It is unlikely that these boys will have encountered a male teacher with real authority, a teacher who isn't afraid to show them who's boss and to give them the discipline, order and hierarchy that, without knowing it, they crave. A friend who works in an inner-London comprehensive with boys twice her size is not allowed to send them to the headmaster. Faced with full-frontal rudeness or casual violence, Clare must first follow school policy and ask, "Darren, are you ready to receive the discipline message?"
...
I am bringing my own two children up in a country I barely recognise. So what is the answer? In the final chapter of Lord of the Flies, after the boys stranded on the island have formed rival gangs and committed arson, theft and murder, the author William Golding pulls off one of the great shifts in perspective in literature. From the young savage lying on the beach, we look up and see a crisp, white uniform. Civilisation and authority have arrived in the shape of a naval officer. Suddenly we see the main character not as an all-powerful savage, but as a dirty little boy who needs a good talking to. Given limitless freedom, and without adults to show them better, children will run riot. That is the lesson of the past few days.

What our young people need is adults to stop abdicating authority. They need police to police, teachers to teach, parents to parent, politicians and clergy to give moral leadership, and, above all, they need more people like Pauline Pearce, the jazz-singing Jamaican grandmother who fearlessly took on rioters and saved a white man from the mob. Pauline shouted at the looters everything the rest of the country wanted to say to them. Pauline didn't walk by on the other side. She could see that they were little blighters – but she knew that they were our little blighters and the adult's job was what it always has been: to give them what for. And, just for a moment, they weren't monsters, feral rats or thieving scum. They were stupid kids out too late, who needed a mum like Pauline to bring them to book and a father to take them home.'

Battered Men's Hero, Patricia Overberg of Lancaster, CA, Passed Away Today

Matt · 12 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From NCFM-LA:

Patricia Overberg, the first known domestic violence shelter director in the United States to help male victims along with female victims, passed away today (August 11, 2011). Patricia is being honored by men's rights activists as a hero and civil rights pioneer, similar to the shelter director Erin Pizzey in England.

From 1990 to 1998, Patricia directed the Antelope Valley Domestic Violence Council in Lancaster, California, also known as the "Valley Oasis" shelter. After realizing male victims had no place to go, she courageously changed her women-only policy by setting aside one of her shelters for male victims and their children, and in rare cases of overflow she would obtain consent from residents in another one of her shelters to mix the sexes, which, she says, never created a problem. Nonetheless, Patricia was mistreated by other shelter directors who insisted services should only be for women. The mistreatment became so severe that she filed a complaint with the L.A. County Board of Supervisors, as she explains in her sworn declaration at http://www.ncfmla.org/pdf/overberg.pdf Patricia later joined NCFM's Advisory Board and the Speaker's Bureau of Stop Abuse For Everyone (SAFE) and remained closely in touch with battered men's advocates until the date of her death.

In 2004 Patricia encouraged NCFM to file a lawsuit to end the discrimination against male victims and their children. NCFM filed the lawsuit in 2005 and in 2008 won a landmark appellate victory that held it is unconstitutional for the State of California to exclude male victims from the state laws that fund domestic violence services. The case is David Woods v. Horton (2008) 167 Cal.App.4th 658 and can be read at http://law.justia.com/cases/california/court-of-appeal/2008/c056072/

After the Woods decision, Patricia joined battered men's advocates in a historic meeting with Los Angeles County Counsel, domestic violence shelters and others regarding enforcement of the Woods decision. In the attached photo taken after the meeting, Patricia is on the bottom left between Pasadena City College instructor Edgar Pacas and NCFM attorney Marc Angelucci. Until the date of her death, Patricia continued to encourage NCFM to file another lawsuit to enforce the Woods decision. To this date, advocates from NCFM and the Men's Health Network continue meeting with the Los Angeles County Domestic Violence Counsel in an uphill battle for inclusiveness and equal access and treatment for male victims.

Patricia will be remembered by many as a hero to men's rights and equality. Her policy of inclusion remains in place today under a new director.

Bio of Patricia Overberg: http://ncfm.org/advisor-board/patricia-overberg-msw/

Sworn Declaration of Patricia Overberg: http://www.ncfmla.org/pdf/overberg.pdf

Statistics on Male Victims on DV

Matt · 12 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Thanks to a recent NCFM-LA email:

The Centers for Disease Control recently funded a major study of heterosexual relationships throughout the U.S. and found: "Almost 24% of all relationships had some violence, and half (49.7%) of those were reciprocally violent. In nonreciprocally violent relationships, women were the perpetrators in more than 70% of the cases," and both sexes suffered significant injuries. http://www.ajph.org/cgi/content/abstract/97/5/941

The same study also found: "More women than men (25% versus 11%) were responsible. In fact, 71 percent of the instigators in nonreciprocal partner violence were women" and "while injury was more likely when violence was perpetrated by men, in relationships with reciprocal violence it was the men who were injured more often (25% of the time) than were women (20% of the time)." http://pn.psychiatryonline.org/cgi/content/full/42/15/31-a

Men are less likely to report it (which makes crime data unreliable), but almost 300 studies now confirm "women are as physically aggressive, or more aggressive, than men in their relationships with their spouses or male partners," as California State University Professor Martin Fiebert shows in his online bibliography at http://www.csulb.edu/~mfiebert/assault.htm

For example, a 32-nation study by the University of New Hampshire found women are as violent and controlling as men in dating relationships worldwide. http://www.unh.edu/news/cj_nr/2006/may/em_060519male.cfm?type=n and http://pubpages.unh.edu/~mas2/ID41E2.pdf

When children witness either parent hit the other, regardless of how severe or minor, it becomes a model for them to follow. Domestic violence is an intergenerational cycle, and we'll never stop that cycle without being honest about it rather than following the politically correct gender paradigm that has been totally refuted by serious researchers like Professor Don Dutton of the University of British Columbia and many others.

This Canadian government report also recognizes the above data:
http://www.phac-aspc.gc.ca/ncfv-cnivf/pdfs/fv-intime_e.pdf

F & F's Paternity Fraud Bills: 50 Physicians Endorse 'Reasonable Means' to Determine Correct Paternity

Matt · 12 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families has helped introduce two new paternity fraud bills (SB 375 and SB 377) into the California legislature, both sponsored by Senator Roderick Wright (D-Inglewood).

There are many reasons to support these bills, including fairness for the men targeted by paternity fraud. But there are also compelling medical reasons to combat paternity fraud. In our official support letter for SB 375 and SB 377, Ned Holstein, M.D., M.S., F & F's Founder and Chairman of the Board, wrote:

Current California law declares that there is a compelling state interest in determining paternity for all children. SB 375 would instead declare that there is a "compelling state interest in determining biological paternity for all children." Current California law allows minors to sign paternity judgments without parental consent or legal counsel. SB 377 would prohibit this practice, which currently leads to many errors in assigning paternity.'

Colleen Carroll Campbell: The power of a father's presence

Matt · 12 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For fatherhood in America, these are the best of times and the worst of times. So says a new Pew Research Center report on fathering trends.

The report, released in June, found that today's fathers are active in their children's daily lives to a degree not seen in nearly half a century. Live-in dads now regularly eat meals with their children, play with them, read to them, help them with their homework and ask them about their day. They also log more than twice as many hours on kid duty than did their own dads: In 1965, the average married father spent only 2.6 hours a week caring for his children; by 2000, that average had risen to 6.5 hours.

...

But that's where the good news ends. The Pew report found that alongside this rising level of involvement among live-in fathers is a rise in absent fathers — men who live apart from their children and often have little or no role in their children's daily lives.

In 1960, just more than one in 10 children lived apart from their fathers. Today, more than one in four do. The statistics are starker when parsed by race: Nearly half of African-American fathers and more than a third of Hispanic fathers live separated from their children. An education gap also exists: Some 40 percent of dads who dropped out of high school live apart from their children, while only 7 percent of college graduates do.

...

The consequences for children are profound. As statistics in the 2011 Father Facts report make clear, children who live apart from their biological fathers are more likely to suffer abuse, run afoul of the law, abuse drugs or alcohol, struggle with emotional and behavioral problems, live in poverty and engage in early sexual activity. Children raised by their married fathers and mothers, by contrast, fare better on nearly every sociological measure available, from their rates of graduation to their incidence of out-of-wedlock childbearing and divorce.'

Man seeks child support reimbursement for child that is not his

Matt · 12 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Madison County man wants to be reimbursed for child support and healthcare benefits he allegedly paid for a child that is not his.

Gerald Krug filed a lawsuit July 5 in Madison County Circuit Court Family Division against Anita Dawn Bogle and David Lofink.

According to the complaint, Krug and Bogle were married in 1984 and had two children. They divorced in 1993 but maintained a sexual relationship, according to Krug, that he believed to be monogamous.

During their divorce proceedings, Krug claims Bogle told him she was pregnant with his child. Krug says he and Bogle remarried in 1994 but divorced a second time in 1999. A court order issued at the time of the divorce required Krug to pay child support and medical benefits for three children along with half of his retirement benefits.

In December 2007, Krug says he was told he was not the biological father of Bogle's third child. He says his ex-wife told him the child was conceived with Loflink. Krug says he used a home DNA kit in February 2008 to test if he was the father of the boy. He alleges the results returned negative. However, despite his multiple requests, Krug says Bogle has refused a court-approved DNA test.'

India: Male students cringe at getting less seats in BCom

anthony · 12 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHANDIGARH: Boys are clearly at the receiving end as far as admission to BCom course is concerned due to less number of seats available for them as compared to girls in city colleges.

There are around 4,000 seats available, out of which 2,140 are in 11 colleges. Five are girls colleges whereas five are co-educational and only one is a boys college. This creates a huge difference of around 700 in the number of seats available for boys and girls.

"Nearly 700 male students who had got good ranks have been adversely affected. There are cases where boys with 1700 or 1800 rank, could not get admission whereas a girl with a rank up to 2500 easily did so," K Tankeshwar, director of PU computer centre who coordinated the online BCom counselling this time, told TOI.
...
BCom is one of the most sought-after courses in city colleges and students from Delhi, Himachal, Punjab, Haryana, Jammu and Kashmir and Bihar had applied for admissions this year. "There should be a balance between the seats available for boys and girls. Due to this gap, many boys are either forced to leave Chandigarh or to change their stream," said a senior PU official. PU had received nearly 10,000 applications; more than double the available seats.'

Keep Dad in the Game

MR · 12 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Here is an important public service announcement from the Prostate Cancer Foundation called "Keep Dad in the Game."

Prostate cancer strikes one out of six men, but prostate cancer research gets only a fraction of the funding that breast cancer research receives.

The number of men who contract prostate cancer is about the same as the number of women getting breast cancer. The disparity in research funding between the two cancers is striking and discriminatory, illustrating yet again the institutionalized misandry existing in Western societies, in my opinion.

Give me charity money pleads mother-of-TEN who insists her £30,000-a-year benefits are 'not enough'

Broadsword · 13 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A mother-of-ten who nets more than £30,000-a-year in benefits has begged for charity donations to help raise her brood - because her state 'wage' is not enough.

Moira Pearce, 34, has insisted her weekly government handout of £600 is insufficient to feed and clothe her children and she needs donations to survive. The single mum - whose kids are fathered by four ex-partners - has insisted her range of child and family allowance benefits do not meet her weekly outgoings.

Her annual payments funded by the public purse work out at a staggering £31,200-a-year - or £3,120 per child.

Ms Pearce - who lives with unemployed ex-boyfriend Mark Austin, 19, seven daughters and three sons - now wants extra help to save her from going under.'

UK: Divorcee wins £4.3m of ex-husband's inheritance despite judge saying 'she did not work for it'

Broadsword · 13 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A divorcee was awarded £4.3million of her ex-husband's inherited fortune, despite a judge conceding that she had not worked for it.
...
Seeking a lump sum of £6million, on top of £1million that is already in her name, the wife's lawyers said she needed £1.5million to buy and furnish an 'appropriate' new home for herself, along with enough cash to give her an income of over £130,000-a-year.
...
The wife's lawyers argued the 'sharing principle' should be applied to the case, entitling her to a stake in her husband's inherited wealth. But the husband said that would be an 'invasion' of a fortune he owed to his father and which was not built up during the marriage. Mr Justice Moylan said the husband's wealth was 'non-matrimonial' and it was 'fair' to base the wife's award on a 'generous assessment' of her financial needs.

She was awarded a lump sum of £3.3million, on top of the £1million of assets already in her name.'

Melanie Phillips on Britain's riots

Kratch · 14 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For most of these children come from lone-mother households. And the single most crucial factor behind all this mayhem is the willed removal of the most important thing that socialises children and turns them from feral savages into civilised citizens: a father who is a fully committed member of the family unit.

Of course there are many lone parents who do a tremendous job. But we're talking here about widespread social collapse. And there are whole areas of Britain, white as well as black, where committed fathers are a wholly unknown phenomenon.

In such areas, successive generations are being brought up only by mothers, through whose houses pass transitory males by whom these women have yet more children — and who inevitably repeat the pattern of lone and dysfunctional parenting.

The result is fatherless boys who are consumed by an existential rage and desperate emotional need, and who take out the damage done to them by lashing out from infancy at everyone around them. Such children inhabit what is effectively a different world from the rest of society. It's a world without any boundaries or rules. A world of emotional and physical chaos.'

Israeli Feminists Oppose Joint Custody Legislation

anthony · 15 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The feminists are even oblivious to the pain and agony they inflict on other innocent women along the way. For example, Family Court Judges and Ministry of welfare's policies of disengaging fathers from children during divorce or separation is hurting not only the fathers, but also the father's mothers, sisters and all women in the extended family on the side of the father.

In order to achieve the nefarious goals, the feminists here resort to false statistics, doctored surveys and fictitious figures. In contract, men's rights organizations do not jump on every opportunity to portray women as stereotypically inferior. For example, a news item appeared in Israeli media regarding a study at the University of Michigan reported that female drivers are involved in more road accidents, despite spending less hours on the road. Presumably, the reporters' intent was to entertain the typical, slightly chauvinistic, reader. Nobody has ever suggested that this would now justify endless research and training to stop the carelessness of women's driving and to protect the public from reckless female driving.'

'Fight gender inequality by empowering men'

anthony · 15 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Delivering the Helen Joseph Memorial Lecture at the University of Johannesburg on August 10, Barker spoke on the theme Men and Gender Equality: Between the Urgency and the Confusion. He is the international director of Instituto Promunda, a Brazilian non-governmental organisation that promotes the end of violence against women and children.

In no way does Dr Barker exonerate men who are violent towards women, but he argues that in order to deal with the oppression of women, men must be included in gender equality interventions: the difficulties in their lives need to be addressed, too.

He explains that most men "who have made women's lives hell have themselves had hellish lives".

Barker says that during research on women's rights, men are seldom asked what they think of women's rights. He also argues that men often don't see the benefit of equality with women. Perhaps, suggests Barker, men "might be more supportive of gender equality if they could see something in it for them".'

‘Harassed’ Kerala men unite against women’s panel

anthony · 15 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TRIVANDRUM — Harassed husbands in Kerala have urged the government to scrap the Women’s Commission and establish a Family Commission in its place to ensure fair hearing to men who are tortured by women.

The demand was made at seminar organised by ‘Janamithram Janakeeya Neethi Vedi’ (JJNV), an association of harassed husbands, in the state’s northern city of Calicut on Sunday to formulate strategies to protect the men’s rights.

The speakers at the seminar said that the Women’s Commission was being misused by women for various purposes, including extraction money from men. It seldom tries to verify the genuineness of complaints filed by women.

The speakers also came down heavily on the family courts, saying that it was biased against men. They listen only to the women in most cases. This, the speakers, said was leading to wrong convictions.

They said a large number of advocates were taking advantage of this and dragging men to the court and subsequently pushing them into jails in connivance with their women clients. The seminar demanded removal of advocates from the family courts.'

Anarchy in the UK

anthony · 15 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

To begin to understand the mayhem in our cities, look at a set of figures on literacy rates that came out a week before the riots began. Teaching a child to read and write is not difficult or expensive. Much poorer countries manage to do it. The statistics in the UK are staggering. A full 63 per cent of white working-class boys and just over half of black Caribbean boys at the age of 14 have a reading age of seven or below. How does that translate into the criminality on our streets? Humiliated in lessons, by 14, the young men I interviewed had either dropped out or were excluded. They then spent their time hanging around on the streets, turning up to school only to sell drugs or stolen goods.

Studies show that about half of the prison population has a reading age below that of an 11-year-old. Of one south London gang I met three years ago, all were bright but semi-literate. Three are now in prison. Bigs, the former leader of one of Brixton's most notorious gangs, received his first prison sentence at 15. "Other people go from school to university," he told me. "We go from school to prison."
...
The young men now roaming our streets frighten us because they have such total disregard for our values. But then they have disengaged from society for a reason. They see nothing in it for them. And in this they are quite right. The overwhelming attitude of all the young men I encountered was despair at the prospect of a life on benefits.

The third area in which government intervention has been disastrous is in the home. Politicians are now appearing on TV demanding that parents keep their children under curfew. I wonder what planet they are living on. Certainly not the same one as the boys I know, for whom grown-ups are absent or ineffectual. The children do not even get fed properly. A recent survey found that 49 per cent of British parents did not know where their children were, or whom they were with, in the evenings. Some 45 per cent of 15-year-old boys spent four or more evenings a week hanging about 'with friends', compared with just 17 per cent in France.'

Making ‘cents’ of Title IX at UGA

anthony · 15 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Though NCAA rules require men’s tennis programs to share the equivalency of 4.5 scholarships between the team, it allows female squads eight full rides.

“I’ve had defending NCAA champions on a partial scholarship,” men’s tennis head coach Manuel Diaz said. “While it’s not likely for any top men’s program to have a tennis player on a full scholarship, just about everybody on the women’s side does.”

And the inequality extends beyond the tennis court.

In every sport played by both men and women, the University’s female athletes average $7,151 a year in scholarships more than their male counterparts, according to numbers reported to the NCAA.

But associate athletic director Carla Williams said this wasn’t a choice made by the University.

“I think it’s a result of the rules we have to play in,” she said in reference to the NCAA’s scholarship limitations. “If we were allowed to give eight full scholarships to our male student athletes in tennis, then we would. … We go to the limit with what we can do [in every sport] and that’s the best we can do.”'

Desert Hot Springs man sentenced to life in prison in rape rumor case

anthony · 15 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Desert Hot Springs man was sentenced to life in prison without the possibility of parole Monday for gunning down a friend over what turned out to be a false rape rumor.

Concepcion Rodriguez, 35, was convicted April 28 of the 2006 killing of Anastacio “Taquito” Torres, with a special circumstance allegation of murder in the commission of a kidnapping.

Co-defendant Mingus Chavarria, 33, pleaded guilty to second-degree murder and was sentenced in May to 15 years to life in prison.'

False rape claim leads to arrest of Gresham woman

anthony · 15 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Less than three weeks ago a woman's testimony sent Gresham police searching for a rape suspect, but today the woman was arrested following a Multnomah County Grand Jury indictment that accuses her of lying to authorities.

Danielle Elizabeth Hayes, 35, admitted to police that she conceived the entire July 25 story to "cover-up personal indiscretions," according to Gresham police.

Officers arrived to a Borders book store at about 5 p.m. to find a distraught Hayes explaining how she was grabbed by two men and sexually assaulted in a secluded area on the west side of the store.'

Antifeminists To Stand On Trial In Switzerland

Anonymous · 15 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Reference
http://www.dads-r-us.se/2011/08/16/antifeminists-to-stand-on-trial-in-switzerland/

From http://www.antifeminismus.ch/ (translation to English here)

Background:
The Swiss Antifeminists in IG-Antifeminismus and Verein Antifeministen wanted to publish the addresses to the Women´s Shelters in Switzerland on the Internet. They are therefore to stand on trial. The Main Session is on Thursday, 15 September 2011 at 2 PM

Comment by Ulf:
What I don´t understand, is, how you can stand on trial for wanting to publish addresses - without actually doing it?

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

SAVE: Falsely Accused Take it to the Streets Across the Land

Matt · 16 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Did you see the photos from the nationwide GovAbuse protest this past Friday, Aug. 12, 2011 in Sacramento, CA?

False allegations of abuse are a major concern to parents going through divorce and custody cases, and even families with children in foster care. This protest was covered by TV stations, newspapers, and online news outlets.

The Partner Violence Reduction Act reduces false allegations in 5 ways:

- Limits the definition of domestic violence
- Distinguishes between "alleged" victims and "adjudicated" victims
- Removes harmful mandatory arrest, predominant aggressor, and no-drop prosecution policies
- Allows legal assistance to be provided both to the alleged victim and alleged offender
- Requires grantees to certify that prosecutors enforce laws that ban perjury and false swearing

If you haven't done so yet, call your Representative's office to meet during the August recess. Share your story of being falsely accused (keep it short and stay calm), and urge his or her support of the Partner Violence Reduction Act.

SAVE has developed materials to help. The PVRA legislative language, petition, editorials, flyers, and more can be found here: http://www.saveservices.org/pvra

WE'RE ON A ROLL! DON'T STOP NOW!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Mother gets probation in home circumcision

Matt · 16 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — An Oregon woman who tried to circumcise her 3-month-old son at home after reading the Old Testament and watching YouTube videos has been sentenced to five years of probation.

Keemonta Peterson pleaded guilty to first-degree criminal mistreatment. The 30-year-old Portland woman must also undergo mental health treatment.

Peterson called 911 and the boy was rushed to a hospital last October after her botched effort left the infant bleeding uncontrollably and in intense pain. A prosecutor says he has fully recovered.
...
Multnomah County Circuit Judge Eric Bergstrom told Peterson on Monday that "the reality is you love your children and had absolutely no intent to harm your child."'

Australia: Sperm-donor dad off birth certificate

Minuteman · 17 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'He donated sperm to a lesbian couple and considered himself a father to the child they conceived, forming a loving relationship with her and contributing thousands in support payments.

But the 58-year-old man is now outraged and devastated that his name will be stripped from the girl's birth certificate, after a NSW District Court judge ruled in favour of the mother's ex-partner.

The latter took the man and the NSW Registry of Births, Deaths and Marriages to court in March to have his name replaced with hers on the document.

It is the first case of its kind since NSW law was amended in 2008 to permit two women who had a child while in a relationship to be listed as parents. The legislation was retrospective.
...

The judge said the three adults had an amicable relationship in the beginning, and the man visited the women's house to listen to the baby's heartbeat.

He paid for midwifery, naturopathic and chiropractic consultations, and shiatsu massage for the mother, and was invited to visit whenever he wanted after the birth.

Before long, he had contributed close to $10,000 for such expenses, and paid $150 a week maintenance for some years.

Although the man indicated from the beginning he wanted to be involved in the child's life, there was no discussion about the birth certificate, the judge said.

His name was added in late 2002, but the birth mother said she only agreed because she was advised it was the best course of action to settle the family court proceedings.
...
Solicitor Janet Loughman, of the Women's Legal Service NSW, said the case is an important step in transforming rights into reality for many families.'

Senator Wright Meets with F & F's CA Leaders; F & F Supporter Forces TX AG's Office to Apologize to Son

Matt · 17 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Newsletter here. Excerpt:

'California Senator Rod Wright (pictured) and his legislative director Stan DiOrio held a phone conference with two dozen of Fathers and Families' California leaders on Wednesday.

Beginning in 1996, Senator Wright has taken up the cause of family court reform and fought to bring justice to a very unjust system. He sponsored four family court reform bills last year, all of which passed and were signed by Governor Schwarzenegger, and he's introduced three more this year. Last December we gave him our "California Senator of the Year Award 2010."

Both Wright and DiOrio praised Fathers and Families' work and said that we've helped change the political balance of power on family court issues in Sacramento. However, they both made it clear that there is much more to be done, and they want to see F & F continue to grow and build its organizational strength.'

Mom jailed for false child abuse story against ex

anthony · 17 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'SARASOTA, Fla. -- Three southwest Florida residents have been charged with falsely reporting child abuse to the state hotline.

Lisa Ann Schinnow was arrested Tuesday after officials say the 48-year-old woman called in three separate reports alleging her ex-husband was abusing their son. DCF found no evidence of abuse and believe Schinnow made the allegations because of the custody arrangement.

Taiwandra Burks and Stacey Hendry were also arrested last week for making false child abuse reports after DCF investigated claims that a child was being sexually abused. The agency found no evidence of abuse.

Falsely reporting child abuse is a felony punishable by up to five years in prison. Each report is a separate violation.

DCF stressed falser reports waste time and resources for investigators busy with thousands of legitimate cases.'

Female wrestlers' discrimination claims rejected

anthony · 18 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SACRAMENTO, Calif.—A judge has rejected the discrimination claims of three female wrestlers at the University of California, Davis, who had to compete against men of the same weight class in order to make the team.

U.S. District Judge Frank Damrell concluded Wednesday that university officials did not violate Title IX, the federal law banning sex discrimination in college sports, or the Constitution's equal protection clause in their treatment of the women.
...
He also noted that the women, Arezou Mansourian, Lauren Mancuso and Christine Wing-Si Ng, were given the opportunity to compete for the men's team in 2001 but either declined or did not make it on the squad.

"Plaintiffs were not cut from the men's team because of their sex," the judge wrote. "Rather, plaintiffs were cut ... because, like the other male student-athletes that did not make the roster, they could not compete at the Division I, Pac-10 level in intercollegiate men's wrestling."'

Australia: Sex bias claims by men rise

anthony · 18 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sex discrimination complaints made by men have outnumbered those from women for the first time, according to figures compiled by the State's Equal Opportunity Commission.

The EOC recorded a surge in the number of sex discrimination allegations last financial year, with men responsible for lodging more than half of them.

Equal Opportunity Commissioner Yvonne Henderson said studies of the complaints indicated that men were becoming more aware of the treatment dished out to them by employers and service providers.

The majority of male complaints related to sex discrimination in the workplace, with the next biggest category relating to entry to premises.

"We have received complaints from men who feel discriminated against because they have been denied entry to bars for wearing attire similar to women," Ms Henderson said.
...
Sue Price, spokeswoman for the national group Men's Rights Agency, said she was not surprised by the increase in complaints by men and described it as a "sign of the times".

"The rights of men are ignored when the claims of women are put above those of men," Mrs Price said.

She said society had swung too far in favour of women and men were fighting back.'

UK: A-levels: Boys close the gap on girls in key subjects

Mr VanHuizen · 18 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys have dramatically closed the performance gap between them and girls as a result of knuckling down to exams because of the recession, yesterday's A-level results show.

Exam boards officers said they had heeded calls to study subjects like maths and science to get ahead in the search for for jobs.

Figures show that girls are at level-pegging in the percentage of A* grades they have notched up – with 8.2 per cent being awarded the top grade pass. Last year girls were 0.4 per ahead of boys.

Andrew Hall, chief executive of the Assessment and Qualifications Alliance, the country's biggest exam board, said boys had "recognised the challenge of A* grades" as a growing number of universities insisted on all candidates having at least one top grade pass.'

South Carolina Dares Feds to Deny Medicaid Coverage to Male Breast Cancer Patient

anthony · 19 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'South Carolina health officials announced Friday that they will cover a local construction worker's breast cancer treatment under Medicaid even though federal guidelines exclude him because he is a man.

The decision effectively dares the federal Medicaid office to reject the claims for his treatment, and it sets up a potential showdown between state and federal officials.

But until then, South Carolina said it will cover Raymond Johnson -- a 26-year-old man who discovered he had breast cancer last month. His unsuccessful efforts to apply for Medicaid coverage have drawn national attention.

Tony Keck, director of the South Carolina Department Health and Human Services, said it is "in the best interest" that Johnson be deemed eligible for the program.'

Feminists Hate Everything Masculine

anthony · 19 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I hope that one of the results of my new book The Flipside of Feminism will be to show the American people that the feminist movement was never about equality. It was always about interchangability, and when the facts of human nature are too overwhelming to make men and women interchangeable, feminists are determined to get rid of anything that is truly masculine.

A good example of feminist maliciousness toward men is the way they have used the power of Big Government in the Department of Education to abolish hundreds of men's college sports teams, particularly the sports that are too masculine for women to play. I knew the congressional sponsor of Title IX, and she certainly did not plan it to be a sword to punish men or to enforce bean-counting quotas. She merely wanted equal opportunity for women. But the malicious feminists have used Title IX as a sword to force colleges to abolish hundreds of men's athletic teams, so many, in fact, that they have discouraged large numbers of men from even attending college, and colleges are now nearly 60% women.'

Peace College alums protest college's plan to admit male students

anthony · 19 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'About 200 Peace College alumni and their families tossed roses into the college's fountain Sunday to protest the administration's surprise plans to admit male students and rename the institution.

Security at the private college just north of downtown Raleigh did not allow reporters to attend the protest, but the group could be observed from the college's front gate, The Raleigh News & Observer reported. They sang the school's alma mater, heard a speech from one of the organizers, and then tossed their roses into the fountain.

They finished with a loud cheer, then marched to the front gates to meet with reporters. A security guard worked at the lock at the gates for several minutes before getting them to open and let the protesters through.

"We're here because a travesty has happened at our college," said Jamie Averette Mitchell, who graduated in 2000 and now lives in Zebulon.'

Brittany Lester Sent Disturbing Child Abuse Images to Father of Child

anthony · 20 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Brittany Lester is another example of fine parenting coming from the state that brought you Casey Anthony. It seems that she wanted to use imagery to make her threats seem more realistic when she was angry at the father of her child. Fortunately, her baby's daddy has more sense than her, and he turned her in to police.

Sources say Brittany Lester, a 20-year-old out of St. Petersburg, sent disturbing images of her baby via text message to the father of the child. The father of the abused infant, Donald Callaway, had just dropped the 1-month-old infant off at the hotel in which Lester resides. Sources say she was recently kicked out of her mother's home and had to live in the motel with her children. Who wants to take a stab at why her mother threw her rear-end out on the street? It probably has something to do with the way she acts.'

'How to create a feminist future'

anthony · 20 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'School's out for 500 activists as they graduated yesterday from UK Feminista's second summer school. With interest in feminism sparking across the UK, this weekend's "suffragette school" in Birmingham aimed to equip budding activists with a toolbox of techniques for building a feminist future. With attacks on abortion rights, the relentless objectification of women in the media and the assault on women's economic independence through public sector cuts, there's certainly no shortage of obstacles to creating it. Hence "lessons" at summer school included everything from suffragette-era tactics of direct action to the rather more modern approach of mobilising the masses through Facebook and Twitter.

...

Important questions were also asked about the future of feminism. With women's lives being so diverse, and the impact of sexism refracted by the many aspects of their identity – class, race, sexuality and disability – how can we work to ensure the strategies and solutions reflect this? And given that bringing about real progress will also mean fundamentally changing what it means to be a man in this society, how do we mobilise men and boys to escape the "masculinity trap"? Those conversations and the search for solutions need to continue, because feminism is a movement, not a club. Everyone has a vital part to play in it.'

"The Flipside Of Feminism"

anthony · 20 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Author Suzanne Venker, a Warson Woods resident recently transplanted from Kirkwood, has some words of advice for freshmen co-eds entering college in a few weeks: Stay away from the women's studies classes.
...
Venker's book and her outspoken commentary have garnered plenty of kudos from the likes of Ann Coulter, Mark Levin, David Limbaugh and more. She has appeared before the conservative Heritage Foundation and is scheduled for an appearance on "Fox & Friends," a morning show on Rupert Murdoch's cable television news channel.

"I advise college students to read about successful women, not about all this victimhood," said Venker. "My favorite thing to do is to speak to college audiences to give them a different view from what they get from their professors.

"I don't ask the students to accept what I say now," added Venker. "I just want them to be exposed to the truth. Some day down the road a light may go off in their heads, when reality sets in, and they realize they've been told a lot that is not true."'

Americans Think Women Need College More Than Men Do

anthony · 20 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to Reuters, the Pew Research Center talked to over 2,000 Americans and found that while 77% said women needed to go to college, just 68% said men needed to. Also, women tended to be more positive about their college experiences — female graduates were more likely than male ones to say that their education was worth the money, and that college contributed to their personal and intellectual growth. Another interesting finding: 40% of women's parents paid for college, while just 29% of men's did so.

...

Whatever the case, there's the potential for a feedback loop here: if people continue to see college as more necessary for women than for men, more women may enroll and more men may opt out, making universities seem more female and thus less necessary for men, and then starting the whole process over again. It seems unlikely that women will ever take over the entirety of the intellectual labor force, or that any other dire mancessionary scenarios will come to pass, but a perception that guys don't need college is none too good for young men. And a widening gender gap in enrollment without a corresponding closure of the wage gap might lead to more debt for women — or, even more troublingly, a loss of respect for colleges if they start to become female-dominated institutions in a world where femaleness is still devalued. Really, large gender inequalities in college enrollment are unlikely to be beneficial for people of any gender, and when it comes to making decisions about college, one's chromosomes probably aren't very important. Now researchers need to figure out why people think they are.'

College Rape Accusations and the Presumption of Male Guilt

anthony · 20 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OCR's new interpretation of Title IX "strongly discourages" universities from permitting the accused "to question or cross-examine the accuser" during the hearing. In addition, if universities provide an appeals process, it must be available to both parties—which subjects the accused to double jeopardy.

Most egregiously, OCR requires universities to render judgment using "a preponderance of the evidence" standard. This means that in a rape case, a campus disciplinary board of faculty, administrators and perhaps students serves as both judge and jury. Few if any of these judges are likely to have professional competence in fact-gathering, evidence analysis or judicial procedure. Yet to deliver a verdict of guilty, they need only believe that the accused is more likely than not to have committed the crime.

...

On campus, where casual sex is celebrated and is frequently fueled by alcohol, the ambiguity that often attends sexual encounters is heightened and the risk of error in rape cases is increased. The consequences for a wrongly convicted student are devastating: Not only is he likely to be expelled, but he may well be barred from graduate or professional school and certain government agencies, suffer irreparable damage to his reputation, and still be exposed to criminal prosecution.

...

In short, universities are institutionalizing a presumption of guilt in sexual assault cases. This implements the doctrine developed in the 1980s and '90s by postmodernists, radical feminists and critical legal studies scholars that inspired the ruinous campus speech codes. That doctrine teaches that the American political order is designed to oppress the weak; that racial minorities and women, whether they realize it or not, are victims; and that the truth, except for the first two propositions, is infinitely malleable.'

Strauss-Kahn accuser mulls dropping case for money: report

anthony · 21 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(Reuters) - Lawyers for the woman who accused former IMF chief Dominique Strauss-Kahn of sexual assault have explored a deal in which they would scuttle the criminal case in exchange for a monetary settlement in the civil lawsuit, the Wall Street Journal reported on Friday.

The woman's lawyer, Kenneth Thompson, strongly denied the report, which the Journal sourced to unidentified people briefed on the matter.

The report comes ahead of Tuesday's scheduled court hearing in which Strauss-Kahn, once seen as a leading contender to be the next president of France, was due to appear before a judge for the first time since he was freed from house arrest on July 1.'

Sentencing disparities in child-sex-assault cases point to double standard

el cid · 21 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This story reports on the double-standard of sentencing for men convicted of assault on a child and women convicted of the same offense. Many of these stories involve teacher/student relationships, though not all. Excerpt:

"Women in Colorado convicted of sexually assaulting a child in their care are far less likely to go to prison than men sentenced for the same crime.

A Denver Post analysis of sentencing data provided by the Colorado Judicial Branch shows that of the 2,128 men convicted of sexual assault on a child by a person in a position of trust from 2006 through 2010, more than 50 percent were sent to prison.

Of the 79 women convicted of the same felony offense, 38 percent went to prison. A little more than 39 percent of female defendants in that same period — 31 — were put on intensive supervised probation. Less than 35 percent of men were given the same sentence.

Experts who have studied the issue say those statistics are mirrored nationwide and show a clear disparity between how male and female teachers, coaches and babysitters are treated when they are convicted of sexually abusing a child."

Australian Department of Health and Ageing: 25 New Grants to Support Men's "Sheds"

Minuteman · 22 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to media release here. Excerpt:

'The Australian Government is funding new grants for twenty-five men's sheds across the country to purchase tools, conduct building and maintenance and employ shed coordinators.

The Minister for Indigenous Health, Warren Snowdon, who has responsibility for male health, made the announcement at the 4th National Men's Shed Conference in Brisbane.
...

"Men often form friendships as they work together, doing things that are traditionally done in sheds, like building furniture, fixing machinery and working on small projects to help other local community groups.

"With Australian men still dying four to five years younger than women, we know we have to support grass roots initiatives like men's sheds to get males of all ages engaged in ways to improve their health and wellbeing," he said.

Mr Snowdon said Round Two of the Australian Government Shed Development Program announced today is funding sites in New South Wales, Queensland, Victoria and Tasmania up to $10,000 each.'

DSK case gross injustice used as vehicle to paint men as predators

anthony · 22 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is an extraordinary, swift turnaround and a deep humiliation for the Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus Vance and his unreliable witness Nafissatou Diallo; an embarrassment for US justice; and a day of shame for the feminist movement.

Like the New York prosecutor worried about his re-election, prominent US feminists in academe and the media were too desperate to handcuff, draw and quarter their prize catch in the form of Strauss-Kahn the rich, powerful French political luminary and International Monetary Fund boss known as DSK.

Women such as gender studies guru Joan W. Scott, feminist icon Gloria Steinem, The Nation's Katha Pollitt and The New York Times's Maureen Dowd lost all sense of reality, objectivity or basic scepticism regarding the untested accusations. They gleefully hopped on to the dirty bandwagon of presumption of male guilt the moment a woman - any woman - makes an accusation of sexual assault.'

Circumcision may fuel illicit trade

anthony · 22 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A medical advocacy group has warned that the KwaZulu-Natal health department's decision to allow circumcisions at state hospitals will fuel an illicit trade in foreskins, the Sowetan newspaper reported.

The newspaper reported that Medical Rights Advocacy Network head Dr Uttam Govind had written to Health Minister Aaron Motsoaledi, KwaZulu-Natal premier Dr Zweli Mkhize and health MEC Sibongiseni Dhlomo.

He had urged them to stop the planned circumcision programme, which starts in April 2012.

Govind reportedly wrote that there were problems enforcing the Human Tissue Act, which required researchers to obtain a permit from the health ministry before exporting human tissue.

The foreskins were used in the cosmetics industry to remove wrinkles, as artificial skin and for insulin.'

Title IX ties hands of athletic officials

anthony · 22 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's arguably the most polarizing issue that has affected college athletics over the last 40 years. Advocates point to the opportunities that have been provided while critics blame it for many of the athletic programs that have been cut.

Since 1972, Title IX has legally required that the same education opportunities be provided for women as well as men, which means that colleges have had to effectively — and struggled to — provide the same opportunities in athletics for women as well as men.

And like every other college in the country, Porterville College has had to face the same issues when it comes to Title IX. While there's no denying the opportunities that have been provided for local female athletes, there's also no denying the challenges that PC faces when trying to meet Title IX requirements.'

On YouTube: "A Murder But Not A Crime" from "Chicago"

anthony · 22 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. This video comes from a Feministing contributor. In the twisted world of feminism, its OK to kill a man, hence the title -- "A Murder But Not A Crime". I attached a link to Chloe Angyal's Feministing profile. Please -- no threats are hate mail. I'm just trying to expose her hypocrisy.

NASA's girls-only science camp

anthony · 23 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'GREENCASTLE, Pa. — At the age of 12, Abigail Marconi might be too young to be a rocket scientist.

But give her a few years, and it could be her career of choice.

The seventh-grader at Greencastle-Antrim Middle School recently spent a week as a participant in NASA's SISTER program — the Summer Institute of Science, Technology, Engineering and Research.

Held each year at the Goddard Space Flight Center in Greenbelt, Md., the purpose of the five-day program is to provide opportunities for middle school girls to explore nontraditional career fields while working with research scientists, mathematicians and engineers.

Limited to 30 girls, Abigail said she applied for a spot in the program in mid-April.'

Sexual assault hurts everyone

anthony · 23 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

“I do think it’s quite fabulous,” Sharon Osbourne declared on a recent episode of CBS’s “The Talk.”

But she wasn’t commenting on makeup, books, or typical talk show fodder. She was applauding a California woman who cut off her husband’s penis and put it in the garbage disposal.

The five co-hosts giggled and speculated, even going so far as to reenact the scene at the sink and discuss whether he may have “deserved it.”

These women are paid to act like eighth grade girls around the lockers at lunchtime, but typically I don’t even mind their childish demeanors. Do as you please, CBS, but stick to new recipes and fall clothing lines.
...
Making jokes about a man who had his genitals cut off is offensive, too. If five men sat around a table on a national news network, laughing about the violent abuse of a woman, outrage would ensue.

However, when women applaud a female perpetrator, it’s no longer about abuse. Suddenly, women are fighting for that mythical empowerment and retribution they’ve deserved for years.

By encouraging violence, abuse, and gender discrimination, these ladies shed light upon a repulsive double standard.'

UK: Shock as woman is charged over 'false rape claim'

anthony · 23 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who claimed she was raped in front of her two young children in Co Armagh has been charged with wasting police time and perverting the course of justice.

The charges relate to an incident in March where a 24-year-old woman told police she was raped in a park in Bessbrook, Co Armagh.

She told police she was attacked by a man walking his dog as she approached an area known as the Bridge in Derramore Woods.'

Mom coached daughter to lie about sexual abuse to win custody battle

Anonymous · 23 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former jockey and racehorse trainer at the centre of a child custody scandal lied that her former boyfriend was a paedophile, a High Court judge said yesterday.

Vicky Haigh made up the allegations and even coached her seven-year-old daughter to repeat the claims, he added.

Sir Nicholas Wall, the country's most senior family judge, said that Miss Haigh should be named and shamed and her former partner, David Tune, freed from the false smear that he is a child abuser.'

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

F&F: Holstein Weighs in on Craig v. Hodge Paternity Fraud Case in Nashville Tennessean

Matt · 23 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“”The appeals court could have found a reason to award damages to Chad if it cared to, but it didn’t,’ said Dr. Ned Holstein, a physician and founder of Boston-based family court reform organization Fathers and Families. ‘This father is deserving of being made whole based on the deception he has suffered and the harm to him.’”

Brandon Gee of the Nashville Tennessean wrote a detailed piece concerning a paternity fraud case currently before the Tennessee Supreme Court. The case pits duped dad Chad Craig against Tina Marie Hodge, the mother of a son who she told Craig was his.'

‘Hot Sauce’ Mom Convicted of Child Abuse

Matt · 24 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Jessica Beagley, the 36-year-old Alaska mother who forced her 7-year-old son to ingest hot sauce and take a cold shower as punishment for allegedly lying about various transgressions at school, has been convicted of misdemeanor child abuse.

Beagley’s case has stirred up a debate about when parental discipline crosses the line into illegality.

She was charged with a crime after she sent a video of the hot sauce/cold shower punishment to the Dr. Phil show and later appeared on the program. The mother of six argued in court that she had to resort to a serious punishment method, because her son, adopted from Russia, suffered from a disorder that made him prone to misbehave.

After deliberating for a day, the jury convicted Beagley of misdemeanor child abuse, the Anchorage Daily News reports. She faces up to a year in prison and is due to be sentenced Monday.

Beagley stood blank-faced as the verdict was read, according to the Daily News. She did not respond to questions as she left the courtroom with her husband Gary, an Anchorage police officer.'

SAVE: Academia Rebels Against the Presumption of Guilt for Men

Matt · 24 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

SAVE press release:

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Wendy McElroy, wmcelroy@saveservices.org

ACADEMIA REBELS AGAINST THE PRESUMPTION OF GUILT FOR MEN

WASHINGTON, Aug. 24 / U.S. Newswire / -- Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is calling on the U.S. Department of Education to rescind a controversial directive. The new DED rule forces persons to abandon their due process rights to get an education. Such persons are considered “guilty until proven innocent” whenever an on-campus sexual accusation occurs.

On April 4, the DED Office of Civil Rights instructed every university that accepts federal funds to use a “preponderance (51%) of evidence” standard in evaluating allegations of sexual offense, including rape. An accuser only needs to 'tip the scales' for a professor or student to be found “guilty.”

But the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) is now objecting. The group wants sexual accusations to be judged by a higher standard than traffic courts use for parking tickets.

On June 27, Gregory Scholtz, AAUP's Director of the Department of Academic Freedom, Tenure, and Governance wrote to DED to protest the "lower standard of proof” that threatens “academic freedom and tenure.”

Then on August 18, AAUP's Chair of the Committee on Women expressed concern about the “potential for accusations, even false ones, to ruin a faculty member’s career.” Backlash from two separate units of the AAUP is remarkable. Their recognition of false accusations is extraordinary.

“People lie for many reasons including revenge and shame; people also make mistakes. This is why courts presume an accused to be innocent and place the burden of proof on the accuser,” explains SAVE spokesman Phil Cook. “Hard evidence and due process are all the more important in sexual cases that often devolve to ‘he said, she said.’”

As a result of the DED directive, campuses are already beginning to reverse the presumption of innocence. Based on questionable data, men are assumed to be predators and women are said to “never lie” about issues like rape. By lowering the standards of justice, the OCR is encouraging false accusations.

SAVE applauds the AAUP for its courage in demanding the OCR rescind its April 4th mandate. SAVE urges college student parents to contact the Department of Education to demand for due process for all.

The SAVE letter to the Department of Education can be seen here: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/OCRLetter.pdf. SAVE is a national victim advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to domestic violence.

Boys believe discussing problems is a waste of time and weird, says study

Matt · 24 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'COLUMBIA, Mo. — Boys don't discuss their problems because they feel it's a waste of time, says a new study from the University of Missouri.

"For years, psychologists have insisted that boys and men would like to talk about their problems but are held back by fears of embarrassment or appearing weak," said Amanda J. Rose, associate professor of psychological sciences in the university's College of Arts and Sciences.

When researchers asked young people about how talking about their problems would make them feel, boys responded that they didn't see talking about problems to be a useful activity, the study says. Boys didn't express angst or distress about discussing problems any more than girls.
...

"An implication is that parents should encourage their children to adopt a middle ground when discussing problems," Rose said. "For boys, it would be helpful to explain that, at least for some problems, some of the time, talking about their problems is not a waste of time."

Helping boys see some utility in talking about problems may be more effective," Rose said.

"On the other hand, many girls are at risk for excessive problem talk, which is linked with depression and anxiety," Rose said. "So girls should know that talking about problems isn't the only way to cope."'

Baby Tossed From 4th Floor on Life Support, Mother Arrested

Matt · 24 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ORANGE, Calif. (KTLA) -- A mother accused of tossing her 7-month-old baby from the fourth story of a parking structure is set to be arraigned Wednesday as the child clings to life.

Noe Medina, Jr. was found in extremely critical condition after falling from the fourth floor of the parking structure at Children's Hospital in Orange around 6:20 p.m. Monday, according to Orange Police.

The baby, who wears a helmet for medical reasons, did not appear to be wearing the helmet at the time, police said. He remained on life support Wednesday morning.

...

Hermosillo's husband, Noe Medina, says his wife was hospitalized in May for depression and was not allowed to be alone with the baby.

Medina says Hermosillo grabbed the baby Monday while he was watching the couple's two other children at a home in La Habra.

He was not immediately aware of what had happened, but called police to report them missing.

Family members also say Hermosillo went to therapy for the first time Monday.'

Allegations against WNBA star include assault and menacing

anthony · 24 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'L.A. Sparks rookie Jantel Lavender -- the #5 overall pick in the 2011 WNBA Draft -- allegedly kneed her ex-BF in the junk so hard, his groin area was "throbbing from the pain" ... this according to legal docs obtained by TMZ.

According to court papers filed in L.A. County Superior Court, Lavender's ex Adam Ashley obtained a temporary restraining order against the 6'4" athlete two weeks ago ... claiming he's been "in hiding" ever since a July 5 altercation where Lavender allegedly grabbed a knife and threatened to kill him.

In the docs, Ashley also says Lavender "grabbed my head and slammed it into the wall. She grabbed my neck and was choking me."

Ashley claims it wasn't the first time Lavender got violent with him -- alleging she also tried to choke him during a fight in June. During that altercation, Ashley claims, "While I was grabbing for her hands she kneed me in the growing [SIC] area. My private area was throbbing from the pain."

Jantel has been ordered to stay at least 100 yards away from Ashley until the next court hearing.'

Feminists Have a Tantrum

anthony · 24 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The feminists are having another tantrum. The New York chapter of the National Organization for Women and the New York Civil Liberties Union are squealing about a 64-page decision in a workplace, class-action suit brought by their friends in the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

The feminists are so accustomed to having their gender doctrines prevail in the courts, in the bureaucracy, in the media and in academia that they can't deal with being told the truth, i.e., that their notions don't make sense and are unfair to others, especially employers, husbands and fathers.

Judge Loretta A. Preska of the U.S. District Court in Manhattan tossed out this case in which some female employees accused financial and media services giant Bloomberg LP of workplace discrimination because their bosses failed to pretend that pregnant employees and those who took time off for maternity or other purposes were really doing the same work as those who worked faithfully fulltime on the job. This is another example of the fact that the feminist goal was never equal pay for equal work, but always was more pay for less work.'

New UK feminist group pledges cuts backlash

Broadsword · 25 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminist activists launching a new group in London today promised a series of "creative, bold actions" to challenge inequality.

UK Feminista will offer training in campaigning and direct action, with its first monthly meeting due on Saturday, August 27.

"We think it's time for some action," said a spokeswoman. "Public sector cuts are undermining women's economic independence.

"Services for victims of rape and domestic violence are being slashed. A pernicious rise in sexual exploitation is expected in the capital when the Olympics kick off. And abortion rights are under attack.

"Day in, day out, women's rights are being ignored, sidelined and restricted. Enough is enough."

About 500 people attended the group's "suffragette school" in Birmingham over the weekend, where activities included learning how to behave when arrested.'

SAVE: Remove Campus Policy that Strips Men of the Presumption of Innocence

Matt · 25 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

On April 4, the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights ordered every university that accepts federal funds to use a "preponderance (51%) of evidence" standard in evaluating allegations of sexual offense.

Campus procedures are not criminal ones, so the accused do not enjoy Constitutional protections. Now, jilted lovers can ruin the lives of teachers and students with false allegations of rape.

Two units of the prestigious American Association of University Professors have spoken out against this new policy:

1. Gregory F. Scholtz, Director of the Department of Academic Freedom, Tenure, and Governance

2. Ann E. Green, Chair of the AAUP's Committee on Women in the Academic Profession and AAUP President Cary Nelson

And this past Sunday the Wall Street Journal published a searing editorial, charging, "In short, universities are institutionalizing a presumption of guilt in sexual assault cases" (http://online.wsj.com/article/SB10001424053111903596904576516232905230642.html)

We are now asking you to politely contact the Department of Education and tell it to remove its sex assault policy that strips due process from the accused.

Contact Ms. Russlyn Ali, Assistant Secretary, Office for Civil Rights:

Telephone: 202-453-5900
Email: russlynn.ali@ed.gov

Please contact Russlyn Ali today. Every day that passes with this policy in place means more false accusations and more ruined reputations.

For more information about SAVE's new activism project visit CAMP - Countering Abuse Misinfo Project - at http://www.saveservices.org/camp.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Schools 'failing generation of teenage boys' as the GCSE gender gap is at its widest

Broadsword · 25 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Schools were today accused of failing a generation of teenage boys as record exam results revealed the gender gap is wider than ever. One in four entries from girls scored an A*, while fewer than one in five of those from boys were awarded the top grade - the biggest gap since the A* was introduced in 1994.

Education experts warned the "alarming" trend is leaving boys without the necessary skills to get the most out of life. The starkest difference was in English, with 73 per cent of girls getting an A* to C grade compared with 59 per cent of boys.

...

Girls are moving to traditionally male science subjects at a faster rate than boys, helping to fuel a massive increase in the popularity of physics, chemistry and biology.

...

The most worrying trend was the increasing gap between the results of boys and girls, said Professor Alan Smithers, director of the centre for education and employment research at the University of Buckingham.

"It is a truly enormous gap in English and it is really very alarming. It is a poor reflection on us as educators. We are failing boys in English. We are not giving them the necessary understanding to get as much out of life as they could."

It comes despite coursework being cut back, which has in the past been blamed for helping girls to do better at their GCSEs. When the A* was first introduced the gap between boys and girls was just three per cent.'

Light a Blue Bulb for Prostate Cancer Awareness Month, September 2011

Matt · 25 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From malecare.org:

This year, let's take prostate cancer awareness building into our own hands. Light a Blue Bulb every night (or, for a few nights) during September.

Too often, we look to nonprofits, government agencies and corporations to lead our advocacy efforts…and, sometimes, we are deeply disappointed. This year, our national prostate cancer nonprofit, Malecare, asks us to take personal responsibility and build advocacy from the grass roots, up. So, please do the simple task of getting a blue bulb and lighting it where your neighbors might see it. Get ready for your neighbors to ask you, "why the blue bulb?" Proudly express your desire that all men and women become more aware about prostate cancer.

Get a blue bulb at your local hardware store or online at homedepot.com or amazon.com or dig one out from your party box. Set it in your porch light or a lamp by a window. And, simply, light it for a few hours, or all night.

Post your thoughts at http://malecare.org/blue. Did you use Prostate Cancer Awareness Month to remember someone whom you have lost? We would be honored to publish a paragraph about the person you cared about, and, you can even upload a photo. Perhaps a photo of the person you wish were still here, or of you, by your blue light bulb.

If in the moment that you screw in a blue light bulb, you think to yourself, "I ought to make a doctor's appointment," then Prostate Cancer Awareness Month has done its job. We need to say to ourselves, "we are worth taking care of, that our lives are worthy of health and happiness, that I will commit to asking my doctor what tests I need to stay alive."

Thanks for honoring us, all, by supporting Prostate Cancer Awareness Month.

Please feel encouraged to email any questions or comments to me at darryl@malecare.org

Darryl
Darryl Mitteldorf, LCSW
Director
Malecare Cancer Support

The Will Foundation seeks submisisons

Matt · 27 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

The web site is at http://thewillfoundation.webs.com/. The author of the site (who also maintains another blog discussing legal abuse matters at http://dignifiedlife.blogspot.com/) lives in India and is looking for contributions to a regular, free magazine. According to his email note, he has been the victim of India's Penal Code 498A, a law originally intended to protect women from abuse by dowry-related fraud or misuse of the tradition of dowry, but has become used all too often as a means of gaining an upper-hand in divorce proceedings or in cases where a marriage has gone bad and the law is simply used as a means of getting the state to arrest or harass the husband and/or his family.

In particular he would like articles or stories about how laws in the country in which you have live have been used or misused such that a measurable injustice has been inflicted on you simply because you happened to be a man in a relationship with a woman or when it was a case where your interests as a person ran into conflict with hers. He offers you the opportunity to include your name and/or photo along with the article you submit.

The first issue of WILL can be downloaded from here.

Men's Rights Denied: An Indian Perspective

Anonymous · 27 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

With growing concerns about denial of justice and fair treatment in laws and judicial system and with increasing suicides of men due to marital terror, men's rights activists across India are demanding that "Men have a Right to live a dignified life" and society must not consider the lives of men as cheap or as disposable. We point at the facts like one married man is committing suicide in every 9 minutes and that intimate terror has no gender bias, while courts deny justice to male victims of intimate terror.

Men's Rights activists today have no enthusiasm to celebrate August 15th as India's Independence Day, as they no longer feel any sense of freedom inside India's biased justice system. "Staying alive" is a struggle for Indian men today.

Many women have also started championing for men's rights, opposing anti-male bias in the laws and growing misandry (hatred against males) in the society. They are also demanding gender neutral laws. As a norm, men are facing extortion as demands of huge alimony after marriage. Recently, a woman demanded Rs.1 crore (10 million) in court as alimony from her husband, a software engineer after 2 years of marriage. Biased Laws have converted marriage into a business now. Throughout India, Mothers, Grand Mothers, Sisters (both married & unmarried) are up in arms to stop this evil. Mothers of husbands are denied the right to see their grand children, who become pawn's at the wife's mercy.

Men's Rights Activists (MRAs) are asserting that intimate terror has no gender bias and as thousands of men are dying due to intimate or marital terror. While, there are scores of laws for women there are none to protect men or their families from torture by wives or their powerful family members.

The suicides of males due to intimate terror are almost always dismissed as accidental deaths and police never files FIRs, even when the man has written a suicide note blaming torture and abuse by wife as the cause of him taking this extreme step. However, if a woman commits suicide due to even mental problems, not only the husband, but also his parents are jailed for causing her death by a mere complaint by woman's parents. Media also sensationalizes these female deaths, while ignoring suicides of males due to marital terror as there is no such law for men.

Last year, about 58,000 married men committed suicide compared to 31,000 married women. According to National Crime Records Bureau, 18,441 men compared to 11,641 women committed suicide due to family reasons (and marital terror), while only 5,089 men committed suicide due to poverty and bankruptcy. So, it is very clear that men need laws to protect them from marital terror. However, Government and courts are not listening. Due to this, men are finding it difficult to stay alive.

With increase in separations, divorces and multiple court cases, many men are losing jobs or are completely unable to carry on with their professions due to stress and depression. However, courts are rarely sympathetic to such men and order them to pay huge alimony to wives every month. Many men are also thrown out of their own houses without verifying facts or truth, when wife files a false case of domestic violence in the court. These men are on the streets now.

Demands by Men's Rights Activists (MRAs):

1) A special Domestic Violence act for men must be enacted at Parliament to prevent rise of men's suicides due to marital terror by wives.

2) Tenure of Marriage must be considered by courts, while awarding alimony. Less alimony for short marriages and more for long marriages.

3) No alimony to working women (without children), if they earn salaries more than Rs.20,000/- (US$ 434) per month.

4) Men must not be thrown out of their houses in domestic violence cases.

5) Shared parenting of Children must be considered as default arrangement by courts instead of encouraging prolonged child custody disputes.

6) Courts must tell highly educated women to work instead of telling husbands to pay huge sums of money as alimony or maintenance to wife every month.

The most frequent reason for suicide of men is “family problems”, not economic problems as often perceived. The suicides of men increased rapidly with economic growth in last 15 years.

Gender wise, Statistics of number of victims of Murders, Suicides and Accidents all over India
(Figures as per National Crimes Record Bureau report)

Murder:
Male Victims-24,441, Female Victims-8,718 Total Victims-33,159

Culpable Homicide Not Amounting To Murder (Sec.304 and 308 IPC) During 2009
Male Victims=3,529, Female Victims=753 Total Victims=4282

Dowry Death Convictions (75% dowry death cases are false and lead to no convictions)
In 2009, 2008 and 2007 the dowry death convictions are 1882, 1948 and 1946 respectively.

These dowry deaths are too small a number for a country of 1.2 billion people.

Accidental Deaths:
Male Victims=276,333 Female Victims=80,688 Total Victims=357021
(Male Victims=77.4%, female Victims=22.6%)

Suicides:
Male Victims=81,471 Female victims=45,680 (Total Victims=127151)
(Male Victims=64.1%, female Victims=35.9%)

Total Victims of Suicide, Murder and Accidents:
Male Victims=361,333 Female Victims=135,839
Male Victims: 73%, Female Victims: 27%

So, who is more vulnerable in Indian Society?
The males or females?
Who is more likely to be a victim? A male or a female?

Regards,
Anwar H. Danish

Jewish Voices: The Current Judaic Movement to End Circumcision

Anonymous · 27 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(SALEM, Ore.) - The past century has been marked by the declaration and protection of universal human rights, as well as a marked increase in the quality of life, both in the United States and worldwide. With these improvements, higher expectations regarding a child's right to bodily autonomy have become socially accepted and legally mandated. Many argue that since female children in the U.S. are protected by a 1996 law banning female circumcision, this law should be expanded to include the protection of male children as well.

There are a growing number of Jews who are becoming increasingly vocal in questioning both the ethics and the legality of circumcision. Jews in the Reform Judaism movement have already been advocating for an end to ritual circumcision for the past 180 years. What follows is a collection of statements from Jews who question the ethics of forced under-age circumcision.
...
Here are some of these pioneers in their own words.

"In any other arena of medical or religious practice, such an activity as the willful removal of healthy, God-given, purposefully functioning tissue (without sufficient mitigation of the pain that it causes) from a fully conscious infant, would be immediately recognized, in both Jewish and American law, as the trespass it is.
Or, to put it another way: It's a mitzvah to fight to end circumcision!"
- Samuel Richmond, a Jewish Intactivist in southern California,The Case for Brit Without Milah, Circumstitions.com
...
Thus the need for the emotional blackmail so many parents are subjected to; the myths of no pain and no risk; the hugely exaggerated claims of potential health benefits. Throughout Europe, health services abjure routine circumcisions because of the doctors' commitment to upholding the Hippocratic Oath not to do harm. Jewish parents should embrace that simple principle and take up welcoming ceremonies for our babies that are violence-free and egalitarian.
- Victor Schonfeld, Director of the documentary War Cries: It's A Boy!

Jerusalem Report, November 22, 1999.
"More and more Jews are choosing to not circumcise their boys.. (Thank God!) And just as we accept Jews who do not keep kosher or observe as we do, we recognize the amazing diversity of practice and belief that is part and parcel of our astounding heritage.
Genital cutting does not create a 'mensch' (a conscious-caring individual). Indeed it is more of an obstacle to our natural development and [a] source of anger and confusion.
Coming from an Orthodox background and having lived in Jerusalem, i am very aware that the problems of domestic violence and sexual pathology are just as prevalent in the observant communities as in the secular.
Deuteronomy 10:16 says: "Circumcise the foreskin of your heart,"
In Hebrew, the word foreskin is 'orlah'.. there is an 'orlah' covering the ear and the heart..
What is preventing us from 'hearing the word of God and opening our hearts in love and compassion.. This is the real circumcision that needs to occur. and it is a life-time learning ceremony….
Brit Milah' is the hebrew for the covenant of 'circumcision'. 'Mila' also means 'word'.. We can welcome the child with songs and praises and holy words, gentle tones, and soft touches and smiles
- Rabbi Nathan Segal, Rabbi of Shabbos Shul
One Rabbis' Thoughts on Circumcision

"...It is accepted that he that is not circumcised, but is the son of a Jewish mother, is a Jew. Numerous scholars of Judaism have clearly pointed out that this damaging surgical ritual is inconsistent with all other tenets of the Jewish religion to protect the integrity of the individual and do no harm to another person. The Law Commission would be doing all Jews great service, in fact, to finally recognize the universal harm, the permanence, and the impossibility of informed consent of non-therapeutic circumcision on any infant boy, regardless of religion. To fail to do so, to create a "special exception" for Jewish boys, would be tantamount to governmental discrimination against infants born into the Jewish faith by assuming that their pain is less (it is not) and that they will simply learn to accept their harm. Our pain is real, we are part of the larger society, and we need and expect full protection under the law."

- Brian Levitt, Statement to the United Kingdom Law Commission Consultation Paper No. 139 20November 1996.'

Weighty Issues: How Marriage Affects Men and Women's Bodies Differently

anthony · 28 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cut the cake! Both men and women are likely to pack on a few extra pounds after they get married. That modest figure is an average—it also includes married folks who gain or lose a significant amount of weight upon tying the knot. And according to a new study, marriage is linked to a heightened risk for major weight gain among women. For men, the pounds come a little bit later: after the divorce.

Add a steady waist measurement to one of the many social perks of marrying as a man. Married men make more money and get more promotions than single guys. They live longer, have less heart disease, drink less, smoke less weed, and experience less stress. Meanwhile, married women have less fulfilling sex lives and less free time than their husbands. They also have smaller paychecks. (They do get to keep smoking the same amount of weed). These factors help explain why women are less into marriage than men are. And they may also contribute to the gendered risk of gaining weight after getting hitched.

Bluntly, marriage "is more beneficial for men than for women," write Ohio State University sociologists Dmitry Tumin and Zhenchao Qian. "Men after marriage do not gain [significant] weight because they enjoy a healthy lifestyle and receive stronger emotional support"—in other words, they've got the time, energy, and help to maintain a steady weight, thanks to the sacrifices of their spouses. Across the aisle, though, "the unsettling effect of a marriage for women may be strong enough to cause large weight gain."'

The Slow Disappearance of the American Working Man

Matt · 28 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As President Barack Obama puts together a new jobs plan to be revealed shortly after Labor Day, he is up against a powerful force, long in the making, that has gone virtually unnoticed in the debate over how to put people back to work: Employers are increasingly giving up on the American man.

If that sounds bleak, it's because it is. The portion of men who work and their median wages have been eroding since the early 1970s. For decades the impact of this fact was softened in many families by the increasing number of women who went to work and took up the slack. More recently, the housing bubble helped to mask it by boosting the male-dominated construction trades, which employed millions. When real estate ultimately crashed, so did the prospects for many men. The portion of men holding a job—any job, full- or part-time—fell to 63.5 percent in July—hovering stubbornly near the low point of 63.3 percent it reached in December 2009. These are the lowest numbers in statistics going back to 1948. Among the critical category of prime working-age men between 25 and 54, only 81.2 percent held jobs, a barely noticeable improvement from its low point last year—and still well below the depths of the 1982-83 recession, when employment among prime-age men never dropped below 85 percent. To put those numbers in perspective, consider that in 1969, 95 percent of men in their prime working years had a job.

Men who do have jobs are getting paid less. After accounting for inflation, median wages for men between 30 and 50 dropped 27 percent—to $33,000 a year— from 1969 to 2009, according to an analysis by Michael Greenstone, a Massachusetts Institute of Technology economics professor who was chief economist for Obama's Council of Economic Advisers. "That takes men and puts them back at their earnings capacity of the 1950s," Greenstone says. "That has staggering implications."'

Misandry in the Media: RADAR Expands its Focus

Matt · 28 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Alert here. Excerpt:

'Misandry, simply defined, is the pathological hatred of men and boys. It is the analog to misogyny, but with the bigotry and rage targeted at males.

Paul Nathanson and Katherine K. Young, two scholars in the field of religious studies at McGill University in Montreal, popularized the word "misandry" in a series of books on the topic: Spreading Misandry: The Teaching of Contempt for Men in Popular Culture (2001); Legalizing Misandry: From Public Shame to Systemic Discrimination Against Men (2006); Sanctifying Misandry: Goddess Ideology and the Fall of Man (2010).

Nathanson and Young describe misandry as "a form of prejudice and discrimination that has become institutionalized in North American society, 'a collectively shared and culturally propagated worldview, not a personal emotion such as dislike or anger'"
...
Going forward, RADAR will focus less on particular laws and more on the nation's anti-male culture. RADAR plans to focus on the prevalence of misandry and the impact of misandry on the nation's approach to domestic violence. RADAR will highlight the media's role in spreading misandry, with media broadly defined to include not just the print, radio, film and television industries but also the messages disseminated by the nations churches and education, including judicial training that often amounts to nothing more than misandristic indoctrination.'

The New "She" is "He" scarbo · 29 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I see it in the school district where I work. Girls punching boys — punching them hard, sometimes out of meanness, sometimes for fun, but still packing a wallop.

It's been increasing in recent times, with situation comedies either reflecting, or leading, the trend. How did these young people learn this? Has this nastiness come to be OK because boys are supposed to be able to take a punch without showing pain? Or do the boys get the whack because they're such muttonheads and they have it coming?
...
So the totals were: eight boys physically attacked by girls, seven boys hit by boys, three girls hit by other girls and one girl struck by a boy. So we're being trained to get a laugh from girls striking and berating boys, and we're being conditioned to believe that boys are sloppy and violent among themselves when they get together, but there's nothing comedic about a girl being injured, whichever sex caused the harm.

What I'd like to know is how much of this is unconscious to the writers and producers of these programs, because as mean and dishonest as Eddie Haskell was, he never hit the Beaver.'

Australia: Female murdered, dismembered pensioner "to make a better life for herself and her two daughters"

Minuteman · 30 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A woman faces life in jail for killing and dismembering an aged pensioner in a bizarre case that prosecutors say shows the dark side of society.

South Australian Supreme Court Justice Trish Kelly found on Tuesday Angelika Gavare, 35, murdered Vonne McGlynn, 82, on or about December 3, 2008.

Gavare wanted to steal Mrs McGlynn's house to make a better life for herself and her two daughters.
...
Gavare became a suspect after she tried to withdraw money from Mrs McGlynn's account and was found with a forged power of attorney, a shed smelling of rotten flesh and some of her victim's things.

Gavare denied killing Mrs McGlynn but admitted she was a liar, a thief, a fraudster and hoped to profit from the pensioner's death.

She appeared surprised at the verdict.'

Alaska woman in hot sauce case spared jail time

anthony · 30 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ANCHORAGE, Alaska — An Alaska woman convicted of punishing her adopted Russian son by squirting hot sauce into his mouth was spared immediate jail time on Monday.

Thirty-six-year-old Jessica Beagley was given three years of probation, a 180-day suspended jail sentence and a $2,500 fine — also suspended — after she was convicted last week of misdemeanor child abuse. Prosecutors say she used a videotape of herself punishing the 7-year-old boy as a ploy to get on the "Dr. Phil" TV show.

Beagley submitted the eight-minute tape for a show segment titled "Mommy Confessions." She said the boy had lied about getting into trouble at school.'

SAVE: Dept. of Ed is Ignoring Us, Now We Take it to the Top

Matt · 30 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

As we reported last week, the U.S. Department of Education (DED) has issued a directive that requires colleges to use the "preponderance of evidence" standard in handling allegations of sexual assault, a standard that in practice removes the presumption of innocence.

Editorials rightly continue to condemn this directive, like:

The New Rules of College Sex

We'd like to thank all of you who contacted Ms. Russlyn Ali, Assistant Secretary, Office for Civil Rights last week by email and phone. Unfortunately, it wasn't enough.

We are being ignored, and that is unacceptable. This week we take it to the top!

Let's flood the inbox and voice mailbox of Secy. Of Education Arne Duncan. Be resolute and be persistent. Politely yet firmly insist Mr. Duncan remove the sex assault policy that strips due process from the accused.

Please contact Arne Duncan today:
Telephone: 202-401-3000
Email: arne.duncan-at-ed.gov

Your voice matters. Use it.

More DED editorials: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/ded-editorials

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Beyond the Bris - A Jewish Movement Against Circumcision

JewishIntactivist · 30 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Welcome to the web-based multimedia project that's putting real faces and voices to the current Jewish movement opposing circumcision. This dynamic site is being created by, for and about Jews who are united in the belief that cutting children's genitals is unnecessary and harmful. As our name implies, an increasing number of Jewish people are moving in a more ethical, more humanitarian and more Jewish direction: beyond the bris.

Just for Us: For Women Only: Sept. 10 event offers info on health, happiness, some humor, too

anthony · 30 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'KEARNEY — Just For Us aims to offer women information, relaxation and fun.

The new women's event will be from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Sept. 10 at Younes Convention Center. This is the first year the Kearney Hub will partner with Good Samaritan Hospital to present Just For Us.

The event will include exhibit booths, keynote speaker Peggy Kline, breakout sessions on women's health issues, on-stage demonstrations, door prizes and more.'

UK: New women-only Labour group to launch

anthony · 30 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A NEW women's only group is being launched by the Banbury Constituency Labour Party on Wednesday (August 31).

The launch is open to members and non-members of the Labour Party and will take place at The Great Western Arms in Aynho.Organiser Annie Higgs said: "The purpose of the group is for women to share issues that affect them both locally and nationally, to meet socially with like-minded women and to invite inspiring speakers. We have an exciting programme of events coming up across the whole constituency.

"I'm hoping this group will empower women and give them a voice."'

The DSK affair: Miscarriage of justice one way or another

anthony · 30 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's hard to make a cut-and-dried women's-rights issue out of this case because of the accuser's credibility problem, though the sisterhood did have some words to say. "This miscarriage of justice exhibits all the hallmarks of a society that tolerates sexual violence by blaming and shaming the survivors -- but the real shame belongs with the perpetrators and the prosecutors who allow them to walk off scot-free," said National Organization for Women president Terry O'Neill.

It is, of course, not at all clear that that is what happened. And will NOW take some responsibility in this mess, for contributing to a culture in which men and women are always adversarial rather than complementary? In which sex is the ultimate expression of independence and power, rather than a beautiful, intimate, life-giving act of love and mutual respect and human dignity?

A friend commented about the case: "I am gathering he's a pig. I am gathering she is not fully credible. It reminds me a little of the Duke case. The woman was a disaster, as was the prosecution, and a pox on all of them. But very much forgotten was the boys' behavior: Nobody, or too few, pointed out the frat-house ethics they were engaging in, hiring strippers to come over, etc. I lived a pretty raucous college lifestyle -- in many ways, it's a miracle I survived, and survived without any law problems. But I certainly never even thought of hiring strippers to come over." I realize that when Midwestern housewives are bringing stripper poles into their family homes, what's inappropriate may be up for grabs. But that is part of the story. God help any woman who is raped, and God help any man who is falsely accused of rape. But God help, too, anyone who isn't creeped out by the lawyerly takeaway.

And sticking to war-of-the-sexes and class-warfare talking points does not serve justice either.'

Ongoing Action Campaign-- Tell Doctors To Put Down The Knife

Matt · 31 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From IA:

America’s medical organizations all acknowledge that infant circumcision is NOT MEDICALLY NECESSARY—yet their members are responsible for nearly all the infant circumcisions performed in the United States!

This October, pediatricians are gathering in Boston for the American Academy of Pediatrics' annual conference, and Intact America will be there once again to tell doctors that circumcision is wrong for baby boys. Thanks to our ongoing Put Down The Knife! campaign, you too can tell doctors that circumcision is a harmful violation of a child’s right to bodily integrity, and it needs to end NOW.

If you haven't yet sent your letter, write to America's doctors right now and demand that they tell parents the truth about circumcision. If you’ve already sent your letter, then please consider asking your friends, family, and coworkers to send letters of their own. The larger our community, the louder our voice!

Egad, there are just way too many men here...

Matt · 31 August 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If the student population were only 34% female, would the president of this college be talking about what a problem that was? Excerpt:

'Destler said that Kevin McDonald, who was the chief diversity officer at RIT, has been elevated to the position of vice president for diversity and inclusion.

"Nevertheless, despite strong efforts by many of you, progress in building the diversity of our student, faculty and staff populations has been spotty." Destler said.

RIT, Destler added, has found that, while there has been progress in engineering and some other technical fields, overall female undergraduate enrollment has stagnated at about 34 percent. He has asked his Commission on Women to determine what needs to be done to reach a goal of 40 percent for female undergraduate enrollment.'

Chapter 8 of The Masculinity Conspiracy (Conclusion) is now online

Anonymous · 1 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Chapter 8 (Conclusion) of The Masculinity Conspiracy is now online.

This final chapter revisits some of the main ways that the conspiracy manifests, but more importantly examines how and why it happens, as well as revealing what ultimately lies behind the conspiracy.

If you don't like reading online, print and Kindle editions of the book are also now available.

Father falsely accused of child sexual abuse tells his side of story

Kratch · 1 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In 2006, David Tune's 'world fell apart', as he puts it, when his ex-wife Vicky publicly accused him of sexually abusing their daughter.

For five years he has been dragged through the Family Courts, accused of the most heinous acts. Yet every single investigation has ended with the authorities concluding that he has no case to answer.

Not only has the entire system — police, social workers and judiciary — believed his word against his ex-wife's, but they have believed in him so much that they have taken the child from her, and she now lives with her father.

This week, the most senior family court judge in the country took the highly unusual step of naming all the adults involved in this complex case, claiming that David had the right to tell the world he was not a paedophile.

Jailing a woman called Elizabeth Watson, an associate of Vicky's, President of the Family Division of the High Court, Sir Nicholas Wall, declared unequivocally that Vicky had made the whole thing up.

She had, he concluded, coached her daughter to say that her father had abused her, and when no court in the land believed her, set out to blacken her ex's name.

With Elizabeth Watson's help, she had then sent emails containing all manner of vile accusations, slurring not only David but accusing almost every professional involved of corruption, and worse.'

Czech Mother Suspected Of Slaying Her Four Children

Anonymous · 2 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

“The mother’s partner reported to the police in Polička that there was a child lying unconscious in a pool of blood. Upon arrival at the scene medics discovered four dead children and the mother who was attempting to hang herself and who also had cut wounds,” head of the Pardubice region emergency services, Pavel Svoboda, told the news server idnes.cz.
...
The server novinky.cz reported Friday afternoon that so far police susoect [sic] the mother of murdering all four of her children - two boys and two girls said to be aged 10, 8, 7 and the youngest just two months old. According to the server’s information, in addition to knife wounds, marks were found on all the children suggesting they had all been strangled."

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

New Zealand: School 'only supports female causes'

Mr VanHuizen · 2 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Timaru girl says she was forced to wash off her blue face paint as it was supporting a male cause – and her school, being a girls' school, could only support female causes.

However her principal has told the Timaru Herald the school has "no policy around any gender-related fundraisers".

Kristie Bennet, 15, turned up to Timaru Girls' High School yesterday with half her face painted blue to support Blue Friday, a nationwide campaign to raise awareness of prostate cancer.

She said she wanted to take part as her grandfather died from the disease last year.

She hoped her fellow students would spread the cancer message to the men in their lives.

"When I went to form class I was told straight away to take [the paint] off. I went to the deputy principal [to ask if I could keep it on] and she said we were only allowed to support female causes.

"She watched me take [the paint] off."'

9/11 firefighters have higher cancer risk: study

Minuteman · 3 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'CHICAGO (Reuters) - Male firefighters who were exposed to toxic dust and smoke from the 9/11 attacks on New York's World Trade Center have a 19 percent higher risk of getting cancer of all kinds than colleagues who were not exposed, U.S. researchers said on Thursday.

The study is the first to look at cancer rates among the all of the exposed firefighters, and the findings may help pave the way for federal health benefits for rescue workers now suffering from cancer nearly a decade after the attacks.

"This study clearly shows World Trade Center exposure in these firefighters led to an increase in cancer," said Dr. David Prezant of the Fire Department of the City of New York, whose study was published in The Lancet medical journal.
...
Prior studies have shown increased rates of post traumatic stress disorder, asthma and other respiratory illnesses among rescue workers. To date, only a handful of smaller studies have shown increased rates of cancer, which can take five to 20 years to develop.

In July, a report released by Dr. John Howard, director of the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, concluded that there was not yet enough evidence to support a link between the 9/11 attacks and cancer.

Without that evidence, firefighters and other rescue workers can not receive payments for cancer treatments under the James Zadroga 9/11 Health and Compensation Act, which covers illnesses like asthma and other respiratory diseases, but not cancer.'

Figuring out fatherhood

Matt · 3 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New research is revealing more about men's lives in the transition to fatherhood. Psychologist and PhD candidate Jeanette Lightfoot says that, despite a growing interest in fathers, much of the research is either comparative – contrasting them with mothers – or misses them altogether.

Little is known about men's abilities to form close relationships and strong bonds with their infants, and only limited research has sought to better identify vulnerabilities and risk factors during the transition to fatherhood," she says.

"While new fatherhood is an uplifting, rewarding and wonderful time for most men it is important to be able to identify those men who may be at risk of a poorer adaptation, and to develop appropriate supports and interventions to assist these men, their partners and their children."'

Woman leaves three children alone in mall parking lot

Matt · 3 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A Rochester woman is facing charges after leaving her children alone in her car.

The Ontario County Sheriff's Office says 33-year-old Shanita Polk left her three children, ages 5, 7 and 9, unattended in the Eastview Mall parking lot for an extended period of time.

She also provided police with a false name to avoid an active warrant for her arrest out of Rochester. Polk was charged with endangering the welfare of a child and criminal impersonation.

She was arraigned in Farmington Court and taken to the Ontario County. The children were picked up my family members. Polk will answer to the charges in Victor Town Court.'

Women and divorce: Goodbye darling, you're just too dull...

Broadsword · 4 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Lucy Valantine was approaching her fortieth birthday when she made the seemingly bizarre decision to leave her husband of five years. “On the surface, life was perfect,” she says. “We had a gorgeous Victorian house in the Home Counties, I had a great job with a blue-chip company, and my husband was a lovely chap. He was kind and gentle and my friends all loved him. There was nothing wrong with him, but it wasn’t enough. I wanted to change my life.

...

Relationship counsellor Andrew G Marshall, author of I Love You, I’m Just Not In Love With You, says he has noted a trend towards such splits. “In the past 10 years, I’ve seen a huge increase in couples who don’t actually hate each other, they just don’t love each other enough to stick at it. Ninety per cent of these marriages would be perfectly serviceable if the people involved would just put in more effort.”

What does this say about our society? Is it a shocking indictment of our narcissism that we are ignoring “Until death us do part”, because it’s easier to slump in front of Facebook rather than book a candlelit table for two? Or is it a triumph of feminism that women whose mothers would have put up and shut up in return for a roof over their heads have decided that they refuse to live out their years with a man whose idea of an enjoyable night is dinner on his lap in front of Top Gear?

I say “women”, because they initiate seven out of 10 divorces. Divorce is also soaring among the over-45s, with break-ups in that age bracket increasing by 30 per cent in a decade....'

Resources regarding the Jewish movement to end circumcision

Matt · 4 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Today's Jewish Movement to Question Circumcision

(Submitted by a MANN Reader)

Over the last hundred years, a Jewish and Israeli movement to stop circumcision has emerged. This is due to modern notions of an individual's right to their own body, new historical information about the origin of circumcisions in Egypt and Africa, scientific discoveries about the damage caused by circumcision, and a desire by individuals to live a higher level of spiritual ethics. This movement includes Jewish Rabbis, scholars, parents, intellectuals, Israelis, and educators.

Jewish Groups for Genital Integrity
Jews Against Circumcision
Jews for the Rights of the Child
Bris Shalom Officiants by Mark D. Reiss, M.D.
Questioning Circumcision: A Jewish Perspective by Ron Goldman, Ph.D.
Beyond the Bris: Jewish Parenting Blog

Israeli Groups for Genital Integrity
Kahal: Giving Up Brit Milah (In Hebrew and English)
Intact Son: the Israeli Association Against Genital Mutilation (In Hebrew)
Gonnen: Protect the Child (In Hebrew)
Af-Mila: Israeli Intactivist [In English] [In Hebrew]

Jewish Parents – Mothers Voices
A Jewish Woman Denounces Circumcision by Laura Shanley
My Son: The Little Jew with a Foreskin by Stacey Greenberg, Mothering Magazine
Lucking Into Bris Shalom by Sarah Rockwell
How "Cut" Saved My Son's Foreskin: A Movie Review by Diane Targovnik
Jewish mom: Circumcision spiritually wounds, breaks bonds and trust

Jewish Parents – Father's Voices
The Kindest Un-Cut Feminism, Judaism, and My Son's Foreskin by Professor Michael S. Kimmel Ending Circumcision in the Jewish Community? by Moshe Rothenberg, MSW

Peaceful Ceremonies: Brit B'lee Milah, Bris Shalom, Brit Hyiam, Brit Chayim, Brit Ben
Bris Shalom Officiants by Mark D. Reiss, M.D.
Brit B'lee Milah (Covenant Without Cutting) Ceremony
Bris Shalom Ceremony by Norm Cohen
Bris Shalom by Rabbi and Cantor Steven Blane
On Alternative Rituals by Ronald Goldman, Ph.D.
Brit Shalom: An Alternative Naming Ceremony by Mark D. Reiss, M.D.

Jewish Religious and Historical Issues
Being rational about circumcision and Jewish observance by Moshe Rothenberg, MSW
Defying Convention: An Interview With Miriam Pollack
One Rabbis' Thoughts on Circumcision by Rabbi Nathan Segal
Eli Ungar-Sargon Debates Rabbi Shmuley Boteach on the Ethics of Circumcision Israeli Linguist Vadim Cherny: How Judaic is circumcision?
Brit Milah : Inconsistent with Jewish Ethics? By D.A. Huffman-Parent,

A Case for Bris without Milah.
Cut: Slicing Through the Myths of Circumcision – A Film by Eliyahu Ungar-Sargon
Jerusalem Post: Challenging the Circumcision Myth by Jan Jaben-Eilon [PDF]

Jewish Voices – Many Jews Question Circumcision
Jewish Voices: The Current Judaic Movement to End Circumcision: Part 1
Jewish Voices: The Current Judaic Movement to End Circumcision: Part 2

Men's Voices
To the Mohel Who Cut Me by Shea Levy
On Circumcision, Authority, and the Perpetuation of Abuse by Jonathan Friedman Howard Stern: Jewish Intactivist by Rebecca Wald, J.D.

Women's Voices
Circumcision: A Jewish Feminist Perspective by Miriam Pollack
Circumcision: Identity, Gender, and Power by Miriam Pollack

Circumcision Referendum and Legal Issues
Outlawing Circumcision: Good for the Jews? by Eliyahu Ungar-Sargon
Jews Speak in Favor of Banning Circumcision on Minors

Questioning Circumcision: Op/Ed by Rebecca Wald, J.D., The Jewish Reporter
The Circumcision Referendum: A Liberal Jewish Perspective by Sandford Borins, Ph.D.
The Other Side Of The Circumcision Debate by Ronald Goldman, Ph.D.
Jewish Journal: Circumcision critic has Board links

Australia: "Former sailor wants compensation over ship circumcision"

Minuteman · 5 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The title is from the original article; the now 56 year-old former serviceman is actually seeking a very modest pension, for severe depression resulting from his treatment whilst in the defence force. Being seen to be after "compo" (financial compensation) is frowned on here in Australia, and the female journalist is attempting to portray this former serviceman's situation in this light. Excerpt:

'A FORMER sailor who was circumcised by a ship's doctor and allegedly suffered ridicule from his shipmates is seeking compensation almost 40 years after the operation.

He woke during the operation and had to be physically restrained while it was completed, according to evidence to a tribunal.

The attendant holding him down then joked his foreskin would make good fish bait, it was claimed.

The Melbourne man, 56, is seeking a $28,600 a year defence force pension because he claims his severe depression that emerged after the circumcision was caused by his defence service.

...

A medical attendant "held the removed foreskin in tongs and joked about using it for fishing", he said.

The man fainted and spent four days in sick bay, then his shipmates started taunting him.

"Jokes were made referring to the size of his penis . . . he was called names," the tribunal found.

When he transferred to another ship the taunts continued and he became depressed, alienated and lonely, the tribunal found.'

Frenchman ordered to pay wife damages for lack of sex

anthony · 5 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 51-year-old man was fined under article 215 of France's civil code, which states married couples must agree to a "shared communal life".

A judge has now ruled that this law implies that "sexual relations must form part of a marriage".

The rare legal decision came after the wife filed for divorce two years ago, blaming the break-up on her husband's lack of activity in the bedroom.

A judge in Nice, southern France, then granted the divorce and ruled the husband named only as Jean-Louis B. was solely responsible for the split.'

Feds warn colleges: Handle sexual assault reports properly

anthony · 5 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Such an arrogant comment by the American Association Of University Women. Taking away a man's rights is looked upon as some kind of victory. In a way they're right. The new sheriff is man-hater Joe Biden, the same man behind the unconstitutional VAWA and an advocate for reducing men's sports teams (Title IX). Excerpt:

'"In many ways, there is a new sheriff in town," says Lisa Maatz, director of public policy at the American Association of University Women in Washington.

But some academic-freedom advocates say the sheriff has gone too far. In particular, they're concerned that the standard of proof the Obama administration is urging will wrongly take down some of the accused.

US officials want "to sort of shortcut the process of justice by making it easier to convict," says Robert Shibley, senior vice president of the Philadelphia-based Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE).
...
Shibley cites the case of a University of North Dakota student who was found guilty of sexual assault in a campus procedure using the preponderance standard. The university suspended him. Meanwhile, the police had decided to charge his accuser with filing a false claim, and she left to dodge the arrest warrant, Shibley says.'

Government by Feminism

anthony · 5 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The domestic-violence incident involving former New York City deputy mayor Stephen Goldsmith illustrates what Harvard Law professor Jeannie Suk has written about. Domestic violence has become an area where the government takes control away from the individual woman.

After Mrs. Goldsmith said to her husband, “I should have put a bullet into you years ago,” Mr. Goldsmith shoved her into a counter, smashed a phone, and held her for some moments. She called the police. When they got there, she didn’t want her husband arrested, but it didn’t matter. Arrest is mandatory once the woman has made the call, and her husband spent two days in jail before the charges were dismissed when she declared her wish that he not be prosecuted. (And the Goldsmiths were fortunate there. According to Suk, many disputes result in mandatory prosecution and sentencing, over the objections of the woman.)

Now the Goldsmiths have begun a public-relations offensive, calling the domestic-violence incident a “mistake” and a “misunderstanding.” No, it was not a mistake or misunderstanding. It is the law. A woman who declares herself a victim of domestic abuse by calling the cops will for a time be seen as incapable of making her own decisions. Evidently Mrs. Goldsmith regrets her action, but now his career is in shambles, his children have suffered, and the marriage is marred. No evidence has been presented that Goldsmith was a serious abuser; it was all for nothing.'

Ambrose: Thwarting justice an ultra-feminist aim

anthony · 5 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That's repugnant, and something else that's repugnant is certain ideologically inane women's groups telling us we shouldn't even be discussing the maid's credibility. These ultra-feminists are forever arguing that women accusers are always truly victims, are always right, and that the male defendants are always guilty, are always wrong. How far a distance is that from someone saying he is an Aryan and you are a Jew and therefore he is a real human and you are not?

I do not deny generations of mistreating women, but swinging from one extreme to another is multiplying error, not erasing it. If members of these groups fall short of Nazi ambitions, they're still in the camp that would happily ruin lives on the basis of infantile generalities. Right now, the Obama administration is insisting that universities work even harder on the goal. To find out more, listen to Peter Berkowitz.

In a Wall Street Journal op-ed piece, this fellow at Hoover Institution tells how the Education Department is advising universities to disregard due process in deciding the fate of male students accused of sexual assault. Universities more concerned about federal lucre than ethics should listen up to even the nastiness that says the accused male student should not be allowed to cross-examine the female witness.'

Why must women mock the men they love?

Broadsword · 5 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What is especially worrying about the trend is the effect it has on our children. It's impossible to spend a night with your female friends, having a 'laugh' about your useless husband and then go home and treat him with respect.

More than once, I've seen mothers and children in cahoots, exchanging raised eyebrows over yet another 'job' that Daddy hasn't done. In sharing tales about men's incompetence, women are coming dangerously close to normalising a corrosive and lasting disrespect for fathers that can only have devastating consequences.

Research carried out by the University of Kent last year demonstrated that by the age of eight boys believed girls were better behaved and more successful than they were. Surely these negative opinions of their gender are down to boys growing up in a culture that routinely derides and ridicules masculinity.

As a teacher in secondary schools, I've noticed that by the age of 14 the idea that girls are more competent than boys is well established. And it is fair to say that in many mixed schools, more is expected of girls than of boys. Those boys who do work hard and apply themselves are criticised and sneered at, called 'geeks' and 'nerds'.

Even boy scouts have to allow girls in now — the same doesn't hold true for Brownies or Guides, of course. There doesn't seem to be any space for boys to just be boys, to have fun, let rip, have adventures, go on missions and achieve amazing things.'

Colleges teach students about sexual assault

anthony · 5 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Students rehearsing for Thursday's play called "Are You Afraid of the Dark?" said they weren't sure if all of the stories were true, but they were powerful nonetheless.

Tom Sendelbach, a St. Ambrose senior in finance and management and a residential adviser, read a monologue from the perspective of a man who knew he was wrong when he coerced women into having sex.

Sendelbach said he thought the whole show was a good thing for students, especially freshmen who were new to the college experience.

"I think people don't realize exactly the definition of sexual assault, and I think that this is aimed and making men and women more aware of their boundaries and how things can go wrong," Sendelbach said. "I do know that there are situations that male freshmen do get into, and they don't necessarily know the line in the sand. I hope that this event helps to clear the fog away and sharpen people's perceptions when it comes to sexual assault."'

Former student sues LSE over its 'gender bias' against men

Broadsword · 5 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'The London School of Economics is facing legal action after a former student claimed its gender studies course was sexist - against men. Tom Martin, who quit the university after six weeks, claims in papers lodged at the Central London county court that lecturers ignored male issues. He is claiming some £50,000 citing breach of contract, misleading advertising, misrepresentation, and breach of the Gender Equality Duty Act.

The 39-year-old, who attended the university last year to take up a Gender, Media and Culture Masters degree, said there was "systemic anti-male discrimination". But he said an internal investigation carried out by the university in the wake of his complaints found "no evidence" of bias.

Mr Martin, who is representing himself, said: "The core texts we had to read before each class were typically packed with anti-male discrimination and bias - heavily focusing on, exaggerating, and falsifying women's issues perspectives, whilst blaming men, to justify ignoring men's issues. There was no warning of this sexist agenda in the prospectus."

He added: "They simply refuse to acknowledge the research which contradicts the 'women good/men bad', or the 'women victims/men perpetrators' storyline.

"Science does not come into it at LSE's Gender Institute. Like a religion, the curriculum simply insists, by repetition, attempting to drum the anti-male agenda into the students."

The university's legal team has asked for the case to be struck out, claiming the core texts were not compulsory, merely recommended readings, and that the texts were equally available for both men and women to read, so therefore did not directly discriminate against men. The team also argues that "any discriminatory effect [against men] was plainly justifiable".'

Sewanee $3 million breach-of-contract lawsuit trial begins

anthony · 5 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A $3 million breach-of-contract lawsuit trial against Sewanee: The University of the South enters its second day today with lawyers questioning an expert witness on college sexual harassment and assault policies.

The plaintiff, identified only as John Doe in court documents, is suing the school in federal court for negligence and breach of contract, claiming he received no due process when forced to leave following a rape accusation by another student. The female student later left the school for drug and alcohol treatment and did not pursue criminal charges against Doe.

"Instead of being careful with their conduct, the university chose to rush to judgment," Doe's attorney Charles Wayne told jurors in his opening statement Tuesday afternoon.

...

Sokolow testified this was the first time he has worked as a witness on behalf of someone accused in a sexual assault. In all other instances, he has testified on behalf of the university or the victim of a sexual assault.

Wayne asked Sokolow for his opinion on how Sewanee handled Doe's case.

"The university did not satisfy the standard of care," Sokolow responded.

...

Doe said Hartman asked for a written statement and advised Doe to say he was too drunk to know what was going on the night of the incident and that he is sorry.

The committee met the next day and, within a few hours, found Doe guilty and told him he had two days to leave campus.

Hartman told Doe to "destroy" all related materials and that appealing the decision could increase his punishment and possibly cause A.B. to pursue criminal charges, Wayne told the jury. Doe's options, according to Hartman, were to leave school for one semester, reapply for admission with the incident remaining on his student record or withdraw for a year and reapply for the next fall with a clean record.

Doe left campus and decided on the one-year option, but later decided not to return. In June 2009, he and his parents, identified as James and Mary Doe, filed the lawsuit.

Jury selection took the entire morning Tuesday. Seven women and two men comprise the nine-member jury.'

Woman charged with perjury after false rape claim

anthony · 5 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 36-year-old woman is expected to appear in court next month after she laid false charges of rape against her former husband.

Police spokesperson Const Sergio Kock said the police were now investigating a case of perjury after the woman laid the rape charge against her ex-husband on August 10.

“Her ex-husband was arrested on the same day and spent seven days in prison for a crime he allegedly did not commit. On August 16, after excellent investigative questioning by police detectives, the female complainant admitted there was animosity between her and the ex-husband and this led to her laying the false rape charge,” said Kock.

Kock said the woman confessed that she had consensual sex with the husband and also admitted in the presence of the police that she lied under oath about the rape.'

Woodbury jogger made false report of sexual assault, police say

anthony · 5 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The reported assault of a jogger that shocked Woodbury residents in the spring was a hoax, the Woodbury Police Department said Tuesday.

A 33-year-old woman reported April 23 that she was sexually assaulted while jogging at 5:30 a.m. on a trail by Marksgraf Lake.

But that crime never happened, according to police Cmdr. Jay Alberio.

Instead, police believe the woman made up the episode. Alberio said police are reviewing the case to see what charges against her might be appropriate.

When the woman reported the crime, she had been injured and was treated and released at Woodwinds Hospital.

She said she was assaulted from behind by a man that she was unable to see, so she gave no description to police.

She told officers it was her third time jogging on the trail. The woman has lived in the neighborhood for about two years, Alberio said, and has no record of previous crimes.'

The Need to Create a White House Council on Boys to Men

anthony · 5 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Warren Farrell: The five different areas in which boys are in crisis—education; jobs; emotional health; physical health; and fatherlessness—are handled by different portions of the government. First, White House co-ordination creates the best possibility of avoiding different departments having program duplication and becoming territorial. Second, the best solutions are holistic ones; a Council located in any given department would be less holistic and more territorial.

Most important, a Council on boys and men parallel to the White House Council on Women and Girls would signal to the world that boys and men are facing problems, alert schools and parents as to the nature of these problems, and alert all the nation's institutions to explore how attending to these problems might help our sons, daughters, families and nation.'

Sexist Men, Women May Be a Good Fit: Study

Minuteman · 6 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Curiously, didn't ask participants about their attitudes towards men. Link here. Excerpt:

'For both sexes, those who seek uncommitted trysts rely on assertive strategy, survey finds.

SUNDAY, Sept. 4 (HealthDay News) -- When it comes to aggressive courtship strategies, sexist men and women seem to be perfect for each other, new research suggests.

U.S. researchers conducted two surveys: One included 363 college students at a large Midwestern university, and the other was a national Internet poll of 850 adults.

The male and female participants were asked about their sexist attitudes toward women and whether they were willing to engage in uncommitted or short-term sex. Men were also asked how often they used assertive strategies to initiate relationships and women were asked if, and to what degree, they found these types of advances desirable.

The researchers found that men who favored casual sex were more likely to use aggressive courtship strategies, while women who were also open to casual sex were more likely to respond to such approaches.'

Australia: Children suffer under political correctness

anthony · 6 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This unfortunate man has been removed from his daughter's birth certificate. This triumph of legal misandry means that a child who is now 10 and, most important of all, knows he is the other half of her physical being for all of those 10 years, will just have to content herself with having a two-mothers' day.

What hope for fathers when even the cowardly politically correct media are now involved in this silly game of let's pretend, using the term having a baby "with" a person of the same sex, to describe the pregnancy of a partner of a government minister? Then again, the truth has always been a casualty of political correctness.

However, things are serious when even children become casualties. Children know that mother plus mother doesn't really equal child. It amounts to a form of psychological abuse to pretend otherwise.'

NIH-funded study: "Being a Beta Male"

Minuteman · 6 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'In male baboons, higher social rank generally brings lower stress. But a new study shows that the highest-ranked (alpha) males have greater stress levels than the second-ranking (beta) males. The finding suggests that life at the very top can be more costly than previously thought.

A high social rank has advantages in many animal societies. Alpha males, for example, have first choice of food and father the most offspring. But a high rank also brings conflict and stress—and stress can take both a mental and a physical toll.

For 4 decades, a research team directed by Drs. Jeanne Altmann of Princeton and Susan Alberts of Duke has been studying a baboon society. For their new report, the NIH-funded researchers examined stress hormone levels in fecal samples from 125 male baboons over a period of 9 years. They compared these hormone levels with the animals' social rank.'

AHRQ: Research on Women's Health Issues Informs Treatment Choices

Minuteman · 7 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

It's all beginning to take on a certain surreal quality. Link here. Excerpt:

'As individuals, we want choices that reflect who we are and what's right for our situation. Getting the right health care is no different.

Until recently, information that showed which treatments work best for certain groups of patients, especially women, was hard to find.

Now women's health research is a growing field. The Women's Health Initiative (WHI), a long-term study launched by the late National Institutes of Health (NIH) Director Bernadine Healy, MD, has provided important information on preventing and treating heart disease, breast and colorectal cancers, and osteoporosis in women aged 50 to 79.

The WHI and the Office of Research on Women's Health, led for two decades by Vivian Pinn, MD, helped to ensure that women are fairly represented in NIH-sponsored studies. Before the WHI began, very few studies focusing solely on women had been conducted.'

Quotas won't resolve the battle of the sexes

Broadsword · 7 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Too few recognise the social progress Britain has made in recent decades. The gender pay gap has halved since the Seventies; the percentage of women on boards has doubled in the last decade; and half the top posts in the civil service are filled by women.

But worryingly, this month, the deadline expires for British FTSE companies to sign up to a commitment to have 25 per cent women in the boardroom by 2015. If too few comply, then the veiled threat of mandatory gender quotas looms. Far from advancing the meritocratic tide, such quotas would be regressive and counter-productive.

Since Lord Davies's report on the gender balance in the boardroom was published six months ago, headway has been made – 30 per cent of appointments to boards this year were women. But there have also been numerous complaints that the target is tokenistic. Sir Robert Wilson, chairman of the BG Group, points out that a 25 per cent target would require 100 per cent female appointments at his company for the next three years.

Few would deny – indeed, research from McKinsey shows – that having a more diverse board makes companies more competitive. But the best way to encourage that is transparency over boardroom appointments, so the correlation between diversity and competitiveness can be scrutinised by shareholders and investors. Equality should bolster, not undermine, commercial competitiveness.'

Campaign 2012 - Putting False Allegations on the Political Agenda

Matt · 7 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Have you ever wondered what a candidate's take is on an issue like false allegations? We have. So we're going to ask.

The upcoming election is sure to be the most important and most heated election in recent memory.

This contest will be grabbing the media spotlight. And we'll be right there, asking our very important questions.

Campaign 2012: Stop False Allegations of Abuse will:

1. Increase public awareness about false allegations of domestic violence, sexual assault, and child abuse
2. Engage candidates for state and federal political office in the issue of false allegations
3. Secure commitments from these candidates to work to reform abuse laws

October will find us in New Hampshire. We're currently looking for local citizens to address presidential candidates. Interested?

You can be part of our Campaign 2012 team! We'll provide training, printed flyers, information about candidates' local town hall meetings, easy-to-use forms, and t-shirts.

We'd like to see Campaign 2012 grow with volunteers across the country addressing candidates on both the state and federal level. Are you ready to take action? Make sure you attend the Sept. 21 DVLP conference call. DVLP: http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp

If you want to join our efforts, email me at tstoddard@saveservices.org. Put "Campaign 2012" and/or "DVLP" in the subject line, and give me your city, state, and phone number.

I'll be in touch!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

F&F: Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court Rules Against F & F's Child Support Lawsuit

Matt · 7 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many Massachusetts child support obligors are being driven underground, out of their homes, and out of their children's lives by impossible child support demands. Fathers and Families filed and pursued a highly-publicized lawsuit challenging the state's new child support guidelines–guidelines which actually raise child support levels in a terrible economy. Our lawsuit made it all the way up to Massachusetts' highest court, the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court, which ruled against us.

Our lawsuit has garnered extensive media coverage, including the recent pieces Dads' group seeks child-support reform (Boston Herald, 9/2/11), SJC Upholds Child Support Guidelines (WBUR [NPR, Boston], 9/2/11), SJC rejects challenge to child support rules filed by fathers group (Boston Globe, 9/2/11), and Mass. high court upholds child support guidelines (Associated Press, 9/1/11), as well as previous pieces in the New York Times, Newsweek, Psychology Today, CBS radio, WRKO in Boston, FOX 25 TV in Boston, and many others.'

Schools adjust sexual assault policies for new federal guidelines

anthony · 7 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Schools across the country have revamped their sexual assault response policies in the wake of new federal guidelines issued earlier this year.

The rules put a greater burden on schools and colleges to investigate possible sexual assaults by placing them in the same category as sexual harassment under Title IX, which deals with sex discrimination.
...
The changes have some arguing that the federal government has overstepped its bounds.

UNCW criminology and sociology professor Mike Adams said he believes the rules could result in more false reports of sexual assault.

Adams said he also worried about justice since victims now also can appeal a campus disciplinary decision if they disagree with its severity or new evidence comes to light.

"That's incredible given our understanding of the importance of the concept of double jeopardy," Adams said, referring to the criminal justice system's rules that a person can't be charged with the same crime twice.

Schools also are required to use a "preponderance of evidence" standard that is easier to prove than the reasonable doubt standard of the criminal system.'

'Violence of the lambs'

anthony · 7 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Feminism can be thought of as like a corporation. It's interested in its constituents. Well-meaning feminists are often trained only to see a certain way, only to support their constituents. That is partly what underlies the spurious research on battered-woman syndrome. Anyone who questions whether battered women are only simple victims is put in the pillory and crucified.

"There are young, inexperienced women who fall in love with a man and are put in a battering situation, but there is nothing wrong with them more than simple bad luck. That's absolutely possible and my heart goes out to them. But there's also a sizeable group - perhaps 40 to 50 per cent of battered women - who are themselves as much involved in the battering as the man. That simply isn't discussed; it's considered to be 'blaming the victim'. But in fact it's being more perceptive about the difference between real victims and those who portray themselves as victims.'

Washington Times: 'Sometimes, women lie about rape'

anthony · 7 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the church of radical feminism “Women don’t lie about rape,” so it would be heretical to afford any man accused of rape a fair trial. The recent campus regulations from the Department of Education’s Civil Rights Office codify this unjust belief, and virtually eliminate the accused’s rights to due process.

The new rules mandate how colleges and universities are to investigate and prosecute allegations of sexual assault. Campus judiciary boards, made up of students, professors and administrators, must judge allegations based on a “preponderance of the evidence” standard. In other words, to be found guilty, evidence only needs to prove that “more likely than not” an assault occurred. Among other things, universities are discouraged from giving the accused the right to confront their accuser. Any appeal process has to be available for both parties to exercise, creating the possibility of double jeopardy. Institutions that do not comply with these regulations risk losing all federal funding.

These rules will reduce campus judiciary proceedings to nothing more than show trials. Innocent men wrongly convicted in these kangaroo proceedings could suffer expulsion, damage to their reputation, disqualification for jobs and even criminal prosecution. Yet, women making false allegations are rarely punished.'

SAVE: Bruised Barbie Photo Proceeds Shouldn't Discriminate

Matt · 8 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

This is a photograph taken recently of television star Heather Morris (Brittany from "Glee") engaged in mock domestic violence with a male model.

In a series of fashion photos, Tyler Shields shows a black-eyed Morris dressed as Barbie, staring seductively into the camera, and later merrily pressing a hot iron to her partner's crotch. The photos depict a getting-what-he-deserves storyline that reinforces serious misconceptions about domestic violence. Men are stereotyped as abusers, and Barbie supposedly strikes a blow for victims everywhere.

The truth is that men are just as likely to be the victims of domestic violence as women (although they are much less likely to report the crime) and most of the time, domestic disputes result in mutual violence. Predictably, reactions to the photos have focused only on the abuse to Barbie: her assault of Ken has been ignored, even though it is the more serious crime.

Rita Smith, director of the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence (NCADV), was asked about the photos, but it was as if she had seen a different set of photos. "I don't know if Tyler is aware but I'm quite sure there are plenty of women who have been abused by these kinds of household appliances and children as well being hit with electrical cords," she told E! News, disregarding male victims everywhere.

Even worse, nothing has been said about the photographer's donation to an advocacy group that disregards male victims of domestic violence. Shields told the Daily Mail that he would donate the proceeds to Glamour magazine's Tell Somebody campaign, which focuses exclusively on violence perpetrated against women.

We want you to ask Shields, politely, to select a different beneficiary-one that serves all victims, whether they are female or male, gay or straight-so that proceeds from the sale of a photo making light of domestic violence victims will not go to a project that stereotypes men as the only abusers.

Write to Tyler Shields: info-at-tylershields.com

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Dutch woman calls ex-boyfriend 65,000 times

Matt · 8 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Notice the headline identifies the man as her boyfriend while the story reports he denies they had a relationship. I would observe it's another example, albeit a subtle one, of media taking her word over his by default, even when she is the one clearly evincing the deranged behavior.

'AMSTERDAM (AP) — Dutch prosecutors are charging a 42-year-old woman with stalking after she allegedly called her ex-boyfriend 65,000 times in the past year.

The 62-year-old victim from The Hague filed a police complaint in August due to the persistent phone calls. Police arrested the suspected stalker Monday, seizing several cell phones and computers from her home in Rotterdam.

Hague prosecution spokeswoman Nicolette Stoel said Thursday the woman argued to judges at a preliminary hearing she had a relationship with the man and the number of calls she placed to him wasn't excessive. The man denied they had a relationship.

The court ordered her not to contact him again.'

Jews Speak Out in Favor of Banning Circumcision on Minors

JewishIntactivist · 8 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Jews Speak Out in Favor of Banning Circumcision on Minors

A growing number of Jews are in favor of banning circumcision on minors. These Jews recognize a minor's right to their own body, a right that supersedes the rights of a parent to harm the body of a child in the name of religion.

Article | July 28, 2011 - 4:33pm

“In Massachusetts, two Jewish mothers testified in favor of a law making circumcision illegal. Moreover, several Jews and Jewish organizations throughout the country are backing a proposed national law against circumcision. Jewish groups such as Jews Against Circumcision and the Israeli Association Against Genital Mutilation have endorsed the proposed American MGM bill, which would rewrite the U.S. Female Genital Mutilation Act of 1996 so that boys are also protected from genital mutilation.”
- Questioning circumcision, by Shani McManus and Sergio Carmona, Florida Jewish Journal, June 06, 2011

Shrink4Men Radio with Dr Tara J. Palmatier Debuts on Monday, September 12, 2011 at 9pm EST

DenisP · 9 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

Shrink4Men Radio will begin on the AVfM Radio channel this coming Monday, September 12, 2011 at 9pm EST.

Please call in if you're able to catch the show live with questions, comments or whatever happens to be on your mind.

Shrink4Men - for men who are recovering from relationships with abusive women and the non-abusive family and friends who love them.

Also see http://www.blogtalkradio.com/avoiceformen

Study Finds Sex Differences in Mental Illness

Minuteman · 9 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON—When it comes to mental illness, the sexes are different: Women are more likely to be diagnosed with anxiety or depression, while men tend toward substance abuse or antisocial disorders, according to a new study published by the American Psychological Association.
...
The authors cited previous research that found women suffer more than men from depression, because “women ruminate more frequently than men, focusing repetitively on their negative emotions and problems rather than engaging in more active problem solving.”
...
Past research also indicated that women report more neuroticism and more frequent stressful life events than men do before the onset of a disorder, indicating that environmental stressors may also contribute to internalizing, the report said.'

Colleges Forced to Redefine Speech and Assault Codes, Destroy Civil Liberties

anthony · 9 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Take, for example, Stanford University. Once Stanford got OCR's letter, it changed the standard of evidence during a student's case from "beyond a reasonable doubt" (say, 98-99 percent certainty) to the "preponderance" standard.

'You might not be surprised to learn that the student was found guilty. You might be surprised, though, about the training materials provided to jurors in sexual assault cases at Stanford. These instruct jurors that being "persuasive and logical" is a sign of guilt, that they should be "very, very cautious in accepting a man's claim that he has been wrongly accused of abuse or violence," and that maintaining neutrality is equivalent to siding with the accused.

So much for neutrality and the presumption of innocence. Too many schools, as Peter Berkowitz argued in the Wall Street Journal, presume "male guilt" according to the doctrine that "the American political order is designed to oppress the weak; that racial minorities and women, whether they realize it or not, are victims; and that the truth, except for the first two propositions, is infinitely malleable."

National Education Association Endorses Feminist Goals

anthony · 10 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The annual convention of the National Education Association in Chicago this year again passed a bunch of feminist resolutions. For example, Resolution I-61 again put the NEA on record as endorsing the long-dead Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. The ERA was debated for ten years, 1972 to 1982 and rejected by the American people, but the NEA is trying to resurrect it. The NEA urges its affiliates to continue to support ratification of this amendment.

The NEA supports full funding for the Women's Educational Equity Act. That's a feminist boondoggle to funnel taxpayers' money into radical feminist organizations. The NEA endorses the use of non-sexist language. That means rewriting textbooks to censor out so-called sexist words like man, woman, husband, wife, boy, girl, and even he and she.

NEA Resolution F-2 calls for the adoption of another feminist goal called Comparable Worth. That means getting rid of "market value" as the guide for establishing salary range and replacing it with government commissions of feminists who will subjectively decide that women's jobs are "worth" more than other jobs held mostly by men.'

'Mental health for men' section on Women's Health government web site

Minuteman · 10 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

"Source: Dept. of Health and Human Services, Office on Women's Health"

Link here. Excerpt:

'Mental health helps us face the challenges in our life, makes us feel comfortable, supports our physical health, and more. But day-to-day stress and difficult times can wear down our mental health. Major changes like losing a job, the death of a loved one, going off to combat, or coming out as gay can be especially hard. And even happy times — like becoming a father — can take a toll on your emotions.

Today, we know a lot more about ways to promote mental health. Try some simple steps, like making sure to get enough sleep, getting social support, exercising, and finding healthy ways to cope when you feel stressed.

If you are struggling with your mental health, you are not alone. In fact, about 1 out of 4 American adults suffers from a mental health condition each year. Experts don't know exactly what causes mental illnesses, but a combination of genes and life events often is involved. It's important to remember that mental health disorders are real medical illnesses that can't be willed or wished away.'

Boy discovered dead in squalid conditions; mother 'being investigated'

Matt · 10 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Shouldn't that read 'under arrest'? And pinning it on 'social isolation'? How about 'child abuse through neglect'? Oh yes, we are dealing with a mom here, not a dad. Sorry, my mistake. Excerpt:

'BERWYN, Ill. (WLS) - The death of a 14-year-old suburban boy discovered living in squalid conditions Thursday afternoon has prompted state officials to warn about the dangers of “social isolation” and a lack of community response. The teen’s mother is being investigated by the Illinois Dept. of Children and Family Services and three of his siblings were removed from the home, authorities said.

Matthew Degner of 2834 Lombard Ave. in Berwyn was pronounced dead at MacNeal Hospital in Berwyn at 4:39 p.m. Thursday, according to the Cook County Medical Examiner’s office.

An autopsy Friday determined Degner died of bronchopneumonia and his death was ruled natural, according to the medical examiner’s office.

Authorities on Thursday found dozens of animals, including 40 cats, 24 birds and at least one squirrel inside the home, which also had a bug infestation. Feces were found in the home and it had no running water, according to a source.

...
Marlowe said the case is a stark reminder of the dangers of social isolation.

“Social isolation is one of the most powerful risk factors for serious harm to children,” Marlowe said. “If we as a community never knock on that door that no one ever seems to open, we may never know how bad it is or how we can help.”'

UK: Labour sisters to oust men in women-only session at party conference

Broadsword · 11 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men will be banned from a session of this year's Labour Party conference in what is described as an "uprising" by female members. Ed Miliband, in his first conference as leader, will be the only man allowed into the auditorium in Liverpool to address the "What Women Want" meeting.

...

Presiding over the event will be the party's most senior women, including the deputy leader, Harriet Harman, the Shadow Home Secretary, Yvette Cooper, the Labour leader in the Lords, Baroness Royall, and the Shadow Attorney General, Baroness Scotland.

The move is likely to be controversial among some members who believe that the party's policy development should not be drawn up along gender lines, but that all members should have a say. There will be formal resolutions based on suggestions from female members, who are being invited to the platform to put their case on education, childcare, the economy and the NHS, as well as party rules.

...

Mr Miliband is expected to make a short speech before opening up the floor to women.

One demand that is expected to be passed is the proposal by Ms Harman for there always to be a woman in Labour's leadership, either as deputy or as leader – a move some traditionalists have protested against.

...

A senior Labour source said: "It will be an open mic event – Harriet, Yvette and others are simply presiding over an uprising. Ed will be there as an honorary woman.'

Death Tolls Expected: Female Firefighters in Sweden Not Required To Meet The Standards

Anonymous · 11 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Source 1:
Physical demands on firefighters reduced Excerpt:

"Few women can handle the test

Since 2003 the SRSA has trained 880 firefighters on the program protection against accidents, SMO. Of them, one hundred were women. A follow-up have shown that 30-50 percent of the female students could not handle the physical aspects of employment tests for emergency services."

Source 2: Feminism in the fire department can now reap life Excerpt:

"Now comes what many of us have been waiting for.

The background is that the Swedish gender hysteria has driven a situation where the physical demands on firefighters lowered to make it easier for women to become firefighters."

Comment by Ulf:
We can soon expect the first death tolls caused by gender quota: Female Firefighters that can´t save a victim in a burning building/house/apartment/office etc because they don´t have the physical strength (not meeting the standards of the physical requirement) to pull the victim away from the fire and the toxic smoke. Politically indoctrinated politicians and public calling for gender quota in every area of the society will be painfully aware of their stupidity.

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Tech Industry Needs Female Quotas Now

Broadsword · 12 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So, a woman at the top of her game has been unceremoniously kicked out of her job - she's not the first and surely won't be the last. Carol Bartz, until this week CEO of Yahoo, has been fired by the company board. She received the news via a phone call from the Chair of the Yahoo board. Charming.

Does this have anything to do with the fact that Carol Bartz is a woman? If she were a man would this have ended the same way? Would enforced quotas for women on boards have helped this situation in any way? I believe that they would.

A recent 'Women and Work' survey of three thousand women by Marie Claire magazine and Everywoman found that sexism is still rife in the workplace and that women believe they are disadvantaged compared to men when it comes to pay, promotion and age. 44 percent of women surveyed said that that glass ceiling still exists in their workplace and 83 percent said that being attractive helps women get on better at work. In another survey of both male and female managers almost three quarters of the women surveyed said that they face barriers when it comes to top level promotion, while 62 percent of women and 42 percent of men, surveyed backed positive action to boost the role of women.'

Sue Black: the greatest threat to women in the workplace since Jack the Ripper

Broadsword · 12 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, legendary ball-buster Carol Bartz was dismissed from her position as CEO of troubled Internet giant Yahoo!. Carol Bartz was ousted because she is a potty-mouthed bully who failed to meet the expectations placed on her, despite being given free rein at the company to indulge in her favourite pastimes of firings before breakfast and impaling men on skewers in the courtyards of Sunnyvale.

That she was a woman was plainly irrelevant to her dismissal (though we may note, in passing, how much more testosterone Bartz appears to have flowing through her veins than the rest of the Yahoo! board). Yet, with depressing predictability, an English academic and management consultant has seized on the unhappy event as further proof that female quotas should be imposed on company boards.
...
“Black the Ripper”, as she is coming to be known by other campaigners, who compare her damagingly crude analyses to the hatchet jobs performed by another well-known “women in the workplace” activist, struggles to marshall statistics to support her position in this piece, relying instead on data from that esteemed organ Marie Claire.'

Mom Glues 2-YO Daughter's Hands to Wall Then Beats Her

Anonymous · 12 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Joselyn Cedillo, 2, was on life support with multiple internal injuries at a Dallas hospital Thursday, The Dallas Morning News reported. A hospital spokeswoman told The Associated Press she had no information on the girl Friday.

The newspaper, citing police records, said glue and paint were stuck to Joselyn's palms, and that skin had torn away in places.

Joselyn's mother, Elizabeth Escalona, was crying and hysterical when she called her own mother Wednesday morning from her Dallas apartment, according to police records. The records show that when the grandmother arrived at the apartment, her granddaughter was unconscious on the floor. She took her to the hospital.

One of the girl's brothers said their mother kicked the child in the stomach and beat her with a belt and shoe, according to police records.'

Unable to pay child support, poor parents land behind bars

Matt · 12 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

On MSNBC, no less! Article here. Excerpt:

'It may not be a crime to be poor, but it can land you behind bars if you also are behind on your child-support payments.

Thousands of so-called “deadbeat” parents are jailed each year in the U.S. after failing to pay court-ordered child support — the vast majority of them for withholding or hiding money out of spite or a feeling that they’ve been unfairly gouged by the courts.

But in what might seem like an un-American plot twist from a Charles Dickens’ novel, advocates for the poor say, some parents are wrongly being locked away without any regard for their ability to pay — sometimes without the benefit of legal representation.
...
“Languishing in jail for weeks, months, and sometimes over a year, these parents share one trait … besides their poverty: They went to jail without ever talking to an attorney,” according to the lawsuit filed by the nonprofit Southern Center of Human Rights in Atlanta.

While jailing non-paying parents — the vast majority of them men — does lead to payment in many cases, critics say that it unfairly penalizes poor and unemployed parents who have no ability to pay, even though federal law stipulates that they must have “willfully” violated a court order before being incarcerated.
...
No one can say how many parents are jailed each year for failing to pay child support, because states typically do not track such cases.

But an analysis of U.S. Bureau of Justice statistics in 2002 by the Urban Institute’s Sorensen suggested that approximately 10,000 parents were jailed that year for non-payment of child support, representing 1.7 percent of the overall U.S. jail population.'

"If You've Got It, Charge for It": The Feminism 2.0 Manifesto

anthony · 12 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In her new book Erotic Capital, Hakim says sex appeal is our most valuable asset and we should deploy it without shame. It went on sale this week, and it's required reading for anyone under 35.
...
Like money, you can be born with it, and like friends, you can work on getting more of it. It provides measurable and significant advantages to people who have it, just like being tall.

Women have a lot more of it than men, but men want more sex than women do, a global phenomenon Hakim calls the "male sex deficit." That means erotic capital is a valuable asset in high demand and short supply. ("Male sexuality is worthless, because of excess supply at zero cost.")'

Women, swearing and the workplace

anthony · 12 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- It's not every day you read about one top-level executive asking another where his balls are. But in the end, former Yahoo CEO Carol Bartz lived up to her reputation for "salty language" and candid management style.

Since Bartz's very public departure from Yahoo last week, her penchant for blunt, profane language have become recurring themes in discussions of her career, driving conversation about what women can and can't be in the workplace.

"It stands out because it's not expected," said Deborah Tannen, a linguistics professor at Georgetown University and author of "You Just Don't Understand: Women and Men in Conversation."

"We always take notice of what's unexpected and women are still not expected to curse, so when they do, its noticed more."

Bartz got the ball rolling when she called the board members that fired her a bunch of "doofuses" who "f----- me over" in her first public comments after the now infamous firing-by-phone. Those statements came two days after Yahoo chairman Roy Bostock called her on her cell phone last Tuesday to deliver the news. In response, she sent an e-mail to Yahoo's 14,000 colleagues telling them "I've just been fired over the phone by Yahoo's chairman of the board," and wishing them the best.'

The Unknown History of Misandry

Anonymous · 12 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Site here. Excerpt:

This, the 100th post to the blog named “The Unknown History of MISANDRY,” serves as an introduction to the ongoing project. The blog consists mainly of illustrated historical news stories (mostly from the first half of the 20th century) which reveal the little known facts of how misandry and anti-misandry were viewed by the US public the preceding the era of cultural marxism that took over public discourse in the 1970s – an event which precipitated a barrage of pseudo-scholarship that has filled our heads with false statistics, historical disinformation, facile half-truths, ideological generalizations unsupported by factual evidence, all derived from a myriad of sophistic discourses.

The blog provides some much-needed historical information on earl Men’s Rights Activism and the widespread support of their aims by women writers, women judges and women legislators. A number of misandric rackets are described in great detail: “The Alimony Racket,” “The Badger Game,” “The Heart Balm Racket,” military allotment racket (“Alimony Annies”). Notable husband-killing cases are included (including serial killings) as well as Husband-Killing syndicates. There is an extensive selection of article on the crucially important subject of Chivalry Justice. And there are many more topics germane to the study of misandry, such as parental alienation, spousal revenge filicide.

...
The bog includes rare photos of early activists and Fathers Rights protests and loads of stunning period illustrations. Much of this historical material written in a breezy witty prose and is as entertaining as it is informative. Most of the material will surprise – and frequently it will shock – the reader.

History matters!

Psychology Today: Myths about Circumcision You Likely Believe

Matt · 12 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When I was pregnant with my first child, I just thought that circumcision was what you did, no big deal, and that every man was circumcised. Then one day I saw a picture of a baby being circumcised, and everything changed. Just one tiny, grainy photo was enough to make me want to know more, and the more I knew, the worse it got. It turns out, circumcision really is a big deal.

Part 1 - Circumcision Surgery Myths

Myth 1: They just cut off a flap of skin.

Reality check: Not true. The foreskin is half of the penis's skin, not just a flap. In an adult man, the foreskin is 15 square inches of skin. In babies and children, the foreskin is adhered to the head of the penis with the same type of tissue that adheres fingernails to their nail beds. Removing it requires shoving a blunt probe between the foreskin and the head of the penis and then cutting down and around the whole penis.'

Prostate Cancer At The White House- Join Malecare.org This Sunday

Matt · 13 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From Malecare.org:

BE THE ANSWER - Be part of our prostate cancer awareness photo shoot at the White House on Sunday, September 18 at 12:15PM. Rain or Shine.

Meet in front of the White House along the fence on 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue. Look for the banner, "Prostate Cancer Pony Express." Be Part of the Blue Bulb Brigade!

- Show the World that you hate prostate cancer.
- Show America that we prostate cancer survivors, fighters, family, friends and doctors, are united and will not sit still until prostate cancer is beaten.
- Show the White House that Prostate Cancer Awareness Month means more than a simple proclaimation.....it's about our lives, fighting cancer, together.

For more information, or if you have questions or comments, email me at darryl-at-malecare.org or, on Sunday, email Robert at robert.hess-at-29000men.org

Darryl Mitteldorf, LCSW
Director
Malecare Cancer Support
darryl-at-malecare.org
www.malecare.org

Did feminist groups derail the stimulus bill?

anthony · 13 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'American women are resourceful. In the business world alone, women have racked up impressive gains, earning three times as many college degrees and doubling the female presence in the workplace compared to forty years ago. In the realm of entrepreneurship, the adult American female is leaving the male in her dust, starting up businesses four times faster than men.
...
Even though 80 percent of the 5.7 million jobs lost over the first eighteen months of the recession were held by men, cries for more jobs for women arose from a feminist group calling itself "WEAVE" (Women's Equality Adds Value to the Economy). The group's complaints were bolstered by the National Organization for Women, Feminist Majority, Institute for Women's Policy Research, and National Women's Law Center. Members of the super-coalition slammed Obama for pushing a "Macho Stimulus Plan" packed with "testosterone-laden 'shovel-ready'" lingo that focused on "jobs for burly men." Rumor has it that the ladies also objected to the President speaking in deep masculine tones when talking about shovels and stuff.

But jobs would be the last thing that anyone should look for from the web of illogic, misinformation, and tribalistic dogma that pervades women's groups' arguments. Gender "fairness" pusher and Labor Secretary Hilda Solis admits to huge gains by women in the workplace--at the expense of men--and then but a breath later calls for more help to close the "gender gap" between men and women. The feminist group, WEAVE, stares down evidence of men losing jobs at a rate four times faster than women and cries foul when government "stimulus" aims to restore the lost male jobs. Tribal credo, not reality, rules the gender warrior's thinking.'

'Babysitter' Accused Of Having Sex With 14-Year-Old(s)

anthony · 13 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CLINTON, Conn. (CBSNewYork) — A Connecticut woman, accused of sexually assaulting a 14-year-old boy in Clinton, has now been charged with a similar crime in a neighboring town.

Authorities said 20-year-old Loni Bouchard, of Clinton, was charged with second-degree sexual assault for allegedly having sex with a minor in Southington.

Bouchard is already facing charges of sexual assault and risk of injury to a minor in Clinton. The alleged victim was a 14-year-old boy she was hired to babysit, according to police. Those charges came following a 3-month investigation.

It is unclear if the same teen is involved in both cases.'

Teacher Charged With Having Sex With Underage Student

anthony · 13 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

StORY here. Excerpt:

'GARDEN CITY, N.Y. (CBSNewYork) — Shocking charges were levied Friday against a New York City teacher.

She's been arrested for allegedly having sex with an underage student at a Long Island motel.

She faced a judge Friday afternoon, reports CBS 2's John Slattery.

Arrested and charged with both rape and performing a criminal sexual act is 33-year-old Tara Driscoll of Bay Shore. She was a high school English teacher at Campus Magnet Educational Complex in Queens until last May when an investigation started. Administrators reassigned her away from the classroom.'

Video Released Of Female Shooter At Mall

anthony · 13 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ORLAND PARK, Ill. (CBS) – Police have released video of a woman who is suspected of trying to rob a shopper outside Orland Park Square Mall late last week.

Police say the images are of a woman who followed the shopper to her car in a parking lot outside J.C. Penney on Friday night. Officers say she pulled a gun and said, “Do as I tell you.”

The 67-year-old victim took a bullet in the forearm – a non-life-threatening wound. She was able to tell police what the shooter looked like.

“Wow — you would never think. She looks like anybody’s mom, doesn’t she?” said one shopper when shown surveillance video of the suspect.'

Former teacher's aide gets diversion for sex with boy gwallan · 14 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This woman was originally charged with two counts of aggravated statutory rape and solicitation of a minor involving a 16-year-old boy. The "aggravated" implies this wasn't merely a horny sixteen year old gladly consenting.

Martin has now been granted a "diversion". If she's a good girl for a couple of years we all have to pretend it never happened. Her slate is wiped completely clean. I'm surprised they didn't order a Bex and a lie-down: Former teacher's aide gets diversion for sex with boy

Putting aside the gender double standard and the "sex with boy" headline it seems that McMinn County in Tennessee is incapable of punishing a female rapist and is even willing to send her back into the environment in which she abused the friend of one of her children.

A couple of years ago I satirically promoted my state of Victoria in Australia as a five star destination for female ephebepiles due to our track record of zero punishment for women who'd raped boys. That idea is permanently shelved in light of McMinn County's effort. Can't compete with that.

You can't deny it. Gender studies is full of male-blaming bias

Matt · 14 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jonathan Dean reacts dismissively to the news that I am suing the Gender Institute of the London School of Economics, where I was a student (Fear not, male readers, 8 September). "Martin claims he had the misfortune of being subject to a torrent of anti-male discrimination," Dean writes, adding: "Martin alleges that the course material he studied … was systematically anti-male, overlooked men's issues, and ignored any research that contested a 'women good, men bad' line of reasoning. Furthermore, [he claims] the Gender Institute drummed into the students … a simplistic view of women as victims and men as perpetrators."

Dean, a former researcher at LSE's Gender Institute, denies everything: "Gender studies programmes encourage students to acknowledge ... the limitations of a victim-centred understanding of womanhood." Fine words, but a close analysis of the core texts shows all the old, male-blaming biases are still there.

Patriarchy theory – the idea that men typically "dominate" women – is omnipresent, when research shows women tend to boss men interpersonally. Texts highlight misogyny but never misandry, its anti-male equivalent – despite research finding that women verbalise four times more misandry than men do misogyny. And the core texts highlight violence against women only, despite decades of research showing that women are more likely to initiate domestic violence.'

NYC TV meteorologist admits false attack claims

Matt · 14 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (AP) — A TV meteorologist admitted Wednesday she'd made up claims of being repeatedly attacked by a stranger on the city streets, allegations that sparked an extensive investigation before police said she told them she'd invented the story to get attention.

Heidi Jones, who has worked for stations in New York and Texas and filled in on ABC's "Good Morning America," pleaded guilty to misdemeanor false-reporting charges.

Her plea deal calls for three years' probation, continuing psychiatric counseling and 350 hours of community service — the amount of time police spent looking into her phony claims, prosecutors said. Jones is due to be sentenced Oct. 26.'

Woman gets away with murder?

Anonymous · 15 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A man disappeared a year ago, September 2010. His wife never reports him as missing, but eventually the neighbors do. Shortly after he disappears, the wife builds a new barbecue pit in the backyard. The body, of course, is eventually found underneath the barbecue pit. So what charges do they lay against this woman? None at all. Not even improper disposal of human remains. Do you think the same would be true if a man had buried his wife under a barbecue pit? Excerpt:

'A Novato woman won't be charged with a crime after her husband's body was found underneath a barbecue pit she built in their yard, her attorney said Tuesday.

The body of Dale Smith, 74, was found Feb. 23 buried at least 4 feet beneath the patio of the home he shared with his wife, Evelyn Smith, 55, investigators said.

Neighbors had not seen Dale Smith since at least September 2010. It was around that time that his wife and two laborers put in a brick barbecue pit in the backyard of the home on Rebecca Way, neighbors said.'

Mom admits stealing son's cancer benefit money

anthony · 15 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BUFFALO, N.Y. — An upstate New York woman has admitted to gambling away thousands of dollars raised to help her son fight cancer.

The Buffalo News reports that 46-year-old Sherry Holcomb of Cortland pleaded guilty Wednesday in state Supreme Court to a felony count of scheme to defraud.

The newspaper reports that Holcomb confessed to losing $15,000 of her son's benefit money while gambling at casinos in New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Canada.

Prosecutors say the money had been raised for her 21-year-old son, Ryan O'Donnell, who's being treated for leukemia.'

Australia: Men banned from female-only council events

anthony · 15 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are increasingly being banned from council events in Melbourne because it's not appropriate for men to mix with Muslim women, a newspaper reports.

The Darebin Council will ban men from a music concert in December, while another female-only event marking the end of Ramadan was recently cancelled, the Herald Sun reports.

Darebin Mayor Diana Asmar said these events were aimed at women who, "due to their cultural and religious backgrounds, cannot attend events where men and women both attend".

The paper reports the Victorian Civil and Administrative Tribunal has backed the bans, and declared councils no longer needed to apply to the court for such exemptions.

Darebin Council originally asked the court for an exemption under the Equal Opportunities Act to stage the women-only events, but was told the events did not discriminate and special exemption was unnecessary.'

Wal-Mart aims for change with multibillion-dollar initiative to help women

anthony · 15 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Wal-Mart appears to be hoping that a new multibillion-dollar initiative will not only help women, but will also aid in changing its image.

Three months ago, Wal-Mart achieved a major legal victory – but incurred public-relations problems – when the US Supreme Court threw out an employee class-action lawsuit against it. Some 1.5 million women were suing for pay and promotion. It was the largest gender-discrimination class-action lawsuit in history.

“The Supreme Court decision in the Wal-Mart sex-discrimination class action has received an incredible amount of media attention, much of it negative and critical of the court’s decision in favor of Wal-Mart,” says Kevin Johnson, dean of the University of California, Davis School of Law. Mr. Johnson made his comments in an e-mail.

Now, on Wednesday, the world’s largest retailer announced it will spend $20 billion over the next five years on goods and services from US businesses owned by women. It also said it would double what it pays women-run suppliers overseas. In addition, the Bentonville, Ark.-based retailer said it will offer training to 60,000 factory women who supply its stores. And it will teach life skills – including punctuality and financial literacy – to 400,000 women worldwide (200,000 in the United States).'

The Boy Crisis

anthony · 15 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many might be unaware of the boy crisis in America, but Montclair State University alumnus Dr. Warren Farrell is determined to change that. As Chair of the Commission to Create a White House Council on Boys to Men, he is looking to bring the nation's attention to this quiet crisis.

Last week he returned to his alma mater to discuss the troubling topic as part of the lecture series presented by the College of Education and Human Services.

Dean Ada Beth Cutler opened the lecture, "Boys to Men: Transforming the Boy Crisis into a Boy Opportunity," by introducing Farrell as one of the world's top 100 thought leaders. He's been named such by the Financial Times as well as been featured repeatedly in Forbes, The New York Times, and the Wall Street Journal and on such programs as "Oprah" and "Larry King Live." He has authored many books including two award-winning, international best-sellers, "Why Men are the Way They Are" and "The Myth of Male Power," and currently, he is co-authoring the book, "The Boy Crisis," with John Gray, author of "Men are from Mars, Women are from Venus."'

The 'Men are finished' issue set for debate

anthony · 15 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Some background:

The Last Days of the American Male

'Hanna Rosin's 2010 Atlantic cover story, "The End of Men," was one of the most talked-about magazine articles in recent years. "Man has been the dominant sex since, well, the dawn of mankind," wrote Rosin, an award-winning journalist for Slate and the Atlantic. "But for the first time in human history, that is changing—and with shocking speed."

That shift, she says, hasn't showed signs of slowing in the past year. And that's why she'll debate for the motion that "men are finished" during the Sept. 20 live Slate/Intelligence Squared U.S. debate at NYU.

Retort:

Oh, Come On, Men Aren't Finished

'Meanwhile, men continue to file more than 90 percent of patent applications. They drive innovation in technology—and not just with basic hardware. Bill Gates achieved global dominance by designing computers with a friendly, approachable interface. Steve Jobs displaced him by creating elegant, intuitive super-machines that were small enough to fit into an evening bag. A guy named Doug came up with the touchy-feely idea of the mouse. The social network is dominated by women but it was invented by Mark Zuckerberg.'

The Debate, to be broadcast:

How you can watch—and participate in—the live Slate/Intelligence Squared debate on Sept. 20 at NYU

'Ladies, give yourself a night off from your second job as an astronaut or neurosurgeon. Men, take a break from your fantasy football league to see if you can save yourself. Join us at NYU's Skirball Center in New York City for an Oxford-style live debate. ABC News Legal Analyst Dan Abrams and Hanna Rosin, award-winning journalist for Slate and the Atlantic, will argue for the motion that "men are finished." Feminist scholar Christina Hoff Sommers and Men's Health magazine editor-in-chief David Zinczenko will argue against it.'

SAVE: Campaign 2012: Enlist as a Volunteer Now

Matt · 15 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Eleven days from today, SAVE will be launching the most ambitious project ever undertaken by our movement: injecting domestic violence reform into the upcoming political campaign.

All across the country, we will be asking candidates for state and national office to commit themselves to the challenge of fixing of domestic violence laws.

And this is where you come in....

This coming Wednesday, Sept. 21 at 9pm Eastern time, SAVE will be holding the Campaign 2012 orientation. The teleconference will cover:

1. How to find out when a campaign event is planned in your area
2. What flyers are available to distribute
3. Good questions to ask the candidate
4. How to follow up

The theme of Campaign 2012 is Stop False Allegations. Volunteers will receive a free T-shirt to wear at campaign events.

Woman pleads not guilty to domestic assault charges

anthony · 16 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Maria Gonzales-Esquivel, King County Prosecutors say, tortured and assaulted her male housemate and his children for more than two years, sending the man to the hospital at least six times and blinding him partially in his left eye.

Despite his injuries, which included punctured lungs, wounds to his genitals and a broken nose, prosecutors say the man repeatedly covered for his tormentor, insisting that his ex-wife had possessed the woman and that the ex was responsible for the abuse, not Gonzales-Esquivel.

On Tuesday morning, 46-year-old Gonzales-Esquivel pleaded not guilty at the Norm Maleng Regional Justice Center in Kent to five charges of second-degree assault, including assaults against the daughter. She remains in jail on $200,000 bail.

According to King County Sheriff's Detective Robin Cleary, whose write-up forms the basis for the charges, the Sheriff's Office said Gonzales-Esquivel first came to its attention last November when she called to report that an unknown homeless man had dropped the injured housemate off at her house outside of Auburn. Gonzales-Esquivel told the deputy that her housemate had said that two unknown men had robbed and assaulted him.

Medics transported the man to Harborview Medical Center with wounds to his legs, a fractured rib and a "macerated" penis.'

Funding Opportunities Update from The Office on Women's Health (OWH)

Minuteman · 16 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

A HHS.gov mailing list email:

'You are subscribed to Funding Opportunities from The Office on Women's Health (OWH). This information has recently been updated, and is now available.

National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day Request for Proposals (RFP)
09/15/2011 12:00 AM EDT

Funding is available for activities and events in support of National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day (NWGHAAD...

Request for Proposals (RFP): Heart Attack Symptoms and Calling 9-1-1 Campaign for Women
09/12/2011 12:00 AM EDT

Funding is available for activities and events in support of the Heart Attack Symptoms and Calling 9-1-1 Campaign for...

Women's Health Conference Support Request for Proposals (RFP)
09/01/2011 12:00 AM EDT

This funding opportunity provides partial support for women's health conferences in the United States and its affilia...

Request for Proposals (RFP): National Evaluation of BodyWorks: A Toolkit for Healthy Teens and Strong Families
08/05/2011 12:00 AM EDT

Funding is available to participate in a national evaluation of the newly modified BodyWorks program. Targeting paren...

FY11 Sustainable Comprehensive Tobacco Cessation and Prevention Clinical Program for Low Socio-economic Status Women of Childbearing Age
06/15/2011 12:00 AM EDT

The purpose of this project is to implement and to evaluate the success of tobacco cessation and prevention programs...

Prevention and Public Health Fund Coordinated Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion Program
06/10/2011 12:00 AM EDT

The purpose of the program is to establish or strengthen Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion Programs wit...

OVC FY 2011 National Field-Generated Training, Technical Assistance, and Demonstration Projects (PDF, 246 KB)
05/19/2011 12:00 AM EDT

Funding is available for proposals that will create, test, and evaluate equal access to traditional and mainstream...

Regional Offices on Women's Health (OWH) Request for Applications (RFA): Addressing Tobacco Use Among Young Women (PDF, 42 KB)
02/23/2011 11:00 PM EST

Funding is available for activities and events in support of projects that address the prevention of tobacco use amon...

Request for Applications (RFA): Addressing Depression Among Racial and Ethnic Minority or Underserved Women and Girls (PDF, 90 KB)
01/10/2011 11:00 PM EST

This funding will support projects which address depression as a health disparity affecting racial and ethnic minorit...

Request for Applications (RFA): Reducing Health Disparities by Preventing Obesity among Minority and Underserved Women and Girls (PDF, 94 KB)
01/10/2011 11:00 PM EST

This funding is available for activities and events in support of projects that address obesity prevention in minorit...

Request for Applications (RFA): Women's Health Conference Support Projects (PDF, 38 KB)
11/17/2010 11:00 PM EST

This RFA is coordinated by John Snow, Inc. (JSI) on behalf of the HHS Office on Women's Health (OWH). Funding will pr...

Heart Attack Symptoms and Calling 9-1-1 Campaign for Women (PDF, 129 KB)

This funding is available for activities and events in support of the Heart Attack Symptoms and Calling 9-1-1 Campa...

Building Systems of Prevention through Health Promotion for Women and Girls (PDF, 53 KB)
10/22/2010 12:00 AM EDT

This funding will support projects that build systems of prevention through the promotion of health for women and g...'

Psychology Today: More Circumcision Myths You May Believe: Hygiene and STDs

Minuteman · 17 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Myth: You have to get the baby circumcised because it is really hard to keep a baby's penis clean.

Reality check: In babies, the foreskin is completely fused to the head of the penis. You cannot and should not retract it to clean it, as this would cause the child pain, and is akin to trying to clean the inside of a baby girl's vagina.

...

Myth: Little boys won't clean under their foreskins and will get infections.

Reality check: The foreskin separates and retracts on its own sometime between age 3 and puberty. Before it retracts on its own, you wipe the outside off like a finger.

...

Myth: Uncircumcised penises get smelly smegma.

Reality check: Actually, smegma is produced by the genitals of both women and men during the reproductive years.

...

Myth: "My uncle wasn't circumcised and he kept getting infections and had to be circumcised as an adult."

Reality check: Medical advice may have promoted infection in uncircumcised males. A shocking number of doctors are uneducated about the normal development of the foreskin, and they (incorrectly) tell parents that they have to retract the baby's foreskin and wash inside it at every diaper change.

...

Myth: My son was diagnosed with phimosis and so had to be circumcised.

Reality check: Phimosis means that the foreskin will not retract. Since children's foreskins are naturally not retractable, it is impossible to diagnose phimosis in a child.

...

Myth: Uncircumcised boys get more urinary tract infections (UTIs.)

Reality check: This claim is based on one study that looked at charts of babies born in one hospital (Wiswell 1985).

...

Myth: Circumcision prevents HIV/AIDS.

Reality check: Three studies in Africa several years ago that claimed that circumcision prevented AIDS and that circumcision was as effective as a 60% effective vaccine (Auvert 2005, 2006). These studies had many flaws, including that they were stopped before all the results came in.

...

Myth: Circumcision is worth it because it can save lives.

Reality check: Consider breast cancer: There is a 12% chance that a woman will get breast cancer in her lifetime. Removal of the breast buds at birth would prevent this, and yet no one would advocate doing this to a baby.'

What Does President Obama Mean For Men?

Matt · 18 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama might as well say, "Let me be clear: Although I don't go to bat for men, I certainly do for women." His going to bat for women is aptly demonstrated by his immediate signing off on the White House Council on Women and Girls* and on what I call his "Ledbetter Payback Act," in reference, of course, to the Ledbetter Fair Pay Act, which I believe is a promised payback to feminists and women for their vote.
...
To date, no evidence indicates that Obama will single out men for help in any direct and selective way. For men, so far, Barack Obama represents business as usual.
...
To truly grasp President Obama's bias against men (just as some women are biased against women), reflect on his Father's Day speech about men “shirking their responsibility” in the world of children. Now picture Obama's speech with a gender reversal, not a reversal in which women shirk responsibility in the world of children — for that would not be a true reversal -- but one in which women shirk responsibility in the world of work. Suppose that on Mother's Day 2009 Obama had the brazenness, the insanity, to rail against mothers who refuse to work or who don't return to work after a reasonable period of maternity leave. Suppose he said, “These mothers have abandoned their responsibilities. They are acting like girls instead of women. And the foundations of our families have suffered because of it. You and I know this is true everywhere but nowhere is it more true than in the African-American community.” How fast would Democrats turn on him, disowning and ostracizing him from the Democratic Party? Of course, none of this would ever happen. Obama, like all presidents before him, knows with great certainty which gender of the ox to gore for political purposes.'

Prison officials are set to let some female inmates out early

anthony · 18 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Reporting from Sacramento— Drastically redefining incarceration in California, prison officials are about to start releasing thousands of female inmates who have children to serve the remainder of their sentences at home.

The move, which could affect nearly half the women held in state facilities, will help California meet a court-imposed deadline to make space in its chronically overcrowded prisons. The policy could be extended to male inmates in the near future, administrators said Monday.

Mothers who were convicted of non-serious, non-sexual crimes — and have two years or less remaining on their sentences — could start going home as early as next week, prisons spokeswoman Dana Toyama said. The women would be required to wear GPS-enabled ankle bracelets and report to parole officers.
...
Since well over 90% of California inmates are men, it is easy to see why prison officials might want to expand the program, said Robert Oakes, legislative director for state Sen. Carol Liu (D-La Cañada Flintridge), who wrote the 2010 bill creating the policy. But that wasn't the original idea.

"In crafting the bill, her intent was to single out female inmates with children," Oakes said. But that could not be done because of a constitutional ban against gender-based discrimination. So the phrase "primary caregiver" was added to the bill.'

Virgin Group founder jumps on circumcision bandwagon

Matt · 18 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. A web search has turned up richard.branson-at-virgin.net as his email address, but it is likely to be read by a member of his staff rather than him. Still, it'll at least get read by someone there. Excerpt:

'There's a way that few people know about that can save millions of lives at next to no cost. That is voluntary medical male circumcision. The bottom line is that it reduces transmission of HIV by 60% in men, the greatest benefits accruing in developing nations that are hardest hit by the epidemic. The World Health Organisation (WHO), UNAIDS and PEPFAR are leading the world in scaling-up circumcision efforts as part of the fight against AIDS.

The WHO estimates that voluntary medical male circumcision could prevent up to 5.7 million new infections and 3 million deaths by 2017, and PEPFAR reports that a programme to increase circumcision to 80% coverage in Eastern and Southern Africa over the next 5 years could prevent 20% - an incredible 4 million – new infections in the region.

The effect of male-to-female HIV transmission is less clear and more research is needed. However, studies do show that female partners of circumcised men have a reduced risk of acquiring the virus, and there is consensus that women will benefit from the scale-up of circumcision efforts in the long term because of the lower risk of exposure to HIV as well as sexually transmitted diseases and cervical cancer.'

Q&A: Co-ed sports benefits female athletes

anthony · 19 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'No boys allowed! Jimmy Cao, a 16-year-old senior, is not allowed to play on the Hillsborough High School girls field hockey team, even though there's no team for boys. Letting boys play on girls teams could eliminate opportunities for female athletes, according to New Jersey's governing body for high school athletics. Title IX, however, does permit girls to play on boys teams — including contact sports such as wrestling or hockey — if there's no team for girls.

Laura Pappano, co-author of "Playing With the Boys: Why Separate Is Not Equal," played field hockey in high school and at Yale. She spoke to editorial writer Julie O'Connor about why she believes it would be good for the girls on this team, and female athletes in general, to let Cao play.'

World War I, Women and the White Feather Campaign

Broadsword · 19 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When the war began, recruitment was massive and enthusiastic as millions of young men responded to Lord Kitchener's poster appeal: 'Your country needs you'. But not every man rushed to join the colours, so girls brandishing white feathers were organised by a retired sailor, Admiral Charles Fitzgerald, to shame 'slackers' into joining up

The first foray of his Order of the White Feather was on the seafront at Folkestone, where 30 of the women pounced on any man not in uniform.

'Are you deaf or indifferent to your country's needs?' the girls demanded to know, before reminding the men that British soldiers were fighting and dying while they took their leisure.

'Here's a gift for a brave soldier,' they said sarcastically as they handed out the feathers. Fuelled by newspaper reports, the movement quickly spread.

...
But the abuse went unabated. In the East End of London, girls added insult to injury by using feathers plucked from chickens' bottoms and letting the recipients know where they had come from. Similar sentiments drove the Active Service League, founded by the formidable Baroness Orczy, author of The Scarlet Pimpernel.

Its 20,000 female members pledged not to be seen in the company of any man who had not answered 'his country's call'. A small ad in The Times read: 'Jack, If you are not in khaki by the 20th, I shall cut you dead - Ethel M.'

Who were the women goading men in this way? Some may have been suffragettes. They found their voice campaigning for votes for women and now brandished their girl-power on other matters. Others were war widows and mothers with sons at the front aggrieved that other young men were out of harm's way.

But it is hard to resist the conclusion that a large contingent were young women enjoying a sense of empowerment the war brought.'

Clinton, Rousseff urge greater female role in politics

anthony · 19 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Here in the US, women have a higher literacy rate, are the majority of college students, have superior health care, are the minority of unemployed citizens, and are less likely to become homeless. I'm not sure what they mean by conflicts, but men make up the overwhelming majority of war time casualties. Sexual violence? Forced male circumcision is a form of sexual violence. Feminists speak about increased productivity if women were represented in higher numbers through out different industries, yet I hear no one mention education. Women make up the majority of school teachers, one would think increasing the number of male teachers would improve the education system. Excerpt:

'Prominent female politicians including US Secretary of State Hillary Clinton and Brazilian President Dilma Rousseff joined voices Monday to demand a greater global political role for women.

"Despite notable progress, gender inequality persists," Rousseff, who became Brazil's first female president earlier this year, said at a high-level event held at the United Nations ahead of this week's UN General Assembly.

"Women are still the ones who suffer the most from extreme poverty, illiteracy, poor healthcare systems, conflicts and sexual violence."'

F&F: Opposing Child Support Enforcement's War Against Low Income Dads

Matt · 19 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Iraqi war veteran Randy Miller was jailed for three months after he was unable to pay his child support because he lost his job--despite having faithfully paid his support for 10 years previously. Veteran Lance Hendrix was jailed after he fell behind on child support when he couldn't find work after serving in the army. MSNBC recently reported that both are plaintiffs in a new class-action lawsuit designed to force states to provide legal representation for low-income non-custodial parents facing jail for inability to pay child support.

Our organization sees many fathers like Miller and Hendrix who have lost their jobs or suffered significant drops in this terrible economy. Because it is difficult for fathers to get their child support orders modified downward, many decent, loving fathers are being jailed because they can’t keep up with their child support obligations.'

'Gentle men’s club': Men in India create Men's Rights Agency, focus on defending against false DV accusations

Matt · 19 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'These men from various walks of life have one thing in common — all were accused of domestic violence and were subsequently acquitted. Now, they’ve formed a group that advises other men how to fight the charge.

They are doctors, lawyers, IT professionals. They are demanding a ministry for men’s welfare on the lines of those for women & child development and environment and forests. They are men with standing in society who have lost in love and landed in court after being accused of domestic violence under IPC section 498, pertaining to domestic violence.

Now acquitted of the domestic violence charge, 25 of them have come together to form the city’s first Men’s Rights Association, thanks to the initiative taken by software engineer Atit Rajpara. The Association now advises other men fighting domestic violence charges with tips and tricks to come through unscathed.

The 32-year-old says he has just been to hell and back, thanks to his wife. Speaking to Mirror, he said, “We had opted for a test tube baby, but my wife filed a case of domestic violence against me, demanding custody of the yet-unborn child. I was arrested and humiliated by the Gujarat police and then by Pune police because of this false complaint. She then demanded maintenance of Rs 50 lakh claiming that I hold property worth Rs 1.5 crore. I stay in a rented house.”'

UK: False rape claim woman given suspended sentence

anthony · 21 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Rebecca Howard, of Prince of Wales Terrace, pleaded guilty at Channel Magistrates Court in Folkestone on August 18 and was sentenced last week to four months imprisonment, suspended for two years.

She was also ordered to carry out 200 hours unpaid work and pay £1,000 compensation to Kent Police. She will be the subject of a supervision order for 12 months.

Howard falsely claimed that two men had bundled her into a car before driving her to a car park in Walmer where one of the men raped her in the early hours of Sunday, February 6.

A detailed police investigation into the alleged rape proved the offence had never occurred and Howard later admitted this.'

Woman lied about burglary, rape attempt to cover up crash, deputies say

anthony · 21 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 19-year-old Orange County woman was arrested early Monday, accused of wasting more than a dozen deputies' time as they investigated her false reports of assault, burglary and attempted rape.

Amanda Angelero called 911 about 7:10 a.m. Monday from a pay phone outside a closed Mobile station near the intersection of Valencia College Lane and Goldenrod Road, an arrest report states.'

Police charge woman with false rape claim

anthony · 21 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A South Carolina woman was charged by Fayetteville Police with making false statements in a Sept. 10 incident that occurred at the home of her boyfriend in Fayetteville. The woman told officers her boyfriend had raped her but was later arrested for making false statements during an interview with female detectives.

Fayetteville Police spokesman Steve Crawshaw said 40-year-old Angella Caprice Miller, of Hopkins, S.C., was charged with making false statements and writings after an incident that police reports said involved her boyfriend, a Fayetteville resident.'

Lake Arthur teen get jail time, probation for false rape claim

anthony · 21 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'JENNINGS, La. — A Lake Arthur teenager has been ordered to serve two years of probation after she pleaded guilty Sept. 7 in state court to falsely accusing a police officer of raping her.

The American Press reports (http://bit.ly/qjfACs) 18-year-old Meghan Franks must serve 90 days in the parish jail and pay fines totaling $1,140 plus court costs.

District Attorney Michael Cassidy says all fines and costs must be paid within the first 18 months of probation.'

About a girl - London's first women-only psychotherapy clinic

anthony · 21 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sabina Amiga, Trudi Seely and Anna Tierney open the doors (and plump the sofa cushions) of their women-only therapy clinic, Woman to Woman, next Monday. According to Seely "there is a trend for this kind of clinic in America", but surprisingly, Woman to Woman will be the first private practice of its kind in central London that is not semi-charity-funded.

A former lawyer, a novelist and a businesswoman, who all retrained as psychotherapists, the trio hope to make therapy more accessible and acceptable for women like them.

"There is quite a shortage of therapy in general for people who can't afford to pay, so the NHS is very limited on who gets seen and there are long waiting lists," says Tierney.

"So career women and high fliers wouldn't be taken on by charitable organisations because they're earning too much," explains Amiga.'

Man sued by mother for parental support

anthony · 21 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A B.C. man who was abandoned as a teenager is being sued by his elderly mother for parental support.

Ken Anderson, 47, has been fighting a lawsuit by his mother, Shirley Anderson, 73, since 2000.

Shirley, who has not had a relationship with Ken or his two siblings for decades, is asking for $750 per month in support from each of them.

A rarely used section of B.C.'s Family Relations Act says adult children are responsible for legally supporting parents who are "dependent on a child because of age, illness, infirmity or economic circumstances."

The B.C. Law Institute recommended repealing the section in a 2007 report.'

Overwhelming Victory for the Motion "Men Are Finished" at Intelligence Squared U.S. Debates

anthony · 21 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK, Sept. 21, 2011 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Last night at NYU'sskirball Center audience members gave an overwhelming victory to the team defending the proposition "Men Are Finished." According to the final votes, Dan Abrams and Hanna Rosin convinced 46% of the audience to change their minds over the course of the evening, winning the Oxford style debate by a landslide (See full numbers below). Their argument: as a result of a changing economy and shifting cultural values, men, who were once seen as the dominant sex, are now in a deep slide to number two status.

The resolution was opposed by Christina Hoff Sommers and David Zinczenko, who argued that men still hold more political and economic power, and that, although women have caught up or surpassed men in some regards, this does not mean that men as a whole, are finished.'

Note: Website with details here, including downloadable transcript and video clips.

Only women, kids allowed into Turkish soccer game

anthony · 21 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Soccer authorities in Turkey may have hit on the perfect solution for unruly fans: Ladies Night!

The Turkish Football Federation had planned to make Istanbul favorite Fenerbahce play two games in an empty stadium after fans invaded the pitch after a friendly against Ukraine's Shakhtar Donetsk during the summer, according to a Turkish Weekly report.

But new rules say those games will be open only to women and children under age 12, National Turk reports. *Admission is free.

The policy got its first test Tuesday night in Istanbul, as 45,000 women and children turned out to watch Fenerbahce and Manisaspor face off in the Turkish Super League.

'Class Warfare' and Gender Politics in Massachusetts

anthony · 22 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How might gender politics interact with economic anxieties and class conflicts in a race between Warren and Brown? For years, conventional wisdom has held that female candidates fare relatively well when "it's the economy stupid," and not crime or national security. Traditionally women were presumed to be more honest and compassionate than men and accustomed to balancing budgets. Traditionally, female candidates have exploited feminine stereotypes in advancing themselves and items on a feminist agenda, notably suffrage. (Government is "enlarged housekeeping," Jane Addams once said.) But the extreme, atypical economic crisis currently confronting voters can't simply be said to require better housekeeping; deficit reduction is not an exercise in compassion, and neither honesty nor compassion seem highly valued today, as male and female Republicans alike run as un-compassionate conservatives and self-styled mama grizzlies revel in ruthlessness.'

Ireland: 'International Day of the Girl'

anthony · 22 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHILDRENS' CHARITY PLAN Ireland has called for September 22 to be declared the International Day of the Girl in order to focus the world's attention on the importance of girls' rights.

Today's report found that fathers, brothers and husbands play an essential role in creating true gender equality.

However, gender equality is good for boys too, highlights Plan Ireland's 2011 'Because I am a Girl: The State of the World's Girls' report.'

Column: Men need to help with gender equality – but it's good for them too

'On the domestic front, fathers could stand back a little bit and see what they can do to break down such gender stereotypes. Could they help more with household chores or caring for the younger children? By doing so, these small changes can give an example to their sons and lead to a new breed of male.'

Debra Lafave Asks Judge to Reduce Probation

anthony · 22 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Florida middle school teacher who pleaded guilty to having sex with a 14-year-old student in a high-profile case is reportedly back in court Thursday to ask a judge to reduce her probation.

Debra Lafave, 31, a former teacher at Angelo L. Greco Middle School in Temple Terrace, Fla., pleaded guilty in 2005 to having sex with a 14-year-old boy in the summer of 2004, when Lafave was 23-years-old.

The case never went to trial because the victim's mother did not want her son to testify, fearing his identity would become public.

Lafave agreed in a last-minute plea deal to three years of house arrest followed by seven years of probation. But a lawyer for the woman is asking a judge Thursday to reduce her probation by four years, arguing that Lafave -- now a mother of twins -- is a responsible adult, according to the station.

The boy's mother is reportedly outraged by the move. The woman, whose name has not been released, told ABCActionNews.com that an agreement was made at the time that does not allow for early termination of the deal.'

Penis hack killing: woman refused bail

anthony · 22 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman accused of murdering her ex-lover after drugging him and mutilating his genitals has been formally denied bail in a Sydney court.

Jian Chen, 48, is charged with one count of causing grievous bodily harm with intent to murder and one count of murder.

She is accused of using sleeping pills to spike the soup she gave her former partner at her North Ryde home on February 9

...

Once Mr Peng was asleep, Chen allegedly bound his hands and feet and stabbed him a number of times in the neck and groin, before cutting his penis and scrotum.

"An attempt to castrate him had taken place," said police facts.

"The victim also had lacerations to the left side of his groin and his penis had been scalped."'

Woman Faces Charges in Horrific Child Abuse Case

anthony · 22 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

(Warning: Graphic Content)

Story here. Excerpt:

'GILBERT, Ariz. - A Gilbert woman is accused of sexual conduct with a minor -- her 10-year-old adopted son.

According to police, the victim told them that his 39-year-old mother bound his hands and feet, forced dog excrement into his mouth and duct taped it shut.

The victim added that she burned his penis with a lighter, then sodomized him repeatedly with a toothbrush. Police say there was another incident where Jennifer Barnes repeatedly burned the victim's penis with a curling iron. In both cases, the victim bled.

During a physical exam, it was discovered that the child had large scars on his pelvic area and legs, consistent with healed burns. He also had three distinct scars, consistent with his disclosure of being sodomized.
...
She was arrested and faces sexual conduct with a minor and child abuse charges. She remains in custody without bond.'

Ohio mother charged with raping infant son

anthony · 22 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Ohio woman is accused of raping her 10-month-old son, videotaping it and sending it to her Michigan boyfriend.

Ashley N. Jessup, 24, was indicted in Columbus on Thursday on two counts of rape, one count of child endangerment and one count of pandering sexually-oriented material involving a minor.

Franklin County Prosecutor Ron O'Brien says the rape charge could land her life in prison.

O'Brien tells The Columbus Dispatch (http://bit.ly/n2XPEK) that Jessup emailed the videos to her boyfriend in Battle Creek, Mich., where his ex-girlfriend discovered them and contacted police.

Jessup is being held in the Franklin County Correctional Center in lieu of $1 million bond. Court documents do not list an attorney for Jessup.'

U.S. Girl Dropout Crisis

anthony · 22 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Girls are overlooked when it comes to tracking the school dropout crisis in cities and towns across our country. Overlooking the problems that threaten the education of girls makes this crisis far more critical. Even though every state, even individual schools, counts dropout rates differently, estimates show the nationwide toll of dropping out:

• 50% Native American girls
• 4-in-10 black female students
• nearly 4-in-10 Latinas

Absenteeism, often triggered by feeling unsafe at school, can lead to dropping out completely.

Pregnancy is also a major cause for leaving school: 3-in-10 young women in the United States will become pregnant before the age of 20, a rate higher than any other developed country. Many girls who are expecting, as well as those who are already mothers, face discrimination by school administrators, teachers, and fellow students. Becoming a parent is given as a primary factor for not continuing high school among nearly 50% of all female dropouts, versus one-third of male dropouts. The research on this crisis is woefully inadequate.'

Not a rape culture, just a PC one

anthony · 22 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let's make this perfectly clear: there is no rape culture at Yale.

If Yale had a rape culture, there would be students and faculty speaking in favor of rape. Rape would be a common practice; it would be routine to hear someone talking about raping or being raped by someone last weekend. People would discuss what styles or methods of rape they prefer. Obviously, the existence of a rape culture is a farcical idea. These things just don't happen at Yale.

There are isolated incidents of rape, and that is surely a severe problem. Beyond the physical harm the victim suffers, rape erodes trust. Like any crime, it arouses fear.

Rape falls somewhere on a wide spectrum between murder and robbery. The number of people who commit rape is a tiny percentage of the population at large. The vast majority of people are not criminals.

When we talk about a rape culture, when we look at everyone as a potential criminal, and when we condemn different opinions as promoting rape, we create an environment of suspicion. This suspicion, like crime, erodes trust and arouses fear.'

Interview with man suing gender studies department for sexism

Matt · 22 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Tom Martin, the man suing the Gender Institute at The London School of Economics for teaching sex discrimination against men, appeared on A Voice for Men Radio on Wednesday to discuss some of the anti-male academic practice he alleges took place at LSE, and, Mr Martin suggests, across a broad range of other academic fields too.

The radio interview is conducted by men's rights activists (MRAs) Paul Elam, and John the Other (JTO) - Tom also fields calls from listeners.

The show is archived at:

http://www.sexismbusters.org/

(The interview with Tom Martin begins 36:30 minutes into the show)

The story has been covered by The Evening Standard, The Guardian (x4), The West End Extra, Forbes Magazine, and many websites - these links all available at http://www.sexismbusters.org/ too - including a contact email for Mr Martin.

SAVE: VAWA Bankrolls the Dissolution of the American Family

Matt · 22 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE: The federal Violence Against Women Act is more about breaking up families than stopping partner abuse. That's the main conclusion of 6 years of ongoing research to analyze the effects of VAWA on our communities and families.

And no surprise, the real victims of partner violence are hopping mad, saying VAWA has created a "broken system that is in dire need of repair" -- see http://www.survivorsinaction.org/

Today SAVE unveiled a series of reforms:

1. Give priority for services to persons with evidence of physical violence
2. Cut back on false allegations
3. Remove harmful policies like mandatory arrest

Additional policy changes are laid out in our proposed Partner Violence Reduction Act: http://www.saveservices.org/pvra/

Family break-up is the number one engine of an expanding welfare state. So policy changes that reduce false accusations and promote partner reconciliation will save substantial sums of money and reduce the federal deficit.

Here are the specifics of our proposal how to enhance services for true victims, strengthen the family, and shrink the welfare state by $155 billion over the next 10 years.

Census: Recession takes big toll on young adults

Matt · 22 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON (AP) -- Young adults are the recession's lost generation.

In record numbers, they're struggling to find work, shunning long-distance moves to live with mom and dad, delaying marriage and raising kids out of wedlock, if they're becoming parents at all. The unemployment rate for them is the highest since World War II, and they risk living in poverty more than others - nearly 1 in 5.
...
Young males who lacked a college degree were most likely to lose jobs due to reduced demand for blue-collar jobs in construction, manufacturing and transportation during the downturn. Among teenagers, employment was less than 30 percent.
...
Opting to stay put, roughly 5.9 million Americans 25-34 last year lived with their parents, an increase of 25 percent from before the recession. Driven by a record 1 in 5 young men who doubled up in households, men are now nearly twice as likely as women to live with their parents.

Marriages fell to a record low last year of just 51.4 percent among adults 18 and over, compared with 57 percent in 2000. Among young adults 25-34, marriage was at 44.2 percent, also a new low.'

Catherine Kieu pleads not guilty in penis slicing

anthony · 23 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. $1,000,000 bail. I applaud the prosecutor and judge for taking this very seriously. Unfortunately, none of the charges include domestic abuse. I suspect there'll be a battered wife defense but I don't see that working because her husband was the one who filed for divorce. The trial should be very interesting because her defense attorney will find some way to portray her as a victim.

'WESTMINSTER, Calif. — A California woman has pleaded not guilty to cutting off her estranged husband's penis and running it through a garbage disposal.

Catherine Kieu entered the plea in Orange County Superior Court Friday to charges of torture and aggravated mayhem with sentencing enhancements for great bodily injury and use of a knife.

If convicted of all counts, she could face life in prison without parole. She's being held on $1 million bail.

Authorities say Kieu spiked her 60-year-old husband's tofu dinner on July 11, then tied his hands and feet to the bed after he went to lie down. Authorities say Kieu cut off his penis as he woke.

Kieu's husband had filed for divorce in May after 16 months of marriage.'

Stress the 'Human' in HPV, One Man Suggests

Minuteman · 24 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fred Wyand has been in a prime spot to watch the evolution of the public health response to human papillomavirus, or HPV.

Since 2003, Wyand has served as editor of HPV News, a bimonthly newsletter published by the American Social Health Association. The newsletter has been around since the 1990s.

HPV is a sexually transmitted disease that most people associate with genital warts, a temporary but somewhat repugnant condition. But the more dangerous potential side effects of HPV infection are not as well known, Wyand said.
...
Early on, there was some controversy when parents objected to having girls of 12 or 13 inoculated for a sexually transmitted disease, but those arguments have mostly faded, Wyand said.
...
"There has been a lot of back and forth about using the vaccine in men," he said. "There's a medical indication for using it in men, but when you look at it and consider that cervical cancer is probably the most prominent cancer linked with HPV, people say, 'Well, would we be better served taking those resources and using them to get more and more women vaccinated?'"'

CDC Considers Vaccinating Boys, Not Just Girls, for HPV

Minuteman · 24 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Immunizing half the population isn't forceful enough against widespread virus, expert says.

U.S. health authorities now recommend that girls and young women be vaccinated against human papillomavirus, a sexually transmitted disease that is a known cause of cervical cancer, but that recommendation does not extend to boys and young men.

At least for now.

A debate that's been simmering over whether males also should be vaccinated for human papillomavirus, or HPV, could be resolved in October at a meeting of a key advisory committee of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, said CDC spokesman Tom Skinner.

HPV is widespread among men. An international study published in March in The Lancet found that half of all adult males in the United States may be infected with the virus.
...
Another strong argument in favor of male HPV vaccination, Bonhomme said, is the fact that by only immunizing half the population, health officials are not attacking the problem with full force.

"Where are women getting the virus from?" he asked. "If you don't vaccinate the guys, then you aren't helping the women."'

UK: Dead boy 'left to rot in cellar for two years'

Minuteman · 24 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother-of-eight allegedly lived with the dead body of her three-year-old boy decomposing in the cellar of her home in northern England for up to two years.

Amanda Hutton, 41, was taken into custody after police made the grim discovery on Thursday, having been called to the house in Bradford by a concerned neighbour, the Daily Mail reports

...

Hutton, a single mother who was known to social services, also has two grown-up children aged 22 and 20 who had moved out of home.

One of the elder brothers, Tariq Khan, said he had no idea that his baby brother had died.'

How To Teach Boys To Be Feminists

anthony · 25 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a young man:

- Teach them that “feminism” means promoting women’s rights and interests.
- Discuss how being a feminist does not mean women hate men or that women think men are the enemy.
- Teach them that by taking a role in feminism they will be helping everyone, not just women.
- Teach them that because they are at the top of society’s hierarchy, they have a responsibility and an ability to be part of social change and justice for everyone.
- Simply talk to them and use probing questions when teachable moments arise. Allow them to reach their own conclusions.'

Cleared of Rape but Lacking Full Exoneration

anthony · 25 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mr. Haynesworth, then 18 and never in trouble with the law, had been mistakenly identified by the victim as her assailant. He was arrested on suspicion of having committed five rapes and assaults in his neighborhood, and was tried for four of them. He was convicted in three and sentenced to 84 years in prison.

DNA has since proved that he did not commit two of the rapes he was tried for. The DNA from those two cases pointed to another man, in prison for having committed multiple rapes in the same neighborhood that occurred after Mr. Haynesworth's arrest. That man, Leon Davis, who identified himself to victims as "the Black Ninja," is serving multiple life terms plus 100 years.

Now Mr. Haynesworth, 46, is asking for full exoneration on all of the rape convictions, although DNA from the other two cases is not available. But the circumstantial evidence supporting Mr. Haynesworth's claims of innocence is so powerful that along with his own lawyers, the prosecutors from both jurisdictions where the rapes occurred support his efforts, as well as the attorney general for the commonwealth, Kenneth T. Cuccinelli.

...
With no one arguing against exoneration, most judges would be expected to congratulate Mr. Haynesworth on his new life, perhaps with an apology as well, and send him into daylight and freedom. But in July, a three-judge panel of the Court of Appeals of Virginia said, in essence, "Not so fast." The court called for additional briefs in the case, which will be heard again on Tuesday by all of the judges of the court.

It is a move that has left legal experts astonished. "It's very rare for a court to set a case for argument when all the parties are agreed," said Stephen J. Schulhofer, an expert in criminal justice at New York University law school, adding that "it's essentially unheard of" for a court to take matters into its own hands, instead of appointing a special advocate to argue on behalf of the interests that they believe are unrepresented.

It is a case, then, that might seem quirky, even unique. But experts like Professor Schulhofer say the case raises broader questions about the lengths that defendants must sometimes go to clear their names, and even raises fundamental questions about the administration of justice. "What I worry about is, if Haynesworth is having trouble getting his conviction set aside, what kind of judicial relief is available to your run-of-the-mill case where your arguments are not quite so slam dunk?"'

Title IX gender quotas may hurt high school sports next

anthony · 26 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fall sports season is in full swing for New Jersey high schools. But for many students, this may be the last year they play if supporters of Title IX gender quotas get their way in American high schools.

Last November, the Washington, D.C.-based National Women's Law Center filed federal complaints against 12 school districts. The charge? Because the gender balance of male and female athletes did not exactly mirror the overall population of the student body, the school districts were discriminating. This numbers game assumed that boys and girls have identical interests in identical numbers.
...
With few options to address those complainants, schools must make the numbers work. They will have little choice but to eliminate male teams or significantly slash their rosters. As many as 1.3 million male high school athletes nationwide could be permanently sidelined — although that would not create any opportunities for female high school athletes.

Already, hundreds of men's college programs have ended because of the gender quota system. In New Jersey, even champions aren't immune. Former Rutgers swimmer and coach Sean Smith bluntly noted: "Rather than providing more opportunities for women, I think (Title IX) is more often used as a scapegoat for athletic departments. … It will be the death of men's Olympic sports on the collegiate level if its application is not changed drastically."'

SAVE Alert: VP Biden Needs to Address Female Teen Violence on 'The View'

Matt · 26 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Tomorrow (Tuesday, Sept. 27, 2011) Vice President Joseph Biden will make an appearance on ABC's talk show The View to discuss teen dating violence -- and we're asking you to contact the White House to make sure VP Biden gets his facts straight!

We would like VP Biden to emphasize these three critical facts during his appearance on The View:

1. Teenage girls are now more likely than males to be the initiators of dating partner violence.
2. Female abusers need help, not a cold shoulder.
3. The problem of dating violence against boys needs to be highlighted.

This morning SAVE sent a letter to VP Biden asking him to address these 3 issues: http://www.saveservices.org/2011/09/save-sends-letter-to-vp-biden-regarding-his-upcoming-appearance-on-the-view/

We need your help to drive home the message! Today...RIGHT NOW...telephone the White House at 1-202-456-1414, and send send an email to Public-at-ovp.eop.gov: "Vice President needs to tell The View the truth about dating violence."

This is urgent, this is important. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Australia: Right to fight - Women on the front line in five years

Broadsword · 27 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WOMEN will be able to serve in any frontline combat role within five years after a historic change by the Government. Federal Defence Minister Stephen Smith said cabinet approved the change during a meeting yesterday.

"This is a change which has the strong support from the chief of the defence force," he said today.

Currently 93 per cent of Australian Defence Force (ADF) positions were open to women.

The other seven per cent excluded women "simply on the basis of sex", Mr Smith said.

These included jobs such as mine disposal divers, air force defence guards and infantry and artillery frontline positions.

These jobs make up 17 per cent of employment opportunities in the ADF.

Mr Smith said the discrimination would be removed over five years in a "careful and methodical" way.

The first implementation report would go to the Government in the first quarter of 2012.

Once women are allowed to serve in all areas, Australia would fully meet its obligations under the United Nations Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women, Mr Smith said.'

Massachusetts Sets Limits on Alimony

anthony · 27 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BOSTON—Alimony isn't forever in Massachusetts anymore.

The state abolished most lifetime spousal support Monday, joining several states where alimony payments have come under scrutiny as payers argue they are struggling in the rocky economy

Democratic Gov. Deval Patrick signed a measure that generally ends alimony when the payer reaches retirement age or when the recipient begins living with a romantic partner.

The law also establishes a formula for alimony, based on the length of the marriage. For example, alimony would generally last no more than 10½ years following a 15-year marriage.
...
The law has been changed to "reflect the fact that both parties, more often than not, are working outside the home and there are more opportunities for people, women in particular…and that people need to have laws that really do allow them to end their relationship both in terms of living together and financially at some reasonable point after divorce," said Democratic state Sen. Gale Candaras, a lead sponsor of the bill.'

Repeal MGL 209A (so-called ‘Abuse Prevention’ law) Campaign Underway

Anonymous · 28 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

The effort to repeal the draconian Massachusetts 209A law is on track after the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ordered the Mass. Attorney General’s office to allow the initiative petition supported by The Fatherhood Coalition (http://www.fatherhoodcoalition.org/) to proceed.

Under the so-called ‘domestic violence’ law many individuals are separated from their children, thrown out of their homes, forced into the court system and even incarcerated for non-violent acts and for charges without any merit. Due process rights are ignored under a law which presumes a person is guilty before any crime is committed.

The most benign actions, even unintentional ones, are considered criminal by a law destructive to normal healthy relationships within families.

The nationwide travesty of 'abuse prevention' laws began in Massachusetts in 1978.

Signature gathering began Tuesday, Sept. 27, 2011. We encourage all those who have been adversely affected by the law and all who are concerned about fair treatment of men and fathers to help collect the required 68,911 signatures from registered voters.

Financial support is also welcome and needed.

Email support-at-fatherhoodcoalition.org or call 857-350-0575 to have petition sheets delivered to you. This .pdf file of the petition to repeal MGL 209A can be printed out and used to collect signatures so long as there are no changes to the size and is printed back-to-back (head-to-head, bottom-to-bottom) and black on white paper.

Here is an instruction sheet of the do's and do-not's from the Massachusetts Sec'y of State's office.

Please spread the word through your friends, relatives and social media.

Ed. note: Please be aware that signature-gathering is valid only in Massachusetts. If you gather signatures of non-Massachusetts residents, they will not be valid.

'False' rape claims hit DSK's global mission

anthony · 28 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ALLEGING "false" sexual assault claims had hampered his efforts to right the global economy, former IMF chief Dominique Strauss-Kahn yesterday claimed immunity from prosecution.

Criminal charges were dropped last month when prosecutors lost faith in the credibility of the hotel maid alleging assault, Nafissatou Diallo, but she is pursuing her civil case for undisclosed monetary damages from Mr Strauss-Kahn, once a presidential hopeful in France.

Mr Strauss-Kahn's lawyers claim it is irrelevant that he was no longer head of the IMF when Ms Diallo filed her civil case on August 8, saying: "Mr Strauss-Kahn's absolute immunity persisted until he was able to leave the United States."

Mr Strauss-Kahn went on the attack, accusing Ms Diallo of imperilling his efforts, at the helm of the IMF, to rescue the world economy at a crucial time after the financial crisis.

"As a direct result of (the) plaintiff's false charge of sexual assault, the IMF's ability to serve its critical function in the international economy was significantly impaired at a time of worldwide financial crisis and instability."'

SAVE Alert: Outrage: Biden Blew it on The View

Matt · 28 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Vice President Biden joined the ladies of The View (ABC) yesterday, to discuss teen dating violence and sexual assault. The picture he painted of dating violence was so inaccurate and so bizarre, yes, we're outraged!

Now we need to set him straight!

According to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control, 10% of high school girls, compared to only 9% of boys, have engaged in dating violence in the previous year. So SAVE sent VP Biden a letter, asking him to address the growing problem of dating violence by teen girls:
http://www.saveservices.org/2011/09/save-sends-letter-to-vp-biden-regarding-his-upcoming-appearance-on-the-view

Unfortunately, Biden not only ignored our letter, he falsely portrayed teen dating violence as only done by boys, to girls. See the video here: http://theview.abc.go.com/ - then click on the Tues. September 27 button.

Today we're asking you to email Valerie Jarrett, director of the White House Council on Women and Girls, and then call the White House:

Valerie Jarrett: vjarrett-at-who.eop.gov
White House comment line: 1-202-456-1111

Speak up! Unload. Politely demand they set the record straight, that teenage girls are more likely than boys to abuse - and there's no excuse for turning the truth on its head.

On behalf of abused boys and abusive girls, and the families who love them, thank you!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

SAVE Press Release re Biden's 'The View' Appearance

Matt · 28 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Sept. 28, 2011 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Despite calls to address the growing epidemic of abusive teenage girls, Vice President Biden glossed over the problem during his Tuesday appearance on ABC's The View. Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is calling on the Vice President to remove the veil of silence that envelops the problem.

Surveys now show high school girls are more likely than boys to engage in physical violence with their dating partners. But VP Biden only spoke of girls as victims and never mentioned them as possible perpetrators. Host Whoopi Goldberg even asked the Vice President a direct question about the reality of dating violence, but Biden did not respond to the question:

"And will you just also remind people, remind the women that the way to get a man's attention is not to hit him? Do not hit him. (applause) Because this is something violence in itself, is something we need to teach kids is not to perpetrate on each other. No?"

Earlier this month a judge in Memphis, Tenn. ruled 17-year-old Renee Addison would stand trial as an adult following the fatal shooting of her dating partner, Sarah Gailbraith. The two were known to be in a relationship and had dated off and on for five years.

In June, 17-year-old Vanessa McGhee stabbed her boyfriend during a dispute in their Brooklyn apartment. McGhee was later charged with second-degree murder and criminal possession of a weapon.'

Woman who killed grandchild says she felt unloved

Matt · 28 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FAIRFAX, Va. (AP) — A grandmother who threw her 2-year-old granddaughter to her death from a sixth-floor walkway at Virginia's largest shopping mall told detectives in a taped confession that she felt unloved by her family and jealous of the attention her granddaughter received.

More than anything, Carmela dela Rosa told detectives, she was angry at her son-in-law James Ogdoc for taking her daughter away from her and saw killing the infant as a way to get back at him, according to the confession. The tape was played to jurors Tuesday at the woman's murder trial.

"I just saw James through her, through the baby," dela Rosa said in the hour-long videotaped confession to a Fairfax police detective. "I thought about James and I threw her."

Dela Rosa, 50, of Fairfax, Va., acknowledges that she threw her granddaughter, 2-year-old Angelyn Ogdoc, from an elevated pedestrian bridge at Tysons Corner Center last November, in the midst of the busy holiday shopping season. She has pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity, and her lawyers argue that her diagnosed depression was so severe that she could not distinguish right from wrong.

In her confession, though, dela Rosa explicitly states that what she did was wrong. "I did a terrible thing," she told the detectives. She also admits that her intent at the time was to kill Angelyn and that she hatched the plan several minutes before carrying it out.'

Australia: Female nurse banned after having affair with inmate

Minuteman · 29 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Nurse Suzanne Maree Dyason fell in love with a male prisoner at the Maryborough Correctional Centre known only as "DH" and had a sexual relationship with him between March 2006 and July 2009, the Courier Mail reports.

The Queensland Civil and Administration Tribunal (QCAT) was told Dyason tried to hide the illicit affair from her superiors and used childhood nicknames in letters and phone calls with DH to avoid detection.
...
The Nursing and Midwifery Board of Australia requested Dyason be banned for three years but Judge Kingham has ordered the ban to be reduced to 18 months and compelled Dyason to seek counselling from a psychologist who specialised in "boundary violation issues".'

Men's Rights Movement Group at Arizona State University

anthony · 29 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Site here. Excerpt:

'Feminists and society like to say we live in a Patriarchy. Because men hold more leadership positions than women. But why are all the gender concerns towards women only? None for men! NO UN panels, NO national committees, NO State organizations, NO university departments. None. All for women!

Excuse me, What "Patriarchy"???

• Men and Fathers face the harshest discrimination in family courts. [17] [18]
• Epidemic of false accusations are near half of all rape cases. False accusations on men from sexual harassment to rape to child molestation. [12] [13]
• Violence Against Women Act profiles men and demands that they be arrested in all domestic violence disputes. [11]
• 4 out of 5 Suicides are male (18 out of 23 more accurately) [10]
• Misandry and abuse and denigration of men is widespread across media, while at the same time media is extra sensitive to stay up to date with each and every feminist demand for favorable and correct portrayal of women in media. [23] [24] [25] [26] [27]
• College enrollment and gradation of males is declining and has been for decades. [5] [4] [3]
• Male fertility has been on the decline for at least a century. [8]
• No men's shelters. [10]
• Men have no reproductive rights and are often victims of paternity fraud. [15] [16]'

Mom who tried to sell baby to be set free

Matt · 30 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — A woman who tried to sell her baby boy at a Taco Bell restaurant in southwest Washington will be free from jail soon.

Under an agreement with Clark County prosecutors, 36-year-old Heidi Knowles pleaded guilty on Thursday to reckless endangerment and was sentenced to 77 days in jail by a county judge.

The Columbian reports (http://bit.ly/pYcLlp) Knowles has already served that amount of time and will be released this week.

According to court documents, prosecutors say Knowles approached a woman in the restaurant on July 14, handed her 1-year-old boy to a woman and offered to sell him for between $500 and $5,000. She declined and called 911.'

IA: Tell the New York Times that circumsicion does not prevent the spread of HIV

Matt · 30 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From an Intact America alert:

This past Monday, the New York Times published an article claiming that mass-circumcision efforts are “one of the most promising, proven methods for preventing HIV in Africa”—and this is simply not true. Study after study shows that circumcision does not prevent the spread of HIV, and in fact increases the risk, because circumcised men think they are safe, and don’t use condoms.

The most offensive part of the article, however, is this quote from Robert Bailey, an epidemiologist at the University of Illinois at Chicago who helped design Kenya’s circumcision efforts (that country’s 330,000 circumcisions so far are just a third of the government’s goal). “We’re hacking away at it every month,” Dr. Bailey said. “Those foreskins are flying.”

It seems that these doctors, who have built their careers from these mass-circumcision programs, have forgotten we’re talking about human beings with normal, functional, important body parts. “Hacking?” Really?

Unfortunately the article, which is replete with misinformation, is not accepting comments. So we’re asking you to write to the New York Times. Tell this major newspaper what you think about the science and the ethics of this article. Write your own letter, or—if you wish—you can use some of the points here:

- Nowhere in this article is it mentioned that most of the world is intact, and that the foreskin is a useful and valuable body part that most adult men do not want to give up.
- The African “studies” on circumcision have not been replicated anywhere in the developed world, because they would be considered highly unethical.
- Circumcision does not prevent the spread of HIV; the American experience proves that.
- A mass surgical campaign is a terrible use of public health resources in countries with under-developed health care systems and a lack of food and clean water
- Coercing men into giving up a natural and important body part with partial or false information is the worst kind of medical imperialism.
- The statements by Dr. Bailey reveal the cultural insensitivity and callousness of the scientists and researchers who are building their careers on this shameful campaign.
- ...or anything else you would like to say.

Ed. note: Ways to contact the NYT are found here. It seems to me the most appropriate email address to use is nytnews-at-nytimes.com or if you hope to get a letter to the editor published, information about that is here.

Mexico City considers temporary marriage licenses

Matt · 30 September 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'MEXICO CITY (WLS) - Mexico City lawmakers are proposing legislation that would allow newlyweds to apply for temporary marriage licenses, instead of making the plunge into wedded life a lifetime commitment.

The change to civil code was proposed this week and would allow couples to decide the length of the commitment, with two years as the minimum. If couples are still enjoying wedded bliss when the contract ends, then they would be able to renew the license. And if they're unhappy, the contract expires and they are both free without going through a divorce.

The legislation has proved to be controversial in Mexico, the country with the second largest Catholic population in world, after Brazil.

A vote is expected on the proposed legislation by the end of the year.'

Ex-model who killed, ate husband seeks parole

Minuteman · 1 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Nelson, who worked as a part-time model and nanny in Egypt before immigrating to the US in 1986, killed her 56-year-old husband after just one month of marriage.

She then cooked his head on a stove, skinned his torso and fried his hands in oil, at their Costa Mesa unit in central California, reports the Daily Pilot news website.

Nelson then drove garbage bags filled with body parts to ex-boyfriends, asking them to help dispose of the evidence and offering a $75,000 reward for help.

...

Nelson, who was aged in her 20s at the time, told police she was under severe stress and claimed her husband often physically and sexually abused her.'

Scotland: Definition of abuse 'should change'

anthony · 1 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No mention of women who abuse men. Excerpt:

'Mr Dempsey said the Scottish definition of domestic abuse as primarily about male abusers controlling female victims "dominates" publicity materials and training for medical staff, police officers, judges, housing workers and civil servants. As a consequence, lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgendered (LGBT) people who suffer abuse at home, as well as their children, are being marginalised, he argued.
...
The Scottish Government's definition of domestic abuse as an offence perpetrated by men against women does "serious damage" to gay and transgendered people suffering violence in the home, an academic has said.'

Ireland Bans Powerful Child-Abuse PSA for 'Baffling, Idiotic Reason'

anthony · 1 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ireland's advertising watchdog has made itself a laughingstock—except nobody's laughing—by banning an anti-child-abuse PSA that was powerful enough to get noticed worldwide. The brutal spot by Ogilvy Dublin, which Adweek covered at length here, shows a boy being beaten up while still articulating, in grown-up language, a manifesto for children's rights. After getting 13 complaints, the country's Advertising Standards Authority has banned the spot from all "Irish media" (this does not include YouTube) because it supposedly breaches gender-equality rules. "Complainants objected to the advertisement on the basis that it was unbalanced in its treatment of the subject of abuse in the home. The advertisement only depicted a male as being the aggressor, and the complainants considered this to be unbalanced," the ASA ruled, according to Adland. The stupidity of such a ruling is self-evident. It means you couldn't dramatize abuse without having both a man and a woman whaling on the kid at once—which would be weird and completely shift the focus of the ad from the abused to the abusers. The Irish Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, which produced the ad, is understandably flabbergasted and is in the ludicrous position of having to explain what should be common sense. "The video makes no reference to physical abuse being carried out exclusively by either men or women or indeed by fathers or mothers," it writes. "This advertisement does not focus on the adult; its focus is entirely on the child. Any attempt to focus on whether the adult is a male or female is clearly missing the point and purpose of the ad in the first instance." The ISPCC is appealing the ruling.'

