players, criticizing the coach, and demanding widespread changes to a men’s national team that flat-out choked. Yet the common reactions to this ladies’ loss were simply expressions of empathy for the defeat of the unfortunate darlings and pride in their oh-so-heroic effort.”'

'Well, excuse us as we objectify men'

anthony · 23 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In relation to the issue, my friend Lourisse informs me that she's delighted to say that HBO has finally started exercising their right to feature male frontal nudity, a move she considers long overdue since the network is known for an extensive liberal serving of exposed women's breasts and other lewd sexual content. We toast to the progressive move of HBO's genitalia-on-air, followed by a collective promise to one day achieve our goal of being able to objectify men, just as they do to women.
...
At this point in time, and especially in this society, we all agree that it's about time women have equal rights to objectify men. Not to say that the objectification of the human body and sexuality is by any means correct — it's just that we've seen women over and over again being misrepresented and exploited on public advertisements, and for the first time Bench is actually giving us women that equal right to ogle at men and make them feel like fine pieces of meat.'

UK push for girl power on Boards of Directors

anthony · 23 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LONDON - The UK government published a code of conduct drawn up by executive-search firms aimed at boosting the number of women on company boards, including a recommendation that 30 per cent of candidates be female.

“When presenting their long lists, search firms should ensure that at least 30 per cent of the candidates are women — and, if not, should explicitly justify to the client why they are convinced there are no other qualified female options,” according to the voluntary guidelines announced on Friday by the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills in London.

Nineteen leading headhunting firms have pledged to sign up to the code for future boardroom appointments, the BIS said. Among the signatories are Korn/Ferry Whitehead Mann, the UK arm of Korn/Ferry International.

A panel led by Mervyn Davies, the ex-chairman of Standard Chartered Plc, recommended in February that companies in the UK’s benchmark FTSE 100 index should double the proportion of women on their boards to 25 per cent. It said shareholders should hold companies to account if they fail to appoint more women.'

'Loving The Talk'

anthony · 24 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I always agree with Sharon Osbourne, who is English and outrageous. Lately they were discussing the second Lorena Bobbit case in the USA but it's a woman with a different, difficult name. Anyway this woman cut off her husband's organ and (learning from Lorena who threw it out of her car window thus her husband could retrieve it and a surgeon sew it back) threw it down her garbage disposal unit. In the USA every sink comes with a garbage disposal unit, which liquifies whatever you throw down it and you turn on the running water. Now let's see if there's a doctor who can sew a liquified thing back on!

Well, that was a funny show. Sharon Osbourne completely defended the woman, feeling she was right to do what she did. Did she tell the woman to do it? No, the woman already did it. The Talk was just commenting. Could they have prevented it from happening? No, they did not control the woman. As I remember it the discussion brought laughter to the five women so when I watched it on Wednesday morning and saw the women apologizing for the irreverence they showed genital mutilation, I was upset. What happened to you? I wanted to ask. Did some activist accuse you of supporting genital mutilation and the network decided they did not want to offend activists so they asked you to apologize? Or did some male network executive decide to ask you to apologize to the public because you threatened male crotches? All you did was approve of the gesture a wife accorded her husband after she found out he had been horrendously unfaithful to her. What was wrong with that? You did not tell all women to cut off their husband's if they discovered him to be unfaithful. That takes either extraordinary rage or extraordinary bravery but that one woman had both and did it then liquified it, I think that deserves applause. Don't listen to the few males who sent their opinions. Anybody who objects, read his opinion on air but don't apologize for your behavior. You did no wrong.

Catherine Kieu Becker fan pages on Facebook

anthony · 24 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Page here. I'm speechless. Some of the comments from the FB page:

"LMFAO ! I love her
She is my hero my inspiration
He must have really deserved it!! LOL
You know he just pissed her off one too many times ..... "

Another here, description:

'THIS IS A SUPPORT GROUP FOR CATHERINE IF YOU CHOOSE OTHERWISE YOU WILL BE BANNED AND BLOCKED OFF THIS PAGE PERMANENTLY GO STATE YOUR OPINION SOMEWHERE ELSE WHERE SOMEONE ACTUALLY GAF that is all :] our thoughts and prayers go out to Catherine and her family ♥ free catherine!.'

How England became the 'divorce capital of the world'

Broadsword · 24 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

The unprecedented settlement of up to £220 million, agreed by Russian oligarch Boris Berezovsky in his divorce from his second wife, Galina, represents the largest ever pay-out in the UK.

Although Mr Berezovsky settled the divorce award out of court, the size of the sum reflects the growing reputation of British courts for awarding generous settlements to the wives of rich men.

Last year, a Nigerian woman, Sikirat Agbaje managed to increase her settlement to £275,000, almost 10 times the original settlement awarded to her in a Nigerian court, after bringing her case to the High Court in London.

In April this year, Russian tycoon Ilva Golubovich was forced to pay his student wife Elena £2.8 million after their 18-month marriage ended. It was claimed by Mr Golubovich's lawyers that she tried to file for divorce in Britain in an attempt to secure a larger settlement for herself and their two-year old daughter, while he sought to have the marriage formally ended in Russia, where payouts are far lower.
...
Sir Mark Potter, one of the judges who upheld the award in the Charman case, said the English courts' emphasis on equality in settlements had fuelled the growing number of wives travelling to the UK to seek divorces from their wealthy husbands.'

Attorney: 'More than meets eye' in (Kieu) penis-slashing case

anthony · 24 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'The attorney for a woman accused of cutting off her husband's penis said Friday that there is "more than meets the eye" to the case but declined to speak in further detail.

Catherine Kieu briefly appeared in court early Friday but did not enter a plea to charges that include torture. A judge set bail at $1 million and scheduled another hearing in late September for her to enter her plea.

Kieu, 48, spoke through a Vietnamese interpreter during the hearing. That was a change from a court hearing earlier this month, when she answered "Yes" in a strong voice to the judge's questions in English.

Her public defender, Frank Bittar, declined to speak about the case outside the courtroom. "There's a lot there, to the case, more than meets the eye," he said. A young man and woman who met with him after the hearing also declined to comment and would not say whether they were Kieu's friends or family.'

Woman Charged With Domestic Abuse For Assault On Man's Penis

anthony · 24 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PENN HILLS, Pa. -- A police officer found a man on the street near his Penn Hills home, grabbing his genital area and yelling that a woman hurt him severely.
...
The victim told police he was sitting on the couch with his father when his girlfriend returned uninvited and pushed open the front door.

The father said it was unprovoked, and he tried to intervene and keep her away from his son.
...
“The young lady did grab him by his penis and was pulling rather strongly, which forced him to follow her onto the porch and eventually the street area,” said Penn Hills Police Chief Howard Burton.
...
Kieston Roofner, 23, of Zelienople, was arrested on charges of domestic violence.
...
Police said they were at the victim’s home, where the couple was fighting before the assault. They said Roofner was asked to leave.'

Hotel maid in Strauss-Kahn case speaks out

Matt · 24 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Thought it all just went away, didn't you? No. Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (Reuters) - The New York hotel maid who accused former IMF chief Dominique Strauss-Kahn of attempting to rape her said in an interview published on Newsweek's website on Sunday that he appeared as a "crazy man" and attacked her when she entered his room.

Nafissatou Diallo also gave the newsmagazine and ABC News permission to identify her by name.

The magazine interview marks the first time the 32-year-old Guinean immigrant to the United States has publicly spoken to the media since she shocked the world with allegations that Strauss-Kahn emerged naked from the bathroom of his luxury suite on May 14 and forced her to perform oral sex.
...

ABC News on Sunday also announced it would broadcast an interview with Diallo on Monday morning.

"I want justice. I want him to go to jail," she said in excerpts from the television interview released on Sunday.
...
"Her lawyers and public relations consultants have orchestrated an unprecedented number of media events and rallies to bring pressure on the prosecutors in this case after she had to admit her extraordinary efforts to mislead them."
...
Wigdor said Diallo has worried that prosecutors would drop the charges. "That has been a concern, but we're all hopeful that the district attorney's going to do the right thing," he said.'

Male Birth Control? New Contraceptives Making Strides in Research

anthony · 25 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Elaine Lissner, director of the Male Contraception Information Project, formed a foundation to develop other approaches, the Times reported. One such method, “reversible inhibition of sperm under guidance,” or Risug, involves injecting gel into the scrotum to effectively deactivate sperm.

Another involves briefly heating the testes with ultrasound, which can halt sperm production for months, she told the paper. “I can imagine a world where you take your car in every six months to get your oil changed and go next door and get your ultrasound for 50 bucks," said Blithe.'

Is the NCAA Anti-Male?

anthony · 25 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Instead of funding women's sports through student fees (or other methods), the NCAA decided that money should come from athletic department budgets. The fact that male football and basketball players were creating the revenue and receiving none of the proceeds was beside the point. To the NCAA, the players were being well remunerated with a free college education, and the revenues they were generating were needed for the other sports. This policy became a shibboleth of the academic elite, and no one dared to challenge the established orthodoxy. After all, remember what happened to Lawrence Summers when he confronted the Women's rights bloc at Harvard. Why rock the boat when the only ones being taken advantage of were the athletes, who "all" thought that they would eventually hit a big payday in professional sports. The fact that this pie-in-the-sky scenario never happened for most men playing college football or basketball didn't matter. It covered the behinds of the NCAA.'

