'This year's end-of-year paper purge in my middle school office revealed a startling pattern in my teaching practices: I discipline boys far more often than I discipline girls. Flipping through the pink and yellow slips--my school's system for communicating errant behavior to students, advisors, and parents--I found that I gave out nearly twice as many of these warnings to boys than I did to girls, and of the slips I handed out to boys, all but one was for disruptive classroom behavior.

The most frustrating moments I have had this year stemmed from these battles over--and for--my male students' attention. This spring, as the grass greened up on the soccer fields and the New Hampshire air finally rose above freezing, the boys and I engaged in a pitched battle of wills over their intellectual and emotional engagement in my Latin and English classes, a battle we both lost in the end.

Something is rotten in the state of boys' education, and I can't help but suspect that the pattern I have seen in my classroom may have something to do with a collective failure to adequately educate boys. The statistics are grim. ...'

Florida baby sitter had sex with 11-year-old, cops say

Mastodon · 21 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Brevard County woman is accused of having sex with an 11-year-old boy she was baby sitting.

Megan Nicole Hayes, 21, of Rockledge was arrested on felony sexual battery charges on Thursday, according to court records.

Hayes admitted to police that she had sex with the child she was watching, the Cocoa Police Department said.

Her father told local television stations that his daughter has a low IQ and does not know right from wrong.

Her family declined to comment to the Sentinel.'

Sheriff’s wife charged with domestic violence assault

Mastodon · 21 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LUBEC, Maine — Washington County Sheriff Donnie Smith was the victim of an alleged domestic violence assault Thursday evening that resulted in the arrest of his wife, according to Maine State Police.

Around 5:30 p.m., Lynne Kelsey-Smith called state police from the couple’s Lubec home, alleging that the sheriff had threatened her, according to Lt. Roderick Charette.

“She requested a police response to the residence,” he said. “She alleged that she had been threatened [by Smith], but when we got there and actually did the investigation, we arrested her for assaulting him.”

...

Kelsey-Smith was released on $1,000 unsecured bail early Friday morning. She is scheduled to appear in Machias District Court on July 1. Domestic violence assault is a Class D crime punishable by up to one year in prison and a $1,000 fine.'

Florida boy assaulted, stripped by girls-- no charges

Mastodon · 22 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This video is from 1/13. There is no text and I can't find any news articles about the incident.

As court prepares affirmative-action decision, softer standards for men go unnoticed

Mastodon · 22 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Supreme Court is poised to release its opinion on an affirmative-action case that could forever change the way public colleges and universities consider race in admissions. But even if, as some predict, the justices issue a broad ruling slapping down the use of race in admissions, an open secret in higher education—that many colleges lower their admissions standards for male applicants—remains unchallenged and largely unremarked upon.

For years, the percentage of men enrolled in college has been declining, with women making up nearly 57 percent of all undergrads at four-year colleges last year, according to the National Center for Education Statistics. While schools are prohibited under the federal Title IX law from discriminating based on gender, some admissions officials have admitted in recent years that male applicants get a leg up from colleges hoping to avoid gender imbalances on campus.

...

Interestingly, none of these revelations prompted a wave of lawsuits, or even much outrage, from feminist organizations or other groups. It's even more surprising because the issue is probably more clear-cut, legally speaking, than race-based affirmative action.'

Utah: Lawmaker pushes registry to protect unwed dads' rights

Mastodon · 22 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Utah lawmaker wants the state to stop waiting for Congress to act on a national putative father registry and move ahead with an electronic, confidential registry that unwed fathers, adoption agencies and attorneys — and potentially other states — could use to make and search paternity filings in adoption cases.

Sen. Luz Robles, D-Salt Lake, told members of the Health and Human Services Interim Committee on Wednesday the proposal is aimed at providing "equity and justice" to unwed fathers, particularly those from other states who want to be involved in a child's life but may not know where the mother plans to give birth and place the infant for adoption.

Some legal and adoption experts have advocated for a national putative father registry as the only way to protect unwed fathers' rights and interstate adoptions. Sen. Mary Landrieu, D-La., made several attempts at legislation to create such a registry by law but has so far been unsuccessfully gained little support for the idea. At least one group — Fathers & Families — opposes such registries on grounds they which it sees as designed to make it more difficult for fathers to assert rights; the onus, the group believes, should be on a birth mother and an adoption agency to identify and provide notice to unwed fathers about an adoption plan.'

US Senators Introduce Bill to Create National 'Responsible Father Registry'

Mastodon · 22 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A pair of U.S. Senators who co-chair the Congressional Coalition on Adoption have introduced a piece of legislation that would create a federal level "Responsible Father Registry."

Democratic Senator Mary L. Landrieu of Louisiana and Republican Senator James Inhofe of Oklahoma introduced on Thursday the Protecting Adoption and Promoting Responsible Fatherhood Act of 2013.

In a statement, Sen. Landrieu argued that the proposed national registry would be valuable to fathers across the country. "By establishing a national registry, we can better ensure that any father has the chance to be involved in the life of a child he may have fathered," said Landrieu.
...
On the website PopVox.com, posters decried the proposed measure as an example of government overreach.

"…this sounds like more government intrusion & tracking. this goes way beyond the authority of the government. its hypocritical, that women who also abandon children & single dads are not included," posted "Anonymous1172260."

South Carolina has a similar regitsry, which is under the state's Department of Social Services. For a "putative" father, or a man who fathered a child with a woman who not his wife, there is no fee for registration and it does not get used to enforce payments for child support.'

UK: Children suffering from bias against men, says Captain Corelli author

Mastodon · 22 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The author of Captain Corelli's Mandolin [link added] said it was time to stop deprecating fathers and to recognise they had an essential role in society, which single mothers simply cannot fulfil.

He said: "We've had enough of this image of fathers, in fact men in general, being perpetrated at all levels, as at best feckless and at worst violently abusive. There has been a relentless attack on the worth of men over the years which has been very damaging to their self-esteem."

...

Mr de Bernières said: "I'm lucky. I have equal custody with my former partner over our two children. But many other fathers suffer real plight. If your children have been heisted by your ex-wife and you can't see them while claims of abuse are investigated, or she is generally uncooperative and obstructive, you miss out on seeing them time after time.'

Are women more compassionate than men? What the science tells us

Mastodon · 22 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Great piece on compassion from Stanford's Emma Seppala, PhD, whose work on PTSD and veterans was recently covered here. Tackling the question of whether women are more innately compassionate than men, Seppala outlines some of the scientific research on the topic before concluding:

'Rather than suggesting that [bonding and nurturing] tendencies might have made women more compassionate than men, I would argue that they would simply have altered the expression of compassion. While women's expression may have become one of nurturing and bonding, men's compassion was expressed through protecting and ensuring survival (hunting, warfare). Compassion just took on a different "look and feel" depending on our evolutionary needs for survival.

One reason we might think that women are more compassionate than men is that we think of compassion in only one way: nurturance, kindness, softness, gentleness, and emotional warmth. We think of compassion in mostly feminized terms. It may be that, in women, we are conditioned to think of compassion as involving caring and nurturing but that, in men, it takes on a fiercer more protective appearance. From my work with veterans and active-duty personnel, I have seen deep expressions of compassion that do not have nurturing and maternal features. Think of the many heroic acts that happen daily in which people throw themselves into dangerous situations to help others. These are fierce, courageous and even aggressive forms of compassion.'

Trial Court Issues New Child Support Guidelines Effective August 1st

Matt · 22 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Chief Justice of the Trial Court Robert A. Mulligan today announced the promulgation of revised Child Support Guidelines to be effective on August 1, 2013, based on a comprehensive review by the Child Support Guidelines Task Force he appointed in 2012. The Task Force that conducted the review, which is required every four years, was chaired by Probate and Family Court Chief Justice Paula M. Carey.

The Child Support Guidelines are used by Trial Court judges in setting temporary, permanent or final orders for current child support, in deciding whether to approve agreements for child support, and in deciding cases that are before the court to modify existing orders.

“The Task Force has worked diligently to develop guidelines that account for the economic realities facing families,” said Chief Justice Mulligan. “I greatly appreciate their commitment to ensuring the well-being of children across the state.”

“These guidelines provide Trial Court judges with tools to determine child support in a way that is transparent and economically sound,” said Chief Justice Carey, who also chaired the Task Force four years ago. “This Task Force has invested tremendous energy in analyzing the data and producing guidelines based on the current economic climate for families raising children in Massachusetts.”'

NPO: Dads Pay Heavier Price than Moms for Taking Flex Time

Matt · 22 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the seemingly infinite complaints voiced by the anti-father crowd is that men spend too much time at paid work. It was one of Gideon Burrows gripes in his piece in the Huffington Post UK. According to them, fathers' working forces women into childcare which, presumably, they'd never do were it not for those selfish dads.

Needless to say, none of these shoot-from-the-hip commenters ever suggests that it might work the other way around – that if Mom would earn a little more, Dad wouldn't have to and he could spend more time with little Andy or Jenny. Nor do they acknowledge that female human beings, like females of every mammalian species, are hormonally bonded to their children. The idea that mothers might be staying home with the kids because one of the most powerful forces in nature encourages them to goes unmentioned. No, the anti-dad crowd is, well, anti-dad, and can be counted on to spin essentially anything to blame fathers.'

Man found by wife tied up and decapitated-- suicide suspected

Matt · 22 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I can't make this stuff up. Tell me, in what bizarre, complicated way would one need to come up with to pull this off? Excerpt:

'Police say a woman who lives in the home found her husband dead in the garage.

His hands and feet were tied and the body had been decapitated.

Tulsa police told KRMG news the death was due to suicide.'

President Repeats False “Equal Pay” Statistic Claiming Women Earn 77 Percent of What Men Do

Matt · 22 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Obama repeated a myth about equal pay and pay discrimination, as the economist Diana Furchtgott-Roth notes at RealClearMarkets:

Last week in the Rose Garden, at an event celebrating the Equal Pay Act, he once again repeated the myth that women earn 77 cents on a man’s dollar.
...
Nonsense. The 77 percent figure is bogus because it averages all full-time women, no matter what education and profession, with all full-time men. Even with such averaging, the latest Labor Department figures show that women working full-time make 81 percent of full-time men’s wages. For men and women who work 40 hours weekly, the ratio is 88 percent.
...
In any event, it’s just obvious that employers don’t pay women 23 percent less for the exact same work. If they did, employers could (and some would) crush their competitors just by hiring only women, who cost less to employ, to reap a huge cost advantage. But no major employer has ever done so. As one commenter notes, if this massive pay disparity actually existed, “why wouldn’t any company seeking to enhance its competitive position (i.e. all of them) simply hire only women? ...'

Sex, Lies and the War on Men

Matt · 22 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A massive twit-storm washed over your humble columnist yesterday, set off by our Wall Street Journal op-ed defending an Obama nominee and the rights of criminal defendants. To recap briefly: Sen. Claire McCaskill has placed a "permanent hold" on the nomination of Gen. Susan Helms to be vice commander of the Air Force Space Command. McCaskill is punishing Helms for having granted clemency to an officer under her command, Capt. Matthew Herrera, who was convicted of aggravated sexual assault.

We reviewed the facts and concluded that Helms was correct in holding that the prosecution case was so weak as to make the conviction unjust. (Herrera did not escape punishment: He pleaded guilty to an "indecent act" and was involuntarily discharged from the service.)
...
All this viciousness was in the service of denying that there is, as we wrote in yesterday's article, a "war on men." Well, imagine if a prominent feminist journalist wrote about the "war on women" and dozens of conservative male writers responded by subjecting her to similar verbal abuse. Would that not be prima facie evidence that she was on to something? If the answer is yes--and we'd say it is--then either the same is true in our case or the sexes aren't equal. (Select one or both of the above.)'

Going Galt: Why men are boycotting marriage, fatherhood and the American Dream

Mastodon · 22 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Okay, in fairness, I'm the guy who wrote "The silent war on noncollege-educated white men." But most observers of this phenomenon have concluded that we just need to "man up." That is, until now. Dr. Helen Smith's new book, Men on Strike is decidedly different, inasmuch as she argues that if men are checking out of society, it's only because we are making rational decisions about changing incentives.

Let's take marriage, for example, where higher-educated women seem to be having a harder and harder time finding men worthy (or willing) to tie the knot. "[T]he incentives to marry have changed for men," explains Smith, "and they are no longer willing to risk so much more than in previous years to gain potentially less."
...
But if the benefits of marriage have declined for men, the downsides haven't. Men who marry can expect to pay disproportionately for a divorce, even if the wife cheats. And as Smith points out, sometimes men are on the hook for child support, even after DNA tests prove they aren't the father.

"[T]he new world order is a place where men are discriminated against, forced into a hostile environment in school and later in college, and held in contempt by society," she writes. "Maybe there is no incentive to grow up anymore," she continues. "It used to be that being a grown-up, responsible man was rewarded with respect, power and deference." Now, not so much. Making matters worse, men cannot voice frustration. "Men who complain are either wimps or misogynists or both," she writes.'

New U.S. Amb. to Belgium Announced After Accusations of Soliciting Underage Prostitutes

Matt · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. (Review previous MANN item here.) Excerpt:

'This evening, the White House announced a new nominee to be the next U.S. ambassador to Belgium:

President Obama Announces More Key Administration Posts

WASHINGTON, DC – Today, President Obama announced his intent to nominate the following individuals to key Administration posts:

· Denise Bauer – Ambassador to Belgium, Department of State

The announcement comes only weeks after the current ambassador to Belgium, Howard Gutman, was accused of soliciting underage prostitutes. As the New York Post reported recently:

WASHINGTON — A State Department whistleblower has accused high-ranking staff of a massive coverup — including keeping a lid on findings that members of then-Secretary Hillary Clinton's security detail and the Belgian ambassador solicited prostitutes.

A chief investigator for the agency's inspector general wrote a memo outlining eight cases that were derailed by senior officials, including one instance of interference by Clinton's chief of staff, Cheryl Mills.'

Women charged with using antifreeze as poison to murder father, son

charlie · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Note that two male relatives are killed in domestic murders, yet neither the headline nor the lead paragraph mentions that the victims are males. Excerpt:

'KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A Missouri woman and her daughter confessed to fatally poisoning two relatives with antifreeze and attempting to kill a third over a 14-month period, according to court documents.

Diane Staudte, 51, of Springfield, was charged Friday with two counts of first-degree murder, one count of first-degree assault and one count of armed criminal action. Her daughter, Rachel Staudte, 22, was charged with the same counts Saturday.

...

Diane Staudte initially told law enforcement that her husband, Mark Staudte, 61, hadn't been feeling well and suffered from seizures before his April 2012 death, the probable cause statement said. And she said her son, Shawn Staudte, 26, had been sick with flu-like symptoms before his death in September.

...

She told the detective that she killed her husband because she "hated him" and her son because he was "worse than a pest." She said she wanted to kill her daughter, Sarah, because the young woman "would not get a job and had student loans that had to be paid," the probable cause statement said.'

U.S. State Department: Pushing Forward Gender Driven Growth

Minuteman · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Chief Economist Heidi Crebo-Rediker will deliver an address entitled “Pushing Forward Gender Driven Growth” on Monday, June 24, from 12:00-2:00 p.m. in the C. Fred Bergsten Conference Center at the Peterson Institute for International Economics, 1750 Massachusetts Avenue NW, Washington, DC 20036.

This event is open to the press but by invitation only to the general public.
...
In her address, Chief Economist Crebo-Rediker will highlight cutting edge work on the issue in both advanced and emerging economies. She will argue for the importance of elevating and mainstreaming this work through the efforts of the U.S. government, multilateral and other institutions.'

Woman charged in faith-healing death of baby son gets bail; judge denies release of husband

Matt · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'PHILADELPHIA — A Philadelphia faith-healing believer charged with murder after a second son died of pneumonia has been granted bail, but her husband must stay in jail.

Officials at the Philadelphia Industrial Correctional Center told The Associated Press on Saturday that Catherine Schaible can live in her parents' home under electronic monitoring once her $250,000 bail is posted.
...
They are charged with third-degree murder in the April pneumonia death of 8-month-old son Brandon. They had been convicted of involuntary manslaughter after their 2-year-old son, Kent, died of pneumonia in 2009. The couple's seven surviving children are in foster care.
...
Defense attorney Mythri Jayaraman argued that Catherine Schaible was less culpable because the couple's church taught that a wife must be "submissive to her husband." Pastor Nelson Clark and Assistant Pastor Ralph Myers of First Century Gospel Church testified that Herbert Schaible made decisions about the welfare of the couple's children.
...
Assistant District Attorney Joanne Pescatore argued against treating Catherine Schaible differently from her husband.

"She was that child's mother, and he was that child's father, and they both have equal responsibility for that child," she said.'

Sweden: greater unemployment rate amongst men

Mastodon · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The difference between the male and female jobless rates in Sweden increased last year, with a higher number of men now unemployed, revealed figures from Eurostat.

There are currently 33,000 more unemployed males than females in Sweden; however, the situation across the rest of Europe does not mirror that of the Scandinavian country.
...
Furthermore, in Norway, where unemployment is also higher amongst males than females, women receive generous parental allowances and are given the opportunity to keep their jobs after pregnancy.'

'Men and Masculinity' New Course Next Fall at AFA

Mastodon · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A professor from Virginia will spend the upcoming academic year teaching courses on gender at the Air Force Academy to combat sexual assaults.
...
Neither course is required of students. But so many have registered for the lone section of "Men and Masculinity" that the academy is considering adding another, said Col. Gary Packard, head of the academy's Department of Behavioral Sciences and Leadership.
...
"There's a lot of theory in the first part" of the class, he said. "The second part includes discussion of men's issues: work, mental health, physical health, relationships, sexuality, violence, and contemporary topics like the prison problem, pornography and prostitution."
As part of their coursework, Kilmartin will assign his students to journal about gender stereotypes they observe in their everyday lives.'

Military analyst: Women in front-line combat opens door for draft

Mastodon · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A military analyst says the plan to allow women in front-line combat units could subject them to a future draft, and Congress should start paying attention.

Women are currently exempt from the draft because they are not involved in direct ground combat, says Center for Military Readiness president Elaine Donnelly, citing a 1981 U.S. Supreme Court ruling.

"It is most unfortunate that Congress is allowing the Obama administration to lay the legal groundwork for selective service obligations to be imposed on unsuspecting civilian women on the same basis as men," says Donnelly. "This would include a future draft."'

Norway becomes first NATO country to draft women into military

Mastodon · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(Reuters) - Norway's parliament voted overwhelmingly on Friday to conscript women into its armed forces, becoming the first European and first NATO country to make military service compulsory for both genders.

"Rights and duties should be the same for all," said Labor lawmaker Laila Gustavsen, a supporter of the bill. "The armed forces need access to the best resources, regardless of gender, and right now mostly men are recruited."
...
Women already serve in the military, but do so of their own volition. They make up a tenth of the armed forces, according to the ministry of defense.

The change is not expected to force women to serve against their will but should help improve the gender balance.

All young people can be conscripted in theory, but since the end of the Cold War the Norwegian armed forces have become more selective in choosing conscripts as their needs have changed.

Those who do not want to serve can often find a reason, such as university studies, to avoid the draft.

"In theory, it is possible (women would have to serve against their will), just as it can happen to men," Gustavsen said.'

Are Military Women On the Front Lines Advancing Feminism?

Mastodon · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In recent years, there has been a huge influx in the amount of women joining the United States military. According to a recent AP article, women now make up about 14% of the 1.4 million active U.S. military personnel and more than 280,000 women have been sent overseas in support of the wars. There are even talks of women becoming Army Rangers as soon as mid-2015 and women Navy SEALs shortly after. But what impact are these changes having on American military?

...

Allowing women on the front lines actually weakens our army. Leaders, both men and women, within the military are speaking out against these changes; unfortunately, we live in a world that cares more about being politically correct than doing the right thing.

...

In the name of sexual equality, we are willing to lower the requirements of being on the front lines of a war. This jeopardizes the lives of not only those women, but everyone else involved. If you are going to be on the front line, you need to have the physical strength to carry your partner off the battlefield and to safety.'

False Rape Report Caught By Doctor, Leading To Charges: Police

Mastodon · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PORT HURON, Mich. -- A Michigan woman accused of faking a sexual assault was ordered to stand trial on charges of making a false report of rape and tampering with evidence Tuesday after a doctor said her purported bruises faded after he wiped them with gauze.

Sara Ylen accused two men of sexual assault at her Lexington home last September, saying she was taking a nap when she was bound and raped. But authorities say the attack didn't happen.

Ylen is also accused of lying about having cancer in a separate case in Sanilac County. She's charged with fraud for allegedly tricking an insurance company and sympathetic supporters. A probable cause hearing is set for July 9.'

Adding two women's sports part of process

Mastodon · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Title IX is leading Missouri State to enact changes that could take effect as soon as the fall of 2014: the addition of two women's sports.

MSU operates under "Prong One", known as "proportionality," to comply with Title IX. In other words, the school must carry the same proportion of male and female student-athletes as the proportion of full-time male and female students in the undergraduate student body.

Missouri State's 2012-13 undergraduate enrollment was 56.7 female. To comply with Title IX, MSU's proportion of female student-athletes must be within 1 percent in either direction of that number.

According to research from Missouri State, the school is about 2.5 percent away from where it needs to be, and is in the process of adding women's sports to come back in compliance.
...
In its five-page report, the task force did not recommend changing or dropping any of the school's 16 sports. NCAA rules require schools to offer six men's sports and eight women's sports. Missouri State currently sponsors six men's sports and 10 women's sports.'

Kenya: Men are becoming no more than sperm donors in our society

Mastodon · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I was listening to a debate in one of the morning breakfast shows in one of the FM radio stations this past week and wondered if really the boy child has a place left for him in this society. Women were calling and confessing how they would really wish their husbands were dead.

It reminded me of how hard it has become for male job seekers to get jobs this days be it from male or female employers something that was echoed by one of my lecturers at Egerton University. It is worrying that the society has focused more on the girl child and forgotten the boy child.
...
It should not be forgotten that the controversial Kiambu County cabinet nominees were rejected for being gender biased. Surprisingly, this time round it was not women who were discriminated against, it was men. Only two out of eight nominees were men.

We actually have a problem that needs to be addressed. We have forsaken the boy child and soon it might cause grievous harm to the society. Men might just start withdrawing from social scenes while others will cease to see the relevance of marriage if the trend continues. Women should stop taking men as sperm donors and value them as their husbands.'

US: Male workforce participation declines 9+% over 56 years

Mastodon · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the 1950s, nearly every man in his prime working years was in the labor force, a category that includes both those who are employed and those actively applying for jobs. The "participation rate" for men ages 25 to 54 stood at 97.7% in early 1956, but drifted downward to a post-war record low of 88.4% at the end of 2012. (It ticked up very slightly at the start of this year to 88.6%.)

So where have all the men workers gone?

Some went into prison. Others are on disability. And still others can't find jobs and have simply given up looking.

The trend is particularly pronounced among the less educated. As the job market shifted away from blue-collar positions that required only a high-school degree to more skilled labor, many men were left behind, labor analysts say. It's harder these days to find well-paying jobs in manufacturing, production and other fields traditionally dominated by men without college diplomas.

But college men are leaving, too. The participation rate of those older than 25 and holding at least bachelor's degree fell to 80.2% in May, down from 87.2% in May 1992.'

Women slam ‘unfair’ insurance ruling

Mastodon · 23 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new survey shows that 78 per cent of women believe a recent European Union ruling against gender-based pricing for insurance policies is unfair.
...
Only 22 per cent of women questioned by MyVoucherCodes.co.uk agreed that the move was fair. By comparison, 74 per cent of men supported the ruling – which may result in lower insurance premiums for male customers.

Almost two thirds of women felt that men should pay higher premiums for car insurance, as data shows that they are more likely to be involved in accidents.

The European ruling comes into effect on 21st December 2012. Estimates from the Association of British Insurers (ABI) indicate that women under 25 could see a 25 per cent increase in motor insurance costs … while men could expect premiums to reduce by just 10 per cent.

Maggie Craig, ABI’s Acting Director General, said: “This gender ban is disappointing news for UK consumers and something the UK insurance industry has fought against for the last decade. The judgment ignores the fact that taking a person’s gender into account, where relevant to the risk, enables men and women alike to get a more accurate price for their insurance.”'

Australia: More children of single parents in poverty

Mastodon · 24 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Next week single mother Angela Downey will mark her daughter's 12th birthday with a rare treat – a chocolate sponge cake with cream and strawberries. Just like the past four years, there won't be any presents.

Since being moved off the single parent payment onto the lesser Newstart allowance in 2009, Ms Downey said it has been all but impossible to support her three teenage children.

...

The latest Household, Income and Labour Dynamics in Australia Survey prepared by Melbourne University revealed the poverty rate for children living with a single parent has risen 15 per cent since 2001.'

Feminist Hate Site: "I HATE MEN -- 100,000 STRONG"

Mastodon · 24 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

One example here. Excerpt:

'Men are the reason why the world/society is so messed up. They are the default human being, and women are stuck with the label of some kind of new creature. Double standards are because of men. War is because of men. Insecure girls are because of men.

I'm only 19 years old and I already feel this deep hatred for men. Thankfully, I have never been raped or sexually abused. But have I feared for my life because of a man? Plenty of times. I can't walk down the street alone without fearing for my life, fearing a man will jump out of the shadows and rape/kill me. I hate that men think they own us, and that WE owe them something.'

Why She Drinks: Women and Alcohol Abuse

Mastodon · 24 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some social scientists link the rise in female alcohol consumption to the changing role of women in society. Rick Grucza, an epidemiologist at Washington University School of Medicine in St. Louis who studies alcohol-use disorders, correlates women's drinking to the rise in female college attendance. Others suggest that many women continue unhealthy postcollege drinking patterns in male-dominated industries such as finance and technology. Still others find a link among women who step away from their careers to be at home. "The baby's crying, they're not getting paid, they're bored and anxious—and feel guilty that they're bored and anxious," says Mary Ellen Barnes, a psychologist in Rolling Hills Estates, Calif., who treats many female heavy drinkers. Drinking several tall glasses of wine can make those feelings recede—at least for a few hours.'

Swedish Left Party moves to ban men urinating while standing

Matt · 24 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The local chapter of the Left Party, a socialist and feminist political party, in Sormland County Council, Sweden, is pushing to make standing while peeing illegal for men using the county council's public restrooms.

According to the Local, supporters of the proposal say sitting while urinating is more hygienic and promotes sanitary restroom habit for male users. It will help to eliminate the problem of puddles on the floor and spray stains on toilet seats. They also argue that urinating while sitting will help to promote male health because it allows men to empty their bladder more effectively. Sitting while urinating according to advocates will reduce prostate problems among men.'

In Debate Over Military Sexual Assault, Men Are Overlooked Victims

Matt · 24 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Good they wrote this. But notice the problem of sexual assaults in the military only got press and serious attention from the brass when it was revealed as a problem for female service personnel. "It's not a problem unless it affects women/girls" seems to hold as always. Excerpt:

'Sexual assault has emerged as one of the defining issues for the military this year. Reports of assaults are up, as are questions about whether commanders have taken the problem seriously. Bills to toughen penalties and prosecution have been introduced in Congress.

But in a debate that has focused largely on women, this fact is often overlooked: the majority of service members who are sexually assaulted each year are men.

In its latest report on sexual assault, the Pentagon estimated that 26,000 service members experienced unwanted sexual contact in 2012, up from 19,000 in 2010. Of those cases, the Pentagon says, 53 percent involved attacks on men, mostly by other men.
...

“Men don’t acknowledge being victims of sexual assault,” said Dr. Carol O’Brien, the chief of post-traumatic stress disorder programs at the Bay Pines Veterans Affairs Health Care System in Florida, which has a residential treatment program for sexually abused veterans. “Men tend to feel a great deal of shame, embarrassment and fear that others will respond negatively.”
...
“The best thing going on right now is that the women’s issue is coming to the fore and you see some mention about male rapes,” he said.

Many sexual assaults on men in the military seem to be a form of violent hazing or bullying, said Roger Canaff, a former New York State prosecutor who helped train prosecutors on the subject of military sexual assault for the Pentagon. “The acts seemed less sexually motivated than humiliation or torture-motivated,” he said.
...
“I think the attention to this issue is absolutely needed,” Lieutenant Cohen said. “But it’s a little bit late. We still have attacks, and we still have retaliation.”'

"Psychological Violence"

Matt · 24 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From a reader in Italy, a video titled "Psychological Violence". Good piece, I'd say it's applicable to any relationship, really. But this vid emphasizes the phenom as it gets inflicted on men. More like it are necessary.

Affiliated sites:
http://facebook.com/paternita
http://fatherhood.paternita.info/

World Health Organisation: violence against women a "global health problem of epidemic proportions"

Minuteman · 25 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'20 JUNE 2013 | GENEVA - Physical or sexual violence is a public health problem that affects more than one third of all women globally, according to a new report released by WHO in partnership with the London School of Hygiene & Tropical Medicine and the South African Medical Research Council.

The report, Global and regional estimates of violence against women: Prevalence and health effects of intimate partner violence and non-partner sexual violence, represents the first systematic study of global data on the prevalence of violence against women – both by partners and non-partners. Some 35% of all women will experience either intimate partner or non-partner violence. The study finds that intimate partner violence is the most common type of violence against women, affecting 30% of women worldwide.'

The Pentagon's Surrender to Feminism

Mastodon · 25 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"The Pentagon unveiled plans Tuesday for fully integrating women into front-line and special combat roles, including elite forces such as Army Rangers and Navy SEALs."

So ran the lead on the CNN story. And why are we doing this?

Did the young officers leading troops in battle in Afghanistan and Iraq, returning with casualties, say they needed women to enhance the fighting efficiency of their combat units and the survival rate of their soldiers?

Did men from the 101st and 82nd airborne, the Marines, the SEALs, and Delta Force petition the Joint Chiefs to put women alongside them in future engagements to make them an even superior force?

No. This decision to put women in combat represents a capitulation of the military brass, a surrender to the spirit of our age, the Pentagon's salute to feminist ideology.'

Leading expert on ‘maleness’ comes to Toronto to support ‘men’s centre’

Mastodon · 25 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A fundraising campaign to create a Canadian Centre for Men and Families kicks off Wednesday in Toronto with a lecture by a leading anthropologist of gender, in an effort to boost the political clout and intellectual credibility of men’s issues.

It is a controversial topic often associated with angry sexists. But Lionel Tiger, Charles Darwin Professor of Anthropology at Rutgers University in New Jersey — best known for coining the term “male bonding” — is neither angry nor sexist.'
...
For four decades, since the ascendance of feminism, society has “vilified” males, Prof. Tiger said, and “it has now got to the point where we see some real results,” such as large numbers of single mothers, and disproportionately female university campuses.'

S. Africa: Boy’s botched circumcision: health dept must pay R2.2m

Mastodon · 25 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The money cannot change what had happened to her son.

This was the reaction of the mother of a 9-year-old boy who had suffered a botched circumcision at the Vryheid Hospital in KwaZulu-Natal after the provincial health department was ordered to pay R2.2 million to the family this week.

...

On Tuesday, Judge Achmat Jappie of the Pietermaritzburg High Court ordered that the department pay the family R2.2 million within 14 days.

The mother said her son was finding it hard to deal with the incident and had “anger issues”.'

S. Africa: Five circumcision deaths in E Cape

Mastodon · 25 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Port Elizabeth - Five boys died and one has been castrated in the Eastern Cape after illegal circumcisions, the provincial health department said on Friday.

“The Eastern Cape department of health is extremely concerned about the increasing number of young boys dying in the bush,” said spokesman Sizwe Kupelo.

“Over the past four days five boys have died in the bush. An autopsy conducted on three of them indicated they suffered from gangrene which resulted in renal failure.”

A 15-year-old boy also had to be castrated.

Kupelo said the circumcisions had occurred at illegal schools in the Libode, Port St Johns, and Lusikisiki areas.'

Seattle-based tech-education firm offers women-only coding boot camp, real jobs

Mastodon · 25 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Employers are avoiding liberal arts majors like the plague. As the Wall Street Journal has noted, recent college grads with English, philosophy and history majors face unemployment rates just below 10 percent.

But, wait. There's more. Turns out, a person with a passable technical background can spend a few intensive, hands-on weeks in a boot camp learning how to write code. That person can then waltz directly into a well-paying gig in the tech industry.

Seattle-based Code Fellows, a company that specializes in computer-programming education, offers the boot camps in Ruby on Rails, an open-source web application framework.

Code Fellows is now rolling out a boot camp exclusively for women interested in breaking into the software industry.

The July 8 to August 23 female-only boot camp is intended to address the dearth – you may have noticed it — of women working in computer programming.'

Supreme Court says Native American child isn’t required to be given to father

Mastodon · 25 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — A divided Supreme Court ruled Tuesday that federal law doesn’t require that a Native American girl be given back to her biological father, but also doesn’t clear her adoptive parents to immediately regain custody of the now 3-year-old child.

In a resolution that one justice said could compound “the anguish this case has caused,” the high court voted 5-4 to send the case back to courts in South Carolina to determine the final home for an adopted little girl named Veronica.

South Carolina courts originally said the 1978 Indian Child Welfare Act — a federal law intended to keep Indian children from being taken from their homes and typically placed with non-Indian adoptive or foster parents — favored her living with her biological father, who took custody of her in 2011. But the South Carolina couple who raised her for the first 27 months of her life appealed that decision, and justices have ordered her case reconsidered.
...
Added Scalia in a separate dissent: “This father wants to raise his daughter, and the statute amply protects his right to do so. There is no reason in law or policy to dilute that protection.”'

Air Force Academy Adds Male Bashing Gender Theory “Male and Masculinity” Course

Mastodon · 25 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I wrote a while back that Obama Inc. will not be satisfied until it transforms the military into the same warped culture of the left. And that includes the usual “Men are Evil” courses transplanted from Berkeley to the Air Force Academy.

...

Courses on gender have nothing to do with preventing sexual assaults. To fight rape, you increase security and reporting. And you arrest rapists.

Fighting rape by teaching gender theory is like fighting armed robbery by teaching Communism.

...

"His spring class will offer an opportunity to examine violence committed by males, a topic that is often overlooked because “people in dominate groups have the luxury of having their identity remain invisible,” Kilmartin said."

Translating that from libspeak, no one ever talks about male violence because of the patriarchy. No one. Ever. You never see it in movies or on the news.'

New Zealand: False rape claim to get lift home from strip show

Mastodon · 25 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Masterton woman falsely claimed to have been raped because she wanted police to give her a ride home after watching a male strip show.

Helen Maree Bidlake, 25, was yesterday convicted of making a false statement and sentenced to 100 hours' community work when she was sentenced in Masterton District Court.

According to the police summary of facts, on April 17 Bidlake, who is unemployed, attended a male strip show in Greytown.

She did not want to pay for a taxi back to Masterton so rang 111 and said she had been raped by a male she had met at the show.'

UK: Female teacher 'had sex with pupil in her car'

Mastodon · 25 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An English teacher allegedly told a 16-year-old pupil 'I bet you won't be able to keep up with me' before having sex with him in her car.

Emma Ager, 34, from Wales, is also reported to have told the boy that he would be 'a legend' amongst his friends following their trysts.

The relationship came to light after the boy's mother found out her son was getting inappropriate phone calls and texts from Miss Ager and contacted his school – but at the time she had no idea that their contact had become sexual.

Miss Ager is now up before a disciplinary hearing accused of unacceptable professional conduct and falling short of the standard expected of a registered teacher.'

'Adam's Discontent'

Mastodon · 25 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. (If you get a login challenge, copy and paste the paragraph below into Google search and click the first search results hit.) Excerpt:

'The statistics that Ms. Smith proffers are impressively dismal. Male workforce participation has plummeted. In 1970, some 80% of working-age men were employed full-time, in contrast to the 66% employed full-time nowadays, Ms. Smith notes. Women today earn 58% of U.S. bachelor's degrees. This is partly because, as Christina Hoff Sommers wrote in her 2001 book, "The War Against Boys" (cited admiringly by Ms. Smith), the K-12 education system that feeds into college favors docile, conformist girls over aggressive, competitive boys. Colleges, as well, are riddled with feminist ideology, decimate their athletic programs in the name of Title IX and regard male students as likely rapists in their interactions with their female classmates.

Ms. Smith argues that men are simply reacting to a woman-centric culture that systemically belittles them as bumbling incompetents, denigrates their achievements and outright discriminates against them in such venues as family court. Mothers usually get custody of the children after a divorce, even if they have cheated on their husbands. Husbands sometimes end up forced to support children who aren't genetically theirs. For women, it's "my body, my choice," whereas men can be stuck writing child-support checks for 18 years even if the mother was a one-night stand who lied about using birth control. Ms. Smith blames not only feminists but passive "Uncle Tims," as she calls them, who go along with all this because, well, hell hath no fury like a woman scorned, especially if she is your wife or your boss or she decides to start a Sandra Fluke-inspired boycott of you or your company.'

DHS deadline requires child support from men who aren't biological dads

Mastodon · 25 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OKLAHOMA CITY – An Oklahoma man said he was almost obligated to pay thousands of dollars to support two children who, as it turned out, weren't even his.

Now his attorney is pushing for changes in DHS policies and state law.

Family law attorney Lawrence Goodwin admits he doesn't like deadbeat dads who avoid child support but he also doesn't like deceptive moms.

"I have the same disdain for people who mislead another human being and have them obligated to be a father of a child that they're not," Goodwin said.

...

"You have 60 days to come back and say 'I made a mistake. It's not my kid. I took a DNA test', or 'she told me the truth and it's not my child'," Goodwin said.

After that 60-day deadline, Okla. law states a man would have to prove he was deceived into thinking he was the biological father, by "fraud, duress or material mistake of fact"… within two years."'

Female EMT on-duty, in uniform faces no charges after ignoring pregnant woman's emergency leading to death

Matt · 25 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Brooklyn EMT who callously refused to help a dying pregnant woman because she was on her coffee break saw her official misconduct charge dropped today after EMS chief Abdo Nahmod — who initially supported the case against her — flip-flopped, leaving frustrated Brooklyn prosecutors no choice but to dismiss the case.

Melisa Jackson, 27, was in uniform and on-duty when she snuck away from her dispatcher job at FDNY headquarters in downtown Brooklyn in December 2009 to meet her EMT boyfriend in a nearby Au Bon Pain. But when pregnant Eutisha Rennix, 25, had a serious asthma attack, Jackson wouldn't even walk into the back room to look at her.

...

Nahmod signed an affidavit in 2010 supporting the criminal complaint against Jackson. His affidavit said Jackson had violated a departmental rule — the "flag-down rule" — requiring that an on-duty EMT treat a defendant and notify dispatch if they are flagged down for help.

...

"Based on the reversal of position of Chief Nahmod, there is absolutely no possible way to sustain a criminal charge against Ms. Jackson," Richardson said in court.

"We're perplexed. We don't know why he changed his mind," a law-enforcement source said.

...

Outside court Jackson refused to apologize to the Rennix family or accept any responsibility — and said she would do the same thing again.'

"Young and Isolated"

Matt · 26 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Of interest generally, but the paragraph about 20-something men saying it's impossible to live up to the "male provider role" jumps out. This speaks I think to how the "equality" message has by no means been delivered to the Millenials-- except as it pertains to women being "equal" (or, "more equal", which is more accurate). Despite the bad job prospects generally for Millenials, Millenial women are on average doing quite a bit better professionally and economically than the men. So why aren't they asking themselves about living up to a "provider role" paradigm? Of course we know the answer to this question already. Excerpt:

'Young working-class men and women like Diana are trying to figure out what it means to be an adult in a world of disappearing jobs, soaring education costs and shrinking social support networks. Today, only 20 percent of men and women between 18 and 29 are married. ...
...
These are people bouncing from one temporary job to the next; dropping out of college because they can't figure out financial aid forms or fulfill their major requirements; relying on credit cards for medical emergencies; and avoiding romantic commitments because they can take care of only themselves. ...
...
I heard many people express feeling betrayed by the major institutions in their lives, whether colleges, the health care system, employers or the government.
...
Men often face a different challenge: the impossibility of living up to the male provider role. Brandon, who worked the night shift at a clothing store, described what he thought it would be like to be in a relationship with him: "No woman wants to sit on the couch all the time and watch TV and eat at Burger King. I can only take care of myself."'

Please lodge anti-circumcision replies with the Department of Health & Human Services (re: 2014 Viral Hep. Action Plan), Deadline 5 July 2013

Minuteman · 26 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This is a response to the document "2014 Viral Hepatitis Action Plan" [FR Document Number: 2013-13332].

The deadline for submissions is 5 July 2013.

This submission can be made by anybody from any country around the world.

Instructions:

Download and save the document from the following link (Click 'Download'):

http://www.2shared.com/document/p89sEQZM/2014_Viral_Hepatitis_Action_Pl.html

Email the document to Corinna.Dan@hhs.gov with the subject heading "2014 Viral Hepatitis Action Plan".

In case anyone experiences problems with the above 2shared link, the full-text of the response document is below, which you can copy/paste into the text-editor or wordprocessor of your choice, save to your harddisk, and email to Corinna.Dan@hhs.gov

U.S. Department of Health and Human Services
200 Independence Ave. SW.
Room 443-H
Washington, DC 20201
Attention: 2014 Viral Hepatitis Action Plan

Thank you for the opportunity to provide feedback to the 2014 Viral Hepatitis Action Plan [FR Document Number: 2013-13332]. This response document will briefly address the special danger posed to newly circumcised baby boys from acquiring transfusion-transmitted hepatitis B virus [HBV] infection.

Transfusion-transmitted HBV infection

HBV remains a major risk of transfusion-transmitted infection due to the pre-seroconversion window period, infection with immunovariant viruses, and with occult carriage of HBV infection (Candotti & Allain 2009). Recipients of blood transfusions in the U.S continue to be at risk for HBV infection as a result of breakdowns in basic infection control and limitations in the laboratory screening of donated blood (HHS 2011). Blood transfusions were the fifth most common procedure received by children and infants in U.S hospitals for the year 2009, with approximately 109,400 transfusions being administered (AHRQ 2011). Prophylactic HBV vaccine was received by less than 1.33 million infants in the year 2009 (AHRQ 2011), out of approximately 4.13 million births for that year (CDC 2011a). Indviduals infected with transfusion-transmitted HBV can latter become carriers of the virus in the general community (HHS 2011). While over 95% of people infected as adults will spontaneously clear the HBV virus, this reduces to 30% in children, and 5% in infants (Bell & Nguyen 2009). Untreated, chronic hepatitis B acquired early in life results in cirrhosis, liver failure, or hepatocellular carcinoma in up to 40% of individuals (Weisberg et al 2007).

Circumcision and haemophilia A as special risk factors for acquiring transfusion-transmitted HBV infection

Circumcision of male minors, in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, is a controversial practice within the medical profession (KNMG 2010; Smith 2011). Despite this, more than 1.14 million circumcision procedures were performed on male infants in U.S. hospitals in the year 2009 (AHRQ 2011). One of the commonest complications of circumcision is excessive bleeding and rates as high as 35% have been quoted in the literature (Mahomed et al 2009). Babies often present after several hours of continued bleeding and blood transfusion may be necessary (Qazi et al 2010).

A survey conducted by Ragni et al (2011) of current prophylaxis practices and bleeding characteristics of children with severe haemophilia A in U.S. haemophilia treatment centres [HTCs], found that among 226 newborns with severe haemophilia A in 62 HTCs, the median age at first bleed, excluding circumcision, was 7 months and that of the 113 [53.5%] newborns who underwent circumcision, 62 [54.9%] bled. Haemophilia A occurs among approximately 1 out of every 6,250 male births (CDC 2011b). Although lower than in the past, HBV infection remains a risk among those with haemophilia A who rely on blood products to counteract the disease (Steele et al 2009).

Thus, a higher proportion of boys are already at greater risk of acquiring transfusion-transmitted HBV infection relative to girls, and circumcision worsens that disadvantage.

Action Required

Genital integrity [non-circumcision] is most likely to produce the highest state of health and well-being and is the preferred medical option for newborn boys (KNMG 2010, Van Howe 2004).

Public health officials should act to suspend the performance of medically-unnecessary non-therapeutic circumcision of boys.

Hospital administrators must respond to this threat to all children and especially circumcised boys by limiting circumcisions to those for which there is a clear and present immediate medical indication.

References:

AHRQ (2011) Hospital Stays for Children, 2009. HCUP Statistical Brief #118 prepared by Yu, H. (RAND Corporation), Wier, L.M. (Thomson Reuters), and Elixhauser, A. (AHRQ) August 2011. Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, Rockville, MD Full-text available at http://www.hcup-us.ahrq.gov/reports/statbriefs/sb118.jsp

Candotti & Allain (2009) Transfusion-transmitted hepatitis B virus infection J Hepatol. 2009 Oct;51(4):798-809. Epub 2009 Jun 10 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/19615780

CDC (2011a) Births: Final Data for 2009 in National Vital Statistics Reports Volume 60 Number 1 Prepared by Joyce A. Martin, M.P.H.; Brady E. Hamilton, Ph.D.; Ph.D.; Stephanie J. Ventura, M.A Michelle J.K. Osterman, M.H.S.; Sharon Kirmeyer, PhD.; T.J. Mathews, M.S.; and Elizabeth Wilson M.P.H., Division of Vital Statistics Full-text available at http://www.cdc.gov/nchs/data/nvsr/nvsr60/nvsr60_01.pdf

CDC (2011b) Hemophilia Facts Centers for Disease Control and Prevention Full-text available at http://www.cdc.gov/ncbddd/hemophilia/facts.html

HHS (2011) COMBATING THE SILENT EPIDEMIC of VIRAL HEPATITIS Action Plan for the Prevention, Care & Treatment of Viral Hepatitis United States Department of Health & Human Services Full-text available at http://www.hhs.gov/ash/initiatives/hepatitis/actionplan_viralhepatitis2011.pdf

KNMG (2010) Non-theraputic circumcision of male minors Royal Dutch Medical Association Full-text available at http://knmg.artsennet.nl/web/file?uuid=579e836d-ea83-410f-9889-feb7eda87cd5&owner=a8a9ce0e-f42b-47a5-960e-be08025b7b04&contentid=77976

Mahomed A, Zaparackaite I, Adam S (2009) Improving outcome from Plastibell circumcisions in infants Int Braz J Urol. 2009 May-Jun;35(3):310-3; discussion 313-4 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/19538766

Qazi A, Haider N, Crabbe D (2010) A simple technique to control bleeding after Plastibell circumcision Ann R Coll Surg Engl. 2010 Apr;92(3):261-2 Full-text available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pmc/articles/PMC3080088/

Ragni MV, Fogarty PJ, Josephson NC, Neff AT, Raffini LJ, Kessler CM (2011) Survey of current prophylaxis practices and bleeding characteristics of children with severe haemophilia A in US haemophilia treatment centres Haemophilia. 2011 May 4. doi: 10.1111/j.1365-2516.2011.02554.x. [Epub ahead of print] Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/21539695

Smith JF (2011) The professional imperative for obstetrician-gynecologists to discontinue newborn male circumcision Am J Perinatol. 2011 Feb;28(2):125-8. Epub 2010 Aug 10 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed?term=20700861

Steele M, Cochrane A, Wakefield C, Stain AM, Ling S, Blanchette V, Gold R, Ford-Jones L (2009) Hepatitis A and B immunization for individuals with inherited bleeding disorders Haemophilia. 2009 Mar;15(2):437-47 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/19335752

Van Howe RS (2004) A cost-utility analysis of neonatal circumcision Med Decis Making. 2004 Nov-Dec;24(6):584-601 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/15534340

Weisberg IS, Brown RS Jr & Sigal SH (2007) Hepatitis B and end-stage liver disease Clin Liver Dis. 2007 Nov;11(4):893-916, ix Abstract availabe at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/17981234

Aussie PM Gillard loses leadership ballot to Rudd

Matt · 26 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CANBERRA, Australia (AP) - Australian Prime Minister Julia Gillard was ousted as Labor Party leader Wednesday by her predecessor, Kevin Rudd, in a vote of party lawmakers hoping to avoid a huge defeat in upcoming elections.

The ballot took place three years and two days after Gillard ousted Rudd in a similar internal government showdown to become the country's first female prime minister. Wednesday's vote makes Rudd leader of the party, but he is not yet prime minister and may not get the job if lawmakers abandon Labor's ruling coalition.'

Swedish finance minister open to boardroom quotas

Mastodon · 26 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sweden's Finance Minister Anders Borg has indicated that a law requiring more women in the boardroom is becoming more likely, describing the continuing lack of gender balance in Swedish firms as a "significant problem".

"It is obvious that this is being solved at a very, very slow pace. I think that the arguments against the legislation are gradually eroding and that the reasons for considering legislation have strengthened," Borg said to the Dagens Nyheter daily.

Borg argued that improvements are "not even close" to what is acceptable and in relation to business leaders arguments against the need for legislation.

The finance minister's threat comes as the proportion of women in the boardroom in Swedish firms has in fact declined to 2010 levels - 26.4 percent - according to the GMI Ratings 2012 Women on Boards Survey.'

Updates on the O2/Symantec censorship issue

Matt · 26 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

An update from John Kimble:

I thought it was time to update people on the progress that we've made on the issue of O2/Symantec censoring and defaming men's human rights sites.

Firstly I want to thank everyone who had blogged about this issue, it's fantastic to see it discussed in so many different places and even in different languages. I thought this article on Trigger Alert was particularly good and Tom Golden has written a nice piece on AVoiceForMen, too. There's a even Youtube video helping bring the message to a wider audience which I thoroughly recommend viewing and also plenty of material over at Fathers for Life.

I've written several new articles further investigating the issue which are essential viewing, for example highlighting some extreme feminists sites that aren't blocked, how feminists get their sites unblocked, and how O2/Symantec even treat men's rights websites as more hateful than far right groups. I also contacted ISP Review who wrote a good article on the issue which led to Symantec blocking a radical feminist site.

"Can you give me back my foreskin?"

Matt · 26 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The case is this: if you are able to listen, dare listen, and you are willing to listen to what is clear and obvious: of course you do not need to cut your newborns to win Gods acceptance, a horrifying question emerges from the mists: does this mean that something is wrong in Judaism? The answer is, yes. Of course it is wrong to maintain a practice which involves that one – unnecessarily – cuts parts from small children's small bodies. Imagine if our neighbors – for religious reasons – had the habit of cutting their earlobes, the outer joint of their little finger or the nipples of their babies. Just like that, off with them. We would never allow that to happen. Nevertheless we accept something even worse: the cutting into and cutting off parts of children's private and intimate sexual organs.

The consequences are many and ramified but they may be difficult to see until the horror dawns on you. The foreskin tissue contains an enormous amount of receptors which makes it the most highly sensitive area of the entire male body. Several studies show how infants are highly sensitive, they feel pain, and research is constantly extended with more knowledge about how important the first months and years are for a baby's healthy development. Reports from circumcisions relate of children lapsing into traumatic shock during the procedure – being unable to make a sound. By some this is interpreted to mean that the mutilation does not inflict pain – in reality the opposite is true. Jewish mothers and fathers who have regretted the procedure tell how the special intimacy and (until then) unbreakable bond between child and parents is ripped even more violently apart than the way in which the foreskin is torn from the glans before it is cut off. The child loses the most important part in its relation with its parents: the trust that mother and father will always act in its best interest and defend it – also against religious practice.'

BTB: Our Covenant Is With Our Son

Matt · 26 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is because of the Jewish value of education, the Jewish ability to adapt and to change, the Jewish thoughtfulness, and the Jewish desire to end suffering that my husband and I chose not to circumcise our son. There are many parts of the Torah that current Jewish traditions choose to ignore: Jews no longer practice polygamy, though it is mandated in Deuteronomy. We do not own slaves, though several Jewish texts detail how they should be governed. And we have agreed—as a religion and a people—that blood sacrifices have no place in modern Jewish life.
...
“It’s a boy,” my husband said quietly as he lifted the baby onto my chest. I didn’t believe him. I sobbed with joy at the tiny baby in my arms who looked up at me curiously and didn’t cry. We left his penis the perfect way it was when he was born. If our son chooses to make God’s covenant and become circumcised as an adult, circumcision will be his choice, his sacrifice, his personal covenant, as it was for Abraham. Our covenant is with our son: to protect him, cherish him, educate him, and ultimately let him make his own decisions about his body.'

McCain Demands Answers from DOJ over Campus Censorship "Blueprint"

Matt · 26 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt;

'WASHINGTON, June 26, 2013—Arizona Senator John McCain sent a letter to the Department of Justice today challenging its recent settlement with the University of Montana. The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) has led national criticism of the May 9 settlement, which mandates a breathtakingly broad definition of sexual harassment and rejects the use of a "reasonable person" standard. The Department of Justice (DOJ) and the Department of Education (ED) proclaimed the joint settlement to be a "blueprint" for how colleges across the country must handle sexual misconduct allegations.

...

In today's letter, Senator McCain writes: "Without congressional authorization or even any formal agency rulemaking, Assistant Attorney General Thomas Perez and a group of lawyers in the DOJ's Civil Rights Division have single-handedly redefined the meaning of sexual harassment at all universities and colleges across the country that receive public funding."

...

Senator McCain also asks whether everyday expression protected by the First Amendment—including students joking or listening to music that contains sexual content, or a teacher assigning a work which includes sexual content—could now be grounds for filing a sexual harassment complaint. Senator McCain writes: "What safe harbors are available to students and teachers so that they can be assured that innocent behavior is not investigated and punished?"'

SAVE's collection of DED Editorials

Matt · 26 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Listing here. Excerpt:

'Following is a listing of editorials and articles criticizing the Department of Education (DED) Sexual Assault Directive and sexual harassment speech code, and calling for the restoration of due process and free speech on campus:

2013:

1. KC Johnson: UNC and a Credulous Press – January 19
2. Pierce Harlan: The State of the Union for the Wrongly Accused is Bleak - January 21
3. Joseph Cohn: KC Johnson to Journalists: Stop Presuming Guilt – January 22
4. Amelia Evrigenis: Sexual Violence on Campus: College Lowers Standards of Proof - January 23
5. KC Johnson: Yale's Bizarre Sexual Misconduct Hearings – February 1
6. Community of the Wrongly Accused: American Association of University Professors Stands Up for the Rights of the Innocent in its New Report on Sexual Assault — February 14

...'

Ed. note: The list entries above are hyperlinked on the target page. I'm just too lazy to copy them over into the list when they are right there on SAVE's site. =)

Daughter of lesbian couple writes Fathers' Day should be eliminated

Mastodon · 27 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Abby Bergman has an ax to grind. An LGBT activist “all her life,” according to her bio, the high school junior is also the daughter of a lesbian couple, and as a result … thinks we should chuck Father’s Day out the window.

Bergman just wrote a Father’s Day piece (read, an anti-Father’s Day piece) for the Huffington Post called “Celebrating Father’s Day With Two Moms,” in which she whined that the traditional holiday was not quite inclusive enough. Although nothing stopped her from honoring “all the typical ‘father things’ that my moms do for me every day,” Bergman still managed to gripe.
...
Her conclusion? Not that every child deserves both a father and mother – not at all. Bergman would rather see male-specific parent appreciation days – like Father’s Day – get scratched off the calendar. “I don't deny that we need a day to recognize our parents – maybe even more than one,” claimed Bergman, “But in our modern society shouldn't we be able to celebrate a holiday that includes everyone? Families come in all shapes and sizes.”

Dads don’t deserve a day specially dedicated to them, it seems. Bergman argued that we shouldn’t be “pressured by society (and Hallmark) to recognize a parent of a particular gender.” What would she prefer? Well, she would really like it “if we all use every day to thank and honor all of our parents.”

A world where nobody gets honored for anything special – just everybody gets honored everyday for everything? Sure, Abby, that sounds great. Of course, she didn’t actually ever mention getting rid of Mother’s Day – but maybe that wouldn’t fly so well with her “two moms.”'

Woman Runs Over Lover With SUV After Only Three Months Of Dating

Mastodon · 27 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Demarco Dent (pictured) is lucky to be alive after Iyana Mentor (pictured below), his lover of only three months, allegedly tried to run him down with her SUV three times, succeeding on the last try. Why would she try and run the man down, you may ask? Because he couldn't spend time with her after getting off work, reports WSB-TV.

Mentor was arrested and is now facing charges of aggravated assault and hit-and-run.

The violent lover's spat began when Dent asked Mentor to drop him off at a specified location in Clayton County, Ga. As the couple drove on a highway, Dent, who had just gotten off work, alleges that Mentor became angry when he told her he could not spend any time with her because he was tired. Dent then alleges that Mentor did not take his news too kindly and began behaving irrationally, spewing profanities and driving recklessly.'

Male Domestic Abuse Victim: My Wife Tried To Stab Me

Mastodon · 27 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article and video here. Excerpt:

'Female victims are often the focus of initiatives against domestic abuse. But according to a 2010 report from the Centers for Disease Control, more than one in four men in the U.S. experience rape, physical violence and/or stalking by an intimate partner in their lifetime, and one in seven men experience severe physical violence from an intimate partner. Justin Nutt, founder of Acts of Random Kindness and survivor of domestic abuse, shared his story recently on HuffPost Live.

...

"It escalated to a point where the police were called when she tried to stab me, after we had been out and she had done things in a bar with a guy, and [then said] that was my fault," Nutt said. "It took two years before I could really say it wasn't that I didn't love her well enough or I didn't try hard enough. It was a long time before I was able to say, 'yeah I was abused.'"'

UK: Soldier tells how false rape claims ruined his life

Mastodon · 27 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A SOLDIER arrested for a rape that never happened told how the allegation has ruined his life - as his accuser was jailed for eight months.

The young father's relationship fell apart amid whispering in his community after Philippa Costello claimed she had been attacked in April 2011.

He was arrested and held for 15 hours, had intimate samples taken, and had to wait two months before the investigation against him was dropped.

...

She did not confess until she was due to go on trial last month on a charge of doing an act tending or intended to pervert the course of justice.

Her barrister, Alun Jones, told the court yesterday: "She felt stuck in a track. When she found herself in that hole, she kept digging, and she regrets that."

Judge Michael Taylor told Costello: "It is a tragedy for you to be standing before me in court today . . . I regret to say a prison sentence is inevitable.

"Regrettably, offences like this are not uncommon and a clear message has got to be sent out by the courts that those who make such allegations leading to the arrest and detention of perfectly innocent people must be marked out by way of being punished."'

SAVE: Join Senator McCain in Demanding Answers from the DOJ over Campus Censorship

Matt · 28 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

On May 9 the federal government issued a decision that expands the definition of sexual harassment and removes free speech on campus. This has triggered 100 critical editorials.

On June 26 Arizona Senator John McCain sent a letter to the Department of Justice challenging its recent settlement with the University of Montana.

We fully support the senator's efforts, and we'd like to see more lawmakers follow suit. That's where you come in.

Urge your senators to join with Sen. McCain to restore free speech on college campuses. Call 1-866-220-0044.

Thank you for helping college students all across the country.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

UK: Stress, anxiety most common reasons for sick leave, affecting men at higher rates

Matt · 28 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Contrary to "conventional wisdom". Excerpt:

'Stress and anxiety are the leading causes of sickness in the UK's workforce, accounting for more than a third of doctors' notes to employers, research has shown.

A survey of tens of thousands of GPs' sick notes found that 35 per cent of illnesses were linked to stress, anxiety or depression.

In one doctors' surgery, more than half of employees' absentee sick notes were described as being down to 'mild to moderate mental health disorders'.

The figures come as additional research reveals that those who are concerned that stress might harm their health are twice as likely to suffer a heart attack than those who thought it had no effect.

The government's sick note scheme, renamed the fit note in April 2010, was designed to help employers back into work after a week of illness.'

The Majority of Military Sexual Assault Victims Are Men. Now Maybe We Can Fix This?

Matt · 28 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here's how the debate over military sexual assault has unfolded thus far: Bold female leaders spoke out, smart male allies stood behind them, clueless conservative men started mansplaining the issue, and right-wing media went full misogynist. Because of this, it's easy to imagine that military sexual assault is mainly a problem of men versus (or attacking) women, but as James Dao in the New York Times explains, in fact, the majority of sexual assault in the military is male-on-male crime.

...

The fact that most military rape is male-on-male also shows how very wrong it is to suggest that the problem is that we let women serve to begin with. Even if you removed them all, that leaves nearly 14,000 rapes a year.

...

It would be nice if the dynamics of sexual assault could be understood and accepted even when women are the victims, but sadly, that's not the world we live in. Publicizing the percentage of victims that are men will help male victims understand that they're not alone, and it will help the public at large better realize why widespread sexual assault happens and why it's so critical to do a better job preventing and prosecuting it.'

Jeb Bush to give award to Hillary Clinton

Matt · 28 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. And in related news, the sun reportedly rose in the west this morning. The 1970s had "Hanoi Jane". The 2010s have "Benghazi Hillary". Excerpt:

'Jeb Bush will present Hillary Clinton with the 2013 Liberty Medal this fall in Philadelphia.

It could be an awkward encounter for the two, both of whom are mentioned as 2016 presidential nominees for their respective parties.

Bush, the former Republican governor of Florida, is chairman of the National Constitution Center, which is giving Clinton the award in honor of her career in public service and her advocacy efforts on behalf of women.

The former secretary of State is considered the frontrunner for the Democratic nomination in the next presidential election, but has made no political moves since leaving the Obama administration. Instead, she has focused on charity work through The Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundation.'

"Message from Circumcised Young Man to History & Message to My Mother"

Matt · 28 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Recorded by an Egyptian man. Heartbreaking. But men who have been assaulted like this when younger must speak out; men so abused when babies have no conscious memories, but when victimized like this in adolescence-- they can speak out. And, I'm glad to see this evidence that indeed, this is becoming an issue in the Muslim parts of the world as well, not just the Judeo-Christian and more secularized areas. Video here. Transcript here. Excerpt:

'and one day when i was 10 years old my mother asked me to go out of home with her, when i asked her where we are going she said we are going for a short journey and we will be back home right away, i agreed to go out with my mother because i trust her and i feel safe with her, because i know she wouldn't hurt me and wouldn't expose me to danger for any reason.
...
the moment i lost my consciousness was the worst moment in my whole life, i felt that i had lost everything in my life. i lost safety, confidence in my mother who i was always knowing she would protect me from any danger and harm, and that she would risk her life to protect me. i felt intense rage, intense desire for revenge and i felt helplessness that i can't protect myself. i felt horrible pain, i felt i lost my virginity forever. i lost so much values in my life. i lost the value of loyalty, honesty, trust and love. moments before i lose my consciousness i prayed to God to make this moment the last moment in my life. i prayed that i don't wake up from the surgery except in my grave. i lost consciousness and when i woke up few hour
...

the price of raping and killing me was 75 pounds. since this day everything in my life changed to the worst. my relationship with God worsened because i felt God stopped protecting me the day i was in hospital. i stopped praying and i began to move away from Quran and mosques. i felt lonely and began to be introverted and moving away of people. at age of 11, i was once praying the afternoon prayer and i prayed to God to let me die. it was the first time in my life to pray to God to let me die. i was feeling unbearable intense pain in my genitals when i was entering the bathroom with the passing days i felt changes in my body as a result of the surgery and precisely in my genitals. it was changes that never happened to me before.'

Wife gets life for severing US man's penis

Minuteman · 29 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A US woman who cut off her husband's penis and threw it in a garage disposal has been sentenced to life in prison with possibility of parole.
...
Kieu, 50, can seek parole in seven years.

Prosecutors said Kieu drugged her husband's tofu with sleeping pills and screamed "You deserve it!" before attacking him with a kitchen knife.

She was convicted of torture and aggravated mayhem.

Her lawyer argued that she had mental health problems stemming from childhood molestation and sexual abuse by her husband.'

IA: Take action on TriHealth's circumcision instrument study

Matt · 29 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The media is refusing to cover a study being conducted at a hospital in Cincinnati on 200+ infant boys. The researchers are testing which of two circumcision clamps (the Gomco vs. the Mogen) is "better," by measuring the weight of blood soaked gauzes after the procedure, and assessing babies' pain during the surgery by observing their vital signs and facial expressions. We are preparing a major campaign, but here are two things you can do right now:

- Follow @TriHealth on Twitter and post tweets telling them to stop their Gomco vs. Mogen circumcision study; use the hashtag #stoptrihealthstudy.
- Post on TriHealth's corporate Facebook page, demanding that they stop the Gomco vs. Mogen study.

See http://news.mensactivism.org/node/21540

WSJ: Do the Health Benefits of Neonatal Circumcision Outweigh the Risks?

Matt · 29 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Circumcision rates in the U.S. have been falling since the 1960s, when the vast majority of infant boys had their foreskins removed before leaving the hospital.

These days, approximately 57% of boys are circumcised in U.S. hospitals, with the procedure generally being more common among whites and less common among black and Hispanic populations, according to estimates. Other boys are circumcised in religious ceremonies shortly after birth.
...
Rather than admit a serious mistake, we ignore the harm and produce endless inflated medical claims to defend our bias. Some research shows that circumcision is favored more often by circumcised physicians. If they participate in pro-circumcision studies or committees, circumcision status could influence their work.

Watch a circumcision video and trust your feelings, instincts, common sense and nature. You will want to keep your baby safe from specious genital surgery and trauma.'

International Physicians Protest Against AAP's Policy on Infant Male Circumcision

Matt · 29 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(BERLIN) - Circumcision conflicts with children's rights and doctors' oath and can have serious long-term consequences, state an international group of 38 physicians from 16 European countries in Pediatrics today. They comment on the American Academy of Pediatrics' new policy on infant male circumcision.

There are no compelling health arguments in favor of circumcision, while it can have serious long-term urological, psychological and sexual consequences. And performing medically unwarranted circumcision of underage boys conflicts with good medical practice. Male infant circumcision conflicts with children's rights and the doctors' oath not to do harm. (Salem-News.com has a copy of the AAP report here.

...

Among the authors are presidents and representatives of several national medical associations and societies of pediatricians and pediatric surgeons. The Dutch Urology Association (NVU), Pediatric Association (NVK) and surgeons (NVvH) also signed as authors of the article. Already in 2010, all relevant medical associations adopted the identical viewpoint of the Royal Dutch Medical Association (KNMG)*.'

---

* As of posting, this link is "broken". It leads to a page-not-found message on salem-news. I have informed them of the issue.

NPO: Massachusetts Decreases Child Support Guidelines

Matt · 29 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Effective August 1, 2013, Massachusetts will be following revised child support guidelines. The Massachusetts Child Support Guidelines Task Force of the Massachusetts Trial Court has just completed its work and released the new guidelines and its report.

This is only the second occasion, that we are aware of, where the Guidelines have been reduced.

As Ned Holstein wrote in his article Massachusetts Child Support Guidelines are Actively Harmful to the Wellbeing of Children, the 2009 high levels of support orders implicitly assume that more is better.

"Excessive child support orders are the result in part of an archaic way of thinking, namely, that the wellbeing of the child is solely bound up in the wellbeing of the custodial parent and her home. And that the circumstances of the non-custodial parent matter little or not at all to the wellbeing of the child."'

Australia: woman believed to have set man alight

Minuteman · 29 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A man has burns to 80 per cent of his body after a female intruder allegedly set him alight.

Emergency services went to a home in Bolwarra Heights at around 3.30am on Saturday, where they discovered the man with the burns.

Early inquiries suggest the 32-year-old was doused with flammable liquid and set alight by a female intruder, police said.'

N.C. County Commissioner Wants ‘Nonwhite Male’ As New County Manager

Mastodon · 29 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A North Carolina County Commissioner is sticking by her statement that the next person who is hired for a vacant county manager position should be a “nonwhite male.”

Kim Ratliff, a county commissioner in Mecklenburg County, N.C., made her comments following the departure of former county manager Harry Jones.

“Some residents may have taken it the wrong way,” Ratliff said. “But I said what I said.”
...
“I wasn’t saying for white men not to apply,” Ratliff said. “What I was saying was we had a white male county manager. We had a black male. It’s a given those two genders and races will apply. I’m saying to the ladies of every race — take a chance at it.”'

Does Title IX equality for females come at males' expense?

Mastodon · 29 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Since 1972, when Congress passed Title IX barring sex discrimination in school sports, the number of girls participating in sports in high school and college has skyrocketed. But as I reported a story this week about the National Women's Law Center filing a complaint against D.C. Public Schools for failing to provide high school girls equal opportunity in sports, I came across a long-running debate about Title IX:

...

"From 1981 to 2005, male athletes per school declined 6 percent, and men's teams per school dropped 17 percent. Meanwhile, female athletes per school rose 34 percent, and women's teams per school rose 34 percent. The total number of women's teams has exceeded the number of men's teams since 1995. Every male sport, with the exception of baseball, has decreased or remained static. Non-revenue sports such as wrestling, tennis, and gymnastics have been the hardest hit."

...

They point to a 2007 General Accounting Office report that found that while women's participation rates in college sports were increasing at a faster rate than men, the percentage of men playing sports still exceeded their share of enrollment, even as the numbers of women outstrip men on campus.'

India: Airline to stop hiring male flight attendants to "cut fuel costs"

Mastodon · 29 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Indian airline known for lower fares is reportedly instituting yet another way to keep costs low — ditch heavier male flight attendants in favor of an all-female crew that will be lighter to transport and therefore save fuel.

Times of India reported 40 percent of GoAir's 330 flight attendants being male. With women generally weighing 30 to 45 pounds less than males and it costing about 3 rupees ($0.05) per hour per extra pound to fly, the airline expects to save up to 30 million rupees (around $500 million) each year in fuel through the new hiring practice.
...
In addition to hoping for savings by reducing the weight of the flight crew, other cost-saving measures De Roni noted were reducing the size of inflight magazines, filling water tanks less and using only one engine during taxiing.'

Women accused of drugging men, stealing their valuables

Mastodon · 30 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Fort Lauderdale, Florida (CNN) -- South Florida authorities are asking for the public's help to find a group of "foxy thieves" they say are drugging men they pick up at high-end bars and stealing tens of thousands of dollars in cash, jewelry, guns and other valuables.

The Broward County Sheriff's Office released photos of the four suspects, all in their 20s, and have attained arrest warrants for them.

Investigators suspect there may be more women involved in the ring.

"They're attractive women that go into a bar and they have a scam and they work it again and again," said Dani Moschella, a spokeswoman for the sheriff's office.'

Healthy Newborn Dies Post Circumcision Hemorrhage

Minuteman · 30 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. This story was originally circulated as a public sharing on CraigsList, but flagged for removal by readers. Excerpt:

'• Jayvas was born naturally on November 15th 2008, a very healthy baby boy. He was full term.

• On 11-28-2008 he was circumcised by Dr. Beth Martin of Coeur d'Alene Pediatrics. While in the office he bled excessively. It took about fifteen minutes of constant pressure to the sight to get Jayvas to stop bleeding. He was sent home from the doctor's office with instruction to have his blood checked the following week as it was a Friday. Dr. Beth Martin thought he may have a bleeding disorder because of the excessive bleeding, but did not think it needed to be checked until the following week.

• When home and beginning to change his diaper, about an hour and half after leaving doctor's office, he was again bleeding.

• Jayvas was taken to Kootenai emergency room, where he saw Dr. Henry Amon Jr. When Jayvas arrived his diaper was full of blood. Dr. Amon examined Jayvas and said that it is normal for babies to bleed after they have been circumcised. He said there was nothing he could do - that Jayvas was not 'bleeding enough.'
...

• Jayvas arrived at Sacred Heart Children's Hospital on December 31st 2008. The doctors there said that Jayvas was very sick because of the loss of oxygen during the cardiac arrest. Jayvas was given a blood transfusion at sacred heart. Jayvas never replenished the blood he had lost from circumcision. He had a few tests done and it was confirmed that Jayvas was completely brain dead from the loss of oxygen during the cardiac arrest. Jayvas continued to go into cardiac arrest at Sacred Heart. The doctors said they would no longer perform CPR because of the damage that had been done from the initial cardiac arrest. Jayvas' body quit for the last time on January 1st 2009.
...
Source: Public sharing on 5.23.13 on CraigsList at: http://spokane.craigslist.org/vnn/3825460019.html

This little one's story was flagged by readers and removed from CraigsList on 6.20.13 It is shared here so that his suffering and loss are not in vain. Please, research thoroughly before your son's arrival.

Related reading and resources at Death From Circumcision.'

Children and Fathers - Modern Societies' POWs

Matt · 30 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Children and Fathers Affected by custody disputes, can in many Aspects be Regarded As Modern Societies POW s *).

The children are being kept hostages by Their mothers and the mothers are supported by the Social Services (Childrens Welfare Offices) and the Family Courts who have aided and legalized the kidnapping of the children, while the father's hand are tied with very limited legal options.

*) POW = Prisoner Of War

All of the Governments in the so called "developed countries" are keeping POWs, and These countries are praised for Following the Human Rights. These countries are waging a civil war against Their own population. This is something to think about in time for the next election. Do not forget That it's your politicians who are to blame for this.

As poor and underdeveloped as Brazil might seem, They are the only country in the world, whichhave criminalized Parental Alienation: First http://www.loc.gov/lawweb/servlet/lloc_news?disp3_l205402210_text
I salute Brazil for showing That They really care about The Best Interest of the Children - something other countries only talk about.'

Zimmerman jury made up entirely of women -- no one notices

Matt · 30 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Setting aside the question of the substance of the trial and indeed the article's main topic to point this out: The article doesn't even make a point of the jury composition. The jury is not only nearly all-white but entirely female. Really, would the media be silent on this kind of thing if the jury were made up of nearly all white males? No, they'd be screaming to high heaven. And as for gender, seriously-- again, let's say the deceased and the defendant were both female, too. The noise would be deafening. Instead, it's not even a whisper. Reminds me of this month: Men's Health Month. Tell me, where you work, did you even see a sign posted about it? Anyway, excerpt:

'But that divide epitomizes the trial itself, Mr. Deggans argues: “As each side on this murder trial tries to prove the other person had tendencies toward prejudice and violence that may have sparked the fight, how will jurors [five white women and one Hispanic woman] judge the difference between edgy culture and outright dysfunction?”
...
The big question hanging over the trial is whether it was an unarmed Martin who claimed his self-defense rights against an armed adult stranger following him in the dark, and whether Zimmerman waived his self-defense rights when he made the decision to pursue Trayvon after noting to a 911 dispatcher that “these [guys] always get away.”'

FBI files expose M Jackson's serial boy molestation-- and general indifference to it

Matt · 30 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Basically, as in other well-known cases of boy molestation, sexual abuse, and rape, the so-called "adults" involved, along with "the authorities", knew about it and... did nothing. Of course if these had been girls, it would have been stopped immediately. It's still, it seems, open season on boys. Excerpt:

'Michael Jackson paid $35 million in hush money to at least two dozen young boys he sexually abused over 15 years, it has been alleged.

Sunday People has published explosive ‘secret FBI files’ suggesting the King of Pop groomed and molested children from at least 1989, despite his insistence he was just spending time with them.

The damning files claim the deceased popstar was a 'pedophile' who watched porn while assaulting a boy, molested a famous child star, fondled a child’s genitals in his private cinema and groped another child whose mother wasn’t ‘bothered’ by it.

...

Australian-born Robson, a dancer and choreographer, recently launched a major lawsuit against the Jackson estate, saying he was regularly molested at Neverland in the 1990s.

Sunday People claims it has seen files confirming Robson’s claims.'

UK: There is a problem with boys and books - and all-female prize panels aren't helping

Mastodon · 30 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is a problem with boys and books — they don't seem to want to read them as much as girls do. As a result, boys' average reading abilities are lagging behind that of girls by the equivalent of one year's schooling. I believe this difference in appeal is partly due to a bias towards female tastes in children's literature and in picture books in particular. Last year's All Party Parliamentary Boys Reading Commission Report notes that the gap between boys' and girls' reading ability is already evident at age 5, which suggests that the problem starts at picture book age.

Although there are plenty of men such as myself writing and illustrating picture books, the gatekeepers in the world of picture books are overwhelmingly female. It's predominately women publishers that select picture books for publication, women teachers that choose which books to read in nurseries and infant classrooms and women customers that purchase picture books for reading at home. Women aren't keeping men out of these gatekeeper roles, the imbalance is there because relatively few men are interested in occupying them, but as a consequence picture books tend to reflect female tastes more than male ones.'

Expelled Student Sues Vassar Claiming Another Student Made A False Rape Claim Against Him

Mastodon · 30 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Vassar College student, who was allegedly expelled after a fellow member of the rowing team accused him of rape, is now suing the school and claiming the accusation was false, Erin Calabrese and Bruce Golding of the New York Post reported.

Xiaolu “Peter” Yu claims he lost his virginity engaging in “clearly consensual sexual activity” with another student, Mary Claire Walker, in 2012. A year after the one-night stand, Walker accused him of rape.
...
The claim states that Walker put a condom on Yu and they had sex until his roommate showed up. It states that after that she “began to lament about her ex-boyfriend and stated that she was not ready to jump into ‘anything new.’”
...
Yu claims all students at the once female-only college in Poughkeepsie, N.Y., are “invariably found guilty” if they are accused of rape.'

Canada: Petition to implement shared parenting

Matt · 30 June 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. You need not live in Canada to sign. Excerpt:

'Women regardless of evidence are still treated as better parents due to gender bias, Father's are capable, dedicated and loving parents which studies have proven. Children deserve to be part of a collaborative shared parenting arrangement, not the rope in a tug of war in a system that preaches of their interest yet pits the parents against one another rather than enhances the roles of the two most important people in their lives.'

State Farm's "State of Unrest" ad appeals to cheating husband stereotype

Matt · 1 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Have to admit, this ad has comedic value. But not quite that much. And any chuckle you might get from it comes from an appeal to the skulking cheater husband stereotype. Would State Farm ever have even considered this script with the sexes reversed?

Contact form for State Farm is here. Twitter handle is @StateFarm if you prefer that or want to double-down on your complaint.

Circumcision From the Perspective of Protecting Children

Matt · 1 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I was so amazed by this text, so I went on to read every piece of information I could find about the part that was cut off from my penis. The more I read and understood the anatomy and functions of the foreskin, the more it became impossible to escape the painful and enraging realization that my body was violated, that my penis was damaged and diminished in its capacity to sense pleasure, and that I will never be able to experience and enjoy sex as nature intended it.

The amputation of the foreskin removes a highly erogenous tissue the size of an index card on a male adult. A man who is missing that covering tissue of the penile shaft, feels less pleasure, because he does not have the thousands of nerve endings that went with the tissue that was amputated. The foreskin serves as a protective sleeve that slides up and down the penile shaft, reduces friction and stimulates the specialized nerve endings and the head of the penis and so it makes for more comfortable and pleasurable sex for both partners.

I found reports showing that in Israel alone hundreds of baby boys are rushed every year to emergency rooms and operating rooms to treat complications following the amputation of the foreskin.'

Ed.: Same author as shown in video here.

Doris Kearns Gettysburg speech makes no mention of the men who died in battle

Mastodon · 1 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Sunday, a stunned audience sat in silence as Doris Kearns Goodwin turned the keynote address at the opening ceremony for the 150th anniverary of the Battle of Gettysburg into a political lecture focusing on women's and gay rights.

Missing from much of her keynote: Gettysburg.

Self-centered, insular, and oblivious to the occasion, the historian who was infamously caught plagiarizing merely recycled much of what she has said before about herself in previous speeches. And her rambling, self-promoting, and borderline inappropriate lecture touched upon nearly everything except for the heroic sacrifices made on that battlefield.'

...

After briefly--and in an obligatory manner--actually mentioning Gettysburg and Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, Kearns Goodwin could not stop herself from rehashing her civil rights stories.

...

Her speech just got worse from there. She continued to speak about the 1960s instead of the 1860s. And it was all stuff she has said before.

...

Clearly mistaking the Gettysburg 150 audience for the Aspen Ideas Festival crowd, Kearns Goodwin then lectured the audience on the "women's liberation movement" and spoke at length about Eleanor Roosevelt. She emphasized that World War II led to a "new birth of freedom" for women and reminded attendees, "Still, we await our first female president."

...

The closest she came to discussing the Battle of Gettysburg at length was when she mentioned "Stonewall." But instead of talking about how different Gettysburg could have been had the great Southern General Stonewall Jackson lived to aid Robert E. Lee, Kearns Goodwin instead spoke about the Stonewall gay riots that united the gay community, which she used to discuss how women's rights and civil rights and gay rights were all "human rights" while quoting Robert F. Kennedy's "ripples of hope" speech. She even compared "Stonewall" to "Selma," linking the gay rights movement the black civil rights movement.'

'Raising Boys to Become Men Who Aren't Dicks'

Mastodon · 2 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

The thing that worries me most about raising a boy — the thing I seriously give the most thought to — is how to make sure he doesn't end up being a dick.

That's not entirely fair to my four-year-old son, who is exuberant and sweet-natured and as selfish as all kids his age tend to be: "Dick" isn't the word that immediately comes to mind in my day-to-day dealings with him. (And his grandparents will, ahem, most assuredly object to my phrasing here.) But someday this boy is going to become an adolescent, and then he's going to be a man, and the temptation toward dickishness is going to be a powerful thing at some point.

...

In turn, that means looking at the odds and refusing to flinch from the idea that there's a good chance that your sweet boy might one day — against everything you hope for and teach him — become the kind of entitled man who feels to treat the woman in his life without respect, without love, without tenderness. Because the men who are beating their partners, assaulting them, murdering them? They were all somebody's son, once.

UK: Harriet Harman blasts "woeful" coverage of women's sports and “ridiculous” men-only clubs

Mastodon · 2 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women's sport is being held back by old-fashioned television coverage and “ridiculous” men-only sporting clubs, warned Harriet Harman.

She also slammed the inequality in funding for male and female sports and demanded equal prize money for men and women in sporting competitions.

The rallying cry from the Shadow Culture, Media and Sport Secretary came as British tennis hopeful Laura Robson tries to smash her way into the quarter-finals at Wimbledon today.

Ms Harman insisted that “woeful” broadcasting of female sports is holding back girls from doing sports at school and damaging the UK’s chances of producing the next generation of Olympic heroines, such as gold medallist Jessica Ennis.
...
Ms Harman also said it is time to end the antiquated loophole that allows men-only sports clubs, like Muirfield golf course.

She fumed: “We have clubs where women are only allowed in the company of a man. It is ridiculous and has absolutely no place in the 21st century.”'

UK: Women Must Be at the Heart of Our Efforts to Create Employment and Grow Our Economy

Mastodon · 2 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, Francis Maude and I hosted a networking event in Whitehall to encourage more senior women to take up roles on public boards, following a report published by the Cabinet Office. The report revealed that 37% of new public appointments made by Whitehall departments in 2012 to 2013 were women. This is the first year that the government has published its own statistics on the gender diversity of public appointments, and these figures are set against an aspiration that 50% of new public appointments be female by 2015.
...
One area where I am especially keen to see progress is in the sports sector. Both Sport England and many sporting Governing Bodies will be recruiting new board members in the next 18 months and our expectation is that by 2017, at least a quarter of board members on National Governing Bodies will be female.'

UK: Women 'fared better than men' in jobs since recession

Man of Kneel

Mastodon · 2 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How did society reach the point where, a lawsuit filed this week alleged, a man working at the desk of Planet Fitness on Bay Shore, Long Island was too afraid of repercussions to enter the ladies' room to administer CPR to a dying woman? "He said he didn't know what to do and that he wasn't allowed to go into the ladies' bathroom," a witness said in an affidavit.

...

In Illinois, 28-year-old Fitzroy Barnaby was convicted of "unlawful restraint of a minor," a sex crime, and placed on a sex-offender registry after he grabbed the arm of an 14-year-old girl to lecture her on not dashing into the street in front of a moving car, as she had just done. On a blog called Parent Dish, a reader said he stopped coaching girls soccer after an 8-year-old player told him, "I don't have to listen to you. I can get you in trouble just by telling people you touched me." In England, a man passing by 2-year-old Abigail Rae, who later drowned, declined to help guide her to safety because he feared being labeled a pervert.

...

... Tired of being labeled defective women, wary of the financial traps of marriage and fatherhood, hammered by the disappearance of construction and manufacturing jobs, disgusted by the presumption that their sexuality is a scary disease, men are shrugging and turning away.

The rules of the game have tilted against men in every field this side of coal mining (black lung being one of the few male privileges the ladies are happy to cede). Family courts hold men financially liable even for children conceived by women who falsely claimed to be using birth control, while at colleges the presumption of innocence has been withdrawn from men accused of sexual misbehavior.

"Uncle Tims" — male feminist lapdogs eager to curry favor with their female and feminized masters — are everywhere, Smith notes. Yet one man quoted in the book reports dropping out of college after being accused of "maladjustment" and subjected to horrified looks when he said he might buy a gun someday. A video-gaming blogger notes of fellow enthusiasts, "It's bizarre how some of them are in their 20s, have graduated from good schools, and have simply zero interest in women."'

Australia: MP lashes 'anti-male' Child Support Agency in valedictory speech

Mastodon · 2 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Google the text of the first para. below and click the first hit link in order to bypass the login challenge. Excerpt:

'ALBY Schultz has used his valedictory speech to urge the incoming government to hold a parliamentary inquiry into what he believes is an "endemic" anti-male culture at the Child Support Agency.

Mr Schultz, the member for the NSW seat of Hume to the ACT's north, was one of three Liberal MPs in the lower house to give their outgoing speeches yesterday along with South Australian MP Patrick Secker and NSW MP Joanna Gash.

...

In a damning swipe at the Child Support Agency, Mr Schultz accused it of denying men natural justice and of covering up male suicide rates. He said the culture of "gender bias" at the agency was endemic and should be exposed under the protection of a parliamentary inquiry.'

Where are the Boys?

Mastodon · 2 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week when I attended the graduation ceremonies for a local high school, ironically designated as a "National School of Excellence," I noted a distressing fact: the ceremony was dominated by females. In a significant omission, the male student body president, a senior, was not identified in the program, nor did he have a role in the ceremony. Instead, six senior girls were prominently listed in the program, marched in with the school dignitaries and participated in the ceremony.

The two faculty class sponsors were both female and all four student class officers were female. All the class officers had roles in the graduation ceremony with several handling more than one responsibility. The class president both welcomed everyone and had remarks. The class vice-president introduced the musical selections. The class secretary introduced the speakers and the treasurer introduced the platform guests. A girl - whose name appeared 5 times in the official program -- gave the major student address as the "representative class speaker" an opportunity traditionally granted to the student body president, but apparently not if a guy has that responsibility. Significantly, the principal was the only male participant in the ceremony.'

Jailed for nonpayment of child support for a child not his

Mastodon · 2 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The family courts and laws are set up in such a way that makes it very easy for a mother to collect child support, and very difficult for a man to avoid it. If a couple was married, the default law is that the man will be required to pay child support for any child born while they were married. In order for a man who isn't the father to escape this outcome, he must obtain a paternity test and take a series of legal steps in court. Most states only allow a short window of time for a man to do this. If a man is not aware of the child, which he may not be if his wife or former wife doesn't notify him of the child right away, he loses all chance to fight the child support, and will be on the hook for hundreds of thousands of dollars for the next 18 years until the child becomes an adult.

Courts routinely order these judgments even if the man is unaware what is going on. A March 2003 Urban Institute study commissioned by the California Department of Child Support Services (DCSS) found that "most noncustodial parents appear to be served by 'substitute' service, rather than personal service, which suggests that noncustodial parents may not know that they have been served."'

Remembering the firefighters killed in the Arizona blaze

Mastodon · 2 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Presentation here. Caption:

'Nineteen firefighters died while fighting the Yarnell Hill fire, located northwest of Phoenix, Arizona, on Sunday, June 30. The fire started on Friday, June 28, and spread to more than 6,000 acres in two days. Learn more about the fallen firefighters.'

SAVE: Honor Independence Day by Demanding the Restoration of Freedom of Speech

Matt · 2 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Last week we told you about Senator McCain challenging the recent DOJ Sexual Harassment settlement with the University of Montana. Thank you for urging your senators to join with Sen. McCain to restore free speech on campus. We appreciate every single call.

Today, let's take it one more step. Sen. McCain has asked the feds: "To what extent does the broad nature of the new and judicially untested 'unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature" standard, increase the risk of a wrongful conviction?'

DEMAND that the Dept. of Education's Asst. Secretary Seth Galanter answer Sen. McCain's question!

EMAIL him NOW: seth.galanter-at-ed.gov

Happy 4th of July!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

California teacher accused of having student's baby

Mastodon · 3 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'REDLANDS, CALIF. – A Southern California high school teacher was arrested on unlawful sex charges two weeks after she gave birth to a baby that was allegedly fathered by a student, Redlands police said Tuesday.

Laura Elizabeth Whitehurst, 28, was arrested Monday night for allegedly having unlawful sex with a 16-year-old, Redlands police spokesman Carl Baker. She was the boy's adviser.

Officials at Citrus Valley High School in Redlands contacted police on Monday, acting on a tip from the boy's mother.

The sexual relationship began last summer and continued for nearly a year, police said. The boy is now 17.'

Rx overdose deaths: Another "Now It's a Problem Because it Affects Women" story

charlie · 3 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Drug overdose deaths are increasing at a faster rate for women than men. But men continue to die in larger numbers. Apparently, now is the time to take action because it's now a "women's issue." Excerpt:

'Prescription painkiller addiction has long been seen as mainly a man's problem, but a new analysis of federal data released Tuesday shows that in recent years the death rate has risen far faster among women.

Fatal overdoses from prescription pain pills increased fivefold among women from 1999 to 2010, the most recent year for which the federal government has final data. The rate among men tripled over the same period, according to the analysis, which was conducted by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

More women die from drug overdoses than from cervical cancer or car accidents. Four times as many died over the last 10 years from drug overdoses than from homicides. And while the absolute number of overdose deaths is still higher for men, women are catching up.'

Sweden: Woman arrested for illegal circumcision of two young boys

Mastodon · 3 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Swedish police have arrested a 36-year-old woman in connection with the illegal circumcision of two young boys in the town of Eksjo, authorities said.

Police spokesman Goran Gunnarsson told the Swedish news agency TT that police received a call from someone who heard the boys screaming.
...
Charges against her include suspicion of aggravated assault since it is illegal to perform a circumcision in Sweden without supervision by a medical professional.'

New Zealand: Labour proposes 'women only' rule

Mastodon · 4 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Labour is poised to introduce new party rules to ensure half of its elected MPs are women by 2017 and would allow individual electorates to run "women only" candidate selections.

The proposed rule changes, to be decided at the party's annual conference in November, would force the party's list selection committee to ensure caucus would be 45 per cent woman in 2014 and 50 per cent by 2017.

In putting the list together the moderating committee would also have to take into account the electorate MPs that were likely to be elected, to ensure that balance.

A local electorate committee would be able to request that the NZ Council decide "only women may nominate for the position of Labour candidate for their electorate".'

US plans to give SA an extra $10m for male circumcision

Mastodon · 4 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE US government has allocated an extra $10m for male circumcision in South Africa, highlighting the change it has made to funding programmes that are expected to have a long-term effect on the progression of the HIV/AIDS epidemic.

The additional money comes as the US is cutting back support to South Africa's HIV/AIDS programmes, moving money away from nongovernmental organisations that have provided services such as treatment, and shifting the funds to technical support.

The baseline funding from the US President's Emergency Programme for Aids Relief (Pepfar) for South Africa for fiscal year 2013 was $520m, of which $36m was for male circumcision. The new money brings total US support for male circumcision in South Africa to $46m this year.'

Podcast: The Ethics of Infant Male Circumcision

Mastodon · 4 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In this talk (audio- MP3) , Brian D. Earp argues that the non-therapeutic circumcision of infant males is unethical, whether it is performed for reasons of obtaining possible future health benefits, for reasons of cultural transmission, or for reasons of perceived religious obligation. He begins with the premise that it should be considered morally impermissible to sever healthy, functional genital tissue from another person's body without first asking for, and then actually receiving, that person's informed consent—otherwise, this action would qualify as a criminal assault. He then raises a number of possible exceptions to this rule, to see whether they could reasonably serve to justify the practice of infant male circumcision in certain cases.

First, what if it could be established that the risk of contracting certain diseases might be diminished by removing a person's foreskin in infancy, as is often suggested in the United States? Second, what if circumcision could be shown to reduce the spread of AIDS in African populations with high transmission rates of HIV? Third, what if the infant's parents believed that they had a cultural or a religious obligation to remove the foreskin from his penis before he was old enough to give his consent?'

France studies gender equality overhaul

Mastodon · 4 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Proposed measures include docking maternity leave from couples if fathers fail to take proper leave too, enabling courts to accelerate restraining orders, trials and compulsory "awareness-raising courses" for violent male partners. The law also envisages providing females considered under threat of violence with free emergency mobile phones to alert police.

Divorced men who fail to pay alimony could see the owed funds taken directly from their social benefits.

Companies that fail to respect gender equality could be excluded from public contract tenders, while sports federations will also face penalties for shunning equality. Fines on political parties failing to respect gender parity in legislative elections will be doubled. Currently only 26 per cent of French MPs are women.

The law also plans to create a special broadcast sexism watchdog, whose aim is to erase "degrading stereotypes" and ensure women are better represented across the board.
...
The law will also extend the definition of what constitutes "psychological violence" within a couple – a crime punishable by a three-year prison term - to include "behaviour and words" as well as "acts".'

Canada: Innocent by reason of gender

Matt · 4 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this year, the Supreme Court of Canada stayed proceedings against Nicole Doucet, who sought to hire at least one hit-man to kill her then-husband, Mike Ryan. Eight of the nine Justices accepted the unproven contention that Doucet “was the victim of a violent, abusive and controlling husband,” and that “she believed that he would cause her and their daughter serious bodily harm or death and that she had no safe avenue of escape other than having him killed.”

In response, Dalhousie University law professor Archibald Kaiser is calling for a public inquiry to rectify what he is calling a “stain on the justice system.”

A stay of proceedings, he writes in the journal Criminal Reports, has no precedent “without an abuse of process or charter violation” — and neither element is present here. Professor Kaiser adds: “In [the case of Doucet-Ryan], the courts lost their vision of the nature of Canadian society and the function of the criminal law.”'

UK: Taxi driver uses phone app to expose false rape claim

Minuteman · 5 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A British taxi driver has used a voice recording app on his phone to prove a female passenger lied about him raping her at knife-point in his cab.

Astria Berwick was jailed for 16 months in Nottingham Crown Court yesterday after admitting to perverting the course of justice by wrongly accusing Mohammed Asif of rape on February 20, the Telegraph reports.

The court heard the CCTV in Mr Asif's car was broken on the day of the alleged attack so he switched on the app as a makeshift replacement.

...

"I keep thinking, 'I just dropped her off, she was just a normal passenger, why has she done that?'," he said.'

UK: Aimee Nicholls versus the star chamber

Matt · 5 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A message to British Politicians, and the public regarding family law.

Hi there, my name is Aimee Nicholls, I'm 16 years old, and 11 years ago, my parents divorced. It doesn't matter why right now, that's history. But it is important that you know that it wasn't down to my dad. It wasn't something that he wanted, and he couldn't do anything about it. It's certainly not something that I wanted, but I also had no say. My dad is definitely the more natural parent out of my mum and dad, and I've always been closer to him. I do love my mom and dad both the same. But, if I could only live with one of them, it would be my dad, and it's been that way for 11 years. There was no reason for that not to happen. He hadn't harmed me in any way, and he didn't pose any risk, or threaten me. My dad shared my care before my parents split.

He and I were just never given that option. It wasn't even considered, ever. Despite what people want you to think, I've learned that family law is just set up that way. It works exactly how it was designed to work, to keep dads and their kids apart. It makes more money for everyone working in family law, and my situation is only partly resolved after 11 years of fighting. I now live with my dad, but it's not easy. The system doesn't like giving up, unless you're one of the few families it allows to be different to "prove" that it's fair. It clearly isn't fair.
...

The system is completely broken. Almost everyone working in the system has some vested interest in what's going on, and they're making it worse. If it's not money and work, its politics. I found that out when I uploaded videos to YouTube of me speaking about my case, and feminists attacked me at the age of 14, saying I was a whore and an actor, and a liar. These people are just pure evil, and I cant see a reason, or accept why this is all going on. These are the people that the government are listening to, not us [the real] victims. The whole secrecy thing, it just makes it a 100 times worse. I personally think that would be one of the main things that would resolve this. Family law, and the courts, and social services and CAFCASS all just have too much money, and they use it to put pressure on the government to continue doing what they do. Nobody else's voice gets heard. Politicians just need to stop this, and not in a few months, or two years, or a few weeks even. They need to do it now.'

Does Liberty and Justice for All Include Our Boys?

Mastodon · 5 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As our nation rounds the corner on another birthday and continues its long history of trying to figure out exactly what it means to be a nation of liberty and justice for all, it's a good time to look at an increasingly "lost" group in our culture: our sons.

First, some fast facts about our boys. According to New York Times bestselling author Michael Gurian:

- For every 100 girls suspended from elementary and secondary school, 250 boys are suspended.
- For every 100 girls diagnosed with a learning disorder, 276 boys are so diagnosed.
- For every 100 girls expelled from school, 355 boys are expelled.

...
In the 1960s and '70s, when we sensed that our girls were not keeping up with our boys in education, we rolled up our collective sleeves and did something about it, to the tune of Title IX and $100 million from the U.S. government. Backed by the women's movement, not only did we get our girls caught up, but by the 1980s, they sailed past our boys and have now left them in the dust. To this day, even though our girls are light years ahead of our boys, the storyline is still about how our girls are behind, facts to the contrary.

Richard Whitmire notes that boys are struggling in most Western countries. But here's his telling observation: What makes the United States unique is its relative indifference to the issue. Here, the U.S. Department of Education has yet to launch a single probe into the problem. Not one dollar from the U.S. government has been spent on getting our boys caught up. No national movement focuses on our boys (or our men).
...
Where will these men work? What women will want to marry them? Where will these men find significance and meaning in life? What will society do with an increasing number of undereducated men, or men who don't fit the profile for the emerging jobs of the 21st century?

If indeed we are a nation of liberty and justice for all, then it's time for us as a nation to invest in our boys on a national scale. To get them caught up in school. To call out the noble in them. To give them a vision of how they, along with their sisters, can change the world.'

Commit any felonies lately?

Matt · 5 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Tangentially related to men's rights, admittedly, in that men are far more likely to be arrested and prosecuted on flimsy pretexts than women, much less on valid ones. Further to it, all I can say is fathers have been getting treated as criminals upon mere accusation and presumed guilty in courts as well as in public opinion now for decades. Seems the context of being presumed guilty and breadth of frivolous prosecution is now expanding. Once we start down the "slippery slope", it's hard to stop. Excerpt:

'The agents' excessive display of force is outrageously disproportionate to the offense they mistakenly thought they witnessed: an underage purchase of alcohol. But in a sense, Daly got off easy. A couple of weeks after her ordeal, a 61-year-old man in Tennessee was killed when the police executed a drug raid on the wrong house. A few weeks later, in another wrong-house raid, police officers killed a dog belonging to an Army veteran. These are not isolated incidents; for more information, visit the interactive map at www.cato.org/raidmap.

They are, however, part and parcel of two broader phenomena. One is the militarization of domestic law enforcement. In recent years, police departments have widely adopted military tactics, military equipment (armored personnel carriers, flash-bang grenades) — and, sometimes, the mindset of military conquerors rather than domestic peacekeepers.

The other phenomenon is the increasing degree to which civilians are subject to criminal prosecution for noncriminal acts, including exercising the constitutionally protected right to free speech.

Last week, A.J. Marin was arrested in Harrisburg, Pa., for writing in chalk on the sidewalk. Marin was participating in a health care demonstration outside Gov. Tom Corbett's residence when he wrote, "Governor Corbett has health insurance, we should too." Authorities charged Marin with writing "a derogatory remark about the governor on the sidewalk." The horror.
...
As The Wall Street Journal has reported, lawmakers in Washington have greatly eroded the notion of mens rea — the principle that you need criminal intent in order to commit a crime. Thanks to a proliferating number of obscure offenses, Americans now resemble the condemned souls in Jonathan Edwards' "Sinners in the Hands of an Angry God" — spared from perdition only by the temporary forbearance of those who sit in judgment.

"What once might have been considered simply a mistake," The Journal explains, is now "punishable by jail time." And as 20-year-old Elizabeth Daly has now learned, you can go to jail even when the person making the mistake wasn't you.'

Women in combat raises draft question

Mastodon · 5 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A national poll released June 19 by Florida-based CapitalSoup.com to mark the anniversary found that 59 percent of Americans are in favor of including women in a future draft. The poll, conducted by Mason-Dixon Polling and Research, found that support is strongest among Democrats, women and people ages 18 to 34.

It's not the first time Americans have voiced support for the change.

Back in 1992, about the time President Bill Clinton broached the subject, a survey of 1,500 adults found that 52 percent were in favor of women being drafted.

...

In 1980, with Soviet forces descending on Afghanistan, President Jimmy Carter reactivated registration for men in the event that a military draft would be needed. Challenged legally by several men, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the men-only law in 1981 on the basis that the military didn't allow women on the front lines.

...

It would require an act of Congress to begin including women.

...

He cited word that the House Armed Services Committee intended to include an amendment to its 2014 defense budget prohibiting Selective Service from registering or drafting women.

"It is difficult to see women being included absent a necessary military reason," Flahavan wrote in an email.'

A rare male-oriented unemployment charitable event

Mastodon · 5 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men's Wearhouse announced today the launch of its sixth annual National Suit Drive with a goal to collect 150,000 gently used professional clothing items through July 31, to give unemployed men a chance to look their best as they re-enter the workforce. Each year, National Suit Drive, the nation's largest collection of business attire for men, encourages Americans to donate their gently used business wear to help give a fresh start to millions of disadvantaged workers still facing unemployment.

In its first five years, the Men's Wearhouse National Suit Drive collected more than half a million pieces of business attire, including 120,000 suits, which helped thousands of men confidently re-enter the workforce.'

Canada: Last 30 years bring gains for young working women; for men, not so much

Mastodon · 5 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OTTAWA - The last three decades have been generally good for younger Canadian women in the work force — or at least much better than their male counterparts — a new analysis suggests.

A Statistics Canada comparison of employment trends from 1981 to 2012 shows working women in the 25-34 age group have seen an across the board improvement in employment prospects over the three decades.

Young Canadian women have lower unemployment rates today than they did, more of them are employed full-time, and they are paid better in real inflation-adjusted dollars.'

No US men in the third round at Wimbledon since 1912: Title IX connection?

Mastodon · 5 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For the first time since 1912, the USA will not have a male representative in the third round of the men's singles at Wimbledon.

World No 1, Serbian Novak Djokovic made short work of dispatching the last American standing, Bobby Reynolds, under the Centre Court roof last night.

Any hopes of an American win now lie firmly in the women's draw, but with Serena Williams' performance this week, things are looking like she could compensate all on her own at the moment.'

Relatedly: Group blames Title IX for decline of college tennis

Flags Lowered To Honor The Brave 'Men and Women' Who Lost Their Lives In AZ Fire

Mastodon · 5 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ANNAPOLIS, Md. (WJZ)— Hundreds of firefighters are battling a deadly wildfire that is still burning out of control in Arizona. It killed 19 members of an elite fire crew as they battled the blaze Sunday.

Twenty-two others were injured.

In Maryland, Anne Arundel County Executive Laura Neuman directed all flags lowered to half mast to honor them.

“I want to honor the brave men and women who lost their lives or were injured battling the wildfire in Arizona,” said County Executive Neuman. “Our thoughts and prayers are with the families of the fallen heroes and the Arizona community as they deal with this tragic loss.”'

The 19 dead AZ firefighters identified as "men and women"

Mastodon · 5 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 19 firefighters killed in an Arizona wildfire over the weekend were all part of an elite unit of 20 frontline firefighters. All but one of the firefighters from the Granite Mountain Hotshots unit were killed in a blaze that spread quickly through the town of Yarnell.
...
These men truly are an elite group of firefighters as they trek through the woods to reach the fires unobtainable by road. They carrying 40 to 50 lbs of firefighting gear with them. The firefighters in this group sleep out on the front lines as they develop the lines and try to protect homes from the fire.

The 19 firefighters killed from in the Granite Mountain Hotshots were all young, brave and very dedicated men and women.'

Canada: False abuse claims are the new court weapon, retiring judge says

Matt · 6 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Allegations of child sexual abuse are being increasingly invented by mothers to stop fathers from seeing their children, says a retiring Family Court judge.

Justice David Collier, retiring from Parramatta Family Court at the end of the month after 14 years on the bench, sees unprecedented hostility infiltrating the Family Court, and a willingness by parents to use their children to damage one another.

”If a husband and wife really get down to it in this day and age, dirt flies,” Justice Collier said.

The worst are those mothers who direct false allegations of abuse against former partners.'

NPO: Success in Reforming Connecticut Alimony

Matt · 6 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'National Parents Organization of Connecticut is proud to announce that on June 25th Connecticut Governor Dannel Patrick Malloy signed into law HB6688 revising statutes relating to the award of alimony. It is effective October 1, 2013.

Working with Connecticut Alimony Reform, our new affiliate has begun to improve alimony statutes in Connecticut. HB6688 highlights the fact that alimony statutes are gender neutral in their application; makes the switch to gender inclusive language; and adds education and earning capacity to the list of factors for consideration. The law changes husband and wife to spouse. A sensible change in a same gender marriage state. It also provides for a study of the fairness and adequacy of state statutes relating to the award of alimony to be conducted by the Legislative Program Review and Investigations Committee.'

UK: Woman jailed for false rape claim

Mastodon · 6 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A WOMAN who undermined the criminal justice system by making a series of false rape allegations against former boyfriends has been jailed.

Leanne Black, 32, of Leadon Court, Thornhill, Cwmbran, repeatedly fabricated rape stories over an eight-year period, Newport Crown Court heard.

In one case, Black claimed she had been drugged and raped and in another kidnapped before being molested, the court heard yesterday.

Her partners would have been been jailed for up to five years if they had been found guilty of rape, the court was told.'

South Africa: Hospitals struggle with botched circumcisions, deaths of victims

Mastodon · 6 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'LIBODE - The Eastern Cape is facing a crisis as the number of botched circumcision patients continues to escalate in the province.

Hospitals in the OR Tambo region report that they don't have enough beds to deal with the increasing demand for medical treatment once a traditional circumcision is botched.

St Barnabas Hospital is one of the hospitals battling with the situation. The facility has run out of space, forcing officials to reopen an old and dilapidated psychiatric ward which had been closed for renovations.

"Twenty-five patients are being accommodated here and more are being admitted every day," said Doctor Lonwabo Sibembe of St. Barnabas Hospital to eNCA.

Nurses at the hospital say they are stretched as they try to care for the initiates and attend to other patients as well.

In the past two months, at least 30 boys have died as a result of botched circumcisions.'

NZ: Laws: Labour's sexist suicide mission

Mastodon · 6 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OPINION: One of the great problems with being a white, middle-aged male in New Zealand is that you are never cool, never in vogue and never given a fair go. There is a now cultural acceptance that your ethnicity, generation and gender is responsible for all bad things.

And that the best way to redress your appalling crimes against humanity is to ensure that every other group gets employment, educational and social advantages that will never apply to you. So it is that we are a society of quotas - official and unofficial.

And that being Maori, being young, being a woman, being gay or being disabled actually has its privileges. This is to make up for the accepted fact that white heterosexual older men run the globe.

Such post-modern discrimination is justified on the basis that society is evening the odds. Which fails to recognise that most mainstream males are struggling to make a living, just like everybody else. In any contest between them and others, they are being programmed to lose.
...
If Labour wants to know why it is stuck in a polling wasteland, and John Key seems destined to repeat Helen Clark's three-term administration, this policy proposal explains all. Five years in Opposition has taught them absolutely nothing.

Such sexist suicide sends shudders through us all, even women. If Labour's logic is applied, professions they dominate - teaching, nursing, the media - will require reverse quotas. And let's ensure strict gender quotas for specialist undergraduate schools like law and medicine because women also dominate tertiary education these days.'

Euronews: Has Swedish feminism gone too far?

Mastodon · 7 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

http://www.euronews.com/ In the gender equality stakes, Sweden is rated highly. But some Swedes feel it's being taken to extremes. It has the highest proportion of working women in the world and some two-thirds of university degrees are earned by women. New mothers and fathers both get generous parental leave.

Gender role neutrality initiatives, however, some feel are being exaggerated.

There's a politician who proposed that men should be required by law to urinate in a sitting position - partly because it leaves toilets cleaner and promotes prostate health, partly as an appeal for reason.

That politician, Viggo Hansen, told us: "When my son was in kindergarten, they tried to force him to pee standing up, when we had taught him to pee sitting down. When the school let him sit down to pee, there was no problem. I had read about a school in Norway that officially banned boys' stand-up peeing. Lots of people's reaction was that was taking away boys' right to be boys."

World Trade Center Health Program: Addition of Prostate Cancer to the List of WTC-Related Health Conditions

Minuteman · 7 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Action

Notice of proposed rulemaking.

Summary

On May 2, 2013, the Administrator of the World Trade Center (WTC) Health Program received a petition (Petition 002) requesting the addition of prostate cancer to the List of WTC-Related Health Conditions (List) covered in the WTC Health Program. The Administrator has determined to publish a proposed rule adding malignant neoplasm of the prostate (prostate cancer) to the List in the WTC Health Program regulations.

Dates

Comments must be received by August 1, 2013.'

Soldier's suicide note goes viral; family demands better for veterans

Matt · 7 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. He asks in his note, basically, why doesn't the gov't seem to care much? He then answers by saying it's because the system is set up to dehumanize those in it anyway. Well, I think he was partly right. "The system" is set up to presume those going into it are men, and thus already dehumanized. And as for why there are no policy initiatives, the answer's obvious: the primary sufferers of such things as PTSD and suicide are men. If they were women, believe me, you'd see action. Excerpt:

'His note gives readers a clear understanding of what it's like to suffer from crippling depression and war-related psychosis. It also slams the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs, which he characterized as careless.

"My body has become nothing but a cage, a source of pain and constant problems. The illness I have has caused me pain that not even the strongest medicines could dull, and there is no cure," Somers wrote in his note.

"All day, every day a screaming agony in every nerve ending in my body. It is nothing short of torture. My mind is a wasteland, filled with visions of incredible horror, unceasing depression, and crippling anxiety."
...
He joined the Army for the same reasons many others do: he wanted to provide for his family. He and his wife had dreams of one day leaving Arizona, and moving to a cooler climate -- maybe Seattle.
...
"Is it any wonder then that the latest figures show 22 veterans killing themselves each day? That is more veterans than children killed at Sandy Hook, every single day," he wrote.

"Where are the huge policy initiatives? Why isn't the president standing with those families at the state of the union? Perhaps because we were not killed by a single lunatic, but rather by his own system of dehumanization, neglect, and indifference."'

Why I don't bother arguing/debating with feminists

Matt · 7 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Occasionally MANN admins receive an email from someone saying they said something on a feminist web site that got them banned immediately, or flamed and put on moderation, and gee, why did that happen? The thing they said is usually simply a questioning of a presumption or an ask for more evidence, usually not something inherently offensive. But to feminists, any questioning of their ideas, presumptions, or evidence is. I was sent a link to this video for my own "amusement" but have decided to post it. It's a collage of what it looks like to actually try to have a debate or public encounter with feminists about men's rights issues. It's NSFW since there are a lot of curse words hurled around.

Debating/reasoning/arguing with feminists is an utterly futile cause. In my experience, the only feminist who stops being a feminist is one who realizes him/herself in a moment of epiphany just what has been going on here. So IMO, it's better to spend time and energy educating others than talking to a wall with no ears (and one that hurls obscenities back at you, to boot). But if you want to argue with them because you think it's constructive in some way for the movement or there's a chance you may be able to persuade one to see reason, then by all means; you got more optimism than me!

Sweden: What the English-speaking P.C. media don't want you to read about

Matt · 7 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From Ulf Andersson in Sweden:

First of all, I want to apologize for the lousy automatic translations made by Google Translate - but there is no time to translate every article word for word.

Here are some things that have happened in Sweden lately, and the politically correct The Local (http://www.thelocal.se/) didn't write about them:

1. A 20-year-old woman from Växjö sexually abused her 5-year-old sister in front of a webcam. Sentence: Probation and punitive damages.

2. A 50-year-old woman had phone sex with a 12-year-old boy for a whole year.

3. A 34-year-old woman stabbed her husband to death after arguments about her shopping spree.

4. A 32-year-old woman killed her 3-year-old daughter with band-aids (patches) containing fentanyl - because the father wanted to have alternate residency for the daughter. The father alerted Social Services in January.

5. A well-known (notorious) Swedish Feminist, writer Unni Drougge, launched a death threat on Twitter against the Minister of Education, Liberal Party Leader Jan Björklund with "Can someone please shoot him?"

Erin Pizzey on British Feminism

Mastodon · 7 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Title: "Feminism is a Terrorist Organization - Smash Cultural Marxism"

Woman caught hiring 'hit man' to kill husband

Mastodon · 8 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MUSKEGON, MI – A former New Jersey woman thought she was hiring a hit man to kill her husband, because she said “it was easier than divorcing him.”

But the man she solicited to off her husband was actually an undercover police officer, according to a report by MLive.com.

In a video of her interaction with the “hit man” – released to MLive by the Muskegon County Prosecutor’s Office – Julia Charlene Merfeld, 21, explained why she wanted her husband dead.

“When I first decided to do this … it’s not that we weren’t getting along,” she says on the video. “But … terrible as it sounds, it was easier than divorcing him.

"You know, I didn’t have to worry about the judgment of my family, I didn’t have to worry about breaking his heart, all that stuff like this. It’s, like, how I got a clean getaway.”

Authorities said Merfeld told the fake hit man that he’d be paid $50,000 in installments from the proceeds of her husband’s $400,000 life insurance policy.'

Male Bashing in Marketing

Mastodon · 8 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I will admit that I may be a bit sensitive about this topic, but I honestly thought that as a society, we had moved past this. There was a time when it was fashionable for a brand to show bumbly, fumbly, dumbly men in their advertising and marketing. I guess it was a way to appeal to their female targets by giving them something they could relate to. I guess.
...
I've always believed that as marketers, we should be both reflective of pop culture and aspirational in our voice. I honestly don't think there are many women around who aspire to have men in their lives who are that disconnected. Quite the contrary: Showing men who are in the moment with their families I would think would be far more motivating. A turn on, really. For the men too. Men are every bit a part of the household as women are. They are cooking, cleaning, shopping and taking care of the kids. It's how our society runs now, just ask us!

So for me, and I believe the rest of the world, I would much rather show men as they really are and give them inspiration to do more. It makes the brand feel so much more connected as a result.'

Anna Benson Arrested After Allegedly Raiding Estranged Husband's Apartment

Mastodon · 8 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former Baseball Wives star Anna Benson has made her way into the headlines once again.

According to TMZ, the 37-year-old Benson was arrested on Monday morning after an altercation with her estranged husband, former MLB pitcher Kris Benson.

Kris, who filed for a divorce from the former FHM model last year, reportedly told police that Anna showed up at his home in a rage on Sunday night after the court ordered her to vacate their marital home. According to Kris, she was armed with an "expandable metal baton" and a gun.

At one point, Anna pulled the handgun on Kris and demanded that he give her money, per the TMZ report. To top it all off, she was allegedly wearing a bulletproof vest during the incident.
...
Anna has been charged with four counts—two counts of felony aggravated assault with a weapon, one count of criminal trespass and one count of possession of a firearm during the commission of a crime.'

Fifth-grade teacher investigated for sexually molesting 10-year-old boy in her class

Mastodon · 9 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A fifth-grade teacher in a tiny town in Washington State is under investigation for allegedly sexually molesting a 10-year-old male student.

Police in Othello have been investigating Scootney Springs Elementary School teacher Lisa Davis, reports KHQ. In late May, another local teacher informed school officials that something fishy might be going on between Davis and the fifth-grader.

“Our investigation unveiled some criminal elements. Enough to charge her, we believe,” Othello police chief Alvia Dunnigan told the local NBC affiliate.
...
“She’s a really awesome teacher,” said the student who nominated Davis at the time, according to The Othello Outlook. “She has a lot of respect for everyone and she’s nice all the time.

“When I think of the word ‘teacher,’ I think of Lisa Davis,” gushed school district superintendent George Juarez.

The county prosecutor will now decide whether to file criminal charges. Police have recommended a charge of first-degree child molestation.'

Saint Joseph's University Sued for Bias by Accused Rapist

Mastodon · 10 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Saint Joseph's University, a private Catholic school in Philadelphia, was sued by a student suspended for an alleged rape over claims its sexual-assault policies virtually ensure that accused males will be found guilty.