Ed. note: Comments can be submitted to the ISPCC here.

Verizon and National Domestic Violence Hotline Launch ‘Monsters' Video

anthony · 2 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The video, two minutes and 34 seconds long, graphically describes how domestic violence affects children. The child’s voice states:

“A child who lives with domestic violence lives in darkness. …She struggles to separate her nightmares from reality because there’s very little difference. The child who lives with domestic violence isn't afraid of the dark. She’s afraid of her dad because the monster doesn't live in her closet – it’s just down the hall.”'

Canada: Education system failing boys

anthony · 2 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Based on these results one can conclude only one of three things.

Either A) the above observations are anomalies and usually the number of high achievers is typically evenly split between boys and girls, B) girls are generally more intelligent than boys and thus it is natural that they would do better at school or C) the education system is not properly structured to educate males.

The facts point to the obvious conclusion that the education system is failing to educate our boys to the same levels as our girls and has been for decades.

Why has this situation been allowed to exist for as long as it has when it is apparent that the education system is aware of it?

Why is no one talking about this obvious inequity within our society?

Even with the now published inequity in the genders in university entrance, there is still no recognition or discussion of this awful situation.

Why is it that no one cares about the boys?'

Woman downed pint of whiskey before groping male Virgin Airways attendant

anthony · 2 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A WOMAN drank more than a pint of whiskey before grabbing a male Virgin Airways steward's penis and demanding sex, a UK court heard.

Katherine Goldberg, 25, from Ealing Common in west London, was on a flight from South Africa to Heathrow last month when she drunkenly assaulted the crew member.

Ms Goldberg, a teacher, was granted bail after her lawyer applied successfully to adjourn the case to make representations in relation to the charge of sexual assault, the London Evening Standard reported.

He said, "It is a serious allegation but there are good reasons why it would be in the public interest for the Crown to deal with her by way of a caution."

Ms Goldberg is charged with one count of sexual assault and another of being drunk in an aircraft.'

Indiana woman gets probation for false rape report

anthony · 2 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'September 30, 2011 (MISHAWAKA, Ind) -- A former Goshen College student who falsely reported that she was abducted and raped has been sentenced to 18 months of probation and ordered to perform 200 hours of community service.

WSBT-TV in South Bend reports that a judge Thursday also suspended an 18-month prison sentence that Jessica De La Vega could have faced under her conviction of obstructing justice.

Prosecutors said De La Vega told her mother in January she'd been kidnapped and raped as an excuse for being late. She then told police she had been abducted and raped in a Goshen park, leading police to circulate a sketch of a suspect.'

UK: Woman teacher held over sex with schoolgirl, 15

anthony · 2 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A teacher who admitted sexually abusing a 15-year-old female pupil has been detained under the Mental Health Act.

Suzanne Harrison, 38, pleaded guilty to four sex offences which took place when she worked at a school in Colchester.

Ipswich Crown Court heard Harrison swapped numbers with her victim at the girl's 15th birthday party.

The judge ruled the former Ipswich sixth form college worker, of Wacker Field Road, Rendlesham, Suffolk, should be held in a psychiatric hospital.

Judge Peter Thompson said he had made the ruling after a "very thorough" assessment of her condition.

"This does not mean the court takes a less serious view of the offending - the victim has suffered very significantly, " he told the court.'

Judge ends probation for Debra Lafave, victim under psychiatric care

anthony · 2 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CBS/WTSP/AP) TAMPA, Fla. - A judge ruled to end middle-school teacher turned sex-offender Debra Lafave probation early during a court hearing Thursday afternoon.
...
The Tampa judge decided Thursday to end the 31-year-old former teacher's probation four years early. She had served two years of house arrest and was scheduled to remain on probation until November 2015 for having sex with a 14-year-old student.

The judge's ruling means she no longer must observe a 10 p.m. to 6 a.m. curfew, and can travel anywhere outside the area.
...
Lafave reportedly got engaged earlier this year and is now the mother of twin boys, she gave birth a month ago.

The victim is now 21. His sister said he is still getting psychiatric care, reports the station.'

Battle of the Sexes: How Men and Women View Money

anthony · 2 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sethi's survey found that 58% of men feel more confidence toward their money and finances, compared to 44% of women. Females also feel more anxiety toward finances (33%) than men (18%). This may account for why 28% of the male respondents reported to always negotiating their salary, compared to only 19% of women respondents. Men also believe that the pay of women compared to men is equal, at a rate of 47% to 18% of women. More than 80% of women said they feel the pay is less.

Men also spend more of their money on technology and electronics at a rate of 54% to 23%. Female respondents spent more on travel--43% compared to 33% of men.'

Men march in high heels to end violence

anthony · 2 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It's not a sight you see every day.

Courageous men took off their comfortable shoes and sported red high heels Saturday morning for the "Walk a Mile in Her Shoes" international men's march in Central Falls.

The march kicked off at the high school on Summer Street in an effort to show solidarity and support to end violence against women and bring an end to sexual assault, rape and gender violence.
...
One in four women will experience gender violence in her lifetime.

"This violence does not just affect women. Men are hurt and angered when women they care about are raped or abused. And the same violence that targets women also targets men because rape isn't about sex, it's about power, control and violence," said Nancy Rafi, Executive Director of the Rhode Island Crisis Assistance Center.'

Chart-topping singer arrested on stage over child support

Matt · 2 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Police say a singer known for his 1990 chart-topping love song was hauled off a Massachusetts stage and arrested on charges of owing $420,000 in unpaid child support.

Steven Bernard Hill of Las Vegas was arrested Friday night at the MassMutual Center, where he was performing on tour.

Hill performs as Stevie B and is best known for the song "Because I Love You (The Postman Song)." It reached No. 1 on the Billboard charts in late 1990.

Springfield police Sgt. John M. Delaney tells the Springfield Republican that Hill was surprised by the arrest and concerned that he might miss a weekend show in Providence, Rhode Island.

Hill is scheduled to be arraigned Monday. He couldn't be reached for comment Sunday. Police didn't know if he had an attorney.'

HPV and Male Susceptibility

Matt · 3 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More males may get throat cancer from having oral sex with women than from smoking as the result of a virus linked to the malignancy, a study suggests.

Researchers examined 271 throat-tumor samples collected over 20 years ending in 2004 and found that the percentage of oral cancer linked to the human papillomavirus, or HPV, surged to 72 percent from about 16 percent, according to a report in the Journal of Clinical Oncology. By 2020, the virus-linked throat tumors -- which mostly affected men -- will become more common than HPV-caused cervical cancer, the report found.

HPV is known for infecting genitals. The finding that it can spread to the throat and cause cancer may increase pressure on Merck & Co., the second-largest U.S. drugmaker, to conduct large-scale trials to see if its vaccine Gardasil, which wards off cervical cancer in women, also prevents HPV throat infections, said Maura Gillison, an oncologist at Ohio State University and study senior author.'

Italian jury clears American Amanda Knox of murder

Matt · 3 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Perugia, Italy (CNN) -- In a ruling read to a tension-filled courtroom, an Italian jury on Monday cleared Amanda Knox of murder and other charges, nearly four years after she was arrested on suspicion of having killed her roommate in this picturesque Italian university town.

There was an audible gasp in the courtroom as the verdict was read, then an eruption of emotion, prompting the judge to call for silence. Knox herself was nearly hysterical, according to CNN's Matthew Chance, and had to be assisted out of the courtroom by two people.

The jury evidently believed Knox's impassioned final statement to the court, delivered in a voice trembling with emotion.

"I am not what they say I am -- perverse, violent. ... I haven't murdered. I haven't raped. I haven't stolen," Knox said in the most important speech of her life. Her co-defendant, Raffaele Sollecito, was also cleared of involvement in the 2007 death of Meredith Kercher, a British exchange student and Knox's roommate in Perugia.'

Hormonal contraception ups HIV risk in women -- and men

Anonymous · 4 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I wonder if these results will be as quickly accepted as circumcision studies done in Africa. Excerpt:

'Hormonal contraception may make it easier for HIV to spread between heterosexual sex partners, according to a new study conducted in Africa.

Women in the study who used hormonal contraception had double the risk of acquiring HIV or transmitting it to their male partners as those who did not use hormonal contraception.

While hormonal conception includes both oral contraception and injectable forms of birth control, the findings were most pronounced for women using injectables, like Depo-Provera, the study said.'

The Husband-Killing Syndicates: Misandry in Action

Anonymous · 4 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

“Husband Poisoning By Wholesale,” “Women Formed Club To Kill Husbands,” “Exterminating Husbands,” “A New Business; Husband Poisoning On A Scale of a Commercial Enterprise,” “How Wives Gained Power by Mass-Murder of Husbands.” Such newspaper headlines as these popped up with alarming regularity in American newspapers from the 1880s to the end of the 1930s. With the exception for the story of the notorious “Arsenic Incorporated” case of 1939 in Philadelphia – with its gruesome 200-plus body count – all these sensational reports were of European husband-killing covens.

Apart from a few of the more than twenty cases now rediscovered and presented to the public in The Unknown History of Misandry, these crimes are completely lost to the official historical record (there is no taxpayer-funded army of university researchers working tirelessly to dig up the truth about misandry).

If you want to understand today’s misandry, you need to get to know the newly rediscovered history of past -- which the mainstream historians have succeeded in erasing from the public memory. These amazing stories are now available online at “The Husband-Killing Syndicates”.

They offer indispensable insight into the mind of the predatory misandrist. Just another reminder that HISTORY MATTERS!

SAVE: Ground-Breaking Surveys: 10% of Persons Are Falsely Accused

Matt · 4 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

False allegations of abuse harm the innocent, rob true victims of needed services, and undermine the workings of justice. In May, SAVE conducted the first nationwide phone survey about this vexing problem, with 11% of respondents saying they had been falsely accused of domestic violence, child abuse or sexual assault.

To confirm the numbers, last month we repeated the survey, again calling over 10,000 persons on their landline phones. With both surveys combined; we can now report that about one in 10 persons have been falsely accused of abuse.

Other highlights from our surveys:

- One in six of the respondents personally knew someone who has been falsely accused of abuse
- About twice as many persons have been falsely accused of child abuse as domestic violence or sexual abuse
- Three-quarters of the falsely accused persons were male
- Nearly seven in 10 of the accusers were female
- In over a quarter of the cases, the accusation was made as part of a child custody dispute

For more details, see: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/survey

To bring an end to false accusations of abuse, you can join SAVE's Campaign 2012. SAVE provides the flyers and questions for candidates to use at townhalls and other events to bring false allegations and other DV reforms into the political arena: http://www.saveservices.org/campaign-2012.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

On Partner Abuse, President Obama Flubs his Facts

Matt · 4 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Oct. 4, 2011 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is calling on President Obama to correct false information in the Domestic Violence Proclamation he issued Monday. At a time when victims are demanding accuracy and accountability, the declaration features misleading statements and inaccurate facts, according to SAVE.

The presidential proclamation, issued for Domestic Violence Awareness Month, makes the claim that "One in four women and one in 13 men will experience domestic violence in their lifetime." But multiple studies show that men and women abuse each other at similar rates.

The Center for Disease Control's Youth Risk Behavior Surveillance Survey reveals males are being victimized at a higher rate than females: 10 percent of teenage males versus 9 percent of teenage females report dating violence. In the American Journal of Public Health, a second CDC study of young adults revealed a dramatic gap for one-way violence: in 71 percent of cases, females were the aggressors.'

Grandmother Gives Worst 'Reason' for Tossing 2-Year-Old Over Mall Balcony

anthony · 5 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Relationships between women are often fraught with drama and pain, especially the ones between mothers and daughters. But no one's story is as awful as Mary Kathlyn Ogdoc's. The young mom lost her 2-year-old daughter last year after her own mother tossed her from a mall skywalk in Virginia.

Apparently, this grandmother had a reason for murdering her toddler granddaughter in such a cruel and horrific way. She hated her son-in-law who impregnated her daughter out of wedlock when she was 19. Oh and this: She felt the little girl came between her and her daughter.

I am going out on a limb to say what actually came between her and her daughter is the fact that she is a RAGING PSYCHO. It's unconscionable that she could even think that is a good "reason" to murder a child. And the worst part is her defense team is trying to prove she is insane.'

Oklahoma mother, 37, charged with 'having sex' with boy, 13

anthony · 5 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Oklahoma nurse arrested on charges of having sex with a 13-year-old boy is back behind bars - for slipping him a love note wrapped in a burrito.

"Hey Babe, I love you forever," Amy Blose, 37, penned to the schoolchild before asking his 15-year-old female friend to deliver it, RadarOnline reported.

In April, Blose was charged with three counts of rape, three counts of forcible oral sodomy, one count of lewd or indecent acts to a child under 16 and one count of performing lewd acts in the presence of a child under 16.'

CNN: Why men are in trouble

mens_issues · 5 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

The latest misandrist "man up" article on CNN, this time by William Bennett. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- For the first time in history, women are better educated, more ambitious and arguably more successful than men.

Now, society has rightly celebrated the ascension of one sex. We said, "You go girl," and they went. We celebrate the ascension of women but what will we do about what appears to be the very real decline of the other sex?

The data does not bode well for men. In 1970, men earned 60% of all college degrees. In 1980, the figure fell to 50%, by 2006 it was 43%. Women now surpass men in college degrees by almost three to two. Women's earnings grew 44% in real dollars from 1970 to 2007, compared with 6% growth for men.
...

The warning signs for men stretch far beyond their wallets. Men are more distant from a family or their children then they have ever been. The out-of-wedlock birthrate is more than 40% in America. In 1960, only 11% of children in the U.S. lived apart from their fathers. In 2010, that share had risen to 27%. Men are also less religious than ever before. According to Gallup polling, 39% of men reported attending church regularly in 2010, compared to 47% of women.

If you don't believe the numbers, just ask young women about men today. You will find them talking about prolonged adolescence and men who refuse to grow up. I've heard too many young women asking, "Where are the decent single men?" There is a maturity deficit among men out there, and men are falling behind.
...
The Founding Fathers believed, and the evidence still shows, that industriousness, marriage and religion are a very important basis for male empowerment and achievement. We may need to say to a number of our twenty-something men, "Get off the video games five hours a day, get yourself together, get a challenging job and get married." It's time for men to man up.'

SAVE: Trash-Talk: Call on Rep. Gwen Moore to Cancel Gender-Biased Briefing

Matt · 6 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

A Congressional Briefing on the Effects of Domestic Violence on Children has been scheduled for this coming Wednesday, Oct. 12 in Washington DC. The event is hosted by Makers of Memories and the National Coalition Against Domestic Violence (NCADV).

As you can see to the side, the image they chose to promote the briefing shows a man, presumably a father, yelling at a small girl who is cowering in the corner. And no surprise, the websites of Makers of Memories and the NCADV are brimming with gender-biased information.

SAVE supports evidence-based efforts to address young victims of family violence. These are the facts that need to be highlighted:

1. Women are at least as likely as men to engage in intimate partner violence. One national survey found mothers are twice as likely as fathers to engage in severe marital violence. [i]

2. Most child abuse is committed by mothers. According to the DHHS, "approximately one-half (53.8%) of child abuse and neglect perpetrators were women and more than 40 percent (44.4%) were men." [ii]

3. Partner-abusing mothers are equally likely to abuse their children as partner-abusing fathers. [iii]

Unfortunately, the Makers of Memories website is filled with ugly, misleading statements, including this inflammatory claim: "Each night 1 million children go to bed to the sounds of their mother being beaten." The NCADV website is also biased, making the nonsense claim that "There is not a typical woman who will be battered - the risk factor is being born female."

When groups put that kind of stuff on their websites, you know that any Briefing they host is likely to cherry-pick the research and stereotype males as abusers.

Today we'd like you to contact Rep. Gwen Moore of Wisconsin. Tell her the Briefing hosts have a track record of providing inaccurate and unbalanced information, and she needs to cancel the briefing until she identifies legitimate experts to testify. Here's the contact information:

Email Rep. Moore's staffer: steffany.stern-at-mail.house.gov
Telephone: 202-225-4572

Children who experience domestic violence need programs based on accurate and truthful statistics, not gender-biased trash-talk. Please contact Rep. Moore today.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

P.S. Hand-out available for download here.

References:

[i] Renee McDonald et al. Estimating the number of American children living in partner-violent families. J Family PsychologyVol. 20, No. 1, 2006. Table 1.

[ii] http://faq.acf.hhs.gov/app/answers/detail/a_id/70

[iii] Straus M, Smith C. Family patterns and child abuse. In Straus M and Gelles R (eds.): Physical Violence in American Families: Risk Factors and Adaptations to Violence in 8,145 Families. New Brunswick, NJ: Transaction Publishers,1990, Table 14.2
http://books.google.com/books?id=4_3nLMBoiTwC&pg=PA245&lpg=PA245&dq=family+patterns+and+child+abuse+straus&source=web&ots=zJ_zyfprK2&sig=e5ll54PUzZh_fraiLG4ZFu0sgVc#PPA253,M1

F&F: Former Education Secretary Bennett Needs Education on Men

Matt · 6 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former Secretary of Education William Bennett has taken time out from his busy day to notice men, and he doesn't like what he sees. Here's his article (CNN, 10/4/11).

It's not a good piece for a former Secretary of Education. That's because it's short on facts and logic, and does its best to contradict itself. In short, if Bennett had turned this in as a composition exercise in, say, 10th grade, I'd give him a D.

The only reason his grade isn't lower is that he does get some facts right. He notices that men's status in society has declined significantly since the 50s, 60s and 70s.

Woman charged with threatening witness in domestic violence case

anthony · 6 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NASHUA – A woman violated bail by contacting her alleged victim in a domestic assault case, police say.

Katrina Russell, 28, of 108½ Ash St., tried to induce the male victim not to cooperate in upcoming court proceedings against her, police said. Russell also allegedly threatened to harm the victim if he contacted police.

Russell was arrested Tuesday in Springfield, Vt., on a warrant from Nashua police. She was held at the Southern State Correctional Facility until police officers from Nashua traveled to Vermont to take her into custody, police said.'

If Men Are In Trouble, So Are Women

anthony · 6 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For the first time in history, wrote author and former U.S. Secretary of Education William J. Bennett on CNN.com, women are better educated, more ambitious, and arguably more successful than men.

“Society has rightly celebrated the ascension of one sex,” he writes in Why Men Are In Trouble. “We said, ‘You go girl,’ and they went.”

...

A few weeks ago, I spoke at The University of Tennessee in Chattanooga, and I can confirm that many of the young women on campus are confused about men: their mixed signals, their lack of commitment to a relationship, the dearth of maturity and the inability to communicate. But if you asked the women what they wanted, they didn’t seem to quite know either.

Many didn’t have an idea what they wanted to do after college. Asked if they wanted a committed relationship, many said no. Were they deluding themselves? I don’t think so. I think they genuinely didn’t want to be tied down in their early 20s, and preferred to keep their options open to travel, go to graduate school, or switch cities.

...

But men have their genuine gripes and concerns too. “Yeah, marriage,” wrote one man on CNN. “I want to give up everything to be constantly nagged… Looking forward to a woman who completely loses interest in sex after we take the vows. Married men are supposed to put their wife and children first, slave away at work and give up any real passion they once had. Sounds like a worthwhile life on earth to me!”

What is the solution to all of this? Does it even need a solution? I won’t pretend I have the answer. I just know that if men are in trouble, then women—at least if they want to build a life with a man—are in trouble too.'

Medical group to say men don't need prostate cancer screenings, source says

anthony · 6 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- The U.S. Preventive Services Task Force, the group that told women in their 40s that they don't need mammograms, will soon recommend that men not get screened for prostate cancer, according to a source privy to the task force deliberations.

The task force is set to recommend a "D" rating for prostate specific antigen, or PSA, testing. Such a rating means "there is moderate or high certainty that the service has no net benefit or that the harms outweigh the benefits," according to the group's website. The task force is set to propose this recommendation Tuesday, and then allow for a comment period before issuing a final recommendation.

According to a draft copy of a report scheduled to be released Monday, a review of studies shows screening with the PSA blood test results in "small or no reduction" in prostate cancer deaths.'

Domestic Violence Regional Roundtable Event: Engaging Men and Boys in Preventing Violence

Minuteman · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From an Office on Womens Health mailing list email.

'Domestic Violence Regional Roundtable Event: Engaging Men and Boys in Preventing Violence

Date: October 26, 2011
Time: 9:30 to 11:30 a.m.

Location: Thomas P. O'Neill Federal Building, 10 Causeway Street, First Floor O'Neill Auditorium, Boston, MA 02222

Purpose: To engage members of the public; community and faith-based organizations; students; educators; domestic violence advocates; housing officials; homeless advocates; government leaders; and health care professionals on the topic of engaging men and boys in preventing violence. The event is open to everyone and free of charge.

Sponsored by

* U.S. Department of Education
* U.S. Department of Health and Human Services
* U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development

Agenda:

* 9 to 9:30 a.m.—Registration, networking
* 9:30 to 9:40 a.m.— Brief welcome from Federal agencies
* 9:40 to 9:50 a.m.—Massachusetts First Lady Diane Patrick (invited)
* 9:50 to 11:30 a.m.— Panel presentation with audience discussion; Q&A

Panelists:

* Craig Norberg-Bohm, Men's Initiative for Jane Doe, Inc. Youth Peer leader from Start Strong Initiative, Boston Public Health Commission
* Lisa Burke, Nurse Practitioner, Site Director, Greater Lawrence Family Health Center at Lawrence High School, Lawrence, MA to talk about the community impact of domestic violence

To register for this event go to http://www.hud.gov/emarc/index.cfm?fuseaction=emar.registerEvent&eventId=1060&update=N

For more information on this forum contact: Rhonda Siciliano by email at Rhonda.m.siciliano@hud.gov

Please note: Since this event is being held in a Federal building attendees will be required to pass through security prior to entering.

Stay connected with us!

* WomensHealth.gov
* GirlsHealth.gov
* BestBonesForever.gov
* CouldIHaveLupus.gov'

No prostate test: 'Throwing baby out with bath water'

anthony · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"[The] decision of no confidence on the PSA test by the U.S. government condemns tens of thousands of men to die this year and every year going forward if families are to believe the out-of-date evidence presented by the USPSTF," said Skip Lockwood, chief executive of ZERO, a group devoted to ending prostate cancer.

"A decision on how best to test and treat for prostate cancer must be made between a man and his doctor. This decision is coming from a panel that doesn't even include a urologist or medical oncologist."

Dr. Scott Eggener, an expert in prostate cancer from the University of Chicago, said the new recommendations, if adopted, would discourage men from getting prostate cancer screening.

Eggener said the move "is a classic example of 'throwing the baby out with the bath water.' A more sensible approach is to use all of our currently available tools to intelligently determine which patients are most likely to benefit from screening and treatment."'

Australia: Cheating wife guilty of attempted murder of husband

Minuteman · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A cheating Melbourne wife who committed the ultimate betrayal by plotting to have her lover kill her millionaire husband on his birthday, has been found guilty of attempted murder.

Vicky Soteriou, 44, had her lover Ari Dimitrakis stab her husband Chris as she walked arm-in-arm with him after celebrating his 44th birthday at a Melbourne restaurant in January last year.

Chris Soteriou suffered life threatening injuries.

Until that night Mr Soteriou believed he had the perfect marriage and the perfect life.

He woke from a coma to be told his wife had been cheating on him and was told a few days later that she had plotted to kill him.

After nearly two years of "hell" Mr Soteriou finally saw justice on Friday.

He yelled out "yes" and wept as a Victorian Supreme Court jury found his wife guilty of attempting to murder him.'

Women lead the way in embezzlement cases

anthony · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men commit more crime than women but there's one category where women hold the distinction – embezzlement.

In a national trend that is playing out in series of Sonoma County cases, women are more often arrested on charges of stealing from employers, churches or community organizations.

Their dominance is likely a result of the positions they occupy such as bookkeepers and bank tellers that allow greater access to financial records, checking accounts and cash, experts say.

And a perception that women are more trustworthy than men may lead to even more opportunity to misappropriate funds, said Richard Scott, a Santa Rosa lawyer specializing in embezzlement defense.'

Wife Who Fired 11 Shots Is Acquitted of Murder

Matt · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'She had always admitted to killing her husband, using two guns to fire 11 bullets inside the couple's home in Queens. But she insisted she had no choice: if she had not shot him, he would have surely killed her first.

On Thursday, a jury in State Supreme Court in Queens agreed, clearing the woman, Barbara Sheehan, of second-degree murder charges in a case that had been viewed as a strenuous test of a battered-woman defense. Her son and daughter, the children of her slain husband, wept with joy.

During the trial, the jury heard how Ms. Sheehan had been relentlessly abused by her husband, Raymond Sheehan, a former police sergeant, during their 24 years of marriage. But the critical question at trial was whether Ms. Sheehan was in imminent danger when she killed her husband; New York State's self-defense law justifies the use of lethal force when a threat to a person's life is deemed immediate.

...

Ms. Sheehan testified that the couple had a fierce argument the day before, and she had decided to leave, carrying one of her husband's guns for protection. When her husband saw her, she said, he reached for a gun on the bathroom vanity and aimed it at her.

Ms. Sheehan and her children burst into tears when the verdict was announced, and her lawyer, Michael G. Dowd, put his arms around her. Her supporters, adorned in purple in solidarity with victims of domestic violence, began cheering.

...

Nonetheless, the jury of nine women and three men unexpectedly reached a consensus on Thursday, in their third day of deliberations. Ms. Sheehan was acquitted of murder and of a gun possession charge, but was found guilty of a second gun possession charge, which carries a sentence of 3 1/2 to 15 years. The judge ordered her to return to court on Wednesday, when she will be remanded into custody. Her sentencing will follow.

...

Legal experts said the verdict was a vindication for the so-called battered-woman defense. Under this strategy the battered woman chronicles her abuse in intimate and graphic detail with the aim of convincing the jury that she reasonably feared for her life based on her abuser's past behavior.

"The case is a good marker of the willingness of jurors to realize that a history of abuse can inform a woman's sense of the need to act in self-defense," said Holly Maguigan, a law professor at New York University.'

From death row to freedom: Woman gets second chance

anthony · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NASHVILLE, Tenn. — A Memphis woman who spent 26 years on death row and came within two months of being executed for hiring a stranger to kill her husband was freed Friday from a Tennessee prison.

Gaile Owens, 58, was greeted by a small group of supporters outside Tennessee's Prison for Women. Owens was all smiles as she pushed a yellow laundry cart containing her belongings past the prison's razor-wire fence to freedom.

Owens was sentenced to die in 1985, but her death sentence was commuted to life in prison last year and she won parole last week.
...
Supporters had urged her release, claiming she was a battered wife who didn't use that defense because she didn't want her young sons to know about the physical and sexual abuse.
...
Sidney Porterfield, the man she was accused of hiring to kill her husband with a tire iron, was also sentenced to death. He is still on death row.'

Why Does America Have So Many 'Peter Pan' Men?

anthony · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Working in an office full of women, many of whom are young, single gals, I hear all the time, “Where are all the good men out there?” Even in this post-feminist age of asserting independence from men and having both a career and a family, women still want their prince and these days, he can be really tough to find.

Bill Bennett, who used to work for President George H. W. Bush and is now at the Claremont Institute, just came out with a new book called, "The Book of Man: Readings on the Path to Manhood," and it could not have been released at a better time.
...

These men should be studying in college, getting a job, and contributing to society through the workforce and family. How in the world do they have time to play video games for hours? The answer is that they just don’t ever grow up.

But are women contributing to the demise of the man? Feminism has been detrimental to the identity of the American male. Men have been rebuked if they pull out a chair or open a door for a woman. If they offer to pay for dinner (which they should), their date may be offended and demand to split the check because she can pay her own way. -- Ladies, it’s not such a bad thing to be treated to dinner unless that meal comes with sexual expectations, which is another column.'

Barbara Sheehan and the Battered Women's Defense: When Killing is Legal

anthony · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Michael Dowd, Sheehan's lawyer, has made a career of defending women who kill their tormentors. In a 1991 paper discussing the battered women's defense, he wrote about the difficulties of surmounting the skepticism that women in such cases face.

"The denial of the equality of women in cultures which perceive such treatment as both acceptable and lawful is essential to the existence of domestic violence," Dowd wrote. "This denial is the cornerstone of men's violence against women and ultimately operates to deny battered women a fair trial when they are successful in fighting back against their abusers."

...

It is not easy for battered women to obtain such verdicts. The fact that the defendant remained in the relationship, rather than fleeing or seeking help, can work against her. Prosecutors will often ask whether the defendant reported the abuse or told anybody.'

An Abused Wife? Or an Executioner?

anthony · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The murder trial of Barbara Sheehan, the Queens school secretary who shot her husband with 11 bullets, often bears the hallmarks of a dysfunctional wake.

...

Jacquelyn C. Campbell, an expert witness on domestic violence from Johns Hopkins University, likened an abused woman to a dog who receives a shock every time it tries to leave a cage, eventually remaining frozen in place, even when the cage door is left opened.

...

But the Queens prosecutor, Debra Pomodore, attacked the syndrome as little more than “pseudoscience” embraced by the defendant out of desperation to stay out of prison. Moreover, Ms. Pomodore, an assistant district attorney, argued, being abused was not an excuse for an open season on killing men; of the nearly four million women abused each year by their husbands in the United States, only 500 to 600 killed them, she said.

...

Battered women’s syndrome became so widely accepted as a legal defense in the early 1990s that a number of states, notably Ohio and Maryland, granted clemency to some women imprisoned for assaulting or killing their mates.'

Fiji: 'Child abuse on the rise' -- and men are warned (exclusively) to stop it

anthony · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE Fiji Women's Crisis Centre is concerned at the increasing rate of child abuse cases in the west.

According to centre officials, a total of 17 incidents have been recorded so far this year compared to 11 registered at the end of last year.

Centre co-ordinator Shamima Ali urged members of the public, especially men, to be responsible and to respect children.

"Any child who is being abused sexually or otherwise is required to contact the centre or the police," Ms Ali said.

"People should support women and children who are in this situation. And men, please, change your abusive behaviour and treat women and girls as equal human beings and respect them."'

Domestic violence strikes men; woman works in memory of slain brother

anthony · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women are not the only victims of domestic violence.

Lisa Moore knows this from personal, painful experience.

Her brother, 45-year-old Randy Ferguson, was shot to death by his wife five years ago, bringing a terrible end to years of constant verbal and emotional abuse.

"I watched my brother suffer in shame for years," Moore said. "It was hard for me. I introduced my brother to her. They seemed to have it all together in the beginning, but I quickly learned I had made the biggest mistake of my life. ... She was controlling, manipulative and jealous."

And violent.

Although physically half her husband's imposing size, Angela Ferguson's relentless harassment psychologically and emotionally reduced the man to nothing, Moore recalled. Beaten down, his self-esteem crushed, he watched all his hopes for salvaging his marriage crash in dust, smoke and ruins.

It all ended in 2006 when the enraged woman shot Randy twice in the head at point-blank range at their South Hill home. The wife was later convicted and is serving 26 1/2 years in prison for murder.'

Mail: Why do today's soppy men act like toddlers who need to be mollycoddled?

mens_issues · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Sheesh, this demeaning misandrist garbage never stops. First William Bennett, then this piece of garbage from the Daily Mail Online. Excerpt:

'Like the original Madonna and child, the young woman on the Tube has her beloved draped around her, his head nestling on her shoulder.

As he snoozes, she texts idly with one hand, while the other absent-mindedly strokes his arm, soothingly, maternally. But this is no serene scene of mother and son — this is a couple. A couple of adults.

If you are forced to use public transport, you see them all the time. Soppy young blokes in skinny jeans, hair artfully arranged to mimic a guinea pig in a hurricane, being mollycoddled by a domineering, post-Spice Girls vixen who, if figures released last week are correct, also earns more than him.
...
No one's saying everyone should conform to a gender stereotype, or that men should be 'dissing' their women like some caricature of male aggression.

But neither should masculinity be regarded as a dirty word.

Isn't it time to man up, boys?'

Charged with filing false rape claim, Memphis woman waives preliminary hearing

anthony · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who police say filed a false attempted rape claim against a Bartlett man waived her preliminary hearing this morning and was held for the action of the Shelby County grand jury.

Angela Poindexter's bond was set at $25,000 — almost equal to the $30,000 bond under which Maher Garada, the man she accused of trying to assault her, was held for six days.

Poindexter, of Memphis, has been in custody since she acknowledged Tuesday that her claim about Garada, 50, ripping her clothes and trying to assault her was false

...

In court this morning, prosecutor David Lakin sought the same $30,000 bond for Poindexter, saying it was only fair since Garada was held on that amount.

Municipal Judge Freeman Marr noted that bonds were not set as punishment, but as a way to assure the defendant would return to court.'

Call for men accused of rape to be anonymous

anthony · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Men accused of rape should have their identities kept secret, according to a leading lawyer in Jersey.

Currently the victim of any sexual crime is kept anonymous, but the identity of the accused is revealed.

This has led to cases nationally and locally where men who were later proved innocent in court were victimised by members of the public.

The alleged victim's identity is protected by law, mainly so that the victim feels confident in giving evidence.

But if it is a false allegation, labelling an innocent man a rapist can have a detrimental effect on his life.

Hazel Jury, from Victim Support, explained: "We'd like to make it as easy as possible for people to come forward with that allegation, but obviously on the other hand if it proves to be a false allegation - and that does happen from time to time - that in itself is very unjust and can have a devastating effect on that person's life, anyone who's been accused of anything that can be unjust and unfair it will resonate with them."'

Man Falsely Accused of Attempted Rape Says Life Is Ruined

anthony · 7 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'FAST FACTS:
A Bartlett man is free after being falsely accused of attempted rape
Police say the victim admitted that she made up the story
Maher Garada says his business in Bartlett is now suffering

(Memphis 10/6/2011)-A Bartlett man says his reputation has been ruined and life destroyed by woman who falsely accused him of a crime.

Maher Garada was arrested last week and charged with attempted rape.

He was released from jail several days later after police discovered Angela Poindexter, made up the entire story.

But Garada says the damage has already been done.'

Lott: Invisible Men

anthony · 8 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Wouldn't having female advocacy groups and no equivalent for men be a Title IX violation? Excerpt:

'Female Dartmouth students have access to more support than their male peers. Female advocacy groups at Dartmouth include Women in Business, the Society of Women's Engineers, Women in Leadership and the Women in Science Program, which provides faculty mentors and paid internships to freshmen women. Link Up pairs first-year women with senior mentors. It's unfair that men do not have similar opportunities for mentoring or support.

As hard as it may be to believe in light of the historical dominance of males, in many ways modern men are struggling a lot more than their female counterparts. Indeed, men aged 20 to 24 years old commit suicide 10 times as often as women of the same age. Men die younger than women and account for the clear majority of homeless adults. From 1995 to 2002, male college students were twice as likely as female students to be victims of violent crime. Yet, while the College devotes two weeks of every year to V-Time — a programming extension of the global V-Day movement to end violence against women — no campaign exists to reduce violence in men's lives.
...

Men should be able to form advocacy groups without automatically being subject to unfavorable suspicions. Although an all-male "Proud to be a Man" dinner would surely garner a flurry of accusations, Dartmouth hosts an annual all-female "Proud to be a Woman" dinner.
...
While there's nothing wrong with support groups or peer mentoring, the College may be going too far when it provides paid WISP internships to help women become more confident in male-dominated fields. If feminists really want to move away from traditional gender roles, they should be up in arms about women being viewed as needy and deserving of lots of special treatment.

Although women in this country face great challenges, they are in many ways doing better than men. Hopefully when people realize how very far we have come from the patriarchal societies of the past, they will accept that the problems of men deserve equal attention.'

Malecare.org: PSA testing is at risk

Matt · 9 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

The United States Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF) has prepared a draft recommendation against prostate-specific antigen (PSA)-based screening for prostate cancer. While not binding, primary care doctors usually follow USPTF guideline. Insurance companies have already begun discussions about ceasing psa test coverage.

The psa test has limitations, as well as benefits. This is no doubt that we need a better test, and we need treatments that don't put men at risk for impotence and incontinence. But, psa testing is what we have, today, in 2011and, likely, all that we will have for next few years.

I have been quoted in the N Y Times and other outlets about this. And, Malecare will be collaborating with our brother prostate cancer organizations to create an appropriate response from our community. But, we need to know what you think!

Please tell us how PSA testing affected your life. Go to http://psaandme.org/ and post a few sentences or paragraphs. You can post your thoughts with your name or anonymously. Without your voice, we are nothing.

Darryl Mitteldorf, LCSW
Executive Director, Malecare - Men fighting cancer, together.
http://www.malecare.org/
darryl-at-malecare.org

Misguided feminism trumps prep academy

anthony · 9 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here.

'Feminists are protesting the sexual discrimination of a male-only school which was proposed because males are failing so frequently in our female-oriented school system.

Did anyone hear feminists protest the sexual discrimination when a Violence Against Women Act was passed by the federal government, even though men experience at least one and a half times as many crimes of violence as women do? Whoops, I forgot that it was National Organization for Women that led the push to create this biased legislation.

And where were the feminists' objections to the sexual discrimination resulting from the state and federal Women's Health Initiatives to foster women's health. No such Initiatives are available for men, even though on average men die over five years younger than women do, are affected by most major diseases five years earlier than women are, and commit suicide about four times as often as women do, to name a few of men's health disadvantages.

Why are feminists so quiet about these serious discriminations against men? Have feminists given up on advocating for equality between men and women, or does equality just mean maximizing women's advantages?'

National Let Your Boy Be a Girl Day

anthony · 9 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let's have a new holiday -- National Let Your Boy Be a Girl Day -- that lets boys be, well, girls for a day. That's right. I said it out loud. In a national forum. Online, where it will NEVER die.

Because every other day of the year they have to make sure they are NOT girls. Because if a boy acts like a girl the national press gets involved, the jihadists that weaponize their sons will crush us, and the rate of the sun's gradual extinction will speed up exponentially.

Of course, girls get to act like boys everyday, so they don't need a holiday. A girl's imagination and life would be a pretty barren place if she didn't learn from an early age how to empathize with being a boy. For instance, girls get to:
...

- Cross-dress everyday
- Grow their hair as long or as short as they want and decorate it
- Indulge in imaginative cross-gendered play. Girls love male superheroes, idolize boy book protagonists, and on Halloween can buy boy stuff from the most popular catalogs, in case they want to be just regular firefighters and not sexy firefighters.

CDC executive arrested for child molestation, bestiality

Matt · 11 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Just a lovely pair, these two. Excerpt:

'A Centers for Disease Control and Prevention official was arrested Sunday and charged with two counts of child molestation and bestiality for sexual acts involving a 6-year-old boy.

According to a DeKalb County criminal warrant obtained Sunday, Kimberly Quinlan Lindsey's boyfriend, Thomas Westerman, was also arrested on two counts of child molestation. Westerman works for the CDC as a night watchman, his LinkedIn profile states. The pair, who live together in Decatur, surrendered to authorities Sunday afternoon, said DeKalb police spokeswoman Pamela Kunz.

Lindsey, 44, serves as the deputy director for the Laboratory Science Policy and Practice Program Office at the CDC, according to her biography on the agency's website. The Emory University graduate, who's been with the CDC since 1999, was formerly a senior health scientist responsible for overseeing a $1.5 billion fiscal allocation process for terrorism preparedness.

A medical professional alerted police about the child molestation allegation on Aug. 24, Kunz said. The warrant cites two incidents -- the first in Jan. 2010 and the latest on Aug. 22.'

Petition For A Men's Section At The Huffington Post

Anonymous · 11 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

The Huffington Post is an extensive online news site which contains sections for top stories, political news, sports, technology, entertainment and other common categories. There is also a section just for women, as well as for parents, divorcees, latinos, blacks, GLBTs... but, noticeably absent, there's no section for men. The purpose of this petition is to gather signatures in support of adding a men's section to the Huffington Post, which like the other specialized sections will offer news and articles written largely by members of it's target audience (namely: men) for that same audience. Once a reasonable number of signatures have been gathered, this petition will be presented to the editors of the AOL/Huffpo. The creator of this petition would like to further state that the focus of the proposed men's section should be substantial, relevant and informative content on important issues such as paternity, men's rights and issues, legal and political content relevant to men, and so on... not a vapid collection of articles about "babes, beer and gadgets".

SAVE: Domestic Violence Doesn't Discriminate

anthony · 11 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

Compliments of Terri Stoddard via Wendy McElroy's Face Book page.

Man Stabbed In Scrotum With Hypodermic Needle

Matt · 11 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'In the month's most wince-producing assault, a Kansas man was stabbed in the scrotum with a hypodermic needle, which broke off inside the 39-year-old victim's body.

According to a Wichita Police Department report, the victim told cops that the stabbing occurred during an argument with the needle wielder. Cops believe that the attacker is a female acquaintance--or girlfriend--of the man with the punctured scrotum.

Investigators reported that the victim, who was not cooperative, was admitted to St. Francis Hospital for surgery. A CAT scan "showed part of needle broke off inside scrotum," the report noted.

Police have made no arrests in connection with last Wednesday's stabbing, which has been classified as aggravated assault, a felony.'

'Leave the sexist card out of the Scott Brown race, please'

anthony · 11 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During last week's Democratic debate, when questioned how she put herself through school, Senate hopeful Elizabeth Warren responded: "I didn't take my clothes off" (referring, of course, to Scott Brown's salacious 1982 Cosmopolitan pictorial, the proceeds of which apparently helped him pay for his education at Tufts University). Everyone laughed and all was merry. A couple days later, when asked during an interview by a WZLX disc jockey for a response to Warren's jab, Brown responded: "Thank God." Cue the insanity.

Of course, we all know that he meant the latter, which is why a bunch of women (and men, too, although let's face it: more women) out there have their panties in a bunch. That sexist pig! Or, in the words of Terry O'Neill, president of National Organization for Women, as told to Politico: "This is the kind of sexist misogynistic attack that we have very sadly come to expect from politicians whenever there is a strong woman who is capable and really dedicated to the betterment of all the people."
...
Why do women need to be treated like such delicate flowers, anyway? If the fairer sex can dish it out, shouldn't we be able to take it? Women have scrutinized and made fun of Governor Chris Christie's weight, former Senator and all-around deuche John Edwards' hair, and Senator John Kerry's (alleged) Botox treatments, to name a few, yet we are incapable of handling a little joke about not wanting to see a 62-year-old woman naked? Frankly, who would?'

Walmart Associates and Feminist Groups to announce partnership to create better working conditions for women

anthony · 11 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Oct 04, 2011 (BUSINESS WIRE) -- On Wednesday at 10:00 AM national groups that advocate for women will join Walmart Associates to announce a partnership to call on Walmart to be a better employer for women. Walmart Associates, with representatives from the National Organization for Women (NOW), National Partnership for Women and Families, Family Values at Work will discuss how they plan to challenge Walmart to become a place of opportunity for women. Several other prominent national groups will also join in this partnership.

"Walmart Associates across the county are coming together through the Organization United for Respect at Walmart to improve work conditions and gain more respect on the job," said Jackie Goebel, a Walmart Associate from Kenosha, Wisconsin and a member of the Organization United for Respect at Walmart. "I'm excited that such strong groups are joining with us. This kind of support will help us hold Walmart accountable for the ways its policies affect women."'

'Scared' Boys Refuse to Play Teen Girl in High School Football Game

anthony · 11 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You'd think earning a spot as the first and only girl on your high school's football team would be the hard part. But Mina Johnson just can't catch a break. She sat out the Southampton Academy game last week because the boys from Northeast Academy refused to play against a girl.

That's right. The boys at Northeast are a bunch of backward-acting jerks who are afraid to face off against a girl. But can we talk for a minute about the actions of the Southampton Academy team? They weren't acting like one when they let Mina sit the bench and trotted out on the gridiron, that's for sure.
...
The story goes that Northeast threatened to forfeit if they had to play against Mina. So Mina said she'd sit out. The coach said she "deserved" to play and cited her work ethic and her success in past games, including sacking an opposing quarterback four times. But that's it. The Southampton boys played anyway, albeit with pink socks as a nod to Breast Cancer Awareness and her (which sounds like an afterthought if there ever was one). No one said, "You know what, screw this! If they want to forfeit, they can forfeit!"'

F&F: Obama Misstates Facts on Domestic Violence in New DV Awareness Month Proclamation

Matt · 12 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In President Obama's new proclamation "National Domestic Violence Awareness Month, 2011" he misstates several key facts on men, women, and domestic violence. Harvard-trained public health specialist Ned Holstein, MD, MS explains:

> "Obama tells us that 'One in four women and one in thirteen men will experience domestic violence in their lifetime.' In reality, over 200 studies have found that women initiate at least as much violence against their male partners as vice versa. Obama's 3.25 ratio is actually 1-1. And men comprise about a third of domestic violence injuries and deaths."
>
> The most recent large scale study of DV, published in the American Journal of Public Health, surveyed 11,000 men and women and found that, according to both men's and women's accounts, 50% of the violence in their relationships was reciprocal (involving both parties). In those cases, the women were more likely to have been the first to strike. Moreover, when the violence was one-sided, both women and men said that women were the perpetrators about 70% of the time.

Dr. Holstein, Board Chairman of the national family court reform organization Fathers and Families, says, "Obama's distortion is no mere quibble over statistics—the myth that 'only men do it' has crept into family courts, leading judges to put children into the custody of dangerous mothers whose violence is ignored because of the pervasive myth that women do not injure or kill."'

Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women

anthony · 12 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

http://dahmw.org/

Make sure you check out the PSA on the home page. I'm not sure what to make of it.

'The Domestic Abuse Helpline for Men and Women is a national non profit founded in 2000 in Harmony, Maine. Our agency was established to compliment the traditional domestic violence shelter programs that specialize in services for women abused by their male intimate partners. We specialize in offering supportive services to men abused by their female intimate partners. However, all who call us, whether they are male or female in a heterosexual or same sex abusive relationship are offered the same respect and support because no one deserves to be abused.'

Low Number of Male Teachers Affects Youth

anthony · 12 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Greensboro, NC -- Education experts say that a lower salary and stereotypes are to blame for a shortage of male teachers across the Piedmont Triad.

Bill Budusky is a Pre-Kindergarten teacher at Hunter Elementary School in Greensboro.

Budusky is one of only six male teachers out of 75.

The father of two said having male teachers in schools is important because they serve as positive role models for boys.

"Male teachers are absolutely necessary especially in a school like Hunter Elementary. You have some students who may be at risk that may have some needs in their backgrounds in their daily lives where a positive role model is missing," explained Budusky.'

Please lodge this anti-circumcision response with the U.S. Office of Human Research Protections

Minuteman · 12 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This is a response to the document "Human Subjects Research Protections: Enhancing Protections for Research Subjects and Reducing Burden, Delay, and Ambiguity for Investigators" [regulations.gov Docket ID: HHS-OPHS-2011-0005] (http://www.regulations.gov/#!documentDetail;D=HHS-OPHS-2011-0005-0001).

The deadline for submissions is 26 October 2011.

This submission can be made by anybody from any country around the world.

Instructions:

Download and save the document from the following link (Click 'Download Now', Wait for the counter to reach zero and click 'Download file now'):

http://www.4shared.com/document/BWrBzIiA/HHS-OPHS-2011-0005_26October20.html

Go to the following regulations.gov submission page:

http://www.regulations.gov/#!submitComment;D=HHS-OPHS-2011-0005-0001

Enter your name in the appropriate fields (Optional). Click browse under '3. UPLOAD FILE(S)' to upload the saved document from your harddisk. Click 'Submit'.

Please leave a reply so that I may gauge the number of submissions made (and to keep this post prominent until the deadline).

In case anyone has trouble with the above 4shared link, the full text of the response is below, which you can copy and paste into the word processor or text editor of your choice, and save to your harddisk to upload to regulations.gov:

Response to "Human Subjects Research Protections: Enhancing Protections for Research Subjects and Reducing Burden, Delay, and Ambiguity for Investigators" [regulations.gov Docket ID: HHS-OPHS-2011-0005]

Thank you for the opportunity to provide feedback to “Human Subjects Research Protections: Enhancing Protections for Research Subjects and Reducing Burden, Delay, and Ambiguity for Investigators” [regulations.gov Docket ID: HHS-OPHS-2011-0005]. This response shall briefly address a few of the issues identified in the document “Regulatory Changes in ANPRM Comparison of Existing Rules with Some of the Changes Being Considered” (OHRP 2011).

Issue 1: There are no specific data security protections for IRB-reviewed research: regulations require IRBs to determine, for each study, “when appropriate [that] there are adequate provisions to protect the privacy of subjects and to maintain the confidentiality of data.”.

The management of subject data is increasingly being outsourced and commercialised by federal agencies. Examples involving the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases [NIAID] include Contract N01-AI-15416 With the University of California at San Francisco (OIG 2011a), Contract N01-AI-3-0052 With Avecia Biologics Limited (OIG 2011b) and Contract HHSN266-2006-00015C With NexBio, Inc. (OIG 2011c). In 2011, following an investigation by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services [HHS] Office for Civil Rights [OCR], the University of California agreed to settle potential violations of the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act of 1996 [HIPAA] Privacy and Security Rules, after it was uncovered that between 2005-2008, unauthorized employees had repeatedly looked at the electronic protected health information of numerous patients (HHS 2011). It is therefore imperative that the HIPAA Privacy and Security Rules be adopted and applied to federal agency commercial partners, with the same applicable penalties for breaches of patient/subject privacy.

Issue 2: Research using existing biospecimens (clinical or from prior research) can be done without consent by stripping the specimens of identifiers.

Circumcision of male minors, in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, is a controversial practice within the medical profession (Smith 2011). Foreskins excised from minors in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, almost invariably present in a normal healthy state, and as such their excision and preservation contributes little to the study of the pathology of disease. Further, the most promising advances in the field of stem cell research, are to be found in stem cell lines derived from adult sources including dental pulp stem cells (Authur et al 2008), uterine stem cells (Bock 2011) and bone marrow stem cells (Wada et al 2011), rather than stem cell lines derived from the excised healthy foreskins of minors.

Products derived from foreskins excised en masse from minors in the absence of clear and present immediate medical indications, are frequently utilised in the commercial medical product, and more especially cosmetics industries (Advanced Healing 2011; Organogenesis 2011; Pitman 2008; SkinMedica 2011). As observed by the OHRP (2011) 'Changing technology in the field of genomics has dramatically increased the amount and nature of information about individuals that can be obtained from their DNA'. Valid concerns therefore exist for the future privacy of children whose healthy tissues are likely to be acquired by commercial interests in the cosmetic and medical product industries - and may be retained indefinitely - due to presently unforeseeable technological advances in the field of genomics.

It is therefore inappropriate to ask or permit the parent or legal guardian of a minor, to authorise the storage, transfer, processing, sale or any other use of foreskin or other healthy tissue excised from minors in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication.

Issue 3: Federal protections only apply to studies that are funded by certain federal agencies (Common Rule agencies), or to clinical investigations that involve products regulated by the FDA.

As observed by the OHRP (2011) 'Many have called for legislation to extend the Common Rule protections to all research with human subjects conducted in the U.S., regardless of funding source'. Increasingly however, federal agencies are funding and sponsoring research conducted abroad, that would be unlikely to receive ethical approval to be conducted in the U.S. Specific examples include NIAIDs sponsorship and funding of ClinicalTrials.gov registered trials NCT00059371 and NCT00425984 (Bailey et al 2007; Gray et al 2007). It is therefore imperative that federal protections be extended to all studies conducted by recipients of federal agency funds, or that are in any way sponsored by federal agencies, whether conducted in the U.S. or abroad.

Issue 5: Current provisions of the Common Rule provide only basic information about the elements of informed consent and how consent documents should be written. Many consent forms are too long and hard to understand, and fail to include some of the most important information.

Increasingly, federal agencies are funding and sponsoring research incorporating the excision of healthy tissue from subjects in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication. Specific examples include NIAIDs sponsorship and funding of ClinicalTrials.gov registered trials NCT00059371 and NCT00425984 (Bailey et al 2007; Gray et al 2007). Consent forms for these trials failed to include then known information, from the professional medical literature, about the importance to mens sexual health of the foreskin and other tissues removed by circumcision (Taylor 1996).

Of concern, is the results of the above trials are increasingly being used to justify the en masse circumcision of male minors in the absence of clear and present immediate medical indications (Kim 2011).

Research incorporating the excision of healthy tissue from subjects in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, must be limited to consenting adult subjects and consent forms must contain full and complete information, drawn from the professional medical literature, about the biological functions of the tissue to be excised, with clear stipulations in any published conclusions or media releases arising from such studies, that any results obtained are applicable only to populations and patients of the same demographic characteristics as the trial subjects, in “real world” settings which have similar variables to the study settings.

Issue 19: One of the six exempt categories applies to research involving the use of existing data, documents, records, and pathological or diagnostic specimens, but only if the sources are publicly available or if the information is recorded by researchers in such a manner that subjects cannot be identified, directly or through identifiers linked to them.

See reply to Issue 2, above.

References

Advanced Healing (2011) Dermagraph Active Living Cells Overview Link archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.dermagraft.com/about/overview/ Retrieved 25 September 2011

Arthur A, Rychkov G, Shi S, Koblar SA, Gronthos S (2008) Adult human dental pulp stem cells differentiate toward functionally active neurons under appropriate environmental cues in Stem Cells. 2008 Jul;26(7):1787-95. Epub 2008 May 22 Abstract archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/18499892 Retrieved 25 September 2011

Bailey RC, Moses S, Parker CB, Agot K, Maclean I, Krieger JN, Williams CF, Campbell RT, Ndinya-Achola JO (2007) Male circumcision for HIV prevention in young men in Kisumu, Kenya: a randomised controlled trial. Lancet369(9562),643–656 Abstract archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/17321310 Retrieved 02 October 2011

Bock, R (2011) Uterine stem cells used to treat diabetes in mice in NIH News Article archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.nih.gov/news/health/aug2011/nichd-30.htm Retrieved 25 September 2011

Gray RH, Kigozi G, Serwadda D, Makumbi F, Watya S, Nalugoda F, Kiwanuka N, Moulton LH, Chaudhary MA, Chen MZ, Sewankambo NK, Wabwire-Mangen F, Bacon MC, Williams CF, Opendi P, Reynolds SJ, Laeyendecker O, Quinn TC, Wawer MJ (2007) Male circumcision for HIV prevention in men in Rakai, Uganda: a randomised trial. Lancet369(9562),657–666 Abstract archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/17321311 Retrieved at 02 October 2011

HHS (2011) University of California settles HIPAA Privacy and Security case involving UCLA Health System facilities HHS Press Office published 7 July 2011 website Archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.hhs.gov/news/press/2011pres/07/20110707a.html Retrieved 02 October 2011

Kim, A (2011) Botswana’s Infant Circumcision Campaign in PRI's The World Article archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.theworld.org/2011/10/botswana-infant-circumcision-campaign/ Retrieved 11 October 2011

Organogenesis (2011) Apligraf: How Is It Made? Link archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.apligraf.com/professional/what_is_apligraf/how_is_it_made/ Retrieved 25 September 2011

OHRP (2011) Regulatory Changes in ANPRM Comparison of Existing Rules with Some of the Changes Being Considered in Office of Human Research Protections website archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.hhs.gov/ohrp/humansubjects/anprmchangetable.html Retrieved 25 September 2011

OIG (2011a) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract N01-AI-15416 With the University of California at San Francisco Audit (A-03-10-03120) on the Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website published 10 July 2011 Available at

http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003120.pdf

OIG (2011b)Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract N01-AI-3-0052 With Avecia Biologics Limited (A-03-10-03117) on the Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website published 21 September Available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003117.pdf

OIG (2011c) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract HHSN266-2006-00015C With NexBio, Inc. (A-03-10-03119) on the Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website published 21 September Available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003119.pdf

Pitman, S (2008) Babies' foreskin dubbed as new anti-aging treatment in Cosmetic Design Article archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.cosmeticsdesign.com/Formulation-Science/Babies-foreskin-dubbed-as-new-anti-aging-treatment Retrieved 25 September 2011

SkinMedica (2011) Key Ingredients Link archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.skinmedica.com/skin-care-products/skin-rejuvenation/tns-recovery-complex#tab2 Retrieved 25 September 2011

Smith JF (2011) The professional imperative for obstetrician-gynecologists to discontinue newborn male circumcision Am J Perinatol. 2011 Feb;28(2):125-8. Epub 2010 Aug 10 Abstract archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed?term=20700861 Retrieved 25 September 2011

Taylor, J.P., A.P. Lockwood and A.J.Taylor The prepuce: Specialized mucosa of the penis and its loss to circumcision Journal of Urology (1996), 77, 291-295 Abstract archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed?term=8800902 Retrieved 09 October 2011

Wada N, Bartold PM, Gronthos S (2011) Human foreskin fibroblasts exert immunomodulatory properties by a different mechanism to bone marrow stromal/stem cells in Stem Cells Dev. 2011 Apr;20(4):647-59. Epub 2010 Oct 12 Abstract archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed?term=20712449 Retrieved 25 September 2011

Downsized and Downtrodden, Men Are the New Women on TV

anthony · 12 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Man Up!," which begins next Tuesday on ABC, is one of several new sitcoms that make fun of men, so much so that the word "man" itself is treated as a joke. ABC's other emasculation comedy starts this Tuesday and is called "Last Man Standing." It stars Tim Allen, the onetime star of "Home Improvement." Mr. Allen plays Mike, the marketing director of an outdoorsman's catalog who has to stay home to tend to his three daughters when his business retracts to an online shopping site.
...
The focus on men's failings partly reflects that female viewers outnumber men; network executives, it seems, know what women want. But the devolution of man has been a topic of talk shows, pop psychology and books for years. The New York Times columnist Maureen Dowd published the book "Are Men Necessary?" in 2005, before the economy collapsed. Since then, books, articles and blogs about the changed status of men have abounded. This year alone, Dan Abrams argued that women were better at almost everything in his book "Man Down." And Kay S. Hymowitz agreed in "Manning Up: How the Rise of Women Has Turned Men Into Boys."'

County awarded $300,000 to improve girls' health

anthony · 12 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thurston County Public Health and Social Services has been awarded a $300,000 grant by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Office on Women's Health. Funding will be used to offer the Girls Circle program to middle-school age girls and continue efforts of the Thurston Coalition for Women's Health.

The YWCA of Olympia is taking the lead in bringing the science-based Girls Circle prevention program to Thurston County. Research shows that Girls Circle reduces alcohol use, improves the ability of girls to form healthier bonds with others and promotes academic achievement.
If Thurston County meets performance expectations, an additional four years of grant funding is possible.'

Joe Biden believes out-of-work men become murderers and rapists

anthony · 12 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vice President Joe Biden attempted to tie passage of the American Jobs Act to a decrease in murders and rapes in an appearance in Flint, Mich., Wednesday.

“In 2008, when Flint had 265 sworn officers on their police force, there were 35 murders and 91 rapes in this city,” Biden said, standing alongside city officials. “In 2010, when Flint had only 144 police officers, the murder rate climbed to 65 and rapes — just to pick two categories — climbed to 229. In 2011, you now only have 125 shields. God only knows what the numbers will be this year for Flint if we don’t rectify it.”'

Texan freed by DNA test after 25 years exonerated

Matt · 12 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A Texas appeals court on Wednesday formally exonerated a man who spent nearly 25 years in prison for his wife's 1986 fatal beating, reaffirming a judge's decision to set him free last week after DNA tests linked the killing to another man.

The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals declared Michael Morton innocent of killing his wife, Christine, and made him eligible to receive $80,000 from the state for each year of confinement, or about $2 million total.

Morton, 57, was convicted on the basis of circumstantial evidence and sentenced to life in prison. He maintained over the years that his wife and their 3-year-old son were fine when he left for work at an Austin grocery store on the day she was killed, and that an intruder must have attacked her.

DNA found this summer during testing on a bloody bandanna recovered near the crime scene matched that of a man who authorities say has a criminal record in several states. When it was also matched to DNA recovered from the scene of a north Austin woman's 1988 unsolved beating death, prosecutors recommended that Morton be freed immediately.'

WILL Magazine, issue 2 now available

Matt · 12 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Available for download here. It includes an article on male DV victims as well as a discussion of the MANN web site and an interview with yours truly. (Please forgive me if that comes off as some kind of self-promotion. It isn't. I'm in this for the cause, and that's all.)

Vancouver restaurant 'bans' men from urinating while standing up

anthony · 13 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Vancouver restaurant has come up with an interesting solution to the men-can't-aim problem: Ban men from peeing standing up.

Recently, my wife and I had brunch at the Edible Canada bistro on Granville Island. When I went to use the facilities, I was surprised to see just one unisex bathroom with about six private stalls and a communal sink area.

Even more surprising, though, was the sign above the toilet, showing a stick man tinkling into a toilet with a line through it. Yes, Edible Canada has banned men from peeing standing up.

...

In Edible Canada's case, where men and women have to share toilets, I can see why they'd be interested in reducing behaviours that might make things messy.

But, still, isn't banning stand-up peeing a little extreme? Not to mention, as far as I can tell, completely unenforceable?'

Advocates for men move into social media, Internet in fight for parity

anthony · 13 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A burgeoning civil rights movement, focused on eliminating what its members see as broadening social and legal disparities between men and women, is using social media and the Internet to spread its message demanding parity.

Active in North America but also evident in increasingly visible efforts abroad, the Men's Rights Movement (MRM) is fighting proposed and existing legislation its members see as "misandric," while challenging social customs and traditions its activists believe favor women over men.

...

While "gender feminism" is frequently blamed as the root cause of these problems, few issues within the MRM inspire as much vocal outcry as false allegations of sexual assault.

"We have men literally going to prison and having their lives destroyed, their reputations... all over finger pointing," Elam says. "This is a huge problem across the movement."

Elam and his fellow activists have fought back by creating their own website, "Register Her," which purports to be a public database of false accusers, violent female offenders and even public figures who have advocated against men.

One of Elam's more prominent targets among the latter is Mary Kellett, an assistant district attorney in Maine, whom the site calls a "corrupt public official" who "has distinguished herself by prosecuting numerous cases of rape and domestic violence against men within her community based on no evidence."

Calls for comment to Kellett's office were not returned.'

New Study in Canada shows circumcised status of male doctors affects their opinion on circumcision

Matt · 13 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.:

Interestingly, this new study in Canada found that, among male doctors, their opinion on infant male circumcision correlates strongly with whether they are circumcised themselves, with 68% of the uncut doctors opposing infant male circumcision, and 68% of the cut doctors supporting it.
http://www.jmhjournal.org/article/S1875-6867(10)00050-3/abstract

No wonder pro-circumcision advocacy comes mostly from the U.S., with its high (but declining) circumcision rate, while national medical associations throughout the rest of the world find no medical justification for it and some are flat-out calling it harmful and unethical. Obviously, culture influences science.

The British Columbia College of Physicians and Surgeons' 9/09 report declared:

"Infant male circumcision was once considered a preventive health measure and was therefore adopted extensively in Western countries. Current understanding of the benefits, risks and potential harm of this procedure, however, no longer supports this practice for prophylactic health benefit. Routine infant male circumcision performed on a healthy infant is now considered a non-therapeutic and medically unnecessary intervention. . . . Circumcision removes the prepuce that covers and protects the head or the glans of the penis. The prepuce is composed of an outer skin and an inner mucosa that is rich in specialized sensory nerve endings and erogenous tissue. Circumcision is painful, and puts the patient at risk for complications ranging from minor, as in mild local infections, to more serious such as injury to the penis, meatal stenosis, urinary retention, urinary tract infection and, rarely, even hemorrhages leading to death. The benefits of infant male circumcision that have been promoted over time include the prevention of urinary tract infections and sexually transmitted diseases, and the reduction in risk of penile and cervical cancer. Current consensus of medical opinion, including that of the Canadian and American Paediatric Societies and the American Urological Society, is that there is insufficient evidence that these benefits outweigh the potential risks. That is, routine infant male circumcision, i.e. routine removal of normal tissue in a healthy infant, is not recommended."

http://www.cpsbc.ca/files/u6/Circumcision-Infant-Male.pdf

The Dutch Medical Association's May 2010 report, backed by 7 other national medical associations, concluded:

"Contrary to what is often thought, circumcision entails the risk of medical or psychological complications."

"Non-therapeutic circumcision of male minors conflicts with the child's right to autonomy and physical integrity."

"There are good reasons for a legal prohibition of non-therapeutic circumcision of male minors, as there is for female genital mutilation."

"There is no convincing evidence that circumcision is useful or necessary in terms of prevention or hygiene."

http://www.norm-uk.org/news.html?action=showitem&item=1306

The South African Medical Association denounced infant male circumcision as unethical and illegal and expressed "serious concern that not enough scientifically-based evidence was available to confirm that circumcisions prevented HIV contraction and that the public at large was influenced by incorrect and misrepresented information. The committee reiterated its view that it did not support circumcision to prevent HIV transmission."

http://www.icgi.org/Downloads/SAMA-NOCIRC-2011-06-25.pdf

Mary Kellett resource URLs

Matt · 13 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Submitted by anthony with a different story. Thought I would break it out to its own item.

'Scandal Surrounding Maine ADA Mary Kellett Goes International'
http://www.fathersandfamilies.org/?p=19027

'The Movement to Disbar Mary Kellett' http://markymarksthoughts.blogspot.com/2011/03/movement-to-disbar-mary-kellett.html

'A small sample of Assistant DA Mary Kellett's cases' http://www.fillerfund.com/marykellett.htm

'Disbar Assistant District Attorney Mary Kellett for Prosecutorial Misconduct' http://www.change.org/petitions/disbar-assistant-district-attorney-mary-kellett-for-prosecutorial-misconduct

'Petition to Disbar Mary Kellett: 551 signed, 1000 Total Needed' http://www.avoiceformen.com/mens-rights/activism/petition-to-disbar-mary-kellett/

VA Announces PSA About Women Veterans

Minuteman · 13 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to news release here. Excerpt:

'The Department of Veterans Affairs is taking its internal culture-change message to the public with a new video about the vital role women play in the military and the importance of providing women Veterans with high quality health care.

VA's Women Veterans Health Strategic Health Care Group recently completed a 60-second public service announcement (PSA) that challenges viewers to rethink pre-conceived notions about women Veterans. This dynamic video features images of women in service to our country: they drive supply trucks, participate in reconnaissance missions, walk safety patrols, and operate helicopter machine guns.

"When these brave women complete their service and become Veterans, we want them to know that VA is there to meet their health care needs," said Dr. Patricia Hayes, Chief Consultant of the VA's Women Veterans Health Strategic Health Care Group. "At the same time, we want the public to recognize the contributions of women Veterans and the benefits they have earned through their service to the Nation."'

Brazil: Gisele Bundchen ad not too sexist for TV

Minuteman · 14 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Brazil's National Advertising Council has denied a request to ban a television ad featuring lingerie-clad supermodel Gisele Bundchen after a government agency called it sexist.

"The stereotypes in this ad campaign are common in society, easily identifiable and do not denigrate women," the council's members said on Thursday.

Brazil's Ministry for Women submitted a request in September to suspend the ad, saying it reinforces the stereotype of women as sex objects.

...

Some men had called for the ad to be put down because it took them for "idiots".'

Three women in Zimbabwe charged in series of sex attacks on men

Matt · 15 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'Harare, Zimbabwe (CNN) -- Police in Zimbabwe on Friday charged three women found in possession of 33 condoms containing semen with 17 counts of aggravated indecent assault in a case that may be a break in a string of sex attacks over the past two years by women targeting male hitchhikers.

Prosecutor Michael Reza told a court in Harare that the counts were for each of the 17 men who had positively identified the women as having sexually assaulted them in 2010 or 2011.

The women, all of them in their mid-20s, were arrested Sunday in Gweru, about 300 kilometers (186 miles) south of Harare, when their car was involved in an accident. Police found the condoms in the women's car. Police appealed to any other victims to inform police.

The three were taken Wednesday by police to Harare.

"Since Monday, 17 men came and positively identified the women as having raped them," said a police official in Harare who refused to be identified. "Most of the men said the women would offer a drink either laced with something to tranquilize them or were forced at gunpoint."

Watch Ruparanganda, a professor of sociology at the University of Zimbabwe said : "Some sections of the society use these sperm for ritual purposes. The thinking is that it can be used for regeneration of life since they are source of life (biologically). Some people think that they can have their bad luck gone by using semen. I am sure that explains all this we have been witnessing (men being forced)."'

Harvard: Office of Sexual Assault Prevention Pushes for 'Enthusiastic Consent'

anthony · 15 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Under most legal definitions, forced sexual intercourse can be considered rape or sexual assault only when the victim said “no” or was incapable of doing so due to the influence of drugs or alcohol, according to Meier.

Meier said that she and other students on the committee hoped to push the University instead toward an “enthusiastic consent” model, in which an incident can be called rape in the absence of affirmative agreement.

“The only people who lose out in this model are the rapists,” said Lila S. Schreiber ’12, who had also intended to serve on the committee.

Meier said that she plans to discuss the stay on student involvement with Rankin, but she might eventually consider leading a “student protest” or “something more radical” than acting through administration-approved channels if she feels that student voices on this issue are not being heard.'

The 'silent taboo' of suicide among young men in the UK

Broadsword · 16 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every year, more than 5,000 people in the UK take their own lives – and 22 per cent of them are men aged between 16 and 24. In the 20 to 24 age group, men are four times more likely to kill themselves than women. Suicide is the commonest cause of death among men under 35. ‘It’s one of the few things that men are better at than women,’ says David Trickey, a consultant clinical psychologist and specialist in traumatic bereavement. ‘And because of the way in which they try to kill themselves, they are more likely to succeed.’

...

Suicidal men are 18 times more likely than suicidal women to shoot themselves. They are also at least three times more likely to hang themselves or throw themselves under a train (whereas women are more likely than men to take an overdose). Jane Powell, director of the Campaign Against Living Miserably (Calm), a national organisation that reaches out to young men at risk of suicide, believes the shocking absoluteness of such deaths is ‘wrapped up in their thinking that it is their final masculine act – and the final act of which they are in control.'

Adoption battle quashed by Utah Supreme Court

Anonymous · 16 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OREM — For three years, two families have wanted the same baby.

The birth father and his family have been fighting the legal system and an Orem adoption agency, declaring that the father's rights as a parent have been violated.

The birth mother, who lives in California, said she's been slandered and maligned for choosing what she felt was the best for her baby.

In the meantime, the baby's adoptive parents have been raising the little girl, praying that soon they'll be able to permanently call her theirs.

After a recent Utah Supreme Court decision affirming a 3rd District Court ruling, the longed-for adoption finalization is closer than ever before.

The Supreme Court ruled this week that the baby's birth father, Cody O'Dea, waived all of his parental rights in 2006 by not complying with Utah law to establish paternity.

In a 3-2 decision, the high court also wrote that O'Dea's four appeal issues hadn't been raised in the district court, and thus were not preserved in the federal arena.'

Taiwan: Woman cuts off husband's penis

Minuteman · 17 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The woman allegedly told police she felt no regret about what she had done to her husband, who is 29 years old, jobless and a known user of illegal drugs.

Police said she claimed to have suffered beatings even though she had worked at a local karaoke shop to support the family since the pair married two years ago.

Her husband's affair with another woman, which he did not attempt to hide, prompted her revenge, the suspect said, according to police.'

Australian Department of Health: "Queensland Women Lead the Way in $96.5 Million of Ground Breaking Medical Research"

Minuteman · 17 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

There's nothing in the press release to suggest that the work of these five females is any more worthy than that of the recipients of the other 1305 grants. Link here. Excerpt:

'Queensland's leading female researchers will receive funding to continue their groundbreaking work in osteoporosis, the genetics of ovarian cancer and childhood obesity prevention, the Minister for Mental Health and Ageing, Mark Butler, announced today.

The Gillard Labor Government is providing $673.7 million for 1,140 grants to support researchers, research projects and research institutions Australia-wide. This represents the single biggest investment of grants for health and medical research in Australian history.

Queensland researchers will receive $96.5 million for 169 grants through the National Health and Medical Research Council.

"These grants support our research community to continue to do what they do so well – making cutting edge discoveries that improve the diagnosis, treatment and cure of illnesses that touch all Australians," Mr Butler said.'

Controversial Therapy for Pre-Teen Transgender Patient Raises Questions

anthony · 17 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A lesbian couple in California who say their 11-year-old son Tommy who wants to be a girl named Tammy are giving their child hormone blockers that delay the onset of puberty -- so that he can have more time that he can have more time to decide if he wants to change his gender.

The couple's supporters say the Hormone Blocking Therapy has only minor side effects and is appropriate for a child who is unsure of his gender. "This is definitely a changing landscape for transgender youth," said Joel Baum, director of education and training for Gender Spectrum, a California-based non-profit group. "This is about giving kids and their families the opportunity to make the right decision."

But critics of the treatment say 11-year-olds are not old enough to make life-altering decisions about changing their gender, and parents should not be encouraging them. They say it's too soon to tell what the side effects of the treatments may be, and they say Tommy's parents, Pauline Moreno and Debra Lobel, are irresponsible for seeking them and allowing them to be administered.

"This is child abuse. It's like performing liposuction on an anorexic child," said Dr. Paul McHugh, professor of psychiatry at Johns Hopkins University.'

Woman allegedly stabs boyfriend after he refuses to buy her beer

anthony · 17 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LAS CRUCES - A Las Cruces woman was jailed after allegedly stabbing her boyfriend for not buying her another 40-ounce bottle of beer.

Doña Ana Sheriff's Deputies were called to the 9500 block of Butterfield Blvd. at around 5:30 p.m. Thursday after Alexa Monet Rodriguez, 22, allegedly became enraged at her boyfriend and stabbed him in the arm with a 14-inch stainless steel knife, according to sheriff's office spokeswoman Kelly Jameson.

Rodriguez had also allegedly thrown a 3-pound weight at her boyfriend so hard it got lodged in the wall, then struck him in the back with a TV tray and a chair, Jameson said. After the alleged stabbing, Rodriguez allegedly threw the knife at the victim and fled.'

Mother: I was drunk when Missouri infant disappeared

Matt · 17 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- The mother of Lisa Irwin, an 11-month old Missouri girl missing for nearly two weeks, said in an interview she was drunk the night the infant disappeared.

Deborah Bradley made the admission during an NBC interview, portions of which were aired Monday on "Today."

She also said she last saw Lisa at 6:40 p.m. October 3, when she put the girl to bed, not at 10:30 p.m., as initially believed.

Lisa was reported missing at 4 a.m. October 4, after Lisa's father, Jeremy Irwin, came home from work to find the door unlocked, lights on and a window that had been tampered with at the family's Kansas City home.

Bradley told NBC she is afraid she will be arrested. Police have accused her of killing Lisa, she said, and told her that she failed a lie detector test, with deception indicated when she was asked where Lisa was.'

Georgia woman sentenced to more than 11 years for human trafficking

Matt · 17 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ATLANTA - Bidemi Bello will spend the next 11 years in a U.S. prison. After that she will be deported back to her native Nigeria, her luxe life in suburban Atlanta decidedly finished.

Bello, 42, was convicted for bringing two Nigerian women to the United States and forcing them to work in her plush home as slaves. U.S. District Judge William Duffey Jr. sentenced her to 140 months in jail Thursday.

Bello apologized to her two victims, present in the Atlanta courtroom to hear firsthand their abuser's punishment. Bello also apologized to her prosecutors, said U.S. Attorney Susan Coppedge.

"We are very pleased with the sentence," she said. "I think it fits the facts of the case."

Those facts amounted to "shocking modern-day slavery," said Brock Nicholson, the special agent in charge of immigration and homeland security investigations in Atlanta.

Bello had promised the two young women, identified as Laome and Dupe in court, and their families that she would send them to school in the United States, according to court documents. Instead, she beat them and abused them emotionally.'

Mom Charged with Stabbing Teen Sean Hines to Death

Matt · 17 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MANHATTAN — An Upper West Side mom was charged with stabbing her teenage son — a quiet kid who loved to skateboard — to death in their apartment, police said.

Yvonne Hines, 52, was hit with a manslaughter rap for stabbing Sean Hines, 18, in the leg just before midnight Saturday at their home on West 92nd Street and Columbus Avenue, according to cops.

"That boy was a nice boy, going to school," said Alberto Walters, 76, a resident for 34 years. "Never talked to anybody...It's a shame."

Neighbors said that Sean loved to skateboard and had recently graduated from high school.

When police arrived, the suspect, who has two sealed arrests, came to the door with a bloody sponge, according to Police Commissioner Raymond Kelly.

...

Sources said there was a history of domestic incidents at the apartment, including allegations of assault and child abuse. The details of the allegations were not immediately clear.

According to the criminal complaint, the suspect, who was held without bail at her arraignment Sunday, had what "appeared to be a recent cut on her left thumb and what appeared to be recent scratches on her left arm."'

Florida woman, 19, gets life prison term for fatal ambush

Matt · 17 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ORLANDO, Fla (Reuters) - A 19-year-old Florida woman was sentenced to life in prison on Monday for the brutal murder of a teenager who was lured by text message to a fatal ambush, prosecutors said.

The woman, Charlie Kay Ely, was found guilty in September of first-degree murder in the death of 15-year-old Seath Tyler Jackson, who was beaten, shot and burned in April in Summerfield, northwest of Orlando.

Four other defendants, who ranged in age from 15 to 20 at the time of their arrests, remain in jail awaiting trial on first-degree murder charges, prosecutors in Ocala said.'

Teacher Accused of Choking First Graders in Court

Matt · 18 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A trial is set to begin Monday for a Montgomery County teacher, accused of punching and choking several of her first grade students.

Susan Burke, 36, was arrested in February, after nine of her first grade students at Greencastle Elementary School claimed they were abused. According to investigators, Burke allegedly choked, kicked, punched and scratched children in her class.

...

Police interviewed all of the students in Burke's class, and their investigation revealed eight more victims, all ages 6 or 7, police said. In addition to being choked, some students also reported being kicked, punched, scratched or squeezed on the arms, police said. Additional students reported witnessing the attacks, police said.'

Woman tries to cut her sleeping husband's head off with power saw

Broadsword · 18 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman has been accused of trying to saw her sleeping husband's head off with a power saw.

Police were called to Hoyt Avenue in Everett, Washington, on Friday, and found the unnamed 36-year-old still alive but his head and neck covered in bloody cuts. When officers arrived at the family residence they allegedly heard the husband screaming at his wife: 'It was you, it was you - you tried to cut my head off. You're going to jail.'
...
Yesterday the woman, also unidentified, appeared in court on a charge of domestic violence assault and a judge ordered her bail to be kept at $250,000 (£158,000).

When interviewed by police the 43-year-old insisted that she had grabbed the power saw in the dead of night as she thought she heard an intruder escape from her daughter's window.

However, sergeant Robert Goetz indicated that there was no sign of a break-in - a child lock prevented the window in the child's room from opening more than a few inches.

In addition, both the front and back doors were locked from the inside. He said: 'There was no evidence there was an intruder.'

Biden Continues to Warn of Rapes and Murders If Jobs Bill Isn't Passed

anthony · 18 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today, Biden reiterated his warning at an event in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.“The other thing I've heard from my friends who oppose this – this whole jobs bill and this – that this is just temporary," Biden said. "Well let me tell you, it's not temporary when that 911 call comes in and a woman's being raped if a cop shows up in time to prevent the rape, it's not temporary to that woman. It's not temporary to the guy whose store is being held up and a gun is being pointed to his head. If a cop shows up and he's not killed, that's not temporary to that store owner. Give me a break, temporary! I wish these guys that thought it was temporary, I wish they had some notion what it's like to be on the other side of a gun or a 200 pound man standing over you telling you to submit. Folks, it matters. It matters!”

UK: Judge storms out of child cruelty trial

Minuteman · 19 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A English teen mother who left her baby with irreparable brain damage after repeated beatings prompted a judge to storm out of his courtroom in anger.

Judge Anthony Russell had to step out of Preston Crown Court for 15 minutes so he would not jail Kayleigh Searle, 19, out of rage, the Daily Mail reports.

Searle has been jailed for eight years after a series of violent beatings of her three-month-old son Thomas left him blind, severely disabled and in considerable pain.

...

"It is almost unimaginable that a mother could have inflicted such injuries on her own child, and furthermore shown no remorse at all," he said.

"Your conduct throughout the inquiry and the case have shown you to be completely heartless — you appear to lack even the basic humanity."'

Example of great results from men's rights protest in San Diego for battered men

Matt · 19 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.:

Summary: A few years ago NCFM and others picketed outside the the San Diego Domestic Violence Council's event to protest their neglect of male victims and female perpetrators. Back then, the silhouettes of dead victims pictured below and in the link above were only of females murdered by their partners. The link also has pics of the protest. Now, as you can see from the pics of NCFM at the recent San Diego “Hope in the Park” Domestic Violence Prevention Month, two of the five silhouettes represent male victims murdered by their partners, including female partners. Thank you NCFM! And thank you Dr. Dawn Griffith, President of the San Diego Domestic Violence Council, Kent Peters, Director of Catholic Social Ministries, and Chesley Blevins of the County Office of Crime Prevention, for doing what is right.

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thanks largely to the good work of opened minded people like Dr. Dawn Griffith , President of the San Diego Domestic Violence Council ; Kent Peters, Director of Catholic Social Ministries, and Chesley Blevins of the County Office of Crime Prevention, the domestic violence industry in San Diego is much more aware of male victims. Hence the inclusion of the silhouettes of murdered men.

Event “Terms and Conditions” included a non discrimination clause prohibiting vendors and exhibitors from displaying or circulating information that implied or stated services provided would be restricted based on sex. The majority of people who visited our booth were from various service providers, virtually all of who were happy to see us and concerned about the absence of services for male victims in the county, including in the military. So, even though there is a heightened awareness of male victimology in San Diego there still exists a dearth of related services. Interestingly, two days later I took a call from a male victim who received some legal assistance from the YWCA!'

F&F: NYC Event: Join Discussion with Director of Classic Divorce/Child Custody Movie 'Kramer vs. Kramer'

Matt · 19 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

F&F announcement here. Excerpt:

'Perhaps the most famous and enduring movie about divorce and child custody is Kramer vs. Kramer (1979). Fathers and Families' New York City members have a great chance to see this stunning divorce-related drama and discuss it with the film's director, three time Academy Award Winning Director, Screenwriter and Producer Robert Benton, and novelist Avery Corman, author of the book Kramer vs. Kramer, this Wednesday (October 19) at 7:00 PM.

This event, hosted by Fordham Law School's Forum on Law, Culture & Society, will be held at the James B.M. McNally Amphitheater at 140 West 62nd Street, New York, NY, 10023 (near Lincoln Center).'

SAVE: Tell Senator Leahy: Accredit New Teen Dating Violence Prevention Programs

Matt · 19 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

It was recently announced that the upcoming Senate version of VAWA will include a new teen dating violence prevention focus. SAVE encourages evidence-based programs for children and teens. When done right, youth in families with abuse can be taught to break the cycle of violence.

The key words here are "When done right." This SAVE report shows Most DV Educational Programs Lack Accuracy, Balance, and Truthfulness (www.saveservices.org/downloads/SAVE-DV-Educational-Programs) On average, only 10% of DV "education" is correct.

It is vital, that moving forward all domestic violence educational materials include only accurate and unbiased information. SAVE offers a Training, Education, and Public Awareness (TEPA) accreditation program. This kind of scrutiny is necessary if we are to serve all victims of domestic violence.

Call Senator Leahy today. Politely yet firmly explain that all new teen dating violence prevention programs need to be accredited. Tell him to "get it right the first time out of the gate."

Sen. Patrick Leahy
Call: (202) 224-4242
Write: http://leahy.senate.gov/contact/

Thank you for assuring that all teens have the opportunity to break the cycle of violence.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Cleveland man awarded $1.5 million after false rape charge

anthony · 19 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ELYRIA — A Cleveland man was awarded $1.5 million in damages yesterday against a Sheffield Township couple who falsely accused him of rape.

Joseph Melendez was arrested by Lorain County sheriff deputies on Sept. 24, 2010, after a Fleming Avenue woman said he put a knife to her throat and tried to rape her and was chased and threatened by her husband.

However, Melendez passed a polygraph test and an independent witness said Melendez was set up, according to his attorney Larry Zuckerman.

Melendez sued James and Gabrielle Bracken in November 2010. Lorain County Common Pleas Judge Christopher Rothgery decided in his favor.
...
The couple was charged with making false statements to police and filing false police reports.'

UK: Burnley woman jailed for making false rape claim

anthony · 19 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I wonder why the picture of the false rape accuser is distorted? Are they trying to protect her identity? Excerpt:

'A 20-YEAR-OLD Burnley woman has been jailed for falsely accusing her former boyfriend of rape.

Keeley Horrocks, of Grant Street, admitted perverting the course of justice at Bolton Crown Court and was sentenced to two years in prison.

The court heard that at 5-15 p.m. on January 3rd last year, Horrocks called police to report she had been raped in Rochdale.

Officers attended and took an initial account from Horrocks. Later that evening she had a full medical examination at a referral centre. Over the next few days, Horrocks was video interviewed by trained officers, and gave a lengthy and detailed account of her ordeal – all of which proved false.'

Op-Ed: Frightened little women - false rape news, and a retrospective

anthony · 19 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The crime of rape is often used as a battering ram by the loony feminists against men, but when the allegations made are demonstrably false, the same people are strangely silent. Here is the other side of the coin.

Here is a gem from Rape Trauma Services: “Only 16% of rapes are ever reported to the police.”

This begs the question how do they know? Well, because “In a survey of victims who did not report rape or attempted rape to the police, the following was found as to why no report was made: 43% thought nothing could be done, 27% felt it was a private matter, 12% were afraid of police response, and 12% felt it was not important enough.”

This presupposes that all these “victims” were actually victims and not fantasists or simply lying little tarts. Can 12% of “victims” really be afraid of the police response? Can another 12% really believe a rape is not important enough to report?'

Yarloop rape claim was false: police

anthony · 19 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Only a day after a 15-year-old girl was found to have "cried wolf" over a false rape claim, Bunbury detectives have charged a 65-year-old woman with falsifying a sexual assult complaint.

The Yarloop woman had told detectives late last month that a man had entered her bedroom in the early hours of the morning and threatened and then sexually assaulted her.

Police had originally said she was "very distressed" and "shaken up" by the ordeal.

Detective Senior Sergeant Jon Munday today said that investigators had established the incident the woman had complained about was false and the public could put its mind to rest.'

Insipid 'Man Up' makes both men and women look bad

anthony · 19 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Should you decide to squander 30 minutes on what may be the worst of a bad bunch of fall sitcoms, divert yourself from the tedium by asking why our Man, Will, is so unhappy. He has a beautiful wife, two healthy children, an expensive-looking house, a job and two devoted friends.

Yet instead of celebrating, Will spends the night boo-hooing because he can't find his son a birthday gift and because his wife reminds him he and his buddies didn't fight in Vietnam or World War II— as if the men who risked their lives in those conflicts thought of them as some jolly, male-bonding, sweat-lodge retreat. No wonder the show's women treat these men like idiots; they're probably overestimating them.

Before you accuse Man Up of male-bashing, note that the portrayal of those manipulative, emasculating women is just as insulting. Man Up is an equal-opportunity sex offender.
...
And that's the real issue. When did TV decide that empty heads were the hallmarks of manhood, or that anything that smacks of education or cultural refinement was somehow unmasculine? The problem with this trio isn't that they're unmanly; it's that they're morons. And to compound that problem, they're moronic on our TVs.

With any luck, that problem at least should take care of itself.'

All Huffy, Joe Biden Stands By Rape Reference to GOP

anthony · 19 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I'm sending Matt articles about Biden to expose his misandry, not because I support either party. I mention this because this particular piece comes from a conservative publication. Excerpt:

'Vice President Joe Biden now says he didn't make a reference to rape, and got testy with HUMAN EVENTS when we asked if he would like to retract his comments that the number of sexual assaults would increase if Republicans don't sign on to Barack Obama's latest "jobs" proposal.

"I didn't use, no no no...Let's get it straight, guy. Don't screw around with me," Biden lashed out at HUMAN EVENTS. Then Biden confirmed that he indeed did talk about rape in terms of the President's spending measure. "Murder will continue to rise, rape will continue to rise, all crimes will continue to rise," if the Democrats agenda isn't passed, he added.

It was on Tuesday during a speech at the University of Pennsylvania where Biden initially argued that another round of government spending was needed to prevent sexual assaults. "It's not temporary [administration's proposed stimulus] when that 911 call comes in and a woman's being raped, if a cop shows up in time to prevent the rape. It's not temporary to that woman." Then in the same speech he wished Republicans were themselves rape victims. "I wish they had some notion of what it was like to be on the other side of a gun, or [to have] a 200-pound man standing over you, telling you to submit."'

F & F Helps Win Stunning Victory over CS Enforcement in Outrageous Pedro Soto Paternity Fraud Case

Matt · 19 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Despite the Legislature's clear directive that child support agencies not pursue mistaken child support actions, the County is asking that we do so. We will not sully our hands by participating in an unjust, and factually unfounded, result. We say no to the County, and we reverse."–County of Los Angeles v. Navarro, (2004)

In a stunning victory, duped dad Pedro Soto and his attorney Richard A. Lowe, Esq. have prevailed against the Orange County Department of Child Support Services in a paternity fraud case emblematic of the numerous outrageous injustices faced by men and fathers in family court. In this case, Soto has paid over $75,000 in child support for a child DNA tests have established is not his, and who has been living with both of his biological parents for many years.

Action Alert–Your Participation Needed!

Fathers and Families condemns the conduct of OCDCSS in fighting to preserve a paternity judgment it knows to be false. We want to add your name to our letter to OCDCSS, which will also be copied to the California DCSS–to read the letter and add your name, please click here.

You're Invited - Engaging Males in Stopping Violence Against Women Regional Town Halls - October 25-29, 2011

Minuteman · 20 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Uhm, no thank you. Link here. From an Office on Womens Health mailing-list email:

'Vice President Joe Biden's commitment to ending violence against women has been unwavering. The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) that he authored has reshaped the way the United States responds to domestic violence and sexual assault by enhancing law enforcement practices, improving the criminal justice system, and creating a network of services for victims.
...
In response to the Vice President's call to action and youth initiative, the Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Education, and the Department of Housing and Urban Development are collaborating to hold ten regional town hall events throughout the country during the last week of October 2011 on the topic of Engaging Men in Ending Violence Against Women.'

Don't Believe the Hype, College Educated Women Are Still Getting Married

Broadsword · 20 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Every so often, the media dusts off and replays some version of the story that marriage is dead, a casualty of women's empowerment and dramatic economic shifts. These stories generally shed as much light on the nation's media class as they do on the real story of America's family troubles. There's no better example than Kate Bolick's much-discussed Atlantic magazine cover story, "All the Single Ladies.".

Like a vocal number of her high achieving peers, the 39-year-old Bolick remains single not because she is cursed by nature– we know that because in an unusual and, I dare say, cynical decision, the magazine put Bolick's sultry face and lace bodiced figure on its cover -- but because of a taste for independence and a lack of acceptable candidates for her hand.

...

Educated women are still the marrying kind because they know intuitively what research concludes: children are more likely to succeed in school, go to college, and get good jobs if they grow up with their two married parents. Prepping your kids for a competitive knowledge economy is a time-consuming, devotional task; no wonder it works better with a steady, focused twosome.

"Alternative family arrangements" that can do that job anywhere near as well? Good luck.

One in 10 Falsely Accused of Abuse: Survey

anthony · 20 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

http://www.marketwatch.com/story/one-in-10-falsely-accused-of-abuse-survey-2011-10-17

'WASHINGTON, Oct 17, 2011 (GlobeNewswire via COMTEX) -- One in 10 adults has been falsely accused of domestic violence, child abuse, or sexual assault, according to a survey conducted by Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE). The survey also found a strong disparity between the number of males and females falsely accused: more than three quarters of all false accusations are levied against men. Nearly seven in 10 false accusers are female.

The survey is the first of its kind to be undertaken, and uncovers distressing trends within the American abuse-reduction system.

Child abuse is the commonest false charge -- about twice as many people have been falsely accused of child abuse as of domestic violence or sexual assault. In over one quarter of cases, the false allegations were made in a child custody case.

"Each year, millions of innocent Americans are falsely accused of abuse," explains SAVE spokesman Philip W. Cook. "These false allegations can strip persons of their assets, harm their families, and ruin their lives."

Swedish Court Convicts 23 Women over Child Porn

anthony · 20 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'While the world has gone used to seeing men get convicted over child pornography, a Swedish court has convicted 23 women over the despicable crime this time, proving that child abuse and sexual offenses are not exclusive to men, although the ring leader of these women is a man.

The ringleader in this case is 43-year-old Lars Skoglund, who distributed a considerable amount of pornographic material featuring children to the 23 women. He was convicted of aggravated child pornography and sentenced to one year in prison.

The Falun district court in central Sweden convicted the women and ordered them to pay fines ranging from $370 to $2658.

The 23 women, aged between 38 and 70, met Skoglund over the internet. He convinced the women to take his pornographic material and sell it for profit.'

Mom pleads guilty to feeding kids beer, cocaine

anthony · 20 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BRIDGEPORT, Connecticut — A Connecticut mother has pleaded guilty to charges that she forced her 4-year-old son to drink beer and gave her 10-month-old daughter beer and cocaine.

The Connecticut Post reports Juliette Dunn, of Bridgeport, pleaded guilty Wednesday to risk of injury to a child under the Alford Doctrine, where the defendant doesn't agree to the facts but agrees the state has enough evidence to win a conviction.

A companion, 33-year-old Lisa Jefferson, pleaded guilty to the same charges.

...

The warrant also stated that Dunn admitted to giving her son a bottle of beer every day, the TV station reported, and that when questioned by a social worker, the child was able to list off brands he liked and ones he didn't.

The children were turned over to the Department of Children and Families after 29-year-old Dunn's arrest. Custody hasn't been decided.'

IA Update on Recent Conference

Matt · 21 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA email:

I'm writing to let you know that our attendance at this year's American Academy of Pediatrics conference in Boston was a tremendous success.

Thanks to your support, we were able to place our Open Letter in the Boston Globe, as well as an ad in the daily conference newspaper. Hundreds of pediatricians stopped by our booth—some to ask questions and offer their support, others to debate, and still others to get educational materials for themselves and their patients.

Visit our website to see our Conference Report, which includes photos of the team—Georganne Chapin, Marilyn Milos, Amy Callan, and Dan Bollinger.

Though the conference is behind us, we're not letting up the pressure on America's pediatricians, family physicians, and obstetricians. PLEASE help us make an impact by sending your letters to the members of the AAP's Task Force on Circumcision, as well members of the American Academy of Family Physicians, and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, and tell them to Put Down The Knife!

Thank you so much for your continued support. Together, we're saving babies from genital mutilation.

Sincerely,

Georganne Chapin
Executive Director, Intact America
www.intactamerica.org

MSNBC: 'And sometimes the gentleman drops off his hat'

anthony · 21 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Check out this video. Apparently Rachael Maddow thinks men are idiots. She conducts a sarcastic tutorial trying to teach men how reproduction works. The segment is called --"The Man Caves Not-Too-Upsetting Guide To Down There Parts." Notice how she speaks in a condensing and simplistic tone. It reminds me of a parent teaching a 3 year old how to tie their shoes. You might want to fast forward to 4:18. The beginning is just political rhetoric.

Woman Severed Husband's Penis

Matt · 21 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This story here has been covered here on MANN already. I am running this article though to point up the tone and attitude of the author. She is basically saying that sometimes, it's OK to cut off your husband's penis while he sleeps, citing two possible reasons: suspected infidelity and unemployment. Imagine such an article written by a man justifying an equivalent assault on his sleeping wife for the same reasons? Excerpt:

'A penis is without a home after his wife was fed-up and done with his nonsense. Hey, maybe some of you men should read this and snap into shape, right? You never know when you might just push your significant other so far that she, uhm, cuts you off.

Sources report that a woman who is only identified as "Pan" chopped her husband's penis off with a pair of scissors after he passed out from a night of drinking and taking pills. She is being charged with assault and may face up to 12 years if she is convicted. The Vietnamese woman claims that the relationship of infidelity and abuse led to her actions, and she does not regret it in the slightest. She's glad for what she did, and she feels that she taught him a lesson.
...
So the moral of this story is pretty obvious. Men: Don't cheat on your women, especially if she's the one bringing home the income and busting her tail working every day to support you. Otherwise, don't expect much sympathy when you wake up without a penis.'

VAWA - Critically important that we get this message out

Matt · 21 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Leahy's Draft VAWA Bill is a Stinker

Sen. Patrick Leahy is currently circulating a draft of the Violence Against Women Act. Even though SAVE representatives repeatedly met with Sen. Leahy's staff over the last 2 years, and even though the staffer seemed sympathetic to our concerns, the draft VAWA totally, completely, 100% misses the mark. These are the reasons the draft bill is Dead on Arrival:

Nothing to make sure real victims get priority – see summary:
http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/Fatally-Flawed.pdf

-Zero attention to false allegations.
-Nothing to rein in DV lies.
-Nada to address mandatory arrest.
-No attempt to make VAWA gender-neutral.

Worse, the bill will take the Dept. of Education's directive on sexual assault on campus and turn the "preponderance of evidence" standard into statutory law – see page 69 of the draft bill:
http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/VAWA-2011-Draft.pdf

We need to raise a holy stink about this. Call your Senators today at 1-202-224-3121, and tell them to refuse to co-sponsor the bill. Sen. Leahy's bill is fatally flawed.

McDonald's cashier claims self-defense after brutal attack on female customers with metal bar

the_captain · 22 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A McDonald's cashier who swapped Happy Meals for jail fare after an ugly fast-food fight says he was goaded by a foul-mouthed customer who threatened to cut him up.

Rayon McIntosh, in an exclusive Rikers Island interview with the Daily News, said yesterday that he only smacked the woman and her friend with a metal bar after they jumped the counter and attacked him.

The first patron "started getting really aggressive," said McIntosh, giving his version of the brawl for the first time.
...

One of the women became outraged when McIntosh checked to see if the bill was genuine, as required by store policy.
...
The woman then spat at McIntosh, threatening to "cut me up," the fast food employee said. "Then she came over the counter and slaps me."

When the second woman jumped the counter to join in, McIntosh said his instinct for self-preservation kicked into high gear.

"I was being attacked by aggressive people I didn't know," said McIntosh. "I was just defending myself. They came in and went crazy on me."

A video camera caught McIntosh grabbing a metal bar used to clean grills and bashing the women. He was jailed on assault and weapons charges. The women were charged with criminal trespassing, menacing and disorderly conduct.'

Wendy J. Murphy: America's shameful un-equal protection clause

anthony · 22 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'It's Domestic Violence Awareness Month and a fresh pile of dead bodies reminds us that women and children are not worth very much in this country.
...
Many women have resorted to suicide because unequal justice is so out of control in this country, especially in Family Court, where judges often get it wrong because some "expert" wrote a report finding a child's allegation of abuse to be false. While bad parents sometimes use their children for tactical gain during divorce proceedings, studies show that false allegations are exceedingly rare and that the real problem is abusive men winning custody when they don't deserve it.
...

The American legal system has failed women and children for so long, violence against them has become the tolerated norm. It's time to give up the romantic notion that we can create stable families by ignoring children's desperate cries for help, and that we can stop sexual and domestic violence with "treatment" and restraining orders.

Between now and whenever we start getting it right, these ideas might help keep the body count down:

Women and children should carry wasp spray. It shoots long and far, stings like crazy, and unlike pepper spray, you don't need a license to carry.'

UK: Black schoolboys underachieving because 'academic success is seen as gay'

Broadsword · 22 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Adolph Cameron, head of the Jamaican Teachers' Association, said many boys perform poorly because their fear that appearing studious undermines their masculinity.

He claimed that many youngsters turn to a so-called “hustle culture” to make money, rather than chasing careers built on academic achievement and hard work. Mr Cameron warned that the attitude was affecting the academic standards of Afro-Caribbean boys both in Jamaica and in Britain.

They are one of England's worst-performing ethnic groups in schools. Last year just 40 per cent of Afro-Caribbean boys achieved five good GCSEs including English and maths, compared with the national average of 58.5 per cent. Mr Cameron told the BBC: "That notion of masculinity says that if as a male you aspire to perform highly it means you are feminine, even to the extent of saying you are gay.
...
"But in the context of Jamaica, which is so homophobic, male students don't want to be categorised in that way so that they would deliberately underperform in order that they are not."

In a lecture at an event in Bristol aimed at promoting the educational achievement of black boys and sponsored by the National Union of Teachers, Mr Cameron said that in Jamaica, boys were at least 10 percentage points behind girls in national tests.'

Police believe Texas mom fatally shot son, self

Matt · 23 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SACHSE, Texas (AP) — Police say they believe a mother in suburban Dallas fatally shot her 7-year-old son and then killed herself on Friday as police waited outside with her estranged husband, who was there to pick up the child after receiving court-ordered custody.

Sachse police say the father had been given sole custody of the boy after an acrimonious and drawn-out divorce. Police Chief Dennis Veach told The Dallas Morning News that a "third party" had asked police to be present when the father, who lives in Murphy, came to pick up his son (http://bit.ly/oVimFH).

"I think there was some thought that there would be a problem with the transfer," Veach said. "There was no expectation of this level of violence, by the third party who called us, or anyone."

Police said in a statement that officers outside the house just before 11 a.m. Friday heard three shots inside. They forcibly entered and found the 43-year-old woman and the boy dead in an upstairs bedroom. Police said it appears she shot the child, then killed herself.'

Acquisition of Erectile Dysfunction from Circumcision

Anonymous · 24 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new study in the International Journal of Men's Health shows that circumcised men have a 4.5 times greater chance of suffering from erectile dysfunction (ED) than intact men, revealing what appears to be a significant acquisition vector. Researchers Dan Bollinger and Robert S. Van Howe, M.D., M.S., FAAP found a strong association between circumcision and ED in their survey of 300 men (OR = 4.53, p=.0058). What other studies support this finding and what could be an underlying cause?

Eighteen percent of adult American men—three-fourths of whom are circumcised—have ED, affecting 18 million men. Circumcision's role as a risk factor may be reflected in ED drug sales; while the United States represents 5% of the world's population it also accounts for 46% of Viagra sales. Other studies have previously observed that circumcision's damage results in worsened erectile functioning, inability to maintain an erection, and reducing the glans sensitivity, including an overall penis sensitivity reduction by 75%. A recent study discovered that premature ejaculation is five times more likely when adjusted for erectile dysfunction and circumcision. A new Danish study also found that circumcised men are three times more likely to have ED.
...

Every man has the right to good sexual health and to feel sexual pleasure for full psychophysical wellbeing. Erectile dysfunction is devastating to the lives of so many men and their partners, which, when this new data is considered, calls elective circumcision into question.'

Bollinger D, Van Howe, RS. Alexithymia and circumcision trauma: A preliminary investigation. Int J Men's Health, 2011;10(2):184-95. Available online at:
http://www.mensstudies.com/content/2772r13175400432/?p=a7068101fbdd48819f10dd04dc1e19fb&pi=4

UK: Study says 9% of rape claims ‘false’

anthony · 24 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some 9 per cent of all rape allegations made to the gardai are false, according to research conducted for the state prosecutor’s office.

However, Director of Public Prosecutions James Hamilton said that, despite the research, his own experience of dealing with rape cases did not bear the findings out. “One of our studies suggested that it was as high as 9 per cent, but in my experience, it wouldn’t be anywhere near that high," Hamilton told The Sunday Business Post.

Hamilton, who retires next month after 12 years as the DPP, defended the handling by his office of rape complaints, including cases of historical clerical abuse. “One of the interesting statistics is that our overall conviction rate, comparing the number of convictions with the number of complaints made, is pretty well the same as in theUK,”Hamilton said.

“In the UK, they actually charge a lot more [people], but there’s a lower conviction rate. We charge fewer people than in the UK [as a percentage of alleged rapes based on reports to police], but the overall conviction rate is pretty much the same,which leads me to think that, if we charged more people, we would just get a lot more failed cases.'

Sobering Statistics regarding Children without Fathers

anthony · 24 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

*63% of youth suicides are from fatherless homes (US Dept. Of Health/Census) -- 5 times the average.

*90% of all homeless and runaway children are from fatherless homes -- 32 times the average.

*85% of all children who show behavior disorders come from fatherless homes -- 20 times the average. (Center for Disease Control)

*80% of rapists with anger problems come from fatherless homes -- 14 times the average. (Justice and Behavior, Vol 14, p. 403-26)

*71% of all high school dropouts come from fatherless homes -- 9 times the average. (National Principals Association Report)

*75% of all adolescent patients in chemical abuse centers come from fatherless homes – 10 times the average. (Rainbows for All God's Children)

*70% of youths in state-operated institutions come from fatherless homes – 9 times the average. (U.S. Dept. of Justice, Sept. 1988)

*85% of all youths in prison come from fatherless homes -- 20 times the average. (Fulton Co. Dept. of Correction)

Clearly, fathers represent a lot more than just a paycheck to a child; they represent safety, protection, guidance, friendship,and someone to look up to.

'Hey ladies, want a hit song? Bash a man!'

anthony · 24 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So go the lyrics to Kelly Clarkson recent Top 20 hit, “Mr. Know It All,” the lead single from her fifth studio album, “Stronger,” which dropped on Oct. 21. Another song on the album, “Einstein,” has a chorus that goes “I may not be Einstein/But I know dumb plus dumb equals you.”

Depending on your point of view — and perhaps your gender — these songs are either female empowerment anthems or male-bashing songs. Whatever the case, this mini-genre has become fashionable among female artists, with songs like Pink’s “U and Ur Hand,” Orianthi’s “According to You” and Britney Spears’ “Womanizer” all becoming big hits in the past few years. Vibe Magazine’s female arm, Vibe Vixen, even put together a list of “The 45 Greatest Male-Bashing Anthems” — and that list didn't even include any country songs (like Carrie Underwood’s “Before He Cheats”).
...
But according to Glenn Sacks, a men’s issues expert, the lyrics of songs by Clarkson and others are indicative of anti-male stereotypes found today in sitcoms, movies, and commercials, where men are seen as inept and foolish.

“I think it speaks to something larger in the culture,” Sacks said. “Where the man’s always wrong the woman’s behavior is never examined. I always found ‘Womanizer’ to be ironic because Britney had been married and divorced multiple times and is nobody to be pointing fingers about womanizing or being promiscuous or whatever.”'

Mum ordered to pay back sterile 'dad'

anthony · 24 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A MUM has been ordered to repay child support to a man she claimed was her son's father after he found he could not conceive.

The man spent nine years believing the child was his after what he says was a "one-night stand".

He told a court he believed the mother had manipulated the situation.

The woman has now been ordered to repay the $3730 he paid in child support.

The couple, who cannot be identified, met on the internet in late 2000 and had a brief rendezvous in 2001.

They lived in different states.

The woman claimed she believed he was the only person who could have been the dad.

She had him sign a statutory declaration stating he was the father so she could receive the family tax benefit.

But the man discovered last year, while trying to conceive a child with his new partner, that he was "physiologically incapable of conceiving a child".'

Man denied protective order, murdered by wife

Anonymous · 24 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'HELENA - A Helena man who was shot to death Thursday morning was denied an order of protection last month and filed for divorce two days before his estranged wife was charged with killing him.

The Independent Record reports 48-year-old Joseph Andrew Gable asked District Judge Dorothy McCarter for a temporary order of protection from Michelle Coller Gable on Sept. 20, alleging she was stalking him.

He said Michelle Gable had entered his apartment and started a confrontation in which she threw a laptop computer down the stairs.

McCarter denied the request, writing: "No personal danger or threat involved."

Michelle Gable is charged with two counts of deliberate homicide in the death of her husband and his female acquaintance at his apartment.'

Together for Girls Partnership: Ending Sexual Violence Against Girls

Minuteman · 25 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'In 2002, the World Health Organization estimated that 150 million girls and 75 million boys worldwide experienced sexual violence before the age of 18. Research shows that consequences of the sexual violence epidemic in children include increased risk of contracting HIV, as well as myriad debilitating mental health problems that affect social behaviors, education opportunity, emotional well-being, and overall quality of life.
...
The U.S. President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) acknowledges the importance of addressing sexual violence against girls as a global epidemic that connects directly to the spread of HIV/AIDS and is proud to collaborate with a groundbreaking partnership called Together for Girls. Together for Girls was launched in September 2009 at the annual meeting for the Clinton Global Initiative as a movement to end sexual violence.
...

Led by Michele Moloney-Kitts, the former Assistant U.S. Global AIDS Coordinator, the public-private partnership connects organizations including the U.S. Department of State's Office of the Global AIDS Coordinator/PEPFAR, the Office of Global Women's Issues, CDC Office of Violence Prevention, the Nduna Foundation, BD, the CDC Foundation, Grupo ABC, and five United Nations agencies, UNICEF, UNAIDS, UN Women, UNFPA and WHO.
...
In line with these efforts, the Government of Tanzania, with support from Together for Girls partners UNICEF and CDC, recently released a report on their National Study on Violence against Children (August 2011) and a national action plan to address the issues raised in the survey.
...
Emotional abuse in the home and physical abuse in schools, such as the 78 percent of girls and 67.4 percent of boys who report having been punched, kicked, or whipped over five times by a teacher in school, also highlighted areas for potential interventions.'

Men are called to fight abuse

anthony · 25 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Rape and domestic violence are thought of as women's issues," Calhoun County District Judge John Hallacy said Thursday. "But whose issue is it really? It's the one's who are committing the crime. Why are we as men ignoring the issue because it is our gender which is committing it."

...

About 95 percent of domestic violence cases are committed by men, officials said, and yet the problem, along with sexual assault, is considered an issue for women.

Hallacy said fathers and sons should have discussions about domestic violence and men should be role models in their treatment of women.

"My son asked me, 'What is domestic violence?' and it is uncomfortable but it's a conversation we need to have with our sons," he said. "They ask the question, 'why?' and why do men harm a woman who they are in a relationship with and who they love."'

ThyBlackMan.com: Domestic Violence Awareness Month: Adding Insult to Injury...

anthony · 25 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Domestic violence against men is a story that is rarely told. Their stories will not be readily posted in the headlines or shown on the evening news, simply because women are normally the ones reporting the abuse, not men. According to some statistics in 2008 The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) stated that 11.5 men reported being abused by their mates.

While conducting research for this article I discovered that there was much more information available on domestic violence against women than that of men. This would be expected and for a number of reasons.

Many men refuse to report domestic violence for fear of embarrassment, ridicule and that no one will believe them. Society says that men are supposed to be the stronger sex, not the weaker. Men are also afraid of mistakenly being viewed as the perpetrator and being hauled off to jail. When men do decide to call the police to report the abuse, they may be wrongfully locked up when the police arrive.
...

Abuse may be physical or mental, but both are forms of abuse. Any man can be a victim. He may be large or small in stature or financially rich or poor. Abuse can happen to anyone.

In 2006 the wife of Indianapolis Colts cornerback, Nick Harper stabbed him with a knife during an argument. According to ESPN the assault occurred because he was ignoring her and she wanted his attention.'

Panel: Boys should get vaccine for HPV too

anthony · 25 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No mention of girls getting vaccinated in part to prevent them from spreading the sexually transmitted virus to boys. Excerpt:

'A government panel wants young boys as well as girls to get the controversial HPV vaccine, in part to prevent them from spreading the sexually transmitted virus to girls.

The HPV vaccine has been recommended for young girls to protect them against cervical cancer and genital warts for the last five years. But the vaccine has been slow to catch on — only about a third of adolescent girls have gotten all three shots.

Experts say the HPV vaccine could protect boys against genital warts and some kinds of cancers. But they also say vaccinating 11- and 12-year old boys could help prevent them from spreading the human papillomavirus to girls.
...
There are two vaccines against HPV, but Tuesday's vote applies only to Merck & Co.'s Gardasil, which costs $130 a dose. The other vaccine wasn't tested for males.

An estimated 50 percent to 80 percent of men and women are infected with HPV in their lifestimes, although most clear the infection without developing symptoms or illness, according to the CDC.'

Cops: Mom killed sons for insurance money

anthony · 26 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CHARLESTON, S.C. — A South Carolina mother who told police her son killed three family members and himself has been charged with quadruple murder because she wanted their life insurance money, police said on Tuesday.

Susan Diane Hendricks, 48, was charged with the murder of her two sons, Matthew, 23, and Marshall, 20, her ex-husband Mark Hendricks, 52, and her stepmother, Linda Burns, who was in her mid-60s, police said.
...
Family members told police that Hendricks' motive was life insurance money. Hendricks was the beneficiary of multiple life insurance policies taken out by the victims, according to a police report.

Police said Hendricks killed the victims with a handgun that she kept in her night stand.

Pickens County Sheriff David Stone called it "a horrendous act of evil."
...
In 2006, Hendricks shot Doyle "Brian" Teague dead, telling police he had entered her home uninvited and threatened someone. Police determined she had acted in self-defense.'

Free Training Available For Quick Health Data Online - From The Office on Women's Health (OWH)

Minuteman · 26 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From an Office on Women's Health mailing list email:

'Free Training Available For Quick Health Data Online

The Department of Health and Human Services Office on Women's Health is pleased to announce the availability of free training for the online health statistics system, Quick Health Data Online. The system contains data on demographics, mortality, reproductive and maternal health, disease incidence, and access to care at the county level for all states and territories; additionally, data are included on prevention, violence, and mental health at the state level. To the extent possible, data are provided by race, ethnicity, and gender, and where applicable/available, by age. Also, the system incorporates graphing and mapping features so that the data of interest can be used directly as tables, graphs/chart, and maps.Please join us for a free training session!

Quick Health Data Online 101

QHDO 101 will provide an overview on health indicators available, preparing custom queries, and generating tables, graphs, and basic maps.

* Tuesday, November 15, 2011 at 4-5 p.m. (EST)
* Monday, December 14, 2011 at 2-3 p.m. (EST)

Quick Health Data Online 201

QHDO 201 will detail the comprehensive mapping features.

* Thursday, November 17, 2011 at 2-3 p.m. (EST)
* Wednesday, December 12, 2011 at 4-5 p.m. (EST)

Register today! The toll-free conference call number and other details are provided at the registration site. You need to be at a computer with Internet access and a telephone.'

Woman bites off boyfriend's testicles

Proud_to_be_a_man · 26 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Maria Topp, 44, from Wreckenton, Gateshead, Tyne and Wear, pleaded guilty to grievous bodily harm at Newcastle Crown Court.

She bit Martin Douglas, her partner of five years, during a drunken brawl at his flat in February.

She was granted bail to be sentenced next month and Recorder Robin Mairs warned her: "All options are open and that will include locking you up."

Topp, a mother of four with a blonde bob, bit Mr Douglas's testicles off at his flat in Waterloo Street, Newcastle, during the early hours of February 18.

She cannot remember biting her partner, but can recall their fight, and the court accepted that violence had been used by both sides.

Caroline Goodwin, defending, told a previous hearing: "The defendant was on her back with the victim straddling her."

Mr Douglas was so traumatised by his injuries that emergency services staff struggled to understand him when he dialled 999. The 45-year-old DJ later required 19 stitches to his wound.'

Senate Bill Would Further Undermine Due Process on Campus

anthony · 26 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Historically, most colleges used a “clear and convincing” evidence standard in student and faculty discipline cases, to safeguard due process. As Nicholas Trott Long noted in 1985 in the Journal of College and University Law, “Courts, universities, and student defendants all seem to agree that the appropriate standard of proof in student disciplinary cases is one of ‘clear and convincing’ evidence.” (Long, The Standard of Proof in Student Disciplinary Cases, 12 J.C. & U.L. 71 (1985)).

But in recent years, this due process safeguard has come under attack, most prominently in a legally-flawed April 4, 2011 “Dear Colleague” letter from the head of the U.S. Department of Education’s Office for Civil Rights, Russlynn Ali, who has demanded that colleges dilute the presumption of innocence in sexual harassment and assault cases by instead using a “preponderance of the evidence” standard that defines as guilty people who are as little as 50.001 percent likely to have committed the offense. I explained earlier why this demand was legally baseless, and not supported by either the Title IX statute or federal court rulings dealing with sexual harassment. (I was once a staff attorney at the Office for Civil Rights (OCR))

Now, the Senate draft bill to reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act (by Sen. Leahy’s Office) has inexplicably sought to expand the assault on due process. The draft VAWA bill would give OCR the power to set the “standard of proof” not only in harassment and rape cases, but also in other kinds of cases like “domestic violence,” “stalking,” and inappropriate behavior in dating relationships. It would do this even though OCR has jurisdiction (and expertise) only in certain kinds of discrimination cases (like sex discrimination and sexual harassment), not things like domestic violence.'

Students Say Teacher Plotted Insanity Defense

anthony · 26 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LEBANON, Ohio -- Two female students testified Tuesday that a Mason teacher accused of having sex with five male students hatched her defense before she was ever found out.

Stacy Schuler faces 16 charges of sexual battery and three charges of providing alcohol to minors for a series of incidents that occurred between August and December 2010.
...
KD testified that she and Schuler confided in each other about everything, including the events that occurred between Schuler and two male students.

"She told me that something had happened with RS and EK (the two students). She said she was really drunk and she thought something happened with RS," KD testified.

KD said that Schuler was crying as she told her that she was afraid of losing everything if anyone found out what happened.

She also testified that Schuler told her she had already thought of her defense if anyone found out.

"She said that if anyone found out, she already had her defense, that she would claim she was insane," KD testified.'

Self-Defense or Cold-Blooded Murder? Trial Begins for Mom Charged With Killing Neighbor

anthony · 26 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FORT DODGE, Iowa – A woman forced a 20-year-old neighbor to write a diary framing her ex-husband in a murder-for-hire scheme and then killed him because she didn't think he could keep his role a secret, a prosecutor said Wednesday at her first-degree murder trial.

Prosecutor Douglas Hammerand told jurors in an opening statement that Tracey Richter invited Dustin Wehde to her home on Dec. 13, 2001 and forced him to create a diary claiming he had been hired by her first husband, John Pitman, to kill her and her 11-year-old son Bert.
...
The prosecutor said as part of the plan, Richter had Wehde, a loner who had spent time hanging out with her husband, back later that night and shot him nine times from two guns. Three shots that went through the back of Wehde's head would have been instantly fatal, he said.

Richter, 45, of Omaha, is charged with first-degree murder in the shooting at her former home in Early, a small town 100 miles northwest of Des Moines. She claims she acted in self-defense and was hailed as a hero after the shooting by some gun rights advocates and TV personality Montel Williams, who applauded her story on national television.

She blew a kiss at her fiancee, who sat in the front row, as she entered the Fort Dodge courtroom. But she appeared to fight back tears as defense attorney Scott Bandstra shared her version of events -- that Wehde and another man broke into her home and strangled her with pantyhose before she was able to break free, unlock her gun safe and shoot Wehde. When he tried to get up, she shot him the last time with the second gun, the attorney said.'

New sexual assault mandate causes national controversy

anthony · 26 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The letter stated that in hearings for these cases, schools must adhere to a standard of "preponderance of evidence."

That means it is more likely than not that the accused committed the act. This is the lowest legal standard of evidence. The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) has been one of the most outspoken critics of the new mandate.

"This is too low of a standard," Will Creeley, the director of legal and public advocacy for FIRE, said. "This is the same standard used in hearings for speeding tickets."

The campus sexual harassment standards explained by the OCR letter are a part of Title IX, a U.S. law designed to ensure gender equality on campus. The letter reminded schools of their obligation to take immediate action against the harassment and address its effects.

"It is a college's moral and legal duty to respond to such allegations, but shifting the burden of evidence just leads to more innocent students being accused," Creeley said. "It doesn't increase justice, it just widens the net."

FIRE believes a "clear and convincing" evidence standard would serve both the victims and the accused more fairly.

"This move is well-intentioned, but lowering the standard is not the right way to go about it," Creeley said. "If there is an epidemic of these sexual assaults on campus, I don't think you lower that number by making it easier to accuse.'

Ashly Clark, Nebraska Mother, And Other Adults Accused Of Keeping 2 Boys In Wire Dog Kennel

anthony · 26 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NORTH PLATTE, Neb. (Associated Press) — Four children were removed from what authorities described as a filthy Nebraska trailer home where a 3-year-old boy and his 5-year-old brother were kept in a wire dog kennel, police said Tuesday.

North Platte officers went to the home late Monday after receiving a call from someone asking that police check on the welfare of the children living there, police Lt. Rich Hoaglund said. When officers went inside, they were met with the stench of urine and found trash and animal feces throughout the home, Hoaglund said.

An officer soon found two boys, ages 3 and 5, in a 30-by-42-inch wire dog kennel.

"They had a small child's mattress in there, and that's where both kids were sleeping," Hoaglund said. "The gate on that door was wired shut."

The children's mother, 22-year-old Ashly Clark, told officers she put her boys in the kennel at night to keep them from climbing out of the trailer through a window, Hoaglund said.'

Action Alert: F & F Joins with MA Domestic Violence Organization Jane Doe to Protest Ad

Matt · 26 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Alert here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families has joined with Jane Doe Inc., The Massachusetts Coalition Against Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence in a joint letter to protest an advertisement from the luxury shoes, clothing, and bags company Jimmy Choo Ltd. The ad appears both on their website and in many of their storefronts. We explained:

Unwittingly, your ad both trivializes domestic violence and makes it appear that partner abuse is acceptable. The man in the photo appears to be in fear and possibly in pain or even dead, and the woman pictured seems to be about to put her full weight on the man's skull.

We suggest you call Jimmy Choo Ltd CEO Joshua Schulman and Chief Creative Officer Tamara Mellon and let them know that the ad is offensive and should be removed. They can be reached in their New York office at (212) 319-1111.'

Ed note: The image in the ad can be seen here.

Young boy wishes to join Girl Scouts - and the GSA seems like they will let him

Matt · 26 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Bobby Montoya is a 7-year-old boy from Denver. Unlike a lot of young boys, Bobby has no desire to join the Boy Scouts. Instead, he wants to be a Girl Scout.

We first saw Montoya's story over at 9news.com. The NBC affiliate reports that when the boy's mother, Felisha Archuleta, tried to sign her son up for Girl Scouts, a troop leader told her no.
...
We placed a call to Rachelle Trujillo, vice president of communications at Girl Scouts of Colorado, for further clarification. She replied with this statement: "Girl Scouts is an inclusive organization, and we accept all girls in kindergarten through 12th grade as members. If a child lives life as a girl and the family brings the child to us to participate in Girl Scouts, Girl Scouts of Colorado welcomes her. Girl Scouts of Colorado respects the privacy of all girls and families we work with. When a family requests membership for their daughter, we do not require proof of gender, we respect the decisions of families."

So it would seem that Bobby will get his wish. Gender-identity issues are becoming more common, especially among young children--which makes it more likely that the policy of the Girl Scouts will face future tests in the months and years ahead.'

SAVE: Sen. Leahy's Draft VAWA is a Stinker

Matt · 26 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Sen. Patrick Leahy is currently circulating a draft of the Violence Against Women Act: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/VAWA-2011-Draft.pdf. Even though SAVE representatives met with Sen. Leahy's staff over the last 2 years, the draft VAWA totally, completely, 100% misses the mark. These are the reasons why the draft bill is Dead on Arrival:

- Nothing to make sure real victims get priority - see summary: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/Fatally-Flawed.pdf
- Zero attention to false allegations.
- Nothing to rein in DV lies.
- Nada to address mandatory arrest.
- No attempt to make VAWA gender-neutral

Worse, the bill will take the Dept. of Education's directive on sexual assault on campus and turn the "preponderance of evidence" standard into statutory law.

We need to raise a big stink about this. Call your Senators today at 1-202-224-3121, and tell them to refuse to co-sponsor the bill. Sen. Leahy's bill is fatally flawed.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Ten Worst Stereotypes About Powerful Women

el cid · 27 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. More whining about how unfair life is to female leaders. Don't know how to break it to these women but it's just the way life is once you leave the kitchen. Even God isn't liked by everyone. Excerpt:

'"A woman who shows emotion in the workplace is often cast as too fragile or unstable to lead," Bock said. "A woman who shows no emotion and keeps it hyper-professional is icy and unfeminine. For many women, it can be a no-win situation."'

Kinda reminds me of what is often said about men. If they're too emotional, they're weak. If they clam up, they're told they need to show their emotions. It's often a no-win situation for men. What a coincidence.

Jenna Lyons, You and J. Crew Wanted Your Son to Stop Being Such a Boy

anthony · 27 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last spring, I told you that Jenna Lyons, J. Crew's president and creative director, wasn't just having a little, harmless fun with her son Beckett when she published a photograph of herself painting his toenails hot pink in a J. Crew catalogue—a catalogue distributed to millions of people.

The quote accompanying the image of Beckett read, "Lucky for me, I ended up with a boy whose favorite color is pink. Toenail painting is way more fun in neon."

I said Lyons was making a cultural statement about masculinity no longer being important to boys—that she was, essentially, uncomfortable with his gender.

But I didn't just think that. I thought Lyons was promoting a cultural agenda at her son's expense—and at the expense of all our sons whose masculinity was being downplayed. Why else would you pick that photograph, decide for Beckett that it was a really good one with which to brand him in the minds of millions, and make sure that his hair was long and wavy for the photo shoot? Why spend tens of thousands of dollars (or a hundred thousand or more) to distribute that particular photo of Beckett to millions of us.
...
What it says is that my worry that Ms. Lyons' might be expressing her own discomfort with masculinity and projecting it onto her son—and mine, and yours—seems to have been justified.'

South Carolina Aunt Accused of Attacking Nephew for Using Toilet Paper

anthony · 27 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'UNION, S.C. (AP) — Union police say a 53-year-old woman has been arrested after she attacked her nephew because he used her toilet paper.

Authorities said they were called to a home Tuesday night by a 27-year-old man who said his aunt threw an ash tray at him that missed, then punched him in the face and pulled his hair.

The man told officers that Linda Johnson was angry because he used the toilet paper she bought.

Police say Johnson was sitting on the porch at the home and told officers she was ready to be taken to jail.

Johnson was charged with assault and battery. It wasn't clear if she had an attorney.'

F&F: Success: Jimmy Choo Ltd Agrees to Remove Offensive Ad

Matt · 27 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Fathers and Families joined with Jane Doe Inc., The Massachusetts Coalition Against Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence this week in a joint letter to protest an advertisement from the luxury shoes, clothing, and bags company Jimmy Choo Ltd. The ad, which depicts a woman stepping on a man's head as he lies prone on the floor, appears on their website, in print ads, and in many of their storefronts. We explained:

'Unwittingly, your ad both trivializes domestic violence and makes it appear that partner abuse is acceptable. The man in the photo appears to be in fear and possibly in pain or even dead, and the woman pictured seems to be about to put her full weight on the man’s skull.'

Yesterday we asked our members to call Jimmy Choo Ltd to protest. Your response has been overwhelming, and we're pleased to report that Jimmy Choo Ltd has now agreed to remove the offensive ad from all of their stores, all print media, and their website. They emphasize that they did not mean to offend, and they apologize.

We commend Jimmy Choo Ltd for understanding our concerns and acting so quickly.

We also thank Jane Doe Inc. Director of Communications Toni K. Troop for her important work on this issue.

Our original letter to Jimmy Choo Ltd can be seen in its entirety here.

With best regards,

Glenn Sacks, MA
Executive Director,
Fathers and Families

SAVE: Leahy Bill Would Turn Every College Male into a Rape Suspect, Group Warns

Matt · 27 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Washington, DC/October 27, 2011 – Senator Patrick Leahy's proposed Violence Against Women Act reauthorization would trample upon the due process rights of college students, according to Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE). The bill would make into law the Department of Education's recently issued guidelines that reduce the standard of proof in sexual assault cases to the controversial "preponderance of evidence" level.

That unusually low standard requires only that 50.01 percent of the evidence be in favor of an assault having happened. SAVE previously requested the Department of Education to rescind its guidelines, which were issued without prior notice or opportunity for public comment: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/OCRLetter.pdf.

Earlier this month, Caleb Warner was allowed to return to the University of North Dakota after being victimized by the university's unconstitutionally low standard of evidence. The accuser had filed claims of sexual assault with both the University and the municipal police department. Two investigations resulted -- the university's according to the preponderance standard, and the police's according to the usual "clear and convincing" standard -- and they could not have turned out more differently.'

Women -- The Unacknowledged Source Of Overpopulation

redwoodwriter · 27 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

It's totally taboo even to mention it, but by the way, did you notice this earth is getting pretty crowded? We just hit 7 Billion, with a B. Why is world population out of control? Why can't we talk about this topic in polite company? Is it because having babies is considered a sacred right of all women, no matter what the consequences on the rest of the world? Is it verboten to even mention the topic because it would in some way put women at a disadvantage? Is it verboten because it would mean that individual women would have to act more responsibly? Have we once again allowed women to be selfish, and in the process damaged a wide variety of others (including animals, plants, etc.)? Is this not the de facto credo of feminism -- giving every woman a right to be selfish, no matter what the consequences on others?

Absent fathers are fuelling drug addiction, anti-social behaviour and crime among young people, says charity report

Broadsword · 28 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Absentee fathers are driving high levels of addition, anti-social behaviour and crime, a new report has revealed. Children growing up in fatherless families are turning to self-harm as well as criminal activity, fuelled by their sense of abandonment and lack of self-esteem.

...

Many of the youngsters interviewed for the Dad and Me report, which was commissioned by charity Addaction, said they had sought affirmation and affection from gang membership and turned to drugs to numb the pain.

The fatherless young people were found to be almost 70 per cent more likely to take drugs and 76 per cent more likely to turn to crime.

The report says: ‘Young people are struggling to find a sense of purpose within their families, schools, and community , and believe that peers provide them with what they need.

‘The continuing desire to join a gang, engage in antisocial behaviour and risky lifestyles combined with the need to carry a weapon as a form of protection has become the norm for many."

"no girls allowed..."

anthony · 28 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'… It takes an almost monumental amount of effort to help my son secure a place in his life where he can just be boy. I realize that as I single mother I can not replace the absence of his father and fatherly influences so I don't even try.

Instead, I actively seek opportunities and organizations that cater to young men and, more specifically, are led by positive masculine role models. This is no small task. In schools the majority of instructors are female… and liberal. Deadly combinations to a young man. Most of these female teachers do not like boys and will be quick to tell you young men are always their most difficult students. Instead of recognizing there exists major biological differences in how boys and girls learn these 'educators' attack young men as 'problem children' and suggest they be fed Ritalin. You can thank feminism for this. Feminism was not a champion of women's rights and gender equality. That was just a ruse. The real agenda of feminism was to indoctrinate into society the belief that women are better than men. To a liberal and feminist, qualities associated with manhood are bad and aggressive. So young men in school are not allowed to rough house on the playground or be competitive in sports and academics.'

Is there a double standard between male and female sex offenders?

anthony · 28 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CINCINNATI, OH (FOX19) - There is the public perception that women sexual offenders seem to get more sympathy than if the sexual offender is a man.

Attorney Lisa Wells says the Stacey Schuler case is a prime example.

"There is a bias in this case and it is of course based on gender. If we were talking about a male teacher here it'd be that he needs to go to prison and for a very long time," said Wells.

Stacey Schuler faced up to 18 years in prison, but only got four years and could be out in as little as six months.

"If we were talking about female victims there would be all kinds of backlash about it, but since these are male athletic students who are generally assumed to be popular, who have good GPAs and are going to college, we look at her and say they weren't that scarred so there's definitely bias in her favor." said Wells.'

Are Dad Bloggers Attacking Father Stereotypes or Windmills?

anthony · 28 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Am I implying the “dumb dad” shtick and other negative stereotypes don’t exists? Not at all. However, pointing to the demigod-like fathers of the 50’s as the gold standard for pop culture paternity is a poor argument for demanding a modern reboot. In a sense, these depictions of infallible fathers were the least realistic of them all. Furthermore, to say that TV dads have only declined since is a faulty assumption too because for every bad dad shown over the ensuing decades, a good one can be found to counter it. Even today, for every Tony Soprano and Peter Griffin, there’s a Don Draper and Homer Simpson (Gasp! That’s right, Draper and Simpson. Ask me why in LA.)

The truth of it is, the media doesn’t get motherhood right either. Michael Keaton’s Mr. Mom isn’t any more accurate than Diane Keaton ’s supermom in Baby Boom. In those early years, behind every all-knowing dad stood a mom in heels and pearls mopping a floor; now behind every fat slob in a La-Z-Boy stands a disproportionally gorgeous wife and mother bringing him nachos before the big game. Yeah, that’s realistic.

Still, these inaccurate portrayals aren’t going to change, not as long as profits can be made from them. To network and ad execs, dumb dads and tolerant wives are merely tropes—story devices meant to contextualize whatever it is they’re hawking. In ad campaigns marketers use mom and dad as tropes in several ways, for example: 1) The Empowered Woman and Impotent Man where a woman is told she doesn’t need a man to make a purchase decision when she can dupe him instead, and 2) The Oafish Man and Longsuffering Woman who accepts that she can’t change her bumbling man and endures aided by consumer products.'

"Abortion Hurts Men" Campaign Continuing

anthony · 28 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Between new billboards and new public speakers, it's becoming more clear that the next wave of the anti-choice war is to recruit men to talk their partners out of abortions.
...

> "…[T]his study adds new depth to our understanding of this neglected population. The recurring meaning of abortion for the men in this study was that of profound loss and a common reaction to that loss was anger. The men experienced significant, multiple losses related to relationships with their partners, their masculine identify, their self of self-esteem or self-worth, and fatherhood. For some men, the abortion raised issues related to disappointment in their own fathers as well as to perceptions of themselves as fathers. For all of the men, abortion entailed a much more complex loss than has generally been recognized."
>
> The authors freely admit the limitations—the number is small and is comprised of men "who self-identify as having been harmed by the experience." They call for more investigation. But they also make a very important statement:
>
> "This may or may not represent a minority of men, since the prevalence of men who experience significant psychological sequelae after abortion is not known at this time."

Yet another avenue to cutting off a woman's right to choose -- partner coerced pregnancy. Ironic, since the most recent set of state restrictions pushed by the anti-choice advocates were reminding a woman that it is illegal for a partner to coerce you into ending a pregnancy.'

Objecting to the proposed change in the definition of 'Rape'

Matt · 28 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email from a reader:

Here is a way to send the FBI a letter through a feminist site. I wrote asking that the definition of rape not include when a woman is under the influence of drugs or alcohol. Here is my letter. I wrote both men. Feel free to use it (though it does have a couple grammatical errors) if you want others to also write in. Thanks.

"Dear Mr. Mueller,

I applaud your efforts to change the definition of rape. However, I find it appalling and degrading to women if you include that women under the influence of drugs or alcohol can not be responsible for giving consent. If a woman is empowered and independent enough to choose whether to have an abortion or not, then a woman can choose whether or not to have a couple of drinks with dinner and be responsible enough to subsequently consent to have sexual relations without it being a rape charge for her partner. By including this "under the influence" clause in the rape definition, you will also cause many innocent men to have their lives ruined by being branded a rapist. Do you want countless innocent men going to prison for decades because of this decision you have made? What if the woman had a couple of drinks before her partner arrives at her home? Is he supposed to issue a breathalyzer? What if she smoked some pot before he arrived? Is he supposed to have her take a blood test and wait for the results? This would cause hundreds if not thousands of men to be labeled rapists when they had no such intentions whatsoever. A woman can say no when offered a drink and choose not to drink if she knows there might be a chance of sexual relations forthcoming.

What if the woman is setting a man up just to get back at some perceived injustice? She can have sex with him and then take a few drinks and call in a rape charge after the fact. Is this definition of rape made to count true non-consensual rapes or made to trick men and count rapes that never were intented as such? Also, if both are under the influence, how does one know that the woman didn't initiate and take control and force sex without his consent? Would she be subject to rape charges as well? If a woman chooses to consume or partake of illicit drugs, should we then blame a man for his desire to be passionate? The woman can choose not to take illicit drugs. It is her choice and she knows the consequences beforehand. Are we then to also remove the responsibility of women who drink and then drive and kill somebody too? There is no difference here. In both instances it is a woman's choosing to take a drink or drugs knowing full well the possible consequences of her actions.

I hope you will answer to reason and common sense.

Thank you"

Conference Report: "Law, Human Rights, and Non-Therapeutic Interventions on Children"

Matt · 28 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email from Steven Svoboda. This report can also be downloaded here.

I participated in a conference organized by the UK-based Genital Autonomy organization and by the University of Keele. The conference, entitled "Law, Human Rights, and Non-Therapeutic Interventions on Children," was held on August 31-September 1 at the University of Keele in Keele, UK.

Genital autonomy refers to the principle that all minors--male, female, and intersex alike--should be protected from genital cutting that is not medically necessary. The conference organizers, including David Smith of Genital Autonomy and Michael Thomson of the University of Keele, used a very creative approach to the conference, bringing together a mix of, on the one hand, intactivists, and on the other hand, academics and officials whose interests and inclinations align somewhat with ours but who are mostly not associated with intactivism.

The conference was devoted to considering all aspects of genital autonomy, though it concentrated primarily on intactivism and secondarily on female genital cutting (FGC). Some famous, long-standing activists against FGC spoke, including Efua Dorkenoo of Equality Now on "FGM and Human Rights" and Comfort Momoh of the University of London and FORWARD on "FGM--An Overview."

Two authors of recent influential papers on intactivist-related issues participated, and both their papers and the opportunity to interact with them were highlights of the conference. Drake University Politics Professor Debra DeLaet addressed "Genital Autonomy and Children's Rights in International Law" while Matthew Johnson discussed "Dealing with Invasive Religious Rights: Should the NHS Offer Circumcision to Diminish Harm?" Former Tasmanian Chidlren's Commissioner Paul Mason traveled all the way from his homeland to deliver a talk entitled, "'So You Think Medically Unnecessary Circumcision Breaches Human Rights Law': The Other Side of the Coin."

Several presenters appeared for the first time at an intactivism-related conference, offering fresh perspectives. Youthful Travis Wisdom fought off illness to brilliantly analyze intactivism using a feminist analytical framework. Gert Van Dijk, one of the main movers behind the Royal Dutch Medical Association's recent forceful anti-circumcision position statement and ensuing anti-circumcision programme, examined the relationship of the right to bodily integrity and religious freedom. Antony Lempert of the Secular Medical Forum, who was recently interviewed to stunning effect in a video available online, discussed "Conscience and Foreskins: A Medical Paradox." UK Professors Michael Thomson and Marie Fox delivered well-prepared and thoroughly researched meditations on health law and genital integrity.

The organizers even managed to get the Metropolitan Police to attend the entire conference and to present a film they prepared on the FGC topic. Unfortunately Sarah Graham was unable to be present to discuss her experiences with intersex activism. Instead the delegates were shown an interview with Hida Viloria who is a spokesperson for OII that promoted a lively discussion, and John Geisheker of Doctors Opposing Circumcision did double duty, discussing last year's flip flip by the American Academy of Pediatrics on the acceptability of less severe forms of FGC, and also examining recent events regarding the San Francisco ballot initiative and the ensuing court case.

I presented a well-received paper that examined common concerns of the three branches of genital autonomy, entitled, "Proecting All from Genital Cutting--Law, Human Rights, and Demedicalization." The process of preparing this paper was itself very valuable and I found fascinating and instructive the opportunity to present a paper for the first time on the interrelationship between intactivism and activism against other forms of genital cutting.

The cross-fertilization was extremely beneficial and enlightening. Also the high quality of the presentations and the intimate, relaxed setting of the conference allowed us all to connect, share ideas, and get to know each other over the two days. To use a British word, the conference was no less than a smashing success.

Steven Svoboda
Attorneys for the Rights of the Child

Ohio Gym Teacher Jailed for Sex With Students

Matt · 28 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Guilty on 16 counts of sexual battery and she gets... 4 years in jail, eligible for parole in six months. A sentencing disparity? Nahhh, none here! Sure. It's so outrageous that it's even gotten press time. Now it has to be pretty bad for that to happen. Excerpt:

'A popular Ohio high school gym teacher has been sentenced to four years in jail after a judge rejected her insanity defense and convicted her on 16 counts of sexual battery for sleeping with several of her former students.

Stacy Schuler, a former gym and health teacher, had sex with five former students, some of whom were football players, at the school in suburban Cincinnati, where she taught since 2000. During her trial, which ended Thursday, Schuler's lawyers defended her actions with explanations ranging from her vegan diet, the use of the antidepressants, blackouts from alcohol and even irritable bowel syndrome, claiming it rendered her unable to determine right from wrong.

Although several students testified on her behalf, the decision to reject the defense prompted some tough words from the judge hearing Schuler's case, who said it would be a "magnificent leap" believing she had no idea her actions were wrong.

"This is a noble profession that you have, and I've heard a lot of good things about you, but I know that you had the opportunity, as all teachers do, to affect the lives of our children," Warren County Common Pleas Judge Robert Peeler said. "You crossed a line."

...

One of the victim's fathers testified at the trial of how his son was negatively affected by Schuler's actions.

"He suffered from depression, loss of motivation … almost didn't go to college -- he was angry at home and he didn't want to be around family or anyone -- my son was not who he used to be," the father said.

...

Although Schuler declined to comment on her own behalf after her sentencing, she cried as she was handcuffed and led out of the courtroom, The Associated Press reported.

Sentenced to four years in jail, Schuler will be eligible for parole in six month, but she will be labeled a sexual offender and required to register her address every 90 days for the rest of her life.'

Woman charged with pimping teen recruited at Occupy NH rally

Matt · 29 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MANCHESTER - A city woman is accused of pimping a 16-year-old girl she met in Victory Park during the Occupy NH demonstrations.

Justina Jensen, 23, of 341 Hanover St., is charged with felony prostitution. Police allege Jensen met a teen at the local protest, which is an offshoot of Occupy Wall Street, and used the Internet to arrange a first liaison for the girl with a man who turned out to be an undercover police officer.

Police said the teen's mother called them Thursday about noon to say her daughter was missing and that her photograph had been posted on a website advertising adult party entertainment.
...

The missing teen was found inside Jensen's third-floor apartment. Court documents show the teenage girl told police that Jensen had taken her photo and posted it on the website and said Jensen was going to start training her to be a prostitute, with her first customer scheduled to be “Mad Mike.”

Police said Jensen was using her residence to facilitate prostitution involving an individual under the age of 18, so she is charged with felony prostitution. She was also charged with misdemeanor resisting arrest.
...
Cunha said that in addition to concern for public safety, there is concern about two suicide attempts made by Jensen following her arrest. He said she attempted to strangle herself with her shoelaces when she was left alone briefly in an interview room at the police department and, after she was taken to the Elliot Hospital, attempted to strangle herself with the ties of the hospital jonny. Cunha said Jensen struggled so violently at the hospital that she had to be sedated.'

Australia: Queensland's Minister for women - men should "end their violence against women and children and other men"

Minuteman · 29 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Queensland's Minister for Women has criticised Bob Katter over his views on domestic violence, after the independent MP said overcrowding in homes was to blame for the social problem.

Karen Struthers said Mr Katter was oversimplifying the problem and called on the federal independent MP to show leadership on the issue.

"Mr Katter in his leadership role should be calling on men to take responsibility for their violence and end their violence against women and children andother men," she told ABC Radio.'

Woman guilty of trying to burn husband to death during nap

anthony · 29 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ORLANDO, Fla. — A Florida woman was convicted of trying to murder her husband by setting the couple's bedroom on fire while he napped, in one of two suspected attempts to kill him, authorities said on Saturday.

Kimberly Boone, 46, who investigators believe tried twice over four months to kill Robert Boone for his life insurance money, was convicted of attempted murder and arson, a spokesman for the Seminole County Jail booking center said. She is scheduled to be sentenced on Dec. 5. A jury deliberated four hours on Friday before issuing the verdict.

Prosecutors said Kimberly Boone, a college financial aid manager from Winter Springs, Florida, set the couple's bedroom on fire in December 2008 while Robert Boone slept. She drugged her husband with the anti-anxiety medication Xanax, making it harder for him to escape the fire, they said.
...
She was not arrested for the arson and attempted murder until four months later, in April 2009, when Robert Boone was shot in the chest while checking on his wife's concern about noises in the garage.'

Wikipedia edits Men's Rights section

anthony · 29 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this year, we learned that men greatly outnumbered women among Wikipedia editors. But now the site's article on men's rights has been through a controversial edit, and some men are calling Wikipedia "feminist propaganda."

The trouble seems to have began late last month, when editors, including one Kevin Gorman, began rewriting Wikipedia's Men's rights page. Gorman explained the rationale for his edits thus:

"...
I'm not going to be removing these completely, but will also be looking to repair:

Any section where MRA positions are presented as mainstream positions, or sections where most of the section is talking about MRA positions [...]

Any section that talks about issues that are specific to the global north that makes statements like "A primary concern about men's rights is..." [...]"
...
It's true that people coming to the "men's rights" page looking for information on men's rights activism may be disappointed or confused — Wikipedia might consider adding a disambiguation directing users to a page on MRAs. Such a page exists, in nascent form, under the title "Men's movement," but there's certainly room for expansion. Men's rights activism, however disturbing some of its proponents are, is a real movement deserving of (neutral, unbiased) coverage on Wikipedia. But this doesn't mean that efforts to root out biased or poorly sourced material are part of some sort of feminist conspiracy, or that attempts to close Wikipedia's gender gap are an evil matriarchal plan to take over the world's information. In fact, women in particular and rational people in general may be scared away from Wikipedia entirely if the most basic efforts to make the site "a professional and respectful environment" are recast as meddling by "dykes and dweebs."'

Wikipedia Contact: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Wikipedia:Contact_us

---
Ed. note: Re the Wikipedia Volunteer Response Team: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Wikipedia:VRT

Title IX Causes Inequity

anthony · 30 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While Title IX's goals are admirable, it has not worked out in practice as it was meant to. Its implementation dictated that colleges had to balance the numbers of female and male athletes to mirror the student population at their institutions. In theory, it was as simple as creating more female sports teams to even out the number of scholarship athletes between the two genders. But in practice, many males suffered as a result of this legislation.

Male athletes from all over the country were told that their sports would be cut and they would have to provide an education for themselves. Young men who had dreamt of playing a sport in college, many of whom could not pay for an education if it weren't for their full-ride scholarships, were left out to dry.

That isn't equality, but a ludicrous attempt to justify more discrimination. Not one critic of Title IX will argue that creating more athletic opportunities for women is a bad thing. But discriminating against males to fill a quota for athletic departments is just as wrong as exclusion.'

'Complaining for our rights'

anthony · 30 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Perhaps this is why I was so shocked — and yes, slightly horrified — by claims made by a men's rights organization.

Of all the ludicrous ideas that work their way into reality, never once did it occur to me that men would claim to be discriminated against.

There has been quite a bit of buzz around campus in regard to the Men's Rights Movement Group at ASU. This organization is focused on protecting men's rights on campus and eliminating male discrimination.

After reading the "key priorities" listed on their website, I couldn't help but wonder if I was looking at a sort of satirical piece or "Saturday Night Live" skit. Some bizarre goals included, "Eliminate all institutional and social gender-based discrimination, including 'Ladies nights' at bars."

Maybe I am totally off-base here, but is ladies' night really degrading any man's place in society? I will give these gentlemen the benefit of the doubt and assume gender discrimination of any form is what they're really attempting to target.'

How Social Security redistributes money from men to women

anthony · 31 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Social Security benefits are doled out according to a progressive formula, meaning that lower earners receive a bigger fraction of their lifetime earnings than higher earners in an attempt to address income inequality. But a new study shows that the wage gap between men and women wipes out a lot of that redistribution when you look at benefits received per household, rather than per individual. In other words, the gender wage gap makes Social Security benefit system a lot less progressive than it might seem, essentially redistributing funds from higher-earning men to lower-earning women. Here's what Alan L. Gustman, Thomas L. Steinmeier and Nahid Tabatabai say in their new National Bureau of Economic Research working paper:

> Studies using data from the early 1990s suggested that while the progressive Social Security benefit formula succeeded in redistributing benefits from individuals with high earnings to individuals with low earnings, it was much less successful in redistributing benefits from households with high earnings to households with low earnings. Wives often earned much less than their husbands. As a result, much of the redistribution at the individual level was effectively from high earning husbands to their own lower earning wives. In addition, spouse and survivor benefits accrue disproportionately to women from high income households. Both factors mitigate redistribution at the household level.

The Herman Cain Harassment Hit

anthony · 31 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sexual harassment returns, and now it's all about vague gestures.

...

This weekend, the Politico website devoted four reporters to bringing us the horrifying tale of two anonymous women who claim Herman Cain made vaguely inappropriate gestures at them ten years ago, when he was head of the National Restaurant Association:

> On the details of Cain's allegedly inappropriate behavior with the two women, POLITICO has a half-dozen sources shedding light on different aspects of the complaints.
>
> The sources — which include the recollections of close associates and other documentation — describe episodes that left the women upset and offended. These incidents include conversations allegedly filled with innuendo or personal questions of a sexually suggestive nature, taking place at hotels during conferences, at other officially sanctioned restaurant association events and at the association's offices. There were also descriptions of physical gestures that were not overtly sexual but that made women who experienced or witnessed them uncomfortable and that they regarded as improper in a professional relationship.

(Emphasis mine.) Not only has "sexual harassment" returned with a vengeance, but now it doesn't even have to be "overtly sexual."

Wrongly Accused UND Student Will Not Return To UND

anthony · 31 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The mother of a UND student who was falsely accused of sexual assault and kicked out of school says her son will not return to UND.

Sherry Warner-Seefeld says her son Caleb Warner just wants to put the incident behind him and get on with his life. Nearly two years after being accused of rape Warner's expulsion was reversed.

Despite being cleared of the charges, Warner wasn't able to get his expulsion reversed until he brought in the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education to represent his case.

...

Warner's accuser, a UND student at the time, was charged with making false allegations.

Despite being cleared of the charges, Warner wasn't able to get his expulsion reversed.

That is until just about a week ago when UND vacated the expulsion after Warner brought in the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education to represent his case.

UND had refused to reopen the case as late as August 2010.

The school told Caleb Warner not to set foot on campus for three years, after a student relations committee ruling in February 2010.'

New Zealand: Classes for teen dads

anthony · 31 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I wonder if a similar program about child safety exists for teen girls or do they assume only teenage boys are incompetent unless taught otherwise. Excerpt:

'A new course for teenage dads is opening the eyes of young fathers to a brighter future with their children.

Run by the Otara Health Charitable Trust the Teen Parent Programme mentoring initiative is giving young fathers the confidence to be better parents.

Alom William is one of those reaping the benefits.

As the primary caregiver for both of his children, aged six and four years old, he struggled with his role as a young dad.

But the course has given him some tools to be a better father, he says.

"It was a wake-up call to learn about things like sudden unexplained death in infancy syndrome, safety for children and then the legal stuff like children's rights and access.'

'Men don high heels to raise awareness about domestic violence'

anthony · 31 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Walk a Mile in Her Shoes event, which assembled near at the Skowhegan Chamber of Commerce building, was organized by the Somerset Domestic Violence Task Force, Family Violence Project and Sexual Assault Crisis and Support. Organizers encouraged men to don high heels to illustrate the point that masculinity isn't about violence against women.

...

"They're pretty tight, but it just represents the idea that oftentimes as men, we're sort of self-centered and don't put ourselves in someone's else's shoes. Empathy really has to be encouraged in men," Heath said. "I think all of us are here to bring into the forefront the impact domestic violence is having on families and, most importantly, women in Maine. The deaths that have resulted just this year have impacted the whole community."'

The Hattie Cabinet: Harman 'riding roughshod' over Miliband as she launches women-only frontbench team

anthony · 31 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harriet Harman was yesterday accused of 'riding roughshod' over Labour leader Ed Miliband after she launched a new bid to boost the power of women Labour MPs.

Ms Harman, Labour's deputy leader, sparked fury among male party colleagues by announcing that the 11 women in the Shadow Cabinet were holding their own meetings.

They said Ms Harman informed the Labour leader of the plan – already being dubbed 'Harriet's Kitchen Cabinet' – at a full Shadow Cabinet meeting earlier this month.

One witness told The Mail on Sunday that towards the end of the meeting, Ms Harman mentioned that the women members would be meeting on their own. The source added: 'The blokes on the Shadow Cabinet just looked at each other as if to say, what the hell is all this about?

'Harriet then said that as the Tories were now losing the women's vote, it was important that we made sure our policies appeal to female voters.

'But even Ed looked a bit surprised and joked, “When are the men going to meet then?” and when nobody laughed, he said, “Sorry, not a great joke.”'

'But it really is a load of politically correct, feminist claptrap. She's riding roughshod over Ed.'

Survey: More professional women choosing time over money

anthony · 31 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new nationwide survey shows that Willis, 44, may not be alone. A women and workplace survey from More magazine shows that 43% of the women surveyed say they are less ambitious now than they were a decade ago. And only a quarter of the 500 women ages 35 to 60 say they're working toward their next promotion.

And forget about the corner office: 3 out of 4 women in the survey — 73% — say they would not apply for their boss' job. Almost 2 of 5 — 38% — report they don't want to put up with the stress, office politics and responsibility that often go hand in hand with such positions.
...

"We're bemoaning the lack of women in top Fortune 500 companies or women in political office," Seymour says. "We're sliding backwards, and here's your answer. It's because we have thrown ice water all over ambition."
...
Polling Company Inc./Woman Trend surveyed women who had at least a college degree, were employed in a professional position and had at least a $60,000 annual income if single and $75,000 if married.

Two of 3 of women reported they would prefer to have more free time than a bigger paycheck, and 2 of 5 said they would be willing to accept less money for more flexibility.'

October 2011 DAHM Newsletter Available

Matt · 31 October 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Download the newsletter here. Excerpt:

'On October 27th we will celebrate our eleven year anniversary of serving victims of intimate partner violence. Quite an accomplishment when you consider that we have maintained a nationally available toll free helpline manned by an all volunteer staff with a budget that averages $15,000 or less in contributions and small grants each year.'

'Hard Hats' Still Have High Rates of Injury, Illness: Report

Minuteman · 1 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'MONDAY, Oct. 31 (HealthDay News) -- Construction workers in the United States have a high risk of work-related injuries and an increased risk of work-related illness and death, a new study shows.

Researchers analyzed data from several national sources and found that a construction worker has a 75 percent chance of suffering a disabling injury over a 45-year career, and a 1-in-200 risk of being fatally injured on the job.
...
"While great strides have been made in reducing construction injuries and illnesses, the numbers are still stubbornly high," Pete Stafford, executive director of CPWR, said in an APHA news release.'

ABC News: 'Men's Health Spotlight: The Male Mind'

anthony · 1 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

The ABC News website has a men's and women's health section. Unlike the women's health page, the men's page includes a section called -- 'Men's Health Spotlight: The Male Mind'. It seems ABC equates the male mind with violence, poor parenting, bad behavior, and excessive alcohol consumption. I should also point out the women's page has a section devoted to heart disease while no equivalent exists for men.

Some of the topics include:

Teen Sports = Teen Drinking, Teen Violence?
When Dad Couldn't Care Less About Baby
Ending Road Rage: A Subliminal Solution?
Harsh 'Reality': Getting Dumped on Live TV
Why Young Men Don't Know How to Act
Bad Boys Grow Up to Be Sick Men
Why Ask 'Why Men Buy Prostitutes?'

Cain Is Guilty Until Proven Innocent, Feminists Say

anthony · 1 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week, after a glorious thrill ride for Americans who enjoy our national pastime — baseball — we must endure another political attack, this time on Herman Cain. I'll resist talking about the obvious: an ad hominem charge against a black conservative who, to a lefty, represents the lowest of the low. Instead, I'll focus on the real issue: In response to the two women who claim they were sexually harassed by Herman Cain, Erin Matson, a vice president for the National Organization for Women, had this to say: "It is deeply insulting that this is being called political. . . . Sexual harassment allegations are always about a woman who is simply trying to go to work."

In fact, that is rarely what sexual harassment allegations are about.

Thanks to feminists' well of grievances (hence Matson's use of the word "insulting"), sexual-harassment allegations are about women's feelings — and nowhere is this more evident than in the accusations against Cain. According to Politico's sources, the incidents in question include descriptions of gestures that were not overtly sexual but made the women who experienced them "uncomfortable."

That women now have the power to ruin men's lives using a boatload of resentment but no evidence to speak of tells you all you need to know about feminism and its effect on our society. Once a free country, in which a person was innocent until proven guilty, America has devolved into a country hell-bent on getting even with men — and what better way to do this than using sex as a weapon?'

The Campus-Rape Myth Exploded (Again)

anthony · 1 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three and a half years ago, during the debate over Heather MacDonald's piece on the campus-rape myth, I took a look at Department of Justice statistics and concluded that she was right: While any rape is more rape than there should be, college women have nowhere near a one-in-four chance of being raped during their time on campus. In the report, the highest annual rape/sexual assault statistic I found was 3.2 per 1,000 people (in the 16-to-19 age bracket). Even if you double that rate (as it includes men, who are rarely raped) and then quadruple it (to cover four years of college), you're still left with only a few percent of women being assaulted, and only a little over half of these cases are completed rapes. If a quarter of college women were raped, this number would be much higher, even if non-college women were never raped at all.

Now, John Lott has published a table from a different Department of Justice report that breaks the numbers down by gender and college attendance. This allows me to make an even bolder assertion: Women are probably safer in college than they are outside of it. For non-student females between the ages of 18 and 24, the annual rate of rape and sexual assault is 7.9 per 1,000. (This translates to a little more than 3 percent of women being victimized over a four-year college career.) For student females, the number is 6.0 (a bit over 2 percent over four years).'

SAVE Elert: If Herman Cain were in College, He'd be Expelled by Now

anthony · 1 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Elert here. Excerpt:

'A recent article in Politico claims that GOP presidential candidate Herman Cain was accused of sexually harassing two women during his tenure at the National Restaurant Association in the late 1990s. The accusations are sourced to a series of unnamed sources. Cain is denying the claims.

And what if Cain happened to be a student attending a university that is now required to follow the Dept. of Education's (DED) new sexual assault policy? The policy requires that colleges change their standard of proof from "clear and convincing" to a "preponderance of evidence."

What's more, the draconian DED policy says an institution must "take immediate action to eliminate the hostile environment… including taking interim steps before the final outcome of the investigation." That's why the twice-accused Cain would probably be long gone if he had been been attending the college.
...
Call Senator Leahy today. Politely yet firmly explain that the accused deserve protections too. Tell him to remove the DED sexual assault standard from VAWA:

Call: (202) 224-4242
Email: http://leahy.senate.gov/contact

Please contact Sen. Leahy's office now. Thank you for helping to make college campuses safe for everyone. '

SAVE: Bogus Sex Harassment Claims on the Upswing, Says Victim Rights Group

Matt · 2 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Nov. 1, 2011 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Following recent publication of sexual harassment claims against presidential candidate Herman Cain, a leading victim-rights organization is deploring the use of such accusations as a political maneuver. Resurrected in the middle of a closely fought political campaign, such allegations rob true victims of their credibility and trivialize the problem, according to Stop Abusive and Violent Environments.

This past Sunday, Politico published an article that recounted charges by two unnamed women of alleged "inappropriate behavior" by Herman Cain when he was the president of the National Restaurant Association. The Politico essay describes the behavior as "conversations allegedly filled with innuendo or personal questions of a sexually suggestive nature" and "physical gestures that were not overtly sexual."

False allegations of sexual misconduct have been leveled against candidates of both political parties, including former Vice President Al Gore and Massachusetts Senator Scott Brown.'

IA: Thank You for Helping Us Make an Impact at this Year's AAP Conference

Matt · 2 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Last week, members of the Intact America team—Georganne Chapin, Amy Callan, Marilyn Milos (of NOCIRC), and Dan Bollinger—traveled to Boston to attend the annual conference of the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP). Thanks to your financial support, we were able to publish an Open Letter in the Sunday edition of the Boston Globe, as well as an ad in the conference's daily newspaper, inviting pediatricians to visit our booth.

And visit they did! Hundreds of doctors stopped by to talk with us about circumcision, and why we're fighting to bring an end to the practice:

- Many sided with us, taking literature with them to distribute to their patients;
- Dozens of physicians from overseas were appalled that the practice is so widespread in the United States;
- Others debated with us, and we spent a great deal of time educating them and spreading the message that circumcision is unnecessary, harmful, and wrong.
- We also—more than ever before—spent a great deal of time educating doctors about the value and functions of the foreskin, the average age of retractability (10.4 years), and the need to refrain from premature forced retraction.

Read the full conference report

While the conference is behind us, we still have so much work to do! Rumors abound that the AAP as well as the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) will be issuing new policies recommending circumcision. These organizations cannot ignore the ethics—i.e., it's medically unnecessary surgery performed on patients who cannot consent. And if they state that it's wrong to cut the genitals of girls, then they MUST state it's wrong to cut the genitals of boys.

How can you help? Send a message telling doctors to Put Down The Knife!

Justin Bieber sued for paternity despite having been 16 when alleged sex occurred

Matt · 2 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Talk about hutzpah. A 19-year-old woman in essence confesses to committing statutory rape of a 16-year-old and demands paternity. Bieber denies his alleged paternity but that isn't the point. If they did have sex when he was 16, isn't that statutory rape on the woman's part? And if so, why isn't she under arrest? The law as we know generally doesn't care about these details. If it can assign paternity even to a minor, it will, even if the mother was a statutory rapist at the time of the impregnation. Excerpt:

'A 20-year-old California woman has filed a bombshell lawsuit against teen pop icon Justin Bieber alleging he is the father of her three-month-old baby boy, Star magazine is exclusively reporting in its new issue.

Mariah Yeater is demanding the singer take a paternity test "to scientifically confirm" he is the father of the child, according to court papers obtained by Star.

The papers were filed in late October and Yeater asks the court for Bieber "to provide adequate support for my baby."

In an affadavit signed under penalty of perjury Yeater says she was 19 years old when she had sex with the underage star backstage at one of his concerts in Los Angeles.'

Movember: Get your mustache on and raise money for prostate cancer

anthony · 2 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Movember is a movement that started in Australia in 2003 that has men all across the globe growing mustaches for a good cause - to raise money and awareness for men's health issues. It reached the United States' shores in 2006.

But there are actual rules for the event, set forth by the nonprofit group.

First of all, the man must start the month of November clean-shaven. Secondly, throughout the month the 'stache must be kept nicely shaped. No touching of the side burns to the 'stache (beard), no joining the mustache to chin hair (goatee).

The goal is raise money and awareness of men's health, specifically prostate cancer and other cancers that affect men. The money each man raises is donated to programs run directly by the Movember group, plus the Prostate Cancer Foundation and LiveStrong.

The month was kicked off with the fifth annual "Stache Bash," held by the American Mustache Institute in Chicago.

Check out the Movember website for more information. Movember says that so far, the movement has raised over $170 million.'

Assange loses appeal against extradition order

anthony · 2 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WikiLeaks founder Julian Assange has lost his appeal against extradition to Sweden, where prosecutors want to question him about sexual assault allegations.

Two judges at the High Court in London rejected the 40-year-old Australian's arguments that his extradition would be unlawful.

They ruled the Swedish arrest warrant stands and Mr Assange should face questioning over the allegations made by two former volunteers of his WikiLeaks organisation.

Mr Assange showed no emotion as the result was read out and outside court he said the European arrest warrant under which he has been held was too restrictive.

"It prevents UK courts from considering the facts of a case, as judges have made clear here today," he said.'

Swedish Gender Politics and the Assange case

anthony · 2 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Brita Sundberg-Weitman, a Swedish lawyer, retired judge and distinguished jurist, spoke of Sweden's gender politics and the Assange case at the February Hearing:

"Outsiders will not be aware of the role gender plays in politics in Sweden. In recent years, elements of the Social Democrat Party, including one of the complainants who is a well-known and aspiring Social Democrat politician and her lawyer, Mr Borgström, and some public officials like Ms Ny have taken the lead in amending Swedish law so as to try to make it more favourable to women. This has become a matter of political debate, but at a legal level, although some reforms have been welcome, there is a concern that others are actually producing unfairness and discrimination against men."

"It is a fact that people like Marianne Ny and Claes Borgström have worked in cooperation on different issues in efforts to produce our new, more stringent sexual offence laws. It is a fact that Marianne Ny was one of the experts for the recent law reform committee which published a report in 2010 recommending even more harsh sexual offence legislation. It is a fact that Marianne Ny approved the contents of that report which concluded that, unlike the law of England and Wales, Swedish rape law is not based upon lack of consent and which specifically rejects any recommendation that Swedish law be amended to adopt the English law approach where rape is based on consent (see page 125 of SOU 2010: 71)."
...

"Like Mr Borgström, Ms Ny is a well known feminist. For example, she is known to have said that when a woman says she has been assaulted by a man, the man ought to be detained because it is not until he is in prison that the woman may have the peace to consider whether or not she has been mistreated. Ms Ny has stated that she believes that imprisoning the man has a positive effect, "even in cases where the perpetrator is prosecuted but not convicted". It is also informative, in regards to the presumption of innocence, that she uses the term 'perpetrator' rather than 'defendant' or 'suspect' in discussing criminal investigation in rape cases."'

'The Gender War (Könskriget), pt2 [1/6] English subs' http://www.youtube.com/user/figaropravda#p/u/11/isMK21PY7wc

Babysitter gets lifetime probation for 'sexual relationship' with teen boy who committed suicide

anthony · 2 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Colorado woman whose whirlwind sexual relationship with a teen boy she babysat ended in the boy's suicide got tossed in jail and hit with a probation stint that could last a while.

Brenda Harding, 30, of Canon City, pleaded guilty to a charge of sexual assault on a child. She was sentenced to 90 days in jail in addition to 10 years to life on probation, KRDO reported.

She began hooking up with 15-year-old Tristen Hagen, of Buena Vista, Colo. while working as his caregiver.

The terms of her sentence forbid her from having contact with anyone under the age of 18 until a risk assessment is completed - a ruling that includes her own two children. She also must register as a sex offender.

Hagen committed suicide in April after Harding ended the relationship at the urging of the teen's father, who had begun to suspect they were involved in hanky panky. He died of a drug overdose.'

Defending Military Parents' Child Custody Rights: F & F Helps Embattled Nurse in CO Supreme Court

Matt · 2 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families and its legislative representative Michael Robinson have been at the forefront of the fight to protect military servicemembers' often tenuous child custody rights. We've successfully worked to pass military parent legislation in dozens of states, including Ohio, Georgia, California, Indiana, Nevada, and Arizona in the past 18 months. In the coming weeks, we will be reporting on cases where military parents have used this legislation to protect their loving bonds with their children. To see an updated chart of military parent legislation nationwide, click here or on the image.

While the family court system in general is biased against fathers, Fathers and Families has repeatedly warned that there are fathers who have learned how to work the system against mothers, and use it to their unjust advantage. When this occurs, Fathers and Families is on the side of the mother whose loving bonds with her children are being endangered.'

Rights group says that Moroccan women are also guilty of harassment

Matt · 2 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the number of Moroccan women subjected to sexual harassment increases and women's rights organizations call for taking measures against culprits, the Moroccan Network for the Rights of Men (Réseau Marocain pour la Défense des Droits des Hommes – RMDDH) announced that women are not the only victims of sexual harassment.

The number of men harassed by women is still lower than that of women harassed by men, but that does not mean the phenomenon does not exist, said Abdul Fattah Bahjaji, RMDDH president.

"Cases of women harassing men usually occur in the workplace where the woman is in a more senior position, or with drivers and janitors," he told Al Arabiya. "The man is usually dismissed from his job if he does not comply."

Commenting on the demonstration women rights organizations are planning to stage in two weeks to protest harassment, Bahjaji stressed that the harassment of women is a demeaning and violent act and that it should be curbed.

However, he objected to the generalizations with which such campaigns are characterized.

"Not every Moroccan man is a molester and generalization is very dangerous because it widens the gap between men and women at the time when all Moroccans are supposed to unite to fight more important battles."'

Israel: Men's retirement age higher than women's, attempt to raise women's blocked

Matt · 2 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Knesset Labor, Welfare and Health Committee, chaired by MK Haim Katz (Likud), today unanimously approved for its first reading a bill that states the retirement age for women age will not be later than 62, against the position of the Ministry of Finance.

On the basis of the bill proposed by Katz and MK Ilan Gilon (Meretz), the current situation will remain unchanged, and women will be able to apply for early payment of their old age pensions from the age of 62, based on means tests.

Katz said, "Precisely at a time of social protest, the Ministry of Finance is trying to harm hundreds of thousands of women for no reason."

An expert source slammed the decision, calling it "populism that contradicts demographic trends characteristic of Israeli society. The decision is based on a desire to appear socially aware."
...
The Ministry of Finance said in response, "The budget cost of keeping the retirement age unchanged is NIS 1.1 billion. The actuarial deficit created is estimated at NIS 4 billion. The only way to offset this deficit is by reducing men's rights in old pension funds."'

Yet another Cain accuser surfaces

Matt · 3 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Suddenly, after all this time, this woman finds his behavior disturbing enough to talk about -- to the press, and anonymously -- years after the fact. Incredible timing. And her actual complaint? Read about it. Why did it not bother her so much as to discuss it back then (all the way back in last century, actually) but suddenly it does now? I want to be clear here, I am not taking political sides in the matter of Republicans v. Democrats in the 2012 election (though like all taxpayers ought to, I do vote). This is about character assassination against men done for political or other reasons by using accusations of sexual or sexually-related misconduct of one kind or another. It makes it hard to be credible when one lodges such a complaint only after a particular man has become prominent or wealthy. The farther away in time after the alleged act has occurred that one has a problem with, the harder it is to take the accusation seriously. Finally, add the level of severity of the alleged offense. An invitation to one's apartment? An "off-color" joke? Ambiguous, possibly "sexual" hand gestures? Now add all these factors together and you see what I mean.

'WASHINGTON (AP) — A third former employee says she considered filing a workplace complaint over what she considered aggressive and unwanted behavior by Herman Cain when she worked for the presidential candidate in the 1990s. She says the behavior included a private invitation to his corporate apartment.

She worked for the National Restaurant Association when he was its head. She told The Associated Press that Cain made sexually suggestive remarks or gestures about the same time that two co-workers had settled separate harassment complaints against him.

The employee described situations in which she said Cain told her he had confided to colleagues how attractive she was and invited her to his corporate apartment outside work. She spoke on condition of anonymity, saying she feared retaliation.

Cain's campaign declined to comment.'

Who Are Herman Cain's Accusers?

Matt · 3 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A third woman considered filing a workplace complaint against Herman Cain at the National Restaurant Association over what was termed aggressive and unwanted behavior, with invitations to his corporate apartment, according to a report in the Associated Press. Meanwhile, a radio host in Iowa said that the candidate had made "awkward" and "inappropriate" comments to staffers at the station during a visit earlier this year.

Cain has already denounced the two previous allegations of sexual harassment against him as false, and suggested at least one of the women was a poor worker. But an ABC News investigation found that both women are highly respected professionals who have gone on to successful careers in and around government.

One woman in Maryland has worked for years as a public spokesperson for various agencies of the federal government.

Her case appears to be the one Cain has described in his round of interviews, saying she was a writer working in the trade group's communications department.
...
Cain's recollection of the reported financial settlements has changed through the week. At first he said he was unaware of any settlement, then said an accuser had been paid three months salary, then upped that to three to six months salary.

Today, the New York Times reported that one of the women had accepted a settlement from the NRA that was worth a full year's pay, $35,000.

Said employment lawyer David Scher, "When you pay someone a year of salary to resolve a case, that means the company probably thought there was some merit to it."'

Houston Murder-for-Hire: Mistress Testifies at Alleged Hit Man's Trial

Matt · 3 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Houston woman who has confessed to hiring a hit man to murder her lover's wife testified at the alleged killer's trial that she gave him $15,000 in cash and told him where and when to gun down the woman.

Michelle Gaiser told the jury how she arranged to have Houston socialite Yvonne Stern murdered in her car while it was parked in the lot of her apartment building. The mistress of Yvonne Stern's husband, millionaire attorney Jeffrey Stern, spent the entire day on the stand, sobbing nearly the entire time.

"I made a horrible mistake, and there isn't a day that goes by that I don't feel ashamed of what I have done," Gaiser, taking the stand in her jail jumpsuit, told the court.

Jeffrey Stern has been indicted on solicitation of capital murder charges, while five other people, including Gaiser, have been charged in the plot. Prosecutors are presenting a case that Gaier plotted with Jeffrey Stern to pay alleged hit man Damien Flores to shoot his wife.'

On YouTube: "Feminism is the WORST thing to happen to women" (Suzanne Venker's NPR interview)

anthony · 3 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. "Feminism is the worst thing to happen to women", says Suzanne Venker in her best-selling book "The Flipside of Feminism". (Uploaded by MensRightsVideos on Aug 3, 2011)

Letter to the Editor: Many men victims of abuse as well

anthony · 3 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'As an organization that works with male victims of domestic violence, we would like to respond to the article, "Men called to fight abuse" (Oct. 21). The article incorrectly states that 95 percent of domestic violence is committed by men.

That figure is not supported by any current, reliable source. Even crime data from the Department of Justice, which is unreliable because men report it less than women, now shows about 25-30 percent of the victims are men.'

The original article submitted to MANN on 10/15/2011:
Men are called to fight abuse

Females worse in technical tests due to lack of interest

Broadsword · 3 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Researchers at the University of Iowa found that the difference in performance in technical tests wasn't related to intelligence - and it had no impact on job performance.

Young women simply aren't interested in the tests, but can adapt to the same skills if required for a job.
...
He found that at all intelligence levels women score lower on technical aptitude than men at the same intelligence level.

Schmidt suggests this difference stems from sex differences in interest in technical pursuits.
...

He warns, also that using technical aptitude tests as part of a general intelligence test may cause women to do worse.

He suggests that teachers should ensure that technical tests are not a part of general intelligence tests - as these yield distorted results.

'That is quite possible today. You can either not use technical aptitude tests or you can use them and counterbalance them,' he says, with tests that women tend to do better on, like verbal tests.'

UK: The generation of young women drowning in debt as figures show insolvencies among under 35s soar

Broadsword · 3 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Half of Britons being plunged into insolvency are women, the highest proportion since records began, a report revealed yesterday.

It predicts official figures, which will be published tomorrow, will show women account for nearly 50 per cent of all insolvencies in England and Wales for the first time in history.

Experts say they fear it is proof that women have paid the biggest price for the recession, with hundreds of thousands losing their jobs.

More than one million women in Britain are unemployed, with numbers growing by around 500 a day, amid warnings of worse to come.

Many women who do have a job are frustrated because they have been forced into part-time work, which is typically badly paid.

Women also account for around two-thirds of the State workforce, which means they have been more affected by the Government's cull of the public sector.
...
The rise is being driven by young women in financial difficulty – they make up 65 per cent of insolvencies in the 18 to 25-year-old age group, and 54 per cent of the 26 to 35-year-olds.

Mark Sands, head of personal insolvency at RSM Tenon, said it was a 'bleak day for female credit ratings up and down the UK'.'

Who Is the Woman Who Says Justin Bieber Is Her Baby's Daddy?

anthony · 3 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'San Diego native Mariah Yeater alleges Justin Bieber impregnated her backstage at a concert a year ago when she was 19 and he was 16.

Beiber through his rep has denied the charge, saying it was “sad that someone would fabricate malicious, defamatory and demonstrably false claims. We will vigorously pursue all available legal remedies to defend and protect Justin against these allegations."

So who exactly is the woman who has turned Bieber Town upside down?

According to the court documents she filed to seek a paternity test and child support from Bieber, Yeater, 20, was on food stamps when she acquired front row tickets to Bieber’s Los Angeles concert last year, and was subsequently plucked from the crowd by security to meet the star backstage.
...
Under California law, Yeater may also be admitting to be a statutory rapist, having allegedly had intercourse with a minor. Yeater claims to be 19 and the time of the alleged incident, while Bieber was only 16.

“If someone over 18 has sex with someone under 18 it is called ‘unlawful sex with a minor’,” California Criminal Defense attorney David Wohl told FOX411’s Pop Tarts column. “I'm very surprised this woman would come forward claiming Bieber fathered her child. In most states this would be seen as an admission to statutory rape. Perhaps she feels it is worth the risk in order to cash in on some potentially huge child support dollars.”'

Bieber: Alleged statutory rape victim?

anthony · 3 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The New York Post has noted that under normal circumstances, this would not normally draw the attention of prosecutors, both because of the limited age difference between the two and because underage males are oftentimes perceived as being left unscathed by sexual experiences with slightly older women. But the high profile of this case might change that. Steve Cron, a California defense lawyer, told the Post: “Under these circumstances, the DA’s office has to show they’re not treating women differently, not treating a celebrity differently, [and] they might have to do something.”

While there are many questions that remain to be answered, if it is determined that the allegations against Bieber are true, Yeater has opened herself up to prosecution. If Yeater were found guilty of misdemeanor statutory rape, she would likely be punished with probation. But it adds yet another complicating legal issue to what promises to be one of the more high profile paternity suits in years.'

Zimbabwe: Ten Myths About Men

Matt · 3 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Zimmetro — Myths are everywhere and men face stereotypes every day as well as women. I often hear heart-broken women saying that all men are well, bad, to put it gently, and her friends are nodding in agreement. Generalizations are pertinent to humans but most times stereotypes only do harm. Let's debunk some myths about men.

#1 Men Are Not Emotional
Have you ever seen a male teen making a scene because of some trifle? Well, child or teen males are always taught to be more restrained when it comes to emotions. In childhood men always hear: "Don't cry, you're not a girl." So with such upbringing, which is supposed to prepare males to their future social roles no wonder why men don't gladly share their feelings with wives or God forbid their friends. It just seems not too manly.

Some men want to be seen in one and only role – aggressive male, but people are too different for that. Often men are not too happy to be that, feeling that there is more to them than just testosterone.'

Herman Cain meets Washington's 'scandal industrial complex'

Matt · 3 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Good piece but he completely neglects the fact that if Cain were a she, even if she had done anything like he is alleged to have done if not much worse, even the most provable and verifiable such allegation would get no exposure at all. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- If Herman Cain committed sexual harassment and is now lying about it, his goose is cooked and it should be. But if he is telling the truth, there is something terribly disconcerting about the way the Washington "scandal industrial complex" -- full of reporters, former campaign workers and pundits -- has reacted to this sad story.

After the story broke in Politico, Cain the next day denied that he sexually harassed anyone, which after all, is the core issue. Since then, other anonymous sources claim they too were harassed, without anyone really knowing what the alleged harassment entailed. He has been consistent, unwavering and on the record in his denial.

But that's not good enough for the way things work in Washington, where the manner in which he reacted to the news is said to be a sign of whether he would make a good president. He is being assailed because he remembered more information and therefore "his story changed," an unforgivable development for those who cover scandal news.'

Ten costly sports divorces

Matt · 3 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Oct. 31, 2011, the world was blindsided by the news that reality TV star Kim Kardashian was divorcing her husband, National Basketball Association star Kris Humphries. The couple had married on Aug. 20, 2011, in a storybook wedding worth $10 million. A mere 72 days later, however, Kardashian had filed for divorce, citing irreconcilable differences.

Fortunately, the couple had a prenuptial agreement in place, so each party is likely to walk away with their finances intact.

This puts Humphries in a better situation than many of his fellow divorced sports personalities, many of whom never had such a contract in place prior to exchanging vows. Maybe they believed they truly would live happily ever after with their spouses, or perhaps they never knew they needed one in the first place.

Either way, they failed to protect themselves, and it cost them dearly.
...

• Jeff Gordon and Brooke Sealey

Gordon's first wife, Brooke Sealey, filed for divorce in 2002, citing "marital misconduct." Although the full details of the settlement were not disclosed, the Associated Press reported that Sealey would receive a guaranteed $15.3 million from the sale of two homes.

• Michael Jordan and Juanita Vanoy

In 2002, the couple filed for divorce. They reconciled, but in 2006 they filed papers again, and that time it stuck. Juanita Vanoy Jordan was awarded $168 million in the divorce settlement.

• Greg Norman and Laura Andrassy

In 2006, Norman announced that he and Andrassy were divorcing after 25 years of marriage, refusing to give a reason for the dissolution and flatly denying that there had been a third party involved. Whatever the reasons for the split, Andrassy walked away with a settlement of $105 million.'

UK: Fathers will be denied the right to have a 'meaningful relationship' with their families, report suggests

Broadsword · 4 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Fathers and grandparents will not be given any legal right to see children after a break-up, under the biggest changes to family law in a generation.

In what was immediately denounced as a ‘betrayal’ of the family, a major report today rules against giving men shared or equal time with their children when a relationship ends.

It suggests fathers will even be denied the legal right to maintain a ‘meaningful relationship’ with their families, as this ‘would do more harm than good’.

...

The report says: ‘No legislation should be introduced that creates or risks creating the perception that there is a parental right to substantially shared or equal time for both parents.’

...

Mr Norgrove believes that enshrining such rights in law could slow down already lengthy and expensive custody cases.

Instead, the courts will simply have to consider the benefits of a meaningful relationship when they decide where children should live and how often they should see each parent.

The final report flatly rejected claims by fathers’ rights groups that the current system is biased – despite figures showing that 93 per cent of custody battles are won by the mother.'

Texas mom pleads guilty in death of son in NH

Matt · 4 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BRENTWOOD, N.H. (AP) — A Texas mother pleaded guilty Friday to killing her 6-year-old son in New Hampshire and disposing of his body in rural Maine, and a prosecutor said the woman smothered her son with motel room pillows and the child struggled against her for "about three minutes" before he died.

In a deal with prosecutors, Julianne McCrery, 42, pleaded guilty to second-degree murder in the death of her son, Camden Hughes.

She is expected to be to be sentenced to 45 years to life in prison on Jan. 13, 2012.

After her arrest, McCrery told police she drove cross-country from Irving, Texas to Maine to buy castor beans to use in committing suicide, and spent the drive thinking of ways to kill her young son, Senior Assistant Attorney General Susan Morrell said in court.

"There was no one else in her family she believed was fit to raise him if she were dead and she did not think he should be raised by social services," Morrell said.'

Justin Bieber was Mariah Yeater's second-choice baby daddy?

anthony · 4 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Mariah Yeater accused Justin Bieber of being the father of her baby, she said he was the only one who could've done the deed. But what about the former boyfriend she allegedly identified as the baby daddy back in December?

...

Former boyfriend John Terranova, 18, heard from Yeater in December that she was pregnant and he was the father, Terranova's grandmother Frances Lippe told TMZ. Long story short: That who's-the-daddy visit led to an alleged argument, capped by an alleged window-breaking by Yeater, followed by an alleged return by Yeater to discuss paying for said window, finally wrapped up with Yeater's arrest on suspicion of domestic violence after police were called to sort out the second argument that broke out, which allegedly included Yeater slapping her ex repeatedly. (She's due in court Dec. 12 to deal with that charge.)

...

Also noted by Team Yeater: Despite the age difference — she's 20 now, he's 17, and a year ago they were, well, each a year younger — she would "not technically" need to worry about statutory rape charges, because in this case it would only be a misdemeanor, and a $5,000 fine would be worth it if she got the child support she's seeking.'

Woman suing Bieber faces Vegas battery trial

anthony · 4 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LAS VEGAS (AP) — A San Diego woman who claims pop star Justin Bieber fathered her 3-month-old son has a court date in Las Vegas on allegations she slapped an ex-boyfriend.

Court records show 20-year-old Mariah Yeater (YAY'-ter) faces a bench trial Dec. 12 on a misdemeanor battery charge that could get her six months in jail and a $1,000 fine.

A police report says Yeater slapped her 18-year-old ex-boyfriend Dec. 21, 2010. The two were arguing about a window broken on the car of the his new girlfriend.'

UK: The Norgrove Report reviewed

Matt · 5 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email from a reader:

Yesterday the Norgrove report was published in the UK. It will define family policy for years to come and will describe the guiding principles of how fathers will be valued in the family:

http://www.justice.gov.uk/downloads/publications/policy/moj/family-justice-review-final-report.pdf

It's fair to say this is one of darkest days in English civil rights history. The report seeks to wipe away any claims fathers might have to a right to “family”. The new priority is to focus on minimising conflict at the cost of parental contact (read fathers' contact) in the case of entrenched and continued conflict. So ultimately all a mother need do to exclude a father is to refuse to agree to any of his “requests” to see his children and any access to family can be summarily removed from him on the grounds that further conflict in the matter is only going to harm the children. Needless to say the report was required to do a little shuffling around the subject of maintenance payments. I include a couple of telling excerpts from the report by way of demonstration should anyone not have the stomach to read the whole thing, and who could blame you.

If anyone doubted the gender discrimination of this report they need only compare sections:

[Section 109]

"The child's welfare should be the courts paramount consideration,..."

"... no legislation should be introduced that creates or risks creating the perception that there is a parental right to substantially shared or equal time for both parents. "

So when it comes to custody the issue of excluding one parent from contact with their children has no significant impact on the child's welfare worthy of comment.

[Section 129]

"Parents often make in their own minds a link between contact and maintenance...

"The focus should be on the right of children to be supported by both their parents emotionally, financially and practically, and parents have a responsibility to provide this."

Now when he wants to underline the need for fathers to pay-up, the report leads with the importance of emotional support before mentioning the finances. Sandwiching the word financially between emotionally and practically to ease it's palatability.

Spin, purely and simply, a report which in its conception was supposed to have an unbiased analysis how best to serve the needs and the rights of the people of the country with relation to family law is worded to manipulate the issue and deliver a pre-selected message that the rights of children and their fathers' are secondary to those of women.

Tom Martin law suit effort update

Matt · 5 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via email from Tom:

Press release, Friday, November 4th, 2011:

Tom Martin, the man suing the London School of Economics (LSE) for sex discrimination in one of its gender studies Masters degrees, appears in a new video asking LSE students if they think discrimination against men in a curriculum is justifiable, as the university's defence team have argued.

Some students get aggressive, telling Tom that discrimination against men in a curriculum is indeed justifiable, as '… men don't face any discrimination'. Those who claim to have read gender studies or feminist literature appear to be the most ignorant, aggressive and oppressive on gender politics – opposing men's issues debates outright. Tom says “Elite students should be aware, that to espouse such bias and man-hatred is completely wrong - but a lot of the students I spoke to don't seem to have an internal alarm bell. They just blurt it out. We have all learnt to recognize and reject misogyny, now its time the educational establishment accept, and teach, that misandry is completely unacceptable too.”

The case still awaits an initial trial date, and Tom asks all those interested in supporting equality for men in education to donate to the fighting fund at http://sexismbusters.org/ - 49 men and women from six countries have done so, the total currently standing at £1375, with a further £900 needed for further vital legal advice fees in preparation for the initial court hearing.

Tom also asks people to like, follow or subscribe on youtube, twitter and facebook - and do anything else they can to keep spreading the word.

##########

For media and all other enquires, Tom can be contacted directly at sexismbusters@hotmail.com

Thank you!

43-YO woman charged with 'having sex' with a 12-YO boy

StayingFit · 5 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

A 43 year old Orange County woman is charged with having sex with a 12 year old boy. Here is the article. Excerpt:

'A 43-year-old Fountain Valley woman was charged with having sex with a 12-year-old boy who was her son's friend, authorities said Thursday afternoon.

Patricia Ann Serrano is charged with three felony counts of lewd acts on a child under 14 with a sentencing enhancement for substantial sexual conduct with a child, the Orange County district attorney's office said. She is scheduled for a continued arraignment Friday.

In October, Serrano allegedly had sex with the boy twice -- in a car and in her home, according to the district attorney' office.

The boy's mother discovered Serrano in a room with the victim. Serrano had allegedly been kissing the boy, but the mother did not observe any wrongdoing, the district attorney's office said. The mother became suspicious and alerted police.'

More on Justin: Paying Your Rapist

el cid · 5 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Posting because of an interesting statement by the alleged mom's attorney:

'It's illegal in California to have sex with someone under age 18. If the other person is not more than three years older, it is a misdemeanor, which carries up to a one-year jail sentence.

"The issue of statutory rape, even if she's guilty, hypothetically, that has no bearing on the duties to provide child support," said one of Yeater's lawyers, Matthew Pare. "It's a totally separate issue."

