The ACLU's highhanded, threatening behavior is offputting in the extreme.'

Infant Male Circumcision should be banned

Mastodon · 24 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Non-therapeutic male circumcision is quite unclear in Tasmania and this is the reason that the Tasmanian Law Reform Institute has been asking the government to clear the doubts. It is not even known that infant male circumcision is even legal or not.

However, the institute has asked to ban circumcision among infants. It is very important that new laws should be made, which can clarify that circumcision is not allowed for baby boys. It has been noted time and again that parents and relatives make their infants to undergo make circumcision for varied purposes, which are not related to ant medical problem.
...
Professor Kate Warner, who is the director of the institute, was of the view, "It should also support measures to encourage individuals associated with these traditions to move away from loosely entrenched and particularly contentious practices". A lot of pain is involved in the procedure, which can affect the mental growth of a person.'

NY Times: Men, Who Needs Them?

Matt · 26 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Your pedictably regular dose of misandry from the NY Times. You'd think that the editorial dept. was run by feminists! Wait, ... it is... anyway, here it is. Excerpt:

'That bias, however, is becoming harder to sustain, as men become less relevant to both reproduction and parenting. Women aren't just becoming men's equals. It's increasingly clear that "mankind" itself is a gross misnomer: an uninterrupted, intimate and essential maternal connection defines our species.
...
With expanding reproductive choices, we can expect to see more women choose to reproduce without men entirely. Fortunately, the data for children raised by only females is encouraging. As the Princeton sociologist Sara S. McLanahan has shown, poverty is what hurts children, not the number or gender of parents.'

Official’s Lawsuit Claims Discrimination Against Men at U.S. Immigration Agency

Matt · 26 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A discrimination and retaliation lawsuit has embroiled the upper reaches of the federal government’s immigration enforcement agency, contributing to a sense of turmoil in a bureaucracy that has been suffering major labor conflicts between senior officials and employees.

The lawsuit, filed by a top federal immigration official in New York, alleges that he was shunted out of a high-level position in the agency in favor of a less-qualified woman because he was a man.

The official, James T. Hayes Jr., also accuses the agency’s chief of staff, Suzanne Barr, of “sexually offensive behavior” that contributed to a discriminatory work environment for male employees.

Last week, Ms. Barr stepped down from her post and voluntarily left the agency on paid leave pending the outcome of an internal review of the misconduct allegations, a spokesman said.'

Matalin: War on women ‘ridiculous,’ Dem gender gap with men as great as GOP with women

Mastodon · 26 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“I’m shaking my head because the Democratic gender gap with men as great as the gender gap with women,” Matalin said. “Greta — after the sustained war on women, that Romney is everything, from a dog abuser, to a wife cancer giver, to a felon, to a tax cheat, multimillion dollars, multi-state, multi-faceted the gender gap has remained stable, as has Obama’s with men. We’re doing fine with women. What’s driving the gender gap with Obama — excuse me, one second — is liberal women, women under 30 and post-graduate women. Romney wins every other woman, middle class moms, suburbans. Those are the women who are going to vote. The enthusiasm among younger people, in particularly post-graduate, that’s not enough to overcome the women that Romney is going to win.”

“And this war on women is ridiculous,” she continued. “Do you don’t think that Republicans who are married and have daughters and have sisters don’t care about women’s health or are going to ban contraception?”'

Letter to AAP from Catholics Against Circumcision

Matt · 26 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Organization web site: http://CatholicsAgainstCircumcision.org/

Dear AAP Board Members:

I'm writing to you to request that you withdraw or rescind the newest 2012 AAP Circumcision Policy Statement. Below I have critiqued for you some of the serious problems with this new statement.

The Abstract states on page 585 that "health benefits are not great enough to recommend routine circumcision for all male newborns", but this is not repeated even once in the long text on pages 758-785. Other long columns favoring circumcision are repeated over and over again, on pages 761-762, 770, 775-776, and 778. The 1999 AAP Statement was 8 pages long (pages 686-693), but this diatribe against living with a foreskin goes on for 28 pages. There is almost the feeling that AAP physicians hope that if they repeat something over and over again, eventually it might become the truth.

The AAP concludes on page 778 that "the health benefits of newborn male circumcision outweigh the risks", and yet on page 772 the AAP admits that "the true incidence of complications after newborn circumcision is unknown". If one doesn't know how often complications occur, then one can't make the judgment that the benefits outweigh the risks! The AAP lacks the evidence it needs to make such a claim.

The 1999 Statement studied 40 years' worth of research, and the 2012 studied only selective research since 1999. Only 1031 of 1388 studies were accepted to look at. Balance might have been found in the 357 studies that were omitted, but the AAP was not seeking balance. The AAP statement goes on ad nauseum about alleged "benefits", to the point of fear-mongering that something will go wrong if an infant isn't circumcised. It's a high pressure sales pitch to try to get the American public to buy the circumcisions that AAP and ACOG doctors are selling. This is in direct contrast to Europe, where circumcision is uncommon and the health of European children equals or surpasses that of American children.

No studies on ethics were included in this statement, and it's clear that the rights of the child and how a grown man might feel about HIS foreskin being stripped from him were never given any consideration at all by the AAP. These are major issues, and even more important than many of the other minor issues the AAP discusses. Material was provided to the AAP to study this aspect of circumcision, but it was ignored. With one bioethicist on the panel, you would have thought that the AAP might at least have given the ethics of circumcision a cursory examination, considering that they were provided with many sources showing the emotional distress many men feel. Ethics and mental health, however, nowhere enter the picture for the AAP. Respect for the bodily integrity of another person were not included, and medical ethics were thrown out the window as infants were thrown under the bus.

Financing studies weren't included in the studies, but the AAP did its best to push financing repeatedly for third-party reimbursement of non-therapeutic circumcision, at the expense of taxpayers during a time of budget crises. Those with private insurance would see premiums and medical costs rise. The cost for circumcision on page 777 ranges from $216 to $601 per circumcision in the U.S. In 2010, the in-hospital U.S. circumcision rate was 54.7%. Thus, 45.3% of newborn males left the hospital genitally intact. If the AAP were to convince parents of these 45.3% to circumcise (as they are attempting to do in this 2012 statement), then there would be 45.3% of roughly 2.1 million baby boys that could be an additional income source for physicians. (Remember, don't consider the ethics!) This would be an additional 951,300 male infants to profit from. At prices the AAP quotes, this could mean an additional $205,480,800 to $571,731,300 for doctors who circumcise. This is no small sum, and as Thomas Wiswell, M.D. stated on June 22, 1987 in the Boston Globe, "I have some good friends who are obstetricians outside the military, and they look at a foreskin and almost see a $125 price tag on it. Each one is that much money. Heck, if you do 10 a week, that's over $1,000 a week, and they don't take that much time." (Lehman 1987) Money like that would certainly help doctors make their mortgage payments and their car payments, pay for vacations, etc. - a “benefit” that the AAP failed to mention. Under Literature Search Overview, it is understandable why AAP physicians might consider it important to investigate “What are the trends in financing and payment for elective circumcision?”

No studies on the anatomy and functions of the foreskin were included. This is surprising, since it would seem like common sense to consider what the functions of any healthy body part are before amputating it. Probably since the male AAP Task Force members are all circumcised, this idea was difficult for them to grasp. Only one study on the sexual impact of circumcision was included, and this from Africa. Other studies were ignored or discounted. “The effect of male circumcision on the sexual enjoyment of the female partner”, which appeared in BJU INTERNATIONAL, Volume 83, Supplement 1, Pages 79-84, January 1, 1999, is not mentioned. Nor is the newest Danish study that was publicized on November 14, 2011 – “Male circumcision leads to a bad sex life” - “Circumcised men have more difficulties reaching orgasm, and their female partners experience more vaginal pains and an inferior sex life, a new study shows.” See: http://sciencenordic.com/male-circumcision-leads-bad-sex-life The AAP had time to include this study, but it was ignored. Others sent material to the AAP about CIRCUMserum, Senslip, foreskin restoration that men are undergoing to undo some of the damages of circumcision and how this improves the sexual experience for both men and women. It didn’t fit the AAP’s pro-circumcision agenda, so it was ignored. The Policy Statement is totally lacking in ethics, anatomy, and foreskin functions. Instead, the Task Force is more concerned with how to train more doctors to circumcise, and how to do so with different devices and various forms of anesthesia.

The physical and sexual harms from circumcision are minimized or dismissed outright. Deaths from circumcision and botched circumcisions are considered “case studies”, and the children horribly damaged from circumcision don’t merit the AAP’s consideration, even though the AAP’s alleged mission is that it is “Dedicated to the Health of All Children”. When cribs are faulty or car seats aren’t safe, the AAP becomes concerned and warns the public. When physicians botch circumcisions and are at fault, children don’t matter. After one botched circumcision lawsuit and a large settlement, the company that manufactured the Mogen clamp went out of business. The AAP report should have advised physicians to NOT use the Mogen clamp because of the botched circumcisions that have resulted with this device. If still in use, no doubt there will be future tragedies with the Mogen clamp, but parents will only be able to sue the doctor and hospital and not the manufacturer.

There was so much reliance on studies from Africa in this statement that it seemed like the AAP should change its name to the African Academy of Pediatrics. In contrast to the AAP, the American Association of Family Physicians (AAFP) has stated: “…the association between having a sexually transmitted disease (STD) - excluding human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) and being circumcised are inconclusive…most of the studies [of the effect of circumcision on HIV] …have been conducted in developing countries, particularly those in Africa. Because of the challenges with maintaining good hygiene and access to condoms, these results are probably not generalizable to the U.S. population”. But generalize the AAP did! In addition, the AAP listed page after page of STDs that allegedly circumcision would prevent, and wrote conflicting statements about syphilis. A recent study in Puerto Rico found that circumcised men have HIGHER rates of STDs and HIV. The 60% reduced risk of HIV following circumcision is the relative risk reduction, not the absolute risk reduction. There’s a huge difference. Across all three female-to-male trials, of the 5,411 men subjected to male circumcision, 64 (1.18%) became HIV-positive. Among the 5,497 controls, 137 (2.49%) became HIV-positive”, so the absolute decrease in HIV infection was only 1.31%, which is not statistically significant.” (Boyle GJ, Hill G. Sub-Saharan African randomised clinical trials into male circumcision and HIV transmission: Methodological, ethical and legal concerns. J Law Med 2011; 19:316-34.)

Infants are not at risk of STDs or HIV through sexual contact, so this speculation about their future risk is foolhardy. Infants can also be at risk for many other diseases, but surgical amputation of healthy body parts is a foolhardy approach for prevention and treatment of disease. If an infant is at risk of an STD, then it is probably safe to say that an adult is perpetrating a crime against the child and needs to be arrested and charged.

Judaism and Islam are mentioned as religions that practice religious circumcisions. Once again, the statement ignores Christianity, which teaches that circumcision is unnecessary. Christianity is the largest religion in the U.S., but its teachings don't even get a mention by the AAP, which is rather insulting! With an over-representation of members on the Task Force who have a religious bias favoring circumcision, this is not surprising.

The AAP promotes parents choosing medically unnecessary circumcision for their male children, completely contradicting what it said in PEDIATRICS, Volume 95 Number 2, Pages 314-317, February 1995. It said then, "Thus "proxy consent" poses serious problems for pediatric health care providers. Such providers have legal and ethical duties to their child patients to render competent medical care based on what the patient needs, not what someone else expresses… the pediatrician's responsibilities to his or her patient exist independent of parental desires or proxy consent."

Parents deserve factual information about circumcision, but they won't find it in the new AAP Statement. In fact, the AAP wrongly advises parents of intact baby boys to retract the foreskin and wash it with soap and water. (page 763) Soap can alter the good bacteria under the foreskin, potentially causing infections that should then be treated with liquid acidophilus to restore the good bacteria. Water is sufficient for cleansing. Circumcised doctors with circumcised sons probably don't know this.

On page 764, the AAP speculates that the foreskin contains a high density of Langerhans cells, "which facilitates HIV infection of host cells. Actually, the exact opposite is true. "Langerin is a natural barrier to HIV-1 transmission by Langerhans cells" (Nature Medicine- 4 March 2007). This study states, "Langerhans cells (LCs) specifically express Langerin … LCs reside in the epidermis of the skin and in most mucosal epithelia, such as the ectocervix, vagina and foreskin."

UTIs can be prevented through breastfeeding, which the AAP allegedly supports. This is nowhere mentioned under "Male Circumcision and UTIs" on page 767. HPV can be prevented with a vaccine for both boys and girls, but it is not mentioned on that same page. A recent study reporting on the large number of re-circumcisions done following infant circumcisions is also not even mentioned. On page 770, EMLA is mentioned as a possible anesthetic, but EMLA is not supposed to be used on infants. The fact remains that unnecessary surgery performed with anesthesia is still unnecessary surgery.

There is so much wrong with this new statement that it should immediately be withdrawn before it is presented on Monday. The AAP should either start all over again (with new, unbiased Task Force members), or renew its 1999 statement which attempted to at least give a more balanced view of circumcision. The 1999 circumcision statement certainly had its flaws by ignoring ethics and the anatomy and functions of the foreskin, but it wasn't as atrocious as this new statement is.

If the AAP wants to remain a credible organization, it will look to the judgment of other foreign medical associations, who recognize that circumcision is medically unnecessary and has serious ethical problems underlying its practice. American parents should look to these foreign medical associations for good advice, since the AAP is not providing it in its new statement.

Sincerely,

Petrina Fadel, Director
CatholicsAgainstCircumcision.org

Usher held in contempt and wins primary custody of kids

Matt · 26 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Quite a week for Usher. Stories here and here. Excerpt:

'Usher‘s ex-wife Tameka Raymond just lost in the former couple’s bitter custody battle — TMZ has learned, a judge has awarded Usher primary custody of their two sons.

It’s a shocking development — considering both sides were trying to strip each other of custody. Tameka felt the singer was an absentee father who was too absorbed in his career to be a good dad. She also accused him of using drugs in front of the kids.

Usher argued Tameka was inattentive and irresponsible.'

Texan wrongly convicted of rape freed after 24 years in prison

Matt · 26 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'HOUSTON — In what's becoming a familiar scenario in Texas, a man has been freed after spending years behind bars for a crime he did not commit.

David Lee Wiggins, 48, of Fort Worth was imprisoned in 1989 for rape, largely because the 14-year-old victim picked him out of photo and live lineups. His fingerprints did not match any at the crime scene. Still, he was sentenced to life in prison.

But this month DNA testing excluded Wiggins, and on Friday, State District Judge Louis Sturns in Fort Worth approved a motion overturning his conviction and freed him.

Before Wiggins is officially exonerated, the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals must accept the judge's recommendation or the governor must grant a pardon.

"This was the beginning of the final chapter in his 24-year ordeal: He walked free today," Wiggin's attorney, Nina Morrison of the New York-based Innocence Project, told the Los Angeles Times. "He lost half of his life to this wrongful conviction. It's a startling reminder of the toll it takes."'

Gender Gap: Obama Down 8 Among Men; Romney Down 8 Among Women

Mastodon · 27 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNSNews.com) - According to the Gallup tracking poll of the presidential race, there is a gender gap in the candidates' appeal: Men are more likely to favor Republican candidate Mitt Romney and women are more likely to favor Democratic candidate Barack Obama--by the exact same percentages.

In Gallup's tracking between July 30 and August 19, 50 percent of male registered voters said they supported Romney and 42 percent said they supported Obama. At the same time, 50 percent of female registered voters said they supported Obama and 42 percent said they supported Romney.

The Gallup poll showed a similar, but larger disparity, between married and unmarried registered votes. Among those who were married, Romney led Obama 55 to 37. Among those were not married, Obama led Romney, 57 to 34.'

UK: Wife whose husband became secret sperm donor calls for change in the law to require partners' consent

Broadsword · 27 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A married woman whose husband donated sperm without her knowledge is calling for clinics to be forced to ask for a wife's consent.

The unnamed mother-of-one from Surrey said she feared that children fathered with the sperm – who would be half-brothers or sisters of her son – may one day 'disrupt' the family by getting in touch.

She has written to the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority calling for guidelines on sperm donation to include the spouse's views – and says the sperm should be treated as a joint 'marital asset'.

A controversial ruling in 2005 meant all children born through sperm donation – up to ten families are allowed per donor – have the right to trace their biological father when they reach adulthood.

In her heartfelt letter to the fertility watchdog, she told how her husband had donated sperm against her wishes after suffering Post Traumatic Stress Disorder following the birth of their child.'

Intact America Demands American Academy of Pediatrics Retract its New Technical Report

DanBollinger · 27 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Intact America demands that the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) retract its Technical Report released today* extolling the benefits of neonatal male circumcision. According to Georganne Chapin, founding executive director of Intact America, the Report disregards pediatricians' ethical obligations to their patients and promotes the benefits of circumcision through a selective and self-serving literature review. Further, by calling for public and private insurance payments for medically unnecessary circumcision, the Report promotes pediatricians' self interest, at the cost of the safety and wellbeing of newborn baby boys and the men they will become. The Report, written by the AAP's Task Force on Circumcision, is to go before the AAP membership at its October meeting in New Orleans. It stops short of recommending circumcision, even as it claims the surgery's benefits outweigh the risks, and calls for parents to be the ultimate decision-makers.

The AAP Technical Report says, "Although health benefits are not great enough to recommend routine circumcision for all male newborns, the benefits of circumcision are sufficient to justify access to this procedure for families choosing it and to warrant third-party payment for circumcision of male newborns." In an apparent contradiction, the Report also admits that "the true incidence of complications after newborn circumcision are (sic) unknown" making all the more remarkable the Task Force's assertion that the surgery's "health benefits… outweigh the risks," and that if parents ask for it, insurers should pay for it.'

Doctors Opposing Circumcision: Commentary on American Academy of Pediatrics 2012 Circumcision Policy Statement

Matt · 27 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Commentary here (.pdf file). Excerpt:

'Male circumcision is a radical operation that irreversibly excises and amputates a healthy functional body part. The part removed is the foreskin or prepuce of the penis, which constitutes more than fifty percent of the skin and mucosa of the penis. The foreskin, which is a complex structure containing, smooth muscle, large vascular structures, and is highly innervated, has numerous protective, immunological, mechanical, sensory, and sexual physiological functions. The task force on circumcision, however, makes absolutely no mention of the nature or function of the foreskin, although this information is of great relevance to making a decision regarding circumcision.

Rights of the child

It is well established in both domestic law and international human rights law that a child is a person with rights of his own from the moment of birth. The task force on circumcision, however, treats the child-patient as a non-person with no legal rights of his own. There is no mention of the child's right to bodily integrity or the child's right to security of his person and special protection during childhood, which are violated by male circumcision. The child is seen as a chattel possession of the parents, with which they can do whatever they please. The AAP has failed to understand that domestic and international laws for the protection of individuals are written for the protection of the best interests of those individuals and that the violation of those laws cannot be in the best interests of those individuals.'

Circumcision wars: The other side weighs in

Mastodon · 27 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Maybe up there with abortion and healthcare reform, circumcision of male babies and children is shaping up to be one of the hottest issues in the sociomedical world over the next few years. Once uniformly regarded as kooks by nearly everyone, people who vow to outlaw circumcision are now only regarded as kooks by the majority of people. They managed to get a measure on the San Francisco ballot last year. The California Legislature quickly intervened, passing a law that made it (rightly) clear that the state is in charge of determining medical law, not individual cities, which ended that as well as any talk of measures elsewhere in the state.
...
Enter medical reality. Circumcision, far from being unhealthful, is good for boys and men, and for the nation's wallet, according to the experts. Last week, a study out of Johns Hopkins University predicted that healthcare costs in the United States would rise by billions of dollars in coming decades as the popularity of circumcision wanes, largely because of increases in the rates of sexually transmitted diseases and related cancers; studies in Africa and elsewhere found that circumcision lowered the risk of HIV infection. This week, the American Academy of Pediatrics shifted from a neutral position on circumcision to one saying that the health benefits of circumcision outweigh the risks. The physicians' group stopped short of recommending that all baby boys be circumcised, but its position will likely persuade more health insurers to cover the procedure; coverage has been falling off in recent years because of the academy's previous stance.'

Women-only art exhibition at Edinburgh Art Festival

MikeJH · 28 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At the exhibition, only work by women artists is displayed - and for the first month, only women were allowed in.

The organisers are now letting men in - but for most of the month of August they were turned away.

Sarah Wilson said: "It's kind of an experiment - it's a two-month exhibition and the first month has been solely for women - men are not allowed in.

"I don't have a police badge that means I can throw them out on the street but I wanted to create a space where women can work together with other women."'

Marc Dutroux ex-wife Michelle Martin released from jail

Matt · 28 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. A convent? Convent?? For a woman who was a willing accomplice to multiple counts of child rape and murder? Shouldn't she be in jail for life along with her unspeakably evil ex-husband? If this had been two men who had done this, with one being "only" an accomplice, you can be sure he would not ever see the light of day again, and rightly so. So why is this woman? The answer is of course in the last word of that question. Story here. Excerpt:

'The jailed ex-wife of child killer Marc Dutroux has been released from prison, after Belgium's highest court upheld her transfer to a convent.

The controversial move for Michelle Martin comes 16 years into her 30-year sentence.

Relatives of the pair's victims have expressed outrage over the decision, with one describing it as "absurd".

Earlier, a court in Brussels rejected two appeals against the ruling.

Martin was arrested in 1996 and was finally convicted in 2004 of complicity in the starvation deaths of two girls kidnapped by Dutroux and of helping him in the abduction of a number of others.
...
Dutroux himself is serving a life sentence for the kidnap and rape of six young and teenage girls. As well as the two who starved to death, Dutroux killed two others.'

SAVE: Help Stop False Allegations of Rape on Campus

Matt · 28 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Last December the University of Montana at Missoula was ranked as the "safest" university in Montana in terms of low rates of forcible rape and other violent crimes (1). But five months later the U.S. Dept. of Justice and Dept. of Education claimed the U. of Montana's failure to adequately address an alleged rash of sexual assaults was "very disturbing."

In March, quarterback Jordan Johnson was charged with rape, which former prosecutor Kirsten Pabst said was done just "to send a message." (2) And just this week, it was revealed that the U. of Montana has implemented mandatory training for students that talk about "rape-prone culture" and label false allegations of rape a "myth."(3)

Has the U. of Montana suddenly become a hotbed of sexual assault, or is the college simply terrifying everyone because of the DED's April 11 sexual assault directive?

Next week, SAVE will be launching a month-long campaign designed to expose the ideological agenda behind the Dept. of Education's Sexual Assault Directive. The campaign will consist of op-ed columns, social media, a lobbying event in DC, and radio interviews (with Sherry Warner, mother of Caleb Warner, who was terminated by the University of North Dakota, even though the local police issued a warrant against his false rape accuser for perjury!)

We'd also like to place some Facebook ads. Last June we spent $2,000, which resulted in an incredible 4 million FB impressions. Hoping to reach the same number of people this time, we're asking for your help to raise $2,000 in one week.

Can you help us stop false allegations on college campuses?

You can contribute by PayPal: http://www.saveservices.org/contribute. Or send a check payable to:

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
P.O. Box 1221
Rockville, MD 20849

If you contribute $100 or more, we will send you a False Allegation T-shirt - but we need to receive your contribution by Sept. 4.

Thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Citations:

(1) http://www.thewesternnews.com/education/article_28e8029e-25d7-11e1-9a78-0019bb2963f4.html
(2) http://www.cotwa.info/search?updated-max=2012-08-16T03:00:00-04:00&max-results=12&start=12&by-date=false
(3) http://www.cotwa.info/2012/08/the-unfortunate-politicization-of.html

Ann Romney: Women have it harder

Matt · 29 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Ann Romney made a stirring speech tonight at the RNC Convention. It was, overall, an effective speech. But alas, it seems putting men down in some way just seems to be a requirement of political figures either in or aspiring to office, either directly or by proxy. I have no doubt Mrs. Romney believes every word she spoke but also that her husband does too, or at least supports her saying it.

Just once in this modern era I'd like to hear a major political speech made and not have it pander to feminist sentiments and/or display out and out anti-male bigotry. Can you just imagine a male politician making statements similar to those Ann Romney made tonight about women and it not being a sure-fire rocket-sled ride into electoral irrelevance?

Speech transcript here. Excerpt:

"And if you listen carefully, you'll hear the women sighing a little bit more than the men. It's how it is, isn't it?

It's the moms who always have to work a little harder, to make everything right.

It's the moms of this nation — single, married, widowed — who really hold this country together. We're the mothers, we're the wives, we're the grandmothers, we're the big sisters, we're the little sisters, we're the daughters.

You know it's true, don't you?

You're the ones who always have to do a little more.

You know what it's like to work a little harder during the day to earn the respect you deserve at work and then come home to help with that book report which just has to be done.

You know what those late night phone calls with an elderly parent are like and the long weekend drives just to see how they're doing.

You know the fastest route to the local emergency room and which doctors actually answer the phone when you call at night.

You know what it's like to sit in that graduation ceremony and wonder how it was that so many long days turned into years that went by so quickly.

You are the best of America.

You are the hope of America.

There would not be an America without you.

Tonight, we salute you and sing your praises.

I'm not sure if men really understand this, but I don't think there's a woman in America who really expects her life to be easy. In our own ways, we all know better!"

Deaf boy's sign name 'breaches school policy'

Minuteman · 29 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A deaf three-year-old boy has been told by school officials in the US to change the way he signs his name because the gesture resembles a shooting gun.

Hunter Spanjer uses hand shapes to communicate — a method known as Signing Exact English, which is meant to mimic spoken words.

Hunter signs his name by crossing his index finger and middle finger and then shaking his hands.
...
Mr Spanjer is disputing the school's ruling, saying the name sign is not threatening in any way.

The school has declined to discuss the matter publicly, saying only they were working with the parents on a compromise.'

'Can single women swing the election?'

Mastodon · 29 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This political season, single women keep finding themselves at the center of political firestorms. Both parties and the media have recognized that single women are one of the country's fastest growing demographics and a potentially crucial voting bloc. As the New York Times recently wrote, single women lean strongly toward Obama in polls, but they are not reliable voters, often feeling like politics don't address their everyday concerns.
...
In the 1970s and 1980s, the number of single women in this country also grew dramatically. A rising number of divorces and increasing economic opportunities for women outside of marriage created new constituencies. Finding their access to economic resources—from credit to pensions—severely limited in a political economy built around the assumed norm of a nuclear family, these women organized. They formed groups like the Older Women's League and the Alliance for Displaced Homemakers, which demanded legal reform to give single women access to badly needed resources. They proposed creative solutions to the problems single women faced on a day-to-day basis – for example, new ways of calculating Social Security benefits based on a couple's shared earnings.'

UK study: married women drink more because men are a bad influence on them

Mastodon · 29 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Far from encouraging men to patronise a local pub to escape from domestic duties, marriage actively reduces their alcohol intake, according to research being presented at the American Sociological Association today.
...
The researchers found that married women generally drink more heavily than single women, widows or divorcees.

By contrast, men who are happily married drink less than their bachelor friends and significantly less than divorced men.

The reason, the researchers conclude, is that while women can help keep their husbands' drinking habits under control, men are simply a bad influence on their wives.'

Short stint in jail for woman who killed partner by cutting off his penis

Matt · 29 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A WOMAN who chopped off her ex partner's penis to stop him impregnating other women will serve less than four years in jail.

Jian Chen was this morning sentenced to a minimum of three years and nine months in jail after pleading guilty to the manslaughter of her ex partner Xian Peng at her North Ryde home in February 2011.

The court accepted the guilty plea to the lesser charge, and withdrew the murder charge, because Chen was suffering from an "abnormality of the mind" due to mental illness and the belief Peng was going to take their child to China.'

The Dangerous Article for Boys

Matt · 29 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys now seek refuge in cheesy horror novels because the Cultural Authorities won't give them the adventure books that were once staples in every boy's life. It is to this I attribute the popularity of vampire novels (and movies and television shows). But even here a boy is destined for disappointment.
...
We have the mistaken impression that it was traditional children's literature that was preachy. This is not only untrue, but it is almost the exact opposite of the truth. It is precisely the preachiness of politically correct modern literature that offends their innate sense of honesty and justice—a human instinct that we do our best to educate out of them.

Boys are not interested in getting in touch with themselves, and it is particularly off-putting when they are told that it is good for them. The minute the politically correct schoolmarms approach, they head for the woods, where they are free to pick up sticks and pretend they are swords and fight monsters and hunt frogs and swing from trees—anything but to be preached at by people whose sermons consist of high-minded meaninglessness.'

The New York Times' Most Idiotic Attack on Men Ever

Matt · 29 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What do intellectuals have against men?

Back in June 1999, American Psychologist printed "Deconstruction of the Essential Father," asserting that kids don't need a dad. The implication was that children stand just as good a chance of growing up healthy and well-adjusted if raised by one parent, or unmarried parents, or homosexuals, as if raised by their own biological dad and mom in a happy marriage.

...

But Professor Hampikian isn't finished. He reduces the role of men not merely to our raw biological contribution to human reproduction, but even less: the weight of that contribution—in trillionths of grams. "[Y]our father's 3.3 picograms of dna comes out to less than one pound of male contribution since the beginning of Homo sapiens 107 billion babies ago."

Males' combined contribution to humankind throughout history hasn't even amounted one whole pound! Who needs them?

Okay, well, maybe dads work to provide for their kids, read to them, help with homework, play catch, go camping, teach responsibility, give them a sense of values, protect them from dangers in society, help them toughen up and face adulthood—not to mention helping moms shoulder the burdens of parenthood through the years. But what does all that amount to, when you consider that, biologically speaking, they each contributed a measly three picograms of dna?'

Preliminary Findings of ACLU: “Teach Kids, Not Stereotypes” Campaign

Mastodon · 30 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'This report represents the initial findings from the ACLU’s multi-state “Teach Kids, Not Stereotypes” campaign. This initiative was launched in May 2012 to assess the growing trend in public education of separating boys and girls based on discredited science and gender stereotypes, such as the idea that boys are better than girls in math because boys’ brains receive several daily “surges” of testosterone, whereas girls can perform well on tests only a few days per month when they experience “increased estrogen during the menstrual cycle.”

Although our analysis of documents is ongoing with many more programs to be evaluated, our findings thus far demonstrate that many public school districts misapprehend the Department of Education’s 2006 regulations under Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 relating to single-sex classes and have instituted programs based on sex-stereotyped instruction.

As such, the 2006 regulations must be rescinded, the prior regulations must be reinstated, the Department must issue guidance explaining that programs based on stereotypes are impermissible, and the Department’s enforcement efforts must be increased."

'A boy among girls'

Mastodon · 30 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The ACLU, though, says that teaching kids differently on the basis of gender defies Title IX, a portion of the Education Amendments of 1972.

Title IX states: “No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance ...”

I’m going to have to side with the ACLU on this one.

You see, in the late 1970s, I became the first male student to attend an all girls boarding school, the Academy for Girls Too Smart to Study with Boys — an experience that haunts me still.

The school refused to admit me at first, so I filed suit. Since the school accepted public funds, the judge ruled that it had to let me in.

My female classmates harassed me from the beginning. They said I was a wimp. They printed up T-shirts: “152 debutantes and one dork!”

The school’s administrators were out to get me, too. They forced me to follow school regulations to a T.

Do you know how hard it is, wearing a plaid dress and Oxford shoes, to outrun neighborhood bullies?'

Making men sit to pee: A new war on masculinity?

Mastodon · 30 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First you had to put the seat down. Now you have to sit?

A Taiwanese plan that would force men to urinate sitting down, like women, for the sake of “hygiene” is not going down well with the chaps.

Stephen Shen (yes, a man), minister of Taiwan’s Environmental Protection Administration, recently spearheaded a policy that requires men to sit down while they do the deed in government buildings.

“We want to learn from Japan and Sweden,” the administration’s director, Yuan Shaw-jing, told the BBC. “In Japan, we heard 30 per cent of the men sit.”

Earlier this year, Swedish politicians tabled a motion calling for genderless office washrooms with toilets only, nary a urinal in sight. They claim that sitting is cleaner but also helps men empty out their bladders more fully, which is good for the prostate.'

China: 'Left Behind Boys'

Mastodon · 30 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As more boys struggle in schools, educators must address their special learning styles and challenges

Over half of China's primary and secondary educators are women, and female teachers account for an even larger proportion in primary and junior middle schools, according to a recent national survey on teaching staff of primary and secondary schools. The survey, conducted by researchers from Beijing Normal University, revealed that by the end of 2009, women had rose to 52.93 percent of all full-time teachers in primary and middle schools.

The survey report warned that the demographic change of teachers' body, with more females and fewer male teachers, would hamper the growth of male students and cause a loss of masculinity and self-confidence in them. Such a finding rekindles people's interest in the so-called "boys crisis": Boys are struggling more than girls in school while becoming intellectually and physically weaker. This topic has attracted extensive attention from the country's educational community for years.'

Men´s Congress in Germany, September 21st - 22nd

Matt · 30 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

"Men´s Congress in Germany, September 21st - 22nd: Divorce Hurts - Separation Through The Eyes Of The Fathers And The Children"

Translated page here. Excerpt:

'The Congress of 2012, the men in the sciences hitherto neglected consequences of separation and divorce for men and children - come to the fore - especially from the perspective of affected fathers and boys. Relations are of fundamental importance for all people. The quality of interaction between men and women as well as by parents and their children is of paramount importance. It affects personal health and quality of life as well as the social climate. Separations and goodbyes are inevitable biographical turning points on the one hand, they can also highlight the extent necessary maturation steps. However, relationships are separated by conflicting or even traumatic conditions that often leads to all stakeholders painful shock of their life structure.'

F&F: It’s Your Story and We Want to Tell It

Matt · 30 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Can you tell your story one more time? Will you share your story about how the family courts have kept you from your children? From your grandchildren? From your parents? Will you speak out about how your rights, your children’s rights, or your parents’ rights have been trampled?

I am sure you have told your story many times; how the family courts have disrupted you and your family. You have told it many times to judges and the people in the systems that are supposed to be helping you and your family. You have told it to friends who still have trouble believing this happens in the United States.

This time, Fathers and Families has a reason for you to tell it. This time, we want to gather your voice with the voices of many other fathers, mothers, grandparents and children of divorced or separated parents. This time we want to tell our legislators what they are doing to our children and families.'

Today's version of "Let Them Eat Cake"

Matt · 30 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Read it here. Not to start a discussion regarding work ethics or class, or how one gets to where they are in life (though this particular little gem seemed to have inherited much of her wealth from, you guessed it, her dad). I am just pointing out that one of the assertions made by feminists in the 1970s was that when women controlled more wealth and made more decisions in business, etc., the world would inevitably become a fairer, more just and peaceful place. Has it? Has all the progress women have made in making and controlling wealth had this effect? Google the phrase "women control most of the wealth" and you'll see all manner of stats. This site asserts women in the US control a whopping 75% of the wealth. So are we a more equitable and socially just society than we were, say, 40 years ago? Excerpt:

'"There is no monopoly on becoming a millionaire," she writes. "If you're jealous of those with more money, don't just sit there and complain. Do something to make more money yourself - spend less time drinking, or smoking and socializing and more time working."
...
"The lessons are the same," she writes. "You can't get rich without working hard, taking risks, investing and reinvesting your profits."

Of course, as Rinehart knows, you can also become very rich from inheriting and expanding your father's company.'

Is Infant Circumcision a Violation of Human Rights?

Mastodon · 31 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thus, the new academy statement stirs the waters in which already swim a variety of cultural practices, personal beliefs and religious arguments for circumcision, as well as a large number of anti-circumcision groups advocating the opposite position. Add to the mix the occasional lawsuit against doctors, hospitals and/or parents who circumcised an infant believing it was in the best interest of the child. A lawyer in Atlanta specializes in malpractice cases involving botched circumcisions (including the Kentucky man who woke up finding his entire penis removed), and doctors in several cities specialize in cosmetic adult circumcisions and even re-circumcisions.

The human rights issue emerges out of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights adopted by the United Nations in 1948, which proclaims that everyone has certain basic rights that supersede local laws, religious practice and cultural traditions. These rights include the right to life, liberty and security of person.

This declaration raises the thorny question of whether the decision to permanently alter one's body belongs only to that individual. It is a question not likely to go away. An international symposium will debate the matter in Helsinki in September, and the debate elsewhere will surely continue.'

‘Intactivists’ furious at new AAP circumcision policy

Mastodon · 31 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the days since the American Academy of Pediatrics issued a major new statement of support for circumcision, the response from opponents has reached a furious level. So angry are opponents to the procedure, sometimes called “intactivists,” that their response may be remembered as much as the pediatricians’ advice.

The AAP update of its formerly neutral stance concluded that new medical evidence suggests the procedure can be medically beneficial, especially in preventing future sexually transmitted diseases. It, however, stopped short of recommending the procedure, saying the decision should be left to individual parents.'

Nurse who stabbed her four-year-old girl to death is jailed for 12 years

Matt · 31 August 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A nurse who stabbed her four-year-old daughter to death before turning the knife on herself after being caught leaking patient details has been jailed for 12 years.

Dawn Makin, 35, who is now confined to a wheelchair by the injuries she inflicted on herself in the suicide attempt, was in a ‘spiral of descent into despair’ leading up to the killing, a court heard.

The nurse of 15 years had lost her job after being unmasked as a ‘mole’ for feeding confidential data about patients to her boyfriend who worked for a personal injuries company.'

Hanna Rosin dedicated her book 'The End of Men' to her son

Mastodon · 1 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Hanna Rosin wants you to know that her 9-year-old son, Jacob, questions the title of her book, too. "He sends me notes that say 'only bullies write books called The End of Men," Rosin says, ruefully. She's explained that she didn't actually choose that title--it was coined by an editor at The Atlantic when Rosin wrote a cover story two years ago about how women are gaining on men in almost everything. But while she tried to think of an alternative when that piece grew into a book, nothing else summed up this moment of transition nearly as well. So The End of Men and the Rise of Women is dedicated to Jacob, "with apologies."

Dependent feminism is bankrupting our country

Mastodon · 1 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'As a woman who has managed businesses, when I look at Sandra Fluke and the Obama campaign railing against the so-called "Republican war on women," it reminds me of my naive college days.

Dependent feminists taught us to be empowered women, reject the family structure (marriage) and then demand that others pay for our birth control, abortions and child care. Government dependency would replace self-dependency or need of family/husbands. This "Julia" model has never worked and is bankrupting our society.

President Barack Obama has resorted to micro-pandering to different interest groups to cover up his incompetence in running an executive office. He has never held a job where he had to make payroll or balance a budget. He is just another man who promises big and doesn't deliver. According to polls, it is naive single women, falling for someone for the wrong reasons.

I would like to encourage my younger counterparts, when looking for someone to fill any position (job, husband or president), to look at their honesty, dependability and performance. Obama's record is one of incompetence. Remember, when we demand that others provide for us, we are not standing up for our rights as women, but acting like little girls.'

N.H. woman arrested 4 times in 26 hours for loud music, assault

Matt · 1 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Arrested and released three times in 24 hrs. Would a man be arrested and released three times in 24 hours? Finally after she shows herself to be physically dangerous to another person, they keep her in jail but instead of treating her like they would a male prisoner, they remand her for a psych evaluation. Tell me, do men get the same consideration under the same circumstances? Excerpt:

'Joyce Coffey of Epping, N.H., just didn't seem to get it -- or care -- when she was arrested four times in 26 hours earlier this week. The police run-ins stemmed from loud AC/DC and Guns N' Roses music police said could be heard blasting from her house as well as Coffey allegedly throwing a frying pan at her nephew.
...
Coffey was then released on $1,000 bail, but a mere four hours later, after yet another loud music complaint, the police returned at 1:10 a.m. Wednesday.

She was at this point arrested for a third time -- and released a short time later on $10,000 bail.

Police said they heard AC/DC's "Highway to Hell" as well as music by the group Guns N' Roses coming from Coffey's home during their first four visits, reported WMUR.

The final call to Coffey's home was for a report of a domestic disturbance. Police said Coffey's nephew alleged she threw a frying pan at him, hitting him in the head, when he tried to get some of his belongings from her house.

She was arrested a fourth, and on Thursday a judge ordered her to undergo a mental health evaluation.'

ICE chief of staff resigns amid misconduct claims mens_issues · 1 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON - A senior Obama administration political appointee and longtime aide to Homeland Security Secretary Janet Napolitano resigned Saturday amid allegations of inappropriate sexual behavior lodged by at least three Immigration and Customs Enforcement employees.

Suzanne Barr, chief of staff to ICE Director John Morton, said in her resignation letter that the allegations against her are "unfounded." But she said she was stepping down anyway to end distractions within the agency. ICE, a division of the Homeland Security Department, confirmed Barr had resigned. The Associated Press obtained a copy of Barr's letter.

Barr is accused of sexually inappropriate behavior toward employees. The complaints are related to a sexual discrimination and retaliation lawsuit filed by a senior ICE agent in May.

In her letter to Morton, Barr said she has been the subject of "unfounded allegations designed to destroy my reputation" and is resigning "with great regret."'

Humanistic Judaism Increasingly Critical of Child Circumcision

Matt · 2 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Humanistic Jewish movement is a quickly growing denomination in Judaism and the furthest from practicing circumcision. The movement contains over 30,000 members and has over 50 active synagogues in the United States and Israel. There are a variety of active Humanistic Jewish journals and a group of thriving associations and communities connected to the movement. The focus of Jewish Humanism is on Judaic culture and society while embracing Humanistic ethics.

Most of the official Humanistic Jewish organizations do not distinguish between bris shalom (welcoming ceremony without circumcision) and hospital circucmcision, but there is a growing tendency to oppose circumcision altogether in favor of the new peaceful welcoming ceremonies. Humanistic Rabbis do not perform ceremonies in conjunction with circumcision. All Humanistic Jewish Rabbis officiate at peaceful welcoming and naming ceremonies such as Brit Shalom, Brit Chyam, and Brit B'lee Milah (covenant without cutting). Many Humanistic Rabbis are listed as celebrants of Brit Shalom and Brit B'lee Milah naming ceremonies that exclude circumcision.'

Op-ed: Follow Germany's lead on circumcision

Matt · 2 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'About two months ago a German court ruled that circumcisions for religious reasons constitute illegal bodily harm to newborn babies and that the "fundamental right of the child to bodily integrity outweighed the fundamental rights of the parents."

Beyond the knee-jerk responses accusing the Germans of anti-Semitism, the latest developments obligate us to reexamine the bris (circumcision ritual).

It is time to replace the fear and ignorance surrounding the subject - due to its religious-traditional roots and due to the fact that it has become the norm – with educated dialogue that will bring about cultural progress.'

Eva Longoria Plans To Open Women-Only Steakhouse

Mastodon · 2 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Eva Longoria has reportedly decided to open up an upscale steakhouse in Las Vegas on New Year's Eve - but it's for ladies only.
...
The Desperate Housewives star is, according to folks at Perez Hilton, apparently geared up to open a women-only steakhouse in Las Vegas, so that women can give into their secret cravings for delicious meat WITHOUT the judging eyes of their male companions upon them.
...
Pardon? Is that genuinely a thing that women are worried about when tucking into a juicy plate of peppered steak?
...
The man-ban restaurant is set to focus on a 1920s theme, complete with sexy female performers a la Cirque du Soleil. Sounds classy!

What do you think of single-sex restaurants?'

New Zealand: 'Men's Ministry' launched at Parliament

Mastodon · 2 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new ministry was launched at Parliament this afternoon but it wasn't sanctioned by the Government and few people turned up for the occasion.

Five pro-men's rights activists launched the makeshift 'Ministry of Men's Affairs' in a bid to raise awareness of a number of men-specific issues.

The group's spokesperson Hans Laven says high male suicide rates and high employment deaths are not being addressed by the Government.

After hounding Members of Parliament about the issues and getting no response, Mr Laven says he decided to make his own unofficial Government department.'

'Penis-Sucking Mohels Fight City's "Evil Decree" To Inform Parents About Circumcision Ritual'

Mastodon · 2 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite the fact that at least 11 NYC boys have been infected with herpes from herpes-infested mohels who have insisted on performing the ancient circumcision ritual "metzitzah b'peh," ultra-Orthodox leaders are fighting the Health Department's "evil plans" to mandate parental-consent forms before performing the procedure. About 200 rabbis signed a proclamation claiming the city "printed and spread lies...in order to justify their evil decree. It is clear to us, that there is not even an iota of blame or danger in this ancient and holy custom," the letter states. Except for those 11 boys with herpes. And the two who died from it.

"Metzitzah b'peh" is the practice of sucking the blood from a just snipped foreskin in traditional Jewish circumcisions. Most modern mohels use a sterile pipette to do so, but some Orthodox parents insist on the ancient tradition. The city will vote next week whether mohels will have to distribute consent waivers, detailing the herpes risk, before the ritual.'

A political war on women? No, a secret war on men

Mastodon · 2 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. (MarketWatch) — No war on women? But politicians and political pundits think so. They're clueless. Women get it. But men are blind: In today's America the real war is a war on men. Men against men. And they're losing badly, getting hostile, lashing out, creating market uncertainty, unpredictability, volatility.

Yes, men are outnumbered, outwitted, and clueless, unaware they're now their own worst enemy, sabotaging themselves, acting super macho, lashing out against strawmen and ghosts, fighting a war they cannot win. Follow me with a new mind-set: Put on a new pair of psychological glasses, think like a behavioral scientist, see with the eyes of a rational investor, tune out the political noise. You'll see what's really going on.

Men are losing this war on men. That will change everything for investors, markets, banking, retirement, taxes, fiscal, monetary policy, elections. Why? Because women think very different from the outdated "old guys rule" politics driving America for too long. We know women are more rational as investors, as corporate directors, military thinkers, CEOs and long-term strategic planners, but men can't admit it.
...
Listen closely: You are witnessing a massive, widespread turning point from an earlier war on women to a new cultural war on men by men, a historic shift that has been unfolding behind the scenes since 1972 when President Richard Nixon signed Title IX: The Equal Opportunity in Education Act.'

Peru: woman severs cheating boyfriend's penis

Minuteman · 3 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A woman who discovered her boyfriend had been cheating on her sliced off his penis with a kitchen knife and tossed it down the toilet as he slept, local media has reported.

Julia Munoz Huaman, 41, confessed she emasculated her companion Ramon Arias, 46, in a jealous rage.
...
Security guards nabbed the woman and detained her as Arias wailed in pain.'

Facebook Campaign Protests AAP Circumcision Policy

Matt · 3 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even as the world abandons the unethical practice of infant male circumcision, the American Academy of Pediatrics recently revised its policy statement to more strongly recommend it. In response to this step backwards, people of conscience all over the world have been protesting the AAP's misguided decision by posting on Facebook photographs of themselves with the words "AAP" on one hand and "No Ethics" on the other.

As a proud Jew and an opponent of infant male circumcision, I wanted to join this protest in a meaningful way. It is my belief that a deep concern for ethics lies at the core of the Jewish tradition and it is this concern, along with the ability to adapt to new information, that gives meaning and relevance to my heritage in the 21st century.

The AAP, who as recently as 2010 embarrassed themselves by recommending that physicians offer their patients a form of female genital cutting, find themselves on the wrong side of history once again. Their task force report is an insult to both reason and science and has destroyed what little credibility they may have had left on the subject.'

Outlawing Circumcision

Matt · 4 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Published May, 2011, but a very good read. Excerpt:

'The subject of circumcision is often relegated to the realm of jokes and cheeky double-entendres, but a San Francisco ballot initiative now gaining momentum would ban the practice, and it raises some very serious issues. At the heart of the current controversy are three fundamental questions. First, is circumcising an infant wrong? Second, should infant circumcision be against the law? And third, would banning circumcision infringe on the rights of those who practice it as part of their religions?

The answer to the first question is relatively straightforward. Though practiced by Jews for thousands of years and more recently adopted in the United States for its purported health benefits, infant circumcision is an ethically problematic act. By surgically removing the most sensitive part of the penis, we permanently alter a person's sexual experience and we do so without their consent. The argument that we ought to circumcise babies for health reasons is very weak. Consider an analogous situation: If all women had one breast surgically removed, we could probably reduce the incidence of breast cancer in this country. This is clearly not a sufficient reason to implement such a drastic measure and neither are the claimed health benefits of circumcision.'

The National Consensus on the Mutilation of Every Newborn Male

Matt · 4 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt;

'(TEL AVIV Ha'aretz) - The main element at play regarding circumcision is the majority rule. This rule can only be broken by regulation from above. Not from heaven, which is too far from our reach, but from the governing power - a leader with inspiration who isn't afraid of breaking consensus and slaughtering (pardon the disgusting expression) holy cows. It's an irony of fate that the Germans, of all people, are calling us to order in Jewish matters. It's an irony of fate that they are the ones telling us the religious precept, which even complete heretics among us keep without blinking an eye, is a barbaric, primitive act, not to say a violation of the law.
...
If we think rationally for one moment, why should the Germans - and the Swiss who followed their lead, or any other Western state - allow a Jewish rabbi to perform a surgical act forbidden to anyone else who isn't a doctor? What chutzpah on our part to ask for ourselves a privilege that is a blatant infraction of the law, which is intended to protect people from various charlatans. This whole affair, triggered by a court somewhere in the federal republic following a circumciser's severe failure, forces us to face one of the most peculiar occurrences in Israeli life. No other state in the world, perhaps, displays such extreme polarity between outrageous clericalism and defiant secularism. Yet the one thing uniting everyone here, almost with no cracks in the wall, is the national consensus for the mutilation (whose benefit to health is questionable) of every newborn male.'

SAVE: Tell Sen. Scott Brown of Massachusetts that S. 1925 is Biased and Unfair

Matt · 4 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

In the last few days Senator Scott Brown of Massachusetts has seen fit to publicize his support to S. 1925, the VAWA reauthorization bill which passed the Senate on April 26. SAVE has reviewed S. 1925, and notes the bill ignores the problem of female-initiated abuse, has the potential to inflict harm on the falsely accused, and comes within a whisper of unconstitutionality.

In general, Scott Brown has been a fair-minded senator. He now finds himself in a tight race against Elizabeth Warren who has repeatedly played the gender card.

Contact Senator Brown and tell him that much of Domestic Violence is initiated by women, that false accusations are rampant and destructive, and that S. 1925 is flatly unfair.

The senator can be reached by phone at 1-202-228-2643, or fax at 1-202-228-2646.

Thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Australia: Homeless fathers missing out on support: report

Matt · 4 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Federal Government has acknowledged it needs to provide better support services for single fathers who are homeless.

A government-funded study has found services specific to fathers need to be set up because emergency accommodation or other help is currently targeted at mothers.

The study shows homeless fathers often lose contact with their children because of a lack of emergency accommodation for single fathers, as well as safe places to see their children.

It also found that when fathers lose their connection with their children, their health and wellbeing suffers.'

Circumcision practice is not natural

Mastodon · 5 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'The recent German court ruling and controversy about circumcision has stirred up my thoughts like an intellectual coffee-spoon, and the conclusion I've come to is slightly jolting. Just what sort of an ice-blooded culture welcomes newborns to the world with a wrenching mutilation? Those scissors snap a cutting message: "Kill or be killed, and keep fearful distance from women, nature, and love."

Having myself been spared by a local doctor, I know that area to be of immense sensual and emotional significance, as Europe's scientists have established. Here, the ancient madness breaks as slowly as the melting glaciers that likewise indicate mainstream America has become estranged from mother nature, and she smolders with imploring reproach, scolding that we should move closer to her.'

N.Y. Rabbis Will Defy Law On Ancient Circumcision Ritual

Mastodon · 5 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even after the deaths of two children and the injuries of many more, a group of ultra-Orthodox rabbis say that if a proposed law requiring parental consent for an ancient circumcision ritual is enacted they will defy it.

In the ancient "metzitzah b'peh" ritual, a "mohel" or a Jewish person, usually a doctor or rabbi, trained in the practice circumcision removes the foreskin and draws blood from the circumcised penis with his mouth.

The New York City Department of Health and Mental Hygiene said in a statement that at least 11 infants in New York are believed to have contracted herpes from the practice, including two of whom died and two of whom have irreversible brain damage.'

Is Circumcision a Viable Option to Prevent HIV Infection?

Mastodon · 5 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recent research has shown a direct link between male circumcision and reduced HIV transmission, generating growing interest in high-risk communities, especially in Africa, which has been hit hard by the HIV epidemic. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton even praised a campaign to circumcise adult male Africans as a preventative measure for HIV in her opening speech last month for the 2012 International AIDS Conference in Washington, D.C.

...

As part of the growing anti-circumcision movement, some healthcare workers have made efforts to educate people about the practice. In the mid-1980s, healthcare professionals in San Francisco founded the National Organization of Circumcision Information Resource Centers to provide information about the pros and cons of circumcision. This organization upholds the Declaration of the First International Symposium on Circumcision.

Part of this declaration, issued in 1989, states, "Parents and/or guardians do not have the right to consent to the surgical removal or modification of their children's normal genitalia."

...

While circumcision may reduce the risk for certain sexual acts, is it worth having the procedure? With the increased attention around circumcision as an option for disease prevention, hopefully future clinical trials will address this question for the MSM population in the United States. For now, the question remains unanswered and the controversy continues.'

Ireland: Increase in number of men seeking assistance from domestic violence charity (named) Amen

Mastodon · 5 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There has been a significant increase in the first half of this year of men seeking assistance from Amen, a charity that supports victims of domestic violence.

Amen director Eugene Wogan said there has been a 34% increase in the number of callers to its helpline between January and June this year.

The annual report recorded a slight decrease in the number of men seeking assistance in 2011 compared to 2010.

Last year, the Navan-based charity recorded a total of 4,303 contacts from men wishing to discuss abuse by their wife or partner. This was down from 4,683 in 2010.'

DNC Convention, night 1

Matt · 5 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Simply too much to comment on in full. Best to Google for transcripts. I can just mention a few things: Mrs. Obama delivered a finger-wag about what a man really is when she described her MS-stricken father as still going out to work so she could be sent to college. I.e., a real man ignores his health and well-being so his daughter can work later to curb the educational and other opportunities of people like him (i.e., men).

Constant rebukes regarding abortion, with the NARAL president saying people without knowledge of what it's like to have a woman's body shouldn't be making any decisions about it (implication: male lawmakers should have no say in laws around abortion). No mention of course about the fact that maybe, just maybe, men should also have reproductive rights too. Not a peep from either Dems or Reps. Dare I dream?

And of course, the wage gap myth was trotted out repeatedly by multiple speakers.

Until now I have been reluctant to go along with the suggestion that the Democrat party has in essence become "the feminist party". That is because political parties go through phases, like fads, and just because a party veers this or that way for a few years doesn't mean it has assuredly changed course for the foreseeable future. But after tonight, I see the time has come for me to change my opinion.

The GOP can hardly be considered, however, a "men's party", by any means. Clearly they are substantially less hostile to men ideologically but as for support or acknowledgement of men's/fathers' issues, they are still not there. So guys, no news here: we're still on our own.

Former 'Teacher Of The Year' charged with sexual assault

Mastodon · 5 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What a difference a year makes.

Erica DePalo, 33, won the Essex County, N.J. Teacher of the Year award in 2011. Last Friday, she was arrested and accused of having a sexual relationship with one of her 15-year-old honors English students, according to CBS New York.

Many of the students that the station spoke with were blindsided by the allegations.

“I was kind of shocked,” Arnold Ajondo said. ”I was a little surprised. She was really close with the students and we all liked her. She was always there after school if you ever needed any help.”

DePalo was charged with first-degree aggravated sexual assault, second-degree sexual assault and endangering the welfare of a child, according to the Star Ledger.'

"Family of Men" DV victims support society site

Matt · 5 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Just learned about this web site: http://www.familyofmen.com/ and wanted to pass it along to MANN readers. Looks like great stuff! From their About page:

'For more than 10 years the Family of Men has operated a telephone crisis line.

The daily averages of callers are 2 per day.

Of the 1200 callers per year (2001) 22% are from women. Of the 22% women callers approximately 25% are from mothers who's sons are in a violent domestic situation and they are concerned not only for their son's safety but also the safety of their grandchildren. An additional 25% are from, what I call the 2nd wives club, women who are married to a man with a vindictive 1st wife and their life is in total distress due to the situation. The remaining 50% consists of sisters, girlfriends and female friends who are concerned for a male in their life.

A typical male caller is between the ages of 24 and 54 years of age. These men are mostly working fulltime in a secure job or a part time in a seasonal job, a small percentage are homeless and without work looking for a place to live. Most likely, 62%, the men are in a relationship that is unstable or are separated/divorced. It is noted that 83% of the men with children their main concern is the fact that they are paying child support, usually 30% of their income, and are unable to see their children. These fathers want to take an active part in their children's lives but are unable to do so. These men are usually feeling anxious or depressed and are feeling very isolated because no one is listening to their story.'

Police: Mother Forces 10-Year-Old Boy To Rob Home

Matt · 5 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LYNNWOOD, Wash. (CBS Seattle) — Lynnwood police say a mother used her 10-year-old boy to rob a home.

Police tell KOMO-TV that Marie Shafique, 33, made her son climb through an open window, but didn't know that she was being watched by neighbors and the house's security camera.

Michelle Geronimo was inside of her home when the child tried to break in. She told the station that the boy was "peering inside" her open window.'

'Queen of Cocaine' killed in Colombia

Matt · 5 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

And all this time I thought it was only men who did such evil! Silly me! Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- An elderly woman who was known as Colombia's "Queen of Cocaine" was gunned down in the northwestern city of Medellin, police said Tuesday.

Griselda Blanco, 69, was killed by two bullets at close range -- a violent end not unlike the ones that authorities say she ordered during her prime in the 1970s and 1980s.
...
Blanco, also known as "the godmother" and "mafia's mother," gained notoriety in the 1970s and '80s when, authorities say, she was responsible for shipping multi-ton shipments of cocaine from Colombia to Miami. She was also the mastermind, investigators say, of countless murders. She was also linked to drug lord Pablo Escobar.'

SAVE: Tell the Dept of Ed to Rescind their Flawed Sexual Assault Policy

Matt · 5 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Students returning to campuses are facing the curtailment of student civil rights, thanks to a 2011 U.S. Department of Education (DED) sex assault mandate. Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is calling on the federal agency to retract the Directive, and restore due process to campuses across the nation.

Under the policy, rather than the usual "reasonable doubt" standard used in courts of law, colleges are now mandated to use the 50.1% "preponderance of evidence" standard when adjudicating claims of sexual assault.

Release of the Directive has resulted in a number of high-profile debacles across the country: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/sex-assault/civil-liberties-took-a-beating/

SAVE wants to stop the Directive from inviting false allegations, which harm the credibility of true victims and dissipate needed services for victims.

Help us convince the DED to rescind the Directive. Sign the petition: http://www.change.org/petitions/accused-tell-the-ded-to-repeal-its-outrageous-sex-assault-directive or write to Secretary of Education Arne Duncan: arne.duncan-at-ed.gov.

Thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Fact check: Opening night of the DNC

Matt · 5 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Nice to see some part of the MSM calling the wage gap tripe, etc., for what it is. Nice to see some gumption from them. Article here. Excerpt:

'CHARLOTTE, N.C. — We heard a number of dubious or misleading claims on the first night of the Democratic National Convention:

...

Two advocates of equal-pay legislation said women make 77 cents for every dollar men earn. That's true on average, but the gap for women doing the same work as men is much less, and not entirely or even mostly the result of job discrimination.

...

Making a pitch for "equal pay for equal work," Rep. Rosa DeLauro of Connecticut said "America's women still make just 77 cents for every dollar men earn." And the equal-pay crusader Lilly Ledbetter used the same figure and added: "[W]hen we lose 23 cents every hour, every day, every paycheck, every job, over the entire lives, what we lose cannot be measured in dollars."

But that oft-cited 77-cent statistic exaggerates the actual gap between women and men doing the same work.

As we noted back in June, the most recent Census figures show that in 2010, "the earnings of women who worked full time, year-round were 77% of that for men working full time, year-round." But that's the median (midpoint) for all women in all jobs, not for women doing "the same work" or even necessarily working the same number of hours.'

Convention speaker lineups show both parties want women vote

Matt · 5 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Gosh, it's like men don't even vote! One day, dunno when, some pol is going to wake up and realize that there is this huge bloc of voters known as... men... and that we have interests and goals that indeed, should start getting attention. Til then, guess we're in for all-women, all-the-time from both major parties and the MSM. Article here. Excerpt:

'Both presidential campaigns say their female-heavy convention speaker rolls are about underscoring that women's issues are America's issues. However, the female-centric messages also speak to the parties' battle over the deeply coveted female voting bloc.

"It's aimed at a specific group of voters that both parties need," Jennifer Duffy, senior editor at the Cook Political Report said. "This whole argument is aimed at appealing to this group and keeping them in the fold."
...

"At this time the Democratic Party is the only party for women because of the controversial stance the Republican Party has taken," said Alabama delegate Susan Brown.

Not to be outdone, the first full day of last week's RNC was also heavy with female speakers including congressional candidate Mia Love of Utah, Rep. Cathy McMorris Rodgers of Washington, Sen. Kelly Ayotte of New Hampshire and Govs. Mary Fallin of Oklahoma and Nikki Haley of South Carolina. New Mexico Gov. Susana Martinez and former Secretary of State Condoleeza Rice had prime-time speaking spots later that week.'

Expanding the debate around circumcision

Matt · 5 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In response to the ruling, some Jews and Muslims who practice circumcision for religious reasons have protested vehemently. Subsequently, German politicians pledged to pass a law to protect ritual circumcision of young boys. Israeli Chief Rabbi Yona Metzger even traveled to Berlin to defend Jewish circumcisions, and a complaint against a Bavarian rabbi for performing circumcisions drew the anger of the Anti-Defamation League. The legal and cultural dilemma inherent in the issue makes prompt resolution unlikely.

Most of Germany (and the world) does not circumcise. It is instinctively viewed as harmful. Here's why:

— Studies show that circumcision causes significant pain and trauma based on various physiological and behavioral changes. Sometimes infants do not cry because they are in traumatic shock. Other effects can include disrupted bonding between parent and child and risk of surgical complications.

— Imagine yourself being forcefully restrained and having a part of your genitals cut off. Anyone would be traumatized. Studies confirm that infants feel pain more than adults. If you have any doubt about the advisability of circumcision, watch a video of one and trust your feelings.
...
Considering the harm, why do some parents feel so strongly about circumcising their sons? Religion (or tradition) is often the expressed reason to circumcise. However, the psychological effects of circumcision trauma play a prominent and unrecognized role in perpetuating the practice. In the U.S., circumcised fathers are about four times more likely to want their sons circumcised (for nonreligious reasons) than fathers who are not circumcised.'

Boys Excluded from Sally Ride and ExxonMobil Science Festival

Mastodon · 6 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BATON ROUGE, LA. — Middle school science teachers should expect a surge of student enthusiasm this fall when the Sally Ride Science Festival makes its way Louisiana State University on September 22nd, 2012.

Presented by ExxonMobil, the festival for 5th to 8th grade girls features hands-on workshops, guest speakers, and a street fair complete with food, booths and music. This will be the third festival Sally Ride Science has hosted at the Baton Rouge campus, and the renowned science education company is expecting hundreds of girls, teachers and parents to attend.

“ExxonMobil is proud to offer the Sally Ride Science Festival again this year,” said ExxonMobil Baton Rouge Polyolefins Plant Manager Angela Zeringue. “It’s important that we show girls in our local community how exciting a career in math and science can be. There will be many role models for the girls to learn from at the event, and we hope that some will be inspired to pursue careers in STEM fields. This is workforce development, and it is a lot of fun as well!”'

Male educators a rarity in elementary classrooms

Mastodon · 6 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But there aren't very many male elementary school teachers in the Grand Forks area or in the field as a whole, a trend in place for decades.

Many educators would like to see more of a balance. For young boys who don't have a father figure, male instructors can provide a perspective that reaches beyond the books, they said.

Of 12 elementary schools in the Grand Forks Public School District, there are 15 men teaching kindergarten through fifth grade classes, which are the elementary grade levels here, according to the district.

Some elementary schools in Grand Forks don't have male teachers at all.

Statewide, the number of male K-6 classroom teachers has grown from 436 to 451 in the past six years, according to the state Department of Public Instruction. During the same period, the number of female teachers grew from 2,685 to 2,857. The DPI does not break down the data by grade level.'

'Not your mom and dad’s Democratic Party anymore'

Mastodon · 6 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But here’s the bottom line. Aside from the prime time speeches (where they largely put their best face’s forward), the message boils down to a collection of grievances, fear, sob stories — and a celebration of victimhood (only government can save us!).

How may times have we heard something such as, “Barack Obama understands women. Barack Obama cares about women.”

Can you imagine the same thing being said about men?

And while the mainstream media won’t say this, they are overplaying the “woman issue” — taking a very sympathetic argument, and turning it into a negative. Most people believe in equality for women — they do not, however, embrace radical feminism. The Democrats, by pushing this message so aggressively, seem intent on growing the (rarely-discussed) gender-gap problem they already have with men.'

Feminists Today Are Replica of Male Chauvinist Pigs 30 Years Ago

Mastodon · 6 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Women feminists today are an exact replica of male chauvinist pigs 30 years ago because women today think that men are not necessary," she explained. "They are the same as men 30 or 40 years ago saying that women were mindless ninnies."

Feminism today, she described, can be defined as having two foundational issues. One obvious one is abortion. The other one that Passno says is less understood is essentially the rejection of men.

"What the feminist movement has done is it's gone from wanting equality with men to being a movement that doesn't think that men are really necessary at all."
...
Passno doesn't want women today to fall for the rhetoric of feminists – that success means pursuing a career and climbing the corporate ladder; men aren't needed; children are a constraint; and abortion is a choice that women ought to make.'

DNC still pushing wage gap myth

Mastodon · 6 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Good evening, I'm Lilly Ledbetter and I'm here tonight to say: What a difference four years make!
...
The president signed the bill for his grandmother, whose dreams hit the glass ceiling, And for his daughters, so that theirs never will. Because of his leadership, women who faced pay discrimination like I did will now get their day in court.

That was the first step but it can't be the last. Because women still earn just 77 cents for every dollar men make. Those pennies add up to real money. It's real money for the little things like being able to take your kids to the movies and for the big things like sending them to college. It's paying your rent this month and paying the mortgage in the future. It's having savings for the bill you didn't expect and savings for the dignified retirement you've earned.'

Unintended Consequences: The Chemical War on Boys

Mastodon · 6 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the spring of 2011 farm workers near Royal City, Washington, were working in an orchard when a toxic cloud drifted their way from a neighboring farm. Carol Dansereau, executive director of Farm Worker Pesticide Project describes what happened next:

Within minutes they were experiencing the pain and terror of acute poisoning: vomiting, abdominal cramps, dizziness, headaches, weak muscles, numbness, burning hot skin, and other symptoms.

Chlorpyrifos (CPF), the pesticide behind the poisoning, is one of the most common agricultural chemicals. The EPA finally banned it for household use in 2000, but it is still widely used on golf courses, treated wood and in agriculture. It lingers on foods, contaminates drinking water, and poisons the air.

It also lowers IQ, especially in boys. The latest in a string of studies to show chlorpyrifos harms growing brains did not look at farm workers. The 335 children and their mothers were Latino and African Americans from low-income neighborhoods in New York City. Columbia University tracked them from birth.'

J'Acuse: Shame on Germany for Circumcision Ban

Mastodon · 6 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why do countries with long histories of anti-Semitism and other forms of bigotry seem to care more about the so-called rights of young children not to be circumcised than do other countries in the world with far better histories of concern for human rights? The same rhetorical question can be asked of countries, such as Norway, that care so much about the rights of animals not to be slaughtered according to Jewish ritual. These questions are entirely rhetorical because every thinking person knows the answer. It's not because Germans or Norwegians are better people and care more about children and animals than do Americans. It is because they care less about Jews. Or more precisely they care a lot about Jews. They just don't like them very much and don't care if they are forced to leave the country because they cannot practice their religions there.

So let no one praise a nation that murdered a million Jewish babies and children for shedding crocodile tears over the plight of the poor little baby boy who, following a many thousand year old tradition, is circumcised a week after birth. Every good person should condemn Germany for what really lies at the heart of efforts to ban circumcision--old-fashioned anti-Semitism, a term coined by Germans for Germans and against Jews.'

Kathie Lee Gifford put note in sons diaper for his circumcision

Mastodon · 6 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Dear Doctor,

Just take a tad. Please leave me most of what I already had. Life is too short so don't make me that way. So please hold steady and have a nice day."

She noted that the doctor, who has since retired, said in his 40 years of practice he never found another note in a baby's diaper. After Cody's procedure, Kathie Lee had wanted the note back to put in her son's baby book, but the doctor insisted on keeping it. He then framed it and put it on his office wall.

My question is this, what must Cody think? Is he amused or embarrassed that his mother is talking about his penis on morning TV? As if having a note about your circumcision living on the wall of a doctor's office wasn't bad enough.

Would you talk about your son's circumcision in such a public way or do you think that is something best kept private?'

German doctor: Circumcision like piercing ear

Mastodon · 6 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The president of the German Association of Pediatricians was quoted Sunday by the Frankfurter Sonntagszeitung as comparing circumcision to "drilling a hole in the ear of a child and causing physical damage."

On Friday, a district court in Berlin was asked to rule in a unique case in Germany, in which parents of a three-year-old girl demanded compensation from a piercing studio on the grounds that their child was traumatized and had complained of pain in the days after her ears were pierced.

...

"A hole in a child's ear causes irreversible damage, just like circumcision is an irreversible act," said Hartmann, adding that "circumcision is obviously a violation of utmost importance."'

Why We Chose Not To Circumcise Our Son

Mastodon · 6 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One question we did not answer until a nurse posed it in the hours after delivery, my newborn baby boy nestled snugly in the bend of my arm, was whether or not our son would be circumcised.

"Absolutely not," my husband replied without a glance in my direction. While my gut instinct was to agree with him, I was caught off guard by his prompt response and the finality with which it was delivered without my input. My mind flashed back to an experience I had long before he and I met, a former boyfriend who was very self-conscious about his uncut penis. It was the only male insight I had into the subject outside of my husband's firm declaration, and I waited until the nurse left to broach the topic. My Husband Wants To Circumcise Our Son... But I Don't

"I think I agree with you about the circumcision, but aren't you worried he might be embarrassed in the locker room if he's different from his friends?" I asked. While the circumcision debate in the parenting community has become as hot-button as those about breastfeeding, co-sleeping and the like, my initial objection wasn't rooted in the ethical nature of the procedure so much as a concern for my son's future comfort in his own skin.'

F&F: Have You Experienced Partner Aggression?

Matt · 7 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A national research project is recruiting men to participate in a study on men's experience with partner aggression. Researchers at Clark University and Bridgewater State University are conducting this study on men who have experienced aggression from their girlfriends, wives, or female partners.

If you are a man between the ages of 18-59 and have experienced aggression from a female partner at some point during your life, you may be eligible to participate in this study. Researchers, Denise A. Hines, Ph.D. and Emily M. Douglas, Ph.D., invite you to follow this link to the study webpage where you can complete the online survey about your experience.'

Report highlights boys in Malta are top low achievers in EU

Mastodon · 7 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One in five 15 year olds, as well as nearly 75 million adults, lack basic reading and writing skills, which makes it hard for them to get a job and increases their risk of poverty and social exclusion.

The high-level group's report highlights a significant gender gap, with 13.3% of low achievers among girls compared with 26.6% for boys. The gender gap is smallest in the Netherlands, Denmark and Belgium, and highest in Malta, Bulgaria and Lithuania (2009 statistics).

...

The 80-page report includes a raft of recommendations, ranging from advice for parents on creating a culture of reading for pleasure with their children, to siting libraries in unconventional settings like shopping centres and the need to attract more male teachers to act as role models for boys, who read much less than girls. It also makes age-specific recommendations, calling for free, high-quality early childhood education and care for all, more specialist reading teachers in primary schools, a change of mind-set on dyslexia, arguing that almost every child can learn to read with the right support, and for more varied learning opportunities for adults, especially in the workplace.'

Feds: Love Triangle Feud Led to False Jet Threat

redwoodwriter · 7 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Man uses airplane bomb threat to "avenge" another man's posting of compromising pictures of his ex-girlfriend on Facebook. When will men stop upholding the "honor" of women? Excerpt:

'A man angry about a compromising Facebook photo of his girlfriend took revenge against the ex-boyfriend who posted it, making a hoax call to police that set off a terrorism scare and got the former beau taken off an airliner at gunpoint, authorities say.

The new boyfriend, Kenneth W. Smith Jr., was arrested Friday on charges of making a false threat to Philadelphia police, who recalled a Dallas-bound flight and marched the ex-beau, Christopher Shell, off the plane Thursday.

The episode led to Shell's own arrest on drug warrants after he finally reached Texas to celebrate his 29th birthday.'

More men in early childhood education sector 'could lift quality'

Mastodon · 7 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More men in the early childhood education sector would not only bring a range of benefits for children, but could also lift the quality of early childhood education, improve staff dynamics and encourage fathers to become more involved with their child's education, a new survey shows.

A more diverse workforce, with men represented as well as women, is seen as being necessary to expand the quality of early childhood education for children and bring different viewpoints and ways of working to the ECE profession and the sector.

The ChildForum Early Childhood Network survey questioned hundreds of people involved with early childhood education services and teacher educators about whether they would like to see more men in the workplace and what benefits or disadvantages that could bring.'

Share of Men in Labor Force at All-Time Low

Mastodon · 7 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Just 69.8 percent of all men over age 16 were in the labor force in August, compared to a long-term average of 78.3 percent since the Labor Department began tracking these data in 1948. The share has been falling pretty steadily over the last six decades but has declined sharply in the last few years.
...
For example, a lot of traditionally male jobs, in industries like manufacturing and construction, have disappeared, and many of the men who were displaced gave up looking for work when they couldn't find similar jobs.'

Relatedly (and ironically), Secretary Hilda Solis attends 'Women in the Workforce' discussion. Excerpt:

'During the event Solis spoke about the Department of Labor's efforts to stamp out gender-based pay discrimination as well as other efforts to make sure women have access to the skills and training they need to succeed and provide a better life and more prosperous future for them and their families.'

Police: Angry Ex-Girlfriend Triggered US Airways Bomb Hoax

Matt · 7 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A bomb hoax in Philadelphia that turned a Dallas-bound flight around and led to a full-scale SWAT response was apparently triggered by a spiteful ex-girlfriend who telephoned authorities to say her former beau was aboard the US Air flight armed with liquid explosives, police told ABC News.

According to authorities, Christopher Shell, a salesman in his 20's who travels between Philadelphia and Dallas, had no explosives and is cooperating with authorities. He appears to have been the victim of a cruel joke.

When asked how Shell reacted when police took him off the plane, Philadelphia Police Chief Inspector Joseph Sullivan said at a news conference, "He was obviously very alarmed as I would be if heavily armed police entered a plane to take me off...he was certainly stunned."'

Judge wants woman's accusations against Jefferson man investigated

Matt · 7 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Stroy here. Excerpt:

'Suspicious that a woman concocted a tale of being threatened at gunpoint by her ex-boyfriend, a state Superior Court judge in Morristown has suggested that police and the Morris County Prosecutor's Office investigate the woman's claim of being victimized.

"I'm going to reiterate: It appears you have grossly misused the domestic violence law," Family Division Judge Thomas J. Critchley Jr. told Melanie Pilcher, 44, at a hearing in August.

"It's foolishness what you've done and the banner under which you've marched. It's on its face absurd some of the things you've been saying." the judge said.

The current obstacle for the man Pilcher has accused — Jefferson resident Robert A. Mertrud, 55 — is that he remains criminally charged with aggravated assault, terroristic threats and possession of a weapon for an unlawful purpose, a charge that alone carries a punishment of up to 10 years in prison upon conviction.'

"Democratic women, feminists rally at Democratic National Convention"

Mastodon · 8 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Emily's List president Stephanie Schriock says that in 2008 about 10 million more women than men voted in the historic presidential election the propelled Barack Obama into the White House.

Now Schriok and the group that promotes Democratic women candidates across the county hopes that the women's vote will help Obama win another term.

"We're going to make sure that happens again," Schriock told me while at a reception at the Democratic National Convention given by the National Women's Political Caucus. "It's going to be great. We can do it."

The reception, at an uptown bar in Charlotte, featured fiery speeches by veterans of the feminist movement. They claimed that Republicans were waging a war against women and reproductive rights and would fail.

Republicans dismissed this notion and contend their conservative, pro jobs agenda is better for all Americans, including women.

Democrats disagree.'

Berlin declares circumcision legal, but only if performed by a doctor — not as a ritual

Matt · 8 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'JTA — One of Germany's 16 states has declared circumcision legal, but only if performed by doctors — not, as required by Jewish law, by mohels.

Berlin, Germany's capital and itself a state, is the first to declare the practice legal following a Cologne court ruling in June that non-medical circumcisions on children amounted to a criminal offense, according to DPA, a German news wire. National legislation is pending to legalize circumcision.

State Justice Minister Thomas Heilmann made the announcement Wednesday, saying he felt it necessary to allay fears in this "difficult transitional period," the Associated Press reported.

The Berlin state has authorized only doctors, and not mohels, to perform circumcisions. National legislation could authorize mohels. The state also required that parents be informed of the procedure's medical risks before consenting, and that doctors do everything possible during the procedure to reduce pain and limit bleeding.'

"Patriot Voices" daclares "Moms Know Best"

Matt · 9 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Read it here. Pandering knows no political ideology or moral limits. There doesn't seem to be a contact page but there is a Facebook account for them here. Excerpt:

'Patriot Voices has released a survey by The Tarrance Group that listens to the voices of moms through an online survey in five Battleground states – Pennsylvania, Ohio, Wisconsin, Florida, and Virginia. What it found shows that Moms Know Best, and that candidates running for national office this November shouldn't discount the opinions of Moms across these important states. Most acknowledge that they are a key voting block this year, and that although many minds are seemingly made up, this demographic famously make up their minds late, or are often willing to change them.

From September 6 through September 8, we will be sharing additional information about this survey. On Thursday, September 6, we are releasing the scope of the survey and some key findings. On Friday, September 7, we will be sharing the surprising results regarding Moms' feelings on national security issues, and on Saturday, September 8, we will be releasing information on Moms' opinions on oil and energy production, government regulations and Obamacare.'

Letter: Stop circumcision

Matt · 9 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'In any debate, people are entitled to their opinions, but not their own facts. The American Academy of Pediatrics has issued a revised circumcision policy statement that relies on selectively chosen facts to support the alteration of normal male genitalia ("Pediatrician Group Says Pros Outweigh Cons in Circumcision," Aug. 27 news article).

It's important to remember that the AAP has recently made other serious errors in judgment. In 2010, it issued a policy that called for doctors to be allowed to inflict a "ritual nick" on infant girls' genitalia for "cultural" reasons (in contravention of federal law). Under pressure from Intact America and other genital integrity organizations, the AAP rescinded this recommendation.

...

Few people in circumcising cultures question any research that supports their viewpoint -- they want to believe. However, since most males are cut shortly after birth, they have no frame of reference and cannot possibly comprehend what they're missing. The AAP should reconsider all the facts and the fundamental bodily integrity rights of children, or they will be stuck on the wrong side of history.'

Posters in support of men's rights ripped down in Vancouver

Mastodon · 9 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'VANCOUVER (NEWS1130) - There is backlash from both sexes after posters supporting men's rights were ripped down in Vancouver's Commercial Drive neighbourhood.

Some of the posters read "Stop violence against women, but not men, because men don't matter -- despite being more often the victims of violence." Many of the posters have been either taken down or defaced.

News1130 hit the streets to find out what you think about the controversial message. Men and women we spoke with say they should be left up because we don't hear enough about men's rights. They also believe Vancouver is an open-minded city.
...
"You don't hear a lot about [men's rights] and that's the surprising part. It is very surprising that they're being ripped down. Definitely, they should go back up. You see signs up for everything around here and to select which ones we put up and which ones we don't, it's a little bit ridiculous," explains another man.

In a written statement to News1130, the founder of the local men's rights blog MasculisM.ca, which is behind the movement, says he got involved because of his experiences on the Downtown Eastside.'

India: Men oppose sexual harassment Bill, term it anti-male legislation

Mastodon · 9 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Monday, Lok Sabha had passed the Sexual Harassment of Women at Workplace (Prevention, Prohibition and Redressal) Bill, 2010, drafted by Krishna Tirath, minister of women and child development without discussion despite uproar from BJP members.

Right groups raised concerns about passing of the Bill without consulting male representatives.

“There are times when we find that there is unwanted feminine attention which is overwhelming and discomforting. Further worse, pervert social mindsets force male victims to keep quiet,” said Atit, president of Men’s Rights Association, a rights group.

Swarup Sarkar, member of a rights group pointed out that based on presentations made by men’s rights organisations, the parliamentary standing committee on human resources development had also recommended that the law should be made gender-neutral and men should also be provided equal protection.'

Irish Cabs Getting Video Cameras to Prevent False Rape Claims

Mastodon · 9 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Taxi drivers in Derry, Northern Ireland are installing video cameras in the cars. It all started with one driver, who installed a video camera in the cabin after an incident that saw a drunk passenger attempt to take control of the steering wheel. Some time after that, the driver was attacked by another customer, and used the footage in the trial that followed.

However, there's another reason behind the aforementioned move. In 2011, there was at least one rape accusation that proved to be false and driver don't want to go through such an experience.

"I know a lot of drivers who will not work at night because of fears of being attacked or robbed but the biggest fear they have is of being falsely accused of rape," said Jarlath Malone, owner of Derry cab company Foyle Delta.'

Female teacher accused of group sex with students

Mastodon · 9 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TEXAS (WABC) -- A Texas jury saw dramatic video in the trial of a high school teacher is accused of having group sex with several of her students.

Prosecutors say 28-year-old Brittni Colleps had sex with five of her students in 2010.

Colleps, a mother of three and former English teacher, is accused of arranging the meetings through text messages.
...
This week, a jury saw cell phone video of a sexual encounter with four of the teens that the fifth one recorded.

Colleps is charged with several counts, including deviate sex and improper relationship between educator and student. She remained silent during her trial and Judge Ruben Gonzalez entered a not guilty plea. She faces up to 20 years in jail if convicted.

Her husband, Christopher Colleps, a soldier stationed at Louisiana's Fort Polk, has previously said he will support his wife and that they will remain married.

The teens are considered adults, but the law protects students from a relationship with someone in a superior position.'

No Jail Time for Arlington Teacher Charged With Raping Students

Mastodon · 9 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(Arlington, TN) There will be no jail time for an Arlington teacher who admitted having sex with two of her students.

That has people wondering if the punishment fits the crime.

A judge ordered Stacy Hopkins to have no contact with the two students with whom she had sex when she was a teacher at Arlington High School.

Not only can she not teach here anymore, she cannot have a job with anyone under the age of eighteen.

A judge gave Hopkins four years of probation after she plead guilty to two counts of aggravated statutory rape, but she escaped jail time.

Some people like Cathy Park think the sentence shows a double standard in the courtroom, “If this were a case where it was a male on a young female or if the children were younger, I think it would have been much more harsh.”'

When a boy is sexually abused by a woman ‘people do not often recognize the harm’

Mastodon · 9 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Articled here. Excerpt:

'Keyvette Gamble went to a friend’s house with her 4-year-old daughter, playing cards into the early morning with plans to spend the night at the Southwest Washington apartment. After everyone had nodded off, Gamble slipped over to a bed where her friend’s 14-year-old son was sleeping.

Gamble, 24, then sexually assaulted the teenage boy, according to court records. The attack in September was one of three child sex abuse cases to reach a D.C. courtroom this year that involved an adult female defendant accused of sexually assaulting a teenage boy.

While sex abuse cases are all too common, prosecutors and child victim advocates say prosecutions of adult women sexually attacking boys are extremely rare. All unrelated, the three cases in the District surprised local authorities and have raised awareness of an often-underreported crime.

“This is unusual,” said prosecutor Kelly Higashi, chief of the sex offense and domestic violence section of the D.C. Superior Court unit for the U.S. attorney’s office. “People do not often recognize the harm this does to a boy.”'

Does a changing economy mean the 'End of Men'?

Mastodon · 9 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (Reuters) - For all the bluster of her book's title, "The End of Men: And the Rise of Women," Hanna Rosin is surprisingly ambivalent about whether men are, in fact, doomed.

Women are quicker to adapt to the economy's new demands, Rosin says, pursuing higher education in record numbers and dominating fast-growing professions such as nursing and accounting.

At the same time, men watch the shrinking of manufacturing, construction and other traditionally male industries as if paralyzed, on the couch with a beer in hand.

More than two years of research and reporting, though, have left Rosin unconvinced that the end of men is inevitable.

"It's an obnoxious title," she conceded about her book and the 2010 cover story in the Atlantic magazine that launched it. "And I think my argument would have been much easier to make if I believed that women's brains are one way and men's brains are another way and the economy prefers our brains right now."'

Rosin: Why Men Will Never Fully Recover From The Great Recession

Mastodon · 9 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But men will never fully recover because the bad economy simply expedited something that had been happening for years, according to Hanna Rosin's new book The End of Men: And the Rise of Women .

Rosin explains in her book:

In the Great Recession, three-quarters of the 7.5 million jobs were lost by men. The worst-hit industries were overwhelmingly male and deeply identified with macho: contruction, manufacturing, high finance. Some of these jobs have come back, but the dislocation is neither random nor temporary. The recession merely revealed--and accelerated--a profound economic shift that has been going on for at least 30 years, and in some respects even longer."
...
The August jobs report revealed men's participation in the workforce to be at the lowest level since 1948, the Atlantic reported. The number of men in the workplace began declining in the 1950s, when women entered the workforce in droves.'

Porn And Video Games Are Ruining The Next Generation Of American Men

Matt · 10 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. From June but contains some stuff I have suspected myself. There is no doubt in my mind that the access to all manner of distractions, whether it be pornography or games or something else, has had a really bad effect on our children's (and especially, it seems, our sons') abilities to get and remain focused on more productive and valuable pursuits likely to serve them in life. Excerpt:

'Psychologist Philip Zimbardo claims that today's young men are destined for failure because of porn and video games.

In his controversial book The Demise of Guys: Why Boys Are Struggling And What We Can Do About It, Zimbardo and co-author Nikita Duncan outline why he thinks men are failing in education and personal relationships.
...
Some highlights from the book:

-Females currently outperform males at every level, from grade school to graduate school. Boys are 30 percent more likely than girls to drop out of high school and college, according to the National Center of Education Statistics.

-In 2011, young men's SAT scores were the worst they had been in 40 years.
...
-Boys account for 70 percent of D's and F's given at school.

-Research shows guys aren't interested in being husbands, fathers or the head of the household.*
...
-70 percent of young men surveyed said their generation wouldn't be as smart or innovative as their peers in other First World countries.'

---
*Well this I can understand. I think young men have caught on to what is happening to men as they have seen fathers and uncles dragged through the divorce mill and shafted by the "family law" system. After watching that, who'd want to take the risks associated with paternity?

Title IX: Local high schools work to bridge achievement gap

Mastodon · 10 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although girls and women have made significant progress in the 40 years since the introduction of Title IX — the law that prohibits educational programs that receive federal funding from discriminating on the basis of sex — students and educators say more work is needed to truly level the playing field.

A Daily Herald analysis based on data from the 2011 Illinois School Report Card found that while female students at the 25 top performing high schools in suburban Chicago scored higher than their male counterparts in the reading section of the 2011 Prairie State Achievement Exam, boys continue to outperform girls in the areas of math and science.'

Title IX moves beyond sports to ‘new frontier’ of STEM

Mastodon · 10 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Preventing discrimination or exclusion in STEM education is important, experts say, because unequal opportunities may be partially to blame for the traditionally low number of female engineers and scientists.

President Barack Obama’s administration is evaluating what could be included in a Title IX compliance test for STEM and whether it could encompass criteria similar to the “three-prong” test for compliance in athletics, Maatz said.

Under the test, schools can prove compliance by showing a history and continuing practice of expanding athletic opportunities for girls, by proving the interests of both sexes are being met, or by making sure percentages of girls and boys participating in sports are proportional to percentages of girls and boys enrolled at the school.

The idea of applying a proportionality test to student populations in STEM classes scares some educators and at least one women’s group.

“This idea that we would try to create a quota system in the one discipline left where women are not outpacing men shows the enforcement is skewed,” said Carrie Lukas, managing director of the Independent Women’s Forum, a nonprofit conservative research and education organization. “I don’t think Title IX is really fighting discrimination anymore when it comes to women having an opportunity to participate in academic life. That’s a battle that has already been won.”'

India: Salary to the wife? Men's groups fume over proposed law

Mastodon · 10 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The central government's proposal to introduce a law, which, if passed, would mandate every man to part with a portion of his salary income as salary to his wife, has been strongly opposed by men's rights groups.

Save Family Foundation, a non-government organisation, has written a letter to Union Women and Child Development Minister Krishna Tirath [Images] seeking immediate withdrawal of the proposal.

The foundation, representing around 40 different men's organisations across the country, has termed this proposal one-sided.

The organisation has also sought Prime Minister Manmohan Singh's intervention in this matter.

Opposing the proposal, Swarup Sarkar, founder member of Save Family Foundation, noted, "The government must focus on bringing laws that are gender neutral. Any law that can lead to breakdown of the society must not be passed. The Women and Child Development ministry is proposing a law of providing salary to housewives keeping in mind only the interests of women. However, no one in the government is ready to accept the fact that a husband gives away his entire salary to his wife."'

Women’s council deplores government opposition to quotas

Mastodon · 10 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The National Council of Women has dubbed as "shocking" news that the Maltese government will join a diplomatic push spearheaded by the United Kingdom, to oppose a law that will introduce mandatory quotas for women on public companies and private companies on the stock exchange.

The law, pushed by the EU's justice commissioner Viviane Reding, seeks to have 40% of all boards of directors for companies listed on the stock exchange made up of women, by 2020.

Justice minister Chris Said told MaltaToday yesterday the Maltese government believes the EU should stay out of such legislation and instead allow national governments to pursue their own equality measures.'

Eleanor Smeal, President of the Feminist Majority, “Women’s Issues Front and Center”

Mastodon · 10 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Women's issues were front and center at the Democratic National Convention as President Obama and the many women headliners underscored over and over again the reasons why this election is critically important for women. The choice on November 6 for women could not be more stark and will determine if this country continues the progress we have made on women's rights, or if we retreat and lose the gains of more than forty years.

Women's health, pay equity, women's jobs, the fight for women's equality, and reproductive choice and rights were featured in Charlotte as Democrats made a strong and compelling case on these issues. The women delegates and activists responded with loud applause and sustained enthusiasm.'

Forum: It's the boys' turn now

Mastodon · 10 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Journal reported recently that the Rapid City School Foundation honored the Teacher of the Year and the Teachers of Distinction. I couldn't help but notice all 20 teachers honored are female. Not to say that the 20 aren't deserving but, even if there are more women teachers than men, it seems strange that there isn't a more equal ratio of deserving male teachers. Maybe teachers had to apply and no males applied. The Journal article didn't state how the winners were nominated or chosen or who makes up the foundation.

But what it reminded me of is the preferential treatment and special attention females still receive. It is acceptable in the work force, schools and universities to give preferential treatment and recognition to females. More scholarships are available to females than to males. It seems acceptable for women's groups to give scholarships only to females but not so much for men's groups (of which there are far fewer) to give scholarships only to males. Even the Federal Department of Education has preferential scholarships for women. Special entrance requirements have been put in place at some universities, such as doing away with math and science ACT and SAT tests scores because girls, in general, don't score as high on those sections. More subjective criteria can then be used to get the girls into engineering and computer programs. Special mentoring groups in high school and universities are formed to promote and bring along the females.

All this while males are dropping out of high school in record numbers and now nationwide university enrollment is approximately 40 percent male and 60 percent female. No one seems to care about the guys. I haven't heard the national alarm yet.'

Jews, Muslims stage circumcision march in Germany

Matt · 10 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I am reminded of that plea to the All-Mighty, "Lord, save me from your followers!". People are marching for the right to sexually mutilate their sons. For religious reasons? For any reason other than to save their lives or to address a serious health problem is unbelievable. But really why should it still shock me? Think of all the completely bonkers stuff people have done in the name of their religious beliefs, whether those be actual religious beliefs or what some have called "secular religious beliefs", such as those held by political extremists or really anyone so beholden to a single way of doing anything or looking at the world that they can't even tell when their behavior has gone from self-expression to just plain nutty. Anyway, excerpt:

'AFP - Around 500 mainly Jewish but some Christian and Muslim protesters gathered in Berlin on Sunday to demand the right to circumcision after a disputed court ruling in Germany outlawing the rite.

Some protesters were draped in Israeli flags, others wore orthodox Jewish dress for the peaceful demonstration on Berlin's Bebelplatz, infamous as the site of book-burning ceremonies carried out by Adolf Hitler's Nazis.

One banner at the demonstration accused Germany of reverting to a "colonial power" while another read: "Foreskin? No thank you!"

Following the judgement from the court in Cologne saying circumcision was tantamount to grievous bodily harm, Jewish and Muslim groups joined forces for the protest in central Berlin as the foreign minister expressed his concern.'

Australia: Perth teen attacks car with axe outside court

Minuteman · 11 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A teenage girl has run out of Perth Magistrates Court and smashed a car with an axe on a main street, yelling and swearing at officers as they tried to restrain her.

The 15-year-old girl began smashing the windows of the parked Pajero in front of dozen of stunned onlookers on Hay St yesterday.
...
It is believe the frenzied attack was related to a family dispute over unpaid parking fines.'

SAVE: Tell Royce Engstrom to Withdraw his Biased Sex Assault Videos

Matt · 11 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The University of Montana has recently implemented new sexual assault guidelines and created a series of personal empowerment awareness videos for students. Unfortunately, the videos are spreading misinformation about rape, and the guidelines are restricting the civil rights of falsely accused students.

The videos are based on claims by the Justice Department that are wholly unverified -- such as "80 reported rapes" at the university in the past three years. The videos even promote the untrue statistic that only 2 percent of rape accusations are false.

Montana quarterback Jordan Johnson was charged with rape despite all evidence pointing to his innocence. His accuser admitted to her friends "I don't think he did anything wrong to be honest," but prosecutors continued with the case inviting, as an investigation reported, "the possible conviction of an innocent defendant."

In a letter to Univ. of Montana President Royce Engstrom, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) has requested that the university immediately remove the damaging videos from its curriculum.

We'd like your help. Tell Royce Engstrom to withdraw his biased sex assault videos and to respect the rights of accused students, who are innocent until proven guilty.

Univ. of Montana president Royce Engstrom:

Email: prestalk-at-umontana.edu
Phone: 406-243-2311

Thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Circumcision: time to cut it out?

Matt · 11 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite this laudable reason for getting snipped, medical science remains rather more sceptical about the matter. Harking back to biblical times, circumcision is habitually passed off as “cleaner” than its laissez-faire alternative, but statistics about the spread of disease in roundheads versus cavaliers are inconclusive. The British Medical Association states that “the evidence concerning health benefits from non-therapeutic circumcision is insufficient for this alone to be a justification.” Although the World Health Organization has found “compelling evidence” that the practice can reduce the risk of transmitting HIV, this claim has been disputed by various studies and was recently savaged on the Oxford University Practical Ethics blog, which concluded that it was based on “bad science”. In Africa, the procedure is also becoming a worrying substitute for contraception.

There is another explanation for the popularity of the ritual lurking in the annals of religious folklore. There are those who argue (incontrovertibly) that circumcision leads to decreased sensitivity in the end of the penis and (more controversially) that this causes a reduction in male sexual pleasure. Whether or not this uncomfortable thought is actually true, it is interesting to note that the practice has, over the millennia, been upheld by various religious sages as beneficial precisely because of this belief. According to the great 12th-century Jewish philosopher Maimonedes: “With regard to circumcision, one of the reasons for it is, in my opinion, the wish to bring about a decrease in sexual intercourse and a weakening of the organ in question.” In effect, no foreskin meant less focus on the penis and more focus on God. Could it be that all forms of genital cutting – and not merely female ones – have their origins in the desire to control and temper human sexuality? Either way, 800 years later, the Victorians were in agreement, convinced, in a world before Portnoy’s Complaint, that circumcision prevented boys from masturbating. It was partly this quaint supposition that spread the practice across Britain and America. Indeed, it was only when a cash-strapped nascent NHS decided to remove the service in 1949 that the British started leaving their children’s penises alone.

...

A shocking 2010 report in The Journal of Public Health found that, in a sample of 29 Muslim children circumcised at an Islamic school in Oxford, 45 per cent ended up developing medical problems as a direct result of the surgery. Then there was the recent case of 28-day-old Angelo Ofori-Mintah, who bled to death in February of this year after a circumcision in Queen’s Park, London – a tragedy echoed by that of Goodluck Caubergs, an infant who died in similar circumstances in 2010 following the cut. While the fatal haemorrhaging of Ofori-Mintah was ruled a “tragic accident”, the midwife responsible for Caubergs, Grace Adeleye, was charged in April of this year with manslaughter. She is currently awaiting trial.

...

These tragic examples are more than unfortunate, isolated episodes. For every extreme case that gets reported in the media and debated in the courts, hundreds of nasty little incidents sink without a trace. For certain hospitals in Britain, the practice of patching up circumcision botch jobs is said to be appallingly routine. Largely, these interventions go unrecorded. The infant is simply stitched up and sent home. The perpetrator is not reported. Censure is not issued. Cultural sensitivity trumps child protection. One wonders if, say, the parents of a newborn suffering from skin lesions following a clumsily administered home tattoo would get off the hook so lightly.

...

But it’s time for us to have an adult debate about where to go from here. Firstly, we all need to question whether it’s necessary to circumcise our boys. If we are able to talk about this openly, perhaps, over time, social mores will phase the practice out in the way legal intervention never could. Secondly, we need to decide whether it’s time to stop continuing these procedures in the home. The Jewish community in particular would fight tooth and nail to prevent the NHS from intervening in home circumcisions. Regulation would be opposed every step of the way. Then again, as religion has constantly demonstrated over the centuries, it is not immune to compromise. Women can be vicars. Observant Jews can cook on Saturdays. With God, too, there is such a thing as progress.'

Students have mixed views on sexual assault tutorial at University of Montana

Mastodon · 12 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Known as Personal Empowerment Through Self Awareness training, or PETSA, the new tutorial includes seven video segments followed by a quiz, along with a list of emergency contacts. Every student, regardless of age or academic year, is required to watch the video and pass the quiz.

“It didn’t teach me anything,” said Blake DeShaw, a junior majoring in international business. “I support the help system they’ve created, and I think that’s great. But the mandatory tutorial is overkill.”

DeShaw believes the tutorial focuses on the obvious – don’t drink alone, make smart decisions, don’t hang out with jerks who are aggressive toward women and don’t rape.

His sentiments were similar to some of his peers, who struggled to define drunken consent, or an absence of consent, as rape. Many students believe the video fails to hold individuals accountable for their decisions, regardless of gender.

In a letter to the Montana Kaimin, the school newspaper, UM student Anthony Trujillo said the university is correct in taking steps to create a safer campus. On the other hand, he wrote, forcing the “rape scare” on all students makes the problem worse.'

PETAS videos: http://www.umt.edu/petsa/videos/default.php

UConn police: Report of sex assault false

Mastodon · 12 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'STORRS, Conn. (AP) — University of Connecticut police say a report that a group of men struck a woman with a skateboard and sexually assaulted her is false.

Police say they investigated the report of the alleged attack early Saturday at Storrs campus and learned the incident did not occur and the person who made the complaint "falsely reported the assault."

They say on their website that after receiving the report, they issued an alert warning through the university's emergency alert notification system. Detectives reviewed security camera footage and conducted interviews with the person who made the complaint. They did not say if charges would be filed.'

Lacrosse lawyers fight Duke subpoena

Mastodon · 12 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DURHAM – Duke University lawyers trying to fend off a lawsuit want to question and perhaps make witnesses out of two attorneys who are representing three members of the school's 2005-06 men's lacrosse team.

Durham lawyer Bob Ekstrand on Labor Day filed a motion to quash subpoenas Duke's lawyers have issued to him and fellow attorney Stefanie Smith. They invoked attorney/client privilege.

The subpoenas came as Duke gathered evidence for its defense against the lawsuit from 38 former members of the team that gained unwanted fame in 2006 after stripper Crystal Mangum lodged a false rape charge.

Ekstrand's three clients are not among the 38, but they are pursuing a lawsuit of their own that closely parallels the claims lawyers for the 38 have made.'

The silent war on noncollege-educated white men

Mastodon · 12 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Much ink has been spilled this election cycle about the so-called “war on women,” but as the Wall Street Journal notes, “In 2010, young American women had a median income higher than that of their male peers in 1,997 out of 2,000 metropolitan regions.”

That same year, Hanna Rosen observed: ”Earlier this year, women became the majority of the workforce for the first time in U.S. history. Most managers are now women too. And for every two men who get a college degree this year, three women will do the same.”

There is no political benefit in discussing this phenomenon, but it hasn’t gone unnoticed by academics. From Kay Hymowitz’s “Manning Up: How The Rise of Women Has Turned Men Into Boys” (listen to my podcast with Hymowitz here) — to Rosen’s “The End of Men and the Rise of Women” — some observers are keenly aware of the trend.

In recent years, women have also been hit by the economic downturn. Still, you won’t hear much about the plight of men on the campaign trail.

There is very little benefit to talking about how hard men have it.
...

One wonders about the unique psychological toll this might take. White men, especially, can’t complain. What I mean is that nobody is sympathetic to them. There is a good reason for this. Historically, they have won the lottery. Thus, there is no release valve — no politically correct way for them to express their understandable anger at a society that seems to have let them down. What is more, they are regularly mocked and portrayed as Homer Simpson-like buffoons by the media. There is no anti-defamation league to complain when men are portrayed as idiots on TV commercials, movies, etc. They are supposed to suck it up.

This is concerning for a variety of reasons. First, we should be concerned when any demographic of American society is falling behind. Second, it seems dangerous for a society to have a bunch of single, disaffected men, roaming around (men, of course, represent nearly 50 percent of the population). People who don’t believe they have a purpose are dangerous. Marriage and other institutions have had a sort of civilizing effect. But as more and more high-achieving women are remaining single (party because there aren’t enough highly-educated men), we can expect problems, including gangs, the rise of fringe radical groups/militias, etc., lower birth rates, more suicide, etc.
...
Meanwhile, Obama continues to pander to women. The goal is to increase turnout among this important voting base, but it will also likely increase the gender gap he has with males. During the Democratic Convention, Planned Parenthood President Cecile Richards said: “President Obama understands women. He trusts women, and on every single issue that matters to us, he stands with women.”

Can you imagine any speaker saying that about men?'

The End of Men Is Here? 14 Signs And Consequences Of Male Decline

Mastodon · 12 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When journalist Hanna Rosin talks about the "End of Men," she doesn't mean that men are destined to die out (although statistics show that couples in many parts of the world increasingly want female children) or destined to become the indentured servants of a matriarchal society. She means that as the world has changed over the last 50 years, women have changed with it, to their advantage, and men ... haven't.

In Rosin's new book "The End of Men and the Rise of Women," based on her often quoted 2010 Atlantic cover story "The End of Men," she explores the decline of men, how it's bad for both men and women and how "people describe this as a feminist triumph, but it is not entirely," as she recently told The Huffington Post's Lisa Belkin. Here are 14 arguments Rosin makes in one of the most anticipated books of the year.'

Men’s Rights “Hate Speech”

Mastodon · 12 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The following poster is being placed prominently in multiple cities in Canada, starting in Vancouver but also elsewhere. Similar posters with similar messages are beginning to appear in Seattle and other parts of the United States, as well as Australia and the UK. In every place so far that they’ve gone up, they’ve faced ridicule, mocking, and, worst of all, received regular vandalism and torn down in locations where it’s perfectly legal to place and display them. They have been classified by people who call themselves “feminists” as “hate-speech.”

The statistics from these posters are from the Canadian government and apply to Canada nationwide; statistics for the US, Australia, and other advanced Western nations are very similar, however. The poster reads:

40% of domestic violence victims are male
94% of all industrial deaths and accidents happen to men
42% of Bachelor’s Degrees are earned by men
90% of divorces are initiated by women'
...
If someone can tell me which of the major Presidential campaigns in America plans to do anything about any of the above, I’d like to hear it. So far as I can see, Barack Obama has nothing to say about any of it, and neither does Mitt Romney.

Further mainstream news coverage of the postering campaign and active censorship efforts against them here. Further discussion of these issues, as well as censorship efforts against them, here.

Why do I write about these things? Because I have sons I love, growing up in a world that is increasingly contemptous and dismissive of them.'

Feminism and the Disposable Male

Mastodon · 12 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The #1 video on YouTube on the subject of feminism for the last year has been Feminism and the Disposable Male by Girl Writes What. If you don't believe it, just go to YouTube and type in the word "feminism" and if it's not some brand new sponsored video, this will be the top video. And unlike most videos that "go viral," it has seen not an explosion of views but a steadily increasing number of views. It has ignited a firestorm of hatred against its author. People have put up pictures of her face battered and bloodied to show their hatred for her. She's called a right-wing extremist, a "back to the kitchen" traditionalist, a misogynist, a woman-hater, a traitor to her vagina–she's even been called the "Tokyo Rose of feminism." Much of this is rather amusing since she's a bisexual atheist who writes erotica professionally, and often doesn't even vote–not because she thinks women shouldn't vote, but because, like Penn Jilett, she thinks it's often a waste of time. Amusingly, she's also often been called a "feminist extremist" (often laced with many more vulgar epithets).'

Girl Writes What also created a YouTube video regarding the recent tearing down of posters put up by A Voice for Men activists in Canada.

Change.org: Revoke Parole for Stephanie Lopez NMCD Inmate #59941

Mastodon · 12 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'The New Mexico Parole Board: Revoke Parole for Stephanie Lopez NMCD Inmate #59941

Baby Brianna Mariah Lopez died on July 19, 2002 after suffering abuse by the hands of her mother Stephanie Lopez, her father Andy Walters, and an uncle Steven Lopez. Stephanie Lopez was sentenced to 27 years in prison after being convicted by a jury of negligently permitting child abuse resulting in death or great bodily harm. Autopsy findings revealed five month old Brianna had suffered "numerous human bite marks throughout her entire body, scraping and bruising injuries, extensive injuries to her head and fatal injuries to her brain, bleeding within membranes around the brain as well as the nerves around her eyes, indicating she had been violently shaken. Brianna's skull had 5-7 day old fractures in two places, on two different bones. Both old and new blood were present, indicating a previous injury to the brain. Brianna had two rib fractures that were weeks old upon her death. The baby also had bucket handle fractures on both thigh bones and a fracture on her left arm. Baby Brianna's anus and vagina were also injured." Currently, Brianna is buried in a pauper's grave as no family members came forward to claim her body.'

NY Times: Why Fathers Really Matter

Matt · 13 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The NYT spin is that it's all biological. No mention of the many other ways dads count. And predictably it concludes with the suggestion that when things go wrong for a kid, it's dad's fault. One thing you can say for the Times, they're as predictable as Big Ben's (now "Elizabeth Tower") chimes. Excerpt:

'Biology is making it clearer by the day that a man's health and well-being have a measurable impact on his future children's health and happiness. This is not because a strong, resilient man has a greater likelihood of being a fabulous dad — or not only for that reason — or because he's probably got good genes. Whether a man's genes are good or bad (and whatever "good" and "bad" mean in this context), his children's bodies and minds will reflect lifestyle choices he has made over the years, even if he made those choices long before he ever imagined himself strapping on a Baby Bjorn.
...
Epigenetics means that our physical and mental tendencies were not set in stone during the Pleistocene age, as evolutionary psychology sometimes seems to claim. Rather, they're shaped by the life we lead and the world we live in right now. Epigenetics proves that we are the products of history, public as well as private, in parts of us that are so intimately ours that few people ever imagined that history could reach them. (One person who did imagine it is the French 18th-century naturalist Jean-Baptiste Lamarck, who believed that acquired traits could be inherited. Twentieth-century Darwinian genetics dismissed Lamarckism as laughable, but because of epigenetics, Lamarckism is staging a comeback.)
...

When you're an older mother, you get used to the sidelong glances of sonogram technicians, the extra battery of medical tests, the fear that your baby has Down syndrome, the real or imagined hints from younger mothers that you're having children so late because you care more about professional advancement than family. But as the research on paternal inheritance piles up, the needle of doubt may swing at least partway to fathers. "We're living through a paradigm shift," said Dolores Malaspina, a professor of psychiatry at New York University who has done pioneering work on older fathers and schizophrenia. Older mothers no longer need to shoulder all the blame: "It's the aging man who damages the offspring."'

Kentucky Man Sues Doctor For Amputating His Penis

Matt · 13 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FRANKFORT, Ky. (AP) — A Kentucky man did not consent to have his penis amputated and the doctor who performed the surgery had options other than removing the organ, even though cancer had been found during a surgery, an attorney argued Tuesday to the Kentucky Court of Appeals.

Kevin George, the lawyer for Phillip Seaton of Waddy, told the appeals panel that the medical waiver signed by his client contains extremely broad language and that Dr. John Patterson should have sought consent before removing the penis.

“The point is … a patient has a right,” George said. “The doctor does not have the right to do whatever he wants, even if it turns out to be reasonable.”'

NY Times: Why Men Fail

Matt · 13 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Yet more! Article here. Seems to be a male-bashing article prominently featured in the Times about once every other day, and usually on Sunday for those lucky Sunday-only subscribers who just gotta have their crossword puzzle/sudoku/male-bashing fix. Excerpt:

'In elementary and high school, male academic performance is lagging. Boys earn three-quarters of the D's and F's. By college, men are clearly behind. Only 40 percent of bachelor's degrees go to men, along with 40 percent of master's degrees.

Thanks to their lower skills, men are dropping out of the labor force. In 1954, 96 percent of the American men between the ages of 25 and 54 worked. Today, that number is down to 80 percent. In Friday's jobs report, male labor force participation reached an all-time low.

Millions of men are collecting disability. Even many of those who do have a job are doing poorly. According to Michael Greenstone of the Hamilton Project, annual earnings for median prime-age males have dropped by 28 percent over the past 40 years.

...

Forty years ago, men and women adhered to certain ideologies, what it meant to be a man or a woman. Young women today, Rosin argues, are more like clean slates, having abandoned both feminist and prefeminist preconceptions. Men still adhere to the masculinity rules, which limits their vision and their movement.

If she's right, then men will have to be less like Achilles, imposing their will on the world, and more like Odysseus, the crafty, many-sided sojourner. They'll have to acknowledge that they are strangers in a strange land.'

His Body, His Choice

Matt · 13 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Circumcision infringes on a child's right to physical integrity and religious freedom. A powerful policy of deterrence should therefore be established.
...
As part of this worldwide trend, and following other professional organizations, the KNMG published a position paper in 2010 on the 'non-therapeutic circumcision of minors' (NTC). In it, the KNMG concluded that circumcision violates the child's right to autonomy and physical integrity. One of the main guideposts for the KNMG in this issue is the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC). This declaration states that children should be protected 'against all forms of physical or mental violence, injury or abuse.' It also calls upon governments to 'take measures to abolish traditional practices prejudicial to the health of children.' There is ample scientific proof that NTC is indeed prejudicial to the health of children. Around 25-50% of healthy skin is removed from the penis in circumcision.
...
This growing aversion to NTC is therefore not caused by anti-religious or anti-Semitic feelings, but by an increased emphasis on human rights, combined with a growing awareness that children have the same fundamental human rights as adults. If it is not permissible to forcefully circumcise a grown man, why would it be permissible to do so to a child? The law protects the physical integrity of young girls, should it not do the same for boys? As it is his body, shouldn't it be his choice?'

Panel Unanimously Decides to Regulate a Circumcision Ritual

Matt · 13 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The New York City Board of Health passed a regulation on Thursday that will require consent from parents before an infant can have a form of Jewish ritual circumcision, prevalent in parts of the ultra-Orthodox community, in which the circumciser uses his mouth to remove blood from the incision.

...

Indeed, some panel members said they believed that requiring consent did not go far enough. “It’s crazy that we allow this to go on,” said Dr. Joel A. Forman, a professor of pediatrics at Mount Sinai School of Medicine.

Infectious disease experts widely agree that the oral contact, known in Hebrew as metzitzah b’peh, creates a risk of transmission of herpes that can be deadly to infants, because of their underdeveloped immune systems. Between 2004 and 2011, the city learned of 11 herpes infections it said were most likely caused by the practice. Two of those babies died; at least two others suffered brain damage.

...

“They feel that if their child doesn’t have the metzitzah b’peh, he is not Jewish, so this, to them, is the most important act that they can do for their son in life,” said Dr. Kenneth I. Glassberg, the director of the division of pediatric urology at Morgan Stanley Children’s Hospital at NewYork-Presbyterian.'

Women's Room - Feminism and going too far

Mastodon · 14 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The difference between feminism and misandry is often not understood. However, it's an important distinction because it's the difference between treating men like lesser humans and trying to gain equal rights for women. Feminism is defined as a collection of movements and ideologies that are aimed at establishing and defending equal rights for women. Misandry, on the other hand, is the male equivalent of misogyny and is defined as a hatred of men.

Examples of feminist movement goals may include the right to vote, the right to control our bodies, and the right to equal pay. On the other hand misandry includes things like "stop domestic violence against women" or "men should stay at home and do the things women once did." Now, I'm not saying we shouldn't stop domestic violence against women but this is something that doesn't support equality and is therefore not a feminist ideal by definition. We should try to stop domestic violence period because men and women are both victims. Are women more likely to become the victims of domestic abuse? Statistics show that yes, they are but that doesn't mean that it's okay to forget that men get beat up by their partners or families too because that's not what equality, and feminism, is about.

The distinction is important in all circumstances because what most hardcore feminists claim to want is an equal society. However, their distrust, dislike, or down right hatred towards men makes this impossible. It makes women bullies. This "I think women should have x because men have had x for too long so they should know how we feel" is an ideal that is often seen when browsing "feminist" websites. It's bullying and it's not helping. If a school yard bully pushes you into the mud and then you push them in turn nothing changes. You're both just muddy bullies who still don't understand how the other person feels. That's what a lot of feminism is like.'

Former WWE performer arrested three nights in a row for DV-related violations

Mastodon · 14 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former WWE performer Tamara Lynn Sytch, 39, was arrested three nights in a row this week — Sept. 11, 12 and 13—in Connecticut for strangling her boyfriend, Damien Darling, and violating protective orders.

She was arrested for disorderly conduct on Tuesday, stemming from strangulation. She was released on Wednesday but arrested again that day for violating a protective order, strangulation and disorderly conduct. She was released on Thursday and arrested again that day for violating a protective order.'

SAVE: Tell VP Biden that Every MAN Deserves to be Safe from Violence

Matt · 14 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

September 13 marked the 18-year anniversary of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA).

Vice President Biden issued a statement commemorating this anniversary. Included in his statement: VAWA "was founded on the basic premise that every woman deserves to be safe from violence." VP Biden goes on to give statistics only about female victims of domestic violence. He concludes by stating "I urge Congress to keep the promise we made to our daughters and our granddaughters on that day-that we would work together to keep them safe." Statement: http://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2012/09/13/statement-vice-president-eighteenth-anniversary-violence-against-women-a Biden's glaring omission of male victims, time and time again, seems as if he is putting forth the contention that men don't deserve to be safe from violence. What other conclusion can one reach?

The Vice president refused to tell a national TV audience that women should never hit men to get their attention when he was asked to on The View. Video: http://vimeo.com/teriincali/willvpbidenremindwomennottohitmen

Every speech by Biden completely ignores the fact that women are perpetrators and men are victims of DV. The latest CDC study shows 53% of the victims of partner violence are men and 42% of the victims of severe DV are men. Report: http://www.cdc.gov/ViolencePrevention/pdf/NISVS_Report2010-a.pdf

Call or write the White House today. Ask, "Why does Vice President Biden feel that only women, not men deserve to be safe from violence? Shouldn't we keep our sons and grandsons safe from domestic violence too?" Then remind them that discrimination is wrong. Demand that the Vice President tell the entire truth about domestic violence now, and in the future.

Call: 202-456-1111 or 202-456-1414
Fax: 202-456-2461
Email: http://www.whitehouse.gov/contact-vp

On behalf of all male victims, thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

In Defense Of The Child

Matt · 14 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Since children – especially babies and infants – cannot consent to procedures that would violate their right to bodily integrity, the right to consent is legally vested in the parents or guardians of the child. But they cannot legally consent to any procedure: violations of bodily integrity are permissible only insofar as they benefit the child (for example, the consent to have vital surgery performed on the child).

In the case of circumcision, this is only the case when a persuasive medical reason exists to justify the procedure. German law does not permit violations of bodily integrity that serve the freedom of religion of the parents. Freedom of religion is limited by strong considerations of the rights of the child. Under this framework, tradition cannot suffice as a justification for the violation of important rights – a legal interpretation that was affirmed in 2000, when a court ruled that physical punishment of children was illegal even in places where it had historically been carried out on a routine basis. Physical punishments, psychological torments, and other degrading measures are impermissible as educational tools. Even if the German parliament passed a law to allow male circumcision, the Constitutional Court would be likely to reverse it.'

Demeaning men is not equality

Mastodon · 15 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I was recently watching the news and tweeting as usual, some woman was lauding another for her political stance and choice to stand up for election. As she spoke, she mentioned something to the effect that men are useless and will never do anything for women.

The thinking of such women baffles me. Why do we have to stomp on men to make ourselves look better?

Forget the typical male-bashing jokes… yeah, those ones will happen whether we like it or not. There are women who take it too far and will not leave a man standing with his dignity intact, who will not be satisfied unless she tramples on him and puts him under her thumb. It's not about making him a doormat; it's about the fact that she needs to make men look bad to feel good.

What happens to the man in your life if you keep treating the men around you like they're nothing but whipping boys? Don't you think this will sooner or later translate into your home? Your husband will just be another statistic and your son will grow up thinking that he's worthless.
...
Feminism is good, but with the right intentions. I try to remind myself that we cannot be 'equal', but we can have equal opportunities. Remember, we are the mothers, sisters, wives and friends of these same guys we bash. When we turn them into misogynists, who will be to blame?'

More men need to share their experience of domestic violence

Mastodon · 15 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Except something about this interview is different. Rihanna, Tina Turner and countless other women have told their sad tales of abusive relationships. But, after dredging the recesses of my memory and Google, I've been unable to find a single comparable example of a male celebrity disclosing experiences as a victim.
...
So the interview, to be broadcast this Friday, is perhaps more groundbreaking than anyone involved realised. If it were with some hip, young, anguished method actor it might be less surprising, but this is Sir Roger Moore: the 84-year-old embodiment of British stiff upper lip, a knight of the realm who attained superstar status by playing James frickin' Bond, no less. It may be a measure of how far the debate has moved on in recent years that someone like this can mention partner violence almost as an incidental aside, and nobody seems especially surprised.

Whatever set of statistics one prefers, it is beyond dispute that a significant proportion of men will experience some form of domestic abuse at some point in their lives. For some it will be medically serious and/or psychologically traumatising. The phenomenon can affect people in all walks of life. So how many male actors, TV stars, musicians, sports heroes and other celebrities must have written their memoirs and opened the windows on their lives, yet kept a few bruised truths from their ghost writer's ear?'

The growing trend in Section V

Mastodon · 15 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Title IX requires girls to have the same opportunities to compete in sports as boys, but what about allowing boys to compete on girls' teams. It's a growing trend in Section V, especially in volleyball.

One local athlete loves the sport of volleyball, but when budget cuts stopped him from being able to play on the boys' team at school; he tried out for the girls' team.

Ben Ellingham, Pittsford Mendon senior, said, "I've never really been a football or soccer player I tried it but it wasn't my love, I tried volleyball and something just clicked for me."

Mendon senior Ben Ellingham certainly stands out on the volleyball court.

Ellingham said, "The first year, I was out of my comfort zone, but I got used to it."'

How Marriage Changed My View of Men

Mastodon · 15 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some even attempt to formalize theories supporting this claim about men's lacking morality. Feminist Carol Gilligan, for example, is well known for arguing in her influential book In a Different Voice that women deal differently with moral dilemmas than men. Women, she claims, are more caring, less competitive, less abstract, and more sensitive than men in making moral decisions. Because they speak in this “different voice,” their culture of nurturing, caring, and peaceful accommodation could cure the world governed by hyper-competitive males and their habits of abstract, less interpersonal moral reasoning.

...

Not according to Lawrence Walker of the University of British Columbia. Walker has reviewed 80 studies on gender difference in solving moral dilemmas and determines that “[s]ex differences in moral reasoning in late adolescence and youth are rare.” Additionally, three researchers at Oberlin College attempted to test Gilligan’s hypothesis, administering a moral reasoning test to one hundred male and female students. Their conclusion: “There were no reliable sex differences [. . .] in the directions predicted by Gilligan.” Other findings by Wendy Wood, a specialist in women’s psychology at Texas A&M, and William Damon (Brown University) and Anne Colby (Radcliffe College) further undermine these negative stereotypes.'

UK: Woman seeking to cease husbands' sperm donation rights

Mastodon · 15 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A British woman is campaigning for the legal right to veto her husband's choice to donate sperm, it has emerged.

The unidentified complainant says her partner volunteered samples of his semen to a registered clinic after becoming stressed by the birth of their child, reported MailOnline.

Disgruntled, the mother-of-one from Surrey has contacted the Human Fertilisation And Embryology Authority, arguing that women across the UK should be able to deny their spouse's free will on the matter - because sperm is a 'marital asset'.

She's wrong.

As a men's rights activist and someone whose mother was a counsellor in Liverpool's British Pregnancy Advisory Service, where I spent considerable time as a boy, I value the importance of choice massively. But it cuts both ways.

The old maxim of 'my body, my choice' is one that applies to both genders, not just women.'

'Plastic women, cardboard men'

Mastodon · 15 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I know a fiftysomething woman who went back to school last year. She needed a credential in order to get steady work, so she invested eight months and several thousand dollars to qualify as a personal care assistant. She cleaned toilets to help pay the tuition. The pay is low, but she'll always be in demand. Her former husband (he's the same age), meanwhile, has more or less dropped out of the economy. History seems to be repeating itself with their kids. Their focused daughter is a top university student with an eye on a good career. Their son dropped out of university in his first semester. Since then, he's had a string of low-paying jobs. He has no plan.

Men of all ages are dropping out these days. Another friend, a woman in her 40s, has a soon-to-be-ex-husband who drove them into bankruptcy. He lost his job and can't find more work and is about to move back in with his mother. My friend, who stayed home to raise their four kids, is now working double shifts to put herself through nursing school. In between work and school, she shops for food, feeds the kids and drives them to their lessons. The last time I saw her, she fell asleep sitting up.

As for thirtysomething women, many of them are building impressive careers while their men just coast along. They pay the mortgage, and the guys pay the utilities. Nothing wrong with that, if only the guys would pitch in more on the home front. But a lot of the guys turn out to be incredibly passive – like oversized knick-knacks parked in front of the TV.

The patriarchy is dead. The new world order is a matriarchy. And the guys can't figure out where they fit in. As one university-educated urban male told writer Hanna Rosin, "All the things we need to be good at to thrive in the world we imagine existing 10 or 20 or even 50 years from now are things that my female friends and competitors are better at than me. Than us."
...
I've no idea how the new world order will play out. Ms. Rosin thinks more men will eventually catch on and find their places in it. Meantime, there's one scene I can't get out of my mind. It's a village in the hills of Thailand that my husband and I visited a few years ago. The women did all the work – the child rearing, the farming, the cooking, the wood and water gathering, the long trek to town to sell their vegetables. The men sat around discussing politics and smoking opium. They didn't seem terribly miserable; I guess they'd gotten used to it.'

Are women better leaders than men?

Mastodon · 15 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OREM -- Are women better leaders than men?

That was the question posed at Friday's Utah Valley Women's Business Conference and according to research presented at that same conference, the answer is yes.

Keynote speaker Bob Sherwin, CEO of Zenger Folkman, presented research his company published in the March edition of the Harvard Business Review.

The data comes from thousands of surveys that rate leaders in 16 different traits thought to be important to leadership, including taking initiative, driving results, developing strategic perspectives, developing others and establishing goals.

The research shows that when evaluated by their superiors, peers, subordinates and themselves, women in leadership positions score better than men in 12 of the 16 categories.'

Grading Obama's First Term for Women

Mastodon · 15 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The goal of this article is to evaluate how women and women's issues have fared during President's Obama's first term. We'll examine the entire four years in order to gauge progress and unresolved shortcomings.

Those of you who have followed my writings here and at the Daily Beast, know I was an early critic of Obama on women's issues. To his credit, I have watched Obama evolve since then. To wit, his recent appointment of Debbie Wasserman Schultz to DNC Chair, after he irked women's group early in his term by selecting anti-choice Tim Kaine. Whether Obama's evolution is personal growth or politically motivated, I will leave to you, the reader, to decide.

I need to lay out two disclaimers. First, Obama is not directly accountable for all metrics. For example, as relates to jobs, he cannot direct gender hiring preferences in the private sector (although, he can lead by example). Second, this article does not examine whether the GOP offers a better alternative in areas of weakness. For example, while Obama's efforts on the Paycheck Fairness Act may be disappointing, the GOP is patently against legislative equal pay, period. Let's begin.'

Tammy "Sunny" Sytch: “Lesson to men: Cheat on a good woman, You get choked out”

Mastodon · 15 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'As previously reported, WWE Hall of Famer Tammy "Sunny" Sytch was arrested in Connecticut on three separate occasions over the last week on domestic violence complaints. WWE also released an official statement on the matter, stating that while she has not been under contract with them since 1998, they have paid for three separate rehabilitation stints for her and will continue to provide assistance should she choose to take advantage of it.

The Associated Press has also picked up on the story and notes that Branford, Connecticut police confirm that Sytch was arrested on three separate occasions on charges that included disorderly conduct and violating a protective order.

Sytch herself took to her official Facebook page Friday night by posting the following in response to her recent arrests:

“Lesson to men: Cheat on a good woman, You get choked out.”

UK: Jilted woman falsely accused her ex-lover of rape after he refused to rekindle their affair

Mastodon · 15 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A jilted lonely heart who tried to frame her ex-lover for rape after he refused to rekindle their affair has been jailed.

Janet Higginbottom, 36, got drunk and dialled 999 at 2am falsely claiming she had been stalked and then raped in the street after being followed home.

Manchester Crown Court heard how Higginbottom of Broadbottom, Hyde, then identified her ex as the culprit, wrongly claiming he had fled in a car after the incident even though he was at home all the time.

Higginbottom's unnamed former boyfriend was later arrested in a 4am raid in front of his current girlfriend and held for 11 hours.'

Report Shows Females Lead in College Plans, Enrollment and Degrees

Mastodon · 15 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new report by the federal government shows high school girls outpacing boys when it comes to planning for college, enrolling, and completing a degree. Yet boys are doing better on Advanced Placement exams and college-entrance tests.

Looking at education trends by gender and across racial/ethnic groups, the National Center for Education Statistics' Higher Education: Gaps in Access and Persistence Study reports among the freshman class that began in 2008-09, a lower percentage of males (71.8 percent) than females (78.9 percent) graduated with a regular high school diploma.

The NCES asked 9th graders to indicate the highest level of education they expected to achieve. Fifty-nine percent of the girls expected to complete a bachelor's or graduate/professional degree compared to 53 percent of boys. This pattern held for white males and females (56 percent vs. 63 percent) and black males and females (54 percent vs. 61 percent), according to researchers.'

'Women Get Free Preventive Care, Men Get To Go Pee Up A Rope'

Mastodon · 15 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women Get Free Preventive Care, Men Get To Go Pee Up A Rope
Robert Franklin posts at Fathers & Families:

The Affordable Care Act mandates well woman exams, including a variety of preventive screenings, for all women completely free of charge, no deductibles, no co-pays. But it does nothing of the kind for men. Whatever we may think we need in the way of preventive care, we pay for; the ACA leaves us on our own. When it comes to preventive care, the ACA rations our preventive care according to our ability to pay, but requires providers to screen women at no cost.

That struck me and the other signers of the petition as (a) sexist and (b) bad policy. After all, doesn't effective preventive care for men save the healthcare system money in the long term the same as it does for women? Of course it does, so, since the ACA is so much about keeping costs down that it's part of the law's name, why not go all in? Why not include men's preventive care along with women's? And that of course is in addition to the fact that, as a matter of morality, fairness and justice, men and women should receive equal treatment by public policy. Men contribute far more to tax revenues than do women, so why does the ACA short men?'

F&F: Pennsylvania and Mississippi Update Child Support Guidelines

Matt · 16 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Articles here. Excerpts:

'The Pennsylvania Supreme Court Domestic Relations Rules Committee has reviewed and proposed updates to the child support guidelines, which will go into effect later this year. The Committee, as required by federal law, reviews the child support guidelines at least every four years in order to assure that they appropriately reflect current economic data on the costs of raising children.

The Committee's Recommendation 116 was guided by Jane Venohr's economic study. Jane Venohr, Ph.D, is a research associate with the Center for Policy Research. She is regarded as the nation's leading expert on child support guidelines, having worked with over 25 states to develop and update guidelines.'

and

'Significant amendments to the Mississippi child support guidelines went into effect May 22, 2012. The amendments were to MCA 43-19-103, which sets out the bases that the court may use to deviate from the statutory child support calculation guidelines.

The most significant change is that the payments by the noncustodial parent for child care expenses may be a factor in determining child support payments when the child care is needed in order for the custodial parent to seek or retain employment, or because of the disability of the noncustodial parent.'

S. 3475: Women and Minorities in STEM Booster Act

Mastodon · 16 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Bill here. Excerpt:

'To increase the participation of historically underrepresented demographic groups in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics education and industry.
...
(e) Authorized Activities- An eligible entity that receives a grant under this section shall use such grant funds to carry out the following activities designed to increase the participation of women and underrepresented minorities in the fields of science, technology, engineering, and mathematics:

(1) Online workshops.

(2) Mentoring programs that partner science, technology, engineering, or mathematics professionals with students.

(3) Internships for undergraduate and graduate students in the fields of science, technology, engineering, and mathematics.

(4) Conducting outreach programs that provide elementary school and secondary school students with opportunities to increase their exposure to the fields of science, technology, engineering, or mathematics.

(5) Such additional programs as the Director of the National Science Foundation may determine.

(f) Authorization of Appropriations- There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $10,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2013, 2014, and 2015.'

Future will see costs of gender gap in higher education

Mastodon · 16 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Call me biased, but the data does seem to suggest women are smarter than men. Or, at least, they aspire to go to college more and are more likely to graduate with degrees than men are.
...
The problem with the gender imbalance in higher education isn't that more women are enrolling in higher education. The problem is that men aren't keeping pace.

While a stabilized gender gap that swings in favor of women doesn't seem like such a bad thing, men need degrees just as much as women do.

More education pays off more, literally. A study by Georgetown University's Center on Education and the Workforce shows workers with at least some post-secondary education fared better through the recession than those without any.

A generation of undereducated men will contribute less to the economy, and leave future generations with fewer role models in education to look to.

If men fail to catch up and the gender disparity grows wider, you don't need to go to college to see the implications.'

Tim Landis: Habitat planning women-only build

Mastodon · 16 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HABITAT FOR HUMANITY OF SANGAMON COUNTY is planning a first next month — for women only.

Executive director Sarah Mackey said women-only build days have proved popular with Habitat for Humanity chapters elsewhere in the country. She said the first such workday here will involve exterior repairs to a home. The date has not yet been scheduled.

...

Mackey said women volunteers are sometimes uncomfortable, at least at first, when working on traditional projects combining men and women.

“It can be intimidating for women who are not familiar with construction tools or terms or processes,” said Mackey. “The women-build provides a safe environment where women can come together, and learn together, and try new things.”'

Women, get used to marrying down

Mastodon · 16 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For much of history, the mark of an enviable woman has been her ability to secure a superior match, through her beauty, cleverness or artful deception. After the civil rights era, that expectation mellowed into something called "homogamy," meaning women marrying men of equal money and education. But that happy place of equilibrium seems to be fading as well. Instead, women have started doing something demographers thought they would never see: They are marrying down, not just in the United States, but all over the world, a phenomenon closely tracked by Spanish demographer Albert Esteve.

Women are largely doing this out of necessity. In every continent except Africa, women are more likely to have a college degree than the men around them. This means that in their late 20s and 30s, when most people get married, women's earning prospects are brighter. So they have no choice but to marry someone who in a Jane Austen novel would have been declared an unsuitable match.

About 40 percent of wives in the United States now out-earn their husbands, and researcher Liza Mundy predicts they will be the majority in a generation. It's already happening with education: According to Mr. Esteve, the majority of women in France, Hungary, Israel, Portugal, Brazil, Belarus, Mongolia and Colombia -- to name a few -- now marry men with less schooling than they have.'

H.R. 6303: Global Science Program for Security, Competitiveness, and Diplomacy Act of 2012

Mastodon · 16 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Bill here. Excerpt:

'(8) Engaging women in the scientific enterprise is beneficial to the well-being of women and girls, as well as to global stability and prosperity. Improving access to education and science opportunities for women and girls advances their economic viability, along with that of their families and broader communities. Moreover, the scientific field thrives on exchanges of a broad range of ideas. Including female voices, and those of all minorities, in scientific dialogue leads to more significant discoveries and creative solutions to local and global challenges.'

Texas: Law narrows paternity test window

Mastodon · 16 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If the deadbeat dad phenomenon is a national disgrace, paternity fraud is its oily underbelly.

Attorney Dennis Fuller has spent the past year trying to remedy the fraud that wreaks much the same emotional and financial havoc as the more common failure to pay legitimate support to a son or daughter.

His 12-month mission narrows greatly on Sept. 1, when a legal window closes for men who have long known the child they support is not theirs.

“There’s a remedy for a short period of time,” Fuller said this past week. “If you take the statistics the blood banks give us, and the researchers give us, there should be 128,000 guys in Texas that are paying child support for children who are not theirs.”'

Australia: Mother admits killing son with methadone

Minuteman · 17 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'An Adelaide woman has admitted killing her five-year-old son by putting methadone in his cordial.

Lisa Anne Collard, 45, pleaded guilty in the South Australian Supreme Court on Monday to the manslaughter of her son Christopher on June 7 last year at their Modbury Heights home.
...
A court has previously heard Collard was trying to treat her son's cold when she put the methadone in a bottle of green cordial.'

Saudi shuts 'male-staffed lingerie shops'

Matt · 17 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Some guys just lost their jobs because they're male-- in a "male-dominated society", no less. Story here. Excerpt:

'AFP - The labour ministry has ordered the closure of around 100 lingerie shops in the Saudi capital for having men on their sales staff, a newspaper said on Sunday.

Al-Eqtisadiah quoted a ministry official as saying all shops which violate a decree on the "feminisation and nationalisation of jobs" would be shut down. The measure aims to "provide a safe environment for working women," he said.

The ministry at the start of the year banned male assistants from working at lingerie shops, as a first step to be followed by women-only sales assistants at cosmetics outlets.'

IA: Tell the American Academy of Pediatrics: Shame on You!

Matt · 17 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Action item here. Excerpt:

'The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) has just released a new Technical Report by its Task Force on Circumcision, claiming that the “benefits” of routine infant circumcision outweigh the risks. Hard to see how they might draw such a conclusion, because they acknowledge—over and over in the Report—that no good studies have been done on those risks! And the Report IGNORES the growing accounts in medical literature, in the mainstream press and on the internet, of botched circumcisions, sexual dysfunction, psychological impact, and—in at least 100 instances a year—death.

Shame on the American Academy of Pediatrics! This group, which describes itself as “dedicated to the health and wellbeing of infants, children, adolescents and young adults,” has put its own interests before those of its members and their patients, and has turned a blind eye to global trends and hard evidence proving that infant circumcision is medically unnecessary, unethical, and causes serious harm. There’s more—the AAP is asking all insurers and government health care programs to step up and pay doctors for mutilating our sons! How is THAT for self-interest?'

Some American Jews Think That Child Circumcision Should Be Against the Law

Matt · 17 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A growing number of Jews are in favor of banning child circumcision. These Jews recognize a minor's right to their own body, a right that supersedes the rights of a parent to harm the body of a child in the name of religion.
...
What follows is a collection of statements from Jews who question the ethics and legality of forced under-age circumcision. Jewish Americans Support Outlawing Child Circumcision

"I am a Jewish mother against circumcision and in support of passing Bill 1777. For years I was a certified childbirth educator and now a journalist and filmmaker. I continue to educate people that childbirth is a natural event rather than one filled with unnecessary drugs and other medical intervention, and circumcision is an unnatural event. These are two clear-cut examples of interfering with nature."

- Katherine Mora, Jewish Mother , Testimony before the Massachusetts Joint Committee on the Judiciary'

For S. Korean men, makeup a foundation for success

Matt · 17 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. "Male-dominated country", indeed! If it's so "male-dominated", how come men and not women are forced to serve in the armed forces? Excerpt:

'SEOUL, South Korea -- Cho Won-hyuk stands in front of his bedroom mirror and spreads dollops of yellow-brown makeup over his forehead, nose, chin and cheeks until his skin is flawless. Then he goes to work with a black pencil, highlighting his eyebrows until they're thicker, bolder.
...
...This socially conservative, male-dominated country, with a mandatory two-year military conscription for men, has become the male makeup capital of the world....
...
Kim Jong-hoon, a 27-year-old tech industry worker in Paju, said the endless media exposure to famous men with perfect skin helped steer his progression from soap and water to an elaborate regime that includes as many as eight steps, from cleanser to eye cream and lotion to a small amount of makeup powder.'

Title IX Hurt Men’s Sports at Olympics

Mastodon · 18 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminist-imposed gender quotas hurt us at the Olympics in events which our Nation once dominated. The systematic elimination of certain men’s sports from colleges has weakened our competitiveness. We won only four medals in all of men’s wrestling, less than half the total won by Iran, and only a fraction of the medals won by Russia in this masculine sport. Wrestling is an immensely popular and valuable sport; it’s inexpensive and safer than other sports. Wrestling develops discipline in boys. Many high-achievers, such as Donald Rumsfeld and pro-life attorney Phill Kline, developed their toughness as wrestlers.

But although tens of thousands of high schools have thriving wrestling programs for boys, at the college level Title IX gender quotas have cancelled wrestling at all but a fraction of colleges. Many hundreds of successful college men’s wrestling programs have been eliminated, not for financial reasons, but due to Title IX gender quotas. These quotas typically require that the percentage of men and women in intercollegiate sports at a college equal the percentage of men and women enrolled as students, even though many colleges have become 60% women and only 40% men.'

Circumcision as a Weapon Against HIV

Mastodon · 18 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Bill and Melinda Gates Foundation is supporting the wider use of circumcision its propagation and the World Health Organization is being urged to do the same, with critics arguing that any such campaign carries with it the real danger that societies in Africa, where the AIDS prevention efforts are mostly focused, will result in the large scale circumcising of infants who have no choice in the matter.

It should be noted that female circumcision has nothing to do with health. It is nothing more than the practice of female genital mutilation and is a gross insult to womanhood. It stems from male fears of women's sexuality and usually involves cutting out the clitoris, which is enormously painful though milder versions which only involve trimming the labia may have no more effect on ability to be aroused than the male counterpart.'

SAVE: Tell Secretary of Education Arne Duncan, False Accusers Must be Held Accountable

Matt · 19 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The U.S. Department of Education (DED)'s 2011 sexual assault directive has resulted in a number of false allegations and wrongful convictions. High profile cases involve the University of Hawaii at Manoa, the University of North Dakota, Cornell University, the University of North Carolina, Brown University, Xavier University, Yale University, and the University of Montana.

Learn more at: http://www.accusingu.org/

SAVE believes that holding false accusers accountable will result in a reduction of false allegations. Today, we're asking you to write to Secretary of Education Arne Duncan. Tell him, "False Accusers Must be Held Accountable!"

Secretary of Education Arne Duncan: arne.duncan-at-ed.gov

Oh behalf of every male student on campus, thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

"Support System Down" available on DVD

Matt · 19 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here. Available on Amazon.com here and from their own store here.

'The documentary film Support? System Down is an eye-opening account into divorce and custody issues in America. The shocking documentary exposes the truth of the "divorce industry" and child support system in America while touching on subjects such as Parental Alienation, Shared Parenting and Parenting Plans.'

Father-daughter dances banned in R.I. as 'gender discrimination'

Matt · 19 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Father-daughter dances and mother-son ballgames -- those cherished hallmarks of Americana -- have been banned in a Rhode Island school district after they were targeted by the American Civil Liberties Union.

The ACLU, the self-proclaimed guardian of the nation's liberty, says such events violate the state's gender-discrimination law. The organization challenged their existence following a complaint from a single mom who said her daughter was prevented from attending a father-daughter dance in the Cranston Public Schools district.

The story has created a furor both online as well as in Cranston, a community located south of Providence and considered one of the safest places in America.'

Some Religious Leaders See a Threat as Europe Grows More Secular

Matt · 20 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But the debate over ritual circumcision shows that the tensions extend even further.

Rabbi Goldberg does not seem especially worried. Anyone can file a complaint against anyone else in Germany, and he may never face formal charges. Rabbi Goldberg has not hired a lawyer and declined an offer from one who was willing to handle the case for free.

The more serious threat, in the eyes of Rabbi Goldberg and many Jews, Muslims and Christians in Europe, comes from what they see as an attack by secular society on religious ritual, on faith itself. A seemingly insignificant decision by a lower court in Cologne, against a doctor who circumcised a Muslim boy, has fed a rapidly spreading drive to criminalize a practice that is core to Jewish and Muslim belief.

...
Muslims express similar sentiments. “There are more than a few people who have something against Muslims and Jews, and they are taking advantage of this,” said Aiman A. Mazyek, chairman of the Central Committee of Muslims in Germany. “They can hide behind this discussion. They can say what they always wanted to say.”
...
“In Judaism, the health of the baby is more important than anything,” Rabbi Goldberg said. The harm, he added, would come if the baby was not circumcised. “A man who is not circumcised cannot understand the context of the Bible,” he said. “It is very, very important.”'

Australia: Woman jailed for torturing bed-wetting boy

Minuteman · 20 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A woman who tortured a six-year-old boy with lit matches and heated knives as punishment for wetting the bed has been sentenced to four years behind bars.

Mango Ahmed Adan, 22, also tied the child up and locked him inside a small garden shed, the Brisbane District Court heard on Thursday.

...

The court heard Adan put tape over the boy's mouth, held him down over some steps in her yard and asked his sister to hold a heated knife against his face; which she did.

Adan then took a heated knife and put it against his back.

On a separate occasion, Adan held lit matches to the boy's legs, the court heard.

...

Defence lawyer Debra Wardle told the court Adan, who grew up in Somalia, had been subject to similar forms of punishment from her grandmother.

"I'm told that she has scarring to her chest and belly area and back from knives," Ms Wardle said.'

New resource will try to help close state's college gender gap

Mastodon · 20 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SALT LAKE CITY — Education officials want to close the gap between male and female college degree earners in Utah and are hoping the Utah Women and Education Initiative and its newly launched website will provide a path to achievement.

The initiative's director, Mary Ann Holladay, said this step is a continuation of a task force convened by Gov. Gary Herbert in 2011, which looked at the barriers women encounter in pursuing college degrees.

Utah has the worst gender gap in the country for post-secondary degree earners, and officials say closing that gap is key to achieving Herbert's Prosperity 2020 goal of 66 percent of Utah's workforce holding a post-secondary degree or certification by the year 2020.'

F&F: Child Support Guidelines Make Fathers ATM

Matt · 21 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The formula for the Massachusetts Child Support Guidelines is excessive and flawed. I am a divorced mother of two daughters who mediated my child support with my ex-husband. We did it so that we had EQUAL income in order that we could provide EQUAL homes for our children. Why? Because it was the right and moral thing to do.

Massachusetts hides behind the premise that these guidelines are in the best interest of the children. The application of these guidelines does NOT follow its own principles, the main one being # 2 “to encourage joint parental responsibility for child support”. There’s nothing “joint” about these guidelines. If we had gone through the Child Support Guidelines, my children’s father would not have been able to provide a comfortable home for his children when they were with him and little money to entertain them. There is no way that my ex-husband and myself spend 30% of our income to support our children each year and my kids live pretty well.'

MN woman accused of making nephew ride in trunk to protect her Lexus' seats

Mastodon · 21 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'We all know that water and leather don't mix, but we also know (or at least we should) that kids in trunks don't mix, either. A woman in Minnesota is in hot water after allegedly making her 11-year-old nephew ride home in the trunk of her Lexus after riding a water ride at a local amusement park.

...

The boy's grandmother, 14-year-old sister and another child passenger were also in the vehicle, and while the grandmother was "uneasy" about him riding in the trunk, she didn't want to question the aunt's decision.

According to reports, McCarty was charged with gross-misdemeanor child endangerment, and, if convicted, could face up to a year in prison and as much as $3,000 in fines.'

Judge issues light sentence for female embezzler becasue she had "childhood issues"

Minuteman · 22 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Between September 2 and October 29 of 2010, Martin stole tens of thousands of dollars from the bank by purposely entering incorrect cheque details into the system.

The 24-year-old then spent the money on a breast enlargement, $2600 worth of dental work, liposuction, jewellery from Tiffany's and nights out where she would spend money on drinks and drugs.
...
When she was arrested, Martin claimed she had earned the thousands of dollars by working as an escort and being "a common prostitute".
...

Recorder Jeremy Wright jailed Martin for 52 weeks, taking into consideration she has been suffering "issues" since she was 11.

"Your activity has been aggravated, to some extent, by the fact that suspicion would automatically be thrown on others, even if no other investigation took place," he said.

"You are not [your son's] sole carer, you leave him in the care of your parents whenever you like. Considering the seriousness of the crime... it seems to me a mockery if I didn't send you to prison right away."'

Israel: Feminist NGOs say drilling female-named gas fields demeans women

Mastodon · 23 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"We regret that the people who picked the names 'Myra' and 'Sarah' imagined in their minds women when they thought of land for drilling. I am sorry to have to surprise you, but our names and our bodies are not for drilling, and the giving of such nicknames strengthens the perception of women as objects for penetration and drilling," said a group of women's organizations.
...
The organizations added, "The groups picking the names should immediately stop thinking about using women's names for drilling, and realize that, consciously or not, they are lending a hand to the kind of dialogue that objectifies and demeans women. We regret that the people engaged in critical issues like drilling for natural gas, we are forced to deal with hidden chauvinistic messages in these issues."

The women's organizations have apparently forgotten that the oil and gas exploratory licenses were often named for women family members of the geologists responsible for mapping the licenses. For example, the Tamar discovery is named for the granddaughter of geologist Yossi Langotski, and Myra and Sarah were named for the daughters of Petromed Corporation geologist David Peace.'

Women's Center of Southeasern Connecticut Reaches Out To Male Victims

Mastodon · 23 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What's in a name? When it comes to a man seeking help from a sexual assault or domestic abuse, it can mean everything.

The Women's Center of Southeastern Connecticut presented its new name, Safe Futures, to more than 60 people at an event at the Mystic Hilton Thursday night.

Last year, 26 percent of the people served by the newly renamed Safe Futures were men and boys, said Catherine Zeiner, executive director of the organization. It was less than 9 percent in 1998.

"Just imagine being a male victim of sexual assault or domestic violence and trying to get over this stigma to ask for help and finding out the only place to get help is a place called the Women's Center."'

Welsh men speak of the domestic abuse they suffered for new S4C show

Mastodon · 23 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MALE domestic abuse victims who have suffered harrowing violence at the hands of their girlfriends tell their stories in a new S4C documentary this week.

O'r Galon: Cariad sy'n Curo features two men who break their silence to describe how their partners became angry and abusive, even cutting them with knives.

According to police figures, the number of female perpetrators in Wales and England has increased from 800 in 2004-05 to more than 4,000 in 2010-11.

The problem is more widespread than people realise – and the programme, screened next Wednesday, asks if there is enough support available for the victims.'

UK: Modern men expect women to go Dutch on dates now there's equality in the workplace

Mastodon · 23 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It seems that chivalry is dead thanks to growing financial pressures and greater equality at work as men are becoming increasingly unwilling to cover the cost of a first date.

The latest survey revealed that most men would now ask for a contribution from a female partner on a first date with the vast majority (51 per cent) happier to go Dutch and split the bill.

The true gentlemen out there are numbered - with just under one third of those polled saying they would still pay for a first meeting.

The remaining one in five said they would be happy to pay for parts of the night, such as a round of drinks, but would not be willing to cover the whole evening.

Shockingly a penny-grabbing five per cent of those quizzed said they would be happy to reverse roles and allow their female companion to fund their evening.

Increasing financial pressures was cited as the number one reason behind the decision however many of those polled stated that they felt it was unfair, or even a little embarrassing to pay for the date.'

Two female teachers from the same school district charged with having sex with students on same day

Mastodon · 23 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two female teachers from the same school district have been arrested on the same day for having sex with teenage students.

Kristy Risell, 31, and Jean Kleckner, 47, were Berks County teachers when the alleged sexual relations took place.

English teacher Kristy Risel, 31, who worked at Daniel Boone Area High School, is accused of having sex with a 15-year-old boy between January and April this year.
...
Kleckner first abused the girl in 2008, after giving her alcohol on a camping trip and continued to abuse her on a regular basis into 2009, mostly in Kleckner's home, detectives said.

Police say the 47-year-old also became a field hockey coach this year.

Kleckner and Risell are the fourth and fifth Berks educators to be charged with sexually abusing students in the past year, Chief County Detective Michael J. Gombar said.'

Loss of 'breadwinner' role driving rise in suicide among middle aged men, Samaritans suggest

Mastodon · 23 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Family breakdown, improved rights for women and the collapse of traditional male-dominated industries have combined to create a crisis of “masculine identity”, a panel of psychologists, economists and social scientists concluded.

Together with male traits such as an unwillingness to talk about personal problems and heavier use of drink and drugs, it means they are now at far greater risk of suicidal tendencies than anyone else, the study commissioned by the Samaritans found.

Men aged between 35 and 55 are more than four times as likely to take their own lives as women of the same age, and more than twice as likely as younger men, according to official figures.

And middle aged men from poor areas are up to 10 times more likely to commit suicide than other groups of people.

The report argues that the pressure to live up to a “gold standard” of masculinity – involving providing for the family – can turn personal troubles such as losing a job into a crisis in a way that it might not for women.'

German upper house seeks women quota in boardrooms

Mastodon · 23 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'BERLIN — The German Parliament's upper house is calling for a mandatory quota for women on companies' supervisory boards.

The house, which represents Germany's 16 states, voted Friday for a motion that would require large companies to have at least 20 percent of women on their supervisory boards - the equivalent of a U.S. board of directors - starting in 2018, and 40 percent five years later, German news agency dapd reported.

The motion now goes to Parliament's lower house, which Chancellor Angela Merkel's center-right coalition controls. The coalition is divided on the issue and it's unclear whether a quota could secure a majority there.

The quota was proposed in the upper house by center-left state governments. Two states led by Merkel's conservative party joined ranks with them on Friday.'

The Inquisition Comes to College Campuses

Mastodon · 23 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Veteran Hamilton County, Ohio prosecutor Joe Deters called the process “fundamentally unfair” and “seriously flawed,” and he was right. What he didn’t say was that the process is also the law of the land.

The process Deters was talking about was the one used to expel budding basketball star Dezmine Wells from Xavier University. A young woman had leveled sexual abuse allegations at Wells and, as night follows day, he was “convicted” by a panel of students, faculty and administrators, and expelled from school. Dez Wells had no prior offenses of any kind on his record, but, apparently based on her word against his, he has now been forever branded with a scarlet ‘A’ for ‘abuser.’ The university denied Wells the right to an attorney to assist the 19-year-old in defending himself.

...

In addition, colleges and universities are required by federal regulations under Title IX to try claims of sexual misconduct under the lowest standard of evidence in the legal system – preponderance of evidence. That means if a jury or other fact-finder concludes that there is the slightest bit more evidence supporting the complaint than not, then the accused must be found guilty and punished. That’s what happened to Dez Wells. Often, a woman’s tears fall heavily on the scales of justice.'

Deters: No charges against former Xavier player Dez Wells

Mastodon · 23 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'One week after Xavier expelled sophomore Dez Wells for “a serious violation of the Code of Student Conduct,” Hamilton County prosecutor Joe Deters said no criminal charges would be filed against the basketball player.

A Hamilton County grand jury declined Tuesday to indict Wells on a charge of sexual assault.

Deters assigned senior assistant prosecutors to the case to review evidence and make a presentation to the grand jury, which they did Monday.
...
A Xavier University Conduct board made up of faculty, students and administrators determined that Wells was responsible for a serious violation of the code of conduct. The punishment for the violation, the school said in an Aug. 21 statement, is expulsion from the university.'

Parental Alienation Not A Mental Disorder, American Psychiatric Association Says

Mastodon · 24 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK -- Rebuffing an intensive lobbying campaign, a task force of the American Psychiatric Association has decided not to list the disputed concept of parental alienation in the updated edition of its catalog of mental disorders.

The term conveys how a child's relationship with one estranged parent can be poisoned by the other parent, and there's broad agreement that it sometimes occurs in the context of divorces and child-custody disputes.
...
"The bottom line – it is not a disorder within one individual," said Dr. Darrel Regier, vice chair of the task force drafting the manual. "It's a relationship problem – parent-child or parent-parent. Relationship problems per se are not mental disorders."
...
Among those on the other side of the debate, which has flared since the 1980s, are feminists and advocates for battered women who consider "parental alienation syndrome" to be an unproven and potentially dangerous concept useful to men trying to deflect attention from their abusive behavior.'

More Americans now commit suicide than are killed in car crashes as miserable economy takes its toll

Matt · 24 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

It takes a non-US news source to report this, too. And as already reported, we can be pretty sure the rise is attributable to male suicide. If it were females committing suicide more like this, you can be certain it'd be front-page news in the US MSM. Excerpt:

"Suicide is the cause of more deaths than car crashes, according to an alarming new study.

The number of people who commit suicide in the U.S. has drastically increased while deaths from car accidents have dropped, making suicide the leading cause of injury death.

Suicides via falls or poisoning have risen significantly and experts fear that there could be many more unaccounted for, particularly in cases of overdose.

'Suicides are terribly under-counted,' said Ian Rockett, author of the study, published on Thursday in the American Journal of Public Health.

'I think the problem is much worse than official data would lead us to believe. We have a situation that has gotten out of hand.'"

Equality and empathy may curb domestic violence

Mastodon · 25 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MYTH: Domestic violence is not a serious problem in the U.S. or in Georgia.

FACT: Battering is the single largest cause of injury to women in the United States. It tops mugging, automobile accidents and rape, combined (NCADV 2003). In 2009, Georgia was rated the 10th highest state in the nation for the rate at which men kill women. In 2010, Georgia residents mourned at least 130 domestic violence related deaths.'

AVFM Has a Forum

Rog · 25 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

AVFM has put up a forum for the use of the MRM community; sign up and support them!

Study: Castration Adds Years to Men's Lives

Mastodon · 25 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PROBLEM: It's suspected that there is a biological trade-off between reproduction and longevity, the theory being that our mechanisms of repairing damaged genetic material are limited and thus relegated to the most evolutionarily advantageous repair work. Propagating our genes, it would follow, trumps living to see/attempting to control the lives of proceeding generations. The male sex hormone is implicated in this theory, and taking into account that fact that women tend to live significantly longer than men, may be responsible for limiting men's lifespan.'

Education Nation: Rural Arkansas Town Rethinks High School

Matt · 25 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Notice everyone is doing better, and the article mentions that men in particular respond to it. I only wish that I had gone to a high school like this one! Excerpt:

'Mountain Home Career Academies High School has taken a big gamble over the last decade. It transformed itself from a traditional high school into one consisting of three academies--engineering, communications, and healthcare. Unlike many high schools which have career mentoring programs tucked inside a regular curriculum, Mountain Home is "wall to wall" academies. Each of its 875 students were tested as freshmen, and based on their learning styles, skills, and interests, the students have chosen which academy to join.
...
Thomas McLees is a senior who moved here from Montana, where he attended a traditional high school. After some thought, he chose Mountain Home's engineering academy. "I knew I was more 'hands on' because all my life I had been taking apart computers, toasters, my mom got really made at me for that." He comes from a long line of military veterans. "I want to make military body armor and medical stuff."

Do career academies better prepare students for life after high school? Social policy research group MDRC looked at results from nine academies in or near large urban school districts and found that graduates earned, on average, 11 percent more over eight years compared to non-academy peers. The effect was concentrated among men. Nearly all academy students--95 percent--graduated or completed their GEDs.'

Violence: It's men's fault

charlie · 26 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

A new "documentary" film is being premiered by Twin Cities Public Television this week. Given the fact that the promoter is a member of the Minnesota domestic violence network, the content will likely be long on political content and short on facts. Hopefully, true social scientists will view it and debunk it before it gets wider distribution. The promoter, Minnesota State legislator Michael Paymar, is well known for his efforts in characterizing fathers as being violent and preventing them from having custody following divorce or separation. Link here. Excerpt:

'Join tpt at a pre-broadcast screening of a new film that explores cultural and historic beliefs about manhood that allow men to exploit and hurt women – with impunity.

With Impunity: Men & Gender Violence engages the thinking of leading historians, sociologists and practitioners to examine our past, cultural realities and options for ending gender-based violence. This program is a tpt MN co-production with Education for Critical Thinking.

A free community preview screening will be held this Thursday at 7 p.m. at William Mitchell College of Law, 875 Summit Avenue in St. Paul.

The event will be hosted by Eric Janus, President and Dean of William Mitchell College of Law and the discussion of the film will feature With Impunity developer Michael Paymar and producer Daniel Pierce Bergin. The event is free and open to the public; no reservations necessary.'

Prep Volleyball: Boys hope to get their spot on the court

Mastodon · 26 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ROCKTON — Matt DePauw is one of the best in his sport in the area, and he's in the middle of his senior year.

But instead of being out on the court, DePauw spends all his time on the bench, watching.

"It's been hard for him, because there aren't a lot of opportunities around for boys who want to play volleyball," Lori DePauw, his mom, says.

Matt is the manager for Hononegah's varsity girls volleyball team. A club player for four years with Club Fusion in Marengo, he is one of the a few boys volleyball players in the area who was never given the opportunity to play for his school.'

New Zealand: All men have gone on strike

Mastodon · 26 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now that all the naughty ladies have control of the earth, men are staging a revolt. They're doing this by not going to university, not marrying, and working in low-paid jobs. Some of them are refusing to work at all, in protest against the government's secret plan to give ALL the tax dollars to women.

That's the thesis of Male Strike: Society's War on Men, a new book that makes me want to stab my eyes out so I can never be tempted to even peek inside its pages, ever. Its author is men's rights activist and psychologist Dr Helen Smith, who calls this imaginary male revolt "Going Galt". (Inspired by the Ayn Rand novel Atlas Shrugged, in which a character by the name of John Galt leads an industrial strike against exploitation.)

...

But, "what Kay Hymowitz calls the perpetual adolescence of men is just men understanding that the cards are dealt against them," reckons Dr Smith, Chum of Men. Except she's hardly doing men any favours either, painting them as vindictive saps hell bent on self-sabotaging to avenge the world's women. Even if we have rearranged the "system" so Man Dollars fall in our harlot laps, as we swan about in search of ATMS. I mean men. Muhahahaha...'

Dodge: Are women being paid less for the same work?

Mastodon · 26 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I have become increasingly disturbed by the so-called "feminist" arguments made by some regarding the "War on Women." It seems we've reached an age of political discourse where women are receiving the deference of yesteryear, but not the respect of a rigorous examination of their argument — which, if true, would be grievous.

In this piece, I will examine the feminist claim that women are not paid as much as men for equal work.
...
Let's say, for the sake of argument, that there is a discrepancy. These feminists argue that it exists because of sexism without addressing the "equal work" part of the argument. But look at the careers women choose compared to men. They are generally less dangerous, lower-paying, require less travel, are more frequently part-time and more likely to be volunteer work, according to the 2011 White House report "Women in America." Not only is their work "not equal" on average, which closes the alleged gap significantly, but it seems to be a conscious choice.

To hammer home the point, in 2012 the Census Bureau released data demonstrating that single women's pay has outstripped their male counterpart's pay in metropolitan areas of the country. So does sexism only start after women wed? The truth is, when the stork brings little messy, crying incentives to shackle earning potential into women's lives, women have increasingly chosen a balance between work and childcare since the passage of the Equal Pay Act of 1963. Gary Becker even got a Nobel for saying as much.'

Police charge woman with falsifying rape claim, fraud

Mastodon · 26 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ST. GEORGE — After months of investigating an alleged rape that happened on a public trail, St. George Police have charged the alleged victim with fraud and filing a false police report.

St. George Police Capt. Kyle Whitehead said the fraud charge stems from money Rutz obtained from the Utah State Crime Victims Reparation fund. Whitehead said Rutz received more than $25,000 from the fund.

Rutz was booked Tuesday into the Purgatory Correctional Facility on $12,500 bail. She has since posted bail and been released.'

YouTube: Sexual Harassment Hysteria in Lower Education

Mastodon · 26 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'One of the most alienating messages that schools send to boys is the idea that they are inherently dangerous and predatory. This is especially true in the area of sexual harassment. After a few decades of one-sided reforms and increasingly punitive reforms to education policy, schools now face fines, investigations, or lawsuits if female students suffer any kind of discomfort which can be defined under the broad umbrella of harassment. Schools are hyper-vigilant toward any kind of misbehavior on the part of boys, to the extent that boys who exhibit quasi-offensive behavior (or behavior that would be inoffensive or non-threatening to most people) are being labeled as predatory - labels they inevitably internalize -- and being punished for it. I'll give numerous examples in this video.'

Part Two is here.

'Bias Persists for Women of Science, a Study Finds'

Matt · 26 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Hang onto your lab-coats, STEM educators! You are about to feel the same righteous wrath of feminism that has been inflicted on the liberal arts lo these many years. Hell hath no fury as feminists with some kind of study decrying female victimization paired with the enabling power of The State to come up with new regulations and enforcement units to make damn sure that there are AT LEAST as many women in a given field as men (but not the other way around). Soon college-aged men will be blocked out of classes like they are from sporting opportunities because there aren't enough female students taking Physics in some given year. Don't believe it could get that crazy? Really, you'd doubt that by now? Mark my words. Article here. Excerpt:

'Science professors at American universities widely regard female undergraduates as less competent than male students with the same accomplishments and skills, a new study by researchers at Yale concluded.

As a result, the report found, the professors were less likely to offer the women mentoring or a job. And even if they were willing to offer a job, the salary was lower.

The bias was pervasive, the scientists said, and probably reflected subconscious cultural influences rather than overt or deliberate discrimination.

Female professors were just as biased against women students as their male colleagues, and biology professors just as biased as physics professors — even though more than half of biology majors are women, whereas men far outnumber women in physics.'

Israel: Wave of Arrests of Father's Rights Activists

Mastodon · 27 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Several campaigners for fathers' rights and shared parenting after divorce have been arrested or summoned for questioning in recent days and a Knesset member who sides with the fathers' movement says a "militant feminist crackdown" is under way.

One activist father, Guy Shamir, has been held in jail for 21 days. He was arrested when Haifa Family Court Judge Esperanza Alon's clerk claimed that he used a threatening phrase in a telephone conversation with her. Shamir says he told the clerk: "The judge should mind her own children and I will mind mine." The clerk claimed that he told the judge to "mind her children" in a threatening way.

An attorney who heads the Coalition for Children and Families was questioned and placed under three-day house arrest regarding alleged threatening statements on the internet. His computer was confiscated. The organization recently organized a study day in Tel Aviv's Municipal Library regarding anti-father bias in the Family Courts.'

'Fathers Need Apply'

Mastodon · 27 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'The Chicago teachers' union is citing poverty, violence, and homelessness as reasons for student failure, problems they maintain are beyond their ability to solve and are the responsibility of society at large. But here is why the teachers' unions deserve disapproval, despite having some right on their side: They do not cite the main cause of all of these problems, fatherlessness, and the veritable culture of single-mother families in the areas their schools serve.

Why are they unwilling to bring this problem to the attention of society at large and demand action on it? Such a demand might actually do some good coming from the nation's teachers, especially with attention focused on the crisis in Chicago right now. Is it because they do not wish to interfere with the feminist-inspired idea of women's independence from men? The idea that women should be able to do anything and everything without men and that society exists to enable them to do so? If that is the case, then the unions are helping to perpetuate the problems that they see in their schools and are sacrificing the interests of the children to the supposed interests of women according to feminism.'

'Top 3 Must See Domestic Abuse PSA's'

Mastodon · 27 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At the Clinton Global initiative conference, Secretary of State Hillary Clinton said in her speech on Monday, "Violence can never be justified."

Domestic violence, sexual violence, and stalking -- could also be defined as bullying -- are not issues exaggerated in crime dramas on primetime TV in the US. Here's the painful truth: domestic violence is spreading, and destroying the lives of millions and millions of people. The Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) found in a 2011 survey that "these types of violence affect the health of millions of adults." The CDC added, "On average, 24 people per minute are victims of rape, physical violence, or stalking by an intimate partner . . . Over the course of a year, that equals more than 12 million women and men." It should also be kept in mind that these statistics are based upon survivors of abuse who were willing to share their stories. Unfortunately, not everyone is a survivor. Many people remain silent victims, and their stories go untold.'

Matt Gurney: University-run legal aid forgets justice applies to men too

Mastodon · 27 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than 40 years ago in Ontario, University of Windsor law students began volunteering their time to assist those in need of legal counsel, if the accused met certain financial criteria. The program continues today, under the banner of Community Legal Aid. Not that those first student defenders would likely recognize their creation in its current, grotesquely prejudiced form.

...But it still gives the students real-life experience handling real-life cases, while providing a service to those in need.

Not all in need, however. Community Legal Aid will no longer take on any domestic abuse cases, it announced in an email, “unless the alleged offender is a woman.” In that case, it will work to find a lawyer who will take the case for free, or failing that, take the case itself. Men are on their own.

This astonishing decision, reported by the Windsor Star, has been swiftly condemned by the local legal defence community. But Community Legal Aid isn’t backing down. Camille Cameron, dean of the law school, told the Windsor Star that the students can’t be expected to take on every case that comes to them, and pointed out that similar programs run at other schools don’t take on domestic abuse cases. “We are talking about a student legal aid clinic at a university. We’re not talking about a private law firm, or even a legal aid office,” she told the paper.'

Relatedly, on YouTube: Windsor Lawyer On Legal Aid
U. of Windsor contact form here.

Men Deserve the Chance to Speak Out on Abortion, Too

Mastodon · 27 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's not unusual to hear pro-aborts say that men don't have a right to speak out against abortion. They don't deserve a seat at the table. And now one pro-abortion advocate is going so far as saying that she wants to silence the voices of all men on abortion. According to this writer, who blogs at a website called Abortion Gang, because men can't get pregnant, they shouldn't be allowed to express any opinion on abortion whatsoever.

> I want to silence all the male voices in the abortion discussion.
>
> ...The main anti-choice voices for the U.S. are also all men. In fact, the majority of persons in government who are anti-choice, are men. And none of them can get pregnant. The people who are making decisions that affect the lives of women, CAN'T EVEN GET PREGNANT!
>
> And so, I want to silence the voices of all men. I am so tired of men giving their opinion about abortion. I am so tired of it that I am willing to sacrifice the voices of all the men who support women. I truly believe that if men were no longer allowed to speak on the topic of abortion, every country would be pro-choice. Anti-choice women get abortions too. Abortion crosses every religious, cultural, and political line. The only line it can't cross is biological sex, and that is where the problem lies.

And she wonders why people equate feminism with misandry.

Most of her argument is factually incorrect – the majority of women are pro-life, after all – but let's just ignore that and focus on the topic at hand. Do men deserve the right to offer an opinion on abortion?

The answer is absolutely, without a doubt, yes.'

"Support?" will be screening at the Free Thinking Film Festival Nov. 1-4, 2012

Matt · 27 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Schedule of films here.

"Saturday, November 3, 2012
Room 156
5:00 PM

This American film looks at the everyday issues of stress, family, struggle and suffering that families experience when they are put through the detrimental maneuvers of the family court system. This shocking documentary shows how fathers are forced to pay exorbitant amounts of money for child support and how many fathers lose access to their children."

SAVE: VAWA: Grave Threat to Civil Liberties

Matt · 27 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Our nation's system of laws is rooted in the notion that rights are God-given, and these rights cannot be revoked at the whim of government bureaucrats.

The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), advanced by then-senator Joe Biden in 1994, assumes the opposite: that fundamental protections and guarantees of the Bill of Rights are subject to negotiation and "reinterpretation."

SAVE has just released a report, "An Assault Upon our Civil Rights," which documents how VAWA has rolled back a broad range of civil liberties that most Americans take for granted: Equal protection under law, the presumption of innocence, due process, the right to freedom from undue government interference, and many more.

For 12 fundamental rights, the SAVE report identifies the relevant Constitutional amendments, pertinent Supreme Court rulings, and an estimate how many persons whose rights are removed each year. The SAVE report can be seen here: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/SAVE-Assault-Civil-Rights.pdf

Right now Congress is negotiating over 2 competing versions of the VAWA reauthorization: S. 1925, sponsored by Patrick Leahy (D-VT), and H.R. 4970, sponsored by Rep. Sandy Adams (R-FL). Some believe neither version will be enacted into law this year, which means Congress will have a second bite at the apple in 2013.

Stay tuned as this sentinel Congressional debate continues over the fate of our civil liberties.

Should Chivalry Be Dead?

Mastodon · 28 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It didn't sit right with Lawrence E. Adjah that there were a lot of women standing up during their Caltrain commute, so he decided to take a stand. Adjah, a media and entertainment entrepreneur in Palo Alto, decided to make an announcement, asking for seated able-bodied men to give their seats to standing ladies. Passengers complied and Adjah posted a picture of the standing men and seated women to his Facebook page with the caption, "We did it! All the men agreed to stand! There are no women on this Caltrain standing. Small victories family, small victories." Gathering dozens of likes in minutes, the post stood as a testament to chivalry not being entirely dead. However, nice things rarely go rewarded, and a vocal minority of disapproving men, presumably Adjah's friends, voiced their opinion on Adjah's activism, claiming that chivalry should be dead, citing gender equality as the basis for dismissing Adjah's efforts.

While gender equality is an interesting premise for the argument against Adjah's efforts, it became clear from the negativity (and negative depiction of the women who might avail themselves of a seat that could be occupied by a dude's derriere) that the dislike of this was about a deeper hatred of women. Take this comment from one of Adjah's Facebook friends, for example: "That's that stuff that be driving the Female Entitlement Mindset. If you can run from store to store for four hours straight, then you can stand on the damned commuter train for a half hour. Sheeeit." The commenter followed up on the ""beggin' ass, free-ridin', tackheaded broads" Adjah was serving, continuing to say that "those "chicks" who want men to give up seats so that they can sit their lazy, entitled asses down are prime examples of the selfishness... [a]s much as it may surprise you to read, there are some men who actually BELIEVE in the notion of gender equality."'

Uganda: Tororo Women Discourage Men From Circumcision

Mastodon · 28 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tororo women are discouraging their husbands from undergoing circumcision, health authorities have disclosed.

Willy Mungoma, the district health educator, said most of the women think their husbands may take long to heal, thereby denying them sex.

"In our routine sensitisation programmes and radio tallkshows, women challenge us to explain how long their husbands would take to heal. This is because they think taking a long time to heal would make them miss sex," he said.

...

He urged parents to support the education of their children, saying this would eliminate early marriages and prevent them from engaging in sex before they are 18.

Participants recommended that health centres start encouraging the distribution of condoms to pupils and students who may need them. This Ministry of Education and Sports banned the distribution of condoms in schools.'

Kenya: Women Urged to Back Circumcision

Mastodon · 28 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A task force in Nyanza wants women to encourage their husbands and boyfriends to get circumcised.

The chairman of the task force on male circumcision, Jackson Kioko, told a stakeholders' forum yesterday that women must be incorporated in the programme for better results.

"Now we must reach out to men who have been slow to embrace medical male circumcision despite being aware of its benefits. HIV peaks after 24 years. Therefore, those men at 25 and above are at risk and in need of VMMC services. Reaching out to this age group will require women," said Kioko.

Kioko said women will be key driving forces behind the attainment of the targeted age group since male circumcision involve their health as well. He said the success achieved in circumcising over 500,000 men was due to the influence and role of the women in inspiring men to go for the cut and called on the women to continue with the campaign.'

New Jersey bill allowing purported DV victims to testify remotely by camera advances

Mastodon · 28 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TRENTON — A state Assembly committee approved a bill Thursday that would allow some domestic violence victims to testify remotely on camera, despite questions over whether it's constitutional.

Sandy Clark, executive director of the New Jersey Coalition for Battered Women, said the legislation might encourage some victims to participate in the prosecution of their attackers.

But some lawmakers questioned whether the law would violate the provision in the Constitution allowing suspects to confront their accusers. The Democrat-led panel voted to advance the bill while the constitutional question is researched.'

Male teachers can paddle female students in Texas

Mastodon · 28 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I do not believe in paddling children but for some reason the outrage only exists towards male teachers paddling female students. Excerpt:

'About 75 percent of the state's school districts use corporal punishment, including Springtown, a town of about 2,700 located about 30 miles northwest of Fort Worth, according to People Opposed to Paddling Students, a group based in Houston. Some of the major districts, including Fort Worth, don't paddle students.

"It is never OK to hit a child. ... Men should not be padding teenage girls, because there is a sexual connotation with teen girls but also with teen boys," said Jimmy Dunne, president of People Opposed to Paddling Students.

State Rep. Alma Allen, D-Houston, thinks schools should never spank children, but her bill to abolish corporal punishment in Texas schools never passed. She said the compromised version of her bill, which did become law, was that parents could opt in.'

Canada: Teacher sex trial: Judge acquits woman of sexually assaulting male student

Mastodon · 28 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A judge has acquitted a Toronto teacher of sexually assaulting a former student when he was 15.

Ontario Superior Court Justice John McMahon delivered his verdict Friday.

The complainant “may have been telling the truth” but his evidence was inconsistent, both internally and with some of the facts, McMahon said

“It is unsafe in law to base a conviction on his evidence,” the judge said.

While McMahon found the teacher to be largely credible, he said Gowans showed poor judgment in getting so close to her former pupil, and could not accept that she had no idea he was sexually obsessed with her.'

F&F: Speak Out About Ohio Child Support Guidelines

Matt · 28 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The most important things we do for our children are personal: we support them, we feed them, we convey to them our values, and we nurture their development into competent, self-reliant adults. But sometimes there are very important political things we need to do for our children. Now is one of those times.

Federal law requires that states review their child support guidelines every four years. The work of the 2013 Ohio Child Support Guidelines Advisory Council is underway now. The Council is seeking your input. And Fathers and Families of Ohio wants to make sure they receive it.'

Virtual House Arrest Ordered for Minors in East St. Louis

Matt · 28 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. So how many girls out after 10:00 or truant during school days or hanging out on street corners do you suppose will get stopped and questioned or arrested by the police? The violence they are dealing with is indeed tragic. But does 4 recent killings warrant threatening calling in the National Guard? For every one murderous young man there are many thousands who are not; is taking away their right to go on about their business in keeping with the right to be presumed innocent? Violence in cities like Detroit and Camden is a serious problem, but are their mayors taking such drastic measures? In essence I see this as basically outlawing the public appearance of under-aged males for the better part of most days. Excerpt:

'EAST ST. LOUIS (KMOX) – Angered by the recent murders of four young people, the mayor announced today that police are going to impose drastic new measurers to keep teens off the streets.

“There is something going on in the community at this point that we’ve got to safeguard them and keep them off the streets,” Mayor Alvin Parks said. “There are people shooting at each other for no reason whatsoever.”

Among the new rules:

Minors are to be off the streets at ten o’clock on both weeknights and weekend nights.

Minors on the street during school hours will be arrested on sight.

Police will also perform I.D. checks on street corners and conduct gun searches, and Parks says he won’t hesitate to call in the National Guard if the spike in violence continues.'

Graduate schools follow trend of 3:4 M:F ratio in higher education

Matt · 28 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The title is "Enrollment Drops Again in Graduate Programs" but the real story is this: in grad school programs, 58% of enrollees are female. Yet is anyone saying this is a crisis that requires a Title IX-like attack to fix it like they would if the genders were reversed? No, you can hear a pin drop, the silence is so deafening. Article here. Excerpt:

'Enrollment in college is still climbing, but students are increasingly saying no to graduate school in the United States.

New enrollment in graduate schools fell last year for the second consecutive year, according to a report from the Council of Graduate Schools.
...
Women continued to outnumber men in the nation's postgraduate programs, 58 percent to 42 percent, in the 2011 report.'

That is a 16-point spread. What those numbers mean is that for every 100 women going to grad school, just over 72.4 men are going, for a difference of 27.6 students. That is not insignificant. If those numbers were reversed, do you suppose the government would be silent on the matter? Or indeed any number of other entities?

High-profile basketball player announces retirement to deal with abuse issues

Matt · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This kind of item usually doesn't get onto MANN but I felt I had to run it. Article here. This is an example of how much misery a man can sit on, just bluff his way through it, until he can't take it anymore. A lot of senseless tragedies unfold wherein a man just loses it one day and does great harm to himself, or to himself and others. And I am not just talking about violent harm, but things such as chronic substance abuse. Not surprisingly though that a man may end up this way, if he is abused as a child and told at every turn to "deal with it like a man", either explicitly or through the many numerous suggestions and examples all around him. So the take-home message is this: It's more important to get to feeling good about being alive and living life positively than to do yourself the disservice of trying to meet everyone else's expectations of you and forcing yourself to grin your way through it. Excerpt:

'On Thursday, Jessica Camerato of CSNNE.com published a story on Dooling's decision and the life experiences that went into it. It's a brave set of revelations from Dooling, who discusses his history of abuse and his hopes for the future. A small sampling of a must-read piece:
...
Years of repressed emotions came rushing back during this realization. Memories that Dooling had tried to bury were flooding out. "I actually had such a meltdown that I had to get professional help and I ended up in the hospital," said Dooling.

"It just all came to a head. To be honest with you, I blocked a lot of things out of my life. I'm a man who's been abused, sexually, emotionally, mentally. I've been abused in my life, and there's so many guys around the NBA who have been abused and I know it because I've been their therapist. I didn't even have the courage because I blocked it out so much that I couldn't even share that...'

NOW: Fall 2012 – Newsletter of the NOW Family Law Ad Hoc Advisory Committee

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Newsletter here. Excerpt:

'Dear NOW Leaders and Members,

The purpose of the Family Law Committee Newsletter is to provide continuing education about current news and information regarding the ongoing crisis for mothers and children in family courts. We hope you find the information we share with you of value as you go about your work on behalf of women and their families, and you are encouraged to share it with members of the public.

This Special Report of the NOW Family Law Ad Hoc Advisory Committee focuses on the destructive ability of abusive parents (usually the father) – aided by fathers' advocacy groups or fathers' rights groups – to deny the protective parent (usually the mother) custody of minor children. Discussed in this issue is how abusers deny custody, and the damage it causes to a half million or more children exposed to continuing physical, psychological and sexual abuse.

We agree with the Leadership Council on Child Abuse & Interpersonal Violence, as well as other anti-domestic violence and child welfare organizations that this phenomenon constitutes a national public health crisis. Discussed in this issue is how abusers are using family courts to deny custody to protective parents and the damage this causes to a half million or more children exposed to continuing physical, psychological and sexual abuse.
...

"Fathers' Rights" Activism

The following information presents NOW Foundation's views about fathers' rights groups and how their agenda harms the lives of mothers and their children during and after custody disputes. We wish to educate mothers, activists and the public about the adverse impact these groups have on protective mothers and children through their power to mislead and to control.

Background

Groups Differ in Focus - First, a note of clarification: fathers' custody activists or fathers' rights groups focus on divorce, custody and alleged gender discrimination in the courts; as opposed to the men's liberation groups who contend men are victims of gender inequality in general as the women's rights movement has grown. In our view, the term "fathers' rights" is misleading as no legal rights are denied to men because they are men or fathers. Additionally, we question calling the activism of those who promote fathers' custody a "movement." It is essentially a collection of small groups and networks across the U.S. and abroad who communicate primarily through the Internet. Activist numbers are relatively small, but their impact in family court proceedings has become significant and harmful to women.

Backlash Against Social Change - The so-called fathers' rights or men's rights movement began as a backlash against what some fathers perceived as unfair sole custody awards to mothers and the assignment of child support responsibilities to non-custodial dads. Additionally, the expansion of shelters, social services and legal aid for battered women, together with better job opportunities for women, made escape from a violent marriage easier for women, enabling many to obtain a divorce and seek custody of minor children. As with other major societal revolutions, gains made by the feminist movement and women's bid for equality prompted a backlash by men who felt threatened by changing roles.'

Men don heels to raise awareness for sexual assault

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'One Whistler RCMP sergeant found out what it was like to walk a mile in a woman's shoes when he donned high heels to raise awareness for violence against women, but feminism experts say the event may be counterproductive.

Sgt. Rob Knapton joined 30 other men who marched together in red high heels in Whistler Village on Sept. 23 to raise awareness for sexual assault and domestic violence against women.

...

"For us, the connection with 'sexual assault' is already embedded in "high heeled shoes" because they are culturally marked as 'feminine,'" the post said.

But founder of Vancouver-based the F Word: Feminist Media Collective Nicole Deagan said while the intentions of the event are good, associating high heels with sexual assault is a problem.

"While I really appreciate any effort made to bring awareness to violence against women, one of the big problems with associating high heels with sexual assault is it... perpetuates that assault is in any way connected to how women dress."

...

Associate professor for women's studies at Simon Fraser University Elise Chenier said while it may not be the best way to address violence against women, it's successfully draws attention to the issue.

"It seems to me a little bit odd, but the intention is to be playful, and it certainly has been successful getting media attention," she said.'

Skating solutions to boys' education

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'They don't tell you about indoor skateparks. They show you the ultrasound, they hand you the wrinkly baby and say, 'a little boy'. What they don't say is, 'you will spend every day of the school holidays at an indoor skatepark.'

My son is eight and rides a blue scooter. He got it for his birthday and for about ten minutes was content to ride it up and down the sidewalk in front of the house. Then he decided we should go to a small skatepark.
...
But then my son started school. He goes to a friendly little primary establishment where everyone knows him and he is making steady progress. But he doesn't love it. His handwriting is atrocious, he finds sitting for long periods a drag, and he doesn't understand why the girls are 'better at everything'.

He likes sport and art. Both of these involve, according to him, 'doing stuff' and not just sitting. I say to him that he has to learn to sit and that all of the other stuff is really important but I am starting to see his point.

And it is at Rampfest that I have seen it.
...
Schools have been battling with adolescent boys for centuries. Maybe it's time to start giving some ground. There are lessons to be learned in a big shed in Braybrook if you are willing to brave the cold and the music. Come by for a chat, I'll be at my table.'

Fox News: Women Earning Less Than Men "Is Not A National Problem"

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fox News dismissed the fact that women are paid less than men as "not a national problem." In fact, studies consistently show that an earnings discrepancy between men and women persists, even when accounting for a variety of factors.

...

Angle's assertion rested on a statement from U.S. Census Bureau spokesman David Johnson who recently stated: "We don't have a way of measuring equal pay for equal work. We try to compare the earnings of full time, year-round work between men and women."

Angle trumpeted the statement to mean that it's "not true" the assertion that women earn on average 77 cents for every dollar men earn. Angle also explained away the discrepancy by saying women often work less hours than men and that it's "the result of personal choices."

He added: "Now there may be some discrimination somewhere but it is not the national problem President Obama says he's fixing. In fact, analysts say young female college graduates now often make more than men."'

Busting Myths About Women in the Workplace

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In her book Women's Figures: An Illustrated Guide to the Economic Progress of Women, Furchtgott-Roth exposes these falsehoods and loose statements, asserting that women don't need special treatment to be equally competitive in the American workforce. The myth that a woman makes 78 cents on a man's dollar is a typical refrain used in mass media and a basis for affirmative action for women. Furchtgott-Roth explains, however, why this refrain as well as the "wage gap" and "glass ceiling" are in fact myths.

The statement that women get less pay for equal work is a false assertion that comes from comparing the earnings of men and women. First, Furchtgott-Roth says, the comparison lumps together men and women who work different numbers of hours. Often, a woman may choose to work fewer hours than a full-time man because she prefers a flexible schedule. Second, the gap claim puts each gender's earnings from varied vocations on the same level. Men often choose more dangerous and physically demanding lines of work, which can affect pay scales, yet the gap claim averages types of professions together.

The discriminatory "glass ceiling" claim persists, indicating that women are restricted to lower-paying jobs and careers and kept out of senior management positions. Yet many women, even those with stellar academic records, actually prefer to work part-time to combine their work life with family life, Furchtgott-Roth says. If a woman wants to put in the hours to be in senior management, she will. But she often chooses not to, because that means missed dance recitals, hockey games, and birthday parties.'

Why Do Men's Activists Bring Up The Draft?

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A while ago, I stumbled on a video from TheTruePooka attacking MRAs such as myself for "blaming feminists for the male-only draft." This leads me to wonder if maybe there is a problem with people listening when a woman speaks.

Very few MRAs, myself especially, actually blame feminism for something that's been happening throughout most of history, and we don't even lay blame on feminism for being unable to change that situation. I certainly never have.

Feminists DO, however, get criticized by MRAs for their marginalization of the draft and their dismissal of it and other traditional male obligations when they are offensively speaking about so-called historical "male privilege" and "patriarchy." So let me try to spell this out for everybody so we can clear the air a bit.'

Guestwords: Rethink Domestic Violence

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Our society has created an environment where beating women and children and violating their civil rights are acceptable. In fact, we have actually created an industry — the violence against women movement. This movement thrives on building “safe houses” and places of “retreat” to protect victims, as opposed to enforcing on-the-books laws against the men who abuse.

The 1970s ushered in the epitome of misogyny with the development of facilities to protect women from violent men. As well as brutalizing and maiming women, violent men in the United States kill three women each day. That’s more than we were losing in the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq combined. Although we don’t acknowledge it, this is war.

Why not consider the obvious? Why should women and children be carted away, bleeding and bruised, often in the middle of the night, while violent men stay in the family home, resting comfortably, perhaps beer in hand, watching television, and showing absolutely no remorse? By anyone’s standards this is not equality of justice. If a man were to beat up another man he would be arrested. But beating a woman is tolerated. We hide the women away so abusers can’t find them. It’s absolutely outrageous.