The student, Brian Harris of Clifton Park, New York, is seeking more than $75,000 in damages in the complaint filed yesterday in federal court in Philadelphia accusing the school of negligence, defamation, intentional infliction of emotional distress and violations of Title IX, the law that bars sex discrimination at schools.

"SJU, in the manner in which it approaches the investigation, adjudication, and appeal of allegations of sexual misconduct and related claims made in connection to sexual misconduct, creates an environment in which a male accused is so fundamentally denied due process as to be virtually assured of a finding of guilt," Kenneth Dubrow, an attorney for Harris, said in the complaint.'

UK: Woman is jailed after five false rape allegations against ex-boyfriends

Mastodon · 10 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who made a string of false rape allegations against five men in eight years was behind bars last night.

Leanne Black, 32, repeatedly cried rape with bogus sex assault reports to police after rowing or breaking up with her former partners.

In one case, Black claimed she had been drugged and raped. In another she told police a boyfriend kidnapped and molested her.

A court heard that her innocent partners would have faced up to five years in jail if they had been found guilty of such serious sexual allegations.

However, Black was herself jailed for two years, with a judge condemning her actions, telling her that genuine rape victims would be undermined by her lies.

...

‘We want victims to feel able to report the abuse they have suffered and we are working hard to dispel the myths and stereotypes that can be associated with these cases.

‘One such misplaced belief is that false allegations of rape and domestic violence are widespread. We know that is not the case.”

Cheating Women: Why Are Women Narrowing the Cheating Gap?

Mastodon · 10 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to cheating, men are still more likely to stray -- but women are catching up.

According to recent data from the National Opinion Research Center's General Social Survey, the number of women having affairs has increased 40 percent in the last two decades, and one in six married women now admit to having an affair. Meanwhile, the percentage of men who admitted to infidelity held constant at 21 percent.

Experts were quick to chime in with possible reasons for the rising numbers, including Pepper Schwartz, a University of Washington sociologist and HuffPost blogger.

“[Women] can afford the potential consequences of an affair, with higher incomes and more job prospects,” she explained to Bloomberg Businessweek. “They have more economic independence and may meet a better class of mate.”'

No abortions for women? Then no vasectomies for men, lawmakers say

Mastodon · 10 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'As members of Georgia's House of Representatives debate whether to prohibit abortions for women more than 20 weeks pregnant, House Democrats planned to introduce their own reproductive rights plan: No more vasectomies that leave "thousands of children ... deprived of birth."

Rep. Yasmin Neal, a Democrat from the Atlanta suburb of Jonesboro, planned to introduce a bill Wednesday that would prevent men from vasectomies unless needed to avert serious injury or death.

"If we legislate women's bodies, it's only fair that we legislate men's," said Neal, who said she wanted to introduce a bill that would generate emotion and conversation the way anti-abortion bills do. "There are too many problems in the state. Why are you under the skirts of women? I'm sure there are other places to be."'

Ed.: This story's from Feb. 2012, but I thought it was a good one to run since it points out the confusion in popular perception re repro. rights. I discuss it in the first comment.

SAVE E-lert: Join the Free Speech Countdown

Matt · 10 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The feds only have until July 17 to answer Senator McCain's letter about the DOJ/Dept. of Ed. Sexual Harassment settlement; and we want to remind them every day that time is running out.

You can join our FREE SPEECH COUNTDOWN on two of our Facebook pages, Accusing U. and SAVE for Falsely Accused, where you'll find target email addresses and new questions to ask each day.

Today's post:

McCAIN QUESTION: How do you specifically define "unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature"?

http://1.usa.gov/19CVrj1

DEMAND that the Dept. of Education's Asst. Secretary Seth Galanter answer Sen. McCain's question.

Email: seth.galanter-at-ed.gov

If you decide not to join us on Facebook, please send a quick email to Seth right now. Thanks!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

NPO: Help Pass Special Act in Connecticut

Matt · 10 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'National Parents Organization of Connecticut Chapter would like to thank Governor Dannel Patrick Malloy his fast action on the alimony reform bill and remind him that the legislature also passed a bill to investigate the family court system. Bill 6685 (now Special Act 13-24) was passed by the legislature to create a task force to investigate the family courts.

The Special Act still requires the governor's signature to become law. Please email Governor Malloy to encourage him to sign this special act and let us know.'

Kindergarten Teacher Accused Of Incest, Rape Of Boy

Mastodon · 11 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Alabama kindergarten teacher was arrested July 3 on charges stemming from alleged inappropriate sexual conduct with a minor.

A Tuscaloosa County grand jury indicted Anessa Dawn Olive Ferguson on Friday. The 37-year-old mother of three is accused of rape, sodomy, sexual abuse and incest on a boy between the ages of 12 and 16, according to court documents obtained by WVUA.

Court documents described the incest charge as intercourse with "a victim who the defendant knew to be related, either by blood, adoption or marriage."

According to the Tuscaloosa News, an internal investigation of Ferguson was launched after abuse was reported by the victim's teacher.'

Sex crime charges dropped after former teacher marries victim

Mastodon · 11 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Sex charges against a former math teacher at a Vina, Ala., high school were dismissed after she married the student with whom she allegedly had a sexual relationship.

Kimberly Dawn Bynum was indicted on felony charges in 2011 for her alleged sexual relationship with a 17-year-old high school senior. Bynum's trial was postponed at least once before the teacher, who was 29 at the time of her arrest, married the student.

In a motion filed July 2 to dismiss the charges against Bynum, Franklin County District Attorney Joey Rushing stated that neither the alleged victim, nor his family, nor local law enforcement wanted the trial to go forward, according to ABC affiliate WAAY.

...

The age of consent is Alabama is 16, but laws prohibit educators from becoming sexually involved with students under the age of 19, according to the Franklin County Times.'

Single Women Buying Homes More Than Single Men, Report Says

Mastodon · 11 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the National Association of Realtors' 2012 Profile of Home Buyers and Sellers, single women make up 18 percent of homeowners -- compared to 10 percent of single men. The report notes that single women have been buying homes at almost twice the rate of single men since the mid-1990s.

Despite the challenges that single lady potential homeowners face -- backlash from family and friends, for example -- women are increasingly making it work. It's also important to note that childless, single women are actually on track to outearn their male counterparts in many metro areas. This could allow greater numbers of women in this demographic to make major purchases, such as new property.'

'The Mask You Live In'

Mastodon · 11 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Compared to girls, research shows that boys in the U.S. are more likely to be diagnosed with a behavior disorder, prescribed stimulant medications, fail out of school, binge drink, commit a violent crime, and/or take their own lives.

Jennifer Siebel Newsom's new documentary film, The Mask You Live In, asks: As a society, how are we failing our boys?
...
The Mask You Live In documentary will examine how gender stereotypes are interconnected with race, class, and circumstance, and how kids are further influenced by the education system, sports culture, and mass media- video games and pornography in particular. The film also highlights the importance of placing emphasis on the social and emotional needs of boys through healthy family communication, alternative teaching strategies, conscious media consumption, positive role modeling and innovative mentorship programs.'

Boys To Men: Where The Trouble Is

Mastodon · 11 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some thirty years ago educators and social science types, motivated in part by the women's movement but also by real gaps in achievement between boys and girls, began to recognize the need to address the particular educational and emotional needs of girls, and to fashion opportunities in the classroom and elsewhere that would allow girls to flourish. As the father of a teenage daughter I am grateful for this; my child has opportunities and accommodations that were not available to girls when I was a teenager, and that were undreamed of when my mother was her age.

But however real the disadvantages faced by girls in an earlier generation, I cannot be the only one to notice that the demographic that is really in trouble today, and that needs our attention, is boys and young men. This is not an original observation — as early as the 1990s some began talking about a "crisis" in the education of boys. There was push-back, I believe, from feminist quarters as well as some disputing the statistics about educational achievement; I'm no expert in education so I'd leave it to those who are to sort out these controversies.'

‘Don’t be that girl’ posters in Edmonton spark debate

Mastodon · 12 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'EDMONTON – Posters spreading a message that Edmonton police have been trying to fight for years with their “Don’t be that guy” campaign is generating mixed reviews, as well as a conversation in our city about sexual assault.

The Mens Rights Edmonton association is taking responsibility for the campaign. One of its members, who did not want to identify himself, says this poster campaign was intended to counter the “Don’t be that guy” campaign that he says made “rape into a gendered issue.”

“We don’t blame victims for anything, we’re simply looking for an accurate discourse on the subject.”
...
Robert says, “No place in that ad does it say rape is right. It is okay to slam men but when an ad like this is out it suddenly is pro rape? Once again it does not say rape is right so why read more into it?”

Reid writes, “Why are “don’t be that guy” posters acceptable if the opposite aren’t? They’re making a presumption that all men are potential rapists and should be viewed and educated as such. False rape accusations are a reality. This sign is factual and correct.”'

Canada: Report clears RCMP in case of wife who sought hit man

Mastodon · 12 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A federal commission has found that the RCMP acted reasonably in dealing with a Nova Scotia woman who tried to hire a hit man to kill her husband.

The Commission for Public Complaints Against the RCMP released a report Wednesday morning that said the Mounties who dealt with Nicole Doucet had no evidence for claims that her husband, Michael Ryan, had abused her.

“It is my conclusion that the RCMP did not refuse to assist Ms. Doucet; on the contrary, RCMP members were responsive to the family’s conflicts,” commission chairman Ian McPhail said in a news release.

“I conclude that the RCMP acted reasonably in each of its dealings with Ms. Doucet and her family, and did not fail to protect her.”
...
Doucet, formerly Nicole Ryan, was charged in 2008 with counselling to commit the murder of her then-husband. She was acquitted, using the defence of duress, and the the Nova Scotia Court of Appeal upheld the decision.

The Crown appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada. In January, the court ruled that the defence of duress didn’t apply but said it would be unfair to subject Doucet to another trial.'

California Considers ‘Jason Patric’ Law to Boost Sperm Donors’ Rights as Fathers

Mastodon · 12 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As family law struggles to keep up with technology, California state legislature is considering a bill that would give fathers of children conceived using sperm donation greater legal standing. The bill was inspired by the public custody battle between actor Jason Patric and his ex-girlfriend, Danielle Schreiber.

To be clear, the proposed bill, H.B. 115, does not propose to make anonymous sperm donors the legal fathers of the children conceived through artificial insemination or in vitro fertilization (IVF). Men who donate sperm to fertility clinics would not be considered a child’s “natural parent” unless the couple agreed prior to conception in writing that the donor was to be considered the father.

Rather, it would give courts the ability to grant legal parental rights under broader conditions than presently allowed.'

Paternity-Leave Facebook Post Shows Dads May Not Have It All, Either

Matt · 12 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While working moms deal with the well-known tangle of exhaustion, guilt, criticism and debates about having it all, there's another species of parent that has its own complex issues: the working dad.

Specifically, those working dads who get and take paternity leave. All of their paternity leave.

It's a land mine–laden topic that doesn't get nearly enough attention. But on Sunday, Facebook employee Tom Stocky helped put it in the spotlight with a frank and enlightening personal essay on Facebook to his 136,026 followers. He soon made the post public and, as of Thursday afternoon, it had garnered 5,745 likes, 2,900 shares and around 100 thoughtful comments. And it's really worth a read.'

China: Mother stabs infant 90 times with scissors

Matt · 12 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An eight-month-old boy is lucky to be alive after he was stabbed 90 times by his mother, mostly in the face, for biting her while she was breastfeeding.

Xiao Bao needed more than 100 stitches after the incident in Xuzhou, eastern China's Jiangsu Province.

The infant lives with his mother and two uncles, who make a living recycling rubbish. It was one of the uncles who discovered Xiao Bao lying in a pool of blood in the yard of their home and rushed him to hospital.

The child's mother later confessed that she stabbed the baby after he bit her during breastfeeding.

Neighbours have pleaded with the local government to take the baby away, but they have said that they will not.

Apparently, they said that there was no confirmation the mother was suffering from a mental illness and said, regardless, the baby still has two guardians in the form of his two uncles.
...
An analysis of mental health issues in four Chinese provinces, published in 2009 in the British medical journal The Lancet, estimated that 91 per cent of the 173million Chinese adults that were believed to suffer mental problems never receive professional help.'

'Woman: Reflections of a Divorced Man'

Matt · 13 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Book on Amazon UK here. Description:

'I used to have sympathy for the men who would collect their children in the town centre every Saturday morning. They were easy to spot. The glowering looks they would throw at their ex-wives were hard to conceal. Maybe it was to give their children a treat, or maybe it was because they found it hard to cook, but you could see them in the fast food outlets by lunchtime. Little did I know then that I would one day become a McDonald's dad myself. Disbelief, anger, inadequacy, rejection, bitterness, shock, fear, and loneliness are but some of the emotions that divorce brings to the average man. This is my story of how I coped with life after the breakdown of my marriage. Join me in a satirical examination of today's modern "woman". This book also reveals why women stand talking for hours, what it means when they are not "happy", and of course the dreaded "speech". Along the way you will learn why you should purchase a tin helmet when you begin dating again, and why men should really not wash their underpants in the sink.'

Men -- the new second class citizens

Mastodon · 13 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In November of last year, I wrote an article for Fox News called The War on Men (which I subsequently expanded to an eBook). To keep it pithy, in the piece I focused on one effect of this war: the lack of marriageable men. But there's so much more to it. The truth is, men have become second-class citizens.

The most obvious proof is male bashing in the media. It is rampant and irrefutable. From sit-coms and commercials that portray dad as an idiot to biased news reports about the state of American men, males are pounced on left and right. And that's just the beginning.

The war on men actually begins in grade school, where boys are at a distinct disadvantage. Not only are curriculums centered on girls', rather than boys,' interests, the emphasis in these grades is on sitting still at a desk.
...
When men become husbands and fathers, things get really bad. In family courts throughout America, men are routinely stripped of their rights and due process. The Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) is easily used against them since its definition of violence is so broad that virtually any conflict between partners can be considered abuse.
...
Yet it is males who suffer in our society. From boyhood through adulthood, the White American Male must fight his way through a litany of taunts, assumptions and grievances about his very existence. His oppression is unlike anything American women have faced. Unlike women, however, men don't organize and form groups when they've been persecuted. They just bow out of the game.'

Sweden: Policewoman beats man with baton for no apparent reason

Matt · 13 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The headline calls him a "drunk". Maybe he was intoxicated, but according to the video clip of the assault on him, he sure wasn't acting in a way requiring being beaten and attacked by a dog in order to be arrested. Point of this story is this: Anyone in an authority position can abuse it. Feminists' assertions over the years that women categorically don't or are much less likely than men to do so simply don't bear up to scrutiny, not just in this but in plenty of other cases. Excerpt:

'A video clip showing a Swedish policewoman repeatedly hitting a drunken man with a baton as her police dog appears to go berserk on the streets of Stockholm has shocked experts, while the prosecutor has opened a criminal probe.

"The only thing I can say is that this video gives cause to assume that the police officer has committed a crime," internal affairs prosecutor Mats Åhlund told the Dagens Nyheter (DN) newspaper after being shown a clip of the altercation that took place late on Thursday night.

"This has to investigated properly so we understand what happened before and after, but it's clear as day that there is reason to suspect that a crime took place."'

Sex on Campus: She Can Play That Game, Too

Matt · 13 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ask her why she hasn't had a relationship at Penn, and she won't complain about the death of courtship or men who won't commit. Instead, she'll talk about "cost-benefit" analyses and the "low risk and low investment costs" of hooking up.
...
It is by now pretty well understood that traditional dating in college has mostly gone the way of the landline, replaced by "hooking up" — an ambiguous term that can signify anything from making out to oral sex to intercourse — without the emotional entanglement of a relationship.

Until recently, those who studied the rise of hookup culture had generally assumed that it was driven by men, and that women were reluctant participants, more interested in romance than in casual sexual encounters. But there is an increasing realization that young women are propelling it, too.
...
Typical of elite universities today, Penn is filled with driven young women, many of whom aspire to be doctors, lawyers, politicians, bankers or corporate executives like Facebook's Sheryl Sandberg or Yahoo's Marissa Mayer. ...
...
These women said they saw building their résumés, not finding boyfriends (never mind husbands), as their main job at Penn.'

Military sexual assault trials complicated by POTUS's admonishment

Mastodon · 14 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — When President Obama proclaimed that those who commit sexual assault in the military should be “prosecuted, stripped of their positions, court-martialed, fired, dishonorably discharged,” it had an effect he did not intend: muddying legal cases across the country.

In at least a dozen sexual assault cases since the president’s remarks at the White House in May, judges and defense lawyers have said that Mr. Obama’s words as commander in chief amounted to “unlawful command influence,” tainting trials as a result. Military law experts said that those cases were only the beginning and that the president’s remarks were certain to complicate almost all prosecutions for sexual assault.'

'My step-by-step programme for curing men of sexism'

Mastodon · 14 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many men today think sexism is a perilous concept to get their heads around. Guys, it isn't.

Simply don't treat women as a lower human category to you and you're fine and dandy. Several famous men have messed up recently with woeful chauvinist blunderings. Let's examine where they went wrong.'

Women's college alumnae fight to keep it women-only

Mastodon · 15 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some alumnae have not given up their fight to keep Wilson College a women's college.

A group of alumnae hope their actions will block or delay the college's decision to open the Chambersburg campus to male residential students in the fall of 2014. College-age men can commute this fall for the first time to classes at Wilson.

Alumnae are prepared to go to court to force the board of trustees to revisit its decision.
In the Pennsylvania Attorney General's office, they have challenged the change to the school's charter.

And through their attorney, they have sent the trustees a letter warning of a potential lawsuit.'

India: Insurance company creates women-only/mother-child-only policy

Mastodon · 15 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New Delhi, July 15 (TruthDive) : Insurance policy meant for unmarried or divorced women and girl children is to be launched by Reliance General Insurance on August 1. The policy is named Reliance Health Gain with a target to cover four lakh people in the first year.

Of the total insured sum, the proposer is a widow covering self or her children or only herself will get a 5 % discount. A single woman can also get the discount. If the policy cover includes a girl child, then a further 5% discount will be given. The discounts will be a maximum of 15%.'

'Yes, You're Sexist' Twitter Account Kicks Misogyny In The Balls

Mastodon · 15 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you start a sentence with 'I'm not sexist, but...' you're probably sexist" is the message from the Yes, You're Sexist (@Yes_YoureSexist) Twitter account.

And HuffPost UK Lifestyle are inclined to agree.

Currently at 1,914 followers (and counting), Yes, You're Sexist clearly states that retweets are not endorsements.

So think of them more as the whistleblowers of misogyny.'

'Uh-Oh--Here Come Masculinity Studies'

Mastodon · 15 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Europe considers forcing issue of quotas for women on boards

Matt · 16 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Sex discrimination where there is none

Mastodon · 16 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Women's groups call on governor to veto 'father-daughter' dance bill

Mastodon · 16 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

SAVE: Unconscionable Decision in Kellett Case, Speak Out

Matt · 16 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Yesterday, Asst. DA Mary Kellett appeared before Maine Supreme Court Justice Ellen Gorman, and admitted to violating rules of the Maine Bar when she prosecuted Vladek Filler on sexual assault charges.

Normally, we'd be thrilled to see this. But there's more. Justice Gorman is expected to announce her decision later this week, to suspend any punishment of Mary Kellett! Yes, you read that right!

We aren't buying the "she has suffered enough" line - we want her disbarred!

Let's speak out for Vladek, his children, and every other person Kellett has unethically put behind bars. Tell the Justice that KELLETT MUST BE DISBARRED.

Contact Justice Gorman TODAY c/o Matthew Pollack, Clerk of the Maine Supreme Court. Phone: (207) 822-4146.

Thank you from the bottom of my heart,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Jonathan Kay: The dangerous expansion of ‘battered woman defence’ in Canadian law

Mastodon · 16 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“In the Doucet case, the claim of an ongoing pattern of spousal abuse was central to her defence,” says James Morton, a former president of the Ontario Bar Association. “So in theory, it should have been proven the way you would prove every other element, with solid evidence. But in reality, claims of past abuse typically are not proven with the same degree of rigour. It’s often merely asserted, and the person whom the allegation is made against has to disprove it. The burden of proof is effectively reversed.”

“It’s in family law cases where you see this a lot,” he adds. “As a practical matter, once the allegation is made by the woman — and it’s usually the woman, though not always — the burden is on the other side, the man, to disprove it. And how do you do that? How do you disprove something that happened months or years ago — stuff that was never complained about at the time?”

Grant Brown, a longtime men’s-rights activist, traces the roots of the Doucet decision to a bias against men that he believes is now encoded deep in the Canadian justice system.
...
“Nobody wanted to look as though they were not sympathetic toward women, and it became anathema for any politician or judge or police officer to question the [feminist point of view] in this area,” Mr. Brown says. “Whereas every other aspect of the criminal-justice system strives to eliminate false [accusations of guilt], when it comes to domestic violence, the reverse [has become] the case.”'

Dear Suzanne Venker, White Men Are Not 'Second-Class Citizens'

Mastodon · 16 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Make sure you check out the picture of a woman stepping on a man's head with a high heel. Excerpt:

'White, American men are now second-class citizens.

That's the premise of an article Suzanne Venker posted on Fox News last week, a follow-up to her November 2012 piece about the "war on men." In this piece, Venker made a number of pretty astonishing claims about women, public policy and the state of gender equality.

Here are the three most confusing things she wrote:

1. Grade school curricula are based on girls' interests. Hmmm... We'd like to see some data on that, please.

2. "Men don't organize and form groups when they've been persecuted. They just bow out of the game." This claim also seems suspect. Men's rights groups are actually very visible on the Internet. Website A Voice For Men says that it works to "expose misandry on all levels in our culture," and there is also a popular Reddit forum dedicated to men's issues -- frequented by male and female Redditors alike. Whether or not their cause makes sense, these groups do exist -- and they make themselves heard.'

India: False rape cases, extortion and threat: How woman blackmail men with 'rape' law

Mastodon · 16 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New Delhi: While the police strive to ensure safety and security of women in the national capital, there seems to be some women who misuse the law for extorting money from people and then threaten them to implicate in ‘false’ rape cases.

One such incident surfaced in Pandav Nagar area of East Delhi where a 40-year-old woman, who is reportedly a complainant in 11 cases of rape, stalking and other sexual offences, was arrested on charges of extortion.

It is ironical that the man who filed the extortion complaint was earlier charged with raping the woman and had been sent to jail.
...
"The previous case under Sections of rape that the woman registered against Sushil was found to be false. On the directions of the court, a case of extortion based on Sushil's complaint was registered and the woman, arrested. She has been sent to 14 days judicial custody," Additional DCP (East) D K Gupta said.

The woman registered a case against Choudhary and three others including her husband Avtar Singh for allegedly raping, criminal intimidation and wrongful confinement inside the lawyer's chamber in Patiala House courts complex.'

UK: Teacher who sent 1,500 sex texts to teenage pupil in six weeks avoids jail

Mastodon · 16 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman teacher who inundated a teenage pupil with sex text messages and intimate pictures during a six-week affair has avoided jail.

Roseanna Langley, 24, sent the 16-year-old pictures of her naked and she was planning a tattoo bearing his name.

When the boy tried to cool their romance the science teacher – on the rebound after being dumped by her fiance – claimed she had miscarried his child, Exeter crown court heard.

The pair denied their affair when the head teacher at St James High School in Exeter called in police.

But officers found 1,500 sex texts from Langley on the boy's mobile and CCTV images showed the couple holding hands in a London hotel where they shared a double bed during a weekend away.

She was sacked by the school after she admitted having sex with the boy, who was not in her class.'

UK: Courses 'would be better than prison' for women

Mastodon · 16 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'The government is ignoring the needs of women offenders with its probation reforms, the Commons Justice Select Committee has said.

Kay, an ex-offender, who has been in prison once after being convicted on a drugs offence, told the Today programme's Justin Webb being in prison "knocks self confidence" and "self belief".

She said "courses and training" would be a much better way to help women who have offended.

Labour peer Baroness Corston, who suggested a number of reforms six years ago, said she was worried the "progress made by the previous government has not only stalled but is in danger of going into reverse".

She said the system now is "perfectly tailored for a man", and added the majority of the women in prison now "shouldn't be there because they are troubled rather than troublesome".'

A Boys' Camp to Redefine Gender

Mastodon · 16 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Two takes on the same camp; from Slate:

A Boys' Camp to Redefine Gender

and from a religious-interest magazine:

Transgender Boy's Camp 'Unnatural,' Restrictive, Say Christian Leaders

Slate:
'Over the past three years, photographer Lindsay Morris has been documenting a four-day camp for gender nonconforming boys and their parents.
...
It is also a place for both parents and children to feel protected in an environment that encourages free expression.

“[The kids] don’t have to look over their shoulders, and they can let down their guard. Those are four days when none of that matters, and they are surrounded by family members who support them,” Morris said.'

CP:
'But Christian leaders disagree, saying the camp might even be forcing these children down an unnatural path.

"There is a risk of locking children into a life course, which, if they had been left to develop naturally, they would have outgrown," warned Peter Sprigg, senior fellow for Policy Studies at the Family Research Council in Washington D.C., in an interview with the Christian Post Tuesday.

Sprigg argued that teaching kids they have to identify with their "sexual orientation" or "sexual identity" could "lock" them in a phase. "You'll have children who are going through natural periods of confusion and experimentation with their sexuality and all of a sudden you have adults telling them, this means you're gay, you were born gay, you will never change," he said.'

The Rise of Single Fathers

Matt · 16 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A record 8% of households with minor children in the U.S. are headed by a single father, up from just over 1% in 1960, according to a Pew Research Center analysis of census records. The census bureau data shows the number of single father households increased from less than 300,000 in 1960 to more than 2.6 million in 2011.

To measure the increase in another way, single parent households headed by fathers now comprise almost one-quarter (24%) of all single parent households, compared to 14% in 1960.

There are some notable differences between single mothers and single fathers. Single fathers are more likely than single mothers to be living with a cohabiting partner (41% versus 16%). Single fathers, on average, have higher incomes than single mothers and are far less likely to be living at or below the poverty line—24% versus 43%. Single fathers are also somewhat less educated than single mothers, older and more likely to be white.

Compared with fathers who head households with two married parents, single dads are younger, less educated, less financially well-off and less likely to be white.'

Intactivism Spreads in Israel

Matt · 16 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here is another sign that Intactivisim is gaining social acceptance, even in Israel. Gonnen Al Ha-Yeled (Protect the Child) and Ben Shalem (The Israeli Association for the Abolition of Circumcision), two Israeli Intactivist groups, have just produced stickers and ads in Hebrew. Eran Sadeh, the Jewish and Israeli founder of Protect the Child spoke at a Human Rights forum last year calling for laws protecting all children from the mutilation of circumcision.

Translation from Hebrew by Eliyahu Ungar-Sargon.'

Woman Sentenced To Life For Killing Fiance

Mastodon · 16 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'ALLENTOWN, Pa. — An eastern Pennsylvania woman sentenced to life in prison in the stabbing death of her fiance on their wedding day says she still loves him.

Thirty-two-year-old Na Cola Franklin was convicted of first-degree murder in the August death of 36-year-old Billy Brewster after an argument at their Whitehall Township apartment hours before the ceremony.
...
Defense attorney John Waldron has vowed an appeal. He argues Brewster came home drunk from an impromptu bachelor party and attacked Franklin.'

Emma Roberts arrested on domestic violence charges after fight with boyfriend

Mastodon · 17 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Actress Emma Roberts [link added] was arrested last week on domestic violence charges in Canada.
...
TMZ reports that Roberts was arrested after someone called the cops to report a fight in the couple's Montreal hotel room.

Peters, 26, reportedly had a bloody nose and a bite mark when police arrived, so they arrested Roberts on the spot. They released her hours later because Peters elected not to press charges, according to MTV News.

In a joint statement, the two young actors reps addressed the incident.

"It was an unfortunate incident and misunderstanding. Ms. Roberts was released after questioning and the couple are working together to move past it," the reps told Us Weekly.'

Women's Center Presents Workshop for Men & Boys

Mastodon · 17 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here. Excerpt:

'The Women's Center of Greater Danbury is pleased to announce a free, interactive workshop for males of all ages. Participants will learn strategies and techniques to address harmful behaviors that promote sexual and interpersonal violence against women and children. Two training sessions will be held in our 2nd floor Community Room at 8 West Street in Danbury on Monday, July 29th, 6:30-7:30 p.m., and Thursday, August 1st, 10:00-11:00 a.m.

Men are far too often at a loss as to how they can play a positive role in stopping sexual violence. Standing by or remaining silent is not the answer. With an emphasis on prevention education, this workshop will encourage and help men to play a positive role in preventing sexual abuse, interpersonal violence and even bullying.

Through discussion, learning tasks and positive role-play scenarios, participants will be able to confront violence before it starts and build healthy relationships and a healthy community. Topics to be covered will include:

· Recognizing unhealthy aspects of masculinity

· Empathizing with others

· Supporting gender equality

· Replacing violent masculine attitudes and behaviors with behaviors and attitudes that respect the self and others.'

Actor: My son was stolen from me

Mastodon · 17 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

'Actor Jason Patric and his former girlfriend are caught up in a heated custody dispute. CNN's Michaela Pereira reports.'

Issue reported previously on MANN here.

Florida woman accused of shoplifting threw her baby at deputy, officials say

Mastodon · 17 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A Pensacola woman has been arrested after authorities say they tried to arrest her for shoplifting and she threw her baby at a deputy as she tried to escape.

Okaloosa County Sheriff's Office said Ashley Taylor Wright tried to smuggle about $260 worth of clothing from a Dillard's dressing room.

Deputies approached her car in the parking lot Monday night and asked her to get out.

Authorities said the 23-year-old told the deputy, "You will have to shoot through the baby to get me."

She then allegedly ran from the car and threw the car seat with the baby inside at the deputy.

The infant was not injured. Two other young children were also in the car.

Wright faces several charges, including child abuse.'

Woman confesses to beastiality, threatens man with knife

Mastodon · 17 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Convinced that a neighbor spoke to others about her having sex with a cat, an Oklahoma woman allegedly threatened the man with a knife, saying, “Do you wanna die?”

Oklahoma City cops arrested Kristina Michelle Brown following her bizarre confrontation Monday afternoon with 72-year-old Elmer Morrison. The 23-year-old Brown was charged with assault and battery with a deadly weapon, a felony, and booked into jail, where she is being held in lieu of $5000 bail.

...

When police questioned Brown, she explained she was upset with Morrison “because of what he did to me.” When a cop asked what he did to her, she replied, “Because everyone knows.” She then said, “I had sex with my cat and everyone knows.”

A puzzled cop asked Brown (pictured above) what role Morrison had in the cat sex. She replied that her next-door neighbor had “no connection” to the act, saying that she was “just mad because everyone knows.”

Investigators reported that Brown said Morrison “does not know about what she did with the cat, she is just mad at him and wants him to die.”'

Canada: Men’s rights posters torn down

Mastodon · 17 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some Saskatonians haven’t taken kindly to men’s right posters appearing around the city.

One intact poster, spotted Monday afternoon at 2nd Avenue and 21st Street, rhetorically asked readers whether they feared and hated African-Americans, Jews, gays, lesbians and women, with the response, “of course not, because you are a decent human being.”

It concludes, “You don’t fear and hate men, do you? Do you? Mens rights are human rights.”

Other posters are up on 20th St. around Avenues B to G.

But four others on Broadway — somewhat confusingly equating both feminism and patriarchy with “male disposability” — had been partially torn down and are almost unreadable.'

SAVE Deplores Plan to Give Free Pass to Crusading Prosecutor who Engaged in Unethical Practices for Six Years

Matt · 18 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / July 17, 2013 – Seven months after a state ethics panel determined Hancock Co. prosecutor Mary Kellett engaged in “inexcusable” misconduct, Justice Ellen Gorman has announced a plan that would seemingly excuse Kellett’s unethical behavior. On Monday, Gorman announced she intends to shelve a 30-day suspension on assistant district attorney Mary Kellett. As a result, no sanctions will be placed on the prosecutor who engaged in unethical practices over a period of 6 years, resulting in the wrongful conviction of an innocent man.

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments – SAVE — deplores the impending decision as an affront to every citizen of Maine who believes the criminal justice system should be “just.”

The facts of the case reveal accuser Ligia Filler often changed her story to suit the circumstances. The woman was a known child-abuser with profound mental health problems, as revealed by a police recording.'

NPO: Joint Legal Custody is Your Constitutional Right

Matt · 18 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine a right that for nearly a century U.S. courts (including the Supreme Court) have recognized as a constitutionally-protected “fundamental right” which “cannot be denied without violating those fundamental principles of liberty and justice which lie at the base of all our civil and political institutions.” Such a right “undeniably warrants deference, and, absent a powerful countervailing interest, protection”.

Surely such a right would be zealously protected by the courts. And if it were not, we should be outraged.

There is such a right. It receives little protection by our courts. And we should, indeed, be outraged!

Reading the language our courts invoke when discussing parental rights, one would expect those rights to receive vigilant protection from the courts. But, in fact, family law courts across the nation routinely infringe on parental rights with not even a semblance of due process required when restricting fundamental constitutional rights.'

'Yeah, I'm About To Compare Emma Roberts To Chris Brown'

Mastodon · 18 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The news of Emma Roberts' alleged domestic violence against her boyfriend Evan Peters dropped yesterday, so I'd say it's just about time for someone or a couple someones to start downplaying what really happened, right? Like a rep or something? Or a 'source close to the actress'? Do we have anybody like that who can underscore what a non-issue violence is in our society? Oh we do? Great. Here's what reps for the two actors had to say, in a released statement:

"It was an unfortunate incident and misunderstanding. Ms. Roberts was released after questioning and the couple are working together to move past it."

Oh good, as long as they're definitely gonna move past it. When something like this happens, the important thing is to work through it and keep the relationship chugging in the same direction, you know? The absolute worst thing would be to take genuine steps to address the boundaries that had broken down in their relationship. It's not like this has anything in common with assault, so let's just sweep it under the rug and forgive the parties involved, okay? And post-haste, just so we can avoid any inconvenient or awkward conversations about abuse or any other real issues.'

Emma Roberts and double-standards around female offenders

Mastodon · 18 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The media's reaction once again shows a troubling trend to hold men accountable for behavior that is transgressive but to tend towards the apologetic when a woman behaves in a similarly destructive way. Which is to imply a man must be willing to tolerate a woman beating him up whilst also implying the idea of equality in society is not something many female editors women necessarily seek when it does not suit their needs. A view that has been expressed in various comment threads throughout the web.
...
But when they are not good what happens then? And why is it the media not challenging behavior and actions that ought to trouble us? Are only women allowed to be victims of domestic violence. Is there a risk of disturbing the preferred line of what counts for bad behavior amongst gender that the media would rather not explore? If so why?'

SAVE: Mary Kellett: Maine Prosecutor Disciplined for Misconduct

Matt · 18 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

SAVE played a lead role in this prosecutorial misconduct case, which involved a crusading prosecutor who often charged persons on allegations of sexual assault, even when there was no probable cause.

Along with the Internal Revenue Service, prosecutors wield the awesome power of the state. For both groups, there are inadequate checks in place to assure they don't abuse that power.

We were disappointed that no meaningful sanctions were imposed on ADA Mary Kellett, yet this was a precedent-making case.

The AP account of the case is shown below. To see more in-depth media coverage, visit: http://bangordailynews.com/2013/07/15/news/hancock/hancock-county-prosecutor-admits-violating-bar-rules-in-sexual-assault-trial/

Popular women's magazine "Cosmopolitan" discusses DV against men

Mastodon · 18 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You rarely hear about the female-on-male flip side of domestic violence charges in news stories about everyday Americans, let alone perpetrated by a 22-year-old starlet, but Emma Roberts shocked everyone this morning when news surfaced that, on July 7th, she was taken into custody in Montreal following a fight with her boyfriend, American Horror Story's Evan Peters. According to USA Today, he was found with a bloody nose and bite marks from Roberts, and she had various bruisings.

...

According to a study done in 2000, the statistics of domestic abuse in America were 1.3 million women versus 835,000 men. A more recent study from 2011 ups the percentage: One in four men have experienced "rape, physical violence and/or stalking" by a partner, and one in seven have experienced "severe physical violence," like beaten with a fist or a blunt object. And a 32-nation study by the University of New Hampshire claims that girlfriends initiate violence equally often as boyfriends do in relationships.

So don't forget to pay mind: This does happen, and it needs just as much awareness and prevention as male-on-female domestic assault.'

Federal Campus Sexual Harassment Policy Draws Free Speech Concerns

Mastodon · 19 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The federal government is facing pressure from civil-liberties advocates to back down from a policy meant to curb sexual harassment at colleges and universities -- just as sexual-assault survivors demanded in a protest this week that the Education Department do more to punish colleges that fail to address campus assaults.

A coalition of free-speech advocates, led by the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE), wrote an open letter to the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights and the Department of Justice Tuesday calling for officials to retract a "blueprint" for campus sexual harassment policies that critics claim would violate the First Amendment.

FIRE's coalition says a resolution released in May by the Departments of Education and Justice -- after an investigation of the University of Montana's prosecution of rape on campus -- expands the definition of sexual harassment to "any unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature," including speech, which coalition members contend is unconstitutional.'

Also see: Free Speech Coalition Files Open Letter to U.S. Department of Justice and Education to Retract Sexual Harassment Settlement

Debate Rages Over Obama Definition of College Sexual Harassment

Mastodon · 19 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To hear the critics tell it, President Obama wants to restrict free speech at college, interfere with campus dating and “de-eroticize” university life. The reasons can be found in a single line of the May letter from the Departments of Justice and Education to the University of Montana, Missoula—a campus long plagued by sexual assaults and shoddy sexual harassment prevention efforts.
...
According to Lucy France, general counsel of the University of Montana, that means you can report that the annoying boy who sits next to you in class is being creepy, but that doesn't mean the school will do anything about it. “The revisions currently being added to university policy,” she says, “aim only to clarify the procedures for filing harassment-related grievances, to establish protocol for adequately investigating and responding to allegations, and to train the school community in identifying and addressing sex discrimination and violence.”'

Student recants claim she was sexual assaulted

Mastodon · 19 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Bakersfield College student who claimed she was sexually assaulted twice by a man on campus last week has recanted, saying the sex was consensual.

At 1:09 p.m. Tuesday, BC reported the student's claim. But by 5 p.m. the college said Bakersfield police had determined that a crime had not been committed.

...

Amber Chiang, BC spokeswoman, said earlier Tuesday that the woman was attending summer school and had talked to a mental health professional on campus after the supposed attacks.

...

Bakersfield Police Department spokeswoman Michaela Beard said no charges will be filed against the woman.'

Woman said she made up camping assault story

Mastodon · 19 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'ELLENSBURG, Wash. — Kittitas County authorities say they will seek charges of false reporting against a woman who told deputies she was attacked by a stranger while was camping.

Sheriff's detectives have determined the Cle Elum woman made up the story about being attacked while camping at French Cabin Creek campgrounds early Monday, according to a news release issued by the Kittitas County Sheriff's Office.

Deputies said 25-year-old woman told them she had been assaulted by an unknown man while she was in her sleeping bag.

"The investigation took a turn when the detectives were unable to verify certain details or locate the witnesses the woman named. She also changed certain details when the detective attempted to clarify her story," according to the news release.

Deputies said that during an interview Wednesday afternoon, the woman acknowledged that she had made up the entire story to cover a relationship.'

Pelosi: ‘Our success as a nation really depends on our success of women’

Mastodon · 19 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a meeting with reporters on Capitol Hill, House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi and Rep. Rosa DeLauro (D-CT) rolled out on Thursday what they called a campaign to economic issues important to women.

“Our success as a nation really depends on our success of women,” Pelosi said to reporters. “And this is something that has to be unleashed in a more important way than it has.”

The agenda, named “When Women Succeed, America Succeeds: An Economic Agenda for Women and Families” hones in on three key principles the four congresswomen — Pelosi, DeLauro, Rep. Donna Edwards (D-MD) and Rep. Doris Matsu (D-CA) — view as essential to women’s economic success: Equal pay for equal work, emphasis on the work-family balance, including paid sick leave, and adequate funding for child care.
...
“We want to have many more women in Congress,” Pelosi said. “I keep saying, if you reduce the role of money in politics and increase the level of civility, you’d have more women in Congress, and that would be a very wholesome thing for our society, in terms of successes we can have for women.”'

Arianna Huffington at the Biennial: Women will lead the revolution

Mastodon · 19 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The event, sponsored by the Biennial of the Americas and The Women's Foundation of Colorado, was aimed at drawing attention to the changing role of women in a global economy.

Their general message: Guys, you need our help to get things back on track.

Louise Atkinson, president and CEO of The Women's Foundation, kicked off the event with a discussion of organization's “The Status of Girls and Women in Colorado” report.

The report, released in June, provides baseline data to help communities across the state more effectively address the needs and realities of girls and women here.

...

Sebelius highlighted how getting more women in government leadership positions is shifting the focus on where money is invested in women’s and girls’ health.

...

“This revolution is going to be led by women,” Huffington said. “Because the world as it is now has been designed by men. I’m sorry guys, but you’re going to be very grateful to us when we do this.”'

"Female" does not equal "fair"... or anything else

Matt · 19 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Again, the seemingly unstoppable perception that women are either categorically more likely to see things "a certain way" or be "fairer" than men in some context(s) just doesn't want to die, despite whatever evidence is produced routinely in any direction. It's like saying men categorically make better bricklayers; really, even if 99% of all bricklayers are men, is it correct to assume that they categorically are better at it? But when the Feminist Hooey Machine gets grist it can't process, you can fairly smell the smoke miles away. Latest is here. BTW, Corey is the DA who brought the Murder 2nd charge against George Zimmerman, which is why there's been so much buzz/criticism around her recently. People are criticizing her for various reasons, sometimes opposing, but everyone seems to agree on this: criticizing her. Excerpt:

'Marissa Alexander, the Jacksonville, Fla., mother sentenced to 20 years in prison for firing what she says was a warning shot at her abusive husband, remains behind bars more than a year after a judge tossed her "Stand Your Ground" defense. But with George Zimmerman's acquittal Sunday on murder charges, her cause is picking up steam.

Rep. Corrine Brown, D-Fla., is among Alexander's most vocal supporters. She's also a fierce critic of State Attorney Angela Corey, the elected prosecutor who presided over both cases.

"I do know that she has shown absolutely no compassion," Brown told U.S. News. "Where was the common sense? I hate to say this, but you wouldn't expect this from a female."
...

In a 2012 interview with The Grio, Corey chided critics and the media for being, in her view, overeager to take Alexander's side. "A person's propensity for violence is only one factor that would have allowed her to use 'Stand Your Ground' at the moment when she fired," the prosecutor explained. "If that's what you're saying, she can walk into a room and just see him and shoot [based on past abuse]." Corey said there was no physical evidence of a confrontation before the gun fired.'

Malawi Targets Two Million Males to Go for Circumcision By 2016

Mastodon · 19 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mangochi — Over 42,000 males in Malawi have undergone Voluntary Medical Male Circumcision (VMMC) since the campaign started last year, Malawi News Agency has learnt.

Speaking to Mana on Tuesday after a stakeholders meeting in Mangochi, Spokesperson in the Ministry of Health, Henry Chimbali said Malawi is expecting to have 2.1 million males who will have undergone Voluntary Medical Male Circumcision (VMMC) by 2016 noting that currently 42,000 males have already gone through the knife.

"Malawi as a country has 42,000 males circumcised already and it is expecting to have 2.1 million males voluntarily circumcised at the hospital by 2016 and that is encouraging," Chimbali said.
...
He however said it is encouraging to see many youths between the ages of 15 to 24 go for VMMC. He therefore encouraged men to go for VMMC which he said helps in reduction of HIV vulnerability rate by 60 percent.'

'Rolling Stone‘s Article On Dzhokhar Tsarnaev Makes It Clear Patriarchy Was At The Root Of His Problems'

Mastodon · 19 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It has been frustrating to watch people and businesses condemn Rolling Stone magazine — where, to be clear, I personally have no editorial affiliations — for putting the Boston bombing suspect, Dzhokhar “Jahar” Tsarnaev, on the cover of the latest issue. Many are upset that Tsarnaev is on the cover at all, as well as with the “rock star”-style photo the magazine used. And some who have read the article by journalist Janet Reitman complain that the way Jahar is profiled makes him out to be a “victim.”

I support Rolling Stone putting Tsarnaev on the cover and thought Reitman’s article was extremely well-written and thought-provoking. I came away from reading it with a greater understanding of how a 19-year-old Cambridge kid became a “monster.” To me, the patriarchy was clearly a problem in this family. To be clear, patriarchy doesn’t just mean when men are in positions of authority over women; it means when men, or one man, are in positions of authority over other men as well. It assumes that the people underneath that man will fall in line and not ask questions; it breeds a lack of agency and even, I would argue in Jahar’s case, weakness in a person. He was an immigrant from a maligned religion who slowly became radicalized by his severe older brother at the exact same time his troubled parents deserted him to move back to their homeland. I would not call him a “victim,” but I do believe it was a shitty, difficult situation for a teenager to handle, and those circumstances contributed to the vile crime he, allegedly, committed.'

Man lured by women to rooftop robbed, assaulted, and falls to his death

Matt · 19 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 50-year-old Brooklyn man who fell to his death from atop a four-story building was lured onto the roof by two women who had promised him sex, police sources said Thursday.

Instead of showing Robert Reichl a good time, the women led him into a trap shortly after midnight on Wednesday — and stole $2,000 in cash he had been carrying.

Three toughs were waiting on the roof of the building on Fourth Ave. near 47th St. in Sunset Park, the sources said, and at some point the men attacked Reichl.

One of them, Ruben Santiago, sprayed Reichl in the face with a chemical spray believed to be mace that caused the victim to reel back, lose his balance and fall off the rooftop, the source said.'

New Zealand: Male sex abuse numbers unknown

Matt · 19 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When most people think about the victims of sexual abuse they don't think of men. Do we have any idea of how many men in New Zealand are sexually abused?

We have no New Zealand statistics in relation to men and boys who are victims of sexual abuse or violence. Overseas stats suggest one in six boys will be sexually violated before their 16th birthday. Dr Tess Patterson at University of Otago has just recently started interviewing men we have been working with and hopefully next year we'll have New Zealand's first study.
...
There are many reasons males don't come forward, fear of being seen as weak or gay and the huge myth that if you are a male and have been sexually abused, you will go on to abuse. This is not said of female victims. For males to come forward we need to have safe places and more resources.

Are there other cultures that deal with sexual abuse better than our own?

In a word NO. This is a world-wide problem and denial seems to be the norm.'

‘Father-daughter dance’ bill becomes law

Mastodon · 20 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PROVIDENCE — Governor Chafee has decided to let a bill allowing “father-daughter dances” — and other gender-specific school events — become law without his signature, despite calls from more than a dozen women’s groups for a veto.

The legislation, introduced by Sen. Hanna M. Gallo, D-Cranston, in the wake of last year’s uproar over a father-daughter dance in that city, would permit “father-daughter” or “mother-son” events as long as “reasonable comparable activities” are provided for students of the opposite sex.

Last year, the Cranston school superintendent reinforced a ban against gender-limited events after the Rhode Island Affiliate of the American Civil Liberties Union filed a complaint on behalf of a single mother of a fourth grader at the Stadium Elementary School.'

Feminism in the west -- a war fought and won but whose veterans don't realize it?

Mastodon · 20 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But with every war, comes the eventual peace and agreement of new terms. The very real fight for feminism, as it manifested in the Western world, demanded actionable and specific goals: the right to vote, to be elected, to work, divorce, and own property. There are many inspiring female activists around the world today, fighting the oppressive and archaic theocratic regimes which seek to keep them shackled, veiled, and repressed as property to their husbands. Exposure to this hellscape of inequality in the developing world has caused an interesting schism in modern feminism, where many Western women feel an apex of accomplishment has been achieved, and have become divided on whether they even identify as a “feminist.”

...

Though some social conflicts continue for generations, there are others that have clearly passed the threshold of their greatest victories. You’d be hard pressed, for instance, to find a pro-slavery plantation owner, an anti-suffrage male voter, or a loyal colonialist eager to be under the yolk of the British Empire. Unions once fought for decent wages, holidays, health care, and an end to child labor or terrible work conditions. Now they are more often seen as complacent protection rackets that hinder progress in the workplace. Instead of only championing a legacy of old conflicts, we should look to the future and recognize the issues we are about to collectively face: environmental decay, food shortages, technological class systems, wealth disparity, etc. Otherwise, we will continue to be broken into, and separated by, the labels and distinctions that diminish our sense of common humanity.

...

Perhaps there will never be an "end" to feminism. As long as any woman is suffering some form of inequality or injustice in society, she will always be able to frame it as a gender issue, the same way connotations of racism, classism, nationalism, and political ideology will always be labels we smear onto our conflicts to address questions in our society regarding why some of us have more, and others have less.

...

Gender roles are constantly being reassessed and discussed in America. Is a long working career a preferred male responsibility? In our overpopulated world, can women live fulfilled and joyful lives eschewing traditional maternal roles? Can stay-at-home fathers be perfect substitutes for a nurturing mother? The more diverse stories we’re exposed to, the more we learn that anything is possible, and nothing is "standard." Individuals should pick the life path that suits them, and the people they want to be with. And as long as they don’t harm anyone else, a society that claims to champion freedom should do nothing other than get out of their way.'

DV: A Society Biased Against Males?

Mastodon · 20 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While the majority of domestic violence victims are women, male-oriented abuse occurs more often than many think. Naturally, men are stronger than women but that does not necessarily make it easier for them to have their way all the time.

According to a 2010 National Survey by the Centres for Disease Control and U.S Department of Justice, in the last 12 months, more men have been victims of intimate-partner physical violence than women.

The survey also indicates that men were also more often victims of psychological aggression. It is not also impossible that gender-biased individuals have overtime managed to sway society into believing that there are more female victims of domestic violence than men. Yet, men are being ignored and threatened by a double-edged sword; they are victimized by partners who also complain about being abused.

Also, an abused man faces a shortage of resources, skepticism from Police and other major legal obstacles, especially when it comes to gaining custody of his children from an abusive mother. Could it be natural or was it designed by men themselves?'

New law firm helps dads navigate divorce, custody issues

Mastodon · 20 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In recent years, family court proceedings like divorces and custody disputes have grown increasingly complicated and nuanced, as gender roles shift at work and at home.

Cordell & Cordell, a national firm that expanded to Birmingham in May, focuses primarily on helping men navigate cases in family court.

The firm's attorneys provide information and counsel men as they deal with divorce and child custody issues because men have been at a disadvantage when it comes to domestic litigation, according to a news release.

Joseph Cordell, who founded the firm with his wife Yvonne, said there has been progress for men in family court, but "it's far from a level playing field."

Often, men are perceived in a certain light by judges, social workers and others involved in making decisions about a family, he said.

"The stakes are the highest that they'll ever be for these people," Cordell said. "Everything in this world that's of most importance to these two parties is on the table in this contest."

Certain tactics are used and allegations made - such as domestic abuse - that men must overcome, Cordell said.'

Police: Woman Lied About Rape

Mastodon · 20 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who police say lied about being raped by a masked intruder had actually slashed her body and choked herself with a dog collar in an effort to create "convincing" injuries, according to an affidavit for her arrest.

The woman, Kelly M. Wilson, 29, of 611 Thrall Ave. was arrested July 3 and charged with second-degree falsely reporting an incident, second-degree making a false statement, and misuse of the 911 emergency system. She is free on $50,000 bond and is scheduled to be arraigned in Enfield Superior Court on July 16.'

Cops: Woman lied on 911 call, claimed boyfriend tossed her out of moving car

Mastodon · 20 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 43-year-old Monmouth County woman was arrested after police said she called 9-1-1 and lied about being assaulted by her boyfriend, according to a report on NJHerald.com.

Laurie Vandeusen of Manalapan called 9-1-1 at about 2:40 a.m. Friday and told the dispatcher that her boyfriend had punched and kicked her, causing her to fall out of a moving car, the report said.

When Hackettstown police arrived at Route 604 and Bilsby Road, Vandeusen was alone and gave them a different name. An investigation revealed that she had $7,000 in outstanding warrants out of several towns in Mercer, Middlesex and Monmouth counties.

Police charged her with falsely calling 9-1-1, obstructing and hindering. She was sent to the Warren County jail after she couldn't post $1,000 bail.'

IA: Tell the ACLU: Stop defending forced circumcision

Mastodon · 20 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2011, the ACLUNC* argued that the San Francisco Male Genital Mutilation Bill, a ballot initiative to restrict non-therapeutic circumcision to consenting adults, violated the parental right to subject boys to ritual circumcision in order to satisfy the religious beliefs of some parents. The ACLUNC lent its support in a lawsuit against the city of San Francisco to have the initiative (which received the support of over 12,000 San Francisco voters) removed from the ballot thus squelching democracy by denying voters their voice.

Later that year, the ACLUNC endorsed AB 768, a state law which prohibits any city in California from protecting boys from forced, non-therapeutic circumcision.

In response to outrage from the community over these actions of the ACLUNC, a representative from ACLU National defended the actions of its Northern California affiliate.'

---
* Ed.: Link to contact info. added.

Former cop sues woman over alleged false rape accusation

Mastodon · 21 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Chicago Police sergeant whose rape conviction was overturned in 2011 has filed a lawsuit against the woman who accused him.

...

The woman had sued the city in federal court and received a $1.5 million dollar legal settlement, the Sun-Times reported at the time of the 2011 Illinois Appellate Court decision that overturned Herman's conviction.

According to the suit, Herman had consensual sex with the woman in her apartment on March 9, 2004.

She later accused Herman of kidnapping her, driving to her apartment and forcing her to have sex with him at gunpoint, the Sun-Times reported.

Herman is claiming that the woman's accusations and the resulting prosecution caused him to lose his job, damaged his reputation and caused him to serve four years in prison.

...

The three-count suit charges the woman with malicious prosecution, abuse of process and defamation and asks for more than $100,000 in damages.'

Marine Barracks or College Dorm: Senate Bill Raises False Alarm Over Where Women Are Most Likely to Be Raped

Mastodon · 21 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let's be candid about the role that drinking plays in many sexual assault cases, both on campus and on base. When men and women drink heavily, judgment (if not vision) blurs. Women, who may be more intoxicated than their male counterparts if they have been matching drink-for-drink throughout the night, may allow themselves to fall into unsafe circumstances. Men, who may become more aggressive and less sensitive to social cues as they over-imbibe, may push sexual contact when consent from their partners is ambiguous at best.

Both sexes need to take responsibility. Young men need to be reminded that drunkenness vitiates consent. Young women need to acknowledge that staying (at least more) sober keeps them safer from certain types of crimes.

The alcohol-fueled "date rape" that accounts for the majority of college and military sexual assaults is a serious crime. At the same time, if sex was never consensual if any alcohol was involved, a lot of people wouldn't have consensual sex until somewhere around their second year of marriage. We don't help anyone by treating these cases as though they are always and exactly identical to forcible rape by a stranger. We also don't help address the problem of sexual assault in the armed forces by treating it as though what happens between men and women in the military is that different than what happens between men and women in college or elsewhere.'

Title IX, budget cuts claimed Michigan State men's lacrosse, men's gymnastics more than a decade ago

Mastodon · 21 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than a decade later, the dismissal of two men's sports programs at Michigan State still stings to those involved.

Men's lacrosse and men's gymnastics were the last two sports programs cut at MSU — both deemed a necessity for the school to get compliant federal Title IX regulations. Lacrosse was cut following the 1996 season, while gymnastics followed in 2001.

"It's a heartbreaker," said former MSU men's gymnastics coach George Szypula, who coached the team from its beginning in 1947 to 1988. "Title IX has been good for the ladies to a point and it's helped them, but it's been hurting the men's programs. We've dropped a lot of men's college programs in wrestling, gymnastics, swimming just to comply with Title IX."'

The next general in the war on men's pay

Mastodon · 21 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Having skewered Republicans in 2012 with accusations of a conservative "War on Women," President Obama is marching ahead to expand government's reach, particularly in the name of protecting women and promoting "gender pay equity."

...

OPM is the government's chief human resource agency, and as such, can be a powerful weapon in laying the groundwork for greater government oversight over compensation practices. Men struggling economically should take note: They may be among the collateral damage of government's campaign to build a more "equitable" economy.

The OPM's primary responsibility is to oversee the compensation system for the 2.7 million member federal civilian workforce. Currently, however, the OPM is also developing a government-wide strategy for advancing "pay equity," a task Archuleta will take over if confirmed.

...

Ms. Archuleta who was the chief of staff at the Department of Labor from 2009-11 should be familiar with this type of analysis, and the studies that show that, at a minimum, the 77-cents-on-the-dollar is a gross exaggeration of sexism's role in impacting women's earnings.

...

This isn't about rooting out discrimination. No, the purpose is simply to make the statistics work so that the average working women earns the same as the average working man, regardless of whether differences in pay were based on legitimate factors.

...

It's easy to imagine how this "guidance" will quickly spill into the broader economy, first as a condition to be eligible for any government contract and then as outright regulations and mandates.

The end result won't simply be higher pay for women and lower pay for men. The real outcome will be a less flexible, less dynamic workplace as government moves further into regimenting the compensation practices of American employers.'

Ireland: Upcoming debate to address "feminized" workplaces

Mastodon · 21 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I have been asked to preside over a debate in Galway on whether feminism has now definitively triumphed: the event is some time away, but I am sure it will be spirited and lively.

Yet current studies on the victory of feminism are tending to put the conquest in ambivalent terms: is this, as Hanna Rosin asks in a best-selling and influential American study, 'The End of Men: And the Rise of Women'? The author paints a concerning, even alarming, picture of the trends in western (and some eastern) societies. Women are advancing on all fronts, and men, in general, are retreating. Not only retreating, but failing, underachieving, becoming redundant and "useless".

...

Everywhere (except Africa) women are becoming better-educated, and overtaking men at university level. In 2012, for the first time ever, there were more college-educated women than men, among Americans aged 30 to 44.

The same pattern is evident in Europe, Australia, Latin America, the Caribbean, Central Asia and even the Arab states. In Bahrain and Qatar, women now make up nearly 70pc of college graduates. Even in Saudi Arabia, more than half of undergraduates and PhDs are female.

Women in their 20s, in the US, are now out-earning men, and if they remain childless they will continue to keep parity with male incomes. Nearly a third of Brazilian women now make more money than their husbands.

...

Hanna Rosin notes the increased prevalence of entire neighbourhoods that are now "matriarchies" – where single mothers raise families alone. More than a third of mothers in the US are the family breadwinners, and it's not problem-free.

Out-of-wedlock births are "the new norm", and will soon become, in many western societies, the majority practice. Male wages have been stagnant since 2009 and few average men can now step into the role of sole family provider.

...

From the Forbes rich list, to the top CEOs and most powerful political figures, the "alpha" male remains as successful among homo sapiens as he is among the silver-backed apes. Is this really a triumph – average men labelled as "losers", while a few alpha-males are still in control? If it is a triumph it is surely a mixed one, and maybe even a Pyrrhic victory.'

A scientist's view: equality, feminism and men's rights

Mastodon · 21 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:0

'Recently scientist Laura Waters wrote a piece explaining “why I’m an equalist and not a feminist.” Molecular biologist and feminist Andrew Holding responds.

The world is against men. This week a man was turned away from Legoland for not having a child, apparently to protect the families and children that visit. Men are not allowed to sit next to unaccompanied children on planes because apparently they’re all paedophiles-in-waiting. I’ve had my own experience of someone alerting the whole of John Lewis that my daughter was abandoned, because she wasn’t near someone who looked like a mother. Then there’s the old issue that only 8% of children in single parent families are with their fathers. Perhaps all this contributes to high suicide rates in young men. So we need equality not feminism? I don’t agree.
...
So what about single fathers, young men committing suicide, or suggestions that every man is some kind of Schroedinger’s paedophile? The answer to these problems is more feminism.

Feminism fights patriarchy. It’s this system that is responsible for the fallacy that women need to be mothers in place of men; a lie that can cost fathers their children and women their lives. It places unreasonable expectations on young men, leaving them ill-equipped for the modern world and leading to an epidemic of mental health issues. It runs the entire country, and those that gain from it would prefer that women don’t stand together for their rights because they have so much to lose.'

Congress Considers Proposals To Lift Young Men From Poverty, But Outlook Is Grim

Mastodon · 21 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House, lawmakers are considering bills that could help lift hundreds of thousands Americans out of poverty. The two bills, both designed to expand eligibility for the Earned Income Tax Credit, have the potential to bring relief to over 300,000 Americans, according to a study by the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities.

...

“Many of the nation’s most serious social problems are caused by poor young males. They are the demographic group most likely to drop out of school, commit crimes, perpetrate violence on others, including their girlfriends, and desert their children,” Haskins said. “[These] problems are especially serious among young black males, and that the causes for blacks form a tangled web that includes lingering effects of generations of slavery and racial oppression, high levels of school dropout, current discrimination in the job market, astounding rates of arrest and imprisonment, and, ironically, being reared in fatherless families.

“The strands in this complex web of causality can be thought of in two categories: the ones over which young men have control and the ones over which they don’t. If young men could be helped to overcome their inherent disadvantages, and follow a few simple rules of behavior, they could greatly improve their own well-being and that of the women and children who are closest to them. Here are the rules: Graduate from high school, don’t commit a crime, get a job and work hard, get married, and have children,” Haskins continued.'

malecodependence.com

Matt · 21 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Just came across this site: http://malecodependence.com/

I think it might be a good resource for men struggling to find ways to deal with disempowering relationships of all kinds, etc. Off-linked was this article: Weak men who try to please and from that, by the same author on her web site: It's Time Men Stand Up and Say "No!". She pretty much lays it out good. Excerpt:

'The feminist movement has upset the apple cart for men. Women have blamed men for all the problems and accepted none of the responsibility. Years ago, women were the victims. Now it's turned around, and men are.
...
Men are damned if the do and damned if they don't. They're accused of trying to get the upper hand if they pay for dinner, and of being cheap when they don't. They're chauvinists if they open doors and inconsiderate if they don't. They're macho if they don't show feelings and wimps if they do.

Men haven't gained as much as they've lost. They're expected to do half the housework but not require their wives to bring in half the income. They no longer get the nurturing they had in traditional relationships, but are often still expected to carry the responsibility.

And men's personal rights over home and family have always suffered. Women may have had trouble gaining the right to abortion. But men never get included in the decision as to whether they have to support another child or not.

Many women secretly get pregnant. Some men spend years paying for a sexual mistake some woman used against them to force marriage.
...

Women have copped an attitude that they can take care of themselves. Yet, most women will admit that they'd still like to be taken care of. They send a double message: "Take care of me, but don't control me because I'll hate you for it." They want men to stay tough enough to provide them with someone to lean on. And when a man doesn't "act like a man," they ridicule him about his masculinity until he feels obligated to get back in his role.

The fact is, women don't want the responsibility that comes with control. Women are asking men to give up their control but keep up their responsibility. How fair is that?

It's time for men to say "No!"'

Australia: Chief Commissioner Ken Lay says more men need to stand up against domestic violence

Mastodon · 21 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CHIEF Commissioner Ken Lay has put violent men who attack their wives and partners on notice: you will be vilified by the community.

Declaring family violence one of the most significant law-and-order problems in Victoria, Mr Lay said men of all socio-economic backgrounds had to face up to the consequences of their crimes.

"I know of some very high-profile people, some very well-respected people that bash their wives," he said.

"Some men are very good at hiding their violence from those outside the home."'

Luring a teenage boy into her web

Mastodon · 21 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How readers respond to Alissa Nutting's new novel will largely depend on how they feel about reading detailed descriptions of sex between a 26-year-old middle-school teacher and the 14-year-old boys she craves. Some readers will praise the story as an uncompromising look at a remorseless sexual deviant. Others will dismiss it as a distasteful act of provocateurship. Either way, the controversy will presumably move some copies.
...
Nutting's narrator, Celeste Price, may be a sociopath, but she's an undeniably pretty, buxom blonde. The wife of a good-natured but doltish cop, Celeste has taken a job as an eighth-grade English teacher to get closer to boys "at the very last link of androgyny that puberty would permit." Like Humbert Humbert, she must choose her victim carefully: He has to be just a little shy, unlikely to brag and not too supervised at home. Like Humbert, she eventually has to submit to sex with a repulsive parent to ensure continued access. Like Humbert, she's eventually free of that pesky parent without having to resort to a weapon herself.'

"Women still earn about 77 cents for every dollar a man earns for working the same job"

Mastodon · 21 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Democratic gubernatorial nominee Terry McAuliffe is pledging to increase penalties against Virginia employees who discriminate against women in terms of pay.

"The gender wage gap is real, and women still earn about 77 cents for every dollar a man earns for working the same job," McAuliffe says in a video on his his campaign website.

McAuliffe, in his statement, became the latest in a growing list of Democrats to mischaracterize an actual figure on the gender wage gap released by the U.S. Census Bureau. Other notables include President Barack Obama and former President Jimmy Carter.

McAuliffe is wrong to say that the 77-cent figure describes the actual pay difference between men and women "working the same job."

The 77-cent figure compares the median pay of all full time, year-round male and female workers, regardless of occupation.

Many experts say some of the gap is likely caused by discrimination, but most of it is due to career choices.'

"Why Men Need Women"

Matt · 22 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Ahh, the NY Times does it again, with another hit piece on men, this time from a Wharton School professor. Really, the Times has become so predictable and so self-destructive to its own subscription base. Tell me, if women seem to be so much better at so many things than men, then why is the current executive editor of the Times driving it headlong into the ground at break-neck speed? Alienating fully half your subscriber base repeatedly by trashing them simply makes bad business sense, but you'd think she'd've figured that out by now. Excerpt:

'New evidence reveals a surprising answer. The mere presence of female family members — even infants — can be enough to nudge men in the generous direction.

In a provocative new study, the researchers Michael Dahl, Cristian Dezso and David Gaddis Ross examined generosity and what inspires it in wealthy men. Rather than looking at large-scale charitable giving, they looked at why some male chief executives paid their employees more generously than others. The researchers tracked the wages that male chief executives at more than 10,000 Danish companies paid their employees over the course of a decade.
...
It’s often said that behind every great man stands a great woman. In light of the profound influence that women can have on men’s generosity, it might be more accurate to say that in front of every great man walks a great woman. If we’re wise, we’ll follow her lead.'

India: A woman activist who fights for men's rights

Mastodon · 22 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'She is an activist with a difference.

Dr Indu Subhash of Lucknow took Bareilly by storm on Sunday as she rooted for the rights of men in the country and advocated formation of a National Men's Commission.

Her fight against "gender-biased laws" drew massive response from the people here, including women, who volunteered to take up the cause at their level.

"All laws are gender-biased and spoiling the lives of men. There are a number of men who commit suicide as laws, which should ideally be building families, are becoming the reason for their breakdown," said Subhash, a Ph D in women's studies, addressing a gathering held at Novelty Crossing.

"All laws are meant for protection of women, who are misusing them to harass men. For example, in the case of separation due to 'irretrievable breakdown of marriage', women are entitled to get half the share in her husband's parental property. Is this right?" she asked.
...
Subhash, currently serving as a principal in a college in Sultanpur, started her fight in 2007 when her brother became a victim of one such law.

"My sister-in-law lost her mental stability after the death of her son and committed suicide. But, my brother-in-laws blamed our family for the murder and lodged an FIR under the dowry act. My whole family was tortured and put behind bars for nothing," recalled Subhash.'

Anne-Marie Slaughter: 'I think we need a men's movement'

Mastodon · 22 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Anne-Marie Slaughter strides backstage after her latest TED talk, fast-talking and hungry – she hasn't had time for breakfast yet, and it's well past midday. A little over a year ago, Slaughter was a highly respected but relatively anonymous academic. Her life changed last June, when her article for The Atlantic, Why Women Still Can't Have It All, became the most read in the magazine's history. Almost 220,000 people shared it on Facebook.

The speech she has just given, entitled Real Equality, considers what it would take for those twin pillars of human life – caregiving and breadwinning, as she terms them – to be given equal value, and for men and women to reach proper parity, at work and at home. The article and subsequent talk followed her decision to leave her job as the first female director of policy planning at the US state department, after a two-year stint working under Hillary Clinton. She left after concluding that "juggling high-level government work with the needs of two teenage boys was not possible".

...

But that's not to say men aren't concerned about these issues. In 2008, 60% of American men reported feeling a conflict between their work and family life. "I really think we need a men's movement," says Slaughter, "and you're starting to see it. Guys are starting to speak up for themselves about masculinity, about care-giving. You know, women are hypocrites this way, because we would go crazy if men treated us in the workforce the way we typically treat them at home – if a guy in the workforce assumed he was more competent than you are, and told you what to do – but that's the way most women treat men in the household."'

SAVE E-lert: Tell DA Carletta Bassano It's Not Back to 'Business as Usual'

Matt · 23 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Last week we told you the disappointing news about Asst. District Attorney Mary Kellett in Maine. After violating numerous ethical rules for six years, Kellett is getting off with a gentle love-tap on the wrist with a fluffy feather.

While we can't do anything to change this decision, we can make sure that Kellett's boss DA Carletta Bassano knows we are still watching.

This week, politely email Bassano and urge her to bring an end to the pattern of unethical conduct in her office. Ask her to assure the prosecutors in her office:

1. Bring an end to gender bias in charging decisions
2. Assure they have probable cause before charging anyone with sexual assault - a mere allegation does not constitute probable cause!

Contact Info:

Carletta M. Bassano, District Attorney
Phone: 207-667-4621
E-mail: carletta.bassano-at-da7.org

On behalf of the many victims of ADA Mary Kellett, thank you,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

'Feminists Just Want to Fight'

Mastodon · 23 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the pink corner, we have the rowdy mob of angry feminists. Prepared to fight everything in the interests of 'female first'. They are addicted to protest, being put in the pink corner for starters.
...
Meanwhile the pink corner are up and shadow boxing. The Everyday Sexism Project encourages women to record casual experiences of misogyny with the aim of showing sexism does exist and is a valid problem to discuss.

Yet this bias in favour of the pink corner seems to be widespread. Women have so many things exclusively for their own gender: Women's Hour, a Women's Book Prize; the Top 100 Business Women, the Top 100 Powerful Women, Business Woman of the Year, the list goes on and on.
...
The pink corner need to stop looking for a fight. Perhaps it is time for the pink corner to recognise if they want to be told they are special they need to find someone to love.'

Everywhere and nowhere: on masculinity and breaking the rules

Mastodon · 23 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's commonplace in our culture — and cultures around the world — to simply accept the fact that most crimes are perpetrated by men; we call them "attackers," "assailants," "suspects" and "accused" (and mayors and senators and chiefs of staff ...) and talk about their deeds and their punishments, but the thing that binds them together — their masculinity — remains invisible because it's excluded from public discourse.

Feminism quite rightly identifies the ways in which men hold a disproportionate amount of power in the world, be it financial, professional, corporate, political, religious or familial. However, men also make up about 95 per cent of Canada's prison population. Men account for 97 per cent of Canadian workplace deaths. About 70 per cent of Canadian homicide victims are male. Men are about two-and-a-half times more likely to die in a car accident than women, and 82 per cent of impaired driving charges are laid against men.

What is going on? Why are there so many more men than women located in places of physical risk? The silence that surrounds this reality is reflected in men themselves, whose reluctance to admit weakness and vulnerability has dire health consequences: higher rates of disease, earlier deaths and three times the suicide rate of women.
...
Almost two years ago now I was in the kitchen, absently listening to the radio, while my six-year-old son ate his breakfast a few feet away. A reporter was relaying the story of a Toronto man who beat a family of baby raccoons with a shovel, and was later led away in handcuffs. I didn't realize my son was listening too until he asked, "Mummy why is it always the boys who are going to jail?" My six-year-old son could ask the question. Why can't we?'

UNICEF Report: Millions of girls still face FGM risk -- no mention of boys

Matt · 23 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Of course, FGM must be stopped. However, so must MGM. This is a great opportunity to let UNICEF know you support the end of genital mutilation of children-- children of BOTH sexes. Contact UNICEF here (Subject: Child rights), and their Facebook page is here, where they accept posts. Excerpt:

'(CNN) - The largest report yet into the extent of female genital mutilation, or cutting, has shed new light onto a practice that affects tens of millions of women and girls worldwide, U.N children's agency UNICEF said.

There is some positive news in the new UNICEF report, with data on trends revealing that the practice is becoming less common in more than half of the 29 countries where it is concentrated.

But some 30 million girls remain at risk of being cut in the next decade unless efforts to eliminate the practice make more headway.

More than 125 million girls and women alive today have undergone some form of female genital mutilation in 29 countries across Africa and the Middle East, according to the report, "Female Genital Mutilation/Cutting: A statistical overview and exploration of the dynamics of change."'

Knowing when enough is enough

Matt · 24 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Not unrelated to the topic of this MANN post, see this story and watch the video. Speaks for itself. Far too many men routinely put up with this kind of behavior. It's one thing to get angry with your mate and have some kind of argument. It's another thing entirely to act like this. Good for him that he's finally said "Enough". Excerpt:

'"After dealing with her drinking problems ("she is on probation for a DUI"), trying to patch things up through marriage counseling ("she showed up 10 minutes late and left"), and suffering in silence while she repeatedly tried "to convince all of her friends that I was always yelling and cussing," Jim decided to call it a day," the website notes.

Further, Jim reportedly later clarified about the circumstances surrounding the tantrum and whether he promised to take her to the lake previously.

"Didn't promise anything at all. In fact, I had worked 60 hours that week and told her all week that [S]aturday was my day to get stuff done around the house," he wrote. "But as usual she threw a fit about it. She has broken doors off the jambs at our house…That was the last day I lived in our house. I have moved out and filed a restraining order against her."'

Cornelia Pillard nominated to DC Circuit Court of Appeals

Mastodon · 24 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I was amazed (though I shouldn't have been) to learn of Pillard's pet legal theory — that abstinence-only sex education is unconstitutional. Pillard wants federal judges to require "egalitarian sex education." What does that mean?

"Egalitarian sex education should recognize the realities of sex-based subordination and harm even while it strongly counters sex-based stereotypes and double standards. It should acknowledge and oppose male-on-female aggression and the larger system of gender hierarchy that such aggression exemplifies and sustains. It should also, however, recognize that boys and men, too, are frequently harmed by sexual aggression, and that girls and women can be the moving force behind irresponsible or otherwise harmful sex. And it should always–especially as applied to young people—express hope that old patterns will change."
...
Pillard is also a pro-abortion extremist. The right to an abortion, she argues, is necessary to help to "free[] women from historically routine conscription into maternity." She also contends that men and women who oppose government mandates on employers to provide insurance coverage for contraception "reinforce[] broader patterns of discrimination against women as a class of presumptive breeders."'

Wikipedia on Cornelia Pillard

The gender gap on college campuses

Mastodon · 24 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The dominance of female students at U.S. colleges these days is hardly a secret, but the extent of it sometimes is staggering.

An acquaintance who teaches honors seminars at Colorado State University recently told me, for example, that "last year, of 21 in my seminar, there were four boys. The year before, there were three.

"So not only do more women graduate," explained English professor David Milofsky, "but the best students tend to be women" as well.

...

Now maybe this development is purely positive, with no discernible downside. That seems to be President Barack Obama's view. In an op-ed last month celebrating the 40th anniversary of Title IX, which banned gender discrimination in education, the president wrote, "In fact, more women as a whole now graduate from college than men. This is a great accomplishment — not just for one sport or one college or even just for women but for America. And this is what Title IX is all about. ... We have come so far. But there's so much farther we can go. There are always more barriers we can break and more progress we can make."'

Kathleen Parker commentary: Let's encourage men to behave better, not women to be worse

Mastodon · 24 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Redemption is in the air, we keep hearing. Americans don't care about a person's sex life because, well, they have one, too, and, hey, we all have weeds in our garden.
...
Our available data on the double standard is limited in part because fewer women than men are in public office. But also, in the main, women don't behave as men do. The male libido is simply greater, which accounts for both the Sistine Chapel and Attila the Hun.

Popular culture seems determined to change this timeless truth by encouraging girls to be more like boys, and vice versa. The stakes are clear: If girls can be portrayed as just as bad as boys, then males have no obligation to mitigate their natural dominant, exploitive inclinations.

There has been some measureable success in this regard. Recent reports indicate that college-age girls are increasingly promoting casual sex these days. Even so, no woman in public office thus far has texted her Very Own Self to strangers, as Anthony Weiner did.
...
There is never, ever "only" sex, especially for women, who are, indeed, different than men. We can argue otherwise until all the little dissertations cry " oui, oui, oui" all the way home. But the fact that the double standard persists in the human psyche, not to mention nature, demonstrates this unfair truth. This is why we have laws to level the playing field.

Perhaps the next step in this evolutionary process is not to make women more like men to neutralize the double standard but to place more women in public office, the better to demonstrate the behaviors necessary to maintaining a civil society.'

Men and Women are the Same — Except when Women are Better

Mastodon · 24 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why are some men generous while others are stingy? An interesting article titled "Why Men Need Women" in the New York Times recently claims the presence of females make males more generous.
...
Presumably, this is an interesting, feel-good article that makes us all happy that there are males and females who complement each other by playing their specific gender roles. But wait just one second.

Liberals tell us all the time that – as in a recent BuzzFeed article — that men and women are the same. This recent New York Times article, for example, claims, "Whether a family has one parent or two, and whether those parents are of opposite sexes or the same, doesn't matter." An NPR piece claims we're finally experiencing the "end of gender."
...
So, which is it, liberals? Are men and women the same? Or, as the New York Times article claims, are they so different that women's mere presence increase levels of generosity in men?
...
Of course, normal people know the answer to this question. There are differences between men and women – we work together in complementary ways as irreplaceable partners. There's something deeply negative about breaking up the male/female alliance – whether through divorce, death, or a society pretending away obvious distinctions.

But there's a problem when the Left shoves nonsensical ideology down people's throats.

They just can't keep their story straight. The left says gender doesn't matter, except when it does. And it only matters when women are better than men. (Can you imagine the outrage that would ensue over a New York Times article called "Why Women Need Men?") We've been told countless times that "a woman needs a man as much as a fish needs a bicycle."

But snarky analogies aside, it's ironic that the self-described "reality-based community" embraces only those realities it finds comforting. Turns out, for all the Left's elitism, they're more like the rest of us than they might like to realize. After all, isn't one of the central challenges of the human condition learning to see past your own prejudices to embrace uncomfortable truths?

But in the world of the New York Times, uncomfortable truths are for others to ponder. They've got it all figured out.

Girls rule.'

"National Poll Finds Overwhelming Support for Economic Proposals That Aid Women"

Mastodon · 24 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"When women succeed, America succeeds."

That was the message last week from Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, who, with her House colleagues, is promoting legislation to achieve pay equity for women, make child care more affordable and encourage a better work-family balance for women.

And now a new national poll by the Women's Voices Women Vote Action Fund shows overwhelming support for measures to aid the nation's working women.

The poll, sponsored by the Women's Voices Women Vote Action Fund and conducted by Greenberg Quinlan Rosner Research and Democracy Corps, found that:

- 90 percent of American voters favor policies that would help women get equal pay for equal work, and that would raise wages for women and families
- 87 percent favor expanding access to scholarships so women can train for the jobs of the future
- 75 percent support expanding access to affordable childcare for working moms
- 72 percent support expanding paid family, maternity, and sick leave for working families

The poll results confirm that the vast majority of voters -- men and women -- support common-sense approaches to raise pay, benefits and opportunities for working women. Now that women are the primary breadwinners in a record 40 percent of U.S. households, helping working women is ultimately about helping American families.'

Campaign encourages ‘healthy masculinity’ in the Oil Patch

Mastodon · 24 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WATFORD CITY, N.D. – A national campaign will debut in Watford City next week to encourage men in the Oil Patch to take a stand against domestic violence.

A town hall meeting called Healthy Masculinity and the Patch is set for 10 a.m. July 31 in Watford City, one of six events planned around the country by the Healthy Masculinity Action Project.

The campaign aims to prevent sexual assault and violence by engaging men as allies and encouraging men and women to discuss stereotypical gender roles, said Jennifer Weisgerber, one of the event’s coordinators.'

"Time to get tough! Save America's masculinity"

Mastodon · 24 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys want to be heroes. They intrinsically want to save the girl and the world.

My intention is not to offend the new breed of women who resist heroic chivalry, but I am unapologetic in my belief that boys should be trained to be men who want to provide for and defend women. Teach them to be the knight in shining armor who fights to save the princess. There is a sense of pride and self-worth that only comes from providing for and taking care of a woman. Don't steal this amazing feeling away from a boy who wants to be some girl's hero.

I completely agree that women should have equal rights, but I still also believe that men should still be expected to provide for, serve, protect and defend their princess. It's crazy that this behavior offends some people. Not raising boys to become men who are encouraged and expected to behave this way robs them of their natural desire to be heroes. Boys should not be scared to display heroic and chivalrous behavior because someone may be offended. It's OK for boys to be boys and girls to be girls.

Encourage boys to serve, respect, protect and provide for the women (mothers, sisters, wives, grandmas, aunts, girlfriends) in their lives. Give them the opportunity to develop their inner hero early. This country needs manly heroes who unapologetically respect, serve, provide for and defend their women.'

Higher Education: Brainwashing 101

Mastodon · 24 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"For all we hear about faculty ideological or political bias," wrote Shibley, "campus administrators are often worse when it comes to brainwashing students." A radical feminist agenda has permeated the culture of colleges and universities, large and small, in the East and West, and in the heartland of America. In the fall of 2010, Hamilton College in New York required all male freshman students to attend a "She Fears You" presentation to make them aware of the "rape culture" of which they were allegedly a part and of the need to change their "rape supportive" beliefs and attitudes.

"Did Hamilton warn incoming female students of the campus 'rape culture' before it took their tuition?" wrote Shibley. "I doubt it. But publicity did force administrators to make the seminar optional — just minutes before it started."'

Rabbinical group aims to standardize circumcision in Europe and defend the practice

Mastodon · 24 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A European rabbinical group has created a union of mohalim, or ritual circumcisers, in an effort to standardize ritual circumcision and combat attempts to ban it.

Based on the model of Britain's Initiation Society, the Union of Mohalim in Europe seeks to "unite approved mohalim across Europe under a single banner, ensuring that all communities can be assured of the high level of training and regulation," according to a statement released Wednesday by the Conference of European Rabbis.
...
In December 2012, German lawmakers passed a law that guarantees parents the right to circumcise boys for religious reasons. The vote followed a court ruling in Cologne that defined ritual circumcision as causing "bodily harm." The ruling led to partial bans on circumcision in Germany, Austria and Switzerland and intensified the heated debate over the issue in Scandinavian countries and beyond.'

Kenya: Men to get cash, food prizes for circumcision

Mastodon · 24 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Kenya National Male Circumcision task force and players in the Voluntary Medical Male Circumcision have launched a pilot study to lure men within 24-49 years to circumcision. The initiative is aimed at circumcising male adults.

The awareness will start at greater Nyando before being rolled out to other parts of the region. The initiative will also provide food incentives, cash and shopping vouchers to families of those willing to be circumcised to entice more men to be circumcised.

Project director Kawango Agot said researchers will map out the village and provide volunteers with consent form that is upgraded to voucher or cash after they avail themselves for circumcision.'

New Jersey governor unveils college scholarships in construction fields exclusively for women and minorities

Mastodon · 24 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women and minorities who want to work in construction-related fields will be eligible for $2,000 in tuition assistance at New Jersey's county colleges under a new scholarship program launched today.

Gov. Chris Christie unveiled the Governor's Industry Vocations Scholarship for Women and Minorities program at an event on the campus green at Burlington County Community College in Mount Laurel. The scholarships — known as NJ-GIVS — will allow students to enroll in non-degree certificate programs at the state's 19 county colleges.

...

The scholarships represent the first time state financial aid is being offered to New Jersey students in certificate programs that do not lead to a degree. Women and minorities are being targeted for the money because they are historically underrepresented in the construction industry, state officials said.

NJ-GIVS will be funded with money the New Jersey's Schools Development Authority must set aside from all of its school district construction contracts.'

UK: Free training offered to draw women into construction sector

Mastodon · 24 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

And another one here. Excerpt:

'An employment programme in Lambeth is aiming to tackle the lack of women in construction by offering a dedicated course to help kick start new careers in the industry.

Women make up just 10% of the construction workforce with just 1% in manual professions, despite the industry being one of the biggest and most important in the UK.

Now Live Train is offering a free programme, starting with a trade taster day on the 23 July, for potential candidates to try their hand at a number of construction trades including carpentry, tiling, bricklaying, plumbing and plastering.'

Foreskins and profit

Matt · 25 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Why this intense push to circumcize as many men as possible anywhere men can be convinced/bribed/forced into allowing this to be done to them? Read about it here. As always, follow the money. Excerpt:

'In an article for The Tyee, Dr. Paul Tinari estimated that a single male foreskin can be worth upwards of $100,000. He argued that men who are circumcised have a right to the revenue made off the resale of their foreskins (just as someone who sells their hair for wigs would, for example).

But that's not the only issue in the debate over how people use and profit from foreskins. Many people are challenging the ethics and medical necessity of male circumcision, which means that any use of the foreskins after that is also in question. Then there's the fact that foreskins aren't just being sold for the medical flesh trade; rather, they're joining a few other body parts being sold in the service of vanity. And if the ethics of using human body parts, skin and stem cells for medical research and treatments are contentious, the ethics of using them for vanity's sake is a whole other conundrum.'

SAVE: For Unethical Maine Prosecutor, Did the Punishment Fit the Offense?

Matt · 25 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / July 24, 2013 – Following announcement of the imposition of light sanctions on prosecutor Mary Kellett, the Center for Prosecutor Integrity is asking whether the punishment was sufficient, considering the severity of the offense.

Last week, Maine Supreme Court Justice Ellen Gorman announced that ADA Mary Kellett would have her license suspended for 30 days, but then stayed the suspension on the condition that Kellett complete six hours of continuing legal education.

Gorman's decision followed the decision of a Maine Board of Overseers of the Bar panel which found Kellett had violated seven rules of professional conduct. Following an in-depth investigation, the three-member panel termed Kellett's conduct in a sexual assault case to be "inexcusable" and recommended suspension of her license. The panel found Kellett had concealed exculpatory evidence and misled the jury in her closing arguments.'

North Carolina law: "Assault On a Female"

Matt · 25 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Bizarre enough: a crazy guy breaks into a woman's home and offers to give her a backrub. In no way am I defending his scary, bonkers behavior. What I am doing is pointing out that N. Carolina actually has a separate law called "Assault On A Female". When the law was brought before the NC Court of Appeals in 1979, the judges upheld it, saying it didn't violate the Equal Protection Clause. Feminists decry sexism enshrined in law, but only if it goes against women. Where are their objections to laws going the other way? Excerpt:

'In reaching this conclusion, we do not find it necessary to rely upon the numerous works documenting and attempting to quantify various social factors and which tend to establish that men, particularly in conjugal settings, assault women more frequently and more violently than women assault men, while women more frequently submit to such violence. We base our decision instead upon the demonstrable and observable fact that the average adult male is taller, heavier and possesses greater body strength than the average female. We take judicial notice of these physiological facts, and think that the General Assembly was also entitled to take note of the differing physical sizes and strengths of the sexes. Having noted such facts, the General Assembly could reasonably conclude that assaults and batteries without deadly weapons by physically larger and stronger males are likely to cause greater physical injury and risk of death than similar assaults by females. Having so concluded, the General Assembly could choose to provide greater punishment for these offenses, which it found created greater danger to life and limb, without violating the Fourteenth Amendment.'

Boys Are Slighted When It Comes To 'Teaching Time'

Mastodon · 25 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If there are fewer than 50% females in physics, that is a call to action, argues virtually ... everyone in academia. We need greater outreach for girls, we need to change classes to appeal to them, we need to fund campaigns to convince women who are inclined to be doctors and help people to instead work in a lab, we are told.
...
Lost in the culture war are young boys. Young boys in school have no policy makers fighting over them. Christina Hoff Sommers wrote a book on the topic, "The War On Boys", which made the case that we spend so much time and money trying to help females that we are neglecting young men. The implicit belief is they will somehow make it anyway.
...
That culture war on males has been successful - now it has even invaded the home environment. Shankar Vedantam, writing at NPR, discusses the paper Boy-Girl Differences in Parental Time Investments: Evidence from Three Countries by Michael Baker and Kevin Milligan. They say that, as children age, parents are now spending more 'teaching time' with girls than boys - and boys are suffering due to that gender bias against them. It's vaguely sexist to insist girls need something super-special to succeed in math - Larry Summers got fired from Harvard for saying that girls might need more help in math. Yet it is evidence of the old truism that stereotypes and favoritism are okay as long as it's positive.'

UK: Boys Wear Skirts To School To Protest Dress Code

Mastodon · 25 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Whitchurch High School in Cardiff, Wales, banned male students from wearing shorts despite sweltering summer temperatures, a group of teenage boys took matters into their own wardrobes and, rather than staging a sit-in, they did one better:

A skirt-on.

According to The Mirror, a group of 17 Year-10 students donned the typically feminine outfits in protest of the school's draconian dress code.

"Girls can wear skirts, so I don't see why we can't wear shorts. It's a reasonable protest," said Tyrone Evelyn, 15, a spokesman for the group. "It's just appropriate for the weather -- we don't want to be hot and bothered."'

NPO: Historic Change in New Hampshire Child Support Guidelines

Matt · 25 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Effective July 1, 2013, for the first time in New Hampshire's history, the child support percentage will vary depending upon how much the parents earn. Under the new Child Support Guidelines, the more the parents earn, the lower the percentage of their monthly income they will pay for child support. Child support paid will be based on the percent of combined net income devoted to child support and the number of children in the same household for which child support is paid.

This change is the result of a 2009 economic analysis prepared by the University of New Hampshire Department of Health and Human Services/Division of Child Support Services.

The analysis determined that as income increases, the proportion of income spent on supporting a child decreases. As a result, the guidelines were changed to decrease in the percentage of child support to be paid as the combined net income for the parties increase.'

Kansas sperm donor asks for judgment without trial

Mastodon · 25 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Topeka man being pursued for child support by the state after he donated sperm to a lesbian couple is asking a judge to rule in his favor before a trial.

An attorney for William Marotta filed a motion this week in Shawnee County District Court asking for the summary judgment for his client, contending that the Kansas Department for Children and Families is asking the court to do “what no court has ever done” in concluding that a sperm donor is a father when neither the donor nor the biological mother is seeking that result.

The state contends that Marotta must pay child support because he is the father of a girl born to a lesbian couple in 2009. Marotta argues that he and the couple signed a contract waiving his parental rights and responsibilities.

The state filed a motion in May seeking a summary judgment in its favor. Timothy Keck, a co-counsel for the state, contended in that motion that the contract between Marotta and the couple was invalid because they didn’t follow a Kansas law that requires a licensed physician to perform the artificial insemination in cases involving sperm donors.'

KFC's "Hot Shots" face-slapping ad needs MRA attention

siddhartha1947 · 25 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

KFC has a new ad with a woman slapping a man. Not amusing. If it were the other way around it would have been gone the next day after it aired. We must contact networks with programming that shows men being assaulted to make our feelings known.

KFC Contact Info:

KFC Corporate
1900 Colonel Sanders Ln
Louisville, KY 40213
(502) 874-8300

Contact form: here.

Note KFC is owned by Yum! Brands. Their investor contact info page is here.

Recent research exposes "uncomfortable evidence" challenging preconceptions about male/female sex drive differences

Matt · 26 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As they enrolled in the study, Chivers' subjects identified themselves as straight or lesbian. They were shown images of sex between men and women, women and women, men and men, and a pair of bonobos (a species of ape). The subjects, straight and lesbian, were turned on right away by all of it, including the copulating apes. While they watched, they also held a keypad on which they rated their own feelings of arousal. So Chivers had physiological and self-reported scores. They hardly matched at all. Chivers' objective numbers, tracking what's technically called vaginal pulse amplitude, soared no matter who was on screen and regardless of what they were doing, to each other, to themselves. The keypad contradicted the plethysmograph entirely. The self-reports announced indifference to the bonobos. But that was only for starters. When the films were of women touching themselves or enmeshed with each other, the straight subjects said they were a lot less excited than their genitals declared. During the segments of gay male sex, the ratings of heterosexual women were even more muted.
...
In the end, recent science and women's stories left me with pointed lessons: that women's desire – its inherent range and innate power – is an underestimated and constrained force, even in our times. That, despite the notions our culture continues to imbue, this force is not, for the most part, sparked or sustained by emotional intimacy and safety. And that one of our most comforting assumptions – soothing perhaps above all to men, but clung to by both sexes – that female eros is much better made for monogamy than the male libido, is scarcely more than a fairytale.'

HuffPost takes on "Men: The New Second Class Citizens"

Matt · 26 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. A lot of commentary from Warren Farrell. Caption:

'Suzanne Venker's op-ed for Fox News argues men are becoming second class citizens as a result of a biased education system, the man-bashing media, and female advancement. Could the emphasis on equalization has in fact created a male crisis?'

Phillipines: Anti-domestic violence act is not husband-bashing, hate men law

Mastodon · 26 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MANILA, Philippines—The Supreme Court has affirmed the constitutionality of the country's Anti-Violence Against Women and Their Children Act, as it threw out a petition labelling it as a "husband-bashing" and "hate men" law.

In a 37-page decision released Friday, the high court, through Associate Justice Estela Perlas-Bernabe, dismissed petition filed by a certain Jesus Garcia, who said that the law, Republic Act 9262 otherwise, violated the equal protection and due process clause of the Constitution.

Garcia went to the Supreme Court after the Court of Appeals affirmed the Temporary Protection Order issued by the Bacolod City Regional Trial Court in favor of his wife.

...

In his petition, Garcia insisted that he should be appraised of the case filed against him. He also expressed fear of being stripped of family, property, money, children, job, future employment and reputation.

The high court, however said it is merely a "product of an overactive imagination."

The Supreme Court further said that Garcia failed to show concrete evidence and convincing arguments that would warrant the declaration of the Anti-VAWC law as unconstitutional.

"Courts must assume that the legislature is ever conscious of the borders and edges of its plenary powers, and passed laws with full knowledge of the facts and for the purpose of promoting what is right and advancing the welfare of the majority," the high court said.'

Woman who reported false rape at UCSC sentenced to three years probation

Mastodon · 26 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SANTA CRUZ -- A 20-year-old woman who filed a false rape report at UC Santa Cruz was sentenced Thursday to three years probation with limits on Internet access.

Morgan Triplett did not appear in court Thursday when Santa Cruz County Superior Court Judge John Gallagher imposed the sentence. Triplett's public defender Jack Lamar entered a no contest plea on her behalf.

She was sentenced to three years probation, 60 days in jail, 200 hours of community service and 60 hours of mental health counseling, Gallagher ruled. She also was banned from using the Internet to facilitate criminal activity for the length of her probation and ordered to write a letter of apology to UC Santa Cruz.'

Charge against woman over false rape claim dismissed

Mastodon · 26 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A judge has dismissed a felony charge against a woman accused of falsely reporting that she was raped by a former boyfriend.

Judge G. Todd Baugh has granted a defense motion to dismiss a charge of fabricating evidence filed against Christina Nadine Nelson.

The judge said in an order issued Tuesday that evidence clearly showed Nelson lied when she reported the rape to police and hospital staff, but the prosecution's reliance on a report from a sexual assault examination is misplaced.
...
A review of Nelson's medical records showed she made four other similar reports in recent years.'

Plea agreement slated in 2012 false rape case

Mastodon · 26 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A St. George resident charged with falsely reporting she was raped on a jogging trail and later falsely obtaining public funds for therapeutic services is scheduled to enter a possible plea agreement with prosecutors.

Sarah Elizabeth Rutz, 26, told police she was sexually assaulted by a stranger on the path that crosses below street level near the intersection of Sunset Boulevard and Dixie Drive on May 2, 2012. During a followup hospital visit, officers collected suspect DNA evidence from Rutz that did not match her husband's, and began a months-long investigation based on the information Rutz provided, including a sketch artist's drawing.
...
In September, investigators alleged Rutz had not been raped, contrary to her reports. They charged her with a felony count of filing a fraudulent crime victim reparations claim and three misdemeanor counts of false information to law enforcement.'

Sweden: Female cop suspected of assaulting Swedish drunk

Matt · 26 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the attack, which occurred in central Stockholm and was caught on camera, the woman is seen hitting a drunken man fourteen times with her baton while her dog snaps at him and bites him. She continually tells the man to "lie down", which he ignores, trying instead to fend off the dog and the woman.

Eventually he lies down bleeding while the police officers pacifies the dog and calls for an ambulance.

The policewoman, who is currently on holiday, will be reassigned when she returns to work, according to DN.

The man who is beaten in the video is also suspected of assault, making illegal threats, causing damages, and drug crimes. He was never detained during the incident, which occurred on a Friday night in mid-July.'

Murder charges dropped against widow in Georgia day care killing case

Matt · 27 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- A Georgia judge signed off Friday on the prosecution's request to drop all murder charges against Andrea Sneiderman, whom authorities have said conspired with her boss to have her husband killed.

Prosecutors said the murder charges against Sneiderman were "unjust and unethical" because they weren't positive they could prove them.

Before the decision, Sneiderman was facing malice murder, felony murder and aggravated assault charges related to the death of her husband, Rusty. All three were dismissed.

Prosecutors will continue to pursue four counts of perjury, seven counts of making false statements to law enforcement officials and one count of hindering the apprehension of a criminal.
...
If convicted of the lesser charges, Sneiderman could still face a sizable prison sentence. One conviction of perjury carries a possible sentence of five to 10 years under Georgia law.
...
Hemy Neuman, the gunman who also was Andrea Sneiderman's boss and alleged lover, is serving life in prison for the slaying. A jury found him guilty but mentally ill in March 2012.'

What it looks like when men stop doing what men do

Matt · 27 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I saw this recent article on Detroit. Not unrelated to this MANN post, in my comment I pointed out that when men can't, won't, or are unable to maintain civilization, you get fairly predictable dire results. In these danger zones that parts of Detroit have turned into, if men in Detroit decided to reclaim them and establish law and order, they'd be functioning again at least as safe places to live. It's expected that men would fulfill that role; notice some continue to try, underpaid and badly-equipped police and firefighters (men, of course) are still trying to keep civilization going. But where are the women stepping up to assume such roles, who gain so much from the civilized state? Not to be found. Creating and maintaining civilization is a responsibility that remains collectively on men's shoulders, yet so many of its benefits are heavily channeled to women. Excerpt:

'The latest trend? When a person is murdered, he is thrown into an abandoned house, and it is set on fire. There are tens of thousands to choose from.

I know of an 11-year-old boy who was shot, the bullet going clean through his arm. The cops stuffed him in the back of a squad car and rushed him to the hospital. That’s how we do it. There was no ambulance available. About two-thirds of the city’s fleet is broken on an average day.

I know a cop who drives around in a squad car with holes in the floorboards. There is no computer, no air-conditioning, the odometer reading 147,000 miles. His bulletproof vest has expired. His pay has been cut 10 percent.

I knew a firefighter who died in a fire, but not from the fire. He died when the roof of an abandoned house collapsed on him and his brethren could not find him because his homing alarm was broken and did not sound. He suffocated. ...

So come visit Detroit, my fellow Americans. Come take a look at your future. Come give the tires a kick. And if you want your money back, come strip copper pipes and wiring from the abandoned buildings — if you can find any copper. Chances are, someone beat you to it.'

'Where's Valerie Solanas When You Need Her? What It Really Means To Man-Hate In 2013'

Mastodon · 27 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The best part about all of this anti-misandry nonsense is that misandry isn't real! There is no such thing as an inveterate systematic hatred of men and there never has been. Misandry exists only as an exaggerated Internet joke and as a way in which women who have been directly or indirectly hurt by men to express their frustration and anger.
...
I am not saying man-hating or declaring yourself as a misandrist is definitively radical since hating men has been and is not abnormal--rather the opposite. To viscerally despise those who indirectly oppress you is nothing new, for women and other minorities. Misandry is only a result and reaction to the invariable hatred of women that has existed for centuries.

If someone is a misandrist, it is not so much a sign of rebellion as it is a condition one has developed out of pure exhaustion with being treated like invaluable piece of meat whose only purpose is to serve as a fuckable or nonfuckable body.'

Ed.: Wikipedia on Valerie Solanas.

The Fed Chairmanship: And just what does gender have to do with it?

Matt · 27 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. At a time when policy missteps at the Fed (not like even qualified Fed chairmen can't make mistakes) will have serious consequences not just for the US but the world, the very last thing that needs to happen is to have any irrelevant factors in the decision of who'll be the next Fed chairman be introduced. Well as even feminists have been saying for decades, what's gender got to do with someone's qualifications? But maybe for today's feminists, it does. Can the rest of us afford this myopia? Excerpt:

'President Obama's choice of a replacement for the Federal Reserve chairman, Ben S. Bernanke, is coming down to a battle between the California girls and the Rubin boys.
...
The choice of a Fed chair is perhaps the single most important economic policy decision that Mr. Obama will make in his second term. Mr. Bernanke's successor must lead the Fed's fractious policy-making committee in deciding how much longer and how much harder it should push to stimulate growth and seek to drive down the unemployment rate.
...
But the choice also is roiling Washington because it is reviving longstanding and sensitive questions about the insularity of the Obama White House and the dearth of women in its top economic policy positions. Even as three different women have served as secretary of state under various presidents and growing numbers have taken other high-ranking government jobs, there has been little diversity among Mr. Obama's top economic advisers.

"Are we moving forward? It's hard to see it," said Ms. Romer, herself a late addition to Mr. Obama's original economic team, chosen partly because the president wanted a woman.'

Maine’s workplace fatalities for 2011 jump 30 percent from previous year

Mastodon · 28 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The danger of being killed while on the job increased in Maine in 2011 compared to the prior year, according to a new report by the Maine Department of Labor.
...
By industry, the “transportation and material moving” sector accounted for seven fatalities (27 percent of the total). “Farming, fishing and forestry” and “construction and extraction” occupations each had four fatalities (31 percent), while “service occupations” had three fatalities (12 percent), according to the report. Eight fatalities were recorded within a broad range of occupational categories.
...
Bourque also said it’s important to remember that the amount of workplace deaths aren’t just numbers.

“It’s tragic,” he said. “People don’t go to work and expect not to make it home, and when they don’t, it’s an incredible tragedy for our society, their families and their workplaces. Every single one of them, in our mind, is preventable. We all need to do more to prevent them.”'

One Safe Place working to end domestic violence against men and women

Mastodon · 28 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the United States, 15 percent of domestic violence reports are against men. However, the CDC says in a conflicting survey it was much higher, 40 percent in fact.

Many men who suffer domestic violence don't say anything because of the stigma attached and the lack of resources available. One safe place is working to change that. With the recent rise of domestic violence in Shasta County, the center is hoping to reach out to everyone affected by abuse.

"Men are abused also, and that's why the Shasta Women's refuge and Justice Center recently changed their name to One Safe Place," said One Safe Place Director of Client Services Michael Burke.

Since the recent name change, Burke says more men have come in for help.

"It's not just about women and families it's about men and people in dating violence, about any type of family violence or sexual assault that happens in our community," said Burke.'

Pentagon considering affirmative action in combat

Mastodon · 28 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Senior military personnel are considering giving women different military training than men, The Washington Times reports.

The effort was proposed by Massachusetts Democrat Rep. Niki Tsongas at a recent House Armed Services Committee hearing because so far, she says training systems do not “maximize the success of women.”

Though the armed services have promised that combat standards will be the same regardless of gender, senior officers are considering initially separate training systems.

Army Lt. Gen. Howard Bromberg, serving as deputy chief of staff for personnel, considers separate training programs to be more about considering all soldiers as individuals, citing a need to explore how the training process works.'

India: ‘Rape count up on false cases’

Mastodon · 28 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A spurt in false cases has earned Delhi notoriety as the country's 'rape capital', a court here observed while acquitting a 75-year-old man of the charge of sexually assaulting his maid. The court said things have come to such a pass after the Nirbhaya gang rape in December that the mere statement of a woman about rape is taken as gospel truth, the accused arrested and chargesheeted.

"This led to an unprecedented surge in filing of false rape cases... It is these false cases which play havoc with the crime statistics, leading to the labeling of Delhi as a rape capital," additional sessions judge Virender Bhat said while acquitting Bhopal Sharma.

The court observed that as acquittals in such cases are hardly ever reported, the falsely implicated persons lose their honour, dignity and status in society, and while these cannot be restored, "these victims" can be compensated so that they can start life afresh.

It also noted that "it is a matter of intense regret that even the frail, sick and aged persons are not spared the false allegation of rape".'

secondclasscitizen.org

Matt · 29 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

MANN received a note from the owner of http://www.secondclasscitizen.org/ letting us know it existed. It addresses divorce and custody issues for fathers. In addition, the site operator hosts another site (http://www.redonkulas.com/) taking on various matters using humorous videos-- humor that nonetheless gets the point across. Consider it NSFW, however, and as the site says, prepare to be offended. Speaking of which, one is hosted here on YouTube doing a matter-of-fact cost analysis of hiring the services of an "escort" weekly vs. the costs associated with being married, then divorced after 7 years and having had two kids.

Ruthlessly analytical and practical. But in today's "modern world", the typical man can't afford to be sentimental when this kind of money's at risk.

The Circumcision Wars: What's a Parent to Do?

Mastodon · 29 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The deadlock began around week 20 of my pregnancy, when my mom casually asked about when and where our son would be circumcised. I presumptuously told her we weren't going to do that. Then I saw the surprised look on my husbands face.
...
To begin working our way towards agreement, we consulted the professionals. Our pediatrician was impossible to read and exasperatingly diplomatic. Either decision would be fine, she assured us. We also learned that the American Association of Pediatrics (AAP) recommends circumcision, but not enough to assert that it should be a routine procedure.

In fact, we got the impression from the AAP's website that it was actually trying to talk us out of its position. According to the AAP, circumcision only "slightly lowers" the risk of urinary tract infections for baby boys, which are already "not common," and while the procedure does prevent penile cancer, they note that that form of cancer is "very rare," which I read as "not worth worrying about." They also present a lot of cons to consider, such as pain and a belief that the procedure can affect sexual pleasure later in life.'

Zambia: US commits $11.4m to support circumcision

Mastodon · 29 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'US President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief (PEPFAR) has committed US$11.4 million to support the Government's national Voluntary Male Medical Circumcision, programme in a bid to reduce HIV infections.

American Ambassador to Zambia Mark Storella said this during the launch of the VMMC programme in chief Nondo's area in Mbala last Thursday.

Mr Storella said men have an extraordinary opportunity through circumcision to reduce the risk of HIV infection by about 60 percent, making circumcision a pillar of HIV prevention.'

S. Africa: Botched Circumcisions Claim 60 Lives in the Eastern Cape

Mastodon · 29 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Circumcision season usually starts from May and continues until around the end of the mid-year school holidays in July depending on the area. This is a difficult time for the young boys who go to initiation schools hoping to come out as men. It's a particularly challenging time for hospitals in the Eastern Cape where the old ritual of circumcision is vigilantly observed. Most of the participants in initiation ceremonies in the Eastern Cape are Xhosa males.

With the Xhosa people of South Africa, circumcision is part of a series of rituals that are performed to facilitate the transition from childhood to manhood. This is a deeply personal and meaningful process that former President Nelson Mandela also took part in. For generations, boys have looked forward to initiation rituals and returning back to their families as healthy and wiser men. However, things do not turn out this way for many young boys in the Eastern Cape and other areas where the tradition is still practiced.

Botched circumcisions often result in permanently damaged private organs and sometimes, even death. Since May, no less than 60 boys and men have died in the Eastern Cape. Half of those passed away after attending initiation schools in the last six weeks. The Holy Cross Hospital is the closest hospital to a few of the initiation schools in the Eastern Cape. According to media reports, the hospital has a high admission rate for injured initiates.'

Letter: Gender quotas patently unfair

Mastodon · 29 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'MALE candidate awarded job instead of better-qualified female candidate': if this headline appeared in your newspaper, it would justifiably stir up a torrent of criticism, letters and comments denigrating the relevant institution and signalling disapproval at the blatant sexism and unfairness of the appointment.

But it would be the lack of logic that would ultimately indict the awarding body: if one candidate is stronger than the other, then surely the job should be awarded to the former.

The principle that emerges from this example is that the sex of the strongest candidate should be irrelevant. Most people would agree that this is correct.'

For men, “leaning out” just isn’t an option

Mastodon · 29 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

While Sheryl Sandberg and the pro-women movement encourage women to “lean in,” what’s never discussed is the relentless pressure men feel to not “lean out.”

I came across an article recently that talked about the damaging effects men face from a lifetime of being told to “Be a man. Stop being such a fag.” and “Grow a pair” that made me think about how we assume there’s no downside to the expectations of leadership. In order to be considered masculine, as all “real” men are supposed to be, we’re expected to be the alpha dog, to take charge, and, when necessary, to fight. For men with families, there’s an expectation to be the breadwinner, and they live with the pressure of being the last, and sometimes the only, line of defense between their children sleeping in a warm bed or sleeping in the streets. If the cupboards are bare, and the rent isn’t paid, it is ultimately their responsibility.

Just as it’s difficult for men to understand the challenges women face, I don’t expect most of the women reading this to fully understand the pressures of being a man. It’s one of those seemingly slight societal differences that can’t really be explained and yet feels enormous to the person suffering through it. In fact, many men don’t really grasp the extent of the stress they feel since they’ve never known anything else. ...'

Men's only overflow tent raises questions among homeless--despite there being no problem housing women

Mastodon · 29 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Exception:

'A men's only overflow tent at the homeless shelter on Record Street has some women wondering what their options are.

Sandy Isham with Volunteers of America says, "Historically the need is at least three times larger for men than it is for women."

As Reno's homeless population grows the need for shelter increases. To help prevent people from sleeping on the street, Isham says they have put up an overflow tent, but there's a catch, it's only for men, "There are more men amongst the chronically homeless population, but that's just what we are seeing down here at our campus."
...
Isham says, "If there are no beds available they can sit up at a table in our very nice day area in an air conditioned room that is also safe, because it's staffed 24 hours a day."

Some women don't think this option is very accommodating mainly because there are no beds, but Isham says the number of homeless men is much greater than women and so far only one woman has taken advantage of the room.'

UK: Sex assault allegation was false, police say

Mastodon · 29 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'AN allegation of a sexual assault in an Astley Bridge alleyway was false, police have said.

The incident was said to have happened in an alleyway between two shops in Blackburn Road on Sunday.

It was reported at about 3pm on Sunday and was said to have happened the previous night.

The alley was cordoned off from 3pm yesterday and was under police guard from an officer in a van.

Police said they have now investigated the report and discovered it was not true.
...
It is understood that police are not planning to take any action against the woman because her complaint was not said to be malicious.'

IA: Action needed to stop Cincinnati foreskin removal device "study"

Matt · 30 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

(Please see related MANN items here and here)

HELP US STOP THE CINCINNATI STUDY

For the last several weeks, we've been writing and calling TriHealth Good Samaritan Hospital in Cincinnati, where 200+ babies are being circumcised in a study to determine which circumcision clamp, the Gomco or the Mogen, is "better." How are they determining this? According to the study, by looking at which clamp results in fewer blood-soaked bandages, and by looking at expressions of pain on babies' faces.

We believe this study is a heinous violation of medical ethics and human rights, and we're furious that no one at the hospital has bothered to respond.

They're tuning us out, just like they're tuning out the screams of the babies being cruelly subjected to an unconscionable medical experiment—all in service to the shareholders of a medical instrument manufacturer seeking to profit from bad science in order to sell more circumcision tools.

We need to step up the pressure on this hospital, and we need your help:

Canada: "A Voice for Men's Canadian rape apologist campaign: Hate speech hits our streets"

Mastodon · 30 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The American hate site, A Voice for Men (AVfM), is bringing its toxic message of misogyny and rape apologism to the streets of Canadian cities through a propaganda campaign centred around a grotesque and entirely false narrative that states that it is now men who are the victims of systemic violence and injustice in our country and that demonizes feminism and feminists. They further aim to directly undermine strategies to combat sexual violence against not only women and girls, but also, in fact, against men and boys by denying the gendered reality of the perpetrators of sexual violence of all kinds (regardless of the gender of the victim), who are overwhelmingly male.

The campaign is a set of total lies from start to finish. It is completely analogous to other hate movements historically whose goal is to turn reality entirely on its head, as with Nazis who blamed Jews for Germany's ills or, as happens regularly today, with North American white supremacists who project their own history of violence and brutality upon racialized and marginalized communities and who claim "reverse racism" when people stand up for their rights.'

How not to battle sexual assault in the military

Mastodon · 30 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On June 4, the Senate Armed Services Committee conducted a hearing, during which members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff looked defensive and unpersuasive. Their high-ranking judge advocates general explained why Congress should not remove from military commanders decisions about courts-martial or career-ending nonjudicial punishments for sexual assault and other serious offenses.

...

Mrs. Gillibrand emphasizes women's fear of filing complaints when abusers are in their own chain of command. However, assigning cases to prosecutors elsewhere would not guarantee confidentiality or result in automatic prosecutions or convictions in cases lacking convincing evidence. Instead, cases of sexual assault could be politicized by activists who want to assign "victim" status based on accusations alone, replacing the presumption of innocence with a presumption of guilt.

...

Excluding commanders from disciplinary decisions in serious cases would not reduce incidents of sexual misconduct or add anything to the many options that persons suffering abuse already have. Military prosecutors frequently pursue cases that civilian authorities would ignore. What the legislation could do is shift power to Pentagon feminists and pressure groups who demand their version of "justice" no matter what the evidence shows.

...

Informed military women and legal experts have expressed concern that sensationalized estimates of sexual assault, extrapolated from anonymous surveys, could encourage measures that would make matters worse. In truth, the military is doing a better job on sexual misconduct than civilian colleges and universities.'

Marines Share Frank Views with Hagel on Women in Combat

Mastodon · 30 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CAMP LEJEUNE, N.C. – The 15 sergeants, lieutenants and captains at the Marine Corps infantry school sat at the conference table with Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel to debate changes to the American way of war – in particular, the Pentagon's new decision to integrate women into front-line combat positions.

One first sergeant objected strongly, saying that if women could add anything of value to combat infantry units, they would have been handed those missions long ago.

One staff sergeant worried that the Marine Corps' high standards would have to be lowered if women were assigned to combat. Other Marines in the group agreed, warning that women would not be accepted by their male counterparts living in spartan wartime conditions, or that family lives would suffer, especially for those female Marines hoping to have children.

One lieutenant, however, disagreed with anyone who argued that now is not the right time to start bringing women into combat roles, and several noted that the American armed forces often had led the rest of society, for example, in integrating minorities.

All 15 were forthright, even bold, in expressing their views on a contentious issue with the secretary of defense.

And all 15 of the Marines were women.'

A nation that sends its daughters off to war

Mastodon · 30 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The debate about sending women into combat raises larger questions. Both sides avoid them, but they are perhaps the most important ones. What kind of society sends its women into ground combat? Do we want to be that kind of society? Is sending our daughters, wives, and mothers into combat good for women, for men, or for children? To a certain kind of feminist it is repugnant to ask these questions. We don't ask if we should send men into combat, so we shouldn't ask if we should send women. People who have blinded themselves to the profound and wonderful differences between the sexes are not open to a discussion about the consequences of those differences, and perhaps there is nothing more to say to them. But those people should not set the terms of the public debate. The American people need to stop pretending that sending women into combat involves questions no deeper than how far they can carry a seventy-pound rucksack.'

Selective Service update long overdue

Mastodon · 30 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A spot currently running on the radio in Connecticut reminds young men they are required by law to register for the draft when they're 18 and warns them of the consequences if they don't.

If you don't register, you won't get a government job or get into a government training program and you won't be eligible for a federally funded student loan.

Unmentioned is the threat of being imprisoned for up to five years or fined up to a rather impressive $250,000, for failing to sign up for what amounts to no more than a waiting list or database in the event the draft is ever revived. No one's been prosecuted under the law since 1986.

Also note the message refers to men 18 and older; women don't have to register even though they are now equal members of the military.
...
But equal treatment includes the right to be drafted and if Congress fails to act with some speed, the courts will surely be asked to intervene. In 1981, the Supreme Court found the exclusion of women from the draft was justified because they were also excluded from combat, so the result of a new challenge is pretty predictable.'