OUR VIEW: Stop favoring girls over boys (poll)

anthony · 25 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dwight Johnson's son cannot play in a state-sanctioned volleyball tournament because he is a boy. The Colorado State High School Activities Association refuses to sanction a volleyball tournament for boys, even though it sanctions one for girls. Johnson, of Colorado Springs, is suing the U.S. Department of Education, claiming that federal efforts to protect girls have backfired on boys and caused them a lack of equal protection as guaranteed by the 14th Amendment of the Constitution.'

Former wife cuts off Sukkur man's genitals

anthony · 25 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 25-year-old man, Abid Pervaiz, was brought to Jinnah hospital at 1pm on Thursday with severe genital mutilation wounds. Doctors on duty said it was a miracle that the man had survived despite severe bleeding.

According to Mehmoodabad police station's duty officer SI Mohammad Azeem, Abid hails from Sukkur and was living in Mehmoodabad No. 5 with some distant relatives. He was divorced, but began communicating with his ex-wife again.

The couple decided to meet again and hired a room at the Royal City hotel, where the woman allegedly laced fruit juice with some sleeping pills. When Abid drowsily woke up, he discovered that his penis had been cut off. Azeem says although Abid was still in a state of shock, doctors have somehow managed to save his life.

"Abid told me that before he passed out completely, he heard his former wife speaking to someone on the phone, saying that she had carried out her plan," the officer says.'

Films About Men in Abusive Relationships

Matt · 25 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Came across this blog entry and thought it may make a good resource especially if fleshed out. The blog author is looking for suggested additions, so go for it if you have one!

Another Facebook Page In Support of Catherine Kieu... getting life in prison xtrnl · 25 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

How refreshing! The page is here. Kudos to whoever made this in response to the sickening support pages for Catherine Kieu. Description:

'This woman cut off her husband's penis and throws it down garbage disposal. They were going through divorce. Want to read more? Go to http://www.reuters.com/article/2011/07/13/us-severed-penis-idUSTRE76C3MG20110713

She should be given life jail sentence for what she did. She's an animal and should be treated as such!'

Dr. Phil's Testimony was 'Reckless and False,' Group Charges

Matt · 25 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

SAVE press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, July 25, 2011 — /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- Stop Abusive and Violent Environments, a national victim-advocacy organization, is charging that Dr. Phillip McGraw, a TV personality known to many as Dr. Phil, made claims at a recent Senate committee hearing that were "reckless and false."

...

During his testimony, Dr. McGraw made repeated statements about violence against women, but glossed over the widespread problem of abuse against men. McGraw made a number of claims that were flatly wrong, SAVE alleges.

Dr. McGraw asserted that "Domestic violence is now the most common cause of injury to women ages 15 to 44." But the actual leading causes of injury to women are falls, overexertion, and car accidents. McGraw told the senators that "In too many situations violence against women, young and old, is almost treated as an 'acceptable crime.'" But that statement ignores research showing over 90% of Americans abhor domestic violence.

...

"Two weeks ago Catherine Becker allegedly sliced off her husband's penis and tossed it in the garbage disposal," notes SAVE spokesman Philip Cook. "The gruesome incident took place just miles from Dr. Phil's southern California home. But by the time Dr. McGraw arrived in Washington for the hearing, all awareness of male victimization seemingly had vanished from his mind."'

Basque Parliament to correct "failure" of the law : Both Parents To Obtain Information About The Child

Anonymous · 26 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Not surprisingly, usually the person who has custody of the child-mothers -86% is receiving the information from school, while another part remains outside. Not that there is no regulation about it but, as reported associations of parents divorced, is not fulfilled and the circular was referred to before is no longer in charge.

Today the Basque Parliament will take a step to end this situation. Although yet to define the formula to use, the parliamentary groups will urge the Department of Education to select protocols for action in schools to ensure the right and obligation of both parents to know their children's school progress: notes, circulars briefings, meetings with tutors, school changes, model etc. The PNV is training that has led the debate by presenting a proposition of law that urges the Cabinet Isabel Celaá to forward to the start of the school clear guidelines to all schools, in cases of separation or divorce, so that both parents receive all the information and that both parents are invited to the meetings.'

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

F&F: Holstein Meets with Presidential Candidate Gary Johnson; Johnson Condemns Family Court ‘Injustices’

Matt · 26 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Excerpt:

'Gary Johnson, a former two-term Republican Governor of New Mexico and current presidential candidate, met with Fathers and Families Board Chairman Ned Holstein, MD, MS in Manchester, New Hampshire on Thursday, July 21.

Governor Johnson made his support for family court reform clear when responding to questions from F & F activists at several campaign events. At one, Johnson told F & F activists Roy Corbeil and Seth Diamond, “[Family court] is an area that is really ripe for reform…I understand this issue and have researched hundreds of these cases.”

As Governor, Johnson set aside one afternoon per month to spend five minutes with any resident of New Mexico who wanted to meet with him. Many who came to see him were fathers who had been treated unfairly in the family courts. He told Holstein, “family court injustices are one of the great injustices of our time.”'

SAVE: The PVRA Offers Hope to Victims

Matt · 26 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Abuse shelters in Washington DC currently have a 3-month wait-period, and most likely, this is true of shelters across the country. The cause of the problem can be traced back to expanding definitions and lack of requirements for proof of abuse.

The PVRA limits the definition of domestic violence to "felony or misdemeanor crimes of violence," so victims of physical violence don't have to take a number and wait their turn.

Abused men who look for help are often turned away, and in some cases arrested. Most shelters only accept female clients. Some shelters that claim to give hotel vouchers to abused men, do not.

The PVRA makes the law gender-inclusive and removes discriminatory policies.

The Partner Violence Reduction Act (PVRA) offers hope to physical abuse victims by:

- Promoting proven abuse-reduction strategies
- Tightening definitions, so real victims aren't put on waiting lists
- Allowing partner reconciliation when the abuse is minor, keeping more families together
- Ending gender discrimination

If you haven't done so yet, sign the petition:

http://www.change.org/petitions/hope-for-victims-support-the-partner-violence-reduction-act.

Also, call and thank Representative Ted Poe (R-TX) for calling for a gender neutral abuse law: 202-225-6565. Link to article:

http://www.washingtontimes.com/blog/watercooler/2011/jul/21/picket-vawa-supporter-capitol-hill-looks-have-law-/

While you're at it, call your own legislators and ask them to support the PVRA. To find your senators' and representative's phone numbers, you may use http://www.congress.org/congressorg/directory/congdir.tt or call the U.S. Capitol Switchboard at (202)224-3121 and ask for your senators' and/or representative's office.

Sincerely,

teri

Teri Stoddard, Program Director

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

No difference in women’s and men’s self-esteem in youth and early adulthood

fondueguy · 27 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The researchers, led by Ruth Yasemin Erol, MSc, tested how five personality traits —openness, conscientiousness, extraversion, agreeableness and neuroticism —affect self-esteem. In addition, they looked at subjects’ sense of life mastery, risk-taking tendencies, gender, ethnicity, health and income.
...
“The converging evidence on gender similarity in self-esteem is important because false beliefs in gender differences in self-esteem may carry substantial costs,” Erol said. “For example, parents, teachers and counselors may overlook self-esteem problems in male adolescents and young men because of the widespread belief that men have higher self-esteem than women have.”'

Feminist TV in Sweden asks "Is Your Guy A Pig?"

Anonymous · 27 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

Is your guy a pig?

Is your guy does not host you? Are you tired of that he never grows up? We can help you bring order to the relationship.

Is your boyfriend, self-absorbed, jealous, a miser or a real Casanova? Or do you have other small or major troubles in the relationship that it's time to grab?

Help us help you! Now you can bring order to your relationship and at the same time be part of an exciting television adventure. Do not miss out, sign up today. Do you know anyone else who also fits the description, you can also tell about her / him.'

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Why we should protect those accused of rape

Kratch · 27 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What do David Copperfield, Michael Flatley, the Duke lacrosse team, the four Hofstra students, Rene Angelil (Celine Dion's manager-husband), Rick Pitino, Kobe Bryant, KBR/Halliburton and Julian Assange have in common? All were accused off rape, and will, in all likelihood, be remembered for that association, regardless of what ultimately happens (Assange's case is ongoing; none of the cases have led to a conviction). It is time for a modest reform in rape jurisprudence; the accused should be granted anonymity unless and until found guilty.

Ray Donovan, Reagan's treasury secretary, after he was acquitted of trumped-up corruption charges, famously asked: "Where do I go to get my reputation back?" Before Dominique Strauss-Kahn knocks on that door, the short answer is: Nowhere, not possible, it is a permanent stain. President of France? Forget it. Even the French cringe at a man with a damaged reputation representing their country.'