Pare said he and his client have not been contacted by authorities or anyone representing Bieber. He said Yeater is a stay-at-home mother who is looking for adequate child support if a paternity test determines Bieber is the father.'

That's the way the system works, guys. Can you imagine any woman paying child support to her rapist?

Dalai Lama says "Sex spells trouble"... if he only knew redwoodwriter · 6 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Although it's from 29 Nov 2008, this quote was still relevant today. From the opening of the article:

"LAGOS - THE Dalai Lama, the exiled Tibetan spiritual and temporal leader, on Friday said sex spelt fleeting satisfaction and trouble later, while chastity offered a better life and 'more freedom'.

'Sexual pressure, sexual desire, actually I think is short period satisfaction and often, that leads to more complication,' the Dalai Lama told reporters in a Lagos hotel, speaking in English without a translator.

He said conjugal life caused 'too much ups and downs.'"

Editorial remark:

The Dalai Lama's quote is particularly relevant to the mens' rights movement because the source of women's power over men is sex. If men stop being so entranced by heterosexual sex, they spare themselves all sorts of trouble, and avoid being ensnared by women's traps. Without sex, men would not need to worry about paying child support, alimony, or splitting one's assets 50/50 at the time of a divorce. Without sex, parental alienation would not be an issue. Without sex, men would avoid a lot of women's drama and women's sh*t tests. In the absence of sex, without anything to trade with men, women are likely to be a whole lot less manipulative of men.

For those of us men who aren't quite ready to be celibate, the Dalai Lama's words are still relevant. If we could significantly downplay the importance of sex with women, then we are likely to discover that we have both greater personal freedom and also greater self-respect.

Ruth Bader Ginsburg: "We would have a healthier world...if men shared...responsibility for bringing up the next generation."

Matt · 6 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.:

Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg recently told California Lawyer Magazine: "In fact, I've said quite often that if I were to invent an affirmative action plan, it would be to give men every incentive to be close to children. We would have a healthier world, I think, if men shared women's responsibility for bringing up the next generation."

Does this mean she would have affirmative action for fathers in child custody cases?

India: In coping with stress, men could be the weaker sex

anthony · 7 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In India, as many as 61,453 married men ended their lives in 2010, compared to 31,754 women. After Chennai, Bangalore tops the list with 515 husbands taking the extreme step. Also, the rate of suicides among married men has almost doubled in the last 15 years. This makes us wonder whether more men are at the receiving end in marriages, or are there other issues that men face that need to be addressed.

According to Sneha Fernandes, counsellor at Transforming Lives, an organisation which provides family counselling, unlike women, men do not have options to vent their feelings of depression or frustration. “Women are expressive. They talk to their friends or family and depend on them for support. Whereas men are used to bottling up their feelings. I meet so many married men who just want someone to talk to and cry, but don’t find the comfort in their partners.

...

Several groups to protect men’s rights have sprung up in the City and they opine that the Indian laws favour women leaving men in a very disadvantageous position in legal issues.

“I get 8-10 calls a week from men who are subjected to domestic violence. Even the police don’t take them seriously when they complain about their wife or in-laws. Section 498 of the IPC or the dowry law favours women, irrespective of whether they are right or wrong,” says Virag Dhulia, member of Confidare, India’s first community centre for men’s rights.

He says there is an absolute lack of awareness about men’s problems and that there is a need for a strong social support system and an official communication channel for men to come out with their problems.'

Report: NH female inmates not treated same as men

anthony · 7 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CONCORD, N.H.—New Hampshire may be violating the civil rights of its female prisoners by not giving them access to the same programs as male inmates, according to a two-year study released Monday.

The New Hampshire Advisory Committee to the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights said in its report that the inexcusable disparities warrant action by New Hampshire to end the unequal treatment of female inmates. A spokesman for the Department of Corrections said the agency supports the committee's findings.

Committee Chairman Jordan Budd said the group lacks enforcement power to ensure that happens and hopes New Hampshire will act because it is morally and legally bound by the U.S. Constitution to ensure that women and men are treated equally and to correct an intolerable situation.

The report concludes that the state's failure to address the deficient conditions "reflects on the state's acquiescence in the kind of sex stereotyping that has long consigned women to an inferior place in the American workplace and economy."'

For contrast: California: Male prisoners must drink unsafe water while female prisoners get bottled water -- Posted on MANN -- 2008-12-29

Wilkes: Why Open Marriages Benefit Women

anthony · 7 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cultivated femininity … in large part, that's what an open marriage represents.

Despite what "they" tell us ("they" being Cosmo magazine editors and other such "feminist fighters"), open marriages are at least as beneficial to wives as to husbands, if not more so. Husbands are easily satisfied: They simply need their wives to act like their girlfriends (that's why I'm a loud defender of mistresses, by the way).

Wives, though … wives need more, different, new.

I hear from so many women who wish their husbands would agree to an open marriage, and I hear from so many women who are lucky enough to be in an open marriage and who cite that as a main reason that they are such attentive wives.

Now, to be clear, I don't endorse sex outside of marriage. Pretty much without exception. Which is precisely why open marriages are so well-suited to women: Women don't benefit from the extramarital sex itself, but from the prelude to it and the possibility of it.'

Call to action - radical feminist site advocates eradication, biological 'correction' of men sirprince · 7 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Most of you may not have heard of Radicalhub.wordpress.com, but this site is a growing presence on the feminist blogosohere. That may be of little consequence, but it has now started a worrying theme of advocating what it calls a "resolution" - in effect the eradication at worst or the systematic exclusion at best of the human male.

One of the comments from the article...

re men: yes, they are the problem, and womyn will have to realise this. Men are the carriers of a Y chromosome that makes them the way they are, I believe Womyn have to be strongly aware of the posibility of men's inherent sadism and cruelty.

There are many comments like this, all of which are perfectly in keeping with the overall meme of the article and of the site as a whole.

All of you need to spread the word about this vile hate-speech. A Voice for Men has already flagged this, but as many men as possible need to know about this. So alert as many pro-male sites/blogs as you can; this type of misandry cannot be left unchallenged.

Some of us thought this type of extreme rad-feminism died out in the '70s; let this be a warning to men that unless we stand up now this type of rampant hate may just become mainstream...

Iowa jury convicts woman who shot neighbor in 2001

Matt · 8 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FORT DODGE, Iowa (AP) — An Iowa jury convicted a woman Monday of murder in the 2001 death of her 20-year-old neighbor, rejecting her claim that she shot him to protect herself and her three children during a home invasion.

Prosecutors maintained there was no home invasion and Tracey Richter, now 45, killed Dustin Wehde to keep him quiet about his role in a convoluted plot to frame her ex-husband. They said Richter lured Wehde to her home in Early in December 2001, had him write in a pink notebook that her ex-husband hired him to kill her and her son and then shot him nine times with two guns.

Richter was involved in a custody fight at the time, and prosecutors say she was trying to gain an advantage before an upcoming hearing to keep from losing her son and $1,000-a-month child support payments.'

Bieber Accuser Says He Went From Cute to Aggressive

Matt · 8 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Good grief. Is there no end to the foolishness? Now he's the rapist. Story here. Excerpt:

'The 20-year-old woman who claims Justin Bieber fathered her now 4-month-old son says the pop star was “aggressive” and refused to wear a condom the night she says he got her pregnant.

“His whole demeanor changed,” Mariah Yeater told “The Insider” in an interview airing Monday night. “It went from cute and gushy…to just more aggressive.”

Yeater’s paternity suit against Bieber, 17, claims their tryst in a backstage bathroom at the Staples Center in Los Angeles following a concert in October 2010 resulted in the birth of her son Tristyn Anthony Markhouse Yeater this July.'

Chicago Woman Claims Herman Cain Wanted Her to Trade Sex for Job

Matt · 8 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Anonymous reports of flirting (gasp!), ambiguous hand gestures, comments about a woman's height being like his own wife's (that cad!), and even suggestions around going back to his room just weren't doing the trick. So now... it's full-on sexual harassment as legally defined, rather than as defined in WST101 textbooks or college campus conduct codes. Wonder what's next, will he be rumored to eat kittens (only female ones) for breakfast, too? Excerpt:

'Sharon Bialek of Chicago became the first woman accusing Herman Cain of sexual harassment to go public Monday, describing an alleged incident in Washington in 1997 in which the presidential contender, then the president of the National Restaurant Association stuck his hand up her skirt and tried to pull her head toward his crotch.

"I said, 'What are you doing?'" alleged Bialek, who said she had contacted Cain for help getting a job. "You know I have a boyfriend. This isn't what I came here for."

According to Bialek, Cain answered, "You want a job, right?"

Bialek claims that after the incident she rejoined her boyfriend and told him that Cain had been "sexually inappropriate." She also said she had confronted Cain recently at a Tea Party event and asked him, "Do you remember me?" and that he had confirmed that he remembered her and "he kind of looked uncomfortable."'

Where were all the blue ribbons?

Anonymous · 8 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Is it just me, or do most men get upset with all the pink breast cancer products out there (that's not a bad thing at all) and the total void of any blue prostate cancer products in Sept. (that's bad). I wrote to two corporations asking why men's health is totally unimportant to them, but praising their efforts to raise money for breast cancer. Ghirardelli wrote back saying they would forward my email. Probably never hear from them. General Mills did as well, though I did call too and left my comment to a consumer help operator to be forwarded. I also wrote my son's school district as they had a whole thing with breast cancer and t-shirts and a walk, but never heard back. I wrote to the local baseball team here on Long Island, The Ducks, as they had a breast cancer awareness night and auctioned off game worn pink uniforms to benefit the cause, but had no prostate cancer night. Never got a reply. I didn't write yet, but Pepperidge Farm and Dannon are two others. Has anyone ever seen a product donating to prostate cancer or men's health?

Perhaps these companies can have a Hall of Shame, even though they do help donate for women.

Would people want to write any of these? I can get contact info., perhaps do it as a petition if possible?

Murky past of Herman Cain accuser starts to emerge

anthony · 8 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Though her lawyer Gloria Allred painted a respectable and prestigious education and employment history for Sharon Bialek, 50, just a day later it has been revealed that she has not held a job for more than two years and has filed for bankruptcy twice.

...

Meanwhile, a friend of Ms Bialek, from Chicago, told the New York Post: 'She has a very infectious personality. It's easy to see how she won [Cain] over. But the reality of her situation is -- she's a complete gold digger. It's all about the money.'

Adding that she was from a middle-income family but lives in a posh house while running from bill collectors, the source said: 'Most of her jobs ended in termination. It's always the employer's fault, not hers.

'This is a lady who lives off the system. She is hellbent on finding a way of never having to work and living the lifestyle she wants to live, a very affluent lifestyle.'

...

Details of a number of legal and financial difficulties have since emerged, with the Chicago Tribune listing a long history with tax evasion and late or missed credit card payments.

The paper reported that Ms Bialek has filed for personal bankruptcy twice, first in 1991 and then again in 2001.

...

She is also said to have accused a former boyfriend of harassing her for money he had loaned her after she borrowed $4,500 from him.'

Witness: Cain accuser hugged him during Tea Party meeting a month ago

anthony · 8 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'They hugged each other backstage in a full embrace like old friends.

She grabbed his arm and whispered in his left ear.

She kept talking as he bent to listen, and he kept saying “Uh, huh. Uh, huh.”

Huh?

“I don’t know if what she was giving him was a sucker punch, but he didn’t put his arm down while she was talking to him,” said the Sneed source.

The “he”... is GOP presidential contender Herman Cain, who has been accused of sexual harassment by several women.

The “she”... is Chicagoan Sharon Bialek, who held a news conference Tuesday as the only woman to PUBLICLY accuse Cain of sexual harassment.'

Herman Cain accuser identified as a Treasury Department employee

anthony · 8 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Seems a bit suspicious the accuser works for a competing political party. Excerpt:

'Washington (CNN) - One of the women who claims she was sexually harassed while she worked at the National Restaurant Association while Herman Cain headed the organization stepped forward publicly Tuesday.

Karen Kraushaar confirmed she was the accuser in interviews with The Washington Post and New York Times after her name was first published in several media stories. The name was initially reported by online news source The Daily and then Kraushaar confirmed it to National Public Radio.

Kraushaar is a director of communications at a bureau within the Treasury Department.

"When you are being sexually harassed in the workplace, you are extremely valuable," Kraushaar told the New York Times. "You do whatever you can to quickly get yourself into a job some place safe and that is what I thought I had achieved when I left."'

False Accusations of Sexual Harassment May Soar, SAVE Warns

Matt · 9 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Nov. 8, 2011 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- The National Association of Scholars recently released a position paper condemning an Education Department directive that forces colleges to remove fundamental due process protections from persons accused of sexual harassment. The statement describes the Dept. of Education mandate as "ominous," bordering on the "surreal," and excluding any mention of free speech.

The National Association of Scholars (NAS) position statement follows similar letters by the American Association for University Professors, the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education, and Stop Abusive and Violent Environments: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/sex-assault/complaints/

Concerns about false allegations in society have escalated in the past week as a growing number of persons have questioned the validity of accusations by two unnamed women that GOP presidential candidate Herman Cain sexually harassed them over 10 years ago. Leading Democratic politicians have been subjected to false allegations of sexual offenses, as well.
...
A student who was wrongfully expelled by the University of North Dakota after a cavalier investigation of sexual assault charges against him is a recent example:
http://www.saveservices.org/2011/10/falsely-accused-student-will-not-return-to-college-that-wrongfully-expelled-him/

Over the last 20 years, sexual harassment policies on college campuses have become increasingly neglectful of Constitutional protections, reveals the NAS. In one case, a professor of history was handed a pink slip, unaware of the accusation or of a clandestine investigation being conducted against him.'

SAVE: Now it's our turn to take action

Matt · 10 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

The Forces of Darkness are gathering in Washington DC, preparing to push through another 5-year reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act. Even though we met with Sen. Leahy's staff numerous times over the last 2 years, in the end the good senator completely blew us off.

Not only does Leahy's VAWA draft fail to include a single proposal that we presented, the draft bill adds incredibly bad stuff, like re-educating middle school children into domestic violence ideology.

Fortunately, our coalition is well-positioned to fend off this latest assault on the Constitution, the family, and on our nation's fiscal integrity.

Today we are sending a Group Letter to Senators, asking them to not support or co-sponsor Leahy's draft bill. I'm now writing you to join in this effort, and add your voice to the calls to reform VAWA.

Please take the attached letter, paste it on to your group's or personal letterhead, make whatever changes you want to make, and send, email, or fax the letter to your 2 senators.

Time is of the essence... Please do this now – our children are depending on us. Working together, we will succeed in stopping the discrimination, the false allegations, and the lies.

F&F: Oklahoma Legislator Blasts Family Law System

Matt · 10 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families member Chris Gregory, a Marine combat veteran of Desert Storm and Somalia, recently told an Oklahoma House of Representatives committee that the family law system is rife with injustices and often separates children from the fathers they love and need.

Led by Representative Mark McCullough and Representative Jason Nelson, the Oklahoma House of Representatives conducted an interim study on family law and no fault divorce earlier this month. According to the legislators' press release here, "Oklahoma's family law is dangerously failing the children it is supposed to protect, leading some lawmakers to consider reform of both divorce statutes and the foster-care system."
...
Gregory, who was asked by Representative McCullough to share his experiences with the divorce system, is a good example of the way fathers are plundered financially.

The financial orders in Gregory's case are more or less garden variety in a divorce, yet while Gregory earns $7,500 a month after taxes, by court orders he is to be left with merely $2,200 a month to live on. That's correct–family court leaves Gregory less with less than 30% of his post-tax income.
...
Gregory also got stuck with paying 90% of the $69,000 in marital debt. Gregory asked:

If this is a no fault divorce, why have I had to I assume all the fault?

As is the case with many divorced and separated fathers, Gregory's daughters' schools have been generally uncooperative, refusing to send him his daughters' report cards and notices of parent-teacher conferences and other upcoming events, despite his repeated requests that they do so.'

Cain accuser filed complaint in next job

Matt · 10 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON (AP) — A woman who settled a sexual harassment complaint against GOP presidential candidate Herman Cain in 1999 complained three years later at her next job about unfair treatment, saying she should be allowed to work from home after a serious car accident and accusing a manager of circulating a sexually charged email, The Associated Press has learned.

Karen Kraushaar, 55, filed the complaint while working as a spokeswoman at the Immigration and Naturalization Service in the Justice Department in late 2002 or early 2003, with the assistance of her lawyer, Joel Bennett, who also handled her earlier sexual harassment complaint against Cain in 1999. Three former supervisors familiar with Kraushaar's complaint, which did not include a claim of sexual harassment, described it for the AP under condition of anonymity because the matter was handled internally by the agency and was not public.

To settle the complaint at the immigration service, Kraushaar initially demanded thousands of dollars in payment, a reinstatement of leave she used after the accident earlier in 2002, promotion on the federal pay scale and a one-year fellowship to Harvard's Kennedy School of Government, according to a former supervisor familiar with the complaint. The promotion itself would have increased her annual salary between $12,000 and $16,000, according to salary tables in 2002 from the U.S. Office of Personnel Management.'

Young Women Nabbed In Bloody Satanic Sex Ritual

Matt · 10 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NOVEMBER 9--Two young Milwaukee women were arrested this week after an 18-year-old Arizona man--who traveled to Wisconsin by bus after meeting one of the suspects online--told cops that he was held captive in the duo's apartment for two days and slashed and stabbed more than 300 times as part of an apparent satanic sex ritual.

A Milwaukee Police Department search warrant for the East Knapp Street apartment where the man was held details his ordeal. The warrant authorized cops to seize an assortment of items from the residence, including "knives or other cutting instruments," blood and DNA evidence, duct tape, restraining devices, and "Books or literature relating to Satanism or the occult."

The police investigation began Sunday night after cops responded to a report of a possible stabbing. Officers found the Arizona man "bleeding from the neck, arms and back." He told cops that after arriving at the home of a woman he met online, he "was bound and was stabbed numerous times over a timeframe of what he described as 'two days.'"'

Low-Income Dads Are Involved With Their Kids, Study Finds

Minuteman · 10 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A new study finds that low-income, urban fathers in the United States take an active role in their children's health and encourage them to eat healthy foods and exercise.

But the study also found that when their kids are sick, some of these dads may not give recommended doses of medicine to their children and may feel ill-equipped to handle emergency medical care.

Northwestern University Feinberg School of Medicine researchers studied 31 fathers, most of them black and Hispanic, average age 31, in Chicago and Milwaukee. About 40 percent of the men earned $34,999 or less a year.

More than half of the fathers said they tried to encourage physical activity and engage their children in play to promote good health. They said they tried to set a good example because they know their behavior influences their children's habits.
...
Fathers are playing an increasingly larger role in childcare, and health care providers must include and educate fathers as key players in their children's health, rather than focusing so much on mothers, the researchers said.
...
The low-income fathers in this small study were more involved in their kids health and health care than researchers expected.

"There's a bias to assume lower-income dads, particularly in unmarried families, are not involved with their children," Garfield said. "But that's not the case. Recent research has shown the vast majority of dads will attend the birth of their kids whether or not the men are married to the mother. Our research goes further to say they really are involved day to day with their kids in ways that affect their health and development."'

Sweden: The SCUM Manifesto - Now As A School Play

Anonymous · 10 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SCUM Manifesto by Valerie Solanas is a violent attack on masculinity. The men are accused of having made the world a shit place. Solana line up all the men are obliged to: war, violence, money system, imagination, ugly buildings and more. She puts forward the thesis that men are biologically inferior to men and that it is the foundation for all problems.

We are now setting up the show as a monologue. We think the text is funny, sharp, provocative, imaginative and liberating. It is a reaction to centuries of oppression of women. There is no equivalent. She draws his conclusions so far that men no longer have any raison d'etre.

This is of course provocative. And that is exactly what is meant. We want to create discussion. Not telling the truth. The point of our conception is that the audience is forced to own reflective.

Show's second part therefore consists of a discussion of what we have seen. What values are presented in the show? What values do we learn from our upbringing? Are there differences between men and women? Why is that in this case about? Are there things girls and guys are not allowed to do because of their gender? Do we want to change the world? Why? How? mmmm'

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Education system fails young males in the UK

anthony · 10 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is being said that young women cannot find men of equal social status and are having to ‘marry down’. And the universities minister, David Willetts predicts that women will earn more than their male partners.

According to the Daily Mail ‘experts’ predict that women will become the breadwinners and men will become the stay at home carers as women ‘power ahead’ in education and in the workplace.

Well, is anyone surprised at this since we took the decision in the UK to keep male teachers out of schools, change the system completely to favour girls and ensure that women always benefit from reverse sexism, otherwise cries of male dominated sexism ring out?
...
When boys did better at school and got the good jobs it was their fault. That was how feminism was born. But now that boys are lagging behind somehow it is once again, you guessed it, their fault. Or why say that boys are said to be ‘lagging behind’.'

Mother 'starved disabled toddler until he went into cardiac arrest after tying him to crib with rope'

anthony · 10 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother is facing child abuse charges after she starved her three-year- old son to the point that he went into cardiac arrest.

Arlena Alanz, 28, is alleged to have tied the special needs toddler to his crib with a rope to stop him from climbing out.

The severely malnourished boy weighed just 26lbs when he was finally taken to a hospital in Houston, Texas on October 2

Authorities found the boy after Alaniz called emergency services to her dilapidated apartment in a west Houston complex when the child stopped breathing, said Houston Police Department spokeswoman Jodi Silva.

Doctors said that the child was in cardiac arrest and suffering from severe 'failure to thrive'.'

SAVE: Opposition Grows to Dept. of Ed Sex Assault Directive

Matt · 10 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Last April the Dept. of Education's (DED) stirred up a hornet's nest when it released its new sexual assault policy that requires colleges to change their standard of proof from the "clear and convincing" standard to a "preponderance of evidence." Adding fuel to the fire, Sen. Patrick Leahy's recent discussion draft of the Violence Against Women Act includes the DED's directive, which would turn the controversial policy into statutory law.

To date, the American Association of University Professors, the National Association of Scholars, the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education, and SAVE have all come out against the DED policy: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/sex-assault/complaints/

And a spate of editorials has condemned the policy as hastening the end of due process and free speech on American campuses. In her September 7 essay, columnist Anna Rittgers openly admitted, "Sometimes, women lie about rape." To date, over 30 editorials have criticized the policy in the strongest terms: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/ded-editorials

Now, the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education is urging citizens to contact their Senators to request they reject the DED directive in the draft VAWA bill. "Colleges have both a legal and a moral duty to address sexual assault on campus, but working to eliminate such crimes does not require colleges and universities to forsake fundamental student rights," explains Robert Shibley, FIRE's Senior Vice President.

Sign FIRE's petition here: http://org2.democracyinaction.org/o/5896/p/dia/action/public/?action_KEY=8575 and help bring an end to this travesty of justice.

Thank you for your help on this important matter!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

The End of Men Means the End of Women, Too

anthony · 11 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New data from the U.S. Census Bureau shows the percentage of men between the ages of 25 and 34 living at home rose from 14 percent in 2005 to 19 percent in 2011. Women, on the other hand, are doing just fine. Not only do they dominate today's college campuses, they have little trouble staying away from mom and dad's place. That's because women are flourishing in the workforce while men are not. Writers and pundits blame this phenomenon on the economy, but the trend reflects a much larger sociological problem. America is in the midst of a sea change: Never before has it been more difficult for men and women to find their way to one another, settle in for the long haul, and build strong families together.

To read about it, you'd think the entire mess is out of our hands. You'd think the circumstances involving the roles of men and women in society have happened to us, rather than the other way around. The truth is that we created this new world — and while we may not be able to undo it, we can certainly stop the freight train from running off the tracks.

...

There is a large and powerful group of women who see this shift in gender roles as a good thing. Hanna Rosin's provocative piece in The Atlantic, called "The End of Men," and Kate Bolick's new piece "All the Single Ladies" (which may now become a TV series) make light of the demise of masculinity and the role men once played in society. They represent the kind of movers and shakers who help lead the feminist fight. Pointing to the latest statistics about men, they'd be likely to respond, "See how hopeless men are? Everything we've been saying about men all these years has proven to be true."

But the laugh will be on them — if not for their own families, then for their children's. The feminist policies that were put in place to help women flourish outside the home have suffocated men's opportunities for economic self-sufficiency. In short, men's desire to be good workers and family providers has been undermined. This is more than unfortunate; it is a loss of catastrophic proportions, for it is men's consistent, full-time, year-round work that women depend on in order to live that ever-coveted "balanced life." What too many women don't understand (because they've been unduly influenced by feminist groupthink) is that male nature is ultimately beneficial to them, for women continue to put family — not career — at the center of their lives and are thus dependent on men to pick up the slack at the office.

It is a dangerous thing to create a society of frustrated young men. Feminists have no idea what a can of worms they've created — and what it's about to do to our nation.'

UK: Dads by deception

Broadsword · 11 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The email sent to Jack Goodchild this summer was short and to the point. Jack recalls: ‘Basically, it said: “I’m pregnant, it’s yours — but don’t worry, you won’t be having any involvement and we won’t be seeing each other any more.”

It had been written by Tess, his on-off girlfriend of several months. And now it was all over. Having learned she was expecting his child, Tess apparently wanted nothing more to do with the father.

Moreover, the 41-year-old London businessman soon learned that this seemed to have been his lover’s plan all along. ‘I telephoned her straight away, as anyone would after receiving an email like that, to find out what was going on,’ he says.

‘I thought maybe there was some misunderstanding; that because we hadn’t talked about anything serious like starting a family, she assumed I wouldn’t be interested in the baby.

‘Instead, she said she had wanted to get pregnant, that she had “stolen” my sperm, and now she no longer wanted to be in touch. She was incredibly matter-of-fact about it; clinical even.’

As far as he knows, Jack’s baby is due some time in early spring, although Tess has made it clear she won’t be getting in touch to let him know when the day has arrived.'

"Female veterans carry special war baggage"

anthony · 11 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For these women, spending time at war brings special complexities and conflicts, because in war, expectations for hypermasculine behavior are more extreme than at any other time. (This is true to some extent whether the soldier is serving in a provisions unit or as a mechanic.) Indeed, the association of the military with hypermasculinity makes it harder for men as well as women to figure out what to do with their tenderness, vulnerability, moral conflicts and spirituality.

It is not possible to say whether it is harder for women to try to live up to the traditional standards of the other sex--because the expectation is that they cannot and perhaps that they should not--or for men to risk failing to meet the traditional standards for their own sex.
...
In general, exposure to so much violence in the military can sap their patience, tenderness and resilience. Furthermore, for military women who had positions of power and authority when at war, to come home, where mothers' work is unpaid, often not respected, and often invisible, can make them feel "less consequential."'

"The Case Against Justin Bieber"

anthony · 11 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So if it's statutory rape, what happens to Yeater?

I'll tell you what Justin Bieber would say: I think this is much-ado-about-nothing. What was it, 30 seconds? If he says it didn't happen but she can prove it, it will be a statutory rape—so she'll get a suspended sentence, therapy, community service, or it's not that way and she made it up, and then it'll be a restraining order against her. But at this point in time, it's Justin Bieber saying it didn't happen, and I'm sure there are things going on behind the scenes to get her out of the media and a deal that way, so the question is how far she's willing to go and what's her price tag. It's a chess game at this point in time.'

Women Voters Buoy Obama's 2012 Hopes

Matt · 12 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

As if you needed a news story... read it here. As Gomer Pyle would say, "sur-prise, sur-prise, sur-prise!" Actually, Gomer, no, not really. Excerpt:

'With persistent economic woes gripping much of the electorate, President Obama today pivots his re-election pitch towards women voters, who backed his candidacy enthusiastically in 2008 and may prove more influential in 2012.

In an address before the National Women's Law Center, Obama will celebrate the role of women in the civil rights movement and the steps he's taken to keep their spirit alive, organizers say.

But despite advancements in gender equality under Obama — including the appointment of two women to the Supreme Court and enactment of a health care overhaul that provides insurance parity and free preventive care services for women — polls show he and Democrats face a difficult path towards rekindling active political support in the months ahead.

"I think there will be currency for Obama when women learn about what he's achieved, but I do believe that many women have no idea about the concrete accomplishments that have been secured over the last few years," said National Women's Law Center co-president Marcia Greeberger.'

First Lady Announces Pledge to Hire 100K Veterans and Military Spouses by 2014

Matt · 12 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. You just know I am going to post the first comment, don't you? Excerpt:

'First lady Michelle Obama announced today that U.S. business has pledged to hire 100,000 veterans and military spouses by 2014, and she made a personal vow not to rest until all of the country's 859,000 unemployed veterans have gainful employment.

"Now I have to say I am excited to be here because this is a big day. This is unprecedented," Obama said in a keynote address to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce today. "America has your back. Today, America's businesses have stepped forward with pledges to hire 100,000 veterans and military spouses by 2014. That's right, 100,000."

Today's pledge supports the "Joining Forces" initiative that Obama and Jill Biden, the vice president's wife, launched earlier this year.

"That's 100,000 jobs, that's 100,000 veterans and spouses who will have the security of a paycheck and a good career," the first lady continued. "That's thousands of families that can rest just a little bit easier every night."

Obama said the hiring pledge, including 5,000 positions for wounded warriors, came from two organizations: the International Franchising Association and the Military Spouse Employment Partnership. Companies such as UPS, Microsoft, Home Depot and Citi are examples of businesses participating in the pledge.'

Australia: Woman rapes four boys and escapes jail due to 'low self-esteem'

anthony · 12 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Laura O'Donnell, 20, pleaded guilty and was convicted in the County Court of four counts of sexual penetration of a child under 16 and five counts of committing an indecent act with a child under 16.

Court documents reveal she plied the boys, aged 12, 15, and two aged 14, with alcohol on three separate occasions. The first two involved one victim and the third, all four.

Documents show O'Donnell, who had trained to be a childcare worker, assaulted the boys while drunk between February and June last year in Ballarat .

Judge Sue Pullen wholly suspended O'Donnell's two-year, five-month sentence and placed her on an 18-month community-based order despite her previously breaching a similar order for an attempted robbery.
...
The judge attributed her offending to a troubled background, low self-esteem and alcohol abuse.

Crime Victims Support Association president Noel McNamara said the sentence was a disgrace.

"If it was a man on those charges it would have been a different story," he said.'

Woman bites 2 people in convenience store mens_issues · 12 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

A bizarre story, to say the least. Really weird:

'DENVER - On Monday night, a woman went into a convenience store in the 4600 block of Tower Road, sexually assaulted a customer and then bit him and a clerk on the neck.

"I was in shock! Did she really just bite me?" Alice Gonzalez, who was bitten in the strange incident, said. "I could feel her teeth."

...

"She latches on to my neck through my hoodie, cause I had a blue hoodie on," Gonzalez explained.

The clerk showed 9Wants to Know investigator Jeremy Jojola the marks on her still swollen neck.

...

According to Denver Police, the yet unidentified woman walked into the Barn Store around 10:30 p.m., groped the customer and bit him on the neck. The woman then allegedly went up to the clerk, asked for a hug and proceeded to bite the woman on the neck too.'

'The Bro Code'

anthony · 12 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'The Bro Code is founded on three cultural mandates: Entitlement, Silence and Protection. Entitlement is rooted in the ideas of male superiority; men are in control at all times and in all situations, and always exhibit the perfect example of perfect manhood. It is also gives men the right to regain those things given up to society.

As a man, society owes me for all of my sacrifices over time, and now my payback has arrived. Silence, according to Kimmel, is one of the ways boys are welcomed to manhood. This is true when coming to terms with their own emotions, and especially true when faced with the violence of other men. Whether the violence involves making harassing statements at the Fro-Yo machine, acts of intimidation toward those outside the circle of coolness or taking advantage of an intoxicated female, the code of silence is in full force. No one confronts because no one wants to become the next person living outside the circle of coolness.
...
Upon this foundation of entitlement, silence and protection, the Bro Code reigns unchallenged and insurmountable. The specifics of the Bro Code can change depending on the particular community, but here are several consistent rules: 1) It is your right to have sex, and to do so as often as you like. 2) Always upgrade your woman when you can. 3) You must never get in the way of a Bro who is attempting No. 1. 4) Bros always before Hoes. 5) You will tell her whatever she wants to hear to achieve No. 1. 6) Never ask a women's opinion about anything sexual. 7) If there is no sexual action after so many dates, it's time to move on. 8) Men don't cry. 9) Don't get mad, get even. 10) Take it like a man. 11) Size matters. And the list continues.'

Letter: 'Men are cast as buffoons today'

Matt · 12 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Letter to the Editor here.

'Thirty years ago, I left the Middle East region for many reasons, and one of them was the "male chauvinism" aspect imbedded in the culture. I always knew that it was neither right nor fair for all the mothers, sisters and wives living under that kind of prejudice. Now looking back, when I first arrived to the United States, the initial decade seemed promising in many ways. However, as years went by, I started noticing a change. Today, there isn't a day that goes by without seeing a TV commercial that demotes the male image and his role in society. You see husbands depicted as if they are clueless, guys oblivious to the knowledge of operating household gadgets, fathers ridiculed in front of the kids while the mother is portrayed as calm, cool and collected, besides other commercials where the father is totally absent from the family.

Congrats, America. You've reached the identical trap that most cultures in the Middle East are still held captive with and burdened by, except this time it's "female chauvinism."'

'The Easiest Lie'

anthony · 12 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When one parent wants to take unfair advantage in a divorce or custody case, all that is needed is a claim of domestic violence and the wheels are set in motion. A Domestic Violence Restraining Order is issued and the court will automatically suspend parental rights of the accused. These orders are meant to be a protective measure by the courts. They are to prevent truly violent people from harming innocents and fathers who are truly guilty of domestic violence or child abuse should be viewed as criminals and treated as such.

But in the bitter arena that is divorce court, the charge of domestic violence -- the vast majority of which are made by women -- and the reaction by the judicial system to it has caused the pendulum to swing too far. There are currently 32 states with civil definitions that classify domestic violence as a spouse being fearful, apprehensive or experiencing emotional distress. All it takes is a claim of "I was afraid" and, valid or not, the "victim" is now presumed to be a better parent and has an advantage when the court makes final determinations of child custody, visitation, and move-away plans to new cities, states or countries. Provocation, not having a history of violence or even being the abused victim, is irrelevant.
...
VAWA was enacted to help stop spousal abuse and I believe was created with the best intentions. But in its overzealousness a new abuse has been created and perpetuated -- the marginalization of fathers through false accusations. No one wants to turn a blind eye to violence of any kind and offenders should and must be prosecuted. But until VAWA and the courts recognize that guilty until proven innocent goes against everything we claim to stand for, more injustices will take place and more lives will be ruined.'

Closing the Girl Gap in Science

Matt · 13 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At most colleges and universities, women outnumber men — at 57 percent nationally. But Southern finds itself among a smattering of campuses with a few too many good men: women make up just 44 percent of undergraduates. And over all, only about 30 percent of Southern's students in STEM fields — science, technology, engineering and math — are women.

Flanking the cheer camp director at an evening pep rally last summer, two university recruiters tossed out beach balls and pumped up Justin Bieber's "Baby," whipping an already raucous crowd into a frenzy of gleeful shrieking. They passed out raffle prizes to the girls who had diligently completed "Saluki V.I.P." information cards. Within 24 hours, the office of admissions had created for each an individualized Web page so recruiters could keep in touch, encouraging the girls to visit Carbondale and, ultimately, apply for admission.

"The idea is that any pre-college-age group of girls who are visiting the university should be in touch with our recruitment staff, not in a heavy-handed way, but as an opportunity to get the message out that coming to S.I.U. can transform their lives," says Rita Cheng, the university's new chancellor and first woman in the post.'

It's not enough that women generally outnumber men on college campuses, and earn more advanced degrees, too, and are getting higher GPAs. It's that if there are even a few campuses where men outnumber women, that is insufferable. And if there are any depts. where there are more male students than female, that too needs immediate redress, and the national press needs to shine the spotlight on it. Hey, anyone ever see the MSM complain about the near-total lack of men in nursing, a relatively well-compensated field? Not me. Not once.

Penn State and child sexual abuse: Men-as-only-predators machine up and running

Matt · 13 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

I have already seen it in action. It has shown up in articles written by people who assume that only men can be sexual predators and that if women had known about this or other similar situations, they would have certainly handled it differently. On the contrary, at least one female authority figure in recent news does not seem to care too much about what happens to male victims of sexual abuse when the abuser is female.

None of the foregoing is to excuse those who knew what happened at Penn State but chose to stay as uninvolved as possible. People who know about or reasonably suspect that child abuse of any kind is occurring have every duty and obligation to sound the alarm as much as they can; in the case of the Penn State officials/employees involved, they needed to see the police about the allegation and everyone involved needed to step up and go into overtime to make sure the accusation was investigated thoroughly, which would have undoubtedly resulted in its substantiation. Instead, by sitting on it, not only did they allow children to continue to be abused but destroyed themselves in the process; if they had just done the right thing, they would all still have their jobs and reputations.

This is an older article but still very good. Feel free to share it with the next person who says that only men are sexual predators or that if it had been women at Penn State who knew about the abuse, it would have been stopped. In addition, this bibliography on works regarding female sexual predation is also a good reference.

Kevin Powell: Joe Paterno, Herman Cain, Men, Sex, and Power

anthony · 13 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The bottom line is that our notions of manhood are totally and embarrassingly out of control, and some of us have got to stand up and say enough, that we've got to redefine what it is to be a man, even as we, myself included, are unfailingly forthright about our shortcomings and our failures as men, and how some of us have even engaged in the behaviors splashed across the national news this year alone.

But to get to that new kind of manhood means we've got to really dig into our souls and admit the old ways are not only not working, but they are so painfully hurtful to women, to children, to communities, businesses, institutions, and government, to sport and play, and to ourselves. Looking in the mirror is never easy but if not now, when? And if not us in these times, then we can surely expect the vicious cycles of manhood gone mad to continue for generations to come, as evidenced by a recent report in the New York Times of a steadily climbing number of American teen boys already engaging in lewd sexual conduct toward girls. Where are these boys learning these attitudes if not from the men around them, in person, in the media, on television and in film, in video games, or from their fathers, grandfathers, uncles, older brothers, teachers, and, yes, coaches?'

Sweden: Discrimination Against Men - An Expensive Ideological Prestige Loss for the National Police Board

Anonymous · 13 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Mr. Pär Ström have previously reported about the firefighter Simon Wallmark, who was discriminated because he was male and caucasian. Simon was represented by The Center For Justice, and was awarded 100 000 SEK in damages.

Now, The Center For Justice have filed three lawsuits against the National Police Board for discriminating men at the try-outs for the Police Academy. This can be an expensive ideological prestige loss for the National Police Board, as more than one hundred lawsuits are expected in total, according to the 7.30 PM News (Rapport) on the National Broadcasting Television in Sweden (SVT).

"Over 100 male applicants have also turned to the Equality Ombudsman and asked that their cases be reviewed."

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Australia: Women pay to get men caught DUI - and kicked out of their parental rights

GaryB · 14 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This story is amazing - it appears in the Sydney Morning Herald, but relates to the US. It appears that women have been paying to have their husbands entrapped in a DUI sting - and then using that to have them disadvantaged in court when it comes to child access. Excerpt:

'A man who once worked for Butler had blown the whistle. He told authorities Butler arranged for men to be arrested for drink-driving at the behest of their ex-wives and their divorce lawyers - and that entrapment was only one of many alleged misdeeds.

Butler, 49, a former police officer, was arrested in February. In addition to setting up at least five DUIs, he sold drugs for law enforcement officers and helped them open and operate a brothel, collecting and delivering the profits, according to prosecutors and a statement Butler gave them after his arrest.

In the March 15 statement obtained by the Los Angeles Times, Butler said his accomplices reasoned that they could shield their illegal businesses because any complaints would be investigated by a state-run narcotics task force, which one of the officers headed.

The alleged crimes implicated three law enforcement agencies - the San Ramon and Danville police departments and the narcotics task force - and took place in Contra Costa County, a collection of mostly middle-class communities that stretch from the East Bay shoreline opposite San Francisco to upscale suburbs inland.
...
Susan Dutcher, a substitute schoolteacher, said in a sworn declaration that she paid Butler $US2500 to obtain evidence that her husband drove while drinking. She insisted she did not authorise Butler to have him arrested because she did not want to imperil his job and his ability to pay child support.
Her lawyer's paralegal, who had recommended Butler, "made this all seem completely legal and as though it was standard practice [in divorce cases]", she said.'

Notice how she didn't want him jailed because she doesn't want to jeapordise his ability to pay her child support!

And, notice how this is seen as 'common practice' in the legal profession. Man, I bet they are hating having their dirty laundry aired in public over this one.

Branenburg Academy of Sciences releases surprising study on college students' attitudes on 'sex work'

redwoodwriter · 14 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Quotes:

"Sex work an acceptable job option for 1/3 of Berlin college students (29.2% in Paris, 18.5% in Kiev). In a scientific study by "Studienkolleggs zu Berlin", that will be presented Wednesday to the Brandenburg Academy of Science..."
...
"Human Stupidity Analysis
...
It seems to us that heterosexual men would have restricted earning opportunities. We are surprised about the openness to prostitution and sex work, compared to the main stream media hysteria, especially in the United States."

Editorial Remark:

Of course the reason why heterosexual men would have restricted earning opportunities in this area is because heterosexual women would never patronize them (especially in the United States). This is because the sex for money exchange must go in the opposite direction.

Sweden: "SCUM having fun!" - by depicting the murder of a man because he is a man

Anonymous · 14 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Young female drama students in Gothenburg execute a man in a promotional video.

"SCUM GBG (GBG is short for Gothenburg), consists of a group of self-confident, free spirited, cool, indepedent women-women. The group was formed during drama studies at the University of Gothenburg. The show SCUM was the final project for the group and was played for the first time in June 2009".

Video on YouTube
http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=XJjKJ-_d4YQ

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Senator Drops Controversial VAWA Campus Sex Provision, But Civil Rights Violations Remain

Matt · 15 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Nov. 14, 2011 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- As a result of criticism from Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) and other groups, Senator Patrick Leahy (D-VT) has dropped the controversial "preponderance of evidence" standard from his proposed Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) reauthorization bill. "Because of the feedback he has received concerning this proposal, he does not plan to include it in the bill he later will introduce," according to Erica Chabot, spokeswoman for the Senate Judiciary Committee (1).

Language in the draft bill would have required federally funded universities to apply a lower standard of proof — a 51% "preponderance" of evidence rather than the usual "clear and convincing" evidence — in cases of alleged sexual assault or domestic violence.

SAVE is thankful that the Senator decided to drop this section from his proposed bill, but other parts of the measure still contain troubling civil rights concerns:

Due Process Violations:

- Allows for the continued funding of mandatory arrest policies, which a Harvard study found to increases in partner homicides of 60 percent.
- One false allegation can be used to tear apart a family: VAWA is an engine for the growth of single-parent households and the demand for welfare services.'

Judge who ordered Sandusky's release without bond was volunteer with his 'charity'

Matt · 15 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Only men cover up or enable things like child sexual abuse? Article here. Excerpt:

'FOX 29 News has uncovered a link between Sandusky's charity, The Second Mile, and the judge presiding over his case.

Prosecutors say Sandusky met his victims through Second Mile and Sandusky's foundation for at-risk kids.

We poured through the charity's donation records from 2009 and found that the judge who handled his preliminary arraignment gave Second Mile somewhere between $500 and $1,000 and has volunteered with the group. That's the same judge who released Sandusky on $100,000 unsecured bail.

That means Magisterial District Justice Linda Leslie Dutchcot required Sandusky to just sign his name on a piece of paper, and he was set free. There was no leg monitor, and no big bail. Prosecutors had asked for a half-million dollars at least.

FOX 29's Steve Keeley spoke early Monday morning with state Rep. Mike Vereb (R-Montgomery County), who said, "These details have got to be reviewed."

"I'm sending off a letter to Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania Ron Castillo and asking him to look at what happened here, to look at the reports that are out there, and if in fact does this district justice has a conflict of interest," Vereb said.'

Please lodge anti-circumcision submissions with the CDC (Deadline 21 November 2011)

Minuteman · 15 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

This is a response to the document "Public Health Service Guideline for Reducing Transmission of Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV), Hepatitis B Virus (HBV), and Hepatitis C Virus (HCV) Through Solid Organ Transplantation" [regulations.gov Docket ID: CDC-2011-0011] (http://www.regulations.gov/#!documentDetail;D=CDC-2011-0011-0001).

The deadline for submissions is 21 November 2011.

This submission can be made by anybody from any country around the world.

Instructions:

Download and save the document from the following link (Click 'Download Now', then click 'Slow download', Wait for the counter to reach zero and click 'Download file now'):

http://www.4shared.com/document/pgjm8YjH/CDC-2011-0011_21November2011.html

Go to the following regulations.gov submission page:

http://www.regulations.gov/#!submitComment;D=CDC-2011-0011-0001

Enter your name in the appropriate fields (Optional). Click browse under '3. UPLOAD FILE(S)' to upload the saved document from your harddisk. Click 'Submit'.

In case anyone encounters problems with the above 4shared link, the full text is below, which you can copy and paste into the word processor or text editor of your choice, save to your harddisk and upload to regulations.gov:

Response to "Public Health Service Guideline for Reducing Transmission of Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV), Hepatitis B Virus (HBV), and Hepatitis C Virus (HCV) Through Solid Organ Transplantation" [regulations.gov Docket ID: CDC-2011-0011]

Thank you for the opportunity to provide feedback to "Public Health Service Guideline for Reducing Transmission of Human Immunodeficiency Virus (HIV), Hepatitis B Virus (HBV), and Hepatitis C Virus (HCV) Through Solid Organ Transplantation" [regulations.gov Docket ID: CDC-2011-0011]. This document shall briefly address the special danger posed to newly circumcised baby boys from acquiring transfusion-transmitted hepatitis B virus [HBV] infection, and consequences for both the future supply and demand for donated organs.

Transfusion-transmitted HBV infection and consequences for the future supply of healthy donated organs

HBV remains a major risk of transfusion-transmitted infection due to the pre-seroconversion window period, infection with immunovariant viruses, and with occult carriage of HBV infection (Candotti & Allain 2009). Recipients of blood transfusions in the U.S continue to be at risk for HBV infection as a result of breakdowns in basic infection control and limitations in the laboratory screening of donated blood (HHS 2011). Blood transfusions were the fifth most common procedure received by children and infants in U.S hospitals for the year 2009, with approximately 109,400 transfusions being administered (AHRQ 2011). Prophylactic HBV vaccine was received by less than 1.33 million infants in the year 2009 (AHRQ 2011), out of approximately 4.13 million births for that year (CDC 2011b). Indviduals infected with transmission-transmitted HBV can latter become carriers of the virus in the general community (HHS 2011).

Controversy exists about the suitability of those who have been infected with HBV, to later become organ donors and the circumstances under which an organ donation from such individuals should be considered (ECRI 2010).

The present recommendation from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention [CDC] is that individuals who have ever tested positive for HBV not donate blood or organs (CDC 2009).

Circumcision and haemophilia A as special risk factors for acquiring transfusion-transmitted HBV infections and subsequent increased demand for donated organs

Circumcision of male minors, in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, is a controversial practice within the medical profession (KNMG 2010; Smith 2011). Despite this, more than 1.14 million circumcision procedures were performed on male infants in U.S. hospitals in the year 2009 (AHRQ 2011). One of the commonest complications of circumcision is excessive bleeding and rates as high as 35% have been quoted in the literature (Mahomed et al 2009). Babies often present after several hours of continued bleeding and blood transfusion may be necessary (Qazi et al 2010).

A survey conducted by Ragni et al (2011) of current prophylaxis practices and bleeding characteristics of children with severe haemophilia A in U.S. haemophilia treatment centres [HTCs], found that among 226 newborns with severe haemophilia A in 62 HTCs, the median age at first bleed, excluding circumcision, was 7 months and that of the 113 [53.5%] newborns who underwent circumcision, 62 [54.9%] bled. Haemophilia A occurs among approximately 1 out of every 4,000 male births (CDC 2011a). Although lower than in the past, HBV infection remains a risk among those with haemophilia A who rely on blood products to counteract the disease (Steele et al 2009).

Thus, a higher proportion of boys are already at greater risk of acquiring transfusion-transmitted HBV infection relative to girls, and circumcision worsens that disadvantage.

While over 95% of people infected as adults will spontaneously clear the HBV virus, this reduces to 30% in children, and 5% in infants (Bell & Nguyen 2009). Untreated, chronic hepatitis B acquired early in life results in cirrhosis, liver failure, or hepatocellular carcinoma in up to 40% of individuals, necessitating a liver transplant procedure at the end-stage of these respective diseases (Weisberg et al 2007).

Action Required

Genital integrity [non-circumcision] is most likely to produce the highest state of health and well-being and is the preferred medical option for newborn boys (KNMG 2010, Van Howe 2004).

Public health officials should act to suspend the performance of medically-unnecessary non-therapeutic circumcision of boys.

Hospital administrators must respond to this threat to all children and especially circumcised boys by limiting circumcisions to those for which there is a clear and present immediate medical indication.

The CDC and Department of Health and Human Services can reduce the danger of transfusion-transmitted HBV to boys and subsequent reduced supply of, and increased demand for, donated organs by advising against circumcision of male minors in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication.

References

AHRQ (2011) Hospital Stays for Children, 2009. HCUP Statistical Brief #118 prepared by Yu, H. (RAND Corporation), Wier, L.M. (Thomson Reuters), and Elixhauser, A. (AHRQ) August 2011. Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, Rockville, MD Full-text available at http://www.hcup-us.ahrq.gov/reports/statbriefs/sb118.jsp

Bell, SJ & Nguyen, T (2009) The management of hepatitis B Aust Prescr 23 (4): 99–104 Full-text available at http://www.australianprescriber.com/magazine/32/4/99/104/

Candotti & Allain (2009) Transfusion-transmitted hepatitis B virus infection J Hepatol. 2009 Oct;51(4):798-809. Epub 2009 Jun 10 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/19615780

CDC (2009) Hepatitis B FAQs for the Public Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Full-text available at http://www.cdc.gov/hepatitis/B/bFAQ.htm#overview

CDC (2011a) Hemophilia Facts Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Full-text available at http://www.cdc.gov/ncbddd/hemophilia/facts.html

CDC (2011b) National Vital Statistics System Birth Data Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Full-text available at http://www.cdc.gov/nchs/births.htm

ECRI (2010) Solid Organ Transplantation and the Probability of Transmitting HIV, HBV, or HCV: A Systematic Review to Support an Evidence-based Guideline ECRI Institute Full-text available at http://www.regulations.gov/#!documentDetail;D=CDC-2011-0011-0003

HHS (2011) COMBATING THE SILENT EPIDEMIC of VIRAL HEPATITIS Action Plan for the Prevention, Care & Treatment of Viral Hepatitis United States Department of Health & Human Services Full-text available at http://www.hhs.gov/ash/initiatives/hepatitis/actionplan_viralhepatitis2011.pdf

KNMG (2010) Non-theraputic circumcision of male minors Royal Dutch Medical Association Full-text available at http://knmg.artsennet.nl/web/file?uuid=579e836d-ea83-410f-9889-feb7eda87cd5&owner=a8a9ce0e-f42b-47a5-960e-be08025b7b04&contentid=77976

Mahomed A, Zaparackaite I, Adam S (2009) Improving outcome from Plastibell circumcisions in infants Int Braz J Urol. 2009 May-Jun;35(3):310-3; discussion 313-4 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/19538766

Qazi A, Haider N, Crabbe D (2010) A simple technique to control bleeding after Plastibell circumcision Ann R Coll Surg Engl. 2010 Apr;92(3):261-2 Full-text available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC3080088/

Ragni MV, Fogarty PJ, Josephson NC, Neff AT, Raffini LJ, Kessler CM (2011) Survey of current prophylaxis practices and bleeding characteristics of children with severe haemophilia A in US haemophilia treatment centres Haemophilia. 2011 May 4. doi: 10.1111/j.1365-2516.2011.02554.x. [Epub ahead of print] Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/21539695

Smith JF (2011) The professional imperative for obstetrician-gynecologists to discontinue newborn male circumcision Am J Perinatol. 2011 Feb;28(2):125-8. Epub 2010 Aug 10 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed?term=20700861

Steele M, Cochrane A, Wakefield C, Stain AM, Ling S, Blanchette V, Gold R, Ford-Jones L (2009) Hepatitis A and B immunization for individuals with inherited bleeding disorders Haemophilia. 2009 Mar;15(2):437-47 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/19335752

Van Howe RS (2004) A cost-utility analysis of neonatal circumcision Med Decis Making. 2004 Nov-Dec;24(6):584-601 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/15534340

Weisberg IS, Brown RS Jr & Sigal SH (2007) Hepatitis B and end-stage liver disease Clin Liver Dis. 2007 Nov;11(4):893-916, ix Abstract availabe at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/17981234

Woman charged only with disorderly conduct after assaulting her boyfriend because McDonald's wouldn't sell her a cheeseburger

anthony · 15 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The 22-year-old--for some unexplained reason--turned on her boyfriend, biting him on the arm and tearing off his shirt. Darrell Page, 40, explained to a cop that Edgell “wanted a burger from McDonald’s,” so they drove to the restaurant--only to discover at the drive-thru window that the eatery “had stopped serving hamburgers and was now only serving breakfast.” Edgell, he added, “got upset because she did not want breakfast and only wanted a cheeseburger.”

After driving away, Edgell apparently changed her mind, and directed Page to “return to McDonald’s so that she could get breakfast,” according to a misdemeanor criminal complaint filed in Circuit Court. At this point, Edgell allegedly began striking Page in the face and biting his right arm. Page also told police that when he pulled his car over during the assault, Edgell got out of the vehicle and climbed atop the hood to keep him from leaving.
...
When a cop asked why he had spotted her on the car’s roof, Edgell answered, “because I was acting crazy.” After dismounting from the vehicle, Edgell was collared for disorderly conduct.

Pictured in the above mug shot, Edgell is being held in the Rock County jail in lieu of $150 bond. She is scheduled for a court appearance later this afternoon.'

What Justin Bieber and Gold Diggers Can Teach Us About Feminism

anthony · 15 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For starters, as I'm sure has already been stated by others, part of what's troubling about the case is that if the gender roles were reversed and a nineteen-year-old man had impregnated a sixteen-year-old girl I don't think everyone would have initially treated the matter as a boys-will-be-boys like joke.

But the equally disturbing issue is that Bieber's accuser follows a long line of women who not only use their sexuality to get ahead, but their wombs. The act of becoming pregnant on purpose with the goal of landing financial security has become viewed as such a common practice that it is regularly joked about whenever stories like this become public. Bloggers, commenters and commentators use language like "just became pregnant with eighteen years of security" or "she just hit the lotto" to describe women announced to be carrying the children of rich men, particularly men they were not in serious relationships with but will now be linked to, both personally and financially, for life. From Mick Jagger, to Hugh Grant and countless professional athletes, the notion these women (and the men involved), help perpetuate is that there is another option besides appearing on a reality show for those who don't want to work for a living. (And yes I consider parenting, at least being a good parent, the hardest job in the world, but you get my meaning.)'

'Fathers are not much use during childbirth'

anthony · 15 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today, at the Royal College of Midwives annual conference, Ann Milton, the public health minister, will claim many fathers feel “uninformed and unwelcome” when it comes to maternity care.

Her answer? To “encourage” men to sleep in maternity wards on fold-down beds, so not only will they feel wanted but it will also ease the burden on midwives.

I will need at least two hands to count the number of reasons why that screams “bad idea”. The report also recommends maternity wards “should provide men’s lifestyle magazines to make fathers feel comfortable”.

Comfortable? Why should they be comfortable? Does any woman, in the first few hours/days of motherhood feel comfortable?

One hospital is even arranging ante-natal classes so they don’t clash with men’s office hours or football matches.

Hang on, it’s not about them! For once, equality doesn't come into it. Women have babies, men don’t. And if men feel that maternity wards aren't “comfortable” places for them, then guess what?

They probably shouldn't be there.'

Are Male Bathroom Helpers A Threat To Kids' Safety?

anthony · 15 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Should volunteer dads be allowed to take girls to the bathroom at a preschool? One mom said no, and her response has ignited a controversy.

Jenna Myers Karuvinidis runs a parenting blog that's been featured on CBS Chicago in the past. Late last month, she took to her blog to protest a policy at her daughter's preschool: parents have to volunteer on a regular basis, and volunteers' duties include taking kids to the bathroom. Dads volunteer too, which means that "while I'm at home kicking it up over laundry, my daughter is a mile away MAYBE having some dude I've never met cleaning her butt." She continued,

"99% of sexual predators are men, only 1% are women and girls are over twice as likely as boys to be sexually abused.

Perhaps when my daughter is older and can better communicate we can talk about who is okay to touch what, but for my two-year-old, I want the clear idea to be "men don't go anywhere near that part of my body". Not the friend's dad at school, not the friend's dad at our house while mommy is busy hosting a BBQ. Not the new strange man in class, not the new strange man anywhere."

So she talked to officials at the school, who assured her that men would no longer take her daughter to the bathroom. They also "formed a task committee to research standard practices at other preschools and will institute a change based on that and other findings." Sounds like a measured and reasonable response to us. But not to men's rights activists on Reddit, who are now roundly lambasting Karuvindis. They also listed her as a "bigot" on Register-Her, an MRA site that also purports to list female sex offenders.'

Teacher Accused Of Making Students Rub Her Feet

anthony · 15 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LEXINGTON, S.C. -- Lexington County School District Three is investigating after a first-grader complained about having to rub her teacher's feet.

A district representative said the district has launched a full investigation, appropriate action has been taken and the situation has been rectified. But that's not nearly enough for some parents.

"She admitted to the children rubbing her feet," said Brenda Norris. "Just the thought of it... They immediately sent her home, but she's back there today."

Norris is far from satisfied after her 6-year-old granddaughter, who is in first grade, came home from Batesburg-Leesville Primary School last Wednesday to said she was "tired of rubbing her teacher's feet."'

Wendy McElroy: "Equality of Opportunity, Not of Outcome"

anthony · 15 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Quebec Senator Céline Hervieux-Payette wants to force corporations, parent Crown corporations and some financial institutions to have their boards of directors include at least 40 per cent women. She is reintroducing a private member's bill into the Senate to remedy what she views as proof positive of discrimination against women. (A Financial Post survey found that women comprised 14 per cent of directors at the 500 largest corporations in 2009.)

Critics of Ms. Hervieux-Payette's plan will bristle at further extending government into private sector decisions. They will point accusingly to the decline in productivity that would result from business decisions based on gender, not merit. Braver voices may even whisper that it is women who are currently privileged under law; it is men who are falling behind.

But if the past is prelude, the critics will fall silent at precisely the moment they should speak out most loudly. This is the moment at which the 'gender justice' card is played. A quota system is necessary, it will be argued, because discrimination against women runs rampant throughout Canadian society. Gender justice demands that business elites be forced to pry open 'their clubhouse' door and rectify centuries of exclusion.
...
Why is the stripping of rights from one segment of society in order to enrich another called justice? Why is violating freedom of association seen as morality? The words have been twisted away from their original meaning so that justice requires the violation of rights and morality resides in government making our personal decisions.'

'

SAVE: We're on a Roll, but Many Civil Rights Violations Still Remain

Matt · 15 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

It's time for high-fives and, "Congratulations on a job well done!"

Your calls and emails have caused Senator Patrick Leahy to remove the Dept. of Education's (DED) new sexual assault policy from his draft of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). See: http://www.burlingtonfreepress.com/article/20111111/NEWS03/111111020/Leahy-scraps-provision-upcoming-bill-following-complaints Great job! Enjoy that sweet smell of success.

One down, many more to go...

Unfortunately, Sexual Assault was not the only section of VAWA with civil rights violations. Sen. Leahy's draft:

- Continues funding mandatory arrest policies.
- Provides legal assistance to accusers, yet not for the accused.
- Perpetuates sex-based discrimination through biased predominant aggressor policies.
- Doesn't distinguish between those making allegations and those with probable-cause evidence.

IA announces creation of Intact America Blog

Matt · 16 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via an IA email:

I've got something to say.

Anybody who knows me knows I'm outspoken and passionate about ending infant circumcision. I have written about it extensively, I speak with the media every chance I get, and I talk with friends, colleagues, and my own family about it all the time.

But I need a regular forum for conversing with YOU, the supporters of Intact America. I need to talk with you when a conversation with a pediatrician makes me cringe. I need a bullhorn when a new article in a major medical journal breaks my heart with its misguided promotion of circumcision. I need a platform for shining a spotlight on the victories we see and hear about day after day.

So we've launched the Intact America blog. Through the blog and your comments, I hope to explore new ways of framing our discussion with others, and increasing the pressure on the perpetrators and practitioners of infant and childhood circumcision to cease and desist.

For more than three decades, the intactivist movement has provided a voice for babies who have none. With the Intact America blog, I hope to amplify that voice, farther and wider than ever before.

Visit http://intactamerica.wordpress.com/. Read. Comment. Subscribe. Share. Engage.

Thank you for your support!

Georgeanne Chapin

57% of paternity tests in Wales UK show named man is not father

redwoodwriter · 16 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Apparently there's a whole lot of paternity fraud going on in Wales. Excerpt:

'ALMOST six out of 10 Welsh men who take a paternity test turn out not to be the biological father.

Private DNA testing service BioClinics, which runs a clinic in Cardiff, found that a staggering 57% of hundreds of analysed paternity tests conducted in Wales were negative.

Dr Nichola McChrystal, the company's director, said: "I was not particularly surprised by these results but I think some people will be. There are serious medical implications to not knowing the identity of your biological parents. There are also serious emotional factors."

...

Dr McChrystal said there were many reasons why people got the DNA testing done and results were often a shock to people who had not even considered their child's paternity.

She said: "The thing that we have to take into account is that we do a lot of DNA tests for immigration purposes where the paternity of the child is not even in question.'

Justin Bieber paternity suit dropped, report says

Kratch · 16 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Except:

'A paternity lawsuit against Canadian pop singer Justin Bieber has been dismissed, according to TMZ.

The suit brought by an American woman, Mariah Yeater, was quietly dropped last week, according to the celebrity gossip website, which first reported the legal action earlier this month.

Lawyer Jeffrey Leving confirmed Wednesday the suit had been withdrawn, but said the two parties were trying to address the matter out of court.'

Women bloggers seek to fight online misogyny, critics decry threat to free speech

anthony · 16 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Taking a cue from Howard Beale, feminist bloggers are banging their keyboards to say “I’M AS MAD AS HELL, AND I’M NOT GOING TO TAKE THIS ANYMORE!”

Just what are these women so angry about? Misogyny. And not just any misogyny, but Internet misogyny that ends up in their email in-boxes, comment sections, Facebook pages and Twitter feeds.

While women decrying the hatred of women is nothing new, what is new is the number of women bloggers coming out of the woodwork to openly share their experiences of hurt in an effort to launch a campaign against online misogyny.

...

Being from Great Britain, Lewis-Hasteley explained that they have laws against “hate speech” which allow female bloggers to turn their negative comments into a criminal case. In the United States, however, no such remedy exists, so American women bloggers have to find other avenues to combat the hate.

Feminist blogger Sady Doyle’s suggestion to create an awareness raising hashtag — “MenCallMeThings” — took fire on Twitter at the beginning of last week.

“Misogynists don’t like women,” she wrote at her site, Tiger Beat Down. “It doesn’t matter how uniquely charming and witty and acquainted with various fine bourbons you are. Are you a woman? Then they don’t like you. And they especially don’t like you telling them what to do. By, for example, asking them to cut it out with the misogyny.”'

Report: Paternity fraud rampant in US if New Hampshire study is representative

redwoodwriter · 16 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON – More than three years ago, a Maine district court judge ruled that Geoffrey Fisher no longer had to pay child support for a child that wasn't his.

But that didn't stop the state from revoking Fisher's driver's license and coming after him for thousands of dollars it says he owes in back payments.

Last year, Maine sent Fisher, 35, a letter seeking $11,450 in child support, even though officials know that DNA tests proved he isn't the father of the child in question.

As the nation experiences an unprecedented increase in unwed motherhood, more men are finding themselves named as "fathers," for purposes of child support, simply because of their ability to pay, say several recent studies.

It's called "paternity fraud," and one state that examined the problem found as many as 30 percent of those paying child support were, indeed, not the biological fathers of the children being supported.

The most recent comprehensive study took place in New Hampshire under the auspices of the Commission on the Status of Men.

The commission found that even men who later were able to prove they were paying support for the children of other men were sometimes still forced by courts and state agencies to continue.'

Victory—In Face of Opposition, Leahy Scraps VAWA Draft Provision Which Lowers Evidence Standards

Matt · 16 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'False allegations of abuse are common in family court, and have been used to separate many fathers (and some mothers) from their children. The reasons for this problem are many, but one of the biggest is the low evidence standard for upholding abuse claims.

The common evidence standard for domestic violence restraining orders is “preponderance of the evidence,” often conceptualized as a mere 51/49% likelihood of guilt. By contrast, when someone seeks a civil restraining order, the more stringent and appropriate “clear and convincing” evidence standard is used.
...
Fathers and Families wants abused women (and men) to be afforded the protection they need. However, we have relentlessly publicized and fought the common problem of false allegations being used as child custody and financial maneuvers in divorce. And one of the key components in this fight is to replace the “preponderance” standard with the “clear and convincing” standard.

SCUM Actress Convicted Of Shoplifting - TWICE

Anonymous · 16 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Reference: http://news.mensactivism.org/node/17530. Article here. Excerpt:

"Andréa Edwards has made a number of roles in film and television. Last seen her in a small role in "Easy Money". She has also had roles in, among other things Wallander movie "The weak point" and "In the Shadow of the heat."

Edwards went out Theatre Academy in 2000 and has worked at the Royal Dramatic Theatre, Stockholm's City Theatre and Theatre Guillotine.

Now she has been sentenced to 11 000 SEK in fines for having shoplifted a Filippa K sweater Åhléns City of Stockholm.

Edwards has been convicted once before for shoplifting."

Andrea Edwards reference:
"They are being attacked incessantly by Andrea Edwards during the approximately hour-long show."

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

New judge assigned in Penn State sex abuse case

Matt · 16 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Good move. (See previous MANN story here.) Excerpt:

'STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — A new judge was assigned Wednesday to handle the child sex abuse charges against former Penn State football assistant coach Jerry Sandusky, whose televised defense earlier this week drew a rebuke from a lawyer for one of his accusers.

The change removed a State College judge with ties to a charity founded by Sandusky for at-risk children, The Second Mile.

Harrisburg attorney Ben Andreozzi said he represents a client who will testify against Sandusky, who is accused of abusing eight boys, some on campus, over 15 years.'

It Is Never OK to Trick a Man Into Fatherhood

anthony · 17 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women who trick men into fatherhood are the lowest of the low. If you think it doesn't exist, think again. It happens all the time.

The Daily Mail had several examples of men who were duped into becoming fathers by women who lied about birth control or, worse, used the sperm in the condoms to impregnate themselves. Sometimes it seems like all the rhetoric around childbearing is about women's rights and men's responsibilities, but what about in cases like these where the man is clearly duped into becoming a father because of the woman's biological clock?

It's hard to imagine anything that could be more irresponsible than bringing an unwanted child into the world and then, adding insult to injury, suing the man you tricked into paying for that child for at least 18 years. It's wrong to the man, yes. But even more, it's wrong to the child.

How does a child born this way feel? If a woman really wants a child on her own, there are ethical ways to do that. There are sperm banks and willing men who would like to become dads. What these women do is unconscionable.'

University of Tennessee rejects discrimination claim by women's athletics employees

anthony · 17 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — The University of Tennessee has rejected claims by three employees of its women's athletics department who say they were discriminated against because their salaries were lower than those of employees in the men's athletics department with comparable duties.

...

In the complaint, Moshak, who works directly with women's basketball and oversees employees who work with other women's sports, compared her salary and duties to Director of Men's Sports Medicine Jason McVeigh. At that time, Moshak earned a base salary of $87,500 while McVeigh, who works directly with the football team and supervises employees who work with other men's sports, made a base salary of $89,048.

...

A report by the university said Moshak and McVeigh's positions differ for many reasons, including the number of athletes each supervises, the nature and number of injuries involved in their respective sports, their budget responsibilities and the amount of revenue and interest their sports generate.'

University of Louisville Pediatrics opens clinic for adolescent girls only

anthony · 17 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — University of Louisville Pediatrics has opened a health clinic for girls only.

The UofL Pediatrics-Young Women's Health said in a statement that it will limit its practice to girls and young women ages 11-21. The clinic's focus will be to help girls as they develop in their teen years.

Attending physician Monique Howard said many teen girls feel too old to see a pediatrician, but sometimes require attention that a family doctor might not be able to provide. In addition to routine medical checks, Howard is trained to help patients with issues such as eating disorders and reproductive health.

UofL Pediatrics Division of Adolescent Medicine chief Ken Schikler says the goal is to "bridge the gap" between pediatricians and adult medicine.'

"European Quotas for Women CEOs Help Crack Boardroom Glass Ceilings"

anthony · 17 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Nov. 16, 2011 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- Women are cracking boardroom glass ceilings all over Europe, spurred on by new quota requirements in many countries to put women at the top, according to the latest Corporate Women Directors International study of women directors in Fortune Global 200 companies, the biggest in the world.

"Something is happening, and it's driven by Europe," said Irene Natividad, chair of the Washington-based international research group CWDI which releases its 17th annual report on Nov. 18. "The momentum for more women on boards will change the face of the biggest companies in Europe, in the midst of the region's ongoing financial crisis. They are ahead of the ball game."

The major influence on many European companies -- government quotas for the number of women required to be in the boardroom, was initially propelled by Norway, but since adopted in Spain, France, the Netherlands, Iceland, Italy and Belgium.'

Muses & Visionaries, an office space and club for women only, opens in West Palm Beach

anthony · 17 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Like many working moms, Lena Hyde and Erin Rossitto juggle schedules that are full to overflowing.

So it's no surprise that they craved a little space - specifically, a downtown West Palm Beach address that would attract women with similar goals, "who want to grow and be successful and be good parents," Rossitto says.

The two friends recently opened Muses & Visionaries, a members-only office space and club - for women only. No boys allowed.

"We all connect on a different level when it's just women," says Hyde, a 43-year-old photographer.
...
Any woman is welcome to join her there, for a fee. Muses & Visionaries memberships are available at three levels - the Enthusiast, the Musepreneur and the Careerist, providing varying degrees of access.'

Why we all need to talk about prostate cancer – the forgotten cancer

anthony · 17 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It appears that the uptake of breast cancer screening varies in different geographical areas of the UK. Researchers reporting to the National Cancer Research Institute's conference in Liverpool revealed that "fear, anxiety and embarrassment" were the reasons given by women for not attending breast screening – along with only being aware of two possible symptoms and assuming that "cancer would never happen to me".

GPs, nurses and health professionals are being encouraged to talk to women about breast cancer in order to raise the numbers accepting screening.

Women are much better at understanding their own bodies but if fear, anxiety and embarrassment are dissuading them from seeking screening, how much worse will it be among the male population. We know, from breast cancer in men, that the male of the species tends to ignore symptoms so that, by the time the doctor is consulted, the breast cancer has reached an advanced stage. I wonder – does the same apply to prostate and other male cancers?'

Plea deal ends charge stemming from false rape accusation

anthony · 17 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A San Antonio woman who authorities accused of instigating a murder by lying to her boyfriend about being raped has accepted a plea agreement in which she now faces up to eight years in prison.

Melissa Ann Ramos, 23, had been charged with manslaughter for the June 2007 shooting death of Quiznos employee Nathan Ramirez, 20, even though she was not there when he was shot outside the North Side sandwich shop.

On Tuesday, prosecutors agreed to drop the manslaughter charge in exchange for her no-contest plea to robbery. Both are second-degree felonies generally punishable by up to 20 years in prison.

Her boyfriend, James “Clay” Kelly, was convicted by a jury of murder and sentenced in August by state District Judge Ron Rangel to 40 years in prison for also instigating the shooting.'

Woman who cried rape to pay damages

anthony · 17 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

http://www.iol.co.za/news/crime-courts/woman-who-cried-rape-to-pay-damages-1.1177505

'A Soshanguve teacher who was falsely accused of rape by the woman with whom he had an adulterous relationship is due to receive R230 000 in damages from his former lover.

Pretoria High Court Judge Legodi Phatudi ordered that Ntebane Patricia Molapo had to pay the damages to Herold Maphoto, a teacher at the Kgadime-Matsepe Secondary School. Maphoto spent 17 days in custody and went through a lengthy trial only to have his name cleared.

The judge found the woman intended to injure her lover when she instituted criminal proceedings against him. She knew rape was a schedule six offence and it was unlikely he would easily be released on bail.

Judge Phatudi said the woman decided to go ahead with the rape charge without applying her mind as to the possible consequences.'

November is Native American Heritage Month

anthony · 17 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

http://nativeamericanheritagemonth.gov/

I think people forget Native American men have the highest rate of alcoholism and suicide. We have a responsibility as a nation to do more for them.

Some about it discussed here. Excerpt:

'What started at the turn of the century as an effort to gain a day of recognition for the significant contributions the first Americans made to the establishment and growth of the U.S., has resulted in a whole month being designated for that purpose.

One of the very proponents of an American Indian Day was Dr. Arthur C. Parker, a Seneca Indian, who was the director of the Museum of Arts and Science in Rochester, N.Y. He persuaded the Boy Scouts of America to set aside a day for the "First Americans" and for three years they adopted such a day. In 1915, the annual Congress of the American Indian Association meeting in Lawrence, Kans., formally approved a plan concerning American Indian Day. It directed its president, Rev. Sherman Coolidge, an Arapahoe, to call upon the country to observe such a day. Coolidge issued a proclamation on Sept. 28, 1915, which declared the second Saturday of each May as an American Indian Day and contained the first formal appeal for recognition of Indians as citizens.'

Cornell Debates Rules for Sexual Assault Cases

anthony · 17 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

A temporary amendment to the Campus Code of Conduct that was approved in May is sparking a debate about how Cornell should treat students who are accused of sexually assaulting other students.

The amendment, which came in response to pressures from the federal government, lowered the required burden of proof in sexual assault cases, making it easier for accusers to win their cases. It also gave the accuser — who is formally referred to as the “complainant” — the same rights as the accused student to appeal the decision.

The ensuing debate has pitted victim advocates, who are concerned about protecting students who have been sexually assaulted, against those who worry that the changes may lead to the expulsion of innocent students.

The changes have raised questions about whether sexual assault accusations should be treated differently than accusations involving other offenses under the Code of Conduct, and whether the complainants and the accused should be given equal rights. More broadly, students and administrators have questioned whether the University should focus on protecting students from being wrongfully punished — with sanctions that can include expulsion — or protecting victims from becoming further hurt by a contentious judicial process.
...
But one advocate for accused students argued that it is not fair to force the accused to defend themselves again.

Kyle Hogan grad, a law student who heads the Office of the Judicial Codes Counselor, said that allowing claimants to appeal could subject accused students to double jeopardy.'

Never trust a chivalrous man - it means he’s up to something

anthony · 17 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently, I witnessed a remarkable altercation on a London bus, when a man refused to give up his seat to a woman. She started screaming at him about his lack of respect, but he wouldn’t budge. Quite right, too. Why should he? Respect cannot be demanded, it has to be earned.

Some say that chivalry is dead in the workplace, but did it ever have a proper place there in the first place, I wonder. In this instance, I can only speak for myself. If you are a female journalist working on a daily newspaper and a male colleague opens the door and politely ushers you through first, it really means something.

It means that, overnight, workmen have removed an entire floor, exposing a 100ft drop to the basement three storeys below, where a poisoned spike trap has been set. ‘After you, my dear.’ ‘No, no, after you.’ But at least, as I said, we understand each other.

Actually, I see tiny but compelling acts of chivalry every day. A cup of coffee put on a busy colleague’s desk. A helping hand with a pram, a child, an awkward parcel, a difficult step. It is non-gender specific, because today we are all in it together, for better or worse.

Today, good manners, showing an everyday kindness to strangers and being polite to all is the petrol in the engine of civilisation. It is not the prerogative of men, it is up to everyone to make the effort. And, with that, I bid you good day, my lady. Bow, bow, scrape, scrape disappears into obsolete mists of time.'

Where Did All the Boys Go?

anthony · 17 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Providence College has had issues maintaining male enrollment in the past, and this has impacted the sports teams. The Friars had to cut men's tennis, golf, and baseball in order to comply with Title IX regulations. Title IX states that there must be equal opportunities for men and women; this includes the number of sports scholarships and sporting opportunities. Other universities have faced similar issues with sports and Title IX compliance; Boston University, for example, cut its football program and dedicated the resources to women's sports.

According to Associate Vice President and Dean of Admission Chris Lydon, the first class to have a larger female population than male was the class of 1985, 10 years after the school became co-educational. That class had a population of 51.5 percent women and 48.5 percent men. Since that point, the percentage of boys in various entering classes has ranged from around 45 to 38 percent, with a rise to 47 percent in the class of 2008. Lydon admitted that the yield of males this year was unexpectedly low, but says he is not sure exactly why.
...
The lack of males on college campuses raises bigger issues about the treatment of males in American high schools. It is a curious question as to why male students are being outpaced by their female counterparts. Strategies that have been suggested to improve the standing of males in classrooms include the creation of single-sex classrooms and male mentoring programs.

Despite troubling national statistics about boys in higher education, not all attitudes on campus are very concerned about the manner. The residents of Guzman Hall were quite pleased that there were more girls than boys on campus, and said that they thought the male-to-female ratio was "absolutely fine."'

American Medical Association makes quick decision to state male circumcision has 'health benefits'

Matt · 17 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc Angelucci:

Today the Los Angeles Daily Journal printed my op-ed responding to the American Medical Association's irresponsible and unexamined 11/15/11 statement that male circumcision has documented health benefits. The op-ed is here. The AMA completely disregarded what national medical associations worldwide are saying, and based on some of their responses to us on Facebook it appears they didn't even read them. The AMA's announcement on its Facebook page has well over 150 very critical comments from the public about this decision.

Interestingly, two of their members answered by admitting this was somewhat of a quick decision. One of them, name, Sam Mackenzie, said this was made with only "limited debate," and he offered to draft a resolution for reconsideration at their June meeting, and he said this that the AMA's report "stated that there was very limited testimony arguing against the resolution. The limited debate was framed around intrusion of patient choice and physician practice, not on the merits of circumcision. I'm not saying this is appropriate--just that it's what happened. Second, this was submitted as a late resolution; hence, it was not privy to discussion on the online forum before the meeting. A strong case could have been made for referral to a council, for example, the Council on Ethical and Judicial Affairs. In hindsight, this would have been my preferred action, but as a medical student, I was focused on other issues, for example, those centered around Medicaid revisions and cuts to GME funding."

New York Family Courts Say Keep Out, Despite Order

Anonymous · 18 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New York State's Family Courts were ordered to be opened to the public with much fanfare in 1997, supposedly allowing anyone to witness the cases of domestic violence, foster care and child neglect that inch through by the hundreds of thousands every year. But now, 14 years later, the Family Courts remain essentially, almost defiantly, closed to the general public.

Recent visits to the courts across New York City revealed officials and security officers routinely disregarding the open-courts rule in ways both large and small, direct and implied, insistent and even hostile.

Some courtrooms were locked, and many were marked with "stop" and "do not enter" signs. Court officers stationed at courtroom doors repeatedly barred a visitor, sometimes with sarcasm or ridicule, frequently demanding to know who he was and what he was doing. Armed court officers at times appeared so rattled by a visitor's efforts to enter courtrooms that, in several instances, a group of them nervously confronted the visitor, their holsters in easy reach.
...

American legal principles have long favored open courts as a check on government, and New York law has specifically said for more than a century that "the sittings of every court within the state shall be public."

But by 1997, the Family Courts had been closed for decades, with rare exceptions. Critics said the chaos of the courts was amplified by their secrecy — a veil that had grown over the years with the support of many of the courts' judges, lawyers and social-agency representatives. Closed courtrooms, critics argued, kept hidden the courts' struggles, as well as the sometimes controversial ways they dealt with those who ended up in the resource-starved system plagued by delays.

Citing a need for accountability, the officials who issued the open-courts rule presented it as the centerpiece of an effort to reform Family Courts that were perennially in crisis. The rule was announced by Judith S. Kaye, the state's chief judge at the time, and the chief administrative judge, Jonathan Lippman, now the chief judge. It stated bluntly, "The Family Court is open to the public," and assured access to all courtrooms, lobbies and waiting areas. The only exceptions were to be after "case-by-case" decisions by judges after the presentation of "supporting evidence," like a "compelling" privacy concern.'

It’s time boys learn the F-word

anthony · 19 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Her story, an all too common one, illustrated for me why feminism still has some fights to take on – and why boys her age need to hear its perspective. It’s the kind of experience that prompted a new book, The Guy’s Guide to Feminism, which landed on my desk recently. Co-authored by Canadian social justice educator Michael Kaufman and New York-based sociologist Michael Kimmel, the book takes the form of a lighthearted A to Z bathroom companion – the personal is political, after all – and thus strikes a tone that I think boys just might listen to.

With homophobic cyberbullying causing suicides, rape joke pages on Facebook, and pornography widely accessible to impressionable minds, it’s more important than ever to start a discussion with teens – the girls as well as the guys – about gender stereotypes and expectations.

Internet pornography, one of teen boys’ greatest preoccupations, is naturally one of the issues addressed – in a pro-sex, playfully ironic manner. When I asked my niece whether she thinks porn puts negative pressure on her, she confirmed – and then inspirationally combatted – our collective fear that girls feel they have to mimic the videos that boys watch. One guy she dated at 16 did indeed pressure her. “He asked me, ‘Why aren’t you screaming?’ And I told him, ‘Because I’m not acting!’ That’s what a lot of it is. It’s fake.”'

The Politics of Campus Sexual Assault

anthony · 19 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nonetheless, the new Department of Education guidelines remain in force (the OCR never even replied to FIRE's letter criticizing them). And, while these regulations carry no penalty for non-compliance, they will undoubtedly continue to exert pressure on colleges to disciplinary codes. A number of schools, including major universities such as Stanford and Yale, have already amended their procedural rules in response to the OCR letter. A comment from Stanford Dean of Student Life Christine Griffith strongly suggested that concerns about violations of students' rights were not misplaced. If some were worried that the changes in the burden of proof might be unfavorable to the accused, Griffith told The Stanford Daily, it was "an opportunity for people to be saying to themselves, 'I need to be really educated about these issues because I don't want to find myself in this circumstance.'" In other words, it's up to potential defendants to be extra careful to avoid any ambiguous situation that might lead to a rape charge.'

Could Women Have Saved Penn State?

anthony · 19 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"There's a gender element to everything," says Andrew Shubin, a central Pennsylvania civil-rights attorney who is representing a number of the victims. He notes that, even in an opposite situation—had somebody said they walked in on Sandusky raping a young girl, instead of a boy—"it might have been an easier thing to understand."

There are other questions, too: Might the victims have been more willing to come forward had they been female, where, some might say, the idea of talking about a rape is less taboo? Had this not been football, where pats on the ass and lurid locker-room talk are routine—yet to be "gay" is roundly condemned—might these boys have recognized the abuse earlier? (As Naomi Mezey, a Georgetown law professor who studies cultural identity, puts it, "Sports is one of those places where male physicality with each other is allowable, yet is simultaneously deeply homophobic.") And, lastly, would this horrifying narrative have turned out any differently had the culture surrounding it not been so chauvinistic?

"I don't think we are going to see women coaches raping 10-year-olds any time soon, and if one did, I think she would be out on her ear in no time," says journalist Katha Pollitt, a columnist at The Nation. "And female students leading a riot in defense of child molesters? I doubt it. This whole thing is just patriarchal from top to bottom."

Whether or not we agree, it's easy to make the argument that close-knit, insular groups of men have been known to do bad things (think: the Catholic Church). Studies show that dissenting voices are crucial to countering group think—especially in realms where pledging allegiance to a hierarchy are the norm. In the business world, companies with equal numbers of men and women on their boards are more successful. We'll probably never know if that would be the case in football.'

‘Breaking the Silence: A Practical Guide for Male Victims of Domestic Abuse’ available for pre-order

Matt · 19 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Normally when it comes to posting items about new items being sold by a person or group, I think twice. After all, if I make too many exceptions, then what? Everyone has a claim of right to say they ought to get their whatever-it-is advertised even if it is only tangentially related to MR issues. That disclaimer aside, I am making an exception for the book ‘Breaking the Silence: A Practical Guide for Male Victims of Domestic Abuse’, which I found out about from a Men's Health Australia email. Since DV against men is so under-recognized, it's important that any new work on the subject and in particular one offering practical advice to men in abusive relationships be made known. So, here it is. Excerpt:

'Male victims of domestic abuse are not often spoken for or spoken about. In this ground breaking book, Dr Elizabeth Celi sets out to debunk myths, provide practical advice and create a much needed resource for men who are experiencing domestic abuse and those who wish to help them.

If you are a man who has suffered domestic abuse, you may feel confused about what to do and whose fault it all is. You know you’re not safe but you don’t know how the situation got so out of control. If you have kids, there’s an even bigger risk than leaving an abusive or violent situation – leaving your children behind in it. At times you may even feel like you’ve failed at being a man.

You’re not alone. And although it’s not an easy cycle to break, it is possible. With the right advice, practical tips and the right team in your corner, you can rebuild your sense of self, your relationships and your life.'

Students Decry Anti-Feminist Speaker at DKE, Hold Sit-In

anthony · 20 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Self-proclaimed anti-feminist, pro-free-speech editor Charlotte Allen gave a lecture at the Delta Kappa Epsilon (DKE) house, which was hosted by the alumni of the University's DKE and Beta Theta Pi (Beta) chapters. The lecture was quick to spark controversy on campus, and the women's advocacy group FemNet staged a peaceful sit-in at the event.

"I am here to deliver an alarming message: college fraternities are being hunted to extinction," Allen declared.

Allen suggested that the change in attitudes towards fraternities has been facilitated by what she referred to as a "coalition of militant feminists." She said that politically-correct college administrations are also to blame, as well as President Obama's administration.
...

Allen ended her speech by suggesting that anti-fraternity sentiments will intensify as college education becomes increasingly feminized. She urged the crowd to fight for their rights to keep spaces free of University corruption.

"Fraternities provide a private space," Allen said. "There, men do not have to apologize for being men, playing football, or having testosterone and throaty voices. They can laugh freely at the latest pronouncements from the campus women's center."'

Recession hitting young men hardest: 1 in 5 now back at home

anthony · 20 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Michael Gaynor, 25, completed his bachelor's degree and certification to teach elementary and high-school physical education in May 2009, then set out during a recession to find that dream job.

Over the next two years, the quest would take him from substitute teaching and respite care work in Iowa, back to his parents' home in Skokie; to Florida, where he waited tables, then back to Skokie; to Colorado as a substitute teacher, coach and camp counselor, then, back to Skokie.

"My moves back home were always transitional. They allowed me to save up money, not having to pay rent and utilities," says Gaynor, who got a new job and moved out from his parents again last week.

A U.S. Census Bureau analysis earlier this month found that nearly one of every five young men in their mid-20s through mid-30s are either moving back home with their parents — or never left.'

F&F: Battle for Alimony Reform Heats up in FL, CA

Matt · 22 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Florida bill has been introduced to abolish lifetime alimony and clean up other abuses within the system, similar to the alimony reform bill recently passed in Massachusetts. One of Florida's largest newspapers, the Orlando Sentinel, attacked the bill as a windfall for "wealthy men who cheat on their wives."

Many Fathers and Families members have experienced the injustices of the current alimony system firsthand–we ask that you write a Letter to the Editor of the Sentinel by clicking here and/or comment on the bill here.

A Low-Rent Attack

Sentinel columnist Scott Maxwell employs anti-male stereotypes in his piece In new alimony bill, wealthy, cheating men could pay less, and informs us that the bill is "anti-woman," "unconstitutional," "radical," "Draconian," etc. In a state where alimony obligors are often unable to retire at a normal age because they must continue to pay alimony, Maxwell is somehow unable to come up with any family law experts who like the bill.'

Missing girl's mom arrested on child abuse charges

Matt · 22 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GLENDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Police on Monday arrested the mother of a missing 5-year-old Arizona girl on child abuse charges "directly related" to the girl, and said they don't believe they'll find the child alive.

In a news conference that offered the most detail yet about what investigators think happened to Jhessye Shockley, Glendale police said the girl's mother, Jerice Hunter, was now the investigation's "No. 1 focus."

Hunter was booked Monday at the Maricopa County jail. A sheriff's spokesman said Hunter was unable to talk to reporters because she had not yet been assigned a housing unit. She was scheduled for her first court appearance Monday night.

Hunter previously told The Associated Press she had nothing to do with Jhessye's disappearance and was highly critical of the department's investigation.

Glendale police Sgt. Brent Coombs said at the news conference that new information in the past few days led police to serve another search warrant on Hunter's Glendale apartment and arrest her Monday. He wouldn't elaborate.'

Cops: Woman kills 1, injures 5, then kills self

Matt · 22 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This is a really terrible and tragic situation made up of immature so-called adults doing nutty things with children being their victims. The reason I am posting it is to point out that yes, some women can do really irrationally violent things, just like some men can also when under similar circumstances. Nonetheless, no adult of any sex who can tell the difference between right and wrong actions (especially mortal actions) and who is also not well and truly insane in some other relevant way (e.g.: seeing flying pink elephants while hearing loud voices urging them to kill people) has no excuse for such behavior. She killed herself, so there is no way to know what "The System" would have done with her: treat her as the criminal she was or give her a room in a psychiatric ward? But I guess she passed sentence on herself. Excerpt:

'GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — A woman who killed her son, then shot her ex-boyfriend and four other people before killing herself was bitter over an affair with the married man, authorities said Monday.

The gunwoman, Mary Ann Holder, left behind two notes taking responsibility for the shootings Sunday morning and apologizing for the pain she caused, Guilford County Sheriff BJ Barnes said.

Investigators said the notes indicate Holder was angry about how her relationship with 40-year-old Randall Lamb came to an end after starting nearly four years ago. He was in stable condition on Monday.

Holder filed restraining orders against Lamb and his wife, saying they stalked and harassed her and that Lamb constantly drove past her house. Lamb's wife filed a restraining order against Holder, saying she would constantly call and text their cell phones and that Holder also sent nude pictures of herself to her boyfriend's wife.'

UK: Press Complaints Commission (PCC) upholds complaint against "Woman" magazine following custody battle story

Minuteman · 22 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The Press Complaints Commission has upheld a complaint against Woman under Clause 1 (Accuracy) of the Editors' Code of Practice after a first-person story it published about a custody battle was disputed by the former husband of the woman who had told her story.

The article was an account of the couple's custody dispute of their son, focusing particularly on the mother's decision to take the child from Cyprus to the UK without the complainant's consent. He contested a number of claims she had made, most notably that the child was taken to the UK because he needed medical care that was not available in Cyprus. He had not been contacted by the magazine before publication. The magazine said this was because he had not been accused of any wrong doing; however, in order to check the veracity of the piece, it had checked the text with the complainant's former mother-in-law to before going to print.'

Ed. note: The PCC in the UK is discussed here.

With Boys on Girls Swim Team, NYT's Support for Gender Equity Takes a Sudden Dive

anthony · 22 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After years of hailing the federal Title IX ruling that mandates equal opportunity for women in school athletics (and resulted in some schools shutting down marginal boys sports like wrestling), and for the inclusion of women on boys teams, the Times now turns around and sympathizes with girls who want boys to be barred from competing with them, despite the right of boys to compete apparently enshrined in the constitution of the true-blue liberal state of Massachusetts.

'Sarah Hooper, a senior at Needham High who is the fourth-fastest female entrant, finds the situation difficult to swallow.

“It’s really frustrating to see how athletic directors and school administrators aren’t doing anything,” she said. “They really aren’t advocating for us. I understand there isn’t an opportunity for these boys, but it infuriates me that they can’t combine two schools’ boys to create one team or have them compete in separate heats. The way it is now, the boys are taking recognition away from girls who have worked hard and deserve it.”'

...

Crouse offered rationalizations on why having girls on boys teams is unobjectionable, but having boys compete on a girls team is a newsworthy controversy.'

"In Praise of Idleness", revisited

redwoodwriter · 22 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From In Praise of Idleness by Bertrand Russell:

"If the ordinary wage-earner worked four hours a day, there would be enough for everybody and no unemployment -- assuming a certain very moderate amount of sensible organization. This idea shocks the well-to-do, because they are convinced that the poor would not know how to use so much leisure. In America men often work long hours even when they are well off; such men, naturally, are indignant at the idea of leisure for wage-earners, except as the grim punishment of unemployment; in fact, they dislike leisure even for their sons. Oddly enough, while they wish their sons to work so hard as to have no time to be civilized, they do not mind their wives and daughters having no work at all. the snobbish admiration of uselessness, which, in an aristocratic society, extends to both sexes, is, under a plutocracy, confined to women; this, however, does not make it any more in agreement with common sense.

This quote from Lord Bertrand Russell's famous essay, entitled "In Praise Of Idleness," highlights the fact that American men are indoctrinated with the "work ethic". These American men find it very difficult to be idle, to enjoy their leisure, to feel deserving of their time off. They must work, work, work, or else starve, or so they think. This is the mentality and the morality of a slave, and the modern world has no need for slaves.

It is time that American men confronted the disparity in work expectations between the sexes. For example, if a young couple has children, and the wife stays home with small children while the husband earns the money, perhaps there is some semblance of equality there. But as such a couple gets older, and the children grow up and leave the house, and the man continues to work full time while the wife has a life of leisure. Where is the equity in that?

SAVE E-lert: Giving Thanks

Matt · 23 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Via a SAVE email:

During this season of gratitude we realize that all of the things SAVE is thankful for are due to your efforts.

We want you to know how much we appreciate your calls and emails to legislators. We want to thank you for your generous donations. And we want to honor all of the volunteers who have joined the Domestic Violence Legislative Project (DVLP), the Countering Abuse Misinformation Project (CAMP), and Campaign 2012.

Your many calls and emails have already improved Senator Leahy's discussion draft of VAWA. Your generous donations have allowed us to distribute press releases, give dozens of radio interviews, and sponsor two public events in the last year, Hoax! and False Allegation Awareness Summit. Every one of your gifts, from $5 on up make a difference.

I want to take this moment to give a heartfelt "thank you" to each and every one of you who have committed yourselves to our success by joining the DVLP, CAMP, and Campaign 2012.

Each month I am amazed by the number of people who join our DVLP conference calls. I love reading the articles, letters to the editor and op-eds written by our CAMP crew. And I get a kick out of seeing photos of Campaign 2012 members wearing their t-shirts and hearing how the public reacts.

Know that you are a valuable part of SAVE. We do.

Know that you can make a difference...you already have, and together we will continue to do so!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

New Verizon DV Campaign Uses Same Worn Sterotypes and Half-Truths

heg215 · 23 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Here is a Verizon sponsored video depicting the stereotypical domestic violence bias. Please write in and call as well to express your dissatisfaction and ask them to make the necessary corrections. My letter is included here in for reference. We all must act, not just complain. Thank you. (Saveservices.org alerted me to this)

Contact:
Mr. Bob Varettoni
Executive Director, Media Relations
robert.a.varettoni-at-verizon.com

My letter:

Dear Mr. Varettoni,

I want to commend you and Verizon for forming a hotline for those who are victims of domestic violence. However, the video that I watched and statements that I read were highly inaccurate and very gender biased. It does not portray what is actually occurring with domestic violence.

First of all, why is this video only referring to "she" when it describes those affected by watching violence in the home? Why is there no reference to boys being affected by watching violence in the home? This is nothing but pure sexism and discrimination.

Second, why is there no reference to mothers hitting dads? Over 200 studies have shown that women initiate violence at rates equal to men. Even the CDC reports that women initiate violence 70% of the time in nonreciprocal violent relationships. (http://csulb.edu/~mfiebert/assault.htm) (http://ajph.aphapublications.org/cgi/content/abstract/97/5/941). Statistics used by the DV industry are skewed usually because they also add rape into the data or they use reported figures. Due to continued bias in education, most men don't report DV due to the fact no one would believe them, shame, or fear of themselves being arrested. Please view this study of DV in Ireland. It is precisely what male victims deal with. (http://www.amen.ie/Downloads/26007.pdf)

I would hope that Verizon Wireless wishes to be viewed as a company that truly wants to help ALL domestic violence victims and that includes the many men that are in desperate need of someplace to turn to. Verizon states, "People need to understand that when they look the other way, they condone this deplorable behavior." By using these biased and distorted figures and only addressing girls viewing violence and female victims, Verizon is perpetrating the act that they claim to want to end. As a Verizon Wireless customer, I will surely look into alternatives if these inaccuracies and biases are not properly addressed.

Thank you,

Bob McCoskrie: Why I won't be wearing the White Ribbon - New Zealand

Mr VanHuizen · 24 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Domestic violence is not a gender issue, writes Bob McCoskrie, national director of Family First NZ.

I won't be wearing a white ribbon on Friday. Don't get me wrong - I would be the first in line to condemn violence against women, and the first to be held to account for my own actions.

But the well-intentioned White Ribbon Campaign, according to the website, is led by the Families Commission which supports a "suite of family violence initiatives" including the It's Not OK campaign, the Family Violence Clearinghouse and the Family Violence Statistics report.

If we're serious about reducing family violence, we need to open both eyes - and tell the truth.

The website says "Violence is endemic within New Zealand. One in three women are victims of violence from a partner". The first part is right - the second misrepresents the facts.'

Do women really get a better deal than men in UK?

anthony · 24 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ironically enough, the idea came from a woman.

For years, Swayne O'Pie had been writing and lecturing about what he feels is feminism's corrosive effect on society.

Then, one day, his then girlfriend said: "Why don't you put all your notes together in a book."

And so was born the 456 pages of Why Britain Hates Men: Exposing Feminism, which he has just self-published.

He got the bit between his teeth around 20 years ago when he became a single parent and started counselling dads who were struggling to get access to their children.

As he brought up his own three kids, he encouraged fathers around the country to stand up for their rights, and was involved in a number of Fathers 4 Justice demonstrations.

That began a mission to prove his controversial point that men are now the put-upon underdogs in life.'

Australian Parliament Rolls Back Children's Rights to Their Dad

Kratch · 25 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The long-anticipated roll-back of children's rights in Australia has happened. The Australian Parliament has passed the bill aimed at scuttling the 2006 amendments to the Family Law Act that promised children greater access to their fathers.

The Howard government's modest attempt at making shared parenting the rule in Australia was met with a firestorm of protest from anti-father forces across the country. Lacking any comprehensive data for their claim, they nevertheless argued that the 2006 reforms endangered children. That of course was premised on the notion that fathers are uniquely harmful to children. The fact that, in Australia as in the United States, mothers commit more abuse and neglect of children than do fathers is a concept the anti-dad crowd preferred to ignore. They shouted to the skies their narrative of paternal violence, irrespective of known science.

And the political powers that be listened. The bill that was offered and that has now passed is so virulently anti-father as to beggar belief. More importantly, it's anti-child, despite the claim that it's done for their welfare. It's touted as protection for children because it places child safety as paramount when a court decides custody. Read about it here (News.Com.Au./11/22/11).'

Brooklyn teacher Claudia Tillery charged with raping boy

Anonymous · 26 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Let us remember that she is innocent until proven guilty of course. It is interesting that the article includes the word 'statutory', though. Is the article implying that if the boy WAS raped, it could only have been on statutory grounds? Excerpt:

'A female New York City school teacher has been charged with raping a statutory rape [sic] of a male student and plying him with drugs and alcohol, police said Wednesday.
...
The victim is a sixth-grader at Middle School 35, the Stephen Decatur School, in Bedford-Stuyvesant, Brooklyn, where Tillery began teaching in 1996, officials said. The boy, now 14, had been having a sexual relationship with Tillery for two years but ended it and came forward Nov.22.'

UK: Domestic violence team working with men to change the cycle of destruction

anthony · 27 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Are you violent or abusive?

Do you have problems managing your temper?

Do you frighten people you care about?'

These are the questions the Janus Project, Sheffield's only programme which works with men to stop their abuse of women, asks of those who walk voluntarily through its doors wanting help.

But the most important one is this: 'Do you want to change?'

"That desire is essential if we are to break the cycle of abuse," says Senior Therapist and Intervention Programme Coordinator Jozef Sen.

Janus, which gets around 20 enquiries a month, gives long-term support. Men are urged to stay for at least a year and after one to one therapy using anger management techniques, are encouraged to meet in a weekly group to help each other to change their violent or abusive behaviour.'

'Building better men'

anthony · 27 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Travis Jones is determined to show the community that nice guys don't finish last.

Jones has been hired by the Hailey-based Advocates for Survivors of Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault to lead a new project aimed at engaging men and boys in violence prevention efforts. The program is specifically designed to mobilize men and boys so they are inspired to take action against sexist violence and bullying.

According to statistics, more than 90 percent of violence against men and women is committed by men.

The Engaging Men and Boys project received startup funds from several local foundations and a grant from the U.S. Department of Justice's Violence Against Women Office. The grant is overseen by the Idaho Coalition Against Sexual and Domestic Violence.'

Woman who attacked McDonald's worker -- and became a "victim" of his self-defense -- arrested over another incident

Anonymous · 27 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Yep, that's Rachel Edwards, who along with accomplice Denise Darbeau attacked employee Rayon McIntosh at a Greenwich Village McDonald's. One of them slapped him and then jumped over the counter, pursuing and cornering him. He grabbed a pan cleaning utensil, dubbed a "metal bar" or "pipe" by the media to defend himself, and was arrested on felony assault charges. Excerpt:

'A Brooklyn woman caught on tape getting beat up in a Greenwich Village McDonald's has been busted for harassing her cousin, court papers show.

Rachel Edwards, 24, was blamed for sparking the fast food fight after she and a friend cursed out a worker and leaped over the counter last month.

She was arrested for trespassing for that incident and busted a day later for allegedly displaying the same potty mouth in a series of calls and text messages sent to Allison Belmosa.'

"Glitch" in prosecutors' presentation of Greenwich Village McDonald's Incident obscures some footage

Anonymous · 27 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Manhattan Criminal Court Judge Gerald Lebovits ruled that there was probable cause to hold McIntosh in custody while prosecutors take more time to present his felony case to a grand jury, which they are generally required to do within five days of an arrest, in order to keep the suspect in custody.

Video of the incident, which rapidly spread online, was played in court, but the excerpt did not include the moment as the women jumped over the counter. Prosecutors blamed the missing footage on a glitch in the recording.'

Hmmmm...the version of the video available online at http://www.helpfreerayonmcintosh.org/ does not suffer from this "glitch."

Something's fishy, no?

Philadelphia Woman Accused of Fatally Crushing Boyfriend With Car

anthony · 27 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'PHILADELPHIA -- Police in Philadelphia said a woman fatally crushed her boyfriend with a car early Sunday following an argument.

The incident occurred at around 2:00 a.m. local time in the city's Grays Ferry neighborhood after the couple was arguing inside the car, WPVI-TV reported.

When the man got out, his girlfriend struck him with the car and pushed him into the side of a home.

He was crushed by the impact and pronounced dead at the scene, police said.

The woman was arrested at the scene and was facing several criminal charges Sunday.

Police have not yet identified the man or woman, according to WPVI.'

Man Says Ex-Girlfriend Stole His Sperm to Create Kids

Matt · 28 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK – A New York man was stunned to find out that his four-year-old twins were not an accidental pregnancy after all -- but that his desperate girlfriend secretly stashed away his sperm and used it for an in-vitro procedure, he charges in a lawsuit.

Joseph Pressil, 36, was not planning on having children with Anetria Burnett, with whom he was in a relationship for six months in 2007, he said.

So she took matters into her own hands, he told the New York Post, in order to remain in his Texas house and make a legal bid for half of his possessions.

"A gold digger is an understatement. She was trying to get community property and alimony. She's ruthless," he said.

Now, Pressil is suing Burnett in Texas for custody of their sons.

"This is more than a nightmare -- it's a horror story," he told the Post.

Pressil, a telecommunications manager, said he hooked up with Burnett, 34, when he lived in Texas -- and was a little surprised when she announced she was pregnant.

"We always used condoms," he said. But when a DNA test proved him to be the father, Pressil said he began paying $800 a month in child support.'

"One man's modest plea for womankind’s right to nonviolence"

anthony · 28 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While men's attitudes are difficult to gauge, The VicHealth National Survey on Community Attitudes to Violence against Women 2009 found that 22% of men believed that rates of violence were equal between men and women and just under two-thirds of Australian men would describe violence against women as a "common" problem; alarming figures that hint at a wider scepticism about the clear contrasts between victimisation and perpetration rates in Australia.

Some simply do not trust the appalling national and state statistics that have either remained unchanged over the years or risen in some areas. Every time a journalist dares publish a figure that slightly widens the lens to better view the full horrifying scope of the issue, the internet comment backlash is merciless.

Some are still writing off instances of intimate partner homicide, rape and physical, psychological and sexual abuse as acts of individual irrationality or crimes of emotion or provocation. Men, along with wider society seem to shrug off the importance of the issue, like the way Facebook recently shrugged off calls to remove "rape joke" pages.

Some still do not believe the issue is as big as popular opinion would suggest, and that men are the "real" invisible victims of domestic violence. It is getting harder to avoid noticing some of the bizarre and often offensive claims in the numerous men's rights websites out there.'

Feminists Target Boys' High School Sports

anthony · 29 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now the feminists in Barack Obama's Department of Education are starting to apply the same anti-male regulations to high schools and demand that high schools apply the same gender quotas that have cut back men's teams in colleges. The feminists have filed charges against hundreds of high schools all over the country.

Much research shows that males and females have different interest levels in sports, but the feminists claim that is "a stereotype" that can even be ruled "impermissible" under the Title IX law. Research and common sense are unlikely to deter feminist activists. They've made it clear time and time again that their real goal is not equal opportunities for women, but equal outcomes, regardless of whether most women desire that equal outcome or not. It is predictable that if boys sports are reduced, we will have more and more high school dropouts.'

Women Aggressive Toward 'Sexy' Peers

anthony · 29 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new study finds women can be downright nasty when they don't approve of members of their sex.

The harsh reactions of 43 women to a provocatively dressed peer, caught on tape by Canadian researchers, reveal just how sassy women get when they think someone else is sexier.

"I was convinced, having lived a life as a woman, that we're not as pleasant as some people make us out to be," said Tracy Vaillancourt, professor of psychology at the University of Ottawa and lead author of the study published in Aggressive Behavior.'

Man ordered to pay wife for lack of sex

GaryB · 30 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A COURT in France has ordered a man to pay 10,000 euros in damages to his long-frustrated ex-wife after he failed in his marriage "duties" by withholding sex from her for years. In the May ruling, published overnight in the Gazette du Palais judicial review, an appeals court in the southern city of Aix-en-Provence upheld an earlier decision to award the damages for "absence of sexual relations".

The couple, who are both 51, married in 1986 and have two children. They divorced in January 2009 in Nice.

In its ruling, the court said the man's wife deserved the damages due to the suffering she endured because of her sexless marriage.

"The wife's expectations were legitimate in the sense that sexual relations between married people are an expression of their mutual affection and part of the duties that proceed from marriage," the court said.

It dismissed the husband's argument that health problems and long working hours had simply reduced the opportunities for the couple to have sex. The court ruled that he had not proved "any health problems that would make him completely incapable of having intimate relations with his wife".'

So, I guess that makes it official - the men of France can now sue their wives if they refuse to put out, right? The law is obviously stating that sex is part of the marriage contract, and that failure to deliver on your part is counted as breach of that contract. But can you see women being held to the same standard? Can you just hear the wailing and the gnashing of teeth if a woman - ANY woman - was taken to court and forced to pay (or even worse, 'deliver') on her part of the bargain??!

To paraphrase the Witch, what a world, what a world...

F&F: Tell Officials to Reunite Solomon Metalwala with His Daughter Maile

Matt · 30 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Short version: Washington Department of Social and Health Services seized Maile Metalwala, the 4-year-old daughter of Solomon Metalwala, away from her unfit mother, Julia Biryukova, and put Maile in foster care. It is a common but unjust practice for child welfare agencies to put children in foster care instead of giving them to their fathers. Moreover, the Washington court separated Maile from Solomon based on spurious abuse allegations from a now thoroughly discredited accuser.

We want you to contact all relevant Washington authorities and demand that Solomon and little Maile be reunited--to email and fax them a letter, click here.'

Verizon Video Teaches Children to Fear Fathers, SAVE Charges

Matt · 30 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Washington, DC/November 29, 2011 — A domestic violence video produced by the Verizon Foundation distorts the facts, plays on emotions, and serves to alarm and frighten young children. Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE), an advocate for domestic violence victims, has communicated with Verizon executives about the numerous factual errors, but the company refuses to correct its dangerous misinformation.

Titled “Monsters,” the video revels in powerful yet destructive stereotypes: fathers as abusers, wives as victims, and young boys as future abusers. “The child who lives with domestic violence… is afraid of the monster just down the hall,” a girl’s voiceover intones, while frightening images of a hunchbacked monster-dad flit across the screen: http://www.multivu.com/mnr/52044-verizon-foundation-national-domestic-hotline-video-launch-monsters.'

Do Men Think About Sex All the Time? Maybe Not

Minuteman · 30 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A new study is challenging the widely held notion that men's minds are preoccupied with one topic: sex.

The research in college-age participants suggests that while men do think about sex more often than women, the subject crosses their mind an average of only about 19 times per day, compared to 10 times per day for women.

The results seem to disprove the popular notion that men think about sex every seven seconds, which would total more than 8,000 thoughts about sex in 16 waking hours, the Ohio State University researchers said.

"It's amazing the way people will spout off these fake statistics that men think about sex nearly constantly and so much more often than women do," lead author Terri Fisher, a professor of psychology, said in a university news release. "When a man hears a statement like that, he might think there's something wrong with him because he's not spending that much time thinking about sexuality, and when women hear about this, if they spend significant time thinking about sex they might think there's something wrong with them."'

'Ask Amy' seems fine with subterfuge to get pregnant against husband's wishes chuck · 30 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Column here. A one-sided response from Amy Dickinson. She blames the husband as does the wife. The husband did say "I could never have kids." Amy does not say a word about the wife's deceit when she tried to subvert her husband's desires by secretly going off the pill. Apparently both Amy and the wife think women have a right to do this. Excerpt:

'I knew it was wrong, but I would accidentally-on-purpose skip days of my birth control, eventually ceasing to take the pills at all. I knew that if we had a child, my husband would grow to love it.

The problem was that, after months of this, I never conceived. A few weeks ago, I finally decided to broach the topic again with my husband.

I discovered that he had a vasectomy a year before we met!
...

Dear Seeking: When your husband stated "I could never have kids," it sounds like he seems to think this is the same thing as saying, "I had a vasectomy."

It is not.
...
You two desperately need to strip away the obfuscation and start telling the truth. Unvarnish it. Why did he have a vasectomy in the first place? Is he willing to have children now? Would he be willing to have his vasectomy reversed or adopt a child with you? Give yourself a reasonable timeline.

Total honesty and clarity about this will help both of you make a decision about the future of your marriage.'

Australia: Federal government funded women-only research fellowships announced

Minuteman · 30 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to media release here. Excerpt:

'The outstanding achievements of Australian Nobel Laureate Professor Elizabeth Blackburn have been recognised through a new fellowship from the National Health and Medical Research Council (NHMRC) awarded to top female Research Fellows.

This important new NHMRC Fellowship was announced today by Minister for Health and Ageing Nicola Roxon and Minister for Mental Health and Ageing Mark Butler.

“The NHMRC Elizabeth Blackburn Fellowships will foster the career development of female scientists excelling in biomedical, clinical and public health research,” Ms Roxon said.

“Professor Blackburn’s stellar international career, which includes the Nobel Prize for Medicine in 2009, has inspired the NHMRC to recognise the next generation of Australian women in science.”

The inaugural Elizabeth Blackburn Fellowships were awarded to: Associate Professor Amanda Leach (Menzies School of Research), Associate Professor Christine Roberts (University of Sydney), and Professor Carola Vinuesa (John Curtin School of Medical Research).

“These exceptional women are contributing to Australia’s health and wellbeing through important research and I congratulate them on their awards.”'

Woman admits to sexually assaulting her four children in the 1990s

Anonymous · 30 November 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. If this were a man, it would have been front page news in Boston.com with several other articles that would overview the case in detail. Also, the woman got out of harsher charges because she invoked her her neo-feminist jurisprudence override and claimed she was "abused". Funny how these issues get worked out very differently in public opinion and sentencing. Excerpt:

'A Lowell mother has pleaded guilty to raping her four children, putting an end to a 16-year-old case that was reactivated last month when the Massachusetts Appeals Court overturned her conviction.

Nancy Adkinson, 49, was convicted in a jury-waived trial in Middlesex Superior Court in 1997 and given a sentence that would have kept her behind bars until she was 70 years old. However, the appeals court ruled last month that Adkinson was a battered woman whose husband, Corby Adkinson, also controlled the trial strategy that led to her conviction. The court ordered a new trial.

On Tuesday, Nancy Adkinson pleaded guilty to the same charges at a Woburn courthouse and was sentenced by Superior Court Judge Leila Kern to up to 16 years in state prison for four counts of rape, and up to 10 years for three counts of indecent assault and battery and three counts of distributing cocaine to a minor.'

SAVE: Verizon: "She's Afraid of Her Dad"

Matt · 1 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

The Verizon Foundation has produced a frightening video titled Monsters. The video's perverse message can be summed up in this slide: "She's afraid of her dad."

The video revels in powerful yet destructive stereotypes: fathers as abusers, wives as victims, and young boys as future abusers. The video tells the impressionable viewer:

"The child who lives with domestic violence... is afraid of the monster just down the hall," a girl's voiceover intones, while frightening images of a hunchbacked monster-dad flit across the screen: http://www.multivu.com/mnr/52044-verizon-foundation-national-domestic-hotline-video-launch-monsters

To be honest this video is not just biased, it's awful. Tell Verizon (politely) to clean up its act.

Contact Bob Varettoni, Executive Director of Media Relations:

Email: robert.a.varettoni-at-verizon.com

Please email today - thanks!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Life After a Guilty Plea to False Charge

anthony · 1 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'They believed that their son was innocent but were afraid that Virginia's penal system would grab hold of him and never let go.

So Cherri Dulaney and Edgar Coker Sr. told 15-year-old Edgar Jr. to plead guilty to raping a 14-year-old friend. Their court-appointed attorney told them that was better than risking adult charges and a lengthy prison term.

Two months after their decision, in November 2007, the girl admitted that she had lied.

The Cokers have been fighting ever since to rescue their son from the consequences. He served 17 months in a juvenile prison. He remains on the Virginia sex-offender registry, and the family moved to avoid harassment from neighbors.

Last month, Coker, now 20, was arrested during a Friday night football game at the Orange, Va., high school he graduated from after his release from juvenile prison. Unless they have permission from the school, convicted violent sex offenders are not permitted on school grounds. But Coker had received such permission, and he attended school there for more than a year before graduation.'

Fathers Seeking to Confirm Paternity Through DNA Testing on the Rise

anthony · 1 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Paternity has been pushed into the national spotlight by the recent allegations toward teen pop star Justin Bieber. While tabloids buzz with celebrity paternity stories, thousands of men across the country face the same issue daily and turn to DNA paternity testing to either confirm or refute their relationship to children. According to DDC (DNA Diagnostics Center), the largest provider of private paternity testing worldwide, questions about paternity testing from men have increased annually and now account for about 40% of all inquiries.

“As one of the leading companies in DNA testing, we’re seeing an increase in calls by men seeking paternity answers, especially for cases where there are disputes or where chain of custody is important,” said Dr. Michael Baird, chief science officer for DDC. “In the case of DDC, we’re an accredited AABB laboratory that maintains a chain of custody reporting structure to ensure results of a test can be presented in court, if needed.”'

Violence Against Women Act Meets Reality

anthony · 1 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Section 102, “Grants to Encourage Arrest Policies and Enforce Protection Orders” calls for the development of “multidisciplinary high risk teams” focused on reducing sexual violence and homicides by developing “evidence-based indicators to assess the risk of homicide.” Oher than the ambiguous “evidence-based indicators,” there is no mention in the bill that a complaint by an alleged victim must be made before such assessments can take place. Absent a complaint, how does one justify government surveillance in order to gather “evidence”?

Another troubling clause concerns eligibility for grants in which the grantee, “with the exception of the courts,” must demonstrate that their ”laws, policies, or practices and their training programs discourage dual arrests of offender and victim” (italic mine). Offender and victim as defined by whom? Absent physical evidence, domestic violence cases are often he said-she said affairs. Dual arrests are often necessary in order to ferret out the truth, and this item would appear to inhibit that.

...

Section 108, “Criminal Provision Related to Stalking, Including Cyberstalking” is yet another area where ambiguity allows for the possibility of abuse, especially with respect to cyberstalking. Part of what constitutes cyberstalking is that which “causes or attempts to cause or would reasonably expect to cause emotional distress to any person.” In a country where hypersensitivity has reached absurd levels, “emotional distress” is a troublingly elastic concept. One that can be exploited in the aforementioned civil litigation.'

Leahy, Crapo introduce bipartisan bill to reauthorize landmark Violence Against Women Act

anthony · 1 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON (Wednesday, Nov. 30, 2011) – Nearly 20 years after the Violence Against Women Act was first signed into law, U.S. Senator Patrick Leahy (D-Vt.) introduced bipartisan legislation Wednesday to further strengthen and improve the programs authorized under the landmark law to assist victims and survivors of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking. The legislation is cosponsored by Senator Mike Crapo (R-Idaho).
...
“These dollars go directly to woman and children who have been victimized by domestic violence,” Crapo said. “The reauthorization of VAWA provides critical services to these victims of violent crime, as well as agencies and organizations who provide important aid to those individuals. I have been a strong supporter of prevention and elimination of domestic abuse since coming to Congress, and I intend to continue to fight to keep these funds intact for women and children.”'

VAWA 'harmful for America'

anthony · 1 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Radical feminists recently suffered a rare setback when a U.S. senator decided to back away from proposed legislation that would have denied college students basic civil rights.

Senator Patrick Leahy (D-Vermont) has dropped the "preponderance of evidence" standard that was to be added to the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). Phil Cook of Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE), an organization that dedicates itself to protecting victims and stopping false allegations, tells OneNewsNow what that would have meant for college students accused of a sex crime.

"The standard is it's more likely than not a sexual assault occurred -- that's what 'preponderance of evidence' means," he details.

But even though the clause has been removed, the SAVE spokesman says there are still many unresolved issues involving the renewal of the Violence Against Women Act, such as a Department of Education directive that requires schools to set up tribunals to judge students accused of sex assaults.

"Colleges must set up basically kangaroo courts. These are committees made up of faculty and students," Cook explains. "These committees are set up to look into things like plagiarism and cheating and things like that; they're not set up to be criminal investigative units."

So even though he is pleased Senator Leahy has dropped one controversial standard of the VAWA, Cook's organization warns that numerous existing provisions are "dangerous to victims and harmful to fundamental American values and institutions."'

Plague buildup in heart arteries "more worrisome for women than men"

Minuteman · 1 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Your heart relies on arteries to feed it blood. When plaque builds up in these crucial blood vessels, it's bad news. But it may be even more of a threat for women.

In a new study, researchers included 480 people who were having severe chest pain. Doctors gave all of them a high-tech test that took pictures of their heart to check for plaque.

Having a lot of plaque buildup in the heart's arteries had a different effect in men and women. It put women at a higher risk of major heart problems like a heart attack or dying of a heart-related cause down the road.

These findings show that having extensive plaque buildup is more worrisome for women than men, according to one of the researchers.'

The Circumcision Referendum: More American Jews are Becoming Intactivists

Matt · 2 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.:

Interesting quotes from intactivist rabbis and other Jews. Sample from Rabbi Binyamin Biber:

"We're seeing [circumcision's] decline, and we're seeing Rabbi's like me and others in other communities saying these practices are not warranted and we're seeing a generational shift away from them. One of the things that I think that's also critical is the growing popularity, and I think a rightful popularity of natural medicine and natural childbirth ideas. And I think that this is clearly seen as inconsistent - not consistent with natural childbirth, natural health. ... Inflicting a wound on an infant is clearly not one of those....“

And from another rabbi:
"The code of the Jewish law is called "halacha" (the way). Within the Code, there is a provision that if a mother loses a son because of circumcision, she is NOT obligated to circumcise her next son. I extrapolate from this, the inter-connection of my human family, that enough deaths and maiming have occurred because of circumcision. Therefore - circumcision is no longer a requisite! Just as we no longer practice the animal sacrifices in the traditional temple, so let us not sacrifice an important piece of our mammal in the temple of tradition."
- Rabbi Nathan Segal, One Rabbis' Thoughts on Circumcision

Hawking of circumcision on World AIDS Day by various U.S. government agencies

Minuteman · 2 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

The White House Blog - American Leadership to Reach an AIDS-Free Generation. Excerpt:

'As President Obama said in his remarks and his World AIDS Day Proclamation, scientific advances have provided us with a unique opportunity for dramatic gains in the global response to HIV/AIDS. The concept of ‘combination prevention,’ through which we rely on multiple prevention interventions tailored to needs in the countries where we work, is at the center of this effort. The President outlined plans to expand our combination prevention work, including prevention of mother-to-child transmission, voluntary medical male circumcision, and condoms.'

Department of State Press Statement - World AIDS Day 2011. Excerpt:

'This vision of an AIDS-free generation can only be realized by working together. Partner governments, civil society, the private sector and multilateral organizations like the Global Fund to Fight AIDS, Tuberculosis, and Malaria must collaborate and share best practices. We must engage the world’s brightest scientists, advocates, and public health experts to find more effective ways to fight HIV. High-impact interventions like antiretroviral treatment, prevention of mother-to-child transmission, and voluntary medical male circumcision have the potential to move us toward the end of this epidemic.'

NIH News Release - NIH Statement on World AIDS Day 2011. Excerpt:

'As a result of NIH-sponsored research, we have known for some time that the use of antiretroviral drugs during pregnancy can prevent HIV transmission from mother to child. More recently, medically supervised adult male circumcision was shown to decrease by more than half the risk of female-to-male sexual transmission in communities where men are not circumcised. We also have long known that correct and consistent condom use can prevent sexual transmission of the virus.

...

Mathematical models indicate that the use of parallel approaches to HIV prevention in a community could dramatically change the trajectory of the HIV/AIDS pandemic. Such approaches could include scaling up medically supervised adult male circumcision, consistent and proper use of condoms, the prevention of mother-to-child HIV transmission, and substantially increasing the number of HIV-infected individuals who receive antiretroviral therapy.'

Jury Declines to Indict McDonald's Cook Rayon McIntosh

Anonymous · 2 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Just reported by CBS 2 News around 5: 30 pm. Word is only starting to hit the web. As of 5:43 pm ET, a web search only yielded this NBC NY article:

'A grand jury has dismissed all charges against a McDonald's cook accused of beating two irate customers with a metal rod in a fight caught on videotape.

Rayon McIntosh was to be released from jail Friday after the grand jury vote.

The grand jury is still weighing charges against the women, Rachel Edwards and Denise Darbeau. They were arraigned on initial charges of trespassing in the Oct. 13 episode.

Another customer's video showed two women vaulting a counter to attack McIntosh and him grabbing a metal bar and hitting back, even after the women were on the floor. One suffered a fractured skull.

McIntosh said he was only defending himself. The women's lawyer says McIntosh used unjustifiable force.'

Judge orders Mindy McCready: Return son to Florida

Matt · 2 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Wonder where the dad is in all this? And why is McCready's mother the guardian of the boy and not his father when it seems the boy can visit the dad? This is weird. But aside from that, seems this is a case of mom v. daughter and mom ignoring the law. Curious to see how they treat her when they finally catch up with her, which I am sure they will soon enough. Will she also get jail time like men who violate custody orders and take their kids across state lines? Usually mom alleges abuse at the hands of dad. In this one, she is alleging abuse at the hands of her own mother. Try to keep up with all the pronouns! Excerpt:

'ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) - Country singer Mindy McCready said Thursday she would not bring her 5-year-old son back from Tennessee to Florida, despite violating a custody arrangement and a judge's order.

McCready took the boy during a recent visit at her father's southwest Florida home and a judge signed an order Thursday ordering authorities to take the boy into custody and return him. It's not yet clear whether she could face criminal charges.

"I'm doing all this to protect Zander, not stay out of trouble," McCready wrote in an email to The Associated Press on Thursday. "I don't think I should be in trouble for protecting my son in the first place."

McCready says she is in Tennessee and it is looking less likely that she will bring her son back to Florida. She says she cannot travel because she's nearly seven months pregnant with twins. There was no answer at a Nashville address for McCready.

The judge's order means law enforcement anywhere can pick up Zander and bring him back to Florida.

McCready and her mother have had a long custody battle over the boy. Until recently, the boy was living with McCready's mother. Her mother was awarded guardianship in 2007. McCready says her son has suffered abuse at her mother's house; her mother, Gayle Inge, denies the abuse allegations.'

Are Hormones Responsible for Women's Non-Traditional Career Choices?

Matt · 2 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Food for thought. Excerpt:

'Many different individuals and groups surmise as to why this particular disparity exists; for instance, many people blame cultural stereotypes that dictate which careers are acceptable for males and females. Other people believe that certain negative social issues deter women from succeeding in these fields, while there is also the popular argument that women tend to shy away from scientific careers due to socialization. For instance, the career interests of children are directly tied to parental expectations. In fact, studies reveal that the gender-related parental expectations of teenagers positively correlate with their future career choices.

Biology Determines Occupational Choices?

According to psychology researchers at Penn State University, specific sex hormones directly influence people's general interests. In turn, these specific interests directly affect which careers these individuals choose to pursue.

"Our results provide strong support for hormonal influences on interest in occupations characterized by working with things versus people," said Adriene M. Beltz, a graduate student in Psychology working directly with Sheri A. Berenbaum, a Professor of Psychology and Pediatrics at Penn State University.'

Lung cancer's "hidden victims"

Minuteman · 3 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than 32,000 Americans who never lit up will die each year, with women at higher risk, experts say.

...

In fact, experts say, one in every five cases of the leading cancer killer occurs in nonsmokers. The annual death toll among this group now approaches that of breast cancer (about 40,000 per year) and is roughly equal to that of prostate cancer (32,000). Many never-smoking women may also be unaware that they are more than twice as likely to die of lung cancer as they are of ovarian cancer (14,000 deaths per year).

...

"Among never-smokers with lung cancer, women outnumber men two-to-one," Wenger said.

According to experts at the LCRF, the reasons for the disparity aren't clear, but early research is suggesting that, much like breast tumors, lung tumor aggressiveness in women appears linked to estrogen.'

Multitasking Stresses Out Working Moms More Than Dads

Minuteman · 3 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ever unload the dishwasher while helping with a child's homework? Ever keep one eye on soccer practice while checking your voice mail and trying to figure out what to make for dinner?

That's called multitasking, and in a fast-paced world, American working moms do a whole lot of it -- and seem more stressed by it than working dads, a new study shows.

According to the research, working mothers spend 9 more hours a week multitasking than do working fathers, or about 48 hours per week for moms compared with 39 for dads.

...

What can be done to alleviate the pressure on moms?

Getting dads to not just pitch in more, but to share more equally in the child care and housework would help, Schneider said. In other words, don't just take your daughter to gymnastics when your wife says she can't do it. Make that your job to take her to gymnastics every week.'

Mindy McCready's 5-year-old son found 'hiding in a closet' with mom

Matt · 3 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Gayle Inge, Zander's grandmother and McCready's mother, was tearful when she talked about the news by phone Friday night with The Associated Press.
...
Inge said Zander was taken into custody at McCready's boyfriend's lake home in Arkansas. Inge said that her son — McCready's half-brother — texted McCready, who responded with a text that said her mother would never see her again.
...
The evening's developments capped a days-long struggle between McCready — who is seven months pregnant with twins — and several others, including state of Florida child welfare authorities, a Fort Myers, Fla. judge and her own mother.

Authorities say McCready took the boy during a visit late last month to her father's Florida home, where she was allowed to visit the boy. McCready's parents are divorced.

A Florida judge signed an order Thursday telling authorities to take the boy into custody and return him. It's not yet clear whether the singer could face criminal charges.'

"McDonald's Beating Cook Rayon McIntosh 'Elated' to be Free"

Anonymous · 4 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Although Rayon McIntosh is free, justice has yet to be served. Not only does he deserve compensation from his employer, but these two violent thugs need to be put away for attempted murder. They were free while he was in jail for 48 days. Excerpt:

'MANHATTAN — Rayon McIntosh — the Greenwich Village McDonald's cook who was cleared Friday evening of felony assault charges for beating two unruly female customers — said he was overjoyed to be free after spending nearly seven weeks in jail and plans to sue the fast food eatery for not keeping him safe.

"I'm just glad to be home," McIntosh, 31, told DNAinfo after being released from Rikers Island Friday night. "I feel elated, I feel splendid."

In the first in-depth interview since his release, McIntosh — who garnered an outpouring of support after DNAinfo's "On the Inside" broke the news of the shocking videotaped Oct. 13 incident — said that he and other employees had told managers and franchise owners of the West 3rd Street McDonald's for months that they needed to hire more security.'

Dad bashed wife to death after she killed son

Minuteman · 4 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A US father who bashed his mentally ill wife to death with a torch after she strangled their son and tried to kill their daughter has been jailed 30 years for manslaughter.

Christopher Smeltzer, 39, arrived at his New Hampshire home on November 7, 2010, to find his four-year-old son strangled to death and his seven-year-old daughter hanging off her bed with a scarf tied around her neck, Fox News reports.

His wife, Mara Pappalardo, was in the process of trying to kill herself, Rockingham Superior Court heard.
...

"I am mad and sad that my daddy killed my mommy and brother Mason," Mercey said on a tape recording played in court.

"Please keep him in jail for the rest of his life."
...
Smeltzer's charge was changed from second-degree manslaughter to manslaughter by provocation because of the traumatic scene he would have walked into.'

Hillary Clinton criticism sparks Israeli anger

anthony · 4 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It seems Mrs. Clinton conveniently forgot to mention Israeli men have a higher legal retirement age. Excerpt:

'Israeli ministers reacted angrily on Sunday after local media quoted U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton as saying she feared for the future of Israel's democracy and the rights of women in the Jewish state.

Clinton's remarks, reportedly made Saturday behind closed doors at the Saban Forum in Washington, made headlines in most Israeli newspapers, which reported them without explaining how they obtained the comments.

Top-selling Yediot Aharonot said Clinton had expressed concern about a slew of "anti-democratic" bills proposed by right-wing members of Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's government.

And the newspaper said Clinton had described shock at hearing that some buses in Jerusalem were gender segregated and some religious Israeli soldiers refused to attend events where women would sing.

The comments sparked a quick backlash in Jerusalem, where Israeli ministers holding a weekly cabinet meeting accused Clinton of hyperbole.

Finance Minister Yuval Steinitz called Clinton's remarks "totally exaggerated," Israeli media reported.'

Cops: Charlie Sheen's ex-wife arrested for assault, drugs

anthony · 4 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Keep in mind this is the same woman who accused Charlie Sheen of domestic abuse.

'Authorities said officers arrested Mueller at a nightclub after a woman reported being assaulted by her.

Mueller posted $11,000 bond and was released from custody. She was scheduled in court Dec. 19.

Aspen police spokeswoman Blair Weyer says additional details are not immediately available.

Her attorney, Yale Galanter, had no comment.

Sheen and Mueller divorced earlier this year, citing Christmas Day 2009 as the day of their breakup.

Charlie Sheen was arrested in Aspen on that day on suspicion of assaulting Mueller.

He completed his probation in that case last November.'

6 Symptoms You Should Never Ignore

Matt · 4 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to their health, says Dr. Holt, guys are notorious for doing too little, too late. As men, we're told to play through the pain, tough it out, shake it off, and suck it up. There are a dozen other variations of the same message, and they're all code for: Ignore your symptoms.

And why not? What doesn't kill us makes us stronger, right?

Here's the problem: Things kill us all the time. Even when we're young. In fact, guys between the ages of 20 and 40 are twice as likely to die as women, says Dr. Holt.

Most of us, I'd hope, would call a doctor if we were struck by blinding head pain, suddenly couldn't feel one side of our body, or, frankly, noticed fist-size bumps emerging from our foreheads. But some symptoms aren't so obviously dire. We asked writer Allen St. John to put together a list of surprising symptoms you should never ignore. ...

1. SEVERE BACK PAIN
...
2. SUDDEN GROIN PAIN
...
3. SHARP PAIN IN THE ABDOMEN
...
4. TRANSIENT CHEST PAIN
...
5. LEG PAIN WITH SWELLING
...
6. PAINFUL URINATION'

NCFM protest at Verizon on Dec. 10 at 2:00 PM in Santa Monica, CA

Matt · 5 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

For Immediate Release

Los Angeles - 12/4/11 - The National Coalition For Men's (NCFM) Los Angeles chapter will be protesting and handing out flyers on Saturday, 12/10/11 at 2:00 PM outside Verizon at 2530 Wilshire Blvd., Santa Monica, corner of Wilshire & 26th St., against Verizon's sexist, anti-father ads that depict all domestic violence as committed by men and fathers against women, and that says among children who witness it, the girls grow up to be victims while the boys grow up to be abusers. See it here: http://www.multivu.com/mnr/52044-verizon-foundation-national-domestic-hotline-video-launch-monsters

The following flyer will be distributed, which was created by SAVE, a national organization that is organizing similar protests nationwide this week against the Verizon ad: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/Verizon-Monster-Video-flyer-FINAL.pdf

NCFM and SAVE have asked Verizon to withdraw or change the sexist ad, but they refused, and in response they cite crime data showing far more women than men are victims.

To begin with, when we mention soldiers in Iraq, we say "men and women" regardless of the fact that over 90% of them are men. That's to make sure the minority are not excluded. Why aren't domestic violence victims given the same respect? There is a 40-year history of the National Domestic Violence Hotline (NDVH), which co-sponsored this ad, addressing this issue in a way that leaves male victims and their children invisible as usual. NCFM had to sue the State of California for its widespread discrimination against male victims. The lawsuit resulted in an appellate decision holding that "domestic violence is a serious problem for both women and men," that excluding male victims "carries with it the baggage of sexual stereotypes," and that it is unconstitutional to exclude male victims of domestic violence from the statutory funding provisions or from state-funded services. Woods v. Horton (2008) 167 Cal.App.4th 658. News-Enterprise, "Court Rules Domestic Violence Programs Must Be Open to Men" (10/15/08) (http://www.metnews.com/articles/2008/wood101508.htm)

And the crime data they cite is not accurate. The police data shows about 25% of police calls now come from men. But since men are less likely to report it, the oft-cited crime data from the Department of Justice is not reliable. By contrast, virtually all of the randomized surveys show women initiate DV at least as often as men, and men suffer 1/3 of the physical injuries, as Cal State University Professor Martin Fiebert shows in his online bibliography at http://www.csulb.edu/~mfiebert/assault.htm. For example: Science Daily, "Male And Female Adolescents Equally Victims Of Physical Dating Violence, Study Shows" (11/12/07) (http://www.sciencedaily.com/releases/2007/11/071109210657.htm)

A 32-nation study by the University of New Hampshire found women are as violent and controlling as men in dating relationships worldwide. See: http://www.unh.edu/news/cj_nr/2006/may/em_060519male.cfm?type=n and http://pubpages.unh.edu/~mas2/ID41E2.pdf.

The Centers for Disease Control recently funded a major study of heterosexual relationships throughout the U.S. and found: "Almost 24% of all relationships had some violence, and half (49.7%) of those were reciprocally violent. In nonreciprocally violent relationships, women were the perpetrators in more than 70% of the cases," and both sexes suffered significant injuries. See: http://www.ajph.org/cgi/content/abstract/97/5/941

The same study also found: "More women than men (25% versus 11%) were responsible. In fact, 71 percent of the instigators in nonreciprocal partner violence were women" and "while injury was more likely when violence was perpetrated by men, in relationships with reciprocal violence it was the men who were injured more often (25% of the time) than were women (20% of the time)." (See http://pn.psychiatryonline.org/cgi/content/full/42/15/31-a)

When children witness either parent hit the other, regardless of how severe or minor, it becomes a model for them to follow. Domestic violence is an intergenerational cycle, and we'll never stop that cycle without being honest about it rather than covering up half of it out of political correctness.

Marc E. Angelucci, Esq.
Vice President
National Coalition For Men

Boy, 9, Suspended from School for Sexual Harassment After Calling Teacher 'Cute'

anthony · 5 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 9-year-old boy North Carolina boy was suspended for calling a teacher “cute,” WSOCTV.com reports.

The boy’s mother, Chiquita Lockett, said the principal of Brookside Elementary in Gastonia called her after the incident to say the comment was a form of “sexual harassment.”

"It's not like he went up to the woman and tried to grab her or touch her in a sexual way," Lockett said. "So why would he be suspended for two days?”

According to the station, a district spokeswoman said she could not go into detail, but said the boy was suspended for "inappropriate behavior" after making "inappropriate statements."

The district's Code of Conduct doesn't list "inappropriate behavior," but says "disruption of school" is punishable by five days of out-of-school suspension.'

Kim Kardashian: Domestic Abuser?

anthony · 5 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'People are horrified over the episode of Keeping Up with the Kardashian's in which Kim Kardashian takes a closed fist swing at husband Kris Humphries. Despite the entire scenario being caught on camera, many viewers are still wondering -- is this domestic violence?

How is this a disputable question? Though some have tried to downplay her violent reaction by calling it "playful," throwing a fist at your husband is not playful and technically falls under the category of domestic violence. It seems that because Kim is a woman people are confused as to whether or not her action falls into the "domestic violence" category. My answer: yes, it absolutely does.
...
Are people quick to defend her because she is physically smaller and weaker than her husband therefore he should be able to "take it?" No man deserves the humiliation and pain that goes along with being beat up by a woman despite whether or not he can physically "take it." The emotional and psychological impact lasts long after the physical bruises have faded. Men are often silent victims when it comes to being victims of rape and/or domestic violence. Male victims of domestic abuse and rape deal with even more societal stigmatization than female victims, who have it rough as it is. Society unfairly labels men who "complain" about violence from a partner as "not real men" or just plain weak. This is wrong. Anytime a person is abused by a family member it is domestic violence whether it is a female or male throwing the punches.'

Ex-McDonald's cook who whacked two women says he's going to sue fast-food eatery

Anonymous · 5 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"My life was in danger," McIntosh told the Daily News. "Females do murder men. . . . I displayed a lot of patience. I was in fear for my life."

Cell phone video of the ugly smackdown at the W. Third St. franchise shows McIntosh striking the women with a 3-foot steel pole, fracturing one woman's skull.

McIntosh was arrested on felony assault charges and tossed in a Rikers Island jail for seven weeks.

A Manhattan grand jury refused to indict him, forcing prosecutors to drop the charges and release him Friday night.'

Pitts: Media coverage does pretty young white women no favors

el cid · 5 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I'm not a huge fan of Mr. Pitts, but he gets it right on this one. Excerpt:

'Another white woman has turned up missing. And, as predictably happens in such cases, television news has gone into overdrive, CNN, ABC, NBC providing breathless updates of Michelle Parker's disappearance, how she was last seen the day she appeared on "The People's Court," suing her former fiance, who is now the prime suspect in her kidnapping.

This story unfolds in the wake of similar media fixations on Laci Peterson, Elizabeth Smart, JonBenet Ramsey, Jennifer "Runaway Bride" Wilbanks, Chandra Levy, Lori Hacking, Robyn Gardner, Natalee Holloway, all of them young, female, white, pretty -- and imperiled. There is, should it need saying, a naked bias in the media's obsession with white women in danger to the exclusion of pretty much every other cohort of the American demographic.'

Australia: Gold Coast abduction claim withdrawn

Minuteman · 6 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Queensland schoolgirl who claimed she fought off a would-be abductor by kicking him in the groin has withdrawn her allegations, Nine News understands.

The girl said she kicked the man in the genitals when he tried to drag her into his white Holden Commodore.
...
"Daniel Morcombe's parents came to visit her school last week so she knew what to do in that sort of situation," her mother said.

Last month Bruce and Denise Morcombe were named Queensland's Australians of the Year for their work as child protection advocates after their son Daniel, 13, was abducted on the Sunshine Coast eight years ago.'

Women Are Aggressors in Household Violence Too

anthony · 6 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We now know that women-on-women aggression is far from rare and that women are often the initiators of male-female aggression. Surveys of U.S. households have found rates of wife-to-husband violence "remarkably similar" to those of husband-to-wife violence. And an early cross-cultural survey did not find that men were significantly more aggressive than women.

Aggression, as opposed to anger, conveys an intent to hurt or harm and can be expressed physically, verbally or by withdrawing. There is general agreement that men exhibit higher levels of physical aggression than women, but the differences are small to moderate. After a thorough review of the literature on who initiates violence in couples, Murray Straus, of the University of New Hampshire, reports: "It is painful to have to recognize the high rate of domestic assaults by women. All six major studies which have investigated this topic found that women initiate violence in a large proportion of the cases."'

UK: Dad blasts 'attention seeking' daughter after she's jailed for two false rape claims

anthony · 6 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A YOUNG mum who made two false rape allegations in 10 months was jailed yesterday.

Twisted Dorothy Russell, 20, admitted falsely accusing an ex-boyfriend of raping her - while awaiting sentence for lying to police that another man had assaulted her and threatened rape.

Yesterday, she was jailed for six months after a sheriff told her that her lies had risked the freedom of innocent men and undermined real rape victims.

After the hearing, mum-of-one Russell's despairing father said he believed his daughter committed the crimes because "she likes being the centre of attention".'

Woman sentenced for false rape claim

anthony · 6 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who lied this summer about being raped by two men behind a bookstore at a busy shopping center pleaded no contest on Monday, Dec. 5, to a charge of initiating a false police report.

Danielle Elizabeth Hayes, 35, of Gresham must serve two years of probation, perform 150 hours of community service, pay $3,000 in restitution to the Gresham Police Department for police overtime costs associated with the investigation and continue with her mental health treatment, according to the sentence imposed by Multnomah County Circuit Court Judge Christopher Marshall.

Hayes also has 30 days to write letters of apology to the police department and to the citizens of Gresham

Her false rape report sparked fear throughout East Multnomah County in late July when she claimed that two men grabbed her in broad daylight as she was getting into her minivan next to Borders bookstore, pulled her dress over her head and raped her in the 600 block of Northwest 12th Street.'

Canada: Children’s group wants tougher ID regulations

anthony · 6 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Creating a fake identity for a child is far too easy, according to a national non-profit group fighting to change Canadian and provincial laws and regulations.

The Canadian Children’s Rights Council wants mandatory paternity tests at birth so both parents are identified immediately. Such a measure would go a long way to eliminating paternal fraud and identity fraud, said Grant Wilson, the council’s president.

He has followed the story of Patricia O’Byrne, who was arrested in Victoria in connection with an Ontario parental abduction case from 1993. She had been living under the name Pamela Whelan. Her daughter, Sigourney Teresa Chisholm, was raised in Victoria and known as Thea Whelan.

The Victoria school district has a long-form birth certificate that states Theadora Gloria Whelan was born on Feb. 18, 1992, in Toronto. The space for the father’s name on the document is left blank, which is where a large part of where the problem stems from, Wilson said.

Details about how O’Byrne created new identities for herself and her daughter are not known.'

UN Calls on Israel to Cancel 'Tender Years' Clause

anthony · 6 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I guess Hillary Clinton forgot to mention this when she was criticizing Israel for their unfair treatment of women. Excerpt:

'The United Nations' Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights has determined that Israel discriminates against divorced fathers and has called upon Israel to cancel the Tender Years Clause that grants automatic custody over children in divorce cases to their mothers. Israel is said to be the last country in the world not to have canceled the clause.

In the concluding remarks of meetings held in Geneva in November and December, the committee wrote that:

"The Committee is concerned that, in the case of a divorce, custody of children up to the age of six is always given to mothers, and that fathers are often required to pay child support awards that exceed their income, and if not that their freedom of movement is seriously curtailed. The Committee is concerned that divorced fathers often are required to visit their children in supervised visitation centers during their working hours, which leads to the accumulation of work absences and the risk of dismissal.
"The Committee recommends that the State party amend the Capacity and Guardianship Law so that custody of children up to the age of six is not always given to mothers, and ensure that child support awards do not lead to an inadequate standard of living for the father."'

Third Grade Teacher Arrested on Charges of Child Pornography, Lewd Acts

StayingFit · 6 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A third-grade teacher who resigned this week after parents accused her of dressing their daughters in lingerie and photographing them at a Christmas party was arrested on Thursday.

Kimberly Crain, 47, was arrested at her home in Shawnee, Oklahoma, and will face charges of manufacture of child pornography and lewd acts with a child, said District Attorney Richard Smothermon."
...
Crain had been an elementary teacher for six years in McLoud, Oklahoma, about 30 miles east of Oklahoma City, when she allegedly invited third- and fourth-grade girls to her home last month for a Christmas party. She is accused of having the girls dress in holiday-themed bras and panties and photographing them.'

Just as troubling as the story is the reaction of many who commented on it. They express shock, since "women don't do this sort of thing". I would argue that some women have always done this sort of thing, but people were more likely to explain away their behavior, rather than see it for what it is.

So, I see her arrest, and the charges filed, as extremely positive. It will be very interesting to see if the prosecutors can obtain a conviction, however.

F&F: Metalwala Campaign Update: Father Wins Custody of Daughter

Matt · 7 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Solomon Metalwala's 2-year-old son Sky disappeared while in the custody of his estranged wife Julia Biryukova a month ago. Since then, everyone's focus has been on the search for Sky, as it should be. We speculate that Sky has been stashed with a relative in Ukraine, Biryukova's native country, but nobody really knows. We hope that Sky is safe and that he will be reunited with his father as soon as possible.

When Sky disappeared, Washington Department of Social and Health Services seized Maile Metalwala, the 4-year-old daughter of Solomon Metalwala, away from her unfit mother, Julia Biryukova, and put Maile in foster care. It is a common but unjust practice for child welfare agencies to put children in foster care instead of giving them to their fathers. Moreover, the Washington court separated Maile from Solomon based on spurious abuse allegations from a now thoroughly discredited accuser.

...

We are now pleased to report that, in part because Washington Department of Social and Health Services is now supportive of Solomon's custody bid, Solomon has won custody of Maile, will likely be reunited with her soon.'

Tom Martin vs LSE court date set

Matt · 7 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Court date for man's £50,000 lawsuit against 'male-blaming' gender studies degrees at LSE

(AVfM News)A former student of the London School of Economics (LSE), who has filed a lawsuit claiming all five of its gender studies Masters degrees "exaggerate women's issues and recommend blaming men to justify ignoring men's issues," will make his case at the Central London County Court, a hearing date now set for February 14th, 2012. As reported by The Evening Standard, The Guardian ...,Forbes Magazine, The West End Extra, A Voice for Men, Men's Matters, and dozens of blogs and vlogs, Tom Martin's case has garnered a lot of public support, his legal fund receiving £3055 in donations from ninety people in eight countries to date, but Martin says he now needs more donations, "Clerical errors by the court have caused a three month delay, so I now need a few thousand pounds more to continue devoting all my time in preparation for winning the case."'

French move to ban prostitution by punishing clients

Matt · 7 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'France's parliament is to debate abolishing prostitution through a crackdown which would criminalise payment for sex.

The National Assembly will vote on a symbolic resolution drafted by a cross-party commission which, if successful, will be followed by a bill in January.

The resolution urges abolition at a time when "prostitution seems to be becoming routine in Europe".

Some campaigners reject the bill, advocating prostitutes' rights instead.

Around 20,000 people are believed to be working as prostitutes in France.

France has been committed to abolishing the practice in principle since 1960 but the MPs behind the resolution want this stance to be "proclaimed loud and strong".

The criminalisation of clients is "the best way to see prostitution reduced in France, given that all the countries that have regulated this activity have seen an increase", the commission has argued.
...
However, France's sex workers' trade union, Strass, has called a rally outside parliament to oppose the proposed bill.

It draws a clear distinction between consensual prostitution and sexual trafficking and fears that a reduction in clients might drive prostitutes to accept riskier transactions.

A letter to MPs signed by Strass and other groups accuses politicians of treating prostitutes as "marginals whose voice does not deserve to be heard".

It calls for prostitutes to be given rights rather than penalising clients and thereby creating "more isolation and more clandestine behaviour". '

Blago Sentenced to 14 Years for Corruption (Only One Man On Jury)

anthony · 7 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In the end, the 11-woman, one-man retrial jury found the former governor guilty after nine days of deliberation. Jurors decided Blagojevich had tried to sell Obama's Senate seat and personally gained from his position of power. Each of the wire fraud convictions carry a maximum 20 years in prison.

They spared the former governor on count 17, however, saying he never shook down the Illinois Tollway. The jury didn't come to an agreement on counts 11 and 16, which dealt with the Illinois Tollway and trying to get favors for releasing funds for an elementary school.'

Trashy MTV Reality Shows Primarily Use Women to Trash Women, Study Shows

anthony · 7 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Think most of the misogyny on MTV comes from men? Guess again, says a new study of the network's shows, which finds women engage in a whopping 88 percent of the shows' sexual dialogue, insult each other much more than the men, and offer themselves up in positive portrayals only when they're talking about physical appearance and their ability to bounce back from getting ridiculed.

Television watchdog group The Parents Television Council (PTC) releases its jaw-dropping report "Reality of MTV: Gender Portrayals on Reality TV" on Wednesday, and Fox411.com got an exclusive first look at its findings.
...
Here are their bombshell findings:

-- Only 24 percent of what females said about themselves was positive across all shows combined.

-- Positive dialogue between females focused on their appearance, sense of accomplishment and emotional resilience.

-- While terms men used for each other were often viewed as complimentary (e.g., big man, dawg, superhero, McGyver, winner), women used far more degrading language when talking about other females (e.g., rodent, skank, trash bag, trick, ho and much worse).
....
-- Females talked about sex acts more than men, talked about sex more graphically than men, mentioned sexual body parts more than men, and talked about intercourse and foreplay more than men.'

SAVE Urges Activists to Protest Verizon Video

Matt · 8 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Outrage is growing over the Verizon Foundation video that portrays abusers as "monsters" and denies the existence of abusive women or abused males:
http://www.multivu.com/mnr/52044-verizon-foundation-national-domestic-hotline-video-launch-monsters

Editorialists have called the video "outrageously misandric" and having the "potential for spreading harm and hate." The pro-feminist blog Jezebel described the video as "disturbing."

Activists across the United States and Canada are going to their local Verizon store to raise awareness about the video's systematic biases. We invite you to join in this effort.

Print out copies of this flyer:
http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/Verizon-Monster-Video-flyer-FINAL.pdf. Then, pass it out to customers as they enter the store and to store employees.

Tell them the Verizon video is hateful and harmful, and needs to taken down immediately.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Man exonerated after spending nearly 30 years in prison

Matt · 8 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RICHMOND, VA (WTVR) - The day is finally here and Thomas Haynesworth can finally breathe a sigh of relief. The wait for a full exoneration is over.

A panel of judges from the Virginia Court of Appeals has decided the 46-year-old Richmond man is not a rapist and he's not a criminal. It acknowledged Haynesworth's record should be wiped clean.

"Today justice is finally served for Thomas. God has been merciful and I'm so thankful" said an emotional Ken Cuccinelli during a Tuesday afternoon news conference.

He told a packed auditorium that his job as Attorney General is not just to convict people, but rather it's to seek justice.

Cuccinelli formally apologized to Haynesworth. He said the mistake that led him to be imprisoned for 27 years was just that, a mistake.'

NOW feminist charged wiith assaulting MRA at VAWA Senate hearing

Matt · 8 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You can't make this stuff up~

Lisalyn R. Jacobs charged and arraigned today for assaulting Ben Vonderheide, aka. Daddy Justice At a VAWA Hearing in the Senate Building in Washington D.C. Another one bites the dust.

Do your job VAWA people and stop supporting and defending false accusations or you will be exposed and go down one by one.
...
See the assault caught on tape...' (at http://vimeo.com/26559450)

India: Women can't be prosecuted for adultery: Supreme Court

Matt · 8 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Sory here. Excerpt:

'Only a man can be proceeded against and punished for adultery, but the wife cannot be, even as an abettor, the Supreme Court has ruled.

A Bench of Justices Aftab Alam and R.M. Lodha said, “Section 497 of the Indian Penal Code [which deals with adultery] is currently under criticism from certain quarters for showing a strong gender bias, for it makes the position of a married woman almost as a property of her husband. But in terms of the law as it stands, it is evident from a plain reading of the Section that only a man can be proceeded against and punished for … adultery. Indeed, the Section provides expressly that the wife cannot be punished even as an abettor.”

Kalyani appealed against an Andhra Pradesh High Court judgment that dismissed her petition against registration of a case for adultery under Section 497 of the IPC and wrongful restraint under Section 341 of the IPC by another woman, Sailaja, who alleged that her husband was in an illicit relationship with her.'

Chicago ‘Fathers’ Rights’ Attorney Is Representing Mom in Paternity Claim Against Justin Bieber

anthony · 8 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Chicago lawyer well-known locally for his "fathers' rights" advertising has taken on a celebrity case ... for a mom who says teen singer Justin Bieber is the father of her baby boy.

Although Mariah Yeater has dismissed without prejudice her San Diego Superior Court suit against Bieber, it could be refiled at any time, her attorney, Jeffery M. Leving, told the Associated Press.

Bieber, who denies that he could be the father, has reportedly agreed to take a paternity test and the suit has been put on hold while both sides wait for the result.

"We are trying to settle this matter out of court with Bieber's camp." said Leving, adding: "It's better that it's handled out of court which is in the best interests of everybody,"' [sic]

Airline flies concept of “women-only” workplace

anthony · 8 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In the Gulf region, where gender restrictions keep the majority of educated women at home, an airline company has come up with a unique formula to encourage a female workforce within its ranks.

Eithad Airways has opened an all-female customer call center in the university city of Al Ain, about two hours east of its main office at Abu Dhabi International Airport, the New York Times reported.

The call center opened in March 2011 with 80 workers and, since then, the staff has more than doubled, according to the newspaper.

“They’re more comfortable, and their families are more comfortable,” Samia Barj, manager of the center reportedly said, in reference to cultural mores that keep women from mingling with men who are not related.”'

'Circumcision is Africa’s best weapon against AIDS'

anthony · 8 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Unfortunately, ramping up to implement circumcision has been slow. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton recently announced that 1 million circumcisions have been performed over the last 4 years, three-quarters funded by the U.S. government. This is just 4% of the number of circumcisions needed in sub-Saharan Africa. This seems disappointing. It has been four years since randomized controlled trials definitively showed that circumcision can reduce HIV transmission by 60%. And at $75 or so per procedure, circumcision is one of the great bargains in the fight against HIV/AIDS. As many cynics have observed, if there were an HIV/AIDS vaccine as effective as circumcision, we would have been celebrating wildly and intensely pushing its production and distribution. Why has circumcision been treated differently? Why has it taken so long to ramp up circumcision?'

Ex-wife 'pours boiling water over sleeping husband' after learning that he was dating a new woman

anthony · 8 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Jesua Tatad is said to have scalded her former spouse as he slept and then beat him with a baseball bat.

Even though they were divorced, the 39-year-old shared the same home with the victi, who suffered 60 per cent burns.

Prosecutors said Tatad waited until her ex was asleep before pouring a full pan of boiling water over his body.

As he leapt up in pain she was waiting with a baseball bat and allegedly clubbed him in the head.

Police said the husband was able to escape and flagged down a passing security guard outside his home in Daly City, California.

An ambulance rushed the man to San Francisco General Hospital where he was admitted in critical condition.

San Mateo County District Attorney Steve Wagstaffe said the victim is unable to speak due to his injuries.

He said Tatad wasn't cooking anything prior to the incident and deliberately boiled the water for the attack.'

Verizon - Dad-Bashing repeat offender

Anonymous · 8 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Most of you are aware of Verizon's latest Dad-Bashing commercial, Monster but do you remember this Dad-Bashing commercial from several years ago, and the effort Glenn Sacks led to have the ad pulled.

Dad-Bashing is apparently nothing new for Verizon. It appears to be a pattern. Is this really the business model Verizon wants to project to its customers and potential customers? If so, why?

FBI expands definition of "rape"

Matt · 9 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.:

The FBI is expanding its definition of "rape" to include male victims and anal or oral penetration.

The change goes from: “Carnal knowledge of a female forcibly and against her will" to "Penetration, no matter how slight, of the vagina or anus with any body part or object, or oral penetration by a sex organ of another person, without the consent of the victim.”

Good move, FBI, even though the article somehow forgets to mention the inclusion of male victims. But one thing they seem to have omitted is penetration of the urethra. That may be one of the ways Stephen Hawking was raped by his wife, who apparently also broke his wrist, blackened his eyes, let him slip under the bathwater, let water into his tracheotomy site in his throat, and denied him his urine bottle. (Story here.)

Girl Posted on Facebook During 7-Hour Welfare-Office Standoff

Matt · 9 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 12-year-old girl whose mother shot and critically wounded her before killing herself made several cryptic posts on Facebook during a nearly seven-hour hostage ordeal at the Texas Department of Health and Human Services office in Laredo.

...

Rachelle Grimmer, 38, pulled a gun on the welfare office supervisor, Roberto Reyes, and her two children out of her frustration at being denied food stamps. The office's other employees were able to safely evacuate the building, according to the San Antonio Express.

...

But at midnight -- shortly after Grimmer hung up on police -- three shots were fired, causing the police to storm the building.

Rachelle Grimmer was pronounced dead at the scene, while Ramie and her brother, Timothy, 10, suffered critical head wounds and were transported to University Hospital in San Antonio, according to the San Antonio Express.'

Barbara Kay: A new front opens in the hate campaign against men

Matt · 9 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marketing campaigns funded by high-profile companies drill the message home with slick and costly media ads. That the message is misleading, biased and sexist is rarely noted and virtually always ignored when it is noted.

The latest, and perhaps the most outrageous example of this kind of extreme misandry is the Verizon Foundation's new, widely distributed video entitled "Monsters," which portrays the average American home as a secret chamber of horrors, in which a pleasant façade hides terrified mothers and children, stalked by the shadowy figure of the family "monster," the husband and father. It is chilling to watch; any woman or child ignorant of the actual facts around domestic violence would walk away from it convinced that that they were in imminent peril, and that at any moment their beloved husband or father might transmogrify before their eyes into a veritable Mr Hyde.

I have left three media queries over the past week with the Verizon Foundation's media communication contacts in order to query them about where they got their facts and statistics, but have received no response. This morning I received notice that a group called SAVE (Stop Abusive and Violent Environments) is charging the Verizon Foundation with misleading the public.'

Fractured skull, broken nose, held captive for days...

Proud_to_be_a_man · 9 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original Apologies to those who have trouble with Welsh place names!

This is one of those 'reverse the genders and imagine the different sentence' situations:

'A woman who battered her boyfriend unconscious in his sleep with a golf club and locked him in a derelict farmhouse for days has been given a 12-month suspended jail term.

"Nathan Yates, 37, suffered a fractured skull and broken nose in the attack at his home in Llanddewi Brefi, Ceredigion.
...
Laura Jones, from the same village, admitted grievous bodily harm.

The 45-year-old's sentence was suspended for two years and she was also placed on an 18-month supervision order and required to do 200 hours community service.'

He'd have got at least 5 years for this kind of crime. She got the pu$$y pass. Surprise surprise...

Angry Harry: 'When feminists attack'

anthony · 9 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some mornings, going through my email is just part of my usual routine. Then, other mornings, like today, someone sends an email that elicits a huge smile and just makes my whole day.

Ben Vonderheide aka Daddy Justice, is a relentless men's and father's rights activist. He and his video camera have been holding corrupt public officials and the corrupt family court system and its minions accountable for almost a decade.

...

The woman who assaults Mr. Vonderheide in the above video is Lisalyn R. Jacobs. Ms. Jacobs is the current vice president for government relations of Legal Momentum, NOW attorney and one of the individuals responsible for implementing the highly discriminatory and unconstitutional VAWA legislation. ...

...

Ms. Jacobs believes violence against women and girls is wrong. Her actions, however, seem to indicate that female perpetrated violence against men is right and acceptable and the Orwellian belief that some humans are more equal than others.

I could go on and on about what a hypocrite Ms. Jacobs appears to be. I could point out how a violent female offender shouldn't be allowed to participate in any discussions or policy-making about the violence of men and the protection of women. I could say all these things and more.'

Woman 'killed son in botched exorcism'

Anonymous · 9 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Latisha Lawson, 31, forced her two-year-old son Jezaih to drink a vile mixture of olive oil and vinegar as part of a ritual to drive the devil from his body.

As he choked on the liquid she held her hand over his mouth to stop him vomiting and crushed his neck.

Jurors heard Lawson had wanted to drive a demon named as "Marzon" from her son's body.
...

But prosecutors said there was no evidence to suggest the mother of two didn't understand how wrong her actions were.

"Jezaih was an unwanted kid," said Allen County Deputy Prosecutor Thomas Chaille. "This is a simple child abuse case. She still thinks she did the right thing. Scary."

Lawson was convicted of murder as well as charges of neglect and battery of her four year old daughter.

She faces at least 45 years in prison when she is sentenced next month.'

Press Release: Verizon removes its anti-dad commercial, but NCFM's rally will still occur in Santa Monica 12/10/2011

Matt · 9 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

For Immediate Release (12/9/11 Los Angeles):

Background: The National Coalition For Men's (NCFM) Los Angeles chapter, and the faith-based organization "Brotherhood Organization of a New Destiny" and their leader, Rev. Jesse Lee Peterson (http://www.bondinfo.org/), together will rally outside Verizon at 2530 Wilshire Blvd., Santa Monica, corner of Wilshire & 26th St., on Saturday, 12/10/11 at 2pm, to protest Verizon's sexist, anti-father commercial that stereotypes fathers as "monsters," leaves male victims of domestic violence and their children invisible as usual, and says girls who are exposed to the violence grow up to be victims while boys grow up to be abusers. The rally is part of a national protest organized by Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE), who created the flyer for the protest. See http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/Verizon-Monster-Video-flyer-FINAL.pdf and http://blogs.laweekly.com/informer/2011/12/domestic_violence_men_women_ve.php

Update: Verizon recently agreed to withdraw their ad, which they did. NCFM is thankful with this. However, Verizon has a history of anti-father ads, and so the rally will proceed.

There is a long history of neglect and discrimination against male victims and their children. NCFM successfully sued the State of California and overturned, as unconstitutional, the state laws that exclude male victims and their children from state-funded services. Woods v. Horton (2008) 167 Cal.App.4th 658. (http://www.metnews.com/articles/2008/wood101508.htm)

No domestic violence should be ignored. Even "minor" domestic violence (pushing, yelling, throwing things, put-downs) hurts children when they see it and becomes their example to follow. By ignoring female violence and male victims, we foster that cycle rather than prevent it.

According to the Centers for Disease Control, every year there are 4.8 million incidents of intimate partner assaults and rapes against women and 2.9 against men, with 25% of the deaths being men. (http://www.cdc.gov/ncipc/dvp/ipv_factsheet.pdf)

However, male victims are less likely than female victims to report their victimization, and that makes crime figures unreliable. And independent empirical survey data consistently shows men and women initiate domestic violence at similar rates, and that men suffer one-third of physical injuries. Almost 300 of these studies, from all around the world, using various methodologies, are summarized by California State University Professor Martin Fiebert in his online bibliography at http://www.csulb.edu/~mfiebert/assault.htm

For example, a 32-nation study by the University of New Hampshire found women are as violent and controlling as men in dating relationships worldwide. See http://www.unh.edu/news/cj_nr/2006/may/em_060519male.cfm?type=n and http://pubpages.unh.edu/~mas2/ID41E2.pdf

This Canadian government report also recognizes the above data: http://www.phac-aspc.gc.ca/ncfv-cnivf/pdfs/fv-intime_e.pdf

NCFM asks that Verizon stop stereotyping fathers, ignoring male victims and their children, and spreading the message that female-on-male violence is not frequent or serious enough to include in their public statements. ALL victims deserve recognition regardless of their sex.

Marc E. Angelucci, Esq.
Vice President
National Coalition For Men

www.ncfm.org

Prison psychologist accused of faking rape

el cid · 9 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This woman apparently faked her own rape to convince her husband to move to another part of town. One of the stranger stories I've ever come across. Excerpt:

'SACRAMENTO, Calif.—She split her own lip with a pin, scraped her knuckles with sandpaper and had her friend punch her in the face. Investigators say she even ripped open her blouse, then wet her pants to give the appearance she had been knocked unconscious.

But it was all part of what authorities said Friday was an elaborate hoax by the woman to convince her husband she was raped so they could move to a safer neighborhood.

Charges filed by the Sacramento County district attorney allege Laurie Ann Martinez, a prison psychologist, conspired with the friend to create the appearance that she was beaten, robbed and raped by a stranger in April in her Sacramento home.

Martinez, her friend and two co-workers eventually told police the whole thing was a setup to convince Martinez's husband that they needed to move from a blighted, high-crime area three miles north of the state Capitol. '

Father assumed to be abuser

el cid · 10 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A sad story about how the government can abuse parents mistakenly accused of abuse--and how the government assumes fathers are the likely perpetrators. Excerpt:

'"I knew as soon as I saw Dr. Reed's face that something was terribly wrong," Alice says. The x-rays showed that several of Liliana's ribs were broken. "These injuries are nonaccidental," Dr. Reed told them. Someone has squeezed your baby, probably to make her stop crying, Alice recalls him saying. The doctors did more tests to check for other injuries. Alice began sobbing loudly.

People in white coats peppered Miguel [the father] with questions. What had happened? Did he drink a lot? Get angry? Shake the baby? Miguel was shocked speechless.
...

The Alexandria police knew where and when the Velasquezes were seeing their baby. That's when they decided to arrest Miguel for felony child abuse.
...
In the spring, the public defender in Miguel's criminal case finally got a court order to test the child. The results didn't come back until September. But when they did, they confirmed Liliana had osteogenesis imperfecta type I. The main symptom: fractures.

When he heard about the diagnosis, the prosecutor for the Commonwealth of Virginia, Roger Canaff, consulted Dr. Craig. She wrote later in a memo that the test was "experimental in nature," and that doctors looking at the x-rays of a child with OI should see evidence of the faulty bones. Liliana's bones, she said, looked "completely normal." Other military doctors, then and later on the witness stand, said the same.
...
A settlement was reached, but there was no assignment of wrongdoing. The Velasquezes were, however, awarded $950,000. About half went for legal fees and expenses. A trust fund of $150,000 was set aside for Liliana. As far as is publicly known, no one at the hospitals or in social services was fired or reprimanded. The foster-care giver was not found negligent.'

UK: 'Whining women surgeons who complain about sexist industry are making excuses'

Broadsword · 10 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"A top female surgeon has rejected claims the profession is sexist, saying women surgeons who claim it is should stop whining and that many are using the allegation to hide they fact they are not good enough.

Helen Fernandes, who chairs the Women in Surgery group at the Royal College of Surgeons, dismissed claims that sexism was the cause for only eight per cent of consultant surgeons being female. The number is even lower in neurosurgery, which is Ms Fernandes' area of specialism.

...

Ms Fernandes works as a consultant at Addenbrooke's Hospital in Cambridge. In an interview with The Times, she said: 'I don't think true sexism or harassment along those lines really exists.

In my opinion, a lot of girls who say that they've experienced sexism are, generally speaking, not up to the mark surgically. 'Sexism' almost becomes an excuse.'

One of the reasons put forward for the low number of female surgeons is the unpredictable nature of shifts, which could interfere with domestic issues. Ms Fernandes, who has three children, told young women wanting to build a career in medicine to stop moaning about having kids and to invest in home help.

...

'Don't whine for hours about childcare issues or the fact that you're a mother. Domesticity is a dirge.'"

NIH News: Panel endorses active monitoring and delay of treatment for low-risk prostate cancer

Minuteman · 11 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'An independent panel convened this week by the National Institutes of Health has concluded that many men with localized, low-risk prostate cancer should be closely monitored, permitting treatment to be delayed until warranted by disease progression. However, monitoring strategies—such as active surveillance—have not been uniformly studied and available data do not yet point to clear follow-up protocols. The panel recommended standardizing definitions and conducting additional studies to clarify which monitoring strategies are most likely to optimize patient outcomes.

“It’s clear that many men would benefit from delaying treatment, but there is no consensus on what constitutes observational strategies and what criteria should be used to determine when treatment might ultimately be needed among closely-monitored men,” said Dr. Patricia A. Ganz, conference panel chairperson and director of the Division of Cancer Prevention and Control Research at the Jonsson Comprehensive Cancer Center at the University of California in Los Angeles.

Prostate cancer is the most common non-skin cancer in men in the United States. It is estimated that in 2011, approximately 240,000 men will be newly diagnosed with prostate cancer and 33,000 will die of the disease.'

Wikipedia entry: When it's a man, it's called 'circumcision'

Anonymous · 12 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From Wikipedia when you type the word "circumcision":

"This article is about male circumcision. For female circumcision, see Female genital mutilation"

Can anyone tell me why when the victim is female it's called 'mutilation' but when it's a man it's referred to as 'circumcision'-- when by their own admission, it's the same thing? I find this offensive to say the least, and people need to know about this.

UK: Bullying husbands could face court for 'emotional abuse'

anthony · 12 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Men accused of ‘bullying or abusing’ their wives could face criminal charges under new domestic violence laws.

It could mean prosecution for husbands who treat their wives in a controlling way but do not assault them physically.

The change is being proposed by Liberal Democrat ministers as part of a review of domestic violence to be published this week.
...
Critics of domestic violence laws point to the lack of an agreed legal definition or specific criminal offence for attacks in the home.

The guidelines could cover anyone exercising ‘coercive control’ over their partner.

This would include demonstrating a pattern of threatening behaviour or emotional abuse.

It could also cover ‘economic control’ and the manipulation of children.

For the first time, the law could make clear that under-18s can be victims of domestic abuse.
...
The new definition would also cover women who bully their male partners.

Around 5 per cent of men report having been the victims of domestic abuse.

Around one in four women is thought to be a victim of domestic violence. But figures suggest that only one in 15 cases that reach the criminal justice system leads to a conviction.'

'Men are not an oppressed group in society'

anthony · 12 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'However, when I'm asked to pretend that men are an oppressed group in society, I cannot decide whether I should laugh or cry.

This attitude is not limited to our campus; sites such as link aggregation database Reddit contain so much anti-feminist sentiment that they even have active communities such as “r/mensrights.” These men are also occupying the fantasy world where feminism ruins lives on a daily basis.

The unfortunate thing is that there are some legitimate concerns raised by some men's rights activists. Male circumcision and false rape claims are unfortunate occurrences in today's society. The problem is that male circumcision and female circumcision are different issues, yet men's rights activists insist on putting them on the same level. The same goes for the oft-raised issue of false rape claims. False rape claims are not non-existent, but also do not occur at the alarmingly high rate of legitimate sexual assaults. The ridiculous notion that half of rape claims are false has led people to immediately question a woman's claim of sexual assault instead of offering assistance and protection.

The men's rights movement is merely a knee-jerk because some men do not take kindly to the fact that for once, they've been left out of something: feminism. Never mind the idea that men can be feminists and allies as well; for some men acknowledging male privilege feels like an attack when really it's the mere statement of a fact.'

Brit women in 20s narrow wage gap earning 3.6 pc more than men

anthony · 13 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'London, Nov 24 (ANI): British women in their 20s earn 3.6 percent more than men of same age, shrinking the overall gender pay gap with men to less than 10 percent for the first time, a new study has revealed.

The Office for National Statistics figures stated that in their 20s, women earn 10.45 pounds an hour, compared with 10.08 pounds for men.

But the figures also revealed that the situation changes dramatically in their 30s as women lose the edge when they start families.

By the time women are between 40 and 49, men working full time are paid 15.14 pounds an hour and women only 12.77 pounds.ccording to Jill Kirby, a family expert and author of The Price of Parenthood, the pay gap between the sexes had 'nothing to do with discrimination'.

"It is the fact that women become less committed to the workplace at the point in their lives when they have children," the Daily Mail quoted her as saying.

"They want to spend more time with their children, and regard lower pay as a trade-off for family time."'

Working mums are happier and healthier study finds

Minuteman · 13 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A study published by the American Psychological Association found that mothers with jobs were healthier and happier than mums who stay at home during their children's infancy and pre-school years. It found that the best way for mums to balance their working and home life was to work part time, which involved between one and 32 hours per week.

The research involved interviewing 1364 mothers, including 24 percent ethnic minorities, 1 percent without a high school degree, and 14 percent single parents, shortly after their child's birth with interviews and observation over 10 years from 1991.

Lead author Cheryl Buehler, PhD, professor of human development and family studies, at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro said the study found there was no difference between mums who worked part time and full time.'

NCFM Los Angeles stages protest against Verizon's male-bashing anti-father video

Matt · 13 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Saturday, 12/10/11, the Los Angeles chapter of the National Coalition For Men (NCFM) held a street demonstration outside Verizon to protest Verizon's anti-father advertisements that depict fathers as "Monsters."

Approximately 15 people participated in the rally, including members of Brotherhood Organization of a New Destiny (BOND), a faith-based organization founded by Rev. Jesse Lee Peterson that has a home for troubled young men. The rally was at the corner of 26th Street and Wilshire Blvd. in Santa Monica.

"Verizon finally pulled the ad, but the company has a history of anti-father ads, and we had to protest years ago for the same thing," said Marc Angelucci, NCFM's Vice President. "Also, a lot of Verizon's false, stereotyping information on domestic violence is still on their website."

verizonIn addition to displaying a number of large signs saying things such as: "Verizon, Stop the Anti-Father Ads!," "Honk For Dads Rights," and "Stop Abuse For Everyone," NCFM members spoke from a bullhorn and handed out flyers from the organization Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) , which is organizing a national protest against the ads.'

Petition: Stop the 'I Hate Balls' campaign and its vile depiction of male sexual abuse

Matt · 13 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. (Please click 'Read more' to see contact information for Ms. Heigl and her affiliated partners.) Excerpt:

'The depiction of violence such as sexual mutilation and human castration in Ms. Heigl's campaign as humor is nothing short of repulsive. Would a video depicting a man having hopeful thoughts about the legalization of rape of women be humorous? Would a reenactment of a woman being raped on video be amusing and accepted if it were part of a charitable cause? Of course not. Both the acceptance of and the humor surrounding violence against men must be stopped.

In the I Hate Balls campaign, male hatred has been taken to a new low by being attached to a charitable cause essentially equating something positive with male sexual mutilation. Would a man shown in a video hoping to legalize female genital mutilation (FGM) and showing the procedure in a re-enactment be acceptable just because he claims it's just a joke and it helps a charitable cause? One can say in jest that FGM might make mating less desirable for the female and thus help reduce the animal population. Funny? Not at all. FGM is nothing to laugh about and neither is male genital mutilation.
http://www.funnyordie.com/videos/b63f436ac2/katherine-heigl-hates-balls'

Father’s Rights Protest Against Domestic Violence Video

MR · 13 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Regarding the article* printed in The Santa Monica Daily Press: Father’s Rights Protest Against Domestic Violence Video. Excerpt:

'The utter lack of balance, of an acknowledgment that women can be abusers also, saddened me. Because I grew up in a house where the woman was as much an inciter as the man, I know from personal experience that a woman is just as capable of domestic violence. I learned how to knife fight from my mom, not my dad. I learned how to shred a person’s ego not in law school but from listening to my mom do it to my father. She would regularly call him a coward, then berate him when he got physical with her. It was a no win situation, she would taunt and terrorize him and then fall back on her status as a woman as why he should not defend himself.

I regularly see the same thing today in my family law practice. Men who have been taunted and terrorized by their wives or girlfriends to the point of breaking, and when they eventually do, they are considered to be the abuser. If I say ‘it is their own fault’, most people agree with me, “a man should never hit a woman” but few are those who will stop and reconsider their logic, and realize that it is a form of ‘blaming the victim’ when I say that. If a man has been pushed to the point of abuse, then he is the first victim in an abusive relationship. It’s just that the abuse a woman perpetrates leaves no visible marks.'

*The article is being reported rather than presented. This is because for some reason, at the time of this post, the actual source link does not work. Hopefully this will be corrected by the webmaster at some point.

Toy signs changed after Hamleys accused of sexism

Broadsword · 13 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Instead of a “pink floor” for girls and a “blue floor” for boys, Hamleys has introduced plain white labelling with red lettering throughout.

Toys have been reorganised by type rather than which gender is expected to want to play with them.

Laura Nelson, a blogger who accused the firm of “gender apartheid” in October, was celebrating what she claimed as a victory yesterday.

She wrote: “In response to the campaign against categorisation of toys by gender and sexist stereotypes, Hamleys has changed its signage.”

However Hamleys denied the changes were prompted by her campaign and claimed that, instead, they were part of planned alterations to “improve customer flow”.'

MarketWatch commentator devolves into male bashing

mens_issues · 13 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Here is an article in MarketWatch by Paul B. Farrell that starts with some predictions for the 2010s decade, then devolves into irrational male bashing. Excerpt (page 2):

'2020. America's first woman president, patriarchal dominance is dead
By the end of the decade, it is finally obvious that patriarchy — male dominance of leadership roles in philosophy, economics, politics and culture throughout history — has failed our civilization, bringing the world to the brink of total destruction.

Why do male leaders consistently fail us? Jeremy Grantham brilliantly captured that fundamental flaw in our nation's character a few years ago: Male leaders are actually quite emotional, myopic and "impatient ... management types who focus on what they are doing this quarter or this annual budget." But true leadership "requires more people with a historical perspective who are more thoughtful and more right-brained."

Unfortunately, "we end up with an army of left-brained immediate doers." And that guarantees "every time we get an outlying, obscure event that has never happened before in history, they are always to miss it."

Worse, today's male brain is so rigidly hard-wired in short-term myopia, it quickly forgets history's most recent lessons, like 2008. As a result, our males leaders "collectively miss even totally obvious events that happen over and over in history."

Class war? Or Gender War? By 2020 we'll have an answer, but by then it may be too late.'

I mean, just wow, the guy totally disgusts me with the stupid smug grin in his photo and the asinine male-bashing end to his article.

Woman, 66, Shoots Estranged Son-in-Law Over Custody Dispute

StayingFit · 13 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Story here. Excerpt:

'A 66-year-old grandmother is under arrest after police say she shot her estranged son-in-law because of an ongoing custody battle he and her daughter were having over the pair's young son.

The victim, Salvatore Miglino of Boca Raton, had his cell phone recording the entire time, and the audio was key to the investigation of the Wednesday shooting in Broward County, Fla.

The incident unfolded when Miglino, 39, went to pick up his 3-year-old son for a scheduled visit. His mother-in-law, Cheryl Hepner, stood outside the home with the toddler's pillow and bag.

"According to him, when he asked for the things, she instead pulled out a handgun and starts firing shots," according to Dani Moschella, a spokeswoman for the Broward County Sheriff's Office.'

New Hotel Trend: Women-Only Rooms

anthony · 14 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'(Newser) – In the new trend among high-end hotels, men need not apply. The ritzy Dukes in London is the latest to experiment with women-only rooms, notes Katy Holland at Aol. The idea is to cater to single females or women traveling in groups, and the no-boys-allowed rule applies even to the hotel staff that caters to the rooms. The Naumi in Singapore and Premier in New York City have similar offers, though a Denmark government agency recently ordered the Bella Sky in Copenhagen to stop offering women-only floors.'

HHS and the White House Fatherhood Initiative honors local DC fathers

Minuteman · 14 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Twelve local Washington, D.C. fathers will be honored on Tuesday, December 13, 2011 by the White House and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services for their dedication and positive presence in their families and communities. This roundtable is a part of the president's Fatherhood and Mentoring Initiative and the "Year of Strong Fathers, Strong Families" that President Obama announced in June 2011. These fathers are everyday heroes who are strengthening their families and their communities.
...
This fatherhood roundtable is the first in a series of local fatherhood events around the country, and a part of the president's Fatherhood and Mentoring Initiative which is is a national effort to address responsible fatherhood and healthy families in America through partnerships with family-serving groups and mentorship groups around the country. The initiative serves as call to action for cities and states, with individuals and organizations across the country to raise awareness about responsible fatherhood and working to re-engage absent fathers with their families.'

NY Times: They Call It the Reverse Gender Gap

anthony · 14 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For starters, young women today — and not just in the United States — are moving quickly to close the pay gap, or in some cases have closed it already.

They are marrying later and later, or not marrying at all. They no longer need husbands to have children, or want no children (40 percent of births in the United States each year are now to single women).

Women are ahead of men in education (last year, 55 percent of U.S. college graduates were female). And a study shows that in most U.S. cities, single, childless women under 30 are making an average of 8 percent more money than their male counterparts, with Atlanta and Miami in the lead at 20 percent
...

Faced with a shrinking pool of men on their level, some young women are settling and marrying “down,” but others will jump on planes for “dating excursions” to cities like New York, San Francisco and Boston where the male market is more promising.
...
“Women here are doing the same jobs as men,” she said. “They are getting paid almost as much or sometimes more and doing the jobs better, and on top of that, women are the ones who have children and who care for children. What’s there for men to do?”'

Casey Anthony Teams With TV Producer to Shop $750,000 Interview Special (Exclusive)

anthony · 15 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Los Angeles-based TV producer is shopping the first interview with Casey Anthony, who was acquitted in July of murdering her 2-year-old daughter, Caylee Anthony.

The Hollywood Reporter has learned that Scott Sternberg and his Scott Sternberg Productions have been quietly pitching a no-holds-bared interview with Anthony, who has been lying low since being released July 17 after nearly three years in a Florida jail.

Multiple sources say Sternberg is asking between $500,000 and $750,000 to deliver Anthony, a hefty license fee to be sure. According to sources with knowledge of the proposal, networks can choose the interviewer and Scott Sternberg Productions would co-produce the program. But so far, multiple cable networks have declined. Spokespeople for Discovery Communications' TLC and ID confirmed that the networks have passed on the project. A&E Networks, which includes Lifetime and A&E, also has passed, says a spokesperson.'

Study: Nearly 1 in 5 women reportedly raped

anthony · 15 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A government survey of rape and domestic violence released Wednesday affirmed that sexual violence against women remains endemic in the United States and in some instances may be far more common than previously thought.

Nearly 1 in 5 women surveyed said they had been raped or had experienced an attempted rape at some point, and 1 in 4 reported being beaten by an intimate partner. In Florida, nearly 1.3 million women (17.1 percent) say that have been raped at some time in their lives.

"That almost 1 in 5 women have been raped in their lifetime is very striking," said Linda Degutis, director of the National Center for Injury Prevention and Control at the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which conducted the National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey.'

Australia: Pregnant woman assaulted toddler, court told

Minuteman · 15 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Detective-Senior Constable Adam Pawsey told the court that on November 27 the woman allegedly threw her two-year-old daughter against a brick wall more than three times, then punched and kicked her while she lay paralysed on the floor.

She took the child to hospital three days later after force-feeding her soft food because she was unable to feed herself, Det Sen Const Pawsey said.

He said the toddler remained paralysed on her right side and CT scans showed permanent brain damage.
...
The woman's other two children have been placed by the Department of Human Services into the care of relatives but their father has full access, Sgt Pawsey said.

The woman, who is 32 weeks pregnant, is charged with intentionally causing serious injury.'

Pro-Male Affirmative Action?

anthony · 15 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Indeed, the entire concept of pro-male affirmative action undermines the feminist cause. Admitting that women so dominate academia that men need special rules to compete exposes as absurd the feminists' continued push for funding for girl-power programs (such as those related to math and science) and their continued fixation on the exact number of female college athletes. Feminists also have long championed affirmative action programs for other underrepresented groups, which would make outrage about using different standards for men a stretch.
...
Education reformers should consider why our K-12 education system fails to help so many boys reach their potential. Just as fixing the pipeline is ultimately the best path to boost minority education achievement, so it is with our nation's boys. Parents should consider whether traditional one-size-fits-all public schools are really best for their sons. Our education system should be restructured so that there are more options, including paradigms better-suited to serve boys' specific academic needs.

Many may prefer to ignore pro-male affirmative action policies, but they are a symptom of larger issues that will continue to hurt American society.'

SAVE: Verizon Foundation: Abuse Deniers

Matt · 16 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Thanks to all of your calls, emails, and protests across the country, Verizon has taken down the Monster video. The gender-biased video portrayed men as abusive monsters, boys as potential abusive monsters, and only women and girls as victims.

Activists across the United States and Canada went to their local Verizon stores to raise awareness about the video. Read about one California protest here:
http://www.saveservices.org/2011/12/california-group-protests-verizons-false-dv-claims

Unfortunately, Verizon remains a hotbed of gender-biased misinformation, such as its Pinocchio-like claim that 'domestic violence is the single greatest cause of injury to women ages 15-44':
http://foundation.verizon.com/core/domestic.shtml

We are asking on you to continue to call, email and protest at Verizon stores until this information is replaced with balanced information.

Print out copies of the new flyer: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/Verizon-Abuse-Deniers.pdf. Then pass it out to customers as they enter the store, and make sure you give one to the manager and other store employees.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

F&F: Success—Judge Rules in Favor of Solomon Metalwala, Clears Way for Reunion with Daughter Maile!

Matt · 16 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Washington Department of Social and Health Services seized Maile Metalwala, the 4-year-old daughter of Solomon Metalwala, away from her unfit mother, Julia Biryukova, and put Maile in foster care on November 6. It is a common but unjust practice for child welfare agencies to put children in foster care instead of giving them to their fathers. Moreover, the Washington court separated Maile from Solomon based on spurious abuse allegations from a now thoroughly discredited accuser.

On Tuesday November 29 Fathers and Families launched our Campaign to Reunite Solomon Metalwala with His Daughter Maile. Our goal has been to push WA DSHS and King County Superior Court to reunite Maile and Solomon as soon as possible. Many of our members and supporters wrote and/or called the relevant authorities, and our campaign has been covered by much of the Seattle media. DSHS issued a statement in response to our campaign on Friday.'

Mass media misleadingly citing CDC data to ignore male victims

Matt · 16 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A:

As usual, the mass media is misleading the public about gender and domestic violence. This time, they're citing the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) 2010 report (released Nov. 2011) very misleadingly by only citing female victims. For example, in an AP story, they say 1 in 4 women were victims of intimate partner violence (IVP) and 1 in 5 women have been "raped." (http://www.startribune.com/lifestyle/wellness/135586678.html)

They say nothing about men. Invisible as always. But if you look at the actual data, it says: "More than 1 in 3 women (35.6%) and more than 1 in 4 men (28.5%) in the United States have experienced rape, physical violence, and/or stalking by an intimate partner in their lifetime." See executive summary at http://www.cdc.gov/ViolencePrevention/pdf/NISVS_Report2010-a.pdf

And "rape" was defined to include "completed forced penetration, attempted forced penetration, or alcohol/drug facilitated completed penetration." See executive summary, page 11. Alcohol/drug facilitated completed penetration is NOT necessarily rape. Otherwise, I've been raped NUMEROUS times by my girlfriend, throughout my life.

CDC: Sexual Violence, Stalking, and Intimate Partner Violence Widespread in the US

Minuteman · 16 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'On average, 24 people per minute are victims of rape, physical violence, or stalking by an intimate partner in the United States, according to findings released today by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Over the course of a year, that equals more than 12 million women and men. Those numbers only tell part of the story – more than 1 million women reported being raped in a year and over 6 million women and men were victims of stalking in a year, the report says.
...

For women:

* High rates of sexual violence, stalking, and intimate partner violence were reported by women.
o Nearly 1 in 5 women has been raped at some time in her life.
o One in 4 women has been a victim of severe physical violence by an intimate partner in her lifetime.
o One in 6 women has experienced stalking victimization during her lifetime in which she felt very fearful or believed that she or someone close to her would be harmed or killed. Much of stalking victimization was facilitated by technology, such as unwanted phone calls and text messages.
* Almost 70 percent of female victims experienced some form of intimate partner violence for the first time before the age of 25.
* Approximately 80 percent of female victims of rape were first raped before age 25.
* Female victims of violence (sexual violence, stalking, intimate partner violence) were significantly more likely to report physical and mental health problems than female non–victims.
* Across all forms of violence (sexual violence, stalking, intimate partner violence), the vast majority of victims knew their perpetrator (often an intimate partner or acquaintance and seldom a stranger).