Nursing home wins award for domestic violence awareness video

Mastodon · 30 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Faulkner State Community College's nursing division brought home an international first place award for its video “Shattered,” which seeks to raise awareness about the dangers and prevalence domestic violence.

Members of the nursing division traveled to San Francisco, Calif. to accept the award and perform their original script live at the 2013 Human Patient Simulator Network (HPSN) conference. The video was created using the iStan human simulator, a lifelike tool that helps nursing students practice a variety of tasks.

In the video, which was filmed in front of an audience at the college, a man is shown stabbing his wife. She calls 911, and nursing students work to save her life (in the hospital scene, the woman is actually the iStan human simulator).'

"Shattered" by Faulkner State Community College Division on YouTube here.

Kenya: Woman kills husband over plans to marry a second wife

Mastodon · 30 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Residents of Matisi Estate in Kitale were thrown into mourning when an 18-year-old woman allegedly stabbed her husband to death to protest his plans to marry a second wife.

The woman is said to have quarrel led with her husband on Saturday night opposing the second marriage.

A neighbour, who alerted residents, said that on Sunday morning a fight ensued before the woman picked a kitchen knife and stabbed her husband.

The neighbour said the woman had complained that her husband had secretly brought into their home and slept with another woman while she was away.

Kitale OCPD Kimani Mitugo said the woman was in custody and will be arraigned in court today.'

Stabbing suspect turns self in, claims self-defense

Mastodon · 30 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Trotwood woman wanted in the stabbing death of a man in Moraine on Sunday turned herself in to authorities Wednesday.

Her attorney said she is a victim of domestic violence and acted in self defense. Dayton attorney John H. Rion said his client did not come forward initially because she feared being bullied by police.

Moraine detectives say 39-year-old Chantell Spears stabbed Delshaun Jones, 32, during a dispute outside of 3605 Charlotte Mill Drive Sunday morning. They said Jones, who has a child with Spears, was visiting a female at that address when he was attacked around 5:30 a.m. Jones was rushed to Kettering Medical Center where he died.'

Police: Woman Lied About Rape

Mastodon · 30 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SUFFIELD — A woman who police say lied about being raped by a masked intruder had actually slashed her body and choked herself with a dog collar in an effort to create "convincing" injuries, according to an affidavit for her arrest.

The woman, Kelly M. Wilson, 29, of 611 Thrall Ave. was arrested July 3 and charged with second-degree falsely reporting an incident, second-degree making a false statement, and misuse of the 911 emergency system. She is free on $50,000 bond and is scheduled to be arraigned in Enfield Superior Court on July 16.

The incident occurred on April 14 when Wilson called police and reported that a man had attacked her in her home, according to the affidavit.'

UK: Twin boys reveal sexual abuse by "respectable debutante" and her friends

Matt · 31 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cradling a twin in each arm, the photo of Jill Dudley tells a deceptive story. A former debutante and distant relative of post-war British prime minister Clement Attlee, she appears the epitome of a contented Sixties upper middle-class housewife and mother.

Other photographs of her identical twins Alex and Marcus confirm the impression of a seemingly idyllic, innocent childhood growing up in a beautiful Elizabethan home in Sussex.

...

But hard though it is to believe, their seemingly loving mother was nothing of the sort. Monstrously, she was sexually abusing her little boys.

Today, Alex and Marcus Lewis - now 49 - are still coming to terms with this dark secret, which was for so long buried within the heart of their family.

...

'It would be easy to label her as mentally ill or a monster, but it's not that simple. You could put any label on her and it wouldn't be enough.'

To look at the twins, you would never imagine they could have been the victims of such horrors.

Or that, even more distressingly, their mother occasionally 'passed them around' male friends in London, who also abused them.'

Also see related article here.

Jewish Intactivism – A Male Human Rights Movement

Matt · 31 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The last 100 years have been marked by the declaration and protection of universal human rights, and a marked increase in the quality of life, both in America and worldwide. With these improvements, higher expectations regarding a child's right to bodily autonomy have become socially accepted and legally mandated. Many argue that since female children in the U.S. are protected by a 1996 law banning female circumcision, this law should be expanded to include the protection of male children as well. The groups Jews Against Circumcision, Jews for the Rights of the Child and the Israeli Organization Against Genital Mutilation have all endorsed laws that would outlaw child circumcision.

There are an increasing number of Jews who are vocal in questioning both the ethics and the legality of circumcision surgery. Jews in the Reform movement have already been advocating for an end to circumcision during the past 170 years. Influential Jews including radio personality Howard Stern and filmmaker Eli Ungar-Sargon also called for laws against circumcision. What follows is a collection of statements from Jews who question the ethics and legality of forced infant circumcision.'

UK: Woman jailed for "sex with" 14-YO boy

Matt · 31 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. There was so much disgusting stuff just in the story's headline I had to cut it down to just what you see of it above. Excerpt:

'A woman who took a 14-year-old boy to a hotel for sex and got him high on cannabis has been jailed for more than two years.

Natalie Williams, of Darlington, was told by a judge yesterday she had preyed upon the teenager and failed to appreciate why what she had done was so wrong.

The 22-year-old used a bank card he had stolen from his family to pay for the overnight hotel stay and drugs, and regularly withdrew money on it.

Teesside Crown Court heard that after she was arrested, she deliberately got pregnant with a new boyfriend - thought to be an attempt to stay out of prison.

But Judge Simon Bourne-Arton, QC, told her that would not dissuade him from locking her up - because a man who preyed on a young girl would face jail.

He said: 'The law sets out to protect those that are under the age of consent, whether they are boys or girls, from those who would take advantage of their youth.'

NPO: Parenting Coordination Short Lived in Pennsylvania

Matt · 31 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pennsylvania just eliminated the Parenting Coordinator role that it began five years ago. According to The Legal Intelligencer, its demise is related to a couple of high profile cases.

Pennsylvania was one of eleven states with legislation governing parenting coordinators. The other ten states that still have legislated parenting coordinator programs are: Colorado, Florida, Idaho, Louisiana, New Hampshire, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Oregon, Massachusetts, and Texas. As with other areas of family law, the laws and regulations vary by state.'

SAVE: False Accuser Ligia Filler: Why Hasn't She Been Charged with Perjury?

Matt · 31 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

If you've been following our efforts regarding Asst. DA Mary Kellet in Maine, you know that the case started with a false allegation of abuse. Ligia Filler had falsely accused her husband Vladek Filler of abusing her and their children.

In reviewing the Filler case, the court found:

December 3, 2009 - Responding to Ligia's allegation that Vladek had molested their children, the Ellsworth District Court concluded the accusation was "false and known to be false. She [Ligia Filler] has shown a capacity to manufacture claims." (Determination of Ellsworth District Court. Findings at Page 4, Paragraph 1.)

Not only was Ligia a known liar, but Vladek had a serious back problem at the time of the alleged incident, Ligia refused a rape kit examination, and she had no injuries to support her claim.

While we are not happy about Kellet's so-called punishment, it's time to turn our attention to the accuser. People who lie about abuse, like Ligia, rob true victims of their credibility.

Please contact DA Carletta Bassano and politely ask why she hasn't charged Ligia with perjury.

Carletta M. Bassano, District Attorney
Phone: 207-667-4621
E-mail: carletta.bassano-at-da7.org

On behalf of all true victims, thank you for taking action.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

No to ‘modesty bags’ for lads’ mags

Mastodon · 31 July 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

It’s more than a little confusing. One minute feminists are taking to the streets in their hundreds, on so-called slutwalks, to defend their right to be scantily clad. The next they are insisting that lads’ mags’ covers, featuring, er, scantily clad women, should be covered up in pre-sealed ‘modesty bags’ when sold in supermarkets.

Predictably, the first supermarket to cave in to the anti-lads’ mags campaign has been the holier-than-thou Co-op, which yesterday declared that titles such as Zoo and FHM had six weeks to start concealing their products in burqa-style black plastic. In the meantime, the Co-op has already put these ‘lewd’ magazines in hard-to-reach positions, and concealed them with opaque shelving.

But surely this is a violation of press freedom, an attempt to dictate the content of particular publications? ‘Think of the children’, feminists respond. Apparently, the nation’s young are being damaged by the presence of lads’ mags ‘next to the sweets at children’s eye-level’.

Yet, as the Telegraph’s Toby Young has pointed out, even the UK government’s official report into the ‘sexualisation and commercialisation of childhood’, published in 2011, found little evidence of lads’ mags harming children (although it did recommend bagging-up the mags anyway, on the spurious grounds that ‘insufficient evidence to prove conclusively there is harm to children does not mean that no harm exists’).'

Teacher indicted for kindergarten's bully revenge

Mastodon · 1 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Judson school district kindergarten teacher accused of rallying students to line up and hit a disruptive schoolmate could now end up behind bars following her indictment Tuesday for official oppression.

Cynthia Ambrose, 43, was an 11-year veteran at Salinas Elementary in May when authorities said a less experienced kindergarten teacher sought advice for disciplining a 6-year-old student accused of bullying other children. Ambrose's solution, the colleague later told the school district's police department, was to have other students bully the alleged bully.

Official oppression — a charge often applied to police officers who abuse their positions — is a Class A misdemeanor carrying a maximum sentence of a year in jail.

At least seven children struck the targeted student as Ambrose encouraged them, saying “Hit him harder,” and “Teach him why bullying is bad,” authorities alleged.'

Esquire Magazine: "A Jew Against Circumcision"

Matt · 1 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What particularly galls me is the mealy-mouthed dishonesty practiced by the American Academy of Pediatrics, which oh-so-carefully crawls a tightrope spun of silken shite:

"New scientific evidence shows the health benefits of newborn male circumcision outweigh the risks of the procedure, but the benefits are not great enough to recommend routine circumcision for all newborn boys."

The procedure? Ritual genital mutilation. Yes, I have a son, and when he was born, I hired a mohel to cut him. What a dolt I was. An ignorant fundamentalist, nothing more. My wife, born and raised Catholic, had to quash the urge to seize the boy and vanish into the woods behind our house before the mohel began. I wish she had.'

The broken dialogue on men’s rights

Mastodon · 1 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEVER MIND the “war on women:” According to growing numbers of bloggers, activists, and authors — some of them women — it’s males in modern Western society who are under siege and whose rights need defending. Is this the next frontier for gender justice, or a woman-hating backlash? Men’s advocacy raises important and worthy issues that often draw unfair ridicule. Unfortunately, it is also prone to toxic rhetoric that subverts its valid points and alienates potential supporters.

To many, the very notion of “men’s issues” or men’s rights seems laughable. But consider: If women were dying in 90 percent of workplace fatalities and three out of four suicides, would we not see such numbers as troubling—and as legitimate women’s issues? Yet, reversed, the disparities go unnoticed.

Unlike racial profiling of minorities, the disproportionate targeting of males by law enforcement gets no attention (women account for more than a third of illegal drug use but fewer than 15 percent of arrests). And, while men are often presumed dangerous to children, actual female molesters tend to get lenient treatment.'

Raised to hate men: Now what?

Mastodon · 1 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My mother's brand of feminism went from wanting equal rights to wanting to smash the patriarchy, which she defined for my brother and me as "men's historical oppression of women, which they continue to do today." No man could escape complicity, not even little boys, she said. Suddenly, men were the root of all of women's problems and since they had all the power, we had to fight them.

Men were always wrong. Men were aggressors; men were rapists; men were stupid; men were obsessed with their penises; men were responsible for forcing my mother into a heterosexual marriage and motherhood. Mary Daly and Andrea Dworkin had become her prophets. She never once said that "patriarchy" wasn't synonymous with "men." She used the terms interchangeably. She told us we'd been forced on her by the patriarchy and, given the choice, she would not have had us.

...

My mom started encouraging me to "find a nice girl to fool around with." She told me any woman who had sex with men wasn't a feminist. She told me all heterosexual sex was rape "by definition." When I asked her if she meant I was a product of rape, she told me I was "letting myself get raped" every time I had sex with my boyfriend.

...

Misandry as an ironic or non-ironic Feminist pose might be cathartic for a while, but it has nothing to do with achieving equality. And espousing outright hatred and contempt for all men to your children is not a feminist act. It's tantamount to child abuse.'

"Girls commit dating violence as often as boys, studies show"

StayingFit · 1 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Girls are the perpetrators of some form of dating violence nearly as often as boys, surprising new studies show.

More girls – 43 percent – than boys – 28 percent – reported committing an act of physical dating violence, said researchers who are presenting their findings beginning Wednesday at the American Psychological Association's annual meeting. Slightly more boys – 23 percent – than girls – 18 percent – reported perpetrating at least one act of sexual violence.

For her study, Dorothy Espelage, professor of educational psychology at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, and her colleagues conducted a longitudinal study among 625 students starting in grades 5, 6, and 7, and followed them over a period of four years. Researchers interviewed the students at intervals over that time.'

News anchorwoman arrested on suspicion of domestic violence

Mastodon · 2 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Television news anchor Adrienne Alvarez was arrested early Thursday morning on suspicion of domestic violence, officials said.

Alvarez, 28, allegedly was involved in a fight with her husband at about midnight on the 100 block of Desert Garden Drive in Santa Teresa, Doña Ana County Sheriff's officials said.

She was arrested on suspicion of battery against a member of a household, officials said.

She was booked into the Doña Ana County Detention Center. She was released on a $1,000 bond later that day.'

'Mens' rights' activist loses court case that called nightclub's $350 vodka a human rights violation

Mastodon · 2 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One lawyer's quixotic fight for men's equality suffered yet another legal setback when a judge ruled his human rights were not violated by a Chelsea nightclub that made him buy a $350 bottle of vodka to get in.

Manhattan Supreme Court Justice Alexander Hunter wrote this week that Roy Den Hollander was not the victim of age and gender discrimination in 2010 when a bouncer at Amnesia nightclub told the 66-year-old to pay up, while letting a young lady in for free at the same time.

"They all pull the same thing: 'These guys got gray hair, let's charge them some money,'" said the crusading barrister. "They're doing the same thing they did in the Deep South back in the 1950s. Having to buy a $350 bottle of watered down vodka – that's the 'sitting in the back of the bus' for us!"

...

He also sued several Manhattan hot spots including the Copacabana for organizing "ladies' nights" drink specials. The suit was thrown out by federal appeals court in 2010.

He also sued – twice – to halt federal funding of Columbia University's feminist studies program, arguing that feminism constitutes a "modern-day religion." Both were thrown out, most recently by the Second Circuit Court of Appeals last month.'

Women-Only ‘Coworking’ Facility Opens Third Location

Mastodon · 2 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hera Hub, a shared workspace community of several hundred like-minded entrepreneurial women, announces the launch of the third ‘coworking’ space in Carlsbad at 5205 Avenida Encinas. The other two locations are in Sorrento and Mission Valley.

The 4,000-square-foot facility offers a large conference room, several private meeting rooms, and a large, shared workspace.

“We had significant demand for a North County location, with over 170 people on the interest list,” said Felena Hanson, Hera Hub founder. “Memberships will go fast, as we’ll cap at 120. Five days after our July 15th soft launch, we’re already one-third full.”

Hera Hub was founded on the idea that women running small businesses often also have to juggle family life, and therefore feel an affinity with other women in the same situation. Hera Hub provides a supportive environment where women feel they can easily help one another move their business forward. Hera Hub supports its members with networking opportunities, free access to business experts, weekly workshop topics, intensive business education and mentoring programs.'

Science on the Maine coast – for girls only

Mastodon · 2 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FREEPORT – Tucked away on the sprawling land of Wolfe's Neck Farm in Freeport is the Coastal Studies For Girls, a science and leadership school for girls dedicated to experiential learning.

While not quite hidden in plain sight, the school, which leases 8 acres of land from Wolfe's Neck Farm, occupies a unique place in the tri-town area. Entering its fourth year, Coastal Studies for Girls is a semester-long science and leadership school for 10th-grade girls. The school brings girls from around the country to the coast of Maine for 16 weeks during either the fall or spring term of their sophomore year of high school, enabling them to immerse themselves in a challenging and rewarding experience while living in a beautiful coastal landscape that serves as a natural laboratory, according to information provided by the school.'

Jury convicts woman of making false rape report

Mastodon · 2 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ROCKLAND, Maine — A Knox County jury convicted a 30-year-old Rockland woman Thursday of making a false report to police about being sexually assaulted by a former boyfriend.

Octavia Faustini was convicted of two criminal charges — filing a false report and unsworn falsification.

Justice Jeffrey Hjelm said that sentencing likely would be held during the last week of August. Both offenses are Class D crimes, punishable by a maximum of 364 days in jail.

Assistant District Attorney Jeffrey Baroody said he has not yet come up with a recommendation for a sentence.

The jury deliberated for two hours Thursday afternoon in Knox County Superior Court.'

Lawyer blasts teacher's sentence: 'They are boys and she is a woman'

Mastodon · 2 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Redlands high school teacher convicted of having sex with three of her students got off easy because she is a woman, an attorney for one of the victims said.

Laura Elizabeth Whitehurst, 28, pleaded guilty to engaging in sex acts with three boys and was sentenced to one year in jail this week. She had a baby with one of the boys this summer.

She admitted guilt to four counts of unlawful sexual intercourse and two of oral copulation of a person under 18.

"This is a very short sentence for such crimes," said attorney Heather Cullen, whose firm represents the family of the boy who fathered a child with Whitehurst. "It's shocking anyone would face so little time for abusing minors. This is definitely being treated differently because they are boys and she is a woman."

She described the sentence as "a slap in the face to the victims."'

Eyewitness Records Santa Ana Officer Shoot, Kill Unarmed Homeless Man

Matt · 2 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SANTA ANA (CBSLA.com) — An eyewitness recorded cellphone video of a Santa Ana police officer shoot and kill an unarmed 22-year-old homeless man at a shopping center earlier this week.

The witness, who wished to remain unidentified, was standing in the parking lot of the Harbor Place Shopping Center on South Harbor Boulevard around 3 p.m. Tuesday when he said he filmed a confrontation in front of Jugo's La Tropicana between an officer, later identified as a 13-year veteran, and victim Hans Kevin Arellano.

"She exited her patrol car, gun drawn, and asked the gentlemen to get on the ground. The gentlemen didn't get on the ground, he was still inside the restaurant. She asked again. The man then exited the restaurant, and as he was exiting the restaurant, he said, 'What are you gonna do, b—-?' About a second later, she shot him in the chest," he said.'

UK: Boy starved, beaten, poisoned to death by mother and her boyfriend

Matt · 3 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A couple who battered the woman's four-year-old son and left him to die in a locked, unheated box room have been convicted of murder.

The woman and her partner starved Daniel Pelka for months and force-fed him salt during a campaign of physical abuse. A serious case review will now try to establish why a number of opportunities to save the boy's life were missed by authorities, who were convinced by his killers that he was suffering from a rare eating disorder.

Fourteen months before he died in March last year, Daniel became the focus of a police inquiry after his arm was broken. But the file was closed when his killers convinced officers that he hurt himself when he jumped from a sofa at their home in Coventry.'

Don't Be That Feminist

Matt · 3 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Attending the opera in Ottawa a few months ago, I had the kind of experience that once galvanized women to speak out against the sexist put-downs that passed for humor in an earlier era. This time, however, the putative humor was at the expense of men.

“Please silence anything in your possession that may be annoying to those around you,” said our host, an affable radio personality with Canada’s public broadcaster, “That includes cell phones, other electronic devices, your husband …” An approving chuckle ran through the crowd.
...
So unquestioned is the anti-male animus of our time that the only pain considered worthy of attention or collective action is women’s pain.

The pervasiveness of feminist ideas about female innocence was vividly on display a few weeks ago in Edmonton, Alberta, when two rival poster campaigns garnered media attention. "Don’t Be That Guy," an anti-rape campaign by a coalition of women’s groups in conjunction with the RCMP (the Royal Canadian Mounted Police), met with general approval in the mainstream media while outrage greeted “Don’t Be That Girl,” an anti-false-charge campaign by Men’s Rights Edmonton (which one reporter snidely dismissed as a “so-called men’s rights organization”). The difference in the posters’ reception tells us a good deal about the enormous social power of the woman as victim theme in Canada today.
...

As a sexual assault prevention strategy, the posters’ efficacy is dubious—would a hardened rapist reform after seeing them? It seems unlikely—but they are undoubtedly effective in libeling all men as potential abusers despite the fact that the vast majority of men (94-95% according to feminist statistics) bear no blame for sexual assault.'

NFL cheerleader arrested for assault after misrepresenting attack to police

StayingFit · 3 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Megan Welter, the Iraq war vet turned pro-football cheerleader whose inspiring story went viral this week has been arrested on assault charges in Scottsdale, Arizona.
...
Here's what's been reported so far: Welter placed a 911 call to the Scottsdale police at 3am on July 20, explaining that she'd been in a physical altercation with her boyfriend, Ryan, and that they'd both been drinking to celebrate her birthday. "My boyfriend became abusive…He smashed my head into tile," Welter, sounding out of breath and intoxicated, told the emergency operator in the recording of the 911 call, obtained and provided to Yahoo! Shine by RightThisMinute. She added that he had also put her in a "choke hold," and that "He knows how to fight, he's a professional fighter, he's been trained in wrestling."

When police arrived at Welter's house, they interviewed her boyfriend—not identified by the Scottsdale Police Department, which blurred out his face in a video of that exchange, obtained by RightThisMinute. That's when he told police that Welter had actually assaulted him, and that he had recorded the fight on his phone.
...
That video recording, quickly making its way around the web, is grainy and has action that's hard to see, but includes a wobbly-looking Welter pushing and pulling him and screaming, "Who is she?" and demanding her boyfriend's phone as he repeatedly tells her to stop and go inside.'

Report: Woman strikes boyfriend with machete

Mastodon · 3 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'EATONTOWN — A woman reportedly struck her boyfriend in the back of the neck with a machete during a domestic dispute and then fled, police said Friday.

Eatontown Police Sgt. Troy Fowlkes told the Asbury Park Press that the man was taken to Monmouth Medical Center in Long Branch with superficial injuries.

Police did not identify either person involved.
...
The woman faces charges of aggravated assault, possession of an unlawful weapon for an unlawful purpose and domestic charges, Fowlkes said.'

You're never too old to "break bad"

Matt · 3 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Point is not to "pick on an old lady". (Well, she WAS selling Hydrocodone illegally, so really, what's the issue with just reporting it?) It's to show you're not only never too old to break bad, and yet even a woman can do so. Excerpt:

'Meet Pearl Jones.

The 85-year-old Tennessee woman was arrested Tuesday for felony drug distribution and maintaining a dwelling where drugs were being peddled.

While most of her octogenarian peers are enjoying their golden years, Jones was allegedly selling Hydrocodone, the powerful painkiller, from her home, according to a Kingsport Police Department report.

A search of Jones's home turned up "narcotics in addition to evidence" corroborating a police probe "into Jones selling narcotics from this residence."'

Ex-teacher who "had sex with" 16-year-old gets 10 years' probation

Mastodon · 4 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The tattooed Brooklyn ex-teacher who pleaded guilty to sleeping with a 16-year-old football player was sentenced to 10 years probation today.

Erin Sayar, 37, also had to give up her teaching license and register as a Level 1 sex offender.

Sayar was ordered not to have any contact with the teen she pleaded guilty to having oral sex and intercourse with eight times in her office and SUV, while also plying him with pot.

“Do not send anyone to him on your behalf, and there is not to be any electronic communication,” Brooklyn Supreme Court judge Elizabeth Foley told a thin, frail-looking Sayar in court.'

'A Man's Feminism'

Mastodon · 4 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm married to a man who wants that, sure, but his objections to gender inequality go further: Jeremy wants a world where men get the same opportunities as women. Where men are not held to a standard of masculinity, where they hold equal sway in the home and in child-rearing.

...

Then, of course, along came Jeremy. While he would consider himself a feminist, and believes in gender equality, he began pointing out to me the unfairness that sometimes comes with being a modern man. While women have the right to demand not to be seen in a certain way simply because of their gender, men should be able to do so too. Sometimes we would get into philosophical discussions about gender equality that would make me think from his perspective; other times it was Jeremy's own desires, so different from what I expected a standard husband to want, that showed me that women aren't the only ones handed unfair expectations.

...

Suddenly, the excuse "because I'm a woman" didn't hold the power it used to. If you want equality, Jeremy's determined attitude taught me, it has to go both ways. Paternity leave should be just as equally available as maternity. The husband should get a say in decorating the apartment, picking out wedding pictures, all the things I thought I would hold natural dominion over as the wife. Sure, I cook, but he cleans. He does the laundry.

Being married to someone like Jeremy has not only affected how our marriage works, but has also made me more open to the notion of reverse sexism in larger society. When I read an article about how being a stay-at-home dad can be so difficult, I no longer roll my eyes and think, "Whatever, it's way harder being a woman." Instead, I give the theory some weight. Feminism is a necessary movement, but paying attention to gender equality — equality that goes both ways — is just as important.'

Pay-up time for Brawley: '87 rape-hoaxer finally shells out for slander

Mastodon · 4 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Twenty-five years after accusing an innocent man of rape, Tawana Brawley is finally paying for her lies.

Last week, 10 checks totaling $3,764.61 were delivered to ex-prosecutor Steven Pagones — the first payments Brawley has made since a court determined in 1998 that she defamed him with her vicious hoax.

A Virginia court this year ordered the money garnisheed from six months of Brawley's wages as a nurse there.

She still owes Pagones $431,000 in damages. And she remains defiantly unapologetic.'

change.org petition against KFC commercial

Matt · 5 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'In their recent “Hot Shot Bites” commercial, which can be viewed in full at http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mRH9NBcd33k, Kentucky Fried Chicken depicts an act of domestic violence committed against a man by a woman. The man gives his girlfriend a taste of KFC’s product and asks her how she likes it. She responds by slapping him across the face, as the narrator says that the chicken is so spicy that it’s like a slap to the face. While KFC intends for this to be comical, we at Fathers and Families New York believe that depictions of domestic violence should never be a laughing matter. If the genders were reversed, no one would be laughing, and it should be no different here.'

SAVE reports KFC contacted-- they're not pulling the "Hot Shots" ad

Matt · 6 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

Kentucky Fried Chicken has decided to use violence to sell their new Hot Shot Bites product. Their ad (http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=mRH9NBcd33k) shows a woman trying the snack, then slapping a man across the face.

Others have complained to the company, but KFC's reply leaves much to be desired. We're told that one of KFC's attorneys said that he thought 'the smack in the commercial was a metaphor with the smack of the flavor.' When asked if he'd find it acceptable if the roles were reversed, he remained silent. Then he stated that the commercial will continue to air.

Are we going to take this lying down? Heck no!

Contact KFC!

Phone: (502) 874-8300
Email: johncywinski-at-yumyum.com
Change.org Petition (started by F&F New York):
http://www.change.org/petitions/kentucky-fried-chicken-stop-making-light-of-domestic-violence
On behalf of all victims of abuse, thank you,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Ed.: Made this item stick to the top of page 1 and will keep it here until Monday, Aug. 12. KFC needs to get the message.

Women paying alimony-- quick, update those arcane, evil alimony laws

Matt · 6 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Ah, yes. As predictable as the sun in the east every morning. Indeed, time to update alimony laws--they need to be updated out the window, really. But instead you can be pretty sure how they'll get "updated"; it'll look like this: men still pay it, women don't. Excerpt:

'"The laws definitely need to be changed. They aren't working anymore," said Michau, 67, who feels she was penalized in court for working and saving for decades while she says her ex-husband quickly exhausted his retirement savings.

To press for reform, Michau joined a new group, Florida Women for Alimony Reform, who are among those trying once again to present Gov. Rick Scott with a bill they say would modernize the state's archaic alimony statutes.

...

"There are second wives, fiancés, girlfriends, mothers, sisters, and, of course, female alimony payers who are all negatively impacted by the current laws," said Israel, who teaches math at Broward College.

It's becoming more of an issue for some South Florida women. One study showed younger women outearning their male single counterparts and another touted South Florida women as among the national leaders in closing the wage gap.

In fact, women in Broward, Palm Beach and Miami-Dade counties earn closer to what men take home in their paychecks than do women in most U.S. metro areas, the National Partnership for Women & Families found earlier this year. Only Los Angeles and Las Vegas have a narrower wage divide than South Florida of the 50 metro areas studied, reported the Washington-based nonpartisan group that advocates for equal pay.

"We are seeing more women breadwinners and women out-earning men," said Lori Barkus, a family law attorney in Weston.

Some end up in divorce court and have to pay alimony, she said.'

Michael Jordan's faux "baby mama" fined $10k

Matt · 6 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Michael Jordan stayed winning when he was on the basketball court, and it has carried over to the court room, too. A judge has ordered the woman that falsely accused Air Jordan of fathering her now 17-year old struggle rapper son about $10,000, the cost of the NBA legend's legal bills.

Pamela Smith's paternity case was dismissed, leaving many to a speculate a financial settlement was made. However, it looks like she was looking for a payday, which has now backfired.

...

The judge called Pamela's bogus claim one big publicity stunt, pointing out she hired a publicist before even getting a lawyer … and then dragged Michael through the mud.

The judge ordered Pamela to pay Jordan's legal bills — $9,704.13. Actually, it sounds like she got off cheap.'

Alex Rodriguez and the disappearing dad he mourns

Matt · 6 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The singular event in the life of Alex Rodriguez is not his imminent suspension, or the career home run record that now will never happen.

The event that makes him so remote, so rudderless, took place when he was 9, when his father disappeared. This is not pop psychology to explain a man who blundered into the airplane propeller of adult reality. This is his own theory.

Back when he was a young major leaguer, Rodriguez would occasionally explain himself in terms of his missing father. His mother was strong and smart, and remains so to this day, but he expressed bewilderment that a father could just take off.'

ACFC: Equally Shared Parenting Legislation Being Enacted Nationally

Matt · 6 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'2013 may well be remembered as the year the tide changed decisively in favor of Equally Shared Parenting in the United States. In the month of April two states, Arkansas and Florida, have both passed legislation mandating equal and substantially equal parenting time as the preferred outcome for children experiencing their parents' divorce. In Arkansas the legislation has already been signed by the governor and is law.

Act 1156 has been signed by Arkansas Governor Mike Beebe. Language of the act calls for courts to favor joint legal custody. The Act goes further to define joint legal custody as meaning "approximate and reasonable equal division of time with the child by both parents." The act further states the court may order this arrangement at its discretion, it is not necessary that the parents be in agreement about joint legal custody for it to happen. Additionally the law states that a parent who creates conflict or attempts to disrupt a joint custody arrangement may lose custody to the non-disruptive parent. This is great news for children and parents, particularly fathers in Arkansas, as they will no longer have to 'fight it out' in court to remain a full parent to their children.'

Boys in American cities coerced into gang membership: where's the UN?

Matt · 7 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The gun-toting teen shot by police over the weekend grew up in a gang-infested neighborhood in the Morrisania section of the Bronx where law-abiding families live in constant fear. Even if young boys try to avoid trouble, it comes looking for them.

At first glance, everything looks calm and ordinary in this community. But under the surface, the threat for boys as young as 9 or 10 from gangs and criminal crews pressuring them to join is constant.

One boy, whose identity Fox 5 is protecting, said they have no choice but to join a gang. He said he tries to stay busy and off the streets at night when the gangs are out and hunting for new members. He said most boys don't choose to join a gang, but if they don't, they and their families suffer consequences. He said gangs have ransacked the apartments of reluctant recruits.'

SAFE Announces New Project Initiatives And Website Launch

Matt · 7 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Stop Abuse for Everyone™ ("SAFE") is a gender inclusive domestic violence information and education 501(c)(3) nonprofit organization founded in 1999. The mission of SAFE is to provide information and education to support and assist all victims of family abuse. SAFE has been endorsed by The National Crime Prevention Council, "Dear Abby" and recognized by the White House as a "National Point of Light."

A key mission of SAFE is to act as an information source for all victims and concerned friends and relatives to locate non-discriminatory help. Our new and improved website: www.stopabuseforeveryone.org now provides a state-by-state guide.

The new website has state-of- the- art functions and hosts a new forum area for survivors of intimate partner and family violence to share their stories and get help from others with similar experiences. SAFE is also now on Facebook and Twitter.'

Double standard: Pentagon hints at changes to allow more women in ground combat

Mastodon · 7 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Public statements from the Pentagon since it removed the ban on direct ground combat jobs for women signal that the armed services plan to change their physical standards to ensure integration of the sexes, analysts say.

A review of news conferences and congressional testimony shows that the top brass repeatedly use the word “validate” — not necessarily “retain” — when talking about ongoing studies of tasks to qualify for infantry, armored and special operations jobs.

In other words, some physical standards would be lowered for men and women on the argument that certain tasks are outdated or irrelevant.
...
“It will begin as an ‘experiment,’ and meanwhile there will be a whittling away of standards — gender-norming — regarding what is required to graduate from certain schools, such as Army Rangers,” Mr. Maginnis said. “The administration and its ideological radical feminist soul mates are willing to accept less effectiveness at the point of the spear in order to put women into every last military occupational specialty.”'

Utah Job Corps centers reach out to more female students

Mastodon · 7 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Utah's two Job Corps centers announced a campaign Tuesday to recruit a record number of new female students. After a four-month national enrollment freeze that ended in April, the program has 213 openings available to income-qualified prospective students.

The freeze prevented the program from adding new students, explained Issa Arnita, director of corporate communications for Centerville-based Management & Training Corp. — which manages and operates 18 Job Corps centers in 15 states.

Job Corps is a free, federal career training program developed and administered by the U.S. Department of Labor to meet educational and career technical training needs of economically disadvantaged youths. Participants must be between the ages of 16 and 24.

Students live on campus and receive training in a career path of their choice, including health occupations, computer technology, automotive, carpentry, welding, electrical and plumbing. They can also earn a high school diploma or GED certificate.'

Treatment center for military women needs men to up numbers

Mastodon · 7 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An in-patient hospital program for female active military or veterans with emotional disorders or addiction has been expanded to include men.

Despite an aggressive marketing campaign to attract them, a shortage of women has led administrators at Lady of Lourdes Medical Center of Burlington County to open the Living Springs behavioral program to active-duty males or veterans.

Alexander J. Hatala, Lourdes Health System president and CEO, said the newly opened program has been modified to treat men and women in the 21-bed Willingboro unit. The first male was admitted last week.

“When we originally designed Living Springs, our intention was to create a comfortable, safe environment where servicewomen or the female family members of servicemen could relate to each other during the recovery process,” Hatala said.'

'When Male Unemployment Rises, Domestic Violence Rates Fall'

Mastodon · 7 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The results showed that the 3.7 percentage point increase in male unemployment during the time caused a decline in the incidence of domestic abuse by 12 percent. Meanwhile, the 3 percentage point increase in female unemployment increased domestic violence by 10 percent. The correlation held for all kinds of abuse, but it was stronger for physical violence.

Though it's not proven, the theory that Jonathan Wadsworth, a University of London economist and study co-author, suggested to explain the phenomenon is that when male unemployment in an area is high, more men -- having either lost their jobs or fearing job loss -- are likely to try to stick with their partners in order to ensure some semblance of income stability. And to keep their partners from leaving them, those that have abusive tendencies are more likely to abstain from violent behavior. Meanwhile, when female unemployment is high, women might similarly be less likely to leave men who are predisposed to abuse, and so reports of domestic violence would rise.'

"Chocolate's Child Slaves" (should read "Male Child Slaves")

redwoodwriter · 8 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. While it it laudable that child slavery related to the production of chocolate is coming to the world's attention more openly, it is notable that the story is billed as "child slaves." The fact is -- if one looks at the videos -- that all the children are male. Yet, nowhere does the story say anything about male child slavery. The gender card seems too hot a button these days... perhaps, if it were to be mentioned openly, feminists would derail the good work that's being done? The fact is that many adult males are financial slaves too, but nobody is talking about that, are they? Another taboo topic? Excerpt:

'Everyone loves chocolate. But for thousands of people, chocolate is the reason for their enslavement.

The chocolate bar you snack on likely starts at a plant in a West African cocoa plantation, and often the people who harvest it are children. Many are slaves to a system that produces something almost all of us consume and enjoy.

The CNN Freedom Project sent correspondent David McKenzie into the heart of the Ivory Coast - the world’s largest cocoa producer - to investigate what's happening to children working in the fields.

His work has resulted in a shocking, eye-opening documentary showing that despite all the promises the global chocolate industry made a decade ago, much of the trade remains unchanged. There are still child slaves harvesting cocoa, even though some have never even tasted chocolate and some don't even know what the word "chocolate" means.'

NPO: Groundbreaking Alimony Legislation in Colorado

Matt · 8 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For the first time, Colorado has a clear formula for the calculation of alimony. The new legislation, House Bill 13-1058, goes into effect January of 2014. Governor John Hickenlooper signed it on May 10, 2013.

The alimony legislation, referred to as the Maintenance Act, defines the state's new guidelines for the determination of spousal maintenance. Maintenance is the amount of court ordered spousal support paid by the higher earning spouse to the lower earning spouse each month for a specified period of time following a divorce or legal separation.

The formula states that the amount of maintenance is equal to forty percent of the higher income party's monthly adjusted gross income less fifty percent of the lower income party's monthly adjusted gross income. There are some exceptions, and there is a cap, but this is the first time that Colorado has had a formula.'

Gloria Steinem to receive Presidential Medals of Freedom

mens_issues · 8 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Oh boy, so predictable. Other women are mentioned who "broke barriers" by entering "male dominated" fields. Gosh, us men are just such a bunch of horrid oppressors toward women. Hey, any mention of, say, Warren Farrell or Glenn Sacks, etc.? Excerpt:

'This year marks the 50th anniversary of the highest civilian honor, which was first presented by President John F. Kennedy and has been given to 500 individuals from diverse corners of the country.
...
Gloria Steinem

Gloria Steinem is a renowned writer and activist for women's equality. She was a leader in the women's liberation movement, co-founded Ms. magazine, and helped launch a wide variety of groups and publications dedicated to advancing civil rights. Ms. Steinem has received dozens of awards over the course of her career, and remains an active voice for women's rights.'

Circumcision from the Perspective of Protecting Children

Matt · 9 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'Thirty-six years later my son was born. Two days before his planned circumcision, while searching online for recommendations on the doctor-mohel we chose, I stumbled upon the following paragraph from The Guide for the Perplexed by Maimonides, the great Jewish philosopher:

“As regards circumcision, I think that one of its objects is to limit sexual intercourse, and to weaken the organ of generation as far as possible, and thus cause man to be moderate. Some people believe that circumcision is to remove a defect in man’s formation; but every one can easily reply: How can products of nature be deficient so as to require external completion, especially as the use of the foreskin to that organ is evident. The bodily injury caused to that organ is exactly that which is desired; This is, as I believe, the best reason for the commandment concerning circumcision.”

I was shocked. I realized that the Jewish motivation for circumcision was diminishing sexual pleasure, the same motivation as the one behind female genital cutting.

I was so amazed by this text, so I went on to read every piece of information I could find about the part that was cut off from my penis. The more I read and understood the anatomy and functions of the foreskin, the more it became impossible to escape the painful and enraging realization that my body was violated, that my penis was damaged and diminished in its capacity to sense pleasure, and that I will never be able to experience and enjoy sex as nature intended it.'

What are Bris Shalom and Brit B'lee Milah?

Matt · 9 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'More and more Jewish parents in America and Israel are avoiding circumcision. Instead, they are holding alternative ceremonies sometimes called Bris Shalom or Brit B'lee Milah (covenant without cutting) ceremonies. Many Jews throughout Europe and the former Soviet Union have stopped circumcising over 100 years ago. Already over 100 Rabbis are performing alternative covenant ceremonies that omit the violent circumcision. These are gaining popularity both in the United States and worldwide.
...
Jewish parents can find a Rabbi, or Cantor to lead a Bris without cutting via Dr. Mark Reiss' Brit Shalom Celebrants List. Many parents are finding that their regular Rabbi or Cantor are happy to do so as well, even if they are not on this list.

"We did not circumcise my son. Instead, we created a beautiful, gentle welcoming ceremony to celebrate his entry into the Jewish people and the world community. Instead of a bris milah, there was a bris blee milah - a covenant without circumcision. We reinterpreted the notion of covenant to mean the commitment that we, his parents made, publicly, to bring him up with love, respect, openness, and gentleness. ...'

Our fresh masculinity – why it's problematic

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We live in an age of rigidly defined gender roles. And, as Harry Noad so ably pointed out, one of those archetypes has been more pervasive than any other: that of the alpha male. Not the intellectually-refined, considerate, sophisticated gentleman – but the 'hulking troglodyte of old'; the tough, physically dominant patriarch.
So far, so good. Well – so far, so true. Hegemonic masculinity is indeed 'lad culture' writ large, and for most people it's not particularly appealing. The problem, however, runs far deeper than this. The problem is not that we dislike the consequences of our own idealism. The problem is that to hold ideals about gender roles at all is destined to cause trouble at every turn.
...
Perhaps the point is that we should stop obliging people to fit at all. It's the 21st century – we don't need to strive towards making our sons better men, nor our daughters better women. We need to strive towards helping people understand themselves, whatever their gender. We all have the wonderful freedom to aim at whichever virtues we choose, and that is something of which we – as people – ought to be proud.'

Brutal assault resulting in circumcision turns man into anti-circ activist

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2006, Paul Tinari was granted $12,000 by the government of British Columbia to have foreskin restoration surgery. When he was eight years old and boarded at a church-run school in Montreal, Paul was forcefully held down on a desk and circumcised, because a priest had reason to believe Paul had—God forbid—masturbated. Paul is Métis, and his story is another seriously disturbing instance of church abuse in the era of residential schools. Paul claims the practice was routine and could have happened to thousands of young First Nations boys trapped in the system—though that is impossible to confirm, especially given the Canadian government's lack of transparency regarding the residential schools issue. We talked to Paul over the phone about what he went through, why it may have occurred, and his outspoken opinions in support of the anti-circumcision movement.
...
So as a result of this I had very serious infections for many, many weeks and months afterwards. Matter of fact, I had a chronic infection for the rest of my life until I had corrective surgery. He took so much skin off that I wasn't able to have an erection without great pain.'

Online abuse is not limited by gender

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Twitter's public apology to women who have been subjected to online abuse is another significant victory for those campaigning against online misogyny. It follows in the wake of the successful #FBrape campaign that persuaded advertisers to suspend their marketing activities on Facebook until it made a commitment to tackle "gender-based hate".
...
Second, there is the issue of how we tackle violence and abuse full stop. Anyone following the debate about gender hate-speech on social media in recent months could be forgiven for thinking that online abuse is always perpetrated by men and suffered by women. And yet a survey by the website Knowthenet in 2011 found that 19-year-old males were most at risk from cyberbullying among teenagers, with 85% saying they had been victims, while figures from the World Health Organisation reveal that men account for 81% of violent deaths globally every year.

In reality, men and women of all backgrounds are vulnerable to online abuse and it can come from the unlikeliest of places. Last week, the men's lifestyle magazine GQ published some of the violent threats tweeted at them by One Direction fans for making singer Harry Styles apparently look like a "man whore" in a recent cover shoot. Much like the offensive tweets directed at feminist campaigners, the online abuse of GQ's staff included death threats and threats of sexual violence, with calls for all the men who work for the magazine to be castrated.'

UK: False rape claimer jailed

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Cathy Richardson, 26, from Viking Court in Shoebury, Essex, told officers she had been sexually assaulted several times over two months in 2012 by a man she knew.

A man was arrested on suspicion of rape but was later released without charge after a series of interviews.

Richardson was jailed for 12 months at Basildon Crown Court after admitting perverting the course of justice.
...
He said the outcome of the prosecution of Richardson should send out "a very clear message" to anyone who deliberately lied to police.

"The actions of Cathy Richardson in this case led to an innocent man being arrested, having to spend time in a custody cell and undergoing an intrusive and personal medical examination," he said.'

Pregnant woman charged with criminal domestic violence

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A pregnant woman is accused of firing a gun at her ex-boyfriend.

Renada Shantrice Irby, 32, of 346 W. Chatelain Dr. in Spartanburg, has been charged by the Greer Police Department with criminal domestic violence of a high and aggravated nature and second-degree assault and battery.

An officer responded to a reported altercation around 2 a.m. Thursday. A man said Irby followed him and his current girlfriend to the Spinx gas station at 1599 S. Highway 101 where there was an argument.
...
The female victim said Irby threatened to shoot her, while the male victim said Irby pointed a .22-caliber handgun at them, according to incident reports.

They claimed they heard gunfire before Irby drove away, a report states.

Two other people said they witnessed the incident.'

U.S. Dept. of State: African Women's Entrepreneurship Program Participants Gather at AGOA Forum

Minuteman · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The African Women's Entrepreneurship Program (AWEP) is a U.S. Department of State initiative that was launched in 2010 alongside the African Growth and Opportunity Act (AGOA) ministerial forum in Zambia. ...

August 10-11, AWEP's Ethiopia Chapter will host a forum prior to the 2013 AGOA Forum's ministerial program held in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. One hundred AWEP women entrepreneurs from across the continent will participate in the forum, themed "Queen of Sheba: The Entrepreneur." U.S. Congressional delegates, private sector practitioners and senior U.S. and African officials will also participate.

This year's forum will focus on best practices for trading under AGOA, access to finance for women, business development, regional initiatives empowering women entrepreneurs, and use of social media to build a successful business.
...
On the evening of August 11, AWEP will participate with the Corporate Council on Africa's U.S.-Africa Business Center and the Intel Corporation to host a Business-to-Business (B2B) Networking Event. This event provides an opportunity for AWEP entrepreneurs to network with U.S. companies and investors from various sectors such as manufacturing, services, technology, and fashion and textiles to build upon the connections the women made during their AWEP exchange to the United States. ...'

Ireland: Birth cert move 'won't give dads new rights'

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW laws that will demand unmarried fathers' names are included on their child's birth certificate will do little to protect their legal rights, campaigners have claimed.

Government plans, approved today, will ensure for the first time that both parents' names must be registered.

But Eamonn Quinn, of campaign group Unmarried and Separated Parents of Ireland, said the move does not go far enough because they fail to guarantee an unmarried man guardianship or access rights.

"Getting the name on the birth certificate doesn't give a father automatic rights," Mr Quinn said.'

Australia: Men out of work as job market weakens

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A rising number of male voters appears to be giving up the struggle to find work as the job market weakens, creating a soft underbelly in Labor's traditional support base.

As Labor pitches itself as the best-placed party to manage a deteriorating economy, official figures showed the male participation rate plunged last month to its lowest level in almost nine years.

Experts say lower participation is a strong sign workers are becoming discouraged as employers scrap hiring plans and shed staff.

The falling proportion of active men helped soften upward pressure on the nation's jobless rate – which held steady at 5.7 per cent in July.'

Dating Service Pays Out $900k for Anti-Male Discrimination

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The company offered high-end matchmaking services to professionals too busy to find a date — but in its efforts to provide discriminating companionship to its clients, the It's Just Lunch dating service ended up discriminating against its own employees.

It's Just Lunch agreed to pay out $900,000 to settle an EEOC lawsuit that alleged that the company refused to hire men for jobs as dating directors or inside sales representatives.

Most of the cash will go toward compensating men who applied for the jobs in question between 2007 and 2013 but were not considered for hire. Part of the money is also going to Lynda Twist, the former human resources director, who says she was fired after she spoke up against the company's hiring practices.'

'I deliberately conceived our four children with other men'

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Josephine (not real name) grew up knowing that being handsome or beautiful gave one more opportunities in life. She hence silently vowed not to be married to a man she was not sure would give her beautiful children.
...
I planned to start off by marrying only a handsome man to father my children. But there was no prince charming showing interest in me for the long haul, only those who did not meet my expectations, in terms of looks. In the absence of that prince, and the mounting pressure from peers and family, I settled for someone I liked in many attributes, but not looks. I inwardly vowed that he would never father my children.
...
All the four children bear their “father’s” name, and are loved by their “paternal family” who have got no hint that they are not their children. None of the children knows who their biological father is, and neither of their real fathers have known about or seen them. As for the looks, I got what I wanted as my children are really beautiful. The girl is so beautiful that she was nicknamed princess.'

David Brooks Wonders Why Men Can't Find Jobs: Comedy Ensues

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Brooks' point piece turns out to be a popular column topic among conservative writers: Why aren't people working? The twist in this one is that it's a gender-based thesis. Brooks got hold of some stats showing that men are having more trouble recovering the jobs lost in the recent recession than women. He cites a Floyd Norris column from this weekend, "Gender Gaps Appear as Employment Recovers From Recession," which provides all the relevant numbers.

...

Remember that scene in American Psycho where Christian Bale stabs Reg E. Cathey's homeless "Al" character? The part where he's like, "Get a job, Al – you've got a negative attitude, that's what's holding you back!" Fellas, Mssrs. Brooks and Voight, that was satire. About the last thing the millions of broke Americans out there need is someone like you telling them their problem is that they need a more positive attitude. Actually their problem is much more simple: not enough jobs. Really, that's pretty much it. It's not a mystery.'

change.org: Our fallen hero Andrew Ashcraft: get the family Andrew's benefit package that they were promised

Matt · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'In addition to this tragedy, the city of Prescott has officially denied paying out his benefits claiming he was not full time. This is not accurate at all. He had been working his scheduled 40 hour weeks, he had obtained their goals required of full time status and had been given a raise above that of a seasonal employee. Because of that, his employee file had been forwarded onto the city managers' office with the endorsement of his supervisors. Unfortunately, they too perished in that fire and cannot confirm this. The delay in the process is the primary reason for their not approving his status. Nonetheless, he was verbally assured of his status, he was working his required schedule as a full time employee, being paid as a full time employee therefore is due full time benefits.'

"Divorce Bank" - Redonkulas.com

Matt · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

'Published on Aug 9, 2013

Expanding on the math from the infamous "H.O.E. vs. E.X.-W.I.F.E.", Popp further explains why avoiding marriage is better for your bank roll as well as your sanity.

http://www.Redonkulas.com

A co-production of LightcraftEntertainment.com'

Mississippi now requires umbilical cord blood from some teen moms for paternity test

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'JACKSON, Miss. — If a girl younger than 16 gives birth and won't name the father, a new Mississippi law — likely the first of its kind in the country — says authorities must collect umbilical cord blood and run DNA tests to prove paternity as a step toward prosecuting statutory rape cases.

Supporters say the law is intended to chip away at Mississippi's teen pregnancy rate, which has long been one of the highest in the nation. But critics say that though the procedure is painless, it invades the medical privacy of the mother, father and baby. And questions abound: At roughly $1,000 a pop, who will pay for the DNA tests in the country's poorest state? Even after test results arrive, can prosecutors compel a potential father to submit his own DNA and possibly implicate himself in a crime? How long will the state keep the DNA on file?
...
But Bear Atwood, legal director for the American Civil Liberties Union of Mississippi, said it's an invasion of privacy to collect cord blood without consent of the mother, father and baby. She also said that an underage girl who doesn't want to reveal the identity of her baby's father might skip prenatal care: "Will she decide not to have the baby in a hospital where she can have a safe, happy, healthy delivery?"'

Planned US legislation will not exclude women from draft registration requirement

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Congress is moving forward with its “war on women” by failing to pursue an exemption for them from the draft, according to an analyst whose work focuses on the military and the readiness of the services to defend the nation.

“During the House Armed Services Committee’s markup on the National Defense Authorization bill for 2014, committee members would not even consider legislation to preserve young women’s exemption from Selective Service registration and a possible future draft,” according to the Center for Military Readiness, which is run by Elaine Donnelly.

For now, a lawsuit demanding that women be included in any future draft has been dismissed. But critics say direct and specific exemptions need to be established now for women.

The idea is that treating women as equal to men means allowing them to join combat units, which the Obama administration has been advocating.'

Online misogyny - politicians and journalists talk hypocritical rubbish

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many of the pundits, “journalists”, politicians and opinion makers discussing online misogyny - the argument du jour for the British media and the political and chattering classes - are demonstrating the worst sort of hypocrisy and gender prejudice.

Misogyny is of course unacceptable in any form and when it comes packaged in threats of violence and violent abuse it is illegal and should be prosecuted under existing law.

Misogyny should not, however, be seen as an excuse for the sort of casual misandry that is a contributory factor and is allowed to go unchecked and un-commented on in so many different publishing arenas - especially on BBC platforms (TV, web, radio and print).

Nothing is so guaranteed to get a journalist, broadcaster or politician to speak without engaging his or her brain as two or more people gathered together exchanging platitudes about how awful life is for women and how men, ALL men, are responsible.

Don’t take my word for it. This coming week count the number of times you hear men, masculinity and fatherhood disparaged in ways that if the targets were women, femininity and motherhood would draw tsunamis of condemnation.'

Children's museum puts on girls-only programming class

Mastodon · 10 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women are rarely found in the tech and entrepreneurial worlds. (See "It's a Guy Thing," 7/5/13.) This is a problem with a complicated answer. But if you have a daughter between 9 and 13, you can do your part. Sign her up for the "Girls Only SCRATCH Class" at the Madison Children's Museum this fall.

SCRATCH is a programming language for beginners. Why girls only? Because experience shows that computer classes and clubs for K-12 kids are dominated by boys. This nine-week class, led by computer science students from UW-Madison, wants to crack the door open for girls.'

Cherokee Indian girl's father faces arrest in adoption dispute

Matt · 11 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The biological father of a 3-year-old Cherokee Indian girl faces arrest in a custody dispute that reached the U.S. Supreme Court.

Dusten Brown, who is a Cherokee and is currently training with the National Guard in Iowa, had been ordered to turn over his daughter, Veronica, to a South Carolina adoptive couple who had initially raised the girl.

An arrest warrant has been issued on a charge of custodial interference because has failed to do so.'

Regarding this topic:

Native News Network: Soldier Dusten Brown in the Fight of His Life – To Keep His Daughter Veronica
Wikipedia: Adoptive Couple v. Baby Girl. Excerpt:

'Adoptive Couple v. Baby Girl, 570 U.S. ___ (2013), is a decision of the United States Supreme Court that holds that several sections of the Indian Child Welfare Act (ICWA) do not apply to Native American (Indian) biological fathers who were not custodians of an Indian child. The court held that involuntary termination procedures required by the ICWA did not apply when the child had never lived with the father and that therefore active remedial requirements were also not required. Preferred placement in the act did not apply when no other party had formally sought to adopt the child.'

UK: Government ignores male victims says TV lawyer

Matt · 11 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'TV lawyer Marilyn Stowe has slammed the government's Ministry of Justice (MoJ) for ignoring the plight of male victims of domestic violence.

According to Stowe, a family law practitioner and resident legal expert on ITV's This Morning, The MoJ's online guidance on legal aid for victims of domestic violence excludes men, saying:

"To get legal aid you must be able to give your solicitor some evidence that you have been a victim of domestic violence by your partner or husband."

Writing about the issue on her blog, Stowe said:

"Domestic violence against men does exist more frequently than many people imagine, and it certainly should not be casually disregarded in this way. If the government feels that it is appropriate to hang 'women only' signs out on a website about practical help for victims, where are men in need supposed to turn?'

"Men's rights attracts angry young men"

Matt · 11 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Yes, angry indeed. Feminist anger is called justified. MRA anger is called abusive-- or worse. Read the comments on the article site. Excerpt:

'Warren Farrell, a prominent gender activist councillor, and author of The Myth of Male Power, is not surprised that young men today are angry. “In our society, the sound of men complaining is like nails on a chalkboard,” he says. But their angst, he says, stems from larger feelings of powerlessness. Farrell, 69, is considered the grandfather of the men’s rights movement. He has been writing about boys and men since the 1980s, but only recently have his books begun to do well commercially. In light of this new success, he admits that he is cautiously optimistic about where the men’s rights movement is headed. He drew a sold-out crow—and protests—when he spoke at the University of Toronto last November.

James McCarthy, a 21-year-old student at the University of Toronto, says he was shocked to see so many people protesting the event and labelling it as a hate group. McCarthy says that, while he has never faced any discrimination because he is a man, he does believe that women are unfairly privileged due to the expectation of chivalry and receiving privileges over men because men are sexually attracted to them. “Feminists often claim that chivalry is a product of the patriarchy that they are trying to change, but I doubt that many are interested in challenging the status quo.”'

UK: 'Masculinity crisis' leads to family murder, according to new study

Mastodon · 12 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A team of criminologists at Birmingham City University has published the first study into the grim phenomenon of "family annihilation", when fathers murder their own children. Academics studied 59 men who, between 1980 and 2012, had murdered their children – and sometimes their spouses – during a single killing event, with most cases coming in the later half of the study.

Attempting to understand what precipitated "family annihilators", they looked for patterns such as the methods used, victim characteristics, possible motivation, offender age, occupation and location of murders.
...
Professor David Wilson, who led the team of criminologists, said the increasing instances of the crime were a reflection of "masculinity in crisis". He said: "Some men are unable to come to terms with different and developing notions of the institution of the family, where women increasingly play a much more dynamic role than they had in the past."'

UK: 'The demonisation of lads mags isn't about equality or respect'

Mastodon · 12 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For the past few months Britain's feminist community have taken affront with men's magazines.

According to their Lose The Lads Mags campaign, publications such as Nuts, Loaded and Zoo objectify women while green-lighting domestic violence in a nation of misogynistic men.

In a bid to have these titles banned, activists are using equality legislation to scare retailers into submission, arguing they'll face legal action if they disobey their orders.
...
Despite the fact we live in a post-sexual revolution society, where people can enjoy the human body without shame, here we have women taking a moral standpoint on men's free choice as adults.

Yes people, it may be 2013, but we've swapped the repression of women for the repression of men.
...
Apparently, female sexuality is sacred and not up for discussion - especially by men. After all, that would be patriarchal oppression.

Yet, in a blatant example of hypocrisy and double-standards, here we have women telling men how and when they should consume their own sexual pleasures.'

'10 rules for managing your penis'

Mastodon · 12 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

"Article" here. Excerpt:

'2) Do not neglect your penis. I am talking hygiene. Women are subjected to pharmacy aisles full of fresheners, wipes and sprays that encourage us to believe that without them our genital area is just a smelly, slimy mess, but there is no equivalent for men. Surely there is a gap in the market for products to encourage men to stay boxfresh under their boxers. And if they must encase themselves so prominently in Lycra and skinny jeans in this weather … something has to be done. Urgently.

...

5) Do not ever put your penis into someone who does not want this. Do not ever fool yourself that they really do. Even if they are drunk. Or you are married to them. This is rape. It is not difficult to know the difference between someone who is consenting to penetration and someone who isn't. There is never any excuse. Ever.

...

10) Do not mistake your penis for your brain. The silly idea that men possess wicked willies and can't help acting on impulse is surely rather insulting? If Freud is right and all women suffer from penis envy then all I can say is if I had one I would love, cherish it and put it only where desired. Is that so much to ask?'

Young: Making Fed appointment about gender is truly sexist

Mastodon · 12 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Another week, another gender war -- this time, with the Federal Reserve as the battlefield.

At the center is economist Janet Yellen, vice chairwoman of the Fed's Board of Governors and a top pick to take over its leadership. Yellen would be the first woman to head the powerful institution that sets U.S. monetary policy. Some claim there is a devious campaign to discredit her because she's a woman; others, that her backers are playing the gender card to boost her chances. Compounding the controversy, Yellen's rival for the position, former Treasury Secretary and Harvard president Lawrence Summers, is not just a man but a man who has been accused of sexism.

Perhaps the real sexism here was injecting gender into the debate in the first place, rather than focusing on merits and issues.
...
Whichever candidate gets the job, those who dislike the choice will no doubt see it as gender pandering -- either to an old boys' network or to feminist pressure groups. Like most gender wars, this one is likely to have no winners, only losers.'

Girls with autism (but not boys) get special training

bronxman · 12 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. We spend millions to retain girls in engineering, but not a dime to retain boys in reading. And now comes the salt in the wound. This program is to retain autistic girls in engineering. But it is boys who are mostly the victims of autism. So, here are the priorities:

1. Girls
2. Girls with autism
3. Boys (last)

Excerpt:

'Until last week, Courtney Thompson had never really thought about how M&Ms are made. But then she watched an experiment by scientists from IBM who used the candy to illustrate ideas behind quality-control testing.

And now, the 16-year-old from Apple Valley thinks project management is “pretty cool.”

“Do you know which kind of M&M has the fewest defects?” she asked. “It’s yellow. But I like the brown ones.”'

UK: Taking the ‘he’ out of higher education

Mastodon · 12 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Upon co-founding Girton College for female students at Cambridge University in 1869, Davies expressed her intention for it to be ‘a college like a man’s’. What she meant by this was that the same subjects should be taught, in the same way, and to the same academic standard, as in the male colleges. She had previously suggested that the best girls’ schools ‘are precisely those in which the masculine subjects have been introduced’ (mathematics, Latin and Greek), and she carried this view into higher education, insisting that for women to have anything other than equal access to the same knowledge as men would result in their education being forever considered inferior.

How things have changed. Today, many feminist academics working in social science or humanities departments in British universities no longer campaign for female students to have equal access to the same knowledge as men; instead, they argue that the very notion of ‘a body of knowledge’ is oppressive, patriarchal and elitist, representing only the concerns of those who are ‘pale, male and stale’. They seek to replace the dominance of one hegemonic, patriarchal body of knowledge with the recognition that there are multiple bodies of knowledge, each one constructed according to the life experiences of traditionally subordinate groupings, with women (and feminism) to the fore. These other bodies of knowledge are to be afforded equal value with more traditional notions of academic knowledge.

So, where once women battled to be allowed into lectures and fought to sit exams, today many feminists in the academy argue that traditional teaching methods employed by universities are representative of an historic, white, middle-class, patriarchal hegemony and as such need to be ‘disrupted’, as they alienate non-traditional students. Lecturing is considered representative of a male tendency to preach and profess – and, in so doing, to silence the audience. Apparently, seminars also represent a male desire for competitive one-upmanship, where confrontational arguments win out over seemingly more constructive attempts at intellectual compromise. The assumption of these feminists is that female, working-class, and black and minority-ethnic students will feel out of place in such an educational environment. Instead, many feminists argue for ‘learner-centred’ practice that promotes cooperation rather than competition, with personal reflection or peer assessment replacing examinations.
...
The early campaigners for women’s right to attend university assumed female students were just as capable of academic independence and rationality as their male counterparts, and as such deserved equal access to the same research and scholarship. Now, however, many feminists promote the idea that there is no body of knowledge worth learning. Higher education is merely about students engaged in personal projects of transformation and recognising their own privileges and limitations as they share experiences.'

'Men Need Daughters More Than They Need Sons'

Mastodon · 12 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the first things every one said to me when they found out I was pregnant with my son (my second) was this: "Your husband must be thrilled!" This was soon followed by: "Every man needs a son" and a host of other cliched responses to a male-bearing pregnancy that started to make my skin crawl by the end. Why is it that my husband -- a man who was madly in love with our little girl -- "needed" a son so badly?

It turns out? He didn't. In fact, new research revealed by the New York Times last weekend reveals that daughters (not sons) actually make men better. Daughters make them more generous, more likely to think of others first, and generally more sharing. It's not really that surprising.'

U.S. Spending $653K to 'Reduce Tobacco Use' Among Brazilian Women

Mastodon · 12 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The National Institutes of Health is funding a program to convince female “light-smokers” in Brazil to kick their bad habit, at a cost to American taxpayers of $653,190.

“There is a great need for the development of gender-relevant tobacco control efforts,” the description of the study on the NIH website reads. “We have established community and institutional capacity to promote gender-relevant tobacco control efforts among women in a tobacco producing states in Brazil.”

Scientists are hoping their research will allow them to design a culturally- and gender-specific “intervention” convincing Brazilian women not to light up.'

UK: Woman jailed after falsely claiming taxi driver had raped her

Mastodon · 12 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 42-year-old woman who falsely accused a taxi driver of raping when she didn't have enough money to pay for her fare has been jailed for 20 months.

Angela England made the allegation when her partner Jacqueline Scott left her in the car to get money from a cash machine, but did not return.

Her claim that she was driven to a nearby school and raped was disproved by CCTV footage and the taxi's tracking device.

Mold Crown Court heard the driver was later arrested in front of his colleagues while waiting in a taxi rank with other drivers.

He was forced to strip naked at a North Wales police station for an intimate and 'embarrassing' examination.

Richard English, defending, said he was an 'entirely innocent' party who was the victim of Ms England's anger towards her partner.'

Ireland: Carol Hunt: 'Lock up men to keep women safe at night'

Mastodon · 12 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is all very well and good. But first we must ask the reason why women need special "places of safety"; why women have to have protection, "patrols", extra surveillance in areas that they frequent, and constant monitoring of their movements? The reason, to be blunt, is because of men. Yet time and again the focus is on "protecting" the woman – this can range from the well-meaning "safety areas" suggested by Robert Doyle, to a complete denial of a woman's right to self-autonomy – rather than preventing the male from acting in a violent manner.
...
What if we began with the fact that most rapes and violent crimes (excepting domestic violence, a whole other chapter) are carried out by men at night. Surely it would only make sense that a curfew be imposed preventing men from walking the streets after dark?

But, say the women who like to have a night out with their husbands or partners, that discriminates against us also. When they are with us our men are good, well-behaved, non-violent blokes. Well, in that case, I propose that men only be allowed to leave the home after dark in the company of a female relative. And I think I'm being very lenient here. I mean, look at all the countries where women are not allowed to leave the home during daylight hours unless they are with a male relative – and it's not as if they are the aggressive gender.'

Australia: mother busted for sexting 14-year-old boys, gets community service

Minuteman · 13 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The mother of three pleaded guilty in the Brisbane Magistrates Court on Tuesday to six charges of using electronic communications to expose a child under 16 to indecent material.

The woman from Brisbane's south can't be named to protect her victims' identities.
...
Ms Yousufzai said under the law an adult who commits an offence of a sexual nature against a child under 16 must serve a term of imprisonment unless in exceptional circumstances.

She said the Crown wasn't seeking a prison sentence but a conviction should be recorded.

"This offending is just as serious as if the defendant was a male doing this to 13-year-old girls," she said.

Defence barrister Stephen Zillman tendered a psychiatrist's report which stated the woman had been psychotic at the time of the offences.

She had been suffering from a breakdown from significant stresses in her marriage and home life and been looking to boost her self image, he said.

Magistrate Elizabeth Hall said it was "a most unusual situation" and she was persuaded that the woman had been suffering a psychiatric condition.'

'What is a Jewish Brit Shalom (Covenant Without Cutting)?'

Matt · 13 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Increasingly, Jewish parents in America, Canada and Israel are skipping circumcision.

Instead, they are holding alternative ceremonies sometimes called Bris Shalom or Brit B'lee Milah (covenant without cutting). Many Jews throughout Europe and the former Soviet Union stopped circumcising over 100 years ago. Already well over 100 Rabbis are performing alternative covenant ceremonies that omit the surgical circumcision. These are gaining popularity both in America and worldwide.

Circumcision is Needless Violence

As 21st century Jews, we are always working to adjust our lives and actions to the constantly expanding moral arc of human rights. A greater number of American, Canadian, Israeli, and Jews worldwide are beginning to question milah (the surgical circumcision) aspect of the bris. Is it wishful thinking to hope that Judaism in today's age moves to a symbolic interpretation of circumcision, as it has already done for other violent commandments from the Torah? Jewish law is constantly evolving to expand human rights and ethical treatment of others. Jewish law regularly reinterprets violent decrees in metaphorical and symbolic ways, so as to avoid harming others. Increasingly forward thinking Jews are adopting peaceful covenant ceremonies that abolish the surgical circumcision in favor of a loving welcoming instead.'

Woman gets 34 years in brutal murder of Purple Heart veteran

Mastodon · 13 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

The Washington state woman called a “danger to society” was sentenced to 34 years in prison for plotting to kill a 70-year-old Navy veteran – a two-time Purple Heart recipient – because she wanted to steal his valuable coin collection.

Brenda Nicholas was the “mastermind” behind the December 2011 stabbing death of Francis “Patrick” Fleming and carried out the murder with extreme brutality, according to deputy prosecutor Carla Carlstrom, the Seattle Times reported.

“The motive behind this murder was solely greed,” Carlstrom told Superior Court Judge Theresa Doyle during Nicholas’ sentencing for the death of Fleming , who was killed inside his unit at the Four Freedoms senior apartments in Seattle’s Bitter Lake neighborhood.'

Teacher charged with "having sex" with 5 teen boys

Mastodon · 13 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A female teacher at Corona's Centennial High School is facing charges of having sex with five teenage boys over the last year.

Summer Michelle Hansen, 31, a special-education teacher, was charged Tuesday with 16 felony counts involving sex acts with five boys under the age of 18, none of whom were students she taught.

Riverside prosecutors allege that from May 2012 to May 2013, Hansen committed sexual acts with the boys — who were as young as 16 — in her classroom, in a campus utility room, in her vehicle parked near a boy's home and at the home of another teen.
...
Parents and friends have rallied around Hansen, who has taught at Centennial for nearly five years, and questioned the motives of the accusers.'

Barbara Kay: KFC's 'hot shot bites' ad campaign leaves me cold

Matt · 14 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the commercial, a young man of somewhat nerdy appearance (medium height, a bit flabby, glasses) is holding out a cartoon of KFC hot shot bites to a very pretty young woman, who takes and eats one. Her eyes widen in amazement. The young man asks, "How's it taste?" Instead of answering, the young woman bitch-slaps him and walks away. The baffled man is seen rubbing his face, while a voiceover says the hot shot bite is "like a slap to the face." Ha ha.

But it isn't just a slap to the face, is it? It's a female slap to a male face. No business in the West would ever show a man slapping a woman in jest. We would be horrified if they did, and rightly so. Domestic violence is not something to be mocked or encouraged. But it is all the time in our culture.
...
The marketers who exploit hot sauce for its comic potential hit the sweet spot, the point of inflection where a joke could become offensive but doesn't. So far I haven't seen one bottle called "Beat your Gal Black and Blue Hot Sauce." In trying to expand its target market, KFC screwed up big time.
...
Both men and women who think violence directed at anyone is not appropriate fodder for humour should send that message to KFC. And if KFC is a socially responsible company, they will withdraw the commercial from circulation.'

NPO: Texas Increases Maximum Child Support Allowed

Matt · 14 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently, the Texas legislature amended the Texas Family Code section 154.215 to increase the monthly “cap” on net income used to calculate child support. This change means that, after September 1, 2013, more net resources will be applied to calculate child support, which can increase the monthly amount paid or received.

Texas calculates child support by using an obligor’s “net resources.” This number is found by taking a parent’s gross income and deducting for federal taxes, social security, Medicare, health insurance costs for the child(ren), union dues, and state income tax, if applicable. A percentage is then applied to the net resources.'

Feminism doesn’t extend to finances

Mastodon · 14 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the paper, 84 per cent of men and 58 per cent of women reported that men pay for most expenses, even after dating for a while. While more than 57 per cent of women claimed they offered to help pay, 39 per cent confessed they hoped men would reject their offers to pay, and 44 per cent of women were bothered when men expected women to help pay.

Nearly two-thirds of the men believed that women should contribute to dating expenses, and many nearly half of the men said they would stop dating a woman who never pays.

Ah, feminism; It’s great to see how women whip it out when it comes to job and pay equality, but when it comes time to forking over some cash to contribute to dinner, suddenly that old feminism thing just slips the mind.

In a way it’s understandable. Honestly, who doesn’t like a free meal? But it’s downright sexist to expect a man to pay for dating expenses. Funny how some women don’t mind sexism as long as it benefits them.'

SAVE: Turning Up the Heat on Kentucky Fried Chicken

Matt · 14 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Last week we told you about Kentucky Fried Chicken's Hot Shot Bites TV ad that shows a woman slapping a man across the face. Not only is KFC telling concerned consumers that the slap is "humor," they've also ignored our very polite letter asking them to remove the ads because they promote domestic violence.

So, let's turn up the heat on KFC!

- Call: 800-225-5532, extension 1, 1, then 4
- Email: johncywinski-at-yumyum.com
- Sign the petition: http://www.change.org/petitions/kentucky-fried-chicken-stop-making-light-of-domestic-violence

Want to turn the heat up to HIGH? Here's the plan:

Download this flyer, visit your local KFC restaurant, and share the flyer and your concerns with the manager. Ask the manager to contact the corporate office on your behalf. Then, take a photo of the restaurant. Send it with details (location, manager's response, etc.) to tstoddard-at-saveservices.org. We'll post it here: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/kfc/

Thank you,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Why straight men are boycotting marriage

Mastodon · 14 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It may come as a surprise to you, but according to Dr Helen Smith's new book, Men on Strike: Why Men are Boycotting Marriage, Fatherhood and the American Dream – And Why it Matters, men are being oppressed by women who portray them as "buffoons, deadbeats and potential perverts" in a backlash against masculinity.

This tome is not an elaborate satire. Smith is a men's rights advocate who believes that men are "opting out" of marriage and fatherhood, and it's all feminism's fault. There are few incentives for them to get married (why buy the cow when you can get the milk for free… and without the cow nagging you to take the rubbish out) and, since their reproductive rights are being increasingly curtailed (ahem) with paternity fraud cases (which Smith seems to think are as prevalent as babies themselves), they feel less inclined to have children.
...
Unsurprisingly, her message has struck a chord with the men she's talking about. "Living in a feminist utopia is very painful and expensive for most men who enter into the marriage racket" said one fan of her book.'

'Hurting women should be a hate crime'

Mastodon · 14 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most states include gender in the list of protected class categories, which makes the fact that the bluest of the blue states is so out of line on something as basic as women's equal protection of the laws seem especially odd. Similarly perplexing is the silence of groups that should be making noise. Where is the National Organization for Women, and anti-violence groups like Jane Doe? Isn't it their job to speak out when government officials devalue women's lives by refusing to redress gender-based violence fairly?
...
It's time for Patrick, Coakley, the district attorneys and all the police chiefs to come together and demand that the Legislature add gender to Massachusetts' hate crimes statute. With gender as a category, women's lives will be better protected and cops and prosecutors will have access to more funding, which means law enforcement efforts will be more effective.'

Orlando woman accused of shooting, injuring boyfriend

Mastodon · 14 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Orlando woman was charged with attempted murder after police said she shot her boyfriend of ten years in the leg during a domestic disturbance early Wednesday, officials said.

Tara Michelle Lloyd, 35, told police her boyfriend had attacked her but police officers determined she was the aggressor in the conflict, according to an arrest affidavit.

Lloyd met police in the driveway of her home at 13 North Hillside Avenue about 3:07 a.m., saying she put the gun, a Taurus .38 caliber revolver, in the kitchen drawer after shooting the 42-year-old male victim, the report said.

When she called 911, dispatchers heard Lloyd say the shooting "was on purpose" and overheard the victim's voice on the call saying, "I can't believe you shot me."

Officers observed "no visible marks" on Lloyd or her clothing and she did not appear disheveled as if there had been a physical altercation, the report said.'

The "crisis" of manhood

Mastodon · 14 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A comment piece on this website this week about a so-called "Crisis of manhood" unintentionly highlighted the paradox of so many women: they say they want men to be more communicative and emotional - yet their dating history shows they're morbidly attracted to men who are neither, otherwise all the men they've loved wouldn't "have trouble sharing their feelings".*

This strikes me as one of the great contradictions of modern sexual dynamics - men are increasingly altering their "traditional" masculine behaviour to suit the tastes of women, who publicly claim to want blokes who are sensitive and thoughtful, yet are privately repelled (or become disenchanted) by the soul-searching and vulnerability this manifests.

Men are just as prone to this cognitive dissonance, pronouncing their desire for articulate, intelligent, strong, independent women and then sleeping with gals whose appearance or youth trumps all other concerns.

The difference between men and women is the majority of blokes accept this. Sure, they might stereotypically complain about their partner's nagging and moodiness, but you don't read too many pieces by male writers exhorting women to change "traditional" feminine behaviour.
...
Loneliness, anxiety, and pain are human staples; however, the almost universal Western acceptance of the mantra we're all meant to be "confident, resilient, happy and optimistic" has led us to point where half the industrialised world is medicated because they're not confident, resilient, happy or optimistic.

What would be novel is to hear from articulate men IF they believe there is a "crisis in manhood" and what they think should be done.

To them.

Then again, men don't talk about this stuff, do we?'

Germany's declining population and the 600-pound gorilla

Matt · 14 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The NYT once again runs an article on the declining population of someplace and talks almost exclusively in terms of decisions about reproduction that women are making and why. They don't even mention the other half of the human race necessary to procreate and what decisions they may be making about having babies--and why. As long as the 600-pound gorilla gets ignored, it'll just stay there, keeping the babies away. Excerpt:

'There is perhaps nowhere better than the German countryside to see the dawning impact of Europe's plunge in fertility rates over the decades, a problem that has frightening implications for the economy and the psyche of the Continent. In some areas, there are now abundant overgrown yards, boarded-up windows and concerns about sewage systems too empty to work properly. The work force is rapidly graying, and assembly lines are being redesigned to minimize bending and lifting.
...
Germany, however, an island of prosperity, is spending heavily to find ways out of the doom-and-gloom predictions, and it would seem ideally placed to show the Continent the way. So far, though, even while spending $265 billion a year on family subsidies, Germany has proved only how hard it can be. That is in part because the solution lies in remaking values, customs and attitudes in a country that has a troubled history with accepting immigrants and where working women with children are still tagged with the label "raven mothers," implying neglectfulness.

If Germany is to avoid a major labor shortage, experts say, it will have to find ways to keep older workers in their jobs, after decades of pushing them toward early retirement, and it will have to attract immigrants and make them feel welcome enough to make a life here. It will also need to get more women into the work force while at the same time encouraging them to have more children, a difficult change for a country that has long glorified stay-at-home mothers.
...
Raising fertility levels in Germany has not proved easy. Critics say the country has accomplished very little in throwing money at families in a system of benefits and tax breaks that includes allowances for children and stay-at-home mothers, and a tax break for married couples.
...
Demographers say that a far better investment would be to support women juggling motherhood and careers by expanding day care and after-school programs. They say recent data show that growth in fertility is more likely to come from them.

"If you look closely at the numbers, what you see is the higher the gender equality, the higher the birthrate," said Reiner Klingholz of the Berlin Institute for Population and Development.'

Court Clerk Fired For Helping Free Wrongly Convicted Man

Mastodon · 15 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'After working 34 years as a court clerk in Kansas City, Sharon Snyder was fired in June for giving Robert Nelson a public document that showed him how to properly seek DNA tests, a move that eventually led to his release from prison three decades after being wrongfully convicted of rape.

Despite being punished for helping Nelson, Snyder told MSNBC's "All In With Chris Hayes" on Wednesday she would do it all over again.

"Oh yes, I would do it again," Snyder said in her first national television interview with Nelson. "I am so happy that he got exonerated on this charge, and felt that would happen or he wouldn't have filed that motion to start out with."'

"Leftover women" in China? Seriously?

Matt · 15 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I almost fell out of my chair when I saw this item. OK, for literally DECADES we've heard about there being "too many males" (as if there's some kind of natural maximum for genderal headcount in a population) in China due to "selective abortion" but far worse, infanticide based on the baby's sex. 100% agreed, no one ought to be killing infants, period, for any reason that isn't nearly incomprehensible. In any case, now China's got a "problem" with "leftover women". And why? Read the story. I'll finish by simply suggesting to one Miss Lucy Wang quoted at the end of the article that indeed, there is something wrong with her-- and a lot of other people in China, too, men and women both, and it's this: You're looking at "love" feminine-hypergamously, as far too many women (and men) do. As long as your idea of a "suitable mate" includes a man who can pay for you, is taller than you, more successful/educated than you, etc., but also insist women should strive to excel beyond men in every way possible--well, you're playing a game known as Catch-22, a game you are irrevocably doomed to lose. Excerpt:

'At 31, the baby-faced office worker from Shanghai is under enormous pressure from family and friends to get married. But the right man is hard to find, she says, a big issue for urban, educated and well-paid Chinese women in a society where the husband's social status is traditionally above the wife's.
...
"Chinese people often think males should be higher in a relationship in every sense, including height, age, education and salary," Ni Lin, who hosts a popular match-making television show in Shanghai, told Reuters.
...

In Beijing, more than a third of women in their late 20s and 30s are looking for husbands, according to the dating website Jiayuan.com. Media reports say there may be as many as 500,000 "leftover women" in the capital.

There are plenty of men to go round among China's nearly 1.4 billion people but social status can conspire against single professional woman once again.

China's population is more tilted towards men than in many countries due to the government's one-child policy and a cultural preference for boys. The latest census in 2011 showed there were twice as many single men born in the 1970s as women of the same age.

But unlike "leftover women", these "shengnan" or "leftover men" often live in lower-tier cities and do not make much money.'

September is Prostate Cancer Awareness Month

Matt · 15 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

September's just two weeks away, and it's Prostate Cancer Awareness Month, at least here in the US. The ACS's page on it is here. Will employers put up signs in lobbies and hallways like they do for Breast Cancer Awareness Month/Week/etc.? Excerpt:

'There is no better time than September, during Prostate Cancer Awareness Month, for men to talk with their health care providers about this disease so that they can make informed decisions about maintaining their prostate health. Although prostate cancer is the second leading cause of cancer death among men, when detected early it also boasts some of the highest survival rates.

This year approximately 217,730 men will learn they have prostate cancer and more than 32,050 men will die from the disease. African-American men are disproportionately affected by prostate cancer, having higher rates of prostate cancer diagnosis and death than men of all other racial or ethnic groups in the United States. Almost one third of prostate cancer cases are found in men during their prime years at work.

Today, 1 man in 6 will get prostate cancer during his lifetime, but only 1 man in 34 will die of this disease. More than 2 million men in the United States who have been diagnosed with prostate cancer at some point are still alive today. When detected during these earliest stages the 5-year survival rate is close to 100%.'

"Orange Is the New Black" author pleas for special considerations for female inmates

Matt · 16 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Even when women do get sent to prison, the call rises for "special considerations". Has the thought even occurred to her that the thing she's complaining about affects male prisoners routinely and meh, no one seems to care much? My guess is no. Don't do the crime if you can't do the time. Excerpt:

'Because I know the prison so well, I was disturbed to learn that it was quietly planning to relocate most of its inmates.

Starting this month, the federal Bureau of Prisons will transfer the more than 1,000 women incarcerated in the main facility at Danbury to other prisons across the country to convert it to a men's prison (the small satellite camp immediately adjacent, where I served my time, will still incarcerate approximately 210 women). The bureau says the plan will ease overcrowding in its men's prisons.

This added geographic separation may as well be a second sentence for these women, who already have to make it through prison with limited visits from family, and for their children, who still need and want their moms. A mother's incarceration has a devastating effect on her family, and experts say that maintaining contact with a parent in prison is critical to a child's well-being. One in 28 children has a parent in prison today, and Danbury houses the mothers of at least 700 children.
...
There is an alternative to moving prisoners far from their families. This past spring, an ambitious new program, JusticeHome, was started by the Women's Prison Association in New York City, on whose board I serve. It aims to do the opposite of what the bureau plans: It will allow some women who plead guilty to felonies to remain in their homes with their children. ...'

Army colonel: Physical strength not the end-all, be-all of combat service

Mastodon · 16 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Army officer writing in a prestigious journal says the services should not overemphasize physical strength when deciding whether a woman qualifies for direct ground combat.

Col. Ellen Haring, on the staff of the U.S. Army War College, says commanders need to downplay obstacle courses and judge a service member's ability to stay calm and think quickly.
...
"Perhaps it is time to take a hard look at what really makes a competent combat soldier and not rely on traditional notions of masculine brawn that celebrate strength over other qualities," Col. Haring says in the current issue of Armed Forces Journal.

She cites World War II hero Audie Murphy and North Vietnamese insurgents as examples of small people who came up big on the battlefield.
...
Col. Haring, who had sued the Pentagon over its old exclusion policy, said that Murphy perhaps could not have passed the Marine Corps' infantry officer qualification course.'

Thomas Donnelly: The Military Epidemics That Aren't

Mastodon · 16 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The recent debate about sexual assault in the military also reflects the notion that there is something fundamentally diseased about the institution itself. The New York Times has editorialized on "the military's entrenched culture of sexual violence." Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D., N.Y.) demands that the country replace the military chain of command with civilian legal processes in cases of sexual harassment and assault because the military is inadequate to deal with crimes of "dominance and violence and power." Ms. Gillibrand has been joined in her legislative effort by two leading libertarian Senate Republicans, Rand Paul and Ted Cruz.

Yet the numbers bandied about to show an epidemic of sexual violence in the U.S. military are questionable. In May, Capt. Lindsay Rodman, a judge advocate stationed at U.S. Marine Headquarters in Arlington, Va., reported on this page, for example, that the number of military sexual assaults frequently cited in Congress and elsewhere are based on a badly distorted interpretation of a Defense Department survey. In recent months the American public has often heard that 26,000 service members were sexually assaulted last year. But that statistic comes from an unscientific poll and refers to "unwanted sexual contact," including touching the buttocks or even attempted touching.

Moreover, as Gail Heriot, a law professor at the University of San Diego and a member of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, wrote recently in the Weekly Standard, "there is no evidence that the military has a higher rate of sexual assault than, say, colleges and universities. Indeed, what paltry evidence there is suggests the opposite."'

Woman admits to false rape claim

Mastodon · 16 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'It didn’t take the Rexburg Police Department long to find that a 20-year-old woman’s rape complaint was actually a consensual encounter.

An investigation revealed that the woman had consensual sex, but had an attack of conscience and told roommates it was rape.

She contacted the Rexburg Police Department, which then investigated the claim. After interviews of the woman and roommates, it was revealed that she wasn’t truthful to the roommates, said Capt. Randy Lewis.

Lewis said this is not an uncommon occurrence in Rexburg.

“We run into that all the time,” he said.

The woman won’t face any charges for making any false claims, and police consider the matter closed.'

South Africa: Boy, 4, Dies From Circumcision at ‘Slaughterhouse’

Mastodon · 16 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A four-year-old boy in South Africa has died after being circumcised in a medical centre his father has described as a "slaughterhouse".

Gugulethu Mokalapa was taken off life support a week after the procedure. He was declared brain dead by two surgeons in a hospital in Germiston, east of Johannesburg.

The boy's father Reggie Mokalapa, 39, was told by doctors at the Medicross Germiston that the circumcision would take less than two hours, reports South Africa's Independent Online.

...

Five days after the circumcision, tests showed Gugulethu's brain was not responding and he was declared brain dead the following day. A second doctor confirmed his condition a week after the procedure.

The family then decided to take him off life support. Mokalapa said: "We are always advised to circumcise our children young, and we did this so that he'd be okay in future. Unfortunately, we took him to a slaughterhouse.'

Prison officials cancel planned relocation

Matt · 16 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. All it took was an op-ed in the NYT, and bingo, the relocation was stopped. Yet male prisoners relocated routinely away from convenient travel distances for family members are... just not that important. Excerpt:

'The author of the prison memoir "Orange Is the New Black" is relieved that federal prison officials have halted plans to move 1,000 female inmates from Connecticut to a prison far from their families in Alabama, but questions the "rationale" for wanting to send the women far from their homes in the first place.
...
Kerman wrote a New York Times op-ed earlier this week criticizing the Board of Prisons plans to transfer the female prisoners incarcerated at the Danbury facility to Alabama.

It is important, she told ABCNews.com, that incarcerated women stay close to their homes and families.
...
"It's possible that no one speaks up for these women … It's hard for me to define the rationale of the BOP. I think they should comment on that. It would be important," Kerman said.
...
"It makes such a difference, she said. "The things you are working through when serving a sentence -- a lot of guilt and shame, and a lot of consideration of what put you in, and a loss of confidence in what you can or cannot achieve in this world … Connection to folks that are pulling for you, on your side, your team, is really powerful to reinforce that you are going to be able to move forward in your life," she said.'

Meteorologist Sues KABC-TV Alleging Ageism, Sexism

Mastodon · 16 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A veteran meteorologists has filed a discrimination lawsuit against KABC-TV, alleging the Los Angeles TV station did not consider him for a position because it wanted to hire a young, attractive woman for the job.

According to a lawsuit Kyle Hunter filed Wednesday, Aug. 14, in Los Angeles Superior Court, Hunter applied for the job of weekend meteorologist in June 2011, but was never interviewed for the job. He alleges "multiple qualified persons age 40 and over" applied for the position, but they were also not interviewed.

The suit describes Hunter as a meteorologist with 25 years of experience, with both a bachelor's and master's degree in meteorology, and a third bachelor's degree in political science with an emphasis on earth and space sciences from UCLA. It says he worked as a broadcaster in Los Angeles and San Diego.'

How Obama's Pick for Fed Chair Became Obama's Sexism Test

Mastodon · 16 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The "race" for the next Federal Reserve chair has, in a way, turned into a test of the White House's openness to women. It's the second time that's happened this year. Though Obama won the women's vote, and Democrats campaigned against a Republican "war on women," by January the president was facing criticism his cabinet was getting too white and too male. A widely-circulated photo showed the Oval Office packed with 10 male advisers, with only the leg of a single female aide visible. For the last few weeks, the same kind of controversy has been brewing over who will be the next Fed chair.

Among people who talk about these things, the field's been narrowed down to two candidates: former Treasury Secretary and National Economic Council chairman Larry Summers and current Fed vice chairwoman Janet Yellen. Yellen would be the first woman to lead the Fed, if President Obama decides to pick her. A lot of people think he should.

The case for Yellen: Economists, according to two new polls, think she's the best choice for the job. A comprehensive Wall Street Journal study showed that of 14 Fed policy makers, Yellen made the most accurate financial predictions between 2009 and 2012. The case against Yellen: an assortment of sexist cliches. Summers wouldn't be a bad choice, necessarily. But the fact that he's gotten in trouble for sexist comments in the past doesn't help.'

Battle of the Sexes

Mastodon · 16 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women make only 77 cents per each dollar made by males. Outrageous! Sex discrimination!

So say advocates of government-enforced “equality.”

But they are wrong. Women today are rarely victims of salary discrimination.

If they were, market competition would punish bosses who discriminate. A company that hired women who were “underpaid” by other companies would have a cost advantage, allowing them to lower prices, and they’d quickly take business away from the “sexist” competition. Since those female workers provide the same value for less, entrepreneurs who hired only women would get rich!

Warren Farrell, author of “Why Men Earn More,” dug deeper into reasons why women are paid less and found that it’s women who make discriminating choices. Women are more likely to choose a well-rounded life than their workaholic male peers.'

Actor testifies on behalf of paternity-rights bill

Mastodon · 16 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bill sparked by a custody dispute involving "The Lost Boys" actor Jason Patric that would allow certain sperm donors to seek paternity rights in court is on hold after a legislative hearing Tuesday.

Patric testified before state lawmakers about his court battle to gain custody of his 3-year-old son, Gus. A judge deemed him a sperm donor rather than a parent during a custody dispute over the boy.

Patric and his ex-girlfriend, Danielle Schreiber, conceived the boy through artificial insemination. They disagree on the role Patric was to play in the child's life.

State Sen. Jerry Hill, D-San Mateo, is carrying SB115, which would allow a man whose sperm was used to conceive a child through artificial insemination to ask a court for parental rights if he can show a certain level of involvement in the child's life.
...
Opponents including the state's chapter of the National Organization for Women, Planned Parenthood, the Academy of California Adoption Lawyers have raised concerns about whether single mothers or same-sex couples who use sperm donors could be negatively affected by the legislation.'

Jennifer Capriati Trial In Stalking, Battery Case Involving Ex-Boyfriend

Mastodon · 16 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A Dec. 17 trial date has been set in Palm Beach County for former tennis star Jennifer Capriati in a stalking and battery case involving her ex-boyfriend.

The 37-year-old Capriati is accused of punching Ivan Brannan while he worked out at a gym on Valentine's Day. Authorities also say Capriati stalked Brannan for months earlier. The charges are misdemeanors.

Capriati's attorney calls the accusations false. The trial date was set at a hearing Friday that Capriati did not attend.

Capriati is a member of the International Tennis Hall of Fame who began her professional career at age 13. She won a gold medal at the 1992 Barcelona Olympics and later won the French and Australian opens. She was arrested for shoplifting and marijuana possession in the 1990s.'

Canada: Controversial men’s rights group fundraising for a Centre for Men and Families

Mastodon · 17 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Adam McPhee is a man. In his eyes, that puts him at a great disadvantage.

“Women have the ‘Walk a Mile in Her Shoes’ campaign,” says the 32-year-old. “But I don’t see a campaign for women to walk around in steel-toed boots. Men have hard shoes, too.”

McPhee is one of a small but swelling group who believe men have become the new underclass. He hopes to open a mancave that will serve as a refuge for his downtrodden brethren. The Canadian Association for Equality, a men’s rights group of which he is a board member, has launched a campaign to establish the first “Centre for Men and Families” in Toronto.

But some gender equity advocates oppose the opening of the venue, fearing it will help CAFE propagate what they view as a misogynist and anti-feminist agenda.

...

“There’s currently no central place for things like helping fathers in family court,” says Michael Cavanaugh, the association’s communications director. “We also have issues with boys falling behind in school. A majority of homeless people are men. Men are more likely to commit suicide.”'

MSN: 'Here are 10 reasons why cats are better than men'

Mastodon · 17 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Lead-in:

'Coming on the heels of that animal/human empathy study, we're going to take what probably isn't a wild leap of faith and say that most of you, when confronted with a choice between your significant other (or the opposite sex in general) or your pet, would probably pick the pet. And while we're equal-opportunity pet owners, the dog=dude/cat=lady cliche exists for a reason. Enter this video. With reasons like "Cats mature as they get older" and "You can legally neuter a cat," it's probably not going to do any favors for diplomatic relations between men and women, but it will probably give you a laugh. And cause you to come up with a few reasons of your own.'

Michele Elliott, et al., interviewed by ManWomanMyth regarding female pedophiles

Matt · 17 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Wikipedia on Michele Elliott here.

Understanding The College Gender Gap

Mastodon · 18 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most of the public universities don't attempt to manipulate admissions by gender, and if they tried, that would likely engender legal actions. At the University of California, for example, a large portion of the admissions is based on statistics: GPA and standardized test scores. At UCLA, the most selective of the UCs over the last several years, there were far more female applicants, yet it accepted the same percentage of both genders. The recent freshman class contained 800 more females than males.

On the other hand, if you're female and planning to apply to an engineering school, you have the advantage. While MIT accepted a mere 7% of its male applicants, 15% of its female applicants gained acceptance. At Harvey Mudd, the Claremont engineering/liberal arts college, 48% of female applicants gained admission while only 17% of the male applicants did. Should you glance over the admissions of other engineering colleges and programs, variances in admissions among the genders will likely favor the female applicant.'

"But all men must know they benefit from sexism"

Mastodon · 18 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What we don't say is: of course not all men hate women. But culture hates women, so men who grow up in a sexist culture have a tendency to do and say sexist things, often without meaning to. We aren't judging you for who you are but that doesn't mean we're not asking you to change your behaviour. What you feel about women in your heart is of less immediate importance than how you treat them on a daily basis.

You can be the gentlest, sweetest man in the world yet still benefit from sexism. That's how oppression works. Thousands of otherwise decent people are persuaded to go along with an unfair system because it's less hassle that way. The appropriate response when somebody demands a change in that unfair system is to listen, rather than turning away or yelling, as a child might, that it's not your fault. And it isn't your fault. I'm sure you're lovely. That doesn't mean you don't have a responsibility to do something about it.'

The latest international false rape allegations

Mastodon · 18 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That supposedly rarest of crimes, a false allegation of rape, is back in the news as a woman in Wales is given a 20 month sentence.

There have been so many of these worldwide of late that we can but scratch the surface. We begin with the UK.

In May last year, Angela England accused a taxi driver of rape. Last week she was given a 20 month sentence at Mold Crown Court, where earlier this year paedophile Mark Bridger was given a life sentence for the murder of April Jones. Fortunately for the victim, his vehicle was fitted with a tracking device which quickly established the truth, although according to the BBC, the allegation was enough to cause him the inconvenience and at times public humiliation any man accused of rape suffers.'

Men don heels for domestic violence awareness

Mastodon · 18 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ryan Kuhn abandoned his red patent leather pumps just halfway into the Walk a Mile in Her Shoes event in downtown Hanover Friday evening.

More than 100 men participating in the walk to support victims of domestic abuse staggered down the street together. The pain was too much, Kuhn said, slipping into a more comfortable pair of flip-flops. Anyway, he said, his figured his floral dress would get the point across.'

Daughter: I lied and sent my dad to prison for rape

Mastodon · 18 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Chaneya Kelly is on a mission: she wants the world to know about a horrible lie she says she told almost 16 years ago – a lie that cost a man his freedom.

“I'm 24 years old and I made this mistake when I was nine years old,” Chaneya told NBC News, “but it's never too late to try and right your wrong. “

Chaneya says that in 1997, she falsely accused a man of raping her. That man – who has always maintained his innocence -- is Daryl Kelly, Chaneya’s father.

“All I think is, ‘One day the truth will set me free,’” said Kelly, from Green Haven Correctional Facility in upstate New York. “All I have to do is hold on.”

...

Her mother, Charade, also submitted an affidavit to the court, swearing she threatened to beat Chaneya unless she said her father raped her.

The prosecutor argued that the recantation looked coerced, and the same judge who oversaw his original trial a year earlier agreed. He refused to vacate Kelly's conviction.'

...

Today, Chaneya’s mom Charade says she’s been drug-free for many years. In a recent interview with NBC News, Charade confirmed that she threatened her daughter with a beating, and said she can’t remember why she was so determined to make Chaneya say she had been molested. She blames the incident on a drug binge. “I [had been] gone for three days. And I was really deep in the grip of my addiction.” When asked why she would threaten her daughter if she didn’t lie, Charade said, “I have no idea, I really don’t.”'

Einstein’s Theory of Relationships

Matt · 19 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'FULL TEXT: Berlin, July 7. – Dr. Albert Einstein, the famous scientist, made an amazing discovery relative to America on his trip which he recently explained to a sympathetic-looking Hollander as follows:

“The excessive enthusiasm for me in America appears to be typically American. And if I grasp it correctly the reason is that the people in America are as colossally bored, very much more than is the case with us. After all, there is so little for them there!” he exclaimed.

Dr. Einstein said this with vibrant sympathy. He continued:

“New York, Boston, Chicago and other cities have their theatres and concerts, but for the rest? There are cities with 1,000,000 inhabitants. Despite which what poverty, intellectual poverty! The people are, therefore, glad when something is given them with which they can play and over which they can enthuse. And that they do, then, with monstrous intensity.

“Above all things there are the women who, as a literal fact, dominate the entire life in America. The men take an interest in absolutely nothing at all. They work and work, the like of which I have never seen anywhere yet. For the rest they are the toy dogs of the women, who spend the money in a most unmeasurable, illimitable way and wrap themselves in a fog of extravagance. They do everything which is the vogue and now quite by chance they have thrown themselves on the Einstein fashion.'

The readers' editor on... offence caused by a satirical piece on 'penis management'

Mastodon · 19 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A column by Suzanne Moore – listing "10 rules for good penis management" – attracted 37 complaints. The bulk of the complaints followed themes within the column to which individuals objected, rather than any simple matter of taste, which is what I would have expected.

Broadly the complaints fell into three groups: that the column was discriminatory against men (all complaints from men), homophobic and made jokes about rape. Only five of the complaints were from women. One reader wrote: "My first complaint concerns the outrageous rampant misandry in the article. Many of the activities Ms Moore is complaining about in the article could apply equally to women. However, she is deliberately 'trolling' against men in this article. I cannot envisage the Guardian publishing an article '10 Rules for Managing your Vagina' written in a similar vein. Such an article would rightly be seen as contumelious and shameful.'

Dept. of State: "Women Leaders from Pacific Participate in U.S. Program on Climate Change"

Minuteman · 19 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'From August 18 – 28, 2013, twelve women climate leaders from across the Pacific region will visit Washington, D.C., Pensacola, Florida, and Honolulu, Hawaii to meet with policymakers, scientists, and innovators to share their experiences and to learn about U.S. efforts to combat climate change. This exchange, a joint initiative of the Secretary's Office of Global Women's Issues and Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs, advances the Rarotonga Partnership for the Advancement of Pacific Island Women and broader U.S. efforts to support the critical role of women around the world in combating climate change. It also builds on a 2012 International Visitors Leadership Program of women climate leaders.
...
Representing the Cook Islands, Fiji, Micronesia, Nauru, New Zealand, Niue, Palau, Papua New Guinea, Samoa, Solomon Islands, and Vanuatu, these climate leaders will share practical skills and ideas learned with counterparts upon returning home.'

Bizarre: Condom ad indulges in plenty of boys-bashing-fathers'-groins imagery to deter men from becoming dads

Mastodon · 19 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'From the opening shot of the scorched sausages (subtle) to the closing shot of the man who just wants to listen to music but ends up hitting a note beyond the castrati range, the ad tells one message: Children are little menaces whose every move jeopardizes mens' manhood.

Kids, you see, are nothing but burdens. Little terrorists. Monsters of the mid-section.

The ad actually works against itself, though. The men in it are family men who apparently wanted kids. Hint: They have more than one kid. They're barbecuing or they're getting home from work or getting on the computer. The life they have and enjoy is enjoyable in large part because they have kids. What father hasn't come home from the office, seen a mess of kids and toys scattered around the driveway and yard, and both hated and loved the sight at the same time? Yeah, it's a mess, but the mess shows that your kid is having a good time with other kids who are having a good time. That's what neighborhood life is about. It's why we build schools and parks and pools and have soccer and baseball leagues everywhere.'

If you can't get the vid to play in the story linked above, it's on YouTube here.

'Bigorexia' Could Come With Serious Side Effects

Matt · 19 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK (CBSNewYork) — It has often been perceived that women are constantly fixated on their diets. Now, a growing number of men have become obsessed with "bulking up."

The new trend has been called "bigorexia" and it could come with some serious health consequences.
...
As many as 45-percent of men have fallen victim to bigorexia or muscle dysmorphia, according to Dr. Michele Kerulis the director of sports & health psychology at the Adler School of Professional Psychology.

"I can remember as young as 13 or 14, looking at some of these muscle magazines, and I was conditioned to think that's what a man looked like. Big shoulders, big legs, just big muscles with veins everywhere," Moretti said.

The emotional impact can be devastating.

"We see psychological abnormalities, including irritability, angry outbursts, which sometimes people would call 'roid rage.' We see depression sometimes, mania," Dr. Kerulis said.'

"Gynocentrism and its origins"

Matt · 20 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

MANN admins received a note from the creator of this site: http://gynocentrism.com/. I started reading but admit haven't finished the current home page essay "Christine de Pizan: the first gender warrior" by one Diana Davison. But so far, it looks pretty interesting, though I confess I don't have her background in the source material myself to make an informed opinion. Still, I hope others might and comment. Excerpt:

'A long time ago (15th century) in a land not too far away (France) a protofeminist named Christine de Pizan initiated a public debate later named La Querelle de la Rose. Simone de Beauvoir honours Pizan as the first woman to “take up her pen in defence of her sex”[1] but Christine was not fighting for new rights, she was strictly defending the chivalry-based gynocentric culture that she saw crumbling away before her eyes.

Though some feminists deny Christine’s status as a member of the gang, she did seem to have set the standard for how women change the public narrative; lies, elitism, deception and manipulation of history bordering on fraud.

Like all feminists who followed in her footprints, she set a Machiavellian example. The end justifies the means and, while you re-write “herstory”, make sure to claim you are meek and helpless the whole time.'

The "About" page for the site is here.

MALECARE Teleconference: "Understanding the New Tests For Prostate Cancer"

Matt · 20 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

MALECARE SEPTEMBER 2013 TELECONFERENCE

"Understanding the New Tests For Prostate Cancer"
Thursday, September 12, 2013 at 6PM EDT

1- An overview of the new tests becoming available for men regarding prostate cancer
2- A discussion about these new tests and their role in current treatment choices.
3- Q&A
Dial in at 1.800.868.1837 or direct dial 1.404.920.6440
conference code 537349# (don't forget to press #)

Please email your questions for the speakers, in advance, to info-at-malecare.org

Speakers:
Judd Moul, M.D.
Professor and Chief of the Division of Urologic Surgery and Director of the Duke Prostate Center at Duke University Medical Center. Prior to joining Duke, he was Professor of Surgery at the Uniformed Services University of the Health Sciences (USUHS) in Bethesda, Maryland and an attending Urologic Oncologist at the Walter Reed Army Medical Center (WRAMC) in Washington, DC. In addition, he was Director of the Center for Prostate Disease Research (CPDR); a Congress mandated research program of the Department of Defense based at USUHS and WRAMC.

Joel Nowak, MSW, MS
Director, Advocacy and Advanced Stage Disease
Malecare Cancer Support

SUPPORT PROSTATE CANCER RESEARCH. VISIT START A CURE, Today!

419 Lafayette Street 2nd Floor | New York, NY 10003 US

U.S. Dept. of Health & Human Services- "Care Counts: Women, Families and the Affordable Care Act Challenge Contest"

Minuteman · 21 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Women are often at the center of healthy and resilient families; they make approximately 80% of all family health care decisions and are more likely to be the primary caregivers for children and elderly parents. To help make women aware of the important benefits available to them and their families through the Affordable Care Act, HHS is initiating this Challenge.
...
This Challenge calls for the creation of an innovative, educational Tool that informs women about enrollment in their State's Marketplace as well as key provisions of the Affordable Care Act designed specifically to improve their health and that of their families. Sponsored by the Office of Women's Health at the Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA) and the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Office on Women's Health, in collaboration with the Coordinating Committee on Women's Health, the Challenge aims to reach all women, but particularly those in medically underserved communities.'

NIH Funding Opportunity: "Health Promotion Among Racial and Ethnic Minority Males"

Minuteman · 21 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'This initiative seeks applications from applicants that propose to stimulate and expand research in the health of minority men. Specifically, this initiative is intended to: 1) enhance our understanding of the numerous factors (e.g., sociodemographic, community, societal, personal) influencing the health promoting behaviors of racial and ethnic minority males and their subpopulations across the life cycle, and 2) encourage applications focusing on the development and testing of culturally and linguistically appropriate health-promoting interventions designed to reduce health disparities among racially and ethnically diverse males and their subpopulations age 21 and older.
...
It is well documented that males experience approximately a five-year shorter life expectancy when compared with females. During the 20th century, life expectancy at birth increased from 48 to 74 years for males and from 51 to 79 years for females. Increases in life expectancy are, in part, attributed to improvements in lifestyle, nutrition, housing, hygiene and medical care. The disparities in life expectancy are more pronounced among men of color and economically disadvantaged males. For example, the life expectancy of European American males and African American males are 74.6 and 67.7 years respectively.

In 2005, the National Center for Health Statistics reported the leading causes of death in males as heart disease, cancer (lung and prostate), accidents, unintentional injuries, stroke, lung disease, diabetes, pneumonia, influenza, suicide, chronic liver disease, and Alzheimer's disease. Mortality rates from these causes of death are higher for minority males because their diseases are at a more advanced stage at diagnosis and are often complicated by co-existing conditions.
...
Males are more likely than females to experience death from unintentional injury. Minority males are more at risk to die from such injuries when compared with their White counterparts. For example, in 2004 the death rate for unintentional injuries is 51.6 per 1000,000 deaths (year) for white males. The death rate for unintentional injuries is 51.6 per 100,000 deaths for White males. This compares with 72.5 deaths per 100,000 for American Indian/Alaska Native males followed by 55.6 per 100,000 deaths for African American males and 44.7 per 100,000 deaths for Hispanic males. The disparities in health are often more pronounced among underserved and uninsured racial and ethnic minority males who often delay in seeking clinical care. There are ample data highlighting that uninsured individuals experience greater declines in health status and die prematurely from a variety of illnesses when compared to those with continuous health care coverage. This is particularly important given that racial and ethnic minority populations are disproportionately represented among the uninsured. For example, in 2005, 23% of African American males were uninsured followed by 30.7% of Hispanic males. This compares with 11.2% White males. These and other health disparities noted among minority males require greater elucidation and intervention.'

Woman arrested for drunken driving, domestic violence with 8 children in the car

Mastodon · 21 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A grandmother was arrested for drunken driving Saturday after a family argument at a local park.

Police were called by a man Saturday saying his wife and members of her family had assaulted him at Kern Park following an argument during a family reunion.

The wife, Retha Mae McCoy, allegedly began hitting her husband during the argument and members of her family joined in, kicking and punching him. Their eight grandchildren, aged 1 through 16, were in the car, and when the oldest one attempted to help her grandfather, she was hit in the face.

When police arrived, they smelled alcohol on McCoy's breath and found her blood alcohol content was .09. She was arrested for her 2nd OWI and Battery - Domestic Violence-related. If she is convicted of both crimes, she could face up to one year and three months in prison.'

School Has Become Too Hostile to Boys

Matt · 21 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As school begins in the coming weeks, parents of boys should ask themselves a question: Is my son really welcome? A flurry of incidents last spring suggests that the answer is no. In May, Christopher Marshall, age 7, was suspended from his Virginia school for picking up a pencil and using it to “shoot” a “bad guy” — his friend, who was also suspended. A few months earlier, Josh Welch, also 7, was sent home from his Maryland school for nibbling off the corners of a strawberry Pop-Tart to shape it into a gun. At about the same time, Colorado’s Alex Evans, age 7, was suspended for throwing an imaginary hand grenade at “bad guys” in order to “save the world.”

In all these cases, school officials found the children to be in violation of the school’s zero-tolerance policies for firearms, which is clearly a ludicrous application of the rule. But common sense isn’t the only thing at stake here. In the name of zero tolerance, our schools are becoming hostile environments for young boys.'

'Ze Germans Aren't Coming'

Matt · 21 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Which leaves France. France has a legitimately great fertility rate: 2.08—which is within spitting distance of the replacement rate. But is French fertility driven by its daycare centers? Not so much. Separate out the fertility rates of native-born Frenchwomen from the foreign-born population and you see a tremendous divide. Native-born French women have a TFR around 1.7. Foreign-born French women are much higher, probably north of 2.8. (Finding hard numbers here is difficult because it is taboo in France to make such demographic distinctions. Which means that in order for French demographers to get the same numbers our Census Bureau puts out every year, they have to hand-count (and sort) birth records. For a good discussion of all of this, see Christopher Caldwell's definitive Reflections on the Revolution in Europe.)

What the gulf between native- and foreign-born French fertility suggests is that daycare centers and gender equality have only helped France so much—about as much, actually, as they've helped Scandinavia. What really gives France its demographic boost has been immigration which, in the French experience, has also been a source of many problems.
...
But anyone who looks at demographic decline and says, "Hey, just give us nationalized daycare and the problem takes care of itself" is either uninformed, or trying to sell you something.
...
Twenty-three percent of German men—that's not a typo, 23 percent—said that "zero" was the ideal family size. There probably aren't public policy solutions to a cultural worldview like that.'

'This summer’s hottest teachers who allegedly got busy with students'

Mastodon · 21 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Daily Caller was prepared to take a well-deserved respite from reporting on the national epidemic of teacher-student sex romps because — surely — the number of cases would slow down during the dog days of summer. Right?

That plan turned out to be ridiculously naïve. The last couple months have been a banner time for teachers landing in legal trouble for banging their students. Lust knows no academic year, apparently.'

SAVE E-lert: Don't Let KFC Chicken-out on Domestic Violence

Matt · 21 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Kentucky Fried Chicken (KFC) is still running a TV ad that shows a woman slapping a man across the face. We can't imagine them running an ad like this with the genders reversed. Can you?

This gender biased ad has triggered an international outcry. Persons from 28 countries have signed a petition condemning the KFC ads for promoting "dangerous stereotypes." Facebook comments say KFC is "sexist."

A major research compilation shows female-perpetrated partner violence is more widespread than male-perpetrated violence - 28.3% vs. 21.6%: http://domesticviolenceresearch.org/

Sign the petition here:
http://www.change.org/petitions/kentucky-fried-chicken-stop-making-light-of-domestic-violence

Want to visit KFC stores to share your concern?

Download this flyer, visit your local KFC restaurant, and share the flyer and speak with the manager. Ask them to contact the corporate office on your behalf. Then, take a photo of the restaurant. Send it with details (location, manager's response, etc.) to tstoddard-at-saveservices.org

Photos: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/kfc/photos/

Thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

"10 Things Bad Bosses Say": Subtle misandry? You decide

Matt · 22 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. To be fair, looks like it was first run in US News. However, they chose to re-run it, and I'm guessing the stock photo is Yahoo!'s idea: big mean old man raging at two helpless females. But it isn't just the photo that has my wicked, suspicious mind alerted to this cunning and subtle misandry. :) Note item #6: seems specifically targeted at male bosses. Well I can say I've had female supervisors say inappropriate things to me and fellow male employees; if this list-maker wanted the list to be gender-neutral, she could have worded item #6 a bit differently to cover both male and female bosses who cross this sort of line. But that'd be a bit too fair, wouldn't it? Excerpt:

'6. "That dress really flatters your figure." Commenting on employees' physical appearance -- particularly their bodies -- is a good way to make people uncomfortable (few people want to feel that their boss is assessing their attractiveness), as well as invite harassment complaints down the road.'

A Voice for Male Students - a new website promoting educational equity for men and boys

TCM · 22 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

See the introduction post here. Excerpt:

'As stated in the mission and values page, the first mission of this site is to raise awareness of the structural and cultural inequities men and boys – and in particular male students – face at all levels in our education system, and promote advocacy and activism in their behalf. Those issues, as you may see in the Summary of Issues page (which features an extensive degree of research), are broken down into three main categories:

1. Educational Attainment & Well-Being
2. Academic Culture – Misandry & Conformism
3. Rights & Protections'

CDC - 2013-08-21 CDC NCHS - Trends in Circumcision for Male Newborns in U.S. Hospitals: 1979–2010

Minuteman · 22 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Across the 32-year period from 1979 through 2010, the national rate of newborn circumcision declined 10% overall, from 64.5% to 58.3% (Table and Figure 1). During this time, the overall percentage of newborns circumcised during their birth hospitalization was highest in 1981 at 64.9%, and lowest in 2007 at 55.4%.

However, rates fluctuated during this period, generally declining during the 1980s, rising in the 1990s, and declining again in the early years of the 21st century. These changes occurred during a period of changing guidance on routine newborn circumcision. For example, American Academy of Pediatrics' (AAP) task force reports during the 1970s (1,2) stated there was no medical indication for routine circumcision of the newborn; AAP revised its position in 1989 (3), stating there were potential medical benefits to newborn circumcision; and then in 1999 (4), an AAP policy statement said that, despite potential medical benefits of newborn male circumcision, there was insufficient evidence to recommend routine circumcision of newborns.'

Oh feminism, what happened to you?

Mastodon · 22 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many modern-day feminists engage in man-bashing rather than making dignified demands for equality, as the feminists of the early twentieth century did. So Robin Morgan unashamedly admits, 'I feel that man-hating is an honourable and viable political act'. The view many modern feminists seek to spread, in the words of Marilyn French, is that 'all men are rapists and that's all they are'. A Feminist Dictionary goes so far as to define 'male' as 'a degeneration and deformity of the female'. This is an effort to make men seem inferior, not to elevate the position of women. It starkly contrasts with the goal of feminists of old, which was to make women be viewed as equal, not superior, to men.
...
Feminism used to view women as self-sufficient rather than requiring the protection of the state

If recent debates are anything to go by, feminism now seems to be about protecting the delicate, sensitive, victimised female of the human species. For example, we apparently need to be protected from pictures of topless women in the Sun, lest these images destroy our self-esteem. Feminism perpetuates the view that women are fragile – in the words of Andrea Dworkin, 'to be rapeable, a position that is social, not biological, defines what a woman is'. In contrast, the feminists of the early twentieth century were keen to show that they needed little help and could fend for themselves, just like any man. Indeed, as early as 1847, Charlotte Brontë wrote: 'Women feel just as men feel; they need exercise for their faculties, and a field for their efforts, as much as their brothers do; they suffer from too rigid a restraint, too absolute a stagnation, precisely as men would suffer."

Canada: Jailed for Nonpayment of Child Support - But it's Not His Child

Matt · 23 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The feminists have ratcheted up the laws against men to such an outrageous level that paternity fraud is not just ignored, but routinely rubber stamped by the courts. Whether one agrees with the concept of child support or not, virtually everyone can agree that jailing men for child support over children who are not theirs is morally wrong. Men are routinely sent to jail for falling behind on paying child support, even though debtors' prisons in the U.S. were mostly eliminated in the mid-nineteenth century.