Breast ironing tradition targeted in Cameroon

Geredeth · 28 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Another story about a horrific practice, but once again just reading the comments between this and the problem in the same country, with the same people, but dealing with males... and the stark contrast in replies. Since this very horrific practice deals with females, it is bad and the government should get involved. If it involves chopping off pieces of male anatomy, or many other issues such as being hunted down and your family harmed because you don't want that anatomy damaged, then it is fun and games. One important part: "Now, charities have embarked on campaigns to educate mothers in Cameroon that sex education -- not breast ironing -- is the solution to ending teenage pregnancy." But to stop males from being affected by sex at a young age, education isn't needed, surgery is. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- Every morning before school, nine-year-old Terisia Techu would undergo a painful procedure. Her mother would take a burning hot pestle straight out of a fire and use it to press her breasts.

With tears in her eyes as she recalls what it was like, Terisia tells CNN that one day the pestle was so hot, it burned her, leaving a mark. Now 18, she is still traumatized.

Her mother, Grace, denies the incident. But she proudly demonstrates the method she used on her daughter for several weeks, saying the goal was to make her less desirable to boys -- and stave off pregnancy.'

Washington Post reviews 'Guilty Until Proven Innocent'

Matt · 28 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Review here. As expected, not entirely favorable. You can always contact them with your feedback or of course, post a comment to the reviewer's blog. Excerpt:

'After viewing an advance screener, I can safely call “Guilty” less a documentary and more a polemic. The movie consists of a series of one-sided-interviews interspersed with flashes of startling statistics about how fathers are most often cheated out of custody and overburdened by support requirements.
...
Though only first names are provided for these men, there’s a good chance their stories have validity. There is certainly evidence that many men have endured injustice in the family court system. In the case that went before the Supreme Court, that father had been jailed for a year for failing to pay support even though the court never considered that he couldn’t pay.
...
In “Guilty,” the unseen and unheard mothers are the villains, as well as a few judges and the family court system as a whole.

That’s too bad. The issues raised are larger than gender. We don’t have to look too far to find mothers who have also been brutalized by family court. Remember the story of Alaina Giordano, the mother who lost custody of her children because, in part, she was stricken with cancer?'

IA: Act Now - Tell UNAIDS and the WHO: Circumcision Does Not Prevent AIDS

Matt · 28 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Intact America was in Rome last week for the annual International AIDS Society Conference (IAS 2011). We spoke with hundreds of key influencers and policy makers, sharing the critical message that circumcision does not prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS.

It's critical that UNAIDS (Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS) and the World Health Organization (WHO) stop supporting mass circumcisions, and accept the fact that there are other, better ways to fight the HIV epidemic. We've created a petition to help them get that message.

Will you make your voice heard, and sign our petition today?

We need your help to make sure that UNAIDS and WHO get the message that the mass practice of circumcision is an unethical and dangerous distraction in the battle against HIV and AIDS.

Mother wins right to more than half of ex-husband's £500,000 crash compensation payout as 'her needs are greater'

Broadsword · 29 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman battling her amputee ex-husband for the lion's share of his £500,000 compensation has won the right to more than half his money in a landmark ruling. The Appeal Court declared that her needs and those of their children were more important than those of the disabled man.

Lord Justice Thorpe ruled that the money Kevin Mansfield received in 1998 after losing a leg in a road smash - five years before he met his former wife Cathryn - ought to be 'available to all his family' and that the needs of his ex-wife and their four-year-old twins were 'primary' and outweighed his own.

Mr Mansfield, 41, now faces having to sell his home, a specially adapted bungalow in Chelmsford, Essex - to meet the court's order that he pay £285,000 to 37-year-old Cathryn, so she can buy a new home for herself and their two children.

But Lord Justice Thorpe left Mr Mansfield with a glimmer of hope by also ordering that £95,000 of the money must be paid back to him by his ex-wife if she remarries a partner who can support her, or in 14 years time, once their children have grown up.'

Octomom refuses responsibility for all those children redwoodwriter · 29 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Since the Octamom claims to have been celibate for 12 years, she cannot use typical rape accusations to make a man responsible for her irresponsible behavior. This innovative woman instead is claiming that another man involved in the process, her doctor, is in fact to blame. Some women seem to have an infinite set of excuses to avoid taking responsibility for their bad behavior. One cannot help but wonder if this transfer of responsibility would not have taken place if she was (1) accepted by others for her deviant behavior, and/or (2) if she was able to pay for all those kids. Perhaps this is just a ploy to upgrade her reputation, stay in the limelight, and get more money. Excerpt:

'Los Angeles (CNN) -- Nadya Suleman on Thursday blamed the creation of the "Octomom character" that she has become synonymous with in part on a California fertility specialist who, she said, had her sign a consent form while she was drugged.

The California woman said she did not mean to have eight children in January 2009, in addition to the six she already had. But while she admitted she did want more children, she insisted she was in no condition to understand a form Dr. Michael Kamrava put in front of her before implanting 12 embryos.

"He wrote something, he gave it to me to sign," Suleman told HLN's Dr. Drew Pinsky on Thursday night. She said she was then on "a cocktail of drugs" including Valium at the Beverly Hills doctor's office because her uterus was contracting. "I signed it, and I didn't read it."'

Public shame list of "deadbeat dads"

ItsDan · 29 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Those men owe the most on a nine-person wanted poster for non-payment of child support circulated beginning Thursday by Hamilton County Job and Family Services. The seven men and two women on the poster owe a combined $488,000 to 18 children.

"There is really no excuse for shirking your responsibility to financially support your child," said Moira Weir, agency director.'

No excuse? Not even unemployment? Complete and utter poverty?

Excellent resource on the topic here.

Is The Playing Field Level For Men In The Family Court System?

anthony · 29 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The father's rights movement isn't an anti-mom or anti-woman movement; it's an anti-unfairness movement. It just so happens that moms have most of the power in the family court system in America.

It's true there has been progress in the family law system overcoming its gender bias, though rarely is the playing field even. In order to be truly fair to both parties, courts need to be completely gender blind, which is simply not the case.

In family law, more than any other area of the law, judges have a huge amount of discretion allowing ample opportunity for biases that we all as human beings have.

Since those presumptions are frequently held against fathers, men must spend more time, money, and effort just to try to get to a level playing field in a family law courtroom.'

Hideki Irabu found dead in California during split-up

anthony · 29 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. It's very possible parental alienation was a factor in his suicide. Excerpt:

'Irabu pitched in an American independent league and signed with a Japanese team in recent years while living with his family in Southern California. Neighbors believe Irabu had grown despondent recently because of a split with his wife.

Mary Feuerlicht said she was about to go pick up her son on Wednesday morning when a man came running down the driveway from Irabu's large two-story home, perched atop a hill with views of the harbor and downtown Los Angeles, pleading with her to call police.

Feuerlicht said she was later told by sheriff's deputies and the man who asked her for help that Irabu's wife had left him, taking their two young daughters. She hadn't seen Irabu's wife and children for two months, but said the family regularly left town for the summer.'

Proposed Circumcision Ban Struck From San Francisco Ballot

Anonymous · 30 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It looks as if the City by the Bay won't vote on a circumcision ban after all.

San Francisco Superior Court Judge Loretta Giorgi ruled Thursday that the measure to criminalize circumcision must be withdrawn from the November ballot because it would violate a California law that makes regulating medical procedures a state -- not a city -- matter.

Giorgi then ordered San Francisco's election director to remove the measure from city ballots.

The ban would have made it illegal to "circumcise, excise, cut or mutilate the whole or any part of the foreskin, testicles or penis of another person who has not attained the age of 18 years." And under that ban, any person who performed circumcisions would face a misdemeanor charge and have to pay up to a fine of up to $1,000 or serve a maximum of one year in prison.

...
"This is the most direct assault on Jewish religious practice in the United States," said Stern. "It's unprecedented in American Jewish life."

"We would agree with the Jewish religious and legal scholars regarding the practice, and ... to my knowledge, there is no compelling medical reason to ban it," said Ibrahim Ramey, the human civil rights program director at the Muslim American Society Freedom Foundation. "There are religious sensitivities that are involved and the decision to circumcise ought best be left to the parents of the child, and not a political referendum."

Stern said that the Jewish community has held strategy meetings to diminish the proposal.

"We want to erase the message that anyone else can try to take away a central ritual, practiced for centuries without harm, to make sure no one tries to replicate this," Stern said.
...
Schofield had said that he and the "intactivists" have a broad range of support among a variety of demographic groups.

"We're taking it one step at a time," said Schofield. "If it doesn't pass this time, then I'm sure it will be tried again."

Schofield refused to say whether he is circumcised or not.

"I don't want the focus to be on me and have people use it as an excuse not to look at the issue itself," he said.'