For men:

* About 1 in 7 men has experienced severe physical violence by an intimate partner at some point in their lifetime.
* One in 19 men has experienced stalking victimization at some point during their lifetime in which they felt very fearful or believed that they or someone close to them would be harmed or killed.
* Almost 53 percent of male victims experienced some form of intimate partner violence for the first time before age of 25
* More than one-quarter of male rape victims were first raped when they were 10 years old or younger.
* Male victims of violence (sexual violence, stalking, intimate partner violence) were significantly more likely to report physical and mental health problems than male non-victims.'

Men Often Misread Women's Sexual Cues: Study

Minuteman · 17 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'But ignorance might work in favor of males who overestimate their attractiveness.

Men often have difficulty accurately reading a woman's level of interest in them, a new study finds.

In what should come as no surprise to any woman who's spent time in the dating world, a certain type of guy tends to think all women want him, while other guys just can't seem to pick up on the cues.

The study included 96 male and 103 female U.S. college undergraduates who took part in a "speed-meeting" exercise that involved talking for three minutes to each of five members of the opposite sex.
...
When it comes to human evolution, it's likely that males who overestimated their appeal to females and pursued them even at the risk of being rebuffed were more likely to reproduce and pass this trait to their genetic heirs, the researchers suggested.'

Teacher disciplined after writing 'stupid' on student's forehead

Matt · 17 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Suppose he would have 'joked around' this way with a female student? He would not have even dared touch her much less write "Stupid" on her forehead. Excerpt:

'LIVINGSTON, Tenn. -- A first-year teacher from Overton County may lose his job after writing the word "stupid" across a student's forehead with permanent marker, a district official told WSMV-TV in Nashville.

The math teacher has been suspended indefinitely, Matt Eldridge, director of the Overton County Schools, told the NBC television station.

"We're here to help the children and not to hurt them," Eldridge said, adding "One word can break a child. I mean, I've got three children. I wouldn't want it done to mine."'

Mother kills her family in Illinois murder-suicide

mens_issues · 18 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This is a murder-suicide of a young mother and her whole family, including the father and her three children. This story is appalling and disturbing, like so many recent stories in the news. What is wrong with some people?

'(AP) EMINGTON, Ill. — A burst of gunfire sent Annelise Fiedler running out of her home to see what the noise was. In the yard next door, she saw 30-year-old Sara McMeen hovering over her baby as if she had dropped her. Fiedler asked McMeen if everything was all right.

"She looked at me and said, 'No, everything is not all right,'" Fiedler told The Associated Press.

Then, Fiedler said, McMeen shot the baby. Fiedler fled for her life.

While authorities in the small Illinois farming community remained tight-lipped Saturday about the details of what they said was a murder-suicide that left five people dead, neighbors described shocking violence that took place outside, in full view of their homes. Some could see two of the children's bodies from their windows.

The dead included McMeen, her 29-year-old live-in boyfriend, Daniel Warren, and her three children, 8-year-old Skyler Lemke, 7-year-old Ian Lemke and 10-month-old Maggie Warren, authorities said.'

Italian gipsy camp burned down by vigilantes after false rape claim

anthony · 18 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The 16-year-old reportedly made up the account to conceal the fact that she had lost her virginity to her Italian boyfriend, but the lie unleashed a chain of events that she could not have foreseen.

She went to the police near her home on the outskirts of Turin late last week to report that she had been raped.

Police officers conducted interviews with dozens of people in the area to try to find witnesses to the supposed attack, and the news of the assault quickly spread.

Up to 500 people staged a peaceful protest march on Saturday in the suburb of Le Vallette but a mob of around 50 peeled off from the rally and headed to a nearby gipsy camp.

As the Romany inhabitants fled, the vigilantes set fire to around 20 makeshift shelters and huts, creating a huge blaze. They threw stones and beat up at least one gipsy man.

The teenage girl, who has not been named, is expected to be charged with giving false evidence, along with her brother, who is alleged to have repeated her story.'

Acquitted of rape, Denver doctor sues accuser

anthony · 18 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Denver anesthesiologist cleared in criminal court of raping his nanny is now suing his accuser for lost wages and emotional damages in an unusual lawsuit that's bound — once again — to come down to he said, she said.

A jury in February acquitted Jordan Sankel, 47, finding there wasn't enough evidence showing he forced his nanny into sex. Three months later, he filed a slander and abuse-of- process lawsuit against the former nanny, asking for an unspecified amount greater than $100,000.

Her attorneys call the suit an "outrageous" attempt at retribution, and rape awareness counselors shudder at attaching potential civil penalties to filing a police report on an already underreported crime.

But criminal defense attorneys say civil litigation — though a very rare move — is one way an already acquitted defendant can fully prove his innocence and restore his reputation.
...
"It's outrageous that he sued her. I can't believe he's done this," Killmer said. "He's already hurt her terribly, and he's trying again just because she had the courage to stand up."'

UK: Teenager's false rape claim leads to £80 fine despite assault it provoked against falsely-accused

anthony · 18 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A teenage girl whose false rape allegation led to an innocent man being beaten up and another man sent to jail was let off by police with just an £80 fixed penalty notice.

Jess Cooper was handed the penalty – usually given for minor traffic infringements, anti-social behaviour or environmental offences – for wasting police time.

However, her ‘wicked’ lie led to Andrew Lester being punched and kicked to the floor. He lost eight teeth and his hearing was permanently damaged.

Yesterday a judge who jailed Cooper’s boyfriend over the attack said the police’s decision not to prosecute her ‘beggared belief’.

...

The judge said he was able to reduce Hollyman’s sentence because the ‘provocation is very significant’. He added that Hollyman, from Walsall, was ‘in many ways’ a victim.'

Imposing Gender Equality Rules in Sports: Discrimination or Necessary Evil?

anthony · 18 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A high school cheerleading squad with hopes of placing in a recent statewide competition was disqualified when the contest ended in the lakeside city of Port Huron, Michigan.

The team's lone infraction? One of the team members is a boy.

As initially reported by ABC affiliate WXYZ, the Lakeview High cheerleaders were formally disqualified only after the competition had concluded. They received no final score—only a "DQ".

Though the disqualification came into play just this past week, Lakeview High's story of a male cheerleader has been brewing for several months.

Long before the recent Port Huron competition, Lakeview High welcomed 14-year-old Brandon Urbas to its cheerleading team. The squad was looking forward to the upcoming 2011-2012 season's series of meets and tournaments.

Upon becoming the school's only male cheerleader earlier this year, Urbas had received support from the school and his peers since day one.'

UK: New social network for women allows users to create inner circle and rate their dates

anthony · 18 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If a male-only social network was launched that let men rate their former conquests in terms of attractiveness and sexual ability, it probably wouldn't go down very well.

But somehow, a female-only equivalent is OK.

Luluvise.com, which went live yesterday, is a social network, described as 'Sex And The City marries Facebook' - and it bans boys.

It connects through your Facebook profile - although does not let any of your Facebook friends know that you have connected.

'Luluvise uses Facebook to make registration easier. We do not post to walls or make Luluvise information public anywhere or to other Facebook users,' creator Alexandra Chong explained.

Once you've logged on you can see what other women have said about your potential love interests.
...
More than 500 boys have already submitted their emails to get access to the site, but instead received an email reading: 'Hey Dude, you're a dude.'

Legal first as father wins right to be named on birth certificate of 12-year-old girls who don't know they are is his children

anthony · 19 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

Fathers have won the right to be named on their children's birth certificates as soon as their paternity is proved.

The new legal ruling means that even if a mother has refused to tell her children who their father is, his identity must be immediately revealed on the amended birth certificate.

This significant development in father's rights came in an Appeal Court judgement yesterday, in the case of a man who has been fighting a long-running battle to see his 12-year-old twin daughters since DNA results established he is their father.

The mother entered another man's name as the father, and has not told them who the real father is. None of the people involved can be publicly identified.

As part of on-going legal proceedings, a family judge ruled earlier this year that the girls' birth certificates must be altered.'

Missouri Boy, 14, With Down Syndrome Suspended for Allegedly Sexually Harassing Bus Aide

anthony · 19 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 14-year-old Missouri boy with Down syndrome whose mother says he “gives people hugs all the time” has been suspended from middle school for allegedly sexually harassing a bus aide, a school official told FoxNews.com.

Desi Mayberry, Central R-III School District superintendent, told FoxNews.com that Aleczander Fujiomoto, of Park Hills, Mo., grabbed an unidentified female bus aide while aboard a school bus last Wednesday and imitated a "sexual act" while on top of the woman, who is no longer considering pressing charges for sexual harassment.

"He grabbed her around her waist, like a bear hug, and then he gets on top of her and moves in a sexual motion, imitating a sexual act," Mayberry said.

The aide then "screamed for help," leading the school bus driver to separate Fujimoto and the aide, Mayberry said. The incident led to a "short-term" suspension for Fujimoto, according to Mayberry, who declined to indicate exactly how many days the boy was banned from school.

Mayberry said all of the district's buses have security cameras, but added that Fujimoto's mother was not allowed to see the footage of the alleged incident, despite her requests.'

Reversing the gender gap: Women surpass men at CSU

anthony · 20 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women are leapfrogging men into the classroom at the nation's largest university system, redefining the gender gap on California State University campuses in a startling way.

About six out of 10 CSU graduates last spring were female -- a complete reversal over the past four decades. Some campuses, like Dominguez Hills and Stanislaus, have almost twice as many women as men, feeling eerily like women's colleges.

The trend is so pronounced that last month Cal State East Bay held a special one-day "Male Initiative" conference for young minority men, funded by the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation.

Women are pouring into college at elevated rates all over the country -- not only at two- and four-year schools, but also into professional and graduate programs. The profound shift comes two decades after educators issued an alarming report entitled "How Schools Shortchange Girls."
...
Women's advances don't "translate into a loss for men," said Mikyung Ryu, Associate Director for the Center for Policy Analysis at the American Council on Education. "It's not a zero sum game."
...
But at other campuses, students say they miss the male voice.

"We lose the perspective that comes from men when there are open classroom discussions. We get a lot of the female view," said Jesseca Stone, 35, who is earning a Liberal Studies degree, along with a teaching credential, at Cal State East Bay's Concord campus.'

SlutWalk: Manufacturing Myths about ‘Myths’

anthony · 20 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SlutWalk is the latest, most visible offshoot of radical feminism. The cornerstones of SlutWalk’s ideology – victim blaming, rape culture, slut shaming – is extremely similar to that of radical feminism on sexual violence. SlutWalk Singapore is no exception. Currently, radical feminism so completely dominates discussions in the fields of women’s self-defence and sexual violence against women that it is extremely difficult to find objective, peer-reviewed case studies and academic papers. These are studies that seek to understand the subject matter, not ‘studies’ that push an agenda by perpetuating dogma.
...
Radical feminists claim that they are exposing myths about sexual violence. What they do not say is that they are conjuring myths about myths.
...

So why do radical feminists continue to perpetuate the myth of victim blaming?

The answer lies in the courts.

The American justice system (and Singapore’s) is based on the adversarial model. In criminal cases, convictions are made and broken on evidence, which include testimonials drawn from a witness that describe her pre-assault behaviour. Testimonials can provide mitigating factors or clear the accused of guilt. The defence attorney’s goal during cross-examination is to draw out damaging testimonials from the prosecution’s witnesses to weaken the prosecution’s case.

Today, radical feminists perpetuate the myth of victim blaming so they can influence the courts even more than they already have. The radical feminists cry victim blaming to shut down examination of the prosecution’s witnesses – including the victims of sexual violence. This would make it easier to convict the defendant and hand down harsher sentences.

This tactic perverts the justice system. Criminal trials are not always black and white. The defendant is not always guilty, and the plaintiff not always a hapless victim. The point of examining the behaviour and histories of the defendant and the plaintiff is to establish what really happened.'

Movie Review: "Barracuda"

anthony · 20 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sexism is a terrible thing. Women have been oppressed by men all throughout history. While humanity has made fantastic progress in this respect, we still have a ways to go. This is evident, for example, in the world of film and television: women are often portrayed as the weak and the helpless, or else merely as sexual objects. The issue, however, can go both ways; while misogyny is the more pressing issue, it is equally wrong to hate or stereotype men. Misandry is not nearly as common, so I was surprised to see a real-life sexist-towards-men film: “Barracuda,” directed by Louisvillian Shane Woodson and written by Christy Oldham, who also stars.

“Barracuda” is the story of a phone sex operator named Summer (Oldham) who, through her work, encounters the most perverse men imaginable: men who admit to rape, men who fantasize about sexual acts with their daughters, men who have killed women in the throes of passion. Fed up, she takes matters into her own hands and pays each man a visit to obtain a taped confession and bring justice upon them.'

Report: 'Teen Mom' Amber back in jail

anthony · 20 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TMZ reports that the troubled reality personality was booked at Madison County Jail in Indiana today because a judge issued a warrant for her arrest. According to The Herald Bulletin, she was taken into custody for allegedly violating the terms of her probation.

Last week, her probation officer filed a report claiming that Amber had violated the terms of her probation in her domestic violence case. She had pleaded guilty to two counts of felony domestic violence in June after MTV aired scenes of her punching and slapping ex-fiance and baby daddy Gary Shirley during season two of the popular docuseries. The judge in her case, David Happe, suspended her two-year sentence and put her on two years of probation.

The sheriff's department also confirmed to our pals at E! News that the 21-year-old mother of Leah is in jail for a probation violation, and that the length of her stay will be "up to the courts."'

Marriage: What's in It for Men?

anthony · 20 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Second, we must retract the message Boomers sent young women about female empowerment. Indeed, it isn't a coincidence that marriage rates have plummeted alongside America's fascination with the feminist movement. Empowerment for women, as defined by feminists, neither liberates women nor brings couples together. It separates them. It focuses on women as perpetual victims of the Big Bad Male. Why would any man want to get married when he's been branded a sexist pig at "hello"? In the span of just a few decades, women have managed to demote men from respected providers and protectors to being unnecessary, irrelevant, and downright expendable. Consider these examples:

Consider these examples:

#*# Author and journalist Natalie Angier begins an article in the New York Times by writing, "Women may not find this surprising, but one of the most persistent and frustrating problems in evolutionary biology is the male. Specifically#…#why doesn't he just go away?"

#*# In a CNN interview with Maureen Dowd about her 2005 book, Are Men Necessary? Dowd says, "Now that women don't need men to reproduce and refinance, the question is, will we keep you around? And the answer is, 'You know, we need you in the way we need ice cream — you'll be more ornamental.'"
...
The concerns of men frequently arrive in my inbox. The latest is from Mark Trueblood, who had this to say: "From a man's perspective, men take on an untenable risk. The culture of male disposability runs deep — some say even at the level of our DNA." Because of this, he says, "Men are making a lifelong commitment to eschew marriage, cohabitation, and even dating in some cases. We do so for all the reasons you can guess, and more. As far as I am concerned, this is the wisest lifestyle decision for men in the United States at this point in time. And I say so as a conservative/libertarian who fully acknowledges the power of a functioning nuclear family."

Mark Trueblood is not an anomaly. Countless men's-rights groups have popped up across the country, and even more men happily shack up with their girlfriends with no plans to get married — which may sit well with women for a while, until their clocks begins to tick, and they become desperate for a baby. All of the sudden men look more appealing — but the men don't want to marry them.'

UK: 'The New Sexism'

anthony · 20 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I was in a bar, having a nice drink with my boyfriend when a man looked at me from across the room. Suddenly, I exploded into a tirade at my boyfriend about how men are sleazy, stupid, ignorant and how women are by far superior. I eventually stopped and realised that I'd been ranting like this for a good twenty minutes. My boyfriend blinked at me, bewildered. Poor bloke; he'd only come out for a pint.

That night I realised that I was a sexist: a proper sexist, which is as bad as any racism or homophobia. I, along with every female I'd ever known, had my own tales of man-woe, but it goes deeper than being stung by men. Within society, there is now a new and permissible form of sexism — that of anti-male sexism, which is purporting subconscious ideologies within society that men are less emotionally (or otherwise) intelligent, and that they are generally inferior to women. Without even exploring child custody rights, pension ages, paternity rights or woman-instigated domestic violence, the evidence for male-oppressive sexism is rife within the media, which is usually the primary factor in influencing any cultural ideology. Advertisements, television programmes and magazines are full of (sometimes not so) subliminal messages that advocate derogatory behaviour towards men. Through the following examples of anti-male sexism in media, I challenge you to revert the roles of the men and women and then try not to picture the ensuing Ofcom investigations and public outcry.'

Australian Parliamentary Committee Inquiry - escalation of Indigenous women in detention "disturbing"

Minuteman · 20 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The Committee finds that the escalation of the number of Indigenous women in detention is disturbing. Indigenous women are critical to the future strength of Indigenous families and communities. They play an important role in the care of children, providing the future generation with a stable upbringing. Continued growth in the number of Indigenous women being imprisoned will have a long lasting and negative impact on the wellbeing of Indigenous families and communities.'

ARCLAW: "Circumcision: Know Your Rights" brochure

Minuteman · 20 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link to download here (.doc file, 60kb). From an ARCLAW mailing-list email:

'ARC is proud to announce the release of our "know your rights" brochure for potential litigants, entitled "Circumcision: Your Legal Rights."

It is available through a link from our home page at http://www.arclaw.org.

ARC Secretary (and Intact America Director Georganne Chapin) worked closely with us to develop this document.'

Flawed Studies Used to Claim Circumcision Reduces HIV Infection

anthony · 20 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(BOSTON) - An article in the December Journal of Law and Medicine cites numerous flaws in three African studies that claim male circumcision reduces transmission of HIV. (see: the article here)

According to the article, the studies, which are being used to promote the circumcision of up to 38 million men in Africa, had selection bias, inadequate blinding, problematic randomization, experimenter bias, lead time bias, supportive bias, participant expectation bias, time-out discrepancy, and lack of investigating of non-sexual HIV transmission among other confounding factors and problems.

The absolute reduction in HIV transmission associated with male circumcision for the three studies was only about 1.3%. The African studies had cited the relative reduction in HIV transmission, a misleading figure. Reports in the popular press have been even more misleading. Furthermore, there are at least 17 observational studies that have not found any benefit from male circumcision in reducing HIV transmission. Since condom use after male circumcision is essential to prevent sexual transmission of HIV, circumcision does not have any additional value.'

'Male Circumcision a Route to Gender Equality'

anthony · 20 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Activists at the Sonke Gender Justice Network, a non-profit organisation focusing on men's responsibilities in creating a just and democratic society, see MMC as carrying benefits in addition to its significant HIV-prevention potential. They see it as nothingless than an opportunity to promote gender equality.

"MMC is an opportunity to engage men on sexual reproductive health. That means an opportunity to engage to say they must reduce their sexual partners, they must use condoms correctly and consistently, and they must seek consent before sex," said Leo Mbobi, Cape Town Coordinator for Sonke's flagship One Man Can programme.

The first phase of the effort to use MMC as a platform to promote gender equality has come in the form of raising awareness. Through posters, brochures, and a door-to-door campaign, Sonke is focusing on educating people not only about the health benefits of MMC, but also on the importance of women's participation in conversations around MMC and sexual decision-making in general.'

New Guinea: PNG circumcision research uncovers horror penile modification trend

anthony · 20 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Research in Papua New Guinea on circumcision as a means of prevention of HIV transmission has brought to light the number of men undergoing unsafe penile modification, often with disastrous consequences.

Professor John McBride of Australia's James Cook University was one of a number of researchers presenting their work to the PNG government and non-governmental organisations in a recent two-day policy forum in Port Moresby.

He says most men are amenable to being circumcised, with almost 60 percent having had either full or partial circumcision, known in PNG as the straight cut.

Professor McBride says all the research groups were concerned about the potential adverse effects of that informal type of circumcision and other forms of penile cutting.'

The Fathers & Men Who Are Ex-Felons Bill/Petition

Anonymous · 21 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

I spent time in prison for theft. I can say I would have never gone if I had been granted the same benefits women are granted in America. I have placed petitions online for Fathers And Men That Are Ex-Felons at http://www.scribd.com/hdignity.

In America, over 65 million men have a felony record. We are banned from virtually every single apartment area. We have to beg others to live with them and in many cases we see people lose their masculinity and even their pride. This results in further problems like drug abuse and other serious social problems. We are already seeing just the beginning of the effects. As prisons are forced to release more people and more people get a criminal record, people start to see the injustice of a lifetime ban on obtaining housing.

I have lived with my family for 10 years now. I have attended schools like Purdue University and have also obtained other skills. I have a Class A CDL to drive a truck but am banned from truck-driving due to the DAC which is currently banning ex-felons from access to housing. I, along with tens of millions of men, cannot even rent in our local ghettos. So it's no wonder why many of us lose ourselves. But my conscience is extremely clear-- so clear I wake up with no remorse. I have paid my debt to society. I am just a human that wants to live my life. I want to work and be productive.

Support Housing Rights For The 65 Million Men In America That Have A Record

Related Links:
http://www.kimatv.com/news/local/132967078.html?tab=video http://fathersandmenthatareexfelonsonblogger.blogspot.com/
http://ex-felonsdeniedtruckdrivingjobs.blogspot.com/

Support Fathers & Men Who Are Ex-Felons by telling others about our issues and that the numbers of men who are being affected so unbelievably enormous. We are literally creating an environment of hostility for men. I have placed many videos on YouTube and articles online, so check me out.

SAVE: Regulating Sex?

Matt · 21 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments

December 18, 2011

A majority of Americans worry about the federal government extending its reach into citizens' everyday lives. Now, following release of a Centers for Disease Control report, critics of big government have a new cause for alarm.

Rape is personal tragedy and a societal anathema, and victims of rape deserve our protection and support. Fortunately, the number of rapes has tapered off dramatically in recent decades, along other types of violent crime.

But to the Centers for Disease Control, much more needs to be done. So the CDC devised a radical approach.

This past week the CDC released its long-awaited survey called the National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey: http://www.cdc.gov/ViolencePrevention/pdf/NISVS_Report2010-a.pdf. The study was widely publicized in the traditional media with startling headlines that blared, "Nearly one in five U.S. women has been a victim of sexual assault."

But many viewed the one-in-five statistic with skepticism. Citing a "history of twisting rape statistics," columnist Robert VerBruggen took issue with the basic definitions of the CDC study. VerBruggen explained, "Researchers ask women about their sexual experiences, and then classify some experiences as 'rape' that most people, including the women themselves, do not consider to be rape." (http://www.nationalreview.com/phi-beta-cons/285936/re-sexual-assault-and-college-robert-verbruggen)."

This is what the Centers for Disease Control did to inflate its rape count: It asked if persons had ever had sex when they were "drunk, high, drugged, or passed and unable to consent." Any person who answered "yes" to this question was included in the CDC's tally of rape victims.

Now consider these 2 scenarios:

1. Bill and Wanda have a picture-book wedding ceremony. At the reception, they share numerous champagne toasts. Afterwards, they retire to their room to consummate the union.

2. Miguel and Maria are discussing ways to commemorate a decade of marital union, and Maria proposes that they celebrate at a New Year's Eve party in a nearby hotel. Like many other couples, the two liberally indulge in alcoholic beverages. As the gala is wrapping up, they make their way to their room where they celebrate their years-long relationship by making love.

Most persons would view these scenarios as exemplifying loving and respectful marital relationships. But according to the CDC, Wanda and Maria are rape victims -- and Jack and Miguel are common rapists.

So the CDC definition turns common sense on its head, recasting the couples' celebration of marital union as a sinister prelude to an abhorrent crime.

The CDC's definitional hijinks are only the first step, of course. Because representatives of the abuse industry will now take the "authoritative" CDC definition and use it to push states to implement similar definitions in their criminal statutes.

The CDC rape definition represents an unprecedented, unwarranted, and radical intrusion of federal power into the private lives of couples -- a step that could eventually exact baleful effects on the institution of marriage and on healthy, respectful relationships between men and women.

Source: http://www.saveservices.org/2011/12/regulating-sex/

Wrestling returns to Penn State Mont Alto after 35 years

anthony · 21 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Mont Alto, Pa. — The old saying, ‘What goes around, comes around’ fits nicely in this story.

That’s because, after a 35-year absence, wrestling is back at Penn State Mont Alto. Boy, how things have changed.

Back in 1970, when wrestling was first introduced as a sport at the campus, the college did not even have a gymnasium. Hence, wrestling and basketball contests were held at the old East Junior High School, which was demolished years ago.

Several years later, logistics — and Title IX — prompted Mont Alto to drop wrestling in the mid-1970s, a difficult decision that landed squarely on then-athletic director and wrestling coach Duane Thomas.

“We needed to balance our programs. We started women’s volleyball when we stopped wrestling,” said Thomas, referring to the landmark legislation that forced colleges to increase opportunities for female students, sometimes at the expense of male sports.'

'School is unfair for boys'

anthony · 21 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'High school hates boys. Wait, before you count me out as just another disillusioned student who wants an excuse to rant against the system, take a look at these statistics: according to an article in The New York Times, the average high school grade point average for males is a 2.86, the average GPA for a female is 3.09. 64 percent of National Honor Society members are girls; boys are about 25 percent more likely to drop out and the American Association of School Administration reports that boys make up only 44 percent of college attendees (some colleges now use affirmative action to try to solve this problem).

As a male who has attended high school for nearly four years, earned a decent GPA and was accepted into a college, I cannot claim to be a victim of the system. However, I believe in equality and it bothers me when any group of people is ignored for political correctness, ignorance, ambivalence or whatever other reason.

After doing some research on why males underperform, it appears that by far the biggest cause of this problem has been the feminization of schools. Basically, to put it in other words, schools have moved from hating girls to hating boys. How is that for progressive thinking?'

Schools examine gender issues

anthony · 21 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men have long been outnumbered by women in higher education in the U.S., going back to the 1980s. What's drawn less notice is they are also less likely to earn bachelor's degrees.

Graduation rates across nearly all University of Wisconsin System schools are consistently higher for women. Last year, 62 percent of the females who entered the UW System in 2004 had graduated, compared with 58 percent for men.

While there's lots of talk of improving overall graduation rates and getting more minorities to earn degrees nationwide, few colleges have sounded the gender alarm. Some experts say it's time.'

Scientists at secret German lab grow human tissue from baby foreskins in bid to end animal testing

Broadsword · 21 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A secret laboratory growing new human skin from baby foreskins has been hailed a medical breakthrough by scientists at Europe's biggest research organisation.

The process - dubbed the Skin Factory at the Fraunhofer Institute in Stuttgart, Germany - takes cells from foreskins donated to the project and grows swatches of skin for use in testing cosmetics and other consumer products.

Its creators claim that one day their process could replace all animal testing, explained project spokesman Andreas Traube.

Scientists extract a single layer of cells from each foreskin and then grow on layers of collagen and connective tissue in the Skin Factory, a sealed growing environment just seven metres, by thee metres, and three metres high and kept at a constant temperature of 37 degrees centigrade.

The project uses foreskins taken from boys up to just four years old, said Traube.

'The older the skin is, the worse it performs,' he explained.'

J Law Med. - Is it lawful to use Medicaid to pay for circumcision?

Minuteman · 21 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Citation:

Adler P W (2011) Is it lawful to use Medicaid to pay for circumcision? J Law Med. 2011;19(2):335-53 Abstract archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://sites.thomsonreuters.com.au/journals/2011/11/28/journal-of-law-and-medicine-update-december-2011/ Retrieved 7 December 2011

Abstract:

'Since 1965, tens of millions of boys have been circumcised under the Medicaid program, most at birth, at a cost to the United States Federal Government, the States and taxpayers of billions of dollars. Although 18 States have ended coverage since 1982, the United States Government and 32 States continue to pay for non-therapeutic circumcision, even though no medical association in the world recommends it. Many cite American medical association policy that the procedure has potential medical benefits as well as disadvantages, and that the circumcision decision should be left to parents. This article shows that Medicaid coverage of circumcision is not a policy issue because it is prohibited by federal and State law. As American medical associations concede, non-therapeutic circumcision is unnecessary, elective, cosmetic surgery on healthy boys, usually performed for cultural, personal or religious reasons. The fundamental principle of Medicaid law is that Medicaid only covers necessary medical treatments after the diagnosis of a current medical condition. Physicians and hospitals face severe penalties for charging Medicaid for circumcisions. Medicaid officials and the Federal and State Governments are also required to end coverage. It is unlawful to circumcise and to allow the circumcision of healthy boys at the expense of the government and taxpayers.'

'Circumcision: Canal for new HIV infections'

Matt · 21 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HARARE - Male circumcision is becoming a canal for new HIV infections as men are now reluctant to use condoms on the basis that they are 60 percent safe, a government official has said.

MDC deputy spokesman and legislator for Bulawayo East Thabitha Khumalo said while circumcision was good in reducing the risk of HIV infections in men, the emphasis should be on the use of condoms than circumcision in order to save both men and women.

Circumcision and the use of condoms, Khumalo said, should be used together if Zimbabwe's goal of Zero to new HIV infections and Zero to HIV related deaths by 2015 is to be attainable.

"We have a huge challenge where male circumcision has created a canal to those who do not want to use condoms.

People should understand that circumcision is not a cure, it is just a way to help reduce the risk of infections, together with the use of condoms, said Khumalo.

Khumalo said women will be the most affected because they have limited methods of protecting themselves.

According to Khumalo, Sub-Sahara Africa still records the highest figures of new infections with about 7 000 estimated infections despite the increase in the numbers of men who are getting circumcised.'

Iraq War Veteran, Fit Father Has Parental Rights Terminated

Matt · 21 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A veteran of the Iraq war has had his parental rights terminated despite having in no way wronged his child or the mother. Read about it here (Booneville Democrat, 12/8/11).

The facts of the case are straightforward. Edward Glover served in the U.S. armed services. He was deployed to Iraq. His wife, Michelle, gave birth to a child, E.G., in November of 2008. While Edward was serving abroad, Michelle took up with one Maliki Raheem, who had a history of domestic violence. In April, 2009, it came to the attention of the Arkansas Department of Human Services that E.G. had been severely abused by Raheem. Here is how one Arkansas Court of Appeals judge described the child's injuries:
...
Edward Glover obtained emergency leave and returned home, but was sent back to Iraq 10 days later. Glover remained deployed oversees while legal proceedings played out. The ADHS of course took E.G. into foster care and eventually succeeded in terminating Michelle's parental rights. At all but two hearings, Glover was neither present in person nor represented by counsel.

Irrespective of the fact that Glover had done nothing wrong and was never even accused of any form of wrongdoing toward anyone, the trial court, at the request of ADHS, terminated Glover's parental rights. The Court of Appeals affirmed the ruling. Indeed, if there was a claim by anyone at any time that Glover had ever in his life done anything to indicate unfitness as a parent, neither the trial nor the appellate court mentioned it.'

Barbara Kay: The awkward truth about spousal abuse

anthony · 22 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of first-wave feminism's great achievements in the 1970s was to end the denial surrounding wife abuse in even the "best" homes. Resources for abused women proliferated. Traditional social, judicial and political attitudes toward violence against women were cleansed and reconstructed along feminist-designed lines.

But then a funny thing happened. The closet from which abuse victims were emerging had, everyone assumed, been filled with women. But honest researchers were surprised by the results of their own objective inquiries. They were all finding, independently, that intimate partner violence (IPV) is mostly bidirectional.

But by then the IPV domain was awash in heavily politicized stakeholders. Even peer-reviewed community-based studies providing politically incorrect conclusions were cut off at the pass, their researchers' names passed over for task force appointments and the writing of training manuals for the judiciary. Neither were internal whistle-blowers suffered gladly. Erin Pizzey, who opened the first refuge for battered women in England in 1971, was "disappeared" from the feminist movement when she revealed what she learned in her own shelter: She committed a heresy by asking women about their own violence, and they told her.'

Oakham woman to serve probation after false rape claim

anthony · 22 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'EAST BROOKFIELD — A 44-year-old Sunday school teacher from Oakham pleaded guilty yesterday to lying to police, telling them she'd been raped, and she was sentenced to 2 years' probation.

Christine Drolet went to Spencer Police Detective Michael Shea earlier this year and reported that William Domey, a paramedic who worked with her husband, had raped her.

She went to a hospital for treatment, called police several times to check on the status of the case and never recanted until Detective Shea questioned her version of what had happened, prosecutor Courtney Sans told the judge in Western Worcester District Court yesterday.
...

Judge Timothy M. Bibaud sentenced Mrs. Drolet to one year concurrent sentences at Framingham state prison on the charges of filing a false crime report, criminal harassment and witness intimidation. She was sentenced to two years on a second witness intimidation charge. All of the sentences were suspended for two years, during which time she will remain on probation.

Mr. Domey said after court that while Mrs. Drolet's sentence will end in two years, he anticipates having problems for much longer as a result of her actions.

He said he is able to see his children again, but has been turned down for jobs because the emergency medical services community is small, and word of the rape allegation, though false, is still spreading.'

Marital Woes Lead Lynwood Woman To Call In False Bomb Threat At LAX

anthony · 22 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'LOS ANGELES (CBS) — A Lynwood woman is facing federal terrorism charges after she made a false bomb threat to delay her husband's flight out of Los Angeles International Airport.

According to court documents, Johnna Woolfolk called in a bomb threat to AirTran on Nov. 27. Woolfolk told a representative that her husband was planning to blow up an Atlanta-bound flight, FBI officials said.

Airline officials pulled Woolfolk's husband off the flight. He denied the charges and told officials that he and his wife were having marital problems and that they recently had a fight.

FBI agents later interviewed Woolfolk at her Lynwood home who admitted to the call.

She was charged with providing false and misleading information. Woolfolk is expected to enter a plea next week in federal court.'

Shooting deaths rock Perinton neighborhood

Matt · 22 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PERINTON -- To the neighbors who knew her as Penny, she was a social coordinator and a breezy mom, passing out tea lights for their porches and windows this time of year.

On Wednesday, the wooded neighborhood in which she had become a fixture was illuminated by the flashing lights of a sheriff's deputy's squad car.

In the finished basement of her family's home on Red Fox Run on Wednesday morning, police say, Penelope Luddy, 53, killed her 10-year-old daughter, Alexandra; her father, Harold Bertram, 79; and herself with a shotgun.

About 8:30 a.m., she'd sent her husband, Michael Luddy, 57, to check on an ailing relative. When he returned home at 9:45, he found his wife dead and his daughter and father-in-law shot.

There were signs of a struggle, Monroe County Sheriff Patrick O'Flynn said at a news conference Wednesday afternoon to discuss the ongoing investigation.

Bertram, conscious but severely injured, survived long enough to tell police what happened. He and his granddaughter had each been shot twice, and died at Strong Memorial Hospital.

Into the evening, neighbors struggled to come to terms with the tragedy as they mourned the loss of a girl, her grandfather and the woman who was their mother, daughter and apparent killer.

"The woman we knew was completely selfless," said John Storrar, whose son went to school with Alexandra and whose wife ran an informal neighborhood group known as the Hunters Run Women's Club with Penny.'

'A Model for Female Correctional Design'

anthony · 23 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"It was a project with a lot devoted to developing the women's facility using the latest for women prisoners," said Bill Bashore, the command evaluator for the JRCFS and co-coordinator on the expansion project. "Historically, women's facilities are built to men's standards, then 'painted pink.' Women prisoners are defined a lot by the relationships they make in an institute, so we tried to design the facility to give them the ability to form relationships and interact with staff."

To do that, several design elements were incorporated into the women's housing unit that aren't normally found in a men's facility. The housing unit and dayroom, for instance, are rectangular (men's units are triangular to allow for direct supervision by staff) and is divided into five smaller rooms by partial-height glazed walls as a way to facilitate the formation of relationships between the various subpopulations while still allowing for direct supervision.
...

"[Female] offenders respond to the environment in different ways and are easier to manage if they have the ability to socialize and get away if they need to," said Hartman. "It's easier to manage a population and have a safer environment."

Privacy was also a consideration in creating a normative environment, and privacy screens were installed in the showers and around cell toilets to shield women from view while still allowing correctional officers to keep an eye on them. "For males, privacy is not a big deal, but it is for women," Bashore said.'

School Accused of Putting Autistic Boy in Duffel Bag

anthony · 23 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article hee. Excerpt:

'LOUISVILLE, Ky. – A 9-year-old autistic boy who misbehaved at school was stuffed into a duffel bag and the drawstring pulled tight, according to his mother, who said she found him wiggling inside as a teacher's aide stood by.

The mother of fourth-grader Christopher Baker said her son called out to her when she walked up to him in the bag Dec. 14. The case has spurred an online petition calling for the firing of school employees responsible.

"He was treated like trash and thrown in the hallway," Chris' mother, Sandra Baker, said Thursday. She did not know how exactly how long he had been in the bag, but probably not more than 20 minutes.'

Breast Cancer Patients "Face More Imaging Tests Today"

Minuteman · 24 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Women possibly being inconvenienced by over-servicing in the health care sector, but more research is needed. Link here. Excerpt:

'Women with breast cancer undergo many more imaging tests between diagnosis and surgery than they did in the early 1990s, a new study finds.

The tests -- breast ultrasounds, MRIs and mammograms -- help doctors determine the best course of treatment, but add to the hassles and expense of care, the study says.

"The burden to the patient is increasing substantially," said study leader Dr. Richard Bleicher, an associate professor of surgical oncology at Fox Chase Cancer Center in Philadelphia. For older patients, especially, coordination of care is needed, he said.

Bleicher, a breast surgeon, evaluated data on more than 67,000 women in the United States diagnosed with breast cancer from 1992 to 2005. His intent was to clock the time and inconvenience involved in multiple imaging appointments.
...
Research presented at meetings should be considered preliminary until published in a peer-reviewed medical journal.'

Fears of Divorce May Be Keeping Many Young Couples From Marriage: Study

Minuteman · 24 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Fears about the emotional, financial, social and legal consequences of divorce explain why the percentage of married adults in the United States has reached an all-time low, researchers report.

The study of 122 people in cohabitating couples found that 67 percent said they worried about having to deal with the fallout of divorce, the University of Central Oklahoma and Cornell University researchers said in a Cornell news release.

...

Lower-income women were especially likely to have doubts about the "trap" of marriage. Many believed it would lead to more domestic responsibilities with few benefits or that it could hard to get out of a marriage if things go wrong.'

Men: Cancer Symptoms You're Most Likely to Ignore

anthony · 24 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Annual checkups and tests such as colonoscopies and PSA assays are important, but it's not a good idea to rely on tests alone to protect you from cancer. It's just as important to listen to your body and notice anything that's different, odd, or unexplainable.
...

Commonly overlooked cancer symptoms, 1-10

1. Upset stomach or stomachache
...
2. Chronic "acid stomach" or feeling full after a small meal
...
3. Unexplained weight loss
...
4. Jaundice
...
5. Wheezing or shortness of breath
...

6. Chronic cough or chest pain
...
7. Frequent fevers or infections
...
8. Difficulty swallowing
...
9. Chronic heartburn
...
10. Swelling of facial features'

UK gov. advisor: ‘lesbians make better parents’

anthony · 25 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LONDON, December 22, 2011 (LifeSiteNews.com) - A UK government parenting adviser has publicly stated that lesbians make better parents than heterosexual couples.

“Lesbians make better parents than a man and a woman,” said Professor Stephen Scott, director of research at the National Academy for Parenting Practitioners and the director of the National Adoption and Fostering Team at Maudsley Hospital, during an event hosted by the think-tank Demos, according to a Daily Mail report.

...

A spokeswoman at the Demos event defended Professor Scott’s declaration on lesbian parenting, saying other contributors had pointed out there was a relative dearth of research on the impact and importance of a father’s attachment to a child, according to the Daily Mail report.

However, there is a vast amount of research into the importance of fathers to children.

A massive Swedish study published in the peer-reviewed journal Acta Paediatrica in 2008 stated that active father figures play a key role in reducing behavior problems in boys and psychological problems in young women.'

Father's Christmas miracle: US girl returned

anthony · 26 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'For the first time since his ex-wife spirited their daughter away to Japan nearly four years ago, a Wisconsin doctor was able to tuck his little girl into bed after a bitter court battle that brought her home just in time for Christmas.

"Karina is at home and it's a miracle," Moises Garcia told reporters Saturday.

Garcia fought passionately -- and spent about $350,000 -- to get his daughter back after her mother, Emiko Inoue, took the five-year-old girl to Japan in February 2008.

The liver transplant doctor learned to speak Japanese so he could communicate with a daughter whose English was slipping away.

He hired lawyers in Japan and flew across the Pacific nine times to press his case and try to see his daughter. He enlisted the help of the US State Department and his native Nicaragua. He became active in an advocacy group -- Global Future -- run by US parents whose children were taken to Japan.'

DNA didn’t match, charges dropped, but rape case haunts Superior youth

anthony · 26 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A typical day for Andrew Lawrence seems to be a pretty simple one. The 18-year-old said it usually consists of him sleeping until the early afternoon, playing video games at his apartment, and then going to work as a cook at a Superior restaurant. About once or twice a week, he goes to visit his parents about a mile away and do laundry.

It’s a far cry from his life just over a year ago, when he was facing charges that in July 2010 he broke into a Superior woman’s home, held a weapon to her throat, and raped her.

Those charges were dropped by the Douglas County Attorney’s office on Dec. 11, 2010, after DNA evidence found at the woman’s house didn’t match Lawrence.
...

A year after the charges were dropped, Lawrence said he still thinks often about the case and worries about how it could affect his future. Though the charges have been dropped, the accusation is still on his record.

“I still get depressed,” he said. “I probably won’t be able to get a good job or go to college. My senior year was messed up. I don’t have any grades for my senior year because I had off-campus schooling. That doesn’t look good for college.”

His stepmother, Rita Bergstrom, is more blunt in her assessment of Lawrence’s future.

“The kid is screwed,” she said. “He’ll be stuck doing manual labor jobs for the rest of his life. What the police basically said was, ‘We can’t prove you did it, but we’re keeping our eye on you.’”'

'A World without Men?'

anthony · 26 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last year an article in The Atlantic asked the headline question, "Are Fathers Necessary?" The answer was thoughtfully supplied in the subhead -- "A paternal contribution may not be as essential as we think." Uh-oh.

The article cites a study conducted by researchers from New York University and the University of Southern California which "consolidated the available data on the role of gender in child rearing." The results of that data-crunching The Atlantic summarizes as follows:

> [O]ur ideas of what dads do and provide are based primarily on contrasts between married-couple parents and single-female parents: an apples-to-oranges exercise that conflates gender, sexual orientation, marital status, and biogenetic relationships in ways that a true comparison of parent gender -- one that compared married gay-male couples or married lesbian couples to married heterosexuals, or single fathers to single mothers -- would not. Most of the data fail to distinguish between a father and the income a father provides, or between the presence of a father and the presence of a second parent, regardless of gender.

Boy disciplined after waving gun-shaped pizza slice

anthony · 27 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SMYRNA, Tenn. - For the rest of the semester, a Rutherford County elementary student has to eat lunch at the "silent table" for allegedly waving around a slice of pizza some say resembled a gun.

Nicholas Taylor attends David Youree Elementary School in Smyrna, about 30 miles southeast of Nashville.

School leaders say the 10-year-old threatened other students at his lunch table with a piece of pizza with bites out of it so it looked like a gun and when asked about it was initially not truthful.

Nicholas' mother LeAnn calls her son's punishment "absolutely ridiculous" saying he was just playing around and never said anything derogatory or anything about shooting anyone.'

Change.org Petition: Teacher punishes 9-year-old autistic boy by putting him in a bag

Matt · 27 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Think the "teacher" would have done this to a girl? I doubt it. Excerpt:

'In Mercer County, Kentucky, nine year old Chris Baker, an Autistic student, was told by his special education aide to climb inside a bag intended for therapeutic purposes as a punishment to "control his autistic behavior" on 14 December 2011. He was placed in the bag with the drawstring tightened and left in the hallway in the school. When his mother, Sandra Baker, was called to the school to get her son, she demanded that he be removed from the bag right away. The teacher struggled to undo the drawstring, and Chris emerged sweaty and non-communicative. According to the teacher, this had been done several times over the last year, but Sandra didn't know until this latest incident. While she met with state officials on Monday 19 December 2011 before a possible meeting with school officials, there is no guarantee that those meetings will prevent this kind of abuse from happening again -- either to Chris or to other students.

If you think it's wrong to tell an Autistic child to climb inside a bag not intended as an instrument of confinement and tighten it with a drawstring, which could potentially have led to serious injury or death, as punishment, then please sign this petition. This is wrong. This is abuse. It needs to stop.'

UK: 'Refugee of the Year' looking out for women (oh, and children)

Minuteman · 28 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Bradford woman who won the Yorkshire Refugee of the Year award is setting her sights on even greater achievements in 2012.

Next year, Beatrice Botomani, who fled to the UK from Malawi in 2004 with her two children, will qualify as a teacher fulfilling a lifelong ambition.

She hopes to work in the adult learning sector once her studies at Bradford College finish.

Miss Botomani has already helped improve the lives of others by campaigning for the rights of women and child refugees in detention.

She was spurred on after her own family's experience at Yarls Wood Immigration detention centre in Bedfordshire, where her children were so traumatised they wrote a letter to MPs.

Since coming to Bradford she has worked as a volunteer for the Women's Forum, as a Trustee for Forster Community College and with BCB community radio station.'

'The illusive promise of circumcision to prevent female-to-male HIV infection – not the way to go for South Africa'

Matt · 29 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Medical journal article here. Excerpt:

'That was before the three RCTs, publication of which has led to the current drive to inflict mass circumcision on southern African men. Circumcision intervention has now been embraced by the WHO, the Centers for Disease Control, other health-based organisations and some researchers. Even the MRC has since reversed its position, with lead researcher Siegfried declaring on 15 April 2009 that 'Research on the effectiveness of male circumcision for preventing HIV in heterosexual men is conclusive. No further trials are required to establish that HIV infection rates are reduced in heterosexual men for at least the first two years after circumcision.'

However, the three RCTs have not been without detractors. ... They conclude from their recalculations and statistical reasoning that 'Conservatively for the three trials, 89 of the 205 infections (43.1%) were sexually transmitted. Without knowing which infections were sexually transmitted [and which were not], it is impossible to test the hypothesis of whether circumcision reduces the rate of sexually transmitted HIV.'
...
Several authors have pointed out as well that, without field testing, it is impossible to predict the applicability and repeatability of the RCT findings in real-world situations. ... On the other hand, the Western Cape, with a spotty circumcision tradition, has the lowest prevalence (6%) in the country, almost half that of the EC (ASSA2003 Projections for 2010). According to one nationwide demographic survey,10 12.3% of circumcised men were HIV-positive, and 12.0% of intact men were similarly HIV-positive...Within the USA, black Americans have the highest rate of circumcision and the highest rate of heterosexually transmitted HIV. These data certainly show no distinct pattern relative to circumcision and the risk of HIV infection.'

Gender segregation: Israelis protest ultra-Orthodox treatment of women

Matt · 29 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Possibly I will field accusations of anti-Semitism or at least anti-Jewishness or whatever. Well anyone who may know me personally would know such an accusation is utterly ridiculous. (But just read some of my previous comments about circumcision and how I think the religious lobby around it is the least of the anti-circ world's concerns and that the danger lies much more in the secular and corporate lobby's efforts to keep it going.) I will write more as the first comment since I think that is the appropriate place for it. Excerpt:

'Thousands of people in Israel rallied against religious extremism on Tuesday, protesting against the way some ultra-Orthodox Jews treat girls and women.

Protesters held signs reading, "Free Israel from religious coercion," and "Stop Israel from becoming Iran."

Ultra-Orthodox extremists want to impose a number of restrictions, which include not allowing women to be interviewed on radio stations, not accepting pictures of women in newspapers or billboards, and demanding women sit at the back of the bus.

Some also want women to walk separately on the opposite side of the road.

Last week, a young Israeli woman caused a nationwide uproar when she refused a religious man's order to move to the back of a bus.'

AHRQ - Call for Public Review: Skin Substitutes for Treating Chronic Wounds (Deadline 13 Jan. 2012)

Minuteman · 29 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Link here.

(There are links to a copy of the Draft Technology Assessment, and the page for submitting comments near the bottom of the page.)

Many of the products being included in this review are derived from foreskin fibroblasts (eg Apligraf). A thread has been started previously collating information about the use of foreskin fibroblasts in cosmetics and medical products, which readers are welcome to utilise in preparing responses to this Call for Review:

http://www.foreskin-restoration.net/forum/showthread.php?t=8415

Pittsburgh city elementary schools 'hoops' policy changed - boys don't play of there aren't enough girls for girls' team

anthony · 30 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If a young girl wanted to play basketball in the Pittsburgh Public Schools last season, she didn't have many options.

Only two schools had a K-5 girls' team. Other schools invited girls to play on co-ed teams in a male-dominated 16-team league against boys' teams. And at some schools, no girls played basketball.

Now, K-5 boys and girls will be split as the district revamps its program to remedy years of "Title IX equity issues," or unequal opportunities for girls.

But there's a twist.

If a school can't field enough players for both a boys' and a girls' team, neither team will be allowed to compete in the eight-game season that begins in January.

The district says the new rule is intended to force schools to make more vigorous efforts to recruit girls and offer equal opportunities.

One person familiar with Title IX issues says the all-or-nothing approach could potentially limit opportunities and do the opposite of the federal law's intention to provide gender equality.'

Meryl Streep's next project: A national women's history museum

MR · 30 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Meryl Streep arrives in movie theaters Friday with “The Iron Lady,” playing former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher — the first female head of state in the Western world.

Women's place in history is a subject on Streep's mind of late. Her next off-screen project is the National Women's History Museum, an entity that exists so far only in cyberspace and that the actress is trying to get erected in brick and mortar on a site adjacent to the National Mall in Washington, D.C.

“History until the 20th century was written by one member of the human family and it wasn’t the mother,” Streep said in a mid-December interview in New York City with her “Iron Lady” director, Phyllida Lloyd. “It was dad. That’s who wrote history and ... what was important? Movements of armies, sovereignty of nations, all sorts of things. But women were there all along and they have incredible stories that we don’t know anything about.”'

When suffragettes picketed the Wilson White House for women's right to vote, thousands of American men were being killed and maimed in WWI without their right to vote. In more recent history, approx. 42% of the more than 58,000 men whose names are on the Vietnam War Memorial Wall in D.C. died for America w/o the right to vote.

"Don't Ask Amy"

chuck · 31 December 2011 · Archived copy · Original

Amy Dickinson has the habit of ignoring men's rights. In her column Ask Amy: There's a hitch in the plan to get hitched (12/29/11, see second letter down the page) she accepts the idea of ignoring a gold-digger's plan to marry-then-divorce for money. Amy tells the letter writer not to interfere:

"I can't imagine that if you were in this man's well-heeled shoes you would actually welcome being informed of this impending disaster."

Amy has had a total failure of imagination.

As an exercise here, let's do a role swap. Say the letter writer is male, the columnist is male and the (imaginary) column is called "Ask Bolt."

Bolt says:

Have a man-to-man talk, though perhaps a little indirect. Ask your friend what kind of pre-nuptial agreement they're going to sign before the wedding. If he has no idea what you're talking about explain it to him. More important than that-- be ready to give him the name of a good attorney who can arrange it.

If she won't sign...she loves his assets more than she loves him.

Recommended reading: "How to Avoid 'Getting Screwed' When Getting Laid," by R. K. Hendrik (the author is a lawyer).

'Middle school boys learn that they can stop rape; Men of Strength Clubs teach youths to be allies to women'

anthony · 1 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The federal government estimates that one in five women will be raped in their lifetime [Ed: please click 'Read more' about this stat] — and a group of young men in city schools are hoping to change that.

They're part of the an afterschool program called Men of Strength (MOST) that teaches boys they should be allies for girls and that violence is inexcusable.

Cherno Barry, an eighth grader at Junior High School 217 in Briarwood, Queens, said the club has taught him to treat all girls like he treats his mother.

"No one is beneath another person," he said.

Marquette University Threatens Academic Freedom

anthony · 1 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over at the blog Marquette Warrior, John McAdams provides a good example of how unwarranted investigations of campus speech can cause a deeply problematic “chilling effect” at a university. Universities must not pursue investigations of protected expression just because someone submits a complaint; as soon as it is clear that the expression in question is protected speech, the inquiry must end, even if there are other factual disputes. Prolonging the investigation tells everyone on campus that the university will pursue charges against you no matter how frivolous or malicious the complaint. The likely result is that people self-censor and keep their mouths shut rather than risk such investigation and a possible punishment.

It seems that Marquette University, where McAdams is a professor, made just such a mistake this month. According to McAdams, his introductory course in American politics discusses alleged media bias and takes an anti-feminist perspective:

"Ambiguous sexual encounters, often fueled by alcohol, are defined as “rape” by feminist researchers, but not defined that way by purported victims.
...
We always respond, sarcastically “you’ve got to look at this from the feminist point of view. Males are the oppressor class, and women the victim class. So of course the guy is responsible.”

We typically add “if you wake up in the morning and ask ‘what in the world did I do?’ you haven’t been raped. If you’ve been raped you feel violated. If it requires a feminist political activist to explain to you how what happened was rape, you weren’t raped.”"
...
Marquette has no basis, consistent with free speech and academic freedom, to punish anyone for making a vigorous argument in class, even if some perceived that argument as “demeaning to rape victims.” Nevertheless, Provost John Pauly directed McAdams’ department chair to pursue the investigation. McAdams writes:

"Faculty have a right to disagree with any political movement – including feminists. And social science faculty have a right to debunk bogus social science statistics. … [T]he complaint should have been dismissed immediately. Taking the complaint absolutely at face value, we did nothing but disagree with feminist claims about date rape, something clearly protected by the canons of academic freedom."'

Bachmann plays gender card as Iowa GOP vote nears

anthony · 1 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) -- Desperate for a late lift in Iowa, Republican Michele Bachmann is increasingly stressing a distinction in the presidential field: She's the only woman competing for the nomination.

The Minnesota congresswoman has made the gender card central to her closing argument. She's urging voters to embrace the idea of a "strong woman in the White House" and is molding herself as "America's Iron Lady" in the vein of former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

...

"I'm an Iowa girl. And one thing I remember about Iowa is we are a state of strong women," Bachmann told the lunch crowd at a 50s-themed burger joint in Mount Ayr. "We need a strong woman to turn this country around, right?"

Longtime residents Margaret Bickers and Mary Davenport, sitting in a booth near Bachmann, nodded in agreement.

"Women are just more passionate than the men," Bickers told a reporter. "We need a woman who is not afraid to vocalize that passion and effect change."'

Woman Allegedly Accuses Man With Arabic Surname Of Terrorist Plane Threat After He Ends 4-Day Fling

anthony · 1 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LOS ANGELES (CBS) — A 45-year-old Temple City woman is accused of providing false information to an airline in order to take revenge on a male passenger with whom she had a four-day fling.

Lizet Sariol is expected to plead guilty Tuesday in a federal court.

She is charged with a single felony count of conveying false and misleading information, specifically, implying that a United Airlines flight was endangered, according to a signed plea agreement filed Thursday in Los Angeles federal court.'

Also see Marital Woes Lead Lynwood Woman To Call In False Bomb Threat At LAX

New York State Senate and the Federal Government: Equality for fathers in the Family Court System

Matt · 2 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'Are you a father or do you know a father who has been discriminated against in the New York State Family Court system? New York State is a "Mother State" as many are. If the courts make the decision about custody concerning the children they favor the mother. Is this not discrimination? How are we as fathers supposed to have an influence and build relationships with our children based on this minimal time interaction granted by the courts? We as fathers can do anything a mother can do except breast feed. Women fought for equality in the workforce and we are fighting for equality in the home. Many women agree that fathers are discriminated against, if you are a woman and believe this is true and would like to support this petition please sign and show your support.'

Press Release: Domestic Violence Against Men

anthony · 2 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MIAMI, FL, January 01, 2012 /24-7PressRelease/ -- According to a report by the US Department of Human Services and the US Department of Justice, an estimated 835,000 men are physically assaulted by an intimate partner every year. These assaults can be sexual or physical, and this statistic does not include emotional or verbal abuse.

Men are often the victims of domestic violence, but the incidents rarely get much attention. There is a general assumption that men are the violent partners, but statistics indicate that violence against male partners occurs in both same-sex, and male/female relationships. Men are entitled to the same protections as women when they are assaulted, and deserve strong legal counsel who will fight for their rights, and work to protect them against abusive partners.

Social Stigmas and Domestic Violence Against Men

In our culture, men tend to try to keep a masculine image. This can make reporting a crime of violence emasculating, particularly when the crime was committed by a woman. In addition, men tend to try and protect their partners, and may shy away from filing charges in an attempt to protect their loved one.'

India: More women misusing law to harass men, says PASS

anthony · 2 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THRISSUR: The Purusha Avakasha Samrakshana Samithi (PASS) held its meeting in order to address and redress the grievances of men who claim to be harassed by women misusing the Domestic Violence Act.

The meet held at Alankar Auditorium witnessed four grievances. “We normally hold meetings on the third Sunday of every month, but often have to gather at short notice in the instance of complaints. It is a fact that more and more women are abusing the Act for many reasons, mainly money. It often involves either a divorce or estrangement, sometimes the harassment from the mother-in-law or daughter-in-law, but ultimately it is the man who bears the brunt of the law, in an unfair manner,” PASS treasurer and spokesperson advocate Vincent said.

The law is now highly misused by women. A fair share of such cases is found in the upper strata of society. Manifold false cases of cruelty and violence are hoisted by women urged or instigated by their counsels/advocates hungry for fees and more prey to feed on the gullible.'

"New Year's Eve most dangerous night of the year for domestic violence"

anthony · 2 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SAN DIEGO – December 30, 2011 – Most of us enjoy some harmless excitement and revelry on New Year's Eve, even if some of us overindulge in a little too much food and drink.

But for many women and men at risk of domestic violence, New Year's Eve and New Year's Day are the two most dangerous dates on the calendar.

According to the National Resource Center on Domestic Violence, domestic violence reports increase as much as 30 percent on New Year's Eve and New Year's Day. This comes after lower than average reports of domestic violence between Thanksgiving and Christmas.

It seems that people sit on a powder keg during the holidays, trying to keep things together and under control so they don't "ruin" Thanksgiving and Christmas. Moms will do just about anything to make Christmas nice for their children. Abusers are also known to tighten their grip on their victims over the holidays. They extort promises of "good behavior" with the excuse of making everything nice for the children.'

Pakistani wife kills, cooks husband for lusting over daughter xtrnl · 3 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It all began on Friday when neighbors in the Pakistani town of Karachi smelled a foul odor coming from the residence where Bibi and Abbas lived...

When police arrived, they discovered the dismembered parts of Ahmed Abbas stuffed into boxes. After talking to Zainab Bibi about the dead man, investigators say the wife admitted to killing her husband because he wanted to engage in a physical relationship with their 17-year-old daughter...
...
It is sad that one person had to die, especially in the manner that Abbas did. However, customs, morals, and the religions of India and Pakistan forbid incest. As such, it is understandable why Zainab Bibi felt compelled to take her husband's life. Hopefully, she finds the peace in her alleged heinous crimes, and the family and community heals from it.'

There you have it, folks. Vigilante justice against men is OK, as long as the murderer is female and her religion finds a flaw in her victim. Considering the murderer is mentally unstable enough to be a cannibal, you would think people would take what she says with a grain of salt, and consider the possibility that she made everything up because she wanted to kill her husband. Sadly, people love to just assume men are dirt bags.

Madame Noire opines... "7 Manly Things We Wish Men Still Did"

Matt · 3 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Here goes! Excerpt:

'Why is it that everything of the past seems so good, so classic, soo…the way things should be. Decades ago, women were fighting for equal rights but, today, we're fighting for a return to chivalry. No matter how you cut it, many women want to be treated like ladies and many of us imagine that the world of the 1960s was not only a world mired in charged politics but represented a time when American society was filled with an abundance of manly men. Ok, so maybe our memory is in part clouded by the period drama "Mad Men."

In any case, sometime between my high school years and full-fledged adulthood, it seems that it's become okay for men to not take the lead. I think I can speak for many women when I say we're not too happy about this trend. Here's a few things that we wish most men still did:

Move Out Of Their Mothers' Houses
...
Insist On Paying The Bill
...
Dialing Our Number
...
Hold The Door Open For A Stranger
...
Keep Us Warm
...
Help Us With Our Bags
...
Having A Signature Aftershave'

"California Lawyer" prints letters re Ginsgburg comments

Matt · 3 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Remember this from Nov. of 2011? California Lawyer published three letters in the Jan. 2012 issue regarding Justice Ginsburg's comments, none of them supportive of her attitude. Read them here.

Australia: Girl, 13, charged after taxi knife attack

Minuteman · 4 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 13-year-old girl has been charged over the assault of a taxi driver who was allegedly cut in the arm with a knife in the NSW Illawarra.
...
Police say they arrested one of the girls shortly afterwards and also found some cannabis.

The teenager was taken to Lake Illawarra Police Station and charged with being armed with intent to commit serious indictable offence, assault occasioning actual bodily harm, possess prohibited drug and evade taxi fare.

She was conditionally bailed to appear at Port Kembla Childrens Court on January 16 January.'

Boys raised by traditional families 'do better at school'

Broadsword · 4 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a major study, researchers said family structures had a much more significant effect on boys' early education than school type or even the gender of teachers. It found that boys were much more likely to misbehave, be excluded from school and go on to achieve low grades after rebelling against "emotionally distant" parents.
...
The pattern is particularly marked in single-parent families where mothers "invest disproportionately less in their sons or feel less warm toward them" than daughters.
...
Researchers in the United States tested various theories to explain bad behaviour and low standards among boys and concluded that "home-based" influences played a much bigger part than biological differences, the style of early education, teacher gender or peer pressure.

"Boys' likelihood to 'act out' is sharply reduced when faced with larger and better parental inputs," said the study.

"As these parental inputs are typically higher and of better quality in intact families, this largely contributes to why boys with single mothers are so much more disruptive and eventually face school suspension."'

Breakthrough as scientists grow sperm outside the body

Broadsword · 4 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Scientists have made a major breakthrough that could lead to infertile men being able to father their own children, rather than using donor sperm.

Researchers in Germany and Israel were able to grow mouse sperm from a few cells in a laboratory dish. The scientists believe that the same technique - using 'germ cells' extracted from the testicles - will eventually work in humans.

The team are now 'working as quickly as possible' to reproduce the result in humans.

In a world first a team headed by Professor Stefan Schlatt, at Muenster University in Germany, were able to grow sperm by using germ cells. These are the cells in testicles that are responsible for sperm production.
...
Scientists grew the sperm by surrounding the germ cells in a special compound called agar jelly to create an environment similar to that found in testicles.

Professor Mahmoud Huleihel, who also grew the sperm at Israel's Ben Gurion University in Beersheba, said: ‘I believe it will eventually be possible to routinely grow human male sperm to order by extracting tissue containing germ cells from a man's testicle and stimulating sperm production in the laboratory.”

SAVE: Why Doesn't (The National Alliance to End Domestic Abuse) Care About Female DV Victims?

Matt · 5 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

SAVE E-lert here. Excerpt:

'The National Alliance to end Domestic Abuse (Jewish Women International) is sponsoring a conference on January 12. Jacquelyn Campbell, PhD, RN, will discuss the implementation of routine screening for domestic violence, which was recommended by the Institute of Medicine and will be part of the affordable health care act roll out in 2012.

Campbell has spent over 30 years in advocacy and research of abused women, has written 200 articles and seven books, sits on the boards of four women's abuse shelters, and chairs the board at Futures Without Violence. One would think she really wants to end domestic violence against women.

One would think that...except...

Jacquelyn Campbell is completely ignoring a major predictor of domestic abuse towards women: their own violent acts.'

US-UK survey of college students reinforces stereotype of sex-crazed young men

Anonymous · 5 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Vicki Larson, in The Huffington Post, reports a study done by U.S. researcher Eric Anderson at University of Winchester in England. In brief, he studied 120 undergraduate men, and 78 percent of those with a partner cheated, "even though they said that they loved and intended to stay with their partner." According to him, most men aren't cheating because they don't love their partner, but because they just want to have sex with others. And society shouldn't pooh-pooh that.

Funny...the thing that could put me at risk of cheating is finding a woman who never says "Oh, honestly..." or otherwise ridicules something I express.

I don't know if he researches infidelity, but a well-known U.S. divorce researcher, Dr. Gottman, has found that the pattern that most reliably predicts divorce is what he calls the Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse (FAQ #9):

1. Criticism
2. Contempt (expressed as sarcasm, taunting, yelling, etc.)
3. Defensiveness (no duh, after experiencing the above)
4. Stonewalling (i.e., emotional withdrawal).

Maybe the 78 percent cited in Anderson's study have partners like mine. I'm monogamous, but sex is emotional Russian roulette: if something goes wrong, I'm a clod.

Suit: Boy falls & breaks leg, teacher says crawl back to school

anthony · 5 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Teachers at a Skokie school forced a 6-year-old with a broken leg and a concussion to crawl back to his classroom across an icy playground, then failed to call for an ambulance, according to a lawsuit filed Tuesday.

Kindergartner Rahul Chandani slipped on a mound of snow and hit his head in the playground at Devonshire Elementary School on Jan. 3 last year, but didn't get any medical help until his mom came to get him, the lawsuit filed in Cook County circuit court by Chandani's parents Pritam and Priya alleges.

"His teacher told him, 'You're a big boy — I can't carry you,'" the boy's mother, Priya Chandani, said Wednesday, "She told him to walk back, but his leg was broken so he fell again and then had to crawl at least 200-300 feet back to the school building.

"If someone did that to me as an adult, I'd slap them."

Skokie School District 68 officials declined to comment on the negligence suit Wednesday, but Chandani said that her son was off school for six weeks recovering from the injuries, that he had trouble sleeping, needed six months of rehabilitation and was "emotionally scarred" by the incident.'

April ‘Dear Colleague Letter’ Was 2011′s Biggest FIRE Fight

anthony · 6 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Looking back at the year just ending, it’s extraordinarily easy to identify FIRE’s biggest fight of 2011: the dramatic new regulations announced by the federal Department of Education’s Office for Civil Rights (OCR) in its April 4 “Dear Colleague Letter.”

In my five years here at FIRE, I can’t remember it ever being this easy to select a topic for my end-of-year review. Simply put, FIRE’s legal work has been dominated this year by OCR’s letter: analyzing OCR’s new requirements of every college and university that accepts federal funding (read: virtually all of them); crafting and publicizing our response and concerns; answering critics of our defense of student rights; tracking the importation of the worst of OCR’s new regulations into proposed federal legislation; documenting the impact OCR’s letter has already had on individual students and schools nationwide; and more.'

Many Jails Got No Flu Shots During H1N1 Outbreak: CDC

Minuteman · 7 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Jail and prison inmates are at increased risk for exposure to infectious diseases. The steady stream of new arrivals can introduce new types of infectious diseases to facilities, and close confinement makes it easy for diseases to spread, researchers from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention explained.

The CDC scientists found that 55 percent of U.S. jails -- facilities that house people awaiting trial or serving short sentences -- received no H1N1 vaccine during the 2009-10 outbreak, which means they were not part of the national vaccine campaign.
...
Most jail inmates are healthy men, but there are also inmates in the highest risk categories for flu, including pregnant women. While the median jail stay is 48 hours, some inmates are detained for months, the study noted.'

Australia: Parliamentary Report acknowledges ex-"spouses" lodging false complaints against doctors

Minuteman · 8 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From Chapter 5 - Related matters raised during the inquiry of the Finance and Public Administration Committee (Senate) report entitled "The administration of health practitioner registration by the Australian Health Practitioner Regulation Agency (AHPRA)". Excerpt:

'Avant Mutual Group also noted that other complaints have been made by ex-spouses of doctors during family break-ups and anonymously. Avant concluded 'the necessity for AHPRA to be take care in accepting and acting on such complaints including using its emergency powers as set out under section 156, needs to be emphasised'.'

Wrongfully jailed: Records detail more than 500 mistaken-identity arrests

el cid · 10 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. While I'm sure some women are subject to mistaken-identity arrests, all the sample stories given are about men. I suspect it's a "hidden problem" mostly men face and so is rarely discussed, such as paternity fraud. Excerpt:

'More than 500 people were wrongly imprisoned in Denver's jails over seven years, with some spending weeks incarcerated or pleading guilty to crimes they did not commit before authorities realized they nabbed the wrong person, a federal court filing shows.

Civil-rights lawyers suing the city and county of Denver assert the documented mistaken-identity arrests "are the tip of the iceberg" and are an undercount of the true magnitude of the problem.

In one case a black man spent nine days in jail after he was arrested on a warrant for a white man wanted on a sex-crimes arrest warrant.

In another, authorities arrested an 18- year-old when they were searching for a man 30 years older.'

Norwalk woman gets 7 months in prison for false rape statement

anthony · 10 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NORWALK -- A 20-year-old woman who falsely accused two men of rape was sentenced to a total of seven months and one day in prison Friday at Norwalk Superior Court.

Brittany Reith, of 7 Commerce St., also received two years of probation after pleading guilty to falsely reporting an incident in the second degree, violation of probation and fourth-degree larceny.

Reith was arrested in June for filing a fabricated sworn, written statement accusing two innocent men of raping her at gunpoint.

As a result of Reith's statement, patrol officers arrested two innocent men on April 7 for felony sexual assault and battery charges.

The charges against both men were dropped after detectives conducted further investigation and found serious inconsistencies in Reith's statement, police said.'

Parental abductions go unpunished, Canadian dads say

anthony · 10 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two Canadian fathers whose children were allegedly abducted by their mothers and taken to European countries say authorities have done little to try to enforce court orders and bring them back.

"I'm holding my hands up going, 'Can somebody please do something about this?'" said Calum Hughes, whose five-year-old daughter Livia was allegedly abducted by her mother from B.C. and taken to Italy in 2009.

"Somebody is not doing their job behind a desk," said Gary Mezo, from Thunder Bay, Ont. His two-year-old son Gary Jr. has been in Hungary for a year. Court records confirm his mother took him there without his father's permission.

"I believe Canada has to put its foot down — finally — and do whatever is written in law what has been ordered in court."'

'Men's rights extremists go online'

anthony · 10 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men's activists have been around for decades, but thanks to the internet they're getting slicker, more organised, more professional, and more visible.

Men's outcomes in some areas really are poor. Male suicide rates are three to four times higher, their life expectancy is lower. Girls often outperform boys at school. Males are more likely to be incarcerated, more likely to be addicted.

But these genuine issues are not the ones that concern the new breed of men's activists. These men are aggrieved because they see misandry - the hatred of males - everywhere in society, from government down.

They have a persecution complex, and aggressively lobby for better rights for men - usually at the expense of women.'

Circumcisiontv.com

Matt · 10 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

I received this URL: http://www.circumcisiontv.com/ via email from an intactivist. Warning: It shows graphic footage of actual circumcisions being performed as well as narratives by doctors about what and how they perform them (ie, using restraints to hold the baby down, etc.). Honestly, I couldn't get past more than about a minute of watching the video on that page. When people tell you that circumcisions don't harm babies or that there is little blood, etc., send them this link and tell them to just watch. Ask them to tell you later how long they could.

Cops: Incensed By Judge Judy, Florida Woman, 62, Attacks Husband, 65, With Hammer

anthony · 10 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Florida woman who reportedly became incensed while watching TV's Judge Judy was arrested Sunday after she allegedly struck her husband on the head with a hammer.

Janet Knowles, 62, was charged with aggravated battery following the bizarre 10:30 AM incident at a residence in Jupiter. Knowles, seen in the above mug shot, is locked up in the Palm Beach County jail in lieu of $10,000 bond.
...
The report does not specifically indicate why Knowles was so upset about Judge Judy, who is pictured above. The victim, who was seated in a recliner when twice hammered, suffered large cuts to his head and forearm, according to cops.'

'Why Men Hurt'

anthony · 10 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Hollywood, it is generally agreed that blowing stuff up is a guy thing. So is shooting people, driving down city streets like Evel Knievel, and getting into fistfights no actual human being could survive unmaimed. But these aren't actual human beings. They live in movies carefully aimed at what's euphemistically called the young male demographic, i.e., guys of all ages who shell out again and again for films with the depth and complexity of Grand Theft Auto, only louder and larger. For us other demographics—women, men with brains—such films are so formulaic that all the explosions in the world can't stave off boredom. Two new high-profile movies, Drive and Warrior, sound like they fit this mold, and to some extent they do. But they're smarter and go further, exploring the hypermasculinity expressing itself on the screen and calculating its real-life cost.'

SAVE: Will You Be Our Eyes and Ears?

Matt · 10 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Last week we mentioned that the National Alliance to End Domestic Abuse (Jewish Women International) is having a webinar on January 12 called Screening for Domestic Violence: The New Healthcare Regulation's Impact on the Medical Profession and Domestic Violence Practitioners.

You have asked JWI to present a balanced, gender-inclusive presentation. And we are hoping that's what you'll get.

Will you be our eyes and ears?

Register for the webinar here: https://www.jwi.org/SSLPage.aspx?pid=2627. There is a charge of $25. Then send your notes to tstoddard-at-saveservices.org.

If you enjoy keeping people on the straight-and-narrow, join CAMP, the Countering Abuse Misinformation Project: http://www.saveservices.org/camp

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

WILL Magazine (November, Issue 4)

Matt · 10 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Dear Friends & Brothers,

Please accept my mightiest apologies for the late release of this issue. Times and situations got the best of all of us here at the TWF Team.

As you all are aware, since the cost of production and courier charges was beyond our means, we've moved to Online Version Only. If you want you can access older issues at our website.

The WILL Magazine November Issue 4 on Child Rights is finally uploaded to our website.

The link to the issue is http://thewillfoundation.webs.com/documents/Child%20Rights%20Nov%20Issue%204.pdf

We ask everyone to please download and read. If you like it, you can share it with your friends and colleagues.

We humbly look forward to your feedback, comments, and article contributions.

Thanking you with best regards,

Anwar H. Danish

Connecticut Alimony Reform

Anonymous · 11 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

A group in Connecticut has started it's own Alimony Reform Group (http://www.ctalimonyreform.com/). In our latest meeting we met with counsel to start drafting a new law that will change some of the ambiguities of the current laws. We are looking to establish guidelines for the courts to apply alimony as a transition to independence for the divorcing parties, not as an award or lifetime entitlement. We believe that the current law hurts rather than helps families, by cultivating a battle amongst divorcing parties. We encourage people to join our cause, we could use lots of support to see this law through the legislature. Or check online, many other States have begun similar movements.

SAVE: The "All-Sex-is-Rape" Team is Coming to Your State

Matt · 11 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Attorney Catherine MacKinnon once proclaimed, "Penetrative intercourse is, by its nature, violent." Her writings argue that in a patriarchal society, women are incapable of giving consent, so all heterosexual sex is rape. For years, critics dismissed her has a nut case.

But now, MacKinnon's minions are working to assure that she gets the last laugh. The process began 9 months ago at the federal level with a radical overhaul of definitions of rape:

1. In April, the US Department of Education released its "Dear Colleague" letter: http://www2.ed.gov/about/offices/list/ocr/letters/colleague-201104.html

2. In December, the Centers for Disease Control issued its National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey: http://www.cdc.gov/ViolencePrevention/pdf/NISVS_Report2010-a.pdf

3. Last week, the FBI announced its new reporting definition of rape: http://www.usatoday.com/news/nation/story/2012-01-06/fbi-rape-definition-adds-men/52398350/1?csp=34news

The ideologues are working to achieve their "all-sex-is-rape" goal through two steps:

1. Remove the requirement of the sex being "forcible," and substitute the idea of the sex "lacking consent"

2. Decree that if alcohol passes between a woman's lips, she is rendered incapable of giving consent...even if the drunken bash is her idea!

Dr. Christina Hoff Sommers discussed this issue on Tuesday's Mike McConnell Show: http://www.wgnradio.com/shows/mikemcconnell/wgnam-mike-mcconnell-1-10-12-uncut-b,0,1176295.mp3file?track=rss SAVE's Domestic Violence Legislative Project consists of state-level citizen lobbyists working on their 2012 legislative agendas. If you would like to stop expansive definitions of rape from being applied in your state, participate in our monthly teleconferences. The next call is Feb. 21. Email info@saveservices.org to join.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Two charged in false rape report

anthony · 11 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'ONEIDA - State Police in Oneida arrested Katalyn Fura, 17, of Oneida, Keith Drummond, 22, of Canastota, following an investigation into an alleged rape. Fura had reported to school officials Friday morning that she had been raped over Christmas break.

School officials contacted police and notified them of the allegation. State Police in Oneida interviewed both Fura and Drummond who provided inconsistent accounts of Fura being forcibly raped somewhere in Canastota. Further investigation revealed that the allegation was fabricated to target a male subject that both Fura and Drummond were upset with.

Fura was charged with two misdemeanors for providing a false written statement and falsely reporting an incident and was released on appearance tickets. Drummond was charged with the misdemeanor of providing a false written statement and also released on an appearance ticket. The tickets are returnable in Oneida city court.'

Also reported here.

Hunter College Group Slammed For Booting NYPD Sex Crimes Chief

anthony · 11 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'City Council Speaker Christine Quinn and other city officials blasted a Hunter College women's group that booted the NYPD's top sex and hate crimes official from a panel on sexual harassment against women in the subway system.

Deputy Chief Michael Osgood, the commander of the NYPD's Special Victims Division and its Hate Crimes Task Force, was dumped from the panel just a day before the Dec. 5 event, which also included experts from the Manhattan Borough President's office, the National Organization for Women, Hollaback! and John Jay College of Criminal Justice.

Osgood's ouster was the result of a complaint by the Hunter Women's Rights Coalition that the NYPD was a violent organization whose members rape women and brutalize New Yorkers, DNAinfo reported last week.
...

Queens City Councilman Peter Vallone, chairman of the public safety committee, said he could barely contain his anger when he read the "On the Inside" column, which appeared on the same day slain NYPD officer Peter Figoski was laid to rest.

"This group did not deserve the presence of the NYPD," Vallone said. "A hero officer, a father of four daughters, was killed protecting New Yorkers just days after these nursery school brats took this position."'

Kevin Myers: 'Equality' is the feminist right to whinge

anthony · 12 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"'Women,' said Stephen Hawking, when asked on his 70th birthday, what he thought about most. 'They are a complete mystery.'

Quite so: and you know, sometimes I'm really surprised when I sail right into a columnar uproar. But not today: today is Balaclava.

Why do so many women claim to seek what they do not really want, namely, equality? They don't want the equality to become steeplejacks or coalminers or lumberjacks or deep-sea welders half a mile under a North Sea oil rig. They want equality in banking and in medicine, but only provided that they don't have to keep anti-social hours, which -- as soon as professional women encounter them -- are redefined into "machismo schedules" and "anti-family work practices", and therefore anti-women.'

...

Inconsistency: thy name is feminism. The 'Guardian' women's page recently had a hilarious article giving advice to its readers on how to sabotage newsagents display-racks selling men's girlie magazines. But there are many photographs of naked women in women's fashion magazines, because, clearly, women also like seeing naked women. No sabotage here, though. Why? Stupid question.

Women defend their right to have eye-catching cleavage, and also to denounce any man who comments on it. We may congratulate them on their display of gorgeous Gucci, but not of their magnificent Titti. And of course, the gathered bosom is a visual reiteration of the labial message that is given by the peep-toe exposed by the near-vertical high-heeled shoes, and by carefully applied lipstick. The same advertisement, at three levels -- foot, chest and face; but how dare you treat me as a sex-object!

...

Meanwhile, in universities, feminists have turned petulance into an academic discipline and sulking into scholarship. So the simple fact that women haven't risen to the top of everything is not related to the lack of those hormones that make men into billionaire bankers, commandoes, racing-drivers, mountain-rescuers, lifeboat men, murderers, muggers, football mobs and rapists, but to that transparent but impenetrable silicate horizontality, the Glass Ceiling. The GC concept is the silver bullet of a phoney argument that brooks no further discussion."

Catherine Kieu Becker's Penis Cutting Indictment Could Bring Life Behind Bars

anthony · 12 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Suspect Catherine Kieu Becker, now unofficially known as the new Lorena Bobbitt, was grand-jury slapped with an indictment for alleged penis cutting so harsh that it could get her life in prison if she's convicted.

While we sometimes wonder if the justice system treats the ladies with kid gloves (especially when it comes to their own domestic violence and claims for alimony), this here case of a pared-down pecker is being messaged with the utmost of due diligence.

Men everywhere can exhale:

Our sister publication OC Weekly notes that Bobbitt Becker was handed an indictment charging the 48-year-old with "one felony count of torture, one felony count of aggravated mayhem, and a sentencing enhancement for the personal use of a knife."

What, exactly, did this seemingly upstanding Orange County lady do? (She pleaded not guilty by the way -- and remains behind bars in lieu of $1 million bail).
...
(We always deserve it. Tell any woman your girlfriend smacked you and her immediate response will be, "Well, what did you do?" Not that we'd know).'

Women-only hotel floors

anthony · 12 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Carol Pucci of the Seattle Times points out that JWT, a New York firm specializing in travel trends, expects more women-only floors to be opening in hotels around the globe, the result of more women traveling alone and wanting more security.

She reports the Georgian Court in Vancouver, British Columbia, has 18 rooms on the 10th floor set aside for female guests and may add more. Not only do especially women business travelers feel more secure, but the rooms are outfitted with other amenities, such as curling irons, nail polish and yoga mats.'

Women in McDonald's Fight Seen Widely Online Plead Not Guilty

anthony · 12 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although the women got the worst of the confrontation — Ms. Darbeau was hospitalized for several days with a broken skull and arm; Ms. Edwards had many cuts and bruises — a grand jury indicted them and dropped assault charges against the employee, Rayon McIntosh, who argued self-defense.

The lawyer for Ms. Darbeau, 24, and Ms. Edwards, 25, called the charges against his clients a travesty.

"The only person that uses the weapon, the only person that uses criminal force in the case is basically off the hook," the lawyer, Harold C. Baker III, said. "And the people who got beaten to within an inch of their life are under indictment. In my opinion, that's not consistent with justice."

Yet Mr. Baker's clients have not engendered much sympathy.

The cellphone video shows one of the women striking Mr. McIntosh first, and then jumping over the counter to go after him. Mr. McIntosh grabbed a thin rod used to clean the griddle and delivered a dozen or so blows, some while the women were on the ground.

Mr. McIntosh was charged with felony assault and held in jail more than a week, but drew an outpouring of support, including the creation of a Facebook page, "Free Rayon McIntosh." Mr. McIntosh maintained that the women yelled slurs at him and that he feared for his safety.

"McIntosh is at work, not looking for trouble," his lawyer, Theodore M. Herlich, said in an interview. "If you watch the videotape, you see how these two thugs behave. They threw the first punch."

The grand jury not only dropped the charges against Mr. McIntosh, but also elevated misdemeanor trespass charges against the women to third-degree felony burglary.'

Why Women Don't Run for Office (As Much As Men Do)

anthony · 12 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the United States, women make up only 16.9% of our national legislature (i.e., Congress). That places us 91st in the world. In a new report, Jennifer Lawless and Richard Fox conclude that there are seven big reasons why women continue to lag so far behind men in the political world:

1. Women are substantially more likely than men to perceive the electoral environment as highly competitive and biased against female candidates.
2. Hillary Clinton and Sarah Palin's candidacies aggravated women's perceptions of gender bias in the electoral arena.
3. Women are much less likely than men to think they are qualified to run for office.
4. Female potential candidates are less competitive, less confident, and more risk averse than their male counterparts.
5. Women react more negatively than men to many aspects of modern campaigns.
6. Women are less likely than men to receive the suggestion to run for office—from anyone.
7. Women are still responsible for the majority of childcare and household tasks.'

F&F: Appeal Court Reverses Judge Who Manhandled Dad in Child Support Case

Matt · 13 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When the Office of Child Support Enforcement tells us that 63% of those behind on paying their support obligations are the poorest of the poor – those who report earnings of less than $10,000 – it comes as no surprise. Of course it's the poor who fall behind and who can't afford a lawyer to go to court to try to modify the order. In fact, that's so much to be expected that it's a surprise when the guy fighting for his life was once pretty well off and who has the education to fight the system.

That looks to be the case described in OC Judge Reversed For Cruel Treatment of Ex-Husband in Child Support Case (OC Weekly, 12/30/11).

It seems that James Lockington was doing fairly well for himself before the housing bubble burst. He was a home-building executive in California who, when his divorce was finalized, was making almost $15,000 a month. That's not fabulous wealth, but it's a good income. His ex-wife Tricia was bringing in about half that, so his monthly child support obligation was set at $2,074. Fair enough.

...

As it turns out, that's a concept the Office of Child Support Enforcement has been trying to get family courts to heed for many years now. The OCSE has encouraged judges to pay attention to the basic idea, "don't order more than the non-custodial parent can pay," but the federal government encourages the opposite. Because it pays states for child support collected, the obvious reaction is to order child support levels as high as possible. After all, if you don't order it, he certainly won't pay it and if you do, maybe he will.

I'm sure Kreber understood the law perfectly well; he was just doing his part to get as much money from Washington for the Golden State as possible, and what matter if a few fathers get driven into the street as a consequence?'

Woman arrested in online dating killing mens_issues · 13 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The woman who met a soldier on a dating website before he was killed on their date, has been arrested on charges of felony murder, according to the Marion County Sheriff's Office.

Lavar Watson's friends told Local 6 he was in the US Army for 3 years and served two tours in Iraq. Watson met Ashley Levelle on plentyoffish.com, a dating website, and was meeting her for a date.
...
Levelle told deputies that Roopnarine shot Watson inside her car and forced her to help him move the body, which was found on the side of a road, the Sheriff's Office said.

Roopnarine told authorities that Levelle planned a scheme to rob Watson and shot him first.'

UK: Taxpayer forks out thousands of pounds a year for paternity tests as mothers try to claim cash off wrong fathers

Broadsword · 13 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Taxpayers are forking out thousands of pounds a year on DNA paternity tests after mothers seeking maintenance wrongly identified the father of their child.

Last year, around £100,000 went on tests which turned out to be the wrong man because the mother has slept with so many men that she has no idea who the father actually is.

Another £250,000 was lost by the Child Maintenance and Enforcement Commission when men demanded a DNA test to prove they were not the father - but then it turned out that they were, and they nevertheless refused to pay for the test.

However, the organisation did manage to recoup £160,000 from men whose paternity was proved by the tests.

In some cases, the taxpayer pays for multiple tests when the mother is unable to identify one man as the father. There is no limit to the number of tests a person can ask for.

The CMEC orders around 3,000 paternity tests a year when paternity is contested in child maintenance cases. If the test proves negative, the cost has to be met out of public funds.'

Sinking cruise ship passengers told "Women and children first"

mens_issues · 15 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

It's interesting to hear "Women and children first" from the crew in the lifeboats after all the emphasis on so-called "equality" for women over the last few decades. This is reminiscent of the Titanic, almost exactly 100 years ago. Story here. Excerpt:

'"I felt like the disaster itself was manageable," Smith added, referring to the grounding and tilting of the ship, "but I felt like the crew was going to kill us."

The worst part came when a lifeboat crew member told everyone, "Women and children first," Smith said. "All these families who were clinging to each other had to be separated," he added.

After helping passengers, some crew members jumped overboard and swam ashore.'

San Francisco: Mayor Lee chose new supervisor largely because she’s a woman

anthony · 15 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sure, she’s got roots in activism for immigrants and tenants, the same circles in which Mayor Ed Lee got his political start. She’s popular in the progressive District 5 and is widely expected to win her seat in her own right in the November election. And yes, she was supportive of Lee during his mayoral campaign.

But there’s another reason Lee chose Christina Olague to fill the supervisorial seat left open when Ross Mirkarimi became sheriff.

She’s a she.

Gender, Lee told The Chronicle’s editorial board this week, was a big consideration of his — and three of the four finalists were women. But it wasn’t a factor only because a scant three of the 11 supervisors were women before Olague’s appointment.'

Commentary: Commission on Status of Women's Job Done

anthony · 15 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'The state is broke. As the governor has said, California needs to focus on core functions like education. As we seriously contemplates trimming three weeks off the school year, even the Commission on the Status of Women's annual budget, a paltry $465 thousand dollars, becomes a luxury the state can no longer afford.

There are plenty of private groups that do what the commission does. The National Organization of Women, The California Budget Project, the American Association of University Women, and more. They aren't going away.

Unlike 1965, when the commission was established, women are a significant presence in commerce today. They now make up more than a quarter of the Legislature. California has a woman Attorney General.

And finally, there's this. The status of men needs attention. Men are more likely to be victims of violence than women. They are more likely to be in prison, or homeless or to commit suicide. Men are less likely to graduate from high school or go to college. They die at younger ages than their sisters. To serve all of its citizens, California urgently needs to get its fiscal house in order. Eliminating the Commission on the Status of Women is one small step in that difficult journey.'

New Zealand: Why are there so many men behind bars?

anthony · 16 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Decades on such notions evidently continue to result in women being treated less harshly by the criminal justice system. Jeffries wrote, "In New Zealand ... women are less likely than men to be ... sentenced to imprisonment" and "[o]nce imprisoned, NZ women receive shorter terms than men."

This was fascinating. I'd never considered the possibility that gender biases would be so deeply entrenched within our justice system.

Those who reject the "chivalry thesis" make claims that women's law-breaking tends to be less serious than that of men, hence the comparably lighter sentences. But a 1999 study using a Ministry of Justice database "[w]ith all independent variables controlled" confirmed "that men were more likely than women to be imprisoned."

It's thought that the domestic role of women as caregivers and centres of the family units is likely to help them secure lighter sentences. Other factors assisting the chivalry theory are that prison is often considered to be a harsher environment for women than it is for men and, thanks to there being fewer women's prisons, female prisoners are likely to be incarcerated further from home than male prisoners typically are.'

Timberline students prove chivalry is not dead

anthony · 16 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oftentimes teenagers are stereotyped as being impolite and self-centered. Dana Lyman of Highland disagrees. She is impressed by the young men who share her daughter's bus stop. Without any of suggestion from parents or the bus driver, these young men step aside every morning and afternoon before boarding the bus so the girls can get on first.

The polite gesture of these Timberline Middle School students began about two weeks after the school year began.

"As the students were getting on the bus Isaac Emerson put up his hand and said, 'come on guys, let the girls go first' and the boys agreed," she said. "That morning set the standard which holds to this day."

She added, "It's really windy up here sometimes. But, it doesn't matter if it's windy or snowy, they consistently show kindness and respect by letting the girls go first."

To Isaac this is something that doesn't require much forethought or planning. It comes naturally.

"I was raised to do this," he said. "It's not a big deal. I just want the ladies to go inside to get warm and get a good seat, and it makes us feel good to do something nice."'

Women and children first, or every man for himself?

anthony · 16 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The death toll from the Costa Concordia tragedy has reached five, and more stories are emerging about the chaos inside the luxury cruise liner as it started to go down.

Melbourne mother Michelle Barraclough told the Herald Sun that she had to fight hysterical adults to hold on to her 12-year-old daughter, and that the men were the worst.

“Everybody just shoved and screamed in 15 different languages,” she said.

“The people that pushed their way on to the boat were then trying to tell them to shut the door, not to let any more people on the boat after they had pushed their way on.

“We just couldn’t believe it - especially the men, they were worse than the women.”

...

Personally, I would hope that the stronger people would look after the weaker. That a man or a strong woman would help a child to safety before saving themselves. That a swimmer would help a non-swimmer. That somehow, in the anarchy, there would be heroes.

Unlike an aeroplane, cruise ship passengers are not seated in orderly rows, with neat lights pointing the way to the nearest exit. But you would hope there was some sort of plan, something better than everyone for themselves. Maybe the lifeboats could be built with designated seats for the weak, the young, the sick. Maybe they could be designed so there are enough readily accessible seats for everyone; although it’s hard to see how that would be possible when half the boat is under water.

Maybe the boat’s designers didn’t think about it hard enough.

Is it time for a new rule? What would you do if your life was at risk?'

Australia: Position Vacant - "Powerful Pathways for Women Project Officer"

Minuteman · 16 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A great opportunity to make a difference in the ever changing environment of Education, Training and Employment in the Western and Northern Metropolitan region. Reporting to the Workforce Development Manager, Northern Futures Incorporated, this position is responsible for the implementation and coordination of the Powerful Pathways for Women Project. The project has been funded by the Department of Education, Employment and Workplace Relations in conjunction with the Local Employment Co-ordinator Flexible Funding Pool, TAFE, and ETSA.

...

To be successful you will have previous project officer experience with an understanding of the challenges facing women in traditional trades; in addition to this you will work well with people from various cultural backgrounds.'

So much for women and children first: Italian cruise disaster shows men need to be reminded of the rules of gallantry

anthony · 16 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some people love to laugh at Victorian values. The favourite target is 19th century attitudes to sexual morality, which are routinely labelled as hypocritical.

We are frequently reminded that the Victorians were so prudish that they used to cover up their piano legs. This is rubbish, perpetuated by people who don't know that covering up the piano legs was actually a Victorian joke about sex. Believed originated by the author Captain Marryat in 1839, taking the rise out of Americans.

Also close to the top of the favourites chart for those who love to ridicule the 19th century are military values. Victorian generals and admirals, we know, were incompetent aristocrats, officers were bullies, and soldiers were brutal and ignorant. Think the vicious history of callous imperialism, think the appalling racism that the British spread around the world.

...

Self-sacrifice on the Birkenhead scale is probably beyond the bounds of possibility in the modern age. But the unfortunate passengers of the Concordia hoped for the crew to do their job, for women and children to be helped to escape first, and for the captain to think of himself only after doing his best for everyone else.'

Protesters Rally Against Circumcision

anthony · 16 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Marina, Calif. Supporters of the movement to ban circumcision in San Francisco came out Saturday to protest the American Civil Liberties Union on the California State University Monterey Bay Campus.

San Francisco approved a November 2011 ballot measure to outlaw circumcision of minors in the city. But a judge took if off the ballot last summer, saying the city has no authority to ban circumcision.

Supporters say ACLU members, who were holding a seminar today near the Monterey College of Law, played a big part in stopping the ballot measure.

"We want little boys in this country to enjoy the same legal projection that little girls currently enjoy under federal law which prohibits any form of female circumcision or genital mutilation," said David Lane, an anti-circumcision activist.

The activists say they will not be able to get the measure on another ballot, but will continue to protest circumcision until a law banning them is on the books.'

Shorting on the marriage market: How hedge fund managers gamble on bitter divorce battles

Broadsword · 16 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Investors are gambling on bitter divorce battles between women and their rich husbands in return for a share of the spoils, it has emerged.

Venture capitalists, hedge funds and high-end lenders are putting up money to women who want to fight their husbands in court.

In return, the investors take a chunk of the court payouts.

According to The Sunday Times, one company now has loans out to more than 100 'high net worth' spouses - it charges about 20 per cent interest for up-front divorce financing.

It is believed the market is growing rapidly, not least because of cuts to the legal aid budget and the credit crunch meaning banks are refusing to lend money.

...

Steve Jones, a business development manager for Argent, a barristers' chambers, told of the growing trend: 'Rather than backing stocks and shares, hedge funds are backing litigation, because the returns are good for successful cases. They wouldn't be doing it unless they thought they could make money out of it.'"

Scarcity of women causes men to spend more, save less

anthony · 17 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Except:

'When men think they outnumber women, they borrow more, save less and make more impulse purchases, according to a study published last week by the University of Minnesota's Carlson School of Management.

University researchers asked groups of men to read news articles suggesting that their local population had either more men or women. They were then asked to indicate how much money they would save each month from a paycheck, as well as how much they would borrow on credit cards for purchases.

When the articles suggested there was a surplus of men, the savings rate fell 42%, and the men were willing to borrow 84% more each month.

The study also found real-life evidence of this behavior. In Columbus, Ga., where there are 1.18 single men for every single woman, the average consumer debt was $3,479 higher than it was 100 miles away in Macon, Ga., where there were 0.78 single men for every woman.'

Ask Amy: Devastated husband faces wife's in vitro fraud chuck · 17 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This time Ask Amy got it right in Husband faces wife's fraud over in vitro embryos (1/17/12). She wanted another child so she forged his name on the papers and had the embryo implanted. There is no way that wife can use the "it was an accident" excuse. It will be interesting to see what happens to the birth rate -- and that excuse--when Vasalgel is approved (it's essentially a completely reversible vasectomy). Excerpt:

'Dear Amy:

...

I wasn't ready to have another child at that time and told her so.

Unfortunately, my wife forged my signature on the clinic paperwork for the embryo transfers and never told me.

I only found out by contacting the fertility center after the fact.

I've tried numerous times to get her to go to marriage counseling to talk about this and other problems, but she won't go because she feels that whatever problems we have are my fault.

...

Dear Sad: Your wife's selfishness is truly shocking.

You are correct that there is no "good outcome" from this, but it is necessary to confront the issue directly.

Sweeping this fraud and its underlying hubris under the rug will not work. Even if you manage to stay married, your sense of self and the dynamic with your wife will become untenable unless you both openly deal with her actions.

...

Your wife made her choices. But she does not get to decide what you will choose to do to restore some order and integrity to your life.'

What angry GRCC football players had to say after college kills program

anthony · 17 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GRAND RAPIDS — Nearly 50 Grand Rapids Community College football players, along with coaches and athletic director Charlie Wells, gathered Monday afternoon to listen to the devastating news of the program's fate.

After 80 years, the football program will not exist.
...
Ender cited impending changes to the conference schedule requiring out-of-state travel, the departure of former head coach Tony Annese to Ferris State University and concerns on Title IX compliance as reasons behind the move.
...

GRCC is the fourth school in the Midwest Football Conference to drop its football program in the past five years.

In November, Joliet (Ill.) Junior College eliminated its program.

They cited two primary factors similar to GRCC — the high costs associated with operating the program and the need to balance gender equality among sports offered at the college because of Title IX requirements.'

Letter to the Editor: Why women before men? Sexism on the high seas?

anthony · 17 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here.

'Apparently during the chaos of the evacuation of the Costa Concordia in Costa de Giglio, Italy, a crew member shouted, "Women and children first!"

Now I can agree that women with children should be given priority in this situation, but how about men with children? Also, why should all women be given priority over all men? If this is, in fact, a maritime rule or law, it seems outdated.

Are all women more important to save than all men?'

Health & Human Services OIG - "Child Support Enforcement: Deadbeat parents earn spot on New Most Wanted list"

Minuteman · 18 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Thread title is from the OIG mailing-list email:

Link here. Excerpt:

'Parents who fail to pay court-ordered child support for the care of their children put an unnecessary strain on the custodial parent and the children, as well as on agencies that are tasked with enforcing these matters. Although most child support cases fall under State jurisdiction, the Office of Inspector General (OIG) plays an important role in aggressively pursuing parents who fail to pay court-ordered child support.
...
"Project Save Our Children" is a multiagency law enforcement initiative that investigates and prosecutes the most egregious child support cases. Its members include investigative analysts from the Administration for Children and Families (ACF) Office of Child Support Enforcement External link (OCSE), OIG Special Agents, the U.S. Marshals Service, U.S. Attorneys' offices, and the Department of Justice, along with child support agencies across the United States. These entities identify, investigate, and prosecute noncustodial parents who knowingly fail to pay support obligations and meet the criteria for Federal prosecution under the Deadbeat Parents Punishment Act.'

From an OIG news release:

'Washington, DC - Parents who are years behind on child support payments or who have fled to avoid paying up will now have a tougher time hiding from their court-ordered obligations, the Office of Inspector General (OIG) of the Department of Health and Human Services announced today.
...
"OIG agents tirelessly pursue fugitives who skip out on their court-ordered child support payments," said Gerald T. Roy, OIG's Deputy Inspector General for Investigations. "We have a global reach. We will find you so you can be held accountable for meeting your responsibilities to your children."'

Title IX And The Trouble With Quotas

anthony · 18 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'April marks the 40th anniversary of Title IX, legislation passed to ensure educational institutions do not discriminate on the basis of gender. That's why the American Association of University Women recently held a "Tweet-Up" with Education Secretary Arne Duncan.

Four decades after the law passed, Secretary Duncan seems to remain largely ignorant of the serious ramifications of this legislation, which, in effect, has helped institutionalize gender inequality, quotas and preferences. During the Tweet-up Duncan wrote, "Contrary to conventional wisdom, since 1972 access to men's sports has not been diminished." He added, "T9 requires schools to offer equal athletic opps for men & women. It doesn't require schools to eliminate any teams."

Well, not exactly, Mr. Secretary.

In actuality, between 1981-2005 men's teams per school dropped 17 percent while women's teams rose by 34 percent. The reason is this: the proportional participation clause in Title IX, upheld by Duncan's own department, states that if the number of female athletes is not "proportional" to the number of women enrolled at an institution then the school is technically "discriminating."'

In Massachusetts, boys playing on girls teams causes a ruckus

anthony · 18 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FRANKLIN, Mass. - When Will Higgins won the South sectional 50-meter freestyle in Massachusetts in November, there was mixed joy among his Norwood Senior High teammates.

He broke the meet record in a blistering 23.96 seconds, moving on to the state swimming and diving championships. The win also helped spur his team to an eighth-place finish in the section tournament.

But because Higgins is a boy, his record win sparked increasing attention and criticism from a national audience in what has become a local epidemic: Boys playing on girls teams.

Higgins, swimming at the Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association (MIAA) girls South Section meet, broke a girls swimming record that had stood for 26 years, immediately drawing the criticism of local parents, coaches and the former record-holder. With an uptick in boys playing on girls teams, and an increasing number of mixed-gender teams, the MIAA swim committee has decided to take a renewed look at the mixed gender arrangement in Massachusetts high school sports. The committee decided in a Jan. 5 meeting to create a sub-committee charged with finding a solution by its next meeting in April 2012.'

SAVE: We're on a quest for excellence, and you can help us find it

Matt · 19 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

We've all heard the stories. In relationships with violent partners, men hope for the safety of an abuse shelter, just to be told they aren't allowed inside. Abused men and lesbians reaching out for help, just to be told by DV advocates that they must have provoked their female partner.

Unfortunately, we have a long way to go before we are serving every domestic violence victim. But the news isn't all bad. There are hotlines, shelters, agencies and counseling centers that serve abuse victims who are GLBT and heterosexual men.

We are on a quest to find them. Will you help?

Please use a phone book or internet search engine to locate the DV providers in your area (county or state, depending on the size and your dedication). Then call them and ask the following questions:

What services do you provide? Shelter? Hotline? Support Groups? Legal advice?
If you have a shelter: Do you allow men? Men with Children? Provide hotel vouchers if no in-house shelter?
If you only accept women into the shelter, is there an age limit for male children?
If yes: What is it?
Do you provide counseling for abuse victims?
If yes: Do you provide counseling for gay or heterosexual men?

Is there a support group available for men?
Do you provide legal assistance for abuse victims?
If yes: Do you provide legal assistance for men?

If hotline only: Does your hotline help abused men? How?

When you find an agency that embodies excellence, send that information to tstoddard-at-saveservices.org.

We know they're out there. Let's find them. Then we can show the rest how to do it right!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

'Benched for being a girl'

Matt · 19 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. It's not an accident I posted this shortly after In Massachusetts, boys playing on girls teams causes a ruckus. Excerpt:

'On Thursday, October 6, 2011, Mina Johnson sat out of Southampton Academy's junior varsity football game because their opponent, Northeast Academy, threatened to forfeit if a girl played. At 5'2" and 170-pounds, Mina is a starting linebacker for the Southampton Academy Raiders. She is also an honor-roll student and is quite formidable on the football field, having sacked Rocky Mount’s quarterback four times during a 30-24 win on Sept. 22.

This petition was started by members of the U.S. women's national tackle football team to show support for Mina Johnson, her coach and team, and the multitude of girls and women who face discrimination in the sport of tackle football.

Northeast Academy is part of the North Carolina Independent Schools Athletic Association, which prohibits "participation by boys in girls’ sports and girls in boys’ sports in any event hosted and/or sponsored by any NCISAA school." This petition is to tell the NCISAA to adhere to the spirit of Title IX calling for equal opportunity in sports, by changing NCISAA policy to allow girls and boys to play together when only one team exists for a given sport -- as Mina's own school allows her to.'

UK: New pension equality rules could cost companies 'millions'

Anonymous · 20 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The Department for Work and Pensions on Friday outlined plans to force companies that offered “guaranteed minimum pensions” in the Nineties to reassess the different accrual rates for male and female members of the scheme and equalise overall benefits to avoid discrimination.

Under the law at the time, women could collect their state pension five years earlier than men, when they reached 60. Men could only start claiming their pension at 65.

This rule has never been updated for the guaranteed minimum pension scheme since, despite case law in 1990 which ruled it was unlawful to discriminate between men and women in relation to occupational pensions.

According to equality campaigners, this gives female members of the guaranteed minimum pension retiring today an unfair advantage as they can get hold of the benefits sooner than men.

The new rules outlined by the DWP on Friday would see men be able to claim payments at the age of 60."

U.S. Military Women Exposed to More Combat Than Ever Before

Minuteman · 21 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Female American soldiers in Iraq and Afghanistan have been involved in more combat than in prior wars and have the same post-traumatic stress disorder rate as men, a new study has found.

For the study, researchers looked at over 7,000 active-duty soldiers who served in the war zones and found that 4 percent of female soldiers reported killing, 9 percent reported witnessing killing, 31 percent reported exposure to death and 7 percent suffered a combat-related injury.

...

"If women are indeed being exposed to combat stressors at a higher rate than in prior eras, we have to be prepared to provide the services they need, and take into account the impact that these stressors can have on their mental health functioning," she said in a university news release.

"We also need to take a closer look at physical injury and its potential impact on women's psychological health," Maguen added.'

Change.org: 'Birmingham: Stop Pepper-spraying High School Students'

Matt · 21 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Overall point of effort very well-taken. But something doesn't feel quite right. I signed the petition, but with a 'signing statement'. I include it as the first comment of the story. Petition excerpt:

'I once trusted the Birmingham Public Schools. I sent my children to school thinking they were safe and protected. I found out different.

My 17-year old-daughter Gloria was sprayed in the face with pepper spray by a Birmingham police officer assigned to protect students in the school.

She wasn't being violent and she certainly wasn't a threat to the officer. Gloria was upset because a boy had pushed her. While she was confronting the boy, the police officer grabbed her from behind, pulled out his canister of pepper spray, and sprayed her in the eyes, face, and mouth. My 15-year-old daughter Patrice saw her sister sprayed and ran to her side. As Patrice reached Gloria, the officer sprayed Gloria with a second burst of pepper spray. The second burst also hit Patrice in the face.

When I saw Gloria, I couldn't believe how red and swollen her face was. She was crying out to me to help her and I couldn't do anything. She had red welts all over her face and her eyes were red. Days later the welts turned to black scabs that took two weeks to go away. Every time she washed her face, she cried again because water only made the pain worse. For weeks she refused to come out of her room and fell into a deep depression. It was a nightmare knowing my child suffered physical pain and depression because she reacted emotionally at school. She's a teenage girl, not a criminal.'

Colorado: Bill to re-instate circumcision on Medicaid to be introduced

Minuteman · 21 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Circumcisions would again receive state funding under a proposal introduced by several Colorado lawmakers.

The bill would allow Medicaid to again cover circumcisions. The procedure was dropped from Medicaid last year as a money-saving move. Several states have stopped covering circumcisions amid concerns that they're not medically necessary. Colorado projected that it would save about $186,500 a year if it stopped covering circumcisions.'

Israel Removes Biased Child Custody Law Against Fathers, Dads Address False Abuse Charges

anthony · 22 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jerusalem --- January 20, 2012 .... For many divorced fathers in Israel, the declaration yesterday by Israel Justice Minister Yaakov Neeman that divorced parents must now share custody of children, may have come too late. Neeman has accepted recommendations by the Schnit Committee that joint parental custody be ordered in divorce cases involving young children, which the law defines as those up to age 6. Until now, most divorced fathers became visitors, being limited to seeing their children only a few hours a week.

As the new law comes into affect, thousands of dads in Israel would have lost any opportunity of fatherhood due to the fact that their children have already grown up or that their children suffer from PAS - Parental Alienation Syndrome. With PAS the children become alienated against the father as the mother has pushed him away and brainwashed the children that he is of no worth, or perhaps even bad for whatever reason she creates.

But, it is still a time to celebrate. A time to restore faith in the justice system in Israel which until now practiced gender bias discrimination. A time to rejoice for the many children who will now have a father to learn from, gain confidence and be there at all times.
...
The UN committee was responding to a report submitted by the Coalition for Children and Family, a non-profit organization that unites several bodies engaged in fighting for father's rights.

Alongside complaints of social and economic difficulties faced by the men and accusations that in general more attention is paid to women's rights, the CCF also outlined legislation it calls "blatantly discriminatory against men."

"The parliament and judges refuse to eliminate discriminatory preferences and presumptions which favor women. That is coupled with automatic and instant decisions in favor of women, compared with deliberate procrastination in disposing of motions filed by men, general attitude of ridiculization and marginalization of all men, labeling all men as potential aggressors and dangerous to spouses and children," said the UN in it's findings.
...
But the battle for equality is still far from over.

"As soon as the Minister of Justice announced intentions to adopt the Schnitt Committee parental equality recommendations, the media was filled with reactions from the militant feminist groups," said Zer. "The Rackman Center, Naamat, WIZO and other feminist groups arguing that parental equality means that women may lose the children as bargaining chips, and that child support may be reduced to compensate for enhanced parenting time with the fathers."'

Nebraska rape charge dropped, accuser arrested

anthony · 22 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'BEATRICE, Neb. (AP) - Rape charges filed against a Wymore man have been dismissed, and the woman who accused him has been arrested on suspicion of lying about the assault and other counts.

Beatrice radio station KWBE (http://bit.ly/xTyNOL) reports that 27-year-old Jennifer Valenta of Wilber has been charged with perjury, false reporting, obstructing government operations, two counts of prostitution and other counts.

Deputy Gage County Attorney Rick Schreiner says Valenta was arrested Friday in Beatrice. Valenta had reported that she was gang-raped by the Wymore man and three others on Nov. 24.

Schreiner says the investigation into the allegations did not support Valenta's claims, and that she eventually acknowledged fabricating the rape.

Valenta remained in jail Saturday and could not be reached for comment.'

Dad's nightmare over sex charge

anthony · 22 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Americans reacted with disbelief and outrage this week after an ABC TV documentary detailed a conspiracy between prosecutors, social workers and school authorities to destroy Julian Wendrow's family.

Wendrow, 56, is a teacher and paint-store owner. He was arrested at his home in Michigan days before a planned family holiday to Johannesburg in December 2007. He was jailed for 80 days, 70 of them in a 2x2m solitary confinement cell, and threatened with life imprisonment while county officials publicly described him as a rapist and a paedophile.

His wife, Tali, was also taken to jail, fitted with an electronic tether and placed under house arrest for alleged complicity in the "rapes". As a result she lost her job as a research attorney.'

Mark Steyn: No more ‘women and children first'

anthony · 22 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today there is no social norm, so it's every man for himself – operative word "man," although not many of the chaps on the Titanic would recognize those on the Costa Concordia as "men." From a grandmother on the latter: "I was standing by the lifeboats and men, big men, were banging into me and knocking the girls."

Whenever I write about these subjects, I receive a lot of mail from men along the lines of this correspondent:

"The feminists wanted a gender-neutral society. Now they've got it. So what are you complaining about?"

And so the manly virtues (if you'll forgive a quaint phrase) shrivel away to the so-called "man caves," those sad little redoubts of beer and premium cable sports networks.

We are beyond social norms these days. A woman can be a soldier. A man can be a woman. A 7-year-old cross-dressing boy can join the Girl Scouts in Colorado because he "identifies" as a girl. It all adds to life's rich tapestry, no doubt. But I can't help wondering, when the ship hits the fan, how many of us will still be willing to identify as a man.

...

The contempt for "women and children first" is not a small loss. For soft cultures in good times, dispensing with social norms is easy. In hard times, you may have need of them.'

Chivalry Sinks under Equality's Murky Waters

anthony · 22 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Long ago, feminists launched an attack on the concept of manliness, and you can see the fruits of their campaign in the Costa Concordia. Harvard professor Harvey Mansfield, author of Manliness, has said that the "the entire project of modernity can be understood as a project to keep manliness unemployed."

If manliness, a necessary precursor of the virtue of chivalry, is obsolete, why would a crew member risk his life to uphold it? My friend and colleague Carrie Lukas once observed that "gentlemanly conduct isn't about the women at all. It's about the men and their sense of themselves." Today men are discouraged from feeling that there is any intrinsic value in being and acting like a man. If there is no pride, no sense of particular duty to a high cause, why, then, would they possibly surrender a seat on a lifeboat?'

'Passing of domestic violence bills could set NH back 40 years'

anthony · 22 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New Hampshire currently has the strongest set of domestic violence laws in the country; however, that could all change. Lawmakers held a hearing on Thursday which focused on two bills that would drastically scale back the domestic violence laws currently in place.

One of the bills being considered is House Bill 1581 which would prevent law enforcement from being able to immediately arrest an abuser who has assaulted his or her partner unless the officer has actually witnesses the crime take place. Under the current law, the police can arrest an abuser based on probable cause.
...
“It’s clear if a police officer sees somebody robbing a bank they ought to be able to arrest them,” says Representative Dan Itse, “Our Constitution is clear. You have to prove to an objective party, a judge, that there is reasonably cause that there is warrant for arrest.”'

South Africa: Woman accused of cutting baby from womb

anthony · 22 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A SOUTH African woman appeared in court yesterday accused of leaving a pregnant woman for dead after slicing her open and stealing the unborn child from her womb.

Loretta Cooke (29) from Randfontein in west Johannesburg was remanded in custody at Randfontein Magistrate Court after state prosecutors were granted an adjournment to allow them investigate the case further.

The grisly murder was perpetrated last week, but the police initially thought 34-year-old Valencia Behrens had bled to death after giving birth. In addition, they could not locate the deceased's newborn baby at the crime scene.'

CMU to add more women’s sports even though there's very little interest

anthony · 22 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an effort to prove compliance with the gender equality law, CMU issued a survey to all students in the spring of 2009 gauging the interest and ability of female athletes. The survey, which had about 2,200 respondents, concluded there was a very limited interest in adding new women’s sports. However, a repeal in April 2010 – the George W. Bush administration had ruled a survey was sufficient enough – forced schools to adhere to more stringent criteria to prove that they were compliant.

“We went through process and the survey showed that there was not a substantial interest level in additional sports — that we were meeting the needs,” Heeke said. “When the Obama administration came in, that tool was deemed non-compliant and the Office of Civil Rights came back and said you can’t use that anymore. When that went away, we had to start over.”'

Title IX and Its Effect on Men’s Collegiate Athletics

anthony · 22 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

http://usa-sports.org/TitleIX.pdf

'The law, which was designed to end discrimination against women, is now discriminating against men. For example:

• Boston University dropped its football program due to Title IX pressures after 91 years.

• University of San Francisco cut football after 64 years.

• Colgate University eliminated men’s baseball after 107 years.

• Cornell University’s men’s fencing team was discontinued after 98 years.

• Princeton University ended its wrestling program for fear of litigation due to an inability to satisfy “proportionality”.'

California community activist asks for support for child support tax-deductibility law

Matt · 23 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

My name is Linda Taylor, I am a community Activist in California. Recently I asked California Assemblyman Bill Berryhill to introduce legislation that make child support tax deductible. If you are interested in helping make this law, you should contact Matt Roman - Legislative Director for Berryhill's office at 916-319-2026. Or, fax his office at 916-319-2126.

The decision whether to introduce this legislation is only a week away. Please contact his office ASAP.

Thank you,

Linda Taylor

WILL Magazine - Dec 2011, Vol 1, Issue 5

Matt · 23 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Dear Brothers,

The latest Issue of WILL magazine has been uploaded.

WILL Magazine Volume 1 Issue 5, has been given a makeover and contains articles by reputed members of society.

http://thewillfoundation.webs.com/documents/WILL.DEC.Vol1.Issue5.pdf

We at TWF hope you find it an informative read.

Please lodge anti-circumcision submissions with the FDA (Deadline 30 Jan. 2012)

Minuteman · 23 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This is a response to the document “Cosmetic Microbiological Safety Issues; Public Meeting” [regulations.gov Docket No.: FDA-2011-N-0770, FR Doc No: 2011-28238] (http://www.regulations.gov/#!documentDetail;D=FDA-2011-N-0770-0001).

The deadline for submissions is 30 January 2012.

This submission can be made by anybody from any country around the world.

Instructions:

Download and save the document from the following link (Click 'Download Now', Wait for the counter to reach zero and then click 'Download file now'):

http://www.4shared.com/office/yTalJ_UO/FDA-2011-N-0770-0001_30January.html

Go to the following regulations.gov submission page:

http://www.regulations.gov/#!submitComment;D=FDA-2011-N-0770-0001

Complete the required fields ("Organization Name" and "Category") and as many optional fields you would like to. Click browse under '3. UPLOAD FILE(S)' to upload the saved document from your harddisk. Click 'Submit'.

Male sex drive 'to blame for world's conflicts'

Broadsword · 23 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The male sex drive is to blame for most of the world's conflicts from football hooliganism to religious disputes and even world wars, according to scientists. The "male warrior" instinct means that men are programmed to be aggressive towards anyone they view as an outsider, a study claims.

In evolutionary terms an instinct for violence against others helped early men improve their status and gain more access to mates, but in modern terms this can translate into large-scale wars.

In contrast women are naturally equipped with a "tend and befriend" attitude which means they seek to resolve conflicts peacefully in order to protect their children, researchers said.
...
Although men's hostile responses most likely evolved to combat the threat from outsiders, they "might not be functional in modern times and are often counterproductive," experts said.'

Ethicist wants women to abandon motherhood, use artificial wombs

Broadsword · 23 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In remarks that critics have said are disturbingly reminiscent of Aldous Huxley's famous dystopian novel "Brave New World," a UK ethicist has argued that since pregnancy causes "natural inequality" between the sexes, women must be liberated from the "burdens and risks of pregnancy" through the use of "ectogenesis", or artificial wombs.

"Pregnancy is a condition that causes pain and suffering, and that affects only women. The fact that men do not have to go through pregnancy to have a genetically related child, whereas women do, is a natural inequality," writes Dr. Anna Smajdor in an article that recently appeared in the Cambridge Quarterly of Healthcare Ethics.

In her Defense of Ectogenesis, published online December, 2011, Smajdor construes pregnancy as a "medical problem, along with other conditions that cause pain and suffering." Smajdor is Lecturer in Ethics at the School of Medicine, Health Policy and Practice in the University of East Anglia.

"If there were a disease that caused symptoms and risks similar to those caused by pregnancy, I contend that it would be regarded as being fairly serious, and that we would have good reasons to try to insure against it," argues Smajdor, who lumps pregnancy along with "diseases" that continue for many months, such as the measles.

For Smajdor, currently "men reap all the benefits of women's gestation, while women bear the risks and burdens."

Accordingly, in Smajdor's worldview, "women are disadvantaged as a group through brute luck, because men can reproduce without undergoing the risks of pregnancy."'

Judge bought the lie hook, line and sinker!

Alphamale · 23 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

A recent article (http://www.thestar.com/news/article/1119764--man-jailed-4-months-for-sexually-assaulting-wife?bn=1) in the Toronto Star has highlighted a judge who was fooled beyond belief. A man was sentenced to four months in jail for raping his wife. Not surprisingly, the wife did not bring the rape charge forward until eight months later. Eight months. I doubt I could even remember what day I had sex with my wife eight months later.

Furthermore, I'm aghast that this man couldn't see this one coming a mile away. As soon as I had read the first few lines it was as clear as day that the couple must be split up and a battle over custody of the children was the impetus behind the sleazy ex-wife. What's so disconcerting is that the judge was so easily fooled. I would have expected a higher standard of justice, but just proves how ingrained the well-oiled female chauvinist machine is in today's society.

SAVE: The Senate Judiciary Committee Needs Your Calls Before Thursday's (Jan. 26, 2012) Vote On VAWA

Matt · 24 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The Senate Judiciary Committee is expected to vote on the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) this coming Thursday at 10am. As you know, we have found many flaws in this bill, which is why we created the Partner Violence Reduction Act (PVRA).

The Partner Violence Reduction Act:

- Gives priority to real victims.
- Reduces false allegations.
- Removes provisions that violate the Constitution.
- Protects families.
- Provides legal assistance for alleged victim and alleged offender.
- Requires third-party accreditation.
- Curbs immigration fraud.
- Makes the law gender-inclusive.

Today we'd like you to call members on the committee. Tell them to reject VAWA and to support the Partner Violence Reduction Act. More info: http://www.saveservices.org/pvra

'Trust Women Week' for Female Repro Rights - and Male Repro Rights Are...?

Matt · 25 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

MoveOn.org is leading Trust Women Week, a 'virtual march' for women's reproductive rights. No mention at all of male reproductive rights, or the complete lack thereof. Anyone else feel like it's time MRAs had their own virtual (or real) march for male reproductive rights? I do.

Ob-Gyns Should Screen for Domestic Abuse: Experts

Minuteman · 25 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Obstetricians and gynecologists should screen all patients for intimate partner violence, including during prenatal visits, according to new recommendations from the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.
...
About one in four women has been physically and/or sexually assaulted by a current or former partner, and nearly 324,000 pregnant women are abused by their partners each year in the United States, researchers have found.
...
"Women of all ages experience intimate partner violence, but it is most prevalent among reproductive-age women," Dr. Maureen Phipps, chair of the college's Committee on Health Care for Underserved Women, said in the news release. "We have a prime opportunity to identify and help women who are being abused by incorporating this screening into our routine office visits with each and every patient."'

Businessman to have cosmetic surgery to heal horrific wounds after two years of abuse by his 5ft 1ins girlfriend

Broadsword · 25 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"A businessman who was beaten so badly by his 5ft 1ins girlfriend that he almost lost his arm is to have cosmetic surgery to heal his horrific scars.

Ian McNicholl, 49, from Hull, suffered two years of abuse at the hands of Michelle Williamson, including one attack where she sprayed bleach in his eyes.

He also suffered fractures to his skull, cheekbones, and nose, three cracked ribs and horrific burns on his arm from an iron at the hands of his ex-girlfriend.

Williamson, who is now serving a seven-year jail sentence for causing grievous bodily harm, also lit cigarettes and shoved them up her partner's nose after falsely accusing him of having an affair.

On one occasion, she also poured two kettles full of boiling water over him - and even attacked him with a vacuum cleaner.

...

He added: 'I can completely understand why some men will feel embarrassed speaking out - men generally don't like talking about their feelings.

'But the bigger issue is that lots of men don't know where to go for help and there's a lot of gender bias.

'The massive problem is that men are not seen as victims. We need a gender neutral awareness campaign, or even a male-specific one.'"

Canandaigua mom accused of leaving toddler alone, driving drunk and assault

Matt · 26 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Notice in these stories there seems to be an emphasis on the fact that the accused or convicted woman is a 'mom'. Umm, forgive me here, but 'moms' don't do stuff like this to their kids. Criminals do. Excerpt:

'A Canandaigua woman was accused of leaving her infant home alone, driving drunk and assaulting a police officer early today.

Ontario County sheriff's deputies stopped Vanessa R. Rosa, 21, of Telyea Street on Route 364 in Gorham, Ontario County, just before 1 a.m. She was allegedly driving outside the appropriate lane, deputies said.

Rosa was also driving without a valid license because hers had been suspended pending a separate DWI arrest that occurred in November, said Ontario County Undersheriff David Tillman. He said charges are pending in that case.

Rosa is accused of spitting in a deputy's face and kicking the deputy as she was being arrested, deputies said. Rosa refused a breath test and was taken to Ontario County Jail to await arraignment in Gorham Town Court. She is also accused of spitting on a jail deputy this morning, Tillman said.'

SAVE: VAWA Vote on Thursday: Have You Made the Call?

Matt · 26 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Reference: http://news.mensactivism.org/node/17895

VAWA Vote on Thursday: Have You Made the Call?

- Chuck Grassley (202) 224-3744
- Orrin G. Hatch (202) 224-5251
- Jon Kyl (202) 224-4521
- Jeff Sessions (202) 224-4124
- Lindsey Graham (202) 224-5972
- John Cornyn (202) 224-2934
- Michael S. Lee (202) 224-5444
- Tom Coburn (202) 224-5754

Two teenage girls charged with murder after stabbing death of man

anthony · 26 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GARLAND, Texas – Two teenage girls in Texas are facing capital murder charges after a man was found stabbed in a motel room, MyFoxDFW.com reports.

Police say 17-year-old Tatina Daniels and 18-year-old Teresa Price were "partying" Monday night in a motel room with the victim, 40-year-old Jesse Morales, Jr.

Authorities did not give details on what happened in the hotel room that night, but said the "party" involved drugs, sex and alcohol.

"At some point during the night, the party got out of hand," Garland Police public information officer Joe Harn said in a news release. "Police believe that led to the death of Morales."

The girls then allegedly took the victim's van and set fire to it.'

F&F: Victory! F & F Helps Win Child Custody Case in CO Supreme Court

Matt · 27 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families and its legislative representative Michael Robinson have been at the forefront of the fight to protect military servicemembers' often tenuous child custody rights. We've successfully worked to pass military parent legislation in dozens of states, including Ohio, Georgia, California, Indiana, Nevada, and Arizona over the past two years.

While the family court system in general is biased against fathers, Fathers and Families has repeatedly warned that there are fathers who have learned how to work the system against mothers, and use it to their unjust advantage. When this occurs, Fathers and Families is on the side of the mother whose loving bonds with her children are being endangered.

In Re the Marriage of Brandt, decided this week by the Colorado Supreme Court, is such a case. Fathers and Families has been assisting Captain Christine Brandt of the U.S. Army Nurse Corps to regain custody of her 12-year-old son.

In short, Brandt's ex, George Brandt, tried to take custody of their son away from Christine by using her military service against her. As Brandt's attorney Stanley G. Lipkin, Esq. explained to the Court, this case is "about an active duty military person who has been deprived of the custody of her child solely by reason of her deployments."'

Bill Hudson, Goldie Hawn's Ex, Pens Book on Parental Alienation, Praises Fathers and Families

Matt · 27 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Bill Hudson, father of Kate and Oliver Hudson and the ex-husband of Goldie Hawn, has authored a new book, Two Versions, in which he claims he was alienated from his children by his ex-wife. According to Amazon.com:

> Bill Hudson of the Hudson brothers, ex-spouse of Goldie Hawn, explores in this book aspects of the family dealing with fame, marriage, divorce, and the ugliness that can cause relationships between parent and child to become stilted…he covers the bitter side of divorce, his own foibles, as well as such issues as parental alienation and fathers' rights. Not a 'Hollywood tell-all', but instead an emotional outreach to those who have been in or are in the same situations Bill saw.

In a recent appearance on Good Day LA, Hudson said he was unfairly portrayed as a "bad father" who "walked away" from his children. He claims he has tried everything to reestablish a relationship with his children, but that Kate has "followed the path of her mom," accusing him of abandoning this children, etc. He sadly noted, "I've never met my grandchildren." To watch the interview, click here.'

NYPD Commissioner's son in rape probe

anthony · 27 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The woman reported the alleged assault three months after the encounter and during that span continued contact with him via text messages and phone calls. I'm going to keep a close eye on this story. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK -- The son of New York City Police Commissioner Raymond Kelly is under investigation after a woman accused him of rape, sources tell NBC New York.
...
Details of her complaint are unknown at this time, but Greg Kelly has not been arrested or charged with any crime.
...
Kelly's attorney, Andrew Lankler, said that his client was aware of the investigation and strongly denied any wrongdoing.

"Mr. Kelly is aware that the New York County District Attorney's office is conducting an investigation. Mr. Kelly strenuously denies any wrongdoing of any kind, and is cooperating fully with the district attorney's investigation," Lankler said in a statement. "We know the district attorney's investigation will prove Mr. Kelly's innocence."
...
The New York Times, quoting an anonymous law enforcement official, said the woman is in her late 20s or early 30s. She walked into the 13th Precinct with her sister after 8 p.m. on Tuesday and made her complaint, according to the Times.

The woman told police she met Kelly on the street, and the two had drinks together on Oct. 8, the paper reported. They then moved on to her office at a Lower Manhattan law firm. According to the Times, the woman told the cops that the rape occurred at the office. The two continued to keep in touch by phone and text message after the encounter.'

Oral HPV Infection Strikes Men More Than Women: Study

Minuteman · 28 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Almost 7 percent of American men and women are infected orally with the human papillomavirus (HPV), new research reveals, with men showing significantly higher infection rates than women.

In fact, the study found that among those between the ages of 14 and 69, men seem to face a nearly threefold greater risk than women for oral HPV infection.

The authors noted that the gender gap grows even wider with respect to HPV-16, a strain that is responsible for the vast majority of HPV-related cases of oral cancer. Men are five times more likely to be infected with HPV-16 than are women, the study found.

The biggest risk factors for oral HPV infection include sex and tobacco use, the researchers say.'

Ed. note: You will get the following message after opening the link:

Police: Woman Made Up Attack For Boyfriend's Attention

mens_issues · 28 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A young woman in Boulder makes up a story of an assailant in order to get her boyfriend's attention. Excerpt:

'BOULDER, Colo. -- A 20-year-old college student admitted to Boulder police that she fabricated a story about fighting off a knife-wielding black man because she wanted attention from her boyfriend, according to police reports obtained by 7NEWS.

Police on Thursday issued Nina Fiorillo a summons for false reporting after she admitted making up the story about being attacked while walking home early Sunday morning. False reporting to authorities is a misdemeanor carrying a maximum penalty of six months in jail and a $750 fine.

The University of Colorado student's bogus claim about an armed attacker at large triggered alarm in the community and an intense investigation by police detectives and patrol officers, according to 43 pages of police reports generated by the manhunt.'

Super Bowl Hoax Redux: Hey, guys — it's just a game

el cid · 28 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This article claims that domestic violence incidents go up when the Denver Broncos lose a football game. It sounds suspiciously like the Super Bowl Hoax--that DV incidents increase on Super Bowl day. It also states the usual half-truths and unfounded statistics about DV. You can post comments under the article or send a Letter to the Editor (via e-mail) to openforum-at-denverpost.com. Excerpt:

'I was never a big sports fan, and I became less of one about 15 years ago.

I was at a tea party hosted by my aunt and shared a conversation with Anne Tapp, executive director of Safe House Alliance, a domestic violence shelter in Boulder. She made a statement that comes to mind literally every time I think of professional sports.

"Our busiest days are when the Broncos lose," she said. Apparently a lot of people take the game pretty seriously."'

Australia: Position Vacant - Men's Health Research Fellow (Biostatistician/Epidemiologist), Adelaide University

Minuteman · 29 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Research Fellow (Biostatistician/Epidemiologist)
Freemasons Foundation Centre for Men's Health, School of Medicine

Job Reference Number: 17097

We are seeking an enthusiastic and committed Research Fellow Biostatistician/Epidemiologist to conduct analyses of data generated by researchers, and provide support to students, in the Freemasons Foundation Centre for Men's Health, School of Medicine at the University of Adelaide.

Position Requirements

At a minimum, the candidate should have the following qualifications:

* Master's degree or PhD in Biostatistics and/or Epidemiology
* Familiarity and track record of effective use of statistical packages (eg, SAS, SPSS, Stata, R).
* Demonstrable ability to manage, manipulate and analyse complex longitudinal data sets, and prepare comprehensive statistical reports.
* Familiarity with genetic data analysis, statistical genetics, bioinformatics and data mining.
* Ability to apply independent problem solving and application of novel statistical methods and tools.
* Ability to motivate self and others to meet deadlines even in demanding timeframes
* Demonstrated flexibility in coping with multiple and changing priorities.'

New revelations in Fox TV anchor Greg Kelly rape accusation case

anthony · 29 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"She lied to the boyfriend to meet Greg that night. She said, 'I'm going out with a girlfriend,' " said the source.

They had a couple of drinks but the bar tab revealed that the amount of drink taken was "laughably low" — and then went to the woman's law firm.

They had sexual relations in her boss's office.

Afterrwards "They continued to text," the source said. "Part of it was about arranging another date."

There were 17 text messages in all between the two.

"You don't text your rapist — other than to say, 'You're awful,'" the source said.

But three months later the woman claimed Kelly had raped her and reported it to police. She claimed she was too drunk to resist his advances.
...
The key to the case, says the insider is "What drives someone who's making a delayed report?"'

History shows we shouldn't rush to judgment in Greg Kelly case

anthony · 29 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Being a man accused of a sex crime these days is tantamount to being convicted in the court of public opinion. Even if you are cleared, Google your name until the day you die and the stink of “sexual abuse” or “rape” will be in the first graph of your bio.

Ask any of those young guys falsely accused in the Duke University lacrosse team “rape” scandal. Ask any of the kids who did time for brutalizing the Central Park jogger only for DNA to vindicate them.

This by no means is to suggest that Kelly's accuser is a liar.

Any woman who accuses a man of rape or sexual assault should be taken seriously. I have no evidence to contradict her claims that Kelly date-raped her while she was intoxicated in her law office after they had drinks in October.

But I haven’t seen anything to back up her story yet either.

I am not blaming the victim. But we in the press and you in the jury of public opinion must ask: Who is to say that the "victim" isn't the accused?
...
And I know that even questioning the veracity of an accuser in these politically correct times can be misinterpreted as defending the accused. Not true. But forgive me if I approach this Greg Kelly story with healthy skepticism, with the burden of proof in the accuser's corner, especially since she waited three months to file a report and seems to have been in repeated contact with Kelly since the night they met.'
...
Maybe this accuser is telling the truth.

But until it's proved, let's remember that Greg Kelly is innocent.'

Congress and States Prepare for another Circumcision Battle

anthony · 29 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Children's right activists from coast to coast have joined together this month to press more than 2,200 lawmakers in Congress and eleven states to enact the Male Genital Mutilation Bill. The proposed bill would protect boys from forced circumcision the same way that girls are protected under federal and state laws.

As director of MGMbill.org's Florida office, Stacey Butler is leading the effort in her state to make Section 794.08 of Florida's Sexual Battery Code gender neutral. "All children deserve to be protected from forced genital cutting," said Butler, a licensed practical nurse and mother of three living in Palm Bay. "Although every girl in America has a legal right to genital integrity, we still allow boys to be circumcised for medically unnecessary reasons. That needs to change. One person at a time, one child at a time, we will make a difference!"'

San Francisco Sheriff-elect neighbor's report of abuse lit firestorm

anthony · 29 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'San Francisco police inspector John Keane received a phone call Jan. 4 from a woman who wanted to report an incident of domestic violence involving her neighbor. It would soon become clear this wasn't an ordinary call — the woman had information that would rock San Francisco's political establishment and possibly ruin a man's career.
...
Madison's motive for calling police has been the subject of much debate. Mirkarimi, who has denied the allegations of domestic abuse, at one point suggested nefarious political forces behind the scandal. In an interview with a Venezuelan radio station Tuesday, Lopez — who has publicly denied being abused by her husband — suggested the sheriff was a victim of dirty politics and questioned Madison's reasons for going to the police. Lopez said the two women had met because Madison has a child who is the same age as Lopez's son, Theo.
...
Madison has not responded to several requests for interviews. She describes herself as a nonpracticing lawyer and a "radical feminist politico" in her bio on Redroom.com, the online writers' social network she founded. Madison has written for DC Comics characters such as The Huntress, a heroine whom Batman fears for being too violent and unpredictable.

According to an arrest warrant affidavit, Lopez told Madison she wanted her to make a video of her injuries "just in case [Mirkarimi] wants to take Theo away from me because he … said that he is very powerful and can do it." After calling police, Madison refused to turn over the video because she had promised Lopez she wouldn't give it to authorities. Police later obtained a search warrant to seize the video, along with text messages and emails between Madison and Lopez.'

The less explored side of family domestic violence

anthony · 29 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Here:

'The Community Oriented Policing group in Puslinch decided to bring family domestic violence to the forefront and has spent this past year carrying out various activities to highlight the support available and to bring awareness to this issue. This group culminated its year-long effort by holding an information night and silent auction. All auction proceeds went to Women in Crisis and Victim Services of Guelph-Wellington. An audience of more than 40 — about half of which were men — attended. Our guest speaker, representing Women in Crisis, began her talk by equating domestic violence with abuse to women. She said violence toward a male is very rare and it has to be recognized that when violence occurs within families, the victim is almost always a woman. As the speaker went on, I could see some in the audience getting a little antsy — myself included. It was beginning to sound like men were the root of all evil. Some audience members challenged her assumptions, but the speaker asserted her position.

So, I decided to scratch the surface and dig into some data on domestic violence. The results were very eye-opening. Statistics Canada shows an alarming and growing trend. More women than ever before are attacking their domestic partners, but despite some progress, male abuse has yet to be recognized as a public issue. Most abuse toward males goes unreported because men are seen as bigger and more powerful, so it is seen as weakness if they concede they are victims. When men do confide in others, they are often met with disbelief.'

'Tackle domestic violence' this Super Bowl

anthony · 29 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This February, football fans across the country will be gearing up to see who will be the champions of Super Bowl XLVI. Will the Giants squash the Patriots? Or will freedom ring and the Giants suffer a swift defeat? Whatever the outcome, the Crisis Control Center, Inc. in Durant encourages football fanatics to celebrate for a purpose in 2012. The center will once again “Tackle Domestic Violence” this year during the week of the Super Bowl. While you’re noshing on junk food, talking about your favorite Super Bowl commercials, waiting to see what crazy antics will ensue during the halftime show and cheering on your favorite team, you and your friends can be doing your part to end domestic violence.

Crisis Control Center board member Tim Boatmun said the organization does not care how you celebrate your Super Bowl Sunday as long as you are thinking of those in need. Throughout the year, nearly 4,000 women are killed and hundreds of women and children are physically injured and emotionally scarred. The Crisis Control Center serves Bryan County, Atoka County, Johnston County and Marshall County. They strive to provide a safe place for hundreds of women and their children who are attempting to escape the ravages of domestic violence. They also provide counseling, advocacy and a 24-hour crisis hotline to individuals in need of emergency assistance.

Advocate Anna Marcy said they plan for this fundraiser to be for everyone in the community and not limited to abuse on women and children. She said the center would also like to focus on men taking a stand against domestic violence. She said it not only affects the family but everyone in the entire community.'

'Help! I Hate My Husband!'

anthony · 30 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Help! I hate my husband."

This is how a letter starts in my Inbox today. It's from a 41-year-old woman named Cindy in Dallas who has been married for 12 years. I get hate mail like this using slightly different language several times a week. Substitute the word "hate" for "loathe", "despise", "can't stand" and occasionally, "wanna kill".

...

Any woman married for longer than six months, if she is honest, knows the eggshell thin line that separates loving from loathing The deeper the love, the deeper the potential to hate. Any wife who is honest knows the compulsion to throw things, to hiss, to swear, to sit in the driveway in your bathrobe, engine running, sobbing.

...

From Cindy:

"At some point every week I feel like leaving him. When we got married I imagined this great life we would have together and instead we seem to always be fighting, about the kids, about the fact that he is so remote, about the stupidest things."

From me:

"Are you still attracted to him?"

From Cindy:

"Sex is still, good, yes. But we don't have it very often. I find myself lusting after other men."'

Colorado: Tell the Senate Health and Human Services committee to vote NO to reinstating circumcision on Medicaid

Minuteman · 30 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Originally posted here.

'If you live in Colorado or know someone who does, please read this important message from NOCIRC of Colorado.

TO ALL COLORADO RESIDENTS:

We need your help THIS WEEK!
~~~
~~~

Here's the list of senators on the HHS Committee that you can send the above e-mail to:

Sen Irene Aguilar, M.D. (D)
irene.aguilar.senate@state.co.us 303-866-4852

Sen Betty Boyd (D)
betty.boyd.senate@state.co.us 303-866-4857

Sen Kevin Lundberg (R)
kevin@kevinlundberg.com 303-866-4853

Sen Shawn Mitchell (R)
shawnmitch@aol.com 303-866-4876

Sen Linda Newell (D)
linda.newell.senate@gmail.com 303-866-4846

Sen Jeanne Nicholson (D)
jeanne.nicholson.senate@state.co.us 303-866-4873

Sen Ellen Roberts (R)
ellen.roberts.senate@state.co.us 303-866-4884

Sen Jean White (R)
jean.white.senate@state.co.us 303-866-5292

The author of this bill is Sen Joyce Foster (D), joyce.foster.senate@state.co.us. 303-866-4875. She is the 9th member of the HSS Committee. She describes circumcision on her website as a "very important health procedure". While she won't vote against her own bill, she should still hear from opponents of the bill.

Again, there will be a public hearing on the bill just before the HHS Committee votes. The hearing is THIS THURSDAY, Feb 2, 2012 at 1:30 p.m. Mountain Time, in room SCR 356 (Senate Committee Room, 3rd floor) at the Colorado State Capitol building in downtown Denver (200 E Colfax Ave, Denver, CO 80203). Several of us will be speaking against the bill. If you'd like to speak against the bill, you will need to sign up at the hearing, and you will have no more than 5 minutes to talk. We hope many of you can come to the hearing to lend your support! The circumcision bill is 3rd on the docket, so plan to spend the afternoon!

Link to the hearing schedule:
http://www.leg.state.co.us/clics/clics2012a/csl.nsf/CalendarsFrameSet?OpenForm&chamber=Senate

Please help us get the word out - forward this e-mail to anyone you know in Colorado who might be willing to help us fight this bill. AND PLEASE CALL AND EMAIL THE ABOVE LEGISLATORS NOW!

Thank you for your support!
Craig Garrett
Gillian Longley RN
NOCIRC of Colorado'

SAVE: Call Judiciary Members Today: 'Where's All the Money Going?'

Matt · 30 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The Senate Judiciary Committee vote on the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) was postponed until this coming week to allow more time for staff to negotiate several sticking points. And well they should, because victims are demanding to know, "Where's all the money going?"

Time and time again, domestic violence victims are being turned away by the very agencies that are supposed to be helping them, or are getting the DV runaround. One Department of Justice audit reached this disturbing conclusion:

$638,298, or about 47 percent, of $1.3 million given to Jane Doe, Inc., also known as the Massachusetts Coalition Against Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence, was identified as unsupported and unallowable payroll expenditures, unallowable bonus payments, and unallowable and unreasonable conference expenditures.

So the problem isn't a lack of funding. The problem is lack of accountability.

Children of working mothers face more health problems

Minuteman · 31 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Children of working mothers are approximately 200 percent more likely than those with stay-at-home mothers to have been hospitalized overnight, had an asthma episode within the past 12 months, or had an injury or poisoning episode within the past 3 months, according to a new study. Although the percentage of women with children participating in the labor force has risen from 54.9 percent in 1975 to 79.4 percent in 2001 (declining to 76.9 percent by 2005), the impact of maternal work on children's health has remained unclear, reports Melinda Sandler Morrill, Ph.D., of North Carolina State University.

...

In her study, Dr. Morrill looked at the three potentially adverse health events cited above in a population of children, ages 7–17 years. Her data revealed a clear increase in the percentage of mothers working once their youngest child reached 60 months of age by their State's kindergarten enrollment cutoff date. She found that a mother's employment increased overnight hospitalizations by 4 percentage points, injuries/poisonings by 5 percentage points, and the rate of asthma episodes by 12 percentage points, each by about 200 percent.'

'And colleges and universities should get the hell out of the criminal-justice business'

anthony · 31 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Back in September, I wrote in the magazine about the problems posed for colleges and universities by the Department of Education's new rules governing how they must respond to allegations of sexual assault. Over the weekend, those chickens came home to roost, big-time, as the news spread that Yale University quarterback Patrick Witt had been accused of sexual assault.

You may remember Witt; he was lauded nationally for choosing to forgo an interview for a Rhodes Scholarship in order to play in his final college football game (against Harvard), which was scheduled for the same day. On Thursday, the New York Times reported that Witt withdrew his candidacy for the scholarship after the Rhodes Trust "learned through unofficial channels that a fellow student had accused Witt of sexual assault." The Times story, written by Richard Pérez-Peña, is rather extraordinary. For example, it includes these lines:

"Witt's accuser has not gone to the police, nor filed what Yale considers a formal complaint. The New York Times has not spoken with her and does not know her name."

...

Witt's sports-agency representative issued a rebuttal of the Times's version of events. The usual suspects are engaging in elaborate conspiracy theories, and shouting about rape apologists. But here's the takeaway, in the end: A young man's reputation is in tatters based on an anonymous allegation that he committed sexual assault. And this, folks, is why we need to have one simple, standard way of judging whether sexual assault is sexual assault or not. There should be proof—good proof, not just a hairsbreadth of proof—that a crime has been committed. That proof should be given to police. And colleges and universities should get the hell out of the criminal-justice business.'

Woman Sentenced After Lying About Black Men Kidnapping Her

anthony · 31 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Philadelphia woman who told police that two black men kidnapped her -- and was later found to have lied -- was sentenced to eight years in prison Thursday, according to the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Bonnie Sweeten, 40, who made headlines two years ago after triggering a massive search when she called police and said that black men had kidnapped her and her 9-year-old daughter, will have to pay $1 million in restitution.

"Sweeten stole funds from family members, from the law office where she had been employed and from the law firm's clients," the prosecutor's office said after the ruling came down.

"You've done great wrong, and you have to pay the price," said U.S. District Judge William H. Yohn Jr., calling her a "master con woman."'

How the CDC is overstating sexual violence in the U.S.

anthony · 31 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What does that mean? If a woman was unconscious or severely incapacitated, everyone would call it rape. But what about sex while inebriated? Few people would say that intoxicated sex alone constitutes rape — indeed, a nontrivial percentage of all customary sexual intercourse, including marital intercourse, probably falls under that definition (and is therefore criminal according to the CDC).

Other survey questions were equally ambiguous. Participants were asked if they had ever had sex because someone pressured them by “telling you lies, making promises about the future they knew were untrue?” All affirmative answers were counted as “sexual violence.” Anyone who consented to sex because a suitor wore her or him down by “repeatedly asking” or “showing they were unhappy” was similarly classified as a victim of violence. The CDC effectively set a stage where each step of physical intimacy required a notarized testament of sober consent.

The report also called for more research on “sexism” and urged “collective action” against media messages that “objectify and degrade women.” In the familiar jargon of feminist theory, the CDC said: “It is important to continue addressing the beliefs, attitudes and messages that are deeply imbedded in our social structures.”'

Ultrasounds Before Abortions? Only if Men Get Rectal Exams for Viagra, Virginia Lawmaker Says

anthony · 31 January 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But yesterday, State Sen. Janet D. Howell, a Democrat from Fairfax, decided to push back on the measure, which she said is "adding to the cost and ... opening [women] up for emotional blackmail."

Attempts to derail pieces of legislation by adding unpalatable amendments—say, attaching to a budget autonomy bill a rider that would turn the District into a shooting gallery—are often called "poison pills."

Well, in the case of the ultrasound bill, Howell's poison pill is the little blue pill.

In deliberations over the measure yesterday, the Richmond Times-Dispatch reported, Howell offered an amendment that would require any man seeking a prescription for erectile dysfunction medication first submit to a rectal examination.

"I think we should just have a little gender equity here," Howell said when presenting her amendment.

Conservatives want women considering abortion to undergo an additional procedure, potentially adding to the financial and emotional cost? Howell said men who need a little extra lift from drugs like Viagra or Cialis should undergo more scrutiny, too. Seems fair.'

The Caging of America

Matt · 1 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The picture caption refers to "Six million people". We all know the vast majority of these are men. The Caging of America is a men's rights issue since as we know, men and women do not get an equal shake in the legal system. Judges are much faster to jail a man than a woman for the exact same crime under the exact same circumstances. Excerpt:

'Six million people are under correctional supervision in the U.S.—more than were in Stalin's gulags.
...
A prison is a trap for catching time. Good reporting appears often about the inner life of the American prison, but the catch is that American prison life is mostly undramatic—the reported stories fail to grab us, because, for the most part, nothing happens. One day in the life of Ivan Denisovich is all you need to know about Ivan Denisovich, because the idea that anyone could live for a minute in such circumstances seems impossible; one day in the life of an American prison means much less, because the force of it is that one day typically stretches out for decades. It isn't the horror of the time at hand but the unimaginable sameness of the time ahead that makes prisons unendurable for their inmates. The inmates on death row in Texas are called men in "timeless time," because they alone aren't serving time: they aren't waiting out five years or a decade or a lifetime. The basic reality of American prisons is not that of the lock and key but that of the lock and clock.

That's why no one who has been inside a prison, if only for a day, can ever forget the feeling. Time stops. A note of attenuated panic, of watchful paranoia—anxiety and boredom and fear mixed into a kind of enveloping fog, covering the guards as much as the guarded. "Sometimes I think this whole world is one big prison yard, / Some of us are prisoners, some of us are guards," Dylan sings, and while it isn't strictly true—just ask the prisoners—it contains a truth: the guards are doing time, too. As a smart man once wrote after being locked up, the thing about jail is that there are bars on the windows and they won't let you out. This simple truth governs all the others. What prisoners try to convey to the free is how the presence of time as something being done to you, instead of something you do things with, alters the mind at every moment. For American prisoners, huge numbers of whom are serving sentences much longer than those given for similar crimes anywhere else in the civilized world—Texas alone has sentenced more than four hundred teen-agers to life imprisonment—time becomes in every sense this thing you serve.'

Tom Martin v LSE's Gender Institute: Update

Matt · 1 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From Tom:

Tom Martin's sex discrimination lawsuit against Europe's largest gender studies department at The London School of Economics (LSE) has been delayed, a hearing now rescheduled for March 13th. Tom has given an interview for a programme on satellite news channel Press TV on 'the future of feminism', which awaits broadcast, and also, has recently been invited to take part in a debate at University College London (UCL), on the prevalence of misandry in academia and society, a date not yet set. Tom invites all other press and media to contact him directly: sexismbusters-at-hotmail.com

Tom thanks all 120 people from 9 countries who have now donated a total of £4013.25 to the legal fighting fund so far, and asks supporters to keep the donations coming in and the momentum going, by subscribing on twitter, facebook and youtube, and spreading the word in any other way they can for what could be a long, difficult, but ultimately game-changing awareness-raising and legal campaign.

Slate: One-Night Stand or Rape?

Anonymous · 1 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Q: A friend recently called me and said she had a one-night stand after drinking too much. She was beating herself up over drinking too much and going home with a guy she met at a bar. I reassured her that everyone makes mistakes and didn't think much more of the account. However, since then, she has told many people that she was a victim of date-rape.
...

A: Trying to ruin someone else's life is a poor way to address one's alcohol and self-control problems. Since her first version of the story is that she was ashamed of her behavior, and since you have seen her knee-walking drunk on other occasions, it sounds as if she wants to punish the guy at the bar for her own poor choices.
...'

Groups Attempt to Close STEM 'Girl Gap'

anthony · 1 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'STEM (science, technology, engineering and math) education has been a high priority in the recent efforts put toward education reform. One of President Obama's priorities in his reform efforts has been making these classes and programs available to everyone regardless of race, socioeconomic status and gender with the hopes of preparing them for careers in those fields.

Recently, many are implementing programs that are focusing on introducing younger girls into these subjects. These programs range anywhere from national efforts like the National Girls Collaborative Project (NGCP) to local efforts like Techbridge, to even smaller efforts like clubs and classes specifically created with the intent of gaining girls' interest in the subject.

At the Stuart Country Day School of the Sacred Heart in Princeton, N.J., a task force of top thinkers in these areas has been formed to come up with solutions to help close this "girl gap" in STEM fields.'

'An alleged victim is assaulted by the press'

anthony · 1 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here's what we know: On Jan. 25, an unnamed woman accused Greg Kelly, the co-host of "Good Day New York" and the son of New York police commissioner Ray Kelly, of raping her in October 2011, after they had a few drinks together in a Manhattan bar. She is described as being 30 years old and in the legal profession. We know that the woman had a boyfriend, who publicly confronted both Kellys at a recent public event. That the woman claims she had too much to drink and that Kelly forced himself on her. She says Kelly got her pregnant, that she subsequently had an abortion, and that she reportedly decided to tell her story because Kelly's father has encouraged crime victims to come forward. Kelly has not been formally charged with any crime.'

Beyond macho: Defining a man's world

anthony · 1 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MONTREAL — The male stereotype of the all-powerful protector and provider is doing a disservice to men -- pressuring them to conform and ultimately, leaving many powerless to face the challenges of modern society.
...
Synnott, who has been teaching a course on the sociology of men for 10 years, wrote the 2009 book, Redefining Men: Heroes, Victims and Villains, and currently writes a column on men for Psychology Today. He believes that the rallying cry of “male chauvinist pig” has ignored important realities that men face. “Men dominate at the top and also the bottom,” he points out. “The vast majority in prisons, victims of accidents, victims of work fatalities, 99 per cent of military fatalities — are all male.”

Men, argues McGill University professor Paul Nathanson and his colleague Katherine Young, suffer from the myth that they are the gender with the power and therefore cannot be damaged by criticism and ridicule. The physical, political and economic power that a small percentage of men do wield renders women, they believe, “either unwilling or unable to see men as fully human beings, people who can indeed be hurt, both individually and collectively.”

Nathanson and Young have written five books chronicling the rise of misandry, the hatred of men, which they view as a culture war being fought because of the feminist activism that led to the changed role of men.'

The NIH urges women to protect their heart health

Minuteman · 1 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The Heart Truth campaign celebrates a decade of progress and continues to inspire heart health action during American Heart Month

As part of American Heart Month, on Wednesday, Feb. 8, 2012, the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute's (NHLBI's) The Heart Truth campaign, with the support of the Foundation for the National Institutes of Health (FNIH), will showcase its signature event, the Red Dress Collection 2012 at Mercedes-Benz Fashion Week in New York City. As part of its 10th anniversary this year, The Heart Truth has partnered with Million Hearts, a national initiative of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, to prevent one million heart attacks and strokes over the next five years.
...
National Wear Red Day: Friday, Feb. 3

As part of its milestone anniversary, The Heart Truth will celebrate the 10th National Wear Red Day, when Americans nationwide wear red to show their support for women's heart disease awareness. This year, the campaign is again encouraging women to take a photo of themselves or a group and share their heart health action online. For more information, visit The Heart Truth's Facebook page at http://www.facebook.com/pages/The-Heart-Truth/6476847301.
...

About The Heart Truth

The Heart Truth is a national awareness campaign for women about heart disease and is sponsored by the National Heart, Lung, and Blood Institute, part of the National Institutes of Health, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. Through the campaign, the NHLBI leads the nation in a landmark heart health awareness movement that is being embraced by millions who share the common goal of better heart health for all women.

The centerpiece of The Heart Truth is the Red Dress, which was introduced as the national symbol for women and heart disease awareness in 2002 by the NHLBI. The Red Dress reminds women of the need to protect their heart health, and inspires them to take action.

To learn more, visit www.hearttruth.gov.'

SAVE: VAWA Show-Down Thursday

Matt · 2 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Tomorrow, Thursday Feb. 2, 2012, the Senate Judiciary Committee will be meeting to discuss Sen. Leahy's version of the Violence Against Women Act reauthorization. Leahy's VAWA bill contains many, many controversial provisions, and does nothing to assure real victims, and ALL victims - are helped.

At the meeting Sen. Charles Grassley will be proposing an amendment to bring the domestic violence industry to heel. The DV industry is certain to oppose these accountability measures. So please contact these members of the Senate Judiciary Committee and tell them that abuse victims are demanding that VAWA be made accountable to meet their needs.

Tell them to support Sen. Grassley's efforts to bring accountability to the Violence Against Women Act.

- Chuck Grassley: (202) 224-3744
- Orrin G. Hatch: (202) 224-5251
- Jon Kyl: (202) 224-4521
- Jeff Sessions: (202) 224-4124
- Lindsey Graham: (202) 224-5972
- John Cornyn: (202) 224-2934
- Michael S. Lee: (202) 224-5444
- Tom Coburn: (202) 224-5754

Time is of the essence...please make your calls now!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Psychology Today article about marriage portrays husband as chimpanzee

mens_issues · 2 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

I noticed a Psychology Today article titled "Are you with the Right Mate?" which portrays a woman married to a male chimpanzee. Kind of demeaning, huh? Read the article if you can stand it. Excerpt:

'Elliott Katz was stunned to find himself in the middle of a divorce after two kids and 10 years of marriage. The Torontonian, a policy analyst for the Ottawa government, blamed his wife. "She just didn't appreciate all I was doing to make her happy." He fed the babies, and he changed their diapers. He gave them their baths, he read them stories, and put them to bed. Before he left for work in the morning, he made them breakfast. He bought a bigger house and took on the financial burden, working evenings to bring in enough money so his wife could stay home full-time.
...
What he decided was, indeed, there were some things he could have done differently—like not tried as hard to be so noncontrolling that his wife felt he had abandoned decision-making entirely. His wife, he came to understand, felt frustrated, as if she were "a married single parent," making too many of the plans and putting out many of the fires of family life, no matter how many chores he assumed.'

'How to Solve Nagging with Feminism'

anthony · 2 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nagging doesn't come out of nowhere. It's usually the woman doing the nagging and the man feeling nagged. And it happens because of a power imbalance in the relationship: men have more power to blow off what women say to them, in almost every sphere of their lives. I've found this especially exaggerated in relationships where one partner stays at home and the other works full time.

I put a stop to the nagging cycle in my own marriage a few years ago, doing it exactly the way Marcotte describes. My husband is a feminist. He cares deeply about gender bias. But he's still a guy who was raised with male privilege, and it's not always visible to him when gender dynamics are at the root of a problem.

So I sat him down and made it clear that he could not "help" me with childcare or housework. Parenting the children and caring for our home are shared jobs that we're equally responsible for. That means that not only is it his job to change half the diapers and fold half the laundry (roughly speaking), it is also his job to know that these things need to be done and take responsibility for doing them.'

Title IX causes reverse discrimination

anthony · 2 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most people associate Title IX with athletics as the main point as it states that men and women should be treated equally when it comes to athletics. It states that athletic participation should be proportional to the student enrollment. I understand where they were originally coming from and there is nothing wrong with women playing sports. It is great seeing the success and attendance of women's athletics, especially here at Iowa State with our basketball team.

The problem here, though, is with reverse discrimination. In order to be fair, basically the same number of players from each sex need to play. So sports such as basketball, soccer, track and gymnastics are fine because each sex can play them. Then you have the problem with football. Football is a male sport only. So in order to make it fair for the females, we either need to make a football team with the same number of females or cut smaller men's sports programs.

Most colleges, including Iowa State, chose to do such. Wrestling was the first and largest victim to this rule at the beginning. In all, 121 schools have cut their wrestling programs, and despite all of the tradition and success of Iowa State's wrestling program, that number was almost 122. Swimming, golf, tennis, soccer, track and many other smaller men's sports have been cut. There are many talented athletes that play sports like soccer and baseball, but because of Title IX they don't have the opportunity here to play at the collegiate level.

This is discrimination against male athletes. We get all worked up when just a few people get offended on some issue and have to discriminate against the majority just to please the minority. Now, I'm not attacking women's rights here. What I am saying is that if you want to be treated equally, then be treated equally. You don't need special exceptions and benefits, because then you aren't equal.'

Super Bowl Health Hazards: Separating Myth From Fact

anthony · 2 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 1993, in advance of the Super Bowl games held in Pasadena, Calif., several local women's advocacy organizations came forward with anecdotal evidence that domestic violence shelters and emergency rooms saw a surge of battered women on Super Bowl Sunday. Experts appeared on national television, citing research proving a link between the game and violence against women. But a closer look at the initial research revealed that there was no clear association.

A 1993 Washington Post article by Ken Ringle revealed that the initial study's findings were completely different from what was reported. Ringle tracked down the researcher who completed the study, Janet Katz -- a professor of sociology and criminal justice at Old Dominion University -- who immediately refuted her study's interpretation in the media:'

Verizon and the Super Bowl DV Myth: They're At It Again

anthony · 2 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To kick off Super Bowl XLVI weekend, Verizon will participate in the 13th annual Super Bowl Gospel Celebration (SBGC) on Friday, Feb. 3, an NFL sanctioned event, where legendary NFL Pro Bowl players, Super Bowl Champions and MVPs come together on one stage with Grammy Award-winning artists, A-list entertainers and special guests. Salvation and Deliverance Church Choir, the winner of Verizon's 2011 "How Sweet the Sound" national choir competition, will perform during the 2012 SBGC taking place at Butler University in Indianapolis. HopeLine® from Verizon will also make a donation to a local domestic violence agency to help the organization increase awareness of domestic violence and further prevention efforts.'

State Supreme Court decision: Connecticut man can seek payment from child's real dad

Anonymous · 2 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now, five years later, the State Supreme Court has ruled that Fischer (the duped provider) can proceed with a lawsuit demanding that the girl's biological father pay him $190,000 — half the cost of raising her. She's now a young woman of 19.'

What is unfortunate is that the Supreme Court did not in some way require the mother, who knew all along the child was not her husband's, to pay 50% of that amount to Fischer. The mother remains unaccountable for the fraud she foisted upon her husband.

'Ripped Apart'

rlaspari · 3 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

I don't know if this was posted already, but it's rare that the discrimination against dads gets any recognition in the mainstream press. Excerpt:

'The papers informed him his wife was filing for divorce. Worse, she had requested, and been granted, a temporary protection order based on allegations of domestic violence. The order—issued at a hearing that took place without Jim—took effect immediately. It required him to vacate his house and refrain from "any contact whatsoever" with either his wife or his 3-year-old son.

In it, his wife wrote that she felt like she had to "walk on eggshells" around Jim due to his unpredictable temper. He would scream to such an extent that "veins in his neck were bulging" and "spittle from his lips was hitting me in the face." She also described him yelling at their dogs, roughly handling their cat, and driving aggressively and recklessly.

But there's one thing she never claimed—that Jim had ever hit her or their son. Nor did she accuse Jim of threatening either of them.

...

Had he been charged with domestic violence in criminal court, where guilt must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt and the standards of due process are high, this might not have happened. But Jim's fate was decided in a very different venue: family court.

It's a court like no other—a hugely busy and rancorous place where the most personal aspects of people's lives are not only on display, but judged and reshaped in proceedings that often last no longer than 20 minutes. Appointed commissioners, rather than elected judges, make many of the most crucial decisions. And the standard of evidence (known as "preponderance of the evidence") is the lowest allowed by law.

For years, dads'-rights groups have claimed that family court overwhelmingly favors women, particularly when it comes to custody. In former times, when dads generally did far less hands-on child-rearing than moms, those claims tended to be viewed as the ranting of bitter misogynists.'

Police: Woman extorted New York Yankees General Manager Brian Cashman

anthony · 3 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK -- A woman has been charged with stalking and shaking down New York Yankees general manager Brian Cashman.

Louise Neathway was arraigned Thursday night in Manhattan Criminal Court. Prosecutors said she extorted $6,000 from Cashman, tried to squeeze $15,000 more and engaged in "a long-term effort to control and manipulate" him.

According to a statement from an investigator for the district attorney, starting in the fall of last year, Neathway allegedly asked for money for a medical procedure that would cost more than $15,000. She allegedly threatened to "contact the press and informant's family and assert facts that would subject the informant to ridicule and damage his personal relationships and professional reputation."
...
Judge Abraham Clott set bail at $300,000 bond or $200,000 cash, according to Joan Vollero, a spokeswoman for Manhattan district attorney Cyrus R. Vance, Jr.'

VAWA vote report

Matt · 3 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Via email from an activist:

As a result of all our efforts and the attached letter signed by 25, this morning all 8 GOP senators voted 'no' on Sen. Leahy's VAWA reauthorization bill. The aura of VAWA enjoying full bipartisan support has been broken. Now, passage is of VAWA is no longer a foregone conclusion.

Needless to say, NOW is fuming right now.

Although we still have a lot of work to do, CONGRATULATIONS AND THANKS TO ALL.

Click here (.pdf file) for the CWA letter to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Indiana passes human trafficking law in time for Super Bowl

anthony · 3 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Another Super Bowl myth supported by questionable data? Excerpt:

'Indiana lawmakers passed tough human trafficking legislation this week -- just in time to prevent an event where thousands of young girls could get bought and sold for sex.

“The Super Bowl is a huge human trafficking event,” said State Sen. Randy Head, (R-Logansport). “They’re running sophisticated rings -- trading girls from city to city.”

Organized criminals are known to exploit young women and children through gatherings such as the Super Bowl. In fact, the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children estimates 10,000 prostitutes were brought to the 2010 Super Bowl in Miami. In 2011, more than 100 people were arrested for prostitution in Dallas during Super Bowl weekend.
...
“The Super Bowl -- or any large sports game -- always draws traffickers and they bring the product line because there are a lot of men that are used to buying commercial sex around these events,” Smith said. “Unfortunately, it draws minors as a product line. People bring in kids. So what has happened in Indianapolis is absolutely amazing. The leadership standing up saying – we’re going to send a message to traffickers saying we’re not a good place for you to be bringing kids or vulnerable women to sell.”'

IA: Tell the NYT That Circumcision Does Not Prevent HIV

Matt · 4 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

According to an article that appeared on the front page of the Science section of Tuesday's New York Times (1/31/12), "The day of the assembly-line circumcision is drawing closer." The article states that two new devices, named PrePex and the Shang Ring, will greatly increase the ease and speed with which nurses can perform circumcisions in Africa, with the goal of circumcising 20 million men by 2015.

The tone of the article shows a shocking disregard for the pain and risk involved in circumcision, the loss of functional tissue, and the negative impact on sexual function—not to mention the overwhelming proof that circumcision at best lowers the transmission rate of HIV from women to men, but not from men to women, and that the only way to prevent the spread of sexually transmitted HIV is to practice safe sex. Rather, the focus is solely on the use of American tax dollars to pay for mass circumcisions. According to Dr. Jason Reed, an epidemiologist in the global AIDS division of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, "PrePex teams could mean circumcising around 400 men a day, rather than the 60 to 80 a busy team now does. And the surgeon could go do something more important."

Write to the New York Times right now at letters-at-nytimes.comand tell them that the male foreskin is indeed "important," and that circumcision does NOT prevent HIV!

SAVE: Violence Against Women Act - Senate Judiciary vote

Matt · 4 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Since its enactment in 1994, the Violence Against Women Act has been criticized by people as serving to expand the reach and size of government, to weaken the family, and to roll-back the Constitution. And because of its innocent-sounding name, few lawmakers have been willing to take on the VAWA juggernaut.

Late last week the Senate Judiciary Committee announced it was going to hold a mark-up of the VAWA reauthorization bill, S. 1925. And we knew GOP Sen. Chuck Grassley was unhappy with Sen. Patrick Leahy's bill, for a variety of reasons.

So groups mounted telephone campaigns, did lobbying, and Concerned Women for America put together a group letter that was signed by 25 groups and individuals. This letter was circulated to GOP senators just minutes before yesterday's mark-up.

And when the dust had settled, all 8 GOP senators voted 'No' on Sen. Leahy's bill, instead preferring Sen. Grassley's substitute amendment. All 10 Democratic senators voted 'Aye,' so Leahy's bill carried through the committee. In a word, yesterday's party line vote was unprecedented.

Now the VAWA bill goes to the full Senate, which may take up the bill as early as next week.

If you'd like to write an article about this historic vote, you may find the VAWA: Mandate for Change report helpful: http://www.saveservices.org/partner-violence-reduction-act/mandate-for-change/

UK: Victory for divorced dads is a victory for children

anthony · 5 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers matter, and the law now recognises this. The government is rewriting the law so that children will have a legal right to see their father, even when their parents have split up. Fathers' rights campaigners will hail this as a victory for fathers – but in fact, it's a victory for children.

One in three children grow up without a father. In some cases, this is because the father bolted, or is behind bars. But in many cases it is because mother banned him after an acrimonious divorce. This could be because he was a child abuser, or a wife-batterer – or because his drinking makes him dangerous. But often it is down to mother's anger. I pray that if ever my husband and I were to break up I would prove saintly and wise, and let him see the children. I hope that, in the midst of my fury and hatred, I would be able to put the children's interests above mine. But I can't swear that I'd be any different from the hundreds of thousands of women who each year go to the family court to wrangle with their former spouse over his access to the kids. (Some don't even do that: they accept in principle his right to see the children, but in practice place obstacles to any visit.)'

SAVE Press Release: Anti-Violence Bill Loses Focus on Victims, Many Claim

Matt · 7 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Teri Stoddard
Email: tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

Telephone: 301-801-0608
Anti-Violence Bill Loses Focus on Victims, Many Claim

WASHINGTON, Feb. 6 -- A growing number of groups, including Stop Abusive and Violent Environments, are criticizing the proposed reauthorization bill of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) for losing sight of the law's original intended purpose: to help victims of domestic violence. These concerns were highlighted during the recent February 2 meeting of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Concerned Women for America, the largest women's organization in the country, noted in a February 1 group letter that the Leahy-Crapo bill will "actually squander the resources for victims of actual violence by failing to properly prioritize and assess victims."

Victim-advocacy group Survivors in Action decries what it calls the "DV run-around" in which victims are shunted from hotlines to shelters to social service agencies, never receiving the services they need.

Sen. Charles Grassley, ranking member of the Senate Judiciary Committee, deplored the fact that VAWA bill S. 1925 "creates so many new programs for underserved populations that it risks losing the focus on helping victims." (1)

Even Judiciary Committee chairman Patrick Leahy acknowledged criticism that the VAWA bill is "trying to protect too many victims." Following debate, Sen. Leahy's proposed bill was approved by a slim 10-8 margin and was forwarded to the full Senate for consideration.

Vague and over-broad definitions of abuse found in the current law undermine Constitutional protections for the accused, as well: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/SAVE-Assault-Civil-Rights.pdf

"If we want to stop the cycle of violence and help real victims, the Violence Against Women Act must rein in sweeping definitions, improve accountability, and recognize that women are as likely as men to be physically abusive with their partners," explains SAVE spokesman Philip W. Cook.

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is proposing consideration of the Partner Violence Reduction Act (2), which accords priority to persons with evidence of physical violence.

Congressman Ted Poe, co-chair of the Victim's Rights Caucus, has suggested changing the name of VAWA to the Domestic Violence Act, in order to recognize that partner abuse affects members of both sexes (3).

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is a victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to partner abuse: www.saveservices.org

---

(1) http://www.saveservices.org/2012/02/statement-by-sen-chuck-grassley-about-vawa/

(2) www.saveservices.org/pvra

(3) http://www.washingtontimes.com/blog/watercooler/2011/jul/21/picket-vawa-supporter-capitol-hill-looks-have-law-/

'Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand focuses on advancement of women'

Matt · 7 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Last time I checked, a good half of any given US senator's constituency is male. So why focus so much on just one gender when the other gender has issues with 'getting ahead' as well (boys and education, anti-male discrimination, etc.)?

Imagine a senator who stated quite publicly that his or her focus would be on helping whites get ahead, or green-eyed people get ahead, or people under 5' 5" tall get ahead, etc., all on the dime of the rest of that person's constituency?

Real political leaders are representative of ALL their constituents, not focusing on just one subgroup. I think it's time Sen. Gillibrand heard that. So please contact her and politely point this out, especially you folks in the State of New York here in the US. This idea that it is acceptable for pols to pursue the advancement of one group over others at the expense of the rest of their constituents must end, starting with the pursuit of women's interests over men's.

Korean human rights commission disapproves women-only library

Matt · 7 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The National Human Rights Commission has issued its opinion that operating a municipal library for women only, which men are not allowed to use, constitutes gender discrimination and must be eliminated.

On the 7th the NHRC issued a judgment that the operation by a civic group of a women-only public library violates men's rights to equality and constitutes discrimination, and advised the library to cease excluding men.
...
The library retorted that because its patrons constitute 15% of all library patrons in the city and the volume of use it sees during its long hours makes it more difficult to run than other libraries in the city, so it believes it is appropriate to place more restrictions on men than women.'

Britain offers more rights for separated fathers

Matt · 7 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LONDON — Fathers separated from their families will get increased rights to see their children under reforms being unveiled in Britain next week, the government said on Friday.

But it signalled there would be no change in the law to guarantee equal access, as sought by campaigners such as Fathers 4 Justice, who have scaled Buckingham Palace among other stunts to highlight the system's unfairness.

New rules for court cases will "make it much clearer that it is vital for children to have an ongoing relationship with both parents after separation or divorce", except where they pose a risk, the Department for Education said.

The measures will be outlined on Monday as part of the government's response to a review of the family justice system published last year.'

Science subtext: Gender parity

anthony · 7 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At the White House science fair this morning, President Obama is expected to announce a new education initiative to invest $100 million into training 100,000 new teachers. Specifically, the president is trying to fend off the problem of a shortage of teachers in science, technology, engineering and math — known as STEM — in order to keep the United States competitive in the global marketplace.

While he's not expected to talk about the dearth of women in the STEM fields, you can be sure that's part of the larger White House agenda.

In 2007 the National Academies released Beyond Bias and Barriers: Fulfilling the Potential of Women in Academic Science and Engineering — the first step in an effort by the feminist lobby, lawmakers in Congress and several federal agencies to solve the "crisis" of women in science.

Last year the White House released Women in America, a report about the status of women in America today, which addressed the fact that "female students are less well-represented than men in science and technology-related fields, which typically lead to higher paying occupations."'

Journal "Science": 'Affirmative Action Policies Promote Women and Do Not Harm Efficiency in the Laboratory'

anthony · 7 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gender differences in choosing to enter competitions are one source of unequal labor market outcomes concerning wages and promotions. Given that studying the effects of policy interventions to support women is difficult with field data because of measurement problems and potential lack of control, we evaluated, in a set of controlled laboratory experiments, four interventions: quotas, where one of two winners of a competition must be female; two variants of preferential treatment, where a fixed increment is added to women's performance; and repetition of the competition, where a second competition takes place if no woman is among the winners. Compared with no intervention, all interventions encourage women to enter competitions more often, and performance is at least equally good, both during and after the competition.'

Seton Academy for Girls will open enrollment to boys next year

anthony · 7 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FALL RIVER — For the past 13 years, the Seton Academy for Girls has held strong as the only school in Fall River where parents can find an all-girls education for their young daughters. That legacy is going to change.

School leaders informed parents Friday that Seton Academy will admit boys for the 2012-2013 academic year.
...
“We loved that it was an all-girl school; however, realistically we had to decide if it was more important to stick to our original concept, or more important to give all students a full education,” Sturchio said.
...
Sturchio said the school surveyed families about its plans before making a final decision. Some families were not in favor of the change said they would support it if declining enrollment jeopardized the future of the school. Only one parent surveyed plans to pull a student from Seton as a result of the decision, Sturchio said.'

Mirkarimi prosecutor wants expert in battered women's syndrome to testify

anthony · 7 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In many criminal prosecutions, the refusal of a victim to testify against a suspect might derail the case. Not so with domestic violence cases, such as that involving Sheriff Ross Mirkarimi.

Accused of misdemeanor domestic violence battery against his wife Eliana Lopez, Mirkarimi is scheduled to stand trial Feb. 24. Both husband and wife have publicly denied any abuse.

A neighbor reported the New Year's Eve incident to police, saying a tearful Lopez complained of violence and showed her a bruised arm. Lopez subsequently said the incident was "completely taken out of context" and that the criminal investigation was motivated by her husband's political enemies.
Lopez could refuse to testify at Mirkarimi's trial.

Prosecutor Elizabeth Aguilar Tarchi argued last week that testimony from a domestic violence specialist about battering and its effects was needed to help explain a behavior pattern that might not make sense to the average person.
...
"Recanting is very, very common and most of the time, when an expert is called by the prosecution, that's the reason why," Schrock said.'

Maine Governor LePage set to unveil domestic violence proposal

anthony · 7 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

AUGUSTA — Gov. Paul LePage on Friday held an event designed to bring awareness to domestic violence.

The gathering in the State House Hall of Flags was a public service event. However, the governor also foreshadowed some upcoming initiatives he says will strengthen the state's domestic violence laws.

The details are expected to be released later this month in a package of bills sponsored by Republicans and Democrats.

...

The governor noted that the majority of abusers were men; therefore, he said, Maine's laws should be focused accordingly.

"We need to shift domestic violence from a women's problem to a men's problem," he said. "We need to speak up, stand up and man up against domestic violence."'

Follow-up from anthony: CDC Survey Shatters Gender Myths: Reports 1 in 4 Men are Victims of Domestic Violence

UK: Teacher faked 'slasher' stalking attack

anthony · 7 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It triggered a police manhunt which resulted in an innocent man being arrested.

Frankcom, 41, mutilated her own hands with a kitchen knife and slapped herself in the face - then wrongly alleged her injuries were caused by a sinister assailant who attacked her three times in 12 weeks at her music shop and farmhouse home.

She also sent herself poison pen text messages and abusive Christmas cards saying: "It's your last bitch" and "You're dead bitch" and helped officers compile e-fit of the fictitious assailant.

Frankcom's husband Martin, also a musician, was so worried about the terror campaign he went on the internet and bought his wife a stab proof vest and a stun gun for protection.

Police staged a major operation to track down the stalker gave Frankcom police protection when she left work, referred their inquiries onto murder squad detectives and scrambled the force helicopter to search for suspects.

They eventually arrested an innocent man, held him for 18 hours and forced him to take part in an ID parade before releasing him without charge.'

Office of the Vice President: "1 is 2 Many"

Minuteman · 8 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Linked to from an Office of Adolescent Health mailing-list email. Excerpt:

'Despite the significant progress made in reducing violence against women, there is still a long way to go. Young women still face the highest rates of dating violence and sexual assault. In the last year, one in 10 teens have reported being physically hurt on purpose by a boyfriend or girlfriend. One in five young women have been sexually assaulted while they're in college.

In response to these alarming statistics, Vice President Biden is focusing his longstanding commitment to reducing violence against women specifically on teens and young women ages 16-24. By targeting the importance of changing attitudes that lead to violence and educating the public on the realities of abuse, the Vice President is leading the way in an effort to stop violence against women before it begins.'

From the mailing-list email:

'Of all females who have ever been raped, physically abused, or stalked by an intimate partner, almost 70 percent first had those experiences before age 25. And, of all rape victims, about 40 percent reported that they were first raped before age 18. The prevalence of dating violence varies across the country; find out more about this problem in your state with OAH's searchable map.

UK: 'We need gender studies to battle inequality across the board'

anthony · 8 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a period where women are haemorrhaging from the workforce, and when state welfare, elder care and childcare provisions are under attack, the wider social purpose of schooling – and the importance of the feminist lens in public policy and decision-making – are hoving into view.

As a group, women rely more upon the state to mitigate the disproportionate burden of care placed upon them, yet the government appears to be turning back the clock on women's equality, setting in motion a resurgence of feminist protest.

...

We have serious work to do to shift the norms. Teaching about gender is increasingly looked to as a way to make progress in a global culture that continues to uphold men and boys' entitlement to control women and girls.

...

The government's target is that 50% of new appointments to public boards should be held by women by 2015. While getting more female representation at senior levels of the public sector is a laudable goal, as is the goal of 25% female representation on corporate boards by 2015, I would also add to our list of demands that women and gender studies must be included in the national curriculum by that date.'

Judge Orders Florida Man To Take His Wife on a Date

anthony · 8 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Just in time for Valentine's Day, a Florida judge ruled on Tuesday that a man involved in a scuffle with his wife treat her to an evening at a local bowling alley and a romantic meal at Red Lobster.

Judge John Hurley ordered that Joseph Bray, 47 and his wife Sonja, 39, also visit a marriage counselor.

Hurley handed down this ruling instead of setting bond or slapping Bray with a prison sentence after he deemed domestic violence charges leveled by Bray's wife to be "very, very minor."

According to Bray's arrest affidavit, Bray and his wife got embroiled in a spat after he failed to wish her a happy birthday. Bray's wife claims that her husband shoved her against a sofa and grabbed her neck.

The judge, citing Bray's otherwise clean record and the incident's apparent lack of serious violence, did not consider Bray's behavior a major offense. However, Bray must follow the stipulations of Hurley's ruling very closely if he wants to avoid potential jail time.'

Why Women-Only Transit Options Have Caught On

anthony · 8 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This year marks the 100th anniversary of Japan's first women-only trains. The idea, back in 1912, was to spare young women the indignity of being ogled by admiring men.

Over the course of the century Japan's women-only trains were discontinued and resurrected several times until they were at last fully restored in late 2000. At that time, the term sekuhara – 'sexual harassment' – had become a bit of buzzword in the Japanese media, as stories of just how often most women were subjected to public groping began to receive more attention.
...
Japan is not the only country to offer women-only transportation. Cities in Indonesia, India, Brazil, and Russia operate similar programs, while women-only buses have gained popularity in cities in Guatemala, Mexico, and most recently, Pakistan.
...
Some Japanese men don't believe that women-only trains solve the groping problem. A few have even banded together to oppose the trains, claiming they aren't effective and smack of gender discrimination (against men) to boot.

"We think women-only cars came about more for political reasons than protecting women from gropers," says Hiroshi Fukuyama, a 41-year-old office worker in Tokyo who heads an opposition group to women-only trains that boasts about 300 members. What these cars really accomplish, he says, is helping politicians curry favor with voters and the train companies sell ads targeting women.

In fact, some of the women I spoke to confessed that their main reason for riding them was comfort – they tend to be less crowded and less smelly.'

Securing Equal Pay? There (Should Be) an App for That!

anthony · 8 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

ArticlE here. Excerpt:

'Last week, the Obama Administration launched the Equal Pay App Challenge. We're inviting software developers to help women ensure that they're being paid fairly -- which in turn will help restore an economy where everyone gets a fair shot, everyone does their fair share, and everyone plays by the same rules.

Right now, if you're a woman in the workforce, it can be surprisingly difficult to answer basic questions about equal pay: what's the typical salary for someone in your position? Should you be asking for more at the negotiating table? What are your fundamental legal rights?

When the Equal Pay App Challenge is over, you'll have information that helps you answer these questions, available right on your smartphone or computer. We believe that the same types of innovations that help you find movie times or get a great deal at a restaurant can help you protect your rights in the workforce.'

Australia: Pay decision a win for women

anthony · 8 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fair Work Australia's decision on equal pay for community sector workers is a step forward for all Australian women, the Australian Services Union says.

Some 150,000 community sector workers, mostly women, have been awarded a pay rise by the industrial umpire in a landmark test case.

"We said we wanted to put a dent on the 18 per cent gender pay gap between men and women in Australia," ASU NSW and ACT branch secretary Sally McManus told reporters in Sydney today.'

Violence Against Women Act Reauthorization Moves Ahead... Without Cornyn

anthony · 8 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some of you may remember the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) as a major Biden initiative from before he was cool (and by cool I mean Vice President). The National Organization for Women called it "the greatest breakthrough in civil rights for women in nearly two decades." Phyllis Schlafley called it proof "that the feminists control the Democratic Party." So you can guess where John Cornyn stands.
Last week, VAWA came up in the Senate Judiciary Committee for reauthorization. And while the Democrats on the committee voted it to the floor unanimously, Cornyn joined his Republican brethren in doing just the opposite. Fortunately, despite their best efforts, it's still moving on to a full floor vote.

Cornyn and the other Republicans on the committee tried to play down their opposition by pointing out that they supported an alternative of the bill. This "more fiscally responsible" alternative included things like shutting down the Office of Violence Against Women. And the version that did pass - they one they thought was too expensive - is already $135 million cheaper than the 2005 version. As with many other issues, this is the first time it's gotten really partisan. VAWA was passed in 1994 and has been reauthorized twice with bipartisan support.'

February PACHA Meeting to Focus on Women and Girls

Minuteman · 9 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'By Christopher Bates, M.P.A., Executive Director, Presidential Advisory Council on HIV/AIDS, and Senior Advisor to the Deputy Assistant Secretary for Health, Infectious Diseases, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services

The Presidential Advisory Council on HIV/AIDS (PACHA) will convene February 28 and 29 in Washington, DC. Among the many items on the agenda for the 45th meeting of the PACHA, two are of particular note:

* A conversation with Secretary of Health and Human Services Kathleen Sebelius on a variety of issues, including the implementation of the National HIV/AIDS Strategy across HHS.
* PACHA will devote much of the first day of this meeting to an examination of the state of HIV/AIDS among women and girls in the U.S. and the nation's response. A number of speakers have been invited to address PACHA on issues including HIV/AIDS research, prevention, and access to care and treatment.'

SAVE E-lert: Tell your Senators to Support Grassley's Amendment, not Leahy's VAWA

Matt · 9 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Last Thursday the Senate Judiciary Committee voted Sen. Leahy's version of the Violence Against Women Act out of committee with ten votes for and eight against. This was after Sen. Charles Grassley unsuccessfully proposed an amendment that would have added accountability and other improvements.

Your calls are the reason eight senators voted against VAWA last week. High fives all around!!!!!

While the DV industry is drumming up support for the passage of Leahy's VAWA, we can still take steps to stop their mismanagement of funds, insure the distribution of accurate information, end acts of discrimination, and more.

Sen. Grassley's amendment incorporates many of the provisions of SAVE's Partner Violence Reduction Act: http://www.judiciary.senate.gov/legislation/upload/EAS12031-Grassley-Sub.pdf

Today we'd like you to call your own senators and ask them to support Sen. Grassley's amendment instead of Sen. Leahy's VAWA. Locate your senators' phone numbers here

Please, call your senators right now!

We are on a roll! The ride is fabulous, isn't it?

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Dannon uses DV to 'appeal' to viewers during Super Bowl 2012

Matt · 9 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

In case you missed it, the ad can be seen on YouTube here.

Ways to contact Dannon are here. Feel free to let them know what you think of their sense of "humor" as well as whether or not you are inclined to buy their products now that you see how little respect they have for men's rights to be un-assaulted by wives and sweethearts, even if such men have a predilection for teasing ways to spoon-feed their female companions. Ask them if we would ever see the same thing happen in their ad but with the sexes were reversed? And if so, OK, then when can we expect to see that air and will it air with as great an audience as the Super Bowl had?

Equal justice update: Female teen slasher-strangler gets life

Matt · 9 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP) — A Missouri teenager who had described the slaying of a young neighbor girl as an "ahmazing" thrill made an emotional apology Wednesday to the girl's family and was sentenced to a potential lifetime in prison.

Moments before her sentence was imposed, 18-year-old Alyssa Bustamante rose from her chair — with shackles linking her ankles and holding her hands to her waist — and turned to face the family of 9-year-old Elizabeth Olten, whom she confessed to killing in October 2009.
...
Cole County Circuit Judge Pat Joyce then sentenced Bustamante to the maximum possible sentence for second-degree murder — life in prison with the possibility of parole. She ordered the teenager to serve a consecutive 30-year term for armed criminal action, a charge resulting from her use of a knife to slit the throat and stab Elizabeth after she had strangled her into unconsciousness.'

Oklahoma Democrat Adds ‘Every Sperm Is Sacred’ Amendment To Personhood Bill

anthony · 9 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'State Senator Constance Johnson of Oklahoma City has served Oklahoma’s 48th Senate District since 2005, but it was yesterday’s introduction of Senate Bill 1433 that really pushed her over the edge. The bill sought to define human life as beginning at the moment of conception, before it’s even implanted in the womb, and offers full legal protection to those tiny multicelled lumps. In the words of the bill, “the unborn child at every stage of development (has) all the rights, privileges, and immunities available to other persons, citizens, and residents of this state.”

Johnson submitted an amendment of her own to the bill, which would have added the language,

However, any action in which a man ejaculates or otherwise deposits semen anywhere but in a woman’s vagina shall be interpreted and construed as an action against an unborn child.'

System of injustice: Father says Utah law allowed 'illegal' adoption

anthony · 9 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Almost five years ago, he and his longtime girlfriend, Carie Terry, were living in Denver when they found out they were expecting a baby. He says they had talked about getting married.

"It was probably the happiest day of my life, finding out I would be a dad," he said.

Manzanares says at that point they were not even considering adoption.

He says that changed a few weeks later.

"She came back from her church service and stated to me that she would have to adopt this child to a Mormon family," Manzanares said.

He says she wanted the child raised in a two-parent, Mormon home.

The conversation about adoption ended the relationship and began Manzanares's legal fight to be a father.

"I stated from that day on that there was no way I'll allow my daughter to be adopted. I will fight for her no matter what," he said.

He filed a paternity action in Colorado District Court before his daughter's birth. Colorado established him as the father.'

UK: Giving divorced dads more rights could be 'dangerous', Ken Clarke says

anthony · 9 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Under plans unveiled by the Government on Monday, the law would be changed to stress the importance of children having contact with both parents.

Similar changes in Australia led to delays in resolving custody disputes, Mr Clarke cautioned, adding that there were "dangers" associated with doing so.

The move, confirming a report in Friday's The Daily Telegraph, will mean that children are for the first time to be given the legal right to have a proper relationship with both their parents after a divorce. stops short of the guarantee of equal access demanded by some fathers' rights groups.