The family courts and laws are set up in such a way that makes it very easy for a mother to collect child support, and very difficult for a man to avoid it. If a couple was married, the default law is that the man will be required to pay child support for any child born while they were married. In order for a man who isn't the father to escape this outcome, he must obtain a paternity test and take a series of legal steps in court. Most states only allow a short window of time for a man to do this. If a man is not aware of the child, which he may not be if his wife or former wife doesn't notify him of the child right away, he loses all chance to fight the child support, and will be on the hook for hundreds of thousands of dollars for the next 18 years until the child becomes an adult.'

Americans Are Learning to Love the Foreskin

Matt · 23 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Foreskin is in — and circumcision has been in decline for some 30 years, a new study from an arm of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention finds.

Americans today aren't as anti-foreskin as they were when Ronald Reagan was president: 58.3 percent of American baby boys in 2010 were circumcised compared to 64.5 percent in 1979. So while that's a high number compared to, say, Canada, where only 30 percent of boys are circumcised, there is increasing evidence that American parents are generally comfortable not tinkering with their sons' manhoods (even if, since 2007, there's been a slight upward trend in American parents making sure their baby boys are cut).

The numbers come from a 30-year study published this month by the National Center for Health Statistics, a branch of the CDC. The numbers indicate that the circumcision rate in the U.S. is close to the lowest it's ever been (the nadir for circumcision was in 2007).'

'Drop in Circumcision Rate Is Bad News for Baby Boys'

Mastodon · 23 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to newly released data from the National Center for Health Statistics, circumcision rates for newborn boys have dropped by six percentage points over the past three decades. Annual hospital discharge data of between 7,000 and 12,000 baby boys was examined, and interestingly enough, the biggest dip in circumcisions occurred in western states in the U.S. as opposed to other areas of the country.

...

First and foremost, we knew we wanted it done for hygiene reasons. It's so much harder to keep that area clean if the procedure isn't performed -- and we believed it would leave him more prone to infection if he was not circumcised.

...

Lastly, we worried about how being uncircumcised might affect his sex life down the road. What kind of parents would we have been to put a damper on things in that department? We feared that it wouldn't be as pleasurable for him, or that it might be a turn off for a lot of women, which could be pretty humiliating. (I know I'd want to hop out of bed and run if I saw all that extra skin staring back at me.)'

False Rape Claim Leads To 2 Months Jail

Mastodon · 24 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Hampton, Virginia woman who falsely accused a man of raping her -- landing him in prison for four years -- will spend two months in jail.

Elizabeth Paige Coast, 26, will be allowed to serve her sentence on weekends. She came forward in 2012, saying that she lied about Johnathan C. Montgomery raping her. He spent four years in prison over the false claim, the Richmond Times-Dispatch reports.

Coast told a judge Monday that when she was caught by her mother looking at pornography on the internet, she said she had been sexually assaulted, blamed her neighbor. The lie snowballed from there, she said.
...
During Montgomery's case, Coast testified that he molested her in 2000 when he was 14 and she was 10. Montgomery was convicted and sentenced to more than seven years in prison, according to the Washington Post.
...
Despite a lack of evidence in the trial, the judge took Coast's word over Montgomery's and sentenced the innocent man.
...
The consequences for sending an innocent man to prison for four years include paying $90,000 in restitution along with her jail sentence.'

Feminism: How it affects you, your divorce and your children

Mastodon · 24 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I've played this scratchy old record for you before, and I shall play it again. It never ceases to amaze me how MEN still don't get it, and continue repeating the same actions with the same result: FAILURE!!

Feminism and its evil twin sister political correctness, are an ideology that is firmly entrenched in every country today, including South Africa. You will not see its face because it's very cleverly disguised, camouflaged and presented as normal and socially acceptable. Until you dig deeper.
...
Read, research and analyze feminism and men's rights, Google is your best friend, our time will come. It is impossible that such an illogical, bigoted and hateful movement such as feminism will last forever, eventually men will revolt. It has already started. This horror that is perpetuated on us transcends all races, religion, class and creed divisions, put your differences at the door and stand united or suffer defeat.

Lastly, after all that has happened to me, I do not hate women. I have a great mother, a young daughter and many supportive females in my family. They themselves are victims of feminist ideology that finally awoke to what is being done to their sons, brothers, fathers, nephews and all the men they love.

They woke up and are pissed off. And so am I. And so should YOU.'

Women Should Pay More for Health Care

Mastodon · 24 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Obama Administration is about to spend $684 million on a public relations and enrollment campaign to convince young, uninsured Americans to buy government-approved ObamaCare plans. In order to be successful, they need to convince young men in particular to enroll, but ObamaCare requires insurers to charge men the same for their premiums as women in 2014.

This attempt at fairness is anything but. If fairness were really the guiding principle it would be quite simple: Women would pay more for health insurance because women consume more health care.
...
People are uncomfortable in acknowledging sex differences in health care costs, but they should recognize that those same differences crop up in in other markets, too. It's not discussed as frequently, but sometimes men are the ones paying more for certain purchases, like car insurance. Would it be fair to charge women more for it just to give men a discount?'

Thousands of Men Warned About Faulty PSA Tests

Minuteman · 24 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here.

'Thousands of men in central Pennsylvania have been told that their blood tests for prostate cancer may have been inaccurate.

Pinnacle Health of Harrisburg sent letters to 7,500 men to alert them that a faulty chemical in their prostate-specific antigen (PSA) tests led to results showing higher levels of PSA than were actually present, ABC News reported.

Significantly elevated PSA levels may be a sign of prostate cancer and often lead to prostate biopsies. The faulty tests were used at Pinnacle from May 2012 to June 26, 2013.

It's likely that the Pinnacle Health patients are just the tip of the iceberg, because all lots of the "IMMULITE" PSA tests were recalled June 27 by Siemens Healthcare Diagnostics. The company shipped the faulty tests to labs from February 2012 through May 2013, ABC News reported.'

Ed. note: Item is about halfway down the page as of this writing.

Sex Ed Teacher Indicted On Charges Of Raping 14-Year-Old Student

Mastodon · 24 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'WORCESTER (CBS) — Worcester County Prosecutors say they have strong forensic evidence including pictures and texts in their case charging a female sex ed teacher in Fitchburg with raping a 14-year-old male student on multiple occasions.

Rachelle Gendron, 27, was visibly shaken as she was arraigned on five counts of rape aggravated by age difference and a charge of enticement of a child under 16 years.

In court, the prosecutors told the judge they have text messages and pictures of Gendron exposing herself on the victim's and her cell phones, including photos showing Gendron "in various states of undress" with her breast exposed.'

UK: GCSE results 2013: girls stretch to record lead over boys

Mastodon · 24 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Government was told to commission a large-scale study into the underachievement of boys after GCSE results showed that girls were increasingly likely to secure top grades.

According to figures, some 24.8 per cent of exams sat by girls were graded A* or A, compared with just 17.6 per cent of those taken by boys.

The gulf – 7.2 percentage points – was larger than at any other time since the introduction of GCSEs in the late 80s.

Data also showed that 72.3 per cent of exams sat by girls were graded C or better, compared with just 63.7 per cent of boys' test papers.

This was the biggest disparity in a decade.'

False report leads to woman's arrest on domestic violence charge, police say

Mastodon · 24 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Paw Paw-area woman was arrested on charges of false report of a felony and domestic violence early Friday after police say she attempted to attack her boyfriend with a knife.

Alejandra Aguilar, 22, was arrested following an investigation that started when police were told she was the victim of an assault but she later admitted she lied to deputies, according to a news release from the Van Buren County Sheriff's Office.

Police were called to the 45000 block of Paw Paw Road in Paw Paw Township on a report of "an unknown disturbance with an out of control intoxicated female," the news release said.'

First cut is the deepest

Matt · 24 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a society, we're mostly in denial about the fact that a large proportion of guys walking around today were traumatized shortly after birth by circumcision, performed in the hospital where they were born. In Canada, the medical profession didn't come out against circumcision until 1975. Despite official disapproval, babies are still circumcised for irrational reasons like "so he'll look like Daddy." There may be a tendency to joke this subject away, precisely because it is so painful, but unfortunately we now know thanks to recent anatomical research that removing babies' foreskins is not all that different from removing an eyelid or lip. All these structures contain sensitive nerve endings and a mucosal membrane for lubrication. The foreskin contains most of the specialized nerve endings needed for full sexual pleasure. Removing it is the equivalent, gals, of removing your clit. It's still often done without anaesthetic, even though the way the foreskin is attached to the penis in babies is similar to the way fingernails are attached to the nail bed.
...
Besides being unethical, since it removes healthy tissue without the informed consent of the patient, circumcision also has no demonstrated health benefits. It's kept going, say activists, by denial and our society's deep-seated anxiety about sex.

Fortunately, rates are dropping rapidly in Canada, though they're still at 60 per cent in the U.S. In the meantime, we have to come to terms with this poor decision made by our elders. It's important to realize that post-traumatic stress from the operation can linger into adulthood, exacerbating rage, fear, depression, low self-esteem or shame. And if you're a male who has trouble being sexually intimate or is chronically angry with women, this could be what ails you.'

Marine Corps to open infantry training to enlisted women

Matt · 25 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Marine Corps will allow enlisted women to participate in basic infantry training beginning this fall as part of ongoing research to determine what additional ground combat jobs may open to female personnel.

New female enlisted Marines will volunteer for spots in the service's Infantry Training Battalion, mirroring a related effort allowing new female lieutenants to enroll in the Corps' Infantry Officer Course, according to an official planning document obtained by Marine Corps Times. Titled "Assignment of Women in Combat Units," the document is dated Aug. 16.

"Female Marines will have the opportunity to go through the same infantry training course as their male counterparts," the document states. However, as with the research involving female officers, "female enlisted Marines who successfully complete infantry training as part of this research process will not be assigned infantry as a military occupational specialty and will not be assigned to infantry units."

It's unclear whether any enlisted women have volunteered yet. Marine Corps officials were not immediately available to discuss the plan.
...
The Corps' research is expected to last years, and Marine officials have said no women will join infantry units before 2015. Even then, the services will be allowed to ask for exceptions that, if granted by the Pentagon, could keep some jobs closed to women.'

Domestic violence advocate arrested in family fight

Mastodon · 25 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'BRIDGEPORT -- A law and order state representative from Fairfield was ordered to turn over her gun Monday following her arrest on charges of assaulting her younger sister.

State Rep. Brenda Kupchick, who has supported tougher treatment for domestic violence defendants, had nothing to say following her arraignment in the Golden Hill Street courthouse on third-degree assault and disorderly conduct charges.

...

As uncomfortable as Kupchick seemed in the courtroom, many of the court staff seemed equally uncomfortable to have her there because of her support on the same laws she is now accused of breaking. For the last half a dozen years she has worked closely with the regional Center for Women and Families, which counsels victims of domestic abuse.

Standing before Superior Court Judge John Cronan, Kupchick admitted she recently got a gun and has a temporary permit for it. The judge ordered her to turn it over to police.

Cronan also ordered Kupchick to stay away from her sister, 42-year-old Lisa Fabrizi, who was charged with disorderly conduct in the incident.

...

Police sources quoted Kupchick family friends as saying Kupchick, a second term Republican legislator representing the 132nd District and her sister had recently been having contentious relationship possibly regarding a third person. No other details were available.'

Jail Becomes Home for Husband Stuck With Lifetime Alimony

Mastodon · 26 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ari Schochet has grown so accustomed to being sent to jail for missing alimony payments that he goes into a routine.

Before his family-court hearing, Schochet, 41, sticks on a nicotine patch to cope with jailhouse smoking bans, sends an “Ari Off the Grid” e-mail to friends and family, and scrawls key phone numbers in permanent ink on his forearm.

Schochet, who said he worked as a portfolio manager at Citadel Investment Group Inc. and Fortress Investment Group LLC (FIG) and once earned $1 million a year, has been jailed for missing court-ordered payments at least eight times in the past two years as he coped with the end of his 17-year marriage.

The reason he ran afoul of the law was simple. He was out of work for most of that time, a victim of a weak economy, and he ran through his savings trying to pay his wife alimony and child support that totaled almost $100,000 a year.'

CDOT using talking urinal cakes in drunk driving campaign

mens_issues · 26 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Your tax dollars at work - targeting men only.

'DENVER - The Colorado Department of Transportation is targeting men in its latest drunk driving campaign.

The Heat Is On campaign is launching radio, bus and billboard advertising, as well as in-bar advertising such as coasters, posters and a new tool for CDOT, the Interactive Urinal Communicator.

The IUCs feature a 15-second audio message encouraging male bar patrons to not drive and instead look to other alternatives, such as public transit, 1800taxicab.com or Uber.

Males, ages 21-34, have a higher propensity for dying in alcohol-related motor vehicle crashes, according to CDOT.'

Japan Airlines enhances Hawaii flights with new menu, women-only area

Mastodon · 27 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Japan Airlines is introducing new features and services on its flights to Honolulu, including a women-only area on the plane for applying make-up, or breast-feeding, as well as in-flight meals designed by celebrity chefs and Hawaii's Kuaaina Sandwich Shop.

Japan Airlines said Monday that it will continue to seek ways to bring passengers unique and refreshing onboard experiences through more delectable meal choices.

The first installment of the in-flight meal changes will be available starting Sept. 1, on flights from Japan to Honolulu. Meals designed by chef Chikara Yamada will be available from the airline's JAL Bedd Sky Auberge restaurant on business class flights from Tokyo, Nagoya and Osaka to Honolulu. In the economy class on flights on the same routes, in-flight meals have been designed by Chef Kazuhide Nose of Ore-no French and Chef Yoshihiro Yamaura of Ore-no Italian.'

Bethenny Frankel Takes to Twitter and Bashes All Men

Mastodon · 27 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Bethenny Frankel [link added] has developed a huge grudge against men; she recently filed for divorce in December of last year from her husband, Jason Hoppy, but he wasn't the first husband to feel the divorce drama. She divorced her first husband, Peter Sussman, back in 1997.

Bethenny has been making a lot of offensive comments towards men lately; her most popular one, which she tweeted out this morning, said, "It is National Dog Day. I'd like to dedicate it to Cookie & all of the other men, ahem, I mean dogs, out there." Cookie so happens to be the name of my dog so I thank her on that regard but to just call all men dogs is not only sexist but plain ignorant. Has she taken the divorce from Jason Hoppy that bad?
...
Some of her fans have even wondered if her talk show is only going to be about "male bashing," because her show is primarily targeted towards a female audience, as its main priorities are placed upon women's issue. Either way, it is no excuse for Bethenny to be as sexist as she has been. Even as a joke it seems quite tasteless.'

Grommet CEO to Obama: Make VCs fund women, or lose tax benefit

Mastodon · 27 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here's a bold idea to make venture funding equal for man and woman.

End the carried interest tax loophole for any venture firm that doesn't fund the same amount in women-owned businesses as men-owned.

If you're thinking 'Whoa,' then you know how many millions of dollars could be at stake for investors forced to pay taxes on venture capital returns at the normal rate (instead of the much lower capital gains rate.)

But the idea is compelling considering the argument of the woman who dreamt it up and pitched it to President Barack Obama in a blog post yesterday.'

Prison Summer Camp Lets Kids Reconnect With Dads

StayingFit · 27 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Well, because kids need to know their parents, no matter where they are. Just because a father was not a good citizen doesn't mean that he shouldn't have a relationship with his child, or that his child shouldn't have a relationship with him. His child didn't do anything. One of the things that always troubles me is that, you know, we don't ask these questions about the value of children going to visit their mothers in prison. You know, even though only 7 percent of the people in prison are women, that, in sheer numbers, there's more programs for mothers in prison than there are for fathers. And it's like we value the role of mothers above the role of fathers.'

Expelled Basketball Player Suing University Claiming Wrongful Expulsion

Mastodon · 27 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Xavier University basketball player sued the school, alleging it damaged his reputation by expelling him for what he says was a false sexual assault accusation.

Dez Wells' federal lawsuit also names the private Jesuit Catholic school's president as a defendant. Father Michael Graham said in a statement Wednesday that the university denies the allegations and will defend its decision to expel Wells.

Xavier kicked Wells out a year ago in the aftermath of a female student's accusation that he sexually assaulted her in July 2012. A Hamilton County grand jury declined to indict Wells after hearing evidence in the case. Prosecutor Joe Deters later publicly questioned the school's expulsion and urged Xavier to "revisit" the situation.

At the time, Xavier said Wells was expelled for a "serious violation" of the code of student conduct, and that a board consisting of faculty, students and administrators made the decision following standard procedures for U.S. universities.'

Trial reveals secret life of ‘Nazi bride’ behind Germany’s ‘kebab killings’

Matt · 28 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To her neighbours in the quiet German town of Zwickau, she was the “friendly, sociable and generous” young woman who liked to drop by for a glass of prosecco. To her comrades on the German far Right, she was a smart, assertive and violent member of their secret terrorist militia.

Revealed in a Munich court, the hidden life of Beate Zschaepe, a mousy, bespectacled 38-year-old with the looks of a librarian, has given Germany a chilling insight into its neo-Nazi movement.

In the biggest home-grown terrorist scandal since the days of the Baader-Meinhof gang in the 1970s, her group is accused of carrying out ten murders, two bombings and 15 bank robberies during a 13-year campaign.

Worse still, Germany’s police and spy agencies thought the killings, dubbed the “kebab murders” because they targeted mainly Turkish immigrants, were part of a feud within the Turkish mafia.'

Israel: Child Support Ruling is ‘Very Good News for Divorced Fathers’

Matt · 28 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Tel Aviv judge has ruled that a father from Rehovot does not need to pay child support – setting a precedent that could change child support arrangements for many divorced parents.

Judge Yoram Shaked ruled that the father in question does not need to pay support because he shares custody of his children with his ex-wife, and because she has a higher income and more disposable income than he does. Were the father to pay support, he would need to pay only 300 shekels a month, Shaked found – a finding that led him to decide to waive the obligation to pay altogether.

Attorney Aviv Harel explained the significant of the verdict. “Until today, most judges set minimum child support payments for Jewish fathers that stood at 1,350 shekels per month per child or more,” he said.
...
Judges usually rule that fathers who share equal custody of their children with the children’s mother must pay 75% of the cost of raising the children, Harel said, while fathers who do not have custody at all must pay 100% support.'

What happens when one parent poisons a child against the other parent

Matt · 28 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Parental alienation is a controversial topic and still the subject of much debate in both the legal and medical communities. Some psychologists view the condition to be similar to Stockholm's Syndrome, commonly known as brainwashing, in which captives become sympathetic with their captors in their innate drive to survive.
...
The psychological underpinnings of "alienators" are complex and confusing. Craig Childress, a leading authority on PA who practices in Pasadena, says parents who use brainwashing tactics on their children to fulfill their own selfish need to harm or denigrate an ex-spouse most often fit the profile of a person with Narcissistic Personality Disorder or Borderline Personality Disorder. People diagnosed with personality disorders are difficult to treat, and oftentimes will never even be diagnosed.
...
The outcome of such mind games pushes the child to cut the targeted parent out of their life, and the unthinkable occurs: The child's relationship with either mother or father comes to an end.
...
He said parental alienation "is not a child custody issue, but a child protection issue. Psychopathology is induced in the child to meet the parents' (or step-parent's) emotional needs. It's a very destructive parent/child relationship."

Social services will not intervene even if a diagnosis of PA is made. "If you get a clinical diagnosis it should happen, but it doesn't," he said.'

A male-positive comic, especially for stay-at-home dads

Kratch · 28 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

A positive message for men. Excerpt:

'On his cartoon blog Zen Pencils, Gavin Aung Than turns inspirational quotes into comic strips. For his newest strip, he illustrated a quote from Bill Watterson's 1990 speech at Kenyon College in the style of Calvin and Hobbes, which Than considers "the greatest comic strip of all time." The comic strip below "is basically the story of my life," Than writes, "except I'm a stay-at-home-dad to two dogs." You can read more at Zen Pencils, where this comic originally appeared. It is reprinted here with his permission.'

Tell Good Samaritan Hospital to stop experimenting on newborn boys

DanBollinger · 28 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

At Good Samaritan Hospital in Cincinnati, more than 200 babies are being circumcised in a study to determine which circumcision clamp, the Gomco or the Mogen, is "better." How are they determining this? By looking at which clamp results in fewer blood-soaked bandages, and by looking at expressions of pain on babies' faces!

This "research" is a heinous violation of medical ethics and human rights. Babies are being cruelly subjected to an unconscionable medical experiment—all in service to the shareholders of a medical instrument company seeking to profit from bad science to sell more circumcision tools.

On October 3, 2013, Intact America will be hosting a press conference and demonstration outside Good Samaritan Hospital, and present the hospital signed by concerned people like you. Our goal is to collect 10,000 signatures, and with your help, we can do it! Please add your signature and pass this on. These "researchers" need to know that conducting pain and bleeding experiments on babies is cruel, unscientific, and WRONG!

Woman charged with homicide after dumping newborn in toilet

Matt · 28 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A heartless Pennsylvania woman gave birth in a bar bathroom, and then left the helpless infant to die in a toilet while she watched pro wrestling and smoked a cigarette, authorities said.

Amanda Catherine Hein, 26, was held without bail yesterday after being charged with one count of criminal homicide stemming from the Aug. 18 tragedy.

A late-night cleaning crew found the infant's body in a toilet tank at Starters Pub in Bethlehem, about 30 miles north of Philadelphia.

"I cannot get inside this lady's head," Northampton County District Attorney John Morganelli said of Hein's potential motive.'

County To Offer Home STD Tests -- for women only

Matt · 28 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Unreal. Like only women get STDs. Want to reduce STD spread? 1. Encourage everyone to find out if they have any STDs and 2. Educate people on how to avoid spreading them and most importantly on how not to get them. But no. That's too simple and besides, it would seem only females get STDs! Excerpt:

'SACRAMENTO (CBS13) – Sacramento County's health department will begin distributing a take-home STD test for women that won't cost users a penny.

The city has one of the highest rates of STDs in the state, and it keeps going up every year. Now a new online program will hopefully get more people to get tested.

"We definitely need all the help we can get," said Sacramento County Public Health Officer Dr. Olivia Kasirye.

The division of public health says STDs are spreading like wildfire in Sacramento, with chlamydia and gonorrhea considered an epidemic.
...
Men will still have to visit a doctor to be tested since the tests are only designed for women.'

Family Sues University's Coaches After Son's Death

Matt · 28 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'GERMANTOWN, Md. (WJZ) — A Frostburg University football player died during the 2011 preseason. Now his family is blaming what they call the "utter incompetence" of the coaching staff. They have filed a lawsuit against the coaches, the NCAA and the helmet manufacturer.

Derek Sheely's family says their son was participating in a dangerous drill when he collapsed on the sidelines and never regained consciousness.
...
It was on the football field where the 22-year-old collapsed. According to a lawsuit, Sheely was bleeding from the head and told his coach he didn't feel right. Witnesses say the coach told him, "Stop your bitching and moaning and quit acting like a [expletive] and get back out there." Sheely fell unconscious moments later and never woke up.
...
Derek Sheely's family has started a foundation in his name to help raise awareness about the danger of concussions.

The Maryland State Department of Education has recommended limiting football hitting drills to two practices per week.'

SAVE E-lert: KFC Removes Offensive Ad, But Has Yet to Apologize

Matt · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

We are happy to report that Kentucky Fried Chicken (KFC) has stopped using their offensive and gender-biased Hot Shot Bites ad, the video that shows a woman slapping a man across the face.

The commercials are no longer running on TV, and when you try to watch the online version you get a 'restricted access' message. It looks to us like KFC might be a little bit embarrassed about their poor choice of advertising.

We want to thank each and every one of you who made phone calls, sent emails, signed the petition, visited KFC restaurants, and commented on the KFC Facebook page. You rock!

But, our work is not done. We believe that KFC needs to apologize. We think they should acknowledge their mistake, and make a good-will effort on behalf of domestic violence victims.

Please take a moment and make one more phone call, or send one more email to KFC. Ask them to apologize and to make a donation to any organization working for ALL victims of domestic violence. Of course, Stop Abusive and Violent Environments - SAVE - comes to mind.

Email: johncywinski-at-yumyum.com
Call: 800-225-5532, extension 1, 1, then 4

Thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Australia: Female teacher pleads guilty to "having sex" with 15-year-old boy

Minuteman · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'After more than 20 years in the profession, a "huge need to feel love" caused a teacher to turn to a teenage student for sex.

The 51-year-old known only as EP sobbed as she told Sydney's District Court on Thursday why she began having sex with the 15-year-old boy.

Following the breakdown of an unhappy marriage in 2006, the woman said she became depressed and suicidal.

"I felt that the last eight years of my marriage that my husband didn't love who I was and just liked me being around as a housewife," she told her sentence hearing.

...

In a victim impact statement read to court, the now 20-year-old man said the experience with his former teacher continued to affect him.

"When I was 15 she made me feel excited and powerful but as I matured I felt ashamed, angry, guilty and confused."'

"Is One Stingy Man Dating Every Woman In America?"

Mastodon · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Randye Hoder has a great piece for Slate on the persistence of gender norms in who pays for dinner that included this amusing factoid: "The study, which surveyed more than 17,000 unmarried heterosexual men and women, found that 84 percent of men and 58 percent of women said men pay for most dating expenses, even after the relationship has been cooking for a while."

Apparently a handful of stingy men are dating a disproportionately large share of American women, thus reconciling the apparent mismatch in those numbers. Either that or someone is misremembering. OK, realistically the misremembering is more likely. But the math does work. You can imagine a handful of attractive, charming men who go out with a lot of women who them dump them swiftly when it becomes apparent that they refuse to pay for dates.'

Arizona: Domestic violence charge doesn’t require physical contact

Mastodon · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A person wrongfully strikes a stranger and is charged with assault. Another person wrongfully strikes someone with whom he has an intimate or close relationship. While the basic act is the same, the person in the second incident is charged with domestic violence assault, and the situation is more serious and may require greater attention in order to protect the victim and change the behavior of the offender. The Arizona Coalition Against Domestic Violence defines domestic violence as “a pattern of coercive control that one person exercises over another.” When the coercive control is also a crime, our laws treat the incident very seriously.
...
Besides a relationship, there must be an underlying crime. Most criminal offenses qualify as domestic violence, i.e., disorderly conduct, assault, threatening and intimidating, stalking, criminal damage, criminal trespass, harassment, and animal cruelty. Theft is about the only common offense which cannot be charged as domestic violence. Defendants arrested for a domestic violence often complain, “I didn’t hurt anyone,” but physical contact is not required for an incident to be charged as domestic violence.'

Judge declines ruling on mixed-gender sports issue

Mastodon · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The increasing number of boys playing on girls' high school teams has altered the competitive balance of some sports, according to recent court filings by the Pennsylvania Interscholastic Athletic Association.

But this week, a Commonwealth Court judge declined to modify a 38-year-old injunction that barred the PIAA from engaging in gender discrimination.

Instead, Judge B. Kevin Brobson said if the PIAA wanted to ban boys from participating in girls' sports and vice versa, it should establish such a policy.

"Only then, if that policy is challenged in a court of law, may its constitutionality be evaluated," Brobson wrote.'

New Zealand: Gender gap grows in region's schools

Mastodon · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Girls have been academically outperforming boys for years and the growing achievement disparity is an "elephant in the room" which should be causing concern, some principals say.
...
The 10 per cent disparity in level 3 achievement nationally stretches to 27 per cent in co-educational secondary schools in the Nelson region.
...
Mr Ching said Waimea had introduced programmes to address the achievement gap and improve boys' attitudes, including a junior boys' literacy programme - with senior male students volunteering as tutors.
...
Mr Ching said the big issue in the 1980s was proving that "girls can do anything", and noone had thought twice about promoting that ideal. Now boys were the ones lagging behind.

"If we want to make a change we have to look at opportunities that will promote the performance of boys, without disadvantaging girls in any way," he said.'

More awareness needed to address college male culture

Mastodon · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Men's Project is an internship and educational outreach program at the UA that aims to address issues specific to college men. Started last spring by the Women's Resource Center Program Director, Krista Millay, and two undergraduate student interns, it seeks to become a resource for those who are generally ignored in diversity-oriented college programming: men.

Although college males are not a traditionally marginalized group, Alex Karaman, a graduate assistant for the Women's Resource Center who specifically oversees The Men's Project, explains why this group is important.

"On one hand, men are afforded many advantages in our society, from higher pay to greater presence in political offices," he said. "On the other hand, when discussing identity-based programming, men can be left out of the equation. Research focuses heavily on traditionally marginalized university communities: young women, students of color, low-income students, and international students."

College male culture is a set of pressures that college men face that stem from typically masculine norms and stereotypes. These pressures lead to a number of behavioral consequences ranging from binge drinking, risk-taking and homophobia to aggression and violence.'

Teen's science camp in Westwood helps girls expand their horizons

Mastodon · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women represented 27 percent of workers in science and engineering jobs in 2010, according to the National Science Foundation. And while women are either equally represented or surpass men in obtaining undergraduate or advanced degrees in the social or biosciences, women still lag behind men in the physical sciences and mathematics. In computer science and engineering, women represent less than 30 percent of those seeking degrees, according to the foundation.

In Westwood, the genders are more balanced in a STEM course at the eighth-grade level, where it is one of a group of required electives. Now, the high school is working to increase girls' participation in those courses at advanced levels, and Adelyn Perez, an applied technology teacher at the high school, said she has seen more girls sign up, possibly because the courses increasingly are oriented around design and problem-solving.
...
Having Herzing act as a role model in the sciences and introducing the girls to STEM fields at a young age could help to steer them toward taking advanced classes — like computer-aided design, electricity and electronics, or fabrication and design — at the high school level, Perez said.'

NPO: Attend the Connecticut Child Support Guidelines Hearings

Matt · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'National Parents Organization of Connecticut is seeking volunteers to respond to Connecticut's Department of Social Services proposed amendments to the child support guidelines. We need volunteers to attend the hearings and help get other members to attend the hearings.
...
The Connecticut Executive Committee is writing National Parents Organization of Connecticut's formal response representing our views and recommendations. It will be posted on the website when it is competed.

From our experience in Massachusetts, we have learned that attendance is important.'

Virginia's new attorney-general's family law stance won him support of fathers' rights movement

Mastodon · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two weeks after he was sworn in as Virginia attorney general, Ken Cuccinelli II went to court one last time as a private-practice lawyer.

Fellow lawyers viewed the appearance at the Fairfax County Juvenile and Domestic Relations District Court in January 2010 as unusual because attorneys general almost never handle private cases. At the time, Cuccinelli's deputy told The Washington Post that the case involved "some sensitive issues and some child witnesses, and the client wanted some sensitivity, and he wanted Ken Cuccinelli, so he finished out that matter."

Cuccinelli's office didn't say so then, but the client was Ron M. Grignol Jr., a former House of Delegates candidate embroiled in a custody dispute with his ex-wife.

Grignol is also the former leader of Fathers for Virginia, which seeks to "empower divorced fathers as equal partners in parenting," and of a second group that contends that men are frequently victimized by false allegations of domestic abuse. Grignol did not respond to requests for comment about the groups, which some women's rights organizations have accused of distorting the facts about domestic violence.'

Virginia's new attorney-general criticized for fathers' rights ties

Mastodon · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cuccinelli is not specifically, openly pro-fathers' rights (and to be clear, the No. 1 "fathers' rights" issue is wanting to pay less child support). His support for their agenda is honestly more about his opposition to legal divorce, something else he doesn't talk about much anymore.

"If you are sued for divorce in Virginia, there's virtually nothing you can do to stop it," Cuccinelli said in 2008 to the Family Foundation, a socially conservative Richmond-based advocacy group. "This law has everything to do with the breakdown of the family. The state says marriage is so unimportant that if you just separate for a few months, you can basically nullify the marriage. What we're trying to do is essentially repeal no-fault divorce when there are children involved."

As a state senator in 2005, Cuccinelli offered a bill that would have made it so parents initiating a no-fault divorce could have that action counted against them "when deciding custody and visitation." The measure never came to a vote, but Cuccinelli won praise from Stephen Baskerville, then-president of the American Coalition for Fathers and Children, for fighting against the no-fault divorce "epidemic."'

China: Woman who gouged out eyes of Chinese boy sought

Mastodon · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police in northern China launched a massive search Wednesday for a woman accused of gouging out the eyes of a 6-year-old boy.

Authorities in the city of Linfen in Shanxi province offered a 100,000 yuan ($16,000) reward for the woman's capture.

Police did not say if they had identified a suspect, and the boy said only that the woman spoke with an accent from outside the area. State media said the boy was recovering in a hospital, but had lost his sight permanently following the brutal ordeal Saturday.

...

State media previously had raised the possibility that the boy's corneas were taken for sale because of a donor shortage in China.

A news report on a provincial TV channel showed the boy writhing in pain on a hospital trolley, with bandages around his head, and his parents, both farmers, crying.'

Men After Divorce Are More Likely To Live In Single-Person Households

Mastodon · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to new Census data, more American men are living alone than ever before -- and the rising divorce rate could be to blame.

The Census data shows that the number of men between the ages of 15 and 64 who are the head of a one-person household has risen considerably since 1970. In 1970, 23 percent of men who fell within the 15-64 age range lived in a one-person household, compared to 34 percent who do today.
...
However, there was no increase in the number of women living in single person households, or men over the age of 65 who are the heads of single-person households. The Census report indicates that this could be because children are more likely to live with their mothers after a divorce, leaving more fathers living completely alone post-split.'

Outraged Montanans move to oust judge who jailed rapist for 30 days

Mastodon · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Montana residents are fuming and on a campaign to oust a state judge who ruled that a teacher who raped a 14-year-old girl — who subsequently killed herself — deserves only 30 days behind bars.

What made the sentence more shocking to many was District Judge Todd Baugh's remarks in court: He said that even though the girl, Cherice "Cherry" Morales, was decades younger than her attacker, Stacey Dean Rambold, 54, and obviously troubled, taped police interviews showed she was "as much in control of the situation" as Rambold. The judge also said the girl was "older than her chronological age."
...
Meanwhile, Montanans have been sending protesters to his courthouse in Billings. The Montana National Organization for Women also has asked the state to step in and force a longer jail sentence for Rambold.'

Female Teacher Molests 13 Year Old Student, No Jail Time

No jail time for Washington Union teacher who admits to sex with student

Female teacher gets no jail after having sex with a 15-year-old boy

Female teacher avoids jail after sex with student

Brooklyn teacher not going to jail after having sex with 16-year-old boy

Elementary School Teacher Accused Of Sex With 2 Students In North Carolina

Mastodon · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An elementary school teacher at a North Carolina K-12 school has been accused of having sexual relationships with two different students over a four-year period.

Amy Tilley Bower, 45, was arrested and charged Wednesday with two counts of sexual activity with a student and two counts of indecent liberties with a child, according to the Watauga County Sheriff's Office.

Police received a report concerning the 5th-grade teacher's inappropriate conduct in late July.

According to WBTV, the report alleged that Bower was involved in sexual relationships with minor male students from 1998 to 2000 and 2004 to 2006.

According to WSOC, both students were 15 years old when the alleged relationships began.'

Woman pleads to giving false report in rape case

Mastodon · 29 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Burlington woman pleaded guilty last week to felony obstruction of justice, falsely reporting that a man raped her sister.

Patricia Suzzane May, 38, of Kimesville Road, Burlington, was charged with sell/deliver a schedule II controlled substance on March 9. She was also charged with making a false statement to investigators, that the man she sold drugs to had raped her sister.

May was later indicted on a felony obstruction of justice charge.

In exchange for the plea, the remaining charges were dismissed. Superior Court Judge Elaine Bushfan issued a four- to 14-month sentence as a level-one offender and placed her on 24 months' probation. May was ordered to complete a seven-day split, active sentence in the Alamance County Jail and have no contact with the victim in the case.'

Police: NYC woman offered undercover officer $60,000 stamp collection to kill her husband

Mastodon · 30 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'NEW YORK – New York City police say they've arrested a woman after she offered an undercover officer a $60,000 stamp collection to kill her husband.

Police say Elena Adams was arrested Thursday and charged with conspiracy and criminal solicitation. They say the 57-year-old met with an undercover officer inside a car in the Sheepshead Bay neighborhood of Brooklyn to discuss the murder-for-hire plot.

Police say Adams told the officer her husband should be struck by a hit-and-run driver on Sunday as he crossed a street after lunch. They say Adams gave the investigator a picture of her husband, the stamp collection and jewelry.'

Percent of depressed men comparable to women: study

Minuteman · 30 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The proportion of men who experience symptoms of depression may be similar to the proportion of women with depression when doctors look for non-traditional symptoms, according to a new study.

Researchers found that one third of both men and women met the criteria for a depression diagnosis when traditional and alternative symptoms - such as aggression and sleep problems - were taken into account.

"You end up getting very similar rates of depression," Lisa Martin, the study's lead author from the University of Michigan in Dearborn, told Reuters Health.

About 16 percent of Americans currently meet the criteria for depression, Martin and her colleagues write in JAMA Psychiatry. Previous research has found women are about twice as likely as men to be diagnosed with the condition.'

Chinese city to charge men caught aiming poorly in public restrooms

Mastodon · 30 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chinese netizens are aghast after the government of Shenzhen, China issued a decree, saying it will charge men who use their public toilets but can't aim their shoot well inside the urinal.

The decree, which will fine public toilet users 100 yuan ($16), will take effect on September.

But the thing is, officials did not specify just how much spilled urine exactly pass for a description of "uncouth use of a public toilet."

As expected, Chinese netizens immediately took to Sina Weibo to lash out over the incredible regulation.

"Who will supervise such behavior? It will be illegal to install cameras of men urinating in toilets," user Liuyanguangguang said.'

'Single Guys Might Be As Dirty As We Thought'

Mastodon · 30 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Brace yourselves, ladies: You're about to be shocked by the opposite sex. Seriously. We've always known that men can be, ahem, slightly less clean than we are, but we had no idea the level that 20-something dudes could stoop to. If you thought your guy friends (or lovers) had outgrown their frat-bro days of dirty dishes and even dirtier laundry, we almost hate to show you this survey from a U.K. mattress company. It turns out that young single men only change their sheets an average of once every three months.

And, the news only gets worse from there. The average man admitted to only owning one set of sheets (compared to three sets for women), and the study found that within couples, 81% of the sheet washing was done by the woman. The results also pointed to an age correlation — the worst cleanliness faux pas were committed by men between the ages of 18 to 35, while guys, ages 35 to 50, seemed to clean up their act a bit.'

College Rape Hysteria

bronxman · 30 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. [Ed.: bronxman's comments submitted with this item appear as the first comment since they were too long to post with the item.] Excerpt:

'A student at Swarthmore College who accused it of being lax in its pursuit of allegations of sexual misconduct says the Pennsylvania college is retaliating against her by denying her a job as a dormitory resident adviser, The New York Times reports. But college officials deny any retaliation. They say they cannot employ the student, Mia Ferguson, because she refuses to tell authorities the name of the victim of an alleged rape.

Ms. Ferguson, who joined other students in filing two complaints with the U.S. Education Department this year over Swarthmore's handling of sexual-misconduct cases, was accepted for the resident adviser's position this past spring. The alleged rape occurred three years ago.

Swarthmore officials say they learned of the rape accusation only last week, after Ms. Ferguson brought it up during training for resident advisers. Under federal laws and guidelines and the college's own policies, they say, Swarthmore must vigorously pursue all accusations of sexual misconduct. Those guidelines and policies, they say, also require employees—including paid resident advisers like Ms. Ferguson—to report any information they have about such accusations.'

Colleges offer credit to students who enter ‘feminist thinking’ into Wikipedia

Mastodon · 31 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fifteen universities worldwide — including Yale University, Brown University, and Pennsylvania State University — will offer college credit to students who “write feminist thinking” into Wikipedia.

The program, “Storming Wikipedia,” will be part of the Dialogues on Feminism and Technology online course developed by FemTechNet, an organization of feminist educators and scholars.

Approximately 300 students are currently registered for the course, Alexandra Juhasz, professor of media studies at California's Pitzer College and one of the course facilitators, told Campus Reform Thursday.

“A woman's point of view or feminist point of view is not yet expressed in relationship to women in technology in Wikipedia,” she said. “We hope that people engage in this project in respect to other themes as well.”'

UK: 'Quota for women the only way to achieve equality' on radio

Mastodon · 31 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The broadcasters welcomed a promise from Tony Hall, the BBC's Director General, that by the end of 2014 the corporation would aim to have a women presenting 50 per cent of breakfast shows on local radio.

Describing the plan as a "quota", she said that it represented a move toward "fairness" that would never be achieved without a directive from above.

Writing for telegraph.co.uk, Miss Arnold said sexism still exists in radio and if the new plans mean that women are given a job over men it may "redress the balance of the last 2000 years".

Local radio is seen as an important training ground for the national media, and flagship programmes including BBC Radio 4's Today programme have long been criticised for being too male.'

Shelter Helps Out Male Victims of Domestic Violence

Mastodon · 31 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CORPUS CHRISTI -- The Women's Shelter of South Texas helps more than 3,000 victims of domestic violence each year. Most of them are women. But the shelter also has services for men.

So far, they've seen 22 men this year, but, the likelihood is, there are a lot more out there, suffering in silence.

Men are less likely to be victims of domestic violence, but when they are, they're also less likely to report it. That's a problem, since domestic violence against anyone can turn deadly in an instant.

"Its embarrassing you know to say I got beat up by a girl," domestic violence victim Terry Samuels told us.

But he is sharing his story of abuse tonight, hoping another deadly case of domestic violence doesn't happen simply because a man is too embarrassed to report it.

One example came just a few weeks ago on August 10th, when police say 24-year-old Freddy Ayala died from violently during a fight with his pregnant girlfriend.

She ran him over in the parking lot of a bar on Leopard.'

Woman who stabbed victim at least 15 times charged with murder

Matt · 31 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Gates woman has been accused of fatally stabbing a 60-year-old city man at least 15 times Thursday afternoon.

Amber I. Favasuli, 28, of Bambi Lane was charged with second-degree murder in connection with the death of Leonard Johnson, according to City Court documents. She pleaded not guilty in City Court Friday morning.

The slaying occurred about 2:20 p.m. Thursday inside an apartment at 1835 St. Paul St. and Norton streets, according to Rochester police. Sgt. Elena Correia said police found the man, who had wounds all over his body, inside an apartment in a complex at St. Paul Street, just south of Route 104.'

The unintended consequences of laws addressing sex between teachers and students

Matt · 31 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Takes on the teacher-student sexual relations issue to suggest that gee, as long as it's consensual, it isn't that bad. Makes no mention of the double-standards around male vs. female teachers coloring outside the lines or the uneven power relationship issue, which she seems to minimize. Still, it's an alternate viewpoint. Excerpt:

'As protesters decry the leniency of Rambold's sentence — he will spend 30 days in prison after pleading guilty to raping 14-year-old Cherice Morales, who committed suicide at age 16 — I find myself troubled for the opposite reason. I don't believe that all sexual conduct between underage students and teachers should necessarily be classified as rape, and I believe that absent extenuating circumstances, consensual sexual activity between teachers and students should not be criminalized. While I am not defending Judge G. Todd Baugh's comments about Morales being "as much in control of the situation" — for which he has appropriately apologized — tarring and feathering him for attempting to articulate the context that informed his sentence will not advance this much-needed dialogue.
...
I've been a 14-year-old girl, and so have all of my female friends. When it comes to having sex on the brain, teenage boys got nothin' on us. When I was growing up in the 1960s and '70s, the sexual boundaries between teachers and students were much fuzzier. Throughout high school, college and law school, I knew students who had sexual relations with teachers. To the best of my knowledge, these situations were all consensual in every honest meaning of the word, even if society would like to embrace the fantasy that a high school student can't consent to sex. Although some feelings probably got bruised, no one I knew was horribly damaged and certainly no one died.'

Presidential Proclamation--National Prostate Cancer Awareness Month, 2013

Matt · 31 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Proclamation here. Excerpt:

'Among American men, prostate cancer is both the second most commonly diagnosed cancer and the second-leading cause of cancer deaths. Although prostate cancer incidence and mortality rates have declined over the past two decades, in 2013 alone, an estimated 239,000 men in the United States will be diagnosed with the illness, and almost 30,000 men will die from this disease. During National Prostate Cancer Awareness Month, we remember those lost to prostate cancer, offer our support to patients and their families, and highlight our commitment to better prevention, detection, and treatment methods.

...

NOW, THEREFORE, I, BARACK OBAMA, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and the laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim September 2013 as National Prostate Cancer Awareness Month. I encourage all citizens, government agencies, private businesses, non-profit organizations, and other groups to join in activities that will increase awareness and prevention of prostate cancer.'

The most dangerous jobs in America-- all "male-dominated" but predictably, feminists don't mind

Matt · 31 August 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Review here. Yes, you'll find all these jobs are stereotypically "male-dominated", dirty, dangerous, and some pay relatively little for the risks involved, yet despite the "male-dominated" nature of them, you'll never catch feminists insisting there needs to be an affirmative action program to get more women into these jobs.

Woman arrested in husband's beating death

mens_issues · 1 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'LAKEWOOD, Colo. - Lakewood police have arrested the 73-year-old wife of an 83-year-old man who was severely beaten in his home and later died.

Police said they responded to a call of a domestic dispute in on W. Warren Drive and S. Moore Court just before 11 a.m. Wednesday.

Upon arrival, they found Carol Weigum outside the house and found her husband, Wallace "Wally" Weigum inside the house. He was rushed to a local hospital where he died later that afternoon.'

Brian Banks doesn't make Atlanta Falcons cut

bronxman · 1 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Brian Banks was falsely accused of rape. But now he has failed to secure a permanent spot on an NFL team due to lost years of training while in jail. I think men should go to such websites and post their support for Brian as a statement of compassion. We men do not bond well and this could be an opportunity to show some compassion. Maybe even find a way to email him directly. Excerpt:

'The NFL dreams of Brian Banks, who was exonerated last year after being wrongfully convicted of rape, were cut short when he failed to earn a spot on the Atlanta Falcons' 53-man roster, according to the football team's website.

Banks got the ax on Friday along with 10 other players, the Atlanta Falcons reported. The 28-year-old rookie linebacker had been signed to the team as a free agent in April, and had said playing in the pre-season was "one of the best moments of my life."

Banks said on Thursday that he had been "fully consumed trying to make this team," but that it was difficult given "all the years that I missed out on football."'

Florida to exhume bodies buried at Dozier Boys' School

Matt · 1 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Marianna, Florida (CNN) - This weekend, Florida will begin digging into its tragic past as anthropologists start unearthing what they believe are the remains of dozens of children buried on the grounds of a former reform school.

The exhumations at the Dozier School for Boys -- which closed in 2011 -- are the culmination of years of controversy surrounding the reform school and a mythology that has taken on a life of its own.

Rightly or wrongly, the Florida Panhandle town of Marianna -- just west of Tallahassee -- has become synonymous with the school and its dark past.

Some of those who were once sent to Dozier -- now senior citizens -- have come forward with stories of abuse at the school, including alleged beatings, torture, sexual abuse, killings and the disappearance of students, during the 1940s, '50s and '60s.'

Women selling positive pregnancy tests - to trick boyfriends into marrying

GaryB · 2 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This story appeared today. Excerpt:

'WANT to know how to get your boyfriend to propose to you? Buying a positive pregnancy test for $20 may be the answer.

In what may be a troubling new trend, dailydot.com reports pregnant women across America are selling used pregnancy tests online with the sales pitch unmarried women can use the tests to trick their boyfriends into marriage.

A number of women across the country have offered positive pregnancy tests for sale - supply numbers, endless - on the site Craigslist.

One expectant mother in New York State is selling used testing sticks for $25 each, saying she's been asked so many times, she had decided to start charging and "I don't care what you use them for, not my business".

Another mother has a more direct sales hook: 'Wanna get your boyfriend to finally pop the question? Play a trick on mom, dad or one of your friends?"'

Men beware, and don't believe a positive test.

As for the author, the word 'troubling' is used but otherwise this entire article is just riding the wave of 'oh look what some clever women are doing!'. And of course, if men were selling positive cancer tests to scare/trick their girlfriends into marrying them, no problem, right?

PIAA ordered to re-evaluate allowing boys to play on girls' teams

Mastodon · 2 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nearly two years ago, a concerned mother and father from Fox Chapel decided they'd had enough of boys playing on girls high-school field hockey teams.

Mary and Jim Grenen had watched as their daughter, Allison, and her Fox Chapel High teammates competed against boys who were bigger, faster and stronger. And the Grenens, as attorneys who work out of a high-rise in downtown Pittsburgh, felt they had the proper credentials to emerge as instruments of change.

Tuesday, their work in joining hands with the PIAA [Pennsylvania Interscholastic Athletic Association] to bring their case in front of the Commonwealth Court in Harrisburg paid off.

Judge B. Kevin Brobson issued an opinion that freed the PIAA -- which had been handcuffed by a decades-old injunction -- to examine writing a new policy or bylaw that would bar boys from playing on girls teams.'

Norway: Harsh sentence for false rape claim

Mastodon · 2 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Norwegian woman has been sentenced to a year and a half in prison after she admitted to falsely claiming to have been raped.

But Rudolf Christoffersen, the prosecutor in the case, said it was important for the courts to deal stiffly with such false accusations.

"If it had not been for a thorough police investigation, this case could have had grave consequences for the man who was unjustly accused of rape," he said. "In cases of sexual abuse cases, it is of the greatest importance that the police can give credence to the information submitted."'

Lawmaker seeks return of the draft before Syria vote

Mastodon · 2 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rep. Charles Rangel (D-N.Y.) said Sunday that before the United States takes additional steps toward military action in Syria, the country should reinstate the draft.

“I truly believe we should have a national draft act before the Congress acts,” Rangel said on “Weekends with Alex Witt” on MSNBC.

Rangel has long been a proponent of reinstating the draft so that every socioeconomic group is required to fight when military actions are undertaken. He has introduced several bills over the years to bring back conscription. In addition to reintroducing the National Universal Service Act in February, Rangel also proposed the All American Selective Service Act, which would require women in the 18-25 age demographic to join men of that age in registering with the Selective Service.'

UK: 'Spiderman' arrested in Bournemouth after Fathers 4 Justice protest

Matt · 2 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A man has been arrested after dressing up as Spiderman and protesting above a busy Bournemouth road.

The protest in aid of Fathers 4 Justice took place on A338 Wessex Way flyover at the Cooper Dean roundabout this afternoon (Saturday).

Dorset Police closed the road to southbound traffic after a man, dresses as Spiderman was standing on the wrong side of the barrier, carrying a banner stating "4 fathers there is no justice."'

Boys Have Higher Death Rates From Many Causes, Study Shows

Minuteman · 3 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Males may be the more vulnerable sex when it comes dying young -- not just from accidents, but from a range of causes, a new study finds.

Looking at a decade's worth of data on U.S. children and teenagers, researchers found that boys had higher death rates than girls from 17 of 19 broad causes.

Those included not only accidents -- in which boys' greater risk-taking can come into play -- but also cancer and diseases of the heart, lungs and nervous system.

...

Figuring out why boys have higher death rates could also aid in the wider understanding of different diseases, Feudtner noted. "It could help everyone if we understand the factors at work," he said.'

The Gender Wage Gap Lie

Mastodon · 3 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How many times have you heard that “women are paid 77 cents on the dollar for doing the same work as men”? Barack Obama said it during his last campaign. Women’s groups say it every April 9, which is Equal Pay Day. In preparation for Labor Day, a group protesting outside Macy’s this week repeated it, too, holding up signs and sending out press releases saying “women make $.77 to every dollar men make on the job.” I’ve heard the line enough times that I feel the need to set the record straight: It’s not true.

The official Bureau of Labor Department statistics show that the median earnings of full-time female workers is 77 percent of the median earnings of full-time male workers. But that is very different than “77 cents on the dollar for doing the same work as men.” The latter gives the impression that a man and a woman standing next to each other doing the same job for the same number of hours get paid different salaries. That’s not at all the case. “Full time” officially means 35 hours, but men work more hours than women. That’s the first problem: We could be comparing men working 40 hours to women working 35.'

UK: "Why Is Women's Health Still a Joke?"

Mastodon · 3 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"I am the director of Wellbeing of Women and consider myself privileged to be working for a fantastic charity that prioritises women's health.

My own feeling is that female wellbeing is still vastly under resourced, and often our more personal health issues are considered taboo or somehow trivial. Many women are slow to take the time to go to their doctor and poorly informed about the possible causes leading to delayed diagnosis and treatment.'

'Ken Cuccinelli’s Involvement With Hardline Misogynists'

Mastodon · 3 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Washington Post has a story up about the gross depths of Ken Cuccinelli’s fucked up, misogynist worldview. It’s not just his dogged attempts to shut down legal abortion single-handedly in the state, but now it’s been revealed that he has ties to the “fathers’ rights” movement, a group of men whose political goals all point back to the single purpose of making it harder for women to rid themselves of controlling and often abusive men. They fight protections for victims of domestic violence, educate each other on novel ways to sue your ex-wife so that you can stay in her life and make it miserable, demand stricter divorce laws so a woman can’t leave you just because she wants to, and push to reform child support laws so that it becomes more expensive and therefore more difficult for women to leave bad marriages. How well they conceal what they’re up to varies a lot—some of them are remarkably good at portraying themselves as humble fathers who simply want to be a part of their children’s lives, and whose ability to use said children to control and punish their ex-wives is simply a coincidence—but what’s interesting is that Ken Cuccinelli’s buddy, Ron Grignol, doesn’t do a very good job at hiding his stripes at all.
...
While most men who identify as “men’s rights activists” are blowhards who concentrate their “activism” to bitching online about how women aren’t submissive enough or don’t give them the sex they deserve, fathers rights activists actually do things like lobbying that have political influence. Almost all of them are bitter divorced men, and a lot of them have ugly custody battles with their ex-wives that they’re on the losing end of because judges find credible evidence to believe they were batterers. Evidence which is invariably dismissed as women spouting hysterical lies, because bitches, amirite?'

Please lodge anti-circumcision comments with the U.S. Office of Human Research Protections, Deadline 9 Sep. 2013

Minuteman · 4 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. The Department of Health & Human Services Office of Human Research Protections (OHRP) is accepting written comments about "Matters Related to the Protection of Human Subjects and Research Studying Standard of Care Interventions" via Regulations.gov until 9 September 2013, presenting an opportunity for readers from the U.S. to express some of their concerns about the Good Samaritan hospital Gomco v. Mogen trial and similar circumcision "studies". Excerpt:

'The Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) is announcing a public meeting to seek public input and comment on how certain provisions of the HHS requirements related to the protection of human subjects should be applied to research studying one or more interventions which are used as standard of care treatment in the non-research context. HHS specifically is requesting input regarding how an institutional review board (IRB) should assess the risks of research involving randomization to one or more treatments within the standard of care for particular interventions, and what reasonably foreseeable risks of the research should be disclosed to research subjects in the informed consent process. ...'

SAVE E-lert: Ben Pershing and his WaPo Whopper

Matt · 4 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Washington Post reporter Ben Pershing is so passionate about politics he was blinded by someone's political pandering, inadvertently sharing misinformation with WP readers. Yeah, maybe that's what happened. We're calling his article a WaPo Whopper!

Pershing criticizes a Virginia gubernatorial candidate because he was one of three state attorneys general who did not sign a letter urging federal lawmakers to reauthorize a particular version of the Violence Against Women Act. He didn't inform his readers that leading women's groups such as the Independent Women's Forum, Concerned Women for America, and the Mommy Lobby also strongly opposed that version of VAWA.

On the statistic of one million false allegations of domestic violence each year, Pershing writes, "Women's rights groups and other critics strongly dispute that false claims are so widespread." He links to a fact sheet that states "allegations [of domestic violence] are substantiated in 63 to 74 percent of cases" of divorce.

In the United States, 260,000 to 370,000 unsubstantiated allegations occur during a divorce each year. False allegations are also made in non-divorce contexts such as among dating couples, married couples, co-cohabiting couples, and post-divorce couples. So the source that Pershing claims to "strongly dispute" the one million figure in fact partially confirms the statistic.

Please politely ask Ben Pershing to correct his misinformation:

Email: ben.pershing-at-washpost.com
Phone: WP Metro department, 202-334-7300

Thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Bizarre Circumcision Stories: Where's the Journalism?

Matt · 4 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Then of course, the recent birth of royal baby George across the pond generated a lot of news. The Huffington Post ran a piece speculating about the royals' imminent decision, and titled it "The Royal Snip."

Snip? Snip is scissors opening up a pesky package of salted peanuts. Snip is a hair trim. Snip is hardly the word for circumcision, which removes not only the sexually sensitive foreskin tissue, but the entire epithelial lining, leaving the glans of the penis completely exposed.

Moving along one continent to the south, we have the stranger-than-fiction situation in Africa, where certain progressive communities are working hard to eradicate female genital cutting. Not such a rosy picture for males. Almost every day, throughout Africa's so-called "circumcision season," which runs in the summer months, thousands of young boys and men are left sick, mutilated or dying from their rite-of-passage circumcisions. The tragedy taking place in Africa was recently reported in the Wall Street Journal.
...
Often, mainstream journalists don't even question the premise that mass circumcision is the best option in combating HIV. If it were the best, then why does the U.S., with the highest proportion of circumcised males in the developed world, have more HIV cases per capita than any other developed nation?'

IA: Let's go to Cincinnati and stop this awful study

Matt · 4 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From an IA newsletter:

Thank you for signing our letter demanding that Good Samaritan Hospital stop its outrageous baby-cutting study!

In just a few weeks, Intact America will travel to Cincinnati to deliver that letter in person, because, even now, none of the researchers or hospital administrators—nor the Cincinnati Archdiocese—has bothered to respond to our many letters and phone calls.

We have to make it clear that this heinous experiment on innocent babies will NOT go unheeded, and it will NOT go unchallenged!

I know you're as incensed by this study as I am, and I need you to take the next step. Can I count on your financial support to help make our presence in Cincinnati as powerful as possible?

Here's what we have planned for October 3:

- PRESS CONFERENCE: I will be speaking, along with other prominent intactivists, at a national press conference right outside Good Samaritan's main entrance.
- DEMONSTRATION: People from around the country will be traveling to Cincinnati to march peacefully with us outside the hospital, demanding that this study be shut down.
- MOBILE BILLBOARD: We need to reach as many Cincinnati-area residents as possible with the harsh reality of what's happening right in their backyard, and the most effective way to do that is with a mobile billboard. We're working on the design right now, but we need your support in order to make it a reality.

This hospital needs to know that conducting pain and bleeding experiments on babies is cruel, unscientific, and WRONG. Please make a tax-deductible donation today, so together we can put a stop to this madness.

With gratitude for all you do,

Georganne Chapin
Executive Director, Intact America
www.intactamerica.org

Baby Veronica to stay with biological dad for now, court rules

Matt · 4 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Oklahoma Supreme Court has ruled that Baby Veronica, the 3-year-old girl at the center of a years-long custody dispute, should temporarily remain with her biological father in Oklahoma instead of being returned to her adoptive parents in South Carolina.
...
It was not immediately clear Tuesday why the court made the emergency ruling or for how long Veronica would remain with her biological father, Dusten Brown.

The dispute began in 2009 when Brown signed paperwork relinquishing his parental rights. Scheduled to deploy to Iraq at the time, Brown says he believed his signature gave full rights to Veronica's mother, Christy Maldonado.
...
At the heart of Veronica's case is the Indian Child Welfare Act, established in 1978 in response to high rates of Native American children being adopted by non-Native families. A South Carolina family court awarded custody of the girl to Brown, a member of the Cherokee Nation, under the Indian Child Welfare Act. A family court in the same state later ruled that custody be awarded to the Capobiancos and ordered Brown to hand Veronica over. Brown refused.

The U.S. Supreme Court said in June that provisions of the act, which would favor Brown, didn't apply in the case.'

Hofstra Law Review tackles NCP rights

Matt · 5 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The topic is also timely. Non-custodial parents are in the news as never before. Frustrated parents are seen scaling the walls of Buckingham Palace and other monuments, dressed as superheroes. They stare out angry and stone-faced from the front cover of The New York Times Sunday Magazine. Their grievances against a family law they see as stacked against them are splashed across billboards and newspaper advertisements. And they are said to be coming soon to a theater near you: Miramax recently bought the movie rights to the life story of the founder of Fathers 4 Justice, the British group responsible for much of the surging media attention.

It is easy to dismiss the antics of some of these activists as loopy or, in some darker cases, just plain depraved. Fathers 4 Justice, for instance, temporarily disbanded in January 2006 after an “extremist splinter group” was accused of plotting to kidnap British Prime Minister Tony Blair’s five-year-old son, Leo, to dramatize their feelings of parental powerlessness. But, beyond the stunts and costumes, it is clear that the sense of injury expressed by these activists resonates with a broader circle of non-custodial parents. Because non-custodial parents are overwhelmingly men, the clash over custody is often seen as a front in the so-called “gender wars.” Certainly, it is true that the cause of non- custodial parents is championed most visibly by a newly energized Fathers’ Rights movement, and that a distressing share of the internet polemics on the topic crackles with misogynistic invective. The gender implications of the topic are real, but the issue is not solely about the rights of fathers. There are smaller numbers of women, too—both non-custodial mothers and the new partners of non-custodial fathers—who are agitating for greater empowerment of non-custodial parents.
...

Significantly, the push for non-custodial parents’ rights is doing much more than generating headlines; it has already spurred significant changes to family law in some states and, indeed, around the world. The movement’s influence can be seen in laws affecting custody, visitation, child support, and paternity, not only in the United States but also in Australia, Canada, and Europe. Non-custodial parents have gained new rights to enforce visitation, limit their support obligations based on additional time caring for the child, and even to “disestablish” their parental status (and obligations) altogether based on DNA proof of non- paternity later in the child’s life.'

'Abuse of Power'

Matt · 5 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'... I have a good relationship with my ex and trust him to pay his child support directly to me. As it stands now, he pays a fee to the collection agency and 5 percent of the actual support payments are kept by the court trustee. The entire process slows down the payment and takes money away from my children.'

State pushes counties to collect more child support

Matt · 5 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'State officials are challenging county child support agencies to spike their collection rates, setting ambitious goals in hopes of improving children's lives and keeping Ohio competitive in seeking financial incentives from the federal government.

The state is pushing all 88 counties to increase collection rates 10 percent by 2015. The state's average collection rate currently sits at 67.3 percent.

...

Last year, the state launched an initiative to increase dollar collections to keep Ohio competitive in receiving performance-based incentives from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. Ohio, the seventh largest state, is sixth in child support caseload and fourth in collection, said Jeff Aldridge, deputy director for the Ohio Department of Jobs and Family Services.

...

Reaching the goal of a statewide 70 percent collection rate is important to counties across the state that have seen staff reductions at their child support enforcement agencies. Pater's office has seen a one-third reduction of staff since 2005 because the agency hasn't been able to afford to hire anyone new. If Ohio can score more federal funding, it means more investigators to take up child support cases in offices across the state.'

The importance of dads

Matt · 5 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Much is said about the relationship between mums and daughters, dads and sons. But little is said about the vital relationship between mothers and sons, fathers and daughters.
...
Sadly, not enough dads realise the impact they have on their daughters' lives. One study found only 30 per cent of fathers believed that active involvement in their daughter's life was vital to her health and well being.

This is despite recent findings that the dad's influence is as great, and sometimes greater, than the mother's.

Dads, as has been well documented, impact girls' interactions with men later in life.

"In my years of psychology practice, I've met very few women who did not unconsciously or consciously pick a romantic partner based on the characteristics of her father," says clinical psychologist Jennifer Kromberg.

Dads also affect their daughters self esteem, independence and stress levels.
...
I am acutely aware that not all dads are like this and there are plenty of women (and men) who have been without a father or at least without a worthy one.

But one thing we should never do is underestimate the importance of dads.'

Ireland: At-home dads: Cooking, cleaning, and repairs around the house

Matt · 5 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Nice to see such an article but for at-home dads. Excerpt:

'Think dad's taxi and his handyman services don't cost a thing?

Think again, because stay-at-home dads could be worth up to €45,000 a year.

That's right. All those lifts to the cinema and kickabouts in the park add up if you were to pay someone else to do it.

According to a survey by Caledonian Life, there are over 10,000 fathers staying in the family home while their wives or girlfriends are out working.
...
• Having a mechanic on hand to fix up the house could cost you the guts €55 a week, hammering the family's fortunes by €2,860 a year.'

"We have to help guide you along"

Mastodon · 5 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The pleasure of these ads comes from indulging in a little reverse sexism.

Finally, after all these years of men ogling women and parsing them into body bits, we get to have our turn! The ads even commit the same crimes as all lady product ads — showing the gain without the pain. (We see the man shaving his chest into Greek statue smoothness, but we don't see the three-days-later shot with the little bristles. And already the ads have induced complaints of misandry: “The underlying message is that men are slobs, men are grotesque, men have hairy backs, and they need women to civilize them,” Scott A. Lukas, an anthropology professor and head of the Gender Ads Project told The Post. Point won.

Except that, somehow, these Gillette ads feel harmless and funny. No one really thinks that Kate and Hannah and Genesis are doing these men any damage. Why? Because the vibe they tap into is not really “last days of Rome, women rule the world,” but “first days of moving in together, girlfriend throws out my La-Z-Boy.” The ad takes for granted a truth that is sometimes overlooked: that men welcome their partners' small interventions, the way we steer them through the endless set of never-done tasks that constitute women's work. My husband even says, “Men like it when women tell them what to wear, because we don't know.”

Telling your man to shave, in other words, is not so far off from telling him that dishes left by the side of the sink eventually have to make their way under the water, etc. Listen to the outtake from the commercial, where Kate, Hannah and Genesis discuss what they were up to. “We have to help guide you along,” Kate says. Not much threat there.'

Italy: 'Women MPs do a better job than men' - Letta

Mastodon · 5 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Laura Boldrini, Cecile Kyenge and Emma Bonino are among those doing “far better than men”, Italian Prime Minister Enrico Letta said during an interview with television channel Russian 24 ahead of the G20 summit, which gets underway in St Petersburg on Thursday.

The number of women who have entered the Italian government since Letta came on board has increased from 20 to 30 percent.

The number of women who have entered the Italian government since Letta came on board has increased from 20 to 30 percent.

“I wanted my government to have the largest number of women in Italian history”, he said.

He added that this objective has been won, with “women doing a great job.”'

Tennis pro: "Women should play five sets"

Mastodon · 5 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Andy Murray insists he is ready to go five sets when he takes on the in-form Stanislas Wawrinka in their US Open quarter-final on Thursday - but believes there is no reason why women should not play the same if they are to earn equal prize money at grand slams.

Defending champion Murray had to come from a set behind to defeat Denis Istomin in his last 16 match at Flushing Meadows, and now faces the confident ninth seed Wawrinka - who took Novak Djokovic to five sets in a five hour epic at the Australian Open in January.
...
Speaking to the New York Times, Murray stated either the men should drop to three sets or women should play over five in order to justify equal pay.

"It isn't about it being inferior. As I see them, they're two different sports," Murray told the New York Times. "It's not like the 100 metres at the Olympics, not because they're not running the same speed as the men.

"It's just because we play five sets. I'm not saying the men work harder than the women, but, if you have to train to play five sets, it's a longer distance. It's like someone training to be a 400m runner and someone training to be a 600m runner.'

Gender Gap Traced Back

Mastodon · 5 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recent research has suggested various ways in which girls outperform boys in high school, making them more likely to go to college: stronger desire to get good grades, better social skills, greater validation from academic performance. But a new study suggests gender sorting -- a boy's or girl's decision to attend one school or another – could have its own effect on the college enrollment gap.

In a study of public school systems in Florida, researchers found that what high school a student attends is "strongly associated" with college enrollment; girls are attending high schools that have higher rates of college-going than one would expect based on the students' test scores – and boys, vice versa.

...

"Either girls are choosing to attend high schools that are going to advantage them by making them more likely to go to college, or girls are simply attracted to high schools whose students have higher college-going rates -- even if the school does not cause this outcome -- while boys are attracted to other features of high schools," such as facilities or the characteristics of the school's students, said Mark C. Long, co-author of the paper published in Educational Researcher and associate professor of public affairs at the University of Washington.

...

"Thus, increasing opportunities for choice may facilitate higher amounts of gender sorting (just as they might increase sorting by race and class) in future years," the paper says. "If continued monitoring suggests an increase in gender sorting, and further research suggests harmful consequences to such sorting, then school systems may want to consider gender balance in their school assignment policies."'

Michael Wolff: Fed battle is all about gender

Mastodon · 5 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The public bake-off between the economists Lawrence Summers and Janet Yellen for the job of chairman of the Federal Reserve has boiled down, practically speaking, to discriminatory hiring practices

Janet Yellen's stand-out credential is that she is a woman.

Larry Summers' main drawback — or, certainly, among his most conspicuous characteristics — is that he is not.

You would have to be a naïf or dissembler of remarkable proportions not to see every argument for or against these candidates — and you might read each of these arguments as forms of letters of recommendation by their various sponsors — as reducible to a gender debate.'

Women bear more than their share of military sacrifice

Mastodon · 5 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The women's movement has struggled for equality for years, but when it comes to one aspect of serving in the military, women have, unfortunately, achieved more than their share.

A RAND Corp. study found predictable results when it tracked the marital status of more than 460,000 U.S. service members between 1999 and 2008. With each passing month that a spouse was away at war, the chance of divorce increased.

Especially vulnerable were couples who married before the Sept. 11, 2001, terror attacks, who didn't expect long deployments to be part of the equation.'

Israel: Acting bank governor says sexism may be behind PM snub

Mastodon · 5 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Acting Bank of Israel Governor Karnit Flug said her gender may have something to do with Prime Minister Netanyahu's decision to overlook her for the top post at the central bank.

In an interview published in Yedioth Ahronoth Wednesday, asked if she thought there was sexism involved in Netanyahu's disinclination to select her for the job — when previous governor Stanley Fischer recommended her, and two intended appointees withdrew — Flug answered: "Maybe… Until then I had never come across the so-called 'glass ceiling' in my professional career. I've always known that women carry a heavier burden than men because of the two-fold job of being a mother and a career woman, but I believed that it is in our power to combine and balance the two responsibilities… Only in the last two months, when I realized the intensity of the resistance against my appointment to governor of the bank, did the thought occur to me that maybe my disqualification was connected — also — to my being a woman."'

Prosecutors to appeal judge's dismissal of felony charge for false rape report

Mastodon · 6 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Prosecutors plan to appeal a state judge's dismissal of a felony charge against a Billings woman with a history of making false rape reports.
...
District Judge G. Todd Baugh dismissed a felony charge of fabricating evidence against Christina Nadine Nelson in late July, saying that while the evidence clearly showed Nelson lied when she reported her former boyfriend raped her, the prosecution's decision to charge her with fabricating evidence was "a stretch at best."
...
Baugh also gave Nelson permission to travel to Germany on Aug. 2, despite protests from prosecutors who noted she had made seven false rape or assault claims against three men between 2009 and 2012.

Nelson was charged in December 2012 for reporting that her former boyfriend raped her as she left work one day.

Nelson was brought to Billings Clinic later that evening after telling her husband about the alleged rape and after the couple had unprotected sex.
...
Court documents indicate Nelson falsely reported her high school prom date raped her in 2009 and that another man raped her in 2009. The second man transferred to another college after receiving threats, prosecutors said.
...
Baugh is under fire after sentencing a former high school teacher to 30 days in prison for violating the terms of a deferred prosecution agreement in a statutory rape case involving a student. Baugh apologized for commenting that the victim was "older than her chronological age" and was as in much control of the months-long relationship with her teacher as he was.'

Woman to Hartford PD: I burned him alive

Mastodon · 6 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Hartford police arrested a woman who they said admitted to them that she tried to kill her boyfriend by setting him on fire.

Police were called to 116 South St., after getting a 911 call from a woman saying she burned her boyfriend to death and she would be waiting for police outside the home.

Officers arrived at the home and were met by the woman, identified as 47-year-old Julia Rivera, who told them, "Arrest me. I did it. I burned him alive."

Rivera was handcuffed and placed into the police cruiser while officers ran into the home to look for the victim. However, police said, the victim was able to run from the home.

The victim was located at 18 South St., and was suffering from second-degree burns over 70 percent of his body. He was brought to Bridgeport Hospital's Burn Unit and is listed in critical condition.

Rivera complained of chest pains and was brought to Hartford Hospital.

She was charged with assault, reckless endangerment, criminal violation of a protective order and disorderly conduct.'

Colleges offer credit to inject feminism into Wikipedia

Mastodon · 6 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fifteen universities including some Ivy League schools are offering college credit to students who will inject feminist thinking into the popular website Wikipedia -- something critics are calling an eye-opening case of campus bias.

...

The program is called “Storming Wikipedia,” and was set up by a group called FemTechNet as part of its Dialogues on Feminism and Technology online course, according to CampusReform.org. Approximately 300 students are currently registered for the course, and schools like Yale University, Brown University and Pennsylvania State University are participating.

Anne Balsamo, dean of the School of Media Studies at the New School in New York, says the program is meant to revise a bias seen on the massive online encyclopedia, where many pages are "skewed now toward male participation."

...

How the feminist thinking they were seeking would appear was anyone’s guess.

“In 1857, Alexander Graham Bell invented the telegram -- a woman would have done it first but she was stuck in the kitchen,” Timpf joked. But the goals of the program are serious, she noted.

“They’re more concerned with making it politically correct than factually correct,” she told Fox News. “This is the opposite of what [students] should be taught.”'

Preview for short film on male DV victims

Matt · 6 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Preview here. The full short film will be available on October 1st, 2013 on Distrify.com. You can find Shame on Facebook http://www.facebook.com/ShameMEStudios and on Twitter: @shamemovie

NPO: Reforming Judicial Influence through Temporary Orders

Matt · 6 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When parents separate, one of the first questions anyone asks is, â€œWhat happens with the kids?â€ Current law in most states gives judges practically carte blanche authority to issue temporary orders that place children primarily or wholly in the care of just one parent. One situation that is all-too-common is that one parent gets custody of the children, and the other is ordered â€œvisitationâ€ every other weekend.

For a child that has previously been with both parents every day, removing one of those parents and offering her or him a mere four to six days out of the month must be very traumatic. However, this trauma is not considered when making such orders, and the right of both parents to care for and provide for the child is rarely upheld in family court.'

Whitehouse.gov: "Addressing the Intersection of HIV/AIDS, Violence against Women and Girls, and Gender-Related Health Disparities"

Minuteman · 7 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Today we are proud to announce the release of the report by the President's Working Group on the Intersection of HIV/AIDS, Violence against Women and Girls, and Gender-Related Health Disparities. We have had the honor of serving as co-chairs of the interagency Federal Working Group since March 2012, when President Obama issued a Presidential Memorandum to address two overlapping challenges to the health and wellbeing of communities across the United States: the effects of HIV/AIDS, and the alarming rate at which women and girls experience violence.

More than 1 in 3 women in the United States has experienced rape, physical violence, or stalking by an intimate partner in her lifetime; of these women, 69% report experiencing intimate partner violence at age 25 or younger, and 22% experience IPV for the first time as girls between the ages of 11 and 17 years. Furthermore, approximately 280,000 women in the United States were living with HIV in 2009, with an estimated 15% unaware of their status. Women account for 20% of new HIV infections in the United States, with over three-quarters of these new infections occurring among black and Latina women.

By themselves, these statistics represent a compelling call to action, but the particular prevalence of intimate partner violence among women living with HIV further reinforces the need to address the intersection of HIV/AIDS and violence against women and girls: 56% of women living with HIV, compared to the national prevalence of 36%, have experienced violence by an intimate partner.
...

The release of this report comes at a particularly exciting time for women's health, with open enrollment into the health insurance marketplace beginning October 1 under the Affordable Care Act. Built into the report are action steps to improve screening rates for both intimate partner violence and HIV for women; already as a result of the Affordable Care Act, new health plans provide coverage with no cost sharing for these services. Each of the report's action steps will help meet the goals of the National HIV/AIDS Strategy and are synergistic with the Administration's additional efforts to promote health and wellness among women and girls.'

Ex-deputy cleared in sexual contact complaint

mens_issues · 7 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Montezuma County sheriff's deputy accused of inappropriately touching a female suspect has been cleared of any wrongdoing after an investigation.

The Cortez Journal reports that prosecutors and the sheriff's office both conducted an investigation and determined no charges were warranted against former deputy Darrin Harper.

A 52-year-old woman had alleged in a January complaint that Harper had fondled her during a traffic stop in 2012. But the woman later told investigators during an interview that she has a mental illness and sometimes makes up things "that did not happen."

The woman had been arrested on suspicion of driving on the influence of drugs on the night in question, but the charges were later dismissed.

The investigation into the complaint also included listening to recorded jail phone calls, talking with the alleged victim’s husband, and interviewing several officers present at the scene on the night in question, but no evidence was found to corroborate the complaint.'

Sexism in the Great Outdoors

Robber748 · 7 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Mountaineers is an outdoors club headquartered in Seattle devoted to hiking, climbing, skiing, kayaking, etc. (Go to www.mountaineers.org for more information.) For the most part, it is a great group, with countless people volunteering their time and expertise to help people enjoy the outdoors. I was a member for 27 years.

However, the last few years, the Mountaineers had sponsored Women's Wellness Weekends for women only. I was aware of other women-only events as well. I did not know of any men-only activities. The group has an official policy against sexual discrimination. I assumed that if I pointed out this sexism to the club's leadership, that they would stop these Women's Weekends immediately. This did not happen. Instead, they justified the Women's Weekends with the strange and convenient argument that the club caters to specific groups if people volunteer to organize activities for these groups. (Would they allow a Caucasian-only activity?) They also encouraged me to organize men-only activities.

OK, fine. I guess the club is not sexist. Men-only activities are also acceptable. It is just that no one had organized one yet.

But, not fine. I did not believe for a second that men-only activities would be allowed. I believed the management was pulling a fast one on me, and were hoping I would accept this explanation and just go away. However, I called their bluff and organized an online men-only Mountaineers March Madness Bracket Contest for the men's NCAA basketball tournament. (This is not an outdoor activity but the Mountaineers sponsors many events that are not outdoor-type activities. For example, activities during Women's Wellness Weekends have included aerobics, yoga, massage, Zumba, nutritional workshops, wine tastings, and belly dancing.) The Bracket Contest quickly received complaints for being men-only, and the leadership cancelled it. They also denied that they had given me permission to organize this men-only event. It is odd that my complaint about women-only Women's Weekends resulted in their justification, but a complaint about my men-only Bracket Contest resulted in immediate cancellation. The leadership then justified women-only activities with the misandrist implication that women were not safe if men were present. But the reason given for the cancellation of the Bracket Contest was that only outdoor-type activities could be single-sex. (I guess belly dancing is an outdoor activity.)

Again, what a strange and convenient argument! I wondered if the Mountaineer management had any concept of hypocrisy. I also wondered if they were aware that the coverup is worse than the crime. They were looking mighty silly.

...

I guess the leadership realized just how silly they looked, so they came up with a more rigorous justification for denying men-only activities. New policies placed many new preconditions on any single-sex activity. It would be very difficult for any men-only activity to meet these new preconditions. But it would be very difficult for any women-only activity as well. I doubt that Women's Weekends or any other of the women-only activities could satisfy or had satisfied these preconditions. (The organizer of the Women's Weekends confirmed that she did not have to meet these preconditons.) Yet, none of the women-only activities were halted. These new preconditions only seemed to apply to me and men-only activities. Just how silly could the Mountaineer leadership look?

...

I was accused by several Mountaineers of being petty. But who was really being petty here? The "amount" of women-only activities, if it is possible to measure this, must have been 50 or maybe 100 times larger than my men-only Bracket Contest. Yet the women-only activities went on for years without complaints from men, while the puny, little Bracket Contest received complaints from women immediately. Who was really being petty here? And so hypocritical?

...

As we have all heard before, the coverup is worse than the crime. Certainly, allowing women-only activities while denying men-only activities was bad enough, but the degree to which the leadership tried to block me and continue the sexism was much worse---the obfuscation, the strange justifications, the strange new policies, and the stonewalling were deplorable. I have quit the Mountaineers, and I will not rejoin until the sexism stops and the current leadership has been replaced.
...
I tried to come up with other possibilities to explain this sexism, and they all seemed to be related to this fear of women's anger: political correctness, chivalry, and even men's dread of sleeping on the couch. All of this fear of women's anger has led to much sexism against men, making men second-class members of the Mountaineers, of the home, and of society. And women have had no problem in taking advantage of this situation. It is time for the so-called "macho" gender to get some guts and confront this sexism. And it would also be nice if women did the right thing and actually followed their own rhetoric and worked toward gender equality.'

IA: It's not too late to tell Good Samaritan to STOP experimenting on babies

Matt · 7 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

By now you've heard about the awful baby-cutting study underway at Good Samaritan Hospital in Cincinnati. In just a few weeks, Intact America will travel to that hospital to deliver a letter signed by concerned citizens like you, demanding that this outrageous study be stopped.

Can we count on you to sign our letter and speak up for these innocent babies, who are being strapped down and assaulted for the sole purpose of seeing which of two clamps causes more blood loss and pain?

We've gathered just over 3,000 signatures so far, so we still have a long way to go, and we can't do it without your help. If you've already signed, thank you...and please forward this email to your friends, family, neighbors, and colleagues and ask them to sign it too!

Here's why we think this action is critical:

This is happening right in our backyard. That's right, American doctors are experimenting on the genitals of non-consenting minors.

After the atrocities of World War II, the Nuremberg Code was developed to prevent exactly these kinds of medical abuses: "The voluntary consent of the human subject is absolutely essential; The experiment should be so conducted as to avoid all unnecessary physical and mental suffering and injury; The degree of risk to be taken should never exceed that determined by the humanitarian importance of the problem to be solved by the experiment...." It's extremely clear that the Good Samaritan circumcision study violates all of these rules.

You can't cruelly subject minors to an unconscionable medical experiment—all in service to the shareholders of a medical instrument manufacturer seeking to profit from bad science in order to sell more circumcision clamps—and call it "science."
This hospital needs to know that conducting pain and bleeding experiments on babies is cruel, unscientific, and WRONG. Please sign our letter today, so we can put a stop to this madness.

Georganne Chapin
Executive Director, Intact America
www.intactamerica.org

Letter: Circumcision should be outlawed

Matt · 8 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'Regarding the Aug. 31 Observer story “High hopes for victims of female genital mutilation“: This story reminded once again of the sad realization that there is no hope at all in the world for the many more victims of male genital mutilation. Male circumcision advocates might say there is no comparison since male circumcision, if done properly, neither robs adult men of sexual pleasure nor poses a significant health risk. But I say that arguing that removal of the prepuce does no significant harm is not an argument at all. Nor is the apology that it has a long and noble cultural heritage that places it above disrepute. That’s rubbish.
...
Female genital mutilation (FGM) is terrible and easily conjures more outrage than male genital mutilation. But the depravity of it means that people can’t see the forest for the trees. Outlawing genital mutilation means outlawing all of it, and anti-FGM workers would only gain credibility if they come out equally against male genital mutilation as well. Meanwhile, doctors, nurses, teachers, counselors, rabbis and parents involved in lining up young boys as sacrifices should themselves all be lined up for long prison sentences.'

New York City mayoral candidate proposes all-female science-based schools

Mastodon · 8 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New York should open competitive middle schools for girls who are interested in science and math as a way to close a gender gap that has tipped the balance in the city's top tech high schools heavily toward boys.

Broached by Council Speaker Christine Quinn in the heat of the mayoral campaign, the next mayor, whoever that might be, should follow through on her idea to open five all-female science, technology, engineering and mathematics (or STEM) middle schools, one in each borough, to help draw interested young women to the jobs of tomorrow.

Boys now outnumber girls by three-to-one at the city's high-school tech programs, even as jobs in the field are expected to grow about twice as quickly as other positions. Boys also claim about three of five seats at the city's most competitive public high schools that determine admission exclusively by testing, including Stuyvesant and Bronx Science.'

Two days after acquittal, Fort Collins 'End Rape Culture' group takes to streets

Mastodon · 8 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two days after jurors acquitted a former Fort Collins bar worker of rape, activists are planning to spread rape awareness Friday night in Old Town.

The walk is organized through Facebook page “End RAPE Culture (Fort Collins)” and asks people to print off fliers featuring mug shots of two men accused of raping two teenaged adults last December. One of the men, Bojan Vuckovic, 25, was acquitted of rape at trial Wednesday but remains in jail after conviction on two misdemeanors of serving alcohol to minors.

People plan to meet at 9 p.m. in front of the Fort Collins Museum of Art and begin walking through Old Town at 10 p.m., handing out fliers and waving “thought-provoking signs,” according to Brandi Palmer, who invited people to join through social media.
...
The flier on the group’s Facebook page shows the mugs of Vuckovic and Dennis Hanson, 30, with the words: “Ladies, if you see these men, RUN AWAY! DANGER alert!”'

The struggle to help boys learn

Mastodon · 8 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After all these years, we are still stuck. We still can't agree on where to start. The feminist approach wants to blame boys for many problems in school. Boys are noisy, they play up, annoy teachers and stop good kids from learning. Any time we draw attention to boys' difficulties in school, these people raise objections. Which boys do we mean? Are we imagining that all boys are the same? Why aren't we focusing on girls? Are we misogynistic? Don't men have all the advantages anyway? This approach I call "put up a straw man and then knock him down". It's often favoured by people who want to preserve the status quo. Meanwhile, the arch-male approach wants to champion boys at all costs and blame feminism for all men's ills. It sounds a bit like "Now in my day..." Neither of these approaches will get us far.

Look at some facts about boys from various parts of the world. First, in the UK, boys are excluded from schools three times more often than girls. Afro-Caribbean boys are the group most excluded. Second, American boys are drawn into football because they want to be masculine at all cost; but we hear that US football players are at great risk of high blood pressure and suffer horrific rates of concussion. Third, a conference at Montego Bay, Jamaica heard a few years ago about boys leaving school far too early. And this was happening right around the Caribbean. Fourth, boys in the UK are reported as having a manic desire for a body with a 'six-pack' and big muscles. And boys I speak to in Australia complain that what they hear too often is "sit down, shut up, write this down". Everywhere we look, boys are squashed into a narrow idea of what it means to be male. And that doesn't have much to do with school as they know it.'

Harvard Business School Case Study: Gender Equity

Mastodon · 8 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But in 2010, Drew Gilpin Faust, Harvard's first female president, appointed a new dean who pledged to do far more than his predecessors to remake gender relations at the business school. He and his team tried to change how students spoke, studied and socialized. The administrators installed stenographers in the classroom to guard against biased grading, provided private coaching — for some, after every class — for untenured female professors, and even departed from the hallowed case-study method.

The dean's ambitions extended far beyond campus, to what Dr. Faust called in an interview an "obligation to articulate values." The school saw itself as the standard-bearer for American business. Turning around its record on women, the new administrators assured themselves, could have an untold impact at other business schools, at companies populated by Harvard alumni and in the Fortune 500, where only 21 chief executives are women. The institution would become a laboratory for studying how women speak in group settings, the links between romantic relationships and professional status, and the use of everyday measurement tools to reduce bias.
...
Plenty of women had taken Ruback and Yudkoff's classes on acquiring and running businesses, including Upton, who had delivered the crackerjack finance presentation. She counted 30 to 40 classmates planning search funds, all men except for a no-nonsense engineer named Jennifer Braus. The professors eventually decided to finance and advise Braus, hoping other Harvard women would follow. "Nothing succeeds like success," Ruback said.

Upton decided to take a far lower-risk job managing a wealthy family's investments in Pittsburgh, where her fiance; lived. "You can either be a frontier charger or have an easier, happier life," she said.'

Woman/Boy Relationships in Pop Culture: No Big Deal

Mastodon · 8 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Portrayals of relationships between older women and younger men have showed up in pop culture time and again, from The Graduate to American Pie. But it seems like more have been cropping up lately. Alissa Nutting's novel Tampa, published in July, is about a 26-year-old woman who builds her entire life as a teacher around her attraction to 14-year-old boys. The Lifeguard, which opened in theaters last weekend, stars Kristen Bell as a 29-year-old who returns to her hometown and has an affair with a teenager. And this week sees the theatrical release of Adore, starring Robin Wright and Naomi Watts as two best friends who fall for each other's 18-year-old sons, and A Teacher, the story of a young woman's undoing as her relationship with one of her high-school students comes to an end.

...

The differing attitudes towards woman/boy relationships versus man/girl ones was, until recently, codified by the government. It wasn't until the year 2000 that all 50 states had gender-neutral statutory rape laws. Until then, laws tended to punish the woman participant less harshly or not at all, even if she was the perpetrator. According to Carolyn E. Cocca, the author of Jailbait: The Politics of Statutory Rape Laws in the United States, the role of women sex offenders is routinely downplayed. In a 2002 article in which she reviews the language used to describe statutory rapists Mary Kay LeTourneau, Stephen Simmons, and Sean O'Neill, Cocca found that:

"…while much of the discourse still categorizes statutory rape with a male victim as abuse, the "older woman" perpetrator is more often described as a manipulative or mentally ill seductress while the "older man" perpetrator is usually likened to an abusive predator.

[…] Such language maintains the boundaries of traditional gender roles: the older woman is constructed as an almost sympathetic aberration of her gender who tries to obtain love by seducing a young male, while the older man is seen simply as a sexual aggressor and is therefore more universally excoriated for his behavior."'

When dismay is a front-runner

Mastodon · 8 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some are so eager to be inaugurated in 2017 that the 2016 campaign has begun 28 months before the 1.4 percent of Americans who live in Iowa and New Hampshire express themselves. It is, therefore, not too soon to get a head start on being dismayed. Consider two probable candidates.

Hillary Clinton comes among us trailing clouds of incense, so some acolytes will call it ill-mannered, even misogynistic to ask: What exactly is it about the condition of the world, and about America's relations with other nations, that recommends the former secretary of state for an even more elevated office?
...
That contemporary feminism is thin gruel is apparent in the fact that it has found its incarnation in a woman who married her way to the upper reaches of American politics. Still, the world's oldest political party might not allow a contest to mar the reverent awarding to her of its next nomination.'

New center for masculine studies under fire

Mastodon · 9 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Keep in mind, please, that this is a Center supposedly devoted to the study of men, not women," said Bruce Bawer in his article "A Joke of a Men's Studies Center," published in Front Page Magazine. "Can you imagine a university press release in this day and age announcing the establishment of a new Women's Studies Center and including more men's names than women's? Me neither."

It is not the emergence of men's studies that Bawer, a Stony Brook alumnus and author of "The Victims' Revolution: The Rise of Identity Studies and the Closing of the Liberal Mind", argues against, despite what his book title may say. Rather, it is the "unbalanced" advisory board that he and Newsday columnist Cathy Young see as a problem for men's studies, rather than an asset.

"The study of men and masculinities' as conceptualized by Kimmel and his like-minded colleagues is, at bottom, an academic vehicle for a political attack on 'white male privilege'," said Young. "This is undoubtedly the brand of 'men's studies' that Stony Brook's new Center will promote."

"[Men's studies] is about fostering and nurturing serious research within the context of gender studies," Kimmel said in response to criticisms aimed at the center. "To my mind, these critiques by the MRAs are inevitable. They spend a lot of time trolling the internet and yelling at people. That's not serious research."

Using highly recognizable feminists as advisors was key to banishing misconceptions of what the new center is meant for. Others, however, contend that such actions belie the true academic nature of male gender studies.

A petition started by an anonymous dissenter circulated forums and messageboards, with posters urging members to sign. "No womens' [sic] programs of any kind permit male dominance of any type on their advisory boards, nor do they select men with a track record of antagonism toward and mockery of women and womens' issues," it said.'

Study Confirms Women’s Suspicions: Men Are Afraid Of Their Success

Mastodon · 9 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new study published in the Journal of Personality and Social Psychology is giving credence to what successful, single women have been saying for decades: men are intimidated by their female partners’ achievements.

The study, “Gender Differences in Implicit Self-Esteem Following a Romantic Partner’s Success or Failure,” was co-authored by University of Florida psychology professor Kate A. Ratliff and University of Virginia psychology professor Shigehiro Oishi.

While intended to collect data regarding how those in heterosexual relationships view one another’s success, Ratliff and Oishi discovered that men’s self-worth — or self-esteem — disproportionately suffered when they perceived their female partners to be successful.'

'Men – listen up, it's time we stopped apologizing for being who we are...'

Mastodon · 9 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The increasing regularity with which men are handbagged by feminist campaigners who constantly, endlessly, ubiquitously bang on about how they don't have a voice has become so prevalent that it's now laughable rather than annoying – although if the correspondence I receive from readers is anything to go by, male and female alike, they don't like being ballyragged by a bunch of birds with an agenda.
...
We've seen this ill-informed and badly articulated misandry with the numerous declarations that men are losing respect for women and are now becoming porn obsessed moral degenerates who, according to one recent commentator in these pages: "look at videos of women being half murdered."
...
Here's an idea, a crazy one that might cause hot flushes and gasps of consternation – being a woman does not make you special. It does not confer on you an automatic wisdom beyond your chromosomatic rivals.'

60-year-old woman arrested on suspicion of domestic violence

Mastodon · 9 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A 60-year-old woman was arrested Sunday morning after she allegedly grabbed a man by the throat and tried to throw him out an open window, the Napa County Sheriff's Office said.

Deputies were called just before 8 a.m. Sunday to the 3000 block of Cuttings Wharf Road on report of domestic violence, authorities said. On arrival, the alleged victim told police Leila Rhea Armstrong, of Napa, had grabbed him by the throat and tried to push him out a first-floor window.

The man successfully pushed Armstrong off him before she threw him out the window, the sheriff's office said.

Armstrong, who was allegedly drunk when deputies arrived at the home, was arrested on suspicion of domestic violence and booked into the Napa jail, authorities said.'

Mother charged in fatal stabbing of teen son

Matt · 9 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 31-year-old woman has been charged with murder in the stabbing death of her teenage son over the weekend, police said.

Robin Erwin, 31, is charged with first-degree murder in the slaying of her son Diontae Erwin, 17, Sauk Village Police said.

Police found Diontae in the 1700 block of 223rd Street about 12:15 p.m. Saturday, according to police. The boy was taken to Franciscan Saint Margaret Health in Dyer, Ind., where he was pronounced dead at 12:41 p.m.'

UK: The Fatherless Generation

Mastodon · 9 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I believe when a father is missing from a family an invisible screen of safety is removed, and all sorts of insecurities and problems are then allowed to enter. Will this apply to all single lone women raising children? No, but the above statistics do not lie.

Britain, with its plight of the fatherless represents how the spirit of the country feels as a whole. There is emptiness, that there is no genuine loving strength surrounding you. Looking out for you. It is a spiritual dilemma as well as a physical one. People sense it, but don't know what it is.

Fathers need to be reunited and encouraged to be with their children as much as possible. Men need to be reinstated to their importance within society and in the family, which I believe has been overlooked at the expense of promoting the equality of women over the course of 50 years.

The British male now often lives in secret servitude and fear to his wife who confidently knows without any doubt she ultimately has the winning upper hand with the custody of children should relationships not go how they wish.'

"Female Astronauts Said To Face Discrimination Over NASA's Space Radiation Concerns"

Mastodon · 9 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female astronauts have fewer opportunities to fly in space than men partially because of strict lifetime radiation exposure restrictions, astronauts say.

Both male and female astronauts are not allowed to accumulate a radiation dose that would increase their lifetime risk of developing fatal cancer by more than 3 percent. A six-month mission on the International Space Station exposes astronauts to about 40 times the average yearly dose of background radiation that a person would receive living on Earth, NASA spokesman William Jeffs said in an email.

While the level of risk allowed for both men and women in space is the same, women have a lower threshold for space radiation exposure than men, according to physiological models used by NASA.
...
NASA follows radiation exposure recommendations established by the National Council of Radiation Protection and Measurements. The exposure limits for women are about 20 percent lower compared to men "largely due to additional cancer risk for woman from breast, ovarian, and uterine cancers," Jeffs told SPACE.com.'

Just how bad it can get-- child visitation case stretches 14 years in UK

Matt · 9 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In A (A Child) [2013] EWCA Civ 1104, the Court of Appeal has allowed a father's appeal against a contact order in respect of his daughter, restricting him to sending her emails and presents at Christmas and on her birthday. The father's application for contact / residence will now be reheard.

As McFarlane LJ explained in the lead judgment:

"The case concerns a girl, M, born on 26th October 1999 and therefore now fast approaching her fourteenth birthday. M's mother ["the mother"] is now aged 48 years and her father ["the father"] is aged 60. M's parents separated in May 2001 when M was only some 21 months old and the first application for contact was made by the father five months later in October 2001. The litigation concerning M between the parents has continued, almost without interruption, for the ensuing twelve years. Since 2006 alone there have been no fewer than eighty-two court orders. At least seven judges have been involved in the case at one stage or another and over ten CAFCASS officers have played a part, initially as report writers and, latterly, as M's children's guardian. More recently M has been represented by NYAS. Several local authority social workers have also been involved at various stages of the case. HHJ Goldsack considered that these basic statistics provided the 'best evidence that there has been systemic failure in this case'."'

Text of judgment here.

Divorce Settlement Agreements – The Devil is in the Lack of Details

Matt · 10 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To get divorced in Virginia, all issues must be resolved regarding the marital estate. The most cost effective way of resolving all issues is by reaching an agreement with your spouse. However, failing to carefully consider the details will leave you spending tens of thousands of dollars later as you battle over missed details or ambiguity.

Areas in which parties often fail to include sufficient details to have a functioning long-term agreement include, how to modify child support, children's' extra-curricular activities and who pays for them, how to make the decision about college when the parties agree to split the costs, unreimbursed medical expenses for out of network medical care, information required to exchange when the children are out of town or out of state, and the method for resolving disagreements when they inevitably arise.'

Attorney uses controversial ad to warn men about child support

Matt · 10 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Local attorney Mark Davis is taking a cynical approach to what he says is a growing problem in the state of Texas.

Davis created an advertisement that is targeted toward women. It asks them how they would like to make thousands of dollars by staying at home, and instructs them how to do so by following simple steps.

1) Get pregnant and have a baby.
2) Once the baby is born, get rid of the father.
3) Get child support money by using a state-appointed, free attorney to sue the father.
4) Spend the money on trips without the child.
5) Spend the money on drinking, expensive restaurants, and clubs.

"Guess what? That's all legal in Texas," Davis said.'

Wife accused of pushing husband off cliff

Matt · 10 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) -- A woman in Montana is accused of pushing her husband off a cliff after an argument. The pair had been married for just more than a week.

Jordan Linn Graham made an initial appearance in court Monday to face a charge of second-degree murder. If convicted, she faces life in prison.

According to a criminal complaint, Graham recently told a friend she was having second thoughts about marrying Cody L. Johnson. CNN affiliate KECI reported the couple had been married for just more than a week.
...
Graham told police that her husband grabbed her by the arm. She turned and removed it.

"Graham stated she could have just walked away, but due to her anger, she pushed Johnson with both hands in the back and as a result, he fell face first off the cliff," the complaint read.'

"Smaller Testicles, Bigger Parenting Role, Study Suggests"

Minuteman · 10 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Are men with smaller testicles more involved dads? Could be, say the authors of a new study.

Anthropologists from Emory University in Atlanta wanted to try to better understand why some men are more actively engaged in child rearing than others, said study lead author James Rilling.

"We know children with involved fathers -- at least in modern western societies -- have better developmental outcomes socially, psychologically, and educationally. Yet, some men choose not to be involved," he said.

So the study authors decided to investigate whether anatomy or brain function explained the variation in parenting styles.
...
The findings, Rilling said, suggest that "men with smaller testes and lower testosterone levels were more involved in care-giving. The men with smaller testes volume also had a stronger neural response -- the fMRI showed more activity in the ventral tegmental area, a reward center of the brain -- when the men viewed images of their children."
...
"They've assumed a few things and I'm not sure they have the science to back it up," he said.

"You can't correlate testes size to hormones. Testes size -- barring an injury -- is very much stable. Testosterone level is not," Alukal said. He noted that testosterone levels are "hugely variable" depending on the time of day and other factors.'

SAVE E-lert: Washington Post Falls for Abuse Myths

Matt · 11 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Last May, the Washington Post (WaPo) ran an editorial in support of the Battered Mothers Custody Conference (BMCC). You'd think they would have done a little research on the group before publishing that one-sided, gender-biased piece.

The 2005 Public Broadcasting System (PBS) documentary, "Breaking the Silence" was based on claims made at a BMCC. Thousands of viewers complained, and an investigation was done. PBS Ombudsman Ken Bode then stated, "I found the program to be so totally unbalanced as to fall outside the boundaries of PBS editorial standards on fairness and balance."

The May column claims that victimized mothers, "are bankrupted and punished for fighting for their children." But there was no mention of victimized fathers. While the WaPo editorial was being written, Vladek Filler was trying to protect himself and his children from his abusive wife: "All I wanted to do was to save my children and move them to a healthy environment. Instead, I found myself fighting the entire legal system for my life and for my children's lives."

The Washington Post owes it to its readers, and to society as a whole to tell the truth, the entire truth. Please contact WaPo's Reader Representative Doug Feaver and insist that the Washington Post write a new editorial on the subject, one that is balanced, fair, and accurate.

Contact: Doug Feaver - readers-at-washpost.com

Thank you, on behalf of every child at risk,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Boys will be boys – whether you like it or not

Mastodon · 11 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As we merrily skip along the road to economic servitude, war in the Middle East and demographic suicide at home, at least some people – really, really stupid people, may I add – have won a battle in the ongoing Culture Wars that brings social engineering to a whole new level of sinister stupidity.
...
You may want your children to grow up blissfully free of societal expectations defined along a narrow, gender construct that perpetuates a traditionally reductive and patriarchal pedagogical narrative (hey look! I just learned to speak like a feminist! It's not that hard – just stop using your brain!). But here's the thing – there's a good chance your kids don't think like you do, and there's an even better chance that you're going to end up feeling very foolish indeed when you see nature take its course.

Because as long as we remember that the phrase 'by and large' is crucial, we will, by and large, see boys gravitating towards loud, noisy shiny things that they can break and, by and large, girls will tend to gravitate towards more passive, traditional expressions of femininity.'

The Anti-Male Craziness at Yale

Mastodon · 11 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What is "nonconsensual sex"? Rape, right? Not at Yale, where the term can be applied to a variety of acts generally accepted as minor offenses or non-offenses in the real world. Since 2010 Yale has become the national center of efforts to whittle away the due process rights of students accused of sexual assault in campus hearings. Those efforts, undertaken to appease "activists" who want more males convicted in campus proceedings, have included Orwellian word games to expand the definition of rape. One of the first signs that this was happening came in 2011, when Yale concluded that causing someone to worry could come under the heading of sexual assault. In a footnote in a lengthy 2012 report on this new process, issued by deputy provost Stephanie Spangler, Yale conceded that the university uses "a more expansive definition of sexual assault than is commonly understood." Indeed, claiming that a "worry" constitutes sexual assault is expansive indeed.

The national norm for campus sexual hearings is bad enough (no right to an attorney for accused students, determination of guilt by a very low 50.01 threshold--slightly more likely than unlikely that the alleged offense occurred). But Yale made these procedures worse, allowing accusers to file "informal" complaints that deny accused students the right to cross-examine their accuser, be represented by counsel, or even present evidence of innocence, all in the name of allowing an accuser to retain maximum control over the process. As Yale guidelines say, "the goal is to achieve a resolution that is desired by the [accuser]." Generally, we do not have processes in which the goal is to benefit the accuser, and this procedure is designed to give the accuser choice of and control over the process.'

UK: Exactly when will men get pre-conviction anonymity in rape trials?

Mastodon · 11 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After two years of allegations and a gruesome eight-day trial, Coronation Street actor Michael Le Vell was finally exonerated from some of the worst crimes imaginable yesterday.

The jury at Manchester Crown Court took just five hours to clear the 48-year-old of twelve sex offences against a young girl, including five of rape.

The father-of-two had been left ‘fighting for his life’ in both a legal circus and a media scrum.

In his willingness to co-operate, he revealed his private self for public scrutiny: a ‘troubled man’ who chain-smoked, drank up to 12 pints a night, had a string of one-night stands and an affair with a younger woman while his wife had cancer treatment.

Like thousands of men all over the world, Le Vell’s life has already been destroyed by a system which considers men’s innocence a bonus - not a baseline. And it has to end.'

Misandry and aggression against men is real

Mastodon · 11 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over the past few decades, ‘gender violence’ has been defined as violence by men against women. Women’s violence against the male gender has been considered to be either non-existent, or the fault of men, or has been trivialised and justified in a variety of ways.

This interpretation further implies that women’s aggression is a reaction to men’s actions towards them, blaming the victim for his plight.

There are many factors contributing to this, but the most relevant and most important is the radical feminist philosophy which holds that the sexes are adversarially poised; that all forms of violence are derived from the power men have over women; and that men are a class of aggressors, from which arise individuals with greater or lesser aggressive capacity.
...
Hatred of men (misandry) and female aggression against males is a hard and indisputable reality, and it is no different from hatred of women (misogyny) and men’s aggression against females.

The question is no longer whether or not female aggression exists but to the sustenance of this privileged position of female in the context of the current and past social realities.'

Wrongly convicted men freed from prison

Mastodon · 11 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Tuesday was a day to remember for two Chicago men who were released from prison after the Cook County State's Attorney's office dropped charges against them. The state's attorney herself admitted it was time to right these legal wrongs.

58-year-old Carl Chatman was behind bars for 11 years accused of raping a woman in the Daley Center back in 2002. The facts of that case against him just didn't add up and today, Chatman left the Dixon Correctional Center after more than a decade.

"God answered my dream today," he said.'

Malecare Sept. 2013 Teleconference

Matt · 11 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Malecare.org: "Understanding the New Tests For Prostate Cancer"
Thursday, September 12, 2013 at 6PM EDT

1- An overview of the new tests becoming available for men regarding prostate cancer
2- A discussion about these new tests and their role in current treatment choices.
3- Q&A
Dial in at 1.800.868.1837 or direct dial 1.404.920.6440
conference code 537349# (don't forget to press #)

Questions to be covered include:
1. How do researchers use genetics to better understand prostate cancer?
Background/overview on genetics and genetic studies in common disease.
2. How is one's risk of prostate cancer currently predicted?
Prediction of prostate cancer - emphasis on utility of family history
3. Can genetics be used to improve prostate cancer prediction?
iCOGs study, genetic correction of PSA values
4. How does genomic analysis of tumor inform treatment? (briefly)
Genetic sequencing of tumors; Biomarker-based (non-DNA) diagnostics

(Dr. Moul, originally scheduled as a speaker, will be rescheduled for early 2014.)

Speakers:

1. Daniel Lieber, PhD, is a graduate of Harvard University's Systems Biology PhD program. He worked in Vamsi Mootha's laboratory, where his thesis was entitled: "Computational and Experimental Approaches for Evaluating the Genetic Basis of Mitochondrial Disorders." He was selected for the National Science Foundation Graduate Research Fellowship in 2010. He graduated magna cum laude from Princeton University with an AB in Molecular Biology and a certificate in Finance. He is a member of the American Society of Human Genetics and a student member of the American Academy of Neurology.

2. Steve Hershman, PhD, MS, MSE, is a graduate of the Systems Biology PhD program at Harvard University. His thesis, "Personal Genomics and Mitochondrial Disease", describes efforts to identify causal genetic lesions in patients with mitochondrial disease and the development of web-based tools to explore genetic data. His research has been published in the journals Science Translational Medicine, Cell Metabolism and Nucleic Acids Research. Previously Steve earned a Bachelor's degree in Biochemistry summa cum laudeand Masters' degrees in Chemistry and Computer & Information Sciences from the University of Pennsylvania.

3. Joel Nowak, MSW, MS
Director, Advocacy and Advanced Stage Disease
Malecare Cancer Support

School Principal On Leave Following Gun, Drug Arrest

Matt · 11 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The principal of Lee Elementary School in Paradise Hills was placed on leave following her weekend arrest on suspicion of possessing illegal drugs and a stolen gun, authorities reported today.

Rachel Yolanda Escobedo, 45, was arrested in the Rolando Park area on Saturday, according to San Diego police.
...
The patrolman spotted an open vodka bottle inside the vehicle and a small amount of what turned out to be marijuana in an ashtray, the lieutenant said.

After getting permission to search the car from Escobedo, who was in the driver's seat, the officer allegedly found a loaded .22-caliber pistol in the trunk, along with about two dozen prescription pills that appeared to be hydrocodone and four small baggies containing a white crystalline powder, Mayer said.

The apparent drugs were submitted for lab testing to positively identify them, he said, adding that a computer check showed that the handgun had been reported stolen.'

Former Teacher And Convicted Sex Offender Moves In With Former Student

Mastodon · 11 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Scottish teacher whose affair with an underage student led to her being placed on a sex offenders registry has moved the student into the home she previously shared with her husband.

Earlier this year, Eppie Sprung Dawson, 27, a teacher at St Joseph's College in Dumfries, Scotland, was caught having sex with Matthew Robinson, a 17-year-old student.

The incident, which occurred after a high school dance at Christmastime, cost Dawson her job and marriage.

She narrowly avoided a prison sentence but was ordered to register as a sex offender, according to the Daily Record.

It must have been an affair to remember because Robinson, now 18, recently moved in with Dawson, after getting into an argument with his parents over an unwillingness to clean his room, according to his mother, Sheree Robinson.'

Woman Pointing Gun At Child's Head Photo Sparks Outrage, International Search

Mastodon · 11 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An image of woman, apparently, pointing a gun at a toddler's head has gone viral, sparking outrage -- and questions.

Is the gun real? Is it a prank? And, most importantly, who is she?

Hoping to answer those questions -- and ascertain whether the pictured child is in danger -- an anti-domestic violence blog is widely publicizing the image.

"I was sent this picture today by a friend who was very distressed to see it on her page," an entry at No Longer Victims notes. "It apparently was posted to see if anybody could find the girl and if they cared well we do care and we have to find this baby as this scares the hell out of me."'

NPO: Wisconsin Court Upholds ‘Visitation’ Without Child Support

Matt · 12 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently, the Wisconsin state Court of Appeals reversed a trial court's order. In the case of Belva Bowden vs. Amy Korslin, the result is that the court stopped child support payments from Bowden to Korslin, ordered Korslin to return payments she had already received, and upheld Bowden’s regular visitation with the child who is now a teenager.

Their daughter was born in 1998 while the women were in a long-term committed relationship. The couple split in 2006. They had agreed to share expenses of raising their daughter and to equal placement, but in 2008, Korslin sought to restrict their daughter’s time with Bowden. The Wood County judged had ruled that Bowden could have visitation — every other weekend and one weeknight every other week and during some holidays, but the judge would not grant 50% placement. In addition to this the judge ordered her to pay 17% of her gross income in child support to Korslin.

Both women appealed due to visitation time allowed and child support assessed. Apparently Wisconsin family law does not provide for a non-parent to pay child support to a parent, nor does it provide for placement with a non-parent. ...'

Police seek woman who filed false rape report

Mastodon · 12 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Port Wentworth Police want your help after a woman's false report of rape costs thousands of dollars in manpower and leaves a scar in the community.

Police are actively looking for the woman who filed that claim.

They say it's not just about the wasted manpower, that false rape claims trivialize the true victims of that crime.

The crime report happened in March.

Port Wentworth Police responded to a 911 call of rape at a home on south coastal highway.

There was a scene. The female caller said the perpetrator had just fled. But the dogs couldn't find a scent.'

Person who reported rape arrested for filing false report

Mastodon · 12 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Benton Police have arrested a woman for filing a false rape report.

According to Lt. Kevin Russell, Kristin Johnson, 24, was charged with filing a false police report after she told officers that a man had broken into her home and raped her shortly before 3:30 p.m. Aug. 19.

Russell said through extensive investigation, officers learned that Johnson was lying and arrested her on Sept. 10.

This is an on-going investigation and additional charges could be possible.'

Yale Releases Scenarios Illustrating Examples of Sexual Misconduct

bronxman · 12 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This story has been mentioned before on MANN, but now it is discussed in the Chronicle of Higher Education. Feel free to post your thoughts on Yale's absurd policy. Excerpt:

'Yale University has released a series of hypothetical scenarios illustrating what it considers to be sexual misconduct, along with accompanying descriptions of penalties that could be imposed on those who engage in such misconduct. Peter Salovey, Yale's president, asked the institution to develop the scenarios last month, after critics raised concerns about the university's latest report on reported cases of sexual misconduct. Some critics denounced the report's use of the term "nonconsensual sex," saying that the phrase was a way to avoid the word "rape." Others said penalties described in that report were too light. Tom Conroy, a Yale spokesman, said the scenarios were not based on actual cases of misconduct that had been investigated by the university.
...
Read more at: www.nhregister.com'

In regaining jobs, women doing better than men

Mastodon · 13 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

The slowly recovering U.S. job market has helped women rebound faster than men: They've now regained all the jobs they lost to the Great Recession. Men are still 2.1 million jobs short.

And the gender gap is expected to persist until the job market is much healthier.
...
Lower-wage industries, like retail, education, restaurants and hotels, have been hiring the fastest. Women are predominant in those areas. Men, by contrast, dominate sectors like construction and manufacturing, which have yet to recover millions of jobs lost in the recession.
...
Even though women's employment has recovered faster than men's, there are still more men with jobs than women. And more men than women have found work since the recession ended. Yet men still haven't recovered all their losses because the cuts were so deep in sectors such as manufacturing and construction.'

Scotland Tonight: Can women-only shortlists redress inequality?

Mastodon · 13 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The by-election will take place next month and campaigners say electing a woman would be a fitting response to the manner of Walker's departure following his conviction for domestic abuse.

The idea of all-party shortlists in Dunfermline has support from political bloggers Susan Dalgety and Kate Higgins, who have supported the idea from opposite sides of the political divide.

Others say the move would amount to positive discrimination and exclude potentially good candidates because they are male. Scotland Tonight asked Kate Higgins why she backed the idea.'

Biden slams ‘Neanderthal’ GOP’s record on women

Mastodon · 13 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to the Violence Against Women Act, House Republicans behaved as if they were living in the Stone Age, according to Joe Biden.
...
Biden characterized skeptics of reauthorization as “this sort of Neanderthal crowd,” according to a pool report.

The Republican-led House renewed the act in February after it was in legislative limbo for a year following its expiration in September 2011. It passed with a 286 to 138 vote, with a majority of GOPers voting against it. All Democrats and 87 Republican lawmakers voted in favor for it.'

'How We Fail Our Boys'

Mastodon · 13 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Half a century after The Second Sex, Title IX, and The Feminine Mystique, have we reached a point where women have certain advantages over men? Earlier this summer, Helen Smith's book Men on Strike tackled this subject with vigor, if not with rigor (the authors main sources were commenters on her blog, arguably a self-selecting group of Men's Rights Activists —MRAs, as they call themselves—or sympathizers). Her main argument is that the power dynamic has shifted so much that it's now women, not men, who control America. Men, therefore, have been reduced to impotent slobs, relegated to the basement or cuckolded and divorced while continuing to pay child support for a kid who isn't theirs, or failing out of college through no fault of their own, or being falsely accused of rape by foolish women.
...
Wiseman strikes the perfect note in arguing for forging families and societies where we give boys "a language for talking about their worries and experiences like we do with girls." This means paying attention to everything from your son's "first Halloween costume with a six-pack sewn into it" to the way his friends call each other "gay" when they really mean stupid, immature, or weak.

Boys, Wiseman told me in an interview, "want strong friendships, and they want to be able to navigate bad things that happen: there are betrayals, there are rejections, there are huge disappointments, and boys don't know how to talk about it, and they don't even think, in some ways, they have the right to talk about it. Because of that, they get to a place where they just push it down." It's time to start helping with this navigation, so that boys can grow up to be emotionally healthy men—and so that they don't later blame their problems on feminism.'

White House: Ending Violence Against Women: 19 Years of Progress

Mastodon · 13 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today marks the 19th anniversary of the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA). As the original author and champion of VAWA, Vice President Biden brought national attention to what had too-long been a hidden problem. Then-Senator Biden held the first hearing on violence against women in the Senate Judiciary Committee in 1990 and introduced the first version of the Act that same year. After five years of hearings exposing the extent of rape, battering and stalking, the Act finally passed Congress and was signed into law by President Clinton on September 13, 1994.

The initial VAWA legislation focused on changing law enforcement practices, improving the criminal justice system, and increasing access to shelters and services for victims. VAWA strengthened the federal criminal code, creating interstate crimes of domestic violence and doubling penalties for repeat sex offenders. And, VAWA sparked the passage of hundreds of laws at the state level to protect victims and hold offenders accountable. Since 1994, VAWA has sent billions of dollars to states and local communities to develop a coordinated response to domestic violence, dating violence sexual assault, and stalking.'