Why not use these “safe houses” to board the men? They could be put on work release and equipped with GPS devices, allowing them to go to work each day while being monitored. They would then be responsible for supporting their families, and at the same time be charged room and board. We could also be sure they were taking care of themselves in such ways as doing their own laundry and preparing their own meals.'

UK: 'Domineering' men face domestic violence prosecutions

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The move will mean that domineering men who torment their partners but do not assault them physically can be brought to justice for the first time.

Verbal insults, taking control of a spouse's finances or isolating them from family and friends could all count as domestic abuse under the new definition.

Under-18s will also face prosecution for the crime, following concerns about the number of abusive teenage relationships.

However it will not mean the creation of a new criminal offence of domestic violence. Instead, bullying husbands could face trial if it was thought that their behaviour amounted to harassment.

The changes were first proposed last year and will be confirmed by Nick Clegg, the Deputy Prime Minister and Liberal Democrat leader, on Wednesday.
...
The definition will be widened to anyone aged 16 or over, and may even refer to perpetrators who are related to their victims, in order to cover so-called "honour" attacks and forced marriage.

Although most victims of domestic abuse are female, the revised wording will make it clear that the law will apply to anyone "regardless of gender or sexuality".'

New Zealand: Children most often killed by mothers

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New Zealand mothers kill more children than any other group in society and men are victims of domestic violence as often as women, a police investigation has found.

The Family Violence Death Review, released today by police, found mothers were responsible for 45 per cent of children killed by domestic violence.

The review of 95 family violence deaths involving 101 victims between 2004 and 2011 revealed some "inconvenient truths", Family First national director Bob McCoskrie said.

He said the statistics debunked the misleading popular perception "that women and children need to be protected from men".

"This gender focus is misleading," Mr McCoskrie said.

"If we're really serious about reducing family violence, we need to talk about ... our violent culture and the role alcohol and drugs play in fuelling this environment."'

UK: Domestic autonomy takes another beating

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This new definition will include ‘any incident or pattern of incidents of controlling, coercive or threatening behaviour, violence or abuse between those aged 16 or over who are or have been intimate partners or family members’. It will extend not only to physical or sexual abuse but to financial, psychological and emotional abuse, too. The Home Office announcement explains that controlling behaviour includes acts ‘designed to make a person subordinate and/or dependent’ by, among other things, ‘exploiting their resources and capacities for personal gain’ or ‘regulating their everyday behaviour’.

...

The most direct danger is to those individuals – mainly men – who will be branded as domestic-violence perpetrators. Even leaving to one side the stigma, not to mention the real risk of prosecution, the label domestic violence is the gateway to a nebulous bundle of coercive state powers. A sobering example is the Domestic Violence Protection Notice, currently being piloted. Under this scheme, if a police officer reasonably believes that a man has used or threatened violence towards his partner and that his partner needs protection from him, then the police officer has the power to order him to leave his home and also his neighbourhood, even against his partner’s wishes. So when the police are called - perhaps by a neighbour - to defuse a heated family row, this can lead to eviction and forced family separation, even though the couple raised only their voices, not their fists.'

DA says no evidence of domestic violence in murder-for-hire case

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BROWNVILLE, Maine — She talked about her husband being controlling, but police found nothing to suggest that murder-for-hire suspect Wendy S. Farley of Brownville suffered spousal abuse before she sought a hit man to kill her husband, the case's prosecutor said Friday.

"The evidence that we have at this point doesn't point to any domestic violence issues," said Piscataquis County District Attorney R. Christopher Almy.

Farley's husband, Luther "Rusty" Farley, should be considered a victim, not a perpetrator, Almy said.

The affidavit detailing the case against Farley, who remained Friday at the Piscataquis County Jail on $10,000 cash bail, details how police and the informant they wired, Michael Anderson of Milo, probed whether she or the Farleys' 13 children were domestic violence victims even before she was arrested. The 46-year-old farmer's wife was arrested and charged Tuesday with criminal solicitation for murder.'

UK: Mothers & Prison: The alternatives

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Similar projects are being pioneered in Bradford, Glasgow, Calderdale, Worcester and London to find more effective ways of stopping women from offending than the traditional prison system affords. At the centres, women undergo a detailed individual assessment and then are given help with a range of problems including drug and alcohol misuse, parenting and budgeting skills, debt, housing and employment problems, anger management, and mental and physical health problems.

The aim is to address the root causes of crime more effectively – and more cost-effectively – than prison. The approach works. The average court-directed order at the Together Women Project in Bradford costs between £750 and £1,000 per woman per year – compared with the £56,415 a year it costs to keep a woman in jail. It has a compliance rate of 80 per cent. And it has reduced reoffending to less than 10 per cent compared to a national average of 62 per cent.
...
"Everyone agrees we need fewer women in prison but nothing happens," says Juliet Lyon of the Prison Reform Trust. So how has this impasse come about?
...
Why are more women in jail? Most of the rise comes from a significant increase in the severity of sentences. Just 10 per cent of women convicted of an indictable offence were sent to prison in 1996. A decade later the figure had risen to 15 per cent. "Not since the mid-19th century has our prison system held as many women as it does today," says the Chief Inspector of Prisons, Nick Hardwick.'

Jailed Texas group-sex teacher Brittni Colleps says, ‘I was victimized in that video’

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The former Texas high school teacher jailed after being caught on tape having group sex with four of her own students — while a fifth filmed — now says that graphic video makes her a victim.

Brittni Colleps, a 28-year-old wife and mother of three, was convicted on 16 counts of having improper relationships with students in August and is currently serving a five-year jail term.

Her conviction came after a salacious round of courtroom testimony this summer, when jurors heard her student sex partners say they were “happy” to mess around in her home and that Colleps had once described herself as an “anything goes in sex kind of girl.”
...
"I felt like I was victimized in that video, because I did not, I never gave my consent for it,” Colleps said in a jailhouse interview with “20/20” airing Friday night.

Colleps’ case was unique — not only for its extremely lewd nature — but also because the students she had sex with were consenting adults at the time.

That being the case, she did not face rape charges. Rather, Colleps faced the charge of “having improper relations with students,” stemming from a Texas law, which prohibits teachers from having sex with students — at any age.'

European court to decide if a lesbian couple can sever a father's ties to his son

Mastodon · 29 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK, September 21, 2012, (C-FAM)—Europe's highest court on human rights will decide if a lesbian can adopt her partner's child, in this case stripping the father of his parental rights to his son.

The case is very simple according to Gregor Puppinck of the European Centre for Law and Justice (ECLJ). "The two female partners want to oust the father and, since the law does not allow them to do so, they claim it is discriminatory," Gregor reported in Turtle Bay and Beyond, C-FAM's blog.

The Grand Chamber of the European Court of Human Rights will hear the case X and others v. Austria on October 3. Its decision will apply to all 47 countries in the Council of Europe and cannot be appealed.

Austria's attorney has pointed out that most European countries do not allow a child to have two mothers or two fathers. A homosexual rights attorney who brought the case argued that this is sexual discrimination.

The child was born out of wedlock in 1995. He bears his father's name. While the mother has sole custody, the father has regular contact with his son and pays alimony.
...
It is unclear whether the father is aware of the court proceedings since the lesbian couple is pursuing the case anonymously. Nothing indicates the boy's opinion. The same lawyer – Helmut Graupner, legal counsel of ILGA-Europe – represents the women and the boy.'

Anti-feminists are meeting in Zurich

Matt · 30 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Translated article here. Excerpt:

'The IG anti-feminism (IGAF) is gearing up for her third international meeting on 3 November. "There is a secret place in the Zurich region instead," IGAF-founder and Vice President René Kuhn tells Blick.ch. Where exactly will not reveal for fear of left-wing extremists.

"We have in the past received massive threats. Such a theater we want to avoid this time, "says Kuhn. The venue will be communicated to registered participants only. Nevertheless, the site will be police and a private security company to ensure peace.'

Cops: Teen mom dumped 3-week-old baby on roadside, claimed abduction

Matt · 30 September 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 19-year-old mother has been charged with dumping her 3-week-old daughter along a rural road for 12 hours and lying to police about the baby's whereabouts, prompting an Amber Alert.

Bond was set at $100,000 Friday for Kendra Meaker of Toulon, who was charged in Stark County Court with obstruction of justice and endangering the life or health of a child.
...
During the hearing, Sheriff Jimmie Dison told the court Kendra that showed up at his department Thursday morning to report that someone had snatched her 3-week-old baby, Mia Graci Thompson, out of the back seat of her car after she went inside the post office in Toulon, about 30 miles northwest of Peoria, to mail a package.'

Till Death, or 20 Years, Do Us Part

Matt · 1 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last year, several lawmakers in Mexico City proposed the creation of short-term, renewable marriage contracts with terms as brief as two years. The idea was to own up to the reality that marriages fail about half the time.

Is marriage headed for an overhaul? A fundamental rethinking? Is it due for one?

When the Mexican legislators proposed their idea, which was not passed, the archdiocese there called it “absurd” and said it was anathema to the nature of marriage. I decided to put the questions to a different group: the people who study marriage and divorce. I was motivated not just by trend lines but, as a child of divorce, by ghosts.
...
Kenneth P. Altshuler, the president of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers, the divorce-attorney trade group, said such contracts were neither so absurd nor impractical as they might sound. He thinks they could address some of the financial costs associated with divorce, which he estimates at hundreds of millions of dollars annually.

One key, he said, would be figuring out a formula for predetermining alimony, given the extent to which money becomes a proxy for bitterness during divorce. That could be solved, he said, through something like tables that show what payments each spouse would make based on his or her eventual income in Year 20.
...
As a thought experiment, Mr. Altshuler said, sure, given the lie we’re currently telling ourselves. There’s still a fantasy of Ozzie and Harriet, he said, “and if that’s what we’ve decided we’re striving for, we are failing miserably.”

“So perhaps we need to change our expectations so we’re not so unhappy,” he said.'

Couples are more likely to divorce if the husband does half the domestic chores

Matt · 1 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I have my thoughts on this, too long for here, so it's in the first comment. Excerpt:

'Attention married men, here's the perfect excuse to put your feet up – sharing housework can lead to divorce.

Research has suggested that the more chores a man does, the more likely the couple will split.

The survey of couples found that while most were happy to share childcare, the women still did the lion's share of the housework most of the time.

And in 11 per cent of cases, the women did almost all of it.

When the man finally did do his bit, things seemed to go wrong.

The divorce rate among those who shared chores equally was about 50 per cent higher than among those where the woman did most of it, the study by the Norwegian government found.'

West Virginia House of Delegates: Impeach Family Court Judge Lori B. Jackson

Rog · 2 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Court order to gag the abuse of the judge signed by the judge here. Court investigation summary recommending the father have custody here. This has got to stop. Petition excerpt:

'In the case of the minor children of Lt. Col Joel Kirk and his wife, Tina Taylor Kirk, Judge Jackson had clear evidence that the children were being abused by their mother. This evidence included eyewitness testimony from outside the family, the testimony of the children, the report of the guardian Ad litem appointed by the court and court appointed psychologists.
...
Judge Jackson reviewed all this evidence and failed to contact child protective services, and subsequently ruled to deliver both children from that marriage into the custody of their abuser.

Judge Jackson even went as far as ordering that the video evidence of Tina Taylor Kirk's child abuse be gagged and withheld from further viewing by authorities.

It is incumbent on the West Virginia House of Delegates to investigate this case of failed judicial responsibility and depraved indifference by Judge Lori B Jackson and to hold an impeachment vote regarding her misconduct.'

Whitehouse.gov: '1 is 2 Many' - Domestic violence awareness month

Minuteman · 2 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Despite the significant progress made in reducing violence against women, there is still a long way to go. Young women still face the highest rates of dating violence and sexual assault. In the last year, one in 10 teens have reported being physically hurt on purpose by a boyfriend or girlfriend. One in five young women have been sexually assaulted while they're in college.

In response to these alarming statistics, Vice President Biden is focusing his longstanding commitment to reducing violence against women specifically on teens and young women ages 16-24. By targeting the importance of changing attitudes that lead to violence and educating the public on the realities of abuse, the Vice President is leading the way in an effort to stop violence against women before it begins.'

Probable Anti-Male Caps in Math and Science

Mastodon · 2 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The White House has announced a new set of policies that would step up enforcement of Title IX, explicitly applying the rule to science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM) education. Title IX has always applied to all federally funded education programs, but the Department of Education's new enforcement efforts will "develop consistent and consolidated technical assistance" on Title IX in STEM.

Just as enforcement of Title IX has meant gender quotas on school sports teams, increased enforcement in STEM education will likely lead to artificial enrollment caps aimed at keeping men out of math and science classes. "Title IX isn't just about sports," President Obama wrote in Newsweek earlier this year. It's also about "addressing inequality in math and science education" and "a much broader range of fields, including engineering and technology. I've said that women will shape the destiny of this country, and I mean it."

"To Obama, gender disparities are only bad when they disfavor women," wrote the Competitive Enterprise Institute's Hans Bader. "Under his strange idea of equality, equality means men losing out to women. . . . The result could be a substantial reduction in the number of scientists graduating from America's colleges and universities."'

"Blame Mars, not Venus"

Mastodon · 2 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'IT IS no secret that support for Mitt Romney and Barack Obama breaks down differently among men and women. But while this “gender gap” is typically discussed in terms of Mr Romney’s stance on so-called "women’s issues", such as abortion rights and contraception coverage, the evidence indicates that it actually reflects partisan differences over the government's social-welfare programmes. Moreover, the source of the gender gap has less to do with women and more to do with men moving away from the Democratic Party.

If the gender gap is defined as the difference between men and women’s support for a candidate, most polls currently show it to be about ten percentage points for Mr Romney, who does better with men. (John McCain, by comparison, faced a gap of about five points in 2008.) Women have been consistently more likely than men to give the president higher marks, and there is evidence that more women than men have swung into Mr Obama’s column in the last month, helping to fuel a recent bump in the president's poll numbers.'

MIAA receives US complaint over boys playing field hockey

Mastodon · 2 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FRANKLIN — The last time Marianne Murphy, Mim Jarema, and Joan Bannon were at a Massachusetts Interscholastic Athletic Association meeting seeking to protect girls from boys who played field hockey, they left disappointed. A 10-1 vote in June 2011 went against the field hockey coaches from Walpole, Reading, and Hopkinton.

But if you thought the issue was over, think again.

At Thursday's board of directors meeting, executive director Dick Neal told the board the United States Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights has received a complaint filed against the MIAA. According to the letter, "the complaint alleges that the MIAA and its member schools are discriminating against girls by allowing boys to participate on girls' field hockey teams.
...
The OCR is responsible for enforcing Title IX, the 1972 federal law that prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex by athletic programs receiving federal aid, "and controlled by an organization like the MIAA" according to the letter.

The MIAA would agree with the OCR, but the state's equal rights amendment has repeatedly been used to strike down any MIAA rule against boys. "There's no other states that are in this position," said Neal.'

Man jailed on accusations of domestic abuse sues Irvine

Mastodon · 2 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'IRVINE – An Irvine man who spent a night in jail after being accused of domestic violence by a woman who was later charged with numerous counts of burglary, kidnapping and false arrest is suing the city of Irvine for $150,000.

The plaintiff, businessman Deukman Lee, alleges that Irvine police officer Joseph Jun did not follow proper law-enforcement protocol and failed to take reasonable, available steps to check the credibility of the accuser. The city denies the allegations.

The woman, Sunmee Kim, gave Jun a false name and didn't show identification at the scene of the Dec. 13 incident on Stanford Avenue, according to both the lawsuit and Irvine police. When asked for identification, she said the plaintiff had taken and hidden her purse.

Kim, 39, told Jun that she and the plaintiff were engaged to be married, that she had lived in his home for a month, that she was pregnant and that he had hit her 10 times with a wooden practice sword, the lawsuit says.

Lee, 45, insisted that all of those statements were false – which Lee's neighbors corroborated – and he repeatedly asked Jun to verify the woman's identity before arresting him, the lawsuit says.

The woman displayed injuries consistent with domestic violence, but which Irvine police now say were self-inflicted.'

False rape report filed in Newport News

Mastodon · 2 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEWPORT NEWS, Va. (WAVY) - Taxpayer dollars were wasted. Precious police time was abused. It was all because a Newport News teen lied about being raped.

"It's very frustrating because we have actual legitimate cases that come through our unit," said Detective Amber Rogers of the Newport News Special Victims Unit.

On Monday, Sept. 24 Rogers had no reason to believe a 15-year-old told her anything but the truth.

"She alleged that an unknown male, unknown race, abducted her from the bus stop, drug her to the woods behind the bus stop, and then sexually assaulted her," Rogers said.'

'Circumcision is not about the rights of the child'

Mastodon · 2 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is ironic, I suppose, that the Jewish and Muslim community who cannot make common cause on any meaningful issue should come together on this comedy show. To make an anti-circumcision law based on the child's inability to choose is insanity: a child by definition cannot choose anything—whether breastfeeding or tonsillectomy. But so long as a child has parents who within common-sense parameters act in his best interests as they see them to be, we do not need judges or governments to make decisions in loco parentis. Because this is what the battle over the centimetres of foreskin is about—not Muslims and Jews versus anti-Semites but the age-old battle between individual liberty and statism—in this case the individual family unit and the state. I've watched statism conceal itself in many a Trojan horse: multiculturalism, feminism, human rights and so on. This time children's rights is the thin end of the wedge. And somewhere in Germany's dank caves, the anti-Semites may howl but they are not the predator.

Ultimately, I think circumcision is mad—but that's because I think most religious ritual is mad—whether it is bowing knees and heads down toward Mecca or reverently tasting bread and wine as the body and blood of Christ. I personally carry out certain rituals associated with my faith as a Jew, even knowing them to be utterly illogical. They are my tribe's rituals. Had I a male child, I feel certain I would have had him circumcised. But that would be my decision, not some advocacy commissar or Ontario judge. The medical evidence for and against circumcision is baffling. It seems to have helped prevent the spread of HIV infection and STIs—or maybe not. Statistics can be played contextually according to fashion. As for getting consent for circumcision—after reading what is involved in doing it to an adult male, I cannot believe that any man would be mad enough to consent. I am told there are men whose objects of affection are Jews and that circumcision is the price of winning their hearts. Foreskins off to them, I say, it's clearly true love.'

Judge compares adoptive mothers to biological fathers in child custody decision

Mastodon · 2 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Family Court judge has awarded full custody of a young child to her adopted mother, instead of her biological mom, in what is believed to be the first such New York state case involving a same sex couple.

Manhattan real estate attorney Allison Scollar defeated the little girl's biological mom, Emmy-winning TV producer Brook Altman in a bitter court battle, the Post has learned.

...

Manhattan Judge Gloria Sosa-Lintner said, "Although . . . Altman is the biological parent, this does not give her an automatic priority over the adoptive parent. This is analogous to a father getting custody of his own child, where only the best interests of the child are paramount."'

Nation's Report Card: Writing test shows gender gap

Mastodon · 2 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the board, performances varied by race, ethnicity, gender, school location and other factors, such as parents' educational attainment. But the most notable achievement gap was between males and females in both eighth and 12th grades.

On average, female students in the eighth grade scored 160; their male counterparts scored 140.

On average, female students in the 12th grade scored 157; males scored 143.

Education analyst Susan Pimentel, one of the team presenting the test scores on Friday's NAEP conference call, said that while this test cannot determine cause and effect, there are some clues as to why the gap exists. Students were surveyed to find out some additional information about them as they took the test. Among those surveyed, said Pimentel, 53% of girls agreed or strongly agreed that "Writing is one of my favorite activities", but only 35% of the boys felt that way. Since writing improves with practice, she said this is "an important variable to observe."'

Obama waives sanctions on countries that use child soldiers

Matt · 2 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Speaks for itself. Excerpt:

'U.S. President Barack Obama issued a new executive order last week to fight human trafficking, touting his administration's handling of the issue.

"When a little boy is kidnapped, turned into a child soldier, forced to kill or be killed -- that's slavery," Obama said in a speech at the Clinton Global Initiative. "It is barbaric, and it is evil, and it has no place in a civilized world. Now, as a nation, we've long rejected such cruelty."

But for the third year in a row, Obama has waived almost all U.S. sanctions that would punish certain countries that use child soldiers, upsetting many in the human rights community.

Late Friday afternoon, Obama issued a presidential memorandum waiving penalties under the Child Soldiers Protection Act of 2008 for Libya, South Sudan, and Yemen, penalties that Congress put in place to prevent U.S. arms sales to countries determined by the State Department to be the worst abusers of child soldiers in their militaries. The president also partially waived sanctions against the Democratic Republic of the Congo to allow some military training and arms sales to that country.'

Take your pick: 11th century extremism or 21st century extremism

Matt · 2 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. (free registration required) Excerpt:

'Mr Azhari, who vehemently denies accusations that he advocates child marriage, also wants to remove a proposed clause banning the trafficking of women. He said he was concerned it would be used to prosecute parents who marry off their underage daughters. The text now under consideration by the panel only bans slavery and the sex trade.

...

They fear an impending setback to gains women achieved in recent years under Hosni Mubarak, the ousted president, whose efforts to polish the image of his authoritarian regime in western eyes led to an improvement of women's rights in divorce and child custody cases.

...

Known as "Suzanne's laws" after the previous first lady who championed them, the legislation gave women access to a relatively quick no-fault divorce through the courts, cutting years of litigation during which a woman was neither married nor divorced, although her husband was entitled to take another wife. The laws also gave divorced women custody of their children until the age of 15 and allowed them to keep the family home for as long as they were raising children.

...

Neither the Muslim Brotherhood of Mohamed Morsi, the president, nor the more hardline Salafis have articulated specific plans for changes to Egypt's family laws. But the rhetoric filling the air is deeply conservative and largely hostile to the enhancement of women's rights.

Amany Aboul Fadl, a member of the panel from the Muslim Brotherhood, said "Suzanne's laws" would be reviewed and those that "benefited grassroots women" would be retained. She criticised the legislation as coming from a "100 per cent feminist mentality".

"The rights of women after divorce are exaggerated to the extent that they are unfair to men, sometimes destroying their lives," she said. "They extend women's custody of children so they can take the marriage apartment. Men are robbed and women take everything."'

Petition: Accept Alternative Brit Milah (Bris) Practices

Matt · 2 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Note you do not need to be Jewish to sign this petition. Excerpt:

'Within Judaism, the Brit Milah, a ritual circumcision performed on the eighth day of life, is considered a central rite.

Reform Judaism, progressive in many other ways, has yet to re-evaluate this practice, in spite of clearly compelling evidence of its medical and ethical shortcomings.

We therefore petition the leadership of the Union for Reform Judaism and the Central Conference of American Rabbis, as principals of the reform Judaism movement within the United States of America, to recognize these shortcomings, and to sanction alternative religious ceremonies that are spiritually relevant but also medically and ethically responsible.'

'Partridge Family' actor visciously bitten by 'fan'

Mastodon · 3 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'"The Partridge Family" star Danny Bonaduce is recovering after a crazed fan bit him during a meet-and-greet in Washington on Friday.

The actor was hosting an event at a local casino when a woman approached him and asked to give him a kiss.

He tells local publication The News Tribune of Tacoma, "She said, 'I loved you on 'he Partridge Family.' Can I kiss you?'"

But when Bonaduce agreed, she sunk her teeth into his cheek for several seconds until security officials were able to pry her off him.
...
The woman was taken into custody and the following morning cops stopped by the 53 year old's hotel room to photograph his wound for their official police report.

Bonaduce does not plan on pressing charges, however, his wife Amy reveals her husband is on antibiotics to stave off a possible infection.'

Hundreds of thousands of war vets still waiting for health benefits

Matt · 3 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Priorities: Implementing Title IX in the STEM fields in colleges vs. ensuring our veterans are getting adequate healthcare. What's winning out? Excerpt:

'The Department of Veterans Affairs said it is on track to process 1 million disability claims this year.

With the war in Iraq over and the one in Afghanistan winding down, the VA is sorting through a backlog of more than 860,000 disability claims from American veterans. More than a quarter of those vets -- 228,000 -- have been waiting for a year or more.

Rioux has been trying to get his disability claim fully processed since January 2011, shortly after he returned from Afghanistan.

The litany of delays includes lost paperwork, long wait times for appointments and erroneous lab results. At one point, a doctor prescribed him medication for a bladder infection he didn't have; he'd never given as much as a urine sample.

Because of his debilitating injuries, neither Rioux nor his wife, Maggie, is able to work full time. Rioux said without his wife's care, "I'd be in the fetal position. I'd be curled up in a ball. I couldn't do it."'

Woman suffocates her 6-week old baby with pages from Bible

the_captain · 3 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A UK woman, Jullia Lovemore, 41, admitted to the manslaughter of her 6 week old daughter in court stemming from an incident in 2009. Lovemore has been in the custody of the state for three years prior to her latest courtroom appearance. She now awaits the punishment for smothering her child to death.

When the child was discovered dead, it was found to have pages of the bible in its mouth and throat. The mother admits to blocking the airways of the less than two month old child's mouth. She said, "I sat in my bedroom and I was ripping pages out of my Bible. I put some small bits of paper in Faith's mouth and she spat them out."

Many sources have reported the mother describing sitting on the child, and then bouncing up and down. She says she does not know why she did this and that she "got bipolar." Quite an excuse for someone who admitted to taking the life of a child.'

SAVE Elert: Presidential Proclamation Shamefully Downplays Male Victims of Domestic Violence

Matt · 3 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

On Monday, President Obama kicked off National Domestic Violence Awareness Month. Unfortunately, his proclamation leaves much to be desired.(1) Even though men and women abuse each other at similar rates(2), the focus is on women.

How many men have to get beaten with sledgehammers(3), have their penises cut off(4), get poisoned(5), or get run over with cars(6) by their female partners before the White House takes notice?

We say, "Enough is enough!"

Contact Pres. Obama via Danielle Borrin: Danielle_Borrin-at-ovp.eop.gov. Demand that he tell the truth, the entire truth about domestic violence.

Oh behalf of every male victim suffering in silence or struggling to have his voice heard, thank you.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

1. http://www.whitehouse.gov/the-press-office/2012/10/01/presidential-proclamation-national-domestic-violence-awareness-month-201/
2. http://www.saveservices.org/key-facts/
3. http://www.saveservices.org/2012/05/fl-woman-beat-ex-boyfriend-with-sledgehammer/
4. http://www.ktla.com/news/landing/ktla-wife-cuts-off-penis-garbage-disposal,0,2758761.story
5. http://abcnews.go.com/blogs/headlines/2012/08/woman-admits-to-poisoning-boyfriend-with-visine-drops/
6. http://www.turnto23.com/news/woman-accused-of-trying-to-run-over-husband-with-car-arrested/

'The Myth of Male Decline'

Mastodon · 4 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SCROLL through the titles and subtitles of recent books, and you will read that women have become “The Richer Sex,” that “The Rise of Women Has Turned Men Into Boys,” and that we may even be seeing “The End of Men.” Several of the authors of these books posit that we are on the verge of a “new majority of female breadwinners,” where middle-class wives lord over their husbands while demoralized single men take refuge in perpetual adolescence.

...

If the ascent of women has been much exaggerated, so has the descent of men. Men’s irresponsibility and bad behavior is now a stock theme in popular culture. But there has always been a subset of men who engage in crude, coercive and exploitative behavior. What’s different today is that it’s harder for men to get away with such behavior in long-term relationships. Women no longer feel compelled to put up with it and the legal system no longer condones it. The result is that many guys who would have been obnoxious husbands, behaving badly behind closed doors, are now obnoxious singles, trumpeting their bad behavior on YouTube.'

Media hysteria over child abduction case

GaryB · 4 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This is an interesting story that has played out in Australia over the last few months.

Also see: Mother of daughters returned to Italy afraid to visit them

Excerpt:

'THE mother of four girls taken kicking and screaming from her side as part of an international custody battle has no immediate plans to fly to Italy to visit them, despite her daughters being ordered there by a judge.

Australian Federal Police officers took the girls from an undisclosed Sunshine Coast home on Wednesday night. One of the girls yelled "leave me" and another "no, you're going to hurt me".

At Brisbane International Airport, the emotional scenes continued as the girls, aged between nine and 15, struggled with AFP officers who were trying to escort them on a Dubai-bound plane en route to Italy. Their mother could be heard screaming, "I love you, baby."'

A quick recap of the story: parents separate in Italy and have shared custody. The mother (an Australian) takes the girls back to Australia on holiday, and then doesn't return. The father uses the legal system to force her return, and she has fought it ever since - up to and including hiding the children from police when she was ordered to return them.

What's interesting here is that although this piece has picked up on the hysteria of the case, it has failed to register that this is almost entirely because it's a case of children being separated from mum to go to dad. In other cases where the dad has absconded with the kids, the press (and the public) are outraged on behalf of the heart-broken mother and demand the instant arrest of the father and return of the children.

An interesting case indeed.

Three months after circumcision ban, German government to legalize rite

Matt · 5 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The German government is set to pass legislation that would legalize ritual circumcisions if they are performed by a medical professional, allowing local Jews to breathe a sigh of relief three months after a local court criminalized the rite and criminal charges were filed against two rabbis.

German-Jewish leaders welcomed the bill, a copy of which has been obtained by The Times of Israel. The cabinet in Berlin will discuss the 26-page bill next Wednesday, after which it will proceed to the floor of the Bundestag, where it it is expected to be voted into law within the coming days.

“It is a clear political signal that Jews and Muslims are still welcome in Germany,” said Dieter Graumann, the president of the Central Council of Jews in Germany. “We are happy that Jewish commandments and Jewish life are not being pushed into illegality.”'

Officer Who Hit Woman Will Be Fired

Matt · 5 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Maybe he should be sacked. Question is, if the silly string-sprayer had been male, would the story even had made the news? Would the officer even have gotten into any trouble? I believe the answer to both questions is "No". Excerpt:

'Philadelphia Police Commissioner Charles Ramsey will take "Commissioner's Direct Action" against Lt. Jonathan Josey, the Philadelphia police officer who hit a woman during a public event on Sunday.

That means that effective on Thursday, Lt. Josey will be suspended for 30 days with the intent to dismiss.

Josey was caught on video striking Aida Guzman during a traffic stop on Sunday.

Josey was part of a crowd gathered for festivities after the Puerto Rican Parade and Josey was the commanding officer on the scene.

The video shows Josey right after she sprayed silly string near the officer. Josey was with several other officers involved at the time in a traffic stop. He turns around and hits Guzman, who falls to the ground.'

Australia: Margie Abbott defends opposition leader

Minuteman · 6 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'How does God turn a man into a feminist? Answer: He gives him three daughters.

That gag summed up Margie Abbott's foray into the world of political spin.

The opposition leader's wife made a proud and defiant speech in Sydney on Friday, supporting her husband in the face of opinion polls showing he remains unpopular with women, and a Labor offensive to entrench that view.

The previously publicity-shy Mrs Abbott came out with guns blazing, telling a business lunch in Penrith: "Don't ever try and tell me that my husband of 24 years and the father of three daughters is on some anti-women crusade. It's simply not true.

"Next time you meet someone who says that Tony doesn't get women, ask them when was the last time they cycled 1000 kilometres raising $148,000 for their local women's shelter. Which is what Tony did this year for Manly.

"And in 2006 he ran non-stop up and down the stairs of Centrepoint Tower with Pat Farmer to raise much needed funds to help lift the profile of ovarian cancer."

Mrs Abbott said the couple's three daughters were educated, confident, grounded and happy, "living the life that feminists aspire for every young woman".'

Obama on Domestic Violence Awareness

Mastodon · 6 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My Administration remains committed to getting victims the help they need, from emergency shelter and legal assistance to transitional housing and services for children. We are also working to stop violence before it starts. Last year, agencies across the Federal Government held town hall meetings nationwide to promote men's roles in ending violence against women. Through Vice President Biden's 1is2many initiative, we built on that progress earlier this year by releasing a public service announcement that features professional athletes and other role models speaking out against dating violence. This April, I directed leaders throughout my Administration to increase efforts to prevent and combat domestic violence involving Federal employees and address its effects on the Federal workforce. Since August, the Affordable Care Act has required most insurance plans to make domestic violence screening and counseling available as a preventive service for women - without co-payments, deductibles, or other cost-sharing. And most recently, we developed a new initiative to reduce domestic violence homicides through high risk screening and linking victims with services. Moreover, my Administration looks forward to working with the Congress to strengthen and reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act.'

F&F: California Limits Spousal Support

Matt · 6 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'California Governor Jerry Brown has signed legislation introduced by Assembly member Toni Atkins, (D-San Diego) that prevents victims from being forced to pay spousal support to ex-husbands or wives who are convicted of violent crime against them. Assembly Bill 1522 was inspired by the case of a San Diego-area woman, Crystal Harris, who was ordered to pay her former husband monthly spousal support during the pendency of his criminal trial. After he was convicted and sentenced to six years, Harris was ordered to pay a portion of his legal fees.

San Diego County District Attorney Bonnie M. Dumanis announced the legislation earlier this year and testified before the California Senate Judiciary Committee in support of it. Current California law already prevents spousal support in cases of attempted murder or soliciting the murder of a spouse. AB 1522 adds violent abuse felonies to the list of convictions that disqualify a person from obtaining financial benefits from their ex-spouse in a divorce proceeding.'

Women Sex Offenders in the Ozarks Tend to Get Lighter Sentences Than Men

Mastodon · 7 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SPRINGFIELD, Mo. — There's not a lot of hard data about this but there are anecdotes. Courts tend to be more sympathetic towards women offenders. Their sexual crimes are rarely violent and most often statutory with older teenage victims. One mother tells us that shouldn't matter.

"Our boy is a hero for going through the court system."

We first talked to this Ozarks mother a year and a half ago when Amanda Jackson faced three counts of felony statutory rape in two Ozarks counties for having sex with a 14-year-old. Jackson's set for sentencing on two of the counts at the end of the month.

"Being she's a woman I don't know if it's going as hard as if she was a man. I feel like a man gets put in jail right away and she should have been put in jail right away," the mother tells us.
...
Chad Nevels got four years for sex with a 14-year-old, while Allison Peck originally got probation.

Patterson also tells us many sex offenders were themselves victims at one time in their lives, and women abused as children tend to elicit more sympathy in sentencing than men who were abused.'

Male Circumcision: What Would Newborns Say?

Mastodon · 7 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why are so many male circumcisions still performed when we all agree that female circumcision is a barbarous act? Now, the American Academy of Pediatrics says the benefits of male circumcision outweigh the risks. But, if newborns had a say in the matter, they would use the following reasons to shout a big “NO” to this mutilating procedure, unless religious or cultural reasons require it.

One
Circumcision doesn’t just snip off a small piece of skin. Rather, it removes a large surface of foreskin measuring three to five inches in length, about half of the total skin of the penis! Also, inside the foreskin there’s a band of tissue that acts like an accordion. Its gliding motion is needed to trigger sexual reflexes and pleasure.

Two
The foreskin is not just skin. Dr. John Taylor, a Winnipeg pathologist, reported in the British Journal of Urology in 1996 a new anatomical finding. Taylor and his colleagues discovered a “ridged band” that runs around the inside of the foreskin. Microscopic examination shows this skin is loaded with blood vessels and nerves. So what is being amputated is a large part of the sexual function of the penis.
...
Ten
Circumcision is not a life and death situation. So unless it’s required for religious or cultural reasons, this decision should be made when an adult can decide whether or not he wishes it done. I believe many newborns would say Amen to that.'

Defamation Suit Over ‘Deadbeat Dad’ Reference Held SLAPP

Mastodon · 7 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two women who referred to a San Diego man, in an online posting, as a “criminal and a deadbeat dad” who “may be taking steroids” were expressing protected opinions and cannot be liable for defamation, the Fourth District Court of Appeal ruled yesterday.

Div. One affirmed a San Diego Superior Court judge’s ruling that the suit by Darren D. Chaker against Wendy and Nicole Mateo was a strategic lawsuit against public participation. The justices agreed with Judge Timothy Taylor that the suit arose from speech on a public issue, and that the action is barred by the First Amendment.

The evidence, Justice Patricia Benke explained, showed that Nicole Mateo became pregnant during a brief relationship with Chaker, resulting in contentious paternity and child support litigation in Mateo’s home state of Texas. In 2010, comments about Chaker and his forensics business, including claims that he was involved in fraud and prostitution, as well as the deadbeat dad and steroid references, began showing up in the comments sections of websites such as Topix, where he had posted a profile, and the Ripoff Report.'

Tennessee Court Upholds Man’s Paternity Fraud Claim

Mastodon · 7 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Except:

'The Tennessee Supreme Court has ruled in favor of a man who was misled into thinking he was a father and ordered the child’s mother to reimburse him more than $25,000 for child support, medical expenses and insurance premiums he had paid.

In a unanimous ruling, the court said Tennessee law allows a former spouse to pursue a fraud claim against a mother who intentionally misrepresented the identity of a child’s biological father.

The case stemmed from a Maury County lawsuit filed in 2008 by Chadwick Craig against his ex-wife, Tina Marie Hodge.

The couple had married in 1991 after, court documents said, Hodge told Craig she was pregnant and no else could be the father. They divorced in 2001 and Craig became the custodial parent in 2005.'

'Lies our fathers told us: The men's rights movement and campus-based misogyny'

Mastodon · 7 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I first encountered the Canadian men's rights movement directly when I was in Peterborough last November.

Some friends and associates of mine and I had driven from Toronto early one morning to attend the Policy Assembly of the Socialist Party of Ontario that was being held at Trent University. Upon arriving, we were greeted by the usual array of posters that litter the halls of any university. Among them were dozens of posters for what was a newly formed campus "Men's Issues Awareness Society."

The posters were juvenile in both presentation and content. They made a variety of claims, entirely out of context, that, simply put, attempted to make the case that not only are women no longer victims of systemic inequality, but also that the shoe is now on the other foot. It is men's issues that are being "ignored" and it is men that are now allegedly facing discrimination. This "discrimination," further, is being disregarded due to the influence of feminism in our society.

These claims, of course are absurd, a point to which I will return. However, their very idiocy had the effect of making me not take the groups around this postering campaign seriously. That is a mistake. The "Men's Rights Movement" needs to be taken very seriously, and many of its adherents and ideas are very dangerous.'

Does Title IX Need Fixing?

Mastodon · 7 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Richmond is getting rid of men's soccer and men's track in order to add men's lacrosse, which a university committee decided would be more attractive to students and advantageous for Division 1 play. The university's athletic director is blaming Title IX because – he says – if they add men's lacrosse without scrapping another men's sport, they'd have to add a women's sport. He says they can't afford that and don't want to reserve more spots for student-athletes.

The university president claims the decision to substitute lacrosse for men's soccer and track wasn't connected to the $3 million in donations pledged for an endowment for the new lacrosse team.'

Arrested Moms Stay with Kids Instead of Jail

insdel2005 · 7 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Another case of women getting therapy while men get prison time. Full Article here. Excerpt:

'A unique program in New York City allows mothers to live with their children in a private apartment building instead of prison while they serve out court mandates.

Five families live in the building, all sent there by the district attorney's office for felony offenses. Some involve drugs, others weapons, and still others violent crime.
...
The program has been lauded as a successful, more supportive and cheaper alternative to prison. But space is running out, and it needs funding in order to grow.'

Finally, a Book on How to Raise a Sexist Jerk! (Every Mom's Dream Read)

Mastodon · 7 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dear Adriana: I'm raising a young boy and I want him to grow up to be a big, strong man. But I also want to make sure he's a sexist asshole who can't cope with everyday civilized life in these modern times. I want him to feel totally out of sync with the rest of the world's sexual politics. I want women to avoid him like the plague and for men to be embarrassed around him. What's the most important thing I can do?

Fake letter writer who I just made up, I'm glad you asked that question! I have a book for you. It will do all of these things for your son. It's called Raising Boys Feminists Will Hate by Doug Giles. Let me tell you more about this extremely useful tome.

And because honestly, I couldn't possibly put it better myself, here is the book description from the back cover.'

'Kissing Sailor' Photo Depicts 'Sexual Assault, Not Romance,' Says Feminist Website, Blogger

Mastodon · 8 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Touted as an "icon of American culture" and celebrated as one of the most romantic moments ever captured on camera, Alfred Eisenstaedt's "Kissing Sailor" image is one familiar to most of us.

But now one website is turning our understanding of this saucy picture on its head, saying the image "unambiguously depicts an act of sexual assault " and not a romantic moment between lovers.

Feministing.com, quoting a blogger from London known only as "Leopard," argues that "far from being a kiss between a loving couple, we learn that George and Greta were perfect strangers. We learn that George was drunk, and that Greta had no idea of his presence, until she was in his arms, with his lips on hers…It seems pretty clear, then, what George had committed was sexual assault."'

Former NFL cheerleader pleads guilty in student-sex case

Mastodon · 8 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

COVINGTON, Ky. — A former Cincinnati Bengals cheerleader pleaded guilty Monday to having sex with her 17-year-old former student while she was a teacher at a northern Kentucky high school, a move that will allow her to avoid jail time.

In a tearful admission in Kenton County Circuit Court in Covington, Ky., 27-year-old Sarah Jones pleaded guilty to sexual misconduct and custodial interference in place of more serious charges as part of a plea agreement with prosecutors.

...

Jones said the relationship began in February 2011 when the boy was 17, saying that the two had sex, that she sent him sexually explicit text messages and lied about the relationship to police.

The teen had been in Jones' freshman English class in 2008, and she was his peer tutor in 2010 and 2011 before he graduated at the age of 17 this year, according to Monday's plea agreement, signed by Jones.

In accepting the plea agreement, Judge Patricia Summe granted prosecutors' recommendation to sentence Jones to five years of diversion* but no jail time, and she won't have to register as a sex offender. The diversion requires Jones to report to a probation officer and undergo drug tests.'

---

* http://definitions.uslegal.com/d/diversion/

Advocacy group backs order to send girls back to Italy

Mastodon · 8 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Monday the Family Court dismissed the mother's last ditch attempt to keep her four daughters in Australia after she brought them here two years ago from Italy, ostensibly for a short holiday.

The Brisbane court ruled the children, aged between nine and 15, be returned to their father in Italy and they were immediately taken into the custody of the Queensland Department of Communities.

The girls' distraught mother was seen yelling out to her screaming daughters around 3:30am on Thursday as they were escorted onto a plane by police and an official from the Italian embassy.

...

The legal action has run for more than a year and men's rights advocates say the court was correct to uphold the rules of the Hague Convention.

Men's Rights Agency director Sue Price says while the mother is grieving, she should not have flouted the law.'

Mother admits gluing two-year-old daughter's hands to wall and beating her into a coma

Matt · 8 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A young mother admitted on Thursday to gluing her two-year-old daughter's hands to a wall and beating her into a coma.

When Elizabeth Escalona, 23, left the courtroom after pleading guilty to injury to a child charges stemming from the horrific abuse in September.

She told reporters afterward, 'I have no comment, and only God can judge me. That's all I gotta say.'

The toddler, Joselyn Cedillo, was briefly on life support in a coma.

According to police records, glue and paint were stuck to her palms, with skin torn away in places.
...
Escalona could face life in prison if convicted.

She remains eligible for criminal adjudication, which would leave her without a criminal conviction on her record.

The girl and three other siblings were taken into custody.'

Men owe child support despite not being fathers

Mastodon · 9 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HOUSTON—A new estimate shows an overwhelming number of child support owed statewide in Texas. According to the Texas attorney general's office, there is nearly $11 billion of unpaid child support to date.

The attorney general's office says the majority of those who don't pay, have the ability to do so, but choose not to.

On the opposite spectrum, there are a small percentage of men who pay child support for kids that aren't theirs. A family law attorney in Houston estimates that there are more than 120,000 men in this predicament in Texas.

A new state law says men no longer have to make child support payments if they can prove the child is not theirs. However, there appears to be a loophole in that law. It does not erase back child support.'

Tammy Sytch Fourth Arrest: Ex-WWE Diva Violates Restraining

Mastodon · 9 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Former WWE diva Tammy Sytch had her fourth arrest in four weeks in crimes related to "domestic violence," reported TMZ. Sytch was arrested in Connecticut on Monday after she violated a restraining order that her ex-boyfriend had against her.

Sytch was taken into custody on charges of violating a protective order, disorderly conduct and criminal mischief. Police say she appeared to be intoxicated at the time of arrest.

Tammy Sytch, arrested under the name Sunny, is currently being held on$25,000 bond and is set to be arraigned Tuesday morning.

In September, Sytch was arrested three times in three days for charges related to domestic violence. All three incidents involved her ex-boyfriend.'

Stay-at-home dad honored by national organization

Matt · 9 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Not all men can be defined by their careers, and as the father of 8-month-old triplets, Matt Batchelor can attest to that.

The father of two boys and a girl from Warminster was the recent recipient of a scholarship honoring him for his work as a stay-at-home dad.

Selected as the recipient of the 2012 Brian Dickson Memorial At-Home Dads Convention Scholarship Award, Batchelor was helped financially so he could attend this year's convention.

Batchelor said he was searching for networking contacts when he came across The National At-Home Dad Network on the Internet.'

Paternity establishment: undue influence, misrepresentation & mis-service

Matt · 9 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men suffer from lack of good biological paternity knowledge. That's not a matter of biological destiny, men's personal faults, or men's free choices. Legal processes of paternity establishment support false biological paternity beliefs through undue influence, misrepresentation, and mis-service.

In high-income democratic societies, paternity is commonly established in hospitals shortly after a woman gives birth. If the woman is married, paternity of her newly born child is legally assigned to her husband. A husband on his own initiative could seek to have a paternity test. However, the mother might perceive her husband's request for a paternity test as a grave insult to her. A husband requesting a paternity test could thus seriously endanger his relationship with his wife, irrespective of the knowledge that such a test would provide and the actions that a husband would take given certain knowledge of paternity or non-paternity. Not having paternity testing as a default legal rule supports relational circumstances that unduly influence husbands to remain ignorant of true paternity knowledge.'

High court denies area man’s plea for lower child support

Matt · 9 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SALEM — The South Dakota Supreme Court has ruled a judge was correct in denying a McCook County man’s request to have his child support payments reduced.
...
Heumiller asked a circuit court to lower his payments to reflect his past overpayments. Heumiller’s monthly payment was reduced to $699, but the court refused to lower the payments further to compensate for the times he paid the original $1,238.36 payment after two of his children no longer qualified for support.

Heumiller appealed the decision.

The Supreme Court ruled Heumiller should himself have requested his payments be modified as soon as he was no longer required to pay support for one or more of his children. In addition, the Supreme Court pointed out there was no agreement between Heumiller and Snyders for any “credit or offset” as was requested by Heumiller.'

Why Some Borderline, Narcissistic and Histrionic Mothers Sabotage their Children

Matt · 9 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many men and women in my practice have made the above observations and asked the above questions. The subject of maternal sabotage is also one of the many common themes on the Shrink4Men Forum. It can be difficult to wrap one's mind around this topic. What kind of a mother would deliberately try to sabotage her child's intellectual, emotional, psychological, physical and moral development?

A bad one.

That's a simplistic answer, but an accurate one. Sabotaging one's own children is frequently a common trait of abusive personality disordered women and men specifically, borderline (BPD), narcissistic (NPD), histrionic (HPD), and dependent (DPD) personality disordered parents.
...
Common reasons BPDs/NPDs and other personality disordered parents sabotage their children's development:

1) Exposure. If and when the BPD/NPD parent has exposed her asshattery to a teacher(s), other parents, coaches and/or school administration, she may push to change the children's school. One could argue that the BPD/NPD is embarrassed, but many of them appear to be quite shameless — and relentless. More likely, her mask of super mom, single martyr mom or victim of my POS ex-husband mom has slipped and she has revealed which parent is the actual problem.'

IA: AAP meeting in New Orleans in two weeks

Matt · 9 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

In less than two weeks, the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) will gather in New Orleans for its annual conference—and Intact America will be there, inside and on the ground, demanding that the AAP retract its new pro-circumcision Task Force Report.

THE TIME TO GIVE IS NOW. We need to reach America's pediatricians and remind them that circumcision is medically unnecessary AND harmful to the infant—and thus violates the very ethical principles they swore to uphold.

Why now? Because if you donate before midnight on October 15, your gift will be matched dollar for dollar (up to $10,000), thanks to a very generous pledge from intactivist Dan Bollinger. This match will double the impact of your gift!

Australia: Abbott won't resile from Gillard criticism

Minuteman · 10 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Opposition Leader Tony Abbott says he won't be retreating from his criticism of Prime Minister Julia Gillard and called on Labor to stop playing the gender card.

Ms Gillard on Tuesday accused Mr Abbott in parliament of having a record of sexism and misogyny.

The comments came in a debate over whether to sack Speaker Peter Slipper, who is facing court action by a former male staffer over alleged sexual harassment.

Mr Abbott said the attack was "a bit rich" coming from the person who was "prepared to knife Kevin Rudd, but wasn't prepared to sack Peter Slipper".

The prime minister should be prepared to accept fair criticism.

"Just because the prime minister has sometimes been the victim of unfair criticism doesn't mean she can dismiss any criticism as sexism or she can dismiss any criticism on gender grounds," Mr Abbott told reporters in Canberra on Wednesday.'

'Opportunities For Girls To Play Sports Not Equal To Boys'

Mastodon · 10 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Researchers at the University of Michigan compared data from four-year public high schools across the country, including schools that do and do not offer interscholastic sports. They broke the data down by regions, what type of communities the schools were in (rural vs. city, etc), and how much money the schools spent on athletics. Then they compared data from the 2009-10 school year with data from school years 1993-94 and 1999-2000.
...
The studies' authors warn that their findings indicate that progress towards gender equity has reversed over the past decade thanks to a false sense that girls were finally receiving an equal chance to play sports and less funding due to the recession. "One sociological tenet contends that, during times of economic hardship, social inequalities tend to grow more marked rather than diminish," the researchers explained. "This dynamic may be playing out with regard to gender equity in high school sports."

So while it's legally possible for girls to hit the gym as much as the boys do, more than 40 years after major legislation changed the sports scene in the United States, there's still not an equal playing field. Studies like this may help fight back against common assertions that Title IX has taken away opportunities from boys by causing schools to drop expensive sports teams in order to make teams for girls. With all the benefits sports provide to both boys and girls, it seems like every public school child should not only get the chance, but be encouraged, to take the field, court or track. By the look of the country's skyrocketing obesity rate, it's certainly better than the alternative.'

Mother who glued daughter's hands to wall: 'I'm not a monster'

Mastodon · 10 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 23-year-old Texas mother who beat her daughter and glued her hands to a wall told a Dallas judge on Wednesday that she was a monster a year ago, but she has changed.

"Elizabeth Escalona is not a monster," she said of herself, according to a tweet by Dallas Morning News' crime reporter Scott Goldstein. "I want everybody to know that I'm not a monster. I love my kids. I love my babies."

Escalona pleaded guilty in July to first-degree injury to a child, a felony. Prosecutors are seeking a 45-year prison sentence.

...

She cried as she recounted what she did to her daughter, according to Goldstein: "I hit her, I kicked her constantly and she didn't deserve that."

She described a grim home life -- four of her children slept on a sofa because a mattress was infested with bed bugs.

...

But prosecutors have painted a portrait of a violent young woman, playing recordings of her as a teenager threatening to kill her mother. They said she was a former gang member who started smoking marijuana at age 11.

Her mother, Ofelia Escalona, has stood by her daughter and now cares for Escalona's five children, including Jocelyn, who has recovered.

On the stand, Ofelia Escalona burst into tears and said, "I wish as a mother that I had done more to protect my daughter." She pleaded with the judge to show her daughter mercy.'

Portlandia: Claire Gets a Sitter for Doug

fibtastic · 11 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Wow... just re-watching some of these, and WOW. Would this even be attempted with the genders reversed? Wake up, Dougs of the world!

Portlandia - Claire gets a sitter for Doug

Attention Disorder or Not, Pills to Help in School

Mastodon · 11 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. As we all know, this issue primarily affects boys. Excerpt:

'CANTON, Ga. — When Dr. Michael Anderson hears about his low-income patients struggling in elementary school, he usually gives them a taste of some powerful medicine: Adderall.

The pills boost focus and impulse control in children with attention deficit hyperactivity disorder. Although A.D.H.D is the diagnosis Dr. Anderson makes, he calls the disorder “made up” and “an excuse” to prescribe the pills to treat what he considers the children’s true ill — poor academic performance in inadequate schools.

“I don't have a whole lot of choice,” said Dr. Anderson, a pediatrician for many poor families in Cherokee County, north of Atlanta. “We've decided as a society that it’s too expensive to modify the kid’s environment. So we have to modify the kid.”'

Boys Organization Calls New York Times Article "Profoundly Disturbing"

Mastodon · 11 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Oct. 9, 2012 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Today The Boys Initiative, a Washington, DC-based nonprofit organization, characterized an October 9 article appearing in the New York Times as "profoundly disturbing". The article examines the widening diagnosis of ADHD in children and the use of prescription drugs to treat symptoms that may or may not be related to that diagnosis. Studies show that boys are diagnosed with ADHD at two and a half times the rate of girls.

"It has been apparent for some time now that there is widespread confusion on the subject of ADHD diagnosis among parents as well as health care providers", said Dennis Barbour, Co-Founder and Executive Vice President of The Boys Initiative. "The damage we are inflicting on young brains may well be life-long as well as unnecessary," he said, "in the end we may be creating a largely male cohort of robots".

The Boys Initiative is calling on national organizations that serve the interests of children and adolescents to begin advocating for use of more coherent treatment guidelines based on sound science, such as those of the American Academy of Pediatrics. Such guidelines are neither well understood nor applied uniformly.'

Australian PM’s sexism speech sparks divisive reaction

Mastodon · 11 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Deputy opposition leader Julie Bishop accused Gillard of using sexism as a weapon against criticism and said women deserved better.

“The prime minister is setting back the cause of women decades by using sexism as a shield against criticisms of her performance,” she said.

“Instead of being remembered as Australia’s first female prime minister, she’ll be remembered as the prime minister who let down the women of Australia when she was put to the test.”

Abbott also weighed in, saying it was time “everyone in this parliament moved on from the gender card which so many members of the government have been playing”.'

Arrested New York Moms Stay With Kids Instead Of Going to Jail

Mastodon · 11 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rita Zimmer, the founder of Housing Plus Solutions, the nonprofit that runs the program, said it costs $34,000 annually to house a woman and her children at Drew House. It costs nearly four times as much to incarcerate a woman and put her children in foster care.

Some prisons allow women to keep their infants with them, and some drug treatment programs allow children, but no other program allows women arrested on other felonies to live with their children instead of prison.

The idea came from prosecutors working with Brooklyn District Attorney Charles Hynes and took nearly a decade to get off the ground, until Zimmer came on board. The house opened in 2008, and was named for Hynes' mother, a victim of domestic violence.

"There's just a lot more to public safety than locking people up," Hynes said.'

Remains Found in ’05 Are of Harlem Girl, Authorities Say

Matt · 11 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The skeletal remains were discovered in 2005 in a wooded area in central New Jersey. They belonged to a girl of grade-school age, a girl who had probably died three years or so before she was found. But there was little else for investigators to go on; her case, unlike some that were called Baby Hope or Baby Faith, was simply referred to as Baby Bones.

Seven years later, investigators finally put a real name to the girl.

Her name was Jon-Niece Jones, prosecutors in Monmouth County said Wednesday, as they charged the girl’s own family in New York City with dumping her body in the wooded area off the New Jersey Turnpike in Upper Freehold before trying to cover their tracks with fire. Officials said Jon-Niece’s sister told them this summer that she had been killed in 2002 by their mother, who died the same year.'

SAVE: DV Group Batters the Truth for Fundraising Campaign

Matt · 11 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The National Coalition Against Domestic Violence (NCADV) has announced their current fundraising campaign, "Every Home a Safe Home." While SAVE agrees that every home should be safe, we are getting a little tired of their ongoing gender bias. Take a look at the t-shirt they've chosen to sell.

It's bad enough that the shirt only shows a mother and daughter, perpetuating the myth that only women and girls are victims. You should see the gender bias they've added to the website you have to visit to order the t-shirts!

The campaign on Charity52 completely disregards male victims, even in the statistics. No images of men or boys, other than t-shirt models. Not one word about abused men or boys (Half of all DV victims.)

Today we're asking you to contact NCADV. Tell them to tell the ENTIRE truth about DV. Demand that they end their gender bias!

Email Exec. Dir. Rita Smith: rsmith-at-ncadv.org.

While you're at it, let Charity 52 know how unhappy you are about this campaign:
http://www.charity52.org/contact/

From the bottom of my heart, thank you.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Intact America Banned from AAP Conference

Matt · 11 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Via an IA email:

Just as we were about to send you the email below, we received a letter from the American Academy of Pediatrics, telling us that INTACT AMERICA HAS BEEN BANNED FROM HAVING A BOOTH AT NEXT WEEK'S AAP CONFERENCE! It's clear they are afraid of our message, but we're still going to New Orleans, and we need your help. We have an opportunity to place two Open Letters in the New Orleans Times Picayune to reach the thousands of pediatricians visiting the conference!

Next week, the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) is meeting in New Orleans for its annual conference. Given the AAP's recent Task Force Report on Circumcision, it is more important than ever that Intact America be there—especially now that we've been banned from exhibiting inside the Convention Center.

The spotlight is now on us to stage a major press conference and demonstration, because we must get our message out to America's pediatricians: circumcision is medically unnecessary and harmful to the babies they are bound by oath to protect.

WE WILL NOT BE SILENCED. Please donate now and help us make an impact in New Orleans!

YOU are the driving force behind all the progress we've made so far. That's why I am asking you to please give—and give generously—at a time when your donation will be matched dollar for dollar, up to $10,000—which is exactly the amount we still need to pay for TWO Open Letters in the New Orleans Times Picayune!

Intactivists are coming from across America to help fight for baby boys' rights to genital integrity. We need to equip them with the information, signs, and tools they need to be heard when they tell the AAP, "Shame On You!"

Your tax-deductible donation today will be critical in getting our message out to pediatricians who need important information about circumcision—information that their own trade association is keeping from them by banning us from the conference!

We can't afford NOT to be there.

Thanks to the generous matching pledge from intactivist Dan Bollinger, your donation today will go twice as far—which is why I am asking you to please give as generously as you can. Like I said above, we will not be silenced.

Together we can make a difference!

With gratitude for all that you do,

Georganne Chapin
Executive Director, Intact America
www.intactamerica.org

Mom Who Glued Toddler's Hands To Wall Gets 99 Years

Mastodon · 12 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DALLAS (CBSDFW.COM) – The North Texas mom who pled guilty to gluing her toddler daughter's hands to a wall, kicking her in the stomach and beating her over "potty training" issues has been sentenced to 99 years in prison.

...

In handing down the stiff sentence, Mitchell told Escalona that in spite of the 'heartbreaking' and 'compelling' evidence presented on both sides, "to me, it comes down to a single, salient fact: you savagely beat your child to the edge of death… for this you must be punished."

Pleading for leniency Escalona took to the stand Thursday where she admitted that she'd behaved "like a monster" but also said she deserved to be given "a second chance."'

Roseanne Barr of Peace and Freedom Party is honest about DV and gender

Matt · 12 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.:

Roseanne Barr, Presidential candidate for the Peace & Freedom Party, is the only candidate I have seen who was fair and honest about domestic violence. She flat-out said women are as violent as men in relationships. That is precisely what the majority of the independent surveys show, all over the world, as opposed to the unreliable crime data. She said this in the context of the Chris Brown/Rihiana incident, in which CNN admitted the court records say Rihianna was slapping Chris around before he attacked her, but the mass media and Oprah all attacked Chris 100% without ever mentioning Rihianna's vioence.

Quoting Roseanne:

http://www.roseanneworld.com/blog/2009/02/sick-secret/
"Women who go back to men who have hit them are usually violent too–they escalate conflict by using verbal humiliation and often throw the first punch, but are then unable to withstand the strength of the man's counter attack. Alot of guys hit women because the women are hitting them, verbally abusing them or throwing the keys to their car outside and goading them on, and they lose control of themselves. This is what it sounds like to be in the rhianna-chris brown affair. There is no way out of violence if you are violent. the only way to win is not to play the game. In the later stages, she won't leave because her will is destroyed, and a violent line crossed, because once the guy threatens to kill her, it becomes almost impossible for her to leave. i hope rhianna is getting counseling from a professional counselor who will tell her that there is no way for her to ever win, and that she will have to curtail her own penchant for escalating conflict by screaming at or hitting or humiliating her abuser. I hope he gets real counseling too, that is not from a minister or his mom or any other shame based bullshit method that will never work, and that is designed to avoid dealing directly with self-control issues. I hope that they both leave each other alone and get over their faults. I hope she does not continue to play the game with him. If they still love each other after they learn self control and conflict resolution, then they can get back together."

http://www.roseanneworld.com/blog/2009/03/i-am-glad-chris-brown-is-charg/
"I hope he spends a long time in jail. I think laws need to change so that the woman who is a partner in domestic abuse should go to jail too. I think they both should be going to jail right now. She was also psychologically abusive to him, spying on his private phone messages, and throwing his keys out the door and screaming and threatening to call the police, as a way of taunting him, not stopping him. It's all a big game and it takes two players. I am sick of people thinking that women cannot leave when the truth is they stay too long because they do not want to stop being violent themselves. I have heard so many women say: "I didn't just take it, I hit him too" as if that is some feminist thing. Women are as violent as men and women attack and provoke men instead of just leaving them and moving on. Alot of times they do move on and end up in another violent situation with another man."

An end to the agony

Matt · 12 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Login required, registration is free. Excerpt:

'Germany's parliament may soon approve a law to protect religious circumcision, this to counteract a Cologne court ruling last June that pronounced the practice unlawful.

This is wrong - the German government should rethink. I say this as a Jewish parent from a proud rabbinic lineage, with relatives killed in the Holocaust; I say this as the maker of "It's a Boy!" - the 1995 British TV documentary that first broke the taboo on showing the hidden toll of circumcision. It demonstrated how a rite ingrained in Jewish and Muslim culture, and said to be divinely commanded, regularly results in acute suffering, injuries, mutilation and deaths.

The film triggered a furor in Britain by chronicling the near-death of a baby circumcised by a mohel, and I hoped this would start a phasing-out of the custom. Instead, at pulpits across the U.K., rabbis denounced "that film made by a self-hating Jew," and urged parents to ignore it.
...
I think about this positively: For my daughter's generation and those following, shouldn't Jewish and Muslim identities embrace children's rights? Nonviolent welcoming ceremonies would be equally meaningful for baby girls and boys. A handful of rabbis in America and Germany have been pioneering "brit shalom" ceremonies. These celebrate the perfection present at the birth of all children. That's the true praise for a Creator, after all, rather than "corrective surgery" for every newborn boy.'

Bus driver suspended after fight with passenger

Matt · 12 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Incredible story... a female bus driver was harassed physically and verbally by a male passenger who appeared drunk and/or crazy, and after trying to deal with him verbally, and after repeated threats and assaults such as choking and spitting, she hit him and threw him off the bus physically. Then he re-boarded the bus and assaulted the driver again. And can you believe it, she declined to press charges against him for his outrageous behavior. Now, strangely enough, the bus company (Greater Cleveland RTA) she works for has suspended her and denounced her actions despite him putting her and her passengers in danger. I think this is nuts. Click here to go to Change.org to sign a petition expressing your dissatisfaction to the bus company for their difficult-to-understand actions. What you say, the link doesn't work? You're right, it doesn't. That's because it isn't a hyperlink. That's because there is no such petition. That's because the foregoing story is not true. However if you re-read the story and reverse the genders, the story will in fact be true. Read it here. GCRTA contact info is posted in one of the comments below, if you would like to let them know how you feel. Excerpt:

'OCTOBER 12--The Cleveland bus driver who delivered an uppercut to an unruly female passenger told cops that he struck the woman after she grabbed his throat and spit in his face as he was driving, according to police reports.
...
Video of the fight (see below) went viral online this week, prompting RTA officials to suspend Hughes, a 22-year veteran, and characterize his behavior as "absolutely unacceptable."

When cops responded to the stopped bus around 4 PM, Hughes and three passengers described Lane (pictured at right) as the incident's aggressor. Hughes told cops that Lane initially boarded the bus without paying, claiming, "I left my bookbag."

Criticising women not sexism or misogyny

Mastodon · 13 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Note you may get prompted for login, and paid registration is required. If necessary, get around this by using the Google search link here, then click on the first listed result. Excerpt:

'Have I encountered sexism and misogyny along the way? Not that I have noticed, although I am the type who would be inclined to suck it up and fight back.

I often have criticisms levelled at me. Only yesterday, someone (anonymous, of course) described me as a "commentator's bootlace". I take these remarks as indicative of the person's opinion of my work not good. That's fine.

...

My view is that if you put yourself out there, it is only reasonable to expect attacks and criticisms. So be it.

Have I benefited from being in a profession which has traditionally been dominated by men? You bet, although I find comfort in the knowledge that merit and competence are always part of the selection criteria. But could this be called reverse sexism?

The really troubling implication of the showdown in parliament this week is that the Prime Minister will now misrepresent any criticisms of her performance and the performance of her government as examples of sexism and misogyny. She will play this card, even if it is the lowest trick in the book, constantly portraying herself as a helpless victim.

This is not the feminist way.'

F&F: Massachusetts Child Support Guidelines Are Actively Harmful to the Wellbeing of Children

Matt · 14 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I believe that that Massachusetts Child Support Guidelines require extensive revisions because they are actively harmful to the wellbeing of children.

Best Interests of Children
Life teaches us that almost any beneficial factor is beneficial in moderation; and that too much or too little are usually harmful. It is intuitively obvious why too little child support is harmful to the wellbeing of children. It ought to be intuitively obvious that too much court-ordered child support is also harmful to children, but so little thought has been devoted to this issue by decision-makers that it is often lost.

For middle income and high income families, the current Massachusetts Child Support Guidelines produce child support orders that are far too high by any reasonable measure. They constitute a windfall to the recipient. In low income cases, the child support orders are by no means a windfall, since they are generally less than it costs to raise a child; but they are high enough to constitute a major burden for the payor, often pushing him into deep poverty.'

AHRQ: Healthcare Quality and Disparities in Women

Minuteman · 15 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Introduction to the NHQR and NHDR

Priority populations include racial and ethnic minorities, low-income groups, women, children, older adults, residents of rural areas and inner cities, and individuals with disabilities and special health care needs.
...
Colorectal Cancer

* From 2000 to 2007, the rate of advanced stage colorectal cancer in males age 50 and over decreased significantly, from 111.4 to 88.0. During the same period, rates for females age 50 and over also showed a significant decrease, from 83.2 to 67.0. In all years, males had significantly higher rates of advanced stage colorectal cancer compared with females.
...
Diabetes

*From 2000 to 2007, males had significantly higher rates of admission for lower extremity amputation. In 2005-2007, the amputation rate for males was 4.8 per 1,000 admissions compared with 2.2 per 1,000 admissions for women.
...

HIV and AIDS

* In 2008, there were no statistically significant gender differences in the percentage of people with HIV receiving recommended services.

* In 2009, the percentage of newly diagnosed cases of AIDS in female patients was lower than in males, 6.7% compared with 20.6%.

* In 2007, the HIV infection death rate for males was more than twice that for females (5.4 per 100,000 population versus 2.1).
...
Summary

AHRQ includes women in their priority populations, because women have unique health care needs or issues that require special focus. In addition to analyses in the NHQR and NHDR, AHRQ supports research on all aspects of health care provided to women, including enhancing the response of the health system to women's needs, understanding differences between the health care needs of women and men, understanding and eliminating disparities in health care, and providing evidence to inform women in their health care decisions.'

SAVE: Urgent-- Stop the Political Imprisonment of Vladek Filler

Matt · 15 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Last August we asked you to intervene on behalf of single father Vladek Filler in Maine(1) who had endured 5 1/2 years of persecution by Asst. District Attorney Mary Kellet.(2,3) Filler was facing jail when he needed to prepare for Kellet's disciplinary hearing for her procedural misconduct in his case.

We asked, and you took action! Filler's incarceration was postponed. But, so was Kellet's hearing.

Now Filler has been ordered to jail on October 17, right when he should be preparing for Kellet's October 22-23 hearing. Coincidence? We don't think so.

IA: Thanks to your support, we reached our goal

Matt · 15 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Later this week, members of the Intact America staff, along with intactivists from around the country, will arrive in New Orleans to protest outside the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center in New Orleans, where the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) will be hosting its annual convention, and formally announcing its new Task Force Report on Circumcision.

Why are we outside this year, and not inside? Because we've been barred from the convention's exhibit hall by the AAP.

As you know, every year since its inception, Intact America has had a booth inside the AAP's annual convention. To get more bang for our buck, we linked up with the National Organization of Circumcision Information Resource Centers (NOCIRC). As our profile became more and more visible and our position became more and more threatening to the AAP, we fully anticipated that the AAP would try to silence us; we just didn't know how.

Intact America is planning a major press conference as well as a demonstration outside the Convention Center, because we know the AAP is scared, and rightly so—their pro-circumcision stance is finally exposed for its self-interest and lack of ethics, and it is creating a storm of public criticism and disgust. They took the gloves off when they published that report, and if we want the intactivist movement to prevail, we have to be ready to fight.

Immediately following the release of the Task Force Report, YOU—Intact America supporters—took action through the Intact America website, and sent a total of nearly 100,000 (yes, one hundred thousand!) emails to AAP's elected leadership, senior staff, and Task Force members. Thousands of intactivists posted comments on the AAP's own Facebook page, criticizing the organization for ignoring medical ethics and promoting unnecessary, painful surgery on baby boys who cannot consent. And the "AAP-NO ETHICS" project was incredibly powerful, and it sparked the idea for Intact America's new "I Did Not Consent" message—which will be on full display this weekend in New Orleans.

Then, my article lambasting the Task Force Report was published in the Huffington Post, and—a few days later—IA received a letter saying that we would not be welcome in the exhibit hall of the convention.

By barring Intact America from the conference exhibit hall, the AAP has shown the world that it's frightened of us! This is a great opportunity to STEP UP our protest. We are investing your donations, as well as the refunded money from the booth, in more advertising to the public, to parents, and to doctors by placing Open Letters in both the New Orleans and Baton Rouge newspapers, and in a whole new slew of signs, banners, and media outreach strategies.

Thanks to your generosity, we exceeded our goal ahead of our deadline—raising $19,211 and thus securing the matching gift from Dan Bollinger. We raised almost $30,000 in only six days. This is testament to the dedication and generosity of our supporters!

As good as it was to be at the conference in the past, we now have ways of reaching MORE people than ever before. This weekend, we'll be in New Orleans as doctors enter and leave the Convention Center, handing out informational flyers, sharing our analysis of the Task Force Report, and inviting them to speak with us about how the AAP is misleading and misinforming them.

We also hope as many as people as possible show up at the demonstration. Intact America is only one of several groups who'll be there representing the intactivist movement. Now is the time for us to band together and tell the AAP, "Shame on you for trying to silence us! Shame on you for supporting the mutilation of baby boys! Shame on you for promoting doctors' financial interests instead of the rights of babies you took an oath to protect!"

To all of Intact America's supporters: THANK YOU SO MUCH.

Now let’s go to New Orleans and save some babies!

With gratitude and respect,

Georganne Chapin
Executive Director, Intact America
www.intactamerica.org

P.S. We reached our goal for this fundraiser, but Intact America needs your help in an ongoing way. The circumcision rate is falling, but—still—this year, one million baby boys will lose their foreskins to an unethical surgery to which they cannot consent. Please consider becoming an Intact America Sustainer, so that we can count on you in our continuing fight to protect babies’ bodies and babies' rights.

"The View" Hot Topics: Bus Driver Suspended for Hitting Female Passenger

Matt · 16 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. The "Ladies of The View" took up this topic. Kudos to Whoopi G. for standing up for the right of the driver to fight back-- regardless of the sex of the driver and his assailant. Predictably, most of the other "Ladies" disagreed.

Bettina Arndt Interview: Modern marriage - a dud deal for men?

Matt · 16 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. An interview with Bettina Arndt. Excerpt:

'Marriage has become a "dud deal" for men, says Bettina Arndt.

Gone are the times when men would be thanked for their hardwork - where leisure time was their own and sex was a "wifely duty".

Now, according to Bettina Arndt, "many men find themselves grovelling for sex or having sex handed out like meaty bites to a dog".

She says modern marriage demands more from men and rewards them less. Plus, the threat of divorce looms larger than ever with women's expectations on the rise.

"The risk of divorce is another really important issue - the fact that marriage is a really risky deal for men because they stand to lose an awful lot if the marriage goes wrong," she says.'

Father fights to change paternity rights in Michigan, has court hearing next Friday

Matt · 16 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'GENESEE COUNTY, MI (WNEM) - A bitter custody battle has spawned major changes in Lansing and now, a newly passed law is helping a Hartland father's fight to get his daughter back.

Daniel Quinn and his then 2 1/2-year-old daughter are all smiles in the pictures he has framed. But four years ago, his baby girl was taken away right in front of his eyes.

"Now, she's 6 years old, last time I talked to my daughter was August of 2008, and the last time I saw Maeleigh was Memorial Day of 2008," Quinn explained.

This story starts in 2006, when Quinn was dating Maeleigh's mother, a woman who he said claimed to be divorced. She got pregnant and the two moved in together. But shortly after Maeleigh was born, Quinn learned something wasn't quite right.

"At the hospital, I was denied to be able to sign my name on the birth certificate, and it was at that point, the hospital said that she was married," Quinn said.'

Please thank Whoopi Goldberg for her common sense and courage

Matt · 16 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Regarding the post from yesterday, please contact Whoopi Goldberg for her courage to stand up and be counted even if what she says is unpopular-- unpopular, but right. A Google search turns up no direct contact email address for her but The View can be contacted here. Of course, no guarantee The View management or staff will pass along your feedback, but it will let them know that people are watching and are as capable of rewarding with praise as punishing with condemnation when someone on their show does the right thing.

Google did turn up a snail-mail address for her via a celebrity information site, found here. I can't vouch for the accuracy though of the contact information one way or another.

UK: How female breadwinners are 'losing out' in divorce

Broadsword · 17 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the country's leading family law firms says increasing numbers of female breadwinners are left feeling "aggrieved" when their less well paid husbands walk away with more generous divorce settlements.

Their biggest complaint is often that while they have shouldered bigger financial burdens and longer working hours than women in previous generations, their husbands have failed to step in to take on more of the responsibility on the domestic front. The result is that they feel they have been doing "two jobs" – something the courts do not take into account when dividing assets.

...

"Both spouses will need rehousing and if the husband's income is lower than his wife's, his mortgage capacity will also be lower," she explained.

"He may therefore need more capital to enable him to obtain a suitable property."

"However, many women still find it hard to believe that they will receive less than their husbands when they divorce, especially when they still seem to do the greater share of work around the house."

...

"They feel quite aggrieved that they have been doing 'two jobs' yet they have not got any credit for it."'

Gay man assulted by coworkers, DA does nothing

Matt · 17 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Change.org petition here. Looks a lot to me like they are ignoring what is happening to this guy because he's male. If this were a female getting sexually abused this way by men or women, I am sure the DA would be all over it. Men have the right to live lives free of assault and abuse by people of either sex, and it's time the powers-that-be knew it. Excerpt:

'While working at the Shaw Group in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, I was sexually assaulted by four male co-workers who perceived that I was gay. But the District Attorney's office has refused to take the case. I believe this is because they don't take male-on-male sexual assault seriously. Now, I'm calling for a state and federal investigation to hold my abusers accountable and prevent this from happening to anyone else.
...
When I finally had enough of the abuse, I went to the police. The four men were charged, but the District Attorney refused to take the case because I was unable to appear before a Grand Jury in August. I was only given two days notice before the hearing and my request for a delay so I could speak with a rape therapist before having to speak publicly about what happened to me was denied.

I'm calling on my Attorney General in Louisiana, Buddy Caldwell, and Thomas E. Perez, Assistant Attorney General for DOJ Civil Rights Division, to investigate the case. I know they'll find the truth.

Talking about what happened to me isn't easy. But I know that somewhere, someone else is going through the same thing.'

VAWA and the War on Men

Matt · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) arguably is one of the most misguided pieces of legislation ever passed by Congress. From conceptualization to consequences it has wreaked a wide swath of destruction across American society and accurately can be described as “A War on Men.” Conceptually, VAWA is based on the false Duluth Power and Control Wheel model. VAWA falsely presumes that all Domestic Violence (DV) is perpetrated by evil patriarchal males against virtuously innocent female victims. This false gender ideology has no research support.

By contrast, social science research, replicated across hundreds of studies, shows that: DV is initiated about equally by men and women; slightly more women than men are physically harmed by DV but men nonetheless still represent more than 40% of the physically harmed victims; the DV initiation rates for women, and especially young women, have been rising; and DV has nothing to do with an evil patriarchy because the DV rates for bisexuals, gays, and lesbians all are higher than for heterosexual couples.

The research further exposes misrepresentation in the title: “The Violence Against Women Act.” Given that DV approaches 50-50 on most indices, why does Congress want to serve only half of the victims? Where are the programs for male victims of DV? Where is the money for fathers and their children who have been victimized by violent and abusive wives and mothers?'

'Alarming' low testosterone levels found in obese teenage boys

Matt · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Obese teenage boys are at risk for more than diabetes and heart disease, a new study has found. They also have alarmingly low levels of testosterone - between 40 to 50% less than males of the same age with a normal body mass index.

The study, published this week in the journal Clinical Endocrinology, investigated the effect of obesity on testosterone levels in young males.

It has its origins in earlier research, which showed that type II diabetes and obesity in older men are linked to a high rate (25-33%) of hypogonadism, or low testosterone levels. According to the new study, the rate of hypogonadism in type II diabetic men ages 18-35 is greater than 50%.

In addition, concentrations of free testosterone — testosterone that isn't chemically bound and thus available to the body — were shown to be negatively related to BMI: The higher the body mass, the lower the concentration.'

Letter to the Editor: Domestic violence also impacts men

Matt · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'According to the 2010 National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey given by the Centers for Disease Control, one in four women and one in seven men in the United States will experience severe physical violence by an intimate partner in their lifetime. There is a stigma in this country that men cannot be victims so the services available to them are limited. As a social work graduate student who works at a domestic violence agency, I am concerned by the amount of support males are able to receive. I have had calls from both homosexual and heterosexual male victims asking for support. In reality, until we raise awareness and reduce the stigma, male victims will continue to be underserved. Shelters are only for women so men end up having to go to a homeless shelter and often face discrimination even from shelter staff.'

UK: Thousands of young boys 'struggling to write their name'

Matt · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Figures show that 15 per cent of boys struggle to form simple words such as “dog”, “cat”, “mum” and “dad” from memory at the end of the reception year.

They are around twice as likely as girls to fail in basic writing at the end of pre-school, it emerged.

Data from the Department for Education also showed that some four-in-10 boys and almost a fifth of girls cannot write a simple shopping list or a letter to Santa.

In further figures, It was revealed that eight per cent of boys cannot count up to 10, compared with just five per cent of girls. They were also considerably more likely to struggle to dress independently and manage their own hygiene.'

MensHealth.com: The War Against Men

Matt · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On a radio show one morning last year, a female professor at a well-known university tossed off the thought that if men are just going to hang out with their pals at the bar every night, women will take a pass on having kids with them. She didn't cite any studies, and she almost certainly didn't know any men who fit that description. But it didn't matter.

Casually disparaging the entire male gender is not only the last socially acceptable prejudice, it's a national pastime. Later I asked friends to name a few things men do well, and the answers ranged from "Leave the toilet seat up" to a flat-out "Nothing." Men have become a necessary evil—and maybe not all that necessary, once artificial sperm moves out of the lab and into a uterus. At the same time, women have become so disproportionately admired by both sexes that psychologists call this phenomenon the "women are wonderful" effect.
...
Feminism notwithstanding, everybody understands that it's still a world where women and children come first. And we're okay with that because when it comes to survival of the species (or the family), men are just not as precious. But that context can sometimes make the modern urge to focus on female victims—while stepping gingerly past heaped-up male corpses—a little unseemly. For instance, a recent New York State report on post-9/11 deaths among first responders at the World Trade Center solemnly noted that 13 percent of victims were women. You had to go to a table to find out that the other 87 percent were . . . oh, never mind.'

Barbara Kay: One father's fight for gender-neutral justice

Matt · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Officially sanctioned injustice focuses the victim's mind wonderfully. When such an injustice befalls someone of high intelligence, iron will and an enormous reservoir of patience, sometimes one person can change a system.

Meet Toronto tax consultant Lucien Khodeir. Khodeir got screwed over years ago through Canada's recipient-biased 1997 Child Support Guidelines. He tasked himself to analyze them exhaustively, prove their bias and force judicial reform.

Khodeir is not the first person to denounce the inherent unfairness in the guidelines, but he may be the most pertinacious. He's written two e-books on the subject, and argued the need for reform through the courts up to the UN level on his own dime. According to almost equally knowledgeable comrades-in-arms, Khodeir has established a new gold standard in legal advocacy for the fathers' rights movement. We owe him a hearing.
...
Khodeir notes: "Since May 1997, Canada's child-support guidelines have been responsible for causing damage to 340,000 divorced parents at the alarming rate of $100-million every month. These damages will reach the $20-billion mark by the end of 2013 and undoubtedly classify Canada's child-support guidelines as the longest-running, most expensive scandal in the history of Canadian politics."

The state was counting on fathers to end single-mother poverty, but it hasn't. A study of Low Income Cut-off (LICO) rates for children of single-parent families seven years after the guidelines were initiated showed no change from the seven years before the guidelines. They are unlikely to have improved since then. It's time to take a fresh look at the failed guidelines with a view to reality — and gender-neutral justice.'

The most dangerous jobs in Chicago--and the state

Matt · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the most recent data available from the Illinois Census of Fatal Occupational Injuries and Illnesses, the careers associated with the highest number of occupational fatalities were transportation and material moving, management (including farming) and construction. Sales-related occupations were fourth, while protective services rounded out the top five.
...
In Illinois alone, there were 203 injury-related occupational deaths in 2010, up from 158 deaths the year before. The 28 percent increase is attributed to an unusually low number of work-related deaths in 2009.

"That year was an abnormally low number," Wamack said. "There was a downturn in the economy and less construction, which is one of the possible reasons" for fewer workplace deaths in 2009.

Men account for an overwhelming number of workplace fatalities, making up 92.1 percent of all injury-related occupational deaths in Illinois, even though they only make up a little more than half of the total workforce.

"These particular industries are dominated by men, so they make up more of the deaths" Wamack said. "But I'm seeing more women in trucking, and they're really finding their footing in that industry, so I wouldn't be surprised if the number of women deaths go up."'

Women's votes worth fighting for-- men's not?

Matt · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"And on the campaign trail and on the air, the candidates and their allies argued intensely all day over who would do more to help women. At the same time, the topic of whether the heated encounter Tuesday night had alienated the very female voters they were seeking to connect with became fodder for cable TV discussions.

The level of intensity left little doubt that the election was coming down not only to a state-by-state fight for territory, but also to one for the allegiance of vital demographic groups, chief among them undecided women.
...
Mr. Romney, at a campaign rally in Chesapeake, Va., hit back. “This president has failed America’s women,” he said. “They’ve suffered in terms of getting jobs. They’ve suffered in terms of falling into poverty.”

For Mr. Romney, the imperative, with less than three weeks until Election Day, is cutting into what has been Mr. Obama’s sizable lead among women.

Their goal, Romney aides said, is to keep Mr. Obama’s lead among women, which in many polls has been in double digits, down to the low single digits."

UK: Modern women feel feminism 'not relevant' to their generation

Mastodon · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Only one in seven women describes herself as a "feminist", while one in five said feminism was 'not relevant' to the modern generation, according to a new UK survey.

One in three modern women view traditional radical feminism as "too aggressive" towards men, the survey by a UK-based parenting website found.

Fewer than one in ten women aged 25 to 29 identified with feminism, compared with a quarter of those aged 45 to 50 and just one in seven women describes herself as a "feminist" with younger women even less likely to describe themselves as such.

A third view traditional radical feminism as "too aggressive" towards men, while a quarter no longer view it as a positive label, the Daily Mail reported.'

Obama and Romney on the Wage Gap

Mastodon · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We hear it over and over again: the myth of the wage gap. In Tuesday's presidential debate, Katherine Fenton asked President Obama what he intended to do about "women making only 72 percent of what their male counterparts earn."

Just one problem: Women make about 95 percent of what their male counterparts earn, if the male counterparts are in the same job with the same experience.

Obama's answer was to brag about the increased regulations he's put in place through the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act, which he signed into law in January 2009 — even though women have brought only about 35 lawsuits under the new law.'

UK: Thousands of boys 'at least four years behind in reading'

Broadsword · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Articles here and here. Excerpt from one:

'More than 20,000 boys left primary school this summer with the reading skills of a seven-year-old or worse, according to official figures.

Seven per cent of 11-year-old boys will be starting secondary education with ability levels no better than those expected of the average infant, it was revealed.

Despite a record rise in results this year, figures showed that boys were almost twice as likely as girls to fail basic reading tests.

In all, some 20,300 boys were at Level 2 or below in reading – the standard normally expected after just two years of compulsory schooling – compared with 10,400 girls.

The disclosure comes amid concerns that a lack of male role models at home and school may be turning boys off reading at a young age.

Earlier this year, the All-Party Parliamentary Group on Literacy warned that large numbers of boys were failing to develop a love of reading during primary education because of a shortage of male teachers combined with an anti-book culture among many fathers.'

"Perversion files" show locals helped cover up

Matt · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Undoubtedly the vast majority of adults in Scouting are NOT child molesters, in the same way that the same can be said for college football coaches and clergymen. The issue here is that once again, boys were the victims of sexual predators (male or female, makes no difference), and instead of other adults standing to defend them, they turned their backs on them. Need I make the point yet again: Would they have done thus if the victims had been girls? No way. Excerpt:

'PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — An array of local authorities — police chiefs, prosecutors, pastors and town Boy Scout leaders among them — quietly shielded scoutmasters and others who allegedly molested children, according to a newly opened trove of confidential files compiled from 1959 to1985.

At the time, those authorities justified their actions as necessary to protect the good name and good works of Scouting. But as detailed in 14,500 pages of secret "perversion files" released Thursday by order of the Oregon Supreme Court, their maneuvers protected suspected sexual predators while victims suffered in silence.

The files document sex abuse allegations across the country, from a small town in the Adirondacks to downtown Los Angeles.

At a news conference Thursday, Portland attorney Kelly Clark blasted the Boy Scouts for their continuing legal battles to try to keep the full trove of files secret.'

SAVE E-lert: Bring Mary Kellett to Justice

Matt · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Something smells very rotten in Ellsworth, Maine.

Even though you made the calls this week on behalf of falsely accused and persecuted domestic violence victim and single father Vladek Filler, he was incarcerated yesterday. But that's not the worst of it.

Asst. District Attorney Mary N. Kellett is facing a disciplinary hearing next week for procedural misconduct in the Filler case. And now Vladek is in Mary Kellet's jail. He's in her jail without an attorney.

Background: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/intolerable-injustice/

Six weeks ago Vladek filed two motions, including one asking the court to recognize his new attorney. Judge Robert E. Murray waited until the very last minute, then denied both motions. Vladek Filler doesn't have an attorney to make sure he is allowed to testify at Kellett's disciplinary hearing next week.

Do you smell it now?

Please call the Board of Overseers of the Bar. Tell them to bring prosecutor Mary Kellett to justice at 207-623-1121

Board of Overseers of the Bar
97 Winthrop Street
P. O. Box 527
Augusta, Maine 04332-0527
Fax: 207-623-4175
E-mail: board-at-mebaroverseers.org

And sign the petition on Change.org.

Thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Religious vs. secular ethics and a note about respect

Matt · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The philosopher Iain Brassington has recently expressed a similar concern. On the Journal of Medical Ethics blog, he wrote: “Though I [have] mentioned the [recent] decision of the German court that ritual circumcision constituted assault, I’ve wanted to stay clear of saying more about it [because] it seemed too potentially toxic”[2] (Brassington, 2012, para. 2). To give another example, the bioethicist Dan O’Connor from Johns Hopkins University—in an article entitled “A Piece I Really Didn’t Want to Write on Circumcision”—has recently said that: “when [a reporter] calls my work and ask[s] if there is a bioethicist in the house who will give the anti-circumcision viewpoint, I beg off. … I would be a terrible interviewee anyway, [since I would have to preface] my every argument against circumcision with rambling spiels about what loving and caring parents my [Jewish] friends are” (O’Connor, 2012, para. 10).

Finally, as a philosopher colleague of mine wrote to me in a recent email: “To be honest with you, I am strongly anti-circumcision. The reason I don’t [write papers on the topic] is that I have a large number of circumcised Jewish … friends who I think would be offended if they found out [about my views]” (personal communication, May 17, 2012).

Like all of the men I have just mentioned, I find myself in the position of being very skeptical about ritual circumcision on ethical grounds—for reasons I will give in just a moment—and yet I am well aware that since I myself am neither Jewish nor Muslim, I have an especially good chance of offending someone who is when I publically criticize this practice. This chance is, of course, magnified by the fact that circumcision is seen by some as a central, or even obligatory, ritual in each of these faiths. And just like the bioethicist Dan O’Connor and the philosopher colleague whose email I quoted above, this potential for causing offense extends to many of my closest friends, to colleagues of mine, and to a pretty wide range of people I have no particular interest in irritating.'

Sandusky seeks new trial

Matt · 18 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Unbelievable, but read it here. Excerpt:

'Former Penn State assistant football coach Jerry Sandusky asked a judge on Thursday to overturn his child sexual abuse convictions and grant him a new trial, claiming his lawyers lacked sufficient time to prepare and the statute of limitations for some charges had expired.

Sandusky's lawyers made the filing at the courthouse in Bellefonte where he was sentenced two weeks ago to 30 to 60 years in prison after being convicted of abusing 10 boys, some on Penn State's campus in State College.

"The defendant submits the court's sentence was excessive and tantamount ... to a life sentence, which the defendant submits is in violation of his rights," they wrote.

The 31-page set of motions, technically not appeals because they were filed with the trial judge, cover a wide range of assertions, including insufficient evidence, improper use of hearsay testimony and improper rulings from the bench.'

What's tantamount to a life sentence is living with the trauma of having been brutally raped by someone you thought you could trust. Sociopaths have no concept of what they do to others. They only see life through their own eyes. There is just one fit place for Jerry Sandusky: Prison.

Hillary tells women to 'stop whining'

Matt · 19 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Will wonders never cease? I think years of walking a few miles in mens' mocassins has taught her a few lessons. Wonder if she'd recognize that whining panderer she was not too long ago if she met her in the hallway? Now I don't see this as proof of a magical transformation; I have no doubt she still cares diddly about males, much less men's issues-- after all, she's still Mrs. Circumcision-For-All-African-Men, last I knew. But I'm glad to see that after so much time, she's finally grown up some and not only seems to have stopped her endless whining herself but has developed a healthy intolerance for it. Better late than never. Excerpt:

'Secretary of State Hillary Clinton says in a new interview that she can't stand "whining" by women who are unhappy with the work and family choices they've made in life and complain that they have no options.

Clinton, in the interview with Marie Claire, was discussing Anne-Marie Slaughter, a former director of policy planning at the State Department who left in 2011. This summer, Slaughter wrote a much-discussed cover story in the Atlantic — "Why Women Still Can't Have It all" — about leaving her job because of the difficulty of balancing her work at State with the needs of her two teenage boys.'

Slate: Map Shows the Worst State for Women To Make Money

fibtastic · 19 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Slate has recently published an interactive map purporting to show income inequality by gender down to the county level, based on the US Govt. data from the American Community Survey. You'll immediately notice the ubiquitous pink and red tones screaming that women earn up to 50% less than men.

Lets educate them a bit in the comments shall we?

PM's sexism rant prompts Australian dictionary rewrite

Mastodon · 19 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sydney (CNN) -- The Australian Macquarie Dictionary has re-ignited the so-called gender war that shone so brightly after the country's prime minister's blistering attack on sexism and misogyny in parliament earlier this month.

Julia Gillard's tirade, which drew global attention, and at the time of writing had been viewed almost two million times on You Tube, was directed at the Opposition leader, Tony Abbott.

"The leader of the opposition says that people who hold sexist views and who are misogynists are not appropriate for high office. Well, I hope the leader of the opposition has got a piece of paper and he is writing out his resignation," Gillard blared.

Abbott's National-Liberal Coalition took deep offense. Had the prime minister conflated or confused "sexism" and "misogyny," or worse, deliberately distorted the meaning of misogyny to score a resounding political point? Was Gillard seriously asserting that her opposite number held a pathological hatred of women, as most dictionaries define misogyny?'

Circumcision policy a hot issue as American Academy of Pediatrics convention comes to New Orleans

Mastodon · 19 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As pediatricians gather Saturday at the Ernest N. Morial Convention Center, they'll be greeted by protesters urging the medical group to rethink its position on an issue that makes most people squirm: the circumcision of newborn boys. Although the American Academy of Pediatrics doesn't recommend routine removal of infants' foreskins -– that has been its stance since 1999 -– its report, released two months ago, does cite literature saying that the procedure can prevent urinary-tract infections, cancer of the penis and sexually transmitted diseases, including AIDS.

Such benefits, the report says, justify its coverage by private insurance and Medicaid. Louisiana is one of 18 states where Medicaid does not pay for the procedure.

Opponents, who call themselves "intactivists," go beyond mere opposition to the circumcision of healthy infants.

"We say that it's a human-rights violation to tie down a baby and cut off part of his penis," said Georganne Chapin, the founding executive director of Intact America, which will hold a press conference and rally at the convention center at 11 a.m. Saturday.'

Title IX Conference Conveys Both Progress and Goals to Wrestle with Gender Discrimination

Mastodon · 19 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A merry group of men and women gathered in the McCune conference room on Monday, Oct. 15, to kick off University of California Santa Barbara's two week celebration of Title IX.

Signed by President Nixon, Title IX was added to the Higher Education Act of 1965 in 1972. The act is widely known for expanding opportunities for female athletes at the college level, and it also bans sexual discrimination from any federally funded educational program or activity. Female professors, graduate school applicants and athletes, once small in numbers compared to their male counterparts, became legally protected from discrimination thanks to Title IX.

...

"I think we will have a wonderful opportunity to have a dialogue," she said, speaking to her diverse audience. Chancellor Yang came to offer opening remarks about the celebration. He discussed the welcomed implementation of Title IX at UCSB and the progress made by women on campus because of the law.

"Your achievements inspire us and make us proud," he said to the female athletes in the room, "We also recognize we have a long way to go." Nearly all the speakers acknowledged this same sentiment throughout the evening. Vice Chancellor Gene Lucas also spoke about the celebratory events and effects of Title IX on UCSB.

...

"If we did it with sports, we can do it with STEM," said Oliver. However, there is no doubt that women have made tremendous progress in American universities thanks to Title IX and the women who rose above limitations set by sexist expectations in the 1960s and 70s. Our faculty, full of accomplished women who pursued educations in spite of a rigid social structure, reminds us of the work that has already been done. Professor Janis Ingham chose to focus on the issues of her time in college.'

Title IX Invades Science and Math

Mastodon · 19 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists have long abused the law called Title IX in order to cancel men's sports teams in colleges and universities. For example, they have forced colleges to cancel hundreds of college wrestling teams because the feminists hate anything so masculine as wrestling. Now the feminists are making the same kind of assault against men who are interested in science and math. The feminists, who virtually control the Obama Administration, have gotten the federal government to announce a new set of rules to enforce Title IX in what are called the STEM courses. STEM stands for science, technology, engineering and mathematics. There has never been any discrimination in the STEM courses; they are open to males and females on the same basis. But traditionally more men are interested in those subjects than women.

The fact that engineering departments have a majority of men does not mean they discriminate against women any more than the majority of women in English departments means that English classes discriminate against men. But the feminists are determined to make them gender equal regardless of student preferences or aptitude. This new feminist attack on men comes straight from President Obama. He told Newsweek magazine, that he is "addressing inequality in math and science education" and "engineering and technology." He then said, "I've said that women will shape the destiny of this country, and I mean it." What he really meant is that radical feminists will shape the policy of his administration, regardless of ability or talent or aptitude or choice in education.'

Title IX is government discrimination against men

Mastodon · 19 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Males, not females, are presently the ones being discriminated against. By arbitrarily forcing males and females to have parity in sports and not in other extra curricular activities, an unattractive and hostile environment for males in higher education communities has been created. Not only are the contact sports teams, that are part of the male DNA dwindling, young college men are vulnerable to persecution under Title IX even with consensual sexual partners.

In the recent past these sexual encounters have not been considered sexual assault. These sexual encounters between college students on campus were usually not prosecuted by the local criminal system because they were "he said, she said" incidents where the rights of both parties have to be protected. After initial university and/or police investigation found probable cause that a possible sexual assault took place, it was turned over to the courts for prosecution.

Presently the same type of college assault cases are not turned over to local prosecution but according to Title IX federal guidelines anyone can make a complaint to the Department of Education Office of Civil Rights (OCR), where the male has no legal right to due process. The burden of proof falls on the male who appears to be guilty until proven innocent.'

Teaching for the Future: Steering girls to science

Mastodon · 19 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women graduate from college in larger numbers than men, but they fall behind when it comes to degrees in some of the fastest-growing — and most lucrative — fields. Not only did just 18% of bachelor's degrees in computer science go to women in 2010, their numbers are down from 38% in 1985, Education Department data show.

The center, a coalition of 300 corporations, colleges, government agencies and non-profits, was created in 2004 to promote efforts to reverse that decline. It has been helped along by member organizations such as the Girl Scouts, the Computer Science Teachers Association and this program, called Inspiring Girls Now in Technology Evolution, or IGNITE, offered through Seattle Public Schools since 1999.'

Setting a Realistic Standard of Proof in Sexual-Misconduct Cases

Mastodon · 19 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In April of last year, the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights made clear its stance that when colleges assess Title IX-related complaints on their campuses, including those involving sexual violence, they should follow the "preponderance of the evidence" standard. In other words, the accused should be found guilty if it is more than 50 percent likely that they committed the act. Those are welcome instructions.

In a recent commentary in The Chronicle, Joseph Cohn, legislative and policy director at the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education, argued that the low standard was unfair to the accused because the burden of proof should be higher in cases of sexual misconduct. We, however, support the use of the preponderance standard, for two main reasons: First, it protects colleges from being held liable for violating Title IX, the law that bars sexual discrimination at institutions receiving federal money; and second, it is the only standard that is equally fair to men and women.

...

Another reason the preponderance-of-evidence standard should be followed is that it is the only fair one. Title IX requires equitable treatment based on sex, both in substance and in procedure. Procedural equity cannot be satisfied by a standard of evidence that skews in favor of one party over another, as any higher or lower standard would.

Preponderance presumes a level playing field, one that is not advantageous to either party. But a higher standard, such as clear and convincing evidence, would make it less likely that those who commit sexual misconduct would be held accountable. Ponder whether it should be harder for a woman to prove that a man raped her than for a man to prove that he did not. Men commit the vast majority of acts of sexual harassment and violence on campuses, and they should not have a systemic advantage that makes it easier for them to do so and avoid accountability.'

Santa Clara County: State audit finds flaws in handling of domestic violence shelter funds

Mastodon · 19 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As they gather Friday for the 19th annual Santa Clara County Domestic Violence Council Conference, hundreds of participants -- from domestic violence shelters to law enforcement agencies, from judges to doctors -- might be surprised to learn that their well-meaning efforts over the years were critically hampered by a lack of coordination and accountability from some of the very county officials who support their efforts.

A recent state audit revealed that $715,000 in state-mandated funds collected by the county since 1995 and meant to be distributed to local domestic violence shelters sat in an account virtually forgotten by officials until the oversight was accidentally discovered in 2010. It wasn't until earlier this year that the money was ultimately distributed to shelters.

"I'm still inflamed -- I'm still so angry not knowing this money was sitting there," said Kathleen Krenek, executive director of Next Door Solutions to Domestic Violence, the county's largest shelter for battered victims. She said that money could have been spent to prevent layoffs, to pay for rent or supplies -- even toilet paper -- to help keep the program going.'

Celebrating International Day of the Girl

Minuteman · 19 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. From the USAID Newsletter:

'In December 2011, the United Nations General Assembly adopted a resolution declaring Oct. 11 the International Day of the Girl Child.

The day was established to recognize girls' rights and the unique challenges they face around the world. This year marks the first time this day in honor of girls is being observed and provides an occasion for reaching out and educating others about the status of girls.

See USAID's vision on ending child marriage and meeting the needs of married children.'

UK: Companies forced to reveal number of women staff

Broadsword · 20 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From next October quoted companies will be made to carry out gender audits and report publicly on the number of women and men they hire.

The recommendation was contained within the Lord Davies women on boards review, which urged companies to get better at scouting and hiring talented women into senior management roles. At present women make up just 16pc of FTSE 100 board roles.

The mandatory requirement to list the number of women and men in jobs will help shine a spotlight on gender inequality, the Department for Business said.

It is hoped that investors will pile pressure on companies to up the number of women employed should the gender audit reveal low numbers.

Business minister Jo Swinson said: “It’s widely acknowledged that the UK leads the world in standards of annual reporting, and that those standards are rising every year. However, over a period of years reports have become longer, more complex and increasingly difficult for shareholders to navigate.'

Sweden, the world's most equal country

Matt · 20 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What defines a democracy? The people rule through fair and just elections. Well I guess in that case all western countries are democracies. How fair and just the elections are is another matter of course. But the most important thing in a democracy I´d say is that the rule of law treats everyone the same. Such a government can be called a nomocracy, from the Greek nomos (law) and kratos (power or rule). The phrase can be traced back to 17th century and was popularized in the 19th century by British jurist A. V. Dicey. The concept was familiar to ancient philosophers such as Aristotle, who wrote "Law should govern". Rule of law implies that every citizen is subject to the law. It stands in contrast to the idea that the ruler is above the law, for example by divine right.
...
In the Swedish constitution it is clearly stated that everyone are to be treated equally under the law. It also states that every citizen are protected against discrimination due to gender, ethnicity, religion, age, and sexual orientation, and of course it does. Sweden is the world´s most equal country right? At least that is what Sweden claims. But one thing that Sweden doesn't explain when boasting about this, is how the state defines gender equality. That we are using feminism as a template to implement gender equality. And the result is that Sweden no longer apply the fundamental rules of democracy. Now men are being discriminated against already when the laws are written. Affirmative action Sweden calls it, thereby hoping that no one will see the truth. But we do. Especially those of us men in our country that daily get our rights as humans violated. Those of you that know your history will remember that another European country did the same in the 30's. The target that time was a religious minority. It did not end well.

...
So lets take a look at some of the laws in this equal Shangri-la shall we?
...
"Social services shall give special consideration to women who are or have been victims of violence or other abuse by people close to them and may be in need of support and help to change their situation."
...
"2 § A child born alive in this country is registred if the mother is registered, or if the father is registered and legal guardian. A child born abroad by a woman shall also be registered in the population register. Act (1997:989)."
...
"1 § A child acquires Swedish citizenship at birth, if

1st The mother is a Swedish citizen,
2nd father is a Swedish citizen and the child is born in Sweden,
3rd father is a Swedish citizen and married to the child's mother,
4th father is deceased but at his death was a Swedish citizen and the child is born in Sweden, or 5th father is deceased but at his death was a Swedish citizen and married to the child's mother."
...
"13 § If no notification under the first paragraph is made, the amount shall be credited to the parent who, for the year the amount relates, have the lowest pension base under Chapter 4. § 2. If none of the parents have any pension base for that year or have the same base, the pensionable amount shall be credited the mother or if the parents are of the same sex, the elder of them."

F&F: Colorado Child Support Commission Pursuing Changes

Matt · 20 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Colorado Child Support Commission is pursuing legislation in 2013 to update the guidelines. The legislation being recommended is the result of the work of the Child Support Commission that was convened in September 2009 and completed its review in December 2010.

The Colorado Child Support Commission is charged with conducting a review of the child support guidelines at least every four years. According to Colorado law, the Commission must consider economic data on the cost of raising children and other related issues. Colorado is one of thirty-seven states that uses the income shares model made popular by Jane C. Venohr, PhD, Senior Researcher at the Center for Policy Research.'

MSNBC's "Today" show indulges in double-standards around showing off semi-nude men

Matt · 20 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Imagine a similar thing like this only with the sexes reversed? Suppose the idea would ever even leave the conference room in which it was brought up?

Some of you guys, this may not bother. That's fine. But if it does, the contact form is here.

Ottawa Film Festival to Show Fathers Rights Movie on Saturday, November 3rd at 5:00 PM

Matt · 20 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Ottawa Film Festival to Show Fathers Rights Movie

Saturday-November 3rd @ 5 pm

Meet Journalist Barbara Kay, FACT'S Brian Jenkins and many other brothers in the Fathers Rights struggle.

This is the first-ever, Fathers Rights Film shown by a festival organizer in Ottawa, Please Forward to other Ottawa and Area contacts as the family law situation in the USA is exactly replicated in Canada. . This is a major celebration of public notice being taken of the family law disaster and placed on the public record by means of film of the divorced fathers nightmare. The Free Thinking Film Society has taken a momentous decision and needs to be congratulated for this effort. Please show your support of the festival itself and this film in particular.

http://www.freethinkingfilmfest.ca/schedule.html

Botswana: 133 prisoners circumcised

Mastodon · 22 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Speaking at a press briefing, Dr Rachel Seleka revealed that so far 133 inmates have undergone circumcision at their clinics. "So far we have at least 133 inmates from Gaborone, Moshupa and Molepolole prisons circumcised since April last year but we have not taken our initiative to the northern part of the country," she said.

Government introduced the SMC programme a few years ago, and there have been calls for the initiative to be extended to other vulnerable groups outside mainstream society. Seleka said they have discovered that inmates take health related issues more seriously when they are incarcerated.

Admitting that sodomy is a sensitive issue Prisons chief, Motlalekgosi acknowledged that there is sodomy in Botswana prisons."We know that sodomy is illegal in Botswana but it happens in our prisons, how we don't know.If it can happen in mainstream society, what about in places like prisons? I don't have evidence to say it's not happening but we have heard stories narrated by ex-inmates," he said. The Prisons boss observed that prison officers are not merely guards but treatment providers as well. "At any moment an officer is close to a prison inmate," said Motlalekgosi.'

UK: Would you pay $8,785 to join a women-only club?

Mastodon · 22 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As gentlemen's clubs in London become more and more irrelevant, a new elite club is getting ready to open its doors next month … to women only.

Grace Belgravia, located in the posh area of the same name, bills itself as "inclusive and exclusive." Membership will cost £5,500 (approximately $8,785) annually.

...

Following the announcement, another Telegraph writer voiced her opinion about the benefits of women's clubs. "Men (sorry, chaps) are exhausting," she writes.

But is a women-only club even necessary? Moreover, the concept of a testosterone-free zone for schmoozing is not exactly new. In Toronto, Verity operates under a similar premise, providing a social sanctuary for businesswomen.

...

There have always been varying opinions about the culture of men's clubs in London – specifically, whether denying access to women is anachronistic. Boodle's, which has been around since 1762, allows women to enter through a separate entrance and only on specific days. In 2008, the Conservative-leaning Carlton Club opened membership to women. White's, another gentleman's club that welcomes women as guests, has not eased its policy against full membership status.

Meanwhile, at Grace Belgravia, men are invited to attend for dinner – on Thursday nights. There is no separate entrance for them but only, apparently, because the venue wouldn't accommodate one.'

Woman fined for false rape claim

Mastodon · 22 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Durban - A Durban regional court magistrate has warned a woman who falsely cried rape about the seriousness of her actions, and said it had been the third such incident before him in just one week.

The woman, 18, in a bid to have charges against the accused withdrawn, told magistrate Anand Maharaj on Friday that she had laid charges against the young man in the dock for raping her because she was upset.

It appears she had caught him in a compromising position.

Maharaj said it was the third case in his court in which a woman applied for charges to be withdrawn after making a false statement that she had been raped.'

Kagan admits her gender was likely the greatest factor for her appointment

Matt · 22 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. "Difficulties", indeed. Plenty of male lawyers and judges would love to have your "difficulties", Mme. Justice. Excerpt:

'If Elena Kagan was not a woman, she may not be sitting on the country's highest judicial bench, the Supreme Court justice told an audience at the University of Tennessee on Friday.

The candid statement came early in an hourlong conversation-style presentation Kagan held Friday in the Cox Auditorium in the Alumni Memorial Building, where she also discussed the strategy of deciding the country's top cases and her affinity for hunting with fellow Justice Antonin Scalia.
...
"Every woman knows there are some difficulties one confronts that a man might not have to, but nowhere near what my predecessors did," she said. "And to tell you the truth, there were also things I got because I was a woman. I'm not sure I'd be sitting here, I'm not sure I would have been President (Barack) Obama's nominee if I were not a woman and if he wasn't as committed as he was to ensuring there was diversity on the Supreme Court."'

Berlin Conference Addresses Male Troubles

Matt · 22 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'German Family Minister Kristina Schröder has long had something of an adversarial relationship with the country's feminists. Not only has she refused to support hard quotas for women in top management positions, but she also has repeatedly broadsided "early feminism" or "feminists from the last century" for failing to recognize that "partnerships and children produce happiness." For many women's rights veterans, Schröder's book published last spring, in which she essentially declares the dawning of the post-feminist era, was something of a last straw.

Now, Schröder is wading even further into the gender debate. On Monday, she will open a two-day conference specifically focusing on issues specific to men as society strives to achieve gender equality. Called "Men's Policies: Contributions to a Gender Equitable Society," the gathering is the first such high-level conference ever held on men's issues in the German-speaking world. And, as Schröder has made clear, comes not a moment too soon.

"The demands made on men and women in today's society are changing," a Family Ministry spokeswoman told SPIEGEL ONLINE in a statement. "Many men do not want to live like their fathers and grandfathers. In addition to their careers, they want more time for their families. The changes in gender roles that women have experienced have made it necessary to open new perspectives to men outside of traditional roles."'

Related: Blog post discussing the conference. Agenda downloaded from here.

"A Deadbeat Dad and the Bloody Pandas"

Matt · 22 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Site for book by the title here. Excerpt:

"Some stories need be told and others heard at any cost. This is one such story. The system does not want it published and the law prohibits its disclosure. The societal and judicial prejudices are on display but the law as it stands will at any cost try and bury this disclosure. The author is staring imprisonment but willing to accept the consequences. Why not share the tears and joy that make us all human."

From the Amazon.co.uk link here:

'Book Description
Truth sees no boundaries and sooner or later it comes out and expresses its need to be acknowledged. Relationships are needed and sustained throughout our lifespan and need sustenance through nurture, understanding and support. This incredible story, narrated with simplicity and humour, carries the reader through extremes of human emotion and relationships. It is a compelling story of a father's true horror, isolation and survival in his daily struggles to rear his two adoring and beautiful daughters. Upon the inevitable breakup of his family, in court every attempt for the revelation of the truth is thwarted as he tries to put forward his experiences only to suffer injustice at every step of the nightmare that unfolds in front of him. He advocates and instigates a campaign for equality and justice in the treatment of parents and grandparents through the halls of power only to be physically and emotionally drained by the very men he saves from self destruction. He challenges and exposes the incompetence of the system, the state, the legal profession only to be excluded from the media at every step of his struggle to survive while being wiped from government files and dubbed as a threat to the very same system that tried to destroy him. But truth runs much deeper and much closer to the heart, where life itself, the unconditional love of his daughters and friendships are continuously challenged.'

Women And STEM Careers: How Microsoft Is Building A Bridge To Future Innovation -- One Girl At A Time

Mastodon · 22 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Microsoft believes they need diverse teams to encourage innovation and ensure technological advancements. With women accounting for only 18% of the Bachelor's degrees awarded in computer and information sciences and support services in the U.S. as of 2009-2010, Rane and Microsoft realize the need to grow interest at a younger age to attract more women to the field of technology. Working with their communities, governments, NGOs/IGOs, and academic and research institutions, they inspire women with creative thinking skills to pursue technical careers.

Out of this creative process came programs Microsoft now offers and supports both domestically and globally to engage and encourage young women in the technology field. There is DigiGirlz High Tech Camp, which targets girls 13 years and up. The camp is a three-day program giving young girls an opportunity to gain hands-on experience with technology, participate in technology tours and workshops, listen to executive speakers, and network with those in the industry. "During the camp, we work to dispel the stereotypes of the high-tech industry and help girls overcome fears that technology is 'geeky' and not for girls," added Johnson-Stempson.'

Leaders, educators help engineer future workforce

Mastodon · 22 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women earn 20 percent of all bachelor degrees in physics, engineering and computer science.

2018 workforce projections show 9 of 10 of the fastest growing occupations that mandate bachelor degrees require significant scientific or mathematical training.

Science and engineering occupations are predicted to grow faster than the average rate of all other occupations, and some of the largest increases will be in engineering and computer-related fields.

Sources: American Association of University Women 2010 “Why so Few” report; The National Science Foundation; and the U.S. Department of Labor

“Engineers design things people use daily — including buildings, bridges, computers, cars, wheelchairs and X-ray machines. When women are not involved in the design of these products, needs of women may be overlooked. Consider some of the early voice-recognition systems; they were calibrated to typical male voices. Women’s voices were unheard.

...A group of mostly male engineers tailored the first generation of automobile airbags to adult male bodies, resulting in deaths of women and children.” — AAUW 2010 “Why So Few” report.

Sources: American Association of University Women 2010 “Why so Few” report; The National Science Foundation; and the U.S. Department of Labor'

Australia: "Male teachers need special exemption from equal opportunity laws"

Mastodon · 22 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'South Australia has the highest proportion of male teaching staff in the nation at 30 per cent, according to 2011 Australian Bureau of Statistics data.

But that is down from 34 per cent a decade ago and only a few per cent more than other states and territories.

Nationally, the proportion of male teachers has fallen everywhere except in the Northern Territory.

The Education Department does not run specific programs to recruit male teachers, prompting MPs and school leaders to call for a more targeted strategy.

Opposition education spokesman David Pisoni said the department should consider applying for exemptions from equal opportunity laws to recruit only men for some school positions "if we're serious about stemming the decline".'

Towson University athletic department recommends cutting men's baseball, soccer

Mastodon · 22 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Towson University announced Tuesday that its athletics department recommended the school's NCAA men's baseball and soccer teams be cut after the 2012-2013 school year, according to a message from President Maravene Loeschke on the school's website.

"Our Towson University community holds a great deal of pride for our baseball and men's soccer student-athletes and the legacy they have established with Towson University," Loeschke said in the online letter.
...
The task force was charged with increasing Towson's competitiveness, establishing long-term stability of the athletics department, and maintaining Title IX compliance, which ensures equal funding for men's and women's sports.'

Also see: Towson University Cutting Baseball Is Inexcusable

UNC drops term ‘freshman’ in favor of ‘gender inclusive language’

Mastodon · 23 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of North Carolina - Chapel Hill has removed the word “freshman” from official university documents, citing as their reason an attempt to adopt more “gender inclusive language.”

We are “committed to providing an inclusive and welcoming environment for all members of our community,” reads a statement administrators sent to Campus Reform on Monday.

...

Some students, however, expressed discontent over the change in policy.

Brandon Hartness, Executive Vice Chair for the school’s college Republicans chapter, told Campus Reform he feels the university is allowing political correctness to drive their decisions.

“I feel like they are making a big deal out of nothing,” said Hartness. “Girls are not going to deem the word [freshman] as sexist.”'

Crystal Mangum charged with murdering boyfriend

Matt · 23 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

And somehow, feminists have just kept on supporting her. There's no end to the insanity. Story here. Excerpt:

'Durham, N.C. — Family members of a man who was stabbed in his home April 3 say he died Wednesday evening. Crystal Mangum, the Durham woman who falsely accused three Duke University lacrosse players of rape in 2006, has been charged with assaulting him.

Durham police confirmed Thursday morning that Reginald Daye, 46, had died.

"The case remains under investigation, and we do anticipate upgrading the charges. However, no new charges have been filed at this time," police spokeswoman Kammie Michael said in an e-mail to WRAL News.

Police said Mangum, 32, stabbed Daye in the torso with a kitchen knife during a dispute at 3507 Century Oaks Drive early on April 3.

...

A man who said he was Daye's nephew called 911 to report the stabbing, saying it occurred while Daye and his girlfriend were arguing about rent money. The caller said police came to the apartment complex earlier while the couple argued, but the stabbing occurred after the officers left.

When asked for a description of the girlfriend, the caller said, "It's Crystal Mangum. THE Crystal Mangum."

He then added, "I told him she was trouble from the beginning."'

A 5-Concussion Pee Wee Game Leads to Penalties for the Adults

Matt · 24 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. So you wonder where boys learn that they're utterly dispensable? Easy enough. They learn it from their parents, who stand around and do nothing (or are complicit) while they get their heads bashed in playing a game their bodies aren't nearly ready for. After all, if a 23-YO man in the prime of life, bulging with muscles and wearing a padded helmet, can suffer a serious concussion that leaves him unintelligible when he's 40, what do you suppose happens to 10-year-olds when they get their heads bashed in? Excerpt:

'It took just one play on Sept. 15 to suggest the game between the Southbridge Pop Warner pee wees and their rivals, the Tantasqua Braves, could mean trouble. Two Tantasqua players were hit so hard that their coach pulled them off the field. An emergency medical technician on the sidelines evaluated the boys, grew worried that they might have concussions, and had them take their pads off.

The boys on the teams were as young as 10, and, because of rules about safety, none could weigh more than 120 pounds. Shortly after 3 p.m. at McMahon Field in Southbridge, though, things quickly became worse. Six plays into the game, another Brave was removed after a hard hit. An official with the Tantasqua team said the eyes of one of the boys were rolling back in his head.

But the game, an obvious mismatch between teams from neighboring towns in central Massachusetts, went on, with Southbridge building a 28-0 lead in the first quarter. The game went on without the officials intervening. It went on despite the fact that the Braves, with three of their players already knocked out of the game, no longer had the required number of players to participate.

Even with what are known as “mercy rules” — regulations designed to limit a dominant team’s ability to run up scores — the touchdowns kept coming, and so did the concussions. When the game ended, the final score was 52-0, and five preadolescent boys had head injuries, the last hurt on the final play of the game.

The coaches, at the game’s conclusion, shook hands, and then the Southbridge team, with a military flourish, marched off the field in pairs.

...

“If you lost that many players, you should have called a timeout and come seen me,” Lazo said in an interview this week. “My team is not dirty. All the issues were on their side of the field. This is a football game, not a Hallmark moment.”

Late last week, league officials suspended the coaches for both teams for the rest of the season. The referees who oversaw the game were barred from officiating any more contests in the Central Massachusetts Pop Warner league, and the presidents of both programs were put on probation.

...

...Yet even as the Southbridge team pummeled Tantasqua that day, parents on the losing side of the field wanted their sons to soldier on.

“We were trying to play a football game,” one parent of a Tantasqua player wrote in an e-mail. “Every kid who was out there wanted to play and not give up.”'

What to do if she says you're the father

Matt · 24 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Inside was a letter from the Gaston County Child Support Enforcement Agency. It informed McClain that a woman had identified him as the father of her nearly 3-year-old son.

McClain, 77, read that an appointment had already been made for him. He would need to bring his last four wage stubs, verification of other child support he was paying, and further personal financial information to the Department of Social Services.

“Consider this letter to be a formal demand for support for (the child’s name),” the letter read.

There was one small problem. McClain, a Mount Holly resident, had never heard of the woman named in the letter, much less her son. And he said he certainly had never stepped outside the bounds of his marriage.

...

“This is just another example of a government institution refusing to look practically at its own caseload,” he wrote.

McClain’s wife has since died. He said he never received an explanation from DSS about what happened, but he wonders whether the woman “just picked a name out of the phone book and handed it in.”

“When that’s all it takes for DSS to send a letter like the one I got, it seems to me changes should be made,” he said.

...

Bennett believes the department’s measures for identifying parents of children are largely efficient. They have a simple goal in each case, she said.

“We care that somebody is the father of that child,” she said. “We just want people to take responsibility for their sexuality.”'

Little Rock Shelter Provides Room for Single Dads

Matt · 24 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are several places open across Arkansas that are waiting to help homeless women and children, but more and more single dads are finding themselves homeless and with virtually no where to turn for help.

But one Little Rock shelter is doing what it can to be the solution to an ever-increasing problem.
...
The shelter also helps Sean and others save their money with the ultimate goal of getting back out on their own.

"I work 40-50 hours a week," Sean says. "Once I move into a place, I'll be able to afford rent and utilities and stuff. It's just a matter of when you first move in somewhere, it's $2,000, rent, deposit, electricity; it's this big sum of money I don't have."

In the meantime, Our House provides, food and shelter for both of them, as well as daycare for Aiden, who's making himself at home.
...
Our House estimates around 18 people have lived in a room dedicated to single dads and their kids in the two years they've had it available.'

SAVE E-lert: Make VAWA Reform a Campaign Issue

Matt · 24 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Have your civil rights been trampled by current abuse laws? Do you want to bring the need for reform into the public eye? For the next two weeks, you have a unique opportunity to put the domestic violence issue on the political radar screen.

Between now and Nov. 6, visit campaign townhall meetings, rallies, and events. Pass out flyers and ask the candidates if they support reform.

Visit the SAVE website for question ideas, flyers, nationwide survey results, special reports, event information, and more: http://www.saveservices.org/campaign-2012/

Have a friend take photos or video. We'd love to see them. And by all means, let us know if your question gets in the news!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

'Frightened Men Love Mitt Romney'

Mastodon · 24 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'These are the facts you don't want to know. This is the hard data that can make you cringe, that can despoil the soul and make you wonder at the sad state of the modern world, and gender politics, and the tragically deceived hearts of (ahem) men.

All that progress! All that supposed enlightenment! All that push and desire, that evolution and that open-hearted possibility! And for what? For naught! For shame!

Maybe I was just blocking it out. Maybe I just didn't want to recall just how wide, how gnarled, how ugly the gender gap was in the last presidential election, when a strong majority of American men for some godforsaken reason wanted McCain and a huge majority of women understandably wanted Obama, and it was all tied to an antiquated idea that the modern male still hadn't evolved much beyond his own chauvinistic posturing and the hollow, old-school, might-makes-right machismo McCain so wobblingly represented.
...

Not even close. Here is your brutal nutshell takeaway: If only women voted, Obama wins in a landslide. If only men voted, Romney wins in a landslide. (Taken further: If only Latinos, blacks, celebrities, college grads, professors, scientists, poets, Burning Man attendees, book readers, trees, oceans, major cities or college towns across America voted, Obama nails it, wholly and true. If only rich CEOs, gun owners, upper managers, rednecks, shut-ins and guys who think Muslims are terrorists, Mexicans are lazy house painters and feminazis are ruining porn voted, Romney is a mutant and faraway god).

All of which leads to the most depressing conclusion of all: Older white males remain the most terrified, lopsided, confused demographic in all of America, perhaps even more acutely -- and more embarrassingly -- in this election than any other in modern history.
...
Upshot: Confused middle-aged white guys of every height and state are looking around in increasing terror/desperation for some hint of stability, someone to validate -- however wrongly, however dishonestly -- their waning powers, and finding only charlatan mushball Mitt Romney and the sneering misogyny of the GOP. Hey, better than nothing, right? Here you go, bro, have a beer and a layoff and some Glenn Beck jeans to go with your sexist binder full of women, courtesy the Bush worldview and Romney's promise of more of same. Hey, at least he hates the gays!

We must remain calm...'

'NOW Can We Kick The Boy Scouts To The Curb?'

Mastodon · 24 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For years now, both City Hall and the larger waking citizenry have been pondering a thorny matter of cognitive dissonance: In a city that tries to prize, above all else, brotherly love and sisterly affection, how can we be giving free rent to an organization that has hate built right into its charter? It only further complicates matters that the organization is the Boy Scouts Of America. One idea intended to rectify the situation somewhat — on the basis that here was a group with homophobic policies that the City itself would never endorse — was to try and evict the Scouts. And those of you that followed this story for a few years know that it did not go well. And in fact, the Boy Scouts only just got over gloating about it.
...
For here is the heart of the matter: Just as we've seen with the church — and the church of football, natch — pretty much any time you have a closed, strongly patriarchal organization where men are supposed to impart some set of values to boys, you always wind up with some percentage of those men quite literally f-cking some percentage of those boys. This is a fact; men are, left to their own devices, just awful. And the sooner we cop to this, the sooner we may begin to correct most of what is wrong with this world. For the record, I am saying this as a man, and I'm not trying to get laid. Just cut it out with this shit already. This is Philadelphia, and though we may be many unpleasant things from day to day, this is not who we are. Again, as ever, the Boy Scouts need to go.'

University Uses Taxpayer Dollars For “War on Women” Forum

Mastodon · 24 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Michigan is defending their promotion of a feminist forum that state Republicans believe was an out-right partisan event that violated the university’s tax exempt status.
...
“The Republican War on Women” forum was held earlier this week and was moderated by a university employee who made political contributions to the Democratic National committee and the Obama campaign.

The event infuriated Rachel Jankowski, the president of the University of Michigan’s College Republicans.

“For a university that totes diversity and acceptance, it shows those feel good words only apply to people who espouse its shared liberal viewpoints,” she wrote. “Such hostile events have no place at a public university. Any use of taxpayer dollars to sponsor this event could be seen as participating in campaigns, which would be a violation of federal law.”'

The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) and the War on Men

Mastodon · 24 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) arguably is one of the most misguided pieces of legislation ever passed by Congress. From conceptualization to consequences it has wreaked a wide swath of destruction across American society and accurately can be described as “A War on Men.” Conceptually, VAWA is based on the false Duluth Power and Control Wheel model. VAWA falsely presumes that all Domestic Violence (DV) is perpetrated by evil patriarchal males against virtuously innocent female victims. This false gender ideology has no research support.

By contrast, social science research, replicated across hundreds of studies, shows that: DV is initiated about equally by men and women; slightly more women than men are physically harmed by DV but men nonetheless still represent more than 40% of the physically harmed victims; the DV initiation rates for women, and especially young women, have been rising; and DV has nothing to do with an evil patriarchy because the DV rates for bisexuals, gays, and lesbians all are higher than for heterosexual couples.

The research further exposes misrepresentation in the title: “The Violence Against Women Act.” Given that DV approaches 50-50 on most indices, why does Congress want to serve only half of the victims? Where are the programs for male victims of DV? Where is the money for fathers and their children who have been victimized by violent and abusive wives and mothers?

The relentless feminist war on boys, men, and fathers across the past half century has successfully destroyed one of the bedrock foundational institutions of American society, the American family.'

A Brief History of Man-Hating Music Videos

Mastodon · 25 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Misogyny in music, from rock to pop to hip hop, is a phenomenon so ancient and ubiquitous that it doesn't even surprise us anymore. Neither, in this post-Madonna era, is it strange to see female pop stars treat men like sex objects. But what happens when these artists, besieged not only by their male counterparts but also a catty entertainment press and constant political threats to women's rights, forgo the soft blows of easy objectification in favor of mounting a full-on attack on men? It's not necessarily that some of pop's brightest stars are giving off misandrist vibes; they're simply mincing fewer words to put men in their place. Inspired by Christina Aguilera's recent video for "Your Body," which kicks off with a cheeky promise that "No men were harmed in the making of this video," we're taking a look at some of the most man-hating music videos in pop history.'

It's Time To Take Steps To Reverse The Decline Of Men

Mastodon · 25 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How could that happen? We could start by correctly identifying the problems. Men are not becoming obsolete in the home and the workplace, but a significant proportion, especially of working class and poorer young men, are being left behind on pretty much any measure of success and wellbeing. Discussions of masculinity need to acknowledge that a significant minority of men do very well out of the current norms, and they are likely to be the ones who attain wealth, influence and power. As for the others, if they feel unsure as to what their role is meant to be, it may be because the wider culture doesn't really know either. They are no longer needed as a mass workforce or as providers for families. They don't need self-help books; they need decent training and meaningful jobs.
...
There are institutional issues too. From paternity leave rights to the practices of the family courts, even sentencing in the criminal courts, our legal framework too readily assumes parent equals mother equals woman, and it is dispiriting when even modest proposals for reform meet resistance, not least from some feminists. Many men wish to be or become more active and responsible fathers only to find they have to fight the systems to do so.'

NCFM shares 'Transitions' magazine on-line for first time

Matt · 25 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Great to see it! Oct. 2012 edition here. What a great Halloween treat! About the release:

'Transitions is generally a benefit of NCFM membership. However, after well over a year of being without an editor or producing Transitions, it is being published again. First published in October 1982 Transitions has become the longest running Men's Rights publication on the planet. Since NCFM is an all volunteer organization sustaining the tradition is, to say the least, difficult. This edition of Transitions is our first online edition. Previous editions, all 139 of them, were hard copies, most recently produced in Minneapolis/St. Paul. Production and distribution costs became cost prohibitive. What you may soon be reading, should you choose to read the current edition by clicking on this link for Transitions, will be available for one week. It will then be deleted from our website and available to current members (those who are current on their membership dues, Honorees, Liaisons, and other non paying members) through on online membership system ("Membership System Login" above).'

11-year-old boy convinced NFL to use pink penalty flags this week

Matt · 25 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I see pink ribbons all over the place. At work. In drug stores, on soda cups, on billboards. It seems that now every month is BCAM (you don't even need me to tell you what that acronym stands for, do you?).

Maybe one day, there'll be an 11-YO girl who convinces the officials at a women's soccer game, or football game, or at the LPGA, or at some major sporting event where women compete, to use some kind of purple-colored somethings during the event to mark Prostate Cancer Awareness Month. Purple-colored golf hole flags, perhaps. Or maybe purple-frilled jerseys for the soccer players. Or maybe a women's basketball team can use a purple basketball. But what do you suppose the chances IN HELL of that happening are? Answer: $0.00 \times 10^{\text{Umpteen-kazillion}}$

Denzel Washington's secret to marital success: Stay silent and do whatever she says

Matt · 25 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Quite a price to pay for such "bliss". I imagine another factor is that they probably don't see one another too much, an actor's schedule often being what it is. After all, how long can anyone, male or female, live under such circumstances and not eventually want to run like hell in the other direction? Excerpt:

'So what is the secret to their relationship's longevity? According to the actor, it's a two-step process: "Do whatever my wife says, and keep my mouth shut!" he told Wonderwall at the Los Angeles premiere of his latest film, "Flight."'

Imagine if a woman said that her 'secret to marital success' were to keep her mouth shut and do everything her husband told her to do? Can you just imagine the reaction? She'd be drummed out of the Los Angeles-Hollywood party circuit, labelled a traitor to her own sex and a bad example to girls and women everywhere! So what is Mr. Washington, then?

My take on marriage or any other LTR is this: If it's actually going to work (i.e., everyone is happy and the thing lasts), you have to give and take, but also stand your ground, say 'No' when you're not happy with an idea, and not let your mate push you around-- nor try to push your mate around, which is to say, you must take 'No' for an answer yourself. Your mate has as much right to stand his or her ground as you do, and if you both accept that respecting their right is as important to your right getting respected, things are a lot more likely to work out. To me, that is a far better formula for LTR longevity. (I like Ambrose Bierce's take on LTRs, too).

But what the hell do I know, I've never been in a movie or anything. :)

Group asks universities to crack down on false rape claims across the nation

Mastodon · 25 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE), a nonprofit victim-advocacy organization, is asking colleges to crack down on false accusations of sexual assault, citing a growing number of false claims.

In a letter to the president of the University of Montana, a campus that had a recent sexual assault case involving an athlete, SAVE addressed the problem of false claims.

According to the letter, ”during the past year, false-rape cases have been reported at the University of North Dakota, Yale University, University of Connecticut, University of North Florida, Xavier University and elsewhere.” SAVE tries to broaden its argument by saying all false claims, not just claims of sexual crimes, are occurring, citing an article from the University of Northern Florida’s Spinnaker.

According to the article, police are now giving students citations for false claims to combat the increasing occurrence.

Though SAVE is adamant about addressing the issue, Jay Huff, Missouri State’s Safety and Transportation assistant director, said false claims aren’t a new problem.'

Verizon Foundation Launches New Domestic Violence Awareness Effort Encouraging All Men to Join and Engage in Prevention Efforts

Mastodon · 25 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ted Bunch, co-founder of A CALL TO MEN, said, "We encourage and invite men to become the solution to preventing domestic violence by raising their voices and awareness through Your Voice Counts. Together, we can all create a better world for our daughters, our sons, our sisters, our mothers and ultimately ourselves."

Domestic violence is one of the most critical public health issues for women, resulting in serious, long-term health impacts and devastating effects on children and families. According to a report by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, approximately 1 in 4 women and nearly 1 in 7 men in the U.S. have experienced severe physical violence by an intimate partner at some point in their lifetimes.

Maile Zambuto, CEO of the Joyful Heart Foundation, said: "Despite the pervasiveness of domestic violence, it remains a widely hidden issue in our society. And although women and children represent the majority of victims of domestic violence, it isn't just a women's issue. Men are affected as well - as victims, as perpetrators and as witnesses and bystanders. Engaging men is an important part of the movement to address, prevent and - one day - end domestic violence."

...

The Your Voice Counts action guide contains concrete steps for how users can help prevent domestic violence and intervene if it is suspected. The guide's tools include a list of five ways men can speak up about domestic violence; examples of how to start conversations with others including friends, co-workers, children, survivors, coaches and students; and facts and statistics about the issue, including who is impacted and in what ways.'

Ohio nurses get probation in malnutrition death of teen girl who weighed 28 lbs. when she died

Mastodon · 25 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CINCINNATI – Two Ohio nurses were sentenced to probation on Wednesday in the malnutrition death of a 14-year-old girl who had cerebral palsy and weighed 28 pounds when she died, avoiding a sentence of up to one-and-a-half years in prison.

Mary Kilby of Miamisburg and Kathryn Williams of Englewood were sentenced to up to five years of probation in the Montgomery County Court of Common Pleas in Dayton on Wednesday stemming from the March 1, 2011, death of Makayla Norman.

Authorities say the teen had numerous bed sores and was living in filthy conditions when she died from nutritional and medical neglect complicated by cerebral palsy in what a coroner said at the time was the "worst malnourished child" his office had ever seen.'

Book: Rise of gender and ethnic studies programs helped bring about decline of modern academia

Matt · 25 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Modern academia has gone astray and identity studies programs are in large part the culprit, argues author and poet Bruce Bawer in his new book ”The Victims’ Revolution: The Rise of Identity Studies and the Closing of the Liberal Mind.”

“Identity studies sum up everything that’s wrong with the humanities today,” Bawer told The Daily Caller. “They’re about nothing other than group identity, group oppression, and group grievance. Instead of engaging in objective scholarly study of, say, black American history or women’s literature, these departments are boosters for everything having to do with the group in question. It’s all slogans. Kids don’t learn anything other than to think of themselves as having been wronged by capitalism, by the West, by America, by white men.”

Bawer says that this has consequences beyond the classroom.

“Young people who have been brainwashed in college by all this groupthink head out into the world and are constantly on the alert for ‘racism’ and ‘sexism,’” he told TheDC.

“And they find these things everywhere, just as they were trained to. If they hear a white person criticizing President Obama – boom! Racist. If a man has something negative to say about Hillary Clinton – boom! Sexist. It’s simple as that. These kinds of knee-jerk reactions are daily fare nowadays. It’s the only way the products of these cockamamie programs have learned how to think about anything. They make these facile, baseless charges and actually think they’re making insightful moral judgments. It doesn’t bode well for America’s future.”'

F&F: Ohio Service Member Is Granted Special Orders for Deployment

Matt · 26 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Army officer who came to my office was worried. His relationship with his ex-wife, the mother of his child, was rocky to say the least. He had his orders deploying him to Afghanistan for at least a year. Was there anything he could do to make sure he could stay in touch with his son?

Because of Fathers and Families of Ohio's work on military custody issues, Ohio is one of 36 states protecting our service members' custody. As a result, the Ohio legislature and Governor John Kasich created a series of laws to protect Ohio service members deployed and on active duty in 2011. These laws effectively address the four biggest problems deployed service members face when trying to stay in contact with their children:'

Do men need quotas and a rights movement?

Mastodon · 26 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As Germany fails to close the gender gap in the workplace, and a debate continues about whether quotas should be introduced to improve the mix of people working at the top levels of industry in the country, the figures generally show men way ahead of women.

Yet Schröder hosted a conference in Berlin on Wednesday to talk about what could be done to help men. She told how the share of kindergarten teachers who are male in Germany had risen from 2.4 to 2.9 percent. Yet she was put to shame by the 10 percent of Norwegian kindergarten teachers who are men.

Men are stuck in clichéd roles just as women are, she said – and pointed to the “Boys’ Day” she has set up to encourage boys to go and spend a day in a traditionally female work place.

Yet just as she is against mandatory quotas for women in the workplace, Schröder is against quotas for men – instead she intends to rely on encouragement, a position which was criticised at the conference. Her Austrian counterpart Rudolf Hundstorfer called for quotas, which he said would work to kick off real change.'

Domestic violence shelter also shelters pets

Mastodon · 26 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman needed to leave her abusive home in Kansas City earlier this year, but didn't want to leave her dog behind.

She couldn't find a domestic violence shelter that accepted pets, so she lived on the streets.

That's where she likely would have remained, if not for the opening of a pet shelter at the Rose Brooks shelter four months ago. Since then, she and many other women have been able to escape abusers without losing their pets.

Rose Brooks is the only domestic violence shelter in the region — and among just a few across the country — to have a stand-alone pet shelter. It even hired a pet shelter advocate to oversee operations.

The shelter, called Paws Place, has four large "state-of-the art" kennels built to lower stress and prevent the spread of disease. Each kennel, which is like a small room, is filled with homemade pillows, cozy blankets and chewy toys.'

Anti-circumcision activists confront pediatricians

Mastodon · 26 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW ORLEANS — Pediatricians gathered here for the American Academy of Pediatrics convention were greeted by protesters urging the medical group to rethink its position on an issue that makes most people squirm: the circumcision of newborn boys.

And although the American Academy of Pediatrics doesn't recommend routine removal of infants' foreskins — that has been its stance since 1999 — its report, released two months ago, does cite literature saying that the procedure can prevent urinary-tract infections, cancer of the penis and sexually transmitted diseases, including AIDS.

Such benefits, the report says, justify its coverage by private insurance and Medicaid. But opponents, who call themselves "intactivists," go beyond mere opposition to the circumcision of healthy infants.

"We say that it's a human-rights violation to tie down a baby and cut off part of his penis," said Georganne Chapin, the founding executive director of Intact America, which held a press conference and rally outside the convention on Saturday (Oct. 20).'

Paternity fraud lawsuit set for trial in Iowa

Mastodon · 26 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GRUNDY CENTER, Iowa (AP) — A trial is set for next year in an Iowa man's paternity fraud lawsuit against his former girlfriend.

Joseph Dier, of Grundy Center, seeks to recover money he spent supporting a daughter born in 2009 who turned out not to be his. Dier claims Cassandra Jo Peters enticed him into believing he was the father to get money and that he supported them for more than two years.'

Obama's Pandering to Women Falls Short

Mastodon · 26 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama is straining to woo women voters to support him for reelection in spite of his sketchy record when it comes to issues affecting females.

Obama was asked during this week's debate how he would "rectify the inequalities in the workplace, specifically regarding females making only 72 percent of what their male counterparts earn?"

The president claimed to have "fixed" that problem with the first bill he signed into law – the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act.

...

Then there's Julia, the fictitious character created by the Obama campaign that leads voters though an informational graphic on everything Obama has done to help women.

Julia's life begins with the head start program for all children, that actually began under former President Lyndon Johnson, to Pell grants, also created by Johnson, to Obamacare, that will cost thousands of dollars more each year in insurance premiums, but includes "free" birth control.

And thanks to the Lilly Ledbetter Act, "Julia is one of millions of women across the country who knows she'll always be able to stand up for her right to equal pay."

Interestingly, a poll released Thursday by a group called Generation Opportunity found that the top issues among women ages 18 to 29 are taxes, too much federal spending, and the weak economy.'

Why Is the Labor Force Shrinking? Blame Young Men, Not the Economy

Mastodon · 26 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why are fewer men choosing to work? For that, we turn to the Census Bureau's 2012 Statistical Abstract. The participation rate is lower for single men than for married men, and marriage rates in the US have been falling for decades, so we'd expect a modest decline from that. Looking by age bucket, it's been pretty steady for single and married men for everyone over the age of 25 since the start of the Great Recession.

The recent decline we've seen has been primarily among young, single men. For single men age 16-19, participation fell by almost 9 points from 2006-2010. For single men age 20-24 it fell by almost 5 points. This could be for a variety of factors, from men deciding it's not worth bothering to apply for a job at the local grocery store, to men more focused on their education with unskilled work harder to find, to those living at home who decide there's no need for spending money when so much entertainment is free online.

...

And those not dropping out for education-related reasons? If it's just a bunch of 17-year olds who are content spending their time on Facebook instead of earning a few bucks bagging groceries, that's one thing. But if it's people who feel shut out of the workforce, that's something policymakers should address.

These are issues we're going to have to grapple with, because with robotic labor on the horizon, our desire and ability to compete with emerging market and silicon-based labor, especially for less-educated Americans, is likely to continue to fall.'

Women’s enrollment increases while men’s interest in college decreases

Mastodon · 26 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Since the 1980s, women have largely contributed to the jump in college enrollment, a trend also witnessed at ISU. But some of ISU faculty members wonder if the men are being left behind.

Associate professor of history Daniel Clark said while the surge in college female enrollment is positive, it sheds light on a troubling phenomena in male academia: less men are going to college.

“The college degree is not a worthwhile possibility to men,” he said, adding that college was always an option for men, but never instilled by American culture to be a necessity.”

Lisa Phillips, assistant professor of history, acknowledged that “there wasn’t enough research” on the behavioral studies, but agreed with Clark.

“There’s a gap that’s developed academically,” Phillips said. “Studiousness has become gendered.”'

Ann Coulter plays the 'sexist pig' card on Piers Morgan

Mastodon · 27 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Transcript:

'PIERS MORGAN, HOST: You called me in the break a sexist, misogynist pig.

ANN COULTER: Yes.

MORGAN: Can you explain why?

COULTER: Yes.

MORGAN: What have I said that's been remotely sexist.

COULTER: “Calm down.” Oh, it is the conservative female obligation to…

MORGAN: You were hyperventilating.

COULTER: ..I'm not hyperventilating. I'm disagreeing with you, which apparently is insulting your teeny, tiny, male ego. It is the most insulting, condescending, sexist thing to say to a female - generally conservative - who disagrees with you. No, it's my obligation to back down and accept your point, and if I don't, “You're not being calm...'

Our View: Obama ad insulting to women

Mastodon · 27 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The nonsensical “war on women” charge against Republicans has gone too far and may have backfired. An Associated Press-GfK Group poll last week found that women, long Obama’s strongest asset in his re-election bid, have come to favor Republican Mitt Romney 49 percent to 45 percent. If true, it may prove disastrous for President Barack Obama. An ABC/Washington Post daily tracking poll had conflicting results, indicating Obama may still have a commanding lead with women.

Regardless, all reliable data indicate a decline in his support among women.

In a pathetic effort to jump start the “war on women,” the Obama for America campaign this week released the most tasteless and insulting ad of the election season, and that’s saying something.
...
Most American women are perfectly capable of managing their reproductive choices without assistance from the president. Most have a vast assortment of interests and concerns beyond their sex lives, but we seldom hear that from the president.

Please stop with the misleading and sex-obsessed “war on women” campaign. It has taken on a sexist and insulting tone that is beneath most Americans.'

Australia: Dumped PM Kevin Rudd 'wanted to see a female prime minister'

Minuteman · 28 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Former Labor prime minister Kevin Rudd wrote his own version of what happened when he was dumped by his party for one-term MP Maxine McKew's book about her time in politics, "Tales From The Political Trenches".

Rudd said that he felt "betrayed" by then Deputy Prime Minister Julia Gillard and losing the top job was exacerbated by the fact that he had supported her ambitions.

"I too wanted to see a female prime minister. So given all of that, I was stunned when the coup occurred," he wrote.'

'NYC nanny not herself before children's killings'

Matt · 28 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (AP) -- Friends and relatives of Yoselyn Ortega, the New York City nanny accused of stabbing two young children to death, said she appeared to be struggling emotionally and financially recently. Few, though, could offer any explanation for what might have caused her to attack the children.
...
"Apparently over the last month she was not herself," said police department spokesman Paul Browne.'

"She snapped," "She was not herself," etc. Well yes, obviously. She was obviously quite "disturbed," enough to murder two children and attempt to kill herself. Makes no difference though. But wait, it may just indeed make a difference because she's a... she.

Look at how the media has been handling this story. No use of words that would doubtlessly be used if the murderer had been male, such as "monster", or indeed "murderer". I have yet to see anyone call her what she is: a child-murderer. And yet, suppose this hideous crime will change anyone's prejudices around their belief that a woman can be capable of such an act? Doubt it. It will disappear into the Nymphotropic Memory Hole like the other crimes certain women commit against children and people will still continue to believe women are categorically more trustworthy as child-minders than are men, simply because they have uteruses and men don't.

Obesity and men

Matt · 28 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Obesity is now a major health problem not just in the developed world but also in the less-developed world. Reasons are simple: People are getting less exercise by working or working out than ever before. And, people are eating more than they used to by calories per person, and the calories are more likely to come from low-nutrient or out-and-out bad-for-you sources, like soda and processed foods. The stats on developed world obesity are unbelievable, but believe it. Look at this chart for the US. The numbers are very similar in other western countries as well. Notice how the numbers climb for both sexes as people get older. But the real story is how it kills people prematurely. Look at this. Excerpt:

'Recent work commissioned by the Taskforce indicates that if current trends in overweight and obesity continue, there will be approximately 1.75 million deaths at ages 20+ years and 10.3 million premature years of life lost (PYLL) at ages 20–74 years caused by overweight/obesity in Australia in 2011 to 2050. Each Australian aged 20–74 years who dies from overweight/obesity in 2011 to 2050 will lose, on average, 12 years of life before the age of 75 years.'

There's no reason to believe the facts around Australian premature deaths don't hold true for other developed countries' populations. 12 years of life lost due to being obese or overweight. That's incredible.

New Jersey Assemblyman seeks council on dads

Mastodon · 28 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TRENTON — New Jersey's government has councils to address a wide array of issues, from government records and local mandates to clean water and the Highlands region.

But a South Jersey legislator feels an important concern is being overlooked, so he's proposed a council to promote responsible fatherhood.

"Twenty-four million kids under 18 live in homes absent a biological father," says Assemblyman Troy Singleton, D-Burlington, who notes the proposed panel could identify "needs and priorities relating to fatherhood programs in the state." The 21-member council also would work to attract federal grants and raise awareness of the impact of absentee fathers, he said.
...
"Getting them to understand the commitment is a challenge," says Liss, who cites the club's own Passport to Manhood weekly program for boys 13 through 18. "We get them to understand you have to make responsible decisions. They have to understand the ramifications of fatherhood."'

Study: Ovulating May Make Women More Critical Of 'Unsexy' Men

Mastodon · 28 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hide what you are about to read from every man who has ever tried to blame his girlfriend's temper on her cycle. There is new evidence that suggests women will snap at their heterosexual partners more often while they are ovulating. Specifically, a recent study suggests that ladies who took, well, everyone's advice and settled down with brainy, stable guys instead of hunky irresponsible playboys are likely to find fault with their mates when they are most fertile.

The study, which will appear in the November issue of Hormones and Behavior, targeted two different groups of women in long-term heterosexual relationships. Research psychologists Martie Haselton and Christina Larson asked participants to rate their partner's sexual attractiveness and stability, and to track their ovulation cycles. They then quizzed each participant about the quality of her relationship at two different points in her cycle: once at a point of high fertility and once at a point of low fertility.'

Women protest jailing people for not paying alimony

Matt · 30 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three women carrying protest signs marched back and forth in front of the Hunterdon County Courthouse in Flemington for several hours on Friday morning, Oct. 26, criticizing the state's Family Court. In particular, they objected to putting people in jail for not making required alimony payments because they didn't have the money.

"Free John Waldorf from Debtor's Prison," read one sign. The protest was organized by Deb Frank of Washington Crossing, Pa. Waldorf, her boyfriend, is a former Califon resident, in jail since Oct. 17 because he was only paying $5,500 a month, while he was under a court order to pay $8,000.
...
"But it's not just this judge, this is throughout the state" that in her view people are being treated unfairly by the courts, said a good friend of Frank's, Shelia Taylor of Ocean Grove, Monmouth County, who joined her in the protest. Also taking part was another close friend, Janice Klug of Newtown, Pa.
...

A passerby, Mitchell Jakubowski of Lebanon, said "I can't agree with you more" about the protest as he told his own tale of woe about ending up in jail for two weeks for getting behind in his child support payment to his ex-wife. It was all "because I can't find a full-time job," he said.

Last year, according to a written statement from Waldorf, he was in jail for two months for contempt of court, for not paying the $53,000 he owed his ex-wife. And in 2010, he continued, he was incarcerated for 10 days for contempt because he couldn't pay her the $25,000 she was owed.'

F&F: Federal Court Awards $750,000 in Damages Against Woman for Conduct in Custody Case

Matt · 30 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lori Handrahan, ex-wife of Igor Malenko, has been ordered by a federal court to pay her former husband $450,000 and her daughter $300,000. Federal District Judge George Z. Singal ordered the damages to be paid for Handrahan's outrageous conduct throughout her custody battle over their daughter, Mila. Handrahan's repeated false allegations against Malenko were so obviously at odds with the truth and her behavior so immune to judicial control that a Maine family judge eventually gave Malenko sole custody of his daughter. Handrahan's visitation is conditioned on her seeking, receiving and benefiting from intensive psychotherapy. Since custody was transferred to Malenko in 2011, Handrahan has apparently neither seen nor spoken to her daughter, despite the fact that telephone contact is permitted her under the court's order. Apparently, she's paid no child support either, although that may be old news. The current state of her child support obligation, I haven't been able to ascertain.'

Obama Provides Award to Former FFCA President Through Points of Light Foundation

Matt · 30 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHICAGO, Oct. 29, 2012 -- /PRNewswire/ -- Fathers' rights pioneer and Chicago-based leading Attorney Jeffery M. Leving will receive the National Lifetime Volunteer Call to Service Award for his commitment as a volunteer for The Fathers & Family Coalition of America (FFCA) on November 2, 2012. This award is presented on behalf of the FFCA and the President's Volunteer Service Awards Points of Light Foundation at the University of Southern California.

The National Lifetime Volunteer Call to Service Award, which President Obama is providing through the Points of Light Foundation, is an esteemed honor as only a few have been presented. James C. Rodriguez, Chief Executive Officer and President of the FFCA is delighted that this distinctive award is being presented to Leving.'

Hurting dads, hurting kids

Matt · 31 October 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Baltimore, the collection of child support has been outsourced to a private, for-profit company, a subsidiary of Maximus Corp., whose website lauds its ability to "improve collections." This incentivizes a zero-tolerance approach to child-support enforcement, despite research indicating that certain well-defined arrearages will never be collected. In addition, the hidden cost of this merciless and relentless collection process on the underclass of Baltimore is rarely discussed. It results in substantial detriment to young men's lives and thwarts their participation in the formal labor force.

Let's start with wage garnishment. If you owe more than 12 weeks' worth of child support, you can have up to 65 percent of your take-home wages garnished. Let's say you manage to get a job making $10 an hour. This could leave you with as little as $3.50 an hour to pay for rent, utilities, transportation, food and clothing, not to mention caring for your kids.

Being more than 60 days in arrears also allows the state to garnish your bank assets — so forget about having a bank account. The state can take liens on your personal and real property, if you have any. And Maryland will not only suspend your driver's license but prevent you from holding any professional license in the state.

Even bankruptcy will not remove or restructure child-support debt. If you file income taxes, Maryland will intercept them. How do you get ahead?

If you're a single man in your 20s, with an eighth grade education and two young children who need food and clothing — and your only meaningful work experience happens to be selling drugs — then your options narrow quickly to that which got you locked up in the first place.

Today, in just five West Baltimore ZIP Codes, there is more than $37 million in child support arrears that will likely never be collected, but have been outsourced to Maximus. So, the collection process will continue unabated, and its socioeconomic impacts will continue to prevent young men from joining the formal economy, literally for the rest of their lives.

In this way, the child-support system actively perpetuates the drug trade. This makes no sense. I think we can do a lot better.'

UK: Second National Conference for Men and Boys 2012 Starts November 1

Matt · 1 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Main Index for Second National Conference for Men & Boys http://brightonmanplan.wordpress.com/conference-2012/

Thursday 1st November 2012
Event: Men's Rights Networking Event and Discussion
Theme: How Do We Put Men's Issues On The Political Agenda?
http://brightonmanplan.wordpress.com/2012/09/12/conference-fringe-event-mens-rights-event/

Friday 2nd November 2012
EVENT: SECOND NATIONAL CONFERENCE FOR MEN AND BOYS
http://brightonmanplan.wordpress.com/2012/09/28/programme-for-second-national-conference-for-men-and-boys/

Saturday 3rd November 2012
Event: The Big Man Gathering
http://brightonmanplan.wordpress.com/2012/09/11/big-man-gathering-2012-programme/

SAVE E-lert: Outcome of the Nov. 6 Election Hangs in the Balance - Take Action Now

Matt · 1 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

In a few short days we will face the most important presidential election in our lifetimes.

Will you look back on Nov. 6, 2012 and say that you did everything that you could to affect the outcome?

You still have time to make a difference. Between now and Tuesday, contact your local political party, volunteer to do neighborhood canvassing, make voter calls, and attend local rallies.

Think how proud you'll feel when we are that much closer to reform.

http://www.saveservices.org/campaign-2012

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Boys raised by traditional families ‘do better at school’

Matt · 1 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a major study, researchers said family structures had a much more significant effect on boys’ early education than school type or even the gender of teachers.

It found that boys were much more likely to misbehave, be excluded from school and go on to achieve low grades after rebelling against “emotionally distant” parents.

The pattern is particularly marked in single-parent families where mothers “invest disproportionately less in their sons or feel less warm toward them” than daughters.

The disclosure comes amid continuing concern over the gender gap at the heart of the education system.

Data shows boys fall behind girls after just a year of school and the gulf widens throughout primary and secondary education.'

CDC: U.S. Birth Rate Hits All-Time Low; 40.7% of Babies Born to Unmarried Women

Matt · 1 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

As most of you might know from previous comments, I am fine with an ever-decreasing birthrate. The planet's population has exploded over the past 200-300 years, largely due to increased hygiene (including the invention of the toothbrush) and better nutrition generally, and that doesn't bode well for the future. But while the low birthrate we see in the western world may trouble some, even more troubling is the very high birthrates in parts of the world that can least afford adding to their populations, resulting in unnecessary suffering and conflict over ever-scarcer resources.

But anyway, I post this story because indeed, almost 50% of children now born in the US are born to unwed mothers. This does not necessarily mean the kids will not know or have relationships with their dads, but the odds are higher they won't. The only thing that concerns me is the decrease in the relationships men are having with their kids, to the detriment of both classes of person. Meanwhile, maternal dependence (real or manufactured) on public largesse only increases. How exactly any society can hope to remain productive much less prosperous under these conditions is beyond me. Anyway, here's the excerpt:

'(CNSNews.com) - The birth rate in the United States hit an all-time low in 2011, according to a report released this month by the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

“The 2011 preliminary number of U.S. births was 3,953,593, 1 percent less (or 45,793 fewer) births than in 2010; the general fertility rate (63.3 per 1,000 women age 15-44 years) declined to the lowest rate ever reported for the United States,” said the report.

More than 40 percent of all babies born in the country last year, the report said, were born to unmarried women.

While the overall birth rate declined to a record low, the birth rates for women in the 35-39 and 40-44 age groups actually increased from 2010 to 2011.
...
In 2010, 33.9 percent of the babies delivered by women 25-29 were delivered by unmarried women, and in 2011 that increased to 34.4 percent. In 2010, 21.1 percent of babies delivered by women 30-34 were delivered by unmarried women, and in 2011 that increased to 21.6 percent. In 2010, 19.6 percent of babies delivered by women 35-39 were delivered by unmarried mothers and in 2011 that increased to 21.1 percent. In 2010, 21.7 percent of babies delivered by women 40 and over were delivered by unmarried mothers and in 2011 that increased to 22.4 percent.'

Campaign to reduce suicide in young men

Matt · 1 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cumbria mental health service is supporting a campaign by the Samaritans to try and reduce the number of suicides in young men.

Dr Richard Thwaites, Clinical Lead for the Cumbria mental health service First Step, explains:

“About three quarters of suicides in Cumbria are among men. I think the new campaign from the Samaritans is a great opportunity to raise awareness and encourage men to seek help when they need it.

"Men can be hesitant to seek treatment for psychological problems for various reasons, such as a belief that they ‘should’ be able to cope or that experiencing such problems makes them weak. Clearly this isn’t true - First Step receives referrals for over 6,000 men each year suffering with such problems.

"This is a normal part of life for men, even if it’s not as widely discussed as it may be for women. First Step offers a range of evidence-based treatments that can help men to understand and change the way they have been feeling.'

Men Can Get Breast Cancer Too

Matt · 1 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Maybe some of those pink ribbons should have a little blue added to them in places. Then again, ask for donations to help fight breast cancer in men and you're likely to get a dirty look. Ask for the same for women, and the wallets open up. Can you believe there are still some feminists who can keep a straight face and say that women are not getting enough attention from researchers for their particular ailments? Admittedly, the incidence compared with women is 1/100th, so epidemiologically, it's considered "insignificant". Say that to someone whose dad just died from it and see what they tell you. The denial around male health issues would be funny for its ridiculousness if it were not for the tragic consequences. Excerpt:

'The focus of Breast Cancer Awareness efforts are focused on women -- the ribbons are pink, after all. But men can get breast cancer too.

Patch sat down with a few local experts about male breast cancer:
...
Patch: Why is it important to talk about male breast cancer?

Dr. Lee: It's important because men don't think they can get breast cancer. They don't think they can receive a mammogram screening. The discussion should be focused on breaking the myths and informing people on what is fact versus fiction. Men will say to me “men can't get breast cancer.” So they tend to show up late, when the lump has been there for several months, which is usually stage 2 or later. And that means that it has already spread to the lymph nodes because they have been waiting. I see this 50 percent of the time. If they never heard of male breast cancer, they think the lump will go away.'

"Wear Blue" movement seeks to raise awareness of men's health issues

Matt · 1 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is an ongoing, increasing and predominantly silent crisis in the health and well-being of men. Due to a lack of awareness, poor health education, and culturally induced behavior patterns in their work and personal lives, men's health and well-being are deteriorating steadily. Society is being dramatically affected because men are living approximately 5 years less than women.'

The One Picture Feminists Don't Want Anyone to See

Matt · 1 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Look at this image. If you can't download it due to volume restrictions, try later. It's that good. Then when you see it, save it to your hard drive (if you don't know how to do this, see this .pdf document; if you are still confused, ask someone for help).

This is the image feminists don't want you you to see. It's a picture of a US soldier just back from deployment whose wife got pregnant just before he left. He had never seen his baby until now. And the picture tells it all as far as his reaction-- as well as how he feels about his baby.

Feminists told one of many Big Lies in the 1970s and have maintained it ever since. They have repeated it time and again and have gotten so many people to believe it that now even those who used to argue with them back then may actually believe it. It's just this: Men don't care about their kids. They are not deserving of any parental rights because they don't really care about children. They should be used only as resources for the maintenance of the child, of course, but only via the mother as the conduit and gatekeeper. In short, men should have no parental rights because they don't deserve them because they don't care about their kids anyway.

That was one of the Big Lies they told. But it was false back then and it's false today.

Share this picture. Post it to Facebook, wherever you can and say it like it is: Men love their children. And what is truly tragic is that society at large has been brainwashed into thinking that that isn't true. And so, is it any wonder that the US birthrate is the lowest it's ever been and the out-of-wedlock percentage of births is getting ever-closer to 50%? Perhaps it's because even potential fathers of children believe this Big Lie themselves.

HuffPost: Male Rape is Real

Matt · 1 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. The video report has no text, so here is some information on the topic from Wikipedia. Excerpt:

'Several studies argue that male-male prisoner rape, as well as female-female prisoner rape, might be the most common and least-reported forms of rape, with some studies suggesting such rapes are substantially more common in both per-capita and raw-number totals than male-female rapes in the general population.

Research from the UK suggests that almost 3% of men reported a non-consensual sexual experience as adults and over 5% of men reported sexual abuse as a child. This does not take into account the possibility of underreporting. Recognition of male on male rape in law has historically been limited; the first successful prosecution for attempted male on male rape in the UK was not until 1995.

...

Much like female erectile response and contrary to popular opinion, male erectile response is involuntary, meaning that a man need not consent for his penis to become erect and be placed in a woman's vagina. Penetration of a man by a woman is possible through forcible stimulation of external male genitalia or the anus, or by forced penetration of the anus with the use of strap-ons, dildos, other foreign objects which could include a tongue (inserted or external) in forced oral, forced digit manipulation, and digital penetration. A woman could also force a man to perform oral sex on her. Rape of a man by a woman could also occur when limited sexual activities are agreed upon and a man's penis is placed in a woman in violation of the limits that had been set. Rape of a man by a woman is thus possible in several ways.

However, male victims of sexual abuse by females often face social, political, and legal double standards. While gender-neutral laws have combated the older perception that rape never occurs to men, and other laws have eliminated the term altogether, the double standards still remain.'

Could You Have a Male Eating Disorder?

Matt · 1 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When the subject of eating disorders comes up, most people naturally think it's a chick thing. But the latest research shows that gender is neither a predictor of—or an insurance policy against—body image issues. In fact, the number of guys worldwide who suffer from eating disorders is on the rise, according to Eating Disorders: The Journal of Treatment & Prevention. "There's a lot more pressure these days for guys to have a cut body than there used to be in the past," says Ted Weltzin, MD, medical director of eating disorder services at Rogers Memorial Hospital in Oconomowoc, Wisconsin.

While eating disorders in women typically reveal themselves in the form of an emaciated body, the look is different for guys. Males with eating disorders tend to be overly focused on exercise and muscle definition, says Dr. Weltzin. If you're body-conscious—and you probably are if you're on this site—ask yourself these sic questions to make sure you have a healthy approach to nutrition and exercise. If after answering these questions you're worried that you may be crossing into unhealthy territorry, call the National Eating Disorder Association's Live Helpline at 800-931-2237 to help you find an expert in your area who can help.'

Who are the Hurricane Sandy Heroes?

Matt · 1 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

I don't need to talk too much about Hurricane Sandy at this point, but just in case you have been living under a rock the past 1-2 weeks and just came up for air, read about it here. Millions without power or ready access to food and medical help remain while homes, businesses, infrastructure are still flooded. Thousands of people also remain stranded in some places and it may take days (as of this writing) to get them out.

So, who is doing the work to restore power, and who had it going in the first place? Who are fighting the fires that have broken out in places as a result of the storm? Who are risking their own lives regularly to rescue others? Who are risking their lives to maintain or restore law and order in places that are currently still, literally, in the dark?

Men. The answer is, by and large: Men, almost everyone involved. There may be a small percentage of women involved in the actual hands-on work that needs to be done to bring the affected areas back to some semblance of normalcy. But I ask you, if this were an army of women in the form of power utility employees, police officers, fire-fighters, EMTs, and others, would that not be a constantly-reported fact? Would they not receive constant praise for their sacrifices for others' betterment and survival? Would they not be hailed constantly, AS WOMEN, for what they were doing? The answer is of course, yes. But while men are doing the vast majority of the work needed to relieve the sufferings of so many as a consequence of this hurricane, they are indeed praised-- but not as men. They are praised as "utility workers", "fire fighters", "police officers", etc. Again, men as a gender get lost in a sea of occupational titles while women do not.

In this disaster as in all the rest, men are doing just what is expected of them, receiving fleeting praise when successful and harsh condemnation when not. One day I wonder if we'll ever see women in such positions as men are to this degree-- and get held to the same standards of judgment. Don't hold your breath.

Australia: New Grants Build on the Work at 58 Men's Sheds

Minuteman · 1 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'More than fifty Men's Sheds across Australia will receive funding from the Australian Government to upgrade their facilities or buy new equipment and tools, in the latest round of grants announced today by Minister for Indigenous Health Warren Snowdon.

"Men's Sheds offer more than just a place for blokes to catch up and work on the tools – in many parts of country Australia they give men a lifeline to a network of mates and support," Mr Snowdon said.

"In this round of funding we looked at giving priority to towns and regions with higher than average rates of unemployment – we know men in these areas are more likely to suffer from isolation."

"We provide the money for the bricks and tools, but it's the men and their camaraderie that make these sheds work," Mr Snowdon said.

58 Men's Sheds from across the country will share in $125,000 worth of funding to assist with purchasing tools for woodwork, including saws, drills and safety equipment, as well as providing money for upgrades to facilities.

Under its National Male Health Policy, the Federal Government funds the Australian Men's Shed Association (AMSA) to run the Shed Development Program, which includes $250,000 a year over three years, in direct assistance to Men's Sheds, plus $125,000 for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander shed activities.'

IA: Special Report from New Orleans

Matt · 2 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Last week, members of the Intact America staff, along with dozens of intactivists from around the country, attended the 2012 American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) convention in New Orleans, Louisiana. Unlike in years past, this year the AAP barred us from hosting a booth inside the exhibition hall, citing as a reason Intact America's planned demonstration, which we promoted on our Facebook page. The real reason they barred us: They know we are right. They are afraid of us. And they want to pretend we don't exist.

Well, thanks to your generous support, we made our presence VERY well known:

- We staged a major press conference attended by supporters as well as doctors and people new to the cause. The event was subsequently covered by The Washington Post!
- We spent three days protesting on the corner directly across the street from the convention center, on the sidewalks in front of the building, and on the "neutral ground"—a strip of land in the middle of the street, a spot impossible for the convention-goers and passers-by to miss. We talked with attendees; we walked and hoisted our signs and voices high. See our AAP Conference Report Page for more photos, and our Facebook page for even more.
- Intact America reinvested the funds from the exhibition booth into running our Open Letter in both the New Orleans Times-Picayune and the Baton Rouge Advocate—twice!—reaching several million people over that weekend.

Woman murders children, blames truck-driver husband's absence

Minuteman · 3 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A Polish woman charged with murder in the stabbing deaths of her seven-year-old son and a five-year-old girl she was babysitting had been upset about her own father's recent death, a prosecutor says.

But what role Elzbieta Plackowska's grief over her father's death may have played in her actions on Tuesday - when authorities say she stabbed the two children dozens of times as they begged for their lives - DuPage County State's Attorney Robert Berlin could not say.

...

Plackowska, a 40-year-old Polish immigrant, told investigators that her husband, a truck driver, used to bring her flowers and gifts, but she resented him being home only on weekends and that she had to work as a maid, which she felt was beneath her, Berlin said.

"She felt he truly did not appreciate how fine a wife and mother she was," he said.'

Obama and the Women's Lobby

Mastodon · 3 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Affordable Care Act mentions "breast" 44 times, "prostate" not once. It also establishes an elaborate and expensive network of special programs to promote women's health. Programs for men are nowhere to be found. What explains the imbalance?

When President Obama took office, he promised to insulate his administration from organized lobbyists. Yet, from day one, he granted the women's lobby unprecedented influence. The results should trouble fair-minded feminists.
...
Most striking of all is the Obama administration's blindness to the growing problem of male academic underachievement. Girls outshine boys by nearly every measure of classroom success. They earn better grades, take more advanced-placement and honors courses in high school, and are far more likely to go to college. Women earn 57 percent of bachelor's degrees, 63 percent of master's degrees, and 53 percent of doctoral degrees. According to a recent Harvard study ("Pathways to Prosperity"), the new passport to the American Dream "is education beyond high school." Today, far more women than men have that passport.

Yet the president persists in acting as if our schools are a hostile learning environment for girls, one that warrants aggressive federal intervention. Pressured by groups like the AAUW and the National Women's Law Center (NWLC), the White House recently announced that the Department of Education would be adopting a more rigorous application of Title IX to career, technology, and engineering programs in high school and college — to stop the alleged boy-favoritism that is shortchanging girls. To avoid federal investigations that threaten withdrawal of financial support, programs will simply enroll fewer males.'

Men's role towards women's rights highlighted

Mastodon · 3 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The seminar held to discuss involvement of men in gender activism and issues related to women's rights. The study captured stories of 5 men who took affirmative actions against sexual violence against men, women and transgender persons in the context of Pakistan. Sadia Sahrif from SDPI moderated the proceedings while Safillulah Khan from Rozan explained research methodology with participants.

Sharing the findings of study, Maria Rasheed from Rozan said that masculinity is a complex terrain where Men's lives and gendered experiences have exhibited contradictions. She said violence in the lives of men, both by witnessing and experiencing at the hands of another man, seems to be a common influence in shaping and motivating his actions. "The study speaks of unstable nature of masculine identities and power relationships where motivations for actions against sexual violence are not clearly pointed out," she added.
...
She highlighted the Men's behaviour that how men's distancing from pain - physical and emotional - feeds into masculinities shaped by tribes, sectarian groups, whereby men's role are seen as essential to protect weaker groups, identities, and land. Discussing the study, Gender expert, Dr Yasmin Zaidi, said that the study offers thought provoking insight on inner workings of real men. She said the Men are too often portrayed as sole oppressor, which silences the supportive character where men are facilitating women in socio-political and economic sphere.-PR'

Why won't feminists let men debate abortion?

Mastodon · 3 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Suzanne Moore has told the Today audience that men are banned from debating abortion. They can't have an abortion, so how dare they talk about its rights and wrongs? This is a women-only subject, so back off, boys.

The logic of this was confused, as Medhi Hasan, who confessed his pro-life views in his blog, told the lady in the van. (Moore was in a radio car. Thank goodness: otherwise blood would have been spilled.)

You bet: that's like arguing that women can't debate male circumcision just because they don't have a male member that can be snipped. Moore should remember that it was David Steel, a man, who pressed for the 1967 Abortion Act; and that two WOMEN ministers are calling for its review.

The truth is, both men and women have children, and THAT is what this debate is about. When does life begin in the womb? When is a foetus a child? Men as well as women have a sense of morality, and a stake in future generations.'

Teen who made false rape report offered support

Mastodon · 3 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'As community leaders mobilize support for a Yates High School student who admitted she lied about being sexually assaulted last week, Houston police have not ruled out the possibility of criminal charges against the teen.

The 15-year-old girl told police that a man abducted her on Noah Street near Cyrill Park on the way home from school, dragged her into an abandoned house and sexually assaulted her. She provided a detailed description of man, as well as other information.

But authorities discovered evidence that made her story questionable, and she ultimately admitted that the Oct. 24 assault never happened, said activist Deric C. Muhammad, who held a news conference Friday at the park.

"We are actually relieved that the predator that we were looking for does not exist," said Muhammad, of the Ministry of Justice-Houston. "One of the most egregious things that a female can do is to fabricate a story that she has been raped, when she has not. We don't want the cries of real rape victims to get drowned out in the lies that are told, such as the one that was told last week."

Muhammad agreed that assistance, rather than punishment, is needed to get the girl on the right track.

"We know there are some underlying psychological issues that would compel this young girl to come forward with such a story," he said. "We vehemently condemn what she did, but we don't condemn her as a child and as a person. We believe she can be redeemed from this."'

F&F: Maryland Reduces Child Support Arrears to 0

Matt · 4 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Maryland, the Child Support Payment Incentive Program is taking small steps to chip away at the mountain of bad child support debt. The Office of Child Support Enforcement acknowledges that 63% of fathers in arrears report earnings of $10,000 or less per year.

The Maryland program allows noncustodial parents with incomes below 225 percent of the federal poverty level and who have made 24 months of consecutive child-support payments on their current obligation to have their arrears reduced to zero. Also, as of October 1, the new legislation will automatically suspend child-support orders for anyone sentenced to 18 or more months in jail and lacking the financial means to pay.

While other states continue to strip away licenses to drive and professional and occupational licenses, Maryland is making some small steps to acknowledge that some dads are just “dead-broke” and the state is better off helping them reenter the workforce – and the lives of their children.'

Forget the war on women: The men’s vote could decide who wins in 2012

Matt · 4 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Amazing-- someone in the MSM has finally started to pay attention to the stats around the voting polls! But as I said before, don't expect Obama et al. to pay attention to men's votes. Feminists just don't seem to think men are very important so naturally subconsciously think our votes don't count. Rule #1 in electoral politics: "Every vote counts-- every single one of them." It's a real bush-league mistake to ignore that fact, but myopia is a sin anyone can be guilty of, and it can't be cured by donning rose-colored lenses. Living inside a bubble such as the one every high-level politician sitting in office for any length of time tends to cause such lenses to grow in front of their eyes of their own accord. Excerpt:

'A barrage of attention from the presidential candidates and the news media has been paid to "waitress moms," "Walmart women" and other exhibits of the female species this election, with pundits wondering whether the female gender gap, which works in the president's favor, will carry him over the top on Election Day.

But the focus might be better spent on men.

"The issue is not the women's vote, but the men's vote," Frank Newport, Gallup's editor-in-chief, told Yahoo News. The reason: polls show male voters look much more likely to break from their 2008 voting patterns. If that happens, the men's vote could decide whether Barack Obama or Mitt Romney becomes the next president.

Four years ago, Obama won 49 percent of the male vote, buoyed by historic gains with white men, who chose the Democratic candidate in the highest proportions seen since Jimmy Carter. Even so, most white men—57 percent of them—still voted for John McCain, and a majority of such voters have not backed a Democratic candidate since 1964, when men began abandoning the Democratic party.

This year, Obama's inroads with white men have eroded. Worse, the candidate tracks in the low 40s among all men, not just white ones, in the latest ABC/Washington Post polls. It's possible the president will have lost up to 9 points of ground among male voters compared to 2008. No Democratic candidate has been elected in the past 50 years without gaining close to half of the male vote.'

Obesity infographic

Matt · 4 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

A reader sent a link to this graphic after reading this story here on MANN. More grist for the mill. Being fat incurs greater health care costs than smoking and drinking combined.

Let's call it what it is, guys: fat. That's what it is. You can say "obese" or "overweight", but when people see a fat person of either sex, they simply say to themselves: "fat". That's the reality. Political correctness insists on "obesity", but everyone knows a duck when he sees one-- and he calls it a duck. And the longer a person stays fat, the avoidably shorter their lifespan gets and their quality of life just continues to drop. And the thing is, it's so avoidable. It's the one thing people well and truly have substantial control over: how much they eat and how much exercise they get. It's just a matter of making the right choice, that's all.

Circumcision Decision: Jewish Couples in Crisis

Matt · 4 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Back in the days when I was dating, before I met my wonderful husband, I would mention my views about circumcision early in a relationship, namely that I was against it and had no plans to circumcise any future sons. I figured I could marry someone with different interests or even political views, but when it came to circumcising a child, that was a deal-breaker.

Of course, not everyone is passionate about this issue before they have kids. Many people don't give a second thought to circumcision until they are expecting. By then, if turns out there are strong views in opposite directions, it can lead to a lot of heartache.

The situation of couples at odds about whether to circumcise is becoming increasingly common. Years ago, few people in the U.S. were talking about circumcision and almost everyone was doing it. Today circumcision rates have plummeted. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, in 2010 the rate of hospital circumcision in the United States was just 55%. There is more media attention over the issue as people are becoming increasingly aware of circumcision's many harms. The 2011 film What to Expect When You're Expecting took a humorous approach to one a couple's disagreement over whether to circumcise. In real life, it's never funny.'

"Movember" for Men's Health

Matt · 4 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Movember web site here: http://www.movember.com/. From the US version site here:

'Movember is all about bringing back the moustache, having fun and doing it for a serious cause; men's health, specifically prostate and testicular cancer initiatives. Mo Bros commit to growing a moustache for the 30 days of Movember, and in doing so become walking and talking billboards for the cause. The moustache is our ribbon, the symbol by which we generate conversations, awareness and raise funds for men's health.

Whilst the growing of Mo's is limited to the guys, Mo Sistas play a vital role in the success of Movember by supporting and encouraging the men in their life to get involved, and participating in raising funds and awareness themselves.

There are many ways in which you can get involved with Movember, such as registering as a Mo Bro or Mo Sista and raising funds and awareness yourself or donating to someone you know who is participating. You can also attend various events such as Gala Partés, Mo Parties, Mo Runs or host your own event in honor of Movember.'

Man Saves Mystery Cabbie During Storm

Matt · 5 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Inspiring and more to the point, noble. But as a man coming to someone else's rescue, he is indeed a hero, but risking his life for another person is somewhat expected, is it not? He even expected it of himself. Imagine if he had been a woman. Indeed he (as she) may have done the same, but would she have felt the same obligation to act as he said he felt? And would she also not be now lauded nationally as a hero rather than just as an ordinary fellow doing an extraordinary thing due to circumstance? Excerpt:

'Jon Candelaria, a 25-year-old who works in accounting, was in his apartment near the East River, looking out the window as the streets below filled with water. He saw the taxi do a 360-degree turn and end up in the rising flood. Candelaria, dressed in basketball shorts, threw on a jacket and sneakers and rushed down into the street.

"It was so dangerous but it didn't even matter to me," he told ABC News. "All that mattered was, not even my own life, but just getting this guy out of the car and saving his life. That's all that mattered."
...
Candelaria said the water was chest-deep and freezing.

"When I got down there and I started walking through the water, then it hit me. I could pretty much die right now," he said. "I thought about my daughter and I told myself, if anything was to happen to me, I know my family could take care of her. I know that for a fact."

He could see the cab rocking and briefly thought about how he could be electrocuted by falling power lines, but pushed that thought from his mind and kept going. When he got to the driver, the water was already up to his chin.

"I'm glad I got there on time. I guess five more minutes and he would've been drowning," he said. "I put him on this shoulder. I was like, 'Please don't panic, don't freak out. The water is very high.' And he was like, 'All right.'"'

Wage Gap Myth Exposed -- By Feminists

Mastodon · 5 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you believe women suffer systemic wage discrimination, read the new American Association of University Women (AAUW) study Graduating to a Pay Gap. Bypass the verbal sleights of hand and take a hard look at the numbers. Women are close to achieving the goal of equal pay for equal work. They may be there already.

How many times have you heard that, for the same work, women receive 77 cents for every dollar a man earns? This alleged unfairness is the basis for the annual Equal Pay Day observed each year about mid-April to symbolize how far into the current year women have to work to catch up with men's earnings from the previous year. If the AAUW is right, Equal Pay Day will now have to be moved to early January.

The AAUW has now joined ranks with serious economists who find that when you control for relevant differences between men and women (occupations, college majors, length of time in workplace) the wage gap narrows to the point of vanishing. The 23-cent gap is simply the average difference between the earnings of men and women employed "full time." What is important is the "adjusted" wage gap-the figure that controls for all the relevant variables. That is what the new AAUW study explores.'

Study: Teens With Lesbian Mothers Do Better In School, Happier In Life

Mastodon · 5 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LOS ANGELES (CBS Las Vegas) – Teens living in homes with lesbian mothers are proving to be more successful in school and generally happier in life.

A new study has found that 17-year-olds with lesbian mothers had high school GPAs ranging between A-minus to B-plus, while having strong family bonds with their mothers, whom the teens consider good role models. The Williams Institute at UCLA, which conducted “Adolescents with Lesbian Mothers Describe Their Own Lives,” tracked 78 adolescents over a 26-year period.
...
The research, which appears in the Journal of Homosexuality, indicated that these teens had very close friends that they felt comfortable informing about their lesbian parents. “They teach me to be accepting of all people on this earth, no matter what differences they may have,” wrote one of 38 adolescent boys tracked in the study.'

'C*ck Block The Vote' PSA Discourages Men From Voting On 'Totally Biased'

Mastodon · 5 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Text:

'"If you have a penis, on November 6, it's crucial that you stay home and watch porn all day."

That's the message of a new PSA on FX's "Totally Biased with W. Kamau Bell." The thing is, women support President Obama far more than men do, and if, in a reverse-19th amendment situation, only women voted, Obama would win in a landslide. (Assuming they don't let their hormones do the talking on Election Day.)

Everyone wins: Men don't have to inconvenience themselves, and women are happy they get a president who will protect their bodies and health. And if women are happy, men are happy, right?'

How feminism distorts reality

Mastodon · 6 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'Madam -- I am writing to commend Eilis O'Hanlon on her excellent article entitled 'Sometimes it's not so hard to be a woman' (Sunday Independent, October 28). It is long past time that the feminist industry, which survives by perpetuating the myth that women are oppressed, was exposed for the nonsense that it is.

Ms O'Hanlon very competently demolishes the latest silly feminist claim that the recession is having a disproportionate effect on women. It is almost as ridiculous as the other feminist claim that women suffer more than men in war, repeated by Hillary Clinton among others.

The fact that it is predominantly men who are killed, crippled and maimed in war is an inconvenient truth, but feminists are expert at ignoring truth, no matter how blatantly obvious it may be.

That distortion of reality is an integral part of feminism. Its proponents selectively look up through the glass ceiling but refuse to look down into the glass cellar (ie dangerous and dirty jobs) which are almost totally dominated by men.'

Cops: Substitute teacher claims 14-year-old got her pregnant

Mastodon · 6 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 35-year-old Texas woman accused of having sex with a 14-year-old boy and then claiming to be pregnant from the relationship may have worked as a substitute teacher at least once in the boy's classroom, a school official said.

Amanda Sotelo, a resident of Von Ormy, was booked into a Bexar County jail on Nov. 1 on a charge of indecency with a child, Louis J. Antu, spokesman with the Bexar County Sheriff's Office, told NBC News. Bond was set at $75,000.

School district officials learned of the allegations Oct. 31 after the boy's mother alerted them of the relationship, Anne Marie Espinoza, spokeswoman for the Southwest Independent School District in San Antonio, told KSAT-TV.'

SAVE E-lert: Your Vote Counts, Every Vote Counts

Matt · 6 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Tomorrow we will experience the most important presidential election of our lifetimes. And talk about exciting... The race is neck and neck.

This reminds me of 2000, when George W. Bush officially won Florida's electoral votes by a margin of only 537 votes out of almost 6 million cast, winning him the election.

This year, if you live in CO, FL, IA, MI, NV, NH, NC, OH, PA, VA, or WI there's a chance that your ballot could decide who will lead our country for the next four years.

But only if you vote.

Please vote. Your vote counts. Every vote counts!

There are close races for seats in the House and Senate as well.

Tell a friend. Share this elert today!

http://www.saveservices.org/campaign-2012

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Hurricane-relief Guardsmen tossed out of armory - for Victoria's Secret show

Matt · 6 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Today I thought to myself: What kind of humorous pseudo-story could I come up with for some comedy relief on MANN, heading into tomorrow's debacle that will probably make 2000's pregnant-chad-a-thon look like a slam-dunk Wednesday-morning certainty in comparison? (I really hope I am wrong about this, but only a history that has yet to be made will show if it's true or not.)

So I thought and thought, then came up with this: National Guardsmen called in from wherever to assist with the many tasks needing attention right now in New York City are thrown out of their billet so some Victoria's Secret models could have a place to do their catwalk thing. Perfect! It'll make the guys laugh!

But before I had a chance to actually post it, PRESTO, it actually happened! Yes indeed, here in the modern day, which may in some ways be regarded as "Bizzaro-world", truth remains stranger than fiction. As much as I would like to be able to, I just can't make this stuff up. Suppose the same thing would occur if for example a lot of female soldiers were billeted in the same conditions and were ousted by, say, a troupe of Chippendale's dancers? Not in a million years. Excerpt:

'The Victoria's Secret show must go on — even if it means kicking out hardworking men and women in uniform.

Dozens of National Guardsmen, and Army and Air Force personnel who have been sleeping at Manhattan's Lexington Armory in between hurricane-relief shifts are being booted — to make room for Victoria's Secret models in anticipation of Wednesday's runway show.

About 300 uniformed personnel have been bunking down at the armory at various times since Sandy hit.

But their numbers will be reduced to 60 by Wednesday for the event, which is featuring Rihanna and Justin Bieber.

The military workers will be relocated to the Jacob Javits Center, Harlem Armory and hotels such as the Marriott East Side and Ramada East Side — where they'll bunk five to 10 per room on the government's dime, sources said.'

And female pols don't "behave badly"?

Matt · 7 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Feminists would have you believe sexual and romantic indiscretions are pretty much male politicians' turf. Maybe not so much these days. Story here. "Lady"? There's another word I'd use, but this is a "family site" (well, not exactly, but...). Excerpt:

'The former French justice minister Rachida Dati had up to eight lovers, including Nicolas Sarkozy's brother, in the year she fell pregnant with her daughter, a lawyer for the alleged father has claimed.

Dominique Desseigne will use the fact that Ms Dati had several lovers as one argument to refuse to take a paternity test, Le Monde reported.

...

Ms Dati, 46, a former minister in Mr Sarkozy's government and now an MEP, filed a paternity case in October to oblige Mr Desseigne, the chief of the Lucien Barriere casino and hotel group, to acknowledge he is the father of three-year-old Zohra.

...

Mr Desseigne's friends say Ms Dati "sent him threatening letters on several occasions", asking for money, and offered to stop legal proceedings in exchange for a negotiated settlement. Ms Dati's lawyer is expected to demonstrate the affection Mr Desseigne has shown her, including paying for her rented apartment at one point, and presenting witness statements showing he often came to visit Zohra.

Mr Desseigne's wife died in 2001 from injuries sustained in a plane crash six years earlier.

"He categorically told Rachida Dati he didn't want a child," an unnamed friend said. "That is why they broke up." Ms Dati's lawyer declined to comment on the claim she had several lovers in 2008.'

"Don't take men's vote for granted"

Matt · 7 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Search on "Don't take men's vote for granted" to get to the letter.

'Given the high volatility of the “women’s vote,” as if women were a homogeneous group, I can understand why both President Obama and Mitt Romney are worried that this volatile vote might go to the other guy (“Critics slam Mitt Romney on equal pay,” Oct. 17). However, if men and fathers don’t have a candidate who speaks to their interests and concerns, what makes either candidate think that men will even bother to get out of bed on Election Day?

Today’s boys, men and fathers are not the boys, men and fathers of the greatest generation. Males today are living in a gender-reversed world where they are at the wrong end of gender gaps in education, health and jobs and income in the younger generations.

Recent polls show that about 93 percent of black voters are committed to President Obama. Until either the president or Mitt Romney can see roughly 93 percent of male voters committed to them, they should not take the “men’s vote” for granted. With less than three weeks to go, today would be a good day to begin addressing the needs and concerns of boys, men and fathers in today’s world.'