"Men and Marriage"

Matt · 31 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Came across this essay. The way I see it, broadly, there are two different kinds of MRAs. There are non-traditionalists who want to see men given equal opportunity to be liberated from traditional role constraints (and it's this camp I definitely fall into since IMJ it represents the greatest chance for equal justice for men) and the traditionalists who want to see society return to a more traditional approach to gender roles. This essay is one in defense of traditionalism. So while I am not of this POV, and I feel the author injects prejudice and overgeneralization in several key areas of his arguments, I do see the practical issue relevance it raises in terms of certain specific gender roles, especially where the raising of children is concerned. It's hard to deny, for example, that boys raised without fathers have a much harder time of it than boys raised with fathers, and numerous studies bear this out. Excerpt:

'Without a stable family order, in which adult men civilize the young men, terror necessarily rules. No array of daycare centers, police powers, social welfare agencies, psychiatric or drug clinics, special schools and prisons can have any significant effect. William Tucker's fine new book Vigilante vividly shows the imbecile bathos into which our legal system has already fallen as a result of the decline of the stark mandate of justice into the weasels and waffles of social liberation.

At a time when millions of young men are slipping beyond the reach of democratic institutions - indeed, outside the social order itself - the drive to emasculate our politics threatens the foundations of democracy itself. Democracy is not so secure a system that in a serious crisis it can easily survive the loss of the instinctual appeal of male leadership. A state oin [sic] which the police and other governmental authorities are heavily in female hands would not last a week. The very emergence of such a state would itself signify either the massive estrangement of men from politics or the degeneration of democracy into some court-ruled system of quotas.

It is part of [Phyllis] Schlafly's genius to have persistently linked the concerns of family with the reform of education, the conservative revival of our politics, and the rehabilitation of our military. From her concern with the national defense to her defense of the nation's families, she espouses a fully coherent vision of the American predicament. A society of families both constrains male aggressions and channels them toward the protection and support of family and society.
...
Together with the tragic breakdown of the American black family, the Swedish example should disabuse Americans of the illusion that it couldn't happen here. Family breakdown and demoralization can occur with frightening suddenness when government policy destroys the role of the male provider in the family. The alternative to traditional family roles is not a unisex family; it is sexual suicide.'

Too fragile for politics?

anthony · 31 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It about time that someone told this woman what she needed to hear and if she can't stand the heat, she should stay out of the kitchen. Debbie Wasserman Schultz has repeated taunted West in public, even heading up a protest march outside West's campaign headquarters. She has made earlier charges against this man, claiming that he associated with vicious, degrading attitudes toward women because he contributed a column to a biker magazine that some found objectionable.

Well what is good for the goose, is good for the gander, and Ms. Schultz, along with her cackle of fellow women, are acting completely inappropriately. Politics is a dirty game, and Schultz has demonstrated her ability to play the game as well as any one else, male or female. But now that someone is standing up to her, and gives her a taste of her own medicine, the poor little victim cries sexism. Well too bad for Debbie Wasserman Schultz.'

Mila Kunis on Sexism in Hollywood

anthony · 31 July 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If Mila Kunis doesn't think she's taken seriosly because of her looks, maybe she shouldn't pose in her underwear for GQ magazine. Excerpt:

'Mila Kunis thinks women can be taken seriously as comedians in Hollywood -- but it's hard.

"The bottom line is if you're an attractive female in this industry, people just take you as that: attractive. People aren't getting the opportunity to move beyond being attractive," she tells the August issue of GQ while promoting her new movie, Friends With Benefits, in theaters July 22.

"It's not only with comedy. It could be with drama or action or whatever. People are distracted by looks. It happens. I'm not saying it happened to me, but it happens," she continues.'

Affordable Care Act Ensures Women Receive Preventive Services at No Additional Cost

Minuteman · 1 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to news release here. Excerpt:

'Historic new guidelines that will ensure women receive preventive health services at no additional cost were announced today by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS). Developed by the independent Institute of Medicine, the new guidelines require new health insurance plans to cover women's preventive services such as well-woman visits, breastfeeding support, domestic violence screening, and contraception without charging a co-payment, co-insurance or a deductible.

"The Affordable Care Act helps stop health problems before they start," said HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius. "These historic guidelines are based on science and existing literature and will help ensure women get the preventive health benefits they need."

Before health reform, too many Americans didn't get the preventive health care they need to stay healthy, avoid or delay the onset of disease, lead productive lives, and reduce health care costs. Often because of cost, Americans used preventive services at about half the recommended rate.'

UK: Woman who threatened Huddersfield cabbie with fake rape claim before robbing him is jailed

anthony · 1 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A WOMAN who threatened to make a false rape claim against a taxi driver has been jailed for robbing him.

Brighouse Taxis employee Mohammed Asif had picked up Natalie Woods in Rastrick, along with Nicola Cliberon and Mark Mbye, and was taking them into Huddersfield town centre last November when she began making fake sexual advances towards him.

Prosecutor Simon Batiste said Mr Asif eventually stopped the taxi and asked for his fare, but after Cliberon and Mbye got out Woods, 38, who was in the front passenger seat, asked him to drive further up Chapel Lane.

At one stage Woods told the cabbie to give her his money or she would scream and say that he had tried to rape her.

Mr Asif called Woods' bluff and threatened to call the police, but she asked him not to and he drove the car back down the street.'

Dr. Phil Show to Feature Male Victims of DV

Matt · 1 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is pleased to announce that the Dr. Phil Show will be featuring a program devoted to the topic of male victims of domestic violence. The program will be aired in mid-September. The show will feature SAVE spokesman Philip W. Cook and several male victims of partner abuse.

The decision to devote a program to male victims followed Dr. Phil McGraw's testimony to the Senate Judiciary Committee on July 13, 2011 - see SAVE's July 25 press release:

http://www.saveservices.org/2011/07/press-release-dr-phil%E2%80%99s-testimony-was-%E2%80%98reckless-and-false%E2%80%99-group-charges

For more information on how domestic violence programs discriminate against male victims, see SAVE's Special Report:

http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/Domestic-Violence-Programs-Discriminate-Against-Male-Victims

SAVE applauds the Dr. Phil Show for its recognition and support of all victims of domestic violence.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Kenya: Forced Male Circumcision and a Struggle for Justice

Minuteman · 2 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Somewhat tastelessly, there is a link on the page to a completely unrelated January 2011 magazine section article entitled "More on circumcision: The Kindest Cut" about HIV/AIDS and mass circumcision in Swaziland, presumably to down-play the grotesqueness of this article. Link here. Excerpt:

'Similar attacks were recorded elsewhere in Kibera and in other parts of the country, including the volatile Rift Valley, up until late February 2008, when Kibaki and Odinga reached a power-sharing deal. The lack of reporting on the part of victims, however, has complicated efforts to arrive at a national total. A government inquiry noted, for instance, that many victims in the Rift Valley were "too traumatized" to come forward.

While Odondi and some other Luos, a tribe that doesn't traditionally practice male circumcision, can describe their individual experiences of forced circumcision with marked candor, the International Criminal Court (ICC) is still struggling to find words for the crime. Chief Prosecutor Luis Moreno-Ocampo, who is pursuing crimes against humanity charges against six prominent Kenyans in connection with the post-election crisis, moved in December to charge the crime under "other forms of sexual violence," the category used for atrocities such as sexual slavery and forced prostitution.

But judges disagreed, ruling in March that the crime should fall under "other inhumane acts," a separate category of crimes that cause "great suffering" or "serious injury to body or to mental or physical health."
...
Despite the ingrained discrimination -- and periodic bouts of violence -- targeting uncircumcised men in some areas, the issue receives little public attention. "No one has ever talked about male circumcision. It's just not visible," Wangechi said.

Ocampo can present new evidence about forced male circumcision during the 2007 and 2008 crisis at confirmation hearings scheduled for September. Wangechi said a subsequent decision by judges to reclassify forced male circumcision as a form of sexual violence "would have a huge impact" on how the crime is viewed in Kenya, and could perhaps draw widespread attention to it for the first time. With this heightened attention, she added, could come expanded access to treatment at health centers, provided the government begins to fully grasp "the magnitude of the assault."'

Death by stiletto: Woman 'kills her boyfriend with spiked heel to the head'

anthony · 2 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman allegedly beat her boyfriend to death with the spiked heel of a stiletto shoe.

Thelma Carter, 46, struck her live-in boyfriend Robert Higdon, 58, with the shoe at their trailer park home in Augusta, Georgia, police said.

Authorities are unsure how many times Mr Higdon was hit with the shoe before he died.

Carter has been charged with murder.'

Local Author Seeks Submissions from Abused Men

Matt · 2 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Great to see it in the news, too. Excerpt:

'ANN ARBOR, MI--Therapist and author Ken Land is seeking true, first-person accounts of men who have suffered abuse in relationships with women. The Ann Arbor-based therapist began the project in 2006 as an effort to raise awareness and support for male victims of abuse. Land is the Founder and Clinical Director of The Counseling Center of Ann Arbor, a comprehensive outpatient mental health and substance abuse clinic located in downtown Ann Arbor since 1983.

"Men are often victims of physical, verbal, and emotional abuse in relationships," says Land. "Their stories go untold for a variety of reasons: shame, guilt, feeling 'unmanly' and the justifiable belief that now one will believe them. And the criminal justice system is often either unresponsive, dismissive or biased in the favor of the woman."

The project is a collection of true stories from men all over the world, who will finally have the opportunity to be heard. Mr. Land will annotate these stories, explore psychological underpinnings, find common themes and attempt to explore possible answers to the question, “Why does the man stay attached to the abuser?”'