Circumcision Opponents To Protest This Weekend

Matt · 14 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'September 12, 2013 9:26 PM

ROYAL OAK (WWJ) – A local hospital facing some opposition to a somewhat standard cultural practice. A demonstration against circumcision is being held this Saturday at noon outside of Beaumont Children's Hospital.

Norm Cohen is the director of a group called No Circ Michigan. He says his parents had him circumcised and he resents it. He says circumcision is not healthcare.

"It's not normal to be cutting off normal parts of a child's body. It violates children and their rights. Every part of our body has a function, so when doctors push this as healthcare, it's really a pretense that's done simply for profit and for old-fashioned ideas that do not hold up," he says.'

Meet Tom Martin, Britain's most hated male rights activist

Matt · 14 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism is an old topic, like polytheism and why it's bad to kick cats. It's concepts are widely understood and mostly accepted – men have after all, for the most part of human history, generally been total cock-Nazis to women. Yet opposing these arguments are male right's activists, men that claim male discrimination is as rife and unacknowledged as herpes in the 70s. They claim much of society is anti-male, snubbing men's issues and focusing on a crude view of women as victims and men as wrongdoers.

Tom Martin made headlines back in 2011 when he attempted to sue London School of Economics for gender bias. Since then he has established himself as a leading male rights activist with a large following. A lot of people don't like him.'

UK: Man who took his date's phone after she refused to pay for half the drinks is cleared of theft

Matt · 14 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An IT worker accused of snatching a woman's mobile phone on their first date to 'teach her a lesson' when she refused to pay half of the drinks bill was cleared of theft today.

Kishore Nimmala, 32, was said to be furious after Fakhara Sultana told him she had no cash during a romantic rendezvous at the Ruby Blue Bar in Leicester Square.
...
But a jury cleared Nimmala of theft after deliberating for just 53 minutes following a three-day trial.

Nimmala said he took Ms Sultana's phone thinking she would give him £25, but insisted he never intended to keep the device.'

Abusive babysitter revealed by dog's behavior

Matt · 14 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A South Carolina couple is thanking their dog for saving their 7-month-old from an abusive babysitter.

Benjamin and Hope Jordan, of Charleston, hired 22-year-old Alexis Khan to care for their son, Finn, last year.
...
Suspecting that their pet might be on to something, the Jordans placed an iPhone under the couch to record what happened when Khan and their son were alone.

The recording revealed the babysitter swearing and slapping the infant as the child's cries changed "from a distress cry to a pain cry."

Khan pleaded guilty to assault and battery Monday and was sentenced to one to three years in prison. She will also never be allowed to work with children again.'

"Mommy Dearest" obituary pulled from web site

Matt · 14 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Marianne Theresa Johnson-Reddick, born January 4, 1935, died last month, to the relief and comfort of the children whom she spent a lifetime (in their words) "torturing in every way possible." Those children, now grown, marked her passing by submitting the most chilling obituary you will ever read to her local newspaper, the Reno Gazette-Journal. While it appears to have been scrubbed from the paper's website, here's the full text, as it appeared online earlier today:

"Marianne Theresa Johnson-Reddick born Jan 4, 1935 and died alone on Aug. 30, 2013. She is survived by her 6 of 8 children whom she spent her lifetime torturing in every way possible. While she neglected and abused her small children, she refused to allow anyone else to care or show compassion towards them. When they became adults she stalked and tortured anyone they dared to love. Everyone she met, adult or child was tortured by her cruelty and exposure to violence, criminal activity, vulgarity, and hatred of the gentle or kind human spirit.
..."'

"Deadbeat Dad Dilemma"

Matt · 14 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Author/producer does the math on "dead-beatedness".

Newlywed accused of pushing husband off cliff is freed ahead of trial

Matt · 14 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A judge on Thursday ordered a Montana woman who allegedly killed her new husband by pushing him off a cliff to be released from jail and placed in her parents' custody pending trial, legal documents show.

Jordan Graham, 22, was arrested on Monday on a federal charge of second-degree murder stemming from the July 7 death of her husband of eight days.

Authorities allege Graham lied and tried to cover up the crime before confessing she shoved Cody Johnson, 25, of Kalispell, Mont., over a cliff at Glacier National Park during an argument and after expressing doubts about the marriage, according to court records.'

'Men Taking Up Too Much Space On The Train'

Mastodon · 15 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We've probably all ended up sitting next to that guy on the train. You know, the man who insists on resting his elbow basically on your body, or takes up one-and-a-half seats in order to keep his legs spread or stands unnecessarily close to you even when the car is mostly empty.

That's why the "Men Taking Up Too Much Space On The Subway" Tumblr is so great. It shows photographs of what the curator calls "a classic among public assertions of privilege" -- men taking up much more space than their size calls for.

Of course, the men photographed in this Tumblr aren't doing anything malicious, but it's an interesting visual representation of the way that men feel totally empowered to take up a lot of public space -- and women often do not.'

How to Make School Better for Boys

Mastodon · 15 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I recently appeared on MSNBC's The Cycle to discuss the new edition of my book The War Against Boys. The four hosts were having none of it. A war on boys? They countered with the wage gap and the prominence of men across the professions. One of them concluded, "I don't think the patriarchy is under any threat."

The MSNBC skeptics are hardly alone in dismissing the plight of boys and young men. Even those who acknowledge that boys are losing in school argue that they're winning in life. But the facts are otherwise. American boys across the ability spectrum are struggling in the nation's schools, with teachers and administrators failing to engage their specific interests and needs. This neglect has ominous implications not only for the boy's social and intellectual development but for the national economy, as policy analysts are just beginning to calculate.
...
In the U.S., a powerful network of women's groups works ceaselessly to protect and promote what it sees as female interest. But there is no counterpart working for boys—they are on their own. This contrasts dramatically with constructive, problem-solving approach of education leaders and government officials in Great Britain, Canada, and Australia. The British have their parliamentary "toolkit of effective practices" for educating boys—while Americans have the National Women's Law Center's Tools of the Trade: Using the Law to Address Sex Segregation in High School Career and Technical Education.'

Court dismisses Nebraska man's false rape lawsuit

Mastodon · 15 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Wymore man falsely accused of rape will appeal the dismissal of his lawsuit against Gage County and several of its deputies, his lawyer said Friday.

Elliot Hawkins, 50, sued the county and law enforcement officials over his 2011 arrest, accusing officials of negligence and saying they violated his due process rights by conducting a reckless investigation and intentionally ignoring leads that would have exonerated him. The lawsuit sought an unspecified amount for lost earnings capacity, damage to his reputation and emotional distress, among other things.

U.S. Magistrate Judge Cheryl Zwart granted the county's motion for summary judgment, saying the defendants have immunity from liability.

Hawkins' arrest came after Jennifer Valenta, 28, of Wilber told authorities she was raped by four men, including Hawkins. Investigators later determined her injuries from the alleged attack were self-inflicted, and she admitted to fabricating the rape. She pleaded no contest to evidence tampering, false reporting and attempted prostitution and was sentenced earlier this year to 32 to 60 months in prison.'

Men falling under unfair suspicion

Mastodon · 15 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I AM so glad I wasn't born a man.

This has got nothing to do with facial hair or the fact that woman can have babies while men can't.

It's that women don't automatically get branded as a pedophile or a sexual predator based purely on their sex.

I was doing a story last week on a single dad offering his help for free to other single women.

On the surface, it seemed like an honest gesture of goodwill.

I don't know the man and I can't pretend to know his intentions.

But what disturbed me was a phone call I had from another woman who had called the police about him.

This man had approached her with an offer for help and, from what I can tell, had also suggested they might end up going on a date.

The woman was concerned he was looking to take advantage of vulnerable women.

The reason? "Nothing is for free in this world."

The fact that a man can't offer his help to a woman without being assumed to have an ulterior motive makes me feel tired and angry.

What is wrong with the world that so many of us assume the worst?'

Nigeria: "The Feminisation of Boys"

Mastodon · 15 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many people are asking silent crisis is consuming the future of our male children. Fathers are spending more time away from their families either toiling at work, lounging with their buddies at the club after a hard day's work, or generally involved in one thing or another that takes them away from home. They have surrendered the nurturing and upbringing of their children, especially boys, to women – their mothers, aunties, female house helps and nannies. Absentee fatherhood is taking an awful toll on our boys. Children need the presence of strong male role models as psychological, spiritual and moral anchors. This is the essence of the divinely ordained role of males as family heads.

The chronic absence of fathers leaves a yawning vacuum in the lives of these children. This is generally damaging for both boys and girls. It is a fact that girls receive emotional stability from the relationship with their fathers. Many girls deprived of fatherly affection, years later are still searching for that emotional succor from other males in abusive and sometimes, clingy or promiscuous relationships. But girls can at least compensate through proximity to their mothers from whom they receive valuable mentorship in the event of an absent father. Through the unique relationship they share, mothers can pass on wisdom and feminine graces to their daughters.

However, boys suffer grievously from the plague of absentee fatherhood. First, the absence of their fathers denies them the calming and steadying influence of a close male authority figure. The process of relational bonding between father and son, a crucial aspect of forming the male character, is disappearing. Boys are not being mentored, disciplined or coached by their fathers. Fathers are increasingly fathers in name only. Their fatherhood is a biological fact but exerts little or no moral impact on the children.'

Personal Responsibility is not a “War on Women”

Mastodon · 15 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over the last couple years, especially during the 2012 general election, I have become more and more aggravated with the Left’s use of the term “War on Women.” The United States has been one of the best countries to live in since we declared our independence. While we have had our ups and downs concerning equal rights, we have come a long way and are still far ahead of the rest of the world.
...
Those who say there is a “War on Women” seem to ignore the fact that women have a brain and are not just sexual creatures that cannot make choices for themselves. They also seem to believe that it is the government’s responsibility to take care of women. They ignore the simple fact that women can take responsibility for their actions. After all, isn’t that a right that we have been fighting for all along: personal responsibility, rather than having others be responsible for us?'

Domestic violence reality check for the 'manosphere'

Mastodon · 15 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Domestic violence is a crime in which, overwhelmingly, the victims are women and the perpetrators are men. A recent 11-year summary of domestic violence trends in Victoria by the Department of Justice found that nearly 80 per cent of victims were female and over 90 per cent of perpetrators were male.

Yet lately it seems that there has been a subtle shift in community perception. Whenever the topic of domestic violence is raised in the media, talkback radio, online comments and letters to the editor are suddenly flooded with demands that we acknowledge that men, too, are victims. According to a VicHealth report, one fifth of the community now believes that men and women are equal perpetrators of violence in the home.

The 'battered husband' claim has flourished within the online space known as the 'manosphere' where aggressive men's rights groups blame women, and more specifically feminism, for everything from high unemployment rates and shorter male lifespans, to false rape allegations and poor family court outcomes. The time has come, they say, to knock women off their pedestal.'

No parental rights for man after mom married

Mastodon · 15 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A northern Michigan man's bid to establish parental rights to a 2-year-old boy was shot down by the state appeals court in a decision that rested on the marital status of the mother when the child was born.

It's another case where a man has no automatic right to paternity in Michigan if a child is born to a woman while she's married to another man. The law has changed since John Sprenger filed a lawsuit in 2011, but the new version hasn't helped him, either.

...

The appeals court viewed the case under an old version of Michigan's paternity law. While the case was pending, the law was changed in 2012 to give men a better chance at establishing fatherhood.

...

"Justice fails when the truth is made subservient to procedural rules," his attorney, Eric Phelps, said.'

Queen Latifah Doesn’t Want a Show about Paternity Tests

Mastodon · 15 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As David Letterman interviewed Queen Latifah about her new talk show the actress revealed that she had no desire to delve into the realm of paternity testing. That could be due to the controversial nature of the court system when it comes to determining the rights and responsibilities of a father.

In cases of paternity fraud, the mentality of the courts seem to be skewed. If a man is able to prove that he is not the father of a child of a woman with whom he had relations with, the court can still come after him for financial payments of past due amounts. Laws regarding paternity are archaic and unjust in many forms. Although each state is different, it seems that men are usually the target. It could be a difficult battle to wipe the slate clean if a man is proven he is not the father of a child. How does the court feel justified in victimizing a man in such a manner?
...
As long as the father contests paternity prior to the child being born, a man stands a better chance to clear his name and financial responsibilities. It is the man’s trust in the word of the woman that can cause immense amount of emotional and financial distress later on. As close to 30-percent of paternity cases show the man to not be the biological father. Laws are being changed frequently, but a man could still be on the hook to pay for a child that is not his.'

Women's rights not enough

Mastodon · 15 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Jan. 13, 2012, an Italian cruise ship (the Costa Concordia) partially sank off the coast of Tuscany. There were 4,252 people on board. Thirty people died and 64 people were injured.

However, the big story about this event was when the captain of the ship, Francesco Schettino — and much of his crew — abandoned the ship without much thought to the women and children on board.

In other words, it was not a Titanic-type situation where the women and children were offered the lifeboats first.

It was every person for themselves and yet there were documented complaints from women on board that the men fended for themselves without thought to the women or children first.

Is it the man's responsibility to think of the women and children first or have times changed in the wake of feminism?

I can't claim to know the answer to that question. After all, it's a pretty big question, and I'm not a pro on gender issues.
...
Women should have rights but so should men and neither one should be at an advantage or taken for granted.

The laws of this country are for men and women and justice is a right of both genders.'

Tell Change.org to add a Men's Rights section

Matt · 15 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Great idea! A petition to a petition site! Excerpt:

'Change.org offers a Women's Rights section, but has no Men's Rights section. We find this appalling. How can a site that regularly promotes petitions about equality ignore half the population?

Men suffer much discrimination in today's world.

Fathers in family court are not treated equally to mothers. Approximately 75-80% of cases end up with mothers getting sole custody, even when the fathers were the stay-at-home parent and they asked for equal custody.

Men are routinely called perpetrators of domestic violence, even though half of all DV is mutual, and the rest is evenly divided between men and women. This discrimination starts at the top (AG Holder) and trickles all the way down to neighborhood abuse shelters. Men abused by women are often arrested instead of given support.'

"A present father"

Matt · 16 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Very nice video here. From the text shown on video:

'a present face
the ability to express feelings being father already..
choose for others
compare with the past, and challenge yourself walk the road together (fare un tratto di strada assieme) be the example smile be honest say "no" when needed give credit for success'

What About Our Boys?

Mastodon · 16 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'KATHRYN JEAN LOPEZ: What's the war on boys?

CHRISTINA HOFF SOMMERS: It's more like a war of attrition. No one wakes up in the morning thinking, "What horrible thing can I do to boys today?" But boys and young men have been massively neglected. Women in the U.S. today earn 62 percent of associate's degrees, 57 percent of bachelor's degrees, 60 percent of master's degrees, and 52 percent of doctorates. When an education-policy analyst looked at current trends in higher education he quipped, only half in jest, "The last male will graduate from college in 2068."
...
LOPEZ: This has been a theme of yours for a while. Has it gotten better or worse?

SOMMERS: Simon & Schuster asked me to update and revise the 2000 edition of The War Against Boys precisely because the plight of boys is worsening. A recent working paper from the National Bureau of Economic Research documents a remarkable trend among high-achieving students: In the 1980s, nearly the same number of top male and female high-school students said they planned to pursue a postgraduate degree. By the 2000s, 27 percent of girls expressed that ambition, compared with 16 percent of boys. But it's the declining social and educational prospects of working-class and poor white, Latino, and African-American young men that is most dismaying. A 2011 Brookings Institution study describes how millions of poorly educated young men have been "unhitched from the engine of growth." As the United States moves toward a knowledge-based economy, school achievement has become the cornerstone of lifelong success. Young women are adapting; young men are not.'

Summers drops bid to head the Fed

Mastodon · 16 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON — Facing strident opposition from women's groups and fellow Democrats, Obama administration economic confidante Lawrence H. Summers removed his name from consideration to the head the Federal Reserve, the White House said late Sunday.

...

Until Sunday, he appeared to have support from the one person who mattered most, Obama. That support cost Obama politically, as women's groups, especially the National Organization for Women, were furious that he appeared ready to pass over an accomplished woman, current Fed Vice Chairman Janet Yellen.

"On absolute facts and merits, she is better than any of the men," Terry O'Neill, president of the National Organization for Women, told McClatchy just days before Summers withdrew. "For the president to pass her by is exactly what women's organizations have been struggling against for decades. How dare he hold himself up as a proponent of women's rights then slam a glass ceiling on Janet Yellen's head?"'

Title IX candidate calls for system balance

Mastodon · 16 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Howard Kallem believes that UNC must build a response system for sexual harassment charges.

Kallem, a candidate for the University's Title IX position and the chief regional attorney for the Office for Civil Rights in the U.S. Department of Education, spoke at a public forum Friday about his platform for the position.

"I think it's important to have a procedure in place to give the accused the opportunity to state their case," Kallem said.

A forum with a third candidate was planned to be held this Wednesday, but it was cancelled after the candidate withdrew.

Kallem said it is essential to maintain neutrality when investigating any case, and no judgment should be made until the truth is revealed.'

Consent officially defined in sexual misconduct policy

Mastodon · 16 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The revised policy, which combines the pre-existing sexual assault and harassment policies, defines consent as a “knowing, voluntary and affirmatively communicated willingness to participate in a particular sexual activity or behavior.”

It goes on to clarify that consent must be given while the consenting party has the “ability and capacity to exercise free will and make a rational, reasonable judgment,” which officials said means consent cannot be given while one party is highly intoxicated.

“Students are going to have to engage in direct conversation with sexual partners for every act,” said Resident Life Associate Director Steve Petkas, who serves as the interim Title IX director. “Past sexual encounters or one set of sexual behaviors does not imply acceptance going forward. They have to communicate — and frankly, that’s what adults do.”'

Military affairs beat: Study ties the time in combat to divorce risk

Mastodon · 16 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From the Keen-Sense-of-the-Obvious Department: The wars in Iraq and Afghanistan have been hard on military marriages. The risk of divorce rises in direct relation to the length of time troops have spent deployed to combat zones, according to a new Rand Corp. study.

The results should come as no surprise, but the specifics of the study are interesting. Deployments most negatively affect women in the military. They face a greater chance of divorce than men. The study did not look at why.

Among couples married before the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, those who experienced 12-month deployments to war zones were 28 percent more likely to become divorced within three years of marriage as compared with peers who experienced similar deployment before the wars began.'

Sweden: Government to sponsor misandry at $688,000

Matt · 17 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Translated article here. Excerpt:

'Against this background, the Government has decided to grant a request from the Swedish Women's Lobby for financial support for the implementation of a Nordic Conference on Women, Nordic Forum Malmö 2014 new actions on women's rights. The conference takes place in Malmo 24:15 June 2014. The government grants a subsidy for 2012 of up to 1 000 000, for 2013 more than 2 500 000 and in 2014 more than 6.5 million crowns.

Nordic Forum is a joint initiative of the Nordic women's movement for the realization of the document adopted by the UN in 1995 at the World Congress on Women's Rights in Beijing. The conference is planned include lectures, seminars and workshops aimed at a wide audience, such as women's organizations, politicians, government agencies, the public and other interested organizations.'

Swedish bloggers have commented here and here.

Air Force Academy hires feminist ideologue to teach course on gender

Mastodon · 17 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A controversial professor who critics say is a feminist ideologue is instructing cadets at the United States Air Force Academy this year on gender issues as the military attempts to curb sexual assault.

Dr. Chris Kilmartin, a psychology professor at the University of Mary Washington, has described violence as “a men’s issue,” called abuse by men “the single most serious health problem for women in the United States,” and said the sexes are not “opposite.” Critics say he has embellished statistics to support his teachings.

...

Christina Hoff Sommers, resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute (AEI) and former philosophy professor, said in an email that Kilmartin’s focus on the purported violent attributes of men is misplaced.

“[Healthy young men] assert their masculinity in ways that require physical and intellectual skills and self-discipline. In American society, the overwhelming majority of healthy, normal young men don’t batter, rape, or terrorize women; they respect them and treat them as friends,” she said.

“Kilmartin appears to have overlooked the critical distinction between healthy and aberrational masculinity. He takes aberration as the norm. That is why it is so troubling that the United States Military is drawing so heavily on his expertise. He is an expert in gender ideology—not masculinity,” she said.

...

“Combating sexual assault and sexual harassment within the ranks is our number one priority,” Gen. Ray Odierno, Army chief of staff, told the Senate Armed Services Committee in June.

However, critics have questioned the reliability of the surveys and noted that sexual assault rates in the military have declined over time.

University of San Diego law professor Gail Heriot, in a statement she provided for inclusion in a U.S. Commission on Civil Rights report, said rates of unwanted sexual contact “dropped dramatically” in 2010, by 35 percent for women and 50 percent for men.

...

“Men’s violence is the single most serious health problem for women in the United States. It causes more harm than accidents, muggings, and cancer combined,” Kilmartin wrote in NOMAS.

“For women aged 15-44, an estimated 50% of emergency room visits are the result of violence at the hands of their husbands, boyfriends, ex-husbands, or ex-boyfriends.”'

Allstate's gender-baiting ad

Matt · 17 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Ad here. Wouldn't be the first time Allstate had "gender issues". Search MANN for "Allstate" to see. Contact info is here.

SAVE: Prosecutor Misconduct is Widespread, Extends to Highest Levels, CPI Report Reveals

Matt · 18 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / September 18, 2013 – A report released today concludes prosecutor misconduct is widespread and ingrained in our nation's criminal justice system. Only rarely does prosecutor misconduct result in the imposition of sanctions. The report, issued by the non-partisan Center for Prosecutor Integrity, calls for fundamental reform of the oversight policies for the nation's 30,000 prosecutors.

And according to a recent Center for Prosecutor Integrity survey, 43% of persons nationwide believe prosecutorial misconduct is widespread: http://www.saveservices.org/prosecutors/survey/

Prosecutor misconduct takes many forms, including charging a suspect with more crimes than warranted, concealing evidence, coercing witnesses, and making misleading statements to the jury.'

Male suicides rose after 2008 financial crash

Mastodon · 18 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 2008 financial crisis that devastated many Western economies also reaped a heavy toll in suicides among men, a study published on Tuesday suggests.

Health researchers analyzed data for suicides among people aged over 15 in 54 countries, comparing rates before and after the crash.

In 2009, there were 4,884 more suicides compared with the normal trend, they said.

Suicide numbers in 2009 were 4.2 percent higher in 27 European countries and 6.4 percent higher in 18 countries in the Caribbean and Latin America.

The benchmark is the suicide trend for 2000-2007, extrapolated to 2009.'

Canada: Men's Rights Edmonton not backing off

Mastodon · 18 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A group that sparked controversy after putting up posters that blasted false accusations of rape in Edmonton has turned its focus on Lise Gotell, the chair of women's and gender studies at the University of Alberta.

Men's Rights Edmonton have put up posters on the campus that show Gotell's face with the caption, "Theft isn't black. Bank fraud isn't Jewish. And rape isn't male.

"Just because you're paid to demonize men doesn't mean rape is gendered. Don't be that bigot," it adds.
...
In July, the group targeted the "Don't Be That Guy" campaign on sex assault awareness with a poster that was titled, "Don't Be That Girl."

"Just because you regret a one night stand doesn't mean it wasn't consensual," it read.

The group denied advocating or apologizing for rape at the time, saying that both rape and false accusations of rape are "abhorrent means of manipulation and power."

Men's Rights Edmonton also launched a Calgary chapter this month and wrote about "exciting times ahead of us."'

Mother who microwaved baby wants fourth trial

Mastodon · 19 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'An Ohio woman convicted of killing her baby daughter in a microwave oven wants a fourth trial because of errors made in her last trial, her lawyer said.

China Arnold, 33, was convicted three times of killing her 28-day-old daughter, Paris Talley -- in February 2008, September 2008 and May 2011.

She was sentenced to the death penalty on her first conviction and to life in prison on the subsequent two convictions.

Tuesday attorney Christopher Thompson requested a fourth trial in Ohio's Second District Court of Appeals because he said five errors were made in her case, the Dayton Daily News reported. He requested a trial without the chance of the death penalty.'

Christina Hoff Sommers on public schools and the ‘war against boys’

Mastodon · 19 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2000, Christina Hoff Sommers published The War Against Boys: How Misguided Feminism is Harming Our Young Men. Hoff Sommers was already known as a critic of late-20th-century feminism; her much-lauded and much-disparaged 1994 book Who Stole Feminism? had provoked charges that she was anti-women. In August, Hoff Sommers, now a resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute in Washington, updated and reissued her bestseller on boys with a new subtitle: How Misguided Policies Are Harming Our Young Men. Hoff Sommers makes the case that boys and girls are fundamentally different—and that ignoring the difference, in an effort to protect girls, amounts to a “war against boys.”
...
Q: The obvious counterpoint is that so many more men are CEOs of Fortune 500 companies and top politicians. How can we explain that top-tier divide?

A: Critics of my work say: well, even if boys are failing at school, eventually they win in life. But the fact is that men tend to show up at the extremes of success and failure. And failure is far more common. There is a small coterie of men who prevail in the high echelons of industry, politics and academia. But millions of young men are poorly educated and disengaged from the workforce. In any case, I argue that ignoring the educational needs of men is not the way to help women.'

The Fair Child Support Act

Matt · 19 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

An original essay submitted by a reader:

The Fair Child Support Act

Due to the ongoing discrepancies in county/state child support laws taking place across the United States, and the inability to bring fairness to the parents (which, are often primarily fathers) ordered to pay support thru the system, there is a great need for several changes to be implemented. Agree or not, the often biased decisions taking place throughout this system continue to be a major factor in the breakdown of the father-mother-child(ren) relationship. Being someone who was a former teen mother myself at one point, I offer a view many females and the child support system fails to consider. Too often, courts almost always side with a mother when the issue of support arises regardless of mitigating factors due to the fact no one speaks up for fathers' rights.

One major area for addressing unfair practices in child support cases is the immediate need to impose changes to laws that make the death of a child whom support is being paid a reason to eliminate the ongoing order. Nothing in life is as final as death and no parent should be expected to continue to pay past or ongoing support to a mother (or custodial parent) for a child who is not even alive anymore to benefit from it. This practice accounts to nothing more than being one of the most cruel and unjust forms of punishment designed by county/state/federal governments throughout America today. It is tragic enough that the parent of a deceased child will have to endure a lifetime of grief over the loss of their child, but to be forced by law to continue to pay a support order for that child is immoral and beyond reproach.

Another issue involving child support that is in need of change is that a DNA test of both parents and the child should be MANDATORY in every case to rule out any doubt of parentage towards the child(ren). Once positive DNA results are confirmed there should be decisions set forth that would be equally-fair to BOTH parents. If it is determined (through DNA) the child is the alleged father's, the agreements should be that no one is over- burdened so much that they cannot live on their own paycheck (if they are employed). If the paying parent has another child(ren)/family, the situation upon the paying parent should not be made to feel compounded. Having a child is a 50/50 situation. In addition, if a child dies and the parent receiving/awarded support has the child cremated before a DNA test was ever conducted this should be immediate grounds to end a child support order and forfeit any arrears or ongoing support payments.

If a child has not, or is not, living with either of the parents and instead someone else (i.e., grandparent(s), uncle, aunt, older sibling or friend(s), and this guardian takes on the responsibility of allowing the child to live with them, then the biological parents have no right to challenge each other for child support because the biological parent(s) turned over their responsibility to others. Why should mothers who gave birth to a child(ren), yet practically pushed their responsibility off on their parent(s), other relative or friend be permitted to collect child support payments for a child they did not raise?

Lastly, a father who has attempted to bring closure to his child support situation and move forward with his life by offering to pay a one-time cash lump sum settlement to the mother(s) of his child(ren), but is dealing with a mother(s) who refuses to cooperate and accept it (in hopes of holding out for a greater amount) should be able to have the county/state child support system encourage or mandate her to accept it. Most fathers are not being informed by child support offices that they can seek for the mother(s) of their child to sign an "Agreed Entry and a Stipulated Order," which waives any/all arrears and future payments. This critical stipulation would help countless child support paying fathers to get their lives back on track instead of forcing them into a life of poverty; unnecessary job losses due to bad credit reports and opportunity-crushing letters/phone calls to their employers by child support offices; driver's license suspensions; questionable "debtors jail or prison terms;" convictions for nonsupport, and other unnecessary hindrances. Although I was blessed to be raised in a household that included a wonderful supportive father, as a young mother I was taught properly by my own mother and grandmother not to depend upon a man for anything. I understood the benefits in sacrificing in order to help provide for my daughter instead of pressing her father for child support. The relationship between a father-mother-child is priceless. No amount of expected money is worth jeopardizing that by causing decades of hardship to a child's first image of a man.

NPO: Lower Your Massachusetts Child Support Payments

Matt · 19 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You may seek a modification in your existing Massachusetts child support order if it is inconsistent with the new 2013 Guidelines. Presumably, this will apply to all or almost all existing child support orders given the overall reductions that have been made.

Consider seeking a modification if any of the following factors may impact your child support.

1. Support guidelines were reduced, resulting in an average 11% decrease for one-child families and a 6% decrease for two child families.

2. A new formula was established for calculating support where parenting time is higher than the norm.

3. The court must now consider “availability of employment at the attributed income level.”

4. Orders for education costs for adult dependent children are not presumptive.'

"Conscription, Is It Slavery?"

Matt · 20 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Came across this essay on conscription. Read the comments, good exchanges. (There are other essays on the site dealing with other topics that aren't MR-related; some may find them of interest, others not.) Excerpt:

'The one form of indentured servitude still legal for non-convicts in the United States is military service. When you join the military, you have fewer rights and freedoms left than did “indentured servants” in the Americas three centuries ago:

- You have masters whose orders you must follow without question.
- You are not allowed to “quit” until your contracted term ends (if then), unless your appeal to your masters and they agree, which is unlikely.
- They command labor from you, while you’re paid a token sum and given a minimal standard of food and shelter.
- You may well be doing it on the promise of training that can become a career once you are freed of the obligation.

So far, this describes an indentured servant in the Colonies in 1700, or a US soldier.

But unlike other indentured servants, as an American soldier you’re not allowed to sue your masters, not even after you leave.
...
But the difference between an indentured servant and a slave is simply that one chooses (if only through his actions) to be an indentured servant, and signs a contract agreeing to its conditions and to when it will end, as with volunteer soldiers, while a slave is taken by force and kept until his masters choose to release him.'

Groups launch new initiative for women’s equality

Mastodon · 20 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At a symposium here House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., influential Rep. Rosa DeLauro, D-Conn., top Obama White House advisor Valerie Jarrett, speakers from the Service Employees and other allies declared the start of a grass-roots national campaign to enact the "Fair Shot: A Plan For Women And Families To Get Ahead."

That campaign, said Center for American Progress executive director Neera Tamden, recognizes the only way to move issues through a gridlocked Congress is to shove lawmakers with mobilized popular support. The Center was the sponsor of the Sept. 18 rollout of Fair Shot.

Pelosi, the keynote speaker, had unveiled a Democratic women's economic agenda last month, with support of the Coalition of Labor Union Women, among others. Both that agenda and the new Fair Shot campaign go far beyond concentration on reproductive rights to embrace pay equity, good jobs and a just economy.
...
The resolution pledged unions to "continue the fight to raise the minimum wage and close the wage gap," along with greater job training and educational opportunities for women - especially in sectors, such as construction, which are traditionally male - and "to make wage and benefit standards more transparent."'

"How Circumcision Broke the Internet"

Mastodon · 20 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are facts about circumcision—but you won't find them easily on the Internet. Parents looking for straightforward evidence about benefits and risks are less likely to stumble across the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention than Intact America, which confronts viewers with a screaming, bloodied infant and demands that hospitals "stop experimenting on baby boys." Just a quick Google search away lies the Circumcision Complex, a website that speculates that circumcision leads to Oedipus and castration complexes, to say nothing of the practice's alleged brutal physiological harms. If you do locate the rare rational and informed circumcision article, you'll be assaulted by a vitriolic mob of commenters accusing the author of encouraging "genital mutilation."
...
Like most fringe groups, the anti-circumcision faction is almost comically bizarre, peddling fabricated facts, self-pity, and paranoia. The intactivists also obsess about sex to an alarming degree. Still, some of their tactics are shrewd. The first rule of anti-circumcision activism, for instance, is to never, ever say circumcision: The movement prefers propaganda-style terms like male genital cutting and genital mutilation, the latter meant to invoke the odious practice of female genital mutilation. (Intactivists like to claim the two are equivalent, an utter falsity that is demeaning to victims of FGM.)'

'Circumcising Your Son Is Nobody's Business But YOURS'

Mastodon · 20 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

These days dropping the word "circumcision" on the Internet is like yelling "fire" in a crowded theater. People. Go. NUTS.

The thing I don't understand? Why? Why are people so concerned about what other people have done with their son's foreskin?

I'll admit I do not have a son. I did not circumcise. Although I can't say whether I would have. The ironic thing is, although we did not know the gender of our baby-to-be, I never really thought about whether or not we'd snip his little manhood.'

Why is the gender wage gap stuck?

Mastodon · 20 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women in full-time, year-round jobs still make 77 cents for every dollar men make, said the U.S. Census Bureau this week — a zero percent change since 2002.

Full-time male workers brought in median annual earnings of $49,398 in 2012, compared with $37,791 for females. That's almost an $11,500 difference in yearly median wages.

So why has the gap remained unchanged (with the exception of one cent fluctuations in 2003 and 2007) for 11 years?

Discrimination plays a role, yes, but "analysts caution that the annual earnings comparison is a crude measure of a complex reality," says Brenda Cronin in The Wall Street Journal.'

FDA - "Considering Women's Needs in Developing Medical Devices: Here's 'HoW'"

Minuteman · 21 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Women differ from men in anatomy, physiology, risk factors and disease symptoms. They are also likely to use more medical devices over the course of their lives than men do.

That is why FDA is actively trying to learn more about how medical devices uniquely affect women, and how women can be better served by them.
...
One specific activity highlighted in the report was a workshop sponsored earlier this summer by the Center for Devices and Radiological Health (CDRH) to formally launch a new program designed to more closely look at medical device use and the health of women (HoW).
...
Nearly 200 representatives from industry, academia, health care, federal agencies, patient and advocacy groups, gathered to discuss the issues related to medical devices and health in women and to brainstorm about effective strategies to address clinical research needs in this population.

This work builds on a December 2011 draft guidance, also highlighted in this month's 907 report.'

Australia: Father's warnings unheeded in child's death case

Matt · 21 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Aftab Khan was giving evidence at the trial of Amanda Hutton, who denies manslaughter over the death of her son Hamzah Khan in December 2009.

The youngster's body was found by police nearly two years later.

During a day of harrowing testimony at Bradford Crown Court, jurors heard how police visited Hutton's house nine times before Hamzah's death.

They were also read a transcript of an interview Mr Khan gave to police after he was arrested for hitting Hutton in 2008.

He told officers his son was undernourished and neglected and threatened to contact social services, warning: "Believe me, I'm going to get in touch ... because it's gone so far now."

He also described how Hutton refused to let him take Hamzah to see a doctor, despite telling her "time and time again" he was not well.'

Men Sentenced To Longer Prison Terms Than Women For Same Crimes, Study Says

Matt · 21 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you're a convicted criminal, the best thing you can have going for you might be your gender.

A new study by Sonja Starr, an assistant law professor at the University of Michigan, found that men are given much higher sentences than women convicted of the same crimes in federal court.

The study found that men receive sentences that are 63 percent higher, on average, than their female counterparts.

Starr also found that females arrested for a crime are also significantly more likely to avoid charges and convictions entirely, and twice as likely to avoid incarceration if convicted.'

Dr. Sommers on MSNBC About Boys' Education

Matt · 21 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Excerpt:

'You notice that the host starts off with a kind of snide condescension as well as a parroting of Feminist ideology. They point of course to the wage gap, that men make up most of the CEOs, and so forth. That is code for the true believers among them for "let's join in and laugh." Now of course, men are the majority sex at the top of society – i.e., they have the best jobs, they are most of those in congress, the judiciary, and so forth – but that is not the whole picture.'

Canada: MR Edmonton members confront poster-snatchers

Matt · 21 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Good on them! I think they followed the poster-snatchers for just long enough to see that they would not engage in conversation, then broke off following them. Much longer would have been fruitless and make them look bad.

UK: Spending cuts hit women worse, says report

Mastodon · 21 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Economists are calling on the government to produce a "Plan F" to tackle the disproportionate burden being placed on women by spending cuts. Female-friendly tax and welfare policies are desperately needed to redress the balance, say experts from the independent Women's Budget Group (WBG), who have produced a report looking at the impact of austerity policies on different types of family groups in England.

It finds that women, particularly single parents and single pensioners, have lost much more than men from cuts to benefits and public services imposed by the government since it came to power in May 2010.'

Losing Men

Mastodon · 21 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Exccerpt:

'In 2010, more than 38,000 people killed themselves in the United States – and over 30,000 of them were men, Helen Smith, a forensic psychologist, points out in her book Men on Strike.

“How many of these men had decided to kill themselves because they could no longer see their children, had a broken relationship, or were involved in a bitter divorce?” she asks. “Ironically, even when you look at the suicide statistics, most concern seems to be about women who kill themselves. Apparently, our society cares so little about men that those who kill themselves are hardly news.”

It’s the problem of a culture that often treats men as if there is something inherently wrong with masculinity, with what makes them different from women — and looks to feminize them. Men who are less interested in marriage and responsibility are only being rational in that context, Smith argues. In the wake of the Navy Yard shootings on Monday, Smith talks about violent video games, and men in America, with National Review Online’s Kathryn Jean Lopez.'

Doctors say HPV vaccine important for men and women

Mastodon · 21 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It may be a vaccine patients passed up but could have gotten because it can prevent cancer. It's the Human Papillomavirus (HPV) vaccine. Illinois ranks almost last in girls who are getting the vaccine and doctors said that could be a mistake because it prevents certain types of cancers in both men and women.
...
Because HPV cancers are showing up in the mouth, throat and anal areas. Cancers that are in both men and women.

"We're picking up more of those cancers unfortunately because we're seeing a lot more of oral and anal intercourse," Campbell said.

"It's all about protection," Diericx said.

And it's also about prevention, getting vaccinated before someone is sexually active.'

From Aug. 2012:
The 8 Preventive Health Services that Women Start Getting Free Today

Excerpt:

'Starting today, about 47 million American women will have access to free preventive health services as part of a new provision in President Obama's Affordable Care Act. Comprehensive preventive care coverage will now be provided for insured women enrolling in new health care plans or renewing their existing policies on or after Aug. 1, 2012.
...

- HPV DNA testing: Women who are 30 or older will now have access to high-risk human papillomavirus (HPV) DNA testing every three years, regardless of Pap smear results. Early screening, detection and treatment have been shown to help reduce the prevalence of cervical cancer.'

Security checks: Why are military (looking) men and women exempt?

Mastodon · 21 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thirdly, women generally get through without any checks at all.

I fail to understand the attitude towards women in Pakistan. Either, they get acid thrown onto their faces, and their heads blown away, or they are treated as the 'mothers and sisters of the nation' – pushed to the front of every queue and allowed unchecked through security barriers.

Well, I have no wish to be either mother or sister to some of the characters around, and I take exception to the presumption that I, as a woman, am incapable of transporting/detonating a bomb. I am not an idiot, ET's profile photograph not withstanding.

Rich Man, Poor Woman?

Mastodon · 21 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Slate's feminist blog, "XX Factor," Amanda Hess delivers the news that "mothers are now the primary breadwinners in four out of ten American households." But she doesn't think that's good news, and not because in the other 6 out of 10 households women are still the bread losers. Rather, it's because the poverty rate is higher among women than among men--or, as Hess puts it, "the gender shift in these families hasn't necessarily translated to increased economic agency"--that's feminist jargon for power--"for women and children."

...

But all of the sex disparities Hess cites can be at least partly explained by female advantages--biological, cultural and legal--over men.

...

The answer to this mystery can be found in the Social Security Actuarial Life Table, which charts, by sex and at every age from 0 to 119, the probability of dying in the next year, the average remaining life expectancy, and the number (out of 100,000) who are still alive at that age ...

...

It is certainly true that the rise of the single-parent family has been bad for women. But that isn't because women are at a disadvantage to men; it's because single mothers are at a disadvantage to married ones. Marriage functions in large part as a means of inducing men to put their productive capacity in the service of women and children. Feminism and the sexual revolution have helped break down marriage by attenuating both the inducement for men to marry and the necessity for women to do so. We don't have an answer to this complicated and vexing problem, but we're quite sure it's not more feminism.'

'Hiccup Girl' found guilty of murder

Matt · 21 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) - A Florida woman whose nonstop hiccups vaulted her into the public spotlight, only to be ensnared later in a man's death, was found guilty Friday of first-degree murder.

Jennifer Mee, 22, wept after the verdict was read in a Florida court, sometimes holding her head in her hands. She sobbed some more as she was led out of the room for a jail cell.

Pinellas County Judge Nancy Moate Ley sentenced her to life in prison without parole and informed her she had 30 days to appeal.

Mee was 19 when she was arrested in October 2010. Police said she met Shannon Griffin on a social networking site, then lured him to a vacant home days later.
...
Mee led Griffin around to the back, where two men -- Laron Raiford and Lamont Newton -- were armed and waiting, authorities said. Griffin died after being shot multiple times with a .38-caliber revolver.

All three suspects were arrested hours after Griffin's body was found. And all three were charged with first-degree murder, even Mee, although police indicated she didn't pull the trigger. Mee, Raiford and Newton had all been living together, according to police.'

Counselor Lied to Cover Up Affair With Suspect: Police

Mastodon · 21 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'State police say a woman who does court-ordered counseling with central Pennsylvania domestic violence suspects falsely claimed one such client sexually assaulted her to cover up her affair with the man.

WJAC-TV says 50-year-old Cindy Brumbaugh [link added], of Howard, has been charged with filing a false police report. Troopers in Bellefonte say the woman claimed she was assaulted by a Centre County court client after her husband found out she was in a car crash with the client last month. In reality, police say the woman was covering her tracks because she had spent the night in a motel with the client.'

Father Shot By Police After Nasty Custody Battle: “I Can’t Take What My Son’s Mother Is Putting Me Through”

Matt · 22 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A North Carolina father gave up on life after a nasty custody battle with his son’s mother, according to friends. Derek Walker, 26, was shot and killed by police during a standoff after he lost custody of his kids.

Durham police were called to Walker’s home on Monday after reports of a distraught man brandishing a gun, according to local affiliate WNCN. Police attempted to negotiate with the man for about an hour before he turned his gun on police, causing them to fire at him.

According to police, Walker was suicidal and crying at times during his conversations with police.
...
“He was a father who had been dealing with a nasty custody battle within the court system,” friend Truitt O’Neal said. “He was extremely and emotionally drained.”'

"spokes"

Matt · 22 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. No spoken words in the script; none required. The message can't be lost on anyone no matter where in the world they live-- if they know what happens here in the west in our infamous "famy court" system, that is.

Ted Turner returns for further anti-male gaffing

Matt · 23 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Latest Ted Turner guffaw (and a repeat!) here. He can take some comfort knowing Biden is much worse, but with a history of generating this much babbling foolishness, one must take comfort where he can find it. :) Excerpt:

'Media mogul Ted Turner reiterated an absolutely absurd idea Sunday.

Appearing at the International Women's Earth and Climate Summit in New York City, Turner proposed “men be barred from political office. They could do everything else, be president of universities, business leaders, but they just couldn’t serve in any elected position for 100 years” (video follows with transcript and commentary):
...
TED TURNER: Well, I came up with the idea at least 20 years ago that we needed more women in politics. It would take a different turn. And I suggested that men be barred from political office. They could do everything else, be president of universities, business leaders, but they just couldn’t serve in any elected position for 100 years. [Laughter and applause]
...
I guess Turner was unaware that the House of Representatives led by Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) didn’t pass a budget for the fiscal years of 2010 or 2011.

Last I checked she is a woman.

For the record, this is not the first time Turner has made such a comment in public. He did so in 2003 and again in 2006.

At least he's consistently foolish.'

Teacher claims bawdy texts to 12-year-old boy were ‘sexual therapy,’ jury balks

Mastodon · 23 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thanks to legendary grade-school teacher Mary Kay ~~Letourneau~~ Fualaau, Washington state will have an eternal place of prominence in the pantheon of teacher-student sex romps. However, Florida is probably ground zero for this persistent national epidemic.

The latest Floridian to get busted and convicted for molesting a student is Ethel Anderson, a former teacher at Mango Elementary school in the suburban haven of Seffner, Fla.—about 15 miles from Tampa.

On Wednesday, a jury found Anderson guilty of nine sex-crime charges for molesting a student who was 12 years old at the time.
...
“Ethel said she was planning on leaving her husband because he wasn’t a good dad and he didn’t communicate,” he explained.'

Going too far to define nonconsensual sex

Mastodon · 24 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

In the spring, an Obama administration initiative directing colleges and universities to toughen their policies on student sexual misconduct raised concerns among civil libertarians about unreasonably intrusive regulations. Now, reports from one of the nation's top universities confirm that these concerns were justified.

Yale, which promised a crackdown on campus sexual offenses under pressure from a federal civil rights investigation in 2011, is now policing "non-consensual sex" defined in a way that trivializes sexual violence, infantilizes women and men, and intrudes into private lives.
...
By these standards, many of us -- male or female, straight or gay -- have been both perpetrators and victims of "nonconsensual sex" more than once. The truth is that many people, both women and men, are put off by spontaneity-destroying checks for agreement. Many people have sex when they feel ambivalent. As long as there is no coercion and everyone is free to say no or to stop, these messy issues are for adults (even young adults) to work out between each other without intervention by the authorities. What happened to keeping the government -- or government-guided university administrators -- out of the bedroom?'

Yes, Patriarchy Is Dead; the Feminists Prove It

Mastodon · 24 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gender-based biases are not a one-way street. If women are still stigmatized more for sleeping around, men are stigmatized more for not having enough sex -- even by some feminists whose choice insult for sexist men is to imply sexual deprivation. Women may experience more disapproval for delegating child care; men, for failing to be providers. We can endlessly debate whether these norms are rooted in nature or culture and whether they are valuable or harmful (or some mix of both). The fact remains that such double standards are not only perpetuated by men and women alike but, in this day and age, at least as likely to be favorable to women as to men.

It's really not that hard to find instances in which men are judged more harshly than women. Last May, after Arizona woman Jodi Arias was convicted in the brutal murder of her ex-boyfriend, jurors deadlocked on the death sentence because some saw mitigation in her alleged mental and verbal abuse by her victim -- despite evidence that Arias was a habitual stalker. Around the same time, when novelist James Lasdun published a book about his nightmarish experience of being cyber-stalked by a former creative writing student whose romantic overtures he had rejected, a review in The New Yorker chided him for failing to admit his attraction to the woman and his role in leading her on. Reverse the genders in either case, and there would be howls of outrage about "victim-blaming." (Both incidents are also reminders that women aren't the only victims of abuse and violence from the opposite sex.)'

Mayoral candidate denies claim about circumcision stance

Mastodon · 24 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although he stood next to speakers claiming the opposite, Bill de Blasio [link added] insists his position has not changed on the city's controversial regulation of a ritual circumcision practice.

At a gigantic get-out-the vote rally in Williamsburg's Hasidic community last night, where leaders vowed to deliver 10,000 votes for his front-running mayoral campaign, two community leaders declared that Mr. de Blasio was set to eliminate the consent forms required for metzitzah b'peh, a practice involving a mohel sucking blood from the wound, which the city's health department says can spread disease.

According to video of the event posted Sunday night, one leader said Mr. de Blasio was "the first one in politics to come to our defense on the issue of metzitzah b'peh. And he's the only candidate that recommitted himself now to guarantee that we as Orthodox Jews can practice [it] without compromise."'

City Council Bill Would Prevent Regulation Of Circumcision

Mastodon · 24 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Citing freedom of religion, Councilman David Greenfield has introduced legislation prohibiting the Department of Health and Mental Hygiene and the Board of Health from taking any formal action against the controversial practice of metzitzah b'peh.

The legislation, introduced at the Sept. 12 City Council meeting, has since been referred to the Health Committee for hearings. It addresses the Board of Health's requirement last year that mohelim obtain written consent from parents before performing the oral suction practice, which has been linked to dangerous infection.

"This is one of the most outrageous examples of government intruding into the ability of residents to freely practice their religion without restrictions based on questionable findings," said Greenfield, a Democrat, in his remarks, which were forwarded to the press.'

"Women Vets May Need More Access to Breast Cancer Services"

Minuteman · 24 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Women are the fastest-growing segment of the U.S. veteran population, making breast cancer screening a crucial public health issue for the Veterans Health Administration (VHA).

As the agency has worked to expand mammogram screening, the need for other diagnostic tests and treatments has also grown, and a new study that looked at how well women's follow-up needs have been met suggests that more resources are likely required.

From 2003 to 2009, the use of VHA outpatient care nationwide by women grew by 47 percent, and demand is expected to increase even more as thousands of women veterans return from Iraq and Afghanistan.
...
The program expansion is a step in the right direction, said Dr. Julie Gralow, a professor of medical oncology at the University of Washington School of Medicine and director of breast medical oncology at the Seattle Cancer Care Alliance.
...
"The message for military women, and all women, is that we need to advocate for ourselves regarding our health," she said. A diagnosis of breast cancer, she said, is rarely an emergency needing immediate treatment.'

NOW assails White House “sexism” on treatment of Yellen

Mastodon · 24 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a Tuesday interview with Salon, National Organization of Women President Terri O’Neill blasted the White House’s approach to choosing a replacement for Federal Reserve Chair Ben Bernanke. “The signals I’m seeing from the White House is that his advisors – and he tends to agree with them – that they are still looking for someone other than Janet Yellen,” O’Neill told Salon. “And to me that’s just pure sexist.” NOW endorsed Obama for president last July.

“I mean, there’s only two differences between Janet Yellen and all those men,” said O’Neill. “Number one, she’s more qualified than all of them are. And number two, she’s a woman. And so looking for somebody other than Janet Yellen, I don’t know how you classify that as anything but sexist.”
...
While “there is no question that Barack Obama is a friend to women in the policies that he supports,” O’Neill said that “when even he has trouble picking the best qualified person who happens to be a woman, I think that is a startling reminder that even our friends who are men are so used to being in control that so far putting a woman in that position just doesn’t compute for them.” She said the episode reinforced the need to elect more female politicians, including a female president.'

Kidnapped boy reunited with dad 13 years after abduction

Mastodon · 24 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Missouri sheriff's detectives busted a grandma accused of kidnapping her grandson 13 years ago.

Sandy Hatte, 60, snatched the baby boy in Florida while his father was at work, authorities said.

That was in 2000 and detectives say Hatte has been on the run ever since.

...

Relatives had hired a private investigator to track the wiley grandmother, but she stayed a step ahead until the school official thought something seemed odd.

Detective Eric Menconi said the father and son seemed to get along well, despite being separated for almost all of the boy's life.

"It was a good reunion," Menconi said. "You could tell within the first three minutes they hit it off pretty well. Since then I've been on the phone with the dad and from what I'm understanding it's going very well. He's adjusting."

Hatte remains in the Livingston County Jail on a charge of child abduction. Her bail is $250,000.'

State senator seeks termination of rapists' parental rights (convicted or not)

Mastodon · 24 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'INDIANAPOLIS | A Hoosier woman giving birth following a rape could face a lifetime of further attacks in court if the rapist-father tries to assert parental rights because of the way Indiana law is structured.

Indiana is among 31 states lacking specific laws barring rapists from claiming child custody and visitation options available to fathers.
...
Charbonneau said most rapes are not reported to police, and if a victim gives birth to the child, she shouldn't have to spend the next 21 years "looking over her shoulder wondering if the rapist is going to claim his rights."

Under his 2012 plan, such a victim would have to show a judge by clear and convincing evidence that the child was conceived by rape for the judge to terminate the parental rights of the rapist.

That's a lower standard than "beyond a reasonable doubt" required for a criminal conviction, but Charbonneau believes it would speed the termination process and save women from potential ongoing legal harassment by the men who raped them.'

Video: Boys Suspended [for entire year] for Playing with Toy Guns at Home

Mastodon · 24 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Summary:

'A school In Virginia Beach is attempting to extend its policies into student's homes. Two 7th graders were suspended for playing with toy guns on their own property. A school committee voted to suspend one of the students, Khalid Caraballo, for an entire year.'

'Feminist: War on Women' Is a Sham

Mastodon · 24 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is no "war on women" as the Democratic Party has argued, said liberal columnist Kirsten Powers, in a debate about "Mad Women" and "the battle of the sexes." While the other liberal panelist disagreed, the conservatives argued that there is an under-reported "war on men."

"I will concede there is no war on women as presented by the Democratic Party," Powers, a columnist for the Daily Beast and a contributor for Fox News, admitted, at a Washington, D.C. event hosted by the Independent Women's Forum and National Review. Groups like Planned Parenthood are "abortion rights groups, not women's groups," she said.'

...
About Kirsten Powers here.

Support Rallies to "Men's Centre" Lecture After University Mandates Students Pay High Security Fee

Mastodon · 25 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'The Canadian Association for Equality (CAFE) received overwhelming financial support after their affiliate group, the University of Toronto Men's Issues Awareness Society, was mandated by the University of Toronto administration to pay $964 for campus police or have their Friday event cancelled. At previous events rioters committed illegal acts including pulling fire alarms and blocking exit doors.

"The Miles Groth 'Men's Centre' lecture will proceed, thanks to support from the men and women who donated," said Malcolm Johnston, CAFE Spokesperson. "Rewarding law-breaking rioters by cancelling events will only lead to increased censorship and make U of T a more dangerous place."'

Half of Canadian universities fail at free speech: report

Mastodon · 25 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Universities are supposed to be safe places to debate controversial ideas but school administrators and students leaders would sometimes prefer instead to enforce their own points of view, even if it means silencing others.
...
One can bet where the Calgary-based Justice Centre for Constitutional Freedoms would stand. They want controversial speech protected. According to their 2013 Campus Freedom Index, released Tuesday, 23 of the 45 universities graded this year have failed to stop censorship. Each administration and student union was assigned two A to F letter grades, one based on policies and the other on practices. Their conclusion: “Our country’s institutions of higher education have failed in their promise to uphold the sanctity of free speech in its most cherished and necessary form: the discussion of controversial ideas, frank and spirited debate, and the pursuit of truth.”

Make what you will of that conclusion, the index offers a good summary of the tension on campus.
...
A newcomer to the free speech debate is “men’s issues” after the University of Toronto Students’ Union and the Ryerson Students’ Union both outlawed men’s issues awareness clubs this year. The UTSU claimed such groups “harass women.” The RSU called one a “hate group.” The University of Toronto’s administration, however, was the only one to receive an “A” for its policies, which helped maintain relative calm when a men’s issues group hosted an anti-feminist lecture.'

Tennessee: Obamacare will triple men's premiums, double women's

Mastodon · 25 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The White House on Wednesday released a report on the costs of Obamacare for most Americans, heralding its interpretation that 95 percent of the nation will be able to buy health insurance premiums below “earlier projections.”

But note the words “earlier projections.” That doesn’t mean that the insurance Americans will have to buy, or be fined, under Obamacare will be cheaper than what they pay today, before Obamacare kicks in.

We know this because at the same time the White House was releasing its broad study, Tennessee Sen. Lamar Alexander released his analysis of the report's portion on his state. He found that Obamacare will cost far more than what many of his constituents are paying today, some by as much as 190 percent.

From his release:

— Today, a 27-year-old man in Memphis can buy a plan for as low as $41 a month. On the exchange, the lowest state average is $119 a month — a 190 percent increase.

— Today, a 27-year-old woman in Nashville can also buy a plan for as low as $58 a month. On the exchange, the lowest-priced plan in Nashville is $114 a month — a 97 percent increase. Even with a tax subsidy, that plan is $104 a month, almost twice what she could pay today.'

Related: Double Down: Obamacare Will Increase Avg. Individual-Market Insurance Premiums By 99% For Men, 62% For Women

Clinton Global Initiative Panel: We Don't Need Any More Male Leaders

Mastodon · 25 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That appeared to be the theme of former President Bill Clinton's opening discussion for the Clinton Global Initiative's 2013 Annual Meeting. The 42nd president of the United States moderated a discussion in which participants took several opportunities to bash widespread male authority and drop not-so-subtle hints that his wife should run for the White House in 2016.

Facebook's Chief Operating Officer Sheryl Sandberg was the first to lament the way in which males tend to dominate culture, while commending Hillary Clinton's effort to curb it.
...
Considering Sandberg's own success, I'm surprised she is so quick to criticize our country's "male dominated" culture and suggest that women have an insurmountable climb when trying to rise through the ranks. ...
...
The real discrimination against women perhaps occurred when President Clinton suggested the only times women have been able to rise to power is in the midst of crises.
...
Clinton mentioned the purges in China also led to gender change in certain occupation groups. So, according to his wisdom, the "opportunities" women need are disasters. As a young woman, I reject the notion that my gender can only rise to power when a natural disaster strikes or a war breaks out. How is this kind of discussion empowering?

Instead of challenging what the female panelists were saying about their sex, the male panelists Mo Ibrahim of the Mo Ibrahim Foundatin, and U2's Bono nodded right along. Kharami even added,

"It's a universal problem, it's not just us. Even here, this country is still waiting for its first female president."

Lagarde had the last word.

"70-80 percent of consumption is effectively decided by women. Women can actually change the world."

I guess our Founding Fathers were just symbols of power-hungry patriarchy.'

Cepeda: Learning environments are tough on boys these days

Mastodon · 25 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's been a windfall week for boys, those too-oft overlooked stakeholders in American education.

First I found "Boys Have Deep Emotional Lives," an article in The Atlantic about "mean girls" expert Rosalind Wiseman's latest book, "Masterminds and Wingmen: Helping Our Boys Cope with Schoolyard Power, Locker-Room Tests, Girlfriends, and the New Rules of Boy World."

...

For the mom of two very young men — ages 12 and 14-but-thinks-he's-going-on-21 — this was a jackpot on a topic I agonize over every day: What will become of my boys? And one that seems to usually be far off anyone's radar because, as the cliché goes, it's already a man's world so what's there to worry about?

Believe me, there's plenty to fret over. Though numerous male writers have tackled this subject, maybe with women increasingly speaking out about the difficulties that young men face it can start being a serious topic of discussion.

...

Plus, so many boys just hate school. Mine certainly do, and so do their peers -- and I sort of don't blame them. If I had to toil for my grades in the communicate-your-feelings-in-therapy-speak environment of today's "everybody's special" K-8 zeitgeist, I wouldn't like school either.'

University receives grant to increase numbers of women in math and science

Mastodon · 25 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'UVU* has been selected to receive a grant to increase female performance and participation in STEM (Science, Technology, Engineering, Math) fields as part of a statewide initiative.

Susan Thackeray, director of Career and Technical Education, is a Utah leader in promoting gender equality in STEM. Her determination led to the reception of the grant.

The grant includes a 3-year funded research project to analyze why women at UVU are not as involved in STEM as men.
...
Last year 392 men pursued degrees in a STEM, compared to 305 women. More than 230 of those women were accounted for in a health related program.

Students and faculty are urged to support women who are interested in studying STEM subjects in all phases of life.'

---
*Utah Valley University

Many doctors performing circumcisions are poorly trained for procedure: report

Mastodon · 25 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The mere mention of the word circumcision is enough to make some men cringe, and a new study suggests they might have more reason to flinch than they thought.

Many of the doctors who perform the procedure are generalists and poorly trained for the task, possibly explaining the steady stream of complications seen in emergency wards, some with life-long consequences, conclude researchers in Hamilton, Ont.

Given that there is relatively little medical reason to perform circumcisions, it is important at least that physicians know what they are doing to prevent slip-ups, the Hamilton physicians' newly published study says.'

OWH conference: "President's Working Group Recommendations on the Intersection of HIV/AIDS, Violence against Women/Girls and Gender-Related Health Disparities"

Minuteman · 26 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From a mailing list email:

'Putting Women and Girls First: President's Working Group Recommendations on the Intersection of HIV/AIDS, Violence against Women/Girls and Gender-Related Health Disparities

Thursday, October 10, 2013
1 p.m. – 3 p.m. ET
Hubert H. Humphrey Building, Great Hall
200 Independence Ave. SW
Washington, DC 20201

In observance of Domestic Violence Awareness Month, please join us for a panel discussion to highlight the release of the President's Working Group Report on the Intersection of HIV/AIDS, Violence Against Women and Girls, and Gender-related Health Disparities.

Featured speakers include:

1. Ms. Lynn Rosenthal, White House Advisor on Violence Against Women
2. Dr. Grant Colfax, Director of the Office on National AIDS Policy
3. Dr. Gina Brown, Office of AIDS Research, National Institutes of Health

Exhibits will be open at 12:30 p.m. for your review.

To register, send the information below to babette.couser@hhs.gov by close-of-business on Tuesday, October 1, 2013.
(all fields required)

1. First Name
2. Last Name
3. Organizational Affiliation
4. Phone Number
5. Email Address

NPO: Father Awarded $40.25 million Judgment Against Former Wife

Matt · 26 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In August of 2013, the U.S. District Court for the District of Massachusetts awarded Massachusetts father Colin Bower $40,250,000 on his claims against his former wife, Mirvat El-Nady. Ms. El-Nady fled to Cairo, Egypt, in August of 2009, taking their children with her without his consent and in violation of a Massachusetts court order granting sole custody to Bower. The case underscores that courts recognize — and punish — parental actions aimed at depriving children of meaningful bonds with both of their parents.

Considering the amount to award the father in damages, the court stated that “While Bower’s economic damages are a matter of simple calculation, his and his children’s hedonic damages are not. The court is in the impossible position of having to place a dollar value on something that is intangible and invaluable — “the wrongful taking of children from parents with custodial rights, an experience which evokes deep-seated, time-honored, and broad societal concerns regarding the health and development of both the children and the parents wrongfully deprived of the right to share in and guide the passage of their offspring from childhood to adulthood with all of the joy and pleasure that journey usually affords a custodial parent.” ...'

SAVE: In Wake of New Orleans Prosecutor Scandal, CPI Calls for Strong Oversight Measures

Matt · 26 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / September 25, 2013 – Following last week's revelations of "grotesque prosecutorial misconduct" in a New Orleans police shooting case, the Center for Prosecutor Integrity (CPI) is releasing a new report that calls for strong oversight measures designed to assure ethical prosecutor conduct and stop wrongful convictions.

The report, Roadmap for Prosecutor Reform, lays out 20 reforms designed to enhance the accountability of local, state, and federal prosecutors. The reforms are intended to correct prosecutor abuses in such areas as over-charging of suspects, concealing evidence, and coercing witnesses.

The report is intended for lawmakers, legal oversight boards, and other stakeholders in the criminal justice system. Roadmap for Prosecutor Reform is available here: http://www.prosecutorintegrity.org/wp-content/uploads/RoadmapProsecutorReform.pdf'

IA: Protest in Cincinnatti planned over experimentation on infant boys

Matt · 26 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Next week, I will be in Cincinnati to stand outside Good Samaritan Hospital and demand that its researchers stop its circumcision clamp study.

We have to make it clear that this heinous experiment on innocent babies will NOT go unheeded, and it will NOT go unchallenged!

Here's what we have planned for October 3:

- SIDEWALK PROTEST: People from around the country will be traveling to Cincinnati to march peacefully with us outside the hospital, demanding that this study be shut down.
- MOBILE BILLBOARD: We need to reach as many Cincinnati-area residents as possible with the harsh reality of what's happening right in their backyard, and the most effective way to do that is with a mobile billboard.
- PRESS CONFERENCE: I will be speaking, along with other prominent intactivists, at a national press conference outside the hospital.

This hospital needs to know that conducting pain and bleeding experiments on babies is cruel, unscientific, and WRONG.

Please make a tax-deductible donation today, so together we can put a stop to this madness.

Thank you so much,

Georganne Chapin
Executive Director, Intact America
www.intactamerica.org/

8 Reasons Straight Men Don't Want To Get Married

Matt · 26 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This article is from June, but worth posting, as the information in it is still current. Excerpt:

'In the course of researching my new book, Men On Strike: Why Men Are Boycotting Marriage, Fatherhood, and the American Dream - And Why It Matters, I talked with men all over America about why they're avoiding marriage. It turns out that the problem isn't that men are immature, or lazy. Instead, they're responding rationally to the incentives in today's society.
...
[Ed.: Following is the basic list without author's further comments]
1. You'll lose respect.
2. You'll lose out on sex.
3. You'll lose friends.
4. You'll lose space.
5. You could lose your kids, and your money. And they may not even be your kids.
6. You'll lose in court.
7. You'll lose your freedom.
8. Single life is better than ever.'

Book: "Divorced fathers and their families: Legal, economic, and emotional dilemmas"

Matt · 26 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Review here. Excerpt:

'Divorced Fathers and Their Families presents a needed corrective to a long-neglected topic without trivializing the problems and needs of divorced mothers and children or downplaying the realities of divorce. In much of the book, divorced men's narratives reveal their roles in their children's lives, the emotional turmoil when those roles are disrupted, and their frustrations when the legal system assumes the worst about them. ...'

Amazon.com page here.

D.I.V.O.R.C.E. spells disaster for too many dads going through the big break-up

Matt · 26 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ever conscious to keep my column even-handed, this week I want to speak out on behalf of men, and this week's topic is inspired by a dear male friend of mine currently going through a divorce, coping with the typical issues of having to pay maintenance to a soon-to-be-ex-wife, as well as child support payments.

Lots of men are in the same boat. His story is just one of many, but actually hearing it from a man's side, did get me thinking.

Over the years, we as women have fought hard to be equal to men, yet so many ex-wives are still sponging off previous husbands, their excuse being they want to maintain the same standard of life they had when married.

Well if it was that good why not just stay married then?

Meanwhile the poor men responsible for paying for their ex-wives' continued standard of living are often left struggling to make their own ends meet, and they are certainly not being afforded the same lifestyle they were used to while married.'

2013 SAT report released-- brace yourselves

bronxman · 26 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The aggregate SAT scores report for 2013 has been released.

Boys outperform girls in math.
Girls outperform boys in reading.

Brace youselves for the pending flood of articles on how this news (girls doing poorly in math) is a disaster and how we must find ways to make the boys do worse -- oops! sorry, I mean -- help the girls do better.

Naturally no one will give a rat's ass about the problem boys have in reading. We only care about the girls.

SAVE E-lert: Roadmap for Prosecutor Reform

Matt · 26 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The Center for Prosecutor Integrity (CPI) is releasing a new report that calls for strong oversight measures designed to assure ethical prosecutor conduct and stop wrongful convictions.: Roadmap for Prosecutor Reform.

Lawmakers, legal oversight boards, and other stakeholders should take note of this important report, which includes 20 reforms designed to enhance the accountability of local, state, and federal prosecutors.

Roadmap for Prosecutor Reform is available here:
http://www.prosecutorintegrity.org/wp-content/uploads/RoadmapProsecutorReform.pdf

An Epidemic of Prosecutor Misconduct, is available here:
http://www.prosecutorintegrity.org/wp-content/uploads/EpidemicofProsecutorMisconduct.pdf

Visit the Center for Prosecutor Integrity for more information on criminal justice reform.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

"Move over, abortion — men’s issues are the new taboo topics on campus"

Mastodon · 26 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But new to the Campus Freedom Index this year, however, is the topic of men’s issues awareness — a subject that wets the felt-tip markers of the perpetually outraged upon mere mention. The movement is a relatively recent phenomenon on Canadian campuses, where men’s rights speakers and groups are usually met with protests, attempts at censorship and placards about how “Men’s Rights is Misogyny.” In other words: pure failure fodder for the Campus Freedom Index.

The examples are well chronicled. At the University of Toronto, last November, protesters tried to shut down a speech by Warren Farrell, author of The Myth of Male Power and other books on men’s and women’s issues. Farrell was able to deliver his address despite the rally, though campus security and Toronto Police were called to the scene. The University of Toronto Student Union later issued a release expressing its disdain for “hate speech,” and denied club certification to the “Men’s Issues Awareness Society” the following month for its alleged violation of the Ontario Human Rights Code.'

Men’s rights speaker claims anti-date-rape talks discourage men from higher education

Mastodon · 26 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The next speaker in an ongoing lecture series on men’s issues will be talking about why some young men are disengaged with college and university—something he blames, in part, on the anti-date-rape talks given to freshmen.

...

“Some of the content of these seminars, which are now very common in colleges and universities, set these boys coming in, set them up as being potentially dangerous, and potentially harmful, particularly to women on campus,” he said.

“There are, for example, date-rape seminars that are de rigueur for nearly all first-year student programs.”

Groth questioned whether the date-rape talks are “overkill” and “whether in fact it might not be wiser to talk about this in a broader way, let’s say for example, courtesy between boys and girls on campus, regardless of who’s behaving, males or females.”

A second reason for young men feeling unwelcome is that some courses appear to better reflect young women’s university lives, he said.'

State senators host lunch forum on women's health in the workplace

Mastodon · 26 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A discussion on women's health in the workplace, with a focus on the challenges of rheumatoid arthritis, will be held at noon today at the state Capitol.

State Sens. Sandy Pappas and Kathy Sheran will lead the event, "Women's Health in the Workplace: Chronic Disease & Aging," from noon to 1 p.m. in Room 118 at the Capitol.

The discussion will look at the impact of arthritis on work and social life, family relationships and other aspects of daily life.'

---
http://www.cdc.gov/arthritis/data_statistics/arthritis_related_stats.htm#3:

'25.9% of women and 18.3% men report doctor-diagnosed arthritis.'

http://www.bls.gov/news.release/pdf/cfoi.pdf, p. 11:

	Fatal Injuries
Gender	Number	Percent
Men	4,045	92
Women	338	8

Will men's centres be coming to Canadian universities?

Mastodon · 27 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

harticle here. Excerpt:

'An American professor specializing in studying the psychology of boys and men, masculinity and manhood is making the case for creating men's centres on campus.

Miles Groth is an advisory fellow for the Canadian Association for Equality (CAFE), which is working to raise funds to create the Canadian Centre for Men and Families.

Miles Groth is an advisory fellow for the Canadian Association for Equality (CAFE), which is working to raise funds to create the Canadian Centre for Men and Families.

Advocates on both sides of the border are seeking to fill what they view as a void at schools and within communities -- programs dedicated to studying, serving and supporting male interests and needs.

"Essentially, we feel there's no space for men specifically to discuss their issues from a men's point of view; so we're hoping to get something started that will hopefully be a catalyst for maybe some more male-oriented programs running," said CAFE spokesman Adam McPhee, who also serves as food programs liaison for the Toronto People With AIDS Foundation.'

Mandatory Title IX training delays lodge openings

Mastodon · 27 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Five fraternity lodges opened last Friday night, a later opening date than in previous years. The reason for the late opening date is 90 percent of each fraternity had to attend Title IX training for them to have guests at their lodges.
...
The fraternities will be enforcing stricter registration at their lodges this year to keep track of all the guests, said Will Cook, president of KA. The Title IX training is “meant to make sure the guests and brothers are safe and avoid any misunderstandings about sexual intent, hazing, bullying, etc.” Cook said.
...
“All in all, I think that the message that Title IX training conveys should not be targeted to one group of men for the sole reason of affiliation,” Southall said. “If the safety of our Westhampton College classmates is the priority, then training should be available for all men.”'

Woman accused of stabbing herself and her child, then blaming man

mens_issues · 27 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. This is an incident that occurred on a greenbelt trail in the Denver suburb of Wheat Ridge about a month ago. It was reported as a man stabbing a woman and her toddler child, and there was a manhunt for the man. I almost didn't see this follow up to this story in which it turned out that the woman allegedly stabbed herself and her child and blamed the man. This was during the major flooding in Colorado that week, so this new story slipped under my radar until now. Excerpt:

'The investigation into last month's Wheat Ridge Greenbelt-area double-stabbing took a bizarre twist last week after police arrested the woman who was once thought to be a victim in the case – no accused of trying to pin the attack of her and her child on a man who she claims raped her years ago.

Stephany Harwood, 21, of Lakewood was arrested last week, and was being held at the Jefferson County jail on a felony charge of child abuse resulting in serious bodily injury. She was given a $100,000 bond.

Police believe that Harwood was the one who stabbed herself and her toddler son on a walking trail on Aug. 22. Harwood then allegedly concocted a story to try to place the blame on Marvin Gean Wilson – a man with a lengthy criminal history and whom Harwood claims she has known since she was a girl.'

Today in Washington: Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand unveils plan to help women in the workplace

Mastodon · 27 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Washington -- U.S. Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand today plans to make what she calls a major policy speech in which she will unveil a five-point package aimed at helping middle-class women in the workplace.

Gillibrand, D-N.Y., will outline her plan for the economic security of women beginning at 10:30 a.m. at the Center for American Progress, a progressive think tank based in Washington, D.C., with strong ties to the White House. New York's junior senator has been outspoken in the past about equal pay for women.

The Center for American Progress issued a report this week titled, "The State of Women in America." The report noted that despite advances in the workplace, women are paid 77 cents for every dollar a man is paid.'

Bloomberg agency combats domestic violence with warning ads for women in subways, bus system

Mastodon · 27 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A city agency created by Mayor Bloomberg to combat domestic violence plans to paper subways and the bus system with dire warnings to women who may not realize they're being abused.

"Broken, threatened, put-down, scared," the stark ads ask against the backdrop of a woman crying. "If you feel any of these in your relationship, that's abuse."

The ads from the Mayor's Office to Combat Domestic Violence, which will start appearing in subways and on bus shelters Thursday, are part of a campaign called "That's Abuse" that aims to encourage women in abusive relationships to seek help before the situation becomes violent.'

Michael Le Vell's acquittal is no reason to give rape defendants anonymity

Mastodon · 27 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every time a celebrity is acquitted of rape allegations, a pernicious media campaign clamours for anonymity for defendants to stop women and children from wrecking vulnerable men's lives. Most recently, we saw this after the Michael Le Vell trial.

Women Against Rape (WAR) and Lisa Avalos began to work on collaborative research in 2012 to compare how women accused of lying are treated in the US and the UK. Despite different legal systems, the findings shine a light on the UK, with poor investigations being found to be the central obstacle to justice.

In both countries, false reports are extremely rare. The chief crown prosecutor for London, Alison Saunders, says that "studies have indicated that only 2% of all reported rapes are false, which is slightly less than false reporting in all other crimes". Their incidence is dwarfed by the prevalence of unpunished sexual violence. The International Association of Chiefs of Police (IACP) in the US claims that only 3% of all rapists serve prison terms for their crimes.

...

But the prosecution of women for alleged false reports strengthens the myth that women frequently lie about being raped and discourages victims from coming forward. It diverts law enforcement away from thoroughly investigating rape and lets rapists loose on the public. It is not in the public interest, and must be stopped.'

Supermodel defends herself against violent feminists

Mastodon · 28 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When two half-naked female protesters from the radical anarchist organization "Femen" disrupted Paris Fashion Week on Thursday by invading the catwalk with slogans painted on their bare chests, an 18-year old supermodel punched one of them squarely in the nose.

Hollie-May Saker, an 18-year old supermodel whom many say may be the next Kate Moss, saw the screaming protesters just as she was about to go on stage.

According to the Daily Mail, a woman from the "radical feminist group" grabbed Saker's arm and tried to lift up her skirt, at which point the model punched her on the nose. She then "continued her run" on the catwalk "as if nothing had happened."'

Woman accused of trying to hire hit man to kill son's father, report says

Matt · 29 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police say they arrested a College Station woman Wednesday after she paid someone she thought was a hit man to kill the father of her 7-year-old son, according to CBS affiliate KBTX.

Nicolette Beard, 33, allegedly agreed to pay an undercover officer $4,000 to kill 30-year-old Anthony Drymalla III.

KBTX reports College Station police got a tip about the case when one of Beard's friends told them about the woman's plan.

The motive behind the murder-for-hire plot was a custody battle between the parents, according to police.'

"Circumcision breaches human rights of the child"

Matt · 29 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"To circumcise a child without medical reasons and without the child's consent, runs contrary... to the child's human rights and the fundamental principles of medical ethics," they write in a debate article in the Dagens Nyheter daily on Saturday.

The ombudsman Fredrik Malmberg, together with representatives from the Swedish Society of Medicine (SLS), the Swedish Society of Health Professionals (Vårdförbundet), the Swedish Paediatric Society (BLF) and the Swedish Association of Pediatric Surgeons (SLF), argues that Swedish law requires that the child's will be taken into account wherever possible.

Circumcision is a procedure which is typically carried out at a very young age and it is this issue of consent which is paramount, they argue.

"We consider circumcision of boys without the child's consent to be in contravention of article 12 of UN Convention on the Rights of the Child (CRC) which gives children the right to have an opinion in matters which concern them."'

Daughter kills mother and brother, dad kills daughter

Matt · 30 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Good grief. Excerpt:

'Though the investigation of Friday's shootings continues, authorities said it appears Josephine and Jeffrey Ruckinger planned to murder her family at their rural central Pennsylvania home — but it remains unclear what exactly led to the deadly confrontation.

"They parked at the bottom of a long driveway, and walked up, heavily armed," said Cambria County District Attorney Kelly Callihan.

...

Police say Roberta, 64, answered the door, and cried out something like "Oh my God, they have guns!" before her daughter shot her at point-blank range. John Jr. then may have attempted to arm himself with a gun, but Jeffrey Ruckinger shot him multiple times in the chest, killing him, police said.

The elder Frew, 67, grabbed a .22 revolver and came out from the bedroom to find the daughter he didn't initially recognize pointing the shotgun at him. Frew fired once, hitting her in the head, then turned and exchanged fire with Jeffrey Ruckinger, killing him. He then called police.'

12-YO boy suspended for bringing 2-inch novelty keychain shaped like gun to school

Mastodon · 30 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 12-year-old boy was suspended from a Rhode Island middle school after a gun keychain — just bigger than the size of a quarter — dropped out of his backpack during class.

Joseph Lyssikatos said a classmate scooped the novelty pistol from the ground and began showing it to other students at Alan Shawn Feinstein Middle School in Coventry when a teacher confiscated it on Thursday.
...
Lyssikatos was suspended for three days and banned from a class field trip to Salem at the end of the month.'

Kenya: Push for male circumcision in Nyanza fails to reduce infections

Mastodon · 30 September 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'KENYA:The prevalence of HIV and Aids rose in Nyanza and Central provinces, according to the Kenya Aids Indicative Survey released by the Health Cabinet Secretary James Macharia on Tuesday.

But Central's 3.8 per cent prevalence increase from the previous 3.6 per cent is a mere fraction of Nyanza's 15.1 per cent up from 2007's 14.9 per cent.

Nyanza's prevalence is big enough to double the national average prevalence.

And it has happened in spite of an aggressive campaign to have male circumcision as a strategy to reduce new infections in the region.

According to the KAIS 2012 survey, male circumcision among men aged 15-64 years in Nyanza increased by 18 per cent.

According to Macharia, this represents a new 600,000 males from Nyanza joining the community of the circumcised.

"Circumcision was a taboo in this part of the country then, but today it's the norm," said Macharia, who claimed this development has helped reduce new infections.

But his remarks are a contrast to what the statistics show.
...
But the Voluntary Medical Male Circumcision Programme Manager at the National Aids Control Council, Dr Athanasius Ochieng', is quick to allay the fears.

"The 2001 and 2013 figures are statistically the same and is proof that male circumcision has actually stabilised prevalence by preventing new infections," says Dr Ochieng.

He notes that a research conducted in Kisumu County three years ago showed that circumcised males had less exposure to risky behaviour.'

Voices of Reason About the Gender Wars

Mastodon · 1 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The talk itself was powerful, definitive, supremely logical – and also suitably provocative. Noting, for example, the obsession of feminism with male-on-female violence, Fiamengo pointed out that there are, in fact, “more male than female victims of violence,” that women in lesbian relationships are just about as likely to be the victims of domestic violence as women married to men, and that husbands are physically abused by their wives almost as frequently as wives are physically abused by their husbands. Fiamengo also cannily observed that while “children under the age of twelve are far more likely to be killed by their mothers than by anyone else,” there would surely be a massive feminist outcry “if the media focused relentlessly on mother violence against children” and if there were, say, regularly organized marches and a “ribbon campaign” expressing concern about the innocent victims of such murders.

Last weekend saw another CAFE lecture at the University of Toronto. Either because CAFE provided extra security this time, or because protest fatigue had finally set in, the rioters stayed away. The speaker, whom I profiled here a few months ago, was Miles Groth, editor of New Male Studies and professor at New York’s Wagner College. In his Toronto talk, Groth issued a call for universities to establish Men’s Centers to balance out their ubiquitous Women’s Centers. His argument: thanks largely to “an often noxious and even toxic sociocultural and educational environment” for boys and young men – which is, needless to say, largely the product of man-hating feminism – young males are today undergoing something that fully deserves to be described as a crisis.'

Mother Allegedly Kills Children To Prevent Father From Getting Custody

Mastodon · 1 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Marilyn Edge, 42 (pictured above), of Scottsdale, Arizona was charged Monday with two counts of murder with special circumstances in the deaths of her two children, daughter Faith, 9, and son Jaelen, 13, after she poisoned them in a California hotel room to prevent turning custody over to their father in Georgia, reports the CBS Atlanta.

After a long, contentious custody battle, a Georgia judge awarded Mark Edge custody of the two children (pictured below) and Marilyn Edge was ordered to pay child support.

Instead of taking the children to their father in Cobb County, Georgia, Mrs. Edge allegedly poisoned them in a Santa Ana, California hotel room before crashing her car into an electrical box outside a Home Depot in Costa Mesa, California.'

The Current Job Market Is Shockingly Bad For 20-Something Men

Mastodon · 1 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Great Recession was disastrous across all worker demographics, but it was especially bad for men in their 20s.
...
"For men, this is kind of a wake up call," says Anthony Carnevale, director of the Georgetown CEW. "The prospects are declining and what prospects there are aren't going to last. It's taking a while for the blue-collar economy to melt down, but it's melting."

In the last decade, the share of men ages 26 to 30 employed full-time fell from 80% in 2000 to 65% in 2012, the study finds. Over the same period, the proportion of women employed full-time in that age bracket also declined, but only from 56% to 50% — a drop of six percentage points as opposed to men's 15:'

Man Shielded Daughter as Rock Slide Killed Him

bronxman · 1 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. With all the news on bad fathers, we should all note this news story. A father sacrifices his life to save his daughter. Excerpt:

'A 13-year-old girl, the lone survivor of a rock slide that killed five people in Colorado, said her father used his body as a shield to protect her when the rocks came crashing down, according to police.
...
"I heard a scream next to me. I saw a hand sticking out underneath the boulder," Tolsma said of Gracie. "The true hero is her dad. She said her dad jumped on her to protect her at the last moment when the rocks were coming down. I think he saved her life."

Gracie's father, a high school football coach, her mother and a sister died, sources told ABC News. The other victims and their identities have not been officially released.'

Equal Rights for Fathers?

Mastodon · 1 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Fathers have begun resisting the tactics of private adoption agencies, which broker incentives to women for giving up their children at birth. The rights of birth mothers, wealthy potential adoptive parents, natural fathers, and the profits of the adoption industry are at odds. As members of a democracy, as human beings, it is time for us to understand what is at stake in these on-going heart wrenching dramas.

If—as a society, as a country—we believe in equal rights and equal laws for men and women, and if we believe in the legal right for a woman to relinquish her rights to her unborn or newly born child to the potential adoptive parents of her choosing; to have those potential adoptive parents present at the birth of her child; and to allow those potential adoptive parents to leave the hospital with that child without any notification to the putative father, nor any need for him to legally provide his consent nor to formally and voluntarily give up his rights to the child, then we must, under the idea of equal laws for men and women, also believe that a putative father has the right to relinquish his rights to his unborn or newly born child to the potential adoptive parents of his choosing; to have those potential adoptive parents present at the birth of his child; and to allow those potential adoptive parents to leave the hospital with that child without any notification to the mother, nor any need for her to legally provide her consent, nor to formally and voluntarily give up her rights to the child. Think about it. Fair is fair. Equality under the law is what we believe in, is it not?'

Boys could be spiked from New York high school girls' volleyball team

Mastodon · 1 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two boys playing on a girls' volleyball team at a New York high school could see their playing time spiked when league officials consider modifying a rule that allows them to play with the fairer sex.

Seniors Andrew Lafortezza and Jason Elbaum both played for the co-ed volleyball club last season at Horace Greeley High School in Chappaqua. But due to budgetary constraints, the Quakers were unable to field a boys' team this year, prompting the teens to seek a spot on the girls' squad, which they earned after receiving approval from league officials in August.
...
"I'm very concerned with the fact that we have two boys playing on a girls' team," Zayas said. "I'm concerned there's a significant adverse effect on other teams."'

Boy suspended after using finger as pretend gun

Matt · 1 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Bonnie Bennett said her son, Jordan, was suspended Friday at Harmony Community School in Osceola County after playing cops and robbers with another student.

“There was nothing in his hand. He used his thumb and index finger,” said Bennett. “It was a game. He made no threatening advances or threats to harm anyone. No words were said.”

Bennett said she would have been satisfied with some form of punishment but is worried now that since he's been suspended, her son will be seen as a violent child.

“They took a child that has never been in trouble before and went to the extreme,” said Bennett. “A child that has no history of violence is now classified as a violent offender.”'

"Shame" now available

Matt · 1 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Preview here. The full short film is available at Distrify.com. You can find "Shame" on Facebook http://www.facebook.com/ShameMEStudios and on Twitter: @shamemovie

IA: Signatures still needed

Matt · 1 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From Intact America:

ONLY TWO DAYS LEFT AND WE STILL NEED SIGNATURES!

You've been hearing a lot about our campaign to stop the researchers at Good Samaritan Hospital in Cincinnati from continuing an outrageous circumcision study [link added], and now we're down to the wire. Our peaceful protest outside the hospital is planned for Thursday, which means we have one more day to get as many signatures as we can.

If you haven't yet signed our letter, please sign it right away. If you've already signed it, thank you! Please take the next step and spread the word by emailing your friends, family, colleagues, and neighbors, telling them about our campaign and asking them to sign our letter. You can also help us make an impact in Cincinnati by pledging your financial support for this campaign.

When a human rights violation of this magnitude takes place right in our backyard, it really does take a village to rise up and demand justice. Together let's tell this hospital that circumcision is NOT acceptable; that there's no such thing as a "better" clamp designed to amputate perfectly healthy, important tissue; and that experiments on human subjects who cannot consent is a heinous violation of bioethics and human rights law.

Tanzania: Woman wants new constitution to protect men against gender violence

Mastodon · 1 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two out of five gender based violence (GBV) victims are men, hence the need to have a clause that protects them in the new Constitution like it does to women.

The proposal was made recently at a meeting to review Tanzania's constitution held in Rombo district organised by a non governmental organisation called AJIMARO.

A participant, Anjela Mwapachu, said most men in Tanzania are victims of domestic violence.

However, she continued to say, they hide the truth since there is no article in the Constitution that gives them their rights as men.

Mwapachu said now, it is the right time for male to claim for their rights to be identified in the new Constitution.'

‘Men have to step up’ in fight against domestic violence, LePage says

Mastodon · 2 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To win the battle against domestic violence, Gov. Paul LePage says men need to stop seeing the problem as a women’s issue and take action to stop abuse.

“We can have all the strict laws in the world, but we have to make [domestic violence] socially unacceptable,” LePage said during a ceremony Wednesday morning in his Cabinet Room at the State House.

“We, the men, have to help to eliminate abuse,” Lepage continued. “We are 80 percent of the perpetrators, and we have to find a way to stop people from doing this, and we can’t expect women to fight this battle alone.”

The morning ceremony marked the proclamation of October as Domestic Violence Awareness Month, during which the Blaine House, Maine’s governor’s residence, will be illuminated in purple — the color associated with the cause.

The governor also announced that he will provide $10,000 from his contingency fund to help pay for the completion of the Maine Murder Victims’ Memorial in Augusta. Ground was broken Sunday on the memorial, a project by Maine’s chapter of Parents of Murdered Children.'

"Why Girls and Science Don’t Mix"

Mastodon · 2 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Equality Police are unhappy. It seems that despite their best efforts women still aren't entering the fields of science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) as men are. You may not care about this — but you should. Because when the Equality Police become unhappy, we get bad policy such as the leftist desire to apply Title IX dictates to STEM, which would effectively eliminate opportunities for men in those fields.

Bringing this to mind is a recent study from The University of Texas at Austin’s College of Education. You can imagine its conclusions. Women aren’t rejecting STEM because they lack math and science skills, but because of “cultural expectations,” “gender stereotypes” and “social structures.” My, I guess we must completely upend society because our cultural-social-gender-expectation-structure thingamajig is thoroughly discombobulated.
...
After pointing out that even in 2011 Norway, virtually all nurses are women and most every engineer is a man, comedian-turned-documentarian Harald Eia interviewed various “experts” about the phenomenon. He then learned of research indicating a strong biological basis for sex-specific job preference. Dr. Trond Diseth of Norway’s National Hospital explained that from the age of nine months, boys gravitate toward “masculine” toys while girls choose “feminine” ones. ...
...
Yet why are women in less egalitarian nations nonetheless more likely to pursue STEM? Lippa explained what’s obvious, saying, “In the gender-egalitarian countries like Norway, you really are free to follow your inclinations.... In a poor country, you’re probably worried about just getting a job. And if computers are going to get you that job — in India, for example — you’ll go for it.” For sure, there aren’t many opportunities for “gender” researchers in the land of sati and saris.'

Feminists in Canada Want to Change ‘Sexist’ National Anthem

Mastodon · 2 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It looks like political correctness goes beyond our borders. A group of notable feminists from our northern neighbor are demanding a change to their country’s national anthem with the goal of making it more 'gender neutral.'

The Globe and Mail reports:

At issue is the line: “True patriot love in all thy sons command.” According to Restore Our Anthem, a group that includes writer Margaret Atwood and former prime minister Kim Campbell, these lyrics are exclusionary of women, and do not reflect the original intent of Robert Stanley Weir, who wrote the English words for O Canada in 1908.

The controversial lyric in question was added in 1913 for unknown reasons. But, the ‘Restore Our Anthem” group insists the change has sexist roots. Now, on the 100th anniversary of the original anthem, the feminists are starting a campaign to restore the language.

So, because of two words, feminists are attempting to hijack the Canadian national anthem. This kind of political correctness is all too common in our own country, where one year a textbook review process revealed schools had changed the term ‘Founding Fathers’ to ‘Founding Framers,’ seemingly to make it sound less male-dominant.'

USA Today: Are men's centers essential for college campuses?

Mastodon · 2 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Currently, more women than men attend college and that isn't expected to change any time soon: According to the National Center for Education Statistics, female enrollment is expected to increase by 16% from 2011 to 2021 while male enrollment is only projected to increase by around 7%.

Miles Groth, a psychology professor at Wagner College, spoke on Sept. 27 at the University of Toronto on the need for men's centers at colleges in Canada. He feels men's centers are needed to help male students feel welcome in the face of changing college demographics. He thinks U.S. colleges should be addressing the same issue.
...
"I often ask students to write about their experience of overt and covert gender discrimination against males in academic environments, and they routinely describe instances of public humiliation and systemic indifference," writes Dennis Gouws, an English professor at Springfield College, in an e-mail.'

UK: Nurse who killed baby after circumcising him with scissors is banned from nursing

Mastodon · 2 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A nurse who let a three-and-a-half week baby bleed to death after carrying out a circumcision using just scissors, forceps and olive oil has been banned from practising in the UK.

Grace Adeleye, 67, performed the dangerous African treatment known as a 'clamp and cut' on Goodluck Caubergs for a fee of £100 at the baby's home in Chadderton, Greater Manchester.

A Nursing and Midwifery Council panel heard that Adeleye carried out the circumcision at around 5pm on April 16 2010 and that Goodluck was still bleeding at 7am the following morning.

Adeleye had reassured the baby's parents, whom she had been put in touch with by a mutual friend, that the bleeding was slowing.

But Goodluck was eventually taken to the Royal Oldham Hospital later that morning where he died shortly after arrival.
...
Adeleye had previously received a 21-month jail term suspended for two years at Manchester Crown Court and quickly announced she would be retiring from nursing.

The court heard the nurse had performed thousands of similar procedures with each one costing £100 as she operated from a mobile clinic.'

Council of Europe ‘worried’ about circumcision

Mastodon · 2 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe (PACE) has released a resolution focused on the “violations of the physical integrity of children,” including the circumcision of young boys for religious causes, which remains a controversial issue in European societies.

The resolution calls for the European states to “promote further awareness in their societies of the potential risks of some of these procedures,” which the assembly lists as the circumcision of boys, early childhood interventions in the case of intersexual children and the coercion of children into piercings, tattoos or plastic surgery.

The assembly said that though such practices are projected as beneficial to children, they often fail to be so.

The resolution further states that member states should “clearly define the medical, sanitary and other conditions to be ensured for practices such as the non-medically justified circumcision of young boys” and adopt legal provision that would prevent the carrying out of certain operations before a child is old enough to consent.'

OSHA focuses on female construction workers

Mastodon · 2 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many people think of construction as a typically male occupation. But did you know that as of 2010, there are about 800,000 women working in the construction industry? That amounts to approximately 9 percent of the industry workforce.

While the hazards involved in construction work are well known, female construction workers face unique challenges. To increase awareness of these issues, OSHA has signed an alliance with the National Association of Women in Construction (NAWIC). The alliance, which lasts 2 years, will develop targeted training resources and other informational materials to help construction employers ensure the safety of their female employees.
...
OSHA has additional information about women in construction on a webpage created specifically for the alliance. Check it out at https://www.osha.gov/doc/topics/women/index.html.'

Factual Missteps Are Slowing National Campaign to End Partner Abuse, SAVE Says

Matt · 3 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

WASHINGTON / October 1, 2013 – Victim-advocacy group Stop Abusive and Violent Environments warns that factual errors and misrepresentations in public education efforts sponsored by domestic violence organizations may represent an obstacle in the on-going effort to rid the nation of domestic violence. SAVE issues the alert in conjunction with Domestic Violence Awareness Month, which is observed in October each year.

The Partner Abuse State of Knowledge (PASK) project, a summary of over 1,700 domestic violence research studies, concludes that mutual abuse among partners is commonplace, and men and women engage in partner aggression at similar rates: http://domesticviolenceresearch.org/

Despite the PASK findings, SAVE notes some domestic violence organizations continue to ignore the problem of mutual abuse and minimize female-initiated aggression: www.saveservices.org/camp/truth/. Some groups maintain that domestic violence is an expression of patriarchal power, a stance that ignores the plight of thousands of women caught in abusive same-sex relationships.'

SAVE E-lert: DV Awareness: Trick or Truth?

Matt · 3 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month.

During DV Awareness Month, we'll be taking a look at the accuracy of VAWA-funded groups' DV Fact Sheets.

The Partner Abuse State of Knowledge shows that men and women engage in partner aggression at similar rates. But many DV groups still use unreliable studies and inaccurate statistics, creating the impression that almost all partner abuse is men abusing women.

We believe the way to start, if we are to end discrimination against male victims, is by telling the truth. We're looking at DV Fact Sheets, asking 10 specific questions, and giving grades for accuracy.

Want to get involved? Visit the Truth Team Campaign: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/truth/

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

European group to vote on whether to call circumcision ‘human rights violation’

Matt · 3 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(JTA) — Amid calls to ban the ritual circumcision of boys in Scandinavia, the Council of Europe is slated to vote on whether to define the practice as a “clear human rights violation.”

The definition is included in a report on circumcision and female genital mutilation that was submitted recently to a vote by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe, an international organization whose resolutions are nonbinding. The vote is scheduled for Tuesday.

“Circumcision applied to young boys clearly is a human rights violation against children,” reads the report, which was brought before the assembly for approval by Marlene Rupprecht, a lawmaker from Germany and rapporteur for the council’s Committee on Social Affairs, Health and Sustainable Development.'

Swiss Vote to Maintain 165-Year-Old Military Draft

Mastodon · 3 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Swiss voters rejected a third proposal in two decades to end the draft in a referendum, opting to keep the military tradition which critics say costs an annual 4 billion francs ($4.4 billion) in lost work days.

The initiative to replace Switzerland's 165-year-old militia service with volunteers was supported by just 26.8 percent of voters today, Swiss television channel SRF said on its website. About 73.2 percent voted against the proposal. A poll by gfs.bern signaled that outcome as probable.

...

Young men must complete 300 days in the army, or opt for civilian community service on ethical grounds, which lasts about 150 days longer. Women are able to join the armed forces on a voluntary basis.

Neighboring Germany, Italy and France have all abolished the draft, as has the U.S. Austrian voters rejected an abolition in a nationwide referendum earlier this year.'

9-Year-Old Boy Suspended For Bringing Toy To School That Apparently Looks Like A Gun

Mastodon · 3 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 9-year-old boy in Michigan has been suspended indefinitely for bringing a toy that looks like a gun to school.

Gage, a student at the Creative Montessori Academy in Southgate, reportedly brought the toy to school, showed it to his friends before class, and pointed it at a friend while saying “bang, bang.”

Gage’s parents allege that the toy didn’t even resemble a firearm, but it was merely a spinning top that he brought to school to show his friends. Also, the other students involved say that Gage never actually said “bang, bang,” and that the teacher who reported the incident was wrong.

The parents say that their son suffers from epilepsy, and that he needs to be in school in order fully comprehend reading and writing. They say the indefinite suspension is not conducive to Gage’s education and continued progression.'

Teacher Who Had Sex With Students Marries Victim And Gets Probation

Mastodon · 3 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former computer technology teacher at a Haltom City, Texas, high school who had multiple sexual encounters with several students was sentenced to four years' probation Monday.

Tonya Flink, 40, pleaded guilty to two counts of improper relationship between an educator and a student. She is now married to one of her victims, prosecutors announced Monday.

“This was an unusual case in that one victim married the defendant and was not cooperative,” Tarrant County Assistant District Attorney Robert Foran wrote in an email to the Star-Telegram Monday. “The second victim is in agreement with the outcome. After taking into consideration all of the facts and circumstances of both cases, we felt this was an appropriate resolution.”

Documents obtained by the newspaper said Flink had a sexual relationship with at least four of her students at Haltom High School during the 2010 - 2011 school year. Two of the students refused to cooperate with authorities, but one victim told investigators that Flink said she liked "young Hispanic kids," and also said that she loved him.'

Rape Hysteria Culture

bronxman · 3 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boston College is moving to discipline a student who allegedly wrote anonymously on Facebook that he had raped three women while at BC, before later turning himself in to university police and administrators to tell them the online post was a hoax.
...
Chebator said BC officials were alerted to the post shortly after it appeared. Administrators and the Boston College Police Department launched an investigation.

Later that evening, “a student came forward on his own to BCPD and admitted that the entire post was a hoax,” Chebator’s email said. “The student appeared quite remorseful; nevertheless, this matter will continue to be investigated and the student will be referred to the student conduct system for resolution of this matter.”'

Boys, Girls, and Math

bronxman · 3 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This is a very fun short film (and in support of boys).

Healthy Masculinity Summit Discusses Rape and Abuse

Mastodon · 3 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The rally to end domestic and sexual violence has been going on each year in Fargo for 23 years. But, Tuesday night's event brought a new message.

"The vast majority of men in the community don't condone sexual violence, but sometimes they've never been asked to the table, they don't know what they can do to help the problems," Greg Diehl, Executive Director with the Rape and Abuse Crisis Center said.

The convention center at Fargo's Hilton Garden Inn was buzzing with conversation. But, they weren't the typical discussion you might overhear at a dinner table. In fact, they weren't topics you'd often hear from men at all. According to a study by the AVON Foundation, only 17-percent of men talk about rape and abuse with friends.

"We wanted to focus more specifically on bringing more men to the table," Diehl said of the Healthy Masculinity Summit going on around him. "Men bring a different attitude, a different sense of how they see the issue. And, it's important, I think, for men and women be looking together at these issues."'

NPO: Lawyer Admits: It's About the Money

Matt · 3 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a recent article in The Connecticut Law Tribune president-elect of the Connecticut Bar Association Mark Dubois, Esq. began, “I read somewhere that some lawyers are suggesting that the courts or the legislature develop standard guidelines for alimony. The idea seems to be that there is too much variation from judge to judge, region to region and the public would be better served with a more predictable and uniform system. We had better be careful with this; we might put ourselves out of business.”

Dubois continues, “We can see this phenomenon at work in our own profession. Trying to make the civil justice process less confusing and more open to self-represented parties, the court system developed a robust catalogue of "do-it-yourself" forms and guidelines. Things became routinized, and guidelines and standards were established for most cases. A skills-based system was replaced with a rules-based one.

"Now, instead of hiring lawyers to do simple divorces, litigants can watch a YouTube video and do it themselves. A skilled profession has been replaced with a do-it-yourself, rule-based, system. And many lawyers are out of business. If we replace a skills-based alimony system with a rules-based one, the market for legal services will shrink even more. ...'

NY mom who killed 3 kids wants cut of their estate

Mastodon · 4 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Leatrice Brewer drowned her three young children in 2008 believing she was saving them from the deadly effects of voodoo. Afterward she tried to commit suicide twice, but failed.

Now the 33-year-old suburban New York woman who was found not guilty because of mental disease or defect in the deaths of her children, ages 1, 5 and 6, wants a portion of the children's $350,000 estate. Her attorneys say she shouldn't be subject to laws that bar convicts from profiting from their crimes.

Nassau County Surrogate's Court Judge Edward McCarty ruled Thursday that Brewer be taken from an upstate psychiatric facility to testify about her request next month.

Although the case would establish a precedent in New York if Brewer succeeds, she's not expected to see any money because of a $1.2 million lien against her for psychiatric counseling and other services she has received since her arrest, attorneys said.'

Miriam Carey's death was necessary and justified

Mastodon · 4 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is currently quite an uproar over the shooting death of Miriam Carey -- the woman who tried to plow through the White House with her car. Capitol police -- who were working without pay thanks to the republican-caused government shutdown -- had no choice but to gun the madwoman down. It was an act of patriotic duty for these officers who were doing their job for nothing while a lone woman posed a threat to several people, including the POTUS and her own child who was in the car with her.

The woman's mother has taken to the media to share that she was suffering from Postpartum depression at the time of the incident that injured at least one Capitol Police officer -- as if that is any reason to try to justify her dangerous behavior. This may not be a popular opinion, but if this woman was known to be suffering from PPD, who's idea was it to let her drive around with her child without supervision? She threatened the President, his staff, the public and her own child -- and therefore threatened pretty much everyone in the U.S. by her behavior.'

Miriam Carey 'Had A Temper' And A History Of Mental Health Problems

Mastodon · 4 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Police have identified the woman who was shot and killed Thursday during a car chase that locked down Capitol Hill in Washington, D.C.

Miriam Carey was a 34-year-old dental hygienist who lived in Stamford, Conn.

A subsequent employer, Dr. Barry J. Weiss, noted that she had trouble getting along with with other employees, however, which may have contributed to her getting fired in August 2012.
....
Carey reportedly suffered from postpartum depression after the birth of her daughter, her mother, Idella, told ABC News. Idella said: "A few months later, she got sick. She was depressed. ... She was hospitalized."

Her boyfriend contacted police in December saying he feared for the safety of their infant child, law enforcement sources told CNN.
...
She had her 1-year-old daughter in the car with her during the pursuit.

Carey's relatives in Brooklyn, N.Y. are reportedly refusing to speak with investigators, CNN reported.'

Second Grade Boy Suspended Over Trick Pen

Mastodon · 4 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Although few would classify a novelty pen as a dangerous object, the toy earned one 7-year-old a suspension as a “weapons offender.” The parents are now suing the school in federal court.

The boy, named only as G.B., brought the trick pen onto his school bus in Harrisburg, Pa., and showed it to a fellow classmate. The bus driver then confiscated the toy and reported the 7-year-old to school officials.

According to G.B.’s parents, the pen is "similar to a 'clown' type buzzer that one would hold in the palm of one's hand to emit a small buzz when shaking hands," and that the whole incident "arose from his simple act of taking a toy onto a school bus — a toy that neither threatened nor caused harm to any person or property."

The parents are suing Hershey Elementary School, the principal, the acting superintendent and some members of the Derry Township School Board.'

Ed.: Similar tale of War-On-Boys-ness recently reported here.

Fear the finger gun: Political correctness ensures little boys never grow into alpha males

Mastodon · 4 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Do you remember a time where a game of “cops and robbers” during school recess was treated as innocently as it was meant to be? If you are elementary school student Jordan Bennett, you don’t. Bennett was suspended from school for a day after playing that ‘deadly’ game in the school yard, which included the 8-year old forming his hand into the shape of a gun. The boy’s mother is fighting the suspension, but the damage has already been done.

In Virginia, two teenage boys were suspended for a year after playing with airsoft guns on their own property. A “concerned” neighbor called the police and successfully got these two kids on a long-term suspension (the neighbor must be proud of his or her stand against “gun violence”) after being charged with the possession, handling and use of a firearm. The charge was later changed to reflect the obvious, that these boys were not in possession of a firearm, but an airsoft gun. Their one year suspensions remain in effect, and their records will forever reflect the crime of, well, being kids.

A 15-year old boy faces weapons charges after he was playing with an airsoft gun near an apartment complex of one of his friends. Again, a “concerned neighbor” called the police and reported the dangerous kids to authorities. So concerned were the police that, after the initial investigation on the night of the incident, the police gave the airsoft gun back to the boy, supposedly ending the incident. Unfortunately, police returned to the boy’s home three weeks later because, according to the boy’s mother, police told her that someone “above the officer” wanted charges pressed against the boy.'

"Domestic violence reality check for the 'manosphere'"

Mastodon · 4 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Domestic violence is a crime in which, overwhelmingly, the victims are women and the perpetrators are men. A recent 11-year summary of domestic violence trends in Victoria by the Department of Justice found that nearly 80 per cent of victims were female and over 90 per cent of perpetrators were male.

Yet lately it seems that there has been a subtle shift in community perception. Whenever the topic of domestic violence is raised in the media, talkback radio, online comments and letters to the editor are suddenly flooded with demands that we acknowledge that men, too, are victims. According to a VicHealth report, one fifth of the community now believes that men and women are equal perpetrators of violence in the home.
...
The misrepresentation of domestic violence as gender-neutral is dangerous for a number of reasons. Firstly, this 'what about men?' campaign wastes precious air time and column space that Blay believes would be better spent 'having real conversations about family violence — examining the figures, exposing the myths and getting the stories out from behind closed doors'. Secondly, it raises suspicion about all domestic violence claims by suggesting that women routinely exaggerate or invent abuse.

But finally, and perhaps most dangerously of all, the claims of men's rights groups downplay the amount and impact of domestic violence on women. By characterising violence as mutual or a two-way street, they trivialise the ongoing, severe and sometimes fatal nature of domestic violence.'

European Anti-Circumcision Resolution: Brit Same as Female Mutilation

Matt · 5 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A resolution that calls male ritual circumcision a “violation of the physical integrity of children” was passed overwhelmingly by the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe.

The council, a pan-European intergovernmental organization, debated and passed the resolution on Tuesday based on a report by the Committee on Social Affairs, Health and Sustainable Development led by German rapporteur Marlene Rupperecht. The resolution passed by a vote of 78 in favor and 13 against, with 15 abstentions.

The resolution calls on states to “clearly define the medical, sanitary and other conditions to be ensured for practices such as the non-medically justified circumcision of young boys.”

It also calls on member states to “initiate a public debate, including intercultural and interreligious dialogue, aimed at reaching a large consensus on the rights of children to protection against violations of their physical integrity according to human rights standards” and to “adopt specific legal provisions to ensure that certain operations and practices will not be carried out before a child is old enough to be consulted.”'

Latest female candidates in Marine Combat Endurance Test do not complete it

Mastodon · 6 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Four more women took on the Marine Corps Infantry Officer Course on Thursday and washed out, the latest chapter in the service's ongoing research into which roles women should be able to fill in combat.

The women failed the school's introductory Combat Endurance Test, a grueling exam designed to assess physical strength, stamina and the ability to make decisions while exhausted. They were recruited on a voluntary basis to attempt IOC at Quantico, Va.

All told, 81 male and female Marines began the initial endurance test yesterday at Quantico. Sixty-five men passed; 12 male Marines and four female Marines did not, said Capt. Maureen Krebs, a Marine spokeswoman at the Pentagon.

Women began reporting to IOC on a voluntary basis last year. Counting the latest class, 10 women have attempted IOC, and none has passed. Nine failed to make it through the combat endurance test. The tenth passed the initial test last fall but was dropped a little more than a week into training due to stress fractures in her foot, Marine officials said. Two women were among the last class of 79 Marines who attempted it in July; both failed the CET.'

Daycare worker arrested on two counts of rape of infants

Matt · 6 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Can you imagine a more disgusting, reprehensible crime short of mass-murder/genocide? Anyway, note that the story uses "having sex with", right at the start. "Having sex" implies mutual consent. Infants can't give consent to anything. Also, note the suspect is charged with a second rape count after yet a second victim was identified. Also looks like birds of a feather flock: her registered sex offender bf was also charged with something after he was nabbed with one of her laptops at his apartment. Will there be a he-made-her-do-it defense? Guess we'll see. Excerpt:

'Police say they have video of Heather Koon, 25, having sex with a baby. The video was found on Koon's laptop.
...
"They tried to act like it was a simple assault. A few hours later they called us back again and asked us to keep it discrete," said the dad.
...
Police arrested Koon after checking up on her boyfriend, James Osborne. Osborne is listed on Lorain County's sex offender website as living at another address. Police arrested him and confiscated a laptop found in the apartment. A police report shows it belonged to Koon and contained a video file of her "engaging in sexual conduct with an unknown infant".
...
Koon faces two counts of rape after police identified a second victim.'

MRAs maligned as ‘sexists’ fight to have movement recognized on campus

Mastodon · 6 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At the latest battle in the emerging campus war over men’s rights, as a man in a pink keffiyeh, with a pink hammer and sickle on his chest, shouted slogans through a pink megaphone at a group of men’s rights activists who marched on the Ontario legislature to denounce the oppressive effects of feminism, it was tempting to invoke Henry Kissinger’s quip about the Iran-Iraq War: “It’s a pity they both can’t lose.”

Neither side made an articulate case through their mutual loathing. One men’s rights speaker called for armed resistance, and one male feminist counter-protester evidently did not grasp the difference between “suffering” and “suffrage.”

And yet, as a series of hotly protested campus lectures in recent months has illustrated, there are real constituencies behind these extremist combatants. An ideological divide is opening up, on Canadian campuses especially, over the question of organized activism for men’s issues.

After years of campus discord over abortion, Zionism and white privilege, this new war is taking shape over the claim that men suffer systematic oppression comparable to the social inequalities that gave rise to feminism.'

Why Women Get More From Social Security

Mastodon · 6 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the following video, Dan Caplinger, the Fool's director of investment planning, discusses the center's look at women and Social Security in an effort to explain the center's findings. Dan notes the center's findings that women on average have lower lifetime earnings than men, allowing women to benefit from Social Security's progressive formula for calculating benefits. Moreover, Dan observes that women have longer life expectancies, thereby receiving payments for a longer period of time. He talks about how Metlife (NYSE: MET) , Prudential (NYSE: PRU) , Genworth Financial (NYSE: GNW) , and other annuity providers typically have different payouts for men and women, but Social Security pays the same amount regardless of gender. Finally, Dan discusses the impact of survivors' and spousal benefits on the total amount that women get from Social Security.'

Good Men

bronxman · 8 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I like this site a lot. It fills me with energy. But sometimes, when I read too much about how so many women despise men, I get down. I found this. It helps to know that there are women out there who do like men. Excerpt:

'This is a list of things that I love about men. Pure and simple. No talk of feminism or slut shaming or gender depictions in the media or rape culture here—just an unadulterated tribute to men, a panegyric, a compilation of reasons to be thankful for the male species, in ways both big and small, superficial and profound, personal and professional. They are in no particular order, the creation of my stream of consciousness. I could have gone on for hours, but it's my hope that you, readers, will add to this list, to show that we appreciate and adore men and what they bring to our lives and the world. (We can return to the heavier debates tomorrow.) For now, let's have a Kumbaya moment. Leave your reasons in the comments section, and let's see what we can come up with together!'

Girls and Engineering

bronxman · 8 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

As a member of the American Society of Engineering Education, I get emails about this topic. Each news feed contains information on progarms for ONLY girls. Each time, I go there and post my displeasure. It would be great if others could do the same. Here are the two for today:

Edison Partners with Local Girl Scouts

'Girl Scouts of San Gorgonio, whose reach extends over Riverside to San Bernardino counties, received a generous grant from Southern California Edison to help fund the “Imagine Your STEM Future” project. The programs are targeted at high school-aged girls and aim to encourage increased interest in science, technology, engineering, and mathematics careers.'

Natalie Portman Launches STEM Contest for Teenage Girls

'Actress NATALIE PORTMAN has launched a contest for teenage girls who are interested in science, technology, engineering and math.

The Oscar winner's own love of science prompted her to sign on to her role as astrophysicist Jane Foster in Marvel's Thor: The Dark World, and now she wants to encourage other young women to become involved in the field through the comic giant's Ultimate Mentor Adventure.'

The Film "The Heat"

Dantheman123 · 8 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I recently discovered and saw a new film that came out called "The Heat" which came out in August 2013. It stars Sandra Bullock and Melissa McCarthy.

I have never seen so much sexist anti-male hatred in a film before. I nearly stopped watching it after about 20 minutes as it really just took it to the extreme.

You have McCarthy's character calling out that she wanted to "rupture" the man's balls she was chasing, and an interrogation that resulted in her character pointing a gun at the perp's genitalia and threatening to shoot him. In the final scene you see Sandra Bullock come sliding into a room and shooting a man in his genitalia when there was no reason to do so.

It made me so angry that this film had even been made; they have never made a film where people go around shooting women in the breasts or in the vagina, as it would be looked down upon as just crude and disrespectful. Yet in this film, they took every opportunity they had to attack men and their genitalia.

Apparently the film was written by a feminist who clearly had a chip on her shoulder but I am seriously disappointed that this got made. What's more worrying is that people don't seem to be picking up on the huge feminist undertones of the movie and instead are just congratulating it on its comedic value.

I am quite active on the imdb.com boards trying to highlight the sexist nature of the film. I have already seen off several feminists that have come along to defend the film's approach. If you haven't seen the film I wouldn't recommend buying it or in any way, shape, or form giving money to the feminists who created it. But I thought I would let you guys know just in case you hadn't heard about it. Not sure if any of you are members on the imdb.com board but feel free to comment.

Here is a link to the board: http://www.imdb.com/title/tt2404463/board/threads/

Here is a link to one of the bigger threads on the subject of sexist content: http://www.imdb.com/title/tt2404463/board/thread/216509836

Hong Kong: Girl beats boyfriend in public for suspected cheating

GaryB · 8 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This story appeared today out of China. Excerpt:

'A CHINESE woman was arrested after she forced her boyfriend to kneel in a Hong Kong street while she slapped him for allegedly cheating on her.

The South China Morning Post reports the incident, which was captured on video, shows the woman, whose name is Cheng, accusing her boyfriend Chui of bringing another woman back to his flat.

"Listen to me first before beating me!" he pleads, before adding: "I told her not to come!"

Cheng however grabs his hair and continues to slap him across the face.

An eyewitness called the police and the girl was arrested.'

Great to see the right response from those around him, at least.

Landmark Title IX legislation creates new inequities

Mastodon · 8 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Under Title IX, colleges and universities are required to provide the same amount of athletic opportunities or roster positions to both genders. This is only fair, right? Not quite.

And ironically, men's athletics are on the receiving end of the unjustness.

Most schools have more women's sports than men's sports because they need to create more roster spots to keep up with the upwards of one hundred football roster spots that men fill. There is no women's sport equivalent to football in terms of sheer number of players on a team.

Because of this, there are three significant consequences at most colleges: 1. women's rosters on similar team sports tend to be larger than men's; 2. there are fewer men's sports programs; and 3. men's sports programs are the first to be cut in order to keep the number of athletes "equal" between men and women.'

How America’s Boys Become Psychological Dropouts

Mastodon · 8 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'America is failing our boys. Today’s boys have lower aspirations for higher education than girls. While the disparity in interest in earning a degree appears when men and women are in their 20s, the problem may start as early as the fifth grade -- where more boys than girls become psychological dropouts.