Identigene Raises Awareness of Paternity Fraud in America

Matt · 7 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Admittedly, this is a press release from a commercial entity. (Everyone's always trying to see you something. sigh) Anyway, if you can ignore that much for now, the meat of the text is worth reading. Excerpt:

'Identigene, maker of the only DNA paternity test available in drugstores and supercenters, is working to increase awareness of paternity fraud in America. Paternity fraud occurs when a woman allows a man to assume he is the biological father, even though he is not. It's an issue with potentially serious consequences for everyone involved, from financial obligations to custody arrangements to emotional attachments.

The campaign to raise awareness of paternity fraud reached millions of people and was conducted through advertising, outreach to news organizations, social media, and the efforts of Dennis Fuller, a Dallas, Texas attorney who has championed this cause. "In my professional experience, the truth about paternity leads to a positive outcome for everyone involved," Fuller says. Mr. Fuller provides the example of his client, Barry Wallace. Mr. Wallace was sentenced to prison for nonpayment of child support. His wife sought legal assistance and DNA testing, eventually proving paternity fraud and freeing her husband from jail. The mother of the little girl had a brief encounter with Wallace and had for years wanted to stop the child support, enabling her husband to officially adopt the little girl and assume financial obligation. Disestablishing paternity was a positive for all parties. See more of Mr. Wallace's personal story on YouTube.

Stay-at-home dads on the rise

Matt · 7 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'There's a lot of love and chaos in the David Nicolato household.

"I'm doing it backwards," Nicolato said. "They're upside down. I've got 15 things to do and I have to get out of the house on time."

Nicolato is a stay-at-home dad.

"It's the hardest job in the whole wide world," he said. "But, at the same time, there's nothing else I would rather be doing."

Nicolato's children, 4-year-old Jacob and 2-year-old Ian, are a hand-full.

When mom is at work and on business trips, they know it's dad who runs the show.'

2012 International Men's Day

Matt · 7 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Description here. Excerpt:

'2012 International Men's Day: Helping Men and Boys Live Longer, Happier, Healthier Lives

In the run up to International Men's Day 2012 (Monday 19th November) we're asking supporters of the day to focus on five key challenges that will help us improve the health and wellbeing of men and boys all over the world.

Some of the universal health issues that men and boys in all countries around the globe face include lower life expectancy, difficulty accessing mental health services, educational disadvantages, lack of male role models and tolerance of violence against men and boys.'

Female "caregiver" sexually assaults bedridden 106-YO woman, threatens retribution of she tells anyone

Matt · 7 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. WARNING: Both graphic and disgusting! Read no further if you don't have a barf-bucket handy. I wonder what excuse will be made for this "caregiver" based on her "her-ness". Excerpt:

'A female caregiver was arrested today and charged with sexually assaulting a 106-year-old woman in her care, according to cops.

Taquita Lashay Watson, 29, had been providing in-home care to the bedridden victim, according to the Pensacola Police Department. Investigators determined that Watson last month had "used a sexual instrument" on the elderly woman.

...

[Ed.: I am deliberately breaking the 'Read more' section here since the more disgusting stuff follows. This is so the reader can decide for him- or herself if they really want to go on reading.]

Australia: The perils of the Prime Minister's feminist fantasies

Mastodon · 7 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The PM's political strategy is clear. An eight-page spread in Marie Claire taps Gillard into a younger demographic -- the 445,000 monthly readers of the magazine are mostly women aged 25 to 39. In fact, much younger women are also being encouraged to join the Gillard gender wars. Well-meaning schoolteachers have started showing Gillard's tirade to their female high school students as evidence that misogyny still happens. Disappointingly, when the YouTube video was played at one school, there was no classroom discussion of the underlying hypocrisy of Gillard's continuing support for Peter Slipper, whose distasteful texts about female genitalia should have required his removal from the Speaker's chair by any fair-minded and consistent feminist. Nor was there any real analysis of the man Gillard accused of being a misogynist.'

Note full access to the article requires a subscription. One intrepid individual however re-published an edited version of the same article here.

"Can Men Be Shamed Into Marriage?"

Broadsword · 7 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The United States Census Bureau found that in 2008 16% of American men between 40 and 44 had never been married, an increase of 150% over 1980 numbers. Dr. Carl Weisman, author of "So Why Have You Never Been Married", says these confirmed bachelors are being stigmatized by society as being a "playboy, loser, commitment-phobe, fussy, damaged goods, plain weird" or, like in the famous "Seinfeld" episode, are labelled as a closeted homosexual, whether or not they are actually gay (with the recurring disclaimer "not that there's anything wrong with it"). Katie Hahn, author of "The Stigma of the Unmarried Man", says that many women actually hope a middle age date is divorced rather than never married. She says never-married thirty and forty something men have a hard time explaining their life history toward wary potential partners, like an ex-con accounting for those missing years on his resume: "If you ask a guy in his late thirties or early forties why he isn't married, he'll have his answer- you could call it his defense- ready."

The 150% increase in never married men ages 40-44 over the last three decades indicates that the societal shaming mentioned above isn't working. Pierce College social scientist and lecturer John Fergus argues that because half of all marriages end in divorce, the popular knowledge of this grim statistic has had a "chilling effect" on single adults, making them fearful of relationships. A survey by Ohio University and Scripps Howard News Service confirmed this increasing public pessimism of successful matrimony due to the apparent recent changes in the way men and women relate to one another. Seeing the failure of so many marriages, many single men are refusing to even try it, regardless of a disapproving culture.'

Divorced Dads' Rights: Father Fights For Say In Son's DNR Order, Access to Medical Records

Mastodon · 7 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While single-parent homes are more common than ever, less than 18 percent of custodial parents are fathers. Jack Frost, President of Father and Families in New York, discussed some of the frustrations of being an active, involved father without full custody on a segment for HuffPost Live.

One of his greatest concerns was not having access to his child's medical records in the early stages of his divorce. His wife made medical decisions concerning his son, including filing a do-not-resuscitate order without his consent.

But when Frost found that he legally had a say in his child's DNR order, he was still met with opposition.

"I told the doctor, I said I wanted the DNR gone. You didn't include me when you filed this. You were supposed to include me and you didn't," Frost said. "She just ignored me."'

Some Dads Want This Walmart Ad Banned Because It Gives Moms Too Much Credit

Mastodon · 7 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The ad shows a "typical" British mom masterminding a family Christmas dinner, exhausting herself in the effort. It's cheesy, heartwarming stuff. The tagline: "Behind every great Christmas there's mum and behind mum there's Asda."

Fathers4Justice, however, objects to the portrayal of the dad in the commercial. His character is portrayed as ineffective and clueless -- a typical "dumb dad" stereotype that has become increasingly common in advertising.

The context here is that when it comes to groceries, women tend to make most of the purchasing decisions; thus grocery ads tend to see things from their point of view. And Fathers4Justice is a media-stunt loving group that believes the law discriminates against men who have split up with the mothers of the their children.'

Ed. note: Asda is owned by Walmart.

F&F: Take Action: Help Pro Se Litigants

Matt · 8 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ohio judges confront a growing problem. Increasingly, parents involved in family law disputes are coming to the court without representation. They either cannot afford or choose not to employ attorneys to represent them. Because they are unfamiliar with the rules and procedures of courts, these parents' attempts to represent themselves often create additional burdens for, and delays in, the courts.

To address this problem, the 2006 Ohio Supreme Court Task Force on Pro Se (self-represented) and Indigent Litigants recommended that the Court develop easily completed forms for a variety of legal issues, including many in family law. The Supreme Court has now drafted a set of proposed forms and has published them for public review and comment.'

No longer taboo, but divorce still damages children: Suffering goes on into adulthood and even old age

Matt · 8 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Family breakdown is as devastating for today's children as it was when divorce was a source of social disgrace, a state-backed report warned yesterday.

Even though divorce is no longer considered 'shameful' – as it was until the 1970s – the children of broken families continue to suffer destructive effects throughout their lives, the report said.

The paper, produced by a team of senior academics, found that the damage caused to a child by divorce continues to blight his or her life as far as old age.

It said parental separation in childhood was 'consistently associated with psychological distress in adulthood during people's early 30s'.

The report added: 'This seems to be true even across different generations, which suggests that as divorce and separation have become more common, their impact on mental health has not reduced."

"The Heart Grows Smarter"

Matt · 8 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

A NYT OP-Ed piece, so of course if you try to get to it by clicking this link: http://www.nytimes.com/2012/11/06/opinion/brooks-the-heart-grows-smarter.html, you'll be asked to sign in. The way around this is to copy the actual link text:

http://www.nytimes.com/2012/11/06/opinion/brooks-the-heart-grows-smarter.html

and paste it into the Google search box at Google.com. Then the page link will come up as the first hit and click on that link. Now, you can see the page. Excerpt:

'If you go back and read a bunch of biographies of people born 100 to 150 years ago, you notice a few things that were more common then than now.
...
It wasn't only parents who were emotionally diffident; it was the people who studied them. In 1938, a group of researchers began an intensive study of 268 students at Harvard University. The plan was to track them through their entire lives, measuring, testing and interviewing them every few years to see how lives develop.

In the 1930s and 1940s, the researchers didn't pay much attention to the men's relationships. Instead, following the intellectual fashions of the day, they paid a lot of attention to the men's physiognomy. Did they have a "masculine" body type? Did they show signs of vigorous genetic endowments?

New PSA lets women Veterans know they've come to "The Right Place"

Minuteman · 8 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A new PSA from Women's Health lets women Veterans know they've come to the right place when they choose VA health care.

Watch the video and learn more about VA's ongoing culture change campaign. Read a recent article that expands on the message. See more headlines about women Veterans and Women Veterans Health Care.

Did you know that women are the fastest growing group within the Veteran population? Learn more about the changing face of women Veterans and what VA is doing to meet their health care needs.

This web site provides information on health care services available to women Veterans, including comprehensive primary care as well as specialty care such as reproductive services, rehabilitation, mental health, and treatment for military sexual trauma.

You can also find answers to some of the most frequently asked questions about women Veterans health care.

At each VA Medical Center nationwide, a Women Veterans Program Manager is designated to assist women Veterans. She can help coordinate all the services you may need, from primary care to medical services to Mental Health and Sexual Abuse Counseling.

Women Veterans who are interested in receiving care at VA should contact their nearest VA Medical Center and ask for the Women Veterans Program Manager.'

Ashley Judd for Senate?

Mastodon · 8 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Barack Obama: “I think that he has an incredible devotion to our Constitution.”

On culture:

I believe that the social construction of gender - the cultural beliefs and practices that divide the sexes and institutionalize and normalize the unequal treatment of girls and women, privilege the interests of boys and men, and, most nefariously, incessantly sexualize girls and women - is the root cause of poverty and suffering around the world.

And she’s a fanatical supporter of abortion. Remember when she viciously mocked Rick Santorum?'

In case you need it: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ashley_Judd

'Where the Boys Are'

Mastodon · 8 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why are boys — even those who cultivate college dreams — so prone to underachievement? Explanations abound, but boy advocates say we've created a classroom culture that ignores critical boy-girl learning differences and mainly rewards the things girls do well. Bored and disengaged, boys tune out or act out. Too many drop out.

By the time the SAT rolls around, these boys have vacated the school building. They aren't sharpening No. 2 pencils; they're mulling the unemployment line.

Feminist groups surely will seize on the latest reading and math scores as proof that girl power is enfeebled, even after years of concerted efforts to work toward gender parity in education.

But this argument doesn't withstand scrutiny. Of course, we must continue our efforts to help girls achieve. The mother of a son and a daughter, I want a level academic playing field for both boys and girls.

But I'd say right now, the girls are all right. Boys, however, need our targeted attention if they ever are to realize their full potential.

Several years ago, a cadre of educators and prominent boy experts launched a national campaign, The Boys Initiative, to ensure they get it. The Boys Initiative is working to raise awareness of gender-based learning differences, as well as the importance of mentoring and instructional flexibility in the classroom.'

A rare breed - the male kindergarten teacher

Mastodon · 8 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On a small piece of woodland next to the Technido daycare centre in Karlsruhe, a group of boys noisily build a bush camp out of logs. Amid whoops of glee, they start running around, wildly shooting at each other with sticks.

“Karl, Lennie, the rules are keep the sticks down at belly height,” says teacher Todd Phillips calmly as he walks up to the boys. “No sticks near anyone’s eyes.”

“It's important to have a man here when the warring camps construct their battleground,” Phillips said afterwards, tongue in cheek.

The 47-year-old has been working at the daycare centre looking after children aged between four and six for more than four years.

Phillips, who hails from Florida but has been living in Germany for 15 years, had been working as a graphic designer at an advertising agency. As he became increasingly dissatisfied with his job, he started looking for alternatives and decided that he wanted to work with children.

“They are very spontaneous, open and honest and live in the moment for the most part,” he says. “It just took me a while to realise that suited me more than advertising.”'

Australia: Loophole in SA Health elective surgery guidelines allows for "cultural/religious" circumcisions in South Australian public hospitals

Minuteman · 9 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt (emphasis added):

'APPENDIX 4 - GUIDELINES ON EXCLUDED ELECTIVE SURGERY PROCEDURES

SA Health has endorsed a list of Elective Surgery procedures that will not be performed at South Australian Public Hospitals. This also includes private patients in public hospitals.

A4.1 Excluded Procedures

As of 5 November 2007, the following list of surgical procedures will not be performed in public hospitals in South Australia unless assessed and justified on true clinical grounds or there is no access to a private hospital within one hour from a patient's usual place of residence.

Where are all the millennial feminists?

Mastodon · 9 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Others appreciate feminism but simply don't identify with elements of the movement.

"Extremists are what turn me off from immediately labeling myself as a feminist," said Amelia Vereb, 25, a media relations manager. "What they preach and what I'm actually experiencing, or noticing ... don't always align." She explained that she hasn't actually experienced discrimination in the workplace, though feminists would insist she has. "Considering how terrifying the job market was when I graduated, I feel like I've been able to achieve the type of success that I had hoped for at this point in my life."

In some cases, millennial women said it's silly for men and women to be equal in the workplace when they're biologically dissimilar.

"Why should an employer hire a woman and then pay her for work she isn't doing? A baby isn't a medical emergency," said Rosenblatt, who believes both maternity and paternity leave are unnecessary financial burdens on employers.

Drost put things more bluntly when discussing feminist tactics.

"If you have enough time to label yourself a feminist or complain about the injustice you receive as a female, then you aren't working hard enough at your job, whether it be homemaker or corporate employee," she said. "Maybe the injustice you perceive is justified."

John Bercow: women behave better than men in Parliament

Mastodon · 9 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'John Bercow, the Speaker of the House of Commons, has said that women behave better than men in Parliament and revealed that he tries to avoid allowing an unbroken sequence of male politicians to speak in the Commons.

“On the whole women are better behaved in Parliament and on the whole less inclined to be shouty and raucous. There is less of the bar room or Oxford Union Society culture amongst the women but that doesn’t mean they should lose out,” said Mr Bercow.

Speaking today at the International Parliamentary Conference on Gender and Politics held in Westminster at Portcullis House, the MPs’ office building, the Speaker also revealed a little bit about how he chooses who speaks next in Parliament: “Giving one of my secrets away - I wouldn’t normally want to call half a dozen men in a row to speak if I can also see that there are several women standing – so that’s an attitudinal thing on my part. It’s not a quota, but it’s a question of thinking it through.”'

British Panel Opposes Quotas to Place Women on Boards

Mastodon · 9 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. (Get around login by pasting the URL: http://www.nytimes.com/2012/11/09/business/global/british-panel-opposes-quotas-to-place-women-on-boards.html into Google and clicking "Google Search", then click the first hit in the search results). Excerpt:

'LONDON — As the debate in Europe widens over the merits of female quotas on company boards, a parliamentary committee in Britain plans to stake out its position: not so fast.

A report to be released Friday by a House of Lords committee concludes that such quotas would “generate negative perceptions amongst women and business leaders” while failing to address the “root causes” of inequality. Quotas, and penalties to enforce them, should be considered only as a last resort, the report says.

The findings come as little surprise. The British government has led opposition to a push by the European Commission to legislate on the issue.

The study comes ahead of discussions scheduled for next week in Brussels on whether the European Commission, the executive arm of the European Union, should propose a binding, Union-wide gender quota on supervisory boards — enforceable by sanctions.'

The Wage Gap Myth Revealed

Mastodon · 9 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is there a wage gap between men and women? Despite the rhetoric, there is little, if any, difference between salaries for men versus women. This truth has been uncovered by an American Association of University Women (AAUW) Study, an organization which seeks to advance "equity for women and girls through advocacy, education, philanthropy, and research."

The study entitled, "Graduating to a Pay Gap: The Earnings of Women and Men One Year after College Graduation," seeks to determine if the gap exists between men and women. Although the study declares that, "one-third of the gap remains unexplained, suggesting that bias and discrimination are still problems in the workplace," the American Enterprise Institute took a close look at the data. They implore the reader to "bypass the verbal sleights of hand and take a hard look at the numbers."'

'Back Off, Stay-at-Home Dads'

Mastodon · 10 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of stay-at-home dads has doubled in the past decade, partly due to the economy. But rather than bumbling through an awkward shift brought on by circumstances, the stay-at-home dads I know seem to be taking it all in stride. Thriving, even. Seriously, stay-at-home dads, your ability to just ease into the primary caregiver role like it's a job folding sweaters at The Gap is making the rest of us look bad. At least Michael Keaton's Mr. Mom had the courtesy to feed the baby raw chili and overflow the washing machine.

Today's SAHD's make parenting seem too easy and fun. And that's no good for me or my stay-at-home mom job security.

My partner and I have a fairly traditional arrangement. He wins the bread and I butter it, staying home with our 21-month-old daughter. I like it this way. But if I complain about anything -- a missed nap, a melt-down, a chunky bout of car sickness -- instead of sympathy and appreciation, I get wistful jealousy. My man swears up and down he'd switch places with me "in a heartbeat." And that's your fault, stay-at-home dads, what with your cute Baby Bjorn photos on Facebook and your weekday games of tag at the park.

The modern stay-at-home dad's evolution from clueless cartoon to sexy superhero is not the only part of this whole trend that annoys me. I'm bitter that since you're men and not women, you're easier on yourself and each other. How nice that must be for you.

Moms, am I wrong? Take an alpha male out of the boardroom and put him in a parent/toddler class and you will see a parent who is not afraid to take pride in his accomplishments: "Yeah, potty training, I crushed that bitch!" We moms are too busy prefacing every comment, "So I'm sure this is my fault and I'm totally screwing up my kid but..." to ever pat ourselves on the back and relax.

While dudes are generous enough to be self-deprecating about their parenting misfires (see: daddy blogs), they're not nearly as likely as mommies to beat themselves up and shame-spiral.

That's why you never hear about "daddy wars." Stay-at-home dads don't have to judge and disparage other fathers just to make themselves feel better about their choices. They already feel fine. Because they're guys. And that's just not fair.'

Feminists Criminalize Comments in Europe

Mastodon · 10 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In America we have the blessings of free speech, fully protected by the First Amendment of our Constitution. The roots of this special right do not trace back to England, but to the Christian ministers who evangelized the colonies, creating the Great Awakening. To this day England and the rest of Europe do not protect a constitutional right of free speech. Some remarks in Western Europe can cause the speaker to be imprisoned.

Feminists in Europe have exploited this lack of a right to free speech in order to criminalize statements that they call “sexist”, an indefinable term which means any comment feminists do not like. By criminalizing sexist speech, governments in Europe will scare people away from many remarks and comments that are entirely appropriate. As long as government and feminists can define what is “sexist”, much valuable speech will be censored.
...
England, 18 other nations including Germany and France signed an absurd United Nations treaty about Women that requires them to pass new laws making sexist comments a crime and outlawing “psychological violence,” which they define broadly to include statements “seriously impairing a person’s psychological integrity through coercion or threats.” This is sold to the public as part of a phony campaign against domestic violence, and politicians are apparently still too afraid to stand up to the feminists even to stop such obviously bad laws.'

Now-former CIA chief Petraeus resigns over affair

Matt · 10 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON - The CIA director Gen. David H. Petraeus said he was resigning because he had exercised "extremely poor judgment' in conducting an extra-marital affair.

In a statement to the CIA workforce, Petraeus wrote, "Yesterday afternoon, I went to the White House and asked the president to be allowed, for personal reasons, to resign from my position as D/CIA. After being married for over 37 years, I showed extremely poor judgment by engaging in an extramarital affair. Such behavior is unacceptable, both as a husband and as the leader of an organization such as ours."

"Dave's decision to step down represents the loss of one of our nation's most respected public servants," Director of National Intelligence James Clapper said in a statement, according to Reuters. "From his long, illustrious Army career to his leadership at the helm of CIA, Dave has redefined what it means to serve and sacrifice for one's country.".

Obama accepted the resignation and said the general has "made our country safer and stronger," according to the Associated Press.'

Ex-Wife's lies send a man to prison for 37 years

Broadsword · 10 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A man who spent almost four decades in prison for killing two people in the Arizona desert today pleaded no contest to two counts of second-degree murder and will go free.
...
The 77-year-old Macumber, who had no history of violence, was convicted in the 1970s in one of the most sensational murder cases in the history of Arizona. Macumber was twice sentenced to life in prison for killing Joyce Sterrenberg and Tim McKillop, both 20 years old, and leaving their bodies in the desert. In total, he has served 37 years.

On May 24, 1962, the young couple was found shot and killed next to their car in an area now near Scottsdale. The case went cold for 12 years until Macumber's wife, Carol Kempfert, went into the Maricopa County Sheriff's Office department where she worked and told her supervisors that her husband had confessed to the murders. Macumber was arrested a week later.

In 1975, Kempfert testified against her now ex-husband, again saying that he confessed.
...
In 2009, Macumber and his attorneys petitioned the Arizona Board of Executive Clemency, which in a rare move unanimously recommended his sentence be commuted, saying, "An injustice has been done in Mr. Macumber's case" and that his wife had "motive, means and opportunity to falsely pin the murders on Mr. Macumber."

Arizona Gov. Jan Brewer denied the recommendation for clemency.

In 2011, Macumber petitioned the Court for post-conviction relief and was granted an evidentiary hearing. But without the necessary evidence, prosecutors said in court today they were unable to retry the case for a third time. Now that the judge has accepted Macumber's plea, he will be released.'

14-year-old 'Modern Family' star removed from home amid abuse allegations

Matt · 10 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ariel Winter, the 14-year-old actress who portrays Alex Dunphy on TV's ABC comedy hit "Modern Family," was ordered removed from her family home yesterday based upon allegations of emotional and physical parental abuse. Court papers were filed accusing the teen's mother, Crystal Workman, of "ongoing physical abuse."

The nature of the abuse was described as slapping, hitting, pushing - plus name-calling and personal insults regarding the 14-year-old's weight.

...

It's also been reported that the older sister Shanelle was removed from her mother's home almost twenty years ago under similar abusive circumstances. Shanelle was not only removed from Crystal Workman's home, but also ended up in foster care for more than two years.

...

The mom is the one receiving her 14-year-old daughter's checks from the "Modern Family" TV show, and is also in charge of her daughter's estate earnings. By law, all child actors must have money set aside in a Coogan account which is to be saved for them until they reach adulthood. Crystal Workman has access to that account.'

Female Army officers say they sent nude photos to married general facing sex crime charges

Matt · 10 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FORT BRAGG, N.C. — Two female Army officers testified Wednesday they provided nude photos to a general facing sex crime charges.

A married captain testified that Brig. Gen. Jeffrey Sinclair repeatedly asked her to send him nude photos of herself, which she said made her uncomfortable. Eventually, she said she placated the married general by sending him downloaded pornographic photos of other women cropped so that their faces weren't visible.

The testimony came during the third day of a hearing at Fort Bragg to determine whether Sinclair will go on trial for multiple criminal charges including forcible sodomy, wrongful sexual conduct and adultery, which is a crime under the military justice system. The allegations against Sinclair involve relationships with five women other than his wife.

Sinclair served as a deputy commander of the 82nd Airborne Division in Afghanistan until he was relieved of his duties in May amid a criminal investigation and sent back to North Carolina.

On Tuesday, a second female captain testified that Sinclair, her direct superior, twice forced her to perform oral sex and threatened to kill her and her family if she told anyone. The woman had a three-year relationship with the married general at Army bases in the United States, Germany, Iraq and Afghanistan.'

SAVE E-lert: What Happened to the Presumption of Innocence?

Matt · 10 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

We're launching a new campaign this coming Monday, Nov. 12. So I thought I'd give you a heads-up. This effort will focus on ending the erosion of due process protections and restoring the presumption of innocence in rape and sexual assault cases.(1)

Over the next few weeks we will be asking you to make targeted phone calls. And we'll ask you to write your incredible emails. To prepare for this campaign, please read: How Rape Laws Remove the Presumption of Innocence.(2)

Thank you. I'll be in touch soon.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

---

(1) http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/sex-assault/civil-liberties-took-a-beating/
(2) http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/sex-assault/how-rape-laws-remove-the-presumption-of-innocence/

Violence Against Women Act – The Real War on Women

Matt · 10 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For months now we've heard about the "War on Women" that's sometimes called the "Republican War on Women." While close inspection of the claim reveals the WOW to be little more than an election-year bid to keep female voters in the Democratic fold, there is a real war on women and up until this year, it's been bi-partisan. It's called the Violence Against Women Act.

How could VAWA, long touted by the domestic violence establishment as vital to women's welfare, in fact be anti-woman? Let me count the ways.

1. When police are called to the scene of a domestic violence incident, VAWA encourages them to make an arrest whether or not they have probable cause to do so. VAWA funding goes to train police in this mandatory arrest policy, but the result is the opposite of what VAWA advocates imagine. Mandatory arrest policy actually increases a woman's chance of being injured or killed by a domestic partner. Why? In a domestic violence incident, a woman must decide whether to call the police or not. If she does, she knows her husband or boyfriend will be arrested, jailed, charged and ordered to stay away from her, their children and their property. Faced with that, many women opt out of the system, preferring to remain with their partner and try to handle the situation themselves. That increases her chances of injury at his hands. A 2007 study at Harvard found mandatory arrest policies increase a woman's chance of death by an intimate partner by almost 60%.

2. One of the leading causes of injury to women in domestic violence incidents is their own initiation of violence. She hits first and he retaliates with far greater force. Dr. Sandra Stith of Kansas State University has called it "a dramatically more important factor than anything else." Studies conducted for the Centers for Disease Control show about 70% of reciprocal DV to have been initiated by the female partner. Meanwhile, about half of non-reciprocal violence is committed by women. But VAWA is based on the political ideology that men alone commit DV. The unsurprising result is that female perpetrators find it all but impossible to get the treatment they need to stop the behavior that often results in their own injury.'

Boardroom gender quotas are dangerous, says Burberry boss Angela Ahrendts

Mastodon · 10 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Burberry boss Angela Ahrendts has dismissed the idea of quotas to boost the number of women in the boardroom as "dangerous", despite growing evidence of discrimination in the business world and the prospect of just two female chief executives in the FTSE 100 next year.

Asked if she was in favour of the imposition of quotas, Ahrendts said on Wednesday: "I'm not. I think it's dangerous … Whether it's countries or companies, it's about putting the best person in the job who can unite people and create value. A man could do this job just as well as I can."

The American, who took the helm at the British fashion brand six years ago, added that it was not an issue that she fretted about: "I don't spend a lot of time thinking about this, what with three kids, running the company and being flat out busy."
...
Pointing to the growing number of female university graduates, Ahrendts suggested it was just a matter of time before the gender balance improved.'

Is America Ready for a White, Male Secretary of State?

Mastodon · 10 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Secretary of State job requires both tenacity and restraint, both of which may be difficult for a man's unique chemical constitution. The male hormone testosterone, while responsible for such wondrous miracles as back hair and upper body strength, is also responsible for an increase in male aggression, anger, and even violence. Diplomacy is a difficult enough task without having to temper a man's natural tendency to throw chairs through windows when angered by gridlock.

Further, it's a well-known fact that men's lack of intuition and emotional intelligence has translated into a troubling inability to cry under appropriate circumstances. War, death, and destruction are horrifying realities that Secretaries of State from Madeleine Albright to Condoleezza Rice have had to face, and an insufficient emotional response to tragedy will reflect poorly on our country. Do we want our allies to think we're a bunch of callous jerks who are totally unmoved by the death of innocents?'

Halle Berry Shut Down in Custody Battle

Matt · 11 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Halle Berry just lost big in court -- a judge has ruled she cannot permanently move her 4-year-old daughter to France ... TMZ has learned.

Halle had been fighting tooth and nail with her baby daddy Gabriel Aubry to bring Nahla to Paris, where Halle wants to live with her fiance Olivier Martinez.

Halle argued the L.A. paparazzi scene made life in California too dangerous for her and her daughter -- but today the judge in the case ruled in favor of Gabriel, refusing to let Halle jet to France with their kid.'

'Circumcision Goes Horribly Wrong'

Mastodon · 11 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'EDINBURG, Texas (CN) - A doctor botched a circumcision of a 4-year-old boy so badly that the boy pleaded to "just cut it off and (he) can be a girl," the parents claim in court.

Rafael and Vanessa Deleon sued Dr. Jennifer J. Garza, of McAllen, in Hidalgo County Court. They claim they learned from specialists that Garza over-cauterized the penis to try to stop the bleeding, damaging their son's urethra and requiring reconstructive surgery to close the holes.

But after the 90-minute surgery, the Deleons claim Garza told them, "'the circumcision was successful.' She also told them that 'there was a little bleeding, but that she and her staff were able to stop it,'" according to the complaint.

Then a nurse appeared and told Garza that the boy "still had a lot of bleeding and that the bleeding did not appear to be stopping," the complaint states. Garza told that that "their son 'needed to go back into surgery in order to find out what was happening and to stop the bleeding,'" the Deleons say. They were then given a consent form, but "the consent papers were for a different patient," according to the complaint.'

Sweden: Boys fall further behind girls in school: report

Mastodon · 11 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"We are worried about these results," Christina Sandström at the agency told The Local on Thursday.

“We have known for a long time that girls have better school results than boys. What is new is that the results are increasing. There has always been a gap, but now it is bigger,” Sandström explained.

On Wednesday, Skolverket published the school results of this summer’s ninth-year students. These results showed that girls’ school results were an average of 223.8 (out of 320), whereas boys scored an average of 199.5.

The statistics also showed that more girls qualified for high school (gymnasiet) programmes than boys.

Skolverket concluded that though results are improving for most student groups, boys with a foreign background and boys with less educated parents are actually performing worse.

“I do not begrudge any success for the girls, but it would be terribly serious to lose a generation of boys and immigrants,” Karl-Petter Thorwaldsson of the Swedish Trade Union Confederation (LO) told the TT news agency.'

Great Expectations: Women Should Demand Payback for Helping President Obama

Mastodon · 11 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's time to pass the Equal Rights Amendment, a simple sentence that says it all:

Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex.

Why do we need the Equal Rights Amendment? Last year, I asked Rep. Carolyn Maloney (who was reelected this week also) this same question. Here's what she told me:

Laws can be repealed. Judicial attitudes can shift. We continue to see demonstrable cases of systemic gender discrimination -- even in this day and age, when women have come so far. Establishing the clear unambiguous language of the Equal Rights Amendment into the U.S. Constitution would have a real impact on our national consciousness. Our democracy rests on the principle of 'liberty and justice for all.' We need the ERA to ensure that this concept applies equal to women.

Congresswoman Carolyn Maloney (D-N.Y.) regularly reintroduces the Equal Rights Amendment to Congress, only to see it languish.'

NCFM Celebrates International Men’s Day with LA party and fundraising event

Matt · 11 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here. Excerpt:

'NCFM is celebrating International Men’s Day with a party in Eagle Rock, CA on Friday night, November 16, 2012 at the Fraternal Order of the Eagles in Eagle Rock. You are all invited!

It’s a celebration of International Men’s Day, one of the few days that recognizes the value of men, the event helps raises funds for the National Coalition For Men , the non-profit educational organization that addresses issues affecting men (men’s health, male domestic violence victims, sex discrimination, homelessness, fathers’ issues, etc.).'

Female principal tells student she 'looks like a porn star'

Minuteman · 12 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'An outraged US father has launched a public shame campaign after a school principal told his teenage daughter that she looked like a porn star.

Steven Werner said the comments came after his 15-year-old daughter arrived at her Michigan school in a Halloween costume which included a black skirt and knee-high black stockings with pink bows.

Mr Werner said his daughter was called into Principal Janet Jones's office because of the outfit.

"She said to my daughter, 'Honey, you look like a porn star'. My daughter said, 'What do you mean a porn star?' She goes, 'You know, a porn star. You know what those people do?' My daughter said no," he said.

Mr Werner said the principal then explained to his daughter what a porn star was and what they did for a living.'

'How to put an end to the cycle of creating defective men'

Mastodon · 12 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'YOU'D have to say it's a theme in the culture - the outrageous mistreatment of girls at Sydney University's St John's College, which almost took the life of a student there this year. The scandal that shook the Australian Defence Force Academy over sexual violations present and past, and similar problems right across the defence forces. And of course the recurring sagas involving sportsmen's behaviour towards women.

We are only just coming to grips with our tendency to create generations of defective men. That this happens in places that are the incubators of our nation's political, legal and business leaders, means it couldn't be more urgent.

Schools and university colleges have long claimed to be about making honourable men. The now laughably pompous-sounding name "Johnsmen" for the Sydney college's former residents must have had its origins in some ideal of masculinity. It doesn't square with images of students collecting their own faeces to leave lying in corridors, or setting fire to furniture, let alone violating vulnerable students. What is most concerning is that the adults in charge were for so long unwilling to intervene.'

What the 2012 Election Means for Women and for Feminism

Mastodon · 12 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The main takeaway for feminists in all this is simple: Feminism wins at the ballot box, especially if you're looking at a high voter turnout election like this one. While our opposition is loud and powerful, the reality is that we've been making our arguments for decades to the public, and it looks like the public actually agrees, even if the word "feminist" continues to be treated like a dirty word. It's not just that candidates who protect and expand women's rights won, but candidates who revealed the ugly streak of misogyny lurking under a feigned concern for "life"—such as Richard Mourdock and Todd Akin—grossed the voters out, and were voted down in elections they would have easily won if they could have restrained themselves.

I think the reason for this is two-fold and simple. First, Americans really prioritize thinking of themselves as fair people, and the issues of feminism really can be boiled down to issues of fairness. The other reason, which Obama emphasized in the second debate, is that liberal feminists have really driven home the message that when women do better, everyone does better. While there's still lingering cultural anxiety over myths such as the belief that it's better for kids to have a stay-at-home mother, by and large, people know how far women have come and how much better the lives of everyone, including men and children, are for it.'

More women have driver's licenses than men in US

Mastodon · 12 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON (AP) - Women have passed men on the nation's roads. More women than men now have driver's licenses, a reversal of a longtime gender gap behind the wheel that transportation researchers say is likely to have safety and economic implications.
...
"The changing gender demographics will have major implications on the extent and nature of vehicle demand, energy consumption, and road safety," predicted Michael Sivak, co-author of the study. Women are more likely than men to purchase smaller, safer and more fuel-efficient cars; to drive less, and to have a lower fatality rate per distance driven, he said.

Over the 15 years the study covered, the share of men ages 25 to 29 years old with driver's licenses dropped 10.6 percent. The share of women of the same age with driver's licenses declined by about half that amount, 4.7 percent.
...

There also may be economic reasons for the shift, McGuckin's research indicates. Employment of 16- to 24-year-olds as a share of all workers has declined. At the same time, the rate of young men ages 18 to 34 years old living at home has been going up and is greater than the rate of young women living at home.

It may be that unemployment and underemployment have made auto insurance unaffordable for young men, said Alan Pisarski, author of the Transportation Research Board's comprehensive "Commuting in America" reports on U.S. travel trends. "Insurance for males under 25 is just colossally expensive," he said.'

AVfM debuts new show this week

IronJohn · 12 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

A Voice for Men Radio will be adding a new show this week to its regular lineup. Starting this Wednesday night at 9:00 PM Eastern Time, "Tales from the Infrared", an entertainment analysis program from a Red Pill perspective will begin broadcasting. Any and all mediums of fiction are on the chopping block for hosts Dean Esmay and TyphonBlue. Be it television, movies, magazines, even comic books, none will slip past the lighthearted commentary to be found in each segment. For more details and weekly updates, check in in at: http://www.avoiceformen.com/

Op-Ed: Obama vs. Romney decides the issue — Women are smarter than men

Mastodon · 12 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To begin, I get that Republicans are not likely to buy this argument but some Democrats might so I'm putting it out there - women are smarter than men and their support of Barack Obama over Mitt Romney cinches it.

Now poll after poll in the States, both nationally and in the states themselves, show a big reason Barack Obama has a high likelihood of serving his country as president a second term is the support he gets from women. If women only voted, President Obama would win with electoral college numbers north of 325.

Women: intelligence to support Obama

That support of Obama shows women have a greater intelligence than us males when it comes to assessing a situation. Women are not simply reacting to the 'now', though the 'now' in the U.S. is ever-improving, but are taking into account conditions in America when Obama took office. It was a bleak and economically fragile time in the U.S., indeed, next to the Great Depression the most difficult economic times the nation has seen.'

Go Maureen!

Matt · 13 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The sun rises in the east and sets in the west... you can be sure of two things in life: death and taxes... and Maureen will always be Maureen!

Romney is president of white male America

As in other cases, to avoid the NYT log-in, copy and paste the URL:

http://www.nytimes.com/2012/11/11/opinion/sunday/dowd-romney-is-president.html

into Google.com and click the first hit. Excerpt:

'Team Romney has every reason to be shellshocked. Its candidate, after all, resoundingly won the election of the country he was wooing.

Mitt Romney is the president of white male America.

Maybe the group can retreat to a man cave in a Whiter House, with mahogany paneling, brown leather Chesterfields, a moose head over the fireplace, an elevator for the presidential limo, and one of those men's club signs on the phone that reads: "Telephone Tips: 'Just Left,' 25 cents; 'On His Way,' 50 cents; 'Not here,' $1; 'Who?' $5."'

When it comes to indulging in stereotyping, does anyone beat "Mean Maureen"? But really, if she were anything other than herself, what could we be certain of in this life? She's like a lighthouse in a storm, the North Star, or maybe a bit like old Archie Bunker: Bigoted and insufferable, but somehow lovable all the same. Well, maybe not lovable. But reliable. Predictable. Just like Archie, you can always count on Maureen to say exactly what you know she'll say next.

Australian Dept. of Health & Ageing acknowledges perinatal depression can also affect men

Minuteman · 13 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Albeit, more concerned about "cost to the economy". Link here. Excerpt:

'In the week before Postnatal Depression Awareness Week, Mr Butler congratulated the Post and Antenatal Depression Association (PANDA) on the new report, saying the entire community stood to benefit from efforts to raise awareness and provide early intervention to new parents.

“Being a new mum or dad can be the most rewarding experience of one’s life, but it can also be an enormously challenging time for many parents,” Mr Butler said.

“We’ve known for some time the emotional and human toll of post and antenatal depression but this is the first time anyone has tried to quantify that cost in terms of lost productivity from days absent from work and the cost to the health system.”

Mr Butler also noted that the new study observed both mums and dads were susceptible.

“This is a condition which we tend to associate with women but it actually affects one in twenty men as well so we need to raise awareness and break down the stigma so that all parents feel comfortable speaking up and seeking support.”'

Karen Hughes, Former Bush Adviser: If Another Republican Man Talks Rape, I'll 'Cut Out His Tongue'

Mastodon · 13 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For any Republican man considering following in the footsteps of Rep. Todd Akin (R-Mo.) or failed Indiana Senate candidate Richard Mourdock by making insensitive comments about rape, be forewarned: former George W. Bush adviser Karen Hughes will be very displeased.

In an op-ed in Politico last week offering advice to the GOP in the wake of their defeats on Tuesday -- which included Mourdock and Akin, who lost a bid for Missouri Senate -- Hughes lashed out particularly harshly against Republicans responsible for controversial remarks about rape and abortion.

"And if another Republican man says anything about rape other than it is a horrific, violent crime, I want to personally cut out his tongue," she wrote. "The college-age daughters of many of my friends voted for Obama because they were completely turned off by Neanderthal comments like the suggestion of 'legitimate rape.'"'

Why White Men Shouldn’t Be Allowed to Vote

Mastodon · 13 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That’s why I propose that we just put them out of their misery right now and declare that from this moment on, White Men Can’t Vote!

Whoah! Let me assert right here that I myself am a white male, and a middle-aged one at that. And even though I throw my lot in with the minority of my ilk — that is, I vote Democratic — I am willing to forgo my ballot and “take one for the team” if we can be removed en masse from the voting rolls.

How can I make such a blatantly outrageous, undemocratic suggestion? Let me put it thusly:

It’s unbecoming. Nobody likes a bitter, sore loser. As we white men try to stave off the inevitable influx of immigrants, minorities and uh, everybody else, we increasingly resemble a grossly over-paid aging athlete who refuses to retire gracefully, even though he’s hurting the team and impeding its future. Far better to step aside and be admired for our selflessness than to fight a losing battle till the bitter, bitter end.

It would dramatically alter the political debate. Instead of endlessly revisiting the same fights over capital gains, estate taxes, and a host of other issues pertinent mostly to white men, denying us the vote would enable the country to liberate itself from these old, hoary debates and turn its attention to the issues specifically challenging those who will have an increasingly large stake in the nation’s well-being.

We had a good run. For much of the country’s history, white men were the only group that could vote. Karma has caught up with us. It’s time to turn over the keys to the country to the next wave. As mentioned, most Republicans acknowledge that demographically speaking, time is not on their side, and for their party to survive it needs to attract women, youth, and minorities. But what’s the biggest impediment to doing this? White men! As long as this long-in-the-tooth group hangs around trying to “decide” how to appeal to others, it doesn’t stand a chance. The party needs to decisively clear out its “dead wood” and let whatever next-generation of pro-business / fewer regulations sympathizers fill its vacuum, infusing it with a new wave of energy, enthusiasm and direction.'

Police: Arizona woman runs down husband with car for not voting

Mastodon · 13 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Arizona woman, in despair at the re-election of Democratic President Barack Obama, ran down her husband with the family car in suburban Phoenix on Saturday because he failed to vote in the election, police said on Monday.

Holly Solomon, 28, was arrested after running over husband Daniel Solomon following a wild chase that left him pinned underneath the vehicle.

Daniel Solomon, 36, was in critical condition at a local hospital, but is expected to survive, Gilbert police spokesman Sergeant Jesse Sanger said.'

Guys, your Y chromosome is an evolutionary marvel

Mastodon · 13 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SAN FRANCISCO — The Y chromosome may have gotten a bad rap. Despite the claim that this male sex chromosome is mostly junk, new research suggests it's actually a lean, mean, highly evolved machine for producing the fittest males possible.

The findings, presented Friday (Nov. 9) here at the American Society of Human Genetics' annual meeting, dispute the notion that historically most men in a generation have not passed on their genes while a few lucky guys fathered hordes of children.

"Averaged over many hundreds of thousands of years, there's likely been a small skew in the number of males to females," said Melissa Wilson Sayres, a researcher at the University of California Berkeley. "There is some skew, but it's not very large."'

German opposition lawmakers propose circumcision ban for boys under 14

Matt · 13 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BERLIN - Left-wing lawmakers in Germany are threatening to oppose government efforts to keep male infant circumcision legal.

More than 50 lawmakers from three parties are proposing that parents should have to wait until their son is 14 so he can give informed consent for the procedure.

The proposal obtained by The Associated Press on Monday would radically amend a government bill that would give parents the power to decide.

The bill was prompted by a regional court ruling that circumcision could amount to criminal bodily harm. The government has enough votes to pass the bill and defeat amendments.'

What terrifies Islamists more than drones or Marines? Girls with books, that's what

Matt · 13 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Nothing scares the unholy monkey-snot out of Islamists like the Taleban more than a girl with a book. This is because they know that if girls and women learn to read and make up their own minds about the Islamists' particular version of Islam (which I would argue isn't really a version so much as a perversion), they will stop supporting Islamist men in what they are doing. When men lack the moral and personal support of women at home for a war they go to fight, by and large, they decide to stop doing it. Or as history has shown time and again, as with the Spartan mother who used to tell her son to "Return with your shield or on it!", there is nothing like a mother's encouragement to make her son go get his head blown off for king and country.

Does this particular girl deserve a Nobel Peace Prize? Much more than our current president ever did. Sign here and maybe we can see justice done for her eventually as well as stick it to the Islamists who if they had their way would see every man reading this grow his beard out, pray six times daily (or pretend to), publicly commit to a religion whether he believes in it or not, and live in fear of his life that he might do or say something that could be interpreted as "impious," a crime punishable by anything from imprisonment to death.

The right to learn is a human right, it should be equal for all people regardless of sex, ethnicity, age, etc., and also just so happens to be one of the best ways to keep the world from being taken over by bullies and idiots.

That's why Islamists fear girls with books more than every drone, Marine, soldier, sailor, and bomb we ever sent at them. The best way to stop an army of extremists hell-bent on forcing their idea of how both men and women ought to live is to keep their women from drinking the Kool-Aid. The way to do that is to teach them there is something more to life than supporting an endless war that teaches men and boys that it's OK to kill themselves in the process of trying to kill others in the name of the All-mighty, with such actions earning them a free pass into Paradise. Yeah, feminism is bad. But Islamism is a lot worse.

The End of Men? More Like Tough Times For Everyone

Mastodon · 14 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today, men are slightly more likely to be unemployed than women, while women are 6% more likely to be in management positions than men. Women dominate many of the professions poised to grow the most in the next decade, while several male-dominated industries -- notably manufacturing -- are losing jobs. And, in an economy where a college education is increasingly important, women are 46% more likely to have a bachelor's degree by the time they turn 24.

To some observers, the writing is on the wall: Women are on their way up and men are on their way out. But a more nuanced look at the evidence suggests that the gender battle may be little more than a sideshow, drawing our attention away from a massive, long-term decline for all workers -- and that what looks like good news for women might actually be bad news for everybody.
...
Rosin's notion that men are caught in cultural amber, unwilling or unable to change, partly explains a society that increasingly seems skewed towards women. However, her thesis ignores a larger problem -- an economy that has slowly eroded the position of all workers. Several factors have shielded women from the most painful symptoms of this process, but a growing body of evidence suggests that the ill effects of the job market are, increasingly, affecting both sexes.'

SAVE E-lert: Twenty-four Hours for the Presumption of Innocence

Matt · 15 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

This week is the beginning of our "What Happened to the Presumption of Innocence?" campaign. And we're starting right out of the gate with a 24-hour call to action.

Today is a Day of Action for some victim advocates, with calls and tweets asking for reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). We're not so quick to jump on that bandwagon, because VAWA is not ready to be reauthorized. It still has many provisions that strip the presumption of innocence from the accused.

See our recent press release for more details:
http://www.saveservices.org/2012/11/pr-anti-violence-law-may-dash-the-presumption-of-innocence-save-warns

Let's have our own 24 Hours of Action! For the next 24 hours*, call both your Senators and your Representative at 1-202-224-3121. You can also find your Senators' phone numbers here: http://www.senate.gov/general/contact_information/senators_cfm.cfm and your Representative's phone number here: http://www.house.gov/representatives/find/

Simply say "Don't pass VAWA until the presumption of innocence is restored!"

THIS IS IMPORTANT. I KNOW THAT WE CAN DO THIS!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

*Feel free to keep calling beyond the 24-hours.

Grandmother and son suspected in murders-suicides: 5 deaths

Matt · 15 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Toledo woman and her son allegedly conspired to kill themselves and three young children — her grandchildren and his nieces and nephew — in order to prevent the children's parents from regaining custody, police theorized on Monday.

Police found the five family members — Sandy Ford, 56; Andy Ford, 32; Paige Hayes, 10; Logan Hayes, 7; and Madalyn Hayes, 5 — dead inside of a car parked inside the family's attached garage at 5142 Harvest Lane on Monday afternoon.
...
Sergeant Heffernan said the parents were in the process of getting full custody and police believe that was the motive for the alleged murders and suicides. He said carbon monoxide poisoning was suspected as the cause of the deaths.

Dean Sparks, executive director of Lucas County Children Services, said Monday night that he did not immediately have much information about the case, but did know that the children were placed in the Fords' custody in 2009.

He did not have any indication that there were ever court proceedings involved. Not speaking specifically about this case, Mr. Sparks said that, sometimes, a parent can give permission for children to live with another relative.'

Questioning Pelosi's remaining as minority leader is sexist-- of course

Mastodon · 15 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Pelosi's wind-up was epic. For nearly 10 minutes, she praised her fellow female members and admitted that "we want more." She emptied the cliché-o-matic, talking about the need to "reignite the American dream" and work "for a healthy nation, a healthy political arena, a healthy planet." Finally, after cable had cut away, she announced that she'd "made the decision that some of you might have some interest in." She was running for leader again. Her team of women burst into cheers.

In 2010 there were real questions about whether Pelosi could lead the party. Fortunately for her, there weren't many conservative Democrats around to ask the question. Rep. Heath Shuler, a moderate Democrat from western North Carolina, challenged her on the grounds that she'd made the Democrats unelectable, and he got creamed. This year, Pelosi could point to eight Democratic gains—just 17 seats away from control of the House again. Shuler and some other Blue Dogs had been beaten or gerrymandered out of existence.
...
"Mrs. Pelosi," said Russert, "some of your colleagues privately say that your decision to stay on prohibits the party from having younger leadership. It hurts the party in the long term. What's your response?"

The women around Pelosi erupted—booing, hissing, one member snapping "discrimination!" Pelosi told Russert to ask the same question to Mitch McConnell. The women cheered.

"Excuse me!" interjected Russert, who was asking a question that was inevitably going to come up. "You, Mr. Hoyer, Mr. Clyburn, you're all over 70. Does staying on prevent younger leadership from moving forward?"

"So you're suggesting that everyone move aside?" asked Pelosi.

"No, I'm simply saying that to delay younger leadership from moving forward ..."

"Let's, for the moment, honor that as a legitimate question, even though it's very offensive. You don't realize that, I guess. The fact is that everything I have done in my, I guess, decade now of leadership, is to let younger and newer people come up. In my own personal experience, it was very important for me to elect young women. I came to Congress when my youngest, Alexandra, was in college. I knew that men who came here in their 30s had a jump on me."'

Why Do Some Feminists Get Uneasy When Women Make Progress?

Mastodon · 15 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Back in the late 1970s, as an undergraduate at Princeton, I auditioned to be the loudspeaker announcer during halftime at football games. It would be, I thought, a great gig: sitting in some box talking into a microphone, narrating the funny skits the band performed on the field. I made it to the final callback, but in the end the judges gave the slot to a guy. They told me afterward that it was just too hard to imagine a woman's voice coming out of a loudspeaker at an Ivy League stadium. That was what the 1970s and '80s were like, for women: opportunity and setback, goofy small disappointments along with important big ones. We were there, but they didn't want anybody to, you know, hear us.

I forgot about that incident for a long time, but think about it now, sometimes, reflecting how far we have come. Four of eight Ivy League presidents are female. Around the country, women make up nearly 60 percent of college and university students. The default student on campus is no longer male; she is female.

This transformation has occurred in just a few decades, and it's global, a truth powerfully evidenced by a dynamic chart created by demographer Albert Esteve and colleagues at the Centre for Demographic Studies in Barcelona. Tracking trends worldwide—and projecting into the future—the chart uses blue dots to designate countries where male college students outnumber females; and red ones to denote countries where women students outnumber male ones.'

Equal Opportunity, Unequal Interest?

Mastodon · 15 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Few would dispute the intentions of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 as it applies to sports. To prevent discrimination on the basis of sex, the law requires all institutions receiving federal funding to provide equal opportunity in athletic participation.

But a new study, based on participation data and the hypothesis that women are inherently less interested in sports than men, asserts that Title IX might be taking the wrong approach.

“A greater male predisposition for sports interest does not contradict most arguments made by Title IX proponents,” concludes the study released Wednesday evening in the online journal PLOS ONE. “Nevertheless, our results do suggest that it may be a mistake to base Title IX implementation on the assumption that males and females have, or soon will have, generally equal sports interest.”
The report counters that assumption with three sub-studies that found gender gaps of varying and often significant proportions. The sub-study most relevant to college athletics in particular examined who participated in intramural sports participation at 34 institutions (varied in size and location, and listed in the study). Only about one in four participants (or 24 percent) were female. Intramural programs, like all educational opportunities at federally funded institutions, are subject to Title IX.'

MSNBC's Todd: Pelosi Running Again Because She Didn't Want A White Male Running Dem Caucus

Mastodon · 15 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

"NBC's White House corespondent Chuck Todd Discussing Nancy Pelosi running for Minority leader again." Video here.

Teacher charged with having sexual contact with a student

Matt · 16 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A disturbing case out of Canandaigua*. A teacher is accused of having a sexual relationship with a 16-year-old student. Investigators believe the relationship lasted for several months. Officers say the most recent incident happened last weekend.

44-year-old Lisa Footer has been charged with sex abuse, forcible touching and endangering the welfare of a child.

On her teacher web page, Lisa Footer says it's her 22nd year of teaching and she's determined that it will be her best. Obviously it isn't turning out that way as she stands accused of having an inappropriate relationship with a student who attends Canandaigua Academy.

Footer is charged with three misdemeanors: sex abuse, forcible touching and endangering welfare of child. She was arraigned Tuesday night. According to police, she was having a sexual relationship with a 16-year-old male student.

Police say the incident that led to the charges occurred Saturday night in the parking lot of a local convenience store. But police also believe there may have been multiple encounters dating back to the summer and therefore they expect to bring more charges.'

---
* Hyperlink added.

'Why Do Men Cheat? Because Sexism Ain't Dead'

Mastodon · 17 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'David Petraeus' cheating was somewhat, if not entirely predictable. As Lisa Belkin points out, the Men Behaving Badly phenomenon is quite common when it comes to politics: FDR, JFK and Slick Willie Clinton are three egregious examples.

It isn't just that male politicians who sleazy, but women in general are expected to stay attractive in middle age, whereas men don't have to because they still call the shots. I hate to say this but as soon as I saw Petraeus' wife's picture I said to myself: "poor thing, a once-attractive gal, who has gained weight and looks somewhat frumpy can expect that her famous husband's eyes will wander when he comes into close contact with a younger woman."

Race/gender obsession seems limitless in today's politics

Matt · 17 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The race/gender composition obsession seems endless. I honestly think if Minnie Mouse wanted to run for office vs. Sam Rayburn, Wasserman-Shultz would endorse the mouse. Video here. (For those unfamiliar with it, EMILY's List is a PAC that supports only female Democrat party candidates who support a pro-choice abortion position.)

Can you just imagine a PAC that explicitly stated it would only support male candidates that were pro-choice for men? Can you just imagine the constant howlings about it? Would any male politician feel or indeed be as free as Wasserman-Shultz to so openly deride "the other side" because of their ethnic or genderal composition? Politicians will use any means to garner votes; divide-and-conquer-the-electorate is as old a tactic as there is. After this year's general election, indeed, nothing's changed. It's business as usual.

Pelosi Plays the Gender Card in ‘Cliff’ Negotiations

Mastodon · 17 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In announcing her plans to continue leading the Democrats in the House, Nancy Pelosi stressed this morning an unusual but critical and easily overlooked political force in resolving the fiscal cliff: gender diversity.

“As we move forward to debate our economic and fiscal challenges in the weeks and months ahead, one thing is clear — our economic agenda and choices will be viewed through the perspective and eyes of our nation’s women,” the California congresswoman said at a Wednesday news conference, flanked by other women Democratic lawmakers.

It’s a sign of how identity politics will come into play as Washington scrambles to address the economically toxic mix of tax hikes and spending cuts that are slated to begin next year. Rather than accepting a changing of the guard, Pelosi — with more than a decade of time in congressional leadership — decided to highlight how she embodies an increasingly diverse caucus.'

UK: Should Guides be just for girls?

Mastodon · 17 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The head of Girlguiding UK says that no boys should be allowed in, despite girls being allowed into the Scouts.

Since 2007, girls of all ages have been allowed to join UK Scout groups, which traditionally were only for boys.

However the Guides don't allow boys in and the new head of the organisation, Julie Bentley, says that's the way it should be.

We asked you what you thought. Here's a selection of some of the comments sent in.'

Male Circumcision Programme Facing Resistance

Mastodon · 17 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Malawi Government launched a year ago what it called “voluntary male circumcision programme” with an aim of circumcising 2.1 million males by 2016. The goal of the programme is to reduce HIV infections among sexually active males.

So far, the Malawian Ministry of Health announced that only 15,000 males have come forward and went through the knife. This number represents only 0.7% of the targeted population, which indicates that something must be wrong somewhere in the process as the programme now nears one year mark.

The ministry’s spokesperson, Henry Chimbali, points to a number of factors that contributed to the slow pace of the programme. He blames 'house-keeping' issues such as policy, scale up plan of the campaign, communication plan and human resources as the main contributing factors to the slow pace.'

'I Didn't Do It': Man Befriends Woman Whose False Rape Accusation Sent Him To Prison

Mastodon · 17 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Vid/story here. Excerpt:

'"I Didn't Do It" told the story of Jennifer Thompson and Ronald Cotton. Thompson wrongly accused Cotton of raping her in 1984, though she didn't do it on purpose. She was certain Cotton was her attacker -- and convinced two juries he was.

Cotton was sentenced to life behind bars in North Carolina in both his trial and a retrial; in the latter trial, a second victim claimed he'd raped her as well. Ronald maintained his innocence throughout.

Eleven years into his sentence, he asked for new DNA-testing technology to be used -- and was finally proven innocent and released in 1994. Investigators -- and Thompson -- were blown away by the news. She and Ronald met after his release so she could apologize, and broke down in each other's arms.'

Shedding light on male domestic violence

Mastodon · 18 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Standing nearly 6 feet tall and weighing about 230 pounds, 23-year-old Willie Wiltz may have been an imposing figure, but his mother said he was a "big boy with a big heart."

But that large frame hid something that ultimately killed him.

Wiltz was a victim of domestic violence, and a few days before Valentine's Day 2011, Wiltz, an athletic young man who enjoyed playing basketball, was gunned down as he attempted to leave his home in San Bernardino during an argument with his girlfriend, Ebony Davis.

"I didn't think it would ever come to this," said Wiltz's mother, Darlene Young of Los Angeles.

She said her son had told her about some of the incidents of abuse, but he always told his mother not to worry and that he could take care of it.

According to the Domestic Violence Research Center, exact numbers of male victims of domestic violence are difficult to obtain because of a lack or reporting, but the National Institute of Justice and the Centers for Disease Control estimates that 1.5 million women and 835,000 men are victims of domestic violence each year.'

NIAID Position Vacant: Director, Basic Science Program - Division of AIDS (Deadline 11 Dec. 2012)

Minuteman · 18 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

An opportunity that might appeal to appropriately qualified readers to try and steer NIAID towards more productive areas of research than circumcision-as-an-AIDS-preventative. Link here. Excerpt:

'DIRECTOR, Basic Sciences Program, Division of AIDS, NIAID, NIH, HHS

The National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID) is seeking an exceptional and visionary leader to be director of the Basic Sciences Program (BSP) in the Division of AIDS (DAIDS). The director is responsible for planning, implementing, and directing an extramural program of basic and applied preclinical research supported by grants and contracts to advance research on HIV pathogenesis, immunology, and the epidemiology of HIV disease, as well as drug discovery and development. The director formulates an overall scientific agenda for basic research in HIV/AIDS, recommends resource allocation among competing initiatives, and continually assesses and reorients program activities and priorities to be responsive to changing research needs or redefined policies. ...

QUALIFICATIONS:
Applicants must possess a Ph.D. or equivalent in an academic field of the health or pertinent sciences allied to health or health-related research and must have demonstrated skills in 1) working both independently and collaboratively in planning, organizing, and conducting biomedical behavioral health, or health-related research. 2) serving effectively in research program administration; and 3) effective communications and collaborations.'

Protesting Warren Farrell at University of Toronto

Kratch · 18 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Excerpt:

'Demonstrators outside a men's rights talk given by Warren Farrell* at the University of Toronto clash briefly with police and campus security, resulting in one arrest.
...
A talk inside the J.J.R MacLeod building by Warren Farrell sponsored by UofT campus group "Men's Issues Awareness at the University of Toronto (MIAUT)" brought out protestors in front of the Medical Science Building.

The Ryersonian live-blogged the talk inside while Toronto Police kept 100+ people company outside in the entranceway in front of the Medical Science Building.'

---
* Link added.

F&F: Massachusetts Judge Errs on Alimony and Child Support

Matt · 18 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Massachusetts Appeals Court recently vacated alimony and child support components of a judgment because the Probate and Family Court judge made a number of errors. The case should warrant reduced alimony and child support obligations in other cases with similar facts.

In Zeghibe v. Zeghibe, Mass. App. Docket No. 11-P-860, (Oct. 11, 2012), a family court judge awarded a divorced father physical custody of one of his two children and ordered him to pay alimony in the amount of $405 a week. The judge also ordered the wife to pay him child support in the amount of $170 a week.
...
The Appeals Court noted that "[u]pon divorce, it is not uncommon, and often reasonable or necessary, for a party to use (or to change the form of) assets assigned to him or her for various purposes in starting anew . . . . [i]n this case, we think it is strained to characterize the husband's actions as resulting in a 'reward' to him." Accordingly, the Appeals Court set aside the modification and sent the case back to the Probate and Family Court for new calculations.'

NYTimes: Muscular Body Image Lures Boys Into Gym, and Obsession

Matt · 20 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Because it's in the NYTimes, use Google.com to see it. Paste the URL:

http://www.nytimes.com/2012/11/19/health/teenage-boys-worried-about-body-image-take-risks.html

into the search box and click "Google Search", then click the first hit. Excerpt:

'It is not just girls these days who are consumed by an unattainable body image.
...
Pediatricians are starting to sound alarm bells about boys who take unhealthy measures to try to achieve Charles Atlas bodies that only genetics can truly confer. Whether it is long hours in the gym, allowances blown on expensive supplements or even risky experiments with illegal steroids, the price American boys are willing to pay for the perfect body appears to be on the rise.
...
“There has been a striking change in attitudes toward male body image in the last 30 years,” said Dr. Harrison Pope, a psychiatry professor at Harvard who studies bodybuilding culture and was not involved in the study. The portrayal of men as fat-free and chiseled “is dramatically more prevalent in society than it was a generation ago,” he said.
...
Paradoxically, the emphasis on weight lifting among adolescents may be depleting the number of contestants in teenage bodybuilding meets, because many children cannot pass a drug test. “You used to get a lot of teenage bodybuilders, but you don’t get them as much anymore,” said Andrew Bostinto, president of the National Gym Association. “A lot of these kids are juiced, so they’re not entering natural shows.”'

International Men's Day: Nov. 19, 2012

Matt · 20 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From Marc A.:

Today is International Men's Day, a day to celebrate the men and boys in our lives and men's contributions to humanity, civilization, family, & child care, and to address men's issues and equal rights.

International Men's Day was first inaugurated in 1999 in Trinidad and Tobago, and today is celebrated in over 60 nations and on every continent. The objectives of IMD include focusing on men's and boys' health, improving gender relations, promoting gender equality, and highlighting positive male role models. It is an occasion to highlight discrimination against men and boys and to celebrate their achievements and contributions, in particular for their contributions to community, family, marriage, and child care. Speaking on behalf of UNESCO, Director of Women and Culture of Peace Ingeborg Breines said of IMD, "This is an excellent idea and would give some gender balance." http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/International_Men's_Day

The National Coalition For Men celebrated International Men's Day by hosting a party in Eagle Rock at the Fraternal Order of the Eagles that included two bands - an all-female Jimi Hendrix tribute band called Foxey Lady, and a local Eagle Rock band called Buck Shot Bill that has musicians from TMZ. The event was a big success and will be repeated every year.
http://eaglerock.patch.com/articles/international-men-s-day-festivities-in-eagle-rock-friday

Progress is happening and we are overcoming the ignorance, reactionism, hate, sexism, and misandry of those that would obstruct progress. Both the UN and the European Court of Human Rights have chastised nations (Israel and Germany, respectively) for discriminating against dads. German and surrounding nations are forming commissions on men. We're seeing major activism throughout the world, especially in India, where only men can be prosecuted for adultery and where the government only protects abused women but not men. The Nordic nations are increasingly opposing infant male circumcision and supporting laws to protect both girls and boys. Los Angeles County has a task force on male victims of domestic violence and is also working with San Diego County on the issues. Activism is increasing all over the world. Yes, there will be always reactionism and hate, but we are OVERCOMING IT!

Happy International Day to everyone! This article in the Business Insider provides an excellent discussion about International Men's Day.

Peace Corps Observes International Men’s Day

Minuteman · 20 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'In much of the developing world, men retain significant authority over many aspects of family and community life. Without men, we don’t have healthy communities. Men frequently control decisions about access to resources that either limit – or expand – access to education, health and social support services for women and girls. Men may – or may not – adopt and model behaviors that safeguard their own health and the health of their partners. Peace Corps employs several strategies that engage men and boys to reduce gender inequalities and promote the health and well-being of women, men, and children.
...
These male-focused activities are typically complemented by programs directly focused on women and girls. Hundreds of Volunteers in dozens of countries regularly organize “Girls Leading Our World” (GLOW) camps and similar activities that empower adolescent and young adult females to be conscious of and prepared to respond to male behaviors that may compromise their health and wellbeing.'

SAVE: Thank You for a Year Well Done!

Matt · 21 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

As we celebrate the season of giving thanks we turn to you our committed e-lert activists, hardworking volunteers, dedicated staff, and generous donors to say that we couldn't do this without you. Every one of our advances is due to your commitment to our success. Thank you!

Looking for a good movie to catch this holiday season? Next Monday is the premiere of The Central Park Five, the story of the five young men who were wrongfully convicted for the 1989 rape of a jogger in Central Park. Check your theater for showtimes. You can watch the trailer here.

Thanks again for everything, from the bottom of my heart.

Visit http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp to join SAVE's Domestic Violence Legislative Project (the DVLP).

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

'Most marriages break down over mundane household chores'

Matt · 21 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The article title says it's due to chores; but the article says it's differences around how money is spent. Article here. Excerpt:

'Most marriages break down over arguments about who does mundane household chores or pays the bills rather than due to infidelity, according to a leading law firm.

According to analysis of divorce cases by Gateley, a UK law firm, seven in ten marriages fall apart because couples fail to reach an agreement on decisions relating to the home, such as how monthly finances are arranged, where couples live or how household responsibilities are carved up.

Only one in five marriages ends because of infidelity, the law firm said.
...
Of the seven in ten marriages that fail because people can not agree on simple domestic issues, by far the most common cause is lack of agreement over finances. One in eight of these marriages disintegrate because couples are unable to agree on where to settle down.'

Obama's 'Constituency Groups' Checklist Offers No Options for Whites or Men

Matt · 21 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fresh off his reelection, President Barack Obama is asking his supporters to complete a survey that asks the people being polled to check off which "constituency groups" they identify with – there are 22 groups listed but not one for "whites" or "men."

The post-election survey, distributed through www.barackobama.com to "take this organization forward," includes the question, "Which constituency groups do you identify yourself with? Select all that apply." It then lists 22 groups.

But whites and men are not on the list – women are, as are African Americans, Arab-Americans, Latinos and LGBT (lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender).'

Sweden: woman alleged to have used skeleton for sex acts

Minuteman · 21 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A Swedish woman has been charged with possession of human skulls and bones, which the prosecution claimed she used for sexual purposes.

The 37 year-old woman kept at least six skulls, one spine and "a large number of other bones" in her Gothenburg apartment, according to the prosecution's charge sheet.

It said she had used the human body parts "for various sexual activities". The evidence included two CDs entitled "My necrophilia" and "My first experience".
...
"I want my man like he is, whether he is dead or alive. He allows me to find sexual happiness on the side," added the woman, who has said she is in a relationship.

The access code to a morgue was also found in the apartment, the paper said, citing a press conference held by the prosecutor on Tuesday.'

India: Men seek national commission to protect their rights

Mastodon · 21 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When a woman is harassed, a number of NGOs and the National Commission for Women arrive to provide support. But a similar system is not available for harassed men, who also consider it unmanly to join any movement fighting for men's rights and relate the problem too late.

Considering that the issues concerning men are being neglected by the government, city-based social activists and NGOs are seeking a National Commission for Men and are observing the International Men's Day on Monday.
...
The figures available for Karnataka are no different. In the age group of 30-44, there were 2,903 men who ended their lives, while 1,252 women in the same age group committed suicide. But the sad part is that the men committing suicide and the reasons behind them are not highlighted, he said. Mr Naveen Rolands, Family Counsellor with Children's Rights Initiative for Shared Parenting (CRISP), says, "There are laws to protect harassed women, but there is nothing to protect men. Faced with trauma, many lose their jobs and social status. Some of them go to the extreme of committing suicide. The worst sufferers are the children of such families."'

Men deserve a day, too

Mastodon · 21 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oh! Such a day exists?' That was the response of most people, when told about 'International Men's Day' that has been celebrated, though in a far more low key fashion than Women's Day, for over a decade.

There is a lot of talk about gender equality and justice but when it comes to assigning a day to thank the contributions made by the gentlemen, no one seems to care. TV channels, magazines and youth groups come out in full vigour to celebrate Women's Day that falls on March 8, however, the day for men is unknown to even men.

"It is that phase of the world where people should realise that men are a tortured lot too, especially in the name of the so called 'women's rights'," says social activist Baby Prasad, who has been championing men's rights for the past six years. According to him, those who are keen to celebrate women's day should also make it a point to acknowledge the contributions of the men, who pretend to be strong but are in actuality having a tough time.

The theme of International Men's Day 2012 is 'Helping Men and Boys Live Longer, Happier and Healthier Lives.' The debates mostly are about men getting sidelined in different ways. But what is the right approach?'

Zambia: Women Should Encourage Their Partners (to get circumcised)

Mastodon · 21 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHIEF Mumena of the Kaonde people has called on women to encourage their partners to seek male circumcision services.

Speaking at a voluntary medical male circumcision (VMMC) stakeholders meeting held recently at Hotel Inter-Continental in Lusaka, the traditional leader called for an increase in male circumcision communication.

"Male circumcision is about survival. Women should realise that male circumcision helps prevent cervical cancer, thus women should demand for their partners to get circumcised," she said.'

Man in prison for false rape claim being freed

Mastodon · 21 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Johnathan Montgomery spent the past four years in a Virginia state prison saying the same thing a lot of inmates do: He was innocent.

Convicted in 2008 of molesting a 10-year-old girl outside her grandmother's Hampton home when he was 14, he insisted the alleged 2000 assault never happened. Turns out, he was telling the truth.

After the woman recently recanted her story, Virginia Gov. Bob McDonnell on Tuesday issued a conditional pardon to Montgomery, allowing him to be freed in time for Thanksgiving at his father's home in Vale, N.C.

"The truth sets you free," Montgomery, now 26, said Tuesday night, shortly after being released from the Greensville Correctional Center in Jarrat, Va., where reporters awaited him.

It's not exactly clear why the woman, Elizabeth Paige Coast, recanted her story, but she was working as a clerk for the Hampton, Va., police department at the time.'

Misandry alive and well

Mastodon · 21 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm caught short by the return of the word "misogynist", thanks to Australian PM Julia Gillard tagging the term on Opposition Leader Tony Abbott. I'd thought it was a quaint old word replaced in common usage 40 years ago by "male chauvinist pig".

After all, why use one word when we can waste three?

It's true the two terms are not strict synonyms, but male chauvinist pig devoured the other's usage because its meaning was very similar, it was stroppier, and it was part of the enraged language of early Women's Lib. To its more extreme first users, male chauvinist pig was a satisfying phrase, made entirely from swear words.

And it rolled redolently from the tongue with an oink-oink here, and a P plosive there.

Pig's plosive, it may be noted, is a consonant which can't be uttered without ejecting a puff of hot air.

Perhaps Ms Gillard thought MCP was no longer strong enough for Mr Abbott. But nor was he merely a sexist. Dear me no, sexists are piffle beside Mr Abbott. This fellow, said Ms Gillard, was the full monty - an old fashioned, satanic, misogynist.'

Obscene gesture photo at Arlington Cemetery stirs anger

Mastodon · 21 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two young Massachusetts women have been placed on unpaid leave from their jobs after posting a photo on Facebook showing one of them at the Tomb of the Unknowns at Arlington National Cemetery giving the finger beside a sign calling for silence and respect.

Lindsey Stone, 30, and Jamie Schuh, who took the photo, were placed on unpaid leave by a non-profit, LIFE Inc., based in Hyannis, Mass., which helps adults with special needs, the Cape Cod Time reported on Wednesday.

The chief financial officer of the told the Times that the company is "appalled."

A Fire Lindsey Stone page has gotten more than 14,000 "likes."'

3 Ways We Need to Stop Abusing the Men in Our Lives

Mastodon · 21 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A holiday weekend is coming up, which means that a lot of women will be spending time with their significant others. In the interest of keeping relationships intact during this time of togetherness, I thought about the ways we, as women, take a few too many liberties with our men and think it's okay.

I mention this because day to day female interactions stresses being polite and positive, even if what a situation really calls for is brutal honesty. Consider this post an open call for change in lieu of creating awkward moment during brunch.'

Women vs. Men: How Females Are Smarter, Tougher, Luckier

Mastodon · 21 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Slideshow here.

'We're not saying we're better -- or even stronger -- than our male counterparts, but we do have certain advantages.'

F&F: Activists Are Successful: Raised Their Voices in 2012

Matt · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Throughout this year, you and other activists have raised your voice with Fathers and Families. This Thanksgiving, we give thanks for your work and your activism, and the example you are setting for your children.

Together we have:

- Secured a place for our founder, Ned Holstein, on Governor Deval Patrick's Working Group on Child-Centered Family Law;
- Placed a new limit on California spousal support;
- Helped Ohio child support obligors by maintaining their driver's licenses;
- Continued our fight to protect our American soldiers' custody in deployment;'

Women recruited to join fight against prostate cancer

Matt · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Former Pittsburgh Steelers player Robin Cole knows firsthand that early detection of prostate cancer saves men's lives. It saved his. That's why he's working to raise awareness among men in an unusual way -- by recruiting women to battle the disease.

Mr. Cole, 57, of Nottingham, Washington County, underwent laparoscopic surgery in 2004 for prostate cancer, which claimed the life of his 49-year-old father, Obediah Cole, in 1979. Since then, Mr. Cole and five of his brothers have been diagnosed with the cancer but early enough to prevent complications. One brother, William, did die from other cancers.

Mr. Cole helped to found the Obediah Cole Foundation for Prostate Cancer that's joining with the Allegheny County Health Department to form a local chapter of Women Against Prostate Cancer. The goal is to recruit women to raise awareness and help convince men to get early screening for the cancer.'

Economic Discrimination Most Detrimental for Gay and Bisexual Men

Matt · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Bisexual and gay men are at risk of discrimination and prejudice because of their sexual orientation. This extends from social settings and reaches across nearly every domain, including academic, professional, and in areas related to housing, medical care, and legal matters. Additionally, these men may be more vulnerable to aggression and harassment. It has been established that increased prejudice and discrimination can have significant mental health ramifications. In the gay and bisexual male population, the perception of prejudice and the reality of discrimination have worked together to create an elevated presence of psychological issues.

Although the existing research shows a link between sexual orientation prejudice and poor mental health outcomes, Kristi E. Gamarel of the Center for HIV/AIDS Educational Studies & Training at City University of New York wanted to see if other factors mediated or moderated that effect. In a recent study, Gamarel interviewed 294 gay and bisexual men and asked them what types of discrimination they had experienced in the previous 12 months. She then assessed how each type of discrimination and perception of discrimination influenced depressive and anxious symptoms in the men.'

Uniting the Next Generation of Parents Against Circumcision

Matt · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a nineteen-year-old woman, I only have one friend who is already a parent. She is an incredible mother to her young daughter, whose sex protected her from the circumcision debate. The rest of my peers are college-aged adults who spend an appropriately smaller amount of their free time than I do pondering infant welfare and debating a common practice that was probably performed on themselves or on their brothers. Yet in a few years, these people and I will become the newest generation of parents in America.
...
Before becoming an intactivist, I had discussed circumcision with a few friends who were proudly intact, and even after hearing their stories, I pathetically announced, “Well, I’m Jewish. My sons are going to be circumcised. It’s a big cultural thing.” Never mind that my personal relationship to Judaism is religiously lax and that I wear piercings, dyed hair, and makeup. My opinion was unequivocal: When it came to the permanent alteration of my hypothetical children’s genitals, no decision-making process need occur on account of my ethnicity.

It wasn’t until I saw a YouTube video about circumcision from a young woman who was pregnant with twin boys that I understood the disturbing nature of circumcision. A few hours of research on the Internet turned my formerly cavalier attitude about the procedure into a passionate quest to study and defeat it. Spreading knowledge about circumcision to people of all backgrounds is beneficial to our pro-cutting society, but my age group is a particularly important audience for this information because we are the next generation of parents who will be deciding whether to circumcise our sons. So when I realized how urgent I felt about spreading this message to my peers, I considered which pieces of information made me receptive to intactivism so that I could propagate them effectively. The following outlines a small portion of what most strongly influenced my understanding of circumcision as a violation of human rights.'

NOW Foundation Files Amicus Brief in Domestic Violence Case

Mastodon · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Nov. 20, the National Organization for Women (NOW) Foundation filed a friend-of-the-court brief on behalf of 10 women's rights and anti-violence organizations in the case of Khawam v. Wolfe, in the District of Columbia Court of Appeals. The brief supports reversal of an unprecedented award of $350,000 in attorneys' fees against a woman who accused her ex-husband of domestic violence. The brief argues that such an extraordinary award may chill protective mothers from raising allegations of domestic violence in custody disputes for fear of retaliation should their claims ultimately be found unproven.

After Khawam sought a protective order against Wolfe, citing emotional and physical abuse, Wolfe sought custody of their young child. Khawam's ability to introduce evidence of domestic violence was sharply limited by the courts, and her truncated testimony was ruled not credible, leading to Wolfe being awarded sole custody of their son. Additionally, the judge expressly premised the attorneys' fee award on Khawam's supposedly "unsupported" domestic violence allegations.

...

NOW Foundation President Terry O'Neill states: "This case is emblematic of the continuing bias in family courts against women, discrediting their testimony of domestic violence, ignoring the potential for continuing abuse of children placed in the custody of abusers and financially punishing the protective parent. This judicial bias is all too often reinforced by biased psychological evaluators, who frequently view conflict as caused equally by both parties. That is a dangerously false equivalence in cases of intimate partner violence."

Fathers rights group opposes presence of activist judge on bench

Mastodon · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What is most troubling with Judge Mawla is that he did pro bono work at WAFA House, which stands for Women Against Family Abuse. It is there that he helped abused women file restraining orders, find shelter and receive job training and financial assistance. Given that domestic violence allegations seem to exist mostly in divorce and custody related matters, Mawla made his fortune off of women making domestic violence allegations against men. He has a built-in gender bias against men and should not be sitting in judgment in Family Court matters.
...
Judge Mawla has incarcerated John Waldorf for owing alimony arrearages. However, it was Mawla who made the insane order that Waldorf pay over $8,000 per month in alimony and child support at the time of Waldorf's divorce. Or, in other words, Waldorf was ordered by Mawla to pay almost $100,000 in alimony.

According to the divorce transcripts and judgment of divorce Mawla told Waldorf he wasn't making enough money and doubled his alimony. This goes against the law in New Jersey. Waldorf presented 10 years of federal tax returns showing that his best year ever was $147,000 gross salary. Subtracting federal and state income taxes and social security FICA tax, Waldorf's net income is less than $100,000--that is if he made $147,000 every year. Upon review of 10 years of tax returns, Waldorf has never made that amount and has always made less. Waldorf is paying over 100% of his income. And, now he's in jail and his employer will not hold his job much longer.'

EU wants direct action to get women into boardrooms

Mastodon · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BRUSSELS, Nov 12 (Reuters) - The European Commission wants to make companies favour female non-executive board candidates where they are equally qualified so as to raise the proportion of women in boardrooms to 40 percent, EU sources said on Tuesday.

One source, who declined to be named, said the commission plan did not set a binding EU quota for all member states but rather set an "objective" of having 40 percent women by 2020 - suggesting that an earlier plan for a strict 2020 deadline had been dropped.

But another EU source, also speaking on condition of anonymity, said the preference rule was "tied to the legally binding objective of 40 percent by 2020, which means that if by 2020 companies have not reached 40 percent and have not been appointing women instead of men, then they will also face sanctions".'

UK: Bias against men and overweight women found in HR

Mastodon · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than half of HR professionals are biased against overweight women, while nearly two fifths are biased against men, according to a survey conducted exclusively for People Management.

Special bias tests were taken by 122 HR professionals to measure their unconscious prejudices in a range of common areas such as age, gender, weight and disability. The tests, designed by specialist provider Hogrefe Implicity, revealed that almost 40 per cent of those surveyed showed a preference for one gender (overwhelmingly, they were in favour of women).

The tests, which assess unwitting associations of gender and competence, found that men were the losers with 37 per cent of respondents revealing a bias against them. Yet only 1 per cent showed a prejudice against women.

However, when asked about overweight women, 51 per cent of respondents revealed a bias against them at a level “likely or very likely” to affect their behaviour. Yet only 4 per cent showed a bias against “slimmer women”.

The strength of men’s prejudice against other men was surprising, with 15.6 per cent of men showing an anti-male bias compared to just 0.5 per cent of women showing an anti-female stance.'

India: 'Boys boo helpline, ask what if girls harass them'

Mastodon · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LUCKNOW: The first objection to Women Powerline 1090, UP Police's helpline for women to curb eve-teasing and telephonic harassment came for a quarter that was as obvious as unexpected-boys, who cried gender bias.

"Do you have any service for boys who face similar harassment at the hands of the girls," a boy shot the question at a woman operator at the call centre on the opening day on Thursday leaving her puzzled, a source told TOI. The trained reply from the call operator was that the service was meant strictly for women in the state.

Another male caller, who was probably aware of the basic surveillance methodology, went a step ahead to tell the operator, "Will the police send a girl to jail if it is proved that the said call was being made by herself," yet again leaving the women call operator perplexed, till a senior official of the centre pitched in and tried to convince the boy that though his concern was genuine the service was meant only for women.'

New baseball field sparks Title IX dispute

Mastodon · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The opening of a new multi-million dollar baseball field in Sitka earlier this fall is polarizing the community in an unexpected way: Can or should it be used for softball, too?

Gender equity in public education – including activities like sports – is governed by a federal statute known as Title IX.

...

“This whole issue, it’s kind of petty. Where we’ve got one team saying, Hey, your new field is better than my new field, so we want your new field. Then we get Title IX thrown at us, to be displaced off of our field and get the girls on.”

Displacing the boys is at the heart of the argument for most parents who spoke on behalf of the baseball team during the two-hour work session. In establishing equity, Title IX should not disadvantage one gender to create opportunity for the other.'

'Why Women Make Better Traders Than Men'

Mastodon · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The release listed five possible reasons why women generally do better at financial spread betting, those being:

- Men hate to be wrong and take longer to admit that they have made an error;
- Women are better in a crisis and less emotional because, contrary to popular belief, female traders are more disciplined and less likely to panic;
- Women can more easily say no and sometimes the best trades are the ones you do not make;
- Women read the manual, stick to a strategy and question things that they are uncertain of; and,
- finally, women are measured as opposed to jumping in head first - which men are apparently prone to doing.'

Conference Helps Women Prepare for More Secure Future

Mastodon · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Saturday, Nov. 10, AARP Connecticut sponsored a half-day conference for Boomer-age women on "Living Longer, Living Smarter and Reinventing Yourself" at the Pond House Caf at Elizabeth Park in West Hartford. The conference, attended by more than 150 women, featured a keynote address by well-known Connecticut TV broadcast personality, Diane Smith, and a moderated panel discussion with professional experts and the women who have lived it on topics including, Adult Education, Health and Wellness, Entrepreneurialism, Finances, and more.

The conference was sponsored by AARP Connecticut and Decide.Create.Share. - an AARP initiative dedicated to increasing awareness among women about the depth and breadth of long-term care and the benefits of life-span planning. Informed by research, the initiative's resources engage women as leaders with their families, informal networks, and communities to learn about long-term care, actively plan for a secure future and share what they learn with others.'

Women in Combat: How Should it be Done?

Mastodon · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The first two women to begin one of the Marine Corps toughest combat courses washed out within a week this fall. The Corps had temporarily lifted the restriction on women attending its Infantry Officer Course—one of the toughest schools in the U.S. military—in a nod toward greater equality through its ranks.

After both failed to make it beyond one week, what's next for female Leathernecks, or women in other services,who want to work in combat units?

...

About a quarter of the men who begin this sought-after course wash out before graduating.

Unlike other schools the Marine Corps offers for both male and female candidates, the first women to enter IOC were held to the same physical standards as their male counterparts.'

House and Senate Should Reauthorize VAWA Before 2013

Mastodon · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now that the election is over, the ruthless political ads have stopped, and the majority of Facebook newsfeeds have gone back to descriptions of what we had for lunch that day, it's time to get back to reality. It is amazing how fired up people can get over politics, but after the big day, we lose that passion. No matter how exhausted you may feel, civic duty does not end at the polling booth. Regardless of your political affiliation, we all have either known someone or been the victim of domestic violence ourselves. It is a societal disease that permeates through class, age, religion, gender, race, culture, education level and sexual orientation.

Here are some sobering facts: 1 in 4 women have been beaten or raped by a partner during adulthood. Every day, 3 women are killed by a current or former intimate partner. These statistics point out horrific facts about American society and what we tolerate. Domestic violence is one of the most chronically under-reported crimes. While men can also be victims, women are disproportionately affected. After the smoke clears, life isn't about donkeys and elephants. It is about real, human lives.'

Turning Brass Into Gold

Matt · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Maureen Dowd does if nothing else speak her mind. In this case, probably not in typical feminist party line, but she's got enough chits collected where she can stray from time to time without losing her club card. Article here. As always with the NYT, use Google to get around the login box. The URL is:

http://www.nytimes.com/2012/11/21/opinion/dowd-turning-brass-into-gold.html

Excerpt:

'As The Times's Scott Shane writes: "The major players have hired high-profile, high-priced representatives to manage the fallout, watch for legal trouble, police the press and massage damaged reputations."

And, no doubt, pave the way for future book deals, cushy jobs and TV apologias in honeyed light with Diane Sawyer and Barbara Walters.

The tears and lip gloss started flowing Tuesday at a press conference at the Ritz-Carlton here featuring a distraught twin, a befuddled press corps and Gloria Allred, the feminist avenger last seen tormenting Herman Cain over sexual harassment charges.

...

The military might want to have its future stars read Jane Austen as well as Grant and Rommel. "Pride and Prejudice" is full of warnings about the dangers of young ladies with exuberant, flirtatious, "unguarded and imprudent" manners visiting military regiments and preening in "all the glories of the camp."'

Obamacare Funding Anti-Male Sex Education

Mastodon · 22 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The lessons also teach students how to “avert pregnancy and STDs in situations ranging from drinking and going for a ride with one’s boyfriend, to being alone at your boyfriend’s house in the absence of parents for several hours, and when your ‘boyfriend begins to kiss you and tries to take off your clothes.’”

...

According to LifeNews, the homepage of Planned Parenthood of Southeastern Virginia promotes “Man up Monday” with “an image of a pair of men’s boxer underwear with a huge fishhook protruding from the fly, proclaiming, ‘Hook up this weekend? Make sure you didn’t catch anything.’”

After clicking on the link, “one sees a similar pair of underwear—this time with flames flashing from the fly—with the caption: ‘Hot weekend? Get checked for HIV and STDs.’

Also: Planned Parenthood Introduces Man Up Mondays: http://www.ppsev.org/

British School Bans 13 Year Old Boy from Movember

Matt · 23 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Movember marks the month when men have been encouraged to grow moustaches in support of fighting prostate cancer and raising awareness of male mental health issues. Many men are taking part of this endeavor and putting the razors down.

A 13 year old boy in Britain also wanted to take part and grow a moustache. However his school has banned him from partaking in it because it is not an “inclusive” activity.

Gus Hooker began shaving since he was 9 years old and decided to participate in Movember by growing a moustache and raising money for Prostate Cancer UK by joining men (and boys) around the world growing facial hair for Movember, the BBC reports.'

Project MALES Receives Grant to Focus on Male Student Success

Matt · 23 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'AUSTIN, Texas — The Greater Texas Foundation (GTF) has awarded Project MALES a grant for $335,314 to support Hispanic and African American male student success in college enrollment and degree attainment. Project MALES is an initiative within the Division of Diversity and Community Engagement at The University of Texas at Austin.

The grant will be awarded over a three-year period starting in summer 2013 to support the Texas Higher Education Consortium for Male Student Success, an ambitious statewide initiative that will align existing programs that target underrepresented male students in higher education and stimulates new initiatives within Texas colleges and universities.

“Data on educational attainment show that Hispanic and African American male students are not faring as well as their peers in college matriculation and graduation rates,” said Victor Sáenz, assistant professor of education and Project MALES director. “With the support of GTF, the consortium members will collaborate, share best practices, and leverage their resources and expertise to support male student success at their respective campuses across the state.”'

Anti-Male Caps in Math and Science

Matt · 23 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists who want to limit opportunities for men and boys have long abused Title IX when it comes to college sports. Now we can expect the same assault against men who are interested in math and science. Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 requires that schools and colleges receiving federal funding not discriminate “on the basis of sex.” Radical feminists have used this law to abolish hundreds of men’s sports teams, including 500 wrestling teams.

The Obama Administration has announced a new set of policies that would apply Title IX to science, technology, engineering, and math courses. Just as enforcement of Title IX has caused gender quotas on school sports teams, increased enforcement in math and science education will bring us artificial enrollment limits on men. Legal precedents have made it very difficult for school sports teams to comply with Title IX without imposing gender quotas, and it’s unlikely that math and science education will be different.'

Women at Wilson College of Chambersburg protest proposal to allow men

Mastodon · 24 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A committee was formed earlier this calendar year to address Wilson College's financial struggle and find ways to make the college financially sustainable in the future. At an open presentation Nov. 1, the Commission on Shaping the Future of Wilson College made several recommendations, including the co-ed option, for increasing enrollment from 700 this fall to 1,500 by 2020 and easing the budget deficit.

The commission gave its final recommendations to President Barbara Mistick Monday. She must hand over her own recommendations by Dec. 1 to Wilson's board of trustees, which will make the final decision. Until then, students are doing what they can to sway decisions.

"We want Wilson to keep that 'it' factor of being an all-women's college because there aren't that many left in the United States. We don't just want to become another mediocre co-ed situation," said Janelle Wills, president of Wilson College Government Association.

While men are already permitted in the adult degree and teacher intern programs, Wills believes incorporating them in every aspect of campus life would significantly change culture and traditions.
...
Some students are also concerned that some of the posters are communicating the wrong message. One student referred to a poster that read "Women," but with "men" crossed out, and said she thought it was sexist. Another well-known poster referred to Mistick as a "mistake."

"The sign about the president, that's drawing attention away from the real issue," Grissinger said.'

UK: Woman jailed for false rape claim against innocent employer

Mastodon · 24 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Scorned woman Tina Greenland plotted revenge for her one night of passion with the man she worked for.

The Folkestone mother-of-three flew into a fury after she felt rejected when Nicholas Mouna made it clear he did not want a relationship.

So the vengeful carer of Mr Mouna's child phoned the police and claimed she had been raped after her drink had been spiked.

Detectives arrested insurance broker Mr Mouna, but then examined messages between the two... and realised Greenland's texts betrayed her vicious lies.

Senior officers realised immediately the innocent Mr Mouna had been the victim of false allegations and, although he was never charged, he was suspended and then lost his job.

The 49-year-old, of Newbury Close, carried on her lying in the witness box – but her account was rejected by the jury.'

'The war on men'

Mastodon · 24 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Believe it or not, modern women want to get married. Trouble is, men don't.

The so-called dearth of good men (read: marriageable men) has been a hot subject in the media as of late. Much of the coverage has been in response to the fact that for the first time in history, women have become the majority of the U.S. workforce. They're also getting most of the college degrees. The problem? This new phenomenon has changed the dance between men and women.

As the author of three books on the American family and its intersection with pop culture, I've spent thirteen years examining social agendas as they pertain to sex, parenting, and gender roles. During this time, I've spoken with hundreds, if not thousands, of men and women. And in doing so, I've accidentally stumbled upon a subculture of men who've told me, in no uncertain terms, that they're never getting married. When I ask them why, the answer is always the same.

Women aren't women anymore.
...
In a nutshell, women are angry. They're also defensive, though often unknowingly. That's because they've been raised to think of men as the enemy. Armed with this new attitude, women pushed men off their pedestal (women had their own pedestal, but feminists convinced them otherwise) and climbed up to take what they were taught to believe was rightfully theirs.
...

It is precisely this dynamic – women good/men bad – that has destroyed the relationship between the sexes. Yet somehow, men are still to blame when love goes awry. Heck, men have been to blame since feminists first took to the streets in the 1970s.

But what if the dearth of good men, and ongoing battle of the sexes, is – hold on to your seats – women's fault?'

Woman Charged With Stabbing Brother With Fork At Thanksgiving Dinner

Matt · 24 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ANNAPOLIS, Md. (WJZ)— An Annapolis woman is behind bars, charged with stabbing a relative during Thanksgiving dinner.

It happened Thursday at around 9:30 p.m. in the 1100- block Madison Street.

Police say 27-year-old Shenika Allsup stabbed her half brother, 23-year-old Deonte Wallace, in the neck with a serving fork after the two got into a heated argument at the table.
...
Allsup is charged with first-degree assault, second-degree assault and reckless endangerment.

She is being held at the Jennifer Road Detention Center on $1,000,000 bond.'

Casey Anthony detectives overlooked Google search for suffocation made from home computer

Mastodon · 26 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ORLANDO, Fla. — The Florida sheriff's office that investigated the disappearance of Casey Anthony's 2-year-old daughter overlooked evidence that someone in their home did a Google search for "fool-proof" suffocation methods on the day the girl was last seen alive.

Orange County sheriff's Capt. Angelo Nieves said Sunday that the office's computer investigator missed the June 16, 2008, search. The agency's admission was first reported by Orlando television station WKMG. It's not known who performed the search. The station reported it was done on a browser primarily used by the 2-year-old's mother, Casey Anthony, who was acquitted of the girl's murder in 2011.

Anthony's attorneys argued during trial that Casey Anthony helped her father, George Anthony, cover up the girl's drowning in the family pool.

WKMG reports that sheriff's investigators pulled 17 vague entries only from the computer's Internet Explorer browser, not the Mozilla Firefox browser commonly used by Casey Anthony. More than 1,200 Firefox entries, including the suffocation search, were overlooked.'

Gender parity trumps excellence in science?

Mastodon · 26 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nowhere in the entire 252-page report is there an inkling that anything but men and culture might be to blame for this sorry state of affairs. Nowhere is there any speculation as to why this gender imbalance exists in every developed country – including those with better child care. Nowhere is there a hint that one reason more women aren't entering these fields is that maybe they don't want to.

...

We now have plenty of evidence showing that even as equality of opportunity has grown, women continue to express different career preferences than men. Even women who are great at math are more likely to be fascinated by other people than by terabytes, ohms and quarks. But men who are great at math generally prefer to devote their careers to small rotating objects, not kindergarteners.

...

Is gender parity more important than excellence in science? Some people think so. In the U.S., there's widespread talk of extending Title IX to STEM fields. Title IX is the legislation that requires colleges to fund women's sports at the same level as men's. Because women have far less interest in playing sports than men do, Title IX dealt a heavy blow to men's athletics and sent colleges scrambling to assemble women's volleyball teams so that their funds wouldn't be cut off. Saner heads worry that Title IX might do the same thing to academic research.'

'Men fear circumcision'

Mastodon · 26 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE male circumcision programme that was launched in 2009 has only seen 10% of the targeted 1,2 million men by 2015 being circumcised, a government official said yesterday.

The programme's national coordinator in the Health and Child Welfare ministry, Sinokuthemba Xaba, was speaking during the opening of a voluntary medical male circumcision clinic in Bulawayo's Lobengula suburb.

He said most males feared getting circumcised due to a number of factors.

"More and more men have heard about the benefits of male circumcision, but have various concerns that prevent them from getting circumcised," Xaba said.

"Males have questions like; what if something goes wrong?

"Will the wound heal? Where will my foreskin go? These are some of the fears that we hear every day from men who are considering going for the procedure."'

India: 7-year-old loses genitals after circumcision, fighting for life

Mastodon · 26 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'ALWAR: A seven-year-old boy is battling for life after a circumcision surgery went horribly wrong at a private hospital in Alwar on Thursday. The boy's genitals had to be cut off in an attempt to save his life, said sources. An FIR has been lodged against the hospital authorities after the relatives of the boy created a ruckus.'

UK: Nightwing team to tackle Christmas spike in domestic abuse

Mastodon · 26 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A DEDICATED team of police officers is being launched to tackle a spike in domestic abuse over Christmas.

Operation Nightwing has been set up in Hull to ensure victims who call police are seen quickly.

Between 13 and 15 officers will be available to respond solely to calls regarding domestic abuse in the city during the operation.

Detective Sergeant Stuart Fox, who is leading the operation, said: "We know there is an increase in domestic abuse over Christmas and the new year.

"This can be down to rising stress levels – perhaps relating to money worries – the alcohol that is consumed as people are celebrating, and the fact families are spending more time together.'

Nine out of ten women in the UK control family finances

Mastodon · 26 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'London: Men might think they hold the purse strings but it is actually women who control the family finances and make the biggest decisions on spending, according to a new UK study.

Nine out of ten middle-aged women in Britain take control of paying bills, financial planning and buying goods for their household, the study found.

Dubbed the family CEO, these women believe the term housewife is old-fashioned and no longer relevant to them. Instead, they say their wide range of responsibilities mean their role is more akin to the boss of a company, the 'Daily Mail' reported.'

Justice Ginsberg: We Need All-Female Supreme Court

Mastodon · 26 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video clip here. Quote:

'So now the perception is, yes, women are here to stay. And when I'm sometimes asked when will there be enough? And I say when there are nine, people are shocked. But there'd been nine men, and nobody's ever raised a question about that.'

UK: Women's groups demand new watchdog to confront sexism in the media

Mastodon · 26 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A coalition of women's groups has called for the issue of sexism in the media to be taken on by a new regulatory body in the runup to publication of Lord Justice Leveson's report on the press this Thursday.

Four women's organisations monitored the content of 11 national newspapers over a randomly chosen fortnight in early September, finding more than 1,300 articles and images that raised concerns over how women and violence against them are portrayed in the British press. They say their findings should inform proposals for a new era of newspaper regulation.

The analysis, published on Sunday – International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women – warns that newspaper coverage is glamorising and, on occasion, eroticising violence against women and girls, and helps normalise rape while undermining the criminal justice system by creating jurors who hold prejudices against female victims.'

The Bully Society: School Shootings and the Crisis of Bullying in America's Schools

Mastodon · 26 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Masculinity is at the forefront of bullying in schools. Hypermasculinity and flamboyant heterosexuality are markers of masculinity that contribute to bullying. Boys should exhibit a tough, aggressive and violent masculinity that is based on heterosexuality. Boys who are considered nerdy, weak, or who do not live up to these standards of masculinity are often called gay or faggot and are assumed to be less masculine than those who exhibit traditional masculine behavior. The school climate is therefore built on a acceptance of hypermasculinity, and as Klein notes, school shooters often fail to live up to the standards of masculinity, choosing instead to respond to the bullying and failed masculinity in a violent last attempt to assert their power and questioned masculinity.

Inherent in the acceptance of hypermasculinity is also violence against girls. Klein notes that various forms of violence against girls (such as teasing, harassment and sexual assault) is very common in schools, and is a common denominator for many school shooters who were violent towards girls. Many shooters shot or killed former girlfriends, girls that rejected them, or girls whom they felt they needed to protect. Another component of the bully culture, and another common denominator among the school shooters, is gay bashing. No matter the shooters sexual orientation, they were often teased and called gay or faggot in school. As status is considered everything in high school, being gay bashed equals a loss of status and is also considered the worst type of harassment for boys. The acceptance of hypermasculinity and masculine ideals has also spread to girls, who are becoming increasingly violent. As hypermasculinity is deemed the opposite of femininity, girls need to display both feminine and masculine characteristics. With the spread of social networking sites, text messaging, and other forms of technological advances enabling communication between people, cyber-bulling has become another tool used by bullies and is often used as primary sites for gay and slut bashing. Especially since laws concerning cyber-bullying have not proved useful in curbing bullying online.'

Costa Rica: Dozens march to demand rights, equal treatment for men

Mastodon · 26 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'November 25th, 2012 (InsideCostaRica.com) A group of over 60 people marched through Paseo Colon yesterday, with the message “we are functional parents, not ATM machines.”

The march was to demand men’s rights, and to demand the creation of an institute that could provide them with protection and support when assaulted by their partners or facing unfair legal treatment.

The protest began at about 10:00am yesterday in Paseo Colon, and proceeded towards the central Park in San Jose. There, the group spoke about various problems that men face in a family environment.

Eugenia Quesada, director of the foundation “Support to Men Institute” (FUNDIAPHO, in Spanish), said they are demanding the government to create an “Institute for Men.”

“We also want to eliminate jail for not paying alimony and child support, demand serious punishment for noncompliance of visiting hours (for parent-child visits), and we want the domestic violence act to be applied equally to both sexes, and not only to be for women’s protection,” she added.'

Male domestic violence victim able to locate shelter — finally

Mastodon · 26 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We all should have someone in our corner like Sharain Spears, especially when experiencing the kind of month her cousin Brian Ingram is having.

Ingram was stabbed three times by his girlfriend, Diane M. Romano, on Nov. 4, after an argument at their home on Van Norwick Avenue in Batavia, according to police. Romano, who police say also knifed her 19-year-old son, was charged with three felony counts. Ingram was hospitalized with two punctured lungs.

Romano, 38, bonded out and went home. Ingram, released from Delnor Hospital in Geneva last Wednesday with no place to go, began living in a borrowed truck. Which is not a great place to bunk, especially after his wounds became infected.

That's when Spears stepped in. Even though she'd not talked to her 34-year-old cousin in over a year because of his "crazy relationship" with Romano, she put all that aside when she heard he was in crisis.
...
Elgin's Community Crisis Center doesn't take men under any circumstances, said its leader, Gretchen Vapnar. The Aurora and Elgin shelters have, on rare occasion, put up men in motels in emergency situations, as has the DuPage Family Shelter Service. But with state budget cuts, even that well is dry, shelter directors say.
...
Clearly frustrated by late Monday evening, Spears finally found her cousin a bed for a night from a Facebook friend by posting this plea: Men who are domestic violence victims need help too. On Tuesday, after receiving proof from Batavia police that Ingram was a Tri-Cities resident, she planned to drive him to Lazarus House, where he hoped to stay at least until he could heal enough to return to his job at Service Pallet in North Aurora.

The whole experience, said Spears, made her more determined than ever to continue her advocacy work. "I know what it's like to turn your life around," she said. "Someone was there to help me. I need to do the same for others."'

Mother who took drugs trying to kill baby likely won't face child-abuse charges

Mastodon · 26 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Katherine Hasson's son was born addicted to cocaine and other drugs. So when Riviera Beach police said Hasson told them she took drugs while pregnant in an attempt to kill her son, they thought they had probable cause to arrest her on child-abuse charges.

But the Palm Beach County State Attorney's Office said Thursday it will not file such charges against Hasson — because it can't.

"We need a statute that specifically punishes a mother when she harms a child in utero," Assistant State Attorney Kirk Volker said.
...
Hasson gave birth to a boy Oct. 15 at St. Mary's Medical Center in West Palm Beach. The boy was born blue in the face and motionless, and he was experiencing withdrawal symptoms. He was hooked up to a ventilator.'

'Military can take a toll on women's health'

Mastodon · 26 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 18th Annual "A Woman's Journey" health symposium at the Baltimore Hilton highlighted lung disease and the health of women in the military.

Herrera was first deployed in 2004 to Fort McCoy in Wisconsin. Her son was 31/2 and her daughter 2. She was deployed again a year later to the William Beaumont Army Medical Center near El Paso, Texas.

Women in the military often suffer from back and joint problems from carrying heavy equipment and wearing ill-fitting uniforms that sometimes cut into a woman's breast area, Herrera said. Extreme weather conditions can lead to skin disorders. And hearing problems can arise from gunshots, bombings and loud military equipment.

"I was never able to get used to the hum of the generator," Herrera said. "It was noisy all the time."

Mental stress is also an issue as women worry about their safety at war and their families back home. The mental stress is something that can linger even after a soldier returns home. Herrera and her husband eventually divorced because of the stress of her military career.'

Florida survey of young women asks if a man ever poked holes in a condom in effort to make her pregnant

Matt · 27 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Seriously... I mean, for real? They actually asked this? Pardon me, but what planet does one have to be living on to imagine this would happen? It's simply more out-and-out misandry, state-sponsored, too. [Fla. DOH contact info is in the first comment to this story.] Excerpt:

'FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. -- The state of Florida is asking thousands of young women some intimate questions their sex lives and is giving them a $10 gift card in return - but some who received the survey are offended.

The South Florida Sun Sentinel reported Sunday (http://sunsent.nl/10SkSc4) that the Department of Health sent surveys to 4,100 women between 18 and 24, giving participants a CVS gift card.
...
The state spent $45,000 on the 46-question survey, which was sent out in September and October, and 782 have been returned. Participants were asked how many men they had sex with over the last year, whether a man ever poked holes in a condom to get them pregnant and how they felt emotionally the last time they had unprotected sex. A November batch weren't mailed after it was found that some of the surveys were sent to girls under 18.'

Carla Bruni: A woman's place is in one of her homes

Matt · 27 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So her entry into the debate about women's place in society is likely to raise some eyebrows, whether plucked or au naturel.

The 44-year-old, who was France's first lady for four years until May, has declared: "We don't need to be feminist in my generation." Instead she suggests a woman's place is in the home with her children.

In an interview for the January issue of Vogue magazine, to be published on Dec 1, she develops her views on the women's liberation movement, adding: "There are pioneers who opened the breach.

"I'm not at all an active feminist. On the contrary, I'm a bourgeois. I love family life, I love doing the same thing every day.'

Referring to her regular psychoanalysis sessions, Mrs Bruni-Sarkozy said: "I've ended up becoming my mother in some respects, despite my eight years of analysis!" Months before becoming President Nicolas Sarkozy's third wife in 2008, the former supermodel and pop singer said "monogamy bores me" and described herself as a "tamer of men".'

Divorcing parents turn to 'brainwashing' children in custody battles

Matt · 27 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Solicitors specialising in divorce and child contact say they have noted a marked rise in allegations of one parents exerting undue influence on children to try to turn them against the other.

New mobile phones, computer games, designer clothes and even exotic holidays have been deployed in attempts to win children's loyalty.

In other cases parents have openly resorted to trying to blacken their former partner's name in the children's eyes.

Naomi McGloin, a solicitor at Pannone, said allegations of "brainwashing" had become an increasingly common feature of acrimonious separations in her experience.

Parents desperate to keep their children have attempted to exploit a requirement on the courts to take a child's feelings into consideration in determining where they should live.'

Australia: woman bribed teenage boy for sex, court told

Minuteman · 27 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The 52-year-old woman, who cannot be named to protect the victim's identity, pleaded guilty in the Victorian County Court on Tuesday to repeatedly having sex with the teen over a four-year period.
...
After one sexual encounter the teenager vomited in the bathroom for half an hour.

"I'd never had sex before this and I felt sick to the bottom of my stomach," the boy said in a police statement that was read out in court.

The sexual relationship began in 2002 when the victim was aged 13 and the woman was 41.

She pushed him against the wall in the garage, grabbed his groin and had sex with him.
...
The woman also phoned the victim's school pretending to be his mum to get him out of class so the pair could have sex.
...
"When I was 15 (the woman) turned me into an addicted drug user," the boy said in the victim statement.
...
Defence lawyer Jane Dixon said her client had been suffering from depression and anxiety and was trapped in a controlling marriage at the time of her crimes.

Forensic psychologist Patrick Newton told the court the woman had an immature and dependent personality with "limited social skills".'

Military Women Challenge Combat Exclusion Rule In Lawsuit Against Defense Department

Mastodon · 27 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A first lieutenant in the U.S. Marine Corps, a captain in the Marine Corps Reserves, a staff sergeant in the U.S. Army Reserves and a major in the U.S. Air National Guard filed suit Tuesday against the Department of Defense, challenging its rules restricting women in combat under the Fifth Amendment.

The American Civil Liberties Union is representing Marine 1st Lt. Colleen Farrell, Marine Reserves Capt. Zoe Bedell, Army Staff Sgt. Jennifer Hunt and Air Guard Major Mary Jennings Hegar in the suit, filed Tuesday afternoon in the U.S. District Court in San Francisco. The four individual plaintiffs have all served in Afghanistan or Iraq, and two are Purple Heart recipients.

...

Joined by the advocacy group Service Women's Action Network (SWAN), they accuse the Defense Department of violating servicewomen's rights to equal protection under the law by maintaining policies collectively known as the combat exclusion rule. Though the Pentagon is reforming the policies directed at servicewomen, the rules still bar women in the U.S. military from specific combat positions -- positions that are available to men.'

Gender Roles: Men, Women, And Rape

Mastodon · 27 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week on campus, a number of movements picketed and soapboxed to prevent sexual assault. And don't get me wrong; that's a very good thing. Rape and sexual assault are some of the more heinous and damaging crimes that human beings can enact upon one another. My problem is not with groups determined to prevent these crimes, but with the nature of these groups.
...
A glance at the White Ribbon Campaign's website reveals some dynamic logos and the words: "What Does It Mean to Be A Man Today? It's Time For A New Vision of the Perfect Man." The White Ribbon Campaign further promises to educate men about how they can further prevent gender-based violence, a trait seemingly limited to their barbaric sex.

That's my main problem here. Last I checked, our society was striving for an egalitarian approach, not a sexist one. The vision was that men and women are equal, and must be treated equally … so then why does no one care about men?'

'Masculinity top safety barrier'

Mastodon · 27 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the wife of a Canberra construction worker, I have every hope that the ACT government inquiry into safety in the building industry will be successful in identifying causes and proposing implementable solutions. As someone who has worked in the health sector, however, I am not optimistic.

There is no simple or single underlying cause of the cavalier attitude towards occupational health and safety which is evident on many construction sites, and it will be the job of the inquiry to uncover as many of these causes as possible. While some attention has been given to issues such as the quality of training and workers being pushed to meet cost and time deadlines, the one aspect of the current culture which has remained unrecognised is gender.

We know that gender influences how men and women think about and behave in relation to health and health promotion. The role of gender in health is so intrinsic that it has even been said that "the doing of health is the doing of gender". Men have a concept of health which is similar to the holistic indigenous concept of overall physical, mental and emotional wellbeing. Men also think of health in the sense of being in control and having power over their bodies.'

'You're a Pussy If You Think There's a War on Men'

Mastodon · 27 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For some men, women—especially feminists—are terrifying. Not in the normal oh-my-God-I-can't-ask-her-out-what-if-she-says-no way that middle schoolers and characters on Friends experience, but "afraid" in the sense that women will take their money, try to get pregnant on purpose, invent false rape claims, and use feminism to generally abuse men. In this narrative, men are either an oppressed minority (or about to become one), or have to "fight back" against feminists to preserve their rights.

...

Venker's article doesn't exactly match up with the Men's Rights movement (some MRers have mildly criticized it), but it seems like it comes out of the same idea—that now men are the ones who are oppressed, that there needs to be a pushback against feminism, that men are now too discouraged to marry and have kids. But that just shows how worthless men are. If you are claiming that feminism is the reason women don't want you, or that women are taking over, maybe the problem is that you're fucking up your life and looking for something to blame? Men shouldn't fear feminism or women—why worry about competing with them in the workplace if you think you're competent in the first place? Why wouldn't you want to have a girlfriend or wife every bit as driven as you? Venker says that "if men today are slackers… women should look in the mirror and ask themselves what role they've played to bring about this transformation." If a man believes that, that's because it's self-serving bullshit. He's a slacker because he's a slacker, and maybe because men still have enough of an edge in society to get away with that shit. If you're a man who thinks that there's a "War on Men," you probably deserve to get beaten by the women.'

Sweden: female 'skeleton lover' caused uproar in Australia in 2010

Minuteman · 28 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A Swedish woman who allegedly committed acts of necrophilia on a skeleton has been revealed as the same woman who sparked outrage in Australia in 2010 after publishing photos of a murdered Queensland teenager on her website.

The woman, whose identity has been supressed in Swedish media, is facing trial after human bones, body bags and disturbing images were allegedly found in her Gothenburg apartment.

Photos released to the media showed the 32-year-old caressing and licking the cranium of a yellowing skull.

In 2010 the woman made headlines after she posted three images of slain 12-year-old Goodna schoolgirl Leanne Holland on her now-defunct “gore” website ViralDeath.com.

Although it was later revealed the Holland images were lifted from a 2002 textbook, it drew widespread outrage from Australian authorities and led to an investigation by the Crime and Misconduct Commission.'

'Change permanent alimony'

Matt · 28 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Say you married your high school sweetheart, and he or she stayed home to raise the kids. Now 20 years later, you've grown apart and gotten divorced.

Along with a fair distribution of your lifetime savings, you'd probably agree that it's fair to pay alimony for a good number of years to help your former spouse find his or her way in the next chapter of life.

But should you be forced to pay alimony for the rest of your life?

Current law says a judge can make you pay alimony until you die, or until your former spouse remarries, something exes have been known to delay so as not to end the alimony gravy train.

As it stands, "permanent alimony" amounts to a life sentence. It is an outdated law that should be changed in the next session of the Florida Legislature.'

Saint Kitts and Nevis: Men Can Now Take Women to Court for Child Support

Matt · 28 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new Bill passed on Wednesday now gives men the opportunity to take women to court for child maintenance (child support).

The sole female parliamentarian, Minister of Social Services and Gender Affairs, Hon. Marcella Liburd introduced and led the debate on The Maintenance of Children Bill, 2012.

The 33-section Bill states that if a father/male has guardianship/sole custody of a child, he can take the same legal action previously only available to mothers/females, and apply to the court for financial support from the child's mother/female guardian. It replaces an Act passed in 1920.

"I want to say that unlike what is said out there, mothers can indeed be asked to maintain their children because there situations where the children are in the physical custody of their father or the father's family," Minister Liburd said.'

Ed. note: Saint Kitts and Nevis is a country comprised of two islands in the Caribbean. Wikipedia entry here.

Australia: Position Vacant - Social Worker Men and Families (SA Health)

Minuteman · 28 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Yorke & Lower North Health Service, Clare
Indicative Total Remuneration: $74,997 - $86,710 (pro rata) - Temp P/T (15 hrs p/wk) - AHP2

You will enjoy community culture, a rural lifestyle and the benefits of a broad exposure to rural generalist portfolio in this key role. As the Social Worker, Men and Families, you will be a valued member of our Community Health Team. You will apply professional expertise, developing generalist / specialist knowledge, clinical competence and experience to provide professional services to client groups in circumstances requiring increasingly complex practice skills. Exercising professional judgment in the selection and adaptation of established methods, procedures and techniques within the profession, you may provide a broad range of clinical and consultative services across a range of service settings. This will include one-on-one, group based and health promotion activities. Additionally, your duties will involve managing and prioritising personal work load and supporting others in developing workload management plans, including in the allocation of team resources.
...

To be considered for this role, you must hold an appropriate degree of equivalent qualification which gives eligibility for full membership of the Australian Association of Social Workers. With demonstrated skills in working with Men and Families building resilience and relationships, you will possess high level communication and interpersonal skills complemented by a proven ability to work effectively in a multidisciplinary team to provide quality services.'

In suicide epidemic, military wrestles with prosecuting troops who attempt it

Mastodon · 28 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — Marine Corps Pvt. Lazzaric T. Caldwell slit his wrists and spurred a legal debate that's consuming the Pentagon, as well as the nation's top military appeals court.

On Tuesday, the court wrestled with the wisdom of prosecuting Caldwell after his January 2010 suicide attempt. Though Caldwell pleaded guilty, he and his attorneys now question his original plea and the broader military law that makes "self-injury" a potential criminal offense.

The questions resonate amid what Pentagon leaders have called an "epidemic" of military suicides.

"If suicide is indeed the worst enemy the armed forces have," Senior Judge Walter T. Cox III said, "then why should we criminalize it when it fails?"'

Girlfriend ‘beat up her boyfriend after bad sex left her unsatisfied’

Mastodon · 28 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 24-year-old woman was arrested yesterday for attacking her boyfriend after he climaxed and she did not, a police report alleges.

Raquel Gonzalez lives in Bradenton, Florida with her boyfriend, Esric Davis, 30. Apparently, the two were engaged in intercourse.

When he finished and she did not, Gonzalez allegedly started punching and scratching him around the nose and eyes.

...

The violent post-coital attack allegedly occurred after Davis reached orgasm, but Gonzalez did not. Apparently outraged, she then ‘began hitting and scratching (Davis), causing scratches near his eyes and nose,’ the police report read.

She was arrested yesterday afternoon and charged with felony domestic battery, and remains in the Manatee County jail.'

Zimbabwe: Infant Circumcision Could Soon Be Compulsory

Mastodon · 28 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'GOVERNMENT is considering making neo-natal male circumcision compulsory as a long-term strategy for HIV prevention.

In an interview yesterday, Aids and Tuberculosis Unit national director in the Ministry of Health and Child Welfare Dr Owen Mugurungi said infant circumcision was more sustainable than adult circumcision.

He said the ministry was still following due process for the feasibility and acceptability studies for its introduction.

Dr Mugurungi, however, said they were carrying out research on the implications of infant circumcision.

"We have received a lot of inquiries from young couples who wanted their children to be circumcised. We are following due processes for the feasibility and acceptability studies.

"There are people who are advocating infant circumcision and there are some who are against it. We do not want to force anyone and that is why we want to carry out research," he said.'

Good Relationship with In-laws Improves Marriage for Men, Increases Chance of Divorce for Women

Mastodon · 28 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The holiday season is ripe with opportunity for family disputes and blow-ups. (As Beverly D'Angelo says in National Lampoon's Christmas Vacation, "It's Christmas. We're all miserable.") Now, a new study may help your understand how best to handle your relationship with your in-laws.

The marriages of men who are closer to their in-laws are 20 percent less likely to end in divorce, according to a study conducted by Dr. Terri Orbuch, a psychologist and research professor at the University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research and author of Finding Love Again: 6 Steps to a New and Happy Relationship. The story of her findings in regards to in-laws recently appeared in The Wall Street Journal.'

SAVE: VAWA Must Respect the Presumption of Innocence

Matt · 29 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

What Happened to the Presumption of Innocence?

The DV industry is telling Congress that the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) must be reauthorized during the lame duck session. We need to make sure they hear our message that VAWA should not be reauthorized unless it respects the presumption of innocence.

Learn more: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/presumed-innocent/

Let's take action!

Call both of your Senators and your Representative at 1-202-224-3121.

You can also find your Senators' phone numbers here: http://www.senate.gov/general/contact_information/senators_cfm.cfm and your Representative's phone number here: http://www.house.gov/representatives/find/

Even if you called last time, call again today. Just say, "Don't pass the Violence Against Women Act until the presumption of innocence is restored!"

Call now. Call later. Call often.

Or call once.

Just call!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

'Yet More from our Brave Women in Uniform'

Matt · 30 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Commentary here. Excerpt:

'Four women filed suit for the right to serve in combat in San Francisco today, demanding the military officially call them combat soldiers. Of course, none of them are really suited to engage in combat, but they want to be called warriors nonetheless.

Typically, by this point, there would be a chorus of feminists telling me Ms. Farrell is far tougher than I am, and could easily kick my ass, beat me in war, etc. But just look at the girl. This is a joke. I'm an out-of-shape, nearly middle-aged guy and I could kick her ass with one hand tied behind my back.

But anyone who says such a thing must support violence against women, right?

This is where they're covered on both sides. On the one hand, you say she can't hack it as a soldier and you're accused of being an anti-equality bigot, and on the other you say "OK, let's put her to the test" and suddenly you're an abusive monster.

We simply can't win one way or the other, which is why I recommend simply letting them claim to be full-fledged soldiers, giving them a gun and the standard equipment, and sending them out on some mission in Afghanistan. At this point, who gives a damn what happens? She and her sisters-in-arms would get cut to pieces, but we don't even have the money to pay for the subsequent lawsuit any longer, so might as well let her have her wish.'

UK: Female Teachers Give Male Pupils Lower Marks, Claims Study

Matt · 30 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt

'Female teachers mark male pupils more harshly than they do their female students, research has claimed.

Additionally, girls tend to believe male teachers will look upon them more favourably than female teaching staff, but men treat all students the same, regardless of gender.

The study, released on Thursday, told 1,200 students in 29 schools to place financial bets on who would give them higher grades: external examiners or their teacher.

Conducted by professors Amine Ouazad and Lionel Page, for the London School of Economic's Centre for Economic Performance, the report said:

"Male students tend to bet less [money] when assessed by a female teacher than by an external examiner or by a male teacher. This is consistent with female teachers' grading practices; female teachers give lower grades to male students.'

Nanny jailed for crying rape after one-night stand

Matt · 30 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Wealthy insurance broker Tina Greenland, 49, had sex with divorced Nicholas Mouna, 55, after employing her to care for his disabled daughter.

The mother-of-three texted him the next day saying she "had a lovely night" and that she hoped he didn't think she was "some kind of tart".

But when Mr Mouna gave a "half-hearted" response making it clear he did not want a relationship she accused him of "using" her.

Canterbury Crown Court heard how she then phoned Kent Police and claimed she had been raped after her drink had been spiked.

Mr Mouna was arrested and suspended from his job, which he later lost despite never being charged for the crime.'

Women’s athletics given stage to shine at Western

Robber748 · 30 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Forty years ago, a landmark piece of legislation, commonly referred to as Title IX, was passed in the purpose of ending discrimination. That piece of legislation paved the way for women’s athletics not only in the collegiate and high school level, but for all wanting to compete in an equal society.

Title IX allowed my mother, at the age of 14, to participate in sports on equal grounds. She was no longer shunned because she was a woman. Instead, she was given the right to enjoy sports, a joy she would soon share with her son.

When I was five years old and just beginning my first year of T-ball, it was my mother who was my first coach. At the time, she was the only female coach in Soundview Little League in Northeast Tacoma. That accomplishment, and my love for sports, spawned from the implementation of Title IX.'

I Only Hit You Because You Have A Job: Working Women And Domestic Violence

Mastodon · 30 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The study, conducted by two female researchers at Sam Houston State University in Texas (and supported by the university's Crime Victim's Institute) looked at the impact that education levels and employment status differences play in domestic or intimate partner violence in heterosexual couples and found that dual-incomed households were more than twice as likely to .

"When both male and females were employed, the odds of victimization were more than two times higher than when the male was the only breadwinner in the partnership, lending support to the idea that female employment may challenge male authority and power in a relationship," said Franklin and Menaker in a press release.
...
In other words, when women work, in pursuing wages, prestige and power or developing relationships outside the home, they undermine their partners, resulting in violence. I'm not prepared to accept the characterization of men as so base that they resort to violence when undermined or even emasculated by their partners, but according to this research, there does appear to be a link.'

Comment: Christmas advertising addressing child abuse

Matt · 30 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We have received a small number of complaints about a fundraising advert currently running on public transport in London and the South East of England (below) that portrays a father as a perpetrator of child abuse.

Our advertising and awareness literature represents all kinds of abuse and all kinds of perpetrators of abuse - whether male or female, young or old - and we work hard to find the correct balance in our campaigns.

The advert above happened to talk about a man, but many others talk about women.'

F&F: Parental Alienation is Child Abuse

Matt · 30 November 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently, the Detroit Jewish News wrote an informative article on parental alienation: Parental Alienation: Children suffer most from their parents' inability to resolve conflict in a healthy way. It features one of our members, and another one of our members wrote a heart wrenching letter to the editor in response to the article. Neither chose to be identified. Both are concerned about the potential response of the custodial parent and their children and grandchildren.

During the holidays, parental alienation is particularly difficult for families to deal with. Many of you may relate to the letter one of our members wrote in response to the Detroit Jewish News article. It is a story Fathers and Families hears all too often. One that Fathers and Families wishes to end with shared parenting.'

Canada: Human rights complaint launched over girls' hockey time

Mastodon · 1 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A volunteer minor hockey coach in Stephenville has filed a complaint with the Newfoundland and Labrador Human Rights Commission about how girls are given an unfair league advantage.

Brent Watkins said there are two minor hockey leagues in Stephenville — a mixed league and an all-female league — but girls that are skilled enough to play in the mixed league are also allowed to play in the girls' league.

Watkins said that extra ice time is giving some girls an unfair advantage when competing for spots in the mixed league.

"A team is picked based on your skill level. [It] doesn't matter if you're a female or a male," he said.

"But if we allow more ice time for a female player then they have more advantages than a male player with skill development."'

USAID - In Celebration of Men: Stepping up for Male Circumcision

Minuteman · 1 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Posted by Emmanuel Njeuhmeli, Senior Biomedical Prevention Advisor, Office of HIV/AIDS

On November 19, the first ever International Men's Day was celebrated in over 60 countries around the world. It was an occasion to put the spotlight on men's health, improving gender relations, and recognize positive male role models who make valuable contributions to family, community and society. This year, we recognize and celebrate the hundreds of thousands of men in East and Southern Africa who are stepping up for Voluntary Medical Male Circumcision (VMMC) to protect their own health and that of their families.

We also recognize the political, traditional and community leaders who are leading the charge in their countries and local communities. For many communities, male circumcision has cultural significance representing a rite of passage from childhood to manhood. Ministries of Health are working closely with traditional leaders to ensure that male circumcision is medically safe while still respecting the meaning of the tradition. In 2011, I participated in one such ceremony with the Changaani tribe at an "initiation camp" in a remote area of southern Zimbabwe where adolescent boys learn what it means to be a man. Despite the cultural challenges, the Zimbabwe Ministry of Health and Social Welfare (MOHSW) with support from PEPFAR and USAID, and in collaboration with traditional leaders, was able to provide these boys with safe male circumcision services.

In June 2012, I was again fortunate to witness the kind of male leadership we celebrated on Nov. 19. Mr. Blessing Chebundo, Chairman of Zimbabwe Parliamentarians against AIDS, and a group of fellow Zimbabwe parliamentarians, underwent voluntary medical male circumcision to inspire other men in their country to follow suit. Zimbabwe aims to circumcise 1.2 million men aged 13 to 29 years by 2015 with the potential impact of preventing 750,000 new HIV infections. It will take leading by example, as demonstrated by Mr. Chebundo, to get this done.'

US mum 'uploaded daughter's nude pic to Facebook'

Minuteman · 1 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The quotation marks are from the original story headline. Link here. Excerpt:

'A US mother has been charged with child exploitation and child pornography possession after uploading a nude photo of her 14-year-old daughter to Facebook.

Police say Indiana woman Lynda Rusk, 50, used her daughter's phone to post the graphic photo.

Rusk denied any knowledge of the photo but police determined she was in possession of the phone when it was published on November 8, 2011.
...
Rusk was charged and released on bail on Thursday.'

Deputies: Mail carrier poisoned husband's tuna fish sandwich, tried to kill him

Matt · 1 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BARTOW, Fla. - A Central Florida mail carrier was arrested on attempted murder charges after she tried to poison her husband's tuna fish sandwich, according to deputies.

Beth Dickison Richards, 37, of Lake Wales, was arrested Friday on charges of attempted first-degree murder, poisoning food with the intent to kill, possession of cannabis and possession of drug paraphernalia.

According to the Polk County Sheriff's Office, deputies were called to Richards' home Thursday night in connection with a poisoning case. Deputies said they met with Richards' husband, Gregory Lawrence Richards, and her step-sister, Jessica Jarvis.

Jarvis said Beth Richards told her earlier in the day that she tried to poison and kill Gregory Richards by crushing up multiple Trazodone pills and placing them in a tuna fish sandwich.'

'No More Mr. Nice Guy'

Matt · 2 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

I don't do this too often, but I want to endorse a book entitled No More Mr. Nice Guy by Robert A. Glover. From the outset, be assured that I have never met the book's author or communicated with him in any way, nor do I have any kind of financial interest in its sales, directly or tangentially. I am simply recommending it since it does such a very good job of explaining "Nice Guy Syndrome", examples of which abound in today's world.

It's my firmly-held belief that the only way MR issues are going to get into the ken of society is if men stop trying to live for/please women all the time and start thinking about what's good for them first. The author makes the case and quite convincingly that when people (of either sex) look out for their own needs first, everyone is eventually better off since a lot of relationship-wrecking sorts of things are avoided. It's counter-intuitive, but the main point is this: If you place everyone else's needs ahead of yours, not only will you not get your needs met, but guaranteed, you will not meet the needs or expectations of others. Net result: No one is happy, least of all you, and they will blame you for it. Is the First World not up its eyeballs in "Nice Guys" and tell me, how happy is everyone? Since men have been trained to be and are expected to be "Nice Guys", and as many of them have been at it for decades now, how is it working? Are either men or women really happier than in the past, particularly where romantic relationships are concerned?

I read this book quite some time ago but think this is a good time to mention it, since the end-of-the-year time is upon us and this is when people typically decide to make new year's resolutions. If you're a man who finds himself getting used by a partner (or others), or who is incessantly trying to please her (or him) but can never do anything good enough (by their or your own standards), and yet you just keep trying harder, thinking if you do, eventually things will be fine-- well, this is the book for you. And if this doesn't describe you but describes a man you know, feel free to share the fact of its existence with him.

India: 15,000 men to boycott all Aamir's films until he apologises

arindamp · 2 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'After taking offense at Aamir Khan's* TV show Satyameva Jayate* (SMJ) for "projecting men in a bad light", several men's rights activists are now taking up cudgels against his film Talaash.

Anil Kumar, one of the founders of the Save Indian Family Foundation (SIFF), says, "We are protesting as we have been observing Aamir as an actor for a year now. He has portrayed anti-male agenda on his TV show and he has indulged in spreading male hatred in the society. The programme had only half-truths and was dangerous. The domestic violence issues were only one-sided. We have decided we are not going to watch Talaash or any of Aamir's movies and not just that, we will also urge people to stay away it as well. Why doesn't he take up real-life campaigns with other actors and really do something? We should also be against violence in movies and not just homes."'

Ed. note: Links added.

Uganda: Should a man get circumcised for his wife?

Mastodon · 2 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently, health officials in Tororo said women were discouraging their husbands from undergoing circumcision, fearing that they may take long to heal, thereby denying them sex. So, should a man seek his wife's or fiancé's consent before going for the 'knife'?

According to Rita Zemeyi, a student at Kyambogo University, a man should not do anything without involving his wife.

"Circumcision is a sensitive issue. It is better if both partners talk about it. How can you be so selfish not to tell her?"

Zemeyi argues that if a man does not consult his wife, it may 'kill' the trust in the relationship and even go a long way in determining whether the relationship lasts or not.'

Cornell Police: Report of Attempted Rape on Campus Was False

Mastodon · 2 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An attempted rape reported to have occurred on campus this September did not in fact happen, Cornell police announced Thursday. Police say there is “irrefutable evidence” that the allegations were false and they may pursue charges against the person who made the attempted rape report, Chief Kathy Zoner said.

On Sept. 27, a female reported to the Cornell University Police Department that a male assailant had grabbed her on the Trolley Bridge — which connects Oak Avenue and the Engineering Quad — and dragged her into the adjacent woods before attempting to rape her. The female told CUPD that there she struggled against her attacker before she was able to strike him in the face and flee from the scene.

But after an “exhaustive investigation,” CUPD says the attempted rape did not occur and that the case has been closed.'

McMorris Rodgers Plays Gender Card In Leadership Bid

Mastodon · 2 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, D.C. — On the eve of the House Republican leadership elections, supporters of Rep. Cathy McMorris Rodgers are attempting to shore up support for her bid for Republican conference chair by touting, among other qualities, her gender.

A Republican leadership aide said McMorris Rodgers has been reminding colleagues about "her achievements with women's outreach and new media, her conservative credentials, [and] her profile as a young woman" in a last-minute pitch before the leadership elections tomorrow.

McMorris Rodgers has received an unexpectedly vigorous and public challenge from Rep. Tom Price, even as some within the House Republican leadership have attempted to persuade Price to drop his bid.'

In Israel, some rebel against circumcision

Matt · 3 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Circumcision is one of Judaism's most important laws and for generations of faithful it has symbolized a biblical covenant with God.

But in Israel, more and more Jewish parents are saying no to the blade.

"It's such a taboo in Israel and in Judaism," said Gali, nursing her six-week-old son, about the decision not to have him circumcised.

"It's like coming out of the closet," she said, asking to be identified by her first name only because she had not told her relatives yet.

Nearly all baby boys in Israel are circumcised. Be their parents ultra-Orthodox or totally secular Jews, it is by far the most common choice. Most Israeli-Arabs also keep with a practice that is widespread in the Muslim world.

Jewish circumcisions are done when the baby is eight days old. The majority are performed by a mohel, a religious man trained in the procedure carried out in a festive religious ceremony called a "brit", Hebrew for covenant.

But an increasing minority fear it is a form of physical abuse.

"It's the same as if someone would tell me 'it's our culture to cut off a finger when he is born'," said Rakefet Kaufman, who also did not have her son circumcised.'

SAVE Elert: Tell House Speaker Boehner: "VAWA must restore the presumption of innocence"

Matt · 4 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Congress is still being told by the domestic violence industry that the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) must be reauthorized this month.

Today, we're asking you to make one phone call, to House of Representatives Speaker John Boehner.

Call Speaker Boehner at 1-202-225-6205 and say, "VAWA must restore the presumption of innocence!"

Details: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/presumed-innocent/

Please take action!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Australia: Sunday school teacher jailed for sex with girl

Minuteman · 4 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The 39-year-old woman, who cannot be named to protect the identity of the victim, was on Tuesday jailed for three years and one month, but will be eligible for parole in 12 months.

The Melbourne woman began climbing into bed to kiss and touch the troubled 15-year-old after taking her into her family home in mid 2009, the Victorian County Court was told on Tuesday.

The abuse continued for six months and escalated to sexual penetration when the woman took the girl for a short trip away to Daylesford.

...

Judge Sexton said she accepted the woman was facing an ill husband, late mortgage repayments and a son with an undiagnosed mental health problem at the time of the offending.

But she told the offender this did not excuse her crimes.'

Husband not told his daughter was up for adoption

Minuteman · 4 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A US woman allegedly failed to tell her husband that she was putting their daughter up for adoption days after he moved to the other side of the country for a new job.

Tira Bland gave birth prematurely and allegedly signed the child over to a family of seven in Utah soon after her husband went to South Carolina for a new job with the US Army.

She then cut all contact with her husband.

A Utah judge has now given the baby's new family 60 days to return the girl, but they say they'll fight his decision.

Lawyers for father Terry Achane, who is now divorced from Ms Bland, said it was a case of human trafficking.

"Children are being bought and sold," attorney Mark Wiser told The Salt Lake Tribune.

"It is one thing that (adoption agencies) have been doing with unmarried biological fathers.

"It is in a new area when they are trying to take a child away from a married father who wants to have his child."'

Woman claimed rape because the sex was bad

Mastodon · 4 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Tennessee woman was charged with filing a false police report when she admitted that she lied about being raped.

She confessed that she concocted the lie because she simply did not enjoy one of her recent sexual experiences, and that the experience was “bad.”

Lynette Lee of Clarksville, Tennessee first told police on November 23 that she had been raped in a hotel room by a man she had met through the dating website MeetMe.com. “Lee said once at the hotel the man removed her clothes and, despite her protests, had sex with her,” according to newschannel5.com.

The rape suspect told police that his sexual experience with Lee was consensual. But apparently it was nothing to write home about.

Lee asked police to drop the rape case four days later, on Nov. 27, claiming that she lied about the rape because “she did not enjoy (the sexual encounter) and it was bad,” according to police.'

Gordon Finley: Permanent alimony unfair to so many

Matt · 5 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Opinion piece here. Excerpt:

'However, if the family courts have assigned them permanent alimony, the golden years are enjoyed only by the ex-wife, as the former husband either is required to keep working or to continue to pay generally exorbitant sums to his ex from whatever he has left in old age.

Permanent alimony today is not fair to men, and soon will be unfair to women when the current gender gaps favoring females in education, occupation, and income kick in and will make them the payers.

Incomprehensibly, while most divorced children and parents can see what is happening, the minds of Florida's state legislators and family court judges are locked into the model of the 1950's family, with dad working and mom staying at home. This is about as realistic and relevant as The Flat Earth Society.'

Mother guilty of smothering children to death

Matt · 5 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CASTLE ROCK, Colo. — A Castle Rock mother was found guilty Tuesday of smothering her two children to death with a pillow.

Kelli Murphy's defense team asked the jury to consider a lighter charge for their client, who confessed to smothering her two children to death in May of 2011. The Douglas County jury chose to ignore that plea, finding Murphy guilty of two counts of first-degree murder and two counts of first-degree murder by a person in a position of trust.

Judge Vincent White immediately sentenced Murphy to two consecutive terms of life in prison without parole.

Prosecutors said Murphy killed her children, Liam, 9, and Madigan, 6, by smothering them at her Castle Rock home. Liam would have been 11 today.'

War On Men: The Economy is to Blame For the Male and Female Disconnect

Matt · 5 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marriage has become a source of conflict for both male and females in the United States. According to the Pew Research Center, the number of newly-wed adults has steadily declined from 2008 to 2011. Fox News has interpreted this data as a result of women's changing role in society in a piece titled "The War on Men". However, the reality is much more complicated thanks to a significant shift in societal norms. Priorities have changed for both the American male and female. The changing environment has thus resulted in the failure of both sexes to meet on common ground regarding marriage.

According to other Pew Research data, 72% of American adults ages 18 and over were married in 1960. Today, only 51% of American adults are married. What has contributed to this trend? American society has certainly evolved over the past 40 years, changing the way in which men and women relate to one another.
...
No matter which perspective you may identify with, it is clear that both males and females are being greatly affected by the economic crisis. As national happiness is at historic lows, marriage rates have consequently suffered.'

U.S. Department of State Announces International Exchange with Female Volleyball Coaches from Gulf States

Minuteman · 5 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'As part of its global Empowering Women and Girls Through Sports Initiative, the U.S. Department of State announced today that 10 female volleyball coaches from Bahrain, Oman, Qatar, and Yemen will travel to the United States to participate in a Sports Visitors program, where they will share their experiences as female athletes and coaches as well as learn about sports opportunities for women in the U.S.

From December 5-16, the delegation from the Gulf States will engage with their American counterparts in Washington, D.C., Louisville, KY, and Knoxville, TN. In addition, they will participate in discussions on Title IX, sports psychology, nutrition, and participate in teambuilding and leadership activities. They will also participate in events with the Special Olympics and the 2012 NCAA Women's Volleyball Championships.

This global initiative aims to increase the number of women and girls who participate in sports and builds on Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton's vision of "smart power," which embraces the full range of diplomatic tools—in this case sports—to empower women and girls and foster greater understanding.'

UK: Women to escape prosecution under re-offending scheme

Broadsword · 5 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women who commit crime will avoid prosecution by going on courses aimed at preventing reoffending under a controversial new scheme.

About 60 women a year will be assessed and referred to the Together Women project, a charity working across Yorkshire and the Humber region, which will provide support to tackle the cause of their offending and avoid prosecution.

Detective Chief Inspector Paul Cunningham, of Humberside Police, denied the initiative was a “soft option”, saying: “If somebody deserves to go into the criminal justice system they will do.”'

UK: How a feminist debate was derailed by asking all men to leave

Mastodon · 5 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The opening night of the London Feminist Film Festival last Friday seemed like a huge success: Myriam Fougère's Lesbiana – A Parallel Revolution, about lesbian separatist communities in North America in the 1980s, was originally going to be screened at one of the smaller screens at the Hackney Picturehouse, but was moved to the biggest one after it sold out, and then sold out again. Unfortunately, the film didn't end up in the centre of the event. Chair Femi Otitoju managed to introduce the panellists – director Fougère, politician and activist Linda Bellos and anti-porn activist and academic Julia Long. But even before the floor was opened for questions, Long raised her hand and asked all the men in the audience to leave.

There was an instant uproar: lots of clapping, but also lots of booing. Many men and women got up and left, visibly disgruntled. Long then elaborated on her point, saying how "politically disastrous" it had been to allow men to attend feminist events and conferences in recent years (although she did not specify what the harm actually was). She made some further controversial claims, such as that heterosexuality can be a death sentence (no, that's conflating it with abuse), or that in the face of "off the scale" sexual violence and misogyny, there's nothing more threatening than women withdrawing from men completely (how very progressive and change-inspiring).'

'Man calls 911 saying wife stabbed him'

Mastodon · 6 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TOOELE, Utah (ABC4 News) – Women are usually the victims of domestic violence, but in rare cases men are victims too.

Mike Sorrels was allegedly stabbed by his wife, Tiffany Buhler, over the weekend. Excerpts from the 911 call he made are below.

Mike: Yeah, I've been stabbed in the chest. There's blood all over the place.

Operator: Mike, can you tell me who stabbed you?

Mike: My wife.'

State Department: Recipients of Women Entrepreneurs in the Americas Small Grants Announced

Minuteman · 6 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Deputy Assistant Secretary for Western Hemisphere Affairs Liliana Ayalde announced awardees for more than $1.5 million worth of small grants through the Women's Entrepreneurship in the Americas (WEAmericas) initiative during her trip to Trinidad and Tobago. Twenty-six grants will go to 16 Latin American and Caribbean countries, as well as two multi-regional projects, and will support women's entrepreneurship by developing and linking existing resources, programs, and infrastructure to create a stronger entrepreneurial environment for women entrepreneurs and women-owned businesses. The small grants were made possible by the Secretary's International Fund for Women and Girls and the Walmart Foundation.

Announced at the Sixth Summit of the Americas by President Obama and launched by Secretary Clinton, WEAmericas leverages public-private partnerships to increase women's economic participation and address three key barriers women confront when starting and growing small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs): access to training and networks, access to markets, and access to finance.'

Women’s group: Obama’s cabinet ‘clearly’ needs to be 50-percent female

Matt · 6 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The actual goal isn't 50%; you can bet your next ten paychecks on that. Excerpt:

'As President Barack Obama finalizes his second-term cabinet picks, the nation’s leading feminist group is pushing for more female appointments.

Currently, the president, who garnered 55 percent of the women’s vote on Election Day, has eight females in his 23-member cabinet. According the National Organization for Women, that number isn’t nearly high enough.

NOW president Terry O’Neill, in an interview with The Daily Caller, explained that she would like to see complete gender parity in Obama’s second-term cabinet.'

New ad on domestic violence targets males

Mastodon · 6 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Authority for the Advancement of the Status of Women in Israel has a new target for their anti-domestic violence public service announcements now showing on major TV channels: men.

After years of encouraging women to call the 118 hotline to avoid continuing domestic violence or to find a safe shelter, the AASWI wants men to take responsibility and get help before they become abusive.

The shift is part of a worldwide trend to force men to take responsibility for domestic violence, rather than placing the burden on the victim to seek help.
...
“We need to find creative ways to increase the calls from men as well,” said Vered Swid, the organization’s director-general.

When men call the 118 number and ask for assistance, social workers can direct them to a variety of different services, including support groups, anger management courses, therapy, or temporary apartments to allow a “cooling off period” that enables the woman and children to stay at home rather than deal with a shelter.'

Gender Unemployment Shift from Previous USA Recession Reflected in Current Job Interview Statistics

Mastodon · 6 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The historical trend of females bearing the brunt of job losses was reversed for the first time in the recession of 2008, and with some experts predicting the United States is on the verge of confirming they are in yet another recession, statistics reveal that 70% of candidates now attending job interviews are men. The majority of candidates are aged between 20 and 30 years old, with almost half reporting they are not in any kind of employment. A further 1 in 10 indicate they are employed in temporary positions highlighting job insecurity and increasing under-employment concerns.

...

"Unemployment statistics peaked for men in the United States in 2010, and while it is still early to determine the exact reasons why men were affected more than women, there could be various contributory factors. For example the number of women graduating in the United States has surpassed men in the last few years, and certain industries that have traditionally attracted a lot of female recruits, such as healthcare and retail, are areas where job growth has been noted since the onset of the great recession", said James Weaver, Director of FindEmployment. "It is difficult to witness the impact recession can have on anyone, so I would advise both men and women, to be open to the constant evolution of the job market and move past traditional gender occupation perceptions", he continued, "Prepare to look at future employment opportunities in sectors you generally would not consider especially if these pessimistic expert predictions come to pass".'

Barbara Kay: Women's Federation sells fear and hatred in place of facts

Matt · 7 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Surveys about perceptions are not science. As any expert in intimate partner violence will tell you, real physical abuse between intimate partners – both heterosexual and homosexual (lesbian inter-partner violence rates are higher than heterosexual) – is mostly bilateral. The actual intimate partner violence victimization rates for domestic violence in 2011 are 18.8% for women, and 19.8% for men. In other words, about one in five women will suffer abuse at the hands of men, and about one in five men will suffer abuse at the hands of women. And by abuse I do not mean rape: I mean everything from psychological control (bilateral) to pushing and shoving, up to flinging objects and knifings, which men and women do to each other in equal numbers. Most women will not be subject to rape or attempted rape in their lifetime.

About 67 women a year are killed by their intimate partners; so are about 40 men a year. In a nation of 35 million people, this figure is not indicative of an alarming or widespread social pathology.

But that is not the message the Canadian Women's Federation is spreading with this meretricious video. This ad promotes needlessly elevated fear for their safety amongst women and, more reprehensibly, promotes hatred of men as a group. Watch the video, "dislike" it, as I did, and tell them why.'

F&F: A Change in Ohio Statutes Could Prevent Similar Tragedies

Matt · 7 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Emilliano Terry, a 3 year Cleveland boy, is dead. His skull was fractured and his body deposited in a dumpster. His twenty year old mother has been charged with his murder.

It's been just over one week since Emilliano Terry was reported missing. In one month, our memories will fade and those of us outside of Emilliano's family and community will not remember him at all. He will be remembered as just another sad statistic of domestic violence. But now, one week later, as facts emerge concerning Camilia Terry, the boy's mother, it is obvious that Emilliano was living in a high risk environment and something should have been done. In fact, a lively round of the blame game has begun.

In this game, everyone associated with the mother is to blame. The maternal grandmother is to blame because she abused Camilia as a child - thus creating a cycle of abuse. The foster care system is to blame because it didn't do enough for Camilia when she was placed there when she was 14. The father, Shawn Dotson, is to blame because he didn't do enough to see his son. The paternal grandmother is to blame because she didn't fight hard enough for custody of her grandchild. Apparently everyone is to blame.'

'So I'm a feminist troublemaker for requesting some women-only space?'

Mastodon · 7 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I am the kind of nutter that gives feminism a bad name. Barmy. A gender hating sexist misandrist. Childish. Selfish. Unsisterly. A saboteur and troublemaker who derails feminist debates by indulging in cheap tricks and meaningless grandstanding.

Such has been the assessment of my character and behaviour from certain quarters, following my participation on a panel after the London Feminist Film Festival screening of the glorious Lesbiana – A Parallel Revolution, a film that documents and celebrates lesbian feminism and separatism. According to a previous piece on Comment is free, I reputedly "asked all the men in the audience to leave", an intervention which was greeted with hearty applause from much of the audience, but also some consternation.

Except, for the record, that wasn't quite what happened. As the transcript of the event makes clear, what I in fact said at the beginning of the panel discussion was:

"I just wonder if there are any men that would like to show their solidarity and leave at this point, out of respect for autonomous women's space. It's a polite invitation, but I just thought you might like to consider it, as political allies. Thank you." [Cheers and applause.]
...
It is fascinating that such a mildly expressed invitation should have proved so controversial, and fascinating that the version of events collectively agreed by many "feminists" involves apportioning blame to me for "sabotaging" and "derailing" not just the event, but indeed the whole festival.'

France set to enact sweeping changes to sexual equality laws

Mastodon · 7 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The proposals will include "ABC of gender equality" lessons for children as young as six, the threat of imposing compulsory equal pay for men and women in the same jobs and tougher laws on domestic violence.

France's women's rights minister Najat Vallaud-Belkacem said: "This will become the third generation of equality legislation after women were given the right to vote in 1944 and abortion was legalised in 1975."

She made the comments on the day France called its first cross-ministry meeting on women's' rights in 12 years.

New draft laws outlined yesterday will allow the courts to accelerate restraining orders and trials for violent male partners and provide females considered under threat of violence with free emergency mobile phones to alert police.

Employers will be inspected to ensure men and women receive equal pay, and could be forced by law to raise a women's salary or lower a man's to ensure fairness in large companies.
...
In 2010, former president Nicolas Sarkozy introduced a law meaning married couples could be jailed for verbally insulting each other during domestic arguments.

The new offence of 'psychological violence' – aimed at protecting women from abusive men – covers violent threats, false accusations of infidelity and even insults over a partner's appearance, and is punishable by up to three years in prison.'

Antiquated Title IX laws keeping LSU from a men's soccer program

Mastodon · 7 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Statistically speaking, more men walk onto teams than women do through a four-year period," said Associate Athletics Director and Senior Women's Administrator Miriam Segar. "We constantly monitor sports to see if the interest and ability on campus will allow us to add more women's sports."

The monitoring process at LSU includes surveys to gauge interest in sports throughout the area, looking at other SEC schools' women's programs and keeping tabs on several NCAA emerging sports.

If LSU added another men's sport, it would widen the gap in participation between male and female student-athletes.

The addition of a men's sport is handicapped by the Title IX requirements. If LSU added a men's program, it would limit its options of significant interest in another women's sport developed at the University.'

Nurse accused of killing Oldham baby in botched circumcision used ‘discredited’ procedure, court hears

Mastodon · 7 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Grace Adeleye, 67, of Sarnia Court, Salford, denies manslaughter by gross negligence where 27-day-old Goodluck Caubergs died following the operation at his home.

The jury in Manchester Crown Court heard evidence from expert circumcision consultant Nigel Zoltie on the Nigerian religious ‘clamp and cut’ procedure used by Adeleye in the circumcision.

He said: “Bleeding is such a significant risk that it must be explained to the parents, particularly for the method used on Goodluck.”'

Affirmative action is sexism and misandry

Mastodon · 7 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Affirmative action on behalf of women is a form of misandry. I know this comment will provoke shrieks of outrage from the sisterhood, and I am not sure what the current definition of misandry is in the Macquarie Dictionary. However, although Wikipedia defines misandry as the hatred or dislike of men or boys, I am confident the Macquarie Dictionary can define it down as "indifference to the plight of men and boys", which is the sense in which I am using the word.

I am increasingly irritated by pompous statements from some of Australia's top chief executives as headlined in The Australian (Business 28/11/12) "Call for targets to get women to the top". These executives include Grant O'Brien from Woolworths, Qantas boss Alan Joyce, Telstra's David Thodey and ANZ's Mike Smith, who have all called for more companies to set targets for promoting women into leadership positions.

What immediately struck me about their statement is that not only does the setting of a target compromise or completely bypass the principle of employment and promotion on merit, but none of these CEO's has offered to give up his own job in favour of a woman. It is some other hapless bloke down the line who will miss out on a job or a promotion to make these CEOs feel good and imagine they are contributing to the enlightenment of the universe.'

Women Have Regained Greater Share of Jobs Lost in Recession Than Men

Mastodon · 7 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Dec. 7, 2012 /PRNewswire-USNewswire/ -- According to Institute for Women's Policy Research (IWPR) analysis of the November employment report from the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS), job growth improved, with 146,000 jobs added to nonfarm payrolls. Job growth was strong for women (91,000 jobs) and men (55,000 jobs).

Women's employment growth was aided by strong growth in retail trade (26,000 jobs added for women), education and health services (21,000 jobs added for women), leisure and hospitality (18,000 jobs added for women), and professional and business services (15,000 jobs added for women).

IWPR analysis of the BLS payroll data over the entire course of the recession and recovery shows that in November women passed men in the number of jobs regained in the recovery as a share of jobs lost in the recession. As of November, women have regained 54 percent (1.5 million) of the total jobs they lost in the recession from December 2007 to the trough for women's employment in September 2010 (2.7 million). The picture looks similar for men: men have regained nearly 52 percent (3.2 million) of the jobs they lost between December 2007 and the trough for men's employment in February 2010 (6.1 million).'

Parents sue school district after teen is strip searched in bathroom

Matt · 7 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 15 year-old-boy was allegedly strip-searched by staff at a Chicago high school, and as a result, his parents are now suing the entire school district for violating their son's human rights.

The boy claims he was taken from detention by two security guards to a nearby toilet where he was ordered to stand against the wall whilst the male officer strip-searched him, and the female watched.

The boy's parents are suing the two guards, a Chicago police officer and an assistant principal, the school and its governing body, Chicago Public Schools.'

'The Real War on Women'

Matt · 7 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'A popular meme claims there is a “War on Women” in America. Unlike an actual conflict, this conflagration takes on as many metamorphoses as there are maniacs to proclaim it is occurring. For thinking individuals, “feminism” means equal rather than identical. Yet the only thinking done in this mêlée is the degree to which everyone thinks their opinion is right.
...
In all this kerfuffle things such as common sense, rational thought, and logical deduction have absolutely no place (that is, unless you happen to live in the three-fourths of the world as yet uninfected by such hysterical war whoops). Using any combination of the above does nothing more than demonstrate that you are hopelessly mired in patriarchal battle tactics and have no idea how real women wage warfare.'

'Camille Paglia: Taylor Swift, Katy Perry and Hollywood Are Ruining Women'

Matt · 7 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Forbes released its annual list of Hollywood's highest-paid women in October, it was no surprise that Oprah Winfrey passed everyone else by a mile. Her vast media empire, pulling in $165 million last year, swamped her nearest competitor, Britney Spears, whose earnings from music, TV and product endorsements totaled a distant second at $58 million. Spears' career has made a spectacular recovery after what seemed like a squalid death spiral just a few short years ago -- but she's being given a run for her money by the new gals in town.

It's staggering that 22-year-old Taylor Swift earned $57 million and Katy Perry $45 million. How is it possible that such monumental fortunes could be accumulated by performers whose songs have barely escaped the hackneyed teenybopper genre? But more important, what do the rise and triumph of Swift and Perry tell us about the current image of women in entertainment?
...
...But middle-class white girls, told that every career is open to them and encouraged to excel at athletics, are faced with slacker white boys nagged by the PC thought police into suppressing their masculinity -- which gets diverted instead into video games and the flourishing genre of online pornography.'

Men more likely to die of cancer: study

Minuteman · 8 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Not only are men more likely than women to be diagnosed with cancer, among those who get the disease, men also have a higher chance of dying from it, according to a new study.

In an analysis of cases of all but the sex-specific cancers like prostate and ovarian cancers, for example, men with the disease were more likely than women to die in each of the past 10 years, researchers found.

That translates to an extra 24,130 men dying of cancer in 2012 because of their gender.

"This gap needs to be closed," said Dr. Shahrokh Shariat from Weill Cornell Medical College in New York, who worked on the study.

"It's not about showing that men are only doing worse and, ‘poor men.' It's about closing gender differences and improving health care" for both men and women, he said.'

Warren Farrell interview on recent Canadian university protest

Matt · 8 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

'Warren Farrell, named one of the world's top 100 thinkers, was stifled for the first time ever on a Canadian university campus.'

Pennsylvania woman killed boyfriend after she ‘smelled sex’ on him, prosecutor says

Matt · 8 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Prosecutors say a northwestern Pennsylvania woman told her boyfriend she had "smelled sex" on him before she killed him earlier this year.

Thirty-one-year-old Rachel Kozloff is on trial in the April 12 killing of her boyfriend of eight weeks.

Investigators say Kozloff shot Michael Henry at his Erie apartment because she suspected him of cheating on her. Her then-10-month-old son was in a nearby room.'

SAVE E-lert: DED Shake-Up; Demand that Secy. Duncan Restore the Presumption of Innocence on Campus

Matt · 9 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

After a Duke Law Review article chided the Department of Education's Sexual Assault Directive for its "fatally inadequate discussion" and "unacceptable" and "perverse" effects on due process, Russlynn Ali resigned. Ali headed the Dept. of Education's Office for Civil Rights and was the lead author of the Directive.

Today, email or call Dept. of Ed. Secretary Arne Duncan with the message, "Repeal the Sexual Assault Directive!"

Email: arne.duncan-at-ed.gov
Call: 1-800-USA-LEARN (872-5327)

Nearly 90 editorials have criticized the Directive for ignoring civil rights, removing the presumption of innocence, and fostering false allegations: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/ded-editorials/

Let's end this nonsense now!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

State Department: Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues Travels to Northern Ireland, etc.

Minuteman · 9 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Nice work if you can get it. Link here. Excerpt:

'In Belfast, Northern Ireland December 7, Ambassador Verveer will deliver an address on Women, Peace, and Security at the University of Ulster. She will meet with women active in advancing the Northern Ireland peace process, as well as with representatives of the Women in Business Northern Ireland organization.

In Dhaka, Bangladesh, December 8-9, Ambassador Verveer will launch the South Asian Women's Entrepreneurship Symposium and deliver remarks.

...

Continuing on to Stockholm, Sweden December 10-12, Ambassador Verveer will participate in the World Bank's Gender Advisory Council meeting, speaking on a panel to discuss post 2015 gender and development along with Nigerian Finance Minister Ngozi Okongo-Iweala and Under Secretary and Executive Director of UN Women Michelle Bachelet.

...

Ambassador Verveer will then join Secretary of State Hillary Clinton in Tunis, Tunisia on December 12 for the Forum for the Future Conference where she will participate in the women's empowerment session, and accompany her to Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates on December 14.'

Europe moves toward quotas for female CEOs

Mastodon · 9 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"If you want a transformative change, if you want something to move forward faster, you sometimes have to impose mechanisms to reach that," said Hilde Tonne, executive vice president and head of group industrial development at Norway's largest telecoms company Telenor.

She rejects criticism that quotas lead to tokenism, or the hiring of women who are not as qualified as men available for the same job.

"You want someone to be there because they are the best candidate," she said. "I think you get more and more competent women to choose from and you get more and more men that have had to compete with women so they are more competent now as well."

Others, including prominent businesswomen, say quotas interfere with the rights of companies to determine what is best for their businesses.'

'Watering down women on boards quota is not the way to go'

Mastodon · 9 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE EUROPEAN COMMISSION recently approved proposals from justice commissioner Viviane Reding to have women in at least 40% of board positions by 2020. Unfortunately, following fierce opposition from a number of member states, including the UK, the proposals have been watered down and will not address the unconscious and political bias which blocks the progress of a pool of talented and aspiring senior women executives.

The proposals approved by the European Commission will require member states to put in place measures designed to ensure women hold 40% of non-executive board positions by 2020. These apply only to large listed companies and the proposal is for a common objective, rather than prescriptive regulations and sanctions.

In my view, this is an opportunity missed to address the discrimination inherent in our boards and the appointments process by implementing temporary compulsory gender quotas. Self-regulation has not worked and the current proposals allow member states and their large corporates to continue to pay lip service to the proven business case for diversity on boards.'

Ask Men: Top 10: Manhaters

Mastodon · 9 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You've probably met a few in your time: Women so embittered by the past wrongs they experienced from men that they want to write you, your friends and every other man off as a prick, ahole or bastard. To put them on display, we've put together a top 10 list of manhaters.

These include a range of women who regularly trade on their hatred of men for their career to scorned women just tapping into their hatred. From consistent tirades against our gender to recent confessions to the media, one thing is clear: when a manhater enters the room, the temperature immediately drops a few degrees.

Ready to see which ice queens made the list? Here's our list of the top 10 manhaters.'

FB Hate Page: The Man Hater's Club

Mastodon · 9 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Page here.

'Empowering Women since June 2010! Females rule the world!!!!

Mission
A place to vent, share, and discuss the jerkness of the opposite sex!'

Father is ready to turn page on Utah adoption horror story

Mastodon · 9 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This is a follow-up to this story. Excerpt:

'A 4th District Court judge says he is "astonished and deeply troubled" by a Utah adoption agency's deliberate move to circumvent the rights of a married man whose daughter was adopted at birth without his knowledge.

The Provo judge, while noting the birth mother had deceived her husband, the adoption agency and the prospective parents, has given the adoptive couple 60 days to give the child back.

In a 48-page ruling, Judge Darold McDade said the Adoption Center of Choice's policy of refusing to disclose any information to Terry Achane once he learned what had happened to his baby is "utterly indefensible."

Salt Lake City attorneys Mark and Scott Wiser, the father/son team that represented Achane, used even stronger language for what occurred.

"This is a case of human trafficking," said Mark Wiser. "Children are being bought and sold. It is one thing what [adoption agencies] have been doing with unmarried biological fathers. It is in a new area when they are trying to take a child away from a married father who wants to have his child."
...
During that hearing, a representative for the Adoption Center of Choice testified that it was "standard practice" to not provide any information when a father — married or not — of a prospective adoptive child called the agency. Kristi Freis told the court that although they knew Achane wanted his child, she and her husband felt they had no obligation to return the baby.
...
"Much of the pain and anguish in this case could have been avoided or at least substantially mitigated if the adoption agency had responded to Mr. Achane's initial requests for information concerning his daughter, and [his] request to have her returned to him back in July or August 2011," McDade said, adding that he hoped the case would "serve as a cautionary tale and prompt the Adoption Center to change its policies so situations like this never happen again."'

UK: Equal pay legislation has resulted in 'interminable litigation', judge claims

Broadsword · 10 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Equal pay litigation has reached "almost epidemic proportions" but has failed to eradicate unfair pay discrimination over the past few decades, a leading judge has claimed.

Lord Justice Mummery launched a broadside against the “interminable litigation” brought to employment tribunals, implying that workers and employers had better things to spend their money on than lawyers’ fees.

The aim of equal pay legislation was not to bring about endless tribunals but to put an end to sex discrimination in matters of pay - something that was taking “a very long time indeed” to achieve, he added.

The appeal court judge said: “Over 30 years of litigation have not eradicated unjustified pay discrimination against both women and men.

"Equal pay litigation in the Employment Tribunals has now reached almost epidemic proportions…

"The long-term goal of the equal pay legislation, which has been in force since 1975, is not, of course, interminable litigation between waged workers and their employers about their rights.'

Men suing Chicago for ignoring exculpatory evidence

Matt · 10 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Terrill Swift, Michael Saunders, Harold Richardson, and Vincent Thames – known as the “Englewood Four” – had their convictions for a 1994 murder overturned last year, after DNA evidence cleared them of guilt.

Richardson and Saunders spent 17 years behind bars before they were cleared. Swift and Thames served 12 years in prison, and had already been released when they were cleared.

Now, all four men are suing the city, Cook County prosecutors, and several detectives, claiming authorities ignored evidence that a career criminal, Johnny “Maniac” Douglas, was responsible for the murders. Last year, new DNA testing linked Douglas to Glover’s murder.

Swift was 17 years old, still in high school, and had never been in trouble, but another teenager from his neighborhood implicated him and three other boys in 1995 in the November 1994 rape and murder of a 30-year-old prostitute named Nina Glover.
...
He said the questioning lasted more than 12 hours, with officers often standing just a few inches away, and yelling at him: “You’re going to die in jail, you’re never going home.”'

Germany: Infamous rapist of men found dead

Minuteman · 10 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A woman labelled "the nymphomaniac of Munich" has been found dead after a drug-fuelled night with a neighbour.

Antje Crapnik, who has twice been arrested for kidnapping men and forcing them to have sex with her, was discovered unresponsive by the man she had just spent the night with.

The 47-year-old was treated for sex addiction in April after police smashed down the down the door to her apartment where she was holding DJ Dieter Schultz against his will, the Sun reports.

Schultz had willingly gone to Crapnik's home after the pair met, but when he tried to leave Crapanik locked the doors and hid her key.

She forced him to have sex with her five more times before he was able to contact police when she fell asleep.

Crapnik avoided any jail time but was forced to consult a psychiatrist for her addiction and admitted that she needed to have sex at least 10 times a day.

The treatment failed and just days after the first attack she was in trouble with the law again.
...
"My daughter was ill, a manic depressive. My Antje was a victim of men," Ms Crapnik's mother said.

"She only went on the pull when she had a manic phase."

An autopsy is yet to be performed on Ms Crapnik but police don't believe her death is suspicious.'

SAVE E-lert: Tell Eric Cantor, "the new definition of sexual assault must be removed from VAWA"

Matt · 10 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

A national survey showed most people favor reforming the Violence Against Women Act. SAVE agrees with the need for reform. We are especially concerned about VAWA's lack of presumption of innocence.

Let's do what we can to fix this. Since there are VAWA negotiations already going on, Eric Cantor needs to hear from you, ASAP! Call (202) 225-2815 and tell Sen. Cantor: "the new definition of sexual assault must be removed from the final version of VAWA!"

We may not have a lot of time left, so let's not waste a minute.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Opinion: Teachers Accused of Sexual Misconduct: A Double Standard?

Mastodon · 10 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The recent arrest of Creekview High School teacher Blake Bearden for sexual assault caused many people to come forward and heap shame on the man for his transgressions.

On Canton-Sixes Patch, several comments were left on the article detailing Bearden's arrest that called the teacher a "pathetic scumbag," a "creep," and "the most disturbed man I've ever come in contact with."

This criticism may well be justified, depending on what the investigation of the case reveals, but what I find interesting is the reaction of people when a male teacher is suspected of misconduct with a student as opposed to a female teacher.

There are web pages that name "Hot Teachers Caught Sleeping With Students," all of whom are female. A popular response to news of a female teacher who is charged with misconduct with a student is, "Where were these teachers when I was a kid?" Instead of concern for the victim, praise is heaped on him or her (usually him) for his supposed conquest, and others lament that the victim "has nowhere else to go but down now."'

Former teacher (Debra LaFave) appealing ruling in Fla. sex case

Mastodon · 10 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) - A former Tampa teacher convicted of having sex with a student wants the Florida Supreme Court to take her off probation.

An appellate court in August reversed a trial judge's decision to end Debra LaFave's 10-year non-prison sentence four years early. LaFave appealed to the Supreme Court in October and Thursday she asked the justices to let her remain off probation until they rule.

A three-judge panel of the 2nd District Court of Appeal also asked the high court to review its decision as a question of great public importance. The panel acknowledged the state had no right under Florida law to appeal the trial judge's decision but cited common law to reverse it.

LaFave pleaded guilty in 2005 to having sex with a 14-year old boy.'

Abuses at infamous Florida boys reform school even more widespread, report says

Matt · 10 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Scientists have found 19 previously unknown grave shafts on the grounds of a notorious Florida reform school, suggesting that many more boys died there amid brutal conditions than had previously been known, the researchers said Monday.

The Arthur G. Dozier School for Boys in Marianna, which was also known as the Florida State Reform School, closed in June 2011 after state investigators and the U.S. Justice Department's Civil Rights Division confirmed widespread abuse over many decades.

The state attributed its decision to close the school to budgetary reasons. Yet long before then, the institution had been the target of investigations and lawsuits alleging not only physical and mental abuse but also forced labor, rape and even murder of the young charges sent to its care since it opened in 1900.'

'Let's Give Chivalry Another Chance'

Mastodon · 11 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women, she said, "want to be treated like ladies."

Bennett and her fellow chivalry advocates have the right idea. "If women give up on chivalry, it will be gone," Sommers tells me. "If boys can get away with being boorish, they will, happily. Women will pay the price."

If feminists want to level the playing field between men and women, they should find common cause with traditionalist women, like those at ASU, on the issue of chivalry. Both groups are concerned with how men treat women. They just differ in what that means: Feminists want men to treat women as equals; traditionalists want men to treat women like ladies. Are the two mutually exclusive?

Chivalry is about respect. It is about not harming or hurting others, especially those who are more vulnerable than you. It is about putting other people first and serving others often in a heroic or courageous manner. It is about being polite and courteous. In other words, chivalry in the age of post-feminism is another name we give to civility. When we give up on civility, understood in this way, we can never have relationships that are as meaningful as they could be.

If women today—feminists and non-feminists alike—encouraged both men and women to adopt the principles of civil and chivalrous conduct, then the standards of behavior for the two sexes would be the same, fostering the equality that feminists desire. Moreover, the relations between the sexes would be once again based on mutual respect, as the traditionalists want. Men and women may end up being civil and well-mannered in different ways, but at least they would be civil and well-mannered, an improvement on the current situation.'

Women’s Studies and the Spread of Man-Hatred

Mastodon · 11 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women’s Studies is not just the Big Mama of the “identity studies” rackets at North American institutions of higher education – it’s also arguably the most influential, its foundational tenets having become, on virtually every college campus, a rigid institutional orthodoxy that the individual student challenges at his or her peril. At the heart of that orthodoxy, of course, is the idea that we live in a “patriarchy,” in which male power and oppression are ubiquitous. One corollary of this view is that rape is not a crime committed by one twisted individual against a helpless victim but is, rather, a product of those universal male attributes, aggression and misogyny. As innumerable young men are informed at freshman orientation, they, and all other males, are potential rapists, every last one of them. Indeed, as one course after another, in a range of disciplines, strives to underscore nowadays, pretty much every negative phenomenon in human society can be traced to the poisonous needs and uncontrollable impulses of males, without whom there would, for example, be no war, no cutthroat competition, no violence of any kind.
...

Well, you can certainly say that again. Alas, this is the true face of Women’s Studies – a “discipline” that, at its core, has nothing whatsoever to do with education in any objective sense and everything to do with the inculcation of an unreasoning enmity for an entire sex (and that includes inculcating self-hatred in young men). These pointlessly angry young women have been taught by their feminist professors that they’re victims of the patriarchy, and they’ve bought the whole thing hook, line, and sinker; but they’ve also been taught – by, perversely, the very same professors – to think and act like authoritarian thugs, gangsters in the service of what is, when you come right down to it, and whether or not they realize it, nothing less than an ideology of hate.'

New Zealand: 'Economic abuse' to be put on par with domestic violence

Mastodon · 11 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women's Refuge says a law change to put economic abuse - such as excessive control over the purse strings - on a par with violent abuse will help to counter the view that only physical abuse amounts to domestic violence.

"Economic abuse" will be included in the definition of domestic violence in major reforms to the Family Court which will go before Parliament for the first time today.

Examples of economic abuse include restricting access to money, extorting or spending someone else's money, or preventing someone from working.

Women's Refuge head Heather Henare said "economic abuse" was an issue for abused women as well as disabled or elderly people with caregivers or other family members who had some control over their finances. She said the change would make it easier for women to recognise it as a true form of abuse.'

Ed.: Also see this article. Check out that picture of a menacing male figure in a doorway. No anti-male fear-mongering here, is there?

Op-Ed: False Rape and Alleged Historic Rape

Mastodon · 11 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When is a man guilty of rape? When he is accused by more than one alleged victim, according to one MP. Fortunately, the law sees things differently.

It is widely believed that rape is a greatly under-reported crime; not everyone shares this view, especially the False Rape Society*. As they point out, no one knows for certain how many genuine rapes are not reported. The flip side is rapes that are reported but never occurred, and the sad thing is that it doesn't take much of a search to unearth a mass of these.'

---
*This off-linked piece is a must-read. Highly recommended.

SAVE Applauds Proposed Suspension of Prosecutor Mary Kellett

Matt · 12 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON/December 11, 2012 – A Maine bar association panel has recommended the suspension of prosecutor Mary N. Kellett, two years after the state Supreme Court reprimanded Kellett for unethical actions. SAVE applauds the panel's decision, and calls for stronger oversight of prosecutor conduct.

SAVE – Stop Abusive and Violent Environments – a victim advocacy organization, deplores the fact that frivolous prosecutions harm the credibility of victims and waste scarce taxpayer resources.

In September 2010 the Maine Supreme Judicial Court rebuked Assistant District Attorney Kellett for numerous irregularities in prosecuting a rape claim against Vladek Filler. Despite the decision, Kellett continued to prosecute sexual assault cases that lacked DNA evidence, independent witnesses, and credible allegations, SAVE alleges.

On March 29, 2011, SAVE filed a Grievance Complaint with the Board of Overseers of the Bar calling for Kellett's disbarment "in order to assure the safety and tranquility of the citizens of Maine:" http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp/campaigns/abuse-hysteria-campaign/

On April 6, 2012, the Board of Overseers of the Bar issued a Disciplinary Petition concluding Mary Kellett acted in a manner "unworthy of an attorney" for violating nine rules of attorney conduct.'

Senators: Girl power would get 'fiscal cliff' deal

Mastodon · 12 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Would there be a deal that avoids going over the "fiscal cliff" if women were in charge of Congress and the White House?

Female senators resoundingly said "yes" in an interview with ABC News.

"I think if we were in charge of the Senate and the administration that we would have a budget deal by now," said Sen. Susan Collins, R-Maine, as 18 of her female colleagues nodded their heads in agreement. "What I find is with all due deference to our male colleagues that women's styles tend to be more collaborative."
...
"I think by nature we are less confrontational and more collaborative," said Sen. Claire McCaskill, D-Mo. "Not only do we want to work in a bipartisan way, we do it."'

AVFM Forums

Rog · 13 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

AVFM forums are available here, just giving them another plug.

Men`s Rights Are human Rights!

Mom, 35, 'had sex with four underage boys she met through her son, aged ten'

Matt · 13 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother has been accused of having sex with four underage boys she met through her ten-year-old son.

Courtney Sue Reschke, from Idaho, is alleged to have plied the teens - all 15-years-old - with alcohol before having sex with them at her home.

Police said the 35-year-old was engaged in a sexual encounter when her five-year-old child tried to get into the bedroom at her home in Kuna, Idaho.

An arrest report revealed Reschke ignored her son and continued to have sex.

The 35-year-old met the teens through her oldest son who is aged ten. She was charged with two counts of felony injury to a child and felony lewd conduct with a child under 16.

Investigators said their investigation is still ongoing and Reschke could face further charges.'

F&F: Bring Fathers and Families to Your State

Matt · 13 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My dream for Fathers and Families is to build a strong affiliate in every state. Fathers and Families is on its way to making this a reality. Get ready. We are coming to your state.

With your gift – and enthusiastic volunteers – we are building in Massachusetts, Ohio, California, Georgia, Kentucky, and Washington.
...
Massachusetts, where we started, is leading the way. We secured a place for our founder, Ned Holstein, on Governor Deval Patrick's Working Group on Child-Centered Family Law. The legislature is looking to this Working Group for its recommendations on massively overhauling family law, and Ned is advocating for shared parenting.'

Hillary Clinton admits US material support of al-Qaeda affiliates in Syria

Matt · 13 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. So, al-Qaeda is an alliance of Islamists who seek the imposition of Sharia throughout the Middle East (to start), and eventually, the world. Sharia requires, among other things, for women to be subservient to men in a multitude of ways, in particular to be subservient to their fathers first, then after marriage, to their husbands. They are expected and required to remain veiled in public and behave in an "Islamic fashion befitting a female," or words to that effect. Yet Hillary Clinton, our Secretary of State and world-famous feminist, admits publicly that the US has been supporting al-Qaeda affiliates in Syria-- the same goons that fought against and killed U.S. troops in Iraq, no less. My goodness, politics sure does make for strange bedfellows. Wonder how her Secretary-of-Stateness reconciles this with her long-held feminist ideology? Wonder how her boss reconciles it? We'll probably never know. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton has admitted that Al-Qaeda is supporting the Syrian rebels, who are backed by the Obama administration with $200 million dollars in aid. According to McClatchy Newspapers one of these groups, Al Nusra Front, an Al-Qaeda affiliate, is now conducting “the heaviest frontline fighting” in Syria and has been responsible for terrorist attacks. Impartial observers such as Dr. Jacques Beres say the majority of rebels in Syria are foreign extremists whose goal is to impose Sharia law. These rebels have also been filmed burning U.S. flags and chanting anti-American slogans. Funding terrorists is a crime under the National Defense Authorization Act. Such activity has had disastrous consequences in the past, such as 9/11. We demand all support direct or indirect to cease immediately.

Petitions posted on the WhiteHouse.gov website have to obtain a minimum of 25,000 signatures to mandate an official White House response. Only American citizens who register an account are allowed to sign.

The petition is timely given that 29 different Syrian opposition groups this week pledged their allegiance to Al Nusra, an Al-Qaeda-affiliated group which, as the New York Times reported on Saturday, “killed numerous American troops in Iraq,” dismissing the notion that Al Nusra is merely is one “bad apple” amongst the rebels. In reality, the United States is backing an uprising that has placed the imposition of Sharia law and the ultimate destruction of the United States at the core of its long term agenda once Assad is deposed.
...
In continuing to fund an uprising that is being led and executed by known terrorists while being supported by their rebel allies, the United States is breaking its own law, the National Defense Authorization Act, which specifically criminalizes support for any “associated forces” of terrorists.'

Parents of strip-searched boy sue North Carolina school district

Mastodon · 13 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I'm certain sexual assault charges would be filed if a male principal did this to a young girl. Excerpt:

'A 10-year-old North Carolina boy whose parents say he was traumatized when strip-searched by an assistant principal have sued district officials, alleging a violation of the boy's constitutional protection from unreasonable searches and seizures.

In an 11-page complaint, Clarinda and Lionel Shawn Cox allege their son, Justin, was searched for a missing $20 bill by former Union Elementary School Assistant Principal Teresa Holmes in June. A fifth-grader at the time, Justin was taken aside by Holmes — who has since reportedly retired — to be searched after a female classmate dropped coins on a cafeteria floor and he retrieved them, according to the lawsuit.

“[Holmes] ordered J.C. to remove his shoes, socks, pants, and shirt,” the complaint reads. “When J.C. was stripped down to his undershorts and undershirt, [Holmes] put her fingers inside the waistband of J.C.’s undershorts and ran her fingers around the waistband. [Holmes] also lifted J.C.’s undershirt and searched his bare torso.”

Holmes ultimately did not find the missing $20 bill, which was later found on the cafeteria floor by another teacher. Clarinda Cox later returned home that day to find Justin waiting outside for her, which “was unusual,” according to the lawsuit.'

Sweden: Municipality beginning to address issues for fathers after divorce

Matt · 14 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Translated article here. Excerpt:

'Welfare targeted recently criticized Kungsbacka Municipality for case management in child custody disputes. She does not believe that her management is unique, but that it is a historical legacy of seeing the mother as the natural guardian in social services throughout the country.
...
Thorbjorn Leu, who has experience of a custody battle in which he felt unfairly treated by the social services, was one of the participants at the meeting. Today, his situation resolved well. He feels they have a good relationship with his children and his ex-wife. Now he has taken the fight to other men's rights by at their leisure to engage in the newly formed Men's and family shelter where he will impact both in Kungsbacka on the national level by courting politicians in parliament.'

SAVE Urges High Court to Impose Sanctions to Curb Prosecutorial Misconduct

Matt · 14 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON/December 13, 2012 – Following a bar panel recommendation to suspend the license of prosecutor Mary N. Kellett, SAVE is urging the Maine Supreme Judicial Court to act promptly to affirm and restore fundamental legal principles of due process and the presumption of innocence.

In its December 5, 2012 decision, a panel of the Board of Overseers of the Bar concluded Assistant District Attorney Kellett violated at least seven Maine Bar Rules. The panel then recommended the Hancock County prosecutor be sanctioned with a “period of suspension.” The panel’s recommendation now goes to a Maine high court justice for a final decision:
http://www.maine.gov/tools/whatsnew/index.php?topic=mebar_overseers_discipline&id=464815&v=article'

'Malignant Narcissism in Circumcision'

Mastodon · 14 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(MONTEREY, CA) - The American Academy of Pediatrics crafted a criminally based Circumcision Policy Statement justifying male abuse and molestation. Advisory members from other medical specialties included, in part, Obstetrics & Gynecology, Urology and Family Practice as well as the Centers for Disease Control. Obstetricians perform most circumcisions. Pediatric Urologists often repair errors with some making that their entire practice.

RADM Preston's 1970 article in the Journal of the American Medical Association stated there are over 100 fatalities annually from circumcision.[2] This prompted the Pediatrics association to issue a Policy Statement in 1971 against routine efficacy. Policy has been blandly upheld until now. Yet, the practice continued despite. And fatalities continued. In 42 years the conservative estimate of deaths are 4,200. The numbers are more likely than not from required Reportable events which occur only at the time and place of incidence - if made at all.[3]

Recently the American Academy of Pediatrics failed advocating the most minor genital assault on females because of public backlash. But the practice continues underground. Males also need protection. The Sacrificial Male must cease. The Sacrificial Child must cease.[4,5,6]'

Shrill backlash to men’s rights advocate

Mastodon · 14 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Farrell is enormously respected for his challenge to the assumption that men have total power, and he is also controversial because he has questioned some of the statistics about abuse, rape and gender imbalance.

He supports his claims with a great deal of research, of course, but none of this matters to those who would silence him. There were around 100 of these fanatics at the university before he spoke, ripping down posters, threatening and insulting anybody who tried to attend the lecture, and explaining as only heavily funded students can do, “You should be f---ing ashamed of yourself, you f---ing scum” to those with whom they disagreed. There is ample video evidence.

They gave Nazi salutes to the police and screamed in their faces that they were “f---ing scum and f---ing pigs,” including to the women police officers.

Why some of them were not arrested is beyond me, as they were clearly physically intimidating other people. But failure to arrest violent thug leftists is now common at such events.

The ugliness and stupidity of the mob was invincible. Caked in bad makeup and piercings, their faces creased in hatred and self-loathing, they screamed at Farrell and anybody who wanted to hear him — supporters or opponents — and tried to block all of the exits and entrances. They laughed at and abused anybody who told personal stories about tragedy and suffering, chanted that men’s rights groups were hate groups, and proudly stated their intention was to close down the event and prevent free speech.'

Could women really have solved the fiscal cliff?

Mastodon · 14 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If women were running the show, this whole fiscal cliff thing would be solved.

That was the essential message that came from Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine) and that was greeted with nodding approval by the female senators of the 113th Congress in an interview with Diane Sawyer taped Tuesday. Collins shared that “I think if we were in charge of the Senate and of the administration, that we would have a budget deal by now.” She went on to say that “what I find is, with all due deference to our male colleagues, that women’s styles tend to be more collaborative.”

But would they really? Research doesn’t wholly support it.
...
Still, the differences between male and female leadership styles are actually pretty small. And often, our image of women as collaborators—making peace between everyone from warring colleagues to squabbling toddlers—doesn’t actually come from our experience with how women behave when they’re placed in top leadership roles. For instance, writes leadership professor Ronald Riggio over at Psychology Today, when women in top jobs are studied, they “seem to exhibit the same sorts of leadership behaviors as their male counterparts.”'

Student Accepted Into Program After False Rape Complaint

Mastodon · 14 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'VERNON — A student charged with falsely claiming she was raped by a group of men at UConn the weekend students moved onto campus, triggering an alert to more than 30,000, was accepted into a program Wednesday that could lead to the erasure of her charges.

Isabella Himmel, 20, of Chicago was arrested Sept. 19 and charged with second-degree falsely reporting an incident, second-degree making a false statement and second-degree breach of peace.

...

Investigators reviewed surveillance video of her leaving each bar and, eventually, walking on Route 195. Although she wasn't always in view, police never saw her getting attacked, running or taking off her boots.

Her friend told investigators that when Himmel left Ted's, she was upset he "wasn't paying attention" to her, police said.

When Himmel talked to police again, she agreed that she was "moody" that night, the warrant states. She also told police that she was no longer sure that she had been sexually assaulted, it states; she may have been kicked.'

Ken Burns: Duke Lacrosse Team 'Mildly Inconvenienced' by False Rape Charges

Mastodon · 14 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Burns brought up the 2006 Duke Lacrosse case, in which three students were accused of sexually assaulting a stripper, during an interview with The Phoenix in Boston:

In the same issue as your interview we are also running a profile of Damien Echols. What are the similarities and differences between this case and that of the West Memphis Three?

[Burns] Basically both are instances where society deems someone an "other" and treats them as such, contrary to the actual facts of the case. And you can also compare the Central Park Five to the Duke University lacrosse players, three rich white boys who were mildly inconvenienced by rape charges that proved to be false. In no time the prosecutor of that case was fired, disbarred, and put in jail, and the three ended up getting a huge settlement.'

Tears and forgiveness as Longview dad, daughter speak on false rape allegations

Mastodon · 14 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Longview father, wrongly accused of raping his own child tearfully spoke out on national television with his daughter at his side.

Cassandra Kennedy was 11 years old in 2001 when she accused her father of rape. Now, as a 23-year-old, she apologized to her now-free dad on "Katie."

"Thank you for being a good dad and I'm sorry for my wrong perspective as a child about you," she told her dad, Thomas Edward Kennedy, on the show. "I'm glad you're here for me now."

Last January, Cassandra told police she made up the rape allegations when she was a child.

"I was just angry and upset because I felt like he wasn't around enough and you know, broken promises and stuff like that," Cassandra said. Host Katie Couric asked her if she had just wanted more of her dad, "I did. I wanted more of my dad."

Thomas denied the rape allegations at the time but was convicted and sentenced to more than 15 years in prison. After serving nearly a decade, he was released and all charges against him were dismissed.'

Shocking footage shows teacher dragging blind student, 6, down a hallway 'because he refused to go to class'

Mastodon · 14 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A special education teacher has been placed on administrative leave after a shocking surveillance video emerged of herI dragging a six-year-old blind student down a school hallway.

The teacher, who has not been identified, is seen grabbing the youngster by one of his ankles and pulling him along on his back as another teacher holds his other leg, and a third staff member walks behind.

The alleged ringleader, who now faces child abuse charges, told police in Santa Fe, New Mexico that she moved the boy after he refused to go to another classroom when told to do so.

The boy, who has also not been named, appears helpless in the video as he reaches to protect his head. He complained about head pain to the nurse afterwards, but did not need medical treatment.
...

The second teacher in the video also faces child abuse charges. She is a contract employee in the Special Education Department and police said she has not cooperated with the investigation.
...
Dobyns added that the youngster's family did not want to press criminal charges against the teacher after the school told them about the incident.

'The boy's parents like this teacher,' she said. 'This teacher has been working with their child for quite some time.'"

State Department: "RT Girls! Program" Launch at Thomas Jefferson High School for Science & Technology

Minuteman · 15 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Under Secretary for Public Diplomacy and Public Affairs Tara Sonenshine and Acting Under Secretary for Arms Control and International Security Rose Gottemoeller will co-launch the “RT Girls! Program” at Thomas Jefferson High School for Science & Technology on Wednesday, December 19 at 2:00 p.m. The “RT Girls! Program” is designed to encourage girls to pursue studies and careers in the science, technology, engineering and mathematic (STEM) and international security fields, public diplomacy, and other sectors with technology applications. The program will have subsequent outreach activities in high schools around the DC metro area with the eventual goals of expanding internationally.