SAVE: DV Screening Guidelines a Slap in the Face

Matt · 2 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services released its Women's Preventive Services requirements for qualified health plans yesterday. Some of the rules are reasonable, like screening for diabetes in pregnant women.

But the document requires that health plans conduct "screening and counseling for interpersonal and domestic violence" on an annual basis for women...but not men: http://www.hrsa.gov/womensguidelines

The rule was issued exactly three weeks after Catherine Becker of California drugged and bound her husband. Then she severed and disposed of his genitalia. If he had sought medical care prior to the incident and the doctor had performed an abuse screening, it's possible the gruesome event never would have occurred.

When the rules were announced, HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius explained, "These historic guidelines are based on science and existing literature." Over 250 studies show women are at least as likely as men to engage in partner violence. A rule that mandates domestic violence screening only for women ignores science and ridicules the notion of gender equity.

Contact Secretary Sebelius RIGHT NOW at Kathleen.Sebelius-at-hhs.gov. Then call Assistant Secretary for Health Dr. Howard Koh at 202-690-7694.

Respectfully tell them the DV screening requirement of the Women's Preventive Services guideines is unreasonable and a slap in the face to male victims of domestic violence. Tell them to promptly revise the discriminatory guideline to include both men and women.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

F&F: Victory! Peter Spitz Reunited With Son After Outrageous Family Court Injustice

Matt · 2 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In one of the most outrageous injustices of our time, Peter Spitz (pictured right) was separated from his son and almost lost custody of him after his ex-wife shot him in the face and murdered his mother.

Fathers and Families advised Peter, helped him get legal counsel, and also publicized his case, and we are pleased to announce that Peter has now won full custody of his seven-year-old son.

Special credit and thanks goes to talented Colorado family law attorney Brett Martin (pictured below), who took on Spitz's case and won a decisive victory–the court decision is here.

We also thank Fathers and Families Board Member Robert Franklin, Esq., who covered this case extensively and helped to advise Peter–his write-up of the new decision is below.'

Fathers' Advocates Move to Repeal the Massachusetts Domestic Abuse Law

Anonymous · 3 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE-Aug. 3, 2011

FATHERS' ADVOCATES MOVE TO REPEAL MASSACHUSETTS DOMESTIC ABUSE LAW

Boston - Members of The Fatherhood Coalition submitted an Initiative Petition to the Mass. Attorney General's office to remove the Massachusetts 209A restraining order law and restore due process rights.

According to Joe Ureneck, chairman for the group, the current restraining order system, misused and abused, is destroying families.

There is not one independent scientific study that the current law has met the desired effect of protecting men and women who truly need help, Ureneck said. Petitioners believe the law unjustly throws fathers out of children's lives and created a more violent society as all studies demonstrate that when children grow up without a father in the home, they grow up to be more violent teens and adults, both men and women.

"We support the use of existing Assault and Battery laws, which allow for due process rights to punish those who commit any act of violence," he said. Under MGL 209A it is usually only a man or a father who is thrown out of his home, loses contact with his children, required to attend demeaning programs, and suffers a loss of employment opportunities.

"This discriminatory restraining order system has created a very one- sided, one size fits all rubber stamp approach where individuals are guilty until proven innocent," he said. In Massachusetts, some 25,000 to 50,000 restraining orders are handed out each and every year even as some judges estimate that up to 95% of these orders lack any merit.

The number of issued restraining orders far exceed the incidents of real violence.

"We agree one criminal act is too many but MGL 209A does not actually protect victims," Ureneck said. "It does however place a high cost on thousands of individuals who have merit less restraining orders issued against them and been victimized by having their rights taken away."

Members of The Fatherhood Coalition believe the price paid for this unjust law is too high - to the children who lose a parent and stable home and to society - and for these reasons put forth this repeal petition.

More information about the abuse of restraining orders under MGL 209A can be found at http://www.fatherhoodcoalition.org/.
The Initiative Petition is available at the Massachusetts Attorney General's office:
http://www.mass.gov/Cago/docs/Government/2011-Petitions/11-02.pdf

Contacts to learn about and how you can support this Initiative Petition:

Peter Hill, Media Spokesperson; 1-781-772-2500
Joe Ureneck, Chairman; 1-857-350-0575 or joeureneck-at-comcast.net
Patrick McCabe, One of 18 petitioners; 1-617-512-9460

"Advocates for Youth" leaves out male DV victims

Matt · 3 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Came across this email from a group called Advocates for Youth. Some of the topics discussed in it have been mentioned here on MANN already. Please take a minute and politely contact AFY and ask them to take the gender-blinders off and include males (after all, they are young at some point as well) as imperatively in their campaigns as they do females. Email follows:

We have some GREAT news to share.

Earlier this week, the Department of Health and Human Services announced that starting in August 2012, all new health insurance plans will be required to cover contraception at no cost — including condoms, birth control pills, contraceptive shots, and IUDs. This means that co-payments, which have long been a barrier to many women accessing contraception, will no longer be an issue for women with health insurance!

This historic shift is due in LARGE part to your incredible work reaching out to elected officials and members of the Obama administration, sending letters, and collecting petitions on this issue. Your efforts helped to ensure that the needs of women were the center of this debate — despite conservative attempts to derail the process through manufactured controversy and intentional misinformation. Here at Advocates for Youth, we know — as you do — that contraception is preventive care...and now insurance plans will reflect this basic reality!

The other sexual and reproductive health recommendations from the Institute of Medicine — many of which are groundbreaking in their own right — will also become standard! In addition to no-cost contraception, women will also be able to access the following services without a co-pay:

- Well-woman visits;
- Sexually transmitted infection counseling;
- Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV) screening and counseling;
- Domestic violence screening and counseling.

We can't thank you enough for all your hard work on this issue. These new guidelines are a huge step forward in making sure that all women, including young women, will be able to access the full range of sexual and reproductive health care services they need.

Thanks again!

Sarah Audelo
Senior Manager of Domestic Policy
Advocates for Youth

Men need not apply: Program reserving contracts for women only warrants constitutional challenge

Broadsword · 3 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Army Corps of Engineers has issued a solicitation for a contract to provide support services at Fort Detrick in Maryland. Nothing unusual there, except that the contract reflects a new Obama administration program to restrict competition on the basis of gender.

The solicitation explains, “This procurement is set aside for Women-Owned Small Business (WOSB) firms only.” No one but women need apply. The WOSB program is a federal contracting preference that hurts male African-Americans, Hispanic-Americans, Asian-Americans or American Indians in exactly the same way white men are hurt.

Here’s how the WOSB program works: In most of the industries in which the federal government does business, if a) there are two female-owned companies likely to bid on a contract, and b) the contract is for less than $6.5 million for manufacturing and $4 million for everything else, and c) the contract can be awarded for a “fair and reasonable price,” that contract can be awarded without competition from male-owned firms. The Small Business Administration runs the program.'

BMA loses £4bn discrimination case over NHS widowers' pensions

Broadsword · 3 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The British Medical Association has lost its legal challenge on NHS widowers' pensions which could have cost the government more than £4bn.

The High Court ruled today that the preferential treatment of widows over widowers in relation to pension payments was "objectively and reasonably justified".

The test case, backed by the BMA, was brought by Iain Cockburn - the widower of Clare Boothroyd, a Warwickshire GP who died of cancer in 2007.

Boothroyd paid into the NHS scheme for 24 years - but widower Cockburn receives £3,200 a year less than he would were he the widow of a male scheme member.

This is because current legislation dictates that service prior to 5 April 1988 is not counted for the purposes of calculating widowers' pensions.

Lawyers for Mr Cockburn argued this amounted to unlawful discrimination that was "blatant" and "as direct as it gets" (PP Online, 15 July).

The Department of Health accepted that its actions were discriminatory but argued the discrimination was justified on the grounds that it was introduced to correct "factual inequalities" that had existed between men and women in the workplace.'

Russia: Woman kept father chained in yard

Minuteman · 4 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A woman and her husband have been detained in southern Russia after they kept the woman's 70-year-old father on a chain in their yard for four days.

The couple "tied him to a tree with a metal chain in their yard and kept him there from July 28 to August 1," the Investigative Committee said in a statement.

...

The man's daughter, 41, "had grown tired of taking care of the blind and deaf man and simply took him out into the yard and chained him up," the Life News website reported, adding that the couple's children were witnesses.'

NYC to spend $127M on minority programs for men

Matt · 4 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (AP) — New York City will spend $127 million in public and private funds on programs designed to help young black and Latino men.

Billionaire Mayor Michael Bloomberg will kick in $30 million from his foundation and hedge fund manager George Soros will match that amount, according to the mayor's office. The remaining $67.5 million will be paid by the city.

The Young Men's Initiative was first reported by The New York Times on Wednesday. The mayor's office called it the nation's "boldest and most comprehensive effort to tackle the broad disparities slowing the advancement of black and Latino young men" in a statement.

It will include job placement, fatherhood classes and training for probation officers and school staff on how to help the young men get ahead. More than a dozen city agencies will be involved.'