Psychological dropouts are students who lose involvement in and enthusiasm for school. The number of psychological dropouts grows as students climb the K-12 ladder. At Gallup, we first discovered this through our Gallup Student Poll, an online measure of student opinions and characteristics associated with success and happiness. Two in 10 elementary school students who participated in the 2012 poll are not engaged or are actively disengaged with school. By middle school, it rises to about four in 10 students. And by high school, nearly six in 10 students are less than engaged.'

National Conference on male victims of domestic abuse on 10 October, 2013

Matt · 9 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

"National Conference on male victims of domestic abuse on 10 October, 2013"

Information links here. Excerpt:

'Reference
http://www.dads-r-us.se/2013/05/22/national-conference-on-male-victims-of-domestic-abuse-10-october-2013/

Booking Form
http://www.mankind.org.uk/conference.html'

Murder trial underway for woman charged with murdering, dismembering, burning husband

Matt · 9 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Witness testimony continues Wednesday in the trial of the Stanley woman charged with second-degree murder in the death of her husband, Adam Chase, in June 2012.

Opening statements were given this morning in Ontario County Court in the trial of Rose M. Chase, of 2215 Mott Road. Rose was indicted in February on the charges of second-degree murder, tampering with physical evidence and endangering the welfare of a child.

The indictment alleges that Rose “intentionally caused the death of Adam Chase” on or about June 14, 2012. It further alleges that Rose transported Mr. Chase’s body from their residence to 4675 Hagerty Road in Potter, Yates County, and concealed it there before ultimately burning the body at that location.'

Foreskin 419 – The Heaviest Assault On African Men's Sexual Life Since Colonial Times Remains Uncovered

Matt · 9 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Zimbabwe's circumcision rates had been as low as 10 % until 2009, when a government campaign vowed for the circumcision of at least 1.2 million men.[3] From 1997 to 2007 the HIV-infection rates dropped from 29% to 16% of the population,[4] but the winning team of awareness campaigns was changed in favour of circumcision. This campaign no longer alters the minds of men and women but male genitals. Authoritarian systems don't want their populace to think, but to obey with their bodies. Similar campaigns are running in Uganda and Swaziland. Discrimination of uncircumcised men has been reported in the course of those campaigns. Uncircumcised Ugandan men were threatened by mobs who blamed them for infecting women. At the same time circumcision rates dropped heavily in Western countries, where individuals have free access to information about circumcision.
...
Therefore, common sense dismisses the claim, that circumcision would decrease the risk of contracting sexual diseases. Anyone can easily compare infection rates in different countries and find not a single hint at any beneficial effect of circumcision. Just the opposite: the HIV-rates in the USA (0.6%) with a majority of circumcised men are six times higher than in Norway (0.1%) with only a small minority of circumcised men.[5] If other factors dominate the infection rates in such a massive way, it is irresponsible to promote the amputation of the foreskin as a cure for HIV.'

Australia: Angry circumcised men create online forums to restore 'stolen' manhood

Matt · 9 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Notice right from the title, the objections of men involutarily genitally mutilated are both inaccurately characterized and dismissed. Excerpt:

'Many men, who were circumcised at an early age or have to undergo the procedure later in life for health reasons, have formed online communities to discuss methods of 'foreskin restoration'.

Many men said they have experienced emotional difficulties and feel angry and resentful about the surgery and are looking to find methods of reversing it, News.com.au reported.

According to the Kernel online magazine, users are gathering together on forums such as foreskin-restoration.net and circumstitions.com.'

NPO: Changing Child Support Guidelines: One State at a Time

Matt · 9 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Will Connecticut policy makers listen to testimony supporting shared parenting?

Tuesday, October 15 is your last opportunity to join near unanimous grass-roots support for important changes to Child Support Guidelines in Connecticut.Â People from all walks of life support the effort to have Connecticut change their Guidelines to recognize that both parents share in the financial decision making authority for their children.

On August 1, 2013, Massachusetts changed their Guidelines to actively encourage shared parenting and clarified that up to age 23 family courts have discretion in ordering child support and/or college contribution.Â National Parents Organization and our members succeeded in making these changes through our presentations at the child support hearings and our well written and researched testimony.'

"Men's rights activists miss the point"

Mastodon · 9 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At my freshmen orientation, one memory stands out particularly clearly among the blur of a campus tour, class registration and endlessly awkward get-to-know-each-other activities. What I clearly remember is sitting down in a lecture hall to hear a presentation about the dangers of sexual assault on campus. The presenter shared the horrifying statistic that approximately one in four college women experience rape or an attempted rape. The guy sitting next to me took this moment to lean over and whisper his first words to me:

“Wow, I guess it sucks to be you!”

I sat there, relatively shocked that he made contact with me at all, but unsurprised by the statement itself. Yes, I thought, it does suck to be me.
...
I get that it’s probably hard to see the truth when it doesn’t look good. “I’m not a rapist, so stop telling me that everyone with my gender is,” right? I imagine this is how the internal dialogue of men who are upset about a rape prevention course might sound.

Unfortunately, that isn’t the way things work. Someone is raping all of these women, and most of the rapists are men. Yes, it may be difficult to hear, but it’s much harder to experience it in real life. Education on the prevalence and dangers of sexual assault is meant to prevent students—male or female—from perpetrating this violence or being victimized by it. Yes, men may be presented as “potentially dangerous,” but that’s because they are statistically more likely to actually be dangerous. We all have the potential to be dangerous without proper education.'

International Day of the Girl Child: Focus on Education

Mastodon · 9 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Well, you may be thinking, there's no problem here. In the U.S. all girls have access to education, and girls even outnumber boys now in high school graduation rates and college enrollment. True enough. And there's no disputing that girls born in the U.S. have won the lottery of life compared to girls in poor and war-torn countries.

But despite our prosperity and universal education, we still have work to do. Girls are lagging far behind in science, math, and technology enrollment. It's a gender gap our country can't afford, and some innovative programs at lower levels are trying to overcome it early.

Two programs doing just that are Coastal Studies for Girls, which introduces junior high girls to marine science, and Girls Who Code which works to educate and inspire high school girls to go into computer science. Both are nurturing the female technology leaders of tomorrow.'

IA: Thanks to you, people in Cincinnati - and the country - are listening

Matt · 10 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Last week, we made a difference. Last week, more than fifty people gathered outside Good Samaritan Hospital in Cincinnati, Ohio to protest its circumcision clamp study... and people heard us.

- We know people heard us because they shouted their support—and, in some cases, their anger.
- We know people heard us because two different TV stations showed up to cover our press conference.
- We know people heard us because a hospital employee blogged about how our protest made circumcision a "major topic of conversation" among hospital staff.
- We know people heard us because the hospital released a statement in response to us.

Please take a moment to read my report from our protest—a protest which could not have happened without the support of thousands of intactivists like you. More than 6,400 people signed our letter (if you haven't signed it yet, it's not too late to add your name because we plan to send a second set later this year). And together we raised more than $10,000, with every penny going to our presence in Cincinnati.

Is Masculine Behavior in Boys Being Misdiagnosed as Autistic?

Mastodon · 10 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The article raises a rather interesting question. We've talked before about an educational system biased against boys. What if the spike in autism diagnoses is really that same discomfort with masculine behavior?

I've seen boys being routinely misdiagnosed as ADD and medicated for it just for being well… boys. But as problematic as randomly tossing Ritalin at inquisitive boys is... this is even more serious.
...
The issue here isn't communications. It's an incompatible style of communications. And we're seeing more and more of this in educational environments where the paradigm is shifting away from logical thinking and toward ostentatious shows of empathy.
...
But in our Brave New World, we may be just medicating masculinity.

> In our extroverted culture, where being a "team player" and a "people person" are seen as linchpins of normalcy, the notion that a brainy, introverted boy might legitimately prefer the world of ideas over the world of people is hard for most people to accept.

We're developing a hive culture with a premium on conformity, on constantly 'checking in' and receiving the pings that say everyone is on the same page.'

UK: Second National Conference on Male Victims

Matt · 11 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today is a very important day for all victims of domestic violence. Today marks the coming of age of the male domestic violence sector in the UK says Glen Poole of equality4men.

The MARS Conference Centre in Slough may seem like an unlikely place for a revolution brothers (and sisters), but that's where dozens of men and women will be gathering today for the Second National Conference on Male Victims of domestic abuse, hosted by the charity The ManKind Initiative.

For those unfamiliar with the politics of the domestic violence sector let's give you a bit of background. There is a global movement working to tackle the problem of domestic violence from a feminist perspective that is held together by the United Nations, the European Union and the public and charity sector at a national and local level.'

Man Falsely Accused of Rape by Sharpton: Advertisers Must Drop Support

Mastodon · 11 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Steven Pagones is a former Assistant District Attorney in the State of New York. He became the victim of Al Sharpton's defamatory smear campaign to label him a rapist of 15-year-old black girl Tawana Brawley in 1987. Now he speaks out at Truth Revolt. To help stop advertiser support for Sharpton, sign our petition:

In November of 1987, 15-year-old African-American girl Tawana Brawley went missing. When she was found, it is alleged that she began telling people that she had been approached, kidnapped, raped, sodomized, and her body scrawled on with human feces by individuals whom she supposedly described as resembling white police officers. Law enforcement officials began working with her, but she soon enlisted the efforts of attorneys Alton Maddox, Vernon Mason, and a then-obscure supposed civil rights leader named Al Sharpton.
...
I'm not looking for, nor do I expect an apology from someone like Al Sharpton. Rather, what I hope to see -- and what I hope the networks and advertisers would push for -- would be for Sharpton to admit that he now knows that Steve Pagones and the other individuals he lied about had nothing to do with whatever happened to Brawley. In my opinion, until Sharpton comes clean about the things that he's done in the past -- until he's able to confront his demons and set the record straight -- he'll never gain the legitimacy he's hoping to gain. He'll always have that history, no matter how much the media try to rehabilitate him. He'll always have to live with the Tawana Brawley story, with the damage that he caused to race relations. That's going to be his legacy.'

Boy, 15, kills himself after 'facing expulsion and being put on sex offender registry' for streaking

Mastodon · 11 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A popular 15-year-old student has committed suicide after he reportedly faced expulsion and could have been placed on the sex offenders' register simply for streaking at a high school football game.

Christian Adamek, from Huntsville, Alabama, hanged himself on October 2, a week after he was arrested for running naked across the Sparkman High football field during a game.

The teenager died two days later from his injuries and on Wednesday, friends and family gathered at a memorial service as they struggled to comprehend the beloved student's death.
...
In Alabama, indecent exposure is linked to the state's sex offender laws, meaning that he could have found himself on the sex offenders register due to the streaking.

Campbell added that that the incident was not just a prank and needed to be treated seriously.

Sparkman High administrators even recommended that Adamek face a hearing in the Madison County court system to determine if formal charges would be filed, WHNT reported.'

"What Kind of Person Goes to a Men's Rights Rally?"

Mastodon · 11 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most attendees seemed motivated by a concern for the well-being of men, or a fear of women rooted in their own personal traumas. A surprising number of men at the rally came forward as victims of domestic violence. These men felt stung by misandry—they talked reasonably about the weakness of men's support networks and the lack of sympathy that they experienced following abuse. Almost everyone at the rally expressed concern for things like the high suicide rate among males, boys falling behind in school, and a systemic bias against fathers in custody battles. Then again, some statistics used by the activists to bolster these issues were hard to swallow: "In 50 years the last bachelor's degree will be issued to a male in this culture," said Paul Elam of the organization A Voice for Men.
...
A few feminists in the counter-protest suggested that the current wave of feminism seeks to dismantle patriarchy and gender roles, to the mutual benefit of both men and women—and that it looks to address many of the same problems that MRAs have identified. But the biggest problem that these MRAs face is that nobody is actually trying to talk with them—unless you count online flame wars. Their movement could be shrunk to only a small, hate-filled contingent if these men were engaged through support groups, therapy, compassion, and education. Instead of having an actual dialogue, the feminist protesters mostly just yelled insults, the MRAs returned the favor, and everyone became more firmly entrenched in their polarized ideological camps.

It was all very stupid.'

French officials advise president to nominate 'only women'' in Pantheon

Mastodon · 11 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Experts from France's Center for National Monuments (CMN) yesterday handed President Francois Hollande a report recommending he nominate illustrious women only for burial in the nation's Pantheon. Currently, the report pointed out, there is no gender equality in the national mausoleum containing the remains of distinguished French citizens, designed by Neoclassical architect Jacques-Gabriel Soufflot in the mid-1700s.

Of the 70 or so distinguished French citizens buried there - including Voltaire and Rousseau, Hugo and Zola, Dumas and Jean Jaures - just two are women: Nobel prize-winning scientist Marie Curie, who is buried next to her husband Pierre, and 19th-century scientist Sophie Berthelot, who is only there on "conjugal virtue": she died just hours before her scientist and politician husband Marcellin, and the two had asked never to be parted.

For CMN Director Philippe Belaval, next to be recognized should be 20th century women who "having demonstrated great personal courage in one or both world wars, have been able to extract from often painful experiences that at times included tortures and deportations, a renewed commitment to the causes of peace, education, and social justice." "The women we suggest we should render homage to, embody universal battles that are not exclusively feminist ones," Belaval added, making it clear that bravery and commitment to democracy are the essential qualities being sought.'

UK: Blackburn teen’s prison hell on false rape charge

Mastodon · 11 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A TEENAGER has spoken of his nine-month hell in jail awaiting trial after being accused of rape and kidnap.

Daniel Rakestraw was freed on Tuesday after being cleared by a jury of tying a 16-year-old girl to his bed and attacking her.

The jury took just 30 minutes to clear him of four charges of rape, one of kidnap and another of imprisonment.

The 19-year-old, from Revidge Road, Blackburn, said he was abused by other prisoners and put in isolation for his own safety during his stay in HM Prison Preston.

He had been told no bail hostel could be found for him.

He said: “It was horrible. I wasn’t treated like I was innocent, I was treated like any other prisoner.'

Five Creative Ways That Students Are Fighting Rape Culture On College Campuses

Mastodon · 11 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'3. Getting men involved in the “Vagina Monologues” to talk about healthy sexual relationships.

Eve Ensler’s Vagina Monologues, a play that explores women’s sexuality and emphasizes sexual assault prevention, is typically performed by all-female casts on college campuses. This year, Connecticut College decided to get men involved, too. They’re hoping to spark a broader conversation about men’s relationships to women’s bodies, healthy sexual experiences, and ending rape. A group of over 80 men on campus discuss those topics in a video, which campus activists plan to release at the end of October.

4. Printing reminders not to rape on coasters distributed to local bars and restaurants.
...
During the campus’ Redzone campaign — the “Redzone” refers to the first six weeks of the fall semester, when college students are statistically more likely to be the victims of sexual violence — the group printed reminders on coasters to encourage people to avoid assault. Local bars and restaurants used the coasters during the Redzone weeks. The reminders subvert the common message that victims should protect themselves from rape by avoiding drinking too much alcohol, and instead tell potential perpetrators that they shouldn’t assault anyone in the first place:'

"Rape culture unacceptable at Texas State"

Mastodon · 11 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article originally posted here. But, looks like the editors thought it was too rad even for today's college climate. Reading it here from the Google cache, I'd say that's true. Seems the author just plain despises heterosexual men, despite what he says, especially if they're in a college fraternity. I'll simply point out that fraternity characters as a whole are comprised of an aggregate of their members' characters, just as with sororities or any other student group. It seems the author, who I bet has never been in a fraternity, is doing a lot of generalizing. Excerpt:

'The rape culture existent on college campuses and in society as a whole is something I refuse to engage in. Nor will I participate in objectifying women as a commodity for heterosexual men to use, abuse and excuse as they wish. Objectification leads to dehumanization, which in turn leads to sexual violence being normalized since women are seen as objects instead of humans deserving of respect. This is rape culture.

The students at this campus, specifically the men—oh, excuse me, I meant boys—definitely have some growing up to do. Self-evaluation is key. The golden rule says one should do unto others as they would want done unto themselves. It is called empathy, and students should practice it on a regular basis. Frat bros who regularly objectify women and toe the lines of consent should especially consider the part they play in rape culture.

It is a well-known “secret” that fraternity culture seems to contribute greatly to the perpetuation of rape culture. The philanthropy within these organizations is commendable—I am not knocking that. However, the men who are part of these groups often solidify their position and express their masculinity through homophobia and tales of sexual exploits. This kind of environment contributes to the rape culture in more than a few ways.'

Woman lures ex-boyfriend's brother to death — and her dad helps hide the body

Mastodon · 11 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A young woman allegedly stripped to lure her ex-boyfriend's brother into her bedroom so her new flame could stab him to death, slit his throat and decapitate him, Chicago prosecutors said Sunday.

Daisy Gutierrez, 19, got her father, Salvador Gutierrez, 56, to help hide the mutilated body in his back yard, according to investigators.

She dismembered the body and tossed the parts into plastic bags that she buried in holes dug by her dad, police said. Daisy Gutierrez and her boyfriend reportedly fled to New Jersey the next day.'

U.S. State Department: "International Day of the Girl"

Minuteman · 12 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'When many of the world's 850 million girls go to sleep tonight, they will dream about futures that sadly –tragically–are nearly impossible for them to achieve.

In too many countries, the promise of the next generation of girls is at risk. In too many communities, the contributions of girls are not valued, their well-being is not protected, and their aspirations are not taken seriously.

As the father of two daughters, I know that is unacceptable. ...
...
Thanks to a number of global partnerships and programs led by the State Department, like TechGirls and NeXXt Scholars – and great USAID programs like Safe Schools – we have made important progress. Today, more and more girls are enrolling in school in Afghanistan, and fewer and fewer girls are victims of female genital mutilation in Africa. But our work is far from over.'

UK: Only girls allowed for new car course to get women up to speed

Mastodon · 12 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WOMEN in the county have been getting to grips with a traditionally male pastime by rooting around under car bonnets.

A girls-only car maintenance course proved a big hit when it came to Gloucester.
...
"We had the chance to change the brake fluid and the course involved hands-on demonstrations, which made it easier to learn.

"The assistant taught us what to do if we ever broke down, which thankfully has not happened to me."

The lady drivers also learned how to change a tyre.

Samantha said the women-only idea was a winner, and that with the attendees being all female, she felt they had a greater opportunity to learn.

"It was nice to have just women at the course because men can sometimes take over," she said.

"My partner usually looks after the car and its maintenance, but this has improved my confidence."'

Will it take another world war to get more women into engineering?

Mastodon · 12 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By the time a child blows out the candles on their fourth birthday cake, they have already decided which jobs are for men and which are for women. Boys are fire fighters or builders, girls are nurses or teachers.

Tragically, children's books and TV programmes, as well as many parents and school teachers, inadvertently reinforce these socially constructed identities due to their own lack of understanding and preconceptions.

Alarmingly a miniscule six per cent of practicing engineers in the UK are women, according to the Women's Engineering Society.

This is the lowest number in Europe. In comparison Sweden, a country more famed for its flat pack furniture than its rich engineering heritage, has four times more female engineers than us.
...
Industry, academia and the government have made constant efforts to challenge preconceptions about what people continue to believe to be a male and "dirty" discipline. However, we should be desperate to educate parents and teachers about the value and impact of this profession, as well as, drastically change all information and knowledge that young children get from the moment they are born.'

"Men dither while women lead in the world"

Mastodon · 12 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This important leader handles the debt crisis with grace, navigating expertly between austerity and growth. The leader's opponents grumble, more out of jealousy than genuine opposition, and loyal supporters hail the leader as a hero. The leader's popularity soars; re-election is not in question. Meanwhile, unemployment is at an all-time low, and the leader's nation is looking like its own island of prosperity, a beacon to a suffering continent.

For President Barack Obama, this is a daydream. For German Chancellor Angela Merkel, this is life. Funny how the most admired leader of the Western world right now, the clearest example we have of consistent success during trying times, is a woman.

...

This has not been a shining week for the patriarchy. The men in suits dither, posture, plan negotiation sessions and then cancel them, and employ copious military metaphors -- "wage battle," "refuse to surrender" -- to no effect. Increasingly they become associated in the minds of the American people with verbs normally used to describe toddlers, such as "tantrum" or "throw a fit."

Competence, meanwhile belongs to the women, particularly in the usually macho world of global finance. Over in Europe, Merkel was re-elected on the basis of her deft handling of the eurozone crisis, and in the United States, monetary policy was entrusted to Yellen. Making the victory extra sweet for women, she was chosen instead of Lawrence Summers, who will forever be remembered for saying women aren't that good at math.'

Not Our Jobs: Emotional Responsibility and Sexism

Mastodon · 12 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's a pretty leveling quote of Germaine Greer's: "Women have no idea how much men hate them." It's the kind of quote that not only knocks you ass-backwards but continues to unfurl in front of you, because the volume it speaks is only really matched by the layers in which it's applicable.

It puts to scope the intrinsic nature in which men have pathologically policed nearly, if not every, level of their interaction and communication with women. I am not even talking about violence toward women and the horrifying way this manifests in our daily news cycles because at that level, yes, we get it, you fucking hate us. Otherwise why go to such lengths as to physically wipe us out -- it's loud and clear, buddy. I'm talking about the instances of subtle, psychological manipulation that have the capacity to cause someone to constantly question their mode of thought, feeling, and the way in which this relates to the entire scope of every day life. So, a pretty big thing.
...
Long are we told that when things go awry in relationships the default blame shifts to women. Not even on the appalling, actually sociopathic level of victim blaming, but in subtle ways that are easy to miss if you're not hyper aware. And face it when "hyper aware" has become your default it just makes you realize even that is not enough. I had a boyfriend who cheated on me and much later, after the relationship ended and the emotional trash had been taken out, I got into a conversation in which the gist was "women make bad decisions" and relied very heavily on me not being able to foresee that this would happen to me being the framework of that logic.
...
Moreover, why is there a nagging, inherent guilt on my part in the back of my head present at the onset of speaking up and the urge to smooth things over, to crack a joke or make light when the reality of it is we are so busy doing all this other shit that we don't have time to be the sole proprietors of our relationships with you.'

SAVE: Scary! NNEDV Flunks the Truth Test

Matt · 12 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Last week we announced that during DV Awareness Month our Truth Team is taking a look at the accuracy of VAWA-funded groups' Fact Sheets. This week we're giving you the results of our first review.

Even though hundreds of peer-reviewed studies show that men and women engage in partner aggression at similar rates, the National Network to End Domestic Violence never mentions this fact in their "Fact Sheet." There are many other factual errors, as well.

We wonder how the NNEDV can remain so unaware, when the news features horrifying stories of women dismembering their ex-husbands, and cases like Jodi Arias who fatally stabbed her boyfriend nearly 30 times.

We believe that your hard-earned tax dollars should be paying for accuracy. Contact the NNEDV and ask them to update their Fact Sheet.

Contact NNEDV:

- 202-543-5566
- communications-at-nnedv.org

Thanks!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Study: Circumcision Does Not Prevent Sexually-Transmitted Infections

Matt · 12 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Researchers performing a clinical study on over 800 African American men found that circumcision does not prevent STIs (sexually transmitted infections). The most important factor was the number of sexual partners.

Researchers say their results throw into question commonly held beliefs about the connection between circumcision and STIs, which they say are largely based on extrapolations from studies performed on men in Africa. These African studies and their policy implications, which includes the recent reversal of the American Academy of Pediatrics' circumcision policy statement, were widely criticized by a consortium of doctors and human rights organizations.

The latest American study was performed by urologists from the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, the University of Illinois, Chicago, and Mount Sinai Hospital in New York. Researchers will be presenting their study next week during the Annual Meeting of the Annual Society for Reproductive Medicine, held conjointly with the International Federation of Fertility Societies. The annual meeting began earlier this afternoon in Boston and will continue through to next Friday, October 18th.

Researchers did not test for HIV in this study. They did not respond to our email inquiries.'

"Quota system failing to bridge Norway's corporate gender gap"

Mastodon · 13 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While Norway's election handed power to a coalition led by women, Scandinavia's richest economy is reserving its top corporate jobs and biggest pay checks for men.
...
While research is unclear on why more women have made it into the Norwegian public sector versus corporations, Clemet said women are reluctant to go into the private sector because those jobs aren't amenable to family life.

"Women are choosing this more than they are hitting a glass ceiling," she said. Women prefer jobs with flexible routines and the option for part-time work, something the public sector can offer, she said.

About 43 percent of women in Norway work part-time, compared to 13 percent of men, according to Statistics Norway.'

Social worker jailed after admitting to sex with juvenile delinquents

Mastodon · 13 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A social worker who admits to having sex with three teenage boys being held at the Butler County Juvenile Rehabilitation Center will spend the next 90 days in jail, a sentence that delighted her defense team.

34-year-old Amber Marie Harris of Fairfield cried throughout much of her time in court Tuesday morning. She pleaded guilty over the summer to two counts of unlawful sexual conduct with a minor and one count of sexual battery, a story FOX19 broke in August. At the time of the crimes, in 2011, Harris was a part-time "youth leader." She had sex with the boys while they were on "home passes," according to the facility's director, Rob Clevenger. A member of Harris' defense team tells FOX19 at least one of the boys had sex with Harris at her home.
...
But defense attorney Mark Krumbein of Cincinnati told Judge Pater that there are mitigating circumstances to consider. Harris claims she was in an abusive marriage at the time. Krumbein compared her situation to someone suffering from battered wife syndrome. He said she's been diagnosed with major depressive disorder and is addicted to drugs. He urged the judge to send her into drug treatment and only send her to county jail --- not state prison --- if he felt he had to incarcerate her at all.
...
Then, in a stream-of-consciousness monologue that went on for several minutes, Judge Pater went over the pros and cons of treating Harris differently than a man who'd had sex with teenage girls.
...
In the end, he sentenced Harris to 90 days in the county jail and ordered her to complete drug treatment. ...'

Vicky Pryce: most women in prison because of men

Mastodon · 13 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The economist served two months in prison after her defence that she was coerced by her husband Chris Huhne to take his speeding points failed.

Ms Pryce was first sent to Holloway Prison before she was transferred to an open prison and said she came across a lot of women who had “taken the rap for what others had done” and felt prison was not the best place for them.

Ms Pryce, 61, wrote a book - Prisonomics - about her experience of her incarceration and subsequent two months on tag at her home in London.

She told the Mail on Sunday: “What really did it was talking to the women in Holloway and realising they were there mostly because of some thing their husbands, brothers, fathers, had done.'

Experts: Number of women in Maine prisons has grown sixfold since 2002

Mastodon · 13 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'PORTLAND, Maine — The number of women held in the Maine state prison system has grown nearly sixfold since 2002, a stark increase that experts say is sparking new conversations about the best way to rehabilitate female criminals.

...

And with each woman costing, by some estimates, nearly twice as much as a man to hold in prison, there's a significant financial incentive to adopting programs and services geared toward keeping the women's recidivism rate down, she said.

...

Whatever the legal drivers for the change, King and others who attended the conference on Tuesday said corrections officials must think differently about how they deal with incarcerated women compared to their male counterparts.

"Their pathways into the system are very different than men's pathways into the system," King said.

Piper Kerman, author of the bestselling memoir "Orange is the New Black" about her 13 months in a Connecticut prison, said a majority of women in prison have histories of trauma or being abused.'

"This whingeing jailbird's worst crime is blaming men for every female crook"

Mastodon · 13 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You probably thought you'd seen the last of Vicky Pryce, didn't you? When she had finally finished dragging her ghastly cheat of an ex-husband through an unedifying airing of their dirty laundry, all the signs were that she, as well as former Cabinet minister Chris Huhne, was finished.

Not only was she jailed for perverting the course of justice but the Queen personally intervened to strip her of the title of Companion of the Order of the Bath.

...

But no. Vicky, you see, doesn't actually do shame. Vicky does headlines. And if nobody else is going to write them for her then, dammit, she'll write them herself.

Which is why Vicky has put pen to paper and written a whole book about her prison experiences, designed to cash in - oh, sorry: designed to demonstrate the value of courage in the face of adversity.

...

So here she is in Holloway where, funnily enough, she discovers that this is in fact a commonplace travesty of justice and that women who break the law because their husbands 'made them' should be treated as the innocent victims they surely are.

Sub-text: especially, naturally, Vicky Pryce.'

Oklahoma's 'mean' laws to blame for high female incarceration rate, sociologist says

Mastodon · 13 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oklahoma has “mean” laws, provides little help to addicts and the mentally ill and is full of tough-on-crime politicians who are not concerned with rehabilitating criminals, an OU sociologist said Wednesday during a forum on female incarceration.

In recent years, Oklahoma has held the distinction as the state that locks up women at the highest rate in the nation.

Susan Sharp, a University of Oklahoma sociology professor who has been studying the state's high rate of female incarceration since the 1990s, was highly critical of Oklahoma's drug laws, calling them “mean” and overly punitive. She said the state's tough-on-crime sentencing guidelines are to blame for nearly all of the women serving lengthy terms in state prison.

Sharp said women usually end up in prison due to three factors: Coming from a poverty-stricken background, being in relationships with men who engage in criminal behavior and suffering from a long history of abuse.'

A Response to Feminism

Dantheman123 · 13 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I was surprised to find recently an article on the hugely sexist online paper "The Huffington Post" which pretty much nailed it in terms of responding to Feminism. It was written by a woman as well which made it that much more satisfying to see. Excerpt:

'I am not a feminist. I cannot support a movement that asks for special treatment rather than equal treatment, and I do not understand why anyone would. If feminism is about equality, then why not just be an egalitarian? If feminism does so much for the female sex, then why do six out of seven women reject the term "feminist" altogether?
...
If men and women have equal rights when it comes to freedom of speech, property, education, employment, voting and healthcare, then what more are UK feminists going to achieve by holding up a whiteboard or boycotting Twitter for a day? In order to restore feminism to its once powerful, transformative status, it needs to be extended to countries that are still decades behind the Western world in terms of women's liberation. Then, perhaps, I too could call myself a feminist.'

With the paper being so biased normally I wouldn't have thought they would have let it ride but they did have a look at this. One of the best articles I have seen in a long time and really very refreshing.

"Biblical Feminism and the Dirty Male Myth"

Mastodon · 13 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a thoughtful reaction* to the Vanity Fair article “Friends Without Benefits,” Adi Robertson writes:

“If we were actually interested in looking at how boys are “taught” to expect sex, we might consider asking a few of them. But instead, we treat them like mute forces of nature, incapable of empathy when given access to sexting. We assume that men exploiting women is inevitable the moment we let girls onto the internet or out of the house.”

... What the author did not fully address is the misandry inherent in any discussion relating to teenagers and anything remotely associated with sex. Ironically, I hadn’t ever heard the term “misandry” until I began researching modern feminism. “The hatred or dislike of boys or men” is quite common in the feminist world, often expressed through a series of Steinem-esque stereotypes that define the male sex as inherently oppressive of women and sexually perverse.

“I feel like I’m a rapist,” one male college student once told me. “I go into my film theory class and suddenly I’m just some perverted white guy who wants to have sex with anyone and is going to attack them to get it. I feel disgusting.” His wasn’t the only liberal arts experience laced with misadronisitic notions. I faced my own battles with feminist professors who taught quack phallocentric theories about (white) men controlling money, dominating their wives, and forging an aggressively abusive path through life.'

--
* The original post's link appears to be bad. The cited article is found here.
 Likewise. The cited article is found here.

Harvard Business Review Blog recognizes male overwork and diversity stevphel · 14 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Interesting article on the HBR blog that recognizes that men overwork (and earn more) and that millennial men may be rejecting the program. Excerpt:

'While the media, consumed with the idea of “mommy wars” and “queen bees,” has largely missed the tug of war that has emerged among men, sociologists have been busy uncovering the change. Statements like that of the Silicon Valley engineer who expressed resentment at his manager’s demands by saying, “[he] doesn’t have two kids and a wife, he has people that live in his house, that’s basically what he has,” as reported by Marianne Cooper, are increasingly common among younger men. “It’s akin to winning a pie-eating contest where the prize is more pie,” observed a law firm associate, rejecting law firm partnership as a goal.
...
What’s intriguing is that many younger men won’t play the game. Kellogg studied four Boston hospitals’ response to a new accreditation requirement that surgical residents be limited to 80 hours a week, down from the traditional 120-hour schedule.

Women supported the new 80-hour rule—no surprise—but so did many Millennial men. Kellogg found three main groups of such men:'

'Why being a woman makes me a better police detective'

Mastodon · 14 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I am a senior police officer and I see myself first and foremost as a policing professional who happens to be a woman. On the other hand, as a citizen, a wife, a mother, a daughter and a friend, I see clearly that I am a proud woman who happens to be an experienced, well-trained and skilled police officer. As always, it is a matter of balance – a skill that most women develop as a matter of routine.

But does maintaining that balance affect the way I do my job? Am I a better police officer for being a woman? Others may have a view on that, but for me, the honest answer to both questions is yes.

During my service I have developed a leadership style based on empathy, encouragement and compassion. I try to listen, to lead by example, to work hard to gain the professional respect of my colleagues – men and women. But in policing terms I make it very clear that I command. None of these is an exclusively female attribute, but they all contribute to a style which I believe is based on my gender.'

Libertarian Billionaires Paying For Daycare Won't Bridge The Science Gender Gap

Mastodon · 14 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women have long out-paced men in academia, yet they remain underrepresented in certain areas of science, technology, engineering and mathematics (commonly referred to as the STEM fields). Since STEM graduates not only have more job opportunities, but also higher paying jobs, many see boosting women's participation in these disciplines as a key to reaching gender equality. There has been no dearth of public and private efforts to try to "solve" the problem. And the latest to get in the game is libertarian billionaire David Koch, who last week pledged $20 million to MIT to build a top-of-the-line childcare facility in an effort to attract and retain more women in the STEM fields.

...

In other words, attracting talented women to MIT hasn't been the challenge; what they study when they get there is. And fancy childcare won't impact that determination.

What Mr. Koch overlooks is that men and women are different. They have different strengths, preferences, and aptitudes. And it's revealed at even the highest levels of academic and professional success. Building a luxury childcare facility may attract some women who were considering where to pursue their graduate research or accept a faculty position; but more likely it will just be an added perk to women and men already at the university.

This is not to suggest that women can't pursue math or science – plenty do. But Mr. Koch has fallen for the line that "if only we had better childcare" we could achieve parity in the sciences, and then women and men would be equal. But Mr. Koch should recognize, as he does when it comes to other policy areas like tax law and government regulation, that the Left's definition of equality mistakenly focuses on outcomes rather than opportunities.'

A review of "Shame"

Matt · 15 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

"Shame" is a film short, coming in at under 10 minutes. It portays a young man ("Lance") living at home with his parents, just returning with scratches on his neck after a date with his abusive girlfriend. The script is demonstrative and seemingly meant to portray the uneasy ambivalence Lance and his father both feel about Lance's situation. Lance's mother, on the other hand, is at her wit's end and ready to confront the girlfriend. She calls the police and when they arrive, they take a report and instruct Lance to seek an arrest warrant and order of protection the next day.

This film short is meant to send a message: that yes, men are DV victims. And, it points out that it is most often men who are slowest to acknowledge their own or other men's troubles with being a DV victim. Just before the credits, it shows a citation of a CDC report on DV that states that 53% of DV victims in the study were male.

The producers are to be commended for taking the time and trouble to make this film. It aims to get a message out and make a point that sorely needs making. Hopefully with further such and other efforts, the truth will out.

Reader's film review: "Sexmission"

bronxman · 15 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I just returned from an engineering conference in Poland. While there, the subject of feminism came up. The guys told me about an extremely popular movie that was made in Poland in 1985. It values men and the role they play. I thought I'd share the plot of a movie called "Sexmission". See if you can rent it where you are. (I now live in Norway so it will be a few weeks before they send me a copy with English subtitles.)

Two men, Albert and Maks, are chosen to be cryogenically hibernated as part of a test. However, something goes very wrong and they are left frozen for many more years than they were supposed to. They wake up in a post-apocalyptic underground totalitarian world inhabited entirely by women, and find themselves defending the very fact that they're men.

In the future, it seems, all of history has been re-written to only star female heroes. Cain did not kill his brother Abel; rather, men invented murder and Cain killed his sister, Abel. Einstein was actually a woman, and men have since been done away with entirely. The women decide that the only option is to turn both men into women through surgical intervention.

But is everything as it seems, and are men really useless, like the new society claims? Eventually, Albert and Maks turn the world back on the right track.

The ensuing adventure is part sci-fi sex comedy, part harsh criticism of Eastern European Communism. The film is still well-loved in Poland.

Wasserman Schultz: All-Women Team ‘Would Get This Done in a Few Hours’

Mastodon · 15 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Women would do a better job than men of solving the current government stalemate, Rep. Debbie Wasserman Schultz (D-Fla.) said on Monday -- because "a woman doesn't want to ruin the person on the other side of the aisle or the table."

"If we put all the women, Republican and Democrat, in the House together, the consensus from all of us is that we would get this done in a few hours," Wasserman Schultz -- the head of the Democratic National Committee -- told MSNBC's "Morning Joe."
...
Women are not less ideological, but they're "less dug in," she said, after she was asked why only four women signed an August 21 letter to House Speaker John Boehner, urging him to "affirmatively de-fund the implementation and enforcement of Obamacare" in any continuing resolution.'

Five important things that unwed fathers need to know

Mastodon · 15 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Unwed dads usually face tremendous challenges when trying to assert their rights as fathers. Historically, dads have tried (usually in vain) to navigate the family law system themselves, without any real knowledge as to how to do so successfully. Although there is no substitute for competent legal counsel, hopefully the list below will help dads better understand what they should and should not do when tackling legal issues concerning their children.

The following list contains five important things that unwed fathers need to know:

1. Signing the birth certificate for your child does NOT mean that you have asserted your rights as a father. Only a court can adjudicate (confirm) paternity. Without a court order, the father of the child does not legally have any rights to the child (although there is still an obligation to support the child). Dad needs to file an action to establish paternity in order to have the court recognize him as the child's father and confirm his rights related to that relationship.'

Florida man initially denied mammogram because of gender

Mastodon · 15 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Donald Mudd didn’t even know that men could get breast cancer. Mudd told FOX station WFTX in Fort Myers, Fla. that he had a painful lump on his right breast that developed into the size of a golf ball. His physician told him that there was a mass and he needed a mammogram.

That was the beginning of a disappointing ordeal as Mudd, who doesn’t have insurance, contacted a hospital that advertised free mammograms during October for ‘Breast Cancer Awareness Month.’

...

Mudd said that he tried again with six other organizations, but was rebuffed each time.

“I was a little bit in shock to even find out that men could have breast cancer, and then I find out that because of my gender those programs are not available to men,” Mudd said.

However, reporter Christy Dimond was able to find some help for Mudd from the Susan G. Komen foundation. Mudd was set up with an appointment at a volunteer clinic that gets grant money to provide screening for uninsured patients, regardless of gender.

The American Cancer Society states that about 2,240 new cases of invasive breast cancer will be diagnosed for men on a yearly basis and that 410 men will die annually due to breast cancer.'

NY State official publicly says that yes, gay people and straight men can be DV victims

Mastodon · 15 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In honor of Domestic Violence Awareness Month, New York State officials are urging people to wear purple on Wednesday, October 16.

Gov. Andrew Cuomo made the declaration and encouraged New Yorkers to participate in the annual Shine the Light on Domestic Violence campaign on Wednesday.
...
“Domestic violence is an equal opportunity problem. It cuts across all socioeconomic strata. There is no one that is immune from it, it can happen to men who are abused by their female partners, it happens in same-sex relationships, so we know that it is as widespread as the kinds of relationships that exist,” said Wright.'

Men as likely as women to suffer spousal abuse: Swedish study

Mastodon · 15 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In two related studies, researchers surveyed 1,400 Swedes about domestic violence and found that 8 to 11 percent of men reported being victims of physical violence at the hands of their spouse in the past year.

The corresponding figure for women was 8 percent.

"We were surprised by the results," professor Gunilla Krantz, who led the research, said in a statement.

"Both men and women use the kind of violence that can harm the other person. The concept that women use violence only in self-defense is not true – women are capable of using it aggressively as well."

The respondents mentioned behaviour ranging from punching, kicking and pushing to strangleholds and threats at gunpoint.

The study also revealed, however, that between 8 and 11 percent of male victims reported that they had also been perpetrators of violence and Krantz added that the results should be interpreted "with caution".

"We do not know in detail what led women to use violence in aggression," she explained.'

Sweden: New archbishop declares support for circumcision

Matt · 16 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Translated article here. Excerpt:

'Congratulations Sweden and the Swedish Church, our new archbishop Antje Jackelén is genital mutilation of young boys!

It now has new archbishop of the diocese of Lund is one of the women bishops and priests in the Swedish Church, who wrote an article that was published by the DN 6/22 in 2012.

In debate article then writes Antje Jackelén and her colleagues that "We must show respect for the right to be different."

And this right to be different mean Antje Jackelén & Co. that you should be okay with underage boys and male children of the tender age of eight days mutilated in the name of their religion.

For there is a man who writes:

Male circumcision is a religious practice that WHO recommends that health promotion. The demands on the prohibition set out in Sweden made it, however, as malicious and in conflict with the CRC. Is it to that of us mainly practiced for religious reasons? Religion has become more visible in the world, for better or worse. Therefore, knowledge and responsiveness from government agencies and state. A state can no longer only to emphasize a religious belief. It can be as little as one-sided negative to religion as some secularist commentators demands. It requires discernment. It is in our opinion misleading to put the child's rights against parents, or religion of human rights. In both cases it is about trade-offs between the different elements of human rights.'

SAVE E-lert: FWV Fact Sheet Places Victims at Risk

Matt · 16 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Our Truth Team is still checking Fact Sheets for DV Awareness Month. This week we have the results of our second review. Unfortunately, the Futures Without Violence Fact Sheet is lacking, so we had to give them an F.

What's disturbing about Fact Sheets that don't mention the prevalence of mutual abuse, like the one on FWV's website, is that they are putting more victims at risk.

More than half (58%) of all domestic violence is mutual, and a Centers for Disease Control survey found that injury was more than twice as likely in these cases. In other words, when domestic violence escalates, that's when most injuries occur.

Please contact FWV and ask them to update their Fact Sheet with current, accurate, and complete data.

Contact Futures Without Violence today:

• (415) 678-5500
• info-at-futureswithoutviolence.org

On behalf of everyone affected by domestic violence, thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

All male students in school punished for bomb hoax; girl made similar hoax last year

TCM · 16 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So given the current trends, it would come as no surprise to me that in the event of a bomb threat hoax on the part of a singular student, administrators – acting in loco parentis (and sometimes just loco) - might employ restrictive measures on student freedoms. And given a pervasive institutional culture of gynocentrism and misandry, it is also unsurprising that they would profile and discriminate against male students in the process.

...

"In the wake of a bomb hoax discovered in a restroom in a boy's locker room at Bonners Ferry High School Thursday, school district administrators will close the campus for all male students beginning Monday. This means that all male high school students will not be able to leave campus from the start of the school day until the final bell unless formally signed out by a parent or guardian."

...

Beyond the functional limitations this imposes on male students, the key problem with the adoption of this policy is the very concept itself that it is acceptable to punish male students collectively for the actions of one. This is the same kind of reasoning that higher education administrators use whenever they acquiesce to reducing the rights of college men accused of sexual misconduct.

...

What superintendent Dick Conley and Co. may have forgotten is that there were also two bomb threats by women in the same city just one year prior. As The Spokesman Review reports, one of them involves a 48 year-old woman who called in a phony bomb threat to the Bonner County Administration Building on the eve of the 2012 general election. And more strikingly, the next one – as the news group KHQ Local reports - was done by a high school girl in a manner very similar to this recent case, and at the exact same school:

...

In addition, there was another bomb threat made by a woman ten years ago to Rocky Mountain Academy and Boulder Creek Academy in Boundary County, the same county Bonners Ferry High School resides in. In other words, bomb threats and hoaxes are not a uniquely male phenomenon. Indeed, it is not even a distinctively male phenomenon in Boundary County.

And yet, here we are – forcing all male students to walk on eggshells under a cloud of suspicion and collective condemnation for the actions of a singular boy. Just as Feminists in higher education have long preached that "all male students are potential rapists," Bonner's Ferry now declares that all male students are potential terrorists.'

I emailed the superintendent who made this decision, the state Title IX Coordinator, the principal, and the board of trustees. You may see my email note and the addresses of the recipients here.

UK: A mother opens up about the false rape claims that killed her son

Mastodon · 16 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The tears flowed as Mike Morgan phoned his mum, between sobs insisting: “Mum, I didn’t do it.”

Accused of rape, the outgoing showman who loved the bright lights and kudos of being manager of one of Liverpool’s top gay bars, crumbled and cried as he turned to the person he trusted most.

And though the claims were unfounded and allegations not pursued, his loving mum Linda has revealed how the ordeal effectively killed him.

“Mikey couldn’t live with it,” she says.

“He knew he was innocent but he didn’t want to carry on believing people could even think he was capable of such a horrendous crime.”

His health deteriorated and, on February 13, this year, Mike Morgan passed away in his sleep – as he had predicted he would just two weeks before.'

Sweden: Female cop prosecuted for baton attack

Matt · 16 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Swedish female police officer, accused of beating a drunken man and setting her dog on him, is being prosecuted for assault after the incident was captured on film.

The woman, who denies the charge, was filmed lashing out at the man using her baton an estimated 14 times. Her police dog also got involved and pounced on the man who later fell to his knees and yelled "are you totally stupid or what?" at the officer.

"I have made the decision (to prosecute) because I objectively think we have the foundations for a conviction for either assault or professional misconduct," said prosecutor Mats Åhlund to newspaper Dagens Nyheter.'

Commission on Child Custody Decision Making created in Maryland

Matt · 16 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Commission will study all aspects of child custody decision-making in Maryland, including the principles governing it, and current practice and processes. The study will encompass how to make child custody orders and modifications fairer, more uniform, and equitable; reduce litigation in child custody proceedings; promote and ensure children's continued relationships with both parents; and maximize involvement of both parents in a child's life. Further, the Commission will consider how the Court may mitigate adverse effects of child custody litigation, as well as the advantages, disadvantages, and impact on children of joint physical custody. In addition, the Commission is to evaluate the governing statutes in other states, and consider whether Maryland law needs a statute specific to child custody decisions.

Other issues related to child custody to be considered by the Commission include: whether gender discrimination exists in custody decisions, and if so, how to address it; the role of case management systems; training programs currently available to judges; how domestic violence proceedings and interventions affect custody determinations; and whether language can be standardized for custody determinations. Finally, the Commission is to gather quantitative data on total number and disposition of contested custody cases, and the availability of pro bono legal resources to petitioners and respondents.'

You have the money? You pay alimony

Matt · 16 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Florida's alimony system, like the Florida auto accident system, is based on a "no-fault system." It doesn't matter who ran the red light or who betrayed the marriage. The one who has the money pays.

In divorce, in the vast majority of cases, there is usually one party who is more "at fault" than the other. It is not uncommon for one of the spouses to be involved in extramarital affairs, involved with drugs or alcohol, or be engaged in other aberrant behavior that is destructive to the marriage.
...
However, none of this behavior has any bearing on the final alimony award. When alimony laws were written decades ago, the stay-at-home spouse did not have the opportunity to develop marketable business skills that would allow him or her to re-enter the workforce.'

More vasectomies during recession

Minuteman · 17 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The financial crisis of 2008 and lingering economic woes are having an impact on men's reproductive decisions, new research suggests.

"With the current recession, it's pushing more guys to get a vasectomy done," said study author Dr Anand Shridharani, a men's reproductive and sexual health specialist at Erlanger Health System, in Knoxville, Tennessee.

Many urologists reported in 2009 that they were fielding more requests for vasectomies, suspecting the downturn in the economy as a reason and Shridharani's team attempted to find numbers to back up the reported trend.
...
"Comparing the number of vasectomies performed per year from 2005 to 2008 versus 2009 to 2012, the difference [an increase] is statistically significant," he said.

"The suspected reason is that having an unexpected child would increase the cost of living," he noted.

"People are having children older, and older people are more in tune with what children cost," Shridharani suggested.'

Relatedly: 1 000 vasectomies to be done in 1 day

S. Africa: "Haemophilia the cause of circumcision deaths?"

Matt · 17 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No, the reason for circumcision deaths is that you are doing something really nasty to an innocent and helpless victim that induces bleeding, and worse yet, you are getting it "wrong" in the process-- sort of like forcing a person to have a kidney removed and then failing to manage the bleeding so that he or she dies. Yes, they may have had haemophilia, but was that the actual cause of their death? No. It was that you started cutting at their flesh ignorant of the particular risks and worse still, without their consent. Excerpt:

'Reports of deaths during traditional initiation rites often hit the headlines in South Africa, and there is always a devastating sense of young lives lost too soon. Yet, partly because these centuries-old practices are swathed in mystery, insight into the reasons for the loss of life following ritual circumcision is often limited and not fully understood.

Poor surgical practices in non-sterile conditions are often blamed, but there may be another factor, which needs to be considered. The hereditary bleeding disorder, haemophilia, may indeed be a reason for the deaths in some of these rituals.

The Igazi Foundation, based in Port Elizabeth and working throughout the Eastern Cape, has identified haemophilia as a definite risk factor in traditional circumcisions, especially since they take place in remote areas far from hospitals and clinics. The foundation had a dedicated haemophilia project, which was also aimed at reducing the risk of excessive bleeding amongst initiates.'

Robert Redford: Women, young people must save U.S. from men 'behaving stupidly'

Mastodon · 17 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Robert Redford says bigotry, fear of change and a determination to personally destroy President Barack Obama have paralyzed the U.S. government.

Women and young people are the answer to fixing the gridlock that has partially shut down Washington, the actor told CNN on Tuesday.

"Give them the reins," Redford said. "I think they can do better than we have."
...
Women must save the country "because a lot of men that were in control were behaving stupidly," Redford said. "I mean, sometimes you say: 'Can we actually be this dumbed down, or am I actually hearing what I'm hearing from some of these people? Are they really, is that really happening?' It's sad."'

'Women Are the Only Adults Left in Washington'

Mastodon · 17 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At one of the darkest moments of the government shutdown, with markets dipping and both ends of Pennsylvania Avenue hurling icy recriminations, Maine Republican Susan Collins went to the Senate floor to do two things that none of her colleagues had yet attempted. She refrained from partisan blame and proposed a plan to end the crisis. “I ask my Democratic and Republican colleagues to come together,” Collins said on Oct. 8. “We can do it. We can legislate responsibly and in good faith.”'

Another women-only job event

Mastodon · 17 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A women-only job and resource fair will be held 10 a.m. to 2:30 p.m. Thursday, Oct. 17 at the Glenville Recreation Center.

Cleveland Councilman Kevin Conwell, one of the sponsors of the Mothers & Families Together Resource Fair, said organizers believed it is important to have an event focused on women.

"Three-quarters of the households in the area I represent are headed by females," he said of his East Side ward that includes the Glenville neighborhood. "In order to be successful, women need resources and opportunity."

A sentence from the flier makes clear the target group for the event: "The Mothers & Families Together Fair will offer resources to help empower women facing economic challenges, women in recovery from addiction and those who are in need of extra support to turn their lives in a more positive direction."'

UK: White boys 'the problem' for Britain's schools, says Government aide

Mastodon · 17 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Britain cannot expect to flourish economically unless there is a concerted effort to halt academic failure by white boys as they are the “dominant racial group”, a senior Government education adviser has warned.

Dr Tim Leunig, an economic historian and aide to the schools minister David Laws, said that for boys at least “being white” had become “the problem” in schools.
He argued that from an economic point of view it matters “more” to target underachievement among white pupils than others.
...
And he added that the education system could be described as “institutionally sexist” by failing to ensure boys and girls are making similar levels of progress.

His comments, reported by the TES, come after official figures show that white boys from deprived backgrounds are now the worst performing ethnic group in reading tests for six years olds.'

Editorial: Title IX discriminates against men as well as women

Mastodon · 18 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the 1960s and 1970s, our nation established several guidelines by which we were to construct a more fair society. Being a time of extreme civil rights activism, this era was contained more strides toward equality than any other.

...

The problem with this is that now, Title IX is backfiring, as male athletes are made unable to participate in particular sports. For example, Iowa State's baseball team, which had existed as early as 1892, played its last season in 2001. As the beloved American pastime, it was a shame to see baseball go. It is more of a shame that capable baseball players are no longer funded and supported by the university, due to "budget cuts" that were a result of equalizing men's and women's sports at Iowa State.

...

Forty years down the road from Title IX's original implementation, we need to step back and consider adjusting the rules established by this legislation in university athletics.

Title IX's purpose is noble, but when it gets in the way of equality for men or women, it is time to recalibrate our need for it.'

'Women Make Better Doctors Than Men'

Mastodon · 18 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At least that's what a recent study of diabetic patients found. But the boys shouldn't pack up their doctor kits yet.

In a new report released by the University of Montreal, investigators found that women outperformed men on certain metrics of patient care.
...
"Women had significantly higher scores in terms of compliance with practice guidelines," said Martel in a statement that accompanied the release of the study. "They were more likely than men to prescribe recommended medications and to plan required examinations."

Why? It's possible the female doctors were simply more willing to devote more time to their patients The men tended to cycle their patients though quickly—as evidenced by fact that the male doctors performed, on average, 1,000 more basic treatment procedures per year than the women. But that seeming efficiency may be self-defeating: the investigators worry that the quicker the turnover in any one doctor's office, the likelier a patient is to return to have questions answered or treatment details explained that weren't addressed in the initial appointment.'

Hepatitis B Mutation Explains Higher Cancer Rates in Men

Mastodon · 18 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A team of researchers has identified a novel mutation in the hepatitis B virus (HBV) in Korea that appears only in men and could help explain why HBV-infected men are roughly five times more likely than HBV-infected women to develop liver cancer. Although some women do progress to cirrhosis and liver cancer, the mutation is absent in HBV in women. The research is published ahead of print in the Journal of Clinical Microbiology.

"This is the first mutation found that can explain the gender disparity in incidence of hepatocellular carcinoma," says Bum-Joon Kim of Seoul National University, Korea, an author on the study.
...
HBV infection is a global health problem, with 350 million chronic carriers of the virus, a number that is roughly equivalent to the combined populations of the US and Canada. The prevalence of infection ranges from less than half a percent in the United States to around 10 percent in Asia, to as high as 15 percent in parts of Africa. Major means of transmission include injection drug abuse, unprotected sex, and transmission via childbirth. Worldwide mortality is about 600,000 annually, according to the World Health Organization. In the US, despite the availability of a vaccine, an estimated 3,000 die annually from hepatocellular cancer or chronic liver disease caused by hepatitis B.'

Circumcision and human rights

Mastodon · 18 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'Tanya Gold articulates well the existence of contemporary antisemitism (A ban on male circumcision would be antisemitic. How could it not be?, 12 October). But I think she's wrong in describing the Council of Europe as antisemitic for including ritual male circumcision in its examples of violations of children's rights.

I write as a male Jew circumcised at birth in 1958 as part of ritual. I would rather not have been. Yes, male circumcision isn't as extreme a practice as female genital mutilation. However, I know from personal experience that it results in such problems as desensitised sexual feeling, frequent soreness and occasional bleeding. I believe that this irreversible action is at heart an assault on a child, incapable of giving meaningful consent. I attach no blame to my parents' generation, who would have made the decision in the aftermath of the Holocaust, and who would have experienced a society more overtly hostile to them. But I find it depressing that contemporary Jews wish to continue the practice.
...
The Council used language that was reasonable and balanced, and I would support a legal prohibition to ritual circumcision. If such a move is expressed in language or images that are antisemitic, then we fight them on those grounds. But that's not the case here.'

Autistic boy draws a cartoon bomb, school officials suspend him

Mastodon · 18 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An autistic boy at Hillcrest Middle School in Greenville, S.C. was suspended for drawing a cartoonish bomb and showing his friends, reports MSN Now on Oct. 16. Rhett Parham, much like other young boys, enjoys the classic video game Bomber Man and drew a picture of an old style kettle bomb with a fuse. His innocent drawing ignited some real controversy however after older boys at the school blew him in.
...
“They actually reiterated to me they knew he was non-violent,” said Parham. “They knew he was not actually having a bomb, creating or making a bomb. But that they could not go without making an example of him and without having some type of action because they were worried about their perception. Perception is actually the word he used. He, a school official, said ‘Perception is reality, Rhett, and the parents will perceive maybe you have a bomb or you’re violent.”"'

Woman arrested in shooting of husband, granddaughter

Mastodon · 18 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Calaveras County sheriff's detectives have arrested a Burson woman after a shooting Wednesday night left her husband dead and her granddaughter critically wounded. A 5-month-old baby found at the scene was unhurt.

Charity Ford, 56, faces charges of murder, attempted murder and child cruelty, authorities said in a news release. Deputies identified the granddaughter as Britney McGhee, 20. They did not identify the male victim by name, pending notification of his biological relatives, authorities said. But they said the 52-year-old was Charity Ford's husband, and McGhee's stepgrandfather.
...
Deputies also found a 5-month-old boy in the house. Authorities said the baby is McGhee's son. All four shared the home.'

Teacher fired for allegedly giving minors alcohol, condoms

Matt · 18 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MIAMI (WSVN) -- A South Florida teacher has been fired after she is accused of providing students with alcohol and condoms.

The Miami-Dade School Board terminated Isabel Diaz Almaraz on Wednesday for acting inappropriately with students. "On behalf of the Superintendent, I am requesting that the board enter final order terminating Isabel Diaz Almaraz' employment with the school board," said assistant school board attorney Heather Ward.

Almaraz was a full-time dance teacher at South Miami High School. The district first began to investigate Almaraz because of several complaints from parents.

In the spring of 2012, the district said Almaraz provided students with a hotel suite for an after-prom party. The hotel suite was $1,000 and was paid for with her PayPal account.'

Mom of girl charged in Florida bullying suicide arrested on child abuse charges

Mastodon · 18 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The mother of one of the two girls facing charges over the suicide of a bullied 12-year-old Florida girl was jailed Friday on child abuse charges in a case authorities say is unrelated to the felony case against her daughter.

Vivian Lee Vosburg, 30, of Lakeland was being held without bond in the Polk County Jail on two counts of child abuse with bodily harm and four counts of child neglect, the sheriff's office said.
...
According to the affidavit, Vosburg told investigators Thursday that she was the woman in the video and acknowledged punching one of the boys in the face and the other in the back of the head and shoulders. She said she knew she shouldn't have hit them, according to the affidavit.
...
"This clearly indicates to us that this appears to be a normal way of life," Judd said at a news conference. "They're laughing and cussing and throwing the F-bomb around, then they're posting that conduct for all to see."

Of Vosburg's daughter, he said: "The apple doesn't fall far from the tree."'

NIH funded study: "Male Circumcision and Use of Foreskin Tissues for HIV Prevention in Uganda"

Minuteman · 19 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Medical male circumcision (MMC) reduces HIV acquisition in men, and viral STIs in men and women. However, uptake of MMC in many African countries is less than expected and has disproportionately been among younger, lower risk men. There is an urgent need for implementation science incorporating qualitative/quantitative mixed methods research to increase the demand for MMC, particularly among higher risk men; to increase the efficiency of MMC services using MC devices, task shifting/sharing and mobile MMC camps; and to conduct population-level monitoring of coverage and impact. At the basic science level, foreskins collected during MC provide unique access to genital mucosa for study of the virologic, immunologic and host genetic factors associated with vulnerability to or protection from HIV, with implications for HIV prevention. The Rakai Health Sciences Program (RHSP) and Makerere University School of Public Health (MakSPH) in Uganda have collaborated with Johns Hopkins University (JHU) for over 20 years. We conducted two trials of MMC, post-trial surveillance, evaluation of MMC services, and assessment of MMC procedures, including new MMC devices. We have also collaborated on immunologic and virologic studies of foreskin tissues and the genital microbiome. The collaboration has trained over 50 degree and non-degree students via Fogarty International Center (FIC) awards.'

Feminists Ignore Biology, Dissident Feminist Camille Paglia Argues

Mastodon · 19 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Self-described "dissident feminist" Camille Paglia recently took feminists and women's studies programs to task for failing to acknowledge biological gender differences. She also criticized the American education system for failing to recognize the unique needs of boys and girls, and suggested there could be a conservative backlash against the cultural message that gender is socially, rather than biologically, constructed.
...
In her opening remarks, available here, Paglia accuses women's studies programs at universities of being too insular and closed-minded, and feminists of being ignorant of gender differences and hostile to stay-at-home mothering and the educational needs of boys.

"I do believe that gender roles are malleable and dynamically shaped by culture," she said. "However, the frequency with which gender roles return to a polarized norm, as well as the startling similarity of gender roles in societies separated by vast distances of time and space, does suggest that there is something fundamentally constant in gender that is based in concrete facts.'

UK: Now three in five doctors aged under 30 are women: Fears for care standards as junior doctors fall pregnant

Mastodon · 19 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three out of five young doctors on hospital wards and in GP surgeries are women.

They made up 61 per cent of doctors under 30 last year and 46 per cent of those aged 30 to 50.

Figures show men remain dominant in the oldest age group, with women comprising less than a third of doctors over 50.

But the numbers suggest the medical takeover by women is slowing.

In 2012, 55 per cent of medical students were female, compared with 61 per cent in 2003 and 57 per cent in 2007.

Overall, almost half of GPs are women, or some 46 per cent, according to the General Medical Council.

Previous reports have found hospitals are facing staff shortages as a result of junior doctors becoming pregnant as soon as they receive their first secure job.'

Malaysia: 'Female teacher wooed boy, 15, with Eat, Pray, Love ... and SEX'

Mastodon · 19 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SHE provided a shoulder to cry on following a mishap on a school trip. He was a teenager with a crush.

Yet this was no innocent young couple in love.

The 32-year-old married teacher has pleaded guilty over her affair with a 15-year-old boy.

The mother of two had sex with him at her flat after wooing him with gifts, including a copy of the novel Eat, Pray, Love.

She then continued the illicit relationship for more than a month until his parents found out.

Neither of them can be named.'

31-YO Posed As Teen To Have Sex With 14-Year-Old, Kept Victim Locked In House

Mastodon · 19 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 31-year-old Florida woman is accused of posing as a teenager in order to have sex with a 14-year-old boy.

Naomi Dixon is charged with two counts of lewd and lascivious battery involving a sex act with a child, according to the Daytona Beach News-Journal. The victim told Volusia County sheriff's investigators that he met Dixon at a party in early September. Dixon allegedly claimed she was 17 years old, and the victim said he was 14.

After the two met, they had sex at her Deltona home eight times and stayed together regularly, the victim said. According to a sheriff's report, the victim had a hard time leaving Dixon's home. On several occasions when he tried to go home, she became upset, locked the door and even choked him.

The victim claimed the woman carved his first initial onto her arm with a pocket knife. He told his parents about the relationship on Sept. 25 after growing tired of the woman trying to keep him at her house.'

Patty Murray: Congress Wouldn't Be Such A Mess If Women Were In Charge

Mastodon · 19 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If women ruled the country, the government wouldn't be on the brink of shutting down or defaulting on its debt, according to Sen. Patty Murray (D-Wash.).

Murray spoke to a largely female audience on Wednesday, at an event that was part of The Atlantic's Women of Washington series.

She decried Republican legislation that would shut down the government unless Obamacare is defunded. "The rational thing to do," Murray said, "if there were a group of women in charge, is that we would keep the government running for the next several weeks, and we would say [on] the debt ceiling [that] we're going to pay our bills, and now let's do what we need to do, and sit down and solve our budget problems."
...
Murray isn't the only female senator who believes Congress may be less dysfunctional if there were more women.

When asked about regulatory reform legislation at Fortune magazine's "Most Powerful Women" dinner in April 2010, Sen. Dianne Feinstein (D-Calif.) said, "well, I actually think that if we had all women [in the Senate], we would solve the problem."

Sen. Susan Collins (R-Maine), who was sitting in the front row at the event, enthusiastically clapped in response.'

'Congress should be ashamed of its economic violence against women'

Mastodon · 19 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Violence isn't always physical.

I've said this recently in a work context, though I can't remember the exact circumstances. My full-time job is in social justice research, and violence comes up frequently. It could be about hate crimes, homicides in under-resourced communities as a byproduct of the economic violence imposed on these communities, or a number of other things.

I thought of violence last week when I heard a story on NPR about the government shutdown's effect on low-income women and children. Funding for the Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children, known as WIC, is so low in some states that money could run out in a week. Hearing a woman on the radio talk about her need to feed her children as the prices of basic nutritional food items like fruit, eggs, oatmeal, milk and baby formula keep increasing made me think about how ironic it is that the shutdown started Oct. 1, the first day of National Domestic Violence Awareness Month. I shared the story on Facebook, pointed out the date and added my own commentary: "Denying food to women and children is an act of violence against women. Congress should be ashamed."'

'No, women wouldn't have solved the shutdown sooner!'

Mastodon · 19 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But, according to recent reports from CNN, MSNBC and the New York Times, Congress could have gotten things up and running again sooner if women had been calling the shots.
...
As Ann Friedman noted recently, there is some data to support the idea that women in leadership positions are less impulsive, less corruptible and more willing to compromise than their male colleagues and counterparts. But researchers suggest that may be because, with so few represented in the seats of power, women in leadership positions feel they have to succeed because they have more to prove. And for all that Collins and Cantwell may have done to facilitate the deal that was eventually reached, there were other women, like Republican House members Michele Bachmann and Marsha Blackburn, working just as hard to maintain the deadlock.

So while it may feel good to read Hanna Rosin declare that, ”Perhaps this will be remembered as the week when everything shifted, when we realized that leaving groups of men in charge of global decisions and of facing down terrorists is not a good idea, and we’d better calmly hand the reins over to the women,” it’s still a flawed argument.

There is also something uncomfortable, even unfeminist about relying on reductive stereotypes about women to argue why more should be in power. Borrowing again from Friedman, while women’s alleged penchants for empathy and compromise are currently being used to advocate for greater influence in the public and political spheres, the same arguments are employed just as often to marginalize women and keep them at home – whether or not they want to be there.
...
If that means cleaning up some political messes, all the better. But increasing the number of women in Congress also means that more will soon be making their own messes, too.'

'The war on voting is a war on women'

Mastodon · 19 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The assault on voting rights is a naked attempt to suppress the votes of minorities, students, the elderly, and the poor. But don't be fooled. This War on Voting is an essential part of the War on Women.

Nowhere is that clearer than in the recent wave of efforts to disenfranchise voters through strict voter identification laws, limits on early voting, and elimination of same-day voter registration across the country. And since the Supreme Court's vicious undercutting of the Voting Rights Act last June in Shelby County v. Holder, we are facing even more of an onslaught.

...

What is not commonly known, however, is that women are among those most affected by voter ID laws. In one survey, 66% of women voters had an ID that reflected their current name, according to the Brennan Center. The other 34% of women would have to present both a birth certificate and proof of marriage, divorce, or name change in order to vote, a task that is particularly onerous for elderly women and costly for poor women who may have to pay to access these records.'

State report cards: Eugene-Springfield girls continue to outdo boys

Mastodon · 19 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Girls' academic juggernaut isn't losing steam.

Female students in Eugene-Springfield metro area schools continue to outperform their male peers in nearly every academic category, new state report cards show.

Girls in the Bethel, Eugene and Springfield school districts were more likely to graduate from high school, have lower dropout rates and outperform male students in state math, reading and writing tests.

Some national research has pointed to the way girls are socialized to explain their greater likelihood of academic success, while other research says school systems are structured in ways that end up favoring female students. For example, some studies suggest that girls tend to do better in cooperative environments where they are asked to sit still and listen, compared to boys who may feel pressured by their peers to be more outgoing and competitive.

A University of Michigan study found that the number of boys who said they don't like school increased by 71 percent since 1980.'

Marta Mossburg, columnist: Despite ‘new rules,’ boyhood is not a mental illness

Mastodon · 19 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'All the employees of school districts on a witch hunt to expel and otherwise permanently punish young boys for shooting toy guns or forming their fists into the shape of a gun need to read “Back to Normal.”

The purpose of psychologist Enrico Gnaulati’s 2013 book is to argue how ordinary childhood behavior is often misdiagnosed as ADD, ADHD, depression and autism — frequently with life-long, disturbing consequences.

But along the way he raises the taboo question of whether we “label boys as mentally unstable, behaviorally unmanageable, academically underachieving, in need of special-education services, or displaying behavior warranting school suspension just because their behavior deviates noticeably from that of the average girl?”
...
And it should give school administrators perspective on how best to handle unruly boys and channel their energy without condemning their nature.

At the very least, we don’t need any more boys suspended for chewing a Pop-Tart into a gun.'

Wife Of Former NY Mets Pitcher Faces Up To 20 Years For Alleged Crimes

Mastodon · 20 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In January of 1996, Michael Jr. was hanging out with Anna and her then boyfriend, Paul Dejongh, when the teen was shot to death. The story was so sensational it ended up a reenactment on America's Most Wanted .

"Her words were, from all I've been told, 'get rid of him,' and that's no different than if you got these gangsters. When they use term, 'get rid of him,' we all know what it means," said Michael.

Anna was charged with murder but jumped bail and fled with her boyfriend. After a five month manhunt, she was apprehended in Oregon.

"I think Anna is as guilty as the person who pulled the trigger," said Romaine.

Paul Dejongh was also captured and pled guilty to second degree murder. All charges against Anna were dropped, for lack of evidence.

"If Anna was innocent, then why did she flee? Why did she stay away so long? She's guilty as sin, and yes, indeed, and she got away with murder," said Michael.

Now, 17 years later, the Evans' are not surprised to find Anna Benson shackled in court and charged with a violent crime.

"I think that her husband was extremely lucky," commented Michael.'

New formula results in higher alimony

el cid · 20 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Based on an example Plog offered — a husband making $200,000 a year and his wife earning $50,000 — under the new formula, the husband's 40 percent per month would be $6,667, and 50 percent of the wife's income would be $2,083 per month, so the result under the formula would mean the wife receives about $4,583 per month.

Under the old system, he said, if the wife's expenses exceed her income by $1,500 a month, a court might order monthly maintenance of $1,500 to $2,000 to help meet her reasonable needs.

"If uniformly applied, the (new guidelines) will promote settlements," Plog said, "but the problem is that the payer will have a gun to the head."
...
The Women's Lobby made the bill a priority legislative issue, arguing that it would promote settlement and successful mediation, reduce litigation, and prevent women and families from falling into poverty. In 2011, single women with children had a median income of $26,705, the lowest of all family types in Colorado, compared with $42,075 for single men with children.

The bill was passed in April and signed into law by Gov. John Hickenlooper in May.'

MoveOn.org Petition to ABC News

charlie · 20 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

A new petition exists on MoveOn.org, complaining of bias by ABC News. Statement:

'We are offended by 20/20's repeatedly offensive reporting of men as violent, as aggressors, as 'deadbeats' and as the oppressors of women. We are boycotting the television show until they start to present the facts as they are. Men want to be with their children. We suffer most of domestic violence. There are nearly no systems to support us. We are underrepresented in research, in mental health services, in education, and in families.'

Broken families, broken Britain

Matt · 20 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'The Chief Inspector of Schools, Sir Michael Wilshaw, has ranged widely in apportioning blame for the abuse or neglect of children in Britain. Those at the receiving end of his tongue-lashing included 20 local authorities, with the city of Birmingham in particular singled out as ‘one of the worst places to grow up in the developed world’.

But Sir Michael was clear about the root cause of children’s problems today: hollowed out and fragmented families, where the relationship between mother and father has broken down or never existed in the first place.

He said (£) the problems exposed in child abuse scandals were being deepened by an apparent national obsession with ‘pussyfooting around’ and ‘making excuses’ for bad parents. At the root of wider social problems lay the alienation of many children from their natural father.

‘These children lack more than money: they lack parents who take responsibility for seeing them raised well. It is this poverty of accountability which costs them.'

Real family-law reform must start with shared parenting

Matt · 20 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'No one in government can use ignorance as an excuse for tolerating Canada's dysfunctional legal system: Several recent reports have laid the problem bare.

Last April, the federal government released a special-committee report, "Meaningful Change for Family Justice: Beyond Wise Words," which stated: "Canadians do not have adequate access to family justice." In August, the Canadian Bar Association released its 50-page "Envisioning Equal Justice" report, describing access to justice as "abysmal."

Now we have a new report, "Access to Justice: a Roadmap for Change," the outcome of a project initiated in 2008 by Chief Justice Beverley McLachlin. The roadmap envisages better dispute-resolution options, more legal-aid funding, plus triage toward appropriate services and other tools for efficiency to help deliver speedier, more tailored service.

We know that family law accounts for 35% of all civil cases; that four of 10 Ontario family law disputes remain unresolved after three years; and that about 50% of family-law litigants represent themselves in court. And yet the Family Justice Working Group's Report admits, "We lack an empirical understanding of what happens to family cases after they enter the justice system …. how many cases settle, when or why they settle, or after what cost and on what basis they resolve."'

Following Our Hearts: A Father's Brit Shalom Journey

Matt · 20 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My wife, Amari, was seven months pregnant and we were at our midwife appointment. At this point we knew we would be having a boy. Near the end of our visit, the midwife asked us what we were planning to do about circumcision.

Amari and I are both Jewish and we had discussed it a couple of times before. My take was: “We're Jewish. My grandparents are Holocaust survivors. Our boy is getting circumcised." However, Amari was against the procedure, although she was willing to do it if it meant that much to me.

I had never attended a bris. The thought of cutting off a baby's foreskin made me queasy. That’s when it hit me: How in the world was I going to witness my own son going through it? I put that thought aside, figuring I'd deal with it when it happened.

That brings us back to our midwife appointment. My answer to the midwife was, “We're Jewish so we need to have a bris. I have no idea how I'll be in the same room, the thought disgusts me however….” That’s when the midwife said something that changed everything. She said, "You know, there are alternatives. There are ways to honor your religion without cutting off your son's foreskin." REALLY!?'

Jews Against Circumcision: How a New Jewish Generation Views Genital Autonomy and Human Rights

Matt · 20 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There are a growing number of Jews who are becoming increasingly vocal in questioning both the ethics and the legality of circumcision. Jews in the Reform Judaism movement have already been advocating for an end to ritual circumcision during the past 180 years. What follows is a collection of statements from Jews who question the ethics and legality of child circumcision.

Jewish Americans Support Outlawing Child Circumcision
"I am a Jewish mother against circumcision and in support of passing Bill 1777. For years I was a certified childbirth educator and now a journalist and filmmaker. I continue to educate people that childbirth is a natural event rather than one filled with unnecessary drugs and other medical intervention, and circumcision is an unnatural event. These are two clear-cut examples of interfering with nature."

- Katherine Mora, Jewish Mother
Testimony before the Massachusetts Joint Committee on the Judiciary.

“The human right to body integrity would, in this instance, override their religious right.…non-fundamentalist Jews, who constitute a very large number of Reform, Conservative, and even some Orthodox Jews, believe that human ethics are an essential element in the Jewish tradition. …there is a Jewish tradition practiced by virtually all Jewish parents today that is morally wrong. This should give pause to any non-fundamentalist religious Jew, and it is a black eye for the liberal movements that they have not taken this issue more seriously. Perhaps a law prohibiting circumcision is just what these Jews need to start a serious discussion about the problem of brit milah.”

- Eli Ungar-Sargon, Outlawing Circumcision: Good for the Jews?, Forward, the Jewish Daily, May 20, 2011“'

Women Embrace Shared Parenting

Matt · 20 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Have you heard about the new organization, Leading Women for Shared Parenting or LW4SP? This is a group of prominent women who recognize that absent issues of abuse, neglect or abandonment, government policy and laws must be structured in such a way as to maximize the opportunity of all parents to contribute to the social, emotional, intellectual, physical, moral and spiritual development of their children.

According to Pew Research on the Huffington Post, there is yet another data point to add to the changing portrait of American parents: the number of single fathers has risen ninefold since demographers began measuring it more than 50 years ago.'

WaPo Commentary: Questioning circumcision isn't anti-Semitic

Matt · 20 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this month the Council of Europe agreed on a nonbinding resolution in support of "children's right to physical integrity." The purpose was to reinforce the protection of children's rights, oppose violence against children, and promote children's participation in significant decisions that affect them. Forced genital cutting of male and female children was mentioned among examples of violations.

...

Days later, Israel's Ministry of Foreign Affairs, along with traditional Jewish groups, denounced the resolution. The ministry statement said the resolution "fosters hate and racist trends," denied that circumcision causes any harm, and strongly objected to any comparison between cutting of male and female genitals.

Others called the resolution anti-Semitic, a violation of religious freedom, and a "thinly disguised attack" on European Jews. This predictable reaction calls for a response.

...

Here are some relevant facts.

* Jewish circumcision is not mandatory; it is a choice. Some Jews in North America, South America, Europe, and Israel do not circumcise their sons.

* Circumcision is a topic of debate in the Jewish community and has been questioned historically and in various Jewish publications in recent years.

* In actual practice, most Jews circumcise because of cultural conformity, not religious reasons.

...

It is possible to question the actions of a person or group without being categorically opposed to the person or group. Are those who question an American government policy anti-American? Questioning an action that one believes to be harmful is more likely to be motivated by good will than ill will.

Jewish authorities avoid the resolution's central issue. They do not claim that children do not have a right to physical integrity, nor do they claim that circumcision is not a violation of physical integrity. Jewish authorities tacitly admit they have no direct response. Their verbal attacks on the resolution appear to be intended to intimidate critics.'

Women Battle Online Anti-Women Hate From the 'Manosphere'

Mastodon · 20 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Deep in the underbelly of the Internet is a hidden corner known as the "Manosphere"— a collection of websites, Facebook pages and chat rooms where men vent their rage and spew anti-women rhetoric.

Protected by the anonymity of the Internet, men feel free to post hateful and violent comments. Posts such as "I really wouldn't mind shooting a [expletive] dead in the face, they are evil, all of them," and "Women are the natural enemies of men" are commonplace on sites like "A Voice for Men," a Manosphere blog run by Paul Elam.
...
But experts like Mark Potok, from the Southern Poverty Law Center, believe this rhetoric is problematic. "The Manosphere is an underworld of so-called men's rights groups and individuals on the Internet, which is just fraught with really hard-line anti-woman misogyny," Potok told "20/20."'

NPO: Could Shared Parenting Become the Presumption in Maryland?

Matt · 20 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Governor Martin O'Malley has convened a Maryland Commission on Child Custody Decision Making. Maybe this is an indication that our Maryland government thinks there is a problem? We sure hope so.

The Commission is the result of HB687 passed during the 2013 legislative session. As part of the Commission's work it is holding public hearings around the state. Please attend one of the Public Hearings and bring your ideas on how to make shared parenting the norm in Maryland.

National Parents Organization of Maryland worked to pass this legislation to begin the process of bringing shared parenting to Maryland. Maryland need not lag behind other states. Please let us know if you will be attending one of these hearings.'

'A Feminist's Dream Date'

Mastodon · 20 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

"This is what a date would be like if men treated women with absolute equality..."

Tanning gene linked to increased risk of testicular cancer

Minuteman · 21 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A gene important in skin tanning has been linked to higher risk for testicular cancer in white men, according to a study led by scientists from the U.S. National Institutes of Health and the University of Oxford in England. Nearly 80 percent of white men carry a variant form of this gene, which increased risk of testicular cancer up to threefold in the study.

The research appeared online October 10, 2013 in the journal Cell, and is the result of an integrated analysis of big data supported by laboratory research. The team suspected that variations in a gene pathway controlled by the tumor suppressor gene p53 could have both positive and negative effects on human health.
...
“White males with a single nucleotide variation in KITLG, called the G allele, have the highest odds of having testicular cancer. In fact, the twofold to threefold increased risk is one of the highest and most significant among all cancer GWAS conducted within the past few years,” said Bond. “The high frequency of this allele in light skin individuals may explain why testicular cancer is so much more frequent in people of European descent than those of African descent.”

Bond said although the G allele increases testicular cancer risk, it may explain why testicular tumors are often easily cured with chemotherapy. “Most other tumors have a mutant p53, but in these testicular cell tumors, the p53 is functioning properly, and the drugs used for testicular cancer appear to work in concert with p53’s tumor suppression function to kill the cancer cells.”'

Young: Mean girls test biases about women

Mastodon · 21 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The appalling story of the suicide of a 12-year-old Florida girl who had endured months of vicious online and in-person harassment, and the arrest last week of two of her alleged tormentors -- ages 12 and 14 -- raises tough questions about bullying, the role of social media in children's lives, and adult responsibility. But the tragedy also reminds us of a basic truth often overlooked in our age of feminist consciousness: human cruelty knows no gender.

The bullies who hounded Rebecca Ann Sedwick -- taunting her and picking fights at school, then continuing the persecution by cellphone and telling her to kill herself -- were all girls, more than a dozen. The ringleader, according to the authorities, was the 14-year-old now facing charges of aggravated stalking. She is reported to have started her vendetta because her boyfriend had once dated Rebecca, and to have not only bullied the victim herself, but also terrorized other girls into shunning her. Shortly before her arrest, authorities say, the girl posted a Facebook message saying, in crude terms, that she didn't care about Rebecca's suicide. (Police say the girl has denied posting the message, saying her account was hacked.)
...
Some feminists argue that girl-on-girl bullying is the result of internalized misogyny, of a patriarchal culture that pits girls and women against each other. But what about boys who abuse and bully other boys? Or, for that matter, girls who bully boys? Two years ago in another Florida town, three 14-year-old girls assaulted an 11-year-old boy in public, stripping him naked while he struggled and screamed; one girl filmed the "prank" and posted the video on YouTube. (The boy's mother chose not to file charges.)'

'The angry ladies of Jezebel'

Mastodon · 21 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I don't want to write a standard review of The Book of Jezebel: An Illustrated Encyclopedia of Lady Things. It's the new book by the editors of the feminist website Jezebel, and simply saying that it's a very angry book — as well as being very funny in parts — isn't enough. Because when you say feminists are angry, they respond that you are a "Frat Bro" or a right-winger, and the conversation stops. And a deeper analysis of feminist apoplexy is important because the rage of the Jezebels is indicative of a serious cultural problem that is potentially fatal for the United States, which has become a very, very angry country.

...

I bring up Bly because when reading The Book of Jezebel you are confronted not just with humor and a high level of intelligence, but deep, deep rage. Not anger — rage. It goes much deeper than politics, although in modern America politics is where this rage find its expression. Thus the malevolence towards "dead white males" and the liberal obsession with feelings and personal grievance. The bogus "war on women" is really nothing but liberal women acting out against bad fathers. The frightening thing about this rage is that it is insatiable even as it demands resolution through politics. Before the 1960s and the disintegration of the family, a political revolutionary would map out his plan for correcting the flaws he saw in the political system. Today's radicals speak in tones that are more personal. Their opponents are not just wrong, or obstacles to get past to attain better living conditions — they are evil, they are guilty, and they are personally culpable for screwing our lives up. Politics can't cure this wound.

...

The writers at Jezebel are angry women. Their pain is beyond the reach of politics to solve. To be fair, there are many funny entries in The Book of Jezebel, like the one for Hipster: "Identifier claimed by no one but freely subjected on any person more Navajo-printed, leather-jacketed, asymmetrically-hairstyled, unshowered, ironically racist, Pitchfork-reading, warehouse-dwelling, amateur-mandolin-playing, or neon than you." But the jokes can't mask the rage. This is why that even as America has progressed and the treatment of women has vastly improved, the anger of the feminists has grown more acute. Nothing short of a matriarchal utopia will suffice. It's easier than admitting what really ails you.'

Nordic Ombudspersons Will Seek a Ban on Non-Therapeutic Male Circumcision

Matt · 22 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(OSLO) - At a meeting held 30 September 2013 in Oslo, the children's ombudspersons from the five Nordic countries (Sweden, Norway, Finland, Denmark, and Iceland), and the children's spokesperson from Greenland, in addition to representatives of associations of Nordic paediatricians and pediatric surgeons, have agreed to work with their respective national governments to achieve a ban on non-therapeutic circumcision of underage boys.
...
Circumcision without a medical indication on a person unable to provide informed consent conflicts with basic principles of medical ethics, particularly because the operation is irreversible, painful and may cause serious complications. There are no health-related reasons to circumcise young boys in the Nordic countries. Arguments that may argue in favour of circumcision in adult men are of little relevance to children in the Nordic area. Boys can make up their own minds about the operation when they get old enough to provide informed consent.'

False tales of rape deter the true victims from speaking

Mastodon · 22 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'RAPE and sexual abuse remain two of society's greatest shames. False allegations like those reported in today's Oxford Mail do nothing to help society tackle such sick crimes.

Fortunately, we have come a long way from an infamous BBC documentary broadcast 30 years ago which showed a grossly unsympathetic interrogation of a rape complainant by Thames Valley Police officers.

The force says it is committed to helping women make complaints and bringing as many cases as possible to court to send out a real deterrent and message to victims that justice will be sought.

...

Firstly, it plays into a dangerous myth that a large number of rape claims are false, a myth that plagues complainants with self-doubt that their ordeal was somehow their "fault". Secondly, it risks deterring women who are prepared to speak out because – no matter how sure they are of their case – they fear they will not be believed by police or jurors.

Those considering making a false claim must think of the impact their lies will have, not just for themselves and who they accuse, but on society as a whole.'

Women are too quick to put men down and should embrace chivalry, says Jilly Cooper

Mastodon · 22 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Her novels are perhaps too racy to be considered as portraying a traditional view of romance.

But Jilly Cooper says modern women should be more willing to embrace the virtues of old-fashioned chivalry.

The best-selling author criticised women for being too quick to ‘put men down’ with a constant bashing that has left them ‘brow-beaten’.

...

She said it was a shame that modern couples rushed to have children out of wedlock. ‘Nobody seems to mention the word love any more. They just talk about having sex and women are having babies and not bothering to have husbands any more,’ she said.

...

Mrs Cooper has never shied away from taking a traditional view of relationships. In 1969 she wrote How To Stay Married, which controversially advised women to turn a blind eye to a husband’s infidelity.

In the 1990s she discovered that her husband Leo had enjoyed a six-year affair.

Their marriage survived and Mrs Cooper now cares for Leo, 79, who was diagnosed with Parkinson’s disease more than a decade ago, at their home in Gloucestershire.'

---

http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Jilly_Cooper

Scotland: Male abuse victims marginalised

Mastodon · 22 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My recent review of more than 400 academic, policy and practitioner texts on domestic abuse experienced by trans, bi, gay and heterosexual men established that there are significant barriers facing male victims who seek help. For example, a significant proportion of men in mixed-sex relationships do not want their abusive partner arrested and prosecuted and their care for the interests of their children is such that they do not want to risk their children's relationship with their mother being undermined by inappropriate state action whether by police, courts or social workers. There is also evidence that men in same-sex relationships may be reluctant to report the abuse they experience for fear of a lack of understanding towards themselves but also a fear of how homophobia might affect the treatment of their abusive partner.

The biggest problem, however, is what researchers call the "public story" of domestic abuse, that is that in the political, policy and academic debate domestic abuse is constructed as "violence against women" by male partners. This has been shown to have a significant negative impact on those in same-sex relationships to the point where victims of significant domestic abuse cannot even acknowledge to themselves that what is happening to them is abuse, let alone be confident in seeking help because their relationship, by definition, does not include a male perpetrator and female victim. This is all the more true for men who experience domestic abuse in mixed-sex relationships; the toxic effect of sexism and hegemonic forms of masculinity makes their help-seeking all the more difficult.'

Natalie Portman: Hitting Chris Hemsworth In 'Thor' Was For 'Womankind'

Mastodon · 22 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Natalie Portman says hitting Chris Hemsworth was "one small slap for womankind."

The actress, who reprises her role as Jane Foster in "Thor: The Dark World," gives the superhero a smack in the Marvel sequel.

At a promotional event on Saturday, Portman said that she channeled all her single girlfriends: "You hear all these stories about guys and it's just good to get a nice on-screen slap like 'you didn't call me back.'"

The intention may have been payback but, according to Hemsworth, the result was less so.'

Jobs Report Shows Progress For Women On Key Measure

Mastodon · 22 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While the September jobs report released Tuesday was largely disappointing, it contained some good news for women, who saw the largest gain in public sector jobs in over three years.

Women gained 48,000 jobs in the public sector, reversing a trend that has made it harder for them to recover from the recession. It was the largest single-month gain for women since May 2010, according to an analysis by the National Women's Law Center, and put them far ahead of men, who lost 26,000 public sector jobs in September.

Since June 2009, women have gained 2.5 million private sector jobs, but lost 380,000 public sector jobs, while men gained 3.8 million private sector jobs over the same period and lost only 325,000 public sector jobs. Women's public sector losses have canceled out 14.8 percent of their private sector gains, while that figure is only 8.4 percent for men.

...

Overall, the percentage of unemployed adult women ticked slightly down in September from 6.3 percent in August to 6.2 percent in September. The overall unemployment rate for people over the age of 16 is 7.2 percent.

"Now policymakers have a chance to craft a budget that ends sequestration, invests in job creation, and protects programs women and their families depend on," Robbins said. "Millions of hard-working women and families are counting on them.”'

Related: She’s Got the Job: Unemployment Rate for Women Falls

The Coca-Cola Company to Fund Annual Scholarship for the Women's Foodservice Forum Executive Leadership Program

Mastodon · 22 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Women's Foodservice Forum (WFF) announced today a new scholarship sponsored by The Coca-Cola Company for high potential women in the food service industry. The annual Chris Lowe Scholars Award provides a $15,000 grant to an outstanding woman in the food service industry. The grant will cover attendance and accommodations to the WFF Executive Leadership Program.

The Coca-Cola scholarship honors Chris Lowe who recently retired from The Coca-Cola Company following a 23-year career that included serving nearly a decade as president of National Food Service and On-Premise for Coca-Cola Refreshments.

"Chris Lowe is a remarkable champion for women's leadership and development," said Kathleen Ciaramello, president, National Food Service & On-Premise, Coca-Cola Refreshments. "Through the Chris Lowe executive leadership scholarship we are honoring his legacy in a way that will continue to support the mission of WFF and Coca-Cola to advance women's leadership."'

What if pay gap is just a myth?

Mastodon · 22 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every year during the fall season, the most misleading, emotion packed headline in the U.S.A. reappears just like the 40 Atlantic salmon that return annually to the Connecticut River. "Women are paid 77 percent of what men make." Sub context: Pay discrimination reigns throughout the workforce. We must pass the Equal Pay Act.

Now this belief that women are paid less for equal work is one of the Ten Commandments of the progressive world. You cannot be a progressive if you do not believe in this mantra.

But is this mantra true?

The source of this annual headline is the Pay Gap report prepared by the Association of American University Women. Now I won't get into that perhaps the AAUW might be a wee bit biased in their conclusions.

So let's get into the nitty-gritty of the report, shall we? What exactly is being compared?'

Verizon Donates $100,000 to North Carolina Domestic Violence Programs

Mastodon · 22 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Verizon announces more than $100,000 in grants to domestic violence prevention efforts across North Carolina. The funds will support programs that educate youth and men about healthy relationships and domestic violence with a goal of stopping the cycle of abuse.

Attorney General Roy Cooper reports(i)a 15 percent increase in North Carolina domestic violence deaths in 2012. During October, which is Domestic Violence Awareness Month (DVAM), victim care agencies across the state work to drive home the need for change.

"We absolutely recognize that interpersonal violence is a major issue in our society and recognize the importance of training young men to be a part of the solution. We are thrilled to partner with Verizon to address this critical issue through the Healthy Men Project, a multi-level campus intervention that aims to promote healthy masculinity and recruit men for involvement in UNC-Chapel Hill's violence prevention efforts," said Winston B. Smith vice chancellor of student affairs at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.'

Woman Who Burned Son's Penis Among Other Torture Acts Gets Up To 30 Years

Mastodon · 22 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A New Hampshire woman has been sentenced to nine to 30 years after pleading guilty in the torture of her 18-year-old son.

Christine Gelineau, a 53-year-old from Concord, reached an agreement with prosecutors Thursday, pleading guilty to first-degree assault and witness tampering, CBS Connecticut reported.

The teen, who is now 19, has two other alleged abusers he has yet to face. In court, he spoke to his now "ex-mother."

"Dear ex-Mother," he began, reading from a statement as his abuser sat sobbing nearby in an orange prison jumpsuit, the Concord Monitor reported. "What you did to me is unforgivable. You beat me, starved me, almost chopped my penis off, threw my clothes away, wouldn't let me bathe. You almost killed me by having me take three [antidepressants] and two muscle-relaxers."

...

Daniel Tyler Cantrell, 20, and the victim's 29-year-old cousin, Amy Nason, are also charged with torturing the man.

Among the beatings and burning, the victim was also pressured to drink urine, eat worms, dish soap, and feces, according to court records. Cantrell is also accused of breaking the man's ankle and putting a lit cigarette out on his neck.

Authorities were first alerted to the abuse in April when a 12-year-old girl, staying with the daughter of Nason, alerted officials at the Division of Children, Youth and Families after seeing the abuse.'

SAVE: Tell Gov. LePage to Stop His Scary Misrepresentations of DV

Matt · 22 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Maine governor Paul LePage is passionate about ending domestic violence. We share his desire to stop abuse, but we want him to acknowledge male victims and female abusers. We want him to tell the truth.

In a recent news article LePage repeated the long-debunked "[Men] are 80 percent of the perpetrators" factoid.

The governor has stated that he experienced domestic violence as a child at the hands of his father, so maybe that's why he has fallen for "bad stats" that paint men as monsters and ignore female perpetrators. We have compassion for him. But he's an elected official now, and he should be offering accurate information, not pushing a political agenda.

Hundreds of studies have shown that both genders commit domestic violence in similar numbers. Intimate partner abuse is not a gender crime. Both men and women are capable of hurting each other. And both can be victims.

Please contact Gov. LePage and ask him to give a revised statement about domestic violence immediately.

Contact Governor LePage:

- 207-287-3531
- http://www.maine.gov/governor/lepage/citizen_services/ideas-suggestions.shtml

On behalf of everyone hurt by domestic violence, thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Defying Male Suicide Logic

Mastodon · 23 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Suicide is the number one killer of young men in the UK, with 4552 male suicides in 2011, 75% of all suicides. The Office for National Statistics (ONS) data also shows that male suicide rates are climbing among older men who are aged 45 to 59-years-old. With such striking figures, I do wonder why male suicide is not seen as the public health emergency that it actually is.

...

The logic of our response to male suicide is difficult to untangle. Perhaps this is because the scandal has been going on for so many years that we tend to look away from what is an unsettling reality. It is not newsworthy. There is also our shameful history of past criminalisation of suicide, and like other issues linked to mental health, suicide is still very much stigmatised. Not to mention the traditional British "stiff upper lip" approach to male distress, which is only slowly being challenged in recent times. Then there is the old slight of hand: "but men use more violent means to kill themselves," as if this could explain it all away. So we end up downplaying the enormous differences that exist between men and women when it comes to the topic of suicide.'

UK: Boys 'much more likely to be labelled with special needs'

Mastodon · 23 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Official figures show that almost one million boys in English state schools had some form of learning difficulty, behavioural problem or speech and language impairment last year compared with just 511,570 girls.

In all, almost a quarter of boys aged five to 19 had some form of difficulty that prevented them playing a full part in lessons, while just 13.7 per cent of girls were diagnosed.

It follows the release of data showing that boys are much less likely to pass primary school tests in the three-Rs or go on to gain good GCSE grades.

...

Chris McGovern, a former head teacher and chairman of the Campaign for Real Education, said: “The number of children with special needs has grown incredibly over the last 20 years and it often comes down to poor training and teachers who cannot control children. Classifying children as having special needs is too often a ready excuse.

“There are some children with SEN – for example those on the autistic spectrum – who have genuine needs that must be addressed, but these are in a minority.”'

The fickle face of feminism: Women are fine with sexism... as long as it benefits them, says new study

Mastodon · 23 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"While wolf whistling and pay inequality might rankle, it seems that not all sexist behaviour is seen as a bad thing, according to a new study.

'Benevolent sexism', where women are treated as helpless entities in need of protection, is seen in a positive light by many - particularly those women with a strong sense of entitlement.

The results appeared in a study conducted by researchers at the University of Auckland and titled The Allure of Sexism: Psychological Entitlement Fosters Women's Endorsement of Benevolent Sexism Over Time.
...
Benevolent sexism, meanwhile, is the term used to describe the actions of those men and women who believe females depend on their male partners for everything from money to guidance and find it difficult to exist independently.
...
'[We wanted to see] whether or not benevolent sexism is attractive to women because of its promises of benefits to individual women under the conditions of being cared for and provided for by a man within an intimate relationship.'
...
The study, which spoke to 2,700 women and 1,600 New Zealand men, found that women with a greater sense of entitlement - in other words, those that feel they have a 'right' to the best things in life - were more likely to agree with statements such as 'Women should be cherished and protected by men.'

'Even though both men and women have these kind of "entitled" tendencies to be reward-oriented and status-focused — the "cherish and protect" attitudes of benevolent sexism seem to take advantage of these qualities in women only,' added Hammond.

'This is an example of how benevolent sexism is an insidious set of ideas which appear to exploit "niceness" to encourage women to hold more sexist beliefs.'"

UK: False rape claimaint is jailed for 14 months

Mastodon · 23 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'AN EASTER Ross woman who cheated on her boyfriend then cried rape after having sex with a man she met in a pub was jailed for 14 months at Tain Sheriff Court.

Sentencing Charlene Seel, Sheriff Jamie Gilchrist said she used the man for sex then stigmatised him when she falsely accused him of raping her.

Seel (22), of Kirkside, Alness had earlier pleaded guilty to falsely claiming to have been raped by the man on November 26 or 27, in 2011 at an address in Invergordon.

But in court Sheriff Gilchrist said the social work reports caused him concern because although Seel had pleaded guilty, what was contained in the reports amounted to a plea of not guilty and she had shown no remorse.

Seel's solicitor Alison Foggo said the Sheriff must ignore the terms of the report.'

Woman arrested for making false rape claim

Mastodon · 23 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Authorities at the University of Northern Iowa said an alleged sexual assault reported at the ROTH dorm in September never happened.

Officers with UNI's police department began their investigation after a female student told them she had been attacked by two men in her room around 2:30 a.m. Sept. 15.

...

According to court records, in September Richmann told officers that two men followed her into her room, robbed her and sexually assaulted her. UNI put out a campus-wide alert with a description of the suspects.

Investigators were able to identify the men suspected in the incident, and they told officers there had been consensual sexual activity, court records state. Richmann later gave a statement admitting the sex was consensual, records state.'

'Don’t Shift the Focus From Men'

Mastodon · 24 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If the goal is to reduce or eliminate rape, getting men to stop raping would seem the logical solution. But this would involve an honest conversation about our devotion to a warped and toxic vision of masculinity, sex and power that would completely uproot the current social order. It’s easier to just tell women to stop drinking.

Our unwillingness to confront men lets this behavior, born of a sense of entitlement and misplaced ideas of what constitutes power, go unchecked. If we stopped blaming binge drinking (or short skirts, or too-high heels, etc.) we could concentrate on having men not just understand that “no means no,” and that all forms of sexual contact require consent, but also learn to reject that force, domination and coercion are natural markers of masculinity and manhood. Until we reckon with those concepts, women will continue being expected to prevent their own rapes.'

UK: Oxford University imposes quotas for women on basketball teams

Broadsword · 24 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oxford University will penalise basketball teams playing in an inter-college league unless they have at least one woman in.

The college basketball league introduced the gender quota in a bid to get more young women playing the sport.

But team captains say they struggle to recruit female students and that the new rules - which award one point for a win with an all-male team but three points for a win by a mixed team - are unfair.
...
League coordinator Zoe Fannon, who imposed the quota, said the move was necessary to because many women at the university “didn’t know how to go about” taking up basketball.'

Woman charged in nine alleged poisonings, including one-day-old baby fathers4fairness · 24 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'KITCHENER, Ont. - An Ontario woman accused of poisoning two young kids in her care has now been charged in the alleged poisonings of six babies and toddlers, including a newborn, as well as an adult.

Police said Friday the new charges come as a result of their investigation into the woman, who ran a home daycare in Kitchener, Ont., from 2009 to 2011.

With the new charges, she is now accused in the alleged poisonings of eight children and a 32-year-old adult, all residents of Kitchener, or Guelph, Ont.

Police allege a suspect gave them an over-the-counter eye care product containing Tetrahydrozoline that if ingested can cause abnormal drowsiness, low blood pressure, respiratory problems and decreased heart rates, especially in young children.
...
Detectives discovered that another child who had been under the woman's care in July 2010 had similar symptoms, and recovered after a few days in hospital, according to police.

Police have said the daycare did not have a name and it's not known how many children Allen cared for during the three years it operated.'

The Rape 'Epidemic' Doesn't Actually Exist

Mastodon · 24 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of 100 protesters – including many topless women – recently marched the streets of Athens, Ohio chanting, "Blame the system, not the victim" and "Two, four, six, eight, stop the violence, stop the rape." Organized by an Ohio University student organization called "f*ckrapeculture," the protest was designed to bring attention to what the founders believe is a toxic culture of sexism and sexual violence infecting their campus.

F*ckrapeculture cofounder Claire Chadwick explained to the campus newspaper, "The name of our organization and the statements that we've made are loud. But it's because we need to be heard." But saying something loudly does not make it true or just.

... However, as universities reexamine their sexual assault policies, administrators should be wary of the demands of these "rape culture" activists. Not only is their movement built on a foundation of dubious statistics and a distorted view of masculinity, but it has already led to policies that have proved devastating to those who have been falsely accused.
...
Unfortunately, Warner is not alone in his grievances. Across the country, students accused of sexual assault are regularly tried before inadequate and unjust campus judiciaries. At most schools, cases of sexual misconduct are decided by a committee of as few as three students, faculty members or administrators. At Swarthmore College, volunteers are now being solicited via email to serve on the Sexual Assault and Harassment Hearing Panel. Such a panel is far more likely to yield gender violence activists than impartial fact finders. In a court of law, we rely on procedural safeguards to ensure unbiased jury selection and due process. But on the college campus, these safeguards have vanished.
...
Sexual assault is a horrific offense, and institutions must do all they can to protect victims. It is admirable that activists like Chadwick are trying to fight it. However, a false accusation of rape can also have devastating, life-altering consequences. Universities have an obligation to protect the rights of all students – both victims of sexual assault and the accused. They must stop responding to questionable statistics and abstract claims about a rape culture and instead focus on ensuring basic fairness for all students.

Meanwhile, advocates for due process, rules of evidence, basic justice and true gender equality need to speak louder than the "f*ckrapeculture" alarmists.'

Circumcision isn’t necessary

Matt · 24 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To be or not to be? Circumcised that is. Unfortunately for men, when this question arises, we are too young to have any input.

Circumcision is a surgical procedure that removes the foreskin covering the head of the penis. It’s a practice that has been around for thousands of years dating back to 2400 BC Egypt. In our day, many parents have their sons circumcised within their first few months of life due to culture, religion or personal preferences.

But how much research and consideration is actually being done by parents before they mutilate their newborn boys? Is circumcision really necessary? From my perspective, not enough and NO it’s NOT.
...
In fact it is now the norm in the U.S. to keep boys intact. Circumcision rates have fallen well below 40 percent. Although the popularity of circumcision is different in geographic areas, more than 60 percent of all male babies born in the U.S. will leave the hospital intact as opposed to most medically advanced countries in which 75 percent of the men are not circumcised.

The truth is there is NO connection between circumcision and better health. In fact, removing the foreskin may create immediate health risks. The foreskin is a vital and functioning part of the human body, since it protects the head of the penis from injury and provides moisture and lubrication. Circumcision has actually been proven to diminish sexual pleasure later in life.

Circumcision is only recommended for older boys and men to treat the inability to retract the foreskin (Phimosis), or in males who have penis infections.
...
Think about it: we don’t circumcise our dogs, our cats or any of our pets. We may neuter or spay them but never circumcise. So why do we circumcise our children?'

The myth of ‘Everyday Sexism’

Mastodon · 24 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sexism in the workplace is rife, according to a new study commissioned by employment law firm Slater & Gordon. Sixty per cent of women, the report suggests, have had a male colleague behave ‘inappropriately’ towards them. Now, putting aside the obvious point that an employment law firm may have a vested interest in unearthing potential new cases, the report hardly stands up to scrutiny. Do the 1,036 women who participated in the survey represent a cross-section of society or is the data based on self-selection? Are there any editorial processes or judicial procedures in place to decide what does and does not constitute sexism, or is it merely a case of ‘it is if she says it is’? And then there’s the issue of context. In the report, incidents of harassment includes everything from having a colleague putting their hands up a woman’s skirt, to touching their legs or thighs and placing their hand in the small of a woman’s back. Surely there is a difference between your boss randomly groping your breasts and that over-familiar male colleague slapping your thigh after they have told a dirty joke?
...
The big questions of feminism used to be about tangible, practical things: should women have the right to vote, to the contraceptive pill, to equal pay? Now, the ‘big’ questions are introspective, self-absorbed questions mired simply in identity politics, and based on small, perceived instances of sexist abuse. This new trend not only degrades the gains of feminism but women themselves. The concept underpinning both the Slater & Gordon report and the Everyday Sexism Project is that all women are the default victims of male dominance. The implication is that men act, while women are acted upon. We are told that we’re afraid, oppressed, we are kept down and persecuted and there is nothing we can do on our own to get out from under this enormous, nebulous burden of fear and misogyny that is endemic within the workplace, and Western society in general.'

'Tough Guise 2': The Ongoing Crisis of Violent Masculinity

Mastodon · 24 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 1999 Jackson Katz headlined a documentary that powerfully revealed the mask of masculinity, a pretense of stoicism and readiness for violence that many men feel compelled to put on, at least part of the time. The film, Tough Guise: Violence, Manhood, and American Culture, became a staple in classes on gender across the country.

Last week marked the release of Tough Guise 2 and SocImages was given the honor of debuting an exclusive clip from the new film. In the segment below, Katz explains that men aren't naturally violent but, instead, often learn how to be so. Focusing on socialization, however, threatens to make invisible the socialization agents. In other words, Katz argues, men don't just learn to be more violent than they otherwise would be—they are actively taught.

He begins with the fact that the video game and film industries both take money from companies that make firearms to feature their products. The U.S. military then uses the video game Call of Duty for recruitment and training. It's no use arguing whether the media, the military, or the gun industry are responsible for rates of violence, he observes, since they're in cahoots. These extreme examples intersect with the everyday, mundane lessons about the importance of being "real men" that boys and men receive from the media and their peers, parents, coaches, and more.'

DVD: Tough Guise 2

'The Tough Guise Scam'

Mastodon · 24 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jackson Katz believes that there is a national crisis in masculinity because young men believe a man should be tough, strong, independent and respected. The US Government is paying him to educate Marines.
...
Surely Katz has studied some history. This makes his claim that the modern media is responsible for these very old ideas about manliness even more dissonant. Blaming the modern media for male violence is like holding Martha Stewart accountable for the habits of all women who enjoy cooking and decorating.
...
When Katz decided to blame the modern media for these “narrow”definitions of manhood that box men in…ancient Roman, Greek, Norse, Celtic, Japanese, Chinese, Mongolian, Aztec and Native American mythologies that portrayed men in the same way must have slipped his mind.

It would make more sense for Katz to blame the ancient media.

If anything, violent stories probably shape violent acts and give form and outlet to the polymorphous violence of masculinity. They direct violence and give it a certain style, but the idea that a society without violent stories about men (will this demand book-burning, and revisionist history, too?) will become a society without male violence is specious and utopian nonsense. The fact that state-subsidized organizations pay Katz to peddle this idiocy is a travesty.'

Woman arrested in third domestic assault

Mastodon · 24 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Covelo woman remains in custody after being arrested for domestic violence three times in 17 days. The latest arrest occurred on Oct. 14 when she was arrested after her boyfriend told deputies she hit him in the head with a beer bottle.

...

When deputies questioned the cohabitant, they noted he had a 3 inch lump on the back of his head. The victim told deputies McFadin hit him with a beer bottle. He told deputies they were not arguing at the time and he had no idea what had angered her enough to hit him in the head. He said McFadin also hit him with a garden hose and threw a rock at a female witness. The victim refused further medical attention.

McFadin was booked on domestic assault on Oct. 3 and Sept. 27.

In the Sept. 27 incident she was suspected of striking her boyfriend in the back with a board. At the time of this incident the victim told deputies he and McFadin were arguing when she hit him with the board.

Deputies noted during this incident the victim appeared to be severely intoxicated and McFadin appeared to be under the influence of a controlled substance.'

Woman caught seeking hit-man to kill estranged husband before next custody hearing

Mastodon · 24 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Texas woman was busted plotting to kill the father of her 7-year-old son after she brought the child to meet an undercover cop posing as a hitman and put a down payment on the hit.

Nicolette Beard, 33, was cuffed after she met the undercover officer in a College Station parking lot on Wednesday and gave him $800 of the $4,000 she promised to pay to have her child's father, Anthony Drymalla, 30, killed, police told the Houston Chronicle.

The two met after a friend of Beard's alerted cops to the scheme, police said.

Beard brought her son to the meetup, but let a friend bring the boy into a store as she discussed the murder-for-hire plot with the supposed contract killer.
...
She told the officer that she wanted it to look like an accident and prefered if Drymalla's wife were injured or killed in the rubout. But she needed him dead within a couple of days, police said.

"They're in an ongoing custody battle," College Station Assistant Chief Brandy Norris told WTLV-TV. "And, according to the person who reported it to us, she wanted something done before they went to court (on Friday)."'

Report on high-profile rape accusation concludes the claim was a lie

Mastodon · 25 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jamie Leigh Jones, a young employee for defense contractor KBR in Iraq, captured our national attention when, in 2007, she claimed to have been gang raped by her colleagues and then locked into a shipping container by KBR officials intent on keeping her from going public. Jones' accusations touched on already hovering concerns about powerful defense contractors and the general atmosphere of brutality that stemmed from the war. It felt symbolic of everything that had been going wrong in Iraq. Sen. Al Franken used the case to force the Defense Department to refuse contracts with corporations that mandate arbitration for sexual assault claims instead of allowing employees to sue.

...

Turns out, it may all have been a lie. Jones lost her lawsuit against KBR, and now Washington Monthly has just published an impressive investigative piece by Mother Jones reporter Stephanie Mencimer, who has concluded that, based on the evidence presented in court, Jones probably made it all up. The extensive injuries Jones claimed to have suffered, including torn pectoral muscles and damage to her breast implants, weren't in the medical reports taken by the Army doctor who examined her after the alleged rape, nor did Jones mention those injuries to her doctor at home. Jones did have to get her breast implants fixed, but the evidence at trial suggests it was for unrelated reasons. Under questioning, Jones denied ever having claimed to have been gang-raped, even though her extensive media appearances say otherwise. (The kidnapping claim was tossed from the get-go because Jones didn't mention it when she initially filed a report with the Equal Opportunity Employment Commission about her supposed ill treatment at KBR.) One juror, Paul Oldenburgh, told Mencimer that the jury wanted to believe Jones—that he personally came to the trial with bad opinions of KBR—but that the evidence suggests that Jones had consensual sex with one colleague that night and that's it.

...

Mencimer seems annoyed that Jones' fake case led to real legislation protecting the rights of rape accusers, and that politicians who voted against that legislation were, in her words, "vilified." But the law that resulted from the situation, which forces these cases out of corporate arbitration and into court, is still good legislation. After all, without the jury trial, we may have never known the truth of what happened to Jamie Leigh Jones. Score one for those who demanded that trial in the first place, even if it had a surprising outcome.'

Nothing Liberating About Being Wasted

Mastodon · 25 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Alcohol is the No. 1 date-rape drug. That's not victim-blaming, or anti-women (let the record show a large portion of male victims have been drinking at the time of their sexual assaults too). It's simply a fact. The vast majority of campus rapes happen when the rapist, the victim or both are drunk.

And so alcohol education is essential for students of every gender.

Even when willing partners are sober, communication about sex can be fuzzy. We don't sit down and make a Venn diagram of what we want and don't want. Once heavy drinking enters the picture, all nuance disappears. Smashed people converse without any give and take and precious little listening, shouting toward each other as if on separate mountaintops in a heavy fog.
...
Binge drinking, whether we're male, female, straight, gay or one of many shades of gray, dulls our senses and slows reaction times, making it harder to identify our comfort zones until we're frightfully outside of them.'

'Awesome Alternative to Campus Feminism Celebrates Ninth Anniversary'

Mastodon · 25 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When looking at their course syllabi, young conservative women often find assignments that encourage them to challenge gender roles and unabashedly criticize the opposite sex. When searching for clubs to join on campus, they may find similar options — a host of feminist groups spewing a “women rule the world/men are the enemy” message. One organization, however, is continuing to provide female students with a conservative alternative.

For almost a decade now, the Network of Enlightened Women has been working to ignite a conversation on feminism and conservatism on college campuses which challenges the often misguided messages of college feminist groups. NeW celebrates its ninth anniversary this month.'

Do Some Docs Have Vested Interest in Prescribing Radiation for Prostate Cancer?

Minuteman · 26 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Patients with prostate cancer may be encouraged to get radiation therapy by urologists who own the equipment, new research suggests.

According to study author Jean Mitchell, a professor of economics at Georgetown University, the use of expensive radiation treatments has increased substantially in practices that own the equipment.
...
Dr. Len Lichtenfeld, deputy chief medical officer of the American Cancer Society, said urologists make only about $1,100 for surgery to remove the prostate, and watchful waiting involves only the limited cost of office visits and imaging.

Radiation treatment, however, can cost between $31,000 and $40,000, depending on where in the country patients are treated, Mitchell said.

"This is really showing that financial incentives really influence physician behavior," she said. "Patients have to wonder, 'Am I getting the treatment because it's really the best, or am I getting the treatment because my urologist is making money off of it?'" Mitchell said.
...
D'Amico advises patients to ask if the medical evidence for their case supports radiation or surgery.

"The correct answer is either yes or no. If there is a choice, the patient should be told that the medical evidence is inconclusive. That's what they need to hear, because that's the truth. Most of the time, there is a choice," he said. "If they say the medical evidence in your case says it should be radiation, then the patient has to wonder whether or not [they're] getting it straight."

Moreover, D'Amico said patients should get a second opinion.

One critic of the study, Dr. Deepak Kapoor, president of the Large Urology Group Practice Association, said the study represents a political agenda and that doctors aren't pushing radiation therapy when they own the equipment.

He said the study misrepresents the actual data, and there is no real increase in the use of radiation therapy in practices that own their own equipment. In his view, the study is an attempt to persuade lawmakers to make radiation therapy for prostate cancer the sole province of radiation oncologists, which is why the association representing radiation oncologists funded the study.

But study author Mitchell painted a different picture.

"The urologists have tried to paint this as a turf battle, but in my view this is not their scope of practice," Mitchell said. "I know some urologists who are making $1 million a year, and $700,000 of it comes from their ancillary services -- radiation, pathology and imaging. Only $300,000 comes from what they were trained to do. And people wonder why health care is so expensive. This is one of the reasons. Everybody responds to financial incentives. Why should physicians be different? They're not."'

Mother accused of ripping 6-YO son's scrotum

Minuteman · 26 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Jennifer Marie Vargas is being charged with assault with serious bodily injury after admitting to getting angry and pulling her 6-year-old son by his privates and ripping his scrotum.

According to the affidavit, she then cleaned the wound with alcohol and tried to fix it with super glue. She then allegedly ordered him to go to bed.

When the boy's father returned home, he saw the blood and took the boy to San Antonio Military Medical Center where he underwent surgery.

Vargas could face 10 years in prison if convicted.

She's due in court on Monday.'

Making sense of college enrollment decline

Mastodon · 26 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Bureau of the Census recently released a report indicating college enrollment dropped by about a half million students from 2011 to 2012. In fact, the press release from the Census Bureau said enrollment “plunged” from one year earlier.

Most people are well aware of the correlation between educational attainment and earnings: in general, the higher the education level, the higher the income. Future prosperity, both as individuals and as a society, is tied to improving education levels (particularly for states that are lagging, such as Texas).

So, is the drop in college enrollment something we should be worried about? I don’t think so, and here’s why.

First of all, the drop (which was actually about 467,000 nationwide) isn’t huge compared to total enrollment. With just more than 19.9 million people now in college, the decline was about 2.3 percent from 2011 — not exactly a plunge! Even so, downward is generally considered the wrong direction, so we took a closer look at the underlying changes revealed in the detailed tables.
...
Looking at changes by gender, male students declined by 530,000, while females increased by 61,000. As noted, older part-time male student enrollment fell sharply. White, non-Hispanic male enrollment dropped by 657,000. Enrollment for male part-time students who were working full time fell 302,000. No matter how you slice or dice it, male students comprised the bulk of the overall drop. One particularly bright note for females is the large gain in enrollment among Hispanics, which rose by 375,000 (an increase of almost 25 percent).'