During their visit to Thomas Jefferson High School for Science & Technology, the Under Secretaries will speak to 40-50 girls about their educational and professional experiences, learn about students’ STEM-related projects, share career possibilities in related fields, and participate in a Q&A session.

Empowering women and girls in STEM is a priority for the Obama Administration.'

It's time feminists stopped blaming all men for violence

Mastodon · 15 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I will not bear the collective guilt of liberal homogenizations. Being a man does not make me guilty of misogyny. I reject the collective guilt implied by the radical feminist provocateurs of Dec. 6.

I did not arrest, imprison or kill Japanese people during the Second World War. I did not slaughter native people on the move westward by white Europeans in the 19th century. And I did not murder 14 innocent women at the Montreal Polytechnique in 1989.

I get the point that women are still mistreated in Canada, still bullied and discriminated against, still assaulted and killed by evil men. But I am not a piece of Janice Kennedy's collective "male as guilty context." It's not her insinuated guilt that I rail against. It's the direct attack on my gender - that being a man is somehow less worthy of the respect and dignity afforded to all people.'

Men Who Disagree With You Are Not Evidence Of Misogyny (Or Trolls)

Mastodon · 15 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Misogyny is a real thing. It is a real thing, it exists, there are societal biases against women all over the place (I tried to begin listing them, but I figured you didn't want to read a 40 page long article). It is not a made up term. And there are many ways it manifests itself.

However, it is notable that none of those ways are evident in Sarah Jaffe's "Memories of My Misogynist Trolls*" piece on Jezebel. The only thing the much discussed pieces seems to indicate is that if you pick disagreements with people they will yell at you. Just as people have been doing with other people essentially since the dawn of time.
...
This is certainly a story about gender, but not the way Jaffe thinks it is. If Jaffe had been a man who interrupted someone's conversation and demeaned their opinion – in a bar, where people had been drinking, and thanks to the presidential election tensions were already high, although, to be fair, you do not find many tea-party members at bars in Greenpoint – he certainly would have been yelled at. There is a very high chance that a physical altercation might have occurred. And no one would have sat around patting man-Jaffe on the back to soothe him, because, well, it's understood that if you provoke arguments with strangers that's a possible outcome.
...
You're a feminist because you don't like men yelling at you? That is not a reason to be a feminist. That is a reason to join a role playing community with a strong emphasis upon chivalry.

Being a woman and being a feminist does not give you a free pass to go around antagonizing strangers with no repercussions. Feeling shaky and victimized afterwards certainly doesn't make you a feminist hero, it makes you a person who does not anticipate other people's responses well. There is, to my memory, no episode of the Mary Tyler Moore show where she goads a guy into a bar fight and then, after he is ejected, sits at a table, tearily murmuring "I'm a feminist. A feminist" to her friends.'

'Connecticut shooting, white males, and mass murder'

Mastodon · 15 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I want to say this next bit very carefully. It is absolutely true that white men have lost a lot of power in the last few decades. Inasmuch as these shooters are angry about feelings of powerlessness, their feelings are at least understandable. However, white men needed to lose a lot of power. Without exaggerating, one could say that a history of America is a history of white men lording power over... pretty much anyone who wasn't a white man. If America was ever going to truly be a land of equality, white men needed to lose their power.

The thing is, losing power hurts. That's the "aggrieve" part of aggrieved entitlement. It's one thing for a bunch of white men to feel hurt because they are no longer the kings of their own private castles, rulers of all they survey. It's another thing for them to feel like they're entitled to power, and more importantly, entitled to punish others for taking it away. And that -- aggrievement plus the feeling of entitlement -- is what may well drive people like Adam Lanza to these horrific crimes.

There's another point of commonality for many -- perhaps most -- of these crimes. Most of the perpetrators end up dead. Many kill themselves at the end of the spree, while others commit what is known as "suicide by cop," forcing police to shoot them rather than submit to arrest. This tendency is consistent with aggrieved entitlement. Masculinity, for many white men, is identical to sense of self. To be a man is literally the same as being masculine. This is particularly true of men in strongly Conservative Christian areas where homosexuality and femininity are equated. For some of these men, to be stripped of masculinity is to be redefined as nothing worthwhile. When someone feels like nothing, suicide often feels like a reasonable option. For someone who's really, really mad about feeling like nothing, taking revenge first may add a bit of satisfaction and righteous vengeance.'

Stop the Violence Against Women Act's war on men

Matt · 15 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) claims to fairly protect all victims of domestic violence, in reality it intentionally discriminates against about half of the victims — men ("Progressive groups pressure House GOP to pass Violence Against Women Act," Dec. 11).

First, social science research literature is unambiguously clear. Domestic violence is initiated about equally by men and women; slightly more women than men are physically harmed, but men nonetheless still represent more than 40 percent of the physically harmed victims; the domestic violence initiation rates for women, and especially young women, have been rising; and the domestic violence rates for bisexuals, gays and lesbians all are higher than for heterosexual couples. Yet men receive no protection under the current versions of VAWA under consideration.

Second, the ideological foundations of VAWA discriminate against men. Conceptually, VAWA is based on the Duluth Power and Control Wheel model, which falsely presumes that all domestic violence is perpetrated by evil patriarchal males against virtuously innocent females. There is no research support for this false gender ideology.'

Woman charged with missing husband's murder

Matt · 15 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Hopewell, N.Y. — Rose Chase, of Stanley, was charged today with second-degree murder in the death of her husband, Adam Chase, who had been missing since June, said Ontario County District Attorney R. Michael Tantillo.

Rose, 31, was arraigned this morning in Canandaigua City Court, Tantillo said. She is being held at the Ontario County Jail without bail and is due back in court on Wednesday, Dec. 19, for a preliminary hearing.

According to investigators, Adam Chase left his home after an argument with Rose, his wife of 11 years, at approximately 11:30 a.m. June 14. He was 31 at the time of his disappearance, said Ontario County Sheriff Phil Povero.'

'Skiing in Engelberg: girl power in the Swiss Alps'

MikeJH · 16 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Male readers are probably now thinking two things: “Man up” and “Three female skiers in Engelberg? Unusual…” To address the first point, the growing popularity of women-only ski classes and clinics suggests that I’m far from alone in finding an all-female environment a more supportive and forgiving one in which to learn.
...
The premise is simple: female skiers and boarders who book at least four nights’ accommodation in Engelberg during Ladies’ Week (which runs from January 19 to 27 in 2013) receive a free lift pass for the duration of their stay, saving £136 on a four-day pass (£187 on a six-day pass). Participating women also benefit from a complimentary run with an instructor, spa access and a schedule of social events throughout the week, with free entrance to night clubs and drinks in selected bars.'

Woman drains ex’s retirement account

Mastodon · 16 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Divorce is a tough experience, but such hardship doesn't cut you any slack if you don't stay on top of your retirement paperwork, as one poor fellow discovered.

Imagine this scenario: After 11 years of marriage, you and your spouse call it quits and you move out of the house. After you leave, a letter from your former employer is delivered to the house that your ex now resides in. The envelope is clearly marked: "To be opened by addressee only." Your ex opens it and discovers there's a new procedure in place to access your retirement funds online. After following the procedures, your ex drains the account in four months.

This happened to Michael Foster of Tulsa, Okla. He lost $42,126.38 altogether -- and didn't even find out about it until January of the following year, when he received a tax form from the plan provider reporting a distribution of that amount. Foster sent a letter to his former employer's plan administrator, "claiming potential fraud, as I did not request withdrawal from my plan and I did not authorize any disbursement from this plan," according to court documents.'

Strip Search Of 10-Year-Old Prompts Complaint Against Elementary School

Matt · 16 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The parents of a 10-year old Union elementary school student have filed a complaint against the school for strip-searching their son to find an allegedly stolen $20 bill.

In a complaint filed against assistant principal Teresa Holmes on Dec. 6, the family of Clinton, N.C., fifth-grader Justin Cox allege their son was ordered to remove his socks, shoes, pants and shirt so the principal could conduct a manual search for a $20 bill that was inevitably found in the cafeteria.

Holmes defended her actions saying that several other students and a few other faculty members told her the money was missing and they had seen the fifth-grader dive below the table for it. The court filing states that Holmes told the boy “he left her no choice and that she had to search him,” when the boy pulled out his pockets and didn’t produce the allegedly stolen money.

...

She told the 10-year old that she had the authority to search him “because teachers and other students thought Justin had the money.”

However, another teacher came into the office at the same time and said that the money had “miraculously” been found on the floor of the cafeteria.

Holmes defended her actions after the fact, telling WRAL-TV, “Any staff member who has ever worked with me knows that I care for my students and that even when I have to discipline them, I love them.”

Holmes hugged the boy and apologized, but Justin’s mother says this is not enough.'

Connecticut mass-murderer's mother implicated in "motivation"

Mastodon · 17 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The mother of the loner who massacred 26 pupils and staff at a US primary school may have played a major part in his catastrophic mental breakdown, it emerged last night.

Friends and family portrayed Adam Lanza's mother Nancy as a paranoid 'survivalist' who believed the world was on the verge of violent, economic collapse.

She is reported to have been struggling to hold herself together and had been stockpiling food, water and guns in the large home she shared with her 20-year-old son in Connecticut.

Mrs Lanza, 52, was a 'prepper' – so called because they are preparing for a breakdown in civilised society – who apparently became obsessed with guns and taught Adam and his older brother, Ryan, how to shoot, even taking them to local ranges.'

'A bigot in a bra'

Mastodon · 17 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week, Esther Walker - wife of celebrity food critic Giles Coren - wrote a lacerating opinion piece about her casual sexism towards men and boys.

The article, which no doubt delighted the likes of Harriet Harman and Suzanne Moore, garnered more than 1,400 reader comments and sparked global offence (from both genders) after it poured vitriol on her unborn child for possibly being male.

'I can only deal with one man in my life... and sometimes that's one too many,' she spewed, probably over some middle class macaroons or an elderflower torte.

'I know very little about boys, but what I have seen I really haven't liked. Boys are gross; they attack their siblings with sticks, are obsessed with toilets, casually murder local wildlife and turn into disgusting teenage boys and then boring, selfish men.'

She then said she would 'die' if her baby was born male, claimed that she was 'deeply, deeply suspicious of little boys,' before describing them as the 'dreaded gender'.'

'Guns and the Decline of the Young Man'

Mastodon · 17 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is merely anecdotal evidence, not social science, but I believe that it is indicative of a sort of infection spreading in our collective brain, one that whispers to the American subconscious: “The young men are in decline.”
...
...
Certainly, there are young men who are paragons of success: the entrepreneurs of Silicon Valley, the sharply dressed bankers, the swarms of brilliant graduates who receive their diplomas each year. And there are heroes who fight our fires, soldiers who fight our wars and the first-responders who are the first to set eyes on the dead children’s bodies at the scenes of mass shootings. But more young men these days are avatars of soldiers rather than soldiers themselves.
...
I would argue that maleness and whiteness are commodities in decline. And while those of us who are not male or white have enjoyed some benefits from their decline, the sort of violence and murder that took place at Sandy Hook Elementary will continue to occur if we do not find a way to carry them along with us in our successes rather than leaving them behind.'

'Will women-only clubs catch on in macho Spain? '

Mastodon · 17 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In London a friend was waxing lyrical about the new spate of women-only clubs and restaurants that seem to have taken the Capital by storm. There's Grace Belgravia, a new spa cum social club, The Sorority club in Holborn, STK, a female friendly American steak chain, Dea Latis, a beer tasting club and soon actress Eva Longoria will be launching the London branch of her She steak restaurant group. Miu Miu created a pop-up club exclusively for women at the Café Royal last month and PR guru Lynne Franks is the face of B.Hive which offers meeting rooms and business lounges for female members.

...

Some female lawyers in Palma shrugged off the idea of women's clubs and restaurants. They felt that it created better harmony in the workplace to socialise with male colleagues and didn't like the idea of unnecessary barriers between the sexes. Much as they conceded that the macho spirit was alive and well in Spain, none believed that creating such haunts would do much to diminish it. If anything, they commented wryly, women-only zones might indeed help to fan the macho flames.'

Why is the shooter always male?

Mastodon · 17 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yet until very recently the fact that mass murder is an essentially all-male phenomenon got almost no attention. Ironically, we are so accustomed to the idea that violence is gendered male that we don't even notice that it is — unless we force ourselves to focus on something that seems so natural that it's normally invisible to us.

As feminists have pointed out, if we define "human nature" as "what men do" we will treat male violence as merely violence, as opposed to a very gender-specific behavior. If, when considering violence in our society, we were to turn being a man into a marked category, we would not ask questions like "why is America so violent?" but rather questions like "why are men so violent?"'

Park says S Korea needs ‘motherly’ leader

Mastodon · 17 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. (The FT has a login challenge unless you click over to it from Google. So the thing to do here is copy some text from the quote below, search for it on Google and click the link that leads to the story.) Excerpt:

'While women hold relatively few senior positions in South Korean business and politics, Ms Park has sought to use her gender – as well as her political experience – as a key selling point.

Her campaign banners and television advertisements feature the slogan: “A prepared female president”, and she has referred to her sex increasingly frequently as the election has drawn closer.

Ms Park, daughter of the military dictator Park Chung-hee, would follow previous Asian female heads of government such as Benazir Bhutto of Pakistan and Indira Gandhi of India, who were also children of former leaders.'

“Faced with the possibility of another global economic crisis next year, we should now establish a feminine, motherly leader who may sacrifice all for the sake of the people,” Ms Park, 60, said last month.'

Fathers-4-Justice: The First Protest Celebrating Ten Years

Matt · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers 4 Justice: The First Protest Celebrating Ten Years 1) ”On 17 December 2002, O’Connor* and a small group of supporters staged their first protest by storming the Lord Chancellor’s Office dressed as Father Christmas.”

Source:
1) WikiPedia
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Fathers_4_Justice

2) A Short History of Fathers 4 Justice by Nick Langford, page 14
http://www.fathers-4-justice.org/wp-content/uploads/2012/03/A-Short-History-of-Fathers4Justice1.pdf '

SAVE E-lert: Tell House Leader Cantor to Restore the Presumption of Innocence in VAWA

Matt · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), which is being discussed by House Leader Cantor and VP Biden, could include this proposed definition: “sexual assault means any nonconsensual sexual act proscribed by Federal, tribal or State law, including when the victim lacks the capacity to consent.”

Due to changes in state laws, innocent men have been convicted of sexual assault and imprisoned, even though there was no DNA, no witnesses, and no forensic evidence. Learn more here: http://saveservices.org/innocence

Do we really want VAWA to shift the burden of proof to the defendant? No law should remove the presumption of innocence.

Call House Leader Eric Cantor right now! (202) 225-2815 Tell him to restore the Presumption of Innocence in VAWA!

Thank you for your attention to this matter,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Woman arrested for castrating a man with her bare hands

Mastodon · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Joyce Maxine Gregory, 35, of Ohio, was arrested for allegedly castrating a man with her bare hands.

The incident took place in Shelby, Ohio early in the morning at around 5 a.m. during an argument between Gregory and her lover, 59, whose name has not been released. Apparently the man attempted to flee the house he was sharing with Gregory, and was calling 911 while outside when Gregory rushed the man, squeezing his genitals.

Reports indicate that she squeezed the man's genitals so hard that she popped one of the man's testicles out of the scrotum.'

Male circumcision: Let there be no more tragedies like baby Goodluck

Mastodon · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'He was born in Chadderton, Greater Manchester, in March 2010. His parents, filled with the joy, hope and optimism of new parenthood, named him Goodluck. When he was only 27 days old, a midwife called Grace Adeyele accepted £100 to hack at his tiny penis with a pair of scissors. The baby screamed so loud his mother had to look away. Adeyele dabbed the ragged wound with olive oil, dressed it with a small bandage and left him to bleed. He died the next day from his wounds. As if the short life and tragic death of Goodluck Caubergs is not shocking enough, consider that his case is not unique. Earlier this year an inquest in London recorded a verdict of accidental death, having heard how Angelo Ofori-Mintah died after being circumcised at home. The rabbi faced no charges.'

Memo to Media: Manhood, Not Guns or Mental Illness, Should Be Central in Newtown Shooting

Mastodon · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many of us whose work touches on the subject of masculinity and violence have long been frustrated by the failure of mainstream media -- and much of progressive media and the blogosphere as well -- to confront the gender issues at the heart of so many violent rampages like the one on December 14 in Connecticut.

My colleagues and I who do this type of work experience an unsettling dichotomy. In one part of our lives, we routinely have intense, in-depth discussions about men's emotional and relational struggles, and how the bravado about "rugged individualism" in American culture masks the deep yearning for connection that so many men feel, and how the absence or loss of that can quickly turn to pain, despair, and anger. In these discussions, we talk about violence as a gendered phenomenon: how, for example, men who batter their wives or girlfriends typically do so not because they have trigger tempers, but rather as a means to gain or maintain power and control over her, in a (misguided) attempt to get their needs met.

We talk amongst ourselves about how so many boys and men in our society are conditioned to see violence as a solution to their problems, a resolution of their anxieties, or a means of exacting revenge against those they perceive as taking something from them. We share with each other news stories, websites and YouTube videos that demonstrate the connection between deeply ingrained cultural ideas about manhood and individual acts of violence that operationalize those ideas.'

Kathleen Parker: Obama should tell men to man up

Mastodon · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of my great hopes for a Barack Obama administration — and thus one of my personal disappointments — was that he would use his bully pulpit to emphasize the importance of a two-parent family, and especially of fathers, to children's well-being.

Few understand better than the president the value of a present and involved father. Much of his literary work and his examined life pertains to his own absent father. By his example, he has certainly demonstrated his own commitment to parenting — and his family is a source of pride for all Americans. But the true story of fatherlessness in this country can't be repeated often or forcefully enough.

This is not a new story.

Children who grow up without fathers tend to fall into patterns of destructive behavior — from drug use and truancy to early promiscuity, delinquency and, in too many cases, incarceration. Children raised in fatherless homes are also more likely to grow up in poverty, which is no fault of their mothers but is a fact.'

'Time to profile white men?'

Mastodon · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yesterday, during a cable news discussion of gun violence and the Newtown school shooting, I dared mention a taboo truism. During a conversation on MSNBC's "Up With Chris Hayes," I said that because most of the mass shootings in America come at the hands of white men, there would likely be political opposition to initiatives that propose to use those facts to profile the demographic group to which these killers belong. I suggested that's the case because as opposed to people of color or, say, Muslims, white men as a subgroup are in such a privileged position in our society that they are the one group that our political system avoids demographically profiling or analytically aggregating in any real way. Indeed, unlike other demographic, white guys as a group are never thought to be an acceptable topic for any kind of critical discussion whatsoever, even when there is ample reason to open up such a discussion.'

David Sirota on Wikipedia

Father's death affects early adolescents' futures in developing world

Mastodon · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Certain negative effects of a father's death can't be compensated for by the mother or other relatives," said Mary Shenk, assistant professor of anthropology in MU's College of Arts and Science. "The loss of a father can result in lower adult living standards for the bereaved children. Not only is a child emotionally affected, but the lack of a father's earning power can cause children to get married younger or drop out of school in order to work."

Recognizing the importance of fathers to adolescents could lead to improvements in aid programs for youths who have lost their fathers. If Shenk's research were expanded to collect more data, she contends it could be used to help develop an evaluation system that would measure the degree of risk that children face from the loss of their fathers. In poorer regions of the world, a measurement tool could help aid organizations to prioritize children who have the greatest need of assistance.'

UK: Teen fathers feel 'marginalised', charity says

Mastodon · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Barnardo's claims young men are often treated as "invisible" and some policies are actively driving fathers away from their children.

Support services are "mother centred" and leave young fathers feeling "worthless and marginalised", a report from Barnardo's and other groups says.'

UK: Fathers claim time with children limited by Richmond Council cuts

Mastodon · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers plan to launch a petition in a bid to save what they claim is a unique group for dads and their children.

Dads Unlimited is a drop-in activity service held at the Stanley children and families centre, in Teddington, every Saturday morning, for about 15 fathers and their children.

The group were told that the weekly service would stop because Richmond Council will cut funding to the group from March 31 next year.

Father of two Rajesh Ruparelia works late in central London during the week and the group was the only chance he got to spend quality time with his children and do a range of activities.'

Why Progressive “Men’s Movements” Are Bound to Fail

Mastodon · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jill at Feministe reopens the ongoing Good Men Project battles with an excellent post and article about the reason that perpetuating rape myths is so very, very bad and not, contrary to GMP’s defensive posturing (when they aren’t fundraising on how excellent they are at pissing off feminists) about “dialogue”. In sum, when we perpetuate the myth that rapists are just nice guys who are confused about consent, rapists realize they can rape, claim confusion, and escape justice. Which is why the self-defined rapists that GMP gave voice to did, in fact, claim confusion. Imagine!

But I don’t want to talk about that right now. What I want to talk about is the idea that there could be a useful, meaningful progressive men’s movement that doesn’t devolve into men sitting around pitying themselves about how they’re so oppressed by women, neatly turning them into a reactionary movement. I used to think yes, which is why I was enthusiastic about the idea of GMP before they revealed how much it’s actually about bundling the same old defenses of male privilege in “complex” sheep’s clothing. I dearly want men to have conversations about masculinity and manhood, and the oppressive expectations patriarchy puts on men. I think that’s more important every day as we struggle with the way that these ideals of masculinity encourage violence and voting Republican.'

An Interesting E-Mail on Young, White Males

Mastodon · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Email reported here. Excerpt:

'We allowed our young boys to play violent murdering video games. These types of games are the same ones the military uses to train soldiers. But they are being played by very, very young kids in dark rooms all over the country. You want to ban something, ban those. We have overlooked the devastating effects on all children of not having a father in the house. And we have ignored and not helped boys with their mental illness. We've hyperventilated endlessly over girls and their eating disorders, image issues, self-esteem, sex, blah, blah, blah, but we have most totally ignored the mental challenges that boys face.'

When the Gun is the Boy's Best Friend

Mastodon · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is really about the lost and degraded role of the male in today's western society. Two generations of young men have been instructed through school and culture that they are the "useless" and "dangerous" sex, not needed for much more than sperm donation; that they are predators; that they will have a diminished role in society, as rightly they should, given their sub-human perception and actions. So the boys on the margins, those whose father is not around, or worse, around and a menace, grow isolated, resentful and psychotic.

Young men are being shoved aside and out of many areas of main stream society. They are living up to the expectations that have been drilled into them since they could toddle across a room. Those expectations are mostly negative. Men, it is insisted, must change, must become more like women...or something. But they must not be male in the traditional sense, and in American culture that traditional sense used to mean honor, sacrifice and courage.'

'What Is Wrong With This Generation of Young Men In America?'

Mastodon · 18 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Well, there are a whole host of reasons. But certainly parents and our education system have to bear much of the blame. In the old days, young men were taught what it means to “be a man”, and morality was taught to young men both by their parents and in the schools. But today, most young men have very little understanding of what “manhood” is, and our society has taught them that morality doesn’t really matter. Instead, television and movies constantly portray young men as sex-obsessed slackers that just want to party all the time, so that is what many of our young men have become.

How much better off would our society be if we had trained this generation of young men to love, honor, protect and take care of others?

How much better off would our society be if we had nurtured the manhood of our young men instead of teaching them to be ashamed of it?'

Mom of mentally ill son: "I am Adam Lanza's mother"

Matt · 19 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I live with a son who is mentally ill. I love my son. But he terrifies me.

A few weeks ago, Michael pulled a knife and threatened to kill me and then himself after I asked him to return his overdue library books. His 7 and 9 year old siblings knew the safety plan--they ran to the car and locked the doors before I even asked them to. I managed to get the knife from Michael, then methodically collected all the sharp objects in the house into a single Tupperware container that now travels with me. Through it all, he continued to scream insults at me and threaten to kill or hurt me.
...
At the start of seventh grade, Michael was accepted to an accelerated program for highly gifted math and science students. His IQ is off the charts. When he's in a good mood, he will gladly bend your ear on subjects ranging from Greek mythology to the differences between Einsteinian and Newtonian physics to Doctor Who. He's in a good mood most of the time. But when he's not, watch out. And it's impossible to predict what will set him off.
...

I am sharing this story because I am Adam Lanza's mother. I am Dylan Klebold's and Eric Harris's mother. I am James Holmes's mother. I am Jared Loughner's mother. I am Seung-Hui Cho's mother. And these boys -- and their mothers -- need help. In the wake of another horrific national tragedy, it's easy to talk about guns. But it's time to talk about mental illness.
According to Mother Jones, since 1982, 61 mass murders involving firearms have occurred throughout the country. Of these, 43 of the killers were white males, and only one was a woman. Mother Jones focused on whether the killers obtained their guns legally (most did). But this highly visible sign of mental illness should lead us to consider how many people in the U.S. live in fear, like I do.
...
With state-run treatment centers and hospitals shuttered, prison is now the last resort for the mentally ill -- Rikers Island, the LA County Jail and Cook County Jail in Illinois housed the nation's largest treatment centers in 2011. No one wants to send a 13-year old genius who loves Harry Potter and his snuggle animal collection to jail. But our society, with its stigma on mental illness and its broken health care system, does not provide us with other options. Then another tortured soul shoots up a fast food restaurant. A mall. A kindergarten classroom. And we wring our hands and say, "Something must be done."'

Michael Kimmel: Masculinity, mental illness and guns: A lethal equation?

Mastodon · 19 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why are angry young men setting out to kill entire crowds of strangers?

Motivations are hard to pin down, but gender is the single most obvious and intractable variable when it comes to violence in America. Men and boys are responsible for 95% of all violent crimes in this country. "Male criminal participation in serious crimes at any age greatly exceeds that of females, regardless of source of data, crime type, level of involvement, or measure of participation" is how the National Academy of Sciences summed up the extant research.

How does masculinity figure into this? From an early age, boys learn that violence is not only an acceptable form of conflict resolution, but one that is admired. However the belief that violence is an inherently male characteristic is a fallacy. Most boys don't carry weapons, and almost all don't kill: are they not boys? Boys learn it.

They learn it from their fathers. They learn it from a media that glorifies it, from sports heroes who commit felonies and get big contracts, from a culture saturated in images of heroic and redemptive violence. They learn it from each other.'

Michael Kimmel in Wikipedia

Feminist Professors Use Classrooms As Recruitment Tool

Mastodon · 20 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A women's history class frequently offered at Chapman University glorifies Margaret Sanger while it avoids her racist beliefs, highlights the feminist revolution while sidesteps the suffrage movement's family values, and heralds Roe v. Wade and the advent of birth control, all while failing to cite the feminist counter-culture movement.

That's not only not surprising, it's expected, as classrooms in colleges across America are used to recruit young women into the feminists ranks, says Carrie Lukas, managing director of the conservative Independent Women's Forum.

"The purpose here is to advance the feminist movement," Lukas says. "The college classroom is a recruitment tool."

Lukas, author of "The Politically Incorrect Guide to Women, Sex, and Feminism," says the vast majority of women studies classes do not offer fair and balanced approaches to the subject. It's not unheard of for professors to skip relevant information, slant lesson plans, or skew lectures.'

'In Most Rich Countries, Women Work More Than Men'

Mastodon · 20 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In most of the developed world, women spend more time working each day than men do, if you include unpaid work.

According to the latest report on gender and employment from the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, across the developed world and in other countries tracked by the organization, men spend more minutes per day in paid work than women do.

In the United States, for example, men spend 5 hours and 8 minutes working on the average day, whereas women spend 4 hours and 2 minutes.

But when it comes to unpaid work — activities like child care and cleaning — women spend vastly more time than men in every country the organization included in its analysis.'

Special ed teachers defend dragging blind boy

Mastodon · 20 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two special education teachers caught on camera dragging a blind 7-year-old boy 155 feet down the Gonzales Community School corridors are defending themselves and their method to move the boy between classrooms.

A mobility and orientation special education specialist with Santa Fe Public Schools told police weeks after the Nov. 15 incident that the boy wasn't cooperating with her requests and that grabbing the boy by the ankles and dragging him "was just a way to transport the child and believed it was a natural way of taking the child," according to the report released by police on Monday. A Braille specialist under contract with the school district also helped her colleague move the boy.

The report by Officer Michael Dimas says the 64-year-old special education teacher, when questioned about having the contract employee help her pull the child, "stated to me it had occurred to her at that point it could be construed as looking bad and therefore she had stopped and turned towards [another teacher] and [the contracted employee] and stated to them, 'Do you think this could be construed as child abuse?' "

NH Judge Says Girl Can Stay On Boys' Hockey Team

Mastodon · 20 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — A New Hampshire judge has ruled that a high school girl can continue to play on the boys' varsity ice hockey team even though her school has formed a girls' team.

Seventeen-year-old Shelby Herrington made the boys' varsity team at Bishop Brady High School three years ago, when there was no girls' team.

Herrington is fighting a decision by the New Hampshire Interscholastic Athletic Association that she needs to switch to the girls' team formed jointly by her school and Trinity of Manchester.'

Charges of necrophilia dismissed against Swedish woman who kept human bones

Matt · 20 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Swedish woman who kept human skulls and bones in her apartment was sentenced Monday to probation and ordered to undergo psychiatric care after being convicted of “disturbing the peace of the dead.”

The prosecution had argued that the 37 year-old woman, who has a history of unemployment and substance abuse, used the bones “for various sexual activities”, but charges of necrophilia were dismissed by the Gothenburg district court.

“Moving parts of the skeleton is a crime, since she was unauthorised to do so, just as it is a crime to assemble a skeleton and keep it lying on the floor, (and) to keep skeletal parts in plastic bags and use them for trade,” the court said.'

Woman gets 3 years in prison for 40 years of abusing her husband

Matt · 20 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Translated story here. Excerpt:

'TROMSØ (AP) Bodo Woman (73) beat, threatened and insulted her husband at the coarsest for over 40 years without anyone intervening.

Now the former unpunished pensioner zones three years behind bars.

The couple married in 1961. Some years later abuse. The relationship was not revealed until 2010, when the woman Reviewed her husband for harassment.

After Bodø police began to do research, the case was turned completely upside down.

The investigation revealed that the woman in over 40 years regularly had acted violently and threatening to her husband.

"The man has lived for 41 years under an almost constant terror regime, characterized by constant insecurity and fear of violence and other harassment," stated Salten District Court, which earlier this year sentenced the woman to three years in prison.'

SAVE: Presumed Innocent? SAVE Unveils Innocence Quilts to Spotlight Need for Legal Reform

Matt · 20 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Dec. 18, 2012 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- A legal reform organization has unveiled innocence quilts to highlight the growing problem of the loss of the presumption of innocence. Affirmed by the U.S. Supreme Court, the presumption of innocence has long been viewed as a bedrock principle of the American legal code.

SAVE – Stop Abusive and Violent Environments -- believes widespread changes are urgently needed to restore the integrity of the criminal justice system, protect civil rights, and thwart false allegations. False accusations serve to divert scarce services and protections from needy victims.

Each innocence quilt lists the names of about 30 persons wrongfully convicted and later exonerated of crimes such as sexual assault and child abuse. The purpose of the quilts is to highlight the devastating effect of wrongful convictions on innocent persons, and to alert the American public to the pressing need for reform: www.saveservices.org/innocence/quilt.'

Excellent documentary on divorced dads, with commentary by Dr. Warren Farrell

Matt · 20 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

From Warren Farrell:

This, a documentary on divorced fathers called 'Broken', is excellent. It's some touching interviews with divorced dads. I know the fathers with whom you work will feel less lonely and isolated as they see this. The documentarian, Steve Brulé, has submitted this to a Canadian film festival. Brulé interviewed me in my capacity as the author of Father and Child Reunion and my experience doing expert witness work for dads. Feel free to make this available as a holiday present to the dads you are helping.

Warren Farrell, Ph.D.
www.warrenfarrell.com

White House working group seeks comments re AIDS, violence against women, etc.

Minuteman · 20 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'As we commemorated World AIDS Day earlier this month, the importance of addressing the needs of women and girls as part of the National HIV/AIDS Strategy was clear. While we have made tremendous progress in learning how to prevent and treat HIV, including among women and girls, much work remains. Of the approximately 1.1 million people living with HIV/AIDS in the United States, about 290,000 are women and women account for 23 percent of new HIV infections.

This Administration has made combating the HIV/AIDS epidemic a priority. For women, that includes addressing gender-based violence and gender related health disparities.
...
From December 20, 2012 to January 20, 2013 you will be able to submit your individual stories, experiences, and comments to the working group by completing this online form. While we welcome any comments salient to the issue, we also ask that you consider the following questions:

1) How can we best address both violence and HIV among women and girls?
2) What are model programs and promising practices in addressing the intersection of HIV/AIDS and violence against women and girls?
3) What are barriers to reaching women and girls affected by HIV and violence?
4) What are the most effective strategies to reach women and girls who are living with violence and with HIV?'

German Lawmakers Vote to Protect Right to Male Circumcision

Mastodon · 20 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BERLIN — German lawmakers on Wednesday passed legislation ensuring parents the right to have their boys circumcised, bringing a close to months of legal uncertainty set off by a regional court's ruling that equated the practice with bodily harm.

The measure passed by a vote of 434 to 100, with 46 abstentions, in Germany's lower house of Parliament, the Bundestag. The vote followed months of emotional debate, and angered and alienated many German Jews and Muslims, for whom circumcision is a religious rite, integral to their beliefs.'

In contrast: U.N. seeks a global ban on female circumcision

'Improperly Governed'

Mastodon · 20 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In all the discussion of the horror in Newtown, one factor that should be considered is the absence of appropriate influences for boys and men in our increasingly feminized society. Many of the traditional supports for male maturity have been withdrawn, traditional manhood is often mocked and diminished, and the qualities promoted today tend to be the more feminine ones of acceptance, nurturance, etc., instead of the more masculine demand to measure up. The killers are often misfits of precarious masculinity, who may be unconsciously or consciously furious at a feminized world that denies and denigrates who they are. Years ago psychologist Erich Fromm described the difference between the unconditional love of the mother and the conditional love of the father. Both are needed, and of course it's possible for both men and women to extend both kinds of love, but in the desire to glorify women, our society has gone too much in the one direction. Instead of teaching self-control, Dennis Prager points out, we teach self-esteem.'

F&F: Raise Your Voice with Fathers and Families

Matt · 21 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families is your voice in family law. Fathers and Families continues to grow and so does the strength of your voice. We want to start our next affiliate in your state.

Fathers and Families believes shared parenting is the single most important social change we must make for our children. Society should support shared parenting and the rights and responsibilities of both parents in the same way it supports other children's issues, including child support enforcement.'

F&F: The Newtown Shooter: The Conversation You Won't See Anywhere Else

Matt · 21 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After our tears dry for the twenty little darlings and seven others who were mowed down by Adam Lanza, we begin to ask "Why?"

There is always a dominant narrative to explain the unthinkable. Now it is mostly about the absence of effective gun controls, or about mental illness. Or, we hear about the effects of violence on television and video games.

We don't hear about the effects of fatherlessness, especially on young men. We don't hear that the most reliable predictor of crime is neither poverty nor race but growing up fatherless. We don't hear that a large majority of violent criminals were fatherless. We don't even hear that young male elephants go on violent rampages unless they are kept in line by the old bulls.

...

The Daily Mail reports quotes several of Adam's former classmates to the effect that his problems got much worse after the separation. "He was always weird but the divorce affected him. He was arguing with his mother. He was a ticking time bomb waiting to explode."

...

In fairness, most rare and awful events are the result of numerous influences acting together. The accident happened because the driver was intoxicated and the brakes were worn and the pedestrian was careless and the road was slippery and the lighting was poor. No one factor explains all. If just one of these factors had been different, there would have been no accident.

But fatherhood is not even on society's list. This is especially sad because a simple change in divorce laws towards shared parenting would take a big chunk out of this factor at no cost. This is a much cheaper fix than a bureaucracy to enforce new gun laws or more mental health services, not that these might not be good ideas.'

F&F: Detroit Judge Allows Mom to Decide Dad's Punishment in Child Support Case

Mastodon · 21 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Just in case you thought there was even a shred of integrity left in the family court system, let this story lay that misguided notion to rest for good (The Daily Caller, 12/8/12).

Detroit judge Wade McCree was hearing a child support suit involving a mother, Geniene La'Shay Mott and her ex-husband, Robert King. The only problem with that was that McCree and Mott entered into a serious and long-term sexual relationship during the legal case.

"It went from being a summer fling and just something to do to falling in love, promises of marriage, me getting pregnant, us buying a house together, name it," Mott told WJBK-TV.

That all happened despite the fact that McCree was married. But mere marriage vows wouldn't stop a man like McCree. Neither would ethical and legal restrictions on judges having sex with litigants in cases before them. And neither did common sense or any notion of personal dignity dissuade McCree from doing everything in his power to screw up his career, his marriage, the life of his unborn child and, most certainly that of Robert King.'

'Moving Beyond Men's Killing Fields'

Mastodon · 21 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

In the wake of Adam Lanza's murderous rampage, men in particular, must not stay silent. There's an epidemic in our "man culture" we can ill afford to locate on the periphery, ceding center stage to the narrow gun control debate.
...
How many more lonely, alienated, disconnected, (usually) white males perpetrating murder and then committing suicide need we see before admitting the irrefutable fact that the shooters are mostly male? From police detectives to forensic psychologists, anyone studying mass killings in the U.S. over the past two decades cannot ignore that fact. Still, too many, including much of the media—continue to under-acknowledge this achingly obvious truth. Is it because they don't see the killers' gender, just as fish don't see the water surrounding them? A Mother Jones review of the 62 mass murders in the U.S. since Columbine in 1999 revealed males committed 61 of them.
...
This is a perfect moment for Warren Buffett and Bill Gates to lead a call for the wealthiest one percent in the nation to take the lead in launching a national program to train early childhood education and care providers, prekindergarten, and elementary school teachers, to create new lesson plans that emphasize boys' emotional wellbeing. And, let's put men's mental health on the docket, too, beginning by asking the president to charge the CDC with coordinating a national campaign to raise awareness about mental health and males.'

UK: Female rower responds to criticism over nude calendar double-standard

MikeJH · 21 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. (Be advised: Partial nudity in pics shown with the story, so it's NSFW.) Excerpt:

'When the boys of the rowing club stripped off for a charity calendar, it was met with praise, encouragement and the occasional cheeky compliment.

But it seems that it’s one rule for them and another for the club’s girls – who have been accused of being attention-seekers and damaging the feminist cause by posing for their own naked calendar.
...
Hettie's comments came in the wake of a blog on the Huffington Post website, which attacked Hettie and her friends, and said they had put the feminist cause back.'

School worker arrested on domestic violence charges against a child

Mastodon · 21 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Escambia County investigators arrested a part-time Escambia County elementary school worker today on several domestic violence charges, including battery, torturing a child, caging a child and cruelty toward a child that could result in physical or mental injury.

Dorothea Vega, 59, of Pensacola is in the Escambia County Jail without bond.
...
Investigators learned that a child was hit by numerous household objects and was made to take prescription medications in an effort to control the child's behavior.

Deputies went to the home, where they found alarms on the door of the child's room.

The child was made to stay in the room, unless she was doing chores. If the alarm sounded, Vega beat the child, according to the Escambia County Sheriff's Office.

The living conditions were found to be deplorable. The child was not always permitted to eat or take a bath and would sometimes use a school restroom as a place to bathe.'

Macy Gray: Women aren't equal to men, they're better

Mastodon · 21 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"I am not a feminist because that's about equality. Women aren't equal to men. We are better. We are so much bigger, so much more capable, and can do a lot more than men," she explains in a straightforward manner.

"I think women have a lot more going on than men – so I wouldn't call us equal. We are just better."

Right then. Well that clears that one up. And while we are on the topic of women being badass and brilliant, Gray name checks one of her big female idols: Michelle Obama.'

Ed. note: I had never heard of her before, so of course went to Wikipedia to find out.

Australia: Results prove education system favours girls, yet we do nothing

Mastodon · 21 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Like the NYT, you'll probably get a login challenge, so to get around it, go to Google and enter "Results prove education system favours girls, yet we do nothing" and click the first link in the results list. Excerpt:

'Australian children have been subject to haphazard experiments in reading and writing for a very long time. And not just reading and writing, but in all aspects of pedagogy and curriculum. The ones who have really suffered from all this are the boys.

It was recognised in 2002 that there was a real crisis in the education of boys. Brendan Nelson had an inquiry which produced an important report on the subject. But despite research confirming that boys are doing worse overall than girls, and despite some attempts by individual schools to rectify the problem, the crisis continues.

On just about every marker, including behaviour, boys score worse than girls. Lately they have even started to score worse than girls in their traditional strengths, like mathematics.

Yet you wouldn't know it from the complacent attitude of most of the teaching profession. When I wrote about this in 2002 the then head of the Australian Education Union wrote a letter to The Australian complaining that my argument blaming this situation on contemporary education, particularly teaching methods, was wrong. Did I not know that there is a worldwide "crisis in masculinity", not education? Silly me. In other words the boys just don't know how to fit into this new female-dominated world order - and they just should.'

Olympic athlete discovered 'escorting', gets spun as mid-life crisis

Matt · 22 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DECEMBER 20---A three-time U.S. Olympian whose illustrious running career has included a Nike TV commercial, a swimsuit calendar, and ongoing promotional work for Disney has spent the last year doubling as a $600-an-hour call girl, an astounding secret life that she now regretfully calls a “huge mistake.”

Beginning last December, Suzy Favor Hamilton, 44, has worked with one of Las Vegas’s premier escort services, booking scores of “dates” in Sin City and other U.S. cities, including Los Angeles, Chicago, and Houston.

While Favor Hamilton (seen at right) has used an alias, “Kelly Lundy,” when working as an escort, she inexplicably shared her true identity with several male clients, believing that her secret was somehow safe with strangers who paid for her company by leaving envelopes stuffed with cash on bathroom vanities in swanky hotels.
...

Favor Hamilton described the escort business as “exciting,” an illicit midlife diversion from her routine existence, one in which she operates a successful Madison, Wisconsin real estate brokerage with her husband, delivers motivational speeches, and does promotional work for various businesses and groups, including Disney’s running series and Wisconsin’s Potato & Vegetable Growers Association.

She said that only her husband Mark, 44, was aware of her escort work, but that, “He tried, he tried to get me to stop. He wasn’t supportive of this at all.” The couple lives in a $600,000 Madison home and appears to be in no financial distress based on a review of court and municipal records.'

College student held without bond for explosives, drugs

Matt · 22 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It will be an explosive-free weekend for the northeast Georgia college student who admitted to federal agents that she likes to blow things up as a hobby. She's being held without bond after a hearing was canceled Friday.
...
Law enforcement agencies including the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives, the FBI and the GBI searched Celia Savage's home and found explosive devices, firearms and suspected illegal drugs, according to documents filed in U.S. District Court, Gainesville.
...
Her Facebook profile, which is public, contains numerous pictures and statements regarding her love of guns and distaste for law enforcement. Colleges she attended, according to the profile, include Gainesville State College and North Georgia Technical College.
...
"I despise all law enforcement and any governing authority," she states in her profile. "I am not one for selective targeting but mass destruction."
...
Celia Savage was being held Friday in the Hall County jail on drugs, weapons and explosives charges.'

Federal investigators bust 'Jane Doe' child sex abuser after nationwide appeal for assistance

Matt · 22 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Agents from Homeland Security Investigations (HSI) have caught the woman suspected of producing child pornography and appearing to abuse a young child in a sex video she posted on the internet - less than 24 hours after the Feds appealed to the American public for help.

Corrine Danielle Motley of Okaloosa County, Florida was arrested late Wednesday and faces federal charges for the production and distribution of child pornography.

The 25-year-old was apprehended by Internet Crimes Against Children Task Force members and Homeland Security Investigations special agents.

A Facebook page for the suspect shows that the woman is married to Brandon and in photos she poses with various young children.

U.S. Immigration and Customs were alerted after a video appeared on the internet showing the woman engaging in explicit sex with a four to five-year-old victim.

They issued an appeal on Wednesday morning for help in finding the woman in the footage, believed to have been uploaded on or around November 27.'

Court upholds decision in penis removal case

Matt · 22 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — A Kentucky man lost his bid Friday to force a doctor to pay damages for removing a cancer-riddled section of his penis during what was scheduled to be a simple circumcision.

The Kentucky Court of Appeals found that a jury correctly concluded that 66-year-old Phillip Seaton of Waddy consented to allow Dr. John Patterson to perform any procedure deemed necessary during the Oct. 19, 2007, surgery.

Patterson, a Kentucky-based urologist, maintains he found cancer in the man's penis during surgery and that it had to be removed. The patient claims the surgery was supposed to be a circumcision and he never authorized the amputation, nor was he given a chance to seek a second opinion.'

Why Feminists Should Support the Return of Chivalry

Mastodon · 22 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chivalry and feminism appear to be natural enemies: If women want to be treated as equals they can't also want men to open doors for them or always pick up the check. Carrying a woman's bag can be taken as implying that she's too weak to do it herself.

...

Even when it comes from a positive place of wanting to help, the assumption that a woman always needs a man to step in and rescue her is exactly how chivalry came to be referred to as "benevolent sexism." Chivalrous men may mean well, but it's easy to see a disconnect between social rules about treating women with delicate respect and the push toward equality.

...

I'm not entirely convinced that a return to chivalry wouldn't open the door to reinforced ideas of women as weak, but Smith's proposal is worth considering.'

FDA seeking comments on Draft Guidance for Industry on Vaginal Microbicides (Deadline 21 Feb 2013)

Minuteman · 23 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt from guidance document (emphasis added):

'Sexual transmission accounts for the majority of HIV infections both in the United States and globally. Behavior change through counseling, male and female condoms, antiretroviral therapy for the infected partner, voluntary male medical circumcision, and treatment of STIs can reduce the risk of HIV acquisition. However, despite these prevention methods, HIV incidence in the United States has not declined and remains stable at 56,300 new infections annually (Hall, Song, et al. 2008). Worldwide, the annual incidence is estimated to be about 2.7 million infections (UNAIDS 2011).'

There is a 2000 character limit in the comment web form, but you can upload larger documents.

You may want to center comments around the notion that vaginal microbicides are intended to be a "female controlled" anti-HIV measure, but that male circumcision (purportedly) makes it more difficult to insist on condom use or refuse sex, and that some analyses suggest a higher rate of male-female HIV transmission when men are circumcised.

Please remember that your comments will be read by decision-makers in the FDA and to be firm but respectful (and ideally, provide links to scientific articles and other credible references) if you want to be taken seriously.

White House petition aims to end male-only military draft

Mastodon · 23 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A petition on the White House's "We the People" Web page contends that a military draft covering men, but not women, is discriminatory and should be abolished.

"The Selective Service System is discriminatory against the young men of the United States of America," the petition reads, "and should be considered unfair and unethical."

"As the law stands young men must sign up for Selective Service for a possible military draft when they turn eighteen," the petition notes. "If they do not they risk jail sentences, huge fines, or the denial of government services or jobs. Young women do not face the same requirements or penalties."...

"To require only half of our citizens to register for such a program is not only government-sponsored sexism, but also a breach of their autonomy as human beings."'

Women take the lead at British universities

Mastodon · 23 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If you get a login challenge, Google "Women take the lead at British universities" and click the first hit link. Excerpt:

'YOUNG women have extended their dominance over men at British universities as a result of the trebling of tuition fees, new figures show.

Higher fees depressed demand for higher education, with 51,000 fewer students starting a university degree this autumn compared with a year ago, a decline of 13 per cent.

But the fall was bigger among boys in their late teens than among girls, extending the gender gap on British campuses to a record amount.

Applications to university among boys aged 18 dropped by 1 point, with 30 per cent seeking a place in higher education. Among girls of the same age it slipped by only 0.6 of a point to 40.1 per cent, a gap of 10.1 percentage points.'

Canada: Rideau Park School teacher accused of sex crimes has ‘loyal following’

Mastodon · 23 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It began as a bad dream for parents: a letter home from school officials informing them that a much-loved Calgary teacher had been accused of sex crimes against a teenage student.

A day after police charged a female Rideau Park School teacher with sexual assault and sexual interference, many parents say they are shocked by the allegations.

But some are standing behind the teacher, who is in her 40s, calling her “excellent” and “talented,” and say no matter the outcome of the case, her good work should not be forgotten.

“The teacher is a much-loved teacher at the school,” said Lisa Poole, president of the school council, although she was not speaking on behalf of the group. “She’s excellent with the children, she’s hardworking.

“She has made an enormous contribution to the school and has a very loyal following.”

The teacher was arrested Tuesday and charged with sexual assault and sexual interference. Police accuse her of having a sexual relationship with a 14-year-old boy for a year.

Police refuse to identify her, but she will be in court Jan. 28. The Calgary Board of Education teacher is suspended with pay.'

Billings woman charged with filing false rape report against ex-boyfriend

Mastodon · 23 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'BILLINGS — A Billings woman is charged with making a false rape report against a former boyfriend in August.

Christina Nadine Nelson pleaded not guilty to fabricating evidence during a District Court hearing Thursday.

Court records say Nelson told police that she left work on Aug. 10 and was walking to her car when her former boyfriend approached her from behind, took her to a van and raped her.

However, court records say a review of surveillance video from Nelson's workplace shows her leaving work and driving away. Nelson's former boyfriend gave police proof that he was in Seattle at the time.

The detective said a review of Nelson's medical records show she had made similar rape reports in the past, including twice in April.'

Judge arrested on domestic violence charges

Mastodon · 23 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Workers' Compensation Administration Judge Shanon Riley was arrested in northwest Albuquerque late Friday.

Riley was booked into the Metropolitan Detention Center on domestic violence charges Friday. She was released on bail the following day, Albuquerque police confirmed.

Riley currently serves as a judge for the Workers' Compensation Administration.

Riley had served as assistant district attorney in the First Judicial Court District in Santa Fe.'

Brawley hiding in Virginia 25 years after historic gang rape case turned out to be a hoax

MikeJH · 24 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Twenty-five years after Tawana Brawley's claims of being raped by a gang of white men polarised New York City, the woman has been tracked down living in hiding in Virginia.

On November 28, 1987, the then-15-year-old was found in a trash bag, dazed, smeared with feces with the word n*r scrawled on her body.

She told police she had been abducted by two white men and driven to the woods where they and four others ravaged her for four days - one of which had a badge.'

Afghan Policewoman Kills US Adviser In Kabul

Matt · 24 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'KABUL, Afghanistan — An Afghan policewoman walked into a high-security compound in Kabul Monday and killed an American contractor with a single bullet to the chest, the first such shooting by a woman in a spate of insider attacks by Afghans against their foreign allies.

Afghan officials who provided details identified the attacker as police Sgt. Nargas, a mother of four with a clean record. The shooting was outside the police headquarters in a walled compound which houses the governor's office, courts and a prison in the heart of the capital.

A police official said she was able to enter the compound armed because she was licensed to carry a weapon as a police officer.
...
The fact that a woman was behind the assault shocked some Afghans.

"I was very shaken when I heard the news," said Nasrullah Sadeqizada, an independent member of Parliament. "This is the first female to carry out such an attack. It is very surprising and sad," he added, calling for more careful screening of all candidates, male and female, for the police force.'

UK: A 'dad' is tenth most popular Christmas list request for children

Matt · 24 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 'dad' is tenth most popular Christmas list request for children with youngsters happy to forgo the latest iPad, toy or new pet, a survey has found.

When it comes to Christmas, it might be safe to assume children will ask Santa for an extensive list of toys, games and treats.

But a survey of their typical lists for Father Christmas has shown many have more serious concerns, requesting "a dad" instead.

...

Despite their material requests, the tenth most popular Christmas wish on the list was a "Dad".'

Afghan policewoman was 'unstable'

Matt · 25 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I know I'm sounding like a broken record here, but anyone who is 1) crazy and 2) has access to firearms is a potential threat. Of course many other things can be a motive for murder-by-gun much less anything else, but when it comes to seemingly inexplicable murders (so-called "random" or "impersonal" murder) not driven even by ideology or political affiliation, the factor is "crazy". Unfortunately just yesterday, America had a second mass-shooting in upstate NY in as many weeks wherein the killer targeted innocent men for no apparent reason and killed himself before he could be caught; he was a convicted killer and apparently murdered his sister before setting his house on fire, too. Crazy: check. Access to guns: check. Until guns can be kept out of the hands of lunatics, we'll keep having such tragedies-- and the sex/age of the murderer isn't really a factor, as much as feminists want you to believe it. It's "crazy". Excerpt:

'KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — The policewoman who killed an American contractor in Kabul is a native Iranian who came to Afghanistan and displayed "unstable behavior" but no known links to militants, an Interior Ministry spokesman said Tuesday.

The policewoman, identified as Sgt. Nargas, shot 49-year-old Joseph Griffin, of Mansfield, Georgia, on Monday, in the first such shooting by a woman in a spate of insider attacks by Afghans against their foreign allies. Nargas walked into a heavily-guarded compound in the heart of Kabul, confronted Griffin and gunned him down with a single pistol bullet.
...
The ministry spokesman, Sediq Sediqi, told a news conference that Nargas, who uses one name like many in the country, was born in Tehran, where she married an Afghan. She moved to the country 10 years ago after her husband obtained fake documents enabling her to live and work there.
...
"Her mental condition is not good," he said, describing her behavior as "unstable." He said that after she attended a recent training course in Egypt a "foreign government" — a clear reference to Egypt — informed Afghan authorities that she did not appear to be "normal."

On Monday, senior Afghan officials said the policewoman was licensed to carry the weapon into the compound and was well known there. On Tuesday, however, the chief investigator, Gen. Mohammad Zahir, told reporters that she was not authorized to carry weapons into the compound but managed to pass through security checks with a hidden pistol. Zahir said the lapse of security was also being investigated, as well as whether she had connections with foreign or local militant groups.
...
Zahir said that during interrogation, the policewoman said she had plans to kill either the Kabul governor, city police chief or Zahir himself, but when she realized that penetrating the last security cordons to reach them would be too difficult, she saw "a foreigner" and turned her weapon on him.'

MANN Twitter feed created

Matt · 26 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Catching up some to the 21st century, we've just created a Twitter feed. Follow us at: @mensactivism

Don't know much about Twitter? Nothing to be ashamed of. Just go to http://www.twitter.com/ to find out about it. (The 'About' and 'Help' links at the bottom of the page are good places to learn about and how to use Twitter.)

The feed will be used largely to let our Twitter followers know when new stories have been posted, but as time goes on it may turn out to be useful for other things. Let's see where it goes, and... "Follow us on Twitter!" :)

[Note this post is set as "sticky", meaning it remains at the top of the others until I un-sticky it. So just because you may return to the site and still see it at the top doesn't mean new posts haven't been added since this one. Check below, new posts are regularly added as usual.]

Afghan policewoman 'desperate, struggled with mental illness'

Matt · 26 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It's all so predictable. Male shooters: evil murderers. Female shooters: mentally disturbed and 'driven' to it. She is a child- and husband-abuser and intended to continue her shooting spree but was stopped by her gun jamming. And yet... we should feel sorry for her. Afghanistan is filled with poor and desperate women, and men. She was lucky even to have some kind of job. But it wasn't good enough-- she needed to berate and abuse her husband and children and then go commit murder. And the MSM peddles the thing as a sob-story. Excerpt:

'The Afghan policewoman suspected of killing a U.S. contractor at police headquarters in Kabul suffered from mental illness and was driven to suicidal despair by poverty, her children told Reuters on Wednesday.

The woman was identified by authorities as Narges Rezaeimomenabad, a 40-year-old grandmother and mother of three who moved here from Iran 10 years ago and married an Afghan man.
...
They recalled Ms. Narges's severe mood swings, and how at times she beat them and even pulled out a knife. But the children said she was consistent in bemoaning poverty.
...
But he was acutely aware of her mental problems and often heard her scream at her husband, whose low-level job in the crime investigation unit of the police brought home little cash.
...
Fatima would often seek refuge in Mr. Kohistani's house when her mother's behaviour became unbearable. "She did not hate us, but usually she was angry and would not talk to us," said Fatima, her eyes moist with tears.'

Fathers disappear from households across America

Matt · 26 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In every state, the portion of families where children have two parents, rather than one, has dropped significantly over the past decade. Even as the country added 160,000 families with children, the number of two-parent households decreased by 1.2 million. Fifteen million U.S. children, or 1 in 3, live without a father, and nearly 5 million live without a mother. In 1960, just 11 percent of American children lived in homes without fathers.

America is awash in poverty, crime, drugs and other problems, but more than perhaps anything else, it all comes down to this, said Vincent DiCaro, vice president of the National Fatherhood Initiative: Deal with absent fathers, and the rest follows.

...

"We have one class that thinks marriage and fatherhood is important, and another which doesn't, and it's causing that gap, income inequality, to get wider," Mr. DiCaro said.

The predilection among men to walk away from their babies is concentrated in the inner cities. In Baltimore, 38 percent of families have two parents, and in St. Louis the portion is 40 percent.

The near-total absence of male role models has ripped a hole the size of half the population in urban areas.'

Will new rules help N.J. divorce debate?

Mastodon · 26 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Roughly half of U.S. marriages end in divorce. In New Jersey, the real fighting begins when the divorce decree is issued.

On Dec. 1, a group of women in Monmouth County continued a protest of rulings made by Superior Court Judge Paul X. Escandon, who they accuse of being biased against female litigants in divorce cases. The protest marked the second time Escandon’s decisions have been publicly contested: a September demonstration brought more than 40 women to the courthouse entrance.

Meanwhile, a Flemington man has spent seven weeks in jail for "non-support" because his court-mandate alimony payments exceed his income. John Waldorf claims he's a victim of what he says is the state's flawed alimony system.'

'Perfect 10? Never Mind That. Ask Her for Her Credit Score'

Matt · 26 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Great idea. These days, you don't want to get stuck with someone who may be both financially irresponsible or unwilling to pull her own financial weight. Traditionally, men have been expected to supply the cash and/or ignore or tolerate their wife's/fiancee's/gf's financial irresponsibilities or ignorance. No more. (But guess who's still largely expected to pay for the dates?) And if she won't talk about her credit score or seems evasive? Big red flag. Excerpt:

'Dating someone with poor credit can have real implications. Banks remain wary of making loans to borrowers with tarnished scores, typically 660 and below; the best scores range from 800 to 850, and scores above 750 are considered good. A low score could quash dreams of buying a house, and result in steep interest rates, up to 29 percent, for credit cards, car financing and other unsecured loans.
...
Lauren Dollard, a 26-year-old assistant at a nonprofit in Houston, said her low credit score had helped to stall her romantic plans. Her boyfriend is wary of marrying her until she can significantly pay down the more than $150,000 she owes in student loans and bolster her credit score, she said.

Ms. Dollard’s credit score is so low, around 600, that she hasn’t been able to qualify for a car loan. She sympathizes with her boyfriend’s position because he “doesn’t ever want to be accountable for the irresponsible financial decision I made,” she said. Her boyfriend declined to be interviewed.'

Australia: Role model program aims to help boys to be boys

Mastodon · 27 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A BOYS' welfare project started by Menai Public School is helping children reconnect and engage in their learning.

The Boys Initiatives Program was established to address the needs of male pupils.

Targeted at grades 3-6, it aims to identify children who could most benefit from male role models, including children at risk of behavioural problems.

The idea was launched this year when the school realised there was a need for boys to be involved in activities that were separate from the classroom.

It involved pupils doing male-supervised activities including bike-riding and skateboard riding, which teach communication, co-operation and resilience.'

"Empowered young women don’t want to be called ‘feminist’"

Mastodon · 28 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The trailblazers — Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Susan B. Anthony, to name two heavy lifters — believed that women should have the same legal and civil protections as men without discrimination. As Stanton said in 1854 when she addressed the New York Legislature, “We ask no better laws than those you have made for yourselves. We need no other protection than that which your present laws secure to you.” You might call these first feminists “equity feminists”: They sought equality before the law.

A century-and-a-half later, the modern feminist movement has different aims than those of the women who first gathered at Seneca Falls in 1948*. That is not to say the modern feminist movement shares none of the goals of those early crusaders. Aspects of modern feminism — such as campaigns seeking to end violence against women or stop the sexual objectification of women — are fully consonant with “first wave” feminism. Yet today’s feminists also pursue objectives that go far beyond those of the equity feminists. As University of Colorado feminist Alison Jaggar has said, “Radical and socialist feminists have shown that the old ideals of freedom, equality and democracy are insufficient.”'

---
* Ed.: They meant "1848", when the Seneca Falls Convention was held.

SAVE: Find Hope, Know Hope, Give Hope

Matt · 28 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

In our line of work we come into contact with many people who are in difficult, if not desperate situations. Their perseverance to right the wrongs around them inspire us.

Vladek Filler was persecuted and wrongly convicted of spousal rape by an unethical prosecutor in Maine. The prosecutor, Mary Kellett was recently recommended for suspension by the panel that investigated her handling of his case: http://www.saveservices.org/2012/12/maine-bar-recommends-suspension-for-asst-da-mary-kellett/.

Gordon Smith was wrongly arrested several times over the course of several years due to false allegations of domestic violence in Delaware. Gordon was cleared after his electronic monitoring unit proved that he could not have attacked his accuser, and he recently received this letter from State Senator Lawson to A. G. Biden: http://www.saveservices.org/2012/12/de-sen-lawson-to-a-g-biden-on-behalf-of-falsely-accused-gordon-smith/.

The message I want to give you today is this:

Find hope, know hope, give hope.

Here's to hope!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

US Soldier Suicides Outnumber Combat Deaths In 2012

Mastodon · 28 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON (CBS DC) – American soldier suicides continue to outnumber combat-related deaths in 2012, and the trajectory for soldier suicides continues to get worse.

Statistics released by the Department of the Army show that through November potentially 303 active-duty, Reserve and National Guard soldiers committed suicide. As of Dec. 7, Stars and Stripes reports that 212 soldiers have died in combat-related deaths in Afghanistan.

The Army set a grim new record of 177 potential active-duty cases with 2012 coming to a close on Tuesday – 64 of these cases remain under investigation, 113 have been confirmed.'

The Dark Side of Feminism - Why Women Don't Like Powerful Women

Mastodon · 28 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It would have been better if she had dark circles under her eyes. Maybe a little bit of flab around the middle. At the very least a stain on her blouse – anything. Instead, in her first public appearance since the birth of her son, Yahoo CEO Marissa Mayer was as slim and blonde as ever, beaming at the cameras.

"The baby's been easy," she said – no problem at all. How shocking!

Women all over America and the world followed Mayer's appointment as head of the Internet giant Yahoo, and then early this fall the birth of her first child. Remembering their own tough first few months with a new baby, many young mothers wondered how she would manage. Very well, thank you, as it turns out. And that did not go down well at all.

In fact Mayer's first post-natal interview sent storm waves crashing through the Internet. Couldn't she just have kept her mouth shut, feminists, mothers, even childless-by-choice women, asked. Little seems to polarize other women so much as successful women. Or women who have lives very different from the ones they have more or less chosen for themselves.

...

American author and journalism professor Katie Roiphe, who wrote an essay entitled Elect Sister Frigidaire about the strange antipathy so many women feel for Hillary Clinton, suggests that we may like to imagine strong women but that we don't actually like them. As much as women complain about the differences in salaries, support quotas, pay lip service to breaking the glass ceiling – when a woman actually makes it big, for many the reaction is not joy – far from it in fact – many women are downright miffed.

Instead of being inspired and motivated by the success of other women, it seems to be perceived as a direct attack on their own life and to provoke comments that cut the successful woman down to size.'

Petition to create a White House Council for Boys and Men

Tom · 29 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

There is a petition online that is calling for a White House Council for Boys and Men. Please do sign this petition and urge all you know to sign it too.

"Cops: Woman, 50, Battered Boyfriend, 32, Because Six Came Before Nine"

Matt · 29 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Notice how TSG makes light of the attack via their headline. Wouldn't see this if the sexes were reversed. Excerpt:

'A Florida woman is jailed on a battery rap for allegedly striking her boyfriend after he “finished first and stopped pleasuring her” during a mutual oral sex session late last night in the victim’s home, police report.

Jennie Scott, 50, was booked into the Manatee County lockup on a misdemeanor charge stemming from the 11 PM encounter in the Palmetto bedroom of Jilberto Deleon, 32. Scott has dated Deleon “for the last 5 years on and off,” according to a sheriff’s report.

Deputies were summoned to Deleon’s home by a witness who heard the couple arguing and saw Scott (seen at right) atop Deleon “punching and scratching him.” She also allegedly struck Deleon with a stick and threatened to hit him with a wrench before the tool was taken from her hand by the witness.'

"Breadwinner women" idea bothers feminists

Mastodon · 29 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'She was celebrated as a feminist success story, lifted aloft for shifting the gender imbalance in women's favour, for showing that providing financially for ones' family is no longer just a man's job.
...
But cultural anxieties about what this shift means for the workplace, for parenting and, especially, for men meant successful women were as torn as ever. The female breadwinner talk became all about men and their inevitable decline.

In her book The End of Men and the Rise of Women, Hanna Rosin, a senior editor at The Atlantic, argued that "at this unprecedented moment, women are no longer merely gaining on men; they have pulled decisively ahead in every measure," and lit a match under the simmering gender wars, angering a surprising cohort: Feminists themselves.

"[After that book came out] there were a number of feminist academics who really felt like they had to come forward and pound that idea, 'How dare you say that the end of men is occurring — men still rule, men still oppress, women are still victimized, you're wrong,'" said Ms. Mundy in an interview. "It seems to me some members of the feminist establishment are actually uneasy when you argue that women are making progress."'

UK: Pro-men party has Harriet in its sights

Mastodon · 29 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Male rights campaigners are setting up an anti-feminist political party and plan to stand against Harriet Harman and other prominent feminists at the next General Election.

The ‘men power’ is being orchestrated by Mike Buchanan, 55, a former business consultant who opposes tokenism and says ‘our political elite has become detached from reality with its state-sponsored feminism’.

Mr Buchanan is not some fruitcake of the Monster Raving Loony party ilk. A bookish fellow from Bath, full of statistics, he has recently given evidence to a parliamentary select committee.

He has also been interviewed on Radio 4 and has spoken at political party conference fringe events about the Establishment’s demands for more women in boardrooms.'

AVfM interview of Mike Buchanan

Flawed Violence Against Women Act Could Become Next Lame-Duck Fight

Mastodon · 29 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the lame-duck session of Congress grinds to a close, policymakers are feeling the pressure to rush passage of a number of expansive, potentially faulty pieces of legislation before the year's end. Recent rumors swirling around Washington suggest the House may consider anew language in a Senate-passed version of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) reauthorization in the next few weeks.

Despite the original law's good intentions to support female victims of violence, recent reauthorizations—including those before Congress—are seriously flawed and have steered the law away from its original intent of protecting vulnerable women.'

UK pop star uses sexual violence against Simon Cowell look-alike in new video

Mastodon · 29 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The explicit footage, for controversial artist Madame Allsorts' single Jack Shh, sees a lookalike of the music mogul attacked by the blonde singer.

The graphic vid sees "Cowell" arrive at a deserted warehouse in his Bentley, which features the reg plate P5 YCHO, a pun on his label's name Syco.

The Brit singer is then seen bending down and unzipping the double's trousers.

Seconds later the lookalike, who is dressed in a black suit and wearing X Factor boss Cowell's trademark sunglasses, screams in pain as Madame Allsorts — real name Alayna Salter — severs his manhood.'

Woman accused of driving drunk, leaving kids at crash scene

Matt · 29 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A valley mom has been accused of crashing her car while driving drunk in Scottsdale. She fled the scene and police say she left behind her son.

The accident happened at 90th St and Raintree in north Scottsdale Sunday night. Police say the woman left her 13-year-old son behind after crashing into a median and took off with her other two kids.

Brianna Railing, 35, was also allegedly driving with a drink in her car.

The police report states Railing was turning onto 90th St from Raintree, but turned way too wide, hitting the curbed median. Her car ended up stuck on the median.'

A Call for Sensitivity in Discussing Circumcision

Matt · 29 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Since I used to be pro-cutting and am now adamantly opposed to it, I remember which messages I used to scoff at, and which messages actually got me to listen. I couldn't identify with the horror of the procedure until I learned about it in a non-judgmental manner.

When I became increasingly interested in the cause this past year, I sought out other intactivist “converts” like me but encountered sparing results. Most acquaintances and friends with whom I’ve spoken understand why I feel passionately about the issue and agree its practice should end, but few of them ever actively supported circumcision.

I’ve met a similar lack of representation in communities of more outspoken intactivists. I feel almost envious of the instinctive horror that these people rightfully experienced when they learned what circumcision meant. I feel guilt for having needed evidence to understand that the permanent alteration of male infant genitalia with a scalpel should be—at the very least—harshly questioned. Still, I am endlessly relieved that I gained this knowledge before becoming a mother and letting a mohel amputate large amounts of sensitive tissue from my son’s penis by default.
...

As abhorrent as circumcision seems to most intactivists, we must remember to withhold our judgment and our anger in order to be productive in our cause. I’ve personally struggled with such emotions, and I certainly haven’t overcome their presence in my life. However, I know how to handle these feelings in a way that lets me communicate with pro-cutters, and I believe that’s an imperative step in promoting the intactivist movement.

Circumcision exists because of institutionalized regulations on normality rather than specific parental wrongdoings, but combating it requires loud voices from supportive individuals. For this reason, we must forgive our opposition before we can sway them. Otherwise, we will never be open enough to garner their support.'

Woman charged with 'hate crime' in US subway shove death

arindamp · 30 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 31-year old woman, arrested for shoving an Indian immigrant to his death onto a subway train track here, has been charged with murder as a hate crime after she admitted before police that she pushed him because she "hated Hindus and Muslims".

Erika Menendez of Queens is charged with second-degree murder as a hate crime for the death of 46-year-old Sunando Sen.

She is to be arraigned in Queens criminal court and faces a maximum of 25 years to life in prison if convicted, Queens District Attorney Richard Brown said.'

Kansas demands that sperm donor pay child support

Mastodon · 31 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Kansas man who donated sperm to a lesbian couple three years ago is fighting the state's demand that he pay child support.

The two women raising the 3-year-old girl say they support the man, who responded to an ad they posted on the Craigslist website in 2009, the Topeka Capital-Journal reported.

The issue of child support arose when the two women broke up, and the couple applied for state services. Workers at the Kansas Department for Children and Families demanded the donor's name and then filed a child-support claim against him, the newspaper said.

Angela Bauer, one of the mothers, told the Capital-Journal that she and her former partner, Jennifer Schreiner, support the donor, William Marotta, "in whatever action he wants to go forward with" to fight the state's demand.'

Woman charged in NYC subway death ordered to undergo psychiatric evaluation

Mastodon · 31 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 31-year-old Bronx woman charged with pushing an immigrant to his death from a New York City subway platform has been ordered to undergo a psychiatric evaluation.

Erika Menendez was arraigned Saturday night on a charge of murder as a hate crime, the Associated Press reported. Judge Gia Morris ordered that she be held without bail and be given a mental health exam, it said

Menendez is charged in the death of Sunando Sen, who was crushed by a train in Queens on Thursday night.

Menendez, who was seen muttering to herself before shoving a man onto subway tracks in front of a speeding train, said she did so because, "I hate Hindus and Muslims," prosecutors said on Saturday.'

UK: Modern men too selfish to get 'the snip'?

Mastodon · 31 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Yesterday, the Daily Mail published an article on the free-falling rate of UK vasectomies and implied that modern men are to blame.

In 2001-02, there were 37,700 procedures across England and Wales, compared with 15,106 in 2011. There's been a 16 per cent decline in the past two years alone.

According to the feature, which was written by Tom Rawstorne, many women across the country blame the decline on men being 'selfish'.

They also assume that male fertility is a ticking infidelity time bomb - something which should be treated as highly suspicious, not a natural human state.

I disagree.

The truth is that modern life, and medicine, has simply out-grown the vasectomy.'

N.J. educators unsure how to improve 4th-grade boys' reading scores on state test

Mastodon · 31 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young boys across the country have trailed their female classmates in language arts proficiency for at least four decades, but over the last four years, the gender gap in New Jersey's public schools has widened, test results released last week show.

Between 2009 and 2012, the percentage of fourth-grade girls who passed the reading section of the annual NJ ASK test held at about 65 percent, while the share of boys who passed declined by 8.1 percentage points.

This year, nearly half of the state's fourth-grade boys failed the test.

Male students' declining reading proficiency is evident to some degree in every grade and in every demographic subgroup, according to superintendents, who said they don't understand why this is happening or how to solve the problem.'

Helping boys become better readers

Mastodon · 31 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Conventional wisdom has long intimated that girls are more adept at language arts and reading than boys of the same age. A recent study indicates there may be some merit to the assumption that boys tend to lag behind girls in reading. In order to bolster interest in books and reading comprehension, parents and educators can look to many successful literary series that tend to draw the attention of boys.

Boys and reading

A 2010 study by the Center on Education Policy that looked at trends beginning from 2002 to 2008 found boys have been lagging behind girls on standardized reading tests in all 50 states. According to Jack Jennings, president of the Center on Education Policy, "We found no state in which boys did not lag behind girls in reading at the elementary level, the middle school level and the high school level. So it's pretty clear: Boys are not doing as well as girls in reading."'

Police Lower Bar on Domestic Violence Arrests

Mastodon · 31 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WINTER HAVEN | It's not difficult to get arrested for domestic violence: A tossed cupcake or a soda shower can get you a ride in the back of a squad car.

The Nov. 25 arrest of Baxter Troutman, a former four-term state representative from Winter Haven, is a case in point of how in some domestic violence episodes, the bar for an arrest can appear low.

Although the domestic violence-battery charge against him was quickly dropped, Troutman first spent a night in jail, which he called a humiliating experience.

But, he said, people have been overwhelmingly supportive of him.

Troutman acknowledges throwing a bedspread in the direction of his wife, Becky.

She told a deputy it hit her in the face. He said it didn't hit her anywhere.

Sheriff Grady Judd, whose deputies arrested Troutman, said if someone calls about a domestic assault in his or her home, "somebody is going to jail. Every time."'

Police: Woman was upset about laundry cash

Mastodon · 31 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'JERSEY CITY, N.J., Dec. 31 (UPI) -- Police in New Jersey said they arrested a woman accused of charging at her boyfriend with a hammer when he refused to pay for laundry.

Jersey City police said they responded to an apartment Saturday on a 2:52 p.m. report of a man locked in a bathroom while his girlfriend pounded on the door with a hammer, The Jersey (Jersey City, N.J.) Journal reported Monday.

Police said they subdued Jazmin Duran, 24, after a brief struggle and she was arrested on charges of aggravated assault, terroristic threats, criminal mischief, domestic violence, possession of weapon, unlawful possession of a weapon and resisting arrest.'

Seattle woman charged in boyfriend's slaying

Mastodon · 31 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Seattle woman accused of stabbing her boyfriend to death during an argument has been charged with murder.

King County prosecutors contend Christina D. Kasper-Lewis killed Dante Durant on Dec. 19 during an argument at Durant's Skyway apartment. Stabbed in the chest, Durant died at the scene.

According to charging documents, Kasper-Lewis, 31, had stabbed Durant previously during other incidents of domestic violence. She allegedly told police she picked up the knife to show Durant she was serious about their argument, and then stabbed him once when he grabbed her by the lapels.'

Tacoma woman accused of starting fire with children in house over husband's possible affair

Mastodon · 31 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 33-year-old woman who suspected her husband of having an affair started a fire in their house Sunday, forcing the couple's children to hide in a closet and call for help, Tacoma police reported.

Department spokeswoman Loretta Cool said the woman was burning some of her husband's items downstairs when the rug caught fire at their home in the 3800 block of East J Street. Her husband was not home at the time.
...
Police arrested the woman on suspicion of arson and domestic violence and called Child Protective Services, who placed the children with their father. One child was treated for smoke inhalation.'

Glenn Sacks on Fox Video: Fatherhood Crisis in America?

Matt · 31 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Interview here.

"Single moms raising children on the rise" -- 4:25, Dec. 30, 2012

For those new to the MR scene, read about Glenn at Wikipedia.

UK: Breast cancer receives twice as much research funding as prostate cancer

MikeJH · 31 December 2012 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Breast cancer, the most common female cancer which has a similar death rate to prostate cancer, received more than double the annual research spend with £853 per case diagnosed compared with £417.
...
The figures were published by Prostate Cancer UK to mark the start of a fund-raising campaign, The Sledgehammer Fund, presented by Bill Bailey, the actor.'

Judge orders woman to have no more children

Minuteman · 1 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A US woman charged with child neglect has agreed to not have any more children as a condition of her probation and house arrest.

In October 2011, Kimberly Lightsey, 30, was arrested after she allegedly left her four young children - one of whom has epilepsy, cerebral palsy and brain damage - alone at a trashed hotel room while she went partying.

A guest called police after finding one of the Florida woman's children, who were aged from one to 11, strapped into an overturned stroller in a hallway at the hotel.

At the time, Lightsey was already serving four years of probation after not contesting a charge of hitting her six-year-old son in the face with a belt two years earlier.'

Kathy Griffin sexually harasses Anderson Cooper as 2013 arrives

Matt · 1 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. So where's the wailing cries of sexism and demand for apologies? Excerpt:

'No matter what vulgar things Kathy Griffin does on CNN's live New Year's Eve broadcasts, the folks at the supposedly most trusted name in news continue to invite her back.

On Monday night's program, after first telling co-host Anderson Cooper "I'm going to tickle your sack," she shortly after midnight actually kissed his crotch (video follows with transcribed highlights and commentary):

Roughly eleven minutes into the program which began at 10 PM, Cooper commented about how on Twitter folks were suggesting that there should be a game that whenever he giggles nervously during the show, contestants have to take a drink.

Then, completely out of the blue, Griffin said, “I'm going to tickle your sack. You can say sack. That's not bad.”

An obviously nervous Cooper responded, “I don't know what you're talking about. I have no sack of gifts here.”

Griffin then suggested the camera pan lower so the audience can see her “naughty gestures.”'

Germany: Pediatric Association Condemns Infant Circumcision

Matt · 1 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last month*, Germany's official Pediatric Association, the Berufsverband der Kinder- und Jugendärtze (BVKJ), joined the Dutch Medical Association and spoken out against infant circumcision. Below is a transcript of the statement; you can read the original in German here.

...

Initially, it should be observed that there is no reason from a medical point of view to remove an intact foreskin from underage boys or boys unable to give consent. Additionally, in pre-school age, there is only very rarely a real medical indication for removing the foreskin (circumcision). At this age the foreskin (praeputium) is physiologically to a greater or lesser extent, strongly fixed to the glans of the penis. Infections and painful tears often occur due improper attempts to pull back the fixed and still immature foreskin.'

---

* Nov., 2012

Fewer parents opting to circumcise their babies

Mastodon · 1 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Like every mom, Jessica — who requested her last name not be used for this story — had important things to consider during her first pregnancy, including whether or not to have her newborn son circumcised.

A recent policy statement from the American Academy of Pediatrics updated the organization's 1999 policy on circumcision, the surgical removal of some or all of the foreskin from the penis. The AAP states that the decision should be left to the parents, weighing medical information along with their own religious, ethical and cultural beliefs and practices.

...

Jessica watched a video of a circumcision during a childbirth preparation class. At the time, she and her husband lived in the Northeast.

"That sealed the deal," she said. "If it's not necessary, why do it?"'

Evan Thomas: 'White Men Dropping Out of the Workforce'

Mastodon · 1 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former Newsweek editor Evan Thomas made a bizarre statement on PBS's Inside Washington Friday.

"Unexplored story of the year: white men dropping out - dropping out of the workforce, dropping out of elections, just plain dropping out, getting social security, not doing anything, going hunting, fishing, just not in the game"
...
As such, the biggest decline in this statistic has come from black men not white men who continue to by far represent the largest chunk of the labor force with a participation rate of 73.2 percent.

With this in mind, Thomas might want to rethink his bizarre conclusion.'

UK: Soho restaurant joins trend for women-only venues

Mastodon · 2 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

The vogue for women-only venues is gathering pace as a restaurant bar prepares to open in Soho.

The independently-owned bar and restaurant in Frith Street, Sofakingcool, is to become “women-only” themed from February 1 and renamed KC’z Bar.

It follows a spate of others which aim to connect women with women — most recently private members’ club Grace Belgravia, which opened in November. It only admits men for dinner on Thursdays and has an annual fee of £5,500.'

Are women really better than men?

Mastodon · 2 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In his book “Man Down: Proof Beyond a Reasonable Doubt That Women Are Better Cops, Drivers, Gamblers, Spies, World Leaders, Beer Tasters, Hedge Fund Managers, and Just About Everything Else”, Dan Abrams slammed men with some outlandish research to make the case for the fairer sex. He stated that “statistics and studies show women are better collaborators, and are more cautious and more adept at navigating treacherous terrain.” He also said that women were better at facing tough conditions, hard economic times, bad situations and some other boring stuff.

I'm sure Abrams book is adored by women worldwide, and is considered a divine revelation by Oprah, but I think the author has it all wrong. Men are better than women at all sorts of really cool jobs and skills. For example, Abrams failed to mention that men still excel at:'

Maryland boy, 6, suspended from school for making gun gesture with hand and saying ‘pow’

Matt · 3 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Maryland family is fighting the one day school suspension of a 6-year-old boy who made a gun gesture with his thumb and forefinger while in class.

The boy was suspended after pointing the finger gun at a classmate and saying “pow,” WTOP reported. The incident came a week after a gunman stormed Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, Conn., killing 26 people, including 20 children.

The boy’s family said they got a letter from Roscoe Nix Elementary School in Silver Spring, Md. saying the child was being suspended over the gun gesture and had also been spoken to about a "similar incident,” the Washington Examiner reported.

The family also obtained a lawyer.'

Sworn-in female senators declare (again) that so much will be better as more women take office

Matt · 3 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Yes, indeed. All the same issues that male pols deal with such as electoral pressure, special-interest meddling, internal personality conflicts and interest-clashes, will somehow be mitigated, just because the players are female. Tell me, anyone ever watch a women's soccer or basketball game? Did you walk away thinking women were any less competitive than men? Didn't think so. Thought experiment: The Congress (both houses) are 90+% female and we have a female president, too. Now what has really changed? The deficit is gone? Voters will stop threatening to toss them out if they raise taxes too much or reduce Social Security? Our various Middle East problems will all be solved? Social problems of all kinds will be solved or disappear? What do you think? Excerpt:

'But the women also admit that they believe having more women in the room would help in fierce negotiations, compromise, and legislating on Capitol Hill, traits they say do not come as naturally to their male colleagues in the Senate. That sentiment enjoys bipartisan support among the women of the Senate.

"What I find is with all due deference to our male colleagues, that women's styles tend to be more collaborative," Sen. Susan Collins, R-Maine, said.

Sen. Claire McCaskill, D-Mo., said by nature women are "less confrontational." Sen-elect Mazie Hirono, D-Hawaii, says that women are "problem solvers."'

Hey, sperm donor, don't answer that Craiglist ad

Mastodon · 3 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A man who responded to an online ad for sperm and now faces thousands of dollars in child support is living proof of the dangers of donating outside of a sperm bank.

"The biggest piece of advice is just to not do it," said Ashley Nicole Reeve, a Texas-based attorney practicing in family law and reproductive technology law. "I don't know that there is any sure way legally to protect yourself."

With reproductive technology advancing more quickly than the law that governs it, donors who go through less-than-official channels can find themselves in a gray area when it comes to child support.

"The medical technology really has gone further than what the law has protected at this point. People are using sperm donors and egg donors and surrogates more and more, and the law really hasn't caught up just yet," she said.'

Australia: "Female graduates earn $5000 less than men"

Minuteman · 4 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'"It is very disturbing that men's starting salaries have increased over the past year but those of women have not, especially given that women make up the majority of university graduates," the research executive manager at the Workplace Gender Equality Agency, Carla Harris, said.

"The lesson here is that the gender pay gap continues to have a very real impact on the bank balance of young women starting their careers."

The pay gap was most pronounced for those working in architecture and building, dentistry, optometry and law.

However, female computer scientists, earth scientists, pharmacists and engineers were amongst those women who earned slightly more than men.

Only education, humanities and medicine had no gender pay gap in starting salaries.'

SAVE: Congress Adjourns, VAWA Fails to Pass

Matt · 4 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The 112th Congress has adjourned without reauthorizing the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA).

SAVE has consistently advocated for improvements to VAWA. We have worked hard to educate legislators. Among other things, we held several lobbying events throughout the year. We even wrote our own language, the Partner Violence Reduction Act (PVRA) to show that we can serve all victims of domestic violence while reducing waste, fraud and false allegations.

We are happy to report that some of SAVE's key reforms were included in HR 4970, the House version of VAWA. Rest assured, our efforts to achieve VAWA reform will continue in the next session of Congress.

Please call House Leader Eric Cantor today, and thank him for his principled and courageous support of VAWA reform. Call: (202) 225-2815

Looking forward to 2013,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

"Joe Biden Gets Frisky with Senator's Wife"... Really?

Matt · 4 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. I watched this video and despite being no fan of Biden, I don't think a man ought to be accused of inappropriate/lewd conduct for engaging in what has historically been referred to as "friendly affectionate contact". I am pretty sure the new senator's wife was known to Biden and nothing about her body language conveys discomfort, at least not that I could see. Biden didn't do anything wrong here except of course be male. If the sexes were reversed, does anyone think this site would have trumpeted this rather innocuous event? Caption reads:

'Vice President Joe Biden got a little frisky with the wife of Senator Angus King at today's ceremonial swearing-in at the Capitol ...

Biden's hand remains on King's wife, Mary Herman, for at least 20 seconds, moving down her back and to the side of her chest.

The vice president has been in the Capitol today welcoming in the new Congress.'

UK: Feminism is to partly blame for the breakdown of the family, says senior female Labour MP

Mastodon · 4 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism is partly to blame for the breakdown of the family, one of Labour's most senior female politicians has said.

Diane Abbott, the party's public health spokesman, said that major issues facing society 'stem from family breakdown'.

...

Perhaps most surprising, however, is her argument that Left-wingers and feminists should make family breakdown a key battleground rather than leave the issue to Conservatives.

In an interview with The Guardian, she said: 'Those of us who came of age at the height of feminism had very mixed views about the family, since it seemed to be defined as a heterosexual thing with a certificate, children and mum at home.'

But she said the Left had to recognise that 'some of the biggest public health issues stem from family breakdown', explaining: 'Doctors say to me that so many of the drug and alcohol problems they see stem from family difficulties.'

Girls make better grades because they're nicer?

Mastodon · 4 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Elementary and middle school teachers give higher grades to girls than boys — but that may be more about differences in behavior than differences in what they know, according to new research by University of Georgia economists.

“It appears that teachers see girls’ performance more favorably than boys’ performance,” said Christopher Cornwell, head of the UGA economics department and the study’s lead author.

...

“You would think there would be a close alignment between teachers’ assessment of performance and test scores, but they’re not as closely aligned as you’d think,” Cornwell said.

And that misalignment favors girls, he said.

“It’s not just that they’re not aligned. Boys are less favorably rendered than the girls,” he said.'

Thousands of Kansas Sperm Donors Emerge to Protest State's Child Support Claims

Mastodon · 4 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over three years ago, a well-intentioned, 46-year-old race car mechanic in Kansas donated his sperm to a lesbian couple seeking to conceive a child. A written agreement that waived the donor's parental rights and financial obligations was executed between the parties at the time of delivery. However in October, Kansas filed a petition to have the donor legally declared the father of the three-year-old child and held responsible for support payments under state law. Citing a 2007 case before the Kansas Supreme Court, lawyers for the donor argued that their client bore no parental responsibilities because of his agreement with the couple. The case attracted national attention this week with the announcement of a January 8 hearing. As an unexpected result, thousands of unmarried men with illegitimate children and mounting child support debt filed motions Thursday to have their statuses changed to "donor," and their financial obligations overturned.'

State: Woman deceives Kansas agency to get child support from sperm donor

Mastodon · 4 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TOPEKA, Kan. — The state agency seeking child support payments from a Topeka man who donated sperm to a lesbian couple says one of the women “clearly deceived” the department.

The Kansas Department for Children and Families in a court filing Wednesday also called into question the validity of a sperm donor contract between William Marotta and the couple, Jennifer Schreiner and Angela Bauer.

Marotta’s attorney called the agency’s filing “offensive.” Phone calls placed to the women Thursday afternoon weren’t immediately returned.

Documents show Schreiner indicated she didn’t know the name of the donor or “have any information” about him in her application for child support.'

Shrill Rhetoric and Partisan Squabbling Doomed Violence Against Women Act, SAVE Says

Matt · 5 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Jan. 4, 2013 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Anti-violence advocates are disappointed after the 112th Session of Congress ended without hammering out differences in the Senate and House versions of the Violence Against Women Act renewal. Last-minute talks between Vice President Joe Biden and House Leader Eric Cantor failed to resolve differences in provisions regarding immigrants, Indians, and lesbian/gay victims of intimate partner violence.
...
"The rhetoric has been over-the-top and personal attacks only serve to harm relationships that are essential for political compromise," explains SAVE spokesman Steve Blake. "As we move into the next session of Congress, SAVE hopes all key stakeholders can work together to develop a better law that will protect all victims."

A national poll found a strong majority of registered voters are in favor of reforming VAWA: http://www.saveservices.org/campaign-2012/national-survey-on-vawa-reform/'

Women in the Senate Explain Why They Do it Better

Mastodon · 5 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yesterday, a record 20 women were sworn in to the U.S. Senate. To mark the occasion ABC's World News With Diane Sawyer had all of the female senators on for a group interview. One of the major topics of the discussion was the belief of many of the senators that they achieve better results than their male colleagues on a variety of issues including the budget, immigration reform and climate change. Michigan Senator Debbie Stabenow got the ball rolling when she suggested women are more inclined to get results by working in a bipartisan manner.
...
Maine Senator Susan Collins took the argument a step further by saying if women were in charge of the Senate and in the White House there would be a solution to the budget debate that has gripped Washington.

"I think if we were in charge of the Senate and of the administration that we would have a budget deal by now," Ms. Collins said.
...
Later on in the interview, Maryland Senator Barbara Mikulski said she believes women bring a "sense of timeliness" to the Senate that is not shared by their male colleagues.
...
California Senator Dianne Feinstein chimed in to say that having less testosterone makes female politicians more effective.'

Hanna Rosin on America's Male Identity Crisis

Mastodon · 5 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rosin: What young people learn in church can no longer be reconciled with the realities of their lives. Yet men and women alike are finding it immensely difficult to accept their changed roles. This is why marriages are failing, and mothers are raising their children alone. Many women would rather remain alone than marry a man who can't contribute anything to the family's income.
...
SPIEGEL: That sounds very optimistic. But in your book, you describe couples for whom the fact that the woman was suddenly earning more money than the man caused considerable tension.

Rosin: That's true. These arrangements are so new that both men and women often have mixed feelings about them, and you don't have to dig very deep to find those feelings. I think one young man from Canada put it very well when he told me that theoretically and politically he believes in the idea of a househusband 100 percent -- he just doesn't want to be one himself.'

Common-law doctrine bars man from rejecting paternity of his non-biologic daughter in Berks court

Mastodon · 5 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Judge Bucci of the Berks County Court of Common Pleas recently barred a man from disclaiming paternity over a child, pursuant the common-law doctrine of “paternity by estoppel.”

In January 2012, the plaintiff, who is the mother of a 4-year-old girl, filed a complaint for support in the Berks County Domestic Relations Office, seeking financial support from her estranged husband, the defendant.

The man challenged the complaint and filed a petition for special relief, seeking an order for DNA testing to disestablish paternity.

According to the court’s opinion, the parties agreed that the girl was conceived and born during the marriage but is not the biological child of the man.

The court found that the girl child was, in fact, the product of an extramarital affair. Although the man suspected infidelity, according to the court’s opinion, the mother concealed the affair and assured the man that he was the biological father.'

Evidence for "demonic male ape" is flimsy

el cid · 6 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I find this article of interest because it argues against the theory of the "demonic male" among apes. I have literally seen the argument made that men make lousy parents because male lions or polar bears allegedly kill their young. But such killings among apes, at least, are apparently rare--as is other war-like behavior. Excerpt:

'An important essay by columnist John Horgan that was published in 2010 in Scientific American summarizes much of what is known about warfare in great apes and other primates. Horgan is especially concerned with what is called the "demonic male" theory that states "both male humans and chimpanzees, our closest genetic relatives, are 'natural warriors' with an innate predisposition toward 'coalitionary killing,' which dates back to our common ancestor." Horgan summarizes what is actually known as follows: "All told, since Jane Goodall began observing chimpanzees in Tanzania's Gombe National Park in 1960, researchers have directly observed 31 intergroup killings, of which 17 were infants.... researchers at a typical site directly observe one killing every seven years ... my criticism -- and that of other critics I've cited -- stems from science, not ideology. The evidence for the demonic-males theory, far from extraordinary, is flimsy."'

F&F: Success: Arizona Takes a Step Towards Shared Parenting

Matt · 6 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Happy New Year! Arizona's law, SB 1127, went into effect on January 1st. It requires the court to adopt a parenting plan that provides for both parents to share legal decision-making regarding their child and that maximizes their respective parenting time.

Arizona's new law still requires judges to make decisions based on the children's best interest, but their best interest now includes maximum time for both parents, although the new legislation does not specify the amount of time a child should spend with each parent. It does emphasize three aspects to contact with both parents: Frequency, Meaningfulness, and Continuity.'

SAVE: Tell House Speaker John Boehner: Do Not Agree to Vote on S.1925

Matt · 7 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Even though the 112th Congress adjourned without reauthorizing the Violence Against Women Act, VAWA is still very much in the picture.

As you may remember, last year the Senate passed their reauthorization of VAWA, S 1925. Not satisfied with the Senate's bill, the House passed their own version.

Then we had a standstill. There were reports that they were trying to come to a last minute agreement, but it didn't happen.

Immediately following the adjournment, supporters of S 1925 started pressuring the House to vote on the Senate version of VAWA. But why should they? They've already approved a reauthorization of VAWA - HR 4970.

We believe that if people in the Senate sincerely want to pass VAWA, they should put HR 4970 to a vote in the Senate.

Please call House Speaker John Boehner TODAY.

Call: 202-225-6205
Say: "Do not agree to the ridiculous demand to schedule a vote on the Senate VAWA bill, S. 1925."

We have worked hard to reform VAWA. Let's not let all of our hard work go to waste!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Warren Farrell: 'Guns don't kill people — our sons do'

Mastodon · 7 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For boys, the road to successful manhood has crumbled. In many boys' journey from a fatherless family to an almost all-female staff elementary school such as Sandy Hook, there is no constructive male role model.
...
Adam Lanza is reported to have gone downhill when divorce separated him from his dad. Children of divorce without enough father contact are prone to have poor social skills; to struggle with the five D's (depression, drugs, drinking, discipline and delinquency); be suicidal; be less able to concentrate; and to be aggressive but not assertive. Perhaps most important, these boys are less empathetic.
...
It's time we go beyond fighting over guns to raising our sons. With one executive order, President Obama can create a White House Council on Men and Boys to work with the Council on Women and Girls he formed in 2009. Why? No one part of government or the private sector has a handle on the solution.

A coordinated strategy is best developed at the White House level. The mere formation of such a council by the president alerts foundations, companies, families, teachers and therapists that our sons' "failure to launch" needs to be on their agenda. And politically, an effort to go beyond the rote ideological disagreements of the two parties could help build the unity to actually do something instead of fight to a standstill in a closely divided country.

There are few things a culture does as important as raising children. We can't continue to fail half of them.'

'Coming soon to an angry dude near you - the "pro-men" party'

Mastodon · 7 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

As with many extremist political ideologies, the increased visibility and popularity of Men's Rights Activists (or MRAs) such as Buchanan can be attributed largely to fear. Fear, paranoia, and hatred. Fear that white working class men are set to become a "minority" (David Willetts this week confirmed this by comparing them to other "disadvantaged groups"); paranoia that such disadvantages are caused by the increasing emancipation of women, out there, spreading their tentacles, passing exams, and taking the world by storm, like the demented harpies that we are; and hatred of those women, with their vaginas and their soft smooth skin and their Child Support Agency. The bitches.

While we're not denying that there are many male-specific problems which are not being adequately tackled – not least the alarming suicide rate among young men, which Buchanan seems to imply is also feminism's fault – laying the blame at the door of women is an astonishing jump in so-called logic. All the major political parties seem to be doing a rather nice job of championing male interests already, and although the coalition clearly couldn't give a toss about the working class, the fact that they only have five women in the cabinet doesn't exactly signify the 'state-sponsored feminism' that Buchanan sees lurking in the dark corners of his proverbial bedchamber. So where's the beef?'

Women In Military In No Rush To Join Infantry

Mastodon · 7 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON -- If or when the Pentagon lets women become infantry troops – the country's front-line warfighters – how many women will want to?

The answer is probably not many.

Interviews with a dozen female soldiers and Marines showed little interest in the toughest fighting jobs. They believe they'd be unable to do them, even as the Defense Department inches toward changing its rules to allow women in direct ground combat jobs.

In fact, the Marines asked women last year to go through its tough infantry officer training to see how they would fare. Only two volunteered and both failed to complete the fall course. None has volunteered for the next course this month. The failure rate for men is roughly 25 percent.
...
Changing the rules for a potential future draft would be a difficult proposition.

The Supreme Court has ruled that because the Selective Service Act is aimed at creating a list of men who could be drafted for combat – and women are not in combat jobs – American women aren't required to register upon turning 18 as all males are. If combat jobs open to women, Congress would have to decide what to do about that law.'

South Africa: Pregnant women drinking alcohol to induce FAS to collect money

Minuteman · 7 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Pregnant South African women are deliberately drinking large quantities of alcohol to harm their unborn babies in a bid to earn more welfare money.

...

"If I don't drink this, I'm like someone who is sick," one mother told Sky News.

"I can't sleep and I can't think straight but when I have this then I am better and I can do anything."

The addictive milky brown brew is made from yeast, water and battery acid and is sold in illegal drinking houses called 'shebeens'.

...

The World Health Organisation reports there has been a spike in the area of children born with Foetal Alcohol Spectrum Disorder (FASD) since 2002.

The irreversible symptoms mean children suffer from speech problems, physical deformities, learning difficulties and behavioural issues.

Families receive 250 South African rand ($28) per child, per month but a disabled child brings in 1200 rand a month ($134) – a "lucrative" income.'

F&F: Report Shows Mothers Control Fathers' Access to Children

Matt · 8 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'...From the simple fact of breaking up with a man and not informing him of the existence of his child or, if he learns of it somehow, saying it's another man's, to surreptitiously placing the child for adoption, to refusing or limiting his visitation, to child abduction, to false claims of abuse, to maternal gatekeeping, to parental alienation, mothers maintain all but complete power over a father's ability to have a relationship with his child and, of course, the child's ability to have one with its father.

...

Needless to say a society like ours that comes between its fathers and their children is a society that is asking for trouble. It's a society that is begging for more crime, more drug and alcohol abuse, more unemployment, and the like. As I say so often, someone should inform our legislatures and judges. Everyone knows but them.'

UK: Teen murdered over false rape claim

Mastodon · 8 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Four killers carried out the “extraordinarily callous, violent and brutal” murder of a Harold Hill teenager after the sister of one wrongly claimed he had raped her, a court heard today (Tuesday).

Luke Harwood, 18, was punched and kicked to death by the gang, from Romford, who planned to slice off his fingers and pull out his teeth so the body could not be identified, the Old Bailey was told.

The victim had the misfortune to move into a council house in Crow Lane, where the gang all lived when Alice Hall - who made the false allegation - was there, the jury heard.
...
The victim, who was 5ft 7ins tall and weighed just seven stone, was taken to a stream where he was finished off on the bank, the court was told.
“His facial skeleton was crushed. They then concealed his body by covering it with a mattress and other items,” Mr Denison said.

The following evening the alleged killers returned to the scene.

“They had with them knives and a pair of wire cutters, items they were intending to use to mutilate his body by cutting off his fingers and removing his teeth, doing so to make it more difficult for him to be recognised,” said Mr Denison.'

False rape claim warrants severe punishment

Mastodon · 8 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'I'd like to comment on an article written by Greg Tuttle Dec. 20 concerning a false rape claim by Christina Nadine Nelson in The Gazette. First of all, I received this article via email from The Society Of The Wrongfully Accused.

I myself was a false rape victim back in September of 1995 while living in Carmichael, Calif. I was accused by a woman I never even shook hands with. I was arrested, charged and thrown into jail without any consideration and had the embarrassment of having my name and charges splattered all over the Sacramento Bee.

The embarrassment and humiliation to my wife, my daughter and myself was immeasurable; it caused severe emotional trauma and in some ways permanent damage to my marriage. I hope and pray this woman receives the justice she deserves and that some day laws are passed making false rape claims a felony. They also should be treated as a sex crime. Even though no physical rape was committed, men who are almost always the victims in these cases, are raped by the justice system. If they are unfortunately convicted and sent to prison, they are often physically raped and sometimes murdered.'

UK: John Leslie opens up about how false rape claims ruined his life

Mastodon · 8 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Former television presenter John Leslie has laid bare his torment at the devastating sex attack claims that destroyed his career and nearly brought him to suicide.

The former host of This Morning says being named supposedly accidentally as the alleged rapist of fellow TV presenter Ulrika Jonsson ruined his life, leaving him broke and turning him into a hermit.

He has not worked in television since the unfounded 2003 allegations and says he still feels damned for crimes he didn't commit.'

Wikipedia entry on John Leslie here.

Man sues after false rape accusation

Mastodon · 8 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Wymore man wrongfully accused of sexual assault is asking for a jury trial to assess damages done by Gage County and several sheriff's deputies.

Elliot Hawkins filed the suit in Gage County District Court on Wednesday, the same day Jennifer Valenta was sentenced to 32 to 60 months in prison for attempted prostitution, false reporting and tampering with evidence.

The suit names Deputy Brandon Schley, Investigator John Chavez, Investigator Rob Sandersfeld and Sgt. Tony Shepardson for their role in the "conscious-shocking reckless investigation" that Hawkins claims violated his constitutional right to due process.'

Casey Anthony's Misdemeanor Conviction Reviewed By Florida Appeals Court

Mastodon · 8 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. -- There is no doubt that Casey Anthony lied to detectives when she told them her 2-year-old daughter had been kidnapped by a babysitter.

But a state appellate court is being asked to decide Tuesday whether the Florida mother was in police custody when she made the statements that led to her being convicted of lying to law enforcement officers.

If judges on the Fifth District Court of Appeals decide she was in police custody, they could overturn her misdemeanor convictions on the grounds that her statements were inadmissible since she hadn't been read her Miranda rights. The Miranda rights warn suspects that they can remain silent and that their statements can be used against them in court.'

UN: Countries must address lack of women in science and technology fields

Mastodon · 8 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'7 January 2013 – Women and girls run the risk of being left behind in scientific and technological fields if countries do not put measures in place to address discrimination and change traditional attitudes, the United Nations said today, warning that this gap constitutes an obstacle to nations' progress.

"Women tend to be overrepresented in the humanities and social sciences, and underrepresented in science and technology," said an official from the world body's International Labour Organization's (ILO) Bureau for Workers' Activities, Claude Akpokavie. "Measures need to be put in place to redress this imbalance."

According to ILO, the gap between men and women in the scientific and technological fields is linked to pervasive gender roles and attitudes in different societies – visible in both developed and developing countries – which encourage girls to pursue 'softer' subjects.'

'America must stop blaming divorce on women'

Mastodon · 8 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent poll revealed a clear tendency to blame women for not keeping their husbands happy and a habit of viewing divorced women as unwanted and pitiable.

That was in the United Arab Emirates. But what about the United States of America? You'd think a more enlightened view of women and marriage might prevail.

Think again. The Huffington Post ran a front-page piece just this week with a headline that would make any old-school patriarch proud: "Women: Five Reasons Your Divorce Is Your Fault." The author, self-appointed intimacy expert Laura Doyle, spent several paragraphs hectoring women for sins including "Taking the same approach at home as you do at work" and "Rejecting his efforts to make you happy." She reserves special scorn for present-day Lysistratas who are cruelly "withholding sex" from their partners, as if they were using sex as a punishment rather than simply too tired or not aroused enough to want it. Doyle's "remedy" for this transgression? "Consider making yourself available for sex at least once a week in support of your mutual goal of connecting." Problem solved!'

Study Examines Why Girls Do Better Than Boys In School

Mastodon · 8 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'American women seem poised to make the 21st century their century as they begin to equal or even surpass their male counterparts in many aspects of society.

Researchers from the University of Georgia and Columbia University decided to look into one possible aspect of the emergence of women: why young girls earn better grades in elementary school than their male counterparts despite performing worse on standardized tests.

According to the research team's report in the current issue of the Journal of Human Resources, the girls' classroom behavior appears to translate into a higher overall academic performance.

"The skill that matters the most in regards to how teachers graded their students is what we refer to as 'approaches toward learning,'" study co-author Christopher Cornwell, an economics professor at UGA, said in a statement. "You can think of 'approaches to learning' as a rough measure of what a child's attitude toward school is: It includes six items that rate the child's attentiveness, task persistence, eagerness to learn, learning independence, flexibility and organization."

...

The study's findings showed that gender differences in teachers' grading and evaluation begins in early years and tends to favor girls. In every subject area, the boys tended to perform below where their test scores might indicate.'

"Can the ‘cuddle hormone’ also make men better fathers?"

Mastodon · 8 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The wonder hormone that a recent study said might stop men from cheating could also make them more engaged fathers, according to new research.

Oxytocin has been variously labelled as the “cuddle hormone,” the “love hormone” and the “trust hormone” in recent years.

Last month, it once again made headlines because of a study published in the Journal of Neuroscience that suggested getting men to stop cheating on their significant others might be as simple as getting them to take a whiff of the hormone. In that study, men exposed to oxytocin stayed farther away from an attractive woman than men who were not exposed to the hormone.'

H.R. 2400 (112th): Religious and Parental Rights Defense Act dead

Minuteman · 9 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'H.R. 2400 (112th): Religious and Parental Rights Defense Act of 2011

Introduced: Jun 24, 2011 (112th Congress, 2011–2013)
Sponsor: Rep. Brad Sherman [D-CA27]
Status: Died (Referred to Committee)
...
Religious and Parental Rights Defense Act of 2011 - Prohibits a state or a political subdivision from adopting or continuing in force a law, regulation, or order that prohibits or regulates the circumcision of males who have not attained the age of 18 years and whose parent or guardian has consented to the circumcision, unless such law, regulation, or order applies to all such circumcisions performed in the state and is limited to ensuring that all such circumcisions are performed in a hygienic manner.'

"Gender gap" in Internet access?

Minuteman · 9 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'On January 10, at 9:00 a.m. Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues Melanne Verveer will convene and deliver remarks at the first international Working Forum on Women, Information and Communication Technologies and Development (WICTAD) at the Institute for International Education (IIE) in Washington, DC. Co-hosted by the Department of State's Office of Global Women's Issues and UN Women, WICTAD will bring together representatives from civil society, academia, government, the private sector, and the UN to assess the social, economic, and political implications of the gender gap in Internet access.'

A Prime Time Abortion and a Broken-Hearted Father

Mastodon · 10 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last night's episode of a popular prime time television show, Parenthood, dealt with the tragedy of fathers being legally excluded from the abortion decision.
...
Drew tells Amy that he wants to support her no matter what she decides to do about the pregnancy. He repeatedly insists that he loves her enough to support their new family regardless of hardships that may come their way. However, Amy becomes like a stone wall. Lyrics in the background aptly describe her demeanor: [she is] colder than a wave in the Arctic Ocean. A baby, she believes, will destroy her life.
...
This is reality. This is what abortion looks like when all is said and done. Fathers have no legal rights in the decision to keep or abort their own children. They have no say in a mother's choice, even though they are equally responsible for the child's conception.'

Dept. of Health & Human Services Office of Inspector General (OIG) recruiting Auditors

Minuteman · 10 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Reports published by the OIG have been very useful in gaining insight into U.S. government agencies that incentivise circumcision and circumcision "research" (such as the CDC, FDA, NIAID and NIH), and in documenting the deficiencies in state Medicaid programs to help strengthen the case against continued funding of medically-unnecessary circumcision, so appropriately qualified readers might appreciate the opportunity to gain further insights and help hold these agencies and programs accountable.

If anyone should happen to be successful in landing one of these vacancies, it would be greatly appreciated if they could donate a certain percentage of net income (maybe 5%-10%) to an anti-circumcision organisation/s in the U.S. (or if you're not confident in donating the money, invest a similar amount in your own anti-circumcision activities).

Excerpt:

'As an auditor for the Office of Inspector General, you can save the American taxpayer millions of dollars each year. Over the past 10 years, the Office of Audit Services (OAS) has saved taxpayers $95 billion.

As an auditor, you will help to prevent and detect fraud and abuse in the programs and operations of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS); identify systemic weaknesses; advise the Secretary and Congress about problems and deficiencies; and recommend improvements in costs, efficiency, and effectiveness.
...
We conduct and supervise audits of:

Medicare and Medicaid
Public Health Services
Food and Drug Administration
Centers for Disease Control and Prevention
National Institutes of Health
Temporary Assistance to Needy Families
Foster Care
Child Support
Head Start'

UK: Universities should target working-class white boys, minister says

Mastodon · 10 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Universities should recruit more white, working-class boys in the same way they target students from other disadvantaged groups, the universities minister has suggested.

David Willetts says white, working-class teenage boys should be targeted alongside ethnic minorities and those from disadvantaged communities when universities look to attract students.

His suggestion comes against the backdrop of a drastic fall in the number of university applications from men.'

Italy: Berlusconi accuses judges of 'feminist' bias over divorce deal

Mastodon · 10 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Senior judges in Milan issued a stern rebuke to Silvio Berlusconi on Wednesday after the former Italian prime minister tried to blame his huge alimony payments on the biased views of "feminist, communist" magistrates.

In the latest skirmish between the billionaire media magnate and the judiciary, the heads of the Milan tribunal and court of appeal issued a curt statement saying they "firmly rejected any insinuation of partiality" on the part of the magistrates who drew up the three-time prime minister's divorce settlement, which he claims amounts to €200,000 (£163,000) a day.

Livia Pomodoro and Giovanni Canzio added that their colleagues were "diligent professionals", and called on politicians to avoid making "any expression of derision" that could cause the public to think otherwise.'

Australia: Feminist insists Abbott no misogynist

Mastodon · 10 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Get around the login challenge for this story by Googling the first paragraph text and clicking the top result link. Excerpt:

'LEADING feminist and key member of the Women's Electoral Lobby Eva Cox has declared some of Julia Gillard's policies sexist and rejected the Prime Minister's claims that Tony Abbott is a misogynist.

In an opinion article for The Conversation website, Ms Cox says the Opposition Leader is not "feminism's worst enemy", as portrayed by Labor in its attacks against Mr Abbott.

"He is a somewhat inconsistent, confused conservative with the attached sexist views on gender roles, which he seems to be trying hard to minimise," she says. "He is not in my terms a misogynist."
...
Ms Cox says she takes the definition of sexism as a "view of gender as the basis for entrenched discriminatory differences" and misogyny as having a deep pathological dislike of women.'

More Women in Congress Does Not Mean Less Gridlock in Washington

Mastodon · 10 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Exhilarated by the record number of women elected to both the House and Senate in 2012, giddy commentators have begun suggesting that increased representation by females could cure the poisonous polarization in Washington and repair the broken institutions of our government. A more sober, comprehensive analysis, however, reveals no historical or logical basis to assume that the much heralded influx of female politicos means an automatic improvement in the dysfunctional performance of the legislative branch.

...

None of these happy pronouncements cited examples of this sort of collaborative, constructive female legislative leadership in either the recent or distant past. In her short-lived speakership, for instance, Nancy Pelosi achieved a reputation for many things, but "working across the aisle" wasn't one of them: she won not a single GOP vote for either the stimulus package or the Obamacare reforms. On the Senate side, the "Maine Girls" (Republican Sens. Susan Collins and Olympia Snowe) won praise as moderate problem-solvers, but from the other edge of the continent the "California Girls" (Democratic stalwarts Barbara Boxer and Dianne Feinstein) emphatically did not. (Very few colleagues in either party would croon along with the Beach Boys that "I wish they all could be California Girls.")

Gender differences never really identify political performance or predilections: there's as much temperamental difference between the genial Sen. Mary Landrieu (D-La.) and the pugnacious "Battling Barbara" Mikulski, as between the courtly Lamar Alexander (R-Tenn.) and the flame-throwing Rand Paul (R-Ky.).

...

In this context it's worth remembering that one of the most polarizing and truculent of all legislators of the past 50 years, noted for frequent verbal abuse of both colleagues and staff, also happened to be a feminist icon: Bella Abzug, the big-hatted harridan from the Borough of Brooklyn.

...

Around the world, some female politicians have won praise for their heroic leadership in times of danger and discord, like Britain's Margaret Thatcher or Israel's Golda Meir. But neither of these fierce, formidable ladies earned recognition for a collaborative, nonconfrontational style, and both found themselves forced from office by disgruntled dissidents in their own parties. Other women who have led major governments became notorious for ferocious, uncompromising, often disastrously willful leadership, like India's Indira Gandhi or Argentina's currently embattled President Cristina Kirchner—hardly exemplifying the collaborative, accommodating approach so lavishly praised by estrogen-is-the-answer advocates.'

Florida woman, 2 others arrested in stun gun, dragging assault of ex-husband

Mastodon · 10 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Florida woman, her brother and another accomplice allegedly shot her ex-husband with a stun gun, held him at gun point, beat him and used a pickup truck to drag him a half-mile down a dirt road, MyFoxOrlando.com reported.

The victim, Robert Hall, managed to get to a nearby home and asked for help. He told police Tuesday night that the three tried to kill him.

Hall was badly injured in the attack, the report said. He suffered a broken pelvis, broken facial bones and bleeding on his brain.
...
Jeanette Morris, 61, and her brother, Harold Anderson, 63, face attempted murder and aggravated assault charges for a "brutal attack" on Hall, Volusia County investigators said.

A third accomplice, Joan Hobart, 46, of New Smyrna Beach, was found in Port Orange and booked on the same charges.'

SAVE: Tell Delaware Attorney General Beau Biden: Expunge Gordon Smith's Arrest Record

Matt · 11 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Father of two, Gordon Smith was the victim of 14 false police reports by his ex-wife Tiffany Marie Smith of Dover, Delaware. Mr. Smith was falsely arrested nine times for various domestic violence charges, one terrifying time at gunpoint.

Tiffany Smith was caught in her web of deception last September after she cut herself and lay in a ditch, accusing Mr. Smith of attempted murder and assault with a deadly weapon. Police used Gordon's electronic device to confirm that he was nowhere near Tiffany at the time, and Tiffany was finally arrested.

Unfortunately, Gordon Smith's arrest record was never expunged. These records will be available to any and all future potential employers. So Tiffany's rein of terror continues.

Today I'm asking you to contact Delaware Attorney General Joseph "Beau" Biden, lll. Tell him: "Expunge Gordon Smith's arrest record!"

Beau Biden Contact Info beau.biden-at-state.de.us
(302) 577-8500

Gordon is the Delaware Coordinator for our Domestic Violence Legislative Project (DVLP). Not only does he want to encourage others who have been falsely accused to join the DVLP, he wants to invite you to a public hearing. This is what he had to say:

"On Thursday, Jan 17, 2013 the Delaware Family Law Commission will have its annual Public Hearing in Legislative Hall located in Dover. This is an opportunity for citizens of Delaware to share their thoughts regarding the domestic violence policies of the state. SAVE's Delaware chapter of the Domestic Violence Legislative Project will be actively participating in this event."

So join Gordon at the hearing if you can, join the DVLP if you want to become more active in reform, and make the call to Beau.

Thank you all for your dedication,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

No DNA, No Witnesses, No Evidence: Brian Banks Case Spotlights Need for Rape Reform

Matt · 11 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON/January 8, 2013 – The upcoming 60 Minutes appearance of Brian Banks will highlight flaws in the American criminal justice system, including laws pertaining to sexual assault. Brian Banks, who spent 5 years in prison on a false allegation of rape, will be featured during the January 13, 2013 broadcast of the CBS show 60 Minutes.

Brian Banks was a 16-year-old football star in Long Beach, Calif. when he was accused of rape by Wanetta Gibson. Fearing a life sentence, Banks agreed to a plea bargain, even though there was no DNA, witnesses, or other evidence to support the accusation.

Banks spent over five years in prison. After his release, Wanetta Gibson admitted during a taped interview that her accusation was fabricated. On May 24, 2012, Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Mark C. Kim exonerated Mr. Banks.'

Football player's suicide draws attention to TBIs among athletes

Matt · 11 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The former N.F.L. linebacker Junior Seau had a degenerative brain disease linked to repeated head trauma when he committed suicide last spring, the National Institutes of Health said Thursday.

The findings were consistent with chronic traumatic encephalopathy, a degenerative brain disease widely connected to athletes who have absorbed frequent blows to the head, the N.I.H. said in a statement. Seau is the latest and most prominent player to be associated with the disease, which has bedeviled the sport in recent years as a proliferation of studies have exposed the possible long-term cognitive impact of head injuries sustained on the field.

“The type of findings seen in Mr. Seau’s brain have been recently reported in autopsies of individuals with exposure to repetitive head injury,” the N.I.H. said, “including professional and amateur athletes who played contact sports, individuals with multiple concussions, and veterans exposed to blast injury and other trauma.”'

"Traditional Gender Roles Encourage Women To Avoid Marriage, Says Study"

Mastodon · 11 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Unmarried couples who live together hold very conventional views of household gender roles, new research has found. In particular, researchers found that the men in unwed couples are still seen as the primary breadwinners even when they are not, while the women are seen as being responsible for domestic work.

...

"A number of these working-class men wanted the respect of being the breadwinner but were not necessarily taking on that role," Miller said. "While they were content to let their girlfriends pay at least half of the rent, they admitted that they had no plans to take on half of the housework, even if their partners were very unhappy about doing more than their fair share."

Men have a very specific reason for holding onto those viewpoints, Miller and Sassler said. In particular, men are holding onto the privileges of being the breadwinner in a household because they have lost other privileges in the workplace recently.'

Testimony video available of Eran Sadeh of Protect the Child

Matt · 12 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Testimony at press conference in Berlin found here. His testimony is given in English.

English translation of Mr. Sadeh's message in Hebrew:

I hereby call Jews in Israel and anywhere in the world: learn about the advantages of an intact penis, learn about the disadvantages of a cut penis, and join the unstoppable movement of tens of thousands of Jews all over the world who welcome their sons to the world without violating their bodily integrity, without hurting them, and without putting them at risk. Here ends a year and its maledictions and a new one begins with its blessings. Happy New Year / Rosh Hashana

"Woman-Run Hedge Funds Perform Better"

Mastodon · 12 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Evidence of intra-firm gender discrimination in the assignment of tasks and irrational aversion to appointing women to boards of directors is fascinating to me not only because sexism is an important issue, but because there's a very clear and simple theoretical argument that this kind of widespread gender discrimination can't exist. In a well-functioning competitive marketplace, firms that don't discriminate will outperform those that do. And yet it's obvious that systematic implicit discrimination against women is in fact widespread. So it should come as new surprise that the latest reports show that the small minority of hedge funds run by women outperform the (dismal) industry average.'

"Why Boys are 'Evil'"

Mastodon · 12 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Our culture pretends that if it represses boys' violent tendencies, violence will decrease. Society does this by trying to emasculate boys into girls. It encourages boys to play with gender-neutral toys, drugs boys into submission at school and otherwise suppresses their instinctive rough-and-tumble, smash-and-bang physical nature.

But none of these feminist-approved techniques erase the influence of genetics and testosterone. That persistent biochemical is something every boy must learn to handle. Testosterone gives boys less impulse control, more muscle strength and, yes, more violent tendencies. Unchecked, testosterone can cause boys to explode when they hit adolescence … unless they're trained otherwise.

It takes a man – not a woman – to teach boys how to handle themselves. Without a male mentor, boys often give in to their animal nature and become violent.'

Lifespan and the sexes

MikeJH · 12 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In England and Wales, the biggest peacetime difference between the life expectancies at birth of the two sexes was 6.3 years. That was in 1967. It is now 4.1 years, and falling. In the early 1980s women who made it to 65, the traditional age of retirement for British men, could expect to live four years longer than their male counterparts. The gap now is less than three years (see chart), though there is still some way to go before things return to the nine-month gap that prevailed in the 1840s, when records began. Other industrialised countries, except Japan and Russia, show something similar.
...
A further fifth of the longevity gap between the sexes is explained by alcohol. In this case, however, the gap is widening. In 1979 two men died from alcohol-related causes for every woman who succumbed. In 2009 it was 2.4.

A third important factor is obesity—or, rather, the physiological complications obesity brings, such as high blood pressure and type-2 diabetes. On the face of things, there is little difference between the sexes in this area: 15.6% of women in the EU are obese, compared with 15.4% of men. But obesity may have a greater impact on women because it increases the risks of both hypertension and diabetes in their sex more than it does in men. And men are also closing the gap in another area related to obesity and high blood pressure: coronary heart disease. In England, deaths from this fell more than 50% between 1991 and 2005 for both men and women. But, because heart disease kills twice as many men as it does women, the reduction in the male mortality rate has been greater.'

UK: Husband tricked into believing wife's children were his own awarded £25K

MikeJH · 13 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A man who discovered that the son and daughter he raised into their teenage years were not his has been awarded £25,000 in damages after suing his ex-wife for deceit.

Richard Rodwell was a loving father to Adam and Laura until his marriage to their mother Helen broke down.

After the divorce he paid regular child maintenance for more than four years, from his salary as a factory manager.

But in 2008 Mr Rodwell ordered DNA tests after hearing rumours about his daughter's paternity – and the results showed that each child was fathered by a different man.
...
Following the results, the children cut off all contact with him. He claims his ex-wife turned them against him.'

"Big News! Men Like Sports!"

Mastodon · 13 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Title IX was passed to end discrimination in schools and colleges. But contrary to the intent of the law, Title IX is used to impose gender quotas. Schools and colleges must equate the ratio of males and females in sports programs to their overall enrollment. When there are more women than men in college, as is now typical, Title IX regulations mandate that women outnumber men by the same ratio on its competitive sports teams. Title IX has compelled colleges to eliminate hundreds of men's teams. At the same time, women take an athletic scholarship mainly to get free college tuition, not because they were keen on sports. Colleges are offering full-ride scholarships to women with no experience in sports that are easy to learn, such as crew.
...
The United States spends more on sports than any other country in the world, perhaps more than all other countries combined. But if our future great athletes have their spots taken away from them in the name of gender equality, what are we getting for our money?'

Saudi criticises world reaction to maid's beheading

Matt · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Is death a defensible punishment for murder, rape, and other crimes? That's a separate issue. Point is, Saudi law says these crimes are capital offenses. Next question is this: Is the "world's outrage" because capital punishment is so objectionable or is it because the executed person is young and female? I'd guess so. It doesn't seem anyone is disputing the facts of the case. If a recent MALE immigrant from Sri Lanka had suffocated an infant over an argument with one of the baby's parents, would ANYONE be raising a stink? No way. Excerpt:

'Saudi Arabia on Sunday criticised world reaction to its beheading a Sri Lankan maid convicted of killing her employer's baby, the official SPA news agency reported.

Riyadh "deplores the statements made... over the execution of a Sri Lankan maid who had plotted and killed an infant by suffocating him to death, one week after she arrived in the kingdom," the government spokesman said.

Rizana Nafeek was beheaded on Wednesday in a case that sparked widespread international condemnation, including from rights groups which said she was just 17 when she was charged with murdering the baby in 2005.

Nafeek was found guilty of smothering the infant after an argument with the child's mother.'

Sweden: Fathers' Rights Group marks one millionth site visit

Matt · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Anyhow, that we, PappaRättsGruppen (The Fathers Rights Group), would get one million visits on our Home Page wasn't something anyone would have believed or expected – not even we ourselves.

In any case, we are incredible proud and humble before the fact that there are people who are interested in the topics we write about.'

The End of Courtship?

Matt · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Summary: single women are annoyed that single men are not interested in blowing $100 on a "date", thereby reducing how "special" they feel and worse yet, they can't eat for free on the week-ends. Though the comments are closed, they're interesting reading. Excerpt:

'Dodgy economic prospects facing millennials also help torpedo the old, formal dating rituals. Faced with a lingering recession, a stagnant job market, and mountains of student debt, many young people — particularly victims of the “mancession” — simply cannot afford to invest a fancy dinner or show in someone they may or may not click with.
...
A much-publicized study by Reach Advisors, a Boston-based market research group, found that the median income for young, single, childless women is higher than it is for men in many of the country’s biggest cities (though men still dominate the highest-income jobs, according to James Chung, the company’s president). This may be one reason it is not uncommon to walk into the hottest new West Village bistro on a Saturday night and find five smartly dressed young women dining together — the nearest man the waiter. Income equality, or superiority, for women muddles the old, male-dominated dating structure.'

Israel: Feminist MK: OK to Attack Male, not Female Rivals

Mastodon · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MK Zehava Gal-On of Meretz, which was recently described by one of its Knesset candidates as a "leftist-feminist" party, decided to pull advertisements attacking female MKs from Likud.

Advertisements against male rivals appear to be fine with her, however, according to a report in Maariv-NRG.

Last week, Meretz began running internet advertisements attacking Likud MKs Moshe Feiglin, Danny Danon, Tzipi Hotovely and Miri Regev, as well as Bayit Yehudi head Naftali Bennett. The ads target voters who may opt not to vote at all, warning them that doing so means allowing more MKs like these in the next Knesset.

However, according to the report, Galon has decided not to run the advertisements that feature MKs Regev and Hotovely, who are both women. "I decided to pull the Miri Regev ad out of gender considerations," Galon explained. "I am in favor of the campaign but I will not attack women who run for Knesset."'

Seeking Enrollment Boost, Wilson College Will Admit Men

Mastodon · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Wilson College's Board of Trustees voted on Sunday afternoon to begin accepting men to the college's traditional undergraduate program and to adopt a series of other recommendations aimed at broadening the liberal-arts institution's educational offerings, improving its facilities, and strengthening its position in the admissions market.

The decision to admit men came over the anguished protests of some alumnae and students, but with the support of others. The goal is to increase enrollment, now below 700, to about 1,500 by 2020. The college began the current academic year with 316 women in the traditional undergraduate program and 379 men and women in the adult-degree program.'

UK: £500 bonus for women in pension reform

Mastodon · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an article for today's Daily Telegraph, Steve Webb, the pensions minister, says that the "complicated and divisive" pension system must be reformed to "reflect modern working patterns and modern patterns of family life".

From 2017, the basic state pension will be set at about £160 a week and the complicated system of means-tested "top-ups" will be scrapped. Women who take time out of the workplace to care for children or elderly relations will qualify automatically for the pension.

Mr Webb said the reforms will "particularly benefit many older women, whose time at home with children has damaged their state pension entitlements".

Iain Duncan Smith, the Work and Pensions Secretary, said on Sunday night: "The single-tier pension will mean that more women can get a full state pension in their own right, and stop this shameful situation where they are let down by the system when it comes to retirement because they have taken time out to care for their family."'

“Men’s issues” groups test limit of free speech on campus

Mastodon · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Senior administrators at the University of Toronto and the University of Toronto Students’ Union (UTSU) continue to debate the acceptable limits of free speech on campus in the aftermath of a lecture delivered in late November by Dr. Warren Farrell.

The lecture was marked by a sizable protest and heavy police presence, during which a group of protestors blocked the entrance to the lecture hall where Farrell was scheduled to speak.

“We have at the University of Toronto a wide range of contentious events, in which views are expressed that are offensive to some,” said Provost Cheryl Misak in a December 11 statement. “Our primary aim with respect to these events is to ensure that freedom of speech is protected, including the freedom to protest, as long as the law is respected.”

In a dueling statement released in the days following Farrell’s lecture, the UTSU condemned the event. “Despite complaints to the University administration, and requests from students to maintain our campus as a safe space free from oppression and discrimination, Dr. Farrell was given a space and forum to spread his misogynistic, hateful theories at U of T,” read the union’s release.'

Military Suicides Reached Record High In 2012

Mastodon · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — Suicides in the U.S. military surged to a record 349 last year, far exceeding American combat deaths in Afghanistan, and some private experts are predicting the dark trend will grow worse this year.

The Pentagon has struggled to deal with the suicides, which Defense Secretary Leon Panetta and others have called an epidemic. The problem reflects severe strains on military personnel burdened with more than a decade of combat in Afghanistan and Iraq, complicated by anxiety over the prospect of being forced out of a shrinking force.

Pentagon figures obtained Monday by The Associated Press show that the 349 suicides among active-duty troops last year were up from 301 the year before and exceeded the Pentagon's own internal projection of 325. Statistics alone do not explain why troops take their own lives, and the Pentagon's military and civilian leaders have acknowledged that more needs to be done to understand the causes.'

Debates on Men at Women's Colleges

Mastodon · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Wilson College's board voted Sunday -- despite protests from many students and alumnae -- to become a fully coeducational institution.

College leaders say that the change is essential for the institution to survive. Critics see an abandonment of a proud tradition of educating women. Men are already admitted to some programs at the college, but not the residential undergraduate program that for many alumnae defines the institution.
...
Student critics of coeducation could not be reached Sunday night. But their views are evident in columns in the student newspaper at Wilson, The Billboard. One student noted that Wilson's mission is to educate women. Admitting men "means that everything that we have believed in, that we have valued, is a lie. It sends a message to the entire Wilson community, and to all women, that we cannot stand on our own; we are not the independent and confident women that we believe we are. Instead we are inferior and inadequate. Our mission has not failed; we are failing to stay true to our mission."'

UK: Working class white boys failed

Mastodon · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Last week David Willetts proposed that Universities should put working class white boys in the same bracket as other disadvantaged groups, claiming that the talent of white working class boys was being wasted due to underachievement and that Universities should provide more outreach to potential students.

The sad reality is that this is too little, too late for these boys. The real issue is not that Universities do not do enough to promote themselves, it is that our society fails these boys before they are even at an age to consider University.
...

This is not merely a ‘quick-fix’ problem; it is not an issue that can be solved by more white working class boys going to University, it is a deep embedded part of our society and whilst I agree whole-heartedly that better education would improve the problem of social mobility; better education does not necessarily mean more students at University.'

Female college students seek euphamised prostitution opportunities

Mastodon · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. World's oldest profession; knows no class or educational boundaries. Even in this age of boundless opportunities for women, we still see such things. What would Susan B. say if she were alive to see this?

I read once that the wives of senators in old Rome routinely prostituted themselves for extra money and/or to just plain have a little fun, until eventually this was outlawed, possibly because it led to far too much "Who da daddy?" and the attendant inheritence disputes. Nothing much changes, does it? Excerpt:

'Don't have parents to pay for college? More New York City co-eds are turning to rich "daddies" online.

Seekingarrangement.com, a site that helps broke "sugar babies" find wealthy, older men announced in a press release that more and more young women from New York University and Columbia University are signing up.I

When the company analyzed its data for 2012, it discovered the site was seeing the fastest growth from women attending these two universities.

In 2012, 285 women from New York University enlisted to see if they could receive extracurricular perks from meeting men on the site. Columbia University, the only Ivy League school to make the site's top 20 list, saw 100 new female "sugar babies."
...
"Most college women seek an allowance of around $3,000 a month," said Gwynn. "In New York, 'sugar babies' ask for more, around $4,000."'

"Reminders in the bathroom may help men practice better hygiene"

Mastodon · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Here's a story that can offer hope and gross you out at the same time. Researchers at Michigan State University, asked men about hand washing upon leaving the restroom. The men said they washed their hands 75 percent of the time.

The researchers next posted signs in men's restrooms that read "4 out of 5 Males Wash Their Hands," with pictures of students wearing Michigan State University hats. The signs included details about proper hand-washing.

According to Health Day News, the team then tracked hand-washing by restroom users and interviewed them after they left. With the signs in place, the men were more likely to wash their hands (86 percent of them did) and run the water longer compared to when the signs weren't there.

Perhaps the next step could be a sign telling men to put the seat down.'

Former teacher and sex offender on run, suspected of being "involved" with another student

Mastodon · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former teacher from upstate New York who spent three years in prison for having an affair with a 14-year-old student skipped out on her parole and is now on the run from police, who fear that she may be involved without another child.

Buffalo police say convicted sex offender Cara Dickey, 34, removed her electronic ankle bracelet in violation of her parole condition and vanished Wednesday.
'We know that the electronic bracelet has been detached. She has not responded to attempts to reach her,' said Peter K. Cutler, a spokesman for the state Department of Corrections and Community Supervision.
...
The former South Buffalo Charter School educator was found guilty of rape in 2009 after admitting to carrying on a sexual relationship with one of her students and entering into a suicide pact with him, WIVB reported.'

Ex-Hoover teacher Denman gets jail for sex with student

Mastodon · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An ex-Hoover High School teacher was sentenced Wednesday to six months in Fresno County Jail for having a prolonged sexual relationship with an underage student.

Megan Denman, 30, of Fresno also will serve three years on probation but will not have to register as a sex offender when she is released.

In October, Denman pleaded guilty in Fresno County Superior Court to three counts of unlawful sexual intercourse with a minor and three counts of oral copulation with a minor. The boy was 16 and 17 during the 18-month relationship.

A doctor's report said Denman doesn't have a "predatory" or "exploitive" personality. It was a major reason Judge Ralph Nunez said he ruled against sex-offender registration.

There also were several letters attesting to Denman's positive influence as a teacher from students, families and others.'

eBook use on the rise, especially among boys

Mastodon · 14 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's no surprise that eBook use among kids is widening, but recent numbers from Scholastic's biannual Kids & Family Reading Report are showing just how much difference two years have made.

The number of kids who are reading eBooks has nearly doubled since 2010, up from 25% to 46%, and half or children ages nine to 17 say they would read more books for fun if they had greater access to electronic books.

Boys, who typically demonstrate less motivation to read than girls, are particularly finding more inspiration in eBooks, as the study finds that 25% of boys who have read an eBook say that they are now reading more books for fun.'

"China bank’s ‘sexist’ promotion sparks outrage"

mcp · 15 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Notice how the word 'sexist' is in quotes, in spite of the fact that the practice is clearly so. Good to see that Chinese men are protesting. Excerpt:

'A Chinese bank’s offer to automatically transfer most of a husband’s income to his wife’s account has provoked fury, with some calling it “the most atrocious banking service against men in history.”
...
Traditionally women have taken charge of household finances in China, but as the country modernizes, attitudes have changed, especially among the young, and the advertisement set off a firestorm of controversy.
...
“The CMB service is far too atrocious – it is a boon for the ladies and a deadly blow for men. I remind you gentlemen that you should never let your better half go to CMB,” said a user with the handle “gossip girl in finance.”

Another wrote: “I can’t understand the bank – does it intend to disable all men in China or dismantle all Chinese families?”'

SAVE: Tell Your Senators, VAWA is Dangerous to Women

Matt · 15 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Have Domestic Violence Programs Delivered on Their Promises to Women? Our recent special report exposes the fact that the federal Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) has not only failed women, it puts them in more danger.

The shocking report reviews nearly 50 research studies and articles examining the effectiveness of restraining orders, mandatory arrest policies, and no-drop prosecution: http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/VAWA-Has-It-Delivered-on-Its-Promises-to-Women.

We found that among other things, VAWA-funded programs:

- Are ineffective in reducing abuse
- Promote policies that place women at greater risk
- Ensnare women in a rigid criminal justice bureaucracy
- Can lead to the removal of children from their homes

Call your senators today. Ask them to read SAVE's special report. Then tell them to reform VAWA so it is no longer dangerous.

You can find your Senators' contact information here: http://www.senate.gov/general/contact_information/senators_cfm.cfm or call 1-202-224-3121.

They're listening. Please make the call.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

American Effort to Ban Circumcision of Minors Kicks into High Gear

Mastodon · 15 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Genital integrity activists from across the country are demanding that lawmakers ban the practice of circumcising boys. Popularly known as “intactivists”, these children’s rights advocates submitted the Male Genital Mutilation (MGM) Bill proposal to more than 1,800 legislators this week in an effort to require gender neutrality in federal and state laws that regulate genital cutting.

As director of MGMbill.org’s Indiana state office in Indianapolis, Jeff Cowsert wants all boys to be able to grow up with their genitals left intact. “When I was eight years old, my religious friends told me about circumcision,” said Cowsert. “I was silently outraged, and for the remainder of my childhood I mourned the fact that I didn't have a complete body. I would not have chosen to be cut if given the choice, and I strongly feel that infant circumcision needs to be banned so that men can make their own choices about their own bodies when they are mature adults.”'

To cut or not to cut: why has male circumcision become a dilemma?

Mastodon · 15 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Just as you begin to think that the dispute about including male circumcision as part of HIV/Aids prevention has ended, a sceptic “rocks the boat” and the debate appears to start all over again and; some people begin to wonder whether “to cut or not to cut”.

When the proponents of safe male circumcision for HIV/Aids prevention present their arguments, you actually begin to think that male circumcision is the way to go. Their arguments are based on scientific evidence from research studies known as randomised clinical trials. They say that such trials are the “gold standard” when it comes to issues of research evidence and, they go on to cite studies that show that inclusion of safe male circumcision in the array of HIV/Aids prevention strategies will result in a reduction of HIV/Aids infection.
...
Amidst this confusing situation, male citizens of this country whose foreskin and behaviour has been at the centre of the dispute, are expected to decide on whether “to cut or not to cut” despite the fact that they seem to have been left out of the debate. Neither the pro-male circumcision camp nor the sceptics are brandishing minutes of meetings or even research finding about post-male circumcision sexual behaviour (that cover the socio-economic diversity in this country) to support their arguments.

The dispute about surgical removal of the male prepuce and HIV/Aids is most likely to continue for a while. Whether there will ever be consensus about including male circumcision in HIV/Aids prevention, only time will tell. As to how much damage the sceptics have done to the male circumcision drive, no one can ascertain at the moment. One thing that you can be sure of is that some years to come, attributing any increase or decrease in HIV/Aids infection rates to safe male circumcision will be controversial.'

UK: Sheffield hospitals plan to charge for non-medical circumcision

Mastodon · 15 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Terry Sanderson, President of the National Secular Society, commented: "This is yet another example of public money being used for religious purposes. There is absolutely no need for children to be subjected to such a procedure – in fact there are plenty of arguments why they shouldn't be. The idea that scarce NHS funding is being used for something that has only religious and no medical significance is scandalous.

"There is however a real danger that those seeking circumcisions will turn to practitioners without medical qualifications. We call on the Government to amend Child protection legislation to make it unlawful for anyone other than qualified medical staff to circumcise minors for any reason. This is just a first step, though. We believe that non-therapeutic circumcision should not be permitted until the boy is old enough to give informed consent.

"Non-therapeutic infant circumcision is a breach of children's rights and it's time legislators reconsidered the current carte blanche afforded to infant circumcision on the basis that the parents' freedom of religion is the only consideration. This approach has already been taken by a Cologne Court and is backed by reputable medical bodies including the Royal Dutch Medical Association."'

The Delhi rape is being used to demonise Indian men

Mastodon · 15 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Almost as soon as it was announced that the still unnamed rape victim had died, Western observers rushed to condemn all of India. In The Times, Libby Purves skated on very thin ice when she decreed that "murderous, hyena-like male contempt is a norm [in India]". Echoing those Victorian ladies who visited faraway continents and were shocked by the sexual depravity of foreign menfolk, Purves claimed that in the subcontinent "sexual harassment and assault" are looked upon as a "male birthright", especially in Delhi, where there are "tens of thousands of newly urbanised [men], from villages still almost medieval". Other female columnists have used the Delhi rape case to riff about the time they were propositioned or felt up by men in India, as if unwanted sexual attention and the most horrific gang rape you could imagine are just different sides of the same coin of "macho culture"; as if there is not a profound difference between experiencing a come-on from an over-eager Indian male and suffering an extreme violent assault on a bus.

...

A handful of observers have challenged the sweeping demonisation of India and its people in the wake of the Delhi rape – but strikingly they have done so on the basis that we in the West are just as rapacious as the "hyena-like" men of the subcontinent. In the past, progressives would have critiqued the heaping of collective guilt on to foreign nations on the basis that it was inhumane and inaccurate; now they critique it on the basis that rape is not just "a cultural phenomenon in India", but is "endemic everywhere", with verbal or violent misogyny "happening all around us", including in civilised countries like Britain. In other words, it isn't just Indian men who are hyenas – all men are. This is one of the most shocking things about the Delhi rape case – the fact that so many observers aren't especially shocked by it, either because they expect animalistic Indian men to behave like this, or because they view all men, if not all of humanity itself, as capable of such despicable evil.'

Equal pay for second-rate tennis

Mastodon · 15 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The equal pay debate in tennis is just great.

The reason the debate is so entertaining is because there is one very strong point that sits on the tip of the tongue yet goes unmentioned.

That is, women's tennis is boring.

And maybe this point is avoided largely by the male population through fear of receiving a parliamentary lambasting about their crippling misogyny, sexism and chauvinism. But that just shouldn't be the case.

Women's tennis is boring. It's the bit in between the real deal.

It's the 6-1 6-1 steamrolling that only etches itself into the brains of tennis fans as the unfortunate stop-gap between Federer v. Nadal and Djokovic v. Murray.
...
I'm not trying to write a sexist rant, I'm trying to be thought provoking. I don't think the women's game shouldn't exist in its current form and I don't think it's altogether terrible though, there is no question then men deserve more money.'

EU gender equality rules 'could cost men £10k' in annuity income during retirement

Mastodon · 15 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Future male pensioners could lose £10,000 from their income over their retirement under new gender equality rules coming into force on Friday.

Under the EU Gender Directive, firms will no longer be able to use a pension holder's sex as a factor when calculating annuity offers.

Currently men will typically get a higher annual income when they buy an annuity than women because they have a lower life expectancy. Providers can offer them more on the assumption payments will end sooner than for women.'

Parents Furious After Boys Suspended For Using Fingers As Guns

Matt · 16 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'No one is debating the importance of keeping children safe. The question being asked is what's child's play and what's not?

Controversy at a Talbot County school after two six-year-old boys were suspended while playing cops and robbers during recess and using their fingers to make an imaginary gun.

"It's ridiculous," said parent Julia Merchant

This is the second time a Maryland child has been suspended for such play. Earlier this month, six-year-old Rodney Lynch was suspended from his Montgomery County school after pretending to fire an imaginary gun more than once.'

"Her boyfriend abandoned her"

Matt · 16 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Look at how this is spun. "Her boyfriend abandoned her," thereby leaving her no option but to make porn movies. So, it was his fault? Ridiculous. Plenty of women, when they need money, go out and get jobs other than in porn/prostitution. Even more do so before needing money and gasp, a whole lot don't live off their boyfriends in the first place! Imagine that! Excerpt:

'A middle-school science teacher fired after students learned she had appeared in pornographic movies had hoped not just to get her job back, but to set a precedent for people looking to escape an embarrassing personal history.

A three-judge commission put a decisive stop to both, saying firmly and unanimously that Stacie Halas should not be in the classroom.
...
Halas, 32, was continually deceitful about her nine-month career in porn before she went to work at the school, the judges said.
...
Schwab has said Halas did not star in pornographic movies while teaching in any district. He said she took parts only during an eight-month period from 2005 to 2006 because of financial problems after her boyfriend abandoned her.'

"Darwin was Wrong about Dating"

Matt · 16 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'... But in 2003, two behavioral psychologists, Michele G. Alexander and Terri D. Fisher, published the results of a study that used a “bogus pipeline” — a fake lie detector. When asked about actual sexual partners, rather than just theoretical desires, the participants who were not attached to the fake lie detector displayed typical gender differences. Men reported having had more sexual partners than women. But when participants believed that lies about their sexual history would be revealed by the fake lie detector, gender differences in reported sexual partners vanished. In fact, women reported slightly more sexual partners (a mean of 4.4) than did men (a mean of 4.0).
...
But the fact that some gender differences can be manipulated, if not eliminated, by controlling for cultural norms suggests that the explanatory power of evolution can’t sustain itself when applied to mating behavior. This wouldn’t be the first time we’ve pushed these theories too far. How many stereotypical racial and ethnic differences, once declared evolutionarily determined under the banner of science, have been revealed instead as vestiges of power dynamics from earlier societies?'

One in 25 youth attempt suicide: U.S. study

Matt · 16 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (Reuters Health) - About one in 25 U.S. teens has attempted suicide, according to a new national study, and one in eight has thought about it.
...
The results are based on in-person interviews of close to 6,500 teens in the U.S. and questionnaires filled out by their parents. Along with asking youth about their suicidal thinking, plans and attempts, interviewers also determined which teens fit the bill for a range of mental disorders.
...
According to the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, suicide is the third leading cause of death for people between age 10 and 24, killing about 4,600 young people annually.

Although girls are more likely to attempt suicide - a pattern confirmed by Nock's study - boys have higher rates of death by suicide because they typically choose more deadly methods, such as guns.'

Teen girls beat woman for fun at school bus stop

Matt · 17 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW WINDSOR — Three girls were charged with gang assault Tuesday morning after they allegedly attacked a mom as she put her young child on a school bus.

The girls — two 13-year-olds and a 12-year-old — called what they did "mobbing" or "popping" on someone, and told police they did it for fun and chose their victim at random.

...

According to town police, the three girls attacked the mom as her child was getting on the bus. They repeatedly punched and kicked her and pulled her by her hair.

The 34-year-old victim suffered head and internal injuries, and had cuts and bruises all over her body. Her condition could not be learned later Tuesday, and it was unclear whether she was taken to a hospital.

...

The suspects, whose names were withheld by police because of their age, were charged with second-degree gang assault, a felony, and endangering the welfare of a child, a misdemeanor.'

Japanese men increasingly avoid marriage

Matt · 17 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Japan, the number of men and women choosing to marry later in life is on the increase and has reached a figure that can no longer be ignored. When it comes to the Japanese male demography, just why are so many choosing the single life? My Navi News asked 300 of its male readers the following question:

“Have you ever thought ‘Marriage isn’t for me’ or ‘I prefer the life of bachelorhood’?”

The results obtained were a little on the unexpected side:

Yes: 39.7%
No: 60.3%
...
The total percentage of men that replied “marriage isn’t for me” or “I prefer the life of bachelorhood” was a whopping 39.7%! This figure exceeds the percentage of female readers that replied “yes” to the same set of questions. When it comes to the single men out there, the heavy burden of providing not only financially but also emotionally for the family makes many think twice about marriage.'

Education in Canada: Boys need help

Mastodon · 17 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'They found that at every level, boys' academic marks fell below where their test scores would predict. And they conclude that this discrepancy can be explained by non-cognitive factors - specifically by "how well a child was engaged in the classroom, how often the child externalized or internalized problems, how often the child lost control, and how well the child developed interpersonal skills."

In other words, the boys were being penalized, not because they lacked knowledge or understanding, but because of their behaviour. There seems to be evidence of this in Canada, too, as the Youth in Transition survey found that boys - both those who succeeded and those who didn't - were less likely than girls to be engaged in school, to enjoy the curriculum, or to get along with the teachers.

It all suggests that in our efforts to improve boys' academic performance, we need to consider not merely how boys learn, but how they behave. Good behaviour is necessary in school and beyond, but there are many different ways to encourage it. If we want to ensure boys get a fair shake, we must ensure we are doing all we can to make the academic experience something that appeals to both boys and girls, and that does so equally.'

India: Retracting marriage promise after consensual sex amounts to rape

Mastodon · 17 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'If a man has consensual sex with a woman after promising to marry her but later retracts, it amounts to rape, the Delhi High Court has said.

Dismissing the anticipatory bail application of one Firoz Ahmed, who had sexual relations with a widow, Justice Kailash Gambhir held that retracting from a promise of marriage after consensual sex would tantamount to rape.

Ahmed was booked under IPC sections 376 (rape) and 506 (criminal intimidation) following a complaint lodged by the woman.

The judge agreed with the view of the trial judge, who had dismissed Ahmed's bail application, saying that the woman's consent was obtained under the pretext of marriage and that the intention of the accused from the beginning was not to marry her.

Justice Gambhir upheld prosecution's argument that Ahmed did not deserve bail as the offence fell under IPC section 375(4), which states that consent for sex obtained under a false pretext also amounts to rape.'

UK: Woman jailed for two years for false rape accusation leveled to hide infidelity

Mastodon · 17 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

An unfaithful wife has been jailed for two years - almost a decade after she cried rape just to hide a one-night stand from her husband.

Gaynor Cooke, 41, had told police she was violently attacked by a taxi driver to cover up her fling with him, and her former lover was due to stand trial next month.
No-one was arrested in 2003 because a forensic sample taken from her at the time failed to find a similar profile on the national DNA database.
...
But when in 2011 the man, who she claimed was a stranger, was detained for a minor offence his DNA threw up a match.

The man she slept with was charged with rape and faced trial at Nottingham Crown Court in February. However detectives received information that Cooke had lied to conceal her infidelity.

And when police went back to speak to the 41-year-old about the new evidence she told them: 'You've got me'.

Cooke, of Corby, Northamptonshire, wiped away tears as recorder Shaun Smith QC jailed her for two years.

The judge said her 'pack of lies' had 'for a short period of time destroyed an innocent life'.'

'Why Women Make Better Politicians Than Men'

Mastodon · 17 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women are wired in an intricate web. They can pay attention to everything at once, while the male becomes driven and fixated on one issue, unable to move on to the next until the one that occupies his attention has been roped, tied, and barbecued. They are able to pay attention to multiple stimuli and attend to all of them.

When a woman is hungry, she thinks about whether the kids have been fed, what she weighed on the scale that morning and the number of pounds she needs to lose, the doughnut that she feels guilty about eating two days ago, and other details that escape the male mind. When a man is hungry, he eats. This description of the male mind does not only apply to hunger, but applies to every issue in the personal and political life of the male politician. They have nobody to blame but themselves. By sacrificing their private life for a public one, they surrender their privacy and the personal aspects of family. They endeavor to hide their foibles from the public eye, and that is the point where they run into trouble. The press is the most legitimized stalker, and there are people who stand to make a lot of money and a few minutes of fame by revealing a politician's weaknesses.

This gets me back to the core of my message. Women make better politicians than men. They can pay attention to the details. They get more done in the driven world of politics by paying attention to those details. They typically don't dance around the issues that they were elected to address, but work behind the facade of daily press exposure in resolving the issues that are important to them.'

Sweden: "Skabbteatern" creates hit-list video

Matt · 18 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Some of you might remember the infamous Swedish film clip where a group of Swedish feminists calling themselves S.C.U.M Sweden, produced and posted a video on Youtube depicting the point-blank shooting and murder of a man reading a newspaper. Read more about it here. Now another video have been posted on Youtube. This time they even threaten the swedish prime minister. This time it´s another radical left wing feminist group who call themselves “Skabbteatern” (Scabies theater) who are the producers. This new masterpiece is called “Du är en fitta, din fitta” (You are a cunt you cunt). They do love the C word, those feminists.

In this movie two women wearing ski masks are running around flaunting big guns. In the background you can hear a fateful female voice recite 14 names. The message is just as clear as it is threatening.
...
The film clip is well produced; clearly not the work of amateurs. How much money this theater group receives in state funding is yet not clear but I am sure those figures will emerge. The film is said to be a protest against what the group calls “The growing hatred of women.” This is the new mantra of Swedish feminists and mainstream Swedish media. Any criticism of feminism, however sane and justified, is being described as “hatred against women.”'

Police: Woman Beat Boyfriend Unconscious With 2-Week Old Baby Strapped To Her Chest

Mastodon · 18 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SEATTLE (CBS Seattle) — A Seattle woman is accused of beating her child's father into unconsciousness while the newborn baby was strapped to her chest.

According to the Seattle Post-Intelligencer, police say Sharee Seminole, 25, brutally beat her boyfriend following an argument on Jan. 6.

Seattle detectives told the court that Seminole, who weighs 270 pounds, threw her boyfriend down to the ground, repeatedly stomping him in the face, breaking his nose and leaving him unconscious, all while having her 2-week old baby strapped to her chest.'

Eliminating feminist teacher bias erases boys' falling grades, study finds

Mastodon · 18 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the 1970s, feminist critics regularly complained that the school system favored “male thinking.” Facts, dates, rote learning, and math skills that were seen as “too masculine” for girls. In the intervening decades, feminists have made huge strides throughout the Western world, and education – particularly in the training of teachers – has been transformed as a result.

That most government policy makers and academics accept this as an unqualified success has left bewilderment as to how the new, more “fair” teaching styles have resulted in poor outcomes for boys and ultimately for the men they must become.

...

The work of one American researcher may offer clues to the question of why and how. Professor Christopher Cornwell at the University of Georgia has found that a heavily feminist-driven education paradigm systematically favours girls and disadvantages boys from their first days in school.

Examining student test scores and grades of children in kindergarten through fifth grade, Cornwell found that boys in all racial categories are not being “commensurately graded by their teachers” in any subject “as their test scores would predict.”

The answer lies in the way teachers, who are statistically mostly women, evaluate students without reference to objective test scores. Boys are regularly graded well below their actual academic performance.

...

When the teachers checked the student’s data, “they found little or no difference in the grades of boys and girls in advanced-placement social-studies classes. But in standard classes the girls were doing a lot better.” The revelations, she said, were not well received. Scarsdale is a school that has thoroughly accepted the received wisdom that that girls are systematically deprived, and this belief has led their gender-equity committee to offer a special senior elective on gender equity that continues to preach the message.'

Is PTSD Contagious?

Mastodon · 19 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BRANNAN VINES HAS NEVER BEEN to war. But she's got a warrior's skills: hyperawareness, hypervigilance, adrenaline-sharp quick-scanning for danger, for triggers. Super stimuli-sensitive. Skills on the battlefield, crazy-person behavior in a drug store, where she was recently standing behind a sweet old lady counting out change when she suddenly became so furious her ears literally started ringing. Being too cognizant of every sound—every coin dropping an echo—she explodes inwardly, fury flash-incinerating any normal tolerance for a fellow patron with a couple of dollars in quarters and dimes. Her nose starts running she's so pissed, and there she is standing in a CVS, snotty and deaf with rage, like some kind of maniac, because a tiny elderly woman needs an extra minute to pay for her dish soap or whatever.

...

Unlike PTSD, secondary traumatic stress doesn't have its own entry in the DSM, though the manual does take note of it, as do many peer-reviewed studies and the Department of Veterans Affairs. Symptoms start at depression and alienation, including the "compassion fatigue" suffered by social workers and trauma counselors. But some spouses and loved ones suffer symptoms that are, as one medical journal puts it, "almost identical to PTSD except that indirect exposure to the traumatic event through close contact with the primary victim of trauma" is the catalyst. Basically your spouse's behavior becomes the "T" in your own PTSD. If sympathy for Caleb is a little lacking, you can imagine what little understanding exists for Brannan.'

Woman Accused Of Using Her Breasts To Smother And Kill Boyfriend

Mastodon · 19 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Make sure you check out the comment section because most people think this is funny. Excerpt:

'A Washington woman is accused of using her breasts to smother and kill her boyfriend after an altercation at their mobile home.

Donna Lange, a 51-year-old woman from Everett, Wash., is believed to have suffocated her boyfriend to death with her breasts on Saturday, Jan. 12, according to Seattle's KIRO 7 Eyewitness News. Deputies, called to the Airport Inn trailer park at 12:45 a.m. for a disturbance report, found medics performing CPR on Lange's 51-year-old alleged boyfriend, who was later pronounced dead at Swedish Hospital.

Kiro 7 reports that witnesses claims they saw Lange throw her boyfriend down in the back of the mobile home. She was later found by witnesses with her chest covering the victim's face. Police noted the size difference between Lange and her boyfriend -- she was 5-feet, 6-inches and 192 pounds, he was 5-feet, 7-inches and 175 pounds.'

Verizon Foundation Awards Grant To Alabama Non-Profit For Program Aimed At Domestic Violence Prevention

Mastodon · 19 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 17, 2013 /PRNewswire via COMTEX/ -- The Verizon Foundation presented a $20,000 grant to the One Place Family Justice Center last night to support an initiative aimed at engaging and empowering men to speak out against domestic violence.

A CALL TO MEN: The Next Generation of Manhood was founded in 2002. Its vision is to shift social norms that define manhood in our culture and create a world where women and girls are valued and safe. Although historically it has been almost entirely women at the forefront addressing this issue, A CALL TO MEN believes that preventing domestic and sexual violence is primarily the responsibility of men.

A CALL TO MEN has trained men and women in more than 3,000 organizations throughout the United States and abroad, including the National Football League, the United Nations and many more.'

UK: 'Women can have it all - but only if their man pulls his weight around the house'

Mastodon · 19 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women can have it all – but only if they are prepared to sacrifice some of their power in the home, psychologists believe.

Research suggests that if a woman runs her household without any help, she has less interest in scaling the career ladder.

But the reason for this is not quite what you might expect, such as being too tired.

According to experts, the satisfaction of being in charge of day-to-day domestic tasks leaves mothers with less of a thirst for success at work.

If she were indeed to 'have it all' – a phrase coined by the late Cosmopolitan magazine editor Helen Gurley Brown to mean women can have a family life, a love life and a career – she would need to prepared to carve up some of the home decisions with her spouse, a study suggests.

This would free up some of her career drive and enable work success.

Experts from the University of California explained: 'It appears being in charge of household decisions may bring some semblance of power to a woman's traditional role, to the point where women may have less of a desire to push against the obstacles to achieving additional power outside home.'

City of Seattle to sponsor women-only swims

Mastodon · 19 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In March, the city of Seattle will begin offering women-only swims at four city pools in order to serve women who cannot swim in a co-ed environment for cultural, personal or religious reasons.

For the past decade, private groups have rented the city's pools to offer single-sex swims, drawing mostly Muslim women and some Orthodox Jews, along with some who chose the swims for personal reasons ("Women-only swims draw crowds but face challenges," Real Change, June 29, 2011). The windows are covered during the swims, which are staffed by female lifeguards.

As grants and other funding for the swims began to dry up, demand for the swims continued to grow, and city officials wanted to find a way to sustain them. First, they had to change non-discrimination policies that made single-sex programs difficult to sustain.'

I Don’t Want My Preschooler to Be a ‘Gentleman’

Mastodon · 19 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My 4-year-old son, Emmett, swallows a spoonful of cereal and asks me if I know what a gentleman is. Surprised, I tell him I have some idea; then I ask what the word means to him.

“A gentleman lets girls go first,” he says, explaining that every day at naptime all the girls go to the bathroom before the boys.

His explanation, along with the quiet solemnity with which he delivers it, is completely endearing and yet it makes my heart ache. This adorable little boy, who is only beginning to learn the ways of the world, just got his first lesson in sexism — and from a teacher who, I don’t doubt, believes she’s doing something wonderful for womankind.

She isn’t the only one.

Start to complain about your preschooler adopting gentlemanly behavior and you quickly discover how out of step you are with the rest of the world. Almost everyone I mention it to thinks it’s lovely and sweet. What’s the harm in teaching little boys to respect little girls?

...

But I don’t think it’s an overreaction to resent the fact that your son is being given an extra set of rules to follow simply because he’s a boy. His behavior, already constrained by a series of societal norms, now has additional restrictions. Worse than that, he’s actively being taught to treat girls differently, something I thought we all agreed to stop doing, like, three decades ago. That the concept of selective privilege has been introduced in preschool of all places — the inner sanctum of fair play, the high temple of taking turns — is mind-boggling to me. How can you preach the ethos of sharing at the dramatic play center and ignore it 20 feet away at the toilet?'

Accused Murderer Jodi Arias Makes A Killing On eBay

Mastodon · 19 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Supporters of Jodi Arias, the woman accused of killing her former lover, are raising money for her by auctioning artwork she supposedly has created since her 2008 incarceration.

Since Jan. 10, seven colored-pencil drawings have sold on the online auction website eBay, raking in $1,019.98 in winning bids.

The 32-year-old aspiring artist and photographer is currently on trial in Mesa, Ariz., accused of shooting Travis Alexander in the face, stabbing him 27 times and slitting his throat in the shower of his Mesa apartment in June 2008. Prosecutors allege she killed Alexander in a fit of jealous rage. The defense contends Alexander was killed in self-defense. The prosecution rested its case Thursday. The defense begins presenting its case in two weeks.'

America's schools being feminized?

Mastodon · 20 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ANDREA TANTAROS, CO-HOST: You do it all the time.

I completely agree with you. There was a report, I think it was in 1990, that said that women were short changed, particularly young girls in school, so there was an overcompensation with little girls. Now you see little girls graduating disproportionately from college, they're getting higher test scores. Little boys are being diagnosed with the learning disorders, like ADD, more in boys.

So, I think it's the young boys -- you're right, Bob -- that are getting left behind. But just in society, it's being catered to women. Women are the ones who are buying products. The movies, we go from Charleston Heston to Seth Rogen. The whole culture is being feminized in my opinion.

BECKEL: What do you think?

GUILFOYLE: I totally agree. I see it in schools and I see it in Ronan's classes. Let boys be boys. They want to play rough, don't try to overmedicate them and turn them in to girls. They're boys. There are differences in genders, embrace them, celebrate them.'

Ex-Wife Puts Hit on Husband and Now Goes Free

charlie · 20 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Canadian woman goes free after putting a hit on her husband. She makes uncorroborated accusations against the victim and the press buys her story without question. Excerpt:

'A battered wife from Nova Scotia who tried to hire a hit man to kill her husband says she was "relieved" when Canada's highest court stayed her case on Friday and is looking forward to putting the ordeal behind her.
Nicole Ryan says she hopes to move on with her life and reconnect with her daughter, whom she has not seen since her trial in 2009.
...
Earlier in the day, the Supreme Court of Canada overturned Ryan's acquittal but also stayed the case, meaning there will be no retrial and her long legal nightmare is over.

Ryan's lawyer, Joel Pink, said even though acquittal wasn't upheld, the defence's goals were still achieved.
...
The Nova Scotia Supreme Court had acquitted Ryan in 2009 on charges of counselling to commit murder after she claimed duress under the so-called battered woman's defence. That decision was then upheld by the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal, but prosecutors pursued the case all the way to the country's highest court.

The Supreme Court ruled Friday the defence's duress argument was incorrect, and therefore Ryan's earlier acquittal couldn't stand.
...
Madam Justice Bertha Wilson, at the time, said the "imminence" requirement makes sense in most cases, but special circumstances are at plan when it comes to abused women. Though Rust was walking away from Lavallee when she shot him, the years of abuse and expectation of violence that Lavallee had could be likened to the threat of an upraised knife or a pointed gun.'

Afghanistan Prison Torture Still Happening, UN Says

Mastodon · 20 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'KABUL, Afghanistan — Afghan authorities are still torturing prisoners, such as hanging them by their wrists and beating them with cables, the United Nations said, a year after it first documented the abuse and won government promises of detention reform.

The latest report shows little progress in curbing abuse in Afghan prisons despite efforts by the U.N. and international military forces in Afghanistan. The report released Sunday also cites instances where Afghan authorities have tried to hide mistreatment from U.N. monitors.

The slow progress on prison reform has prompted NATO forces to once again stop many transfers of detainees to Afghan authorities out of concern that they would be tortured.

In multiple detention centers, Afghan authorities leave detainees hanging from the ceiling by their wrists, beat them with cables and wooden sticks, administer electric shocks, twist their genitals and threaten to shove bottles up their anuses or to kill them, the report said.'

UK: Women tortured retired bus conductor for ATM card PIN

Mastodon · 21 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Kelly Louise Barnes, 32, and her partner Jodie Barnes, 31, killed Barry Reeve in a "brutal and callous" attack in his home, Norwich Crown Court heard.

They tortured the retired bus conductor, believing he had a secret stash of money before turning the volume on his television up to mask his screams, it was claimed.

They beat the 67-year-old and cut him with a knife at his home in Norwich in an attempt to make him disclose his PIN, the jury were told.

After the attack on February 9 last year the drug addict couple, both of both, Norwich, left the grandfather dying, prosecutors alleged.

They returned to his terraced house in the city's Corton Road, where Mr Reeve, who was known as Titch because of his small stature, is thought to have remained alive until at least the following morning.'

Jodie Foster 'to tell sons who their father is when they're 21'

Mastodon · 21 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The biological father of Jodie Foster's two sons, Charles, 14, and Kit, 12, has never been revealed. However, according to Reverend Beverly Bates, 75, her son Randy Stone was Jodie's best friend and treated them as his own children.

In an interview with MailOnline, Reverend Beverly stopped short of confirming Randy is the kids' father, while it's heavily rumoured that's the case.

Randy, a Hollywood producer who passed away in 2007, swore to keep the father's identity a secret, Beverly told the Mail Online.

"Randy told me that Jodie said she'll tell the boys who their father is when they're 21," Beverly said.'

New York: Governor Cuomo proposes changes to equal-pay provision

Mastodon · 21 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women working full time in this state earn 84 percent of what men earn according to the state Labor Department. Nationally, according to the U.S. Department of Labor, women in 2010 earned 77 cents for every $1 men earned in full time work. In 2011 the median full-time working woman made 81.6 percent of the wages of the median full-time working man.

The number of hours worked per week varied the statistic, though. Among men and women who work 40 hours per week, women earned 87 percent of what men earned.
...
Under the current law people who prove discrimination in wages can get back pay to make up the difference for what they would have earned if they were paid equally to their peers. This means a successful plaintiff in a wage discrimination case is entitled to 100 percent of the back wages due.

Cuomo proposed increasing that to 300 percent of back wages.
...

Other womens' groups, such as the right-leaning research institution Independent Women's Forum, take the position that the wage disparity is the result of choices women make in how many hours they work and what jobs they choose.

"Feminist groups disserve women by promoting the false idea that the U.S. workplace is overwhelmingly sexist. It encourages unnecessary meddling from the federal government, which could limit women's job opportunities and workplace flexibility, and discourages women from fully pursuing their ambitions," according to a publication by that organization on the wage gap. "Women are better off understanding that it's the decisions they make -not systematic sexism - that determine how much they earn."'

Also see: Urban Single Women Under 30 Earn More Than Their Male Cohorts

Boys on ADHD medication 'growing slower'

Mastodon · 21 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The research finds that more than three years on ADHD medication can stunt their development.

Dr Alison Poulton from the University of Sydney says boys with ADHD are shorter and thinner than their peers.

"If a child stays on medication for three years they are about three centimetres shorter than they would be otherwise," she said.

"The boys aged 12 to 14 were leaner and the boys aged 14 to 16 were not only slimmer but also slightly less tall.

"And when we looked at the growth rate, how fast they were growing in height, we found that the bigger the dose, the slower their growth rate.'

Teacher charged with having sex with student marries him, preventing his testimony

Mastodon · 21 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Brunswick County teacher charged with having sex with a student pleaded guilty last month to a lesser charge after she married the victim, preventing the state from compelling him to testify against her, a prosecutor said this week.

Leah Gayle Shipman, 42, pleaded guilty Dec. 20 to misdemeanor resisting a public officer.

Shipman was a married Brunswick County Academy teacher when she was arrested in January 2009 on charges of sexual offense with a student, statutory rape and taking indecent liberties with a student. Shipman was immediately suspended from her job and her contract wasn't renewed.'

Man Imprisoned On False Accusations Acquitted Almost 20 Years Later

Matt · 22 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'EDMONTON - An Edmonton man who has already served “every minute” of an eight-year sentence for sexually assaulting his young stepson has now been acquitted.

In a decision released Monday, the Court of Appeal of Alberta acquitted the 47-year-old man because the boy later recanted and said his biological father forced him to lie during a 1994 custody dispute.

In a special commission hearing held last year, the boy, who was nine at the time and is now an adult, testified that allegations of sexual abuse and rape against his stepfather were completely false.
...
"When I was a kid and these allegations came up, I was threatened, and as a kid you do what your parents tell you to do,” the stepson testified before the special commission. “You are young, and you don’t know right from wrong. And when your parent threatens you, you basically just do what you’re told.”'

Mother sentenced for manslaughter in deaths of her four children

Matt · 23 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. She kills 4 children and gets... 7 to 15. Anyone care to speculate what she'd've gotten if her name had been "Bobby" and not "Bobbie"? Bet she walks after 5, parole for the next 10. Excerpt:

'A Rochester mom will spend 7 to 15 years behind bars for the deaths of her four children in a fire last February.

31-year-old Bobbie Kugler admitted she set a photo of her ex-boyfriend on fire and threw it on a dresser filled with combustible materials. She also admitted she was drunk and high at the time.

Seven children were inside her home when the fire started, three survived the fire. But four children, all Kugler's own children, Gage Reavey, Greg, Kandee and Kaiden Kugler were all killed.

The two boys that survived the fire had to jump from a window on the second floor to escape the fire. They showed the judge their physical scars. Judge Randall, as he spoke to Kugler, made mention that we will never be able to see the emotional scars.'

U.S. Department of State Launches First Empowering Women and Girls through Sports Program of 2013

Minuteman · 23 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Today, with the arrival of 12 young female basketball players and two coaches from Senegal, the U.S. Department of State launched its first Empowering Women and Girls Through Sports Initiative program of the year. This initiative engages women and girls from every region of the world, ranging from Brazil to Iraq to Liberia to Thailand to Venezuela, to name a few participating countries. Not only does this global effort include a host of countries, it also spans the spectrum of sports, including basketball, field hockey, soccer, softball, and track and field.

...

This initiative aims to increase the number of women and girls in sports and works to take the lessons of Title IX – the landmark legislation in the United States that afforded women equality and opportunity through sports – worldwide.'

John Cleese Forced To Sell ‘Monty Python’ Memorabilia To Fund Divorce

Matt · 23 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Monty Python cast member John Cleese is allegedly selling off a number of props and movie memorabilia in order to finance his pending divorce.

The comedian’s divorce has reportedly cost the man quite a bit of money, forcing him to part with a number of items he obtained over the course of his career. The Daily Mail reports that Cleese even embarked on the Alimony Tour which featured the actor doing stand-up in hopes of raising money for alimony payments.
...
The actor ended his marriage to psychotherapist Alyce Faye Eichelberger in 2008 after 16 years. A judge ordered Cleese to pay his ex-wife a grand total of £12.5 million as a result. This apparently doesn’t include the hefty alimony payments he’ll have to may [sic] for the next few years. The comedian will have to fork over £612,000 a year until 2016.

In addition to handing over their shared New York City apartment, John Cleese also had to part with his West London home.'

India’s first court only for women launched in Bengal

Mastodon · 23 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Malda (WB): For the first time in the country, a court having woman judges and staff to deal exclusively with atrocities against women was inaugurated today at Malda town in West Bengal.

The court would hear all cases of atrocities against women for delivering speedy justice, officials said.

Chief Justice of Calcutta High Court Justice Arun Mishra inaugurated the court on the birthday anniversary of Netaji Subhas Chandra Bose whose Azad Hind Fauj (Indian National Army) had many women who fought along side men against the British.

The setting up of the court in Malda is significant as the district tops the list of women trafficking cases and atrocities against the fairer sex in the state.'

Panetta opens combat roles to women

Matt · 23 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'WASHINGTON (AP) — Senior defense officials say Pentagon chief Leon Panetta is removing the military's ban on women serving in combat, opening hundreds of thousands of front-line positions and potentially elite commando jobs after more than a decade at war.

The groundbreaking move recommended by the Joint Chiefs of Staff overturns a 1994 rule banning women from being assigned to smaller ground combat units. Panetta's decision gives the military services until January 2016 to seek special exceptions if they believe any positions must remain closed to women.'

Women in combat: Will they have to register for the draft?

Mastodon · 23 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now that the Pentagon is lifting its ban on women in combat, does this mean that women could potentially be drafted, too?

And as a practical matter: When women turn 18, will they now need to register, as men do, so that they can be conscripted in the event of a World War III, or any military emergency where the US government decides it needs troops quickly?

It's a thorny question, raising what may be a difficult prospect societally. But the legal implications are obvious, analysts argue.

"The answer to that question is clearly yes," says Anne Coughlin, a law professor at the University of Virginia School of Law in Charlottesville. "The legal argument is clear: If it comes to that kind of wrenching emergency where we have to press young people into service, there is no legal justification for saying that men alone need to shoulder that burden."
...
Once the combat exclusion policy is lifted, "My belief is that if we open up combat arms to women, even on a voluntary basis, if there is a draft, we should be able to force women into those positions," says retired Col. Peter Mansoor, a professor of military history at the Ohio State University in Columbus and a former US Army brigade commander who served two tours in Iraq.'

More Than an "Equal Rights" Issue

Mastodon · 23 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amid all the predictable feminist cheering we will no doubt hear about the "barriers" in the military falling now that women can be assigned to fight in ground combat units, there should also be a place for some sober debate and consideration.

There have long been reasons that women have been precluded from such assignments -- reasons that have nothing to do with invidious sexism. Rather, they stem from the physical requirements of the job, and the imperative of keeping our soldiers safe.

...

When women work in close combat with men, if they struggle to meet the physical demands of their tasks, that doesn't just put them in danger -- it also endangers the men who serve alongside them. If the Obama administration determines that an "insufficient" number of women are serving in the newly-opened positions, will we see the kind of "gender norming" that has occurred elsewhere in the military with less-than-stellar results?

I stand second to no one in believing in gender equality. But equality doesn't always mean "sameness," especially when indulging a feminist obsession ends up needlessly endangering lives, and undermining the effectiveness of the US military.'

Women's lung cancer death rate almost the same as men's

Mastodon · 23 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'U.S. women who smoke today have a much greater risk of dying from lung cancer than they did decades ago, partly because they are starting younger and smoking more - that is, they are lighting up like men, new research shows.

Men who smoke have long had higher lung cancer death rates, but now women have caught up in their risk of dying from smoking-related illnesses. Lung cancer risk leveled off in the 1980s for men but is still rising for women, the study found.

"It's a massive failure in prevention," said one study leader, Dr. Michael Thun of the American Cancer Society. And it's likely to repeat itself in places like China and Indonesia where smoking is growing, he said. About 1.3 billion people worldwide smoke.
...
Smoking needs more attention as a health hazard, Dr. Steven A. Schroeder of the University of California, San Francisco, wrote in a commentary in the journal.

"More women die of lung cancer than of breast cancer. But there is no `race for the cure' for lung cancer, no brown ribbon" or high-profile advocacy groups for lung cancer, he wrote.'

The Boys Initiative Announces Appointment of Panel for Project on Adolescent Male Health

Matt · 24 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Jan. 23, 2013 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Today The Boys Initiative announced the appointment of David L. Bell, MD, MPH, Arthur Elster, MD, MJ, and Arik Marcell, MD, MPH to serve as founding members of the steering committee to guide its groundbreaking project Health Guidelines for Adolescent and Young Adult Males.

...

The Health Guidelines for Adolescent and Young Adult Males project is a collaborative endeavor to 1) identify promising clinical interventions, appropriate clinical settings and patient incentives for adolescent and young adult male health; 2) create clinical prevention guidelines for this population; 3) distribute and foster application of those guidelines in clinical practice; 4) foster relevant public and continuing medical education programs; and 5) promote public policies that will advance adoption of the guidelines in clinical practice.

The mission of The Boys Initiative is to shed light on declining achievement and wellbeing among boys and young men, to foster dialogue and debate about the issue, and to collaborate on solutions with those who are committed to the futures of our nation's youth. The organization's principal role is to serve as a hub for information exchange and action among the broad range of organizations whose work touches on boys and young men.'

Former teacher indicted over claims she had sex with four of her students

Mastodon · 24 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former high school teacher in Texas has been indicted over accusations she had sex with four of her students.

According to a September 2011 search warrant, parents of a graduate and former student of Tonya Flink, 39, reported to police that their son was living with her at her apartment.

They told police that they believed the relationship began while their son was a senior at Haltom High School in Haltom City, which is near Fort Worth.

In the same month, investigators learned of other relationships, according to the warrant.

According to the report from police, the former student in question admitted that the relationship began when he would stay after school and Flink would help him with his grades. Flirting led to Flink "pushing herself onto him," according to police.'

Study confirms young Irish male suicide increase due to collapse in economy

Matt · 24 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Since March 2011, the Men's Health Forum in Ireland (MHFI - www.mhfi.org) has been working on an all-Ireland 'Young Men and Suicide Project' (YMSP). This cross-Border initiative was jointly funded by the Public Health Agency in Northern Ireland and the National Office for Suicide Prevention in the Republic of Ireland.

On Wednesday 23rd January 2013, the report on this project will be launched at noon at two separate short events which are being held in Belfast and Dublin. In Belfast, the report will be officially launched by Minister for Health, Edwin Poots MLA, while Minister of State Kathleen Lynch TD will launch it in Dublin.

Launching the report, Edwin Poots MLA will tell the audience that: "Despite my Department"s investment of over £32 million in suicide prevention since 2006, the suicide rate has not fallen. Around 300 people a year in Northern Ireland continue to die by suicide every year. Men aged from 18 to 54 who live in deprived areas face the greatest level of risk. In fact, males are three times as likely as females to die by suicide.'

Top Psychiatrist: Meds Behind School Massacres

Matt · 24 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK – If lawmakers and authorities are truly concerned about stopping gun violence in schools, they need to take a close look at the prescription of psychotropic drugs for children and young people, says a leading psychiatrist.

In an exclusive in-person interview in New York City with WND, London-based Dr. David Healy* criticized pharmaceutical companies that have made billions of dollars marketing Selective Serotonin Reuptake Inhibitors, known as SSRIs.

Psychotropic drugs “prescribed for school children cause violent behavior,” Healy stated.
...
Healey cautioned that there is a very high correlation between mass shootings and use of the drugs.

“When roughly nine out of every 10 cases in these school shootings and mass shootings involve these drugs being prescribed, then at least a significant proportion of these cases were either caused by the drugs or the drugs made a significant contribution to the problem,” he said.'

---
* Hyperlink added.

Men starving themselves to look like the pictures in magazines

Matt · 24 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Bulimia, anorexia nervosa and other eating disorders, long thought to be serious problems for many women, are showing up among surprisingly large numbers of men, some of whom are starving themselves or exercising obsessively to look like the pictures in men's magazines.

Yet neither men themselves, nor most doctors, think of males as being at risk for these illnesses, experts say.

Community-based studies suggest one case in three of anorexia nervosa is a male, said Dr. Blake Woodside, director of the program for eating disorders at Toronto General Hospital. For bulimia, it is about one in four.
...
The stigma, isolation and confusion around suffering from what has long been perceived as a "girl's problem" can make men so reluctant to come forward that many arrive in treatment sicker than women. "For men there is still such a stigma attached to the idea of having an eating disorder and reaching out for help," said Joanna Anderson, clinical director at Sheena's Place in Toronto. "If you go for treatment and you're in a group with 10 or 12 women and you're the only man, it's very difficult to feel like you're not different."'

F&F: Fathers and Families Introduces 5 Family Law Bills in Massachusetts

Matt · 24 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers and Families has just introduced five family law bills in the 2013 Massachusetts session.

Representative Colleen Garry, D-Dracut, worked with Fathers and Families to submit legislation on presumption of shared parenting, military child custody, removals, parental involvement with childcare, and establishing paternity.
...
According to Representative Gary, ”As far as I am concerned, the most important people in a child’s life is their mother and father. A child should have as much access to them as possible as long as there is no abuse or detrimental effect on the child. Shared parenting is key in maintaining the connection to children by both of their parents.”'

SAVE: VAWA Introduced in Congress, Ignores Long-Standing Problems with the Law

Matt · 24 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Violence Against Women Act reauthorization bills were introduced in the Senate and House on Tuesday.

The two bills are very similar to last year's version, except the new proposals remove a provision to increase the number of U visas, given to immigrant abuse victims who agree to cooperate with criminal justice officials; and include the SAFER Act, which provides for audits of untested rape kits.

SAVE supports measures to reduce the backlog of rape kits.

Unfortunately, the Senate and House bills, S. 47 and H.R. 11 ignore the well-documented problems with VAWA, which are outlined in SAVE's Mandate for Change: http://www.saveservices.org/mandate-for-change/

While Sen. Patrick Leahy, lead sponsor of the Senate bill, claims his bill will help "all victims of domestic and sexual violence," every one of the statistics and examples in his Statement highlight only female victims: http://www.leahy.senate.gov/press/leahy-crapo-reintroduce-bipartisan-bill-to-reauthorize-the-landmark-violence-against-women-act

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments will continue to work to reform the Violence Against Women Act so the law respects civil rights, assures accountability, supports partner reconciliation when it is safe, and helps all victims of domestic violence.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

All About the Draft

Mastodon · 24 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While a draft is not likely, registration for the draft (for males) is a reality. Almost all male U.S. citizens, and male aliens living in the U.S., who are 18 through 25, are required to register with Selective Service.

CONSEQUENCES FOR NOT REGISTERING:

The maximum penalty for failing to register with Selective Service is a $250,000 fine and up to five years in prison. Failure to register will cause ineligibility for a number of federal and state benefits including:

FEDERAL JOBS

A man must be registered to be eligible for jobs in the Executive Branch of the Federal government and the U.S. Postal Service. This applies only to men born after December 31, 1959.

STUDENT FINANCIAL AID

Men who are not registered with Selective Service cannot obtain Federal student loans or grants. This includes Pell Grants, College Work Study, Guaranteed Student/Plus Loans, and National Direct Student Loans.'

Panetta admits he doesn't know "who the hell" controls the draft

Mastodon · 24 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If the United States had previously allowed women to serve officially in military combat roles, including special operations forces, there might be fewer sexual assaults in the armed services, the Pentagon's top general told reporters Thursday.

...

Dempsey appeared to chafe when asked by a reporter about his personal opinions on whether women would affect combat readiness: "I graduated from West Point in 1974. It was an all-male institution. I went back to teach at West Point in 1984 and found the place far better than it was when I had been a cadet... I attributed a good amount of that to the fact that we opened up the academy to women."

...

Both men conceded that they didn't know if this move means that women will have to register for the draft with Selective Service, as young men are required to do. "That's not our operation," Panetta said, stumbling over his words, then adding, "I don't know who the hell controls Selective Service, to tell the truth."'

The Lonely Existence of Mel Feit, Men's Rights Advocate

Mastodon · 24 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'His name is Mel Feit and he's the founder of the National Center for Men, a men's rights group based in Coram, New York.

"Men's rights," may sound oxymoronic—and perverse, something akin to "white rights"—but to Mel and his band of brothers it's no joke. They believe men's equal rights are challenged by unfair child support obligations, a family law system that privileges mothers in child custody cases, the trivialization of female-on-male domestic violence, the cultural vilification of male sexuality, and social customs that impose an outdated (and crippling) expectation of masculinity on men.

The NCM has advanced its many causes through counseling services, helping men find family law experts, staging protests at women-only establishments, and using the media to trumpet their movement.

While "movement" might overstate the influence these groups have—they comprise only a handful of organizations—the idea of them nonetheless riles some feminists. Amanda Marcotte, author of It's a Jungle Out There: The Feminist Survival Guide to Politically Inhospitable Environments, offered these scorching words, which pretty much sum up feminism's response to these guys:

MRAs may have a handful of semi-accurate observations, but the fact that they blame feminists for men's problems and not patriarchy shows that they are not interested in real solutions. 'Men's rights,' a term that resembles 'white power' in its belligerence and pseudo-victimization, is a reactionary movement, and the propping up of a few pseudo-liberal leaders doesn't change that. There is already a movement for people of both genders who want to end stifling gender roles: It's called feminism.'

Women In Combat: A Draft, Military Weakness Next?

Mastodon · 24 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It may seem like a stretch to warn that drafting teenage girls is upon us, but consider what happened after President Carter, in the wake of the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan and the Iranian hostage crisis, called for mandatory Selective Service registration for all young men.

As former Investor's Business Daily Washington bureau chief Brian Mitchell pointed out in his 1999 book "Women in the Military: Flirting With Disaster," the legislation Carter sent to Congress the next week "included young women on an equal basis with young men" in Selective Service, because according to Carter "there is no distinction possible ... that would allow me to exclude women from an obligation to register."

Fortunately, Congress — under Democratic control, no less — swiftly squashed the idea of forcing women to register for a potential wartime draft.

On cue, the ACLU and the radical National Organization for Women sued and in 1981, by a frighteningly slim 6-3 majority, the Supreme Court ruled against them, affirming that a men-only draft is not unconstitutional. But when President Obama gets a couple more high court appointments how long will that precedent survive?'

Push for Gender Balance on Boards Gains Steam

Mastodon · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ms. Reding is leading a campaign for legally binding measures to promote gender equality in the top ranks of the European business world. But she has run into vigorous opposition from some E.U. governments, including Britain's, that prefer that such measures be voluntary.

Ms. Reding had to abandon a proposal in November for legislation that called for punishing companies whose supervisory boards had fewer than 40 percent women. Ms. Reding then proposed that sanctions apply only in cases where companies do not have 40 percent of women on their supervisory boards and fail to enact selection procedures giving priority to a qualified female candidate.

Her appearance at Davos should give her another opportunity to make the case that her amended proposal, which must be approved by the European Parliament and by E.U. governments, should be adopted across Europe.'

Many Women Victims of 'Contraceptive Sabotage,' Experts Say

Minuteman · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Obstetricians and gynecologists should screen women and teens for signs that their partner is sabotaging their birth control, forcing them to have unprotected sex or otherwise trying to control their reproductive choices, says a leading group of U.S. doctors.

The American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG) lays out guidelines for detecting sexual and reproductive "coercion" -- which it calls an under-recognized form of violence against women -- in the February issue of the journal Obstetrics & Gynecology.

"Most ob/gyns are probably unfamiliar with sexual and reproductive coercion as an entity and probably don't ask about it," said Dr. Eve Espey, chairwoman of the ACOG's Committee on Health Care for Underserved Women.

The abuse includes hiding or destroying a woman's birth control method of choice; poking holes in a condom or removing it during sex; coercing a woman to carry out or end a pregnancy against her will through violence or threats; and intentionally exposing her to a sexually transmitted disease.'

Rejected female applicant to men's college "disappointed" but fine with single-sex women's colleges

Matt · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A teenage girl who hoped to gain admission to a tiny, all-male, Deep Springs College, has been denied. She has written an essay expounding on her disappointment for The Atlantic.

A legally-binding trust stipulates that the college must remain an all-male institution. The rejected female applicant doesn't like this. Oddly, however, she has no problem with all-female institutions rejecting men.
...
The fact of the matter is that young women face a lack of diversity in their higher education. Young men do not pine over all-women schools like Bryn Mawr or Scripps because there are reasonably similar co-educational programs. However, there is not a school like Deep Springs that is available to young women.'