One day's news in Britain

Proud_to_be_a_man · 5 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2022299/Woman-mowed-boyfriend-left-fractured-skull-accusing-cheating---game.html

"A crazed woman ran over her boyfriend twice leaving him brain damaged because she thought he'd cheated her at a computer game."

(sentenced to ELEVEN MONTHS!!!)

_____

http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2022427/Cleaning-lady-beat-82-year-old-companion-death-rounders-bat-buried-garden-fortune.html

"A cleaner battered a vulnerable pensioner to death after befriending him to get her hands on his £250,000 fortune, a court heard yesterday.

"Ann Browning, 54, bewitched Bill Williamson, persuading the lonely 82-year-old to part with thousands of pounds, buy her a car and shower her with gifts, it was claimed.

"The day after murdering him, she went to the theatre to see a ‘thriller murder’ play and then played bingo with friends – all the time appearing to be her normal self."

(CASE CONTINUES)

_____

http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2022430/Runner-Liz-McColgan-charged-repeatedly-punching-husband-throwing-clothes-window.html

"Distance runner Liz McColgan appeared in court yesterday accused of attacking her estranged husband before hurling his clothes out of a window.

"The 47-year-old answered charges that she repeatedly punched Peter McColgan’s head and body."

(CASE CONTINUES)

_____

http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2022509/Southern-Cross-carer-laced-Alzheimers-sufferers-tea-vinegar-jailed-months-vile-abuse-elderly-patients.html

"A ‘vindictive’ carer who slapped a 95-year-old woman with Alzheimer’s round the head and tormented another 86-year-old sufferer was jailed for nine months yesterday."

(sentenced to NINE MONTHS!!!)

_____

Puy Passes all round here in Britain! Come to Britain ladies and do what you like to whoever you like and never ever risk more than a feeble amount of jail-time.

NB - they won't serve the whole time...

Businessman who fought off false sex harassment claims hits out at 'spongers who want an easy bung'

Broadsword · 5 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

A multi-millionaire businessman awarded record costs after a former employee claimed he sexually harassed her today suggested she was 'a sponger' who needed 'to be taught a lesson'.

Tim Watts, chairman of recruitment agency Pertemps, was awarded £100,000 in costs after Debbie Smith made false claims of sexual harassment, discrimination and victimisation.

He declared: 'These vexatious spongers have to be taught a lesson. And she has been... big time.'

Today he spoke of his delight and called for changes to the employment tribunal system in Britain, which he said meant employers were increasingly seen as guilty until proven innocent. He was awarded a record £100,000 in costs - the previous highest sum is believed to be £67,000. Mr Watts, who said he had only met Ms Smith three times, said: 'She is a very silly lady. I don't think it's my right to send a message to her, but, and I hope this doesn't sound peculiar, she probably needs help.'

He went on: 'There are two Debbie Smiths. There's a Miss Jekyll and Ms Hyde. She could be quite a charming person and there's a very dark side to her.'

56 Who’s-The-Daddy Cases Heard In 3 Hours

Matt · 6 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For this wasn’t the set of the Maury Show. This was the latest episode of “Paternity Thursday,” a real-life drama played out in rapid-fire segments in the fluorescent-lit Courtroom 3A at 235 Church St.

It’s a weekly mini-series in which Family Support Magistrate David Dee hears the so-called “paternity docket,” anywhere from 30 to 60 cases that try to establish who the father is and how much he should pay in child support.

From 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. this past Thursday, Dee plowed through 56 cases, of which Parker’s case was No. 19. As Dee moved briskly through the cases, the atmosphere was subdued. The courtroom decorum was broken only by the chatter of children squirming on uncomfortable benches and the babble of toddlers perched on their mothers’ hips as their fate was decided. Unlike in popular culture scenes filled with outbursts and hysteria, these mothers and putative fathers glided past one another in stony silence with barely a nod of recognition.
...

Dee also made clear the responsibilities that accompany a legal declaration of fatherhood: A support order can be entered based on ability to pay, and wages can be garnished to pay it; failure to pay support could lead to contempt proceedings and possible incarceration.

As he moved through the docket, Dee repeatedly let the fathers know their rights and, if they chose to waive their rights, to do so on the record.

“We do our very best to make sure everyone’s rights are considered,” Assistant Attorney General Amy Guido said during a break between representing the state’s and the mothers’ interests in all 56 cases heard Thursday.'

Financial Incentives Drive Mississippi Child Support Enforcement

Matt · 6 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Child support collections in Mississippi have increased by 61 percent over the past 8 years due to increasingly aggressive enforcement tactics and an incentive program that rewards coming after men.

Oh, and if you can't pay because you're unemployed, then "get a job."

The Clarion-Ledger reports Mississippi's Division of Child Support Enforcement collected $314 million in fiscal 2011 compared to $195 million in fiscal 2003.

The difference of $119 million over a span of just 8 years is largely contributed to increased enforcement and financial incentives.

Though it received praise for its cost efficiency in 2002, the paper reports, the state's Division of Child Support Enforcement lost an estimated $1.14 million through penalties and reduced incentive awards by failing to meet minimum federal standards in other areas: establishing support orders and determining paternity.'

President Obama to Announce Reverse Boot Camp for Vets Entering Workforce

anthony · 7 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the Obama administration prepares to withdraw the remaining US troops from Iraq by the end of this year, the White House projects over one million service members will be returning to civilian life and entering the workforce between 2011 and 2016. The White House wants to be sure these troops are given the opportunities for advancement and prepared for the challenges ahead.

President Obama will announce several steps to prepare veterans for their return Friday, including a proposal for career readiness training before they retire from the military--a sort of reverse boot camp. "The present structure of the military really requires intensive training on the front end, weeks of boot camp," one administration official said Thursday. "But one of the things we're finding is that there's not as much effort on the back end as those service members are separating and preparing to enter the work force."'

The Masculinity Conspiracy: chapter 7 now online

Anonymous · 7 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Chapter 7 (Spirituality) of The Masculinity Conspiracy is now online:
http://masculinityconspiracy.wordpress.com/book-chapters/chapter7a

This chapter examines how spirituality is mobilized in the conspiracy via two books: No More Christian Nice Guy: When Being Nice—Instead of Good—Hurts Men, Women and Children by Paul Coughlin, and The Hidden Spirituality of Men: Ten Metaphors to Awaken the Sacred Masculine by Matthew Fox.

It shows how these books promote masculine spirituality as being defined by fixed characteristics. It then offers some different ways of thinking about spirituality in order to counter the conspiracy.

Maine continues witch-hunt of innocent man

MR · 7 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Paul Elam at "A Voice for Men" writes:

"[Vladek] Filler was exonerated of the false rape charges against him. He was, however, convicted falsely of assaulting his estranged wife, Ligia Filler, by putting a bruise on her arm. The court has scheduled Vladek's sentencing hearing for August 10, 2011, at 9 am at Hancock County Superior Court in Maine, despite clear evidence that the assault conviction was based on fraud."

"We need people to demand justice for Vladek and his children – not more abuse and imprisonment."

"Respectful emails for Judge Robert Murray of the Hancock County Superior Court, who is presiding over the case, can be sent to free.vladek@gmail.com They will be forwarded to his office."

"What's with Indian Men?": An objectionable sexist, anti-men TV show arindamp · 7 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Just watched a program called "What's with Indian Men?" on Fox History & Entertainment. It's a highly sexist and anti-men show. Facebook page: http://www.facebook.com/apps/application.php?id=188546051185179

Two females, Indrani Das Gupta and Sugandha Garg, vent their personal sexist bias against men. It reinforces the stereotype against men. I have lodged a complaint against the show to the Indian Broadcasting Foundation. I strongly encourage you to do so. The link for the online complaint form is http://ibfindia.com/onlineform.php

Genital Autonomy conference in UK Aug 30/Sep 1

Minuteman · 7 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Originally posted here.

Members of UK registered charity NORM-UK (restoration and phimosis help) are assisting with the planning for a two-day conference being presented jointly by UK registered charity Genital Autonomy (working for male and female bodily integrity rights) and the Keele University School of Law, to be held on 31st August and 1st September. This will deal with the legal and human rights issues surrounding unnecessary genital surgery on children.

The details are on the following link:
http://www.genitalautonomy.eu/#/ga-conference-2011/4552998052

The conference programme is reproduced below.

We have an impressive selection of speakers including Gert Van Dijk who has drafted the position statement on male circumcision for The Royal Dutch Medical Association and Efua Dorkenoo who will be talking about female genital mutilation and human rights.

The conference will have breakout sessions where professionals dealing with these issues will be able to talk about policy development.

We need help promoting this conference. Any help you can give will be gratefully received.

The details need to go to Child Protection Boards, Health organisations, hospital trusts, midwives. Local bodies working in child protection, members of charities dealing with children.

Please feel free to circulate the details widely.

Alternatively, if you can advise names, phone numbers and email addresses of suitable contacts we will gladly pass the details on.