Husband defends teacher in domestic violence case

Mastodon · 26 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Gaston County elementary school teacher faces an assault charge related to a domestic violence incident that occurred Monday.

Sharon Denise Putnam left fingernail marks on her husband, Adam, after the two had an argument over a cellphone video, according to a warrant affidavit signed by Stanley Police Officer J.L. Abernathy.

...

Putnam said he had to “barricade himself in the bathroom,” but that his wife started kicking and shoving trying to get to him, according to the warrant. “Once the suspect got into the bathroom, she tore the victim’s pants to get the phone out and throw it into the toilet,” Abernathy wrote in the warrant affidavit. The officer noted he could see fingernail marks and scratches on Adam Putnam’s upper arm.

Adam Putnam said he showed up at his wife’s first court appearance and defended her again on Wednesday. “She’s the most genuine, sensitive person you’ll ever meet in your life,” Putnam said.

...

Adam Putnam said he asked police that night not to arrest her, but that the officer said he had to take her in because he could visibly see the scratch marks and bruises on his body.

The Putnam’s 12-year-old son also told police that he videotaped his mother attacking his dad, but that his mother deleted the video off his cellphone, according to a warrant affidavit.'

Request for guidance about forming a men's rights group

bronxman · 26 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I am a professor of mechanical engineering. And I have found out that many of the students where I teach are about to commence action on Movember.

I point out that I no longer teach in the U.S. - I left my tenured position there and took up a tenured position in Europe. My wife decided this as she is from this particular country. After seeing the complex contradictions of Valentine's day in the US, where men are expected to buy gifts and attend the Vagina Monologues, SHE - I was blind to men's rights issues at the time (but SHE is the one who has clued me in) - resolved that she did not want our son growing up in a country that did not respect its men. So we moved. And it is great here, but even this country is becoming slightly feminized.

I would like to talk with these men at the first Movember meeting and suggest they extend their activity into monthly meetings on Men’s Rights issues. There are no such groups here.

But I have no idea what form such a meeting will take. I do not think it is wise for it to degenerate into misogyny. Nor do I think it wise for it to become a group therapy session.

I am sort of thinking that it would be meetings to discuss male perception and events that suggest misandry, perhaps a discussion each month on good men, perhaps invited speakers. So I am wondering if anyone has put together a cluster of agendas for such meetings. How would one run such meetings? Please post your ideas in the Comments section to this item.

Thanks!

Religious freedom vs bodily integrity: another round of the foreskin wars

Matt · 27 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Council of Europe's resolution earlier this month to prohibit the circumcision of infant boys for religious reasons has ignited another round to the "foreskin wars". This time it's about the rights of religious freedom and autonomy versus the right of individuals to retain "physical integrity". As usual, different groups are shouting that my human rights are more important than yours.
...
Meanwhile, bioethicists and lawyers will continue to disagree about therapeutic and non-therapeutic values because there is an inescapable tension in how we think about harm, autonomy, and competing claims for rights. What are the rights of children, including psychological well-being associated with "belonging"? Do we necessarily favour physical integrity over respect for cultural difference?

One conclusion is that we need to be wary about easy answers in relation to human flourishing, diversity and the "right to health".'

Data regarding circumcision's adverse effects suppressed

Matt · 27 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

MANN admins received the following from a reader and M.D. involved in the study of the practice and effects of circumcision:

The recent publication of an extraordinary association between country-level rates of circumcision with their respective country-level rates of autism (r=0.98, p<0.000005) [http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/23656698] explains the recent observation of less than expected rate of autism prevalence in Spain where an equal male to female autism prevalence was also observed (http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/23746744) as Spain (http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/16177149) and Hispanics in the U.S. have the lowest circumcision rates (2% in Spain) while Hispanics in U.S. also have a less than expected autism prevalence (http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/20019320).

Furthermore, recent reports from Israel and Kenya/Uganda indicate lack of effectiveness of circumcision in reducing heterosexual HIV/AIDS transmission: Coutinho in Uganda has pointed out based on rising HIV/AIDS rates the lack of effectiveness of circumcision in reducing female to male HIV transmission based on both failure to achieve the 60% relative risk reduction of the published studies with the expected absolute risk reduction being only 0.8-1.8% at best (http://www.independent.co.ug/news/news-analysis/6402-experts-divided-over-hiv-strategy) and the reported increased risk of male to female HIV transmission posed by circumcised males in Uganda (Wawer: http://www.thelancet.com/journals/lancet/article/PIIS0140-6736(09)60998-3/abstract) as heterosexually transmitted HIV infection rates significantly rise in Israel (http://www.haaretz.com/news/national/new-cases-of-hiv-in-israel-hit-record-high-in-2012.premium-1.528780) and circumcision fails to reduce HIV rates in Kenya (http://www.standardmedia.co.ke/?articleID=2000093293&story_title=push-for-male-circumcision-in-nyanza-fails-to-reduce-infections).

These results have led the United States Preventative Services Task Force to recommend “treatment as prevention” using antiretrovirals for HIV/AIDS prevention, not circumcision (http://www.uspreventiveservicestaskforce.org/uspstf/uspshivi.htm) in the U.S.

Parents need to be afforded fully informed consent to act in the best interest of their children. Unfortunately when there is suppression/omission of circumcision adverse event data, fully informed consent cannot be given. (http://www.examiner.com/article/circumcision-adverse-event-data-missing-from-study-suppression-alleged)

The epidemiological studies to address whether circumcision is a risk factor for Autism Spectrum Disorders and Chronic Pelvic Pain and its serious comorbidities (including erectile dysfunction, increased lifetime risk of cardiovascular and neuropsychiatric diseases) [http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/16104910 ; http://onlinelibrary.wiley.com/doi/10.1111/j.1464-410X.2005.05684.x/abstract] are straightforward, if not omitted/suppressed by NIH due to conflicts of interests. Ongoing professional/institutional competing public health-economic interests exist, and circumcision will stay touted as the recommended low cost HIV/AIDS “preventative” (http://www.pnas.org/content/early/2012/12/05/1209017110), as long as circumcision adverse event data/lack of HIV/AIDS effectiveness data are suppressed/ignored.

Jewish Family in Canada Opts for a Brit Shalom

Matt · 27 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Just as I was feeling defeated, I found a website that lists over 100 rabbis and celebrants who perform brit shalom, an alternative to brit milah. (Brit shalom contains the symbolic elements of the covenant ceremony, but without circumcision.) At the time, there was only one rabbi listed for all of British Columbia… but he just so happened to be in my city, Vancouver! I later discovered his name had been added about three weeks before I'd found it. I believe this was the universe rewarding us for following our hearts.
...
Instead of circumcising our son, Amari and I decided that each member of our immediate family would bless a part of Kai with olive oil. I blessed his bicep and explained it was so he would have the strength to stay true to his beliefs, to who he was. My wife blessed his heart, wishing him to be full of love for everything and everyone. Each member of our family had an opportunity.
...
Kai is now five months old and Amari and I couldn't be happier with our decision to keep him intact. We encourage everyone to do their research into the harms of circumcision and follow their hearts in protecting their newborns. You can never go wrong doing that.'

Fighting sexism with cross-stitch: The rise of misandry crafts

Mastodon · 27 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of course, there is a flip side. There are women who unapologetically hate men. Scrolling through Instagram the other day, I noticed an author whose work I admire wearing a misandry t-shirt. She suggested it should be a “staff uniform” for her magazine. When I asked her via email if the t-shirt was ironic, she wrote back saying, “To me, there’s nothing ironic about misandry. I really do hate men. A lot.”

For most of the women who embrace the idea of misandry, though, it seems generally more complicated, or maybe just a play on words. One of the Etsy artists I spoke to said there was no other reason she created her misandry craft than because a “friend asked me to make her a custom one. After I posted a photo of it online, I started to get a lot of orders for them.” Even the Misandry-Mermaid Tumblr tagline states, “This feminist Tumblr strives towards intersectionality and inclusivity.” Yet this thoughtful and inclusive mission statement is written under a photo of a mermaid that reads, “Forever bathing in your male tears.”

The hardest part for me in accepting misandry is that it’s just not that simple. I have met and dealt with really, really shitty men in my life. But I have had really good guys who helped me through my divorce, who have lifted me out of dark places, and who have listened to me process some of the darkest fears about myself. Perhaps I need to buy misandry t-shirts for those men—that way they can reclaim the word without irony, and finally feel free.'

UK: Young mother jailed for making two false rape claims within hours

Mastodon · 27 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

"A young mother has been jailed after she made two different false reports of rape within hours after drunkenly sleeping with her friend's partner.

The man only proved his innocence because he filmed the sexual encounter on his mobile phone and the footage showed she was a willing and active participant.

Ashleigh Loder, 25, wasted at least 100 hours of police time and subjected the man, who has not been named, to police questioning after inventing the two attacks in Bideford, North Devon.
...
A friend of the man's partner, Loder admitted she fabricated a story fearing the consequences of sleeping with him.

She spread her claims about him around Bideford and he was forced to stay inside, becoming a recluse for two weeks to avoid reprisals, Exeter Crown Court was told.
...
Greg Richardson, defending, said: 'Her life was a complete dream and she convinced herself she had been raped. Who knows what was going on in her mind but she believed something within her had said no.

'She says the situation she got into was rock bottom. She wishes to apologise sincerely to the man.'"

Men can suffer from domestic violence, too

Mastodon · 27 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'According to a recent national study by the Center for Disease Control and Prevention, one in seven men has been the victim of severe physical violence by an intimate partner. Men are also victims of verbal, emotional, psychological, sexual and financial abuse. One in 33 men have experienced sexual assault and one in 19 men have been stalked. All of these forms of violence are devastating and can be debilitating, causing depression, guilt, shame, humiliation and anxiety.

Male victims face numerous barriers when attempting to report abuse. They are often not believed, mocked, and devalued for the abuse. Attitudes in our society that say men should be strong and tough limit a male survivor's ability to seek and receive help and often results in experiences of further shame and re-victimization.'

Ed. note: It's dumb, but the site makes you click a button under the first paragraph in answer to a "survey question". You need only click one answer button and the rest of the letter's text appears. You do not have to answer all the questions it says that follow the first.

'How Men Conned Feminists Into Abortion'

Mastodon · 28 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists have been telling men to keep out of the abortion debate for decades. Female body parts, the activists say, give them the sole right to address the issue.

“Stand down if you don’t have ovaries,” a Florida state representative told her male colleagues in 2010 as lawmakers debated a bill requiring ultrasound examinations before abortions.

But talk like that is at odds with recent history, contends Brian Fisher in his recent book “Abortion: The Ultimate Exploitation of Women.”

Abortion is “more about men and their agendas than it is about women and their agendas,” asserts Fisher, co-founder and president of Online for Life, which uses Internet technology to protect women and children from abortion.'

‘Thor: The Dark World’ Makes A Joke Out Of Domestic Violence

Mastodon · 28 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“You hear all these stories about guys and it’s just good to get a nice on-screen slap like ‘you didn’t call me back.,’ ” Portman said.

On set, the Thor slap ended up being something of a joke, Hemsworth said.

”It just got really funny and ridiculous you know. It’s like in high school when you’re not meant to laugh,” he said.

But the issue would likely not go over well with domestic violence groups working to de-stigmatize violence against men. This year, a few films have been produced highlighting domestic violence against men and the unspoken stigma that comes with it.

“Gradually, more and more drama is being produced dealing with male victims of domestic violence by women which has been swept under the carpet for many years,” wrote the blog Save Our Society about the new movie, Flawless, that deals with female domestic violence. “This has perpetuated the feminist-inspired myth that all women are gentle creatures who wouldn’t hurt a fly and that all men are violent brutes.”

As these critics point out, if Thor: The Dark World would depict the male actor slapping a woman, it would likely be seen very differently, and certainly not as a joke.'

‘Man up’ to being a victim

Mastodon · 28 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The push to empower women could be prompting violence against men.

“You have women who have found their voice and were encouraged to do so, which is a good thing. But are the women in the next generation taking it too far?” questioned Charlane Cluett, Muskoka Parry Sound Community Mental Health Service operations manager.

...

“Do they understand the difference between assertiveness and conflict resolution and negotiation versus aggression and threat? I don’t know that we’ve done as good a job as we could in teaching the differences there,” she said. “I wonder if there’s an over-compensation and now we’ve left the men out.”

...

“I think there’s a huge deficit in men’s groups, where men can go and talk,” he said. “With both male and female, it’s important to realize what abuse really is.”

...

Eby said another obstacle is fear of displacement, since men often have nowhere to go.

“That’s one of the areas that men are at a disadvantage because currently they have to leave Muskoka and go to Simcoe County,” he said. “There is a group that is seeking to establish a shelter in Muskoka, but to my knowledge that hasn’t happened yet.”

Theresa McFadyen, Muskoka Victim Services SupportLink co-ordinator, said fear of losing their children also holds men back.

“It’s an automatic assumption that the female is going to get the kids,” she said. “They tell me they don’t want to lose their kids, so they don’t report.”'

'The silenced minority'

Mastodon · 28 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Because October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, I'd like to address the strain of domestic abuse people are the least aware of: abuse directed at men.

...

A study by the Centers for Disease Control indicates more men than women were victims of intimate partner physical violence and more than 40 percent of severe physical violence victims were men in 2010.

The National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey reported that in 2011, an estimated 5,365,000 men and 4,741,000 women were victims of intimate partner physical violence.

...

These statistics aren't commonly known. Women are the stereotypical victims of domestic violence, so it can be difficult for a man to share his story. Male victims who seek help often report that hotline workers say they only help women, imply the men must be the instigators, ridicule men or refer them to batterers' programs. Police, meanwhile, are reluctant to take action against a woman who is accused of abusing her partner.

Even when men attempt to seek help, there are few places for them to go. England and Wales are home to approximately 7,500 battered women's shelters. There are only 60 for men. In the U.S., the same phenomenon is observable, and many shelters have age limits that deny sanctuary to boys older than 13.

Despite all of this, when a man brings up the issue of male victims, there is an expectation that he would be pejoratively labeled as a men's rights activist. Domestic violence, however, isn't a sexually restrictive or gender-restrictive term. Although it's most commonly associated with women, the number of male victims is substantial.'

What Schools Can Do to Help Boys Succeed

Mastodon · 28 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Being a boy can be a serious liability in today's classroom. As a group, boys are noisy, rowdy and hard to manage. Many are messy, disorganized and won't sit still. Young male rambunctiousness, according to a recent study, leads teachers to underestimate their intellectual and academic abilities. "Girl behavior is the gold standard in schools," says psychologist Michael Thompson. "Boys are treated like defective girls."

These "defective girls" are not faring well academically. Compared with girls, boys earn lower grades, win fewer honors and are less likely to go to college. One education expert has quipped that, if current trends continue, the last male will graduate from college in 2068. In today's knowledge-based economy, success in the classroom has never been more crucial to a young person's life prospects. Women are adapting; men are not.

Some may say, "Too bad for the boys." The ability to regulate one's impulses, sit still and pay attention are building blocks of success in school and in life. As one critic told me, the classroom is no more rigged against boys than workplaces are rigged against lazy or unfocused workers. That is absurd: unproductive workers are adults — not 5- and 6-year-old children who depend on us to learn how to become adults. If boys are restive and unfocused, we must look for ways to help them do better.'

Countries that care about men

bronxman · 28 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This article speaks for itself - a country that is concerned about the health of men. Excerpt:

'At first blush, the mascot's name is rather endearing: Mr. Balls.

But for those who might find that descriptive title offensive, the scrotum-shaped character also answers to "Senhor Testiculo" in Brazil, where he is a spokes-thing for a group that is seeking to raise awareness of testicular cancer research.

...

You've got to admire Mr. Balls' bravery to let it all hang out. The character's eyes have a kind of bedroom quality, and, thanks to the positive response to Sponge Bob's dental occlusion, Mr. Balls' buck teeth are almost fashionable.

Hundreds of men die from testicular cancer every year, so the effort behind Mr. Balls is no laughing matter. The American Cancer Society said recently that occurrences of testicular cancer are increasing, both domestically and elsewhere.'

Heartwarming YouTube Video Protests Adoption of Veronica Brown

Mastodon · 28 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A YouTube video is protesting the "illegal and unethical adoption of Veronica Brown," a member of the Cherokee Nation. In the background, father-daughter team Jorge and Alexa Narvaez sing a cover of 4 Non Blondes' "What's Going On." The pair, who became a YouTube sensation starting in 2010 with their cover of Edward Sharpe and The Magnetic Zero's "Home," when Alexa was 6, gave permission for their video to be used with the photo compilation of Veronica hugging and laughing with her dad.

Hearing the musical collaboration between a loving father and his vibrant daughter amplifies the hard reality that Veronica Brown will miss out on this kind of incredible bond with her biological father, who lives in Oklahoma near the Cherokee reservation, while being raised by an adoptive couple in South Carolina.'

Background: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Adoptive_Couple_v._Baby_Girl

"Study of Male Birth Defect Lets Pesticides Off the Hook -- for Now"

Minuteman · 29 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Only a weak link exists between pesticide exposure and a common birth defect in baby boys, according to a new study.

Researchers examined the association between hundreds of chemicals used in commercial pesticides and a birth defect called hypospadias, in which the urethral opening on the penis is on the underside rather than on the tip.
...
In the study, researchers compared data from 690 male infants born with hypospadias and nearly 2,200 male infants who did not have the birth defect. The infants were born in California's Central Valley, which has one of the highest rates of pesticide use in the nation, according to the study. The mothers of the children lived fairly close to where pesticides were used.

The researchers found that 15 chemicals used in pesticides had possible associations with hypospadias, but they said further research is needed, according to the study, which was published online Oct. 28 in the journal Pediatrics.'

Gender discrimination: two wrongs don’t make a right

Mastodon · 29 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many feminists think misandry isn’t real. Not even my spellcheck thinks misandry is real. But it has become painfully obvious to me, as I pay closer attention to today’s social issues, that it is.
...
I find it incredibly hypocritical that women wishing for equality in the world think it is okay to perpetuate negative stereotypes of men. I’m here to tell you, it doesn’t help. Discrimination can’t be used to fight discrimination; this makes us look petty at best and snowballs the issue at worst.
...
Just like misogyny, prejudice against men has become such an ingrained part of our culture that we often don’t even recognize it. I was taught from a very young age that “boys only want one thing.” It made me terrified of them. They became “the other”: people to be extremely wary of. I still struggle with this idea to this day. Clearly this notion has been damaging to me, but it has also been hurtful to the men in my life who’ve deserved more of a chance than I’ve allowed myself to give them.'

Are Girls More Likely to Outperform Boys in American Schools?

Mastodon · 29 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With the rise of feminism in the late 20th century, many institutions in America are catering toward women and making it difficult for young boys to flourish. Our culture has placed high value on sensitivity and on being relational, and the standard of "model behavior" in grade schools is that of a well-mannered, quiet little girl.

Educators in primary school classrooms are typically female, and they often apply a universal standard for "good behavior" to their students. Traditional American pupils are expected to sit still for hours on end, to keep silent unless asking a question, and to keep on-task. Young boys - who are typically full of energy, like rough-and-tumble play, and like to work with their hands rather than sit still in a desk, are being disciplined for their behavior.'

Outreach focuses on dads to help end domestic violence

Mastodon · 29 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The community outreach event was part of a movement to make men frontline fighters in the war to end violence against women. October is Domestic Violence Awareness Month, and the P.E.A.C.E. Initiative partnered with Edgewood, whose board of trustees committed to the issue by signing a resolution against domestic violence. The message was that men and boys have options for expressing who they are. Those present also recited a pledge of nonviolence within the family.

“We want them to know they can lift their voice and make their presence felt without aggression and violence,” P.E.A.C.E. Initiative executive director Patricia Castillo said. “Three-quarters of the men in our community are doing the right thing. They're being good papis (dads). They're doing sacred, hard, good work. We want to say, 'Thank you,' but we also want to spread that message.”'

Is anyone saying women messed up Healthcare.gov and men must save it?

StayingFit · 29 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I would love to link to an article making similar commentary to that which we saw after the U.S. government narrowly avoided defaulting on its debts, but I'm afraid that I can't. At that time, there was commentary from Robert Redford, Kathleen Parker, the Huffington Post, and many others, all telling us that we had women to thank for saving us from a fiscal disaster caused by men. And, of course, this meant that we needed more women in positions of power.

Now, Healthcare.gov is a mess, and the rollout of Obamacare has been a debacle. The two people most responsible for this epic IT failure are Kathleen Sebelius and Marilyn Tavenner. But, has anyone put out the word that we need "men to save us from the disaster that women have caused"?

Oh, heck no! That would just be sexist, wouldn't it?

Kathleen Sebelius: 'Men often do need maternity care'

Mastodon · 30 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'During Wednesday's congressional testimony, a heated exchange occurred between Rep. Renee Ellmers (R-NC) and Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sebelius over one of the still-unexploded controversies in the ObamaCare law: the fact that ObamaCare's so-called "robust" coverage is in reality your government forcing you to pay for coverage that includes expensive services millions will never need. Ellmers called Sebelius out specifically for forcing men to buy maternity coverage.
...
Sebelius: The individual policies cover families. Men often do need maternity care for their spouses and for their families, yes.

Ellmers: A single make [sic, should read "male"], aged 32, does need maternity coverage. To the best of your knowledge, has a man ever delivered a baby?'

Woman wearing 'abusive wife' costume arrested for beating up boyfriend dressed as 'abused husband'

Mastodon · 30 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman wearing an ‘abusive wife’ costume was arrested for beating up her boyfriend in Detroit, Michigan, on Saturday night.

Cristina Crespo, 26, and her unnamed boyfriend were participating in a Halloween pub crawl when they were spotted by police outside the Mojave Cantina at around 9pm.

Patrol officers stopped to check on Crespo, who was clearly intoxicated and lying on the sidewalk.
...
The officer then tracked down Crespo's boyfriend, who was dressed up as an ‘abused husband’ which entailed a stream of fake blood running from his nose.

The boyfriend confirmed to the officer that the couple had a designated driver, and he agreed to collect their things and leave.

As the officer exited the cantina, he heard shouting and went to investigate.

He found Crespo ‘screaming and repeatedly hitting the boyfriend with her purse’ and tried to intervene, but Crespo ‘continued to be loud and belligerent and was detained.’

‘It’s ironic that she went out dressed up as an abuser and that’s what she ended up as,’ said Sarvello.'

Jury: No charges in Ohio University Rape Case

Mastodon · 30 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Athens County Grand Jury declined to issue an indictment in an alleged rape case, which had gained national attention after it was filmed by passers-by at Ohio University.

The videos show a man apparently giving a woman oral sex during the Oct. 12 homecoming celebration. The woman was leaning against a wall at Chase Bank, 2 S. Court St, in clear view of the passing crowds.

No person involved in the incident is facing charges – not the man for the rape, the woman for false accusations, nor the bystanders for videotaping.

Prosecutor Keller Blackburn said the video showed the woman smiling during the incident. It also showed the man asking if he should stop and the woman telling him to continue.

The man and the woman went to the man's apartment after the incident, Blackburn reported. They stayed there for three hours before he walked her home.

Blackburn said both people were surprised when they saw the video online.

The woman reported the incident to Athens police as rape. She told investigators she had no memory of what she had seen circulating on Instagram.'

Zimbabwe: Circumcision helps stem cancer: Khupe

Mastodon · 30 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MDC-T DEPUTY leader Thokozani Khupe has backed calls for men to consider circumcision to help curb new cervical cancer infections in the country.

Cervical cancer is caused by a sexually transmitted human papilloma virus (HPV).

Khupe told Southern Eye that men need to seriously consider circumcision to not only prevent the spread of the HPV that causes cancer, but to help reduce new HIV infections.

“I am saying men should look at these issues seriously to save lives.

Khupe said statistics show that 1 200 women die annually from cervical cancer that affects a further 1 800 women in Zimbabwe.

“This is the reason why I am calling on men to undergo circumcision.'

English Teacher Allegedly Had Sex With 15-Year-Old Student

Mastodon · 30 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An English teacher at a reputable Utah high school is accused of having sex with at least one of her students.

Brianne Altice, 34, was arrested at her home Monday on two felony counts of unlawful sex with a minor, after a victim tipped Kaysville police off about their alleged months-long sexual relationship.

According to the Deseret News, the boy could accurately describe tattoos on Altice's body, and confirmed the layout of her South Weber home, where investigators allege the two had sex at least five times between January 2012 to October 2013.'

Canada: Feminist haunted house has severed penises and 'ball-busting' room

Mastodon · 30 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'TORONTO – This haunted house warns of "severed" male genitalia while encouraging women to flash theirs.

Billed as art, you are paying for it.

"Don't trip over the severed penises," says one sign inside the guided tour of Toronto's own "lesbian haunted house."

There is also a mock "ball-busting room."

...

Allyson Mitchell, the artist behind A Lesbian Feminist Haunted House, has received thousands in government grants.

Acknowledgment is posted on the outside of Killjoy Kastle's rented location that funding was provided by the Toronto Arts Council, Ontario Arts Council (OAC) and Canadian Council for the Arts. The artist undertook her work in collaboration with the Art Gallery of York University (AGYU).

...

"It's kind of funny that creator Allyson Mitchell will be very discriminating in terms of who she'll let into her adorable lesbian feminist haunted house but she sure doesn't discriminate when it comes to scarfing down tax dollars," commented Sun News Network's David Menzies, who broke this story.

"Imagine a man putting up a haunted house with baskets of breasts or severed vaginas? The outcry over the perceived misogyny would be off the charts. But apparently, misandry is not only tolerated but publicly funded."

It is outrageous this province has difficultly funding life-saving cancer medication for a woman with a brain tumour but has money to throw around for this.'

Middle school 'Boobies' bracelet battle makes news

Matt · 31 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Sounds like a headline from The Onion, but a lot are like that these days. Anyway, imagine if kids in a school were wearing "Nuts" bracelets and the school tried to nix it. Would there be a concerted push-back or a collective agreement that indeed, such was positively lewd? Well, we'll probably never know since the likelihood of school kids taking up the cause of testicular or prostate cancer research is pretty slim. After all-- men just ain't as important. Excerpt:

'EASTON, PA. — A free-speech case involving a Pennsylvania middle school principal, Breast Cancer Awareness Day and a pair of rubber "I (heart) Boobies!" bracelets may be headed to the U.S. Supreme Court.

The Easton, Pa., school board late Tuesday voted to challenge a federal court's decision saying the bracelets aren't lewd material.

...

The case started in 2010 when two girls, then ages 12 and 13, challenged the school's ban on the bracelets, which are designed to promote breast cancer awareness among young people. The students, Brianna Hawk and Kayla Martinez, said they merely hoped to foster knowledge of the disease at their middle school. They filed suit when they were suspended for defying the ban on Breast Cancer Awareness Day.

Kimmy McAtee, a spokeswoman for the nonprofit Keep A Breast Foundation of California, which distributed the bracelets, said the items are "a great conversation starter and ... that the school should have created a conversation about breast health vs. banning them."'

'I was ambushed by the Twitterati feminists who in actual fact hate women'

Mastodon · 31 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some 100 years after Emily Wilding Davison threw herself under a horse in the name of equality, isn't it perverse that those who would wish to subjugate me are the firebrand feminists who pit sister against sister, denying my view credence? How ironic, I thought, as I scrolled through my Twitter feed, that those who claim to champion women want to bully me for saying I don't believe in a cause they have bastardised.

As a university-educated woman who combines a fulfilling career as a journalist and broadcaster with my role as a homemaker for my husband and four children, I have better things to do than spend my days mirthlessly lamenting the lot of women, which is what most feminists seem to do.

Indeed, what the sour Lefty Twitterati won't admit is that all the great battles on which feminism was founded have been won - including political representation, and equality in education, the workplace and other areas of public life.

What's left is an ugly vacuum occupied by those who will only let you join the sisterhood if you agree to pander to a petty hunt for signs of oppression. Look no further than the campaign by The Women's Room, who railed against the Bank of England for the lack of women on our bank notes, citing this as evidence of discrimination.

Spectacularly pointless, surely? An emancipated, financially independent woman couldn't care less whether Jane Austen is emblazoned on a tenner. I don't: I just care that I'm being paid enough of them.
...
Today's feminists appear to be living behind a smoke screen of their own construction, blind to the reality of female achievement in the 21st century, when girls outperform boys at GCSE and in further education. Around 20 per cent more girls make it to university than boys.

Today's so-called sisters also refuse to accept that women are wired differently to men - that many see becoming a mother as the crowning achievement of their lives. Who can argue with the female executive who, after delivering her newborn, decides to give up the office and stay at home? I think today's glass ceiling is largely self-imposed, perhaps the result of many deciding to leave full-time employment to put family life first.'

Women, Men, and Chronic Fatigue Syndrome

bronxman · 31 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Chronic Fatigue Syndrome (Myalgic Encephalomyelitis) is on the rise. Some more suspicious people feel it is a code word for laziness for it often strikes people when they are confronted with the severtity of their work. It strikes women to men in a ratio of 6 to 1. First, I cannot help but think that if this "struck" men, we would be laughing stocks. Second, despite the fact that there are now seven national centers for women's diseases and none for men, that funding will be taken from men's disease research to research this. Finally, I cannot help but wonder if the suspicions are true: that some women in the traditionally male disciplines, just cannot hack it (not all, mind you, but some). For that is the news we would certainly here if the genders were reversed. Excerpt:

'Jennifer Brea kept getting slammed by recurring illness as she was working on her doctorate in political science at Harvard University. But the extent of her declining health didn't hit her until last year, when she went to a restaurant and said her brain was so foggy she couldn't even read the menu.

Today, at 31, she is on medical leave from Harvard, disabled by myalgic encephalomyelitis, or ME -- "the most prevalent and devastating disease your doctor has never heard of," she said. Her illness is better known as chronic fatigue syndrome in the United States, a name Brea said does a disservice to the severity of her symptoms.

"I can't drive. I can't leave my house unattended, and I'm in a wheelchair," said Brea, who lives with her husband in Princeton, N.J. "Even sitting in a wheelchair is taxing for me. It is pretty much impossible for me to do what I was doing before."'

Are Men Really the Bad Guys Holding Women Back?

Mastodon · 31 October 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After investing as much as $250,000 in tuition, why would fathers watch proudly as their daughters graduate from college, and then expect them only to work for a year or two before exiting the workforce to raise a family?

Why would these same fathers feel that their daughters are not entitled, through hard work and accomplishment, to an equal opportunity of building a lucrative and rewarding career?

Why would the vast majority of husbands who have experienced economic downturns -- those who have suffered their own job loss or watched others struggle with unemployment -- discourage wives who want to work and believe that only one income is a wise long-term financial strategy?

Where are the men who feel that any company is justified to pay a young daughter less than her male counterpart for an entry-level job?

Which men think it's OK for their well-qualified wives to be passed over for a promotion or a raise because she's not one of the guys?

No, I don't think the vast majority of men are willingly standing in the way of women in the work world. I do think, as Marche says so insightfully: "Today, men and women are not facing off on a battleground so much as stuck together in a maze of contradictions."

In that maze of contradictions, I believe women are held back by the misperception that they are not welcomed or valued by male colleagues (read Sylvia Ann Hewlett's new book to see how so many successful women have male sponsors) -- and by the universal lack of understanding about gender differences, complementary work styles and diversity. Women share in the responsibility to collectively move their gender ahead-there can't be a wholesale blaming of men for sputters and stalls.'

Kenya: Join in the war against female circumcision, men told

Minuteman · 1 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Men have been asked to join in the fight against female genital mutilation (FGM) to eliminate the vice in communities still practising it.

Abdi Omar of the Kenya Pastoralist Network for Children noted that children continue to suffer as a result of FGM and early marriage.

“Since almost all pastoral communities practise FGM, the government must prioritise its elimination to advance children’s rights to education, health and development,” said Mr Omar.

...

“It can be arrested if men say they are not going to marry circumcised girls anymore,” he said, adding that only 34 per cent of children in arid north- eastern areas are in school.'

IA: Good Samaritan protest's impact

Matt · 1 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From Intact America:

Earlier this month, more than fifty intactivists gathered outside Good Samaritan Hospital in Cincinnati, Ohio to protest its circumcision clamp study... and boy did we make an impact!

- We know we made an impact because passers-by shouted their support—and, in some cases, their anger.
- We know we made an impact because two TV stations showed up to cover our press conference, and the Yellow Springs News, from a nearby town, published my op-ed piece.
- We know we made an impact because a hospital employee blogged about how our protest made circumcision a "major topic of conversation" among hospital staff.
- We know we made an impact because the hospital released a statement responding to our presence.
- We know we made an impact because all over Cincinnati, people saw our mobile billboard; it was “the talk of the town.”

If you haven’t already, please read my report from our protest—a protest which could not have happened without the support of thousands of intactivists like you. More than 6,400 people signed our letter (if you haven't signed it yet, it's not too late to add your name because we plan to send a second set later this year). And together we raised more than $10,000, with every penny going to our presence in Cincinnati.

Social change starts with one person saying out loud, "This is wrong." Look how long it took women to get the vote, how many decades it took for the Civil Rights movement to take hold. It takes time and effort and sacrifice. And together, between television coverage and social media, Intact America reached more than a hundred thousand people with our message!

With gratitude and respect,

Georganne Chapin
Executive Director, Intact America

Malecare seeks support for research

Matt · 1 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From http://www.malecare.org/:

"What Went Wrong: Eliminating Mistakes in Diagnosis and Treatment of Prostate Cancer" is a cancer research project sponsored by Malecare and led by John's Hopkins researcher Channing Paller. We only need $4,120 to complete our funding!

In 1988, about 20% of men with prostate cancer had metastatic disease on first presentation; today fewer than 4% first present with advanced disease.

Yet more than 9,000 men still present with metastatic prostate cancer every year, and black men are far more likely than whites to be among them. We believe that for all of these men, something truly did go wrong and that determining the reasons why requires stringent and diligent surveillance, examination, analysis, and response. If we can find the reasons, we may be able to help ALL prostate cancer patients.

This study looks at black and white men first diagnosed with advanced disease. We analyze the care leading up to their late diagnoses. The aim is to identify modifiable factors that may have contributed to missed or late diagnoses. What went wrong for each man individually? What patterns can we observe across the group?

Please help complete funding by clicking on: SUPPORT NOW!

This is important research. We are so very close to completing our funding and starting the project, so, please help out with as much support as you can. Please feel encouraged to email any questions or comments to me, Darryl Mitteldorf, directly at: darryl-at-malecare.org

"The Hunt" wins the Nordic Council Film Prize

Matt · 1 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Danish director Thomas Vinterberg has become the first filmmaker to win the Nordic Council's Film Prize twice after The Hunt (Jagten) collected the $64,000 (DKK 350,000) award at a gala ceremony in Oslo's Opera House.
...
The jury commented: "Through the allegory of The Hunt, Vinterberg's film explores how the individual can be persecuted even in a well-meaning and well-functioning society, when it suddenly turns on one of its own.

"This remarkable story is carried by Mads Mikkelsen's powerful performance, the striking score and haunting and beautiful imagery."
...
The Hunt tells the story of a teacher (Mikkelsen) in a small provincial town whose life is turned upside-down after a young girl accuses him of abuse.'

Trailer on YouTube here.

To cut or not to cut: More parents are saying no to circumcision

Matt · 1 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite health benefits, routine circumcision in newborn males is on the decline in the U.S.

According to the Centers for Disease Control, 79 percent of American men report being circumcised. Many parents of boys are opting out of the age-old tradition despite a recent study from the University of Illinois-Chicago that found a link between male circumcision and a decreased risk of HIV contraction.

...

Van Note and her fiancé, Grant Hammond, are part of a new generation of parents who don't see a circumcision as a necessity; a movement helped along by educational programs put forth by the many 'pro-intact' advocacy groups currently popping up around the country.

"I guess it's kind of funny to have to advocate for people to be allowed to keep body parts they're born with, but that's what we do," said Georganne Chapin, the executive director of Intact America, an organization dedicated to ending the practice of routine circumcision in the United States.

...

"Even if I believed these studies, they don't justify removing healthy, normal tissue from baby boys – Little babies are not having sex. Little babies are not at risk for sexually transmitted diseases like HIV. This should be a man's choice to have that surgery on himself."

...

"We don't go removing other body parts from babies to reduce their risk of diseases," said Chapin. "We could reduce the risk of skin cancer by removing people's noses and giving them a prosthesis, we could reduce dental problems by removing people's teeth and giving them false teeth – We don't do that. It's unethical. I'm not impressed by any medical claim that serves as a way of justifying an abhorrent unethical practice."

...

"If you're worried about STDs you should just teach your kid safe sex, don't just cut his penis skin off!"'

Man suing company over sexual harassment by female supervisor

Matt · 2 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CARIBOU, Maine — A Caribou man has filed suit against a Moses Lake, Wash. company that operates a plant in Easton, claiming he was sexually harassed by a female supervisor and then subjected to retaliation by co-workers when he complained about it.

...

Among other acts, Bouchard claims in court documents that the woman rubbed his chest with her hands, put her hands under his shirt, rubbed her chest on his back, whispered unwanted vulgar comments into his ear, propositioned him and openly talked about her sex life with him.

...

Bouchard refused to report the conduct to the facility supervisor out of fear that the woman would retaliate against him, so his girlfriend called the facility supervisor and reported it on his behalf in October 2011. An investigation was launched, and several co-workers confirmed the harassment took place, according to court documents.

...

In December 2011, Bouchard filed a charge of discrimination with the Maine Human Rights Commission alleging sexual harassment and retaliation.

...

He was issued a right to sue letter by the Maine Human Rights Commission in August 2012. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission retained dual jurisdiction of the complaint in 2011, and they issued a right to sue letter in October 2012.

Bouchard is seeking compensatory damages, back pay, punitive damages, attorney's fees and any further relief deemed proper by the court.'

Founder of influential economic and financial analysis firm says drop in male enrollment is not a big deal

Matt · 2 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There will always be those who say the decline in male college enrollment is “not a big deal.” It is especially unfortunate when the president and founder of an economic and financial analysis firm who is regularly cited by the mainstream media says it.

According to his website, Dr. Ray Perryman is the founder of Perryman Group (an “economic and financial analysis firm”), is “cited by major media as ‘a world-class scholar,’ is ‘the most quoted man in Texas,’” and is a senior research fellow at the Institute of the University of Texas. He has also authored thousands of academic articles, trade articles, and presentations collectively.

He has written an article titled “Making sense of college enrollment decline” wherein he argues that the drop in male college enrollment isn’t really that bad. This article has been cited by numerous online media outlets. He parses recently published numbers from the U.S. Census Bureau and provides us with a framework to interpret them. There are some statements in his article which are illuminating, and others which warrant further scrutiny.'

Philip Paris wth 'Men Cry Alone'

Matt · 2 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The entire month of October's broadcasting has been focused on the topic of Domestic/Relationship Violence and we are continuing this with a look into the deep silence of our society on the topic of MALE VICTIMS IN RELATIONSHIP/DOMESTIC VIOLENCE.

Please join with Trish as she speaks with Author/Researcher Philip Paris about excellently written book, 'Men Cry Alone'. How is when a man has grown up being abused and then goes into a releationship/marriage which then becomes abusive? What about the situation where they have been together forever, suddenly his sweet wife is becoming violent because of her illness, Dimentia? How about the man whose wife has taken complete control of his world & his finances, but he cannot reach out in society, where is he to go, who will help him, who will listen to him, what about his children?????'

"Movember" Is Here

Matt · 2 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Read about "Movember" at http://us.movember.com/ and at http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Movember. And, I'd like to say mea culpa for not giving the heads-up on Movember in time for readers to participate by securing sponsors, etc. But it's still just the start of November; if you are inclined, you can always grow your 'stache and when asked why, talk about "Movember". Excerpt from their Vision, Values, and Goals page:

"Campaign Strategy & Goals:
We will get men to grow moustaches and the community to support them by creating an innovative, fun and engaging annual Movember campaign that results in:

- Funds for men's health program investment
- Conversations about men's health that lead to:
  - Greater awareness and understanding of the health risks men face
  - Men taking action to remain well
  - When men are sick they know what to do and take action

Program Goals:
Living with and Beyond Cancer
Men living with prostate or testicular cancer have the care needed to be physically and mentally well.

Staying Mentally Healthy, Living with and Beyond Mental Illness

- Men are mentally healthy and take action to remain well
- When men experience mental illness they take action early
- Men are not treated differently when they experience a mental illness

Men's Health Research
We will fund innovative research that builds powerful, collaborative teams that accelerate:

- Improved clinical tests and treatments for prostate and testicular cancer
- Improved physical and mental health outcomes for men"

National Parents Organization Helps Found International Shared Parenting Organization

Matt · 2 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last July, National Parents Organization agreed to serve as a founding member of “Two Homes: The International Platform on Shared Parenting.” This is an umbrella organization with representatives from fourteen countries in Europe and North America. Of these, National Parents Organization may be the only component group with a major grassroots presence. The other organizations consist primarily of child development experts, social scientists, psychologists and lawyers who wish to promote better lives for children through shared parenting after separation or divorce of the parents. Our Founder and Chairman of the Board, Ned Holstein, M.D., M.S., was asked to serve on the Scientific Committee of the new umbrella organization.'

NPR News: "How One Kenyan Tribe Produces The World's Best Runners"

Minuteman · 2 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The Initiation Ceremony

Manners soon learned that they were practicing for an initiation ceremony, a rite of passage that is all about enduring pain.

Elly Kipgogei, 19, remembers going through the ceremony at age 15.

First, he says, he had to crawl mostly naked through a tunnel of African stinging nettles. Then he was beaten on the bony part of the ankle, then his knuckles were squeezed together, and then the formic acid from the stinging nettle was wiped onto his genitals.

But all that was just warm-up; early one morning he was circumcised, with a sharp stick.

During this whole process — the crawling, the beatings and the cutting — Kipgogei was obliged to be absolutely stoical, unflinching.

...

Manners says that this enormous social pressure placed on your ability to endure pain is actually great training for a sport like running where "pushing through pain" is so fundamental to success.

"Circumcision," he says, "teaches kids to withstand pressure and tolerate pain."

...

Modernization Of The Kalenjin

After Kipgogei was circumcised, he wasn't allowed to go home. He was taken to a hut on the outskirts of the village to heal from the operation and he was told, whenever you leave this hut, you are not allowed to walk.

"So you're supposed to run and it's very fast. So you're running very swift, having the pain," he said.

Before the circumcision, Kipgogei was never a runner. Afterward, when he was done with initiation and back in high school, he decided to give it a try.

...

But Kipgogei is part of a new Kalenjin generation that's challenging old ways of doing things. He says when he has kids, his sons will be circumcised pain-free in a hospital. His daughters won't go through any such procedure at all.'

'Why is it always a white guy? The roots of modern, violent rage'

bronxman · 2 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The LAX shooter, once again, is reported to be a white male. Here's why they're always first to violence. Excerpt:

'Yes, Stack and Sherrill were insane, but they were also familiar. They didn't start out mad. No, they were driven crazy by the sense that the world had spun so far off its axis that there was no hope of righting it. Underneath that sense of victimhood, that sense that the corporations and the government were coconspirators in perpetrating the great fleecing of the American common man, lay a defining despair in making things right. And under that despair lay their tragic flaw, a deep and abiding faith in America, in its institutions and its ideals. Like Willy Loman, perhaps the quintessential true believer in the ideology of self-made American masculinity, they believed that if they worked hard and lived right, they, too, could share in the American Dream. When it is revealed that no matter what you do, no matter how hard you work, that dreams are for Disneyland, then they morph into a tragic American Everymen, defeated by circumstances instead of rising above them.
...
Generations of men had staked their claim for manhood on being good family providers, reliable breadwinners. It has been the defining feature of American manhood since the early nineteenth century. ...
...
Let's be clear: just as we cannot understand rampage school shootings by focusing on the fact that they are always committed by boys, neither can we understand these cases simply by recognizing that they're all men. Surely, too, recognizing that they're all men doesn't mean that all men are likely to become deranged mass murderers. Neither, however, can we explain it simply by the easy American access to guns or chalk it up to yet another deranged killer, the standard fare on CSI-like television.

But we can't ignore it, either. There is no one single explanation. What is required is that we look inside the economic and social shifts inside America's workplaces and the broader patterns of class in America. Just as we needed to profile the school shooters and their schools, we also need to profile these guys gone postal and the places where they made their living. We need to ask some questions about the changing conditions of work in America, the political economy in which these men became deranged enough to go postal.'

India's Notorious Section 498A

RohanGupta · 2 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

India's amendments to its Criminal Procedure Code are now effective. They may ameliorate some of the harshest aspects of India's infamous Section 498A. The newly- enacted provisions take away the powers of the police to arrest in cases of alleged offenses which carry a maximum sentence up to seven years of imprisonment. Such offenses include Section 498A of the Indian Penal Code in 1983.

That section makes it criminal for a husband and his relatives to subject a married woman to cruelty is which is likely to drive a woman to commit suicide or cause grave physical or mental injury to her, and harassment with a view to coercing her or any of her relatives to meet any unlawful demands of property.

The problems with the law were the result of a "perfect storm" that was entirely unanticipated when the law was introduced to protect woman in 1983. The elements of the storm included:

- Extremely vague statutory language.

- A separate law that prohibited the provision or acceptance of a dowry.

...

The result has been that when a marriage breaks up the woman is often able to get her husband and many of his family members arrested by simply filing a claim of cruelty and persuading the local police to arrest the so-called wrongdoers. This is much more effective than initiating an ordinary case for divorce.

...

The chairperson of one of India's State Commissions for Women has asserted that, "Many women are using 498A of the IPC (anti-dowry law) to terrorize their husbands and his families." She called it a "cruel and wicked design to blackmail husbands and in-laws."'

The language of misandry in academia: a collection of quotes by faculty members, students, and administrators

TCM · 2 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

New mega-post at A Voice for Male Students featuring a warehouse of misandrist quotes by faculty members, students, and administrators. This should be a useful resource for those new to men's issues in academia as well as a helpful "go-to" resource among advocates. Example:

"I'm really tired of people suggesting that you're somehow un-American if you don't respect the presumption of innocence, because you know what that sounds like to a victim? Presumption you're a liar."

- Wendy Murphy, adjunct professor of law and sex-assault victim advocate, commenting on the Duke lacrosse false rape case

Cop Tricked Teen With Autism Into Buying Pot, Lawsuit Claims

Kris · 2 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This recent article is making national headlines, however the incident happened December of 2012. Soon afterwards, the parents wrote a blog post that shed more light on how things went down the day their son was arrested. Excerpt:

'According to the Snodgrasses, a police officer pretended to be their son's friend, which pleased them because he has trouble making friends. When the couple suggested inviting this new friend home, the friend "would always have an excuse, saying he couldn't or he was grounded," Catherine Snodgrass said. The parents said they later learned the "friend" was Deputy Daniel Zipperstein of the Riverside County Sheriff's Department, who was posing as a student named Daniel Briggs for several months at their son's school.

Zipperstein hounded their son to sell him marijuana or his prescription medication, the parents said they later learned.

The teen couldn't access his prescription medication because his parents keep it locked. After more than three weeks of pestering, the teen bought a half-joint from a homeless man and gave it to the officer, who had given him $20 weeks earlier, according to the Snodgrasses. The teen did this once more before refusing to continue, prompting the deputy to end the supposed friendship, the parents said.

The couple said their son was arrested soon after that. He was taken to the police station and was not allowed to see his parents until his court date two days later, the parents said.'

Dress Ad Gets it Wrong

Dantheman123 · 3 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

I was recently exposed to a video produced for a Turkish clothes company that openly attacks men. The video doesn't contain any dialogue but shows a woman attacking and beating up a man just because he tore her dress. The video shows men in a bad light and seems to encourage domestic violence as well as being incredibly sexist. The company seem to have uploaded the video to several locations, two being:

1. http://vitaminl.tv/video/599?ref=ft

2. http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=wIm-F0BjcOA

Feel free to leave comments on each as there have already been a number of comments like "chill it's just a joke," and "we have been taking sh-t for years now it's time for you to take some".

The second link is quite important as they have linked directly to it from their website, meaning any comments left on that YouTube video will be seen by a lot of people on the way to their site. Currently there are not many comments on the YT video so anything posted that is negative will sit at the top.

Ed. Note: This ad is not probably SFW for most people since the scenario around the man ripping the woman's dress open is based on them engaging in a passionate pre-intercourse make-out session. An ad like this is not likely to be seen in many places but indeed, different countries have different standards.

U.S. Institute of Peace: ‘Masculinity’ to Blame for Violence, Terrorism

Mastodon · 3 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Speakers at a symposium hosted by a taxpayer-funded institute this week said some aspects of masculinity contribute to mass violence and criticized the United States for spending more on counterterrorism operations than sexual assault prevention efforts.

The “Men, Peace, and Security Symposium: Agents of Change,” held at the U.S. Institute of Peace (USIP) on Monday and Tuesday, “aim[ed] to better understand how the ascribed norms of men and masculine identities contribute to, and may even help mitigate, violent conflict and post-conflict,” according to USIP’s website
...
Experts say the views of feminists like Kilmartin have begun to creep into federal institutions. Christina Hoff Sommers, resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute and a former philosophy professor, wrote in an op-ed last year for the Washington Post that a study released at the time by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) “suggest[ed] that rates of sexual violence in the United States are comparable to those in the war-stricken Congo.”

Sommers said the CDC study, which estimated that 1.3 million women were raped and an additional 12.6 million women and men were victims of sexual violence in the U.S. in 2010, relied on telephone surveys with low response rates and ambiguous questions for the interviewees. By comparison, the Bureau of Justice Statistics’ National Crime Victimization Survey reported 188,380 rapes and sexual assaults on females and males in 2010.
...
Other experts contacted by the Washington Free Beacon expressed alarm at Kilmartin’s juxtaposition of sexual violence with terrorist acts at an event sponsored by taxpayer-supported groups.

“His absurd comparison of this problem to terrorist violence against victims like the ones ruthlessly killed on 9/11 should not be taken seriously,” said Elaine Donnelly, president of the Center for Military Readiness and a former member of the 1992 Presidential Commission on the Assignment of Women in the Armed Forces, in an email.
...
While recent anonymous surveys have purportedly shown a rise in sexual assault incidents in the military, experts say a more detailed analysis indicates that rates have actually declined over time.

Not everyone at the conference agreed with the assessments of Kilmartin and other speakers.

Sunil Desai, a retired Marine who served for more than 20 years, said in an interview that there are fundamental flaws with the argument that masculinity is often behind violence, which he called “an easy target to blame.” Desai is the president and treasurer of the Bindi Project, a group that advocates for the health of girls and women in India.

“[Sexual assault perpetrators] represent the minority of the total population,” he told the Free Beacon. “If you assume that masculinity is the problem, that doesn’t explain the vast majority of the remainder of the male population that’s masculine, that isn’t doing this.”
...
“If you tell someone that violence and the ability to conduct violence is inherently bad, and then send them off to do it, and expect them to come back and reintegrate and be mentally stable?” he said. “It’s not possible.”'

'America's Angry White Men'

Mastodon · 3 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'And, like Beale, a lot of the current crop of the outraged are a lot of white men. Not all of them, of course. There are plenty of angry men of color and plenty of angry white women. Just look at those Tea Party rallies! But as a political movement, as the rank and file of America's fulminators -- whether the Tea Party or organizations on the extreme right wing, or the guys, always guys, who open fire on their classmates at school or their co-workers and colleagues at work, or the men, almost always men, who beat and murder those they claim to love, or the young men, always young men, who walk into movie theaters of places of worship with guns blazing -- well it's pretty hard to deny that they're virtually all white men. (And let us be clear: just because virtually all these cases are middle- and lower-middle class white men, does not for a nanosecond mean that all white men are crazed killers or white supremacists. All members of the Mafia may be Italian, but not all Italians are members of the Mafia.)

Yet deny it we do, often by assuming that these outbursts are motivated by anything at all -- mental illness, access to guns, video games, whatever -- other than gender. We'd notice, of course, if it were poor black girls pulling the triggers in school shootings, or women who walked into their workplaces with semi-automatic guns firing, or all Asians or Jews or Latinos who were shooting up our movie theaters and political rallies. But white men? Must be some other factor.

It seems so obvious, and yet so startling to see middle-class white American men, arguably the most privileged human beings on the planet (excluding, of course, hereditary aristocracies and the upper classes) fuming with such self-righteous outrage. (The comedian Louis CK gets this sense of privilege: "I'm a white man," he says, "How many advantages can one persona have?"
...
What unites them, I came to understand, was a sentiment I called "aggrieved entitlement." Raised to believe that this was "their" country, simply by being born white and male, they were entitled to a good job by which they could support a family as sole breadwinners, and to deference at home from adoring wives and obedient children. And not only do their kids and their wives have ideas of their own; not only is the competition for those jobs increasingly ferocious; they've also been slammed by predatory lenders, corporate moguls, Wall Street short-sellers betting against their own companies and manipulated by cynical elites into believing that their adversaries were not the ones downsizing, outsourcing and cutting their jobs, but those assorted others -- women, immigrants, gays, black people -- who were asserting their claims for a piece of the pie. The middle class white American man expected to be more Don Draper, all self-made , in control, and upwardly mobile. Instead he's more like William Foster, another fictional character who's fallen off the cliff into that dark abyss of despair, violence and madness.

Today's Angry White Men look backward, nostalgically at the world they have lost. Some organize politically to restore "their" country; some descend into madness; others lash out violently at a host of scapegoats. Theirs is a fight to restore, to reclaim more than just what they feel entitled to socially or economically -- it's also to restore their sense of manhood, to reclaim that sense of dominance and power to which they also feel entitled. They don't get mad, they want to get even -- but with whom?'

Schools Are Hostile to Boys

Mastodon · 4 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt

'In my Saturday Eagle Forum talk program, I recently interviewed one of our country's leading authors and scholars, Christina Hoff Sommers. She is a courageous woman who has the nerve to expose some of the feminist nonsense that has permeated public schools. She poses a question that parents should ask, Is my son really welcome in school? The honest answer is No. Public schools have become hostile territory to boys.

Here are several recent examples. Christopher Marshall, age 7, was suspended from a Virginia school for picking up a pencil and using it to pretend to "shoot" a "bad guy." Josh Welch, also age 7, was sent home from his Maryland school for eating off the corners of a Pop-Tart to shape it like a gun. Colorado's Alex Evans, also age 7, was suspended for throwing an imaginary hand grenade at imaginary "bad guys." These kids were guilty of nothing more than being ordinary 7-year-old boys. Yet, in all these cases, school officials found them in violation of the school's zero tolerance policies for firearms. The punishment of these kids was clearly a ludicrous application of the rule against guns. In the name of Zero Tolerance, elementary schools are becoming hostile environments for young boys.'

'Extreme feminists must be tamed'

Mastodon · 4 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hardcore feminists routinely fight against anything with even the slightest suggestion of sexism. Even noble causes are often vilified because of a misplaced belief that they may demean women. Because of this one-track mindset and obstinate pride, extreme feminists cannot conceive both the direct and indirect consequences of their actions.
...
The ultimate goal of feminism should be to push for equality of women in society. Unfortunately, this simple idea has been warped into a war cry by the insecure and selfish, committed to benefiting their own egotistical desires rather than the true needs of women.

While I believe feminism is a positive idea for women in general, extreme feminists must stop outsourcing the blame for their own problems to men and society.

In reality, many of the feminists of today are out of touch with the original and true feminist ideals. They are women and men who cannot internally resolve their problems, so they cast the blame onto men and society, attacking anything they find the slightest bit offensive in a sad attempt to find temporary solace. Their actions and beliefs do not contribute in any way to creating real equality for women in society.'

The Lance Armstrong Solution -- Stop Paying Male Athletes Millions and They'll Stop Cheating

Mastodon · 4 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Dare your best friend to eat a bucket of maggots. Then offer that same friend a million dollars to eat the same bucket of maggots and listen for that delightful capitalist crunch.

Humans are weak. And they become especially weak once you start shoving millions into their eager, money-grubbing fingers. Thankfully, most humans don't have to worry about making bad moral decisions after being offered a cool mill, because most of us are poor. Or -- relative to a baseball player netting $50 million a year -- poorish.

...

One pervasive argument for why women's sports aren't popular (and therefore less likely to have money thrown at them) is that the demand just isn't there. Women don't play or watch sports on the same level as men.

...

Everyone may lie. But everyone doesn't perform secret blood transfusions on a bus to get that annual $30 mill.

Reexamine why we play sports in the first place and turn off the millions flowing to professional athletes. And watch the bloodsuckers start to fall away.'

UK: Man Burned To Death After False Pedophilia Accusations

Mastodon · 4 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An innocent man in the United Kingdom was burned to death after being wrongly accused of pedophilia.

According to the Bristol Post, Bijan Ebrahimi, an Iranian man who lived in Bristol, England, was murdered in July after rumors began swirling in his community that he had been taking indecent photographs of children.

The Telegraph reports that Ebrahimi, who was an avid gardener, had indeed taken photos of local youths. However, it is now believed that these youths had been harassing Ebrahimi by damaging his flowers, and that he may have been collecting the photos as evidence to present to the police.

With emotions running high, a crowd of residents chanted "pedo, pedo" as Ebrahimi was led away for questioning, The Telegraph reports.

...

Police say that upon investigation, Ebrahimi, who is said to have had a physical disability, was found innocent of all charges and was released.

"We can categorically state he had not taken any indecent images and that nothing of concern had been found on his computer," a police spokesman said, according to The Telegraph.

On July 14, Ebrahimi was reportedly beaten unconscious by a 24-year-old local resident named Lee James. The young man, with the help of Stephen Norley, also 24, then set Ebrahimi on fire after dousing him with alcohol.'

Men Banned: Why Female Workers Choose Women-Only Workspaces

Mastodon · 4 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The flexible workspace industry is reacting to women's needs and their aspirations to run businesses by offering women-only workspaces. As a female small business owner, I find this concept interesting. My initial thought was, "Why exclude men and therefore potential business opportunities?"

"Working in a female-only environment doesn't mean those workers don't conduct business with men outside of their office – and many women-only workspaces allow businessmen into the workplace for meetings," she pointed out.

"These spaces are important. They are answering a need, and providing additional support for female business owners who, for their own reasons, don't wish to work in a mixed environment. The flexible workspace sector is well-placed to facilitate specific needs, and the surge in women-only workspaces is one example of how precisely and timely the industry can react. These spaces provide a comfortable setting for female members to work happily and productively, allowing them to progress their businesses and benefit the community, by providing products, services or creating jobs. This represents an enormous opportunity for economical growth both on a local and national scale."'

Bad teaching causes girls to fail at school, not male classmates

Mastodon · 4 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Belinda Parmar wrote this week that all-girls schools are good for young women because they remove the pressure to conform to gender stereotypes and the sexism that she believes is rife in co-educational secondaries. I have to disagree.

...

And yet the mixed-sex sports lessons, sex education classes and all those other subjects didn't just deposit us rudely on the other side of our A-levels, they helped us to form opinions about the world, recognise differences and grow into well-rounded people.

Because actually, while some of the results in my school were poor, this was probably down to lack of career advice and bad teaching, not because I sat next to rowdy boys in my chemistry class. I'd say poor teaching was the reason that I didn't get enthused about IT and tech, not that I felt as if I couldn't compete.

...

To assume that children are born with a gendered view of the world, and that the answer is to separate them and teach them in single-sex schools, is defeatist. Yes, society today may have a problem with stereotyping and discrimination, but the next generation must be given the chance to prove those who went before them wrong. If we provide them with the tools to examine the world fairly, they will.'

Estonia: National Strategy Aims to Increase Share of Male Teachers to 25%

Mastodon · 4 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

One of the goals of the Ministry of Education's newly-drafted lifelong learning strategy for 2014-2020 is to increase the share of young teachers and male teachers, uudised.err.ee reported.

In 2012, 85.7 percent of teachers were women, in one example of the traditional gender gap that appears to be more strongly entrenched in Estonia compared with its neighbors in the region.

The target seven years from now is a 75-25 percent split.

Teachers under 30 currently make up 10.3 percent of staff and the goal is for this to rise, modestly, to 12.5 percent.'

Woman runs over boyfriend 3 times for refusing a McDonald's run

Mastodon · 5 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Police in Tennessee say a woman ran over her boyfriend three times after he refused to go to McDonald's with her.

Crystal Greer Brooks, 33, of Kingsport was apparently upset that her boyfriend wanted to eat at a different restaurant, police told the Kingsport Times-News.

Officers were called to West Carters Valley Road shortly after midnight last Wednesday.

They found Brooks' boyfriend with abrasions to his arms and back.

His clothing "appeared torn, consistent with being dragged on the pavement," the Times-News reported.

He told police Brooks forced him over to the side of the road, then got in his pickup truck and ran him over -- three times.

Brooks has been charged with aggravated assault.'

South Africa: "Circumscribing Circumcision"

Minuteman · 5 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Over 80,000 boys went to initiation schools in 2012, up from 30,000 in 2008, said Lechesa Tsenoli, traditional affairs minister, in Parliament this year.

...

Often no anaesthetic is used. The surgeon's hands are often unwashed and ungloved. After the cut, the initiate's foreskin is usually buried or tied to his blanket. Herbs and leaves are applied to the wound, which is then bandaged, sometimes so tightly that oxygen is cut off and an infection develops. A traditional attendant dresses the wounds, sometimes reusing the bandages on other boys.

A period of seclusion follows, lasting up to two months. For a week, the initiates cannot leave the camp or eat meat. Their fluid intake is limited and often they only survive on maize meal. The first week after circumcision may be marked by hunger, dehydration and seclusion. If an initiate falls ill, traditional doctors and nurses will treat him before he is taken to hospital.

...

About 30% of the world's men are circumcised, according to a 2007 World Health Organisation report. Research shows that circumcision can reduce the risk of HIV infection by 48% to 60%, according to the report. This is crucial in South Africa where, according to the latest Statistics South Africa figures, 10% of the country's population is HIV positive.

Religious cultures such as Judaism and sects of Islam circumcise boys with few complications, largely because trained practitioners perform the procedure at infancy rather than adolescence, which helps with healing. But in South Africa this tradition has recently been marred by deaths, mutilations and amputations.

...

Penalties for performing a circumcision without meeting provincial guidelines include a fine of 10,000 rand (about $1,000) in the Eastern Cape and ten years imprisonment. There are also news reports of schools kidnapping boys, but often it is later found that the young men decided to attend without telling their parents.

...

The national health department said it would launch a new plan in October, ahead of the December initiation season. The new plan (still not revealed before going to press) will likely promote the practice of medical circumcision, which would place professional doctors and nurses at the initiation sites.'

Girl Who Was 'Proud' Of Brutal Killing Pleads Guilty

Matt · 5 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'MEADVILLE, Pa. -- Nichole "Jade" Olmstead bragged about the torture and murder of 20-year-old Brandy Stevens-Rosine, an Ohio college student who was beaten and buried alive in a shallow grave in rural Pennsylvania.

Those and other details were released on Halloween, following a surprise decision by 20-year-old Olmstead, who had been fighting a homicide charge, to plead guilty to first-degree murder.

"Olmstead had a journal," Crawford County District Attorney Francis Schultz told The Huffington Post on Monday. "She talked about the fact that using a shovel [to hit Stevens-Rosine in the head] was perfect -- that she could see [Stevens-Rosine's] skull and brains mixed in the dirt."
...
In changing her plea, Olmstead admitted her role in the 2012 slaying of Stevens-Rosine. She also expressed remorse for her crime.

"[I am] truly and deeply sorry for what happened. Brandy did not deserve what happened to her," Olmstead said in court.

Crawford County Court of Common Pleas Judge Mark Stevens, no relation to the murder victim, sentenced Olmstead, without delay, to life in prison without parole.'

Tom Martin seeks volunteer crew for documentary exposing women's sexist humour

Matt · 5 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Details here. Excerpt:

'Could women be as funny as men? Researcher/presenter, marketer, editor and film crew wanted for a two day shoot as part of this controversial zero budget feature-length documentary investigating the differences between women's and men's joke-making styles, motivations, and abilities.

In early January, we will be filming this two day street experiment in central London, interviewing male and female passers by to see how sexist their improvised one liners are when joking about the other sex, and to see just how funny they are too. We expect to find that women's jokes about men are three to five times more hostile and sexist than men's jokes about women, and less funny too.'

Ed: The Tom Martin seeking a film crew is the same Tom Martin as discussed here.

SAVE E-lert: Be on the Lookout for Half-Truths that Injure and Kill

Matt · 5 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

SAVE applauds the efforts of organizations that are working to reduce domestic violence. No one should be abused by their intimate partner, and certainly, no one should lose their life this way.

Even though the rates of DV have been going down, men and women are still being victimized. And each year, over 1,000 of these people die.

One way that we can reduce domestic violence is with information. What better way is there to protect people, than to teach them how to avoid abuse?

Sadly, most DV websites are lacking. None of the Fact Sheets we reviewed mentioned these three risk factors:

1. Injury was more than twice as likely when the violence was mutual — 28.4% — compared to unidirectional violence — 11.6%.
2. Female initiation of partner violence is the leading reason for the woman becoming a victim of subsequent injury.
3. Persons who are separated face a risk of partner violence that is 50 times higher the rate of married individuals.

This week, look up your state's Domestic Violence Coalition. You can find it here:
http://www.ncadv.org/resources/StateCoalitionList.php

See if they list these risk factors. If not, give them a call or shoot them an email. Let them know that they could be protecting even more people if they update their website.

On behalf of every victim, thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Is Male Circumcision a Form of Genital Mutilation?

Mastodon · 5 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the children's ombudsmen of the Nordic countries, male circumcision is a form of genital mutilation and they're fighting to ban the practice. Representatives from Denmark, Sweden, Iceland, Finland, Norway, and Greenland all recently met in Norway with doctors and surgeons who agreed on one thing: the fight for the right to keep foreskin.

In a campaign, which launched in September, they concluded that the procedure is in conflict with the UN Convention of the Rights of the Child, which says, "Children should have the right to express their own views and be protected from traditional rituals which may be harmful to their health."

In other words, the boys should wait until they're old enough to decide for themselves. This all began when a 16-year-old Icelandic boy asked if his parents had the right to circumcise him when he was a baby. The matter was brought to the attention of Iceland's children's ombudsman, Margaret Maria Sigurðardottir.
...
"The leading health professionals here in Iceland, who also signed the Nordic statement, believe that circumcision without medical indication, of a person who is unable to provide consent violates fundamental medical-ethical principles," Margaret told me over the phone. "They have therefore refused to perform such procedures."'

War On Boys Continues in Arizona School

Mastodon · 5 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An idiot headmaster has threatened an 8-year-old boy with expulsion for drawing Halloween costumes that depict weapons.

A couple pulled their sons out of Scottsdale Country Day School last week because they said the headmaster threatened to expel their 8-year-old for drawing “highly disturbing” pictures.

“In this situation, it’s actually the principal of the school who bullied the parents – so much that we couldn’t even be safe in that environment,” said Jeff, whose last name we’re omitting to protect the identities of his children.

The three images in question depict a soldier, a ninja and a Star Wars character - possibilities for the 8-year-old’s Halloween costume.

Drawing Boba Fett obviously means the kid is highly disturbed and a total threat to everyone around him. Drawing a picture of an American soldier is worthy of the academic death penalty.'

The Dawn of Male Equality in Europe

Mastodon · 5 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oct. 29, 2013 — A fumbling men's movement is dawning in Europe, there is a widespread concern about boys' academic performance in school, and child custody and breakups are controversial issues.

"It was surprising to see that the discussion concerning boys' role as academic losers in school was found in all the countries covered by this study," says Elli Scambor who is one of the near forty scholars who have participated in the EU report The role of men in gender equality.

...

"And the school as a feminized institution was identified as the main problem."

Although research shows that more boys than girls drop out of school and that their academic performance is slightly poorer than the girls', it also shows that class and migration background is as important as gender when one tries to explain these differences.

...

However, this is the first time that men's situation has been summarized on such a wide basis, especially in terms of work, family, care and health. The fact that this has been put on the agenda in Europe is both new and important.

...

However, the researchers found signs of dawning male movements in all the 31 countries which have been examined; England and Sweden are in the lead, each having 24 male organizations.

"Many of them focus on child custody after breakups, on boys as losers in the education system and on the influence of feminism on men," says Scambor.'

Make fatherhood a man’s choice

Mastodon · 5 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite all of this and in complete keeping with my deep-seated feminism, I believe that making fatherhood optional—as motherhood is—and revamping the child support system to stop requiring financial support from noncustodial parents (usually men) who want to opt out early is good for women, men, and the kids in question. In addition, we should further our support of women who choose to opt out of motherhood via abortion or adoption as well. It’s time to make parenthood a true choice, on every level.

...

However, in the meantime, we should not use problems of access to and affordability of abortion as a reason that men must pay child support (i.e., that women can’t access abortion so they have to have and raise children and men therefore shouldn’t get off the “hook “either). Those women can utilize adoption. It has always confused me that those who are in favor of holding men financially responsible for a child that results from a pregnancy do not attempt to hold men legally responsible for sharing the cost of abortion with a woman who decides to terminate her pregnancy. I think men have a right to opt out of both, but if one argues that men are responsible for the outcome of a pregnancy they created, and abortion is the outcome, why don’t we pursue men for abortion costs? Especially when, according to the National Network of Abortion Funds, more than 200,000 women a year in the U.S seek assistance with paying for their abortions. The Network also points out that 4,000 women a year in the U.S. are denied abortions because they pass the legal gestational limit while trying to raise the funds. Why do we put men on the “hook” for children but not on the “hook” for abortions?'

UW student's 'rape culture' letter draws outrage

Mastodon · 6 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'David Hookstead appears to be at the top of his game.

And his game is ticking people off.

Hookstead, a UW junior who studies political science, is the author of "'Rape culture' does not exist," a letter to the editor published in the Badger Herald Monday. By noon Tuesday the piece had drawn 467 comments — the vast majority of them hostile to Hookstead's views, but a significant number in support.

In essence, Hookstead argues, rape has been blown way out of proportion because women are prone to false accusations.'

Amherst College warns students that alumni are probably rapists

Mastodon · 6 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At Amherst College, where students gripe that there isn't enough communism leftist discourse, a residence hall coordinator warned students to be on the lookout for "unwanted sexual advances" by randy alumni returning to campus over homecoming weekend.

The staffer who sent the email is Dominick Usher, reports Newsweek. Usher sent the memo about potential alumni rapists to dormitory counselors, asking them to "share with all of your residents about how best to have a safe and fun homecoming weekend."

The rationale for the missive seems to have been the belief that male Amherst alums aren't able to have sexual relationships or, in fact, score with the ladies beyond the confines of the elite, private, $57,970-a-year school.

"A lot of alums come back for Homecoming pretty jaded with the bar scene and blind dating of the real world and are eager to take advantage of what they now perceive to be an 'easy' hook-up scene back at Amherst," Usher's email counsels. "Also, many alums tend to be pretty drunk all weekend long. Alert your residents to this unfortunate combination and keep an eye on your friends, your residents, and yourself."'

The Hyped Campus Rape That Wasn't

Mastodon · 6 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If a satirist had set out to write a scathing parody of the campus crusade against rape, he could not have come up with anything more bizarre, or more ridiculous, than the real-life comedy-drama that unfolded last month at Ohio University in Athens, Ohio.

The scandal started, like many scandals do these days, in the social media. On Saturday, October 12, amidst the school's Homecoming Weekend festivities, photos and a video of two young people engaged in a public sex act near the campus--the man on his knees performing oral sex on the woman while she leaned against a plate-glass window, half-sitting on its ledge--showed up online and promptly spread on Twitter.

... OU senior Allie Erwin lamented to 10-TV, "Our first instinct as a community was not to intervene and help this woman, but to post it on social media, and make a mockery of probably the most traumatic experience of her life."
...
Meanwhile, the photos and videos--initially taken down after the rape complaint--resurfaced. They appeared to show a fully consensual encounter; the woman was seen smiling, flipping back her hair, at one point putting her hand on the back of the man's head, and even posing for the camera with a grin on her face. Witnesses confirmed that, while both participants were clearly drunk, the "victim" was not incapacitated and "seemed like she was enjoying it"; she also left with the man afterwards, walking unassisted. (While none of the onlookers thought the sex was non-consensual, at least one or two of them berated the man as a "slut" and physically assaulted him after he stood up, bloodying his face--an ironic detail considering feminist complaints that women are stigmatized for sexually "loose" behavior while men are not.)
...
The university is still considering whether to take disciplinary action against one or both of the students. (One may safely assume that charges against the woman for filing a false police report is not one of the options on the table.) Meanwhile, a follow-up "campus conversation" on sexism, sexual assault, and alcohol is scheduled for November 18. Since the proposed topics include "double standards," it would be interesting to invite the discussants to consider the following scenario:

An intoxicated woman performs oral sex on an equally intoxicated man in public view. Some female passers-by outraged by the woman's loose conduct berate her as a slut and beat her up before she leaves the scene in the man's company. Which of the two would be seen as the victim deserving of public support?'

Study: Eating Disorders In Male Teens Are More Common

Matt · 7 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ATLANTA (CBS ATLANTA) – Eating disorders in male teenagers are more common than previously thought.

A new study by researchers at Boston Children's Hospital has found that roughly 18 percent of teen males have extreme concerns about their weight and physique, raising their risk to start engaging in risky behaviors.

Researchers warn that eating disorders with males may not be noticed during doctor's visits because their desires are different than females in terms of physiques.

"Clinicians may not be aware that some of their male patients are so preoccupied with their weight and shape that they are using unhealthy methods to achieve the physique they desire," study author Alison Field, an associate professor of pediatrics and epidemiology at Harvard School of Public Health in Boston, said in a statement.'

NPO: Alabama Supreme Court Ends “Right” to College Life

Matt · 7 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While everyone was fretting over the Federal shutdown, the Alabama Supreme Court took the unexpected, but absolutely correct action, of overturning Bayliss v. Bayliss. The Bayliss precedent has been used by courts to provide post-minority support for college. It has become an expected right for the "college life" for Alabama children.

Now, with Bayliss overturned, the choice to provide monies for college is the choice of divorced parents. These parents, just as with the children of non-divorced parents, may add conditions that may be met by their children in order to provide college costs.

It is the first lesson in responsibility for many children to seek funds through scholarships, grants, parents, grandparents, and "God forbid" work. Now all children, whether or not their parents are together, may learn this lesson.'

NPO: Family Courts' Anti-Father Practices Produce Single Fathers By Choice

Matt · 7 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For decades we've had "single mothers by choice." Now fathers are making the same one. This article on the subject of men opting for fatherhood without a partner is long, thoughtful and informative (The Guardian, 11/1/13). It's also, to my mind, less judgmental than it ought to be.
...
But the many reasons single parenthood isn't a good idea for children when women do it all apply to men as well. One big reason is money. Two parents can earn more than one and the lack of money alone creates a host of problems for single parents and their kids. ...
...
In short, the children of single fathers will be exempt from none of the slings and arrows that those of single mothers try, often unsuccessfully, to withstand. So the smart money says their outcomes won't be any better.
...
However, one factor portends an ever-greater movement in the direction of single fathers adopting kids.

"What I find with single men, is one of two things," [U.S. lawyer and surrogacy expert Melissa] Brisman says. "Either they have been very successful in their careers and built businesses and they've not had time to meet anyone. Or they've had a very bad divorce and are afraid to get married and have their businesses threatened, or their custody threatened, and they would just prefer to go it alone. They know with surrogacy they won't have these issues." Brisman is convinced that the tendency of family courts to award custody to the mother is a key driver in the rise of heterosexual single fathers.
...
Given the cold, hard facts of family courts, it's all too easy to see why a man who wants a child would opt to forego marriage and adopt a baby out of foster care or from a foreign country. Family court is a minefield for fathers. Why set foot there if you don't have to?'

Is Alimony Offensive to Today's Modern Woman or Modern Man?

Matt · 7 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Reasons Why Alimony May Be Considered Offensive:

1. An alimony obligation that forces one party to significantly financially downsize his/her lifestyle, while the alimony-receiving former spouse continues to live at the same standard of living as had been enjoyed during the marriage is inequitable and offensive to the alimony-paying spouse 2. Paying alimony to an ex-spouse, who is cohabiting with someone else 3. Agreeing to lump sum alimony, and watching your ex remarry shortly 4. Alimony quashes the motivation to work and become self-sufficient 5. Alimony encourages a "victim" mentality, which is insulting when the recipient is educated and capable of working.'

Three Reasons Divorce Is Harder On Men Than Women

Matt · 7 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It turns out that in the age-old battle of the sexes, men seem to be having a more difficult time coping with the dissolution of a marriage. According to a recent study from the Journal of Men's Health, divorced men are more susceptible to heart disease, high blood pressure, and strokes than married men are — in addition to being 39 percent more likely to commit suicide and engage in risky behavior.

...

They Lose Their Sense Of Identity "My key breakthrough was realizing that I was defining myself with respect to my marriage," said Denbaum. Even with multiple degrees and a successful career, he found himself lost in the process of his divorce. "I made the marriage the be all and end all, and when I saw that crumbling, I felt like my identity was crumbling."

...

Their Paternal Instinct Is Challenged "For me, family has always been important," says Denbaum. "I grew up in a happy family, and I never doubted for a minute that I would get married and raise one of my own. I think just as there are maternal instincts in women, there is a paternal instinct in men." He describes part of this paternal instinct as a longing to belong with the status quo, and to be a provider.

...

They Don't Allow Themselves To Grieve Properly "Bottling up feelings with no outlet leads men to experience feelings of depression," said Denbaum. "As someone with no biological predisposition, I definitely think that the breakup of my marriage brought me to experience physiological problems like high blood pressure and mental ones like my battle with depression at the time."'

Boy, 13, suspended from school for carrying purse

Matt · 7 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 13-year-old Kansas eighth-grader says he was suspended from school on Wednesday because he refused to take off his Vera Bradley purse.

His furious mother says it is discrimination because girls are allowed to have purses with no repercussions.
...
Skylar is a student at Anderson County Senior-Junior School. He said he has been carrying the colorful fabric Vera Bradley bag over his shoulder for some time with no issues.

"It expresses myself and I think everyone else can wear it, so I wear it as well," Skylar told KCTV5's Dave Jordan.
...
She said she reviewed the student handbook but did not see a mention to bags or purses. She questions the suspension and the timing.

"Skylar has been going to school since August with that same Vera Bradley bag on, hasn't taken it off. What is the problem?" she asked.

She said she supports her son and his choices. She said if he wants to carry a Vera Bradley purse or any other type of bag that he should be able to do so without being punished.
...
"I've seen girls wear short shorts. Why don't they get kicked out? But then he gets kicked out for a purse? That doesn't make sense. It's not right," Haight said.

Willis said she was told that the suspension wouldn't be lifted until Skylar stops wearing the purse, which he says he won't do.'

Swedish cinemas launch feminist movie rating

Mastodon · 7 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You expect movie ratings to tell you whether a film contains nudity, sex, profanity or violence. Now movie theaters in equality-minded Sweden are introducing a new rating to highlight gender bias, or rather the absence of it.

To get an "A" rating, a movie must pass the so-called Bechdel test, which means it must have at least two named female characters who talk to each other about something other than a man.

"The entire 'Lord of the Rings' trilogy, all 'Star Wars' movies, 'The Social Network,' 'Pulp Fiction' and all but one of the 'Harry Potter' movies fail this test," said Ellen Tejle, the director of Bio Rio, an art-house movie theater in Stockholm's trendy Sodermalm district.
...
The state-funded Swedish Film Institute supports the initiative, which is starting to catch on. Scandinavian cable TV channel Viasat Film says it will start using the ratings in its film reviews and has scheduled an "A" rated "Super Sunday" on Nov. 17, when it will show only films that pass the test, such as "The Hunger Games," "The Iron Lady" and "Savages."
...
For some, though, Sweden's focus on gender equality has gone too far.

"If they want different kind of movies they should produce some themselves and not just point fingers at other people," said Tanja Bergkvist, a physicist who writes a blog about Sweden's "gender madness."'

War on Women, 2014 Edition

Mastodon · 7 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The disastrous Obamacare rollout has Democrats on the defensive, and looking for any excuse to change the subject. They will almost certainly look to reengage one of their favorite diversions: the “war on women.”
...
As an example, Ellmers noted that a single, 32-year-old male would not have much use for maternity coverage, yet would be required to purchase a policy that includes it under Obamacare. “To the best of your knowledge has a man ever delivered a baby?” she asked Sebelius, who conceded that she didn’t “think so.”
...
Women, of course, will be wooed at every turn. Expect Senate majority leader Harry Reid to hold another vote on the so-called Paycheck Fairness Act, which would make it easier for people to sue their employers for gender discrimination and eliminate caps on punitive-damage claims in class-action discrimination lawsuits. Democrats have a penchant for giving friendly names to bills they know Republicans will oppose, and then attacking GOP lawmakers for “opposing equal pay for women,” or “supporting workplace discrimination.” And if Republicans point out, as Ellmers did, that Obamacare unfairly forces people — young men in particular — to buy insurance plans they don’t want or need at a higher cost, they will inevitably be attacked for waging a war on women’s health care. ...
...
Democrats have certainly had some success propagating the “war on women” theme and putting Republicans on the defensive. Their ability to do so may be undermined by the ongoing disaster that is Obamacare. But that won’t stop them from trying.'

UW-Madison student paper editor reaches to explain "rape culture" letter decision

Mastodon · 7 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You have to try to imagine the criticism the editor (Katherine Krueger) must have heard. She goes on at such great length. On the blog yesterday, we talked about the letter, here. The newspaper is The Badger Herald, at the University of Wisconsin—Madison.

...

So Hookstead is not only a denialist; his denialism is proof of the existence of the culture. There should be a name for the culture where there are articles of faith so strong that if you say X is not true, you are viewed as reinforcing the proposition that X is true.

...

Krueger condemns her fellow student in language so strong that I had to go back and reread his letter to try to figure out what was so inflammatory. Krueger calls it "morally repugnant, patriarchal... offensive... the embodiment of rape culture... horrifically misguided... repellent... reprehensible... hateful... infuriating... ugly."

Isn't that a little over-the-top? Is no one allowed anymore to muse about the location of the line between bad sex and the crime of rape? Must one become a social pariah for questioning whether the activities of some criminals means their crime is our culture?'

Are Boys Falling Behind?

Mastodon · 7 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Missing from this Advanced Placement English class at Williamston High School are the boys. Just three in Jean Eddington-Shipman's class this semester.

"When I first started teaching AP 27 years ago, it was a much better balance," Eddington-Shipman said.

Not anymore.

Girls are very consistently at the head of the class.

Last year, 80 percent of the top graduates from East Lansing, Everett, Mason, Owosso, and Sexton high schools were girls, according to the Great Grads published in the Lansing State Journal. At Williamston High School, it was two-thirds.

I've never had a graduating class where there were more boys that were top graduates than girls," said Williamston Principal Jeffrey Thoenes, who's spent nine years as a high school principal both in mid-Michigan and in Mt. Pleasant.'

Mother claims doctor disfigured son after 'botched' circumcision

Mastodon · 7 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Circumcision for newborn boys is considered one of the most common medical procedures in the world. But one Memphis mother says her son was mutilated during the common surgery.

Maggie Rhodes turned to the Action News Five Investigators to warn other parents about her experience.

"When he was in the room, he was screaming like life and death like, like there wasn't no tomorrow," she said. "When she pulled back the cloth, like the thing was like gone."

Rhodes' son will need reconstruction work to correct what she considers a botched procedure. According to the American Academy of Pediatrics 1 in 500 newborn boys experience significant acute complications as a result of circumcision.'

Should Miami Movie Theaters Adopt a Feminist Rating System?

Mastodon · 7 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hollywood, like most other industries in the U.S., has a woman problem. The ratio of male to female characters in films is two to one, making it twice as difficult for lady actors to land a role as their male counterparts. When women do snag a little screen time, they're often required to strip down for exploitative sex scenes -- far more often than is required of men. And often, that's their only function in the film; women characters are rarely shown talking to each other about anything other than men, relationships, or sex.

...

I can hear you already, men's rights activists: Why does this even matter? Shouldn't I be allowed to watch a testosterone-fueled festival of tits and ass if I want to? Isn't this rule just encroaching on the free speech rights of filmbros worldwide? Why do you women want to ruin everything, gawd?

But guess what: The Bechdel test isn't preventing these movies from being made. It's been around for nearly three decades, remember? Has barely made a scratch. That's unlikely to change if it's more broadly advertised in the theaters where audiences choose and watch their films. In fact, all you Gavin McInnes types can use Bechdel ratings to your advantage, too. Looking for a movie with strong female characters? Go see the A-rated Hunger Games. Looking for the exact opposite of that, because you're a sad, angry man who hates women? Last Vegas is still there for you, dude.

It's sad that we live in a society that still treats women like accessories to the more important and interesting stories of men. And the movie theater, a place that's supposed to offer an escape from the frustrations of reality, so often fails to give women a break from that mindset. Feminist movie ratings aren't the whole solution, of course. But it's a start.'

Israeli Rabbinical Court Forcing Divorcée to Circumcise Son

Minuteman · 8 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A rabbinical court in Netanya this week forced a divorced woman to facilitate the performance of a Jewish circumcision for her son, Behadrei Haredim reported.

During the divorce process, which Israeli Jews contest in rabbinical court, the husband requested that the regional rabbinical court in Netanya, about 20 miles north of Tel Aviv, to compel his wife to give their son a legal circumcision. The court accepted his request.

The woman argued that the rabbinical court does not have jurisdiction over her son, and may not decide on what constitutes a dangerous medical procedure for him, especially since the boy is not a party to the divorce procedure.

She argued that the authority to decide on this matter belongs exclusively in family court.'

Dad ‘unfit parent for refusing son McDonald’s’

Matt · 8 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Attorney David Schorr slapped a court-appointed shrink with a defamation lawsuit for telling the judge deciding a custody battle with his estranged wife that he was an unfit parent — for refusing to take his son to the fast food joint for dinner.

“You’d think it was sexual molestation,” Schorr, 43, told The Post Thursday. “I am just floored by it.”

Schorr says in his Manhattan Supreme Court suit that E. 97th Street psychiatrist Marilyn Schiller filed a report saying he was “wholly incapable of taking care of his son” and should be denied his weekend visitation over the greasy burger ban.
...
“I wish I had taken him to McDonalds, but you get nervous about rewarding bad behavior. I was concerned. I think it was a 1950s equivalent of sending your child to bed without dinner. That’s maybe the worst thing you can say about it,” he said.

Adding insult to injury, he said: “My wife immediately took him to McDonalds.”

Upon reflection, Schorr said he should have remembered that mother knows best.
...
"Even my mother, the strictest mother in the world, said, ‘Why didn’t you just take him to McDonalds? What were you thinking? You know that this is a divorce situation.’”'

UK: Woman who cried wolf about rape may have to face her victim in court

Mastodon · 9 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A man falsely accused of rape could be called to give evidence against his accuser in court before she is sentenced for her myriad of lies.

Natasha Foster told police she had suffered a serious sexual assault in November 2011.

But as the investigation into her claims got under way, the 23-year-old, from Ballymena, Co Antrim, admitted she had lied about the attack.

She was subsequently charged with perverting the course of justice for knowingly making a false statement to police. She pleaded guilty to the offence in September.

...

Judge Desmond Marrinan said the man wrongly accused by Foster may be called to give evidence against his accuser prior to her sentencing.

No facts have yet been outlined in court regarding the case.

...

In January this year shamed Dromore woman Belinda Potts Sneddon received a suspended jail term for falsely claiming to police she had been raped by a stranger in a local park.

It emerged that Potts Sneddon (22) was so embarrassed about having sex in bushes with an older man she made up the rape story.

She only admitted her lies after being challenged by her mother, who told police her daughter invented the claims.

The Dromore woman was given a five-month jail sentence suspended for two years and fined £1,000 for wasting police time.

Earlier this year a Crown Prosecution Service report found rape victims were being punished because of "damaging myths" about false rape allegations.

The report estimated that around two false rape allegations are made every month in the UK.'

'Boys will be boys:' Rob Ford and toxic masculinity

Mastodon · 9 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Violent temper. Refusal to admit wrongdoing. Penchant for expressing every feeling as anger. Penchant for expressing anger through physical intimidation. Homophobia and transphobia. Impulsive, risky behaviour with no consideration of potential consequences. Obsession with the competitive parts of politics (campaigning) and disdain for the collaborative parts. "Boys will be boys" brand excuses for egregious behaviour.
...
This isn't the first time I've thought about Rob Ford's embodiment of the socially constructed norms that shape and constrain our culture's understanding of what it means to Be A Man. I thought about it a lot after the Mayor violently confronted journalist Daniel Dale on the property adjacent to his home, fist cocked and charging at full speed.
...
People who called Daniel Dale a wuss on Twitter for being afraid of a much-larger man approaching him violently? Enablers. People who said Ford's "murder rant" was just the kind of murderously violent speech we all engage in when we're a little angry? Enablers.

But then, when it comes to the replication of gender norms, most of us are enablers.

Toxic masculinity is not "men being awful;" rather, it is people of all genders holding, performing and perpetuating rigid ideas of who we are allowed to be. Rob Ford, in particular, has spent a lifetime striving to perform what a Rich, Powerful White Man should be (a whole other level of toxicity beyond the merely masculine). His pursuit of idealized masculinity seems unmistakably modelled after that of his simultaneous bully and protector brother, who has often been framed by the media as "the smart one" and seems to have always been perceived as more competent, more likeable, more of A Man.
...
If we want more gender diversity in politics, we need to understand that a) a good politician can come equipped with a wide variety of character traits, not all of them about cutthroat aggression and cold calculation, and b) there is immense diversity within genders and no trait is "naturally" masculine or feminine -- we choose to understand and value traits in these binary ways, and if we want to, we can choose to change that.'

Where do all the angry white men come from?

Mastodon · 9 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is an article about angry white men and their galloping sense of aggrieved entitlement. It is at least partly inspired by feminist theory and analysis of structural racial supremacy. Before I've finished my third sentence, I've probably already contributed to a minor epidemic of hypertension among a certain section of Comment is free readers. I can anticipate the comments, the hit-blogs and the hate-mail already: by even mentioning white men, I am the real racist. I am the real sexist. Why doesn't the Guardian take a pop at the angry brown men over here or the angry black women over there instead?

In my defence, the provocation is not entirely mine. A new book is published this week under the blunt title Angry White Men. Its author, Michael Kimmel, is not unaccustomed to stirring up strong responses. As a liberal sociology professor and perhaps the world's most prominent male feminist, he has dedicated a career to poking the hornets' nest of traditional masculinity. He once wrote that the penis should carry a sticker saying: "Warning: operating this instrument can be dangerous to yours and others' health."

His latest work strokes a broad, acerbic brush over the white supremacists of the Mason-Dixon line, the NRA and Tea Party stalwarts of the Bible Belt, the men's rights activists of cyberspace and the high school spree shooters of parental nightmares. The common feature, he argues, is their shared belief that certain degrees of status, privilege and social advantage, perceived to be their natural or god-given rights, have been snatched away by sudden social change. The resulting anger is targeted not at a globalised neoliberal economic system that has declared ordinary people expendable – irrespective of their race, class or gender – but immigration, civil rights and feminism. In a sense Kimmel is describing the irrational emotional fallout of the economic gender revolution detailed in books like Stiffed and The End of Men.'

Man seeks state constitutional amendment requiring 50% of state legislators be female

Mastodon · 10 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If a Hot Springs man has his way, the Montana Legislature would be evenly divided by gender in the future, with 50 percent men and 50 percent women in each chamber.

John Marshall this week submitted a proposed constitutional amendment for the 2014 ballot to require both houses of the Montana Legislature to be 50 percent men and 50 percent women.

The current Legislature has 108 male and 42 female members. Women make up 28 percent of the total in both chambers.

Marshall submitted his proposal to Secretary of State Linda McCulloch's office on Tuesday. It now goes to Attorney General Tim Fox's office for legal review and the Montana Legislative Services Division for language review.

If it passes legal muster, Marshall can begin gathering signatures. He will need more than 48,000 signatures of registered voters to qualify for the ballot, plus meet some district signature requirements.

"Let's be the first state in the nation to set quotas by gender," he said in a phone interview. "We'll catch the attention of the nation. It will benefit the state economically, socially and culturally in the future."
...
Rep. Pat Ingraham, R-Thompson Falls, opposed the proposal.

"You need willing hearts that are willing and able to do it (serve in the Legislature)," she said. "You can't legislate that heart. You have to have that heart and commitment. I just don't think mandating those things is a wise decision."'

'Americans Prefer Male Bosses (Fun Fact: Women Are Better Managers)'

Mastodon · 11 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even though the evidence is piling up that women tend to be better managers, a larger share of Americans continue to say they'd rather be managed by men, according to a new Gallup poll.

The poll, published Monday, found than one-third of Americans say they'd prefer a male boss, while about 23 percent say they'd prefer a female manager. (Among Republicans, that gap is even larger, with 40 percent preferring a male boss, and only 16 percent a female one.)

The preference for men may be explained in part by the fact that workers are less likely to encounter female managers; 54 percent of workers have a male boss, while just 30 percent say they work for a woman, according to Gallup.

That's a problem, especially since women tend to be better at the management styles that get the most out of workers.'

Conference to help female veterans launch businesses

Mastodon · 11 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Years ago, Nell Merlino started the “Take Your Daughter to Work” movement.

Now, she’s focused on all those girls who grew up, served their country, and are now interested in business; female veterans like Angela Cody-Rouget.

“Her business is called 'Major Mom,'" Merlino explained. "She and her four kids moved 19 times in 19 years. She now has a business helping people move and organize their homes.”

Major Mom has become a hit. But the founder acknowledged in this promotional video she had to learn how to think like a businesswoman.

“Some of the how-to-do-it in the civilian world is not apparent, and that is what I am learning to do here," she said.'

Edmonton Men Speak Against Men's Right Group

Mastodon · 12 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video and article here. Excerpt:

'Men in Edmonton are responding to a controversial men's rights group, making it clear that the "misogynistic" movement isn't a voice for them.

In a video titled 'A Voice For Men Is Not A Voice For Me,' a few Edmonton men are taking their voice back, saying the group isn't an accurate representation of the beliefs of all men; and that they're concerned about the effect the movement may have on Edmonton.

"The idea that they represent all of men's rights is complete fallacy," says Barret Weber, sociologist and instructor at the University of Alberta, in the video.

"This is a voice against fear-mongering politics that shame and oppress the voices of survivors of sexual assault," says another participant.'

Russia: Feminist Corruption, and its Contribution to Sexism and Reverse-Sexism

Mastodon · 12 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The recent two controversial cases about the decision of the European Commission to propose the 40% quota for women on company boards by 2020 and about the call by some female tennis players to ask men to lower their level of play from 5 sets to 3 (for gender equality) reveals how far the contemporary campaign for gender equality has gone to the extreme and contributed not only to the perpetuation of "old" sexism against women but also to the creation of "new" sexism against men (or what I called "reverse sexism" in my previous publications), with both oppressive and suppressive impacts on society in the longer term.
...
And the second reason is that the feminists like to blame their failures on men, that is, on "social" and "cultural" factors for male overachievement, but "such factors have not been found to have an effect...that lasts to adulthood" on a permanent basis (BNN 79). This then means that whenever women do not do well in certain areas (like leadership, mathematics, martial arts, construction works, elite commandos, etc.), they do not focus on their own "self-responsibility," quickly use men as the "punching bag," and then go on to beg society for "entitlement" (or "preferential treatment"). But when women do better than men in other areas (like nursing, social counseling, child care, etc.), they take all the credit for their successes. If any man disagrees with them, the feminists would automatically label him as "sexist" without bothering to defend it in a rational debate. And when a man presents scientific evidences to back up his argument, these feminists would simply dismiss them as "socially constructed" while immediately accepting their feminist (often polemic) version of so-called evidences as "true" without any critical question asked.
...
What separates humans from animals is that the former can come up with new ideas (ideals) to create a whole new world, but all too often in history, in the name of these ideals, both society and culture end up being so messed up to the point that the promised new world becomes so oppressive and suppressive instead, to the indignation of the posterity in future history.

Does anyone still remember "the Cultural Revolution" for equality in China during the 1960s and 1970s, when men and women even dressed alike, to the point that this chapter of Chinese history is now known as "the lost generation"? When ideology goes to the extreme and denies all relevant facts or evidences (as "socially constructed"), people and society will suffer in the longer term -- as reality can only be ignored or dismissed for so long, before it will return with a vengeance in the future.'

Stockholm Cinema begins to rate "gender equality" in films

fathers4fairness · 13 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

CBC Radio personality Jian Ghomeshi interviews Ellen Tejle, director of the Cinema Rio in Stockholm, Sweden about their plans to introduce a "Gender Equality" rating system for movies.

The scoring system was devised in 1985 by cartoonist Allison Bechdel in her comic strip "Dykes to Watch Out For".

Ghomeshi discusses what Ms Tejle about hopes to achieve with the plan - and speaks to a film critic who feels it is a misleading and ineffective way to raise awareness about gender equity.

An 18:23 min interview segment included.

ACL injuries most common in football, girls' soccer

Minuteman · 14 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Among high school athletes, football players and female soccer players are most likely to injure their anterior cruciate ligament (ACL), a new study finds.

Those injuries often require surgery and months of rehab, and can put young athletes at risk for arthritis years down the road.

...

The report confirms earlier findings that among boys and girls playing the same sport, girls have a higher risk of ACL injury. That could be due to differences in their build, muscle development or hormones.

But researchers said it's important to focus on ACL injury prevention for boys, too - especially because a high rate of injuries is seen among young football players.'

Norway may ban non-medical circumcision of boys

Matt · 14 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Norway's Health Ministry is considering a proposal on regulating the circumcision of boys. Some political parties are calling on a complete ban of the practice on minors, a possibility that would affect Jewish and Muslim communities.

Two years ago, the ministry was tasked with reviewing circumcision and how it should be practiced in Norway. It is yet to finalize its stance, but intends to submit its legislative proposal before Easter next year, Health Minister Bent Hoie told Aftenposten, Norway's largest newspaper.

The issue was brought to public attention after the resent call by Norway Children's Ombudswoman Anne Lindboe to ban circumcision of boys before age 16, unless the procedure is warranted by medical needs.

"This is not due to any lack of understanding of minorities or religious traditions, but because the procedure is irreversible, painful and risky," she argued.
...
"As a modern society, we should work to eliminate practices that expose children and people to unnecessary suffering," said Labor's Ruth Mari Grung, who is a member of the parliamentary Committee on Health and Care Services.

A ban is also supported by the Center Party, which has 10 seats in the parliament.'

NPO: New York Promoting Disneyland Dads

Matt · 14 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It appears David Schorr is going to have his parenting time diminished for refusing to be a Disneyland Dad.

His son, with gratitude to a court-appointed psychiatrist and Mom, has learned how to get his way, how to play his parents against each other, and that he is in charge.

On his Tuesday dinner night with his four-year old son, his son threw a tantrum to manipulate Dad into taking him to McDonald's. Dad held firm and told his son that they would eat a healthy dinner at the neighborhood cafe, or not eat.

Schorr's son taught him a lesson by refusing to eat. Mom and the family courts are using this incidence to trample Dad and diminish his parenting time. First by Mom taking their son to McDonald's when he was returned to her. Second, by the court-appointed psychiatrist, Marilyn Schiller, deeming Schorr, "wholly incapable of taking care of his son." With this, Schorr's meager parenting time may be cut by the New York family courts.'

SAVE E-lert: Tell U of Texas' Title IX Coordinator That Fear Mongering Doesn't Stop Rape

Matt · 14 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

When it comes to advocating for abuse victims, we believe in telling the truth. But there are others who that think there is absolutely nothing wrong with making outrageous claims to advance an agenda.

One of those people is Jennifer Hammat, Title IX coordinator for the University of Texas.

While being interviewed for The Daily Texan, Hammat made the statement, "We should be seeing 12,500 cases a year," while discussing unreported sexual assaults of students.

Seriously, Jennifer? 250-300 rapes or sexual assaults per week, just on your campus? PARENTS, GET YOUR KIDS OFF THE UT CAMPUS!!!

Ms. Hammat is exaggerating, of course. Her campus doesn't have 15% of all of the rapes and sexual assaults in the country. But that lie was for a good cause, right?

Tell Jennifer Hammat, "Fear Mongering Doesn't Stop Rape" Here's her email address: j.hammat-at-austin.utexas.edu

Jennifer Hammat needs to issue a new statement, one with the real facts and figures about sexual assault and rape on the UT campus.

Thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Jury Acquits Air Force Officer Accused of Groping

ThomasI · 14 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Well the big case this summer is over and it was a non-case. The officer did not grope the woman. But when you read it, make sure to be calm before reading this one shocking sentence: "What else would cause such a reaction?" from the woman, Steele asked the jury. Excerpt:

'An Air Force officer who once led the branch's sexual assault response team was acquitted Wednesday of allegations that he groped a woman outside a Virginia bar.

A seven-member jury deliberated about an hour after hearing closing arguments in the misdemeanor assault case against Lt. Col. Jeffrey Krusinski, 42, of Arlington. His arrest fueled a national furor over sexual abuse in the military and whether top brass take the issue seriously.

A 23-year-old woman testified that Krusinski grabbed her backside on May 5 outside the Crystal City bar.

Defense lawyers argued that there were inconsistencies in her story. In particular, the defense honed in on the woman's testimony admitting she punched Krusinski a few times in the face in retaliation. Numerous other witnesses, though, described seeing her hit him countless times.'

UK: UCAS chief warns over 'worrying' university gender gap

Broadsword · 14 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

The head of UCAS warns that men risk being turned into an under-represented group on university campuses because of the gulf in applications between the sexes.

...

By 2025, the gulf in access between men and women will actually be more pronounced than that seen between deprived and wealthy students.

Mrs Curnock Cook said the “very worrying difference between application rates for men and women” should now be treated as an “important widening participation issue” in its own right.

“Women are a third more likely to apply for higher education,” she said. “In fact, our report last year showed we've got to the stage where more women are entering higher education than men are applying and the gap is getting wider.”

Research by UCAS showed that some 30 per cent of 18-year-old men applied to university straight from school or college in 2012, while 24.6 per cent were admitted.

For women, 40 per cent applied and 32.5 per cent were given places.'

Middle-Aged Men Suffer Mentally In The New Economy

Mastodon · 14 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lost in the flurry of press coverage of ObamaCare's intended expansion of mental health care coverage is the reality that suicide-prevention programs typically focus on the elderly, teenagers and young adults, historically the most suicide-prone populations. These programs haven't adapted to realities of the new economy. This means tailoring prevention efforts to resonate with middle-aged Americans, particularly men, who are conditioned to equate their self-worth with their jobs and stifle outward signs of vulnerability.
...
... Men ages 35 to 64 commit suicide at a rate of 27.3 per 100,000, compared to a rate of 8.1 among women. And the annual economic cost of suicides is some $34 billion, according to the American Foundation for Suicide Prevention.'

UK: Vince Cable says UK economy hampered by lack of female engineers

Mastodon · 14 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vince Cable has warned that Britain's lack of female engineers is causing "enormous problems", as a government review calls for concerted action to address the dearth of women in the profession.

In a review published on Monday as part of Tomorrow's Engineers week, the government's chief scientific adviser for business, Prof John Perkins, makes 22 recommendations to boost Britain's engineering industry, including new vocational qualifications, stronger links between industry and education, and more help for professionals returning to the industry after a career break.

The lack of female engineers across disciplines from computer science to chemistry is a focus of the review. The UK has the lowest percentage of female engineering professionals in Europe, at less than 10%, while Latvia, Bulgaria and Cyprus lead the continent with nearly 30%.'

Women-only 'pink taxis' introduced in Melbourne

Mastodon · 14 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A taxi company in Australia plans to introduce "pink taxis' which will be driven by women and only available to female passengers, saying women feel less safe with male drivers.

The company behind the scheme, Taxi Link, said it was concerned a the series of night-time sexual assaults and believed some women felt uncomfortable in taxis, which are predominantly driven by men. The scheme will allow women to request a female driver when booking a cab.
"From a safety point of view, I think women feel more at ease with women," the company's director, Harry Katsiabanis, told The Herald Sun.

"We are trying to create a more comfortable environment, an environment that will be more readily used than the current one."
...
"I think women are more caring and I think that they've got a more gentle demeanour than most men, so I think they'll cope well [with] the stress and pressures of traffic in Melbourne," he said.

A Melbourne veterinary nurse, Brook Trott, 18, said she would be more comfortable catching one of the pink taxis.

"I would feel more safe if I was to get in a taxi with another girl, as a driver or just a passenger," she told The Age.'

'Hunting Osama bin Laden was women's work'

Mastodon · 14 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Navy SEALs may have killed Osama bin Laden, but women led them to their prey.

Women made up the majority of analysts – at one point all the analysts -- in “Alec Station,” the unit charged with finding Bin Laden, managed the ramp-up at the CIA's Counter Terrorism Center after 9-11, and participated in the interrogation, and the waterboarding, of al Qaeda suspects. They were critical to the first capture of a major al Qaeda target, Abu Zubaydah; helped find and kill Abu Musab al Zarqawi, the leader of al Qaeda in Iraq; ran "black sites," the secret CIA prisons used to interrogate terror suspects; and in the case of two senior analysts, died in an attack by al Qaeda on a CIA compound in Afghanistan.

...

Some of Moore’s male colleagues are more effusive. In a speech this January, former CIA Director Michael Hayden said an "incredible band of sisters” led the search for Osama. Michael Scheuer, who ran “Alec Station,” told Newsweek last year that, “If I could have put out a sign on the door that said ‘No men need apply,’ I would have done it.”

...

Whatever the intangibles, even two years before 9-11, all the staffers in "Alec Station" except Scheuer were female. After 9-11, women were involved in setting up the earliest "black sites,” and participated in the controversial interrogations themselves. Officials told NBC News that both Zubaydah and ”KSM” -- Khalid Sheikh Mohammed, the 9-11 mastermind -- were interrogated by women, sometimes with the aid of "enhanced interrogation techniques," including waterboarding, the simulated drowning technique since outlawed.

A former CIA official told NBC News that he thought women might have been especially effective at interrogating terror suspects because of the combination of surprise and shame. Jihadis were stunned that women, whom they saw as inferior, had been chosen to question them.'

What really happened to boys?

Mastodon · 14 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Articlee here. Excerpt:

'Four years ago, psychologist Leonard Sax (MD, PhD) wrote a well-received book titled “Boys Adrift.” The doctor tried to answer the question, why have so many young males fallen into passivity and indifference?

Dr. Sax had heard more and more parents complain that their boys stayed indoors most of the time, spent hours on video games, and in general seemed to lack the confidence and esprit de corps that had characterized boys throughout history.

“Something scary is happening to boys today,” Sax concluded. “From kindergarten to college, American boys are, on average, less resilient and less ambitious than they were a mere twenty years ago. The gender gap in college attendance and graduation rates has widened dramatically.”

The book’s full title is, “Boys Adrift: The Five Factors Driving the Growing Epidemic of Unmotivated Boys and Underachieving Young Men.” Sax lists the five factors right on the cover: “video games, teaching methods, prescription drugs, environmental toxins, devaluation of masculinity.'

Calgary DV Month Kickoff continues to ignore male victims

fathers4fairness · 15 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While the campaign refers to all individuals who are victimized, talk of domestic abuse still focuses on adult female victims. That trend is slowly changing as the government, aid agencies and society begin to recognize other victims.

The least discussed group, says men's rights activists, is men. It is a politically charged topic as adult males are also seen as the main perpetrators of abuse. Toronto social worker Adam McPhee says that doesn't mean male victims can be ignored.

McPhee is employed at a Toronto AIDS counselling centre and an emergency drop-in shelter. He is also a spokesperson for the Canadian Association for Equality (CAFE).

CAFE says its mandate is universal equality, but that it is focused on male well-being at a time when men are suffering from disproportionate rates of suicide, poor educational performance and legal bias.

CAFE has also been accused of being a hate group. Protestors forced it to call off a presentation at the University of Toronto in November 2012.

"We're having our discussion kind of squashed and being told that any discussion of men's issues is kind of misogynistic and, by its nature, it's got to be in opposition to women," says McPhee. He says he wants society to talk about abuse regardless of gender.'

Preterm Boys Face Worse Odds Than Girls, Study Says

Minuteman · 16 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Boys are 14 percent more likely than girls to be born prematurely, and preterm boys have a greater risk of disability and death than preterm girls, new research finds.

These disabilities range from learning problems, blindness or deafness, to motor problems such as cerebral palsy, according to the authors of six studies published in the journal Pediatric Research in advance of World Prematurity Day on Nov. 17.

"Baby boys have a higher likelihood of infections, jaundice, birth complications and congenital conditions, but the biggest risk for baby boys is due to preterm birth," research team leader Dr. Joy Lawn, a professor and neonatologist and epidemiologist at the London School of Hygiene & Tropical Medicine in England, said in a journal news release.

...

However, the study authors pointed out, preterm girls are more likely than boys to die in the first month of life in some countries where girls receive less nutrition and medical care than boys.'

'What About the Boys?'

Mastodon · 16 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'About five years ago, Peg Tyre, a long-time education journalist, wrote a book called The Trouble With Boys which discussed why boys were not being served well in today's public schools. Christina Hoff Sommers wrote a similar book, entitled The War on Boys: How Misguided Feminism is Harming Our Young Men. Other books have been written on the topic as well. About a year ago the Westchester County Psychological Association had Ms. Tyre give a presentation, along with David Greene, a retired Scarsdale High School teacher, regarding what they have observed as the education system has changed throughout the years. Much of what they said stuck with me, and has influenced my work with youngsters.'

Women-only parking at the University of Fraser Valley-- what if it were whites-only?

TCM · 16 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Fraser Valley [link added] has a problem. Not with violence, since records show that UFV is a rather safe campus. No, the problem is in deciding who, in those brief and isolated punctuations of time when violence occurs, should be safe from violence. Should UFV adopt an approach that does not exclude its students on the basis of sex, race, and so forth? Or should it adopt the position that some groups are more worthy of safety than others?

They have chosen the latter. According to an interview by local radio station Star FM:
...
Leonard says security patrols the campuses in Abbotsford and Chilliwack 24/7 and you can call them to walk you to your vehicle. He also says at the Abbotsford campus the lots closest to the main doors of building A are reserved for women only in the evening.

Director of Security Brian Leonard's email address is brian.leonard-at-ufv.ca. Please direct your dissent toward him.
...
A quick trip to the parking page on the university's website (which I have screenshotted in case they take it down) shows the same same diamond-shaped red and yellow signs, and explicitly states that it has a section for women-only parking:
...
I don't care what anyone's rationalization is for the University of Fraser Valley's treatment of its male students. It's unacceptably sexist, regardless as to who is doing it. If their argument is that women deserve special treatment because men are more likely to engage in street crime, would they also accept the rationalization that whites are deserving of special treatment since most recorded gang activity is by persons of color?
...
In further research at UFV, I noted that the ratio of men to women on the UFV campus is 36% male and 64% female, according to a university publication:
...
I'm curious as to whether UFV has ever engaged in a public discussion of the issue of male educational attainment. Admittedly, I have not been able to find any evidence of this. And it would defy all logic for UFV to assert that it must actively discriminate against male students despite violence not being a big problem, while totally ignoring the issue of male educational underachievement – which is a big problem.
...
This isn't the first time we have seen something like this. Last year, after a woman reported she had been raped at the University of Waterloo, the school declared that female students have priority for rides on the university bus system. It later turned out that the rape accusation was false.

We are setting a dangerous precedent in our educational institutions. We need to continue to call out these universities and, in no uncertain terms, publicly declare that what they are doing is unacceptable.'

Broken homes, broken boys

Matt · 16 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When I started following the research on child well-being about two decades ago, the focus was almost always girls' problems — their low self-esteem, lax ambitions, eating disorders and, most alarming, high rates of teen pregnancy. Now, though, with teen births down more than 50% from their 1991 peak and girls dominating classrooms and graduation ceremonies, boys and men are increasingly the ones under examination. Their high school grades and college attendance rates have remained stalled for decades. Among poor and working-class boys, the chances of climbing out of the low-end labor market — and of becoming reliable husbands and fathers — are looking worse and worse.

This spring, MIT economist David Autor and coauthor Melanie Wasserman suggested a reason for this: the growing number of fatherless homes. Boys and young men weren't behaving rationally, they suggested, because their family situations had left them without the necessary attitudes and skills to adapt to changing social and economic conditions. Anyone interested in the plight of poor and working-class men — and, more broadly, mobility and the American dream — should hope this research, and the considerable biological and psychological evidence behind it, become part of the public debate.'

Feminism: Ideology or Interest Group?

Matt · 16 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The American Thinker's always interesting Clarice Feldman has taken two separate incidents to draw our attention to what Feldman calls "the pernicious effects" of feminism today.

The two incidents are…

"…the skewed married women versus single women vote in Virginia and the increasing pressure put on the military to prosecute meritless charges of sexual assault. In both cases, ordinary men and women and the country as a whole are the victims of upper-class women's drive to power through mendacious claims megaphoned by a credulous, biased press."
...
... Because feminists are so politically powerful, Feldman says, the military is bowing to their demands and allowing unwarranted sexual assault criminal prosecutions to go forward. Let me stop to say that any man who assaults a woman deserves the utmost punishment. But it is also crucial if we are to be a just society that we don't punish men who don't deserve it to meet the demands of a feminist lobby.
...
We obviously want--need--to know if there's a rise in sexual assaults in the military. But we also must recognize that, because the issue has been so politicized, it is going to be difficult to get the real numbers.

What Feldman's column reminded me of was something that I thought a when I attended a conference in September at the Center for American Progress, the think tank with Obama ties. Feminism is no longer an ideal: it is the basis of an interest group.'

International Men's Day: Time to highlight male role models

Matt · 16 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'International Men's Day (IMD) is an annual event celebrated on November 19.

Inaugurated in 1999 in Trinidad and Tobago, International Men's Day is celebrated in over 60 countries, including Spain.

Its objectives include focusing on men's and boys' health, improving gender relations, promoting gender equality and highlighting positive male role models.

It is an occasion to highlight discrimination against males and to celebrate their achievements and contributions, in particular to community, family, marriage, and childcare.

The theme for 2013 is ‘Keeping Men and Boys safe’.

Celebrations for International Men’s Day have become intertwined with others for Movember. This is an annual, month-long event involving growing moustaches during the month of November to raise awareness of prostate cancer and other male cancer.

Movember aims to increase early cancer detection, diagnosis and effective treatments, and ultimately reduce the number of preventable deaths.'

NCFM's International Men's Day event

Matt · 16 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Come enjoy a great Game of Pool, a Beer and some Pizza For only $10.00 .. Ladies and Men all Welcome... RSVP Carolyn at carolynbell.fes-at-gmail.com which will help us know how best to do the event but it's not required. We'd like to see you.

For More Info: https://www.facebook.com/events/683487181675896/

Social services supervisor and husband arrested over abuse of fostered children

Mastodon · 16 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Union County, N.C. — Authorities arrested a Union County Department of Social Services worker and a Monroe man Friday night after an 11-year-old boy was found handcuffed to the front porch of a home with a dead chicken tied around his neck, investigators said.

WBTV of Charlotte reported a deputy was answering an animal services complaint next door to the home on Austin Road, south of Monroe, when he saw a child secured to the front porch at the ankle, by what appeared to be a pair of handcuffs.

The child also had a dead chicken hanging around his neck, and appeared to be shivering, the deputy said.

Moments later, 57-year-old Dorian Lee Harper appeared on the porch along with another child who released several large dogs onto the officer.
...
Larson was a supervisor with Union County Department of Social Services.

Officials told WBTV that while Larson was not present at the time the children were discovered, she is accused of being complicit in the ongoing mistreatment of the children. She and Harper had adopted four of the children, and were serving as foster parents of the 11-year-old, who was found on the porch.

Harper and Lawson were being held in the Union County jail Friday. Both were scheduled to be in court Monday.

Harper and Larson were charged with intentional child abuse, inflicting serious injury, false imprisonment and cruelty to animals, according to authorities.

The children are now in the custody of an undisclosed Social Services agency outside of Union County.'