UK: Suicide is a gender issue that can no longer be ignored

Matt · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The latest statistics underline the message that Calm (the campaign against living miserably) has maintained for years; gender runs through UK suicide statistics like letters in a stick of rock. The highest suicide rate is among men aged 30-44, in men aged 45 to 59 suicide has increased significantly between 2007 and 2011, and in 2011 more men under 35 died from suicide in the UK than road accidents, murder and HIV/Aids combined. Even in the 60+ age group, men were three times more likely to take their lives than women.
...
Men, regardless of age group, often don't recognise when they are depressed. Depression in men is likely to be signalled by anger, so won't be recognised either by men themselves or by women as depression. Ironically, they may end up in jail rather than a GP's surgery. For a man to ask for help is seen as failure, because by convention men are supposed to be in control at all times.'

Previously-criticized Goldman Sachs now embraced by HuffPo

Matt · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It'd be sort of funny if it weren't so incredibly transparent. But really, is it any surprise? I doubt we'd see such a big change of attitude if the Sachs "10,000 Women" initiative had been named "10,000 Promising Entrepreneur Types Regardless of Gender". But anyway.... Excerpt:

'Arianna Huffington and Lloyd Blankfein announced Thursday that Goldman Sachs and the Huffington Post will partner for a new initiative aimed at job creation, according to a piece coauthored by the pair in the Huffington Post.

...

"In 2008, Goldman Sachs made a $100 million investment through its 10,000 Women program. This initiative provides women-owned small-to-medium businesses in more than 20 countries with a business and management education, access to mentors, and links to capital. This year, the program will reach its initial goal by serving its 10,000th woman.

...

Today, our two organizations are joining forces. Together we will examine what entrepreneurs are doing to drive growth around the world and apply the lessons we have learned."

...

The new partnership signals a very fast about-face. The Huffington Post attacked Goldman Sachs two days ago for profiting from a global food crisis. A slideshow, titled “CEOs Who Look Like Villains,” accompanied the article. The first slide compared Arianna’s newest partner to Dr. Evil.

The Huffington Post attacked Blankfein earlier this month for receiving a 75 percent raise. The website also alleges that the CEO lied about the firm’s proprietary trading and called Blankfein a “Vampire Squid.”

It is unclear if Arianna will order a purge of her website.'

"I'll stay with you-- if you run for President..."

Matt · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Blog entry here. Ahh, hypergamy, only without the hassle of a divorce. Well, she tried, anyway. Excerpt:

'Colorado governor John Hickenlooper, a Democrat, told the New York Times that his wife offered to stay married to him, if he was planning to run for president. The first couple of Colorado is currently separated.

Frank Bruni of the Times reports:

Recently I visited Colorado, whose governor, John Hickenlooper, is another prominent Democrat sometimes mentioned in connection with 2016. I met up with him just a few hours after his State of the State address. Its distinctions included this: when he thanked his wife, Helen Thorpe, for coming to hear it, he was reminding Coloradans that the two had separated midway through 2012, less than two years into his first term.
...
If he hadn't run for governor, I asked, would the marriage have survived? "It's conceivable," he said. Then he volunteered that when they discussed separating, she had told him: "If you want to run for president, I'm in. We'll stay married. I'll figure it out and I'll be fine."'

SAVE: Women Shortchanged by Violence Against Women Act

Matt · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Jan. 25, 2013 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Following introduction of the Violence Against Women Act in Congress, SAVE, a leading victim-rights organization, is charging the bills fall short in addressing the causes of domestic violence, ignore abuse prone women, and in some cases place victims at greater risk of harm.

The bills were introduced Tuesday in the Senate (S. 47) by Sen. Patrick Leahy (D-VT) and in the House of Representatives (H.R. 11) by Rep. Gwen Moore (D-WI). The bills seek to enhance the criminal justice response to domestic violence through wider use of restraining orders, mandatory arrests, and mandatory prosecutions.'

Court sets aside two Casey Anthony convictions

Mastodon · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Florida appellate court on Friday set aside two of the four convictions Casey Anthony faced for lying to detectives during the investigation into her missing 2-year-old daughter.

Judges on the 5th District Court of Appeals agreed with Anthony's attorneys that two of the charges constituted double jeopardy, or being convicted more than once for the same crime.

"We cannot conclude that the Legislature intended to authorize separate punishment for each false statement made during a single interview," the judges said in their ruling.

...

The appeals judges ruled that the trial court was correct to allow Anthony's statements to detectives to be used during her murder trial. Anthony's attorneys had argued that she was in police custody at the time and hadn't been read her Miranda rights. They also had argued that Anthony should have been convicted of only a single count of lying because of the double jeopardy concern.'

Panetta: Women May Be Included in Future Draft

Mastodon · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Females may be included in the Selective Service and qualify for a potential draft should one be ordered by the president, Defense Secretary Leon Panetta said.
The U.S. military's civilian leader lamented that he didn't know who ran the Selective Service, but whoever does will "have to exercise some judgment based on what we just did," Panetta said at a Pentagon press conference Thursday.
On Thursday, Panetta and Army Gen. Martin Dempsey, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, lifted the official ban on women serving in combat roles, removing gender barriers from jobs in the military.
...
Congress established the U.S. Selective Service as an independent federal agency in 1940, one year ahead of the start of World War II. Presidents had drafted men in previous wars, but this was the first time it was established in peace time. In America's history, the military has never drafted a woman or ordered her to register for the Selective Service.
...
The inclusion of women in combat roles means a new constitutional challenge to the men-only system could turn out differently, Campbell said. That or the Supreme Court could rule that Selective Service can remain in effect only if women are required to register.
...

A lawyer suing to overturn the law argued the female exemption made Selective Service discriminatory and therefore unconstitutional. The Supreme Court ruled otherwise, deciding that the exemption for women was not a violation of equal protections because women were barred by law from combat.

"The purpose of registration was to prepare for a draft of combat troops," the court stated. "Since women are excluded from combat, Congress concluded that they would not be needed in the event of a draft, and therefore decided not to register them."'

The Feminist Objection to Women in Combat

Mastodon · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week the Pentagon altered its policy prohibiting women from serving in combat roles in the US military. This has generally been seen as a win for feminism by feminists themselves. It's also been seen as a feminist victory by conservative folks like Heather Mac Donald at National Review, who declares with hyperbolic outrage that "the only reason to pursue [the policy of women in combat] is to placate feminism's insatiable and narcissistic drive for absolute official equality between the sexes."

I'm a feminist myself, and I certainly think that women should have equal access to jobs and career advancement inside the military as well as outside it. And, as the Jezebel article I linked above points out, women are already often in combat situations. Acknowledging this formally just means that they're able to get the same credit for risking their lives that men do.
...
The problem is, feminism has never just been about equality. Many feminists have written about the need for women to have the same opportunities as men. But many have also written about the need to criticize male patriarchal values and ideals. And one of the male patriarchal values and ideals that has been consistently criticized and questioned by feminists is war.'

In Waging War On Sexist Trolls, Feminists Echo The Victorian Ladies Who Campaigned Against Men's 'Coarse Jests'

Mastodon · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Again and again, the assumption is made that women - far more so than men or teenage boys - are not cut out for negotiating the often dark, offensive internet. And so they need protecting from it; websites that offend them must be closed, and trolls who troll them must be silenced. Perhaps misogyny-filtering software should be invented to make the web a safer place for women, like that software parents use to protect their children from seeing porn.

The truth is that the internet always has been, and will remain, a place with strange, perverted corners that are best avoided. Men, believe it or not, also know that every time we venture on to the web we're just a few clicks away from violent-minded porn, hateful racism, Holocaust denialism or, in some of our cases, long discussion threads calling us every name under the sun - but we don't freak out and go back to bed; we carry on surfing and chatting, knowing that the virtues of the internet outweigh its ills.'

False Rape Claim Leads to Shooting in Bartlett

Mastodon · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(Bartlett, TN) Rachel Courtney is in jail charged with attempted murder. Police say she ran out of her house with a gun and machete.

According to police documents, her lover, Robbi Fitch claimed a man raped her. He later showed up at their home and parked outside.

The documents say Courtney got in the car, pulled a gun and she and the man fought over it.

He won, and pistol-whipped her, before she choked him.

The 57-year old man told police he took Fitch to buy drugs and have sex. Fitch said he raped her, but police said text message showed otherwise. They had been sleeping together regularly for years.
...
The girl caught in the middle finally admitted she wasn't raped.

Rachel Courtney is charged with attempted first degree murder. Robbi Fitch is charged with making a false report.'

India: Jilted woman filed false gang rape case for marriage

Mastodon · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'New Delhi: In a shocking incident, a girl withdrew her complaint against four accused that they had allegedly gang-raped her on gunpoint. The girl on Friday accepted that she had filed a false case against the accused.

The girl said, “I am taking my case back as I was not gang-raped. I tried to implicate them in false case because one of the accused duped me on the pretext of marrying me.”

The girl said that she developed a strong feeling for the boy and wanted to marry him. But when he refused to marry the girl she decided to take revenge by falsely implicating him in rape case.'

Debra Lafave, Ex-Teacher in Sex Case, Ordered Back on Probation

Mastodon · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Debra Lafave, the former Tampa, Fla., middle school teacher and pin-up model who pleaded guilty in 2005 to having sex with a 14-year-old student, has been ordered back on probation.

A trial judge released Lafave from the remainder of her probation obligation before she served her full sentence of three years house arrest and seven years probation. However, an appellate court called the decision to release her early an “abuse of judicial power,” according to The Associated Press.

Today, responding to the appellate court ruling, Circuit Judge Lisa Campbell in Hillsborough County, Fla., reinstated LaFave’s probation, ordering the mother of twins to serve another four years and two months probation effective Dec. 19, 2012, to observe a curfew from 10 p.m. to 6 a.m., and to stay away from schools, according to AP and ABC News affiliate WFTS in Tampa, Fla.'

Barbara Kay: Nova Scotia hitman case reinforces gender bias of Canadian courts

Mastodon · 25 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The more I read, the more bizarre it got.

The Supreme Court of Canada ruled this week on a case where an allegation of spousal abuse – never substantiated – is the heart of a troubling story that has concluded in law, but has certainly not brought any sense of moral closure to those who track gender bias in the courts. Quite the opposite, in fact.

Here's the story. A Nova Scotian couple, Nicole Doucet Ryan and Michael Ryan, who have one daughter, separate in 2007. In March 2008, Nicole is arrested for trying to hire a hit man for $25,000 (her exchange of money with an undercover RCMP officer is all clearly recorded on video) to kill Michael. Nicole testifies at trial that Michael is an abusive control freak, who punches holes in walls, once put a gun to her head, and who exercised a "reign of terror" over the household. In other words Nicole puts up the "battered wife" defence, which is supposed to be applied in situations where the woman fears imminently for her life, i.e. "extreme duress," which was clearly not the case in Nicole's premeditated actions at a time when the couple was separated.'

Teens Arrested in Violent Subway Assault

Matt · 26 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two teenage girls have been arrested in a violent subway assault on a 55-year-old man, punching him in the head in an attack that sent the victim to the hospital, police said.

According to police, the two teens were on a northbound 4 train departing Utica Avenue in Brooklyn at about 1 p.m. when they encountered a man and became aggressive with him, police said. The nature of the dispute wasn't immediately clear.

Police say the teenagers became violent and attacked the 55-year-old man, punching him in the face and head. Video of the incident showed the man eventually punching back in an attempt to defend himself.'

Is Jodi Arias the next Casey Anthony?

Mastodon · 26 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is Jodi Arias the next Casey Anthony? Two beautiful women, two terrible deaths and a lot of lies. We all thought the evidence was sky high to convict Casey but she went free. Could this happen again in the Jodi Arias trial?

Jane Velez-Mitchell analyzes the prosecution's case with a panel of legal experts.'

Ed.: In case you're unfamiliar with this case, read about it here and here.

Prosecution rests in high-profile Arizona murder case

Mastodon · 26 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Prosecutors have rested their case in the high-profile trial of an Arizona woman accused of killing her boyfriend in 2008.

They called their last witness to the stand Thursday, a female friend of defendant Jodi Arias.

The woman testified that she had dinner with Arias 24 hours after Arias allegedly killed 30-year-old Travis Alexander in his suburban Phoenix home.

The 32-year-old Arias could become the fourth woman on Arizona's death row if she's convicted.'

"Train your sons like you train your dogs"

Mastodon · 26 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'And as a MOB - Mother of Boys - she has come to the conclusion that bringing up boys "is like dealing with dogs".

While males, or FOB (Fathers of Boys), may initially take offence at the analogy, her reasoning does, perhaps, make more than a little sense.

Evans, a mother of three boys aged seven, nine and 10, explains that 'boy pups' need feeding at least three times a day, a tree or a toilet to mark his territory, clear commands of no more than one syllable such as 'Stop!' or 'No!', love which may be shown in manic displays of tummy tickling, and most importantly, to go out to let off steam, twice a day, every day.
...
But Evans, like most MOBs, weathers the violent boy storms, and concludes she wouldn't have it any other way.

She points out that one of the many reasons why being a MOB is great is that boys' needs are simple: "Exercise, discipline, lunacy and love.

"Oh, and a never-ending supply of Scooby snacks."'

'Wrong on Women Warriors'

Mastodon · 26 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We have apparently arrived at the Golden Age, free from strife and the threat of foreign enemies. Little else can explain so gratuitous a decision as to place women in combat units. The downsides to such a policy are legion and obvious; the only reason to pursue it is to placate feminism's insatiable and narcissistic drive for absolute official equality between the sexes.

Any claim that our fighting forces are not reaching their maximum potential because females are not included is absurd. The number of women who are the equal to reasonably well-developed men in upper-body strength and who have the same stamina and endurance is vanishingly small. Because the number of women who will meet the military's already debased physical-fitness standard will not satisfy the feminists' demand for representation, the fitness standard will inevitably be lowered across the board or for women alone, as we have seen in civilian uniformed forces.

...

Feminists routinely deny Eros — except when it suits them to exploit their sexual power. Only someone deliberately blind to human reality could maintain that putting men and women in close quarters 24 hours a day will not produce a proliferation of sex, thus introducing all the irrational passions (and resulting favoritism) of physical attraction into an organization that should be exclusively devoted to the mission of combat preparedness. Reported "sexual assaults" will skyrocket, and of course it will only be the men who are at fault. Any consensual behavior leading up to the "assault" — getting in bed with your fellow grunt drunk and taking off your clothes, for example — will be ignored, since in the realm of sexual responsibility, women remain perpetual victims, at the mercy of all-powerful men. Expect a windfall to the gender-sensitivity-training industry, which will be called in both before and after the entry of women into combat units to eradicate endemic male sexism.'

Child Soldier's Tale Illustrates Mali's Dirty War

Matt · 26 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SEVARE, Mali (AP) — The boy sits with his knees tucked under his chest on the concrete floor of the police station here, his adolescent face a tableau of fear. He's still garbed in the knee-length tunic he was ordered to wear by the Islamic extremist who recruited him.

It's these same clothes, styled after those worn by the Prophet Muhammad in the 7th century, which gave him away when he tried to flee earlier this week. They have now become his prison garb.

Adama Drabo is 16, and his recruitment into the ranks of a group designated as a terrorist organization, followed by his violent interrogation at the hands of the Malian army, underscores the obstacles faced by France as it tries to wash its former West African colony clean of the al-Qaida-linked fighters occupying it.'

Topless activists pop in on elite Davos forum, protesting male economic domination

Matt · 26 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DAVOS, Switzerland – Three women angry over sexism and male domination of the world economy ripped off their shirts and tried to force their way into a gathering of corporate elites in a Swiss resort.

Predictably, they failed. The ubiquitous and huge security force policing the World Economic Forum in Davos carried the women away, kicking and screaming.

The women, from Ukrainian feminist activist group Femen, scaled a fence and set off pink flares in the protest Saturday. Their chests were painted with "SOS Davos," as they sought to call attention to poverty of women around the world.'

EU Quota Rule for Women on Boards Is the Only Way, Reding Says

Mastodon · 27 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'European rules on quotas for women on company boards are necessary because businesses aren't doing enough themselves, according to European Union Justice Commissioner Viviane Reding.

"I don't like to intervene very strongly, but I thought it was the only way," Reding said today in a panel discussion at the World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland. "I tried to do it first with asking the companies to do it by themselves. What was the result? Nothing."

Reding set out draft legislation in November asking governments and the European Parliament to approve rules for a 40 percent quota to favor women over equally qualified men for supervisory board seats. She said today such legislation was needed as the population ages.

"What convinced me to go this way? We are an aging continent, not having enough new talent growing, and then 65 percent of our university graduates are female," she said. "We do have the talent, we do have the competence, and we don't make use of it in our societies. Sometimes you need political leadership in order to change the business world."'

Equal pay is anti-feminist

Mastodon · 27 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gender equality is an admirable goal that is almost universally agreed upon in our nation. We want men and women to have the same rights and equal access to opportunities. That is uncontroversial. What is wrong, however, is seeing unequal results and categorically inferring unjust treatment. In other words, what looks, feels and smells like sexism may not actually be sexism.

We must first understand that seemingly organized, designed patterns may naturally arise from individual decisions that are not motivated by bigotry. For example, in seminar classes, the men and the women often sit on opposite sides of the table with no interlay. Is this evidence of a conscious decision to segregate due to sexism? No, of course not. If every member of the class prefers to sit next to at least one person of his or her own sex, then the pattern of complete segregation will occur organically. Thus, patterns of behavior that seem collectively organized can emerge from the aggregation of individual choices that stem from innocent motives.'

American Effort to Ban Circumcision of Minors Kicks into High Gear

Mastodon · 27 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Genital integrity activists from across the country are demanding that lawmakers ban the practice of circumcising boys. Popularly known as “intactivists”, these children’s rights advocates submitted the Male Genital Mutilation (MGM) Bill proposal to more than 2,000 legislators this week in an effort to require gender neutrality in federal and state laws that regulate genital cutting.

As director of MGMbill.org’s Indiana state office in Indianapolis, Jeff Cowsert wants all boys to be able to grow up with their genitals left intact. “When I was eight years old, my religious friends told me about circumcision,” said Cowsert. “I was silently outraged, and for the remainder of my childhood I mourned the fact that I didn't have a complete body. I would not have chosen to be cut if given the choice, and I strongly feel that infant circumcision needs to be banned so that men can make their own choices about their own bodies when they are mature adults.”'

"Identity Thief" actress wallops co-star, feels no apologies necessary

Matt · 27 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Seriously, what a nasty person. And of course, were the sexes reversed, not only would the plot not include him walloping her, but if it had, he would have apologized profusely. Instead, she taunts him about it with a "memento" reminding him of her assault. And of course, the story reports that the 'he' character shouldn't have even tried to fight back. I'd like to suggest a boycott of this film. Excerpt:

'With his family's financial future on the line, Sandy must track Diana down to bring her to justice and clear his name with the cops and his new boss. When he does find her -- boy, does she fight. So many punches were thrown by McCarthy during filming that she accidentally hit Bateman -- twice! -- and gave him a bloody nose.
...
Apparently the 42-year-old former Oscar nominee felt no need to apologize, and instead presented a funny present to Bateman after filming was complete. "All I got was a snapshot of a tissue cone up my nose that she took and then gave to me as a wrap gift," he said, adding, "So it wasn't an apology or anything like that – just a 'Look what I did! Isn't this a cute picture!'" McCarthy chimed in, "You look very cute in the picture with Kleenex stuffed up your nose."
...
In "Identity Thief," Bateman does hit back. But is it ever okay to rough house a woman? "She knows how to hit back. And if she's lippin' off, this is what happens. You know – you get thrown down to the hot pavement," the 44-year-old Golden Globe winner joked. McCarthy answered facetiously, "True. I learned my lesson," adding the disclaimer, "American children: asphalt's hard." She also felt the need to point out that she did, in fact, throw the first punch. Bateman's flimsy justification: "She started it."'

Casey Anthony Files for Bankruptcy

Mastodon · 27 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Casey Anthony, the Florida mother who was acquitted of killing her 2-year-old daughter Caylee in 2011, has filed for bankruptcy, The Associated Press reports.

Anthony filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy in Tampa Friday, claiming about $1,000 in assets and $792,000 in debts, according to the AP. Many of the liabilities come from legal fees associated with her trial, as well as taxes and a $145,660 fee she was ordered to pay the Orange County Sheriff's office for misleading police during the investigation into Caylee's murder.

Anthony, who is unemployed and living in an undisclosed location due to threats she received after the verdict was handed down, is still listed as a defendant in a number of civil suits linked to the case.'

Former beauty queen reportedly takes plea deal in murder case

Mastodon · 28 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former beauty queen who was once married to the owner of a Kentucky Derby-winning thoroughbred has reportedly struck a deal with prosecutors who were preparing to try her for allegedly luring a man to his death nearly a decade ago.

The Seattle Times reports that Peggy Sue Thomas, 47, will spend four years in prison when she is sentenced next month on charges of first-degree rendering criminal assistance. Thomas, who was crowned Ms. Washington in 2000, had faced a first-degree murder charge in the death of Russel Douglas, who was found fatally shot two days after Christmas 2003.

Thomas, a former beautician, once worked at a salon owned by Douglas' wife, and allegedly plotted with her then-boyfriend, James Huden, to kill Douglas.'

Families try to prevent boys playing girls' sports

Mastodon · 28 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'At the beginning of her freshman year at Upper St. Clair High School, Kallan Piconi had plenty of decisions to make. Which classes would she take? Which clubs would she join? Most importantly, which fall sport would she play?
...
On Sept. 11, Kallan's mother, Eden Piconi, arrived at her seat for the game at Peters Township, ready to watch her daughter compete. Quickly, Mrs. Piconi saw something in the action that jarred her: Running up and down the field with the girls was a boy wearing a kilt and a Peters jersey.

At first, Mrs. Piconi wanted answers. How was this allowed? But, as the season progressed, and Kallan was confronted with more boys, her mother couldn't deny the small thrill of watching her stop those young men from scoring goals.
...
While her daughter faded away from her first semester of high school, trapped in their two-story, red-brick home, Mrs. Piconi started on a mission. She called athletic directors, asking that original question: How were boys allowed to play on girls teams? How was this safe? Look at what happened to her Kallan.

"I just didn't want to let him score," Kallan said. "I didn't want to let him of all people get by me. I wanted to prove myself."'

Norway's female boardroom pioneer rejects quotas for women

Mastodon · 28 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women are still awaiting a gender revolution in Britain's boardrooms but Norway's corporate culture has undergone a radical change that has transformed the career of one woman in particular.

At one point Mai-Lill Ibsen held more than 185 Norwegian boardroom seats and was undisputed queen of the so called "golden skirts" – experienced executive women who found themselves in demand when Norway in 2006 passed a law requiring 40% of boardroom seats to go to women (or men in the rare case of a female-dominated directors' suite).

...

Nonetheless, Ibsen opposes the quota system as a way to get women into the highest echelons of business. "I've never seen the glass ceiling," she says, raising her arms against an imaginary barrier. "I'm against quotas. They are discriminatory in a way. I feel we [women] are so strong we don't need that.'

Public university plans event to help female students achieve orgasms

Matt · 29 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Can't make this stuff up. Wonder when they'll hold an event discussing ways to get guys off? All at taxpayer expense, no less! Excerpt:

'The University of Minnesota - Twin Cities (UMTC) is set to hold an event this spring designed to help its female undergraduate students achieve more and greater orgasms.

A promotional poster for the event says it is all about "sexuality and pleasure."
The university's official online description of the event entitled, "The Female Orgasm," describes it as open to both male and female students.

"Orgasm aficionados and beginners of all genders are welcome to come learn about everything from multiple orgasms to that mysterious G-spot," reads the description posted on the school's official events calendar.'

SAVE: Tell Your Senators: Say NO to S. 47 and YES to Real VAWA Reform

Matt · 29 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Today we have an urgent request.

As we told you last week, S. 47, a Violence Against Women Act reauthorization bill has been introduced in the Senate. Unfortunately, S. 47 is very similar to last year's VAWA and ignores well-documented problems.

You'd think that with all of the controversy surrounding VAWA, the Senate would afford time for discussion and the possible addition of amendments. But this may not be the case! Word is that it may skip the Judicial Committee and go straight to the floor for a vote!

We believe that these VAWA Reform Principals are vital and urgently needed to create a comprehensive and effective VAWA: http://www.saveservices.org/pvra/vawa-reform-principles/

Our urgent request: Please call your Senators RIGHT NOW. Tell them, "Say NO to S. 47 and YES to Real VAWA Reform!"

Find your senators here: http://www.senate.gov/general/contact_information/senators_cfm.cfm

Let's show them what we're made of. Use those phones!

Thanks!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

'Women better than men at understanding technical jargon'

Mastodon · 29 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The small in-depth neurological study of 16 subjects, commissioned by the Geek Squad, could eradicate once and for all the popular misapprehension that men are more ‘geeky' than women and have a natural affinity with technology. Its results show that women are naturally more comfortable than men with high-tech terminology.

When confronted with tech jargon, the stress and frustration levels of the study's male participants increased considerably. Their negative reactions to terms such as 'OS' and 'vlogging' were 138% higher than those of their female counterparts.'

VAWA Needs a Serious Overhaul

Mastodon · 29 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For starters, the programs operated under VAWA have never undergone scientifically rigorous evaluations to ensure that they are achieving their intended results.

Furthermore, because VAWA was initially established on the premise that violence is caused by institutionalized sexism and patriarchal beliefs, the law has allocated financial and legal resources primarily to female victims, while ignoring the complex nature of violence and its causes. Consequently, very little of VAWA's funds are used to address proven causes of violence, such as substance abuse, emotional and psychological disorders and marital instability. The National Research Council reported that many of VAWA's programs are "driven by ideology and stake holder interests rather than by plausible theories and scientific evidence of fact."'

Judge postpones Texas woman's execution

el cid · 29 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I found the stats in the story to be interesting:

'Her execution would have been the first since a Virginia inmate, Teresa Lewis, became the 12th woman put to death since the U.S. Supreme Court in 1976 allowed capital punishment to resume. In that same time, 1,309 men have been executed.

McCarthy also would have been the first woman executed in Texas in more than eight years and the fourth overall in the state, which executes the most people in the nation — 492 prisoners since capital punishment resumed 30 years ago.

Federal Bureau of Justice Statistics compiled from 1980 through 2008 show women make up about 10 percent of homicide offenders nationwide. According to the NAACP Legal Defense Fund, 3,146 people were on the nation's death rows as of last Oct. 1, and only 63 — 2 percent — were women.'

F&F: Fathers Going Their Own Way in Child Care

el cid · 29 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"At-home dads aren't trying to be perfect moms, says a recent study in the Journal of Consumer Research. Instead, they take pride in letting their children take more risks on the playground, compared with their spouses. They tend to jettison daily routines in favor of spontaneous adventures with the kids. And many use technology or DIY skills to squeeze household budgets, or find shortcuts through projects and chores, says the study, based on interviews, observation of father-child outings and an analysis of thousands of pages of at-home dads' blogs and online commentary."'

F&F: 10 Myths About Shared Parenting Debunked

el cid · 29 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The excellent Dr. Linda Nielsen has an article in the most recent edition of The Nebraska Lawyer, the house organ for that state's Bar Association (The Nebraska Lawyer, January/February, 2013). Put simply, Nielsen's article should be read by every family law judge and every state legislator in the nation. It addresses and lays to rest the most common claims made by those who seek to eliminate or marginalize fathers in the lives of their children post-divorce.

Entitled "Parenting Time and Shared Residential Custody: Ten Common Myths," Nielsen's article essentially says that the state of authoritative social science demands shared parenting. In addition to destroying the various myths, Nielsen cites readers to some of the social science supporting children's need for shared parenting.'

"A man's top 5 reasons to grow up and get married"

Mastodon · 29 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'4. You won't be such a pathetic sloth – Married people are more productive. Married men in particular, have higher employment rates, work longer hours and receive better wages. It's time to stop wading through puddles of your own filth as you reach for the hotpockets and have a dame whip you into shape. You're welcome.'

UK: The gender gap at universities: where are all the men?

Mastodon · 29 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you're a male student on campus at Liverpool Hope, Bath Spa or Cumbria University, you may be feeling a little outnumbered. These are some of the 20 institutions where there are twice as many female fulltime undergraduates as there are male, according to Higher Education Statistics Authority (Hesa) data.

In 2010-11, there were more female (55%) than male fulltime undergraduates (45%) enrolled at university – a trend which shows no sign of shrinking. The latest statistics released by the University and Colleges Admissions Service (Ucas) revealed a 22,000 drop in the number of male students enrolling at university. This meant that last autumn women were a third more likely to start a degree than their male counterparts, despite the fact that there are actually more young men than women in the UK.'

Canada: Why Are Boys Doing Worse Than Girls?

Mastodon · 29 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are lots of theories out there about why boys suddenly started doing worse than girls in school -- things like boys' active natures, television, lack of male role models, and so forth -- but none of them fully explains the gender gap, since these theories most precede boys' troubles.

However, there was one major change that took place at the exact same time that boys' problems started.

During the 70s, most Canadian public schools began using a new type of approach called child-centred learning. Unfortunately for the boys, child-centred learning works a lot better for girls than it does for boys.

In schools that use child-centred learning, the boys tend to struggle with learning -- especially when it comes to reading. For example, girls do 10-15 percentage points better than boys on Ontario's provincial reading and writing tests (girls also do a few percentage points better in math.)'

Female teacher who 'tried to flee to Mexico with 15-year-old lover' ordered to hand in her passport

Mastodon · 29 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A teacher facing trial for having sex with a 15-year-old student is feared to have been planning to elope with him to Mexico.

Kathryn Murray, 29, was found with the teenager at her father's home despite a court order banning any contact.

The 29-year-old was ordered to surrender her passport when she appeared before a judge in Houston, Texas on Saturday.

Prosecutors fear she was on the verge of leaving the U.S. to start a new life in Mexico with the teenager.

Murray is due to go on trial later this year on four under-age sex charges and faces up to 20 years in jail.

She is accused of having sex with the boy at his home, in her classroom and a hotel. The middle school teacher was found with the boy, now aged 16, at the home she shares with her father in Houston.'

'Here’s the answer — don’t give men guns'

Mastodon · 29 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When we look at the acts of almost unspeakable gun violence making news and breaking hearts, it doesn’t take Rachel Maddow or Wayne LaPierre to target the fact that men are responsible. We don’t need to hit the archives for historical documentation. What we need to do is this: We need to stop selling guns to men.

Women will be able to buy and own guns but not be permitted to share them with our male counterparts.

Why? Because it’s clear that men don’t know how to handle weapons. Remember, even Dick Cheney shot his lawyer — by mistake. His wife, Lynne Cheney, might have killed a lot of artists’ hopes as head of the National Endowment for the Arts, but she never shot any real artists. Not that I know of.
...

Many gun-rights advocates cite a line attributed to George Washington — “They should have sufficient arms and ammunition to maintain a status of independence from any who might attempt to abuse them” — which would fit right in with the idea that women, in most danger of abuse, should be the ones in line for guns and ammo; next are kids, since child abuse is also widespread. Obviously the elderly and physically disabled should all be armed, and — to be fair — so should those in iffy neighborhoods. My friend Rose said the NRA will be issuing a gun to each infant born, as some groups do with books to promote literacy.'

It Matters to the Dead Men's Families

Mastodon · 29 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hillary the radical feminist whose theism dictated that men were only needed for sperm donations not only became involved with a man who represented everything feminists condemned, but she became the very thing feminists accuse stay-at-home mothers and conservative women of being, i.e., dependent on men for their advancement.
...
Hillary saying her job is to see that it doesn't happen again is specious and purposefully misleading. You cannot ensure something doesn't happen again without knowing what caused it the first time. Hillary doesn't want to address the causal factors of why Stevens, Smith, Doherty and Woods were murdered – because to do so would mean Obama would have to answer the question of why he permitted them to be murdered as he reportedly watched the live feed of their murders from drones recording the attack.'

Many Divorcees Are Sentenced To A Lifetime Of Alimony Payments

Matt · 30 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Sympathetically-written as it is, notice the tack it takes: Permanent alimony is bad because it negatively affects "the second wife". No mention of the patent unfairness/absurdity of permanent alimony in today's day and age. Excerpt:

'The permanent alimony trap can be especially maddening for someone like Jane Carter, 43, who is using a pseudonym so she can more freely discuss her husband's case, which will soon be hashed out in court. Her husband separated from his first wife in 2003 and was ordered by the courts to pay his ex-spouse $90,000 a year (not including child support).
...
Unless Carter wins the court's favor, there's seemingly no end in sight. In fact, she says her husband's ex-wife is now after her money. "I have a small nest egg for my 11-year-old son, and her lawyer is trying to find out how much I have for that nest egg because we're in the midst of a modification proceeding," says Carter.
...

Many states have abandoned the practice of permanent alimony—or at least reformed the law—but it's still going strong in states such as New Jersey, Oregon, Vermont, Connecticut, North Carolina, West Virginia, and Florida. Permanent alimony was created in the days when women didn't go to college and rarely had careers, instead tending to the kids and household. Then it was sorely needed. Now, opponents argue, those reasons for its being are long past.'

Military dad reunited with daughter put up for adoption without his consent

Matt · 30 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A South Carolina soldier has been reunited with his 22-month-old daughter after she was given up for adoption without his knowledge or consent when she was born.

Sgt. Terry Achane took tiny Teleah home after leaving a Provo, Utah, courtroom Friday where a judge gave him custody.

“I got my daughter back,” said 31-year-old Achane, according to The Salt Lake Tribune. “I’m very happy. It’s 22 months too long, but the wait was worth it.”'

Brazil: Wife Used Poison Vagina in Bid to Kill Husband

Mastodon · 30 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman filled up her vagina with poison in a bid to kill her husband, it is claimed.

She then invited him to perform a sex act on her during which he would ingest the deadly substance.

But in a move which probably speaks clearly of the start of their marriage, he refused to do so and was also suspicious of her motives.

...

The wife could yet face charges by police in Sao Jose, Brazil, over the incident.

Local Police officer Walter Colacino Júnior said: "[It is] an investigation of attempted murder."'

Huggies Pro-Dad Commercial

charlie · 30 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This ad shows dads doing what regular dads do with their kids, without attempting to make them look like idiots.

More housework, less sex for married men: study

Matt · 30 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Notice the article focuses on how much sex men are getting, as opposed to women-- as if how much of it they were getting wasn't as important, or correlated to the men-running-the-vacuum-cleaner issue the "study" is supposedly about. But in any case, I saw this and laughed. Let's assume the "study" has reached a valid conclusion. The article goes on to suggest that despite its finding, men should continue to do more traditionally female-role housework to make their wives happier. Isn't that nice. Nice. Reminds me of that book I mentioned in a previous post, "No More Mr. Nice Guy". "Nice guys" don't live happy lives. Getting "less sex" is just one of the ways they don't live happy lives. Excerpt:

'The road to hell is paved with good intentions, as they say: the more housework married men do, the less sex they have, according to a new study published Wednesday.

Husbands who spend more time doing traditionally female chores -- such as cooking, cleaning, and shopping -- reported having less sex than those who do more masculine tasks, said the study in the American Sociological Review.

...

"Couples in which men participate more in housework typically done by women report having sex less frequently. Similarly, couples in which men participate more in traditionally masculine tasks -- such as yard work, paying bills, and auto maintenance -- report higher sexual frequency."

His study, "Egalitarianism, Housework, and Sexual Frequency in Marriage," looks at straight married couples in the United States, and was based on data from the National Survey of Families and Households.'

NYPD Cop's Widow Says Husband Driven to Suicide by Boss' Sexual Advances

Mastodon · 30 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'JACKSON HEIGHTS — A married NYPD cop killed himself last year because his frisky female supervisor repeatedly pressured him to have sex or face a bad work schedule, a new lawsuit charges.

The widow of veteran officer Matthew Schindler is suing the police department and Sgt. Christine Hertzel, claiming his Feb. 13, 2012, suicide was brought on by sexual harassment at his job at the 115th Precinct.

The lawsuit, filed Jan. 22 in Queens Supreme Court, alleges a despondent Schindler, 39, shot himself with his service handgun on the way from work to his Long Island home after telling Hertzel to keep her hands off him.

It adds that he told Hertzel her unrelenting advances had left him depressed, but she refused to let up.'

"Super Bowl Sunday can mean spike in domestic disturbances"

Mastodon · 30 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'LA CROSSE, Wisconsin (WXOW)-- Superbowl Sunday is this weekend, and for the vast majority of people it's simply good entertainment and some fun often shared with friends.

The focus is different, however, for a local domestic violence shelter. They say they see an increase in domestic disturbances.

"We see more crisis line calls, somewhat, not a huge amount," said Ann Kappauf, the executive director of New Horizons Shelter. "Often times it's because there's the drinking involved. And although drinking does not cause a person to be abusive, it's almost like that liquid courage.'

See: Domestic violence myths help no one

Outrage over Boyfriend Trainer iPhone game

MikeJH · 31 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Outraged smartphone users have criticised a game for encouraging young women to behave violently to their partners.

The 'Boyfriend Trainer' app has the users play the 'girlfriend' and asks them to advance through the game by attacking the 'boyfriend' when he misbehaves.

'Crack that whip and teach your guy a thing or two about being the Perfect Boyfriend!' it says. 'When scolding doesn't work, just zap him, whack him and train him to be your ideal man!'"

SAVE: Tell Your Representative: Say NO to H.R. 11 and YES to Real VAWA Reform

Matt · 31 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The Violence Against Women Act reauthorization bills introduced recently in the House and Senate ignore well-documented problems.

These VAWA Reform Principals are vital to the creation of an effective and comprehensive domestic violence bill: http://www.saveservices.org/pvra/vawa-reform-principles

Today we'd like you to call your Representative. Tell them, "Say NO to H.R. 11 and YES to Real VAWA Reform!"

Find your Representative by zip code here:

http://www.house.gov/

Please keep using those phones! Thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Mikulski's 'Paycheck Fairness Act' Would Allow Employees to Discuss Salaries

Mastodon · 31 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LANHAM, Md. (CBSDC)- A 'Paycheck Fairness Act' introduced in Congress last week would require employers to show pay disparity is related to job-performance and prohibit employer retaliation for sharing salary information with coworkers.

Senator Barbara A. Mikulski and Congresswoman Rosa DeLauro, both Democrats, said their legislation is aimed at closing the pay gap between men and women and would also address loopholes in the 1963 Equal Pay Act.

Currently, the law allows employers to sue or otherwise punish employees for sharing their salary information and women still make just 77 cents on their male counterpart's dollar, according to Sen. Mikulski's office.'

How Menino Plans to Address the Wage Gap

Mastodon · 31 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The mayor's plan is three pronged. He's creating a Women's Workforce Council (the first of its kind in the country, says Lusk), one that will represent the core industries in the city and that will make recommendations on policy and workplace proposals to help women in the workforce. He's helping with access to child care, offering $1 million in low interest loans to help "family-based early education providers invest in safe, quality child care environments." And he's creating a program for women business owners. "It will deal with the unique hurdles women business owners face, serving to better connect them to each other and to the city," says Lusk. "It's about understanding what their needs are."

For Menino, it's the subject of equity is "very personal issue," says Lusk. "As a grandfather, he wants to make sure he's providing the best working environment for his granddaughters." Cheers to that.'

Editorial: Women in combat creates case to abolish the draft

Mastodon · 31 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But while this news has been rightly exalted as further evidence of the slow, steady push toward equality for women in American society, we must now consider that women may now be compelled against their will – as well as with it – to serve and fight in the armed forces should the draft be instituted again in response to some future military conflict. Given the recent frequency of and future prospects for foreign embroilment's, the possibility that America's standing army may be insufficient to meet its needs is a real one, and the extra burden ought to be shared equally – or not at all. That is why, since fairness now demands that men and women both register for the draft if they are to carry out equal military roles, now is an opportune time to reconsider the necessity of having a draft at all. If the military can be made appealing enough as a career option for people of all identities and backgrounds, the draft would not be necessary. Much remains to be done – sexual harassment, suicide and mental health remain serious stumbling blocks for the military – but we can be encouraged that the work of making the military more inviting and appealing is moving well ahead.'

The Problem With Male Feminists

Mastodon · 31 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I was once at a party, in college, where upon hearing someone identify themselves as a male feminist, a woman replied “There are no Quislings in the gender wars!”

The moral of this story is that people have a lot of feelings when they are in liberal arts school. And that Quisling is a great term, and one which should really be used more often. But also, that is, perhaps, not quite entirely fair. At least, it’s not fair if you think that men and women are really just people trying to work together, and not actively trying to destroy one another. I like to think of the relationship between men and women as not quite comparable to the one between Mothra and Godzilla.

...

When male feminists start lecturing me about how the world is not set up in women’s favor, they often do so with a sad puppy dog look on their faces. And it always makes me think two things. The first is “Stop talking about this with sad puppy dog eyes. The fact that women, say, are looked down on in many professions is a fact, but it is not terribly problematic for you. You have a penis. Your puppy dog face is trying to trick me into thinking that these are also your problems, but they are not. I am not tricked because I recognize that you have a penis. Our hearts do not beat as one on this.”'

Divorced parents should share custody 50/50

Mastodon · 31 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Firstly, dads who perhaps don't have access to their children or who are spending a fortune in the courts trying to win access.

Secondly, mums, who wish dads were around, who say their ex-partners are shirking responsibilities and want nothing to do with their children.

Whichever case it is, the results are always heartbreaking. In both cases it's the children who are missing out. Understandably, this is an issue that causes anger, frustration and hurt.

Clearly there are a lot of people out there who are struggling to get decent contact with their kids. In my lifetime things have changed. When I was growing up in the 1970s, the thought of parents taking an equal share of childcare seemed absurd.'

Time to replace chivalry with respect for all

Mastodon · 31 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chivalry isn't dead quite yet. And frankly, the fast track to disappearing is better for everyone, men and women alike.

...

The problem lies in the idea that women are special: the age-old concept that we are "the fairer sex." Some may suggest that the 21st century needs more gentlemen and that today's culture does not respect women, but today women are more equal to men than ever before in history.

The Federal Department of Education reported statistics in a 2006 New York Times article by Tamar Lewin showing that men are less likely than women to earn a bachelor's degree regardless of their socioeconomic status. According to U.S. Department of Labor statistics, women were the majority of workers in the financial industry, education and health services, as of 2010. In 2009, 29 percent of married women earned more than their husbands, compared with 18 percent in 1987. The ways of the world are changing.

On a 21st century date, men are expected to pay for dinner and watch their language in a woman's presence. Today, most people expect this routine and consider it normal; it is something that men do to be polite. But if two men go out for a friendly dinner together, should one offer to pay for both dinners to be polite? In the past, men did not pay for women out of politeness. Men paid for dinner because they were the only ones with money in the relationship. But that is not always the case in today's dating world.'

Australia: Eating disorders 'nearly as bad for men'

Mastodon · 31 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The impact of eating disorders on men's health has been underestimated, say researchers.

Deborah Mitchison at the University of Western Sydney and colleagues report their findings online ahead of print in the International Journal of Eating Disorders.

"Researchers have thought eating disorders are the domain of women so a lot of the research has been biased towards women and not really recruited men," says Mitchison, a PhD candidate in the School of Medicine.
...
Overall, 28 per cent of women were affected by factors related to eating disorders whereas 18.5 per cent of men were affected.'

Wear Red campaign targets better women's heart health

Mastodon · 31 January 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The American Heart Association wants everyone to see red Friday, but not because of anger.

Instead, the organization is encouraging people to wear red – whether it's clothing, jewelry or makeup – to support its 10th annual National Wear Red campaign, which is designed to improve women's heart health and to save lives.

"The message is what is important for people to hear. The message and research are what saves lives," said Michelle Alloway, division director for the American Heart Association Great Rivers Affiliate.

Since the campaign began, the association has accomplished much. Twenty percent fewer women are dying from heart disease. Twenty-three percent more women are aware that it's their No. 1 health threat. Gender specific results have been published to distinguish gender differences in symptoms and responses to medications as well as women-specific guidelines for prevention and treatment. The campaign also addresses legislation to help women fight the disease.'

See: Number of Heart Disease Deaths per 100,000 Population by Gender, 2009

U.S. Department of State: TechWomen Gather in Jordan To Collaborate, Code, and Connect

Minuteman · 1 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Fusing technology with efforts to empower women and girls, the U.S. Department of State announced today that participants of TechWomen will meet in Jordan from February 1-10 to collaborate and connect through workshops and visits with local organizations. An innovative public-private partnership, TechWomen pairs emerging women in technology from the Middle East and North Africa with American women mentors from the greater Silicon Valley area.

TechWomen, which was launched by Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton in 2011, has brought almost 80 women from the Middle East and North Africa and the United States together for month-long mentorships. The program builds on Secretary Clinton's vision of "smart power" -- embracing the full range of diplomatic tools, in this case technology, to empower women and girls and foster greater understanding worldwide. This year, TechWomen will include emerging women in the tech sector from Sub-Saharan African countries.

In addition to engaging local partners, the TechWomen delegation will also meet with members of the first class of TechGirls, which Secretary Clinton launched in 2012, to engage girls ages 15-17 from the Middle East and North Africa who have displayed strong interest in the technology sector. '

UK: Woman molests boys, judge lets her go because she was drunk (and female)

Mastodon · 1 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Yesterday, MailOnline reported on the case of Amanda Wheeler - a 31 year-old from Cheltenham who was found guilty of sexually assaulting several young boys.

The mother-of-three got drunk at a party before kissing and groping a 12-year-old on a bench in November 2011.

She then performed a lap-dance and straddled a group of male children, before biting a 13-year-old boy on his neck and coercing him to perform a sex act on her.

She denied the charges, but was found guilty during a recent trial and faced several years in prison.

However, in the latest blow for British justice and men's rights, she walked free from Birmingham Crown Court with only a suspended prison term and a smirk on her face.

Why? Surely it can't be...Because she's a woman.'

'Every adult’s responsibility': Campaign calls for circumcision regulation following tragic Oldham baby death

Mastodon · 1 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Following the death of a baby in Oldham after a botched circumcision, an e-petition has sparked a controversial debate into the risks associated with the procedure.

Currently with 45 signatures, the petition is calls on the government to introduce the legal regulation of the circumcision of male babies and children.

The petition is not unique, with several other groups and campaigns developing against the practice in recent years.

One such drive was started by Glen Poole who runs Helping Men, a consultancy aiming to help tackle some of the inequalities men experience in health, education and the criminal justice system.'

'The Incredible Shrinking Man'

Mastodon · 1 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This past summer I visited a group of teenage boys at a summer camp and gave them some sobering news: If you follow the trend in society, you're going to end up being sloths and underachievers. And women are going to leave you in their vapor trails.

It's true, and it's unmistakable: Female is the new male.

Girls dominate boys in education, from elementary through graduate school. Women are taking over the workforce. Hundreds of formerly male-dominated careers are becoming feminized. More and more wives outearn their husbands. Fathers are fading away inside their own families, and rising illegitimate births and single-parenthood are pushing them out of the child-rearing picture altogether.

Boys and men are passively watching it happen. Many of them, rather than working to stay ahead of or even keep up with women, are responding by waging something of a sit-down strike. They're playing video games more than 2½ times as much as girls. They're living with their parents at double the rate of their female peers. They're dropping out of the labor pool in record numbers.

The result is effectively a reversal of a male-female dynamic that has existed for virtually all of human history.

Feminists may celebrate, but more and more people are recognizing that this trend has come with some steep costs we're only starting to see. Even women are frustrated with today's breed of spineless, ambitionless manboys. There is a genuine problem here.'

Tawana Brawley served with court order to pay man she accused of rape in 1987

Matt · 1 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Infamous hoaxster Tawana Brawley — whose outrageous rape lie 25 years ago inflamed racial tensions nationwide — yesterday was finally slapped with a court order to settle a hefty defamation case against her.

“For at least 25 years, she has been living a major lie,” said former Dutchess County prosecutor Steven Pagones, who was falsely accused of raping Brawley in 1987 and finally tracked her down, thanks to The Post.

“To me, this has always been about responsibility and accountability,” added the former ADA, who won the $190,000 defamation lawsuit against Brawley, 40, now a nurse in Virginia, more than a decade ago.'

F&F: Shared Parenting Legislation Submitted in Nebraska

Matt · 1 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's a widespread belief that our family law system is biased and unfair to fathers. Almost everyone has heard at least one story about a good, involved father who, through no fault of his own, now sees his children only every-other-weekend — just two days every two weeks. Are these stories typical or outliers?

Voices for Children reports there were 3,465 Nebraska divorces involving children during 2010. The mother received custody in 2,156 cases (62.2%), the father received custody in 348 (10.0%) and joint custody was ordered in 876 (25.3%).

Other studies also suggest there is a strong pro-mother bias in family court, especially among older judges. According to a survey of judges in Alabama, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Tennessee, 36% of younger judges and 71% of older judges agreed that "mothers are the preferred custodian when children are under the age of 6," while none of the younger judges and only 1% of the older judges agreed that fathers are the preferred custodian. Another study found that 44% of judges in Maryland, Missouri, Texas, and Washington agreed that custody awards are made "based on the assumption that young children belong with their mothers," and only 33% of judges believed that courts give fair consideration to fathers.'

U.S. Department of State: Women's Entrepreneurship in the Americas (WEAmericas) Small Grants Launch

Minuteman · 2 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues Melanne Verveer, Assistant Secretary for Western Hemisphere Affairs Roberta Jacobson, and Executive Vice President of Corporate Affairs for Walmart Leslie Dach will recognize the final awardees for $1.5 million in grants through the Women's Entrepreneurship in the Americas (WEAmericas) initiative during a ceremony on February 4, 2013, from 4:00-5:00 p.m. in the George C. Marshall Conference Center at the Department of State.

Following remarks, Ambassador Verveer will moderate an interactive panel discussion with three grantees and a Walmart representative on how key stakeholders can collaborate and leverage the grants, resources, and regional initiatives to further support the development of sustainable entrepreneurial ecosystems for women entrepreneurs in Latin America and the Caribbean.'

Military Suicides: One U.S. Veteran Dies Every 65 Minutes

Matt · 2 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Feb 1 (Reuters) - The most extensive study yet by the U.S. government on suicide among military veterans shows more veterans are killing themselves than previously thought, with 22 deaths a day - or one every 65 minutes, on average.

The study released on Friday by the Department of Veterans Affairs covered suicides from 1999 to 2010 and compared with a previous, less precise VA estimate that there were roughly 18 veteran deaths a day in the United States.

More than 69 percent of veteran suicides were among individuals aged 50 years or older, the VA reported.'

With women in mind, military takes revised look at fitness test

Mastodon · 2 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If anyone thought the military's decision to allow women into combat units would lead to exceptions for women when it came to fitness and physical strength, this is one service's “gender neutral” answer — or at least part of the answer.

...

The Pentagon says it will not lower standards for women but is nonetheless reviewing the requirements for hundreds of what are called military occupational specialties to see if they actually match up with the demands of each job.

Some combat jobs that might open to women may require them to meet only specific requirements rather than a wide range of fitness standards.

...

But even for the pull-ups, the Marines are still making some exceptions. To get a perfect grade, women will have to do only eight, compared with the 20 required for men.'

Huffington Post: Challenging Sexism and Violence in Super Bowl Commercials

mens_issues · 2 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Another one sided article about purported "sexism" (only against women, of course) in Super Bowl commercials. Typical feminist terms such as "objectify" are used once again. This nonsense is so tiresome. It's apparently a new topic, so here's a chance for MRA's to comment on it and present the other side of the story - the misandry against men common in TV ads. Excerpt:

'This Sunday, in cities and towns across the U.S., over 100 million people will gather in front of their TVs with friends and family to watch the Super Bowl. But the 49ers and Ravens aren't the only ones facing off that night. Advertisers will do anything to make sure their commercials are the most talked about on Monday morning, which means sex, violence, and a general disregard for the millions of kids watching with their families.

Despite the fact that nearly 50 percent of the viewers of the game are women, and 86 percent of the purchasing power in the U.S. is in the pockets of women, advertisers continue to objectify, hypersexualize, and trivialize many of the women who appear in Super Bowl commercials.'

"The Boys at the Back"

Matt · 3 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys score as well as or better than girls on most standardized tests, yet they are far less likely to get good grades, take advanced classes or attend college. Why? A study coming out this week in The Journal of Human Resources gives an important answer. Teachers of classes as early as kindergarten factor good behavior into grades — and girls, as a rule, comport themselves far better than boys.
...
No previous study, to my knowledge, has demonstrated that the well-known gender gap in school grades begins so early and is almost entirely attributable to differences in behavior. The researchers found that teachers rated boys as less proficient even when the boys did just as well as the girls on tests of reading, math and science. (The teachers did not know the test scores in advance.) If the teachers had not accounted for classroom behavior, the boys' grades, like the girls', would have matched their test scores.
...
As one critic told me recently, the classroom is no more rigged against boys than workplaces are rigged against lazy and unfocused workers. But unproductive workers are adults — not 5-year-olds. If boys are restless and unfocused, why not look for ways to help them do better? As a nation, can we afford not to?

A few decades ago, when we realized that girls languished behind boys in math and science, we mounted a concerted effort to give them more support, with significant success. Shouldn't we do the same for boys?'

Has Title IX Killed DePaul Men's Basketball?

Mastodon · 3 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Before you accuse me of being a sexist pig, might I remind you that I have a wife and a daughter. And on the surface, Title IX is a good law. It allows women access to sports (as well as other areas). But when it is clearly slanted due to an agenda, it defeats the purpose of the legislation. Look no further than current DePaul Blue Demons' athletic director Jean Lenti-Ponsetto. She clearly abuses DePaul's mens basketball team while giving the girls' teams at the school everything they want and need.
...
While the DePaul men's basketball team plays in an outdated Allstate Arena, the girls basketball team was built a new on-campus arena. The softball team was built a new stadium and the soccer teams (and this does apply to the men's team as well) has a new field. But I promise you that the field was built primarily for the girls. Practice times and access to facilities are actually slanted towards women's athletics.

So in essence, DePaul is actually committing reverse-discrimination. The men's basketball program is being discriminated against due to gender. While anyone with half-a-brain would realize that a strong and relevant men's basketball team will fund everything else DePaul wants to do athletically, DePaul's administration thinks Lenti-Ponsetto is the greatest thing since sliced bread. So much so that they recently extended her contract. When I've reached out to the school's president, he's pointed to the improvements of some of the lesser-revenue sports. Mrs. Lenti-Ponsetto has not responded to my correspondence (despite me being a men's season-ticket holder and booster). Throughout the athletic department, she's surrounded herself with her old cronies and yes people that reinforce how great of a job she's doing. And apparently it's working. No one will tell her that her agenda has ruined men's basketball.'

Snooki's Comments About Circumcision Are Way Out of Line

Mastodon · 3 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Well, now we know more than we ever wanted to about Snooki's son's penis. In a word, baby Lorenzo's man parts are "awesome." According to his mom, anyway.

Oh Snooki, you know you're not supposed to talk about your son's circumcision, right? Hold up! Yes, we moms can debate the ol' foreskin snip 'til the cows come home.

When it's hypothetical, we aren't embarrassing our kids. We're caring moms who want to debate real issues of pain and suffering and possible effects foreskin removal can have on whether or not they'll contract certain diseases.'

Ed.: Wikipedia on Snooki.

Canada: Oprah faces protest for using wrinkle cream made with foreskin

Mastodon · 3 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Winfrey, who rose from poverty to own her own television network, will make her first appearance in Vancouver on Thursday before a sold-out crowd at Rogers Arena, with fans paying up to $350 a ticket for a chance to see the TV mega-host live.

But as the crowds pack into the stadium, Glen Callender, founder of the Canadian Foreskin Awareness Project, will be outside with his supporters protesting Winfrey's support of SkinMedica.

Callender says it’s hypocritical of Winfrey to speak out against female genital mutilation, while at the same time saying it’s all right to rub on a face cream made from foreskins from circumcised infant males.'

“Imagine how Oprah would respond if a skin cream for men went on the market that was made from parts of the genitalia of little girls,” Callender said. “That would be an outrage and rightly so.”
...
Callender describes the Foreskin Awareness Project as Canada's “feistiest pro-foreskin advocacy group” with the goal of “foreskin education and appreciation.”

“We’re not an anti-circumcision group,” he said. “What we are against is circumcision being forced on people without their consent.”'

Men should stand on the bus - for women, of course

GaryB · 4 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This opinion piece is more of the same, really - a man whining that he feels guilty if he doesn't stand and offer his place to a woman on the bus. Excerpt:

'A gaggle of people are standing near the middle doors, and there are others standing in the passage. From my vantage, the closest person to me is a woman of about 30 to 35, in a smart work suit and wearing heels. She is texting someone.

I figure the shoes aren't too comfortable and wonder whether I should offer her my seat.

The same thought has apparently not occurred to my fellow males. They are lost in their laptops, phones and suchlike.

If this woman was nearer, I'd offer her my spot, but she is five rows away and I feel absurd beckoning her to my spot.'

Some interesting comments though - this one, I loved:

"...As a 26 year old i-banker it infuriates me no end when the girls get to go home by 10pm and the guys have to stay back to finish deals - and the kicker is - the females still get promoted quicker (so the bank can get on some b/s female preferable employment index) and cite a greater proportion of females in management for their annual reporting purposes.

females have it soooooooo much easier in the workplace. I am only happy to give up my seat if we all acknowledge that we ARE in fact, not equals (if we are equals - then there is no need to give up the seat)"

SAVE: Don't Delay, Call Your Senators Today

Matt · 5 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The Senate vote on VAWA should be very soon.

The Senate is expected to vote on S. 47, a Violence Against Women Act reauthorization bill this week. Unfortunately, S. 47 ignores well-documented problems. VAWA Reform Principals are urgently needed to create a comprehensive and effective VAWA.

DO NOT DELAY!

Please call your Senators TODAY.

Tell them, "Say NO to S. 47 and YES to Real VAWA Reform!"

Call 202-224-3121 or find your senators here.

Keep calling!

Thanks!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

SAVE: Leading Scientists and Organizations Urge Reforming VAWA

Matt · 5 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / February 5, 2013 – A group of scientists, victim advocates, and 15 leading organizations have endorsed a series of reforms to the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), a law that is currently up for reauthorization in Congress. The endorsers include many of the acclaimed scientists who have elucidated the causes and dynamics of intimate partner violence.

The VAWA Reform Principles are endorsed by the Independent Women's Forum, National Coalition for Men, Washington Civil Rights Council, 60 Plus Association, Able Americans, and many others. The endorsing organizations collectively represent the interests of a majority of the American public.

The Reform Principles address a range of documented deficiencies with the nearly 20-year-old federal law, including the need for greater emphasis on programs to address substance abuse, marital instability, and emotional disorders. The principles suggest a greater emphasis on partner reconciliation when it is safe to do so.'

Malaysia: Men 'muscle' in on women-only parking bays

Mastodon · 5 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PETALING JAYA - Parking bays at shopping malls demarcated for female drivers are being used by inconsiderate male drivers and shoppers.

Despite the "For Ladies Only" sign prominently displayed and the pillars painted in bright pink, the men are blatantly parking their vehicles at these bays, which are reserved for lone female drivers or women who are accompanied by their young ones.

Women with male companions cannot park at these bays.

A 15-minute survey by Sunday Star at one mall found that 14 of 20 cars entering the parking area had male drivers or men accompanying women drivers.

When security guards advised them to park elsewhere, the standard replies were: "It is only for a little while", "It is rarely used during office hours", and "I'm in a hurry, did not see the signboard".'

UK: 'Angry young men' lack optimism

Mastodon · 5 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A study of youth attitudes has raised concerns about young men in the "squeezed middle" who are deeply pessimistic about their future chances.

Among these young men - from families of skilled or semi-skilled workers - more than two-thirds never expect to own their own home, says a survey.

These disgruntled young men were more negative than their counterparts from poorer backgrounds.

"These people feel trapped," says Durham University's Tony Chapman.
...
Even at this early stage in their working lives, almost a quarter of these young men expect never to have a fulfilling job - a much more negative outlook than their female counterparts.

Almost a third of these young men say they "feel unhappy" when they think about their future - much more than women.

Prof Chapman describes these youngsters as coming from "respectable" families with "strong aspirations" - but now facing increasingly insecure job prospects.'

"Ten Things to End Rape Culture"

Mastodon · 5 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rape culture exists because we don't believe it does. From tacit acceptance of misogyny in everything from casual conversations with our peers to the media we consume, we accept the degradation of women and posit uncontrollable hyper-sexuality of men as the norm. But rape is endemic to our culture because there's no widely accepted cultural definition of what it actually is. As Nation contributor and co-editor of the anthology Yes Means Yes Jessica Valenti explains, “Rape is a standard result of a culture mired in misogyny, but for whatever reason—denial, self-preservation, sexism—Americans bend over backwards to make excuses for male violence.” But recent headline-grabbing instances of sexual assault, from Steubenville, Ohio, to Delhi, India, are prodding Americans to become self-aware about the role we play in propagating a culture that not only allows but justifies sexual violence against women. Activists Eesha Pandit, Jaclyn Friedman, filmmaker Nuala Cabral and The Nation’s Valenti believe that we can end rape culture. They’ve suggested the following "Ten Things" to end our collective tolerance for violence against women and create an environment that empowers both men and women to change the status quo.'

UK: Does 'Call The Midwife' Fail The Sexism Test... For Men?

Mastodon · 5 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Call the Midwife is perfect Sunday evening telly fare - with its nostalgic look at poverty-stricken East London, the hardships and deprivations of the 1950s soothed by the tender administrations of the clear-skinned midwives and their elders, stroking the cheeks of young to old, smiling with good-humoured compassion and easing the passage of world entry while they're about it.

But, this dewey tableau has been pilloried this season around for giving men a hard time... when they're not serially bashing their wives, they're neglecting them in fire hazards of homes, marrying two sisters at a time (that was all a bit weird) or queueing up on the ship to take their turn with the captain's daughter.'

"Women Lose Interest in Career after Being in Power at Home"

Mastodon · 5 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Being in power at home reduces a woman's desire to achieve success at workplace, says a new study.

The study from University of California, Berkeley, however found that while women may lose interest and energy after taking care of home, men still pursued career goals even if they were managing home.

"It appears that being in charge of household decisions may bring a semblance of power to women's traditional role, to the point where women may have less desire to push against the obstacles to achieving additional power outside the home," said Serena Chen from UC Berkeley, a co-author of the study.

Even now, women are mostly in charge of managing home and taking care of the children. Researchers say that this arrangement has an impact on the woman's ability and desire to aspire for success at workplace.'

Why boys are falling behind and why we have to fix it

Mastodon · 6 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even addressing the issue of male academic underachievement can result in backlash from people incensed that society would bother caring about the disadvantages of men after spending decades and centuries ignoring the disadvantages of women. I understand that impulse, but as a person who cares deeply about her brothers, father, husband, and the possibility of raising decent men, should the opportunity arise, I have to care. Many others would no doubt feel the same if the problem were addressed with any frequency.

As Christina Hoff Sommers writes in the New York Times, “fairness today requires us to address the serious educational deficits of boys and young men. The rise of women, however long overdue, does not require the fall of men.”
...
*No, I’m not dismissing the concerns of gay men and women looking for mates, but the problem of educationally mismatched women and men is particularly problematic for heterosexual women.'

Boy suspended for imaginary weapon

el cid · 6 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This is PCism run amuck--and likely the result of too many female teachers who took too many "Women's Studies" classes in college. Any show of aggression is to be suppressed. Excerpt:

'A 7-year-old Mary Blair Elementary School student says he's confused about getting in trouble for trying to save the world from evil, though Thompson School District officials contend that the boy broke one of the school's “absolutes.”

Parent Mandie Watkins said Mary Blair principal Valerie Lara-Black called her Friday afternoon to inform her that her second-grade son, Alex, had been suspended for throwing an imaginary grenade during recess on the playground.

Alex did not have anything in his hand at the time and made no threats toward other people, Watkins reportedly was told.

Watkins said Alex's story matched up with the principal's account: He threw the pretend grenade at an imaginary box that had something evil inside.

He was going to save the earth this way, and when he threw the grenade he pretended that the box exploded, in apparent success.'

Teenagers Abandon Dad When Test Shows They Aren't Related

Matt · 6 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Oh, my heart hurts today. In a twist on the standard child custody cases that make the news, a dad named Richard Rodwell is making news for getting back the child support he'd paid to his wife plus damages totalling $40,000. It turns out Rodwell really never needed to pay because his kids weren't really his kids at all.

Rodwell's ex-wife, Helen, had been lying to him for years. Eventually a paternity test proved the teenaged kids each had different fathers. But while this one is marked in the win column for the rights of men, I don't see any winners here.

Yes, Richard Rodwell got back the $25,000 he paid in child support over four years and then some when he proved his kids weren't his kids. But what's $40,000 compared to the love of your kids?

This poor man spent 17 and 14 years respectively thinking he had a daughter and a son. Now he has neither as both of the kids have cut him off. Despite his expressed interest in remaining in the children's lives, he says Helen turned them against him.'

Mom Who Hired Hit on Husband Walks Free

Matt · 6 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The radical anti-father/pro-mother bias of Canada's courts was on full display last week for all to see. Here's Barbara Kay's predictably accurate take on the whole shameful thing (National Post, 1/24/13). The only remarkable attribute of the case is that it mostly played out, not in family courts, but in criminal ones.

Michael Ryan and Nicole Doucet Ryan were married and had a daughter who is now about 12. He ran their family farm in Nova Scotia and she was a school teacher. By his account, they were happy and their daughter was thriving. But Nicole had problems with her own family that were much litigated, including allegations by her sister Peggy that Nicole tried to run her down with her car and statements by her mother that Nicole was sick and would likely try again to kill or injure her sister. The ongoing grief caused by Nicole and her relationship with her birth family plunged her into a depression and caused conflict between her and Michael. In 2007, Michael filed for divorce.

...

Astonishingly, Nicole was acquitted by the trial judge. Apparently he/she bought the battered woman defense despite there being no evidence of abuse save Nicole's word for it and the fact that legally it couldn't have amounted to duress.

So the Crown appealed to an appellate court for the province of Nova Scotia and then to the Supreme Court of Canada. It was that last appeal that was decided last week. In it, the court acknowledged that the defense of duress had been improperly allowed by the trial judge and overturned Nicole's acquittal. But, in perhaps the most astonishing event in the entire sorry affair, the court stayed all further proceedings. That means that Nicole may not be retried, the people of Canada will not be permitted to punish a heinous wrongdoer, Michael Ryan will not be able to tell his story, the RCMP will not be able to tell theirs, Michael Ryan will forever be judged (as he has been by the press) a monster who abuses women and children and of course, a woman who attempted to have her husband murdered will walk free with no record of criminal wrongdoing.'

Absentee Fathers and the Newtown School Shooting

Matt · 6 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Though both sides in this dispute have something sensible to say, they've missed an elephant in the room either because of willful blindness to anything politically incorrect or because of a lack of real-world experience. I speak of the problems associated with divorce, family breakup, father absence, and the enormous burdens placed on a single mom who must rear a troubled male child alone.

Adam Lanza was not normal. He suffered from morbid shyness and an inability to connect with his student peers and anyone else—a cold, withdrawn, hollow shell of a person to his classmates, an Asperger's patient to professional psychologists. Even under the best of circumstances—with a loving, caring, two-parent family consisting of a husband and wife who complemented each other's strengths and worked together as a team—raising someone like Adam Lanza would be a real challenge.

...

In his book Fatherless America, David Blankenhorn writes that "across societies, married fatherhood is the single most reliable, and relied upon, prescription for socializing males. As marriage weakens, more and more men become isolated and estranged from their children and from the mother of their children. One result, in turn, is the spread of male violence." Though we can't ignore the other contributing factors to the Lanza massacre, this simple truth must be acknowledged in any honest assessment of the Newtown tragedy.'

Female prison guard charged over sex with cop killer

Minuteman · 6 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Gonzalez said she took a chance because she was "vulnerable and wanted to be in love" and has now revealed she is eight-months pregnant with Wilson's child.

Court papers allege the pair were in a relationship from March to August last year.

The relationship ended in August and Gonzalez became involved with another inmate.

The public servant has reportedly voiced concerns regarding what she will tell her child about how he was conceived.

"I know that for me as a parent, how am I going to explain this to this little boy? ... Mommy got wrapped up ... And then the opposite end is with a person who took lives. So how do you explain that?," Gonzalez said in a recorded conversation with the inmate she became involved with after Wilson.'

Cops bust 10-year-old for bringing toy gun to school

Matt · 6 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 10-year-old Alexandria boy was arrested after police said he brought a toy handgun to school on Tuesday, a day after he showed it to others on a school bus. The boy, a fifth-grader at Douglas MacArthur Elementary School whose name is not being released, was charged as a juvenile with brandishing a weapon, police said.

He was also suspended from school, and Alexandria City Public Schools Superintendent Morton Sherman said further action is being considered, including expulsion.

On Monday, the boy showed the plastic gun to at least one other student during a bus ride home from the school. The 10-year-old did not point it at anyone or threaten to shoot it, but he neglected to mention that the weapon was fake, said Alexandria police spokeswoman Ashley Hildebrandt.'

Petition: Stop Discrimination Against Male Victims of Domestic Abuse

EqualMeansEqual · 7 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Under regulations recently set forth by the Obama administration under the Affordable Care Act, all insurance plans are required to cover domestic abuse screening and counseling services as preventive care, meaning that insurance must pay in full with no copays or deductibles. However, these regulations apply exclusively to women, meaning that male victims that have endured the exact same thing may be expected to pay out of pocket for access to these services. A petition has been started on Change.org calling on the administration to revise these discriminatory regulations so that these services will be covered for all victims of domestic abuse, regardless of gender. It can be accessed here. I hope that you will consider signing and sharing it with any friends or family who you feel may be supportive.

AVfM: Fighting feminism – let's get political

Matt · 7 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two months ago I wrote an article for AVfM titled, 'Fighting feminism – let's get practical'. It was a call to MRAs to start fighting the manifestations of feminism on an issue-by-issue basis:

http://www.avoiceformen.com/mens-rights/activism/fighting-feminism-lets-get-practical/
...
...What can you do when the democratic process fails, when politicians fail to adjust policies in line with compelling evidence? With the question framed in that way, the answer was blindingly obvious. You form a political party and fight marginal seats, winning enough votes so that some politicians lose their comfortable livelihoods. Then the main political parties may start to compete for men's votes, by promising to end anti-male legislation and initiatives.
...

Along with a number of supporters I'm currently engaged in registering that new political party, which I shall personally lead, and I can now exclusively reveal its name on AVfM:

Justice for Men and Boys
(and the women who love them)
...
It's time to go on the offensive, so I end with a plea to MRAs and anti-feminists around the world. Feminism is a highly undemocratic movement. If it's a scourge in your country, establish a party, and fight it at the ballot box.'

USAID - "International Day of Zero Tolerance to Female Genital Mutilation/Cutting"

Minuteman · 7 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'February 6th marks the tenth observance of the International Day of Zero Tolerance to Female Genital Mutilation/Cutting (FGM/C), an internationally recognized day to foster awareness of the devastating effects of FGM/C and renew the call for the abandonment of this harmful traditional practice. FGM/C is a practice that ranges from nicking to total removal of the external female genitalia. Some 140 million women around the world have undergone this brutal procedure and three million girls are at risk every year.

This 10thanniversary, I'd like to take a look back over progress achieved in the past decade. Significant efforts have been made at the community, national, and international levels to address the issue of FGM/C. Studies have looked at the physical, emotional and mental impacts of FGM/C. ...
...
In December 2012, the 67th session of the United Nation's General Assembly passed a wide-reaching resolution urging States to condemn all harmful practices that affect women and girls, in particular Female Genital Mutilation/Cutting.'

UK: Should we ban domestic violence offenders from drinking alcohol?

Mastodon · 7 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Chief Constable of the new Scottish single police force has suggested that men who are convicted of domestic violence while drunk should be banned from drinking alcohol.

I wondered what Lib Dem Voice readers thought of this proposal. In England, Drinking Banning Orders have been around for 7 years but the guidance on their use suggests that they may not be appropriate if an individual is subject to domestic violence proceedings.

I'd be interested to see if anyone has any knowledge of how these orders work in practice, and whether they are effective in reducing offending. Are they too illiberal, or are they liberating for potential victims?'

SAVE: No Time to Spare, Show your Senators You Care

Matt · 7 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The Senate is expected to vote on VAWA today. Let's use these last moments to express our views to our lawmakers.

http://www.saveservices.org/pvra/vawa-reform-principles

You can also find your senators here.

If you don't call, they'll never know what you want.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

F&F: Ending Permanent Alimony

Matt · 7 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An end to permanent alimony certainly appears more plausible when it makes headlines in the Personal Finance section of U.S. News: Money. Geoff Williams, who has authored several articles about the finances of divorce, addresses how this is a holdover from a time when women were taken care of by their husbands.

In “Taking the ‘Permanent’ Out of Permanent Alimony” he states, “Permanent alimony was created in the days when women didn't go to college and rarely had careers, instead tending to the kids and household. Then it was sorely needed. Now, opponents argue, those reasons for its being are long past.”'

Nanny cam catches woman slapping infant

Matt · 7 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A nanny hired by one Staten Island family ended up behind bars after the parents say they caught her abusing their infant.

Shocking video shows Mamura Nasirova, 52, repeatedly slapping a 5-month-old baby she was hired to take care of, police said.

Officials say Nasirova repeatedly hit the baby girl on her face and legs with an open hand and shook her, leaving the infant crying and red.

The video was recorded by a so-called "nanny cam" hidden inside a carbon monoxide detector inside the family's Staten Island home. When her parents saw what was going on, they ran home and called police.
...
When cops showed up to arrest Nasirova a week later, they say she refused to be handcuffed.

Nasirova is facing charges of endangering the welfare of a child and resisting arrest. She is due back in court Friday February 8.'

Man claims IRS agent coerced him into sex

Matt · 7 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CBS) EUGENE, Ore. - An Oregon man is suing the U.S. Government and a female IRS agent he alleges pressured him into sex, by threatening a tax penalty.

Vincent Burroughs, of Fall Creek, Ore., says the harassing relationship began in August of 2011 when Dora Abrahamson, an agent with the Internal Revenue Service, called him and said he would be audited, CBS affiliate KVAL reports.

Burroughs says he didn't know Abrahamson, and that he hadn't met her before those calls - nor had he heard that he was being audited by the IRS.

"She was sending me texts that she wanted to come out, give me massages because she needed to help me relax," Burroughs said in a phone interview with KVAL News.
...
The lawsuit states: "She said that she could impose no penalty, or a 40% penalty, and that if he would give her what she wanted, she would give him what she needed."

As a result, Burroughs says he had sex with Abrahamson in his home that night.
In the lawsuit, he says he was "sexually harassed and intimidated."

The law firm representing Burroughs filed the suit with the U.S. District Court in Eugene on Jan. 25.'

Dads' Rights Rhetoric Enters Debate on Abortion Parental Notification Bill

Mastodon · 7 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'True, one of the opponents of the bill, Democratic Sen. Karen Keiser, has been saying that girls are at risk of abuse if forced to tell parents about issues related to their sexuality. "There have been documented cases where young women have been abused, thrown out of the house and in rare cases actually killed," she reiterates to SW. But she says she's never put the blame specifically on dads.

"This is crazy," she says after hearing Backholm's rhetoric. "Young women have also been thrown out of the house by their mothers. It's not a gender issue."

Backholm's way of framing the argument might, however, be a clever way of tapping into the dads' rights movement, which has a host of grievances that spark ardent and bitter feelings, including the way fathers are treated in family court.'

'Bill offering custody to unwed fathers has downside'

Mastodon · 7 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bill to give equal custody rights to unwed fathers may be built on good intentions, but the potential for negative unintended consequences is unacceptably high. There are better ways to pursue the goal.

Prime sponsor Sen. Rick Murphy describes the bill, SB 1202, as an effort to address inequity.

“Absentee mothers can come back into the picture after years of absence, disrupt their children from a stable home with their father, and still have all the legal rights and be presumed by law to be the best custodian of the child,” Republican Murphy said by e-mail.

Ironically, that is a mirror image of the scenario envisioned by opponents of this bill. They say it will enable fathers to disrupt the lives of children, including those for whom they previously expressed no interest.

What’s more, advocates for victims of domestic violence say giving a man custody rights based solely on paternity could provide an abusive man with powerful legal leverage after a woman has fled a violent situation.'

Tawana Brawley: 'victim'

Mastodon · 8 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tawana Brawley might finally have become a victim.

Not of former Dutchess County prosecutor Steve Pagones — whom she falsely accused of rape and who is now looking to collect on a defamation judgment he won against her. But of Al Sharpton and lawyers Alton Maddox and C. Vernon Mason, who used her for their own purposes and then left her hanging.

Brawley was a teen who told a lie, reportedly because she feared her abusive stepfather. But Sharpton, Maddox and Mason were adults. They ran with her story and made wild charges against Pagones and others, inflaming racial tensions for personal gain. Pagones, who lost his career and marriage over it, sued all four — and won.'

Journalist thrown off bus after paedophile accusation by woman

GaryB · 8 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

It's good to see that this stuff happens to high profile men too, and that it gets at least some attention. Quote:

'ABC News presenter Jeremy Fernandez has described the moment he was kicked off a Sydney bus after enduring verbal racial taunts earlier this morning.

After boarding a State Transit bus to drop his daughter off at preschool, Fernandez was the victim of racist abuse from a woman in her mid-30s with two young children of her own.

He said he endured 15 minutes of racial abuse - where the woman claimed she would drag Mr Fernandez off the bus if he didn't get off. But then it was the bus driver who eventually kicked Mr Fernandez off, claiming it was his fault for the altercation.'

'Betrayed': Male rape victims slam filmmakers over focus on women

el cid · 8 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two male rape survivors who appear in "The Invisible War," an Oscar-nominated documentary about military sexual assaults, are criticizing the movie's brief focus on male victims as an ironic snub — and, in a fiery diatribe, one of the film's characters says the director "should be ashamed and embarrassed."

"We're being abandoned by (director) Kirby Dick. The guys feel betrayed," said Michael Matthews, a 20-year Air Force veteran who, in the movie, tells of his 1973 gang rape by three other airmen. The publicity campaign hawking the film — and its Academy Award candidacy — includes a website that shows the faces of six female victims of military sexual assault, and no male survivors of that crime, as well as formal screenings to which only female victims have been asked to attend, Matthews said.
...
Navy veteran Brian Lewis — who was raped by a male, senior non-commissioned officer in 2000 and then discharged from the Navy shortly after reporting the attack — said he and Matthews are disturbed that the film's fleeting attention on male victims, both on screen and in promotional tactics, symbolizes the way male sex-assault survivors have been marginalized by society and by some lawmakers investigating the issue of rapes within the armed forces.'

Florida judge approves birth certificate listing three parents

Matt · 8 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(Reuters) - A Florida judge has approved the adoption of a 22-month-old baby girl that will list three people as parents on her birth certificate -- a married lesbian couple and a gay man.

The decision ends a two-year paternity fight between the couple and a friend of the women who donated his sperm to father the child but later sought a larger role in the girl's life.

The ruling means the child's birth certificate will include a biological father and both women as parents in an unusual arrangement approved recently by a Miami-Dade Circuit Court judge.

The women, Maria Italiano, 43, and Cher Filippazzo, 38, had made several unsuccessful attempts to become parents using fertility clinics.
...
Under the judge's decision, the two women will have sole parental rights, although Gerina will be allowed to visit the child. He will not be expected to provide child support.'

Male victims of violence also need support

Matt · 9 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here.

'We need to protect all victims of intimate-partner violence, regardless of gender [“A second chance to protect abused women,” Opinion, Feb. 4].

The most recent Centers for Disease Control and Prevention report on intimate-partner violence found that each year more men (5.36 million) than women (4.74 million) are victims of intimate-partner physical violence (Tables 4.1, 4.2 of full report) and psychological violence (20.5 vs. 16.5 million). Yet here in King County, there are no services for male victims. When I called I was referred to a program for male batterers.

Too often, men are told the programs only serve women, are accused of being the batterer or are laughed at. In one survey by Denise Hines & Emily Douglas, men who phoned the police were arrested more often than the women against whom they sought protection.

The Washington Constitution provides equal protection regardless of gender. Domestic-violence programs have been found to violate equal protection in California and West Virginia. Renewal of the gender-polarizing Violence Against Women Act while ignoring the real needs of male victims perpetrates this discrimination.'

VAWA must be reformed for domestic violence rates to come down

Matt · 9 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Neither the Democratic nor the Republican versions of the Violence Against Women Act survived the last Congress. Now Democrats, headed by Vermont Senator Patrick Leahy, vow immediate action on a new VAWA that does little to alter current flawed policies on domestic violence. The long hiatus in VAWA authorization represents a golden opportunity to get right what we've gotten wrong for so long.

VAWA's detriments are too numerous to deal with here, but surely if we're going to spend almost half a billion dollars to combat domestic violence, don't we want a law that actually decreases its incidence?

The sad fact is that, almost 20 years after its first passage, VAWA proponents can point to no evidence of its success at doing so. True, late last year former NOW president Kim Gandy claimed that a recent report by the Department of Justice "showed conclusively" that VAWA has reduced rates of domestic violence. In fact, it's done no such thing.'

NYT "mansplains" the parenting gap

Matt · 9 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'KJ Dell'Antonia, lead writer for the New York Times' Motherlode, wants to know why moms are so much more likely than dads to know all the nitty-gritty details of their children's lives.

And Bruce Feiler, another Times scribe, has the answer: It's because mean mommies won't relinquish control to their poor husbands! "The most significant predictor of dad involvement is the mom's willingness to give up control and allow the father to do things a slightly different way," Feiler writes.

...

Are we really going to blame so-called mean moms for the gender gap at home? To say nothing of a culture that presents sharing housework as emasculating (and, apparently, a boner-killer!) and asks CEOs and presidential hopefulsif it's "responsible" to take on demanding, full-time work so soon after having a child? And really, Bruce Feiler? You're comfortable giving men a pass on parenting because "When a mother criticizes her partner's child-care efforts, it causes him to lose confidence and withdraw?" That's the best you've got?'

The Female Orgasm, 50 Shades Of Grey, and Feminism's Schizophrenia

Matt · 9 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The flawed feminist notion that women can have it all when it comes to an illustrious fulltime career and raising children can also be applied to the bedroom. Which is it, do you want to be respected between the sheets, or handcuffed to the bed post and whipped?

...

Agreed. However, are we justified in mourning the illusive female orgasm and the larger concern of female sexual neglect, if we as women instead express the opposite sentiment demonstrated by the “Fifty Shades of Grey” phenomenon that has swept the nation?

...

Importantly, as women, we must ask ourselves who exactly is effectuating such standards of male sexual focus? More specifically, are we perhaps perpetuating the harmful standards, such as male dominance and female submission, that we rail against?

Unfortunately, the answers may not be pretty. For as women continue to idolize and fantasize about the demented and disgusting “relationship” embodied within “Fifty Shades of Grey,” we may come to realize that we are among the primary perpetuating culprits. And unfortunately the winners of this contradiction game are no winners at all.'

France: 'Unbalanced' woman vandalises famed painting

Minuteman · 9 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The 28-year-old woman, who is being held by police, is accused of using a black marker to deface the masterpiece at a recently opened satellite branch of the Louvre in Lens, northern France.

Her motives were unclear but her scrawling of "AE911" had some wondering if she was suffering from delusions involving the 9/11 attacks.

...

The woman would have faced up to seven years in prison and a 100,000 euro ($130,000) fine if found criminally responsible and convicted of defacing a cultural object.

...

In December a Polish man was jailed for two years in Britain for defacing a mural by US artist Mark Rothko at London's Tate Modern gallery.'

'Teen Mom 2' season 4 preview teases domestic violence

Mastodon · 9 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Teen Mom 2" returns Feb. 18 ... with a cauldron full of hot mess.

The preview for the fourth season opens with a shocking scene of domestic violence. What's most surprising is that the attacker is Kailyn Lowry, the "responsible" "Teen Mom" star, beating on her new boyfriend (now husband) Javi.

But Javi isn't Kailyn's only casualty. After complaining that her ex, Jo, "put his hands on" her, she punches her baby daddy in the face.

But wait, there's more! Jenelle, who like original "Teen Mom" Amber Portwood has been arrested for violent confrontations, is seen tossing a suitcase at who appears to be new BF Gary Head's face and shoving him. She in turn complains, "I have bruises all over my body."'

Zero Tolerance for Boys Means Zero Virtue for Men

Mastodon · 9 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Alex Evans is a seven-year-old second grader at Mary Blair Elementary School in Colorado. Recently, he was suspended for throwing an imaginary grenade while pretending to “rescue the world” from “pretend evil forces.”

Little Alex, it turns out, violated his school’s “absolutes” against fighting and weapons, “real or imaginary.”

So-called “zero tolerance” policies of the sort on display at Mary Blair have long been in place in public schools throughout the country. Alex’s mother said that she thought that they were “unrealistic” for kids her son’s age. She is right as far as she goes. The problem is that she doesn’t go nearly far enough.

Such policies are indeed unrealistic, yet they are unrealistic for people of all ages. Moreover, they aren’t just unrealistic. They are at once idiotic and outrageous: Rather than enable children to become responsible adults, zero tolerance policies threaten to retard this developmental process.

Boys are particularly harmed by it. Alex Evans is a case in point. Here is a seven-year-old child whose only infraction is that he possesses an imagination that is both lively and heroic. Think about it: He delights in envisioning himself as a self-sworn enemy of all that is evil, a world savior.'

Why Congress ought to ditch VAWA

Mastodon · 9 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Additionally, proponents of VAWA need to quit demonizing men as a whole. In fact, research shows that husbands — and marriage in general — offer the most protective safe haven for women and their children, compared to any other relationship. The Department of Justice estimates that “women are 62 times more likely to be assaulted by live-in boyfriends than they are by their husbands.” If liberal feminists behind VAWA really cared about the well-being of women, then they would be America’s biggest proponents of marriage between a man and woman.

There is a common consensus that VAWA isn’t effective. A recent national survey conducted by SAVE (Stop Abusive and Violent Environments), a non-profit victim-advocacy organization, shows 69.5 percent of respondents agree it’s time to reform VAWA in order to reduce waste and fraud within the system.'

Family Research Council: “Real abuse” is cost of VAWA to taxpayers

Mastodon · 9 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The socially conservative Family Research Council asked supporters to help it oppose the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act because, the group says, the “real abuse” is how much it will waste taxpayer dollars.

In an email alert on Monday, the FRC decried the VAWA (“which, ironically, is supported by the same administration that wants to put women in front-line combat!”) as an “abuse of taxpayer dollars” that “does more to promote a radical agenda than it does to help women.”

The email quoted conservative activist Phyllis Schlafly, who also opposes VAWA. “In its 17 years of operation,” Schlafly wrote on TownHall.com, VAWA “has done little or no good for real victims of domestic violence, while its funds have been used to fill feminist coffers and to lobby for feminist objectives and laws. Although every spending bill should be subject to rigorous auditing procedures in order to curb waste and fraud, VAWA has somehow ducked accountability for the [$660 million] a year it doles out to radical feminist organizations.”'

"Rating Men on Lulu Isn't Empowering. It's Creepy."

Mastodon · 9 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, I put out a call for more hook-up apps that are actually designed by, and for, women. Social media pro Alexandra Chong answered my call. Enter Lulu, an app so female-friendly that it doesn't even require men to create their own profiles—women do that for them.

Lulu, Chong says, is "the first database of men, built by women, for women." It is "the smart girls' app for private recommendations and reviews on guys." It is "Yelp for boys." Cosmopolitan calls it "Sex and the City marries Facebook." As you might imagine, the combination is insufferable.
...
Here's how it actually goes down. When I logged on this morning, Lulu prompted me to rate an alphabetized list of my hundreds of male Facebook friends—including my married, middle-aged uncle. Lulu has prepared for this uncomfortable scenario by inviting women to assess men from the perspective of partners, exes, crushes, friends, or relatives. When I clicked the "relative" box, the app asked me to rate how hot I think my uncle is. It describes the highest point category this way: "When it comes to his looks, I wish we weren't related." Presumably, so I would be able to legally have sex with him. Gross.

Unfortunately, the creepiness of Lulu doesn't end at the bloodline. This app asks women to publicly sexualize (#KinkyInTheRightWays) and shame (#BabbyDaddy) the men in their lives without their consent. It's the textual equivalent of leaking your ex's naked pics to the Internet—it's not wrong because it's sexual, it's wrong because it's nonconsensual. ...'

Teacher Suspended After Pouring Pencil Shavings In Student's Mouth

Mastodon · 9 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Marquis Jay pulls out a pencil sharpener and shows the amount of shavings inside, "She poured the pencil shavings in my mouth."

The 8th grader at Boles Jr. High School in Arlington says it was a teacher who poured the pencil shavings in his mouth in January.

"I was sitting in class with my head tilted back and opening my mouth," says Jay. "Teacher came over and poured the pencil shavings in my mouth."

The 13-year-old says he immediately spit it out and was taken to the nurse's office where he washed out his mouth.

His mother Deidre Brown was called and she is still furious.
...
Friday morning, almost a month later, Brown says she was told the teacher was suspended. She says she wanted her fired.
...
Marquis says the teacher is back at school and has apologized, "She said sorry for what happened. She wasn't thinking right."'

New research suggests mixed-gender high schools perpetuate gender gap

Matt · 9 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Nice to see an article on "the wage gap" that points out the obvious: major in English and surprise, you'll have a much harder time finding a job right out of college than someone who majored in a subject for which an employer can find a more immediate application. Excerpt:

'Two economics professors at the University of California, Davis have published a paper arguing that mixed-gender high schools are at least partially to blame for the persistent gender gap in the salaries of men and women.
...
The researchers found that the gender ratio of high school classmates considerably and consistently affected the choices students later made about their majors.
...
One obvious reason is that men and women — as groups — make substantially different choices when it comes to college majors. This phenomenon generally holds true throughout the developed world.

In the U.S., more women choose to major in humanities fields, such as English. Very nearly two-thirds of all humanities degrees go to women. Meanwhile, more men choose to major in engineering and the hard sciences. In engineering, for example, about 80 percent of recent grads are male.'

Poll: Most women believe they should not be forced into combat

Mastodon · 10 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The majority of American female voters support the idea of women serving in combat, but not being drafted, according to a national poll from Quinnipiac University released Thursday morning at the National Press Club.

Seventy-seven percent of female voters indicated that they favor the combat policy change, the poll showed.

When asked about the reinstatement of the draft, only 28 percent of American voters were in support. Despite widespread favor toward women in combat, only 48 percent of females supported women being drafted, while 59 percent of men supported the idea.
...
The data reveals that female voters may believe that women should be allowed to serve in open combat alongside men, but they should not be forced to do so through a draft.'

"To be happy, we must admit women and men aren't 'equal'"

Mastodon · 10 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Unless, of course, you're beholden to feminism. In that case, you'll believe the above is evidence of discrimination. You'll believe what feminists taught you to believe: that gender is a social construct.

Those of us with children know better. We know little girls love their dolls and boys just want to kick that ball. This doesn't mean men can't take care of babies or women can't play sports. It just means each gender has its own energy that flows in a specific direction. For God's sake, let it flow.'

Florida's 'Perfect Climate For Business' Logo Sparks Sexism Debate

Mastodon · 10 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A branding exercise that was designed to attract potential business people to Florida has become the focus of a sexism storm.

The new logo for the state's economic arm, Enterprise Florida, reads "Florida: The Perfect Climate For Business".

However the cartoon replaces the "i" in Florida with an orange tie, which critics suggest alienates female business entrepreneurs.

Responding to cries of sexism, the state has denied that there is any reason to view the graphic as contentious.

"The tie is iconic to mean business," Enterprise Florida's chief marketing officer Melissa Medley told NBC News. "It has nothing to do with gender roles. It's just a cartoon."

"We're going to move forward with this campaign," she added.'

'Some Arguments Just Don't Have Two Sides'

Mastodon · 10 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This dynamic is also seen when "men's rights advocates" push back strongly against equality for women over perceived threats to their own rights. These MRAs are the intellectual descendants of those who justified their arguments for male superiority with Bible quotes like Timothy 2:11-12: "A woman should learn in quietness and full submission. I do not permit a woman to teach or to assume authority over a man; she must be quiet." Their complaints of misandry and "reverse sexism" mimic the cries of "reverse racism" following the days of racial emancipation. Just as those who want creationism taught in public schools have resorted to unscientific intelligent design arguments, the MRAs are trying to back-up their prejudicial claims with unscientific conclusion-first thinking.

Even though women's rights issues like equal pay and protection from domestic violence should not be topics up for debate, MRAs insist upon voicing their opinions on the issue--and too often the media and others listen. Since the foundation of their opinions is that of religiously sanctioned discrimination and blatant sexism, MRAs and their allies should be ignored like other fringe groups.'

A radio talk show for men and men's issues

bicelake · 10 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Most of you may already know about Tom Leykis. If not, he's a breath of fresh air for men and issues relating to men. His talk radio show is out of California and he has millions of daily listeners who call in with their questions, which makes for a very entertaining and informative show. Tom Leykis is the ultimate "man's man", and really is the "dad you never had". He offers priceless advice to all men, has a massive following, and has been at it for over 20 years. I've been listening since 2001.

His show is done over the Internet now where he has no restrictions and can talk about any topic and say anything without FCC oversight or penalty. It's very refreshing to listen daily and I find it very empowering and think all men should listen in, especially men considering marriage. He also has regular guests on the show, including a divorce lawyer who comes on to give out free legal advice and helps callers out with their situations.

Overall it's a "feel-good" show that will have you laughing while on the edge of your seat covering very serious situations facing men every day-- all topics are for men and about men, it's a show just for us.

His show can be found at http://www.blowmeuptom.com/ and while the show is recorded live every day, after it's done it's replayed non-stop until the next live show. So it's on 24/7 free. Just click on a player icon (Windows Media Player, etc.) and listen. You'll thank me later.

At Boys' Home, Seeking Graves, and the Reason

Matt · 10 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MARIANNA, Fla. — Nobody is quite sure how many boys' bodies lie beneath the grounds of the notorious Arthur G. Dozier School for Boys, or which one is Thomas or Owen or Robert.

Nobody is quite sure how most of them died — the cause is often listed as "unknown" or "accident" — or why a great number were buried with such haste.

The scattered graves bear no markings: no names, no loving sentiment. The only hint of a cemetery are the white crosses that the state planted in the 1990s, belatedly and haphazardly.

From the time it opened in 1900, as the state's first home for wayward children, until it closed in 2011, as a residential center for high-risk youths, Dozier became synonymous with beatings, abuse, forced labor, neglect and, in some cases, death. It survived Congressional hearings, state hearings and state investigations. Each one turned the spotlight on horrific conditions, and little changed.'

Senate rejects Republican version of VAWA without LGBT protections

Mastodon · 10 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Leading up to the Senate vote on the Violence Against Women Act reauthorization, a version of the bill that stripped protections for LGBT women, undocumented immigrants and Native American women was defeated.

Sen. Chuck Grassley, R-Iowa, introduced the scaled-back version of the bill, which failed by a vote of 34-65. Among the 34 Republicans to vote for the bill were Senate Minority Leader Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., and Sen. Deb Fischer, R-Neb., the only female senator who is not a co-sponsoring the version of the VAWA that will likely be voted on on Monday.

The new protections for LGBT, immigrant and Native American women were a big reason why Republicans opposed the reauthorization bill in the last session of Congress. VAWA had been allowed to expire in September, 2011, and stalled several times over the course of 2012.'

High school offers all-girls robotics team

Mastodon · 10 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to high school robotics teams, all-girl groups like Needham High School's HackHers are a rare sight.

That's because female representation is lacking not only in robotics but also across all STEM—science, technology, engineering and math—subjects, said NHS math and computer science teacher Hans Batra, the robotics team's advisor and founder.

"The stigma of girls doing science is very huge," said Batra.

But the newly formed team, which has qualified for the state robotics championship tournament at Bridgewater on March 16, is helping pave the way for more female participation in computer science and engineering.

In addition to the state championship in March, the team also competes in the Mass FTC Qualifying Tournament on Feb. 9 from 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. at Lexington High School.

"This team proves that even in a male-dominated field everyone has the same potential," said NHS junior and HackHers member Liz Barrett.'

Math gender gap in US worst in world-- flipped completely for every other area, though

Mastodon · 10 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In order to achieve that balance, we'll have to address the less-talked-about gender gap in education, too. At 15, boys still outperform girls in math in most OECD countries, but girls read better than boys in every single one of them. In the U.S., the percentage gap between boys and girls' reading scores is about equivalent to the math gap, just with the genders flipped. And the stereotyping that marks the STEM field is at work in the humanities, too. The American Association of University Women has found that college students still “view science and math as male fields and humanities and art as female.” Girls have more positive feelings about reading than boys do. Fathers are less likely to read to their children than are mothers. The two most gender-lopsided academic disciplines in the U.S. are engineering and teaching. Men make up 42 percent of secondary school teachers, but just 18 percent of primary and middle school teachers and 2 percent of kindergarten teachers. U.S. schools don’t just need more women teaching math and science—they need more men teaching just about everything else.

Given the high demand for STEM workers in the world economy, it’s unsurprising that we’re not eager to push more boys into MFA programs. But there's plenty to be gained from encouraging all American students to pursue teaching, healthcare, and foreign languages—all subjects currently ruled by women. When we focus on correcting the imbalance in STEM, and ignore the gender divide in female-dominated subjects, we end up reinforcing stereotypes for both boys and girls. As long as reading is known as the girl thing, it will be harder to convince girls that math class is really the place for them.'

Police say teacher's assistant "had sex with" 14-YO boy 40 times

Mastodon · 11 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 35-year-old paraeducator is accused of repeatedly raping a 14-year-old boy during a 10-month period who was friends with her son.

Katheryn L. Carmean, 35, was arrested in Seaford, Del. on Wednesday and charged with ten counts of third-degree rape, continuous sexual abuse of a child and endangering the welfare of a child, according to a press release from the Delaware State Police.

Delaware Online reports that Carmean was arrested at Seaford Middle School where she works as a paraeducator who assists children with disabilities. She has been suspended from her position.'

Petition: Expose the Hidden World of Male Victims of Domestic Violence

Matt · 11 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'I am writing to you today to stand in the gap and make a plea for male victims of domestic violence. There has been legislation in place for many years to protect and help female victims of domestic violence, but there are no true resources for male victims.'

SAVE E-lert: Leahy's VAWA Will Place Victims in Harm's Way

Matt · 11 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

SAVE has just issued a report showing many of the programs funded under S. 47, the Violence Against Women Act, place victims at risk of continued abuse and even death. Restraining orders, mandatory arrest, and aggressive prosecution policies are all found to be increasing partner violence, according to the research summary.

The report can be viewed here:
http://www.saveservices.org/2013/02/the-violence-against-women-act-is-a-deadly-proposition

For example, VAWA funds the enforcement of restraining orders, but they are widely believed to be ineffective in curbing abuse. A review of homicide-suicides in North Carolina revealed the issuance of a restraining order was the most common trigger for such tragedies, present in 41% of such incidents.

The SAVE report terms the continued taxpayer funding of these harmful policies as "A triumph of ideology over science and common-sense."

Sounds crazy? Call your Senators today 1-866-220-0044. Tell them that S. 47 would be a deadly proposition for many.

Please act now....voting on S. 47 is expected to begin at 5pm ET on Monday!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Germany: Minister of Education resigns after plagiarism scandal

Matt · 11 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

How ironic: the Education Minister busted for cheating! You can't make this stuff up! So at the risk of being accused of schadenfreude, here it is. It's like the old joke about the atheist who became a priest. Anyway, there is this notion that females are less likely to cheat or be academically or generally dishonest than males. It's reports such as these that show such ideas for what they are: hogwash. Excerpt:

'BERLIN — For 32 years, the German education minister's 351-page dissertation sat on a shelf at Heinrich Heine University in Düsseldorf gathering dust while its author pursued a successful political career that carried her to the highest circles of the German government.

The academic work was a time bomb, however, and it exploded last year when an anonymous blogger published a catalog of passages suspected of having been lifted from other publications without proper attribution.

The university revoked the doctorate of the minister, Prof. Dr. Annette Schavan, on Tuesday (she retains the title pending appeal), and on Saturday she was forced to resign her cabinet post. It was the second time a minister had resigned from the government of Chancellor Angela Merkel over plagiarism in less than two years.'

When 'feminism' becomes sexism

Mastodon · 12 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although I suffer the cultural drawbacks of being born and raised as an Australian male (i.e. to be 'masculine'), I empathise with Kali Goldstone's frustrations at the disadvantageous treatment of women in many organisations, to the detriment of both (On Line Opinion February 11, 2013). It is unfortunate, however, that she often relies on and quotes poor science. Here are some more research-based findings.

There are observable differences in the respective structures of male and female brains in some areas (e.g. part of the hypothalamus) and in some brain activities (e.g. women's brains show a 28-day cycle of certain activities throughout their lives, not observed in men's brains). This makes sense because women have a biological cycle driven by this, evidenced after puberty and before menopause by cycles of fertility and menstruation. I don't doubt this difference in brain function is primarily biological in basis and unchangeable by experience.
...
Kali Goldstone's scathing comparison of how (some) men approach problem-solving in leadership or management roles with how (some) women approach it is as over-generalised and biased as the same misreporting of gender differences in performance that she understandably attacks. In my opinion, much of her article is as sexist, probably unconsciously so, as the straw arguments she attacks and the defensive rebuttals she will elicit, from men who are just as unconscious of how sexist they have been taught to be.'

Ways to Help Underachieving Boys Succeed in School

Mastodon · 12 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'The way to deal with boys' underachievement in school is not through "boy friendly" policies like more recess, single-sex classrooms and male teachers but through strong academic climates and clear, consistent information about occupations and the educational pathways that lead to them.

After years of research for our forthcoming book, "The Rise of Women: The Growing Gender Gap in Education and What It Means for American Schools," Thomas A. DiPrete and I found that in schools where academic effort is expected and valued, boys compete for high grades and more often achieve them. Such schools reduce gender gaps and promote healthy, multifaceted gender identities for both boys and girls.

...

Rather than remaking schools in ways that reinforce gender stereotypes, we need schools that set high expectations for student achievement and treat students as individuals.'

Australia: Gang of teenage girls attack couple at Sydney train station

Minuteman · 12 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Video footage has been obtained by Nine News showing scenes of shocking violence at Sydney train stations.

CCTV cameras at Kings Cross, Cabramatta and Blacktown railway stations captured violent attacks which left victims seriously injured and security staff outnumbered.

At Blacktown station in Western Sydney a group of teenage girls were recorded attacking a couple, leaving the man unconscious and his partner with blood streaming down her face.'

University student got a C+ and now seeks $1.3 million

Matt · 12 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A graduate of Lehigh University in Bethlehem, Pa. has sued the school for $1.3 million because she is unhappy that she got a C+ in a class in 2009.

Megan Thode, 27, says the grade ruined her dream of becoming a licensed professional counselor, reports The Morning Call, an Allentown-based newspaper. Her civil suit alleges breach of contract and sexual discrimination. It contends that the grade was part of a broader attempt to force her to abandon the graduate degree she was pursuing.
...
Thode's lawyer, Richard J. Orloski, maintains that she deserved a higher grade. However, her professor, Amanda Carr, awarded her a big, fat zero for classroom participation. That zero brought her grade down.

Orloski has also alleged that Carr and Nicholas Ladany (who was the director of the degree program) conspired against Thode because she and three other students were critical when they were had to search for supplemental internships midway through a semester.

The suit also charges that the course professor treated Thode unfairly because of Thode's support for gay and lesbian causes — a claim Lehigh flatly disputes, according to The Morning Call.
...
Hamburg pointed out that Thode is the daughter of Lehigh finance professor Stephen Thode. One of the perks of that relationship was that she was able to enroll in the Lehigh graduate program tuition-free. The school provided her with a job as well. She also got to attend York College of Pennsylvania at no charge as an undergraduate thanks to her Lehigh connections, says The Call.
...
Lehigh's lawyers allege that Thode's behavior in class was not acceptable for someone seeking a master's degree in counseling. On at least one occasion, they said, she used profanity in class. Another time, she broke down crying.

Before filing her lawsuit, Thode filed complaints with the university over the C+ grade, showing up at meetings with her father, the finance professor. She sought a written apology from Carr, the course instructor, and a "plan for compensating me financially," notes The Morning Call.'

Judge orders prosecutors to pay defendant’s costs for pursuing ‘reprehensible’ child-support claim

Matt · 13 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Falsely accused by his ex-wife, after a bitter divorce, of being behind in his child-support obligations by more than $3,500, Tony Schehtman was prosecuted for months and had his passport confiscated, restricting his business travel.

But last month he won a measure of vindication when a South Florida judge issued a scathing sanctions order. In addition to ordering Schehtman's ex-wife to pay him $7,645 in legal fees, Miami-Dade Circuit Judge Pedro Echarte also required prosecutors to do the same, calling the "pointless litigation," which proceeded for months after the defendant proved that he was not delinquent, "reprehensible" and "irresponsible," reports the Miami Herald.
...
"The state attorney deprived a law-abiding citizen of a fundamental liberty: his freedom of movement,” said Heller. “We will do what it takes to make sure this never happens again.'

UK: Benefit cheat gets a pay rise

Matt · 13 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Britain's farcical benefits system was exposed yesterday after a cheating mother was told she can now claim twice as much rather than go to jail.

Joanne Gibbons, 23, fiddled £3,140 in income support while holding down two jobs, a court was told.

But after she was caught it was revealed the shop assistant mother-of-one was entitled to claim £130 a week – £64 a week more than the amount she was swindling the taxpayer.

During her court appearance even her lawyer admitted: “This case is extraordinary and perhaps an indictment of the benefits system.”

...

Matthew Sinclair, of the TaxPayers’ Alliance, said: “It beggars belief that somebody going to the lengths of making fraudulent claims would have actually received more in benefits had they been honest about their situation. It just goes to show that the current system is broken and doesn’t provide the right incentives for claimants to go back to work.

...

“Immediately after the fraud was found the income support stopped and her benefits were adjusted. Miss Gibbons was then entitled to make a claim for family tax credit and child benefits.

“She’s now receiving £130 per week – £64 more than she was fraudulently claiming in the first place.

“Her fraudulent behaviour was in effect saving the Government money. It is the most ridiculous mitigation I have ever had to bring before a court.”'

Same-Sex Education: Do Male Students Need a Male Teacher?

Mastodon · 13 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In last week's blog, I discussed my predominantly male class--a group of kids whose behavior I'd had tremendous difficulty managing last semester while team-teaching with a female special-education teacher. Now, with a male special-education teacher, the students' behavior was suddenly much improved. I considered that something Christina Hoff Sommers had suggested in her article--that boys needed more male teachers--might deserve some credence, despite the fact that I don't inherently like the idea: I believe that boys should be able to be educated by teachers of either gender, as long as that teacher is attuned to their learning needs.
...
... Thus, at the end of the day, the gender of the teacher cannot be the only factor that predicts the success of the students--although, sometimes, it really does help.'

Dads Weigh In On Why Boys Fall Behind

Mastodon · 13 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Host Michel Martin continues the conversation about why boys fall behind in school. She speaks with a group of parents and experts: author Christina Hoff Sommers, New York University education professor Pedro Noguera, University of Virginia Dean Bob Pianta, and Glenn Ivey, father of five boys.'

Boys Are At The Back Of The Class

Mastodon · 13 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Boys are lagging behind girls in school; on average, they get worse grades, take fewer advanced classes and are less likely to graduate. To find out why boys are taking a back seat in education, host Michel Martin speaks with Christina Hoff Sommers, resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute and author of 'The War Against Boys.'"

Obama Renews Call For Paycheck Fairness Act

Mastodon · 13 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In his State of the Union address last night, President Obama renewed his call for passage of the Paycheck Fairness Act, which would make it harder for employers to rely on certain merit-based factors "other than sex" in setting employee pay. Two federal laws, the Equal Pay Act, and Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, already ban gender-based pay discrimination. Appealing to low-information voters who may not be aware of these laws, Obama declared, "I ask this Congress to declare that women should earn a living equal to their efforts, and finally pass the Paycheck Fairness Act this year." The administration's back-up document for this statement asserted that 'on average women generally make 23 cents on the dollar less than men.'" But that figure is misleading, because women generally aren't paid less for the same job, or working the same number of hours.

As The Washington Post's Glenn Kessler notes, government data shows women work fewer hours than men, which explains much of the apparent pay gap: "since women in general work fewer hours than men in a year, the statistics used by the White House may be less reliable for examining the key focus of the legislation — wage discrimination." I discuss some other unfounded claims made in support of the Paycheck Fairness Act at this link.'

Men's rights activists: Symantec branded us a 'hate group'

Mastodon · 13 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A men's issues website has cried foul after it was apparently classified as a "hate" site by Symantec.

Surfers visiting A Voice for Men (AVoiceForMen.com) were confronted by a message stating that it is a "known hate site" blocking from going any further by web-filtering technology in Symantec. A Voice for Men angrily denounced the move, which it ascribed to settings built into Symantec's Norton Internet Security software.

Paul Elam, publisher of A Voice for Men, fumed in an open letter to Symantec's senior management: "Your customers are given no supporting information or rationale for such a listing, and no immediate option to override the warning and proceed according to their own will; just the simple invective of being painted as a hate organisation."
...
Edwards then set up Norton DNS but that did not block the site either, and said: "[L]ooks like Symantec has updated its records".

The screenshot posted by avoiceformen.com makes it clear that it was Symantec's DNS system that was labelling its site as a "hate group", rather than the Norton Internet Security product blamed by the group.

Nonetheless the confusion is understandable and what's far more difficult is to fathom why Symantec can't account for how its technology classifies a named site, despite complaints from the party concerned, combined with two days of nagging from El Reg's security desk.'

Young Boys Face Serious Discrimination in Schools

Mastodon · 13 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recent studies are revealing that young boys are being discriminated against in schools and being graded unfairly because of how their active nature is perceived by teachers.

It is no secret that boys tend to be very hyper active at a young age. While most girls are happy doing whatever task is handed to them, boys often can't focus unless they are given the opportunity to run around a bit and let out all that built up energy.

While their active nature is perfectly innocent, researchers believe teachers are discriminating against them unfairly.

The problem appears to be that teachers are interpreting being active as being "bad" and punishing young boys for not cooperating or behaving well in a classroom environment.'

SAVE: ‘Incendiary and Extreme:’ SAVE Deplores Vilification Campaign in Wake of Senate Approval of VAWA

Matt · 14 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / February 13, 2013 – Following yesterday’s Senate approval of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA), advocates for prompt passage of the bill in the House of Representatives have launched a high-pressure campaign designed to portray Republicans as unsympathetic to the plight of domestic violence victims.

Within hours of Senate approval of the bill, a group called UltraViolet issued a statement announcing its strategy in bold-faced type: “If we can spread the word that House conservatives are blocking legislation to reduce domestic violence because ‘it’s not fair to men,’ we can create a political firestorm no politician will want to get caught up in.”

A press release from the National Organization for Women claims a “radical fringe” controls the Republican leadership and that majority leader Eric Cantor would continue his “shameful efforts” to delay passage of the bill. The N.O.W. statement includes an emotional claim about daily “burnings” of women.'

Former mayor embezzled millions, gambled away millions in spree

Matt · 15 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This is actually really quite a sad story. I hesitated to post it. But it's these marginal cases that really challenge thinking and standards (or possible double-standards). What do you all think, would she be getting the same soft-glove handling if she were a he? Or would it be all the same given her health problems/loss of her mate, which may well have contributed to her behavior. Both extreme grief and brain tumors can be causes of manic behavior, but are men less likely to be shown mercy with these as factors vs. women? What do you all think? Excerpt:

'LOS ANGELES — A former mayor of San Diego spent the last decade wagering more than a billion dollars at casinos across the country, eventually liquidating her savings, auctioning her belongings, selling off real estate, borrowing from friends and taking more than $2 million from a charity set up by her late husband, a fast-food tycoon.

The former mayor, Maureen O'Connor, 66, blamed an addiction to gambling aggravated by a brain tumor for the gargantuan spree. Her lawyers said that while she had made well over a billion dollars in bets at casinos in Las Vegas, Atlantic City and San Diego, her actual net losses were around $13 million.

Federal prosecutors said it was impossible to know precisely how much Ms. O'Connor had lost over those years, but she emerged with her fortune gone and her health shattered. She took out second and third mortgages on her La Jolla, Calif., home to pay for the gambling.
...

Under an agreement with federal prosecutors, she will receive treatment for gambling addiction and has two years repay the money to the foundation, as well as taxes owed to the government. Prosecutors cited her health as the main reason for the deal."Right now she is in a very poor financial state," said Eugene Iredale, her lawyer. He said, "This is a woman who has been through real trauma."'

Intact America Job Opening: Project Associate (Tarrytown, NY Office)

Minuteman · 15 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

' Intact America—a non-profit human rights organization dedicated to ending the practice of routine infant circumcision in the U.S.—seeks a dynamic, highly-motivated individual to fill a Project Associate position at our Tarrytown office in Westchester County, NY. Candidates must be committed to Intact America's mission—to protect all babies and children from circumcision and all other forms of medically unnecessary genital alteration, in the name of culture, religion, profit, or parental preference. This is an exciting opportunity to be part of a team working on one of the leading human rights issue of the 21st century.

The Project Associate will be given an opportunity to build leadership skills, coordinate and implement projects, and contribute to vital, strategic initiatives throughout the organization. Primary responsibilities entail coordinating fundraising activities; developing communications with internal and external audiences; liaising with colleagues, vendors, volunteers, and staff; and devising and maintaining office systems, including data management and filing. The person filling this position will be an integral member of a small team responsible for the visibility and success of Intact America in working to end the systematic human rights abuse of baby boys.'

F&F: Young Marine Must Continue To Pay Child Support for a Child That Is Not His

Matt · 15 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Brandon Parsons is a young Marine who fought in Iraq and Afghanistan. On January 22, 2013, San Diego Superior Court Judge Gregory Pollack ruled that Brandon Parsons will have to continue paying child support for another twelve years for another man's child.

His reason is that Brandon Parsons did not file his request for an order for DNA paternity testing of the child, Ashton Parsons, and the mother, Crystal Parsons, until two years after the child's birth. Because of this delay, Brandon will have to continue paying child support for another twelve years for another man's child.
...
The Court found Crystal Parsons' testimony to be totally untrustworthy. It called her actions in deliberately lying to Brandon about being the father of the child "despicable." In his written opinion, Judge Pollack states his views as follows: "The court denies the motions of Respondent Brandon Parsons to set aside Judgment and order blood testing to determine paternity. The motions are statutorily untimely under Family Code Section 2122, 7646,7541 and C.C.P. Section 473. The Paternity determination set forth within the 2009 martial dissolution judgment stipulated to by father, is res judicata and not subject to an equitable set aside."'

Former porn star accused of stabbing boyfriend to death

Mastodon · 15 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ex-porn star Jennifer Marchant -- known on camera as Scarlett Rouge -- pleaded not guilty to murder on Monday after her boyfriend bled to death from a stab in the neck.

The 23-year-old woman, who has starred in at least six titles such as "Super Sized Rides 2" and "Hot Sexy Plumpers 27," is suspected of stabbing her boyfriend, Ralph Stone, last Wednesday with a kitchen knife during a domestic dispute, according to the New York Daily News.

Police responded to Marchant's New York apartment and found Stone, 24, bleeding from his neck. The father of Marchant's 2-year-old daughter was pronounced dead a short time later.

Marchant pleaded her innocence on Monday, claiming that she acted in self defense, according to WIVB.'

SAVE: VAWA Bullies

Matt · 15 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Page here. Excerpt:

'Call your Representative today at 202-224-3121. Tell your Representative to say ‘No’ to the VAWA bullies….and say ‘Yes’ to real VAWA reform.

These are examples of the threats, falsehoods, and smears by the VAWA zealots:

- UltraViolet: This is what we’re up against.
- National Organization for Women: Press release
- Think Progress: 22 Republican men
- Interview with Brown University professor Tricia Rose
- Comments posted on senators’ Facebook pages'

Circumcision reduces sexual pleasure

MikeJH · 16 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men who are circumcised are in for some bad news - it puts them at a disadvantage in the bedroom, according to experts.

A study found those who've had their foreskin removed as children or adults experience less intense sexual pleasure and orgasm than their peers.'

UK: Politicians frightened to admit fathers are vital, says top family lawyer

MikeJH · 16 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marriage is as important to the future of the nation as climate change and poverty, a senior family lawyer said yesterday.

Baroness Deech said the growing numbers of families without fathers was doing more harm to the next generation than other factors such as smoking, alcohol, poor diet and lack of exercise.

And she warned that a conspiracy of silence surrounded the issue because political leaders were afraid to say married families were better for children than cohabiting families or single parent families.'

Australia: "Gillard Government to act on Female Genital Mutilation in Australia"

Minuteman · 16 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'It is often performed on girls under the age of ten. It is a violation of the human rights of women and girls and there is no place for it here in Australia. Its occurrence in this country cannot be excused by culture.

The Gillard Government today announced it would immediately implement the following measures:

• Provide $500,000 in grants to fund organisations to run education and awareness activities and support change within communities, as we know public education and awareness is key to change.

• New research and data collection on female genital mutilation will be undertaken as a priority. This will help us build the evidence needed to support women and girls affected by female genital mutilation.

• Minister Plibersek will hold a national summit on this subject early next year, bringing together community, health, legal and policing experts to discuss how we can increase awareness and support and reduce incidence in Australia.

• The Attorney-General will review the current legal framework in Australia, and provide advice on whether any changes are required to ensure full protection against female genital mutilation, at home or abroad.
...
We do not know how widespread this practice is in Australia but we know there have been instances, and anecdotal evidence suggests these are not isolated.

One such procedure performed in this country is one too many. One girl taken overseas to have it done is one too many.'

Father says he's still paying child support for 3-year-old son who died 25 years ago

Matt · 16 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DETROIT (WXYZ) - Lional Campbell's son, Michael, passed away at the age of three from acute meningitis.

"It took a lot out of me," says Campbell who is from Detroit and now lives in Kentucky. And it's that distance that is making even more difficult for Campbell to wage a fight with Wayne County Friend of the Court over child support that Campbell says he is still paying for Michael.
...
For years, Campbell never questioned paying child support to Friend of the Court because he thought the money was for what he owed for an older son he fathered with Michael's mother.
...
Campbell reached out to 7 Action News and while a spokesperson for the Friend of the Court could not talk specifically about Campbell's case because of privacy issues, they did tell us that surcharges drastically raise the amounts owed by non-custodial parents.

One court official likened the surcharges, that ended several years ago, to "loan sharking".
...
Campbell plans on seeking another audit before filing his taxes for fear that any refund will be swallowed up by the Friend of the Court that continues to garnish his checks.

Court officials call the mistakes they believe were made on their part "regretful". And they believe the errors in Campbell's case are isolated.'

UK: Women-only lists for half of London seats that Labour has in its sights

Mastodon · 17 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Labour will have all-women shortlists in half its key London target seats at the next general election, shadow minister for London Sadiq Khan reveals today.

Giving his first interview in his new role as Labour's general election campaign chief for the capital, he pledged that six out of the 12 London targets will be fought by women, with men barred from the selection contests.

"It frankly beggars belief that in 2013 we still only have one in five parliamentarians who are women," he said. "Even in the Labour Party, the most progressive of all parties, we don't have enough women or ethnic minorities — and we need to address that."'

"Women inmates deserve better"

Mastodon · 17 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Where a person is incarcerated can make or break a family's ability to stay connected — something the 4,000 children of incarcerated mothers in this state know well. Visiting far-away prisons like Albion, the state's largest women's prison, located eight hours from Manhattan, has become even more difficult since state corrections eliminated its free community bus program in 2011.

Being close to home minimizes the trauma and stress of incarceration for both children and parents, and decreases the risk of an incarcerated parent losing touch with, and sometimes parental rights to, his or her children. Keeping family connections strong also makes prisons safer (by providing incentive for good behavior) and communities safer (by providing support for people to stay out of prison after they go home).'

Circumcision: Cycle of Betrayal, Signature's Desire and Dismissive Cognition

Mastodon · 17 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Seventy-six percent of rapists were abused themselves as children. This is true with circumcision and its societal structure. Child abuse and other types of abuse are generational. Circumcision is a type of Munchausen by Proxy.

Passing on experienced trauma by doing the same to others is a Repetition Compulsion. The act is to fill a lacking in the perpetrator's own inner self-worth.

1. 1: The cycle begins with feeling of Betrayal, whether conscious or subconscious.
2. The victim tries to psychologically mediate by obtaining and exercising Power.
3. Performing a power-based action on another person is to affect Control over them.
4. This gives the perpetrator, whether an individual or a social force, a sense of assumed Authority. It also assumes a right to exercise influence over another person's life personally as well as those residing within the Social Body.
5. The active component is a Manipulation. Ritual manipulates objects.[4] Circumcision's object is the genitals.

Boy complains that Disney Cruise has no male characters

GaryB · 17 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This is a really interesting story, currently popular on Reddit - and an MRI in my opinion. I just bet the girls on that cruise got ample time with princesses and various empowering females in one form or another. Good on this kid for complaining. Excerpt:

'IF AN eight-year-old kid is unsatisfied with a Disney Cruise Line experience, he has every right to complain. He's obliged to complain.

And this eight-year-old kid, Ethan, did just that, after he was robbed of the chance to see his heroes, or, "guys" he thinks "are cool" on the Disney Dream.

"I wish I could have met some princes like Aladdin or Eric, but there was no boy character on the ship," he wrote.

"I would also like to meet Jack Sparrow. It made me a little sad. I complained a lot. I'm not sure we'll go on another cruise again."'

Woman arrested on suspicion of domestic violence

Mastodon · 18 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Officers were summoned at 1:19 a.m. Feb. 13 to an apartment in the 400 block of South Harold Street for a report of domestic violence. They met the victim outside, where he waited in an alley for police to arrive.

He told officers that Rebecca G. Thomas-Deal, 24, was upset at him because she thought he wasn't listening to her and the couple argued, according to the FBPD. Thomas-Deal allegedly started throwing household items at the victim, pushing him and hitting his face and chest. Officers reportedly found several scratches on the victim's face and chest.

Based on the evidence and visible injuries, officers arrested Thomas-Deal on suspicion of domestic violence, according to the FBPD. She was booked at the Fort Bragg Police Department and taken to the Mendocino County Jail, where her bail was set at $25,000.'

Dallas Mayor Wants 10,000 Men At Rally To End Domestic Violence

Mastodon · 18 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Dallas Mayor Mike Rawlings wants 10,000 men to join him March 23 at City Hall Plaza for a rally and campaign against domestic abuse. It's part of the mayor's efforts to change a culture of violence.

Mayor Mike Rawlings says for too long domestic violence was seen as a women's issue.

"Well, it ain't," Rawlings told the audience at a launch of his campaign against domestic violence. "It's a men's issue, and we have got to make that very clear."

Flanked by dozens of men, including former Dallas Cowboys Troy Aikman and Emmitt Smith, the Mayor announced the March 23rd rally.

"I want fathers to bring their sons because this is undoubtedly a learned behavior," Rawlings said. "And we have an intergenerational teaching moment right here. We have a unique opportunity to change the mind set of the next generation in Dallas."'

Teacher's aide sentenced to probation for sexually assulating 15 year old boy

Mastodon · 18 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'EL CAJON, Calif. - A female teacher's aide who had sex with a 15-year-old male student at a school for juvenile offenders was sentenced Thursday to probation and ordered to register as a sex offender.

Chrystina Delrosario, 25, pleaded guilty in December to two counts of having unlawful sex with a minor. She admitted she had sex with the boy in a classroom in late June at La Mesa's Reflections Central School, an educational program for juvenile offenders run by the San Diego County Office of Education on behalf of the county Probation Department.

Judge John Thompson suspended a 365-day jail term for Delrosario pending successful completion of her three-year probation.

The judge said he would "entertain" withdrawing the sex registration requirement after a year of probation and would also consider reducing the felony conviction to a misdemeanor after two years of successful probation.'

Woman bites off piece of boyfriend’s tongue after Valentine’s spat

Mastodon · 18 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Elaine Cook and her boyfriend of 10 months went out last week for Valentine’s Day, returned to her apartment and got in a fight.

She asked him to leave. He wanted to end the argument. So he leaned in for a kiss.

That’s when prosecutors said she bit off a “large” piece of his tongue.

Now the 51-year-old Cook, of the 9400 block of Lockwood in Skokie, is charged with aggravated domestic battery.

She was arrested Friday, records show, and Cook County Judge Israel Desierto ordered her held Sunday in lieu of $100,000 bail.

Her boyfriend, meanwhile, said he has “a lot of mixed feelings.” He said he’s trying to heal after losing the right side of his tongue, and he asked not to be named.'

UK: Teenager spared jail after confessing she agreed to sex with man she accused of rape

MikeJH · 18 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A teenager who put a man through two months of torment by falsely accusing him of rape has been spared jail.

Sophie Hooper, 19, told police she had been forced to have sex against her will with a man she had only just met in the pub.

But two months later her conscience got the better of her and she wrote a letter to the police confessing she had lied about the allegations.'

"Why Gender Equality Stalled"

Matt · 19 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over the next 30 years this emphasis on equalizing gender roles at home as well as at work produced a revolutionary transformation in Americans' attitudes. It was not instant. As late as 1977, two-thirds of Americans believed that it was "much better for everyone involved if the man is the achiever outside the home and the woman takes care of the home and family." By 1994, two-thirds of Americans rejected this notion.
...
Other feminists worried that the equation of feminism with an individual woman's choice to opt out of the work force undermined the movement's commitment to a larger vision of gender equity and justice. Joan Williams, the founding director of the Center for WorkLife Law at the University of California's Hastings College of the Law, argued that defining feminism as giving mothers the choice to stay home assumes that their partners have the responsibility to support them, and thus denies choice to fathers. The political theorist Lori Marso noted that emphasizing personal choice ignores the millions of women without a partner who can support them.

These are all important points. But they can sound pretty abstract to men and women who are stuck between a rock and a hard place when it comes to arranging their work and family lives. For more than two decades the demands and hours of work have been intensifying. Yet progress in adopting family-friendly work practices and social policies has proceeded at a glacial pace.

Today the main barriers to further progress toward gender equity no longer lie in people's personal attitudes and relationships. Instead, structural impediments prevent people from acting on their egalitarian values, forcing men and women into personal accommodations and rationalizations that do not reflect their preferences. The gender revolution is not in a stall. It has hit a wall.'

Warren Farrell to be interviewed on Reddit's "Ask Me Anything"

Matt · 19 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From Warren Farrell:

Reddit's Ask Me Anything is doing a highlighted interview with me on Tuesday, February 19th at 10:00 AM Pacific (1:00 PM Eastern). I thought you might like to ask a question. I am writing this a few days ahead of time because, to do so, you would need to sign up for a Reddit account and familiarize yourself with how the Ask Me Anything (AMA) works. To submit a question, you may go to http://www.reddit.com/r/IAmA and locate my AMA on Tuesday at 10:00 AM Pacific (1:00 PM Eastern), click on it, and put a question in the comments/questions box.

Sex-with-boys mom back in trouble: porn

Mastodon · 19 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who served time in state prison for having sex with two underage boys, including one who was dating her teenage daughter, is back in jail for allegedly violating her parole by possessing pornography, authorities said Tuesday.

Christine Shreeve Hubbs, 44, was arrested Friday night after state parole agents found pornography in a surprise compliance visit to her Hayward home, said Fred Bridgewater, state parole spokesman.

There was no indication that the pornography involved children, but Hubbs is not allowed to possess any pornography under the conditions of her parole, Bridgewater said.'

Clarence Page: Boys in the back of the class

Mastodon · 19 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Obama's emphasis on "high quality" is important. Preschool intervention programs vary in quality. But, at their best, they help child to make the most of their early learning years at a time when their learning and study habits are formed.

One recent federal evaluation of Head Start, which is aimed at low-income preschoolers, found parents benefitted, too, by learning to use more appropriate discipline and spend more time reading to their children.

"Every dollar we invest in high-quality early education can save more than seven dollars later on," President Obama said, announcing his idea during his State of the Union Address.

And there's another potential benefit that the president didn't mention: Prekindergarten programs can help reverse a disturbing gender gap favoring girls in academic performance that, according to new studies, is showing up as early as kindergarten.'

John Duncan On VAWA: Most Men Can Handle Violence Better Than Most Women

Mastodon · 19 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rep. John "Jimmy" Duncan Jr. (R-Tenn.) said he doesn't know if he will vote for a renewal of the Violence Against Women Act, a bill the congressman said has a nice name, and argued that men can handle violence better than women.

"Every bill is given a motherhood-and-apple-pie title," Duncan said, according to the Chattanooga Times Free Press. "But if you voted [based] on the title, you'd vote for every bill up here. If we'd all done that, the country would have crashed a long time ago."

"So this is another bill with a motherhood-and-apple-pie title," added Duncan, who voted for the reauthorization of VAWA in 2005.

But constituents would be mistaken to think that Duncan's uncertainty over whether he will support the reauthorization this year means he isn't concerned with the issue of violence against women. He said it's an especially big problem because women are not as well equipped as men to handle violence.

"Like most men, I'm more opposed to violence against women than even violence against men," Duncan said. "Because most men can handle it a little better than a lot of women can."'

Campus SaVE Act Depends On Reauthorization Of Violence Against Women Act

Mastodon · 19 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Colleges could soon have new national standards for how they handle reported sexual assaults on their campuses, thanks to a provision in the latest re-authorization of the Violence Against Women Act.

The Campus Sexual Violence Elimination (SaVE) Act was first introduced in 2010 by Sen. Bob Casey (D-Pa.), but now depends on the passage of the Senate version of VAWA, which has incorporated much of its language. It's the most significant reform of policy on how college sexual assaults are handled since the Jeanne Clery Act of 1990 and the Campus Sexual Assault Victim's Bill of Rights of 1992.
...
The SaVE Act is not without critics. Most notably, the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education has pushed against the establishment of a National Center for Campus Public Safety, citing concerns for individuals accused of assault. FIRE also has protested the low burden of proof that would be established by the bill, saying it removes safeguards for due process of the accused.'

"Men need to step up, have a voice in sexual consent war"

Mastodon · 19 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently, the article “Consent a campus issue,” which ran in The Crimson White, has been receiving quite a bit of attention, mainly from people calling for the job of Jessica Vickery, the assistant director of health education and promotion at the Student Health Center.

Vickery’s “crime,” according to many comments online, was found in a quote stating that, “Some people think there are false accusations. There’s really no false accusations. If someone feels they didn’t give consent, then they didn’t give consent.”

Readers have attacked Vickery for her conservative take on consent and sex since this article ran, with users such as ZimbaZumba posting that, “Jessica Vickery should be removed from her position, her comments are appalling.”

Some, like user drunicusrex, even see males being victimized here, posting that, “This is truly frightening. I doubt I will ever send my son, or for that matter my daughter, to a school where such fantastic, outrageous, and blatantly anti-male beliefs are espoused.”

To these assertions, I say: Guys, get over yourselves.'

Hiring should favour male, minority teachers: Toronto school board

Sheldon · 19 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This is an exciting and encouraging development in Canada. The Toronto District School Board, in a groundbreaking policy decision, has decided that due to the underrepresentation of men in the K-12 public education system, especially at the elementary level, they will favour hiring more male teachers to correct the imbalance. The school board is also favouring the hiring of certain racial minorities who are also underrepresented. A memo sent out by the school board to teachers and principals states, "The first round of TDSB interviews will be granted to teacher candidates that meet one or more of the following criteria in addition to being an outstanding teacher: Male, racial minority, French, Music, Aboriginal." Excerpt:

'A Toronto District School Board memo to staff that included gender and race among qualifications that could win a candidate an interview for a teaching position has outraged some female teachers.

The memo, which was received by principals and teachers and obtained by The Globe and Mail, says that the qualities that could get a candidate an interview include being male or from a racial minority.'

Male Positive Media: American Family Insurance ad

mens_issues · 20 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

American Family Insurance has a refreshingly male-positive ad about a father and son's quest to visit all the national parks in the United States. A link to the ad is here.

Mother charged for hiring strippers for son's birthday

Minuteman · 20 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A New York woman has been charged with child endangerment after she allegedly hired strippers to perform at her son's 16th birthday party.

Judy Viger, 33, threw a birthday party for her son at a bowling alley in November last year, CBS News reports.

She allegedly hired two strippers, who attended the party and performed lewd dances for five teenagers under 17.'

"Garbage man rescues dog from rubbish"

Minuteman · 20 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A starving puppy whimpering in pain after its owner tossed it away in the rubbish has been given a second chance at life after being rescued by a US garbage man.

Indiana man Michael Upchurch found the six-week-old dog, which has since been named Garby, as he collected rubbish last Wednesday morning.

"Once I took it up here and I dumped it in the truck it was just a terrible sound," Mr Upchurch told CBS.
...
Garby has since recovered and is now living with Mr Upchurch and his wife.

The woman accused of dumping Garby as well as two other puppies on the same day said she thought the animals had died of Parvo — a contagious virus that affects dogs.

A medical examination found the dog was not suffering from the virus, but was starving.

Police are investigating the case and the owner could face charges of neglect and animal cruelty.'

SAVE: Let's Celebrate our Progress

Matt · 20 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Start making plans now to join us this summer at our annual conference in Washington DC. The event will be held on June 21-22. And you are in for a treat!

We are tickled pink to announce that this year's keynote speakers are Erin Pizzey, founder of the international abuse shelter movement, and Kathy King, a former magistrate in Hamilton County, Ohio. I have no doubt they will tell it like it is.

You'll be shocked and inspired as Vladek Filler and Gordon Smith talk about their false allegation cases, and Sherry Warner Seefeld tells us about her son Caleb. And that's not all.

Visit the SAVE website for more presenters, the schedule, registration fees and lodging info. Visit eventbrite to register online.

I look forward to meeting you in person!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

The Emotional Consequences of Circumcision

Matt · 21 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The American Academy of Pediatrics announced in 2012 a change in its policy regarding infant male circumcision. Whereas previously they held “the procedure is not essential to the child’s current well-being,” now in their carefully worded statement they say “the benefits outweigh the risks.” This reversal comes at a time when circumcision rates are at their lowest point in years in the USA, and when many people around the world are taking a stand against the procedure.
...
Just because there remains no conscious memory of events before speech develops doesn’t mean they are “forgotten.” I can understand the general public may still believe that what cannot be remembered can’t cause lasting damage. But that a medical organization, representing 60,000 primary care pediatricians, has chosen not to consider longterm emotional damage is nothing less than criminal.

Additionally, the AAP gave no consideration to the emotional pain suffered by some men who are circumcised. These men are now coming forward in great numbers, outraged they were subjected to a procedure that violated their rights as an individual and, more importantly, compromised their sex lives. There can be no question that circumcision negatively impacts the sexual experience. Just this week, media outlets are widely reporting on a new medical study out of Belgium on this very subject.'

F&F: State Attorney General Goes to Court Opposing Equal Parenting Law

Matt · 21 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Like a lot of dads, Sanderson wants more and knows his kids need more. But unlike a lot of dads, he's not content to go hat in hand to the court to beg for a few more hours or days. He's done that plenty of course, but Sanderson doesn't stop there. For one thing, he lobbied the state legislature to change custody laws. That failed as it has in so many other states.

...

So Sanderson set his sights a little lower. He got enough people to sign a petition for a county-wide ballot initiative that was the same as the previous state-wide one. And, lo and behold, it passed in a landslide! Walsh County residents voted 66% to 34% in favor of equally shared parenting by fit parents. In due course, county commissioners voted 4 – 1 to add it to the county ordinances. In Walsh County, North Dakota, equally shared parenting had become law, thanks to the tireless work of Mitch Sanderson.

...

To no one's surprise, once the laws of Walsh County changed to require equal parenting, Mitch Sanderson went to court and asked the judge for such an order. My guess is he was the first there on Monday morning after the initiative became law. But, in an unprecedented move, the State of North Dakota, by and through its attorney general, intervened in Sanderson's custody case and filed a motion opposing Sanderson's request for equal parenting. Mind you, Sanderson's wife has done no such thing.'

F&F: Judge Slams Mother, State Attorney in False Child Support Case

Matt · 21 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Dade County, Florida judge has slammed the State Attorney's Office and the mother it represented for pursuing a father for child support when both the state's lawyer and the mother knew her allegations against him were false. Read about it here (Miami Herald, 2/7/13).

It's long been a scandal that state Attorneys General and other state level child support enforcement agencies represent custodial parents free of charge in child support cases while non-custodial parents, likely already strapped for cash, have to hire their own lawyers to represent them. As I've said before, the U.S. Office of Child Support Enforcement budgets some $5 billion a year to help custodial parents (overwhelmingly mothers) but a mere $10 million to help non-custodial parents (overwhelmingly fathers). But the inequality in child support matters hardly ends there.

...

One of the many problems is that those receiving child support have summary procedures at their disposal with which to enforce the obligations, but those who pay do not. If fathers want to seek a modification of a support order, they have to file an original pleading, pay the filing fee (often hundreds of dollars) and hire an attorney to navigate the legal system. Of course a dad seeking a modification likely does so because he's lost his job, become disabled or had some other mishap that's reduced his earnings. So states' refusal to establish the type of quick, simple procedures for modifications that they do for enforcement carries the distinct odor of gender bias.'

Florida: Alimony laws could be on the road to change

Matt · 21 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tavares-based Florida Alimony Reform's efforts to change the state's alimony laws took a big leap forward in the Florida Legislature Thursday when the House Civil Justice Subcommittee voted 10-2 in favor of HB 231.

Sponsored by state Rep. Ritch Workman, R-Melbourne, HB 231 revises factors to be considered when awarding alimony, including how much and for how long.

Workman told fellow lawmakers that the state's alimony laws are "archaic" and that FAR's goal is to provide better guidelines for the courts to follow.'

FreeDomainRadio interview with Warren Farrell

Matt · 21 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Recent interview available on YouTube here. The posting site is http://www.freedomainradio.com/.

Do Boys Face More Sexism Than Girls?

Mastodon · 21 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Interview here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to education, are boys the new girls? Are they facing more discrimination than their female peers, just because they are sexually different? According to recent studies, boys score as well as or better than girls on most standardized tests, yet they are far less likely to get good grades, take advanced classes or attend college. We asked prominent gender warriors, Michael Kimmel and Christina Hoff Sommers, to hash this one through in HuffPost's latest "Let's Talk" feature.'

Topeka sperm donor mentioned in Senate hearing

Mastodon · 21 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of unusual allies gave presentations to a Senate health committee Wednesday, urging more regulation for assisted reproduction.

Researchers from Christian groups, as well as a prominent abortion-rights group, the National Organization for Women, said the United States has become a "Wild West" for "commercial surrogacy" that exploits and endangers women.

A host of ethical concerns surrounding fertility treatments were raised, including the case of a Topeka man who donated sperm to a lesbian couple.
...
William Marotta, the Topeka man embroiled in a legal battle with the state after answering a lesbian couple's online ad for a sperm donor, was mentioned, but Wednesday's presentations mostly focused on fertility treatments' effects on women.'

UK: No men allowed: The surge of the women-only club

Mastodon · 21 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Women-only clubs and societies have sprung up in the capital, including private members' club Grace in Belgravia (where men are allowed on a Thursday night - but for dinner only), the Sorority Club in Holborn, KC'z Bar in Soho and beer-tasting club Dea Latis, showing a trend for places where professional women can socialise in exclusive spaces.

Many of these places are seen as 'safe areas', where women can go without being bothered or harassed by men.

Speaking to the Metro newspaper, KC Gates, owner of KC'z's, said: 'There's the stereotype where women say can't eat or be themselves in front of a man, whereas they can let loose with their girls, and that is exactly what they are doing at these venues.

'I know women who want a place to eat that's just for them, with female-only staff. Women who wear veils can come in and undress, and they don't have to hide.'"

Violence Against Women Act ignores reality

Matt · 22 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. The letter starts about halfway down the page. Excerpt:

'Beyond fraud, waste, duplication, non-accountability, false accusations and the denial of civil rights, the blatantly obvious problem with the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) is that women constitute only about half of the true victims of domestic violence. The other half is made up of men, and they receive absolutely zero protections and services from Sen. Patrick Leahy's (D-Vt.) VAWA reauthorization ("Senate passes VAWA reauthorization," Feb. 12).

...

Decades of consistently replicated social science research shows that domestic violence is initiated about equally by men and women; that slightly more women than men are physically harmed, but that men nonetheless represent more than 40 percent of the physically harmed victims; that the domestic violence initiation rates for women, and especially young women, have been rising; and that the domestic violence rates for bisexuals, gays and lesbians all are higher than for heterosexual couples.'

The Precious Self-Esteem Our Boys Need to Survive

Matt · 22 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. What a great piece of writing addressing a very ordinary phenomenon in an extraordinary way. Any POV that allows men a more expansive view of themselves or of masculinity is a good one. Excerpt:

'To all the boys who may or may not be queer. The boys picked last in sports but first for the latest in fashion, entertaining, and tasteful decorating. The boys who couldn't catch a football but instead could clean a bathroom until it sparkles and offer serious, heartfelt care to a sick sibling.

I salute you.

I salute us. In this culture, our gifts go unrecognized or at worse, get criticized and mocked. I salute all the boys like me who were different. Yes, we are here to stay and more importantly will be leading the revolution when the time comes.

Did I mention the time is now?'

Florida Woman Arrested After Genital Kicking Spree

Mastodon · 22 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When the Manatee County Sheriff's office got the call that a woman was standing on a street in broad daylight kicking strangers in the genitals, reports the Miami Herald, they sent an undoubtedly unlucky deputy to investigate.

When the deputy found a woman who matched the description of wearing red pants and braids, he called for her to come towards him. Instead the woman, now identified as Katina Jane Collins, ran for it. As the deputy gave chase, Collins allegedly stopped in her tracks and punched the officer in the face, knocking his sunglasses off. The deputy was able to get Collins on the ground and in handcuffs, despite her alleged attempts to scratch the deputy while he handcuffed her, the report said.'

F&F: President Obama Addresses Hyde Park Academy

Matt · 22 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. All well and good but talk is cheap. As long as he supports and propagates a social and legal system that actively discourages men even from having kids much less wanting to marry their mothers, things will only go from bad to worse in this department. It's actions that count, not words. And so far, all he's provided is words, with actions that go in the opposite direction. Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama spoke before students and faculty of Hyde Park Academy, in the Woodlawn neighborhood of Chicago. Most assumed it would be another speech on gun violence.
...
"As the son of a single mom who gave everything she had to raise me, with the help of my grandparents, I turned out okay," he said, calling single moms "heroic" and worthy of praise.

But he added, "At the same time, I wish I'd had a father who was around and involved."
...
Young boys and young men, in particular, "don't see an example of fathers or grandfathers, uncles, who are in a position to support families, and be held up and respected," Obama continued. Yet the biggest factor in determining a child's success — and preventing a child from sliding into a life of crime — is having a "loving, supportive family," he said.'

Lawmaker Focuses on Military's Physical Standards

Mastodon · 22 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A veteran of the first Battle of Fallujah is pushing legislation aimed at trying to prevent the military from lowering physical standards to allow women to serve in more combat roles.

Rep. Duncan Hunter (R., Calif.), a member of the House Armed Services Committee who served as a Marine officer in Iraq and Afghanistan, is offering legislation designed to ensure that the military establishes a single physical standard for combat infantry jobs.

Senior department officials have repeatedly insisted that while standards could be reviewed to ensure they are appropriate, they will not be lowered and the combat prowess of the military will be strengthened, not weakened by allowing women to serve in combat roles.
...
It is unclear whether Mr. Hunter's legislation will become law. Even if adopted by the Republican majority in the House, the legislation will likely be greeted with skepticism in the Senate, where the Democratic majority has been supportive of Mr. Panetta's removal of the ban on women serving in combat roles.'

Three political sisters convicted of corruption

Matt · 23 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Feminists used to insist that if there were more women in political positions, there'd be less corruption. They don't say this anymore. Now they just talk about it in general, abstract terms about it just "being better" for whatever reason (diversity of viewpoints, etc.). Point is, anyone can (and usually does) get corrupted before or during assuming any office of public trust. Excerpt:

'PITTSBURGH (AP) — The story has more irony than a Greek tragedy. Three sisters from a devoutly Catholic family have seen their personal and political careers ruined by a scandal that began with, of all things, a letter to some nuns.

Thursday's conviction of suspended Pennsylvania Supreme Court Justice Joan Orie Melvin along with her aide and sister, Janine Orie, on campaign corruption charges mean they might join a third sister — former state Sen. Jane Orie — in state prison. No sentencing date has been set.

The former senator was sentenced last year to 2½ to 10 years for using her state-paid staff to run her campaigns, though she was acquitted of having them campaign for Melvin, then a lower appellate court judge, who was running for the Supreme Court in 2003 and 2009. Joan Orie Melvin and Janine Orie were convicted in a spinoff investigation and found guilty of similarly misusing Melvin's former staff and the senator's.'

Prominent Jewish advocates against child circumcision

Matt · 23 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During the past few days I was asked about the existence of Jewish ‘intactivists’, of which there are actually quite a few, and I decided to put together a post that lists some of the most prominent. As someone who identifies as Jewish, I find this question particularly curious as well, although I’ll admit that Judaism has never played a significant role in my personal or family life. Let’s get started.'

Muslim intactivism

Matt · 23 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Sometimes MRAs (those who support intactivism, anyway) or intactivists are branded as anti-Semitic or anti-Jewish for this reason. Well if this is true, I suppose we're also anti-Muslim and anti-medical-establishment, too. May as well say we're anti-everyone! But this is hogwash, nothing more than an attempt to place intactivists on the defensive and cast aspersions on our motivations. Our motivations are not anti-anything; they're pro-human rights. In any case, Islam has its intactivists, too. Just Google "Muslim intactivism" and you'll see Islam has its intactivists. One such page discussing it is here. Intactivists come from all backgrounds, religions, and sexes. No amount of red herring accusations will stop us. Excerpt:

'"In the name of Allah, the Compassionate, the Merciful!"

That invocation itself is a good argument not to circumcise: what could be less compassionate or merciful than to hold a boy down and cut off his most intimate part?

Muslims are the largest single group in the world who circumcise boys. An Intactivist website would be lacking if it said nothing against this variety of the practice. Ideally, opposition to Islamic circumcison must begin within Islam itself. The problem is where to start and how to proceed, when it is so entrenched, and the Islamic Intactivist movement is so tiny.

The Qur'an does not mention circumcision.

The main reason given for Islamic circumcision is (ritual) cleanliness. Against this it is hard to argue, except to point out that there is no more reason for the male genitalia to be ritually unclean than the female.'

Man sues women-only gym over text messages

Mastodon · 23 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The women-only Lucille Roberts health club cluelessly peppered Alex Shiyan with text messages about a sweetheart membership deal.

Just one problem — he's a man.

The Brooklyn resident became so fed up with the useless offer that he fired back at the fitness giant with a class-action lawsuit filed yesterday in Manhattan federal court.

"1 Day Sale @ Lucille Roberts. just $5 to register and $15 a month NO CONTRACT," read the message, according to the suit.

It also urged him to call the franchise operation's Irvington, NJ, branch, adding, "Ask for Jessica and get a free gift when you join today!"

...

Shiyan's proposed class-action complaint seeks damages of up to $2,000 "for each and every text" received by him and potentially "thousands" of others, along with a court order barring Lucille Roberts from sending out future unsolicited spam directly to people's smartphones.'

Kindergarten Teacher, School Nurse Held in Murder-for-Hire Plot

StayingFit · 23 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Especially nauseating is the fact that the teacher had an order of protection filed against the ex-husband. Just further proof that those things have been abused so much, they are now essentially meaningless. Excerpt:

'A Virginia elementary school teacher and a school nurse are facing charges in what police are calling a murder-for-hire plot.

Angela Nolen, a 47-year-old kindergarten teacher, was arrested Wednesday for allegedly plotting to hire a hit man to kill her ex-husband for $8,000. According to police, Nolen's friend 37-year-old Cathy Bennett, a school nurse, worked with Nolen to find a hit man.

According to the Franklin County Sheriff's Office, Nolen's plan unraveled when she gave a police officer, working under cover as a hit man, an up-front fee of $4,000 to kill her ex-husband, 63-year-old Paul Strickler.

Strickler, who is the father of Nolen's 7-year-old daughter, told the Roanoke Times he had been working on a deal to sell his house to Nolen.

"If I was dead, she would not have to give me the money," he told the Roanoke Times. "That scares the H-E-L-L out of me. I'm just so glad that the state police found out about this and uncovered it."'

Massachusetts Education Policy Mandates Allowing Boys in Girls' Restrooms

Mastodon · 23 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Malden, Massachusetts – The Massachusetts Commissioner of Education has released an outline of its new school policy regarding gender equality, mandating that boys be allowed to use girls restrooms and locker rooms — and vice versa — if they contend that they prefer to identify with the opposite gender.

The 11-page document, written by Mitchell Chester, is stated to be in response to a gender identity law that was passed last July in the state.

"This guidance is intended to help school and district administrators take steps to create a culture in which transgender and gender nonconforming students feel safe, supported, and fully included, and to meet each school's obligation to provide equal educational opportunities for all students, in compliance with G.L. c. 76, §5 and the state regulations," it states.'

Is it Time to Reconsider Our Approach Regarding Boys Education?

Mastodon · 23 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Twenty years ago, or so, as faculty meeting after faculty meeting focused on the needs of our school's girls and what we needed to for our girls, a faculty colleague pointed out that, as we assumed gender driven positions and definitions under the auspices of remedying something regarding girls education, our definitions and practices would affect boys.

He is the father of two boys. I'm now the father of one who can't be more physical and different from his sister in his approach to the world.

I can tell you from practice, that twenty-something years ago, yes, we did focus a bit much on girls; we sometimes over encouraged and allowed our girls to press boundaries more than our boys. Quite literally, the boys had to be nicer during class discussions.

We know that boys have been falling behind in terms of achievement — high school and college — for the past two decades, plus.

It seems that the chickens have come home to roost; the circle is complete. It's boys who now seem to suffer at the hands of particular treatments and educational approaches.'

Woman sent to jail for repeatedly telling daughter to commit suicide

Matt · 24 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Nunavut judge is asking why a mother convicted of repeatedly telling her daughter to kill herself was allowed continued contact with the girl as well as custody of her own infant son.

"The nature of this offence is simply beyond the comprehension of right-thinking people," wrote Justice Susan Cooper in her decision, which was released this week. "It is only through luck and the work of medical and mental health professionals that the daughter is alive today."

But a Nunavut official defended social workers, saying it's tough to keep people from seeing each other in small, isolated communities with tight kinships.'

French fathers climb cranes, demand right to see their children

Matt · 24 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two fathers denied the right to see their children have climbed and occupied giant shipyard cranes in Nantes, France, and are demanding the review of their court decisions. One man has been camped out on the crane for two days.

Serge Charnay, 43, scaled one of the cranes on Friday morning. On the lower platform of the 40-meter-high structure Charnay unfurled a homemade banner with big block letters reading, “Benoît, two years without a dad.”

Charnay was not only denied custody of his son, but was also denied visiting rights two years ago after he was accused of kidnapping his child for taking him on a two-month vacation, instead of the one month allowed. Charnay also served a four-month prison term for the offense. He has demanded that the visitation prohibition be annulled.'

The Declaration of Frankfurt

Matt · 24 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Maybe you know it already, but if not: Prof. Dr. Günter Buchholz has recently initiated a so called ”Frankfurter Erklärung” (Declaration of Frankfurt). See here:

http://www.frankfurter-erklaerung.de/

This proclamation critisizes the oppression of men by women quota. It also clarifies some lies of feminists. The more supporters of the declaration (e.g., by signing up with your name), the more likely it will have an impact. The declaration is primarily relevant for the German speaking area. However, you may know several people for which this might be of interest. It is also possible to support this declaration if you are not German.”'

The Trial Lawyers' Full Employment Act

Mastodon · 24 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hey guys, everyone in the Democratic party loves all women with a love that is pure as the driven snow, and none of them have ever done anything in the name of that deep, enduring love that could possibly have been motivated by lobbyists, corporate dollars, deep-pocketed donors, etc. No way could that ever happen.

At least, no way could that ever happen except in the case of the Violence Against Women Act and the Paycheck Fairness Act, both of which won't help women much but will make life way better for the wealthy trial lawyers who make it rain for the DNC and its candidates.'

Blaming Men Doesn’t Stop Domestic Violence

Mastodon · 24 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lately our communities have been bombarded with a United Nations (U.N.) claim that “One In Three Women On The Planet Will Be Raped Or Beaten In Her Lifetime.” The U.N. fails to cite any sources for this claim and the latest UN report, Prevention of violence against women and girls. The report of the Secretary-GeneralE/CN.6/2013/4 on violence against women provided by a UN media officer when asked for such does not make the “one in three” claim.

By extrapolation of this “lifetime” figure, Eve Ensler, founder of the Vagina Monologues, assumes that, worldwide, one billion women have been raped or beaten. Consequently, this year’s V-Day theme is "One Billion Rising."
...
To state that 1 billion women - one in three worldwide – will be beaten or raped in their lifetime (presumably by a man) is statistically quite incorrect. Why then make such an outlandish claim, if not to smear the character of men and boys as inherently violent and abusive?'

TV companies ageist and sexist, says Harriet Harman

Mastodon · 25 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harriet Harman has written to leading broadcasters asking about the number of older women employed within their organisations, the Labour Party said on Sunday.

The move is part of the Commission on Older Women's work on females in the media and public life, which Harman chairs. The shadow deputy prime minister who doubles as shadow culture secretary said there needed to be "more change" especially in relation to "this combination of ageism and sexism" faced by older women.

Speaking on Sky News's Murnaghan programme, she said: "I think that there is a lack of recognition that actually women's value is not just during their reproductive years or just what they look like.'

Dallas mayor encourages rally for women against domestic violence

Mastodon · 25 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At a recent press conference, Rawlings said, “We want to make it known that any violent act toward a woman will not be tolerated by the men in the city … in the past this has been viewed as a women’s issue, but it ain’t. It’s our problem.”

It’s refreshing to see a male public official using his position to call attention to our society’s frustrating tendency to shift blame (and possible solution) from the perpetrators to the victims.

To that end, Rawlings has organized a rally for his new “Men Against Abuse” campaign, whose goal is to remove the aura of cultural acceptance around domestic violence. Rawlings expects at least 10,000 men to attend the rally in March.'

Female teacher gets no jail after having sex with a 15-year-old boy

Mastodon · 25 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A female teacher from West Orange, Erica DePalo admitted having sex with a 15-year-old male student, and was sentenced to probation with no jail time. Superintendent James O'Neill calls the leniency outrageous.

I'm working on a story about this, and want to know what people think. Would a male teacher having sex with a 15-year-old girl be treated differently? Is there a difference?

Prosecutors say the family was satisified with this sentence. Is that because they feel the boy was not damaged? Or maybe that he was traumatized and wanted to avoid testifying in court? Not clear yet.'

Sex crimes and teachers: Is sex bias at work?

Mastodon · 25 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was May of 2002 when teacher Pamela Diehl-Moore stood before a judge in Bergen County expecting to receive a prison term for having sex with a 13-year-old male student in her home.

She admitted the crime, and agreed to serve at least three years. But Judge Bruce Gaeta had a different idea. He threw out the plea and sentenced her to probation.

“I really don’t see the harm that was done here,” he said. “It’s just something between two people that clicked beyond the teacher-student relationship. ... Maybe it was a way for him, once this happened, to satisfy his sexual needs.”'

Argument: Is male circumcision harmful?

Mastodon · 25 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Richard Wamai and Ronald Goldman go head to head.

...
Richard

Why would so many human cultures, historically dominated by males, have for thousands of years removed a piece of skin that wraps around the end of the penis if doing so caused harm or impeded sexual enjoyment?

...
Ronald

...
Circumcision removes about a third of the erogenous tissue on the penile shaft, including several kinds of specialized nerves, resulting in thickening and progressive desensitization of exposed erogenous tissue. The adult foreskin is a double-layer movable sleeve of approximately 75 square centimetres. It protects the penile head, enhances sexual pleasure, and facilitates intercourse. Circumcised men are more likely to have erectile dysfunction, orgasm difficulties and premature ejaculation. Female partners have more problems with sexual function, fulfilment and painful intercourse. Conflicting studies on sexual effects of circumcision leave the burden of proof on those who advocate circumcision.

Dissatisfied men wish they had a choice and report anger, feelings of loss, sadness, sexual anxieties, and reduced emotional expression. Psychological factors affect every aspect. Circumcised men often have difficulty acknowledging the harm and generally accept information favouring circumcision.'

‘War on Women’ 2.0

Mastodon · 25 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Welcome to the scorched-earth phase of the Democrats’ “war on women” campaign, and the beginning of a ruthless offensive to hold their Senate majority, and possibly to retake the House, in 2014.

Democrats have nearly perfected the following exercise in cynical electioneering: 1) introduce legislation; 2) title it something that appeals to the vast majority of Americans who have no interest in learning what is actually in the bill, e.g., the “Violence Against Women Act”; 3) make sure it is sufficiently noxious to the GOP that few Republicans will support it; 4) vote, and await headlines such as “[GOP Lawmaker] Votes No On Violence Against Women Act”; 5) clip and use headline in 30-second campaign ad; and 6) repeat.'

Yahoo! Work-at-Home Ban Won’t Affect New Mom Marissa Mayer

StayingFit · 25 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. It's good to be the CEO... Excerpt:

'Last week, Yahoo! CEO Marissa Mayer instituted a new company policy: As of June, employees may no longer work remotely from home...
...
Not that it’s a problem for Mayer, who personally paid to have a nursery installed next to her office. “I wonder what would happen if my wife brought our kids and nanny to work and set em up in the cube next door?,” a husband of an employee losing work-from-home privileges told Swisher. Another scolded, “When a working mother is standing behind this, you know we are a long way from a culture that will honor the thankless sacrifices that women too often make.”'

Nova Scotia hitman case reinforces gender bias of Canadian courts

Matt · 26 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The more I read, the more bizarre it got.

The Supreme Court of Canada [external] ruled this week on a case where an allegation of spousal abuse – never substantiated – is the heart of a troubling story that has concluded in law, but has certainly not brought any sense of moral closure to those who track gender bias in the courts. Quite the opposite, in fact.
...
Now both the Nova Scotia Appeal Court and the Supreme Court of Canada have ruled that the trial judge erred in acquitting Nicole "without question" of her testimony. In other words, they grant that what Nicole told the court about her husband was totally unsubstantiated, and therefore her acquittal has rightfully been overturned. But the stay of proceedings means she is off the hook for another trial. The reasoning was that she had been through enough already. "The abuse she suffered and the protracted nature of these proceeding(s) have taken an enormous toll on her," the judges wrote (with one dissent). "It is an exceptional situation that warrants an exceptional remedy."

"Abuse she suffered?" We don't know that. They're taking her word for it again. And what about what Michael Ryan has been through? His new life with a military woman in Ontario, with his daughter and a new baby, has been turned upside down. He has been branded a monster by the media. And he has never been granted his day in court at any of the three levels of justice. In a Youtube address, he denies every single allegation, adding a great deal of background about Nicole that paints a very different portrait from her own self-presentation. Isn't justice worth another trial to get at the truth?'

SAVE E-lert: Let's Watch the House Vote on VAWA

Matt · 26 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

A little birdie told us that the House is expected to vote on the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) on Wednesday, Feb. 27 or Thursday, Feb. 28.

We hope you'll be able to watch. Live proceedings are available on http://www.house.gov/.

Look for "Watch HouseLive."

Then visit our Facebook page and share your observations. Or tweet your thoughts to @saveservicesorg.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Don’t Call Him Mom, or an Imbecile

Matt · 27 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE hapless, bumbling father is a stock character in product marketing. He makes breakfast for dinner and is incapable of handling, or sometimes even noticing, a soggy diaper. He tries desperately to hide the crumb-strewn, dirt-streaked evidence of his poor parenting before the mother gets home.

This is an image that many fathers who attended the Dad 2.0 Summit — a meeting of so-called daddy bloggers and the marketers who want to reach them — have come to revile. They are proud to be involved in domestic life and do not want to serve as the comic foil to the supercompetent mother.

In the past, consumer-product marketers weren’t all that concerned with what fathers thought — women, after all, make the majority of purchasing decisions for households. But men are catching up: In 2012 men spent an average of $36.26 at the grocery store per trip, compared with $27.49 in 2004, according to data from Nielsen. Companies see an opportunity to reach a new demographic.'

Jeff Chafin Wins Unanimously at U.S. Supreme Court

Matt · 27 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Great news! Jeff Chafin won his case before the United States Supreme Court. He won unanimously; every single justice voted for him.

Remember Jeff Chafin? For a refresher on his case, go to my first post on him here (Fathers and Families, 11/3/11). Here's the Supreme Court's opinion.

Briefly, Chafin is a man of impeccable credentials. He's a Sergeant First Class in the U. S. Army, stationed at Redstone Armory in Alabama. His wife Lynne is a Scot and they have a daughter who's six now. The family moved to Alabama where Jeff was stationed, but life was not good. Lynne is a violent drunk. She attacked Jeff on numerous occasions, including once with a knife, and she was arrested many times on charges related to domestic violence and alcohol abuse. She attacked Jeff twice in the presence of their daughter Eris. She was well known to the police and eventually, her abusive behavior got the attention of immigration authorities. They noticed that she'd overstayed her 90-day visa by about a year and deported her to her native country.'

Alimony reform bills propose relief from lifelong payments

Matt · 27 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CRESTVIEW — The days of a Florida ex-spouse potentially paying alimony even after death may end if reform bills working their way through the Legislature make it to the governor's desk.

"What we are talking about is trying to put fairness into the law," John Fromularo, Northwest Florida representative of Florida Alimony Reform, said while speaking to the Crestview Area Chamber of Commerce Government Issues Committee.

Alimony types include "bridge the gap," which helps the ex-spouse during a transition from being married to single; durational, from two years to the marriage's length; rehabilitative, paid until an ex-spouse is self-supporting; and permanent, Fromularo said.'

UK: Single Dads Society launched in Cricklewood

Matt · 27 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A father-of-three has set up a group for fellow dads to take part in activity sessions with their children.

Lee Emmanuel, 26, has launched the Single Dads Society which will meet every month in Cricklewood.

Mr Emmanuel, who is studying health and social care at the College of North West London, said: “There’s nothing for men to do in the area with their children. When you go to soft play there are always a lot of women there and no men and it can be off-putting.

“The society will be a chance for dads to network with one another, make new friends as well as engage with their kids, have fun and learn new skills.”'

Alimony troubles: Two sides escalate battle in NJ

Matt · 27 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For some ex-couples, the economy has made child support, alimony and other financial terms of divorce even harder to bear. And these fresh battles are adding urgency to an acrimonious debate over alimony reform in New Jersey.

Take Lynn Sebold, a 49-year-old mother of two teenage girls who earned six figures and owned a four-bedroom home in the Basking Ridge section of Bernards with her husband.

...

Sebold lost her well-paying sales job in 2011, and for the next 10 months she searched “diligently” for a job, she said. Last March she found one, but for almost half of what she had previously earned.

Although her income and expenses have been reduced, her alimony has not because “there is no bright-line rule” to measure whether her career change is a permanent or substantial change as allowed by New Jersey law, according to court documents. Discretion was up to the judge, H. Matthew Curry, who wrote in his January court order that Sebold had “not provided sufficient information to establish that her financial circumstance is not a temporary, ephemeral situation.”

Sebold’s experience illuminates two growing trends in New Jersey.

First, like more and more women, she ascended in the work force, became her household’s top earner and after divorce paid alimony to her ex-husband.

Second, Sebold is among the growing number of men and women who, for various reasons but mostly economic ones, are going back to court trying to have alimony payments reduced or terminated, according to matrimonial lawyers and court statistics.

These, along with other factors, have helped shape the current battle to reform alimony.'

'Civil and Human Rights Coalition Calls Republican VAWA Proposal “Nothing Less than Shameful”'

Matt · 27 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"The determination of the House Republican leadership to block an inclusive, bipartisan Violence Against Women Act in favor of a narrow partisan bill that fails to protect all victims of domestic violence is nothing less than shameful.

...

Even in today’s polarized political climate, we should at least be able to agree that when we send our daughters and sons to college, they should be protected from stalking, violence, date rape, and sexual assault; that one-third of tribal women who have been the victims of rape or domestic abuse should have equal access to justice no matter where the perpetrator lives; and that domestic violence is still violence regardless of gender identity or sexual orientation. The House should stop holding victims hostage.

It’s time for the House to stop playing politics with victims’ lives and pass the Senate version of VAWA.”'

UNC responds to sexual assault allegations

Matt · 27 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The University of North Carolina has formally responded to allegations that an honor code violation was brought against a student as a form of retaliation for her speaking out about an alleged rape.
...
The university released its own statement after several media outlets (including Yahoo! News) reported that Landen Gambill—a sophomore who last spring reported being raped by a student she says is still on the school's Chapel Hill campus—was recently notified of the charge by the UNC Honor Court.

If found guilty, Gambill faces a range of sanctions, including probation, suspension or even expulsion.'

Ashley Judd’s biggest problem: Her history of bizarre comments

Mastodon · 27 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If Judd decides to challenge Senate minority leader Mitch McConnell for his Senate seat next year, Republicans and their well-funded super PAC allies have warned that Kentuckians will see and hear these comments over and over again on television and the radio.

...

- On fathers giving daughters away at weddings: “To this day, a common vestige of male dominion over a woman’s reproductive status is her father ‘giving’ away her away to her husband at their wedding, and the ongoing practice of women giving up their last names in order to assume the name of their husband’s families, into which they have effectively been traded.”

...

- On men: “Throughout history, men have tried to control the means of reproduction, which means trying to control woman. This president is a modern day Attila the Hun.”

...

“If she runs, I think that it would be a catastrophe for a lot of downballot races in Kentucky,” Jimmy Cauley, a Democratic strategist in Kentucky, told Roll Call recently.'

Japan’s ‘Women Only’ Train Cars: Is it a Crime for Men to Ride?

Mastodon · 27 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women-only cars on Japan’s railways have existed in some form or other for more than 50 years, with “hana densha” (lit. “flower train”) carriages originally being introduced as a way of keeping female students safe from the advances of lecherous men during the peak hours. Now considered by many to be a vital part of many inner-city rail services, the train car closest to the driver’s cabin is often reserved for females only and is clearly marked both at boarding locations on the platform and inside the train itself.

Many unwitting foreign males have no doubt hopped on board these carriages during rush hours without realising it. Although foreigners usually escape relatively unscathed, when native Japanese men dare to cross that pink line and invade the sanctity of the josei senyou sharyou (women-only carriage), more often than not they are berated by the women on board until they alight or switch cars.'

Is It Inappropriate For A Nurse To Write On Facebook About Circumcision?

Mastodon · 28 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Oh hai, Internet. This post is not an invitation to rage forth in the epic battle about circumcision. I am merely posing a question to you: is it kinda inappropriate for a nurse to write about your kid's procedures on Facebook? A pediatric nurse in Spokane, Washington, wrote this on her Facebook page, which was apparently set to "public," and somebody screengrabbed this joke about performing her first circumcision on a baby boy. (The reason it came to my attention is because she is now being lambasted by anti-circumcision activists.)'

From Drone Strike Policy to Campus Rape Awareness Campaigns: Musings on Male Culpability in the 21st Century

Mastodon · 28 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Tuesday, Feb. 19, two Nexus articles caught my eye. The first was titled “Campus, Community Groups Run Campaign Against Sexual Assault.” The second was a “Left Said” opinion piece on drone strikes. Although these two articles seem unrelated at first glance, a closer examination reveals a subtle and worrisome theme tying the two together.

In “Left Said,” Michael Dean wrote an article critical of American drone strikes in foreign countries. He criticized the racism implicit in our drone policy which allows the government to “reduce” the civilian death toll by writing off “combatants” as all young men killed by drones “who fit a certain phenotype” (i.e. who are Arabs).

But while Dean and others have pointed out the unwritten racism of such a policy, they fail to point out the written misandry. U.S. policy lists young men as combatants. Imagine, if you will, what would happen if it were to become known that U.S. policy called for killing women of military age. People would riot in the streets and drone strikes would be halted tomorrow.'

UK: Compulsive liar jailed after 11 false rape claims in decade

Mastodon · 28 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Elizabeth Jones, 22, admitted she lied about the latest rape allegation because she “did not like” the man she accused of attacking her, Southampton Crown Court was told.

Her latest victim, who cannot be named for legal reasons, was arrested and questioned for nine hours before being released without charge.

After a judge jailed her for 16 months, it emerged today that she made her first complaint in 2004 aged just 13 before alleging other men had attacked her over the next nine years.

In 2009 she was given a ten month detention and training order for a similar offence.

Between 2005 and 2007 she had made eight other allegations, which police investigated, but she was never charged.'

U of Toronto's student union to consider men's issues group

Mastodon · 28 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When protesters paraded into a University of Toronto lecture hall where Dr. Warren Farrell was hosting a Men's Issues Awareness event last December, Sarah Santhosh didn't see a peaceful protest: she saw "closemindedness" and "lots of hate."

The controversial lecture and its fiery opposition inspired Santhosh to create an official men's issues group at Ryerson, which she said is tentatively called the Ryerson Association for Equality. The group would offer a forum for students to broadly discuss men's issues such as dealing with mental health, male youth violence, misogyny, as well as gender disadvantages in education, the workplace and custody battles.'

Title IX for our boys: Column

Mastodon · 28 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Stereotyped as "naughty," boys quickly learn that they are thought of as dumber and more trouble than girls. And that has consequences. "When boys aged seven to eight were told that they tend to do worse at school than girls, they scored more poorly in reading, writing and mathematics tests than those who were not primed for failure. And telling children aged six to nine before a test that both sexes were expected to do equally well improved the boys' performance." But the message that boys get is that they're not as smart.
...
The way boys are treated in K-12 also impacts how they do with regard to college. According to a recent study of male college enrollment, it's not academic performance, but discipline that holds boys back. "Controlling for these non-cognitive behavioral factors can explain virtually the entire female advantage in college attendance for the high school graduating class of 1992, after adjusting for family background, test scores and high school achievement." Boys are disciplined more because teachers -- overwhelmingly female -- find stereotypically male behavior objectionable. Girls are quieter, more orderly, and have better handwriting. The boys get disciplined more, suspended more and are turned off of education earlier.'

Texas mistaken paternity: Can DNA prove you are not the father?

Mastodon · 28 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine the pain of discovering you may not really be the father of a child you thought was yours and for whom you are legally the parent. In Texas, the law provides a way for such a man to learn the truth through the court system and set things right.

The Texas court proceeding is one for "mistaken paternity," sometimes called "paternity fraud." The only person with the right to bring a mistaken paternity action is a legal father who is questioning his parentage when no DNA testing was ever done. This law addresses the particular situation when a man mistakenly believes he is the father of a child because he relied on "misrepresentations," and thereafter either legally acknowledged paternity or was adjudicated to be the father.'

UK: Mother conned a Royal Marine serving in Afghanistan that he was the father of her baby for five years

Mastodon · 28 February 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A young mother who tricked a Royal Marine into believing that he was the father of her baby and paying out thousands of pounds in child maintenance has failed to get her prison sentence overturned.

The conned Marine treated the baby girl as his own daughter for five years before the mother's web of lies unraveled.

The mother even lied about the results of a paternity test when he sought reassurance that the baby was his.

She was jailed for six months at Newport Crown Court after admitting two counts of fraud last month.'

House GOP decision to move VAWA bill causes conservatives unease

Matt · 1 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A number of House conservatives are unhappy with the Republican leadership's decision to allow for the passage on Thursday of a Senate-passed reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act.

After spending weeks hashing out their own proposal, House GOP leaders abruptly switched course and decided to approve a process to hold a vote on the Senate bill if their own version failed to pass. The two measures contained significant overlap but differed on a contentious issue affecting tribal courts.'

UK: Justice for Men and Boys Party seeks input

Matt · 1 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Request discussed here. Excerpt:

'We're embarking upon a lengthy public consultation exercise, and the related document (link below) should be self-explanatory. It includes proposals in 18 areas including education, employment, paternity fraud and domestic abuse. We invite feedback on the proposals, and suggestions for other proposals we might include in our election manifesto for the 2015 general election.'

VAWA Bill Likely To Pass Congress This Week, Despite Violating First Amendment

Matt · 1 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Congress never lets the Constitution get in the way of passing a law with a catchy title. Thus, the Senate's version of the bill reauthorizing the Violence Against Women Act will likely pass the House this week, even though UCLA law professor Eugene Volokh, a leading First Amendment scholar, earlier noted that provisions in it violate the First Amendment. (Legal scholars have criticized other provisions in the bill as violating Articles II and III of the Constitution, and for undermining due-process safeguards.) The House GOP had earlier objected to the Senate's version, citing various flaws in the bill, but under political pressure, some GOP members in swing districts have switched sides and endorsed the bill, which is backed by Democratic leaders and the White House.'

Identity Politics Über Alles

Matt · 1 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Egalitarianism falsely views an inequality of results to be proof of injustice. If women are not serving equally in Afghanistan, then a gender balance should correct “the problem.” But, perhaps, the problem is that any American is in Afghanistan. The addition of women would only result in a gender-balanced injustice.
...
Would NOW object to a situation in which 10 randomly chosen males were being executed by Nazis? Would they interrupt the proceedings to demand the “right” of women to become equal-opportunity victims? At best, equality under injustice reshuffles the identity of victims. Usually, it expands the scope of the injustice itself.
...
Identity politics divides society into distinct political classes that have antagonistic interests: blacks against whites, women against men, gays against heterosexuals. It focuses, not on the individual rights of the group members, but on the interests that all members allegedly share. Receiving the same treatment from government as other groups “enjoy” is high on the hierarchy of shared interests.

The endorsement of drafting women represents the triumph of identity politics over the respect for individual rights.'

Salon asks "Why are men so foolish?"

Matt · 1 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This article is actually pretty interesting and discusses some new research on generalities around men's and women's styles regarding such things as risk-taking. But what's wrong with the article? The title. Why does it have to be categorically insulting the way it is? We already know the answer. Excerpt:

'Many recent findings in scientific research reveal gender differences - differences in when they choose to compete, differences in risk taking during competition, different responses to the stress of competition, and different strategies for dealing with that stress. Men are quicker to bond with teammates; women are more willing to befriend competitors. Women are less rattled by being ranked, especially when that ranking isn't near the top. Men are overconfident of their abilities, while women underattribute success to their own skills. Men get more competitive under time pressure, while women get less competitive under time pressure. Men rate their teammates and competitors lower in ability; women rate them higher.'

Childhood bullying can leave lifelong scars

Matt · 1 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WEDNESDAY, Feb. 20 (HealthDay News) -- Children who are bullied often carry the scars of their experience into adulthood and suffer from anxiety, depression and suicidal thoughts, a new study indicates.

Even bullies themselves are at risk for psychological problems when they grow up, the researchers added. And children who have been both perpetrator and victim suffer the worst as adults.

"There has been a lot of research into how bullying affects children short-term. We followed kids into their early 20s to see if there was any kind of lasting effects of having been bullied," said study author William Copeland, an assistant clinical professor in the department of psychiatry and behavioral sciences at Duke University in Durham, N.C.

"We found kids that had been just bullied in childhood seemed to be at an elevated risk for a number of different anxiety disorders when they were adults," he said. "Kids that had been bullied and also bullied other kids seemed to be in the worst lot. They had thoughts of depression and hurting themselves when they were adults. They have the worst long-term outcomes."'

Dumbing down Dad: How media present husbands, fathers as useless

Matt · 1 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's not hard to find. If you watch TV, then you've most likely witnessed the portrayal of the modern-day husband and father as lazy, incompetent and stupid.
...
If expectations of men within a society aren't up to par, and the only role model young men have comes from Peter Griffin on "Family Guy," there may be room for worry. Along with the stereotype of men being violent, Gurian said he's also concerned about the system that minimizes the father's role in the home.

"They're kind of stupid and they're not needed," Gurian said regarding fathers in the media. "So the message to the young people is that males are not needed, or Dad is not needed. That's dangerous because it's going to set up guys who will not take care of their kids, and kids who will not respect or understand the males and women who will say, 'Ah, they're not needed anyway.'"'

IA: Stand with Intact America on May 4 in New Orleans at Annual ACOG Convention

Matt · 1 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Intact America will be sponsoring a sidewalk demonstration in New Orleans on Saturday, May 4, 2013, at the annual convention of the American Congress of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG)—the largest assemblage of baby-cutters under one roof. During this one-day event, we will be protesting the role of obstetricians in perpetrating circumcision in American hospitals.

Will you join us? The more protesters, the merrier! We'll supply placards and handouts. Or bring your own posters if you are representing another intactivist organization. Want to wear an Intact America T-shirt to show your support? Visit our online store for shirts, baseball caps, hoodies, bumper stickers, car magnets, pins, and more.'

March 10 is "National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day"

Minuteman · 1 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

How they do it. From an Office of Womens Health mailing-list email:

'Dear Colleague,

I am pleased to announce our eighth observance of National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day, which falls on March 10th of every year. Since 2006, the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' Office on Women's Health (OWH) has led local and national efforts to raise awareness of HIV/AIDS among women and girls and to encourage people to take action in the fight against HIV/AIDS. According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), women make up 24 percent of HIV diagnoses among U.S. adults and adolescents, and black and Latina women are disproportionately affected. At some point in their lifetime, 1 in 32 black women and 1 in 106 Latina women will be diagnosed with HIV. As the Affordable Care Act (ACA) increases access to critical prevention services, including HIV testing and health insurance for the uninsured through the Health Insurance Marketplace, health outcomes for women and girls at risk for and living with HIV will undoubtedly improve.'

F&F: Call Center to Connect Low Income Veterans, Active Military with Legal Services

Matt · 1 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Ohio Military/Veterans Legal Assistance Project and Capital University Law School are partnering to make it easier for Central Ohio's low income veterans and active military personal to get legal assistance they might not otherwise be able to afford.

The Military/Veterans Legal Assistance Call Center at Capital University Law School opened this year as a partnership between the two organizations. The call center is providing referral information and brief legal advice and counseling when possible to low income veterans and active duty military personnel in Franklin, Delaware, Fairfield, Licking, Madison, Pickaway, and Union counties.'

House passes VAWA after GOP version defeated

Matt · 2 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Washington (CNN) -- An expanded Violence Against Women Act won bipartisan approval on Thursday from the U.S. House after Republicans failed to pass their own proposal due to a party split on an issue important to women and minority groups.

The measure now goes to President Barack Obama, who said in a statement that it was "an important step towards making sure no one in America is forced to live in fear."

...

Thursday's votes reflected an emerging political reality in the GOP-led House, with a minority of Republicans joining Democrats to pass legislation that has broad public support, including from increasingly influential demographics such as Hispanic Americans.

By a vote of 166-257, the GOP version of the Violence Against Women Act failed to win a majority after almost 90 minutes of debate. The House then voted 286-138 to pass the Senate version, with 87 Republicans joining all 199 Democrats to provide majority support.'

Nice try, Camilla, but belittling your England rugby captain boyfriend Chris Robshaw is not very sporting

Matt · 3 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Nice to see someone noticing this long-standing double-standard: Women airing dirty laundry publicly is given a pass while men doing the same is not. Anytime anyone in a couple does this kind of thing, it makes the entire couple look bad. After all, if you're with a person who does XYZ (insert some objectionable behavior here), then what does that say about you? Answer: You're the kind who "settles," and also doesn't keep private matters private. Really, it makes you look a lot worse than your mate. No one of either sex should be doing it. Excerpt:

'Camilla Kerslake is a gift to five of the Six Nations. The 24-year-old girlfriend of Chris Robshaw has taken the opportunity at this early point in the tournament to reveal that when he is not terrifying the opposition, England's rugby captain likes nothing more than a spot of hoovering. Possibly while wearing a onesie.
...
Of course, Kerslake is not the first woman to carry out a public castration of her other half in the mistaken belief that it will make their relationship appear to us more equal. Downplaying your insignificant other is a female trait that few men would dare to indulge in because it would probably lead to a pickaxe being lodged in their head. "Oh, you should see her at home. She just slobs around in a tracksuit while I rub her shoulders." And yet all over the Western world, women belittle their men.
...

... So we have Michelle Obama banging on about Barack at home, in an effort to connect with Everyman. "Does he pick up his socks?" she has said. "No, no, no he doesn't. He's not good, you know. He thinks he's neat, but he has people who help him, you know, and I'm like, it's not you who's neat, the people who pick up your socks, those are the neat people."
...
You might argue that women have endured men's put-downs for centuries. That may be true. But does it mean we must play them at their own pathetic games?'

Louisiana Man Accuses Ex-Girlfriend Of Stealing His Sperm

Mastodon · 3 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A man claims a woman took his sperm without asking.

Layne Hardin of Louisiana has filed a lawsuit in Harris County, Tex. against a sperm donation clinic and his ex-girlfriend, Toby Devall, claiming that Obstetrical and Gynecological Associates' sperm bank failed to provide proper safeguards to keep Devall from stealing Hardin's baby-making material.

ABC News reports that Hardin and another now ex-girlfriend, Katherine LeBlanc, originally signed a contract in 2002 with Texas Andrology Services sperm bank that said only LeBlanc could have access to Hardin's freeze-dried specimen, according to the lawsuit.'

After False Report, Cornell Defends New Rules for Sexual Assaults

Mastodon · 3 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent false report of attempted rape should not stoke fears about Cornell's new policy for handling sexual assault accusations, several high-ranking administrators have said in defense of their controversial decision to lower the burden of proof in these proceedings.

In Spring 2012, over the dire warnings and desperate pleas of many law professors and local attorneys, the University pushed through a series of changes to its sexual assault policy.

The new system, which is motivated in part by a contested directive from the U.S. Department of Education but also by a desire to reduce the number of campus rape cases, makes it far easier for students to be found guilty of sexual assault.
...
Under the new sexual assault system, accused students' attorneys cannot cross-examine the accusing party, defendants must only be found guilty on a "preponderance" — or 51 percent — of the evidence to face punishment, and students can no longer appeal decisions to a hearing board that includes students. The previous, higher standard for these cases was "clear and convincing evidence."

"False reports ... serve as a reminder of the dangers of Cornell's policy, and of the eternal need for procedural protections, no matter how well-intentioned the authorities are," Prof. Kevin Clermont, law, said. "The University should provide protection to the accused as a matter of fairness."'

UK: High Court Justice supports pre-conviction anonymity of accused in rape cases

Mastodon · 3 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this week, MailOnline reported on Maura McGowan - the deputy High Court judge who recommended that men should be granted pre-conviction anonymity in rape trials.

In a rare example of common sense within British law, the leading figure said that men should have their identity protected unless they are convicted.

Quite frankly, I agree.

Only yesterday, MailOnline reported on the case of Sophie Hooper - a 19 year-old woman who maliciously accused an innocent man of rape.

The mother-of-one, who was photographed smirking outside Southampton Crown Court after avoiding a jail sentence, only admitted to fabricating the allegations two months into the police investigation.

Sadly, cases like these are increasingly common.'

Canada: Barbara Kay: The problem with Children's Aid Societies

Matt · 3 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A young friend of mine took her bruised toddler to the hospital as a precaution after a fall down some stairs. All was well, but she nervously joked, "I was afraid the doctor might call the CAS (Children's Aid Society)." This shocked me. Decades ago, I took my kids to the hospital on more than one similar occasion, but I never entertained such a misgiving.

My friend's fears are not unfounded. Had the doctor felt suspicious, she might have called the CAS, which would then make inquiries and checked the parents' records. In extreme situations, the CAS could theoretically seize the child, forcing the parents into costly litigation to get back access to their child.

...

Canadian CAS workers intervene in about 200,000 kids' lives a year. And it isn't just the poor and marginalized who become CAS "clients." A few years ago, for example, an Ontario maid service worker felt an upscale client's house didn't meet her standard of house pride; shortly after, a CAS worker showed up.

...

In other cases, demonstrably maltreated children are inexplicably left with parents or foster parents known to be dangerous, and sometimes end up injured or even dead. In these latter cases, we read their horror stories with incredulity in Christie Blatchford's columns.'

Conservatives, liberals, media advocates rally behind man jailed for criticizing Indiana judge

Matt · 4 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A group of free-speech advocates is rallying behind an Indiana inmate serving two years for his online rants against a judge who took away his child-custody rights during a divorce case.
...
The group is led by University of California Los Angeles law professor Eugene Volokh and includes conservative lawyer James Bopp, a former executive director of the Indiana Civil Liberties Union, the Indiana Association of Scholars, The Indianapolis Star and the James Madison Center for Free Speech.
...
In his rants, Brewington called the judge a “child abuser” and “corrupt” and accused him of unethical or illegal behavior.

He argued that Humphrey taking away his children amounted to child abuse.
...
Brewington's attorney Michael K. Sutherlin said his client may not have had “the rhetorical skill of Thomas Paine but like 18th-century pamphleteers, he used a popular forum of expression in his time (here, the Internet) to complain about unfair treatment by an oppressive system.”'

'Women are better in advertising': Sir Martin Sorrell

Mastodon · 4 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'He praised the fairer sex for being more organised as part of a defence for flexible working, while chiming into the discussion over the merits of working from home.

Sir Martin positioned himself "somewhere in the middle" of Yahoo! boss Marissa Mayer, whose edict to staff this week banning the practice sparked fiery debate, and Richard Branson, who branded her approach "perplexing and backwards".

"You want a bit of both. You need to have flexibility," said Sir Martin, who went on to applaud female workers' capabilities, in an interview with Reuters.

"Women are much better organisers of time in our industry than men. I would argue they're even better at doing their jobs than men in our industry generally."'

Wikipedia on Sir Martin, here.

Sacramento Woman Arrested For Assaulting JetBlue Flight Attendant

Mastodon · 4 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A woman was arrested at the Sacramento International Airport for allegedly assaulting a crew member aboard a JetBlue flight on Saturday morning.

Sacramento County Sheriff's Department spokesperson Sgt. Jason Ramos said 37-year-old Yevelina Rakhuba of Sacramento had to be restrained on an inbound flight after an "episode" in which a crew member was assaulted and suffered minor injuries.

Rakhuba also broke a male flight attendant's wristwatch during the scuffle. She was cited an released for misdemeanor assault and battery charges.'

‘I’d have kicked Rudy’s ass,’ Christine Quinn boasts

Mastodon · 5 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Imagine the outrage if a male politician said something similar about a woman. Excerpt:

'When told it would have been hard for her to run against former Mayor Rudy Giuliani in the 1990s because she is a lesbian, mayoral candidate Christine Quinn sounded off like a prize fighter.