But it contradicts one of the main findings of the family justice review by former Whitehall mandarin David Norgrove.

...

According to the Office for National Statistics, one in three children, equivalent to 3.8million, lives without their father. Ministers are particularly concerned about boys growing up without a strong male influence. Eight per cent of single parents in Britain are fathers.'

Trivializing abortion (while taking a swipe at men)

anthony · 9 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Janet Howell, a Democratic state senator in Virginia, does not want females who are thinking of an abortion to look at an ultrasound first. We know why this legislation was proposed and why she opposes it: The ultrasound is the biggest deterrent to abortion. A woman or girl not really happy with the choice of abortion surely is going to think twice again and likely walk out.

Rather than debate the actual question — should government participate in a medical decision no matter how odious it is? — Missus Howell decided to be clever and mock men by offering an amendment to require a rectal exam for men before they receive a prescription for Viagra.

...

Prescribing a medication is not a medical procedure. And I am sure that any responsible doctor would not prescribe such medication without first examining the patient, doing a family history and the like.

Her proposal showed the unserious and hateful side of feminism. To trot out the trite, she “came of age” in the 1960s (Oberlin 1966) and she does not seem to have gotten over the fact that men and women are not the same. Yes, they have equal rights — voting, jury duty, jobs — but men and women are not the same. Women have babies. Men don’t. In the development of the “right” to abortion on demand, society has decided men have no say in an abortion, and yet if a woman keeps a baby the man is on the hook for child support payments until the kid is 18.'

Maine Governor's PSA excludes women as DV perps or men as victims

Matt · 10 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From a reader via email:

Maine's Governor has a new PSA* in his campaign for insane laws against men. This was unveiled this week with his repeated statements to the press (and by the press) that men are mostly responsible for DV and it is women and children who are the victims. Contact form is here.

---
*Use Internet Explorer to view. Firefox didn't work, at least not for me.

'Possessed' mother found with blood-covered baby after 'slitting her throat' in same woods where ex-boyfriend was found dead

anthony · 10 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother allegedly slashed her nine-month-old baby's throat just months after telling a pastor she could be possessed and might hurt the girl.

Bradie Simpson, 39, of Camdenton, Missouri, was found in woods 225ft from her home as she held the baby covered in blood with a neck wound.

It comes months after the body of her ex-boyfriend, the baby's father, was found in the same woods last September, reported ABC affiliate KSPR.'

Missing gender difference's relevance

anthony · 10 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is a brand of rhetoric within feminism that I find incredibly troubling. It is one that embraces dichotomy, reinforces old myths about gender identity and runs counter to common goals of feminist movements. An example of this sort of rhetoric is Eve Ensler's 'girl cell' monologue presented at tedtalks, India in November 2009. Ensler describes the 'girl cell,' which amounts to an embodiment of feminine stereotypes. She argues that everyone has a girl cell within them and that it is integral to the survival of humankind that we foster and express our girl cells. Ensler's view-- while certainly dramatic and biologically perplexing-- is not an isolated or fringe one within feminism. Well-meaning feminists I've spoken to, both on campus and through my regular internet haunts, feel particularly invested in incorporating 'feminist principles' into current institutions or doing away with those institutions altogether to invent new ones based on these principles. Like Ensler's girl cell, feminist principles are ideas, attributes and traits that have been historically prescribed to those of us born with ovaries. Institutions, organizations and any other collection of humans or their endeavours that do not embody these traits are seen as sexist, perpetuating patriarchy or misogynistic.'

New York hotel maids to be given 'panic buttons'

Matt · 10 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Large New York hotels plan to equip their housekeepers and staff with portable alarms so they get help quickly in case of trouble, officials said Wednesday.

Any staff member who must enter guests rooms, such as maids, waiters and mini-bar attendants, will be given the "panic buttons" within the next year, said Lisa Linden, spokeswoman for the Hotel Association of New York.

She declined to link the electronic alarms to the case of French politician Dominique Strauss-Kahn, the former International Monetary Fund chief who was accused of sexually assaulting maid, Nafissatou Diallo, at the Sofitel in New York in May. The charges against him were eventually dropped.

"It has been under discussion for some time," Linden said.'

NY City must not ban boys' sports in new schools

anthony · 10 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2010, the New York City Department of Education was slapped with a lawsuit for its failure to comply with Title IX regulations and provide equal athletic opportunities for girls and boys in New York City high schools. In an attempt to correct this imbalance, the Department of Education has put an embargo on the creation of new boys' teams altogether — effectively discriminating against boys in new schools and continuing to disparage girls in existing schools.

In New York City there is nearly an 8 percent difference between the number of girls who are enrolled in the district and the number of female student-athletes. If this gap were closed, it would allow an additional 17,000 girls to participate in a sport. In order to close it, the DOE is relying on new schools to establish a better balance. By granting solely girls' teams in new schools, and denying opportunities for boys, the administration hopes the imbalance will work itself out over time.'

Pentagon to Lift Some Restrictions on Women in Combat

Matt · 10 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Pentagon on Thursday will propose rule changes that will allow more women to formally serve in jobs closer to the front lines.

Defense officials say as many as 14,000 positions could be opened up, though the restrictions on women serving in infantry combat units will remain in place.

The rule change reflects the ongoing reality that in a decade of war in Iraq and Afghanistan, women were already dying in combat with the blurring of the traditional definition of front lines. Nearly 300,000 women have served in the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan and 144 of them have died in those conflicts.

The rule change is included in a report required by Congress as part of last year's Defense Authorization Bill that has been overdue for months. The new rules likely will not go into effect until the summer if Congress raises no objections to the change.'

UK: City in backlash over PM's plan to put more women on boards as Cameron refuses to rule out 'golden skirt' quotas

anthony · 10 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'David Cameron faced a business backlash last night after warning that companies could be forced to appoint more women to their boards.

The Prime Minister refused to rule out the introduction of so-called ‘golden skirt’ quotas if business leaders fail to meet government demands for more females in top jobs.

In his strongest threat yet to business leaders, Mr Cameron said the promotion of women needed to be ‘accelerated’. The Government has already set voluntary quotas for business leaders to more than double the number of women in boardrooms by 2015.'

A more peaceful world if women in charge?

anthony · 10 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Would the world be more peaceful if women were in charge? A challenging new book by the Harvard University psychologist Steven Pinker says that the answer is “yes.”

In The Better Angels of Our Nature, Pinker presents data showing that human violence, while still very much with us today, has been gradually declining. Moreover, he says, “over the long sweep of history, women have been and will be a pacifying force. Traditional war is a man’s game: tribal women never band together to raid neighboring villages.” As mothers, women have evolutionary incentives to maintain peaceful conditions in which to nurture their offspring and ensure that their genes survive into the next generation.

Skeptics immediately reply that women have not made war simply because they have rarely been in power. If they were empowered as leaders, the conditions of an anarchic world would force them to make the same bellicose decisions that men do. Margaret Thatcher, Golda Meir, and Indira Gandhi were powerful women; all of them led their countries to war.'

Man drowns attempting to rescue already-rescued girlfriend

Matt · 10 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Read this one carefully. This is pretty damned suspicious. Excerpt:

'Authorities say the Tennessee River's current was swift when 25-year-old Christopher Heaton jumped in the water to rescue his girlfriend.

Heaton, of Jasper, Tenn., had driven to Bridgeport, Ala., to meet his girlfriend Tuesday evening. He arrived at their meeting place near a boat ramp to see her car sinking as it was swept down the river, said Jackson County Chief Deputy Rocky Harnen. Witnesses told police Heaton immediately dived into the water.

But the woman -- whom police haven't named -- escaped from the car and was helped from the water by fisherman at a ramp only 20 yards away, Harnen said.
...

Family members said in an obituary notice that Heaton believed a small child was trapped in the car. Investigators found a child's car seat in the vehicle when it was pulled from the river.

Harnen said investigators don't know why the woman drove her truck to the edge of the boat ramp.

He said the woman told police she saw Heaton jump into the river but couldn't tell if he saw her in the water.'

Kelly accuser’s memory of ‘rape’ but not of sex killed her case: sources citizend · 10 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original Story here. That's right, liars- as long as you are consistent, the hands of justice are tied. Nevermind the ruined lives. Excerpt:

'She insisted she was raped - she just couldn't remember actually having sex.

Maria Di Toro, the woman who accused Greg Kelly of raping her in a Financial District law office, admitted she had no memory of the alleged attack — making it impossible for investigators to pursue a case against the Fox 5 TV anchor, sources said yesterday.

“Not remembering is not tantamount to being raped,” one source said a day after prosecutors announced they’re dropping their probe of Police Commissioner Ray Kelly’s youngest son.

Di Toro, 29, told investigators that she got so drunk the night she left her boyfriend at home to go out with the popular TV newsman that she blacked out on everything that happened after they left the bar to adjourn to the nearby firm where she works as a paralegal.'

Mom Who Threw Tot in NY River Can Go Home to India

anthony · 10 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A mother who tossed her toddler into the Hudson River after suddenly spiraling into psychosis can return to her native India and her children, a judge said Friday after she reached a rare form of agreement with prosecutors to resolve her attempted-murder case.

Devi Silvia will continue treatment and medication in India, with New York authorities monitoring her progress during five years of probation.

Her lawyers called it a just result for a woman whose conduct was driven by a mental illness that emerged only in the days before she threw her daughter into the chilly river off Manhattan's Upper West Side, then leaped in herself, in May 2010.'

Geometry, Not Gender: Study Shows Why Women, and Some Men, Are at Greater Risk for ACL Injuries

Minuteman · 11 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Much orthopaedic research has been devoted to determining why women are far more susceptible to knee ligament injuries than men. According to a new study, the answer may lie in geometry – the length and shape of a patient's knee bone – more than gender.

Research recently published in the Journal of Bone and Joint Surgery (JBJS), compared magnetic resonance imaging (MRI) scans of male and female athletes with non-contact anterior cruciate ligament (ACL) injuries with those of athletes who participated in similar, at-risk sports but without a history of ligament injury.
...
The study found that most of the women (those who had ACL injuries and those who did not) and only the ACL-injured men shared a common geometry on the outside of their knee joint: The upper part of their shin bone at the joint (tibial plateau) was much shorter and more rounded. This may help to explain why women have an ACL injury rate that is two-to-five times greater than that of men.
...
The findings also may explain why women have a higher rate of ACL injuries, and yet the rate of re-injury is the same among men and women.'

Why Almost Everyone Needs a Prenup

Matt · 11 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Asking for a prenup--a legal agreement that specifies how couples will divide assets if they divorce--doesn't exactly sound like a romantic gesture. After all, couples marry for love, not money, so who needs to work out the nitty-gritty financial details of a break-up that the couple hopes will never happen?
...
Everyone does, insists Silvana Raso, matrimonial attorney with the Englewood Cliffs, N.J.-based law firm Schepisi & McLaughlin. "There's not a single person who couldn't benefit from a prenup, even if you're going into marriage with little assets," says Raso. "You might accumulate assets during the marriage, and even a young couple embarking on their own careers wants to make sure that what they acquire during marriage isn't just left up to a judge to divide," she adds.
...

Many couples today enter marriage on relatively equal terms, with both spouses working and building careers, says Raso. Then, if they have children, one spouse often scales back workforce ambitions to spend more time at home. "They put their career on the back burner, and that limits their earning power substantially," she says.

As a result, she always asks couples what they think about alimony in the event of a divorce. "People are often surprised to hear their partner's reaction. If their spouse doesn't want to pay alimony, that might convince you to keep working," she says.
...
Some states, including Texas and California, are known as community property states, which means couples' assets are usually divided in half regardless of circumstances. That means couples who wouldn't want an equal division need a prenup to prevent it.

Raso says prenups are like life insurance policies--no one likes thinking about either worst-case scenario, but having plans in place can ease the stress of a painful life event. Says Raso, "It's not romantic, but it's realistic."'

Poor Turnout For Men's Group Symposium

anthony · 11 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BOZEMAN, Mont. -- An MSU men's group says they're disappointed but not surprised by a lack of attendance at their "Men's Issue's" event, Thursday night.

The MSU chapter of the National Coalition for Men organized a symposium to raise awareness of problems in men's lives.

The group geared the event towards fraternity students at the college and invited speakers to talk about things like men's rights when it comes to sexual misconduct investigations on-campus.

No one showed up to the event but organizers say the lack of attendence is not due to a lack of interest.

"One of the fraternity boys, I was working out at the gym, and he walked up to me, 'Hey, hey, you're the guy that did the presentation on the men's group, right?' He didn't want anyone to hear that he was talking about this in public. He was very interested in it, but didn't want anyone to know that he was interested in men's rights, men's issues. So, that kind of shows why no one turned out," says President of the MSU chapter of the National Coalition for Men Chris Thompson.
...
"Just this strong, strong, social condemnation of men standing up for themselves. They're supposed to stand up for other people but not for themselves," says Straughan.'

Complaints to DOJ re discrimination against battered men

Matt · 12 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.:

If you have specific instances of discrimination against male DV victims by any government-funded DV program anywhere in the U.S., I encourage you to send all evidence you have to the following federal agencies as a complaint, and state that this violates United States Code, Title 42, Section 3789d(c)(1)*. Give them as much evidence as you can. They are supposed to investigate it. I made the complaint about a year ago and after many months they wrote back saying "insufficient evidence" and that they would need more info such as dates and times of the discrimination, names of the programs and contact info, names and contact info of witnesses, documents or records, and a detailed chronological narrative. I'm going to send another complaint with more info, but I encourage others to do the same. The more the better.

You can send the complaints by email, mail, or both. Send them to:

Office of Civil Rights
Office of Justice Programs
U.S. Department of Justice
810 7th Street, NW
Washington, DV 20531

Office of the Inspector General inspector.general-at-usdoj.gov oig.hotline-at-usdoj.gov

---
*"(1) No person in any State shall on the ground of race, color, religion, national origin, or sex be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under or denied employment in connection with any programs or activity funded in whole or in part with funds made available under this chapter."

NY Times Anti-Violence Editorial Shortchanges Victims, SAVE Says

anthony · 13 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To address these shortcomings, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments has developed the Partner Violence Reduction Act, which amends and strengthens the current Violence Against Women Act (6).

"The New York Times editorial calls on Republican lawmakers to 'explain to voters why they refuse to get behind the federal fight against domestic violence and sexual assaults.' But victims of domestic violence are demanding that Times editorialists go beyond partisan posturing, and ask why so many VAWA programs aren't meeting basic expectations of accountability and effectiveness," according to SAVE spokesman Philip W. Cook.'

CDC Study hides DV against men

Anonymous · 13 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Last month the CDC released its National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey. The media coverage stressed the harm to women from intimate partner violence. A lot of the controversy surrounds its expanded definition of rape to include sex while high or drunk. But in the meantime, nobody noticed the data it hid about male victims of physical violence.

I've put up an article on http://batteredmen.com/NISVS.htm to refute that. My summary highlights the data they hid:

According to a 2010 national survey by the Centers for Disease Control and Department of Justice, in the last 12 months more men than women were victims of intimate partner physical violence and over 40% of severe physical violence was directed at men. Men were also more often the victim of psychological aggression and control over sexual or reproductive health. Despite this, few services are available to male victims of intimate partner violence.

They tried to define some new areas of domestic violence, psychological abuse and control over sexual / reproductive health ("refused to use condom, tried to get pregnant") Guess what - more men than women were victims of these two forms of violence.

Their summary stresses how much women are victimized, and barely mentions men.

Please spread the word - get the info out that men are abused.

Bert
Bert H. Hoff
WebMaster, MenWeb and MenWeb Battered Men
http://www.batteredmen.com/

UK: Father in IVF case seeks fuller role in life of son now living with mother and lesbian partner

anthony · 13 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Court of Appeal last week heard an appeal concerning the contact arrangements for a son conceived by IVF treatment. The child lives with his mother and her lesbian partner. The father, who had been married to the mother in a 'marriage of convenience', is seeking staying contact and holiday contact with the boy, now two years old.

The mother claims that prior to conception the father had agreed that the mother and her partner would be primary parents of the child. It was agreed, she says, that the father would not seek to enforce his 'paternal rights'. The father claims that he was more than a mere sperm donor and wishes to play a fuller role in the boy's life.

Alex Verdan QC of 4 Paper Buildings, for the father, urged the court not to allow the father's relationship with his son to 'wither on the vine' at the current level of contact. Charles Howard QC of 1 king's Bench Walk, for the mother, warned that emotional damage could be caused by 'shuttling' the son between two homes and that such an arrangement had never been agreed.

The Court of Appeal, comprising Lord Justice Thorpe, Lady Justice Black and Sir John Chadwick, has reserved its judgment.'

Please lodge anti-circumcision submissions with Medicaid / CMS (Deadline 17 Feb. 2012)

Minuteman · 14 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This is a response to the document “Medicare, Medicaid, Children's Health Insurance Programs: Transparency Reports and Reporting of Physician Ownership or Investment Interests” [regulations.gov Docket No. CMS-2011-0191, FR Doc No: 2011-32244] (http://www.regulations.gov/#!documentDetail;D=CMS-2011-0191-0001).

The deadline for submissions is 17 February 2012.

This submission can be made by anybody from any country around the world.

Instructions:

Download and save the document from the following link (Click 'Download Now', Wait for the counter to reach zero and then click 'Download file now'):

http://www.4shared.com/office/eVb3mSuY/CMS-2011-0191_17February2012.html

Go to the following regulations.gov submission page:

http://www.regulations.gov/#!submitComment;D=CMS-2011-0191-0001

Complete the required fields ("Country", "State or Province", "Postal Code" and "Category") and as many optional fields you would like to. Click browse under '3. UPLOAD FILE(S)' to upload the saved document from your harddisk. Click 'Submit'.

In case anyone experiences problems with the above 4shared link, the full-text of the response document is below, which you can copy and paste into the text editor or word processor of your choice, save to your harddisk and upload to regulations.gov:

Response to “Medicare, Medicaid, Children's Health Insurance Programs: Transparency Reports and Reporting of Physician Ownership or Investment Interests” [regulations.gov Docket No. CMS-2011-0191, FR Doc No: 2011-32244]

Thank you for the opportunity to provide feedback to “Medicare, Medicaid, Children's Health Insurance Programs: Transparency Reports and Reporting of Physician Ownership or Investment Interests” [regulations.gov Docket No. CMS-2011-0191, FR Doc No: 2011-32244]. This response document shall briefly address the important role that increased transparency and public awareness of financial relationships between drug and device manufacturers and certain health care providers has to play in safeguarding patients against government agencies regulatory failures; in filling information gaps on exculpatory consent forms regarding the use of foreskin and other healthy tissue excised from minors; and the need for greater transparency to help safeguard patients from the potential clinical bias of physicians and teaching hospitals in receipt of NIH research funding.

Medicaid and circumcision

Circumcision of male minors, in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, is a controversial practice within the medical profession (KNMG 2010; Smith 2011), with doubts having been raised in the professional literature about whether it is even lawful to circumcise, and to allow the circumcision, of healthy boys at the expense of Medicaid (Adler 2011). Despite this, more than 1.14 million circumcision procedures were performed on male infants in U.S. hospitals in the year 2009 (AHRQ 2011), with hospitals in states in which Medicaid continues to cover circumcision of male minors in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, having circumcision rates higher than states where it does not (CDC 2011). Thus at the outset, a stipend from the state acts as an incentive for physicians to subject minors to a controversial medical procedure, in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, and one that will continue to dilute other government expenditures and initiatives aimed at improving child and infant health (HHS 2011a).

FDA, circumcision devices and regulatory failure

In 2000, the Food and Drug Administration [FDA] issued a public health notice about safety concerns regarding Gomco [and Gomco-type] circumcision clamps and Mogen [and Mogen-type] circumcision clamps, having received approximately 20 injury reports a year between 1996-2000 including lacerations, hemorrhaging, penile amputation and urethral damage (FDA 2000).

As of September 2011, the FDA has received a further 139 reports of problems related to circumcision clamps, including 51 injuries, twenty-one of those which were related to Mogen-type clamps, all but one of which involved injuries (Hennessy-Fiske 2011).

Despite this, the FDA has yet to issue a recall on any circumcision devices, and many physicians and teaching hospitals continue to use Gomco- and Mogen-type circumcision clamps (Hennessy-Fiske 2011).

On the 13 December 2011, the OIG published a report critical of the FDA's failure to oversee states inspections of food facilities (OIG 2011a), suggesting the possibility that more systemic problems exist within the agency, impacting it's ability to perform it's basic regulatory functions.

Increased transparency and public awareness of financial relationships between drug and device manufacturers and certain health care providers thus has an important role to play in safeguarding patients against government agencies regulatory failure, and one that must take precedence over drug and device manufacturers professed concern for increased regulatory and administrative 'burden'.

Foreskin-derived medical and cosmetic products and the informed consent of donors

Foreskins excised from minors in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, almost invariably present in a normal healthy state, and as such their excision and preservation contributes little to the study of the pathology of disease. Further, the most promising advances in the field of cellular regeneration research, are to be found in cell lines derived from adult sources including dental pulp cells (Authur et al 2008), uterine cells (Bock 2011) and bone marrow cells (Wada et al 2011); and diagnostic and therapeutic application of patient-derived cells (HHS 2011b; Pasca et al 2011), rather than cell lines derived from the excised healthy foreskins of minors.

Products derived from foreskins excised en masse from minors in the absence of clear and present immediate medical indications, are frequently utilised in the commercial medical product, and more especially cosmetics industries (Advanced Healing 2011; Ballantyne 2009; LifeCell 2012; Organogenesis 2011; Pitman 2008; SkinMedica 2011). As observed by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Office of Human Research Protections, “Changing technology in the field of genomics has dramatically increased the amount and nature of information about individuals that can be obtained from their DNA” (OHRP 2011). Valid concerns therefore exist for the future privacy of children whose healthy tissues are likely to be acquired by commercial interests in the cosmetic and medical product industries - and may be retained indefinitely - due to presently unforeseeable technological advances in the field of genomics.

Doubts exist about the appropriateness of utilising products derived from foreskin and other healthy tissue excised from minors, in the cosmetic and medical product industries, on the basis of exculpatory consent forms signed by parents and legal guardians of minors, and whether it is appropriate for parents and legal guardians to give explicit consent for these purposes.

The provision of information to parents on circumcision consent forms about the storage, transfer, processing, sale or any other use of excised healthy foreskins is unstudied. However, a survey conducted by Schaefer et al (2011) of consent forms from U.S. in vitro fertilization clinics and the provision of information to egg donors of the potential for embryonic research using donated eggs, concluded that “egg donors in the United States, including some who may have a moral objection to research and stem cell research, are not being informed that embryos created with their donated eggs may in fact be used for these purposes”, suggesting the possibility that incomplete information is also being provided to parents about the use of foreskin and other healthy tissue excised from minors. Similarly, information about the original source of human skins cells used in cosmetic and medical products, is ominously absent from the websites of some manufacturers who utilise foreskin-derived ingredients in their products (LifeCell 2012; SkinMedica 2011).

Increased transparency and public awareness of financial relationships between drug and device manufacturers and certain health care providers thus has an important role to play in filling information gaps on exculpatory consent forms regarding the use of foreskin and other healthy tissue excised from minors, and one that must take precedence over drug and device manufacturers professed concern for increased regulatory and administrative 'burden'.

Safeguarding patients from the potential for clinic bias resulting from NIH research funding

In 2011, the Department of Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General [OIG] published a series of audit reports revealing that throughout the fiscal years 2000-2010, institutes under the aegis of the National Institutes of Health [NIH], did not comply with the time and amount requirements specified in appropriations statutes, in awarding federal contracts to commercial partners, committing the federal government to tens of millions of dollars of expenditure ahead of appropriation of funds from Congress. Specific examples involving the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases [NIAID] include Contract N01-AI-15416 with the University of California at San Francisco (OIG 2011b), Contract N01-AI-3-0052 with Avecia Biologics Limited (OIG 2011c), Contract HHSN266-2006-00015C with NexBio, Inc. (OIG 2011d) and Contract HHSN272-2008-00013C with the EMMES Corporation (OIG 2011e).

During this time, federal agencies also funded and sponsored research conducted abroad, that would be unlikely to receive ethical approval to be conducted in the United States, incorporating the excision of healthy tissue from subjects in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication . Specific examples include NIAIDs sponsorship and funding of ClinicalTrials.gov registered trials NCT00059371 and NCT00425984 (Bailey et al 2007; Gray et al 2007). Consent forms for these trials failed to include then known information, from the professional medical literature, about the importance to mens sexual health of the foreskin and other tissues removed by circumcision (Taylor et al 1996).

Of concern, is that the results of the above trials are increasingly being used to justify the en masse circumcision of male minors in the absence of clear and present immediate medical indications, both in the United States and abroad, and in the former instance, at the expense of Medicaid (CDC 2011; Kim 2011).

To help inform patients of potential clinical bias of physicians in receipt of NIH research funding, it is imperative that the proposed publicly accessible, centralised website be expanded to include NIH grants awarded to physicians and teaching hospitals. This could be accomplished with minimal burden by cross-referencing the names of physicians and teaching hospitals with grant information already available through sources such as ClinicalTrials.gov.

Conclusion and Action Required

Increased transparency and public awareness of financial relationships between drug and device manufacturers and certain health care providers has an important role to play in safeguarding patients against government agencies regulatory failure, and one that must take precedence over drug and device manufacturers professed concern for increased regulatory and administrative 'burden'.

Increased transparency and public awareness of financial relationships between drug and device manufacturers and certain health care providers has an important role to play in filling information gaps on exculpatory consents forms regarding the use of foreskin and other healthy tissue excised from minors, and one that must take precedence over drug and device manufacturers professed concern for increased regulatory and administrative 'burden'.

To help inform patients of potential clinical bias of physicians in receipt of NIH research funding, it is imperative that the proposed publicly accessible, centralised website be expanded to include NIH grants awarded to physicians and teaching hospitals. This could be accomplished with minimal burden by cross-referencing the names of physicians and teaching hospitals with grant information already available through sources such as ClinicalTrials.gov.

References

Adler P W (2011) Is it lawful to use Medicaid to pay for circumcision? J Law Med. 2011;19(2):335-53 Abstract available at http://sites.thomsonreuters.com.au/journals/2011/11/28/journal-of-law-and-medicine-update-december-2011/ Accessed: 2012-01-08 Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64YPGfMLo

Advanced Healing (2011) Dermagraph Active Living Cells Overview Link http://www.dermagraft.com/about/overview/ Accessed: 2012-01-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64jhakjim

AHRQ (2011) Hospital Stays for Children, 2009. HCUP Statistical Brief #118 prepared by Yu, H. (RAND Corporation), Wier, L.M. (Thomson Reuters), and Elixhauser, A. (AHRQ) August 2011. Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, Rockville, MD Full-text available at http://www.hcup-us.ahrq.gov/reports/statbriefs/sb118.jsp

Arthur A, Rychkov G, Shi S, Koblar SA, Gronthos S (2008) Adult human dental pulp stem cells differentiate toward functionally active neurons under appropriate environmental cues in Stem Cells. 2008 Jul;26(7):1787-95. Epub 2008 May 22 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/18499892

Bailey RC, Moses S, Parker CB, Agot K, Maclean I, Krieger JN, Williams CF, Campbell RT, Ndinya-Achola JO (2007) Male circumcision for HIV prevention in young men in Kisumu, Kenya: a randomised controlled trial. Lancet369(9562),643–656 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/17321310

Ballantyne, C (2009) A Cut above the Rest?: Wrinkle Treatment Uses Babies' Foreskins Scientific American 12 February 2009 [Epub] Full-text available at http://www.scientificamerican.com/article.cfm?id=a-cut-above-the-rest-wrin Accessed: 2012-01-18. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64mLMhvCA

Bock, R (2011) Uterine stem cells used to treat diabetes in mice NIH News Full-text available at http://www.nih.gov/news/health/aug2011/nichd-30.htm Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64jhMI7v9

CDC (2011) Trends in In-Hospital Newborn Male Circumcision - United States 1999-2010 Prepared by Xinjian Zhang, PhD, Sanjyot Shinde, PhD, Peter H Kilmarx, MD, Robert T Chen, MD, Div of HIV/AIDS Prevention, National Center for HIV/AIDS, Viral Hepatitis, STD, and TB Prevention; Shanna Cox, MSPH, Lee Warner, PhD, Div of Reproductive Health, National Center for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion; Maria Owings, PhD, Div of Healthcare Statistics, National Center for Health Statistics; Charbel El Bcheraoui, PhD, EIS Officer, CDC. Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report (MMWR) Full-text available at http://www.cdc.gov/mmwr/preview/mmwrhtml/mm6034a4.htm?s_cid=mm6034a4_w

FDA (2000) Potential for Injury from Circumcision Clamps Food and Drug Administration Full-text available at http://www.fda.gov/MedicalDevices/Safety/AlertsandNotices/PublicHealthNotifications/ucm062279.htm

Gray RH, Kigozi G, Serwadda D, Makumbi F, Watya S, Nalugoda F, Kiwanuka N, Moulton LH, Chaudhary MA, Chen MZ, Sewankambo NK, Wabwire-Mangen F, Bacon MC, Williams CF, Opendi P, Reynolds SJ, Laeyendecker O, Quinn TC, Wawer MJ (2007) Male circumcision for HIV prevention in men in Rakai, Uganda: a randomised trial. Lancet369(9562),657–666 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/17321311

Hennessy-Fiske, Molly (2011) Injuries linked to circumcision clamps. Los Angeles Times 26 October 2011 http://www.latimes.com/health/la-he-circumcision-20110926,0,4367816.story Accessed: 2012-02-12. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/65PYUIZ0D

HHS (2011a) Obama Administration awards nearly $300 million to states for enrolling eligible children in health coverage HHS Newsroom December 28, 2011 Full-text available at http://www.hhs.gov/news/press/2011pres/12/20111228a.html

HHS (2011b) Scientists Rejuvenate Cells From Elderly Department of Health and Human Services Health Highlights 1 November 2011 Full-text available at http://www.healthfinder.gov/news/newsstory.aspx?Docid=658486

Kim, A (2011) Botswana's Infant Circumcision Campaign in PRI's The World Article archived at http://liveweb.archive.org/http://www.theworld.org/2011/10/botswana-infant-circumcision-campaign/ Retrieved 11 October 2011

KNMG (2010) Non-theraputic circumcision of male minors Royal Dutch Medical Association Full-text available at http://knmg.artsennet.nl/web/file?uuid=579e836d-ea83-410f-9889-feb7eda87cd5&owner=a8a9ce0e-f42b-47a5-960e-be08025b7b04&contentid=77976

LifeCell (2012) AlloDerm Tissue Matrix defined Full-text available at http://www.lifecell.com/alloderm-regenerative-tissue-matrix/95/ Accessed: 2012-01-18. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64mqrqxmQ

OHRP (2011) Regulatory Changes in ANPRM Comparison of Existing Rules with Some of the Changes Being Considered Office of Human Research Protections website Full-text available at http://www.hhs.gov/ohrp/humansubjects/anprmchangetable.html Accessed: 2012-01-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64jh4cWek

OIG (2011a) Vulnerabilities in FDA's Oversight of State Food Facility Inspections (OEI-02-09-00430) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 13 December 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oei/reports/oei-02-09-00430.pdf

OIG (2011b) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract N01-AI-15416 With the University of California at San Francisco Audit (A-03-10-03120) on the Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 10 July 2011 Available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003120.pdf

OIG (2011c)Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract N01-AI-3-0052 With Avecia Biologics Limited (A-03-10-03117) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 21 September 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003117.pdf

OIG (2011d) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract HHSN266-2006-00015C With NexBio, Inc. (A-03-10-03119) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 21 September 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003119.pdf

OIG (2011e) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract HHSN272-2008-00013C with the EMMES Corporation (A-03-10-03115) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 31 October 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003115.pdf

Organogenesis (2011) Apligraf: How Is It Made? Link http://www.apligraf.com/professional/what_is_apligraf/how_is_it_made/ Accessed: 2012-01-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64jhpT91Q

Pasca SP, Portmann T, Voineagu I, Yazawa M, Shcheglovitov A, Pasca AM, Cord B, Palmer TD, Chikahisa S,

Nishino S, Bernstein JA, Hallmayer J, Geschwind DH, Dolmetsch RE (2011) Using iPSC-derived neurons to uncover cellular phenotypes associated with Timothy syndrome Nat Med. 2011 Nov 27;17(12):1657-62. doi: 10.1038/nm.2576 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/22120178

Pitman, S (2008) Babies' foreskin dubbed as new anti-aging treatment Cosmetic Design Full-text available at http://www.cosmeticsdesign.com/Formulation-Science/Babies-foreskin-dubbed-as-new-anti-aging-treatment Accessed: 2012-01-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64ji8mqbP

SkinMedica (2011) Key Ingredients Link http://www.skinmedica.com/skin-care-products/skin-rejuvenation/tns-recovery-complex#tab2 Accessed: 2012-01-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64jiK7Gdx

Schaefer GO, Sinaii N, Grady C (2011) Informing egg donors of the potential for embryonic research: a survey of consent forms from U.S. in vitro fertilization clinics Fertil Steril. 2011 Dec 22. [Epub ahead of print] Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/22196714

Smith JF (2011) The professional imperative for obstetrician-gynecologists to discontinue newborn male circumcision Am J Perinatol. 2011 Feb;28(2):125-8. Epub 2010 Aug 10 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed?term=20700861

Taylor, J.P., A.P. Lockwood and A.J.Taylor The prepuce: Specialized mucosa of the penis and its loss to circumcision Journal of Urology (1996), 77, 291-295 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed?term=8800902

Wada N, Bartold PM, Gronthos S (2011) Human foreskin fibroblasts exert immunomodulatory properties by a different mechanism to bone marrow stromal/stem cells Stem Cells Dev. 2011 Apr;20(4):647-59. Epub 2010 Oct 12 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed?term=20712449

Susan Douglas speaks to launch Women's Week

anthony · 14 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Douglas — author, columnist and cultural critic — first garnered attention in 1994 when she published her book, Where the Girls Are: Growing Up Female with the Mass Media. Today, she continues to analyze the normalization of anti-feminism and the mixed messages women receive in mass media.

“Effectively feminism has been … vilified in the media,” Douglas said. In fact, feminism in the media is the “ideological equivalent of anthrax,” she said.

Douglas said a stigma still exists around feminists, who are dismissed as social pariahs and wrongfully cemented as extremists and man-haters.
...
According to Douglas, women’s achievements are overrepresented in the media as a way to promote fantasies of power. These attempts are transparent, she said, because gratifying images of success “mask how much still remains to be done for women.”

This speaks to the relationship between embedded feminism, the desire to highlight women’s success in the media, and enlightened sexism, a more subtle form of sexism that embraces achievements on the surface but ultimately repudiates feminism.'

F&F: Fathers and Families Welcomes New Leadership

Matt · 14 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is with equal measures of regret and optimism that I announce Glenn Sacks' decision to resign his post as Executive Director of Fathers and Families. Fathers and Families grew faster during the past three years under Glenn's leadership than it has at any point since I helped found it 14 years ago. To my personal regret, Glenn has decided to move on. (see Glenn's statement below).

Beginning five years ago, I sat with Glenn and his family in his California back yard, trying to cajole him into joining Fathers and Families. I knew I was talking to a special talent. As a journalist and blogger, Glenn had amassed the biggest audience in the world on gender-related issues as seen from the male point of view, including reform of the family courts. He wrote and spoke with precision, a solid grasp of the facts, balance, and with respect for both men and women.
...

I also approach this transition with optimism. The Board of Directors has appointed Rita Fuerst Adams as our new Executive Director. Rita has been an invaluable behind-the-scenes advisor to Fathers and Families since 2003. She knows our operations, personnel, and issues backwards and forwards. She has already proven herself a hard-driving, tireless leader, a relentless organizer, and an inspiring motivator. Now she makes the transition to Executive Director.
...
When asked why she accepted the position as ExecutiveDirector, Rita responded, "I believe Fathers and Families is poised to bring about fundamental social change. We are opening doors with our simple message of shared parenting and gender equality, with equal rights and responsibilities for fathers and mothers. We will make this the norm and the expectation in every state. I believe anything less penalizes innocent children."'

Articles list on Jewish intactivism

Matt · 14 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From the author of these articles:

Here are some new articles on Jewish Intactivism that I've published this year. Please like them on Facebook and Google+, and share and promote them on Tumbler, and your other social networks.

+++++++++

Peaceful parenting: The Intactivist Movement Within Judaism
http://www.drmomma.org/2011/10/intactivist-movement-within-judaism.html

Jewish Voices: The Current Judaic Movement to End Circumcision: Part 1
http://www.intactnews.org/node/104/1311886091/jewish-voices-current-judaic-movement-end-circumcision-part-1

Jewish Voices: The Current Judaic Movement to End Circumcision: Part 2
http://www.intactnews.org/node/105/1311886372/jewish-voices-current-judaic-movement-end-circumcision-part-2

Jewish Voices: The Current Judaic Movement to End Circumcision: Part 3
http://www.intactnews.org/node/112/1313862929/jewish-voices-current-judaic-movement-end-circumcision-part-3

Jews Speak Out in Favor of Banning Circumcision on Minors
http://www.intactnews.org/node/103/1311885181/jews-speak-out-favor-banning-circumcision-minors

Eradicating Circumcision: Judaism, Intactivism, & Human Rights ... http://www.restoringtally.com/blog/2011/10/eradicating-circumcision-judaism-intactivism-human-rights

The Guggie Daily: Jewish Intactivism: Resources
http://guggiedaly.blogspot.com/2011/09/jewish-intactivism.html

The Guggie Daily: Jewish Intactivism Part II
http://guggiedaly.blogspot.com/2011/11/jewish-intactivism-part-ii.html

The Intactivist Movement Within Judaism
http://www.savingsons.org/2011/10/intactivist-movement-within-judaism.html

Jewish Writers Write on Intactivism http://www.thewholenetwork.org/14/post/2011/12/jewish-intactivists-write-on-circumcision.html

Many Jews Oppose Circumcision
http://www.thewholenetwork.org/14/post/2011/8/the-many-jews-who-oppose-circumcision.html

Jewish Critics of Circumcision Growing More Vocal http://www.circinfo.org/Jews_against_circumcision.html

My Body, My Choice: Ban Non-Consensual Circumcision

Matt · 14 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Like countless men who have been circumcised, I'm angry about what was taken from me. If I could go back in time to the moment before this was done to me, I would use any means necessary to stop it. I wish there'd been a law against it. I've spent many nights ruminating in grief. I know other men like me who have sunk into deep depression while wrestling with the pain of this violation.
...
While circumcision may not reduce a man's desire to make love to himself, it irrevocably reduces his capacity to experience sexual pleasure. ...
...
From where I sit, arguments like Goldstein's sound like hate speech. If a man said he needed to cut off part of a woman's genitals in order to make her "more like a man," he'd rightly be ostracized. Why do we, as a progressive community, let this kind of dehumanization of men go unchallenged? Yes, male violence against women is a huge social problem and must be addressed. Inflicting irreversible harm onto our innocent sons' genitals is not the answer.

Which part of your daughter's body would you cut off to prevent a disease? Which part of her genitals would you cut off because you believe that God commanded you to do so? Well if you wouldn't cut your daughter, why is it OK to cut your son?

Abolishing infant circumcision would benefit the Jewish people. Rabbi Lerner rightly mentions that we've left behind numerous Torah commandments in the dustbin of history, such as stoning people to death and taking slaves from neighboring nations. Did giving up those divine dictates harm the Jews or make us more righteous and compassionate?'

SAVE's Accusing U. Project Set to Launch

Matt · 14 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

This week SAVE is introducing a new campaign to combat the Department of Education's Directive regarding rape and sexual assault on college campuses across the nation.

The DED has lowered its standard of what constitutes probable cause when an allegation of a sexual assault is reported. Here's an example; if you have a drink with a woman and then become intimate, you are now at risk of being charged with rape if she later regrets her decision.

Accusing U. is a new campaign developed by SAVE, aimed at reversing the government's directive and educating students across the country on this new assault on students' rights.

Please sign our petition, join the Accusing U. Facebook page, and pass along this information to any college students you know! Visit the Accusing U. webpage: www.accusingu.org

Sincerely,

Tom Lemons, Director of Special Events
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
tlemons-at-saveservices.org
www.saveservices.org

Obama's Valentine's Day advice

anthony · 14 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Obama has a warning for America's men: don't forget today is February 14th.

"Let me start with a quick public service announcement to all the gentlemen out there: today is Valentine's Day. Do not forget," Obama said during remarks Tuesday. "I speak from experience here. It is important that you remember this."

"And go big. That's my advice," the president added.'

UK: Police in Valentine's Day domestic abuse warning

anthony · 14 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Det Sgt Chloe Webber said there were "many factors at this time" which may lead to a relationship becoming abusive.

Calls about domestic abuse last year fell 18.5% around Valentine's Day, but she said the warning was a "timely reminder".

Det Sgt Webber said: "Valentine's Day can be extremely special for some people but unfortunately for others this is not always the case.

"There are many factors at this time which affect relationships, such as high expectations, stress, and financial pressure which may lead to a relationship becoming abusive."
...
A spokeswoman said: "There is no statistical evidence which suggests Valentine's Day is a pinch point for people."

Det Sgt Webber said the drop in reports over Valentine's Day "may have been because of the awareness campaign in the last couple of years".

She said: "Three or four year ago we had anecdotal evidence from officers of an increase in domestic violence over the Valentine's Day period.'

New Zealand: Domestic abuse charity subverts Valentine's Day messages of love

anthony · 14 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt;

'A domestic abuse charity in has turned the sentimentality of Valentine's Day on its head with a campaign that highlights the darker side of love for some women.

New Zealand's Women's Refuge is placing Valentine's Day cards with a traditional exterior and a sinister message inside in retailers in Auckland and Wellington.

According to Women's Refuge, some regions of New Zealand saw a near 100% spike in the numbers of women seeking help over the Christmas period for violent abuse, with a 12% increase last year in the numbers of women and children using their safe houses.

"We designed the campaign to encourage conversations and help those suffering to make a change," said Livia Esterhazy GM at Saatchi & Saatchi Wellington.'

Boys falling behind girls in education, experts look for solutions

anthony · 14 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For the first time in U.S. History a generation of sons will have less education than their fathers while girls are graduating from college in record numbers. Women have also become a majority of the workforce.

Many believe the gap is beginning at a young age. Stereotypes, lack of support programs and education are several of many factors hindering boys' progression, experts say.

...

In the last three decades, hundreds of federal programs and initiatives have been created to help girls continue and finish their education. But no such programs exist for boys, according to Dr. Warren Farrell. He is part of the effort to change that, with the Proposal for a White House Council on Boys to Men. The commission identified five areas of problems at crisis level: education, emotional health, physical health, work and father involvement.

According to Lois Collins, a reporter with the Deseret News who has researched the topic extensively, said that the biggest catalyst to change would be putting fathers back in homes with their sons, giving the in-house role models.'

CDC Request for Information on Youth Violence (Deadline 21 Feb 2012)

Minuteman · 15 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here (click the PDF icon, 160kb). Excerpt:

'SUMMARY: The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, is seeking on behalf of the Department of Health and Human Services information for an anticipated Surgeon General response to the public health problem of youth violence.
...
Potential Areas of Focus: CDC is interested in receiving information on the following:

(1) What is the extent of the problem and its consequences.
(2) What are the differences in youth violence prevalence among subgroups and communities and how might they inform prevention approaches.
(3) What is the availability and adaptability of evidence-based prevention programs.

Purpose of Notice: The purpose of this notice is to provide individuals and organizations the opportunity to identify issues and areas of need for consideration as we gather information to inform the Surgeon General's document on youth violence. All comments will receive careful consideration.'

Boys do better than girls when taught under traditional reading methods

fondueguy · 15 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The use of more traditional phonetics-based lessons helps boys catch up with girls - even doing better on some tests - and prevents some children from needing 'special' schooling, according to new research findings.

A study of synthetic phonics also found children from disadvantaged backgrounds do as well as those from better off homes.
...
They have been introduced after damning revelations that four in 10 children have failed to master the three Rs by the time they leave primary school.
...
Boys were 20 months ahead while girls were 14 months more advanced than expected.
...
"All children can get the most out of learning to read using synthetic phonics.
...
"Teachers told us they had fewer disciplinary problems and less trouble in the playground because boys were succeeding and had higher self esteem."'

Malawi: Episcopal Bishops Endorse Male Circumcision as HIV Prevention Measure

anthony · 15 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Episcopal Conference of Malawi (ECM), a college of all catholic bishops in the country, has endorsed government's proposal for the adaptation of medical male circumcision as a mean for HIV prevention.

However, ECM General Secretary Father George Buleya said the endorsement is on condition that Catholics should be accessing the service in catholic health facilities only.

"We have taken this stand on the understanding that circumcision contravenes no Biblical teachings" said Father Buleya. The cleric said while they have adopted male circumcision, the Catholic Church was still against the use of condoms as an HIV preventive measure. Various researches are agreeing that male circumcision can reduce HIV transmission by 60 percent, on top of reducing by 100 percent transmission of other Sexually Transmitted Infections (STIs) such as gonorrhea and syphilis. Apart from that, it is also believed that male circumcision greatly reduces risk of cervical cancer in women.'

Children´s Rights Organization In Sweden Skews Boys' Suicide Statistics

Anonymous · 15 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From GenusNytt ("Gender News"), article here.

'Association BRIS - Children's Rights in Society http://www.bris.se/?pageID=61

Notice a statistical trick in the report they have recently sent out. It results in a clear prevalence of girls.

As you can see in their table below is the boys' percentage of young people with suicidal problems being 12.2 percent (while girls account for only 87.1 per cent).

Anyone who goes to the National Centre for Suicide Research and looks at their statistics on completed suicide - which is probably much worse than going into suicidal thoughts - get a totally different picture. Their statistics show that between the ages of 15-24 years is 74 percent of those who committed suicide boys-- that is about three boys to each girl.'

Comment by Ulf:
Misandry is surrounding boys when they are alive and misandry haunt the boys when they´re dead, by creative statistics from a "children´s rights organization". Is there any hope at all for the destructive race called "mankind"?

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Wanted: An Honest Discussion About the Violence Against Women Act

Matt · 16 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But this year Republicans, previously feminist-pecked, are taking a harder than usual look at VAWA. Senator Charles Grassley, ranking Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee, has had the audacity to offer a counterpoint bill that, while not perfect, would introduce more stringent accounting policies and altogether eliminate the Department of Justice's Office on Violence Against Women. Headed by Susan Carbon, this office administers VAWA, doling out grants nationwide for shelters, often staffed by feminist ideologues, and law enforcement training, often grounded in feminist theory.

The Office on Violence Against Women's budget request this year is $454,898,000, and, while that is certainly less than was poured down a green rat hole on Solyndra, it should raise eye-brows in economically tough times.

What is at stake in deciding whether to reauthorize VAWA is not whether domestic violence is a serious problem—it is. To the extent that VAWA has made the public aware of this, it is to be applauded. But unfortunately VAWA activists have primarily sought to use the law and their funding to further the feminist cause, which is not always the same as the cause of women.

The "must-arrest" policy advanced in VAWA, for example, may sound like a winner to anti-male ideologues, but it's more complicated for real women. Knowledge that a call seeking help can set off an irrevocable process may also discourage some true victims of violence from seeking help they need. It also means that women who have begun the process of pressing charges against violent partners are often not allowed to drop them if they change their minds. Obviously, a woman's decision to take a bum to court deserves society's utmost support, but the current policy has often forced women who might otherwise have opted for counseling for both parties in an effort to save a marriage to go ahead with more drastic measures.

And only the most naïve would assume that women don't recognize that a charge of domestic violence is itself a powerful weapon. It's also a weapon that's almost exclusively used against men, even though women are known to be instigators of violence, too.

The problem with VAWA is that it makes women not just victims of crime, but special victims, with special rights and special standards of what is right and wrong.

And while VAWA may have succeeded in raising awareness about the problem of domestic violence, it's also encouraged the dissemination of misinformation too.'

New York won't recognize man's masculinity

anthony · 16 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK, Feb. 9 (UPI) -- A former Marine's lawsuit against New York says a hospital mix-up listed him as female on his birth certificate and the city is refusing to correct the error.

David Hassan, 29, filed a lawsuit in city Supreme Court saying the mistake on his birth certificate was not noticed until 2003, when he was denied a new ID by a clerk who noticed the error, the New York Post reported Thursday.

"I am not, nor have I ever been, female," he said.'

Police: Boulder Woman Made Up Attack

mens_issues · 16 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This is the second time in a few weeks that a false report of sexual assualt was made in Boulder. Excerpt:

'BOULDER, Colo. -- For the second time in three weeks, Boulder police have cited a young woman for fabricating an assault story.

Boulder police on Wednesday said they have cited 18-year-old Allyson M. Manley with false reporting after she claimed that a man tried to sexually assault her in October.'

Ed. note: Also see here.

'Man attacked' for not buying Valentine's gift

Minuteman · 16 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Those nifty quotation marks are from the original story headline.

Link here. Excerpt:

'A US woman furious at her boyfriend for not giving her a Valentine's Day gift tried to attack him with a knife, according to reports.
...
Police allege she pushed and scratched Mr Brown until he locked himself inside a bedroom in her apartment.

Reed reportedly took a knife to the door, trying to slash her way in as she yelled that she would cut Mr Brown and kill him.'

Acknowledging the problem of male suicide el cid · 16 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This letter-to-the-editor acknowledges something rarely acknowledged: that men are at greater risk for suicide than women. It also gives some useful statistics on the issue and supports a bill to help suicidal persons. The letter:

'Colorado has the sixth-highest rate of suicide in the nation (867 deaths in 2010, including 447 in the metro area). The largest number is among men of working age (35 to 54). Suicide is the second-leading cause of death among young people (ages 10 to 34). Men over 75 are at highest risk. A death by suicide has a profound impact on family, friends, the workplace, and results in an untold loss of productivity.

Colorado House Bill 1140 (sponsored by Rep. Matt Jones and Sen. Linda Newell) will, if passed, ask hospitals to provide information about suicide (risk factors, signs and sources of help) to family and friends to whom a suicidal person is being discharged. Any effort that gets information into the hands of those closest to suicidal persons will help save lives.

Susan Marine, Boulder

The writer is a board member for the Suicide Prevention Coalition of Colorado.'

Teacher Accused Of 'Having Sex With' Student For 4 Months

Matt · 17 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. More from the 'having sex with' files when it is in fact statutory rape. Excerpt:

'EAGLE COUNTY, Colo. -- A teacher in Eagle County was arrested on Thursday on suspicion of sexual assault on a child by one in a position of trust with a pattern of sexual abuse.

Lauren Redfern, 25, is a physical education teacher at Basalt High School.

Redfern is accused of having sex with a 17-year-old male student over a duration of 4 months, deputies said. Click here to find out more!

The sexual encounters took place at both Redfern's home and the victim's home in El Jebel, deputies said.'

Key reason for gender gap - Female teachers give boys lower marks, study finds

fondueguy · 17 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The study was published by the Centre for Economic Performance, full paper (pdf). Article here. Excerpt:

'Ground-breaking research shows that boys lower their sights if they think their work is going to be marked by a woman because they believe their results will be worse.

It also shows their suspicions are correct – female teachers did, on average, award lower marks to boys than unidentified external examiners. Male teachers, by contrast, awarded them higher marks than external examiners.

The findings, published by the Centre for Economic Performance today, could have immense repercussions for boys because of the dearth of male teachers in the profession. Only 15 per cent of primary school staff are men.
...

He said the research, carried out among 1,200 children in 29 schools across the country, had shown a possible reason for the glaring gap in performance between girls and boys right through schooling.
...
Professor Smithers said: "It is fascinating research. It does stress the importance of independent marking for high-status examinations."'

NCFM-LA News Release - Hillary Clinton Needs to Woman Up on her Genital Mutilation Hypocrisy

Matt · 17 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

AIDS Circumcision Fallacy Discussion with Dr. Dean Edell

National Coalition For Men
Working together since 1977 to free men from sex discrimination ncfm.org

News Release

NCFM CALLS ON HILLARY CLINTON TO WOMAN UP ABOUT HER SEXIST HYPOCRISY ON GENITAL MUTILATION

Hilly Clinton's opposition to female genital mutilation while promoting male genital mutilation is just more of her sexist "no excuse" double standards, just like her denouncement of domestic violence while she assaulted her husband

Contact: Marc E. Angelucci, Esq. (626-319-3081) marcangelucci@hotmail.com

For Immediate Release

February 17, 2012 (Los Angeles) - Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, on February 16, 2012, announced at a State Department meeting that "there is no cultural justification for female genital cutting, a practice that is sometimes referred to as female circumcision."
www.voanews.com/english/news/africa/Clinton-Cultural-Tradition-is-No-Excuse-for-Female-Genital-Mutilation--139478343.html

At the same time, Clinton has been promoting male genital mutilation in Africa to fight HIV based on three controversial clinical studies claiming male circumcision reduces the chance of contracting HIV by 60 percent.
http://aumag.org/wordpress/?p=3211

The National Coalition For Men (NCFM) calls on Hillary Clinton to "woman up" about her sexism and hypocrisy when it comes to genital mutilation and domestic violence.

Male circumcision is gynecologically equivalent to removal of the clitoral foreskin, one of several forms of infant female circumcision all of which are illegal in the U.S. and elsewhere. "It's a common myth that female circumcision is always removal of the clitoris," says NCFM Vice President Marc Angelucci. "The most common form is removal of the clitoral foreskin, which is no different than removing the male foreskin," he said.

"In fact, male circumcision permanently removes a natural buffer and lubricant during sex that is packed with erogenous nerve endings and specialize mucosa. A child cannot consent to that. It's a sexist double standard to forbid one but promote or even allow the other. Boys deserve the same protection as girls, regardless of religion, culture, or tradition."

Research shows the male foreskin is the most sensitive part of the penis, and male circumcision can significantly reduce sexual pleasure.

www.livescience.com/health/070615_penis_sensitivity.html

http://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/10.1111/j.1464-410X.2006.06646.x/full
A recent study in Denmark found circumcised men have a much higher rate of sexual problems than intact men.
http://ije.oxfordjournals.org/content/early/2011/06/13/ije.dyr104.short?rss=1
New research also find circumcised men are five times more likely to suffer from premature ejaculation.
http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/21492404

Furthermore, the South African Medical Journal and others vehemently challenge the studies that claim circumcision reduces HIV. www.samj.org.za/index.php/samj Likewise, the South African Medical Association expressed "serious concern that not enough scientifically-based evidence was available to confirm that circumcisions prevented HIV contraction and that the public at large was influenced by incorrect and misrepresented information. The committee reiterated its view that it did not support circumcision to prevent HIV transmission."
www.intactnews.pfeyz.com/openpublish/article/south-african-medical-association-denounces-circumcision-infants
The President of Uganda rejected circumcision as an HIV preventative and declared the research to be misleading.
http://www.newvision.co.ug/D/8/12/759239
The few studies in Africa that found male circumcision reduces HIV are contradicted by observational studies that show otherwise. www.publichealthinafrica.org/index.php/jphia/article/view/jphia.2011.e4/html_9 www.plosone.org/article/info%3Adoi%2F10.1371%2Fjournal.pone.0015552?utm_source=feedburner&utm_medium=feed&utm_campaign=Feed%3A+plosone%2FPLoSONE+%28PLoS+ONE+Alerts%3A+New+Articles%29
According to a report by USAID, "There appears no clear pattern of association between male circumcision and HIV prevalence—in 8 of 18 countries with data, HIV prevalence is lower among circumcised men, while in the remaining 10 countries it is higher." USAID report, "LEVELS AND SPREAD OF HIV SEROPREVALENCE AND ASSOCIATED FACTORS: EVIDENCE FROM NATIONAL HOUSEHOLD SURVEYS"
www.measuredhs.com/pubs/pdf/CR22/CR22.pdf

And reports in Zimbabwe, Uganda and elsewhere show circumcision is increasing HIV rates because the men think it makes them immune. http://allafrica.com/stories/201105050159.html
http://dailynews.co.zw/index.php/news/34-news/6026-circumcision-canal-for-new-hiv-infections.html

This is exactly what renowned physician Dr. Dean Edell warned about when he called the African/HIV conclusions "silly" and warned, "it will backfire." He recognized the gender double standard, the loss of sensation in the penis, and that the solution is condoms and education, not circumcision. www.youtube.com/watch?v=OlsUg0sdAtE

Even if it did reduce HIV, the men being subjected to circumcision should be adequately informed about the above research, and they are not. Moreover, due to a poor turnout of African men volunteering to be circumcised, the pro-circumcision lobby has began turning to Plan B, which is to circumcise African boys at birth.
www.theworld.org/2011/10/botswana-infant-circumcision-campaign/

"Mutilating infant boys totally violates their human rights," Angelucci said. "There is no excuse for this double standard. In fact the top doctors in Norway and Holland are calling for an end to infant male circumcision."
www.dutchnews.nl/news/archives/2011/09/doctors_campaign_against_risky.php http://theforeigner.no/pages/news/top-norwegian-doctor-wants-circumcision-phased-out/

The Dutch Medical Association, representing 46,000 physicians and medical students, recently issued a report backed by seven other national medical associations in the Netherlands declaring that male circumcision violates children's right to bodily integrity and that the male foreskin is an important erotogenic structure for which no medical benefit justifies its routine removal.
www.norm-uk.org/news.html?action=showitem&item=1306

The South African Medical Association denounced infant male circumcision as unethical and illegal.
www.intactnews.pfeyz.com/openpublish/article/south-african-medical-association-denounces-circumcision-infants

The British and Australian medical associations both denounced any medical justification for routine infant male circumcision. www.smh.com.au/national/letters/no-evidence-to-support-routine-circumcision-20090911-fkna.html
www.cpsbc.ca/files/u6/Circumcision-Infant-Male.pdf

In fact, research shows infant male circumcision is extremely painful and can cause lifetime trauma.
www.youtube.com/watch?v=UAGNnqyNidY www.cirp.org/library/psych/boyle6/

This is similar to Hillary's claim that 'there is no excuse for domestic violence' while she assaults her husband Bill." According to the otherwise complimentary biography, Hillary's Choice, by author Gail Sheehy, Hillary Clinton attacked Bill on several occasions. In 1993, she slashed his face with her fingernails, leaving a "mean claw mark along his jawline." Dee Dee Myers, the White House spokeswoman at the time, later explained to Sheehy that it was Barbara Streisand's visit to the White House that sparked Hillary's rage. According to Christopher Anderson, author of Bill and Hillary, Hillary also assaulted Bill on August 13, 1999, after the Monica Lewinsky revelations. Anderson writes: "Much of what transpired next between Bill and Hillary Clinton was plainly audible to Secret Service agents and household staff members down the hall. In the past, Hillary had thrown books and an ashtray at the President--both hitting their mark...Hillary rose to her feet and slapped him across the face--hard enough to leave a red mark that would be clearly visible to Secret Service agents when he left the room." Sheehy's account of the incident is similar, though the book also mentions a lamp that was thrown by Hillary Clinton in this or another incident, but she does confirm the the August 13, 1999 assault by a quote from Hillary friend Linda Bloodworth-Thomasen who was staying with her husband in the private quarters nearby who confirmed that Hillary Clinton "smacked him upside the head."

"Hillary Clinton needs to woman up," said Angelucci. "Her sexism, hypocrisy, and violence need to be exposed and she needs to denounce them like a woman."

SAVE launches Accusing U. Campaign against Dept. of Education

Matt · 17 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Feb. 17, 2012 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is set to launch Accusing U., a national campaign designed to educate college students about the Department of Education's new Sexual Assault Directive. SAVE says the Directive subverts fundamental due process rights on college campuses.

The Accusing U. campaign will be unveiled at a panel presentation to be held Saturday, February 17 at 10:00am at the Grand Hyatt Hotel in Washington DC. The panel will highlight DED's alleged anti-civil rights agenda, which affects students and professors alike.

The American Association of University Professors, National Association of Scholars, and Foundation for Individual Rights in Education have all come out against the Directive (1). Over 30 editorials have criticized the mandate on civil rights grounds (2).

The erosion of civil rights of persons accused of sexual assault was highlighted in a recent Yale University case. Yale quarterback Patrick Witt, a promising candidate for a Rhodes Scholarship, saw his application blow up when The New York Times revealed he had been accused on scant evidence of sexual assault.'

Man shot to death while holding baby

Matt · 17 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police say 50-year-old John Loxas was holding his grandchild in his arms as he walked around his Scottsdale neighborhood Tuesday night threatening neighbors and police.

"There were at least three officers in position to engage the suspect. At least one of the officers thought he saw something in the suspect's hands," said Sgt. Mark Clark.

Loxas was standing outside of his home with his grandchild still in his arms when Officer James Peters fired one shot to the head, killing the suspect.

Police say the 9-month-old boy was not injured during the shooting.

Officers also escaped unharmed.
...
Officer Peters, who fired the fatal shot, has been involved in seven shootings over the past decade.'

'Ladies are free'

Matt · 17 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Came across this in my travels:
"Price: $10.00 @ door/ ladies are free" (Feel free to call or email them and politely tell them what you think of their discriminatory behavior.)

So, now it's not even about getting 'ladies' into bars so as to attract men to come and pay for drinks while the 'ladies' drink gratis. Now it's things like entire entertainment venue performances.

Wonder when it'll be food, housing, etc., too, all government- (ie, men-) paid? Think I am being too uptight? Think again. It's definitely already happening. It starts in small ways, gets larger, and eventually, becomes expected and 'normal' at larger and larger scales. Wait and see.

Caught on video: Horrific moment a father was shot by his mother-in-law as he picked up son, three from her house

Anonymous · 18 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A father goes to his mother-in-law's home to pick up his son and is shot twice by her. She then calls 911 and alleges that HE tried to shoot HER. Unbeknownst to his mother-in-law was the fact that the man had recorded the incident on his iPhone. Let us stress the importance of using personal surveillance devices in securing justice. Excerpt:

'A father recorded the moment he was shot by his mother-in-law as he went to pick up his three-year-old son from her house.

Salvatore Miglino, 39, was shot in the ribs and the shoulder by 66-year-old Cheryl Hepner.

Mr Miglino caught the attack in Florida on Wednesday on video - because he had set his iPhone to record in anticipation of an argument with Mrs Hepner.

After a brief exchange outside the granny's house in Tamarac, Florida near Fort Lauderdale, Hepner allegedly shot Mr Miglino in the shoulder and rib.

The exact discussion before the shooting is unclear, but it appears relatively calm.'

The Nerve's "Dispatches" section: 'How Insensitive' discusses circumcision

Matt · 18 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From back in 2007, still this is a very good, brief article describing how and why it is that men lose sensitivity (and, a lot of it) in their penises when they are circumcised. It also discusses the issue of HIV/STD transfer prevention and the jumbled results from the few studies done on the matter. And to recommend it further, it is brief and to the points. Excerpt:

'The science in this case concerned one of the most controversial and common medical procedures practiced in the West: circumcision of the penis. The study, published in the April 2007 BJU International (the former British Journal of Urology) under the title "Fine-Touch Pressure Thresholds in the Adult Penis," is the latest research salvo in the war for the neonatal foreskin.
...
Anti-circumcision advocates cite methodological problems with the STD studies while raising a separate question about the ethics of discarding a body part to prevent its becoming infected. In order to establish what, exactly, a male person loses when he loses his foreskin, the study set out to compare sensation in the cut and the uncut organ. Its conclusion may seem obvious to those of us with only a lay interest in the penis, but it's controversial, nonetheless: uncut dick feels more. A lot more.

"The study shows that the foreskin is the most sensitive portion of the penis," said study coauthor Robert Van Howe, a pediatrician at the Marquette General Health System in Marquette, Michigan. "It's not like you're chopping off plain old skin. The analogy would be like removing your lips, because the lips are more sensitive than the skin around them."
...
But even if the medical establishment arrived at an undisputed consensus, I'll keep thinking about the well intentioned parents — and doctors — in the nineteenth century who circumcised millions of boys to protect them from hip dysplasia. Doesn't that history give us a special obligation to be cautious?
...
...Personally, if I'm ever in the position of deciding whether an infant is going to have the most sensitive part of his penis cut off in exchange for potential health benefits later in life, the full range of what They have been telling us over the last 150 years is going to raise a red flag.'

Swedish docs in circumcision protest

anthony · 19 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"We consider it to be an assault on these boys," Staffan Janson, chairman of BLF's committee for ethical issues and childrens' rights, said to newspaper Göteborgs-Posten (GP).

Removing small boys' foreskin for reasons other than medical is controversial in Sweden.

After discussing the matter for several years BLF has now concluded that the procedure ought to be banned on the grounds that the children are unable to form a decision in the matter. According to BLF and Staffan Janson, circumcision is an attack on boys' integrity.

"It's such a complicated and difficult question, but even so, we've decided that this is a procedure to be done away with," Janson said.

"It's a mutilation of a child unable to decide for himself."'

SAVE: Standing-Room Crowd Welcomes Launch of Accusing U. Project

Matt · 20 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Yesterday, Feb. 18, SAVE launched its long-awaited Accusing U. project, designed to raise awareness about the Department of Education's Sexual Assault Directive, and stop false allegation of rape on campus.

The roll-out featured a panel presentation at the annual conference of International Students for Liberty, held at the Grand Hyatt Hotel in Washington DC. The session, "How the Government Plans to Regulate Your Sex Life," featured presentations by attorney Ron Henry, author Philip Cook, and SAVE program director Teri Stoddard.

Ninety students attended the session, many asking candid questions during the Q and A period. Afterwards, panelists engaged in one-on-one conversations with audience members, with a number of students volunteering to become Accusing U. Campus Coordinators.

More about the Accusing U. project can be seen here: http://www.accusingu.org/. Get in on the discussion – join our Falsely Accused of Sexual Assault Facebook page: https://www.facebook.com/pages/Falsely-Accused-of-Sexual-Assault/349737661704751

Sincerely,

The SAVE Team

P.S. Start making plans now for Take Back our Rights Week, April 1-7. The week will highlight the failings of the DED Directive, which was issued on April 4, 2011.

Battered Kenyan men urged to boycott meals in their homes

mens_issues · 20 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Men in the Nyeri, Central Province of Kenya are being battered by their wives (and urged to boycott meals in their homes in protest) in this video posted on YouTube.

Apparently the women of the region are upset with their husbands as they are often the primary breadwinners and their unemployed husbands often turn to alcohol. Just look at some of the semi-literate misandrist comments on YouTube and you can see the rude and ignorant attitudes of many posting there. Would the reverse be acceptable with employed husbands battering their unemployed wives who drink?

Clinton: 'Cultural Tradition' is No Excuse for Female Genital Mutilation

anthony · 20 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The comments challenge Hillary Clinton's hypocrisy when it comes to circumcision. Excerpt:

'U.S. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said Thursday that there is no cultural justification for female genital cutting, a practice that is sometimes referred to as female circumcision.

Secretary Clinton says governments and non-governmental organizations are making progress toward ending female genital mutilation, or FGM, by reaching out to those who still practice it.

In those societies, it is often justified as a way to protect a girl's purity and cleanliness. Although Clinton said many cultural differences must be respected, this is not one of them.

"We cannot excuse this as a cultural tradition. There are many cultural traditions that used to exist in many parts of the world that are no longer acceptable. We cannot excuse it as a private matter because it has very broad public implications. It has no medical benefits. It is, plain and simply, a human rights violation," Clinton said.'

"Federal Judge Says Chicks Can Slam Cheating Exes on Web; Gloria Allred Declares 'Victory for Women's Rights'"

anthony · 21 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gloria claims her clients -- and women at large -- should have the right to exercise their free speech however they like ... especially since there are laws in place that prevent them suing an unfaithful ex.

She's referring to what are called "Heart Balm" laws -- laws that abolish the ability of one to sue over breach of a promise to marry. And while the laws are gender-neutral, Gloria argues they unfairly protect men ... because men are more likely to cheat than women.

Gloria claims women should have the right to sue ... because they are disproportionately affected by a cheating man than vice versa -- insisting men typically occupy the power position in relationships ... with better jobs, more money, etc.'

Interview with Wendy McElroy on feminism in America

anthony · 21 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Consider academia. Every university has a women's department; almost every one has PC policies such as campus codes that preclude sexual jokes and comments; professors are suspended or fired for expressing the wrong views of gender in class...the list of institutionalized ideology rolls on and on. One problem with institutionalizing an ideology or idea is that it lives on almost through inertia far, far longer than it could survive a free market process of open debate and analysis. Once a gender feminism professor gets tenure, for example, that position is occupied by her ideology for the next 20+ years. It doesn't matter that her ideas have been discounted by the general public or the political tide has turned. She has tenure. And remember almost every professor within women's departments, political science, etc. who has received tenure in the past 2 decades or so needed to toe a PC line. Thus the struggle goes on even though the battle has been won.'

UK: Girls' Education Campaign Runs Street Ad Only Women Can See

anthony · 21 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The transformation of bus stops into advertising laboratories continues this week in London, where an Oxford Street shelter will be fitted with facial-recognition technology that allows women to view a 40-second Plan UK "Because I Am a Girl" ad, while men will see only a URL. A client rep explains: "We're not giving men the choice to see the full ad so they get a glimpse of what it's like to have basic choices taken away." Wags might suggest that many guys wouldn't want to see the ad anyway unless it had hot chicks in it. I'd never stoop so low. Seriously, Plan UK has an intriguing strategy, although it's been somewhat lost in media coverage focusing mainly on the system that can tell the genders apart and serve ads accordingly. Most stories compare that aspect to the individually targeted ads portrayed in films like Minority Report—read: "futuristic" and "scary"—with critics decrying the "creepy" and potentially invasive nature of such systems. (Plan UK says the facial data will not be stored.) Per the BBC, the software is correct about gender roughly 90 percent of the time. Perhaps it can be fooled by wigs, masks and makeup. It'd be a hoot if men dressed in drag just to trick the system. At the very least, it would enliven the daily commute.'

SAVE: Accusing U.: Come Visit our New Facebook Page

Matt · 22 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

'This past Saturday SAVE launched our Accusing U. campaign at the International Students for Liberty Conference in Washington D.C. It was a complete success -- the room was filled to capacity, barely leaving room to stand. Several students volunteered to become Campus Coordinators.

If you received our last E-lert, you are aware of the government's effort to remove the presumption of innocence from persons accused of rape or sexual assault on college campuses.

SAVE is working tirelessly to expose and expel this new Directive -- and we invite you to get involved. We have just set up a new Facebook page for persons falsely accused of sexual assault: https://www.facebook.com/pages/Falsely-Accused-of-Sexual-Assault/349737661704751

Drop by, like a comment, join the conversation, recommend us to a friend! For more information, visit http://www.accusingu.org/

Sincerely,

Tom Lemons, Director of Special Events
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Australian Dept of Health & Aging - "Men's Shed Funding Boosts Support for Blokes"

Minuteman · 22 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The Minister with responsibility for Male Health, Warren Snowdon, has announced 31 Men's Sheds across Australia will be helped to fit out their buildings, purchase tools or supplies and to run programs to spread health messages.

Mr Snowdon said the Australian Government is committed to improving the health of Australian males by finding ways to make the health system more responsive to the specific and unique needs of males.

"Sheds are playing a key role in strengthening communities and in promoting the physical and mental health of males, we have committed $3 million of our $16.7 million National Male Health Policy to the Australian Men's Shed's Association to help support sheds, and $250,000 each year for three years in direct financial assistance for Men's Sheds around Australia.

"Each Men's Shed has its own character – some are traditional buildings, some are vans, some are virtual sheds - but common factors include friendliness, social inclusiveness, a safe environment and a range of activities to suit every community.

"Some sheds were successful in this funding round in more than one category so that 13 sheds received funding for tools and equipment; 11 for building maintenance and development; and 14 for shed activities and programs," he said.'

Court Orders Man To Apologize To Estranged Wife On Facebook To Avoid 60-Day Sentence

anthony · 22 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CINCINNATI -- A Cincinnati man has been ordered to apologize to his estranged wife on Facebook after a post he wrote last year.

Court records indicate that Mark Byron was found guilty of civil domestic violence against Elizabeth Byron in June 2011, and Elizabeth Byron was granted a temporary protection order.

The records indicate that Mark Byron posted a comment to his Facebook wall in late November that stated "if you are an evil, vindictive woman who wants to ruin your husband's life and take your son's father away from him completely -- all you need to do is say that you're scared of your husband or domestic partner and they'll take him away!"
...
On Jan. 25, magistrate Paul Meyers ruled that Mark Byron violated the protection order and sentenced him to 60 days in jail and a $500 fine.
...
Meyers ruled that Byron could not shut down his page during those 30 days and had to grant friend status to his wife or someone of her choosing to monitor the page.'

Female Georgia Democrats Seek Vasectomy Ban In Response To Abortion Bill

anthony · 22 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of female Democratic legislators in the Georgia House of Representatives has proposed a bill that would ban men from seeking vasectomies.

"Thousands of children are deprived of birth in this state every year because of the lack of state regulation over vasectomies," said bill author Yasmin Neal in a statement. "It is patently unfair that men can avoid unwanted fatherhood by presuming that their judgment over such matters is more valid than the judgment of the General Assembly, while women's ability to decide is constantly up for debate throughout the United States."

The proposed legislation is a response to HB 954, a bill sponsored by Republican Doug McKillips that seeks to ban abortions after 20 weeks of pregnancy. Current legislation prohibits abortions after the second trimester, or approximately 24 weeks. The measure, which has been moving quickly through the House, is intended to prevent late-term abortions on fetuses that proponents say can already feel pain at 20 weeks.'

Men are doomed theory is off the mark

mens_issues · 22 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The diminishment of the Y chromosome happened early on, then leveled off, according to this study. Excerpt:

'But the latest study says the Y's shrinkage occurred in the very distant past and the chromosome has been wonderfully stable for millions of years.

The human genome has 22 pairs of chromosomes plus one pair that determine sex. If you are a female, you get two X chromosomes, and if you are male, it's an X and a Y, whose all-important sex-determining region accounts for the sperm and testes.'

LePage’s domestic violence legislation focuses on abusers

anthony · 22 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The executive order signed by LePage on Wednesday would create a task force to study the viability of using technology such as electronic monitoring to better track abusers and keep victims safe. That task force would report back by the end of 2012.

LePage said the proposals announced on Wednesday would create additional deterrents for abusers but would not solve the problem.

He said all Mainers, and men in particular, need to do their part to make domestic violence socially unacceptable.

Cain agreed.

“The bills today are a starting point for the work that lies ahead. It is simply not enough to increase punishment for this kind of crime after it happens,” she said. “We must also work together on comprehensive domestic violence prevention resources and treatment for battered women and their families.”'

Relatedly, wonder if there will be focus on this woman, too?

Bangor woman faces two felony domestic violence charges

A ‘Teachable Moment’ on Marginalized Male Victims

anthony · 23 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Charles M. Blow aims to provide readers with a “teachable moment” regarding the suspension of the CNN commentator Roland Martin after a gay rights organization complained that his Super Bowl tweets advocated violence against gays (“Real Men and Pink Suits,” column, Feb. 11).

Noticeably absent from Mr. Blow’s and others’ commentary was any criticism of the numerous graphic acts of violence — slaps, head butts, kicks, punches — depicted against heterosexual males during the Super Bowl commercials in the interest of humor.

...

We should condemn all public endorsements or mockeries of violence. Our rebuke should not turn on whether the victim is heterosexual or homosexual, male or female, or a member of a group to which we belong, but whether there was an offense made against a person’s human dignity. Unless we, as a nation, hold ourselves to such a standard, we will only substitute one brand of social injustice and bias for another, and compromise our moral authority.'

Maine’s chief justice changes bail rules for domestic violence suspects

Matt · 23 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In her annual State of the Judiciary address, Leigh I. Saufley announced that, effective immediately, bail commissioners may not set bail in domestic violence-related cases unless they have access to the defendant’s criminal history in Maine.

...

Bail commissioners sometimes don’t have that information because of varying legal interpretations, technological limitations, law enforcement staffing limitations and miscommunication, according to Saufley.

...

If a bail commissioner does not have a defendant’s criminal history, the defendant will have to remain in jail and appear before a judge within 48 hours, excluding weekends and holidays, Saufley said at a press conference after her speech.

...

The chief justice’s action raised concerns among criminal defense attorneys.

...

The president of the Maine Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers also expressed concern about Saufley’s directive.

“Holding an accused on a crime that is bailable as a matter of right until criminal history information is received is not a novel concept — the problem is that technical limitations on the sharing of this type of information between law enforcement and bail commissioners results in justice being denied and constitutional rights being violated,” Sarah Churchill of Portland said Thursday in an email.

“What the Chief Justice has proposed can be done without violating the rights of the accused if changes are made to how information is shared,” she continued. “I have concerns about how quickly those types of changes can be made and how the potential violations of constitutional rights of the accused are going to be handled in this interim period of time.”'

Tom Martin v LSE's Gender programme: Public Debate press release

Matt · 23 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Tom Martin, the man suing Europe's largest Gender Studies department, at LSE, for sex discrimination in its taught Masters degrees (court date on March 13th), will be discussing the problem of sexist elements within feminism at a public debate at one of London's other elite universities, UCL, at 7:00 PM on Tuesday 28th February, 2012. The debate will take place in Room 309 of the Roberts Building, on UCL's campus. If you would like to attend, then you must email sexismbusters-at-hotmail.com to book your place in advance.

Media practitioners interested in doing a news story or documentary, including filming events at the debate, and around the court case with Tom, should also email sexismbusters-at-hotmail.com.

Tom's legal fighting fund has received 129 donations from 10 countries totaling £4300 so far. Tom thanks all those who have donated, and asks everyone else considering it, to donate now, so he can afford further expert legal advise as he prepares further evidence which must be submitted by March 6th, a week before the all-important court hearing date.

Please keep spreading the word to your networks in any other way you can, as well as follow on Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube.

sexismBusters.org

Alleged battering victim gets 6 months house arrest for killing boyfriend

anthony · 23 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Concord woman who claimed that her boyfriend had died of medical problems pleaded no contest Wednesday to involuntary manslaughter for smothering him with a pillow, a killing her attorney portrayed as the act of a domestic violence victim.

Dava Alizabeth-Ann Steen, 47, was sentenced to six months in jail, which she can serve at home while under electronic monitoring, said her attorney, Public Defender Robin Lipetzky.

...

Steen was initially charged with murder. Judge Garrett Grant of Contra Costa County Superior Court sentenced her to six months at a hearing in Martinez on Wednesday as part of a plea deal.

Lipetzky said Steen wanted to "address the issues in her life that gave rise to this situation in the first place, which includes a long history of domestic violence in a relationship in which she was the victim and (Bennett) was the batterer."'

WILL Magazine: January 2012, Volume 1 Issue 6

Matt · 24 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Dear Brothers,

The latest Issue of WILL magazine has been uploaded to the website.

WILL Magazine Volume 1 Issue 6 has been given a makeover and contains articles by reputed members of society. The main focus of this issue is Female Literacy in India.

http://thewillfoundation.webs.com/documents/January.Volume1.Issue6.pdf

[Alternate download from here.]

We at TWF hope you find it an informative read.

Kindly let us know your feedback.

Thanks & regards,

Anwar H. Danish

Stepmother and grandmother charged in death of girl forced to run in circles for hours

Matt · 24 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ATTALLA, Ala. (AP) — Roger Simpson said he looked down the road and saw a little girl running outside her home but didn't give it another thought. Police, however, said the man witnessed a murder in progress.

Authorities say 9-year-old Savannah Hardin died after being forced to run for three hours as punishment for having lied to her grandmother about eating candy bars. Severely dehydrated, the girl had a seizure and died days later. Now, her grandmother and stepmother who police say meted out the punishment were taken to jail Wednesday and face murder charges.

Witnesses told deputies Savannah was told to run and not allowed to stop for three hours on Friday, an Etowah County Sheriff's Office spokeswoman said. The girl's stepmother, 27-year-old Jessica Mae Hardin, called police at 6:45 p.m., telling them Savannah was having a seizure and was unresponsive.'

Florida Attempts To Reform Lifetime Alimony

insdel2005 · 24 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The Florida legislature attempts to make a modest alimony reform, changing Florida alimony from a lifetime obligation to a "long term support" and feminists along with family law attorneys everywhere oppose it. How predictably revolting.

Feminists at the National Organization of Women are now hypocritically spouting two opposite and irreconcilable lines of attack at the same time, depending what the issue is. Politicians on the national stage have opened more combat roles to women. NOW claims that everyone should support this move because women are every bit as: tough, independent, fearless, and self reliant as men, an assessment I wholeheartedly agree with. But when a few Florida politicians consider ending lifetime alimony, the same organization starts simultaneously claiming that women are defenseless little prairie flowers and must be protected from taking responsibility for their own existence. I wish the National Organization of Women would make up its mind. If you're a Florida resident call your representatives. Excerpt:

'Rep. Ritch Workman's bill (HB 549) cleared the House Judiciary Committee by a 17-1 vote. The bill now goes to the Senate.
...

It would end "permanent" lifetime alimony in favor of "long-term" support that has a foreseeable end. A man with the Florida Alimony Reform group told the committee he was still paying alimony to his wife decades after their divorce because she refuses to work.
...
...Barbara Devane from The National Organization for Women is concerned. “They stay home, they raise the children, and then they get older and the man trades them in for a younger wife, and then they are left out in the cold, and they must be protected,” she says.
...
The Florida Bar Family Law Section also expressed doubts about changing the law, but said it was willing to work with the sponsor to make sure the bill is fair to both sides in a divorce.'

"END OUR SILENCE" - Children4Justice Film

Anonymous · 24 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

200 Children are separated from their Fathers every day in secret Family Courts.

In 2011 The Norgrove Report confirmed Dads have no right in law to see their Children.

1 in 3 Children in the UK is growing up without a father.

4 Million Children have lost their Dads.

Submitted
In The Name Of Our Children and
In The Name Of The Fathers

by Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Lawyer: Lesbians’ assault on gay man can’t be hate crime

Matt · 25 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Three women identified by their lawyers as lesbians were arraigned yesterday on a hate crime charge for allegedly beating a gay man at the Forest Hills T station in an unusual case that experts say exposes the law’s flawed logic.
...
Prosecutors and the ACLU of Massachusetts said no matter the defendants’ sexual orientation, they can still face the crime of assault and battery with intent to intimidate, which carries up to a 10-year prison sentence, by using hateful language.
...
But Carolyn Euell, 38, mother of two of the defendants, Erika Stroud, 21, of Dorchester and Felicia Stroud, 18, West Roxbury, told reporters the alleged attack “can’t be hateful” because both her daughters are lesbians.
...
“The defendants’ particular orientation or alleged orientations have no bearing on our ability to prosecute for allegedly targeting a person who they believe to be different from them,” he said.'

Grassley: Why 'No' to VAWA

Matt · 25 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Sen. Chuck Grassley explains why 8 Republican senators voted to not support Sen. Leahy's Violence Against Women Act reauthorization bill.

'To the Editor:

"Republicans Retreat on Domestic Violence" (editorial, Feb. 10) doesn't recognize the reasons for the lack of support for the Judiciary Committee bill to reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act. The bill fails to recognize the dire fiscal situation, fails to ensure that taxpayer dollars are spent wisely and adds unjustifiable controversial provisions.

My alternative bill provides more assistance for victims than the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee. The inspector general's random audits of the act's grant recipients repeatedly found irregularities and misconduct, including unauthorized and unallowable expenses in 21 of 22 grants. It's only logical to change the committee's bill to ensure that those funds go to help victims.

Also, the committee's bill fails to address testimony at a hearing demonstrating that some immigrants applying for visas falsely claim to be victims of domestic violence.

I object to the editorial's claim that my bill would eliminate the Office on Violence Against Women. Given the poor record of that office in administering these programs efficiently, my bill retains a separate Office on Violence Against Women within an existing Justice Department agency that administers grants. This means that less money is spent on bureaucrats, leaving more funds for victims.

Democrats have insisted on inserting controversial items into the act for which there is no proven need. In doing so, they have prevented Congress from strengthening it as a consensus bill and turned a routine reauthorization into an unnecessary dispute.

CHUCK GRASSLEY
Washington, Feb. 10, 2012'

Georgia House Committe Told How Men Mourn Loss of Unborn Children

Anonymous · 26 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. ("Like"s and comments are very appreciated.) The Georgia House of Representatives is considering a bill to prohibit abortions after the time that the unborn child can feel pain. Some lawmakers have argued that a legislature composed mostly of males should not legislate on abortion, claiming that it is only a women's issue. (Some legislators have even proposed a tongue-in-cheek ban on vasectomies as a way to make this point.) On Friday, February 24, 2012, the House Judiciary Non-Civil Committee heard that many men do mourn the loss of their unborn children.

Reminding members that "it takes two to have a baby," attorney Charles Jones urged the Committee not to disregard men's views on abortion. Jones pointed out the feelings of men who did not have a voice in the abortion room, feelings of "grief," "powerlessness," and "anger," and urged the Committee to make sure that these men do have a voice when it comes to passing laws to protect their unborn children.

Dad arrested, stripped searched for daughter's drawing

MR · 26 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

A Canadian dad has been arrested and strip searched for his 4-year-old daughter's drawing of a terrible, horrible gun that reeks mayhem. After the bad man had been stripped naked, searched, then locked in a cage, they found the ominous, life threatening weapon that put terror in the heart of the poor little girl. It was a toy gun that shoots foam darts.

(sarcasm on) Thank goodness that we presently have Senator Patrick Leahy, and other feminist partisans, working very hard here in America to strengthen the Violence Against Women Act so we can get many more suspiciously male dads and men out of their homes and families and into jails where they all belong. :-/ Excerpt:

'A Canadian father was arrested and strip-searched Wednesday after his 4-year-old daughter drew a picture of a gun in her kindergarten class.

Ontario dad Jesse Sansone told the Toronto Sun his little girl's drawing was supposed to be him, getting monsters and bad guys. Her teacher apparently thought differently, and the school contacted child protective services. When Sansone arrived to pick his daughter up, three police officers were waiting to take him into custody.

"I'm picking up my kids and then, next thing you know, I'm locked up," he told the Waterloo Region Record. "I was in shock. This is completely insane."'

Draft Guidance for Industry and FDA Staff, Availability: Evaluation of Sex Differences in Medical Device Clinical Studies

Minuteman · 27 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'This document provides guidance on the study and evaluation of sex differences in medical device clinical trials, with a specific focus on addressing potential differences in study design, conduct, outcomes, and interpretation that should be considered to ensure sex-specific issues are adequately addressed in clinical trials.

...

The purpose of this guidance is to outline the Center for Devices and Radiological Health's (CDRH's) expectations regarding sex-specific patient enrollment, data analysis, and reporting of study information. The intent is to improve the quality and consistency of available data regarding the performance of medical devices in women.'

F&F: Appoint a Shared Parenting Task Force

Matt · 28 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Latest F&F newsletter here. Excerpt:

'Now is the time for the Massachusetts Legislature to appoint a Shared Parenting Task Force. On the heels of the resounding success of the Massachusetts Alimony Task Force, Fathers and Families wants the same for our children with a Shared Parenting Task Force.

Call your legislator today!

I am asking every Massachusetts Fathers and Families reader to advocate for the Shared Parenting Task Force that our legislative leaders promised. Please call your legislator and tell them or a member of their staff:

Now it is time to produce the single most important reform for the welfare of our children — shared parenting — in the family courts. The legislature used a task force to work out the solution for alimony, please use this same powerful tool for shared parenting for our children. Ask the Judiciary Committee's Chairs to appoint a Shared Parenting Task Force: Senator Cynthia Stone Creem and Representative Eugene L. O'Flaherty.'

Maine Governor Paul LePage Uses Domestic Violence For Martial Law Measures

Matt · 28 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. You have to see it to believe it.

Huggies Thinks Dads are Incompetent

rlaspari · 28 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Seen Huggies latest "Dad Test" campaign? Apparently, Huggies believes dads are bumbling idiots who are incompetent at parenting.

Insemination To Become Reality For Single Women In Sweden

Anonymous · 28 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Today, February 28th, 2012, a child´s right to both its parents and the right to know who the father is, is set to be abolished by the Swedish Government. Excerpt:

'The Centre Party, Liberals (Folkpartiet) and the Moderates want single women to have access to artificial insemination treatment, and are proposing a change to current laws despite opposition from coalition partners the Christian Democrats.
...
"The important thing is not that a child has a biological mother and father, but that children are surrounded by adults who take care of them and love them," she told Sveriges Radio (SR).
...
Although the Christian Democrats do not back the proposal, it is expected to win widespread support in parliament from the left-leaning opposition parties, which have made similar proposals in recent years'

Insemination is to become a reality for single women in Sweden. One of the last steps in building the Feminist Utopia is set to be taken, reference here, page 4 of 5: "Building the Feminist Utopia - The Artificial Society"

Comment by Ulf:
Not a thought about the child´s rights at all. It´s all about the egocentric self-realizing of single women.

"What a bummer, the World keeps getting dumber"
-- NOFX from the song "The Idiots Are Taking Over"

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Australia: "The Circle" faces backlash after mocking war hero

Minuteman · 29 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Network Ten's The Circle is facing a furious backlash from viewers after the hosts mocked war hero Corporal Ben Roberts-Smith, suggesting he was dim-witted and "not up to it in the sack".

The panel was discussing the Victoria Cross recipient after he appeared in a candid Sunday Night profile and aired a shot of him shirtless in a pool.

After one of the hosts commented on Corporal Roberts-Smith's physique, Yumi Stynes said: "He's going to dive down to the bottom of the pool and see if his brain is there".

Then as the shot of the war hero, who single-handedly stormed a machine-gun position in Afghanistan, was displayed again Stynes said "S-A-S" in a mocking voice.

Shortly afterwards veteran journalist George Negus chimes in saying: "What if they're not up to it in the sack?"
...
"What I didn't estimate was how much my joke was not appreciated. I sort of intimated that maybe he wasn't very smart, because how could you be that buff and spend that much time in a gym and be smart as well? And people have been a bit angry and I've been getting a lot of angry messages."'

Australia: Children's Protection (Lawful Surrender of Newborn Child) Amendment Bill (SA) 2011

Minuteman · 29 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The mother of a newborn child who surrenders the child—
(a) into the physical custody of a prescribed person at a hospital or medical practice; or
(b) at a prescribed hospital in a place—
(i) specifically designed for the purpose; and
(ii) designated for the purpose by signs, in accordance with the regulations; or
(c) to some other person or at some other place in accordance with the regulations, will not be liable to prosecution for an offence arising only from that act.

(2) A mother surrendering a child under this section—
(a) is not required to provide identifying information in relation to the child or herself (and a prescribed person, or some other person to whom a child is surrendered in accordance with the regulations, is not required to ask for such information or for information about the age of the child); but
(b) is to be encouraged—
(i) to provide information that may be of relevance to the current or future health of the child; and
(ii) to seek medical treatment or other support services for herself anonymously or otherwise.
...
9D—Adoption or guardianship
(1) The Minister must, as soon as practicable after the surrender of a child under this Part, take action to enable the child to be adopted.'

Blatant sex discrimination in Ireland

Anonymous · 29 February 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TEENAGE boys can continue to be prosecuted for underage sex while teen girls are exempt.

The 'Romeo and Juliet' law is constitutionally sound because it reflects a girl's risk of pregnancy after sex, the Supreme Court ruled yesterday.

The court also said that it was not always possible to apply the same treatment to everyone, especially when it came to different genders.

It stemmed from a 15-year-old boy being charged with having sex with a 14-year-old girl in Donegal on August 5, 2006.
...
The court unanimously ruled the law was constitutional, because lawmakers could take account of the danger of pregnancy for teenage girls in such cases.'

'How Title IX Hurts Female Athletes'

anthony · 1 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The numbers bear it out. Since the advent of Title IX, according to the National Federation of State High School Associations, the number of girls playing high school sports has grown more than tenfold, from 294,000 in 1971 to nearly 3.2 million last year.

But this welcome transformation has come at a serious cost for many female athletes. Title IX has inflicted significant collateral damage, including increased health risks for the players, a drop in the number of women coaches, and increased exposure to sexual abuse.
...

Of special concern for girls is damage to their anterior cruciate ligament, or A.C.L., the tiny ligament in the knee that connects the two halves of the leg. Female athletes are four or five times more likely than male athletes to have A.C.L tears, says Dr. William Levine, the director of sports medicine at Columbia University and the head physician for its varsity teams.

As Dr. Levine explains, once girls begin to menstruate, they become more "quadricep-dependent" than males, and that thick slug of muscle in the middle of the thigh then works against the A.C.L., sometimes causing tears. "Female athletes jump and land in a more erect posture, which puts increased stress on their A.C.L," he says.'

SAVE: Tell Your Senators, Don't Co-Sponsor VAWA

Matt · 1 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Senator Leahy and VAWA supporters are six co-sponsors short of avoiding a filibuster. They are close, but that doesn't mean they will succeed. Not if we get busy and make a few phone calls.

To see if your senators have co-sponsored the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) visit http://thomas.loc.gov/home/thomas.php. Enter bill number S.1925.

If your senators have not become co-sponsors, call and thank them. Let them know that you do NOT want them to become co-sponsors. If your senators have co-sponsored VAWA, call two who haven't.

Tell them not to listen to the "If you're pro-women you're pro-VAWA" line. Remind them that women's groups like the Independent Women's Forum and Concerned Women for America have come out in opposition to VAWA. Or suggest they visit the Women Against VAWA Excess website to see what women really think about VAWA.

Find your senators' phone numbers here: http://www.senate.gov/general/contact_information/senators_cfm.cfm

Have a few extra minutes? Call as many senators as possible who are not on the co-sponsor list.

We can do this, so let's get started...

Call your senators right now!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Vigil at the British Medical Association

Anonymous · 1 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Although the number of boys circumcised in the UK is low by USA levels there is still much public anger at the practice. The reason for the vigil was that the B.M.A. was discussing ethics and once again the non-therapeutic cutting of boy's genitals was not on the agenda. Excerpt:

'Men Do Complain held a vigil on Wednesday 22nd of February outside the B.M.A. Tavistock Square, London WC1H 9JP. We got there at 08:30 and stayed until the rain, cold and wind overcame us. The reason for the vigil was that the B.M.A. were discussing ethics and once again the non-therapeutic cutting of boy's genitals was not on the agenda. The vigil went very well the public really are on our side. Several circumcised men approached us and quite openly said that they were glad someone was taking a stand. One surprise was the number of friendly car hoots and we didn't even have a sign saying hoot if you agree.'

See the Controversial Photo of a Dad Bottle-Feeding His Baby

the_captain · 1 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Breastfeeding activists in New Zealand raised so much of a stink over an ad featuring a dad bottle-feeding his baby that the New Zealand government actually decided to edit the image above out of the ad.

While the government's decision could be viewed as a victory for La Leche League, which protested the ad, some observers have concluded that the decision is a sad day for dads. If a father is going to be involved in the feeding of his new baby, it's only going to happen through a bottle. Even in many families where the baby is drinking breast milk exclusively, Mom is often pumping milk to allow others -- including Dad -- to feed the baby breast milk through a bottle. So, to state the obvious: An ad showing a dad bottle-feeding a baby doesn't mean that the child isn't drinking breast milk. (We won't get into the fact that parents should be allowed to make feeding choices without being judged.)'

Mums should be allowed to terminate new babies - article

GaryB · 2 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This article here from Australia beggars belief.

Apparently, a woman's 'right to choose' should include choosing to terminate a baby, after it is born, according to some philosophers. Apparently though, that's only the mother - fathers don't even get a mention.

I'd comment; but to be honest, I'm lost for words.... Quote:

'KILLING newborn babies should be allowed if the mother wishes, Australian philosophers have argued in a prestigious journal.

Their argument, that it is morally the same as abortion, has forced the British Medical Journal to defend its publication of their views.

In an article that has sparked outrage around the world and elicited death threats, Monash University's Alberto Giubilini and the University of Melbourne's Francesca Minerva say that a foetus and a newborn both lack a sense of life and aspiration.

They argue this justifies "after-birth abortion" on the proviso it is painless as the baby is not missing out on a life it cannot contemplate.

The doctors of philosophy argue in the BMJ publication Journal of Medical Ethics that one-third of infants with Down syndrome are not diagnosed in the womb, which means mothers of children with severe disabilities should have the chance to end a child's life after, as well as before, birth.'

SAVE Advisory: Women Against VAWA Excess

Matt · 2 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Women Against VAWA Excess – WAVE – is dedicated to exposing how the Violence Against Women Act has veered away from its original intended purpose to stop domestic violence. Now, VAWA has come to embrace a radical ideology that marginalizes true victims, harms families, and betrays the ideals of equality feminism.

WAVE invites persons to visit its website, which features articles by Wendy McElroy, Anna Rittgers, and others: http://womenagainstvawa.org/

WAVE also sponsors a Facebook page at http://www.facebook.com/WomenAgainstVAWAExcess?sk=wall. We invite women to drop by and share your experiences and concerns about VAWA and with the domestic violence programs in your area.
For information on submitting an article, contact editor-at-womenagainstvawa.org

Gay men vs lesbians and the right to express affection

Matt · 3 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Syndicated columnist Leonard Pitts, Jr. recently wrote this piece regarding the 'controversy' over the return of a gay US Marine and the reception he received, which included the kissing of his sweetheart, who in fact turned out to be a man. But what Mr. Pitts may not have known about was that a gay military couple had already done the same thing back in 2011 almost immediately after "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" was abolished. Only in that case, the couple was female, the reception was official, and there was not a peep of outrage or controversy over it.

I doubt the Navy would have dared stage such an event with two men as the couple. There seems to me to be a huge double-standard regarding these things. Affection like this (even a relatively chaste kiss) between two women is considered fine (if not also cute or to some, titillating). Lesbians often show affection and their relationship status publicly by kissing and hand-holding without much fear of reprisal from bystanders while gay men wouldn't dare show the same level of affection in typical public places for fear of being 'bashed', admonished, or taunted aggressively by total strangers.

Male equality will not be achieved until men are accepted for who and what they are (criminality aside, of course-- safe to assume we do not accept people's behavior if it includes violence and other obvious forms of overt antisocial behavior). If a man is gay, then he's gay, just as if a woman is gay, then she ought to be accepted as such. But all people regardless of sexual orientation should have the same rights as anyone else-- neither more rights, nor fewer rights. The real controversies exist when people of some given sexual orientation get more rights or are more accepted than others. Assuming tomorrow that all other planks in the MRA platform are achieved, there will still not be equality between the sexes until gay men are as readily accepted in popular culture/society as are gay women. But if a society is going to condemn homosexuality collectively by majority sentiment or decision, it should not be 'more condemnable' if the homosexuals in question just happen to be male, which, it seems to me, is closer to where we're at right now than anything else.

Let's see just how many comments this thread will generate. :)

Same-sex custody battle could change Florida law

Matt · 5 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Again, the Feminist-PC Hooey Machine (I have now hybridized them into one joint acronym: "FPCHM") has no idea what to do when there isn't a man/father around either to blame or exploit. Excerpt:

'TALLAHASSEE, Florida (AP) — A custody battle in Florida between two lesbians could fuel the growing national debate over the definition of motherhood.

It also might force state lawmakers to reconsider a 19-year-old law regarding the rights of sperm and egg donors.
...
But the Brevard County couple separated two years later, and the birth mother eventually left Florida with the child without telling her former lover. The woman who donated the egg and calls herself the biological mother finally tracked them down in Australia with the help of a private detective.
...

"But it does solidify gay couples' right to retain a relationship with their child," she said. "If it goes the other way, parenthood could be subject to risk on the whim of the other partner."

Ultimately, the state Supreme Court may have to wrestle with Judge Monaco's closing sentences: "We still ought to come to grips with what is best for the child. Here, having two parents is better than one."'

Child Abuse Law in Wisconsin

Anonymous · 6 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Finally, somebody with enough balls to tell the truth and is trying to pass a law about it. There are thousands of studies and data to prove this without question - yet it will be political suicide for this guy to try and get this passed. Watch what happens. Excerpt:

'In Wisconsin, a state senator has introduced a bill aimed at penalizing single mothers by calling their unmarried status a contributing factor in child abuse and neglect.

Senate Bill 507, introduced by Republican Senator Glenn Grothman, moves to amend existing state law by "requiring the Child Abuse and Neglect Prevention Board to emphasize nonmarital parenthood as a contributing factor to child abuse and neglect."'

SAVE: Tell Olympia Snowe, Vote No on VAWA

Matt · 6 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

We'd like to express our gratitude. Your calls to Washington DC expressing your opposition to VAWA are having an impact. THANK YOU.

Senator Leahy has not yet convinced enough senators to sign-on to VAWA to avoid a filibuster. Let's make sure he never does.

Today we're asking you to call Senator Olympia J. Snowe, a well-respected centrist from Maine. Known for being at the center of every policy debate in Washington, this is a senator who needs to hear from you.

You can call Sen. Snowe at her Washington DC office: (202) 224-5344.

Your voices are being heard. Keep using them!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Controversial circumcision ritual led to infant's death from herpes, says death certificate

anthony · 7 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CBS News) The New York District Attorney's office is reportedly investigating the death of a 2-week-old boy who underwent metzizah b'peh, a controversial Orthodox Jewish ritual that involves orally sucking the blood from the circumcised baby's penis. According to the unidentified boy's death certificate, he contracted herpes simplex virus type 1 from the ritual, and passed away at a Brooklyn hospital in September 2011, the New York Daily News reported.

"We are looking into the circumstances surrounding the death of this child," said Brooklyn DA spokesman Jerry Schmetterer told the Daily News.

...

Traditional Jewish circumcisions, known as a bris, can also raise a baby's risk for a urinary tract infection, studies suggest. A 2008 study showed that out of 162 babies under two months old hospitalized for urinary tract infections in Israel, 108 were boys, Haaretz reported. "We saw the same phenomenon in each hospital - a wave of urinary tract infections around the ninth day after pregnancy," Prof. Yaakov Amir, who conducted the study, said. There was no discernible time pattern for girls. It was also more common for babies who underwent circumcision by a mohel rather than a physician to suffer from an infection, which could also be due to poor bandaging practices, the study found.'

'A Bad Law on Life Support'

anthony · 7 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bad piece of legislation is about to be reauthorized, empowering bureaucrats and tort lawyers and poisoning relations between women and men. The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) could be fixed, but Senate Democrats will not hear of it.

Vice President Joe Biden says that out of all the legislation that he was associated with while serving in Congress, he is most proud of his role in getting the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) passed in 1994. Now, seventeen years later, even the ranking Democrat on the Senate Judiciary Committee, Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-Vermont), admits that the bill is too broad to be effective. An expert in family violence, Dr. Angela Moore Parmley, concurs: "We have no evidence to date that VAWA has led to a decrease in the overall levels of violence against women." To the contrary, some studies indicate an increase in violence against women since VAWA was enacted, including in one study a 60-percent increase in intimate partner homicides.

VAWA has created a vast bureaucracy with an annual price tag of $455 million. Instead of addressing the root problems of violence and ending battering, the broad definitions of violence in VAWA mean that husbands are thrown in jail based on flimsy allegations of causing "emotional distress" or of "unpleasant speech." Meanwhile, drug-addicted boyfriends and alcoholic cohabitors continue to batter, and all men are assumed to be capable of violence.'

UK: Law launch 'perpetuates the women-only myth' of abuse

anthony · 7 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Police chiefs have been criticised for “perpetuating the myth” that only women can be the victims of domestic violence after they outraged campaigners with the launch of the so-called “Clare’s Law”.

Wiltshire Police is one of just four forces in the country given the new powers, which will let people know if partners have a history of domestic abuse. Around one incident of domestic violence in every six reported involves a male victim, though campaigners believe the problem is worse.

But when Wiltshire Police announced the start of the trial in the county yesterday, they only referred to women checking on new partners.'

India: Products, benefits that only women get

anthony · 7 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Income-tax benefits

Under the current tax regime, women pay less tax than men. For example, for the assessment year (AY) 2012-2013, the tax exemption limit for women is Rs. 1.9 lakh. In other words, no tax is to be paid on Rs. 1.9 lakh of your salary. However, for men this limit is Rs. 1.8 lakh.

So a woman who earns an annual salary of Rs. 10 lakh will need to pay around Rs. 1.18 lakh as income-tax. In comparison, the male counterpart will need to pay Rs. 1.19 lakh tax. This tax liability is assuming that both have availed section 80C and 80CCF deductions of Rs. 1.2 lakh.

Fading advantage: Earlier, the difference was larger, but has narrowed down over the years and works to just around Rs. 1,000 for AY 2012-2013. In AY 2011-2012, the exemption limit for men and women were Rs. 1.6 lakh and Rs. 1.9 lakh, a difference of around Rs. 3,000 in total tax liability. In fact, the Direct Taxes Code (DTC) proposes to completely wipe out the difference. Under the proposed DTC, both men and women will have the same exemption limit of Rs. 2 lakh.'

CDC Features - National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day 2012

Minuteman · 8 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'March 10 is National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day, a day to recognize the special risks HIV/AIDS pose for women and girls, and to raise awareness of the disease's impact on them.
...
Personal factors also put all women at risk for HIV, regardless of age, race, or ethnicity.

* Heterosexual sex puts women at risk for HIV. It is important to know a male partner's HIV status and insist upon condom use during sexual encounters.
* Unprotected vaginal sex puts women at risk for HIV, and unprotected anal sex places women at an even greater risk for HIV transmission.
* Women who have experienced sexual abuse may use drugs as a coping mechanism, find it difficult to refuse unwanted sex, exchange sex for drugs, or engage in risky sexual behaviors, all of which increase HIV transmission risk.
...

What Can Women Do?

There are several ways you can reduce your risk for getting HIV. Below are a few things you can do to look out for yourself and stay healthy.

1. Don't have sex.
Abstaining from sex means not having any type of sex at all—oral, anal, or vaginal. Abstinence is 100% effective in preventing sexual transmission of HIV.
...
I know unprotected sex with a man is risky. But what about having sex with women?

Though the risk of getting HIV through vaginal secretions and menstrual blood is well-documented, there are no confirmed cases of HIV transmissions by female-to-female sexual contact. Nonetheless, women who have sex with women should also use the steps listed above to protect themselves from HIV.'

Were single mothers better off in the 19th Century?

Broadsword · 8 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

As far back as the 1800s, single mothers were receiving benefits. At that time, they would be paid up front and in cash, but were they better off than today?

...

Cambridge historian Dr Samantha Williams has examined an early form of welfare in England and Wales called the Old English Poor Law. Under it, poor relief - as it was then called - was given out by the local parish. Looking at the plight of poor families in two Bedfordshire communities between 1760 and the Poor Law Amendment Act of 1834, her research reveals that a generous benefits system existed in parts of England.

...

If a single pregnant mother wanted to claim poor relief before 1834, she had to go before two judicial officers and swear on the paternity of her child's father under oath. No other proof was needed. She would then receive benefits up front and the officials would try to reclaim money back from the father.

The "bastardy examinations" - as they were called - required the father to pay back all the childbirth expenses, the legal expenses it cost to pursue him and regular maintenance payments for the child, similar to child maintenance payments today.'

Rabbis: Circumcision Death Investigation Could Force Mohels Underground

anthony · 9 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week, the Brooklyn district attorney confirmed that prosecutors are investigating the circumstances surrounding the death of a two-week old infant who died last fall in Brooklyn after he contracted herpes from a religious circumcision at Maimonides Medical Center. Now, rabbis are worried that the investigation may send mohels who perform the metzitzah b'peh ritual into back alley circumcisions: "The worst thing that could happen is if the authorities regulate this practice, then it could go underground," Rabbi David Zwiebel, the executive vice president of Agudath Israel of America, told the Times.

"I think the practice would continue, but there could be significant difficulty in gathering evidence. I would hope that our government officials take steps in conjunction with the community," he said. The cause of death for the boy, who died last September, was listed as "disseminated herpes simplex virus Type 1, complicating ritual circumcision with oral suction."

...

Rabbi Zwiebel believes roughly two-thirds of newborn boys in the city's Orthodox communities are circumcised through metzizah b' peh, in which a rabbi or mohel removes blood from the wound with his mouth. He added that Orthodox community leader, who are loathe to work with police on these matters, are aware of the risk of herpes from the practice: "We're not oblivious to what's going on."'

Family stonewalling authorities after newborn dies from herpes contracted in ritual circumcision

anthony · 9 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Authorities are being stonewalled by the family of a newborn boy who died after contracting herpes through a controversial religious circumcision ritual, the Daily News has learned.

Multiple sources in the Orthodox Jewish community said the 2-week-old boy's parents were related to a herpes-infected rabbi who conducted the circumcision according to tradition — using one's mouth to remove blood from the wound.

The Brooklyn District Attorney's Office is investigating the death and trying to identify the rabbi, or mohel, but family members have not been cooperative, sources said.

"You guys are barking up the right tree," a law enforcement source said of word that the mohel was related to the boy. "But we don't know yet who did what."

City health officials have criticized the religious practice, saying that putting the open wound into contact with the mouth of the rabbi carries "inherent risks" for the infant.'

Sydney Professor Pushes Routine Circumcision New Zealand

anthony · 9 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A study that highlights the importance of circumcision in New Zealand is pushing for routine practice on male infants in the country, but medical experts in the country disagrees, the New Zealand Herald reports.

Circumcision reduces the risk of infections, cancer and other health issues, and as such, male infants should be subjected to it routinely, a study claims.

Sydney University Professor of Medicine Brian Morris led a team of 12 medical experts to conduct the study.

Their report revealed the risk of urinary tract infection and kidney inflammation was 10 times greater in uncircumcised babies than those circumcised.'

F&F: New Child Support Rules Seize Social Security, Disability, and Veterans Benefits

Matt · 9 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Spud McConnell, a well-known movie actor, also hosts a popular New Orleans talk radio show, Talk Gumbo on New Orleans radio station WWL—AM 870/FM105.3. On February 28, 2012, Fathers and Families' Chairman of the Board Ned Holstein, MD, appeared on the show to discuss new child support rules promulgated by the federal government....

In yet another measure that will harm children instead of helping them, the new rule effects how much money can be seized for payment of child support arrearages from people who receive federal benefits, such as social security, disability and veterans' payments.'

Police: daughter kept dad's body in ice chest

Matt · 9 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Louisiana woman apparently kept her father's severed body in an ice chest at her apartment for at least two years as she collected his Social Security check, police said.

At some point, she cut off his hands so that identifying him would be difficult, authorities said, but she never dumped his body as she had planned. The woman and her roommate recently went to police to tell their story after deputies came to the apartment when they wouldn't let maintenance workers inside the home.'

SAVE: Tell Senator Kelly Ayotte, Vote No on VAWA

Matt · 9 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) is up for reauthorization. Since it was first introduced in 1994, this nice-sounding bill has been described as the solution to domestic violence. And most people believed that claim, as evidenced by its 2005 reauthorization.

That all changed once Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) and victims' groups started educating the public and staffers on Capitol Hill about the problems with VAWA.

SAVE wants accountability added to stop the misuse of grant monies. We want restrictions removed so advocates can open shelters primarily for abused men. And, among other things, we want accreditation to be mandatory, to stop the widespread promotion of inaccurate "facts."

Today we're asking you to call Kelly Ayotte, a senator from New Hampshire who is committed to upholding the Constitution. Please ask her to vote NO on VAWA. You can call Sen. Ayotte at her Washington DC office: 202-224-3324.

Thank you so much for taking action on this important issue.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

'Connecting boys to the feminist movement'

anthony · 9 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Connecting girls, inspiring futures. The theme for this year's International Women's Day is a call to action for women to involve their daughters, communities to involve their young girls.

By engaging with them we can connect them to the rich history of women before them, to each other through community involvement, to the world at large through social media. Raising our daughters to understand the issues of their gender and empowering them to act on injustice is one of the most important things mothers can do.

But our son's need the same instruction. If they're white, middle-to-upper class, and male, then they are the power set. Feminism has come beyond the days of male-bashing and bra-burning — if indeed they really existed at all as part of feminism. But our society has not come beyond the days of men on top and women on bottom, despite how good it looks on the surface.

How ideal, then, to infiltrate that group up top with men who understand the issues and concerns of women. Without men who are willing to listen and engage in change, the goals of feminism would stall.'

Tom Martin interviewed on BBC Radio, and in New Statesman

Matt · 9 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Has feminism left men behind?

John Rutherford argues in the New Statesman this week that the language of feminism fails to engage the support of men plunged into a 'perpetual adolescence' by economic and social inequalities. So how can feminism engage with men more successfully? Jenni Murray talks to Helen Lewis, Assistant Editor of the New Statesman magazine, and to Tom Martin, who is currently suing LSE for alleged sex discrimination, and is founder of sexismbusters.org

You can read the article, listen to the interview, and donate to Tom's legal fighting fund, at http://sexismbusters.org/.

Gloria Allred seeks Rush Limbaugh prosecution

anthony · 10 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Rush Limbaugh has drawn the ire of celebrity lawyer Gloria Allred, who sent a letter to the Palm Beach County state attorney requesting an investigation into whether the popular radio host should be prosecuted for calling a law student a “slut” and “prostitute” last week.

“Mr. Limbaugh targeted his attack on a young law student who was simply exercising her free speech and her right to testify before congress on a very important issue to millions of American women and he vilified her. He defamed her and engaged in unwarranted, tasteless and exceptionally damaging attacks on her,” Allred told POLITICO Friday afternoon. “He needs to face the consequences of his conduct in every way that is meaningful.”
...

In a letter dated March 8, Allred, writing on behalf of the Women’s Equal Rights Legal Defense and Education Fund, requested that Palm Beach County State Attorney Michael McAuliffe probe whether the conservative radio personality had violated Section 836.04 of the Florida Statutes by calling Georgetown University law student Sandra Fluke the two derogatory words.

The statute stipulates that anyone who “speaks of and concerning any woman, married or unmarried, falsely and maliciously imputing to her a want of chastity” is guilty of a misdemeanor of the first degree. Allred explained that the statute recently came to her attention as having never been repealed, and that it could very well apply to Limbaugh’s remarks as his show is broadcast from West Palm Beach.
...
She added, “Hitting him economically is one price that he has to pay. He needs to be accountable in every way possible.”'

Canada: Younger men are opting for vasectomies

anthony · 10 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Andrew Masuda likes his friends' children well enough, but he's sure that he never wants to have any of his own.

Two weeks ago, the 38-year-old Toronto man underwent a vasectomy.

"I first started thinking about getting a vasectomy when I was 17," says Masuda, who adds that his family, friends and girlfriend are supportive of his decision.
...
"(A vasectomy) should be considered a permanent procedure," says Aquino. "If a man or a couple is asking a lot of questions about reversals, that's a red flag for me. I'd suggest they spend more time thinking about whether they are really ready to proceed."'

DOJ Director on Violence Against Women in the United States

anthony · 10 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In one of the most in-depth discussions to date on violence against women in the United States, and to coincide with International Women's Day, I interviewed Susan B. Carbon, Director of the United States Department of Justice's Office on Violence Against Women (OVW).

Ms. Carbon was nominated to this position by President Barack Obama on October 1, 2009 and confirmed by the United States Senate on February 11, 2010. As Director, she serves as the liaison between the Department of Justice and federal, state, tribal, and international governments on crimes of domestic violence, sexual assault, dating violence and stalking. In this role, she is responsible for developing the Department's legal and policy positions regarding the implementation of the Violence Against Women Act and oversees an annual budget of nearly $400 million.

...

Susan Carbon: Although violent crime has decreased nationwide, the crimes of domestic violence, dating violence, sexual assault, and stalking still devastate the lives of too many women, men, youth, and children. Since then-Senator Biden brought national attention to crimes of violence against women in hearings in 1990, we have learned more about their shocking prevalence. One in every four women and one in every seven men have experienced severe physical violence by a current or former spouse, boyfriend, or girlfriend.'

Rush Limbaugh needs to be silenced by FCC, argue Gloria Steinem, et al.

anthony · 10 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A group of well-known feminists is calling for Rush Limbaugh's head - and they want radio listeners to help fire him.

In an editorial posted on CNN.com Saturday, Gloria Steinem, Jane Fonda and Robin Morgan urged listeners to file complaints with the FCC in hopes that the government agency will yank the licenses of radio stations that air his show — and thus silence the controversial conservative.

Limbaugh's syndicator, Clear Channel Communications, has backed the host since he called Sandra Fluke, a third-year Georgetown law student, a "slut" and "prostitute" over her support of insurance coverage of birth control.

"If Clear Channel won't clean up its airways, then surely it's time for the public to ask the FCC a basic question: Are the stations carrying Limbaugh's show in fact using their licenses "in the public interest?" the trio wrote.

The editorial says it's not about Limbaugh's political views, but more about his "toxic hate speech" on the airwaves.

"For 20 years, Limbaugh has hidden behind the First Amendment, or else claimed he's really 'doing humor' or 'entertainment.' He is indeed constitutionally entitled to his opinions, but he is not constitutionally entitled to the people's airways," they argue.'

The 72,000 problem families with no father and no male role model

Anonymous · 11 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'About 72,000 of the most troubled families, 60 per cent of those being targeted by the Government, are headed by a single mother. The rate is about triple the national average.

An official review into the causes of last summer's riots is expected to highlight the lack of "male role models" for many of the youths arrested in the wake of the widespread disturbances.

The riot panel, set up to investigate the problem, is thought to have become frustrated that few details of the family backgrounds of problem children have previously been recorded, despite it being such an important influence on their behaviour.

...

Last night, Eric Pickles, the Communities and Local Government Secretary, said: "These troubled families are in total breakdown. The absence of a positive father figure is a huge problem and often the fathers who are present have severe drug and alcohol addictions and are not working.

"Clearly we want to work towards a situation where the fathers in these families provide stability, which means getting them back to work, so they can bring in money and be a positive role model to their children."'

FOX Video: "Benefits of male circumcision"

anthony · 11 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Mar 11, 2012 - 3:05 - Medical experts warn procedure's benefits outweigh any minor risks

Video here. [See first comment for FOX contact info.]

Baby's Death Renews Debate Over a Circumcision Ritual

anthony · 11 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Prosecutors are investigating the death of a newborn boy who died in September after contracting herpes through a controversial practice of ritual circumcision, reviving a debate in New York over safety and religious freedom.

The Brooklyn district attorney, Charles J. Hynes, confirmed on Wednesday that the investigation was continuing, but declined to comment further.

The cause of death of the 2-week-old boy, who died at Maimonides Hospital in Brooklyn on Sept. 28, was Type 1 herpes, caused by "ritual circumcision with oral suction," according to the medical examiner's office.

The ritual of oral suction — or in Hebrew, metzitzah b'peh — is practiced almost exclusively in ultra-Orthodox communities and, to a lesser degree, in Orthodox Jewish communities, despite efforts by the city to curtail it and educate communities about its health risks. The procedure occurs during the circumcision ritual of the bris, as the practitioner, or mohel, removes the foreskin of the penis and then sucks the blood from the wound to clean it.
...
In 2005, Mayor Michael R. Bloomberg assembled rabbis throughout the city to try to persuade them to move away from metzitzah b'peh. But they said that the practice was safe and that there was no definitive evidence that it caused herpes. "The Orthodox Jewish community will continue the practice that has been practiced for over 5,000 years," Rabbi David Niederman of the United Jewish Organization in Williamsburg, Brooklyn, said at the time. "'We do not change. And we will not change."'

"Women a driving force behind higher volunteerism rate"

Matt · 12 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

More from the "They're just plain better" Dept., here. At least this time it's sort-of-kind-of acknowledged that one reason you see men volunteering less is, shocker, they're out earning the money that women spend or have spent on them. Still, it doesn't stop the article from touting women as being so much better than men, but of course, they are also under so much pressure to be good volunteers. Read:

'WASHINGTON — Looking for volunteers?

The person most likely to say yes is a married white woman between 35 and 44 who's a college graduate, works part time and has at least one child under 18, according to a Bureau of Labor Statistics survey released last month.

For millions of women who fit that profile, the findings are no surprise. They know the social pressure to help out as classroom moms, PTA volunteers, sports team coaches, snack moms at soccer games, cookie sale coordinators for the Girl Scouts and a multitude of other self-sacrificing assignments.
...
Fran Weisberg, co-chair of the Women's Leadership Council of the United Way of Greater Rochester, said she was not surprised by the Bureau of Labor Statistics findings.

"I believe there is something unique, a certain empathy and caring that we as women have, either through our personal experiences or a sense of understanding and compassion," she said. "I do believe women are more apt to volunteer and to give and say 'I believe I can make a difference in the lives of others.'"'

Galled?

Read this:

'Nationally, men volunteered at a rate 6.4 percentage points lower than women, according to the federal survey. And their participation was almost unchanged from the year before.

Westchester County resident Diane Luftig, 42, of New Rochelle said her husband, Larry, would volunteer more but doesn't have the time. He works long days as a banker, heading out at 5:30 a.m. weekdays to commute to lower Manhattan's financial district.

Allison DiMarco, 40, of Penfield cites the same issue — long work hours — as the major obstacle for her husband, Rich, who works in construction.

"The men have to be the breadwinners," she said.'

On the surface, somewhat "vindicating", as if it's presumed all good people do or should volunteer. (What would that famous female economist, Ayn Rand, have said about such a statement, I wonder?). I'll tell you what galls me about that statement: It's the presumption that men HAVE to be the breadwinners. No, we don't. Fact is, we can be whatever the hell we feel like being and if others don't or won't accept it, then bye-bye to them.

Article: "The Sorry Lives and Confusing Times of Today's Young Men"

TCM · 12 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The subtitle: "They don't have jobs. They're dropping out of college. They play video games all day and watch porn all night. Even their sperm counts are low. Why won't guys grow up?"

Discriminating against men and boys in employment and education, and then blaming them for being unemployed and uneducated, is like breaking someone's legs and then blaming them because they can't walk. Such is, unfortunately, the kind of treatment we have become accustomed to for the past forty years. As we may observe in this article and broader society, men are unique in that society regards their vulnerabilities as opportunities not to come to their aid, but to mock them for their very condition of being vulnerable. Note, however, the defiant comments in the article. Note the unity of their message. Note their passion, their choice of rhetoric, the targets of their scrutiny! No longer content to be the beasts of burden for a society that denies their suffering and mocks their existence, Men are Going Their Own Way, at last. Excerpt:

'THE WOMEN ARE IRATE. The women are talking about men, young men, the men they'd like to date and marry, and are they ever pissed. Here's what they're saying:

"All they want is sex. They don't care about relationships."

"They're so lazy."

"All they do is play video games."

"They aren't men. They're boys."

The women are a little bewildered. They're good girls. They followed the script: did well in high school, got into college, worked hard there, got out, got jobs, started looking around for someone special to share life with, and …

"I met a guy the other night. Good-looking, smart. Twenty-eight years old. He still lives at home. With his mom." Young men are now nearly twice as likely as young women to live with their parents; 59 percent of guys ages 18 to 24 and 19 percent of 25-to-34-year-olds live at home. Based on those Census Bureau stats, 64,000 young Philly men have returned to or never left the nest—and they all have mothers, ex-girlfriends, grandmothers, dads and other friends and relations worrying about their plight.'

'Abortion is not for women, it is for men' - Men to 'blame' for abortion?

anthony · 12 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'Jessica Valenti's op-ed "A war on women" (March 5) would have been better titled "A war on Republicans." Abortion is not for women, it is for men! Men who engage in sexual acts forced or consensual and take no responsibility for the intercourse that could result in pregnancy.

Abortion is not a choice, it is a consequence. The slogan "A woman's right to choose" is erroneous.

Many women do not show up at abortion clinics because they choose. Most women did not willingly plan an unwanted pregnancy, did they? No, it is a consequence of a sex act that resulted in "whoops" or a sex act they were forced to have unwillingly. In either case, the man is accountable, and it was his choice!

There are many men enjoying the pleasures of sex and loving the slogan "A woman's right to choose" because they reap the fruit of the pleasure of sex without the consequence and responsibility of caring for the woman or the unwanted pregnancy.'

The Democrat War on Men – Contraception Mandate Obfuscation at Its Finest

anthony · 12 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'COMMENTARY | The effort to turn the protest of employers with religious objections against bearing the expense of contraception coverage into a Republican war on women wasn't enough. A certain Democrat has now launched an official and quite blatant war against men.

...

Seriously -- now the liberals want men to provide "a notarized affidavit signed by a sexual partner affirming impotency" to get a prescription for Viagra?" How about we add a similar clause to the Obamacare contraception mandate that a woman must submit a notarized affidavit signed by a sex partner that she can achieve a measurable level of sexual arousal/pleasure before she can qualify for receiving birth control? Women have been faking orgasms since the dawn of man. Imagine having to prove you really "had one." How's that for an achievement of ultimate gender equality?

Still, while Turner's self-righteous rant sounds well and good and might serve to rally quite a few of her fellow disgruntled feminists into a frothy "gotcha" lather, what's ultimately missing from Turner's endeavor to debase the male species is any evidence that A) an unconceived child's life would be a stake in a man's decision to take Viagra and B) that any of the men requesting a prescription are demanding that someone else pay for it.'

The Southern Poverty Law Center Award for Men's Rights Advocacy

Matt · 12 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Via email, tongue-in-cheek for sure:

The Southern Poverty Law Center published a wonderful list of some of the most thought provoking and sympathetic websites that anyone with an interest in men's rights could hope to find. The sites that made this list:

Alcuin (has since been made private for only select viewers)
http://alcuin-constant.blogspot.com/

BOYCOTT AMERICAN WOMEN
http://boycottamericanwomen.blogspot.com/

The Counter Feminist
http://counterfem.blogspot.com/

The False Rape Society
http://falserapesociety.blogspot.com/

In Mala Fide
http://www.inmalafide.com/

MarkyMark's Thoughts
http://markymarksthoughts.blogspot.com/

MensActivism
http://news.mensactivism.org/

Reddit: Mens Rights (a news aggregator rather than a blog proper) http://www.reddit.com/r/MensRights/

RooshV
http://www.rooshv.com/

SAVE Services
http://www.saveservices.org/

The Spearhead
http://www.the-spearhead.com/

A Voice for Men
http://www.avoiceformen.com/

The SPLC is a well-funded organization that put lots of effort into researching these sites. All sites that made the final cut receive good traffic, are well written, and are seen as credible rebuttals to the refusal of the feminist lobby to concede equal rights to men, particularly in separation and divorce.

Ignore the useless verbiage on the list which can be found here.

The verbiage dismisses all legitimate men's rights issues on the grounds that some of the comments on men's rights sites are a little angry. It goes without saying that the occasional angry comment by some man who has suffered false rape or domestic violence accusations, or who at the behest of his ex spouse has been forcibly denied his children or property by the family courts, has to be separated from the validity of the movement's underlying issues. No reasonable person would so completely lose sight of those issues because of such comments as the SPLC has done, just as no reasonable person would say that comments made in anger by those who had experienced concentration camps, slavery, genocide, or rape could ever invalidate the legitimate grievances of the victims.

It's truly an honor to all who received this recognition. There are a great many blogs out in the manosphere and it takes hard work to rise to the top. Keep up the great work!

Media bashing of males damaging

anthony · 12 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'Madam -- I was concerned by some of the remarks made by Jody Corcoran (Sunday Independent, March 4, 2012).

"He is like men everywhere. They shout, they roar, they threaten. Eventually they may calm down but the damage is done. O Cuiv, like most men, will realise he should have listened to the voice of reason, which is usually the voice of a woman."

If a male journalist made negative generalisations about women, and implied that men were, on average, more reasonable than women, it is hard to believe that would be published on your front page.

Misandry in the media is prevalent and damaging. Our boys need to grow up feeling positive about their gender. Comments like Jody Corcoran's surreptitiously remove positive value from maleness.'

Florida parents force son to stand on corner with sign as punishment for bad grades

anthony · 12 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MIAMI – A Miami seventh-grader's parents are forcing their son to stand on a street corner with a sign describing his failures in school after he got bad grades, WSVN reports.

Michael Bell. Jr. will be spending his spring break on a street corner near his home after he came home with a report card containing three failing grades. His teachers also reported he was a "class clown."

In accordance with this report, the front of Michael's sign reads: "Hey, I want to be a class clown. Is it wrong?"

The back of the sign says: "I'm in the 7th grade and got 3 F's. Blow your horn if there's something wrong with that."'

Lisalyn Jacobs cops a plea

anthony · 12 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video: http://vimeo.com/38342545

Lisalyn Jacobs, the woman who assaulted Daddy Justice, agreed to a plea deal.

Unwed Fathers Receive Rights to Infant Children

Anonymous · 13 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

By Jeffery M. Leving

Unwed biological fathers are often told they have no rights when it comes to their infant children when placed for adoption. The fact they fathered their child is not considered important when the mother decides, on her own, to give the infant child up for adoption in certain circumstances.

But, this gender disparity in equal protection and due process in parental rights is changing.

Recently, the State of Utah adopted House Bill 308 that is designed to safeguard unwed paternal rights in regards to children six months or younger from being adopted. This law would require unwed fathers to be issued official notification of the mother's intention to give their infant child up for adoption in certain circumstances. Once received, the father would then have 30 days to assert his rights as a parent and petition the court for custody. This closes a loophole which had allowed mothers to circumvent notifying the biological father and thus committing the ultimate act of parental alienation – terminating the father-child relationship forever.

Common sense and fair play would argue that if an unwed mother decides to give up her rights to a child, then the biological father would automatically be given the opportunity to take custody of his child. Instead, a stranger can be given the right to adopt the child, often without the father even knowing he will never see his child again.

All too often these points are treated unreasonably in many states because too many jurisdictions have rejected the rights of fathers regarding infant children born outside of marriage.

The mother, it is aggressively argued, bears the burden of child birth and therefore should be the sole parent overseeing the child's well-being and future relationship with the birth father. This not only doesn't make sense, but can strip children of someone who has a natural biological drive to protect them – their own father.

Utah isn't the only state that has begun to tear down these antiquated attitudes against biological fathers.

Recently, a legislative initiative evolved in the State of Michigan to adopt a similar law involving putative fathers. This House Bill (HB 4067), which, among other things, would allow biological fathers the right to seek to establish paternity even if the child's mother was married to another man between the time the child was conceived and born.

The new Michigan legislation would provide a detailed mechanism to establish paternity for a biological father as previous statues automatically granted paternity to the marital father.

Again, common sense would dictate that the biological father, the one who conceived the child with the mother, would have rights to establish paternity and custody, but this is not always the case. Existing laws in many states not only ignore the rights of the father, but ignore the rights of the child. Who better to enjoy the legal right to defend a child's health, education, and welfare than their biological, natural father when mom walks away?

The rights of fathers should be balanced against the rights of mothers when it comes to safeguarding the well-being of their children. Equal protection and due process should exist in every state regardless of gender and marital status. Unwed fathers should not be wrongfully excluded from making decisions that are necessary in raising their children, including education, religious training, and health care. This is critical in this nation where approximately 33.1% of children are born out of wedlock.

However, if there is a child placement disagreement, the child's future is too often decided based on parental gender and marital status.

Unwed fathers' rights legislation will hopefully be enacted into law in both Utah and also in Michigan and spread throughout the nation. These are steps in the right direction to correct this unfair imbalance. Constitutional rights must apply to unwed fathers and their children too.

Jeffery M. Leving is the author of Fathers' Rights and Divorce Wars, as well as the soon to be released How to Be a Good Divorced Dad, which garnered praise from President Barack Obama and an endorsement from Francis Cardinal George of the Archdiocese of Chicago. He also co-authored the Illinois Joint Custody Law and is the founder of http://dadsrights.com. Leving is a dedicated matrimonial attorney focusing on what is best for the children – a relationship with both parents.

Is feminism sexist?

anthony · 13 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Does feminism discriminate against men? Tom Martin thinks so. Today, the former MSc student at the gender studies institute of the London School of Economics sued the university for misleading advertising and breach of equality legislation, on the basis that the course promotes a "sexist agenda".

Martin, who has raised £4,300 to fund his case at the central London county court, argues that feminism makes women think of themselves as victims, and that it promotes a discourse which "excludes mention of men" and the inequalities they face, such as increased risk of homelessness and subjection to hypergamy (gold-digging), which his website claims is "prevalent among most of the world's women".

Martin would like to see the gender studies course incorporate male studies, a burgeoning field in America backed by the likes of Warren Farrell, the controversial author of such books as The Myth of Male Power. A substantial part of the evidence that he will be using for his case is the language of the core texts for the LSE course, which he believes establish an "all women good, all men bad" binary, while research that is "articulate and forthright on men's problems" is systematically blocked.'

SAVE: Tell Senators Corker and Alexander, Vote No on VAWA

Matt · 13 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

As we've mentioned before, the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) is up for reauthorization. VAWA has many short-comings. Last week we told you about the lack of accountability and accreditation. Today we're focusing on VAWA's lack of equal protection.

VAWA provides legal assistance to accusers, but not to the accused. Read "My Son Had No Chance to Prove His Innocence" (http://womenagainstvawa.org/mother-my-son-had-no-chance-to-prove-his-innocence) to see how VAWA is negatively impacting innocent families.

Senator Leahy is still trying to get enough co-sponsors to avoid a filibuster, but he hasn't succeeded yet. We need to make sure he doesn't get any more.

Today we're asking you to call senators Bob Corker and Lamar Alexander of TN. Call Sen. Corker at his Washington DC office: 202-224-3344, and call Sen. Alexander at his office: (202) 224-4944.

We're holding the line. Don't let go now!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

"Access Denied: Sex strike to hit the US" otomo · 14 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Liberal Ladies Who Lunch, a women's right group that says they strive to turn "America blue, one plate at a time," is waging a sex strike starting next month that they hope will combat infringements on their personal liberties being waged by conservatives. With women's rights issues being debated in the mainstream lately by the likes of lawmakers looking to deny the right to choose and commentators deeming pro-choice women as sluts, the strike scheduled for next month seems more than just well timed.

According to the group's latest call to action, this protest won't rely on picket signs and chants to get a message across. Instead, Liberal Ladies Who Lunch are asking women to wage a sex strike to "united against the war on women."

"Why are we taking a stand to protect women's rights in 2012? Because not that long ago a group of brave women took a stand, and in some cases a beating, to give us the right to vote," explains the group via Facebook, stressing the importance of the American suffrage movement in securing women the right to vote. "Younger men and women may not remember the 'good old days' when the only reproductive choice we had was to deny men access to sex. In truth, if we lose our hard won rights to medical care, birth control and pregnancy choice, it won't only affect women. Men will have to go back to the days when they waited for or paid for sex," explains the group.

To help make a chance, the group is asking like-minded women to align with them for a sex strike starting on April 28 and extending a week later until May 5.'

Their FB page: https://www.facebook.com/LiberalLadiesWhoLunch

And a FB group against this insanity: https://www.facebook.com/groups/291954670873658

Exclusive: Banned Mohel Still Apparently Performing ‘Metzitzah’

Anonymous · 14 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A mohel who was ordered to stop the circumcision practice of metzitzah b’peh in 2007 by the New York State Department of Health is apparently still engaging in the controversial practice of “oral suction,” The Jewish Week has learned.

...

In 2005, it was reported that Rabbi Fischer had been linked to the infections of three infants, one of whom died, with the herpes simplex 1 virus. All three infants were circumcised by Rabbi Fischer in New York State. At the time, the city ordered Rabbi Fischer to stop practicing metzitzah b’peh temporarily while it investigated the matter.

...

In 2007, after Rabbi Fischer was linked to another case of neonatal herpes in May of that year, he was prohibited under Section 16 of the Public Health Law by the state Department of Health from performing metzitzah b’peh “in and throughout the state of New York.” Rabbi Fischer was also prohibited from engaging in any other practice in which he “[allows his] mouth or oral fluids to come in direct contact with an infant’s genitals...”'

F&F: Oregon Will Fine for False Reports of Child Abuse

Matt · 15 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an effort to keep people from maliciously filing false reports of child abuse in the midst of divorce, custody fight, or other domestic conflict, the Oregon Legislature passed legislation making it a Class A violation resulting in a $750 fine.

One of our members, Gordon Hillesland, has tracked this legislation through the Oregon House and Senate. Ten years ago, his wife accused him of abusing his children when she was seeking a divorce. The accusations, even though he was never charged, ruined his life.'

Department of State: Celebrating International Women's Day by Investing in Women and Girls

Minuteman · 15 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Ambassador Eric Goosby serves as U.S. Global AIDS Coordinator, and Melanne Verveer serves as Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues.

As we observe Women's History Month throughout March, we celebrate the work pioneered by advocates, policymakers, and practitioners around the world to advance women's rights. Promoting the rights of women and addressing gender inequities and gender norms are essential steps to reducing HIV risk and increasing access to HIV prevention, care and treatment services -- for both women and men.

The Secretary's Office of Global Women's Issues (S/GWI) and the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) are committed to advancing the rights and health of women and girls around the world. Under the leadership of President Obama and Secretary Clinton, the United States has put women and girls front and center in the three pillars of our foreign policy -- diplomacy, development, and defense.
...

Today, at the National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day event at the White House, we announced a joint S/GWI and PEPFAR initiative. We will support civil society organizations with small grants to prevent and respond to gender-based violence (GBV), with a link to HIV prevention, treatment or care.
...
The White House also released a Presidential Memorandum establishing a working group to explore the intersection of HIV/AIDS, violence against women and girls, and gender-related health disparities in the United States -- and will include lessons learned from our international work in this area.
...
As we move forward globally, we will continue to focus on several key objectives -- including reducing GBV and coercion; engaging men and boys to address norms and behavior; increasing women and girls' legal protection; increasing women and girls' access to income and productive resources, including education; and ensuring gender equity in HIV/AIDS programs and services, including access to reproductive health services.
...
For example, over the last two years, PEPFAR has invested close to $155 million in responding to GBV.
...
We are also partners in the Together for Girls initiative -- a unique partnership that brings together public, private, United Nations and U.S. agencies to address sexual violence against children, particularly girls.'

UK: Women posed as boy to sexually assault girls

Minuteman · 15 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'An English teen has been found out leading a double life — posing as three different boys in order to have sexual encounters with other girls she was attracted to.

Gemma Barker, 19, had relationships with two girls aged 15 and 16 who thought she was a male, despite going to the same school as her, Guildford Crown Court heard yesterday.

During their encounters Barker spoke like a boy and wore men's clothing — including baggy tops, hats and hoodies — to cover up her feminine physique.

She created three different alter egos — Aaron Lampard, Connor McCormack and Luke Jones — and had separate Facebook profiles for each of them.

The Middlesex resident now faces jail time after admitting to two counts of sexual assault and one count of fraud.'

Boy, kidnapped by babysitter, to be reunited with mother

anthony · 15 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Miguel Morin was 8 months old when, police say, his baby sitter took him for what was supposed to be just one night in 2004. The sitter, Krystle Rochelle Tanner, was Miguel's godmother and friends with his mother, police say.

Now, eight years after his disappearance, Miguel will be reunited with his mother, Auboni Champion-Morin of Houston, pending a DNA test, Click2houston.com reported Wednesday. She says she never gave up hope that she would find her child.

"I prayed every night that he was safe, loved and he would come home one day," Champion-Morin told the Houston television station.'

When Violence Against Women Becomes a Political Game

anthony · 15 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Still, acknowledging the "branding" aspect seems only to highlight the real issues, which are way more important than the name of an act (and frankly, shouldn't it be the Anti-Violence Against Women Act?). We are talking about programs that help stop violence against women, and hopefully same-sex couples too. As much as Democrats may be hoping in some way deep down or even more shallowly to use this for their gain (while simultaneously supporting something that should be done) and Republicans fight to reign in the scope of the act and not alienate every single women in America, they're both somewhat at fault -- Democrats for any unnecessary strategic "add-ons" that compromise the meaning of the act itself; Republicans for cowing to the conservative line.
...
If Mary, one New York Times commenter, is an indication of American women, perhaps yes. She writes, "Elected males across the country ought brace themselves for the second wave: younger females who've struggled to put themselves through college and establish themselves in the work force are not as willing as their moms and grandmothers to see their hard earned tax monies thrown down the bottomless pit of 2 million predatory male criminals, corporate prisons, and the male-skewed law enforcement industry ... which clearly does little to protect women and girls. At some point, the majority of females in the U.S. will finally begin to wonder why males make so little effort to control themselves while obsessed with controlling everything that is female."'

Young: Rethink violence law from the center

anthony · 15 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Violence Against Women Act, passed in 1994, is up for its third reauthorization in Congress this spring. The legislation, which promotes stronger state policies combating domestic violence and sexual assault and secures federal funds for related programs, has always enjoyed bipartisan support. But no longer. While the 2012 bill is co-sponsored by Democrat Patrick Leahy of Vermont and Republican Mike Crapo of Idaho, the Senate Judiciary committee approved it last month on a 10-8 partisan vote, with not one Republican voting for it.

Republicans have lately been accused of waging a "war on women," which puts them in a bad position to demand a critical review of the law. And that's unfortunate, because it needs one.

Helping victims of rape and abuse is a noble cause. But VAWA has always been about more than that. The original bill, sponsored by then-Sen. Joseph Biden, was crafted primarily by feminist groups which, however genuine their commitment to helping women, are also committed to a narrow ideological approach to complex issues.

The activists tend to view violence against women entirely through the lens of gender oppression -- men terrorizing women to enforce patriarchal supremacy. Yet domestic violence research paints a far more nuanced picture. Mental illness, substance abuse and dysfunctional family dynamics are major factors. Many violent relationships are characterized by mutual abuse, and while women are at higher risk, female aggression is fairly common (and is not, as advocates claim, only a form of self-defense).'

UK: Woman loses false rape claim appeal

anthony · 15 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The woman's husband was charged with six counts of rape in 2009 to which he pleaded not guilty, but she later said the allegations she had made were false.

The prosecution offered no evidence against him when he appeared at Mold Crown Court and not-guilty verdicts were entered.

Initially she was charged with perverting the course of justice on the basis of making a false complaint, but she later asserted that it was the retraction, rather than the allegation of rape, which was false.'

Time for the Men's Rights Movement to Grow Some

anthony · 15 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Anyone who has ever taken to the streets as part of campaigns to stop violence against women (increasingly relevant after a new Alberta survey purports to reveal that one in 10 men think it's OK to hit a woman if she makes him angry), has probably come across the following argument: Where are all the campaigns to stop violence against men? For many who have yet to stumble upon the heated forums, blog rants, and protests that embellish the heart of this argument -- this may be your first foray into the men's rights movement.

You might then wonder what the movement wants and be compelled to do some research. Divorce settlement equality, better laws to stop violence against men by women, better custody laws... the list goes on. Some of these are very reasonable requests -- and in many cases, the MRM has been quite effective in achieving its goals. Some of the movement's more notable successes include "The Innocence Project," an organization that works to exonerate individuals who have been wrongly convicted of rape or otherwise, and "Just Detention International," an organization that works to end prison rape.
...
Of course, there are concerns of the MRM that should rightfully be investigated. For the first time, women outnumber men in universities -- striving to figure out just why men are faring much more poorly in the education system should be high on the agenda. But searching for solutions to helping those men is not the same as creating barriers to stop the women who are succeeding. If this point is ignored then developments, like those in Hanna Rosen's TED video talk, which charts the rise of women in society, will only inspire anger, rather than applause.'

Subtle sexism common at work, experts say

anthony · 15 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If a guy offers to carry a box for a female co-worker, help her with Google Analytics or compliments her for what a good mom she seems to be, she may be better off turning down the help and deflecting the compliments. These seemingly nice gestures and complimentary comments towards women may be a form of subtle sexism, experts say.

Chivalrous acts and compliments on female qualities, like mothering or nurturing, studies show, can be just as damaging to women as more blatant sexism and catcalls. Offering to assist women in traditionally male tasks, which experts call benevolent sexism, reinforces the notion that men are more competent than women, and women are weak and fragile.

One study found that when women were led to expect help from men, they became unsure of themselves, got distracted, and consequently performed poorly, creating a self-fulfilling prophesy. Women don't usually recognize benevolent sexism, and they start to doubt their ability to do the job, which makes them less able to do the job, the study's co-author Peter Glick said in a podcast.
...
Researchers found when women were made aware of subtle sexism and how to spot it, they no longer had self doubts and their performance didn't suffer.

Men, though appear to be slower at getting the message and had to be more actively educated that any kind of sexism harms women.'

Baseball: "A victim of Title IX"

anthony · 16 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Baseball is included in that count. Wisconsin scrapped its program entirely, and Cal-Berkeley committed to discarding its program in 2010 before fundraising raised enough to keep it afloat.

“Women didn’t want to kill men’s sports, they just wanted it to be equal,” said former LSU athletic director and baseball coach Skip Bertman. “I think baseball is pretty much a victim of Title IX.”

The NCAA mandates a roster limit for each team, allowing only 35 players.

Just 27 are allowed to receive any sort of scholarship.

“You can’t even cover a full backup spot,” said former LSU first baseman Blake Dean. “You need at least a full 18 scholarships. … You could field two full teams with 18 scholarships. That would be a little more reasonable.”'

Huggies Diapers and Fathers

anthony · 16 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's been trending wildly on the internet, has spawned, outrage, online petitions and tearful mea culpas from Kimberly - Clark spokespeople. Their Huggies commercial is criticized as dad bashing. So I asked the dad I know best - my husband - for his thoughts. He's not just a dad - he's been calling out dad-bashing since authoring "Mack Daddy," a bestselling parenting book written from a decidedly male point of view.
...
Undoubtedly, some folks at Huggies' marketing department may now be wearing Depends - so fearful are they for their jobs. And I say... yippee. Squirm. Sweat. Have a full blown unemployment panic attack. You deserve it after the latest Huggies commercial.
...
Maybe this Huggies commercial debacle will serve as a clarion call to sitcom writers and ad copywriters around the globe. Find a fresh laughingstock for your formulaic jokes. They stink like dirty diapers.'

'Women talk, men should listen'

anthony · 16 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mind, I don't unequivocally state we are the smarter of the species. I only repeat a question posed in Foreign Service applications. Question: "Do you know what they call anybody with an IQ of 80 in Slobbovia?" Answer: "Mr. President."

I'd never deign to think males are dim. I only wonder why big-time executives jog a half-hour for exercise then take the elevator up to the second floor.

Understand, men may complain. Like saying the wife is a lousy driver. Like: "If she were an Arab, she'd come home with a dented camel."

But, the National Academy of Sciences with MRIs, graphs, charts, images, brain scans and maybe playing "Pin the Tail on the Donkey" has decreed that women's brains are wired more keenly than those belonging to the manly persuasions.'

UK: Who is getting made redundant?

Broadsword · 16 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It has become received wisdom that women are much more likely than men to lose their jobs in the current downturn. But is it true? It sounds so plausible - women make up a larger proportion of the public sector where the cuts are biting. And the latest unemployment figures do show that of the 28,000 rise in jobless in the latest figures, 22,000 are women.

But that doesn't mean more women lost their jobs. In fact, more women have won jobs - the female employment rate in Britain has risen. In the year to last autumn, an additional 32,000 women were in work and experts say the trend has continued since then.

...

What the stats don't show is that women are more likely to receive a redundancy notice than men. On the contrary, it is men who have experienced a fall in employment over the past year. Despite cuts to a female-dominated public sector, it is male workers who appear to be getting the chop.

...

There is a bit of a mystery here and one which the CIPD acknowledges. "Why ongoing job losses in the public sector are not hitting women harder than men is an interesting question, and one to which the answer is not immediately apparent," they told me today, expressing frustration that official ONS public/private job stats don't have a gender breakdown.'

"A feminist theologian explains the problem with men"

anthony · 16 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In gatherer and early gardening societies, built on the matricentric core of the human family, women often had real power and prestige, when food-gathering and agriculture also meant female control of resources. Such societies achieved real gender parity of power when they constructed ways of drawing in the adult male contribution to work and parenting, conceding to him real and symbolic spheres of prestige and power, while limiting male aggression. But the conditions of such societies began to break down as the agricultural revolution moved toward more crowded urban societies about five thousand years ago, and only remnants still exist today. (170)

In a somewhat surprising, maybe even shocking, admission, Ruether, a leading feminist, says that “this matricentric pattern [of primitive societies and of families in general] is itself the breeding ground of male resentment and violence, rooted in male strategies of exploitative subversion of women’s power….” (171)

Now, it would be totally wrong to interpret Ruether as suggesting that the blame for patriarchy lies with women. Nothing could be further from the truth. She is arguing, however, that matricentricity is the “original position” of human society because only women can give birth and suckle and, generally speaking, in most societies, women have been the primary nurturers of children. And there’s nothing wrong with that UNLESS some mechanism isn’t found to balance matricentricity with male prestige and power. When men become resentful, which happens when they feel hopeless about prestige and power, patriarchy is the result. (Remember, “matricentricity” is not “matriarchy”—the opposite of patriarchy. Both would be hierarchical patterns of relationships. Ruether is against all hierarchy as dominating power over. Matricentricity is in itself a good thing. But it contains a hidden weakness that leads to patriarchy unless that weakness is acknowledged and corrected. The way to do that is for matricentricity to yield to young men prestige and power, not dominating power over. I think of “prestige and power” as social acknowledgement of worth and value.)
...
Now, how does Ruether’s view support my own? It seems to me that the root cause of the present male malaise is resentment arising from the perception that males are viewed by society as, at their core, inferior to females. One education expert noted (in Newsweek’s “The Boy Crisis” cover story (January 30, 2006) that in today’s public schools boys tend to be treated as “defective girls.” Boys and young men cannot help but pick up the not-very-subtle messages in the media that boys and men are fundamentally flawed. ...'

SAVE: $300,000 in Taxpayer Money for Men to Parade around in High Heels

Matt · 17 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Last week 400 Mississippi State men were pressured to walk around campus wearing high heels. [i] Billed as a rape awareness event, the activity was funded by a $300,000 grant awarded to the university under the Violence Against Women Act, [ii] as part of VAWA's $9.4 million Violent Crimes on Campus program (Section 304).

Let me get this right…American taxpayers are spending $300,000 to pay college students to play dress-up?

Four Rapes

Rape is a terrible thing to happen. Fortunately at Mississippi State, rapes are rare. According to campus police reports, only four rapes were reported from 2005 to 2010. Of course not all rapes are reported, but it's safe to say there is no epidemic of rape at Mississippi State.

But in 2011, the MSU Department of Outreach and Sexual Assault Services received a $300,000 grant from the Office of Violence Against Women.

According to director LeWanda Swan, the money would be used to "flood the campus with prevention education." That included distribution of flyers in campus bathrooms that featured questionable statistics such as, "one in four women will be raped in their lifetime."

On March 5, 2012, MSU students were treated to the spectacle of a "Walk a Mile in Her Shoes" event.

Coercion

To round up the 400 men, the campus Inter-Fraternity Council issued a Standards Requirement mandating at least 80% participation. Non-participants faced revocation of their individual privileges and possible termination of the fraternity's charter.

Re-Education

During the event, organizers repeated the claim that women are more likely to be victims of non-lethal partner violence than men. Apparently these persons hadn't bothered to read the most recent CDC violence report, which found a 6.5% male victimization rate, compared to 6.3% for women.[iii]

Not surprisingly, many found the event preposterous. "It's ridiculous, it's humiliating," explained one man. "Not all men are rapists, but that is basically the message than an event like this conveys."

Ideology

The Violence Against Women Act is rooted in a gender ideology – dubious at best -- that partner violence is caused by men's need for patriarchal control. This theory has trouble explaining why women are equally likely to abuse…but please, let's not allow the facts to confuse the matter!

So forcing college men to traipse around campus in high-heels, re-educating them into domestic violence ideology, and subjecting them to public shaming shouldn't come as any particular surprise.

[i] http://www.avoiceformen.com/featured/mississippi-state-students-forced-to-walk-a-mile-in-her-shoes/

[ii] http://www.reflector-online.com/news/sexual-assault-grant-to-benefit-students-1.2546486#.T1uVa3mP8v9

[iii]http://www.cdc.gov/ViolencePrevention/pdf/NISVS_Report2010-a.pdf

Barbara Kay: Adoption abuses have only been half cured

Matt · 17 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the March 14 segment, the series highlighted the iniquities of the system that were visited on the fathers of those babies. Several fathers recount their experience of being shunted aside, with no role or legal standing in the process. One father saw his baby only once before signing a “surrender document.” Another was told that there was no point in putting his name on the birth certificate since it would only be “whited out.” According to Raymond Cave, whose high school sweetheart Linda Dawe became pregnant at age 17 in 1966, when the couple was too young to legally marry, “No one was ever supposed to know who the father was, let alone come ask me for a signature. It was like I didn’t exist.”

...

Actually, to make a point, I have deliberately led the reader astray in the above paragraph. What I should have said was that “our society has opened its eyes to the sanctity of the biological-mother connection to children.” For nobody nowadays would ever dream of tearing a baby away from its biological mother and handing it over to an adoptive family. Unfortunately, time has stood still for biological dads.

...

Former Justice Minister Martin Cauchon said in 2003, “Men have no rights, only responsibilities.” That is the ruling paradigm in our society. Recall what Raymond Cave said about his youthful experience: “No one was ever supposed to know who the father was, let alone come ask me for a signature. It was like I didn’t exist.” If you didn’t know, would you guess those words applied to 1966 or 2012? You’d be right either way.'

Children whose minds wander 'have sharper brains'

anthony · 17 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Unfortunately children are often medicated for such behavior. Excerpt:

'A study has found that people who appear to be constantly distracted have more “working memory”, giving them the ability to hold a lot of information in their heads and manipulate it mentally.

Children at school need this type of memory on a daily basis for a variety of tasks, such as following teachers’ instructions or remembering dictated sentences.

During the study, volunteers were asked to perform one of two simple tasks during which researchers checked to ask if the participants’ minds were wandering.

At the end, participants measured their working memory capacity by their ability to remember a series of letters interspersed with simple maths questions.

Daniel Levinson, a psychologist at the University of Wisconsin-Madison in the United States, said that those with higher working memory capacity reported “more mind wandering during these simple tasks”, but their performance did not suffer.'

Weatherman sues CBS for hiring young, attractive women

anthony · 17 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Check out who his lawyer is. Excerpt:

'A Los Angeles weatherman has filed a lawsuit claiming he was passed over for jobs at two prominent stations because he wasn't a young, good-looking woman.

Kyle Hunter, who has worked as a meteorologist in various southern California markets during a 23-year career, filed an employment discrimination lawsuit against CBS Broadcasting and its owned-and-operated Los Angeles stations KCBS and KCAL on Thursday. He's represented by Gloria Allred.

Hunter alleges "that within the past few years, KCAL and KCBS decided to hire young attractive women as weathercasters in prime time rather than men in order to induce more men to watch their prime time newscasts," according to the suit. That means there was no place for Hunter, an over-40 male meteorologist with impeccable credentials, he says.'

Fraternity men to 'Walk a Mile'

anthony · 17 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The men of WKU will hit the streets in high heels on Wednesday for the Interfraternity Council's annual "Walk a Mile in Her Shoes" event.

About 40 men signed up to wear a pair of heels while walking a mile around campus to raise awareness about sexual abuse and violence against women.
...
"We want to raise awareness to stop rape, violence and sexual assault," said Phil Korba, IFC's activities chair. "The money we raise will go to Hope Harbor."

Hope Harbor is a non-profit organization in Bowling Green that offers support to women who are victims of abuse.
...

Because they had trouble getting men to sign up, IFC postponed the deadline for signing up several times.

"We were trying to make this event bigger than last year," Korba said. "This is out of the guys' comfort zone. They don't want to walk around in red high heels."

Korba said he hopes that the event will continue and that more and more men will participate.

"I would like to double the participation each year. Or even just add 10 every year," Korba said. "The more guys you can get to do this the more of an impact we can make."'

A Huge Gender Gap Persists In College Degrees, Do We Need A White House Council On Boys And Men?

anthony · 17 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.. Excerpt:

'In 2010, a multi-partisan group of thirty-four scholars made a proposal that President Obama create a White House Council on Boys and Men, as a parallel program to the White House Council on Women and Girls. Warren Farrell, the leader of the effort, identified five different areas in which boys are in crisis—education; jobs; emotional health; physical health; and fatherlessness. In an interview with Forbes, Farrell said that “The White House Council would signal to the world that boys and men are facing problems, alert schools and parents as to the nature of these problems, and alert all the nation’s institutions to explore how attending to these problems might help our sons, daughters, families and nation.” One educational issue to be addressed by the Council would be the huge gender gaps in educational attainment for young adults illustrated by the BLS report.

As you might expect, Obama has not responded to the request to create a Council on Boys and Men. Reason? In a 2009 article in the National Journal, Stuart Taylor summarized well the standard, politically-correct “selective concern on sex imbalances” that typically ignores any cases of male under-representation, like college degrees, which helps us understand why there will be no White House Council for Boys and Men:

“It is an article of faith in the Obama administration, Congress, and much of the academic establishment that there are no innate differences between females and males in interests or cognitive capacities. From this dubious premise, they conclude that only pervasive, ongoing sexism and stereotypes can explain the huge gender disparities in academic fields — hard sciences, engineering, and mathematics — that are still male-dominated.

But advocates of this disparity-proves-discrimination dogma apply it quite selectively. They have shown virtually no concern about the small and shrinking percentages of males in colleges generally and in most academic fields.”'

Gender Gap May Return as U.S. Jobs Favor Women: Chart of the Day

anthony · 17 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This year's figures erased a gap that peaked at 2.6 points in May 2009, when a greater proportion of men were out of work. The differential was the largest since the government started tracking the numbers in 1948.

"It's a function of manufacturing coming back strong and mining doing really well," Dutta said yesterday in a telephone interview. Men have benefited more from the industries' growth than women because they traditionally do most of the jobs, the New York-based economist added.

Even so, women are more likely to stay in school and get the college education needed for jobs in health care and other expanding industries, according to Dutta. He highlighted this trend in a report published on March 6, during International Women's Week.

"The problems for men are mounting," he said. "They just don't have the skills for today's labor force."'

Uganda: Govt Plans Circumcision School Camps

anthony · 17 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Government is studying ways under which it will set up circumcision camps or clinics in schools for boys who are willing to be circumcised.

Education ministry's permanent secretary Francis Xavier Lubanga told New Vision that when arrangements are done, the ministry will send circulars to all schools in the country about the issue.

"Schools will also be instructed to communicate to the parents on how the programme will be conducted.

For children below the age of consent, written consent of the parents will be required," Lubanga explained.

He also said the education ministry would partner with the health ministry. Citing an incident where 13 students of Teso College Aloet, were recently suspended after they sneaked out of school to get circumcised, Lubanga said the number of students in need of circumcision across the country may be high.'

Police: Woman slit 5-year-old step-son's throat

anthony · 17 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MAGNOLIA, TX (KTRK) -- A Montgomery County child was in the hospital in critical condition Saturday night and his mother was behind bars after authorities say she attacked him.

Magnolia police were called to a home in the 100 block of Roy Street near F.M. 1488 just after midnight for a welfare check on a child.

According to police, the child's father called 911 after he returned home and found his son covered in blood and unresponsive.

When authorities arrived, five-year-old Michael Spurlock was lying on the living room floor.

According to investigators, the child's throat had multiple lacerations and was sliced from one side to the other. Officials said he also had a crushed chest and severe head injury.

...

Beverly Latham heard that her sister claimed she was trying to rid her son of demons, but Latham said that's uncharacteristic of her sister.

"I know my sister would never hurt her children," Latham said. "Never."

Even a family friend -- Mary Smith, who raised her children alongside Spurlock's -- says police have the wrong person.

Smith said authorities need to investigate what happened between Spurlock and her husband, David, before Michael was found in that near-death state.

...

Together, as they pray for Michael's recovery, Spurlock's family is searching for a lawyer to help them fill in the blanks left open by police.

They admit they don't know exactly what happened in that home overnight, but they say they're willing to do whatever it takes to find out.'

Why women are out-earning men

anthony · 18 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.. Excerpt:

'Women are poised to become America's biggest breadwinners.

The tipping point is a generation away, assuming women's economic power keeps rising as expected. But already, the trend is stunning enough that TIME made it the subject of its current cover.

"Almost 40% of working wives out-earn their husbands," noted Liza Mundy, author of "The Richer Sex"--both the cover story and a new book that goes by the same title--at a breakfast in New York City, hosted by TIME and Fortune.

...

Why such rapid advancement? The Pill, Mundy said, helped spark the trend 50 years ago: Newly able to delay marriage and childbearing, women began focusing on their careers. America's shift to a service economy also favors college grads, who increasingly tend to be female. Today, women make up 60% of U.S. college classes and earn more masters and doctorate degrees than men.

What can stop women from out-earning men in more than 50% of U.S. households? "Nothing that I can see," Mundy, who writes for the Washington Post (WPO), told TIME Executive Editor Nancy Gibbs at the breakfast. Some industries, such as veterinary medicine, are so populated with women that few men are now entering them, she said. She calls the phenomenon "gender pollution." In 25 years, law and medicine may well be female-dominated.'

Mississippi State students forced to “Walk a Mile in Her Shoes”

anthony · 18 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The crowd of marching men were subjected to demeaning slurs from the crowd of onlookers and given hand written notes from members of a virtually all female audience implying their complicity in the supposed sexual assault epidemic. “Female students stood on the side lines. Over 400 male students wore heals and walked in a 1/4 mile circle, four times while the female students stood and watched, mostly smiling and some were laughing.
...
On the strict condition of anonymity, a member of a participating fraternity spoke with AVFM about the event. He said that the Intra Fraternity Council (IFC), an administrative body who enforces rules and guidelines set both within the Greek community itself and by the school administration evoked a “Standards Requirement,” imposed to ensure a participation rate of at least 80% for all fraternities. Consequences for non-compliance of this requirement include revocation of privileges for individual fraternity members as well as suspension or termination of a fraternity’s charter.'

Video here.

Norway's businesswomen and the boardroom bias debate

Broadsword · 18 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'...Business experts have expressed scepticism that the EU could impose uniform restrictions on such diverse national working cultures.

Kenneth Ahern, a professor of finance from the University of Michigan, doubted whether Britain was ready to make the necessary financial sacrifice to push women onto boards. His own research on Norway, published last year, showed that "the quota led to younger and less experienced boards, and deterioration in operating performance, consistent with less capable boards."

He told The Sunday Telegraph: "In Norway, they knew that the value of their companies would drop, but society there cared more about equality than finance. It was a conscious decision.

"For the EU to make such an important moral choice, across such a variety of countries, is a very big ask indeed. I could see there being real resistance to obligatory quotas from countries such as Germany and the UK, which prize the financial output extremely highly." '

Asma Assad all in with her husband for violence and human rights abuses

anthony · 19 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DAMASCUS, Syria – The wife of Syrian president Bashar al Assad told a friend she was the "real dictator" in the family, leaked emails revealed Monday.

Asma al Assad, 36, apparently showed no remorse for the deaths of thousands of Syrians in the brutal crackdown on protests and backed her husband in a series of emails to aides, friends and family.

Around 3,000 messages were obtained by activists and then passed on to several media outlets including The (London) Daily Telegraph.

...

She also praised Assad for being "very strong, no more messing around," and in another email complained that ABC News had unfavorably edited an interview with him.

She said, "As for listening -- I am the REAL dictator, he has no choice..."

The mother of two, who was born in Britain and studied at a university in London, was forced to shop online using an alias after international sanctions were brought in over the bloodshed in Syria.'

Violence Against Women Act Poses Threat to Civil Rights, Group Charges

anthony · 19 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last month, Senator Patrick Leahy (D-VT) proposed a reauthorization of VAWA, which passed out of the Senate Judiciary Committee to the Senate floor. But for the first time in VAWA's history, the bill encountered strong opposition. Senator Chuck Grassley (R-IA), aware of VAWA many flaws, offered an alternative bill, but that bill did not pass out of committee.

SAVE report documents 10 fundamental rights and protections that are being harmed by the Violence Against Women Act:
...

"Indiscriminate restraining orders, unconstitutional standards of evidence, and arrests without probable cause have been ravaging this country since VAWA passage in 1994," SAVE spokesman Philip W. Cook notes. "The civil rights of African-Americans and other minorities have been especially hard-hit by strong-arm domestic violence policies."

The abridgement of men's rights has also been allowed to flourish under the VAWA, the report documents. Family law attorney Lisa Scott has warned, "Don't call 911 unless you are bleeding and she still has a weapon in her hand."

SAVE, an advocate for all victims of domestic violence, is working to reform federal domestic violence statutes so they both protect victims and affirm the civil rights of the accused.'

What's Wrong with the Violence Against Women Act

anthony · 19 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As Senate Republicans resist renewing the 1994 Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), raising questions about immigration fraud and Indian tribal courts, and Democrats indignantly declare their support of it, civil libertarians should take a hard look at some of the Act's deceptively innocuous provisions. Section 304, which governs the treatment of sexual violence charges on college and university campuses, requires that cases involving allegations of violence or stalking provide for "prompt and equitable investigation and resolution."

What's worrisome about this language? Will Creeley of the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) points out that "prompt and equitable" is a term of art under federal anti-discrimination law. It's construed by the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights to require a low standard of proof ("preponderance of the evidence") in sexual misconduct cases.

...

These low standards of proof, together with the appeals provisions, reflect the tendency of victim advocates, including Obama Administration officials, to err on the side of presuming guilt in sexual misconduct cases. Some have unabashed contempt for the rights of the accused: Boston attorney Wendy Murphy writes disdainfully of "lawyers for men accused of rape (who) injected themselves into college disciplinary proceedings demanding 'due process' and arguing that accused students have a constitutional liberty interest at stake." The accused have no constitutional claim to due process, she writes approvingly, but "student victims of sexual assault" do, "because sexual assault is a form of gender discrimination."'

Fathers 4 Justice Stage Naked Mumsnet Protest in Marks & Spencer Oxford Street

Matt · 19 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Members of Fathers 4 Justice (F4J) staged a naked protest in the flagship London branch of Marks & Spencer at Marble Arch, Oxford Street.

Group founder Matt O'Connor was arrested during the weekend protest, which criticised the high street store for its advertising on parenting blog site Mumsnet.

Along with four other members of the group, O'Connor took off his clothes in the store to draw attention to what F4J claimed was Mumsnet's "anti-male agenda".

He claimed that the protest was just the start of a series of attacks on M&S in order to draw attention to the "naked truth" that Mumsnet "promotes gender hatred".'

Health reform provides woman-only benefits

Minuteman · 20 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Under the Affordable Care Act, 45.1 million women – including 20.4 million women with private health insurance and 24.7 million women with Medicare – can receive recommended preventive services with no cost-sharing, new data released today by Department of Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius show.
...
The data highlighted in an issue brief by the HHS Office of the Assistant Secretary for Planning and Evaluation show that Affordable Care Act provisions are already improving women's health by making recommended preventive care services more accessible and increasing access to health insurance coverage.

"From increased health coverage to free preventive services and lower prescription drug costs, our mothers, grandmothers, daughters, friends and neighbors are already benefiting from this law and will continue to in the months and years to come," said Secretary Sebelius.'

Dutch Roman Catholic Church 'castrated at least 10 boys'

anthony · 20 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Evidence of the castrations has emerged amid controversy that it was not included in the findings of an official investigation into sexual abuse within the church last year.

The NRC Handelsblad newspaper identified Henk Heithuis who was castrated in 1956, while a minor, after reporting priests to the police for abusing him in a Catholic boarding home.

Joep Dohmen, the investigative journalist who uncovered the Heithuis case, also found evidence of at least nine other castrations. "These cases are anonymous and can no longer be traced," he said. "There will be many more. But the question is whether those boys, now old men, will want to tell their story."

'Feminism Won't Make A Victim Out Of Me'

anthony · 20 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you take what you hear in the mainstream media as gospel, you probably believe that women are discriminated against, marginalized and held back unjustly in the workplace.

As a strong woman in the workplace myself, I am tired of being portrayed as the feeble minority encircled by the bloodthirsty men waiting to pounce on me at any given moment. Any such portrayal is a disingenuous attempt at victimization. I, for one, refuse to be a victim.

Debora Spar, president of Barnard College, alleged at a White House conference on urban economic development last month that women have "fallen into what I call the 16 percent ghetto, which is that if you look at any sector, be it aerospace engineering, Hollywood films, higher education, or Fortune 500 leading positions, women max out at roughly 16 percent... That is a crime."

That some women choose childbirth and motherhood as a valid occupation seems to have been overlooked by Spar. Women haven't "fallen into a ghetto," some have just chosen alternate paths.'

The Violence Against Women Act Should Outrage Decent People

anthony · 20 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is also a bureaucratic nightmare with billions of dollars spent to establish a vast expansion of government programs that are riddled with financial irregularities. Feminists like to repeat the mantra that there is a "war against women," but when women can routinely claim nebulous "psychological harm" and keep a man out of his home, away from his children, possibly losing his job and ruining his reputation, there is more of a war against men than against women. Intimate partner violence is mostly from boyfriends, rather than husbands (about 62 percent) and it is about equal between men and women (6.4 percent vs. 6.3 percent).

The greatest problem, though, with the law, known by its acronym, VAWA, is that it is an ineffective program; it has a long history of failure. A family violence expert said, "There is no evidence that VAWA has led to a decrease in violence against women." Instead, the legislation has morphed into a rigid, inhuman law enforcement tool that relies on restraining orders and mandatory arrests instead of ending intimate partner violence. The law is more about building feminist power structures than about protecting vulnerable women or helping battered women.'

Also see this article from the same source.

How the Gender Wars Became a Class War

anthony · 20 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When The Atlantic's article "The End of Men" came out over a year ago, I, like many women, was irritated. But it took me a long time to understand why I found the article so grating.

It makes good points. It's true that many jobs that were long dominated by men are on the decline. The statistics author Hanna Rosin cites are convincing: of the 15 job categories projected to grow in the next ten years, 13 are dominated by women; women earn some 60% of bachelor's degrees; the recession, as we all know, hit men the hardest. White working-class men have every reason to be worried about what the future holds.'

Another college program cut due to Title IX-- despite alumni funding availability

anthony · 20 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Millersville University grad offered $300,000 as part of an alumni proposal to run men's track and cross country for three years while the alumni look for permanent funding.

On Monday, alumni learned the university had rejected the proposal.

The would-be donor spoke on condition of anonymity. He didn't want recognition, he said, but rather to help a program that was meaningful and helped shape him.
...
Citing savings of about $200,000 a year, Title IX concerns and competitiveness, the university announced the cuts Feb. 14.

The women's running programs remain intact. The university isn't renewing the contract of Scott Weiser, who had been head men's and women's track coach. Instead, Andrew Young, the men's and women's head cross-country coach, will take over as women's track coach.'

New study confirms PSA screening saves lives

anthony · 21 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I should point out the Affordable Care Act provides women with free cervical cancer screening. Excerpt:

'Nearly six months ago, U.S. Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF) recommended healthy men no longer receive PSA tests as part of routine cancer screening. Ironically, this decision against routine PSA screening was made by a panel that does not include urologists or oncologists. The same task force tried unsuccessfully to eliminate mammograms for women ages 40-49 and recommended against teaching women to do breast self-exams. The panel made the PSA recommendation based on contradictory information from studies with serious design flaws. Based on USPSTF recommendations, the Government Accountability Office (GAO) singled out PSA tests as a screening that would require patient co-pays, potentially discouraging men to have testing that could identify cancer in its earliest, most curable stage.
...
The revised ERSPC data highlights the problems with the USPSTF process. Under the Affordable Care Act, this taxpayer-funded agency has been given great power to determine what screening tests must be provided. Despite this authority, the USPSTF does complies with neither the Federal Advisory Committee Act, (FACA) nor the Administrative Procedures Act (APA) which were enacted to ensure that those that ultimately work for American citizens conduct their business in an objective, transparent fashion. We as a country deserve to know who is making health policy decisions by what criteria, as well as if there is an inherent bias or potential conflict of interest that those with that decision-making power may have.'

Court throws out claim of anti-male bias at London School of Economics

anthony · 21 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A FORMER gender studies student at the London School of Economics (LSE) who had hoped to sue the institution for alleged sexism has had his case struck out.

Tom Martin, 39, who lives in Covent Garden, claimed he suffered “anti-male discrimination” while studying for a master’s degree in gender, media and culture at the world-famous university in Holborn.'

‘The Richer Sex’: How Women Became the New Breadwinners

anthony · 21 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It’s a generational shift that’s been a long time coming. For a brief chapter in the history of gender relations—what’s rightly been called the Leave it to Beaver era—dapper, chipper men provided for their effervescent, vacuum-pushing wives in a suburban Elysium of sparkling appliances and gas-guzzling, American-made cars. That time has passed, and good riddance, many say. Perhaps the largest single engine of change in American culture over the last fifty years has been the liberation of women, and now, as another wave of educated, professional females enter the workforce, we’re bound for a whole new set of adjustments and anxieties.'

Portraying Men As Stupid to Undermine Women

anthony · 21 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's a truism in feminist circles that no one hates men more than anti-feminists, and it's a truism two recent items from the notoriously anti-feminist conservative rag Daily Mail demonstrate neatly. The Daily Mail has a tendency to portray men as hapless dogs who, being more beast than human, can no more be expected to respect women's rights than Sparky can be taught to use the toilet. (Cats, on the other hand....) Unfortunately, other outlets tend to pick up the Daily Mail's man-bashing anti-feminism as if it's light-hearted fluff, and these two stories are no different.'

Probation for teacher in student sex case

anthony · 21 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A New York City schoolteacher from Bay Shore will be sentenced to probation and have to register as a sex offender after admitting Tuesday to having sexual relations with a 16-year-old male student a year ago, prosecutors said.

Tara Driscoll, 33, of 17 Anna St., pleaded guilty to misdemeanor sexual misconduct. She will be sentenced to six years' probation and must give up her teacher's license...'

SAVE: VAWA Focus of US News Debate Club. Vote Now!

Matt · 21 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

U.S. News & World Report has taken note of the controversy around the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act - VAWA - (s.1925), making it the focus of Debate Club. Debate Club brings in the best arguments and lets readers decide which is the most persuasive. They ask: Should the Violence Against Women Act Be Reauthorized?

As of this writing, the entry in first place is: "NO: Violence Against Women Act Is a Totalitarian Violation of Democracy" by Laura Wood. In second place is "NO: The Violence Against Women Act Should Outrage Decent People" by Janice Shaw Crouse. Following that are a few entries supporting the reauthorization.

You could read these two thoughtful articles explaining why Senator Leahy's VAWA misses the mark, or you could read all of the entries, pro and against VAWA. We encourage that.

But we also understand how valuable your time is. So if you only have a moment and you want to make a difference, I'll explain how you can do that.

Go to the debate here: http://www.usnews.com/debate-club/should-the-violence-against-women-act-be-reauthorized. Scroll down until you see two 'NO' opinions. Click on the UP buttons next to Laura's and Janice's entries. That's it!

If you have another moment, you could click the down buttons next to all of the 'yes' entries.

Thank you for your continued dedication, and for your patience. I believe we are starting to see the results of our slow and steady efforts. Isn't it just wonderful?

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Suspected New Neonatal Herpes Case Being Investigated

anthony · 21 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The New York City Department of Health received a report within the last week of an infant with symptoms of neonatal herpes and the case is currently under investigation, The Jewish Week has learned. (By law, such reports must be made within 24 hours of a diagnosis).

While the health department could not confirm where the report came from or whether it involved the circumcision ritual metzitzah b'peh, a source in the medical community told The Jewish Week that a suspected case of neonatal herpes related to metzitzah b'peh, or oral suction, has been treated at Maimonides Hospital within the past week.
...
This case comes on the heels of revelations that four other infants who had undergone the controversial circumcision rite of metzitzah b'peh were treated for neonatal herpes, two in Rockland County in 2009 and two more recently in New Jersey.'

Two Babies Sickened by Circumcision Rite

anthony · 21 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two Jewish infants in New Jersey were recently infected with — but survived — a herpes virus attributed to their ritual circumcisers' use of an oral suctioning technique that is said to have caused the death of an infant in New York in September.

Dr. Margaret Fisher, chair of pediatrics at Monmouth Medical Center, told the Forward that a newborn boy was admitted to the center within the past month, infected with the virus, known as HSV-1, within days of his circumcision. The other case "was in the last year or two," said Fisher, a pediatric infectious disease specialist. Both boys had herpes lesions on their genitals but "extremely mild cases," she said, and both were successfully treated for 10 days with intravenous anti-viral medication.'

Sandra Fluke: Politicians should be required to pass pro-woman litmus test to get elected

anthony · 22 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Georgetown Law student Sandra Fluke said on Tuesday that candidates running for office should have to pass a pro-woman litmus test in order to get elected.

Fluke, an advocate for the Obama administration's plan to force health insurers to cover birth control, was on Capitol Hill for a forum on "Opportunities and Challenges for a New Generation of Women," in celebration of Women's History Month.

"There should be a litmus test that they be pro-women so our votes have to include that requirement at least," Fluke said. "And it should be a litmus test that applies to male candidates as well."

She also spoke about the possibility of running for office in the future:

"Numerous American women have actually written to me in the last few weeks saying that I should run for office, and maybe someday I will."'

Wendy Kaminer Highlights VAWA's Potential Impact on Campus Due Process in 'The Atlantic'

anthony · 22 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First, the reference to the "prompt and equitable" standard. This is new language, replacing the "preponderance of the evidence" requirement seen in an earlier version of the bill last fall. Our press release from last October voiced alarm about codifying the preponderance of the evidence standard, and we were pleased when Senator Patrick Leahy's office removed that provision from the bill.

Unfortunately, by replacing the explicit "preponderance of the evidence" requirement with a mandate that university procedures for sexual assault cases must "provide a prompt and equitable investigation and resolution," the bill's authors have reintroduced the problem.

To be clear, FIRE obviously does want campus disciplinary procedures to be prompt and equitable. Justice, no matter the venue, should always be prompt and equitable; indeed, it's hard to imagine a just result that isn't prompt and equitable.

However, this "prompt and equitable" standard is essentially a de facto incorporation of the preponderance standard. That's because, as Kaminer notes, the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) troublingly interpreted "prompt and equitable" to require the preponderance standard in its April 4, 2011, "Dear Colleague" letter.'

COLUMN: Religious practices are not all ethical

anthony · 22 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In September 2011, a two-week-old baby boy unnecessarily died. The cause of death: Disseminated Herpes Simplex Virus Type 1, complicating ritual circumcision with oral suction. The Orthodox Jewish circumcision process called “metzitzah b’peh” is otherwise known as “oral suction,” or the suctioning of blood from the circumcision wound directly by mouth.

Unfortunately, last year isn’t the first time that this particular rabbi, Yitzchok Fischer, caused the death of a child. The same thing happened in 2004, and that same year three other babies were determined to have contracted herpes from Fischer. While Herpes Simplex Virus 1 is usually harmless in adults and manifests itself only as uncomfortable cold sores, because of the virus’ association with the nervous system, it poses significant health threats to newborns and can result in brain damage, and sometimes, death.

The practice of circumcision is condoned in the Bible and believed by several religious denominations to be one of the most important rituals performed during an individual’s lifetime. But outside of a religious context, oral-penile contact from an adult man to a child is considered pedophilia and is punishable by law.

Because the contact in question occurred within a religious context, Fischer has not been held accountable for the death of the baby boys.

Jerry Schmetterer, the spokesman for Brooklyn DA Charles Hynes, told The Jewish Week that, “Our Crimes Against Children Bureau is looking into this situation. I would not assume what any possible charges would be.”

I can think of a few possible charges, Mr. Hynes. How about two counts of criminal homicide? Several counts of child molestation? Tortious transmission of an STD by intentional neglect? The behavior of this priest is abominable to any right-minded person, but according to The Jewish Week, the city only filed a legal complaint against Fischer to compel him to stop engaging in the practice after the death of the first baby. Clearly, he did not comply, but instead of being legally prosecuted, the matter was ultimately referred by the city to a “beit din” — a religious tribunal — for review.'

Woman killed workmate then used semen from brothel to make it look as though she'd been raped and murdered

Broadsword · 22 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Spanish businesswoman killed her workmate and then injected the semen of male prostitutes into her mouth and vagina to make it look as if she had been raped and murdered.

María Ángeles Molina was jailed for 22 years yesterday for the grisly crime committed to cover up identify theft and plot to steal €1million in an insurance scame.

The killer, known as Angie, lured her friend Ana Páez to a Barcelona apartment she had fraudulently rented in her victim's name just three days before.
...
To make it look like her victim had been raped, Molina then injected the semen, which she had obtained from a brothel.

The elaborate cover-up came after Molina had stolen Páez's identity and used it to take out bank loans and insurance policies worth €1million in her name.'

Zimbabwe 'sperm hunters' picking up male travellers

Broadsword · 22 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gangs of women in Zimbabwe have been picking up male travellers to have sexual intercourse and harvest their sperm, according to reports.

Susan Dhliwayo claims she pulled her car over recently to pick up a group of male hitchhikers and they refused to get in, because they feared they were going to be raped.

"Now, men fear women. They said: 'we can't go with you because we don't trust you'," 19-year-old Miss Dhliwayo recounted.

Local media have reported victims of the highway prowlers being drugged, subdued at gun or knife point – even with a live snake in one case – given a sexual stimulant and forced into repeated sex before being dumped on the roadside.

The sperm hunters first surfaced in the local press in 2009 but police have only arrested three women, found with a plastic bag of 31 used condoms in October. The attacks have continued since they were nabbed for allegedly violating 17 men.'

Interfraternity Council at WKU sponsors "Walk a Mile"

anthony · 22 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite the sounds of moaning in pain, the men of WKU were all smiles after walking a mile around campus in high heels.

The “Walk a Mile in Her Shoes” event occurred Wednesday morning by the Interfraternity Council to raise awareness for sexual abuse and violence against women, said Bowling Green sophomore Phil Korba, IFC’s activities chair.

“The event is to raise awareness for sexual assault and show women we care,” he said.
...
The walkers paid an entrance fee, which added to donations and sponsorships to raise money for Hope Harbor, a non-profit organization that offers support for women who have faced sexual abuse.
...
Hartzell and the other event coordinators urged the men to attend “Take Back the Night,” which is a community-wide walk around Bowling Green to increase awareness about and prevention of violence against women, children, and families.'

SAVE: Female Columnists Double-Down on the Violence Against Women Act

Matt · 24 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

In case you haven't been following it, there has been a boatload of articles by female columnists criticizing the Violence Against Women Act. All of these articles were published in the past week:

1. Wendy Kaminer, The Atlantic: What's Wrong with the Violence Against Women Act? http://www.theatlantic.com/national/archive/2012/03/whats-wrong-with-the-violence-against-women-act/254678/
2. Abby Schachter, New York Post: The 'I Lied to the Police and Got Him Thrown in Jail' Act. http://www.nypost.com/p/blogs/capitol/the_lied_jail_the_police_and_got_s2zheEr5zwQ1CXY3cbgGCP

NY Governor jumps on 'Monuments to Women' bandwagon

Matt · 24 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Latest email blast from Gov. Cuomo contained this. Excerpt:

'Dear Fellow New Yorker,

Women's history in the Empire State goes hand in hand with New York's history as a progressive leader. From education to health care to civil equality, women have been a driving force behind almost every reform movement in our state.

This past week, in honor of Women's History Month, Governor Cuomo opened a new exhibit at the State Capitol honoring the remarkable women who have led New York and the nation. Explore our online exhibit featuring these women's stories by clicking below:

[img]

Governor Cuomo hopes this exhibit will inspire New Yorkers to learn more about our state's progressive history and the outstanding women whose accomplishments contributed to a variety of fields. The legacy of New York State women who made history – like Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Ruby Dee, and Supreme Court Justice Sonia Sotomayor – is one of strength, determination, character and courage.

We pay homage to this progressive legacy as we continue our reform efforts to make this state a greater state for all New Yorkers.

We hope you have a chance to learn more about these women's accomplishments up close next time you're in Albany. If you would like to visit the exhibit in person, click here to learn more about Capitol tours.'

One day perhaps politicians will build monuments to all the monuments around us that speak of men's contributions: modern architecture, plumbing, medicine, modern electrical systems... and the list goes on and on. Now don't get me wrong here; women have contributed substantially to fields such as education and medicine. But to honor women as a class to the exclusion of men when the signs of men's contributions abound all around us in ways tangible and so ubiquitous as to be easily overlooked-- this is a huge injustice. Basically, if you want to know who to thank for modern civilization as we understand it-- thank men.

F&F: Boston Globe calls for shared parenting

Matt · 24 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an editorial this week, The Boston Globe called on the legislature and the Governor to convene a Shared Parenting Task Force. This could prove to be a breakthrough on shared parenting in Massachusetts, and then, like marriage equality, in the rest of the country. It is the first time The Boston Globe has taken a stand on a Task Force for shared parenting. The Boston Globe said there is “a genuine need to examine the workings of family courts,” Also, “It’s time to break the contentious impasse [on this issue].”

This editorial will increase the pressure that Fathers and Families has been bringing behind the scenes for the Legislature to act. The Globe’s editorial is a direct result of YOUR past activism and support, as well as the activism of some who are outside of Fathers and Families.'

WILL Magaizine Volume 1, Issue 7 now available

Matt · 24 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Available here or here if you have trouble with the first link. This issue focuses on elders/senior citizens and their issues. Note WILL is not an MRA publication as such, but runs MRA issue-friendly articles from time to time.

Two articles from 'Beyond the Bris'

Matt · 25 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Me But Not My Son: A Young Jewish Man Breaks Rank on Circumcision Excerpt:

'I am 21 years old, Jewish, and opposed to circumcision. I attend college in Indiana. I grew up in a small Southern town where my family was one of a handful of Jews. My parents were born and raised Jewish. I was circumcised when I was eight days old by a mohel at a brit milah.

My Jewish identity was always very important to me growing up. I went to synagogue a lot, spent my summers at a Jewish summer camp, had a bar mitzvah, and in high school was part of NFTY (North American Federation of Temple Youth). I went to Israel for a semester in high school. When I was a child and teenager, I was always proud to be Jewish, to be a part of G-d's chosen people, to be in a culture that valued life and not death. I'm also a person who finds the idea of permanent body modification disturbing. I feel G-d made us the way we are for a reason. Every organ has a purpose. Even our imperfections are a sign of our individuality. When I found out I was circumcised, I was horrified.'

Bringing a Jewish Circumcision Alternative (Brit Shalom) to New York Metro Families Excerpt:

'The Jewish opposition to circumcision was just beginning 24 years ago when my wife Yehudit and I decided to leave our newborn son intact. We were not the only Jewish parents of our generation to reject circumcision, but we were among the first.

I performed my son's birth ceremony and it was beautiful. We called it a brit b'lee milah or "covenant without circumcision." The gift of life came unencumbered by any cutting and joy permeated the room. All three of Samuel's living grandparents refused to attend his brit because they knew no circumcision would be taking place. This only made what Yehudit and I had decided to do more powerful. There was no going back.'

Australia: PhD Scholarship in Men's health research, Adelaide U

Minuteman · 26 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The Freemasons Foundation Centre for Men's Health (FFCMH) is seeking a PhD candidate for a research project aimed at improving the delivery of health services to men and developing more effective responses to men's health concerns.

The project :

The project will examine men's attitudes and help-seeking behaviours in relation to their health and wellbeing using data from a recent survey of 1500 men in South Australia, conducted to investigate the perceived health care needs of men, and the Florey Adelaide Male Ageing Study (FAMAS), a longitudinal study of over 1000 men in South Australia designed to learn about age-related changes in men's health.

Latitude to explore additional areas of interest in relation to men's health service utilisation will also exist within the project framework.'

"Moms: It's better to deal with toddler's sensitive situation now"

anthony · 26 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With the exception of a few colds, my 16-month-old son has been a healthy baby. He hasn't been afflicted with chronic ear infections, colic or bowel problems. His visits to the doctor have been almost all routine.

...Like about half of newborn boys, my son was circumcised. The day we checked out of the hospital, the doctor and a nurse came and got him, wheeled him off and returned him a short time later. I was instructed to cover his wound with Vaseline and gauze for a week and a half. And that was it.

Except that wasn't it.

When the little guy was about a month old, I started to wonder if maybe things weren't all right. It looked like there was too much skin. It also looked like skin was re-adhering, as I've come to learn.
...
Fast-forward to last fall. The issue was not getting any better. It actually got worse, because, like all little boys, my son became curious about what that was down there. We went to the doctor after he started bleeding one day, and he scratched to the point of making his entire front diaper region inflamed. The doctor (a new doctor, since we had moved from Maine) said to watch it.'

President Obama on Title IX's impact

anthony · 26 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Question from Andy Katz: Well, Mr. President, it is going to be the 40th anniversary of Title IX [on June 23]. What is the impact of that legislation on society in America?