Thank you,
David Smith
info@genitalautonomy.org
- - - - -

Genital Autonomy 2011.
Law, Human Rights, and Non-Therapeutic Interventions on Children

Programme

Day One: 31st August
10.30 - 11.00 Coffee and Registration

11.00 - 12.45 1. Genital Autonomy and Human Rights
Chair: Marie Fox

Welcome:
Richard Dunker (Chair of Genital Autonomy)

Debra L DeLaet
Genital autonomy and children's rights in international law

Travis Wisdom
The right to health: towards a feminist understanding of genital autonomy

12.45 - 2.00 Lunch

2.00 - 3.30 2. Medical Practice I
Chair: Michael Thomson

Gert Van Dijk
Between religious freedom and the right to bodily integrity: the case against circumcision of male minors

Antony Lempert
Non-therapeutic circumcision and conscientious objection

3.30 - 4.00 Coffee

4.00 - 5.30 3. Health Law and Genital Autonomy : Two Paradigms
Chair: Debra L DeLaet

Michael Thomson
Public health law and social justice

Marie Fox
Health law and bodily integrity

5.30 - 6.30 Drinks reception

7.30 Conference dinner

Day 2: 1st September

9.30 - 11.30 4. Female Genital Cutting
Chair: David Smith

Dr Comfort Momoh
Title: TBC

Efua Dorkenoo
FGM and human rights

John Geisheker
The Seattle Plan

11.30 - 12.00 Coffee

12.30 - 1.30 5. Intersex
Chair: Michael Thomson

Steven Svoboda
"Justice and peace" : protecting all from genital cutting : law, human rights and demedicalization?

Sarah Graham
A letter to my body

1.30 - 2.30 Lunch

2.30 - 4.00 6. Medical Practice II

Matthew Johnson
Dealing with invasive religious rights: should the NHS offer circumcision to diminish harm

Lauren M. Sardi
Institutionalized practices and neonatal circumcision: the informed consent process

Program to provide Medicaid to breast cancer patients doesn't apply to men

ItsDan · 7 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Raymond Johnson, 26, was diagnosed with breast cancer about a month ago, after pain from a lump in his chest sent him to the emergency room.

Though Johnson has a job laying tile, he does not make enough to pay for the treatments out of his own pocket and does not have health insurance.

To make matter worse, Johnson was denied for a state program that provides medicaid for breast cancer patients. because he’s a man."

Dramatic Increase in ER Visits for Drug-Related Suicide Attempts by Males Aged 21 to 34

Matt · 7 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. What isn't asked is why did all these guys need to get on antideps, etc. in the first place? I can imagine several factors, the lousy job market being a big one. Being an MRA however, you can bet I can think of a few more! [It's even higher for Iraq/Afghan war vets, too, as I am sure you already know, but this is so even for college students.] Report highlights:

'In 2009, there were 77,971 emergency department (ED) visits for drug-related suicide attempts among males. By age group, the number of ED visits for drug-related suicide attempts among males aged 21 to 34 increased 54.6 percent between 2005 (19,024 visits) and 2009 (29,407 visits). Among males aged 21 to 34, the number of visits involving pain relievers showed a statistically significant increase of 60.2 percent (from 7,185 to 11,509 visits), the number of visits involving antidepressants increased 155.2 percent (from 1,519 to 3,876 visits), and the number of visits involving drugs that treat anxiety or insomnia increased 93.4 percent (from 5,018 to 9,706 visits). Between 2005 and 2009, narcotic pain reliever involvement in ED visits for suicide attempts almost doubled among visits made by males aged 35 to 49 (from 2,380 to 4,270 visits) and almost tripled among visits made by males aged 50 or older (from 882 to 2,589 visits).'

Australia: "Cops" (Police Officers) shoot (superficially wound) axe- (and knife) wielding female

Minuteman · 9 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A police sergeant shot a woman when she refused to drop a knife she was wielding after she had rammed another vehicle and attacked it with a pickaxe, a witness to the incident says.

A Victoria Police spokeswoman said the woman, who suffered a non-life-threatening injury when she was shot in the lower leg, is in a stable condition in hospital after what apparently started out as a wild domestic argument.

The incident unfolded at Epping in the city's north at about 12.45pm on Tuesday.

Assistant Commissioner Stephen Fontana told reporters that the woman had confronted a man after ramming his car head-on and slamming the pickaxe through its window screen.

A witness said she had then grabbed a long knife from the rear of her car and had started swinging it at the man.'

SAVE E-lert: Continue our 'Big Mo'

Matt · 9 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Within hours of approval of the budget deal last week, members of Congress headed home for their annual August recess. For lawmakers it's a time to meet with constituents and find out what's on persons' minds.

And right now our VAWA reform effort is on a roll. In just the past month:

- Sen. Charles Grassley of Iowa revealed the fiscal malfeasance of many VAWA grantees: http://grassley.senate.gov/news/Article.cfm?customel_dataPageID_1502=35952
- Rep. Ted Poe of Texas called for VAWA to be made gender-neutral: http://www.washingtontimes.com/blog/watercooler/2011/jul/21/picket-vawa-supporter-capitol-hill-looks-have-law-/
- The prestigious Roll Call newspaper ran a column by SAVE on the necessity for VAWA reform: http://www.rollcall.com/issues/57_14/hearing_reveals_gaps_domestic_abuse_system-207705-1.html?pos=oopih

So this week, we urge you to continue our Big Momentum. Call your representative's office to set up an appointment and urge his or her support of the Partner Violence Reduction Act.

SAVE has developed several flyers to explain the need to amend the Violence Against Women Act. The flyers, PVRA legislative language, editorials, and more can be found here: http://www.saveservices.org/pvra/

There's a saying that 1% of the population makes things happen, 10% watch things happen, and the remainder asks, "What happened?"

2011 is the year we will bring about fundamental reform to our nation's domestic violence laws.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

The London Riots and Disenfranchised Males

Matt · 9 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Discussed here. It explains the rioting, but doesn't excuse it. Criminal acts have to be stopped and those responsible held accountable. But I would like to suggest that it is as criminal as rioting to systematically remove from a whole class of person their means of self-support and then ignore them when they seek redress for it. Today, it seems to be predominantly young black men. Tomorrow, it will be (and has already begun to be) young white men as well. After that, every man, young and old. Can a society really survive this kind to stress? Feminists seem to think so, as they have been working to disenfranchise males from their own societies now for decades. Excerpt:

'LONDON -- As political and social protests grip the Middle East, are growing in Europe and a riot exploded in north London this weekend, here's a sad truth, expressed by a Londoner when asked by a television reporter: Is rioting the correct way to express your discontent?

"Yes," said the young man. "You wouldn't be talking to me now if we didn't riot, would you?"

The TV reporter from Britain's ITV had no response. So the young man pressed his advantage. "Two months ago we marched to Scotland Yard, more than 2,000 of us, all blacks, and it was peaceful and calm and you know what? Not a word in the press. Last night a bit of rioting and looting and look around you."
...
The truth is that discontent has been simmering among Britain's urban poor for years, and few have paid attention. Social activists say one out of two children in Tottenham live in poverty. It's one of the poorest areas of Britain. Britain's worst riots in decades took place here in 1985. A policeman was hacked to death. After these riots, the same young man pointed out, "They built us a swimming pool."'

Tim Allen answers: 'Why are men douchebags in sitcoms?'

anthony · 9 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So the critics didn't waste much time. "Tim, why are men always portrayed as douchebags on sitcoms?" one asked.

"Well, that was the working title, actually," Allen replied, drawing laughs. "Somebody's already got it. Fox already got it."

But seriously folks: "It's the lowest common denominator, " Allen said. "The great showrunner we have, Jack Burditt, called it, one day, Sitcom 101. When you don't have material, you go to the lowest common denominator. I still do a lot of scatological humor, but I've risen it to a high art. [This gets another laugh]. Every guy on TV has a flannel shirt and a gray T-shirt underneath, and he likes beer, and he's got a much better-looking wife than he deserves. It's buffoonery. I'm going to go out on a limb and say we're not going to do that on this show. The tide keeps it that way, but we're not going to do that."

Gender Quotas Spread in Europe, Mandated for Corporate Boards

Matt · 9 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After Norway adopted gender quotas for corporate boards — requiring companies to have boards of directors comprised of at least 40 percent women — large numbers of inexperienced people ended up as corporate directors. “A study by the University of Michigan found that this led to large numbers of inexperienced women being appointed to boards, and that this has seriously damaged those firms’ performance.”

But this didn’t stop other European countries such as Spain and France from following Norway’s example and mandating 40 percent quotas (Spain’s quota requirement is already in effect, while France’s law goes into effect in 2017). Italy’s Parliament recently passed a 30 percent quota requirement after Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi, who had previously opposed such quotas, endorsed them (perhaps as a way of attempting to defuse public outrage over his sexual escapades and his patronizing remarks towards women). The European Parliament has recommended that all member countries adopt such quotas in their national laws.

The Economist recently opposed such quotas in an editorial. (Corporate law scholars such as Stephen Bainbridge have previously criticized these proposals.) As The Economist later noted, Europe’s race towards quotas is at odds with company practice and legal norms elsewhere in the world:...'