“I would’ve kicked his ass,” she said of a matchup with the former federal prosecutor and two-term mayor.

Quinn, the City Council speaker, was at a same-sex marriage forum at Fordham Law School Monday night when moderator Thane Rosenbaum said running against Giuliani would have been tough for Quinn in 1993 because homosexuality was not as accepted as it is today.

That’s when Quinn offered her clipped reply, which drew laughs from the audience.'

Montana ignoring rights of fathers by requiring husband's name on birth certificates

Mastodon · 5 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I always thought that a birth certificate was the most important document you could have until finding out about Montana law “MCA 40-6-105,” which states, “If the mother was married at the time of conception or birth or between conception and birth, the name of the husband must be entered on the certificate as the father of the child.“

What if the husband left years earlier? What if the husband was incarcerated? What if the husband was out of country? What if the wife cheated? Etc.

Montana does not allow a DNA test to prove he is the biological father of his own child and have his name on the birth certificate, the state only accepts the statement from that absent husband. They take the word of a man, who by the way could say anything, over scientific DNA, but yet that same DNA can arrest, prosecute and convict someone of a crime. This violates all father’s rights.'

Hartland Father Wins Rights to Biological Daughter

Mastodon · 5 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Hartland father who has been fighting for rights to his daughter, Maeleigh, won a big battle in court on Monday after a Genesse County judge acknowledged him as the biological father.

Daniel Quinn, who has been fighting for parental rights since 2008, was also granted immediate phone and computer contact by the judge, according to a story from WJRT abc12.com.

...

Quinn went to court but was told that because of a 1956 Michigan law, he had no rights to his daughter and could not be legally recognized as the parent. Instead, parental rights were given to the husband of Maeleigh's mother.'

Michael Jordan wants patrenity suit tossed

Mastodon · 5 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ATLANTA -- Basketball hall of famer Michael Jordan asked a Georgia court on Monday to dismiss a paternity suit against him, calling it a "shameless, bad faith attempt to abuse the legal system."

Jordan's lawyer John Mayoue said in a document filed in Fulton County Superior Court that the six-time NBA champion is not the father of Pamela Y. Smith's 16-year-old son. The paternity of the teen was "conclusively established" in divorce filings between Smith and her ex-husband, Jordan's attorney wrote.
...
"Public records show that the paternity of the child was established in a prior case in this same court many years ago and that Michael Jordan is not the father. He also filed a counterclaim seeking sanctions for the false claims made against him. It is unfortunate that well-known figures are the target of these kind of claims. Michael Jordan will vigorously defend himself and his reputation."'

Colorado Mom Accused Of Having Sex With Son's Underage Friend

Mastodon · 5 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Colorado mom is accused of seducing her son's underage friend at a sleepover and having sex with him on multiple occasions.

Wendy Crowell of Grand Junction heard charges against her on Thursday, including six felony counts of sexual assault on a child, according to KREX.

The relationship allegedly began in June, 2012. The victim was between the ages of 15 and 16 at the time, KREX reports.

An arrest affidavit claims that one night when the boy was sleeping over at Crowell's home, she told him "he could pretend to be 18 for a night," according to KKCO.'

Statement by HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius on Women's History Month

Minuteman · 5 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'March 1 marked the beginning of Women's History Month. This year's theme is as fitting as it is exciting: "Women Inspiring Innovation Through Imagination: Celebrating Women in Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics (STEM)."

The nation this year recognizes such extraordinary women as Patricia Era Bath (1942), whose invention of the Laserphaco Probe was an important milestone in the advent of laser cataract surgery; Rita R. Colwell (1934), the first woman director of the National Science Foundation; Susan A. Gerbi (1944), a molecular cell biologist whose research has potential significance in understanding the role of hormones in certain cancers; and Flossie Wong-Staal (1946), a virologist and molecular biologist whose work made it possible to develop HIV tests.

And I want to acknowledge the thousands of women who work throughout the Department making sure that groundbreaking biomedical research moves forward, that life-saving vaccines are getting to the public, that community health clinics are accessible to families who have nowhere else to go, that drugs are safe, that our seniors get the health care they need, and that our young children at risk get the Head Start support that is vital to their future success in school.'

U.S. Department of State - Women in Action: Mentoring the Next Generation of Global Women Leaders

Minuteman · 5 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Department of State will bring 85 women and men from 57 countries to the United States March 4-22 for Women in Action, a special initiative of the International Visitor Leadership Program. This initiative will provide a forum for global leaders across sectors to discuss supporting the next generation of young women leaders.

Women in Action is part of the Department of State's efforts to promote women's social and economic development and full participation in civic and political life. ...
...
The participants are community activists, elected officials, academics, and representatives of organizations that are devoted to preparing women across the world for leadership roles. ...'

Utah lawmakers support idea of finding fault when determining alimony

Matt · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SALT LAKE CITY — State lawmakers edged closer Thursday to making Utah a state where fault is considered in setting alimony following a divorce.

"The court struggles with how much commentary to allow or not allow in these cases," Rep. Kay McIff, R-Richfield, told the House Judiciary Committee regarding his bill, HB338.

The committee voted to support the bill, which would amend state law to allow a court to consider fault when awarding alimony. It now heads to the full body of the House for further consideration.'

Man Not Father-Forced To Pay Child Support

Matt · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Phoenix, Arizona (CNN) - This man in Phoenix says he's part of a growing issue.

He's being forced to pay support for a child that's been proven not to be his.

Ken Smith says DNA testing shows he's not the father of a six year old boy.

He has since cut off contact with the boy and says the child's mother has no idea who the father is.

But, because his name's on the birth certificate, Smith is on the financial hook.'

With parental rights voided, man not subject to child support payments

Matt · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PARKERSBURG – A circuit judge has ruled a Wood County family law judge erred in ordering a Parkersburg man to support a child who's no longer his.

Judge J.D. Beane on Jan. 22 granted Larry Ryan's writ of prohibition against Judge Brian C. Dempster. In his writ, Ryan argued Dempster usurped his authority by making him pay child support for a daughter from whom the state severed his parental rights two years ago.

According to Ryan's petition, his ex-wife, Destiny, initiated divorce proceedings against him in 2010. The reasons for the divorce are not stated.

A year later, the state Department of Health and Human Resources initiated abuse and neglect proceedings against Ryan regarding the welfare of his daughter, Grace. Though it is unclear the specific reasons for DHHR's actions, the petition says Senior Status Cabell Circuit Judge John Cummings on March 29 terminated Ryan's parental rights.

No reason is given why Cummings was appointed to the case. Nevertheless, the petition states Cummings' order also relieved Ryan of his obligation to pay Destiny child support.'

Judge orders $1 a month in child support for the next 1000+ years

Matt · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Colonial Heights man will no longer have to pay child support for a child that biologically isn't his and the judge worked out a unique deal for the $23,000 in back child support he currently owes.

Dwayne Parsons is off the hook for a child DNA tests show he didn't father. However, since Parsons signed the birth certificate, the judge is holding Parsons responsible for the promise he made 13 years ago.

In court, the judge explained that there are "certain aspects of the law that seems grossly unfair."

"Unfortunately the law is the law, my message to everybody is if you're unsure, about you being the father of the child, do not sign that birth certificate - that's a well lesson learned," said Parsons.'

AIDS.gov: "Using new media to reach women and girls"

Minuteman · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'National Women and Girls HIV/AIDS Awareness Day (NWGHAAD) is on March 10th. The goal of this annual observance day is to encourage people across the country to take action to address HIV/AIDS and raise awareness of its impact on women and girls. This year's theme is "Share Knowledge. Take Action." Sharing stories, photos, and resources using new media are among the ways you can take action on this important day.
...
How is the HIV community using new media to reach women and girls?

Red Pump Project: For the fifth year in a row, the "Rock the Red Pump" campaign is encouraging bloggers to add the "Rock the Red Pump" widget on their blogs and to dedicate a blog post on March 10th to the topic of HIV among women and girls. The Red Pump Project also has a photo-sharing campaign where women can upload pictures on new media sites of themselves wearing their favorite pair of red shoes.'

Prosecutor Scrutinized For Intense Approach During Testimony

Mastodon · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'He raised his voice and acted out scenarios in dramatic fashion. He snapped as she dodged questions, cutting her off mid-sentence. Arias held her own periodically, appearing to smugly toy with Martinez as she smirked and repeatedly answered yes or no questions with "sure" and "I guess."

The exchanges rattled the seasoned prosecutor as the case at times devolved into a showdown of wit and will. The judge had to admonish both to stop speaking over each other.

"I think I'm more focused on your posture and your tone and your anger so it's hard to process the questions," Arias told Martinez.

...

Some experts say the approach could undermine the prosecution's case, diverting attention from the brutal attack and putting the spotlight on him. Others compliment his tenacity as a no-nonsense tactic aimed at stumping Arias and getting her off script after having several years in jail to rehearse her testimony.

...

It's a prosecutor's dream case largely based on Arias' own actions and repeated lies. She dumped the gun in the desert, got rid of her bloody clothes, tried to clean the scene at Alexander's home and even left the victim a voicemail on his mobile phone within hours of killing him and dragging his body into the shower.

...

"And if the jury comes back with death, it won't be because of Juan Martinez. It will be in spite of him," said Phoenix defense attorney Mel McDonald, a former Maricopa County judge and federal prosecutor.

...

Alexander had been stabbed and slashed 27 times, had his throat slit and was shot in the forehead.

...

California criminal defense attorney Michael Cardoza, who has been following the case, said that while Martinez's approach may have turned off some jurors who see a fragile woman on the witness stand, regardless of the heinous nature of the killing, his toned-down style on his final day of questioning Arias on Thursday sealed the deal.

...

As she described her efforts to avoid suspicion, Arias buried her face in her hands and sobbed. Martinez continued to press her. He later turned to the judge and simply said "I don't have anything else," then unassumingly returned to his chair.'

President Clinton's Event Disrupted by Anti-Circumcision Activists

Mastodon · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Surely, President Clinton was a little freaked out last night when in the middle of his event -- a Clinton Foundation Millennium Network talk in New York featuring the former president, Chelsea Clinton, and actor Ed Norton -- a whistle blew and a group of men stood up, held hands, and chanted, "Stop exploiting Africans; circumcision does not stop AIDS!"

The protesters were self-described "intactivists" -- those who believe that circumcision is actually a mutilation of the genitals.'

Proposed men’s group faces hostile policy

Mastodon · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An effort to guard the empowerment of women’s voices on campus took form Monday when the Ryerson Students’ Union (RSU)* swiftly adopted a bold new policy rejecting the concept of misandry – the hatred or fear of men.

Neda Hamzavi, a faculty of community services representative on the RSU Board of Directors (BOD), watched her amendment to the RSU’s policy on women’s issues pass without any debate, discussion or dispute. This could cause conflict at a time when controversial men’s issues movements are on the rise at university campuses.
...
The amendment applies to a Women’s Issues clause that provides a strict mandate for which activities the RSU opposes. Outlined in the board’s agenda, the new policy rejects:

“4. Groups, Meetings or events [that] promote misogynist views towards women and ideologies that promote gender inequity, challenges women’s right to bodily autonomy, or justifies sexual assault 5. The concept of misandry as it ignores structural inequity that exist between men and women 6. Groups, meetings events or initiatives [that] negate the need to centre women’s voices in the struggle for gender equity.”'

See MANN article here.

German President Under Fire From Feminists Over Sexism Debate

Mastodon · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The honeymoon is over for Germany's 11th federal president: after a relatively good start into his tenure, Joachim Gauck has now managed to draw the ire of Germany's feminists.

Gauck joined the sexism debate currently raging in his country by telling Der Spiegel news magazine: "Certainly much remains to be done but I cannot see widespread misbehavior of men against women in our country"

Sounds innocent enough but, Gauck also detected "virtue fury" (Tugendfuror) in that debate and at least some feminists are furious, indeed.'

India: Only men can be booked for rape

Mastodon · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Bowing to pressure from women activists, the government has decided to restore the term rape in criminal law that states only men can be booked for committing the offence against women. It has also decided to lower the age of consent for sex from 18 to 16 years. These are fresh changes proposed by the Centre in its criminal laws (amendment) bill, which will replace the rape ordinance issued on February 3.
...
Explaining the reasons behind scrapping the comprehensive and gender-neutral definition of sexual assault, which would have covered abuse by the same sex as well as paedophilia, a senior government official said: "IPC section 377 already deals with crimes involving unnatural sex and related activity. Also, some of the concerns raised by women's organizations merited serious consideration and that is what has been done."

The government is also expected to propose enhanced jail terms for those found guilty of outraging the modesty of women and using obscene gestures or words against them.'

UK: Men are victims of domestic abuse too

Mastodon · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CORONATION Street is currently exploring and raising the awareness of domestic violence through the character of Tyrone Dobbs who has been suffering at the hands of his new wife.

It is a shocking picture that is being painted in the popular soap but it acts to dispel the myth that only women can be victims of domestic violence.

For one Hucknall man, seeing the images of Kirsty physically and emotionally abuse her partner has brought back to the fore his own experiences.

But recently, the dad of two has decided to come out of the shadows and confront his past to tackle the prejudice and biased attitude that women are the only victims in domestic violence.'

The Violence Against Women Act reveals structural bias, political gains

Mastodon · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Domestic violence is intolerable – and so are gender biased laws like the Violence Against Women Act; acts like this tell an incomplete story of domestic violence for political gain.

Proponents are so adamant for this legislation that legitimate objections for debate are always squandered to demagoguery. This is the first of a long list of issues this law hides under its thick framing effect that automatically produces an improper assumption: anyone who's against it must be pro-women's violence.
...
Due to this practice, many forget that significant amounts of domestic violence cases happen to both sexes as well as children. The same study that found that 1.3 million women were assaulted by their partner every year also found that 835,000 men fell victim to the same violence. Aggregate totals of more than 250 studies since the 1970s find that men and women nearly split partner violence rates halfway. One study in 2011 conducted by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention found that 40 percent of severe, physical domestic violence cases were against men.'

Domestic Violence vs. Parental Alienation: Who’s right and who’s wrong

Mastodon · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ever since the term “Parental Alienation” was defined by Richard Gardner in the 80's, and it began being used in child custody disputes, advocates for Domestic Violence and women’s groups and some family lawyers purport that Parental Alienation is junk science and is damaging to the family court cases.

Father’s rights groups on the other hand, advocate for its existence and claim that women are the majority of perpetrators.

Who is right, and who is wrong?
...
Undoubtedly, research shows that Parental Alienation is as real as Domestic Violence and both-women and men’s groups-are right to a certain extent; despite their arguments they are in fact saying the same thing only expressing it in different ways.

Courts wouldn’t hand an angry man a gun. Yet innocent children are taken from a loving parent and sent to an abuser on daily bases by our family courts, due to false accusations of Parental Alienation and Domestic Violence. Why is this happening in today’s society, where we have all sorts of technology and access to information on a variety of media sites?'

Mental Health Counselor Stripped of Domestic Violence Cases

Mastodon · 6 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last January, we wrote about the anti-male bias many people perceive in family court. Part of the story dealt with a veteran mental health counselor named Douglas Bartholomew, who provided a damning court-ordered assessment of a man accused of abusing his wife--an assessment one judge said was the worst he had seen in his 22 years on the bench.

Thanks to a Department of Health action just made public, Bartholomew will no longer conduct such assessments in domestic violence cases, once a mainstay of his practice. The assessments are key to family court cases because they often determine whether someone (usually a man) accused of domestic violence can see his children and under what conditions. And as we we reported last year, allegations of abuse are common, and sometimes used strategically, in contentious divorce cases.'

Why Does Yahoo CEO Marissa Mayer Anger Lefty Feminists So Much?

Mastodon · 7 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why are feminists on the left so angered by women like Yahoo! CEO Marissa Mayer? Or Facebook's COO Sheryl Sandberg? What is it about these C-suite successes that make them the ire of Maureen Dowd or Joanne Bamberger?

Americans have been led to believe that the modern feminist movement is about freedom, equality under the law, and the right to make choices – an equation with many different variables and endless outcomes. But more and more traditional feminists today are angry when women fail to make the choices – or say the things – they think women should.'

The Pay Gap Is Not as Bad as You (and Sheryl Sandberg) Think

Mastodon · 7 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's a galling and often cited statistic: women make 77 (or 81, or 82) cents to a man's dollar. President Obama campaigned on it last year, announcing in an ad that "women being paid 77 cents on the dollar for doing the same work as men isn't just unfair — it hurts families." Everyone from Lilly Ledbetter to Marlo Thomas has repeated it. And there it is on Page 6 of Sheryl Sandberg's book, Lean In:

...

If you control for things like college majors and occupations, the pay gap, or the discrepancy between men's and women's earnings that can be attributed to bias and discrimination, shrinks down to about one-third of its size. This is what the American Association of University Women determined when it surveyed male and female college graduates one year after graduation and found that, absent all explanatory variables, even including a graduate's GPA and how selective their school was and how long they were unemployed after graduation, the women made 93% of what the men were making. In other words, 93 cents to the man's dollar. Not 77 cents. Not 81 cents. Ninety-three cents.'

Quinnipiac and Title IX: Where It All Started

Mastodon · 7 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It all started back in the Spring of 2009. Quinnipiac University announced it was cutting men's golf, men's outdoor track and women's volleyball due to budget cuts.
...
This past Monday, Federal Court judges ruled that Quinnipiac University still has failed to show that it provides equal opportunity for the female athletes.
...
Quinnipiac has 13 women's varsity sports, including the women's volleyball team, acrobatics and tumbling, golf and rugby.

The men only have seven varsity sports.'

Paternity Fraud: Should DNA Tests Be Mandatory For Newborn Babies?

Mastodon · 7 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ages ago, when I dated a guy in the Air Force, he told me it was mandatory that children with military parents be tested for correct paternity to receive benefits. I cringed, arguing that it was insulting and disrespectful and interfered with patient confidentiality and anyway, who would seriously lie about the paternity of a child?

That only happens on Maury, right?

Actually...it happens to more than 250,000 men a year in America. And, it happened to an old college friend of mine who just found out that the child he had given his name to, wasn't his.
...
And then, days, months or years later, you find out that that child does not share your genetic makeup. You find out that you were deceived. And if the duped father decides that he wants to leave whatever union created that child, he is still required to legally finance that child's life.'

Why Britain needs a pro-male party

Mastodon · 7 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A few weeks ago a new British political party was established, Justice for Men & Boys (and the women who love them) I'm the party's leader - and we plan to change the face of British politics.

The interests of men and boys have been ever more assaulted in the UK for more than 30 years - a trend accelerating after Margaret Thatcher, a true meritocrat, resigned as prime minister in 1990.

Terrified of the prospect of alienating the ‘female vote', politicians have enacted legislation, and issued guidance for civil servants, which have been ever more influenced by militant feminist thinking. They have had no democratic mandate for doing so.'

What's Worse -- Glass Ceilings or Glass Cellars?

Mastodon · 7 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Benevolent sexism. Motherhood penalty. Dominant negotiation paradigm. These were some of the ideas discussed at a conference on gender and work hosted by Harvard Business School last week. According to the academic presenters, all three contribute to ongoing discrimination against women in the corporate world. And they have the research to prove it.

...

Recently, however, an HBR reader introduced me to three very different terms related to gender and work: Apex fallacy. Glass cellar. Feminine imperative. All of these, he argued, are contributing to a "war on men" in the workplace. This was an issue I'd asked about in my essay called "The Silent Sex" in the March issue of HBR. ...

...

In my years as journalist, I've heard stories about both traditional discrimination and the reverse; about women who have been passed over for promotions and those whose contribution to organizational diversity has helped them leapfrog more qualified men. I know the statistics on leadership: women are greatly underrepresented. But what's the view like today from the middle manager's office, the R&D lab, the IT service desk, the call center, the assembly line, the retail store floor, the college classroom? As the mother of both a boy and a girl, whose future do I have to worry about most?'

Will Ashley Judd be Kentucky's Obama?

Mastodon · 7 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'... Celebrity is especially powerful with voters who don't pay attention to politics. Nowadays, people feel they know a celebrity but put little weight on policy and facts. A Country-Western family might rival even a Senate Minority Leader.

...

Ashley Judd argued that lack of respect for women is an example of "gender violence" (around 4:07 PM). This is a common feminist scam. A vast spectrum of unrelated experiences are smelted together to create a false narrative of how horrible men are. Hype is seen as necessary to accomplish change. Judd argued that gender violence stretches across a wide spectrum.

...

Judd's speech gave voice to the male-bashing, Andrea Dworkin school of feminism. That is, only men are to blame. Judd believes sexual violence comes from "trauma bonding" in which female victims are dependent upon the men who abuse them. In fact, crime statistics reveal that women physically attack men more often in domestic violence. In the real world, violence is an inexcusable individual failure in which gender is irrelevant. But feminists want to sell violence as a socially-approved cultural construct of systematic patriarchal oppression. Ironically, liberalism's hostility to personal accountability and certain punishment creates the breeding ground for the violence they obsess about.

Judd argued (at 4:14 PM) that male conversations amongst men encourage rape and violence against women. (This author has been mysteriously excluded from those conservations.) A tearful student broke down crying (at 4:11 PM) with the logical result of feminist hysteria, asking "How do I keep going?" after being convinced that the entire culture is a giant conspiracy against her.

...

Judd has said some silly things. However, she is infinitely more skillful and persuasive in saying nutty things than Republicans are willing to admit. Like Obama, Judd can dish out liberal goofiness and make it sound fabulous. Therefore, she can do more than win one U.S. Senate seat. She can confuse and deceive gullible voters all across the country.'

SAVE: Thank Eric Holder for his Statement on VAWA's Inclusion

Matt · 8 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

It makes me happy to bring you good news.

The Violence Against Women Act that passed out of the House, and is expected to be signed into law by President Obama today, covers every victim. Yay!

In the words of Attorney General Eric Holder, "I applaud Congress for passing a bipartisan reauthorization that protects everyone - women and men, gay and straight, children and adults of all races, ethnicities, countries of origin, and tribal affiliations."

SAVE has documented widespread discriminatory practices against male, lesbian/gay, and immigrant victims of abuse. So, even though we didn't get everything we wanted in this reauthorization of VAWA, we are celebrating the inclusion of all victims.

Please join us in thanking Eric Holder for his bold statement on VAWA inclusion:

Email: AskDOJ-at-usdoj.gov
Phone: 202-353-1555

Learn more. Then visit our Facebook page and share your thoughts. Or tweet @saveservicesorg.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

U.S. Department of State Press Release: "International Women's Day"

Minuteman · 8 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'On March 8, the United States joins people around the globe in honoring women and celebrating their contributions toward building a more peaceful, just, and prosperous world. The State Department, which has been led by strong, smart, and remarkably capable diplomats from Madeleine Albright to Condoleezza Rice and my predecessor Hillary Rodham Clinton, stands as a lasting example of the powerful change that determined women can make and sustain on behalf of America in the modern world.

It is a great and too often untold global success story that so much of the political, economic, and social progress of the last few decades could never have been imaginable without the leadership and courage of strong women. ...
...
Yet, despite the significant gains women and girls have made, too many challenges and barriers remain. In far too many places, women continue to be excluded from the ballot box and political leadership, and from land ownership and credit markets. In far too many places, girls are still kept home from school or are forced into early marriage. Too many women are being silenced, abused, or subjected to violence simply because of their gender. ...'

Feminists say anti-violence law victimizes women

Mastodon · 8 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some social conservatives, meanwhile, argue that VAWA and other domestic violence legislation are ideologically driven, presuming that patriarchy and sexism are the cause of domestic violence. That presupposition undermines various civil rights, including access to due process and equal treatment under the law.

For example, Stephen Baskerville, author of Taken Into Custody: The War Against Fathers, Marriage, and the Family, said mandatory arrest laws encourage women involved in divorce and custody disputes to level false allegations of abuse.

The police will come “to take her husband away, and [she need only] say, ‘I’m in fear,’” he said. The husband, meanwhile, faces possible prison time or weeks of classes on how to treat women. “Why do we need special laws [for domestic violence]?” he asked. “So we can bypass the due process laws.”

Ed Bartlett, president of SAVE, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments, said he would support VAWA with changes, such as restoring “the presumption of innocence to the accused.” He also believes that VAWA needs to better define domestic violence, claiming, “because of expansive and vague definitions, minor incidents of partner conflict are being criminalized.”'

"The Dudes Doth Protest Too Much, Methinks"

Mastodon · 8 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But last Tuesday when anti-male-circumcision activists from a group called Intaction (you'd be forgiven for guessing they were called U.S. Uncut), interrupted President Clinton at a Clinton Foundation Millennium Network talk in New York, someone had to take umbrage with the outrage.

They were there, eight members strong, to protest Clinton's support for male circumcision in Africa to battle their very real AIDS crisis.

That's right, someone is trying to do something about the AIDS epidemic in Africa and there's a group unrelated to anyone dying of AIDS in Africa protesting one of the tactics. Not because those tactics don't work (there's a lot of evidence that they do), but because they personally don't like them.
...

But my main issue is: of all the things that one can chose as the evil they must devote their lives to stamping out … this is it? Not famine, war, disease, poverty, pollution, corruption, child abuse, slavery, exploited sex workers, exploited children, sweatshops, union busting, soda size-shrinking, forest razing, coal mining, whaling, shark finning, the prison industrial complex, the death penalty, illiteracy, female genital mutilation, AIDS in Africa, being Jamie Dimon, bullying, disenfranchisement, predatory lending, being Walmart, being Monsanto, being any subject of any documentary on Netflix, being Netflix, pornography, child pornography, United Airlines (I don't forget), censorship, racism, sexism, classism, high taxes, low taxes, handicap access and any land use issue within 10 miles of your home? Not one of those is more important than the extreme ick factor (because it's not supported by data) of a ubiquitous snip on your extremity?'

Towson U. cuts mens baseball, soccer teams

Mastodon · 8 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON - Towson University president announced Friday the school is eliminating its men's soccer and baseball teams at the end of the season for budget reasons.

The move to reconfigure the athletics program is an effort to achieve the school's three goals, university President Maravene Loeschke said in a news release. Those goals are long term financial stability, compliance with Federal Title IX requirements and the ability to stay competitive in NCAA Division I.

Loeschke is taking the recommendation of the university's athletics task force which ran an external review and asked for public input in how Towson should proceed. The university will be adding men's tennis.'

Fire alarm went off as MRA spoke at the U of Toronto - but the show went on

Mastodon · 8 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'I was expecting the police officers, the provocative placards, and the rent-a-protesters with neon hair and black face coverings.

I was also expecting the fire alarm to go off—and it did—five minutes after Janice Fiamengo's lecture started in the nearly full George Ignatieff Theatre at the University of Toronto on Thursday evening.

After all, the last time a person spoke against academic feminism on campus, when Warren Farrell visited in November, approximately 100 protesters barred the doors. They wouldn't try that again, but I figured they'd try to shut things down, and fire alarms can be effective if, during the confusion, enough people give up and leave.

What I wasn't expecting was a full house 20 minutes later, after the fire department gave the all clear, or that the controversial University of Ottawa professor would make it all the way through her lecture What's wrong with women's studies? without an angry mob attempting to shout her down.

...

I don't know that Fiamengo made a sound academic case. What I do know is that she deserves respect for gathering evidence and calmly presenting it. She also offered advice all students should heed. "Educate yourselves so you can challenge [each other]," and, "do it will style, not hatred."

She's right on that. The freedom to debate unpopular ideas is something universities have a duty to protect. On Thursday night at the University of Toronto, that ideal was challenged but prevailed.'

'Can men be taught not to rape?'

Mastodon · 8 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As Maxwell, a rape survivor herself, told Salon on Friday, “I don’t think we need to be telling a rape survivor that statistics are not on your side. That’s insensitive.” But where she drew outrage was in her suggestion to Hannity that “I don’t think that we should be telling women anything. I think we should be telling men not to rape women and start the conversation there.” She told Hannity, “You’re talking about this as if it’s some faceless, nameless criminal, when a lot of times it’s someone you know and trust,” adding, “If you train men not to grow up to become rapists, you prevent rape.
...
... We need to remember, as a revealing Reddit thread last year proved, that a rapist can be your friend or your boyfriend or your co-worker. We need to acknowledge that a rapist can be your husband. That, as chilling as it is to admit, as Maxwell says, “Those kids in Steubenville were average guys.”
...
... We’re telling women to be afraid of the person in the bushes when it’s the person in your house. We need a reality check. We’re talking about the wrong things. We’re asking the wrong questions.”'

U.S. Department of State - "Advancing the Status of Women and Girls Around the World"

Minuteman · 8 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'No country can get ahead if it leaves half of its people behind. This is why the United States believes gender equality is critical to our shared goals of prosperity, stability, and peace, and why investing in women and girls worldwide is critical to U.S. foreign policy. —Secretary of State John Kerry

Global stability, peace, and prosperity depend on protecting and advancing the rights of women and girls around the world. Research shows that progress in women's employment, health, and education can lead to greater economic growth and stronger societies. Evidence demonstrates that integrating women's perspectives into peace negotiations and security efforts helps prevent conflict and can lead to more durable peace agreements. When women and men are equally empowered as political and social actors, governments are more representative and effective.

The Department of State's Office of Global Women's Issues (S/GWI) ensures that the rights of women and girls are fully integrated into the formulation and conduct of United States foreign policy. Working with the White House, USAID, the Department of Defense, and other agencies, as well as with civil society and the private sector, the Department of State has launched multiple and wide-ranging global initiatives to promote women's social and economic development, integrate women into peace and security building, address and prevent gender-based violence, and ensure women's full participation in civic and political life.'

F&F: End Paternity Fraud: Make DNA Tests Mandatory

Matt · 9 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The GlobalGrind is taking a poll on paternity fraud. Vote now. Pass it along to all your friends and family. With enough votes, it may be helpful to legislation Fathers and Families is promoting to end paternity fraud.

According to the reporter, Christina Coleman, “It's like a jacked, human form of credit card scam. Paternity fraud. And it happens more often than you think. It is, essentially, a crime.”

Which is why Fathers and Families believes the only solution is widespread DNA testing at birth of children born out of wedlock to determine their true biological paternity.

According to the American Association of Blood Banks, 28% of paternity tests showed the man tested was not the father.'

Has Swedish feminism gone too far?

Mastodon · 9 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ann Helena Rudberg joined the feminist movement in the 1970s, to fight for women's rights because she saw her mother suffer violence at home. Today she argues women have equal rights and that feminist political parties are taking things too far.

Rudberg said: "It's a power struggle between men and women. And the effect of that is that on one side we have women and on the other side men. And this is not good for the children or for anyone."

At a school in Stockholm named 'Egalia', teaching gender equality is a priority. Boys and girls are encouraged not to be limited by stereotypical roles or games. And since last year, there is a new word in the Swedish dictionary: "hen", which is a neutral pronoun for "he" or "she". Not everyone agrees about that.

School director Lotta Rajalin said: "They think we are going to change girls to boys and boys to girls and that's of course not what we are doing. We like to give every human being the same rights, the same possibilities, the same responsibilities. And that is a question of democracy."'

Cupcakes With Army Soldiers Get Kid In Hot Water At School

Mastodon · 9 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 9-year-old boy's birthday cupcakes sparked a school controversy that just keeps growing, with scores of people lining up against a school principal who found the cupcake's topping "inappropriate."

The boy was chided, and so were his parents, for cupcakes featuring little green Army men on the top.

Schall Elementary School principal Susan Wright called the parents at home and said the cupcakes were insensitive in the wake of the Sandy Hook school shooting. School staff pulled off the Army men before they were served.'

Why women’s studies needs an extreme makeover

Mastodon · 9 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nothing says free speech like pulling the fire alarm. It was a quarter past seven last night when police emptied U of T’s George Ignatieff Theatre. Keynote speaker Dr. Janice Fiamengo, an English professor at the University of Ottawa, rolled her eyes and adjusted her blouse as the crowd poured out of the building and onto the sidewalk to mingle with the small throng of protesters—pretty girls with big placards and little patience. They wanted Dr. Fiamengo to take her message elsewhere. But firemen came and went, and the professor, once a radical feminist, proceeded to do what the University of Toronto Men’s Issues Awareness Society, and the Canadian Association for Equality invited her to do: denounce women’s studies.

The discipline has devolved into an “intellectually incoherent and dishonest” one, she argued, replacing a “callow set of slogans for real thought.” It’s man-hating, anti-Western, and fundamentally illiberal. “It champions a “kind of masculinity that isn’t very masculine at all,” and shuts down freedom of debate, hence the fire alarm.'

...

The women’s studies crowd looked constipated. Fiamengo’s arguments weren’t going down easy, this one—her best—in particular: women’s studies “can’t be about the pursuit of truth” because it has an “ideological base.” Its goal is to push the ideology that women are victims and men are perpetrators. Therefore, any evidence to the contrary, regardless of its veracity, is unwelcome. In other words, ideology censors truth. “If you believe you are righteous,” she said, “you don’t challenge other views.”'

Marginalized and on the defensive, university conservatives forced to grow tougher

Mastodon · 9 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Toronto witnessed a case study Thursday night, when the Men's Issues Awareness Society invited Janice Fiamengo, a University of Ottawa literature professor and columnist for American right-wing blogs, to argue the case against feminism.

Having won many big battles of equality, academic feminism has now turned to the petty ones of moral superiority, and has become, she said, empty, incoherent, dishonest, defensive, illiberal and foolish.

"The suspiciousness of feminism was once its strength and is now its weakness," Prof. Fiamengo said.

Naturally for the modern academic climate, criticizing feminism raises serious security concerns, and the venue was changed at the last minute from a classroom to a theatre with doors that campus security could easily manage. Last time this group hosted a speaker, police were called to defend a classroom from student protesters.'

Pop-Tart ‘gun’ suspension: Seriously, folks?

Matt · 10 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Even the WaPost is coming to realize the ridiculousness of today's "standards". They fall short of course of calling it what it is: a war on boys. Excerpt:

'A 7-year-old Anne Arundel County boy was suspended Friday for chewing his breakfast pastry into the shape of a gun and saying, “bang, bang”— an offense that the school described as a threat to other students, according to his family.
...
Welch said an assistant principal at Park Elementary School told him that his son pointed the pastry at a classmate. The boy maintains he pointed it at the ceiling, according to his father.
...
Look, Reality, this is too much. Leave this sort of grotesque parody to the Onion*, where it belongs. It is stories like this that have reduced the Onion to tweeting unspeakable things about 9-year-olds. That is not what anyone wants to happen. But you have left them no choice, continually encroaching on their territory like this. Please, stay out of it. They might at least have made it funny. This is just depressing.
...
It turned out that the Pop-Tart was menacing only for its shape, not for its contents. But give it time. At the rate things are turning absurd, that’s hardly a stretch.'

---
*You've never heard of "The Onion"?? Well, you're missing out. Read it here. (Just be advised, some consider it NSFW, and indeed, some employers block it.)

Seattle police arrest woman suspected in workplace shooting

Mastodon · 10 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman suspected of shooting and critically wounding a 65-year-old man inside a Seattle parks department building was arrested at her home Friday, hours after police say she fled the scene.

The shooting prompted the city to shut down all community centers and put nearby schools in north Seattle on high alert. The woman, a parks employee, had keys to city facilities, police Deputy Chief Nick Metz said.

Police initially characterized the shooting as workplace violence. A motive hasn't been determined.

Seattle police identified the woman as 46-year-old Carolyn Piksa. The Seattle Times reported that she works as an assistant coordinator for community centers and has been a Parks and Recreation Department employee since 1986.'

Gendered Laws: VAWA, IRCA and the Future of Immigration Reform

Mastodon · 10 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During my research in the undocumented community, I have spoken to a few undocumented men who are victims of domestic abuse. One man, who I call Pablo, explained to me that he was uncomfortable in his living situations with his citizen partner because she "has the power to deport me." While the relationship was not physically abusive, he talked at length about how she was "possessive." At times, when they disagreed, she would turn have the Internet or the cable turned off until he would defer to her; because she was a citizen and he was not, the bills were in her name and he could do nothing. He feared that if she got angry enough she could call the police and have him deported for simply disagreeing with her. As this continued, he became "afraid to argue with her."

The popular perception that domestic violence is a women's issue dissuaded Pablo, and likely other men, from perceiving this as abuse, let alone reporting it. As a result, VAWA serves to further support this gendered stereotype of domestic violence. While its statutes protect men, its name genders the law. In this case the law depends on an assumption that women are victims of domestic violence, ignoring the needs of men and the intersection of gender and legal status power relations that may play out within mixed status families.

While legislators have sought to pay attention to gender, highlighting the needs of undocumented women and children in abusive situations, focusing on women oversimplifies the situation and leaves out vulnerable undocumented men. This effectively limits VAWA's potential reach, as men, like Pablo, do not realize that they can avail themselves of it.'

A "Declaration of Independence from Feminism"

Matt · 10 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Declaration and discussion here. Excerpt:

'But when a long train of injuries, inequalities, discriminations, and violations of fundamental liberties, pursuing invariably the same outcome, evinces a design within the Feminist Establishment to render the common man into a second-class citizen, when the collateral damage caused to women and society is regarded as insubstantial in the pursuit of a narrow political agenda, when there exists a lack of substantial effort among its constituents to reform such an Establishment, it is the right of citizens, it is their duty, to reform or abolish it.
...
In addition, despite Feminism's pervasive claims of not being a hate movement, the cold hard truth is that the Feminist Establishment has created a vast array of victim-advocacy bureaucracies, including campus rape "crisis" centers, domestic violence shelters, lobbyist groups, Women's Studies departments, and various others, which all have a vested interest in spreading as much anti-male propaganda as possible to legitimize their funding, their ideology, and their own existance.
...
All concerned and fair-minded men and women are invited to sign this Declaration. If you do not have a YouTube account, email your name to mra.unite@gmail.com, and your signature will be posted here. Please circulate this Declaration to as many people as you know, whether by email, blog and forum posts, Facebook and MySpace, text messages, word-of-mouth, and any other means you may have.'

Available as .pdf here.

The Problem of Males on the Feminized Campus

Matt · 10 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now the statistical moralists have a problem they are eager not to see: the perception that males are not doing well in the system of education. Allie Grasgreen in Inside Higher Education reviews a book published by the Russell Sage Foundation, certifying that women outpace men in college action in a ratio of 1.4 to 1. Grasgreen delineates the conclusion of the authors (Thomas diPrete and Claudia Buchmann) that there is inadequate gender integration in higher ed and that males are unrealistic about what they need do to become effective men. But there is also a cultural problem here: the now conventional anti-male attitude on campus. I know from my own teaching experience that the pervasiveness of this attitude, launched on the first day of class with a stark rape seminar, causes males, especially of blue-collar origin, to flee a community they quickly come to see as suffused with the gender-studies rebuke of men now built into college life.

A consistent failure of the school system is reflected in its failure to educate males and females equally effectively. If the problem category were race or religion it would be politically intolerable. But boys and men--no problem. Where, for example, is the White House Council on Boys and Men, still non-existent years after the nifty one on girls and women was proudly brandished? Presumably lost somewhere in electoral politics and some dingy acceptance of payback for that vaunted 5000 years of patriarchy. We can do better.'

Researcher seeks survey input from male DV victims

Matt · 10 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Study home page here. Excerpt:

'The Men's Experiences with Partner Aggression Project is an ongoing research endeavor housed at Clark University that is funded by the National Institutes of Health.
...
Our goal is to better understand the experiences of men who are in relationships with women who use violence. Extensive research has shown that men are at risk for sustaining partner violence in their relationships, yet few studies have investigated their experiences, and there are few resources available to such men. This is an under-recognized problem in the United States, and by conducting this research, we hope to provide much needed information on these men, their relationships, and their needs.
...
... If you are interested in participating in this survey, please click on the Click Here to Participate link ...'

UK: Open up family court hearings, says senior judge

Matt · 10 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A senior judge has made an important ruling in favour of transparency in the family courts.

Mr Justice Mostyn lifted a ban on Christopher Booker, The Sunday Telegraph columnist, reporting on a case involving the future of children who are living with their mother.

The injunction barred Mr Booker from making any mention of the dispute, known as MvM and the London Borough of Sutton.

However, last week the High Court heard how the order prevented the reporting of proceedings that were “clearly in the public interest”.

In his ruling, Mr Justice Mostyn said he was lifting the injunction “because the emphasis should be on transparency” in the courts.'

Wage Gap Bake Sale at UNC Gender Week

Mastodon · 10 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'After a decade of suffering paroxysms of indignation over campus conservatives' holding "affirmative-action bake sales" to illustrate the inherent unfairness of race-based admissions, it appears that liberals are adopting the concept as their own. At UNC–Chapel Hill's upcoming Gender Week (sponsored by the Women's Center, naturally), there will be a four-hour "Wage Gap Bake Sale." White women will be given a 23 percent discount on baked goods, since, according to feminist literature, they earn only 77 cents for every dollar earned by white males. Black women will accordingly be given a 36 percent discount; no mention was made of discounts offered to black males, Latinos, Latinas, or any other minority groups.

Of course, in their infinite myopia, the UNC feminists managed to get the concept wrong. Affirmative-action bake sales illustrate the unfairness to white males by charging them higher prices; the Wage Gap Bake Sale also charges white males a higher price — illustrating . . . the same unfairness to white males that affirmative-action bake sales show?'

21st century man: lost and anachronistic

Mastodon · 10 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men, some say, are in trouble. They're stupid, they lack ambition, they're depressed, they're killing each other and they're increasingly alienated from their children. In popular culture, idiots and Peter Pans are celebrated, from the degenerate buffoonery of the The Hangover gang to Charlie Sheen's uber-douche bag on Two and A Half Men. While women have made incredible strides in the past 50 years, substantially reshaping the expectations of their gender, men have wallowed in their own cliches.

Males are increasingly becoming second-class citizens in education, with boys falling behind girls both in participation and literacy, while the gap between the genders in tertiary study completion is growing. In 2009 in Australia, 77 per cent of all suicides were males, while they also accounted for 71 per cent of murder victims. And according to a 2010 Family Court report based on almost 4000 cases, fathers were awarded the most time with their children in only 18 per cent of litigations; in instances when the parents came to an earlier agreement, that number fell to 9 per cent.'

New Zealand: 'Silenced' claim by men's rights lobby

Mastodon · 10 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men's rights campaigners claim they've been silenced by a government select committee reviewing controversial planned changes to the Family Court.

Wellington psychologist Craig Jackson said he was told to cut part of his submission or he wouldn't be heard; another campaigner, Adam Cowie, appears to have been excluded entirely.

Jackson and Cowie are among 350 submitters on the bill, but Justice and Electoral Reform committee chairman Scott Simpson says he hasn't gagged anyone, but has to tread a careful line when discussing custody battles.'

Charlotte's percentage of male domestic violence victims rises

Mastodon · 10 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Women make up the vast majority of domestic violence victims, but last year in Charlotte, one of four victims was a man. That number is higher than the national average.

A Charlotte man who did not want to use his name said he quietly tolerated a year of physical abuse at the hands of his wife.

"When you really care about a person you tend to overlook things, and that's not always in your best interest. In my case, it almost cost me my life," he said.

Nationally, only 15 percent of reported domestic-violence victims are men. But in Charlotte that number was 26 percent in 2012, a slight increase from 24 percent in 2009.'

Maine woman pleads guilty to DV charge gets no jail time while governor declares DV to be a "men's problem"

Mastodon · 10 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FARMINGTON – A local woman who police said created more than a seven-hour police standoff in December, pleaded guilty Monday to a domestic violence assault charge. The state dismissed a civil violation of creating a police standoff.

Justice Michaela Murphy issued a one-year deferred disposition to Rebekah J. Brown, 38. Brown was directed to return to Franklin County Superior Court in Farmington on March 14, 2014.
...
Police said that Brown assaulted another person with a shovel and struck her own arm with a hatchet before retreating to the house, where there was known to be a loaded firearm.'

Meanwhile, from Maine Governor LePage set to unveil domestic violence proposal:

'The gathering in the State House Hall of Flags was a public service event. However, the governor also foreshadowed some upcoming initiatives he says will strengthen the state's domestic violence laws.
...
The governor noted that the majority of abusers were men; therefore, he said, Maine's laws should be focused accordingly.

"We need to shift domestic violence from a women's problem to a men's problem," he said. "We need to speak up, stand up and man up against domestic violence."'

'Why should married women change their names? Let men change theirs'

Mastodon · 11 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Allow me to suggest an even stronger push: If it's important to you that your family all share a last name, make it the wife's. Yes, men, that means taking your wife's name. Or do what this guy did and invent a new name with your wife. And women, if the man you're set to marry extols the virtues of sharing a family name but won't consider taking yours? Perhaps ask yourself if you should be marrying someone who thinks your identity is fundamentally inferior to his own.

The suggestion that men change their names may sound unfair given everything I just wrote about the value of your name and identity, and the psychological impact of growing up in a world where your own name for yourself is impermanent. But men don't grow up with that sense of psychological impermanence. They don't grow up under the shadow of several thousand years of gender-based discrimination. So if you'd rather your family all shared a name, it actually makes much more sense to make it the woman's. Or we can embrace a modern vision of family where individuals form social and legal bonds out of love and loyalty, instead of defining family as a group coalesced under one male figurehead and a singular name.'

Under Proposed Bill, Students Who Form Finger In Shape Of Gun Would Not Be Suspended

Mastodon · 11 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Zero tolerance for zero tolerance. That's how one lawmaker feels about young children being suspended from school for forming their finger or food in the shape of a gun.

As Gigi Barnett explains, he has a bill designed to keep students in class if they're caught.

State Senator J.B. Jennings says he does not intend for this bill to be a part of the growing gun debate in Maryland, but he does say he wants it to bring some common sense discipline to state schools.
...
Back in January, 6-year-old Rodney Lynch received the same punishment for forming his fingers in the shape of a gun. Montgomery County school leaders sent Rodney home for two days.

"These kids are 6 or 7-years-old. They don't understand what they're doing," said Sen. J.B. Jennings.'

"Really, these Father Supremacists people are a bunch of batterers"

Mastodon · 11 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Newsletter here. Excerpt, on p. 4:

'Q: What can this committee do to make our voices heard over the Fathers' Rights people?

Dr. Hannah: Use your political power. Some say our real power is people power. If there is any goal at all for this, it would be to amass more power. Through the people. Through uniting organizations and like-minded people. One thing that has hit me over and over again is how many stakeholders there are in this issue. How many subsets of people have a keen interest in how these cases go? Children's advocates, juvenile delinquency officers, probation officers, and the legal, psychology, sociology, and medical people. All those professionals interact with mothers and children. People are growing up being raised by abusers. This is a critical issue for our society. So if all we do is keep shoving this under the nose of people who should be working on this, it's probably a good thing. I think if more and more people get royally outraged, something will be done.

Q: What about the term "Fathers' Rights"?

Dr. Hannah: We're not against fathers. We are against Father Supremacy. Really, these Father Supremacists people are a bunch of batterers.'

Mo Therese Hannah, Ph. D., Associate Professor of Psychology: http://www.siena.edu/hannah/

Change.org: Ask UN to Recognize Parental Alienation As Violence And Abuse Against Children

Matt · 11 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'Professionals in different disciplines identified and defined Parental Alienation as the pervasive practice of one divorcing parent against the other parent to destroy the relationship of the targeted parent with his or her children. This is usually done with the intent to gain financial benefits in court.

Since 1990, the year that The Convention on Rights of the Child entered into force, a more pernicious form of Parental Alienation has permeated global societies. In order to comply with the yearly resolutions suggested by NGOs to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, States and their governments initiated, developed and sustained a persecution against parents to separate them from their children. Those resolutions are accepted unquestiongly and never contested.

Children Protection agencies are heartlessly taking children away from their homes and their parents, grandparents and family under the most unreasonable and heinous excuses in order to give them away to foster homes and adoption places.'

New Ryerson Students' Union policy challenges new men’s issues group

Mastodon · 13 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TORONTO (CUP) — An effort to guard the empowerment of women’s voices on campus took form on March 4 when the Ryerson Students’ Union (RSU) swiftly adopted a bold new policy rejecting the concept of misandry — the hatred or fear of men.

...

“We want to acknowledge that the additions that we added here are regarding the ideas of misandry and reverse-sexism, both of which are oppressive concepts that aim to delegitimize the equity work that women’s movements work to do.” Marwa Hamad, vice-president equity at the RSU, said the policy will preserve space for discussing misogyny and institutionalized gender imbalances.

...

The RSU’s three-pronged policy change could complicate the creation of a men’s issues group which applied for student-group status last week. Sarah Santhosh, a second-year biology student and the founder of the Ryerson Association for Equality, said she was shocked the RSU passed this motion two days before the executives’ meeting with the Student Groups Committee.

Santhosh insisted her group is not about being anti-feminist, but rather the right to discuss men’s issues on campus – including misandry.'

Dianne Feinstein, PTSD, and PMS: Should radical feminists own guns?

Mastodon · 13 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feinstein even stated that military veterans should not be exempt from the gun ban because of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD). The Senator posits that all militar personnel suffer from PTSD making all fun owning veterans a risk.

...

Let's turn the tables and use language that Feinstein and other do-gooder liberals can actually understand. Replace "veteran men" with "feminist women." Now replace "PTSD" with "PMS."

Should we use the PMS, vs. PTSD as our qualifier, the gun ban should be extended to anybody suffering Pre-Menstrual Syndrome. After all, painting all women with a broad brush means that all women are too crazy, hysterical, and irrational to be allowed anywhere near a firearm.

See how ridiculous that sounds? But if we accept the PMS vs. PTSD argument, if the National Organization for Women had guns, one bad PMS episode could lead to a violent March on Washington that would result in dead men scattered around the city (as opposed to the normal weekly violence there).'

Preschool teacher arrested after allegedly drugging toddlers with sleep aid

Mastodon · 13 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A California preschool teacher is facing felony charges after she allegedly drugged toddlers with a sleep aid.

KTVU reports 59-year-old Deborah Gratz was arrested on child endangerment charges after she was fired from her job at the Kiddie Academy preschool in Morgan Hill.

A witness told authorities they observed Gratz putting an unknown substance into the drinking cups of the children in her classroom, who range in ages 1 to 2.

Police say when administrators confronted Gratz, she admitted putting an over-the-counter sleeping aid "Sominex" into the kids' drinks. None of the children drank from the cups the day the incident was reported.'

Wanted: One Sperm Donor -- Must Be Financially Secure

Mastodon · 13 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I've heard variations of this from an inordinate number of women who are determined to find a husband to take care of them. For them, the guy's income is as important, often more important, than who he is. But falling in love with a guy's wallet isn't a good foundation for a happy marriage. It doesn't create the kind of intimacy that's key to a loving relationship. And parenting may not be as effective when the parents don't have the right glue between them.
...
I interviewed dozens of men for my book, All Men Are Jerks Until Proven Otherwise, which just came out in its 15th Anniversary edition. Many said sarcastically that they often feel they should bring a resume on a date because of the questions some women ask. Most don't want to just be somebody's meal ticket or to feel that who they are may not be nearly as important as their financial status. Yet many women continue to seek a financially secure guy to help them have the marriage and family they assume will make them happy.
...
I warned my friend that after she has the rush of getting married and spending her husband's money for a while, she might be sorry. When the baby keeps her up at night and she looks at the man in her bed without feeling the kind of love connection that keeps marriages solid -- the kind that money can't buy -- and she feels unfulfilled as a woman because of it, don't call him a jerk. She's the jerk for selling her life for cash. We only have one life and owe it to ourselves to make the most of it. The saying, "Money doesn't buy happiness" is so true. I've encountered too many women who are unhappily married to the man of their financial dreams.'

Millionaire's Wife Gets Prenup Thrown Out

Mastodon · 13 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a rare move, a Brooklyn appellate court has decided that a prenuptial agreement between a Long Island woman and her millionaire husband will be thrown out, the New York Post first reported.

"It's virtually unheard of," Dennis D'Antonio, the attorney for Elizabeth Petrakis, told The Huffington Post. "To a large degree, this has upset the heretofore common thinking that prenups were not subject to challenge. ... Now there's precendent for vacating a prenup. It's a big deal."

...

D'Antonio explained to HuffPost that his client's husband is currently worth between $20 and $30 million. Peter Petrakis never made good on his promise about the prenup, and his failure to do so was enough to convince the courts that fraud had occurred, said D'Antonio.

"It's fraud where someone lies to you, or tricks you into doing something on the basis of a lie, that you wouldn't have otherwise done," D'Antonio said of the Petrakis prenup. "That was the grounds for challenging it."'

Meet the Man’s-Man Mayor Who’s Trying to End Domestic Abuse

Mastodon · 13 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'You don’t need a Y chromosome to know Mike Rawlings is a man’s man. Before he became mayor of Dallas in 2011, he was the top executive at Pizza Hut and, before that, an athlete. He has a full of head of gray hair and a voice like Jeff Daniels. When he talks, he relies heavily on sports metaphors. None of this should make his anti-domestic-violence activism surprising, but it might make him the movement’s most refreshing new spokesman.

Last month, Rawlings firmly requested the presence of 10,000 Dallas men — Boy Scouts welcome, too — at City Hall on March 23, to show their solidarity for his just-announced Men Against Abuse campaign. “I decided to call out the men of Dallas,” Rawlings told the Cut. “I said, this is not a women’s issue, this is a men’s issue. Eighty-five, 90 percent of domestic violence is men on women.”'

Wife kills husband following argument over credit card

Mastodon · 13 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Texas woman is facing charges after police say she ran over her husband at their home in Conroe, killing him.

Conroe police said the incident happened shortly after 7 p.m. on Saturday, when a 56-year-old Ruthie Cook-Scheer walked out of her home and got into her car to leave. Her husband, 66-year-old Frank Scheer, came out of the house and started talking to her.

Police said the couple was arguing about a credit card when Cook-Sheer backed up her car, ran over her husband, and pinned him underneath.

"She ran over to my house and started banging on my door, screaming 'Call 911, call 911,'" said neighbor Barbra Lawler. "Ruthie told me her husband Frank was underneath the car. It was so tragic.'

Woman who killed husband sentenced to 40 years in prison

Mastodon · 13 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 47-year-old woman who can no longer walk or cut her own food because she has multiple sclerosis was sentenced Friday to 40 years in prison for murdering her husband in Butler in 2010 by shooting him six times.

An all-female Morris County jury on Jan. 31 found Amalia “Amy” Mirasola guilty of murdering her 43-year-old spouse, Carl Mirasola, in the master bedroom of their Roosevelt Avenue home in Butler on May 22, 2010. The jury rejected the woman’s claim that she fired in self-defense because her husband, who was having an extramarital affair, was raging that he would kill her.'

Prosecutors review evidence in false rape report at UC Santa Cruz

Mastodon · 14 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'SANTA CRUZ -- Santa Cruz County prosecutors Wednesday reviewed the 911 call of a woman who made a false rape report at UC Santa Cruz but have not decided whether to press charges against her.

"We will have a decision as soon as we get all the reports and tapes from UCSC," said District Attorney Bob Lee.

The 21-year-old woman, who authorities have not named and is not a UCSC student, said she was attacked Feb. 17.

On Feb. 28, UCSC Police Chief Nader Oweis said the woman admitted that she "fabricated" the report. The woman had bruises and described the fictitious attacker to an artist who produced a composite sketch.

If she is charged with filing a false police report, she could face 6 months in jail, counseling or restitution, prosecutors said.'

SAVE E-lert: Tell the NDAA to Remove their Biased NCPVAW Program

Matt · 14 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Last week we reported that Attorney General Eric Holder said, "I applaud Congress for passing a bipartisan [VAWA] reauthorization that protects everyone - women and men, gay and straight, children and adults of all races, ethnicities, countries of origin, and tribal affiliations." While that is a great start, we have a long way to go before all victims are treated equally.

We also have a long way to go before persons accused of abuse are treated equally. Research shows, "males were consistently treated more severely at every stage of the prosecution process."

It's easy to see why this is happening. Take a look at the National District Attorneys Association (NDAA) website, where you'll find their program, the National Center for the Prosecution of Violence Against Women (NCPVAW).

Yes, you read that right. Blatant gender discrimination!

ACFC: "Exposed: Mass Discrimination"

Matt · 14 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

In case you hadn't heard, ACFC has started releasing its newsletter again. You can sign up for it on their home page. Following is an excerpt from the current newsletter's headline item:

'Every once in awhile in the murky world of family law a light appears offering a glimmer of hope. On the flip side, Grandpa used to say: “Just make sure the light at the end of that tunnel isn’t a train.”

Divorced father and ACFC supporter, Terry Brennan, arrived recently bearing such a light. Part of the last few weeks have been spent reviewing whether Terry’s light is indeed a glimmer of hope or a train wreck in the making.

So what has Terry offered as a public service to the people of the great state of Massachusetts, and more importantly, why should anyone care? Very simply, Terry has spent the last six months quietly collecting data from officials around the state on the workings of the Massachusetts Probate and Family Courts. He has now assembled that data and released the first three volumes of what is likely an eight volume collection. The subject matter of the three volumes are; I) Guardian Ad Litems, 2) Perjury and 3) Inmates. (these are large files, may take time to download)'

Asking Roosh V: What legacy has feminism left for men?

Mastodon · 14 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Interview here. Excerpt:

'Cotto: Today, divorce and infidelity rates are disturbingly high. Insofar as men are concerned, why do you think that this is the case?

Roosh: Divorce in America is a great deal for women. She gets half a man's assets and monthly payments that can be quite substantial if children are involved. The more money the man has, the more she gets paid. The ultimate humiliation for husbands is to pay alimony for a woman who then takes care of her "bad boy" lover in his former bed. If you take away incentive for a woman to remain a wife or to be loyal, she won't.

...

Cotto: Feminism is a tremendously controversial subject. From your standpoint, what legacy has it left for men?

Roosh: Weaker men. The whole point of feminism is to absolve women or all responsibility for their actions while shaming or criminalizing masculinity. Women act more masculine in their pursuit of power while men are becoming unsure of which behaviors they can safely exhibit, forcing them to take on more feminine traits. In the end you'll have an androgynous society where both sexes are unhappy because you've taken them far away from natural behavior that has existed among humans for hundreds of thousands of years.'

Who's "Roosh"? Wikipedia entry here.

O2/Symantec blocking MR sites

Matt · 14 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By now most people are aware of the issue of men's rights website being wrongly blocked by Symantec and various mobile phone companies due to them somehow being flagged as "hate sites". I've done further investigations and can exclusively reveal the official response from these companies on this matter. There tends to be a bit of confusion about this issue and so firstly I'll attempt to explain what's going on and tackle some misconceptions.

Which sites are blocked?
I initially identified 48 sites blocked by Symantec/O2 and flagged as "hate sites". The list then grew to 58 as even more were identified. It's fair to say that a majority of key sites critical of feminism and supportive of men's rights are blocked. You can see the full list here.
...
There are currently two ways to check whether or not a site has been branded as a "hate site". Users have previously checked a site's status by enabling Norton's DNS service, but a much easier method is O2's url checker.'

One of the blocked sites is indeed MANN.

F&F: Shocking Data on Incarceration of Fathers: New Report Suggests Gender Bias

Matt · 14 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new report concludes that between 95% and 98.5% of all incarcerations in Massachusetts sentenced from the Massachusetts Probate and Family Courts from 2001 through 2011 have been men. Moreover, this percentage may be increasing, with an average of 94.5% from 2001 to 2008, and 96.2% from 2009 through 2011. It is likely that most of these incarcerations are for incomplete payment of child support.

Further analysis suggests that women who fail to pay all of their child support are incarcerated only one-eighth as often as men with similar violations. Several possible explanations of these results other than gender bias are unsupported by the data, strengthening the view that gender bias against fathers is a major factor in the family courts.
...
... The latest national data from the US Census Bureau shows that mothers are the custodial parents in 82% of cases, and fathers in only 18% (which may in itself reflect gender bias). (see Table below.) Even so, if incomplete payment of child support occurred in exact proportion to custodial status, then we would expect mothers to account for 18% of incarcerations, not 1.5% to 5%.'

Mother tries to sell kids using Facebook

Matt · 14 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police in Sallisaw, Oklahoma said Misty VanHorn contacted a potential buyer via the social networking site.

They said the 22-year-old mother was looking to get $1,000 (£670) for her two-year-old, or $4,000 (£2,680) for the toddler and her 10-month-old baby.

"Just come to Sallisaw, it's only 30 minutes away and I'll give you all of her stuff and let y'all have her forever for $1,000," she allegedly wrote via Facebook.'

New Zealand: Few men take up teaching

Matt · 15 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Children are missing out on positive male role models because of a shortage of men wanting to become teachers.
...
She said there were some "wonderful" men coming through teaching college but it was hard to attract males at primary level.

A long-standing public perception of male teachers having "poor intentions" could be one reason, she said.
...
The Early Childhood Council (ECC) estimated that of the 1100 centres it represented, 2 per cent of staff were male, but Mrs Sellars said men were "just as good" at looking after young children as females.

"There has been a stigma around males about sexual abuse in the classroom but the truth is it's just as much females as well as males. I think that [perception] is changing a bit now though."'

On International Women's Day, a Feminist Imagines Her Victimhood

Matt · 15 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'International Women's Day is here. It could be a day to celebrate the many accomplishments of women, their advancement in western culture, their strength, wisdom and creativity. Maybe that will happen, but, if the past is prolog, International Women's Day will also be a day on which feminists make the event Women's Disinformation Day. Sadly, it's already happened, as this article makes clear.

To those who follow the many misrepresentations feminists make about the lot of women in the world, Dr. Lindy Edwards' piece in Australia's The Age should come as no surprise. Her thesis in a nutshell is that men get to do the lion's share of society's paid work because women are stuck with the unpaid work. So men earn more while women struggle and likely end up living in poverty at the end of their lives.

The picture Edwards paints is not a pretty one, which is something to celebrate on this IWD, since it bears little resemblance to reality.'

UK: Do men need a political party to defend their rights?

Mastodon · 15 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Mike Buchanan is the founder of Justice for Men and Boys, a political party created to tackle the injustices that the modern man faces.

Mike told BBC Radio 2's Jeremy Vine that "men and boys need representation...and I'm not aware of a single area where women are disadvantaged relative to men." Laura Bates, of the Everyday Sexism Project, described the suggestion that men and boys are under represented as "laughable."'

Women: hitting your man is not cute; it's abuse

Mastodon · 15 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A glossy American couple fight over an alleged infidelity, and at one point the hunk involved says something unacceptable in a pique of anger.

Our heroine responds with a slap, right across the face, and the argument ends there.

We've seen Meg Ryan do it, Jennifer Aniston do it, and the most recent example of a whack across the chops I saw was in hipster-com Girls, where friends Elijah (Andrew Rannells) and Marnie (Allison Williams) trade insults over his sexuality before he calls her a bitch and she slaps him, hard.

...

In short, pop culture gives the impression it is cute, or empowering, or even sexy when women hit men. The scene reversed would carry a single connotation of misogyny and out-of-control male aggression, but here we are expected to laugh, or even to be turned on by these characters' resort to the grim shortcut of violence to deal with problems.

And young women are clearly taking note. It was revealed this week that one in seven women aged 15-22 in the US admits to hitting their partner, compared to just one in twenty men.'

Young Women More Likely To Admit Hitting A Partner

Mastodon · 15 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Women are three times as likely to admit hitting a romantic partner, according to a study of young adults ages 15 to 22. In results released today, 14% of women said they'd struck a partner — compared with 5% of men.

But when the researchers, commissioned by the NO MORE anti-domestic violence campaign, asked young people why they'd lashed out, almost 60% of all respondents said their partner had hit them first. Given this, it's possible that young women are just more likely to admit to hitting a partner than men were. The study doesn't report the sexual orientation of the young people surveyed, so it's not clear if the women who reported hitting were exclusively hitting men — domestic violence can be an issue in lesbian relationships too, with one study finding that half of lesbian women experienced domestic violence at some point in their lives.

Regardless of who hits first, domestic disputes put women at greater risk of bodily injury; according to the National Crime Victimization Survey, women are 7 to 10 times more likely to be hurt by a partner than men are, no matter who initiates violence.'

Towson cuts baseball, so baseball team blacks out logo

Mastodon · 15 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Towson University won't support its baseball program. For the team, the feeling is mutual.

On Mar. 8, during a hastily called conference with players from both teams, Towson president Maravene Loeschke announced that the school, following the recommendation of athletic director Mike Waddell, would be cutting both its baseball and men's soccer programs as a cost-saving measure.

In response, the baseball program – currently 8-7, 1-2 in Colonial Athletic Association play – has chosen to wear strips of black tape over the "Towson" logo on the front of its jerseys, a symbolic gesture meant to display its displeasure over the school's decision.

"We don't support Towson," catcher Zach Fisher told Baltimore's ABC affiliate (video above), "so we don't wear something that says Towson."'

Reform College Sexual Assault Policies to Protect Accused Students, Too

Mastodon · 15 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The consequences of unfair sexual misconduct procedures are monumental and life-altering. Students who are found guilty can be made into pariahs, kicked out of their residences, expelled from their colleges, and forced to explain marked transcripts to graduate institutions and employers for the rest of their lives. When these defendants have not committed any wrongdoing, such punishments are a travesty of justice. While The Huffington Post has done admirable work in highlighting the significant problem of inadequate university responses to claims of sexual violence, its coverage has failed to explore the issues of due process and procedural safeguards for accused students that reform must also address.'

New CCF Briefing Report: Why Men Lag Behind in Education - and Why “Boy-Friendly” Schools Aren’t the Fix

Mastodon · 15 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What should schools do? The authors debunk the notion that boys’ underperformance in school is caused by a "feminized" learning environment that needs to be made more boy-friendly. Making curriculum, teachers, or classroom more "masculine" is not the answer, they show. In fact, boys do better in school in classrooms that have more girls and that emphasize extracurricular activities such as music and art as well as holding both girls and boys to high academic standards. But boys do need to learn how much today's economy rewards academic achievement rather than traditionally masculine blue-collar work.'

Towson president: Athletic cutbacks painful but necessary

Mastodon · 15 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In terms of Title IX, it is imperative that our female athletes receive the level of support required by federal law. Unfortunately, providing equitable opportunity for female athletes is far too often ignored or deemed "something you can get around or solve later." Towson University will not take that position. Furthermore, Towson's historic practice to add a women's sports team every five years until substantial proportionality is achieved has not kept pace with the changing demographics of our undergraduate population. Therefore, Towson's approach to address Title IX requirements was the most viable, long-term method to achieve gender equity compliance with federal law.'

Police Escort Towson President as She Announces Decision to Cut Men’s Soccer and Baseball

Mastodon · 15 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Following in the footsteps of many other universities that have been struggling financially, Towson University president Maravene Loeschke announced on Friday morning that the school would no longer have a baseball or men’s soccer team. The decision came as a surprise to many athletes who were given only a mere hour’s notice of the speech to be given by Loeschke concerning the sports cuts.

The Baltimore Sun‘s description of the whole scene is rather outrageous. Apparently Loeschke was escorted by “several police officers” to the meeting with both teams, which lasted only a few minutes according to players present. And, as Loeschke left, an additional 10 officers proceeded to surround her.'

"The Hunt" explores false accusations against men perpetuated by presumed guilt

Matt · 16 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

IMDB entry here. Excerpt:

'A teacher lives a lonely life, all the while struggling over his son's custody. His life slowly gets better as he finds love and receives good news from his son, but his new luck is about to be brutally shattered by an innocent little lie.'

Trailer on YouTube here.

'Women Own 1% of World Property': A Feminist Myth That Won't Die

Matt · 16 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you're a feminist you've probably seen this. You may have even repeated it: verbally, on your blog, on a flyer, on Twitter, in your book or an academic article. It goes something like this:

"While women represent half the global population and one-third of the labor force, they receive only one-tenth of the world income and own less than one percent of world property. They are also responsible for two-thirds of all working hours."

That's how it appeared in 1984, on page one, in Robin Morgan's introduction to the classic collection called Sisterhood Is Global: The International Women's Movement Anthology. That's more or less how it was tweeted by untold numbers of people a quarter-century later, on #IWD 2011 (a.k.a. International Women's Day). ...
...
There is no information on the indicators used or their sources, or what is meant by "some estimates." That is where the trail goes cold—the oldest source, completely unsourced.
...
So it's too simple to say the famous facts are wrong. The burden of proof is not on us (me) to show they are wrong, but rather to point out that they were never demonstrably true, so we shouldn't use them. (I'm not sure the truth will set you free, but I'm pretty sure this won't, either.)'

UK: Cash fears as male sex abuse cases rise

Matt · 16 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of men seeking help after being sexually abused has soared – and victims' groups fear the effects of the Jimmy Savile scandal will push the numbers even higher.

A counselling service for male victims of sexual assault said the number of men it helps has more than trebled in the last five years.

And Brighton-based Mankind said it expects more to come forward following the Savile revelations.

The organisation is one of only a handful of organisations helping male victims of sexual violence in Britain but it has been snubbed by the Government for support.'

Towson Soccer, Baseball Not Allowed To Question Elimination

Mastodon · 16 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The coaches of the baseball and mens soccer teams at Towson University weren't allowed to ask questions Friday, as the school's president announced the elimination of those two programs.

In interviews with WBAL Radio, baseball coach Mike Gottlieb and soccer coach Frank Olszewski outlined how they weren't allowed to attend the players-only meeting with president Maravene Loeschke.

"I was never given any input. No one asked me if we could get by with less. I requested to speak with the president on two different occasions. One time I was denied. The second time, they did not get back to me," Gottlieb told WBAL. "She spoke with the kids Friday morning, and I was not allowed to be there and she would not entertain any questions from the kids. She's supposed to be a president for the students. I haven't seen that through this whole process."

...

In the meeting, Loeschke "said the programs would be dropped, added the players scholarships would be honored, took no questions from the players and then walked out," according to the WBAL story.'

"Where Have All the Feminist Men Gone?"

Mastodon · 16 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Where have all the feminist men gone? Every gender studies course I took in college was made up of a diverse crowd of women. Almost every sexuality, race, and age group seemed to be represented, yet even at a small liberal arts school we were lucky if there were two men in the class. This continues to perplex me.

When I speak to my male friends about whether they consider themselves feminists many often say yes. Behind closed doors men will candidly speak about their pro-women opinions, their comfort with and attraction to women who are bossy or challenging, and how they abhor other men who seek to limit female power. But do these men blog, take classes, attend rallies, or otherwise make public their opinions when it comes to gender issues? Of course there are always exceptions, but my experience has typically been: no they do not. This makes me certain that there still remains a strong taboo against those who occupy male bodies voicing support for women and opinions on their complex experiences in this country.'

Jodi Arias' PTSD defense upsets some veterans

Mastodon · 17 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PHOENIX -- Jodi Arias' psychologist diagnosed her with a form of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD), to explain her memory problems.

Arias claims she shot her ex-lover, Travis Alexander, in self defense in 2008, but cannot remember stabbing him 27 times, slitting his throat, or dragging him into the shower.
...
Twitter and blogs are full of veterans who are suffering from PTSD, claiming Arias diagnosis is "nauseating" and "offensive."

"It's insulting if someone's using it as an excuse," Iraq War Veteran Steve Crowley told 3TV.'

Police: Menendez Accusers Paid To Make Claims Against Senator

Mastodon · 19 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic — Three women were paid to falsely claim in videotaped interviews that they had sex for money with a U.S. senator in the Dominican Republic, a spokesman for the police said Monday.

The women, whose claims generated media attention in the United States, were hired by a Dominican attorney to make the videotaped statements, spokesman Maximo Baez told reporters. Two of the women received about $425 and the other was paid about $300, he said.

Authorities are seeking to interrogate the attorney, Melanio Figueroa, about the payments and have not determined his motive or whether he was in turn paid by someone else to set up the interviews, Baez said.'

Ex-school worker in relationship with boy, 15, plotted to kill husband, records show

Mastodon · 19 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former security assistant at a Virginia school conspired with a 15-year-old student with whom she had a sexual relationship to kill her husband, police said Thursday.

Patience Justine Perez, 22, was charged in Norfolk on Tuesday in connection with the murder scheme.

Perez also faces multiple charges of taking indecent liberties with a child by a person in a custodial or supervisory relationship, and a charge of using a communications system to facilitate certain crimes against children.'

European MDs Accuse US Pro-Circumcision Doctors of Bias

Mastodon · 19 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thirty-eight physicians from Europe have written a paper alleging that “cultural bias” was behind the pro-circumcision stance of the American Academy of Pediatrics.

The commentary, published on March 18 on the website of the U.S.-based Pediatric Journal, disputes a report which the American academy on children’s health published in August, which states that “benefits of newborn male circumcision outweigh the risks but the benefits are not great enough to recommend universal newborn circumcision.”

The European reply states that “seen from the outside, cultural bias reflecting the normality of non-therapeutic male circumcision in the United States seems obvious. The report’s conclusions are different from those reached by physicians in other parts of the Western world.”'

UK: Men are becoming 'disadvantaged group'

Mastodon · 19 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mary Curnock Cook, the head of the admissions service, Ucas, said she was “very worried” about the decline in the proportion of young men applying for places on degree courses.

The trend has significant implications for society because university graduates are expected to earn far more than workers without degrees, the Commons business select committee was warned.

Ms Curnock Cook intervened as it was disclosed that 14 universities had targets to recruit more men. The initiative is part of a drive to train more men as primary school teachers to provide role models for young boys.

So far this year 80,000 more women have applied to universities in the UK than men and the trend is likely to grow, according to Ucas figures.

Of the 558,898 candidates who applied to university by the January deadline this year, 319,752, or 57.2 per cent, were women. Some 239,146, or 42.8 per cent, were men.'

Cultural Bias in the AAP's 2012 Technical Report and Policy Statement on Male Circumcision

Matt · 20 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Abstract here. Excerpt:

'Seen from the outside, cultural bias reflecting the normality of nontherapeutic male circumcision in the United States seems obvious, and the report's conclusions are different from those reached by physicians in other parts of the Western world, including Europe, Canada, and Australia. In this commentary, a different view is presented by non–US-based physicians and representatives of general medical associations and societies for pediatrics, pediatric surgery, and pediatric urology in Northern Europe. To these authors, only 1 of the arguments put forward by the American Academy of Pediatrics has some theoretical relevance in relation to infant male circumcision; namely, the possible protection against urinary tract infections in infant boys, which can easily be treated with antibiotics without tissue loss. The other claimed health benefits, including protection against HIV/AIDS, genital herpes, genital warts, and penile cancer, are questionable, weak, and likely to have little public health relevance in a Western context, and they do not represent compelling reasons for surgery before boys are old enough to decide for themselves.'

The Intactivist Movement Within Judaism Resource List

Matt · 20 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Compiled in 2011, but still very bookmark-able: The Intactivist Movement Within Judaism. Excerpt:

'The following resource list is an extension of the original items linked on the Judaism and Circumcision Resource Page. If you have an additional item to add, please contact us at DrMomma.org-at-gmail.com. We welcome guest authors and scholars with experiences or literature to share.

The past century has been marked by the declaration and protection of universal human rights, as well as a marked increase in the quality of life, both in the United States and worldwide. With these improvements, higher expectations regarding a child's right to bodily autonomy have become socially accepted and legally mandated. Many argue that because female children in the U.S. are protected by the 1996 law banning all forms of genital cutting, legally male children cannot be excluded from this same federal protection; the 14th Amendment to the Constitution would support this argument.'

CPAC 2013: All-Woman Panel Finds Obamacare "Sexist"

Matt · 20 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yesterday, CPAC featured a bold all-female panel to discuss the issues affecting women today. Blogger Crystal Wright lead the discussion and raised critically important topics like how hard it is to "come out of the closet" and the pervasiveness of "sexism" in America. I know what you're thinking. This is astounding. Could conservative and progressive women finally be speaking the same language? That would be accurate if anything they discussed had any basis in reality. Unfortunately, Republicans have a reputation to live up to, so it did not.
...
"Obamacare is sexist […] because it takes the guy off the hook [...] A guy who pressures a girl to get pregnant, all he has to do is say is oh that's not my fault, you should have been using Obama's free birth control."

She nailed it. Birth control totally empowers men, not women. Thanks to Obama, men are finally free to trick their lady-friends into having more babies because we all know that's what men want. Big score for the bros! Chest pumping further than the eye can see! We all know men were impatiently waiting for the day they could finally surprise-impregnate their girlfriends and then pregnant-shame them for not taking their free whore-pills. Typical-male-behavior.

What is reality's record on this? Where is the evidence of these behaviours and attitudes? What are these women even talking about?'

Progressive Rabbis On Creating A Jewish Covenant Without Circumcision

Matt · 20 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many Rabbis are welcoming intact males into the Jewish community, and a growing number of Rabbis feel that surgical circumcision is no longer appropriate in the 21st century. Over 50 Rabbis, mohels and other Jewish leaders perform covenant ceremonies without surgical circumcision, and many more will do so upon request. These include Rabbis in the Reform, Conservative, Reconstructionist and many other branches of Judaism.

Hundreds of thousands of Jewish males around the world remain intact. Most Eastern European and South American Jews remain intact, and many Western European Jews have ceased circumcision, seeing it as a barbaric remnant of pre-civilized times. Both Reform Judaism and Humanistic Judaism welcome intact Jews.'

SAVE E-lert: NDAA Claims All DV Perps Should be Prosecuted--OK, Prove it

Matt · 20 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Prosecutor bias is a serious problem. In January we sent the National District Attorneys Association (NDAA) a letter*. We requested that they make their program, the National Center for the Prosecution of Violence Against Women (NCPVAW) gender neutral or gender inclusive, consistent with current research.

[*Ed.: I had trouble opening this .pdf using Firefox, but it worked fine for me in Internet Explorer. You may have different results. -- Matt]

They didn't do it. So last week we asked you to file complaints. You called and emailed; and for that we thank you. Unfortunately, our concerns have fallen on deaf ears.

NDAA has defended the NCPVAW program while reporting that it's almost entirely funded by grant awards given by the Department of Justice's Office on Violence Against Women (OVW). That almost sounds like an excuse to discriminate, doesn't it? Oh my.

Luckily they also stated, "We train prosecutors all over the country to prosecute ALL cases of domestic violence - on behalf of BOTH MALE AND FEMALE VICTIMS." Good thing, since the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA)'s inclusiveness mandate includes the need for prosecutors to charge DV suspects regardless of sex....and to prosecute false accusers.

Study of men’s falling income cites single parents

Mastodon · 21 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — The decline of two-parent households may be a significant reason for the divergent fortunes of male workers, whose earnings generally declined in recent decades, and female workers, whose earnings generally increased, a prominent labor economist argues in a new survey of existing research.

David H. Autor, a professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, says that the difference between men and women, at least in part, may have roots in childhood. Only 63 percent of children lived in a household with two parents in 2010, down from 82 percent in 1970. The single parents raising the rest of those children are predominantly female. And there is growing evidence that sons raised by single mothers “appear to fare particularly poorly,” Professor Autor wrote in an analysis for Third Way, a center-left policy research organization.

In this telling, the economic struggles of male workers are both a cause and an effect of the breakdown of traditional households. Men who are less successful are less attractive as partners, so women are choosing to raise children by themselves, producing sons who are less successful and attractive as partners.'

DNA testing clears Wyoming man of decades-old rape, lawyers say

Mastodon · 21 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Lawyers with the Utah-based Rocky Mountain Innocence Center say new DNA testing proves the innocence of a man who has served more than 23 years in prison on a Wyoming rape conviction.

Cheyenne lawyer Aaron J. Lyttle filed a request for a new trial for 63-year-old Andrew J. Johnson on Tuesday. Johnson, who has maintained his innocence, is serving a life sentence at the state prison in Rawlins on the 1989 conviction.

Lyttle stated that DNA testing proves Johnson didn't commit the crime. Lyttle says he expects that Johnson will receive a new trial.'

F&F: Do Some Massachusetts Probate and Family Court Judges Incarcerate Men at Excessive Rates? More Shocking Data

Matt · 21 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, we reported the data gathered by Fathers and Families member Terry Brennan on the number of men and women incarcerated from Massachusetts Probate and Family Courts for incomplete payment of child support. We found that 95% to 98.5% of those incarcerated in Massachusetts for this violation from 2001 through 2011 were men.

I then took Terry's data and compared it to national data on rates of child support payment. I found that mothers in arrears are incarcerated at lower rates even though they have higher rates of incomplete payment, pay a smaller percentage of their child support order, and have larger arrears than fathers. In fact, mothers with child support arrears in Massachusetts are incarcerated at approximately one-eighth of the rate that would be justified by their numbers if fathers and mothers in arrears were treated equally.'

Jodi Arias 'Murdering' Travis Alexander With Lies, Friend and Family Say

Mastodon · 21 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The family and friends of Travis Alexander said it was difficult to watch Jodi Arias testify for nearly a month and "murder him again" with what they said are lies about Alexander's behavior and character.

"Travis is not on trial. Jodi is on trial and she done everything to put him on trial," Chris Hughes, who was Alexander's best friend, told ABC News in an exclusive interview.

Hughes has been watching the trial mostly from his home in Utah while members of Alexander's family, including at least three of his seven brothers and sisters, have been in the front row of the courtroom almost every day.

Arias, 32, is accused of murdering Alexander by stabbing him 27 times, slitting his throat and shooting him in the head. She could face the death penalty if convicted.'

Former Titans Cheerleader Accused Of Sexually Assaulting 12-Year-Old Boy

Mastodon · 21 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Titans cheerleader is accused of pulling a 12-year-old boys pants off and offering him oral sex. She denies the allegations.

Black Mountain News reports that Elizabeth Leigh Garner, 42, of Nashville was indicted last week on aggravated sexual battery and solicitation of a minor for child rape.

In February, the boy told police he was at his home when he went upstairs to use the bathroom. He said Garner, who had been drinking, followed him upstairs.

"He stated she was asking him if he had ever been with a woman," Murfreesboro Police Detective Tommy Roberts said in a report obtained by the Black Mountain News.

The boy said Garner then touched him "on the outside of his pants" and made "an attempt to take his shorts off" while offering to "perform oral sex on him."'

Women's STEM Careers A Matter Of Choice, Not Ability, Study Suggests

Mastodon · 21 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Having skills suited for a variety of careers helps explain why few women pursue math and science jobs, new research finds.

A study by researchers at the University of Pittsburgh and the University of Michigan revealed that women may be less likely to want careers in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics (STEM) because they have more career choices, not because they have less ability.

"Our study shows that it's not lack of ability or differences in ability that orients females to pursue non-STEM careers, it's the greater likelihood that females with high math ability also have high verbal ability," said Ming-Te Wang, one of the study's co-authors and developmental psychologist at the University of Pittsburgh. "Because they're good at both, they can consider a wide range of occupations."'

Life term for women only 14 years, for men up to 28 years: Bombay High Court

Mastodon · 22 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mumbai: The Bombay High Court has ruled that women convicts serving life sentence in Maharashtra jails are required to spend only 14 years unlike male convicts, who have to be behind bars for a period ranging from 14 to 28 years depending on the nature of offence committed by them.

The ruling was delivered on March 15 by Justices Abhay Thipsay and P V Hardas, who were hearing a petition filed by Usha Upadhyay challenging the decision of the state government in respect of benefit of premature release to be given to her on the basis of guidelines framed by the Government.

"In our opinion, category 1 of 2010 guidelines, which is exclusively for women offenders, must cover all cases of women offenders and that they can be fitted only in that category.

Because of creation of a special category of women offenders the other categories which are of a general nature, classified on the basis of nature of offences, would not apply to women," the Judges held while interpreting the guidelines.'

UK: Jersey politician suggests States seats reserved for women

Mastodon · 22 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Deputy Montfort Tadier said April's referendum is a great opportunity to encourage more women into government.

The referendum sets three questions over how the island's government is made up in future.

He said seats could be allocated as women only if islanders agreed to create larger political districts.

But Deputy Kristina Moore, first elected in 2011, said: "We have the same percentage of women as the UK, and thankfully our male colleagues treat us with much more respect than their counterparts."'

UK: Plight of women in jail tackled with new policy on sentencing

Mastodon · 22 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Courts will be encouraged to hand more community sentences to women offenders – backed by curfews, tagging and unpaid work – in an attempt to reduce the female prison population.

The move, combined with treatment programmes for women with alcohol and drug problems, is designed to reduce the number of families that are broken up when a mother is jailed.

In an interview with The Independent, the Justice Minister, Helen Grant said: “There are some women who are bad and a risk to the public and society and they need to go to prison. But there are other women who are in the system, low-risk women, who would benefit greatly from punitive, credible punishments in the community.”'

Facebook COO Sheryl Sandberg's book tour: No boys allowed

Mastodon · 22 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

Facebook (FB) Chief Operating Officer Sheryl Sandberg has been on a high-profile publicity tour for her new book. She's been interviewed by CBS news magazine "60 Minutes," ABC's "Nightline" and CNN, among others.
...
Did Sandberg and Knopf, publisher of her book "Lean In: Women, Work, and the Will to Lead," request or choose interviewers based on the sex of the interviewer? Maybe Sandberg is hoping to give the female journalists some advancement with a plum interview. Or did news organizations pander to Sandberg and Knopf by suggesting a woman do the interviewing? The assumption is that female journalists would be more sympathetic to Sandberg's message.'

Male DISD Students To Take Part In Domestic Violence Rally

Mastodon · 22 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DALLAS (CBSDFW.COM) – Administrators with the Dallas Independent School District (DISD) say it won't just be "men" standing up against domestic violence at the Dallas Men Against Abuse rally happening this weekend.

According to school district officials, some 1,000 male students will join in the call to 'man up' and end domestic violence. A number of DISD students are featured in Dallas public service announcements. "I pledge to hold my male friends accountable for their violent actions," one teen declared in a video.'

Canada: Privately run shelter for male victims of domestic abuse forced to close its doors due to lack of funding

Mastodon · 22 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A privately funded shelter for male victims of domestic abuse — believed to be the only refuge of its kind in the country — has closed.

Men's rights advocate Earl Silverman said he can't afford to keep the Men's Alternative Safe House (MASH) running.

Since it opened out of his house about three years ago, close to 20 men have passed through, he said. Among them was a "father with two children, a one-year-old girl and a nine-year-old boy and he was fleeing a violent, alcoholic wife."

Absent of federal or provincial funding, Mr. Silverman said he just can't keep up with the grocery, heat and other bills associated with running the shelter. He said he sold his home last week.'

Dallas Mayor Calls on Men to Fight Violence Against Women

Mastodon · 22 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The mayor of Dallas has unveiled a list of professional athletes and religious leaders who have signed on to help his campaign against domestic violence.

The campaign asks men to report abuse, help people who are being abused and volunteer with organizations that are helping.

The centerpiece of Mayor Mike Rawlings' campaign is the Men Against Abuse rally scheduled for Saturday at Dallas City Hall.
...
"We must stand together and that means, simply, not hitting women -- ever," Rawlings said.'

Meanwhile, Police: Woman kills husband, kids, self near Dallas:

'MESQUITE, TX -- A woman shot and killed her husband and two young adult children before killing herself in their suburban Dallas home, investigators said Thursday.

The bodies of Angelica Vazquez, 43, her husband and their two children were discovered four days after officers first responded to a 911 call reporting the sound of gunfire but found no reason to go into the family's Mesquite home, police spokesman Bill Hedgpeth said.'

Erin Pizzey: Let's Kick the Bigots Out

Mastodon · 22 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It has been a hard year but very slowly I can see more and more people are beginning to realise that domestic violence is not and never has been a gender issue.

Also the gender war against men and boys has resulted in the collapse of family life and and created a hostile environment for relationships between the sexes.

Western governments played their part in refusing to see quite clearly that the state has usurped the role of fathers.

Men as fathers are being forcibly made redundant.

The new family is now ‘woman and their children.’

'Meaning of a man'

Mastodon · 22 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I recently read a magazine article that explored the problems modern men face, which, despite all the hoopla, aren't as serious as, say, the problems men faced during the Great Depression or World War II.

The headline asked, "What makes a real man anyway?" The writer suggested that things are going terribly wrong, so men need more therapy and medication. That's certainly original thinking. While some social critics blame the feminist movement for our disorientation, I have doubts about that theory. If anything, we're to blame for the problems women face.

Nevertheless, I'm worried about young men, because they don't seem to be motivated by anything but money, power, sex, and partying. There has to be more to a man's life than that. (OK, maybe iPhones, sports cars and video games instead.)'

Canada: Melfort mother gets 4 years for attempted murder of kids

Mastodon · 22 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An unnamed mother, who pleaded guilty to attempting to kill her two young children in a murder-suicide, received a prison sentence in Melfort on Thursday.

Justice R.S. Smith handed down a sentence of four years in a penitentiary, less one year for time served in remand.
...
Defense counsel brought up the fact that after her arrest, the woman had gone through a psychiatric assessment that found her to be suffering from severe paranoia and depression.

The defense went on to suggest that at the time of the incident the mother was not in the proper state of mind due to her depression. She stated the mother had said she had suffered a lot from abuse from men and she wanted to save her children from that abuse.'

CNN: How do I raise a boy not to be a rapist?

mens_issues · 22 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

CNN hits bottom in the title* for this article by assuming that the default for boys is to grow up to be rapists. Excerpt:

'In the aftermath of the guilty verdict in Steubenville, Ohio, parents should be taking this opportunity to ask themselves this painful question. But what parent can even contemplate that a child they love could so callously disregard someone's basic human rights? At the same time, the media is filled with experts chastising parents for not being involved with their kids and wanting to be a friend instead of a parent.
...
We must talk to our kids as possible perpetrators and bystanders. And our advice about what to say has got to go beyond, "How would you feel if this happened to your mother or sister?" First, no one has any idea what the perpetrator's relationship is like with those women in his life, but it's not a huge leap to think he doesn't hold a great deal of respect for them. Second, these boys have dehumanized their victim. In that moment, they don't care.'

---
* Ed. update: CNN has since changed the title of the article, possibly in response to reader reaction. Google "CNN How do I raise a boy not to be a rapist?" to see the many places this article has already been referred to by its original title.

SAVE: The DV Reform Door is Wide Open -- Join our Call Monday Evening

Matt · 23 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The new VAWA Inclusion Mandate offers us countless opportunities to reform the domestic violence field - abuse shelters, criminal justice programs, information and training activities, and more.

Now we need to seize the moment - carpe diem! On Monday, SAVE will be unveiling our new Inclusive-VAWA Resource Center: http://www.saveservices.org/inclusive-vawa/resources

Whether you are an activist, a citizen-lobbyist, a blogger, or whatever, you can help make this happen.

Join us for a one-hour teleconference, Monday evening, 9pm ET, 8pm Central, 7pm Mountain, 6pm Pacific. To get dial-in information, send me a message at tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Justice For Men And Boys Party founder interview

Matt · 23 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Latest interview with Mike Buchanan available on YouTube here. The channel page is here. The official blog is here. Excerpt:

'Welcome to the official blog of a new British political party. The party will seek to raise public consciousness about the many disadvantages and discriminations faced by men and boys in modern Britain.

An article published on a leading men's human rights website, 'A Voice for Men', reveals some of the thinking behind our decision to form a new party:

http://www.avoiceformen.com/feminism/government-tyranny/fighting-feminism-lets-get-political/
...
Thank you for your interest. We're working for a brighter future for men and boys, and the women who love them.'

Towson University President Agrees To Meet Gov., Comptroller

Mastodon · 23 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a rare show of solidarity, Governor O'Malley and Maryland Comptroller Peter Franchot have sent the Towson University President a message.

Both want Maravene Loeschke to come to Annapolis to explain how her school's baseball and soccer teams were eliminated. And, in the meantime, they are both refusing to vote on Towson University's planned construction of a building on the Harford Community College campus.

Loeschke confirmed to WBAL News that she is planning to meet with the two officials. She added that she was suprised by the request from the Governor and Comptroller.

Earlier this month, President Loeschke talked to a hastily called meeting of the men's baseball and soccer teams and told the players the sports were being eliminated. According to reports, she walked into the meeting with uniformed police officers, delivered the message and left without taking any questions.'

Husband Awarded $40K After DNA Tests Prove Children Aren't His

Mastodon · 23 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Have you ever wondered if you were raising another man's child?

We sure hope not! This sounds like something you'd hear on a soap opera.

Unfortunately, that was the nagging question on Richard Rodwell's mind soon after his marriage to his wife Helen fell apart.

As their marriage began deteriorating, Helen would disappear from their home in Peterborough, England, for several days at a time without letting her family know where she was. And when she would return and he would ask where she had been, she would say, "It has nothing to do with you." This woman would never even leave a note or message letting her husband or children in on her whereabouts.'

Father's Rights In Divorce: Myths and Facts

Mastodon · 23 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In my practice as a divorce lawyer, the vast majority of the fathers whom I have represented want to remain actively involved as parents after their divorce has been settled. Very few want to sever ties with their children, even when they cannot stand the sight of their ex-wives.
...
From my perspective, the courts should not arbitrarily favor mothers over fathers. I believe firmly that the spouse who has served as the primary parental figure should remain in that role after the divorce has been finalized. And as such, they should receive a corresponding amount of the post-divorce estate. This is the case regardless of the gender of the primary conservator.
...
And now, for my fellow mothers who are reading this article:

I understand that we share a special bond with the children who grew within us for nine months before they met their fathers. However, when it comes to deciding their future, we truly need to focus on what is best for them (and which, at heart, is truly what is best for us). That could very well be having the father named as the primary conservator. You are no less of a mother to that child just because they now live with their father more than with you. In parenting, what matters most is the quality of the time that children receive from both of their parents.'

Deadbeat Parents? State-Mandated Child Support Hurts The Ones It's Supposed To Help

Mastodon · 23 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"No. 1 deadbeat parent pleads guilty to owing $1.2 million" reads the headline from the Associated Press. The article details a father fleeing first to Florida and then to Thailand, resulting in child-support arrears since 2002.

His name is Robert Sand and he sits in jail. Deported from the Philippines in November, he was sent to Los Angeles where he was arrested by federal marshals, and then extradited to New York where he has been held without bail since December. Next, this dad became front-page news. The AP article was careful to use the term "deadbeat parent," but my Facebook feed doesn't subscribe to such neutral speech. My page lit up with moms rallying in solidarity. The target? Deadbeat dads.
...
Are there toxic parents who neither love nor support their child? Sure. But forced money gained can't disguise that ugliness. A child who experiences a truly negative parent doesn't need money, they need healing. It's hard to heal a child's pain when the focus is on the toxic parent.

The twisted part? Some custodial parents revel in their ex's deadbeat demise. As if a declared deadbeat somehow justifies the suffering. A child doesn't want justification, a child wants smiles.

Children of divorce are holding up a sign: It's time for a new divorce. They are wanting a divorce process and solutions that address their needs -- that address their heart. They know that they can be loved, nurtured, and thrive through divorce.

When we assert that "It's best for the child," it's time we do it with a heart that perceives the consequences.

It's time we think anew.'

NFL dream delayed by false rape charge

Mastodon · 23 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Brian Banks may yet play in the NFL. But he knows it's a long shot after spending five years in prison on a rape charge for which he was later exonerated. Banks is now set on getting tryouts with pro football teams and has put the tragedy of his jail time behind him, even refusing to want punishment for the woman who falsely accused him. James Brown reports on a once promising high-school football prospect blindsided by injustice in a 60 Minutes story to be broadcast Sunday, March 24 at 7:00 p.m. ET/PT.

Ten years ago, a high school make-out session turned into a nightmare for the football standout at Poly-Tech High School in Long Beach, Calif. The girl Banks was with, Wanetta Gibson, accused him of rape. Persuaded by questionable legal advice, he pleaded guilty to a crime he denied doing in a deal that avoided the possibility of a decades-long sentence. When he got out after nearly five years, he went on Facebook one day and had a shock: His accuser wanted to be "friends."'

Lawyer behind Menendez prostitution allegations recants, fabricates media conspiracy

Matt · 23 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The lawyer who represented three women who accused New Jersey Sen. Bob Menendez of employing their services as prostitutes now says he made up the entire thing at the behest of multiple American media outlets.

Melanio Figueroa, who stands accused by Dominican National Police of paying women to fabricate stories about sleeping with Menendez for money, told Dominican investigators Thursday that news outlets are to blame for the plot.

Figueroa blamed four news outlets — CNN, The Daily Caller, Telemundo and Univision — for allegedly encouraging him to fabricate false accusations about Menendez. Pressed further by investigators, Figueroa alleged that a man employed by this news site named “Carlos” offered the lawyer $5,000 to invent the prostitution allegations, according to a Thursday evening television report by Univision.'

IA: Intactivist of the Month for March 2013

Matt · 24 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of Intact America's greatest strengths is the diverse and supportive intactivist community. Our "Intactivist of the Month" series highlights some of the most ardent opponents of infant and childhood circumcision, whose tireless efforts will ensure a future where all babies are kept intact.
...
Richard Schwartzman, D.O., is a board-certified psychiatrist who maintains a private clinical practice in Solebury, Pennsylvania, between Philadelphia and New York City. In his practice, Dr. Schwartzman treats patients with the same mind-body approach and method developed by psychiatrist Wilhelm Reich (1897-1957). Dr. Schwartzman also has been training physicians and psychologists here and abroad for more than 25 years. He has authored numerous articles in the field, lectured extensively in the United States and in Europe, and is considered to be a leading training therapist. In addition to his private practice, he served from 1978-2000 as an associate clinical professor of psychiatry at Hahnemann University. He is presently affiliated with the Institute of Orgonomic Science in Philadelphia. Dr. Schwartzman is also host of the popular blog Wilhelm Reich Today.'

IA Lauds Doctors from 17 Countries Over AAP Criticisms

Matt · 24 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'TARRYTOWN, NY—The American Academy of Pediatrics should be reeling today from two independent blasts of criticism from doctors and medical ethicists saying the AAP's Task Force report last summer, which softened its opposition to routine neonatal male circumcision, is unsupported by scientific data or medical ethics.

Articles in the AAP's own journal Pediatrics, and in a special issue of the British Journal of Medical Ethics, took the AAP to task for its report issued in August 2012 that stopped short of recommending in favor of circumcision, but called for public and private medical insurance to cover the costs for an unnecessary and inherently risky surgery performed more than a million times a year in the United States.'

The European: His Body, His Choice

Matt · 24 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. From 2012, but still very relevant. Excerpt:

'Recently, a German court ruled that the right of the child to physical integrity trumps the right of the parents to religious freedom. The court further stated that circumcision of a minor for non-medical reasons is a criminal offense. Circumcision should therefore be postponed until the boy can decide for himself.
...
As part of this worldwide trend, and following other professional organizations, the KNMG published a position paper in 2010 on the 'non-therapeutic circumcision of minors' (NTC). In it, the KNMG concluded that circumcision violates the child's right to autonomy and physical integrity. One of the main guideposts for the KNMG in this issue is the Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC). This declaration states that children should be protected 'against all forms of physical or mental violence, injury or abuse.' It also calls upon governments to 'take measures to abolish traditional practices prejudicial to the health of children.' There is ample scientific proof that NTC is indeed prejudicial to the health of children. Around 25-50% of healthy skin is removed from the penis in circumcision. ...'

Norweigan Paint Manufacturer JOTUN Promoting New Paint With Sexism

Matt · 24 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

Norweigan Paint Manufacturer JOTUN is promoting their new paint line "LADY Wonderwall" with a woman patting a man on the man's left buttock. Ad on YouTube here.

Imagine the cry from the feminists if it was a man patting a woman's buttock. Today it seems to be all right to make sexist commercials as long as it's a man being objectified. Company contact form is here.

Eight Reasons Why an Intact Penis Is Better Than a Cut Penis

Matt · 24 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Blog post here. From 2012, but good to read anytime. The video he made is in Hebrew so our readers who don't speak it (including myself) will be missing out. If anyone has a desire to translate his video commentary, please feel free to do so and post. Excerpt:

'Shalom. I'm Israeli, I'm Jewish and I'm an Intactivist, which means I strive to end male circumcision performed on infants and children in Israel and around the world. My journey to Intactivism began seven years ago when my son was born.

My wife and I had no doubts about circumcision. Although I hated it, and knew I was only doing it because it was a social dictate, I felt that putting my son through a surgical procedure to make his penis look "normal" was a must. The thought of not circumcising didn't even cross my mind.
...
... This triggered some reluctance, and the next thing I did was to look for recommendations on this doctor. I wanted to see what other parents were saying about him. Minutes into my research I accidentally came across websites which oppose circumcision. The first anti-circumcision text that caught my eye was the following paragraph from The Guide For The Perplexed by Moses Maimonides:

"As regards circumcision, I think that one of its objects is to limit sexual intercourse, and to weaken the organ of generation as far as possible, and thus cause man to be moderate. Some people believe that circumcision is to remove a defect in man's formation; but every one can easily reply: How can products of nature be deficient so as to require external completion, especially as the use of the foreskin to that organ is evident. This commandment has not been enjoined as a complement to a deficient physical creation, but as a means for perfecting man's moral shortcomings. The bodily injury caused to that organ is exactly that which is desired; it does not interrupt any vital function, nor does it destroy the power of generation. ...'

Keep Calm and Carry On Throwing Rocks at Boys?

Matt · 25 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two weeks ago, mainstream news and social media sites joined forces, convincing Amazon to remove adverts for T-shirts with wording such as 'Keep calm and rape a lot' and 'Keep calm and hit her'.

The sexist slogans were a result of a computer programme generating thousands of random phrases, the manufacturer claims. What cannot be written off as an accident, are the eight ads still on Amazon for “Boys are stupid, throw rocks at them” gear, 13 ads for a man-shaped knife block, two ads for an “ex-boyfriend punch bag”, and dozens more ads for T-shirts calling men “pigs”, “dogs”, “idiots”, and “animals”.

You may think comedy items targeting males or females are just a bit of harmless fun, but according to 2008 research by Professor Thomas Ford et al, of Western Carolina University, sexism is spread by the use of sexist humour in particular.

...

I contacted Amazon over a week ago ago by phone, and the call centre worker said she had escalated the complaint to management who will investigate the anti-male products on sale. Men's rights activist Glenn Sacks launched a high profile partially successful campaign 10 years ago to get the “Boys are stupid” range banned, so it is time to finish the job. It has taken a few days to get some violently misogynistic T-shirt ads removed, but 10 years and counting to get some well known violently misandric merchandise banned. You can contact Amazon here.'

Women on corporate boards better decision-makers than male directors: study

Mastodon · 26 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TORONTO — Women who sit on corporate boards are more likely to “rock the boat” and be more open to new ideas than their male counterparts — skills that often translate into better decisions and financial success for the company, according to a new study.

The survey, recently published in the International Journal of Business Governance and Ethics, found that of the 624 board directors polled in Canada, women were more likely to use “co-operation, collaboration and consensus building” when dealing with complex decisions.

While male directors more often made decisions by using “rules, regulations and traditional ways of doing business.”'

Casey Anthony Supporters Send Her Cash, Gift Cards

Mastodon · 26 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In her first public appearance since her murder acquittal in 2011, the unemployed Casey Anthony said that she lives "free off of the kindness of others," along with donations of cash and gift cards from strangers.

Even though she's been called the most hated woman in America, Anthony has a fervent group of supporters who use assumed names and brush off death threats in order to stand by her side.

"I think Casey made some mistakes and I think the picture that we see is a caricature of who she really is," a supporter who goes by Melissa told ABCNews.com. "I don't think we see the whole Casey in what has been presented. There's a hard road ahead of her, but she has a lot of support."'

Relatedly: Trustee asks judge to allow Casey's story to be sold. Excerpt:

'The trustee overseeing Casey Anthony's bankruptcy plans to sell the rights to her story, a new court filing states, and one person has already offered $10,000 — in the hopes of preventing her from profiting from it in the future.

In a new filing, Allan Watkins, an attorney for bankruptcy trustee Stephen L. Meininger, asks U.S. Bankruptcy Judge K. Rodney May for permission to sell "the exclusive worldwide rights in perpetuity to the commercialization of Anthony's life story" including her daughter's death and her high-profile murder trial.'

Follow "Male Positive Media" on Twitter

mens_issues · 26 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I've decided to create a Male Positive Media account on Twitter, where I would post links to positive music and videos for men and boys. The account address is https://twitter.com/MalePositive

If I could get some followers on Twitter, that would be much appreciated. It would extend the influence of male positive media around the web and hopefully become popular.

"Why I am sueing the orthodox Rabbi Yehuda Teichtal for having a circumcision performed on his son"

Matt · 26 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I want to point out explicitly that I reject any ideology or action that is directed against a humane, tolerant, free and democratic value- and law-abiding society. I will refuse or quit any cooperation with persons or groups of whom I think would put a society based on democratic values, unconditional and at any time, in question.

In that spirit I also disapprove of any misuse of my efforts to further children's rights to bodily integrity by people that use the issue of circumcision to fuel their discriminating thoughts against minorities.
...
In the video published on the website of the Berlin Tagesspiegel one can see how Mr. Menachem Fleischmann takes a mouthful of wine, then leans down over baby Mendel Teichtal to suck blood from his bleeding penis.

In §1631d BGB the law states that parents may only consent to a foreskin amputation if it is to be performed according to the rules of medical science, with the degree of skill and learning commonly applied under all the circumstances in the community by the average prudent reputable member of the profession.

Taking a babies bleeding penis into one's mouth to suck blood out of it - a procedure called Metzitzah B'peh - can not be according to this rules.

Hence, in Germany parents can not legally consent to such a practice (a circumcision involving Metzitzah B'peh). The amputation of the foreskin was therefore illegal. This makes it an infliction of bodily harm (in this case additionally qualified as a dangerous one, since it was carried out with a knife).'

Student arrested on suspicion of filing false report tied to rape claim

Mastodon · 27 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'FARGO – North Dakota State University campus police arrested a 20-year-old female student Tuesday evening on suspicion of falsely reporting a crime to law enforcement.

Mary Gullickson, who resides on campus, was arrested without incident at the campus police station, according to NDSU police Lt. Gregory Stone.

Stone said an investigation into a report of an abduction and sexual assault occurring on campus Sunday evening determined that no abduction or sexual assault took place.'

Student who fabricated UC Santa Cruz rape report charged with misdemeanor

Mastodon · 27 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SANTA CRUZ -- A 20-year-old UC Santa Barbara student who admitted to making a false report of rape on the UC Santa Cruz campus in February has been charged by prosecutors.

Morgan Triplett, 20, faces a misdemeanor allegation of making a false report, Santa Cruz County assistant district attorney Johanna Schonfield said Thursday.

Triplett is expected to be arraigned next week and faces six months in jail, counseling or restitution if convicted, prosecutors said.
...
On Feb. 28, UCSC Police Chief Nader Oweis said the woman admitted to authorities that she "fabricated" the report.

"After an extensive investigation it became apparent that the majority of the information that Ms. Triplett gave the officers was not in fact true," Schonfield said Thursday.'

UK: Rape of teenage girl in cemetery a false allegation, say police

Mastodon · 27 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Detectives investigating the rape of a teenage girl in a cemetery say it was a false allegation.

It had been reported the victim was walking from Market Street through Bury cemetery,south of Bury town centre, when she was attacked.

Police were told that on the afternoon of Thursday, March 7, a man grabbed hold of her and pulled her away from the footpath before raping her.

Officers have since confirmed that it was a false report, and no attack took place.'

India: Rape accused kills self after ‘victim’ admits false charges

Mastodon · 27 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A man facing a rape trial committed suicide in Indore days after the complainant reportedly admitted that he had only tried to hold her hand after a fight over money.

Roopkishore, 53, was found dead in his home in Palasia locality on Sunday, four days after the woman, 33, admitted during trial that she had falsely charged him with rape to avoid repaying the money her husband owed him.

The woman, who is Roopkishore's tenant, had accused him of raping her on December 26. The police booked him under Section 376 of the IPC and arrested him.'

Editorial: Despite false sexual assault report, let’s seize opportunity to educate

Mastodon · 27 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yes, we can all rest easy knowing there isn’t a sexual predator on the loose in Auburn.

That should make anyone with children, college-aged or not, breathe a sigh of relief.

But when Auburn police determined that an alleged sexual assault reported near Auburn University’s campus did not, in fact, happen last week, we shouldn’t just close the book.

We need to seize the opportunity to continue to educate and raise awareness about sexual assault.'

Auburn police: Victim in alleged sexual assault filed false report

Mastodon · 27 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An alleged sexual assault reported near Auburn University campus last week did not occur, authorities announced Monday.

“We thoroughly investigated it and it didn’t happen,” said Auburn Police Capt. Tom Stofer, who declined to release the identity of the woman that filed the false report.

Stofer also said there will be no charges filed against the 20-year-old woman who was not an Auburn University student and at no time was she or any residents in the area of the alleged incident in any danger.'

Shelton Cops: Ansonia Woman Falsely Reported Sexual Assault

Mastodon · 27 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'An Ansonia resident filed a false report of sexual assault, Shelton police said.

Kathryn M. Jordan, 54, of Elaine Drive, is charged with second-degree falsely reporting an incident.

She made the report in July 2012, police said, and was arrested March 20 at 11:30 a.m. at Police Headquarters.

Jordan was released on a written promise to appear in Derby Superior Court on April 3.'

False rape claim hindered Elgin murder investigation, police say

Mastodon · 27 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Elgin police, investigating a 2-week-old murder, say they wasted valuable time and resources looking into a report of a nearby sexual assault that turned out to be false.

A Larkin High School senior who lives on the same block as murder victim Lisa Koziol-Ellis made the false report to cover up the fact she lost a dog she was watching, police said.

Katrina R. Sedlock, 18, of the 0-100 block of Garden Crescent Court, was charged with felony disorderly conduct and making a false crime report. She appeared Friday in the Elgin branch of Kane County bond court, police Cmdr. Glenn Theriault said.'

SAVE: District Attorney Group is Embarrassing Itself

Matt · 27 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

In early January, SAVE sent a letter to the National District Attorneys Association, asking the NDAA to make its National Center for the Prosecution of Violence Against Women gender-neutral or gender-inclusive.

We thought the NDAA would respond quickly to our request, since the NDAA's own ethical standards say, "A criminal investigation should not begin or be continued if it is motivated in whole or part by the victim or perpetrator's race, ethnicity, religion, sexual orientation, or political affiliation unless these factors are an element of a crime or relevant to the perpetrator's motive."

Nearly 3 months later, the NDAA has not changed the biased name of its Center, nor has it given a formal response.

Anti-Circumcision Protesters Cut Into Supreme Court Scene

Mastodon · 27 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'While most of the thousands of demonstrators lined up outside the U.S. Supreme Court today were there to show their opposition to the Defense of Marriage Act, a handful of people were getting snippy about a completely different issue.

Circumcision.

This week marks the 20th annual Demonstration Against Infant Circumcision, a yearly protest in which hundreds of "intactivists" descent upon Washington to clamor for an end to the practice of doctors removing newborn infant boys' foreskin, whether for religious purposes or because it's a standard practice in American medicine.

"Forcing children to participate in blood rituals is wrong," says Jonathan Conte, a San Francisco resident holding a large sign reading "Equal Justice" above a large, graphic photo of a newborn being circumcised. "Religion of one's parents is not a reason to abuse."

Noting that the federal government adopted legislation in 1996 banning vaginal circumcision, Conte wants to see a similar measure adopted that protects penises. While the removal of the foreskin is an ages-old custom in Judaism, Conte says that accounts for only a fraction of circumcisions performed in the United States, where it was adopted as a standard medical procedure for newborns in the mid-19th century.'

Sens. look to fix child support, revoked licenses

Matt · 27 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Easing the penalties on people who fail to pay child support would seem to be an odd strategy to use to alleviate child poverty.

But that's what was discussed at a West Virginia Senate committee on child poverty on Wednesday. And that discussion is likely to lead to legislation that will have bipartisan support.

The committee heard from Rev. Matthew Watts, a community leader from Charleston's West Side, who described a situation where a parent fails to pay child support, is sent to jail, loses any source of income he or she may have had and then the child has no hope of getting support.
...
Laird has proposed a bill providing amnesty to anyone whose license has been suspended for failing to pay a fine that is at least 10 years old. That bill will be considered by the Senate Transportation Committee on Friday.'

Jailed for Nonpayment of Child Support; But its Not His Child

Matt · 27 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The feminists have ratcheted up the laws against men to such an outrageous level that paternity fraud is not just ignored, but routinely rubber stamped by the courts. Whether one agrees with the concept of child support or not, virtually everyone can agree that jailing men for child support over children who are not theirs is morally wrong. Men are routinely sent to jail for falling behind on paying child support, even though debtors' prisons in the U.S. were mostly eliminated in the mid-nineteenth century.

The family courts and laws are set up in such a way that makes it very easy for a mother to collect child support, and very difficult for a man to avoid it. If a couple was married, the default law is that the man will be required to pay child support for any child born while they were married. In order for a man who isn't the father to escape this outcome, he must obtain a paternity test and take a series of legal steps in court. Most states only allow a short window of time for a man to do this. If a man is not aware of the child, which he may not be if his wife or former wife doesn't notify him of the child right away, he loses all chance to fight the child support, and will be on the hook for hundreds of thousands of dollars for the next 18 years until the child becomes an adult.'

UK: GCSE exam shakeup could discriminate against girls, say teachers

Mastodon · 28 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Coalition plans to force teenagers to sit exams at the end of their courses, rather than throughout the year, could discriminate against girls, teachers have warned.

From 2015, there will be a return to end-of-course exams and less coursework in GCSE English, geography, history, maths and the sciences. Michael Gove, the education secretary, says the move will make the qualifications more rigorous.

But the reforms could reverse the lead girls have had over boys in most subjects for more than two decades, teachers said. Exams data shows girls have outperformed boys in GCSEs for 24 years.'

Firms owned by white women get half of Parkland's minority contracts

Mastodon · 28 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'White women's companies have received half of the $177 million that Parkland Memorial Hospital has awarded to minority- and women-owned businesses for the construction of a new public hospital.

Dallas County Commissioner John Wiley Price asked Parkland officials to provide the breakdown as he scrutinizes how Parkland and the new facility are being overseen.

"It's very interesting to me that in every area, white-women-owned businesses lead the pack," Price said at Tuesday's regular meeting of the Dallas County commissioners.'

The Athena Doctrine: What if Male Leaders Thought More Like Women?

Mastodon · 28 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With the spotlight currently shining on female leaders, like Marissa Mayer and Sheryl Sandberg, the timing couldn't be better for next month's release of the The Athena Doctrine. This groundbreaking new book, which features surveys from 64,000 people in 13 countries, presents an intriguing conclusion: Our world would be a better place if more men thought like women.

I had the chance to catch up with one of the authors, social strategist John Gerzema, to ask him a few questions about the book—and find out what his takeaways are for any business owner, regardless of gender.'

'Women are smarter than men'

Mastodon · 29 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At an early point in their lives, women have developed a skill that lasts them their entire lifetime, and that is the ability to act/pretend as if they are on the same intellectual level with men, when women are actually superior to them. Men, not being comparatively bright, fall for this act and believe men and women are of equal intelligence. Men don't realize the intellectually inferior position they are in, and therefore women can use men's lack of understanding to their advantage in "outsmarting" men on various levels.'

Poll: 45 Percent Would Ban Shechitah in Britain

Matt · 29 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(JTA) -- About 45 percent of 1,900 Britons polled favored banning Jewish ritual slaughter and 38 percent said they favored banning nonmedical circumcision.
...
When asked about “male circumcision for religious reasons," 38 percent supported a ban, 35 percent opposed a ban and 27 percent were undecided, The Jewish Chronicle reported this week.

Among 18-24 year-olds, 41 percent would ban both nonmedical circumcision in underage boys and ritual slaughter of animals for food.'

Are women retirees really much poorer than men?

Mastodon · 29 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I’ve covered gender differences in financial issues for years. Periodically, studies come out that say women are worse at planning for retirement than men. They outlive men, on average, and tend to put away less for retirement, so they end up poorer. The studies are pumped out with a frightening degree of regularity by financial institutions and think tanks. But I’ve started to ask: Is it really true that women are worse off in retirement?
...
From the EBRI survey, I would gather that male retirees are slightly better off financially than females. The fact that men rely more on their own savings than on government programs proves they’ve done a better job of setting money aside. But the differences are slight, not oceanic.'

Is America A "Rape Culture"?

Mastodon · 29 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This claim, advanced by a cadre of feminist activists and bloggers, has been gaining mainstream currency—particularly in the wake of the nationally publicized Steubenville, Ohio rape case which exposed some very ugly attitudes and behaviors. While no one would deny that sexual violence is a grave problem, the crusade against “the rape culture” is a dubious cure: it distorts truth, fosters anger and divisiveness instead of respect and equality, and ultimately endangers justice for all.

There is, of course, some truth to the feminist argument that traditional sexual norms have often led to tolerance toward sexual coercion in certain situations (especially when the woman’s conduct is seen as “loose” or seductive). Even now, such sentiments are echoed in vile Internet comments bashing the 16-year-old Steubenville victim as a drunken slut—very much a minority view, but voiced frequently enough to be troubling.
...
Let us, by all means, confront ugly, sexist, victim-blaming attitudes when we see them. But this can be done without promoting sexist attitudes in feminist clothing: that a woman’s word automatically deserves more weight than a man’s; that all men bear responsibility for rape and “normal” men need to be taught not to rape; or that a woman who is inebriated but fully conscious is not responsible for her actions while an equally inebriated man is.

These ideological shibboleths will do little to help real victims of sexual violence, and may even hurt them by inviting an inevitable backlash.'

People stranded on drifting ice-- really a problem since some are women and children

Matt · 30 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. More from the it's-really-a-problem-if-it-includes-women-and-children dept. Excerpt:

'There are reports out of northern Europe that more than 500 people were adrift on two ice floes that broke away and began drifting away from the coast of Latvia.

Among the stranded were families with women and children but most of the stranded were ice fishermen.

Rescue operations were underway and many of the people had been rescued.'

F&F: More Alimony Reform: Valuation of Professional Practices in Divorce Proceedings

Matt · 30 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Massachusetts Medical Society has submitted an act relative to the valuation of professional practices in divorce proceedings, H1227. This legislation is applicable to all professional practices – medical, architectural, legal, financial services, and engineering.

Prior to 1997, the Massachusetts probate courts in divorce proceedings treated the value of a corporation as the price at which the property would change hands between a willing seller and a willing buyer, neither being under any compulsion to buy or sell and both having relevant knowledge of relevant facts. This definition is referred to as the fair market valuation standard as defined by the Internal Revenue Service. This legislation would reinstate this definition for professional corporations, in particular when the professional is going to stay with the corporation and continue to provide services.'

White House Petition to Enforce 14th Amendment to Protect Infant Males Against Circumcision

Mastodon · 30 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Text:

'It is an absolute outrage that this country has outlawed medically unnecessary circumcision of minor females, yet has continued to to allow the procedure on infant males. The fourteenth amendment plainly states that all individuals are guaranteed equal protection under the law. There are countless males outraged at having been mutilated at the hands of doctors (These doctors took vows to first do no harm) with the consent of their parents (who are suppose to protect their children!). There are not enough benefits of circumcision to recommend it as routine practice. There are needless infant deaths every year due to complications. It is time to stand up as a nation and do away with an outdated trend that introduced to prevent masturbation!'

Jodi Arias' Domestic Violence Expert Says Email Proves Travis Alexander Was Abusive

Mastodon · 30 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jodi Arias' defense team may have scored its first big win Thursday when a domestic violence expert testified about previously undisclosed emails from Travis Alexander's close friends that indicate he had a history of being abusive.

"They have basically advised Ms. Arias to move on from the relationship ... that Mr. Alexander has been abusive to women." psychotherapist Alyce LaViolette testified.
...
Prosecutor Juan Martinez objected to much of the defense expert's testimony, calling it was hearsay. However, the judge overruled the majority of the objections.

The jury could view LaViolette's testimony as crucial in determining whether there is merit to Arias' claim that she was a victim of domestic violence.'

Dallas: Men against domestic violence rally draws low numbers

Mastodon · 30 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LEWISVILLE — Unfavorable weather and insufficient advertising is being blamed for the low turn out to a rally planned in front of Lewisville City Hall.

Lewisville resident Robert Glen planned a Men Against Domestic Violence rally for March 23, but only four people showed up for the event.

“It was a total bust,” Glen said. “I know the weather wasn’t great, and I don’t think there was enough coverage to really get the rally going.”'

Relatedly:

Plano woman sentenced to eight years for stabbing ex in back Excerpt:

'PLANO — Julia Decatur-Schrader, 40, of Plano, was sentenced to eight years in prison Friday for stabbing her ex-husband in the back.
...
Decatur-Schrader's 13-year-old daughter testified she had seen her mother carrying a "crazy knife" earlier in the evening, and that she had threatened to stab her ex-husband. While Schrader was in his apartment complex courtyard with his brother, Decatur-Schrader entered the courtyard and secretly activated her cell phone microphone and placed the phone on one of the courtyard tables.

Decatur-Schrader then charged at Schrader and began beating him on his face and head, cutting his scalp with her hands. Witnesses on a nearby balcony testified Schrader did not fight back, but ducked and tried to cover his face. When the witnesses threatened to call the police, Decatur-Schrader stopped and started to walk away.'

Barbara Kay: Our male-victimizing myths live on

Mastodon · 30 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Twenty years ago Earl Silverman of Calgary, fleeing his home to escape violence from his abusive wife, had no refuge to take shelter in. There were plenty of shelters for women victims of domestic abuse, but for men the only publicly funded services were for anger management.

The message was clear to Silverman: “As a victim, I was re-victimized by having these services telling me I wasn’t a victim, but I was a perpetrator.”

Three years ago, in his own home, Silverman opened the Men’s Alternative Safe House (MASH), which until last week held the distinction of being the only privately funded shelter for male victims of domestic abuse in Canada. Now, with no public funds to help, the maintenance and grocery bills associated with running his shelter have become too onerous for him to handle. Silverman has sold his home.'

Girls Get More Learning Time from Parents than Boys

Mastodon · 30 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Girls may struggle with self-esteem issues and gender equality in the workplace, but a new study suggests there is one area where they have a one-up on their male counterparts.

Conducted by two Canadian economics professors, this study is a follow-up on one that showed boys receive more parental time than girls because their fathers spend more time with them after about age five or six. However, the new study indicates that girls have the upper hand when it comes to teaching time from their parents.

According to the authors, preschool girls from Canada, the United States and the United Kingdom get more time with their parents when it comes to telling stories, reading, singing songs, drawing, and learning new words and letters. Even in households with fraternal boy-and-girl twins where parents were determined to treat both children fairly, this conclusion held true. In fact, number teaching seemed to be the only place where boys seemed to receive fair treatment.'

District Court finds boys' basketball haircut policy does not constitute discrimination or infringe student rights

Mastodon · 30 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Among other more technical legal findings, the Court found that the due process, equal protection, and discrimination claims could not survive on their merits. The Court reasoned that public schools may lawfully enact and enforce dress and grooming policies and may even impose a higher degree of regulation on students who participate in interscholastic sports than the general student body. The student's equal protection claim failed because the haircut policy applies only to male athletes who play basketball and not all male athletes, thereby eliminating any claims that male athletes were treated differently from female athletes. The Court stated that there was no evidence the school intentionally discriminated against the student because of his membership in the class of male athletes. Similarly, the student's Title IX gender discrimination claim failed because the haircut policy does not discriminate against the student because of his gender.'

N. Dakota: Another Walk-A-Mile-In-Her-Shoes Event

Mastodon · 31 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MOORHEAD – Last Sunday, 230 people registered for MSUM's third annual "Walk a Mile in Her Shoes." An estimated three-quarters of them were male college students.
...
The men clearly had fun trying on, showing off and hobbling around in the women's shoes, but the afternoon spectacle had a bigger purpose – to show that they, too, want to help prevent sexual violence.
...
"Being of the male gender, I have to assume responsibility on behalf of all men for the fact that we didn't seem to care that much. It took, for the most part, strong, determined women to say enough is enough, 35-40 years ago," says Diehl, who's been working in the field for 25 years.

He says the men he knows and works with are aware of and grateful for the work women have done to raise awareness and prevent violence against women, and they don't want to come across as trying to take over – they just want to add their voices and work on the problem together.

Although men, too, are victims of sexual assault, statistics from the RACC and local law enforcement continue to show that women still make up the majority.

"It seems clear that it's my gender who are the primary perpetrators of this violence, whether it's against men or women. It's also up to us to try to stop it as well as just make sure there are services available after it happens," Diehl says.'

Protesters decry infant circumcision

Mastodon · 31 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The people carrying signs Saturday in Pine Grove Park across from Port Huron Hospital were protesting cuts — but not to health care spending or state government.

Members of Intact Michigan were protesting infant circumcision.

“We believe that since girls are protected under the law from genital cutting, males also should be protected under the law from genital cutting until they’re old enough to decide,” said Kaitlyn Young, who organized the protest.

“We’re not against circumcision per se,” she said. “We’re against it being forced on infants.”'

As Qualified Men Dwindle, Military Looks For A Few Good Women

Mastodon · 31 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When the Pentagon said earlier this year that it would open ground combat jobs to women, it was cast in terms of giving women equal opportunities in the workplace — the military workplace.

But the move has practical considerations, too. The military needs qualified people to fill its ranks, and it's increasingly harder to find them among men.

"It's fairly common knowledge that our population of military-age young men, who qualify for the military, is declining," Joint Chiefs Chairman Gen. Martin Dempsey said in an interview with NPR just after the Pentagon announced that women no longer be excluded from ground combat jobs.

Too many potential male recruits have criminal records, drop out of high school or have drug problems. In addition, the rising obesity rate is also a factor.'

Who will fight for the rights of military fathers?

Mastodon · 31 March 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here's a sad but true story. It starts with a young couple living in North Carolina, married two years, wife pregnant, husband in the Army Reserves.

He's deployed to Afghanistan for a year, and she moves to Maryland to live with her parents and newborn daughter. One year later, a week before the child's father comes home from Afghanistan, the wife texts her husband to say she's divorcing him — she claimed abandonment, even though they had kept in touch weekly — and then takes two thirds of the money they had saved.

...

The wife had a bachelor's degree and finally decided to get a job. So now they were making close to the same amount, she grossing $2,300 a month and he $2,600. She had the added expense of day care, at $860 a month, but she was still living for free with her parents.

But the court ordered the father to pay $967 a month in child support, which left him $1,200 a month in take home pay to live on. Plus, he can only see his daughter if he goes up to Maryland after the judge said he couldn't take her back to North Carolina for visits because the car ride would be too hard on an 18-month-old. The wife also asked for alimony but that has not been granted so far.'

Adria Richards and Donglegate - Right or Wrong?

Matt · 1 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Whilst at PyCon, a conference for developers, Adria Richards was seated ten rows back from the stage. A row behind her, two men were having a conversation where they referenced "forking repos" and "big dongles". Adria overheard and decided she did not like what she heard, since conversations of an offensive nature are not allowed in PyCon's guidelines. She decided to tweet to her 10,000+ twitter followers in the industry, instead of speaking to them directly as suggested in the guidelines. The events that followed would lead to both parties getting fired.

Following this tweet, she contacted PyCon publicly via twitter and both men were taken away and reprimanded. Adria then decided that she should write an article on her popular blog about it. In this blog she implied what the men had said was sexist and preventative of women entering the tech industry. She also said that she had been a hero as well as later tweeting she felt like Joan of Ark. She described the men as "ass clowns" and their comments as being something out of Lord of the Flies.

As a result of this, one of the men was fired from his job. Understandably perhaps, many people in the community did not agree with this decision and the story began to go viral. Her twitter was inundated and then it took a far more sinister tone, with misogynist men tweeting threats of rape and even a picture of a decapitated female corpse accompanied by "your next". Adria's company began to lose clients, its reputation and its brand equity. Adria was subsequently fired from her role. There has been much division in the media on who was right and who was wrong here, who overreacted and who did not. I aim to examine the facts in this article and try and determine the answers to these questions.'

Antifeminism Might Become Illegal in the Nordic Countries

Matt · 1 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Nordic Council has received recommendations from the expert panel to forbid antifeminist speech in the Nordic countries (Denmark, Sweden, Finland, Iceland and Norway).

The “Expert panel” was full of radical feminists and profeminist men.

The report is written in the Nordic languages (except Finnish) and some parts in English.

In the report antifeminist speech and right-wing extremist hate speech towards immigrants are treated as a part of the same movement.

MRM is labeled as part of right-wing extremism.'

20% of High School Aged Boys in US Diagnosed with ADHD

Matt · 2 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nearly one in five high school age boys in the United States and 11 percent of school-age children over all have received a medical diagnosis of attention deficit hyperactivity disorder, according to new data from the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

These rates reflect a marked rise over the last decade and could fuel growing concern among many doctors that the A.D.H.D. diagnosis and its medication are overused in American children.

...

“Those are astronomical numbers. I’m floored,” said Dr. William Graf, a pediatric neurologist in New Haven and a professor at the Yale School of Medicine. He added, “Mild symptoms are being diagnosed so readily, which goes well beyond the disorder and beyond the zone of ambiguity to pure enhancement of children who are otherwise healthy.”'

Australia: Woman pours superglue into man's eyes during argument

Mastodon · 2 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'The 64-year-old man and the 58-year-old woman became involved in a heated argument at a Sebastopol house on Sunday evening.

The woman allegedly tried to strangle the man before pouring superglue in his eyes and one ear, Senior Sergeant Paul Kinna said.

Sgt Kinna said the woman is also accused of trying to set fire to the man and striking him with her prosthetic leg.

The man was taken to Ballarat Base Hospital, before being transferred to Melbourne's Eye and Ear Hospital in a stable condition.

The woman has been charged with three offences, including one count of reckless conduct endangering life.'

The Glass Cellar

Mastodon · 2 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'We hear a lot about the "Glass Ceiling" that keeps women from top positions, but very little about the men who comprise 85% or more of the 25 most dangerous jobs.'

F&F: National Putative Father Registry: A Bad Idea Promoted by Adoption Lawyers

Matt · 2 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For readers who haven't seen pieces I've written on these scandalous inventions, putative father registries are entities designed to remove fathers from the process of adopting children. They're located in the bureaucracy of states, usually in the Department of Health, perhaps in the Bureau of Vital records. A registry is created by state law that requires every unmarried man who believes he may have fathered a child to file a form with the registry laying claim to any such child. If he does that and and a child was in fact conceived and the mother carries it to term and places the child for adoption, the father is entitled to notice of the adoption and an opportunity to assert his parental rights. Failure to file the form means the court is free to finalize the adoption without telling him.

So, if you're single man and you have sex with a woman, you need to file the requisite form with the state. On it you'll identify yourself and the woman and, depending on the state, the approximate birth date of the child.'

Divorce, Children, and Child Support: A Family Law Roundtable

Matt · 2 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 24 minute presentation answers many of the questions common to clients of these professionals with more than fifty years of combined experience in practice. The panel addresses worry and misunderstandings associated with managing the effects of divorce on children. In addition to discussions of legal issues involving child custody and child support during (and following) divorce, the presentation explores financial and psychological elements likely to affect parents and their children resulting from the separation.
...
The Family Law Roundtable: Child Support is the second video in a series of discussions on divorce, with two more roundtables to follow from this panel. See it here:

http://www.lowensteinbrown.com/child-support-roundtable.php

Read the full story at http://www.prweb.com/releases/2013/4/prweb10574159.htm

'Women (and Men) Face Big Hurdles in Training for Marine Infantry Units'

Mastodon · 2 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'QUANTICO, Va. — A group of Marine second lieutenants, all men, stood before the ropes on an obstacle course. They looked exhausted, though the day was far from done. One by one, they took their shots at scaling the line. One by one, most of them dropped short of the top. They were already three hours behind the front-runners in their class.

...

The 86-day Infantry Officer Course, which was started in 1977 by Vietnam combat veterans, is viewed with special reverence within the corps, the most infantry-centric of the armed services. Though its students tend to be top performers in basic officer training, more than one in five are dropped during the infantry course. Some are allowed to try again, but most find other jobs in the corps.

...

But for that to happen, he said, they will need to start preparing in college or high school, as many men do. He has begun urging the Naval Academy and reserve officer training programs to help potential female candidates strengthen their upper bodies, do more hiking carrying weight and study infantry history.'

Senate Committee Approves Father-Daughter Bill

Mastodon · 2 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Senate Committee approved a bill that would allow school districts to have father-daughter dances and other gender-exclusive events, as long as comparable events for the opposite gender is offered.

The bill now heads to the Senate floor.

The bill, 2013-S 0012 – submitted by Cranston Sen. Hannah Gallo – would alter state gender discrimination laws, which Cranston school lawyers have said traditional father-daughter dances violate. A complaint from the mother of a Cranston girl triggered the review, prompting Cranston Supt. Judith Lundsten to cancel the district's dance.'

California Agriculture Teacher Given 5-Month Sentence, Had Sex With Underage Student

Mastodon · 2 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Merced, CA – Melody Carter-McCabe was arrested and retained on a $250,000 bail last summer for allegedly engaging in a relationship with one of her students. The 27-year-old carried on a yearlong sexual relationship with a 15-year-old beginning back in 2010. McCabe was the boy's mentor in the Future Farmers of America program.

The Livingston High School agriculture teacher initially faced up to 12 years in prison if convicted, as she had been charged with nine felony counts of unlawful sex with a minor.

However Monday, after McCabe pled no contest to the charges, a judge sentenced the former educator to five months in the Merced County jail. She is scheduled to report to the jail on Thursday to start her detainment and will be given credit for any time she's already served leading up to the sentencing. After release, McCabe will be under a five year felony probation but will not have to register as a sexual offender.'

Rhonda Eisenberg, ex-teacher, allowed to write former student whose child she bore

Mastodon · 2 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In July, we told you about Greeley high school teacher Rhonda Eisenberg's arrest for sexual assault in a case involving what was at the time an underage student.

Eisenberg subsequently pleaded guilty in the matter, and she was sentenced yesterday. But the resolution of the case was complicated by two facts: The student fathered Eisenberg's child, and he's now legally an adult, who a judge will allow to exchange letters with the woman convicted of assaulting him. Photos, video, the original arrest affidavit and more below.

...

"She continues to work with teenage boys," the note added.

...

As expected, Eisenberg was given actual time behind bars -- ninety days' worth. She's also required to register as a sex offender and undergo four years of sex-offender intensive supervised probation -- and as reported by CBS4, she didn't gripe about the punishment when addressing the court.'

Evans woman charged with making false rape claim against deputy

Mastodon · 2 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Evans woman was charged Tuesday with falsely accusing a deputy of raping her during a weekend traffic stop.

Kelsey Alane Long, 23, was charged with making a false report of a crime, possession of a Schedule III drug, possession of a controlled substance, obstruction and several traffic charges. She is being held in the Columbia County Detention Center without bond, according to sheriff's Capt. Steve Morris.

Long told a deputy taking her complaint at Georgia Regents Medical Center early Sunday that a deputy raped her in the front yard of a Martinez home about 2:30 a.m. during a traffic stop. The deputy taking her complaint told Long that making a false report of a crime was a felony, but she wanted to file the report anyway, according to a sheriff's office incident report.'

Trinidad: Single dads feel discriminated against

Matt · 2 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SINGLE fathers poured their hearts out on Saturday night in Chaguanas and appealed to judges and magistrates to appreciate that the rights of fathers and mothers were just as important as the rights of the child.

Members of the Single Fathers' Association of Trinidad and Tobago (SFATT) held a meeting on Saturday night at which single fathers gathered at the Central Regional Indoor Sports Arena, Chaguanas, to voice their frustration.

SFATT's president Rhondall Feeles told a group of single fathers who turned out for the meeting, that the court system was too "mother-centric" and they needed, as single fathers, to make their voices heard.'

From The Burning Bed to Jodi Arias: The Abuse Defense Gone Wrong

Mastodon · 3 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most crimes of domestic abuse and stalking are perpetrated by men, but just because the majority of victims are women, to deny that women can be controlling and abusive and stalk and kill the men they covet, is a travesty to what the last 35 years have taught us about the dynamics of abuse. To suggest that Jodi Arias was a victim of an abusive boyfriend flies in the face of everything we have learned about power, control and obsession in intimate partner and stalking crimes. Far worse, to remain blind to the evidence of stalking and premeditated homicide because of the genders of the perpetrators and/or victims, is to send us back 35 years to the years before the case of Francine Hughes and The Burning Bed brought the realities of domestic abuse out of the closet, and gave victims some help and hope, however limited it remains.
...
Just because a woman treats a man badly is no excuse for killing her. And just because a man treats a woman badly is no excuse for killing him. Travis Alexander may not have respected Jodi Arias outside the bedroom, and she may well have wanted more from their relationship than he was willing to offer her. But the only way to promote informed awareness of domestic abuse and intimate partner homicide is to recognize that sometimes the abusers are not men. Sometimes they're the victims.'

Nebraska: Legislators consider equal parenting bill

Mastodon · 3 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LINCOLN — Joe Trader became a father and an activist on the same day.

After his daughter was born in 2010, Trader's girlfriend announced she wanted to break up. Determined to play a role in his daughter's life, the Omaha man filed legal papers seeking custody.

An Iraq War veteran who held down two jobs while obtaining a business degree at the University of Nebraska at Omaha, Trader argued for joint legal custody and equal parenting time. He got neither.

So he started a fathers' rights page on Facebook that has since obtained nearly 900 "likes." He also helped get roughly 150 people to show up at the Nebraska Legislature this year in support of two bills intended to make equal parenting time the majority, rather than the minority.'

Boys vs. girls: What's behind the college grad gender gap?

Mastodon · 3 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FORTUNE -- The facts are plain, if puzzling: Not only do women enter college at higher rates than men, but they're less likely to drop out once they get there. Female grads now account for about 60% of U.S. bachelor's degree holders.

Does that mean men are less studious or committed than women are?

Not necessarily. Instead, it seems the gender gap's roots are partly financial: Men are less willing to take on the heavy debt loads that are increasingly required to complete a college degree. When they reach the point of owing $12,500 in school loans, men "are more likely to be discouraged" than women -- and to decide it makes sense to leave school and start working full-time.'

The New ‘Gender Gap’

Mastodon · 3 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why? The authors’ analysis zeroes in on the rise in single motherhood over the last generation or two. Their statistics show that while the sons of single mothers face a significantly increased risk of “high school dropout, criminality, and violence,” and thus “diminished chances of obtaining stable employment,” the impact of single motherhood on daughters isn’t all that severe. Autor and Wasserman suggest that a “vicious cycle” may be in the offing, with a lower rate of father-headed households today giving rise to a generation of underachieving men tomorrow, and consequently to even fewer father-headed households – resulting in an ever-widening disparity between the educational and professional attainments of American men and women. The authors make it clear, moreover, that the phenomena they describe aren’t distinctive to the U.S. but can be observed in many parts of the Western world.

...

What chance do this “report’s” recommendations have of being adopted? Well, keep in mind that this isn’t some obscure, marginal academic product. The “seminar” out of which it grew was sponsored in part by the Norwegian Ministry of Children, Equality, and Social Inclusion; several of the authors work for official government agencies; and the “report” itself was funded by the Nordic Council (which, in turn, is funded by all of the Nordic governments). This is, then, pretty much as close as you can come to an official government document. Far from making the case that feminism is embattled and vulnerable, it’s proof positive that feminist ideology has the Nordic political establishment by the cojones (as we say in Norway) – and that those who dare to take it on are, like the critics of Islam, marked for censorship.'

Ryerson Students' Union blocks men's issues group

Mastodon · 3 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Ryerson Students' Union (RSU) takes issue with a men's issues club. If it were not so serious, it would be laughable. An organization that collects hundreds of thousands of dollars in mandatory levies from Ryerson students is afraid of three students—two of them women—starting a men's issues group.

Despite the constant rhetoric about diversity, equity and inclusion, the RSU cannot tolerate ideologies that run counter to its own. The irony of this patronizing attitude towards campus freedom is hard to miss. It's as if the spirit of closed-minded religious dogma has jumped into bed with modern political correctness to prevent blasphemy against RSU ideological orthodoxy.'

Baseball Bailout At Towson Still Needs Approval

Mastodon · 3 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The reinstatement of baseball at Towson University is not a done deal yet.

According to Towson University Governor O'Malley's supplemental budget now includes $300-thousand for the next two years to fund the baseball program with the agreement that the program become self sufficient by 2015. But that funding needs to be approved by the General Assembly.

President Marvene Loeschke several weeks ago eliminated baseball and men's soccer citing having to meet Title IX requirements and a lack of funding for the programs.

She tells WBAL's Bill Vanko that a lot of pieces have to come together before the baseball program can start up again. "This is not finished. It is just a very hopeful window out of which we can operate with a real possibility of a two year success," says Loeschke.

Two weeks ago funding for the University's planned building in Harford County was put on hold as a result of the outcry of the elimination of the sports programs.'

New research confirms men feeling ‘mother’s guilt' too

Mastodon · 3 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are days when Daniel Gerecht’s eldest daughter Amelia, 2, tries to stop him from going to work. “Daddy stay home,” she’ll say. Or she takes his hand and leads him back to bed.

“I’ve had to pull away from that, and that’s absolutely killer,” said the 33-year-old high school teacher.

The delicate balancing act between working and parenting, and the ensuing guilt if the balancing act fails, is typically associated with women. But a new study released by the Pew Research Center confirms men are feeling “mother’s guilt” too.'

Women’s issues take immigration reform spotlight

Mastodon · 3 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women immigrants find themselves subject to abuse and lack of rights with little recourse, according to testimony from experts and activists who are urging national lawmakers to prioritize women in any comprehensive reform plan.

The director for National Domestic Workers Alliance, Ai-jen Poo, told Congress that past immigration overhauls have focused solely on the economic needs of U.S. companies, to the detriment of the immigrants’ rights.

“Today women and children represent two-thirds of all immigrants in the United States,” Poo told the Senate Judiciary committee on Monday. “But, unfortunately, past rounds of immigration reform have excluded women’s experiences.”
...
Jeff Sessions, R-Alabama, pushed back on the urge to open the immigration system based on family needs. Sessions said that immigration decisions must always be in the national interest.

“Just because it’s painful _ you made a choice to come to America _ doesn’t necessarily mean, I think, that you get to bring your aging parents or your brother and sister,” Sessions said in committee.

Sessions argued that the United States must have a limit on immigration, and those admitted should be chosen based on criteria like education, achievement, and ability to contribute economically.'

'Many American White Men Worship Guns Because of Sexual Insecurity, Entitlement, and Profit'

Mastodon · 3 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You won't find anyone willing to dare say it much in the media, but a good percentage of the white men who oppose gun control of any sort – and who back measures that would even allow alleged terrorists and straw purchases for drug dealers to buy guns – are just afraid that without their guns, their phallic power will be reduced to size.

You can feel at least temporarily reassured when a long-barreled assault weapon compensates for just another average manhood; it's an irresistable testosterone high to the beleaguered white male.
...
We're talking about a dying patriarchy making a last stand with the ownership and brandishing of weapons that provide the semblance of ultimate power over life and death.'

National Geographic: Men closing life expectancy gap with women is "troubling" mens_issues · 3 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Apparently it's "troubling" when the life expectancy gap between men and women has been closing, according to this article. Excerpt:

'How long do you have? It depends on gender and geography. In the U.S., women live longer—81 years on average, 76 for men—but a recent study by the Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation reveals a troubling trend. Though men's life spans have increased by 4.6 years since 1989, women have gained only 2.7 years, perhaps because a larger percentage of women have lacked adequate treatment for high blood pressure and cholesterol. "This is a wake-up call," says study co-author Ali Mokdad.'

Woman Convicted Of Killing Ex-Husband With Boiling Water

Mastodon · 3 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'REDWOOD CITY, Calif. -- A Northern California woman is facing 16 years to life behind bars after being convicted of killing her ex-husband by dousing him with scalding water.

San Mateo County prosecutors say 41-year-old Jesusa Ursonal Tatad pleaded no contest to second-degree murder on Wednesday. She is scheduled to be sentenced May 17.

Tatad and her ex-husband, 36-year-old Ronnie Tatad, shared a Daly City apartment. Prosecutors say she pulled back the blankets while he slept on Nov. 26, 2011, and threw a pot of boiling water on him.

They say she was upset because she believed he was seeing another woman.

The San Mateo County Times reports (http://bit.ly/ZAlm2T) that Ronnie Tatad died about two weeks later of a blood infection connected to his burns.'

Barbara Kay: Fair play for divorced dads

Matt · 4 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Supreme Court Chief Justice Beverley McLachlin has commissioned a report aimed at overhauling Canada's family-law system. Its recommendations, which will be officially released later this month, reportedly include strategies for streamlining the legal process, encouraging mediation and reducing litigation.

The report will note that the number of self-representing litigants in family-law cases has climbed to above 70%, largely due to the exorbitant cost of lawyers. That statistic suggests the economic hardship that fractious breakups impose, but not the heartbreaking human costs imposed on parents — especially fathers, who often find the deck stacked against them in court.'

Brian Banks Signs With Atlanta Falcons

Mastodon · 4 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Brian Banks (pictured), the high school football prodigy whose career was derailed by false rape accusations, has finally succeeded in achieving his NFL dreams: the Atlanta Falcons have signed him to a contract.
...
While a student at Polytechnic High School in Long Beach, Calif., a female acquaintance accused Banks of sexual assault. He was charged with rape and kidnapping, agreeing to a plea deal that put him in prison for five years. The California Innocence Project, a law school program, helped exonerate him after the women recanted her claims in a staged video sting.'

Wikipedia on Brian Banks

What is Misogyny, and How to Recognize a Misogynist

Mastodon · 4 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Misogyny is systemic, organized and has fan websites. Misogyny is also – because of the very nature of its deep-seated, psychological hatred – a linking factor among the various top-of-the-FBI-mind hate groups and militias. That means that people who hate women may also exhibit authoritarian, violent and bigoted behavior towards minorities. And they are politically active – as opposed to lurking on the fringes of society prior to, say 2008. Here is a list of blogs and sites in the so-called "Manosphere," which sponsor and encourage misogyny (warning: do not link unless you have a strong stomach): Alcuin, Boycott American Women, The Counter Feminist, The False Rape Society, In Mala Fide, MarkyMark's Thoughts, Men's Activism*, Reddit: Men's Rights (there has been some pushback on Reddit Creepshots, so this area may have been taken down), RooshV, SAVE Services, The Spearhead, and A Voice for Men.'

---
* Ed.: Hey, I think that's MANN they're talking about! :)

SAVE: The Inclusive-VAWA Resource Center is Your One-Stop Solution

Matt · 4 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The passage of VAWA brought with it an Inclusion Mandate which bans discrimination on the basis of "race, color, religion, national origin, sex, gender identity, sexual orientation, or disability." Realizing this is new territory for many abuse shelters and domestic violence programs, SAVE has created the Inclusive-VAWA Resource Center to assist program administrators. The Resource Center includes fact sheets, an inclusion checklist, special reports, a summary of legal requirements, and more.

The Resource Center also includes a sample Resolution for lawmakers who want to assure that under-served populations have equal access to services. These populations include African-Americans, American Indians, Asian-Americans, Hispanics/Latinos, Immigrants, LGBT, Male Victims, and Persons with Disabilities. You can take a copy to your Representative and ask them to introduce the Resolution.

We're also offering a consulting service to help domestic violence and sexual assault programs and shelters implement the VAWA Inclusion Mandate. This service can include phone consultations, trainings, website updates, and development of brochures and training manuals.

Visit the Resource Center now: www.saveservices.org/inclusive-vawa/resources/

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Susan Patton Told the Truth

Matt · 4 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oops, we forgot all about Women's History Month. To make amends to the fairer sex, today we introduce our readers to a feminist pioneer.
...
If that is sexist, then Mother Nature is sexist. (Or, if you prefer, God is sexist, or natural selection if you don't go in for anthropomorphism.) If you think it unjust that our social institutions tilt the sexual playing field even further to the advantage of high-status men and the detriment of everyone else, then your quarrel is with those who espouse the ideologies that have produced that result: feminism and sexual liberationism.'

Prom problems: Indiana plagued by high rate of dating violence

Matt · 4 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Nice to see rates of violence against males is also being reported. Excerpt:

'In 2009 nearly 11 percent of female high school students reported being hit, slapped or physically hurt by their date, again higher than the U.S. average. In addition, 12 percent of high school males reported being victimized by the person they were dating.

According to a Cornell University study, young women who endured dating violence in their teen years are more likely to suffer depression, have suicidal thoughts and engage in binge drinking. Young men also are more likely to be suicidal, abuse drugs and engage in delinquent behaviors if they suffered teen dating violence.'

F&F: Does Harsh Child Support Enforcement Work?

Matt · 4 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The United States has spent large amounts of money and employed draconian tactics to collect child support for almost 25 years. Have these policies been effective? And at what price?

In the late 1980s, the federal government passed a law requiring each state to develop a formula that would dictate the amount of child support ordered in most cases. The formula, called the Child Support Guidelines, was supposed to be based on actual costs of raising children, although we know this has not been the case. The federal law also required each state to establish laws, policies, and procedures to maximize the number of cases in which a child support order was established, and to enforce child support collection.
...
These results show that from 1995 through 2009, intensive efforts to increase the collection of child support have had little effect. The data from 2009 shows that economic factors are more important in determining compliance than enforcement of child support orders. In other words, when fathers have the money, they mostly pay it. (Of course, this has been demonstrated beyond reasonable doubt in numerous careful studies).'

Hillary Clinton: The clock is turning back for women in America

Mastodon · 5 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton explained to the Women in the World summit in New York today that the clock is turning back for women in America.

"As I look at all these young women that I am privileged to work with, or know through Chelsea, and its hard to imagine turning the clock on them," Clinton said. “But in places around America, large and small, the clock is turning back,” she said, noting that women in America live “shorter lives” than any other industrialized country.
...
Clinton called for "equal pay" for working women as well as paid family and medical leave benefits.

"[I]f America is going to lead the way we expect ourselves to lead, we need to empower women here at home to participate fully in our economy and our society," she said.'

SAVE: As Bogus Rape Claims Grow, SAVE Calls for Repeal of Federal Sex Assault Directive

Matt · 5 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE
Contact: Teri Stoddard
Email: tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

As Bogus Rape Claims Grow, SAVE Calls for Repeal of Federal Sex Assault Directive

WASHINGTON / April 4, 2013 – Exactly two years after the U.S. Department of Education (DED) issued its directive on campus sexual assault, the federal mandate continues to stoke controversy. SAVE reiterates its call for the federal agency to remove the policy, first issued on April 4, 2011, which it believes is unconstitutional.

Civil rights expert Wendy Kaminer has described the policy as a concession to an "authoritarian impulse." To date, 110 editorials have scored the DED mandate for imposing a preponderance-of-evidence standard, stripping the accused of the presumption of innocence, and allowing students to be expelled without the benefit of legal counsel: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/ded-directive/ded-editorials/

The directive has given rise to a growing number of false allegations of sexual assault, many say.

On February 15, 2013, Morgan Triplett, claimed she was raped in broad daylight on the campus of the University of California-Santa Cruz. In truth, she had placed an abuser-wanted advertisement on Craigslist, soliciting a person to "punch, kick, and bruise her in exchange for sex."

The Triplett case may have inspired a North Dakota woman to place a similar ad.

On March 24, Mary Kate Gullickson, a student at North Dakota State University, ran a solicitation on Craigslist seeking a man to abduct and assault her to satisfy a "rape fantasy." Four days later Gullickson pleaded guilty to providing false information to a police officer. In addition to supervised probation, she was ordered to pay restitution to cover the cost of investigating the bogus rape claim.

"The DED sex mandate is an example of political correctness run amok," notes SAVE spokesperson Sheryle Hutter. "Universities should be serve as a wellspring of democratic ideals, not the playground for totalitarian fantasies."

Thirteen organizations, including the American Association of University Professors, have called for repeal of the DED directive: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/complaints/

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is a victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to domestic violence and sexual assault: www.saveservices.org

Religious circumcision ritual leaves 2 Brooklyn infants with herpes

Mastodon · 5 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two Brooklyn infants have contracted herpes through a controversial religious circumcision ritual in the past three months, according to the city's Health Department.

The unidentified baby boys became sick after the centuries-old, ultra-Orthodox ritual associated with the bris known as metzizah b'peh.

Under the practice, the rabbi or mohel removes blood from the wound on the baby's penis with his mouth — a practice city Health Department officials have slammed, saying it carries "inherent risks" for babies.

The Bloomberg administration has moved to require mohels who perform the ritual to provide parents with a document informing them of the health risks involved. The parents must then sign a consent form.

But several influential religious Jewish organizations have sued, arguing the policy violates the First Amendment.

In January, a federal judge ruled against the group's initial legal maneuver to block the new city policy.

"As enacted, the regulation does no more than ensure that parents can make an informed decision whether to grant or deny such consent," said judge Nami Reice Buchwald.'

Local gym to kick men out, create 'women-only' workout environment

Mastodon · 5 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Starting on April 8, a Taylor fitness club will be open exclusively for ladies while dozens of its male members will be shown the door.

“We are members here, we signed contracts and it’s just not right,” said member Jermaine Banks.

“They haven’t given us a valid explanation about the reason they are doing it,” said member Rey Balmaceda.

The gym will turn into an oasis for ladies,offering fitness and special programs unique to women’s needs. Another one of its gyms in South Bend, Indiana will also transform, according to owners.

Currently, male members alternate workout days with female members at the gym, which the men tell 7 Action News allows them to have access to the club three days a week.
...
Dozens of male members say the gym is discriminating against them based on their gender.

They will be fighting back with a protest on April 9.'

Title IX law scrutinized as universities cut teams

Mastodon · 7 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The men who play baseball and soccer at Towson University, run track at the University of Delaware and wrestle, swim or golf at any number of other colleges all heard the same reason when their teams were cut: Title IX.

To meet the federal law's goal of providing equal opportunities for athletes of both genders, schools have eliminated men's teams to keep their overall rosters in line with the number of women playing sports. But a growing chorus is crying foul.

"People are really upset that they're dragging Title IX through the mud to cut sports teams," said Towson University graduate Scott Hargest. He was a member of the task force that recommended, over his dissenting vote, cutting men's baseball and soccer to resolve what administrators said were budgetary and Title IX compliance issues.

Rather, he and others say, colleges that want to shift money to major, revenue-generating sports use Title IX's requirements as cover for eliminating lower-profile men's teams. While the Towson baseball team may have been saved by a plan crafted last week by state officials, the dispute generated by the school's decision remains.'

Chelsea Clinton: Getting to the STEM of Gender Inequality

Mastodon · 7 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lost potential especially abounds in the asymmetrical landscape of science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM). In 2009, 57 percent of college students were women -- an explosion few could have imagined in 1970, when less than 27 percent of female high school graduates enrolled in college. And while we make up almost half of the American workforce, we hold less than 25 percent of STEM jobs.

Indeed, even as women have advanced in the humanities, social sciences and professional fields like law, progress in STEM subjects remains elusive. And in some areas, girls and women are even losing ground. In the mid-1980s, for example, women in the U.S. earned 36 percent of bachelor's degrees awarded in computer science, but that figure dropped to only 20 percent in 2006. Today, women also hold a disproportionately small share of the degrees in majors that strongly correlate to post-college STEM jobs such as math and engineering.'

Childless Men More Depressed Than Childless Women, Study Finds

Mastodon · 8 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even though there's often more social pressure on women to have kids, men may actually feel more depressed and lonely over not having children, according to the results of a small British survey.

The findings were presented at the annual meeting of the British Sociological Association in London Wednesday (April 3) by Robin Hadley, of the United Kingdom's Keele University, who polled 27 men and 81 women who didn't have kids.

About the same proportions of men and women said they wanted kids (59 percent of men and 63 percent of women). Among that group, half of the men said they experienced isolation because they weren't parents, while just over a quarter of women said the same.

Compared with women, these men also were more likely to feel jealous of other parents and sad, angry, and depressed over not having kids.
...
Whereas the focus of this study was childless adults who wanted kids, it's important to note that not all people without children are the same. There are those who choose to be childfree and those facing infertility, job demands or financial concerns.'

Obama declares ‘National Equal Pay Day’ as gesture on gender bias

Mastodon · 9 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Obama issued a declaration of “National Equal Pay Day” for Thursday, in a gesture aimed at highlighting what he described as a disparity between men and women in the workforce.

In a statement issued Monday, Mr. Obama decried a statistic showing women comprise roughly half of America’s workforce but earn an average 23 percent less than men, The Daily Caller reported.
...
Deeper analysis has found that much of the pay disparity between men and women are due to factors other than bias. The Independent Women’s Forum, for instance, said the tenure and job description were often left out of the calculating process, and those two factors often explain the pay difference, The Daily Caller reported.'

Women With Skills Earn Equal Pay To Male Counterparts

Mastodon · 9 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So it seems natural that IT would be a leader in closing the gap in compensation between the sexes. And the latest salary survey from Dice, a career site for technology and engineering professionals, confirms and reaffirms a truth that has been constant in Dice analyses since 2009: With tech workers, the compensation gender gap has disappeared. Average salaries are equal for male and female tech pros, provided the comparison is between men and women with equal levels of experience and education and parallel job titles.

According to the 2013-2012 Dice salary survey, while men out-earned women overall by an average annual income of $95,929 to $87,527, the difference is driven by the fact that the two groups tend to hold different positions. Among the key findings of the survey was job title. It was reported that female IT workers were more prevalent in project manager positions, with males were more often employed as software engineers.

"When it comes to technology employment, it's a skills driven marketplace," said Tom Silver, senior vice president of Dice. "The ability to apply that know-how to a given problem remains the core of employment--why tech professionals get hired and how they are compensated."'

Blame Title IX for NCAA's Financial Woes

Mastodon · 9 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While not all men's sports are profitable on their own, virtually none of women's programs turn a stand-alone profit. At The Business of College Sports website, Kristi Dosh of ESPN notes that Title IX views college athletics not as a business but as a vehicle toward collegiate success. This view hampers discussions about the equitable treatment of student-athletes whose on-field and on-court success adds value to the school.

Dosh points out that Title IX was cited by the NCAA as a roadblock to monetary stipends for student-athletes. Even though men's football and basketball programs are much more likely to be profitable, there is no room under Title IX to pay the players of those particular sports. Schools would have to pay female athletes too despite the fact that they're already a drain on school budgets. Essentially, paying Louisville's Kevin Ware or the Rutgers kids would require the school to pay the women who play on those schools' teams.

A report compiled by Bloomberg looked at the 53 public schools in the six largest athletic conferences and found that women's programs lost over $109 million in total while men's programs earned $240 million. While men's coaches tend to earn more than women's coaches, women's teams get to go on the same road trips and play the same number of games and reap the same amenities as the men.'

Women’s Groups Fight To Know Everyone’s Pay To Battle Discrimination

Mastodon · 9 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DETROIT (CBS Detroit) “How much do you think he makes?” That question could come out of dirty corners around the office water cooler and get out in the sunshine if Michigan women’s groups have their way.
...
Specifically, they’re asking for the passage of four bills, including a wage transparency act that would allow people to know the pay of everyone else in their workplace, which they believe would keep the boss honest about whether men are earning more than women doing the same job.'

Lessons from a Feminist Paradise on Equal Pay Day

Mastodon · 9 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Generous parental leave policies and readily available part-time options have unintended consequences: instead of strengthening women's attachment to the workplace, they appear to weaken it. In addition to a 16-month leave, a Swedish parent has the right to work six hours a day (for a reduced salary) until his or her child is eight years old. Mothers are far more likely than fathers to take advantage of this law. But extended leaves and part-time employment are known to be harmful to careers — for both genders. And with women a second factor comes into play: most seem to enjoy the flex-time arrangement (once known as the "mommy track") and never find their way back to full-time or high-level employment. In sum: generous family-friendly policies do keep more women in the labor market, but they also tend to diminish their careers.
...
Swedish economists Magnus Henrekson and Mikael Stenkula addressed the following question in their 2009 study: why are there so few female top executives in the European egalitarian welfare states? Their answer: "Broad-based welfare-state policies impede women's representation in elite competitive positions."

It is tempting to declare the Swedish policies regressive and hail the American system as superior. But that would be shortsighted. The Swedes can certainly take a lesson from the United States and look for ways to clear a path for their high-octane female careerists. But most women are not committed careerists. When the Pew Research Center recently asked American parents to identify their "ideal" life arrangement, 47 percent of mothers said they would prefer to work part-time and 20 percent said they would prefer not to work at all. Fathers answered differently: 75 percent preferred full-time work. Some version of the Swedish system might work well for a majority of American parents, but the United States is unlikely to fully embrace the Swedish model. Still, we can learn from their experience.'

CREDO Mobile Celebrates Equal Pay Day with a Discount for Women

Mastodon · 9 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In honor of Equal Pay Day, which marks the fact that women still make 77 cents on the dollar compared to men who do the same work, CREDO Mobile is offering a new deal– a 23% discount on voice plans to represent the 23 cents less on the dollar women earn compared to men.

“The politicians in Washington have had an opportunity to end the wage disparity, but have taken no action. We felt we should do something about it. If women get paid less than men, why should we charge them the same amount?” says political director Becky Bond.'

Widener's Harrisburg students' bake sale offers a lesson about equal pay

Mastodon · 9 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At Tuesday's bake sale on Widener's Harrisburg Campus, there will be cupcakes, muffins, cookies and more. Each treat will be sold at two different prices.

For men, it's $1. For women, 75 cents.

Call that unfair and you'll be in for a lesson.

The bake sale is intended to draw attention to National Equal Pay Day – an event that reflects how far into the year women must work to match what men doing the same job earned in the previous year.'

Equal-Pay Day Debunked in Three Minutes

Mastodon · 9 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today is what feminist groups have dubbed “Equal-Pay Day,” their day to raise awareness of how women are regularly paid less than men for the same work. Women, they claim, have had to work this long into 2013 to make up for last year’s wage gap.

The problem for “Equal-Pay Day” fans is that the premise of this pseudo holiday is bogus.

Women actually aren’t paid 77 percent for doing the same job. Take three minutes to watch this video just released by the Independent Women’s Forum which explains the statistics behind the wage gap and tells women the good news that they aren’t doomed to be victims of the patriarchy: It’s the choices that we make that will primarily determine how much we earn.'

Hillary Clinton 2016: Pro-Woman Talk is All Pandering

Mastodon · 9 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oh, is it April of 2013 already? I must have missed the banshee call that signals politicians to prepare for the 2016 presidential campaign. And how do we know the time for endless speculative punditry and partisan PR bonanzas — heralded by constant media coverage, all to decide who will be president 40 months from now — is nigh? Democratic dreamboat, former secretary of state, and all-around "I'm-In-It-To-Win-It" (version 2.0) go-getter Hilary Clinton delivered a fiery speech at the fourth Women in the World Summit in Washington D.C., wherein she coupled national security and women's rights.

Now, before the comments section is doused with Betty Friedan quotes, and lit with the match of Susan Patton-gate, I'd like to make clear that I am all for gender equality. I'm a woman, and a minority, and would very much appreciate, in my lifetime, to see countries all over the world change their cultural, social and legal attitudes toward women's rights.

But color me skeptical if Clinton's speech sounds like nothing but early voter-bloc pandering. Regarding "the fate of women and girls," Clinton said, "The extremists understand the stakes of this struggle. They know that when women are liberated, so are entire societies. We must understand this too. And not only understand it, but act on it."'

Reaction to Margaret Thatcher's passing proves feminism is about politics, not equality

Mastodon · 9 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'IF you want proof that feminism is about politics, not equality, then take note of the way modern-day feminists have reacted to Margaret Thatcher's passing.

The same women who were sent into fits of righteous hysteria over Americans celebrating the death of Osama bin Laden were gleefully rejoicing in the death of a frail 87-year-old woman who history will acknowledge as Britain's greatest peacetime leader.

Thatcher should be celebrated by feminists as a trailblazer who succeeded against insurmountable odds to lead Great Britain from financial ruin to stability, prosperity and hope. Even now it is hard to fathom how a greengrocer's daughter overcame the "old boy network" to become leader of the Conservative Party and prime minister of a class-ridden nation. And she did it without ever making gender an issue. There were no quotas, no self-serving misogyny speeches, no victimhood statements; just a determination to get the job done.
...
Modern-day feminism is caught in a Leftist quagmire of irrelevance and superficiality. It is bereft of principles and preoccupied with semantics and trivialities. The irony of feminists, on the ABC's Q&A program, earnestly debating the politics of opening doors when the world learned of Thatcher's passing was not lost on many.'

Gov. O'Malley suggests Title IX taskforce

Mastodon · 9 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gov. Martin O'Malley suggested Towson University form a task force to study how better to deal with meeting Title IX rules on gender equity.

The governor, who proposed giving state money to save the university's baseball program, told a group of reporters Monday that all his questions about the decision to eliminate some men's sports had been answered.

But he suggested that perhaps the public would benefit from a task force.

"I think a lot of us have trouble with the idea that to create more sports opportunities for our daughters, we have have to eliminate opportunities for our sons," O'Malley said.'

No due process for college rape trials?

Mastodon · 9 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Student Caleb Warner was found guilty of sexual assault by a campus court at the University of North Dakota in Grand Forks in 2010 despite the facts established at the time by city police. Officers not only refused to charge him, but also alleged his accuser made a false report. Police issued a warrant for her arrest.

It took 18 months – during which Warner not only was banned from the UND campus, but also from all college campuses in the state – for the university to agree to reconsider the conviction and clear his record.

The Foundation For Individual Rights in Education, or FIRE, said, “Nobody should be surprised that [Warner] does not want to return to UND.”

“The university showed less than zero concern for disrupting his life and career and branding him a criminal based on an extremely low standard of evidence, and has shown zero inclination to be remorseful about what it has done,” the group said.

The Warner case also illustrates the extreme legal danger a student can face in a college court.'

Change.org: Ask UN to Recognize PAS As Violence And Abuse Against Children

Matt · 10 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'Professionals in different disciplines identified and defined Parental Alienation as the pervasive practice of one divorcing parent against the other parent to destroy the relationship of the targeted parent with his or her children. This is usually done with the intent to gain financial benefits in court.

Since 1990, the year that The Convention on Rights of the Child entered into force, a more pernicious form of Parental Alienation has permeated global societies. In order to comply with the yearly resolutions suggested by NGOs to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, States and their governments initiated, developed and sustained a persecution against parents to separate them from their children. Those resolutions are accepted unquestiongly and never contested.
...
Children Protection agencies are heartlessly taking children away from their homes and their parents, grandparents and family under the most unreasonable and heinous excuses in order to give them away to foster homes and adoption places.

This absurd cruelty and brutality has to stop now!'

MSN Money: Is the Gender Pay Gap Real?

Matt · 10 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Glad to see a MSM source is facing down the Wage Gap Myth head-on. Excerpt:

'The correct answer, however, is B. The "77 cents to a man's dollar" argument is based on the average earnings of all women versus the average earnings of all men without regard for what they're doing for a living, how long they've been doing it, or any other factor that influences earnings. It's ridiculous.
...
If you're interested in understanding the gender gap, start with the Wikipedia page called "Male-female income disparity in the United States." It points to lots of studies, but don't expect a cut and dried, definitive answer because many studies conflict with one another.
...
Today you're going to see a lot of headlines and hear a lot of reporters claim women earn 77 cents for every dollar men make. While that might make for a great sound bite, the math is fuzzy and the comparison is silly.'

Foreskin Crusaders to protest against Oprah event

Matt · 10 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'OTTAWA — While an expected 14,000 people stream into Scotiabank Place on Wednesday night to hear Oprah Winfrey speak, they will be greeted by a group of protesting foreskin activists looking to take the media mogul to task.

This will take a bit of explaining.

The group, the Canadian Foreskin Awareness Project, or CAN-FAP, opposes the circumcision of baby boys. Oprah has become their target because, they say, she has endorsed an anti-aging skin product that was developed using skin cells harvested from a baby's foreskin.'

Gender Bias? Women-Only Gym Draws Protest In Taylor

Mastodon · 10 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TAYLOR (WWJ) - Some Downriver men are furious after their gym made the switch to women-only.

A protest was held Tuesday morning outside the Taylor Fitness USA Supercenter that, until recently, was open to men and women on alternating days.

Demonstrators carried signs that read, “Fraud,” and “Gender bias.”
...
Donald Schoenberger told WWJ Newsradio 950′s Mike Campbell he nearly got arrested when he tried to enter the club on Pardee Road, near Southland Mall.

“[I'm a] Vietnam veteran 68, 69, 70 — and I won’t have this; I won’t tolerate it. I’ll go to jail, but I won’t have somebody that I fought for … I fought for her, too, and she laughed in my face,” he said.'

UK: Higher university tuition fees 'putting off working-class boys'

Mastodon · 10 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys are more likely to shun university as a result of the rise in tuition fees, according to new research.

In particular, the gender gap between working class boys and girls going to university is growing, the study, by the Independent Commission on Fees, shows.

Whilst overall acceptance rates among applicants from poorer homes have remained steady, the figures show 1,700 fewer boys from the 40 per cent of neighbourhoods with the lowest higher-education participation rates were accepted into university last year.

...

The findings follow a call by Universities minister David Willetts, in an interview with The Independent, for white working-class boys to be classified as a target for universities in the same way as ethnic-minority students.

The report, though, shows that the slump in applications from boys runs through all social strata - with 6.2 per cent fewer boys from the most advantaged areas applying than girls. Professor Alan Smithers, of the Centre for Education and Employment Studies at Buckingham University, said one reason could be growing interest amongst boys in seeking apprenticeships "as a direct route into employment".'

Alert Carolina sends notification about a false sexual assault report

Mastodon · 10 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Students received an Alert Carolina message Monday about a falsely reported sexual assault because the Department of Public Safety wanted to assuage heightened concerns about the issue.

Students and the campus community received an informational message in an email that said a non-UNC student had falsely filed a report about an alleged April 6 assault.

The email said an alert about the incident was not immediately sent to students because DPS didn't think there was a threat to campus.

...

Young said the email explained why an alert was filed about a false claim.

"Given the current campus raised levels of concern (about sexual assault), we wanted folks to see why we didn't issue the alert because no threat existed and the report was false," he said.'

F&F: NY Senate Proposes Creation of Financially Delinquent Parents' Most Wanted List

Matt · 10 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New York State Assemblyman Alan Maisel has introduced Senate Bill 2704A, authorizing the creation of a financially delinquent parents most wanted list. If this passes, New York will join six other states with statewide online listings of parents delinquent in child support payments.

These states are: Delaware, Illinois, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, and Washington. Of course, there are seventeen states where at least one county in the state publishes its own online list, including New York. The other sixteen states are: Arizona, Arkansas, California, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, Maryland, New Jersey, North Carolina, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia, and Wisconsin.
...
The listing for each parent will include the parent's name, physical description, last known address, and photograph if available. It will appear on the Office of Temporary and Disability Assistance website and consist of up to 500 parents at one time.'

It’s a no-no for a man to admire a woman, but not the other way around?

Mastodon · 11 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'President Obama took his lumps, then issued the mea culpa, for calling California’s attorney general exactly what she is: good-looking.

Will Hillary Clinton follow his example? The sensitivity cops should stand on high alert.

In May 2010, the Daily News reported that then-Secretary of State Clinton, in public, heaped praise on then-Treasury Secretary Timothy Geithner. “He always looks so good, you know? It’s maddening,” she said on Chinese TV, adding that he was “one of the best-looking guys in the administration.”

Nobody told Hillary that she had objectified the poor man. Nobody told her she was setting back the cause of handsome men in public life.

No apology was demanded. None was given. None was deserved, then or now.'

NCFM Sues Over Lack of Draft Registration for Women

Matt · 11 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group dedicated to eliminating what it says is unjust discrimination against men filed suit yesterday to end the federal government's practice of requiring men, but not women, to register for a possible future military draft.

The National Coalition for Men sued the U.S. Selective Service System in the U.S. District Court of Appeal for the Central District of California. It contends that limiting draft registration to males violates the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments.

...

A challenge similar to the NCFM's was rejected in Rostker v. Goldberg (1981) 453 U.S. 57. The court there held that men and women were not similarly situated in the U.S. military because women were excluded from combat, therefore women did not have to register.

...

The NCFM, represented by Los Angeles attorney Marc Angelluci, who is vice president of the organization, contends that Rostker is no longer binding in light of then-Defense Secretary Leon Panetta's announcement in January that women would be eligible to serve in all roles within the military, including combat positions at every level, unless the Pentagon is persuaded to exclude specific positions.

...

Men who fail to register can also be denied eligibility for federal and state benefits including jobs, financial aid, citizenship, loans, and job training.

In a statement, NCFM urged the president and lawmakers "to end the institutional sex discrimination that requires only men to register for the draft."'

UAE: No-entry-for-men in kindergartens sparks debate

Mastodon · 11 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men will not be permitted access to nurseries in the emirates.

The statement from the Ministry of Social Affairs Child Department was published in the media yesterday.

It highlighted that exceptions will be made to the male staff, like gardeners, watchman and drivers, as these men did not “directly communicate with the children”.

According to the report, this will also impact the entry of male owners, claiming the school will incur a penalty if they found violating the rule.

The decision is set-up to ensure the safety of children and to limit their exposure to potential abusers.

Zahra Hamirani, chief education officer of The Blossom Nursery, confirms that the no-men rule is not new.
...
The reality in child abuse is not to simply teach "stranger danger" but for families to understand that it is often those close to us who may make our children targets. In addition, it is not only men who are abusers.”'

South Africa: 'Luring men to join war against Aids'

Mastodon · 11 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men usually receive criticism and blame for failing to co-operate in the fight against Aids and Health Minister Dr Aaron Motsoaledi has been at the forefront of such criticism.

On November 29, 2011 he said: “HIV/Aids is a gender-based disease that is spread by men and suffered by women.”

And on December 1 he said: “In this fight against Aids, men are very slippery. We are trying to find a way to capture them.”

These statements reflect growing frustration over men’s reluctance to be involved in Aids intervention programmes initiated by the government, like HIV testing and use of antiretroviral medicines.

However, we are not told why men are shunning such initiatives; neither are the men encouraged to participate.
...
We do not have a shortage of research on men and HIV/Aids. The problem is that they are driven by narrow activist agendas of feminist scholars. Researchers regard men chiefly as a “problem”. They view African notions of masculinity as inherently dangerous. This has had a great impact on types of intervention designed for men.'

Sexual assault case involving four female suspects a bizarre anomaly

Mastodon · 11 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

They could be sex molls or sex maulers.

Definitely on the chubby side, though: described as around 190 to 200 pounds and five-foot-four.

Last seen teetering around in high heels and short black dresses — typical clubbing attire — their estimated age 30 to 36, so not cougars on the prowl.

A quartet of ladies, wanted in connection with the sexual assault of a 19-year-old male.

What the women are alleged to have done to this young man is unclear and won't be clarified unless, perhaps, the incident ever comes to trial. The victim has declined to be interviewed, in a Star request relayed by Toronto police.
...
Of course, one man's sexual assault is another man's sexual fantasy come true.

Around the assignment desk at this paper Monday, there were both chortles and priggish warnings not to play snide or mischievous with the slim facts as we know them. Mustn't be seen to make light of an alleged sexual crime simply because the victim is a male, which would be reverse sexism and a double standard — men's rights groups the first to pounce, no doubt — despite the obvious snickering quotient.
...
Sexual assault, you say? Lucky guy others say, nudge-nudge, a fivesome and didn't even have to pay for it.
...
Wanted: Bad girls in black minidresses and stilettos, approach with caution.'

UK: Men in their 30s are 20% more likely to be overweight than in previous generations

Matt · 11 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I imagine the numbers are probably the same/similar here in the US if not also in other "First World" countries. Younger women aren't faring any better, perhaps worse. Sad, really. Excerpt:

'Today's adults are so unhealthy they are 15 years 'older' than their parents and grandparents at the same age, researchers say.

They are more likely to suffer from high blood pressure, diabetes and obesity than previous generations because of poor health, according to a study published in the European Journal of Preventive Cardiology.

Looking at 6,000 adults aged 20, 30, 40, 50 over a 25 year period, researchers found younger generations had poorer 'metabolic' health - a range of issues including blood pressure and weight.

The study revealed men in their 30s were 20 per cent more likely to be overweight than in previous generations, while women in their 20s are twice as likely to be obese than those 10 years ago.'

SAVE: Law Enforcement Must Stop Discrimination in Abuse Cases

Matt · 11 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The Inclusion Mandate, a key provision of the recently passed Violence Against Women Act, bans discrimination on the basis of color, religion, national origin, sex, gender identity, sexual orientation, or disability.

The Centers for Disease Control has found that men and women engage in intimate partner abuse at nearly identical rates. But gender-biased predominant aggressor arrest policies often lead to the arrest of the man, even if the woman strikes the first blow.

We believe much of the problem lies with biased police training programs. For instance, one curriculum claims that "by and large, abusers are men and victims are women," a statement that stands in marked contrast to the Centers for Disease Control research.

To counter this misinformation and discrimination, SAVE offers evidence-based training programs for law enforcement.

If you haven't yet, visit SAVE's Inclusive-VAWA Resource Center: http://www.saveservices.org/inclusive-vawa/resources.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Jodi Arias trial update: Cyber bullies and jailhouse tweeting

Mastodon · 12 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Jodi Arias trial update for Wednesday focuses on two bombshell defense witness statements and two explosive cyber dramas. Late in the day, expert witness Alyce La Violette said the defendant shot her victim, Travis Alexander, while in his closet. This contradicts everything the defendant said while on the witness stand. La Violette also admitted that the victim was "very afraid" of Arias shortly before Arias brutally killed him. ...
...
La Violette is another matter. She operates on a "dish it, but can't take it" level. Her supporters call public backlash "witness tampering" and "orchestrated" cyber bullying. Orchestrated action is unlikely because Twitter crowds form spontaneously and change focus very quickly. Many Twitter subscribers were La Violette's longtime fans before she testified.
...
Others have attacked La Violette's book at Amazon. She has hundreds of complaints and poor reviews. Many bad reviews came from women domestic violence victims who feel that La Violette's book is no longer a reliable source of information. Since Amazon Reviews is an open platform, anyone can post a good review for La Violette's book

Many perceive that La Violette’s testimony is based solely on her thought processes. They feel those thought processes are relentlessly biased toward portraying the female defendant as a helpless victim. Her thought processes are equally relentless in portraying Travis Alexander as domestic abuser and perpetrator of his brutal slaying. La Violette has no proof to support her thought processes."'

The State of Jewish Intactivism in the USA and Israel

Matt · 12 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today's Judaism is ready to reject traditional circumcision and to move to non-violent symbolic rituals. The interpretation of Jewish law is constantly in a state of development, flux, and evolution, expanding as the realm of human rights expands. As Jews, we are regularly evolving our lives and practices to adjust to the constantly evolving moral arc of human rights. This is not to say that all Jews, including the Orthodox will suddenly abolish circumcision surgery, and move to a symbolic interpretation without a period of reflection and forethought. However, progress is being made.

...

At this time in history, aren't we ready to let go of traditions that no longer serve a constructive purpose in our lives, communities, and the lives of others? Aren't we ready to reform our rules to serve our highest ambitions, rights, morals and values instead? In most other areas Judaism has found the correct moral distinction between action and symbolism. Why not in this area as well?'

Why MRAs Are Celebrating the Brian Banks Case for the Wrong Reason

Mastodon · 12 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At age 17, high school football player Brian Banks was wrongfully convicted of rape. He spent five years in prison but was exonerated in May 2012. Last week, Banks signed with the Atlanta Falcons, and the country rejoiced.

Not surprisingly, some men's rights activists are hailing this as a victory for their cause. They shouldn't be. They're right that Banks's exoneration, and his new career, are good news, but the Banks case is not an example of a victory for men everywhere (when, when will there finally be a victory for men?!). Rather, it's a rare instance of our justice system eventually doing right by the wrongfully convicted.

Cases like Banks's, in which a person is wrongfully convicted and later exonerated, are the exception, not the rule. While it's next to impossible to calculate the exact number of innocent people in prison, we know this: there are a lot. Some people are never exonerated. Those that are exonerated are left to fend for themselves after years in prison, and without any resources or support system. If men's rights activists are as incensed as they claim to be about our broken justice system, where is their anger at cases like the West Memphis Three, which left three innocent men in prison for decades? A search for "Brian Banks" on Reddit's "men's rights" subforum turns up a seemingly never-ending list of results. A search for "West Memphis" yields one result.'

Ohio Day Care Teacher Robin Mullins Arrested After Biting 5-Year-Old

Mastodon · 12 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Ohio day care worker decided to teach a 5-year-old a lesson by giving him a ‘bite’ of his own medicine.

When 56-year-old Robin Mullins of Cincinnati found out about a 5-year-old at her day care that was biting other children, Mullins sat him down, then chomped on his arm in order to ‘teach him a lesson.'

Mullins’ plan of action, however, didn’t go over too well with the parents -- or police for that matter. Mullins was arrested and charged Thursday with assault after leaving a visible bite mark on the kid's arm, Colerain Police Officer Eric Renner wrote in court records.
...
The day care’s website explains that Mullins has worked with children of all ages for quite a few years, nine of which were at Northwest schools working with special needs and at-risk kids. Ironically, it also says Mullins has been trained in child abuse recognition and prevention.'

Father helpless to bring kidnapped sons home from Egypt

Mastodon · 13 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nearly 12 years ago, Michael Shannon sent his two young sons to New York for what he thought what be a weekend visit with their mother.

It would be the last time he saw either one of them.

Nermeen Khalifa, the boys' mother and Shannon's ex-wife, took the children to her home country of Egypt, where U.S. citizens have almost no rights in custody battles.

"They were out of the country before we even knew they were gone," Shannon said. "I went to the apartment to pick them up. It was like it was ransacked."'

'Toxic Masculinity'

Mastodon · 13 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's time for a serious intervention in masculinity. It's not enough to not be a rapist. You don't get a cookie or a Nobel Peace Prize for that. If we want to end the pandemic of rape, it's going to require an entire global movement of men who are willing to do the hard work required to unpack and interrogate the ideas of masculinity they were raised with, and to create and model new masculinities that don't enable misogyny. Masculinities built not on power over women, but on power with women.

This is going to take real work, which is why so many men resist it. It requires destabilizing your own identity, and giving up attitudes and behaviors from which you're used to deriving power, likely before you learn how to derive power from other, more just and productive places. There are real risks for men who challenge toxic masculinity, from social shaming to actual "don't be a fag" violence—punishments that won't ease until many, many men take the plunge. But there are great rewards to be had, too, beyond stopping rape. Toxic masculinity is damaging to men, too, positing them as stoic sex-and-violence machines with allergies to tenderness, playfulness, and vulnerability. A reinvented masculinity will surely give men more room to express and explore themselves without shame or fear. (It will also, not incidentally, reduce rape against men as well, because many rapes of men are committed by other men with the intention of "feminizing"—that is, humiliating through dominance—their victim.)'

Jodi Arias Selling Painting For $2,000 While On Trial For Murder

Mastodon · 13 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More shocking than the fact that Jodi is being allowed to paint pictures a sell them from a jail cell is how much she's selling them for. "Hourless" is modestly priced at a whopping $2,000. Additionally, a portrait of Grace Kelly drawn by Jodi sold for $3,050 on eBay.

Jodi's definitely striking while the iron's hot — if she had waited for time to "run forward," she might've missed the opportunity to pull down such huge prices for her amateur sketches. So… good for her?'

Jodi Arias Jury Questions Show Skepticism About Domestic Violence Defense

Mastodon · 13 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jurors in Jodi Arias' murder trial Thursday asked dozens of questions showing they're skeptical of a defense expert's diagnosis that Arias had been abused by the man she's accused of killing.

The jury's questions, put to domestic violence expert Alyce LaViolette, asked about LaViolette's assessment that Arias was a victim of domestic violence and whether LaViolette has affection for Arias. One juror wanted to know why LaViolette often looked at Arias in the courtroom and smiled.

"I have done that on occasion just to acknowledge her, but no other reason," said LaViolette, a psychologist. "I've actually tried to avoid looking at Ms. Arias."
...
Jurors wanted to know if a female could "abuse, batter or terrorize a man" to the point of killing him.

"Yes, women can be perpetrators," LaViolette said.'

Not always great "at the top"

Matt · 13 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. So you may think you're lacking ambition and that's bad? Maybe not so bad, really. Just be yourself. Apparently, it may come with an increased "low-stress dividend" that has a substantial payoff. Excerpt:

'Alpha males may look like they are in control but underneath they are stressed out, a study has found.

Researchers found that while they get the pick of the girls, the money and the power they pay a heavy price for their dominance.

Maintaining a lofty position in the social hierarchy causes your stress levels to rocket, it was discovered. Researchers believe that its so tough at the top because of the effort required to stay there and not the weight of responsibility.
...
The heightened stress levels remained even when the animals appeared to be calm. Professor Laurence Gesquiere said: "Baboons are not only genetically closely related to humans, but like humans they live in highly complex societies.

"An important insight from our study is that the top position in some animal – and possibly human – societies has unique costs and benefits associated with it, ones that may persist both when social orders experience some major perturbations as well as when they are stable."'

An explanation for the age-old word count difference

Matt · 13 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This almost by way of humor, but at least those of you wondering if it's nature vs. nurture may be relieved somewhat to see nature seems to be a substantial contributor. Also note how mother mice go to tend their male pups first, possibly to quiet them down sooner since they're making the most noise. This may explain why human parents seem to give more attention to the female infants/toddlers: they may simply be "demanding" more attention due to greater vocalization than their male siblings. Excerpt:

'Women do really talk more than men, a study has concluded.

American researchers found females are the more talkative sex because of a special “language protein” in the brain.

The study, compiled by neuroscientists and psychologist from the University of Maryland, concluded that women talked more because they had more of the Foxp2 protein.

The research, published in the Journal of Neuroscience, found that higher levels were found among humans that were women but in rats they were males.

Their findings come after it was previously claimed that ladies speak about 20,000 words a day – more than 13,000 more than men.'

"The Hunt" reviewed

Matt · 13 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Review here. Excerpt:

'The movie is called The Hunt or "hunt" and starring, among others, Mads Mikkelsen and Alexandra Rapaport. The film is partly based on the so-called "Bjugn case" that took place in Norway. Norwegian resort Bjugn outside Trondheim got it in the early 90's with the help of questionable interrogation methods presented testimony from children about a pedophile ring that engaged in satanic sexriter. Several men and women were arrested.
...
In the film, plays the distinguished actor Mads Mikkelsen, a man who is falsely accused of child sexual abuse. The name of the hunt will the witch hunt of the man who then unfolds. We all Swedish men who share this man's fate, of course, warmly welcomes this movie. But it does, however, is far from proved.
...
I spoke the other day with one of my contacts who told me facts hitherto unknown. Both for me and for the public. The source was one of the police investigators in Sweden who work to expose and prosecute pedophiles and disseminators of child pornography online. He told me that of all the accused and arrested (note not convicted but arrested) for having the ¨ somehow exposed children to sexual abuse or child pornography offenses, approximately 33 percent have taken their lives in two years. Including of course many fathers.'