Answer from President Obama: I am a huge believer that sports ends up being good for kids, and especially good for girls. It gives them confidence, it gives them a sense of what it means to compete. Studies show that girls who are involved in athletics often do better in school; they are more confident in terms of dealing with boys. And, so, for those of us who grew up just as Title IX was taking off, to see the development of women's role models in sports, and for girls to know they excelled in something, there would be a spot for them in college where they weren't second-class, I think has helped to make our society more equal in general.'

"'Men's Rights Movement' Symbolizes Growing Nationwide Misogyny"

anthony · 26 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An article in the current issue of the Southern Poverty Law Center's Intelligence Report exposes the "man-o-sphere" through which this backlash to feminism finds a voice, and the real-life acts of violence that appear to have links to the hate found online. Hundreds of websites, blogs and chatrooms are devoted to rants about feminism and rage filled tirades against domestic violence laws and the family court system. Women, specifically Western women, are blamed for oppressing men through false accusations of abuse and rape, through divorce, and for generally demanding equality in the social and legal realms. Author of the report Arthur Goldwag writes that virtual threats of violence against women online appear to have real world consequences. The case exemplifying the link between belief and action is that of Tom Ball, a leader of the Fatherhood Coalition, who hit his 4-year-old daughter in the mouth and found himself entangled in child custody and child support battles. Last year, he lit himself on fire outside of a New Hampshire courthouse. Ball left a suicide note calling for a male insurrection. He wrote, "[t]he federal government declared a war on men. It is time, boys, to give them a taste of war."'

Poll: Most Don't Want Violence Against Women Act

anthony · 27 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Mar 27, 2012 (GlobeNewswire via COMTEX) -- Washington, DC/March 27, 2012 -- The broader American public opposes reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act, according to a U.S. News and World Report poll that shows Americans think the law is ineffectual and unjust. Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) notes the recent U.S. News "Debate Club" feature on VAWA has elicited an overwhelmingly negative reaction to the law: http://www.usnews.com/debate-club/should-the-violence-against-women-act-be-reauthorized.

The top vote-getter in the poll was a commentary by Janice Crouse of Concerned Women for America, who argued the Violence Against Women Act should "outrage decent people" because it "victimizes both women and men." Crouse's statement beat opposing votes by a nearly five-to-one margin.

Taking the other side of the debate was Deborah Tucker, Executive Director of the National Center on Domestic and Sexual Violence, who argued the "Violence Against Women Act must be reauthorized because it is working." But U.S. News readers disagreed with that claim by over a two-to-one margin.
...
Highlighting the problem of false allegations, New York Post columnist Abby W. Schachter ridiculed the proposed VAWA reauthorization, titling the law the "I lied to the police and got him thrown in jail" Act: http://www.nypost.com/p/blogs/capitol/the_lied_jail_the_police_and_got_s2zheEr5zwQ1CXY3cbgGCP.'

'America's War on Women'

anthony · 27 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What do you do when you don't have dragons to kill? You beat up women and remove their rights. It is the new American way. Women are smaller. They can be destroyed with a single word or with a well placed blow to the neck. They fall quicker than dragons and die easier. You can even have a fun time before you finish them off. When they are dead the problem is gone. This is the war on women.
...
So what do you do if people don't like you beating or killing a woman? You organize and whine. "Men have no rights in a divorce." "Judges always give women restraining orders." "Women always claim their husbands beat them." Here's a secret for you ladies. Even the guys who say these lines don't believe them. That hasn't stopped a hot air men's rights movement from springing up in support of batterers. "Punishing a batterer is sexist." "A 100 pound woman is just as much of a threat to a 250 pound man as he is to her." "Children are better off with a rich batterer than in a domestic violence shelter."'

Interview with Professor Who Dared to Criticize Sandra Fluke

anthony · 27 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Steven Landsburg, the professor who was denounced by his university for criticizing Georgetown Law student Sandra Fluke, stuck to his position in an exclusive interview with The College Fix.

“Everyone deserves respect, but some people are not interested in discussing their ideas, or possibly examining a different side,” said Landsburg, a bestselling author and professor of economics at the University of Rochester. “Fluke clearly has no desire to do this.”

...

His opinion sparked controversy at the University of Rochester. Student protesters entered Landsburg’s mid-afternoon lecture and formed a line, shoulder-to-shoulder, between him and the class. Landsburg continued to lecture. The students distributed fliers that read: “We denounce professor Steven Landsburg’s attempt to smear a gender with derogatory terms.”

UR president Joel Seligman wrote an e-mail to faculty and staff that said he was “outraged that any professor would demean a student in this fashion.”

Landsburg found these criticisms to be absurd.

“Free speech isn’t the issue here,” he said. “Nobody, myself included, tried to stifle her speech.”

In fact, if anyone had stifled speech, it was the student protesters.

“I’m very disappointed in the growing trend of students and others unwilling to engage in meaningful discussion,” he said.'

TTN Video: Walk a Mile in Her Shoes

anthony · 27 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

'Male students march around Temple's campus in high heels to demonstrate against domestic violence and victim blaming.'

Circumcision violates child's charter rights

anthony · 27 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Re: Circumcision tied to lower prostate cancer risk: study, March 12

I am continually baffled at the seemingly endless array of problems that routine infant circumcision is supposed to "cure" or "prevent." First it was masturbation in the Victorian era, then cancer, then HIV (even though the U.S. with a high rate of circumcision has a much higher rate of HIV transmission than non-circumcising countries like Germany, Norway and Sweden, and infants are not sexually active anyway) and now cancer again, even though the data in this study is showing correlation and not causation — a common misconception.
...
The procedure itself does not treat any medical condition in infants and children and is therefore unethical as removing healthy, normal, functional tissue from an infant for no medical reason is a clear violation of the doctor's oath to "do no harm."

Infant circumcision is also a violation of the child's rights under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, specifically Article 7: "Everyone has the right to life, liberty and security of the person," and Article 15: "Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability."'

Almost 2 out of 10 men in their prime are not working

anthony · 27 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The recent improvements in the job market have given us reason to hope the economy is finally on the mend.

But after five years of struggles, here's a sobering reminder of how far we still have to go: Nearly two in 10 American men in the prime of their life still are not working.

Nearly 83 percent of men ages 25 to 54 – traditionally the core of the nation's workforce – were working in February, according to the most recent data from the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

...

Holzer said there has been some real progress for working men in recent months, but a look at long-term trends shows that we still have far to go. He's particularly concerned about working-age men who do not have a higher education and have been hit hard by cuts in fields such as manufacturing and construction.

"They were having a hard time even before the recession hit, and they really got slammed by the recession," he said. "That's a problematic group that we need to think about more seriously."'

On YouTube: 'Feminism and the Disposable Male'

anthony · 27 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

Uploaded by girlwriteswhat:

'What has feminism done to shatter the patriarchal "women and children first" mentality, and elevate men to status as full human beings deserving of empathy and human rights? What has it done to reinforce and legally entrench the mentality that everyone, including men themselves, should put men last?'

SAVE: Last Chance to Tell Your Senators, Vote NO on VAWA

Matt · 27 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

In the last week, Senator Leahy (D-VT) gathered enough co-sponsors to avoid a filibuster, and the Senate is expected to vote on the Violence Against Women Act (S.1925) very soon.

This means time is running short to take action.

Let's make sure that every senator knows that without accountability, accreditation and equal protection, VAWA is a flawed bill. Let's make sure they know that we want them to vote NO.

Find your senators' phone numbers here: http://www.senate.gov/general/contact_information/senators_cfm.cfm.

Or call the Capitol switchboard at (202) 224-3121, where an operator will connect you directly with the Senate office you request.

The vote could be this week, so please call right now.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

SAVE: Setback to Abuse Industry: Sen. Reid Postpones VAWA Vote

Matt · 28 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

For weeks the Domestic Violence industry has been promising that the Senate would vote on its version of the Violence Against Women Act, S. 1925, by March 23, or certainly no later than March 30.

But that promise came unraveled this week as Senate majority leader Harry Reid postponed a vote on VAWA until after April 16, when the Senate will come back into session after its Easter recess.

Some say the reason for the delay is the reluctance of Sen. Reid to compete with the publicity surrounding President Obama's Affordable Care Act, which is being argued in the Supreme Court this week. But the more likely explanation is that Sen. Reid is having difficulty lining up the necessary 60 votes to secure passage of the VAWA reauthorization. It is known that some senators who are generally supportive of the bill are insisting that amendments be made before they will vote in favor of it.

A recent U.S. News and World Report debate found a majority of persons were opposed to the Violence Against Women Act: http://www.usnews.com/debate-club/should-the-violence-against-women-act-be-reauthorized. A number of female commentators have written editorials sharply criticizing the law: http://www.womenagainstvawa.org

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments

www.saveservices.org

Judge at center of storm in Facebook apology

Matt · 28 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letters here. Video here. Excerpt:

'Hamilton County has become the international focus of free speech activists, and rightly so. Magistrates and Judges have forced, under threat of jail, a citizen to speak what he otherwise would not. The man in question is involved in a contentious divorce. The wife claims domestic violence yet a criminal court found the man innocent. Subsequently the man makes innocuous statements without the threat of violence and his wife claims harassment even though she is barred from reading the statement.

The result was the violation of the man's First Amendment right to free speech (and against forced speech) when he was ordered to publicly post (for 30 days) an apology on Facebook. Adding insult to injury the judge now tells the man that "There is certain monetary interest to be served in this media exploitation." Judge Sieve, if you cause the cause – you cause the effect. Let's hope the county doesn't have to write a large check to fix this blunder.'

'Haredi Rabbis Duke It Out Over Circumcision Sucking Ritual'

anthony · 28 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Satmar leader's comments stand in stark contrast to statements made by Rabbi Shmuel Kamenetsky, the founder and dean of the Talmudical Yeshiva of Philadelphia and a senior member of Agudath Israel's Council of Torah Sages, the prestigious haredi rabbinical policy-making body. When asked about rabbis who believe that using a tube is not valid under Jewish law, Rabbi Kamenetsky replied, "Nobody holds like that." Told of those who make this claim, the apparently incredulous rabbi said only, "I don't think there's a response to them. Chas v'shalom [God forbid], if [children are] getting sick [from oral suction], [under halakha, Jewish law, you] wouldn't do it."
...
3. The slippery slope argument that Rabbi David Zwiebel, Agudah's executive VP, so favors. Even if stopping MBP is the right thing to do, even if the only way to save the lives of a few Jewish babies is for the government to ban MBP, the next issue the government gets involved with may be to ban or regulate circumcision itself – something Agudah would strongly oppose.

How could Rabbi Niederman deny medical fact? How could Agudah not speak out against MBP? In other words, what is the halakhic peg they're hanging their collective hat on that allows them to behave in a way that certainly will sicken, maim and even kill babies?'

Andrea Yates Could Be Released From Psychiatric Hospital to Attend Church

Matt · 28 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Andrea Yates, the Houston mom who in 2001 drowned her five young children one-by-one in the bathtub, might soon be allowed to leave the state psychiatric hospital where she is being treated for mental illness to attend church.

"She's been approved by a certain church to attend Sunday services, and I anticipate that that recommendation will be forthcoming from her doctors," Yates' attorney George Parnham told ABCNews.com. He would not name the church.

Parnham said he expects doctors at Kerrville State Hospital to file a letter to the state district court within 10 days recommending that Yates be granted a two-hour pass to attend church on Sundays, the first step toward a permanent release.'

Only 29 months for druging and raping 13 YO boy

Anonymous · 30 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. She only got 29 months and 10 years' probation for drugging and raping a 13 year old boy. If a man had given a 13 year girl (well, nowadays any female of any age) alcohol and drugs then had sex with her, he would never see the light of day. Excerpt:

'Former Massachusetts teacher Christine McCallum was sentenced to 29 months in prison and 10 years probation for raping and drugging a 13-year-old student.

McCallum, 29, was arrested in January 2009 and convicted of raping the boy up to 300 times over a 21-month period. She pleaded guilty to 12 counts of child rape, one count of drugging a person for sex and one count of providing alcohol to a minor, according to Enterprise.

The former Abington elementary school educator started tutoring her victim and his 11-year-old brother in 2005, FOX 25 reported. After a 20-month period, the two boys started living with McCallum and her husband part-time.'

RISUG as birth control for men

Anonymous · 30 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If I were going to describe the perfect contraceptive, it would go something like this: no babies, no latex, no daily pill to remember, no hormones to interfere with mood or sex drive, no negative health effects whatsoever, and 100 percent effectiveness. The funny thing is, something like that currently exists.

The procedure called RISUG in India (reversible inhibition of sperm under guidance) takes about 15 minutes with a doctor, is effective after about three days, and lasts for 10 or more years. A doctor applies some local anesthetic, makes a small pinhole in the base of the scrotum, reaches in with a pair of very thin forceps, and pulls out the small white vas deferens tube. Then, the doctor injects the polymer gel (called Vasalgel here in the US), pushes the vas deferens back inside, repeats the process for the other vas deferens, puts a Band-Aid over the small hole, and the man is on his way. If this all sounds incredibly simple and inexpensive, that's because it is. The chemicals themselves cost less than the syringe used to administer them. But the science of what happens next is the really fascinating part.'

The Next Step in Combatting the Spread of HIV/AIDS Among Women and Girls

Minuteman · 30 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'As the Executive Director of the White House Council on Women and Girls, it is my honor to join Dr. Grant Colfax, Director of the Office of National AIDS Policy and Lynn Rosenthal, the White House Advisor on Violence Against Women, in announcing the next step in President Obama's commitment to combat the spread of HIV/AIDS amongst women and girls. Please read on for more details.

There are approximately 1.2 million people living with HIV/AIDS in the United States, including more than 290,000 women. Black and Hispanic women account for nearly three-quarters of new HIV infections among women. In July 2010, President Obama launched the first National HIV/AIDS Strategy to provide a coordinated national response to fight the epidemic, with the goals of reducing new infections, improving health outcomes, and decreasing HIV-related health disparities. This past World AIDS Day, the President said that "When black women feel forgotten, even though they account for most of the new cases among women, then we've got to do more."
...
When we address the domestic public health threat of HIV/AIDS, we cannot ignore the detrimental effects of gender-based violence and gender-related health disparities, particularly within underserved communities. The Administration commemorated this year's National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day by hosting a White House event to highlight how these intersecting factors contribute to poor health outcomes among women and girls.'

Voluntary sex causes as many injuries as rape

Broadsword · 31 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New research surprises by showing that vaginal injuries are just as common after regular intercourse as after a rape. The findings could have great implications for forensic investigations into rape cases.

When police officers around the world investigate rape cases, an important type of evidence is whether or not the woman has lesions in her vagina. If she does, it is regarded as a sign that there has been an assault. There have been cases where men have been convicted, based on vaginal injuries as the key evidence.

...

Now a Danish researcher has obtained solid evidence that injuries to a woman's vagina can provide a totally misleading picture of whether or not a woman has been raped. An in-depth study of 39 rape victims on one side and 110 nursing students on the other reveals that voluntary sex causes vaginal injuries just as frequently as in rapes.'

Could the Augusta National golf club be forced to make IBM chief Virginia Rometty its first-ever female member?

Broadsword · 31 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

The last four chief executives of IBM - a longtime corporate sponsor of the Masters - have been members of the exclusive golf club in Augusta. The latest CEO of the computer giant happens to be a woman. Virginia Rometty was appointed this year.

One problem - a woman has never worn a member's green jacket since Augusta National opened in 1933.

"I think they're both in a bind," Martha Burk said recently. Burk, who spearheaded an unsuccessful campaign 10 years ago for the club to admit a female member, told CNN on Friday that she fears Augusta and IBM will work out a "sham solution" to make the issue go away.

"The company has a huge responsibility here not to undermine its first female CEO," Burk said. "If they accept anything less than full member - or resign their sponsorship, which is another option - they're going to undermine their new CEO. And they'll be making a statement that they don't consider her an equal to her predecessors."

UK girl, 12, dared boy to rape friend in game

Minuteman · 31 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A 12-year-old British girl dared a boy to rape her 11-year-old friend, laughed while it was happening and then yelled "no you're not finished," when he tried to stop, a court heard.

Leeds Crown Court heard the girl instigated the attack, which took place in her bedroom on October 2010, by suggesting a game of dare that quickly got out of hand, the Daily Mail reports.

Judge Geoffrey Marson sentenced the 12-year-old and the 14-year-old boy to 28 months detention in a young offender institution.

...

He said that after daring the boy to rape her friend, the 12-year-old pushed her onto the bed.

The boy stopped raping the 11-year-old when the victim told him to, prompting the bully to yell, "No you're not finished," but he ignored her.

Defender Richard Reed said the 12-year-old came from a troubled background and had difficulty empathising with the victim's situation.'

Mother conned ex into thinking he was her child's father jailed for 20 months

Anonymous · 31 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Interesting comments from the judge on the emotional ramifications for all involved including the victim's actual children. Excerpt:

'A mother who conned a former lover into thinking he was the father of her daughter for more than 13 years has been jailed.

The 47-year-old, who cannot be named for legal reasons, swindled him out of at least £48,700 which went on private education and expensive gifts.

She admitted 15 offences of deception when she appeared at Caernarfon Crown Court, in north Wales, yesterday.

And despite a plea for leniency from her daughter, the judge told her he had no choice but to jail her for 20 months.'

Two teachers caught taunting disabled boy

Matt · 31 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Cruelty as you can see is an equal opportunity employer. As sad as this is, I have heard of much worse, and the perps have come from both sets of the sexes. I can't help but think they would have been a lot slower to act this way had the child been female. Excerpt:

'wo Alabama teachers were caught cruelly taunting and abusing a 10-year-old boy who has celebral palsy after the boy's mother attached an audio recorder to his wheelchair.

The shocking recording captures two voices chiding Jose Salinas for his 'disgusting' drooling and reveals he was left alone with no instruction for long periods of time.

'Why is my paper wet?' a female teacher is heard demanding on the tape. 'Look at me and answer. That's not an answer. That's not even a word.'
...
'Do you seen anybody else at this table drooling? Then, stop,' she said. 'You have got drool all over your face and it is gross.'

The teachers accused, Drew Faircloth and Alicia Brown, have been put on administrative leave from Wicksburg High School, Alabama, where Jose is in the fourth grade.'

F&F: Call Shared Parenting Legislation Sponsors

Matt · 31 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here (scroll to about half-way down the page). Excerpt:

'At least 30% of Massachusetts representatives and senators are currently sponsors of proposed shared parenting legislation. If you live in their district, please call them or email their office.

First, thank them for backing the one solution that prominent and respected experts in child development have shown through research that children ardently desire; makes them happier; improves their schooling; decreases delinquency, gang violence and trouble with the law; decreases substance abuse and teen pregnancy; increases child support compliance; diminishes parental conflict and domestic violence; and has been endorsed by 86% of Massachusetts voters in a 2004 ballot referendum. It is not only free to the taxpayer, but would actually save millions of dollars.

Second, ask them to encourage the appointment of a shared parenting task force. Ask them to contact the Judiciary Committee's Chairs, Senator Cynthia Stone Creem and Representative Eugene L. O'Flaherty, and urge them to appoint a Shared Parenting Task Force.
...
Find your legislator or call 617.722.2000 to reach their office.

(List follows on target page)

Texas nurse convicted in bleach deaths case

anthony · 31 March 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LUFKIN, Texas - A former Texas nurse accused of killing five of her patients and injuring five others by injecting bleach into their kidney dialysis tubing was found guilty of capital murder Friday.

Kimberly Clark Saenz, 38, was fired in April 2008 after a rash of illnesses and deaths at a Lufkin dialysis clinic run by Denver-based health care giant DaVita Inc. She was charged a year later.

Her trial began March 5. Defense lawyers argued that Saenz was being targeted by the clinic's owner for faulty procedures at the facility, including improper water purification. They also suggested that officials at the clinic, about 125 miles northeast of Houston, fabricated evidence against Saenz. Prosecutors described claims Saenz was being set up by her employer as "absolutely ridiculous."

The mother of two now faces life in prison or a death sentence as the case moved to the punishment phase. Prosecutors had said they would seek the death penalty if Saenz was convicted.'

Top 5 things that drive men crazy

Matt · 1 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This is currently a top-half rotating content story on Yahoo. Nice to see such things, though they be scarce. Excerpt:

'2. Expecting the man to pay for everything. Most men don't mind picking up the check early on in a courtship, but after a few dates, it's nice for a woman to offer to contribute financially — especially if exclusivity has been established. Men like to be generous, but they don't like to be taken for suckers, especially if the woman they're seeing has a good job. As a corollary to this one, "Men are often put off by women trying to get a sense early on about what he does for a living and how much he earns," says Dr. Seth Meyers, a Los Angeles-based psychologist and author of Dr. Seth's Love Prescription. Men are people, too. If they feel they're being sized up for more shallow, resume-type qualities, they'll be annoyed.
...
4. Being controlling. "Correcting him on little details when he's got the big picture right," adds Dr. Young, is another thing that drives men bonkers. It's often true that women are better at multitasking, but that doesn't mean they have to run every detail of the show. A man will get frustrated if a woman asks him to do something then won't give him a chance to do it his way. The real show-stopper is when she then claims she "has to do everything around here!" If this situation sounds familiar, how can you improve it?

"If you want to put a stop to people's annoying behavior, you first have to make them aware of it," says Marc Muchnick, Ph.D., author of No More Regrets! 30 Ways to Greater Happiness and Meaning in Your Life. "Often, people don't realize that what they are doing is bugging you, so when you tell them, it may come as a surprise." So tell your significant other that she has to trust you if she doesn't want to plan every meal, vacation and weekend you spend together, guys. Then do a good job with the task — in your own way, of course — and she just might back off.'

Mother Faces Possible Jail Time For Baptizing Children

Matt · 1 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Interesting case. My own commentary is in the Comments section. Excerpt:

'NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A Shelby County mother is facing contempt-of-court charges and possible jail time for baptizing her two children without the knowledge or consent of her ex-husband.

This week the Tennessee Court of Appeals said Lauren Jarrell must face a criminal contempt hearing for violating a court order that said major decisions regarding the religious upbringing of her two children should be made jointly with her-ex-husband.

The mother and her ex-husband, Blake Jarrell, are both Christian — he's a Methodist and she's a Presbyterian.

Court records say the father thought the children should be baptized once they are older. He has asked that his ex-wife be found in criminal contempt for baptizing the children without his knowledge or permission.'

Jackie Mason assulted, girlfriend arrested

Matt · 1 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. (About Jackie Mason.) Excerpt:

'It was no laughing matter for Jackie Mason.

The elderly stand-up comedian called cops early today after he and a gal pal got into a tiff in his apartment and he wound up scratched on his arm, law-enforcement sources said.

The 48-year-old woman, Kaoru Suzuki- McMullen, was arrested and charged with misdemeanor assault.

Mason, who cops said is 83, was at his W. 57th St. apartment with Suzuki-McMullen, who they described as his girlfriend, at 6:30 a.m. when they got into an argument, according to law-enforcement sources.

Mason wanted her to leave, and he grabbed his cellphone to call the doorman, the sources said.

Suzuki-McMullen tried to take the phone from his hands, and he suffered scratches and bruises on his left wrist in the struggle, sources said.'

'The Dumbest Law In Illinois'

anthony · 1 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm no fan of "father's rights" attorneys. I think that they are just marketers who prey on the fears of Dads (or in some case Moms) who are worried about losing their kids or not seeing them as much as they want.

Despite me cringing when I hear one of these Dad's rights commercials, there is a law that really screws some fathers that needs to be changed.

In Illinois, if you sign the birth certificate to a child and don't reverse that within 75 days of doing so, you are legally the Dad. That's it. So if your wife sleeps with her boss and gets pregnant (as happened to a recent caller to my office), and you sign the birth certificate, you are on the hook for child support for that kid. If you get a paternity test later on that shows you aren't the father, you are out of luck.

It could be worse. In some states, if you are married and your wife has a child you are automatically the Dad no matter what. But the law in Illinois is still awful. Unless you can prove a fraud (e.g. someone forged your name on the birth certificate) or the Mom agrees to let you off the hook, you are out of luck. In fact there almost never is a point in hiring a lawyer to go to court and fight this because it's a lost cause.'

"Congresswoman: 'Violence' Against Women 'As American As Apple Pie'"

anthony · 1 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

'Calling violence against women "as American as apple pie," Rep. Gwen Moore (D-WI), testified on behalf of the Violence Against Women Act which would would renew grants to U.S. domestic violence prevention and survivor support programs, would increase availability of legal assistance to victims and would extend assistance to battered undocumented immigrants and same-sex couples.'

Tension erupts as college considers ending basketball due to Title IX

anthony · 2 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The men's basketball program at St. Johns River State College is in imminent danger of being eliminated, but those wishing to prevent the removal of the school's oldest sport aren't going down without a fight.

School president Joe Pickens will be asking the Board of Trustees to consider several options at a Wednesday meeting on the McClendon campus to keep the college in compliance with Title IX regulations, including the controversial measure of dropping basketball, which has been in place at the Palatka school since the early 1960s.
...

The college, which is approximately 60 percent female, has had the same four sports for nearly two decades (baseball, basketball, softball and volleyball). With 38 scholarships for women and 30 for men, that translates to about a 56-44 percentage split in favor of the women. As long as schools are within 5 percent of the male-female student breakdown, the federal government considers them in compliance. For schools in danger of non-compliance, the governing bodies of all college athletics usually allow a grace period of at least two years to meet federal guidelines.

"As it stands, [SJRSC] is not out of [Title IX] compliance," said Wanda Young, coordinator of Access and Civil Rights for the Florida college system. "The school has been working back and forth with us to see where they are."'

Cheerleader and mother appear in court in sex abuse case

anthony · 2 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TAYLOR MILL, Ky. - The Ben-Gal cheerleader and her middle school principal mother involved in a sex abuse scandal will make their first court appearance Monday morning.

Pleas of not guilty are expected to be entered in Kenton Circuit Court for Cheryl and Sarah Jones, both of Independence.

Sarah Jones, Captain of the Ben-Gals cheerleading squad and a former Dixie Heights High School teacher in Edgewood, is accused of sexually abusing a student and unlawful use of electronic means to induce a minor to engage in sexual activities. She resigned from her teaching position Nov. 30 for personal reasons.'

High court rules against man strip-searched over traffic violation

anthony · 2 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Something tells me if it was a woman the Supreme Court would have came to a different decision. Excerpt:

'Washington (CNN) -- A New Jersey man who was strip searched in prison after being accused of failing to pay a traffic fine lost his Supreme Court appeal Monday.

The 5-4 divided court found two county jails "struck a reasonable balance between inmate privacy and the needs of the (correctional) institution."

The conservative majority concluded a "reasonable suspicion" standard could be applied when conducting examinations of newly admitted prisoners.
...
Albert Florence said he was subjected to what he called a pair of intrusive, humiliating searches six years ago.'

British teen rape PSA goes too far, critics say

anthony · 2 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new ad campaign aimed at British youth is causing critics to claim the shock value of one public service announcement goes too far, with many others saying the "shocking" ad is necessary to open eyes.

In the ad, as part of the "This Is Abuse" campaign, a young man is seen forcing himself on a young girl in a bedroom. As she tries to resist, the teenage boy continues to advance on her.

The hook comes near the end, when a carbon copy of the boy is seen screaming at "himself" to stop. Viewers are then prompted to ask themselves, "If you could see yourself, would you see rape?"

The Huffington Post reports that the ads are aimed to British teenagers aged 13-18 years old. The PSAs typically run during shows geared toward that age range.'

New charges for stalker of Yankee GM

anthony · 2 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK -- A woman accused of stalking and shaking down New York Yankees general manager Brian Cashman peppered him and his office with odd phone calls, posing as other people and disguising her voice as a man's, a new indictment says.

Louise Neathway also called Cashman's estranged wife, according to the indictment, obtained Monday. The indictment adds a slew of charges to the initial stalking, grand larceny and harassment counts Neathway has faced since her February arrest.

Neathway, a 36-year-old medical sales worker originally from Great Britain, now also is contending with charges that range from lying about her income on an application for her Manhattan apartment to lying to the grand jury -- and from squeezing Cashman for thousands of dollars to harassing her ex-husband and another man.

Father, grandmother of missing baby offered to take him from troubled mom

el cid · 2 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Disturbing because the baby is presumed dead and father and grandmother offered to take the child--but Social Services say mom has all the rights. Excerpt:

'The father of a 7-month-old Commerce City boy missing and presumed dead said he offered to take the child when the baby's mother expressed dissatisfaction with her baby.

Sharrieckia Trinette Page, 22, is being held in the medical unit of the Adams County Jail in lieu of a $100,000 bond on suspicion of child abuse resulting in death. She appeared in Adams County court for an initial advisement via a video link, said Krista Flanagan, an Adams County District Attorney's Office spokeswoman.

Torrey Brown Sr., the father of the child, said he visited Page's home on Wednesday, the day before the baby was last seen.
...
Brown said he offered to take the child but was denied."
...
"'She has more rights, she is the mother,' " Brown recalled of her conversation with a child welfare agent. "That is what I was told."'

Wife arrested for assault after marriage counseling session

el cid · 2 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. She beat him up in bed after a marriage counseling session:

'Wife arrested for assault. On March 13, sheriff's deputies were called to Swedish Southwest Emergency Room, 6196 S. Ammons Way, to investigate an assault. The man suffering from head and shoulder injuries said he had been beaten by his wife in bed after coming home from a session of marriage counseling at their church and arguing. The woman later agreed to meet the deputy at the Jefferson County Jail and was arrested for assault.'

Dad freed after spending 9 years in jail on daughter's false rape allegation

anthony · 3 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(Longview, Washington) In 2001, a disgruntled daughter, upset over her parents' divorce and mad at her dad, told Washington State Police that her father raped her on several occasions back when she was 11-years-old. The dad, Thomas Edward Kennedy (now 43), denied the allegation at the time, but was convicted by a Washington jury and sentenced to more than 15 years in the slammer. Now 23-years-old, the daughter, Cassandra Ann Kennedy recanted her 2001 rape allegation – after her father spent more than 9 years behind bars.

According to tdn.com in Washington: " … she made it all up. So after serving more than nine years in prison, her father was released last week and the charges against him were dismissed."'

Ed. note: According to this article reporting the same, the daughter will not be charged with any crime - for the usual excuse that to do so might scare others away from making similar reports.

Op-Ed: The latest false rape round up

anthony · 3 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman gaoled for making false marital rape allegations has lost her appeal. Others had little appeal in the first place, including Christine Jordan, who had consensual sex with a man who couldn't even remember her name.

Pips Taylor was recently given space by the BBC to indict the men of Britain, plucking figures for unreported rape statistics out of thin air. Here, we concentrate on actual cases of false allegations. This short round up of recent proven fabrications is in no particular order. The first concerns marital rape, which is a fairly new development in English law.

Three years ago, the non-victim's husband was charged with six counts of rape - on her word alone - pleaded not guilty, and no evidence was offered against him when he appeared at Mold Crown Court, Wales. Then she admitted she had accused him falsely, and was charged with perverting the course of justice.'

Australia: $2000 fine over false rape claim

anthony · 3 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who falsely accused two Victorian policemen of sexually assaulting her after they arrested her for being drunk outside a South Yarra nightclub has been convicted and fined $2000.

Karly Enid Jean Mitchel, 25, had formally complained after her release from custody that she had been "groped" on her breasts by the police and touched on her inner thighs and outside her crotch.

Melbourne Magistrates Court heard today Mitchel had been refused entry about 2am on August 6 last year to the Circus Nightclub and then spent 45 minutes abusing crowd controllers.'

'Aggressive' female board members take more risks than men, research shows

Broadsword · 3 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women at board level are "less experienced", "more aggressive" and "more likely to take risks" with a bank's finances - a report by an all-male group of academics and bankers has found.

The Bundesbank's Thomas Kick led the study, entitled Executive board composition and bank risk taking, that flies in the face of the theory that women in senior management take a more balanced, risk-averse approach.

The German central bank's research found that female board members were more likely to take risks with a bank's finances than their male counterparts.

It urges financial institutions to be cautious when re-addressing the gender balance: "Employing a higher proportion of female board members significantly increases risk taking."'

Youth suicide in Canadian girls and problems 'traditionally associated with males'

anthony · 3 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of girls committing suicide in Canada has risen in the past 30 years, a troubling trend that's prompting some experts to question the role played by social media.

In a study published Monday in the Canadian Medical Association Journal, researchers from the Public Health Agency of Canada report that on a whole, youth suicide rates have declined since 1980. But closer inspection reveals the decline is evident only in males, while female suicide rates rose from 1980 to 2008.
...
In 1980, a total of 249 males and 50 females between ages 10 to 19 committed suicide in Canada, according to the study. By 2008, that number had fallen to 156 for males but rose to 77 for females.
...
Dr. Manion says the trend could be explained in part by the fact more females are being affected by substance abuse or behavioural issues, problems traditionally associated with males.'

"Even Seventh-Graders Are Hitting Their Girlfriends (And Boyfriends)"

anthony · 3 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's a lot of data about high school dating violence, but not as much about younger kids. However, middle-schoolers are dating according to a team of researchers from the program Start Strong: Building Healthy Teen Relationships, who talked to seventh-graders from eight middle schools in four states. Seventy-five percent of those kids said they'd had a boyfriend or girlfriend at some point, while 37 percent of the kids said they'd been victims of psychological abuse (such as, being forbidden to hang out with their friends), and 15 percent said they'd suffered physical violence.

The kids also subscribed to a lot of gender stereotypes. Two-thirds of them believed in at least one of a list of generalizations about boys and girls, like “girls are always trying to get boys to do what they want them to do,” or “with boyfriends and girlfriends, the boy should be smarter than the girl.” Deborah Gibbs, an expert on child welfare at the Research Triangle Institute, which helped conduct the study, said that these kinds of "rigid and prescriptive" gender beliefs are predictors of who might end up in violent relationship later on — so even kids who hadn't been involved in abuse were at risk for it.'

'That 70's show' actress Lisa Robin Kelly charged with domestic violence

anthony · 3 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'LOS ANGELES, Calif. - The That 70's Show actress who played Laurie Foreman, the promiscuous and antagonistic older sister of Eric Foreman, was arrested for domestic violence in Los Angeles over the weekend, E Online reports.

Lisa Robin Kelly was put behind bars for corporal injury upon a spouse on Saturday.

Kelly was on the hit series for five seasons before she was fired in 2003, according to TV Guide.

Kelly was previously arrested in 2010 for a DUI in North Carolina.

She remains locked up with bail set at $50,000.'

'Boys deserve respect'

anthony · 3 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here is what my son learned in class the other day. A man's mind tends to be slightly less developed than a woman's.

Which is one of the reasons men are more aggressive and less understanding, and women are gentler, calmer and more sympathetic. This, his teacher very helpfully explained, is one of the reasons teenage boys are still paying more for their car insurance than girls. Because boys are risk-takers. Irrational beings who leap before they look. They deserve to pay higher premiums on their insurance because as we now know, they are the ones who get in all of the car accidents. Not girls. Of course. They deserve to be judged as a whole.
...
And boys? Well, now we know what is lying in wait beneath their skin. Vicious, snapping beasts who want nothing more than to raid your fridge, crash your car and ravage your daughter. They can't help it, of course. It's in their physical make-up. Perhaps if we could find them an outlet befitting all that natural rage and ugly testosterone. Like . . . like a yearly wild boar hunt! Yes! We could send all of our young men into the wild in nothing more than a loin cloth. Have them fashion their own spears and set them amongst some wild boars. A little boys getaway, Lord Of The Flies style.

Then maybe we could tame them. Teach them how to be more civilized. Although apparently their brains are sort of underdeveloped so maybe they won't get the point. We have tried a variety of media in recent decades to help them understand and repress their inner animal. I thought the male-bashing, embarrassingly one-sided sitcom Everybody Loves Raymond would do the trick. If not, then maybe King of Queens. Although this generation of boys is probably too young for those shows. How about the Disney channel, and their penchant for strong-willed, sarcastic girls in bright clothing loudly berating their dim-witted brothers? Shows like Wizards of Waverly Place or Hannah Montana or ICarly?
...
This isn't empowerment. Pushing someone else down isn't the only way to lift yourself up. It's a temporary solution that has never worked in the past. It's wrong, plain and simple. And it isn't what any of us should want for our sons. Maybe it's time we speak up.'

Young Women Who Drink and Drive at Higher Risk of Fatal Accident

Minuteman · 3 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Young women who drink and drive in the United States are at increasing risk for being in a fatal accident, according to a new study.

Although men had roughly double the risk for a fatal crash as women with the same blood-alcohol level in 1996, that gender gap had closed by 2007, the researchers pointed out. And although reasons for that trend remain unclear, they said it may be because young women are taking more risks on the road.

"Young women who drink and drive may be behaving more like young men who drink and drive," said the study's lead researcher, Robert Voas, of the Pacific Institute for Research and Evaluation in Calverton, Md., in a news release from the Journal of Studies on Alcohol and Drugs.
...
The researchers concluded drunk-driving and distracted-driving prevention education is needed for both boys and girls.'

Contact DA in falsely-accused dad case

Matt · 3 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Just published this story. Are you as fed up with this kind of blatantly sexist injustice as I am? Time to make your feelings known. The DA who is declining to prosecute the daughter has a page here with a contact email (baurs-at-co.cowlitz.wa.us) listed here, which also lists a phone number of 360-577-3080. Please call or email her and POLITELY ask her to reconsider her decision. Let her know the eyes of the country (if not also the world-- I also encourage non-US-based activists to take action as well) are on her and these eyes are not happy with what they are seeing.

The daughter was old enough to know what she was doing was wrong. Yet she maintained her silence after the fact for nearly 10 years. Years of that man's life have been stolen from him. Yet his false accuser, his own daughter, will go unpunished? Is this justice? No. And rights are like muscles - if you don't use them, you eventually lose them. We have the right to petition for redress of grievances. If this isn't a grievance, I don't know what is!

SAVE: $1.2 Million in Anti-Violence Funds Embezzled, Missing, or Misused

Matt · 4 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE
Contact: Teri Stoddard
Telephone: 301-801-0608

Email: tstoddard@saveservices.org

$1.2 Million in Anti-Violence Funds Embezzled, Missing, or Misused:

Fraud is Widespread, SAVE Charges

Washington, DC/April 4, 2012 – Following release of three reports by the Department of Justice, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is charging that many grants made under the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) are plagued by fraud and waste. Such malfeasance shortchanges the vulnerable victims of partner abuse.

The U.S. Department of Justice (DOJ) issued three reports in March highlighting the problem:

1. A March 28 press release announced the sentencing of Julie and Andrea Matau for embezzlement of funds from a VAWA grant. From 2005 to 2007, the mother and daughter pair stole $159,763 in federal money from their American Samoa legal services corporation, which had received $1.2 million in VAWA-related grants. http://www.justice.gov/opa/pr/2012/March/12-crm-386.html

2. A DOJ audit of the Virgin Islands Law Enforcement Planning Commission reported that $847,553 in funds awarded by the Office of Violence Against Women were found to be questionable. Of this amount, $372,434 of expenditures had no records to document how the money had been spent. http://www.justice.gov/oig/reports/2012/g4012001.pdf

3. An audit of VAWA grants to the Coeur d'Alene Native American tribe's domestic violence program revealed $240,431 had been improperly spent, including $171,000 in salary for an unapproved position. http://www.justice.gov/oig/grants/2012/g6012008.pdf

Each year VAWA awards $500 million in grants to abuse-reduction organizations, but fiscal management practices have been found to be sub-standard. A SAVE report documents long-standing problems of fraud and abuse. http://saveservices.org/pdf/SAVE-Accountability-and-Oversight.pdf

The SAVE report points out that the Office of Violence Against Women has not conducted comprehensive self-evaluations, in disregard of directives from the Government Accountability Office and Office of Management and Budget.

Says SAVE spokesman Philip W. Cook: "Victims of domestic violence are ill-served by fraud and waste, especially on such a broad scale. Congress must assure the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act contains strong accountability measures that deny funding to rogue grantees that misuse taxpayer money."

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is a victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to partner violence: www.saveservices.org.

AHRQ Statistical Briefs: Circumcisions Performed in U.S. Community Hospitals, 2009

Minuteman · 4 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Circumcision is the most commonly performed surgical procedure in newborns.1 Although circumcisions may be performed for cultural or religious reasons, there has been debate over the ethics and medical necessity of this procedure.1,2 As recently reported by the CDC, the percent of male newborn circumcisions declined over the past decade.3

In 1999, the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) issued a policy position stating that the evidence of medical benefits from circumcisions was not compelling enough to warrant routine newborn circumcision.4 In recent years however, evidence has been accumulating on the potential health benefits associated with circumcisions, including reductions in infant urinary tract infections and rates of penile cancer.5 In heterosexual men, circumcision has been linked to decreased acquisition and transmission of sexually transmitted infections such as syphilis, human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and herpes simplex virus type 2. Since 2005, three randomized controlled studies have been published indicating benefits from circumcision in reducing HIV acquisition in heterosexual males in Africa.6,7,8 These findings have renewed the debate over AAP's current position that there is insufficient evidence to issue recommendations for routine neonatal circumcisions.4'

Tiger's mistresses rewarded for cheating

el cid · 5 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

I agree with this column about the culpability of Tiger's mistresses in his downfall. Famous men who cheat pay a price while the women with whom they cheat are often rewarded. Excerpts:

'This threesome of apparent adulterers apparently so cherished their time with the then-married golfer they decided to do a film tribute. I have not yet been able to screen "3 Mistresses: Notorious Tales of the World's Greatest Golfer," but I am sure the Q&A about Tiger's sexual tastes and demonstration portion of the video is not at all about cashing in on their role in ruining a marriage but, rather, just their fond memories of doing so.
...
This latest Tiger development reveals the hypocrisy. He is getting excoriated for cheating on Elin Woods, and his helpers are profiting from it."
...
Because this is now a business plan: Be hot, sleep with a famous rich guy, save the texts, call Allred and turn it into a 401(k).'

Brave men “Walk a Mile in Her Shoes”

anthony · 5 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Men wearing high heel shoes paraded through downtown Cherokee on Thursday, April 5. No, it wasn’t a drag show, and none of them lost a bet. The brave men donned the shoes, as part of a “Walk a Mile in Her Shoes” event which drew over 100 people, to help bring awareness to the problem of violence against women.

“Thank you for manning up and walking with us,” said Painttown Rep. Terri Henry, a long-time advocate against domestic violence. She spoke to the crowd about the importance of awareness and education on the problem as well as the need to reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA).
...
Tom Hill, of Analenisgi, said it is important for men to take responsibility for the problem. “We are responsible for this problem and we are the ones that have to take care of it.”'

Men paint their nails to stop violence against women

anthony · 5 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Men walking around campus with red painted nails aren't cross-dressing; they're taking part in an initiative to stop violence against women.

Volunteers will be at the Atrium, Student Recreation and Wellness Center and Scramble Light to ask men if they are man enough to stop violence against women by volunteering to paint one of their nails red.

Operation Red Jungle, a campus wide initiative, is geared toward bringing awareness to stopping the violence.

Emily Sullivan, president of Ball State's Timmy Global Health, volunteered her time on Tuesday to ask men passing by if they wanted to take the pledge.'

Divorce Ruling Revised

anthony · 5 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Nassau County judge dramatically reversed himself in a decision about divorce payments that had been cited by an independent commission as an example of flaws in legislation passed to reform New York's matrimonial laws.

In March 2011, Judge Norman Janowitz ordered Jeffrey Goldberg to pay his wife Jill Goldberg more than $17,000 a month, though his monthly take-home pay as an investment banker was only $12,775, according to court documents. His wife, Jill, is employed as a guidance counselor, earning $103,000 a year. Mr. Goldberg was laid off in August.

But on March 12, Judge Janowitz declared his original decision to be "unjust and inappropriate" and substantially reduced how much Mr. Goldberg must pay his wife, including reductions in temporary alimony and child support.

"The Court did not consider how the totality of the court-directed payments would impact the parties' economic reality on a month to month basis," Judge Janowitz wrote in his new decision.'

SAVE: Our Volunteers are the Best

Matt · 5 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Over the last few months we have called upon all of you to help us reform domestic violence law, specifically the federal Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), S.1925. We have asked you to make phone calls, send emails and sign petitions. And you haven't let us down. Thank you so much!

Today, we'd also like to recognize our volunteers.

We are honored to work with members of the Domestic Violence Legislative Project (DVLP), Campaign 2012, and the Countering Abuse Misinformation Project (CAMP).

Meet two of our volunteers:

DVLP member Relda Copning shared her son's tragic story with the women of WAVE. She also called every senator to talk about VAWA. Sign Relda's petition on false allegations of domestic violence: http://www.petition2congress.com/1627/stop-false-allegations-domestic-violence

CAMP member Gordon E. Finley, Ph.D. wrote a letter about VAWA to Washington DC's The Hill. His letter "Time to Sunset Violence Against Women Act" was published on March 27: http://thehill.com/opinion/letters/218615-moderates-should-support-vote-for-other-moderates

This is just an example of the dedication that you can find across the country for domestic violence law reform.

Thank you all. You are the best!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Obama to host forum on women and the economy

anthony · 5 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Tomorrow is Women's Day at the White House.

President Obama will host and speak at a White House Forum on Women and the Economy on Friday, designed to "highlight ways the administration has helped create economic security for women and recognizes that women are key to economic growth and competitiveness."

The White House will also be releasing a report from its Council on Women and Girls, showing how economic security and jobs for women are essential to a sustained economic recovery.

"From access to affordable education for young women to supporting women at work and at home, to ensuring security for women in retirement, the administration is committed, across all agencies and departments, to do everything it can to create an economy built to last for America's women," said a White House statement.'

UK: Boys to be allowed into girls' school

anthony · 5 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Boys are to be allowed into an all-girls prep school for the first time in the North Down school's history.

Cygnet House, preparatory school for Glenlola Collegiate Grammar School in Bangor, are to allow boys in, in a relaunch for the school in time for next September's intake, or soon after.

The Department of Education has approved the plans but Minister John O'Dowd said the move did not signal an increase in capacity and would therefore not impact on neighbouring schools.

Last year every girl who attended Cygnet House's P7 class secured a grammar school place.'

Middle school boys who are reluctant readers value reading more after using e-readers

anthony · 5 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Middle school boys rated reading more valuable as an activity after two months of using an e-reader, according to a new study.

The findings come from a study of 199 middle school students who struggle with reading and who participated in a reading improvement class that included Amazon's Kindle e-reader, said one of the study's authors, Dara Williams-Rossi, Southern Methodist University, Dallas.

The researchers found that boys consistently had a higher self-concept of their reading skill than girls both before and after using the e-readers. After use of the e-readers, boys' attitudes about the value of reading improved, while girls' attitudes declined, said Williams-Rossi, an assistant clinical professor in the Annette Caldwell Simmons School of Education and Human Development at SMU.'

WH Press Sec Jay Carney and exploiting gender gap

anthony · 5 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Transcript here. Excerpt:

'Q Jay, thank you. I want to go back to the women's conference on Friday. There's a pretty obvious political strategy from Chicago to exploit the gender gap that you have. It's in a lot of public polls that women, by a wide margin, are supporting the President over Mitt Romney or any other Republican paired up against him. Why are you using the White House on Friday to stage an event that clearly has some political implications?

MR. CARNEY: Ed, by that — you're saying that anything that has to do with women has political -- so anything that has to do with growing the economy, because I think every political analyst out there would say that a stronger recovery would be good for the President politically, or anything that has to do with job creation is inherently political because more jobs would be good for the President.

Q So what day are you having a men's conference on the economy? (Laughter.)

MR. CARNEY: Well, stay tuned. Ed, that's kind of a silly question.

Q — because you're only focused on half of the population.

MR. CARNEY: This administration has engaged in a number of policy approaches designed to address women in the economy, including the very first bill that the President signed into law, the Lilly Ledbetter Act — Fair Pay Act — and there are a variety of initiatives that this administration has put forward that deal with issues of concern to women in particular. There is the Violence Against Women Act. We have an office overseen by the Vice President's office that deals with that legislation. So these are important policy initiatives; that's why we're having the conference.'

Obama campaign wants to train army of women

anthony · 5 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Obama campaign is hoping to train an army of women at the DNC's national issues conference in Washington, D.C., later this month.

The two-day convention will include remarks by President Obama and strategy meetings on American women, values and the 2012 election as well as economic security and strengthening the middle class.

Confirmed training sessions include: "Talking to Your Neighbor: Persuading Women Voters," "Digital Organizing: Effective Social Media Strategies," "Talking about the President's Accomplishments," and "Crafting Your Personal Narrative."
...
The White House also is targeting women with a forum on Friday that will highlight how the administration "has helped create economic security for women and recognized that women are key to economic growth and competitiveness."'

Ex-Girlfriend Busted For Brutal Scrotum Attack

anthony · 5 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'APRIL 5--An Indiana man had his scrotum severely torn when his “on-again, off-again” girlfriend entered his home and pummeled him in an attack that resulted in the woman’s arrest on several criminal charges, including two felonies.

Christina Reber, 43, was freed from jail yesterday after posting $10,000 bond in connection with her bust for the alleged attack last Friday at the Muncie house of her ex-beau (who told cops he had ended the couple’s eight-month relationship days before the assault).

The victim, 57, told police that he was working at his computer when Reber, pictured in the adjacent mug shot, “walked into his house uninvited,” according to a Muncie Police Department report that will make every guy wince. The man said Reber screamed at him to “call the fucking police” before launching her assault.

Reber, the victim told cops, first struck him repeatedly in the head before latching onto his scrotum and “squeezing as hard as she could.” The man, interviewed by police at a hospital emergency room, said that he “was in incredible pain when Reber grabbed his scrotum and began digging in her fingers.”'

Can women raise boys to be men?

anthony · 5 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cathleen Williams, whose book, “Single Mother The New Father,” raised considerable controversy because of its provocative title, opened the discussion by saying, “As a single woman, I was able to successfully raise my son,” currently a student at St. John’s University.

“As a people, we tell women you can’t do it, that you’re doomed to failure. Not only can you, but you must do it for the salvation of our race,” she said.

She indicated that there are “over 10 million single women in the United States raising their children successfully,” admitting that she “didn’t do it alone.”

Opening the discussion for the opposition, clinical social worker Rodney Pride, who serves as vice president of youth development at United Black Men of Queens, said, “Eight out of 10 boys are without a positive male role model in their families and that ain’t good. So many boys are walking around with a level of anger.” He suggested that their pent-up rage often leads to cases of teenage pregnancy, dropping out of high school, and black on black violence.'

Why is ESPN ignoring the damage caused by Title IX?

anthony · 5 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As you might have guessed, the microsite features plenty of adulatory coverage of the law, including an interview with President Obama, a personal essay about the law from Katie Couric and an analysis of how female coaches are having a tough time competing with their male counterparts for jobs coaching women's teams. Missing is any discussion of how countless men's athletic programs have been cancelled due to Title IX quotas, including men's swimming at UCLA. Before it was cancelled, the UCLA men's swimming program produced 16 Olympic gold medalists.

Needless to say, one has to wonder why a news organization like ESPN would ignore juicy stories like these, especially as it would seem that the 40th anniversary of the passage of the law might be a good time to reflect on the totality of its impacts instead of just one side of the story. Then again, why should we expect that when ESPN as a corporation has already taken a side in the Title IX debate?'

Spurned housewife's rape claim backfires after husband shows police a video of them having consensual sex

Anonymous · 6 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A spurned housewife who claimed her husband raped her has been jailed after he showed police a video of them having consensual sex.

Kelly-Ann Ferguson, 23, had met her husband Paul to try and patch up their broken marriage but when he refused went to police claiming he'd raped her.'

Judge Rejects Challenge to High Schools' Title IX

anthony · 7 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CN) - The American Sports Council cannot proceed with a claim accusing the Department of Education of illegally enforcing Title IX rules on high school sports programs that American Sports claimed amounted to "federal gender quotas."

American Sports sued after the department refused to consider a petition to amend or repeal rules applying Title IX guidelines to high schools. American Sports argued that high schools were not required to use "strict gender quotas" to balance their athletic departments, and said the guidelines violate the Equal Protection clause of the Constitution.
...
In an emailed statement Eric Pearson, Chairman of the American Sports Council, told Courthouse News the court's ruling was "unfortunate" and said "justice has been denied to high school male athletes nationwide who have been and who will continue to be harmed by these unreasonable regulations."

"But we remain undeterred," Pearson wrote. "The American Sports Council will continue to advocate for reforming Title IX regulations on behalf of the thousands of high school athletes who are denied equal protection under the law because of gender quota enforcement."'

Kelly McParland: What if women don’t need guys any more, and guys don’t care?

anthony · 7 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It may be that this condition manifests itself more in younger men because the old farts are too conditioned to adjust. Feminism has been a gradual process, and the ripple of unanticipated consequences has expanded at similar rate. Men raised to provide may feel uncomfortable outside that role, but less so a younger generation of males that hasn’t been treated to the same level of conditioning. Schools now work on the expectation that women are supposed to do well. To a much greater degree, society is set up to move them along the path to success and achievement. They still have the option of motherhood if they prefer, but there’s much less stigma (perhaps none at all) in choosing career over mothering, or vice versa. What’s important is self-esteem, and the assurance that, whichever path you choose, society fully embraces the choice as valid.

Men, on the other hand, have largely been ignored, on the apparent assumption that they had what they wanted and didn’t need any special care. As long as you taught them to read and write, and maybe do a little math, they were set. They’d reach working age and automatically set out to earn a living, because it was in their nature. It’s what they wanted.'

Margaret Wente: What if women don’t need guys any more?

anthony · 7 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. (Ed. note: This is not the same article as published by Kelly McParland, just posted here on MANN. Interesting the meme sprouted up at the same time in two different places, isn't it?) Excerpt:

'Today, a lot of younger women simply don’t need guys any more. Guys can even be a liability. The New York Times reported last month that, in the U.S., having children outside of marriage is the new normal. More than half of births to American women under 30 now occur outside marriage. One mother, Amber Strader, 27, told the Times she was in an on-and-off relationship when she got pregnant. Marrying her boyfriend, a clerk at Sears, never entered her mind. “It was like living with another kid.”

If illegitimacy has lost its stigma, so has being out of work. Men who failed to provide for their families used to be known as “bums” and “deadbeats.” Now they’re just slackers.

The Richer Sex assembles plenty of evidence that, as women’s ambition is on the rise, men’s ambition is shrinking. Younger women are more focused and achievement-oriented than younger men. They have realistic career goals. Many younger men have no idea what they want to do or be. Younger women in the work force are eager for more responsibility. Younger men aren’t; they’re happy just to get by.'

F&F: California Loses 800,000 Child Support Records

Matt · 7 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Have you been contacted by the Department of Child Support Services that your information was on one of the four backup storage cartridges lost?

Information about 800,000 adults and children in California's child support system were lost during shipment. The cartridges contain such information as names, addresses, Social Security numbers, drivers' license or identification numbers, names of health insurance providers, health insurance plan membership identification numbers and employer information.'

Obama tailors election-year message to working women

Matt · 7 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(Reuters) - President Barack Obama, leading in the polls among women voters, said on Friday he wants to help working women fight discrimination and juggle the demands of motherhood but stopped short of making promises on gender equality if he wins re-election.

At a White House event on women and the economy, Obama noted "there has been a lot of talk about women and women's issues lately," a nod to the emergence of contraceptive rights, working women and all-male establishments as heated issues in his race for re-election in November.

"But I do think that the conversation has been oversimplified," Obama said. "Women are not some monolithic bloc. Women are not an interest group. You shouldn't be treated that way."'

Australia: MyCircumcisionDisgrace.org (circumcision without father's consent)

Minuteman · 8 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'My name is Peter. In August 2012 my the 6 week old little boy was subjected to circumcision.

He was circumcised for no medical reason, without his consent and without my consent as his father.

* In my view, society (or a parent) has no right to subject an infant to surgery without medical reason. An infant's body does not belong to parents, he is only in their custody until adulthood.

* My son was circumcised without my consent as father. My son had a natural right to expect that he would have my protection, care and authority. I had a natural right to give him that care, protection and authority. As you will read, every politician, every bureaucrat and the medical regulators are of the mind that the circumcision of my little boy was none of my business.
I DISAGREE.

For a doctor to take the decision to circumcise an infant without the informed, considered consent of both parents represents a blatant moral and ethical failing. If the doctor's decision is defended in law, the act becomes one of state sanctioned bastardry.

After reading some of the inane responses I have received from politicians, bureaucrats and the medical self regulators, perhaps you'll be angry enough to put pen to paper yourself to try and make a difference.

I will be publishing the name and address of the doctor as soon as practical.

The letters to the then Premier Kristina Keneally and the Prime Minister, Julia Gillard, form a backdrop to my son's and my journey so far. There two letters can be accessed directly below...'

Connecticut official wants prison nursery for new moms

anthony · 8 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HARTFORD, Conn. — Victoria Steele saw her daughter on the day she was born, and was not allowed to see her again for five years.

Steele, just 18 at the time, was wanted for violating the terms of her supervised home release on a robbery charge. She was sent to the York Correctional Institution directly from the hospital. The state placed the baby with her paternal grandparents, who spoke only Spanish and never brought the child to visit in prison.

"I was so depressed," said Steele, now 45, of West Hartford. "I was emotionally, mentally, and physically lost. I had no I idea how to connect. It was like losing my child. I lost her. There were no support services in prison."'

Report: N.Y. mohel apparently tested postive for herpes

anthony · 9 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(JTA) -- A New York mohel who performed the circumcision of one newborn who died of herpes and of three other infants who contracted the disease apparently tested positive for herpes, The New York Jewish Week reported.

Yitzchok Fischer, who was ordered in 2007 to stop the circumcision ritual of metzitzah b'peh, in which the mohel orally suctions blood from the circumcision wound, refused, however, to submit to a DNA test to determine if he is a match to the viruses found in the babies.

The Jewish Week reported April 6 that a copy of the 2007 New York State Department of Health order obtained by the newspaper through a Freedom of Information Law request said that he tested positive for an infection that he was "capable of communicating to others."'

Forbes: "No Men Allowed: Discriminatory Hotels We Women Love"

anthony · 9 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of course, it was a man who sued the Copenhagen Bella Comwell for its “Bella Donna” floor dedicated solely to rooms for women guests. The hotel, which has decided to challenge the decision by the Danish Gender Equality Board, reports full occupancy for the “ban men” floor. So do other hotels that declare men unwelcome on specific floors in Australia, as well as various cities in the U.S., Singapore and Dubai.

I’ve never stayed at such a hotel, but it’s hard to find fault with the idea of a secure-access floor served only by women, offering white, king-sized beds, fresh flowers, bowls of green apples, fashion magazines, complementary natural-beauty products, steam irons, ionic hairdryers, satin-padded hangers and an emergency kit with nylons and other items that one may have forgotten. Not to mention fine chocolates, smoothies and wine by female winemakers in the mini bar. All that for about $50 extra or at no charge? Check me in, please.'

Facebook COO: Women should marry women

anthony · 9 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Facebook COO Sheryl Sandberg, a mother of two, believes women should marry women. In exceptional circumstances, they can marry men, she said during a recent Makers interview (excerpt embedded above).

“The most important thing — and I’ve said it a hundred times and I’ll say it a hundred times — if you marry a man, marry the right one,” Sandberg said. “If you can marry a woman, that’s better because the split between two women in the home is pretty even, the data shows.” She didn’t elaborate on her source.

Unlike men, women feel guilty for working full time, according to Sandberg. Furthermore, they are liked less the more they succeed. That’s something that needs to change.'

UK: Women increasingly marrying ‘beneath themselves’ by opting for men of lower social classes

anthony · 9 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To the great delight of the vast majority of men, it appears the days of women setting their sights on marrying ‘above themselves’ are over.

The attractions of the Mr Darcys of this world are waning as women become better educated and better paid, research has found.

Indeed modern women could hardly be further from the likes of Pride and Prejudice’s Elizabeth Bennet and her scheming to net Mr Darcy – not just the man she loved but, crucially, a wealthy aristocrat.

Analysing how female aspirations have changed over the past 50 years the researchers found women in their late twenties and early thirties are increasingly marrying ‘beneath themselves’ by opting for men of lower social classes.

The study by the Institute for Public Policy Research adds weight to the idea that today’s economically independent women are freer to marry for love rather than to further themselves.'

Change.org petition: We call for the immediate firing of Taylor Bigler by The Daily Caller

Matt · 9 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'Taylor Bigler, Entertainment Editor of The Daily Caller has written an article about the sexual mutilation and abuse of a man at the hands of his ex-girlfriend. In writing this article, Ms. Bigler somehow found this man's horrific injuries which may have caused permanent damage and the crime committed against him by his ex-girlfriend to be a humorous and positive event. If the genders were reversed and a man ripped the breast from a woman's body, would Ms. Bigler have made comments such as "As if this story isn't already good enough...." Good enough? So Ms. Bigler finds some good out of this poor man's sexual mutilation. http://dailycaller.com/2012/04/06/angry-ex-girlfriend-goes-ballistic-rips-off-mans-scrotum/

We ask that Taylor Bigler resign from The Daily Caller or be fired by them. Nothing short of Ms. Bigler's resignation or firing will suffice.'

D.A. in falsely-accused dad case issues press release

Matt · 9 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

As a follow-up to this item, I received the following in reply to my letter to the D.A.:

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE
April 6th, 2012

KELSO, WA - Cowlitz County Prosecutor Sue Baur will not be filing perjury charges against Cassandra Kennedy. Ms. Kennedy recently claimed she lied in 2001 as an eleven-year-old victim when she testified against her father, Thomas Kennedy in a jury trial. The jury convicted Mr. Kennedy of three counts of Rape of a Child in the First Degree. Her recantation was found to be enough to warrant an order for a new trial, but was not determined to be the truth.
There is a misconception that Mr. Kennedy would not have been released unless he was found innocent. This is untrue. He has never been found innocent of the crimes of Rape of a Child.

In 2001, Mr. Kennedy was convicted of Rape of a Child in the First Degree based on Ms. Kennedy's testimony, medical evidence, and the testimony of other witnesses. In March 2012, Superior Court Judge Stephen Warning overturned the conviction of Mr. Kennedy based only on Ms. Kennedy now claiming that she lied at the first trial. The judge did not make a finding that Ms. Kennedy was telling the truth then or now, but ruled that Mr. Kennedy was entitled to a new trial because of this new information. After reviewing what evidence is left to prove the original charges, including Ms. Kennedy's new claim, Prosecutor Baur determined that eleven years later the Rape of a Child charge could not be proven beyond a reasonable doubt in a second trial.

"We will not be filing charges against Ms. Kennedy for the same reason we will not be re-filing charges against Mr. Kennedy. I understand and share the frustration people have with Ms. Kennedy. I cannot prove beyond a reasonable doubt if she is lying now or if she lied in 2001. If a prosecutor is not firmly convinced of the truth of a charge beyond a reasonable doubt, they have an ethical duty not to file that charge.

For more information, please contact Sue Baur at baurs@co.cowlitz.wa.us.

Australia: Man tries to get full custody of unborn baby

Minuteman · 10 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A Queensland man has lost a bid to gain full responsibility for his ex-girlfriend's unborn child.

The man, who cannot be named, had applied for an injunction from the Family Court of Australia to stop the 16-year-old girl from terminating her pregnancy and to get full custody of the child once it was born.

He also wanted to ensure the girl told him when she went into labour and that he was given permission to visit the hospital, the Daily Telegraph reports.'

‘I Had No Idea If He Was a Manarchist,’ Says Woman Saved By Ryan Gosling

anthony · 10 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Actually, what we find weird is that someone who claims to be a “feminist, a writer, and a gentlewoman of fortune” who refuses to be labeled as some sort of damsel in distress has absolutely no problem making up stereotypes for Mr. Gosling before having met him.

In an email to The New York Observer (sent before the Gawker piece), Ms. Penny wrote about that fateful meeting:

"Lucky or not, I feel it’s some sort of karmic retribution for my having spent so much time cackling at the ‘manarchist Ryan Gosling’ meme. I have no idea if Mr Gosling is actually a manarchist, but he’s clearly a decent sort of person, and looks rather dashing in double denim."

A manarchist, by the way, is “an angry young “anarchist” male that has issues relating to women” (according to UrbanDictionary, at least.) This is the Tumblr of Manarchist Ryan Gosling. You’d think Ms. Penny would try to underplay the hypocrisy of judging celebrities for their looks while she herself “refuse(s) to be cast in any sort of boring supporting female role” in the story of how she almost didn’t survive crossing the street.

But no, don’t thank Ryan Gosling. He was just doing what any normal person would do. The fact that another person didn’t actually save your life is totally irrelevant. Right?'

Ed.: Another piece covering the same topic found here.

SAVE: You're Invited: Connecting for Change

Matt · 10 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

We'll be meeting on Capitol Hill Friday morning for a day of lobbying, followed by a get-to-know-each-other dinner.

On Saturday we'll enjoy the conference, have lunch, and participate in our June Domestic Violence Legislative Project (DVLP) meeting. DVLP: http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp.

Meet your fellow advocates, activists and citizen lobbyists. Learn from the experts. Get hands-on training. Feel empowered!

Visit the SAVE website for more information about this year's conference:
http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp/annual-conference-2012

Start making plans now to attend. Register early, as space is limited. To register, email info-at-saveservices.org.

I can't wait to meet you all!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Sexual Abuse May Put Boys at Risk for Unsafe Sex

Minuteman · 11 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Male teens who were sexually abused are more likely to have unsafe sex, a new study finds.

University of British Columbia researchers analyzed data from more than 40,000 American and Canadian male high school students who were surveyed between 1986 and 2011.

Compared to those with no history of sexual abuse, young males who were sexually abused were five times more likely to cause teen pregnancy, three times more likely to have multiple sexual partners and two times more likely to have unprotected sex, according to the study published online and in the June print issue of the Journal of Adolescent Health.'

When Should a Father's Rights Be Terminated?

anthony · 11 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bill making its way through the Missouri General Assembly would allow adoptions to go through without paternal notification.

House Bill 1258 is based on a case that went before the Missouri Supreme Court in 2007. The legislation would allow adoption without a father's consent, if he had not developed a "consistent and substantial relationship with the child."

The bill defines a relationship as:

1. Consistent prenatal financial support;
2. Consistent payment of prenatal and natal medical care for the mother and baby;
3. Consistent child support payments commensurate with his ability to pay;
4. Consistent contact and visitation with the child; and
5. Assistance with educational and medical care of the child

...
The bill passed in the House 126-15. It was read in the Senate, and referred to committee.

Rep. Rory Ellinger, D-University City, told KMOX he is strongly against the bill. He said in the case of a woman getting pregnant and deciding not to tell the father, that this bill would not only deprive the man of the right to be a father, but would also get him out of his duty to pay child support.'

SAVE Report Reveals Many Abuse Statistics are One-Sided or False

Matt · 11 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

WASHINGTON, April 11, 2012 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- The federal government spends $76 million a year for domestic violence education programs, but 90 percent of the claims made in these programs are one-sided, misleading, or completely untrue, according to a new report from Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE). The report, "Most DV Educational Programs Lack Accuracy, Balance, and Truthfulness," compares validated scientific research with the claims made by leading abuse-reduction groups: http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/SAVE-DV-Educational-Programs

The SAVE report highlights three offenders:

1. The American Bar Association frames its discussion of domestic violence with the broad claim that "2 to 4 million American women are battered every year." But the dean of the University of Pennsylvania's School of Social Work derides that statistic as a "factoid from nowhere."'

Professionals Say More Men Should Earn College Degrees

anthony · 12 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In recent years, the number of women earning college degrees has vastly increased. According to the National Center for Education Statistics, women earned the majority of almost all levels of degrees in 2008-2009 across various racial and ethnic groups. Additionally, the Council of Graduate Schools found that in 2008-2009, about 50.4% of doctoral degrees were awarded to women, marking the first time females have earned the majority of these credentials, The New York Times reports.

While this certainly marks a huge step for American women, other professionals say it also shows that men need to become more focused on earning a degree as well.

.....

Unemployment Falls Fast in U.S. If Men Get College Degree

.....

Men Are Becoming the Undereducated Gender

California court says Texas sperm donor owes no child support

anthony · 12 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FORT WORTH — For four years, a North Texas bodybuilder and former police officer has waged a court battle in California against a woman who sued him for support of children born to her from sperm he donated.

Only recently did an appeals court in California overturn a lower-court ruling that held 47-year-old national bodybuilding champion Ronnie Coleman of Arlington responsible for supporting twins born from his donated sperm, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported.

But after an April 2008 court order directed him to pay child support, Coleman paid thousands of dollars in child support until the March 19 ruling by California's 2nd District Court of Appeals in Los Angeles overturned that order.'

F&F: Deployment Disrupts Parenting

Matt · 12 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The wars in Afghanistan and Iraq and the resulting military deployments have significantly affected our service members and their families. These deployments have sometimes caused considerable disruptions in existing child custody and visitations arrangements between the parents. Current California law provides that upon return from deployment any temporary custody order issued during the deployment reverts back to the prior order.

AB 1807, sponsored by Representative Paul Cook, passed the House without a single ‘no’ vote. It clarifies the law protecting custodial arrangements for deploying parents to better protect the custodial rights of our servicemen and women, while still ensuring the best interest of children.'

More Unmarried Couples Having Babies: CDC

Minuteman · 13 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'More unmarried women who live with their partners are having babies than ever before, a new government report shows.

Twenty-seven percent of births between 2003 and 2010 were to such couples -- a threefold increase from 1985, researchers from the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found.

"It's thought that in births outside of marriage, one parent isn't present. But our data is showing that a large proportion do have two parents, even though [they're] not formally married," said report author Gladys Martinez, a demographer in the CDC's Division of Vital Statistics.'

2nd Annual Latino Males Symposium at UT Austin, May 4th 8AM-2PM

TCM · 13 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Registration is free, and food is provided. From the registration site:

"Based within the Academic Diversity Initiatives of DDCE, Project MALES aims to create and cultivate a support network for Latino male students at UT-Austin, within local school districts, and throughout the surrounding community. The Project is a research-informed model that highlights mentoring as a way to leverage social capital among Latino males. Specifically, we hope to explore innovative ways to establish mentoring links between Latino male role models, current UT Latino male students, and younger Latino males within the Austin area and surrounding communities."

While men in general are underrepresented in higher ed relative to women (~60% of graduates are women), these disparities tend to be greater among men of color.

Register at http://latinomalesymposium.eventbrite.com/.

Learn more about Project MALES and their research at http://blogs.utexas.edu/projectmales

Australia: Teen girl gang terrorising Perth

Minuteman · 13 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'They look like any other teenagers, but Western Australian police believe this gang of girls are responsible for a series of violent assaults in Perth's CBD over the past two weeks.

CCTV footage has been released of the group of girls suspected of attacking and robbing several young women in separate attacks.
...
Detectives also believe several other attacks are linked to the teen gang.'

Middle School Student Suspended For Hugging Teacher

anthony · 13 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BLADENBORO, N.C. (CBS Charlotte) — A North Carolina middle school student has been suspended for hugging a teacher.

WECT-TV reports that Ryan Blackmon, an eighth grade student at Bladenboro Middle School, was suspended when he hugged his teacher after she broke up a potential fight between himself and another student.

“”I said, ‘Thank you,’ after she got done,” Blackmon told the station. “I went to hug her, then she just snatched me up by the arm and drug me to the other teacher and said that I needed to be written up, and that something serious had happened.”
...
Blackmon’s parents have filed a police report against the teacher and the school after a mark was left on the boy’s arm from where the teacher grabbed him.

“I don’t understand how she could feel threatened if I was showing my gratitude, but she could have told me politely to tell me to move away,” he told the station.'

Essay: The Law of Economics and of Parenthood: How Gender Inequality Impacts Social Welfare

Matt · 13 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Submitted by email, essay here. I would include an excerpt but the site spoils efforts to copy-and-paste. If you have the time, worth a read.

SAVE: Make Plans Now for False Allegations Awareness Month

Matt · 13 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

June is False Allegations Awareness Month, and we hope you'll be attending our second annual False Allegations Awareness conference, Connecting for Change.

Have you been falsely accused of domestic violence? Would you like to speak at our event? If so, send us a short proposal to participate in a panel of persons falsely accused.

You don't have to wait until June 29-30 to address this growing and devastating issue. You can educate others all month long. Why not start making your plans now?

Whether you set up a booth at a local event, call a radio talk show or write a letter to your editor, every effort helps. Visit the SAVE website for more ideas and information:
http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp/campaigns/faam-resources

To register for the conference, or to submit a proposal, email info-at-saveservices.org.

If not us, who?

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

An Australian Men's Domestic Violence Court Advocacy Service

Anonymous · 13 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Seems that Australia has at least one barrister willing to advocate for men in a court of law. Excerpt:

'Mario Licha (Barrister at Law) is setting up a new AVO advice service for Australian men.

Mario Licha is a New South Wales Barrister who practises out of Ada Evans Chambers in Sydney, New South Wales. This Sydney Barrister practises in the areas of Criminal and Family Law.
...
On 17 April 2012 Mario Licha will be giving a talk about AVOs.

Michael Michalak, Student-at-Law assistant will also be giving a small talk about how he became interested and involved law. Michael has prior experience as a self represented litigant in the Family Court.

The location of this talk is: Talk to Men at Men construction zone (Men & Court) Inspire Church, Corner Hoxton Park Road & Illaroo Road Hoxton Park NSW 2171'

Found via link from Fathers4Equality Australia and hosted on Ezine4males.com

UNCW hosts event to combat violence against women

anthony · 15 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Local agencies are teaming up this weekend to host a free program for all coaches throughout southeastern North Carolina, in an effort to prevent sexual assault and violence against women.

Wilmington's Verizon Wireless is partnering with the UNCW Athletics department and Domestic Violence Shelter and Services to hold "A Call to Coaches" on Sunday, April 15 from 5 to 7:30 p.m. at UNCW's Trask Coliseum.

"Well-meaning men are generally unaware how their everyday attitudes, beliefs and language create a culture that empowers men -- at a great cost to women," said Rick Houston, prevention specialist with the Domestic Violence Shelter and Services. "While they don't personally perpetrate violence against women and girls, many accommodate and accept male domination in small ways every day and in so doing, support a culture in which unhealthy relationships and violence against women thrive."'

Nancy Pelosi, Willie Mays Share Commitment To End Domestic Violence

anthony · 15 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A congresswoman, a former Giants player, and a packed room of political and social activists pledged Thursday afternoon at a San Francisco nonprofit office to end violence against women by starting with educating men and boys.

The national daylong summit, "The Y Factor: Men Leading by Example," held at the nonprofit Futures Without Violence headquarters in San Francisco's Presidio in conjunction with the Waitt Institute for Violence Prevention spent the day highlighting men who are leading the anti-domestic violence movement.
...
In videotaped remarks, Biden said when he first pushed to pass VAWA nearly 20 years ago he was told domestic violence was a "private matter and not OK to talk about."

The vice president said, "The solution lies in the hands of boys and men. Every man needs to know that no means no...no matter what circumstances."'

Obama Revives an Old Feminist Myth

anthony · 16 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"When more women are bringing home the bacon, but bringing home less of it than men who are doing the same work, that weakens families, it weakens communities, it's tough on our kids, it weakens our entire economy." Thus said President Obama at a recent "women and the economy" event at the White House, where he portrayed American women as victims of pervasive wage discrimination in the workplace.
...
Consider some pertinent facts. Far more often than men, women tend to seek employment in fields that are non-technical or which involve the social—as opposed to the physical—sciences. Moreover, they seek employment in fields that: offer a high level of physical safety; involve work that is performed indoors as opposed to outdoors (where bad weather can make working conditions poor); feature a pleasant and socially dynamic working environment; are characterized by lower levels of emotional turbulence; offer desirable shifts or flexible working hours; and require fewer working hours per week or fewer working days per year. As well, women tend to gravitate toward fields that do not require long commutes; men on average commute 36% farther to get to work, a fact that translates into about $1,500 in extra annual pay. Similarly, women are more inclined to pursue jobs that do not require geographic relocation—the result being that females make up only 18% of all workers who are transferred abroad by their employers.'

Joe Biden: ‘War on women is real’

anthony · 16 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vice President Joe Biden said Thursday he believes the right’s “war on women is real” and could be particularly salient during the multiple Supreme Court appointments he expects to come during the next president’s term.

“I think the war on women is real,” Biden said in an interview he sat for with MSNBC’s Ed Schultz as part of a campaign trip to New Hampshire to talk up the Buffett rule. “And, look, I tell you where it’s going to intensify: the next president of the United States is going to get to name one and possibly two or more members of the Supreme Court.”'

Keeping the gender balance in SF State athletics hinders creation of men’s track team

anthony · 16 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gender equity laws and limited funding together confine SF State’s athletic program, leaving the school without a men’s track and field team.

These constraints have fragmented who can participate in the school’s sports teams, inhibiting potential athletes from competing.

Many students often wonder why SF State only has certain teams, but in addition to scarce athletic funding, balancing the number of athletic teams for men and women due to Title IX, which sets standards for gender equality in sports, is part of the reason.

This stems from a lawsuit the California State University system settled with a women’s group over the inclusion of women in school sports, making compliance with the act more explicit. The lawsuit stated that the ratio of male to female athletes should be reflective of the student population’s gender ratio.'

'Youth To Pay For Sexual Contradictions'

Matt · 16 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I have just had the privilege of taking my 9 year old son and 7 year old nephew to a carnival in Sydney, Australia.
...
To my utter despair, on a very cold autumn day in Sydney which required winter clothing for me and the boys, one of the earliest sites we saw while waiting in the queue for our tickets was countless young girls, aged between eight years up to their mid-teens, with skimpy-sized, 'Daisy Duke' cut-off jeans, not only exposing the length of their legs, but their buttocks too.
...
I was left asking 'in a society that prioritised above everything else the protection of children against sexual influence of any kind, what kind of social pressures, or perhaps social incentives, really do exist in our society that compels young girls to expose themselves in such cold weather, in such a sexually affronting manner?'

What does this then say about our very 'in-your face' public campaigns against child sexual abuse, and campaigns against the treatment of women as a whole as sexual objects? Are we as a society saying one thing, but doing the complete opposite in truth?

If we are, then our children, both girls and boys, are going to pay a high price for this contradiction.

As we left the carnival that day, a group of young girls, most of which were dressed in these short cut-off jeans, shuffled passed us, all locked in arms and singing in tune to what I think is currently a hit song on the radio.

"I am sexy and I know it", they chanted as they buzzed passed us mocking the stares of other teenage boys in close proximity.

I hope for their sake, that they don't really mean it.'

Death Row Inmate’s Best Lawyer Was Himself

citizend · 16 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Courts botch cases and it can pay to know your rights. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — Albert Holland Jr., a death row inmate in Florida, has no legal training and seems to be suffering from a mental illness — “perhaps a disorder involving paranoia or delusional thoughts,” a federal judge wrote recently.

But he turns out to be a pretty good lawyer. Two years ago, in allowing Mr. Holland a fresh chance to make his case after his court-appointed lawyer blew a crucial deadline, the Supreme Court praised Mr. Holland’s legal acumen. Indeed, Justice Stephen G. Breyer wrote, Mr. Holland had had a better understanding of the complicated time limits for challenging death sentences in federal court than his lawyer had.

Mr. Holland made good use of the opportunity the Supreme Court gave him. A couple of weeks ago, he won a decision granting him a new trial. In the process, he opened a window on the astoundingly spotty quality of court-appointed counsel in capital cases.'

Big Push for Costly “Comparable Worth” Legislation Coming? Lilly Ledbetter Returns to the Stage

anthony · 17 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lilly Ledbetter, who made false claims about her pay discrimination lawsuit, has returned to the political arena, as you can see at this link. This may set the stage for another Congressional push for passage of the costly and misleadingly-named “Paycheck Fairness Act,” which Ms. Ledbetter backed in the past, or for “comparable worth” legislation, or other trial-lawyer backed legislation that would require pay to be set based on factors other than merit.

...

Various lawyers, like Paul Mirengoff, an attorney at Akin Gump, have concluded that Ms. Ledbetter deceived Congress and the public about when she became aware of the pay disparities she sued over in her lawsuit, in order to try and make her discrimination claim appear more timely. She clearly has made false claims, claiming she was not aware of what she previously admitted knowing in a sworn deposition. (The liberal former EEOC lawyer David Copus and the moderate Stuart Taylor of the National Journal and Brookings Institution have also cited the existence of this inconvenient deposition testimony, which contradicts claims made by Ms. Ledbetter.) I earlier discussed a false claim made by Ms. Ledbetter that contradicted her deposition testimony at this link.'

Gender gap: Myth or reality?

anthony · 17 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women make less money than men for the same work. It's a proven fact.

Or is it?

Tuesday is Equal Pay Day, designed to highlight the gap between men's and women's wages. The idea is to point out that the average woman would have to work through all of 2011 and into early 2012 -- through Tuesday -- to earn what the average man took home just in 2011.

The wage gap has the attention of Nevada's congressional delegation. Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid, D-Nev., pushed the Paycheck Fairness Act, which aims to close the gap, to a Senate vote in 2010, but a Republican filibuster blocked it.

The act has since languished, likely because supporters see little chance of passage with a Republican majority in the House, said Michele Leber, chairwoman of the National Committee on Pay Equity, the Virginia advocacy group behind Equal Pay Day.'

SPLC names men’s rights activists as hate group

anthony · 17 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC), a US non-profit organisation dedicated to fighting hate and bigotry, has named men’s rights activists (MRAs) as a hate group in its latest quarterly publication.

In an issue entitled The Year in Hate and Extremism, the SPLC, based in Montgomery, Alabama, explores how MRAs spread false claims about women:

Misogynists in the men’s and fathers’ rights movements have developed a set of claims about women to support their depictions of them as violent liars and manipulators of men.

Some suggest that women attack men, even sexually, just as much as men attack women. Others claim that vast numbers of reported rapes of women, as much as half or even more, are fabrications designed to destroy men they don’t like or to gain the upper hand in contested custody cases.'

SPLC: Leader's Suicide Brings Attention to Men's Rights Movement

anthony · 17 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After 10 years of custody battles, court-ordered counseling and imminent imprisonment for non-payment of child support, Thomas James Ball, a leader of the Worcester branch of the Massachusetts-based Fatherhood Coalition, had reached his limit. On June 15, 2011, he doused himself with gasoline and set himself on fire just outside the Cheshire County, N.H., Courthouse. He was dead within minutes.

...

For people who associate the men's and fathers' rights movements with New Age drum circles in the woods, the ferocity of Ball's rhetoric, the horror of his act, and, in particular, the widespread and blatantly misogynistic reaction to it may come as something of a revelation. When the feminist Amanda Marcotte, a bête noire of the men's rights movement, remarked that "setting yourself on fire is an extremely effective tool if your goal is to make your ex-wife's life a living hell," a poster at the blog Misandry.com went ballistic. "Talk about the pot calling the kettle black," he raged. "She is evil and such a vile evil that she is a disease that needs to be cut out of the human [consciousness] just like the rest of the femanazi ass harpies."

...

Ball's suicide brought attention to an underworld of misogynists, woman-haters whose fury goes well beyond criticism of the family court system, domestic violence laws, and false rape accusations. There are literally hundreds of websites, blogs and forums devoted to attacking virtually all women (or, at least, Westernized ones) — the so-called "manosphere," which now also includes a tribute page for Tom Ball ("He Died For Our Children"). While some of them voice legitimate and sometimes disturbing complaints about the treatment of men, what is most remarkable is the misogynistic tone that pervades so many. Women are routinely maligned as sluts, gold-diggers, temptresses and worse; overly sympathetic men are dubbed "manginas"; and police and other officials are called their armed enablers. Even Ball — who did not directly blame his ex-wife for his troubles, but instead depicted her and their three children as co-victims of the authorities — vilified "man-hating feminists" as evil destroyers of all that is good.'

New treatment for prostate cancer gives 'perfect results' for nine in ten men: research

Matt · 18 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is hoped the new treatment, which involves heating only the tumours with a highly focused ultrasound, will mean men can be treated without an overnight stay in hospital and avoiding the distressing side effects associated with current therapies.

A study has found that focal HIFU, high-intensity focused ultrasound, provides the 'perfect' outcome of no major side effects and free of cancer 12 months after treatment, in nine out of ten cases.

Traditional surgery or radiotherapy can only provide the perfect outcome in half of cases currently.

Experts have said the results are 'very encouraging' and were a 'paradigm' shift in treatment of the disease.'

SAVE: Tell Your Senators, VAWA Must Respect Civil Rights

Matt · 18 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

I enjoy Spring, the season of new beginnings and hope. My hope is that we give domestic violence law a new beginning, starting with the reform of VAWA (S.1925) to protect civil rights.

Easter break has passed, and the Senate is back in session. As of this writing, there has not been a vote on VAWA. Word has it the delay is due to some Senators behind the scenes demanding amendments to S.1925 in return for their vote. This is great news for us!

I hope you realize that your calls give these senators the motivation and strength to speak out on your behalf. Please don't let them down now, not when they need your support the most. Let's do another round of phone calls today.

Please contact your two senators and ask them to be sure the new VAWA respects civil rights, esp. the requirement of the 4th Amendment to have probable cause before a person can be arrested.

Find your senators' phone numbers here: http://www.senate.gov/general/contact_information/senators_cfm.cfm. Or call the Capitol switchboard at (202) 224-3121, where an operator will connect you with the Senate office you request.

Hope is a wonderful thing. But it's not enough when it comes to politics. Now, get busy and make those calls!

Want to feel really good about yourself? Call every day until the vote. ;-)

Thanks,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Convicted defendants left uninformed of forensic flaws found by Justice Dept.

Matt · 18 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Justice Department officials have known for years that flawed forensic work might have led to the convictions of potentially innocent people, but prosecutors failed to notify defendants or their attorneys even in many cases they knew were troubled.

Officials started reviewing the cases in the 1990s after reports that sloppy work by examiners at the FBI lab was producing unreliable forensic evidence in court trials. Instead of releasing those findings, they made them available only to the prosecutors in the affected cases, according to documents and interviews with dozens of officials.

In addition, the Justice Department reviewed only a limited number of cases and focused on the work of one scientist at the FBI lab, despite warnings that problems were far more widespread and could affect potentially thousands of cases in federal, state and local courts.'

SAVE: Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison Applauded for Principled Stand on VAWA Bill

Matt · 18 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE
Contact: Teri Stoddard
Telephone: 301-801-0608
Email: tstoddard@saveservices.org

Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison Applauded for Principled Stand on VAWA Bill

Washington, DC/April 18, 2012 – Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison recently announced her support for an alternative to the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) reauthorization bill S. 1925, which had been introduced by Sen. Patrick Leahy of Vermont. The Texas senator's announcement has earned her praise from advocates for victims of domestic violence.

In a letter to the Des Moines Register, Sen. Hutchison outlined a number of objections to S. 1925 and indicated that she is working with Sen. Chuck Grassley and Sen. Amy Klobuchar on an improved domestic violence bill. http://www.desmoinesregister.com/article/20120406/OPINION/304060009/-1/SPORTS12/Grassley-plan-will-strengthen-anti-violence-law-women

Inmate Sues Hospital For Performing Circumcision On Him Nearly 30 Years Ago

Matt · 18 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SIOUX FALLS, S.D. (CBS St. Louis/AP) — A prison inmate in South Dakota is suing a hospital for performing a circumcision on him nearly 30 years ago.

Twenty-eight-year-old Dean Cochrun is imprisoned at the South Dakota State Penitentiary in Sioux Falls for kidnapping. He's suing Sanford Hospital, previously known as Sioux Valley Hospital, for performing the circumcision when he was an infant.

Cochrun says in a complaint filed Friday in federal court that he was "recently made aware of the fact that I had been circumcised," and that the procedure has left him feeling inadequate and unable to fully enjoy sex.'

F&F: Indiana Lowers Cutoff Age for Children Receiving Child Support

Matt · 18 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Indiana's new state law lowers the cutoff age for children receiving child support from 21 to 19. It exempts support for education expenses and provides an exemption for a child who is incapacitated. Sen. Brent Steele, R-Bedford, said the law takes effect July 1 and applies to all child support orders.

Warrick County Superior Court Judge Robert Aylsworth said Enrolled Act, Senate Bill 18 shift of the emancipation age to two years earlier is "an enormous change" that's going to result in a surge of petitions seeking to modify support orders. "I think we are going to see a run on the courthouses."'

Biden suggests GOP opposition to Dem. bill will spur domestic violence mens_issues · 18 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Vice President Joe Biden shows his disregard for the civil rights of men once again. Excerpt:

'Vice President Joe Biden suggested on Wednesday that the GOP's opposition to the Democratic version of a domestic violence bill will give the green light to male violence against women.

The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) was passed in 1994 and was reauthorized in 2005. Approval of an updated law is stalled because Republican and Democratic senators disagree over what provisions should be added to the law.

"Just ask yourself, what message does it send to our daughters, to every women imprisoned in their own homes … if the law is not reauthorized," Biden declared today at a White House meeting of feminists and groups that are funded by the law.'

Woman claims rape to hide philandery from boyfriend

Broadsword · 19 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A John Lewis sales assistant claimed she had been raped because she was so embarrassed about a sado-masochistic sex session, a court heard.

Kirsty Sowden, 21, met her victim online after advertising herself as a 'BDSM princess' - standing for Bondage, Domination and Sadomasochism - on a no-strings attached website.

...

But Sowden, who was trying for a baby with her boyfriend at the time, was so guilt-wracked that she called police shortly afterwards and told them she had been raped.

Police eventually untangled the dominatrix's web of lies and charged her with perverting the course of justice. The investigation had already cost nearly £14,000 and wasted a staggering 376 hours of police time.'

Aussie PM in denial as her support amongst males drops to all time low

Kratch · 19 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Australia's Prime Minister, Julia Gillard, has responded to news of the collapse of her support amongst Australia's voting public with an air of denial that has even stunned her harshest critics.
...
Senior federal Labor MPs are warning Ms Gillard that she needs a strategy to win back the hearts and minds of middle Australians, especially males, otherwise Labor faces being decimated at the next federal election.
...
And a policy that has received little news media coverage but has caused significant grass roots upheaval has been the recent 2011 Family Law amendments, which have effectively dismantled Australia's popular and broadly successful shared parenting laws, and replaced them with what is largely perceived to be anti-male, anti-fatherhood policies, many seeing this as Gillard cowering to feminist ideologues.

Critics have warned Gillard that she needs to win back the support of male blue-collar workers, who are the traditional Labor mainstays who have abandoned Labor en masse.'

The other gender gap: Obama struggles to make gains among male voters

Kratch · 19 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For all the analysis of Mitt Romney's struggle to attract female voters, little has been made of the other gender gap -- President Obama's difficulty in attracting male voters.

While Romney's deficit among female voters is deeper, the incumbent president has faced his share of trouble winning over the other 49 percent of the population. The president's approval ratings since the beginning of his term demonstrate this reality. He fares consistently better among women, consistently worse among men.

When pitted against Romney, the Republican presidential front-runner, the trend holds. Romney often captures the men, while Obama wins the women.

In a Fox News Poll released last month, only 43 percent of men said they approved of the job Obama was doing -- 51 percent disapproved. The numbers practically flipped among women.
...
The latest jobs report in March pegged the unemployment rate for men at 7.6 percent, for women at 7.4 percent. The numbers, though, weren't always so close.
The gap in the jobless rate for women and men grew to nearly 3 percentage points in late 2009 and has narrowed slowly since.
...
From a cultural perspective, Blakeman noted that the "burden of not being employed" can weigh more heavily on a man than a woman.'

It's Time That We End the Equal Pay Myth

anthony · 19 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Department of Labor's Time Use Survey, for example, finds that the average full-time working man spends 8.14 hours a day on the job, compared to 7.75 hours for the full-time working woman. Employees who work more likely earn more. Men working five percent longer than women alone explains about one-quarter of the wage gap.

There are numerous other factors that affect pay. Most fundamentally, men and women tend to gravitate toward different industries. Feminists may charge that women are socialized into lower-paying sectors of the economy. But women considering the decisions they've made likely have a different view. Women tend to seek jobs with regular hours, more comfortable conditions, little travel, and greater personal fulfillment. Often times, women are willing to trade higher pay for jobs with other characteristics that they find attractive.

Men, in contrast, often take jobs with less desirable characteristics in pursuit of higher pay. They work long hours and overnight shifts. They tar roofs in the sun, drive trucks across the country, toil in sewer systems, stand watch as prison guards, and risk injury on fishing boats, in coal mines, and in production plants. Such jobs pay more than others because otherwise no one would want to do them.'

Suggestions on How to Reconnect with an Estranged Child

Anonymous · 19 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

By: Leslie S. Arenson
Law Offices of Jeffery M. Leving, Ltd (http://www.dadsrights.com/)

Some parents have estranged relationships with their children. Whether it is because they made bad decisions, they have been alienated by the other parent, because of geographical constraints, because they were in the military and separated from their child for a long period of time, or other reasons, there is no better time than the present to take the first step. Some parents might be afraid of being rejected by their child, but children need their parents. Taking the first step to reconnect can sometimes be the hardest, but it is also the most important.

There is no manual on how to be a perfect parent, and there is no perfect parent. As a parent, if you do not have a relationship with your child, the worst thing you can do is sit back and think, “He will come to me when he is ready.” If you are a parent in this situation, you must take the initiative and set a good example by doing the right thing. Reaching out to let your child know you care or going to court to get court ordered time to spend with your child are important first steps.

When you are with your child, focus your time on the present and the future. What events is your child involved in? What school projects is your child involved in? Who are your child’s teachers? What is your child’s best friend’s name? What activities is your child interested in? Is your child being bullied at school? Ask questions. Your child will appreciate your interest, and will derive confidence from having a positive relationship with you. Do not focus on the past. Do not speak ill of the other parent. Do not discuss your hardships, whatever they may be.

If you go through the court system to establish or re-establish a regular schedule with your child, be proactive, prepared and persistent. There may be steps you have to take before you can get the schedule you want, and it may take time. Do whatever you have to do to rebuild the relationship, and do not give up. It will mean the world to your child.

Australian Company offers new moms double pay for returning to work

anthony · 19 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of Australia's largest companies is making it easier for new parents to juggle work and family: Starting this week, new moms who return to work at the Insurance Australia Group (IAG) will get double pay for their first six weeks back after maternity leave.

"Yes it's generous, but we're a business and it is about making sure we get quality people coming back to us," IAG chief executive Mike Wilkins told the Sydney Morning Herald.

IAG already offers one of the most generous maternity leave policies in the industry -- 14 weeks of paid time off after giving birth or adopting a child. Their six-week "welcome back bonus" is on top of that -- and in addition to an Australian government policy that gives new parents up to 18 weeks pay at minimum wage or a $5,400 "Baby Bonus" per child, whichever is greater.'

Man needs pardon even after proved innocent

Matt · 19 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Change.org petition here. Excerpt:

'In 1978 I was found guilty for the rape and murder of 21-year-old Linda Jo Edward in Texas. I was sentenced to death row. I was innocent.

In 1999 I was proven innocent through DNA testing -- after over 20 years on death row.

The case against me was based entirely on circumstantial evidence. Over the years, every piece of evidence used to convict me was revealed to be bogus.The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals ruled that the prosecution had suppressed evidence that showed I was innocent in order to build their case against me.

Thirteen years after my innocence was proven and I was released from prison, the state of Texas still has not judicially exonerated me.

I was tried for this murder nearly four times. Despite an Appellate ruling throwing out my second conviction with findings that “Police and prosecutorial misconduct has tainted this entire matter from the outset,” the Smith County District Attorney’s Office was more interested in saving face than justice.'

SAVE: Memo to Joe Biden: Stop the DV Lies

Matt · 19 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

On Wed., April 18, Vice President Joe Biden was broadcast live via streaming video on the White House website to promote the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) (S. 1925). Biden has let us down in the past when it comes to recognizing all victims of DV, but I remained hopeful.

I watched, and counted, to see if the VP would acknowledge male victims. These men, known as the "hidden side of domestic violence" are the hidden half of DV.

I wish I could tell you that things have improved. I wanted so badly to tell you that abused men have finally gotten the recognition and respect they deserve, that now they will truly be helped.

But, I can't.

The only time the Vice Pres. mentioned men was when he described perpetrators of intimate partner homicide and honor killings, perpetrators of physical, financial and mental abuse, and perpetrators of rape and stalking. He talked about boys, but only to say that we should teach men and boys not to abuse women and girls.

This is outrageously unacceptable. Pres. Obama asked for evidence based solutions. So why is the Vice President completely ignoring the evidence when it comes to domestic violence?

Call the White House right now, and express your disgust:(202) 456-1414. Tell VP Joe Biden,"Take the blinders off and tell the whole truth about domestic violence!"

Please, don't wait. Call right now: (202) 456-1414

Thank you, on behalf of male victims everywhere.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

After Hospitalization, Men More Likely to Show Up in ER

Minuteman · 20 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Many key factors predicted men's return to hospital. They were 72 percent more likely to return if they were unmarried or retired, 64 percent more likely if they had not seen their family doctor since their discharge and 53 percent more likely if they were depressed.

"Our findings raise the possibility that social isolation -- as illustrated by the positive association with being retired or unmarried, and [having] symptoms of depression -- may be important factors to target for intervention," wrote Dr. Suzanne Mitchell, of the department of family medicine at the Boston University School of Medicine, and colleagues, in the release.

The researchers noted that previous studies found that men's social isolation tends to contribute to poorer health results for them, and that women are better at using health services.'

Why the U.S. Economy Is Biased Against Men

Broadsword · 20 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The workplace cultural practices more often preferred by men have largely been replaced by approaches more often preferred by women. Individual initiative is now usually deemed inferior to teamwork, competition often replaced by collaboration, "push through to get the job done" with "process feelings," decision-making by leader with decision-making by committee. Men are more likely than women to throw all of themselves into work than to demand worklife balance, for which they are often dubbed with pathologizing monikers such as "workaholic" and "unable to relax" rather than "heroic" for being so contributory, even if it costs them their life. Men die 5.2 years earlier than women, a major cause being stress-related illnesses such as heart attack and stroke.

True, the occasional old boy still unfairly promotes a man over a woman, but despite unemployment being higher for men than women, today, "Sisters help Sisters" is not denigrated let alone sued as sexist, but encouraged. For example, Madeleine Albright said, "I have always said, there is a special place in hell for women who don't help other women." And such statements have broad impact. For example, Google that quote and you'll see 43,000 references to it.

Men's efforts to organize into groups have largely been ridiculed, for example, portraying men's groups as troglodytes tromping into the woods to beat tom-toms. And men's organizations have been pressured to admit women, for example, the service clubs: Rotary, Kiwanis, and Lions. Further limiting men's ability to organize, men's groups don't get the enormous free advertising the media gives to women's groups.'

False Statistics by Feminist Groups Lead to Hysteria, Misandry

Anonymous · 20 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'In your April 17 With Three Domestic Violence Murders in Three Years, Advocates Say Problem Not Going Away article you quoted Jacque Reid, a navigator at the Family Justice Center in Santa Rosa, who claimed that "domestic violence is the number one cause of injury for women in the United States and it crosses all cultural and economic lines." But according to University of Pennsylvania domestic violence researcher Richard Gelles, "as good a sound bite as it is, the statement is simply not true."
...
Yet, according to the CDC and the Justice Department's own Bureau of Justice Statistics, the leading causes of death for African-American women between the ages 15–45 are cancer, heart disease, unintentional injuries such as car accidents, and HIV disease. Homicide comes in fifth — and includes murders by strangers. In 2006 (the latest year for which full statistics are available), several hundred African-American women died from intimate partner homicide — each one a tragedy, but far fewer than the approximately 6,800 African-American women who died of the other leading causes.

Unfortunately, misinformation spread by battered women advocates, government officials and unquestioning journalists leads to hysteria, not to mention misandry.'

UK: Soccer player convicted of rape because sex partner was intoxicated

Anonymous · 21 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is a travesty. The woman, not girl, was 19. Legally an adult, entitled to drink and to consent to sex. She was not a child. The judge said there had been no force involved and the complainant received no injuries. The complainant was not 'targeted' and the attack had not been 'premeditated'. Are adult women now legally designated children with no responsibility for their own behaviour? If so they should not be allowed to buy or consume alcohol and her parents should not have allowed her out late at night to consort with footballers.

"I sincerely hope that the guilty verdict will provide some closure on this horrendous ordeal..." Not nearly as horrendous an ordeal as that imposed upon this young man for her "buyer's remorse". More cases like this will occur and in future this feminist inspired misandrist legal travesty will be seen for what it is. Excerpt:

'We are footballers, that's how it is,' he told them. 'Footballers are rich, they have got money, that's what the girls like.'

Evans and McDonald had been out partying the night before the Bank Holiday last May and had booked a room at the resort's Premier Inn, the trial at Caernarfon Crown Court heard.

The girl, who they had earlier seen falling over in a kebab shop after drinking wine, double vodkas with lemonade and a sambuca shot, approached McDonald, and the pair took a taxi to his hotel.
...
Jailing Evans, of Penistone, South Yorkshire, for five years, Judge Merfyn Hughes QC told him he must have realised the girl was 'intoxicated' and in no condition to agree to sex. He said Evans had thrown away his 'successful career'.'

Climate change is a 'feminist' issue, claims MEP

Broadsword · 21 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Members of the European Parliament will vote today on a report by a French Green party MEP who claims global warming “is not gender neutral”.

Nicole Kiil-Nielsen said women “consume more sustainably than men and show greater willingness to act to preserve the environment” as they tend to organise household consumption and childcare. She argued climate change policies needed to take gender discrimination into account, especially in the developing world.

...

Miss Kiil-Nielsen’s report - Women and Climate Change - calls for a 40 per cent female quota on all EU delegations involved in climate negotiations and on the committees that allocate climate aid from member states.

It also suggests the creation of new EU-funded initiatives to help women’s groups get involved in climate policies, and for the EU to start gathering data on the “gender sensitive” effects of climate change on women.'

UK: Circumcision promoter caught with child porn videos

Minuteman · 21 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'THE head of a pro-circumcision group who used to run a children's computer club was caught with a hoard of child porn.

Vernon Quaintance, from Upper Norwood, has avoided a jail term – despite having three video cassettes with nine-hours' worth of clips showing boys as young as 11 engaging in sex acts.

The 68-year-old is the head of the Gilgal Society, a group dedicated to promoting male circumcision.

The Old Bailey heard how police raided Quaintance's home in Henley Gardens, Upper Norwood, on April 11 last year after receiving a tip-off.

The movies seized included graphic footage of child abuse ranked at the second-highest level of severity.'

UK: Huge rise in IVF for single and gay mothers since law requiring father figure was removed

Broadsword · 22 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of single women and lesbian couples receiving fertility treatment has soared since the Government took the controversial decision to remove the legal requirement for any child conceived to have a father or father figure.

In 2007, before the change in the law, only 350 single women had IVF. But by 2010, the last year for available figures, that had leapt 448 per cent to 1,571. The number of lesbian couples given IVF more than doubled in the same period, from 178 to 417. But the number of heterosexual couples treated rose by only 18 per cent.

While the figures represent good news for women who have been able to become mothers because of the legal change, others are alarmed by the increase in ‘fatherless families’.'

Woman uses gasoline to burn husband arindamp · 22 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, An Indian-origin woman in the US set her husband on fire and locked him in a bathroom, after promising him a hot oil massage, police said.

Shriya Biman Patel,25, has been arrested on charges of first-degree felony aggravated assault and arson and booked into the Travis County Jail in Austin, Texas.

...

The man, whose name has not been released, was airlifted to Brooke Army Medical Centre in San Antonio where he is said to be in a critical condition, suffering from second and third-degree burns to 70 percent of his body.'

Sex assaults catch colleges in Title IX legal trap

el cid · 22 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A closed- door encounter between two college acquaintances. Both have been drinking. One says she was raped; the other insists it was consensual. There are no other witnesses.

It's a common scenario in college sexual assault cases, and a potential nightmare to resolve. But under the 40-year-old federal gender equity law Title IX -- and guidance handed down last year by the Obama administration on how to apply it -- colleges can't just turn such cases over to criminal prosecutors, who often won't touch them anyway. Instead, they must investigate, and in campus proceedings do their best to balance the accused's due process rights with the civil right of the victim to a safe education.
...
Colleges that do too little about sexual assault could lose federal funds. The Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights is currently investigating a dozen colleges and universities over their response to sexual violence (documents obtained under the Freedom of Information Act show schools that have recently agreed to take steps to resolve OCR complaints over Title IX policies include universities such as Notre Dame, Northwestern and George Washington).

Meanwhile, judgments in Title IX lawsuits against colleges, usually brought by accusers, are soaring. Compounding the fear: In some such cases, college administrators may be found personally liable.

But when colleges do take action against accused students, those students are increasingly lawyering up themselves, suing for breach of contract and negligence. And in at least two recent cases, in Tennessee and Massachusetts, male students have tread novel legal ground by alleging violations of their own Title IX protections against gender discrimination, arguing a college's sexual assault policies or procedures were unfairly stacked against men.'

Canada: In the age of Internet porn, teaching boys to be good men

anthony · 22 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WiseGuyz, run by the Calgary Sexual Health Centre (which gave Mr. Spence his training), isn't just sex ed with an update. It's part of a new wave of initiatives to intervene in a young, male culture that is giving many adults cause for concern. Long-term, the aim is to combat the rates of domestic violence and sexually transmitted infections. Short-term, the goal is to tutor young men in healthy relations with women and non-destructive masculinity.
...
In many ways, these programs are a junior version of the Men Of Strength (MOST) Club: Now a decade old in the United States, the 22-week curriculum for 11-to-18-year-olds emphasizes “healthy, non-violent masculinity.” A college incarnation, Campus MOST, is now pushing bystander intervention in sexual assaults.

“It does a good job of portraying the well-rounded, healthy, chivalrous man, the real masculinity. It's not just your jock – the media portrayal of what a man should be,” says Adam Middleton, a freshman at George Washington University who attends Campus MOST.'

Women lag in life-expectancy gains

anthony · 22 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON - Women's life spans in the USA are improving at a slower pace than men's and are shorter in many U.S. counties than they were 20 years ago, according to a report released Thursday.

The trend is cause for alarm even though women are still expected to outlive men by four years, says the report by the Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation, a health research center at the University of Washington. The study is based on mortality data by age, sex and county from 1989 to 2009.

Life expectancy for U.S. men improved by 4.6 years on average, but only by 2.7 years for women. Life spans county to county across the USA range on average from 66.1 to 81.6 years for men and 73.5 to 86 years for women.

"A gain in life expectancy should be equal among men and women," says Ali Mokdad, director of the research team. "This is a wake-up call for all of us. It's tragic that in a country as wealthy as the United States, and with all the medical expertise we have, that so many girls will live shorter lives than their mothers."'

"Celebrity mohel mocks baby's manhood"

anthony · 22 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to Zarki, the baby's parents asked him to look into the matter, and since he had already carried out three similar circumcisions, he agreed, even though he hadn't previously seen a penis as small in all his 24 years as a mohel.

"My goal (in tweeting the) tweet was to bring the matter to the public's attention, that you can carry out a halachic circumcision even when there is such a problem, which is complicated from a medical perspective, that was my message."

"Sometimes you see a baby that weighs four kilograms, where three of them are the penis and sometimes it's only a few grams. Medical literature recognizes the phenomenon of 'micro penises,' just like sometimes I also see macro (penises), but everyone knows that size doesn't matter," the rabbi added jokingly.

The rabbi's "humorous" tweet came on the same day that a different Brit ceremony carried out by a different mohel, ended in tragedy. An eight day old baby was rushed to hospital after a mohel cut off a third of his penis during a circumcision ceremony.'

Letter: Women should not have the only voice in abortion decision

anthony · 22 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here.

'Recently a letter to the editor suggested that men should not be part of the abortion debate.

I still can't quite process that.

It takes a man and a woman to create a child. With that in mind, if the pregnant woman, the mother, is considering abortion the man, that is, the father, should have a say in the consideration.

If the pregnant woman decides to bear the child, the man may be expected to pay child support for a number of years.

Today it is the pregnant woman, who decides whether the fetus is a human being; whether the fetus will live or die; and whether the father will be expected to pay child support if the woman decides to bear the child.

Something is wrong with this picture. I know I am not the only person to see that.'

14-year-old boy charged with rape after consensual sex with 12-year-old

anthony · 23 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Springboro, OH (WKEF/CNN) - A 14-year-old boy faces rape charges after being accused of having sex with a 12-year-old girl at school.

The incident allegedly happened during school hours.

Both say it was consensual, but that doesn't matter under Ohio law.
...
These women say it's unbelievable that two students had sex at school.

The Warren County prosecutor says they were able to get out of class and hook up.

Now the boy is charged with rape because the girl is under the age of 13.

"I think it's a shame and if he's going to be charged she should be charged too because they both knew what they were doing," said Moore.'

CNN Opinion: "Are men stupid?"

anthony · 23 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- Are men stupid? How else can we explain the endless parade of otherwise successful individuals, who by all appearances seem intelligent and competent, and yet risk destroying their careers and their personal lives over the chance to have a sexual escapade?

John Edwards crashing from the heights of promise to infamy, from presidential candidate to defendant in a trial after a secret affair; Secret Service agents ending their careers in disgrace over dalliances with prostitutes in Colombia, all join that long procession of men who managed to self-destruct, pulling a pin on the grenade of their careers and perhaps their personal lives for the sake of a little fun.

The pageant of legacy-killing misjudgment includes a president, several might-have-been presidents, a few governors, a World Bank director, a former Dutch prime minister, an Israeli president and one of the top golfers of all time. And that is only a partial list.'

Philipines: Davao City addresses issue of abused husbands

Matt · 23 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DAVAO CITY, April 22 (PIA) -- The local government of Davao is the first local government to address the issue of abused husbands.

Says Rene Estorpe, barangay captain of Agdao Centro and president of the Mr. GAD (Gender and Development) Federation, a group of 15 barangays in the city where GAD for men are being piloted.

Estorpe said that aside from Violence Against Women and Children, Mr. GAD seeks to look into the plight of cuckolded husbands who are also victims of abuses committed by their spouses. “Pareho rin ang mga kaso, may physical violence and verbal abuse.” (It has the same cases there is physical violence and verbal abuse). The barangay chief say that in these cases, the roles are reversed as the husbands themselves are the victims.

Estorpe said that in his barangay they are handling two cases of abuses, where the husbands are asking for barangay protection against their wives. Estorpe added.'

Notes from the field: NCFM at Earth Day Festival in San Francisco, CA

Matt · 23 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc Angelucci of NCFM:

Today I spoke on the panel at the Earth Day Festival in San Francisco (the largest Earth Day festival in the U.S.) on behalf of the National Coalition For Men (NCFM). The organizers invited us, along with the National Organization for Women (NOW), to be part of a panel on the topic, "What is Green." The idea was to engage the community from various viewpoints. There were about 6 panelists. Here is the link to the "Our Team" with my name and brief bio.: http://www.earthdaysf.org/our-team.html

I spoke first and thanked the organizers for inviting NCFM. I said we are not an environmental organization but some of the issues we address can affect the environment. I mentioned some of those issues (men's health, fathers' parenting rights, male victims of DV, etc.). I said being green needs to include consideration of men's health and well-being. I mentioned some statistics re men and homelessness, incarceration, and job deaths. I said only one state (Georgia) has an office of men's health, and only one state (New Hampshire) ever had a Commission on the Status of Men, and it was unfunded and was recently cut along with the Commission on the Status of Women. I mentioned how these issues are neglected and we assume men "have everything." I explained that when we neglect men's issues it can harm inner cities. Our policies devalue dads rather than encourage father involvement. Fatherlessness leads to homelessness, dropouts, and incarceration. We send men to war and when they return with mental illnesses we do little about it and they often become homeless or incarcerated. Lots of homeless people are war veterans.

Homelessness, crime, and incarceration cause inner cities to deteriorate, which leads to urban flight and urban sprawl, which destroys farmland and creates traffic and people commute from the city to suburbs. When cities deteriorate, so do their sewer systems. I used to do urban sprawl work for CalPirg, and I helped with a lawsuit against the City of L.A. to get them to fix the deteriorating sewer system. I mentioned that there are many other issues we address concerning men that are neglected. I also founded the Environmental Affairs Committee at UCLA Law and brought recycle bins into the classrooms. And there are chemicals in our environment that are apparently damaging men's reproductive systems, reducing their sperm count and increasing testicular cancer.

I only had so much time so I just re-stated that we need to consider men's issues when we set policies. Due to time constraints (a band was about to perform) there was no Q & A, but afterwards several people asked me the name of the organization and the website. I also spoke to a few people about the additional issue of circumcision. Overall it went very well. No negativity or reactionism.

The First Protest Ever of Its Kind In Sweden: The Children's Rights To Both Their Parents

Anonymous · 24 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now we finally have the chance to stand up in a common call for all children in Sweden's right to both parents. This is thanks to Niklas Sundqvist who is the initiator of a joint protest. The first of its kind. It will be held in Stockholm on 13 May 2012. Do not miss this unique opportunity to show the leadership that we have had enough of their incessant violations of our and our children's right to family life.

The demonstration will be held in Sergel Square in Stockholm.
...
May 13, 2012 - Collection 12:00
Demonstration 13:00 to 16:00

Organizer: Niklas Sundqvist
Link for notification: http://www.facebook.com/events/315765661815373/

News submitted by

Ulf Andersson
PappaRättsGruppen
http://www.dads-r-us.se/

Deion Sanders' estranged wife accused of assault

anthony · 24 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here

'McKINNEY, Texas (AP) — Deion Sanders' estranged wife denies that she broke into his room in their Dallas-area home and attacked him in front of their children.

Pilar Sanders was arrested Monday on a misdemeanor domestic violence charge. She was released Tuesday and said she is innocent and that she's not being treated fairly because her husband is a Hall of Famer who played for the Dallas Cowboys.

Authorities haven't released details about the alleged attack. But Deion Sanders tweeted Monday that his children "just witnessed their mother and a friend jump me in my room."

The Mommy Wars are About Daddy Too

anthony · 24 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I don't know about you, but everywhere I go I run into men who don't feel like they have a real place in the world, thanks to the so-called "man-cession." Their eyes are hollow; they struggle for identity. They are all like the guys in Peter Gabriel's searing song, "Don't Give Up," about a man "whose dreams have all deserted," who struggles for work, for identity and a reason to go on living.

...

Today in the U.S., the tables have pretty much turned. Like fish without bicyles, women are enjoying more opportunities than ever, and they don't need men to realize their dreams of college and careers. They are putting off marriage and childbearing. They now enjoy a majority in colleges and graduate schools. They are also a majority in American workplaces, though they still generally earn less than men in comparable jobs.

Meanwhile, millions of smart, hardworking men, like all those women before them, feel threatened, their ambitions "disrupted" by technology and displaced by outsourcing. Today, fewer men than women are earning college degrees. One (disputed) study has even asserted that men will actually become extinct one day as the Y chromosome runs out. My own husband — a hard-working, entrepreneurial, visionary videographer disrupted by digital technology — is working to reinvent himself as community activist. (Hey, at least he is not sitting at home in front of the television with a six-pack.) And he is no wimp, but he is aching to re-find his place as a meaningful person in the world.

...

If I were the CEO of my dreams, I would make sure that women had an equal seat in the boardroom and the executive committee; but I would also work to ensure that all the men and women in my company had the chance to work without killing themselves. I'd offer ample opportunities for flex-time and job-sharing. I'd try hard to see that everyone who worked for me had a chance to rise, to feel important, and, critically, to achieve some semblance of balance between their family and office lives. And if I overheard sniping, I'd nip it in the bud.'

On campus, debate over civil rights and rape

anthony · 24 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But the most vigorous criticism has come from civil libertarians, who argue the Obama administration's guidance undermines the rights of the accused. They've focused on the requirement that colleges use a "preponderance of evidence" standard in such cases — essentially a belief guilt is more likely than not, and a much lower standard than defendants enjoy in criminal court.

Illustrating the dangers, they say, are cases like that of a former North Dakota college student who was found responsible for sexually assaulting a fellow student by a campus disciplinary board. Later, police investigating the incident cleared him and brought false-reporting charges against his accuser. Still, he struggled to clear his name and has yet to return to school.

Title IX, these critics claim, is a blunt legal weapon for addressing sexual assault on campus. They too see a threat to access to education — but for the accused.'

Violence Against Women Act Termed 'Fundamentally Flawed': SAVE Calls for End to Partisan Rhetoric

anthony · 24 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Apr 24, 2012 (GlobeNewswire via COMTEX) -- The Heritage Foundation has recently released a report that concludes the proposed Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) reauthorization is "a gross distortion of the original law and is gravely flawed." The think-tank report, Violence Against Women Act: Reauthorization Fundamentally Flawed, highlights how the bill now being debated in the U.S. Senate, S. 1925, would fund abuse-reduction programs that are unproven, duplicative, and wasteful: http://www.heritage.org/research/reports/2012/03/the-violence-against-women-act-reauthorization-fundamentally-flawed

At the heart of the proposed bill, the report argues, lies an ideologically rooted attempt at social engineering:

"Because proponents of the law argued that violence against women is a form of social control perpetuated by--according to their arguments--women's weaker social, political, and financial status, the substance of the VAWA focused largely on redistributing power and resources to female victims. This philosophy of group victimhood undermines equal protection and the rule of law and has been detrimental to the protection of victims generally."'

F&F: Maine Bar Counsel Recommends Discipline for ADA Mary N. Kellett

anthony · 24 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The attorney for the Board of Overseers of the Maine State Bar has recommended that Assistant District Attorney Mary N. Kellett be disciplined for her legal and ethical misconduct in her prosecution of Vladek Filler. On April 6, 2012, Bar Counsel J. Scott Davis recommended discipline for Kellett based on her violation of nine separate codes of conduct for Maine attorneys.

As readers of this blog will recall, Vladek Filler is the father who was accusedby his wife Ligia Filler, during the course of their custody battle, of sexual assault and child abuse. Despite the complete absence of evidence against him apart from his wife's say-so, ADA Mary Kellett not only prosecuted Filler, but violated numerous ethical codes in doing so. She managed to get a conviction which was overturned by the trial court due to her prosecutorial misconduct.

Amazingly, despite having been convicted of sexual assault, the Maine family court gave Vladek custody of his two children before the conviction was overturned. It did so because it was clear to all – the police and the judge – that Vladek was a good and responsible father and that Ligia had severe mental/emotional problems.'

SAVE: Do it For the Children, Stolen With a Lie

Matt · 24 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

It's down to the wire. The senate is expected to vote on the Violence Against Women Act very soon.

Vice President Biden recalled recently that when VAWA was first passed, opponents warned that it would be misused in divorce. They were right.

One in six Americans know someone who has been falsely accused of domestic violence. The "silver bullet" in divorce, false allegations are sometimes used to obtain child custody. This despicable act removes fit and loving parents from the lives of their children.

Please take a moment as soon as possible, and speak out for the millions of children who are missing a falsely accused parent. And do it for the parents who are grieving for their children, stolen with a lie.

Find your senators here: http://www.senate.gov/general/contact_information/senators_cfm.cfm. Take note of their party affiliation and phone number.

If your senator is a Republican, call, and ask them to support Sen. Grassley's Substitute Amendment to VAWA.

If your senator is a Democrat, call, and ask them to demand changes to Sen. Leahy's VAWA (S. 1925), to curb false allegations of domestic violence.

Thank you for taking a stand for affected families everywhere.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Special White House Event Will Encourage Girls' Participation in Science, Technology, Engineering, and Math

anthony · 25 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By ensuring that women and girls receive the exposure, encouragement, and support they need to enter and succeed in STEM fields, this country can benefit from the full range and diversity of its talent. To this end, on April 24, 2012, the White House Council on Women and Girls will host a White House event featuring a panel of trailblazing women in STEM fields. These women will share their experiences and encourage girls to follow in their footsteps—or to blaze trails of their own. This event will also showcase the very first public screening of Girls in STEM, a video with footage of girls who participated in the 2012 White House Science Fair, including Girl Scout team the Flying Monkeys, which invented a new type of prosthetic hand to help a little girl write for the first time. (The girls won the $20,000 FIRST LEGO League Global Innovation Award from the X Prize Foundation in April 2011; they were also granted a provisional patent.)'

False Report to Department of Children & Family Services – Be Aware!

Anonymous · 25 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

By: James M. Hagler
The Law Offices of Jeffery M. Leving, Ltd. (http://dadsrights.com)

A new Illinois law, effective January 1, 2012, makes it a crime for any person who knowingly transmits a false report to the Department of Children and Family Services (DCFS) a crime – and a serious one at that!

If one knowingly makes a false report to the DCFS, that person has committed the offense of disorderly conduct which is a Class 4 Felony, 325 ILCS 5/4 (2011).

I welcome this law. I have encountered too many times in my legal career a parent who abuses the system and makes false (and often repeated) reports to DCFS in an effort to destroy the relationship of a parent and child and to devastate the other parent. From now on, these false reporters are risking serious criminal penalties. A Class 4 felony is punishable by incarceration of not less than 1 year and not more than 3 years, and a fine of up to $25,000 can be assessed against an individual. While a person who is convicted of this crime may be able to get a suspended prison sentence and probation if they have a clean record, a repeat offender likely would not.

Any person who wants to use DCFS as a tool to falsely accuse another parent – or stepparent, or anyone else who stands in relationship with a child - is now playing a high risk game. Outrageous and false reports of abuse can now backfire on the accuser. If you were falsely accused and you believe that there is no way the report could have been made in good faith, you should contact the local authorities and seek a criminal investigation. Even if your accuser is not charged, your accuser will likely be dissuaded by the experience to ever try making a false report against you again.

Of course, mandated reporters such as doctors, nurses, and licensed professional counselors must make a report to DCFS if they have reasonable cause to believe a child known to him or her in their professional or official capacity may be an abused or neglected child. Bear this in mind if you find yourself in the role as a reporter, for this law is a two-way street. For example, if you have not personally witnessed the abuse but have heard a child's outcry, take the child to a mandated reporter. A hospital emergency room is a good place to consider taking a child when abuse is first reported. The facility will get a licensed professional to examine and speak to the child. Let the mandated reporter evaluate the child, and make a determination if there is reasonable cause to believe the child is abused or neglected. The professional will then notify DCFS. Don't take it upon yourself, in the heat of emotion, to assume the risk of making the report.

No one should hesitate to protect a child – but don't forget to protect yourself when doing so. No person should knowingly make a false report to DCFS – and if they do, they ought to be punished. With this new law, they can, and hopefully, will.

Justin Bieber writes song about false paternity claims

Matt · 25 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(Rolling Stone) -- At a listening party in London last night, Justin Bieber told reporters that one of the many new songs that could appear on his upcoming album, "Believe," was about Mariah Yeater, the woman who falsely accused him of fathering her child, the BBC reports.

According to the BBC, while talking about his inspiration, Bieber said he'd written "songs like that girl -- Mariah Yeater -- who said she was going to have my baby." The singer added, "I wrote about that situation."

Last November, Yeater claimed that she and Bieber had sex backstage following a show in Los Angeles, and that he was the father of her then-three month old baby boy. While the case was dropped a few weeks after, Bieber still took a paternity test that proved he was not the father.'

Infant stabbed in Baltimore; mother in custody - for 'mental health evaluation'

Matt · 25 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BALTIMORE (AP) -- A mother managed to slip a long kitchen knife past security at a Baltimore social services building and used it to stab her infant daughter in the face and neck Tuesday, police said.

The 8-month-old baby was stabbed several times, but was listed in good condition at Johns Hopkins Children's Center and was expected to survive, Police Det. Donny Moses said.

"The baby should be OK," Moses said.

The mother was admitted to an area hospital for a mental health evaluation, police said.'

New Jersey Autistic Boy Records Teachers' Alleged Abuse

Anonymous · 26 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

An appalling story of two abusive women teachers/aides verbally abusing an autistic boy. At least the father stood up for his son. Excerpt:

'A New Jersey dad who suspected something was "horrifyingly wrong" at school when his autistic son began acting violently had the boy wear a digital recorder and discovered teachers verbally abusing him.

Stuart Chaifetz, 44, described his 10-year-old son Akian as a "sweet and gentle child" with a penchant for acrobatics and a deep bond with his three dogs.

So Chaifetz said it was totally out of character when he began receiving reports from Horace Mann Elementary School that Akian was hitting his teacher and a teacher's aide.
...
When Akian came home from school and Chaifetz listened to the audio, he was shocked by what he heard. "When I listened to what they had done to him, I just shattered inside," Chaifetz said.

Chaifetz heard the teacher and aide calling Akian names, making fun of him, yelling at him and having inappropriate conversations in front of the children.'

Boy field hockey star kicked off girls' team for being 'too good'

anthony · 26 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The attorney for a 13-year-old Long Island boy who was kicked off his high school's girls' field hockey team for being too dominant says his client will most likely be reinstated.

"We are confident that a court will see the discrimination in this case," Frank Scagluso, the attorney for Keeling Pilaro said.

Scagluso said Keeling has support from his school district, other coaches and players in the league and that he has not heard any criticism about the boy's participation in games.

Keeling, who played for Southampton High School's varsity girls' field hockey team for the past two years, was told he could no longer play next year after becoming the team's star.'

Facebook Protesters Demand Social Network Add Women To All-Male Board

anthony · 26 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK -- Protesters swarmed the entrance to Facebook's Madison Avenue offices in New York City on Wednesday to deliver a petition with 53,000 signatures asking the world's largest social network to add women to its all-male board ahead of its public offering.

"Shame on Facebook," chanted the more than two dozen men and women brandishing signs declaring "'Like' Women on the Board" and "Facebook: Women Are Good for Business." One protester, Anne Cardinez, called on Facebook's female members to boycott the social network every Monday until the company adds at least one woman to its board.'

Woman sentenced to psychiatric treatment for lying about rape

anthony · 26 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three men spent 14 months in jail before being acquitted due to the false testimony of an 18-year-old women who will now receive psychiatric treatment.

An 18-year-old woman has been sentenced to five years of psychiatric care after being found guilty of giving a false witness testimony in a rape case three years ago.

The woman's testimony lead to three men, who where were 16, 17 and 18 at the time, spending 14 months in jail for rape.'

False rape claim woman sentenced

anthony · 26 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A university student who wasted more than 650 hours of police time after making a false rape allegation has narrowly avoided jail.

20 year old Chloe Jayne Fox of Spencer Street in Carlisle had claimed she'd been attacked in an alleyway in the city centre last September. Magistrates sentenced her to four months imprisonment, suspended for 12-months, and ordered her to do 180 hours of community service.'

UK: Two girls made up rape allegations, court told

anthony · 26 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TWO young girls made up allegations of rape against an 11-year-old Westhoughton schoolboy, a court heard.

Liverpool Crown Court was told yesterday that the boy, who cannot be named for legal reasons, told police the claims were false.

He is accused of inviting one of the girls to perform a sex act on him — but he claimed the words in question were a sarcastic taunt because she had called him fat.

It is alleged that, while out playing, the boy took her ball and refused to give it back until she had performed a sex act on him.

...

The boy, who is now aged 12, has pleaded not guilty to two counts of raping the girl and one of sexually assaulting her.

He also denies one count of raping the older girl, one of attempting to rape her and one of sexually assaulting her.

The trial continues'

Nancy Pelosi Ties 'War On Women' To Student Loan Debate

anthony · 26 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON -- Congressional Democratic leaders have found another venue to hit Republicans for their so-called war on women: the debate over student loan costs.

House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) on Thursday slammed Speaker John Boehner (R-Ohio) for proposing on Wednesday to keep down the costs of student loan interest rates by pulling money from what he called "one of the slush funds in the president's health care law." He was referring to the Prevention and Public Health Fund, which contains billions of dollars aimed at encouraging people to take better care of themselves, thereby saving money down the road.'

Reid On Secret Service Scandal: "Hire More Women"

anthony · 26 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(RTTNews) - Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid (D-Nev.) had a three-word response when asked by Senate reporters on Thursday what the Secret Service could do to avoid more prostitution scandals: "Hire more women."

Reid aligned himself with critics who say the agency needs to diversify its workforce to prevent future recurrences of the recent scandal in Colombia. Several agents were discovered to have consorted with prostitutes, including at a hotel in Cartagena just days before President Obama arrived, and about a dozen agents have been dismissed from the agency in recent days as the inquiry has progressed.

Female congresswomen such as Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine) and Rep. Carolyn Maloney (D-N.Y.) have openly questioned why only 11 percent of Secret Service employees are women.

"I can't help, but wonder if there'd been more women as part of that detail if this ever would have happened," Collins said during an appearance on ABC News' "This Week" on Sunday.'

F&F: Children Are Being Stolen With a Lie

Matt · 27 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's down to the wire. The senate is expected to vote on the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) very soon. Vice President Biden recalled recently that when VAWA was first passed, opponents warned that it would be misused in divorce. They were right.

One in six Americans know someone who has been falsely accused of domestic violence. The "silver bullet" in divorce, false allegations are sometimes used to obtain child custody. This despicable act removes fit and loving parents from the lives of their children.

Please take a moment as soon as possible, and speak out for the millions of children who are missing a falsely accused parent. And do it for the parents who are grieving for their children, stolen with a lie.'

SAVE: Show Your Gratitude To These Senators

Matt · 27 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The senate voted on the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) yesterday. Sen. Leahy's version passed with 68 votes for and 31 against. Now it moves to the House.

Please do not get disheartened. Look at the bright side: 31 senators were brave enough to vote no. Imagine how difficult that was in this election year.

We need to thank these senators, especially Sen. Grassley for providing a substitute amendment, and we need to do it right now.

Sen. Grassley:
(202) 224-3744
http://www.grassley.senate.gov/contact.cfm

Find out if your senators voted no:

Alabama: Sessions (R-AL), Nay Shelby (R-AL), Nay
Arizona: Kyl (R-AZ), Nay
Arkansas: Boozman (R-AR), Nay
Florida: Rubio (R-FL), Nay
Georgia: Chambliss (R-GA), Nay Isakson (R-GA), Nay
Idaho: Risch (R-ID), Nay
Indiana: Lugar (R-IN), Nay
Iowa: Grassley (R-IA), Nay
Kansas: Moran (R-KS), Nay Roberts (R-KS), Nay
Kentucky: McConnell (R-KY), Nay Paul (R-KY), Nay
Mississippi: Cochran (R-MS), Nay Wicker (R-MS), Nay
Missouri: Blunt (R-MO), Nay
Nebraska: Johanns (R-NE), Nay
North Carolina: Burr (R-NC), Nay
Oklahoma: Coburn (R-OK), Nay Inhofe (R-OK), Nay
Pennsylvania: Toomey (R-PA), Nay
South Carolina: DeMint (R-SC), Nay Graham (R-SC), Nay
South Dakota: Thune (R-SD), Nay
Texas: Cornyn (R-TX), Nay
Utah: Hatch (R-UT), Nay Lee (R-UT), Nay
Wisconsin: Johnson (R-WI), Nay
Wyoming: Barrasso (R-WY), Nay Enzi (R-WY), Nay

If so, call and/or email, and thank them for their courage and support. You can find their phone numbers and contact forms here: http://www.senate.gov/general/contact_information/senators_cfm.cfm.

Feeling really grateful? Or discouraged that your senators aren't on the list, but still want to take action? Feel free to contact all 31 of these brave individuals.

There was a time when many thought this would never happen. We have proven them wrong. You did it, all of you, each one of you. Thank you so much!

(((((((Group hug!)))))))

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments

www.saveservices.org

Anderson Cooper: Keeping them honest

Anonymous · 28 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Anderson Cooper is keeping Rep. Carolyn Maloney, D-NY, honest tonight. House Republicans, with a handful of Democrats, voted Friday to keep interest rates on government-backed student loans from doubling in the not-too-distant future. Most Democrats, including Maloney, opposed the move. They blasted Republicans, accusing them of raiding a preventative care fund in President Obama's health care law, as a way to pay for their bill. Democrats claim it's another example of what they call the GOP's war on women. But when Anderson pointed out that Democrats, including Maloney, dipped into that very same fund to pay for an extension of the payroll tax cut earlier this year, things got a little heated. Not only that, but the prevention fund does not appear to specifically target women's health. As Maloney points out, the preventative measures funded in the health care bill do benefit women and their families. But if Democrats have raided this fund before, and if the fund does not specifically target women's health programs, can they really call what Republicans did Friday a "war on women"? We're Keeping Them Honest.'

College student faces charge of filing false report after rape claim

anthony · 29 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Detroit — A Wayne State University student is being charged with filing a false police report after she claimed she was sexually assaulted on campus.

As required by law, school officials issued a campus notice Wednesday about the reported sexual assault in a parking lot south of the Matthaei Building.

But after reviewing video surveillance and noting inconsistencies in her story, police again questioned the woman. She signed a statement admitting her story was false, police said.'

S.F.'s political correctness takes Mirkarimi prisoner

anthony · 29 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For those of you who missed it, on New Year's Eve, Mirkarimi and his wife, Eliana Lopez, got in a fight. He grabbed her arm and bruised it. Lopez complained to a neighbor, who videotaped her. Days later, the neighbor contacted police.

The episode unleashed the hounds of political correctness in San Francisco. Domestic violence advocates saw an opportunity to strike a blow for female empowerment. San Francisco police and City Hall didn't want to appear soft on domestic abuse by an elected official. A city that doesn't let government into the bedroom watched, even applauded, as the criminal justice system divided a family that wanted to stay together.
...
The whole setup is "designed to break you along the way," Mirkarimi told me. Until he fights back and wins, he has lost the elective office he worked hard to win. The courts won't let him talk to his wife, who - this is ironic, as her declared wish to visit her native Venezuela with her son started the fight - took their son to Venezuela while she visits her sick father. When she returns in June, they will have been apart for five months and still will not be able to talk to each other.'

Nairobi: Women urging men to undergo circumcision

anthony · 29 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oketch is among a group of women in Nairobi who are leading an initiative aimed at urging men to get circumcised.

The women comprising of public health officials, surgeons, counselors and ordinary persons, have decided to take the HIV/Aids battle to men, who are crucial in prevention of the disease.

“They are our partners and sons. We are calling them to get circumcised so that they can protect us from HIV, cervical cancer and other sexually transmitted infections (STI),” she said.

Research indicates that male circumcision reduces a man’s chances of becoming infected with HIV and other STIs (Sexually Transmitted Infection) through sex by up to 60 percent.

It also reduces the risk of transmitting Human Papilloma Virus (HPV) and in women chances of getting cervical cancer, which is spread by HPV.'

Unmarried father wins visitation rights in custody battle

anthony · 29 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DENVER — Rob Manzanares has only seen his daughter once in four and a half years but that hasn't stopped him from battling courts in Utah and Colorado to get custody of his child.

A judge in Denver Friday decided to allow him visitation rights going forward, something he calls a victory for all 'dads' like him who are being denied custodial rights to their children.

The situation usually happens when the birth mother and father are not married. In many states, fathers have to sign up with a state registry to assert their rights.

In Utah, experts say the laws are much more in favor of the birth mother, which is why fathers often lose custody rights when courts in that state get involved.'

Students debate gender-exclusive spaces

anthony · 29 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The pending creation of the men-only space is the source of much discussion at Simon Fraser University. Since the news broke in April, many students have questioned whether the men deserve funding. Along with that, a debate has emerged over whether women—who make up 55 per cent of undergraduate students at SFU—still need their own women-only space.

...

The website lists support for the idea of a “male allies project” that would “bring self-identified men together to talk about masculinity and its harmful effects.” Masculinity, it says, “denigrates women by making them into sexual objects, is homophobic, encourages violence, and discourages emotional expression.”

Those are the very stereotypes Midgley says the men’s centre’s users might discuss.'

The next battle in the war over women

anthony · 30 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's official: Senate Democrats will soon hold a vote on the Paycheck Fairness Act, which would update and strengthen the Equal Pay Act of 1963, a senior Democratic Senate aide confirms to me.
...
The vote means this will likely be the next major battle in the war over women, and it could put Mitt Romney in a delicate political spot. It will force a choice: Either he supports the measure, which would put him at odds with the Senate GOP caucus (which voted against the bill two years ago), or he opposes it, which would put Romney at odds with his own rhetorical support for equal pay for women, potentially damaging him further among crucial female swing voters.
...
This Act would put more pressure on employers to prove that differences in wages are not rooted in gender difference, and would make it easier for employees to divulge information about their salaries, which would in turn facilitate deterring or challenging pay discrimination.'

Women Charge Ahead At Work, While Men Lag Behind: Reports

anthony · 30 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Forget the politics of the so-called war on women. When it comes to their careers anyway, women seem to be winning.

Two stories Monday highlight women's rise in the workplace. CNNMoney is the latest news outlet to discover that more men are staying home to take care of their children. Meanwhile, the Wall Street Journal on Monday asserts that "More Women Are Primed to Land CEO Roles."

In the CNN story, reporter Jessica Dickler writes that "a growing number of dads... are staying home with the kids." The story cites statistics from the Census showing that 32 percent of fathers with a wife in the workforce took care of their children at least one day a week in 2010, an increase from 26 percent in 2002.

CNN's hardly the first to discover that more fathers are staying home. Time's March cover story "The Richer Sex," claimed that "women are overtaking men as America's breadwinners." In January BusinessWeek ran a cover story entitled "Behind Every Great Woman," which took a deep dive into female corporate executives married lives. To rise to the top, the article concluded, female executives need supportive husbands who are willing to take a backseat to their wives' ambitions.'

Surviving Illinois Child Support

Anonymous · 30 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Surviving Illinois Child Support
By Arthur S. Kallow
Law Offices of Jeffery M. Leving, Ltd. (http://dadsrights.com)

We all know about the Illinois statutory minimum child support guidelines - 20% of net pay for one child, 28% for two, 32% for three, and so forth. This is the law in Illinois.

But what many don't know is that those minimum guideline amounts are not etched in stone. There may be ways for you to avoid being ordered to pay those amounts. In the right case, the right lawyer might be able to persuade a judge to enter an order for support that is below, maybe even substantially below, the Illinois statutory minimum guidelines.

Here are a few tips:

1. Make sure that "net income" is properly determined.

The Illinois statute contains some deductions that may overlooked. For example, if you pay child support under a prior court order, the law allows that amount to be deducted from your gross pay before determining child support for the younger children. The statute also provides that union dues, medical insurance premiums, certain expenditures and debts for expenses for the child or the other party or for production of income and for some medical expenses are also proper deductions. They should not be ignored when computing your net income.

2. If you spend a great deal of time with your child, an argument could be made that child support be reduced accordingly.

This would most likely be successful if the child lived for ½ of the time with each parent. It would be very less likely to be persuasive if you only had alternating weekend visitation. However, often child support could be eliminated or lowered during extended summer visits.

3. If your children are split up for custody purposes – some living with you and some with the other parent – traditional applicability of the guidelines would seem inappropriate.

One reasonable technique is for each parent to pay guideline support to the other and receive guideline support from the other.

4. If you have to spend a great deal of money to visit your child because the other parent has moved far away, you may be able to persuade the judge to award support at a lower rate to compensate you for your costs.

This would most likely be more convincing if the other party wanted to move to another state and the costs of long distance visitation trips is very high.

5. Get as much information as you can about the other parent's income and expenses.

If they spend very little money on the child and if someone else provides them a free place to live, an argument could be made that the guidelines for support are not applicable.

6. If one of the parties earns a great deal of income and the other doesn't, a court might order an amount of child support less than the amount in the guidelines.

This could work either way. If you earn a very large income, child support would be unreasonably high if based on the guidelines. Cases involving professional athletes often fall into this category. The reverse could be true as well. If your income is very low and your spouse earns a very high income, it could be argued that a lower than guideline order could be necessary to enable you to provide for the children during your time with them and provide for yourself as well.

7. Make sure that if you lose your job or other source of income, or if your earnings decrease, that you seek to modify support immediately.

Child support will continue to add up and you may even be punished with jail time for not paying the amounts that are due unless you correctly have those amounts adjusted or stopped before they become due. A good family law attorney can file the necessary papers so that you are protected financially and so that your liberty will not be at risk.
This is not intended to be an exhaustive list of methods to reduce the impact of the minimum guidelines on your child support obligation. These are only a few suggestions that a competent, skilled, creative and aggressive attorney can consider so that you are not taken advantage of when setting child support.
Disclaimer: This article is intended for general informational purposes only and should not be understood to be legal advice. We recommend that you retain a skilled, competent attorney to represent you and give you personal, legal advice for your specific situation.

Comedy about middle school statutory rape? Does Adam Sandler's 'That's My Boy' go too far?

anthony · 30 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LOS ANGELES – Adam Sandler's comedy "That's My Boy," slated for release on Father's Day 2012, centers on a 13-year-old boy named Donny having a sexual relationship with his middle school teacher, resulting in a child.

Thirty years later, Donny is reunited with his now grown-up son (Andy Samberg), who fled his single father as soon as he turned 18, and it's all fun and games as they get to know each other again.

But father/son bonding aside, is statutory rape an acceptable comic premise?

The trailer for "That's My Boy" shows young teen Donny mesmerized by his teacher "crush," who saunters down the school corridor in slow motion. She then fondles her cleavage while staring at the child seductively in the classroom. But "things went too far." Cut to the courtroom where Donny's mates high-five him for impregnating his teacher. As she is dragged off to jail, she screams: "Take care of our baby, Donny!"'

Why do only women have reproductive rights – choice?

Anonymous · 30 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a man, I am baffled and, yes, troubled by the idea that reproductive rights - “choice” – only applies to women. The men have none.

Even though women can’t get pregnant without a man.

Even though the embryo is genetically half the man’s, half the woman’s.

If the woman wants an abortion and the man wants the child, he has no say.

If she wants to have the baby, and he doesn’t, he has no say.

And he’s on the hook for 18 years of child support, 21 if the child goes to college. Most of the time, the woman gets custody, even if the man is a better caretaker.'

Petition: Silverthorne Clinic: Stop performing neonatal circumcision

Matt · 30 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'Circumcision of healthy male infants is not recommended by any medical association in the world, including the American Academy of Pediatrics and the American Medical Association. In order to protect children from medically unncessary surgery, medical professionals and medical centers must stop offering to perform such surgery.

High Country Healthcare's Silverthorne Clinic (located at 265 Tanglewood Lane, Suite E-1, Silverthorne, CO 80498) currently performs neonatal circumcision at parental request. This petition is to ask Silverthorne Clinic to stop performing circumcision.

Medical associations which do not recommend circumcision of healthy male children include the American Academy of Pediatrics, the Canadian Paediatric Society, the American Medical Association, the British Medical Association, the Royal Dutch Medical Association, the American Cancer Society, the Royal Australian College of Physicians, the Royal Australasian College of Physicians, the College of Physicians and Surgeons of British Columbia, the Australasian Association of Paediatrics Surgeons, the Australian College of Paediatrics, the Swedish Paediatric Society, and the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.'

FIRE Press Release: Bipartisan Support for Student Rights in Senate VAWA Reauthorization

anthony · 30 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, April 30, 2012—The U.S. Senate made bipartisan progress on college student rights on Friday as it passed the Violence Against Women Reauthorization Act of 2011 (VAWA). Heeding the concerns of the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE), Senators altered language in the final bill that might have required colleges and universities to employ our nation's weakest standard of proof in adjudicating allegations of sexual misconduct.

"FIRE thanks Senators Patrick Leahy, Chuck Grassley, Robert Casey, Mike Crapo, and Kay Bailey Hutchison for their leadership in protecting students' due process rights," said FIRE President Greg Lukianoff. "Campus sexual misconduct can and should be combated without eroding student due process rights."
...
FIRE continues to be concerned about the Senate bill's requirement that colleges maintain "procedures for the accused and the victim to appeal the results of the institutional disciplinary proceeding." (Emphasis added.) The requirement contradicts the principle behind the Fifth Amendment's prohibition on "double jeopardy," whereby someone accused of a crime cannot be tried again for the same charge once the original hearing has properly ended in either acquittal or conviction. (The alternative version proposed by Senator Grassley and Senator Hutchison addressed this concern.)'

Schumer to House Republicans: Renew Violence Against Women Act in its current form

anthony · 30 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sen. Charles Schumer (D-New York) and domestic violence survivors pushed Sunday for Congress to renew the Violence Against Women Act.

The law, which will expire in September, passed the Senate Thursday, but faces opposition in its current form in the House, where Republicans are working on their own version of the bill.

“I want to say, to the small group in the House of Representatives moving to stop this bill. Stop it. Pass this bill,” Schumer said, calling the renewal a “no brainer.”

“Now you have extreme people who don’t care about the rights of women,” Schumer said. “They want a new bill, but their bill doesn’t even mention the word women.”'

As Parents, Are Fathers the Second Sex?

anthony · 30 April 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ten months ago, my wife and I had our first child, a boy. He was born in London, where we've been living for nearly four years.

We've both been happy with the prenatal and postnatal health care services provided, and have been equally pleased with the day care center he's been going to four days a week for the past four months.
...
Doctors, nurses and baby sitters don't always pay attention to me, and sometimes dodge my questions entirely. Some of them have cut me off midsentence, and they often speak directly to my wife, even though I'm standing right there.
...
In the end I know it doesn't really matter whom they call or text first. We're both going to deal with the issues as they come. But to be so heavily involved in his life and yet feel so invisible at the same time is hard to get used to.'

NYC: Barbers Can’t Charge Women More Than Men

anthony · 1 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A New York City barber was accused of violating the city’s discrimination policy because he charged women three dollars more for a hair cut than men.

“I’m here for 21 years and I’ve never heard of such a thing,” said Leon Kogut, the owner of Leon’s Fantasy Cut in Brooklyn. “The guy tells me this is discrimination of a woman.”

...

“A woman’s haircut requires a lot of skill,” Kogut said. “You have to style the hair, blow dry, use the mousse, the hairspray. It could take hours to get her hair cut.”

On the other hand, he said, it only takes a few minutes to cut a guy’s hair.

...

“I ran away from Communism,” he said. “The system in New York City reminds me of Communism. The government can do anything to you.”'

Mom charged with putting bleach in her toddler's eyes

anthony · 1 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This is an example of how parental alienation harms children. Excerpt:

'A 29-year-old Washington state woman was charged Monday with first-degree child abuse after doctors said she nearly blinded her toddler daughter by replacing the child's antibiotic eyedrops with household bleach.

Jennifer Lynn Mothershead of Buckley, Wash., was arrested Friday after a nearly yearlong investigation that revealed that she inflicted severe eye and head injuries on the child, court documents show. She was held by Pierce County officials in lieu of $150,000 bail.

...

Mothershead was separated from the child's father, Cody B. Mothershead, who is a math teacher at a local high school, White River High School, in Buckley, a town of 4,500 in western Washington state. School district officials said Monday they were not aware of the extent of the child's injuries or whether Cody Mothershead was aware of the abuse. As a teacher, he would be required by law to report any suspicion of child abuse.'

"Good Riddance to Feminism!"

anthony · 1 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Modern motherhood is complicated. Naturally we want to be caregivers and nurturers, but, socially, we also want to be professional powerhouses. And, the truth is we can have both — just not at the same time, as dedication to one often results in forgoing pieces of the other. Understandably, this is why working mothers generally experience feelings of guilt and inadequacy.

The damage that 'attachment parenting' is doing to feminism is a good thing. And, for that, we can blame feminism — a movement that, while liberating women to follow their dreams, devalued marriage and the familial and societal benefits of homemaking and encouraged self-indulgence. It appears millennial moms have taken note, choosing to pattern themselves after their grandmothers rather than their baby boomer moms. A 2007 Pew Research survey showed a rising number of new mothers, 48 percent, consider full-time motherhood to be the ideal situation, while only 21 percent of working mothers believe working full time is ideal. One could presume the rise of “attachment parenting” is partially backlash from the children of Steinem-ites left for daycare and afterschool programs.'

Misinformation by NOW president on domestic violence

anthony · 1 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'O'NEILL: The fact is that men do experience domestic violence at far lower rates than women. And, in fact, quite a bit of the domestic violence or street violence, if you will, assaults, sexual assaults, I mean, and intimate assaults are perpetrated by men on them.
...
O'NEILL: On college campuses, it's a real concern. One of the things -- we don't have enough studies. We don't have enough information, but clearly -- yeah, the date rape drug is well known on college campuses.
...
HAYS: But, yeah, I think that men are not protected, and women -- there was piece in the New York Post that had the headline -- it was a violence against women editorial, and the headline was, "Let's call it the I lied and got him thrown in jail act."

O'NEILL: There just isn't any evidence that women are going around falsely accusing men of domestic violence. In fact, most women who experience domestic violence experience an enormous amount of embarrassment and shame. How did I get involved with this loser who gets his way by hitting me? And it is a very difficult thing for women to come forward and seek help to begin with. So the thought that there are people who are being falsely accused is it needs to be backed up by evidence, but, oops, there isn't any.'

Teacher assaults student, rants about 'Nazis and Jews'

Matt · 1 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Bluffton Middle School teacher is accused of grabbing a seventh-grader by his shirt collar, forcing him under a desk and telling him, "This is what the Nazis do to Jews," according to the Bluffton Police Department.

The student's parents decided to press charges.

A lawyer for social studies teacher Patricia Mulholland said she was merely conducting an "interactive lesson" on the Holocaust during a class Wednesday.

Mulholland turned herself in at about 5:45 a.m. Monday on charges of third-degree assault and battery, and public disorderly conduct. She was released on her own recognizance later that morning, according to the Beaufort County Detention Center jail log.

...

Several students took cellphone videos of Mulholland before the incident occurred that police reviewed during the investigation. The incident is not captured on video, but Babkiewicz said they show Mulholland talking about an upcoming talent show, singing and falling over while attempting to sit on a desk.

"Not once did she mention the Holocaust before this incident occurred," Babkiewicz said. "She was all over the place."'

Senator Bennet visits CU-Boulder to discuss VAWA

el cid · 1 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The story reports on the visit of Michael Bennett to push for re-authorization of VAWA. A summary of the bill combined with the usual disinformation about DV. One excerpt that bugs me:

'Leslee Morris, an investigator with the Office of Student Conduct, said the criminal justice system requires an incredibly high standard of proof.

"At the university, we have a much lower standard of proof," Morris said. "There will certainly be times where (victims) don't get a satisfactory result through the criminal justice system, but there may be different results through our process because we have higher expectations of our campus population and a lower standard of proof."'

"How to spot a misogynist"

anthony · 2 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you're not trained in the spotting of smug, self-satisfied misogynists, you might not know the general thrust of their shtick. Luckily for you, I've become somewhat of an expert in the field since they all started following me on Twitter. So to help novices and outsiders, I've taken the following five popular misogynist arguments and parsed them into some kind of legible (if not logical) format for your benefit.

...

5. Men are oppressed too, therefore women aren't! Or something.

'If feminists really cared about equality, they'd be addressing all the inequality that faces men. Like, why do feminists only care about breast cancer and not prostate cancer? Why aren't feminists advocating for single dads? Why won't women sleep with me when I'm a really nice guy and I've made a particular effort to be nice to them, particularly? Until feminism can answer that, I'm afraid I don't really see it as being legitimate."

This is the last bastion of the misogynist's argument - their self-fancying checkmate, if you will. What these people are basically saying is that, despite the overwhelming evidence of entrenched sexual, physical and ideological oppression of women, the only way feminism can really be fair is if it first identifies and solves all of the ways in which the patriarchy also oppresses men.'

Cathy Young: Drop the distorted feminist ideology

anthony · 2 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The congressional battle over the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act, which briefly pitted Republicans against Democrats in yet another skirmish in this political season's gender wars, seems largely over. The Senate voted last week to approve the VAWA reauthorization; the House is expected to vote on it next week. Republican objections to the current legislation have crumbled under the threat of the party being seen as anti-woman.

But does VAWA truly advance the interests of women — or advance a divisive and paternalistic form of feminist ideology?

Obviously, no sane person is "for" violence against women. But VAWA, originally passed in 1994, has always been about more than preventing violence and helping victims. Sponsored by then-Sen. Joseph Biden, the law was crafted largely by feminist groups and activists who viewed domestic violence and sexual assault as a male "war against women," an instrument for enforcing patriarchal oppression. While these activists are no doubt sincerely concerned with the welfare of women, this is a blinkered ideology that often creates more problems than solutions.'

Opinion: Lawmakers clueless about circumcision research

anthony · 2 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is child abuse by today's standard, but it was embraced as the norm in the late 19th century. This is the root of circumcision in this country today.

Each year, as people learned that the latest claim didn't work, a new disease was introduced that circumcision would cure. Dr. Paul M. Fleiss states, "In fact, no procedure in the history of medicine has been claimed to cure and prevent more diseases than circumcision."

There is still confusion and much ignorance on this subject. Just last week, Sen. Brandon Shaffer, D-Longmont, was e-mailing constituents saying, "Reliable studies prove that male circumcision reduces instances of infectious disease, some congenital obstructive urinary tract anomalies, neurogenic bladder, spina bifida and urinary tract infections."'

India: Circumcision goes awry, two boys die

anthony · 2 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two boys died in Bodhan town in the district late on Monday night due to over bleeding. A rural medical practitioner performed circumcision on the boys five days ago, which led to uncontrolled bleeding.

The deceased were identified as Arif, 4, and Azhar, ,3 of Rakasipet in Bodhan.

It is believed that the negligence of RMP led to the death of children. According to sources, parents got the two children circumcised five days ago at Masjid Colony in Rakasipet area.

After the surgery, the boys had suffered bleeding, but the RMP advised them not to worry and it could be cured with medicines.'

UK: 'False rape belittles victims'

anthony · 2 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Shock and fear hung over Carlisle. People felt shame for their city, held suspicions about their neighbours, were afraid to go out at night.
...
Two women have now been punished for the lies that blighted Carlisle. Two women have been convicted of fabricating stories of brutal sex assaults – untruths that seriously and directly impacted on the ordinary, routine day to day activities and peace of mind of thousands of their fellow citizens.
...
Not only did she waste valuable police time and contribute to bringing a climate of terror to Carlisle's nightlife, her actions thoughtlessly belittled all women who, having been subjected genuinely and terrifyingly to rape, struggle to face the frightening ordeal of bringing charges and giving testimony.'

SAVE: Tell Congress: Require probable-cause evidence

Matt · 3 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Democrats and Republicans in the House have each introduced their own versions of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). While we applaud some improvements, there is still work to be done.

Persons accused of domestic violence deserve their due process. And they certainly don't get that with mandatory arrest. Unfortunately, it was not removed from VAWA, by either side.

One in six Americans know someone who has been falsely accused of domestic violence.

During a recent trip to Capitol Hill, I happened to meet three different legislative staffers who had a friend or loved one who had been falsely accused. They know...but they need to hear from you.

Call your Representatives in Congress and demand that VAWA require probable-cause evidence for domestic violence arrests.

Call the Capitol Hill Switchboard: 202-224-3121

Or Find your Representatives by zip code:
http://www.house.gov/representatives/find

We have very little time to make a very big difference in the lives of the future falsely accused.

So get calling! Please!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

F&F: Will P&G Honor Fathers?

Matt · 3 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Proctor & Gamble has a heartwarming YouTube video showing mothers preparing their children for the London 2012 Olympic Games. It is touching. It is a wonderful tribute to everything mothers do for their children. It is timed beautifully to coincide with the Olympics and Mother's Day. Fathers and Families applauds it.

What will P&G do for Father's Day? We are curious. Please join us in asking P&G what it plans for Father's Day. Log onto https://www.facebook.com/thankyoumom and post a message. Fathers and Families suggests you thank your Mom and ask Proctor & Gamble what to expect for Father's Day. We are sure they are working an equally heartwarming tribute for fathers.'

BBC News - "Just who are men's rights activists?"

Matt · 3 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Via email from Marc A.:

BBC News is way ahead of CNN. They have covered the truth about domestic violence, covering the issue of battered men, the coverup of the actual research, discrimination against male DV victims, the myth about the "pay gap," and much more. Here, they briefly cover the men's rights movement and even list NCFM as a notable organization. It's amazing the difference between BBC News and CNN. BBC News looks more like 60 Minutes while CNN looks more like TMZ or Extra. This is progress, and there will be more, no matter how much feminist groups try to smear the men's rights movement. Discrimination against men is real, institutionalized, systematic, and susbstantial. And that will increasingly become known. We have made tremendous progress and will continue to. Good job everyone.

http://www.bbc.co.uk/news/magazine-17907534

Excerpt:
'An increasingly vocal men's movement argues that anti-male discrimination is rife. Who are the activists and what do they want?

Feminists have spent decades trying to get equal pay and rights for women.

But while, in the West at least, discrimination against women is rigorously challenged, a growing band of men's rights activists say no such protection is afforded to men.

Many of these activists also believe that the media allow women to objectify and ridicule men in a way that would be unthinkable if the gender roles were reversed.'

"Obama Campaign: Women Are Helpless"

anthony · 4 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today, the Obama campaigned launched its Dads Are Unnecessary, Single Women Are Helpless campaign, simply titled "Julia." It features a faceless composite, which seems to be the type of woman with which the campaign is most comfortable.

Julia decides to have a child. She doesn't need a father or husband because she has the Obama government! Fathers are unimportant in both the choice of procreation and the raising of children. Under Obamacare, Julia will have less access due to rationing and higher costs.
...
Obama is still president and now Julia's son Zachary is starting school? Where is Zachary's dad?

The government is his daddy.'

St Stephen's college principal moots 40 per cent reservation for men, teachers call idea 'absurd' arindamp · 4 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW DELHI: An unusual proposal to reserve 40 per cent of the seats for male students was introduced at the staff meeting of the St Stephen's college today, but was met with vehement disapproval from the teachers who said they were "taken aback" by the "absurd" idea.

College Principal Valson Thampu introduced the proposal before the college staff at a meeting held this morning.

The idea that has earlier been discussed by the Supreme Council of the college proposed a reservation of 40 per cent of the college seats for male students.

...

At present, there are 64 per cent women students at the prestigious college, making them a majority over their male counterparts.'

Mother 'made sex tape with her son, 16, and sent him naked photos of herself'

Matt · 4 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother has been charged with incest after she was found in hotel room with her teenage son along with videos of them having sex.

Police said the 16-year-old had videos on his cell phone that showed his mother Mistie Atkinson performing oral sex on him.

They also recovered nude photographs the 32-year-old had sent her son as she began the illicit relationship earlier this year.
...
The boy, who lives with his father who has sole custody, was aware Atkinson was his biological mother.

Court records do not reveal how much contact the teen had with his mother before they began their affair.

But investigators said Atkinson had no custody rights to the boy.

'Atkinson and the victim are aware they are biological mother and son,' investigators wrote in an arrest affidavit.'

The village can help, but children raised by a mum and dad do best

Anonymous · 4 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Those without children can help lift the load, but the burden still lies most heavily on the actual parents, of course. Fortunately, there's a very efficient incubator in which to maximise successful child-rearing: the emotional bond between mothers and fathers. The heterosexual family.

That last paragraph would have seemed uncontroversial over most of the span of human society, but no longer. Almost unnoticed, Labour changed the rules covering IVF in the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 2008. No longer is it only a medical intervention to assist childless couples, desperate to conceive but prevented through one or other's infertility. Instead, Parliament fashioned it into a tool for "equality", changing the "need for a father" in the 1990 Act to "the need for supportive parenting". Single women and gay couples are now presumed to have a right to children, regardless of biological circumstance.
...
It is the arrogance of the Left to imagine such rules to be malleable by the will of man. They are not; and the (admirable) fear of causing offence (offence I regret I will have caused) should not lead us to remain quiet about the wrong turn our society has made, in eroding the importance of the biological father in the raising of children.'

Colorado lawmaker jokes about reducing boys' sexual pleasure to prevent teen pregnancy

Matt · 6 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.:

Imagine if a male lawmaker joked about reducing girls' sexual pleasure by removing their clitoral foreskins in order to combat teen pregnancy and "female irresponsibility." The media would be covering it and that lawmaker would have to publicly apologize. Well that is exactly what Colorado lawmaker Sue Schafer, D-Wheat Ridge (sue.schafer.house-at-state.co.us) publicly said about boys in a hearing on whether to reestablish MediCaid funding for male circumcision. The bill failed. But the laughter about reducing male sexual pleasure through male genital mutilation is sexist and unacceptable.

"One lawmaker, Rep. Sue Schafer, D-Wheat Ridge, elicited laughter in the hearing room when she asked Dr. Johnson if circumcision might help reduce teen pregnancy rates and teen sexual activity by reducing nerve sensation in boys' penises. "I'm wondering if there's a risk of more sexual activity, more male irresponsibility" for uncircumcised boys, Schafer asked. Johnson answered that teen pregnancy is certainly a problem, but said circumcision won't halt teen sexual activity. "Circumcision is not a cure for behavior. That's about education," she said. She and others also testified that cutting off infant babies' body parts is not the way to prevent urinary tract infections. She said she's treated plenty of babies for infections and antibiotics are an easy answer.

"You don't cut off part of a healthy penis to treat urinary tract infections," Johnson said. http://www.healthpolicysolutions.org/2012/05/05/circumcision-bill-dies-in-colorado-house/

The Swedish Paediatric Society has rightfully called infant male circumcision an assault on boys. http://m.thelocal.se/39200/20120219/

The male foreskin is a highly innervated erogenous organ that is dense with specialized mucosa and over 20,000 high sensory nerve endings. It also acts as a natural buffer and lubricant during sex. Researching using fine-touch medical instruments shows it is the most sensitive part of the penis. http://www.livescience.com/health/070615_penis_sensitivity.html

A recent study in Denmark found circumcised men have a much higher rate of sexual problems. http://ije.oxfordjournals.org/content/early/2011/06/13/ije.dyr104.short?rss=1 Research also find circumcised men are five times more likely to suffer from premature ejaculation. http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/21492404

And a recent report by the Dutch Medical Association, representing 46,000 physicians and medical students and backed by seven other medical associations, explains that the male foreskin is an important erotogenic structure for which no medical benefit justifies its routine removal, that it is comparable to certain forms of FGM, and that it violates children's rights to bodily integrity. http://www.norm-uk.org/news.html?action=showitem&item=1306

Sue Schafer should woman up and publicly apologize for her sexist comments about males. Both boys and girls are responsible for teen pregnancy, which should more accurately be called teen parenthood. To target one sex and joke about reducing their sexual pleasure through genital mutilation is outrageous.

Video: Biden Recreates 911 Domestic Abuse Call: 'Oh My God, He's Coming'

anthony · 7 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Last time I was down, I had them turn on one of the calls. And a young women, a young women was on the phone saying "I'm calling. Oh my god, oh my god. I see him, he's coming. I'm standing between Radioshack and Gap. I'm in the mall Please, please, oh god!" That's the reality. And I love these people who why don't these women have the courage to get up and leave. Can you imagine the courage it takes to pick up that phone and make the call. We should all have so much courage."'

"Au revoir, Carla! The Rottweiler wants to be France's new First Lady"

anthony · 7 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The twice-divorced Trierweiler once slapped a colleague who said something she deemed sexist. When her own magazine put her on its cover under the headline 'Francois Hollande's charming asset', she tweeted: 'Bravo Paris Match for its sexism . . . my thoughts go out to all angry women.'"

SAVE: Tell Congress: Vote YES on HR 4970

Matt · 7 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

After careful examination of both House versions of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), we find HR 4970 the better choice.

HR 4970 puts victims first, with stronger fiscal accountability.

HR 4970 includes reform to curb VAWA immigration fraud.

HR 4970 is gender inclusive, (except Title IX, re: Indian women)

Please call the Capitol Hill Switchboard: 202.224.3121.

Tell the operator your zip code and ask to be connected to your Representative's office.

Or find their phone number here: http://www.house.gov/representatives/find

Tell your Representative to vote YES on HR 4970.

We're in the homestretch, folks! Let's give it our all!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Circumcision bill dies in Colorado House

anthony · 8 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bill that would have restored Medicaid funding for circumcisions in Colorado died Friday.

The measure squeaked through a hearing in the House Health and Environment Committee on Thursday, then died in Appropriations Friday morning.

Opponents, who included health professionals, budget hawks and anti-circumcision activists told health committee members on Thursday that circumcision is cosmetic and potentially harmful, and taxpayers should not fund it.

Proponents for the bill argued that funding for circumcision for babies on Medicaid is a social justice issue. In general, insurance companies pay for the procedure for insured Colorado babies even though the American Academy of Pediatrics does not deem circumcisions to be “medically necessary.” Meanwhile, low-income parents who want their babies circumcised are being put on waiting lists for the procedure until parents can prove they’ve paid in advance.'

Woman given probation for false rape and abduction charges

anthony · 8 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ELYRIA — A Sheffield Township woman was sentenced to three years of probation for trying to frame a man for rape and abduction.

Gabrielle Bracken pleaded guilty in March to tampering with records, forgery and falsification in March.

Bracken and her husband, James Bracken, on Sept. 24, 2010, lured Joseph Melendez, 35, of Cleveland, to their Fleming Avenue home in Sheffield Township, according to the Lorain County Sheriff's Office.

The Brackens initially claimed Melendez put a knife to Gabrielle Bracken and tried to rape her. Melendez was charged with rape, but the charges were dropped after Melendez passed a polygraph test and investigators spoke with a witness.'

Woman charged with falsely accusing man of rape

anthony · 8 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Naperville woman who had consensual sex with a man, then later accused him of rape, has been charged with disorderly conduct for filing a false police report, Aurora police said.

Sarah C. Eschbach, 22, turned herself in Thursday night after a warrant was issued for her arrest, police said.

On March 26, Eschbach told police she had been sexually assaulted by a 21-year-old Aurora man she knew at his apartment, police said. But a police investigation revealed the two engaged in consensual sex and no assault had taken place.

Eschbach was being held in the DuPage County Jail on $1,500 bail.'

Q&A: Prof. David Benatar

anthony · 8 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this week, a damning report by Stonewall revealed that UK healthcare is failing men – especially gay men. But what's new? From divorce, circumcision and paternal rights to domestic violence and a failing education system, boys and men are also victims of sexual discrimination.

Now, finally, a men's movement is gathering pace. Here, in a bid to silence the bigots who dismiss misandry, we spoke to Professor David Benatar about his vital new book The Second Sexism, which is out next month.'

Woman accused of severing man's penis in fatal stabbing at Dallas motel

anthony · 8 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 28-year-old woman is accused of cutting off a man's penis during a fatal stabbing in a Dallas motel room Saturday, according to police documents.

Cristal Paulette Richardson (right) faces a murder charge in the gruesome death of Cedric Lamont Owens, 34. He was found dead in a room at a Motel 6 in the 8500 block of East R.L. Thornton Freeway about 5:20 p.m., police said.

Motel video surveillance showed Richardson one day earlier renting the room alone. About 4 on Saturday, a security guard said he heard man and woman "in a loud verbal and physical disturbance" in the third-floor room, police said.'

SAVE: Press Release: VAWA Must Stop Funding Lethal Mandatory Arrest Policies

Matt · 8 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Release here. Excerpt:

'Washington, DC/May 8, 2012 — States that enacted mandatory arrest policies saw a 60 percent increase in intimate partner homicides, according to a Harvard U. study. Now, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is calling on lawmakers involved in the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) to halt funding for such lethal policies.

Beginning in 1994, VAWA pushed states to change their domestic violence arrest standards from probable cause to the more aggressive mandatory arrest policy. Under mandatory arrest, the accused person is taken away in handcuffs if the police are called, even in the absence of evidence of physical violence.

VAWA's 2005 reauthorization did away with the mandatory arrest language, but states continued to enforce these harmful policies. SAVE insists that the House of Representatives insert language in its version of VAWA that would stop taxpayer funding of arrest without probable cause.'

Ask women about partner violence, panel says

Minuteman · 9 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Doctors should screen all of their female patients for signs of partner violence, whether face-to-face or through a waiting room questionnaire, a new report suggests.

The review of the current evidence on screening for partner abuse, from researchers at Oregon Health & Science University in Portland, is the first step toward new recommendations on screening from the government-sponsored United States Preventive Services Task Force.

According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, close to three in 10 U.S. women have experienced rape, stalking or physical violence by a partner. Other studies suggest as many as half of women will experience psychological aggression from an intimate partner at some point in their lives.'

NCFM appeals to family court judge council to use gender-neutral language

Matt · 9 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter sent by NCFM:

'Dear National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges,

Your Checklist for judges uses sex-specific language with regard to domestic violence, referring only to "fathers" but not to mothers.
www.ncjfcj.org/resource-library/publications/checklist-promote-perpetrator-accountability-dependency-cases

As an organization that works with male victims of domestic abuse, we are concerned that this language stereotypes fathers and keeps female perpetration invisible as usual.

In October 2008, we won a landmark appellate case in California that held it is unconstitutional to exclude male victims of domestic violence from the statutory funding provisions or from state-funded services, and held: “domestic violence is a serious problem for both women and men,” “men experience significant levels of domestic violence as victims,” “male victims of domestic violence are similarly situated to female victims for purposes of the statutory programs and no compelling state interest justifies the gender classification,” and that gender classifications in domestic violence programs carries "the baggage of sexual stereotypes.” Woods v. Horton (2008) 167 Cal.App.4th 648, 662, 671, and 676. www.metnews.com/articles/2008/wood101508.htm

We request that you correct that language and make it gender-inclusive ("fathers and mothers") or gender neutral ("parents"). Please get back to us about this.

Marc E. Angelucci, Esq.
Vice President
National Coalition For Men (NCFM)
www.ncfm.org'

SAVE Demands Apology from Rep. Zoe Lofgren

Matt · 9 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is a victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to the problem of domestic violence. Stop Violent and Abusive Environments supports the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA).

SAVE advocates for all victims of domestic violence, regardless of their race, sex, or gender identity. Unfortunately, false claims of domestic violence and sexual assault have become widespread, a problem that robs true victims of desperately needed services, protections, and credibility. (http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/False-DV-Allegations-Cost-20-Billion)

During the May 8, 2012 mark-up of the House Judiciary Committee, Congresswoman Zoe Lofgren (D-CA) made certain statements regarding Stop Abusive and Violent Environments, alleging SAVE represents a group of “apologists for abusers.” In support of this accusation, Lofgren referred to a member of the SAVE Board of Directors, Natasha Spivack.'

SAVE Elert: Say You're Sorry, Rep. Lofgren

Matt · 9 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

I'm learning that politics is a lot like sales; people will say what they need to say to close the deal. Yesterday, that practice hit a little too close to home.

During the May 8, 2012 mark-up of the House Judiciary Committee, Congresswoman Zoe Lofgren (D-CA) made unfounded, scurrilous, and false statements regarding Stop Abusive and Violent Environments and Natasha Spivack, a member of the SAVE Board of Directors. See:
http://www.saveservices.org/2012/05/save-demands-apology-from-rep-zoe-lofgren/

SAVE, who are not a group of "apologists for abusers," has demanded that Rep. Lofgren retract her remarks about SAVE, issue an apology to Natasha, and begin to work for ways to stop false allegations of domestic violence. As of this writing SAVE has not received a reply, so we're asking for your help.

Call Rep. Lofgren (202) 225-3072 and repeat the same demand:

1. Retract your remarks about Stop Abusive and Violent. Environments (SAVE)
2. Issue an apology to Natasha Spivack.
3. Work for ways to stop false allegations of domestic violence

For our Natasha, and for every single falsely accused person who is being denied by the current system, please call.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Mantrue.com up and running

Matt · 9 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

http://www.mantrue.com/

Started by a reader of MANN. We say, 'Atta boy!' Excerpt:

'For years, I have felt a general feeling of isolation and rejection. However, it's perhaps only over the last few years that the extent of how much of this is actually real has been dawning on me. For I have come to realize, not just how discriminated against and oppressed I have been, but how I have been brainwashed into believing that it is somehow acceptable and, even, justified.
...
Why have things been allowed to get so bad? Well, perhaps it's not easy to stand up to this kind of insidious hostility if we are alone, isolated and lack the tools and language to respond in a constructive way. It's time that this started to change.'

F&F: Money Is More Important Than a Parent

Matt · 9 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Money is more important than a parent. We don't express this view by our words, of course. But our actions scream it loudly.

Fathers and Families of Ohio is working with legislators to provide a fast, low-cost, effective way for nonresidential parents to have their court-ordered parenting time enforced. It is a scandal that we have a multi-billion dollar bureaucracy to enforce financial child support orders and, yet, we leave parents whose time with their children is denied on their own, with demonstrably ineffective, but very costly, mechanisms for protecting their relationship with their children.'

Riots were a 'taste of Britain to come', warns Government adviser

Broadsword · 10 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Simon Marcus, a charity boss appointed to investigate the riots, has launched a blistering attack on the Government, local councils and police for being “in denial” about the gang culture behind the unrest.
...
Writing in the Spectator, he said few are willing to admit that an “epidemic of father absence” had lead to a vacuum which is now filled by dangerous gangs that give young people security, identity, loyalty and money.

“Many may be in denial of this reality - but in many parts of our country this culture now owns the streets and last August it simply did what it says on the tin,” he said.
...
He said the problem was made worse when councils fail to address the problem directly and identified a “local government culture of psychobabble”.'

The Case Against the Paycheck Fairness Act

anthony · 10 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The misnamed Paycheck Fairness Act is a special-interest bill for litigators and aggrieved women's groups. A core provision would encourage class-action lawsuits and force defendants to settle under threat of uncapped punitive damages. Employers would be liable not only for intentional discrimination (banned long ago) but for the "lingering effects of past discrimination." What does that mean? Employers have no idea. Universities, for example, typically pay professors in the business school more than those in the school of social work. That's a fair outcome of market demand. But according to the gender theory permeating this bill, market forces are tainted by "past discrimination." Gender "experts" will testify that sexist attitudes led society to place a higher value on male-centered fields like business than female-centered fields like social work. Faced with multimillion-dollar lawsuits and attendant publicity, innocent employers will settle. They will soon be begging for the safe harbor of federally determined occupational wage scales.'

'Paycheck Fairness' Will Mean a Pay Cut for Men

anthony · 10 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here (paid registration required). Excerpt:

'Feminists have long wanted enlightened government officials, rather than the indifferent market, to determine salaries. Information collection and government-compensation guidelines today could easily become regulations and mandates tomorrow.

Such meddling would be disastrous for the economy, but men particularly should be warned: Bureaucrats micromanaging compensation standards will mean many male workers should expect a pay cut.

We've seen how this works. Soon Democrats will celebrate the 40th anniversary of Title IX as a triumph for women's equality, but mothers of would-be wrestlers and male gymnasts know this well-intentioned law has a darker history.

Title IX amended federal education law to require that schools receiving federal funding couldn't discriminate on the basis of sex. However, enforcement procedures have morphed this antidiscrimination statute into a de facto quota system for athletics. Many colleges have eliminated men's teams, and some male sports are now all but extinct at the collegiate level, such as men's gymnastics.'

Paycheck Fairness Act Is Based on a Misapplied Statistic

anthony · 10 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Paycheck Fairness Act failed to become law in the 111th Congress, when the House and Senate had overwhelming Democratic majorities and President Obama, in his State of the Union Address, called the bill "common sense."

Why?

The act is based on a misapplied statistic, that women earn 77 cents on a man's dollar. This is true when comparing all women's wages with all men's wages, but not when comparing men and women with the same experience in the same job. The 77 cent statistic combines men and women who work in different jobs with different numbers of hours. When job, experience, and hours of work are taken into account, rigorous economic studies show women make about the same as men—95 cents on a man's dollar.

When women believe they are the victims of discrimination, they have many laws under which to seek justice, such as the Equal Pay Act, the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act, and the Civil Rights Act.

On average, women will never be at complete parity with men, because they choose different jobs and many choose to combine work and family and work part time. When women work full time, they work fewer hours. In April, full-time working women worked 12 percent fewer hours than men.'

UK: Made-up rape claims ‘devalue true victims’, claims Cumbrian charity

anthony · 10 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That’s the view of Carol Tindall, chairman of the Cockermouth-based West Cumbria Rape Crisis Unit, who spoke out after two women admitted making up rape claims in Carlisle, sparking huge police investigations and fear on city streets.

Takara Jayne Harding, 18, of Low Meadow, Raffles, Carlisle, pretended she had been the victim of a terrifying sex attack in a Carlisle car park and was in court on Monday where she was given a suspended prison sentence.

A week earlier, Chloe Jayne Fox, 20, of Spencer Street, admitted she had lied when she said she had been dragged into an alley and brutally raped.

Ms Tindall said: “It’s detrimental. It puts the police to a lot of trouble and effort. It devalues true victim and gives them a hard time.

“There is the fear that they won’t be believed. With rape, it’s usually one word against another. “When you have got people like this who make false accusations – whatever the reason – then it all adds up in people’s minds. Is she telling the truth is she not?'

'Don’t let the man bring you down'

anthony · 10 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The same thing that makes many men a “manly” man is also the same thing that leads men to die, on average, 5-10 years before their female counterparts: masculinity.

Some argue that this difference is due to the sex hormone, testosterone, which makes younger men prone to make rash decisions. While higher testosterone levels slowly harden men’s arteries, the impact of natural and biologically oriented masculinity on society is very slight. Past the age of 35, testosterone slowly declines—fortunate because if not, men would die far earlier than they do already.
...
These arbitrary, hyper-masculine standards for what means to be a man cause suffering for all people in our society, even men. When men disregard all other aspects of their personality in order to conform to rigid gender norms set by our society, they fail as men, as human beings and our society as a whole fails.

Our society needs a radical change in its gender norms if we really want everyone’s lives to change for the better. So long as we participate in a society that continuously shames women and more feminine men for their own femininity, very little in our society will improve.'

HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius on National Women's Health Week

Minuteman · 11 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Didn't they just have one of these? Link here. Excerpt:

'Starting with Mother's Day, May 13, we are observing National Women's Health Week; the theme this year is "It's Your Time." We can all celebrate the women in our lives during National Women's Health Week by encouraging them to make the time to address their own health. Healthy, strong women are essential to having healthy strong children and communities, but too often women place the needs of others before their own needs.

Because of the new health care law, the Affordable Care Act, being a woman will no longer be considered a pre-existing condition.'

Tale of vengeful Polish dentist pulling lover's teeth came out of ether

Matt · 11 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This story was reported on MANN a week or so back and this fact that it is a fake story has come to light. Therefore, the story has been deleted from MANN. Excerpt:

'It seemed like just another weird news story dug up from somewhere far away. The kind of story people can't help clicking on, sharing, talking about.

"A dentist pulled out all her ex-boyfriend's teeth after he dumped her for another woman — who has now left him because he is toothless," reported the website of British tabloid the Daily Mail.

MailOnline was first to report the saga of Polish dentist Anna Mackowiak's vengeful dental work on an ex-boyfriend. Soon the story spread far and wide in the English press.

Fox News, Huffington Post, Yahoo! News, the Los Angeles Times, the San Francisco Chronicle, the New York Post, and the New York Daily News all took a swing at the story, offering takes on their respective websites. On the home front, CBC.ca wrote a blog post citing the Daily Mail story.

Then one killjoy decided to actually call up police in the relevant Polish town for an update on the status of charges against Mackowiak. Police had no idea what the reporter from msnbc.com was talking about. '

Australia: woman 'impulsively' murdered her baby boy

Minuteman · 11 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Gemma Gaye Killeen, 23, was sentenced in the West Australian Supreme Court on Friday to life in prison with a minimum of 13 years to be served before she is eligible for parole.

She had pleaded guilty to murdering her 22-month-old son, Tereringa Wetere, known as Kayden, who was found floating in Hillarys Boat Harbour on November 26, 2010.

In sentencing, Justice Stephen Hall said there was no doubt that Killeen would be "forever blighted" by her decisions that day, despite not intending to kill or harm her son.

...

"You were so self-absorbed that you could think only of trying to obtain attention by creating a drama," he said.'

NJ woman admits making, streaming child porn

Matt · 11 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This story debunks the stereotype that only male perps engage in such disgusting and criminal behavior. Excerpt:

'RENTON, N.J. (AP) -- A New Jersey woman admitted Wednesday to sexually assaulting a 5-year-old girl she was allegedly babysitting and putting a video of the assault on the Internet.

Jennifer Mahoney, 33, of Manalapan pleaded guilty in U.S. District Court to sexual exploitation of a child.

She faces between 15 and 30 years in prison when she is sentenced Aug. 22, and will have to pay restitution to the victim. She had been charged with two counts of sexual exploitation of a child.'

WILL Magazine March Volume 1 Issue 8 now available

Matt · 11 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Latest issue is downloadable here as a .pdf file.

Note WILL Magazine is not a men's issues publication exclusively, but it runs articles from time to time dealing with such.

Time magazine cover -- forget the breast, what about the boy?

anthony · 11 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jamie Lynn Grumet, the 26-year-old mother featured on the cover of Time magazine breastfeeding her 3-year-old son, has done more this week than become the poster woman for “attachment parenting,” the sometimes laudable movement that advises parents to be physically and emotionally available and responsive to their children. She has shown the limits of such a concept, and the ways in which it can be twisted into a bizarre, contemptible caricature of itself.

...

When he enters school later in his young life he may be ridiculed for it. And these realities hint at a woman who could (and I have not evaluated her) have very poor boundaries and be willing or likely not only to nurture a child, but to absorb him, deny him his personhood and render him no more than her appendage.

...

The truth is that what Time magazine may have unwittingly captured and been party to was a grotesque form of psychological abuse—the parading into public of an intimate moment (intimate for mother and child) at the sole direction of that child’s mother, who didn’t stop to think that her child may not be able at the age of three to know what he thinks about the whole thing, much less to stop it, if he wanted to.

...

This is self-centeredness at its worst, sold as good parenting. And this is an act of media violence against a child, committed by adult journalists who also commandeered his will (as did his mother), for sensation and profit. Rarely do we get such evidence of how wrong parenting can go, how poorly journalists can behave and how slow we can be to recognize ugliness when it is disguised as something beautiful.'

UK student spared jail after making false rape claim

Anonymous · 12 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A student has been spared jail for a false rape claim which led to a man being arrested and detained for nine hours.

Hannah Byron, 20, invented the sex attack in an attempt to win back an ex-boyfriend, a court was told.

She was told by a judge that she avoided a jail sentence 'by a short whisker' for what police describe as a 'malicious report'.

Police strongly criticised Byron for putting the man through such an ordeal, for wasting their time, and possibly putting off genuine victims.'

Mother's Day in prison

Matt · 13 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Do fathers behind bars get the same treatment on Fathers' Day? Not that I know of. Slideshow here. Caption:

'Mothers watch their children arrive to visit at California Institute for Women state prison in Chino, California May 5, 2012.'

What’s the difference between the men’s rights movement and feminism?

Matt · 13 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Grist for the thought mill. Excerpt:

'A commonly asked question by those on the fence about both men’s rights and feminism is what the difference is between the two movements. Feminism has been around for over five decades and the public is understandably more familiar as a movement.

...

When I brought up the fact that MRAs have caused no legal discrimination against women and only wish to abolish the unjust laws set in place by feminism the counterpoint from both the feminist and the neutral observer were “but men in the past set laws in place that discriminated against/oppressed women.”

The feminist, again as one would expect, could not grasp the concept that “MRA” is not synonymous with “man,” however, the neutral observer eventually conceded that MRAs are indeed men and women who oppose the legal bigotry put in place by the feminist movement.'

'Obama's Campaign Slop to Women'

anthony · 14 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Barack Obama is buying votes. The Paycheck Fairness Act (PFA) is a blatant sop thrown to a voting block on which his next presidency may depend: women, specifically, liberal women. Obama also hopes it will weaken Mitt Romney, who is trying to woo women himself and, yet, cannot endorse the PFA without alienating conservatives.

The PFA (HR 1519) seeks to amend the Equal Pay Act (EPA) of 1963 and the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) of 1938, to which the EPA itself was an amendment. The goal is to strengthen protections and sanctions against the currently illegal business practice of paying unequal wages to men and women who do substantially comparable work.

...

The PFA is profoundly anti-business.

It is also anti-male. For example, the PFA authorizes the awarding of grants to organizations in order for them to teach females how to negotiate better salaries and other compensation. Women's competitors in the job market are men. Tax money, including taxes paid by men, will be used to advantage one sex over the other in the job market.

But the foregoing objections only scratch the surface. The PFA is a violation of individual rights; it is based on false assumptions; it rests on discredited statistics that come from advocacy research; it is special-interest legislation; it will harm women as well as all workers; and it places a crippling burden on businesses at a time when so many are sinking into bankruptcy or closure.'

Husband relives horror of moment petite blonde wife plunged steak knife into his chest after years of domestic abuse

Anonymous · 14 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A man who was subjected to terrifying violence at the hands of his petite wife has described the moment she plunged a steak knife into his heart.

Kieron Bell, 36, only found the courage to leave his wife Sarah after she stabbed him and left him to die.

Even after she was jailed Kieron found it hard to admit he had been a victim of domestic violence at the hands of his wife.

But he hopes telling his story will encourage more men to come forward.

He said: 'There is a misconception that men who are victims are weak but that couldn't be more wrong.'

Kieron, of Great Yarmouth, Norfolk, was a strapping nightclub bouncer when he became a victim of domestic violence.'

Title IX competes with true gender equality

anthony · 14 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While everyone is celebrating the upcoming 40th birthday of Title IX, shouldn't we also hold a funeral for men's sports?

I hate to rain on the party (not really), but if Title IX is gender equity (it isn't), then we should look at the effects of the law from the men's side, too.

...

All this notwithstanding, the way Title IX has been interpreted is wrong, period.

The original law, as passed in 1972, stated, "no person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving federal financial assistance."

But that is exactly what is happening in collegiate sports, except now it's the men who are being denied opportunities and subjected to discrimination.'

UK: Lagging at school, the butt of cruel jokes: are males the new Second Sex?

anthony · 14 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You might not have realised it, but men are being oppressed. In many walks of life, they are routinely discriminated against in ways women are not. So unrecognised is this phenomenon that the mere mention of it will appear laughable to some.

That, at least, is the premise of a book by a South African philosophy professor which claims that sexism against men is a widespread yet unspoken malaise. In The Second Sexism, shortly to be published in the UK, David Benatar, head of the philosophy department at Cape Town University, argues that "more boys drop out of school, fewer men earn degrees, more men die younger, more are incarcerated" and that the issue is so under-researched it has become the prejudice that dare not speak its name.

"It's a neglected form of sexism," Benatar says in a telephone interview. "It's true that in the developed world the majority of economic and political roles are occupied by males. But if you look at the bottom – for example, the prison population, the homeless population, or the number of people dropping out of school – that is overwhelmingly male. You tend to find more men at the very top but also at the very bottom."
...
Men are also increasingly the butt of jokes. In a recent article for Grazia magazine, one male writer took exception to comedian Jo Brand claiming that her favourite man was "a dead one" and an advertisement for oven cleaner with the tagline: "So easy, even a man can do it." In a Guardian article on Friday, it was pointed out that the stereotyped image of a man incapable of growing up has become a staple of US film comedies – the most recent example being Jeff, Who Lives at Home, starring Jason Segel as a man still living with his long-suffering mother who lets him smoke weed in her basement.'

Do Men Really Earn More Than Women?

anthony · 14 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Eighty cents on the dollar - that is the gender pay gap figure often quoted these days. It seems incredible that, in our modern world, such inequity in pay for male and female workers can exist. PayScale wanted to find out more about this figure and what we discovered is that "80 cents on the dollar" isn't accurate in most cases.

In our new infographic "Do Men Really Make More Than Women?" we show that when working the same job, with similar skills, knowledge and abilities, men and women's pay rarely differs by more than five percent, with men typically earning more. There is still work to do to even out pay between the sexes but is isn't, perhaps, as severe of a problem as thought.
Job Choice and Family Responsibilities
...
What we found is that job choice and family responsibilities heavily impact pay differences between men and women. Women tend to choose lower-paying jobs that will not, no matter how hard they work, pay as much as the jobs men typically choose.

Also, we noticed that women's pay growth stops out-pacing men's around age 30 which, for college educated women, is the age at which they typically start a family.'

Study of the Day: Gender Gap in College Leads Women to Prioritize Work

anthony · 14 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PROBLEM: These days, American women receive 57 percent of all bachelor's and 60 percent of all master's degrees in college. Are there repercussions to having this gender imbalance on campus?

METHODOLOGY: Researchers led by University of Texas at San Antonio professor Kristina Durante examined historical data on the ratio of single men to single women in each U.S. state and Washington D.C. They also looked into the desire of hundreds of female college students to focus on career or family after they led them to believe that there were either more men or less men on campus by reading one of two news article about the student population.

RESULTS: As bachelors became scarce in college, the percentage of women in high-paying careers increased, women delayed having children, and had fewer kids when they finally started a family. As for the experiment, when women read that there were fewer men than women on campus, they became more motivated to pursue ambitious careers than to start a family.

CONCLUSION: The gender ratio dramatically alters women's choices about career and family. When men are scant, women delay having children and pursue high-paying careers.

IMPLICATION: An unconscious but important factor in women's career aspirations is their perception of how easy or difficult it is to find a husband.'