South Carolina Pushes for Medicaid Overhaul After Man Denied Breast Cancer Coverage

Matt · 9 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'South Carolina health officials are petitioning the federal government to overhaul its "discriminatory" Medicaid rules after a local construction worker was denied coverage for breast cancer treatments because he is a man.

Raymond Johnson, 26, found out about his cancer last month. He visited the emergency room after a pain in his chest became unbearable. He already knew he had a lump there but, "being a male," assumed it was a cyst.

When the tests came back, "I found out I had cancer."
...
But when Johnson, who is uninsured, applied for Medicaid, he was swiftly rejected. The reason? He is a man.

"To me it's really dumb. ... It's not as common as a woman having breast cancer, but we do have it," Johnson said.

The state of South Carolina agrees with him. Since Johnson applied for coverage, the state Department of Health and Human Services has been in talks with federal Medicaid officials about the possibility of changing the rules. Tony Keck, director of the state health department, said in a statement that the federal position is "discriminatory" and urged the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services to show some flexibility.'

Rape allegation clouds child support case

Matt · 9 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'NEW PORT RICHEY - They say boys will be boys, but Kris Bucher says not always.

"A guy not wanting to have sex with somebody -- that seems impossible. But I expect it," said Bucher.

Kris claims he was raped by his old girlfriend Jessica Fuller. She got pregnant and had their son Joshua. Kris was never a part of his son's life.

In fact, Jessica never asked Kris for help in raising their son, but after moving to Michigan the young mom fell on hard times and got government assistance. Now the state of Michigan wants Kris to start paying child support.

"I'm a victim of a crime. Why should I have to pay the perpetrator?" Kucher said.

Kris and Jessica met at Hudson High School. Kris says the two had a tumultuous relationship from the start. Jessica suffered a miscarriage at one point, and so they decided to avoid sex altogether.

But Kris says one night in the back seat of a friend's car, it happened.

"She climbed into my lap, and I said what are you doing? She said 'you know you want me.' I said 'no, I don't '," Kucher said.

Kris says after the alleged assault, he slipped into a deep depression, and the skinny teen ballooned to 235 pounds.

He says weeks after the incident he spoke to a deputy, but he appeared to doubt Kris' story and never followed up.

Kerry O'Conner is Kris' attorney. She says there are laws dealing with child support if a man rapes a woman, but not the other way around. Recently, Kris' request to dismiss the child support case was denied.

"They never decided whether his lack of consent could be a defense to a paternity action, " O'Conner said.

So Kris will take his fight to an appeals court, not just on merit, but on principal.

"I'm sure there's other men like me, boys that were that age that have gone through this, and it kind of gives them some courage to step out of the shadows," Bucher said.'

Recovering US job market is leaving black men behind

Matt · 9 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The jobs landscape is bleak for any unemployed American, but for black men it's virtually a desert.

For them, the Great Recession not only led to the largest increase in unemployment for any category of American worker, but it also is pinching a lot longer. About 1 in 6 black men over age 20 in the labor force is jobless – and that number has barely improved since the economic recovery officially began two years ago.

In Detroit, Las Vegas, Milwaukee, Minneapolis-St. Paul, and several other US cities, Depression-era unemployment rates above 20 percent beset the black community, estimates one economic policy group, citing government data. Moreover, the problem may get worse because city governments, which traditionally employ many African-American men, are laying off workers to cope with budget shortfalls, say experts on black employment.'

Probable cause finding Maine's ADA Mary Kellett's conduct be subject to sanction

MR · 9 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NCFM filed a grievance against one of the State of Maine's Assistant District Attorney, Mary Kellett.

The grievance was filed primarily because NCFM and many others believed Kellett's behavior violated the Maine Bar Rules. We all felt that she persecuted rather than prosecuted certain people including Vladek Filler, a man falsely accused of spousal rape and numerous other things.'

Considering a cruise vacation? Consider the fact that men are part of the "product"

Anonymous · 10 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

It seems that there are many companies which effectively pimp men to lonely "single"* women on cruise ships.

Here is one particularly egregious example of a company which provides "gentlemen hosts" to single women on cruises. The men are compensated to a very limited extent with free or very inexpensive cruises and screened to ensure they meet the company's standards for dancing ability, appearance and wardrobe.

Add this to the fact that most guest-contact positions (i.e. well-paid jobs requiring little or no manual labor) on a cruise ship are filled with light-skinned women, while most of the labor-intensive jobs on the lower decks go to darker-skinned men who rarely see the light of day, and you can safely conclude that the cruise industry routinely objectifies men in order to attract women and increase their profits.

Next time you're planning a vacation for yourself or your family, remember to choose someplace else to take your money.

*One other cruising tip: if your wife or girlfriend tells you she wants to take a cruise alone or with her friends, remember that the staff on cruise ships call such women "SWAS", or "single while at sea".

What's your deepest, darkest secret? Moms confess in our survey

anthony · 10 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

- Nearly one in five moms admits medicating their child to get through a special event like a plane flight; one in 12 does it just to get some peace and quiet on a regular night.
- Half have knowingly sent a sick kid to daycare or school.
- 85 percent use their kids to get out of social obligations.
- Nearly one in three uses work as an excuse to avoid taking care of the kids.

And sometimes the secrets are thoughts we don't dare tell anyone else:

- 44 percent of moms would rather be 15 pounds thinner than add 15 points to their child's IQ.
- One in four fears their partner is a better parent than they are.
- One in ten wishes their child was the opposite sex – and of those moms, 60 percent have boys.

Kevin Mengel Gave His Life to ‘Keep Family Together’

Kratch · 11 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kevin Mengel gave his all to keep his family together. Eventually he gave his life. Here’s one story (Delco Times, 8/8/11).

According to police records, Mengel was murdered by his wife and her boyfriend on June 17, 2010. The West Goshen Township, Pennsylvania man had had a stormy relationship with his wife, Morgan Mengel, throughout the 12 years of their marriage.

That included his leaving her once and her filing for divorce and then withdrawing the petition. They had three children, 12, 10 and 6.

Friends and neighbors say that Morgan Mengel had numerous extra-marital affairs throughout the marriage and that Kevin knew about them.
...
"[Detective David S.] Maurer testified that Morgan Mengel said he wanted her husband dead because she did not want to go through a “messy divorce” that would likely prompt her husband and his mother to seek custody of the children."

...
A couple of sidelights: First, there have been a good many articles written on this case by a couple of different publications. So far I haven’t found a single one that refers to the murder as “domestic violence.” That accords with almost every case of intimate partner violence perpetrated by a woman against a man. The facts are reported, but the fact that the crime is one of domestic violence seems never to occur to the reporters or their editors.

Second, Kevin Mengel’s death will not be recorded as a spousal murder by law enforcement authorities. It’ll be called a “multiple offender homicide,” meaning that two or more people participated. That’s perfectly accurate of course, but also skews the statistics on how many husbands are killed each year by their wives. It seems that when women want to kill their husbands or boyfriends, they tend to hire someone else to do the job rather than doing it themselves.

So while official statistics show that about 1,300 women are killed each year by their husbands or boyfriends and about 300 men are killed by their significant others, those statistics understate the number of men killed. The actual number is higher due to the “multiple offender” category.'

"Stand Up Guys" has only half the story

Matt · 11 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Organization site here. A great motive indeed but they have only half the story. They are putting on a golf tourney to help end violence against women and children. Nothing about men.

Presumably, this group doesn't have all the facts. So please inform them POLITELY of the research on DV that shows the extent to which females perpetrate it and how any fair and accurate undertaking to end DV must include efforts to end DV against men as well as women. Contact form is here. I ask that you refrain from making phone calls since that has in the past led to misunderstandings and exchanges that set the cause back -- no one intends for things to go that way but sometimes in the heat of verbal exchanges, they do.

"Raised to rampage"

Matt · 11 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

The article asks "Where's the parents?" This is not the right question. It's "Where are the fathers?" Answer: They were deemed an annoying inconvenience by society a few decades back and institutions were re-aligned or spawned to get them separated from their children or cause them to realize that it was a greater risk to stay with the child's mother than not to. In my judgment, you have state-implemented policies founded in feminist dogma to thank for the mess in the UK being played out in the streets. And while focus groups and government agencies will spend loads of time and money asking about such factors as economics and race (which undoubtedly play a part), they will conveniently overlook "The Father Factor", the modern 300-lb. gorilla in the middle of the room that everyone will pretend not to see. But I do the article an injustice, as the author does mention 'dadlessness' in it. Excerpt:

'Why can't they feel things properly? How did we end up with some of the most indisciplined and frighteningly moronic youngsters in Europe? How come our kids are the best at being bad? There's no use blaming the police; it's the parents, stupid. A report by the Centre for Social Justice found that the UK excels in the three D's of family breakdown – divorce, dysfunction and dadlessness. Of the 805 violent looters arrested, how many come from homes without a father? I reckon we can guess the answer. A study back in 2001 found that 85 per cent of Indian families were headed by a married couple while 50-60 per cent of black families were headed by a lone parent, usually the mother. Is there anyone who still believes there is no link between that agonising statistic and the young males running amok on our streets?