'Men 2020'

Mastodon · 13 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Change for women over the last decade is in the books. Roles have transformed. Opportunities have exploded. And a future of choice and empowerment is locked in.

For men, that future is a lot less certain.

A time of female transformation has been a time of male accommodation. The adjustment to a massive transfer of power remains a work in progress and, judging by surveys and headlines, the progress is painfully uneven.

Where is the accommodation and adjustment taking the world of men? If the old model of masculinity has outlived its shelf life, what will the new one look like?
...
Like all Millennials, they are more accepting of difference, reflected in the generation's nearly 70 percent support for marriage equality. They grew up in the most diverse households in our history -- one in four was raised by a single parent. Large numbers of others grew up with working mothers and blended families following divorce.
...
Pew research says that the desire to marry among young women is rising -- with high importance increasing from 28 to 37 percent since 1997. For young men, it dropped from 35 to 29 percent. Theories abound. ...
...
According to one marketing study, Millennial men are less likely to get romance going in the first place. Men and women were asked if "men should be the ones to lead and initiate in romance." Almost 45 percent of women agreed. Only 33 percent of men did.

Another finding in the same study: Both men and women were asked to list their greatest fears. For women, being alone ranked second behind being sick. For men being alone near the bottom, just above being bored.'

Woman sued for settlement won over false rape accusation against football star

Mastodon · 13 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LONG BEACH, Calif. — A woman who falsely accused a former high school football star of rape is being sued by the Long Beach Unified School District in hopes of recovering legal fees and a $750,000 settlement paid to her.

The district alleges Wanetta Gibson committed contractual fraud in a lawsuit filed last November, the Long Beach Press-Telegram reported Thursday.

Gibson was 15 when she accused Brian Banks of attacking her on their high school campus. He insisted the sexual contact with Gibson was consensual, but pleaded no contest to forcible rape on the advice of his lawyer and spent more than five years in prison.'

Domestic violence: 'As a man, it's very difficult to say I've been beaten up'

Mastodon · 13 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An inch under six foot tall, Dave, a gardener with a deep, gravelly voice is not most people's idea of a domestic violence victim. But he suffered two years of abuse at the hands of his girlfriend and was too embarrassed and loyal to report her to the police. He slept in his car for weeks before speaking to his local council, who found him a place at a men's refuge.

He struggles to keep it together when he recalls the day his girlfriend smashed a bottle of Jack Daniels across his head, leaving him bleeding on the pavement: a deep scar is still clearly visible on his forehead. But when the 45-year-old from Essex describes the relief of being believed by the authorities, he breaks down, his broad shoulders heaving beneath his rugby shirt.

"When help finally comes it's an emotional thing," he says, sitting on the sofa at a safe house in Berkshire where he is being helped to rebuild his life. "As a man, it's very difficult to say you've been beaten up. It seems like you're the big brute and she's the daffodil, but sometimes it's not like that."'

Equal Pay Day Prank By Swiss Bank Shows What It's Like To Be Paid 20 Percent Less

Mastodon · 14 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Swiss bank found an effective way of demonstrating the frustrations of the gender pay gap to its male customers: men withdrawing cash from the bank's ATM received 20 percent less than the amount they'd asked for.

According to the women's organization Zürcher Frauenzentrale, Swiss women earn about 20% less than equally capable men in comparable positions. The "Equality At The ATM" commercial is intended to show men what financial discrimination feels like. The International Women's Media Foundation worked with Zürcher Frauenzentrale to translate the video into English from its original German.

After each withdrawal, customers received a receipt explaining the prank and assuring them that the missing 20 percent was still in their bank accounts.'

Pity the Men on Top

Matt · 14 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nearly all institutional power for 20 years after the war was indeed wielded by the war generation (and eventually by younger men born during the Depression). Yet a vast majority of men possessed limited power that could vanish swiftly if they committed the ultimate sin of failing to bring home a paycheck.

It was often said, as the feminist movement found its voice in the early 1970s, that most wives were just one man away from poverty. It would have been just as valid to say that most men were just one job away from poverty.
...
The cost of that covenant to women — the suppression of worldly opportunity — has been thoroughly told. The cost to men — in terms of stress, time lost with the families they were trying so hard to support and lack of freedom to pursue personal interests — has not been nearly as well documented.
...
So it is difficult to understand why social commentators cannot muster up more empathy for the older generation of men, who had no backup if something went wrong at work.

I am as hooked as anyone else on the cocktails and clothes, the sexual drama and office politics of “Mad Men.” But I would like to see just one scene in which a man is gulping coffee at 4:30 on a February morning. Perhaps he is also scanning a book on the kitchen counter, because he knows he will be too tired to read by the time he gets home around 10 o’clock. This man warms up his car and heads for work, while his wife and children sleep soundly under the covers.'

Stikkel: Margaret Thatcher achieved success without extreme feminism

Mastodon · 15 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The successes of Margaret Thatcher, the former British prime minister who died last Monday, demonstrate that women's achievements do not require extreme feminism.

Feminism has two definitions. One, "the theory of the political, economic and social equality of the sexes" and two, "organized activity on behalf of women's rights and interests," according to Merriam-Webster.

Adherents to definition No.1 of feminism rejects laws that apply differently to people based on gender and societal preferences against women. These feminists are against sexism.

On the other hand, definition No. 2 of feminism calls for a new sexism that favors women. Extreme feminists actively organize to benefit women by virtue of their gender.
...
Suppose Freeman went back in time and convinced Thatcher to "lower the ladder" and make half of her cabinet women. This is the opposite of women's empowerment because it is an admission that women cannot attain something without preferential treatment.

Despite Freeman's assertions, Thatcher's success is a leap forward for women because it shows that women can be successful without anyone "lowering ladders" for them.'

Queens teacher had sex with students at school: report

Mastodon · 15 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Queens teacher who was arrested and fired for taking a 16-year-old student to a hot-sheets motel for a videotaped romp also violated two other boys — inside her school, says a shocking investigative report obtained by The Post.

Tara Driscoll, 35, a former English teacher at Law, Government and Community Service HS in Cambria Heights, pleaded guilty last June to having sex with the minor at the Capri Lynbrook Motor Inn, a 15-minute drive from the school.

But earlier, she brazenly had sex with two other students at the school, where her serial shenanigans were uncovered by girlfriends of the teacher's pets, the report by schools investigator Richard Condon charges.'

Want Boys to Succeed? Don’t Teach Them How to Be “Masculine”

Mastodon · 15 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is no secret that our nation is facing a crisis when it comes to boys’ education. Boys are lagging behind in almost every subject, and it doesn’t seem to be getting any better. According to NPR, boys are not only falling behind in school when it comes to the grades they receive, but also in their overall graduation rate and their participation in advanced placement classes. This also makes them less likely to pursue education after high school and, if they do, makes them less likely to be successful.

Recently, the attitude towards this growing national issue has been to create more boy-friendly classrooms, sometimes going as far as to create single-sex classrooms. The idea behind this solution is that, when boys are in classes with other boys, the teacher can target his or her activities to that audience, creating more hands-on and physically active assignments that will help boys learn.
...

The report details options for helping boys in school, and the most interesting of them all is the suggestion to start treating boys more like we treat girls. This means that we need to ditch our traditional notions of masculinity in school. We need to encourage boys to participate in more tradiationally female-dominated activities such as drama, music and art and strip these activities of the stereotype that they are not masculine. We also need to paint a clear picture of how academic success translates into financial success for boys like we do for girls.

These changes will definitely benefit boys, but will also benefit girls. There is already ample evidence that shows that girls’ and boys’ ability levels are not different, and that they don’t actually learn that differently. Furthermore, when we start rethinking our definition of masculinity, as educators and as a society as a whole, we will be headed towards a much better society for women and men.'

UK: ‘Men’s rights’ party to fight for Dewsbury and Mirfield seat

Mastodon · 15 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A new political party which hopes to “change to face of British politics” is to fight for the Dewsbury and Mirfield seat at the next general election.

Justice For Men And Boys will challenge Simon Reevell and 29 other Conservative MPs for their seats in 2015.

The party was founded by its leader, Mike Buchanan, a former Conservative adviser who resigned from the Tories after leader David Cameron said he would use all-women shortlists to select candidates.

Labour has already announced that it will use an all-women shortlist to select its next candidate for Dewsbury and Mirfield.

Mr Buchanan said: “All the major parties have been institutionally anti-male for many years, and it is for this reason that we formed our party.”

Do Male Leaders Need to Think More Like Women?

Mastodon · 15 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The world is getting sick of male – or least “masculine” – leadership, according to a survey of 64,000 people in 13 countries that underpins the new book The Athena Doctrine: How Women (and the Men Who Think Like Them) Will Rule the World. As authors John Gerzema and Michael D’Antonio discovered, 66% of adults agreed that “the world would be a better place if men thought more like women” – including 63% of men worldwide and an astounding 79% of Japanese males. Yet men, of course, continue to dominate corporate leadership and power structures.

...

But just as 1980s fashion encouraged women to dress like men, replete with shoulder pads, today’s business environment often rewards masculine thinking. “In the corporate workplace, women are conditioned to think that the way they think isn’t valued as highly,” says Gerzema. “But it’s men that have got to adapt to a world that’s far more feminine, social, and collaborative. Feminine values are a form of innovation. If men start to champion the essential skills we saw the innovators [we interviewed] practice, it’ll drive profits and get better results.”'

Young women navigate through their probation

Mastodon · 15 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The purpose of the court-ordered program is to provide youth on probation with job-training skills and prepare them for reintegration into the community, said Charlie Johnson, program manager for the court program.

The project is designed to teach the young women skills and enhance their self-esteem and self-efficacy, learn how to work in a team environment, and improve their communication skills.

“We’re trying to build successful women, not really boats,” Mr. Johnson said.'

Oprah Targeted By Circumcision Protesters

Mastodon · 15 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Apparently, the protesting group claims the Daytime Deity uses stem cells found in removed foreskin. Check out the below report from the Jewish Press while we figure out where we can immediately order this skincare line!

"How would Oprah respond if a skin cream for men hit the market that was made using cells from the genitalia of little girls? I think she would be absolutely disgusted and appalled, and rightly so. So it's crazy that she's doing the opposite," the group's founder Glen Callender told the Toronto Star. "We think it's extremely hypocritical and distasteful that Oprah Winfrey — who is herself a survivor of childhood sexual abuse and an outspoken opponent of female genital mutilation — at the same time uses and promotes a product that wouldn't exist if not for the forcible genital mutilation of boys."

As JoeMyGod points out, the skincare line's founder says the stem cells are used in foreskins that were removed 20 years ago.

Cancel our order, please.'

Antimisandry.com needs your support

IronJohn · 16 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Many of you are already familiar with AntiMisandry.com. For those who are not, it is one of our allies in the battle against feminism and in favor of Men's Rights. The site owner, Karl Matthews, is asking for donations to help keep the site running. He is suffering from some difficult circumstances at present and can't meet the financial requirements on his own to keep the site up. Please give as much as you are able! Request here.

Prostate cancer: Call to test men in their 40s

Matt · 17 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men should be offered a screening test for prostate cancer in their late 40s, researchers say.

The idea is controversial as prostate specific antigen (PSA) testing can be unreliable, throwing up false positive results that can cause undue worry and even treatment over something benign.

But the Swedish team say checking every man aged 45-49 would predict nearly half of all prostate cancer deaths.
...
Screening men at the age of 45-49, however, spotted nearly half (44%) of the cancers that went on to be deadly.

In the study, 1,369 of the men had prostate cancer, 241 had advanced disease and 162 died from it.

They say all men should be offered a PSA test in their mid-to-late 40s. Those with a high result would return for frequent screening and checks (and treatment if necessary), while those with normal results could wait until their early 50s for their next PSA test.'

Murdering Mom Gets 45 days

charlie · 17 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The female sentencing discount, as murdering mother pleads "no contest" and the prosecutor proposes a 45-day sentence for the murder of a child in 1957. Her son tells of being terrorized throughout his childhood. Excerpt:

'SHEBOYGAN, Wis. - A Wisconsin woman recently convicted of killing her daughter more than 50 years ago is an "evil monster" who deserves to die in prison, said her adult son, who claims he suffered years of horrific abuse at his mother's hands.

Ruby C. Klokow, 76, of Sheboygan, pleaded no contest in February to second-degree murder in the 1957 death of her 6-month-old daughter, Jeaneen. But as part of a plea agreement, prosecutors have agreed to recommend a sentence of 45 days in jail and 10 years' probation, citing her age and medical issues.
...
After a lengthy investigation, Ruby Klokow eventually conceded she may have roughly thrown the baby on the couch, causing her to bounce to the floor.
...
He also told police that his mother regularly beat him, and that she had choked him and broke his arm and nose. He also described his mother covering the head of his mentally challenged younger brother and striking the wailing boy's toes one by one with a hammer.
...
District attorney Joe DeCecco acknowledged that a 45-day sentence was light but said the plea agreement was in the best interest of the state. He said it would have been difficult to convince a jury that the grandmotherly woman before them was once a very angry young woman who didn't want to be a mother and who lied to police.

Besides Jeaneen and James, Klokow had another child, Scott, who died as a baby. His body was disinterred as police investigated but his death could not be considered suspicious, DeCecco said.'

Texas teacher claims she couldn’t have fondled black student because she’s racist

Mastodon · 17 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A teacher in Texas has invoked her own racism in a defense against charges that she fondled an African-American student in her first grade class at Northwest Preparatory Academy Charter School in Humble.

According to a criminal complaint obtained by the Houston Chronicle, the 7-year-old girl said that 61-year-old Esther Irene Stokes sent all of the other students out of the room on March 1 and then touched her “private part” on the outside of her clothes.

“The victim said that she was in the classroom alone with the teacher and that the teacher touched her on the outside of her clothes, on what she called her ‘private part,’ her vaginal area,” Humble Police Department Detective J. Blanchard explained on Tuesday.'

Fitness USA Members Protest New 'Women Only' Policy at Dearborn Location

Mastodon · 17 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A local health club's switch to a "women only" policy has ruffled the feathers of some of its male members.

More than 50 men from Dearborn and surrounding communities organized a protest on Tuesday at the Dearborn Fitness USA, one of two Metro Detroit locations that have changed to workouts for women only.

"The company is in breach of its membership contract," Andrew Sluka of Lincoln Park said. "It's discrimination, plain and simple."

According to Sluka, members were notified on Dec. 3 that the Dearborn location would only allow women to use the facility's equipment. Prior to that, the club offered alternate days for male and female members.

"They gave us a two-week notice, and by law, a fitness club is supposed to give its members a 30 day notice if they change a policy," he said.

Fitness USA, which has three locations in Wayne County, announced a similar policy change at its Taylor location on April 8. Male members at both locations have since been told that they can use the company's Lincoln Park location to work out, but only on Sunday, Monday, Wednesday and Friday.'

John Gerzema: How Women Will Rule the Future of Work

Mastodon · 17 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why do you think that women will rule the future? What evidence can you share that proves that?

We don't think that women alone will rule the future. We think that women with certain leadership skills and traits and men who also possess them, stand a greater chance of success in an ever-more interconnected global economy. This is because the only way to succeed when everyone knows your business is to act in an empathetic, patient, humane, and scrupulously ethical way. Given that people the world over believe these qualities are "female" in a traditional sense, we use "like women" as a shorthand for what can be universal traits.

...

What are three things that men can learn from women about career management that will make them more successful?

If men can learn to be less defensive, more open to others, and more accepting of accountability they will adapt well to the new global economy. Top-down organizations may still work in some settings, but by and large we see a premium on collaboration, communication, and consultation. This is because everyone now has access to enormous amounts of information about your company, its competitors, and conditions in the marketplace. The worst thing you can do is try to manipulate or control perceptions. It's impossible and when you are found out the result is disastrous. Better to be transparent and play well with others so that when bad things happen you have a reservoir of good will to bank on.'

Title IX Almost Ruined My Son’s Life

Mastodon · 17 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an op-ed in The Wall Street Journal today titled “A Mother, a Feminist, Aghast,” attorney Judith Grossman writes about her family's harrowing ordeal after her college-age son was accused of “nonconsensual sex” by an ex-girlfriend, several years after their relationship ended.

Grossman’s piece reads like a Kafka-esque nightmare: with no preliminary inquiry by the school into the accusations, Grossman says, the college's Title IX office operated under the assumption that “my son would not be afforded a presumption of innocence.” A campus tribunal—seemingly, with no particular background in the law or in evaluating legal evidence—would rule on the claim, with only half of the tribunal needing to decide that the alleged incident “more likely than not” occurred for punishment to be meted out. ...

Grossman, being a lawyer, was able to fight for her son’s constitutional rights (“Who knew that American college students are required to surrender the Bill of Rights at the campus gates?”), and the charges against him were ultimately dismissed. But she concludes that, in Title IX’s well-meaning zeal to guarantee equality between the sexes on university campuses, it has “obliterated the presumption of innocence that is so foundational to our traditions of justice.” Fighting for women’s rights is all well and good—Grossman is a self-identified feminist, after all—but this incident smacks of wreaking “the very injustices the movement itself has for so long sought to correct.”'

India: A ministry for men

Mastodon · 17 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the wake of the alleged suicide of an IT employee in Bangalore, Save Indian Family Foundation (SIFF) took up the cause of male suicides on Sunday when it held a candlelight vigil in the City demanding that the ‘draconian gender-biased’ dowry-related laws be rectified.

The NGO dedicated to men’s rights, distressed husbands and their families, alleges that over 60,000 men (twice the number of women) commit suicide each year due to fake allegations in 498A cases or due to harassment from their wives and relatives.

In a country that’s deemed absolutely the worst place in the world for women to live, the very notion of men claiming to be the real victims of the system, to put it kindly, beggars belief. Even more so when men’s rights groups anoint themselves ‘the martyrs of marriage,’ asserting that it is men that suffer most in dowry cases which they say are biased solely in favour of the fairer sex. This, at a time when NCRB data estimates that a bride is burned every 90 minutes in this country.

Still, while SIFF’s data interpretation is highly contentious. Their concerns, however, are very legit. Almost every member of the AP SIFF that congregates at Public Gardens every week is anticipating or already fighting a legal battle with their spouse. Each of them has a horror story to tell — of false accusations, nights spent in jail, mothers and sisters arrested, jobs lost, passports confiscated, police abuse, costly expenses, custody battles and lives put on hold, while trials prolong endlessly.'

"The rise of sexism and misogyny in a Facebook era"

Mastodon · 17 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A FACEBOOK page titled “Slut” has 581,845 likes. The term is used casually in teenage conversations both as a cutting insult and a term of endearment.

Slut-shaming is nothing new; since the days of Nathaniel Hawthorne and “The Scarlet Letter,” girls have been branded with titles because of their sexuality.

And while womens rights have come a long way since the 1850s, social media of the 21st century has morphed sexism and misogyny into a cruel and powerful beast.

Facebook and Twitter make objectifying women easy. A mere click of a button guarantees you a large audience. Teens who never make lewd comments to someone’s face create Facebook groups called “its (sic) not rape if u shout SURPRISE!!!” or “its (sic) not rape, it’s a snuggle struggle” which have almost 1,000 likes.'

Meanwhile:

https://www.facebook.com/mensuck

https://www.facebook.com/groups/227847323895178/

https://www.facebook.com/groups/256728294439966/

https://www.facebook.com/misandryunited

Report: Wife of former official charged with murder in Texas DA killing

Mastodon · 17 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- The wife of a former justice of the peace in Texas is being held on murder charges in connection with the killings of Kaufman County District Attorney Michael McLelland and his wife, Cynthia, county officials announced Wednesday.

Kim Lene Williams, 46, is also charged with murder in the death of prosecutor Mark Hasse.

She is in jail, with bail set at $10 million. The Kaufman County jail website lists her as being booked about 3 a.m. Wednesday.

The McLellands were killed in March, and Hasse was killed in January.'

Update: She confessed. Reported here.

Colleges Must Promote Personal Responsibility, Not 'He-Said, She-Said' Trials

Mastodon · 17 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The federal government has intervened in an apparent effort to raise the conviction rate in such campus sexual assault trials, using the gender equity provisions of Title IX. In 2011 the Office for Civil Rights (OCR) of the Department of Education advised colleges that they must use the “preponderance of evidence” standard of civil court proceedings, not the “beyond a reasonable doubt” standard of criminal trials. Within a year, almost all institutions, including UNC, had complied rather than risk the loss of federal funding.

The lower standard of proof will result in more convictions—of both guilty and innocent individuals. For some, perhaps, a few false positives are merely the collateral damage of outcomes that are more just in aggregate. But this is not a convincing argument in a society that values individual rights. The lower penalty for a conviction in a college court—a “rapist” label and career-shattering expulsion, rather than imprisonment—does not justify a lower standard of proof.'

SAVE: Our Annual Conference in June

Matt · 17 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Our annual conference will be held in Washington DC on June 21-22. If you get your tickets before June 1 you can save $25 per ticket!

This year's theme is "Celebrating Our Progress!"

Our keynote speakers are Erin Pizzey, founder of the international abuse shelter movement, and Kathy King, a former magistrate in Ohio. We'll also hear from persons who have overcome being falsely accused, and more. Dinner Friday and lunch Saturday are included.

Visit the SAVE website for the schedule and info on local lodging:
http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp/annual-conference-2013/

Visit eventbrite to register online: http://celebratingourprogress.eventbrite.com/

There is nothing like meeting fellow advocates and activists in person. I hope to see you there!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Ken Burns brings 'Central Park Five' to light

Matt · 17 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Since its release last spring, Burns and his co-producers, daughter Sarah Burns and her husband David McMahon, as well as the five men whose convictions in the case were vacated, have traveled the country talking about the film and the as-yet-unsettled $250 million civil suit they brought against the City of New York in 2003.

The film has "taken on a life of its own," says Sarah. "We did our festival run, we did our theatrical release and now we're leading up to our broadcast, but we're also getting so many requests from law schools, high schools, colleges, community organizations, and churches who feel like they have a constituency that needs to know this story."
...
One Latino and four African-American teenagers were arrested, confessed under duress and were convicted. The five served between seven and 13 years in prison. Their convictions were vacated after Matias Reyes, an imprisoned serial rapist, confessed in 2002, and DNA evidence linked him, and only him, to the crime.
...
Salaam says he has dealt with the anger and bitterness, but believes resolution of the lawsuit is necessary for the five men to truly get their lives back. "It's a run-on sentence," he says. "There needs to be a period placed at the end for there to be a true moving-on."'

Those unfamiliar with this case can read about it on Wikipedia here.

Salem-News: The Jewish Anti-Circumcision and Intactivist Movement

Matt · 18 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(TEL AVIV) - Today's Judaism is ready to reject traditional circumcision and to move to compassionate symbolic rituals. The interpretation of Jewish law is constantly in a state of development, flux, and evolution, expanding as the realm of human rights expands. As Jews, we are regularly evolving our lives and practices to adjust to the constantly evolving moral arc of human rights.

As a leading Intactivist, Eliyahu Ungar-Sargon has so invaluably explained, for most of today's Jews, moral and humanitarian behavior towards others is at the forefront of Judaism. These moral principles of Judaism are in direct conflict with the tradition of surgical circumcision. This is not to say that all Jews, including the Orthodox will suddenly abolish circumcision surgery, and move to a symbolic interpretation without a period of reflection and forethought. However, progress is being made.
...
Intactivism is a new form of human rights activism. Respectful intactivists criticize religious and historical excuses for circumcision without denigrating any group of people. We respect the peaceful elements of different belief systems while criticizing violent traditions and their history. Throughout the religious history of circumcision ethical issues have been widely acknowledged to some degree. Intelligent intactivists are respectful and effective when criticizing the history of circumcision surgery. Writings among Rabbis working to abolish circumcision in favor of a compassionate welcoming have roots that are over 200 years old within the Reform Jewish movement. Dr. Mark Reiss, a Jewish doctor and founder of a medical Intactivist group, maintains a list of almost 150 Rabbis in Israel, the USA, UK, and elsewhere who perform Jewish covenant rituals that respect the baby's full personal well-being. ...'

Woman goes on trial for allegedly severing estranged husband's penis

Mastodon · 18 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'(CBS/AP) SANTA ANA, Calif. - A California prosecutor says a jealous wife yelled "You deserve it" before severing her estranged husband's penis with a kitchen knife and throwing it in a garbage disposal.

The Orange County Register reports a jury heard opening statements Wednesday in the case of 50-year-old Catherine Kieu, who is accused of drugging her husband's tofu with sleeping pills and tying him to a bed before the attack.

Deputy District Attorney John Christl says audio of the July 11, 2011 incident was captured by a voice-activated recorder Kieu had hidden in the bedroom.

Deputy Public Defender Frank Bittar says Kieu's severely traumatic childhood in war-torn Vietnam, including rape by her older brother, caused mental illness that bars her from a mayhem or torture conviction.'

For those who don't recall, this was the subject of "The Talk" issue of not long ago. Video here.

We Went To a Men's Rights Lecture In Toronto (And Discovered That They're a Bunch of Losers)

Mastodon · 18 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In November of last year the University of Toronto hosted a lecture by Dr. Warren Farrell, a divisive figure who has been described simultaneously as a sage of the men's movement and a rape apologist. On the night of the lecture a group of students barred the doors of the lecture hall in protest while chanting, "No hate speech on campus." Police were called, the situation was brought under control, and the lecture went on as scheduled. Another lecture took place in March of this year, this time an overly critical look at feminist studies by Janice Fiamengo in which she described the discipline as "intellectually incoherent and dishonest." Again, protesters were on hand waving placards and this time a fire alarm was pulled but, once more, the event went on as scheduled. These controversial lectures were organized by a student group called the Canadian Association for Equality or CAFE for short. CAFE has come under fire from student groups and media who not only disagree with their actions and ideology, but have associated them with the extreme, vitriolic American men's rights website A Voice For Men. Where AVFM is upfront and open about its hatred for feminism and -ists, calling them "rape farmers," CAFE takes aim at feminism with misleading information and careful rhetoric, barely ever using the word "feminist" itself.

...

When I walked into the lecture I was under the impression that we in the media should not give attention to CAFE, AVFM, and men's rights activists or their ideas—since they're really dumb. However, actually going to one of their lectures, I saw the growing presence of CAFE as a real problem in Toronto, and the rest of Canada, that needs addressing. We should be able to openly discuss aggression in men, male sexuality, cultural expectations, justice issues, et al., but groups like AVFM, CAFE, and the speakers they schedule serve only to promote antifeminist ideas and hatred of women at a time when rape and sexual abuse against women is a pervasive, cultural problem that requires immediate addressing.'

Iron Maiden Drummer's Wife Charged with DV

Mastodon · 18 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Rebecca McBrain, the wife of Iron Maiden drummer Nicko McBrain has been charged with domestic abuse after being arrested for an incident that happened at the couple's Florida home earlier this year.

BocaNewsNow.com reports that Rebecca attempted to stab someone with a decorative sword before throwing and hitting the victim with logs from a firepit in the couple's garden.

Although the victim is yet to be identified, the fact that Rebecca has been charged with domestic abuse indicates that the person was a resident of the home or a relative.

Rebecca was in court today (April 18) for sentencing and has a trial date set for May 3, 2013. The original incident is reported to have taken place on February 24 when Rebecca was released from Palm Beach County Jail on $3,000 bail.'

AIDS.gov: "Courage, strength, resilience: women fight AIDS"

Minuteman · 19 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'By Valerie Jarrett, Senior Advisor to the President

...

On Monday, I attended the launch of EMPOWERED, Alicia Keys' new campaign with Greater than AIDS to reach and inform women about HIV/AIDS, at an event hosted by the Kaiser Family Foundation. This is the second event that Alicia Keys and I have attended at Kaiser within the last year, both focused on ending AIDS.

The women were thrilled to meet Alicia Keys, and Alicia, who was deeply moved by their stories, committed to add her powerful international voice to helping to end the epidemic here in the U.S. Alicia and I intended to lift up the women. But really, it was their strength, courage, resilience, good spirit, and humor that lifted us up.'

An open letter to men's rights activists

Mastodon · 19 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'First, some background for any bystanders who need it: Men's rights activists (MRAs) have been growing in number for a while as a sort of counter-movement against feminism. Turns out that when women try to get uppity, people get upset. Undoing thousands of years of oppression? That doesn't sit well with MRAs.

But back to you, MRAs. I've seen you on the Internet, commenting on articles about feminist issues. "But what about the men?" is your rallying cry. I wouldn't be surprised if you comment on this article — prove me wrong, please.

Sometimes it's hard to even take you seriously. Just take a look at some article and video titles from the MRA website avoiceformen.com. "The Catalog of Anti-Male Shaming Tactics," "Rape Farming: The next generation," "What would female supremacy look like?" You even have a tag for "feminist lies." It's hard to be offended at times because it's so absurd.
Sadly, I have to take you seriously, because the MRA movement is harmful — to people of all genders.
...
... But whereas a male feminist is devoted to equality and recognizing how oppression of women hurts everyone in the long run, men's rights activists are devoted to whining.'

Malecare: Understanding the New Options for Men with Advanced Prostate Cancer – Treatments, Immunotherapy & Clinical Trials

Matt · 19 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Malecare April Teleconference

"Understanding the New Options for Men with Advanced Prostate Cancer – Treatments, Immunotherapy & Clinical Trials"

1 - An overview of the new treatments now available for men with castrate resistant advanced prostate including a discussion of the sequencing and combining of these treatments.
2 - A discussion about immunotherapies and their role in current treatment.
3 - Q&A

The conference is scheduled for Tuesday, April 30, 2013 at 6PM EDT

Simply dial in at 800-920-7487 or direct dial 404 920 1710, conference code 8534374

Please email your questions for the speakers, in advance, to info-at-malecare.org

Speakers:
James L. Gulley, M.D., Ph.D., F.A.C.P.
Director, Clinical Trials Group &
Deputy Chief, Laboratory of Tumor Immunology and Biology
Senior Investigator, Medical Oncology Branch
Center for Cancer Research, National Cancer Institute National Institutes of Health

Joel Nowak, MSW, MS
Director, Advocacy and Advanced Stage Disease
Malecare Cancer Support

Germany: Merkel Concedes on Quotas for Women

Mastodon · 20 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'BERLIN — In a rare political setback for the world's most powerful woman, Chancellor Angela Merkel on Thursday found herself forced to give in to a rebellious bloc in her own party who insisted that Germany's leading companies be compelled to increase the number of women on their boards.

Ms. Merkel, Germany's first female chancellor, has long resisted the quota system for giving women board membership. It is an issue much debated throughout Europe, and adopted in countries from Norway to France but fiercely contested elsewhere — nowhere more so than in the Continent's most powerful economy.

Ms. Merkel, a 58-year-old trained physicist who is married but has no children, became chancellor in 2005. Despite filling nearly a third of her cabinet with women, she has never overtly campaigned for equality or focused on the uniqueness of her position. And she has repeatedly rejected calls, including from the European Union, to require companies to admit more women to the highest levels of management.'

Woman arrested 396 times, released repeatedly

Matt · 21 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Just ask yourself: If this were a man with this kind of history, would he ever even get to 396 arrests? Excerpt:

'Since 1978, Chicago Police alone have arrested Miles 396 times, mostly on the North Side — under at least 83 different aliases. Those arrests include 92 for theft, 65 for disorderly conduct, 59 for prostitution-related crimes and five for robbery or attempted robbery.
...
Miles is a master at working the system, says Rolon. She fakes seizures that mean costly hospital visits. She gets judges to delay her cases. And then she returns to the streets to be arrested again and again — so many times that she ranks in the top 1 percent for all current CPD arrestees.

To the relief of many, Miles, 51, is currently in prison in downstate Lincoln. Police arrested her last August, when — after a day of allegedly slapping, punching and generally harassing folks on a stretch of Broadway in Uptown — she is accused of chasing after Ald. James Cappleman (46th). That arrest landed her back in prison for a possible parole violation of a 2010 conviction for robbing a 75-year-old Bosnian immigrant at knifepoint.'

Kidnapping Mother Gets Favorable News Story

charlie · 21 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. In this story, a mother who has kidnapped a child and then uses the child to gain empathy gets favorable news coverage. Note that she had shared custody in the country where she and the child had lived with the father. But, rather than accept the judgement of the court, she chose to kidnap the child and attempt to gain sole custody through the use of accusations of abuse against the father. The reporter includes an interview with the child that is apparently supposed to make readers sympathetic to her cause. Shouldn't she be facing kidnapping charges rather than a sympathetic news story? Excerpt:

'Olivia, who turned 5 on Saturday, is at the center of a bitter international legal dispute between her two divorced parents.

Swedish courts have ruled that her mother, Mariah Talbot, abducted Olivia, taking her from Sweden to the United States without her father's permission. On April 9, U.S. District Judge Donovan Frank ordered Olivia promptly returned. Olivia's Swedish grandmother is expected to arrive in the Twin Cities this week and take the girl back to Sweden, where she was born and raised.

"I don't know if I will ever see her again," said her mother, tears in her eyes.

Olivia's father, who took his daughter to the Mall of America during a three-day visit to Minnesota this month, said in an e-mail to the Star Tribune that Olivia's family and friends are looking forward to her return.'

'Men's sex chromosome is doomed'

Mastodon · 21 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The poorly designed Y chromosome that makes men is degrading rapidly and will disappear, even if humans are still around.

...

"The X chromosome is all alone in the male, but in the female it has a friend so it can swap bits and repair itself. If the Y gets a hit it's a downward spiral."

The X has about 1000 genes left, too many relating to sex and intelligence, she says.

The smaller Y started with about 1700 genes but only has 45 left, and that's mostly "junk".

"It is a lovely example of what I call dumb design," she said.

"It is an evolutionary accident."

If humans don't become extinct, new sex-determining genes and chromosomes will evolve, maybe leading to the evolution of new hominid species.

This had happened in the Japanese spiny rat, which had survived the loss of its Y, she said.'

SAVE; National Crime Victims' Rights Week: SAVE Calls for End to Discriminatory Practices

Matt · 22 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Teri Stoddard
Email: tstoddard@saveservices.org

WASHINGTON / April 22, 2013 – In recognition of National Crime Victims' Rights Week, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) is calling on lawmakers, state Attorney Generals, and prosecutors to move quickly to implement the VAWA Inclusion Mandate.

Sponsored by the U.S. Department of Justice, National Crime Victims' Rights Week is being observed April 21-27. The Week's theme is "New Challenges, New Solutions."

Discriminatory practices have been documented against male (1), LGBT (2), and immigrant (3) victims of abuse. So the critical "new challenge" is to review and upgrade organizational policies, staffing patterns, and outreach efforts to end illegal exclusionary practices, the victim-rights coalition says.

The VAWA Inclusion Mandate requires recipients of Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) funding to refrain from discriminatory practices on the basis of "race, color, religion, national origin, sex, gender identity, sexual orientation, or disability." The Inclusion Mandate also includes provisions specific to LGBT, male, and immigrant victims (4).

Feminism is an outdated movement, becoming a joke

Mastodon · 22 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Feminism is outdated. In the 21st century, feminists are finding more and more ways to play victim. Instead of promoting women's rights, they're just making us laugh.
...
Don't misunderstand me – I am pro-equal opportunity for both sexes in all capacities. However, I strongly disagree with the way many feminists go about things. They play victim to everything: men, the media, the workplace and even in education.

So when will the feminist movement be happy enough to back down and let the rest of us peacefully continue on with our lives?
...
The movement helped turn around women's lives and make everyone equal. However, in 2013, feminism has proven to be more controversial than beneficial. It has grown to stand for the exact opposite of what women in the 1800s had in mind.
...
It is an obsolete movement that most women nowadays abuse to gain power and attention.

Women need to help make feminism a serious topic again because without that help, feminism will continue to be exactly what it is today – an outdated joke.'

Ironically, High-heel event aims to bring awareness to sexual violence

Female Bounty Hunters Under Fire For Breaking Into Woman's Apartment Looking For Suspect

Matt · 23 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Again, remember feminist claims that female law enforcers were not just less likely but much less likely to color outside the lines? Excerpt:

'HAWTHORNE (CBSLA.com) — A group of Orange County female bounty hunters is under fire for breaking into a Hawthorne woman's apartment looking for a suspect.

Shavonna Sutton, 25, said the Lipstick Bounty Hunters burst through her home last Friday to apprehend fugitive Ricky Lewis.

...

Chris Alvarez, the bounty hunter who led the search for Lewis, said they tried several times to get Sutton to open the door.

Alvarez said Sutton refused, so they had a right to break-in.

"All she had to do is say, 'Look. He's not here.' We had reason to believe he's in there, and that's why we forced entry," said Alvarez.

Meantime, the bounty hunters were recently served a lawsuit from a man who claims they used excessive force during his attempted arrest.'

From HowStuffWorks.com:

'The bail bond contract gives bounty hunters the right to enter the home of a fugitive, but only after establishing without a doubt that the person lives there. They cannot enter the homes of friends or family members to look for the fugitive.'

SAVE: National Crime Victims' Rights Week, a Perfect Time to End Discriminatory Practices

Matt · 23 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Sponsored by the U.S. Department of Justice, April 21-27 is National Crime Victims' Rights Week. This week's theme is "New Challenges, New Solutions."

Unfortunately, discriminatory practices have been documented against male, LGBT, and immigrant victims of abuse. So we believe the critical "new challenge" is to review and update organizational policies, staffing patterns, and outreach efforts to end illegal exclusionary practices.

The VAWA Inclusion Mandate requires recipients of Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) funding to refrain from discriminatory practices, and includes provisions specific to LGBT, male, and immigrant victims. The Mandate also applies to all criminal justice organizations that receive VAWA funding -- prosecutors, law enforcement, and the judiciary.

Attorney General Eric Holder has noted: "I applaud Congress for passing a bipartisan reauthorization that protects everyone - women and men, gay and straight, children and adults of all races, ethnicities, countries of origin, and tribal affiliations."

To support the Inclusion Mandate and to end discrimination, please contact Eric Holder, and politely ask him to implement the VAWA Inclusion Mandate as quickly as possible.

Contact Attorney General Eric Holder:
Phone: 202-514-2001
Email: AskDOJ-at-usdoj.gov

Thanks!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Florida house passes bill overhauling alimony

Matt · 23 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TALLAHASSEE -- Former spouses saddled with perpetual alimony payments, rejoice.

The Florida Legislature is here to help.

On Thursday, the House passed a contentious bill that would end permanent alimony payments, and enable the courts to modify some existing arrangements between ex-spouses. The proposal would also require judges to give divorced parents equal custody of their children, unless there were extraordinary circumstances.

Gov. Rick Scott has not indicated if he will sign the bill, which would not eliminate alimony but put limits on it. The bill passed the Senate by a 29-11 vote earlier this month.

But the governor is certain to hear from alimony payers and recipients, many of whom lent their pointed opinions and personal stories to one of the session's most emotional debates.'

Millionaire parent doesn't have to pay child support: appeals court

Matt · 23 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (Reuters) - A father who has custody of his child the majority of the year was not obligated to make support payments to the child's mother, despite the vast disparity in their incomes, a divided New York state appeals court ruled Thursday.

The Appellate Division, First Department, found that the Child Support Standards Act of 1989 precluded mother Mara Rubin from receiving child support payments from Anthony Della Salla, the father of her 9-year-old son.

Rubin has no income other than $5,000 a month in pendente lite child support payments from Della Salla, and an additional $1,000 in child support payments from the father of her daughter, the ruling said. Della Salla has roughly $20 million in assets, the ruling said.

The Child Support Standards Act sets out a uniform formula for determining child support payments. The law says that "the court shall order the non-custodial parent to pay" his or her share of that amount.'

"Days of Tempest" published

Matt · 23 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

On Amazon.com here. Description:

'PATERNITY FRAUD – 'THE CRIME ONLY A WOMAN CAN COMMIT'®™ is the true saga of who, what, when, where and why the fight for Paternity Fraud Victims and Men's Rights began.

One man, Liam Neale Magill, waged his eight-year war against all odds, within the Courtrooms of Australia. Together, in the company of his attorney, Vivien Mavropoulos and Cheryl King, Liam's Enduring Power of Attorney, they wrought a new classification for their Law of Deceit.

This landmark case, a major component of Australian Legal History, is currently being taught at Law Universities in Australia. The totality of the subject matter shook the annals of decree, leaving an indelible mark on society. With new avenues open, this precedent is giving hope to other Paternity Fraud Victims, who are following and continue Liam's fight to change those laws.'

Two Women Raise $3.5 Million For A Controversial, Girls-Only App That Objectifies Men

Mastodon · 23 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In London, two long-time friends Alison Schwartz and Alexandra Chong have an app that helps women anonymously gossip about men.

On Lulu, men aren't allowed in, and women can anonymously rate them without their consent. The men, who are all guys the women know via Facebook, are rated on a scale of one to ten. Their profiles are automatically pulled in when the women they know access Lulu. When rating a man, women are prompted to share how they know him (friend, ex-girlfriend, etc), then asked to check off all the good and bad qualities about the man that apply.
...
"We definitely feel this is about female empowerment and collective wisdom," Schwartz says. "We also feel boys are just the beginning. We'll win the trust of our girls here and then take them into other verticals."'

SAVE: 'Totalitarian Justice:' Criticisms of Campus Sex Assault Panels Intensify

Matt · 24 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Mike Thompson
Email: mthompson-at-saveservices.org

'Totalitarian Justice:' Criticisms of Campus Sex Assault Panels Intensify

WASHINGTON / April 24, 2013 – Three articles sharply critical of the handling of sex assault cases by campus disciplinary committees were published this past week. The critiques suggest college administrators may need to re-evaluate whether the federally mandated sex assault panels are rendering a disservice to victims, to the accused, and to the principle of justice itself, according to Stop Abusive and Violent Environments.

Writing in the Wall Street Journal on April 16, Judith Grossman describes the experience of her son, a student at a New England liberal-arts college (1). The panel's hearing consisted of a "two-hour ordeal of unabated grilling" during which he was "expressly denied his request to be represented by counsel." Grossman, a lawyer and self-described feminist, charges the student courts have "obliterated the presumption of innocence that is so foundational to our traditions of justice."

The following day Harry Lewis, former Dean of Harvard College, and Jane Shaw, president of the John W. Pope Center for Higher Education, penned a critique of the University of North Carolina's adjudication of a recent rape case (2).

After the accuser criticized the student panel for exonerating the accused, the university then proceeded to charge her with engaging in "disruptive or intimidating" behavior. Lewis and Shaw allege the student was denied her First Amendment rights, and conclude sexual assault cases are "certainly beyond the capacity" of campus disciplinary courts.

Canada: What's holding back boys' school achievement? Blue-collar dads

Mastodon · 24 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While men still out earn women overall – with a pay gap of 32 per cent in Canada – the gap is reversed when it comes to education, with 55 per cent of women enrolling in undergraduate degrees. The numbers for postsecondary enrolment are similar in the United States. In The Rise of Women: The Growing Gender Gap in Education and What it Means for American Schools, sociologists Thomas DiPrete and Claudia Buchmann argue that the educational achievement gap is a result of differences in how men and women have responded to changes in the wider economy. Why? It partly comes down to fathers.

...

Let's talk about the role of the father. You find that a father who is present and who is educated has a big impact on boys' learning. And yet study after study has shown that a mother's education level is the key determinant of her children's achievement. Can we actually separate each parent's role?

It is difficult to isolate the roles of mothers and fathers because of education homogamy, well-educated people marry each other. We know that having a highly-educated father has an impact on boys. In the case of low-educated fathers, working in blue-collar jobs, we believe that part of the challenge is that boys who grow up with low-educated fathers believe that a college degree was not part of the success for dads. They have notions that to do well in school is for girls. It's an outmoded way of thinking ...when we have a great decline in the parts of the economy where men can do well in blue-collar work or unions.'

Germany: Quotas for women in German boardrooms voted down

Mastodon · 24 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Germany's Parliament – the Bundestag – rejects quotas for women. Yesterday, the Chancellor Merkel's coalition has defeated, by a vote of 320 to 277, the opposition proposal aiming to indroduce a quota of 30 percent women starting in 2020. There will not be legally binding quotas for women in German boardrooms, but it keep on being a discretionary decision. At the end of 2012, according to the German DIW Economic Bulletin, only 4 percent of all seats on the executive boards and just under 13 percent on the supervisory boards of German companies were occupied by women. This is "alarming", considering that in other European Countries the percentage is significantly higher – in Norway, women hold 39 percent of management positions.'

MRAs and feminists arguing at U of T MRA event

Mastodon · 24 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

Ed. Note: NSFW warning: The feminists in the video do a lot of swearing and name-calling using 4-letter words to describe and address the MRAs they are screaming at. Alas, you won't see a lot of what I'd call genuine communication here. But I wouldn't expect genuine communication efforts toward MRAs from feminists.

Female prison guards indicted for drug trafficking

Matt · 24 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Thirteen female corrections officers essentially handed over control of a Baltimore jail to gang leaders, prosecutors said. The officers were charged Tuesday in a federal racketeering indictment.

Sex, drugs and prisoners were all involved in this recent FBI sting. The Washington Post's Ann Marimow explains what was happening behind the prison walls.

The indictment described a jailhouse seemingly out of control. Four corrections officers became pregnant by one inmate. Two of them got tattoos of the inmate's first name, Tavon — one on her neck, the other on a wrist.'

"Women are in Weight Gain Denial"

Matt · 24 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Believe it or not, I'm not posting this to be snarky. I'll venture to speculate that many men have the same thing going on. There once was a time not long ago where people (at least here in the US) were a bit more health/weight-conscious. Call it the Jack LaLanne-Arnold Schwarzenegger Era. It lasted about 20 years, maybe 15. It was a time many people quit smoking, went to gyms or health clubs, and weighed themselves daily. Now, not so much, especially the daily weigh-in on the bathroom scale. At the least, that's always been a good habit. Being obese or significantly overweight isn't just a women's health issue but also a men's health issue. (Sadly, it's all too often a chidren's health issue as well.) Excerpt:

'There’s a dangerous epidemic sneaking up on women across the country, and it’s impact goes largely unnoticed.

A recent study conducted by researchers at the University of Texas found that women are gaining weight, sometimes rapidly, without noticing it at all.

Research showed that women, at an average age of 25, had put on up to 11 pounds over three years without realizing they had been getting heavier. This worries doctors because it indicates that national anti-obesity campaigns are failing and many women, in turn, are in danger of putting themselves at risk of cardiovascular disease and a number of other weight-related health issues.'

F&F: Email and Tweet Florida Governor for Alimony Reform and Shared Parenting

Matt · 24 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Florida Governor Rick Scott must sign SB718/HB231 no later than tomorrow, Thursday, April 25th. This legislation will eliminate permanent alimony in Florida and add that equal time sharing with a minor child by both parents is presumed to be in the best interest of the child. If signed, the legislation is to take effect July 1, 2013.

Email Governor Scott at rick.scott-at-eog.myflorida.com and ask him to sign SB718/HB231 for Florida's Children and Parents. Just sign your name to this email, add your contact informaion, and send. Or tweet him: @FLGovScott. Please sign SB718/HB231 for Florida's Children and Parents.'

Parental Alienation Awareness Day - April 25

Matt · 25 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

PAAO site here. Excerpt:

'Parental alienation (or Hostile Aggressive Parenting) is a group of behaviors that are damaging to children's mental and emotional well-being, and can interfere with a relationship of a child and either parent. These behaviors most often accompany high conflict marriages, separation or divorce.'

PAAD site here.

Petition to UN to recognize PAS here.

On the Decline of Male Repro Health

Matt · 25 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I signed up for a fertility test not because I'm trying to have a kid (please) but as a barometer of my maleness, in its most medieval, distilled sense. ... Every week there's a new think piece or cover story ripping holes in the trappings of traditional manhood.

...

... Around the world, male fertility is sharply declining. Birth defects afflicting the penis and testicles are on the rise. So is testicular cancer. Scientists expect that these problems will plague future generations even more than ours.

...

Since the 1990s endocrinologists have issued warnings on the future of male reproductive health—"penis and semen," in Moore's words. In 1992, Danish scientists published a meta-analysis of 61 studies on semen quality from around the world, concluding that the average sperm concentration had declined by nearly 50 percent over a 50-year period, from 113 million to 66 million sperm per milliliter. ...

...

In 2000, American researchers not only confirmed results from the original Danish semen quality study, they found sperm density in the United States and Europe to be falling at an even faster clip: by 1.5 to 3 percent per year. And last summer, an Israeli study noted a steady decline in semen quality at one local bank over the past 15 years. A full 38 percent of all sperm-donation applicants are now rejected, up from one-third prior to 2004. That year, the bank lowered its minimum sperm count for acceptance to widen its net for donors. Under those more stringent standards, 88 percent of contemporary samples would have been rejected.'

A related article from 2008 discussing the statistically-significant drop in male birth rates in increasingly more parts of the world is here, also discussing man-made chemicals as a possible culprit.

Sexual misconduct disciplinary process alienates accused

Mastodon · 25 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Peter, a 2011 graduate of the University, saw his life turned upside down when a woman he had dated filed a sexual assault complaint against him with the Department of Public Safety in fall 2008.
...
The woman, who was living with several of Peter's closest friends at the time she made the accusation, had been diagnosed with depression, anxiety and attention deficit disorder — all of which took a toll on their interactions, he said.

But Peter said he did not know she perceived any of their sexual encounters as assault until she filed the complaint, which did not cite a specific incident.
...
In 2011, the U.S. Departmet of Education released a statement, known as a "Dear Colleague" letter, calling on colleges and universities to use preponderance in determining guilt for sexual misconduct cases. The letter is related to federal Title IX codes, which are designed to preserve gender equity in higher education.

Universities that receive federal funding are required to enforce Title IX policies, but how they incorporate the standard of preponderance varies, Creeley said.'

Salon.com blames masculinity for marathon bombing fibtastic · 25 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'"Large public acts of terrorism are very public displays of masculinity, making a statement in the biggest way possible," says Abby Ferber, a sociologist at the University of Colorado who has studied white supremacist groups and masculinity. In her work, she said, she often encountered a "vulnerability to their sense of masculinity whether it's their relationship with their father, their culture. And there are a limited number of ways in the culture to show your masculinity." In the absence of the traditional forms of masculinity — including financial or social power — "you're more likely to see extreme means. They're showing that they're real men, man enough to do something like this."

Once, Tamerlan's violence had been on a smaller scale — directed at that woman at the financial head of his table. Friends of Katherine's told NPR that Tamerlan flew into rages, calling her a slut and a prostitute and throwing things at her. He was arrested in 2009 on a domestic violence charge relating to a different woman. (Dzhokhar seems to have been more like those affable, slightly aimless boys who coast by on charm, with a "permanent stench of marijuana" in his room, according to the Globe.)'

Asking Suzanne Venker: Has feminism really liberated women?

Mastodon · 25 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Before feminism, men were viewed as respected providers and protectors of their families. Their masculinity was needed and revered. So was femininity. All of that changed with the sexual revolution, which taught women that they can (and should) have sex like a man: without getting attached. It also taught women that they should never depend on a man. So: men heard that message and subsequently lowered the bar on their own success.

Rather than accept their role in what has happened with men, feminists keep doing their damage. Consider these statements made by several high-profile feminists:

Author and journalist Natalie Angier begins an article in The New York Times by writing, “Women may not find this surprising, but one of the most persistent and frustrating problems in evolutionary biology is the male. Specifically… why doesn’t he just go away?”
...
In an article in The Atlantic entitled “Are Fathers Necessary?” author Pamela Paul wrote, “The bad news for Dad is that despite common perception, there’s nothing objectively essential about his contribution.”

That is feminism’s legacy.'

IA: American Congress of Obstetricians and Gynecologists meeting next week

Matt · 25 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Please see the IA site at http://www.intactamerica.org/. IA plans to be present to spread the intactivist word:

'The annual convention of the American Congress of Obstetricians and Gynecologists is meeting in New Orleans next week, and we will be there demonstrating and holding a press conference. Will you help us fund a mobile billboard and two ads in the local paper?'

"Fathers & Families" announces name change to "National Parents Organization"

Matt · 25 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I am proud to announce our new name, National Parents Organization.

By now, you have no doubt heard the news. Fathers and Families is now National Parents Organization. Your future emails will be coming from Parents@NationalParentsOrganization.org or NedHolstein@NationalParentsOrganization.org.

The change solidifies our role as the national voice for family law reform. All the work you have done with me to build Fathers and Families into National Parents Organization has prepared us to spread our movement into every state. And now the time is here to drive the movement to the next level.'

Understanding the needs of male sexual assault victims

Matt · 25 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Historically, those of us who are male survivors of sexual victimization are often an unrecognized, underserved and unmentioned population when the issue of sexual assault is discussed. Many of us do not even recognize or understand that we may have been victimized. Yet one in five males will be sexually assaulted in their lifetime, many of us before the age of 16.

The harmful impact of the sexual victimization of males is felt daily by all of us — in our families, communities and workplaces. It is often the unspoken, unrecognized and untreated issue when we are dealing with the problems of addiction, mental health, physical health, relationship issues, domestic violence, anger management, criminal behavior and many other issues that impact boys and men. Yet many male survivors do not know there are resources available to help them recover, nor do they feel safe talking about the impact sexual victimization has had on them.

I believe we all need to work harder to create a safe climate and culture for male sexual assault survivors. It is time for us to look at sexual assault and victimization as a gender-neutral issue. All survivors of sexual victimization are in need of quality services to assist them in their recovery regardless of their gender or age.'

MaleSurvivor.org

Matt · 26 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Good site for male survivors of sexual abuse: http://www.malesurvivor.org/

From the 'About Us' page:

'In October of 1988 the first professional Conference on Male Sexual Victimization was held in Minneapolis. This ground-breaking conference, organized by a few dedicated mental health providers, brought together professionals who wanted to better understand and treat adult male survivors of childhood sexual abuse. At that time, only limited information could be offered to those who participated. But those present had great enthusiasm and the clear recognition that the conference was a necessary and valuable resource, where professionals could share practical information and ask questions. And it was a safe place for some to acknowledge their own sexual victimization.'

Camden County Mother Facing Charges In Cancer Scheme

Mastodon · 26 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PENNSAUKEN, N.J., (CBS) – Police say 35-year-old Susan Stillwaggon is facing charges after she told friends, family, and even her own son, he was sick with cancer.

Police then say she accepted fundraising money from friends.

“The soccer team, the mothers’ were doing cupcake sales, they were selling bracelets, they were selling necklaces, they had a bingo night that they raised money,” said Pennsauken Police Lieutenant Michael Probasco.

The Pennsauken mother of four told the community through word of mouth and her Facebook page, that her elementary school age son had a type of lymphoma, according to police.

“It’s a lie,” said Lt. Probasco.'

NIH required Men to be circumcised to participate in now-cancelled HIV vaccine trials

Minuteman · 27 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID), part of the National Institutes of Health, will stop administering injections in its HVTN 505 clinical trial of an investigational HIV vaccine regimen because an independent data and safety monitoring board (DSMB) found during a scheduled interim review that the vaccine regimen did not prevent HIV infection nor reduce viral load (the amount of HIV in the blood) among vaccine recipients who became infected with HIV.

The HVTN 505 study began in 2009 and was testing an investigational prime-boost vaccine regimen developed by NIAID's Vaccine Research Center. The Phase IIb study, conducted by the NIAID-funded HIV Vaccine Trials Network (HVTN)External Web Site Policy, was designed to determine whether the vaccine regimen could prevent HIV infection and/or reduce the amount of virus in the blood of vaccine recipients who became infected with HIV.
...
As with all NIAID-sponsored HIV prevention trials, the HVTN 505 participants were offered extensive counseling on how to reduce their risk of becoming HIV-infected and provided free condoms. As an added precaution, study participants were required at time of enrollment to be circumcised and free of antibodies to Ad5. These precautions were taken in light of an HIV vaccine clinical trial, known as the Step Study, which found in 2007 an increased number of HIV infections among vaccine recipients, particularly those who were not circumcised and/or had Ad5 antibodies.'

Ontario schools to offer "gender studies"

Alphamale · 27 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I implore readers in Ontario to take action against this. Excerpt:

'The five Western students figured that once the Minister of Education heard about their project, he'd surely see the light and introduce women's studies into the curriculum.

It was their first foray into activism. They had no idea what awaited them.

"We didn't even know what a deputy minister did," says Rawal, now a lawyer. "When we met him, he said 'Is this a course for girls?' "

Their story is a model case study for activists. The formula? Keep focused on one simple idea. Build bridges with everyone interested. Keep the message positive. Have fun along the way, with crochet parties and feminist read-ins on the lawn at Queen's Park. And grind, grind, grind.'

Ed. note: The submitter of this piece included further comments that were too long for the story box, so they are in the first comment.

Feminist group hurls water, insults at archbishop

Mastodon · 27 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Brussels, Belgium, Apr 24, 2013 / 04:13 pm (CNA/EWTN News).- Four semi-nude feminist protestors attacked Archbishop Andre-Joseph Leonard of Malinas-Brussels during a recent conference on freedom of expression.

The April 18 conference took place at the Free University of Brussels and was entitled, “Blasphemy – crime or freedom of expression.”

The four women, who belong to the radical group Femen, removed their shirts and used plastic bottles similar those used by pilgrims at Lourdes to throw water at the archbishop while shouting insults and making violent gestures.
...
The women painted their bodies with the phrases, “My body, my rules” and “God loves lesbians.” They also carried a sign which read, “Stop homophobia.”'

AVfM Special Edition: RIP Earl Silverman

Matt · 27 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here. Excerpt:

'... Saturday, April 27, we will be airing a special episode of AVFM Radio, commemorating the life and work of Earl Silverman, the man who founded and operated the only refuge for battered men in Canada. Mr. Silverman committed suicide after the shelter, which was completely ignored by the Canadian Government, fell into hard economic times.

While the circumstances and precise reasons for his decision are not known at this time, we do know that Earl had struggled for years to provide services to men who needed to escape violent relationships. He was first exposed to that violence when he was married to an abusive woman. He sought out help for that and found there was none. Against all odds and in spite of the fact that the Canadian government summarily rejected all of his requests for funding, he pushed ahead with plans and provided services to battered men out of his own pocket and with meager contributions from a largely uncaring society.'

Catherine Kieu, California Woman, Cut Off Man's Penis During 'Break From Reality': Lawyer

Mastodon · 27 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SANTA ANA, California — The defense attorney for a woman charged with severing the penis of her estranged husband said she "had a break from reality" the night of the attack.

"She's a shattered woman who tried to do the best she could," Frank Bittar, public defender for Catherine Kieu, said during closing arguments Thursday. But Bittar said Kieu's mental health woes increased and she broke, according to City News Service.

The jury received the case and is scheduled to begin deliberating Monday on charges of torture and aggravated mayhem for the July 11, 2011, incident when Kieu, 50, was accused of drugging her husband, cutting off his penis, and throwing in the garbage disposal.

Bittar said no one could condone what the victim went through. But he said Kieu had a childhood full of molestation and other trauma in war-torn Vietnam. He said that was compounded by her husband who constantly demanded sex in ways that put her in pain.'

UK: Are more married men than women suffering from domestic abuse?

Mastodon · 27 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"More married men (2.3 per cent) suffered from partner abuse last year than married women, according to the latest British Crime Survey." The Independent on Sunday, 14 April 2013.

This weekend the Independent on Sunday tells the story of Kieron, 37 from Norfolk. He was abused by his wife for three years before he finally mustered the courage to report the crime to the police. The tipping point arrived when he had to undergo heart surgery after she stabbed him in the chest.

In recent years the Crime Survey for England and Wales, has revealed that Kieron is just one of many men abused by their partners.
...
The problem may in fact be more widespread than these figures suggest. The 2010/11 British Crime Survey (page 88) has revealed that twice as many male victims (28%) than female victims (13%) do not tell anyone about the domestic abuse they are suffering, highlighting the level of under-reporting. Furthermore, only 10% of male victims contact the police compared to 29% of female victims.'

UK: Michelle Mills guilty of Edward Miller's murder in Scalford

Mastodon · 28 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Michelle Mills stabbed Edward Miller 24 times with such force that the handle of the knife broke away from the blade.

She told police her 20-year-old boyfriend had been violent to her but the trial heard she had attacked previous partners.

Mills, 31, who stabbed Mr Miller at their home in Scalford, Leicestershire, will be sentenced on Tuesday.

Det Insp Lee Hill said: "Michelle Mills is a violent, self-centred and manipulative woman who was happy to portray herself as the victim of domestic violence at the hands of a number of her partners, including Eddie Miller."'

"America has been feminized"

Mastodon · 29 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here.

'I get tired of the constant drumbeat by women about inequality. The so-called equal pay issue, for example, is bogus.

Most studies I've seen concluded it is a matter of time worked -- that men simply put more time into the work place and consequently earn more overall. In any case, many laws cover discrimination.

Regarding equality, men are now on the margin if not on the bench. Women control our interpersonal relationships, family life, child rearing, schools, churches, culture, arts and TV. America has been feminized.

About 60 percent of college admissions are now girls, while dropouts from high school are mostly boys. Most high school scholarships and awards seem to go to girls.

According to the U.S. Department of Education, women control around 60 percent of the nation's wealth -- now that's power. Let’s cast this mythical, disingenuous "inequality" aside.'

Local Voices: Gregory Linton: Boys need to be educated more effectively

Mastodon · 29 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics recently released a report titled “America’s Youth at 25,” which showed that among 23-year-olds, 165 women have earned college degrees for every 100 men.

Consequences of this disparity include higher unemployment, a higher crime rate, a lower birth rate and fewer skilled workers for the knowledge economy. What has caused this gender gap? Here are just a few of the many factors offered by analysts such as Leonard Sax, Richard Whitmire, Peg Tyre and Hanna Rosin.

One factor is a father who is absent or lacks a college degree. The lack of interest in education by boys often begins at home. According to the National Kids Count Program, 26 percent of children in the U.S. live in mother-only households. Although many single mothers have overcome obstacles to motivate their sons to earn a college degree, most boys respond better to the influence and example of a father.
...
Teacher training programs need to provide much more instruction in educational strategies designed for boys. Other countries report the same gender gap in education, but some, like Australia, are actively seeking remedies for it. The surest way to accomplish gains in our educational outcomes is to begin educating boys more effectively. Until we do, our boys will continue to be left behind, and our nation will continue to suffer the consequences.'

Australia: Boys died in shower as mum 'passed out'

Minuteman · 29 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'An exhausted Miranda Hebble put her two young sons in the shower and closed the bathroom door.

She fell asleep and woke up about 10 hours later to find water overflowing from the shower - and both boys dead.

The West Australian coroner is examining the deaths of Lochlan James Stevens, aged two, and Malachi Isaac Stevens, 10 months, who died in November 2008.

Ms Hebble, then aged 22, was caring for her sons alone in Perth while the boys' father Christopher Stevens, then aged 23, was working on a fly-in fly-out basis.

The couple have since separated.

Counsel assisting the inquest, Kate Ellson, said Ms Hebble had no history of mental illness or drug and alcohol abuse.

She was a quiet person and had been struggling with sleep because of Malachi's restlessness.'

Israeli Domestic Violence Conference to Focus on Battered Men

Matt · 29 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"No one would believe a big strong man was hit by his little wife," stated Professor Sarah Ben-David. However her research shows it happens more often then one might think.

A conference in Israel is focusing on battered men and Prof. Ben-David is one of the speakers at the two-day event which is entitled "Violence, Conflicts and Unity in Family Context: A Reappraisal of Therapeutic and Judicial Doctrines." The conference is being sponsored by the Department of Criminology at Ariel University on Monday and Tuesday April 29th - 30th.

Prof. Ben-David, a Tel Aviv native, serves at head of the department. In her over 30 years of experience in the field, she founded and headed three organizations that deal with domestic violence victims. These are Sha'al, a victims' assistance service founded in 1979, the El'am Sex Crime Prevention Association, and Keleth - Criminologists for Correctional Services.'

UK: Girl, 14, forced to become pregnant with donor sperm bought by mother

Matt · 29 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This is why I don't bother reading fiction. What's the point when reality is so bizarre? Excerpt:

'A mother forced her 14-year-old adopted daughter to inseminate herself with donor sperm to provide a baby for her after she was prevented from adopting any more children, it can be revealed.

The daughter, a virgin, is believed to have miscarried at 14, but went on to have a baby at 16 after regularly inseminating herself with sperm bought over the internet by her "domineering" mother because she was too scared to refuse.

Details of the shocking case have emerged in a previously secret court judgment, which can be reported today for the first time and which raises serious questions over loopholes in international adoptions and the regulation of the global traffic in gametes.'

Dem resolution warns climate change could push women to ‘transactional sex'

Mastodon · 29 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Several House Democrats are calling on Congress to recognize that climate change is hurting women more than men, and could even drive poor women to "transactional sex" for survival.

The resolution, from Rep. Barbara Lee (D-Calif.) and a dozen other Democrats, says the results of climate change include drought and reduced agricultural output. It says these changes can be particularly harmful for women.

"[F]ood insecure women with limited socioeconomic resources may be vulnerable to situations such as sex work, transactional sex, and early marriage that put them at risk for HIV, STIs, unplanned pregnancy, and poor reproductive health," it says.'

Catherine Kieu found guilty of severing estranged husband's penis

Mastodon · 29 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SANTA ANA, Calif. – A Southern California jury has convicted a woman who was accused of drugging her estranged husband before severing his penis and tossing it in the garbage disposal.

Jurors found Catherine Kieu guilty Monday of charges of torture and aggravated mayhem for the July 11, 2011, attack.

Sentencing was scheduled for June 28.

During trial, the 60-year-old victim testified that his penis could not be reattached and that he felt as though he had been murdered.

Deputy District Attorney John Christl told jurors that Kieu, 50, drugged the man's tofu with sleeping pills and screamed "You deserve it!" before attacking him with a 10-inch kitchen knife.

Kieu was jealous and angry about her husband's plans to divorce her because he was seeing his ex-girlfriend, the prosecution said.'

Barbara Kay: Male victims of domestic abuse continue to suffer in solitude

Matt · 29 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, on the eve of becoming homeless as his house passed into its new owner's hands, Earl Silverman of northeast Calgary hanged himself in his garage.

Silverman briefly hit the news a month ago, when he closed his Men's Alternate Safe House (MASH), the only privately funded shelter for male victims of domestic violence in Canada, for lack of funds. For three years, MASH had temporarily housed about 20 men and a few children.

As I wrote in a March 27 column, "This story did not light up the switchboards, metaphorically speaking, of the media and government ministries." The fact that men suffering from abuse now had exactly nowhere in Canada to turn for publicly funded shelter was the catalyst for a cavernous collective yawn — and exactly one letter to the Post editor, scolding men for their failure to become activists in their own behalf as women did.
...
It's an easy fix to honour Earl's last wish: Acknowledge the reality that men suffer from their intimate partners' violence almost as frequently as women do, and almost as consequentially. Offer funded shelter and counselling to both men and women who need it. And while we're at it, offer funded anger management to women who need it — there are many — as well as to men. We will then see male suicide rates go down. It's that simple. If we care.'

Relationship Contracts Growing In Popularity With Married And Unmarried Couples

Matt · 30 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mantus and Sullivan had their relationship provisions drawn up by their attorney as part of their prenuptial agreement.

“We’re seeing the evolution of so called ‘lifestyle clauses,’ which really answer the question, what do we want the marriage to be like? What types of activities are we going to be engaging in? Where are we going on vacation?” explained attorney Ann Margaret Carrozza.

Enforcement of the contracts is not guaranteed.

“If someone wants a sex schedule, two times a week, or three times a week, I can’t take that agreement into a courtroom and ask that it be enforced,” Carrozza explained.'

Barbara Kay co-hosting "Late-Night Counsell" on April 30

Matt · 30 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

News: Barbara Kay will be in Ottawa on Tuesday, April 30 from Montreal to co-host the show "Late-Night Counsell" with John Counsell at 9:04 PM (EST) on 580 CFRA radio.

The phone number in Ottawa is (613) 521-8255. (American callers use this number: 1-613-521-8255.) The TOLL-FREE Studio Line is: 1-800-580-CFRA (1-800-580-2372). Email Barbara in the studio with John Counsell's address: jcounsell-at-cfra.com and add the words "4 Barbara Kay" in the subject line. To help in the line-up of phone calls, please tell the engineer what country and city you are calling from.

Bias Against Male Babysitters

charlie · 30 April 2013 · Archived copy · Original

It seems that only women are allowed to write about sexism against men, as this writer notes the reaction of the public toward her choice to hire a male babysitter. Excerpt:

'I wasn't trying to be subversive when I hired a male babysitter this month. But it is apparently something that few parents would do.
...
Even our new sitter, whose mom I've known for years and a man whose caring and kindness aren't in question, came prepared for doubt. He showed up on his first day with a photocopy of his driver's license, one for me and one for the school where he would be picking up my younger son.
...
It's no wonder. At the kids' old preschool, the only male teacher confessed to me that he definitely felt a little more monitored and scrutinized because he was a guy.

The other teachers almost never let him take a child to the bathroom by himself. Parents often assumed he was another parent. "Because why would a man be working here in the classroom?" he told me.
...
Here is the real problem when we err on the side of statistics. By telling the millions of men that they cannot be trusted with children, we are reinforcing gender stereotypes at school, at home and at work.

If men can't take care of kids, women have to do it. And that's holding us back.

So tell me, would you hire a male babysitter?'

Men's Rights Movement Sees Resurgence Among Millennial Males

Matt · 1 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It would be easy to dismiss the campus event and protest as a small, noisy slice of gender activism, but what happened at U of T is illustrative of a growing men's rights movement driven by some male members of Generation Y (adults born after 1980, also known as Millennials) who are questioning their place in society and whether their rights are being violated. While their views on feminism and the extent of male oppression vary, all agree that we need to talk more openly about issues that affect boys and men.

...

Iain Dwyer, 28, remembers a poster in his high school that proclaimed: "Boys are stupid, throw rocks at them." He went to high school in the 1990s when messages about girl power were everywhere and gender equality was a given, said Dwyer, a spokesman for CAFE and one of the organizers of the Farrell lecture.

He says that as Millennial men like himself grew up, they realized that the world was not as equitable as they had been led to believe. Men and boys, they would find out, were suffering too.'

Yahoo's new baby leave policy is generous. Yours? Probably not so much

Mastodon · 1 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hey working moms and dads, just because Yahoo employees are getting more generous parental leave benefits doesn't mean you should expect those perks, too.

Under Yahoo's new policy, new moms who give birth are eligible for up to 16 weeks of paid maternity leave, with benefits. New dads can get up to eight weeks of paid paternity leave with benefits, according to Yahoo.

The new parents also get $500 to spend on housecleaning and other needs, according to the new policy made public Tuesday.
...
Matos's research shows that only 30 percent of U.S. employers offer paid or unpaid maternity leave that is greater than 12 weeks.

Matos also said that 58 percent of employers who provide maternity leave pay new moms for at least some of that time off. Only 14 percent of employers who provide paternity leave pay for some of the dads' time off, according to the Families and Work Institute data.'

AIDS.gov: Alicia Keys introduces new national "Empowered" campaign

Minuteman · 1 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'On April 15 in Washington, D.C, as she introduced EMPOWERED, her new campaign developed as part of the Greater Than AIDS initiative, recording artist Alicia Keys called on the women of America to use their power to help bring an end to AIDS.

“Women and girls have been affected by HIV since the start, but that impact has not been recognized,” Ms. Keys said. “And as the sisters, mothers, daughters, and caregivers, we are the backbones of families, communities, and entire societies. We will never see an AIDS-free generation without harnessing the power and strength of women.”

EMPOWERED is a new, national cross-platform HIV awareness campaign that includes TV, radio, and outdoor and print ads , in addition to digital content and social media. By joining with Greater Than AIDS, Alicia Keys is reaching women in the U.S. in everyday ways—on their computers, on their phones, at bus stops—to make everyday choices that can change the course of this epidemic.
...
Through dialogues about HIV, Alicia Keys CAN help to change the way America thinks about HIV/AIDS. We are EMPOWERED.'

Thai mum jailed for prostituting daughter

Matt · 1 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. And everyone's afraid of what dads'll do to their kids. Anyway, nothing surprises me anymore. Excerpt:

'A Thai prostitute who sold her daughter for sex for seven years, from the age of nine, has become the first person in Australia to be jailed for child trafficking.

In sentencing the 41-year-old woman to nine years' jail, Brisbane Supreme Court Justice David Boddice slammed her behaviour as the "horrendous" exploitation of an innocent child who was simply trying to please her mother.

"This behaviour was particularly shocking, despicable and reprehensible as it was undertaken by a parent for financial profit ... with no regard for common decency," he said.'

SAVE: ‘Point of Parody:’ Six More Editorials Slam Campus Sex Assault Panels

Matt · 1 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / May 1, 2013 – Campus sex assault committees at Swarthmore, Occidental, Brown, and Cornell found themselves at the center of satire and scrutiny this past week as six new editorials probed sex assault complaints at these institutions. SAVE calls on the Department of Education to respond to allegations of civil rights violations arising from a 2011 policy issued by its Office for Civil Rights.

One editorial, “Swarthmore, Occidental, and Their Kangaroo Courts,” documents how Swarthmore College mandates that the accused refrain from any outside discussion of the allegation, thus precluding assistance by a defense attorney. At Swarthmore, “an accused student can be punished even if no charges were filed against him,” thus reaching the “point of parody,” columnist KC Johnson asserts.
...
The six editorials, published during the week of April 21-27, 2013, are listed online (1). To date, over 120 editorials have criticized the DED mandate as an anathema to civil rights. Thirteen national organizations, including the American Association for University Professors, have called for repeal of the federal mandate (2).'

F&F: Disposable Dad

Matt · 1 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to Ned Holstein, MD, MS, Founder and Chair, National Parents Organization, parental alienation is very common. The majority of divorces involve some degree of alienation, where one of the parents makes an effort to cast the other in a bad light. “In most cases, it is mild or intermittent when, in their anger or frustration, they let something slip that they may later regret,” he says.
...
Jones discovered National Parents Organization while he was researching parental alienation on the Internet. When he began to notice that we were making “great progress” getting legislation passed to promote shared parenting (parenting by both parents) in other states, he contacted us to see if we were in the process of changing legislation in Utah.'

College’s husky dog logo promotes rape, says student

Mastodon · 1 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The new logo for the University of Connecticut’s sports teams is a terrifying husky dog that calls to mind images of sexual assault, says one student.

The new logo was unveiled last week, receiving mixed-to-negative reviews from UConn fans who preferred the older, cuter husky dog.

But one student went much further, criticizing the new, meaner logo for being a pro-rape symbol.

In an open letter to UC President Susan Herbst, self-described feminist student Carolyn Luby wrote that the redesigned team logo will intimidate women and empower rape culture.'

Real women don’t need 'feminism'

Mastodon · 1 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Real women don’t need “feminism.”

That’s according to “The Monstrous Regiment of Women,” a Colin Gunn award-winning documentary that undercuts any strength that might be attributed to the feminist worldview.

Notable women’s advocate Phyllis Schlafly of Eagle Forum explains it simply.

“The problem with feminism, I think the principal problem, is the cultivation of an attitude of victimization. Feminism tries to make women believe they are victims of an oppressive, male-dominated, patriarchal society. They wake up in the morning with a chip on their shoulder.”

The DVD soberly and maturely reveals the fallacies in that attitude.

“The Monstrous Regiment of Women” explains that feminists tell women not to submit to a husband, avoid having children, listen to their “inner voice” and chase a career.'

UA Men's Project redefines masculinity, aims to raise awareness of rape culture

Mastodon · 1 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Only one semester old, The Men's Project was developed through the Women's Resource Center by Krista Millay, the program director of the WRC. Millay said she has always wanted to offer a space for men to talk about masculinity and about being a guy at the UA.

...

The Men's Project is run as an internship program that requires ten hours a week from its interns in exchange for three academic credits per semester, Millay said. These hours consist of a team business meeting as well as a critical discussion of current issues within pop culture. The interns also participate in separate projects. In the spring semester, they participated in the planning of Take Back the Night and the development of the curriculum for "The MENS Workshop," a judicial sanction through the Dean of Student's Office.

...

As an undergraduate student, Karaman said he was involved in campus politics and often addressed issues relating to college rape culture and sexual violence. He said when he saw there was an opportunity for this kind of work to take place on the UA campus, he jumped at it.

...

"Our purpose is largely to show that there are men that are actively engaged in trying to change this rape culture," Karaman said. "I want programming to be made available that is proactive rather than reactive."'

Rape Culture: 3 Reasons Most Men Are to Blame For Misogyny

Mastodon · 1 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's men. We are the root of the problem and deserving of the blame.

Though I am sure there are those of us — that poor Ryan Reynolds or Ryan Gosling look-alike — who must dash between campus security lights when exiting the gym in his Under Armour tank top or endure the humiliation of answering why he chose to go out in skinny jeans to a club after being sexually violated by a gang of sorority sisters, those circumstances are quite … rare.

No, it's quite clear fellas that we are the problem. And the problem does not begin and end at rape, but extends to and permeates throughout the entire sphere of gender issues, from domestic violence to gender pay gaps. Misogyny exists because we, men, either push it or allow it.
...
No longer can we just brush off the actions of the offending fellow male as a purely individual, psychological one (based on the notion that he must just be inherently evil and thus nothing could be done on our end anyways), or rue that biology and history conspired to create, somehow independently of us, a patriarchal, misogynist society that is so prevalent it might be fated or so powerful it can't be changed. Men can't just say "well that's that," and dust off our hands and put them back on the video game controller while our daughters, wives, sisters, mothers, and friends continue to get raped, abused, persecuted, and repressed. Humanity cannot afford this type of attitude any longer.'

Police say 28-year-old undergrad threatened herself with rape in Facebook hoax

Mastodon · 1 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A student at the University of Wyoming has been charged with interference with a police investigation after she allegedly posted on an anonymous social media page that she would like to engage in angry sexual intercourse with someone named “Meg Lanker Simons.”

The University of Wyoming Police Department now says the posting was a hoax written by — wait for it — Meghan Lanker-Simons.

The kerfuffle began on April 24 when an anonymous posting was made to a Facebook page called UW Crushes. The page, which has since been removed from Facebook, was a forum for students to confess their desires for each other in secret. (Such pages are common on campuses all over the country.)
...
Lanker-Simons herself also chimed in, saying, “Actually, I want this to stay up. This is disgusting, misogynistic, and apparently something the admins of this page think is a perfectly acceptable sentiment.”
...
One rally organizer, Amy Pauli, alleged that some kind of menacing “rape culture” plagues the University of Wyoming campus.

“It’s not just about the page. It’s about the way rape culture becomes fostered among students,” Paul told KOWB.

Megan Selheim, who is employed by the University of Wyoming as a STOP Violence Coordinator, egged on the protesters.'

Florida: Alimony Reform and Shared Parenting Vetoed

charlie · 1 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Florida Governor Rick Scott has vetoed the alimony reform and shared parenting bill. It was passed by nearly 3/4 of the legislature, and there might be a chance to override his veto. An action plan will be posted shortly by the Florida reform activists. See http://www.floridaalimonyreform.com/ for more information.

The Risks of Failing to Make Court-Ordered Child Support Payments

Matt · 2 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. For "parents", read "fathers". Not saying "Don't have kids." Just saying: "Think hard about this decision. Real hard." Excerpt:

'Child support payments are often one of the more contested aspects of divorce proceedings, and parents can face severe penalties for failing to make court-ordered payments as scheduled.
...
Some of the most common penalties for nonpayment of child support include the following:

- Warrant issued for arrest, which may be criminal or civil
- Finding of contempt of court
- Fines, jail, or both
- Garnishment of wages, including unemployment and worker's compensation
- Denial of tax refunds
- Exclusion from receipt of certain government benefits
- Revocation of passport
- Suspension, revocation or denial of various licenses—professional, driver's, hunting/fishing/boating
- Having a lien placed on property to cover payment

IA heads to New Orleans

Matt · 2 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Intact America is sponsoring a sidewalk demonstration in New Orleans on Saturday, May 4, 2013, at the annual convention of the American Congress of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG)—the largest assemblage of baby-cutters under one roof. During this one-day event, we will be protesting the role of obstetricians in perpetrating circumcision in American hospitals.

Will you join us? The more protesters, the better! We'll supply placards and handouts. Or bring your own posters if you are representing another intactivist organization. RSVP today on Facebook!

WHEN: Saturday, May 4, 2013
TIME: 8:30am–4:30pm
PRESS CONFERENCE: 11 a.m.
WHERE: Ernest N. Morial Convention Center, by the Marriott parking lot on the corner of St. James Street and Convention Blvd. (see map at right)'

SAVE: Earl Silverman is Gone, but His Dream Lives On

Matt · 2 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I am sorry to bring this sad news. The world has lost a dedicated domestic violence victim advocate. Earl Silverman, founder of the Men's Alternative Safe House (MASH) passed away on Friday, April 27.

Earl spent twenty years advocating for male victims. And for the last few years he used his own home in Calgary to shelter men. He did this, he said, because as a prior victim he experienced being turned away by abuse shelters that only take in women.

Earl Silverman simply wanted acknowledgement of male victims of domestic violence, an end to misinformation about DV, and funded abuse shelters for men. He never saw the completion of his dream. But that doesn't mean we never will.

If you live in Canada, consider donating to the Earl Silverman Center. If you live in the US, consider donating to SAVE, because inclusion is very high on our priority list.

Do you work in the domestic violence industry? Do you serve every victim equally, no matter their gender or sexuality? We want to help you accomplish that.

Please visit the Inclusive-VAWA Resource Center: http://www.saveservices.org/inclusive-vawa/resources/

With a heavy heart,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Joe Biden: Women Don’t Report Rapes to Avoid Being ‘Raped Again by the System’

Mastodon · 2 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vice President Joe Biden said Wednesday that the reason many women do not report rapes or domestic abuse is because they are afraid they will be “raped again by the system.”

“Why do you think women who get raped, so many don’t report it? They don’t want to get raped again by the system. They don’t want to be put through what they had to be put through,” he said at an event for the DC Volunteer Lawyers Project at the Four Seasons Hotel in Washington, D.C.

Biden’s remarks came at a benefit for the DC Volunteer Lawyers Project, an organization for which his daughter-in-law Kathleen Biden, wife to Hunter Biden, serves as vice president. Biden thanked attorneys for volunteering their time to help women who are in crisis as well expressed gratitude for those who helped reauthorize the Violence Against Women Act earlier this year.'

Jewish Men Discuss Circumcision - What do they think?

Matt · 2 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(TEL AVIV) - The practice of circumcision is something I've been aware of from a very young age. I grew up in Brooklyn, New York, and my family is Orthodox... Whether it's the Victorian-era doctors, bent on perpetuating their own sexual repression, or during the Maccabean Period where the Jewish priestly ruling class instituted the more severe form of brit milah that is practiced today, which includes brit peri'ah (complete foreskin ablation), we are made to suffer and cause our children to suffer in an endless cycle of trauma. It's high time we stop.
...
“I'm 37, and have been sitting on a mountain of grief and rage for 17 years, since I discovered what was stolen from me while reading a critique of circumcision in a hip, underground, alternative Jewish newspaper I found at a campus Hillel, of all places… In the Torah, God also commands us to stone people to death, burn animal sacrifices, and take slaves from neighboring nations. Jews have given up those unholy practices, why shouldn't we give this one up too? The majority of Swedish Jews are intact, and guess what? They're still Jewish! Judaism, whether a cultural, ethnic, or religious identity, does not require circumcision. Jewishness is solely defined by parental lineage or conversion, not by genital cutting. Today, there are Jewish baby welcoming ceremonies for all genders free from genital cutting…'

French Father on Hunger Strike In Sweden Demanding To See His Daughters

Matt · 2 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From Ulf Andersson of PappaRättsGruppen, translated article here:

'ON March 14, 2013 FELL FROM THE JUDGMENT Hudiksvall DISTRICT COURT: THAT'S MOM TO BE ALONE CUSTODY OF MY FRENCH SWEDISH DAUGHTERS. ON HER EXPRESS REQUEST FURTHER RIGHTS MAY ONLY BE MADE IN SWEDEN. INCREDIBLE AND unacceptable,!

Not once during those three years of legal proceedings, my request for joint custody investigated. Why? In Stockholm had our 2 girls have been able to stay beside her mom and dad, but my suggestion is to move to Stockholm is not even mentioned in the District Court. To top it all banned my 6 and 8 year old French-Swedish girls to ever more come to France, as he is their country as much as Sweden.
...
This hunger strike is neither rashly or irresponsible. Neither of my official requests have been tried (the request to the family returns, requests for dialogue, request that the possibility of joint custody are investigated, request that social survey conducted by a neutral party, requests for similar social studies when the children are in France, appeal ...). This is the only way for me to get our situation known. I see no other way to break the deadlock and get the Joint custody about, as both of our children are entitled.'

Australia: Students at Melbourne university protest over 'sexist' cupcake promotion

Mastodon · 2 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Student Association's Women's Department at Monash University sold the cupcakes as part of a campaign to highlight gender wage differences, charging $1 for men, 80c for women and 60c for transgender students.

A Facebook post calling the stall sexist has received nearly 1,500 likes and attracted more than 900 comments.

Tess Gian posted: "to the 'Women's' stand on Clayton campus selling cupcakes … that is not feminism. that's sexism. You want to demand equality? It goes both ways."

A Monash Student Association public affairs officer, who did not want to be named, said the stall aimed to "raise awareness of the gender pay gaps" that exist in the workplace. It was not sexist but "positive discrimination". reports News.com.au.'

Towson University baseball bailout assailed

Mastodon · 2 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the debate over allocation of state funds to save Towson University sports teams continues, major players in the conversation couldn't help but draw comparisons to this university's experience with financial insecurity and athletic cuts, which didn't see the same state support.

Towson officials based their decision more on Title IX compliance than financial woes, they said. But critics of the decision called into question the fairness of the financial hand Gov. Martin O' Malley extended to the college while offering no such help to this university in 2012, when officials announced they were cutting 7 sports teams to in an attempt to shrink mounting debt. Others pointed out, however, that university President Wallace Loh didn't receive the same amount of backlash at the time, either.

Towson University President Maravene Loeschke received harsh criticism in March over her decision to cut the university's baseball and men's soccer programs and again in April for failing to show up at a meeting with the state's Board of Public Works to explain her decision. State Comptroller Peter Franchot called for her removal, saying she had misled the Towson athletes and "forfeited her claim on moral leadership."'

Female Marine Accused of Falsely Reporting Rape

Mastodon · 2 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

A female Marine who says she was raped by a Marine in her squadron after a night of drinking is being tried at Camp Pendleton by special court martial for adultery, making false statements and impeding an investigation, it was reported Tuesday.

The woman, whose identity was withheld, and her alleged rapist are both staff sergeants who were assigned to Marine Aviation Logistics Squadron 39 at Camp Pendleton in March 2012, when they had sex in a hotel room after several hours of drinking, according to U-T San Diego.
...
"The command does take sexual assault with the utmost gravity, and has decided to pursue this route to ensure that the sexual assault response process remains effective and maintains integrity for victims," a 3rd Marine Aircraft Wing spokesman, 1st Lt. Tyler Balzer, told U-T San Diego.'

Single Motherhood Increases Dramatically For Certain Demographics, Census Bureau Reports

Mastodon · 2 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The rate of single motherhood, which has been steadily increasing since the 1940s, has skyrocketed in recent years, according to a report by the U.S. Census Bureau released on May 1st.

While the birth rate for single women has greatly increased across all demographics -- according to the report, which is based on data from the Census Bureau's American Community Survey, the birth rate for single mothers in 2007 was 80 percent higher than it was in 1980, and 20 percent of that increase happened between 2002 and 2007 -- the numbers are particularly high for recent mothers (mothers who gave birth in the previous 12 months) between age 20 and 24.

In 2011, 62 percent of women between ages 20 and 24 who had recently given birth were unmarried.

Among women ages 35 to 39, the percentage was considerably lower -- 17 percent of women who recently gave birth were unmarried -- but overall, 36 percent of the 4.1 million women who reported they had given birth in the past year were unmarried. That's up from 31 percent in 2005.'

Ireland: Justice chief warns against ‘positive discrimination’

Mastodon · 2 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are no female High Court judges in Northern Ireland, while women are also significantly under represented at county court judge and QC level.

But Lord Chief Justice Sir Declan Morgan, in a rare appearance before Stormont’s Justice Committee, insisted that the principle of merit had to be applied.

...

He also revealed that a bid to attract two members of the public to join the group he established for the very purpose of helping to provide more clarity around sentences had an “embarrassing” outcome, as nobody applied to fill the posts.

...

In regard to the lack of women in top judicial posts, Sir Declan said he was determined to bring about a culture change within the profession to ensure that females were afforded opportunities and helped to reach their full potential.

But the senior judge said giving them preferential treatment in terms of appointments was not the way to do that.

“We cannot use positive discrimination,” he said.

“It would be unlawful for us to do it, and secondly we have to appoint on merit because the statute tells us we have to do that, now somebody could rewrite the statute and the rules could be different.”

The Lord Chief Justice said elements of positive discrimination were in operation in South Africa but warned that they had proved extremely contentious and resulted in dissuading many people from going for jobs.

“That’s the danger we must guard against,” he said.'

NCFM: April "Transitions" available on-line

Matt · 2 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The most recent NCFM "Transitions" newsletter for April 2013 is on-line here.

Suicide Rates Rise Sharply in U.S. - Men commit at over three times the rate as women

Matt · 2 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Suicide rates among middle-aged Americans have risen sharply in the past decade, prompting concern that a generation of baby boomers who have faced years of economic worry and easy access to prescription painkillers may be particularly vulnerable to self-inflicted harm.

More people now die of suicide than in car accidents, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, which published the findings in Friday's issue of its Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report. In 2010 there were 33,687 deaths from motor vehicle crashes and 38,364 suicides.

Suicide has typically been viewed as a problem of teenagers and the elderly, and the surge in suicide rates among middle-aged Americans is surprising.

From 1999 to 2010, the suicide rate among Americans ages 35 to 64 rose by nearly 30 percent, to 17.6 deaths per 100,000 people, up from 13.7. Although suicide rates are growing among both middle-aged men and women, far more men take their own lives. The suicide rate for middle-aged men was 27.3 deaths per 100,000, while for women it was 8.1 deaths per 100,000.'

‘War on women’ could loom large in 2016

Mastodon · 3 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Americans who grew weary of the “war on women” meme in the 2012 election may want to take a deep breath: The issue may loom even larger in 2016, an influential social critic told a Capitol Hill symposium.

The groundwork is already being laid for a resurgence of feminism in America, author and think-tank fellow Kay S. Hymowitz told the “War on Women: Myth or Reality” event, hosted by the Family in America, a quarterly publication of the Howard Center for Family, Religion and Society.
...
This is a “hard-line feminist approach” and it’s been a huge success, said Ms. Hymowitz, senior fellow at the Manhattan Institute, a domestic-policy think tank in New York City, and author of “Manning Up: How the Rise of Women Has Turned Men into Boys.”'

Becoming a Radical Feminist: On Male Violence, Cultural Femicide and Sisterhood

Mastodon · 3 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I have always been a feminist. It is a label I chose for myself as a teenager, back before girl power was invented and when New Kids on the Block were cool. My original feminism was about equality: women were equal to men and all we needed was the laws to force misogynists to stop being misogynists. The older I get, the more I believe that 'equality' is nothing more than a smokescreen to prevent the true liberation of women. ...
...
My feminism, both the definition and activism, has changed dramatically over the past 18 years. Now, I self-define as an anti-capitalist, pro-radical feminist as I believe that the source of women's oppression is male violence which is perpetuated by the structures of our capitalist economy. The Patriarchy may predate capitalism but we cannot destroy it without destroying capitalism too. I don't always feel a 'real feminist' or a 'good enough' feminist. All I know is that I am a feminist who truly believes that women have the power to liberate all women from male violence; that feminism is fundamentally about the power of sisterhood.

My feminist activism involves privileging women's voices over men's voices. I now only read books written by women. I try to get my main news from women's news sites and women journalists like Soraya Chemaly, Samira Ahmed, Bidisha, Helen Lewis, Bim Adewunmi, and Sarah Smith. I follow only women journalists on Twitter and Facebook. I support organisations which are placing women's experiences at the centre of public debate: Women Under Siege, The Everyday Sexism Project, and The Women's Room UK.'

Jewish Anti-Circumcision and Intactivist Ads in Israel

Matt · 3 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Photo 1: "In the natural state, the corona within the foreskin is protected as an internal organ, moist like the eye. In infancy, the foreskin is connected to the organ and protects it. An organ without the foreskin is exposed to infection. THE MOHEL PARES AND REMOVES AROUND 1/3 OF THE SKIN OF THE PENIS!" [Under the picture of the baby] "A majority of the circumcised require corrective surgery to widen the urethral opening under full anesthetic."

"RECOVERY FROM THE CIRCUMCISION WOUND IS SIMILAR IN SEVERITY AND RISKS TO RECOVERY FROM A THRID DEGREE BURN (ORGAN WITHOUT SKIN)."

"Following the removal of the foreskin, the psychology of sexual relations is changed. Sexual intercourse with a foreskin is gentler, more sensitive, and more satisfying."
...
"SOMEONE BORN TO A JEWISH MOTHER IS JEWISH WITH OR WITHOUT A FORESKIN."'

Family Law Reform Advocates Continue to Set Record Straight

Matt · 4 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TALLAHASSEE, Fla., April 29, 2013 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- The Florida Legislature made history on April 18 with the passage of sweeping changes to the state's antiquated alimony laws.

"Opponents to alimony reform are making false claims and using scare tactics to manipulate public perception. Many, if not all of these claims, are coming from the leadership of the Family Section of the Florida Bar, by trying to protect and maintain their perpetual income stream through continued litigation," said Alan Frisher, President of Family Law Reform, Inc.

Myth: The bill doesn't allow a lot of room for judicial discretion.

Fact: The bill removes arbitrary and unbridled discretion by judges. Guidelines are incorporated to allow for consistency and predictability while still allowing for discretion in outlying cases.'

Teacher Has Sex With Student, Shows Up At Prom After-Party

Mastodon · 4 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police in Freeport, Texas say a high school teacher's illicit relationship with a student was brought to light after the teacher showed up at an after-prom party with tattered clothing and no shoes.

Nikki Scherwitz, 25, has been charged with sexual assault of a child and improper relationship between educator and student, WREG reported. She has also quit her position as 10th-grade English teacher at Brazosport High School, KTRK reported. It was her first year on the job.

Investigators say Scherwitz had been involved with the 16-year-old for several weeks.'

Teacher Charged With Raping Male Student In New Mexico Classroom

Mastodon · 4 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A New Mexico high school teacher is accused of raping one of her male students in a classroom.

Jennifer Vigil, 31, was arrested on Tuesday after a student reported her for allegedly pressuring him into sex -- in her classroom -- at Pojoaque Valley High School in Santa Fe, according to the Albuquerque Journal.

Vigil maintains that the sex was consensual, but the student reportedly told police that the idea of sex with her was "disgusting." The unidentified minor took a picture of one sex act on his cellphone, and said that he only consented to sex because Vigil locked the doors and propositioned him, police said.

Vigil is suspected of having sex with the male horticulture student on two separate occasions. The teen reported that on the first occasion, he was turning in an assignment after school when Vigil said, "You're not leaving until I get something from you," KRQE reports. The student claims he refused her advances but then later agreed to a sexual act so that he could leave.'

Child support dispute ends with firebomb attack

Matt · 4 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 32-year-old man is recovering from burns after an attack last week in Gadsden.

According to police, the man got into an argument with a 26-year-old woman about child support payments last Tuesday. The man told police that the woman threw a potato chip bag full of gasoline at him, then tried to light him on fire. The man was able to use a garden hose to put out the flames. Police said the investigation is ongoing, and no arrests have been made at this point.'

Woman seeks changes to family law process

Matt · 4 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ms. MacDonald was delighted when Oshawa City council proclaimed Thursday, April 25, Parent Alienation Awareness Day. She's hoping to raise awareness about the need for reform to the Divorce Act, and the family law process.

...

It was later in life, when she became involved with a man in the midst of a bitterly contested divorce, that she became aware of just how messy the process can be. She said she watched as the former husband and wife battled, often using their children to further their agendas.

The protracted battle resulted in police involvement, broken-hearted children, and sky-high legal bills, she said. Unable to reach agreement on the most fundamental aspects of child-rearing, they depended on the courts to resolve such matters.

...

"Our court system is so outdated and broken it actually facilitates this kind of situation," she said. "Healthy parents don't need to go to court to be told how to raise their children."

She wants to see legislative changes that would require divorcing couples to agree to equal, shared parenting arrangements, and attend mandatory mediation sessions to work issues through.'

An Epidemic of Prosecutorial Abuse?

Matt · 4 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Has prosecutorial abuse reached epidemic proportions in cases involving allegations of sexual assault or domestic violence? A new white paper put out by Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (S.A.V.E.) persuasively argues that we are dangerously close to exactly that state of affairs.

...

First, recall that the role played by district attorneys and their assistants in the judicial system is not the same as that of other attorneys. Because they wield the awesome power of the state, prosecutors are ethically bound to evaluate cases based on probable cause. If there's not enough evidence to win a conviction, a prosecutor is ethically required to refrain from bringing charges. That's because, once charged, the power of the state and the likely impecunious state of the defendant make it all too easy for the latter to end up in prison regardless of his guilt or innocence. So the American Bar Association's very first ethical rule for prosecutors requires them to refrain from charging a person without probable cause.

...

Not so with allegations of sexual assault. In those cases, no corroboration is necessary; the say-so of the woman is enough to send a man to prison for life. So it's no surprise that one study found that a whopping 15% of convictions in sex cases were proven wrong by post-conviction DNA testing. And, as the SAVE paper accurately shows, that figure actually underestimates the true false conviction rate. That's because DNA evidence connects the accused to the complainant in cases of consensual as well as nonconsensual sex.'

Lies, Damn Lies, and Rape Statistics

Matt · 4 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Brown is in the midst of a pandemic. All across America, colleges are cesspools of forcible sex crimes, including rape, which make the college campus one of the most dangerous places for women. According to many activists and politicians, one in every four women will experience rape or attempted rape in their college career.
...
So why is no one talking about this widespread issue? One reason is that it is not widespread. The campus rape pandemic seems to be a theory based upon poor survey methodology and repeated lies.
...
When held up to such scrutiny, Koss's survey holds as much water as a sieve. If one looks at the actual numbers for sexual assault on college campuses, her results seem almost laughable.

Thanks to the Clery Act, universities in America make public all reported campus crimes. This allows anyone to look at every instance of reported crimes on the campus and, in particular, all incidents of sexual violence. I decided to take a look at the reported violent sexual crimes for Brown, and fortunately for women but perhaps disappointing for feminists, the result came nowhere near Koss's figures. For the past three years, the average number of reported forcible sex offenses (which range from groping of private parts to penetration) was 8.66. The number varied from as low as seven to as high as 10. With an estimated 3,141 female undergraduates, 0.28 percent are victims of reported sexual violence each year. This is inconsistent with the one in four statistic, but on par with the national average.'

Shanghai's only all-boys classes to double enrollment

Matt · 4 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The operator of Shanghai's first all-boys classes plans to expand enrollment for the new semester as one of its founders hailed the once-controversial program a success.

After eight months of operation, Shanghai No 8 High School gained approval from parents for the two boys-only classes and plans to double enrollment to 120 students for the semester starting in September.

The classes are a pilot program of the Huangpu district education bureau and East China Normal University, as they attempt to address the tendency of boys to be outperformed and overshadowed by girls in school.

On Wednesday, more than 200 parents and their children showed up at a consultation meeting for enrollment at the school, and they crowded into an auditorium. Many brought application materials and all kinds of certificates with the hope of getting their boys into the program.'

Anti-circumcision activists coming to NOLA want doctors to put down the knife

Mastodon · 4 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The American Congress of Obstetricians and Gynecologists meets in New Orleans starting this weekend and a group against circumcising baby boys is setting up a demonstration outside the Morial Convention Center.

Intact America wants the practice stopped in the U.S. and they're using a rolling billboard and protest Saturday to make that point in the CBD.

The ob-gyn group already says doctor's should not routinely recommend circumcision to parents, but protesters want to make their point to what they call "the largest assemblage of baby-cutters under one roof."

I asked local folks which side they're taking in this ongoing debate. "Well, my children had it done and I thought it was a good thing. And I think they can clean theirself better with it."

Others, mainly women, agreed that cleanliness was definitely an issue with uncircumcised males.

And the reaction most men had to Intact America's recommendation that the decision should be left up to the male to decide when he's an adult, "I think it would be rather painful," one man snorted. Other's made the observation that most men would never get circumcised as an adult given a choice, due to the above-referenced pain issue.'

Rule allowing boys to play on girls' teams challenged

Mastodon · 4 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A dispute around a decades-old law that allows boys to play on girls high school sports teams appears to be headed to court.

Attorneys representing the Pennsylvania Interscholastic Athletic Association — which says it would like to see the law changed to make sure girls do not lose athletic opportunities and for safety reasons — and state Attorney General Kathleen Kane's office met Friday afternoon in Commonwealth Court.

"It looks like we are headed toward an evidentiary hearing of some sort," said Pittsburgh attorney Mary Grenen, following the status conference between the two sides. Grenen is a potential intervenor in the case on behalf of her daughter, a Fox Chapel field hockey player.'

The Decline of Males: A Matter of Public Policy

Matt · 4 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The question is one of the most important the country faces: “Why the decline of men?” It’s not only important because males make up almost half the population of the country, although surely that’s enough. The question begs an answer because to ask it is to force us to confront the realities of U.S. public policy since roughly the end of the War in Viet Nam. When we do that, certain themes appear each tied together by a single thread. That thread is a disregard for the well-being of boys and men. Put simply, the decline of men and boys is a matter – and a result - of public policy.

...

Autor touches on three public policies that have negatively impacted men and boys: free trade policies, zero tolerance and mandatory sentencing for criminal behavior, and single motherhood. He knows these things exist and limit men’s educational and economic options, but, with the exception of single motherhood, he somehow fails to grasp the fact that these are policies aimed directly at men.

...

For example, in 1993, 84.4% of custodial parents were mothers; in 2009, it was 83.7% according to the U.S. Census Bureau. And much persuasive research shows that non-custodial parents of both sexes tend over time to become non-parents, either absent altogether or of limited authority to their children. That’s because the standard visitation order given such parents allows them access to their children between 13% and 20% of the time, i.e. not enough to maintain a true parent-child relationship. Plus, even that meager visitation is routinely denied or limited by the custodial mother and her violation of the court’s order is rarely punished in any way.

...

These three major public policy choices over the past forty years or so go a long way to explaining Autor’s question about why men and boys are behaving differently in this economy than are women and girls. Put simply, males have been the targets of those policies and it should come as no surprise that men are reeling from the one- two- three-punch.'

As Colleges are Feminized, Degrees Lose Value

Matt · 4 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One fact that is rarely mentioned in the US press is that in developed countries, the prevalence of college degree holders has little correlation with economic output. Russia, for example, has the highest percentage of college degree holders on earth, while Germany has far fewer than the OECD average.

...

If you take a look at a typical university classroom, it's pretty clear why this is happening. Colleges are becoming finishing schools that teach little more than politically correct etiquette to their mainly female students. They are also a form of welfare for career students, AKA professors, many of whom couldn't teach a job skill that didn't require begging for federal grants.

For those who attend Ivy League schools such as Harvard or Princeton the degree is probably still worth it, but these are effectively gated communities; middle and working class white boys not wanted (but they'll take their sisters if they are hot).

...

For a bright and competent but not exceptional young man a technical education is a perfectly good start in life. If he wants to finish a four-year degree later, it won't be very hard, and he can start making decent money early on. The same applies to young women, and an extra bonus for them is that without having some of the wrong-headed ideas shoved down their throats at universities they might be more satisfied with a normal life and make better, more practical decisions.

...

I suppose there's one thing to be said for a college education, and that is that it helps students acquire a well-rounded base of knowledge. However, I'm afraid that with the replacement of classical education with politically correct garbage that doesn't apply any longer. Maybe at some point in the future we can rebuild schools that teach wisdom and the classics, but the most urgent matter is helping our sons live productive lives rather than turning them loose in a world that prefers to take advantage of them, so for now it's probably best to counsel most of them to learn a trade before completing a four-year degree.'

Over 90% of Workplace Fatalities Are Males in Minnesota

charlie · 5 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Why men earn more: the cost. From the Minnesota workplace safety report (.pdf) for 2010: Men accounted for 91 percent of fatally injured workers in 2010 and for 92 percent of the fatalities from 2003 through 2010. The percentage of men among fatally-injured workers remains at 92 percent for 2003 through 2010 even after excluding fatalities to farmers and ranchers, who accounted for 71 percent of fatalities to self-employed workers.

Athletes devastated after men's track and X-country programs are dropped

Mastodon · 5 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Coastal Carolina men's track and field coach Jeff Jacobs said his students were "absolutely devastated" when they heard the news that the program along with the men's cross country team will be dropped following the 2013-14 season. Jacobs offered details to the announcement that was released to the media on Thursday at 6:00 pm.

Title IX requires that the gender ratio of an institution's athletic programs reflect that of its student body. The total female/male student population at CCU is 54 percent female to 46 percent male. CCU introduced Women's Lacrosse as an NCAA sport in 2013, which added 25 female student-athletes and demonstrated a continual expansion of athletic opportunity for the underrepresented sex.
...
For total Title IX compliance, further steps were necessary. Approximately 50 student-athletes participate in the men's cross country/track and field programs annually. Discontinuation of the program will ultimately help Coastal reach full Title IX compliance.'

Michigan woman accused of faking rape now facing fraud charges

Mastodon · 6 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DETROIT – A Michigan woman whose alleged trail of lies led to the release of a man convicted of raping her was charged Monday with fraud after investigators said she tricked an insurance company and sympathetic supporters into believing she had cancer.

It was Sara Ylen's second criminal case in just a few days. The 38-year-old Lexington resident also is charged with filing a false report of rape in September.

Besides those cases, Ylen was involved in the prosecution of James Grissom, who was convicted of raping her in a parking lot, despite no physical evidence. A judge threw out the conviction after authorities learned she had made up sexual-assault allegations in California, information that wasn't available to the defense at the 2003 trial.'

'Sexism and the Single Murderess'

Mastodon · 6 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Knox and Arias aren't just women accused of murder. They're minxes accused of murder, sitting in their courtroom seats with scarlet letters emblazoned on their chests, no jury needed to pronounce them guilty of wantonness at the very least. For men, lust is a tripwire. For women, it's a noose.

I've heard quite a bit lately about David Petraeus's road to redemption. I've heard less about Paula Broadwell's. Yes, he's the more public figure, but the disparity also reflects the way their affair was often portrayed in the first place. He strayed; she preyed. He was weak; she was wily. He was the fly, she the spider.

Let's bring a few other recent news stories into this. Let's indulge in a few hypotheticals.'

Jodi Arias trial: Accused murderer raising money for domestic violence victims with 'Survivor' T-shirts while jury deliberates

Mastodon · 6 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While Arizona jurors mull her fate, accused murderer Jodi Arias is raising money for victims of domestic violence from behind bars.

Arias is selling T-shirts on her website, jodiarias.com, with proceeds going to the Long Beach Women's Shelter and the non-profit organization Reach Beyond Domestic Violence.
...
"Please join me in the efforts to support other survivors of domestic violence," Arias wrote Sunday in a Twitter account maintained by a friend.

Arias is accused of repeatedly stabbing former boyfriend Travis Alexander, slitting his throat and shooting him in the head in 2008 in Mesa, Ariz.'

Blogger Finds Jodi Arias Sympathetic Because She Only Murdered A MAN – Sexist or Stupid?

Mastodon · 6 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What will the people out there in cyberspace who thirst for her blood do if she's actually allowed to live? Or, Heaven forbid, if she's allowed to serve a less than lengthy prison sentence and eventually walk free. Won't the Universe implode?

Of course not. However, the latest buzz does seem to indicate that the hapless Arias may yet have a chance at life.

It is interesting and sad that this woman is, in the minds of most members of the public, already strapped to a gurney with a lethal needle in her arm–or whatever they use for execution in Arizona. It is ironic, ultimately unfathomable, and downright disgraceful that the sheer intensity of the hatred leveled at Arias exceeds the anger aimed at some of the past's most notorious rapists, child molesters, and serial killers–including but not limited to Dahmer, Gacy, Ridgeway, Rader, Ramirez, Berkowitz, Buono, and Bianchi. Of all these evil men, only John Wayne Gacy was executed. Jeffrey Dahmer was stabbed to death in prison. Good riddance. Ditto for Buono who died in prison of natural causes. The others are still enjoying the hospitality of the penal systems of their respective states–a great waste of taxpayers' money'

'Seeking Asian Female' Film Exposes Men With 'Yellow Fever'

mens_issues · 6 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

A politically correct article by ABCNews.com that assumes that men seeking Asian women have are showing "power, dominance and white privilege" and want a "submissive" wife. Gee, could there be other reasons? Excerpt:

'All her life Debbie Lum, a second-generation Chinese-American filmmaker, has been hounded by men with "yellow fever" -- usually, but not always, white men with a fetish for Asian women.
...
In her first feature-length film, "Seeking Asian Female," which airs tonight at 10 p.m. ET on PBS's "Independent Lens," Lum gets drawn into the complicated relationship of a 60-year-old white man and his 30-year-old mail-order bride.
...
"He was my favorite character -- he had no verbal filter," said Lum. "He was basically an open book and would say the things I suspected men were thinking but had the self-consciousness not to share. He gave me incredible insight into what men were thinking. About Asian women, but it was more than that, I was drawn to his complexity as a character.
...
Men who have fetishes for Asian women send an "underlying message about power, dominance and white privilege," said Saedi.'

SAVE E-lert: Who Doesn't Like a Party? Join Us as We Celebrate in June

Matt · 7 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

So, there might not be fireworks and noisemakers... But our June conference is sure to be a blast!

This year's theme is "Celebrating Our Progress!" Join us, so we can congratulate you on a job well done.

Learn about the history of the abuse shelter movement from the founder herself, Erin Pizzey. And hear insider information from Kathy King, a former magistrate in Ohio.

We'll also hear from persons who have been falsely accused. And we'll get helpful tips from advocates and attorneys.

Dinner Friday and lunch Saturday are included.

Visit the SAVE website for the schedule and info on local lodging: http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp/annual-conference-2013/. Visit eventbrite to register online: http://celebratingourprogress.eventbrite.com/

I'll see you there!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Parents: Teacher forced son to lick drawing on desk

Mastodon · 7 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TROY -- The parents of a Troy 5th grader were shocked when their son told them his teacher told him to lick his desk clean after he was caught drawing on it in February. Since then his parents said they've attempted to go through proper channels within the district to get the teacher reprimanded, but were unsuccessful.

"I said 'we can end all this by her going in front of the class with my son and apologizing for her actions' he [the principal] says' that would be a directive. I cannot give a directive and it wouldn't be sincere' and I said 'is that all you're going to do?' and he said 'well basically we've handled it, it's confidential'. Point blank," said George Spencer, the boy's father.

The Spencer's had their son transferred to another class, but say he is struggling with the transition, especially in math. The problems also worsened after they allege the teacher asked the students in his old class not to speak to their son. They said the principal stepped in and spoke to the class at the parent's request, but the parents wanted action taken against the teacher for the original incident.'

Danny Brown: Unsolicited Oral Sex On Rapper Was Rape

Mastodon · 7 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you're not tuned in to #raptwitter, you may have missed rapper Danny Brown's on-stage forced oral sex during a recent show in Minneapolis.

You may also have missed the news because no one, other than Brown's opening act and protege Kitty Pryde, is calling what happened forced oral sex, or what it really should be called — rape.

Vanessa Quilantan, a columnist at the Dallas Observer's DC9 At Night music blog has determined, even though she wasn't at the concert in Minneapolis, that there's no way that Danny Brown's on-stage sexual assault wasn't consensual, and her reasoning is exactly why men don't report their sexual assaults — because the media, police, and the people in their lives don't believe them.
...
Because he didn't ask for it. He didn't say yes. He didn't consent to having a fan jump out of the crowd, pull his penis from his pants, and begin performing oral sex. I live in Texas, and wondered exactly what the wording of the sexual assault statute was. Sure enough, Section 22.011 of the Texas Penal Code defines this exact act as forcible sexual assault:

§ 22.011. SEXUAL ASSAULT. (a) A person commits an offense if the person:

...
(C) causes the sexual organ of another person, without that person's consent, to contact or penetrate the mouth, anus, or sexual organ of another person, including the actor.'

The other gender divide: where men are losing out

Mastodon · 7 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's difficult to deny that women suffer more than men as a result of their gender, and highlighting the myriad ways in which this happens is one of the cornerstones of modern feminism – which is currently enjoying a revival in the UK and elsewhere.

But justice isn't a relative concept. If it were, we could suggest we should care less about racism against black people just because Asian people in this country are more likely to be victims of racially-motivated hate crime.

Obviously that's nonsense. But so might be ignoring issues that affect men more severely than women just because women, overall, have it worse.

Delving into the data reveals a surprising array of areas in which men might have the hardest time. Here's six worth thinking about:
...
The home has long been the focus of feminist analysis as a realm in which men are able to exert their power over women. That may be true, but the statistics on domestic abuse in marriages may well challenge your assumptions. 3.4% of married women reported a case of domestic abuse over the past year. The proportion of men? 3.4%.'

Sweden: Women suspected of child abuse

Matt · 7 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'KRISTIANSTAD. A 62-year-old lady from Kristianstad has been charged with two counts of assault. One time it was a four-year boy who fell victim to the lady's kind.

It was during the Valentine's Day earlier this year that the beating should have taken place.

In the middle of central Kristianstad, on Kanalgatan struck the 62-year-old woman the four-year boy several times in the head.

The boy was hurt after hit and he also got a blush on the cheek.

While battered woman is another woman who was with.'

SAVE: Ethics Board Issues Rebuke of Hancock Co. Prosecutor Mary Kellett

Matt · 7 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / May 7, 2013 – A state ethics board has issued a report concluding Hancock County prosecutor Mary N. Kellett engaged in multiple counts of prosecutorial misconduct arising from a 2009 assault trial. The ethical violations include ignoring a court order, misleading members of a jury, evidence suppression, and indulging in “conduct unworthy of an attorney.”

The Board of Overseers of the Bar report petitions the Maine Supreme Judicial Board to impose “appropriate disciplinary sanction” on assistant district attorney Kellett.

The Board report, issued April 24, 2013, documents how Kellett engaged in a series of maneuvers designed to withhold exculpatory documents that would have demonstrated the innocence of Vladek Filler, charged in 2007 on five counts of spousal sexual assault.'

Male Teachers Get Longer Sentences For Sexually Abusing Students Than Female Teachers

Mastodon · 8 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Star-Ledger investigation has found that male teachers receive harsher punishments than female teachers when they are convicted of crimes involving sexual relationships with students. Experts credit the disparity to societal perceptions that young girls must be protected and are much more vulnerable than their underage male counterparts.

The sample, which followed cases in New Jersey, found that 54 percent of male defendants went to prison, while only 44 percent of women did time after they were found to have conducted inappropriate sexual activities. The longest jail term for a male teacher was 10 years, compared with 7 for a female. Interestingly, that 7 year sentence was the result of a female coach having relations with a female player.

"There's a general societal disposition that does continue to treat women as the gentler sex, so typically the threshold for sending women to prison is higher," Martin Horn, director of the New York State Sentencing Commission and a professor at the John Jay College of Criminal Justice, told the Star-Ledger.'

Covenants without Circumcision in the Jewish Reform Movement

Matt · 8 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(TEL AVIV) - Many Rabbis are welcoming intact males into the Jewish community, and a growing number of Rabbis feel that surgical circumcision is no longer appropriate in the 21st century. In Europe, 200 years ago, influential Rabbis in the early Reform movement of Judaism began writing in private correspondences that Jews should abolish circumcision surgery. This movement first became well-popularized in the mid 70's when some of the first Rabbis and celebrans in American began doing them for Jewish parents and sons. Today, almost 200 Rabbis perform Jewish covenant rituals without surgical circumcision, and many more will do so upon request. These include Rabbis in the Reform, Conservative, Reconstructionist, Renewal, Humanistic, and many other branches of Judaism. Keeping a Jewish son intact is no longer a marginal phenomenon. One list of these celebrants has gotten so large that Jewish parents, who choose not to circumcise their son, can find a Rabbi almost anywhere in the United States who will do a symbolic covenant ceremony. This list contains a number of Rabbis with intact grandchildren for whom they have held these kind welcoming ceremonies and blessings.

Groups of Jews who chose to keep their sons intact are starting up in the United States, Israel, and elsewhere. Both Reform Judaism and Humanistic Judaism formally welcome intact Jewish males. Many feel that if true Jewish morals were adhered to, circumcision surgery would be impossible.'

Exonerated Coach Dismissed

charlie · 8 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Hoffner was charged with possession of child pornography in August after school officials found videos of his naked children on his work-issued cellphone, which he had turned in to be repaired. A judge cleared him in November, ruling that the short videos of his children acting silly after a bath were not child porn and showed nothing illegal.

After the criminal case was dismissed, university officials removed Hoffner as head football coach, reassigned him to an administrative role, as assistant athletic director for facilities development, and suspended him for 20 days for an unspecified reason. He tried to fight his reassignment and suspension though his union, the Inter Faculty Organization, which represents faculty in the Minnesota State Colleges and Universities system.
...
The MnSCU system has a policy prohibiting the use of university-issued cellphones or mobile devices for personal business.

On Friday, the judge ruled that the investigative file in his criminal case should remain sealed, citing his family's right to privacy. Some news organizations had sought access to the file. But Blue Earth County District Judge Krista Jass wrote that because she had already found insufficient evidence of any harm to the family, their right to privacy outweighed the rights of the media to see the material.'

Pro Football Player Suing Former Fiancee over 10-Carat Engagement Ring

Mastodon · 8 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Buffalo Bills defensive end Mario Williams may be entering the second year of a six-year, $96 million contract, but right now, he's much more worried about $785,000.

According to The Buffalo News' Dan Herbeck, Williams has filed a lawsuit against his ex-fiancée, Erin Marzouki, in Houston's Harris County Court to obtain a 10-carat engagement ring he gave her in a proposal.

Williams alleges in his lawsuit that Marzouki never wanted to marry him and only used him for his money.
...
The lawsuit also alleges that there was an agreement in place that if the engagement were called off, she would return the ring. Marzouki reportedly called off the engagement in January after receiving the ring in February 2012.

From a legal standpoint, Texas is a no-fault state for gifts, which engagement rings falls under. That means the person giving the ring is legally allowed to ask for its return “on breach of the marriage engagement by the donee,” per Herbeck. Thus, Williams' lawyers noted that the Bills defensive end has a "right to recovery" in regards to the expensive piece of jewelry.'

High School Announces 100% College Placement of Boys

Mastodon · 8 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys' education is becoming a hot-button issue for modern education institutions in America as educators see disturbing trends. Across all demographics of ethnicity, socio-economic status, and age group, boys consistently underperform in school relative to girls. Overall, boys account for 90% of disciplinary referrals, 70% of failing grades, and they make up 44% of higher education attendees (male to female ratio in the US is 51:49). However, while the debate rages on for how to address the issue of educating and engaging young men more effectively, Grand River Academy seems to have the formula pretty well figured out.

Grand River Academy has been educating high school boys since 1831, emphasizing not only academics, but social development and an active lifestyle. For many struggling teenagers, Grand River has been a saving grace. It is common to hear that boys who enroll at GRA fared poorly in the public school system. Maybe they stopped caring about classes or had trouble paying attention. Maybe they were often in trouble with school administrators and staff. Maybe a student was on the brink of failing multiple classes. However, after starting at GRA, they become attentive, eager learners. Parents often tell stories of how frustrated they were that their brilliant sons just wouldn't put effort into their education, and even graduating high school seemed to be out of reach, let alone being accepted into college. However, after they started GRA classes, the problems disappeared. For this reason, some have referred to GRA as a "solution school" for boys' education.'

Jury finds Jodi Arias guilty of murder

Matt · 8 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) - After months of twists and turns in a dramatic trial rife with sex, lies and digital images, an Arizona jury Wednesday found Jodi Arias guilty of first-degree murder in the slaying of ex-boyfriend Travis Alexander.

Jurors will return to court Thursday for the aggravation phase of the trial -- an important step in the next key decision they face: determining whether Arias lives or dies.

"Now the odds, I think, shift somewhat in her favor, because it's a very different thing to sentence someone to die than to convict them," CNN senior legal analyst Jeffery Toobin said.

After the verdict was announced, Arias said that for her, the worst possible outcome in the case would be a life sentence.'

UK: Is 'lad culture' causing a surge in student feminist societies?

Mastodon · 9 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The feminist label still sits uncomfortably with some, particularly those who feel as if men are being demonised by feminists on campus. Katie, a third-year student at Cambridge University recalls a Reclaim the Night march last year, organised by the women's campaign at the university, where she was asked to hold a banner that read "Men beat eggs not women."

"I refused. It [the march] was meant to be about keeping everyone safe but it was turned into something rather different. A couple of my male friends came onto the march and were disgusted by it."

"I like that we have women's officers, they fight for good things, but they often fight in such a way that alienates those they seek to represent. Being a feminist should be something you can say with pride; I don't feel like it is a lot of the time."'

Uganda: Push to cut off foreskins winning as Thyolo youth lead in voluntary circumcision

Mastodon · 9 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

HYOLO (Mana) -- Over 3,400 youths in Thyolo have been circumcised and many more are still dropping in for Voluntary Male Medical Circumcision (VMMC).

Thyolo District Youth Officer, Doreen Mbendera, told the Malawi News Agency (Mana) that many youths have the strongest motivation of HIV prevention and are also encouraged by their culture to circumcise.

“Already, Thyolo is a circumcision district and many youths were encouraged by the messages which are being transmitted. Being a vibrant group that is sexually active, they were motivated by the benefits.

“And in some cases, some males openly said they went for circumcision after being motivated by girls who refused to date them. I believe girls can also help in motivating boys if they understand what they can benefit like issues relating to minimized risk of cervical cancer,” said Mbendera.

Mbendera said girls who are sexually active seem to have a sense of security if their partners are circumcised.'

Anna Louise Inn intends to operate as women-only facility

Mastodon · 9 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The owners of the Anna Louise Inn told federal officials several times in the past three years that they intend to run a women-only facility after renovating the inn with tax dollars, even though fair housing laws generally forbid excluding one gender.

At the same time, the owners did not publicly disclose that the inn might have to allow men for the first time in more than a century if they failed to get an exemption from fair housing laws.

Those findings, based on an Enquirer review of public records, come less than a month after Western & Southern Financial Group accused the city and the inn's owners of lying about the planned $13 million renovation of the historic property.'

UK: Will Quotas Help More Women Enter the Construction Industry?

Mastodon · 9 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I was interested, but not surprised, to read a recent report produced by CareerStructure.com into female employment within the construction sector. They found, for over half of the built environment professionals surveyed, that less than 10% of their team are currently female. This is yet another confirmation that the construction industry still has a long way to go before proving its credentials in equality.

The concern of the 400+ construction professionals surveyed is so great that more than half of them believe that a quota should be introduced to ensure that companies within the industry do employ a certain number of women in their workforce, never mind at board level. The use of quotas is backed by extensive research into gender imbalanced teams, which reinforce the importance of having a diverse work force of both men and women. In addition, where women are employed in the construction sector, they tend to have HR, Marketing, Admin and occasionally Finance roles.

Despite the concerns over the lack of women in construction, only 26% believed there was no barrier to entry for women seeking a career in the sector. Having worked in primarily male dominated sectors for most of my career, first as a research chemist and then entering construction, I personally have never regarded gender as a barrier to career progression and neither did Margaret Thatcher! In fact there have been many plusses to being female. Bright colours do make you stand out from the dark-suited crowd!'

UN chief wants better health of women, children

Mastodon · 9 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'United Nations: UN Secretary-General Ban Ki-moon Tuesday called for global efforts to improve the health of women and children.

Speaking at a meeting of the Every Woman Every Child movement here, Ban stressed the importance of mobilizing and intensifying action around the world to tackle the global challenge, reported Xinhua.
"In the 21st century, no institution can solve global challenges on its own," Ban said.

"There is no monopoly on good ideas. That is why I believe so deeply in partnerships -- strategic partnerships."

Working with leaders from governments, multilateral organizations, the private sector and civil society, the Every Woman Every Child movement, spearheaded by the secretary-general, aims to save the lives of 16 million women and children and improve the lives of millions more.'

Ireland: Campaign to highlight how verbal abuse hurts women

Mastodon · 9 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A campaign that aims to raise awareness of the insidious effect of verbal abuse on women.

'Killing Me Softly With His Words' was launched by domestic violence charity Sonas with the message that verbal abuse destroys lives.

"Words can and do wound," said charity chief executive Fiona Ryan who was joined by 2FM DJ Ruth Scott and fashion blogger Suzanne Jackson.

"The campaign shows how verbal abuse can be so psychologically and emotionally damaging that it can undermine a woman's self-belief, self-respect and self-image," she added.'

'A burgeoning men's rights movement in British universities? Lads, you cannot be serious'

Mastodon · 9 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

It is official: men are an oppressed minority these days. Despite an entire human history's-worth of cultural dominance, in the few short generations since women got the vote, feminism has spoiled it for everyone, and women have full, unnatural dominance.

You don't believe me? Consider this: who dies more often in wars, men or women? Which sex has the shorter life expectancy? Who has to make all the alimony payments? And who, most of all, has to leave a sinking cruise ship in last place? If you answered 'men' (poor, browbeaten men) to all of these, you'd be right, though these examples only scratch the surface of the systemic inequities men are forced to face each and every day.

There's the pressure of having to pay for the bill on a date, more often than not, and that of having to conform to that terrible Hollywood stereotype of having, like, big pectoral muscles and things. Feminism has inculcated a crisis in masculinity.'

Can women teach men about fatherhood? Oprah and Iyanla seem to think so

Mastodon · 9 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Whenever I hear women say they do not need a man to help raise children, it makes me cringe and think what a selfish statement that is. You may not need a man, but your child does.

So Oprah may want to get some strong, positive male role models to participate this particular class on fatherhood, for try as we might, we women do not understand what it is to be male. It's like speaking to women and girls about empowerment, life choices, self-esteem, self-confidence, growing older, menopause, being all we can be as women—only to have men towering over us to teach us how to be our best selves.

They [sic] are things that a mother will never be able to teach her son, and there are things a dad will not be able to teach his daughters.'

NPO: Florida Governor Vetoes Shared Parenting

Matt · 9 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of all the problems for children I have heard, I have never heard of one that stemmed from two fit parents spending too much time with their children. Last week, May 1st, 2013, Governor Rick Scott of Florida became the first governor to veto legislation (SB718/HB231) that would have provided children equal access to two fit parents. The Florida House passed the legislation in a bi-partisan vote of 85 to 31. The Florida Senate passed it 29-11.
...
The individual horrors for Florida's children will continue, as will the burden upon Florida's taxpayers. But, at least the Family Section of the Florida Bar — that is, the divorce attorneys — got what they wanted. I'll say it again, 85-31 and 29-11. With this vote, Governor Scott marked his opposition to two parents.'

SAVE E-lert: Let's Make Sure Mary N. Kellett Sees Justice

Matt · 9 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

In 2011, SAVE filed a 9-page ethics complaint with the Maine Board of Overseers of the Bar alleging numerous instances of prosecutor misconduct by Hancock County prosecutor Mary N. Kellett.

Now, the state ethics board has issued a report concluding that Kellett did, in fact, engage in multiple counts of prosecutorial misconduct arising from the 2009 assault trial of Vladel Filler.

The ethical violations include ignoring a court order, misleading members of a jury, evidence suppression, and indulging in "conduct unworthy of an attorney."

The report petitions the Maine Supreme Judicial Board to impose "appropriate disciplinary sanction" on assistant district attorney Kellett. We agree, and we bet you do too.

For Vladek, and for every person falsely accused, please call the Maine Supreme Judicial Court. Tell them that you want to make sure that justice is done with Kellett.

Maine Supreme Judicial Court: (207) 822-4146

Let's do our part to restore prosecutor integrity.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Symantec, O2 still censoring/defaming MHRA sites

Matt · 9 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In case you weren't aware, Symantec and UK telecoms company O2 are currently still blocking men's human rights sites and labelling them as "hate sites". Previous reports of the cessation of such disgraceful behaviour were based on an erroneous article at The Register and the truth of the matter is that at no time were any of the sites in question unblocked.

It's not just A Voice for Men that is smeared in this way by these companies, even completely uncontroversial resources have been defamed too. Symantec believes that the equal Justice Foundation's dvmen.org site to be hateful, yet all they do is help male victims of domestic abuse. Sites wanting separated dads to have a relationship with their kids are also classed in this ridiculous way, and if you're dedicated to nothing more than drawing attention to the plight of male victims of rape and sexual abuse then even that's "hate" too.

Longevity is no barrier to Symantec denying your site traffic, with The National Coalition for Men subject to the hate smear. Nationality nor language offer much protection either, with UK, Canadian, Irish, Swiss, Portuguese, German sites suffering this most terrible mis-categorisation. In total I've discovered over 80 men's human rights sites which are being defamed and censored, this constitutes a substantial portion of our movement.'

Woman Gets Four Years for Killing Boyfriend

charlie · 10 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A typical female murderer sentencing discount story. Four years for murdering her boyfriend. Excerpt:

'A St. Paul woman was sentenced Thursday to a little over four years in prison for running over and killing her boyfriend on the East Side of St. Paul in late January.
...
“This was a tragic accident,” Anderson said. “Mark was someone she was in love with.”

Anderson said the two were engaged. He argued that Garcia suffers from neurological damage and cognitive problems even while sober and that the night of Urang’s death those problems were compounded by alcohol.

The charges filed against Garcia gave a less forgiving picture of that night. According to the complaint, Urang was run down by Garcia as he was on the phone with 911 calling for help.

In the recording, Urang is heard describing the suspect as Garcia. An argument, a scuffle and the sound of Urang apparently being run over ends the call. He was struck about 10:45 p.m. in the 600 block of Wells Street near Payne Avenue. He suffered a skull fracture and massive hemorrhaging. and died the next day.'

Forced To Pay Even Though You're Not The Daddy

Mastodon · 10 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over the years Bowdery had his drivers license stripped and once even found himself in handcuffs over child support payments for a child that's not his, "I would hate to see somebody else go through the same thing. I've been going through this, headaches."

A mound of paperwork shows a juvenile court judge ordered him to pay child support even before the birth.
...
Bowdery asked several judges during several hearings for a DNA test, but no judge ordered one.
...
In 2009 he took the child himself to get a DNA test and found the son he supported for years was not biologically his.

He took the documentation to court.

The judge wouldn't accept it, but ordered a DNA test done that showed the same results.

The probability of paternity was zero percent.
...
Juvenile Court magistrate Nancy Kessler agreed in October to dis-establish paternity, but only after she admonished him for taking it this far.

"The judge stated that, 'well I find it very distasteful that you're bastardizing the child," said Bowdery.
...

We asked a family lawyer what are the chances of Bowdery getting his money back.

Attorney Miles Mason said, "It is very unusual and very infrequent."

Mason says in a similar case, the Tennessee Supreme Court ruled a man in middle Tennessee could sue his ex-wife for fraud. He won a $100,000 judgement.

"There was a very large judgement awarded against the mother but I doubt they would be able to collect in most cases," said Mason.'

Intactivists Call on Obstetricians Meeting in New Orleans to Stop Circumcising Baby Boys

Mastodon · 10 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Intactivists are gathering in New Orleans this weekend to call upon members of the American Congress of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG) to join the global medical community's movement away from neonatal male circumcision.

Intact America, the organization leading the demonstration and an 11 AM press conference on Saturday, May 4, placed an advertisement in the New Orleans Times-Picayune and hired a mobile billboard, urging those who see it to "Tell America's Obstetricians – No More Circumcision." The sign includes the message "His Body, His Rights" to underscore the organization's human rights concerns. Approximately 70 Intactivists are expected to participate in the demonstration, displaying banners, carrying placards, and handing out literature.'

Women’s health plays central role in renewed Obamacare pitch

Mastodon · 10 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Obama plans to put the focus back on health care Friday afternoon, specifically in how his landmark legislation—the Affordable Care Act—helps women. He’ll deliver a speech surrounded by women and families who are already benefiting from the new law.

“This is already working, we did this health care bill because health care was 17 -18% of GDP and we could not afford to let that go on and we were not getting the best health care for the money we were spending,” Rep. Louise Slaughter, a New York Democrat, said on Jansing & Co.

The state of Colorado is already launching a two million dollar ad campaign in both print and on television to try and get people to sign up. The ads do not mention the phrase “Obamacare.” A narrator states, “When health care companies compete, there is only one winner: you.”

“Obviously you can’t do something this massive and go door-to-door explaining it to everyone,” Slaughter said.

The health care roll-out will be crucial on two fronts: for the success of the law and also for the 2014 midterm elections. Republicans plan to make health care an issue again. Next week House Republicans will take their 38th vote to roll the law back—but the first one, this year.'

False rape allegation - What You're Saying

Mastodon · 10 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A man spent 10 years in prison on a false rape charge, a court has ruled. If these allegations are true, what should happen to the woman who filed the false charge? We asked Facebook users:

Ten years in the joint for her seems about right, then a lifetime of paying restitution back to the man for the money he lost while sitting in prison. That's a start, anyways.

—Joshua Bennett

She should have to pay the state for all the time he spent in prison that the tax payers had to pay.

—Harold Webb

She should do at least 10 years and have to go to Rape Survivor meetings and explain to them that she’s the reason it's so difficult to get rape convictions.

—Christine Page'

In Utah, a push for more women to graduate college

Mastodon · 10 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'SALT LAKE CITY — Utah education officials are calling for more women to graduate from college. They say that would close a gender gap that puts the state behind most others.

The Deseret News reports that (http://bit.ly/10rgnDA) education officials say college degrees mean better jobs, better family life and higher pay.

The push comes from the Utah Women and Education Initiative. That group says Utah has the third-largest wage gap in the nation. It released a January report finding Utah women receive 69 cents for every dollar paid to men.

More Utah women are earning college degrees in recent years, but not enough to close the gap.

The report says younger women buck the state trend, obtaining degrees at an equal or higher rate as their male classmates.'

Targeting men only is also sexual harassment

Mastodon · 10 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is a male employee complaining about behavior you would clearly see as sexual harassment if the employee were a woman? If so, do something about it.

Recent case: Jeffrey complained that a male supervisor was constantly making comments like “come and give me [oral sex]” and sometimes groped male employees’ groins. Management ignored the situation.

Jeffrey sued, alleging sexual harassment. He pointed out that female employees weren’t treated the same way.

The court said the case could proceed. The fact that the supervisor was allegedly grabbing men’s crotches but not women’s could support a sexually hostile work environment claim. (Barrows v. Seneca Foods, No. 12-970, 2nd Cir., 2013)'

Discrimination against men?

Mastodon · 10 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recent Virgin airlines passenger, John McGirr claims Virgin airlines treated him like a sexual predator on a flight to Sydney.

He claims a flight attendant asked him to move saying he was not allowed to sit next to children because he was male.

According to Mr McGirr the flight attendant walked up the aisle and tried to find a female to swap seats with him.

"By that time, people had looked around and it was like I'd done something wrong, (I felt) defenceless. Usually I like to have a good argument and stand up for myself but I just sort of swallowed my pride and left," Mr McGirr said.'

Do no harm: Who should bear the costs of retired NFL players' medical bills?

Matt · 11 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After 24 knee operations, the National Football League's former Man of the Year leans heavily on a crutch. When Reggie Williams pulls up his pants leg, what's underneath looks like the trimmings from a butcher shop. His right leg is so ravaged that it's three inches shorter than his left. Worse, it's uninsured.
...
But now, Williams and his battered legs amount to a bill no one wants to pay. Since 2005 Williams, 58, has suffered a cascade of health problems he says stem from his 14-year football career, including multiple knee replacements and a bone infection, which he estimates have cost him hundreds of thousands of dollars out of pocket.
...
Critics say the NFL's medical benefits don't adequately address the full range of these problems. The NFL's health insurance lasts five years after retirement — players who lasted fewer than three seasons don't qualify for it at all — but the most serious health consequences of a football career often don't manifest for a decade or more.
...
"First and foremost, the NFL is in the hurt business," said Mel Owens, a former NFL player who is now a California attorney and represents Williams. "In workers' comp they will end up paying for the players' brains, hearts and livers, as well as orthopedic injuries, and it's expensive. But they don't want to pay at all."'

Disparity Between Child Support and Custody Enforcement

Mastodon · 11 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You'll read about it often -- the creative methods judges and other officials use to shame people who owe child support.

There is the man ordered not to procreate. The guy who must tell any female he meets that he owes child support. The dads forced to display signs proclaiming themselves "deadbeats."

Much is made of the offensive moniker "deadbeat dads" and the histrionic punishments doled out by zealous judges.

However, throughout my 20+ years with Cordell & Cordell advocating for fathers' rights, it is apparent the more pertinent story is the paucity of attention, much less innovation, given the reciprocal problem relating to primary custodians that defy court orders respecting the other parent's access and participation in children's lives.'

Boys, girls and fairness: The court can fix a rule that hurts female athletes

Mastodon · 11 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys will be boys and girls will be girls. But when girls and boys come out to play, it's the adults who make matters complicated. Commonwealth Court has a chance to correct a long-ago decision that contributed to an unusual problem.

It scarcely makes sense, but high school boys can play on girls' sports teams in Pennsylvania if the sport is offered only for girls. The best example is field hockey, a game that is popular for males in other countries but not in the United States.
...
Commonwealth Court needs to hold a hearing and see what is obvious: Rigid gender blindness should not mean putting girl athletes at risk and denying them the chance to play because boys are on the team. Let girls be girls.'

Canada: Merged CAW/CEP union puts gender quotas in constitution

Mastodon · 12 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The merged CAW/CEP superunion is taking the rare step of including a gender quota in its constitution, mandating that the number of women on the National Executive Board “is at least equal to the proportion of women among our membership.”

“We’ve had affirmative action polices, but this is the first time that it will be referenced specifically in a constitution,” said Peter Kennedy, the CAW’s national secretary-treasurer. “It’s the next logical step in the progression.”

“We know we are a male-dominated organization, and we thought it was important to have a positive action like that,” said Gaétan Ménard, the national secretary-treasurer of the CEP. “It’s easy to say just ‘We hope’ or ‘We’ll try.’ We said, no, we’re going to put it in the constitution.”

The new union will be Canada’s largest in the private sector, boasting 300,000 members including 86,000 women. There are 25 positions available on the Board, six that are full-time and 19 that are filled by rank-and-file leadership, including 11 industry positions and five regional chairs. Under the new rules, at least eight of the 25 spots must be filled by women.'

New Internet law provision in VAWA can crush individual freedoms

Mastodon · 12 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CUMBERLAND — The war to control the Internet began after Congress quietly passes a law allowing U.S. authorities to access foreign birth certificate repositories to identify worldwide Internet users.
...
All the details, that few Congressmen read, are in an unnoticed attachment in the recently passed Violence Against Women Act (S-47).

Section 808 regulates “marriage brokers” (similar to social referral or dating sites) that are prohibited from providing services to foreigners under 18. Foreign clients must submit their birth certificate information or government ID before communication with Americans can begin, and allows U.S. authorities access to this sensitive information, effectively creating an Snternet police force.

At first glance the stated purpose “to prevent marketing of underage children” by international marriage brokers seems reasonable. However, logic reveals that Section 808, an immigration provision, is pointless — an underage child cannot legally immigrate for the purpose of marriage. And why is it illegal for an 18-year-old American to say “Hello” to a 17-year-old Canadian?

The sinister term “marriage broker” is a spoof coined by special interests while crusading for the International Marriage Broker Regulation Act, the parent law of section 808. The legal definition of “marriage broker” is so broadly tailored that any online communication for social referral, friendship or dating could nefariously be regulated now, or in the future.
...
What would prevent other countries from retaliating by enacting laws requiring Americans to submit their birth certificates or other requirements prior to saying “hello” to their citizens?
...
Part of the blame falls on VAWA author and Senate Judiciary Chairman, Pat Leahy (D-VT) who approved the legislation as a pet project for the ideological gains of special interests.
...
Regardless, Congress has no right to place arbitrary restrictions on legitimate communication across the Web, a gross affront to human rights.'

SAVE E-lert: Will We Be Meeting in June? I Hope So

Matt · 13 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Have you made plans yet to attend our annual conference, "Celebrating Our Progress!"? I hope so, because I want to meet as many of you in person as I can.

On Friday evening - June 21 - we'll learn about the history of the abuse shelter movement from the founder herself, Erin Pizzey. And On Saturday - June 22 - our keynote speaker will be Kathleen King, a former magistrate in Ohio.

We have other speakers lined up too (see the list here). And there will be an optional lobbying event on Capitol Hill earlier in the day on Friday.

Dinner Friday and lunch Saturday are included.

Visit the SAVE website for the schedule and info on local lodging: http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp/annual-conference-2013/. Visit eventbrite to register online: http://celebratingourprogress.eventbrite.com/

I sure hope to see you there!

P.S. Conference ticket prices go up June 1st! Get yours now!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

False reports outpace sex assaults in the military

Mastodon · 13 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'False complaints of sexual abuse in the military are rising at a faster rate than overall reports of sexual assault, a trend that could harm combat readiness, analysts say.

Virtually all media attention on a Pentagon report last week focused on an increase in service members' claims of sexual abuse in an anonymous survey, but unmentioned were statistics showing that a significant percentage of such actually investigated cases were baseless.

From 2009 to 2012, the number of sexual abuse reports rose from 3,244 to 3,374 — a 4 percent increase.
...
"Unsubstantiated accusations remain a significant problem, but the SAPRO is doing nothing about it," Mrs. Donnelly said. "I went through both volumes and found no evidence of concern about the significant 17 percent of 'unfounded accusations.' Something should be done to reduce the numbers of false accusations, the first step being an admission that the problem exists."'

Review: Debunking ‘feminist’ nonsense on YouTube

Mastodon · 13 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For years, the misnamed feminist movement has been indoctrinating women with its at times outrageous propaganda. Now this is being exposed and refuted, and many of those engaged in the enterprise are women.

What was that David Webb said back in the 1970s? “Individual freedom is daily being eroded in this country...by feminist extremists who...wish to force their...repressive, authoritarian demands... on everyone else. Parliament has hitherto paid heed to these...dangerous factions out of all proportion to the numbers they represent or the soundness of their logic...”
...
Back to statistics. Last September this thoughtful analysis of contrived rape statistics was uploaded. Most interesting is the explanation of the genesis of the myth of (American) rape culture. We've seen this sort of nonsense in other contexts; in the late 1940s and early 1950s, Alfred Kinsey produced some amazing statistics about the alleged extent of sexual perversion and degeneracy in the United States that have been cited by those intent on changing both the criminal law and our sexual mores, including lowering the age of consent with all the implications that would have for the young and vulnerable. Kinsey's statistical nonsense was taken apart by Judith Reisman among others, but is still parroted by those who refuse to allow facts to stand in the way of ideology, however perverted that ideology may be.'

Navajo lawmaker presents bill to give fathers equal parenting rights

Mastodon · 13 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'WINDOW ROCK — Council Delegate Jonathan Hale presented a bill that would give fathers on the Navajo Nation equal rights to gain custody of his children.

Currently, Hale said there is no law that allows or states equal parenting rights to the father and said he would like to see some changes in policy.

“There needs to be a policy developed that will consider giving full custody to the father,” he said in a press release from the Navajo Nation Speakers office.

He also explained, the current policy lets the mother determine when the father gets to see the children in custody battles.

“In custody situations, somebody needs to be checking with the mother, and making sure that the kids are seeing their father,” he said.

No further information was provided.'

Gender Neutral: Armed Forces Submit Plans To End 'Exclusion'

Mastodon · 13 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week, all divisions of the U.S. armed forces are supposed to submit their plans for ending "combat exclusion," the rule that says women cannot serve in most combat positions. Host Rachel Martin speaks with NPR's Larry Abramson about the implications of the change.

...

This coming week, the U.S. Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines are supposed to submit their plans for ending what's called the combat exclusion. This is the rule that says women cannot serve in most ground combat positions. The Pentagon announced plans to lift the ban earlier this year. The move comes as the military is under growing pressure to deal with an increasing number of sexual assault cases.'

HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius on National Women's Health Week

Minuteman · 13 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Starting with Mother's Day, next week we celebrate National Women's Health Week. As a nation, we honor the women in our lives – our mothers, grandmothers, aunts, sisters, cousins, friends, and colleagues – by encouraging them to make their health a priority and to take steps to live healthier, happier lives.

Women are frequently the health care decision-makers in their families. We take time off from work to drive a parent to the doctor. We hold our children's hands while they get their vaccinations. We make the appointments for our spouses' checkups – and then make sure they actually go. We stretch and re-work our family budgets to pay the doctor's bills. And too often, we put our own health last.

But the truth is unless we take care of ourselves first, we cannot really take care of our families. That means we have to eat right, exercise, and get the care we need to stay healthy. Unfortunately, preventive care has not always been easily accessible or affordable for everyone, including young women.'

Department of State: "A Critical Tool Toward Creating an AIDS-free Generation"

Minuteman · 13 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'On Mother's Day, we celebrate the many exceptional women in our lives and around the globe. Today, and every day, we are grateful for -- and indebted to -- the billions of mothers and other women who serve as the glue that keeps our families and communities together.

Unfortunately, in the fight against AIDS, women continue to bear a disproportionate burden. In many countries in sub-Saharan Africa, HIV remains the leading cause of death and disease for women of reproductive age, and in the region, 60 percent of those living with HIV are women. Despite these sobering statistics, countless women continue to prosper in the face of seemingly insurmountable odds.

Whether a woman is a mother today, or a mother to be, her health is paramount -- both for her own productivity and quality of life, and that of the next generation.

...

One new and potentially revolutionary tool that has greatly simplified the approach to PMTCT (prevention of mother-to-children transmission), is Option B+. Option B+ offers all pregnant or breastfeeding women living with HIV lifelong ART, rather than relying on laboratory testing to determine eligibility for treatment.

'50 Shades of Grey - Pedophilia Hiding In Plain Sight'

Matt · 14 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yes, 50 Shades is pornography. Like most pornography, the storyline is weak, the characters one-dimensional, while the sex itself graphic, detailed, but formulaic. The underlying theme to 50 Shades is something far more sinister and appalling though than your mere run-of-the-mill porn. It is pedophilia. It is child porn. Kiddie porn.
...
I didn't seek out 50 Shades of Grey. It was brought to my attention by a longtime friend who is also a clinical psychologist at a university. She's a bit older than me. She grew up in the counter culture era and did her fair share of experimentation of all kinds. So she's hardly a prude. What she today though is a mother and grandmother. And she's smart. One of the things that fascinates her is this age of cultural phenomena. How due to technology things now spread so quickly throughout society and become the next big thing at an increasingly rapid pace. She says sometimes this phenomena is pretty much harmless, and other times it can be very damaging to kids and or adults who begin to emulate something out of a need to belong to the "next big thing".
...
The problem for her, and it was a BIG PROBLEM, was that the narrator in the story, was in fact, an underage girl. My friend indicated, based on the use of language in the narration, that this girl was likely no more than 12 or 13 years of age. I made mention that the girl in the story was actually getting ready to graduate college. My friend, a woman with years of experience as a clinical psychologist, whose expertise I had personally witnessed a number of times over the years, shook her head and told me that she would not be able to convince me by simply talking about it. She said I should read the book myself, but do so with the eyes of somebody whose job it had been for many years to try and protect children. As someone who has seen over and over the signs of abuse, and the damages of abuse. Because there are always warning signs. I know that. How many times have I heard people horrified in saying "I can't believe I didn't see that" "How couldn't I have known?" Or even worse, "I knew something wasn't right but I didn't want to believe they were capable of doing something like that."
...

I got the book, I sat down, and I read it.
...
We are reading child pornography. Remove the false age of the girl, which has no basis in reality, and what we are actually reading is the abuse of a little girl.

The main character is described in pigtails, given words like "Holy Cow" "down there", "jeez" "double crap" she can't operate a computer (but is supposedly a college graduate), describes skipping and doing cartwheels, repeatedly says she is made to feel like a child, has her imaginary friend (inner goddess) feels shame, is spanked and slathered in BABY OIL, told what to say, what to eat, what to do, until finally and sadly so predictably, is physically beaten. (But she returns to him soon after, which is again, a very common theme of abuse, including pedophilia).
...
50 Shades of Grey made her weep. It made her sick. It made her think of the abuses of all of those kids by a demented, warped monster like Jerry Sandusky, who, just like the pedophilia of 50 Shades of Grey, was hiding in plain sight.'

Congresswoman: ‘Survival as a species dependent on women taking charge’

Mastodon · 14 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the lead up to the 2012 election, there was plenty of focus on the so called “war on women” that, in reality, existed only in the minds of Democratic campaign strategists and a complicit media, but is there a real “war” underway in America directed at members of the opposite sex?

According to Democratic U.S. Rep. Jan Schakowsky, not only is such a conflict happening, but the very existence of the human race is dependent on the outcome.

At a campaign fundraiser earlier this month, Schakowsky openly advocated for women “taking charge,” according to CNS News.

While speaking at a Planned Parenthood Action Fund event on May 3, dubbed ”The Ultimate Women’s Power Lunch,” she said:

“Today I am asserting that humanity is at a crossroads on this small planet and that our survival as a species is dependent on women taking charge, taking the world in our own hands.”

Doesn’t get much clearer than that.'

Also, watch the vid here.

Wikipedia on Jan Schakowsky

It’s Raining Beta Men: Why Emasculation is a Curse, Not a Blessing

Mastodon · 14 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists contend that patriarchy and its “male enablers” enslave women through marriage and motherhood. They assert that men are sex-driven, lustful pigs keen on subduing women. As a result, feminists are determined to undermine them.

Here is proof:

1) A typical feminist believes men enslave women through marriage:

“Since marriage constitutes slavery for women, it is clear that the Women’s Movement must concentrate on attacking this institution. Freedom for women cannot be won without the abolition of marriage.” – Sheila Cronan, in Radical Feminism – “Marriage” (1970)

2) A typical feminist thinks men are rapists:

“Male sexual aggression is endemic, if any sex act against a person’s will were considered rape, the majority of men would be rapists.” – Marilyn French, The War Against Women, Ballantine Books, 1992, p. 193

3) A typical feminist wants to eradicate manliness:

“Only when manhood is dead–and it will perish when ravaged femininity no longer sustains it–only then will we know what it is to be free.” -Andrea Dworkin, Our Blood: Prophecies And Discourses On Sexual Politics

In order to successfully carry out their agenda, feminists want “new castrati males” to replace manly men.'

UK: Diane Abbott to turn Labour's attention to a 'crisis of masculinity'

Mastodon · 14 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Diane Abbott has been thinking long and hard of late about how Labour responds to the family. She offers the next instalment of her ideas in a speech to think tank Demos on Thursday, and will argue that rapid social and economic change has caused a 'crisis of masculinity' in Britain which manifests itself. Coffee House has been offered a preview of that speech, which marks a significant shift in the way Labour talks about the family.

Abbott believes the Conservatives have occupied this debate for too long, and wants her party to make families and fathers a priority. As a single mother and a left-wing feminist, her intervention is an attempt to reclaim this territory.

She will say:

'Tomorrow, too many British men and boys will wake up isolated and misdirected by a boundless consumer outlook, economic instability and whirlwind social change.

'Tomorrow, too many British men and boys who need the space and support to talk about manhood, expectations and boundaries from an early age, at schools, with other boys, and with their parents will remain silent."

UK: Exclusive: Three in four believe those accused of sexual assaults should be granted anonymity

Mastodon · 14 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three out of four people believe that people accused of rape and other sexual assaults should have their identities protected until they are convicted.

A ComRes survey for The Independent found strong public support for the controversial view expressed by Maura McGowan, chairman of the Bar Council, who argued that suspects in sex cases should enjoy the same right to anonymity as defendants. Some 76 per cent of people agree with the statement that “people accused of sexual assault should be given anonymity until they are proven guilty”, while 18 per cent disagree and six per cent don't know.

Perhaps surprisingly, there is little difference between the two sexes on the issue. Some 74 per cent of women support anonymity for such defendants, compared to 78 per cent of men. Liberal Democrat supporters (95 per cent) are more likely to back anonymity than Conservative (76 per cent) and Labour supporters (75 per cent). People in the top AB social group (80 per cent) are more likely to endorse anonymity than those in the bottom DE grade (67 per cent).'

Federal Government Mandates Unconstitutional Speech Codes at Colleges and Universities Nationwide

Mastodon · 15 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a letter sent yesterday to the University of Montana that explicitly states that it is intended as "a blueprint for colleges and universities throughout the country," the Departments of Justice and Education have mandated a breathtakingly broad definition of sexual harassment that makes virtually every student in the United States a harasser while ignoring the First Amendment. The mandate applies to every college receiving federal funding—virtually every American institution of higher education nationwide, public or private.

The letter states that "sexual harassment should be more broadly defined as 'any unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature'" including "verbal conduct" (that is, speech). It then explicitly states that allegedly harassing expression need not even be offensive to an "objectively reasonable person of the same gender in the same situation"—if the listener takes offense to sexually related speech for any reason, no matter how irrationally or unreasonably, the speaker may be punished.

...

Among the forms of expression now punishable on America's campuses by order of the federal government are:

- Any expression related to sexual topics that offends any person. This leaves a wide range of expressive activity—a campus performance of "The Vagina Monologues," a presentation on safe sex practices, a debate about sexual morality, a discussion of gay marriage, or a classroom lecture on Vladimir Nabokov's Lolita—subject to discipline.
- Any sexually themed joke overheard by any person who finds that joke offensive for any reason.
- Any request for dates or any flirtation that is not welcomed by the recipient of such a request or flirtation.'

From Lolita to Louis CK, Feds Ban Sex Speech on Campus

Mastodon · 15 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In practice, that covers just about any speech of a sexual nature, period. After all, in a nation as diverse as ours, there's no shortage of opinions about what kinds of sexual expression are "unwelcome." Hell, some folks even find Anne Frank's diary "pornographic."

Think about it. A socially conservative student is offended by a BDSM panel discussion during your college's "Sex Week." Under the new federal "blueprint," he's got a sexual harassment claim to file. Or perhaps a student doesn't like hearing about a planned "Slutwalk." That's another sexual harassment claim. How about rapper Tyga's lyrics? To some students at Harvard, they would count as sexual harassment. Or a crew team's joke t-shirts reading "Check Out Our Cox"? To a few at Tufts, that would be sexual harassment.
...
1. When everything is sexual harassment, real harassment gets marginalized.

As discussed above, if anybody on campus can file a sexual harassment claim any time they're offended by sex-related speech, just about anything will qualify as sexual harassment. This beyond-broad definition means that real instances of truly harassing conduct will be lost among the flood of complaints, as administrative resources and time are wasted investigating and responding to students who are merely offended or uncomfortable. That's a terrible outcome for those students who are actually suffering real sexual harassment.

2. When everybody is a harasser, administrators can punish students and faculty with unpopular views.

Chances are that sooner or later, just about everybody on campus will say something sexually-related that some listener finds unwelcome -- which makes just about everybody a harasser. And when everybody's guilty of harassment, university administrators will always have a ready reason to punish a student or faculty member for expressing a viewpoint they simply dislike or disagree with. Don't think students and faculty get unfairly punished for "harassment"? Alex Myers, charged with harassment last fall for writing a letter to a rival college's hockey coach for a journalism class assignment, would beg to differ. So would Professor Jammie Price, suspended for creating a "hostile environment" after criticizing her university's response to student-athlete sexual assault cases and showing a documentary critically examining the adult film industry in her sociology class. So much for academic freedom!'

Obama Administration scraps free speech

Mastodon · 15 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At Xavier University, a student who was found not guilty of sexual assault by a judge was nonetheless told by the university that he would be prohibited from participating in classes or extracurricular activities with his “victim.” Caleb Warner was banned from the campuses of the University of North Dakota for three years. When police investigated the case, they issued an arrest warrant for his accuser, charging her with making a false rape charge. Only after repeated interventions on Warner’s behalf by the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) did the university finally admit that the charges were without foundation.

Having virtually obliterated procedural protections for those accused of serious offenses and crimes, the Obama administration has now added a new insult — a restriction on free speech itself. For two decades, universities have struggled with the question of “speech codes,” tempted by the left to enshrine political correctness at the expense of the First Amendment. Most campuses have resisted, but through the Obama administration, the censors have triumphed all at once and everywhere.
...
Obama promised fundamental transformation. This is part of it. Freedom of speech is sacrificed, and a new army of sexual harassment “specialists” will descend on America’s campuses to enforce the new dispensation.'

'Anger Over Scare Quotes'

Mastodon · 15 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Students at the State University of New York at Geneseo are lashing out at a professor for scheduling the lecture “Against ‘Sexual’ ‘Assault’ ‘Awareness’ ” (yes, with three sets of scare quotes) during the college's Sexual Assault Awareness Week. The professor himself, however, says students are jumping to conclusions without even knowing the contents of the talk.

News of the lecture drew outrage from students who say Theodore Everett, professor of philosophy, intentionally aimed to provoke. Sam White, a senior political science and international relations major, created a petition calling on SUNY Geneseo’s administration to reaffirm the institution’s dedication to sexual assault awareness and condemn Everett’s talk.'

...

The abstract of Everett's talk states "the sexual assault awareness movement counts too many borderline cases (for example, badgering somebody into letting you give them a kiss) as true sexual assault, when they are not really sexual and not really assault. This diverts attention away from the truly damaging core cases of rape and sexual assault that everybody cares about and toward borderline cases that no one believes are equally important, even though they also shouldn’t happen."'

German woman faces multiple murder counts over neo-Nazi group leadership activities

Matt · 15 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Notice the tone of the article; seems to me they're almost soft-peddaling her. Much of the article is given to how "it's not really that bad," and she was raised by a single mother and had a hard life, etc. Really, would this be the tone if the defendant were male? Excerpt:

'The 38-year-old woman looks like a librarian or pharmacist. But when Beate Zschäpe faces the court in Munich on Monday, hers will be most-watched trial Germany has seen in decades.

For almost 14 years, the neo-Nazi group Nazionalsozialistischer Untergrund (NSU), allegedly led by Zschäpe, killed and maimed across Germany. Her trial may last for years, too. She’s accused of complicity in the murders of 9 foreigners and 1 police officer, several attempted murders, 2 bombings, and 15 robberies and is going on trial with 4 of her top lieutenants. Two other NSU leaders, Uwe Böhnhardt and Uwe Mundlos, committed suicide when police finally caught up with their group after a bank robbery 18 months ago.'

UK: Macho, macho men: Labour have no right to talk about the "crisis in masculinity"

Mastodon · 15 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Diane Abbott asserts that Britain is facing a "crisis of masculinity," she is barking up the wrong trouser leg.

The Labour MP says that rapid economic change is perverting men and boys and encouraging homophobia, misogyny and machismo.

Is Diane really naive enough to suggest that recession is producing a generation of brutes? Will British manhood be restored to its former strong-shafted glory if we vote for Ed Miliband?

Diane's thesis is a load of tribal, Labour-promoting tosh. Modern men have their problems but they have less to do with rapid economic change and more to do with social shifts and technological advances.'

Australia: "Gillard Government Funds Fight Against Cancer"

Minuteman · 15 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The Budget provides –

* $55.7 million to expand the Breastscreen Australia program to increase participation by women aged 70 to 74 ensuring more women are testing for breast cancer as they get older, because we know that early detection is the key to saving lives.

* $18.5 million for the Australian Prostate Cancer Research Centres Program - including funding of $5.5 million to the Australian Prostate Cancer Research Centre located at the Kinghorn Cancer Centre, Sydney, and continuing funding to Centres at the Epworth Hospital, Melbourne ($6.2 million) and the Princess Alexandra Hospital, Brisbane ($6.2 million). This will mean improved testing, diagnosis and treatment for people with prostate cancer.

* $19.5 million over the next 4 years for the Breast Care Nurses Initiative to expand the number of Commonwealth funded McGrath Breast Care Nurses from 44 to 57. Since the inception of the Breast Care Nurses initiative, more than 11,073 women diagnosed with breast cancer and their families have been supported by a Commonwealth-funded McGrath breast care nurse.
...
* $36.5 million to enable the Victorian Cytology Service to continue its nationally recognised work in cervical cancer screening – including providing cervical screening services to around 300,000 women a year.'

"Leading Women For Shared Parenting"

Matt · 15 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Organization site: http://www.lw4sp.org/

'WHAT'S THE PURPOSE?

"Women and men are made to complement each other, and more importantly, Children Need Both Parents. Millions of women, be they grandmothers, sisters, mothers, aunts and wives, have silently suffered the loss of children they love and care deeply about as a result of misguided laws and family court practices. It is our aim to change this system that each year unjustly removes millions of children from the arms of a loving parent. The first step is endorsing the statement below. The next step is inviting your friends and family members to do the same."'

SAVE: Obama Administration Faces a New First Amendment Crisis

Matt · 16 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Last Thursday the US Dept. of Education (DED) and Dept. of Justice issued a joint decision that:

1. Expands the definition of sexual harassment on college campuses to include any sexually-related conduct that is "unwelcome"
2. Expands the definition of "conduct" to include "verbal conduct", i.e., speech
3. Removes the "reasonable person standard" and substitutes the "he hurt my feelings" standard

The effect of these changes is to mandate a speech code that severely abridges college students' First Amendment rights, in addition to the worrisome restrictions on due process protections for students accused of sexual misconduct.

Since the Dept. of Education issued its Sexual Assault Directive in April 2011, over 100 editorials critical of the policy have been published: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/ded-directive/ded-editorials/ And less than one week after the DED/DOJ announced their decision, 22 more editorials blasting the decision have come out – see listing below.

For more information on the DED Sexual Assault Directive, visit our website at: http://www.accusingu.org/

SAVE: Tell Eric Holder to End Misconduct by VAWA-funded Prosecutors

Matt · 16 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

On Tuesday, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) released the ground-breaking report, "Prosecutor Bias and Misconduct in Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence Cases:" http://www.saveservices.org/downloads/Prosecutor-Bias-Misconduct-in-Domestic-Violence

The SAVE report reveals that prosecutors often engage in zealous practices that erode constitutional guarantees of due process of law and probable cause. It also shows that despite the fact that half of domestic violence is perpetrated by women, the vast majority of those arrested and charged are men. Such gender-biased charging policies are unconstitutional.

Section 101 of the Violence Against Women Act addresses STOP formula grants - STOP stands for Services, Training, Officers, and Prosecutors. One-quarter of the STOP funds go to support prosecutors.

Let's make sure that prosecutors who receive VAWA funding do their jobs fairly. Please contact Attorney General Eric Holder today:

- Email: askdoj-at-usdoj.gov
- Phone: 202-353-1555

Ask AG Holder, politely, to implement appropriate oversight procedures to assure VAWA grant recipients are not engaging in misconduct or gender bias in domestic violence cases.

Thanks so much!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

P.S. Want to do more? Tell your representative. Find them here: http://www.house.gov/

NPO: Arkansas Favors Joint Custody

Matt · 16 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Arkansas enacted legislation, Act 1156, concerning child custody presumption in divorce cases. It specifies that in an action for divorce, an award of joint custody is favored in Arkansas.

Obviously, National Parents Organization would prefer a presumption of joint custody. But, this is a step. The legislation also stipulates that if one of the parents "demonstrates a pattern of willfully creating conflict," the court may change a joint custody order to a primary custody order and award that custody to the nondisruptive parent.

The act defines joint custody as, "the approximate and reasonable equal division of time with the child by both parents."'

How tackling the 'crisis of masculinity' creates a crisis for feminism

Mastodon · 16 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tackling men's issues in this way requires the women's sector to share the gender equality pie. It also means allowing for a greater diversity of viewpoints, which will ultimately challenge the dominance of feminist thinking in the gender equality sector.

Faced with this eventuality, it is inevitable that women's groups and feminist thinkers will resist attempts to target the problems that men and boys face and try to shift the focus back on to the problems that men and boys cause.

If the Labour party is to tackle Britain's "crisis of masculinity" it will need to face up to the crisis that tackling men's issues creates for feminism. The best way for Labour to do this is by remaining true to the values of its own equalities legislation that allows for men's and women's issues to be addressed in an equitable and proportionate way.
...
Cruddas got it right when he said we mustn't let negative perceptions about a minority of fathers shape policy for the majority. If the rest of the party – including Labour feminists – can apply that thinking to all men's issues, we may move a step closer to tackling the "crisis of masculinity".'

Video: Diane Abbott on masculinity and role of men in society

Mastodon · 16 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Video summary:

'Male MPs show "every type of patriarchal behaviour" said the shadow public health minister as she spoke about her speech on men to the Demos think-tank.

Diane Abbott claimed society and the economy had changed in ways which challenged issues around masculinity.

She debated her speech and ideas - and whether there should be a minister for men - with Ian Collins from LBC, former Labour pollster Deborah Mattinson and Andrew Neil on the Daily Politics.'

'IRS Persecution Is A War On Women'

Mastodon · 16 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Forget “binders full of women” — the IRS’s persecution of hundreds of tea party groups is the real war on women. I co-founded the movement in my hometown of St. Louis and have travelled the country with various tea party groups and I’ve seen it first hand: the tea party movement was predominately led by women. It isn’t a slight to our men; in speech after speech I mentioned how the nation’s men have been neutralized in this fight by the left’s ridiculous identity politics and bunk sexism claims. I’ve opined more than once “My husband can’t hit a girl, but I can.” It’s the truth — and it’s why women raised up from around the country to lead the charge.

That’s why this IRS scandal is all the more stunning. If the left can claim that Romney’s “binders full of women” remark is indicative of a festering female hatred on the right, if they can claim that the demand for grown women to pay for their own preventative pregnancy sexual recreation pills is a sign that conservatives hate women, then the IRS going all Spanish Inquisition on groups of a female-led movement is the war of all wars on women.'

Is This The End of Alimony As We Know It?

Mastodon · 16 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For probably as long as it has existed, alimony has been a man vs. woman thing. Men get ordered to pay, women get alimony and men get bitter. But as women have become more economically powerful, the game has changed.

In 2012, a new law came into effect in Massachusetts that abolished permanent alimony and set up a formula for future payments. Some men there had been paying for decades to women to whom they'd only been married very briefly. While Massachusetts is the front runner, several states, especially Florida, are rethinking the way alimony is awarded.

Should men still have to pay alimony when women can now be educated and make (almost) as much as men? What about women who live with another guy but still take alimony? What do women who pay alimony think? And if we abolish alimony, how do older women without job skills get by?'

Rewrite of UNC-Chapel Hill sexual assault policy begins

Mastodon · 16 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The new task force includes a cross-section of faculty, students and staff who regularly deal with sexual harassment and assault, including counselors and coordinators who handle rape prevention education, student complaints and investigations. There is a law enforcement representative and a university attorney, as well as a professor who does research on violence against women, a member of a feminist student group and the director of the lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender and queer center on campus.
...
Already, differing opinions began to emerge Wednesday. Several members said there should be some recognition that women are disproportionately affected by sexual violence and that a “fair and balanced” standard may not work in a society where men and women are not always treated equally.'

Over 20 South African boys die in circumcision rituals: police

Mastodon · 16 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

JOHANNESBURG (Reuters) - More than 20 South African boys have died over the past week during coming of age rituals, police said on Thursday, and they blamed botched circumcisions as the likely cause of death.

Northern Mpumalanga province's police department has opened 22 murder cases but no arrests have been made so far, spokesman Colonel Leonard Hlathi said.
...
Deaths are often caused by blood loss or infection when circumcisions are poorly performed by traditional practitioners.

Minister in the Presidency Collins Chabane this week called the recent deaths "regrettable".'

Fundraiser attendees give money to gang rape hoaxer Tawana Brawley

Mastodon · 16 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tawana Brawley, who falsely accused six men of raping her 25 years ago, was celebrated at a fundraising event in New Jersey, officials said.

Attendees paid $50 for the Sunday event at Integrity Masonic Temple in Paterson, the New York Post reported.

While proceeds from the event went to fund a kids camp run by the Freedom Retreat for Children, some attendees also filled envelopes with cash for Brawley. It wasn't known how much she received.

When Brawley was 15, she was found in a trash bag in Dutchess County with slurs written on her body. She alleged she had been raped by six men, including former Dutchess County prosecutor Steven Pagones and a police officer. However, a grand jury found Brawley's accusations to be false.'

Bills in New Jersey Legislature could change alimony awards

Mastodon · 16 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Approval of this legislation would allow alimony payers to: modify their existing agreements; determine the recipients' alimony by preset formulas based entirely upon the length of the marriage, regardless of specifics such as disability of a spouse or child, ages of the parties, inheritance, attorney/judicial review and more; grant alimony for no longer than about half the number of years of the marriage; and eliminate the word "permanent" from any alimony award, with such support ending at the latest by the time the payer retires.
...
National Organization of Women (NOW) New Jersey president Jennifer Armiger said that NOW opposes this legislation as "it advances the interest of alimony payers — a majority of men and a small handful of women — who are seeking to overturn their alimony payments while disregarding the economic circumstances of the recipients."'

Repealing free speech - Political correctness races amok on campus

Matt · 17 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Justice Department put its contempt for the First Amendment on full display with its snooping on journalists at The Associated Press. It's a display of contempt for freedom of the press equaled only by the administration's disdain for freedom of speech, another of the essential First Amendment protections. The military has lately demonstrated a similar contempt for freedom of religious expression.

The Justice Department is making common cause with the Department of Education to renew the push for "speech codes" on campus. The sordid scheme was revealed in a letter of May 9 to President Royce Engstrom at the University of Montana, where the federal government proposes to limit free expression as a "blueprint for colleges and universities throughout the country."
...
The Constitution recognizes freedom of speech and of the press as necessary to sustain a free society. Americans should speak up against the administration's attack on the First Amendment — while they still can.'

Kia "Hotbots" ad glorifies female violence against men

Matt · 17 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Seen this one? Nothing funny or cute about it. Kia is perhaps trying to dodge criticism by making the "woman" a robot. Sorry, that doesn't pass. Contact Kia here ("Sales and Products" seems the best choice; country is US and possibly also Canada, if indeed it's running in that market) and let them know you won't be considering buying one of their cars as long as they try to sell them with "humorous violence"-- and would they have dared produce such an ad with the characters' sexes reversed?

UK: Diane Abbott's confused attack on men

Mastodon · 17 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Look into the eyes of many of the troubled and often unhealthy young men leaving school early," she said, "who are at one with anthems of hyper-masculinised music lyrics, and YouTube clips of bullying. Look into the eyes of many of the men sitting in the cubicles of bureaucratic English offices, with a disintegrating family life. Look into the eyes of men sitting in the plush offices of the top City firms, with little of note to show for it but a nice car and often shallow relationships. Do you see clear sense of pride?"

Um, how to answer that one? Talk about petitio principii. What about she looks into the eyes of the millions of sweet men and boys who have successful family lives, who are working hard and well at their jobs, and who are, on the whole, pretty happy?
...
To be fair, the confused meanderings of her speech encountered – as if by coincidence – a few important points. She was good on the "pornification" of British youth, for example. And the male reluctance to seek medical attention is something that would usefully be reversed.

On the whole, however, she was bent on destroying the male persona, pinning upon it the ills of society, and offering nothing of which men can be "proud". I'm not denying that some men struggle in Britain. But letting Diane Abbott loose on the topic is like introducing a bull to a china shop.

The most revealing sentence, of course, was this: "the Left must reclaim the debate about families". Well. If this is how they go about it, the Tories have little to fear.'

UK: From the Tories' "feckless dads" to the "crisis in masculinity": can Labour go father?

Mastodon · 17 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week Labour staked its claim to be the country's most father-friendly political party.

Jon Cruddas, the party's policy co-ordinator, claimed that "the Conservatives have dominated debate about the family with their stereotype of a feckless underclass of absent fathers".

According to Cruddas, "the majority of men feel fathers are undervalued," but not for much longer, because "Labour will value the role of fathers".

...

But if Labour is to achieve its ambition of becoming "the daddy" of all political parties, then it needs to understand why it has historically had an uneasy relationship with dads.

According to critics on the right, we need look no further than the IPPR report "Family Way", co-authored by Harriet Harman in 1990, which said "it cannot be assumed that men are bound to be an asset to family life or that the presence of fathers in families is necessarily a means to social cohesion".

...

If Labour can take a lead by treating gender inequality as a game of two halves and acknowledge that the unequal treatment of fathers has been caused in part by its own policies – then maybe more men will start to believe that Labour could become a party that genuinely values fathers.'

'Keep boys out of girls' sports'

Mastodon · 17 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Participation is the objective of federal Title IX and other rules that have opened innumerable opportunities for girls and women in academics and sports.

Now, a growing movement in Pennsylvania threatens to turn that idea on its head by limiting girls' participation through a side door in the legal framework for high school girls' sports.

Only one in 27 girls competed in high school sports when Title IX was adopted in 1972; now two in five are on high school teams.

In 1975, the Commonwealth Court rejected a Pennsylvania Interscholastic Athletic Association rule that had barred girls from practicing or competing against boys. Then, such competition often was the only means for girls to even attempt to compete in interscholastic sports, and the state's equal rights law, also passed in 1972, forbade gender-based discrimination.'

Barbara Boxer Sees Sexism In EPA Nominee Boycott By Republicans

Mastodon · 17 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sen. Barbara Boxer (D-Calif.) questioned the Republican Party's commitment to women after Senate Republicans boycotted a vote for Gina McCarthy, the president's nominee to lead the Environmental Protection Agency, and showed no indication they'll show up for a rescheduled vote this week.

Boxer, chairwoman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, has scheduled a second committee vote on McCarthy for Thursday. "So far, they haven't suggested that they're going to be there, which is quite irritating," Boxer told reporters on Capitol Hill Tuesday afternoon. "She's probably the most qualified person ever nominated for the EPA. She's worked for four Republican governors. She's answered more than a thousand of their questions. And they've all voted for her before for other positions. It just makes no sense to me. This woman deserves a promotion.

"They say they're for womens' advancement," Boxer continued. "Here's a clear case where they ought to prove it."'

Ireland: Men’s place in society ignored in renewed media focus on suicide

Mastodon · 17 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You might think from the sudden outbreak of discussion about suicide that the problem had recently become worse. In fact, our suicide problem has – in particular aspects – been deeply serious for two decades.

Our recorded suicide rate doubled, from about 6 per 100,000 between the early 1980s and the turn of the millennium. Despite a significant growth in population during the Celtic Tiger years, the number of annual suicides has actually fallen slightly since then.
In 2011, the year for which the most complete recent figures are available, there were 525 suicides. Ten years earlier, in 2001, 519 suicides were recorded. Since the population grew dramatically in the intervening decade, it is difficult to understand why there is now an impression that suicide has recently been exhibiting a dramatic increase.
...
Of these figures, more than four-fifths have consistently been accounted for by male suicides, and, of these, a grotesquely disproportionate number were young men. For years, the level of suicide among young Irish male adults has been close to the highest in Europe. The graph for female suicide has remained horizontal for decades.
...
There is no talk about what happens to men when their relationships break down, or what role Irish society and its institutions might be playing in that. There is no discussion of the possibility that suicide is, in many cases – far from the act of a disordered mind – a radically rational way of dealing with a particular understanding of reality.
...
But at least the Irish media has started to talk about the hippopotamus in the hallway. We have every reason to hope that the giraffes in the garret might come in for discussion in another decade or two.'

Go Red reminds us heart disease kills more women than all cancers combined

Mastodon · 17 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Six hundred women gathered today for the Go Red for Women annual luncheon to put an end to the number one killer of women in America, heart disease! Did you know women have a much greater chance of dying from heart disease than all forms of cancer combined, according to the American Heart Association. Heart disease and stroke are the number one killers of women in this country. One in three women will be impacted by heart disease; you could be one of them.

It's a shocking number but much better than where we were 10 years ago before Go Red for Women was founded to educate women about this very real killer.

Today's event is a major fundraiser for the programs across our region to educate women and help fund events to get information to those at risk. More than $500,000 dollars was raised and another $12,000 on the "Pursonality Auction".'

"ADHD is a fictitious disease"

el cid · 17 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Apparently the "father" of ADHD admitted in the last year of his life that it was a "fictitious disease." And which sex is diagnosed with it most often? Boys, of course. Excerpt:

'That amounted to interference in the child's freedom and personal rights, because pharmacological agents induced behavioral changes but failed to educate the child on how to achieve these behavioral changes independently. The child was thus deprived of an essential learning experience to act autonomously and emphatically which "considerably curtails children's freedom and impairs their personality development", the NEK criticized.

"The alarmed critics of the Ritalin disaster are now getting support from an entirely different side. The German weekly Der Spiegel quoted in its cover story on 2 February 2012 the US American psychiatrist Leon Eisenberg, born in 1922 as the son of Russian Jewish immigrants, who was the "scientific father of ADHD" and who said at the age of 87, seven months before his death in his last interview: "ADHD is a prime example of a fictitious disease"

Since 1968, however, some 40 years, Leon Eisenberg's "disease" haunted the diagnostic and statistical manuals, first as "hyperkinetic reaction of childhood", now called "ADHD". The use of ADHD medications in Germany rose in only eighteen years from 34 kg (in 1993) to a record of no less than 1760 kg (in 2011) – which is a 51-fold increase in sales! In the United States every tenth boy among ten year-olds already swallows an ADHD medication on a daily basis. With an increasing tendency.'

The Unsafe Sex: Should The World Invest More In Men's Health?

mens_issues · 18 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On average, men aren't as healthy as women.

Men don't live as long, and they're more likely to engage in risky behaviors, like smoking and drinking.

But in the past decade, global health funding has focused heavily on women.

Programs and policies for men have been "notably absent," says Sarah Hawkes, from the University of London's Institute of Global Health.

She and a colleague published a commentary in The Lancet Friday calling for more gender equality in global health funding.

"If you look at the top 10 health problems around the world, they are much more common in men," she tells Shots. "But the current focus is predominatly on women's health."'

Crisis of masculinity? This is a golden age for men

Mastodon · 19 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Labour MP Diane Abbott claims British blokes are facing a “crisis of masculinity” she is barking up the wrong trouser leg.

The way Diane tells it, British men are a bunch of homophobic, women-hating, porn-addicted, Viagra-quaffing, Jack Daniels-slurping brutes.

This is not an accurate portrait of British men – it is a grotesque cartoon.

Abbott says British men are incapable of talking about their problems.

“It’s all become a bit like the film Fight Club,” she sighs. “The first rule of being a man in modern Britain is that you’re not allowed to talk about it.”'

South Africa: MEC in hot water for circumcision comments

Mastodon · 19 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MPUMALANGA - The Mpumalanga Health MEC should be fired over her circumcision comments, according to the National Education Health and Allied Workers Union.

Candith Mashedo-Dlamini last week said tradition forbids her (as a woman) to get involved in the deaths of 23 young men who lost their lives at the start of the circumcision season in Mpumalanga.

Nehawu says the MEC's reluctance to take action amounts to a dereliction of duty.

It's the second organisation to condemn the MEC’s comments.

The Public Service Accountability Monitor on Friday lashed out at the lack of adequate safety measures at circumcision schools.

“This is a tradition... this is a tradition... so in other traditions whether there are deaths or what - but a woman can't come closer to that. But because there are police now, we're relying on the police so that they can give us reports," Mashedo-Dlamini said.'

‘Lives shattered’ by death of two girls: father

Matt · 19 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a video released by the court, Ms. Campione tosses a toy to the floor — a Winnie the Pooh stuffed animal Serena was filmed dancing with seconds before. Her tired face crumples as she sinks into a couch and unleashes a venomous tirade against her former husband just moments after she held her baby girls under water in the bathtub until they drowned.

“Leo, there, are you happy?” she spews at the camera. “Everything’s gone.… The idea that you could actually have my children — God believes me and God’s taking care of them now.”

Campione was sentenced Wednesday to life in prison, with no chance of parole for 25 years, for the murders of her two daughters, Serena, and Sophia, 19 months.'

Man-Hating Feminism More Than Just a Myth

Mastodon · 19 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Do you believe that all human beings are equal? Then you're a feminist!

Well, such was my naïve belief, until now. While disagreements between supporters of any movement or system of beliefs are unavoidable, I thought that at least human equality was one area in which feminists would unite. I saw the notion of a feminist as being anti-men as merely one of many unjustified stereotypes, such as being ugly, or unwomanly.

Recently, however, I realised that man-hating feminism was all too real. My first experience of this was on Twitter. An article in the Independent had revealed that many men experience lasting psychological trauma at the birth of their children. I was horrified by the experiences described. Unfortunately, certain feminists of twitter were not. One lamented: "They can't even let us have childbirth without fucking whining about what a hard time they have"; another declared that the traumatised men were "just squeamish", a reaction ominously similar to men in decades past who have labelled women as "hysterical". When I tried to explain that the article made the obviously correct assumption that childbirth is more traumatising for women, and simply reported undeniable trauma also experienced by certain men, I was accused of "trolling", and of not knowing "much about feminism". Finally, when I responded by saying that my words were due to a belief that "feminism at its heart should be about women being equal to men", I was met with the response, "it's a women's movement. Men do not get a say in it and they take opportunities to hijack and derail."'

UK: Ramsgate recreation ground sexual assault 'victim' cautioned

Mastodon · 20 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A 19-year-old woman has been cautioned for wasting police time after making a false sexual assault claim.

The recreation ground in Boundary Road, Ramsgate, was cordoned off on Friday while officers investigated.

The woman reported she had been attacked by a man at the park at around 2am.

She was formally cautioned for wasting police time last night.

Kent Police thanked the public for their help following the initial appeal for information.'

Woman Charged with Domestic Violence After Scissors Attack

Mastodon · 20 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Bonnie McConnell, 44, of Hampshire Drive, Nashua, was arrested May 16 just before 9 a.m., charged with one count of domestic violence second degree assault, a Class B Felony; and one count of domestic violence simple assault for an alleged scissor attack on a male victim.

Police responded to McConnell's Hampshire Drive home on May 16 after it was reported that she had allegedly used a pair of scissors to "recklessly injure" a man known to her.

A Class B Felony is punishable by up to seven years imprisonment, exclusive of fines. A Class A Misdemeanor is punishable by up to one year incarceration, exclusive of fines. McConnell was held at the Nashua Police Department on $3,500 cash or surety pending her upcoming arraignment at the 9th Circuit Court-Nashua District Division.'

Scotland: Violent men: A woman's right to know

Mastodon · 20 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WOMEN would be able to seek information about the domestic violence history of new partners under plans to be proposed by senior police officers in Scotland.

The Association of Scottish Police Superintendents (Asps) is this week expected to back calls for the Domestic Violence Disclosure Scheme – known as Clare's Law – which is being piloted by four forces in England and Wales, and could be extended north of the Border.

The Association's annual conference is also likely to support the introduction of Domestic Abuse Protection Orders in Scotland, which would require men with a history of violence in the home to disclose previous convictions themselves.

And in a further extension of Clare's Law, some senior officers also want police to be able to share information about known abusers with potential victims, even though this may breach data protection laws.'

Australia: 'Get your heels on, boys'

Mastodon · 20 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WHEN it comes to footwear, men and women should be able to agree on at least one thing; nothing makes a statement like a set of high heels.

The humble heel will provide the basis for the Ipswich Women's Centre Against Domestic Violence (IWCADV) campaign to raise awareness of domestic, family and sexual violence in the city this afternoon.

The Walk a Mile in Her Shoes March will involve men and women donning high heels for a walk through the CBD, starting in d'Arcy Doyle Place at 5pm.

IWCADV community development worker Michelle Dang said the march aimed to make a strong statement against "gendered violence".'

Israel: TV Host: Feminism Felling Divorced Dads

Mastodon · 20 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Avri Gilad, one of Israel's most popular TV personalities, has decried what he calls a "fad" of false accusations against divorced fathers.

"Every day I get e-mails from fathers whose natural right to see their children is denied them by social workers, courts, the police, and what not," Gilad wrote on his popular Facebook page, which is followed by more than 20,000 people. "They cry out and no one listens – sometimes they are even mocked.

"The feminist revolution, which I support wholeheartedly, is felling victims among my brothers, the divorced fathers. In the name of [fighting] thousands of years of discrimination, in the name of an injustice that was done in the past and is done in the present to millions of women in the world, by rapacious men who shame the male sex, the legal systems believe that it is okay to mow down good people, devoted fathers who divorced because they chose to, or because others chose so for them.'

Canada: "Women Less Likely to Get Trauma Center Care After Injury"

Minuteman · 20 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A new Canadian study has uncovered an apparent gender bias in the hospital setting, with women less likely than men to get trauma center care following a severe injury.

"Gender-based disparities in access to health care services in general have been recognized for some time, and evidence is emerging that these disparities extend to the treatment of severe injuries in trauma centers," study author Andrea Hill, a postdoctoral fellow at Sunnybrook Health Sciences Centre and the University of Toronto, said in a news release.

...

The team's findings stem from an analysis involving nearly 99,000 adult patients throughout Canada. About a third were women, and all had sought hospital treatment following a severe injury.

Across all age groups, just less than half of the women received trauma center care, compared to more than 63 percent of men in the same situation.'

SAVE E-lert: This June, Meet the Women of DV Reform

Matt · 21 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

In case you haven't made plans yet to attend our June conference,"Celebrating Our Progress!" I thought I'd tell you about last year's event. We had captivating speakers, connections were made, friendships were started, and we all left feeling a little more empowered.

This year's conference is expected to be better than ever. We are excited to have two women as our keynote speakers.

June 21 - Optional lobbying. Speaker Erin Pizzey, founder of the abuse shelter movement. Complimentary dinner.

June 22 - Keynote speaker Kathleen King, former magistrate. Several more speakers. Complimentary lunch.

Visit the SAVE website for the schedule and info on lodging:
http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp/annual-conference-2013/

Visit eventbrite to register online: http://celebratingourprogress.eventbrite.com/

I hope to see you there,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

P.S. Conference ticket prices go up June 1st.

NOW President: Student Loan Debt -- It's Worse for Women

Mastodon · 21 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How bad is the wage gap for women in the workplace?

For college graduates, it's so bad that it begins even before women begin their careers.

According to a study by AAUW, Graduating to a Pay Gap: The Earnings of Women and Men One Year After College Graduation:
...
AAUW's findings tell us that women are disproportionately likely to take out loans; among 2007-2008 graduates, 68 percent of women borrowed money for college compared to 63 percent of men.'

Sweden: Time to introduce gender taxes?

Mastodon · 21 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Would a gender tax designed so it would be about men paying higher taxes because of that there is still an unexplained pay gap of around seven per cent in favor of men.