UK: Student spared jail after making false rape claim in bid to try and get her boyfriend back

anthony · 14 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A student has been spared jail for a false rape claim which led to a man being arrested and detained for nine hours.

Hannah Byron, 20, invented the sex attack in an attempt to win back an ex-boyfriend, a court was told.

She was told by a judge that she avoided a jail sentence 'by a short whisker' for what police describe as a 'malicious report'.

Police strongly criticised Byron for putting the man through such an ordeal, for wasting their time, and possibly putting off genuine victims.'

SAVE: Tell Your Representative, Vote YES on HR4970

Matt · 14 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Like I told you last week, in politics, some people will say anything to win. I know this, but I'm still floored by all of the misinformation being published about HR4970. Maybe they are blindly believing members of the domestic violence industry.

Recent fundraising emails from major VAWA-funded organizations are the worst offenders. Even though the GAO and the DOJ found misuse of funds and fraud, these organizations are fighting against accountability. And they're doing this by misrepresenting how HR4970 will affect the LGBT community.

What they don't say, is that HR4970 is the only VAWA that removes all discrimination, the only VAWA that allows service providers to open shelters for men who are abused (40% of all injured victims!). If we, as a society, are going to claim to want to help every victim, shouldn't that include heterosexual men?

Let's not let them get away with this smoke and mirrors trick.

So, whether you want abused men to have services, or whether you want your tax dollars spent correctly, please contact your Representative and ask them to vote YES on HR4970.

Please call the Capitol Hill Switchboard: 202.224.3121. Tell the operator your zip code and ask to be connected to your Representative's office. Or find their phone number here: http://www.house.gov/representatives/find

Tell your Representative to vote YES on HR 4970.

We can do this! You, me, and all of our friends. Share this e-lert with your social media network today!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Women's lifespan edge over men slowing, study shows

anthony · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new, 20-year research project shows women still outlive men but that their life spans are increasing more slowly than men's. — The Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation conducted a county-by-county estimate and comparison of U.S. life expectancies from 1989 to 2009.

Nationwide, life expectancy grew by 4.6 years for men and 2.7 years for women in those two decades.

"Men are catching up with them," said Dr. Ali Mokdad, head of the study's U.S. County Performance team. "Men and women should have exactly the same life expectancy (gains)."

Chipping away at women's life spans are preventable causes of death, including tobacco, high cholesterol, high blood pressure, obesity and alcohol, researchers say.

"Their life spans are getting shorter because they are not able to control the risk factors," Mokdad said.

The study, released this spring, was funded by the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute, which is part of the National Institutes of Health. The Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation is an independent global health research center at the University of Washington.'

UK: Queen's Speech boosts fathers' rights

anthony · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'David Cameron and Nick Clegg promised “unprecedented support for parents” with a new Children and Families Bill, which also contained measures to make it easier to adopt, and more support for children with special needs.

Parents’ groups “cautiously welcomed” the proposals but business leaders warned that making parental leave more flexible would impose complex “burdens” on employers.

Officials said current rules on maternity and paternity leave were “outdated” because they presumed that women will do the “vast majority” of caring for infants.

A spokesman for the Department for Business said: "Parents should be able to choose their childcare arrangements for themselves.”'

Deported father's children may be listed on Michigan adoption website

anthony · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Though their father risked his freedom to regain custody of them, two of his three children are poised to be advertised on Michigan's website for adoption.

The man, an undocumented Guatemalan immigrant, had returned to the U.S. after being deported from the country to fight for his family: a girl and two boys, all under the age of 10.

He's since lost them to the state of Michigan: His daughter is living with a foster family that intends to adopt her, and it is unknown when his sons will find a permanent home in the system.'

NIH statement on HIV Vaccine Awareness Day

Minuteman · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Statement of Anthony S. Fauci, M.D. Director, National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases National Institutes of Health

There is a growing consensus that we can significantly curtail the HIV/AIDS pandemic by implementing scientifically proven HIV prevention strategies, such as voluntary medically supervised adult male circumcision, prevention of mother-to-child transmission and treatment as prevention. With 2.7 million new HIV infections in 2010 alone, however, it is likely that controlling and ultimately ending the HIV/AIDS pandemic will require an effective vaccine as well. This past year, there have been a number of encouraging findings on this front.'

'Stop catering to feminist minority'

anthony · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is time for rational American women to repudiate the propaganda and indoctrination by the fanatical feminist fringe in this country, who dictate policy to our anemic legislators in Washington. I resent these radical groups' claims that they represent the demands of the majority of American women. These groups are responsible for the wussification of America by demonizing the role of men in our society.

They have convinced too many women that fathers are not necessary to raise children, contrary to studies that show the overwhelming cause of poverty and incarceration of young men in the U.S. stems from so many families headed by single mothers. For at least three decades, we have heard the incessant claims that women are capable, intelligent, independent, stronger and better than men.

However, when promoting feminist issues, these groups revel in hypocrisy by then claiming that women are weak, vulnerable and exploited victims.'

'Women are better than men'

Anonymous · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I've been noticing news items lately about how women are gaining in many ways. They now represent a majority of U.S. college students, and 60% of all graduate students. Their income levels are rising, although they still don't have parity with men. They are far less involved in violent crimes, and crime of all sorts. They are safer drivers. A child in a single-parent home is likely to be better off if the parent is a women. In the U.S. the odds are that 80% of the single parents will be women; having given birth, they stick around to raise children, while men are more likely to be missing.

I could bore you with more statistics, but I doubt you need convincing. Most of these things are intuitively true. I believe that a great many things can be explained by the process of evolution, and differences in the sexes are certainly included. We are the descendants of primitive hunting and gathering societies. Men are better are hunting, and women are better at gathering. Men are taller, heavier, stronger. They're not in the child-rearing business.'

Mother's Day slaying blamed on cheap gift

anthony · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BEAUMONT — Evetta Wright said she was puzzled when she got a call early Monday from her son.

Not long before, around 11:30 p.m. Sunday, she'd dropped Clifton “JR” Barkin off at his house after taking him to Wal-Mart to buy flowers and a Mother's Day card for Paige Parkerson, the mother of Barkin's two small children.

When she answered the phone, she said Parkerson was on the line.

“Paige told me she killed JR, that he was dead,” Wright said through sobs.

Wright said she sped back over to her son's house, but it was too late.

Barkin, 22, died just after midnight Monday in the backyard of his yellow rental house, stabbed several times. Wright said she believes Parkerson expected a more expensive gift, such as jewelry.'

Woman gets probation for sex with underage neighbor

anthony · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A San Antonio woman who admitted to Child Protective Services investigators that she left her children unsupervised to go have sex with a 13-year-old neighbor was ordered Monday to serve deferred adjudication probation for aggravated sexual assault of a child.

Prosecutors had recommended prison for Amanda Ann Nabers, 26, who will have to register as a sex offender for life.

But she gave a full confession, she has already lost her children, her house and her job, and the victim's family was in favor of probation, defense attorney Carlos Martinez told state District Judge Juanita Vasquez-Gardner.
...
Had Nabers been a man, she would more than likely be prison bound, but the wishes of the victim and his family play a large roll in determining the sentence, the judge said.'

News & Commentary: Critiquing VAWA

anthony · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Obviously, no sane person is "for" violence against women. But VAWA, originally passed in 1994, has always been about more than preventing violence and helping victims. Sponsored by then-Sen. Joseph Biden, the law was crafted largely by feminist groups and activists who viewed domestic violence and sexual assault as a male "war against women," an instrument for enforcing patriarchal oppression. While these activists are no doubt sincerely concerned with the welfare of women, this is a blinkered ideology that often creates more problems than solutions. Most research finds that substance abuse, mental illness and dysfunctional family dynamics are major factors in domestic violence—far more so than male dominance or sexist attitudes. Abuse is no less common among same-sex couples than among heterosexual ones.

Moreover, abusive relationships are often characterized by mutual violence, and in male-female relationships women are sole or primary aggressors much more often than is commonly believed.
...

VAWA-funded training for police and prosecutors encourages the presumption that the man is always the sole or primary aggressor in domestic violence cases. Among past recipients of federal grants for such training are psychologists Dee Graham and Edna Rawlings of the University of Cincinnati, authors of a 1994 book, Loving to Survive, which argues that women's relationships with men are akin to the "Stockholm syndrome" in which hostages bond with their terrorist captors.
...
The VAWA model of feminism is not one of equality; rather, it is a mix of gender polarization and paternalism that treats violence against women as more worthy of concern. The best solution would be to replace the law with gender-neutral family violence and sexual assault legislation and the current Justice Department programs with ones based on diverse perspectives on domestic violence. Perhaps someone will find the political courage to champion such reforms the next time the law comes up for renewal.'

Lawmaker blasts Title IX, Brandi Chastain winces

anthony · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The world-famous U.S. women's soccer player was in Sacramento on Monday with her Brazilian counterpart Sissi to be honored by the California Assembly as it recognized the 40th anniversary of Title IX.

The occasion prompted Assemblyman Chris Norby to reveal that he wasn't a fan of the 1972 federal law chiefly known for mandating gender equity in high school and collegiate sports. The Fullerton Republican said he thought Title IX had come at the expense of male athletes, particularly those who depend on sports scholarships.

"We need to be honest about the effects of what I believe are faulty court interpretations or federal enforcement of Title IX, because it has led to the abolition of many male sports across the board in UCs and Cal States," he said. "And that was never the intention of this, to have numerical equality. It was never the intention to attain equality by reducing opportunities for the men."'

Gaps in sexual health care for male teens

anthony · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marcell pointed to gaps in research, the absence of uniform clinical practice guidelines and care providers' lack of knowledge as contributing factors to a health care environment in which male teens often don't receive basic sexual and reproductive health care—services that he said should be standard in primary care settings. These include taking a sexual history, STI/HIV screening and testing, a sexual development physical assessment, including a genital exam, and discussion of the male role in contraception and STI/HIV prevention.

"I think the bottom line is there's a major research gap," said Marcell.'

Boy field hockey star deemed 'too good' can play, committee rules

anthony · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The biggest goal of Keeling Pilaro's field hockey career happened far from an athletic field on Tuesday.

An athletics committee determined the 13-year-old boy can keep playing on the girls' varsity team at Southampton High School, at least for one more season. The decision at an appeals hearing Tuesday reverses earlier rulings that claimed Keeling's skills as a field hockey player, which he developed growing up in Dublin, Ireland, had developed to a level superior to those of girls.

"I was jumping up and down; I was so excited when I heard," the youngster said in a telephone interview about an hour after the decision was announced by an attorney for the athletics committee. "I can play!"

Kevin Seaman, the attorney for the committee that oversees public school athletics in Suffolk County, said panelists determined that Keeling's continued participation on the team ultimately would not have "a significant adverse effect" on girls' opportunity to participate in interschool competition. That was the same criteria used earlier this year when officials for the committee said Keeling's skills had exceeded those of his female teammates and competitors.'

Media Skip Obama Barnard Remarks Bashing Media, Men As Dumber Than Women

anthony · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CNN ran a large chunk of speech in the 2 pm hour Monday that included that passage, along with what followed, in the "don't let the media stop you for doing idealistic things" vein. Washington Post columnist Dana Milbank was the rare journalist to note the "founding mothers" crack. The Constitution is an "extraordinary document," said Obama:

> Yes, it had its flaws — flaws that this nation has strived to protect (perfect) over time. Questions of race and gender were unresolved. No woman's signature graced the original document — although we can assume that there were founding mothers whispering smarter things in the ears of the founding fathers. (Applause.) I mean, that's almost certain.
>
> And one reason many workplaces still have outdated policies is because women only account for three percent of the CEOs at Fortune 500 companies. One reason we're actually refighting long-settled battles over women's rights is because women occupy fewer than one in five seats in Congress.

'Barack Obama, the first female president'

anthony · 15 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'He speculated that “Congress would get a lot more done” if more women were there. He speculated that, although no women signed the Constitution, “we can assume that there were founding mothers whispering smarter things in the ears of the founding fathers.”

He announced that “more and more women are out-earning their husbands. You’re more than half of our college graduates and master’s graduates and PhDs.” He told them that they are “poised to make this the century where women shape not only their own destiny but the destiny of this nation and of this world.”

And they can look good doing it! “You can be stylish and powerful, too,” he said. “That’s Michelle’s advice.” The first lady, the couple’s two daughters, and the president’s mother and mother-in-law had recurring roles as “strong, remarkable women” in the speech.'

UK: woman attacks slow cyclist

Minuteman · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Police in the UK have released video of a gumboot-clad woman attacking a cyclist on a quiet country lane in a bid to track her down.

The video shows the redheaded woman repeatedly kicking and striking the man after his slow pedalling held her car up.
...
The woman herself brought the attack to the attention of police, claiming she was the victim but giving them false contact details.'

Wrong man was executed in Texas, probe says

Minuteman · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'He was the spitting image of the killer, had the same first name and was near the scene of the crime at the fateful hour: Carlos DeLuna paid the ultimate price and was executed in place of someone else in Texas in 1989, a report out Tuesday found.

...

"Everything went wrong in this case," Liebman said.

That night Lopez called police for help twice to protect her from an individual with a switchblade.

"They could have saved her, they said 'we made this arrest immediately' to overcome the embarrassment," Liebman said.

...

"Unfortunately, the flaws in the system that wrongfully convicted and executed DeLuna -- faulty eyewitness testimony, shoddy legal representation and prosecutorial misconduct -- continue to send innocent men to their death today," read a statement that accompanies the report.'

SAVE Calls on Lawmakers to Stand Tall for Victims and the Constitution during Upcoming VAWA Vote

Matt · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Teri Stoddard
Email: tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

SAVE Calls on Lawmakers to Stand Tall for Victims and the Constitution during Upcoming VAWA Vote

Washington, DC/May 15, 2012 – A leading victim-advocacy organization is calling on Representatives to support reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act, H.R. 4970. Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) says H.R. 4970 will best help victims of partner abuse and safeguard Constitutional protections.

SAVE urges lawmakers to resist attempts to expand definitions of domestic violence, stalking, and sexual assault. Overly-broad definitions encourage false allegations of abuse and make it harder for true victims to be heard.

Since its passage in 1994, the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) has sparked controversy. The ACLU once termed VAWA's mandatory arrest provisions "repugnant" to the Constitution, and in 2000 the U.S. Supreme Court overturned a VAWA provision designed to provide a federal civil remedy for sex assault cases.

One area of particular controversy centers on VAWA's immigration provisions, which allow a foreign national to claim to be a domestic violence victim without provision of evidence. Under current law, the accused person is deprived of key due process protections and is barred from submitting evidence of immigration fraud. One civil rights expert termed such provisions "Kafka-esque." (http://www.mindingthecampus.com/originals/2012/03/the_new_vawaa_threat_to_college_students.html)

Last year the Senate Judiciary Committee invited testimony from Julie Poner, who was a victim of false allegations made by her former husband from the Czech Republic. Saying she had "suffered unimaginable consequences," Poner lamented the countless men and women "who have lost access to their children, their homes, their jobs, and in some cases their freedom because of false allegations of abuse." (http://www.judiciary.senate.gov/pdf/11-07-13%20Poner%20Testimony.pdf)

"Our nation was founded on due process protections such as the right of the accused to be advised of the charges, to confront his accuser, and to be afforded the opportunity to refute the accusations," notes SAVE spokesman Philip Cook. "But under the existing VAWA, the accused is stripped of these Constitutional protections, affording more rights to the accuser than to the American citizen. This is a slap in the face to notions of justice and fairness."

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is a victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to partner violence: www.saveservices.org.

Strauss-Kahn seeks at least USD 1 million from maid

Matt · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Disgraced ex-IMF chief Dominique Strauss-Kahn is seeking more than USD 1 million in a countersuit against the New York hotel maid whose accusation of sexual assault last year brought down his glittering political career.

The countersuit, signed Monday and made public Tuesday, seeks a minimum of USD 1 million, plus legal costs and undetermined punitive damages from the maid, Nafissatou Diallo, who is accused of "falsely and maliciously asserting" she was attacked.

The 18-page document accuses Diallo of malicious prosecution, abuse of process, false imprisonment, defamation and intentional infliction of emotional distress.

"Ms Diallo participated in the commencement and maintenance of a baseless criminal prosecution," the suit said, "and in doing so intended to injure Mr Strauss-Kahn."

The suit was the French politician's latest attempt to turn the tables on Diallo and recover from a scandal that started a year ago when Diallo accused him of forcing her into oral sex when she went to clean his luxury hotel room.'

SAVE: Many Americans are Disenchanted with Violence Against Women Act:

Matt · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Teri Stoddard
Email: tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

Many Americans are Disenchanted with Violence Against Women Act:

SAVE Calls on Lawmakers to Heed Citizen Concerns

WASHINGTON / May 16, 2012 – A recent U.S. News poll found a strong majority of persons are opposed to the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) in its current form. Featuring pro and con position statements by leading advocates and elected officials, the poll found that U.S. News readers reject the current VAWA law by a two-to-one margin: http://www.usnews.com/debate-club/should-the-violence-against-women-act-be-reauthorized

Laura Wood, a writer at TheThinkingHousewife.com, argued the "Violence Against Women Act is an egregious departure from justice and common sense." Two out of three poll responders agreed with Wood's critique.

More remarkable were the responses to the statement of Janice Crouse of Concerned Women for America. About 80% of respondents agreed with Crouse's contention that VAWA "victimizes both women and men while building a feminist power structure." Only 20% disagreed with her view.

Seizing the other side of the debate was Deborah Tucker, director of the National Center on Domestic and Sexual Violence, who claimed the "Violence Against Women Act must be reauthorized because it is working." Readers roundly rejected that line of reasoning, with 1530 persons opposed and only 803 in favor.

U.S. News readers did not appear to be swayed by consideration of partisan politics. Democratic senator Max Baucus (MT) and Republican senator John Cornyn (TX) both argued in favor of VAWA's reauthorization. But over two-thirds of survey respondents rejected the senators' positions.

Least popular was the position taken by Delaware attorney general Joseph Biden, son of vice president Joe Biden. Only 22% of respondents agreed with Biden's stance that the Violence Against Women Act should be reauthorized in its current form.

Over 2,400 persons participated in the online poll. While the U.S. News poll respondents likely are not representative of the American population, it does represent the largest survey of its kind ever conducted.

"Lawmakers need to pay heed to the views of average Americans, not the shrill claims of industry advocates," notes SAVE spokesman Philip W. Cook. "In this election year, many men and women have witnessed first-hand the harmful effects of an out-of-control abuse industry. Voters will be satisfied with nothing less than reforms that bring a halt to the widespread waste and fraud."

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments supports the reauthorization of VAWA, provided key reforms are included in the new law.

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is a victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to partner abuse: www.saveservices.org

'Misandry = to Misogyny'

anthony · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A BBC commenter and religious leftist named John Bell went on a sexist tirade that was remarkable in its vitriol. He makes a point that people will do in groups what they would never do as individuals, which has long been known as mob psychology. No argument there. But the biogoted sexism is really over the top. From “John Bell’s Screed Thought For the Day:”

> Because we live in a broadly patriarchal society, we should not be surprised that the culture which brought about the worldwide financial meltdown was overwhelmingly masculine. But consider also that the people who are most vocal in denying human responsibility for the disastrous effects of climate change are mostly male.
> ...

Sex, Lies and Rinsing guys

Broadsword · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This documentary featuring these disgusting women aired on UK TV recently, you can watch it here. Article here. Excerpt:

'In the grips of recession most people are having to forget their material desires. But a new breed of women dubbed 'rinsers', are taking to the internet to find rich men who will fund their expensive shopping habits.

Featured in a Channel 4 documentary 'Sex, Lies and Rinsing Guys' Jeanette Worthington, Danica Thrall and Hollie Capper reveal how they use their feminine charms to get thousands of pounds worth of goods from wealthy Twitter and Facebook followers.

They never meet their admirers in person and merely offer virtual friendship in exchange for designer products. As 33-year-old Liverpudlian Jeanette notes: 'I do nice things for my friends and I don’t expect them to have sex with me."

VAWA's Mandatory Arrest Policies: Unconstitutional, Wasteful . . . and Lethal

anthony · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Republicans are NOT waging a "war on women," but the Democrats are definitely waging a "war on men." Case in point is the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA).

First passed during the Clinton Administration, VAWA is now up for reauthorization. Democrats in the House of Representatives have presented their version of the VAWA reauthorization – H.R. 4271. No surprise. It's loaded with expensive new programs based on radical feminist ideology.
...
The problem with mandatory arrest policies is they silence victims and keep them from calling the police for help. As a result, mandatory arrest policies have resulted in a 60% increase in partner homicides — according to a Harvard University study. All this at a cost of $25 million in taxpayer money.

The radical feminists like mandatory arrest — throw more men in jail, break up families, and push children deeper into the cycle of welfare dependency.'

"Pass the GOP version of VAWA"

anthony · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'In a May 8 press release, the National Organization For Women condemned the Republican version of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), which was passed by the HouseJudiciary Committee on a mostly party-line vote.

Among other provisions, the Republican version provides greater protection and services for boys and men along with more inclusive “gender neutral” language than does the Democratic version, which presumes that only men are violent and only women are innocent victims (“Domestic-violence law advanced by House panel,” Web, May 8).

A few days before the vote, the Dallas Morning News and Dallas TV stations reported that a naked and blood-covered Cristal Paulette Richardson was charged with castrating and then murdering Cedric Lamont Owens by slitting his throat and stabbing him multiple times in the chest. In this heinous act Ms. Richardson joins at least three other women implicated in castration cases that received media attention: Lorena Bobbitt, Monju Bengum and Catherine Kieu Becker.'

Violence Against Women Bill Fails to Address Fraud

anthony · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Senate is poised to consider S. 1925 this week, the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). Despite the law's good intentions, more recent reauthorizations—including the bill before the Senate—are seriously flawed and veer away from the legislation's original goals of protecting vulnerable women.

As Heritage research fellow David Muhlhausen and Independent Women's Forum visiting fellow Christina Villegas explain in a recent Heritage Backgrounder, the problems with S. 1925 are significant. In addition to broadening the classes of covered victims to include men and prisoners and expanding existing, duplicative programs, S. 1925 fails to rectify VAWA's inadequate accountability measures—while increasing direct spending by more than $100 million.

As recent investigations by the Department of Justice (DOJ) have revealed, disturbing instances of fraud and embezzlement of some Office on Violence Against Women grants have marred the original law's intentions. ...'

Emotions linger for former Illinois State wrestler

anthony · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kevin Bracken's wrestling career took him all over the world, but he always had a soft spot in his heart for those guys from his college days. That's why it was so hard for him when Illinois State called and wanted to add his name to the Redbirds' Hall of Fame. Hard feelings don't necessarily fade in time, especially with someone as stubborn as a wrestler.

Part of Bracken wanted to tell his old school where to stick that award. In 1995, Bracken's final year of college, Illinois State cut its wrestling program. Strapped with financial constraints and Title IX compliance issues, the school chose to drop wrestling and men's soccer and add a women's soccer team.
...

There are 79 wrestling programs left in Division I, down from the 146 that were around three decades ago, when Bracken was a kid in Illinois dreaming of competing in college. This, Title IX critics say, is what is wrong with a piece of legislation that promotes proportionality. It created opportunities but took away other athletes' chances to compete.
...
"How could you hate something that's creating opportunities and helping people?" he said. "But how could you celebrate something if it's also hurting people?"'

F&F: Shared Parenting Teeters in the Balance

Matt · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here is your chance to stand tall and grab a big victory for the shared parenting movement. But it is imperative that you act immediately.

Everything you need to know follows.

Background:
Both the Minnesota State Senate and Minnesota House have passed bills requiring that each parent get a minimum of 35% of the parenting time—including during temporary orders. Any of you who have been through the custody process knows that temporary orders are crucial—months to years later, they have a way of turning into permanent orders.'

Cannes' female-free directors line-up criticized

Matt · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Notice that anything that has 'glory' attached to it in any way that just happens to be all-male is immediately pounced upon by feminists as evidence that there is an evil conspiracy going on to exclude women from its ranks. But anything that happens to be all-female is itself touted as glorious for that reason alone, and no excuses are to be made for that state of affairs. Men are being excluded? Not only fine, but desirable-- nay, it's justice! Excerpt:

'CANNES, France (AP) — At this year's Cannes Film Festival, there are directors in their 30s and their 80s, directors from Europe and North America, directors from Asia and the Middle East — but no women.

Not, at least, among the 22 films competing for the coveted Palme D'Or, an absence that has drawn criticism from feminists — and a defense from the festival's artistic director. Thierry Fremaux argues it's not his fault that filmmaking remains primarily "a male sport."

"I don't select films because the film is directed by a man, a woman, white, black, young, an old man," said Fremaux, who has led the festival since 2001. "I select films because I think they deserve to be in selection.

"It wouldn't be very nice to select a film because the film is not good but it is directed by a woman," he added.
...
Research by the Center for the Study of Women in Television and Film at San Diego State University found that just 5 percent of last year's 250 highest-grossing films were directed by women, a lower level than a decade earlier.

Some have suggested forms of affirmative action, or quotas, for female filmmakers, but directors oppose the idea.

"I would absolutely hate it if my film got selected because I was a woman," said British director Andrea Arnold, whose films "Red Road" and "Fish Tank" both won prizes at Cannes. "It's true the world over in the world of film, there are just not that many women film directors. That's a great pity and a great disappointment."'

Report: Congo mutineer forces 149 more boys, young men to fight

Matt · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A general who defected from the Congolese army last month has forced at least 149 boys and young men to join his mutinying forces, repeating the alleged acts for which he has long been wanted by the International Criminal Court, according to a new report from Human Rights Watch. At least 48 were under 18.

"They tied my hands with a rope. All of us were tied up. Then they marched us to the hill," a 17-year-old student told the human rights group, recounting an episode in which at least 32 high school students were rounded up. "They told us we would fight for Bosco."

Bosco Ntaganda has been wanted by the International Criminal Court for recruiting and using child soldiers while commanding a rebel group during Congo's civil war. Yet after the war ended, Ntaganda was brought into the army and ultimately promoted to general.'

White House Threatens To Veto House GOP's Violence Against Women Act

anthony · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON -- The White House issued a press release on Tuesday threatening to veto the House GOP's version of the Violence Against Women Act reauthorization, which the House is scheduled to vote on Wednesday afternoon.

"The Administration strongly opposes H.R. 4970, a bill that would undermine the core principles of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA)," the White House wrote. "H.R. 4970 rolls back existing law and removes long-standing protections for victims of domestic violence and sexual assault -- crimes that predominately affect women. If the President is presented with H.R. 4970, his senior advisors would recommend that he veto the bill."

...

The White House also noted in its press release that the GOP version of VAWA "does not include important improvements to the Clery Act found in the Senate-passed bill that would address the high rates of dating violence and sexual assault" in schools and "weakens critical new provisions in the Senate-passed bill that would improve safety for victims living in subsidized housing."'

Obama targets women's health, contraception coverage in new Web

anthony · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. There is no mention of a father in this video except for a two second clip (1:37) of a man putting a backpack on a young girl. Excerpt:

'Homing in on women's health issues, President Obama's campaign released a new Web video Wednesday afternoon targeting female voters, spotlighting the president's support for contraception coverage through health care policies.

The video, titled, "Letters to the President: The Dreams of Our Daughters," spotlights the life of one mother and her two daughters. The mother reads her voice-over as a letter to Obama about her concerns as a mother raising two daughters.'

House passes GOP-sponsored domestic violence bill despite Obama veto threat

anthony · 16 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On a 222-205 vote, the House passed a GOP-sponsored bill to renew the Violence Against Women Act, an 18-year-old law written by then-Sen. Joe Biden that dedicates federal resources to assist victims of domestic violence.

Wednesday's vote puts the House at odds once again with the Democratic-controlled Senate, which approved its version of the bill last month on a bipartisan 68-31 vote. The Senate bill renews the act for five years, authorizes $659.3 million in annual spending and contains measures to help victims of sexual assault, improve emergency housing services for victims and consolidate some grant programs to make them more efficient.
...

Republican men and women both abhor violence against women," said Rep. Virginia Foxx, R-N.C., who supported the House version. "In fact, I would say we are more concerned about violence against women, because we want to see those women served better and we want to see the money spent better. ... We are strengthening the Violence Against Women Act, not weakening the act."
...
The Republican bill was endorsed by the National Coalition for Men, whose argument in support of the legislation appeared to undercut the GOP claim that the Violence Against Women Act's language is so broad that it already covers almost all groups.

In a letter to lawmakers, the men's rights group said the bill's opponents "loudly assert that VAWA serves all people, which is absurd given the name of the Act."

"Opposing versions, by omission and lack of specificity, generally exclude men, particularly heterosexual men, regardless of specious arguments to the contrary," the letter read.'

Huffington Post: 'House VAWA Bill Picks Up Unhelpful Ally: National Coalition For Men'

anthony · 17 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON -- The House Republican version of the Violence Against Women Act reauthorization, which has been decried by women's rights groups as a dramatic rollback of protections for domestic violence victims, has picked up the backing of a group that may prove to be an unhelpful ally: the National Coalition For Men.

The coalition argues, in a Tuesday letter to members of Congress that was forwarded to HuffPost, that the Republican bill protects both men and women, while the original VAWA aimed to protect only women.

"Those opposing H.R. 4970 loudly assert that VAWA serves all people, which is absurd on its face given the name of the Act. Opposing versions, by omission and lack of specificity, generally exclude men, particularly heterosexual men, regardless of specious arguments to the contrary," states the letter from coalition President Harry Crouch.
...

"It's almost like people want to say we want to go out and abuse women. It's the most ridiculous thing I've ever heard. It's total idiocy to see an intelligent person elected to Congress stand up and look across the aisle and accuse someone of being in favor of opening the doors to abuse for more people," he said.'

Outrage Grows After Safeway Suspends Monterey Worker Who Stopped Attack

redwoodwriter · 17 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Safeway employee intervenes in domestic violence case and gets fired. Everything that men are supposed to do is getting to be illegal, immoral, or ill-advised. Excerpt:

'DEL REY OAKS, Monterey County (CBS 5) — Safeway's suspension of a Monterey County employee after stopping a domestic assault has become a public relations headache for the grocery chain.

Police said Ryan Young, a meat clerk at the Del Rey Oaks location, intervened when he saw Quyen Van Tran beating his pregnant girlfriend in the store last month.

"If it was their wife who was pregnant or their daughter who was pregnant who was being attacked, would they want someone to step in and help them?" Young said.'

House Approves Violence Against Women Act: SAVE Applauds Long-Overdue Reform Measures

Matt · 17 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Teri Stoddard
Email: tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

WASHINGTON / May 17, 2012 – The House of Representatives has passed the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act by a 222-205 margin. Responding to public discontent, H.R. 4970 contains a number of measures designed to curb widespread waste and fraud in the domestic violence field.

A recent U.S. News poll found a strong majority of persons are opposed to the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) in its current form: http://www.usnews.com/debate-club/should-the-violence-against-women-act-be-reauthorized. Many women have questioned the effectiveness and fairness of the existing VAWA law: http://womenagainstvawa.org/wp-content/uploads/2012/03/Flyer-VAWA-Pro-Woman.pdf

Reforms contained H.R. 4970 include strong accountability measures, gender-inclusive language, and provisions to stem fraudulent claims of abuse by immigrants. The current VAWA law has invited immigration fraud by not allowing the US citizen accused of abuse to submit evidence that could refute the accusation.

The White House played an active role in opposing the bill. The Obama Administration issued a Statement of Administration Policy on Tuesday stating it would veto any bill that was modeled on H.R. 4970.

During Wednesday's floor debate, sponsor Sandy Adams (R-FL) withstood numerous challenges. When informed by John Conyers (D-MI) that numerous organizations opposed her bill, she retorted, "Shame on them!"

Following passage of the bill, a number of established domestic violence organizations have reacted with anger and implied threats. The National Task Force to End Sexual and Domestic Violence Against Women called the bill "dangerous." The National Organization for Women charged that Representatives who voted for the bill "will be judged in the public arena and at the polls in November."

According to SAVE spokesman Philip W. Cook, "H.R. 4970 certainly is not a perfect bill. Still, passage of the House measure is a victory for victims who have been refused service in the past. It removes most sex discriminatory language. It is also a victory for taxpayers who are tired of the ongoing reports of waste and fraud."

SAVE thanks the many organizations and individuals who have supported VAWA reform efforts. SAVE will continue to work for ways to reform and strengthen the Violence Against Women Act: http://www.saveservices.org/pvra.

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is a victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to partner abuse: www.saveservices.org

Child Support: Enslaving Black Men

Anonymous · 17 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, on my facebook page, A Sister asked me if I am “for” or “against” child support. I posted a picture, of a Black woman holding a wheelbarrow full of money, and the words above the picture said “Child Support, Way Better Than A Dad”, then I proceeded to answer the question. What I am “for” is choosing wisely when deciding to reproduce and deciding who will reproduce you. What I am “for” is adults being mature if the relationship ends so that the child won’t suffer, become molded in the bitterness of its mother, and caught in an emotional tug of war. What I am “against” is women hustling their wombs SPECIFICALLY for the sole purpose of collecting a child support check. What I am “against” is child support being limited or perceived as just financial assistance. Child support means to support your child mentally, emotionally, spiritually, being there for events, listening to them, encouraging them, showing them love and teaching them lessons so they won’t have to learn lessons in the streets.

What I am “against” is Black Men not even given a chance to WILLINGLY give, contribute and add to the life of their child or children, before the Mother of his child (or children) runs down to the overseer to handcuff him with a child support order. I am “against” Brothers being violated in such a system that was designed to destroy the Black Family and children being treated as assets and property of the Mother, with no regard to the Father.
...

Again there are so many options for Single Mothers, but for a Single Man there are limited options. He will hear BE A MAN ABOUT IT! As if he is attempting to be anything else. Sometimes as women, I think that we have become desensitized to the pain and struggles that our Brothers go through. Now with MOST men, do you think they WANT to be shiftless? Do you think that not being able to provide for their family REALLY makes them feel good? Do you think that for most MEN being labeled as a dead beat dad is something they proudly wear like a badge of honor? I mean, let’s step out of our stilettos, and try to slide our feet into his shoes.'

Male Student Suspended for Wearing a Skirt

Matt · 18 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Fine for girls to wear jeans and button-down shirts, but boys in skirts? Nah. Story here. Excerpt:

'A male student was suspended from a southern Maryland school for wearing girls' clothing, and the incident has sparked a big controversy in Calvert County.

Warren Evans, an openly bisexual student at Calvert High School, was suspended for violating the school's dress code by wearing a skirt.

Evans says the school is discriminating against him and does not believe he violated any dress code.'

House Approves Violence Against Women Act: SAVE Applauds Long-Overdue Reform Measures

Matt · 18 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

WASHINGTON / May 17, 2012 - The House of Representatives has passed the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act by a 222-205 margin. Responding to public discontent, H.R. 4970 contains a number of measures designed to curb widespread waste and fraud in the domestic violence field.

A recent U.S. News poll found a strong majority of persons are opposed to the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) in its current form: http://www.usnews.com/debate-club/should-the-violence-against-women-act-be-reauthorized. Many women have questioned the effectiveness and fairness of the existing VAWA law: http://womenagainstvawa.org/wp-content/uploads/2012/03/Flyer-VAWA-Pro-Woman.pdf

Reforms contained H.R. 4970 include strong accountability measures, gender-inclusive language, and provisions to stem fraudulent claims of abuse by immigrants. The current VAWA law has invited immigration fraud by not allowing the US citizen accused of abuse to submit evidence that could refute the accusation.

The White House played an active role in opposing the bill. The Obama Administration issued a Statement of Administration Policy on Tuesday stating it would veto any bill that was modeled on H.R. 4970.

During Wednesday's floor debate, sponsor Sandy Adams (R-FL) withstood numerous challenges. When informed by John Conyers (D-MI) that numerous organizations opposed her bill, she retorted, "Shame on them!"

Following passage of the bill, a number of established domestic violence organizations have reacted with anger and implied threats. The National Task Force to End Sexual and Domestic Violence Against Women called the bill "dangerous." The National Organization for Women charged that Representatives who voted for the bill "will be judged in the public arena and at the polls in November."

According to SAVE spokesman Philip W. Cook, "H.R. 4970 certainly is not a perfect bill. Still, passage of the House measure is a victory for victims who have been refused service in the past. It removes most sex discriminatory language. It is also a victory for taxpayers who are tired of the ongoing reports of waste and fraud."

SAVE thanks the many organizations and individuals who have supported VAWA reform efforts. SAVE will continue to work for ways to reform and strengthen the Violence Against Women Act: http://www.saveservices.org/pvra.

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is a victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to partner abuse: www.saveservices.org

On YouTube: 'Feminism explained' (Funny)

anthony · 18 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'A feminist accidentally explains her view of the world.'

Graphic film on female sex tourists cheered in Cannes

Matt · 19 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Filled with rationalizations for why certain women are doing what the film shows. Would a film about male sex tourism get such acclaim especially when there is a huge income and class disparity between buyers and sellers? Never, nor should it. So why is this one? You know the answer already. Excerpt:

'A graphic, unflinching look at the delicate interplay of desire, money and power among European women sex tourists and African gigolos hit the screen yesterday in the Cannes contender "Paradise: Love".

Austrian director Ulrich Seidl, who scandalised cinema's top international showcase five years ago with another take on rich and poor and the sex trade, "Import/Export", this time turns his camera on women as the consumers.

"Paradise: Love" stars Margarethe Tiesel as Teresa, a 50-year-old Viennese single mother of an insolent teenage daughter who needs a break from it all, in a breakout performance cheered by audiences here.'

Edward Kruk is a new blogger-correspondent for Psychology Today

Matt · 19 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Blog here. Excerpt:

'It is often assumed, by legal and mental health professionals alike, that when divorcing parents are unable to come to an agreement in regard to parenting arrangements for their children, and remain locked in high conflict, shared parenting is contraindicated. The belief is that children will remain caught in the middle of their parents' conflict, and exposure to ongoing conflict is extremely damaging to children's well-being. In many jurisdictions, there is a legal presumption against shared parenting in high conflict cases. As a result, parents who seek a sole custody arrangement or wish to retain primary caregiving responsibility for their children after divorce often characterize their cases as high conflict. Parents may exaggerate the extent of conflict, or purposefully engage in conflict to resist a court order for shared parenting.

...

In the majority of high conflict divorces, however, violence and abuse are not a factor. The culture of animosity created by litigation and the adversarial sole custody system, however, seems tailor-made to produce the worst possible outcomes when there are two capable parents who wish to continue as primary caregivers, cannot agree on a parenting plan, and are forced to disparage each other in an effort to simply maintain their role as parents. Children's safety in the majority of divorces is best assured when both parents are actively and responsibly involved in their lives, and when social institutions support them in the fulfillment of their parental responsibilities.'

Government study of arrestees' drug use ignores female arrestees

Matt · 19 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I have a hunch they'd find just as high numbers-- if they had bothered to check. Excerpt:

'More than 60 percent of males arrested last year for crimes – felonies and misdemeanors – tested positive for drug use, according to a White House study of arrest data from 10 large cities. For some cities, that surpassed 80 percent.
...
The range was from a low of 64 percent of arrestees who tested positive for drug use in Atlanta to 81 percent in Sacramento, Calif. That's up slightly from 2010 when the range was from 52 percent in Washington to more than 80 percent in both Chicago and Sacramento. It did not evaluate female arrestees.'

Married men and their traditional view of women are holding back equality in the office, claims study

Broadsword · 19 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Working men with stay-at-home wives are a 'pocket of resistance' to equality in the workplace, according to a new study.

After research with hundreds of husbands, the team found those with 'traditional' rather than modern marriages tended to 'view the presence of women in the workplace unfavourably'.

They also found that men with stay-at-home wives - or even 'neo-traditionalists' married to women who worked part-time - thought companies with more women worked 'less smoothly', and found organisations with female bosses 'relatively unattractive'.

And the research paper provides a possible explanation for the so-called 'marzipan layer' - which traps women just below senior jobs: such men 'deny more frequently, qualified female employees opportunities for promotion'.'

Man with 30 kids wants state help to pay his child support

el cid · 19 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This guy is no saint, but if we assume for the sake of argument that all or most of the eleven mothers receive government assistance, why shouldn't the father also receive government assistance to pay his support? Why do we give welfare to moms who can't or won't support their child and jail fathers who can't or won't support their children? Wouldn't helping the man in this case also help his children?

'A 33-year-old man who has fathered 30 kids is asking the state of Tennessee to give him a hand with his child support payments. Desmond Hatchett is having a tough time making ends meet while working a minimum wage job and seeing half of his paycheck get split up between his 11 baby mamas. Incidentally, his score and 10 kids is a record for Knox County, and some of his kids receive as little as $1.49 a month once the money is divvied up. Hatchett last appeared in court in May 2009, when he had a paltry 21 kids to his name and said he had no intention of having more. Somehow, he found a way to add nine more to his legacy, so we're guessing he probably isn't done at 30.'

Campbell Brown: "Obama: Stop Condescending to Women"

anthony · 20 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WHEN I listen to President Obama speak to and about women, he sometimes sounds too paternalistic for my taste. In numerous appearances over the years — most recently at the Barnard graduation — he has made reference to how women are smarter than men. It's all so tired, the kind of fake praise showered upon those one views as easy to impress. As I listen, I am always bracing for the old go-to cliché: "Behind every great man is a great woman."

Some women are smarter than men and some aren't. But to suggest to women that they deserve dominance instead of equality is at best a cheap applause line.

My bigger concern is that in courting women, Mr. Obama's campaign so far has seemed maddeningly off point. His message to the Barnard graduates was that they should fight for a "seat at the table" — the head seat, he made sure to add. He conceded that it's a tough economy, but he told the grads, "I am convinced you are tougher" and "things will get better — they always do."

Hardly reassuring words when you look at the reality. According to the Center for Labor Market Studies at Northeastern University, about 53.6 percent of men and women under the age of 25 who hold bachelor's degrees were jobless or underemployed last year, the most in at least 11 years. According to the Pew Research Center, if we broaden the age group to 18- to 29-year-olds, an estimated 37 percent are unemployed or out of the work force, the highest share in more than three decades.'

About the author: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Campbell_Brown

Equal pay? Not if jobs aren’t really equal

anthony · 21 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Equal Pay Act (EPA) says that men and women who perform jobs requiring equal skill, effort and responsibility should be paid the same. But that doesn’t mean everyone with the same title or similar job responsibilities falls into the same pay category.

Employers can, for example, pay a male employee who has greater financial responsibilities or who handles bigger budgets more than it does a woman who holds a similar position, but manages less money.

Just make sure you can justify the difference, based on the impact on the company’s bottom line.'

Largest compilation of exonerations ever finds over 2,000 falsely convicted over past 23 years

anthony · 21 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — More than 2,000 people who were falsely convicted of serious crimes have been exonerated in the United States in the past 23 years, according to a new archive compiled at two universities.
...
The database compiled and analyzed by the researchers contains information on 873 exonerations for which they have the most detailed evidence. The researchers are aware of nearly 1,200 other exonerations, for which they have less data.

They found that those 873 exonerated defendants spent a combined total of more than 10,000 years in prison, an average of more than 11 years each. Nine out of 10 of them are men and half are African-American.'

Two men sue Royal Caribbean Cruise for imprisonment due to false rape claim

anthony · 21 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'They’re lucky they didn’t get keelhauled.

Two pals who jetted from New York to Florida for a fun-filled cruise say they, instead, spent their weeklong vacation locked in the brig after a fellow passenger falsely accused them of rape.

Eviatar Mor — who was celebrating his 22nd birthday — and buddy David Amsalem, 26, sued Royal Caribbean Cruises yesterday over their grueling getaway in a “small, windowless cell” on one of the company’s luxury liners.

Their Manhattan federal-court filing seeks at least $100 million in damages each on grounds including false arrest and imprisonment, assault and battery, and “outrageous conduct causing emotional distress.”'

More Men Enter Fields Dominated by Women

Matt · 21 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mr. Alquicira, 21, graduated from high school in a desolate job market, one in which the traditional opportunities, like construction and manufacturing, for young men without a college degree had dried up. After career counselors told him that medical fields were growing, he borrowed money for an eight-month training course. Since then, he has had no trouble finding jobs that pay $12 or $13 an hour.

He gave little thought to the fact that more than 90 percent of dental assistants and hygienists are women. But then, young men like Mr. Alquicira have come of age in a world of inverted expectations, where women far outpace men in earning degrees and tend to hold jobs that have turned out to be, by and large, more stable, more difficult to outsource, and more likely to grow.

“The way I look at it,” Mr. Alquicira explained, without a hint of awareness that he was turning the tables on a time-honored feminist creed, “is that anything, basically, that a woman can do, a guy can do.”'

Health experts: Routine PSA tests for prostate cancer not good for health

anthony · 21 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than 33,000 American men die of prostate cancer each year. And, every year, 20 million get the PSA test to detect the disease early. The recommendation is already causing a lot of criticism. Dr. Jon LaPook reported on the issue.

For 20 years, the message has been the same: Get a PSA test every year or two, detect prostate cancer early -- and save your life. Dr. Michael Lefevre helped lead the panel that said the message was wrong.

"The problem is that in contrast to the small benefits, a significant number of men will be harmed by the test and treatments that follow prostate cancer screening," he said to CBS News.'

Woman accused of 'having sex with' boyfriend's 7-YO son

Anonymous · 22 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WINTON PLACE — A 20-year-old woman is accused of having sex with the 7-year-old son of her boyfriend.

Alicia Gaston of North Fairmount confessed to engaging in sexual intercourse with the child about 8 p.m. on April 10, 2011 in the 200 block of Craft Street in Winton Place, Cincinnati police said. She faces one count of rape.

Hamilton County Job and Family Services said they were unaware of the incident, or why it took so long for the case to be prosecuted.

Gaston was ordered to stay away from the boy when she appeared in Hamilton County Municipal Court today. Judge Lisa Allen set her bond at $75,000.'

Sen. Gillibrand pushes bill that targets gender pay disparity

anthony · 22 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'STATEN ISLAND, N.Y. -- With women nationally still earning 77 cents for every dollar a man makes -- amounting to a $113 weekly wage gap on Staten Island -- U.S. Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand today renewed her push for passage of a bill to close corporate "loopholes" in the Equal Pay Act, which has been the law-of-the-land for more than four decades.

"Women make up more than half the country's population and more than half the workforce," Ms. Gillibrand (D-N.Y.) said during a conference call with reporters on the Paycheck Fairness Act. "Women are out-earning men in college degrees and advanced degrees. But ... men are still out-earning women at work."
...
She said the Paycheck Fairness Act: Would mandate that employers prove any pay disparity is job related; would prohibit employers from retaliating against employees who share salary information with co-workers; strengthen punitive and compensatory damages; require the U.S. Department of Labor to improve outreach to employers to eliminate pay disparities; enhance the collection of wage information to address pay disparities, and create grant programs to strengthen the negotiation skills of girls and women.'

Gloria Allred: Ambulance Chaser of 'Feminism'

anthony · 22 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So why do we feel so dubious? There's a growing disconnect between what she says and the cases she takes, for example, this "too hot" nonsense. Can a lawyer call herself a feminist or a pioneer of social justice if she appears to be primarily fighting on behalf of women (or men) who want a payout for some perceived trumped-up injustice, or who have made poor decisions and gotten involved in questionable things and want to evade punishment by the law? Feminism and "social equality of the sexes" requires accountability for our actions; we can't rely on the excuse that just because we're women we've been discriminated against and therefore don't have to own up to mistakes or pay for our crimes. It's also not using sex to make someone else pay—that seems the reverse of feminism, actually.
...
The media laps up beefs both in the courtroom and out of it. And if we're living in a world of painfully obvious self-promotion in which everyone's aching for their own reality show, Gloria Allred may be the pre-eminent attorney for that time. But that hardly means she's a feminist, or even a feminist lawyer. Maybe she was, once; maybe she still is, but all we have is our perception, and at this point, she looks more like an ambulance chaser for feminism. A woman who fights in the name of feminism to focus the media on unimportant topics (with the benefit of getting attached to another "high-profile" case) when we should be discussing things that matter is not really a feminist at all: That's called an opportunist.'

Men’s Rights Association Requests a Ban on Baek Ji Young’s ‘Good Boy’ Song

Matt · 22 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A men’s rights association in Korea, Man of Korea, has filed an official request to seek the distribution ban of Baek Ji Young’s recently released title song, GoodBoy.

The group filed the motion against Baek Ji Young’s Good Boy on grounds the song lyrics belittled men.

A representative for Man of Korea said, “Baek Ji Young’s Good Boy contains contents about an older women domesticating a younger man. That expression, like that of a dog and its master, demeans men.”
...
The representative said the expressions used were inappropriate saying, “We also believe in freedom of expression but can you say it’s the same freedom of expression [if the song’s lyrics] changed the gender point of view? Any normal and healthy male will feel serious displeasure at the song.”'

Women are 'happier and less stressed than overworked men' says OECD

Anonymous · 23 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women are happier and less stressed than overworked men, according to a survey of lifestyles in 34 countries.

Men living in the world's most advanced nations work longer hours and earn higher wages, but are more likely to be exposed to danger and have a lower life expectancy.

But while women might score higher on measures of happiness, they still spend twice as much time as men doing housework - an average extra of two-and-a-half hour each day.
...
Researchers have now, for the first time, broken down the results into age and gender as well as by country.
...
Women across the 34 nations surveyed spend an average of 279 minutes per day carrying out housework or caring for children or the elderly, compared with 131 minutes each day for men.

British men are almost three times more likely to be working 'very long hours' when compared to women.'

Dr. Peggy Drexler: 'The Kids Are All Right: Gay Parents Raising Children'

anthony · 23 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Much of the concern for the children of two-mom families has centered specifically on boys. The thinking goes if one mom raising a boy is trouble, two moms must be double trouble. Unfortunately boys on average have seemed, especially in recent years, prey to confusion, resentment, and destructiveness -- something credited to the rising proportion of males being reared in fatherless homes. If only fathers were more fatherly, we are told, boys would learn to be good men, a subject I explored in my book Raising Boys Without Men. People want to know: How will boys learn to become men? Where will they find their role models? Will they grow up to be gay?

Here's the truth: "Boyness" is inherent. It doesn't have to be instilled, or taught. The boys I encountered in my work devised boyhoods using not just social cues, but what seemed like innate male-identity-building talents. They rode skateboards, they turned sticks into swords, toast into guns, they were leaders on sports teams. No one taught them to do these things. They just had it in them. And, in fact, all the research has reported children of gay parents feel less bound, less restricted, by gender stereotypes than those raised in straight households. They were freer to pursue a wide range of interests. There were no "boy things," no "girl things." Just kid things. That's key.'

Tell Forbes Magazine: Correct the DV Misinformation, End the Misandry

Matt · 23 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

In the May 22 Forbes Magazine article entitled"How Some Men Are Upending Domestic Violence Laws to Scam an Advantage in Divorce" Jeff Landers, a financial adviser, helps sell a book by a once-victim who warns women that abusive men are misusing domestic violence laws to falsely accuse and get DV convictions against their wives.

While we have compassion for the author of the featured book, her claims do not match the research. It's not women, but men who are more likely to be falsely accused of abuse. It's not men, but women who are more likely to make the false allegation.

2011 Nationwide False Allegations Phone Survey Results:
* Three-quarters of the falsely accused persons were male.
* Nearly seven in 10 of the accusers were female.

Lander's article is a misrepresentation of false allegations of domestic violence and DV arrests. In his quest to "exclusively advise affluent women throughout the United States before, during, and after divorce," Landry and Forbes Magazine are spreading misinformation, promoting fear and profiting from misandry.

We do not think this is acceptable! And we hope that you agree.

Please write or call Forbes Magazine and demand that they publish an article that refutes this misinformation.

Contact Forbes magazine:
Email: readers-at-forbes.com
Phone: (800) 295-0893

Tell Forbes: "Correct the misinformation on domestic violence and end the misandry!"

Feel free to suggest they visit SAVE for accurate facts.

Please, contact Forbes right now.

Sincerely,

Teri C. Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments

Man sues ex-fiancée after she breaks off engagement

el cid · 24 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I say good for him. Excerpt:

'After his ex-fiancée jilted him before they reached the altar, a Manhattan man made his own vow: I sue.

Consulting firm executive Steven Silverstein, 29, filed a lawsuit in Manhattan Supreme Court Tuesday seeking a court ruling to make former fiancée Kendra Platt-Lee pay him back for costs related to their planned wedding and her portion of the rent from two apartments the couple shared over the course of their relationship.

“I don’t think that I owe him any money at all,” Platt-Lee told NBC News from her home in San Diego. “I’m just your normal girl who fell out of love with somebody, and I didn’t feel it was right in my heart. I just didn’t feel I wanted to get married anymore so I broke it off. I just wanted to break up with somebody and move on, and it turned out that he just wants to drag this out.”

Silverstein and his attorney declined any comment beyond the lawsuit.'

Victory for schoolboy, 13, who went to class in a skirt

Anonymous · 25 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

Wearing his sister's skirt to school certainly got Chris Whitehead noticed.

Now it has also secured a nobler aim – and forced his school into a climbdown over its ban on shorts.

Chris, 13, made headlines with his outrageous method of protest at being prevented from wearing shorts in hot weather.

He brought national scrutiny to the uniform policy at Impington Village College, Cambridgeshire, when he turned up for lessons in a knee-length skirt last year.

He claimed it was unfair that girls were allowed to wear skirts while boys were banned from wearing shorts.'

New: Male Positive Meetup Group (Denver/Boulder)

mens_issues · 25 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The Male Positive Meetup Group (Denver/Boulder) is intended for both men and women who would like to promote positive images of and attitudes toward men and boys. With the proliferation of negative stories about males in the mainstream media coupled with anti-male attitudes in general society, a group like this is a much needed refuge for those seeking an alternative.

"Male postitive" doesn't necessarily mean female negative; it just starts with the assumption that maleness is intrinsically a valuable thing (as is femaleness, which it complements). Building on that principle, this group intends to encourage like minded individuals to meet in person to help create a supportive and encouraging environment for males, both within the group and the community in general.

The web address for the meetup group is here:

http://www.meetup.com/Male-Positive-Meetup-Group/

Steve Van Valkenburg
Group Founder

Onetime top football prospect exonerated after rape accuser recants

anthony · 25 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LONG BEACH, Calif. – The kidnap-rape conviction of a once-promising prep football star was dismissed Thursday following a recantation by his accuser.

Brian Banks collapsed in sobs on the counsel table during a court hearing where a prosecutor quickly conceded the decade-old case and moved for the dismissal.

In the summer of 2002, Banks' future looked bright: He was a 17-year-old high school football star being heavily recruited by a number of colleges. But in a single day that changed with the accusations of kidnapping and rape by a female student.

He maintained there was no rape and their sexual contact was consensual, but his lawyer urged him to plead no contest rather than risk a sentence of 41 years to life in prison if convicted. He followed the advice and went to prison for six years, shattering his dreams of gridiron glory.'

F&F: Don’t Grill the Hot Dog That Grills Dads

Matt · 25 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Oscar Mayer ad campaign is “everything a man could wish for. The wife in the series is smart, energetic, decisive, sensible and cute, and she finally says ‘Yes.’ Unfortunately, when she finally says ‘Yes,’ it’s not what you might hope for; it’s for Oscar Mayer hot dogs for dinner,” said Ned Holstein, MD, MS, Founder and Chair, Fathers and Families.

He continued, “And here’s an advance warning: the Dad is everything you have come to expect from television dads: infantile, inept, narcissistic, befuddled, sloppy and balding, stupid, insecure, and timidly subservient to his wife. I envy the skill that Hollywood and Madison Avenue bring to their work; it takes something near genius to convey all that in a 30 second spot. But they manage to do it.”'

Today's all-action film heroine is tough and putting leading men to the sword

Anonymous · 26 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Then entertainment caught up with feminism, and along came a slew of remarkable female roles: Ripley in Alien, Sarah Connor in Terminator, Disney's Belle and Mulan. They set a precedent for hundreds of heroines who were not only as intelligent and strong-willed as the men in the story, but more so. Less nuanced than the heroine, less intelligent and usually weaker, the conventional hero seems now to be in greater danger than the Siberian tiger.

Next week sees the release of Universal Pictures' Snow White and the Huntsman. Instead of a mild little thing who keeps house for seven dwarves and charms woodland animals (and the prince) with her sweet singing and gentleness, here we meet an action heroine who is far more appealing to contemporary tastes. Dressed in shining armour, the new Snow White will not be doing any housework; and it is she – rather than the uncouth Huntsman of the title – who will call the shots against her wicked stepmother by going into battle.
...
All of this is good fun for girls, but rather less so for boys. As yet another feisty female bounces on to the screen, eyes blazing and bow twanging, our sons have some excuse for grunting dismally and returning to the all-male worlds of Call of Duty or an old Arnold Schwarzenegger DVD.'

Democratic Rep. Claims Victimizing Women is 'as American as Apple Pie'

MR · 26 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Democratic congresswoman claimed this week that victimizing women is practically a right of passage in the United States, and that doing so is even “as American as apple pie.”

Rep. Gwen Moore (D-Wis.), a victim of abuse herself, was recounting her reasoning for voting against the “fake” Violence Against Women Act reauthorization during a call in to Current TV’s “Talking Liberally with Stephanie Miller.”

“Victimization of women is as American as apple pie. I think people accept it and men’s right [of] passage, men’s rights as boyfriends and husbands,” Moore said.'

Prosecution of false accuser in rape case seen as difficult

Matt · 26 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A day after a former high school football star had his rape conviction dismissed, attention focused on the woman who recanted the sexual assault claim she made 10 years ago.

Wanetta Gibson was a high school sophomore when she accused Brian Banks of raping her at Long Beach Poly High School. She and her family sued the school, receiving a $750,000 settlement, and Banks spent five years in prison after pleading no contest to forcible rape.

Even though a judge tossed out the rape charge Thursday, it remains far from certain whether Gibson, 24, will face any consequences.'

WILL magazine April Volume 1 Issue 9 now available

Matt · 26 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Issue downloadable from here. It contains an article on how men can reduce stress in their lives. I would say though the advice is probably just as applicable to women.

Honoring the Exchange of Life for Life

Matt · 27 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The face never comes into view in my dreams, but I know it's him. The twisted mouth is agape, molded in an eternal gasp of shock. The lower half of his body is gone, and there's a black hole where his guts should have been. When Chevy was blown from the Stryker hatch, he took flight for an incalculable measure of time before landing on the slat armor of his vehicle. His uniform was blown off, which never happens in the movies. But he was whole, as complete and pure as the day he was born, I'm told. I never got the chance to see for myself before he disappeared into a body bag. The continuing ambush prevented that.

Memorial Day comes early and often for the men in my infantry battalion. During the unit's second tour in Iraq in 2006 and 2007, we lost 21 men from three companies and attachments. We lost 17 in the span of four months during the Battle of Baquba.'

Anonymous submissions disabled due to spam

Matt · 27 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

MANN Readers,

Regrettably, we've had to disable anonymous submissions due to loads of spamming to the site that started a few days ago. I waited to see if it would stop after a time but it hasn't; it only got worse. Somewhere out there, someone figured out how to automate spam advertising submissions to our site and for this reason, we all have to deal with the inconvenience of logging in first before submitting a story.

If you need a userid for the site to submit a story, just ask for one by sending a request to newaccounts@mensactivism.org. Again, sorry for the inconvenience, but spammers have made the web that much harder a place to enjoy the convenience it used to have.

Matt

'A shed of one's own'

anthony · 27 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We need to talk about men and we don't do so. Quite often, because of the cultures of both modern men and women, it's because we can't.

Even to suggest that there are issues among men that might need talking through is a minor heresy: being a white male is like playing a computer game on "easy mode" – men are the patriarchy. Not only do we sail easily into the elite, with great jobs and pay, we're also responsible for a huge number of problems faced by other groups.

For some men, all of the above is true. Looking at the very top of society, you could imagine it was the case for huge numbers. But it's not the case for everyone: millions of men are losing out and their situation is getting steadily worse each year. And all too often, it's happening below the radar.

Despite the focus on the real and severe impact of the UK's austerity measures on women, men were more likely to be unemployed before the downturn and still are.

Men are more likely than women to be the victims of violence and far more likely to be in jail. Year after year, boys' school attainment falls behind that of girls, as does their chances of getting into university.'

The Masculine Mystique and Male Depression: Embracing Your Vocation of Destiny

anthony · 27 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It doesn't take social science research to prove that men are angry and depressed. One measure of this trend is the increase in the rates of homicide and suicide we see in males. According to the Centers of Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), homicide rates for males are three to four times higher than they are for females. Among persons aged 20-24, the male homicide rate is six times higher than it is for females, and it is much worse among minorities than among whites. For those ages 10-19, the homicide rate is 10 times higher for blacks than for whites.

Differences in suicide rates are even more dramatic, according to the CDC. Overall, males kill themselves at rates that are four times higher than females. But as with homicide, certain groups are even more vulnerable. The suicide rate for those ages 20-24 is 5.4 times higher for males than for females of the same age. [1] In the older age groups suicide is predominantly a male problem. After retirement, the suicide rate skyrockets for men, but not for women. Between the ages of 65-74 the rate is 6.3 times higher for males. Between the ages of 75-84, the suicide rate is seven times higher. And for those over 85, it is nearly 18 times higher for men than it is for women. [2]

Why are men so unhappy? The Feminine Mystique told women that they should be satisfied with being wives, mothers, and homemakers. The Masculine Mystique told men that they should be happy to compete with other men to find a woman and then compete with other "breadwinners" to create ever greater material wealth for themselves and their families. We were told that "he who dies with the most toys, wins" and "winning isn't everything, it's the only thing." Both women and men become depressed trying to fit into roles that no longer work for us.'

Minnesota shared-parenting bill for divorce cases vetoed

anthony · 27 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gov. Mark Dayton says he won't sign into law a bill that would have increased the minimum parenting time in cases of divorce.

"I'm very disappointed. This was such a small change in the right direction," said Republican Peggy Scott of Andover, the House sponsor of the bill.

But Liz Richards, director of programming for the Minnesota Coalition for Battered Women, called it "a very simplistic solution" that could have de-emphasized consideration of a child's best interests. "Our position is really: 'Proceed with caution,' " she said.

Most divorces are settled between the parties, Richards said, but the ones that need court intervention -- and thus would be affected by a change in statute -- often include complex and problematic domestic situations.'

Lawsuit challenges combat exclusion for women

anthony · 27 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A team from the University of Virginia law school is suing the Pentagon for excluding women from combat units on behalf of two female Army reservists who say their careers were stymied by the policy.

Command Sgt. Maj. Jane Baldwin and Col. Ellen Haring both argue in the lawsuit that they have been shut out of promotions and desirable jobs for which they were otherwise well qualified either because they were banned by the exclusion policy from serving in those units, or because the combat exclusion prevented them from getting vital career experience.

...

The Supreme Court last addressed combat exclusion issues in 1981, when it ruled that sex discrimination in Selective Service registration was constitutional because women were unable to serve in combat units. Coughlin noted that combat has changed dramatically over the past three decades, and even the Defense Department has acknowledged that women today have often been placed in combat situations in Iraq and Afghanistan.

“Everyone seems to agree, including the Pentagon, that the combat exclusion policy needs to be revamped,” Coughlin said. “We believe it should be scrapped altogether.”'

'The Second Sexism' - discrimination against males

anthony · 27 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'All these examples seem like strong evidence for Benatar's thesis. Others he advances are more contentious, however. He finds it hypocritical that people get "very exercised" about female circumcision, but the decision to circumcise baby boys, often without anaesthetic, is uncontroversial. It was pointed out at Monday's seminar that the two are virtually incomparable in terms of pain, scale and long-term effects, but Benatar says he addresses this argument in more detail in his book.

He also points to the fact that more boys drop out of school and fail to graduate than girls as evidence of some discriminatory elements in the education system. Again, this point is likely dealt with in fuller detail in his book, but a whole platter of statistics would seem to counter the idea that boys are disadvantaged within education – not least the fact that, according to a World Bank study from last year, 66% of the world's illiterate adults are women. The same study found that "in many countries of South Asia and sub-Saharan Africa, girls are still much less likely than boys to attend, much less complete, basic education".

British feminist Julie Bindel was also uncompromising in her response, labelling the notion "total and utter bullshit. There are areas where men are paying the price that male supremacy gives them – there's absolutely no doubt about that… The reality is that the public domain belongs entirely to men and the disadvantages they face are just the price they pay. It's tough cheese."'

For Man Falsely Accused of Rape, All Liars Should Go To Prison

anthony · 27 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every perpetrator of this crime against justice deserves to be punished, starting with Banks' accuser. There is word that Wanetta is going to be asked to repay the $1.5 million she was paid by the school district for what she claimed to have happened to her, but her repayment should go far beyond money:

She should be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law and deserves a prison sentence no less severe than the time that was going to be given to Mr. Banks when the state chose to believe that he was a rapist.

The second party to pay for what happened to Mr. Banks should be the attorney, judge, and prosecutors who coerced him into taking a plea deal. Mr. Banks was told that if he continued to hold on to his "illusion" of innocence and actually fight for his right to a fair trial, he could face up to 41 years.

This kind of threat is similar to what was done during the Salem Witch Trials and the Spanish Inquisition, where anyone who proclaimed their innocence was tortured until they admitted guilt.'

Men’s wages still not back on track after recession

anthony · 27 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — Men continue to take a bigger hit in their paychecks than women because of lingering effects of the recession, according to a study by the Conference Board.

Average wages for women remain lower than those for their male counterparts, by nearly 20 percent. But men’s wages have been much slower to rebound from the effects of the recession, which had its most severe effects on male-dominated industries, such as construction, the study found.

Although the recession technically ended in 2009, men’s wage growth had rebounded to half the average rate of the previous decade by last year. Meanwhile, the growth in wages for women had almost fully recovered, the study said.

The findings came as the Obama administration has sparred with the campaign of presumptive Republican presidential nominee Mitt Romney in recent weeks about which gender has suffered more in the down economy.

Romney said that 92 percent of the jobs lost since Obama took office were held by women. Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner called the claim ridiculous. The nonpartisan fact-checking group Politifact has rated Romney’s statistic as “mostly false.”

The Conference Board study didn’t break down job losses by gender. But it said a reason for the difference in wage growth is that the recession’s effects were felt hardest in sectors such as construction and housing, where jobs are largely held by men.'

It's official: Women are better narco-traffickers, too

Matt · 28 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The high mortality rate in Mexico's drug war has seen women progress quickly in the shadowy underworld of the cartels and they are increasingly taking on key management roles, a new book says.

"Female Bosses of Narco-Traffic," by Arturo Santamaria, a researcher at the Autonomous University of the State of Sinaloa, traces the ascent of women in drug trafficking organizations.

...

Santamaria said women act with more caution and use deadly force more sparingly than men.

"Maybe this is because they are mothers and have children," argued the researcher, while cautioning that younger women were apt to be as bloodthirsty as men.

...

Manuel Clouthier, a businessman and politician from Sinaloa, said he believed women in the drug trafficking business were more responsible, more loyal and, therefore, more effective.

And he warned that the rise of women augurs ill for the war on drugs.

"It used to be that mothers told their sons and husbands to leave the business or not get involved in it," said Clouthier. "But if the mother is the one who is already involved, she's not likely to be the one to tell a son: Don't get involved!"'

UK: NHS removes word 'Dad' from pregnancy handbook in case it offends same sex couples

Broadsword · 28 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Health Service has removed the word ‘dad’ from a pregnancy handbook for fear of offending gay and lesbian parents.

Officials decided to use the term ‘partner’ throughout the 200-page guide, titled Ready Steady Baby, after receiving a complaint that ‘dad’ was discriminating against same-sex couples.

But the omission of the word has angered some campaigners who claim that traditional family values are being undermined.

Norman Wells, of the Family Education Trust, said: ‘This is all part of an agenda to present as natural a type of family that cannot be created by natural means.

‘The NHS should not be squandering taxpayers’ money to advance the cause of a minority interest group.'

UK: Woman who injected E. Coli into girl's I.V. drip given 'rehabilitation'

Minuteman · 29 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A 39-year-old woman who injected waste matter into a child's intravenous drip as she lay in hospital has been sent to rehabilitation instead of prison.

CCTV footage showed Nicola Clark injecting the substance into the girl's drip at Medway Hospital in Kent in April last year.

The substance contained E.Coli, a bacteria that lives in human intestines and can be detected in faeces.
...
Judge Jeremy Carey decided to spare Clark jail time because she was more in need of rehab.

"There will be those who, if they read the headline, will be surprised at the very least at the seemingly lenient sentence," Judge Carey said.

"I need to explain why I take that course. I have to consider the need for the protection of the public and the need for rehabilitation."'

Wilmington man fights for child ex never told him he had

Mastodon · 29 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WILMINGTON, NC (WWAY) -- A Wilmington man is fighting for the right to raise his own child. A child he's never met. A child he never knew existed until the baby was several months old and already living with its potential adoptive parents. So far, trying to intervene has been a losing battle.
...
"I'm already a father," John said. "I'm just looking to be a daddy."

In April 2011, Johns discovered he had a six-month-old baby boy. A mutual acquaintance told Johns his ex-girlfriend had a baby and put it up for adoption. He confronted her and found out the truth.

"The emotions of anger, sadness, the joy of being a father... I had all that compacted into a five-minute conversation by her just saying, 'You have no rights.' I just kept thinking, 'What is she talking about? I'm the father,' John said.'

Euro MPs back quotas to get more women into top jobs

Mastodon · 29 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The EU Commission wants the proportion of female board members at big companies to rise to 40% by 2020, from the current average of 12%.

The Commission has said it may legislate to make quotas compulsory.

The Euro MPs in Strasbourg also called for EU-wide measures to boost female representation in politics.

Last week the EU's Justice Commissioner, Viviane Reding, launched a public consultation to generate initiatives - including possible legislation - aimed at redressing the gender imbalance.

Belgium, France, Italy, the Netherlands and Spain are among the countries that have already introduced gender quotas for companies.'

What Men Do To Outearn Women

Mastodon · 29 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In that, not much has changed between Peggy Olson's 1967 job search and our own lateral moves today.

Simply put, we continue to accept unequal conditions in the workplace serving lesser clients for lower pay, fewer promotional opportunities and far less respect than our work product deserves.

Peggy, who worked her way up from secretary to copywriter with the mentorship and sponsorship of the fatally handsome and deeply flawed Don Draper, learned a few things in last night's show that men in the workplace have known since they first gathered together to raid the next village.'

Chris Graham: Title IX for Males?

Mastodon · 29 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The good news: Title IX has worked, big time. In 1970, two years before the seminal federal education law mandating equal opportunities for females was passed and signed into law, there were 3 million women, 3 percent of the female population, attending college. Today, more than 10 million women, nearly 7 percent of the female population, is attending college.
...
You might notice a gap in the numbers there. Not only are young women attending college in greater numbers than young men, the growth in the Title IX era is close to figurative exponential in comparing the numbers.

Which makes me wonder aloud … is it time, maybe, for a Title IX for Males?

Could it be that we're putting so much emphasis on pushing young girls into realizing their full potentials that we're forgetting that young boys might need a similar push?'

Male circumcision an assault - surgeon

Mastodon · 29 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Routine circumcision in male infants is a potentially dangerous and unnecessary procedure, according to a Dublin surgeon, who has dismissed the rationale for the procedure as unproven and without medical justification.

Dublin consultant plastic surgeon Mr Matt McHugh said circumcision was a form of genital mutilation that exposed patients to a number of health risks.

However, a representative of the Jewish community in Ireland has defended the procedure, stressing that it is safe when performed correctly.

Writing in the latest issue of Modern Medicine, the Irish journal of clinical medicine, Mr McHugh said: "There is no rationale for carrying out this extremely painful, traumatic and potentially dangerous procedure on male infants.

"While female genital mutilation (FGM) is banned in Ireland and regarded as a serious assault, circumcision, which is a form of male genital mutilation, is not illegal, with the procedure still undertaken by some doctors."'

Zimbabwe still falsely claiming circumcision defeats HIV/AIDS

Mastodon · 29 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Zimbabwe is still falsely claiming that the surgical circumcision operation defeats the deadly HIV/AIDS virus.

This comes after more than 5 months of media coverage exposing the method's weakness as a competent measure.

Several US medical practitioners have in the past few months warned third world countries upon whom the United Nations suggested the method, that they should not have their citizens deceive on circumcision and its supposed benefits.

The ministry of health is deceiving people by announcing to them that once they are circumcised, they become immune to HIV/AIDS effectively encouraging them to engage in promiscuity. Instead of reducing the risk, circumcision has been tested through behaviour change to actually be a protagonist of HIV transmission, critics state. One recent randomized controlled trial carried out in South Africa into male-to-female transmission actually demonstrated a 54% higher rate in the group where the men had been circumcised.'

Australian Department of Health & Ageing: "Young Men's Mental Illness Costs us $3 Billion Annually"

Minuteman · 30 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A new report released today shows that young men's mental illness in costing the Australian economy more than $3 billion each year in lost productivity.

Minister for Mental Health and Ageing, Mark Butler, today launched the landmark report, 'Counting the Cost: The Impact of Young Men's Mental Health on the Australian Economy'.

Commissioned by the Inspire Foundation and Ernst & Young, the Report highlights that mental illness in young men costs the economy $387,000 per hour and over 9 million working days lost per annum.'

Under Obama, Men Killed by Drones Are Presumed to Be Terrorists

lance · 30 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

After interviewing dozens of current and former White House advisers, the New York Times breaks a lot of news in its story on President Obama's secret kill list, perhaps none of it more jaw-dropping than new details describing how the U.S. now calculates the number of innocents killed by our drones. What innovative method did our Nobel Peace Prize-winning president implement?

"It in effect counts all military-age males in a strike zone as combatants, according to several administration officials, unless there is explicit intelligence posthumously proving them innocent," the newspaper reports. "Counter-terrorism officials insist this approach is one of simple logic: people in an area of known terrorist activity, or found with a top Qaeda operative, are probably up to no good."

Woman killed infant, ate part of brain, police say

Mastodon · 30 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SAN ANTONIO -- San Antonio police say a woman accused of beheading her 3-week-old infant son used a knife and two swords in the attack and ate some of the child's body parts.

San Antonio Police Chief William McManus told reporters Monday that Otty Sanchez's attack on her son, Scott Wesley Buchholtz-Sanchez, was "too heinous" to fully discuss.

But he says Sanchez ate part of the newborn's brain and bit off three of his toes before stabbing herself twice.

Police say the 33-year-old Sanchez told officers who were called to her house early Sunday that she killed her son at the devil's request.

Sanchez is charged with capital murder and is being held on $1 million bail. She is recovering from her wounds at a hospital.'

SAVE: June is False Allegations Awareness Month - Make Your Plans Now

Matt · 30 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

June is False Allegations Awareness Month.

Help us bring awareness to False Allegations of Abuse during the month of June. Here are some ideas to get you started. Like posting this link: http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp/campaigns/false-accusations-of-domestic-violence-by-the-numbers/ to your social media network, where your friends will learn that 700,000 persons are wrongfully arrested for domestic violence each year.

We hope you'll join us at the Connecting for Change false allegations awareness conference in Washington, DC on June 30. You can also join us as citizen lobbyists on Capitol Hill June 29. In order to lobby, you must attend a June 19 teleconference. Register for either or both events by sending an email to info-at-saveservices.org.

You've seen what happens when we all work together. Let's put this unity to work to end false allegations!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Study: Women seek 'providers'

Matt · 30 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. There isn't much new in terms of ideas in this article. I think it's been known for quite a long time. The main reason I am posting this is to point out the graphics that go along with the article. Seems not even a relatively even-handed (though decidedly sexist in all directions) report regarding relations between the sexes can't be delivered without some form of male-bashing. Anyway, here's an excerpt:

'Confident and cocky, alpha males might have you believe that they could win the heart of any woman they want.

But when it comes to finding a mate, women are actually hardwired to go for a meeker, less macho chap who is a good provider, a study suggests.

American researchers have looked into the reasons why humans developed the two-parent nuclear family.

Our primitive ancestors would have inherited the social structure of the apes – a sexual free-for-all with males fighting each other for mating rights.'

Male-dominated boards will fall behind rivals, says report

Broadsword · 30 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Without women in senior posts, companies will lose touch with their customers and risk making “flawed decisions” as a result of “groupthink” by men, a report from the Department for Business said. In a separate study, the Equalities and Human Rights Commission suggested firms should appoint more women directors to help the economic recovery.
...
Women represent “around 70 per cent of consumer purchasing decisions” and “connecting better” with the female workforce will help businesses understand their customers, the report said. “Continually recruiting individuals who share the same backgrounds and experiences creates a 'groupthink’ mentality within the board, which runs the risk of making flawed decisions because there are no fresh or different perspectives. Ultimately, of course, such businesses will be unable to stay ahead of the game.”'

UK: Plans for women's quotas on company boards dropped

Broadsword · 30 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The move to drop the “golden skirt” policy is a sign of ministers’ commitment to strip red tape from companies to get the economy moving.

Ministers said they were “standing up for British business” and were opposing the plans to impose more “burdensome regulation” on companies.

...

However ministers will say the Government is not going to implement the quotas, and instead will merely encourage firms to hire more women in executive positions.'

Dept of State: "African Women Entrepreneurship Program Kicks Off June 4"

Minuteman · 31 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The African Women Entrepreneurship Program is an outreach, education, and engagement initiative that works with African women entrepreneurs to promote business growth; increase trade both regionally and to U.S. markets through the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA); create better business environments; and empower African women entrepreneurs to become voices of change in their communities.

For three weeks, 47 African women entrepreneurs from 37 countries will engage in professional development training and networking opportunities with American counterparts from civil society, corporations, industry associations, non-profit organizations, and multilateral development organizations throughout the United States. The women will develop business partnerships, attend workshops on accessing capital and U.S. markets, and learn best business practices to build their women-owned small and medium enterprises (SMEs) in their home countries.

Investing in women's entrepreneurship helps yield stronger economies and communities, that’s why Secretary Clinton put women and girls at the center of this country’s foreign policy priorities.'

Obama Honors Top Socialist/Feminist with Medal of Freedom

Mastodon · 31 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama sparked more controversy after awarding the U.S. government's highest civilian honor, the Medal of Freedom, to divisive labor activist Dolores Huerta, a fellow "community organizer," collectivist, radical feminist, as well as the honorary chair of Democratic Socialists of America. DSA, which openly calls for "restructuring society," even more "massive redistribution of income" and increased central planning on its website, is the largest socialist organization in the nation and Socialist International's main U.S. affiliate.
...
The self-described "born-again feminist" has also drawn fire for working with and praising socialist Venezuelan tyrant Hugo Chavez; famous for jailing critics and political opponents, stealing property, waging war on press freedom, rigging elections, and establishing collective farms. Somehow, the infamous despot has managed to drive the formerly wealthy oil-rich economy into the ground so thoroughly — mostly through nationalization and wealth-redistribution schemes — that even water and electricity are now rationed.'

House defeats bill to ban gender-based abortions

Mastodon · 31 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It appears these lawmakers are more outraged about the prospect of aborting a girl. I would like to think anyone who considers themselves pro-life would be equally concerned about both genders. Excerpt:

'A bill that would ban sex-selective abortions failed to muster enough support to pass the House Thursday following a contentious debate.

The final vote was 246-168. Though a majority voted in favor of the bill, this particular proposal required a two-thirds majority to pass -- supporters of the bill fell 30 votes short.

The proposal would have made it a federal crime to carry out an abortion based on the gender of the fetus. The measure takes aim at the aborting of female fetuses, a practice more common to countries such India and China, where there is a strong preference for sons, but which is also thought to take place in the U.S.'

Relatedly: Couple Aborts Twin Boys Because They Want a Girl Using IVF

Female sex offenders protected by the criminal justice system

Matt · 31 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Los Angeles, CA (May 30, 2012) Female sex offenders receive lighter sentences for the same crimes than males says a study recently published in Feminist Criminology, a SAGE journal and the official journal of the Division on Women and Crime of the American Society of Criminology.

Embry and Lyons looked at the sentences that male and female sex offenders received for specific sex offenses and found that even after the implementation of sentencing guidelines to ensure equality in sentencing, on average male sentences were between 6% and 31% longer than female sentences for the same or similar crimes.

"It appears as if the criminal justice system actually treats women more leniently than men," wrote Randa Embry and Phillip M. Lyons, Jr., authors of the study.

The researchers explained this disparity by discussing the American idea that "women are weaker and, therefore, must be protected at all times regardless of their status as victims or offenders."'

On Child Support and Abortion

Matt · 31 May 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'However, in Roe vs. Wade, the Supreme Court of the United States (SCOTUS) ruled that the rights of the individual living mother outweighed the rights of the unborn child, and therefore made abortion legal. In doing so, and considering the arguments of both sides it attempted to address individual rights but the SCOTUS failed to take into the consideration the legal implications and the rights of the father.

A woman has complete and utter control over her own body—this much has been established by Roe vs. Wade and other rulings. Yet, what about the man? Does he not have any rights over his own body? Should a woman choose to bring to term a child that may not be wanted by his father, the father is nevertheless legally and financially bound by that decision. It is a well-established legal concept that a man must provide financial support for the child that was mutually conceived but solely brought to term by another person's (the woman) decision.

As such, the Roe vs. Wade decision has effectively made one member of society an economic slave to another person's decision.'

UK children need more volunteer male befrienders

Matt · 2 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many boys say they would prefer a male befriender according to early findings, funded by the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC). Yet, less than a quarter of UK volunteer child befrienders are men.

"The shortage means many boys in need of a strong male presence in their lives are missing out on the adult male companionship they would like," states researcher Dr Sue Milne of the Centre for Research on Families and Relationships (CRFR) at the University of Edinburgh.

Many of the children referred to befriending services face difficulties at home or in school. Some have learning or behavioural problems; others have been affected by the death or imprisonment of a parent, or by parental substance/ alcohol abuse.

"Befrienders offer relationships to children without being goal orientated. They make a very valuable contribution to the lives of children living in difficult circumstances," says Dr Milne. "They provide friendship and support as well as the chance for the children to try new activities and enjoy themselves out of the house."'

SAVE: June is False Allegations Awareness Month

Matt · 2 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

False allegations of abuse ruin reputations and careers, undermine the credibility of true victims, and upend basic notions of fairness and justice. The recent case of Brian Banks, exonerated on a charge of rape after spending 62 months in prison, highlights the criminal justice travesty.

According to a national telephone survey, one in 10 persons has been falsely accused of abuse: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/survey/

In preparation for the month, SAVE has created a new webpage on false allegations of child abuse: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/child-abuse/. In addition, we've added new information to our page on false allegations of sexual assault: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/sex-assault/

Finnish Medical Association says male circumcision conflicts with medical ethics

Matt · 2 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.:

The Finnish Medical Association said "child circumcisions are in conflict with medical ethics" and the Green League just voted to phase it out "either through advice or, if necessary, through legislation." Thank you Fins! Nice to see progress. :-) http://www.hs.fi/english/article/NEWS+ANALYSIS+Finland+lacks+policy+on+religiously-mandated+male+circumcision/1329104229469

They're certainly not alone. The Swedish Paediatric Society has called infant male circumcision an "assault on boys." http://m.thelocal.se/39200/20120219/

A recent report by the Dutch Medical Association, representing 46,000 physicians and medical students and backed by seven other medical associations, explains that the male foreskin is an important erotogenic structure for which no medical benefit justifies its routine removal, that it is comparable to certain forms of FGM, and that it violates children's rights to bodily integrity. http://www.norm-uk.org/news.html?action=showitem&item=1306

A recent study in Denmark found circumcised men have a much higher rate of sexual problems. http://ije.oxfordjournals.org/content/early/2011/06/13/ije.dyr104.short?rss=1 Research also find circumcised men are five times more likely to suffer from premature ejaculation. http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/21492404

Utah Adoption Council president resigns amid fathers' rights controversy

Matt · 2 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SALT LAKE CITY — The president of the Utah Adoption Council resigned Tuesday amid controversy over claims the council is working to undermine the rights of birth fathers.

Wes Hutchins was to serve another month as president of the Ut ah Adoption Council (UAC) — a group consisting of adoption agencies, adoption attorneys, families, and birth mothers and fathers. Instead, he's founded a new nonprofit organization he says will work in the best interests of all parties in adoptions.

There was certainly friction in Tuesday's council meeting, as some representing adoption agencies accused Hutchins of having his own agenda. In turn, he pointed fingers at them for not acting ethically in administering adoptions.'

"Big Bad Dad": The Movie

Matt · 2 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you're reading this, you no doubt know of a father whose life has been torn apart by the family legal system. Or maybe you are that man.

This was the impetus for the making of Big Bad Dad: the filmmakers realized they simply knew too many fathers who had the same horrific, turn-your-life-upside-down stories about their experiences.

We are Ruth van Vierzen and Patrick Hodgson, the filmmakers behind this project. We have been working on this film for 4 years and we are very anxious to get this film finished and out to the masses.'

Fathers Day 2012: Three years after President Obama tells men to "step up"

Mastodon · 3 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marilyn Frye, a leader in the feminist movement, often referred to a birdcage as a metaphor for the oppression of women. With a myopic focus we see only the individual wire and ponder why the bird does not simply fly around it. But with a macroscopic viewpoint we realize each wire has been systematically placed, creating a confine not unlike the solid walls of a dungeon.

Sadly, one result of the feminist movement has been the construction of a network of groups, organizations, and regulations that are being used to prohibit men from being a productive influence on their offspring. Not for profit and federally funded organizations actively influence legislation and judicial proceedings to protect women, resulting in the utter disregard for the rights of men. The tyrannical use of false allegations, coupled with Child Protective Services and law enforcement, effectively removes men from the picture. And corrupt family law attorneys portray men as abusive monsters, constructing fear in an already adversarial and biased family law system, compelling the court to remove the perceived “threat”.'

Are the Recent Cries About Misogyny Warranted?

Mastodon · 3 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But not every crude and hateful slam at a woman is misogynist; sometimes, it's just crude and hateful. An anatomical epithet toward a woman is not automatically worse than the male equivalent. Calling a female politician a bitch is not automatically worse than calling a male politician a scumbag, an overwhelmingly male-directed slur. Rocker and right-wing activist Ted Nugent's invitation to Hillary Clinton to "ride one of these into the sunset" while brandishing two rifles at a 2007 concert was no more disgusting than his simultaneous invitation to Barack Obama to "suck on this" (and there's no reason to think that Nugent would have been kinder to a top Democratic presidential contender who was male and white).

Nor are male politicians immune to sexual denigration. After Rick Santorum angered gay activists with negative comments about homosexuality, he was targeted for an Internet campaign promoting the use of his last name as an obscene sex-related term. Print ads seeking dirt on Rick Perry were run not only by Flynt but by Ron Paul supporter Robert Morrow. (Imagine the shrieks if a respectable newspaper had run an ad asking, "Have you ever had sex with Sarah Palin?")

In the 21st century, women may not have yet reached parity in public life. But they are clearly no longer outsiders. If their gender can still be an obstacle, it can also be an asset: a source of extra star power as well as extra voter sympathy. They have come far enough to not be treated as especially vulnerable, an expectation that can become a self-fulfilling prophecy.'

Sexual politics, Swedish style

Matt · 3 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Via email from a reader in Sweden:

I want to give you a tip about a book that gives a history of sexual politics in Sweden, and thus focuses a lot on the political radical feminism we have here, by simply giving a timeline of events, starting in the 50's and leading up to the Assange case. I don't think people outside Scandinavia understand how extreme the situation is here - this book explains it all. I would be really happy if you could spread the word about this book, perhaps you might be interested in it yourself, since I believe this information may deliver a serious blow to the extreme feminists we have here.

The book: A Brief History of Swedish Sex: How the Nation that Gave Us Free Love Redefined Rape and Declared War on Julian Assange

"Swedish Feminists are so Bored they're Telling Men How to Sit on the Bus"

Mastodon · 4 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sweden has a reputation as having the most equal relations between the sexes in the world—it's a place where male politicians are voted "woman of the year" by feminists, where young dads on paternity leave take toddlers for play dates while their wives work, where a preschool can casually ban gendered pronouns. A recent World Economic Forum report claimed Sweden is the most gender equal country in the world.

Yet some Swedish women apparently think that the image of the Nordic country as a feminist's paradise is just a veneer hiding deep-seated misogyny. Their evidence? Men slouching and taking up more than one seat on buses, trains, and subways.

To counter this "normalized expression of power" (that's what they call slouching), a group of firebrand feminists have set up a blog called "Macho i Kollektivtrafiken" ("Macho in Public Transport"), encouraging readers to send in sneaky snaps of men in relaxed poses. The aim is to spread awareness of a "symbolic and active recreation not just of power, but of a stereotypical form of masculinity."'

Hoping for clout with women, Obama urges Congress to pass ‘Paycheck Fairness Act’

Matt · 4 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama, his re-election fortunes heavily dependent on women, pushed Congress on Monday to "step up and do its job" by passing a bill designed to erase the wage gap between male and female workers doing the same job.

With Senate Republicans expected to block the Paycheck Fairness Act when it comes up for a vote on Tuesday, Obama urged supporters of the measure to make an 11th-hour push on behalf of the legislation.

"At a time when we're in a make-or-break moment for the middle class, Congress has to step up and do its job," the president said on a conference call. "But let's face it: Congress is not going to act because I said it's important; they're going to act because you guys are making your voices heard."

"So senators have to know you're holding them accountable. Everything that they're going to be hearing over the next 24 hours can make a difference in terms of how they vote," the president said.'

Woman to serve 15 months in psychiatric hospital for drowning sons

Minuteman · 5 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'An Australian woman living in Canada who drowned her two young sons in a bathtub has been sentenced to six years in jail.

Allyson McConnell, 33, will serve about 15 months after being credited for the time she has already spent in custody, The Calgary Herald reports.

...

Court of Queens Bench Justice Michelle Crighton recommended McConnell serve her sentence at Alberta Hospital in Edmonton, where she has been in psychiatric care since the killings.

During her trial in March, the court heard the Australian had been going through a bitter divorce in late 2009 and early 2010. She was described as having been tired, stressed and depressed before the killings.'

Grandfather Says Barnes & Noble Kicked Him Out For Shopping Alone In Children's Section

Kratch · 5 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Scottsdale man is claiming that a Barnes & Noble bookstore discriminated against him when an employee forced him out of the store because he was a male shopper alone in the children's area.

Omar Amin, 73, said store worker Todd Voris told him that a female shopper had complained about him being in the children's area May 4 in the store at Shea Boulevard and Loop 101 in Scottsdale.

Amin, who was alone at the time, said he was in Barnes & Noble to buy books for his two grandchildren who live in Wisconsin.

"Men alone cannot be by themselves in the children's area," Amin said he was told, adding that Voris said other bookstores had encountered problems with child molesters.'

CDC seeking comments on National Infertility Action Plan

Minuteman · 5 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Readers knowledgeable or with direct experience of such issues may want to ensure that mens' fertility concerns are also adequately addressed.

Link here. Excerpt:

'In 2007, a CDC-wide ad hoc workgroup formed to examine the full scope of infertility activities across the agency. This workgroup conducted an assessment to identify gaps and opportunities in public health surveillance, research, communications, programs, and policy development, which led to the 2010 publication of a white paper outlining the need for a national plan, with a public health focus, on infertility prevention, detection, and management. In consultation with many governmental and nongovernmental partners, CDC developed the National Public Health Action Plan for the Detection, Prevention and Management of Infertility. Addressing both male and female infertility, the plan outlines and summarizes actions needed to promote, preserve, and restore the ability of women in the United States to conceive, carry a pregnancy to term, and deliver a healthy infant. This goal extends beyond simply addressing the inability to conceive but also focuses on reducing the burden of impaired fecundity by promoting behaviors that maintain fertility; by promoting prevention, early detection, and treatment of medical conditions; and by reducing environmental and occupational threats to fertility. Given the public health focus of this action plan, promoting healthy pregnancy outcomes associated with treating and managing infertility is also important, as is improving the efficacy and safety of infertility treatment.'

Florida woman uses nail polish remover to set husband on fire

Matt · 5 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TAMPA, Fla. -- A Florida woman was being held without bail Monday after she allegedly doused her husband with nail polish remover and set his arm on fire.

Idalmis De Armas, 40, faces charges of aggravated battery with a deadly weapon and resisting an officer, the Tampa Bay Times reported.

She poured the chemical on her husband's arm and shorts and lit it with a cigarette lighter at around 11:00pm Saturday at their home in Tampa, according to an arrest report.

She admitted to officers who arrived at the scene that she had lit her husband on fire, and tried to pull away when they attempted to handcuff her, police said. The motive for the attack was not known.'

SAVE Says Sex Abuse Policies Recall 'Soviet-Style' Justice

Matt · 5 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

In Wake of Abdalla Suspension, SAVE Says Sex Abuse Policies Recall ‘Soviet-Style’ Justice

WASHINGTON / June 5, 2012 – Following revelations of denial of due process protections to Hany Abdalla, accused by an anonymous source of sexual abuse of an 8-year-old student, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is calling on lawmakers to investigate the problem of false allegations of abuse.

Abdalla, who works as a teacher’s aide in a New York City school, was arrested on April 25. The next day the Manhattan district attorney’s office announced it would not prosecute the case and released the man. Abdalla, father of 3, had worked at the school since 2007 and had no prior investigations or convictions on his record. Abdalla always worked with other adults in the room, according to the man’s attorney.

The teacher’s union has filed a grievance on behalf of Mr. Abdalla. Still, a school system representative refused to indicate how long the department could keep Abdalla suspended without a hearing, or what could lead him to be reinstated, according to the New York Times account: http://cityroom.blogs.nytimes.com/2012/05/30/accused-of-abuse-but-not-charged-teachers-aide-remains-in-limbo/

The Abdalla incident occurred just as the National Registry of Exonerations released a ground-breaking study that details how dozens of persons around the country have been falsely accused and convicted on charges of child sex abuse, only to be exonerated after years behind bars. Some had been handed life sentences for a crime they didn’t commit.

The exonerations occurred after the “victim” stepped forward to reveal the crime had been fabricated, or after DNA testing proved another person to be the perpetrator. The report deplored the sex-abuse “hysteria” that surrounded many of the prosecutions: http://www.law.umich.edu/special/exoneration/Documents/exonerations_us_1989_2012_full_report.pdf

“Anonymous allegations, secret procedures, open-ended investigations, and media accounts that presume guilt are an anathema to justice.” notes SAVE spokesman Philip Cook. “Every lawmaker who took an oath to defend the Constitution should be asking why Soviet-style justice is being allowed to flourish in the United States.”

June is False Allegations Awareness Month. According to a national telephone survey, one in 10 persons has been falsely accused of abuse: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/survey/

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is a victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to partner abuse: www.saveservices.org

Woman slaps Tom Barrett for conceding too early

Mastodon · 6 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'After giving his concession speech in the race where Governor Scott Walker won his own recall election, a woman came up to him and asked, “Can I slap you?” Apparently, she was upset about him conceding while she felt there were still votes to be counted, reports Politico.

Barrett responded, “I’d rather you hug me.” Thinking he had made himself clear, he leaned down and received a slap in the face.

The Washington Times reports that Barrett was stunned and “just simply walked away after that.”'

Iowa court allows paternity-fraud lawsuit

Mastodon · 6 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'IOWA CITY -- A mother who falsely represents the identity of the father of her child can be sued for fraud and ordered to pay back financial support she received, the Iowa Supreme Court ruled Friday.

The court reluctantly opened the door to claims of paternity fraud, a controversial and particularly messy area of litigation that had not been recognized in Iowa. Chief Justice Mark Cady warned litigants to use caution in bringing such cases, saying they would be hard to prove, emotional and embarrassing.

"In the end, it becomes painfully obvious that parties pushed into the justice system over a paternity fraud claim could never leave it unscathed, and the standards of justice will certainly be stretched to their limits, even if justice is attainable," Cady wrote in a concurrence to the 7-0 decision. "This consequence may cause many reasonable, caring people to simply leave the claim dormant for the betterment of others."'

White House exaggerates male-female wage gap, statistics show

Mastodon · 6 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'America's "wage gap" between men and women may be more paper-thin than Democrats are letting on, and it's non-existent among those with a college degree.

President Obama and Senate Democrats have recently taken to repeating Census Bureau numbers showing that U.S. women earn 77 cents for every dollar a man earns, but that figure may not be the best representation of the facts. At the least, it's not the only representation.

The Census Bureau report is based on workers who earn an annual wage, so it doesn't take into account professions like school teachers who don't necessarily work year-round, the Washington Post reports.'

'A Good Day for Women’s Equality'

Mastodon · 6 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The National Organization for Women is pretending that the failure of the Paycheck Fairness Act in the Senate is a big blow to women.

It’s not: This bill would have encouraged more class-action lawsuits and made workplaces less flexible and efficient by encouraging the adoption of one-size-fits-all compensation practices. Trial lawyers would have been the only real beneficiaries of the Paycheck Fairness Act’s new legal regime. Women who want more job opportunities and greater flexibility should welcome the bill’s defeat.
...
Of course, this didn’t stop the National Organization for Women from repeating the tired line, “It is unacceptable that women are still paid, on average, 77 cents for every dollar paid to men,” with the clear — and misleading — suggestion that this gap is driven by discrimination. Yet certainly the Washington Post’s exposé on the statistic is a step in the right direction.'

SAVE Elert: June 30: A Pivotal Transformation

Matt · 8 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The Connecting for Change Summit is the pivotal event in a transformation of the false allegations reform movement. Come to Washington, DC, June 30. Be part of this historical gathering.

Keynote Speaker: Michael McCormick
Exec. Dir., American Coalition for Fathers & Children
"False Allegations: A Blight to Families and Society"

"How to" Presentations
Write your own legal briefs.
Draft a bill while avoiding the legal fees.
Become a party delegate.
Lobby successfully.
Grow an organization.
Use traditional and social media.

N.Y. health chief calls for end to metzitzah b’peh rite in circumcisions

Mastodon · 9 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a strongly worded statement, Dr. Thomas Farley said that direct oral-genital suction, known as metzitzah b'peh, should not be performed during Jewish ritual circumcision. He said that several hospitals, including those serving the haredi Orthodox Jewish community, have agreed to distribute a brochure that describes the risk of contracting the herpes virus from the practice.

The controversy over metzitzah b’peh was reignited in March after it came to light that an unidentified infant died Sept. 28 at Brooklyn’s Maimonides Medical Center from “disseminated herpes simplex virus Type 1, complicating ritual circumcision with oral suction," according to the death certificate,

Health Department investigations of newborns with the herpes virus from 2000 to 2011 have shown that 11 infants contracted the herpes virus when mohels, or ritual circumcisers, placed their mouths directly on the child’s circumcision wound to draw blood away from the circumcision cut, according to a statement from the department. Ten of the infants were hospitalized, at least two developed brain damage and two babies died.'

Woman killed and dismembered cheating husband and scattered body parts around city in plastic bags

Matt · 9 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Ever notice that when a woman kills her cheating husband, "he had it coming," while when a man kills his cheating wife, "he's a monster!" Truth is, murdering a spouse over an affair is wrong no matter who gets murdered. Try telling that though to the average person. Excerpt:

'A Brazilian woman has admitted to shooting her husband and cutting off his limbs before scattering his body parts in plastic bags.

Elize Ramos Kitano Matsunaga, 38, killed her husband, Marcos Kitano Matsunaga, 42, in their apartment in Sao Paulo, Brazil, last month after an argument over his infidelity.

Police found his body parts spread along a road in the city of Cotia, about 20 miles outside Sao Paulo.

WILL Magazine, May Issue, Volume 1 Issue 10

Matt · 9 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From the WILL publisher:

WILL Magazine Volume 1 Issue 10, has been given a makeover. The highlighted topics in this Issue are Old Age & Male Breast Cancer.

'Save scolding of fathers for another day'

Mastodon · 10 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'And those discussions have their place – just not on Father's Day.

We don't have this problem on Mother's Day.

Nobody talks about the moms who made poor choices.

Nobody talks about the moms who walk out on their kids or unnecessarily puts them in harm's way to hold onto a destructive relationship.

Nobody dares to talk about the things moms sometimes get wrong.

For one day, moms are simply celebrated, their importance and sacrifices highlighted and appreciated.

Dads don't receive the same blanket courtesies on Father's Day, even though we have 364 other days every year to point out things fathers get wrong.

It took almost six decades after Mother's Day was recognized to have the United States officially begin acknowledge Father's Day.'

Should Men Pay for Their Lover's Pregnancy?

Mastodon · 10 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Why don't we recognize that when a woman gets pregnant with a man to whom she is not married, the pregnancy should be both parties' responsibility?" she writes in the Stanford Law Review. Not to say that some men don't help out; many do. But for those who don't "the law gives them a free pass. In short, until and unless paternity has been established, a pregnant woman and the man with whom she conceives are legal strangers."

Except they aren't really strangers; they've shared an intimate act. But they aren't spouses, either. They're something in between, either as tenuously connected as a no-strings-attached situation or a cohabiting couple. "When a man and a woman have nonreproductive sex, they knowingly engage in an act that has a reasonable possibility of radically interfering with the woman's life, and disproportionately so," she says. "Preglimony is a new word; it is not a new practice. It's time the law noticed."'

Why Society Is Failing Young Boys

Mastodon · 10 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Have you noticed how guys are being portrayed in movies lately? Unless you've been living under a rock you've seen at least one of these: Knocked Up, Failure to Launch, Hall Pass, Old School, or the Jackass series.

All the leading male characters are presented as expendable losers usually incapable of taking responsibility for themselves, often plotting intricate but seldom realized plans to get laid, and generally running the opposite direction of any kind of commitment. Not only do they avoid the future, sometimes they attempt to re-live past glory in order to avoid living in the present. It seems these guys don't have much value to contribute to society beyond their ability to entertain the other male characters, and of course, the audience.'

Should fathers have rights with unwanted children?

Mastodon · 10 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As Father's Day approaches, it may be time to rethink the question of a father's rights and responsibilities, to take some of our most cherished and unexamined slogans and see if they are fair. (This is a dangerous prospect: Obviously there is a reason that we cherish and don't examine our slogans.)

Take for instance the idea of "a woman's right to choose." I believe absolutely that a woman should decide whether to terminate or go forward with a pregnancy. The man's opinion is only secondary, and if there is a conflict, entirely negligible.

But is this fair? The social scientist Dalton Conley wrote a provocative op-ed, "A Man's Right to Choose" in The New York Times on this subject a few years ago. He wrote, "But when men and women engage in sexual relations both parties recognize the potential for creating life. If both parties willingly participate then shouldn't both have a say in whether to keep a baby that results?"'

Obama Misleads On Women's Pay

Mastodon · 10 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, the Senate voted on the Paycheck Fairness Act, Democrat-created legislation that would have allegedly insured women are paid equally to men. Democrats cited statistics indicating women only make 77% as much money as men do as justification for the new legislation. The Senate voted down the legislation basically along party lines, with Republicans and a handful of Democrats voting against it.

Color me confused. Didn't President Obama sign the Lily Ledbetter Fair Pay Act of 2009 to address that exact problem? Is this new legislation an admission that Ledbetter was ineffective, or what? Plus, the Equal Pay Act of 1963 was implemented nearly fifty years ago to address the same problem, as was Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, which prevented sex discrimination. Were all those pieces of legislation also ineffective? What's going on here?'

5 cancers men should worry about -- and what they can do

Mastodon · 10 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'No man is invincible, especially when it comes to health. Learn to detect and defend against the cancers most likely to attack men, and you'll be able to take the disease head-on if it strikes--and increase your chances of beating it.'

1. Prostate
2. Lungs
3. Colorectal
4. Bladder
5. Lymphoma

Michigan bills would extend biological dads' rights

Mastodon · 10 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Michigan Legislature has sent Gov. Rick Snyder bills that would give biological fathers some rights to their children, even if the mothers were married to other men at the time of a child's birth.

The current 1956 law presumes that a woman's husband is the father of her children, making the husband responsible for their support and denying parental rights to the biological father.

Lawmakers last week passed measures extending rights to biological fathers, and the proposals are awaiting Snyder's signature. A phone message about the governor's intentions on the bills was left with a spokeswoman Sunday.
...
Under the bills, a man who asserts a claim of fatherhood could bring legal action to gain paternal rights to the child, even if another man is already being acknowledged as the child's father.
...
The Michigan branch of the National Organization for Women opposed the bills.'

Five months in jail for married teacher accused of having sex with four students

MikeJH · 11 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. What would have been the sentence if a male teacher was convicted of having sex with 4 underage girls? Judges, male or female, always apply a double standard. Interesting comments at the bottom. Excerpt:

'A teacher who began an affair with an underage student just two months after getting married has been jailed for five months.

Rachel Farrell was accused of having sex with four students in the months after her marriage in June 2010.

But after three of the teens refused to co-operate with a police investigation the 26 year old was charged with one count of underage sex.

Farrell, who has since been divorced by her husband, pleaded guilty to corrupting a minor.
...
She then surprised Judge Giodarno by telling him she thought the sentence of five months in jail and three years probation was correct.

After the hearing, Mills said he will appeal the sentence, adding that the district attorney's office did not specifically request jail time for Farrell.'

RFK Jr. calls Mary Kennedy abusive in court papers

Matt · 11 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (AP) — Robert F. Kennedy Jr. accused his estranged wife, Mary, of abusing his children from an earlier marriage, including stealing items from his young daughter, showing up uninvited on trips he took after they separated and sometimes calling him dozens of times a day, according to a legal filing revealed Sunday.

Mary Kennedy killed herself last month at the family's estate in Bedford, N.Y. Robert Kennedy filed for divorce two years ago, and the case was pending when she died. The couple married in 1994 and had four children together.

Portions of a confidential affidavit filed in 2011 in the divorce case were posted online by The Daily Beast (http://bit.ly/LCcOY4) as part of a cover story in Newsweek magazine on newsstands Monday about Mary Kennedy that was written by Kennedy family biographer Laurence Leamer. A spokesman for the site declined to comment on how the affidavit was obtained.'

NOW: Mothers, Children at Risk as Fathers' Rights Groups Seek Legitimacy for Phony Mental "Disorder"

Mastodon · 11 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NOW Foundation opposes the inclusion of the so-called PAS/PAD in the DSM-5 under any name or category. The American Psychiatric Association is soliciting final comments on the revisions to the DSM-5 by June 15. We encourage you to send messages to the APA via their interactive website. Tell the APA that you oppose the inclusion of the so-called parental alienation syndrome in DSM-5 in ANY FORM. Please make sure to emphasize the fact that the American Bar Association has determined PAS to be inadmissible in court because it does not meet evidentiary standards. Accusations of PAS protect real abusers at the expense of women and children who have already been victimized.'

Parental Alienation: 'A hotly disputed topic'

Mastodon · 11 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Parental alienation is a hotly disputed topic among some members of the legal and mental health communities.

The American Psychiatric Association is debating whether or not to include parental alienation as a mental health syndrome in its 2013 revision of the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual of Mental Disorders, or the DSM-5.

Those in favor of recognizing parental alienation as a mental disorder claim it would result in fairer decisions from family courts and enable child victims to get treatment and eventually reconcile with their estranged parent.

Those who oppose inclusion in the DSM-5 claim that parental alienation is junk science, or an unproven concept that abusive husbands use to draw attention away from their behaviors.'

UK: Police chief found hanged after 'nice buttons' sexism row

Broadsword · 11 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Police chief David Ainsworth, under investigation for alleged sexism, including commenting on a female colleague's "nice buttons", was found hanged after convincing himself his force was "gunning for him", an inquest was told.

Mr Ainsworth, 49, the deputy chief constable of Wiltshire, was removed from his duties after up to 24 allegations emerged against him from female colleagues.

The officer, who earned £110,000 a year, was accused of looking at one woman in a tailored blouse and commenting: "Nice buttons."

He feared he would lose everything and was found hanged at his cottage in Potterne, Wilts, in March last year. Jo Howes, his girlfriend, told the inquest yesterday of a conversation less than a month before his death.

"David was very distressed and outlined why he thought he had nothing left to live for," she said. "He thought his employer was gunning for him and he did not know why.

"He expressed that no matter what he did, those involved would get him, through an employment tribunal. He was very hurt." She added: "He had been told by more than one superintendent that it was a witch hunt."'

Children with older fathers and grandfathers 'live longer'

Broadsword · 12 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Delaying fatherhood may offer survival advantages, say US scientists who have found children with older fathers and grandfathers appear to be "genetically programmed" to live longer.

The genetic make-up of sperm changes as a man ages and develops DNA code that favours a longer life - a trait he then passes to his children.

The team found the link after analysing the DNA of 1,779 young adults.
...
Experts have known for some time that lifespan is linked to the length of structures known as telomeres that sit at the end of the chromosomes that house our genetic code, DNA. Generally, a shorter telomere length means a shorter life expectancy.

Like the plastic tips on shoelaces, telomeres protect chromosomal ends from damage. But in most cells, they shorten with age until the cells are no longer able to replicate.

However, scientist have discovered that in sperm, telomeres lengthen with age.

And since men pass on their DNA to their children via sperm, these long telomeres can be inherited by the next generation.'

Spread of 'baby boxes' in Europe alarms United Nations

Matt · 12 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The United Nations is increasingly concerned at the spread in Europe of "baby boxes" where infants can be secretly abandoned by parents, warning that the practice "contravenes the right of the child to be known and cared for by his or her parents", the Guardian has learned.

The UN Committee on the Rights of the Child, which reports on how well governments respect and protect children's human rights, is alarmed at the prevalence of the hatches – usually outside a hospital – which allow unwanted newborns to be left in boxes with an alarm or bell to summon a carer.
...
"There is growing evidence that it is frequently men or relatives abandoning the child, raising questions about the mother's whereabouts and whether she has consented to giving up her baby," he said. "You also have to ask whether an anonymous drop allows the authorities to check whether there's a chance for the baby to remain with its family in the care of other relatives."'

Silverthorne Clinic still performing neonatal circumcisions

Matt · 12 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

With reference to this petition, MANN admins received the following:

'Hey, everyone. Thanks for signing. We reached our goal of 500 signatures and then some thanks to you.

Unfortunately, Silverthorne Clinic is not responding so, I'm asking you to send them an email (info-at-highcountryhealth.com), write them a letter (265 Tanglewood Lane Ste E-1, Silverthorne, CO 80498), or call them (970.468.1003) to let them know that you want them to stop performing infant circumcision. Thank you for your continued support.'

Remember, please be polite and avoid any nastiness regardless of how you contact them. Just let them know you are aware of the effort to petition them to stop performing routine neonatal circumcisions, that you support it, and you want them to stop doing it. That's all.

SAVE: Convicted by a Stereotype, Brian Banks Now Needs Our Help

Matt · 12 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Brian Banks was a 16-year-old star high school football player when he was falsely accused of rape by a female acquaintance. Ten years later, after spending over five years in prison, he was recently exonerated.

Banks now looks forward to playing for the Seattle Seahawks...and telling his story. Planning on producing a documentary, he writes, "I hope my story can serve as a catalyst for change."

Using kickstarter, Banks needs to raise $40,000 by June 28. He has received $11,369 as of this writing. Banks: "I am asking from the deepest part of my heart, will you help me? I will not be able to do this without you."

Please visit his page on kickstarter, and do what you can to help Brian Banks expose the devastation of false allegations.

JUNE IS FALSE ALLEGATIONS AWARENESS MONTH. TELL A FRIEND.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Panel recommends: All women should be screened for partner abuse oregon dad · 13 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'All women of childbearing age could benefit from being routinely screened for intimate partner violence, a government-appointed panel of experts said today.

Whether or not women have any signs or symptoms of abuse, they would be screened under the proposed recommendation released today by the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force.

An estimated 1.3 to 5.3 million women yearly experience violence at the hands of their partners, though these numbers are likely underestimates, because such violence often goes unreported, according to research cited by the panel.

If a screening test revealed a woman to be the victim of intimate partner violence, she should be referred for an intervention, according to the draft.

The new recommendation would be a change from the panel's previous statement on the topic. In 2004, the panel said it found insufficient evidence to recommend for or against routinely screening women for intimate partner violence. In recommending any routine screening, the panel considers evidence of the potential benefits and harms.'

UNBELIEVABLE!!

Swedish party wants sit-down urination

Broadsword · 13 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Left Party members of a Swedish county council said they want to encourage men using the council's toilets to sit during urination.

The Left Party in Sormland said it wants the Sormland County Council to pass a motion requiring toilets reserved for stand-up urination to be labeled, Swedish news agency TT reported Monday.

The party said sit-down urination is more hygienic and reduces the risk of bathroom users having to negotiate their way around puddles en route to the toilet.

The supporters of the motion said sitting during urination also has medical benefits, including reducing the risk of prostate problems and leading to a healthier and longer sex life.

Viggo Hansen, a substitute member of the council and author of the motion, said he wants it to eventually lead to sitting-only bathrooms.'

NZ: 'Emotionally unstable' Dunedin woman made false rape claim

Mastodon · 13 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A young woman was seriously emotionally unstable when she falsely claimed she had been raped, counsel for 20-year-old Sarah Louise Jenkins, unemployed, told the Dunedin District Court yesterday.
...
Mr Miller acknowledged the complaint had been "disturbing". But although it caused difficulties for the young man, it was "at the low end". The defendant was truly sorry for what she had done. She was having ongoing counselling and was stable at present, Mr Miller said.

Judge Michael Crosbie told Jenkins the victim had gone through "a very bad situation" as a result of the false allegation. He had liked her, although he knew she had "issues".

Then it seemed her friends became involved and made threats against him. Although angry and upset about what happened, the victim had since "moved on", the judge said.'

India: Mewat sees rise in false cases of rape

Mastodon · 13 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HANDIGARH: The Mewat district in Haryana, where Muslims are in majority and which is also one of the most backward areas of the state, has witnessed a surge in false cases of rapes and molestation, allegedly for settling personal scores.

According to Mewat superintendent of police, Pankaj Nain, police have so far cancelled 32 false FIRs of rape in the last five years while investigations into 19 other cases were presently on. In most cancelled cases, the complainants were Muslim women, he said.

"The cases which have been cancelled by us so far included those registered by vested interests, who wanted to settle scores with their rivals. In some cases, the complainant did not join investigations after registration of case or turned hostile at the time of recording of statements by judicial magistrate," said Nain.

"However, as provided under law, we have started taking action against such complainants, who are misleading police to settle personal scores," he added.'

A father's love is one of the greatest influences on personality development

Matt · 14 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to the impact of a father's love versus that of a mother, results from more than 500 studies suggest that while children and adults often experience more or less the same level of acceptance or rejection from each parent, the influence of one parent's rejection -- oftentimes the father's -- can be much greater than the other's. A 13-nation team of psychologists working on the International Father Acceptance Rejection Project has developed at least one explanation for this difference: that children and young adults are likely to pay more attention to whichever parent they perceive to have higher interpersonal power or prestige. So if a child perceives her father as having higher prestige, he may be more influential in her life than the child's mother. Work is ongoing to better understand this potential relationship.

One important take-home message from all this research, Rohner says, is that fatherly love is critical to a person's development. The importance of a father's love should help motivate many men to become more involved in nurturing child care. Additionally, he says, widespread recognition of the influence of fathers on their children's personality development should help reduce the incidence of "mother blaming" common in schools and clinical setting. "The great emphasis on mothers and mothering in America has led to an inappropriate tendency to blame mothers for children's behavior problems and maladjustment when, in fact, fathers are often more implicated than mothers in the development of problems such as these."'

Bizarre burning and cutting ritual on kids lands Florida woman in jail

Matt · 14 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ST. PETERSBURG -- Danielle Harkins told the kids they needed to rid their bodies of demons as the group gathered before dusk Saturday around a small fire near the St. Petersburg Pier. They should cut their skin to let the evil spirits out, police said she told the children. Then, they needed to burn the wounds to ensure that those spirits would not return.

...

Harkins, 35, a literacy teacher at Lealman and Asian Neighborhood Family Center, was booked in jail Tuesday morning on child abuse charges in connection with the bizarre ritual. She was held in jail Tuesday night on $55,000 bail.

Police said the ritual was attended by seven teenagers, all of Asian ethnic background, whom Harkins had taught a few years ago in her job at the center. At least two were injured, police said.

...

Records show that Harkins was the defendant in a sexual violence injunction that was dismissed in January. In August, she filed a domestic violence injunction against her husband, which was also dismissed.

The divorce was finalized June 1. About a month before, Harkins began acting strangely.

Lisa Cope, Harkins' next-door neighbor for the past four years, said the last time she saw her, Harkins had taken an interest in extreme religious beliefs.'

A Norwegian Political Party Has Called For A Ban On Religious Circumcision

Matt · 14 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an interview with Norwegian daily newspaper Dagbladet published today, a representative of Norway's Center Party has argued that circumcising a newborn boy for religious reasons should be made illegal.

Citing how circumcising a girl is already prohibited, justice policy spokeswoman Jenny Klinge and the Center Party — a junior member in Norway's coalition government — reportedly believe it is time to extend this law to include males.

Her comments have already caused quite a stir in Norway and abroad with doctors and politicians coming forward to express their disapproval or support for Klinge's comments.'

Following Brian Banks Release, SAVE Raps Media for Allowing Rape 'Hysteria'

Matt · 14 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, June 14, 2012 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Following the release of Brian Banks after 5 years in jail on a false rape conviction, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is calling on the media to report rape allegations in a responsible and ethical manner. Media accounts of alleged rape cases often highlight the accusation but fail to report exonerations in the same manner, SAVE says.

Brian Banks was a 16-year-old football star with a full scholarship to the University of Southern California when he was accused of rape by Wanetta Gibson. Fearing a life sentence, Banks agreed to a plea bargain, even though there was no medical evidence or witnesses to support her claim.

Banks spent over five years in jail. In the meantime, Gibson received a $750,000 settlement from the school for not defending her from the alleged assault. Recently Gibson admitted during a taped interview that her accusation was fabricated. On May 24, 2012, Banks was exonerated.'

Vibe: An Investigative Report On Reverse Circumcision

Matt · 14 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Society puts great importance on the male genitalia. But at birth, the penis faces its first true test: to circumcise or not to circumcise. For generations, the question was a no-brainer because most fathers want their sons to “look like them.” At the peak of its practice in the 1970s, an estimated 80 percent of American parents circumcised their newborn sons, removing what would be nearly four inches in adult foreskin and 20,000 nerve endings.

Like the man in the video, Eddy, 38, is also restoring. He said he suffered from a “growing lack of sensitivity” after being “modified” as a child. ... The men who opt to restore do so because, like women who were circumcised, they didn’t have a choice and feel their bodies have been altered for the worse.

OVER THE YEARS, the procedure has declined in popularity in the U.S. In 2011, an estimated 54 percent of American boys were circumcised at birth (down from 80 percent in 1970). Parents are deciding to break from tradition. Medical research has proven that the foreskin is more than just an extra flap of skin. It’s a natural shield, lubricant and erogenous zone. “Since 1979 there has been a lot of research done that has established the actual value of the male foreskin,” explains Richard Russell director of communications for Doctors Opposing Circumcision (DOC). “And the costs of its loss, in terms of sexual sensing and performance.”'

Swedish Left Party Chapter Wants To Make Urinating While Standing Illegal For Men

Mastodon · 14 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Male representatives on the Sormland County Council in Sweden should sit rather than stand while urinating in office restrooms, according to a motion advanced by the local Left Party.

Known as a socialist and feminist organization, the party claims that seated urination is more hygienic for men -- the practice decreases the likelihood of puddles and other unwanted residue forming in the stall -- in addition to being better for a man's health by more effectively emptying one's bladder, The Local reported.'

New York City urges Requiring Consent for Jewish Rite

Mastodon · 14 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New York City health officials proposed on Tuesday that Orthodox Jewish parents be required to sign a consent waiver before they can take part in a circumcision ritual that is believed to have led to the deaths of at least two babies in the city over the past decade.

The proposal, introduced at a Board of Health meeting, represents an escalation of the city's efforts to curtail the ancient Jewish procedure of metzitzah b'peh, in which an adult male, usually the circumciser, places his mouth directly on the wound created by the removal of the infant's foreskin to suck away the blood.'

UK: Why aren't boys participating in gym?

Mastodon · 14 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Except:

'London - Findings from Western University have led researchers to ask questions about adolescent body image issues that are increasingly being traced to unhealthy behaviors and ultimately affecting adolescent male youth's desire to participate or avoid exercise.

Experts in gender studies and physical education will meet with the London community at Palasad (777 Adelaide Street North) at 7 p.m. on Wednesday, June 13 to address how adolescent boys struggle with body image issues. Parents, students, teachers, school board members and friends are welcome to explore how some boys manage physical education classes that discourage participation.'

School Backs 'Bridesmaids' Teacher Who Allegedly Slapped Student Six Times

Mastodon · 14 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jennifer Gonzalez, the Malibu High School teacher accused of slapping a student six times as she cited the movie "Bridesmaids," is being backed by school officials and will not be placed on administrative leave, TMZ reports.

The news comes after the NAACP urged the school to further investigate the incident.

“Where there’s smoke, there’s fire,” NAACP Santa Monica Branch President Darrell Goode told CBS Los Angeles last week. “So we’re pushing the district to do a full-blown administrative investigation.”

According to TMZ, the school's "full-blown" investigation revealed Gonzalez only "pat" the student, and that she didn't mean to hurt her.'

School for husbands – girls should be taught how to find supportive man

Broadsword · 14 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Helen Fraser, 63, the chief executive of the Girls' Day School Trust, told its annual conference that girls should learn to be just as "ambitious" in their relationships as they are in their careers.
...
The former managing director of Penguin Books said that girls can have it all - career, marriage and motherhood - but they must learn to pick the right partner to accomplish it.
...
"Just as I believe we should always encourage our girls to aspire to the best universities, I believe we should encourage our girls to be ambitious in their relationships," she said.
...

"That what too many women face nowadays isn't a 'glass ceiling' because of their sex but a 'nappy wall' if they choose to have a child as well as a career?

"That if you want children and a career, a partner who shares the load at home really, really matters?

"Or a partner who cares as much about you succeeding in your career as they does about their own – and is a cheerleader for you through your triumphs and setbacks. Is it about teaching girls to find partners who will make space for their own careers in a relationship?"'

White working class boys' growing up environment 'not conducive to good education'

Broadsword · 14 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hundreds of thousands of poor children are growing up with little hope of a good education or career after being raised by families that fail to set proper boundaries or fully understand the difference between right and wrong, Sir Michael Wilshaw warned.

He said problems were particularly acute among disadvantaged white boys who perform worse than almost every other group at the age of 16.

In an interview with the Telegraph, Sir Michael said that old-fashioned values such as “self-help” and support for education had been eroded in many communities, particularly those in post-industrial cities with high levels of unemployment.

He said teachers from the best schools in these areas were now expected to act as “surrogate parents” – escorting pupils to bus stops, helping with homework, providing meals and giving them advice – in place of families “who can’t or won’t support their children”.'

NOW’s Stand on Shared Parenting

Matt · 15 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It seems inconsistent that the group that says its purpose is “sharing equal rights, responsibilities and opportunities with men,” opposes shared parenting. On its website, NOW states:

NOW is the largest, most comprehensive feminist advocacy group in the United States. Our purpose is to take action to bring women into full participation in society — sharing equal rights, responsibilities and opportunities with men, while living free from discrimination.

Gloria Woods, President of Michigan NOW, wrote this about shared parenting:

"Shared Parental Responsibility." In our work as women's advocates, how often have we heard custodial moms wish that their children's father would share the parental responsibility? Unfortunately, "shared parental responsibility" is the new doublespeak for joint physical custody by so-called "father's rights" groups.'

Kiva.org sends pro-father/man message

Matt · 15 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

So rare to see that it is worth noting. Some of what was said in their email:

'Why lend to men?

As the nonprofit world focuses on empowering women, men's contributions to their families and communities are too often overlooked. On Kiva, men make up only 19% of all borrowers but account for 65% of loans that don't get funded. True equality means expanding opportunity and financial independence to everyone. Consider the incredible ripple effect of lending to men:

- Financially stable men are more likely to have healthy, educated (and yes, happy!) children.
- Gainfully employed men are more likely to share housework and care-giving with their partners, becoming valuable role models for gender equality.
- Men with financial opportunities are less likely to migrate or uproot their families, and more likely to spend quality time with their children.

Kiva is dedicated to providing men with the economic support they need to find fulfilling employment and care for their families. We also partner with organizations in 60+ countries that provide resources specifically tailored to families, helping make parents' lives just a little bit easier, one loan at a time.'

A Father's Day plea -- let's stop anonymous sperm donations

Matt · 15 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We are just a few days away from Father's Day 2012. On Sunday, June 17, Americans will celebrate the value of fatherhood.

Yet, without seemingly having given it much thought to it at all, our society now allows millions of men and women to create children who will never know their biological fathers. That's because we sanction allowing men and women to purchase sperm from anonymous donors. These donors will forever be shielded from having their identities discovered by their sons and daughters.

This policy inherently presupposes that bearing children who have no opportunity to know their biological fathers does not deprive them of anything that is inherently theirs--as a fundamental human right.'

Mandatory Circumcision Not Cost Effective for HIV Prevention

Matt · 15 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SAN DIEGO – Mandating circumcision in the United States would prevent 24 more cases of HIV than does the traditional optional approach to circumcision, but would increase costs by approximately $389 million, making it far less cost effective, an analysis of published data suggests.

The investigators assumed that the overall incidence of HIV in the United States is 27 cases/100,000 people and the lifetime cost of care for someone with HIV is $119,000, based on published data from government statistics and peer-reviewed studies. Using the $392 cost of a circumcision at their institution, they developed computer-generated estimates of the cost-effectiveness of mandatory or traditional circumcision strategies for various populations, said Dr. Sarah E. Drennan, a third-year resident in ob.gyn. at Ochsner Medical Center, New Orleans.

For the overall U.S. population, mandatory circumcision would prevent 494 cases of HIV at a cost of approximately $790 million. Traditional circumcision – in which the parents choose whether or not to circumcise a newborn – would prevent 470 cases of HIV at a cost of approximately $401 million, she reported at the annual meeting of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists.'

Australian Department of Health & Ageing: "Males Urged to Think and Do More About Their Health"

Minuteman · 15 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The Minister responsible for male health, Warren Snowdon, today launched the Australian Institute of Health and Welfare's (AIHW) second male health bulletin, Health of Australia's males: a focus on five population groups, during a visit to the Murrumbateman Men's Shed.

The bulletin examines five male population groups at risk of poor health: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander males; those living in regional and remote areas; males living in socio-economically disadvantaged areas; males born overseas; and older males.

"This bulletin shows just being a part of these groups can have a very mixed impact on health, but often preventable risk factors play a role," Mr Snowdon said.'

Transnational Relations Between Perceived Parental Acceptance and Personality Dispositions of Children and Adults

Matt · 15 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three questions drawn from parental acceptance–rejection theory were addressed: (a) Are children's perceptions of parental acceptance transnationally associated with specific personality dispositions? (b) Are adults' remembrances of parental acceptance in childhood transnationally associated with these personality dispositions? and (c) Do relations between parental acceptance and offspring's personality dispositions vary by gender of parents? All studies used the child and adult versions of the Parental Acceptance–Rejection Questionnaires (PARQ) for Mothers and for Fathers, as well as the child and adult versions of the Personality Assessment Questionnaire (PAQ). Results showed that both maternal and paternal acceptance in childhood correlated significantly in all countries with all seven personality dispositions of adult offspring. Adults' remembrance of paternal acceptance in childhood correlated significantly with all adult personality dispositions except dependence.'

CNN: No more dumb old dad: Changing the bumbling father stereotype mens_issues · 16 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's a movement under way among dads in America that's changing what you see on TV.

Across the country, more and more are fed up -- and rising up against the stereotype of the inept, clueless father.

"We're not the Peter Griffin or the Homer Simpson that we're often portrayed as," said Kevin Metzger, who runs the Dadvocate blog.

It's often the chief gripe among the dads I interview about modern fatherhood.'

The single-mom catastrophe

Matt · 16 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In its broad outlines, the story is familiar by now. In 1965, 93% of all American births were to women with marriage licenses. Over the next few decades, the percentage of babies with no father around rose steadily. As of 1970, 11% of births were to unmarried mothers; by 1990, that number had risen to 28%. Today, 41% of all births are to unmarried women. And for mothers under 30, the rate is 53%.

Though other Western countries also concluded that it was OK for the unmarried to have kids, what they had in mind as the substitute for marriage was something similar to it: a stable arrangement in which two partners, cohabiting over the long term, would raise their children together. The embrace of "lone motherhood" — women bringing up kids with no dad around — has been an American specialty.
...
On the other hand, those who opt for single motherhood are hurting not just themselves but their offspring. The children of single mothers are twice as likely as children growing up with both parents to drop out of high school. Those who do graduate are less likely to go to college, even if you control for household income and the mother's education. Decades of research show that kids growing up with single mothers (again, even after you allow for the obvious variables) have lower scholastic achievement from kindergarten through high school, as well as higher rates of drug and alcohol abuse, depression, behavior problems and teen pregnancy. All these factors are likely to reduce their eventual incomes at a time when what children need is more education, more training and more planning. The rise in single motherhood was ill-adapted for the economic shifts of the late 20th century.'

Barack Obama: Michelle Told Me To Knock It Off For Calling Father's Day A 'Forgotten Holiday'

Matt · 16 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON -- President Barack Obama says his wife told him to knock it off for calling Father's Day a "forgotten holiday."

Obama ate lunch with four campaign supporters in downtown Washington on Friday and observed that people make a bigger deal out of Mother's Day. He said he had shared his observation with Michelle Obama and that she told him to knock it off.

The president said the first lady told him Mother's Day should be a bigger day because "every day is Father's Day" and he is "always getting a treat."

Obama's comments came as he chatted with his lunch mates in view of the media. Later Friday, he and his family were flying home to Chicago, where they planned to spend Father's Day weekend.'

Eliminating Prison Rape Would Save Society $50 Billion Per Year: Report

Matt · 16 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In terms of dollars and cents, it makes sense to try and prevent prison rape.

That's the conclusion of a recent report from the Department of Justice, which examines the costs and savings associated with the Prison Rape Elimination Act (PREA) -- a law that was passed in 2003, but with specific rules that weren't finalized until last month.
...
Full compliance with the standards set out in the PREA would cost penal facilities about $468.5 million a year, according to the report. By contrast, the financial benefits to society from eliminating prison rape would come to almost $52 billion a year.

The real horror of prison rape, of course, has nothing to do with money, and everything to do with the physical and emotional trauma that prisoners experience -- especially when those prisoners are juveniles suffering abuse at the hands of staff.

It all points to a problem that seems to cost more to ignore than it would to treat.'

Does Child Support Need an Update?

Matt · 16 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(The Root) -- Timed for Father's Day weekend, on Friday the White House Domestic Policy Council issued a new report detailing the Obama administration's various initiatives to encourage fatherhood and healthy families.

"One out of every three children in America -- over 24 million in total -- lives in a home without their biological father present," reads the introduction to the report, entitled Promoting Responsible Fatherhood (pdf), which continues to say that many noncustodial dads who try to do the right thing are challenged by unemployment and underemployment. "Data show that low-income men from communities of color are significantly more likely to be nonresident fathers than resident fathers."

...

"There are guys who don't have the economic means, for various reasons, to pay, and for a lot of low-income dads it becomes insurmountable debt," Joseph T. Jones, the president and founder of the Center for Urban Families, told The Root. "Then the child-support system expends resources to incarcerate them, compounding the issue because even while the father's in jail, the debt continues to accrue."'

Happy Fathers' Day

Matt · 17 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

It's always a holiday here at MANN that brings mixed emotions. Many of our readers don't get to see their own kids much or at all, or are estranged from them, or something else. Still, it's a day to say "Thank you, dads," and MANN says it with gusto.

THANK-YOU, DADS!!

Whatever this day means to you or how you experience it, we hope it is as good as it can be for you.

1% Wives Are Helping Kill Feminism and Make the War on Women Possible

Mastodon · 18 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK -- When my mind gets stuck on everything that is wrong with feminism, it brings out the 19th century poet in me: Let me count the ways. Most of all, feminism is pretty much a nice girl who really, really wants so badly to be liked by everybody -- ladies who lunch, men who hate women, all the morons who demand choice and don't understand responsibility -- that it has become the easy lay of social movements. I am going to smack the next idiot who tells me that raising her children full time -- by which she really means going to Jivamukti classes and pedicure appointments while the nanny babysits -- is her feminist choice. Who can possibly take feminism seriously when it allows everything, as long as women choose it? The whole point to begin with was that women were losing their minds pushing mops and strollers all day without a room or a salary of their own.

Let's please be serious grown-ups: real feminists don't depend on men. Real feminists earn a living, have money and means of their own.

If the movement had been serious about being serious then the idea could not have caught on that equal is how you feel. Or that how anyone feels about anything matters at all. Men know better. They look at numbers, and here is how the statistics are running years after women first started screaming and yelling and burning bras: We still earn 81 percent of what men do, and an act to make things more fair was blocked in Congress by Republicans. For anyone who doesn't care to count, but understands traffic signals mixed with policy speculation, I think it's safe to say that the day is near when a teenage girl will be forced to get a vaginal probe before she is issued a learner's permit in the state of Virginia. And this is all because feminism has misread its mission of equality as something open to interpretation, as expressive and impressive, not absolute.'

As gender roles change, are men out of step?

Mastodon · 18 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Gender politics are alive and well in this country, let there be no doubt," said Dean Jennifer Delahunty, who laid it all out in a 2006 opinion piece in The New York Times exposing the widening gap in achievement.

"There's a kind of anti-intellectualism of young men that really bothers me," Delahunty said, "that it's not cool to be smart. That it's not cool to be engaged. That it's not cool to do your homework. That bothers me.

"Not only do they not enroll in college at the same rate as women, they don't graduate from college at the same rate. They don't retain at the same rate."

The numbers don't lie: Male college enrollment has been sliding for more than four decades - and it's expected to just get worse.
...
"Boys think that academic disengagement is a sign of masculinity," said Kimmel. "The less you can do in school, the less connected you are, the less interested you are, the more manly you are."'

Arizona dad fights for rights of divorced fathers

Mastodon · 18 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mike Espinoza's life has become a stereotype. Like divorced fathers across the country, the Apache Junction flooring installer crams a life with his sons into every other weekend and a few weeks in the summer.

He's furious about it and is trying to change it.

And while he hasn't yet won more time with his own children, he has given Arizona fathers a better chance at equal parenting time. In the process, he's become a role model to his 8- and 10-year-old sons.'

India: Men no more show manners around women

Mastodon · 18 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men and chivalry come together but guess with women talking a lot of economic independence, it's making them forget their basic etiquettes.

This is not some male bashing exercise nor is it a feminist piece but the days of men showing basic manners with women are all over! A male colleague shares an ice-cream with a female colleague and since the ice-cream is Rs.65, it is assumed that the money will be shared between the two. For Rs.35, the male colleague reminds his woman colleague twice when she is going to repay the money! Yes, this is a real case scenario between colleagues. Even if the male colleague could not afford to pay and was hoping to share the bill, he need not remind the woman colleague twice! A man asks a woman out for a date and he shares the Rs.10 two cookies bill with her! Friends go to watch a movie and the woman does not know she will be paying money for popcorn and tickets just because the man reveals he does not have a job and does not want to spend on any money for the time being!
...

Veer Singh, an investment banker says, "Women are getting independent. They proclaim so much about their fianancial independence so then they should not worry about splitting the bill or paying for us once in a while. Men have been showing chivalry for many years now, if women are so independent then why do they shy away and talk about chivalry in such situations?" Rati Sheth, a fashion designer feels men today are so careless about little things that would make us feel good. "I am happy that I am single. She says, "A male friend invited me to his place on the outskirts of the city for dinner and when I asked him to help me with directions to go home after the party got over, he simply refused. He said, I am an independent woman and can easily locate my place by asking for directions on the way, forget chivalry, basic helping nature has also vanished amongst people today."'

Canada: Top court hears landmark spousal abuse case

Mastodon · 18 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Supreme Court of Canada heard arguments Thursday on whether victims of domestic abuse can hire a hit man to kill their partners, a controversial issue which tests the limits of the defence of duress.

The case involves a Nova Scotia woman, Nicole Doucet, who tried to hire an undercover RCMP officer to kill her husband Michael Ryan.

The high school teacher was arrested in March 2008 and charged with counselling to commit murder.

She was acquitted of the charge two years later after the Nova Scotia Supreme Court accepted her argument that she thought she had no other way out of an abusive 15-year marriage to a man who repeatedly threatened her and her daughter.'

Texas school staff forced 'smelly, dirty' third-grader to shower, lawsuit says

Mastodon · 18 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FORT WORTH, Texas – The parents of a third-grade boy have sued two Texas school employees, alleging that they forced their son to strip and shower in front of them because he "smelled badly, was dirty and had bad hygiene."

The eight-year-old was singled out last November and taken to the nurse's office at Peaster Elementary School where he was forced to remove his clothes, the suit alleges, the Courthouse News Service reported.

The two school officials then "began violently washing his body with a washcloth, scrubbing him over a large portion of his body, stuck cotton balls in his ears, all while ridiculing and harassing him about being 'dirty,'" the complaint claims.'

UK: White working-class boys are consigned to education scrapheap, Ofsted warns

Mastodon · 18 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys from white working-class families are growing up with no hope of a decent education or career because of an ‘anti-school culture’, the head of Ofsted warned last night.

Sir Michael Wilshaw says generations of children in deprived areas are doomed to underachieve, thanks to an erosion of traditional community values and parents failing to set boundaries.

The chief inspector of schools said white boys from poor families were worst affected and achieved the worst results aged 16 at school.'

The cheapening of fathers, men and boys

Mastodon · 18 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here's a great Father's Day thought: Men and boys need help. They've become more self-destructive, more apathetic about success and more violent. Fewer are moving on to higher education, and boys and men alike are being outperformed in school by girls and women.

On this day, Fathers Day, the culture continues to redefine masculinity, but struggles to know what it means to be a "real" man. Meanwhile, the bashing of the traditional male role continues without surcease.

A case in point: CBS' Sunday Morning on Sunday celebrated Fathers Day by asking in its lead piece: "As gender roles change, are men out of step?" It's a scatter-shot piece, badly in need of focusing by a skilled editor, and it never really answers the question. Yet not a single defender of traditional role of men and fathers appeared to suggest why boys and men have gone off the rails. Instead, there is the demeaning reference to "out-date He-Man ideas."'

TV report features data on American boy crisis

Mastodon · 18 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men seem to be “out of step” in various parts of American society today, reports the popular CBS “Sunday Morning” TV show June 17; while focusing especially on how men are not enrolling in college at the same rate as women and “they don’t graduate from college at the same rate.” The numbers don't lie, added Sunday Morning while pointing to “male college enrollment has been sliding for more than four decades - and it's expected to just get worse.” On this same Father’s Day, First Lady Michelle Obama was speaking to graduates about today’s changing “traditional markers of success during the Oregon State University graduation ceremony in Corvallis, Oregon, June 17 that was televised state-wide by Oregon PBS. The First Lady was on hand to give the commencement address at Oregon State University, the school where her brother Craig Robinson is the head basketball coach. In turn, in what’s become evident - at both this university graduation and throughout the nation – is that women and not men are excelling in both college and all other aspects of American society.'

US Govt. Web Site Gives Dads Tips on Teaching Kids Hygiene, How to Eat

Matt · 18 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Wonder if there's one for moms, too? Excerpt:

'The federal government Web site www.fatherhood.gov offers a wide range of “tips” and resources for teaching men how to be a father, including “father-child” videos on healthy eating, teeth brushing and hand washing.

The taxpayer-funded website, launched during the Clinton administration, is a project of the National Responsible Fatherhood Clearinghouse, which is a part of Health and Human Services’ Office of Family Assistance. The site links to the videos on the University of Arkansas for Medical Sciences’ Psychiatric Research Institute’s Web site.'

Number of stay-at-home dads has doubled in past decade as 'man-cession' bites

Matt · 18 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It shows up in a UK paper but it's about US trends. Excerpt:

'Not too long ago, a father who chose to stay at home with kids while his wife went back to work after childbirth was something of an anomaly, opening the doors on countless Mr Mom jokes, but nowadays, a growing numbers of dads wear the moniker as a badge of honor.

Nationwide, the number of stay-at-home fathers - while still relatively small - has more than doubled in the past decade. There were only about 81,000 Mr Moms in 2001, or about 1.6 per cent of all stay-at-home parents.

By last year, the number had climbed to 176,000, or 3.4 per cent of stay-at-home fathers, according to U.S. Census data.'

A Father's Day downer

Matt · 18 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From the loving, engaged portrayals of fathers featured in recent popular movies like “The Descendants,” “Moneyball” and “A Better Life” — all three performances were nominated for Academy Awards — one might conclude American dads are culturally valued.

Look again. The mothers in these films are comatose, divorced or dead. It’s no coincidence. From Atticus Finch to today, there’s an unspoken Hollywood rule that fathers can’t shine too brightly in the face of active mothering. Dads are more likely to be accorded respect when they are “coping” — in effect, when they are surrogate mothers.

Sadly, it is not only in Hollywood where fathers get the short end of the stick. The culture reflects a painful and pervasive social reality: For all we talk about the value of fathers, we have been devaluing and discarding them for decades.

We must first diagnose this cancer. Then we must systematically work to cure it.

Why do fathers matter so much? Because fatherhood makes men out of boys, for one thing. And because typically they offer children a just as necessary but different kind of love and guidance from what mothers bestow.'

Fathers Day Index 2012: Dads Worth Less Than Moms

Mastodon · 19 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers of America, you may consider yourselves indispensable, but a new survey says you're only worth about one-third as much as mom around the house.

In fact, you are not even keeping up with inflation.

Insurance news and data website Insure.com released its annual Father's Day Index on Monday, an attempt to calculate the value in wage terms of the work a father typically does around the house.

The value this year was some $20,248, about $1,000 less than the inflation-adjusted value of 10 years ago.'

"Silenced US lawmaker performs The Vagina Monologues"

Mastodon · 19 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A US lawmaker who says she was barred from speaking in the Michigan House because Republicans objected to her saying the word "vagina" during debate over anti-abortion legislation performed The Vagina Monologues on the Statehouse steps — with a hand from the author.

Eve Ensler, whose groundbreaking play about women's sexuality still packs theaters 16 years after it debuted, oversaw Monday night's performance by Democratic state Rep. Lisa Brown, 10 other lawmakers and several actresses.
...
"If we ever knew deep in our hearts that the issue about abortion ... was not really about fetuses and babies, but really men's terror of women's sexuality and power, I think it's fully evidenced here," Ensler told The Associated Press by phone Monday before arriving in Lansing.'

Boy castrated by his own drug addict mother at five weeks old

Broadsword · 19 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Five years ago, five-week-old Holden Gothia was sleeping inside the suburban Houston apartment he shared with his parents when he was castrated by his own mother who was high on drugs.

Katherine Nadal claimed the family dog tore off her son's genitals but a jury found her guilty and she was sentenced to 99 years in prison in August 2009.

...

He has had a number of medical issues and has undergone surgery on his left foot after his mother's attack left him with a severed artery, but, for now, Holden is unaware of the true extent of his injuries.

'I think in his mind, genitals are something he gets when he gets older and the response to that comment is, "you're exactly right, you will, when you're older," which is not untrue,' Patches DeShazo, his paternal aunt and legal guardian, told Fox News.'

STEM Title IX Before it Hits the Classroom

Mastodon · 19 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With such an emphasis on the underrepresentation of women in math and science, it's important to remember that this is not the whole story. From the picture groups like the AAUW paint, one might expect that our colleges and universities -- and especially the academic sciences -- remain openly hostile toward women. Of course, nothing could be farther from the truth. Today, women earn more bachelor's degrees (57 percent), master's degrees (59 percent) and now PhDs by a small margin than men. What's more, roughly 50 percent of medical school students are female; and veterinary classes are (on average) comprised of 75 percent women.

The problem is that feminists on the left continue to change how we measure women's success. It's no longer sufficient that women out-earn men in terms of higher degrees; now the problem is that women are gravitating toward the wrong fields. It's true women are inclined toward degrees in art history, biology, English and education, while men are overrepresented in computer science, engineering, math and physics. And in certain subsets of the hard sciences -- such as computer programming and engineering -- women are dramatically underrepresented. Still, as Christina Hoff Sommers of the American Enterprise Institute reminds us in her book, The Science on Women and Science, the reason for the disparity is hardly one-dimensional. And she reminds us, in academics, "the physical sciences are the exception, not the rule.'

'Treating Men Like 4-Year-Olds'

Mastodon · 19 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I've always said that it's a generally fantastic experience to be a man in our culture. This is because, in comparison to women, we men get way more room to be ourselves or do what is most comfortable for us. One of the areas in life where men are most coddled is in how we are permitted to emotionally express ourselves.

Specifically, I am talking about the excuses that women make for men who lack emotional follow-through. For me, emotional follow-through is about the capability to completely and clearly express emotions or emotional responsibilities -- whether that means someone apologizing in a heartfelt way, expressing affection, etc. I'm not talking about extraordinary expressions of emotion; rather, I am addressing the most basic forms of emotional follow-through like, "I love you" and "I'm sorry."'

Julian Assange Seeks Asylum In Ecuador

Mastodon · 19 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Politics aside, I really can't blame the guy for seeking asylum considering he's doomed if he faces the Swedish sex gestapo. Excerpt:

'LONDON — WikiLeaks chief Julian Assange has taken refuge at the Ecuadorian Embassy in London, seeking asylum in a long shot move that would see him trade the glare of an often-hostile British press for the comforts of a small Latin American nation governed by a friendly leader.

Ecuadorean Foreign Minister Ricardo Patino said the leftist government of President Rafael Correa – an administration often at odds with Washington – was weighing the request. He did not indicate when a decision might be made.

Assange's legal options in the U.K. had almost completely run out. Less than a week ago Britain's Supreme Court re-endorsed its decision to allow the 40-year-old's extradition to Sweden, where he is wanted over sex crimes allegations. The accusations – which stem from Assange's trip to the country in mid-2010 – have cast a cloud over his online organization's spectacular leaks of U.S. military, diplomatic, and intelligence material.'

Unblinding Lady Justice: SAVE Calls on Dept. of Education to Respond to Civil Rights Complaints

Matt · 19 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Teri Stoddard
Email: tstoddard@saveservices.org

WASHINGTON / June 19, 2012 – Over a year after the Department of Education issued its controversial sex assault policy, the federal agency has yet to respond to concerns about civil rights violations. Stop Abusive and Violent Environments renews its call to the federal agency to safeguard students' rights rather than seek to curtail them.

The policy was issued by the Dept. of Education's Office for Civil Rights on April 4, 2011 without prior opportunity for public comment or debate. On August 24, 2011, SAVE sent a letter to the DED requesting that the policy be rescinded: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/OCRLetter.pdf

In addition, 12 other organizations have issued statements opposing the directive. These groups include the American Association for University Professors, the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education, Alliance Defense Fund, Feminists for Free Expression, American Booksellers Foundation for Free Expression, Tully Center for Free Speech at Syracuse University, Accuracy in Media, Heartland Institute, American Council for Trustees and Alumni, National Association for Scholars, John William Pope Center for Higher Education Policy, and Defending Dissent Foundation: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/sex-assault/complaints/

In addition, over 50 editorials have criticized the mandate as removing fundamental civil rights from persons accused of sexual assault: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/ded-editorials/ Many worry that reducing due process protections will invite false accusations, robbing real victims of needed protections and credibility.

In a recent Brown University case, Marcella Dresdale accused a classmate of rape. The accused man, William McCormick, was forced to leave the university. McCormick later sued the accuser's father, Richard Dresdale, a wealthy Brown donor, alleging the benefactor had interfered with the university's investigative procedures, violating his due process rights. The Dresdales agreed to an out-of-court settlement, reportedly after McCormick had been offered $1 million.

"Over the past year, many leading groups have called on the DED to rescind its mandate that universities rely on the preponderance-of-the-evidence standard for sexual assault allegations," notes SAVE spokesman Philip Cook. "But the federal Office of Civil Rights has yet to respond. Stonewalling these requests, and allowing false accusations of rape to continue, constitutes a parody of justice."

June is False Allegations Awareness Month. According to a national telephone survey, one in 10 persons has been falsely accused of abuse: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/survey/

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is a victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to partner abuse: www.saveservices.org

Before Birth, Dad’s ID

Matt · 19 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. First thing they think of is to use it to get the father of the fetus to start paying for the mother's decision to have the baby. I know this is a tough issue for many of us. Point is, as long as a man has no post-conceptive reproductive rights, why should he be legally on the hook for a decision which is not his but entirely hers, yet even before the infant is born? Excerpt:

'It is an uncomfortable question that, in today’s world, is often asked by expectant mothers who had more than one male partner at the time they became pregnant. Who is the father?
...
Besides relieving anxiety, the test results might allow women to terminate a pregnancy if the preferred man is not the father — or to continue it if he is.

Men who clearly know they are the father might be more willing to support the woman financially and emotionally during the pregnancy, which some studies suggest might lead to healthier babies.

And if the tests gain legal acceptance, some lawyers say, women and state governments might one day pursue child support payments without having to wait until the birth. Under current law, “until and unless the pregnancy produces a child, any costs associated with it are regarded as the woman’s personal problem,” said Shari Motro, a law professor at the University of Richmond.'

F&F: Michigan Protects Biological Fathers' Rights

Matt · 20 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Michigan Governor Rick Snyder signed into law Senate Bill 557, giving biological fathers some rights to their children, even if the mothers were married to other men at the time of a child's birth. The previous 1956 law presumed that a woman's husband is the father of her children, making the husband responsible for their support and denying parental rights to the biological father.

Lawmakers recently passed four bills extending rights to biological fathers. In a statement, Governor Snyder said "children thrive with parental involvement" and said "the legislation promotes increased involvement by making it easier to recognize biological fathers."'

SAVE E-lert: Tell Secretary of Education Arne Duncan, We're Tired of Waiting

Matt · 20 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

On April 4, 2011 without public comment or debate, the Department of Education issued its controversial "Dear Colleague" letter on sex assault. The directive requires federally supported universities to institute numerous changes to their policies and procedures regarding allegations of sexual harassment and sexual violence.

Concerned that the Dept. of Ed. policy fails to protect fundamental constitutional principles, over 50 editorials have criticized the mandate. SAVE and 12 other organizations have issued statements opposing the directive: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/sex-assault/complaints/

It's been over a year since Dept. of Ed. secretary Arne Duncan starting getting complaints, yet he's still disturbingly silent.

"Stonewalling these requests, and allowing false accusations of rape to continue, constitutes a parody of justice," notes SAVE spokesman Philip W. Cook in Unblinding Lady Justice: SAVE Calls on Dept. of Education to Respond to Civil Rights Complaints.

Seems Arne thinks he can ignore us. So we need your help. Tell Arne Duncan to rescind the Sexual Assault policy, immediately. Tell him once, tell him twice, tell him three times!

Contact Arne Duncan: arne.duncan-at-ed.gov

Thank you, all, for the miracles we create together!

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Exposing Feminism: The Thirty Years' War Against Men

Matt · 20 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Sample chapters from Swayne O'Pie's Exposing Feminism: The Thirty Years' War Against Men

This book has just been published (11 June 2012) internationally, in both paperback and ebook editions (Kindle only). The Kindle edition is downloadable onto PCs and Macs using free-to-download software from Amazon. It's also downloadable onto some e-readers in addition to the Kindle device. The content of the UK paperback edition, which has the title Why Britain Hates Men: Exposing Feminism is virtually identical.

The book has 53 chapters, and the following material is being made freely available (also available here) in this download:

Foreword
Author's Note
Preface
Table of Contents
Introduction
Chapter 1 – Cultural Misandry: The Widespread Disrespect for Men
Chapter 2 – Why Would Anyone Want to Disagree with Feminism?
Chapter 9 – Who Are These Women Who Make the World Worse for Men?
Chapter 15 – For Feminism Success Will Never be Enough: 'Forever' Feminism
Chapter 20 – Feminism and Women's Choices
Chapter 26 – Women Choose Low Pay and Low Status
Chapter 39 – Top Jobs for the Sisters: Can Positive Discrimination be Justified?

Australian judge writes unusual letter to two children involved in custody battle

Mastodon · 21 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MELBOURNE, Australia -- An Australian judge took the extraordinary step of writing to two children involved in a custody dispute, explaining why he gave sole custody to their mom even though he does not accept her claims that their dad abused them.

Australian Federal Magistrate Tom Altobelli published his decision on the court's website, ordering the boy, 11, and his sister, 6, to live with their mom, and the dad's contact to be restricted to letters and birthday cards.

The judge's letter, which is to be opened once the children turn 14, is a plea that the children renew contact with the father, explaining that their mother's claims he abused them are false.'

CDC seeking comments on "World Trade Center Health Program: Addition of Certain Types of Cancer to List of WTC-Related Health Conditions"

Minuteman · 21 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. It was overwhelmingly Men who put their health at risk to save others on 9/11, so readers knowledgable about such matters might like to submit a comment to the CDC. Excerpt:

'SUMMARY: Title I of the James Zadroga 9/11 Health and Compensation Act of 2010 amended the Public Health Service Act (PHS Act) to establish the World Trade Center (WTC) Health Program. The WTC Health Program, which is administered by the Director of the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH), within the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), provides medical monitoring and treatment to eligible firefighters and related personnel, law enforcement officers, and rescue, recovery, and cleanup workers who responded to the September 11, 2001, terrorist attacks in New York City, at the Pentagon, and in Shanksville, Pennsylvania, and to eligible survivors of the New York City attacks. In accordance with our regulations, which establish procedures for adding a new condition to the list of health conditions covered by the WTC Health Program, this proposed rule would add certain types of cancer to the List of WTC-Related Health Conditions.'

Mother who dumped newborn down garbage chute now looking for work as home health aide

Mastodon · 21 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Brooklyn judge was baffled yesterday when a mother who dumped her newborn down a garbage chute said she is looking for work as a home health aide.

Laquasia Wright must hold down a job as part of a deal in which she pleaded guilty to endangering the welfare of a child — but Justice Patricia DiMango was stumped by her career choice.

“That’s probably the least appropriate job for her,” DiMango told Wright and her lawyer. “It defies logic. I don’t think it’s the best choice.”

Wright was 18 when she was charged last year with trying to kill her baby boy by tossing him out with the trash at a Fort Greene housing project.'

Are Men Less Moral Than Women? Studies Show Ethical Standards

Mastodon · 21 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the most notable risk factors for ethical laxity is one that all of the above offenders share: Being a man. A number of studies demonstrate that men have lower moral standards than women, at least in competitive contexts. For example, men are more likely than women to minimize the consequences of moral misconduct, to adopt ethically questionable tactics in strategic endeavors, and to engage in greater deceit. This pattern is particularly pronounced in arenas in which success has (at least historically) been viewed as a sign of male vigor and competence, and where loss signifies weakness, impotence, or cowardice (e.g., a business negotiation or a chess match). When men must use strategy or cunning to prove or defend their masculinity, they are willing to compromise moral standards to assert dominance.

Shall we blame it on testosterone, the Y chromosome, or other genetic differences? The current evidence doesn't point in that direction. Instead, a recent series of studies by Laura Kray and Michael Haselhuhn suggests that the root of this pattern may be more socio-cultural in nature, as men - at least in American culture - seem motivated to protect and defend their masculinity. These scientists suggest that losing a "battle," particularly in contexts that are highly competitive and historically male oriented, presents a threat to masculine competency. Apparently manhood is relatively fragile and precarious, and when it is challenged, men tend to become more aggressive and defensive. So a man's gotta do what a man's gotta do. To ensure victory, men will sacrifice moral standards if doing so means winning.'

Uganda: Forceful circumcision in Mbale: Police fire teargas

Mastodon · 21 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Police in Mbale have fired teargas and deployed heavily to disperse hooligans forcefully circumcising people on the streets including non-Bamasaba.

The District Police Commander, Michael Angucia Wednesday vowed to crack down the hooligans who are causing insecurity in the town.

“I am not trying to fight the culture of the Bamasaba but the way the practice is handled may cause tribal conflicts. Several people have fled the town, property robbed and business is being paralyzed,” Angucia said.

“We have deployed on the streets to arrest the hooligans,” Angucia added.

He said that several groups of such people have taken advantage of the cultural festival of the Bamasaba to force whoever they suspect to have not been circumcised.'

Jimmy Rollins Joins Other Notables In PSA Against Domestic Violence

Mastodon · 21 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PHILADELPHIA (CBS) — A Phillies star is among the athletes speaking out against dating violence and domestic abuse in a new public service announcement put out by the White House.

When sports heroes like Jimmy Rollins speak out…

(Rollins:) “No woman should have to fear abuse. No man should hit a woman for any reason.”

...Vice President Joe Biden wants men and boys to listen up:

(Biden:) “If you strike a woman, you’re not a man, you’re a coward.”
...
(Pres. Obama and montage:) “Listen up guys, listen up: no one should ever hit a woman. Not their wife, not their girlfriend, not their date.”'

Maine Compass: Father's Day is a time to reflect on meaning of being a 'good dad'

Mastodon · 21 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Father's Day can be filled with happiness and precious memories, or it can be a reminder of violence and emotional pain.

In everyday lives affected by domestic violence, victims and family members often will try to balance a violent equation by saying, "But he is such a good dad."

This will be said within the very same sentence that describes a man's horrific acts of violence perpetrated on his family.

Do we expect so little of men in America that changing a diaper or taking a child out for a meal can outweigh the consequences of his abusive behavior?'

Canada: Judge to rule on whether obesity is factor in man's fitness for fatherhood

Mastodon · 21 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OTTAWA — In a family court case to be ruled on soon, a judge will, in part, decide whether a 38-year-old Ottawa man is too fat to be a dad.

The Royal Ottawa Hospital's family court clinic, which does court-ordered assessments on parents, is now using obesity as a factor when deciding if parents are fit to raise children.

In court filings by child-welfare authorities in the case of an obese Ottawa father who is fighting for custody of his two boys, a doctor at the family court clinic wrote:

"Finally, (father) has struggled with obesity for years, which impacts significantly on most aspects of his life including (his) functioning as a parent. He was short of breath or winded in simply walking short distances about the clinic and he lacks both the mobility and stamina required to keep up with young and active children.'

"Step up guys: Sports stars condemn dating violence"

Mastodon · 21 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some of the biggest names in sport have lined up with President Barack Obama to condemn violence against women in an advertisement showcased by the White House on Thursday.

Soccer star David Beckham, major league baseball players Evan Longoria and Jimmy Rollins, National Football League quarterback Eli Manning, and basketball sensation Jeremy Lin were among those recruited to speak out against violence.

The ad will run this summer on television and the Internet.'

Woman arrested for fake sexual assault claim

Matt · 21 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FERNANDINA BEACH, Fla. -- A woman has been arrested and charged with filing a false police report after she claimed she was the victim of a sexual attack at Main Beach on May 30.

Jennifer Riechert, 32, was arrested Friday and was being held in the Nassau County Jail on $15,000 bond, according to a release from the Fernandina Beach Police Department.

Detectives found that the incident did not happen, and Riechert has since recanted her claim. Riechert purposely misidentified a man she described as homeless as her attacker.'

Father's brain more valuable than their wallet

Broadsword · 22 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers who want successful sons should focus on passing on their advice and worldly wisdom rather than their money, a study suggests.

Although boys with wealthier fathers usually grow up to earn higher-than-average incomes themselves, researchers said their parents' money may not be the deciding factor.

Intelligence, advice, work ethic and other "human capital endowments" which sons inherit from their fathers are more important than money in determining how successful they will be, the experts wrote in the Journal of Political Economy.'

Barbara Kay: Britain strikes first major blow for father's rights

Matt · 22 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The first radical shake-up of family courts in decades is under way in the U.K. A dramatic list of consequences will befall any breach of court orders that flout court-endorsed arrangements for the care of children of separated parents. Children's Minister Tim Loughton will announce that the Children Act 19879, which states that the child comes first in law courts, will be rewritten.

Henceforth the preferred option for the courts will be "the presumption that a child's welfare is likely to furthered through safe involvement with both parents." That is, in the absence of abuse, equal parenting, exactly the template we have been patiently awaiting in Canada, will be the default for splitting couples. Furthermore, mothers who refuse to permit access to the children may lose their passports, their driving licences or even their freedom of movement if they fail to comply.

This is a happy, but somewhat shocking, development for those in the global Fathers Rights community. For years objective observers in all western countries have hammered away at the double standards imposed in family court under the influence of feminist ideology, but it has been water dripping on a stone. The template has remained stubbornly pro-mother and anti-father. When custody disputes cannot be amicably resolved, courts routinely assign sole custody to mothers. Swift and often draconian penalties attend any failure to pay support by men, including jail time, but women who habitually and arbitrarily deny fathers court-ordered time with their children are rarely even threatened with repercussions, let alone punished. Here in Canada, the attitude of family courts was best summed up in 2003 by then Liberal Justice Minister Martin Cauchon, who said with regard fathers who were denied parenting status, "Men have no rights, only responsibilities."'

SAVE: Connecting for Change: Only One Week Left, Register Today

Matt · 22 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

June is False Allegations Awareness Month. Luckily, you can still register for the Connecting for Change conference.

"False Allegations: A Blight to Families and Society"

"How To" Presentations
Write your own legal briefs.
Draft a bill while avoiding legal fees.
...and more.

Brainstorming sessions and networking opportunities.

Who Should Attend?
Educators, academics, legal professionals, law enforcement, individuals interested in false allegation prevention, social justice advocates, activists, victims of false allegations, and more.

Location
901 Fifteenth Street, NW, Washington, DC 20005
Metro: Blue-Orange Line, McPherson Square

Date/Time
June 30, 2012
9 am to 4:15 pm

Registration
There is no charge to attend, but preregistration is necessary. Send an email to: info-at-saveservices.org.

Meet members of the Domestic Violence Legislative Project (DVLP). Join this dynamic group of movers and shakers!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

After 40 years, Title IX is getting old for boys

Mastodon · 23 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

To hear reporters tell it, Americans one and all are gathering to celebrate the 40th anniversary of Title IX. But if you look closer, you'll notice that some people are missing - notably the thousands of male student-athletes who have lost participation opportunities because their teams were cut or capped.
...
However, the glowing media coverage of Title IX's anniversary avoids these dirty details and blatantly crosses the line from objective reporting to cheerleading. Any damage done by Title IX's enforcement is roundly ignored, and any criticism is summarily dismissed.

The team at ESPN has done its best to invent new scapegoats for the loss of male athletic opportunities. For example, ESPN's Peter Keating claims that "you will find that the real enemy of men's sports isn't Title IX. It's National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) scholarship limits." His theory fails to consider that hundreds of colleges don't even offer athletic scholarships.'

Queen’s Park baby bled to death two days after being circumcised

Matt · 23 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A one-month-old baby from Queen’s Park bled to death less than two days after he was circumcised, an inquest heard.

Angelo Ofori-Mintah’s operation went according to plan, but a few hours later the incision began to bleed.

Westminster Coroner’s Court heard it eventually stopped and his mother Maame Abrafi, who lives in Ashmore Road, thought he was fine.

However the following day he became cold and pale and was rushed to hospital with dangerously low oxygen levels.

He suffered a cardiac arrest and died in the early hours of February 17.

Tests revealed he had lost about three-quarters of his total blood volume and died as a result of an acute haemorrhage due to circumcision.'

40 years after Title IX, women still lag in tech fields

Mastodon · 23 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On the academic side, women earn the majority of degrees at the associate's, bachelor's, master's and doctoral levels.

Yet their numbers lag in what are known as the STEM fields — science, technology, engineering and math. Education Department data show, for example, that just 17% of engineering and 18% of computer science-related bachelor's degrees in 2009-10 were awarded to women. Women make up 25% of the STEM workforce.

Several conference participants, including Education Secretary Arne Duncan and King, stressed the economic imperative for encouraging more girls to pursue careers in STEM fields.
...
Sabrina Schaeffer, executive director of the non-profit Independent Women's Forum, which is critical of Title IX, said efforts to level the STEM playing field could have the opposite effect: "If we don't have enough women in engineering, are the schools going to cut engineering programs?" said Schaeffer, who spoke Wednesday at a separate Title IX event in Washington. "We have to recognize that men and women are different and are going to make different choices."'

'Title IX's Dark Legacy'

Mastodon · 23 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When the summer Olympics begin next month, commentators will point to young girls eagerly watching female track stars, soccer players, gymnasts and swimmers, and celebrate how Title IX, a law passed 40 years ago, has helped so many girls and young women have the chance to play sports.

That's an important part of Title IX's legacy.

Yet there's another side to the story. It's one that could be told by male gymnasts, swimmers, and track stars: And that's how men's sports teams have been sacrificed in order to achieve "proportionality" as demanded by those enforcing Title IX. Mothers concerned about their sons' diminishing prospects might rightly bow out of Title IX's anniversary celebrations, and ask why the focus continues to be solely on bolstering female participation on college campuses, even as young men fall further behind.'

With eye on female voters, Wasserman Schultz, Obama mark Title IX anniversary

Mastodon · 23 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lawmakers and President Obama on Saturday celebrated the 40th anniversary of Title IX, which ensured equal rights for men and women in education.

Obama and other Democrats marking the occasion didn't mention politics, but the coordinated effort seemed aimed at 2012 voters, particularly women.

Democrats all year have been doing everything they can to create a gender gap between Obama and his presumptive GOP opponent this fall, Mitt Romney.

"From addressing inequality in math and science education to preventing sexual assault on campus to fairly funding athletic programs, Title IX ensures equality for our young people in every aspect of their education," President Barack Obama wrote in a Newsweek op-ed published Saturday. "It's a springboard for success."'

No Male Teachers Equals No Future Men

Mastodon · 23 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to a 2009 report, more than a quarter of English children do not have even a single male teacher at their school. For many children, that means they have greatly reduced contact during the day with an adult man until age 11 when they go to secondary school. Children who don't have a father in the home may not have any regular contact with a male role model until they go to secondary school.

The situation is similar in America, and Canada, and Australia—where between 70 to 75 percent of teachers are female.

Why is society robbing young boys of the masculine role models they need?

The lack of male leaders in schools is all the more hurtful considering the fact that most of the children going to school come from broken families or families that will one day experience divorce. America has more than 13 million single parents raising more than 21 million children. More than four out of five of those custodial parents are mothers.'

Barack Obama ad says women are paid "77 cents on the dollar for doing the same work as men"

Mastodon · 23 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 77 cent figure has become a rallying cry for those who seek to eliminate employment discrimination based on gender. And it's a genuine statistic. In a report released in September 2011, the U.S. Census Bureau wrote that in 2010, the female-to-male earnings ratio of full-time, year-round workers was 0.77." Translated into dollars, that means that in 2010, women working full-time earned 77 cents for every dollar earned by men working full time.

But the Obama ad takes a solid statistic and describes it incorrectly. The campaign is wrong to say that the 77-cent figure describes the pay differences between men and women "doing the same work." (By contrast, former Virginia Gov. Tim Kaine recently earned a Mostly True on a similar claim because he was not specifying the number was for the same occupations.)

The 77-cent figure compares all male and female workers, regardless of their occupation. Whether due to a historical legacy of discrimination or because of personal choice, women and men are disproportionately represented in certain jobs. For instance, women dominate the ranks of receptionists, nurses, and elementary and middle-school teachers, among other fields. Men are disproportionately truck drivers, managers and computer software engineers.'

Obama celebrates college gender gap

Mastodon · 23 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Today, thanks in no small part to the confidence and determination they developed through competitive sports and the work ethic they learned with their teammates, girls who play sports are more likely to excel in school," wrote Obama. "In fact, more women as a whole now graduate from college than men. This is a great accomplishment — not just for one sport or one college or even just for women but for America. And this is what Title IX is all about."
...
"We have come so far. But there's so much farther we can go," Obama wrote. "There are always more barriers we can break and more progress we can make. As president, I'll do my part to keep Title IX strong and vibrant, and maintain our schools as doorways of opportunity so every child has a fair shot at success."'

Report: Young women earn more than young men

Mastodon · 23 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(NECN/WTVJ: Christina Hernandez) - Young women are earning more money than men, according to Time Magazine and USA Today.

Genesis Hernandez is studying English and culinary arts at Miami-Dade College.

She isn't surprised to hear single women in their 20s are earning more than young men.

"A woman has more motivation to study, to get a degree, to be somebody," Hernandez said. "For me it's really important to get a degree."

Education is key.

Both Time Magazine and USA Today say more women go to college than men.

Once there, women are more likely to graduate or earn advanced degrees.

Among African-Americans and Hispanics, women are more than twice as likely as men to earn college degrees.'

HIV-positive woman charged with felonious assault

Mastodon · 24 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who called police to report domestic violence was charged herself with felonious assault after police learned she did not disclose her HIV-positive status to her boyfriend.

Tyeashea D. Taltoan, 27, told police her boyfriend David Brooks, 50, punched her in the face Tuesday evening during an argument at the Wagon Wheel Motel on Market Street, where the couple had been staying, and that she wanted to file domestic violence charges, according to reports. Police said they interviewed Brooks, who told them they were fighting because Taltoan did not disclose that she had HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, during their seven-month relationship when they had unprotected sexual relations.

Brooks said he confronted Taltoan after finding HIV-related medicine and that he wanted to pursue charges against her, reports state.'

Pledge to Never Commit, Condone or Remain Silent regarding Violence against Women and Girls

Mastodon · 24 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Following this event, a group of Canadian men decided they had a responsibility to urge men to speak out about violence against women in all its forms.

Wearing a white ribbon would be a symbol of men's commitment to never commit, condone, or remain silent about violence against women. Today, the White Ribbon Campaign is the largest effort in the world of men working to end violence against women.

Domestic Violence is one of the most pervasive crimes affecting in country. The Center for Disease Control reports that one in four women will experience abuse in their lifetime and according to the U.S. Department of Justice, female victims equal eighty-four percent of all intimate partner violence whose abuse was perpetrated by their male partners.'

Spurned lover who attempted to bite off lover's penis during row is given two-year restraining order

Mastodon · 24 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A spurned lover has been handed a two year restraining order after she was convicted of assaulting her partner - by biting his penis during a furious row.

Vicious Sinead Walker, 40, grabbed hold of Vincent Rennoldson's manhood and tried to 'pull it off' when he angrily ordered her out of his flat.

The drunken mum-of-one who had downed an entire bottle of wine before going round to apologise for a previous bust-up - then sunk her teeth into his private parts.'

Spotlighting the masculine vulnerabilities to AIDS

Mastodon · 24 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With an objective to raise awareness on how men's behaviour, attitudes and practices are contributing towards the spread of HIV and AIDS, a two-day exhibition displaying traditional truck art opened at Nomad Art Gallery on Saturday, said a press release.

The exhibition is a part of "Driving on Empty – a truck art based HIV and AIDS prevention and advocacy initiative", implemented by Amal Human Development Network with the support from Direct Aid Programme of the Australian High Commission.

The campaign aims at investigating and understanding vulnerabilities of truck drivers to HIV and AIDS, which puts their sexual partners, spouses and unborn children at risk as well. The combination of research and work with truck drivers and truck artists has resulted in producing a series of moving testimonials and panels that express the experiences, hopes and fears of respondents in a sensitive and unique manner.'

'Blame it on Hormones: Men are the Cause of Today's Problems'

Mastodon · 24 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Wall Street Journal has had a flurry of great headlines lately: "Inside Fumbled Facebook IPO" and "JP Morgan Reveals 'London Whale'-Size Losses." While reading these and other stories about the massive losses surrounding the Facebook IPO and JP Morgan's hedging losses, I couldn't help but notice how it was men who caused the vast majority of these recent (and several past) problems. What if Facebook's all-male Board of Directors had chosen a female investment banker to head up their ill-fated IPO? What if the "London Whale" or his male boss had been a woman? What if Enron's bad boys had been girls? What if Nick Leeson, who ruined Barings, had been named Nicole? How many bonuses could Societé Générale have paid with the $7 billion blown by rogue trader Jérôme Kerviel if he had been a she?'

Girls Only Celebration Draws 700 Girls

Mastodon · 24 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The day was about finding a reason to like yourself, finding support and finding friends. It was also the largest culminating event yet held by Girls Only, an HWDSB program that develops high self-esteem, mentoring and positive role models for female students.

On Friday, 700 girls from elementary school clubs across HWDSB gathered at Dofasco Recreation Park. They enjoyed physically active games, they shared a lunch, they heard inspirational speeches and they were both entertained and entertaining in the lead up to a group dance finale. The girls in grades 6 to 8 were also meeting secondary school students who will help with their transition to Grade 9.'

Study proves Lesbian families do “very well” without father figures

Mastodon · 24 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent study has shown that children of lesbian parents do not suffer from the lack of a prominent male role model. Researchers from the University of Amsterdam and UCLA’s Williams institute have rebutted the common accusation, often pitted against lesbian families.

The results throw doubt on recent research conducted by conservative sociologist Mark Regenerus that claimed to find same sex children fare worse than their straight-parented contemporaries.

...

The lack of a male role model has been used as an excuse to bar lesbian parents from adopting. It is hoped this new research will go some way to ending issues of discrimination around gay parenting.'

Three Biggest Fears for Raising Boys Today

Matt · 24 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Attorney, TV legal analyst, and author Lisa Bloom is out with her new critically-acclaimed book "Swagger: 10 Urgent Rules for Raising Boys in an Era of Failing Schools, Mass Joblessness, and Thug Culture" and she's here to give a wake-up call to parents raising young boys. From failing schools to an economy of incarceration, Lisa explains the major threats hindering our boys ability to succeed in today's world and offers up real solutions to these urgent issues.

In Lisa's words:
"At this very moment, through no fault of their own, our boys are caught in the vortex of four powerful, insidious, often invisible forces that conspire to rob them of their future. First, our heartbreakingly subpar schools. ... At even the best schools our kids graduate without knowing the basics of US history or the rudiments of science. Our kids already enjoy some of the shortest school days and school years in the developed world. And now we are witnessing a new sickening trend: in over one hundred counties in America, state budget cuts have pared the school week down to only four days. Hooray! An extra day every week to watch Fear Factor and play Xbox!"'

From the Amazon.com book description:

'From Swagger: "At this very moment, through no fault of their own, our boys are caught in the vortex of four powerful, insidious, often invisible forces which conspire to rob them of their future." We medicate, discipline, suspend and expel our boys from school at quadruple the rate of girls. We let double the number of boys drop out of high school than girls, and of those boys who do graduate, they are far more likely than their sisters to be illiterate, to fail to go to college, or to drop out of college if they do go. Young American men are unemployed at the rate of their counterparts in Arab Spring countries. Pop culture hammers our boys with the message that manhood equals emotional numbness, gun violence, rape, and drug use. And we incarcerate more of our boys and men than any other country on earth, now or in human history.'

And get this, according to the Amazon.com entry, she is Gloria Allred's daughter!

How living in London is seriously harming men's health

MikeJH · 25 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Living in London can seriously damage men's health, a new study reveals today.

It points to shocking disparity across the capital, with life expectancy in some areas up to 17 years shorter than in others.

The Bureau of Investigative Journalism study shows that the NHS is failing to improve the chances of men surviving heart disease and cancer — key factors to blame for early death.

Both conditions can be triggered by poor diet, smoking, drinking and lack of exercise. Suicide is another leading cause of death, especially among young men.

Experts blame health chiefs for failing to invest in initiatives targeted at men to help them improve their physical and mental wellbeing. Only a handful of health trusts in the capital commission services specifically for the male population, according to the Bureau's findings.'

Yorktown University Offers Free Access to Online Lecture: “Political Correctness and Feminism”

Mastodon · 26 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Bowling Green, OH, June 25, 2012 --(PR.com)-- The free, pre-recorded lecture is given by Dr. Richard Zeller, a sociologist who developed an online course for Yorktown University on Political Correctness and authored articles such as "Gender Bias Paranoia" and "Political Correctness: Sociology's Achilles Heel." Dr. Zeller was active in promoting Yorktown University in Press Conferences at the National Press Club in 2000. Dr. Zeller had noted that a survey at the university in Ohio where he taught found many students complaining that their classes were too politicized by left-leaning faculty. In response, he proposed a course that would examine political correctness. His department rejected the course proposal and Dr. Zeller accepted Yorktown University's invitation to offer his course online.

Dr. Zeller defines political correctness as “the attempt to limit thought in science, education and culture by intimidation, force and other forms of coercion. Certifying that some thought is ‘correct’ and other is not enables those who are ‘correct’ thinkers to avoid free and fair competition of ideas by threats and intimidation."
...
“Radical feminist elements are willing to lie, cheat, steal and almost anything else to achieve their political objective,” he warns, adding, that “feminist charges of sexism and gender unfairness are an attack on values that enabled democracy, education, liberty and freedom to thrive in America.”'

German judges rule parents can be brought to court for circumcising children

Matt · 26 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Parents having their sons circumcised can be brought before a judge for causing bodily injury, even if they did so for religious reasons, a regional court in Germany has ruled.

The recent landmark decision will likely draw the condemnation of Jewish and Muslim communities, although official representatives have refrained from commenting so far, saying they first want to study the reasons given for the judgment.

Following the judgment by the District Court of Cologne, neither the rights of parents nor the constitutional freedom of religion can justify interventions such as circumcision, according to Financial Times Deutschland, which first reported the story.'

Seems two moms are fine for some, but not two dads

Matt · 26 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. But to be fair, they don't seem to like gay women, either. Excerpt:

'Just a few months after anti-gay group One Million Moms launched a campaign to remove Ellen DeGeneres as JCPenney's spokesperson because of her sexual orientation, the group is boycotting the department store over a new ad featuring a same-sex couple. The Father's Day ad shows real-life dads Todd Koch and Cooper Smith playing with their children, Claire and Mason.
...
The last time One Million Moms and JCPenney locked horns, the store responded by standing behind its partnership with DeGeneres, stating that "Ellen represents the values of our company" — and with this kind of proequality advertising, JCPenney is "continuing to reinforce its progressive values." It's not the first fight for either of them; in February, JCPenney distributed a Mother's Day ad featuring two lesbian parents and their daughters; One Million Moms also took a stance against Urban Outfitters after the store featured two women kissing in its catalog in April.'

The specific group One Million Moms aside, I wonder just how many people wince at the idea of "my two dads" but are just fine with "my two moms"? I am not aware of any studies as such, is anyone else?

Norwegian gov’t coalition partner seeking to outlaw circumcision

Mastodon · 26 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(JTA) -- A Norwegian political party said it will seek to outlaw circumcision in Norway.

“Circumcision on religious grounds should be a criminal offense,” Jenny Klinge, a spokesperson for Norway’s Centre Party, said in an interview earlier this month with the newspaper Dagbladet.

Klinge added that “Fortunately, circumcision is already illegal in females. The time has come for boys to receive the same legal protection."

The Centre Party, a member of the Norwegian coalition, occupies 11 seats out of the 169 in parliament.

Ervin Kohn, president of the Jewish Community in Oslo, told JTA that he considers the issue “an existential matter” for the community.

“Banning circumcision would send a loud message that the Jewish minority is not wanted here,” he said. Norway has a Jewish community of about 700.'

Pittstown's McEldowney crusades for ‘men’s rights’ in athletics

Mastodon · 26 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Clay McEldowney saw the Princeton University wrestling program get pinned to the mat in 1993, he wanted to do something about it.

Eventually, the Pittstown resident and former Princeton grappler spearheaded a movement that enabled the sport to remain on the campus at Old Nassau, although struggling mightily at times. And along the way, McEldowney learned plenty about sometimes messy athletic politics and, more specifically, Title IX, a law Congress implemented in June 1972 as a means to prohibit sex discrimination against students and employees of educational programs and activities at both public and private institutions that receive federal funds.
...
“I’ve been working on the national level but my mission is to alert people to the very high likelihood [Title IX] could impact scholastic activities as it relates to boys who participate in high school sports.'

Title IX a balancing act for college administrators

Mastodon · 26 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Title IX is controversial with some men's coaches and male athletes.

For instance, in order to close a $2 million shortfall in their athletic budget earlier this year, Slippery Rock University dropped two women's sports and five men's sports. After some female athletes filed a lawsuit in federal district court earlier this year, the university was required to reinstate the two women's sports, swimming and water polo, because their elimination violated Title IX regulations. The school did not have to reinstate the dropped men's programs.

Pecora explained that Title IX has been very positive for women's athletics. However, the rules do have an impact on some men's programs, although not at Pitt-Johnstown.

"You always have these unintended consequences," Pecora said. "Over the years, universities were put into a position that you have to comply with one of these three prongs. The whole premise was to expand the opportunities for women, and that is what everyone is trying to do. But, what happens in the unintended consequences is that if you put a lot of effort into trying to expand the opportunities, but if the numbers and the interest are just not there to do that, then you have to cut to comply with it."

'Office cougar' jailed for preying on married men

Broadsword · 27 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Cambridge graduate who described herself as the “office cougar” has been jailed for falsely claiming she was having affairs with her married male colleagues.

Software engineer Jeevani Wickramaratna, 44, spun a web of deceit, bombarding the men with sexually explicit messages, emailing their wives and even falsely claiming one man had HIV.

She was found guilty of sexual harassment and jailed for 26 weeks by District Judge David Parsons, who blasted her "complete fantasy world".

...

Christine Hart, prosecuting, said: "She claimed that Mr Stokes was having an affair with the office 'cougar', and many of the messages were sexually explicit and caused great distress to both him and his family.

"Wickramaratna then began sending him a series of messages saying she was setting him free and said she had told his family about their affair and that he loved her."

Further abusive Facebook messages were sent, including a false allegation that Mr Stokes had been diagnosed with HIV, all of which caused great humiliation.'

NBA star's ex-wife arrested for child abduction

Mastodon · 27 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The ex-wife of NBA star Dwyane Wade was arrested and charged with “child abduction” in Chicago over the weekend.

According to the Associated Press, Wade has asked a judge to terminate Siovaughn Funches-Wade’s visitation rights with their two sons.

The couple divorced in 2010 and Wade was awarded custody of the boys in March 2011 due to Funches-Wade’s erratic behavior in court.

Wade’s attorney, James Pritikin, filed an emergency motion today to terminate Funches-Wade’s visitation rights, just hours before the Miami Heat were to take on the hapless Oklahoma City Thunder in Game 4 of the NBA Finals in Miami.'

OnlineParentingPrograms.com Focuses on Raising Awareness of Parental Alienation

Mastodon · 27 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Online Parenting Programs.com today announced the integration of Parental Alienation, a new 45 minute section to their mandated online co-parenting programs. Parental alienation deprives children of their right to be loved and expressing love for both of their parents. Family courts are beginning to recognize and notice Parental Alienation as a form of child abuse, as the alienating strategies used on the children are disturbing, confusing and often frightening, and rob children of their sense of security and safety.
...
“An alienating parent may seek emotional comfort and support from their children. They may be seeking validation for pain and anger against the co-parent and turn to their children,” said Lori LaVigne, Education Director for Online Parenting Programs.com. “An example of this behavior would be trying to persuade your children to take sides with you against your co-parent or speaking negatively about your co-parent in front of the children. Many alienating parents are very angry and disapprove of their children having a healthy, loving bond with the co-parent, and they express this message of disapproval to their children in both obvious and subtle ways.”'

SAVE: As Victim Credibility Dwindles, SAVE Calls on Prosecutors to File Charges in Brian Banks False Rape Case

Matt · 27 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / June 26, 2012 – One month after revelations of Wanetta Gibson's false rape accusation, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is charging Los Angeles County prosecutors with unacceptable delay in filing perjury charges against Gibson. A vigorous prosecution of Gibson is critical to restoring the credibility of true rape victims, who often complain investigators with growing case loads don't take their claims seriously, SAVE says.

Rape is No Joke, a victim advocacy group, has charged that "Enormous damages are done by making a false allegation of rape." New York Post Andrea Peyser columnist laments that false accusations represent a "huge problem for future rape victims." And Justice Enriques has decried that "False complaints of rape necessarily impact upon the minds of jurors trying rape cases."'

North Carolina Dad Battles Hospital For Guardianship Of Comatose Son

Mastodon · 27 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A North Carolina father is embroiled in a legal battle with a hospital that wants to assume guardianship of his comatose son.

A hearing was held on Tuesday to determine who will make the medical decisions for Freddie Lempe, 18, of Smithfield, N.C. The teenager has been in a coma since a car accident on March 6, 2011.

Lempe was in the passenger seat of a car that spun out of control on Highway 39 in Johnston County, N.C., throwing him out of the car. While the driver walked away with only minor injuries, the accident left Freddie with both brain and spinal cord trauma.

Now, WakeMed, the Raleigh hospital in which he has been receiving care for over a year, has filed a suit in Wake County Courthouse to replace Lempe's father as his legal guardian to ensure that the overwhelming amount of paperwork is completed so that the teenager is eligible for Medicaid.'

New approaches urged to get boys to read

Mastodon · 27 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Educators have long struggled to motivate boys to read on their own. Boys tend to be more active, hands-on learners and would rather clean their rooms than read Little Women, educators say.

But the stakes are high to get boys nose-deep in books, especially in the summer when kids who don't read can lose ground on their reading skills. Boys have consistently lagged behind girls on state and national reading and writing exams, a gap that widens by the time they reach high school.

Under a new reading requirement recently approved by state legislators, third-graders who aren't reading at grade level must be held back by the 2013-14 school year. In the 2010-11 school year, the most recent for which results are available, 22.3 percent of Ohio's third-grade boys failed the reading exam.

Part of the problem is that teachers — many of them female — have steered boys into books that the teachers are interested in.

"Boys like to read things that don't appeal to adults or girls," said Scott Jones, a fifth-grade teacher at J.W. Reason Elementary in Hilliard. He led a district training seminar last week on helping boys become independent readers and expressive writers.'

Please lodge anti-circumcision responses with the State Department (re: PEPFAR) - Deadline 8 July 2012

Minuteman · 28 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This is a response to the document "Agency Information Collection Activities; Proposals, Submissions, and Approvals: PEPFAR Program Expenditures" [regulations.gov Docket ID: DOS-2012-0032, FR Doc No: 2012-11190] (http://www.regulations.gov/#!documentDetail;D=DOS-2012-0032-0001).

The deadline for submissions is 8 July 2012.

This submission can be made by anybody from any country around the world.

Instructions:

Download and save the document from the following link (Click 'Download'):

http://www.2shared.com/document/i3rMxhR1/DOS-2012-0032_8July2012.html

Go to the following regulations.gov submission page:

http://www.regulations.gov/#!submitComment;D=DOS-2012-0032-0001

Complete as many of the optional fields on the left-hand-side as you would like to. Click browse under '3. UPLOAD FILE(S)' to upload the saved document from your harddisk. Click 'Submit'.

In case anyone experiences problems with the above 2shared link, the full-text of the response document is below, which you can copy/paste into the text-editor or wordprocessor of your choice, save to your harddisk, and upload to regulations.gov:

Response to “Agency Information Collection Activities; Proposals, Submissions, and Approvals: PEPFAR Program Expenditures” [regulations.gov Docket ID: DOS-2012-0032, FR Doc No: 2012-11190]

Thank you for the opportunity to provide feedback to “Agency Information Collection Activities; Proposals, Submissions, and Approvals: PEPFAR Program Expenditures” [regulations.gov Docket ID: DOS-2012-0032, FR Doc No: 2012-11190]. This response document will briefly address concerns about the ethical, legal and methodological flaws with past research informing aspects of present PEPFAR program areas; concerns about adverse consequences of PEPFAR program areas; and concerns about the absence of oversight of the activities of PEPFAR funding recipients.

Ethical, Legal and Methodological Flaws with Past Research informing present PEPFAR Program Areas

In 2011, the Department of Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General [OIG] published a series of audit reports revealing that throughout fiscal years 2000-2010, the National Institute of Allergy and Infections Diseases [NIAID], did not comply with the time and amount requirements specified in appropriations statutes, in awarding several federal contracts to commercial partners, committing the federal government to tens of millions of dollars of expenditure ahead of appropriation of funds from Congress (OIG 2011a; OIG 2011b; OIG 2011c; OIG 2011d). During this time, NIAID also funded and sponsored research conducted abroad, that would be unlikely to receive ethical approval to be conducted in the United States, incorporating the excision of healthy tissue from subjects in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, specifically ClinicalTrials.gov registered trials NCT00059371 and NCT00425984 ['the African trials'] (Bailey et al 2007; Gray et al 2007), the methodology, conclusions, ethics and legality of which have been questioned in the professional medical literature (Boyle & Hill 2011; Green et al 2010). Consent forms for the African trials failed to include then known information, from the professional medical literature, about the importance to mens' sexual health of the prepuce, frenulum, ridged-band and other tissues removed by circumcision (Taylor et al 1996), evidence for which has grown in the years since (Frisch et al 2011; Sorrells et al 2007). In the years following publication of the African trials, regulatory agencies under the aegis of the Department of Health and Human Services have moved to strengthen protections afforded human research subjects and to increase the rigor with which trials conducted abroad are assessed as a basis for seeking approval of new drugs and medical devices in the U.S. market (FDA 2012; OHRP 2011).