But there are more reasons that makes an average of 4,500 kronor per month, the difference in income between men and women. It's about the choices we have to do and how these choices are valued. Still, women take out the majority of parental leave and working part-time to a greater extent and more unpaid home. It loses women in their wallets, for life. The injustice of it is necessary to talk about and take responsibility for.'

Student government nominee disqualified from "diversity" position for being straight, white, and male

Mastodon · 21 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A student's bid to become associate vice president of diversity and inclusion at Northwestern University was derailed last Wednesday over accusations that his status as a white heterosexual male would make it impossible for him to perform the position's duties.

Piotrkowski reportedly attempted to appeal to the Student Senate on the grounds that he identifies as a religious minority and has a lesbian sister, but it was to no avail.

...

Ian Coley, a student on the Associate Student Government Diversity and Inclusion Committee, later said white heterosexual males are not qualified to hold the position of associate vice president of diversity and inclusion.

"This university is not ready, in any capacity, for a heterosexual white male to be in charge in any way of diversity and inclusion," said Coley, according to the Daily Northwestern.

"I don't know if any university is," he reportedly added.

However, Hayley Stevens, the outgoing associate vice president of diversity and inclusion told the Daily Northwestern she supported Piotrkowski's nomination, adding, "he was our best candidate."'

High-profile false rape threat fabricator also had gun menacing conviction

Mastodon · 21 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Meg Lanker-Simons, an award winning liberal student activist and talk show host at the University of Wyoming (UW), walked into a radio station in 2005 and threatened her former boss with a Glock 44 .40 caliber handgun, according to court documents.

Lanker-Simons, whose Tumblr blog won a 2012 Think Progress award, made national news again last month when police accused her of fabricating a high-profile rape threat against herself prepared to look as if it came from a conservative.

According to the 2006 affidavit on the firing, she walked into the office of her former employer and pointed the gun at the man who decided to fire her, who reported he was in “fear for his life.”
...
Lanker-Simons “admitted to having (a) gun in (her) purse and pulling it out and waving it around (the) victim,” according to the affidavit.

She pled guilty and received six- years of probation. At the time, Lanker-Simons went by the name Meghan Michelena, according to the Laramie Boomerang.'

National Conference on male DV victims on Oct. 10, 2013

Matt · 21 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Conference info here. This is being put on by the Mankind Initiative.

Virginia Parents Outraged After Walmart Security Allegedly Suspected Father Of Kidnapping Biracial Daughters

Mastodon · 22 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Virginia couple was shocked to find a police officer in front of their home when they returned from running errands, but they were even more surprised by the reason for the cop's visit-- to question whether or not they were in fact their children's parents.

Joseph, a white man who didn't want his last name revealed, and his black wife Keana told Fox5DC that they were outraged after the policeman told them a security guard at their local Walmart had suspected Joseph of kidnapping his three young daughters.
...
According to Keana, she was told a customer was alarmed after seeing her husband and children.

"Well, the customer was concerned because they saw the children with your husband and he didn't think that they fit," Keana told the news station. "And I said, ‘What do you mean by they don't fit?’ And I was trying to get her to say it. And she says, ‘Well, they just don't match up.’"'

Ed. note: At first I thought this was more a racial prejudice issue, not necessarily an issue for MRA interest as such. But then I thought, "Would the same thing have happened if the mother was with the kids at the Walmart?" Women with children no matter what the ethnicities of the people involved are never questioned like this. Men with children? It's an immediate cause for suspicion.

The masculinity debate: no wonder men stay out of it

Mastodon · 22 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The past week has again highlighted the inexplicable absence of an intelligent discussion conducted by men about ourselves. It's followed a familiar pattern: a leading female commentator – Diane Abbott on this occasion – diagnoses male ailments and prescribes her cures. What comes back from the patient? Silence. Can there be any group that is subject to so much debate and accusation, and is so apparently powerful – yet remains so utterly speechless?

It reminds me of a stereotypical scene: a woman challenging a man on some personal or domestic issue; him sitting before her silently, absorbing, stonewalling and eventually walking away. It's a dissatisfying experience for both. She complains to her friends. He has no one to talk to. Somewhere here are clues to this bewildering male silence on the public stage about our own condition.
...
Why are we ridiculed when we talk about ourselves? Perhaps because men are assumed to be inherently powerful, with nothing to complain about. It's a mistake. We urgently require an updated theory of gender that acknowledges there are, and always have been, discrete areas of female power and male powerlessness, not simply female powerlessness. Patriarchy did not rule alone. There was also matriarchy – and there still is.

A revolution is taking place in masculinity, but much of it is below the radar and denied, even when well-documented. This transformation is about much more than "helping" women and addressing their complaints. If we want to hear about it, then we need democratic personal, private and domestic spaces where men feel comfortable to speak. That might generate a more open, less condemning public space. Until then, women will continue to find themselves shouting into the silence about issues that we need to confront together.'

S. Africa’s ANC Criticizes Circumcision Investigation

Mastodon · 22 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'South Africa’s ruling African National Congress criticized the slow pace of a police investigation into the death of 35 young men during traditional initiation ceremonies.

Twenty-nine boys and young men 13 years to 21 years old died in the eastern Mpumalanga province during this year’s rituals that involve circumcisions, police spokesman Colonel Leonard Hlati said in a phone interview today. Another six died in the northern Limpopo province, according to the ANC.

“While we are fully supportive of the practice of initiation, we believe it should not be a death sentence to so many young people,” the ANC said in an e-mailed statement today.

US ambassador to Zambia urging circumcision

Mastodon · 22 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'UNITED States Ambassador to Zambia Mark Storella has urged traditional leaders in Zambia to help sensitise their subjects and other citizens on the importance of male circumcision.

Mr Storella said male circumcision was important in reducing the spread of HIV/AIDS.

He was speaking on Tuesday afternoon when his delegation, which included United States Ambassador to Zimbabwe Bruce Wharton, paid a courtesy call on Senior Chief Mukuni in Kazungula District in Southern Province.

“Your Royal Highness, we are trying to support male circumcision and we think it is important that traditional leaders actively participate in this campaign.

“So far, Chief Mumena of North-Western Province is a big advocate of male circumcision,” he said.'

Men are stupid, Samsung says

Mastodon · 22 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Flatulent, dirty, couch-bound, unkempt, and unevolved: It's Samsung's new view of men.

A new ad for Samsung televisions portrays men as dirty slobs, just a half step up from cavemen -- and it has the more evolved members of the male species crying foul.

"That's probably one of the most vile adverts I've ever seen," wrote one outraged user on a Reddit forum dedicated to men's rights. "This isn't the normal IV drip of laughing at men; this is simply mainlining outright contempt."

"Are they trying to alienate their primary consumer base?" another person asked.'

Ad on YouTube here.

False Rape Report Not First For Syracuse Woman

Mastodon · 22 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Syracuse woman who reported a rape in mid-March by an Indiana State Police officer, had filed similar reports in 2002 and 2009 with Syracuse Police.

Jama K. Brown, 33, West Pickwick Drive, Syracuse, was arrested May 15 and charged with false informing claiming an Indiana State Police officer raped her. The name she provided to police was fictional.

Information began unfolding on March 18 when an officer from Indiana State Police Bremen Post contacted Sgt. Kathy Robbins with the Fort Wayne post, asking her to contact Brown. Brown told the trooper she had been the victim of a sexual assault by an officer, but did not wish to speak to anyone out of the Bremen post. The investigator was told Brown had also claimed she was stopped by a Kosciusko County Sheriff's Department deputy a few days after the alleged assault telling her to leave the state officer alone.'

A quarter of young girls with absent fathers 'grow into depressed teenagers'

Matt · 22 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Almost a quarter of girls whose fathers were absent during early childhood suffer depression as teenagers, a report says.

Some 23 per cent will show symptoms such as sadness or severe tiredness later in life if their parent leaves before they turn five, researchers found.

It makes them almost 50 per cent more likely to have future mental health problems than older girls, confirming previous studies that suggest pre-schoolers cope badly with break-ups because they are less likely to have a support network of friends and other family members.'

Melanie Phillips: The "Left" and family breakdown

Matt · 22 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By the late Eighties, it was glaringly obvious that families were suffering a chronic crisis of identity and self-confidence.

There were more and more divorces and single parents — along with mounting evidence that family disintegration and the subsequent creation of step-families or households with no father figure at all did incalculable damage to children.

‘Too many children lack a consistent mother or father figure,’ researchers told me.

Poverty, the Left’s habitual excuse, could not be the culprit since middle-class children were also not receiving the parental attention they required.
...
From their research, they concluded that children in fractured families tend to suffer more ill-health, do less well at school, are more likely to be unemployed, more prone to criminal behaviour and to repeat as adults the same cycle of unstable parenting.

But instead of welcoming this analysis as identifying a real problem, the Left turned on the authors, branding them as evil Right-wingers for being ‘against single mothers’.
...
Having experienced how the absence of proper fathering could screw up a child for life, I believed I was doing no more than stating the obvious when I deplored the explosion of lone parenting, female-headed households and mass fatherlessness.

But, to my amazement, at The Guardian, I found that over this and many other issues, I was branded as reactionary, authoritarian and, of course, Right-wing.'

Israeli Intactivist Group Produces Hebrew Materials

Matt · 22 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(TEL AVIV) - One subject we cover frequently at Salem-News.com is the stark reality of circumcision of boys and girls. Our articles examine the physical and emotional implications, the modifications of laws regulating this practice, and the cultural changes and developments that are raising awareness in leaps and bounds.
...
Gonnen and Ben Shalem (The Israeli Association for the Abolition of Circumcision), two Israeli Intactivist groups, have produced stickers and postcards in Hebrew:'

SAVE E-lert: Tell Kia Motors to Stop Promoting Female Violence

Matt · 23 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Kia Motors seems to think they will sell more cars to women if their ads include a little female-on-male abuse. In the following ad they've made the woman a human-looking robot. We think it's offensive, whether she's a robot or not.

Please contact Kia Motors today. Use whichever link below is the most convenient.

Tell them you won't be buying any of their cars as long as they try to sell them with "humorous violence."

- Kia Motors: http://www.kia.com/
- Kia on Facebook: https://www.facebook.com/Kiamotorsworldwide
- Kia on Twitter: https://twitter.com/Kia

On behalf of every victim of violence, thank you.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

NPO: Review Continues of Massachusetts Child Support Guidelines

Matt · 23 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The public relations officer for the Massachusetts Trial Court informed us that the task force continues its work reviewing the child support guidelines.

Currently, Chief Justice Paula Carey is leading the review of the child support guidelines and serves on the Governor's Working Group on Child-Centered Family Laws. On July 16th, Chief Justice Paula Carey will take over as Chief Justice of the Trial Court for a five year term replacing Judge Robert Mulligan who plans to retire.

It is the Chief Justice of the Trial Court who has final approval for the work of the child support guidelines review task force, as well as the recommendations for openings within the trial court, including the vacancy of Chief Justice of the Probate and Family Court created by Judge Paula Carey's promotion.'

UK: Men to blame for childless women?

Mastodon · 24 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yesterday, journalist Melissa Kite became the latest woman to publicly trash men in a sexist, undeserving rant - this time, by saying those exercising a human right not to become fathers were 'selfish'.

Just days after champagne socialist Diane Abbott claimed that modern masculinity is Viagra-chomping, whiskey-swigging homophobia - even for the millions of men who are gay, Kite jumped on the bandwagon with her own sweeping statements.

In a finger-pointing, foot-stamping article for MailOnline she said men 'do not always play fair in matters of fertility', adding that they 'increasingly behave with terrible selfishness when it comes to giving up their bachelor lifestyles'.

She then added that men who date women without immediately signing up for parenthood are committing some sort of 'fraud'.'

Kite's article is here.

Alice Walker's Daughter Slams Mom for Radical Feminist Ideology

Mastodon · 24 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rebecca Walker explained her family feud for The Mail Online, a personal essay blasting her mother's lifelong hatred of motherhood.

"The truth is that I very nearly missed out on becoming a mother - thanks to being brought up by a rabid feminist who thought motherhood was about the worst thing that could happen to a woman.

You see, my mum taught me that children enslave women. I grew up believing that children are millstones around your neck, and the idea that motherhood can make you blissfully happy is a complete fairytale ... Feminism has much to answer for denigrating men and encouraging women to seek independence whatever the cost to their families."'

Wikipedia on Alice Walker here.

Female county official arrested - but not charged - in domestic violence incident

Mastodon · 25 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The head of Multnomah County's health department was arrested on an accusation of domestic violence this week after she allegedly bit her husband, who had filed that day for divorce.

Lillian Shirley, 65, was taken into custody and later released. Her husband, Tom Davidson, declined to press charges, according to the Portland Police report.

Shirley has headed Multnomah County's health department since 1999 and has been involved as a board member in numerous health and community organizations in Portland and nationally. She previously served as executive director of the Boston Public Health Commission.'

Jodi Arias 'Survivor' shirt sickening says domestic violence victim

Mastodon · 25 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PHOENIX - Jodi Arias' claims that she killed Travis Alexander in self-defense have set actual domestic violence victims back ten years, according to one abuse survivor.

“Travis was the victim of domestic violence,” said Leah Pettyjohn, a domestic violence survivor. “He ended up the ultimate victim when his ex-girlfriend murdered him.”

Pettyjohn escaped a dangerous relationship and now advocates for other victims. She does not believe that Arias, now a convicted murderer, was an abused woman.

“To stand there in court with a 'Survivor' shirt, it’s sickening,” Pettyjohn told ABC15.'

Police: Woman's domestic violence injuries were self-inflicted

Mastodon · 25 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A San Benito woman is facing new criminal charges after police learned she lied during a domestic disturbance and faked her injuries to get her boyfriend in trouble.

San Benito police arrested 25-year-old Evangelina Perez on a false report to a police officer charge last week.

Police officers were originally called to a domestic disturbance on Chapman Street back on April 16th.

Investigators arrested both Perez and her 47-year-old boyfriend Salvador Mercado, Jr. for the incident.

Perez claimed Mercado had scratched her while Mercado claimed Perez threatened to have drug cartel members kill him.'

Sexist Women Bosses

Mastodon · 25 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sari had been working in book publishing for a long time. And she was the first to admit: She preferred to work with women. In her experience, women were far superior to men as editors. They were better suited to collaborating with writers. They were more patient, more nurturing. “Women can coax far better material from writers than men,” Sari told me plainly. “It’s just a fact.” She believed it to her core.

Which is why by the time Sari ascended to the position of editorial director of a large publishing group, the majority of her hires were women. And in cases where she did hire a man, or perhaps inherited one, she admitted she was harder on him than she ever would be with her female employees, questioning his decisions or micromanaging him until she felt he’d adequately proven himself. “I have this feeling, this belief, that since male editors are often so arrogant, their own egos clash with the writer’s and prevent great material from happening,” she told me. “And I can’t have that happening with any of my projects. So I end up pushing and pushing and keeping constant tabs, jumping all over a guy for even the tiniest misstep. It’s exhausting, but that way, I can avoid one mistake from turning into many.”'

Unprecedented Domestic Violence Study Affirms Need to Recognize Male Victims

Mastodon · 25 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The most comprehensive review of the scholarly domestic violence research literature ever conducted concludes, among other things, that women perpetrate physical and emotional abuse, as well as engage in control behaviors, at comparable rates to men. The Partner Abuse State of Knowledge project, or PASK, whose final installment was just published in the journal Partner Abuse, is an unparalleled three-year research project, conducted by 42 scholars at 20 universities and research centers, and including information on 17 areas of domestic violence research.

“Over the years, research on partner abuse has become unnecessarily fragmented and politicized,” commented John Hamel, Editor-in-Chief of Partner Abuse and PASK Director. “The purpose of this project is to bring together, in a rigorously evidence-based, transparent and methodical manner, existing knowledge about partner abuse, with reliable, up-to-date research that can easily be accessed by anyone. PASK is grounded in the premises that everyone is entitled to their opinion, but not to their own facts; that these facts should be available to everyone, and that domestic violence intervention and policy ought to be based upon these facts rather than ideology and special interests.”'

USAID: "Women Deliver 2013"

Minuteman · 25 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'On May 28 – 30, leaders and advocates from 160 countries are gathering in Kuala Lumpur for Women Deliver 2013, one of the decades' largest conferences on girls' and women's health and rights. USAID is proud to be a sponsor of Women Deliver 2013. A number of our technical experts will present at the conference on the latest progress and challenges around family planning, maternal and child health, and other programming that addresses the needs of girls and women.'

"The Privileged Sex", English ed., published

Matt · 25 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Book here. From the intro:

'The outline of the book is as follows. Chapter 1 sets the stage by examining several central beliefs about the oppression of women at various times and places in history, and then exposing them for the myths they are. Chapter 2 deals with the different paths that lead toward, respectively, manhood and womanhood, and shows how both nature and society have conspired to make it much harder to become, and to be, a man than a woman. Chapter 3 investigates the privileges women have historically enjoyed, and continue to enjoy, with respect to work. Chapter 4 explains how, because women have traditionally done less and easier work than men, different societies at different times and places in history have sought to ensure women's economic welfare through support by men. Chapter 5 looks at women's position with respect to crime and the law, and shows how laws are often drafted and applied specifically to help women. Chapter 6 shows how women have been freed from participation in war, as well as looks into the attempts to protect them against its horrors. Chapter 7 deals with the results of women being granted their privileged position, including women's more comfortable existence, the greater attention paid to their welfare, and the longer lives they enjoy. Chapter 8 examines why women, in spite of their many privileges, continue to bemoan their lot. And finally, Chapter 9 presents my conclusions.'

Wikipedia's entry on the author is here. Interesting fellow, much of his writing is on military history.

Judge slashes sentence for Virginia teacher who slept with student, citing diagnosis of hypersexuality

Mastodon · 25 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Virginia high school teacher who slept with a student will only spent four months of her 11-year sentence behind bars after she was diagnosed with hypersexuality.

Kathleen Cawthorne, 33, will be freed more than a decade early after a judge ruled she could not control the sudden sexual urges that took over her body.

A court heard how the bipolar educator seduced a 17-year-old boy at William Campbell Combined School in Rustburg in March 2012.'

Minnesota Coach Fired Due to False Allegations

charlie · 26 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A Minnesota college football coach tells his story of being fired for allegations of child pornography, based on home videos of his own children. He has been totally exonerated by the courts and social services, yet he has still been fired by Minnesota State Mankato. Excerpt:

'IT TOOK FOUR hours in jail before Hoffner was told that the charges against him related to videos of his children on his cellphone. It took a night behind bars and then another day for police to allow him to watch those videos with his lawyer. A police officer sat in the room with them to provide supervision. The lawyer took notes. Hoffner tried to pretend the children on the screen were strangers, hoping it would help him critique the videos more harshly.

They watched in silence. The police officer fidgeted in his seat.

"That was it?" Hoffner said when the second video ended. "The only thing I saw was a bunch of happy kids."
...
Meanwhile, day by day, the prosecution's case against him was falling apart. Police seized and searched his laptop, cellphone and a home computer and found nothing -- no other images or videos that could be considered pornographic. A day care provider testified that the Hoffner children "have always exhibited appropriate social development" and "emotional competence." A certified sex therapist viewed the videos and said they consisted of "normal child's play." Blue Earth County Human Services conducted its own investigation and interviewed the Hoffner children, none of whom even remembered being videotaped naked.
...

On Nov. 30, a judge reviewed the evidence and ruled to dismiss Hoffner's case, concluding that the charges against him should never have been filed. "The videos under consideration here contain nude images of the defendant's minor children dancing and acting playful after a bath," the judge, Krista J. Jass, wrote in her decision. "That is all they contain."

Hanson, who had been asked by Hoffner's family and lawyer to drop the charges numerous times and always refused, said he disagreed with the judge's decision but would not appeal. Then he quickly defended his handling of the case. "No matter what the prosecutor does in a controversial case with a high-profile suspect, they will be criticized," he said before declining further comment about the case.
...
The university remained unmoved, citing the mysterious second investigation into Hoffner's conduct. It was unrelated to the initial charge of child pornography, officials said, but involved two "internal complaints" against Hoffner that the university refused to provide details about. (Despite these complaints, the school still employed Hoffner.)'

US Prof. Murray Strauss: Domestic Violence is Not One-Sided

Matt · 26 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video interview at Israeli DV conference on YouTube here. Dr. Strauss' web site is here. Some from his Biographical Summary:

'Professor of Sociology and founder and Co-Director of the Family Research Laboratory, University of New Hampshire (since 1968).

Previously taught at the Univ of Minnesota, Cornell, Wisconsin, Washington State, U of Ceylon (Sri Lanka).

Visiting Professor: U. of Kentucky, U. Bombay (India), U. of York (England), Columbia Univ, U. of Leuven Belgium

EDUCATION: Ph.D. in Sociology, University of Wisconsin, Madison, 1956.

OFFICES IN SCIENTIFIC SOCIETIES:
* President, Society For the Study of Social Problems (1989-90)
* President, Eastern Sociological Society (1991-92. and Vice President 1976-77)
* President, National Council on Family Relations (1972-3)
* Member of the Board of Directors/Governing Council:
American Association for the Advancement of Science (1971-73)
International Society For Research On Aggression, 1980-82, 2003-08
International Sociological Association, Deviance & Social Control Section, 1998-2003, 2004-08'

New Rutgers Athletic Director Accused Of Abuse

Mastodon · 26 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEWARK, N.J. — New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie plans to speak with Rutgers officials about a report that the woman hired to clean up the university' scandal-scarred athletic program quit as Tennessee's women's volleyball coach 16 years ago after her players submitted a letter complaining she ruled through humiliation, fear and emotional abuse.

Christie spokesman Michael Drewniak says the governor is aware of the report about Julie Hermann in the Star-Ledger of Newark, but wants to get more details before commenting.
...
The Star-Ledger reported that Tennessee players wrote the mentality cruelty they suffered when Hermann was coach was unbearable, adding she called them "whores, alcoholics and learning disabled."

Hermann was hired to replace the ousted Tim Pernetti, who was let go after basketball coach Mike Rice was fired for abusive behavior.
...
"Their accounts depict a coach who thought nothing of demeaning them, who would ridicule and laugh at them over their weight and their performances, sometimes forcing players to do 100 sideline pushups during games, who punished them after losses by making them wear their workout clothes inside out in public or not allowing them to shower or eat, and who pitted them against one another, cutting down particular players with the whole team watching, and through gossip.'

UK: The Lose the Lads' Mags campaign demonstrates the power of modern feminism

Mastodon · 28 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week marks the launch of the campaign Lose the Lads' Mags, spearheaded by feminist organisations UK Feminista and Object. Depending on who you believe, this is either an attempt to free employees and customers from "an intimidating, hostile, degrading, humiliating or offensive environment" that could arise from exposure to sexist pornographic content - or, in the words of Loaded and FHM journalist Piers Hernu in a report by the BBC - "a deeply sinister and disturbing attempt by a group of fundamentalist, fanatical feminists...to bully supermarkets into removing lads' mags from the shelves".

As far as deeply sinister and disturbing acts by fundamentalist groups go, this one seems fairly civilised. The lawyers and campaigners behind Lose the Lads' Mags are unlikely to turn up, Spring Breakers-style, in pink balaclavas, toting pistols at the local Tesco Extra. Any facet of the Equality Act that may or may not be used against employers is unlikely to be found "disturbing" (unless you're a person regularly given to using that well-worn phrase, "IT'S POLITICAL CORRECTNESS GONE MAD!") And as for fundamentalism: while we're taking the dictionary definition of feminism as the advocacy of women's rights on the grounds of political, social, and economic equality to men, charges of 'fundamentalist' egalitarianism don't seem very threatening at all. Unless, of course, you're a sexist.'

Feminists vs. Facebook

Mastodon · 28 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of course there is some real, gross misogyny on the Web. But how likely is it that a Facebook user would encounter such content on the site without actively looking for it? For the record, its existence was news to me after several years of Facebook activity. The now-removed pages were hardly popular: a Google cache shows that "Violently raping your friends, just for laughs" had a whopping 17 "likes"; "Kicking your girlfriend in the fanny because she won't make you a sandwich" had 34. (That's one fewer than the still-existing "Dumping your boyfriend via castration".) On the HuffPost Live panel, Friedman and co-campaigner Laura Bates talked about women being driven off Facebook by sexism, but the evidence is, once again, strictly anecdotal. Non-anecdotally, women were 57 percent of Facebook users last year. Friedman also claimed that Facebook staff is "overwhelmingly male"; actually, in 2011, it was about one-third female, the best among the major technology companies.
...
Now, the feminist protest coalition is pushing advertisers to drop Facebook unless the company takes appropriate action. ... The activists clearly don't want equal treatment for what could be considered gender-based hate speech against men, such as the Facebook page "Beating up your boyfriend to keep him in line" (which is still online and has over 16,000 "likes")—or a feminist "satire" exhorting the average man not to rape women, which has over a thousand Facebook shares.

People have every right to speak out against bigotry and bashing—and to ask moderated websites to reject noxious content. But letting ideologues dictate the boundaries of acceptable speech on a large area of the Internet is a very bad idea.'

SAVE E-lert: Need a Reason to Celebrate?

Matt · 28 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

As you make your summer plans, consider attending SAVE's annual conference in Washington, DC. on June 21 and 22.

Join us as we celebrate the progress we have made over the last year. For instance...

Think back to the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) re-authorization. Do you remember the controversy? For the first time ever, there was real discussion about it's shortfalls.

Together, we did that. Our voices were heard. Now, that's something to celebrate! Attend the conference, learn what other progress we've made, and learn what we expect to celebrate next year.

Register: http://celebratingourprogress.eventbrite.com/
More info: http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp/annual-conference-2013/

Get your tickets today - Prices go up on Saturday!

See you soon,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

O2/Symantec now blocking 100 MR sites

Matt · 28 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Via email from the article author:

"Relatively new additions of particular note includes the likes of Daddyjustice.com, Fathers 4 Justice Quebec, dvmen.co.uk, and even UK men's political party Justice for Men and Boys (and the women who love them). Therefore we have not just censorship and defamation by O2/Symantec, but denial of help to abuse vicitms and interference in the democratic process too.
...
Earlier this month I identified a number of additional companies using the Rulesapce filter that causes men's human rights sites to be censored. Whilst some of these companies do at least only use it as an opt in option rather than something that has to be disable, the fact is that every single one regards criticism of feminist and human rights for men as "hate". Even libraries and schools are using the Rulespace filter, so this censorship of your site is now party government funded too!
...
Contacting O2 really does have an impact. Ten sites have already been unblocked, many due to my contact with O2, so please utilise as many means as possible for putting them under pressure. It's well worth emailing Ronan.Dunne-at-o2.com (O2's CEO) as you will at least get a rather interesting reply, the company is highly active on Twitter and will respond should you tweet you concerns to @O2. This is just as important as emailing due to the public nature of Twitter. Internet filtering is a growing phenomena, for example recently the UK government has promoted to filter public wi-fi spots and an increasing number of ISPs are introducing filters on the list, therefore any sites on the "hate" list can expect to see increasing numbers of people denied access to their work in future.'

Police knock down Bynes sex harassment claim

Mastodon · 29 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- New York police say they've found no evidence corroborating a claim by actress Amanda Bynes that she was sexually harassed after police were called to her apartment.

"A credible civilian witness who was with the officers throughout told investigators that none touched Ms. Bynes inappropriately or otherwise engaged in misconduct at any time," a NYPD Internal Affairs representative said.

The incident is the latest in a series of run-ins with the law for Bynes, who had a squeaky-clean image as a teen actress.

Officers were called Thursday to her building in Manhattan's theater district after her building manager reported the 27-year-old was smoking an "illegal substance" in the lobby, police said.'

Australia: Abuse cases deter men from becoming teachers

Mastodon · 29 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'HIGH-profile court cases involving allegations of male teachers committing indecent acts on children have created a steady decline in young men waiting to join the profession.

Last week a Mackay teacher was found not guilty of inappropriately touching an 11-year-old student.

Queensland Teachers Union president Kevin Bates said media attention on these cases meant young men considering becoming teachers were sometimes dissuaded.

"I don't see there's any way a young person couldn't but notice the public perception of men in teaching is one of doubts about the genuineness of the person's intentions," Mr Bates said.

"As a consequence I think there has been, over time, the effect of dissuading some men of choosing teaching as a career."

Mr Bates said over the past two decades, the percentage of female teachers had increased from about 70% to about 75%.'

China: Newborn baby boy survives after being flushed down toilet by mother

Minuteman · 29 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The mother of the newborn baby boy flushed down a toilet in China watched in secret as rescuers dramatically plucked him alive from a sewer pipe.

The 22-year-old woman is believed to have raised the initial alarm but only confessed to police after they searched her rented room and found toys and blood-stained toilet paper, the Chinese state news agency reported.

The two-day-old, 5lb boy has been temporarily named Baby 59 – the number of the incubator in which he lies with a fractured skull and severe bruising.
...
Police initially said they were treating the case of as possible attempted homicide, but it was not immediately clear whether the mother would face any criminal charges.

A police officer said she had hidden her pregnancy and claimed the baby fell into the lavatory after she unexpectedly gave birth. ‘The woman was on the scene during the entire rescue process ... and admitted she was the mother when we asked her.’

He said police were still investigating whether she had any ‘malicious intentions’ before deciding on charges.'

Under pressure, Facebook targets sexist hate speech

Mastodon · 29 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Under mounting pressure from activists and advertisers, Facebook is ramping up efforts to stamp out hate speech, particularly depictions of violence against women.
...
In Levine's post, Facebook promised to:

-- Update guidelines that its Community Standards team uses to identify hate speech, with help from legal experts and women's groups

-- Update training for team members who police hate speech

-- Increase accountability for Facebook users whose pages don't legally qualify as hate speech but who post content that is "cruel or insensitive"

-- Implement a policy that requires users who create pages with questionable content to publicly attach their personal account to them

-- Encourage groups already working on cyber-hate issues to include the women's coalition.'

Also on Facebook, among others: Dumping your boyfriend via castration

When Men Experience Sexism

Mastodon · 29 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Can men be victims of sexism?

An NPR Morning Edition report this week suggests strongly that the answer is "yes." As Jennifer Ludden reports, after divorce men can face burdensome alimony payments even in situations where their ex-wives are capable of working and earning a substantial income. Even in cases where temporary alimony makes sense—as when a spouse has quit a job to raise the children—it's hard to understand the need for lifetime alimony payments, given women's current levels of workforce participation. As one alimony-paying ex-husband says, "The theory behind this was fine back in the '50s, when everybody was a housewife and stayed home." But today, it looks like an antiquated perpetuation of retrograde gender roles—a perpetuation which, disproportionately, harms men.'

Do we really want Facebook to decide what qualifies as hate speech and what doesn't?

Mastodon · 29 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As my colleague Eliza Kern has reported, Facebook has apologized for the way it handled "hate speech" against women on the social network, after repeated complaints from advocacy groups alleging that it was turning a blind eye to what was clearly offensive behavior. This has been hailed by some as a victory, since Facebook has admitted that its policies around such content are weak. But even if its policies are improved, do we really want Facebook to be the one deciding what qualifies as hate speech and what doesn't?

...

The larger problem in making Facebook take this kind of content down, however, is that it forces the network to take an even more active role in determining which of the comments or photos or videos posted by its billion or so users deserve to be seen and which don't. In other words, it gives Facebook even more of a licence to practice what amounts to censorship — something the company routinely (and legitimately) gets criticized for doing.'

Family Awarded $1.5 Million For Botched Circumcision

Mastodon · 29 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CHICAGO (CBS) — A North Shore family has won a lawsuit against a physician at Northwestern they say botched their son's circumcision.

...

The family's lawyer Dan Kotin says in 2007, when the boy was 12 hours old, a doctor at Northwestern inadvertently amputated the tip of the boy's penis.

Kotin says the doctor missed at least three safety procedures that should've been followed.

And Kotin says the boy"…suffered the amputation of the top 40 percent of the head of his penis."

The attorney for the doctor says the procedure was performed correctly and what happened was one of the unfortunate complications of a circumcision.'

SAVE: Prosecutor Ethics the Focus of Media Campaign

Matt · 30 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, DC--(Marketwired - May 29, 2013) - Following admissions by a star witness that she lied during an Alabama homicide trial -- sending a man to death row -- the Center for Prosecutor Integrity (CPI) is launching a national media campaign. The media effort is designed to engage the public, prosecutors, and other stakeholders in a national conversation about the effectiveness of the criminal justice system and the problem of wrongful convictions.

In the Alabama trial, investigators offered to pay Alisha Booker $10,000 in return for her testimony against Montez Spradley, charged with killing a 58-year-old woman. But in a pre-trial hearing held earlier this month, Booker testified that her testimony was not truthful, that she tried to renege on the agreement before going to trial, and that investigators threatened to prosecutor her if she refused to testify.
...
The CPI media campaign, which begins this week, consists of radio interviews to be aired across the country. Print editorial coverage is anticipated, as well.
...
The CPI Facebook page is found here: https://www.facebook.com/CenterForProsecutorIntegrity. Any person with a Facebook account is welcome to post a comment.

Germany: Violence against men: "I hid the knife in the house"

Matt · 30 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Translated article here. Excerpt:

'Hamburg - first he thought the problems with his girlfriend he could overcome. So it wrote Jochen K. * in his diary after she hit him first with his fist in the face. He had held her and tried to calm down. But the attack in the hallway should not be the only one getting his girlfriend became violent in the coming years. You did not get the problem under control. Today K. have to say: "An insane hubris."

Nine years they were together, have a daughter. By the time his girlfriend had become more jealous. "A relationship is unbearable when one must constantly expect to be attacked with fists," says K. Also, a pair of therapy could not help.

...

Mr. K. is not an isolated case, his experiences are no exception. In a comprehensive health study by the Robert Koch Institute has nearly 6,000 German adults also asked about their experiences of violence. Thus, men use violence rather in the social space and in the workplace, women are more likely in the home. How honest and comprehensive information, respondents, can be hard to tell with such a sensitive issue. "The social desirability says: 'I have an intact family, I've never been a victim, I am also not violent,'" says Heike Hölling health scientist, one of the authors of the study.'

China: Mother of baby boy stuck in sewer pipe won't be charged

Minuteman · 30 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The fall of a newborn baby into a toilet pipe in China was accidental and his mother will not be prosecuted, local officials say, adding the boy is healthy.

The mother, 22 and unmarried, had kept her pregnancy secret and gave birth unexpectedly when she went to the lavatory on Saturday.

...

"Our investigations showed it was an accident," a local police officer who declined to be named told AFP, and confirmed the mother will not be prosecuted. She refused to give further details.

...

The head of the hospital, Wu Xinhong, said the infant was healthy and ready to be released.

"His condition is good but his relatives have not come to pick him up yet," he told AFP.

Police have said the mother was in serious condition due to complications from the delivery, while authorities were still looking for the baby's father.'

Rodeo Argument Ends With Wife Biting Man’s Genitals

StayingFit · 30 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ROUGH AND READY (CBS13) — A man whose wife bit him on the genitals after an argument after a rodeo says his only regret is calling 911 on her.

Anthony Hill is still healing and says he’s standing by his wife, Christina Salinas.

Hill said Sunday was supposed the be a fun night out at the Penn Valley Rodeo. He says the argument followed a series of stressful events in their lives, including the fact Salinas’ ex-husband now lives with them.

Hill wanted to leave early, she wanted to stay. When they got home, the argument continued. Salinas’ ex-husband tried to separate the two, and when both men went to hold her down, that’s when she allegedly bit his penis.'

‘Alice in Wonderland’ coercion (George Will)

StayingFit · 30 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Editorial here. Excerpt:

'Responding to what it considers the University of Montana’s defective handling of complaints about sexual assaults, OCR, in conjunction with the Justice Department, sent the university a letter intended as a “blueprint” for institutions nationwide when handling sexual harassment, too. The letter, sent on May 9, encourages (see below) adoption of speech codes — actually, censorship regimes — to punish students who:

Make “sexual or dirty jokes” that are “unwelcome.” Or disseminate “sexual rumors” (even if true) that are “unwelcome.” Or make “unwelcome” sexual invitations. Or engage in the “unwelcome” circulation or showing of “e-mails or Web sites of a sexual nature.” Or display or distribute “sexually explicit drawings, pictures, or written materials” that are “unwelcome.”
...
Like the IRS abuses of power, the OCR-DOJ initiative demonstrates how permeated this administration is with disagreeable people with dangerous intentions. So the administration is making conservatism’s case against the unlimited arrogance that is both a cause and a consequence of unlimited government.'

It's good news to see that people of national prominence are speaking out about this. I found this article printed in a rather liberal newspaper, which makes me hopeful that people of every political stripe are concerned about these issues.

Why Men Still Can't Have It All

StayingFit · 30 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lately, the raging debate about issues of "work-life balance" has focused on whether or not women can "have it all." Entirely lost in this debate is the growing strain of work-life balance on men, who today are feeling the competing demands of work and home as much or more than women. And the truth is as shocking as it is obvious: No one can have it all. Any questions?
...
Allow me to paint another picture. One in which women are asked to make the same personal sacrifices as men past and present — too much time away from home, too many weekends at the computer, too much inconvenient travel — but then claim some special privilege in their hardship. One in which universal preschool and after-school programs would be a boon to all parents (and not, as Collins suggests, simply to women). In which men spend more time with their children, and are more involved with their home lives, than ever before. In which men work just as hard at their jobs, if not harder, than ever before. In which men now report higher rates of work-life stress than women do. In which men are tormented by the lyrics of "Cat's in the Cradle."'

This article is a very interesting response to the "women can/cannot have it all" debate that has been all over the media recently. It is a long article, and I don't agree with everything that the author has to say. But, he raises some good points and it's nice to see a male perspective on the subject, especially when he states the obvious: no one can have it all. Life is all about making choices, and living with the consequences of those choices.

Couple arrested on attempted murder charges

mens_issues · 30 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'DENVER – A man and a woman were arrested early Thursday on suspicion of trying to stab the woman's ex-husband to death.

Wheat Ridge Police responded at 12:53 a.m. to a house in the 3700 block of Vance Street in Wheat Ridge on reports of an assault. There they found a 41-year-old man suffering from multiple knife wounds to his face, neck and chest. He remains hospitalized following multiple surgeries.

Witnesses at the scene described seeing a gray car without a front bumper leaving the scene. Police eventually found the car and arrested 33-year-old James Bryant and 32-year-old Nicole Ferrara near the scene of the alleged crime. Both suspects are being held on charges of attempted first-degree murder.

It was determined that the victim is Ferrara's ex-husband.'

SAVE E-lert: Make Plans Now for False Allegations Awareness Month

Matt · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

June is False Allegations Awareness Month, and this year's theme is "Hold False-Accusers Accountable." We have put together a list of activities to help you educate others on false allegations of abuse.

First, educate yourself with our hand-out "False Allegations by the Numbers." Then ask your local newspaper or radio station to cover the issue.

Use this logo for your Facebook profile or post it to other social media streams such as Twitter. For more ideas, visit our website.

Don't forget to post on our Facebook page for Falsely Accused, to let us know what activities you've done.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

"You've Been Lied To": Violent Women Among Us

Matt · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Simply tells the truth: women in domestic relationships assault men at the same rate as men assault women in the same relationships.

IA: ACOG 2013 Report Available

Matt · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'On May 4, 2013, Intact America sponsored a sidewalk demonstration and press conference in New Orleans outside the annual convention of the American Congress of Obstetricians and Gynecologists (ACOG). During this one-day event, we protested the role of obstetricians in perpetrating circumcision in American hospitals. Read the press release.

Our mobile billboard, which patrolled the streets of New Orleans (photos courtesy of James Loewen), was a huge success, sparking countless conversations with doctors, tourists, and local residents. Even the driver, Roger, helped forward the cause by handing out information and telling people about Intact America! Many thanks to James Loewen, who took the photo above as well as these of our billboard.'

NPO: DSM-5 Strengthens Child Health in the Aftermath of Divorce

Matt · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Family unity took a major step forward at the American Psychiatric Association's annual meeting in San Francisco on May 18-22, 2013, with the inclusion of language that describes the serious mental health problem of parental alienation. For the first time, mental health professionals in the U.S. will have officially recognized concepts to diagnose children who experience parental alienation, strengthening the case against parents who strive to alienate children during divorce.

"This is an important advance for the psychological health of children and families" said William Bernet, MD. Bernet is a leader of the Parental Alienation Study Group, the international task force that submitted the proposal to include parental alienation in DSM-5. Bernet, professor emeritus at Vanderbilt University School of Medicine, said, "Including language that is specifically applicable to parental alienation empowers the mental health and legal communities to address this important problem more directly and with greater clarity. These revisions to DSM-5 will reduce the harm that parental alienation causes to families."'

ACFC: Illinois Right of First Refusal Legislation Goes to Governor

Matt · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last Wednesday, May 22, the Illinois Senate passed HB2992 unanimously. The bill had previously passed the House, also by a unanimous vote. Now the bill goes to Governor Quinn for signature. Championed by Illinois Fathers member Richard Lee Thomas, the bill provides statutory authority for judges to incorporate right of first refusal provisions into child custody orders.

At ACFC one of the more common complaints we hear from parents is that their children are being placed in daycare or farmed out to other people when the ‘other’ parent is available and wants to care for the children. In these situations the overarching theme seems to be “Anyone but me.” It’s one of the more frustrating situations parents endure.'

The Biggest Myth About the Gender Wage Gap

Mastodon · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It might be the most famous statistic about female workers in the United States: Women earn "only 72 percent as much as their male counterparts."

It's also famously false.

A new survey from PayScale this morning finds that the wage gap nearly evaporates when you control for occupation and experience among the most common jobs, especially among less experienced workers. It is only as careers advance, they found, that men outpaced female earnings as they made their way toward the executive suite.

So, women aren't starting off behind their male counterparts, so much as they're choosing different jobs and losing ground later in their careers.'

UK: 'Lads' Mags' Double-Standard

Mastodon · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It would be supremely unfair of me to instantly dismiss these groups as whining idiots because in some areas, they do make a good point. As an earnest supporter of healthy body image, I can understand the concerns of some people about skinny bikini-clad women in the media not helping young girls to be comfortable in their own skin. But trying to outright ban lads' mags is not the answer. Many consider the women in these magazines to be attractive so why is it so bad for them to be able to buy magazines featuring photos of them?
...
The thing that irritates and unnerves me the most about this campaign however is that the people behind it and the equality lawyers supporting it are trying to take advantage of genuine equality and sexual harassment laws to further their own agenda. The laws that are in place to actually protect people from being abused and mistreated by real sexists are being misused to try and censor the media based on what a few dozen left wing feminists think. ...
...
But the biggest double standard about this is that these activists aren't getting all huffy about magazines that feature semi-naked men. If it's legal and socially and morally acceptable to publish a magazine like Men's Health that frequently features a shirtless man on the cover, then why is it such an abhorrence to have a magazine that has something like Lucy Pinder in a bikini on its cover? It shouldn't be. To have true equality in this field, it has to be all or nothing. Trying to ban lads' mags on the basis that they supposedly objectify women while ignoring magazines that do a similar thing with men is only widening the gender divide because it's suggesting that women should not be shown as objects of attraction in the media while men can be.'

Canadian Centre for Men and Families to Open in June

Matt · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Screen Lounge, 20 College Street, Toronto

The Canadian Association for Equality has completed an amazing year advancing education on men's issues and growing awareness of critical problems facing boys, men and fathers.

We invite you to join Lionel Tiger and members of our Board of Directors on Wednesday, June 12th at Screen Lounge in downtown Toronto for this combined celebration and fundraising event for our new Campaign to Establish the Canadian Centre for Men and Families. This is a family event, and we strongly encourage participants to bring their kids.
...
Lionel Tiger is a Canadian-born, American-based anthropologist. He is the Charles Darwin Professor of Anthropology at Rutgers University, a consultant to the U.S. Department of Defense on the future of biotechnology, contributor to Psychology Today and The New York Times, and the author of Men in Groups, The Decline of Males, The Pursuit of Pleasure and The Manufacture of Evil: Ethics, Evolution, and the Industrial System.'

Male victims of domestic abuse: Beyond belief

Matt · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, May 22, 2013 - According to the National Violence Against Women Prevention Research Center, over 830,000 men are victims of domestic violence annually, about half the rate of women. This translates to one man subjected to domestic abuse every 37.8 seconds.

There are over 4,000 domestic violence programs in America but very few oriented to male victims. Such victims are abused in the same manner as women: physically, emotionally, verbal or financially. The abuse is similar between the sexes.

The Mayo Clinic claims predictable behaviors of abusers are the same as with a dominant male in a homosexual relationship as with the male partner in a heterosexual relationship. This is not to say women do not batter men, because they do.

...

Often a woman will claim the violence was mutual with her male partner, because women believe their male partner will be too embarrassed to admit to being abused. The same goes for homosexual relationships.

Abusers whether in a homosexual or a heterosexual relationship will often cast blame on the abused as their fault, then assert the victim acted in a way to draw the abuse.'

PASK is the gold standard for DV information

Matt · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's perhaps the most important event in the history of domestic violence research. Back in 2010, the senior editor of the journal Partner Abuse asked 42 researchers in the field of intimate partner abuse to conduct a thorough review of existing literature on the subject. All peer reviewed literature from 1990 to the present was examined and over 1,700 studies were included in the final analysis. The scientists divided their inquiry into 17 subject areas and assigned researchers to each. The resulting analyses were published by Partner Abuse between April, 2012 and April, 2013, and together comprise almost 2,700 pages of information including tables. The whole project is called the Partner Abuse State of Knowledge Project (PASK).
...
PASK should (and well may) prove to be the stake in the heart of what has for far too long been our public policy on intimate partner violence. Simply put, no one who speaks, writes or legislates on the subject should do so without first reading at least the 62-page Overview of Findings, and preferably the whole analysis. PASK is the state of the art on domestic violence.'

Wayward Sons: The Emerging Gender Gap in Labor Markets and Education

Matt · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. Excerpt:

'This paper, by two MIT economists, David Autor and Melanie Wasserman, presents the reader with two of the biggest and most important trends in recent decades. The first is the growing disparity between men and women in both educational attainment and economic well-being; the second is the change in family structure. The growing disparity between men and women is easy to overlook given the fact that at the very top of our society power and money is still overwhelmingly held by men. And yet, when we move to the realm of more ordinary people we see, in the words of Autor and Wasserman, "...a tectonic shift. Over the last three decades, the labor market trajectory of males in the U.S. has turned downward along four dimensions: skills acquisition; employment rates; occupational stature; and real wage levels."'

Canada: Student union brands men's rights groups as 'hateful' clubs that 'justify sexual assault'

Mastodon · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is, apparently, an ominous threat to female autonomy growing on Canadian campuses, and it masquerades under the guise of "men's rights awareness." These deceptive collectives purport to offer support and resources to men in the community, but, according to the Canadian Federation of Students, they actually promote "misogynist, hateful views," and "justify sexual assault." Well, then.

The Canadian Federation of Students (CFS), the union body representing over 500,000 students across the country, will consider this and other matters over the next week as part of its 63rd semi-annual nation general meeting. On the agenda roster is a motion to amend the "Sexual Assault and Violence Against Women on Campus" policy to account for the "increase in the presence" of men's groups on Canadian campuses.

According to the motion:

"The groups provide environments for sexism, patriarchy, and misogyny to manifest and be perpetuated on campus" and "promote misogynist, hateful views toward women and ideologies that promote gender equity, challenges women's bodily autonomy, justifies sexual assault, and decries feminism as violent."

"Messages from these groups claim to be of equality, but are in fact messages that are misogynist, sexist, cissexist, heterosexist, and homophobic responses to the challenge of cis-male privilege in society."

Needless to say, the description is fraught with a number of bold, unsubstantiated — and frankly, wrong — statements. But find me an official group poster that claims women's bodies are the rightful property of men, and I'll retract. In any case, despite the rhetoric-heavy description, the CFS motion stops short of actually recommending a ban to men's groups by name. Instead, it calls for official opposition to "campaigns, forums, groups, meetings or events whose purpose is to frighten, intimidate, and/or target women students on campus."'

'Having it all doesn't mean doing it all': Women's grad advice to women

Mastodon · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This year's female graduates received specific advice from women who helped pave the way for them, including senior White House adviser Valerie Jarrett. On Friday, she urged the all-female grads of Wellesley College to remember those trailblazers by making sure they help each other as they cut their own paths to the top.

"You have choices because you stand on the shoulders of others who have given you the ability to choose," she said. "It is a rare privilege for all of you who are seated here today, so make sure you reach back and afford others that same opportunity."

She then reminded her audience of the warning issued by fellow Wellesley alum, former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright: "There is a very special place in hell for women who do not help other women."
...
Jarrett, who also chairs the White House Council on Women and Girls, encouraged graduates to be resilient, but to pace themselves.
...
"We might be a tad bit better than men, but we're not superhuman," she said to laughs.'

Men Get Sick, Too

Mastodon · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MSNBC has women's shows and two shows whose hosts are gay and whose central issue is gay marriage, but no show dealing with the issues of American men. I was surprised to learn from Nichole Bowen of The Lady Warrior Project that most of those who are victims of sexual assault in the armed forces are men. Maybe I've been watching too much MSNBC, where the impression is created that all of the victims are women. They're not the only network where the issues of gays and women take priority over those affecting men. During the same Saturday I watched CNN's Fredricka Whitfield discuss the literacy rate among women living in Nepal.

Women have been very successful in using the media to promote their health and other issues. But men get sick too.'

June is Men's Health Month (at least here in the US)

Matt · 31 May 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The US government actually has a web page for it this year! It can found at http://www.foh.hhs.gov/Calendar/june.html. Suppose it'll get nearly as much exposure as women's health months/weeks/years get? Will there be seminars at workplaces and little ribbons and 5K runs to go to? Hmmm... doubt it. Excerpt:

'Men face unique health challenges, and one of the most dangerous is their reluctance to seek health care. In fact, according to Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality (AHRQ), men are 24 percent less likely than women to have seen a doctor in the past year.
...
Many of the major health risks that men face—such as colon cancer and heart disease—can actually be prevented and treated with earlier diagnosis. Screening tests can often find these diseases early, when they are easier to treat. For these reasons, it is crucial that men go against their tendency of avoiding health care and begin having regular checkups and screenings.
...
Men's Health Month is a chance for both men and women to increase their awareness of the potentially significant health problems that men face, as well as what steps they can take to prevent such problems. Taking care of yourself is part of being the best man you can be. There's nothing manly—or beneficial—about ignoring your health.'

I agree that too many men go too long between check-ups. That's true. But I note the tone of this page seems to be pretty much all about "it's all your own fault, guys". I think that's even more ironic given what government department the web page is associated with: "Federal Occupational Health". Given that men are the vast majority of persons killed and injured in the workplace, one might think this particular department would be calling attention to that fact right there on the front page. But I think that may fall into the category of "an inconvenient truth".

Husband says wife killed their son, then shot herself

mens_issues · 1 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ROUTT COUNTY, Colo. — A woman shot and killed her 9-year-old son and then shot herself at a home near Steamboat Springs Wednesday, according to the woman's husband.

Deputies from the Routt County Sheriff's Office were called to a home on a report of an attempted suicide with multiple victims at 2:55 a.m.

Investigators say the resident of the home, Michael Kirlan met deputies and told them his son was dead inside the house, and his wife, Lisa Marie Lesyshen, 45, was upstairs with a gun.

They found the boy, 9-year-old Asher and then his mother. She was unconscious with a gunshot wound. Paramedics took her to the Yampa Valley Medical Center for treatment.

The boy was a third-grader at Soda Creek Elementary in Steamboat Springs according to Steamboat Today.'

Baby boys being used as guinea pigs in Cincincatti pain study

DanBollinger · 1 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

An unethical and outrageous circumcision study has been approved by the National Institutes of Health (NIH). The study, which is being conducted at Good Samaritan Catholic hospital in Cincinnati on 200+ infant boys, is using these ridiculous criteria to determine which of two circumcision clamps is “better”:

1. the weight of blood soaked gauzes after the procedure;
2. neonatal pain score based on babies’ vital signs;
3. grimaces and facial expressions during the surgery.

Georganne Chapin, Executive Director of Intact America, together with leaders of several other intactivist organizations, have sent a letter opposing the study to the hospital's CEO and legal counsel, as well as the Archbishop of Cincinnati. Intact America is also preparing a petition to the NIH.

Read the study's description here.

What kind of person supports Jodi Arias?

Mastodon · 2 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Even though Jodi Arias has been convicted of first-degree murder in the death of her ex-boyfriend, are there still people out there that support her?

Psychologist Cheryl Arutt said that type of person is “somebody who is looking for attention by association. There is a personality that wants to kind of piggyback on somebody else for either fame or notoriety.”

But attorney Mark Eiglarsh noted, “Every one of [those types of people] has the ability to serve on any potential jury. When you wonder how come there's no slam dunks in the justice system, it's because everyone is randomly called and can have their own as-crazy-as-they-want thought processes."

Since the jury could not come to a unanimous decision in the sentencing phase, a new penalty phase with a new jury has been scheduled for July 18.'

Jodi Arias Facebook support Page with over 2300 likes.

Woman charged with forging marriage certificate to claim dead racer's estate

Matt · 2 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Allison Lear, granddaughter of Learjet inventor William “Bill” Lear, lost her boyfriend in a violent car race crash near Virginia City in 2010.

Rather than mourning Alexander Djordjevic’s death with his family, she is alleged to have forged a marriage certificate listing him as her husband that was dated before the crash, Las Vegas police said.
...
On Saturday, Allison Lear, a Las Vegas Township constable’s deputy, was arrested on outstanding warrants at Hakkasan nightclub in the MGM Grand by Las Vegas police about 4:30 a.m., police booking reports indicate.
...
In court, Lear provided a marriage certificate dated June 21, 2010, stating that she and Djordjevic were wed. Minister Cory Matteucci of Boise, Idaho, supposedly performed the ceremony, and Shawn Miles was listed as a witness.
...
Matteucci never applied for or obtained a Temporary Marriage Service Application in Nevada, meaning that he would not be able to authorize any marriage in the state, police reports said.
...
Not only did Lear delay Djordjevic’s burial, but as his widow, she held on to his property, which included two cars, a 1991 Corvette Z and a 1994 Toyota Supra racing car, a gun collection and several other personal items.

The court documents showed that Djordjevic’s estate was valued between $100,000 and $200,000.'

"We fought for equality. So why do greedy wives still sponge off their ex-husbands?"

Matt · 2 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From last month, but a good article just saying it like it is, here. Excerpt:

'Far from being an unlucky, isolated example, my friend is one of the growing number of men who find themselves losing everything through divorce.

Meanwhile, women, ever more, seem to be living by the principle of ‘don’t get mad, get everything’.

And often, they go on getting everything for years, long after time has been called on their marriage.

In these days of equal education, opportunities and access to professions, women are still humiliating themselves by expecting (and receiving) huge and continuing settlements when a marriage ends.

I consider myself a feminist, but I don’t see why today’s divorcing women should expect any kind of settlement at all.
...
Yet modern women are still positioning themselves as the weaker vessel having to be kept by a big strong man, whether married or divorced. We have fought for equality, and many battles have been won, but divorcing women are still making out they are pathetic little Fifties housewives unable to fend for themselves, before ruthlessly fleecing the men they once professed to love.

They should be utterly ashamed.

Depressingly, this year’s Rich List, for the first time, included a separate list for divorced women whose only source of vast wealth was that provided by their ex-husbands. The compilers of the list said that if you are an attractive woman, possibly your best guarantee of a huge income is to marry a super-rich man and then divorce him a few years later.'

"Actress Pia Zadora arrested over bedtime tiff"

StayingFit · 3 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"LAS VEGAS (AP) — Singer-actress Pia Zadora was arrested at her Las Vegas home over the weekend following a rapidly escalating attempt to impose a bedtime on her teenage son.
...
Zadora's son was hanging out with her husband and his son when she asked him to turn in. When he protested, she sprayed him and his step-brother with a hose, according to her statement to police.

She then began scratching and punching her husband, Michael Jeffries, and his son as they tried to calm her down, according to the 16-year-old's statement to police.

He later called 911, but his mother attempted to wrestle the phone away from him, according to the report, injuring his ear in the process.

When he got through, the 16-year-old told the dispatcher that "his mother was going crazy and her hands were around his neck."

He said all three of his family members ultimately prevented him from going to answer the door when police arrived. This led to an hours-long stakeout of the house.'

Woman: Center of the Universe

Robber748 · 3 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I think we all have a sense that the world does a lot of pandering to women, and very little to men. Society, businesses, charities, governments, women, and men all seem to put women up on a pedestal. But just how bad is it? I decided to do an informal survey. For one week I noted all examples of gender promotions, or exclusiveness, or pandering, both to men and women. I counted all examples that I saw referenced, whether or not the actual events occurred during the week.

I counted 125 instances of pandering to women. Most of these were from the news. I wasn't looking at Oxygen or Katie or Ms Magazine. If you think the count for pandering to men was a big gander egg, you'd be wrong. I actually found one instance, although I suppose one could argue that it was more about women than men: 125 to 1. How can women complain about anything when they receive so much more attention than men? How can men feel like anything other than second-class, inferior, or worth less than the afterbirth? (Actually, I did hear a story about placentas during the week, so men and placentas were tied for amount of media attention.)

A report was in the news during this week concerning sexual abuse in the military. Even though the report noted that most of the victims were men, only one of the 22 news segments on this issue mentioned this fact (an interview with Barbara Boxer on MSNBC's The Place for Politics.) There were two references to the victims as men and women on Meet the Press before other remarks focused on the female victims. All other news stories behaved as if women were the only victims. And a CBS Evening News segment actually said incorrectly that all of the victims were women.

While Prince Harry was in the country, there were a few news reports that contained young women and girls swooning over him. Even Gail King on CBS This Morning said "He looks good on a horse." When was the last time the media showed a male going gah-gah over a beautiful woman? That is disgusting and discouraged. But women can openly lust over men-- it is encouraged. I actually see this a lot with the current hunk getting squealing girls and women swooning over him on late night and daytime TV talk shows. Remember what happened to the Beatles? (Forgive me for using the word "hunk." It's another double standard. We can't refer to a woman as a "piece" but we can call a man a "hunk," even though the words mean the same thing.)

Speaking of double standards, Mandy Drury on CNBC often wears a very low neckline, exposing her breasts. During the week, I saw other women on TV doing this as well. Why is it that men are not allowed to be sexual at work, but women are? What a huge double-standard. And it is not just exposed breasts, but make-up, tight clothing, sheer clothing, lots of other exposed skin, etc. I have seen women on TV wearing skirts so short that they have to place there hand down there to cover up when they sit. (To see an example, go to http://www.cbs.com/shows/late_show/video/AJ7UrdlqI87GTU4_CrstBjqXNyhuqMcO/david-letterman-selena-gomez-on-justin-bieber/)

Angelina Jolie received a hunk of attention for her double mastectomy to prevent breast cancer. The media couldn't quit talking about it. When was the last time a men's issue got that much positive attention? Ever?

In another health issue, the Center for Disease Control (CDC) is currently showing two different television ads highlighting gynecological cancers. I would think the CDC would highlight health problems of a more general nature. But if the CDC is going to focus on cancer, why would both ads be on women's cancers? After all, the number of cancer deaths are about ten percent higher in men than in women. Yet men do not rate even one ad.

Several of the items in the list below also spark another question. Why is it that women-only events are acceptable, but women will complain and kill any men-only activities?

(+x) --- indicates the number of other news stories on this subject during the week, or additional times a commercial aired.

- SciGirls television program on PBS.
- Book review on a local government cable channel of Her: A Memoir, a book concerning female twins.
- A discussion on First Ladies--Lucy Hayes on C-Span.
- During Ring of Fire radio program, Robert Kennedy, Jr commented that in Tribalism, women are suppressed, and made into slaves. Also during Ring of Fire, a spokeswoman from a woman's group was quoted. Again, also during Ring of Fire, a discussion of Plan B for teenage girls. (+1)
- Girlcode television program on MTV.
- Discussion of the double mastectomy by Angelina Jolie (+25).
  Segment on the local TV news on the
- Forsythe Breast Cancer Test (for women only).
- "Women couldn't contain themselves" during Prince Harry's visit to the U.S. (+2).
- Long Interview with the maker of the movie The Invisible War, concerning sexual abuse of women in the military (+22).
- NY Times: Obama defends ObamaCare as "particularly beneficial to women" (+1).
- NY Times: conflict over how women dress at the Wailing Wall in Jerusalem.
- Local women's shelter holds benefit auction and dinner.
- Local bike club sponsors "Belle On Wheels" for women---fashions and bicycling. Same bike club also sponsors two "Bicycle Maintenance for Women" classes the following week.
- "Victory Over Violence" Luncheon benefit for local domestic violence organization.
- Local senior center holds the benefit "Ladies Spring Tea"-- in Victorian dress.
- Local YWCA holds leadership breakfast to benefit homeless women.
- Local shoe store holds shoe drive to benefit YWCA's Back to Work Boutique.
- Relay For Life Boob Tour sponsors benefit auction and stand-up comedians against breast cancer.
- Local Tennis Club sponsors tournament to benefit Komen Foundation (breast cancer).
- Local Pilates Class benefits the YWCA.
- Benefit for Female Advocacy for Music Education.
- "Can Women Have It All?" panel on C-Span.
- A Moms Against Guns rally featured on local news (I guess dads don't care).
- During a panel on ABC's This Week, a commentator remarked that civilization is determined by how women are treated. Also on This Week, a discussion of how women juggle work and family.
  Again, also on This Week, a Congresswoman remarked that the House floor finally had a women's bathroom, but without a changing table.
- A discussion on The Chris Matthews Show of the risks of criticizing female political candidates.
- Interview of woman saved by Seal Team Six in Somalia on 60 Minutes-- a man was also rescued but barely mentioned (+2).
- NY Times: 2-page ad for donations for Hunter College Mother's Day Scholarship Fund for women.
- Today Show: billionaire inventor of Spanx, the first woman to join the Gates Foundation, pledged half of her fortune to help women.
- Women in Government radio ad concerning urinary incontinence in women.
- The Last Word: Justice Ruth Bader Ginsberg complained Roe v. Wade was physician-based, not woman-based.
- Women's Shelter poster at the local library.
- Mother 2 Mother poster (mentoring teenage mothers) also at local library.
- Go Red For Women radio ad concerning heart disease in women.

"Women and the Workplace" discussion with Eleanor Smeal on C-Span.

- CDC TV ad showing woman who had ovarian and uterine cancer-- "I got better" (+2).
- CDC TV ad on gynecological cancers (+2).
- "A Holistic View of Feminism" lecture on a local campus.
- CBS news: Syrian refugees selling their daughters into marriage to get money.
- Mandy Drury of CNBC exposes her breasts (+7).
- Women protest against Abercrombie & Fitch because they have no sizes bigger than 10 (+1).
- Kelly Ayotte ad-- only a Mom can strengthen our safety
- Good Morning America--classes for men to teach them how to blow out their wives' hair.
- Today Show--"Professionals" discuss whether men should use cosmetics (all three say no) (this is the one pander to men).
- Downtown sponsors "Ladies Night Out" where businesses offer specials and promotions to benefit local women's groups.
- Women in North Carolina dress in 60's outfits to protest regressive contraceptive policies.
- Today Show: medical tests women should consider.
- Local TV news carries segment on domestic violence against women.
- Local TV ad for Komen Race for the Cure (breast cancer).
- Today Show: segment on the Stiletto Network, for women in business.
- NPR: interview of author of Homeward Bound, book concerning women facing a new domesticity.
- Local college newspaper had an article on Lulu, a phone app for women that allows them to rate men.
- A run/walk for women is held at a nearby state park, proceeds benefit domestic violence organizations.
- Local college has Women’s Empowerment and Violence Education group
- Local woman named Volunteer of the Month for her work on human sex trafficking and its effects on women.
- Local college has Women of Color Empowerment Dinner

This list is just the blatant stuff. Much of the pandering to women is much more subtle. Most stock photos are of women. Leaf through advertising flyers, store catalogs, college catalogs, magazines, etc., and you'll find most of the pictures are of women and girls. View any magazine rack and you'll find women on almost all of the covers. News people seem to go out of their way to find women to interview or highlight. An example of this occurred during the 60 minutes TV show during this week. The segment focused on a class to help returning veterans. As far as I could tell, the class was made up of 3 women and 24 men. Two of the women were highlighted in the segment along with 3 of the men.

The media also seem to have a female victim du jour, usually a pretty white woman. The three kidnapped women in Cleveland served this purpose during this week. Certainly, these victims deserved much attention for the horribleness of the crimes against them. But male victims and not-so-attractive or non-white female victims also deserve attention, but rarely receive it. And the brothers of Ariel Castro did not deserve the negative attention they received-- the media are quick to find bad guys. The media also extensively interviewed Elizabeth Smart (see paragraph above).

The only time female criminals seem to receive any media attention, however, is when they are attractive. This explains the media circus around Jodi Arias. Then again, maybe the media just want to celebrate a woman who horribly murdered a man.

It's a Woman's World. Men are second-class members, on a good day.

SAVE: Last Call for Lobbying

Matt · 4 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

So, you're thinking about attending SAVE's 2013 conference on false allegations, "Celebrating our Progress," but you're just not sure? Did you know that conference attendees can request to join a SAVE team for a day of lobbying?

We'll be lobbying Congress on Friday, June 21. Then we'll head over to McPherson Square for dinner and a Skype call with Erin Pizzey, founder of the abuse shelter movement.

You can request to join a lobbying team, even if you've never lobbied before. There will be a mandatory orientation conference call June 12. And we'll meet Friday morning to go over last minute details.

Visit SAVE for more info: http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp/annual-conference-2013/
Register for the conference: http://celebratingourprogress.eventbrite.com/

Once you've registered, let me know by June 10th that you want to lobby: tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

I'm looking forward to this, are you?

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

The new F-word - Father

el cid · 4 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Kathleen Parker makes an effort at defending dads and men. Could be stronger but she raises good points. But I always wonder: Are some women really so morally arrogant they believe they're only ones necessary to human existence? Excerpt:

'News that women increasingly are the leading or sole breadwinner in the American family has resurrected the perennial question: Why do we need men?
...
My argument that men should be saved is that, despite certain imperfections, men are fundamentally good and are sort of pleasant to have around. Most women still like to fall in love with them; all children want a father no matter how often we try to persuade ourselves otherwise. If we continue to impose low expectations and negative messaging on men and boys, future women won't have much to choose from.

We are nearly there.

The Pew Research Center recently found that four in 10 American households with children under age 18 include a mother who is either the primary breadwinner or the sole earner (quadruple the share in 1960). The latter category is largely owing to the surge in single-mother households.'

Inmate: Jodi Arias 'an amazing person'

Mastodon · 4 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former prosecutor Nancy Grace went to the Estrella Jail and spoke with six female inmates like the ones she once locked away. The women opened up about their fellow inmate, Jodi Arias.

...

“She likes to sing,” said Rosa Leon, a pregnant mother accused of first-degree aggravated assault.

“Yeah, she sings really good,” added accused murderer Stephanie Conley.

“She’s an amazing person,” Key said.

...

Nancy Grace: I know, but why did she have to stab Travis Alexander nine times in the back?

“She was angry,” Key said.

“Nobody knows the real story though. Nobody does. Only God and her and the man that’s dead,” said Dean.'

Baileys Women's Fiction Prize: Another Landmark in Literary Sexism

MikeJH · 4 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. There is a literature prize in the UK that is only open to women. In the UK more books are published by women than men. The highest earning writer in the UK is female. There is no separate literature competition for men. In the past the prize was sponsored by a mobile phone company. Some men have boycotted the phone company. The prize is now being sponsored by Diageo, the multi-national drinks company. I, for one, will avoid products of this company until men are allowed to enter the competition. They have many products!

'Monday marked another landmark day for sexism in literature. The prize formerly known as the Orange Prize for Fiction, which is currently without sponsorship, has picked up a new funding partner. From 2014 - 2016, the £30,000 award will be known as the Baileys Women's Prize for Fiction.
...
Sadly, I see what she means. From a branding perspective, the match is a good one. Both the prize and the drink stand for similar values. Both tell us that women need special treatment - that we are not worthy of standing alongside our male counterparts in either our writing or our drinking.

What this union achieves is a triumph of sexism, exacerbating the perceived differences between men and women and pushing us further away from the state of equality some of us long to achieve.'

Jury's "female discount" standard applies clearly

Matt · 4 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Well, IMHO, anyway. In fact it looks to me like both parties got off way too lightly. Still, the drunk female driver will likely walk with time served. The male one, probably 10 years. Meanwhile, a perfectly sober law-biding citizen is dead. Justice served here? Not in my opinion. Not by a long shot. Here is the story. Excerpt:

'A Monroe County Court jury on Tuesday held a Penfield man accountable for driving recklessly last summer and causing the death of 40-year-old Heather Boyum.
...
After 11 hours of deliberation that spanned two days, Scerbo's verdict was announced before a packed court room of Boyum's family, friends, lawyers and police officials. The news came about 21 hours after a different jury cleared Scerbo's ex-girlfriend Megan Merkel of second-degree manslaughter and second-degree vehicular manslaughter, both felonies, in connection with the same fatal crash.
...
Eric Boyum, Heather's husband, said he was disappointed by both verdicts. He said he appreciated that jurors found both Scerbo and Merkel guilty of some charges and blamed Scerbo for his wife's death, but "it just wasn't enough."
...
Scerbo and Merkel, 24, of Ontario, Wayne County, had both faced numerous charges in connection with the July 29 death of Boyum, a mother, wife, triathlete and teacher. Neither had a valid driver's license.

On Monday night, Merkel was cleared of the felony charges and was released from the Monroe County Jail. A jury convicted her of driving while intoxicated, a misdemeanor, and two traffic infractions.'

NY Governor proffers Women's Equality Act

Matt · 5 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here. Looks like the governor has drunk the Wage Gap Kool-Aid. No one ever bet wrong however pandering politically to women as a group. At least, not so far. I do wonder when there'll be a similar Act addressing such things as paternity fraud, protections for men against false accusations, equal rights around child custody, reproductive rights, etc.? Maybe he'll announce that next month? (ROTFL!) Well, New York men can dream, I suppose. Excerpt:

'Today, Governor Cuomo, joined by members of the Women's Equality Coalition, introduced legislation to end discrimination and inequality based on gender and to restore New York as a leader in women's rights.

This Women's Equality Act includes the following 10 points:

- Achieve Pay Equity
- Stop Sexual Harassment in All Workplaces
- Allow for the Recovery of Attorneys' Fees in Employment and Credit and Lending Case
- Strengthen Human Trafficking Laws
- Prohibit Employers from Denying Promotions or Hiring Based on Family Status
- Prevent Landlords from Denying Housing to Qualified Tenants Based on Source of Rent Funds
- Stop Housing Discrimination for Victims of Domestic Violence
- Stop Pregnancy Discrimination Once and For All
- Protect Victims of Domestic Violence by Strengthening Order-of-Protection Law
- Protect a Woman's Freedom of Choice'

"American Secret: The Circumcision Agenda": A film by Francelle Wax

DanBollinger · 5 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

“American Secret” is a film about an outdated medical practice, but at core the film is an examination of how memes proliferate, how ideas spread, and how thought patterns take hold.

The film also explores questions we rarely ask ourselves, such as how we decide what we’re going to think about, what we’re going to reconsider, what we’re going to resist, and what we aren’t. The film’s overarching questions being: “How do we come to believe what we believe?” and “What role do reason and fact play in establishing or changing our beliefs?”

The feminist campus as antiwoman

Mastodon · 5 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'AS NEW college graduates across America — nearly 6 out of 10 of them female — collect their diplomas, this is a good time to ponder what today's university teaches young women, and men, about gender and society. Many generations of feminists fought for equal education, starting in an era when it was widely believed that higher learning for women was not just unnecessary but harmful. It is a battle that, by any standard, has been a brilliant success. But some feminist ideologues seem determined to snatch defeat from the jaws of victory.
...
The academy is a place to discuss and explore ideas — which makes the intellectual corruption of campus feminism especially unfortunate. Unlike many conservatives, I believe there are still important ideas and issues to explore when it comes to gender equality, from work-family balance to attitudes toward sexuality to stereotyped media images. But for such discussion to be productive, it must be free of dogma, committed to fact, and open to different sides of complex issues. And it must be willing to recognize that not all gender-based biases disadvantage women, or are perpetuated by men.'

Young: Women aren't the only victims of hate speech

Mastodon · 5 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When I appeared on a Huffington Post Live Web TV panel in late May with two of the campaigners, Jaclyn Friedman of Women, Action and the Media, and Laura Bates of the Everyday Sexism Project, they asserted that women were being driven from Facebook by rampant misogyny. But evidence of this exodus is lacking: Last year, women made up 57 percent of Facebook users, same as three years earlier.
...
This shows that in mainstream American culture, abuse of women is universally -- and rightly -- abhorred. On the HuffPost Live panel, Friedman asserted that misogyny is our society's last acceptable form of hate speech. But that applies far more accurately to male-bashing. A Facebook page titled "Beating up your boyfriend to keep him in line" had more than 16,000 "likes," while the pages targeted by the activists (such as "Kicking your girlfriend in the fanny because she won't make you a sandwich") had at most a dozen or two.

The issue goes beyond Facebook. Earlier this year, the satirical website The Onion ran a fake interview in which rapper Chris Brown lamented the breakup of his relationship with singer Rihanna (whom he had previously assaulted) by expressing regret that he would not get to kill her. Many feminists took offense -- even though the piece was clearly meant to condemn abuse. The same issue of The Onion ran a parody in which Jenny Sanford, ex-wife of South Carolina's former Gov. Mark Sanford, praised lax gun laws with the clear implication that she intended to shoot her adulterous ex-husband. No outcry ensued.'

Barnicle: Women 'Better Balanced, Have Better Judgment' Than Men

Mastodon · 5 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Looks like Mike Barnicle's not going to let anyone get to his PC-left when it comes to women.

On today's Morning Joe, Barnicle claimed that "a lot of men . . . fear the fact—and I think it's a fact—that women are better balanced than men. They have better judgment about things than a lot of men." Barnicle's comment during a discussion about the statement made yesterday by Mississippi Governor Phil Bryant that the decline in educational outcomes for children today is due to the entry of women into the workforce.

Could an expert of feminism and political correctness kindly enlighten us? Is it more PC to say that women and men are identical, or are sex-specific differences OK to acknowledge? If the latter, is there anything other than brute strength at which it would be safe for Barnicle to suggest that men might be better than women?'

Barbara Kay: Calling all male bashers

Mastodon · 5 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In alarmed response to emerging “men’s rights awareness” groups (MRA) on a number of Canadian campuses, the Canadian Federation of Students (CFS), a union body representing some 500,000 students, seeks to amend its “Sexual Assault and Violence Against Women on Campus” policy.

The CFS rejects any need of formal fellowship around specifically male issues, alleging MRA groups’ real purpose is to promote “misogynist, hateful views” and to “justify sexual assault.” Simon Fraser University’s recently inaugurated $30,000-funded men’s centre, for example, was demonized as a place to “celebrate hegemonic masculinity.”'

Video: Most Democratic Mayoral Candidates Are Against Snip-N-Suck Circumcision Consent Forms

Mastodon · 5 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this month, the candidates fighting to become the next mayor weighed in on the controversial circumcision consent form that requires parents to sign a waiver before their infant can undergo the "metzitzah b'peh" ritual—the circumcision practice in which a mohel sucks the blood from a freshly snipped foreskin. Most of them seemed to be for the basic consent forms (which only informs parents of potential risk—it doesn't prevent them from having the ritual performed if they want), but mayoral candidates tend to have a slippery way with words. And it seems most of the democratic candidates are now AGAINST the consent forms, as you can see in the video below.

Christine Quinn was the only candidate who was in favor of keeping the consent forms, although she did criticize the Bloomberg administration (and by extension, the Board Of Health) for how they handled introducing the forms, which seems like she's trying to have her cake and eat it too. As Failed Messiah noted, the other candidates all "hemmed and hawed" their answers, either saying firmly that they'd get rid of it (John Liu) or just being vague to appease the ultra-Orthodox Haredi in the audience.'

HuffPo: Stay-At-Home Fathers Don't Care for Children

Matt · 6 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If we're reading an article about heroic working moms "doing it all" both at work and at home, but still losing custody to fathers who apparently do nothing all day long, then it's a good bet we're reading the Huffington Post. And sure enough, we are here (Huffington Post, 6/1/13).

This time it's family attorney Lisa Helfend Meyer whose piece utterly misrepresents the known facts about child custody, who gets it and why. In the finest HuffPo tradition, 90% of her article is nothing but a series of unsupported assertions that would embarrass an 8th-grader. But Meyer's goal is to paint working mothers as, in some way, shorted by divorce courts. Of course nothing could be further from the truth, so I emailed Meyer to learn her sources. Er, no word on that as yet.'

Utah adoption law provision discriminates against men, attorney claims

Matt · 6 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An attorney for an unmarried father asked the Utah Supreme Court on Monday to find unconstitutional a provision in the state's adoption law that requires unwed biological fathers to file a sworn affidavit in addition to initiating a court paternity action and registering a paternity notice with the state.

Scott B. Wiser, attorney for William E. Bolden, said the affidavit is duplicative, redundant and unnecessary, and discriminates against unmarried fathers since unmarried mothers are not required to provide similar assurances about how they will care for and support a child.'

"Would You Want a House Husband?"

Matt · 6 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Surprise! Many women aren't interested in supporting stay-at-home dads! Who'da thunk it?! Article here. Excerpt:

'But maybe career women don't want house husbands? A new study suggests that a significant minority of women don't want to work to support a man….

Vivia Chen on The Careerist cites a study from Salary.com that suggests women are not particularly willing to be sugar mamas:
...
...In fact, more than one-quarter of women (26 percent) said they flat-out refuse to even entertain the notion of working full-time while supporting a husband who stays home and takes care of the kids and house. That's compared to just 8 percent of men who said they would refuse the request of their spouse to stay at home.'

Men Face Higher Risk of Infections Related to Health Care

Minuteman · 6 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Women are less likely to develop infections related to receiving health care than men, according to a large new study.

After examining thousands of cases involving hospitalized patients, researchers found that women were at much lower risk for bloodstream infection and surgical-site infection than men. The study authors suggested that their findings could help health care providers reduce men's risk of these infections.

...

The study, recently published online in the Journal of General Internal Medicine, revealed that the odds of developing a community-associated bloodstream infection were 30 percent higher among men. Meanwhile, the researchers found a 60 percent higher risk among men for health care-associated bloodstream infections as well as for surgical-site infections.

Biological differences between men and women's skin may play a role in men's increased risk for infection.'

NPO: Illinois' 'Right of First Refusal' Unanimously Passes Both Houses

Matt · 6 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an historic move, Illinois unanimously passed the 'Right of First Refusal' on May 22, 2013 (HB2992, 98th Session). Illinois becomes the first state to explicitly call for consideration of the 'Right of First Refusal' in a parenting plan or court order. It will be added as Section 602.3 to the Illinois Marriage and Dissolution of Marriage Act. The bill is currently on the Governor Pat Quinn's desk for his expected signature.

Currently, Massachusetts has similar legislation pending to Increasing Parental Involvement with Childcare, HB1343. Also, Indiana and Utah both have legislation which provides a similar opportunity, but does not explicitly call for such consideration.

'Right of First Refusal' is a guarantee that anytime a parent needs someone to watch the children, they must ask the other parent first. This gives a parent the opportunity to watch the children when the other parent has them.'

Majority of sexual assaults and rapes committed in military in 2011 were against men

Matt · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of the estimated 19,000 reported sexual assaults and rapes in the armed forces last year, the majority were actually committed against men.

Men are assaulted at a lower rate — 1% of servicemen reported being attacked by a comrade last year versus 4.4% of women — but that still translates to more than 10,000 cases compared with 9,000 attacks on female recruits and officers.
“This is the supersilent epidemic,” said Dr. Curt Dill, chief of emergency medicine at the Manhattan VA, who recently opened a safe haven for female vets to get help for military sexual trauma.
...
The media have mostly focused on sexual crimes against women, but Matthews said abuse in the military is “not a gender issue but a human rights issue.”
“It’s rampant and nobody knows about it,” he added. “Our government has to change the laws to make the perpetrators and commanders accountable.”'

False rape allegations affect police, the community and future victims

Mastodon · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

In the past year there have been at least three times where someone reported a rape or abduction in our area, which turned out to be false.
...
Sergeant Shawki Lacey is with the Susquehanna Township Police Department. He says falsely reporting a crime not only effects the person accused and the alleged victim, but it takes a toll on the community as well.

"It causes an uproar in the community, no one wants crime in their community, especially crimes of violence against persons," Sergeant Shawki Lacey, Susquehanna Township Police Department.

When someone reports a fake crime, that also takes police away from real crimes they could be investigating.'

UK: Woman, 31, falsely claimed two men broke into her house and raped her after selecting their profiles from Facebook

Mastodon · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who falsely accused two strangers of raping her in a bid to win back her boyfriend has escaped jail.

In an attempt to garner sympathy from her partner, Linsey Attridge, 31, claimed the two men broke into her house in Aberdeen and attacked her.

She even punched herself in the face and ripped her own clothing to make her story seem more credible.

Attridge then spent three days trawling social networking sites so she could hand over profiles of the men she claimed were responsible to police.

Attridge then spent three days trawling social networking sites so she could hand over profiles of the men she claimed were responsible to police.

The two men were detained, questioned and had to undergo forensic and medical examinations because of her claims.'

India: Police knowingly filing false rape cases, alleges Dalit activist

Mastodon · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Police inactivity over “false cases of rape and assault” filed by a young woman against her mother and uncle came to the fore at the monthly Scheduled Caste and Scheduled Tribe meeting held here on Sunday.

Speaking at the meeting held at the office of superintendent of police, S.P. Anand, a Dalit activist, said more than two months ago, a 22-year-old woman, belonging to an OBC (Other Backward Classes) community, filed cases at the Venoor Police Station against her mother Sunanda and her uncle Shamappa, who had, using force, disallowed her from having an affair with Manoj (45), a daily wage worker who has a wife and children in Kerala.
...
He alleged that even though the police knew the complaint was false, they filed a case, forcing the economically-backward family to seek bail. “They can’t afford the bond, and the court fees,” said the activist.'

As sexual harassment ‘blueprint’ restricts verbal conduct: Things Not To Say On Campus

Mastodon · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is at best, badly written, and at worst, as the campus-individual-rights organization FIRE suggests, a disturbing expansion of suggested campus speech restrictions.
...
Verbal conduct? Isn’t there another word for that? It’s on the tip of my tongue. Oh yes– “Speech.”

The “blueprint” also rejects the University’s “reasonable person” standard for sexual harassment, which makes things even more confusing.

Good news for English majors — the reading list just got a lot shorter. The list of books to which an unreasonable person might object because of their “verbal conduct” when it came to sex is — that’s pretty much the syllabus right there.'

Amherst President Weighs Fraternities In Tackling Sexual Assault

Mastodon · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"It is possible that in any group of male students -- sports teams, fraternities or even all-male suites -- we will find exaggerated enactments of 'masculinity,'" the board wrote. "Unless every student recognizes and understands their own behavior, this phenomenon will perpetuate itself until a ‘herd mentality’ leads to offensive acts by the members of the association."

Lynn Phillips, a communication lecturer at the nearby University of Massachusetts-Amherst, said fraternities perpetuate "the notions of masculinity set out to make men feel like they have to conquer.”'

Myths about male childhood sexual assault survivors

Matt · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many of us have accepted the myth that males cannot be victims of sexual assault. Even in our enlightened age, society still dictates that boys and men need to be tough, that to be considered "weak" is a disgrace and to have been let themselves be put in a powerless position is shameful. It is what boys are taught about being "real men "and boys are taught very young that they are expected to be able to protect themselves. The fact is men and boys can be victims of sexual assault. Research shows that 1 in 6 men have experienced unwanted or abusive sexual experiences before they reached age 18. Males, like females, experience lasting effects and emotional pain as a result of being victimized. Yet, male survivors of sexual abuse rarely receive the attention that females do. While we understand that any kind of victimization is traumatic and life changing, survivors of male childhood sexual abuse may face the greatest challenges. Boys often continue to blame themselves long into adulthood but the burden of being that "real man" often prevents them from seeking help.

Whether you agree with that definition of masculinity or not, we can all agree that boys are not men. They are children. They are weaker and more vulnerable than those who sexually abuse or exploit them, the perpetrators who use their greater size, strength and knowledge to manipulate or coerce boys into unwanted sexual experiences and staying silent. Usually this is done from a position of authority such as a coach, teacher, or religious leader or status such as an older cousin, admired athlete, or social leader. Perpetrators of child sexual abuse use whatever means are available to reduce resistance from young boys and teens such as attention, special privileges, money or other gifts, promises or bribes, even outright threats; whatever advantage can be taken to use a child for sexual purposes. Sexual abuse is never the child's fault.'

Australia: Request that MHIRC's funding be renewed

Matt · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'Men take their own lives at four times the rate of women (that's five men a day, on average). Accidents, cancer and heart disease all account for the majority of male deaths (http://www.menshealthweek.org.au/En/Pages/ee4d91/Why-Men-s-Health.aspx)

MHIRC focuses particularly on the health status of marginalised or disadvantaged males - this includes populations such as Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander men, unemployed men, separated men, incarcerated men, new dads and other males who may find themselves at risk of increased stress and therefore poorer health outcomes.'

Canada: Martinuk: Man-hating hits a new low on campuses

Mastodon · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's been a steady rise in the number of stories and academic studies suggesting men need help. Boys are falling behind early in the education process and are far more likely to drop out of high school than girls. Far too many boys are being raised without fathers; and gay men are bullied.

Yet Canadian campuses focus on women's studies, where courses are geared to radicalizing women and making marriage, children and men into interlopers who exist only to prevent women from attaining their goals. But while women are indoctrinated in their all-encompassing rights, legitimate academic discussions that relate to the above issues are being unfairly silenced.

...

The problem is that the CFS and campus women's groups have provided no evidence to support their claims. Sadly, most so-called gains by women on campus have been won by making irrational claims of an environment of hate and using fear to sell the blatantly false notion that all men are misogynists and rapists.'

RaiseForWomen Charity Initiative Highlights Men's Roles In Empowering Women, Girls

Mastodon · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The HuffPost RaiseForWomen competition, which comes to a close on Thursday, has received notable support from one specific group -- the fellas.

Members of the initiative, which challenges women-centric nonprofits to raise funds and awareness, discussed on HuffPost Live how men can be champions of women's issues.
...
Warner shared specific initiatives, such as working with coaches to teach young male athletes that violence against women is not acceptable.'

Jose Canseco cleared of sex assault

Mastodon · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LAS VEGAS -- Police in Las Vegas won't seek criminal charges against former major league slugger Jose Canseco after an investigation of a woman's rape claim, a department spokesman said Friday.
...
Canseco, 48, who went public about the investigation May 22 with postings on Twitter, told The Associated Press that he was victimized by the allegation and he wants to sue his accuser.

"She alleged I drugged her and raped her," Canseco said in a telephone interview. "It was an outright lie. I proved it by taking two lie detector tests. I am the victim here."

Canseco drew intense criticism for posting the woman's name and workplace May 22. Some of the information was later removed, but Canseco told AP that he didn't regret posting it.

"If you have nothing to hide, why hide it?" he said.'

UK: Teacher spared jail for having sex with a pupil after she tells court she was abused when she was a teenager

Mastodon · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A teacher who admitted having sex with a pupil had been abused when she was a teenager, a court heard yesterday.

Eppie Sprung Dawson, 27, was targeted when she was aged between 13 and 18 by a man 29 years her senior, a sheriff was told.

Yesterday, Dawson was told she would escape a custodial sentence after earlier admitting having sex with the 17-year-old boy in the front seat of her car last December.

She will have to return to court to learn her fate next month, but a sheriff told her she had breached a position of trust, although she had not abused anyone.'

Why in 2013 are only teenaged girls immunized against HPV?

Mastodon · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yesterday, Hollywood actor Michael Douglas announced that his battle with throat cancer was caused by oral sex - or more specifically, the HPV virus frequently contracted through oral sex.

The 68 year-old, who fought a six month battle with the disease from August 2010 until January 2011, initially blamed an indulgent lifestyle of cigarettes and alcohol.

...

However, in the same breath that Angelina Jolie has been lionised for her public honesty, Douglas has been criticised for it. Namely, because it may embarrass his wife, Catherine Zeta-Jones.

Yet, given the fact that Britain's men are living with a ticking HPV time-bomb - and, unlike girls, aren't immunised against it - her pride shouldn't even be a consideration.

Especially as they both have a son. A son who, like every boy in this country, will be ignored when it comes to HPV.'

Australia: Gender wars can't help the Labor cause any more than a quota PM

Mastodon · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While history will record that Julia Gillard was the nation's first female prime minister, it should also record that she was the first quota PM. Gillard will never escape how she came to her job. Labor's 40 per cent gender quota system put Gillard in parliament and her gender helped elevate her to the position of Prime Minister. Alas, her male backers could not have been more wrong to assume that gender would be an ace card with voters in a contest against Tony Abbott. Voters don't give a toss about gender. And when the PM plays the gender card, she reminds voters that merit took a back seat in her career trajectory.

In a neat twist of irony, one of her backers, Victorian senator David Feeney, finds himself in the middle of a vicious gender war over preselection for the Victorian seat of Batman. Likely to lose his Senate seat at the next election, Feeney wants the safe Labor seat vacated by Martin Ferguson. A woman wants it too. Feeney says he is a huge supporter of affirmative action but not in Batman. Ah, the hypocrisy and predictable identity politics as the gender wars kick off again.'

Ed. note: You may get a login challenge to see the entire article. To jump it, use Google to do a search on the first paragraph text and click the link for the first hit.

Please Read This about Boys (Politically Incorrect Warning!)

Mastodon · 7 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm a pretty "PC" ("politically correct") guy most of the time. And I don't mean that ironically–I really do think most of what is "PC" is right. But there are areas where I think our contemporary American perception of what is PC is off a bit. As anyone who has visited here often for a long time knows I happen to think the women's movement has achieved great things for women and girls but that the time has come for society to pay more attention to boys and young men (and older men's health). The pendulum has swung in some areas related to sex, gender and social change. In education and health especially girls and women have forged ahead so strongly in such a brief time that most Americans (especially in the media and in education and the health industries) have not caught up and show very little signs of caring for boys and men being left behind.
...
Just the other day I was driving in a major American city and saw a huge non-profit facility called "Girl Start." I have nothing against that. But where is "Boy Start?"

Whenever I talk like this someone accuses me of "backlash" (against the women's movement). Nonsense. I absolutely deny it. I am NOT arguing for LESS attention to girls and women; I am arguing for MORE attention to issues related to boys and young men–employment, education, health, mentoring, etc.'

Male Positive Media: Lowe's TV Spot: "Father's Day"

mens_issues · 8 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Lowe's TV Spot: Father's Day

'Dad has been an architect, teacher, monster buster and more. Celebrate him this Father's Day. Find all you need at Lowe's.'

A good reason to choose Lowe's for hardware.

F4J USA to Hold Fathers' Day Rallies

Matt · 8 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here. Excerpt:

'Our campaign for the reform and awareness of the abuse of many of our Children at the hands of the so called, "Child Protective Services" (CPS). The California State legislature has agreed to audit this agency.

Join us in our campaign for the reform of all Juvenile and Family courts around the nation. Our time is now! Join us in our 6th Annual Nationwide Fatherless Day Rallies at all 50 United States Capitols on June 14, 2013. We are the feet in the street, we are the army of parents fighting for our children's rights.'

Man Mocked for Anguish Over Girlfriend's Abortion

Mastodon · 8 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A common tale is the man who gets a girl pregnant, and then pressures her into having an abortion. For men just looking to screw around and avoid commitment at any cost, abortion is the perfect solution. Abortion allows them to use a woman and then leave her; have sex and still avoid any kind of consequences or responsibility for their actions.

But what about the other side of the coin? The man who grieves at the abortion of his child, who wants to step up and take responsibility and make a commitment, is not often mentioned in the abortion discussion.
...
With that in mind, let's check out this plea for advice, where a man wrote into a newspaper expressing his anguish and hurt over his girlfriend's decision to have an abortion.
...
Another pro-abortion blogger picked up on this plea for advice, though, and her response was slightly more offensive.

"Dear Anonymous,

Unlike you, I can think of something worse than aborting an unborn child: a woman who is unwilling to put her health and future at risk and commit to 18 years of parenthood with a near-stranger so that a grown-ass man doesn't ever have to feel confused or sad about a decision he will never have to make for himself.
..."
...
This reminds me of the upcoming book, "Men on Strike" by Dr. Helen Smith. It seems that men can't win. It's heartbreaking to see a man willing to take responsibility for his actions and be derided for doing so.'

A Joke of a Men's Studies Center

Mastodon · 9 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But the real kicker (and what follows, unlike my first-paragraph attempt at whimsy, is no joke whatsoever) is the list of Advisory Board members. I'll quote the press release in full – and keep in mind, please, that this is a Center supposedly devoted to the study of men, not women: "Members of the Center's advisory board include Gloria Steinem, Martin Duberman, Jane Fonda, Eve Ensler, Carol Gilligan, James Gilligan, Frank Ochberg, Gov. Madeleine Kunin (Vermont), Catharine Stimpson and Hampden-Sydney College President Chris Howard."
...
Every single one of these women has evinced, over the course of her career (and most of these careers have been long ones indeed), a virtually undivided preoccupation with the study of women – not men, who appear in their work only marginally, and then almost exclusively as bullies, oppressors, impediments, encumbrances, annoyances, predators, and, at best, unnecessary appendages, the human equivalent of the vermiform appendix in the sense that they have no known useful function. (Steinem apparently wasn't the first person to say that "a woman without a man is like a fish without a bicycle," but she repeated it enough to make people think she'd made it up herself.)
...
If Stony Brook's press release makes for especially depressing reading, it's because the subject of maleness is one that actually deserves serious and objective scholarly attention but in today's politicized, feminism-drenched, male-bashing academy has received next to none. ...'

Ed.: Stony Brook's press release is here.

Mom Killed Baby So Cops Wouldn't Take Him Away, Prosecutors Say

Matt · 9 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'COOK COUNTY CRIMINAL COURTHOUSE — Kimberlynn Bolanos told police that she killed her 5-month-old son to prevent police from taking him away because she smoked crack, prosecutors said.

Bolanos, 21, appeared in Cook County Criminal Court on Friday on charges she murdered Isaac Bolanos. She is charged with stabbing the boy to death in a Lincoln Square motel on May 30.

Assistant State's Attorney Bridget O'Brien said Isaac suffered 21 stab wounds in his head and eight in his chest, and his throat was slashed from ear to ear.'

DOJ web site stats uncorrected after three years

Matt · 9 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite the fact that homicides were the fifth leading cause of death for African-American women ages 15-45 in 2008, and despite the fact that homicides include three other categories besides intimate partners, the Attorney General of the United States Eric Holder makes this false claim on the Department of Justice website: “Disturbingly, intimate partner homicide is the leading cause of death for African-American women ages 15 to 45.” He actually first made that false claim in a speech on August 3, 2009, when he said “Intimate partner homicide is the leading cause of death for African-American women ages 15 to 45. These statistics are shocking and completely unacceptable.”

In a USA Today op-ed back on February 4, 2011, my AEI colleague Christina Sommers pointed out that it would be shocking and completely unacceptable if it were true, but in fact, it absolutely is not true (see table above). Instead, it’s shocking and completely unacceptable for the attorney general of the United States to spread false statistics that aren’t even remotely close to being true or accurate. ... Disturbingly, a Google search of Holder’s quote "Intimate partner homicide is the leading cause of death for African-American women ages 15 to 45″ reveals that the false claim now appears on more than 9,000 websites.'

Robyn Urback on shocking anti-male hatred on the Simon Fraser University campus

Matt · 9 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The student union at Simon Fraser University in B.C. has made the apparently contentious decision to finance the creation of a Men's Centre on campus. Motivated, surely, by deep-seated patriarchal values, the union approved a budget of $30,000 to launch the project — the exact same amount conferred on the university's Women's Centre, which was established back in 1974. The idea for the Men's Centre was proposed by fifth-year accounting student Keenan Midgley, who told SFU's student newspaper that he believes men, too, are entitled to safe space on campus.
...
Bravo, students. In your attempt to decry the proposed Men's Centre on all of its supposed merits, you have effectively demonstrated why such a space is so very necessary. At present, there is only one other Canadian campus with an official support centre for men — the Men's Resource Centre at the University of Manitoba. Judging by the crass sociology catch phrases in the aforementioned video, the consensus is that young men don't need community resources or support. That is a myth.'

The School-to-Prison Pipeline

Matt · 9 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'School officials across the country responded to a surge in juvenile crime during the 1980s and the Columbine High School shootings a decade later by tightening disciplinary policies and increasing the number of police patrolling public schools. One unfortunate result has been the creation of a repressive environment in which young people are suspended, expelled or even arrested over minor misbehaviors — like talking back or disrupting class — that would once have been handled by the principal.

The policies have not made schools safer. However, by criminalizing routine disciplinary problems, they have damaged the lives of many children by making them more likely to drop out and entangling them, sometimes permanently, in the criminal justice system. The policies are also discriminatory: black and Hispanic children are shipped off to court more frequently than white students who commit similar infractions.'

Woman Accuses Teacher Of Taping Her Son To Chair

Matt · 9 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A suburban San Antonio school district said it's reviewing training guidelines after a teacher allegedly duct taped an 8-year-old student to a chair – a year after another teacher was accused of ordering kindergartners to take turns hitting a classmate.

...

Last year, another teacher in the district was fired and indicted for allegedly encouraging 20 students to hit a 6-year-old student who was accused of being a bully.

...

Police are investigating the incident at Woodlake Elementary School. Linscomb said the Bexar County prosecutor's office would review the case once that investigation is complete.'

Pamela Anderson Commercial Sexist...To Men?

Mastodon · 9 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The banned Pamela Anderson ad has everyone talking about the commercial for its sexist portrayal of women. But what about men?

As previously reported by The Inquisitr, the Pamela Anderson ad was banned in the United Kingdom due to its sexual explicit content.
...
... Sexism goes both ways. Yes, obviously, the portrayal of the two businesswomen was degrading. But is it not also degrading to men to disseminate the stereotype of the man as only being interested in sex and outward appearances?

... A quick google search shows that “women oversee 83 percent of direct consumer spending, own half of all public stock, and make up more than fifty percent of the talent pool.” 30 percent of businesses in the US are also owned by women. So it’s not like a man in any decent sized company would not be used to working with women on a regular basis without his hormones running wild.'

Please lodge anti-circumcision responses with the State Department (re: PEPFAR), Deadline 14 June 2013

Minuteman · 10 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This is a response to the document "PEPFAR Program Expenditures" [Form Number: DS-4213, OMB Control Number: 1405-0208].

Due to a past lack of oversight by the CDC, the State Department is proposing to require recipients of PEPFAR funds to account for expenditures by program area. This response is in agreement with this requirement, also highlighting the lack of oversight and free-spending culture of the NIH at the time of sponsoring the circumcision trials in Africa (evidenced by the six OIG reports cited), the adverse affects of funding circumcision in Africa (coercion of men and boys to be circumcised, misdirection of scarce medical resources from higher priority health areas), and continuing problems within the CDC raising questions about the ability of the organisation to oversee recipients of federal funds (the more recent OIG report identifying problems in the management of the 'Vaccines for Children' program).

The deadline for submissions is 14 June 2013.

This submission can be made by anybody from any country around the world.

Instructions:

Download and save the document from the following link (Click 'Download'):

http://www.2shared.com/document/exwU3flD/OMB_Control_Number_1405-0208.html

Go to the following regulations.gov submission page:

http://www.regulations.gov/#!submitComment;D=DOS_FRDOC_0001-2363

Optionally, complete as many fields on the left-hand-side as you would like to. Click browse under '3. UPLOAD FILE(S)' to upload the saved document from your harddisk. Click 'Submit'.

In case anyone experiences problems with the above 2shared link, the full-text of the response document is below, which you can copy/paste into the text-editor or word processor of your choice, save to your hard disk, and upload to regulations.gov:

Response to “PEPFAR Program Expenditures” [Form Number: DS-4213, OMB Control Number: 1405-0208]

Thank you for the opportunity to provide feedback to “PEPFAR Program Expenditures” [Form Number: DS-4213, OMB Control Number: 1405-0208]. This response document will briefly address concerns about the ethical, legal and methodological flaws with past research informing aspects of present PEPFAR program areas; concerns about adverse consequences of PEPFAR program areas; and concerns about the absence of oversight of the activities of PEPFAR funding recipients.

Ethical, Legal and Methodological Flaws with Past Research informing present PEPFAR Program Areas

In 2011 and 2012, the Department of Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General [OIG] published a series of audit reports revealing that throughout fiscal years 2000-2010, the National Institute of Allergy and Infections Diseases [NIAID], did not comply with the time and amount requirements specified in appropriations statutes, in awarding several federal contracts to commercial partners, committing the federal government to tens of millions of dollars of expenditure ahead of appropriation of funds from Congress (OIG 2011a; OIG 2011b; OIG 2011c; OIG 2011d; OIG 2012a; OIG 2012b). During this time, NIAID also funded and sponsored research conducted abroad, that would be unlikely to receive ethical approval to be conducted in the United States, incorporating the excision of healthy tissue from subjects in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, specifically ClinicalTrials.gov registered trials NCT00059371 and NCT00425984 ['the African circumcision trials'] (NIH 2008; NIH 2007), the methodology, conclusions, ethics and legality of which have been questioned in the professional medical literature (Boyle & Hill 2011; Green et al 2010). Consent forms for the African circumcision trials failed to include then known information, from the professional medical literature, about the importance to mens' sexual health of the prepuce, frenulum, ridged-band and other tissues removed by circumcision (Taylor et al 1996), evidence for which has grown in the years since (Bronselaer et al 2013;Frisch et al 2011; Sorrells et al 2007). In the years following publication of the African circumcision trials, regulatory agencies under the aegis of the Department of Health and Human Services have moved to strengthen protections afforded human research subjects and to increase the rigor with which trials conducted abroad are assessed as a basis for seeking approval of new drugs and medical devices in the U.S. market (FDA 2012; OHRP 2011).

Adverse Consequences of PEPFAR Program Funding Areas

Despite the concerns identified above, the results of the African circumcision trials continue to be used to justify the en masse circumcision of men in Africa using PEPFAR funds and to justify the circumcision of boys and male infants - both in the United States and abroad - in the absence of clear and present immediate medical indications, and in the latter instance, with the tacit endorsement of U.S. government agencies in receipt of PEPFAR program funding (CDC 2011; Llewellyn 2012). In the wake of PEPFAR funding for mass circumcision programs in Africa, local media in the region have reported coercion of men and boys to be circumcised (AFP 2012; Chibaya 2013; Dube 2012; Langa 2012; Mhlanga 2012; Ngwega 2012; Onyango 2012; Towindo 2012) and misdirection of limited medical resources from other priority areas to male circumcision (AHN 2012; Gonzalez 2012).

Absence of Oversight

On the 15 June 2011, the OIG published a report critical of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's [CDC's] failure to oversee recipients' use of PEPFAR funds, concluding that the "lack of required documentation demonstrates that CDC has not exercised proper stewardship over Federal PEPFAR funds because it did not consistently follow departmental and other Federal requirements in monitoring PEPFAR recipients" (OIG 2011e). Further investigations by the OIG have also revealed specific failures of the CDC to monitor recipients use of PEPFAR funds in Namibia and South Africa (OIG 2012c; OIG 2012d; OIG 2013) In 2012, the OIG also published a report identifying vulnerabilities in vaccine management in the CDC's domestic 'Vaccines for Children' program (OIG 2012e), suggesting the possibility that more systemic problems may exist within the agency, impacting it's ability to effectively oversee the activities of grantees in receipt of federal funds.

Conclusion

Valid concerns exist about the ethical, legal and methodological flaws with past research informing aspects of present PEPFAR program areas; adverse consequences of PEPFAR program areas; and the absence of oversight of the activities of PEPFAR funding recipients. It is therefore imperative that full and complete disclosure and oversight in the proposed information collection activity take precedence over the CDC's and PEPFAR funding recipients' professed concerns for increased regulatory and administrative 'burden'.

References

AFP (2012) US urges circumcision for soldiers to fight HIV in Africa Yahoo! Health http://health.yahoo.net/news/s/afp/us-urges-circumcision-for-soldiers-to-fight-hiv-in-africa Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68Trj7ABp

AHN (2012) HIV services in western refugee camps overwhelmed Gant Daily 29 March 2012 http://gantdaily.com/2012/03/29/hiv-services-in-western-refugee-camps-overwhelmed/

Bronselaer GA, Schober JM, Meyer-Bahlburg HF, T'Sjoen G, Vlietinck R, Hoebeke PB (2013) Male circumcision decreases penile sensitivity as measured in a large cohort BJU Int. 2013 May;111(5):820-7. doi:

10.1111/j.1464-410X.2012.11761.x. Epub 2013 Feb 4 Abstract available at https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/23374102

Boyle GJ, Hill G (2011) Sub-Saharan African randomised clinical trials into male circumcision and HIV transmission: methodological, ethical and legal concerns J Law Med. 2011 Dec;19(2):316-34 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/22320006

CDC (2011) Trends in In-Hospital Newborn Male Circumcision - United States 1999-2010 Prepared by Xinjian Zhang, PhD, Sanjyot Shinde, PhD, Peter H Kilmarx, MD, Robert T Chen, MD, Div of HIV/AIDS Prevention, National Center for HIV/AIDS, Viral Hepatitis, STD, and TB Prevention; Shanna Cox, MSPH, Lee Warner, PhD, Div of Reproductive Health, National Center for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion; Maria Owings, PhD, Div of Healthcare Statistics, National Center for Health Statistics; Charbel El Bcheraoui, PhD, EIS Officer, CDC. Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report (MMWR) Full-text available at http://www.cdc.gov/mmwr/preview/mmwrhtml/mm6034a4.htm?s_cid=mm6034a4_w

Chibaya, M (2013) Resistance hinders circumcision programme The Standard Full-text available at http://www.thestandard.co.zw/2013/05/19/resistance-hinders-circumcision-programme/

Dube, C (2012) F/town adult males spurn circumcision The Monitor 21 May 2012 http://www.mmegi.bw/index.php?sid=1&aid=370&dir=2012/May/Monday21 Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68TqWHbxL

FDA (2012) FDA's HSP/BIMO Initiative Accomplishments: Update May 2012 Food and Drug Administration Full-text available at http://www.fda.gov/ScienceResearch/SpecialTopics/RunningClinicalTrials/ucm305275.htm Accessed: 2012-06-10. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68JLjWhEP

Frisch M, Lindholm M, Grønbæk M (2011) Male circumcision and sexual function in men and women: a survey-based, cross-sectional study in Denmark Int J Epidemiol. 2011 Oct;40(5):1367-81. Epub 2011 Jun 14 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/21672947

Gonzalez L L (2012) Africa: Less Global Funds, More Problems allAfrica 10 May 2012 Full-text available at http://allafrica.com/stories/201205110671.html

Green LW, Travis JW, McAllister RG, Peterson KW, Vardanyan AN, Craig A (2010) Male circumcision and HIV prevention insufficient evidence and neglected external validity Am J Prev Med. 2010 Nov;39(5):479-82 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/20965388

Langa, V (2012) 175 MPs to be circumcised News Day 18 May 2012 http://www.newsday.co.zw/article/2012-05-18-175-mps-to-be-circumcised/ Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68Tqz9L2u

Llewellyn, E (2012) Infant Circumcision: A Tipping Point for HIV Prevention USAID Frontlines May/June 2012 Full-text available at http://transition.usaid.gov/press/frontlines/fl_may12/FL_may12_U5_SWAZILAND.html Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68U9lv9vt

Mhlanga, P (2012) Govt sharpens knives for forced circumcision NewsDay 1 December 2012 Full-text available at http://www.newsday.co.zw/2012/12/01/govt-sharpens-knives-for-forced-circumcision/

NIH (2008) Male Circumcision and HIV Rates in Kenya ClinicalTrials.gov website 28 May 2008 Full-text available at http://www.clinicaltrials.gov/ct2/show/NCT00059371

NIH (2007) Male Circumcision for HIV Prevention in Rakai, Uganda ClinicalTrials.gov website 23 August 2007 Full-text available at http://www.clinicaltrials.gov/ct2/show/NCT00425984

Ngwega, N (2012) Tanzania: Handeni Promotes Male Circumcision to Curb HIV Spread allAfrica.com 11 February 2012 Full-text available at http://allafrica.com/stories/201302110873.html

OHRP (2011) Regulatory Changes in ANPRM Comparison of Existing Rules with Some of the Changes Being Considered Office of Human Research Protections website Full-text available at http://www.hhs.gov/ohrp/humansubjects/anprmchangetable.html Accessed: 2012-01-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64jh4cWek

OIG (2011a) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract HHSN266-2006-00015C With NexBio, Inc. (A-03-10-03119) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 21 September 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003119.pdf

OIG (2011b) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract HHSN272-2008-00013C with the EMMES Corporation (A-03-10-03115) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 31 October 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003115.pdf

OIG (2011c) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract N01-AI-15416 With the University of California at San Francisco Audit (A-03-10-03120) on the Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 10 July 2011 Available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003120.pdf

OIG (2011d) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract N01-AI-3-0052 With Avecia Biologics Limited (A-03-10-03117) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 21 September 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003117.pdf

OIG (2011e) Review of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention’s Oversight of the President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds for Fiscal Years 2007 Through 2009 (A-04-10-04006) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 15 June 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region4/41004006.pdf

OIG (2012a) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract HHSN266-2005-00022C With PPD Development, LP (Audit A-03-10-03118) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 14 September 2012 Full-text available at https://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003118.pdf

OIG (2012b) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract N01-AI-30068 With PPD Development, LP (Audit A-03-10-03116) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 14 September 2012 Full-text available at https://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003116.pdf

OIG (2012c) The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Namibia Office Did Not Always Properly Monitor Recipients' Use of the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds Audit (A-04-12-04020) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 19 November 2012 Full-text available at https://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region4/41204020.pdf

OIG (2012d) The Republic of Namibia, Ministry of Health and Social Services, Did Not Always Manage the President’s Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds or Meet Program Goals in Accordance With Award Requirements (Audit A-04-12-04019) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 19 November 2012 Full-text available at https://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region4/41204019.pdf

OIG (2013) The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's South Africa Office Did Not Always Properly Monitor Recipients' Use of the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds (Audit A-04-12-04022) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 12 February 2013 Full-text available at https://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region4/41204022.pdf

OIG (2012e) Vaccines for Children Program: Vulnerabilities in Vaccine Management (Report OEI-04-10-00430) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 5 June 2012 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oei/reports/oei-04-10-00430.pdf

Onyango, H (2012) Kenya: The Cut for Boys to Tame HIV allAfrica http://allafrica.com/stories/201205111262.html 10 May 2012 Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68TrTJpmb

Sorrells ML, Snyder JL, Reiss MD, Eden C, Milos MF, Wilcox N, Van Howe RS (2007) Fine-touch pressure thresholds in the adult penis BJU Int. 2007 Apr;99(4):864-9 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/17378847

Taylor, J.P., A.P. Lockwood and A.J.Taylor The prepuce: Specialized mucosa of the penis and its loss to circumcision Journal of Urology (1996), 77, 291-295 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed?term=8800902

Towindo, L (2012) Were we fooled? The Sunday Mail 13 July 2012 Full-text available at http://www.sundaymail.co.zw/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=29913 :were-we-fooled-&catid=46:crime-a-courts&Itemid=138#.UbQcsdjqu9I

NY governor continues promulgating wage gap myth

Matt · 10 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The latest is here. Excerpt:

'Today marks the 50th anniversary of the signing of the federal Equal Pay Act – an occasion that both demonstrates the progress we have made to achieve pay equity and highlights the work that remains to be done to fulfill this mission.

Today in New York, women earn 84 percent of what their male counterparts earn. Over a lifetime, they will earn $500,000 less than men. In 2013, this is unacceptable, and one of the main points the Women's Equality Act that I have proposed works to overcome. It would require employers to base their pay decisions on qualifications and not gender. The legislation also protects an employee's right to share wage information with other employees without being retaliated against and increase damages to successful plaintiffs in pay equity discrimination cases.'

Time to let him know he has his facts wrong. Contact Gov. Cuomo at this page. As always, please be polite and specific. Feel free to include links to numerous debunkifying stories and studies, such as this one. Just Google "wage gap myth debunked", there are tons of them.

UK: Million Children Live In Fatherless Households

Matt · 10 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Centre for Social Justice (CSJ) also says that the number of lone-parent families is increasing by 20,000 a year and will reach more than two million by the time of the 2015 general election.

The CSJ warned of a "tsunami" of family breakdown and accused Government of a "feeble" response to the problem and of turning a blind eye to its commitment to promote family stability.

Some of the poorest parts of the country are becoming "men deserts", the report found, because there are so few visible male role models for children.

Liverpool has one of the highest densities of fatherless households in the country, with eight of the top 20 areas within its boundaries, the report, Fractured Families: Why Stability Matters, found.'

Obama: 'Your Math Is Bad' If You Deny Gender Wage Gap

Mastodon · 11 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'President Barack Obama is calling attention to the 50th anniversary of the Equal Pay Act that aimed to eliminate gender wage disparities, making the case for strengthening the law that President John F. Kennedy signed in 1963.'

Women have earned almost 10 million more college degrees than men since 1982

Mastodon · 11 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MP: Just as a thought experiment – imagine the public reaction if the educational degree imbalances of 4.35 million bachelor's degrees and 9.7 million college degrees overall favored men, and not women? I don't think it would be an exaggeration to say that a college degree imbalance that large in favor of men would be considered a "national crisis." College degree disparities, when women are over-represented, never seem to be much of a concern. And with those enormous gender imbalances in higher education favoring women, do we really need hundreds of women's centers on college campuses all over the country, women's only study lounges, and female-only campus housing for STEM degrees?

Bottom Line: The reality is that the concern about gender imbalances and gender equity in higher education is very selective, imbalanced and inequitable – there is only concern when women are under-represented and never any concern when men are under-represented. There likely won't be any commencement addresses this year lamenting the huge gender disparities in college degrees over the last 30 years, which is now approaching 10 million on a cumulative basis. Instead, it would be much more likely that we'll hear about female under-representation in certain fields like engineering, physics and computer science. The selective concern about gender disparities continues.'

Is this legal? No men are allowed in MSU's Women's Lounge

Mastodon · 11 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are very few places on MSU's campus that aren't open to everyone, but one of them is the Women's Lounge inside the [student] Union.

Tina Timm, an assistant professor in the College of Social Sciences, feels the lounge is outdated. "This will probably get me in trouble with my feminist friends but it doesn't make sense to me to have that in this day in age," Timm said. "If there was a lounge or study area specifically for men, I think there would be a lot of push back."

Patricia Lowrie, director of the Women's Resource Center, said the needs the lounge serves have changed with society. Getting rid of the private space would be equivalent to saying women's needs that are currently being served by the lounge are irrelevant, Lowrie said.
...
MP: According to the Title IX portion of the Education Amendments of 1972, "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving federal financial assistance."

Wouldn't a women-only lounge that discriminates against men be in violation of Title IX? Or since Michigan State is required to provide gender equality for its athletic programs, wouldn't Title IX require that MSU provide equivalent space on its campus for a men-only lounge?'

Bridging the male education gap

Mastodon · 11 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the ongoing discussion of how to boost the education and skill levels of the American workforce, one central issue is rarely addressed: the gap between male and female achievement. The reality is that the slowdown in U.S. educational gains is predominantly a male affair, and one that drags down the overall competitiveness of our workforce and workers' ability to land (or create) good jobs.

To get more Americans working and set economic growth back on track, we need to understand what's going on with men in education.

Despite rising college costs and the many other challenges facing America's schools, women have made extraordinary strides in education. They have overtaken men in high school and college completion in the last few decades, earning 58% of bachelor's degrees and 62% of postsecondary occupational certificates.'

SAVE: Most Americans Doubt Fairness of Criminal Justice System, Reveals Center for Prosecutor Integrity

Matt · 11 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

WASHINGTON / June 11, 2013 – A public opinion survey reveals a substantial majority of persons harbor doubts about the effectiveness of the American criminal justice system. The nationwide survey reveals a crisis of confidence in our nation's legal system, says the non-profit Center for Prosecutor Integrity.

The presumption of innocence is a bedrock principle of the American legal system. But two-thirds (66.8%) of the survey respondents believe the presumption of innocence is becoming lost in our nation's legal system.

Equal treatment is promised by the 14h Amendment to the Constitution. But three-quarters (74.8%) believe our legal system often does not follow the rule of 'equal treatment under the law.'

Prosecutors occupy a central role in the criminal justice system, but over two-fifths (42.8%) say prosecutor misconduct is widespread. Strong majorities of persons say most cases of prosecutor misconduct are kept hidden from the public (71.4%), and similar numbers say prosecutors who commit misconduct are almost never punished (73.5%).

A previous survey found one in 10 persons reported they had been falsely accused of domestic violence, sexual assault, or child abuse: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/survey/ False allegations undermine the rule of law, squander limited criminal justice resources, and weaken the credibility of victims, CPI believes.

"These stunning findings show the American criminal justice system has come off its moorings," notes CPI spokesman Phillip Holman. "Lawmakers must grapple with the fact that over-criminalization and lack of prosecutor accountability have weakened the very legitimacy of our legal system in the eyes of many."

The telephone interviews were conducted June 3-5, 2013. An average of 993 persons answered each of the survey questions. The sampling frame comes from voter registration records in 47 states; as such, the survey is not fully representative. More information about the survey findings and methods can be seen here: http://www.saveservices.org/prosecutors/survey/

The Center for Prosecutor Integrity, a project of S.A.V.E., is working to preserve the presumption of innocence, assure equal treatment under law, and bring an end to wrongful convictions: www.prosecutorintegrity.org

Woman reports on intactivist movie progress

Matt · 11 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When you grow up with the reality that your ancestors were persecuted in just about every place in which they tried to settle, and found to be on the the wrong side of the law just a tad too often, you come to appreciate that cultural embrace and legal status are weak litmus tests for determining whether someone or something is good or ethical. ...
...
Today, I am working to complete my first documentary, “American Secret: The Circumcision Agenda.” The film explores why circumcision became so popular in the U.S., as well as the cultural and economic incentives that perpetuate its practice. ...
...
At first my mom was nervous about the prospect of any Jewish ritual becoming criminalized. My sister was kind of eye-rolly, and had a "circumcised men enjoy sex” and “this is not a pressing issue" attitude. To his credit, my dad pretty much agreed that circumcision is an antiquated blood ritual.
...
Francelle Wax, 32, has overseen production coordination on political media campaigns and for historical documentaries. She has traveled four continents and lived in London, Washington, DC, Madurai, Tamil Nadu, India, and Berkeley, California. "American Secret: The Circumcision Agenda" is her first film.'

Bridgeport woman charged in crushing death

Mastodon · 11 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BRIDGEPORT -- A city woman is accused of killing a former lover with her car.

Cherelle Baldwin, 21, of Ash Street in Bridgeport, was arrested Monday and charged with the murder of Jeffrey Brown, 24, and is being held on a $1 million bond.

In the early morning hours of May 18, Baldwin plowed into Brown with a red Pontiac G6, crushing him to death against a garage's cinder-block wall, police said. Brown died of blunt force trauma injuries.

"There was a significant impact when he was struck," said William Kaempffer, spokesman for the Bridgeport Police Department. "The vehicle pushed in the cinder-block wall more than 10 inches."'

Man Murdered With Stiletto Heel: Police

Mastodon · 11 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Houston woman is being accused by authorities of stabbing a man to death with a stiletto heel in a high-rise condo.

KHOU-TV reports that 44-year-old Ana Lilia Trujillo is facing a murder charge.

Houston police investigators say officers responded to an assault in progress call at the condo just before 4 a.m. Sunday. At the scene, officers found Trujillo, who showed them the body of a 59-year-old man. He was found in a hallway between the entryway and the kitchen. Police say Trujillo was the only person in the condo when officers arrived.'

Australian Minister for Indigenous Health: "51 More Men's Sheds to Benefit from Grants"

Minuteman · 12 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Minister for Indigenous Health Warren Snowdon announced today that 51 more Men's Sheds in communities across Australia will receive funding to upgrade their facilities or buy new equipment and tools.
...
Across Australia, 51 Men's Sheds will share in $125,000 worth of funding to assist with the cost of upgrading facilities, purchasing tools and work equipment and improving disability access.
...
Under its National Male Health Policy, the Government funds the Australian Men's Shed Association to run the Shed Development Program, which includes $250,000 a year over three years to directly assist Men's Sheds, plus $125,000 for Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander shed activities.'

Hillary's State Department Irony

Matt · 12 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Well as we know, Hillary Clinton is no longer the US Secretary of State. But recall that one of the imperatives of her administration of the State Dept. was to work to end the sexual exploitation of women and girls. Just one article here goes:

'Clinton says preventing the exploitation and marginalization of girls is no longer an afterthought but a core foreign policy objective of the United States, which is co-sponsoring a Security Council resolution on the issue next week.'

This is a good aim. But contrast this with this recent piece of news:

'WASHINGTON — A State Department whistleblower has accused high-ranking staff of a massive coverup — including keeping a lid on findings that members of then-Secretary Hillary Clinton's security detail and the Belgian ambassador solicited prostitutes.

A chief investigator for the agency's inspector general wrote a memo outlining eight cases that were derailed by senior officials, including one instance of interference by Clinton's chief of staff, Cheryl Mills.

Any mention of the cases was removed from an IG report about problems within the Bureau of Diplomatic Security (DS), which provides protection and investigates crimes involving any State Department workers overseas.
...
* A DS agent was called off a case against US Ambassador to Belgium Howard Gutman over claims that he solicited prostitutes, including minors.'

So such is one prominent political feminist figure's actual commitment to "ending the sexual exploitation of women and girls." But assume for a moment none of the allegations are in fact true. Should the investigations have been summarily suppressed before any such conclusion could be drawn? And what if the allegation in particular that some amount of solicitation involved minors? Even if you believe an adult should be perfectly free to choose, without duress, to be a prostitute, few would make the case that even of his or her own free will, a minor should be allowed to be a prostitute, nor anyone be allowed under the law to buy their services.

Canada: "The Black Widow" Strikes Again

charlie · 12 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Named "The Black Widow" by the media, she gets off with another light sentence in what should have been attempted murder. Female charging and sentencing discount in full use here:. Excerpt:

'SYDNEY, Nova Scotia — A 78-year-old Canadian woman dubbed the "Black Widow" was sentenced Tuesday to 3 1/2 years in prison for drugging her newlywed husband.

The sentence for Melissa Ann Shepard, who pleaded Monday guilty to administering a noxious substance and failing to provide the necessities of life, will be reduced to two years and nine months because of time served in pretrial custody. Shepard was charged last year after Fred Weeks fell ill at a bed and breakfast while the couple was on a honeymoon.

An agreed statement of facts says Shepard slipped tranquilizers into the 76-year-old man's coffee and he was later taken to hospital. He survived.'

Whiff of misandry in the air after Gillard raises knotty issue

Mastodon · 12 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'On Tuesday, she played the gender card at the "Women for Gillard" launch. It was taped by the PM's office and sequences made available to the media. We got what she wanted us to get. This is not a media angle; it is the PM's message.

One sequence was "I invite you to imagine it. A prime minister - a man in a blue tie - who goes on holidays to be replaced by a man in a blue tie. A treasurer, who delivers a budget wearing a blue tie, to be supported by a finance minister - another man in a blue tie. Women once again banished from the centre of Australia's political life.'

What is she talking about? Kevin Rudd or Tony Abbott, or is it just plain and simple misandry. Does she want an election between misogyny and misandry?'

"Playing the 'gender card'? As if Julia Gillard has a choice"

Mastodon · 12 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Tuesday Julia Gillard ignited a "gender war", today, menugate went some way to justify it.

In a progressive world, her gender should not be an issue – but we are a long way off that being an everyday reality. How far off is best illustrated by a photo doing the rounds taken of a menu at a Liberal fundraiser in March this year, which describes a Moroccan quail dish as: “Julia Gillard Kentucky fried quail – small breasts, huge thighs and a big red box Moroccan carrot salad and sumac yoghurt.”

...

Gillard warned the issue of abortion would become the "political plaything of men" if Tony Abbott became prime minister, and invited us to imagine him as a man with a blue tie who goes on holidays to be replaced by another man in a blue tie. It seemed an odd request, even for someone who made their international political mark with her much praised misogyny speech.'

Australia: "Boys shower deaths case: Depressed mums need more help"

Mastodon · 12 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE "terrible and very tragic" deaths of two boys who died after their mother left them unattended in a shower for 10 hours highlights the need for more support for mentally ill mothers, the West Australian coroner says.

Coroner Alastair Hope handed down an open finding today in an inquest into the deaths of Lochlan James Stevens, aged two, and Malachi Isaac Stevens, aged 10 months, in November 2008.

But he made no recommendations because there was a lack of evidence from the boys' mother, Miranda Hebble, who claimed to not remember details from the incident.

The inquest heard she left the boys in the shower while she fetched something and fell asleep or passed out for 10 hours.'

“Boys Will Be Boys” in the United States, But Not in Asia, Finds Study Led by Pitt Researcher

Mastodon · 12 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PITTSBURGH—A new study led by a University of Pittsburgh researcher shows there is a gender gap when it comes to behavior and self-control in American children—one that does not appear to exist in children in Asia.

In the United States, according to the study, girls have higher levels of self-regulation than boys. In China, South Korea, and Taiwan, the study found no gender gap when researchers directly assessed the self-regulation of 3-to-6-year-olds. Self-regulation is defined as children’s ability to control their behavior and impulses, follow directions, and persist in completing a task. The results appear in the most recent issue of the journal Early Childhood Research Quarterly.

“These findings suggest that although we often expect girls to be more self-regulated than boys, this may not be the case for Asian children,” said Shannon Wanless, lead author of the study and assistant professor in the Department of Psychology in Education in Pitt’s School of Education.'

MBTA Police: Trio Of Women Threw Bleach, Robbed Man On Train

Mastodon · 13 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BOSTON (CBS) – MBTA Police are searching for three young women who they say threw bleach in the eyes of a bus passenger after robbing him of his money.

The victim was returning home from work early Sunday morning, riding the #28 bus on Blue Hill Avenue through Roxbury, when it seems the trio sized him up.

Officials say one female slapped the man about the head, while one went to work to search him for money.

“One of the women puts her knee on top of his legs so he can’t get up and takes the money from his pockets,” MBTA Superintendent-in Chief Joseph O’Connor told WBZ-TV.

The third suspect tossed the bleach, contained in a water bottle, in his eyes using it as a “cheap weapon,” say police.'

Prosecutors: Mother, Caregiver Killed Autistic Teen To End His Suffering

Matt · 14 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'RIVER GROVE, Ill. (CBS) – Cook County prosecutors said a west suburban woman and family caregiver planned for at least a week to kill the mother's 14-year-old son, because they believed he wasn't getting sufficient care for his autism.

CBS 2's Mike Puccinelli reports Alex Spourdalakis was found dead from multiple stab wounds on Sunday in the River Grove apartment he shared with his mother and godmother. The two women were found nearby in a semi-conscious state.

His mother, 50-year-old Dorothy Spourdalakis, and his live-in caregiver and godmother, 44-year-old Jolanta Skrodzka, have been charged with first-degree murder. At a bond hearing at the Maywood courthouse on Wednesday, a judge ordered both women held without bail.'

NPO: Modern Fatherhood: No Longer Hapless Dad

Matt · 14 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In her article, 5 Sweet Commercials That Really Get Modern Fatherhood, author Jeanne Sager says she became a champion for fathers after she became a mom. There is nothing like having to defend your husband to make you more aware of how American advertising makes men look like hapless dads. Speaking about her husband, Jeanne Sager said, “He’s a man who is every bit as involved in his daughter’s life as I am, and when companies insult him, they’re insulting our whole family dynamic.”

Perhaps these companies, or their advertising agencies read, Fathers’ “Maternal” Instinct Just as Reliable as a Mother’s. New research reveals that, “the amount of time a parent spends with his or her child, not the parent’s gender, has the greatest impact on whether the parent is able to identify the cry of a baby as his or her own.” It appears the long applauded maternal instinct has been “proven” through research focused solely on mothers or research that did not account for the amount of time each parent spent with the child.'

Don't Date Single Moms

MikeJH · 14 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Not so much a news story but some of the best advice I have heard on the Internet: Don't Date Single Moms

---
Ed. note: "MGTOW" stands for "Men Going Their Own Way"

SAVE: Accusing U. Launches Radio Campaign to Protect Free Speech on Campus

Matt · 14 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Teri Stoddard
Email: tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

WASHINGTON / June 14, 2013 – The non-profit Accusing U. is launching a nationwide radio campaign designed to highlight how the recent Obama Administration's sexual harassment mandate represents an unprecedented threat to free speech. The campaign will consist of radio interviews featuring Christina Hoff Sommers, well-known author, columnist, and resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute.

On May 9, the U.S. Department of Education and Department of Justice unveiled a new campus policy that classifies speech as a form of sexual harassment, enlarges its scope to include any speech that is deemed "unwelcome," and eliminates the reasonable person standard.

The policy applies to all faculty members and over 21 million undergraduate and graduate students at colleges receiving Department of Education funding.

The federal decision has proven to be controversial. Last week the Women's Committee of the American Association of University Professors released a letter expressing concerns about the policy: http://www.saveservices.org/falsely-accused/sex-assault/accusing-u/complaints/

To date, over 85 editorials have been written opposing the decision: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/ded-directive/ded-editorials/ Columnists believe the policy will effectively ban discussion on controversial topics such as AIDS prevention and gay rights, and may require removal of sex-themed classical works from English literature courses.

"The federal policy represents a radical assault on the First Amendment rights of faculty and students alike," explains Accusing U. spokesman Mike Thompson. "And what will happen if a student makes an unwelcome request for a date – will that be construed as sexual harassment?"

The May 9 policy comes on top of a divisive 2011 Dept. of Education mandate requiring colleges to use the weakest preponderance-of-evidence standard in handling allegations of sexual assault. The standard makes false allegations more likely, harming the credibility of victims.

Accusing U. -- www.accusingu.org -- is a project of Stop Abusive and Violent Environments, a victim-advocacy organization working for evidence-based solutions to domestic violence and sexual assault.

Eating disorders plague teenage boys, too

Mastodon · 14 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'High school boys in Los Angeles are twice as likely to induce vomiting or use laxatives to control their weight as the national average, with 5.2% of those surveyed saying they had recently done so, according to the most recent survey data gathered by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Los Angeles Unified School District. They are also more likely to have used diet pills, powders or liquids than boys nationwide.

The numbers challenge old assumptions that boys are immune to a problem better known to afflict teenage girls. Girls still exceed boys in fasting to lose weight, but the latest data, from 2011, showed that Los Angeles boys were nearly as likely as girls to purge through vomiting or laxatives. They were also as likely as girls to use diet pills, powders or liquids without the advice of a doctor — 6.2% said they recently used such substances, compared with 6.1% of girls.

Some experts say boys are starting to face the pressures long placed on girls, as buff, bare men proliferate in pop culture. Boys today watch Channing Tatum strip as "Magic Mike" or weigh themselves against the muscular Dwayne Johnson. The nonstop chatter of Twitter and Facebook has amplified those messages, therapists say.'

Men 'to blame for the menopause'

Mastodon · 14 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Evolutionary geneticists from Canada's McMaster University say men's tendency to choose younger mates meant fertility became pointless for older women.

In PLOS Computational Biology, they say this eventually led to the menopause.

But a UK expert said that was the "wrong way round" and men chose younger women because older women were less fertile.

...

Previous theories had proposed a "grandmother effect". This suggests that women lose their fertility at an age where they might not live to see a child grow, and instead are available to care for younger women's children.

The menopause was therefore seen as the block to older women from continuing to reproduce.

I think it makes more sense to see the human male preference for younger females largely as an evolved response to the menopause”

But this latest theory suggests things work the other way around, and that it is the lack of reproduction that has given rise to menopause.'

Mr Abbott, don't let gender-obsessed, post-60s feminists distract you

Mastodon · 14 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sure they are. But Emily's Listers, whence Gillard herself arose, and the Women for Gillard are not diverse.

These women are creatures of a particular vision of womanhood; womanhood made in the aggressive gender-obsessed feminism of the post-1960s.

They are stuck in that pointless combative oppositional attitude to men because they don't know what else to do in the face of failure, even though they know how passe it all is. They do not represent ordinary women, young or old, particularly the vast army of mothers who want pretty basic things from a government.

Gillard had a vision, we are told, and much of that vision was for women.

Well, it has not been the same vision the women who elected her had.'

If you get a login requirement, Google the first paragraph on the page and click the link over to the article on the web site.

"Fine, Would-Be Deadbeat Dads. Here's A Suggestion For You."

Mastodon · 14 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But you know what? I'm sick of this argument, so I propose that feminists go ahead and embrace this "paper abortion" bullshit, even though, unlike real abortion, it's not about bodily autonomy. I believe men should be able to terminate the responsibilities of fatherhood if they meet the following conditions:

- He has to sign away all rights before the baby is born. He does not get his name on the birth certificate. The child's father will be registered as "unknown". If someone else—say his ex's new husband—wishes to adopt and coparent the child, he cannot interfere.
- The only exception to this is if the mother did not alert the father to the pregnancy beforehand. He should be able to provide witnesses to testify that he hadn't seen her in at least six months prior to the birth.

Michael Bolton: When Fathers Say 'No More' to Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault

Mastodon · 14 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For two decades, The Michael Bolton Charities has been dedicated to responding to the needs of children and women at risk. It has been encouraging and inspiring to be joined in this effort by people who believe, as I do, that we must end the cycle of domestic violence and the lasting damage it inflicts on our families and our communities. Providing effective responses that offer real, life-changing opportunities is at the heart of our work, and our commitment has not wavered.

...

As fathers, we must fight to keep VAWA (Violence Against Women Act) fully funded and declare war on human trafficking in our country and everywhere it exists. We need to evolve in our perception and treatment of young women everywhere. It is important to say, free of ambiguity or hesitation, that violence and abuse, power and control, are never acceptable. That's precisely where dads come in. I am firmly convinced that we can cause a chain reaction of hope if our children hear directly from us precisely why healthy relationships must be a priority. Every day. Every night. In every way.'

Do Men Need More Rights on 'Forced Fatherhood'?

Mastodon · 14 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(NEWSER) – With Father's Day near comes a debate about "forced fatherhood." The phrase refers to guys who get turned into fathers against their will through unplanned pregnancies, explains Laurie Shrage in the New York Times. Men in this situation "have few choices," she writes. It's ultimately the woman's call on whether to have the baby, but her decision could saddle the man with years of child support even though he had no intention of becoming a dad. It's time we gave men more "reproductive autonomy" by providing them with more options, writes Shrage. For example, maybe he contributes only to the medical expenses related to the pregnancy and birth, and the couple goes their separate ways.'

Documentary: Does gold-digging impair women's joke-making ability?

Matt · 14 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Tom Martin, who sparked a huge debate in 2012 by suing the London School of Economics for sexist anti-male teachings in its gender studies curriculum, has now turned his attention to documentary film-making, posting an advert calling for a range of paid researchers, presenters and crew, for a potentially controversial documentary to begin shooting in London this August, called "Laughing with Women" - involving a street experiment to investigate if gold-digging impairs women's joke-making abilities.

The job posting has already caught the attention of a comedy circuit website, criticizing the documentary's premise, well known atheist feminist blogger PZ Myers, also criticizing the project (the comments section is worth a read), a slew of tweets, nearly all of them criticizing the project, and now, a youtube video... criticizing the project.

You can follow the progress of "Laughing with Women" by subscribing to the sexismbusters channel on youtube and twitter.

Brooklyn teacher not going to jail after having sex with 16-year-old boy

Mastodon · 14 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A female teacher at "Horndog High" admitted Thursday to bedding a 16-year-old boy at the school but will get no jail time.

She will, however, have to surrender her teaching license.

In a plea-bargain agreement, Erin Sayar, 37, will serve 10 years' probation for having sex with Kevin Eng, whom she tutored at Brooklyn's James Madison High School. The sex occurred in classrooms and Sayar's car.

"The complainant and his family are amenable to the offer," Assistant District Attorney Serena Horowitz said in Brooklyn Supreme Court. "They stated to me that they don't want to see the defendant spend time in jail."

The tattooed teacher carried on the tryst with Eng in December 2011 and was exposed when his girlfriend snooped in his Facebook account and found he wrote to Sayar, "I love you so much."'

Gender Makeup among Title IX Coordinators

Mastodon · 14 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Eighty-three percent of Title IX coordinators are female, the National Association of Scholars found in a sample study.
...
In short, the gender-equity enforcers seem to have gender-inequity problem when it comes to choosing staff members. Peter Wood explains why this could be a problem:

Considering that the overwhelming preponderance of sexual harassment allegations are directed by women at men, the disproportion of women to men in the positions charged with interpreting and enforcing the sexual harassment rules is a legitimate concern. Are male students who are accused of sexual harassment likely to receive fair-minded treatment in these offices? They already face a system of rules and definitions jerry-rigged by the Office of Civil Rights to deny them the presumption of innocence and to minimize due process guarantees.'

UK: Women much more likely to survive cancer

Mastodon · 15 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women are far more likely to survive cancer than men are, research shows.

Nearly twice as many women as men are still alive at least ten years after being diagnosed.

This is largely because the most common form of cancer in women – breast cancer – is easier to treat than the most common form in men, prostate cancer.

Research by Macmillan Cancer Support shows that 260,000 women are still alive ten years after their cancer diagnosis, compared with 140,000 men.

The charity says this is partly because almost 80 per cent of the 50,000 women diagnosed annually with breast cancer can expect to live at least another decade.

In contrast, just over 65 per cent of the 41,000 men diagnosed with prostate cancer will survive for this length of time.'

UK: Tessa Jowell Accused Of Being Sexist Over 'Driven Women' Comment

Mastodon · 15 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tessa Jowell MP has been accused of being sexist after claiming women are "much more driven than men".

She was speaking on BBC Radio 5 about the representation of women in Parliament when she made the comments.

"I think by and large women are much more driven to work together and to work through an issue to a solution."

Host Stephen Nolan took issue with Jowell by asking "And men can't?" before Jowell responded: "Much less, much, much less."

Nolan came back. "There is no way as a man I would get away on this radio station with saying men drive things through better. These blanket statements that you are able to get away with, it is inherently sexist."

But Jowell rejected his claim. "No it's not," she said. "It's not sexist. It's making a statement about the different ways in which the male MPs tend to work and the women MPs tend to work.'

UK: Women 'fared better than men' in jobs since recession

Mastodon · 15 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of women in employment since 2008 has increased by more than a quarter of a million, a 1.2pc net rise, while the number of men in work has dropped by 70,000, a 0.4pc net fall, a study of official labour market data has shown.

The analysis by The Jobs Economist, an employment consultancy which publishes the research today, claims the widespread assertion that women have been more adversely affected by austerity and job cuts than men is wrong.

Dr John Philpott, director of The Jobs Economist, said he can see no reason why the Government is focusing on trying to help get more women back to work when men appear to have been worst hit by job cuts.'

UK: Battle of the sexes over ‘radical feminism’ conference venue

Mastodon · 15 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE Town Hall was bombarded with complaints after a “radical feminism” conference was held at the council-owned Camden Centre.

Radfem – some members of which are accused of arguing that men should form 10 per cent of the population, according to men’s rights activists – have been barred from holding their annual get-together in Camden venues in recent years.

Last year, Conway Hall in Holborn cancelled the booking because Radfem refused to allow entry to transgender women.

This year the London Irish Centre in Camden Square cancelled because they didn’t have the “manpower” to deal with the complaints they were receiving.

Radfem applied to use the Camden Centre, and the event went ahead on Saturday and Sunday.

An open letter from Men’s Rights Activism to the Camden Centre’s events manager said Radfem had a “documented history of advocating harm to male infants, gendercide of half the human race. At what point did the Camden Centre conclude that this event, which excludes people on the grounds of sex, does not breach the UK Equality Act 2010? I do not consider myself an oppressor because I was born male, this is a denial of my humanity.”'

The Left's War on Father's Day

Mastodon · 15 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"We know the statistics," said President Barack Obama, "that children who grow up without a father are five times more likely to live in poverty and commit crime; nine times more likely to drop out of schools and 20 times more likely to end up in prison. They are more likely to have behavioral problems, or run away from home, or become teenage parents themselves."

The Journal of Research on Adolescence found that even after controlling for varying levels of household income, kids in father-absent homes are more likely to end up in jail. And kids that never had a father in the house are the most likely to wind up behind bars.

...

Studies back up the link between the explosive growth in government welfare -- begun in the '60s -- and the increase of out-of-wedlock births.

...

How do we know that the welfare state creates disincentives that hurt the people we are trying to help? They tell us. In 1985, the Los Angeles Times asked whether poor women "often" have children to get additional benefits. Most of the non-poor respondents said no. When the same question was asked of the poor, however, 64 percent said yes.

People, of course, need help. A humane society does not ignore those who cannot or even will not fend for themselves. But good faith does not substitute for sound policy. The welfare state is an assault on families.'

Australia: Tackling men's mental health issues

Matt · 15 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEWS ads are urging men to take the bull "by the balls" and take charge of their mental health.

It's part of a new multi-million dollar "Man Therapy" campaign funded by the federal government that's urging men to take action on depression and anxiety - and reminding them a real man looks out for his mates.

Mental Health Minister Mark Butler said the number of male deaths from suicide in 2011 were almost twice that of road deaths, making suicide the biggest killer of Australian males between 15 and 44.

Mr Butler said the tragedy was most men did not seek help for their underlying mental health issue.

The Man Therapy campaign being rolled out by Beyondblue hoped to change that and get through to men using humour.'

The Unspoken Stigma of Workplace Flexibility

Matt · 15 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Assume for a moment that your employer let you decide when and where you worked — you might arrive early so you could leave in time to care for a child, or work part of the week from home. Or perhaps you want to reduce your hours for a while to care for an aging parent. How would you be perceived if you raised your hand for one of these options?

"Many times these policies are on the books, but informally everyone knows you are penalized for using them," said Joan C. Williams, founding director of the Center for Work-Life Law at the University of California, Hastings College of the Law, referring to the array of flexible work arrangements some employers offer. "I invented the term 'flexibility stigma' to describe that phenomenon. Recent studies have found that it is alive and well, and it functions quite differently for women than it does for men."

For some women, it gives employers a reason to view them through the lens of motherhood, prompting the strongest form of gender discrimination. Mothers are seen as less competent and less committed to their work, she said, citing other studies. But more surprising is that men who seek work flexibility may be penalized more severely than women, because they're viewed as more feminine, deviating from their traditional role of fully committed breadwinners.

...

"Not only have we put women on the mommy track, we put dad on the daddy track," said Kenneth Matos, an organizational psychologist and senior director of employment research and practice at the Families and Work Institute, a research group. "We tend to talk about what happens to women, but we don't talk about what happens to men and we wonder why women are stuck."

...

Still, most workers still remain at the mercy of their managers. "It is not systematic and it is not reliable and for a lot of people, it depends on whether your supervisors are sympathetic," said Ariane Hegewisch, a study director at the Institute for Women's Policy Research. "But you have no guarantees."'

Pres. Obama: Reform child support laws to get more fathers "engaged"

charlie · 15 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Obama remarked that a better child support system would get fathers more involved?! Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON (AP) - President Barack Obama says there's no substitute for the love and support that fathers provide.

In his weekly Internet and radio address, Obama is wishing Americans a happy Father's Day. He laments that his own father wasn't around and says he's still working to be a better father.

Obama says being a dad isn't easy for anyone - gay, straight, grandparent or foster parent. He says he wants to encourage marriage and strong families by reforming child support laws to get more fathers engaged. He says businesses, faith groups and communities have a role to play.'

Former 6th grade teacher admits sex with boy

Mastodon · 15 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former sixth-grade teacher and mother of two pleaded guilty to having sex with a student, Southern California authorities said Friday.

Malia Brooks, who taught at Garden Grove Elementary in Simi Valley, pleaded guilty Thursday to three counts of lewd conduct with a child under 14, said Ventura County Deputy District Attorney Erin Meister.

The judge indicated that Brooks will likely receive a six-year prison term when sentenced on August 23, Meister said. Bail was set at $2 million for the 32-year-old Brooks, who remains in custody.

"Malia Brooks has a mental illness. For 31 years, she was a law-abiding citizen," her attorney, Ron Bamieh, said. "Something had to occur for her to drastically change who she was. It's not like she is attracted to 12 year-old boys."'

UK: Whatever you do on Father's Day, don't buy into the fear of 'men deserts'

Mastodon · 15 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We live in an era of "men deserts", says the Centre for Social Justice. One day my children will look on me with worshipful eyes and say: "Mother, how did we survive the man drought of the early 21st century?" as if I'm some Mad Max of the spunkless years. This Sunday is Father's Day, the traditional time to pay tribute to any man you haven't driven screaming from your fanny ghetto after mating. But what to buy?

...

The report criticises agencies that intervene in cases of domestic abuse for failing to recognise fathers as caregivers, on the grounds that "many perpetrators desire a more positive relationship with their children, and this can be a powerful motivator for change." Here, the CSJ is subordinating the safety of children to the potential self-improvement of abusers. Because this report, with its wobbly stats and its exaggerated claims, isn't actually about what's best for children: it's about the fear that some women and children might be perfectly OK without a masculine hand hanging over the household.'

Father's Day: Celebrating 'Good Enough' Fathers Is a Waste of Time

Mastodon · 15 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Father's Day is the annual celebration of men's fertility. It is not a celebration of "good fathers" but, rather, any man who contributes sperm to create a child. We have arrived at a point in our culture where violent men are considered "good enough" fathers. We are in the midst of a crisis in masculinity where male violence is excused and normalised. The media writes stories of men, like Andrew Parsons, who brutally murder their partners but who are still classed as "good fathers". The losers in our culture are women and their children.
...
This Father's Day, we should examine the realities faced by women and children in our capitalist-patriarchal culture. Why do so many men assume that they should face no consequences for fathering a child? And, why does the government support the right of these men to fuck women with impunity whilst "slut-shaming" those women for having sex? Why are women the only ones who have to take responsibility for the consequences of having sex? Why does the government think it should punish some women for withholding contact from abusive men without punishing those same men for the abuse or their failure to pay maintenance? Why do men get to do whatever they want whenever they want with no legal or moral requirement for them to act like an adult?'

HHS Secretary Kathleen Sebelius statement on National Men's Health Week and Father's Day

Mastodon · 15 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON, Jun 10, 2013 (BUSINESS WIRE) -- A father's love and full involvement in his children's lives is crucial to their health, well-being, and development.

Fathers influence the physical well-being of their children in a number of ways -- by being engaged in their lives, supporting a mother's health, or by ensuring that children get the preventive services, such as vaccinations and well-baby checkups, they need to stay healthy. Fathers make a difference.

Studies have shown a father's own health makes a difference to their children's health. Active toddlers, for example, are more likely to have fathers with a lower Body Mass Index than less active children.

National Men's Health Week, June 10-16, which concludes with Father's Day, is a good time to focus on how men can take care of their own physical and mental health for themselves and for the well-being of their families. That means eating right, being active, and getting health insurance to ensure their families' security and peace of mind.'

No winners in the 'war on boys'

Mastodon · 15 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This won't be popular with many people and will be viewed as reprehensible by those who profit from the continuing war on boys in public education, but the truth is that our cherished public educational institutions are growing more militantly anti-male with each passing generation.

This should be glaringly obvious to anyone familiar with the intellectual ailments now infecting an entire generation of boys. A full 80 percent of America's 3.7 million teachers are women. The numbers in elementary schools are even more slanted, with many schools reporting a 100 percent female faculty and administration.
...
Many elementary schools have part-time male faculty with men filling in most often as physical education or music teachers. You don't find a lot of guys at the elementary level, but when you do they are almost always exemplary teachers. They have to be, just to survive.
...
When did having a Y chromosome become a debilitating condition? No one in authority will admit it, but we are losing an entire generation of young men. The future for boys looks bleak.

Perhaps Thucydides was right. When self interest replaces rational thought, and fear drives out truth, there is no honor, only vengeance.'

What's Wrong With Sweden?

Mastodon · 16 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

There's much more of interest in this book. About, for example, the inculcation of virulently anti-male attitudes at all levels of the Swedish educational system. ("Boys cry when they hear how bad they and their father are and men have always been.") About how the system rewards irresponsibility on the part of young unmarried mothers and the men who impregnate them. ("With a baby, a single parent sidesteps all waiting lines and the child may be the only means to an apartment for decades.") About a national self-hatred so fierce that "schools have asked pupils not to wear [Swedish flag] t-shirts or wave the yellow and blue flag as it could be interpreted as racist." About a country where adults admire and envy youth beyond all reason, and accordingly exhibit greater levels of hedonism and infantilism than their counterparts anywhere else on the planet. And about levels of anti-Semitism that made international headlines yet again just the other day, when Israel's Eurovision delegation was harassed and threatened on the streets of Malmö.

For an American reader, Sjunnesson's book about a supposedly free country where the media march in lockstep and where dissent can be dangerous carries a special resonance in the wake of revelations that the IRS has targeted conservative groups and the Justice Department has snooped on AP and Fox News journalists. To some observers, the depth of the Obama administration's hostility toward any hint of criticism in the media has been especially puzzling, given that most news media have in fact been absurdly supportive and protective of Obama throughout his presidency. But to a true socialist government, any dissent is intolerable. In Norway, where the domination of the news market by state-run TV channels and radio stations and by state-subsidized newspapers already give the government a very strong hand in shaping the media message about itself, officials have now gone a step further, proposing that the state award grants to fund journalistic projects of its own choosing -- an outrageous suggestion in a democratic country, but a no-brainer for those with a socialist mindset.'

The War On Boys and Anti-Gun Hysteria

Mastodon · 16 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Forget the contrived “war on girls”, I’ve been saying there is a war on boys before it was cool. My impending, and always accurate, sense of doom began exactly ten years ago with the birth of my son. From the very first play date where all the moms repeated to their toddler sons, “Don’t hit. We don’t use our hands for hitting”. The “happy hands” philosophy later evolved into restricting their sons from playing with guns and toy weapons.
...
You know what else sets my teeth on edge? Reading about innocent little boys, 5 and 6 years old, being ostracized and suspended from school for doing what they are naturally wired to do. As far as I am concerned this blatant intolerance and reverse sexism is terrorizing our male children. It’s child abuse under the guise of political correctness. A perfect example of this terror can be found here, where a five year old is interrogated for two hours and becomes so frightened he wets his pants.

Simply put, any teacher or school administrator that doesn’t understand how little boys work doesn’t deserve to be working with children. Instead of admonishing children for chewing pop tarts in the shape of a gun, we fire every single teacher and principal who takes leaves of their damn senses. Lose your common sense, lose your job.'

Fathers' Day 2013

Matt · 16 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Father's Day is always a bit ambivalently marked here at MANN, not unlike Veterans Day. The issue is that for some men, being a dad (like being a veteran) has turned out to be very fulfilling and a source of pride, satisfaction, etc. But for others, not so much.

So to all the dads out there, I can only say this: I hope this day for each of you is as good as it can be for whatever your personal situation is.

Ontario's Socialist Party leader cuts loose on FRA/MRAs to mark Fathers' Day

Mastodon · 16 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It seems that there are those out there who would tell us that there is nothing to be happy about at all. Who would claim that fathers should be up in arms. Militant. Standing up for the apparently declining rights of men in the face of the onslaught of feminism and discrimination, by women, against men.

...

These claims, as well as many others by the reactionary opponents of feminism, the Men's Rights "Movement" and a variety of other half-baked far right wing journalists or politicians, are truly easy to refute. Many of them I have already refuted right here on rabble. There is no truth to them at all and they do not withstand even the slightest serious scrutiny. They require a level of credulity and willful stupidity that is almost beneath contempt.

...

There is no such thing as "sexism" against men in any legitimate sense of the term. It simply does not exist. For Sexism to have meaning as an idea, it has to be a systemic issue, and there is no systemic discrimination against men. The notion that sexism against men is possible is an invention of those opposed to feminism. "Misandry" is a lie.

...

I think I would enjoy the day far more if the reality of women's oppression was broadly recognized by fathers and men generally and if I was not certain that so many men will spend Father's Day hating women including the mothers of their own children.'

Wikipedia on Michael Laxer.

Suspended 8th Grader Could Get Jail Time Over NRA T-Shirt

Mastodon · 16 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In April Breitbart News reported that West Virginia 8th grader Jared Marcum was suspended for refusing to take off an NRA t-shirt he wore to school. And details now indicate the 8th grader could face a $500 fine and up to a year in jail for obstruction charges.

Fox News reports that on June 13 Marcum appeared before a judge "and was officially charged with obstructing an officer." Moreover, the judge has allowed "the prosecution to move forward" with its case against Marcum.

Logan City Police officer James Adkins says that Marcum refused to quit talking when asked to remove the shirt. The officer said this hindered his ability to do his job.

Marcum's father remains confident and stands by his son: "Me, I'm more of a fighter and so is Jared and eventually we're going to get through this. I don't think it should have ever gone this far."'

Hotels.com TV Spot 'Great Outdoors' mocks dad on Father's Day

mens_issues · 17 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I just saw a typical "dumb dad" TV spot for Hotels.com in which a father arrives at a hotel in the woods with his wife and kids. The hotel that he chose from a brochure turns out to be in ruins, and he gets chased around by a bear. Meanwhile, mom is in the SUV with the kids and smugly dismisses dumb old dad before looking up a room on Hotels.com which turns out to be much better. What a wonderful tribute to dads on Father's Day. I certainly won't be looking up hotels on Hotels.com.

Remember the Wonder of Men

Mastodon · 17 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This Sunday, one group of kids across the country will be giving their fathers ties, sports gear, homemade art, or some other tokens to express their appreciation on Father's Day. Unfortunately, there will be another group of kids for whom the holiday is a painful reminder that they don't have a relationship with their fathers.

Why do a growing portion of kids in America have no active father in their lives to celebrate this weekend?

According to Dr. Helen Smith in her new book, Men on Strike: Why Men are Boycotting Marriage, Fatherhood, and the American Dream -- and Why it Matters, one reason is that society is stacking the deck against men, causing many to go "on strike" from traditional responsibilities. These men aren't just lazy, but instead are making choices based on incentives.

Smith writes, "Most men are not acting irresponsibly because they are immature or because they want to harm women; they are acting rationally in response to the lack of incentives today's society offers them to be responsible fathers, husbands and providers."

Smith argues that feminism has gone too far, creating a feminized world of female privilege, where men no longer are treated as equals. She cites examples of men opting out of college, marriage, and fatherhood.

Much of the popular literature today on men focuses on the lack of men growing up. In Manning Up: How the Rise of Women Has Turned Men into Boys, Kay Hymowitz argues that a new period of extended adolescence has emerged in the 20s -- a "pre-adulthood" stage. An image of a 25-year-old guy in his parent's basement playing a video game quickly comes to mind.'

SAVE: Center for Prosecutor Integrity Activism: Monday, June 17 -- Assistant District Attorney Mary Kellett of Maine

Matt · 17 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

BACKGROUND: Maine Prosecutor Mary Kellett was found guilty in December of violating 7 different counts of prosecutor ethics: http://1.usa.gov/18QVdaY. Her case has now been sent to the Maine Supreme Court to decide her punishment.

But back on the farm, it's BUSINESS AS USUAL -- to this day, Kellett continues her usual prosecutorial duties in Ellsworth, Maine.

We don't allow corrupt cops to stay on the beat. Contact D.A. Carletta Bassano TODAY, tell her to REMOVE Mary Kellett from her duties until the final Supreme Court ruling.

Email: carletta.bassano-at-da7.org
Telephone: 207-667-4621

More info: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/intolerable-injustice/

US marriage rate at historic low

Matt · 17 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No mention of the 600-lb. gorilla in the room-- predictably. Excerpt:

'The marriage rate is at its lowest point in more than a century, and the number of marriages across the USA fell more than 5% during the recession. But a new analysis projects that pent-up demand and the large population of marriage-eligible Millennials, ages 18-34, means more will be headed to the altar over the next two years.

Cultural changes about whether and when to marry, the fact that two-thirds of first marriages are preceded by cohabitation and the recession's financial fallout — including unemployment and underemployment — fueled the wedding decline. Projections from the private company Demographic Intelligence of Charlottesville, Va., says the signs are right for a temporary boost in weddings.

The company projects a 4% increase in the number of weddings since 2009, reaching 2.168 million this year; 2.189 million in 2014. Depending on the economic recovery, the report projects a continuing increase to 2.208 million in 2015.'

Florida man beaten, robbed, stripped naked on first date

Mastodon · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Florida man was beaten, robbed, forced to strip naked and abandoned on the side of a road Friday evening during a first date gone horribly wrong, according to police.

Authorities found nude, bloodied Shaun Paul Williams, 34, walking on the shoulder of State Road 100 in Bunnell, Fla., late Friday near a cow pasture where Williams said he was assaulted and mugged by his date and her two unidentified male companions earlier that evening, according to a Flagler County Sheriff's Office case report.

Williams told sheriff's deputies that he met the unidentified woman at a convenience store in Daytona Beach, Fla., two weeks ago. They struck up a friendship and later arranged to go out on June 14, according to the report.'

Gender war backfires as men ditch Australia PM

Matt · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'AFP - Australian Prime Minister Julia Gillard's attempt to marginalise the opposition by claiming it would change abortion rights and sideline women has backfired with a poll on Monday showing male voters are deserting her.

Gillard, the country's first female leader, last week reignited a simmering gender war by saying in a speech that government would be dominated by "men in blue ties" should opposition leader Tony Abbott assume office in September elections.

"It's a decision about whether, once again, we will banish women's voice from the core of our political life," said the embattled prime minister in the speech, desperate to shore up waning support.'

Texas supermarket marks Men's Health Month with free mammograms for women

Matt · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. So, any wonder men get the impression their lives simply are not valued as much as women's? Seems like as good idea as this gender-specific, woman-only free test may be, at least during Men's Health Month, they might also want to offer free PSA tests, too. Or do something, anyway. Excerpt:

'AMARILLO, TEXAS -- Last Saturday, The Texas Tech University Health Sciences Center at Amarillo's Breast Center For Excellence teamed up with United Supermarkets to offer free mammograms to women shoppers.

Through a Cancer Prevention and Research Institute of Texas grant, uninsured women over the age of 40 are eligible for a free mammogram as long as they are Texas residents, have a valid photo ID, and can provide income verification or proof of assistance.'

I think contacting United Supermarkets and reminding them that they seem to have forgotten half the population with this freebie and during this particular month, no less, is warranted. Like many people, possibly they never even heard of Men's Health Month. Anyway, contact info is here. Apparently this mammogram-fest is to be held on June 18 in Canyon and on the 19th at their Washington Street location in Amarillo. So there's time to advise them of their omission and give them a chance to do something positive specifically for men's health-- like they're doing for women's. Please be polite; inform them June is Men's Health Month and indeed, that their male customers' money is as green as their females', so really, doesn't it make business sense in any case to play up to everyone rather than just half the consumer base?

U.S. Department of Health & Human Services: "Man up"

Minuteman · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Minority men face certain health challenges. Black men have a high risk of dying from heart disease. Latino men are diagnosed with AIDS three times as often as white men. But men can do things that can protect their health. Most health plans cover recommended preventive services like screenings at no cost under the health care law.

Dr. J. Nadine Gracia is HHS' deputy assistant secretary for minority health.

"Screenings for blood pressure, blood sugar and cholesterol and HIV, are some of the main tests that will let you know if you're still on the path toward great health."

Taking your health into your own hands also means eating right, being active, and talking about your health with your loved ones.'

SAVE: Uncertain Justice: The Presumption of Innocence is Being Lost, Most Say

Matt · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

WASHINGTON / June 18, 2013 – A national opinion survey reveals a substantial majority of persons believes the presumption of innocence is fading from the American criminal justice system. Two-thirds – 67% -- of persons participating in a recent survey affirmatively answered the question, “Do you believe the presumption of innocence is being lost in our nation’s legal system?”

The finding comes from a broader probe of Americans’ views of the criminal justice system and the role of prosecutors in the system. The survey is sponsored by the non-profit, non-partisan Center for Prosecutor Integrity.

Worries about the loss of the presumption of innocence are more pronounced among lower income than higher income persons (69% vs. 64%); and among persons 50 years and older compared to younger respondents (69% vs. 60%). Republicans and Democrats have nearly identical rates of concern: 72% vs. 71%, respectively: http://www.saveservices.org/prosecutors/findings/

Legal scholars have expressed concerns that buttress the survey findings:

- Brigham Young Law School professor Shima Baradaran deplored the fact that the “presumption of innocence no longer protects defendants before trial.”

- International legal scholar Francois Quintard-Morenas concluded, “The words ‘accused’ and ‘convict’ are becoming increasingly synonymous.”

- University of Vermont constitutional law professor Cheryl Hanna has written, “Evidentiary standards for proving abuse have been so relaxed that any man who stands accused is considered guilty.”

Many factors explain the loss of the presumption, including the over-criminalization of minor offenses, removal of “criminal intent” requirements, weak ethical standards for prosecutors, Supreme Court decisions, and media coverage that glorifies convictions over findings of innocence.

“The presumption of innocence is a bedrock principle of Anglo-American law,” notes CPI spokesperson Sheryle Hutter. “Now we must come to terms with the disturbing fact that our legal system has lost its standing as an international paragon of justice.”

The telephone interviews were conducted June 3-5, 2013. An average of 993 persons answered each of the survey questions. The sampling frame comes from voter registration records in 47 states; as such, the survey is not fully representative.

More information about the survey findings and methods can be seen here: http://www.saveservices.org/prosecutors/survey/

The Center for Prosecutor Integrity, a project of Stop Abusive and Violent Environments, is working to preserve the presumption of innocence, assure equal treatment under law, and bring an end to wrongful convictions: www.prosecutorintegrity.org

UK: So Much for 'Father's Day' - in a Country Where Fatherhood is Dying Out

Matt · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By the end of his or her childhood, a British boy or girl is much more likely to have a TV set in the bedroom than a father at home.

Our 45-year national war against traditional family life has been so successful that almost 50% of 15-year-olds no longer live with both their parents. At the same time we have indulged our neglected and abandoned young with electronics, so that 79% of children aged between 5 and 16 have bedroom TVs.

And as we soppily mark ‘Father’s Day’ with cards, socks, sentimentality and meals out, we should remember that in almost all cases the absent parent is the father.

There is no doubt about the facts here. Let me list some of them. The cost of our wild, unprecedented national experiment in fatherlessness is now £49 billion each year, more than the defence budget. This figure, currently costing each taxpayer £1,541 per year, is rising all the time, and has gone up by almost a quarter since 2009.'

Indian actress' boyfriend arrested after she commits suicide - why?

Mastodon · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Following the arrest of Suraj Pancholi on charges of abetting his girlfriend Jiah Khan's suicide, the Save Indian Family Foundation (SIFF), a non-funded non profit NGO fighting for men's rights, gender equality and family harmony, has lashed out at the “skewed" abetment to suicide law in India.

In a release, the foundation has argued that in no other country does such a law exist and wants the government to bring in checks and balances to prevent its misuse and points out the following discrepancies:

1. Suraj Pancholi did not point a gun at Jiah's head and force her to commit suicide. Breaking up with a girlfriend is not a crime. Reportedly, Suraj also tried to get Jiah to a psychiatrist after she attempted suicide eight months back. Why did Jiah's mother, Rabiya Khan, not take her to a psychiatrist then?

2. Wives and in-laws are hardly arrested when a husband commits suicide, but a husband and his family are sent to prison and presumed guilty until proven innocent when a girl kills herself.'

Wikipedia on Jiah Khan.

Woman who accused football player Brian Banks of rape ordered to pay $2.6M

Mastodon · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LONG BEACH, Calif. - The Long Beach woman who falsely accused football player Brian Banks of rape has been ordered to pay $1.6 million in expenses incurred by the school district where the crime supposedly had occurred, plus $1 million in damages, according to a Long Beach Press-Telegram report.

Wanetta Gibson had been paid $750,000 by the Long Beach Unified School District to partly settle her claim that it helped cause the purported rape with poor security at Long Beach Poly High School, the Press-Telegram reported.

The woman did not appear in court to contest the district's lawsuit, and a judge ruled Friday that Gibson must repay her award, plus the district's court costs, plus $1 million in punitive damages for the false claim.'

US Marines reporting convictions for fraternization/adultery as sex assault crimes

Mastodon · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Description:

'Several Marines who have been convicted of "fraternizing" or "adultery" say that the military's crackdown on sexual assault has led to a culture of reflexive punishment based on accusations without evidence.'

Hagel Plan Allows Women Into Navy SEALs

Mastodon · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Military leaders are ready to begin tearing down the remaining walls that have prevented women from holding thousands of combat and special operations jobs near the front lines.

Under details of the plans obtained by The Associated Press, women could start training as Army Rangers by mid-2015 and as Navy SEALs a year later.

The military services have mapped out a schedule that also will include reviewing and possibly changing the physical and mental standards that men and women will have to meet in order to qualify for certain infantry, armor, commando and other front-line positions across the Army, Navy, Air Force and Marines. Under the plans to be introduced Tuesday, there would be one common standard for men and women for each job.'

Thanks, feminist movement, for making Father's Day better for dads

Mastodon · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But the evidence tells us that these dudes should really calm down. The Pew study shows us the opposite of feminism killing the family unit and our social order. Feminism made the family stronger. The amount of time both parents spend with their kids is double what it was in 1965. So, while the primary takeaway of feminism is how the movement affected women's lives,the other side of it is the tripling of the time dads get to spend with their kids. It's an incredible transformation both for men and for their kids, a huge net benefit in human happiness.
...
This is the great gift of feminism to men: It took a sledgehammer to the must stultifying parts of patriarchy, including a vision of fatherhood in which dads were expected to be distant, stoic, removed creatures from their kids' lives. And we have now a new and better social model, one that encourages fathers to be equal parents, and nudges them towards spending more of their time doing something that is going to make them happier: spending time with their kids.'

S. Africa: False rape claim keeps dad jailed for 10 years

Mastodon · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Durban - A Westville prisoner's fight for justice is due to end on Wednesday when he finally walks free, three years after his daughter admitted she had lied that he had raped her.

And his daughter, Pinky Dube, 18, will be at the prison gates waiting to welcome him.

"I am very happy my dad is finally being freed. I am really excited," she said on Monday.

It will be an emotional reunion as Cedric Shezi and his daughter have only seen each other twice since he was convicted of two counts of rape in 2005, receiving a life sentence.
...
He has always maintained his innocence and has twice attempted suicide.'

Michigan judge to hold key hearing in false rape case

Mastodon · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman charged with making a false report of rape is facing an important court hearing in Port Huron.

Sara Ylen accused two men of sexual assault at her Lexington home last September, but authorities say an attack didn't happen.

A judge will decide today if there's enough evidence to send the case to trial in St. Clair County.

In a separate case, Ylen is charged with fraud in Sanilac County. She's accused of deceiving an insurance company and the public into believing she had cancer.

The public got to know Ylen in 2003 when she talked to the Port Huron newspaper about being a rape victim. But a man who spent nearly a decade in prison was released last year after doubt was raised about Ylen's credibility.'

UK: 26-year-old's rape claim shown false

Mastodon · 18 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A WOMAN has been interviewed by police after admitting making a false allegation of rape.

The 26-year-old claimed she was leaving the ground-floor level of the Wellington Square shopping centre car park in Stockton-on-Tees last week when a man approached her from behind and sexually assaulted her.

Police launched a media appeal for information and arrested, and bailed, a 22-year-old man in connection with the incident. However, the woman then admitted she had made a false allegation.

The man has now been released with no further action to be taken.

Police have passed the file for the case on to the Crown Prosecution Service, who will decide whether to prosecute the woman.'

SAVE: Prosecutor Ethics and Misconduct to be Focus of Upcoming Conference

Matt · 19 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

MEDIA ADVISORY

Contact: Teri Stoddard
Email: tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

Prosecutor Ethics and Misconduct to be Focus of Upcoming Conference
WASHINGTON / June 19, 2013 – An upcoming conference will highlight problems of prosecutorial misconduct and bias in the criminal justice system. The conference will be held Saturday, June 22 at 901 15th Street, NW in Washington DC. The conference is sponsored by the non-profit SAVE Center for Prosecutor Integrity.

The conference comes as bipartisan groups in the Senate and House of Representatives have begun to address the dual concerns of over-criminalization and over-prosecution. Several bills addressing the problems are expected to be introduced in upcoming weeks.

The conference schedule features victims of prosecutor misconduct, a former magistrate, and others. Presenters will be available for media interviews.

The conference is free to media representatives. The conference schedule is shown below. Other details can be seen here: http://www.saveservices.org/dvlp/annual-conference-2013/

NPO: Appoint a Child-Support Paying, Non-Custodial Parent as Chief Justice

Matt · 19 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chief Justice Paula Carey will be appointing her successor, the next Chief Justice of the Massachusetts Probate and Family Court. Carey will do so when she assumes her new duties as Chief Justice of the Trial Court. I submitted my letter with recommendations for characteristics for the new Chief Justice of the Probate and Family Court, as requested by the Massachusetts Trial Court. Also, the Executive Committee of our Massachusetts Affiliate submitted a letter seeking a candidate who supports shared parenting.

Massachusetts has commendably demonstrated its commitment to diversity in its elected and appointed officials. In this spirit, Massachusetts has the opportunity once again to break new ground.'

Police: Ohio day-care operator drugged pancakes to make children sleep

Mastodon · 19 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

(CNN) -- Getting children to take a nap can be hard. Getting them to eat pancakes is not nearly as difficult.

Police in Westerville, Ohio, say a 37-year-old mother operating a day care out of her home hit upon a plan -- she allegedly crushed medications that cause drowsiness and put them in the pancakes.

Tammy Eppley has been charged with six counts of child endangerment. Her first court date is July 12.

Eppley, who runs the Caterpillar Clubhouse, cared for six children -- including one of her own -- between the ages of 2 and 5, police said.
"This is mortifying. I'm a very private person and I'm very protective of my children and the children in my care," she said.
...
Investigators believe she used medications such as the allergy medicine Benadryl and supplements like melatonin to get the children to go to sleep, according to a statement from the Westerville Police.'

Woman accused of domestic violence after stabbing husband

Mastodon · 19 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A Rochester woman is being accused of first-degree domestic violence after allegedly stabbing her husband in the shoulder during an argument Monday night, according to a Thurston County Sheriff's Office news release.

Deputies arrived to the 7700 block of 196th Lane Southwest at 9 p.m. to find a 42-year-old man being treated by medical personnel.

He told deputies he was wounded after falling on the bricks, but "evidence at the scene and the statements made by witnesses did not support this," the release said.

Further investigation showed the husband and wife were having an argument in the kitchen that resulted in the wife allegedly stabbing her husband in the right shoulder.

He was taken to Providence Centralia Hospital for treatment.'

In Rwanda, Circumcision Is All The Rage

Mastodon · 19 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Among young people, circumcision has actually become “fashionable.” Thanks to the Internet and television, they learned that in neighboring countries like the Democratic Republic of Congo and Uganda, circumcision was often a tradition, and not only for Muslims. For these young people, circumcision has become a sign of cleanliness.

And for those who do not follow fashion, life can become complicated. “I decided to pay 50,000 Rwanda Francs ($80) to get circumcised. I couldn’t stand being insulted by other students anymore. They called me a good-for-nothing, a kafiri (‘uncircumcised’) or a bottleneck (referring to a non-circumcised male organ),” says François.

Three of his friends also admit they went through a similar experience. “Rwandese society still accepts uncircumcised men, but in some districts, they are sometimes frowned upon. And it’s even worse in high school, where they are discriminated against,” reveals Gaspard.

Among girls and women, circumcised men have also gained some prestige lately, in a country where the custom was not very common until now. Mrs Kanyange, a mother of three, thinks that despite its cost, circumcision has great advantages: “It ensures cleanliness, and the operation is also an esthetic one for men.”'

S. Africa: Boys rescued from illegal circumcision school

Mastodon · 19 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Johannesburg - Two Eastern Cape boys who underwent an illegal circumcision were hospitalised on Sunday, the provincial health department said.

"A team of police and health officials responded to [a call from] one of the villages, Mkhantatho, and rescued two boys," spokesman Sizwe Kupelo said.

"The boys were suffering from dehydration and hallucinations."
...
Parents notified the department of 12 other boys, between the ages of 12 and 13, who had received illegal circumcisions in Sicambeni.'

MRAs: More Radical Misogyny?

Mastodon · 19 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gender equality, now wouldn't that be a fine thing? Well that's what feminists for the past two centuries have been saying. Women across the world have been protesting, demonstrating, shouting and striking in the name of gender equality, but apparently we've been doing a rather bad job of it.

That is, if you agree with the views put forward by the Men's Rights Activists. The movement that first emerged in the 1960s has recently had a global resurgence and now enjoys a growing internet presence, too. When a University of Warwick Men's Rights group was recently established on Facebook, feminists and anti-sexists on campus instantly opposed the idea. So what exactly is the Men's Rights Activism movement, and what does is mean for gender equality in 2013?
...
Great, so Men's Rights Activists are working with feminists to address these issues for the betterment of society, right? Wrong. That is exactly what Men's Rights Activists (or MRAs) are not doing. In fact, the label "Men's Rights Activists" is about as far removed from the truth as it is possible to be. They'd be better off branding themselves "Feminist Baiters of the World" or "Misogynistic Pigs United" because at least then we'd have a clear idea of the mind-set of these activists.'

Are Men on Strike? Or Are We Being Fired?

Mastodon · 19 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm not on strike and I refuse to be fired so I guess that makes me Dagney Taggart, which is an odd way to open a review about a book that concerns men's rights.

If you haven't heard the story yet, I'm sure you've heard several like it. In this particular incident, while at school, a 13 year old boy intervened when one classmate pulled a knife on another. He tackled the aggressor, who already had his victim in a head lock, possibly saving the other boy from serious injury or worse. He showed quick thinking, resolve, courage, and demonstrated an ethical code that placed the life of another on a par with his own.

So of course, he was punished. He was called out of class, lectured, and sent home. His mother was told that "Sir John A. Macdonald junior high school does not 'condone heroics,' and that her son should have sought out a teacher instead." When she asked about the life of the other student, the school vice principle told her that it was "beside the point."
...
What does this have to do with a book on men and why they are on strike? Well it just goes to illustrate Dr. Helen Smith's point that men are not getting married, not becoming fathers, and not going to college, not because they are lazy, spoiled, or refuse to grow up, but because of things like what happened to the young man at Sir John A. Macdonald Junior High. She says that men are reacting rationally to a constant barrage of messages that all say the same thing, that men are nothing more than defective women and they need to be fixed.'

When Men Want to Talk About Abortion

Mastodon · 19 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When tennis legend Jimmy Connors released his memoir last month, one revelation fixated the media: Connors' disclosure that nearly 40 years ago, his then-fiancée, fellow tennis great Chris Evert, had had an abortion. Reaction was swift and negative. Evert issued a short statement expressing extreme disappointment that her former partner had revealed such a "private matter. " Writing here, Jessica Luther criticized Connors, arguing that this "was not his story to tell."

Regardless of whether Connors violated the principles of ethical memoir, the story reveals how challenging it can be for men to speak openly about their own reactions to a partner's abortion. Connors seems to remain bitter over being excluded from the then 19-year-old Evert's decision-making process (In the book, he writes to Evert: "Well, thanks for letting me know. Since I don't have a say in the matter, I guess I am just here to help.") That bitterness reinforces the stereotype that score-settling is what lies behind most men's public disclosure of a partner's abortion.

Yet men have other reasons to talk about abortion besides a desire to shame an ex. In many cases, it's about acknowledging long-suppressed feelings of loss and guilt. That is certainly true in my case, and in the cases of many with whom I've worked in men's groups.'

We've made strides under Title IX, but the question remains: Is it equal?

Mastodon · 19 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's no question that Title IX has been abused - see any of the hundreds of men's sports teams that have been disbanded as a result of the landmark law as examples. Title IX was supposed to provide opportunity to women, not take it away from men - but the way various federal agencies interpret Title IX, as a de facto quota system, has had a huge impact on men's sports, mainly at the collegiate level.

It's neither the fault of athletes nor educators that spectator interest level just isn't there for women's sports. An easy comparison is the NBA and its sister league, the WNBA. The male team that has the worst attendance still draws nearly twice as many fans as the WNBA's league average, which has dropped steadily since the women's game came into being in 1999.'

Obama Nominates Betsey Stevenson to Council of Economic Advisers

Mastodon · 19 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dr. Stevenson's diverse research touches both policy and daily life, and has been widely cited in the news media. While she has written prolifically on a number of subjects, Dr. Stevenson is perhaps best known for her work on the impact of public policy on labor markets, marriage and divorce, women and families, and happiness and well-being.
...
Furthermore, we cited her research when she found that girls' participation in sports led to increased college attendance and higher wages, as a result of Title IX, which bans sex discrimination against girls and boys in all programs at schools around the country.

Dr. Stevenson wrote of her findings, "Greater opportunities to play sports lead to greater female participation in previously male-dominated occupations, particularly high-skill occupations." She concluded that, "the experiment designed by Title IX proves that extracurricular activities like sports play an important role in creating the skills that make us so productive."'

Madison woman sentenced for killing son

Mastodon · 20 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Madison woman will spend the next 13 years in jail for killing her son in 2011.

A judge admonished Maria Castillo-Dominguez in court Monday for changing her story about her son's injuries too often.

Castillo-Dominguez was sentenced to 13 years in prison, and three years' probation, for the death of Luis Angel.

Castillo-Dominguez took her son to the hospital in June 2011 and said the child fell from a swing and hit his head.

She later told police she pushed the boy.

But doctors said his brain swelling and injuries were consistent with being thrown against a wall.

"You were frustrated and I have a good, great deal of sympathy for you," said Judge Julie Genovese in court Monday. "I know it must be very difficult to come to foreign country, you don't know the language, where you're work at minimum wage job. I believe you were victim of domestic violence."'

Lulu app helps women "rate" men

Mastodon · 20 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Had a shocker in the bedroom but keen to keep it under wraps? Had a date from hell but happy to forget?

Well, guys, the worst has come…in the form of a new app called Lulu.

Allowing women to anonymously and publicly rate former boyfriends, the app is banned for males and is taking the world by storm.

...

And to make matters worse for the male population, any romantic and sexual value ratings are linked to the man's Facebook account – allowing only women to access it.

With over 200,000 users as of April, the guy-bashing app allows women to add guys to the database, along with photos and hashtags of the male in question.

But with tags such as #smokeslikeachimney, is the app sexist?

"If there was a man's version of Lulu, women would absolutely not stand for it," said one review, describing the app degrading to both men and women.'

Facebook allowing profiles to be used by Lulu

Mastodon · 20 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lulu's founder, Alexandra Chong, says that the service is simply the natural extension of women's longstanding desire to see if a guy is everything he's purporting to be. And while some may consider that a worthy goal, the site's methods should draw serious scrutiny from anyone remotely concerned with their digital privacy.

Men, whose Facebook profiles provide the foundational content for the site, are explicitly banned from the app. Furthermore, they are not notified when their information is captured, nor when their profiles are viewed, saved, or reviewed. In fact, the only way a man can have his information removed from the site is to email his Facebook profile name to privacy@onlulu.com or to download a separate app (conveniently also made by Lulu) and then deactivate his own profile.'

SAVE: Tell your Lawmakers to End Over-Prosecution

Matt · 20 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Over-criminalization is a hot-topic in America. And for good reason. Last week we told you about the Center for Prosecutor Integrity's recent survey on the criminal justice system, where two-fifths (42.8%) of the respondents said they believe that prosecutor misconduct is widespread.

We learned that 71.4% believe most cases of prosecutor misconduct are kept hidden from the public. And 73.5% believe prosecutors who commit misconduct are almost never punished. Now it's time to do something about that.

Contact your state lawmakers* today, and ask that they put effort towards ending over-prosecution.

Thank you for joining our efforts to restore confidence in America's criminal justice system.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

---
*Ed.: Couple look-up sites:
http://thomas.loc.gov/home/state-legislatures.html
http://openstates.org/find_your_legislator/
Also recommend looking at: http://sunlightfoundation.com/tools/ to help you FTM. It always leads to some place interesting!

Suspension won’t be removed for five-year-old grilled over cap gun

Mastodon · 20 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'School officials in Calvert County, Maryland have denied a request to expunge the suspension of the kindergartener who brought a plastic cap gun on a school bus last month and then wet his pants during a subsequent interrogation.

The refusal came in the form of a letter dated Friday, reports The Washington Post. The letter stated that the five-year-old “did bring a cap gun in his book bag.” It also charged that some other children were frightened and told school officials that they couldn’t discern if the orange-tipped cowboy-style gun was real or fake.
...
School officials considered — and denied — the request to eradicate the punishment separately.

The boy’s mother (an otherwise unidentified teacher in Calvert County) expressed frustration that a seemingly serious offense for a look-alike gun will now be part of her son’s permanent record.'

All-female jury chosen for Zimmerman Trial

Mastodon · 20 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A jury of six women, five of them white and the other a minority, was picked Thursday to decide the second-degree murder trial of George Zimmerman, a neighborhood watch volunteer who says he shot an unarmed black teenager, Trayvon Martin, in self-defense.

Prosecutors have said Zimmerman, 29, racially profiled the 17-year-old Martin as he walked back from a convenience store on Feb. 26, 2012, in the rain, wearing a dark hooded shirt. Zimmerman identifies himself as Hispanic.

The race and ethnicity of the minority chosen for the jury was not immediately available.'

Affirmative Action Has Helped White Women More Than Anyone

Mastodon · 20 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the coming days, the U.S. Supreme Court is expected to rule in a potentially landmark case on the constitutionality of affirmative action. The original lawsuit was filed on behalf of Abigail Fisher, a woman who claims that she was denied admission to the University of Texas because she is white. But study after study shows that affirmative action helps white women as much or even more than it helps men and women of color. Ironically, Fisher is exactly the kind of person affirmative action helps the most in America today.
...
While people of color, individually and as groups, have been helped by affirmative action in the subsequent years, data and studies suggest women — white women in particular — have benefited disproportionately. According to one study, in 1995, 6 million women, the majority of whom were white, had jobs they wouldn't have otherwise held but for affirmative action.

Another study shows that women made greater gains in employment at companies that do business with the federal government, which are therefore subject to federal affirmative-action requirements, than in other companies — with female employment rising 15.2% at federal contractors but only 2.2% elsewhere. And the women working for federal-contractor companies also held higher positions and were paid better.'

Kidnap charge: Woman tried to claim Brooklyn Park baby as her own

charlie · 20 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Woman kidnaps baby in order to hook her boyfriend, by claiming it is his. Excerpt:

'A 34-year-old St. Paul woman said she kidnapped her friend's 2-month-old son while everyone was asleep in the Brooklyn Park apartment because she wanted to convince her boyfriend that she gave birth to the baby and that he was the father, according to a charge filed Thursday.

Thalia T. Benson was charged in Hennepin County District Court with kidnapping Elijah Alonzo on Tuesday and remains jailed in lieu of $100,000 bail.

Police tracked Benson to her apartment in St. Paul, Elijah was recovered unharmed and Benson admitted to the kidnapping Christina Alonzo's son, according to the charge.'

Child Support: Man Says He Was An 'ATM Machine' After Divorce

Mastodon · 20 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That's the topic tackled in a recent HuffPost Live segment. Craig Daliessio, the author of "Sometimes Daddies Cry: What a Dad Really Feels About Divorce," shared his experience with the family court system in Nashville after divorce.

"I was paying $1,000 a month because I was a mortgage banker, very successful, and the company I worked for went under in 2008. It takes 11 months to get a modification. During the 11 months, you're rolling up the charge like a taxi meter. I ended up going to jail for 15 weekends because I couldn't pay it," he said. "It is so slanted. I paid $1,000 a month for five years, and I got to see my daughter for six days out of that month. I was basically an ATM machine as far as my ex wife was concerned. I had nothing to do with any of the decisions that were made."'

New Zealand: 11-yr-old fathers child with 36-yr-old woman

Mastodon · 20 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MELBOURNE: An 11-year-old boy in New Zealand has become a father after conceiving a child with the 36-year-old mother of a school friend.

The woman coerced the boy, from Auckland, into repeated sexual encounters over a period of time before becoming pregnant, the New Zealand Herald daily reported. The woman gave the boy beer to drink and then later took part in a sexual encounter with him, the report said. The sexual contact continued for a number of months after the initial encounter. The boy had turned 12 by the time the child was born.

The Child Youth and Family Services, which took a baby into care about two months ago, confirmed it was dealing with a case at the school and that it was before the courts.

The case has caused counsellors working in the area of child sexual abuse to highlight the lack of attention given to women as potential offenders. It has prompted justice minister Judith Collins to step in saying she will seek information on the law. "This case raises an important point. I will seek advice from officials on whether or not a law change is required."

And it has also highlighted disparity in the law of rape, which makes it impossible for a woman to be accused of the crime. Present legislation stipulates the crime of rape applies only when men force sex. In contrast, women who force an unwilling partner to have sex face charges of sexual violation. Both carry a maximum sentence of 20 years but only men can be charged with rape.'

"The Children Are Coming"

Matt · 21 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One reason I truly believe the Men's Human Rights Movement is going to continue to grow is that the children who grew up in the wake of all this family devastation are coming of age, and while some were crippled by it, others have thrived and have begun to speak out about what they've seen. Most of them are in their 20s and 30s now. Aimee here is still a teenager, but I think she's probably not going to be the first, or last, person of her generation who we hear from who deplores the sexist hateful narratives of the gender ideologues, and the corrupt family court system.

You can subscribe to her channel here.'

Aimee's latest video is here.

Jamaica leading project to address underachievement in boys

Mastodon · 21 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(Jamaica Observer) JAMAICA is the lead country in a Caribbean project aimed at developing programmes and strategies to address educational underachievement in boys.

Dubbed: ‘Advancing the Education of Boys’, the initiative is being undertaken as a pilot in Jamaica and three other Caribbean countries through funding and expertise from the Commonwealth Secretariat. It is expected to last three years.

It is being executed locally by the Ministry of Education, through the Jamaica Teaching Council (JTC) and the Commonwealth Secretariat.

Education Programme Officer for the Commonwealth Secretariat Hipolina Josephs told JIS News that the initiative is in response to the need for support identified by member countries at a consultation in Jamaica a few years ago.'

"Stop Penalizing Boys for Not Being Able to Sit Still at School"

Mastodon · 21 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