Adverse Consequences of PEPFAR Program Funding Areas

Despite the concerns identified above, the results of the African trials continue to be used to justify the en masse circumcision of men in Africa using PEPFAR funds and to justify the circumcision of boys and male infants - both in the United States and abroad - in the absence of clear and present immediate medical indications, and in the latter instance, with the tacit endorsement of U.S. government agencies in receipt of PEPFAR program funding (CDC 2011; Llewellyn 2012). In the wake of PEPFAR funding for mass circumcision programs in Africa, local media in the region have reported coercion of men and boys to be circumcised (AFP 2012; Dube 2012; Langa 2012; Onyango 2012) and misdirection of limited medical resources from other priority areas to male circumcision (AHN 2012; Gonzalez 2012).

Absence of Oversight

On the 15 June 2011, the OIG published a report critical of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's [CDC's] failure to oversee recipients' use of PEPFAR funds, concluding that the "lack of required documentation demonstrates that CDC has not exercised proper stewardship over Federal PEPFAR funds because it did not consistently follow departmental and other Federal requirements in monitoring PEPFAR recipients" (OIG 2011e). More recently, on 5 June 2012, the OIG published a report identifying vulnerabilities in vaccine management in the CDC's domestic 'Vaccines for Children' program (OIG 2012), suggesting the possibility that more systemic problems may exist within the agency, impacting it's ability to effectively oversee the activities of grantees in receipt of federal funds.

Conclusion

Valid concerns exist about the ethical, legal and methodological flaws with past research informing aspects of present PEPFAR program areas; adverse consequences of PEPFAR program areas; and the absence of oversight of the activities of PEPFAR funding recipients. It is therefore imperative that full and complete disclosure and oversight in the proposed information collection activity take precedence over the CDC's and PEPFAR funding recipients' professed concerns for increased regulatory and administrative 'burden'.

References

AFP (2012) US urges circumcision for soldiers to fight HIV in Africa Yahoo! Health http://health.yahoo.net/news/s/afp/us-urges-circumcision-for-soldiers-to-fight-hiv-in-africa Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68Trj7ABp

AHN (2012) HIV services in western refugee camps overwhelmed Gant Daily 29 March 2012 http://gantdaily.com/2012/03/29/hiv-services-in-western-refugee-camps-overwhelmed/

Bailey RC, Moses S, Parker CB, Agot K, Maclean I, Krieger JN, Williams CF, Campbell RT, Ndinya-Achola JO (2007) Male circumcision for HIV prevention in young men in Kisumu, Kenya: a randomised controlled trial. Lancet369(9562),643–656 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/17321310

Boyle GJ, Hill G (2011) Sub-Saharan African randomised clinical trials into male circumcision and HIV transmission: methodological, ethical and legal concerns J Law Med. 2011 Dec;19(2):316-34 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/22320006

CDC (2011) Trends in In-Hospital Newborn Male Circumcision - United States 1999-2010 Prepared by Xinjian Zhang, PhD, Sanjyot Shinde, PhD, Peter H Kilmarx, MD, Robert T Chen, MD, Div of HIV/AIDS Prevention, National Center for HIV/AIDS, Viral Hepatitis, STD, and TB Prevention; Shanna Cox, MSPH, Lee Warner, PhD,

Div of Reproductive Health, National Center for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion; Maria Owings, PhD, Div of Healthcare Statistics, National Center for Health Statistics; Charbel El Bcheraoui, PhD, EIS Officer, CDC. Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report (MMWR) Full-text available at http://www.cdc.gov/mmwr/preview/mmwrhtml/mm6034a4.htm?s_cid=mm6034a4_w

Dube, C (2012) F/town adult males spurn circumcision The Monitor 21 May 2012 http://www.mmegi.bw/index.php?sid=1&aid=370&dir=2012/May/Monday21 Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68TqWHbxL

FDA (2012) FDA's HSP/BIMO Initiative Accomplishments: Update May 2012 Food and Drug Administration Full-text available at http://www.fda.gov/ScienceResearch/SpecialTopics/RunningClinicalTrials/ucm305275.htm Accessed: 2012-06-10. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68JLjWhEP

Frisch M, Lindholm M, Grønbæk M (2011) Male circumcision and sexual function in men and women: a survey-based, cross-sectional study in Denmark Int J Epidemiol. 2011 Oct;40(5):1367-81. Epub 2011 Jun 14 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/21672947

Gonzalez L L (2012) Africa: Less Global Funds, More Problems allAfrica 10 May 2012 Full-text available at http://allafrica.com/stories/201205110671.html

Gray RH, Kigozi G, Serwadda D, Makumbi F, Watya S, Nalugoda F, Kiwanuka N, Moulton LH, Chaudhary MA, Chen MZ, Sewankambo NK, Wabwire-Mangen F, Bacon MC, Williams CF, Opendi P, Reynolds SJ, Laeyendecker O, Quinn TC, Wawer MJ (2007) Male circumcision for HIV prevention in men in Rakai, Uganda: a randomised trial. Lancet369(9562),657–666 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/17321311

Green LW, Travis JW, McAllister RG, Peterson KW, Vardanyan AN, Craig A (2010) Male circumcision and HIV prevention insufficient evidence and neglected external validity Am J Prev Med. 2010 Nov;39(5):479-82 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/20965388

Langa, V (2012) 175 MPs to be circumcised News Day 18 May 2012 http://www.newsday.co.zw/article/2012-05-18-175-mps-to-be-circumcised/ Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68Tqz9L2u

Llewellyn, E (2012) Infant Circumcision: A Tipping Point for HIV Prevention USAID Frontlines May/June 2012 Full-text available at http://transition.usaid.gov/press/frontlines/fl_may12/FL_may12_U5_SWAZILAND.html Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68U9lv9vt

OHRP (2011) Regulatory Changes in ANPRM Comparison of Existing Rules with Some of the Changes Being Considered Office of Human Research Protections website Full-text available at http://www.hhs.gov/ohrp/humansubjects/anprmchangetable.html Accessed: 2012-01-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64jh4cWek

OIG (2011a) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract HHSN266-2006-00015C With NexBio, Inc. (A-03-10-03119) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 21 September 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003119.pdf

OIG (2011b) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract HHSN272-2008-00013C with the EMMES Corporation (A-03-10-03115) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 31 October 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003115.pdf

OIG (2011c) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract N01-AI-15416 With the University of California at San Francisco Audit (A-03-10-03120) on the Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 10 July 2011 Available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003120.pdf

OIG (2011d) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract N01-AI-3-0052 With Avecia Biologics Limited (A-03-10-03117) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 21 September 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003117.pdf

OIG (2011e) Review of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Oversight of the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds for Fiscal Years 2007 Through 2009 (A-04-10-04006) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 15 June 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region4/41004006.pdf

OIG (2012) Vaccines for Children Program: Vulnerabilities in Vaccine Management (Report OEI-04-10-00430) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 5 June 2012 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oei/reports/oei-04-10-00430.pdf

Onyango, H (2012) Kenya: The Cut for Boys to Tame HIV allAfrica http://allafrica.com/stories/201205111262.html 10 May 2012 Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68TrTJpmb

Sorrells ML, Snyder JL, Reiss MD, Eden C, Milos MF, Wilcox N, Van Howe RS (2007) Fine-touch pressure thresholds in the adult penis BJU Int. 2007 Apr;99(4):864-9 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/17378847

Taylor, J.P., A.P. Lockwood and A.J.Taylor The prepuce: Specialized mucosa of the penis and its loss to circumcision Journal of Urology (1996), 77, 291-295 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed?term=8800902

SAVE: Tell Congress: We Must Prosecute Wanetta Gibson and all False Rape Accusers

Matt · 28 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Brian Banks, a star high school football player, was falsely accused of rape by a female acquaintance. Banks served five years in prison and was required to register as a sex offender. The accuser received a $1.5 million settlement from the school.

Last year, Banks logged onto Facebook and had a friend request from his accuser, Wanetta Gibson!

Private investigator Freddie Parish hid two cameras to record statements by Gibson when she met with Banks in the investigator's office. "Did he rape you?," asked Parish. "No," Gibson said, "he did not rape me." "All that money they gave us, I mean gave me, I don't want to have to pay it back, all of it, because that would take a long time," Gibson said on camera.

See the video: http://latimesblogs.latimes.com/lanow/2012/06/brian-banks-accuser-money-wanetta-gibson.html

A judge overturned Banks' conviction. One month later, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is charging Los Angeles County prosecutors with unacceptable delay in filing perjury charges against Gibson. A vigorous prosecution of Gibson is critical to restoring the credibility of true rape victims.

Tell your Representatives to insist that Los Angeles County prosecutors file perjury charges against Wanetta Gibson, right NOW!

Find your representatives here:
http://www.house.gov/htbin/findrep?ZIP=

JUNE IS FALSE ALLEGATIONS AWARENESS MONTH. TELL A FRIEND.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Cologne's Court Bans Infant Male Genital Mutilation

Matt · 28 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"To ban infant circumcision is essentially to make the practice of Judaism illegal in Germany; it is now once again a crime to be a Jew in the Reich ... Perhaps those convicted of wrongful circumcision could be required to wear a yellow star?"

... But the court does indeed get to a central issue: can parents permanently mutilate a child's genitals to pursue their own religious goals? I have a rather expanisve view of religious liberty, so I would veer on the side of permissiveness here. But that it is an assault on a child seems obvious to me. If it were done not for religious reasons, it would be banned. And so I do not see making this mutilation as illegal as it is for girls to be somehow bigoted or intolerant.

And the religious liberty involved is obviously not the child's. If he wants to, he can get his genitals mutilated later as a sign of his religious commitment - when he is old enough to be able to make such a choice of his own free will. At some point, one can only hope this barbarism disappears. And it will have nothing to do with anti-Semitism or Islamophobia; it will be about defending the religious liberty of Jewish and Muslim males to choose their religion, and not have it permanently marked as scar tissue on their dicks. ....'

F&F: Day One: Family Law Reform Promoting Responsible Fatherhood

Matt · 28 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Equal shared parenting as a default in custody disputes is the logical and ethical choice: a win-win for fathers, for children and the nation. Let tomorrow be Day One of family law reform in America," wrote Barbara Kay, a columnist with the National Post of Canada, in her article, A Father's Day Downer, that ran in the New York Daily News, on Father's Day.

Kay made her case with the facts and figures we know too well: "Father absence is devastating for children. Exhaustive peer-reviewed research confirms that the absence of a father is the single most reliable predictor for a whole roster of negative outcomes: low self-esteem, parental alienation, high school dropout (71% are fatherless), truancy, early sexual activity, promiscuity, teen pregnancy, gang membership, imprisonment (85% of jailed youth are fatherless), drug abuse, homelessness (90% of runaway children have an absent father), a 40 times higher risk of sexual abuse and 100 times higher risk of fatal abuse.'

“Religion” is no excuse for mutilating your baby’s penis

Matt · 28 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But other grown-up babies may not feel this way. What of Jewish (or Muslim) children who reject their parents’ faith? Who don’t believe in God? Or who do believe in a God, but in a loving one—say, one who would never mandate the genital mutilation of babies? Those grown-up babies have had their penises irreversibly scarred in the service of beliefs they do not hold as adults. Surely there is room for the legal system of a pluralistic society to determine that these babies have a right to bodily integrity and are entitled to make decisions about their own penises when they are mentally competent to do so.
...
“Culture” cannot justify the nonconsensual genital cutting of babies. Neither can religion. Even if I sincerely believed that the creator of the universe had commanded me to remove genital tissue from my son without his permission, I would have to decline on ethical grounds. “God told me to do it” is simply not an acceptable replacement for moral reasoning in the modern era. The German court ruled rightly.'

Unemployed Men Undesirable To Women, "It's Just Lunch" Survey Finds

Mastodon · 28 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's not unusual for people looking for a relationship to keep a mental checklist of qualities they absolutely require in a a partner. But a recent survey by the dating service "It's Just Lunch" found that there's one box in particular that straight women want checked: they want the men they date to have jobs.

Of the 925 single women surveyed, 75 percent said they'd have a problem with dating someone without a job. Only 4 percent of respondents asked whether they would go out with an unemployed man answered "of course."

"Not having a job will definitely make it harder for men to date someone they don't already know," Irene LaCota, a spokesperson for It's Just Lunch, said in a press release. "This is the rare area, compared to other topics we've done surveys on, where women's old-fashioned beliefs about sex roles seem to apply."
...

Still, the new survey joins an existing body of research indicating that women do want a man with some financial resources. One oft-cited study out of the U.K. in 2011 found that women today care more about a man's income and level of education than they did in the 1940s. Another study published last year found that German women increasingly look for men with salaries similar to their own. The reason, again, wasn't that the women wanted a man to take care of them. Instead participants reported that they wanted a mate with equal earning power to avoid the conflict they foresaw arising if their male partners felt insecure about them earning more.'

German verdict's purpose is to delay circumcision, not ban it, jurist says

Matt · 29 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A widely criticized German court verdict on religious circumcision this week aims only to delay the act, not ban it, and is not directed against any faith, a jurist with a leading role in the legal debate said on Friday.

The operation does serious bodily harm and only males old enough to consent to it freely should undergo it, said Holm Putzke, law professor at Passau University in southern Germany.

Using arguments Putzke has published in recent years, a court in the western city of Cologne ruled on Tuesday that the circumcision there of a Muslim boy who suffered post-operative bleeding had violated a German law against causing bodily harm.

Jewish, Muslim, Catholic and Protestant leaders in Germany denounced the ruling as a serious intrusion on religious freedom. Even Germany's foreign minister spoke out, saying such faith traditions must be allowed in a tolerant modern society.'

Berlin hospital suspends circumcisions after court ruling

Matt · 29 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Berlin's Jewish Hospital will suspend circumcisions after a German court ruled this week that performing the procedure on religious grounds is unlawful, a hospital spokesman said Friday.

"We are suspending circumcisions until the legal position is clear," Gerhard Nerlich told AFP, citing head of internal medicine Kirstof Graf.

The hospital performs 300 circumcisions a year, a third of which are for religious reasons and the remainder due to medical concerns.

"We regularly performed circumcisions before this ruling but we don't have the legal freedom to do so any more," said Nerlich, adding that two procedures had already been cancelled.'

Strip Club 'Tax' to Fund Rape Investigations in Houston

Mastodon · 30 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'(NEWSER) – Want to help Houston foot the bill for its rape investigations? Visit a strip club. The city doesn't have the funds to quickly analyze evidence collected in rape kits, so the City Council passed an ordinance yesterday imposing a $5-per-visitor "pole tax" on strip joints and other clubs that host adult entertainment (think wet T-shirt contests). The money collected will go toward processing Houston's rape kits; an estimated 6,000 sit untested, the Wall Street Journal reports. With 30 clubs subject to the tax, as much as $3 million could be raised annually.

Supporters of the fee, which passed 14-1, say that strip clubs contribute to sexual assaults by fostering an unhealthy attitude about women that could ultimately lead to sexual assaults; opponents point out the lack of studies proving that. Texas already levies a $5-per-customer "pole tax" on strip clubs, meaning Houston clubs will have double the fee. But, says a City Council member, "When you look at videos of these clubs and see women putting $5, $10, and $20 dollar bills in their remaining clothing, I don't think a $5 tax will hurt anybody."'

Elect more women to end gridlock

Mastodon · 30 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than 300 women, a record high, have filed to run for Congress this year, which means a likely gain of female members come November. In addition to greater parity for women--who've been chronically underrepresented--more women in Congress could bring another benefit: Less gridlock.

Female senators have a markedly more bipartisan vote record than their male peers do. Moreover, studies in personality research find that women are more cooperative than men, more willing to compromise, more empathetic and, moreover, more polite.'

WashPost Promotes Feminist Study Demanding More Quotes From Women

Mastodon · 30 June 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Washington Post reporter Paul Farhi publicized the latest feminist lament that “a new analysis of campaign coverage found that women aren’t even the principal news source on a topic they would presumably know best: women’s issues.”

That apparently means sexual issues: “Major news outlets, print and TV, turn mainly to male sources for their take on abortion, birth control and Planned Parenthood, according to a study by 4th Estate, a research group that monitors campaign coverage.” Farhi turned to "women's groups" for comment -- just one kind of women.
...
What’s a little ridiculous is that this whole story on alleged media one-sidedness only consults the feminist spinners – from Michael Howe to Terry O’Neill of NOW to Julie Burton of the Women’s Media Center.'

Stand up for your son: Say ‘no’ to ritual circumcision

Matt · 1 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even if criminalization is impractical, this week’s German court ruling against circumcision on children, except for medical purposes, sent a much-needed message.

I’ve been an atheist since adolescence, but being a Jew has always been a vital element of my identity, something I can’t imagine not being, and for this reason, above all others, I knew as a matter of course that I would have my two sons circumcized. It was only after going through it, with the blood and the boys’ wailing and our anguish and worry - with the realization that this mohel was actually taking a knife to the foreskins of our eight-day-old sons’ penises - that I began to think about it.

...

So I put my boys through it, 12 and 16 years ago. And since then, although the bleeding and crying stopped and everything turned out alright, I realize that this Jewish (and Muslim) tradition is a bad one. It should be replaced, like some of the Torah’s other horrific injunctions, and instead of cutting off the foreskin, a few strands of hair should be removed, or a fingernail should be dyed, or the boy should get a little tattoo at age nine or something. I very much like being a member of the Jewish tribe, and I don’t have a problem with parents harmlessly “marking” their infant sons (or daughters) as members of their tribe. But ritual circumcision for an eight-day-old boy, as the absolute mandatory condition of his being a Jew, is barbaric, risky and fairly insane.'

Protecting Adoption and Promoting Responsible Fatherhood Act of 2012

Matt · 2 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today, Congresswoman Laura Richardson introduced the Protecting Adoption and Promoting Responsible Fatherhood Act of 2012. The legislation will create a National Responsible Father Registry, giving unwed fathers the chance to register and be notified of court proceedings involving the child and relieving birth mothers of the burden of notifying the birth fathers.

Congresswoman Richardson's legislation has been endorsed by the National Council for Adoption and the American Academy of Adoption Attorneys.

"Too often, a child misses a critical window of opportunity to be adopted simply because there is a lengthy and cumbersome process of locating the father and adjudicating his parental rights," said Congresswoman Richardson.

California is not one of the 34 states that already have father registries. It's for this reason that Congresswoman Richardson introduced this legislation to encourage the state to participate in a national responsible father registry. Registered men are entitled to notice of court proceedings involving a particular child, such as adoption or state custody proceedings. Congresswoman Richardson's legislation will "protect the rights of responsible fathers, protect the rights of mothers, and help secure the prompt and stable placement of children," said Denise Bierly, President of the American Academy of Adoption Attorneys.'

Teacher Avoids Jail Time For Hosting Student Alcohol-Fueled Sex Parties

Mastodon · 3 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Audrey Grabarkiewicz, a 46-year-old preschool teacher at Lake Bowen Baptist Church in Spartanburg, S.C., will not serve jail time despite being arrested for throwing alcohol and sex parties for teens last year, WSPA-TV reports.

According to CBS, the "sex parties" took place in the summer of of 2010, and Grabarkiewicz was charged with 10 counts of contributing to the delinquency of a minor.

Late last week, Judge Larry B. Hyman Jr. sentenced the teacher to three years probation and 120 hours of community service, the Spartanburg Herald-Journal reports.'

SAVE Elert: Govt. Panel Says No Need to Screen Abused Men for IPV

Matt · 3 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The U.S. Preventive Services Task Force has just released its draft recommendations to screen for intimate partner violence (IPV) in healthcare settings. The panel says all women should be assessed for IPV: http://www.uspreventiveservicestaskforce.org/draftrec2.htm

But if you're an abused man.... you didn't make the cut.

There's hope: the Task Force recommendations are just a draft, so if enough persons complain, maybe they'll change them to include men.

Here's how to email your polite comments: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/uspstf-responses/

Take 5 minutes today - you may save an abused man's life.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Young boys 'turned off books' by lack of male teachers

Broadsword · 4 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Large numbers of boys are failing to develop a love of reading during primary education because of a shortage of male teachers combined with an anti-book culture among many fathers, an inquiry has found.

Gavin Barwell, chairman of the All-Party Parliamentary Group on Literacy, said reading was not seen as a “masculine thing” by boys – leaving them lagging behind girls from the age of four onwards.

In many cases, schools failed to equip them with a selection of adventure and action novels by authors such as Enid Blyton, Roald Dahl and J.R.R Tolkien that are significantly more likely to appeal to boys at a young age, he suggested.

It is claimed that a failure to read properly as an infant has a serious impact on standards across the curriculum, with children struggling to grasp the basics in all other major academic subjects. According to Government figures, boys are less likely to read basic words or recite the alphabet by the age of five and the gap widens throughout compulsory education.'

Girls outperforming boys in "masculine" subjects

Broadsword · 4 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New figures show teenage girls are more likely to achieve good grades in practical courses designed to lead straight to a job in traditionally male-dominated industries.

They were almost twice as likely to score highly in vocational qualifications sat between the age of 14 and 16, while results were around a third higher in courses sat in the sixth-form. The disclosure – in data published by one of Britain's biggest exam providers – comes amid continuing concerns over the gulf in standards between boys and girls.
...
According to figures, girls are already ahead in most disciplines by the age of five and the gap widens throughout compulsory education.

Last year, some 62 per cent of girls achieved five good GCSEs, compared with just 55 per cent of boys. Almost one-in-10 boys also failed to gain at least one C grade at the age of 16 – almost twice the failure rate of girls.'

U.S. says Texas police department discriminated against women

Broadsword · 4 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A federal lawsuit filed on Tuesday accuses Corpus Christi, Texas of discriminating against female applicants to the city's police department by requiring them to pass a physical test that favored men.

The Justice Department said the female pass rate for the test, which was used between 2005 and 2011, was 80 percent lower than the male pass rate and that it excluded otherwise qualified applicants from consideration for hire as entry-level police officers based solely on their gender.

The test, which included push-ups, sit-ups, and a 300-meter and 1.5-mile run, had identical cut-off scores for men and women. But between 2005 and 2009, only 19 percent of the female applicants who took the test passed it, compared with 63 percent of the male applicants, according to the Justice Department.

It said the disparate results "constitute a pattern or practice of resistance to the full enjoyment by women of their rights to equal employment opportunities regardless of their sex."'

Author Claims Abortions Have Made Men's Lives Better

Mastodon · 5 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pro-choice women have long asked men to remain silent when it comes to the issue of abortion. The theory was that it's a woman's choice, and therefore no man should have a say in the matter.

And while Sara Robinson of AlterNet makes it clear that she doesn't believe that men have the right to stop the killing of their own children, she does believe that men need to start speaking out in favor of abortion. In her post, "Abortions Have Made Life Better for Millions of Men: It's About Time to Speak Up in Support," Robinson reminds us all that "for every single woman who's ever had an abortion, there's a man somewhere in the story." But it's only those who supported the abortion who matter to Robinson. She writes:

But even as we're getting an aggrieved earful from the full chorus of patriarchal bullies, our own pro-choice men have receded into the background of the conversation, to the point where they have no voice at all. Worse: these sweet guys think that by holding their tongues, they're doing us a favor.'

Circumcision deaths worry SACP

Mastodon · 5 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Eastern Cape* - The high number of deaths at circumcision schools in the Eastern Cape required action, the SA Communist Party in the province said on Wednesday.

“This challenge warrants all people of our province to unite and fight against malpractice of this old custom,” SACP spokesman Siyabonga Mdodi said in a statement.

The SACP called on community forums, traditional leaders, law enforcement agencies and the health department to intervene.

The SACP said at least 20 initiates had died this year alone and scores more had been injured.

“Four had penile amputations and 131 (were) admitted to hospitals.”'

---
* Ed. added link

A Men and Woman's MRA Group Call for the London area

Roderick1268 · 5 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Hello MRAs,

Here is another try at setting up a Men's Rights Group in London. 2010 was my last bash at it, with no real interest.

Paul Elam's "A Voice For Men" has flourished since then and I am eternally grateful beyond all words for what he and the AVFM team is doing, for MRAs worldwide, alongside all our other active, online and offline activists.

Why am I writing in again? Well John-The-Other is now involved in Vancouver with other MRAs, I am no JTO by any stretch, I am no great organizer and have no personal ambitions of leadership, but if they can do it in Vancouver and Australia, why not London too?

My original request was for a men only group, I felt men needed to find our feet independently. I was wrong, some of the most well spoken articulate MRAs speakers are woman. I don't think we can advance far without women, and there is always a danger we could become a reflection of Feminism ourselves, by not being challenged, in an unhealthy closed atmosphere like many hateful Woman's Groups.

I work part-time out of London, so a fortnightly or monthly group would suit me.
It will be two or three weeks before I can return to my computer screen again, so I'm putting this out there now, food-for-thought.

I am not throwing myself into battle mode here; I am attempting to encourage the natural growth of a community of men and woman who oppose Feminist dogma.
Things are changing so quickly now. There are MRAs and human rights activists who have been working for years and years have got us to this place now by committing their lives to activism. We can help too, just by doing something.

I am friends with Tom Martin (he tried suing London School of Economics for discrimination). I discuss and debate issues with him often; he might even come to something we do.

I am not naive, Radical Feminists are very dangerous women, and have rarely if ever been held accountable for their violence or intimidation. These extremists will do anything to stop dialog between men, or between men and woman. Feminists will see us, - believe us - and try and prove us to be a hate group, a rape club or pedophile ring or whatever. Personal attacks, false allegations, lies, public shaming and vendettas comes with the territory. So we will need to take care as we go.

There WILL be Men's Rights Groups in London and everywhere else in time.
Please don't expect an immediate response for two weeks I am away from my computer and the internet.

Contact me at antifemnasty-at-googlemail.com

Thanks,

Rod!

Austrian med school gives women grading edge

Mastodon · 7 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Antonio Bandera took a last nervous drag on his smoke Friday as he readied himself for the grueling eight-hour entrance exam for elite Vienna Medical University. Making the cut's hard enough, he said, and this year his chances may be even smaller: The university is grading men and women differently based on gender.

"It's not right to give one sex or the other the advantage," he said. "How you score should determine how your chances are."

The university's policy is apparently unique in Europe. Those responsible for giving women a grading edge are aware that it could expose the institution to EU legal action, on charges of discrimination, but they argue that it's needed to even the playing field. Since the Vienna medical school introduced its current entrance exam six years ago, they say, women on average have scored significantly lower each time than men.'

F&F: Putative or “Punitive” Father Registry?

Matt · 7 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Putative Father Registry mandates that unwed fathers mail in a postcard to register their possible claim for paternity rights in a timely manner. Thus, the registry places the responsibility on the father. Mothers, however, do not need to identify the father or potential fathers.

Adoption agencies and attorneys favor registries because adoption proceedings can then commence without the possibility of disruption due to late paternity claims. Proponents claim:

- The privacy and safety of the mother is secured because she does not have to identify the possible father nor inform the father of her pregnancy.
- The privacy of the father is protected in that notice is mailed only to the secure address he has provided the registry.
- Both mother’s and father’s privacy are protected in that no names are published in the newspaper.

Thirty-four states use registries to give putative fathers an opportunity to file notice of their claims to paternity. In many states, a man who has not filed with the putative father registry will not receive notice of any termination of parental rights and/or any adoption court proceedings regarding the child.'

Taxing Marriage To Fund Domestic Violence Grants - Sense Or Nonsense?

Mastodon · 8 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the end the Court let the tax stand:

Rather, based on the facts before us, we cannot say that a $5 fee on a marriage license constitutes a significant burden on the right to marry. Thus, we will apply the rational basis test. Applying that test, we believe that the legislature's imposition of a small charge on marriage license applicants is reasonably related to the Fund's narrow purpose of helping married victims of domestic violence leave violent marriages. As we find that the tax bears a rational relationship to a legitimate legislative purpose, the plaintiff's due process claim fails.

I have not been able to discern who it is that thought taking an extra five bucks from each newly married couple to fund domestic violence programs, specifically for married people, was a good idea. It seems like something that might occur to radical feminists and admittedly does have a certain logic to it. I would think that defenders of traditional marriage might find the whole thing more disturbing than allowing gay marriage, but the decision has not attracted much notice. Hopefully, I'll get some comments that will shed a little more light.'

'The bigotry of the anti-circumcision zealots'

Mastodon · 8 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The international campaign demonising the religious practice of circumcising young boys is fuelled by a new form of misanthropic bigotry. It represents a synthesis of twenty-first-century cultural correctness and old-fashioned prejudice. This moral crusade brings together many of the worst trends of our age: the paranoid dogma about the ‘vulnerable child’; the culturally sanctioned contempt for the exercise of parental authority; intolerance of freedom of religion; insensitivity to people’s traditional beliefs; and old-fashioned prejudice against circumcised people.'

'If all men are monsters, how should we raise our boys?'

Mastodon · 9 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are used to living with criticism, often from other men who are sometimes hard on each other. Sometimes from women. Or from well-meaning people in the media. We have been analysed, scrutinized, puzzled over, labeled, you name it. We are too much this and not enough that. We fail in Kindergarten for not being quiet enough and we fail later on because we're afraid of commitment.

The world of book-learning is especially critical of us. When I asked about books on men in one Sydney bookshop the reply was "Oh God, I don't know. Try under mental illness or self-help". Men will always be criticized for not being feminist enough. But as Garrison Keillor said, men can never be feminists. Millions have tried and nobody did better than C-plus.

Men are urged to take more care of themselves. But why do we expect men to look after their health if they are always told that society doesn't value them?'

NYC officials suggest law change after Jewish circumcision is tied to infant herpes and death

Mastodon · 9 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Health officials in New York City are asking for Orthodox Jews to accept a proposed regulation on a circumcision ritual after it has been linked to spreading herpes to infants and causing the deaths of at least two newborns.

The New York City Board of Health wants ultra-Orthodox parents that subject their children to the "metzitzah b'peh" ritual to be forced to sign a consent waiver before the circumcision procedure is performed. The reason, they argue, is that which can be potentially fatal.

While circumcision is considered commonplace in many religions, the specific metzitzah b'peh done by Orthodox Jews has caused concern in New York health officials because it doesn't end with a simple snip. The health department says that around 20,493 infant boys were involved in the ritual in the month of June alone, which requires the person performing the procedure to orally suck blood from the wound on the boy's circumcised penis after an incision is made on the foreskin.'

Girls more likely to suffer from 'mathematics anxiety'

Broadsword · 9 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Study here. Excerpt:

Research shows girls are more likely to suffer from “mathematics anxiety” – holding them back in tests.

It was suggested that maths was often viewed as a male subject, meaning many young women were socialised into thinking of themselves as “mathematically incompetent”.

Academics from Oxford and Cambridge universities said that girls and boys performed roughly the same in independently-set maths exams.
...

Children aged 11 to 15 were presented with a maths test and asked to complete a questionnaire used to assess their physiological, emotional, cognitive and behavioural reactions to answering the questions.

It revealed no difference between girls and boys in straight test results, but found that girls displayed higher levels of mathematical anxiety.

The study found that heightened levels of fear – in turn – affected girls’ performance in maths exams. Without this anxiety, girls were likely to pull ahead of boys in tests, it was revealed.'

"The rebranding of circumcision as 'child abuse' echoes the ugly anti-Semitism of medieval Europe"

Mastodon · 9 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are many bad things about the modern atheistic assault on religion. But perhaps the worst thing is its rebranding of certain religious practices as "child abuse". Everything from sending your kid to a Catholic school to having your baby boy circumcised has been redefined by anti-religious campaigners as "abuse". This use of emotionally loaded language to demonise the practices and beliefs of people of faith has reached its ugly and logical conclusion in Germany, where a court has decreed that circumcision for religious purposes causes "bodily harm", against boys who are "unable to give their consent", and therefore should be outlawed.

This is an alarming attack on freedom of religion and on parents' rights to initiate their children into their faith. The court case centred around a four-year-old Muslim boy who was given a very bad circumcision, but the precedent set by the case will of course affect Jews as well as Muslims. And as Germany's Central Council of Jews rightly said, the court's ruling is "an egregious and insensitive measure", which represents "an unprecedented and dramatic intervention in religious communities' right of determination". He points out that Jews have the freedom to circumcise their male children in every country in the world – but soon maybe not in Germany.'

Harvard Will Not Alter Its Sexual Assault Policies in Response to Yale

Mastodon · 9 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Harvard administrator said the University does not intend to alter its sexual assault policies in response to Yale's recent settlement over a complaint that alleged that Yale's sexual misconduct grievance procedures violated Title IX.

In an agreement with the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights, Yale agreed to uphold its recent policy changes—including its adoption of the lower "preponderance of the evidence" standard, which requires the university to be at least 51 percent certain of an alleged perpetrator's guilt before issuing a guilty verdict. The previous policy required a "clear preponderance of the evidence," a more stringent burden of proof.
...
Currently, Harvard employs different standards of evidence among its various schools. The Law School uses the more stringent "burden of proof" standard--which requires about 80 percent proof for a guilty verdict--while the Faculty of Arts and Sciences requires that the Administrative Board be "sufficiently persuaded" of an accused student's responsibility for an alleged incident.'

Indiana Dad Sentenced to Five Years for Criticizing Judge, Custody Evaluator

Mastodon · 9 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Indiana man faces five years in prison because he criticized the judge and the custody evaluator in his divorce and custody case. Here's Dan Brewington's website and here's a link to his brief appealing his criminal convictions.

Dan and Melissa Brewington were married in 2002. They had two daughters before Melissa filed for divorce in early 2007. Both parents sought primary custody of the children, but Melissa was awarded primary custody during the pendency of the case. Dan had visitation three days each week. During the entire course of the two and a half year custody case, no allegation of violence, physical or sexual abuse, neglect, drug or alcohol abuse was ever leveled at Dan Brewington. And of course he had his daughters three days a week, so someone must have thought he was a pretty good dad.'

SAVE: Last Chance: 24 Hours to Stand Up for Abused Men

Matt · 9 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The U.S. Preventive Services Task Force draft recommendations to screen for intimate partner violence (IPV) in healthcare settings omits screening for the abuse of male patients: http://www.uspreventiveservicestaskforce.org/draftrec2.htm.

This has us baffled, since the following studies have demonstrated the feasibility of screening for male victims of domestic violence: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/uspstf-studies

Have a look at the article "A Closer Look at Men Who Sustain Intimate Terrorism by Women" by Denise A. Hines, PhD and Emily M. Douglas, PhD, published on the National Institutes of Health website: http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC2913504

If you are as concerned as we are, if you want the discrimination to end, if you want abused men and boys to get the same level of services as women and girls, please send your polite comments by the end of the day, tomorrow, Tuesday, July 10: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/uspstf-responses

Please do this now; it could be one of your male friends or family members who suffers in silence.

Sincerely,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

How VAWA Takes Away Men's Due Process Rights

el cid · 10 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This article provides an excellent analysis of men's loss of due process rights under VAWA. Excerpt:

'While "due process" exists in form, it no longer means anything in substance, and the Mondale Act and the Violence Against Women Act have further eviscerated what have been called "the rights of the accused." Being that the main purpose of the VAWA was to get more convictions of assault, sexual assault, and rape against men, the law has been very successful, but only by spreading the net very wide (on the assumption that all men are rapists and women always tell the truth they when accuse men of rape) and eliminating requirements that the prosecution bring corroborating evidence.

It is important to remember that "sex crimes" in this era have become intensely political. Passage of the VAWA, just like the Mondale passage some 20 years earlier, had been preceded by huge amounts of propaganda claiming that rape and sexual assault were "epidemic," and that only the federal government could save the day, and the way to do that was to destroy due process, rules of evidence, and any sense of "fair play" when "sex offender" accusations were made.'

Increasing number of US schools splitting up boys, girls in classrooms

Broadsword · 10 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Single-sex classes began proliferating after the U.S. Education Department relaxed restrictions in 2006. With research showing boys, particularly minority boys, are graduating at lower rates than girls and faring worse on tests, plenty of schools were paying attention.

In 2002, only about a dozen schools were separating the sexes, according to the National Association for Single Sex Public Education, an advocacy group. Now, an estimated 500 public schools across the country offer some all-boy and all-girl classrooms.

Proponents argue the separation allows for a tailored instruction and cuts down on gender-driven distractions among boys and girls, such as flirting. But critics decry the movement as promoting harmful gender stereotypes and depriving kids of equal educational opportunities. The ACLU claims many schools offer the classes in a way that conflicts with the U.S. Constitution and Title IX, a federal law banning sex discrimination in education. Researchers also have weighed in.

Women outnumber men on US Olympic team

Matt · 10 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During this, the summer of the 40th anniversary of Title IX, American women have reached another milestone in sports: For the first time, they outnumber men on the U.S. Olympic team.

The U.S. Olympic Committee released its roster for the London Olympics on Tuesday. There were 269 women and 261 men.

CEO Scott Blackmun called it a "true testament to the impact of Title IX," the 1972 law that increased opportunities for women in sports across America.'

Men Only Parking

MikeJH · 11 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A German mayor faces accusations of sexism after ordering for his town's trickiest parking spaces to be marked 'men only'.

Gallus Strobel, mayor of the Black Forest town of Triberg, has demanded that spaces are painted with a male or female symbol depending on their perceived difficulty.

Women have been allocated wide, well-lit spaces located close to the exits of car parks, while men are expected to pull in at more difficult angles close to cement pillars.
...

It comes less than a week after pictures emerged of a car park in China which has introduced a ladies-only parking zone.

The underground shopping centre car park in Tianjin has an area clearly marked with neon signs, bright pink shopping-themed decor, and hazard bumpers in each space.

It is believed to be one of several car parks in China which have special ladies-only parking zones to make them feel comfortable when parking.

The car parks include extra wide bays, added lighting, and female parking attendants to give guidance.

Statistics from the Driving Standards Agency show that more than 40,000 women failed their driving tests last year for not controlling their car while reverse parking.

The number of men who failed was less than half that number at 18,798.'

What About the Men? Why Our Gender System Sucks for Men, Too

Mastodon · 11 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We live in a sexist society, one where gender programming starts at birth (though the advent of the sonogram has allowed parents to get a head start by painting the nursery pink or blue and stocking up in advance on gendered toys and clothes) and is so pervasive as to be inescapable. Feminism has done an excellent job analyzing and challenging the ways that these assigned and enforced gender roles damage and deform the lives of women. The same tools of analysis can be applied to the damage and deformation that men suffer. And that damage, sad to say, is severe.

The general term for the incredibly restrictive social codes on male behavior is hegemonic masculinity, though Paul Kivel refers to it as the “Man Box” in his work, and Charlie Glickman clarifies that to the “Act Like a Man Box” to emphasize the performative nature of the restrictions. We choose to use hegemonic masculinity as our term because it is less likely than “Man Box” to be used in a trend piece about how it’s okay for men to own steamer trunks now.'

Women voters want white guys out

Mastodon · 11 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Undecided women voters in key swing states have spoken: dads and other old white guys are out and mommy lawmakers are in, especially those with a little spine--or a pistol.

In a far-reaching Emily's List poll that showed President Obama beating Mitt Romney among the group 48 percent to 40 percent, the 950 women in 13 states rejected male politicians in Washington, blaming them for the fiscal crisis and being out of touch with the everyday woes of females.

The poll, which the progressive group is using to guide its Women Vote! project to back female Democratic candidates, put dads near the bottom of the list of appealing attributes women voters prefer, slightly above attorneys, stock brokers, lobbyists and current members of Congress.

At the top: Teachers, female police chiefs and moms. "Moms are more appealing than dads," said pollster Lisa Grove, because it's assumed that they understand what women want.'

Protecting Your Rights as an Unmarried Father in Georgia

Mastodon · 11 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'July 11, 2012 /24-7PressRelease/ -- So you're about to become a dad -- congratulations! Getting ready for a new baby is a big job, but if you and the baby's mother are not married, there is one important task you need to take care of. You need to establish paternity and go through the process of legitimating your child. If you don't, you will have no legal rights regarding the care and custody of the child.

In Georgia, when a child is born outside of a marriage, the mother is the only person allowed to have legal or physical custody of the child. There are no automatic fathers' rights. This is true even if the mother and father live together or have been in a committed relationship for several years.
...
Paternity establishes a duty to pay child support. It does not give a father a right to seek visitation or custody of a child.
...

An unwed Georgia father who wishes to establish legal rights to a child must go through a process called "legitimation." It is very important to note that simply putting the father's name on the child's birth certificate does not create a legal relationship.'

Boys Should Be Protected, as Girls Are

Matt · 11 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The recent court decision in Cologne that found ritual, medically unnecessary male circumcision to be a violation of the child's rights should not surprise scholars of American constitutional law. Two landmark cases have long held that U.S. law protects religious belief, but will not condone potentially harmful religious practice.

In 1878, in Reynolds v. U.S., the Supreme Court held that “laws are made for the government of actions, and while they cannot interfere with mere religious belief and opinions, they may with practices.”

Likewise, in 1944 in Prince v Massachusetts, the justices ruled: “The right to practice religion freely does not include liberty to expose the … child to ill health or death. … Parents may be free to become martyrs themselves. But they may not make martyrs of their children before they have reached the age of full and legal discretion when they can make that choice for themselves.”'

Let Boys Decide at 16

Matt · 11 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'All human beings should be able to make their own decisions about whether their genitals are to be injured. All the more so if such a procedure is irreversible and not medically necessary.

In countries where daily personal hygiene is possible and routine, there are no, or at least only highly doubtful, verifiable medical advantages of circumcising a child. Even if the removal of the foreskin could minimize the man's risk of contracting H.I.V. or reduce his female partners' risk of developing cervical cancer, this does not justify the circumcision of children. Whatever risks might exist for an uncircumcised man and his partners, they would not become relevant until the man is sexually active. For young boys, there are no medical benefits. On the contrary, circumcision carries all the risks inherent in any surgery.'

Teaching Feminism: Summer Reading, Girls Vs. Boys

Mastodon · 12 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many teachers and parents believe that we should select books that boys will be interested in because girls will read them no matter what. While I do believe this is true, it is dangerous to keep pushing male-oriented books on our young female students. Girls are already so overwhelmed with all of the classics written by (and for) dead, white men. They encounter important heros in literature such as Guy Montag, Holden Caulfield, and Jay Gatsby to name a few. They also encounter their helpless and often short-lived female counterparts who generally serve to inspire or otherwise drive the male hero of the story with no true agency themselves. While these books are important for students to read, if we don't counter the images of women we show young female students in literature, we risk sending the message that women aren't good for much besides inspiring men.'

Obama Sinks to Historic Lows Among Blue-Collar Men

Mastodon · 12 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The new Quinnipiac University and ABC/Washington Post national surveys out this week converge on one key conclusion: as the election nears, President Obama is sinking to historic lows among the group most consistently hostile to him.

Throughout his career on the national stage, Obama has struggled among white men without a college education. But in these latest surveys, he has fallen to a level of support among them lower than any Democratic nominee has attracted in any election since 1980, according to an upcoming National Journal analysis of exit polls from presidential elections.

Though pollsters at each organization caution that the margins of error are substantial when looking at subgroups such as this, each poll shows erosion within that margin of error for Obama with these working-class white men. The new Quinnipiac poll shows Obama attracting just 29 percent of non-college white men, down from 32 percent in their most recent national survey in April, according to figures provided by Douglas Schwartz, April Radocchio and Ralph Hansen of Quinnipiac. The ABC/Washington Post survey found Obama drawing just 28 percent of non-college white men, down from 34 percent in their May survey, according to figures provided by ABC Pollster Gary Langer. Romney drew 56 percent of the non-college white men in Quinnipiac and 65 percent in the ABC/Washington Post survey.'

SAVE Applauds Justice Dept. Probe into Wrongful Convictions

Matt · 12 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE
Contact: Teri Stoddard
Email: tstoddard@saveservices.org

WASHINGTON / July 12, 2012 -- Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) welcomes the recent announcement that the Department of Justice and FBI are launching a probe of thousands of criminal cases to determine whether defendants were wrongly convicted. The news was highlighted in a recent Washington Post article:
http://www.washingtonpost.com/local/crime/justice-dept-fbi-to-review-use-of-forensic-evidence-in-thousands-of-cases/2012/07/10/gJQAT6DlbW_story.html

Each year millions of dollars in prosecutorial resources are squandered on trivial and false cases of domestic violence, thus shortchanging real victims who deserve priority from the criminal justice system, SAVE believes.

One survey found that about two-thirds of prosecutors' offices around the country have implemented so-called "no-drop" policies for domestic violence:
http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/Unequal-Justice-in-the-Criminal-Justice-System . Such policies obviate the requirement of probable cause, and have resulted in innocent citizens being needlessly charged and wrongfully convicted.

In a recent high-profile case, high school athlete Brian Banks, wrongfully accused of rape, accepted a 5-year plea bargain, rather than face the uncertainties of a trial. Banks' conviction was overturned in May after his accuser admitted on tape that the accusation was false.

Earlier this week, former Hofstra University student Rondell Bedward settled his lawsuit against false rape accuser Damnell Ndonye. Despite the existence of a video showing the sex was consensual, prosecutors had forced Bedward and 4 other accused men to be detained.

In 2011, SAVE filed a Grievance Complaint against Maine prosecutor Mary N. Kellett for multiple instances of prosecutorial misconduct: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/COMPLA1.pdf Kellett's case will be heard August 30-31.

SAVE says the Violence Against Women Act, currently up for reauthorization in Congress, needs to add provisions that require prosecutors receiving VAWA funding to eliminate no-drop policies and enforce laws that ban perjury and false swearing.

SAVE is a victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to domestic violence:
www.saveservices.org

OED finally recognizes 'misandry' as a word

Matt · 12 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

http://oxforddictionaries.com/definition/english/misandry?q=misandry

Definition of misandry noun
[mass noun]

the hatred of men (i.e. the male sex specifically).

Propecia May Have Long-Lasting, Possibly Permanent Sexual Side Effects

Matt · 12 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kevin Malley was almost 30, and he was starting to lose his hair. He went to his doctor to see if there was a way to keep from going bald, and his doctor prescribed Propecia.

"I looked young for my age, so I wanted to hold off my hair loss for a little bit," Malley said. "I didn't plan on taking Propecia for more than a year."

Malley started taking the drug in May 2011, and by October he was completely impotent and had no sex drive whatsoever. His body changed, even his genitals shrank, and he slipped into a mental fog that he just couldn't clear. His doctor told him the side effects would go away if he stopped taking the drug, so he did. But nothing changed.

"I kept expecting the side effects to go away, but they did not, they only got worse," he said.'

"Boiling Water Attack"?

el cid · 13 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Here's the headline for this story:

"Trial ordered for ex-wife in boiling water attack"

Here's what she did:

"A judge has ordered trial for a California woman charged with pouring boiling water on her sleeping ex-husband in a jealous rage over another woman. Prosecutors say 39-year-old Jesusa Tatad peeled back the sheets covering 36-year-old Ronnie Tatad and tossed a pot of boiling water on him. She then clubbed him with a baseball bat as he screamed in pain.

Although divorced, the couple shared a small Daly City apartment.

Ronnie Tatad died two weeks later."

The prosecution got it right: she's to be tried for torture and murder. But the headline makes it appear she just doused him with some boiling water. While unkind, that's about half the story. This was murder most foul, not a scalding.

And remember, guys: Only men commit domestic violence.

University academic quits over 'extreme' feminism

Broadsword · 13 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'JAMES Cook University is embroiled in an ugly battle of the sexes which has resulted in one academic resigning in protest at the lack of discipline of his "extreme" feminist colleague.

JCU School of Medicine adjunct senior lecturer Dr Greg Canning has quit his teaching job of 10 years, claiming the university failed to caution Adjuct Associate Professor Betty McLellan, who he has accused of publicly practicing sexual vilification.

Dr McLellan, from the School of Arts and Social Sciences, is a feminist ethicist and psychotherapist, with more than 20 years experience. She has written several books, and regularly contributes opinion pieces to radical feminism websites such as the Coalition for a Feminist Agenda.

Dr Canning, who is a men's health advocate, said he took great offence to some of Dr McLellan's writings. An opinion piece, written by Dr McLellan on website Radfem Hub titled 'The Question on Nobody's Lips', states "even with all the evidence we have that something's not quite right with the male of the species, there is still impenetrable resistance to focusing on men's behaviour and asking: what is it about men?"'

Africa: The Global Fund Should Actively Promote Male Circumcision

Mastodon · 13 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Male circumcision is a high-impact and cost-effective method of curbing the spread of HIV infection, Karanja Kinyanjui says. "It is time for a massive scale up of these programmes."

As the campaign for an AIDS-free generation by 2015 gains momentum, the Global Fund will play a crucial role in achieving this target because it is a major funder of health programmes globally. The Fund should actively promote the inclusion of male circumcision in programmes as it is a high impact and cost-effective method of curbing the spread of HIV infection.

Male circumcision as an effective anti-HIV strategy has already received support from influential leaders globally. In November last year, US Secretary of State Hilary Clinton said male circumcision was one of three interventions that could help achieve the goal of an AIDS-free generation, a policy that the US government would pursue. This political support is crucial for the male circumcision campaign to gain momentum.'

Boys twice as likely to be diagnosed with special needs

Broadsword · 13 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Young boys are almost twice as likely to be diagnosed with learning impairments, behaviour problems or communication difficulties as girls, it emerged. The disclosure – in data published by the Department for Education – will reignite concerns that schools are wrongly branding pupils with special needs as a cover for indiscipline or poor exam results.

...

Earlier this year, Jean Gross, a former Government adviser on speech, language and communication needs, insisted that problems were often “used as an explanation for failure” at school, particularly among boys.

She said: “One third of nine and 10-year-old boys have special educational needs. It’s at that age that schools start to think they are not going to get a [pass] on their SATs, so they get labelled as having special needs.

“This is not done out of malice – schools are just trying to explain themselves. It is a real incentive to do this when schools don’t hit their floor target.”'

'Miss New Hampshire USA' Nicole Houde Charged with Domestic Assault for Second Time

Mastodon · 14 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'On June 30, Miss New Hampshire USA, 26-year-old Nicole Houde, was arrested for the second time for domestic violence after allegedly beating her new boyfriend.

On April 25, Houde was arrested for attacking her previous boyfriend, Scott Nickerson, who told RadarOnline.com that the beauty queen has a temper after she drinks.

The new boyfriend, who Houde allegedly attacked, was a man whom Nickerson claims she was cheating on him with.

Nickerson told RadarOnline.com: "The public only sees Nicole in her sober state for the most part, so most people she knows think she is an angel beauty queen when in fact she is nothing more than an out of control partier who turns violent and has cheated on me and previous boyfriends and no one realizes this."'

Woman accused of having sex with 7-year-old

Matt · 14 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. 'having sex with'... need I say more? Excerpt:

'A 20-year-old woman is accused of having sex with the 7-year-old son of her boyfriend.

Alicia Gaston of North Fairmount confessed to engaging in sexual intercourse with the child about 8 p.m. on April 10, 2011 in the 200 block of Craft Street in Winton Place, Cincinnati police said. She faces one count of rape.'

Title IX no longer does its job as intended

Mastodon · 14 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The sad thing about Title IX is that no one benefits from its if-we-can't-have-it-no-one-can mentality. A 2007 study by the College Sports Council studied athletic participation at universities between 1981 and 2005. The study found that the number of male athletes per university dropped by 6 percent during that time period, and the number of male sports teams dropped 17 percent! While non-mainstream sports like wrestling, gymnastics, tennis, and swimming were hit hardest by these cuts, even perpetual cash cows like football and basketball experienced declines during this time frame.

Title IX proponents like to claim that the law is responsible for increases in female athletic opportunities. Not only is this misleading, it wholly ignores the great cost to male athletes and to American sports in general. In the 1990s, for every female opportunity that was created (though not necessarily by Title IX), 3.4 male opportunities were lost. The average university has 8.7 women's sports teams and only 7.8 men's teams.'

Nebraska mother of kids found in kennel gets probation

Mastodon · 14 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NORTH PLATTE, Neb. — The Nebraska mother of two boys police found locked in a dog kennel will serve two years of probation after pleading no contest to felony child abuse.

Prosecutors made deals with Clark and other defendants in the case after a judge ruled some of what they told investigators couldn't be used as evidence.

Police say they found Clark's two boys, ages 3 and 5 at the time, sleeping in a wired-shut kennel Oct. 24 inside a filthy trailer home littered with trash and feces. Police were following up on a tip that four children in the home were living in an unsafe environment.

Police say Clark told officers she put the boys in the 30-by-42-inch kennel at night to keep them from climbing out of a window.'

Angela Merkel backs circumcision right after German ruling

Mastodon · 14 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chancellor Angela Merkel's spokesman said it was a case of protecting religious freedom.

Steffen Seibert said: "Circumcision carried out in a responsible manner must be possible without punishment."

European Jewish and Muslim groups had criticised the Cologne court ruling.

The case involved a doctor who carried out a circumcision on a four-year-old that led to medical complications.

The court said that a child's right to physical integrity trumped religious and parental rights.'

NYTimes: Two Classes, Divided by ‘I Do’

Matt · 15 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Anyone's guess which side of their editorial mouth they will speak from on any given Sunday. One week is "single moms are all the rage, you go girl!" and the next it's "if only I had a man!". Please, NYT, make up your mind! Article here. Excerpt:

'But a friendship that evokes parity by day becomes a study of inequality at night and a testament to the way family structure deepens class divides. Ms. Faulkner is married and living on two paychecks, while Ms. Schairer is raising her children by herself. That gives the Faulkner family a profound advantage in income and nurturing time, and makes their children statistically more likely to finish college, find good jobs and form stable marriages.

Ms. Faulkner goes home to a trim subdivision and weekends crowded with children’s events. Ms. Schairer’s rent consumes more than half her income, and she scrapes by on food stamps.
...
“The people with more education tend to have stable family structures with committed, involved fathers,” Ms. McLanahan said. “The people with less education are more likely to have complex, unstable situations involving men who come and go.”
...

But marriage also shapes the story in complex ways. Economic woes speed marital decline, as women see fewer “marriageable men.” The opposite also holds true: marital decline compounds economic woes, since it leaves the needy to struggle alone.
...
That is the essence of the story of Ms. Faulkner and Ms. Schairer. What most separates them is not the impact of globalization on their wages but a 6-foot-8-inch man named Kevin.'

UK: Suicide on the rise among older men

Broadsword · 15 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of suicides and the prevalence of suicidal tendencies is rising faster among older men than in any other age group, according to research released in the week the government postponed its suicide prevention strategy.

Data from the Office for National Statistics shows that the number of suicides among men aged over 55 has risen by 12% over the past decade, while suicides by men aged under 34 dropped by 30%.

The mental health charity Calm said men aged 45 to 54 were still most likely to seriously consider taking their own life.

Charities and mental health experts are concerned that across all age ranges there are far more male than female suicides.

Jane Powell, the chief executive of Calm, speculated that the recession may be having more of an impact on older men.

"If you are middle-aged just now and your job and life prospects are diminishing then this is tough," she said. "There is work to show that the impact of unemployment hits men harder, and later on in life; that it's easier for women whose lives are not necessarily defined by work and for whom part-time or temporary work isn't by definition bad.'

Title IX in science: Quotas for men?

Mastodon · 17 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In its zeal for gender balance in science, technology engineering and math courses, the Education Department could impose quotas on male STEM students by 2013, warns Hans Bader, who once worked for the Education Department's Office for Civil Rights. The White House has promised new Title IX guidelines in STEM fields.

To comply with Title IX, colleges have eliminated men's sports teams to create a gender balance. "Title IX isn't just about sports," President Obama wrote in Newsweek. It's also about "inequality in math and science education" and "a much broader range of fields, including engineering and technology. I've said that women will shape the destiny of this country, and I mean it."

By the Title IX model in sports, that means if 60 percent of undergrads are women — common in many colleges and universities — then 60 percent of engineering and physics students must be female.'

Science Quotas for Women--A White House Goal

Mastodon · 17 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But lately, and especially under the Obama administration, the Education Department has been inserting Title IX aggressively into other aspects of college life. One of them is sexual misconduct, typified by the department's new rule demanding that colleges lower the standard of proof required to prove sexual assault in a campus disciplinary proceeding. And now the department has been asked to intervene in what is supposed to be a problem: that more women than men choose to major in the humanities--or biology--rather than in the math-intensive STEM fields. Yet the administration's view that bias reduces women's entry into STEM fields has little scholarly support. A task force from the National Academy of Sciences investigated 500 university science departments and concluded that men and women overall "enjoyed comparable opportunities," and that female candidates for jobs at major research universities actually had a slight edge over their male competitors.'

Quotas Limiting Male Science Enrollment: The New Liberal War on Science

Mastodon · 17 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gender disparities in a major are not the product of sexism, but rather the differing preferences of men and women. The fact that engineering departments are filled mostly with men does not mean they discriminate against women anymore than the fact that English departments are filled mostly with women proves that English departments discriminate against men. The arts and humanities have well over 60 percent female students, yet no one seems to view that gender disparity as a sign of sexism against men. Deep down, the Obama administration knows this, since it is planning to impose its gender-proportionality rules only on the STEM fields (science, technology, engineering, and math), not other fields that have similarly large gender disparities in the opposite direction.'

Why Obama administration shouldn't use Title IX to balance math classes

Mastodon · 17 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Public schools are hereby ordered to meticulously log and report to a federal officer (in the interest of “broadening data collection”) the gender breakdown of their math and science classes. Virtually all public and private colleges (“grant-receiving universities”) will be held to a new standard.

If federal officials think your classes are too male-dominated, the government will order you to put more women in them (“help you to comply with Title IX rules”) until it likes the ratio.

Punishment for failure to obey will be severe (nice federal funding you have there — it’d be a shame if anything happened to it).
...
“While we’ve made some progress in closing the gender gap . . . at the higher-level classes,” explained Education Secretary Arne Duncan, “we still see underrepresentation of young girls, and we have to improve upon that going forward.”

Who says “under-representation” is anything to be worried about? Sixty-nine percent of psychologists are women. Do we need to address the psychologists’ gender gap? Sixty-one percent of veterinarians are women. And like their best-known ex-colleague, Michele Bachmann, 74% of tax examiners are women. Not every profession can be at least half-female unless every profession is required to be exactly half-female.'

Circumcision ban makes Germany "laughing stock"-Merkel

Mastodon · 17 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

BERLIN, July 17 (Reuters) - Chancellor Angela Merkel has warned that Germany could become a laughing stock if it fails to overturn a district court ban on circumcision that has enraged Jews and Muslims.

Merkel's government has already criticised the Cologne court ruling and promised a new law to protect the right to circumcise male infants, but the conservative leader's strong comments underline how sensitive Germany is to charges of intolerance because of its Nazi past.

"I do not want Germany to be the only country in the world where Jews cannot practise their rituals. Otherwise we will become a laughing stock," the Bild daily quoted Merkel as telling a closed meeting of her Christian Democrats (CDU).'

'Wait until later,' say pediatricians

Mastodon · 17 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Children have to be old enough to give their consent to a religious circumcision, says leading pediatrician Maximilian Stehr. But the law does not need to be changed.
...
'Would you see the issue of the inability of the child to give its consent as a bigger issue than that of the child's physical integrity?

I don't think you can separate the two. Physical integrity is certainly the highest value. That goes without question. There are certainly medical conditions and situations in which people want to decide for themselves that they would like to change something about their body. That is standard procedure in cosmetic surgery - it's the same in pediatric surgery, for example, when we correct protruding ears. For that, the child has to be able to judge for itself the seriousness of the operation, as well as its risks and side-effects, and that is only possible when the child is 14 or 16 years old.'

'The Masculinity Police Perpetuates Gender Pay Gap'

Mastodon · 17 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The masculinity police push women away from financial equality by engaging in systematic scorn for all that is perceived to be feminine and all this is supported by feminists. Women's efforts to level the economic playing field are discounted and dismissed. To maintain the perceived superiority of masculinity over femininity, the masculinity police work tirelessly to keep the substantial wage gap in place.

It is a sad day every day that women earn less money than men. Women earn just 77 cents for every dollar earned by men in the same position. The pay gap is even worse for women of color, with African American women earning 67.7 cents and Latinas earning 58.7 cents for every dollar earned by men doing the same work. Unprecedented numbers of women are the sole or primary breadwinners in their homes. Equal pay means that mothers, daughters, wives, and sisters will be better off financially, offering more long-term financial stability for their fathers, sons, husbands, and brothers. When women earn better wages, more money is spent in the economy. Every single American man, woman, and child has a vested interest in paycheck equality. Pay equity is good news for all of us.'

Richmond woman arrested on sex-crime charge

Matt · 18 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Richmond woman has been arrested on a warrant charging her with a felony sex crime after an investigation determined she was impregnated by a 15-year-old Richmond boy, court documents said.

Jessica M. Thompson, 23, of 256 S.W. Third St. in Richmond was charged with sexual misconduct with a minor (a Class B felony). A warrant was issued Monday, and Thompson had an initial hearing Friday morning in Wayne County Circuit Court. A trial date was set for 9 a.m. Oct. 9.'

Most Support Reform of Violence Against Women Act, SAVE Survey Shows

Matt · 18 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

WASHINGTON, July 17, 2012 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- A strong majority of registered voters participating in a national survey support reforming the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). These persons support measures currently being debated in Congress that are designed to curb the waste, discrimination, and false allegations which are occurring under the current VAWA law.

Commissioned by Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE), a victim advocacy organization, the survey shows strong support for reform among key voting blocs including women, young people, and domestic violence victims themselves.

'Always Worrying About Boys'

Mastodon · 18 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some people suggest that boys have very different brains from girls and have inherently weaker verbal skills. They should be given "informational texts" to read instead of the classics or any material containing emotion, which they aren't good at either. Leonard Sax, president of the National Association for Single Sex Public Education, suggests that literature teachers should not ask boys about characters' emotions but should focus only on what the characters actually do.

But science is proving that none of this is true. The alleged great differences between the brains of boys and girls are a myth. Lise Eliot, associate professor in the Department of Neuroscience at the Chicago Medical School, did an exhaustive review of the scientific literature on human brains from childhood to adolescence. She reports in her book Pink Brain, Blue Brain that there is "surprisingly little evidence of sex differences in children's brains."

As for boys' inability to handle emotion, that's another canard. In fact, boys have to learn to suppress emotions, and too often our culture instructs them well. Harvard psychiatrist William Pollack, the author of Real Boys, notes that our strict "boy culture" demands emotional rigidity, and by the second grade erodes the interpersonal skills that come naturally to boys. He says that boy babies are actually more expressive and vocal than girl babies. "We now have executives paying $10,000 a week to learn emotional intelligence. These [sessions] actually target skills boys were born with."'

SAVE National Phone Survey: Abuse Victims Among Registered Voters Who Want VAWA Reform

Matt · 18 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

We recently surveyed registered voters across America to see if they agree with recent reforms to the Violence Against Women Act. We specifically asked about reforms to stop waste, fraud, discriminatory practices, and false allegations.

Over-all findings:

1. Stop waste and fraud - 69.5%
2. Stop discrimination - 65.9%
3. Stop false allegations - 63.5%

The survey shows strong support for reform among key voting blocs including women and young people. One notable finding: About 7 in 10 persons who are a victim of domestic violence or who personally know an abuse victim support the proposed changes.

Survey methods and detailed findings:
http://www.saveservices.org/campaign-2012/national-survey-on-vawa-reform/

What If Sandusky's Alleged Victims Had Been Girls?

Matt · 18 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Who would leave a little girl behind to be raped? Pretty much no one. It's inconceivable. So what happened with the boy? Was there some kind of repulsion that took hold of McQueary, something about a man and boy, some kind of homophobia-inflected disgust? Or do we imagine that, on some level, boys can take care of themselves and be strong? This is why so many male survivors of rape feel plagued by guilt: They're ashamed to be victims because they don't feel entitled to be vulnerable. This boy was vulnerable, and he needed a protector. Mike McQueary failed him.

I don't know where this victim is, but I hope he has the courage to come forward. If I could speak to him, I'd say, "We support you, whoever you are. We stand with you. And this time, we won't walk away."'

Ecuador: Grant Political Asylum Now to Julian Assange

Mastodon · 19 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As concerned citizens of the world well know, the Editor-in-Chief of WikiLeaks, Julian Assange, is currently inside the Ecuadorian Embassy, in London, England, having gone there to ask for political asylum. I want to add my voice to the many people of conscience around the world in urging President Correa of Ecuador to grant political asylum to Julian Assange.

The British courts shamefully refused Mr. Assange's appeal against extradition to Sweden, where he is wanted for questioning accused of sexual molestation. No criminal charges have been made against him. Mr. Assange has said he is willing to answer questions relating to accusations against him, but only in England. He has good reason not to want to be extradited to Sweden, as he could find himself imprisoned in solitary confinement, and then very likely extradited to a U.S. prison.'

Report finds black gay males in US worst hit by HIV-AIDS

Matt · 19 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HIV-AIDS is affecting black gay men in the United States on a scale unseen among any other group in the developed world, said a report issued Wednesday ahead of the International AIDS Conference.

So grave is the crisis that in some US cities, one in two black men who have sex with other men are HIV positive, according to the report from the Black AIDS Institute, the only national HIV-AIDS think tank focusing on African Americans.

"AIDS in America is a black disease, no matter how you look at it," its president and chief executive Phill Wilson, who is himself HIV positive, said ahead of Sunday's opening of the six-day global conference.

"The best lens through which to figure out what AIDS looks like in America is to look at AIDS in black America," he said in an interview, adding that it was time to "jump-start a new conversation... and build a robust response" to the crisis.'

New Survey Supports VAWA Reforms

Matt · 19 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This year, the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) is once again up for reauthorization, but this newest version of VAWA — loaded up with even more leftist provisions — has hit a snag. First signed into law in 1994 with bipartisan support and reauthorized in 2000 and 2006, the legislation has become both a failure and a boondoggle — lining the pockets of feminist groups, vastly expanding federal, state, and local bureaucracies, and becoming riddled with fraud.

This year there are competing bills in the House (H.R. 4970) and Senate (S. 1925), and in a climate of debt, deficit, and government waste, the legitimate bone of contention is how best to reform the law that has spawned dozens of failed programs. VAWA created a bureaucratic nightmare that targets the wrong women — those claiming nebulous "psychological harm" — instead of actually helping battered women. In addition to not helping the women it is supposed to serve, VAWA has morphed into a rigid, inhumane law enforcement tool that hurts and denigrates men.'

“Nice Guys” Contribute to Rape Culture

Mastodon · 20 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminist women have taught me many things. One is that sexual/domestic violence can’t occur without sexism (racism, homophobia, etc.). Sexual violence is supported by a “rape culture” that glorifies objectification and male ownership of girls and women. Sexual coercion is painted as romantic–men are not only expected to use coercion to “score,” they are pressured and punished as “unmanly” if they don’t.
...
Men, we have a crucial role to play in this. We benefit from male privilege every moment of every day. We may not ask for it, but it’s there. So let’s use it to confront rape-supportive behavior, rape jokes and rape culture whenever we can. Let’s listen when we’re told we’ve done something that inadvertently supports rape culture, rather than getting defensive. Let’s learn from feminist women who speak and write about sexual violence and rape culture. Let’s support our local rape crisis center and state sexual assault coalition. Let’s be “aspiring allies” to feminist women, as together we work to create a world free from sexual violence.'

Records: Mom accused of whipping boy to death had long history with CPS

Matt · 20 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HOUSTON—The mother charged in the beating death of her 4-year-old son was allegedly upset that the boy wet himself, according to CPS and court documents the I-Team reviewed.

Vastie Coleman, 27, was being held without bond Tuesday in the Harris County Jail for allegedly killing Kyron Barnes.

The boy's two surviving sisters described routine whippings by their mother in court documents. One of them told investigators Coleman used a cord to whip Kyron, because "the belt was broken because mom kept whipping the kids so hard it broke into pieces."'

F&F: New California Law Protects Military Parents Child Custody Rights

Matt · 21 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Governor Edmund G. Brown, Jr. signed into law AB 1807, protecting child custody rights for military parents. Assemblyman Paul Cook, R-Yucca Valley, introduced the legislation to protect our military parents.

Fathers and Families has lobbied and advocated for the rights of our military in child custody. This legislation is another success.

When a divorced couple shares custody of a child and one of the parents is deployed due to military orders, full custody of the child is given temporarily to the non-deployed parent. Often, when the deployed parent returns, a custody battle ensues.'

Dear Prudence Screws Up: Drunk Sex Edition

Mastodon · 22 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Prudie seems offended by Confused's desire to set ground rules in her own marriage. Lots of couples find a mutually comfortable level of implied consent for drunk sex, but that isn't working for Confused and her husband.

Confused is not the bad guy. She's a survivor who needs her partner to be extra careful about a kind of sex that most people in committed relationships would take in stride.

We don't have to blame her husband or label him as an abuser. Although, as the person who (inadvertently?) traumatized her in the first place, he should be gracious about accomodating her idiosyncratic needs.

This is a problem to be solved by negotiation, not recrimination.'

Circumcision is an affront to decent human behaviour

Mastodon · 22 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The extent of this cutting, which "has no health benefits", involves removal of "healthy and normal female genital tissue" and is associated with ideas about "unclean" sexual parts, is immaterial. "It is nearly always carried out on minors and is a violation of the rights of children. The practice also violates a person's rights to health, security and physical integrity, the right to be free from torture and cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment, and the right to life when the procedure results in death."

And the genital mutilation of a boy? The WHO has a separate, notably upbeat fact sheet about that. "Male circumcision is one of the oldest and most common surgical procedures worldwide," it notes, respectfully, "and is undertaken for many reasons: religious, cultural, social and medical." Here, it finds, the removal of healthy, normal genital tissue and violation of a child's rights and physical integrity for reasons often associated with sexual cleanliness can be a positive boon, now that circumcision may – or may not, given risk compensation – help contain HIV. For neonates, the WHO commends the Mogen clamp method and a local anaesthetic, adding that "a pacifier soaked in sucrose solution has been found to be effective in reducing fussiness in infants".
...
Whether Genesis, the law or local culture explains the difference in approach, the original German judgment was right – children need protecting from it. Either the mutilation of children is wrong or, as many resentful supporters of FGM would argue, it is every parent's fundamental right to redesign their child's genitals.'

Campaign to Promote Circumcision Wastes Resources

Matt · 23 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(BOSTON) - Ronald Goldman, Ph.D., executive director of the Circumcision Resource Center and author of Circumcision: The Hidden Trauma, is concerned about the International AIDS Conference in Washington, DC starting July 22. He says it offers a one-sided view by promoting male circumcision to reduce HIV transmission in Africa.

"There is nothing scientific about a process that excludes opposing views. Circumcision advocates are afraid to debate circumcision critics," states Goldman. "This shows up at professional conferences where critics are not provided equal opportunity to participate. The fear of open discussion was also apparent when two circumcision advocates refused to debate me on two different radio talk shows." He also notes that circumcision advocates tend to be circumcised and have personal, political, and financial conflicts of interest connected with circumcision.'

Can chivalry and feminism coexist?

Mastodon · 25 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Confession: I'm a little bit/very charmed by chivalrous, gentlemanly men. As long as it's not some sort of agenda-laden, playboy act, I find certain gestures touching. Like bag carrying, or a door held open. (Unless I'm not even close to the door yet, so I have to hurry awkwardly along while the guy's just standing there, waiting.)
...
More recently, US television presenter Laura Schlessinger announced that: "Chivalry is largely dead, and feminism is the murderer". Campaigning for a resurgence, she urged women to "enjoy being a woman and let men treat them as such", and men "to be old-fashioned gentlemen".'

Aurora heroes: Three who gave their lives

mens_issues · 25 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Here is the latest of a few stories I've come across about men in their 20s saving the lives of their girlfriends and dying in the process in the Aurora movie massacre:

'(CNN) -- Great evil often brings out the best in good men, men like Todd Beamer on Flight 93, Medal of Honor recipient Michael Murphy in Afghanistan, and now the Aurora three -- the three young men, each in different parts of theater nine, who gave their lives to protect their girlfriends.
...
These men were three of the 12 innocent people killed early that morning. Their incredible sacrifice leaves us asking: Why? Why would a young man with his entire life ahead of him risk everything for a woman he has no legal, financial or marital obligations to?
...

They believed, to put it simply, in a code of honor. They put the lives of the women before their own, an old fashioned notion to be sure, but certainly an honorable one (if you have any doubt, ask the survivors). Their instincts were to protect, not run away.
...
In an age when traditional manhood has been increasingly relegated to fiction -- capes, masks and green screens -- these three men stand as real-life heroes. Their actions remind us that good triumphs over evil, not just in movies, but also in reality.'

IA Urges Policymakers to Halt Male Circumcision Rollout

Matt · 25 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'The human rights group Intact America (IA) is urging policy makers attending the 2012 International AIDS Society Conference in Washington, DC, 22-27 July, to halt the rollout of mass circumcision campaigns, calling the plan exorbitant, dangerous and unethical.

“The promotion of male circumcision sends the wrong message, creates a false sense of protection, and places women at greater risk for HIV. Men are lining up to be circumcised in the belief that they will no longer need to use condoms,” said Georganne Chapin, Executive Director of IA. “It’s extremely disturbing that scarce resources would be squandered on this prevention method when new research shows that the other proven prevention and treatment methods reduce transmission far more effectively. Medical resources need to be devoted to antiretroviral drugs, condom programs, education, and vaccines.”

Various studies show that results from three highly-publicized randomized clinical trials (RCTs) on HIV and circumcision are not applicable to the general population of sub-Saharan Africa or any other region. A 2008 study concluded that male circumcision is not associated with reduced HIV infection rates in the general sub-Saharan population. Another recent study analyzed circumcision rates and HIV incidence in South Africa, finding that:”Circumcision has no protective effect on HIV transmission.” “The RCTs are questionable,” says Chapin. “A 2008 study found that increased use of condom promotion is 95 times more cost-effective than male circumcision in preventing new HIV infections.” In Zimbabwe, a country where a mass circumcision campaign is currently underway, the recently released Health Demographic Survey (ZHDS 2010/2011) showed the HIV prevalence rate among circumcised males between the ages of 15 and 49 in Zimbabwe to be 14%, while for intact (non-circumcised) males it’s 12%.'

Wronged Twice

el cid · 25 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Editorial here. Robert Dewey was wrongfully convicted of murder and spent 16 years in jail. Apparently, the state of Colorado has no laws that require compensation. In fact, he was released without even minimal cash or shelter. Just released. Men, of course, are more likely than women to be accused and convicted of a crime. Excerpt:

'The result — and it's a rare one — could be that someone is falsely imprisoned. When that happens, we think the state has a duty to compensate the individual.

Such is the case with Robert Dewey, incarcerated in Colorado for 16 years for a murder he didn't commit. There was no prosecutorial misconduct or other malfeasance. The system just ended up with the wrong man, as recently proven with DNA evidence.

Until that time, Dewey was a lifer. There was no point in teaching him job skills — he was never getting out. He also sustained a painful back injury in prison that still impedes his ability to do manual labor.

Upon his release in April, he left without even the minimal cash and shelter offered to those convicted and who have done their time.'

Six women rape man to death in Benue State

Matt · 25 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Trouble started on tuesday morning, precisely 3 am when Uroko returned from Ochanja, a popular joint in the small community of Ugbugbu and headed to the room of his youngest wife. The other wives who according to the youngest wife, Odachi had a meeting before Uroko returned home invaded her room with knives and sticks, demanding that their husband have sex with all of them at once. Uroko who resisted their attack was overpowered by the women who ordered that the sex march begin with the youngest wife and to continue in that order to the top.

Our correspondent reported that Uroko stopped breathing when the fifth woman was making her way to the bed. “Suddenly, my husband stopped breathing, and they all ran out, still laughing, but when they saw that I could not resuscitate him, they all ran into the forest.'

SAVE: Help Launch the Priority States DV Reform Project

Matt · 25 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) recently asked their Domestic Violence Legislative Project (DVLP) members to take on a one year challenge: Get state-level DV reform legislation enacted into law by June 30, 2013.

As of this writing, twelve states have signed up: Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Maryland, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Montana, Nebraska, New York, Oregon, Texas, and Wisconsin. Good thing, since Americans are fed up with fraud, waste, discrimination and false allegations.

Some of us are able to lobby legislators and do all of the other activities involved in this project. Many other people want reform, but are prohibited from participating due to job or family obligations. If that describes you, please consider making a financial donation so that others can advocate on your behalf.

Please help if you can.

Visit http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp to join the DVLP.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

The damaging impact of false rape allegations

Mastodon · 26 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are very few things everyone reading this piece will agree on. One of those things will be that rape is one of the most disgusting (if not the most disgusting) crimes that any human being can perpetrate. However is someone claiming rape when in fact no crime has taken place just as bad?

When thinking about what I should write for my first piece on The Periscope Post I threw out the idea of writing about this subject to a couple of friends and to say the response was cold would understate exactly what they said. However it is something that has been growing (or at least the reporting of it has been growing) in recent years.

Last week a 27 year-old woman from Aberbargoed, Caerphilly in South Wales was jailed for two years and eight months for making up a rape claim. She claimed rape because she was late home from a night of partying and thought that her parents would shout at her unless she had a good reason. So instead of apologising for staying out longer than she planned to she decided to cry rape.'

Cops: girl falsely accused ex-boyfriend of rape

Mastodon · 26 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HAMDEN, Conn. (WTNH) -- A 20-year-old West Haven woman was arrested after falsely reporting that her ex-boyfriend has abducted and sexually assaulted her.

On June 4th, Hamden police responded to 16 Hubbard Place, for a report of an abduction and sexual assault.

Jessica Barrett, 20, told police that on June 3rd, when she was walking near the Truman Street School in New Haven, her ex-boyfriend exited his vehicle, punched her in the head and then forced her into the vehicle.

Barrett told police her ex then drove her to the Hubbard Place address, where he raped her several times. She also said that he kept her in a closet for a period of time and that she was not fed for nearly 24 hours.'

UK: Father’s rights breached by mother 'too upset’ to let him see children

Mastodon · 26 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three senior judges found that it was not acceptable for the mother to block the father’s reasonable efforts to see his two daughters.

They urged all separated parents to see the “bigger picture” and consider the harm that legal disputes cause children. Lord Justice McFarlane said mothers and fathers had “a responsibility and a duty” to help children maintain contact with the other parent.

The Government has announced plans to reform the law to enable fathers to see their children. The changes would to spell out the right of children to have a “meaningful relationship” with both parents after a separation.'

Female-only VC firm Forerunner Ventures raises $40M fund

Mastodon · 26 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here Excerpt:

'Amid sweeping accusations that Silicon Valley venture capital firms have failed to attract female talent, one women-only firm has been quietly raising millions for its first institutionally-backed fund.

If you haven't heard of Forerunner Ventures, you probably will soon. This firm has been making its mark in the fashion world. In its first year, Forerunner made strategic investments in companies like Bonobos, Birchbox, Warby Parker, Hotel Tonight, Snapette, and Threadflip. And today, Forerunner announced it had closed a cool $40 million to continue funding up-and-coming digital commerce startups.

The firm has only been around since 2010, and already Forerunner Ventures has made some promising-looking investments. The secret ingredient is Kirsten Green, the firm's managing partner, who has a clear vision for success, one that has been almost a decade in the making.'

'More Female Than Male Olympians? Thank a Feminist!'

Mastodon · 26 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We all know by now that for the first time in history, the U.S. Olympic team will have more women (269) than men (261). Just incidentally, these numbers also exactly reflect the demographics of our country as a whole, where women make up 50.8 percent of the total population.

So the dominance of women this year is just a natural progression, right?

Not exactly. When our female athletes march into Olympic Stadium in London, they will be marching on the shoulders of feminists, male and female alike, who worked like hell against very long odds to make it happen. The London games have been called the "Title IX Olympics," appropriately laying credit to the 1972 law that opened athletic opportunities to girls and women in schools taking federal money, meaning virtually all of them.
...

In addition, Title IX has been under constant attack ever since it was passed, with dozens of weakening amendments and rules put forward over the years. Some lawmakers still claim it should be repealed, that it's unfair to boys, and takes away from male sports teams. But statistics show football hogs resources from both male and female teams -- and Penn State should teach us what football worship at its worst can do.'

Application of Title IX Guidance to Math and Science Education

Mastodon · 26 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, Heritage published a blog post entitled “Obama Administration Broadens Gender Quotas in Higher Ed,” detailing the Administration’s expansion of Title IX enforcement to science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM) education.
...
What steps is the Administration taking?

- The federal government will harness an interagency collaboration between the DOE and the Department of Justice to develop common guidance for colleges on Title IX compliance “to help institutions better understand their compliance obligations and ways to improve access and outreach to women and girls in STEM fields.”
- The DOE will revise its technical assistance to explicitly address STEM education to include information for K-12 schools and universities about their requirements to “ensure equal access to educational programs and resources in STEM fields.”
- The DOE “will broaden data collection to provide new gender-based academic analyses.”

Will this new collaboration result in quotas, substituting policymakers’ predetermined outcomes for the preferences of students, and diminished opportunities for men in STEM fields? If implementation of Title IX in the intercollegiate athletics context is a reliable indicator, there is strong evidence that it might.'

Texas: Child support changes kick in Sept. 1

Mastodon · 26 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men who have been paying child support for a child they believe is not theirs have 43 days to take their case to an attorney and get a court ordered paternity test.

Texas lawmakers recently passed a bill helping men who have dealt with mistaken paternity.

It gives men who have known they may not be the father of a child for more than a year a window of time starting in May 2011 to end payments when he has been wrongly named the father.

That window of opportunity closes September first, and a new law will go into effect.

Attorneys say getting out of paying child support was once difficult for men after the court determined a man was the father of a child. Even with DNA evidence, attorneys say father could rarely win the argument.'

Gender-biased laws don’t help matters

Mastodon · 26 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'A recent weekend edition of The Marietta Times, contained the viewpoint article, "Violence Against Women Act" must be renewed. I would like to ask the writer, executive director, Nancy Neylon, to give me a good reason as to why a gender biased act should ever be renewed. I believe domestic violence is wrong and no one, male or female, should instigate such actions. Those found guilty of such acts should not be protected by a law that focuses wholly on the woman.

Men are also stalked and fear for their lives. Women file false allegations, lie to the police and courts and it is the man who is usually arrested; when women are guilty the sentence is not the same as what a man would receive. No law is needed to protect the lawbreaker regardless of gender or life style. VAWA should be rewritten to cover all genders, anything less is redundant and biased. Not all immigrants are victims, some turn out to be the abuser after coming to the states but are still covered by this biased rambling law.'

'The Overwhelming Maleness of Mass Homicide'

Mastodon · 26 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This was inevitable. Feminists were licking their chops at the opportunity to use this tragedy as a way to condemn men. Excerpt:

'We shouldn't need Steven Pinker, one of the world's leading psychologists and the author of the book, The Better Angels of Our Nature, to tell us the obvious: "Though the exact ratios vary, in every society, it is the males more than the females who play-fight, bully, fight for real, kill for real, rape, start wars and fight in wars." The silence around the gendering of violence is as inexplicable as it is indefensible. Sex differences in other medical and social conditions — such as anorexia nervosa, lupus, migraines, depression and learning disabilities — are routinely analyzed along these lines.

For millennia, human society has struggled with what to do with young men's violent tendencies. Many cultures stage elaborate initiation ceremonies, presided over by older men, which help channel youthful aggression into productive social roles. But in contemporary society, we have trouble talking about the obvious: the transition from boy to man is a risky endeavor, and there can be a lot of collateral damage.'

Sample reader comment --

"I'm glad someone has addressed the startlingly obvious. Although judging by most of these lily livered responses men don't seem to handle being called out very well (What a surprise). The western world's economic crisis was caused by men. Men need to be held to account. Men deserve to be judged harshly. Men should admit and act to remedy their destructive faults. But alas this will never happen. Because it's a man's world."

Study: Brain Objectifies Women As Body Parts, Men As Whole

Mastodon · 26 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LINCOLN, Neb. (CBS St. Louis) — A recent study finds that our brain objectifies women as different body parts, while viewing men as a whole.

The study, published in June's European Journal of Social Psychology, was conducted by Sarah Gervais, a psychology professor at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln.

She conducted experiments by presenting 227 participants of the study with images of men and women, finding that men were perceived as a "global" – or whole – cognitive processing level, while women were seen on a "local" cognitive processing level.

"Local processing underlies the way we think about objects: houses, cars and so on. But global processing should prevent us from that when it comes to people," Gervais said in the study. "We don't break people down to their parts, except when it comes to women, which is really striking. Women were perceived in the same ways that objects are viewed."

The participant pool, which was evenly divided between men and women, were first provided images of fully-clothed people. They were then shown two images: the original clothed image from before and then an image of a sexual body part. The study found that the participants more easily identified a woman's body part shown in isolation than presented in the context of her entire body, and vice versa for men.'

Huffington Post: Penis Stolen by Thieves

TCM · 27 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The story is not framed in terms of genital mutilation or psychiatric trauma, but instead in lighthearted terms that trivialize the matter, provoking ridicule and trivialization on the part of commenters themselves. Excerpt:

'Fei Lin, 41, of the Niqiao village near Wenling City, in east China's Zhejiang province, told police he was asleep when the thieves burst into his room and put a bag over his head, according to CEN/EUROPICS and as reported in the Daily Star.

"They put something over my head and pulled down my trousers and then they ran off," Lin said. "I was so shocked I didn't feel a thing - then I saw I was bleeding and my penis was gone."

Police believe the attackers were jealous lovers of several local women whom Lin was having affairs with, the Austrian Times reported. Lin denied taking part in any infidelity.'

Boys' impulsiveness may result in better math ability, say MU researchers jkmerr · 28 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

A prospective cohort study of 300 boys and girls has found that boys' greater willingness to risk being wrong may play a role in boys' superior math skills. A press release describing the study is available here, and the study itself is available here. Story excerpt:

'COLUMBIA, Mo. – In a University of Missouri study, girls and boys started grade school with different approaches to solving arithmetic problems, with girls favoring a slow and accurate approach and boys a faster but more error prone approach. Girls' approach gave them an early advantage, but by the end of sixth grade boys had surpassed the girls. The MU study found that boys showed more preference for solving arithmetic problems by reciting an answer from memory, whereas girls were more likely to compute the answer by counting. Understanding these results may help teachers and parents guide students better.

"The observed difference in arithmetic accuracy between the sexes may arise from a the willingness to risk being wrong by answering from memory before one is sure of the correct answer," said Drew Bailey, a recent recipient of a Ph.D. in psychological science from MU. "In our study, we found that boys were more likely to call out answers than girls, even though they were less accurate early in school. Over time, though, this practice at remembering answers may have allowed boys to surpass girls in accuracy."'

Commentary: Individual voices worry liberal feminists

Mastodon · 28 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When the White House announced a push to use Title IX -- a law best known for increasing female participation in sports -- to boost the number of women in the science, technology and math fields, there wasn't much of a reaction. That's because to most people, there's not much of a problem. Though the Obama administration claims that girls and women need government help because they are being discriminated against, that might be the opposite of what's happening.

...

The liberal feminist groups that are pushing this agenda on the administration complain that women earn only 18 percent of the bachelor's degrees in engineering and computer science. But in reality, that number is a very small part of the story of women in so-called STEM fields. Turns out, women rule in biology with nearly 60 percent of all bachelor's, master's and doctorates awarded to women. Notice that nobody is raging about that gender disparity despite the fact that Title IX protects the underrepresented sex, male or female. According to the U.S. Department of Education, no investigations into this or many other gender disparities in favor of girls and women in a variety of disciplines are pending.

...

We are asked to believe that an anti-female gender apartheid exists even though more than 40 percent of bachelor's degrees awarded in the physical sciences and math go to women. The National Women's Law Center complains that women need to be better represented in the STEM fields that are more lucrative. This condescendingly assumes that women don't already consider these things when choosing a career. They don't need Big Sister telling them what's best for them.'

Men Never ‘Had It All’

Matt · 28 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I have all the respect in the world for the impossible challenges working moms face. The battle is not the same for men; it is not as tough. We don’t have both the maternal voice and the feminist voice in our heads telling us we should be at home nurturing our kids and also at work building fulfilling careers. But it’s nearly impossible for men to have it all too. Many men want fulfilling family lives. I want that even as I fulfill my familial role by providing. But most of the time I feel like I’m not involved enough in either my career or my kids’ lives. I usually feel as though my life is like a plate of food sitting in front of me, but there’s so much that the plate is overwhelmed, unable to hold it all, so it spills over onto the table.

When I’m at work and away from my kids, my heart aches as I look at the pictures my wife texts me. Here we are eating ice cream in the park! Look at us with the Easter bunny! Aren’t they cute in this little pool?! Meanwhile, I’m alone in a quiet office trying to finish my next book or preparing for tomorrow’s show. But when I’m with them, I can’t totally forget about the work I could be doing to help give them everything they need. Work that’s piling up because I can no longer work during weekends whenever I need to and must end many work days early to pick up someone from school. But then I find myself in northern Iowa or central Florida, about to give a speech about my book, and read an e-mail from a teacher about how my son acted out at school that day, and I feel tinier than a bug. Am I having it all? No.

My dad didn’t have it all, but he never seemed to worry about it. For many years he ran his own accounting business in Mattapan, Mass., and during tax season we barely saw him. He drove us to school and that was the last we saw of him until the next day’s drive. He taught me that a man is a provider. If that means working long hours and missing out on some key family moments, then so be it. I knew my dad loved me because he was always at the office. He was far from an absent father, but he did not achieve the balance I’d like to have. Alas, as I write this, my wife is putting the kids to bed by herself. I’ll get home later and kiss them asleep in their beds.'

HIV Debate: Circumcision for African Men?

Matt · 28 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Among those in Washington, D.C., for this week's International AIDS Conference, there's little to no debate about whether the world community should do what it takes to stop the global pandemic. But when it comes to how that goal should be accomplished, even those who care most passionately about the issue can disagree.

Case in point: The issue of voluntary medical male circumcision, known as VMMS. Depending on whom you ask, it's either a lifesaving procedure or "torture" that could have the unintended side effect of discouraging condom use and fueling the spread of the disease.
...
"Over the next five years, enough men can be circumcised through voluntary medical male circumcision to prevent 3.4 million new HIV infections and save billions in care and treatment," said Benjamin Mkapa, former president of Tanzania.

But just outside the convention center, there was a different take. Protesters held banners reading "Circumcision Is Torture" and "Intact Genitals Are a Human Right."

Natalie Erdossy, 29, an activist from Reston, Va., told the Washington Post that circumcision won't end AIDS and that it can lull men into thinking wrongly that they are protected against the virus. She called the studies indicating that VMMS reduces HIV infection "totally flawed."'

F&F: White Knights Ride While Dark Knight Rises

Matt · 28 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Slowly we are learning more about the 12 people killed in Aurora, Colorado. For four men, we are also learning how their ultimate sacrifice saved four lives by their using their own bodies to shield their girlfriends, and in one case, a fellow airman.

Yet it seems the heroes most of the media are talking about are three who saved their girlfriends by being human shields: Jonathan Blunk, Matt McQuinn, and Alex Teves.

Someone should have told Air Force Staff Sergeant Jesse Childress to fling himself in front of a woman. It appears there is little valor in — and little to be remembered for — saving a fellow airman.
...
By most accounts, Jesse Childress was an Air Force cyber-systems operator based at Buckley Air Force Base in Aurora. I had to keep reading to find a reference to his protecting his fellow airman and saving his life. Most of the stories about “heroes” focused on Blunk, McQuinn, and Teves. I guess Childress’ fellow airman should have been able to take care of himself.'

Violence Against Women Act needs reform

Matt · 28 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) is up for reauthorization again this year. This newest version of VAWA — loaded up with even more leftist provisions — has hit a snag. First signed into law in 1994 with bipartisan support and reauthorized in 2000 and 2006, the legislation has become both a failure and a boondoggle, lining the pockets of feminist groups, vastly expanding federal, state and local bureaucracies, and becoming riddled with fraud.

This year there are competing bills in the House (H.R. 4970) and Senate (S. 1925). In a climate of debt, deficit and government waste, the legitimate bone of contention is how best to reform the law, which has spawned dozens of failed programs. VAWA created a bureaucratic nightmare that targets the wrong women, those claiming nebulous “psychological harm,” instead of actually helping battered women. In addition to not helping the women it is supposed to serve, VAWA has morphed into a rigid, inhumane law enforcement tool that hurts and denigrates men.'

NYTimes' Room for Debate section

Matt · 28 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Two topics jump out at me: Are Modern Men Manly Enough? and An Age of Consent for Circumcision?.

Funny, I don't see a section called "Are Modern Women Feminine Enough?" or "An Age of Consent for Female Circumcision?"

Oh yeah, that's right, that's because female circumcision of minors is outlawed (and rightly so). And as for questioning if modern women are feminine enough? Who would dare? But is it even considered a relevant matter these days? And if not, why is wondering about the "manliness" of men even a topic?

UK: Prison for girls is not the answer

Broadsword · 29 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Generally speaking, girls are much better behaved than boys. That isn't some ludicrous Victorian stereotype, but a fact drawn out by crime statistics. Of 1,744 young people in custody, just 95 are girls. Just 22 per cent of offences committed by children are committed by girls. Moreover, of the few girls that do end up in court, the majority have committed low level, non-violent offences such as shop theft or criminal damage.

This has two significant consequences: it creates a youth criminal justice system built with boys in mind and it very often means that, for those girls who have ended up caught up in lives of crime, something must have gone very wrong.

The All Party Parliamentary Group on Women in the Penal System, chaired by Baroness Corston has conducted an inquiry on girls and found that girls were being criminalised inappropriately by the courts when it would have made far more sense to deal with the girl's issues, in terms of her welfare and behaviour, long before they reached the courtroom.

Using inappropriate and unnecessary criminal justice interventions for girls' low level behaviour is like using a sledgehammer to crack a nut. The criminal justice system should focus time and resources on those who have committed serious violent offences, not on the mentally unwell and sexually exploited girl who has stolen a lipstick from the local supermarket for the first time.'

Call for Scaling up Services in East and Southern Africa for Male Circumcision

Minuteman · 30 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'In December 2011, UNAIDS, WHO, PEPFAR, the Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation, the World Bank and the Ministries of Health from 14 priority countries (Botswana, Ethiopia, Kenya, Lesotho, Malawi, Mozambique, Namibia, Rwanda, South Africa, Swaziland, Uganda, the United Republic of Tanzania, Zambia and Zimbabwe) committed to a five-year action framework to accelerate scale up of VMMC, and in turn reduce new HIV infections and free-up resources for other crucial interventions. The framework's immediate "catch-up" phase is designed to quickly achieve coverage of adolescents and adult men who are most likely sexually active. The second phase—"sustainability"—will expand the framework's reach to finally integrate VMMC into infant health programs.'

Afghanistan Veterans With Genital Wounds Receive Little Help From Pentagon

Broadsword · 30 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON -- For the growing number of soldiers and Marines whose genitals are damaged or destroyed by blasts from improvised explosive devices while in combat, the Pentagon has decided it will not provide some critical reproductive health benefits.

To put it bluntly, if you are sent to war and an IED blast blows off your testicles, the U.S. government will not pay for your wife to have in vitro fertilization or artificial insemination using donated sperm.

The new policy, quietly adopted without announcement by the Defense Department, responds to the growing demands of the more than 1,800 veterans with genital wounds that the government that sent them to war now help them return to normal life, including raising a family.

The policy authorizes payment for some reproductive procedures for the first time, including limited in vitro fertilization and artificial insemination. But it also specifically excludes covering males who cannot produce sperm. "Third-party donations and surrogacy are not covered benefits," the policy states firmly.'

UK: 190,000 older men condemned to loneliness

Broadsword · 30 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Polling among people over the age of 75 who live alone found that men are more likely than women to live lives dominated by isolation and loneliness.

Yet they are also less likely to seek help even if they are suffering from depression, the study on behalf of the Women's Royal Voluntary Service (WRVS) found.

David McCullough, the charity's chief executive warned that many older men were suffering needlessly because of a “stiff upper lip” approach to their problems.

The study found that 36 per cent of men described themselves as lonely or very lonely - many of them going for days on end without speaking to anyone. Among women the rate was 31 per cent.

Based on recent Office for National Statistics figures showing the number of older people living alone, it suggests that just over 190,000 men over 75 live in serious isolation in Britain.'

Title IX at 40: Looking for Another 'National Crisis'

Mastodon · 30 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At a White House conference earlier this summer observing the 40th anniversary of Title IX -- the 1972 law prohibiting gender discrimination in federally supported educational programs and activities -- the talk was not so much about college athletics as about the STEM disciplines: science, technology, engineering and math.

Women, according to the prevailing wisdom at the conference, are "underrepresented" in these fields. More needs to be done to boost their participation. Carnegie Mellon University President Jared Leigh Cohon called the current situation "a national crisis."

But a profession should be a matter of personal choice, not something the government dictates. Title IX may have helped open doors for some women. What they do when they get inside should be up to them.
...

Title IX and its supporters need to recognize that life is full of statistical imbalances, most of which have nothing to do with institutional bias and everything to do with personal preferences. If women choose to go into education or medicine, rather than physics, why should Washington question them?

Forty years of Title IX artificially leveling the athletic and academic playing fields is enough. We don't need government meddling in career choices under the guise of "gender equality."'

Drunken gang of girls in subway stab attack: cops

Matt · 30 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A wolf pack of drunken young women “acting stupid” on a downtown No. 6 train in Manhattan stabbed a 63-year-old man early today — for having had the nerve to ask them to pipe down, police said.

The man was on his way to work at about 6:15 a.m. when he was attacked as the train entered the East 23rd Street station, a law-enforcement source told The Post.

“The eight females were acting stupid. He just told them, ‘Relax. Calm down,’ ” another source said.

Instead, one stabbed him in the left shoulder. He was treated at Bellevue Hospital.

The women were arrested as they exited the 23rd Street subway station near Gramer¬cy Park. Seven of them, ages 17 to 20, were charged with gang assault, disorderly conduct, riot¬ing, criminal possession of a weapon, menacing, and felony assault. A 15-year-old girl was not charged. Cops added that they recovered a knife.'

Boehner Pushes for Conference Panel on Domestic Violence Measure

Matt · 30 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After a months-long stalemate over a bill to protect women from crimes of domestic violence, Speaker John A. Boehner on Monday named eight House negotiators to serve on a nonexistent conference committee, one that would be charged with bridging the divide between House Republicans and the Senate.

In April, the Senate voted to reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act, and it urged the House to move on the legislation.

The House subsequently passed its own measure, which omitted provisions of the Senate bill that would allow Indian tribal courts to try certain non-Indians in some cases of domestic violence on reservations, expand the number of temporary visas for illegal immigrants who were victims of domestic violence and extend the protections of that act to gay men and lesbians.'

Extend protections to gay men and lesbians. But not straight men? I.e., it's OK to extend DV protection to men as long as they are gay. Straight men, no. Straight men, after all NEVER get beat up/assaulted/etc. by female partners, right? And does this not also tacitly admit that even something called the Violence Against Women Act was not actually seeking to protect all women from violence, but only the straight ones? It just gets more and more nuts, doesn't it?

Summer Olympic sports where men are barred from competing

Matt · 30 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Ah yes, "equality". The blogosphere sees feminists gleefully celebrating the fact that not a single Olympic event now is mandated as male-only (though not all events have enough female entrants to hold a women's version of the event-- but that is a different matter) and that on top of that, through the magic of Title IX, now more female US athletes were sent to London this year than male ones. Ahh, it's equality, right? Well, if you define it the way feminists do, I suppose it's something like that, though they will complain (and rightly so), that there are certain countries that do not allow female athletes to compete in their name. Still, they are filled with glee at all the "progress" made by so much of the world on this issue. And it is good that women athletes are now a big part of these Games, since it is true that for many years, they were not allowed to compete. So we agree that not allowing people to compete in sports or certain contests because of their gender is wrong, right? Notice how quiet then feminists are about this inconvenient truth:

'According to Belinda Goldsmith of Reuters, there are two sports in which men are shut out of competition in which women compete for medals:

Men have called for action after being ruled out from competing at two events at the Summer Olympics, synchronized swimming and rhythmic gymnastics, even though there are growing numbers of men participating in both sports.

A lobby group of male synchronized swimmers wrote to the IOC and swimming's governing body FINA in June to argue that men should no longer be excluded from this event at the Olympics.

Men's rhythmic can resemble a different sport than women's. It's a strength-based competition that incorporates martial arts; power is emphasized as much as artistry. It's born from Japanese stick gymnastics, and the Japan Gymnastics Association is helping to lead the charge in an attempt to get the sport recognized as an Olympic sport.'

Dr. Drew: Why are so many mass murderers men?

mens_issues · 31 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

So according to this article and video, not only do men commit mass murder 10 times as often as women, when women do it, it's for love (as opposed to men doing it for money, revenge, or power). Excerpt:

'In the midst of all the horrendous stories in the news recently, HLN's Dr. Drew welcomed clinical psychiatrist Dr. Dale Archer who explained some of the basic differences between male and female killers.

Dr. Archer says men are 10 times more likely to murder than women, noting their motives are vastly different.

"Men typically kill for money, revenge and power," he said. "With women, it is about love -- either someone they have loved, someone they currently love... their kids. So it's much more emotional when it comes to women."'

IA: Help Us Reach 10,000 Fans on Facebook

Matt · 31 July 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Updated: Original posting left out the IA Facebook URL, which is http://www.facebook.com/intactamerica

In just a few short years, we've watched the intactivist movement grow from a handful of dedicated people into a vast, thriving network of thousands of activists all over the world—thanks to social media. Between Facebook and Twitter, more and more people are seeing our message every day, and grassroots organizations like the NOCIRC centers and The Whole Network are working on the ground across the country, helping people take action.

At last week's International AIDS Conference in Washington, DC, Intact America met with hundreds of medical professionals and global health activists, getting the word out that circumcision does not prevent AIDS. That's what activism is all about—communication, education, and effecting change.

By getting involved in the intactivist movement, you really are changing the way America views circumcision. We have made the world hear us... so let's get even louder! Let's use Facebook to do what it does best: get more people talking, more people aware, more people educated, more people joining the ranks of intactivism.

"Health care law gives women control over their care, offers free preventive services to 47 million women"

Minuteman · 1 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'"President Obama is moving our country forward by giving women control over their health care," Secretary Sebelius said. "This law puts women and their doctors, not insurance companies or the government, in charge of health care decisions."

The eight new prevention-related services are:

* Well-woman visits.
* Gestational diabetes screening that helps protect pregnant women from one of the most serious pregnancy-related diseases.
* Domestic and interpersonal violence screening and counseling.
* FDA-approved contraceptive methods, and contraceptive education and counseling.
* Breastfeeding support, supplies, and counseling.
* HPV DNA testing, for women 30 or older.
* Sexually transmitted infections counseling for sexually-active women.
* HIV screening and counseling for sexually-active women.

...

...Men and children are also able to take advantage of preventive services at no extra charge under the health care law. These services include flu shots and other immunizations, screenings for cancers, high blood pressure and cholesterol, and depression.'

VP Biden Charged With Misrepresentation: Abuse Statement Ignores Three Decades of Research, SAVE Says

Mastodon · 1 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Aug 1, 2012 (GlobeNewswire via COMTEX) -- A leading victim-advocacy group is charging Vice President Joe Biden with spreading one-sided and false information regarding domestic violence. Stop Abusive and Violent Environments says Biden's statement issued Tuesday (1) condones the cycle of violence by ignoring the widespread problem of female abusers and male victims.

Female-initiated aggression is the leading risk-factor for women becoming injured by an intimate partner, reveals a research summary by Sandra Stith, PhD (2). And according to Martin Fiebert, PhD of California State University, 286 research studies conducted over the last 30 years show "women are as physically aggressive, or more aggressive, than men in their relationships with their spouses or male partners" (3).'

SAVE: Demand That VP Biden Tell the Truth about Domestic Violence

Matt · 2 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Vice President Joe Biden has disappointed abuse victims once again. On Tuesday, Biden issued a statement on domestic violence: http://www.mcclatchydc.com/2012/07/31/158921/an-issue-beyond-debate-congress.html. With yet another opportunity to tell the truth about DV, he again only addressed one aspect: women abused by men.

Biden failed to mention intimate partner violence in the LGBT community, and he ignored women's violence towards men. According to Martin Fiebert, PhD of California State University, 286 research studies conducted over the last 30 years show "women are as physically aggressive, or more aggressive, than men in their relationships with their spouses or male partners." http://www.csulb.edu/~mfiebert/assault.htm

Scanning the news, it's easy to see that women commit DV. On Monday, Terry Dear, OH, was shot in the back by his wife in front of their two small children. Derrick Graham, VA, was hit and drug along a highway by his wife driving an SUV last week.

You may remember when Whoopi Goldberg asked Biden about violent women on The View (thanks to your calls and emails!). He threw his hands up as if dumbfounded, pounded his fist into his hand while ordering men to never hit women, then claimed that every person in prison saw their mother abused by their father. Video: https://vimeo.com/30787987

The time has come for our Vice President to stand up for ALL victims of domestic violence. And, it's time for him to acknowledge that women can be, and often are just as violent as men.

Contact Lynn Rosenthal, the White House Advisor on Violence Against Women, and tell her that we demand that VP Biden tell the truth...the entire truth. You can write to Rosenthal at lrosenthal-at-who.eop.gov.

Telling the truth is something we were all taught as children. Let's remind Biden. And maybe we'll save a life while we're at it.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Australia: Young men starved and beaten, court told

Minuteman · 2 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A couple held two young boarders in their central NSW home, bashing and starving them and forcing them to do chores, a jury has been told.

The man and woman, who cannot be named for legal reasons, have pleaded not guilty to unlawfully detaining the two young men with intent to obtain advantage and occasioning actual bodily harm.

In his opening address at the Downing Centre District Court in Sydney on Thursday, crown prosecutor John Bowers told the jury the two men - who also cannot be named - were boarders in the home of the couple in central western NSW on two separate occasions between mid-2007 and August 2010.

He said the woman, aged 48, and her male de facto partner, 43, detained and psychologically controlled the men through a "regime of physical and mental abuse over an extended period".'

Moms gone wild: '40-year-old reversion'

Mastodon · 2 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- In a shocking article on TheAwl.com, author and mother Amy Sohn writes that moms in her affluent Brooklyn neighborhood are going through something called "the 40-year-old reversion." The tedium of raising children, she says, is driving moms in her circle out at night to party to the extreme as if they were 25 again.
...
It's a grim portrait of parenthood and marriage. And cringe-worthy tales of a drunk mom falling down the stairs while leaving a party and a mom who went to third base in the back of a minivan with a man who wasn't her husband could make a person who's thinking about getting pregnant hit the pause button. Sohn's salacious revelations have some people suggesting she made it all up: Her new novel comes out in August, after all. (When I contacted Sohn directly and asked if everything she wrote was true, she referred me to her publicist, who said the author wasn't doing interviews until the book releases.)'

Irish political parties must meet female MP quotas or risk losing state funding

Mastodon · 2 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Bill passed in the Irish government this weekend has historically changed the way women will be represented in the Dáil*.

The Electoral Amendment (Political Funding) Bill 2011 rules that state funding of political parties will be halved unless 30% of parliamentary candidates at the next election are female.

The Bill was triggered by only 15.1% of Irish parliamentarians being women – a figure that is only slightly less than the 22% of women sitting in the House of Commons.'

---
*Dáil Éireann

"Our schools need tough guys teaching teenage boys, not feminised men changing infants' nappies"

Mastodon · 2 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Michael Gove wants male role models for boys and better discipline he says. Yet, yesterday he let his civil servants knock back a Free School application that offered just that.

Mr Gove has also said he wants more male teachers. He is right, they are needed. To our cost, teaching has become a female-dominated profession in both secondary and primary schools. Fewer than one in four recruits are men. Only 25% of teachers are men and it is set to get worse as the profession sheds older members.

The three main teachers' unions too are led by women. The simple fact is that this is not a great environment for men to work in. With the elimination of so many single-sex schools, boys today can go through their entire schooling without ever being taught by a man.

This is quite, quite wrong. I would go so far as to say it is a disaster. No wonder so many of our young men are in crisis, out of control, on drugs and unemployable.'

Are there more than 4,250 schools in Britain without a male teacher?

Mastodon · 2 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Statistics released this week by the Teaching Agency have revealed a notable increase in the number of male trainee primary school teachers in the past four years. This is an encouraging sign for those worried by the gender imbalance among teachers that has typically characterised primary education in Britain.

According to the research, in 2008/9 there were just 2,467 male primary school teachers (or 15 per cent of the total) yet in 2011/12 the number had increased to 3,743 (or 19 per cent of the total).

However, despite these increases, in today's Daily Mail columnist Richard Littlejohn claimed that over 4,250 British schools still lack a male teacher, leaving thousands of children without a male role model in schools. So is this really the case?

...

At the end of March 2010, 4,700 English primary schools and 6 English secondary schools were without a male teacher, and at the end of March 2011 the number of primary schools in this category had fallen to 4,569, while the number of secondary schools remained constant.'

Boys' performance in schools declining

Mastodon · 2 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'David Brooks shines a light on the worsening situation for boys in education [“Time to change the cookie-cutter approach to school,” Opinion, July 9]. While convincing in his case that there is indeed a problem, he comes up short on solutions, other than to point out the obvious fact that one size does not fit all.

As an educator and father to an adolescent male, I believe one solution is to increase the number of male teachers in elementary, middle and high school. When I was in middle school in the 1970s, at least half of my teachers were male. In stark contrast, my son had only one male teacher during the two years of middle school he just completed.
...
I did not like all my teachers, male or female, and surely not all of them liked me, but the six male teachers I can specifically remember — all very different in style, personality, and physique — no doubt contributed in some way to my modest success in school, even if just in allowing me to see myself reflected in the mirror of education.'

W.Va. university officials reflect on Title IX

Mastodon · 2 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Crane-Banford said Marshall has made progress when it comes to Title IX but the law presents challenges.

The school now offers the maximum number of scholarships in women's sports. The women also don't have to provide some of their equipment anymore -- a change implemented within the last five years, Crane-Banford said.

But other areas of compliance are trickier, especially when it comes to getting participation numbers proportional to enrollment, which fluctuates each semester.

There's a cap on men's sports teams and a floor on women's sports participation, but that number is "kind of a moving target," Crane-Banford said, depending on total school enrollment.'

3,000 Malawian men cut off their foreskins: Less cervical cancer, reduces Aids risks

Mastodon · 2 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Malawian cancer expert at the country's sole certified oncology unit at the Queen Elizabeth Central Hospital (QUECH) has asked authorities to consider exploring possibilities of using medical male circumcision as a measure of reducing cases of cervical cancer in women.

The country's lone oncologist, Dr Leo Masamba told the Malawi News Agency (Mana) that though no research has been conducted locally, there are theoretical linkages between the HIV virus and the Human Papilloma Virus (HPV) which is one of the major causes of cervical cancer in women.

Dr Masamba's sentiments come at a time when more men are willingly to go for certified medial male circumcision since its endorsement by the World Health Organization (WHO) as a means of reducing HIV infection in 2007.'

Male circumcision is an unwarranted breach of a child's integrity – just like FGM

Mastodon · 2 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why MGM and FGM are not considered equally reprehensible defies compassionate reason.

FGM is carried out – for cultural/religious reasons – by restraining a young girl and removing her clitoris with a sharp implement. It is done without her consent ostensibly in order to control the sexual urges of women.
MGM was not uncommon practice in western Europe until recently. It even had mainstream medical sanction. But more recently the justification for MGM has been undermined. If it is not medically necessary then there are no good reasons to mutilate a child's body.

Freedom of religion should not grant licence to holy men to mutilate infant boys' genitalia. It is barbaric and its tacit acceptance in Europe demonstrates a misplaced deference to religious sensibilities. That only one regional German court stood up unambiguously against it is shameful. That it has been castigated by political leaders for doing so demonstrates the erosion of secular liberal values and ideas of individual freedom.

MGM amounts to a gross breach of the bodily integrity of baby boys. There is a fundamental inequality at work here. In direct contravention of gender equality, boys are treated differently to girls. Anyone who takes a knife to a baby's penis in 2012 is committing a breach of human rights. They should be prosecuted, not pandered to.'

F&F: Uniform Act Could Benefit Deployed Military Parents

Matt · 2 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"With deployments on the rise from the first Gulf War through the Iraq and Afghanistan wars, especially for National Guard and Reserve members, a majority of the states have implemented a patchwork of laws designed to protect service members in child custody and visitation cases. But the rules aren't consistent across the country," says Eric Fish, legal counsel for the Uniform Law Commission.

The Uniform Law Commission approved a new act recently at its 121st Annual Meeting in Nashville, Tennessee. The Uniform Deployed Parents Custody and Visitation Act, addresses issues of child custody and visitation that arise when parents are deployed in the military or other national service. The deployment of a custodial parent raises custody issues that are not adequately dealt with in the law of most states. In many instances, deployment will be sudden, making it difficult to resolve custody issues before the deployment by ordinary child custody procedures. The Commission determined that there is a need to ensure that parents who serve their country are not penalized for their service, while still giving adequate weight to the interests of the other parent, and most importantly, the best interest of the child.'

Foreskin Pride March, 4-5 Aug. 2012, Vancouver, Canada, a project of CAN-FAP

Matt · 2 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Foreskin Pride March, 4-5 Aug. 2012, Vancouver, Canada, a project of CAN-FAP

Watch the short video of the Foreskin Pride Salute.

Visit CAN-FAP's Facebook page: http://www.facebook.com/canfap

Visit http://ForeskinPride.org/ for details on the 4-5 Aug. 2012 Foreskin Pride March in Vancouver, BC, Canada.

Australian Department of Health & Ageing: "Mates to Drive Suicide Prevention on Construction Sites"

Minuteman · 3 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Minister for Mental Health Mark Butler has announced $5.24 million for a new suicide prevention initiative to be rolled out on construction sites across Australia.

Minister Butler announced the funding for suicide prevention program Mates in Construction at a construction industry conference in South Australia.

Mr Butler said the program would build better connections between construction workers, mental health professionals and other organisations to offer support for people in these industries who are at risk of suicide.
...
“Getting men to seek help on mental health issues is notoriously difficult, but the Mates in Construction program seems to have cracked this chestnut for the building and construction industry.”
...
“We have more than 23,000 workers in the program nationally and we connect two to three workers to help each other every day - I believe this additional funding will help us save lives,” Mr Gullestrup said.'

Australia: Teen girl 'strangely happy' with murder charge

Minuteman · 3 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A 15-year-old girl charged in relation to the murder of a young chef in western Sydney appeared "strangely happy" when she fronted court today.

Patrick Crowe, 22, died on July 7 after being stabbed in Parramatta while heading home from a night out last month.

This morning the girl, who can't be named for legal reasons, appeared in Parramatta Children's Court via video link and smiled to the courtroom as she heard she would not be released on bail, the Daily Telegraph reports.

"You need to remain in custody for now until next Thursday, at least," Magistrate Anthony Spence told the girl.

"Ok, thank you," the 15-year-old replied.'

Men = Testosterone Damaged Women

Broadsword · 3 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

The problem with men, as a group, as a type of organism, as a subset of humans, is that at various points along the way on their journey from the female template on which all humans are built biologically, they have been altered in ways that make them dangerous assholes. Even when we try to reduce the male-female difference as a society, men who do not willingly participate in that often end up being fairly nasty, dangerous beasts; they may be rapists, they may be batterers, they may be some other thing. They break our efforts to have an egalitarian peaceful world. In a way, they are broken. They are damaged, if you will. Some of that damage is facilitated by what you may know of as testosterone (a word that stands in for androgens).

But whatever you do, don't mention this testosterone caused by damage thing because it will upset them.
...
I have found the ongoing conversation about "testosterone damaged brains" to be somewhat less than interesting, full of distraction, very often little more than troll fodder and a huge waste of time. I've been asked to explain, to apologize, to produce copious documentation to back up may amazing claims. There are, however, only two reactions to my comment that I'm interested in. One: You go "Ouch" and put your hand up to your eye because I just poked you there. Two: You go "heh, that was funny." All other reactions are really your problem, not mine. Sorry.'

Broken Chromosomes and Damaged Brains

Broadsword · 3 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. A rebuttal to this post can be found here. Excerpt:

'The first statement, called sexist by many viewers, was Heina Dadabhoy's comment that the Y chromosome is a broken X chromosome. The other, called outrageously sexist, was Greg Laden's statement that the male brain is a female brain that has been damaged at various times throughout development by testosterone. The question is, however, are these statements true?

Heina's statement is the easier to address. A number of people did so in the YouTube comments, but I'll do it here as well. Yes, the Y chromosome is definitely a broken X chromosome.
...

This has undesirable consequences for male humans as well, at every stage of development. A short sex chromosome means that males have only one copy of some genes. Sex-linked hemophilia is one of the specific vulnerabilities of males caused by this arrangement. There are plenty of others, and there are a number of vulnerabilities that we're still not sure to what degree are sex-linked and to what degree our screening processes and social expectations make it more likely that males will be diagnosed. Some of those may also turn out to be attributable to having a Y chromosome.

So, yes, the X chromosome is the original in this situation, and the development of the Y chromosome both depleted the X chromosome and did so in ways that are not helpful to those who carry it. It is a broken X chromosome. If it weren't for the fact that the Y chromosome also causes masculinization, and our society highly values masculinization, we would talk broadly about how unfair that is. But it creates our semi-science-literate society holds the Y chromosome responsible for creating boys and men, so it's all good, and the commenters say that calling it broken is very sexist of Heina.'

Teacher, 44, escapes prison despite 'boasting about sex with students'

Broadsword · 4 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An elementary school teacher who admitted having sexual relations with students has escaped prison after prosecutors declined to bring charges against her.

Kristle Vandever, 44, resigned two years ago after the allegations first emerged - but she has only just had her teaching licence revoked.

Shortly after quitting, the 21-year veteran wrote an email admitting: 'I just can't help wanting these hot young boys... and they want me.'

She also appeared to imply that she could have faced legal action if her victims had spoken up as she wrote, 'no witnesses coming forward'.

Vandever taught English as a second language at McNary Heights Elementary School in Umatilla, Oregon, having qualified as a teacher in 1989, according to the Hermiston Herald.'

A Confederacy of Bachelors

Broadsword · 5 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New Yorkers in midlife crisis, meet the brotherhood of Fortress Astoria: Danaher Dempsey, Luke Crane, Rick Brown and Shyaporn Theerakulstit, best friends and artists.

They have no children, no linear career histories, no readily disposable savings. The four men, all heterosexual, approaching 40 and never married, have lived together for 18 years, give or take a revolving guest roommate, cohabitating in spaces like an East Village walk-up, a Chelsea loft and, now, a converted office space in Queens.
...
Sociologically, the men represent the apotheosis of two trends in American life. While Mayor Michael R. Bloomberg may be promoting the idea of tiny apartments for singles, the most recent census figures suggest that many people do not want to live alone; they prefer or need the company: The number of roommates in nonfamily households in New York City increased by more than 40 percent between 2000 and 2010. At the same time, Americans, especially men, have been pushing back the age at which they first marry — for men, it climbed to 28.2 years in 2010, up from 26.8 a decade earlier.
...
“It’s almost like they have four really tiny studio apartments,” she said. But, when showering, “you realize you’re in a home with four men, or man-children,” she added, using Mr. Theerakulstit’s term for the roommates.'

Female sexual arousal = defense against rape?

Matt · 6 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Holy non sequiturs, Batman! Read it here. Excerpt:

'The findings confirm a long-held belief among sexual researchers that has apparently not been studied in any depth before. The results provide new insight into the evolutionary development of human sexual responses, suggesting that women may have evolved a more responsive sexuality to help them cope with forced copulation.

Established ways of assessing sexual identity are more invasive. For men, it involves wrapping the penis in a device that measures expansion in response to erotic stimuli. For women, it is the insertion of a vaginal probe that assesses changes in the amplitude of the vaginal pulse.
...
The findings support the idea that sexual response has different biological functions in men and women. For men, an important function is to facilitate erection and penetration. For women, the function is to stimulate lubrication and prevent genital injury in case of penetration -- a response that may have developed early in evolutionary history in response to episodes of rape by males.'

So lubrication of the vagina in females is a defense against vaginal trauma inflicted by rapist males. Um, what? You mean it doesn't happen because, well, the woman might just get aroused by gasp the idea of having sex with a gasp man and vaginal lubrication makes this all the more possible? I don't know where the author got his ideas about sexual dynamics from but I doubt they came from common bloody sense.

Replace circumcision with symbolic ritual, says Norwegian children's watchdog

Mastodon · 7 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Norway's ombudsman for children's rights has proposed that Jews and Muslims replace male circumcision with a symbolic, nonsurgical ritual.

Dr. Anne Lindboe told the newspaper Vart Land last month that circumcising boys was a violation of their right to decide over their own body.

"Muslim and Jewish children are entitled to the same protection as all other children," Lindboe said, adding that the practice caused unnecessary pain and was medically unbeneficial.

Lindboe, a pediatrician, was appointed ombudsman in June. Her predecessor, Reidar Hjermann, proposed setting 15 as the minimum age for circumcision. According to Jewish religious law, Jewish babies must be circumcised when they are eight days old.'

STEM-ming college gender quotas

Mastodon · 7 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Increased “gender equity” in higher education is a long-time goal of feminists. Their new target is science, technology, engineering and math, the so-called STEM disciplines.
...
But as President Obama recently said, “Title IX isn’t just about sports.” It also applies, he said, to “inequality in math and science education, and a broader range of fields including engineering and technology.” In short, the president wants to see more women earning STEM degrees.

Soon afterwards, the White House issued new guidelines for the enforcement of Title IX with particular emphasis on ensuring “equal access to educational programs and resources in STEM fields” for women.

Specifically, there will be a new initiative involving several agencies, intended to clarify schools’ “compliance obligations and ways to improve access and outreach” in STEM.

The question is: Where will that lead?

Although Title IX doesn’t require gender quotas in sports, the interpretation put on its language by both the education bureaucracy and the courts led to quotas. Colleges and universities realized that the safest route for them, to avoid costly battles with the government, was to have approximately equal numbers of men and women on their sports teams.'

Sexism row as children's play centre bans fathers and all boys aged over nine

Broadsword · 7 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kids Go Wild recently opened in Sparkhill, Birmingham, and boasts it is the first soft play venue in the country for just mothers and children. Staff at the business openly tell men they are not allowed in and a flyer posted to homes in the city reads: 'Ladies and children only. No boys over nine allowed.'

...

The Birmingham Mail reported that a woman who claimed to be the manageress, but who refused to give her name, defended the policy.

She said: 'It's a predominantly Asian community around here and we're catering for that. It's a cultural thing.

'It's not that men are an issue - ladies are more comfortable around women.

'We've had ladies coming in and they've not questioned it [ban on men]. They've been asking for it for a long time.'

CDC: The Health of Male Veterans and Nonveterans Aged 25–64: United States, 2007–2010

Minuteman · 8 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'* Veterans were more likely than nonveterans to report having two or more chronic conditions.

* Veterans reported serious psychological distress more often than nonveterans; but less than 5% of both veterans and nonveterans reported serious psychological distress.

* Veterans had work limitations more often than nonveterans.

* Veterans were more likely than nonveterans to have health insurance.

The well-being of military personnel and their families is a topic of growing concern in public health. The effects of military service on physical and psychological health, especially after extended overseas deployments, are complex. There may also be long-term consequences of military service for the health and health care utilization of veterans as they age. Today, over 12 million men aged 25–64 in the United States are veterans, representing 15% of the total U.S. male population at those ages.

More attention is now being paid to gathering accurate data to help veterans readjust to civilian life. Many studies of veterans only use information from military or veteran databases, which limits the ability to make comparisons with the overall population. This report uses data from the 2007–2010 National Health Interview Survey (NHIS) to describe the health status of community-dwelling male veterans aged 25–64. It directly compares the health status of veterans with nonveterans on a variety of measures.'

Quinnipiac University violated Title IX, what went wrong?

Mastodon · 8 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of the 5,696 students enrolled at Quinnipiac in 2009-2010, roughly 62 percent were women. A strict reading of Title IX would require that women occupy 62 percent of all varsity sports positions offered by the school.

Under the school's calculation, women held 62.27 percent of all varsity spots, including competitive cheerleading and track.

In contrast, Judge Underhill's calculations found that women athletes held only 58.25 percent of varsity sports positions.

In affirming Judge Underhill's ruling, the appeals panel agreed that a 3.62 percent disparity between female enrollment and female varsity athletes is substantial enough to violate Title IX.'

Obama Brings 'War on Women' to State that Rebuked White House for Unequal Pay

Mastodon · 8 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The New York Times reports that "Obama Travels to Colorado With Appeal to Women."

Mr. Obama will be introduced on Wednesday afternoon at the University of Colorado in Denver by Sandra Fluke, the Georgetown Law School graduate who earlier this year became the face of women's reproductive rights after Congressional Republicans blocked her from testifying about insurance coverage of contraception. The conservative radio personality Rush Limbaugh later referred to her as a prostitute; he apologized after a furor caused some corporate sponsors to defect from his program.

Mr. Obama's emphasis on reproductive rights suggests an effort to solidify his backing among women, who are the mainstay of his support and offset his weakness among white males.

Yet, Obama's decision to bring the war on women to Colorado might seem a little odd. After all, earlier this year, Colorado's state senate rebuked Obama's White House for paying male employees more than its female employees.'

For Women in Street Stops, Deeper Humiliation

Matt · 8 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Reminds me of a story I read some time ago about a group of pregnant women in Mexico who robbed a bank. Seems they did some homework and learned that under Mexican law, a pregnant woman could not be jailed (well, that was the law at the time-- by now they may have changed it). I kid you not. So they knocked over a bank knowing full well they'd be turned loose if caught. Anyway, article excerpt:

'The laws governing street stops are blind to gender. Male officers are permitted to frisk a woman if they reasonably suspect that she may be armed with a dangerous weapon that could be used to harm them. A frisk can escalate into a field search if officers feel a suspicious bulge while patting down the woman's outer layer of clothing or the outline of her purse.

Last year, New York City police officers stopped 46,784 women, frisking nearly 16,000. Guns were found in 59 cases, according to an analysis of police statistics by The New York Times.

While the number of women stopped by officers in 2011 represented 6.9 percent of all police stops, the rate of guns found on both men and women was equally low, 0.12 percent and 0.13 percent, respectively. Civil rights leaders have argued that the low gun-recovery rates are a strong indication that the bulk of stop-and-frisk encounters are legally unjustified. (The number of police stops has dropped by more than 34 percent in recent months.)
...
"A male officer should not have a right to touch me in any sort of manner, even if it's on the outside of my clothing," Ms. Galloway said. "We're girls. They are men. And they are cops. It feels like a way for them to exert power over you."'

Teenage mother 'intentionally burned her 15-month-old son's genitals'

Matt · 8 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother has been arrested after admitting to police she burned her 15-month-old son's genitals with a hair straightening iron.

Jodi Rock, 19, from Tahlequah, Oklahoma, remains in jail on $200,000 bail after she was charged with felony injury to a minor child.

Her son has been taken into state custody.

According to the three-page arrest affidavit obtained by Tulsa World, Rock told investigators while she was straightening her hair, she touched her hand to the iron then she took and closed the iron’s clamps on the toddler’s genitals.'

SAVE: MCEDV Needs to Stop Discriminating Against Male Victims of DV

Matt · 8 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Last year Roxanne Jeskey of Bangor, ME admitted to killing her husband Richard. A detective's report detailed the injuries: "These included nose fractures, loss of an eye, rib fractures, rectal incised wounds, and internal hemorrhage from an instrument(s) pushed through his scrotum into his abdomen. Further, Mr. Jeskey was strangled with sufficient force to break the hyoid bone of his neck."

According to the 2012 report of the Maine Domestic Abuse Homicide Review Panel, women committed 5 out of 13 domestic violence homicides in recent years. That's nearly half, so you'd think that the Maine Coalition To End Domestic Violence (MCEDV) would present a balanced picture of DV. Not so.

Man spent ten years in prison after judge refused to allow evidence that his accuser made false claims against him

Mastodon · 9 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yesterday, the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals sitting in San Francisco overturned the sexual assault conviction of a Las Vegas man named Calvin O. Jackson who has spent more than ten years in prison for a crime he may not have committed. The court held that Mr. Jackson was wrongfully prevented from presenting evidence at his trial that the woman who accused him, Annette Heathmon, had made other false claims of prior sexual assault against him. The court explained: "Jackson's defense was that the assault never took place and that he and Heathmon engaged in consensual sex. He contended that Heathmon used the police as a means of exercising control over him whenever they argued, and that her allegations against him were fabricated in this instance, just as they had been in prior instances when the police were called to respond to her claims." We offer no commentary,and we provide the following excerpt from the decision of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals.'

Socialism's Trojan Horse: "Improved" gender diversity in the boardroom

Broadsword · 9 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The freedom of companies to appoint directors solely on the basis of merit is a cornerstone of capitalism. That cornerstone is slowly but surely being removed in the name of an innocuous-sounding initiative, ‘improved’ gender diversity in the boardroom (‘GDITB’).

The British government continues to bully major companies into appointing more women to their boards with threats of legislated quotas if they don’t do so ‘voluntarily’...

...

So what does the available research tell us? Only two independent studies show a causal link between gender diversity in the boardroom (GDITB) and corporate performance, and in both cases the link is negative. The first study was carried out by two academics at the University of Michigan, Kenneth Ahern and Amy Dittmar, and the latest draft was published in May 2011. The report’s full Abstract:

The Male Side of Divorce: What Men Need to Know

Mastodon · 9 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here are the top five things men should not do when going through a divorce.

1. Do Not Move Out of Your House: Chances are you are getting divorced because you cannot stand living under the same roof as your wife. However, until a court says otherwise, the house you are living in still belongs to you so you are still allowed to live there. You will continue to contribute to the household expenses while the divorce proceedings play out. If you move out, you will have to support two households -- the one you are living in and the one you moved out of. Living together may not be an ideal situation, but it is the most cost-effective.'

The Contempt of Women

Broadsword · 9 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the constantly progressing and deteriorating and rapidly revolving kaleidoscope of misunderstanding and disgust and hunger that constitutes gender relations in the twenty-first century, a new gesture has emerged to define us: the sneer, the female gaze of contempt.

Feminine contempt is suddenly everywhere, subtly and invidiously panoramic, in public life and in private life, in the bedroom and on television and in bookstores and on the campaign trail. The sexuality of the moment is all about contempt. In Lena Dunham's hit show Girls, which has succeeded so admirably in providing American critics with a moment of convenient generational definition, the men are pitiable and grotesque. Whether rough or tender or vanilla, they fail. In Sex and the City, the women commoditized men, often in the most banal way, but at least they liked what the men had to offer: cocks and money and status and sometimes even support. ...
...

Eventually, the sexual always morphs into the political. Contempt for men has become so widespread and acceptable that it's a commonplace for politicians' wives. Michelle Obama loves to describe her husband's morning breath and struggles with smoking and failure to put away his socks. Her pull quote: "He's a gifted man, but he's just a man." Got that, boys? You can be editor of the Harvard Law Review, first African-American president, director of the assassination of Osama bin Laden, loving husband and father, and an innovator of "absorption marijuana ingestion" to boot, but in the end "just a man." Michelle uses that hokey line because it inevitably provokes warm ovations and knowing laughter. The wife of the British prime minister, David Cameron, has borrowed the technique, moaning about how Cameron "makes a terrible mess" when he cooks and can be "quite annoying." This is what the political operatives call "humanizing the candidate": Contempt for men is what ordinary women understand.'

Men: Suffering secretly and silently

Mastodon · 9 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Are times changing in the patriarchal society we live in? Has feminism smothered and surpassed the brotherhood, leaving them floundering and forgotten about on the sidelines? A true feminist would hope not, as (contrary to sloppy stereotypes) feminism is about achieving true equality, not the oppression of men.

A while ago, I wrote about how austerity in Britain is hurting women the most. Since then, things haven't got better, they've got worse. The British government is inflicting yet more pain on women in Britain by disregarding and debasing issues such as abortion, rape and domestic violence. Ruthlessly slashing the already frail budget from women's services, culling child benefit, housing benefit, child tax credits and cutting 40 per cent - £350m ($550m) - from Legal Aid's already meagre budget - these are just a few stomach-churning indications of how women in Britain are being forced into a further state of vulnerability by those in power.

But men in Britain are vulnerable too, like 38-year-old Chris from London. We don't really hear about neglected and vulnerable men, because as a direct consequence of phallogocentrism, there is little acknowledgement that a man could be struggling, a fact recognised least of all by men themselves.'

How About a Title IX for Women on Boards?

Mastodon · 9 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I think we need a Title IX for Boards of Directors.

Last month, the business group CED issued an urgent plea for increasing representation of women on corporate boards. The blue chip panel wrapped its message in God, Flag, and U.S. Competitiveness. But the organization pulled its punches when it comes to getting the job done. Rather than call for a clear test, like the Title IX equivalent of equal expenditures, we are left with the hope that enlightened boards will lead the parade. Meanwhile, we are being beat to a pulp by our competitors -- France and Norway, among others, require boards to step up their game. To make their numbers, corporations in these countries have begun to poach the U.S. field of experienced, board-ready women. It's a little like American women moving from California to Rio to get a chance at beach volleyball.'

Airline forced to rethink their sexist policy

GaryB · 10 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This story is doing the rounds in Australia, and finally some traction. Excerpt:

'A public backlash has prompted Virgin Australia to announce it will review its policy barring men from sitting beside unaccompanied children on flights.

The company was today widely criticised after a Sydney fireman reported his experience of being asked to swap seats because he was sat beside two unaccompanied boys.

...

"In light of recent feedback, we're now reviewing this policy. Our intention is certainly not to discriminate in any way."

A Virgin spokeswoman said the policy was shared by Qantas, Jetstar and Air New Zealand.'

DHS faces sex discrimination suit

Mastodon · 10 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Looks like the Department of Homeland Security could be renamed the Department of Hyper Sexuality.

A blistering federal discrimination suit accuses agency honcho Janet Napolitano of turning the department into a female-run “frat house” where male staffers were banished to the bathrooms and routinely humiliated.

James Hayes Jr., who now is New York’s top Homeland Security cop, claims Napolitano filled top spots in Washington, D.C., with two of her gal pals who were bent on tormenting male employees.

The suit identified them as Dora Schriro, who is now running the city Department of Correction, and Suzanne Barr, the chief of staff for the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement.'

School District to offer flag football for girls to comply with Title IX complaint

Mastodon · 10 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Flag football will be a girls varsity sport in public high schools this winter, costing the Clark County School District $225,000 for the first season as it tries to comply with federal requirements.

And flag football may just be the beginning, with girls lacrosse being considered for the 2013-14 school year, said Ray Mathis, the district's executive athletic director. Local high schools added girls freshmen soccer last school year but didn't do the same for boys. And boys won't receive any new sports for a while, he said.

That is because the district is trying to close the gap between the number of its male and female student-athletes, which was pointed out in a civil rights complaint made in 2010.'

Rights for the innocent

Mastodon · 10 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'Most people might not know that if a person is charged with domestic violence and a jury acquits them (or the charge is dismissed) it does not prove that the defendant is innocent. The verdict simply means that there is reasonable doubt that the defendant was guilty. This is much different from "proof beyond reasonable doubt" or the question of moral certainty where one would act in reliance upon its truth in matters that are important to them.

This also means that a juror cannot decide a defendant's actual innocence, although it does exist, and that leads to injustice. Moreover, an innocent defendant may be subject to a restraining order because the law does not require an overt act. Instead it is based on what the innocent defendant might do rather than what that person didn't do. That's open to pure speculation that continues to be fostered by the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA).

I support the use of DNA testing in matters of allegations of abuse and rape, but the testing must occur within a valid time span that would make it effective. This should reduce the number of false and malicious allegations that would lead to unjust consequences. So in these matters, those who have been falsely accused of abuse or rape should be compensated from those funds that are now allocated to the VAWA. This would continue until changes are made that provide complete compensation for those men who have been falsely accused.'

Don’t leave boys behind

Mastodon · 10 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Part of the problem is cultural, which policymakers may not be able to address easily or at all. One Dallas principal I spoke with noted that as more families split up, more young boys live in homes without a father. The lack of a dad can create numerous problems, he pointed out, but it especially can create a problem for young boys who lack a male figure helping supervise them.

Divorce may be the only way forward for some families, but fathers in situations like that owe it to their kids to remain a part of their lives, helping create horizons for them. For one thing, young men with only a high school degree are more likely to suffer economically. Holly Hacker reported in December on a telling difference: Men with high school degrees suffer higher unemployment rates than men with either an associate’s degree or a bachelor’s degree.'

"Sunburned Butt Slap Leads To Beau's Stabbing"

Matt · 10 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

I can just imagine in the mind of the average reader: "He had it coming!" Yes, if she had done the same thing to him and he had stabbed her, do you suppose the "average reader" would think the same thing? Article here. Excerpt:

'According to a police probable cause affidavit, Sherry was cleaning the dishes when her boyfriend, Michael Martinez, “slapped her in the buttocks.” Martinez told a Bethlehem cop that he did this as a “joke” since he “was aware Sherry had sunburn in the area.”

Sherry, however, did not find this amusing and “became immediately agitated.”
...
After directing her two children to leave the room, Sherry allegedly “poked” Martinez in the abdomen with the knife, and then stabbed him in the shoulder. Before stabbing him a third time, “Sherry screamed, ‘I’m going to fucking kill you.'”'

F&F: Child Support Scare Tactic Stopped

Matt · 11 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For more than 20 years, the South Carolina Department of Social Services used false contempt of court threat to scare parents behind on their child support. It would issue a summons to appear for a hearing and pointedly remind the parent that he or she could be held in contempt of court for failure to pay.

Of course, it was an empty threat. No judge was present. It was not a judicial proceeding. Nobody could be held in contempt. The scare it placed in child support obligors who received it, however, was real. And yes, it skirted, if it not violated, all notions of due process.

One father questioned this practice. Because of his lawsuit, this scare tactic has been stopped.'

Woman accused of stabbing fiance to death hours before their wedding

Mastodon · 13 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CBS/AP) HOKENDAUQUA, Pa. - Na Cola Darcel Franklin spent her weekend in jail when she was supposed to be celebrating her first days as a newlywed. She is accused of killing her fiancé at their eastern Pennsylvania apartment hours before they were to get married.

Franklin, 31, was charged with criminal homicide Saturday morning in the stabbing death of 36-year-old Billy Brewster in their Whitehall Township apartment. She seemed unable to grasp her fiancé's death during her arraignment by video from jail Saturday, when she reportedly pleaded to the judge, "You got to check again!"

District Judge Donna Butler told her that Brewster had been pronounced dead earlier, to which Franklin wailed and covered her face in her hands. When asked if she understood the homicide charge against her, Franklin wept and choked out the words one at a time.

"I ... did ... not ... kill ... him ... on ... purpose," she said, according to the Morning Call newspaper.'

5 Reasons To Beware Of Feminist Men

Mastodon · 13 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'1. Against Their Nature: Wouldn't it strike you as strange if a tiger suddenly turned vegetarian? This is because it is against their basic nature. In the same way, feminism is against the basic nature of men and that is why women hate men who claim to be upholders of women's rights.

2. Traitors To Their Own Cause: The types of men who start calling themselves feminists are seen as 'traitors' among men folk. Generally, men despise male feminists much more than they despise female feminists. How do you trust someone who has betrayed their own kind? If they have betrayed their own gender that is men, they might as well betray you.

3. No Chivalry: Usually men who believes in the rights of women usually lack chivalry. They treat women as equal, but not better than men. So when you are an equal, he doesn't have to hold the door for you or pay your bill. Just like Atheists have no holidays, feminists have no concessions for being women. That is why legendary actress said, "Women who want to be equal with men lack ambition."'

'Movement sets them free'

Mastodon · 13 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The statistics tell the story — boys are losing out when it comes to education.

On a number of counts, the evidence suggests that more young men than women are experiencing difficulties with school.

They appear to be less engaged and eventually drop out before graduation at a higher rate than girls.

Theories and proposed solutions abound, but one common element among experts is the education system needs an overhaul for the so-called “boy crisis” to be resolved.

Two local women in the masters of education program at Thompson Rivers University have come up with one way to address the problem: get kids moving.'

Mistaken fathers have one year to challenge paternity

Mastodon · 13 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men can legally challenge the paternity on the grounds of fraud, mistake or misrepresentation following the 2011 amendment to Chapter 161 of the Texas Family Code.

The new law enables a man who has previously been named as the biological father of a child in a court order or has signed an acknowledgment of paternity to challenge his paternity by filing a petition in court to terminate his parental rights after later discovering the fraud.

In order to successfully challenge paternity under the new law, a man must file a verified petition, after which the court will hold a pre-trial hearing to determine whether the man has a justifiable reason for not previously questioning his paternity. The court then will order genetic testing.'

Circumcision, long in decline in the U.S., may get a boost from a doctors' group

Mastodon · 13 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than 1.2 million infant boys undergo the surgery each year, making the United States one of the industrialized world's leading producers of circumcised men. But the once ubiquitous practice, in which the foreskin is removed from the penis, is waning.

From a high of about 80 percent in the 1960s, the portion of baby boys leaving hospitals with petroleum-jelly-covered wounds in their diapers dropped to 56 percent in 2008, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. (The figures do not include those circumcised in outside clinics or by religious providers.)

The downward trend is probably fueled by Medicaid laws in many states that have stopped paying for the surgery, increased immigration from Latin America and other areas were circumcision is less common, and a growingly vocal cadre of so-called "intactivists" who argue that the practice is a human rights violation.'

Male birth control plans begin to gel

Mastodon · 13 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'Scientists in California are reporting promising results with an experimental contraceptive gel for men. Using a combination of two hormones, the researchers say they have been able to lower the sperm count of males significantly, bringing a new era of male responsibility for birth control a big step closer.'

SAVE: Tell Judge Robert E. Murray to Vacate the Conviction of Persecuted Single Father Vladek Filler

Matt · 13 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Today, we're asking you to intervene on behalf of a young father in Maine. Judge Robert E. Murray convicted Vladek Filler and gave him a sentence of 21 days in jail for allegedly pushing his wife Ligia Filler in April 2007. The problem is that the conviction and harsh sentence follow five years, two criminal trials and appeals involving prosecutorial misconduct by Asst. District Attorney Mary E. Kellett.

The charges stem from Filler's child custody dispute, and range from spousal rape to splashing water on his then-wife. The 1st trial court and Maine Supreme Court found prosecutor Mary N. Kellett had engaged in misconduct. The divorce court granted Filler sole custody of his children, found his wife made false allegations and was a violent child abuser.

In 2011 SAVE filed a Grievance Complaint[1] with the Board of Overseers of the Bar (BOB) demanding Kellet's disbarment. Bar Counsel J. Scott Davis in an 18-page Disciplinary Petition[2] charged that Kellett "has acted in a manner unworthy of an attorney," violated nine rules[3] of conduct, failed to provide defense with discovery, violated a court order, and instructed police officers not to cooperate with defense subpoenas. Davis stated that Kellett then made "misrepresentations to the jury of the actual facts", and concluded "she should receive such appropriate disciplinary action as is provided for by the Maine Bar Rules." The BOB will convene a disciplinary hearing against Kellett for misconduct in the Filler case.

Filler's incarceration is looking a lot like retaliation. "Men who have no criminal record get a fine or an afternoon DV class for allegations like this. Not only did the judge sentence Vladek to jail, he sentenced him to 21 days," says SAVE spokesperson Philip W. Cook, "It was all very personal and had nothing to do with what they convicted him of."

Call Judge Murray today! Tell him to rescind his conviction of Vladek Filler.

Judge Robert E. Murray
Hancock County Superior Court
Ellsworth, ME
Clerk: Terry Harding
207-667-7176

Thank you, from the bottom of my heart. Vladek's children need their father at home where he belongs.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

---

[1] http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/COMPLA1.pdf
[2] http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/Kellett-Disciplinary-Petition.pdf
[3] http://fenceviewer.com/site/index.php?option=com_k2&view=item&id=75933:hearing-scheduled-on-complaint-against-assistant-da&Itemid=938

What 'makes a man' needs to change - experts

Mastodon · 14 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys learn very quickly growing up they should respond to challenges with violence, says the senior lecturer in sociology at the University of Wollongong.

Dr Flood says: “There’s good evidence that male-on-male violence … is shaped very strongly by codes of manhood based on honour, on pride, on aggression."

“We need culture change. We need change in the way we raise our boys.”

Boys learn to react with violence from their peers, family and culture.
...
“I think we need to complement campaigns about violence against women with ones about men’s violence against men.”'

Don’t Blame Discrimination for Gender Wage Gap

Mastodon · 14 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It’s a staple of feminist rhetoric: Women make less money than men because of discrimination.

“We’d all like to think, in 2012, that pay discrimination is a thing of the past,” the progressive activist Joy Lawson wrote in the Huffington Post recently. “But the pay gap still exists, and it’s big: women earn an average of 77 cents on a man’s dollar.”

April 17 has been designated Equal Pay Day: Supposedly that’s how long women have to work to catch up to men’s pay from the previous year.

U.S. President Barack Obama has cited a similar statistic to promote legislation to make it easier to sue employers for discrimination. Democrats accuse Republicans who resist such laws of waging a “war on women.” Expect to hear more about the issue during the fall campaign.

Here’s the truth you won’t hear: The pay gap is exaggerated, discrimination doesn’t drive it and it’s not clear that government can eliminate it -- or should even try.'

Harass morass at DHS

Matt · 14 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — The number of Immigration and Customs Enforcement workers who claimed they faced retaliation from superiors has more than doubled since Janet Napolitano took over, according to data obtained by The Post.

The stats — which also show an increase in sexual-harassment claims — come as James Hayes, a senior law-enforcement official, moves ahead with a lawsuit charging he faced a “hostile work environment” in which male employees face discrimination under Napolitano, who oversees ICE as head of Homeland Security.

Hayes, who also said higher-ups created a “frat-house” atmosphere, claims agency bosses tried to intimidate him by opening several investigations of his own conduct after he filed a complaint.'

Israeli Pediatric Group Calls For End To Circumcision-Related Rite

Mastodon · 14 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Israel Ambulatory Pediatric Association is calling for an end to a controversial circumcision-related rite that is also under fire in New York.

Direct oral-genital suction, known as metzitzah b'peh, should not be performed during Jewish ritual circumcision, the IAPA said. The association is calling on Israel's Health Ministry to require maternity wards and clinics to advise parents against metzitzah b'peh, Israeli media reported.

IAPA is recommending that mohels, or ritual circumcisers, use a tube to take the blood from the circumcision wound, preventing direct contact with the infant's incision.'

A Feminist Needs Accurate Statistics Like a Fish Needs a Bicycle

Mastodon · 14 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over at Jezebel, Katie J. M. Baker has a response to my Bloomberg View column on the gender pay gap that is heavy on personal attacks and light on logic. The first four paragraphs consist of nothing but such attacks and misrepresentations of my argument; the fifth of an excerpt from the column; the sixth goes back to personal attacks. (My face is “smug,” and apparently arouses a desire to “smack” it, at least in feminists who are incapable of mustering actual arguments against what I have to say.)

Baker does get around to trying to refute me by citing what she describes (falsely) as a “study” that affirms the feminist conventional wisdom about the pay gap. That “study” lists ten bullet points in making its case. None of them proves what Baker thinks it proves. Thus, for example, the first bullet point notes that “[w]omen in science, technology, engineering and math are paid 86 percent of what their male counterparts are paid.” Follow the footnote, and you’ll see the cited source doesn’t correct for continuous employment history or seniority and lumps all “STEM” jobs together. The next sentence, about female business majors, does not appear to be supported by the source noted in the footnote. And so on.'

Man: Airline treated me like pedophile

Mastodon · 15 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'Man claims Virgin Australia treats male passengers like pedophiles after being told to change seats away from two kids.'

Should male passengers be allowed to sit next to unaccompanied children?

Mastodon · 15 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Washington (CNN) -- An Australian airline's policy prohibiting male passengers from sitting next to kids traveling alone has fueled a social media firestorm and caused the company to review the rule.
...
Virgin Australia's policy to prevent men from sitting next to the unaccompanied minors has supporters, including John Shehan of the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children in the United States.
...
"We're trying to prevent child victimization," he said. "We know the overwhelming majority of sex offenders are male, so by removing that situation you're lowering the risk."

Australian airline Qantas also has come under fire for a similar policy prohibiting men from sitting next to unaccompanied minors. The airline declined to comment.'

Airlines' male policy is Virgin on the ridiculous

Mastodon · 15 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's a hell of a thing putting an unaccompanied kid onto an airline flight. I've done it. For the kid it's hugely exciting (if they're the adventurous sort). For the parent it's a Kafkaesque nightmare of form-filling and fiery hoop-jumping.
...
Right now, every time an airline like Qantas or Virgin moves a male passenger away from an unaccompanied child for no reason other than his being a male, they break the law. Or rather, they breach the Anti-Discrimination Act, for which penalties do apply. If he was drunk, abusive, or maybe if the unaccompanied children's parents or guardians had requested a specific seating arrangement for the flight, then the airlines would be in the clear. (A lawyer will doubtless set me straight on that last one). But to maintain a policy of moving passengers simply on the basis of gender is not legal.

The two men who have been in the news, after being humiliated in this fashion, could sue and win very, very easily. Especially as one was a fireman who runs into burning buildings to save children, and the other was a nurse who stays up all night looking after them.'

Australia: Woman who drowned baby could be free is less than two months

Minuteman · 15 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A woman depressed and suffering "abnormality of mind" when she left her baby daughter in a bath to drown could be free in less than two months.

The 27-year-old, who can't be named, was sentenced in the Supreme Court in Sydney on Wednesday to a maximum five years in prison with a non-parole period of three years and two months.

She has been in custody since her arrest on August 10, 2009 and could possibly get out of jail on October 9.

In sentencing the woman, Acting Justice Michael Grove said a series of events led to her placing the 17-month-old into a bath and turning on the taps at her Gwynneville unit near Wollongong on July 21, 2009.

While he found she foresaw the probability of her daughter's death, she was suffering from such an "abnormality of the mind" that her capacity to control herself or understand whether her actions were right or wrong was "substantially impaired".'

Lawsuit in the US against Israeli Government officials for institutional discrimination against men davidcohen188 · 15 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

A lawsuit has been filed in the US against Israeli Government officials for institutional discrimination against men. This is probably the most comprehensive lawsuit ever filed in a court anywhere in the world with regards to men's rights. The lawsuit attacks the institutionalized discrimination against men as a whole.

Read it here.

SAVE: Politicizing the Truth: White House Order Ignores the Plight of Most Victims of Violence

Matt · 15 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Aug. 15, 2012 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Victim-advocacy group Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is charging the White House with politicizing the issue of violence. SAVE says Obama's executive order "Preventing and Responding to Violence Against Women and Girls Globally" marginalizes and ignores the suffering of male victims of violence.

According to the World Health Organization, men are twice as likely to die of violence as women. Globally, violence accounts for 14% of male deaths and 7% of female deaths.'

Woman Admits to Poisoning Boyfriend With Visine Drops

Matt · 15 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 33-year-old Pennsylvania woman could spend the rest of her life in prison after admitting to police that she repeatedly poisoned her boyfriend with Visine eye drops for more than three years in a bid for his attention.

Vickie Jo Mills of Ayr Township, Pa., was arrested Thursday and charged with 10 counts of aggravated assault, 10 counts of simple assault and 10 counts of reckless endangerment after she told authorities she slipped Visine eye drops into the drinking water of her boyfriend, 45-year-old Thurman Edgar Nesbitt III.
...
Nesbitt had been sick for years with symptoms such as nausea, vomiting and blood pressure and breathing problems, according to police. His doctor, Dr. Harry Johnston, alerted authorities in after detecting traces of tetrahydrozoline, a chemical found in eye drops, in Nesbitt's blood tests.'

Coming to Saudi Arabia: The world's first women-only city

Matt · 15 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Look for the next in a country near you! Article here. Excerpt:

'Saudi Arabia has a problem: The Persian Gulf kingdom has an increasingly educated, increasingly unemployed female population and ultraconservative laws and customs that forbid women from mingling, much less working, with men. The Saudis are fashioning an unusual solution, building an industrial city that will allow only women. The female-only zone is scheduled to open in the Eastern Province city of Hofuf next year, with more ladies-only areas to come in Riyadh, the capital. How do these cities-inside-a-city work, and are they good for women?'

ICE chief of staff on leave after new allegations of lewd conduct surface

Matt · 15 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The top Homeland Security official accused of cultivating a "frat-house"-style work environment has "voluntarily placed herself on leave" amid an internal review, the department told FoxNews.com late Tuesday evening -- just hours after FoxNews.com contacted the agency about new allegations against her.

The official, Suzanne Barr, is chief of staff for Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

Two more ICE employees came forward this week to complain about "lewd" conduct inside the agency, submitting sworn affidavits that depict graphic comments made by two top officials working under DHS Secretary Janet Napolitano.'

As British actor John Cleese decries the a pre-nup, one cynical man pens the hopeless romantic an open letter

Broadsword · 15 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm sure you've tried to forget it, but - for the sake of men everywhere - let me recap: after a 16-year marriage with no children, your third wife, Faye Eichelberger, ended up with a settlement that made her (quite literally) richer than you.

Not only will you have to pay her £600,000 a year until 2016 (even though you're now technically a pensioner and she's a successful therapist), you also had to give her £8 million in cash, plus assets which included: an apartment in New York, a £2 million home in London and half a beach house in California.

Why? Because you're a man.'

HHS awards $68 million in grants for HIV/AIDS care for women, infants, children and youth

Minuteman · 16 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Health and Human Services (HHS) Secretary Kathleen Sebelius today announced the release of more than $68 million to ensure that women, infants, children, and youth living with HIV/AIDS receive comprehensive primary HIV medical care and support services.

The grants, funded through the Health Resources and Services Administration's (HRSA) Ryan White HIV/AIDS Program, help people who lack sufficient health care coverage or financial resources to manage HIV.

"With these investments, we're targeting our resources to the communities that need them most," Secretary Sebelius said. "This will help women, infants and children with HIV get the care and treatment they need by increasing access to comprehensive, coordinated primary care."'

NIH announce Grants to Study Bioethics of HIV Research

Minuteman · 16 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

An opportunity that might appeal to appropriately qualified and experienced readers, to help raise concerns about the ethics of the 'African circumcision trials'. Link here. Excerpt:

'If you have an interest in the bioethics of studying HIV and associated conditions, consider applying for R01 or R21 funding through a new program announcement from NIH.

Your plan may include conceptual work in bioethics, empirical work gathering and analyzing data relevant to ethical issues, or both. When planning your research team, NIH strongly encourages you to include at least one person with demonstrated expertise and scholarship in bioethics.

NIH welcomes applications on any ethics topic relevant to HIV research, particularly in the following areas:

* Human specimens
* Pregnant women
* Adolescents and young adults
* Cures (eradicating the virus from the body)
* Clinical trial design (standard of care dilemmas, statistical methods)
* Effectiveness of ethics committees
* New technologies
* Stigma, discrimination, and oppression
* Tuberculosis in the context of HIV infection
* Community engagement

Your applications are due January 7, 2013, 2014, or 2015.'

Another generation of boys' genitals about to go "under the knife"

DanBollinger · 16 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

According to a recent Washington Post article, it looks like the American Academy of Pediatrics is going to come out with a revised statement in favor of circumcision, saying the benefits outweigh the risks.

We think this would be an egregious violation of basic human rights, and a HUGE step backwards. They realized it was wrong to cut baby girls--so why is it okay to cut baby boys? IT'S NOT OKAY!

Visit the AAP's Facebook page -- http://www.facebook.com/AmerAcadPeds -- and send them a message, telling them what YOU think about this possible new statement.

And stay tuned for more news and action campaigns from Intact America on FaceBook http://www.facebook.com/intactamerica

Julian Assange: Ecuador grants Wikileaks founder asylum

Mastodon · 16 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ecuador has granted asylum to Wikileaks founder Julian Assange two months after he took refuge in its London embassy while fighting extradition from the UK.

It said his human rights might be violated if he is sent to Sweden to be questioned over sex assault claims.

Foreign Secretary William Hague said the UK would not allow Mr Assange safe passage out of the country and the move was also criticised by Stockholm.

Ecuador said it would seek to negotiate arrangements for Mr Assange to leave.'

SAVE: On College Campuses, Civil Liberties Took a Beating

Matt · 16 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The first full academic year following the Department of Education's release of its Sexual Assault Directive has come to a close. The Directive was announced by the Office for Civil Rights on April 4, 2011 without prior notice or opportunity for public comment. Two days later, civil rights expert Wendy Kaminer deplored the "authoritarian impulse" that gave rise to the Directive and predicted it would occasion, in her words, "tragic deprivations of liberty." (1)

Several of these cases, reported in the media during the 2011-2012 school year, had been adjudicated before the OCR policy took effect:

University of Hawaii at Manoa

September 20, 2011 — Following news of seven allegations of sexual assault filed during the previous academic year, the University's security chief Wayne Ogino stated that a student could be evicted from a campus dormitory solely on the basis of an accusation. Ogino did acknowedge, however, that some rape accusations did turn out to be "unfounded." (2)'

F&F: Pilot Project Makes Failure to Pay Child Support a Felony

Matt · 16 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New Mexico's Governor Susana Martinez is celebrating August being Child Support Awareness Month by kicking off a pilot project. The Felony Prosecution Project will seek the prosecution of the state's worst child support offenders for the abandonment of a child, which is a fourth degree felony under New Mexico law.

It is aimed at increasing the collection of child support from parents who are among the worst offenders at failing to honor their obligations to financially support their children. The project will be a partnership between the New Mexico Human Services Department Child Support Enforcement Division and the District Attorneys' offices.'

Second-Class Citizenship

Robber748 · 17 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Most of the U.S. is busy pandering to women. I nominate Bellingham, Washington, as the worst panderer. Men of Bellingham are truly second-class citizens. During about a four month period, I have noticed 33 activities and events that are by, for, and about women. As far as I could tell, none of these events received any complaints. I could only find 2 comparable activities for men, one of which received a complaint of being sexist.

So I took it upon myself to complain to the organizers about the sexism of a few of the women's events. For the most part, I was ignored. Apparently sexism is of little concern if it is against men. One organization, however, did respond to my complaint: its bicycle maintenance class was changed from "for women only" to "especially for women."

One of the events listed is an article in a local newspaper which raved about an appearance of the Chippendale male strippers. I do not believe I will live long enough to see a local mainstream newspaper give a positive review of female strippers.

FOR WOMEN

2/4/12--Western Washington University (WWU) sponsors Elect Her to encourage women to run for student government

2/16--Fairhaven Bike and Ski sponsors Ladies Night

2/22 to 2/25--WWU sponsors Vagina Memoirs

3/6--the class Owning Your Female Power begins

3/7--Wild Whatcom Walks sponsors Ladies Night Out

3/8--International Women's Day is celebrated with a screening of the film "Miss Representation"

3/18--YWCA sponsors Northwest Women's Hall of Fame Dinner

4/4--the newspaper, Cascadia Weekly, gives a glowing review of the Chippendale strippers

4/6--Wild Whatcom Walks has Ladies Night Out

4/11--City council member Cathy Lehman reveals that she ran for the position because she is female

4/19--Kulshan Cycle sponsors Ladies Night

4/21--Boating For Women By Women Seminar at Squalicum Yacht Club

4/27--A women's gym, Butterfly LIFE, presents "Chicago" for it's Flicks for Chicks.

4/28--Men bring attention to domestic violence against women by walking in women's shoes

5/4--Marianne's House (for adults with developmental disabilities) sponsors an auction of local eligible bachelors at a nearby casino

5/10--Everybody Bike sponsors a bicycle maintenance class for women

5/11--the Fairhaven community of Bellingham sponsors Girls' Night Out.

5/12--Represent! shows a film and sponsors a discussion encouraging women to run for public office

5/13--benefit concert for Bellingham Girls Rock, a summer camp dedicated to empowering girls

5/15--HD Vest Investment Services offers 3 seminars in its Women's Empowerment Series

5/18--downtown Bellingham sponsors Ladies' Night Out

5/18--Bellingham Technical College explores non-traditional careers for women with The Road Less Graveled

5/19-- American Association of University Women holds a benefit supporting scholarships for women in local colleges.

5/20--WWU sponsors the film "Miss Representation" about the media's view of women in power

6/1--YWCA sponsors Leadership Breakfast, a benefit for homeless women

6/1--Bhakti Flow Yoga has a benefit for Womencare Shelter

6/2--YMCA sponsors Girls On the Run 5K run

6/2--Female Artists for Music Education sponsors a benefit featuring female musicians and artists

6/8--Everybody Bike sponsors Diva Cycle, a bike ride with shopping

Ongoing--Habitat for Humanity sponsors Women Build Program

Ongoing--Kokoro Yoga has Kundalini Yoga for Women every Tuesday

---

FOR MEN

March is MAN Month at Joy of Pilates

4/20--WWU sponsors Strongman competition

UK: Mother-of-two jailed for making TWO false rape claims against men she was dating after one didn't show up for a liaison

Mastodon · 17 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother-of-two has been jailed for making two false rape claims against men she was dating after one, who she had met online, failed to show up for a liaison.

Emma Saxon, 23, from Sheffield, was jailed for eight months after telling police she had been raped in a BMW car in a supermarket car park.

The victim of her slur Martin Blood spent 14 hours in a police cell and suffered the indignity of an intimate medical examination while the police spent 90 hours investigating before finally concluding it was a hoax.

Sheffield Crown Court heard Saxon, 23, was given a community penalty in 2007 after a similar false allegation against a former boyfriend.

Jailing her Judge Michael Murphy said: 'Rape is such a terrible, diabolical offence that it is always treated very seriously in these courts. It is a dreadful thing for a person to be raped. It is a most serious allegation for one person to make against another. It is truly awful if it is untrue.'

UK: White males now classed as a 'minority group' at university

Broadsword · 19 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Across UK universities, 984,000 female undergraduates are studying for degrees, compared to 713,000 male. The gap is expected to widen in future years as new government rules make it easier for universities to recruit students with A-level grades of AAB or better, more of whom are female.

While last week's A-level results showed boys narrowly outperforming girls at the A* grade for the first time, girls remained significantly more likely than boys to achieve grades in the upper range of A* to B.

...

White males are defined as under-represented because while they make up about 45 per cent of the UK population, according to the last census, they account for only 20 per cent of the college's intake.

Prospectuses and publicity materials have been redesigned to feature photographs and quotes from white male students. Visits to schools and college roadshows specifically target boys.

...

By contrast, white women are overrepresented among the students, and are not being targeted for recruitment.'

Feds move to strike lewd details from Homeland Security sexual-discrimination lawsuit

Matt · 19 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. More than just circling wagons, looks to me like an attempt to suppress evidence. Would they dare attempt the same tactic if the complainants were female and the defendant male? Heck, by now, he'd be fired! Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — The feds have asked a judge to strike from the public record the most “scandalous” details of a bombshell sexual-discrimination lawsuit against Janet Napolitano and the Department of Homeland Security that refer to oral sex and an odd bathroom prank.

The lewd details are included in senior law-enforcement official James Hayes’ suit claiming retaliation anti-guy bias.

The filing claims top immigration aide Suzanne Barr “humiliated” a male employee by calling him in his hotel room and screaming that she wanted his “c--k in the back of [her] throat.”'

German judge says circumcision violates human rights-- over 700 doctors and profs sign support letter

Matt · 19 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.:

As you know, a judge in Germany ruled that infant male genital mutilation violates boys' human rights. A Reuters story on the judge's decision is at http://www.reuters.com/article/2012/06/27/us-germany-circumcision-idUSBRE85Q19Y20120627.

And as expected, powerful religious lobby groups got the German parliament to legislatively override the judge's decision that circumcision violates human rights. But the good news is that this is forcing the issue into a public debate, and over 700 doctors and professors just signed a letter supporting the judge's decision! The letter in German is here.

An imperfect Google translation from German to English, with the list of the co-signors and their credentials, is here.

Affairs: They're fine when women are charging for them

Matt · 20 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The tone, the content, the whole thing. In a rare article that admits that women gasp have affairs as much as men do, the tone is suddenly not just tolerant but positively embraces not just the having of affairs but the blatant charging for them (ie, prostitution via dating site). Excerpt:

'Alongside the internet dating revolution, these “playfairs” are evidence of a potentially dramatic shift in British marriage. As dating websites open up a global shop window of sexual possibilities, as life expectancy continues to rise and we become increasingly sexually aware, how can we still take the crushing old rules of fidelity, that turn marriage into a prison, for granted? Why should we not be able to recapture the heady thrills of youth, while protecting a secure home life?

The time has come, alongside the technology, to redraw the rules of marriage for the 21st century. Just as the Pill opened up premarital sex in the Sixties, the internet is opening up a whole new culture of affairs among married people. Sex has become a major leisure activity of our time, accessible to everyone, married or not, rich and poor. It’s time to start honing our seduction skills and join the playground.
...

If anything, married women are at an astonishing advantage in this 21st-century world of modern adultery, not least because of the disparity in sexual desire in modern marriages. Recent sex surveys all prove that the received wisdom about men wanting more sex than their wives is not an unfair stereotype but a fact. The gap in sexual desire between men and women is observed in every country and culture where such surveys have been carried out.
...
When he met his first date, Maya – beautiful and in her thirties – he could not believe his luck. They had a cheerful and flirty lunch, sitting in the sunshine. At the end, they discussed meeting again. Maya suggested a monthly fee for unlimited time with him at his convenience. Peter laughed, assuming she was joking. He considered an expensive dinner generous enough.

But as he worked his way through a similar series of first dates, that were also not followed up, he realised that Maya was right: a crucial rule in this modern world of adultery is that the women are able to call the shots, especially when the men are past their prime.'

First women admitted to Augusta National Golf Club as full members

Matt · 20 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Ahh, Martha! Enjoy the champagne! Now I am just wondering when the Ladies Golf Club of Toronto will allow men to join. After all, fair is fair. Or is it? Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (AP) -- The home of the Masters now has green jackets for women.

In a historic change at one of the world's most exclusive golf clubs, Augusta National invited former Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice and South Carolina financier Darla Moore to become the first female members since the club was founded in 1932.

"This is a joyous occasion," chairman Billy Payne said Monday.'

But really, I am no fan of gender separatism. I am glad this has happened. What I don't like is the kind of bigotry people like Martha Burk spout off. They are fine with women-only spaces but can't stand to see men-only spaces. This they see as evidence of evil sexism and oppression of women. Yet they can't see women-only hotel floors, "ladies nights" and other such things for what they are.

U.N.: Over 435,000 displaced, children forced to fight in Mali

Matt · 20 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. For "children", read "boys". Imagine if girls were forced into military "service" by thugs and bandits (polite words for them)-- do you think the UN would be sitting on its hands doing pretty much nothing? It just goes on and on. Problems for girls and women are a huge crisis requiring multinational intervention. Problems for boys and men draw a small article on the blog section of the LA Times. Excerpt:

'The chaos has also worsened an existing food crisis, leaving 4.6 million people in need of aid, according to the World Food Program. Swarms of locusts threaten to add to their woes, though the World Food Program says it is unclear whether the insects have reached the north.

Armed groups in the north have also continued to recruit and use children as fighters, UNICEF said Friday. Last month, the agency reported that at least 175 boys had been recruited in the region; the numbers are now believed to be in the hundreds and still rising, the agency warned.'

Though to be fair, look at the big picture. The way things are going there, being coerced into armed service may end up being the least of one's problems given that they are on the verge of a much bigger problem consisting of getting enough to eat. And also with that, it hardly gets any MSM coverage. Lovely world we got here.

"Women in Biomedical Careers"

Minuteman · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The NIH Working Group on Women in Biomedical Careers is a trans-NIH effort to consider barriers for women in science and to develop innovative strategies to promote entry, recruitment, retention, and sustained advancement of women in biomedical and research careers. Under the leadership of NIH Director Dr. Francis Collins and Office of Research on Women's Health (ORWH) Acting Director Dr. Janine Clayton, the Working Group collaborates with the NIH Institutes and Centers to promote tangible changes to institutional policies in the NIH intramural and extramural communities.

The Working Group was originally established in January 2007, by then NIH Director Elias A. Zerhouni, M.D., in response to the 2006 National Academies report Beyond Bias and Barriers: Fulfilling the Potential of Women in Academic Science and Engineering. The report found that women face institutional and environmental barriers to advancement at all career stages and called for broad, innovative action from universities, professional societies, and government funding agencies. The NIH Working Group on Women in Biomedical Careers includes NIH Deputy Directors and Office of the Director (OD) senior staff, Institute and Center (IC) Directors, and other representatives of NIH intramural and extramural staff. Five years after its inception, the Working Group continues to work towards even greater accomplishments, recognizing that sustaining advancement of women in biomedical careers will require persistent attention.'

Delaware Daycare Employees Arrested For Encouraging Toddlers To Fight

Mastodon · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DOVER, Del. (CBS) – The three daycare employees who were arrested on Monday for allegedly watching and encouraging toddlers to fight each other were released Tuesday afternoon after posting $10,000 secured bond.

On Monday, three employees from the Hands of Our Future Daycare in Delaware were arrested after a cell phone video showed employees watching and encouraging two 3-year-olds fight each other.

Tiana Harris, 19, Lisa Parker, 47, and Estefania Myers, 21, were charged with Assault, Endangering the Welfare of a Child, Reckless Endangering and Conspiracy for the incident, which occurred in March of 2012 and was captured on cell phone video.'

Title IX: 40 Years Later, U.S. Women Reign Supreme

Mastodon · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'United States women Olympians came home bedecked in gold and silver as if they had walked off with the crown jewels from the Tower of London.

Only one nation other than the United States managed to win more gold than our wonder women. American men didn't come close to taking as many medals as their female counterparts.

Surely Michael Phelps, with his record half a dozen London medals for a total of 22, including 18 gold through three Olympics; and Usain Bolt of Jamaica, the "world's fastest man," who defended his Olympic gold in both track dashes, will be well remembered as stars of the XXX Olympics.
...
They also reminded us that there was a time 40 years ago when congressmen acted like adults as they voted to protect women athletes from those foolish old chauvinistic white men who made up the minority and waged war on women, just as they are doing today.'

How Government Destroys Marriages

Mastodon · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The saga isn't over yet, but the story is so bizarre that it deserves to be told nationwide. The accused has my sympathy, even though he is a left-wing Democrat. Yes, I believe that leftists deserve due process and fair treatment in our criminal justice system.

The local prosecutor charged Mirkarimi with the crimes of domestic violence and child endangerment, which sound bad, but the evidence was trivial. The domestic-violence charge was based on Mirkarimi grabbing his wife's arm during a New Year's Eve argument, which allegedly left a bruise, and the child endangerment charge was based solely on their toddler (who was not touched) merely being present when this argument took place.

Mirkarimi's wife, Eliana Lopez, never made any complaint, and she publicly defended her husband. She is an intelligent adult, a former Venezuelan telenovela star, who is perfectly able to make her own decisions.

At Mirkarimi's arraignment, Lopez declined to paint herself as a domestic-violence victim. She told the judge, "This is unbelievable. I don't have any complaint against my husband."

Lopez added, "This country is trying to pull my family apart. This is the real violence, I believe." She made a written statement saying that the episode was "completely taken out of context."

Outside the court, Lopez told reporters that "this country has not allowed me to work on my marriage in a healthy way. I feel like … everybody is using my family, myself, in a political game just to destroy Ross. … This country is destroying my family."'

Decline in circumcisions costing health care system billions, study finds

Mastodon · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"The economic evidence is backing up what we already know medically," said Dr. Aaron Tobian, a Hopkins health epidemiologist and pathologist and senior researcher on the study.

The findings are the latest in a continuing debate over the health benefits of a procedure that was once common practice in the United States — and comes as the Academy of American Pediatrics prepares to announce updated guidelines on male circumcision next week.

Circumcision became controversial in the 1970s when the rate of procedures began to decline. Today, about 55 percent of the 2 million baby boys born each year are circumcised, compared with a peak of 79 percent in the 1970s and 1980s.

The Academy of American Pediatrics, which advises doctors on medical procedures, has taken a neutral stance on the issue for years. It last updated its position in 2005, reaffirming a stance from 1999 that there wasn't enough scientific evidence to show medical benefit to recommend circumcision.

Studies have long shown that when babies are not circumcised, where the foreskin on the tip of the penis is removed, they are at risk for health problems in the long run. Bacteria and viruses can get trapped in the extra layers of skin left on the penis.'

U.S. Supports Circumcision Abroad, Should Do Same at Home

Mastodon · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. government is justifiably proud of its leadership abroad funding male circumcision as a way to prevent HIV infections. The president's AIDS relief program boasts of having provided more than 1 million circumcisions in 14 African countries.

The record of government support for male circumcision within the U.S., however, is nothing to crow about. More and more states (18 so far) are dropping Medicaid coverage for routine infant male circumcision, contributing to a decline in rates from 79 percent throughout the 1970s to 55 percent in 2010. This has occurred even as evidence of the medical benefits of the procedure has stacked up.

The Medicaid cutbacks are driven by budget pressure, which has also caused some private insurers to stop coverage. These are penny-wise, pound-foolish decisions. In an analysis published Monday, researchers at the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine conclude that every infant circumcision that is not performed results in $313 in extra health-care expenses even after accounting for the procedure's cost of about $291.'

Why boys' literacy skills lag behind girls' and how to bridge the reading gap

Mastodon · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Parents come into the library every day concerned that their boys aren't reading," said Linda Brilz, youth services supervisor at Boise Public Library in Idaho. But the problem is bigger than "not reading." Across the country and around the world studies show that young men lag behind their female peers in literacy skills by significant margins.

"There is a huge disparity in performance," said William Brozo, professor of literacy at George Mason University's Graduate School of Education.

How serious is the problem? Some of the most compelling data on the topic comes from the results of the Programme for International Student Assessment, an exam given to 15-year olds in 65 countries. On the 2000 PISA exam, girls outperformed boys in reading by an average of 32 points. By 2009, the gap had increased to 39 points.'

Ruled innocent by judge 2 years ago, Los Angeles man remains in prison

el cid · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpts:

"Supporters of a Los Angeles man who remains in California state prison despite being declared innocent by a federal judge delivered more than 90,000 petition signatures to the state Attorney General's Office on Monday, calling for his release from custody.

Daniel Larsen was convicted in 1999 of possession of a concealed weapon and sentenced to 27 years to life but had the conviction overturned when a judge in 2010 found his constitutional rights had been violated."

You can sign a petition for his release here.

Circumcision, the ultimate parenting dilemma

Matt · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While Europe increasingly questions the practice of circumcising boys, US paediatricians are about to say that the medical case for it is getting stronger. Most US adult men are circumcised, but the number of newborns having the op is falling, and is now below 50% in some states - intensifying the dilemma for parents.
...
Unlike in Europe - where rates are low, and circumcision is mostly confined to the Jewish and Muslim communities - circumcision is one of the most common operations in the US.

Three-quarters of American adult men are circumcised. There are over one million procedures each year, or around one every 30 seconds.

But rates are falling, as parents - like Stephen Box and his wife - are opting to break with tradition, and alongside this, an increasingly vocal anti-circumcision movement has emerged.
...
Take the most private part of the male body, add parenting rights, children's rights, disputed science, history, tradition and a dollop of religion, and you have the recipe for a controversy that will run and run.'

Petition: Stop Sexism in The Affordable Care Act

Matt · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'Now that men and women pay equally for healthcare, shouldn't men receive equal coverage when it comes to fully covered services? Shouldn't there finally be a government health office dealing with men's health? Men and women should sign this petition no matter if they agree with the Affordable Care Act or not. The Act is sexist and needs to be made unbiased should it remain in existence in its present state. (Since Change.org seems to have cropped my original top photo to remove all resemblence of what it was supposed to portray, the chart shows govt. funding for cancer by gender (millions of $) 2009. The first bar graph is for the National Institute of Health and the second bar graph is the Centers for Disease Control (CDC).)

On August 1, 2012 many more health care services became available to women without co-pays, deductibles, or out-of-pocket expenses. While this can be seen as a victory for women's health, there are many services that affect men in equal or similar ways that still require men to be able to afford those cost-sharing requirements. Why should all women receive these services (such as well-care visits) "free" while men still will be denied those services if they can not afford to pay for them? The Affordable Care Act will undoubtedly expand the gender life-expectancy gap even further due to men being denied these well-care visits. Blacks and Hispanic males will be hit hardest as studies have shown them to be less likely to afford those out-of-pocket expenses.'

Delaware Woman Charged With Abusing A Corpse

Matt · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. They found her son wrapped up in her basement and she isn't being held for murder? Excerpt:

'However, Delaware State Police say they were unable to verify Hooks' story. Due to concerns for the welfare of the child, detectives obtained a search warrant on July 25th for Hooks' home in the unit block of Squire Circle in the Royal Grant Development.

During the search, detectives located "a suspiciously wrapped package" in a storage area. The package was removed by the Medical Examiner's Office which later determined it to be the remains of a male child at least one year of age.

Hooks was arrested and arraigned on the charge of abusing a corpse. She is currently held on $1,000.00 cash bail.'

Class of '16 sees men as 'dumb and dumber'

Matt · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I guess this is what happens when you feed them a steady diet of pop culture and anti-male TV commercials, all without telling them who invented all the electronics they use, the cars they ride in, the houses the live in, the schools they go to, etc., etc. Excerpt:

'The students are also accustomed to seeing women in position of leadership. They came of age at a time when Madeleine Albright was serving as the first female U.S. secretary of state, and women have held the position for most of their lives.

And the old Hollywood stereotype of ditzy blonde women has given way to one of "dumb and dumber males," according to the list.

"In general, there was always the complaint that it was too slow for women to get to positions of responsibility," said Ron Nief, one of the two Beloit College officials who compiles the list. "Now the question is, `What took so long?'"'

Seneca Falls woman accused of raping 14-year-old boy

Matt · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Ironically, the same Seneca Falls that is heralded as the "Birthplace of Women's Rights" (though I rather think a lot of ideas around their issues pre-dated the Seneca Falls convention by many years). Thankfully those rights don't include statutory rape-- at least not some of the time. Excerpt:

'A Seneca Falls woman has been accused of having sex with a 14-year-old boy after allegedly allowing him to drink alcohol.

Dawn R. Planty, 45, was charged Monday with second-degree rape, a felony, and endangering the welfare of a child and second-degree unlawfully dealing with a child, both misdemeanors, according to the Seneca Falls Police Department.

The incident occurred in Seneca Falls, officers said. Further details were not released.

Planty was arraigned in Seneca Falls Village Court and was remanded to the Seneca County Correctional Facility in lieu of $5,000 cash bail or $10,000 bond.'

Russian woman kills elderly neighbor with her bra

Matt · 21 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MOSCOW (AP) -- Russian investigators say a woman in East Siberia has strangled an elderly neighbor to death with her bra.

The Investigative Committee in Buryatia said in a statement on Tuesday that the 26-year-old woman from the town of Zakamensk, just miles north off the border with Mongolia, has been charged with murder.

Investigators say the woman was drunk on a July evening when she and her boyfriend called on their 65-year-old neighbor for money to buy drinks. Angry that he refused to lend them money, the woman punched him in the face and tried to strangle him with her hands, before taking off her bra and strangling him with it, they say.'

Pro tennis umpire charged with husband’s murder

Mastodon · 22 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'As an umpire for decades on some of tennis's biggest stages, Lois Goodman mixed it up with John McEnroe and Martina Navratilova, Roger Federer and the Williams Sisters.

Already in New York City for next week's U.S. Open where she was to serve as a line judge, the 70-year-old Goodman was met Tuesday with a felony arrest warrant from her hometown of Los Angeles, where police and prosecutors say she beat her 80-year-old husband to death with a coffee mug in April.

Goodman has been a line judge at the U.S. Open for many years and was scheduled to work at this year's tournament, which begins Monday, and was about to begin working the tournament's qualifying matches on Tuesday, said tournament spokesman Tim Curry, who had no further comment.'

3,000 Malawian men cut off their foreskins: Less cervical cancer, reduces Aids risks

Mastodon · 22 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Malawian cancer expert at the country's sole certified oncology unit at the Queen Elizabeth Central Hospital (QUECH) has asked authorities to consider exploring possibilities of using medical male circumcision as a measure of reducing cases of cervical cancer in women.

The country's lone oncologist, Dr Leo Masamba told the Malawi News Agency (Mana) that though no research has been conducted locally, there are theoretical linkages between the HIV virus and the Human Papilloma Virus (HPV) which is one of the major causes of cervical cancer in women.

Dr Masamba's sentiments come at a time when more men are willingly to go for certified medial male circumcision since its endorsement by the World Health Organization (WHO) as a means of reducing HIV infection in 2007.'

Zimbabwe: Clinton Hails Legislators' Circumcision

Mastodon · 22 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Washington, DC, Usa — United States Secretary of State Mrs Hillary Clinton has lauded 40 Zimbabwean parliamentarians who recently underwent voluntary male circumcision.

She described the team as true leaders who should be applauded for their role in the HIV and Aids fight.

Addressing 20 000 delegates gathered here for the XIX International Aids Conference, Mrs Clinton said Zimbabwean lawmakers were a good example of political leadership's commitment in the HIV and Aids management.

She said they supported more than 400 000 male circumcision procedures since last December alone and hoped to do more through different grants.

". . .We want the world to know that this procedure reduces the risk of female-to-male transmission by more than 60 percent and for the rest of the man's life, so the impact can be phenomenal.

"In Zimbabwe, some male lawmakers wanted to show their constituents how safe and virtually painless the procedure is, so they went to a mobile clinic and got circumcised.'

The demise of U.S. males in sports

Mastodon · 22 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Much of the blame in the demise of Olympic sports programs in the United States has been the federal government's push of Title IX regulations that have led to "quota queens" that mandate more sports for women than men, and men are being told they cannot play sports.

Now the Department of Education, knowing the demise of the American male at the Olympics, has made it clear it is planning quotas in high school sports, and the local high school gridiron, diamond and Olympic sports are on the cutting block, all in the name of equality, which technically means feminine superiority and masculine inferiority. In New York, new schools in the city may only offer sports programs for girls. Future plans by the agency call for quotas in math and science classes to restrict male participation in such classes.
...
The administration has made it clear it wants quotas on boys taking such classes the way they have in sports. This will make us fail against the world without such restrictions. Title IX is becoming a cancer against males and schools, creating failure in order to advance an ill-thought agenda with the actions pushed by the Department of Education. It is time Title IX be repealed or boys will be facing the task of being benched from schools because of federal regulations on the playing field and the classroom.'

Postpartum psychosis: Affected parents speak out

Matt · 22 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women are more at risk of severe mental illness after giving birth than at any other time in their lives.

In the worst cases it can lead to postpartum psychosis, also known as puerperal psychosis, a mental illness which affects one in 500 new mothers and can result in suicide or them killing their baby.

BBC Newsnight has spoken to people affected by this devastating but poorly understood condition, which often goes undetected because doctors and midwives can fail to recognise the symptoms.
...

"I put my hand around his tiny neck, not yet strong enough to hold up his own head, and began to squeeze. I wasn't trying to harm him. I knew I mustn't do that, but I wanted to know if I was capable of it."

Jo knew something was badly wrong, but she was too scared to seek help because she thought her children would be taken away from her.

Without treatment she became sicker and began planning how to kill both herself and her two young sons.'

IA: Intact America Condemns Anticipated AAP Circumcision Statement

Matt · 22 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Release here. Excerpt:

'TARRYTOWN, NY—Intact America, an organization founded in 2008 to ensure that all children are protected from permanent bodily alteration inflicted on them without their consent, is criticizing the anticipated August 27 release by the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) of its new “Circumcision Policy Statement.” Based on comments to the press* made by members of the AAP’s Task Force on Circumcision, which authored the document, Intact America deplores the Statement’s focus on selective evidence supporting medical benefits of removing normal foreskins from baby boys.

Georganne Chapin, Executive Director of Intact America, stated today, “From the AAP Circumcision Task Force’s pre-publication comments, it is clear that the group has chosen to feature only literature (almost exclusively focused on adult men in Africa) that supports its predisposition toward circumcising boys; the Task Force has failed to consider the large body of evidence from the developed world that shows no medical benefits for the practice, and has given short shrift, if not dismissed out of hand, the serious ethical problems inherent in doctors removing healthy body parts from children who cannot consent.”'

Thailand: woman cannabilised sons, claims she thought they were pigs

Minuteman · 23 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A Thai woman who has been accused of eating her two sons claims she hallucinated and thought they were pigs.

She allegedly butchered and cooked her sons, aged one and five, last week before police found her asleep at her Chiang Mai home with several body parts near her, the Bangkok Post reports.

When police conducted a background check after the woman's arrest, they found she had been treated for a mental illness in 2007.
...
She was charged with murder, but has been deemed mentally unfit to stand trial and was sent to a nearby hospital for treatment.'

German Rabbi faces Charges for 'Religious Circumcisions'

Mastodon · 23 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'David Goldberg has been the rabbi of the Bavarian city of Hof since the last 1990s. He is a mohel (ritual circumciser) who has performed approximately 3,000 circumcisions since being trained to do so. However, there is a new curve in the road: less than two months ago a German court "banned religious circumcisions" and Goldberg now faces a criminal complaint over the most recent circumcisions he performed.

Jewish leaders throughout the world have taken the news of the complaint against Goldberg with stunned disbelief. And Moseh Kantor, president of the European Jewish Congress, said: "It has been many decades since a Jew was charged for practicing Judaism openly and is reminiscent of far darker times. We hope that in Germany, of all places, the authorities would remain far more sensitive to this issue."

There is no word on what possible punishment Goldberg might face over the circumcisions. But officials at the Simon Wiesenthal Center are scheduled to met with the German Justice Minister on Goldberg's behalf on August 29. For now, they've made clear their belief that "this criminal complaint [against Goldberg] is not an attack only on one rabbi but against the entire Jewish people."'

Why Some Women Will Never Be Happy With Proof of Equality

Mastodon · 24 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Few topics stir up more heated debate than how women fare in the workforce. Bloomberg columnist Ramesh Ponnuru recently took on this issue, soberly detailing research that shows discrimination isn't the primary reason why men continue to out-earn women.

As Ponnuru explains, some politicians and activists continue to use the statistic that women earn just 77 per cent of what men earn, implying that this is the gap that exists between your average male and female coworkers. But in fact, once factors such as occupation choice and hours worked are taken into account, just a small fraction of that gap remains.

It's not just conservatives who reach this conclusion: Studies by the American Association of University Women and the General Accounting Office have found the same. Researchers vary on how much of a gap lingers after controlling for men and women's different choices, but there's a near consensus that a large portion of that 77-cents-on-the-dollar gap has nothing to do with workplace discrimination.'

ACLU targets single-sex education

Mastodon · 24 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The American Civil Liberties Union on Monday issued a report to the Department of Education asserting that numerous single-sex education programs in public schools are unlawful. Furthermore, the report calls for the department to rescind its regulations enabling these single-sex education programs.
...
Critics of the ACLU's position leaped to the defense of single-sex education. Christina Hoff Sommers, Resident Scholar at the American Enterprise Institute and author of "The War Against Boys: How Misguided Feminism Is Harming Our Young Men," denounced the report in an interview with the Daily Caller News Foundation.

"I think it's seriously misguided," said Sommers. "What the ACLU's doing is foreclosing on possibilities for programs that will help children — especially boys — who are languishing in school … the ACLU may not like it, but boys and girls are different."

Sommers acknowledged that single-sex education should be voluntary and tied this support for freedom of choice into her critique of the ACLU's report, saying, "It's ridiculous that we would give parents fewer choices than more … I find it very odd that a group with 'liberty' in its name is marching against a parent's right to choose."'

ACLU threatens school system over same-sex classrooms

Mastodon · 24 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE American Civil Liberties Union has again threatened to sue the Wood County school system over same-sex classes at Van Devender Middle School.

Sarah Rogers of the ACLU demanded that school officials sign an agreement to end the classes. Dean Furner, attorney for the school board, replied.

"However, after much study and debate amongst administration, myself and the board, the board voted to not sign this agreement," Furner said.

...

The ACLU has the luxury of concentrating on manning feminist bastions. Van Devender Middle School has the much more demanding challenge of nurturing actual girls - and boys.

Outside special-interest groups should not make that job any more difficult than it is.