New Zealand: Teacher disciplined for sexual misconduct with student

Mastodon · 16 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Teachers' Council's complaints assessment committee charged the teacher with serious misconduct over an inappropriate relationship with a Year 13 student from the unnamed school.

The New Zealand Teacher's Disciplinary Tribunal's agreed statement of facts detailed that after recently separating from her husband, the teacher invited the student to live with her, knowing that he was to be a pupil at the school she taught at.

The teacher also communicated with the students in an inappropriate manner by discussing personal matters with them and making statements to the effect of "oh I love you and care about you and I'll see you after school", the decision said.

She hugged and kissed him and once suggested a threesome with him and another boy while they were in her bedroom.
...
The tribunal said she had in effect, been suspended from teaching from May 2010, in excess of three years.

The suspension of her practising certificate ended on October 30 this year.

Conditions have been imposed on her practising certificate, including a mandatory supervision and guidance programme at any school or education institution which employs her in the future.'

NPO: Join in the Suit Against New Jersey Family Courts

Matt · 17 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the next few weeks, Clark Legal Services will be filing suit against New Jersey asking for an injunction to prevent New Jersey from taking custody away from a parent without a prompt and full hearing — which is what is required by the United States Constitution. A "full" hearing means the right to present evidence, cross examine accusers and be represented by counsel if one chooses. The federal courts have not said precisely how soon is "prompt," but essentially it means a soon as possible and certainly a matter of days, not weeks or months.

New Jersey is not giving parents a prompt and full hearing when stripping one parent of custody and awarding custody to another. We currently have one plaintiff who was deprived of custody for over a year without a full hearing. He will be filing suit on behalf of himself and all similarly situated New Jersey parents. We would like to add additional plaintiffs to the suit and have asked National Parents Organization to reach out to its members to join in this suit.'

N. Ireland: Domestic violence against men at highest level on record

Mastodon · 17 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Domestic violence against men in Northern Ireland has increased by more than 40% in nine years – and that's just reported incidents.

PSNI figures reveal that the figure reached a record of 2,525 male victims in 2012/13, up 259 cases on the year before.

Police started recording the statistics nine years ago.

They also show that in one year alone (2011/12) the level of reported incidents jumped 25% (from 1,833 to 2,266).

But this may be only a fraction of the true figure due to the reluctance of many men to come forward because of embarrassment and shame – a scenario the police and support groups hope will change.

Northern Ireland's first crisis centre for male abuse victims, Men's Aid NI, was opened earlier this year.'

India: Demand now for 'Ministry of Men's Welfare'

Mastodon · 17 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kolkata: With a large number of men falling victim to "gender-biased laws", an organisation fighting for "male rights" demanded here Sunday that a "Ministry of Men's Welfare" be set up to look into long neglected issues that affect them.

Quoting National Crime Records Bureau (NCRB) data, men's rights organisation Hridaya said a large number of men were falling victim to "legal terrorism" perpetrated through "anti-male and anti-family laws", and demanded that gender-biased laws be made gender-neutral.

"Section 498 A of the Indian Penal Code (husband or relative of husband subjecting woman to cruelty) and the Domestic Violence Act are being widely misused, and men are now facing legal terrorism. Going by the NCRB data, in 2012, after theft and hurt, the most number of cases were filed under 498 A," Hridaya secretary Amit Gupta said at an event organised to raise awareness about International Men's Day to be celebrated world over Nov 19.'

Local View: More evidence Nebraska's domestic violence policies need revision

Mastodon · 17 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Op-ed here. Excerpt:

'Last summer, we wrote that Nebraska's domestic violence policies need revision, primarily because they are based on inaccurate information. Since then, two new studies have been published that confirm the need for our domestic violence policies to be revised. These studies also describe a worrying new trend in domestic violence.

Before we discuss these new studies, let's summarize what the research shows about domestic violence:

* Women and men commit domestic violence at comparable rates.

* Men and women are victimized by domestic violence at comparable rates.

* Half of all domestic violence is mutual.

* When domestic violence is not mutual, female-only and male-only domestic violence occur at comparable rates.'

"'Men's rights' are a big whinge"

Mastodon · 17 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pop quiz: What's the opposite of "misogyny"? If you said "misandry", you're not only wrong but also a bit of a negative ninny for thinking the opposite of hating one gender is hating another.

Misandry is its male counterpart, but the opposite of misogyny is actually "philogyny", which the dictionary defines as a "love or liking for women". But don't feel bad if you've never even heard the word before, because the dictionary also describes its usage as "rare".

I'm not sure if it means anything that so few people have a need for this word in their vocabulary, but it feels tempting to draw a parallel with the regressive evolution of eyeless cave fish. Said Charles Darwin: "I attribute their loss wholly to disuse."

There's certainly a shortage of philogyny within Men's Rights Activism, a loose and alarmingly large group of angry straight men who seem determined to talk their way out of ever getting laid again. Turning reality on its head, they claim men are oppressed by women in a matriarchal society and feminists, their arch-enemies, are all misandrists on a mission to strip men of their last remaining rights, the poor things.
...
Now let's draw another cheeky parallel. If the men's rights activists trick of wailing about misandry while completely ignoring their own misogyny doesn't sound strangely familiar, simply substitute "racism" for misogyny and "reverse racism" for misandry, and it's easy to see that disgruntled whites are playing exactly the same little word game.

Like misandry, so-called reverse racism is a classic red herring fallacy and a concept that exists more in the imaginations of narrow-minded bigots than in the real world.

Find someone who's constantly moaning about reverse racism and you won't have to look far to find someone who has never complained about actual racism – you know, that racism that made the world hate South Africa.

And, like men's rights activists, their anger is purely based on the fear that their ill-gotten privileges are being prised from their grubby paws. So slowly, in fact, that I have to wonder what all the fuss is about.'

PT Standards in Question for Women in Combat

Mastodon · 17 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Marine Corps may have to change its physical standards in order to put females in positions to one day lead infantry platoons in combat.

Both the Marine Corps and the Army continue to wrestle with the mandate that former Defense Secretary Leon Panetta issued in January, directing the U.S. military to open hundreds of combat-arms jobs that have been closed to female servicemembers.

So far, the Marines have been out ahead.

The service has opened up infantry training to female officers and enlisted Marines as part of an effort to gather data on how females and males compare when performing infantry and other combat-arms-related skills, and how those findings relate to current male and female physical fitness standards.
The effort is scheduled to run until fall of 2014, but the results so far have drawn attention.
...
So far, the results have not been promising. Nine of the 10 females that volunteered out of The Basic Course failed to make it through the first day of IOC. The remaining female volunteer dropped because of an injury from the course a week later.

The Marine Corps will continue to allow female Marines to go through IOC and ITB until the research phase ends next fall. From there, the data will be compiled into a recommendation to Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel on how the Corps intends to open up certain combat-arms jobs to women by Jan. 1, 2016.
...
"And we will kind of see … if a Marine gets a 300 on the PFT and CFT; how well they do on the MOS tasks. So we are looking at that to see … whether or not these physical standards are applicable to these MOSs.

"Depending on what the data says, and what it shows, it will decide whether or not any of the standards for the MOSs need to change."

It's unclear if the Marine Corps will decide to require males and females to perform the same PFT standards, but officials said that the service has no plans to lower the physical requirements of Marine infantry training.

"Those physically-demanding tasks are performance-based standards that all Marines in that MOS must be able to perform," Krebs said. "So whether you are male or whether you are female, that's the standard and that is what we are going to hold it to."'

Canada: Study looks at partner input on abortion decision

fathers4fairness · 17 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

A Canadian academic study looked at the influences and feelings of couples who decided on an abortion. A summary is here at "Understanding the pregnancy decision-making process among couples seeking induced abortion". Perhaps not surprisingly, men had little say in the decision and reported they were not as happy with the discussions that took place. (70.4% of Men vs. 96.6% of Women were "happy with discussions".) Abstract excerpt:

'Objective: The role of partners in the abortion experience is complex and poorly understood. We sought to examine how women and their partners navigate the pregnancy decision-making process.
...
Results: One half of women had decided on abortion before informing their partner of the pregnancy. Of those who were undecided at the time of disclosure, all sought their partner's advice. Most participants (84%) were happy with the amount of discussion that took place with their partners, although one fifth of women and nearly one third of men could have discussed it more. More women than men were happy with the discussions that took place (96.6% vs. 70.4%). Two thirds of respondents viewed the decision to have an abortion as being made by both partners, one quarter viewed the decision as being mostly the woman's choice, and 5% viewed the decision as being mostly the male partner's choice.

Conclusion: Although making the choice to have an abortion rests with the woman, her partner may play a role in the decision-making process, particularly when the woman is undecided. For many couples presenting for abortion, the decision is seen as being made jointly by both partners. Further research may identify opportunities to foster greater partner support throughout a woman's abortion experience.'

UK: I'll treat attacks on women as a hate crime, says new London prosecutor

Mastodon · 18 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A major campaign to reduce violence against women and bring more rapists and abusers to justice was announced today.

In an exclusive interview given on her first day as Director of Public Prosecutions, Alison Saunders told the Standard that attacks on women and other hate crimes were a "blight on society" that affected all sections of the community.

She said she was determined to use her five-year term leading the Crown Prosecution Service to ensure that more suspects were brought to court to face justice. The pledge by Ms Saunders, who added that prosecutors could "do more" to raise the conviction rate for rape, came as she revealed key aims.'

"Sex war - France's new revolution"

Mastodon · 18 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Sex, politics and morality: Put the three together, and you are sure to end up with a steaming tub of trouble.

This is what is happening in France, where plans to curb the sex industry by criminalising the clients of prostitutes have caused an almighty row.

Feminists and Socialist ministers are punching it out with libertines, sex workers fear the change will make their lives more dangerous and some experts wonder whether the law will be workable.

A bill due to come before Parliament at the end of this month will make those paying for sex liable to a fine of 1500 ($2440) and double that if they are caught again.

Courts will also have the power to order those convicted to attend a "prostitution awareness programme", similar to programmes on alcohol abuse for drunk drivers.'

The feminist campaign to make weaklings of America's warriors

Mastodon · 18 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism is trying to yank the U.S. military in two directions at once. While claiming that women have no problem meeting the rigorous standards of the SEALs or infantry, advocates of opening these branches to women argue that female members of the military must be protected from the male sexual predators that, we are assured, are widely represented in the military. However, they can't have it both ways. Are women "hear me roar" Amazons, or are they fragile flowers who must be protected from "sexual harassment," encouraged to level the charge at the drop of the hat?

...

Let me be clear: There is absolutely no excuse for sexual assault. Period. There is no excuse for a superior who pressures a subordinate for sexual favors. Period. The data cited by the Pentagon creating widespread panic within the military are rendered suspect for two reasons. The first problem is methodological: The numbers — some 26,000 active-duty service members out of a population of 1.4 million claim to have been sexually assaulted in 2012 — are based on an anonymous survey. This number far exceeds reported cases of sexual assault.

The second and more significant problem is that the survey uses the term "sexual assault" in a way so broad as to render it nearly meaningless. Indeed, much of what is now covered by the Pentagon's sexual-assault rubric represents the de facto criminalization of normal relations between the sexes of the sort that come about when young males and females are thrown into proximity.

...

If feminists were really concerned about merely opening the infantry and special operations forces to women, they would stress the ability of women to meet the high physical and mental standards necessary to survive in the demanding environment of close-in ground combat. Instead, they have focused on the alleged vulnerability of women to male (though not female) sexual predators, illustrating that military culture is their real target.

...

If the United States insists on opening infantry and special operations forces to women, the focus should be on upholding high standards, no matter the outcome. Instead, those who want to open these heretofore restricted military specialties to women insist on stigmatizing males as sexual predators and women as childlike victims whose only protection is to charge sexual assault. The result will be a less effective military, rent by dissension.'

UK: All-female company except for all-male management defends its hiring practices

Mastodon · 18 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt

'A company widely criticised for seeming to have an all female workforce - with the exception of an all male senior management team - has defended its hiring practices.

Cellular Solutions, who describe themselves as the "leading communications provider to south-east England", were at the centre of a gender row this week.

Some 31 employees illustrated on the 'Meet The Staff' page of their website were all young, seemingly attractive women - whereas their four strong senior management team were all men.'

Relatedly: UK threatens firms with gender quotas as women's appointments fall

Novelist Doris Lessing has died

ThomasI · 18 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Doris Lessing has died. From a 2001 article:

'The novelist Doris Lessing yesterday claimed that men were the new silent victims in the sex war, "continually demeaned and insulted" by women without a whimper of protest.

Lessing, who became a feminist icon with the books The Grass is Singing and The Golden Notebook, said a "lazy and insidious" culture had taken hold within feminism that revelled in flailing men.

Young boys were being weighed down with guilt about the crimes of their sex, she told the Edinburgh book festival, while energy which could be used to get proper child care was being dissipated in the pointless humiliation of men.

"I find myself increasingly shocked at the unthinking and automatic rubbishing of men which is now so part of our culture that it is hardly even noticed," the 81-year-old Persian-born writer said yesterday.'

The Munk Debates: Men's obsolescence confirmed

Matt · 18 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

The Munk Debate report on the gleefully asked "Are men obsolete?" question, debated by four women exclusively, is here. The result was, of course, foregone. These kinds of male-bashing events have been held for years on college campuses. Never be the least surprised at the "conclusion".

Canada: One-size-fits-all education system isn't working for boys

fathers4fairness · 18 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'No parent would deny there are differences between their sons and daughters, so educator Michael Reist wonders why Ontario insists on an educational model that has traditionally treated them as if they learned the same way.

The bestselling author was visiting Windsor Monday to conduct a seminar for the Greater Essex County District School Board on just how significant those learning differences can be and how to stop male students falling further behind in academics.

Do schools better suit girls?

"It's a huge generalization, but I think it is true," Reist said. "To treat everyone the same is to treat them unfairly sometimes."

Reist, who favours all-boys' or all-girls' schools, said the solution is to acknowledge those differences and veer away from what he calls "the one-size-fits-all approach."
...
Boys account for 80 per cent of dropouts, 90 per cent of disciplinary problems, two-thirds of students deemed to have learning disabilities, 90 per cent of those with behavioural disabilities, 80 per cent of those with ADD/ADHD and are four times as likely to commit suicide as girls.

The misreading of what Reist calls normal boy behavior results in boys being labelled immature or learning disabled and creates a willingness to medicate boys unnecessarily.'

'The feminist principles behind International Men's Day'

Mastodon · 19 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Do men face discrimination? I don't mean gay men or black men or poor, uneducated men or even short men. Or, come to think of it, the many judged "typical boys" every day, but just men? All men.
...
In the past year a website has been set up explaining what an international men's day should do in the UK. The campaign's objectives include promoting male role models, celebrating the contribution that men make, highlighting discrimination against men and the inequalities that men and boys face and thus improving gender relations and gender equality.

When these objectives are set against political power, they make no sense. Men at the top of politics, business and the media are male role models, whatever you think of them individually.
...
This dominance can mean a belittling of men at home and an uneasiness, often unverbalised, about their presence in the playground, for example. This same attitude starts with boys, who quickly learn that it's never OK to cry and nurturing is a bit "girly". I'm all for changing attitudes like this but there's already a movement that supports dads in the playground and in the kitchen. That movement is called feminism.
...
Yet renewed interest in International Men's Day has made me think of the many things that could change to make men and women more equal in all spheres of our daily lives. This doesn't belittle the deep injustice many women suffer around the world or the casual everyday sexism that defeats them at every hurdle. If anything, pointing out the discrimination against men simply underlines how much worse it is for women.

Happy International Men's Day.'

'International Men's Day is a touch ironic, isn't it chaps?'

Mastodon · 19 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My first thought when I heard that there was an International Men's Day was to sigh and roll my eyes. It was only a matter of time. The reaction when people from an oppressed group set up an event or day to celebrate the achievements that have been made despite this, and to inspire people to continue to tackle inequality then this is the result.

...

The theme for this year's International Men's Day is 'Keeping Men and Boys Safe' focusing on five key challenges:

1. Keeping Men And Boys Safe By Tackling Male Suicide
2. Keeping Boys Safe So They Can Become Tomorrow's Role Models
3. Tackling Our Tolerance Of Violence Against Men And Boys
4. Boosting Men's Life Expectancy By Keeping Men And Boys Safe From Avoidable Illness And Death
5. Keeping Men And Boys Safe By Promoting Fathers And Male Role Models.

I am not against any of these at all. In fact, I think that this is a great idea. I have a son and I want him to be safe. But I do believe that the reasons surrounding these problems that are being highlighted are due to the patriarchal society that we live in.

...

... I look forward to seeing men marching through the streets demanding that their pay packets be reduced to match ours and that they be allowed to have their pay reduced and stopped when they have a child.

Then I would be happy to march alongside them yelling at the top of my voice: "Free at last! Free at last! God almighty, we're free at last!"'

Neither side is innocent of gender bias

Mastodon · 19 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The men's rights movement, which has gained new visibility in recent years thanks to the Internet, is often viewed as a lunatic fringe of women haters. Unfortunately, quite a few websites in the so-called "manosphere" do their best, or worst, to earn this reputation. But feminists (of both sexes) who rightly criticize misogynistic men's rights activists tend to either dismiss men's issues altogether or argue that the best remedy for male-specific problems is feminism itself -- since it challenges all sexism.

In theory, that may be true; quite a few feminists, including Betty Friedan in "The Feminine Mystique" 50 years ago, have argued that men should be freed from gender-role pressures. In practice, however, the women's movement has been mostly unsympathetic or hostile to claims of anti-male sexism (except on a few issues such as parental leave, where benefits for men directly benefit women).

Thus, women's groups, including the National Organization for Women, have opposed expanding the rights of divorced fathers, despite evidence that in this area, men tend to get the short end of the stick. When efforts to combat domestic violence have led to more arrests of female perpetrators, the typical feminist response has been to claim that battered women are getting arrested for defending themselves and to demand action to reduce arrests of women. Reports on gender bias in schools sponsored by groups such as the American Association of University Women have downplayed alarming trends of boys lagging behind in most areas of academic achievement.
...
No less important, while feminists denounce misogyny on the Internet, few have challenged anti-male hate speech from feminist blogs -- sometimes defended as a response to oppression.

Discussions of gender issues often degenerate into "who's the victim" oppression Olympics. The reality is that both women and men face some gender-specific barriers and biases. These problems are usually connected (when fathers are relegated to second-class parenthood, women face more pressure to be perfect parents). Perhaps what we need is not more feminism or more men's-rights activism, but a gender-equality movement that promotes fairness for both sexes.'

"Blokes already dominate the other 364 days of the year - but women should support International Men's Day"

Mastodon · 19 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ladies, gather round. We have a problem.

The problem is men. They are in crisis. Dreadful things are afoot for them, and they need our help.

Despite 6,000 years of patriarchy, despite the fact a mere 6.2 per cent of countries have a woman in charge, despite being boss of all major world religions, most businesses and all our current wars, men are not happy.
...
Anyway, men have started a campaign for some long-overdue recognition. It's called International Men's Day and it happens every November 19.

Now, I know there may be some among the sisterhood who'd complain they've already got the other 364 days a year. And they'd have a point.
...
We should support anything which might, one day, lead men who father children and shirk responsibility to shoulder half the moral and financial burden of their own behaviour.

We should throw ourselves behind a day that might prompt men into speaking out about rape, and perhaps taking a day off from it.

If it grows and is a success then maybe in the future International Men's Day will be the one day a year when males campaign against sex trafficking, slut-shaming, domestic abuse and religious persecution, as well as their prostates, educational attainment and car insurance premiums.
...
So, men, knock yourselves out. Have your day, do your best, overcome what you can. I'll cheer you on, in fact I'll even make you a packed lunch and help you with your placards.

While you're off dealing with that, we women will just get on with everything else.

Don't hurry back.'

'Women-Only' Mentality Can Lead to Segregation Rather Than Equality

Mastodon · 19 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gender inequality exists, so it's understandable that women are joining forces to empower one another. But when does it go from being supportive to morphing into a "women-only" coterie that isolates female workers from their male counterparts? We want equality, ladies, not a sorority.

Women have made huge strides over the decades. "In the United States and a number of other countries, women now actually surpass men in educational achievement," according to a post on Harvard's blog, and recent studies show that women are also giving men a run for their money in the business world. Kudos to females who didn't take "no" for an answer and who fought for an education -- because it worked! How about all those mothers who are defying the odds and successfully returning to the workforce post-baby, juggling a family and a career?

Thankfully, women aren't just sitting around complaining about injustices; they're turning it into fuel for their fire to achieve their goals. However, females seem to be setting themselves back in their efforts by promoting segregation instead of equality between genders. Just look at all of the sites, organizations, and blogs in existence today that are for women and women only.
...
Women-only offerings can be beneficial as stepping-stones for women to ease back into the working world and possibly establish a support system, but as far as a long-term solution, we hesitate to say it's a viable (or wise) option for women seeking gender equality once and for all.

In order to successfully close the gender gap, women must ditch the "girls rule, boys drool" mentality and start joining forces with their female and male counterparts. This is not to say that women should unsubscribe to all of their women-only clubs, but they should be careful not to convince each other that depriving themselves and their careers of male influence, on any degree, is healthy for anyone. Women will always turn to each other for support, but let's not fool ourselves into thinking that one gender can survive without the other -- and that goes for all aspects of life.'

Interview: Dr. Helen Smith ('Men On Strike' author) With Andrea Tantaros (Oct 11, 2013)

Mastodon · 19 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'American society has become anti-male. Men are sensing the backlash and are consciously and unconsciously going "on strike." They are dropping out of college, leaving the workforce and avoiding marriage and fatherhood at alarming rates. The trend is so pronounced that a number of books have been written about this "man-child" phenomenon, concluding that men have taken a vacation from responsibility simply because they can. But why should men participate in a system that seems to be increasingly stacked against them?'

Do we really need an International Men's Day?

mens_issues · 20 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. A fairly well balanced article on International Men's Day. Excerpt:

'So do we really need an international day for men? In a world where us chaps are still running politics, business, religion, media and sport, it seems only fair that the ladies have had their own international day for over a century, but for the men to muscle in with a day of their own day, well, it's not very gentlemanly, is it?

And yet all is not well in the state of "Man Land".

We know that men in the UK are still dying four years sooner than women, on average; that 12 men each day take their own lives; that 90% of rough sleepers are men; that 95% of the prison population is male; that seven out of ten murder victims are male; that girls are outperforming boys at every stage of education; that women are a third more likely to go to university than men; that young men account for 70% of long-term youth unemployment; that male graduates are 50% more likely to be unemployed; that men in their twenties are earning less than their female peers; that 96% of people who die at work are male and that men accounted for 84% of suicides linked to the recession.

If women and girls were experiencing any one of those problems at the rate that men and boys are, it would be grounds for an international day in its own right - so why are we so indifferent to the various problems that are more likely to impact the male half of the population?
...
This year the day has inspired people around the country to hold events which include a special meeting of the All Party Parliamentary Group on Fatherhood in Westminster; a public debate about men and violence in Preston and the Guardian journalist Ally Fogg raising money for male victims of sexual abuse by staying silent for the day - a move that has delighted both his fans and critics in equal measure.

If you don't normally talk about "men's issues", then today is the perfect opportunity to stick this article under the nose of every man you know and ask him what he thinks. Do it now, before your one-track mind wanders elsewhere, because despite what the cynics might tell you, not every day is International Men's Day.'

Like FGM, cut foreskins should be a feminist issue

Matt · 20 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Finally, maybe an issue most MRAs and at least some feminists can agree on. Excerpt:

'But both FGC and MGC, where the erogenous foreskin is removed, can cause serious physical, mental and sexual harm. In 2011, 11 boys under the age of one were treated in Birmingham for life threatening hemorrhage, shock or sepsis relating to circumcision. In the US it's estimated that 100 boys die as a result of circumcisions every year. MGC is also far more common globally: 13m boys to 2m girls annually.

...

But this isn't a harm competition. It's about how FGC, often referred to as female genital mutilation because it's widely seen as a violation of women's rights and a form of oppression and sexual control, is easily accepted when that girl is a boy.

FGC has been banned in the UK since 1985 (despite no convictions) and since 2003, it has been illegal to carry out the procedure on British nationals abroad.

But, as bioethicist Dena Davis put it: "When one begins to question the normative status of the male newborn alteration in the West, and when one thinks of female alteration as including even a hygienically administered "nick," one begins to see that these two practices, dramatically separated in the public imagination, actually have significant areas of overlap."

Although FGC is practised because of religious beliefs and seen as an important part of cultural identity (imparting a sense of pride, a coming of age or a feeling of community membership), aversion to it overrides concerns about protecting these religious or cultural freedoms – a view also held by some community leaders.

But when it comes to Male Genital Cutting (MGC) it's neither explicitly illegal nor compulsorily regulated. Instead it's perceived as a relatively innocuous procedure, a "routine neonatal circumcision", or brit milah for Jews and khitan for Muslims.

...

Along with the serious harm that both FGC and MGC can cause, both occur without the consent of the child, and irreversibly violate the child's human right to physical integrity. In so doing, FGC and MGC both prioritise the cultural or religious beliefs of parents over their child's right to self-determination and an open future.

...

Given these overlaps, why have the two been treated differently? Alongside the difference in harm and misperceptions about the contrasting settings and ages at which the procedures take place, the double standard stems from two further factors: sexism and ethnocentrism.

Male bodies are constructed as resistant to harm or even in need of being tested by painful ordeals, whereas female bodies are seen as highly vulnerable and in need of protection. In other words, vulnerability is gendered. And little girls are more readily seen as victims than little boys.

...

It's time to re-examine our gender and cultural assumptions about genital cutting, and take a non-discriminatory, intellectually consistent approach. We either accept that the loss of some individual rights of both boys and girls is the price of societal diversity – an approach rooted in a respect for pluralism and multiculturalism – or we respect the rights of all children, both girls and boys, equally.

The first means rethinking opposition to FGC, and perhaps even re-allowing it on the basis of parents' religious beliefs or cultural preferences. But this would be unconscionable. The better thing would be to recognise that little boys have the same rights as little girls to bodily integrity (as recently recognised in the Netherlands), an open future and freedom from harm – in spite of their parents' views.

...

Rather than criticising the Council of Europe's motion, we should celebrate it as a move towards greater child protection and gender equality.'

USAID: "Twitter Expert Hour on Voluntary Medical Male Circumcision in Observance of International Men's Day"

Minuteman · 20 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From a USAID.gov mailing-list email:

'Today, November 19, 2013, we gather as a global health community to commemorate International Men's Day and to discuss this year's theme, "Keeping Men and Boys Safe." On the road to an AIDS-free generation, we are keeping men and boys safe by addressing gender norms, recognizing the disproportionate impact that HIV has on men who have sex with men (MSM) and other key populations, and supporting voluntary medical male circumcision (VMMC) as an important strategy in preventing HIV. Check out today's IMPACT blog, Men for Others: Keeping Men Safe as They Battle Against HIV, penned by Robert Ferris, Technical Leadership & Research Division Chief in USAID's Office of HIV/AIDS.

Stay informed and participate in the conversation!

• Join us today at 11 a.m. for a Twitter expert hour on VMMC with Emmanuel Njeuhmeli, Senior Biomedical Advisor in USAID's Office of HIV/AIDS and co-chair of the PEPFAR Male Circumcision Technical Working Group. Tweet your #VMMC questions @USAIDGH using #GHhour.

• Read about Lesotho's VMMC program in Demand Grows for Male Circumcision in Lesotho and take a look at this photo essay recounting a treacherous leg of Tanzania's winter VMMC campaign. USAID's flagship Maternal and Child Health Integrated Program (MCHIP) supports Jhpiego to implement these VMMC programs in collaboration with the ministries of health and with funding from PEPFAR.

• Learn how to strengthen gender-based violence programming for key populations in AIDSTAR-Two's recently launched Review of Training and Programming Resources on Gender-based Violence against Key Populations, supported by PEPFAR through USAID.

• Find out more about integrating gender strategies into programs targeting key populations in AIDSTAR-One's technical brief on Integrating Gender into Programs with Most-at-Risk Populations and related case studies, supported by PEPFAR through USAID.

• Keep an eye out for a special supplement of the Journal of the International AIDS Society titled "The Epidemiology of HIV and Prevention Needs of Men Who Have Sex with Men in Africa," highlighting work by the USAID-supported Research 2 Prevention project, led by Johns Hopkins University. The supplement will be launched on World AIDS Day, with a webinar on December 2 and a satellite session at the International Conference on AIDS in Sub-Saharan Africa (ICASA) on December 7.

• Check out our website for more information on USAID's work in male circumcision, key populations (including MSM), gender, and more!'

U.S. State Department - "wPOWER: Promoting Women's Critical Role in Clean Energy Solutions to Climate Change"

Minuteman · 20 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'In honor of “Gender Day” at the annual United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change Conference of the Parties (COP-19), the United States is highlighting its actions to harness the potential of women and women’s networks to increase the use of clean energy technologies, which in turn helps reduce climate change. The Department of State launched the Partnership on Women’s Entrepreneurship in Renewables (“wPOWER”) in January 2013. wPOWER aims to empower more than 8,000 women clean energy entrepreneurs across East Africa, Nigeria and India who will deliver clean energy access to more than 3.5 million people over the next three years.
...
Globally, more than 1.3 billion people lack access to electricity, and at least 2.7 billion people lack access to clean cookstoves and fuels. While not the primary source of climate pollution, inefficient lighting and cooking contribute to climate change and the degradation of natural resources. In off-grid communities, women are the primary users of clean technologies like solar lamps and clean cookstoves and are at the forefront of adopting the use of new technologies. wPOWER is working to unlock this largely untapped potential of women and women's groups to help fill the “last mile” gap in the supply chain to reach areas lacking energy access.'

Is Kmart's 'Show Your Joe' Ad Funny or Offensive?

ThomasI · 20 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

If this had been a video of women shaking their labias to make a sale, there would be outrage. Boycott Kmart. Story here. Excerpt:

'From the retailer that brought " Big Gas" and " Ship Your Pants" to the advertising lexicon comes what will surely not be the last controversial ad of the holiday season, a new Kmart ad showing hunks in boxers strutting their stuff to "Jingle Bells."
The ad, which made its debut this week, begins innocently enough, showing six men dressed in tuxedo jackets playing "Jingle Bells" with hand bells behind a table.

The six hunks then ditch the hand bells, come out from behind the table and continue to play "Jingle Bells," this time with their hips.
...
"The commercial I saw last night with the men in tuxes ringing their … was disgusting and in poor taste. I couldn't believe this was allowed on air!! I won't be shopping at K Mart this Christmas," Jerry Carr wrote.

Other Facebook users, particularly women, thanked the company for ringing some holiday joy, literally, into their lives.

"Thank you! from the ladies in my office. I think we all are interested in getting joe boxers for the special guy in our lives now," Regina Barwick wrote.
...
Do you think Kmart's "Show Your Joe" ad is funny or too much? Tell us in the comments.'

Father outraged by his arrest for picking his children up from school

Mastodon · 20 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CROSSVILLE (WATE) - A Cumberland County father didn't want to wait in a long line of traffic to pick his kids up from school. That led to a series of encounters last week at South Cumberland Elementary, and now the dad's facing charges.
...
"I'm going to call some help down here and we're going to take you up to the jail right now. I'm not putting up with this today. You're being childish and it's uncalled for," Sheriff Deputy and School Resource Officer Avery Aytes said in the YouTube video.

The video goes on to show the dad arguing with the school security officer over state law, then the dad winds up in handcuffs.

"I'm not raising my voice, I'm not confrontational, I want my kids," Jim Howe said in the YouTube video.
Howe says, because of a new policy that started last week, the only way parents can get their children after 2 p.m. is to wait in a line of cars until everyone is released at 2:35. He says not only is this time consuming, it's illegal.
...
"You don't need a reason as a parent to go get your children. They are our children," Howe said.'

Germany: New coalition likely to require boards to be 30% female to list on the DAX in 2016

Mastodon · 20 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gender quotas might not have a sterling reputation, but Germany thinks they're the answer to its male-dominated corporations. According to a new agreement between the parties negotiating to form Germany's next governing coalition, supervisory boards for companies registered on the German stock exchange will need to be at least 30 percent female starting in 2016.

This idea has been around for some time. In 2011, the 30 companies of the DAX index avoided binding quotas and instead pledged voluntarily to increase the proportion of women in management positions. France, Norway, Belgium, Iceland, Italy, the Netherlands, and Spain have already instituted government-mandated quotas on public companies, though some will only take effect several years from now.

From the U.S., where women held only 16.1 percent of board seats by last count, it's an intriguing experiment to watch for several reasons. Government-directed quotas are potentially unconstitutional, and even private companies seeking to set quotas have been told affirmative action plans need to meet pretty strict requirements to survive an equal protection or Civil Rights Act-based challenge. But many of the folks following women’s lack of progress on Wall Street would like to see the U.S. be, well, a little more Teutonic.'

Canada: Men's Issues Movement To Get Toronto Home

Mastodon · 20 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The men's issues movement is about to get a Canadian home.

The Canadian Association for Equality (CAFE) announced Monday that it has raised enough money to open the first Canadian Centre for Men and Families in Toronto.

CAFE describes itself as an organization committed to "achieving equality for all Canadians, regardless of sex, sexual orientation, gender identity, gender expression, family status, race, ethnicity, creed, age or disability."

It is involved in organizing men's groups and lectures at a number of Canadian universities. Some of those lectures have prompted protests and earlier this year Ryerson's student union blocked the creation of a CAFE-sponsored men's issues club on the grounds that it sounded like a hate group.
...
A spokesman told the National Post that CAFE is hoping to open the centre in a rented office somewhere on Toronto's subway lines and that it will provide legal advice on custody and divorce, as well as physical and mental-health therapy. The group raised $50,000 in donations to open the centre and has now hopes to reach $75,000 by the end of November.

The fundraising campaign is being conducted in honour of Earl Silverman, a men's issues activist and owner of Canada's only shelter for male victims of domestic abuse, who killed himself in April.'

"The Munk Debate goes on: Both sexes won this time"

Mastodon · 20 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ms. Paglia was having none of it. She reminded Ms. Rosin and the female supremacists that their busy Alpha-female lives are made possible by an invisible army of men – “men who do the dirty, dangerous work of building roads, pouring concrete, laying bricks, tarring roofs, hanging electric wires, excavating natural gas and sewage lines, cutting and clearing trees, and bulldozing the landscape for housing developments.” Ms. Paglia described the modern economy, with its vast system of production and distribution, as a sublime “male epic.” Women have joined it – but men built it. “Surely,” said the fiery Ms. Paglia, “modern women are strong enough now to give credit where credit is due!” And she reminded women that without strong men as models to either embrace or reject, women will never attain a distinctive sense of themselves as women.
...
Caitlin Moran, British writer and humorist, began by warning that her feminism was strident, Marxist, and “fueled by cocktails.” But she turned out to be a down-to earth humanist, reminding everyone that calling men obsolete was no better than the bad old sexist days when women were said to be irrelevant. We are in this together, said Ms. Moran: if one sex fails, the other staggers. All of the speakers acknowledged that working class men’s fortunes have fallen and that boys are having serious difficulties in schools. But, Ms. Moran insisted, that does not mean we should celebrate their travails, but rather that we should do everything possible to improve their prospects. She shocked and delighted the audience with her concluding remark: “The question of the evening is: Are Men Obsolete? My conclusion is: No! I won’t let you be – you fuckers!”

Imagine four brilliant, accomplished, funny women discussing the politics of gender outside the dreary, angry, “rape-culture” obsessed framework of contemporary feminism. That happened this past Friday night at the Munk Debate, and both sexes came out ahead in the encounter.'

Maureen Dowd: "Men have not only stopped evolving – they're devolving"

Mastodon · 20 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Are men necessary?

No.

And I can prove it in eight words: Rob Ford. Ted Cruz. Dick Cheney. Anthony Weiner.

For centuries, it was widely thought that women were biologically unsuited to hold leadership positions.

Power was best wielded by men, theorists felt, because men were impersonal, unemotional, forthright and reasonable.

...

But the tables have finally turned. Men have not only stopped evolving. They're devolving.

Now it is unstable male temperament that is causing alarm. Male politicians are engaging in sneaky, catty, weepy, ditzy, shrewish behaviour that is anything but reasonable and impersonal.

Women are affected by lunar tides only once a month, after all. Men have raging hormones every day, as we noticed when Dick Cheney rampaged around the globe like Godzilla.'

Office of Women's Health - Free Women's Mental Health Publications

Minuteman · 20 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From an OWH mailing-list email sent on 19 Nov 2013:

'Now is your opportunity to order the remaining copies of the Office on Women's Health's consumer mental health publication, Women's Mental Health: What It Means To You. This 22-page booklet can help you talk to women about mental health — it addresses stigma, discusses mental health throughout the lifespan, offers information about signs and symptoms, and provides advice on prevention and coping mechanisms.

We are looking for organizations that can order bulk quantities — for FREE — and disseminate this important resource to women. To order the booklet, call the OWH Helpline at 1-800-994-9662 or use our online order form.

For more updates on important women's health issues, visit the new Office on Women's Health blog. It's a place where you can learn about and comment on topics that matter to you. Be the first to know when we publish a new entry — subscribe for email updates.'

SAVE E-lert: End VAWA-Funded Educational Malpractice

Matt · 21 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

When the Violence Against Women Act was reauthorized, we were happy to see educational programs included. Which is why we are so disappointed in the results of our Truth Team campaign.

Of the six Domestic Violence organizations whose Fact Sheets we checked, all six got the grade "F."

In fact, the "education" offered by these organizations is so lacking, they are committing FRAUD, or EDUCATIONAL MALPRACTICE!

See why: Leaving out key risk factors puts people's lives in danger.

Contact your Representatives in Washington today.

Tell them to end the fraud. Tell them to, "END DOMESTIC VIOLENCE EDUCATIONAL MALPRACTICE"

Here's the Capitol Hill switchboard: 800-965-4701

Thank you for standing up for TRUTH!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

"I’m sorry for circumsizing you"

Matt · 21 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'Chances are that when you read this, most of your friends and peers are circumcised, you’ve never had a problem with it, and you’re perfectly happy (G-d willing.) But on the off chance that you feel wronged or violated in any way, there’s something I have to tell you. (And no more jokes for this part.)

I’m sorry.

I’m sorry that I let my religious upbringing override my mommy instinct. I’m sorry that I didn’t give you a choice. I wanted to make sure you feel like you belong instead of feeling different the way I did growing up.
...
... Because if I had fully embraced my true belief system earlier, I would have fought tooth and nail to leave you intact. To let you decide if you want to follow in some of your male ancestors’ footsteps, whatever the reason. Every part of you was perfect when you were born, and every part of you still is. I just wish I hadn’t decided to remove part of you without your consent.

Your bris was a beautiful and moving ceremony, and I’m glad we had it. But if I could talk to the pre-bris me struggling with this decision, I’d remind myself how often I tell mothers to ignore others and listen to their inner voice.

I’d remind myself that we (and many other Jewish families) don’t keep kosher, or strictly observe Sabbath. That we pick and choose from biblical directives based on myriad factors. So why choose to continue this one?

I have no good answer. Only the real one: this is how we’ve always done it. Which is a phrase that always made me shudder when I was in my squadron’s Safety department.'

Australia: Teaching has become feminised and boys lose out

Mastodon · 21 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I always laughed at the joke - "Why do men die before women? Because they can" - until I read the latest report from the Council for Australian Governments titled Tracking equity: Comparing out-comes for women and girls across Australia.

...

Based on the results for the 2009 Programme for International Student Assessment of 15-year-olds the average difference between girls and boys in literacy is 37 points, representing one full year of schooling.

In the 2011 PIRLS test girls also do better than boys in reading both internationally and in Australia by 17 points. The advantage girls have over boys is also reflected in Australia's national literacy tests at years 3, 5, 7 and 9 where girls always outperform boys.

...

Since the late '60s and early '70s, mainly due to the rise of feminism and the fact that there are so few male primary school teachers, the way teachers teach and the way classrooms are structured have been feminised.

Teachers no longer stand at the front of the room and children are expected to direct their own learning in open, mixed ability classrooms. As a result, boys are easily distracted, become behavioural problems and soon fall behind.

The fact that a lot of learning adopts an open-ended, inquiry approach where teachers become guides by the side and facilitate instead of directing what should happen also works against boys' preferred learning styles.

Boys need clear direction, explicit goals, timely feedback and an orderly classroom environment where they know what they have to do and what constitutes pass and fail.

Boys also need to be taught to respect authority and to have teachers prepared to enforce a disciplined environment where there are consequences for misbehaviour.'

UK: Embarrassed boys shun basics as they avoid writing

Mastodon · 21 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One in three boys at primary school today believe Pink Floyd's Number One hit "We Don't Need No Education" should be rewritten to read "We Don't Need No Spelling and Grammar".

They think the basics are superfluous now spellcheckers have been invented, according to research out today. A similar number say they would never or rarely write anything outside of a lesson.

The study, by the National Literacy Trust, also reveals that one in five say they would be "embarrassed" if any of their friends found them writing out of school.

The boys' lack of enthusiasm for writing contrasts starkly with girls - one out of three of whom say they write out of class every day.'

UK: Man appears on ITV's "This Morning" after false rape allegations

Mastodon · 21 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A BIDEFORD man has appeared on ITV's This Morning speaking of the trauma he went through after falling victim to false rape allegations.
...
Last month, 25-year-old Loder appeared at Exeter Crown Court where she was jailed for two false allegations of rape.

Loder originally said she had been raped in an alley way in Bideford by two strangers, but after police failed to find any forensic evidence she changed her story and said she had been raped by Fran Syvret in her own home.

But her story fell apart after Mr Syvret showed police photos and a video on his phone which proved Loder had willingly had sex with him.

However, Loder had already spread her lies around Bideford, and Fran and his ex-partner at the time Jane, began to receive a torrent of threats.'

Australia: "Women only job ads: unfair or proactive step?"

Mastodon · 21 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most people want to earn the big bucks, and for a lot of people working at the mines is a good way to make that happen.

It's pretty hard to get a job in the mines though, especially at the moment, so how would you feel if you opened the paper and saw an ad for women-only truck driving jobs?

One company has made news headlines because its now allowed to do just that and advertise 50 women only positions.'

Obama gives radical feminist Gloria Steinem medal of freedom

Mastodon · 21 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Presenting feminist radical Gloria Steinem with the Presidential Medal of Freedom on Wednesday, President Obama said that Steinem “changed how women thought about themselves.” He also labeled her a “game-changer,” a “disrupter,” and a “champion noticer.” Obama stated, “She’s alert to all the ways, large and small, that women had been and, in some cases, continue to be treated unfairly just because they’re women… because of her work, across America and around the world, more women are afforded the respect and opportunities that they deserve.”

Obama did not mention Steinem’s disdain for heterosexual relationships (Steinem infamously remarked that “a woman without a man is like a fish without a bicycle”), marriage and childbearing (“you become a semi-non-person when you get married”), her love for abortion (on her own abortion: “I knew it was the first time I had taken responsibility for my own life”), her advocacy for confusing gender boundaries for children (“We’ve begun to raise daughters like sons…but few have the courage to raise our sons more like daughters”), and sexual promiscuity (“A liberated woman is one who has sex before marriage and a job after”).'

South African women reportedly punch alleged female rapist

Mastodon · 21 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An angry mother and her friend both punched a woman who they said had just admitted having sex with a 15-year-old boy, a jury has been told.

The mother said her teenage son, who previously denied having sexual contact with Kylie Fiona Henry, burst into tears when she again asked him whether anything had happened between them.

“He said, `yes, she forced me’,” the mother told the South Australian District Court on Wednesday.

Henry, 40, a former primary school canteen manager of Ingle Farm in Adelaide, has pleaded not guilty to rape and to an alternative charge of unlawfully having sexual intercourse with a person under 17 in 2011.

The Crown has alleged Henry forced herself on the boy when she moved from the couch to the floor where he had been lying while watching TV in her lounge room.'

When Everything In Me Said to Circumcise: A Jewish Father Wrestles with Tradition

Matt · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt;

'I always thought that if I had a son I would not circumcise him. I felt the need to challenge this Jewish tradition. It felt like quite a brutal decision to take on behalf of my newborn son, for a covenant that I did not believe in. (I am secular but very culturally identified.) But when I found out that we were going to have a baby boy, the sudden emotional desire to have him circumcised was immediate and very strong.

...

So now I faced what felt like a huge decision, the idea of not circumcising my son. Jude, who is also Jewish, was clear it was something she did not want. For her, cutting off any part of her son's anatomy for an ancient ritual meant nothing. So why did it all change for me, the moment I found out I was having a baby boy?

It was a very personal and emotional response. I felt by not circumcising my son, I was effectively cutting off (pardon the pun) his connection with a 5000-year-old cultural history. For thousands of years Jews have performed this ritual as the first and important means of identifying with our tribe/community. So as a self-identifying Jew, the idea of not doing this for my son created a lot of anxiety and confusion in me.

...

I researched the medical pros and cons. There seemed to be no health benefit enough to justify circumcision. The one strong argument I found is about the transmission of STDs among heterosexuals, including HIV, being lower in circumcised males. This might be a good argument for circumcision in a country that has an AIDS epidemic in its heterosexual population, but in the West today we do not face such a situation. And sensible safe sex education and practice has worked well as a preventative measure against sexually transmitted disease.

...

It is argued that by cutting off the foreskin, the head of the penis becomes calloused and is less porous, and this is the reason HIV is less likely to be transferred. This logically leads to the idea of the head of the penis being less sensitive, and I came across testimonials of men in their twenties who chose to get circumcised. After doing so they found that their sex lives had drastically changed, with far less sensitivity. A great analogy that I read is that it is like listening to a Mozart concerto without the violin section. It is still beautiful, and if you never hear it with the violins you will never know the difference. I thought about this, and the idea of denying my son the full enjoyment of sex was something I did not feel comfortable doing, of deciding for him.

Anyway we made a decision. It kind of happened gradually. After Lev was born, he had complications with breathing and the very usual jaundice, and had to spend six days in Hospital. The fear we felt in those days made us feel there was no way we wanted to cause any more distress for the little man. So I said, let's not circumcise and leave it for a while and see how we feel. And today, nine months on from his birth, I feel very happy with our decision.

...

I really do hope that in the future other Jewish families will decide not to circumcise. I would love for there to be a community of Jews that are not circumcised, partly so that Lev does not feel like he is the only one, and as I think it would make for a more pluralistic community.

I make no judgements on any parent that decides to circumcise. I feel it is a decision for each family to make. It does not feel to me like mutilation. But I really hope that every Jewish family (and non-Jewish family for whom circumcision is an option) spends time looking into the arguments for and against—as no decision is better than an informed one.'

Anti-Circumcision Activists Picket Home of Leading Pediatrician

Matt · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Members of the anti-circumcision activist group INTACTION picketed outside the home of Susan Blank, M.D., chairperson of the American Academy of Pediatrics Task Force on Circumcision.

The Intaction picketers are demanding the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) Task Force retract it's recently released report (Pediatrics Vol 130 No 3 Sept 2012 "Circumcision Policy Statement") that promotes infant circumcision. Thirty-seven physicians from prestigious medical societies in seventeen European countries recently authored a strong rebuke of the AAP 2012 Circumcision Policy Statement. ...

The European medical groups' response to the AAP report (Pediatrics 2012-2896 March 18,2013) states, "Seen from the outside, cultural bias reflecting the normality of non-therapeutic male circumcision in the United States seems obvious, and the report's conclusions are different from those reached by physicians in other parts of the Western world, including Europe, Canada, and Australia. There is growing consensus among physicians, including those in the United States, that physicians should discourage parents from circumcising their healthy infant boys because non-therapeutic circumcision of underage boys in Western societies has no compelling health benefits, causes post-operative pain, can have serious long-term consequences, constitutes a violation of the United Nations' Declaration of the Rights of the Child, and conflicts with the Hippocratic Oath: First, do no harm."'

Men struggling to regain jobs lost to recession

Mastodon · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here's a national story with especially strong (and troubling) relevance for folks living in Central Florida.

CNNMoney points out that men, who lost about 6 million jobs during the recession, have gotten only about 70 percent of them back. Women have fared much better.

You can probably guess the industries where most of these missing jobs are from: Construction and manufacturing.

Construction was battered worse than any other industry during the recession. CNNMoney says it accounted for almost 25 percent of all job losses.

It certainly got slapped around here in Central Florida. Construction employment was cut in half, plunging from 92,000 in 2006 to 45,000 in 2011. It's crept its way back to about 47,000 today.

The chief economist for Associated General Contractors calls them the "1 million missing men."'

Ireland: Politician quits race over gender quotas

Mastodon · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Pat Hussey, the mayor of Tralee, said Fine Gael's "ridiculous" gender quotas could lead to many situations where "you could have a fantastic candidate overlooked for someone who doesn't know anything at all about politics".

He said he was in favour of increasing female representation in politics but "they have families and if they want to be politicians they'll have to pay exorbitant money into creches* — it's all wrong".

Mr Hussey, Jim Finucane, Pat McCarthy, Mairead Fernane, and Grace O'Donnell put their names forward for the Tralee Electoral Area convention on Friday.

It was announced at the meeting that the gender quota directive would be implemented, meaning at least one of the three candidates going forward would have to be female.

Mr Hussey subsequently withdrew his name because he strongly disagrees with the gender quota directive.'

Hyperlinks in excerpt above were added.

---
* More commonly-known in the US as "daycare facilities".

New EU law would allow government to dissolve companies over gender quotas

Mastodon · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An amendment that would allow governments to dissolve companies that do not adhere to a gender quota system of 40% in senior positions has been passed by the European Parliament today.

Another amendment passed will mean that the under-represented gender in the European Union will be given preferential treatment in the recruitment, selection and appointment of non-executive directors.

All 21 of UKIP's amendments were rejected by the European Parliament. These included provisions such as an opt-out for member states and stopping any possible sanctions on companies.

UKIP Deputy Leader Paul Nuttall said: "This legislation is barmy and confirms once more that Euro-fanatics have very little economic sense about them.

"These people seem determined to bring about tokenistic positive discrimination which may lead to businesses that don't comply being shut down across Europe.'

Domestic violence incident sends man to hospital

Mastodon · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Juneau Police are looking for a 36-year old woman who allegedly stabbed a boyfriend early on Monday morning. The incident happened in a travel trailer on Sherwood Lane in front of at least two witnesses. The woman was apparently upset about the end of a domestic relationship and immediately left the scene after the stabbing.

Juneau Police Lieutenant Dave Campbell says they've recovered the knife, but they're not publically identifying the woman since she has not been arrested or charged yet.

The 46-year old Juneau man went to the hospital for treatment of a 1 1/2 inch stab wound to his left forearm. The injury was not considered to be life threatening.

Alcohol is believed to be a factor in the case.'

India: Kids of single moms may not need father’s name on government forms

Mastodon · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Children of single mothers will not be required to mention the name of the father in government forms in Maharashtra, once the women's policy is approved by the state. Ujjwal Uke, principal secretary of Women and Child Development Department said the draft policy says that in government forms, children of single mothers will have the option of mentioning the name of father or mother or both.

"There was a whole debate on children of single women, and earlier also people used to say that one should allow the mother's name to be put, that is, it could be the father or the mother. But somehow I have realised that in the government, the compliance they did was that they used to write both father's name and mother's name. That was not solving the problem. So I have put in a specific point in the women's policy, saying that in all government forms, you have either father's name or mother's name or both. Any of the three alternatives will be acceptable," said Uke, during an Idea Exchange with The Indian Express. "So, a single women having a child, need not mention the father's name. This is specially true for commercial sex workers also. Also, today we are in the 21st century and there are many single women who may not like to reveal the name of the child's father," he added.'

Westminster College Alumni Give $1 Million For Single Mother Scholarship & Athletics

Mastodon · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Westminster College announces a generous $1 million gift from Ann and Anthony (Tony) Merritt to establish the Tony and Ann Merritt Single Mother Scholarship Fund, the Merritt Athletic Excellence Fund and the Merritt Endowed Athletic Fund.

...

Throughout his career, Merritt truly believed that educating women and mothers provided benefits for everyone in the family. “Tony wanted to help single moms achieve their dream of an education because he believed that helping the mother positively impacts the children,” said Ann Merritt. “Additionally, we also wanted to provide a gift that would help Westminster grow its sports programs to a level of excellence that mirrors its academic programs.”

Hard evidence: what sort of people are absent fathers?

Mastodon · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Since the 1970s, family life in the UK has changed dramatically. Increases in relationship breakdown, remarriage and repartnering have seen us move away from the traditional, two-parent nuclear family and towards more diverse forms of family life.

As a consequence, there are more children living apart from a parent than ever before. ONS figures show that the number of single parent families has increased from 8% in 1971 to 26% in 2011. It is estimated that up to 97% of single parents are mothers, which means that a large number of fathers are non-resident.

Non-resident fathers are frequently described in negative terms, just last week the Conservative MP David Davis fell back on the old adage of “feckless fathers”. However very little is known about non-resident fathers. They are a difficult group to research as no data is systemically collected about them.

...

Non-resident fathers emerge as a more disadvantaged group than resident fathers. They are less likely to be in work, have educational qualifications and be a home owner. For example 25% of non-resident fathers have no qualifications and 17% are unemployed, compared with 17% and 7% of resident fathers, respectively.

Other research has shown that non-resident fathers have poorer physical and emotional well-being compared with resident fathers and men who don’t have children.

...

The figures show that non-resident fathers are usually still very much a part of their children’s lives but that factors such as economic circumstances can have an impact on the extent of their contact. While the overall figures on contact are positive, more research is needed to unpick the reasons why some fathers are not in contact with their children and whether policy changes could be made to improve the situation.'

UK: MP tells ministers: "Put feckless fathers in chains"

Mastodon · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Monmouth MP, who chairs Westminster's Welsh affairs committee, spoke of his experience meeting some of the losers from the policy for a recent BBC Wales programme.

Today, he told the House of Commons: "I think it's absolutely outrageous that so many young men in our society feel they can go out, get women pregnant, allow them to have children, make them bring them up by themselves often on benefits and then just disappear.

"It is utterly shocking and I hope that the ministers will take note of this and get hold of some of these feckless fathers, drag them off, make them work, put them in chains if necessary, make them work and make them pay back to society for the cost of bringing up the children they chose to bring into this world."

Mr Davies who met two unemployed 17-year-olds in social housing said government ministers were being far too generous in some cases. "Why should the state be paying for two people to set up in frankly a teenage lovenest? When I was 17 years old, if I wanted to see my girlfriend at the age of 17, I'd go and see her on a park bench in Newport. Why is the government paying for them to have a flat all by themselves at all, never-mind whether it's one-bedroom or two-bedroom?'

NPO: Justice Department ‘Reforming’ Family Courts

Matt · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Tuesday, November 12, the U.S. Department of Justice announced the selection of four family courts to participate in the “Family Court Enhancement Project.” The purpose of the Family Court Enhancement Project is to alter family court practice and procedures when domestic violence and/or child abuse is alleged in child custody proceedings. The courts are located in Illinois, Oregon, Minnesota and Delaware.

The Family Court Enhancement Project is a joint project of the Office on Violence against Women, which is part of the Department of Justice; the Battered Women’s Justice Project; the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges; and the National Institute for Justice. In the words of the press release issued on Tuesday, the Family Court Enhancement Project “is designed to determine what family court procedures, practices and structures related to custody and visitation can help keep victims of domestic violence and their children safe from further violence and trauma.”'

'Intactivists' take to the streets in Providence

Matt · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'"The destruction to the male genitals is absolute," says Brother K. "Total. You're left with a fraction of what God and nature intended. It's appalling."

It's Sunday morning on Hope Street in Providence and cars are whizzing by. Some honk their horns in solidarity; others carry passengers clearly confused as to the necessity of a demonstration against circumcision featuring men in white jumpsuits with large red bloodstains on their crotches

"This is meant to shock the conscience of Americans," says Brother K, referring to his attire and accompanying signs like, "CIRCUMCISION HORROR BLOODSTAINED MEN." He pauses frequently to pose for passing cars. "They don't understand that a man is carrying around a bloody wound for the rest of his life. It doesn't repair. It doesn't self heal. It's as devastating as if they've done the same thing to a woman and removed her entire clitoral hood."'

"Feminism doesn’t demand the end of masculinity"

Mastodon · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of my first thoughts when I started liberal arts college was: Where are all the dudes? In high school, they whistled at me in the hall. They blasted Jay-Z from their cars. They wore tank tops to showcase their biceps.

On campus I felt like I had fallen down a rabbit hole and ended up in no man’s land: guys wore tie-dye onesies, had shaggy hair and preferred to smoke pot rather than funnel beer. Most disappointing was that they didn’t seem at all interested in my pink spandex jumpsuit and high ponytail. No, Toto, I wasn’t in a Freddie Prinze Jr. movie anymore.

My university was where masculinity went to die.

In high school, this species of men was easy to ignore. Like experimental cells, they were confined to the petri dishes of drama clubs and debate teams, a clear mutation of manliness.
...
Just look at our school system for a taste of modern society’s values. North America regards the trades — the bread and butter of traditional masculinity — as the ugly duckling of education. If you’re not into textbooks, lab coats or blazers you’re considered less than worthy.
...
Though I’ve ditched the pink jumpsuit and high ponytail, I still appreciate dudeness. Especially when the masculine desire to “provide” results in a cooked meal after a long day at work. As a feminist, I’m totally cool with a man who can fix my sink, especially when I can sit in the other room and write.'

Do women really have it better in Sweden?

Mastodon · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oh, to be in Sweden, a feminist paradise on Earth! Gender equality is baked into the nation's DNA. Swedish women have advantages we can only only dream of – free universal child care, for example. Mothers and fathers get 480 (!) days of parental leave. An extensive welfare system makes it easy to balance work and family life.
...
The result is that nearly 80 per cent of Swedish mothers are in the work force. (In the United States and Canada, it's about 73 per cent.) Women also make up 45 per cent of Sweden's parliament, the Riksdag.
...
Sweden and the other Nordic nations always seem to lead the rankings of the world's best countries for women. (Canada is lucky to crack the top 20.) So they're an ideal laboratory for finding out what women really want. What choices will women make when the playing field is as level as social policy can make it?

I'm afraid the answers will disappoint a lot of people. That includes Sheryl Sandberg, the famous author of Lean In, who wrote, "A truly equal world would be one where women ran half our countries and companies, and men ran half our homes."

The trouble is that the world's most liberated women aren't leaning in – in fact, many are leaning back. They work fewer hours and make less money than men, just as Canadian women do. In fact, Swedish women are much more likely to have part-time jobs and far less likely to hold top managerial positions or be CEOs. On top of that, Scandinavian labour markets are the most gender-segregated in the developed world.

Women do make up 25 per cent of Swedish corporate boards, but only because of quotas. The greatest concentration of senior managers, CEOs and other highly paid power women isn't in Scandinavia. It's here in North America, where working women's lives are much tougher.

It turns out that all these family-friendly policies have an unintended impact on the gender gap, as Kay Hymowitz and many others have noted. By making it easy for women to drop out of the work force and work shorter hours, they make it harder for women to progress in their careers. Swedish men have these options too, but they don't take them. So women don't advance as far as men. And they are also considered less desirable by corporate employers who need people on the job 24/7.

In any event, only a small proportion of Nordic women choose to work as managers and professionals. Most choose lower-paid, highly gender-segregated work. As Alison Wolf has written in her excellent book The XX Factor, Scandinavian countries "hold the record for gender segregation because they have gone the furthest in outsourcing traditional female activities and turning unpaid home-based 'caring' into formal employment."

Despite vigorous efforts to stamp out gender stereotyping, most Swedish girls would still rather be daycare workers and nurses when they grow up. And boys would rather be welders and truck drivers. And that's not all. To the extreme chagrin of social engineers throughout Scandinavia, mothers still take the bulk of parental leave. Most men take parental leave only when a certain part of it is designated for fathers only.'

Woman behind bars over false rape claim

Mastodon · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Natasha Foster, from the Ballymoney Road in the Co Antrim town, was said by her defence to be "a woman scorned" when she appeared before Antrim Crown Court on Friday.

Her lawyer Michael Smith told Judge Desmond Marrinan that the false accusation had been made out of "anger and revenge".

He explained that Foster had desperately wanted to get back with a former lover and had consensual sex with him.

But he later texted her saying that he was not interested in getting back into a relationship.

The lawyer told the court: "After he sent the text, she was distraught and hell hath no fury like a woman scorned."

He further revealed that Foster later went to her doctor and admitted that she was a "compulsive liar" and that she was prescribed medication.'

'What’s Up With... No men’s soccer team?'

Mastodon · 22 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So what’s up with there being no men’s soccer team at Clackamas?

Part of the issue stems from a limited budget. A small community college is not able to afford as many large athletic programs as larger colleges or universities. The bigger problem to get around is an issue of legality. Clackamas Community College cannot add a men’s soccer team because of Title IX restrictions.
...
“We added women’s soccer 10 or 11 years ago to get us back into [Title IX] compliance,” said Jim Martineau, CCC Athletic Director. “Currently our split of six female sports and five male sports keeps us at the compliance we need.”
Currently the female sports offered at Clackamas are soccer, volleyball and softball while wrestling and baseball are offered for the men. Basketball, cross country and track and field are offered to both genders. Adding a men’s soccer team alone would upset the balance and require CCC athletics to expand female athletics as well to stay in compliance.'

'PC Cops – Who's Sick Of 'Em?'

Mastodon · 23 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It never stops.

Next week you're tin-pot, politically correct police force are running yet ANOTHER 'Domestic Abuse' drive.

The papers will be full of it.

And as usual – it's all balls.

They'll call it 'cyber-stalking' – (they think that's a new and convincing angle) – and you'll hear thickasabrick Pirate FM presenters lisping words copied from Devon and Cornwall police press releases, probably with a thirty second segment with some magically un-named woman about her 'Hell' being 'stalked online' by some fairy tale chauvinist psycho.

Wait for buzzwords like 'Facebook' 'abuse' 'bullying' bla bla bla bla bla.

Of course the truth is – the anonymous 'victim' is straight out of central casting supplied by some state handout dependent 'domestic abuse' agency you're paying for.

She'll also most likely be a regular feature on some scumbag 'family lawyers' books, and the 'cyber-stalking' is likely to have consisted of some shat on furious father trying to see his own kid.'

U.S. State Dept.: "The Global Gender-Based Violence Threat"

Minuteman · 23 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Testimony
Catherine M. Russell
Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues
Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission
Washington, DC
November 20, 2013

Good afternoon,

I am honored to be here with all of you to discuss the critical importance of preventing and responding to gender-based violence globally. I would like to express my appreciation to the Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission for your commitment to promote and defend international human rights, including women's rights.

It is fitting that we gather now to discuss these issues, as Monday marks the International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women and the first of the 16 Days Campaign Against Gender Violence, which concludes on Human Rights Day, December 10. My job as Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's issues is to promote the principle that advancing the status of women and girls is essential to achieving America's diplomatic goals – that peace, security, prosperity, economic growth cannot be achieved without the full and equal participation of women, and that men and boys are important partners in this effort.

Violence against women and girls is a global epidemic. It crosses every social and economic class, ethnicity, race, religion, and education level, and transcends international borders. It takes the form of early and forced marriages, sexual violence, and traditional harmful practices, among others. Violence occurs both inside and outside the home, and often increases with instability.

For example, we see heightened levels of gender-based violence in conflict and post-conflict settings, in refugee and displaced persons camps, and following natural disasters. The use of rape as a tactic of war is yet another egregious form of gender-based violence that disproportionately affects women and girls. Worldwide, an estimated one in three women will be physically or sexually abused in her lifetime, and one in five will experience rape or attempted rape. This is unacceptable.'

U.S. State Dept.: "Ambassador Catherine Russell leads Panel Discussion Commemorating International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women"

Minuteman · 23 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'On November 25, Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues Catherine Russell will host a panel discussion marking the 14th annual International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women, which launches the 16 Days of Activism Against Gender Violence. This year's discussion will address intimate partner violence and linkages between the domestic and international contexts, with a focus on marginalized and indigenous women. Tina Tchen, Executive Director for the Council on Women and Girls, will provide opening remarks.

Other invited panelists include Bea Hanson, Acting Director of the United States Department of Justice Office on Violence Against Women; Layli Miller-Muro, Executive Director of Tahirih Justice Center; Nivia Monica Da Silva, Public Prosecutor, Coordinator of the Center for the Promotion of Gender and Racial Equality in Minas Gerais, Brazil; and Juana Majel Dixon, Co-Chair of the National Congress of American Indians Task Force on Violence Against Women.

The event is open to the press and will be held in the Marshall Center at the Department of State located at the 21st Street entrance, from 9:30 to 11:00 a.m.'

Crystal Mangum found guilty of 2nd-degree murder

Matt · 23 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DURHAM — A jury found Crystal Mangum guilty of second-degree murder Friday for stabbing and killing her boyfriend, Reginald Daye, in 2011.

After Superior Court Judge Paul Ridgeway sentenced Mangum to 14 years and two months to 18 years in prison, deputies immediately led her handcuffed out of the courtroom.

Mangum's attorney, Daniel Meir, said she will appeal.

The case was unusual because, unlike most murder cases, the jury heard the victim's side of the story.

Mangum, 35, stabbed Daye on April 3, 2011, and an investigator spoke with him twice before he died April 13, 2011.

...

Mangum took the stand in her own defense and said it was Daye who attacked her with knives by throwing them at her. She stabbed him, she said, after he dragged her out of the bathroom by the hair, straddled her and began strangling her.

Photos of the apartment showed kitchen steak knives scattered throughout the apartment. Blood drops were on the carpet in the hallway where Daye said she stabbed him, but not in the master bedroom where Mangum said she stabbed him.

...

Former Durham City Councilwoman Jackie Wagstaff, one of Mangum's supporters, said she believed Mangum was being punished because of who she was and her name recognition.

In 2006, Mangum accused three Duke lacrosse players of raping her at a party. The charges were later dismissed after the evidence did not back up Mangum's story. Her accusations tore apart the Duke lacrosse program and resulted in the disbarment of District Attorney Mike Nifong.

Assistant District Attorney Charlene Franks, who prosecuted the murder case, said it was never about Crystal Mangum, the Duke lacrosse accuser.

"It was about Reggie Daye and what happened in April 2011," she said.'

Circumcision: an unnecessary, brutal practice for those who can't consent

Matt · 23 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Here's this little bundle ... First let's find a sharp stone or knife and start hacking at the genitalia," begins journalist Christopher Hitchens, setting up a scenario that about 58 percent of male infants born in the United States went through in 2010. "Because, as it turns out," Hitchens continues, "the design isn't that great, and in a crucial feature, too."

He concludes, "No morally decent person would do this if it wasn't for superstition."

Infant male circumcision is a practice not often questioned by new parents. It's either divinely warranted or it's just something that people do. But witnessing a ceremony like this should cause outrage in any morally normal person.

Reputable studies by the World Health Organization and the Centers for Disease Control have shown that there is evidence of circumcision preventing the contraction of sexually transmitted diseases such as HPV and HIV. This is reasonable, considering there is a 44 percent lower rate of HIV infection among circumcised men.

"But doesn't that contradict your point?" you might ask.

I would answer: no. My point isn't that male circumcision is always morally wrong, but that it's a sinister practice to inflict on non-consenting infants.

These studies are likely as significant as they sound, but we can rest assured that a child is not at risk for STDs in his infancy or in childhood. A procedure that is unnecessary, painful, traumatic and even life-threatening should never be inflicted on a child until he is able to consent to the operation himself.'

Baltimore jail officers accused in scheme

Matt · 23 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. So, females are "less corruptible" than males? That used to be a feminist claim, and still is among some of them, if not also among people generally. Despite evidence to the contrary, denial and cognitive dissonance always seem to win out where this prejudice is concerned. Excerpt:

'"Correctional officers were in bed with BGF inmates," said U.S. Attorney Rod Rosenstein.

Rosenstein seemed to mean that literally and figuratively, court documents show. According to one indictment, alleged gang member Tavon White had a sexual relationship with four jail guards while he was incarcerated.

He impregnated all four of them and they all helped him smuggle items in prison, according to the indictment.

One of the guards had "Tavon" tattooed on her wrist, the indictment said.

...

Correctional officers were allegedly "bribed" to smuggle in drugs, cell phones and other prohibited objects, which they hid underneath their clothes, "inside body cavities," even in sandwiches.

...

"Court documents allege the BGF members recruited correctional officers through personal and often sexual relationships, as well as bribes, and that some officers traded sex for money," the U.S. Attorney's office said in its news release.

The end result was what Rosenstein's office called a "criminal organization" operating inside jails "enabling (participants) to make large amounts of money through drug trafficking, robbery, assault, extortion, bribery, witness retaliation, money laundering and obstruction of justice."

The investigation first came to light in April with the announcement of the first round of arrests. In all, 44 people have been indicted on federal charges. Twenty seven of them are Baltimore correctional officers, CNN affiliate WJZ reported.'

Gynecologists Run Afoul of Panel When Patient Is Male

Matt · 23 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

* UPDATE **********

Petition to ABOG here. Feel free to spread it far and wide.

****
Article here. Contact info for taking action is in the first comment. I have also made this item "sticky" so it stays the top-listed story until Tues. Nov. 26. Newer stories will still appear below it. Excerpt:

'But in September, the American Board of Obstetrics and Gynecology insisted that its members treat only women, with few exceptions, and identified the procedure in which Dr. Stier has expertise as one that gynecologists are not allowed to perform on men. Doctors cannot ignore such directives from a specialty board, because most need certification to keep their jobs.

Now Dr. Stier's studies are in limbo, her research colleagues are irate, and her male patients are distraught. Other gynecologists who had translated their skills to help male patients are in similar straits.

And researchers about to start a major clinical trial that is aimed at preventing anal cancer, with $5.6 million from the National Cancer Institute, say the board's decision will keep some of the best qualified, most highly skilled doctors in the United States from treating male patients in the study. The director of the planned study and Dr. Stier have asked the gynecology board to reconsider its position.
...
"We haven't heard of any compelling reason to change anything," said Dr. Kenneth L. Noller, the board's director of evaluation. He said there were plenty of other doctors available to provide the HPV-related procedures that some gynecologists had been performing on men.

Dr. Larry C. Gilstrap, the group's executive director, said the specialty of obstetrics and gynecology was specifically designed to treat problems of the female reproductive tract and was "restricted to taking care of women." Of the 24 medical specialties recognized in the United States, he said, it is the only one that is gender-specific, and it has been that way since 1935.
...
The board had always regarded the treatment of women as its mission, Dr. Gilstrap said, but felt a particular need to emphasize it now because the specialty's image was being tarnished by members who had strayed into moneymaking sidelines, like testosterone therapy for men, and liposuction and other cosmetic procedures for both women and men.
...
On Sept. 12, the board posted on its website a stringent and newly explicit definition of obstetrician-gynecologists, limiting the proportion of time they could spend on nongynecologic procedures and noting that, with few exceptions, members must not treat men. The notice specifically prohibited gynecologists from performing an examination called anoscopy on men.
...
Anoscopy involves using a tube and a light to examine the anal canal, which is about 1.5 inches long. ... Cancers usually require surgery, but doctors can burn off precancers in hopes of preventing cancer.

A similar approach led to a tremendous decline in cervical cancer in the United States, and doctors hope to accomplish the same for anal cancer. About 7,000 new cases of anal cancer, and 880 deaths, are expected in 2013 in the United States; the incidence has been increasing by 2.2 percent a year for the last 10 years.
...
If the trial shows that cancers can be prevented, it could change the standard of care, Dr. Douglas R. Lowy, a deputy director of the Center for Cancer Research at the National Cancer Institute, said in an interview.

Doctors planning to participate in the trial have had extensive training in high-resolution anoscopy. People with various types of medical training can learn the procedure, but experts say that gynecologists are the quickest to master it because of their experience in screening women.
...
Dr. Stier had been treating men for more than 10 years, and expected to enroll about 100 in the study. Now, she will be able to enroll only women. She is the only person with the special training at her hospital, so now another hospital will have to sign up more men.

But what really worries her is what will become of the men she has been treating. ... “My main issue here is that I don’t think my patients are going to get the follow-up that they need, and I think they’re going to be lost to care, and we take care of a very vulnerable patient population,” Dr. Stier said.

Dr. Einstein had also been treating some male patients and had planned to enroll men in the new trial. Like Dr. Stier, he was blindsided by the gynecology board’s notice.

He said only three doctors at his hospital had special training in high-resolution anoscopy, and that was nowhere near enough. Now two of those doctors, including himself, have to stop treating men.

“I think we’ll see significant setbacks,” Dr. Einstein said.'

Has Radical Feminism Achieved A Deceptive Victory?

Mastodon · 24 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'American men are fed up and angry — and rightfully so.

Sick of being constantly portrayed as rapists, abusers, bumbling idiots, irresponsible losers, deadbeat dads (if they're absent), immature fatherly buffoons (if they're present) or overall "bad guys" by the mainstream media and Hollywood, many men have reached a tipping point.

Tired of being mistreated by a family court system that either forces financially-crippling child support obligations upon non-custodial fathers or — worse still — forces many men to pay child support for children they later discover are not even biologically their own, men have had it.

More and more, men are not getting married like they used to due to the prohibitive cost of divorce. Nor are they attending college at the same rate as women, because some just don't want to deal with the hostile environment of feminist political correctness that could ruin their lives. In short, men have had all they can take of this decades-long backlash against them. They are voluntarily "going Galt," like in Ayn Rand's Atlas Shrugged, and taking a vacation from responsibility.

Why? Because they can.

In the battle for women's rights, has radical feminism achieved a Pyrrhic victory?
...
Let's face facts. From an early age, too many young girls are now raised and taught to view boys and men with suspicion at best or outright disdain and dread at worst. This radical feminist, anti-male indoctrination has seeped into our school system. And it infests higher education, where freshman men may be force-fed "chick lit" such as A Handmaid's Tale or performances of The Vagina Monologues. Or they may find their academic careers ruined by accusations of sexual harassment or rape, regardless of evidence or whether the accuser purposely lied (such as what happened in the infamous Duke University rape scandal).

Radical feminism also worms its way into the legal system with the help of people Dr. Smith calls "Uncle Tims" — men looking to get on women's good side. Examples of anti-male bias have damaged countless divorce, paternity and child support cases.
...
Some men are breaking down and breaking out — unwilling to hold in their feelings or to abide by the "new normal" imposed on their gender by radical feminist doctrine.
...
Men On Strike is the ultimate survival guide for 21st century American men in an uber-feminized society.'

This stereotype turn-about not fair play

Mastodon · 24 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Wrestling dollars from consumers is the main purpose of advertising. And now, during Christmas gift-buying season, this is more apparent than ever. Some ads are brilliant. Others stretch the limits of good taste.

In 2005, clothing designer Marithé Francois Girbaud created a billboard that played off Leonardo da Vinci's iconic Christian-inspired painting The Last Supper. The ad featured a female Jesus Christ, female diners and a lone half-naked man with his underwear and the top of his buttocks showing. The company received almost immediate backlash against the ad from those who questioned what jeans had to do with the twisted religious imagery portrayed.

The company's primary defence was that women can only achieve equality with men if they sacrifice their femininity. The ad was meant to create a new perception of femininity by "presenting men, instead of women, in a position of fragility."
...
It's disappointing to still see the continual and objectionable sexualization of women in ads, but it's equally disappointing to see the frequent and distasteful dummyfication (yes, I made up that word) of men. Men are too often portrayed as sexual predators, crude blockheads or complete buffoons easily manipulated and incapable of doing anything without the assistance of their female partners. And the masses seem to think this is OK.
...
What this suggests is that it's not women who are coming up with these male-bashing ads. It's the men themselves, possibly in an attempt to cash in on a perceived increase in women's buying power by, to use Girbaud's words, "presenting men in a position of fragility."

Is this what women really want? I don't. And I know other women who are also tired of advertising that presents their partners, brothers, fathers and sons as biologically flawed, unmotivated, abusive, slow-witted numbskulls and commitment-phobic family-destroyers unable to be responsible, loving, hands-on dads.

Not all men are like this and it's repugnant when advertising implies they are.'

Barbara Kay: ‘Be it resolved we live in a misandric society’

Mastodon · 24 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One thing feminists cannot complain about with a straight face is a lack of respectful public attention for women’s issues. Last week the prestigious Munk Debates mounted an event around “the end of men.” Four well-known women writers debated the resolution, “Be it resolved that men are obsolete.”

Can you imagine a public debate on whether Muslims, natives, or even sharks and polar bears are worthy of continued existence? No. Only men are accorded that dubious honour. Although by most accounts – certainly those I talked to who attended – it wasn’t even entertaining. Montreal radio talk show host Supriya Dwivedi tweeted, “I was [at the Munk debate] and was speechless at how ridiculous it was.”
...
Women, because the organizers thought it had to be all women pundits, because even brainy women are too fragile intellectually to duke it out in a real debate with respected masculinist participants like Harvard University professor Harvey Mansfield, author of the 2006 Manliness or male-rights activist Warren Farrell?

Or men, because it was clear that victory for the feminist side was a foregone conclusion (as indeed happened), and that male-bashing as an evening’s entertainment is not only permissible, but the kind of performance theatre our chattering classes will pay good money to see?

I can’t think of a better topic for discussion at, say, a men’s centre. Moreover, if the Munk debate committee would like to arrange a debate around the proposition, “Be it resolved we live in a misandric society,” I am available.'

US Marine Corps postpones pullups for women, cites potential risks

Mastodon · 24 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female Marines will now have more time to prepare for the pullup requirement to pass the Physical Fitness Test.

The Corps announced Friday that Phase 1 of the change requiring female Marines to complete pullups as part of the Physical Fitness Test, in which women were given the option of doing pullups or the flexed-arm hang, “will continue into calendar year 2014.” Service officials want to further evaluate and validate the assumption that pullups are an appropriate metric for assessing upper-body strength in all Marines, said Lt. Col. Neil Murphy, a Marine spokesman at the Pentagon.
...
Murphy said the Corps wants to ensure that female Marines are set up for success in combat and overall fitness. The assessments it’s conducting are a collaborative effort between Headquarters, Training and Education Command, Marine Corps Recruiting Command, and Manpower and Reserve Affairs, he added.'

Woman who blamed husband for mailing ricin to Obama gets plea deal

Mastodon · 24 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Texas actress accused of mailing ricin-laced letters to President Barack Obama and New York Mayor Michael Bloomberg has reached a plea deal with federal prosecutors, according to federal court documents.

Shannon Guess Richardson, 36, whose acting career included minor television roles, had attempted to blame her husband for sending the letters in May that tested positive for the presence of ricin, according to prosecutors.

Notice of the plea deal was filed on Thursday in U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of Texas. Richardson's attorney, Tonda Curry, could not be immediately reached to detail the terms of the plea agreement.

Richardson was arrested in June and a federal grand jury accused her in a three-count indictment of mailing the letters to Obama, Bloomberg and Mark Glaze, the director of Mayors Against Illegal Guns, a group founded by Bloomberg that lobbies for stricter gun laws.'

Australia: "Degrees of separation: more women enrolling at universities"

Mastodon · 24 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2002, of the 151,550 Australian students who graduated from university, 56 per cent were women. By 2012, graduation numbers had increased to nearly 195,000, of whom 60 per cent were female, a ratio likely to be higher again this year.

Although women have often opted for courses such as nursing and teaching, their numerical superiority has invaded the previously typical male domains, extending from the undergraduate through all postgraduate levels. Women now outnumber men from bachelor degrees to the top doctoral peaks, and they are also in the majority in seven of the 10 main subject areas, the exceptions being architecture, engineering and information technology.
...
Yet despite their preponderance, the federal government still classes "women in non-traditional areas" as an equity group deserving of ongoing efforts to boost their enrollments in the few fields where they are not already in the majority. The gender divide, now firmly established in higher education, starts in school, where girls do better in their tests, do not drop out to the same extent as boys, and apply for university in greater numbers.

Last year the Labor government lifted the limits on how many students each university could enroll, which may have encouraged more girls to apply, including those whose ATAR scores may not have been high enough to gain entry previously, and this is shifting enrollments even more to the females.'

VAWA Goes Global

Mastodon · 25 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Will fourth time be the charm for a piece of legislation seeking to eradicate violence against the estimated one-third of women suffering from abuse worldwide?

On Thursday, the International Violence Against Women Act (I-VAWA) is set to be reintroduced to the House by Rep. Jan Schakowsky, a Democrat representing Illinois's 9th district. Since being introduced by Senator Joe Biden in 2007, the act has been through numerous reintroductions in four different Congresses, but advocates hope this year will be the one it makes it into the books.

..,

Under I-VAWA, both the ambassadorship and the State Department office would become permanent, and the act would implement Obama's strategy in five at-need countries—factors which are paramount, Soler says. Gender-based programs would also be implemented in the U.S. foreign assistance programs. The key components of the legislation, according to Soler, target local organizations on the ground dealing with gender-based violence, and engage men and boys to do their part in ending violence. "It's not all about, 'Let's find bad folks and do something about it after something bad has happened,'" she says. The proven positive domino effect of investing in girls and women would make other U.S. foreign policy goals, like fostering economic and civil society development, easier, Soler says.

...

Problems plagued the domestic Violence Against Women Act after the House allowed it to expire earlier this year. But Finch says "their reputation suffered in how long it took them to act" after the the mounted pressure for Congress to finally re-approve the legislation. "We would look to that and say: the people of the United States care deeply against violence against women and any delay in passing this bill is very unwarranted."'

'Ruined a man's life? Six months my sweet'

Mastodon · 25 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A West Country woman lied to the police that a friend raped her - then spread gossip through his small town that left him and his family facing death threats.

Single mother of two Ashleigh Loder, 25, was convicted of perverting the course of justice, a crime which carries a sentence of up to seven years, for falsely accusing Fran Syvret.

But misandrist Judge Phillip Wassall, nicknamed ‘Blubber’ because of his weight, and the fact that he was who was once mocked publicly after crying during a court case in Truro , gave her just six months – of which she is likely to serve half.

Victim Fran found himself facing ruin, and suffered victimisation from gullible locals, when Loder lied he raped her.'

Woman Jumps For High Location, Man Tries To Catch Her

redwoodwriter · 25 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. "White Knight" taken to an extreme. Excerpt:

'A woman jumped from the third deck at the O. co Coliseum after Sunday's Oakland Raiders game, injuring herself and a man who tried to catch her, an Alameda County sheriff's office spokesman said.

The woman went into section 301, an area that is closed off to the public, and moved to jump off the edge around 4:30 p.m., just after the game's end, Sgt. J.D. Nelson said.

People on the second deck concourse level below tried to persuade her not to jump, Nelson said.

"She jumped anyhow, and one guy tried to catch her," Nelson said.'

What Politicians Don't Say About the Military's Sexual Assault 'Epidemic'

Mastodon · 25 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When I joined the U.S. military in January 2011, a family member asked me: “Aren’t you worried about being raped?” And she wasn’t the only one. Many people cautioned me that I would be entering an institution synonymous with machismo, authoritarianism, and violence.

What I found instead was very different: professionalism, respect, and a strong presence of women in the highest ranks. I also found the most transparent, aggressive, and in-your-face Sexual Assault Prevention and Response (SAPR) program I had ever witnessed.
...
So even if the preponderance of evidence fails to support a conviction for rape or sexual assault, an accused soldier may still be discharged from the military and punished for a related offense like failure to obey an order (92), cruelty toward and maltreatment of a subordinate (93), unbecoming conduct (133), fraternization (134), or providing alcohol to a minor (134).

If service members fail to obtain justice through the regular process, which is largely at the discretion of their Commanding Officers (COs), there already is a way for them to circumvent the CO and file a complaint of wrongs against the CO under UCMJ Article 138.

That is why I have been surprised to hear U.S. Senators imply that service members currently have no recourse outside their CO and that a new, parallel organizational structure is needed.

Our sexual assault awareness training has articulated a highly victim-friendly standard for defining sexual assault. It has stressed affirmative consent, i.e., that for sexual activity NOT to be defined as sexual assault, consent must be freely and affirmatively communicated between both partners at every step during sexual activity, and both partners must be physically and mentally able to give consent. Any ambiguity, we’ve been taught, could harm the accused more than the accuser. Silence, or the absence of a “no,” does not imply consent. A drunk or drugged partner is automatically assumed to be non-consenting.
...
So perhaps, instead of being a punching bag on Capitol Hill, the military should be studied as a model for sexual assault awareness, prevention, and response policy, especially among young people aged 18 to 24. And perhaps that model should be exported to the nation’s college campuses, where sexual assault is equally prevalent but far more hidden; where sexual assault policies and practices are outdated; and where the fear of litigation or falling rankings makes university administrations reluctant to expel offenders and eager to brush the problem under the carpet.'

'We must enlist men and boys in the fight to end violence against women'

Mastodon · 25 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"It may seem foolish to be optimistic on 25 November, the International Day for the Elimination of Violence Against Women. The World Health Organisation affirms that one in three women will experience violence from a male partner. A recent UN study in a half-dozen Asian countries finds that one in four men have raped.

Our optimism stems from an extraordinary change across the globe: more and more men are finally joining women to say all forms of violence against women must end. Even more critically, men around the world are saying we must play a key role in creating a future without violence against women.

Men have joined women in India, Africa and the Middle East to protest highly publicised crimes against women; in Europe and the Americas, they increasingly speak out. Together with women, we are calling on governments to take action and uphold the laws. The news from the UK that Clare's law will now cover all of England and Wales is one example of a victory in this fight. We hope there will be many more of this kind.
...
To create a lasting end to men's violence against women, it's time to move from small-scale programming by hard-working NGOs to large-scale efforts across our societies, in our schools and workplaces, transforming our families, and creating the future that women, our children and, indeed, men truly deserve.'

Urgent Petition: Don't Export Discrimination Against Male and LGBT Victims

Matt · 25 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From a NPO email:

A member of Congress has introduced a bill called the International Violence Against Women Act that would provide foreign aid for domestic violence programs only for women abused by men. It would ignore and marginalize men abused by women as well as LGBT victims. We have started a new petition calling on members of Congress to vote against the bill and hope you'll take a moment to sign it.

Thank you for your support.

Queens doctor targeted over circumcisions

Matt · 25 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An organization advocating against circumcision of baby boys targeted a Queens doctor in its latest demonstration.

A group of about 18 protesters marched in front of the Forest Hills Gardens home of Dr. Susan Blank and along Union Turnpike, according to Anthony Losquadro, founder and executive director of the Brooklyn-based Intaction.

Blank is chairwoman of the American Academy of Pediatrics' Task Force on Circumcision, which last year updated its policy on the procedure to say that research indicates it is associated with some health benefits.

Intaction, which argues that circumcision is akin to female genital mutilation, wants the AAP to retract the policy. They believe the decision of whether to be circumcised should be left up to men when they are adults.

He said anti-circumcision activists have sent thousands of letters and e-mails to the academy, but have received no response, so they took the next step by protesting.'

USAID: "16 Days of Activism against Gender Violence"

Minuteman · 25 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From an USAID mailing-list email:

'Beginning on the International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women (November 25) and ending on International Human Rights Day (December 10), USAID joins the global community in observance of the 16 Days of Activism against Gender Violence.

The U.S. Government has increased awareness of gender-based violence and made the prevention and response to it a priority in foreign policy and development assistance programming. In August 2012, USAID joined other government agencies to launch the first-ever U.S. Strategy to Prevent and Respond to Gender-Based Violence Globally [PDF, 1.8MB]. President Obama signed an accompanying Executive Order, which directed all relevant agencies to implement the strategy and created an interagency working group.

USAID is committed to working in collaboration with other U.S. Government agencies, non-governmental organizations, faith-based communities, private sector companies and women and men around the world to eliminate gender-based violence. Such violence significantly hinders the ability of individuals to fully participate in and contribute to their communities and families economically, politically and socially. During these 16 days, let us reflect and act collectively to end gender-based violence.

Learn more:

Visit USAID's 16 Days of Activism against Gender Violence webpage.
Check out the 16 Days of Activism against Gender Violence blog series on the USAID IMPACT blog.
Join the conversation with USAID for Global Health on Twitter using #16Days.'

'No, child support can’t be a choice'

Mastodon · 25 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mention the words “child support” on Twitter, and you’re likely to set off a bitter discussion. Men complain about a system that unfairly enriches women at the expense of men, while women complain about a system that fails to serve their needs as single mothers. Recently, Salon reprinted an essay by Anna March that attempted to make the feminist case that mandatory child support laws – which March termed “forced fatherhood” – are inherently unfair to men.

As others have pointed out, feminist arguments in support of male reproductive rights aren’t new. March approvingly cites Laurie Shrage’s June New York Times Op-Ed, in which Shrage claims that a man in the United States who accidentally conceives a child with a woman has fewer rights than women, particularly if he does not wish to raise the child with her. March seeks to balance the scales by doing away with mandatory child support and making it easier for men to opt out of providing financial support for a child they do not want.

The attack on the 'Nurturing Knight'

Mastodon · 25 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the ways International Mens Day was celebrated, on Tuesday 19 November 2013, was by holding a Men and Fathers' Strategic Roundtable at Parliament House, Canberra. During the lunchbreak Carolyn Managh from M&C Saatchi released The Modern [Aussie] Man Whitepaper to Australia. The White Paper was the result of eight months of one-on-one interviews with 140 men Australia-wide, aged primarily between 27 to 55 years. The report is 68 pages long but let me give you a few highlights.
...
Reports on the release were featured in the Financial Review and in NineMSN in a relatively positive way. One feminist writer wrote a great article in the Women's Agenda in anticipation of the white paper release but radical feminist writers in, the Sydney Morning Herald, theDaily Life and the Chifley blog site tore into the Modern [Aussie] Man whitepaper making mince meat of Australian men in the process. The misrepresentations and attacks on the whitepaper findings prove that the concept 'all men are bastards' is still alive and well in some sections of Australia's media.

What has really surprised me is the vigour of the attack on The Modern Aussie Man from some of our Feminist friends in the academic and media world. You see every time they attack this white paper they are actually attacking modern Aussie men and the heartfelt aspirations of the average Aussie man. One of those aspirations as shown by the white paper is gender equality. How quaint?
...
It seems that equality is only skin deep for those who express their hate for manhood so voraciously. Their hypocrisy can be seen by all, as famous Australian feminist Germaine Greer was wont to say, "Testosterone is a poison."'

U.S. State Dept.: "International Day for the Elimination of Violence against Women and 16 Days of Activism"

Minuteman · 25 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Press Statement
John Kerry
Secretary of State
Washington, DC
November 25, 2013
...
This fight is deeply personal to me. As a prosecutor, I saw firsthand the ravages of violence against women. As a proud father of two daughters, and as a husband to a strong woman who has invested so much of her public passion towards improving the lives of women, I know the difference it makes when women and girls have the opportunity to pursue their full potential and live free of violence. By contrast, gender-based violence not only undermines human rights, but poses significant obstacles to public health, economic and social development, and long lasting peace. It ruptures families. It breeds poverty and instability, and it can prevent women and girls, and their entire communities, from realizing their full potential.

We know we have much work to do. Despite all the collective international outrage, gender-based violence continues with impunity, and on a harrowing scale. Gender-based violence remains an epidemic of global proportions that cuts across every social and economic class, ethnicity, race, religion, and education level. In fact, nearly one-third of women worldwide have experienced some form of physical or sexual violence. That is an unacceptable statistic and must be a wake-up call.

The United States has made addressing gender-based violence a priority domestically and abroad. As evidenced by the first U.S. Strategy to Prevent and Respond to Gender-Based Violence Globally, the first National Action Plan on Women, Peace and Security, and new commitments to prevent and respond to gender-based violence starting at the onset of humanitarian emergencies, we are working comprehensively to improve prevention, protection, and prosecution measures to address this global scourge.'

Ready for Hillary? Really?

Mastodon · 25 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nancy Fraser's key point applies now with the gearing up for the US presidential election in 2016. Feminism is mobilized by Hillary Clinton's supporters to sell her presidential bid, but the key point is this: Would a Clinton presidency improve the lot of women in the United States and abroad, and would Clinton be a progressive president?

...

Equality between men and women should lead to the emergence of many women leaders and an increased presence of women in politics. It should therefore lead to an increase in the number of women candidates at all levels of political representation. The fact that a woman is in a position to run for president is thus positive. Does it mean that voting should be restricted to a gender issue? Clinton already has done what George W. Bush and his daddy had done before: amassed money to build a war chest to crush opposition during the primaries. This is also the way Romney eliminated his Republican rivals. In other words, the Money Power sides with a candidate who then outspends and therefore outlasts all others.

In the past, when Clinton talked about a vast "right-wing conspiracy," she and her husband had a lot of enemies on the right who are still around today. Yet the Clintons have made many friends among the 1% and are supported by plutocrats who hardly differ from the fat cats in the Republican camp. In what way could she transform American politics when she already has shown her willingness to play by the rules of plutocracy? Her gender is neither here nor there.

Famous women in politics like Thatcher, Gandhi and Meir were tough and ruthless. Some feminists, usually differential feminists, argue that in a man's world women have to play by men's rules to get ahead. Maybe so. Yet this also implies that electing a woman president would not change these rules unless there were social movements to agitate for such a change.

...

Hillary Clinton constantly has moved toward the center of US politics. And when the center migrated rightward, she migrated with it. She might be more electable now - not because she is a woman, but rather because she is a friend of the Money Power and willing to compromise on the issues that matter to it. Feminism in this context is just a gimmick to attract some voters who place gender above any other issue. Respecting the rules of the Money Power during a campaign means toeing the line of oligarchy while in power. Neither men nor women benefit from this. Clinton and her neoliberal allies are hijacking feminism and the rhetoric of diversity.'

'Even Madder Men'

Mastodon · 25 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The characters populating Michael Kimmel's new book, "Angry White Men," are familiar types: Rush Limbaugh's dittoheads, neo-Nazis, wife beaters, rampaging shooters and the divorced rageaholics of the men's rights movement. Crowded together under one banner, they make for a scary and unpleasant lot: full of fury and blaming everyone but themselves for their problems. Mostly, they blame women: ex-wives, would-be girlfriends, the phantom black women who stole their jobs. The editor of a men's rights website proclaims, "The real question here is not whether these women deserve the business end of a right hook, they obviously do, and some of them deserve one hard enough to leave them in an unconscious, innocuous pile on the ground."

Kimmel, a sociologist at Stony Brook University in New York, is unusually adventurous for an academic. As he did in his last book, "Guyland: The Perilous World Where Boys Become Men," here, he ventures into unfamiliar territory and finds himself engaged in the kinds of conversations he is unlikely to have at department meetings. At a gun show in Shippensburg, Pa., Kimmel passes time with a guy he calls "Rick," who mans the K.K.K. table and says what you would imagine such a person would say about the black man in the White House. At a batterer's intervention group, Kimmel gets into the action, prodding one man who had hit his wife by asking, "Well, why didn't you just pick up a knife and stab" her?

...

Outside a more elite audience, Kimmel's diagnosis of aggrieved entitlement will be, I imagine, a tough sell. The men he's writing about have gone through several recessions and 40 years of economic shifts. They live in a world where, as one man tells him, you'll never find a job as a plumber but you might find one as a Walmart hostess. Beyond that, families around them are falling apart. Among men like them, without a college degree, divorce rates are high and fewer people get married; for women with only a high school degree, for example, nearly 60 percent of births occur outside marriage, rendering fatherhood a relic of the past. These men may have once run with the wind at their backs, but the air has been dead still for a long time.

...

But in the short term, class inequalities loom larger than gender or race. You won't easily convince Rick or the other men in the book that, due to the long arc of male privilege over the course of world history, he owes something to the likes of Barack Obama or Sheryl Sandberg, or to a sociology professor who lives in New York.'

Celebrating the marginalization of fathers

Kratch · 26 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In what started as a pleasant dream, this poet vanquished words like “duodenum” with ease.

At 30 seconds, however, a six-letter word really gets him going.
...
and I hope that one day
I can grow up to be as great a father as she was for me
you did not ask me spell deadbeat sir... but if you want dead beat here it is:
f-a-t-h-e-r, d-a-d, d-a-d-d-y, p-o-p p-o-p-s, if you want the slang you asked me to spell father and father is,
always has been and always will be spelled m-o-t-h-e-r'

Canada: "Growth in the prison population appears to be policy, not crime driven"

fathers4fairness · 26 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New figures show the number of visible minorities in Canadian prisons has increased by 75 per cent in the past decade, while the number and proportion of inmates who are Caucasian has declined significantly.

As well, Canada's prison population is now at its highest level ever, even though the crime rate has been decreasing over the past two decades. Ten years ago, the number of inmates in federal prisons was close to 12,000. It's now more than 15,000.

These are just some of the statistics expected to be examined Tuesday, when the annual report of Correctional Investigator of Canada Howard Sapers is tabled in Parliament. His report is widely expected to be a scathing indictment of federal correctional policy.

"You cannot reasonably claim to have a just society with incarceration rates like these," Sapers said Sunday in a speech he gave at a church in Toronto.

Sapers gave his audience a litany of grim figures. He pointed out that close to a quarter of all inmates are aboriginal even thought they make up only four per cent of the population. The rate of incarceration of aboriginal women increased by 80 per cent in the past decade.'

Israel: Rabbinical court fines woman $140/day for not circumcising son

Matt · 26 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Rabbinical Court in Jerusalem rejected an appeal Monday by a Netanya woman fined NIS 500 ($140) per day for refusing to circumcise her son, as is required by Jewish law (halacha).

The penalty was initially levied by a rabbinical court in Netanya earlier this year at the request of the woman's estranged husband who has demanded that the circumcision take place. The two are reportedly undergoing divorce proceedings, and the court stated that it believes her refusal was part of some ploy to save her marriage.

The woman's lawyer claimed that the rabbinical court had no authority to order the woman to circumcise her son, who is now a year old.

"I've been exposed to a lot of material regarding circumcision and I have decided not to circumcise my son," the woman, who has not been identified, told Channel 2 News Monday evening.

"I have no right to cut his organ and mutilate him. And the court has no right to force me to do so," she went on, vowing that she would not pay the fine, which has so far reached NIS 2,500. "I don't have the means; I'm not working," she said.

The woman intends to take the case to the Supreme Court, according to the report.

The court also addressed the current anti-circumcision sentiments around the world — specifically in Europe where some countries have pushed forth a ban on the Jewish (and Muslim) practice — and expressed concerns about the precedent this incident could set should an Israeli Jewish woman be allowed to forgo the custom.'

Great Britain's Deserts of Masculinity

Mastodon · 27 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Britain, then: Lawrence of Arabia remakes the desert battlefield.

Britain, now? It's raining "men deserts."

"The Centre for Social Justice (CSJ) reports that an increasing number of British children are growing up with hardly any male influence," the Call Me Stormy Weblog notes. "In some areas, the problem has reached such high levels that they have been tabbed 'men deserts,' according to the report," which aired on Britain's Sky News channel:

[EMBEDDED VIDEO]

Theodore Dalrymple and Peter Hitchens, call your office, as your writings over a decade ago on the collapse of British culture are yet again confirmed. Though am I the only one who cringes whenever the word "desert" is referenced outside of the aforementioned Lawrence of Arabia or other uses that involve large quantities of sand?'

UK: 'Women make better board members'

Mastodon · 27 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female directors are better for their companies and shareholders because they are less likely to engage in overpriced takeovers or empire-building, a study suggests.

Firms with more women on their corporate boards will pay less on average for their acquisitions because they take a more prudent approach to business deals.
...
For every female board member companies also attempted 7.6 per cent fewer takeover bids, they reported in a new paper to be published in the Journal of Corporate Finance.

The results suggest that women demand higher promised returns on their investment when evaluating business deals and are less likely to sanction rash bids, researchers found.'

Do women really make men better?

Mastodon · 27 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The December issue of the Atlantic features a grand roundup of studies on "How Women Change Men." The results presented will probably not explode your brain with wonder. Most of the studies basically confirm that our interactions with specific people shape our beliefs about the categories - ethnic, gender, etc. - those people belong to.

So men with lots of female colleagues tend to pick up more housework at home, likely because they view women as equal partners rather than Windex-powered service robots. Men with daughters subscribe less frequently to traditional gender roles and disagree more often with the statement, "A woman's place is in the home." (Yet men with sisters are more attracted to the old norms, perhaps because they've used macho/feminine orthodoxy in the past to differentiate themselves from their siblings.)
...
But what about how having sons might affect the business practices of female CEOs? Might being observed by a guy make a woman run faster, take greater risks or donate more money? Information about whether, for instance, girls speak up less in co-ed classrooms is out there, but it doesn't get nearly as much play in the press - and the framing is almost always "this is how women react to their own awareness of a man's presence."

So what does this mean? Is it somehow troubling that we rarely encounter studies that use ladies as experimental subjects, and guys as inputs? Or should we embrace our status as independent variables (which sounds exciting, like a mix between a Beyonce song and a spy mission)? Does our independent variable-ness speak to our girl power, or to ongoing male power? Someone should do a study.'

Kathleen Hanna Balmes Sexism For Girl-On-Girl Bullying

Mastodon · 27 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to the culture that encourages girl-on-girl bullying, punk-rock legend and feminist activist Kathleen Hanna* doesn't mince words. "It's always about taking the scraps off of the man's table. It's like we're just eating off the floor," said Hanna, former frontwoman of Bikini Kill and Le Tigre and current frontwoman of The Julie Ruin.

In a Nov. 25 interview on HuffPost Live, Hanna explained exactly why sexism is so damaging -- not just to women, but to men as well. She told host Ricky Camilleri:

"Sexism hurts everyone. It hurts men in the fact that a lot of men are put in this position where the only way they know how to bond with each other is through racism or sexism or homophobia. And they don't know how to actually have real friendships. And I think that can be similar with women. The only way that they know how to bond with each other is through this viscousness towards other women and towards other groups of people that are different than themselves."'

---
*http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Kathleen_Hanna

Bride spoke of killing parents before pushing husband off cliff: prosecutors

Matt · 27 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(Reuters) - A Montana bride accused of killing her new husband by pushing him off a cliff at Glacier National Park had spoken of killing her mother and stepfather in the weeks before her June wedding, federal prosecutors said in legal documents.

U.S. prosecutors say 22-year-old Jordan Graham was unhappy in her new marriage and deliberately shoved her husband of eight days off a rock ledge during an argument while hiking a steep trail on July 7.

She was indicted last month on charges of first- and second-degree murder in the death of Cody Johnson, 25. Her attorneys have said his death was an accident.

Prosecutors, in filings in U.S. District Court in Missoula, said they plan to produce evidence at next month's trial that Graham made statements about killing her mother and stepfather about five weeks before Johnson plunged to his death.'

Woman mistakes daughter for boyfriend and kills her

Mastodon · 27 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Winter Haven, Fla., mom is accused of shooting and killing her daughter while the girl held her 4-month-old daughter in her arms.

The Orlando Sentinel reports that Adele Bing, 52, told police she shot her daughter in a case of mistaken identity and that authorities should lock her up "for good" according to an arrest report.

Ruby Bing went to her mom's house on Monday night. Adele Bing told authorities her 26-year-old daughter was banging and kicking her door. Bing thought the person at the door was her boyfriend, whom she had just had a fight with. Bing armed herself with a .22 caliber gun, opened the door and shot her daughter in the chest, authorities said.'

CNN Op-Ed Says College Men Need Text-Message Proof They Didn't Rape

Mastodon · 27 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'College men should have their sexual partners send them a text message before they get down to business to avoid a false rape charge, according to Roxanne Jones, a former vice president at ESPN.

Jones offered this bit of advice in an op-ed published by CNN Tuesday, in which she focuses on combating "stupid girls" and discloses that she gave her son 300 condoms when he went off to college.

Jones writes:

"Never have sex with a girl unless she's sent you a text that proves the sexual relationship is consensual beforehand. And it's a good idea to even follow up any sexual encounter with a tasteful text message saying how you both enjoyed being with one another -- even if you never plan on hooking up again.

Crazy, I know, but I've actually been encouraging my son and his friends to use sexting -- minus the lewd photos -- to protect themselves from being wrongly accused of rape. Because just as damning text messages and Facebook posts helped convict the high-schoolers in Steubenville of rape, technology can also be used to prove innocence."

Movember declared ‘sexist, racist, transphobic’ at Canada’s sorry imitation of Harvard

Mastodon · 27 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The health and education editor of the student newspaper at one of Canada’s most prestigious universities has advised the world that Movember — the month-long pledge by men to grow hair above the upper lip to support men’s health awareness — is “sexist, racist, transphobic, and misinformed.”

In his 1,120-word essay in The McGill Daily, Ralph Haddad calls “the idea of suggesting that men show solidarity with each other by growing moustaches” to raise awareness about prostate cancer and other issues “completely absurd.”
...
The English and cultural studies major argues that Movember “implies an archaic view of gender that implies that only a male/female gender binary exists, and that you aren’t really a man if you don’t necessarily identify with that binary.”

He asks: “How are people who do not identify with that binary and have a prostate supposed to partake in this cause?”

Haddad claims Movember is also racist because black males are “twice as likely to develop” prostate cancer than white males yet most people celebrating Movember are white. Somehow, this is apparently racist.'

Duke Rape Accuser Got 160 TV News Stories on Accusation, 3 on Murder Conviction

Mastodon · 28 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Crystal Mangum falsely accused several Duke lacrosse players of rape in 2006, there were 160 television news stories in the first five days after the players were arrested, but in 2013, when Mangum was convicted of murder and sentenced to 14 years in prison, there were only 3 television news stories, a difference in coverage of 5,233%.
...
Although the rape claims by Mangum were totally false, she was not charged with a crime.
...
Those 160 television news outlets included ABC's World News Tonight, Nightline, Good Morning America, the CBS Evening News, the Today show, NBC Nightly News, CNN Live, Fox News, MSNBC's Scarborough Country and Countdown, and myriad other TV news programs.'

Will France fine the john or punish the prostitute?

Mastodon · 28 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to sexual matters, the French tend to be much more liberal and close-lipped than their American peers. Here, it is largely considered a private concern.

But lately, sex has taken center stage of French public debate, splashed across editorials and magazine covers and featured on television news programs, as French lawmakers this week debate whether to penalize clients who pay for prostitutes.

A wide range of critics disagree with the plan, from Medecins du Monde (Doctors of the World), which says that penalizing the client will only push prostitution further "underground," to a group of influential writers and other personalities who balk at the government legislating what they do in the bedroom.
...
"For the first time in history we are tackling prostitution on the right side of the problem, which is the client," says Anne-Cecile Mailfert, the spokesperson for Osez Le Feminisme, or "Dare to be a Feminist."
...
Prostitution itself is not illegal in France – although various aspects of it are, such as pimping or soliciting underage women. The new law would add an extra punishment that places the burden on clients, fining them some $2,000 for their acts, a sum that would double if they are caught again. It would also give aid to vulnerable women, particularly foreigners who are trafficked into France and have no papers. The government counts between 20,000 and 40,000 prostitutes in France.

Maud Olivier, the socialist lawmaker who co-wrote the bill, told the French daily Le Monde that the point is to make clients aware that they are participating in the sexual exploitation of prostituted persons, which does not respect the fundamental human rights of France.
...
And well-known feminist Elisabeth Badinter argues in Le Monde that "the state has no place legislating on individual sexual activity." She went on to say that the bill itself is incoherent and unjust, since France authorizes women to prostitute themselves but prohibits men from using them.'

By law, Swedish men are 2nd class citizens

Mastodon · 28 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On December 20, on AVfM Radio Program, a caller said that men and women are treated more equally in Europe and mentioned Sweden and Switzerland as the prominent examples.

Although I am sure that it was not the caller's intention to spread disinformation, at least as far as Sweden is concerned, I beg to differ on that statement big time.

As a Swedish speaker and a connoisseur of the misandric matriarchal society of the gender utopia called Sweden, I took the liberty to look through the Swedish laws and translate some of them in order to make the readers get an idea of how it is to be a man in Sweden.

The rule of law implies that every citizen is subject to the law, in contrast to the idea that the ruler is above the law, like by divine grace or right (like in Denmark, Spain, etc.). So, in theory, it should not matter whether you are a king .., because, at the end of the day, if you break the law you are still being held accountable.
...
But in reality, men are discriminated against in Sweden since the laws are written. They are not even pretending otherwise.

Let's analyze some of the Swedish laws.'

Former Titans Cheerleader Receives No Jail Time For Sexually Assaulting a 12-year-old boy

Mastodon · 28 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A former NFL cheerleader accused of sexually assaulting a 12-year-old boy in his Murfreesboro home received probation Monday as part of pleading no contest to a reduced charge of felony reckless endangerment.

Elizabeth Leigh Garner, 42, who cheered for the Tennessee Titans in 2005, 2006 and 2008, received 18 months probation and a $500 fine when she appeared in court in October.

She was originally charged on March 14 with aggravated sexual battery and solicitation of a minor for rape of a child, according to her arrest report.

As a condition of Gardner's probation, she is required to attend Narcotics Anonymous or Alcoholics Anonymous twice a week, have no contact with the victim and his family, and submit to drug testing.'

Husbands in the UK 'must admit they watch porn' to their wives, UK Prime Minister David Cameron says

Mastodon · 28 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Husbands who secretly watch Internet porn will have to confess to their wives when new family filters come in, UK Prime Minister David Cameron says.

From next year people will have to opt in if they want their Internet service provider to allow them access to pornography at home.

Asked by BBC Radio what that would mean for those who may access such content without their partner knowing, Mr Cameron said they were "going to have to have a discussion" about their surfing habits.

President Barack Obama is closely watching Britain's moves to block abusive images from being seen, and to track down those responsible for making them.'

"Why women still need husbands"

Mastodon · 28 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In time, “never depend on a man” turned into the full-blown belief that men are superfluous. In 2010 Jennifer Aniston claimed women needn’t “fiddle with a man” to have a child.

This may strike you as an isolated case of stupidity, but Aniston’s willingness to put it out there speaks volumes about modern cultural attitudes. No actress would have said such a thing in the 70s, 80s, or even early 90s.

Fortunately, most women come to the realization that they do, in fact, need a man—at least if they want a family.
...
This is the conclusion to which most women have come. Research shows that what women want more than anything else is not to work full-time and year-round but to live balanced lives.

How will they do it? That’s the number-one conversation among women today.

... The answer is obvious.

Lean on your husband.
...
I know what you’re going to say. Where are these husbands on whom women can depend? And you’re right: there are fewer men these days who seem eager to be primary breadwinners.

But ask yourself why, and I bet you know the answer.'

The Knockout Game -- NYT/NPR Say No Big Deal

Matt · 28 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The "knockout game" -- and the media underreporting of it -- combines the breakdown of the family with the media's condescending determination to serve as a public relations bureau for blacks. The "game" is a dare in which a young man -- all the perps appear to be male people of color, mostly blacks -- tries to literally knock out an innocent bystander with one blow. Both National Public Radio and The New York Times say these reports of the "knockout game" being widespread are overblown and do not represent a trend. Really?
...
So why is this happening? Look to the family.

As then-presidential candidate Sen. Barack Obama told a mostly black congregation: "Children who grow up without a father are five times more likely to live in poverty and commit crime; nine times more likely to drop out of schools and 20 times more likely to end up in prison. They are more likely to have behavioral problems or run away from home or become teenage parents themselves. And the foundations of our community are weaker because of it." In 1960, only 5 percent of children were born into single-parent households. Today it's 40 percent, with nearly 75 percent of black children born to single mothers.

"Dear Father, Dear Son," my latest book, is about the importance of fathers -- even gruff, tough ones like my Marine dad who was raised in Jim Crow South -- in instilling the values of right and wrong, and of empathy for others. Kids from homes with good values don't go around knocking people out.'

About the article's author: http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Larry_Elder

Happy Thanksgiving (this year, maybe "Thanksgivukkah")

Matt · 28 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

A very happy Thanksgiving to MANN readers and their friends and family! Especially, thoughts go out to parents (these are of course mostly fathers) who can't be with their kids today for whatever reasons, be they court-related or not.

Some of the low-down on how this came to be a national holiday in the US is found here. Be prepared to have a few long-held beliefs tossed out.

Also, in case you didn't know, today is the very rare convergence of T-giving and Hannukkah, hence "Thanksgivukkah". Extra Hannukkah gelt for those good kids who finish their turkey, maybe? :)

One in 500 Newborn Boys Experience Acute Complications From Circumcision

Matt · 28 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Doctors in America are usually circumcised or married to men who are circumcised. They have little experience with normal, intact, healthy penises. They also are often ill informed about the risks of the procedure.

“What did they do to you?” a Scandinavian woman asked an American man while they were making love. She was upset that part of his penis had been amputated. Taking off the foreskin deprives the penis of both length and width. The foreskin protects the glans of the penis, keeping it moist and sensitive. A circumcised penis has a head that has hardened (“keratinized” is the medical word for this). She couldn’t believe it when her American lover told her that circumcision was considered normal in the United States.

...

So it is no wonder that Maggie Rhode, an African American mom from Memphis, Tennessee, thought she was bringing her 3-month-old son in for a safe operation in August. The circumcision at Christ Community Health Center, the doctors told her, would take only 20 minutes.

Instead it lasted three hours. Not only did the doctors botch the circumcision, they handed Rhode her son, who was screaming in pain, without telling her that anything had gone wrong.

“After I went home and I discovered that my son’s penis was not there, I immediately froze, like, oh my God,” Rhode, who is speaking publicly about what happened to Baby Ashton, told My Fox Memphis. Ashton went to the doctor with healthy genitalia, now he has a partial penis. He urinates through a hole in his penis and screams in agony, his mom said.

Complications from circumcision, though rarely this extreme, are more common than parents realize.

One in 500 boys will experience acute complications from circumcision, according to the American Academy of Pediatrics, and that is probably a conservative estimate.

...

An infant in Sacramento, California, Brayden Tyler Frazier, died after complications from a circumcision in March 2013.

The year before another infant died after contracting herpes from a Rabbi who sucked on his penis as part of a religious rite.

My friend’s son’s penis has adhesions due to a botched circumcision. They irritate him and cause ongoing bleeding. Five years old, he cries when he gets an erection.

I found out a close family member suffered a circumcision complication that has embarrassed him his entire life.

“[C]omplications of circumcision do represent a significant percentage of cases seen by pediatric urologists,” reports this article in the Scientific World Journal. “Often they require surgical correction that results in a significant cost to the health care system.”'

Tech firms now hiring more women than men

Mastodon · 29 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over the last 12 months, the tech industry added 60,000 jobs, and 36,000 -- or 60% -- of those positions went to women, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Usually, men make up 70% to 80% of the new hires, but according to the BLS, the tide seems to have turned in the last year.

"Overall, it's a surprise to see there's a sudden increase, and obviously, it's too soon to know if a few months is a trend," said Shravan Goli, president of Dice.com. "There's been so much awareness building and activity from companies to pursue diversity, plus you've got the Sheryl Sandbergs and Marissa Mayers of the world -- I think all of that is starting to result in increased awareness and an attraction toward technology roles for women more than ever before."'

Men’s overtime hours are keeping the gender pay gap alive

Mastodon · 29 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One reason men make more money than women is because they work so much overtime.

The gender gap in pay persists due to the fact that men are more likely than women to work 50 hours-plus a week, found a recent study (pdf) published by the American Sociological Review. The extra hours—known as “overwork”—result, on average, in an extra 6% in hourly wages across all occupations. This difference has exacerbated the gender pay gap by around 10%, the study claims.

In 2000, 19% of men worked 50 hours or more per week, compared to 7% of women. The researchers suggested that women are less likely both to enter a job that demands overworking and to stay in it. And despite moves toward equality, women still tend to be more responsible than men for housework and childcare—hours that hardly count on the job but make them plenty overworked, too.'

Also see this article.

European Parliament Backs Quotas for Women in Non-Executive Board Seats

Mastodon · 29 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Listed companies in the European Union must work toward a 40 percent quota for women in non-executive board positions by the year 2020, according to legislation approved by European Parliament last week.
...
According to parliament's figures, only 17.6 percent of non-executive board member seats are held by women in 2013. Under the new rule, listed companies must take effective and binding steps to ensure equal access to non-executive board positions. While qualifications and merit remain the primary criteria, preference must go to the woman candidate when candidates of equal qualifications are presented.'

Sheriff's department may change hiring tests to increase diversity

Mastodon · 29 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Brown County Sheriff's Department may tweak its hiring process in hopes of attracting more women and minority officers.

...

The agency's assessment could prompt changes to the physical agility test. Dozens of female applicants have failed the test due to a lack of upper-body strength, Sanborn said.

...

Madson is aware some women have trouble passing physical agility tests, and said NWTC offers all academy students a course on fitness and will help them prepare for tests, which can include climbing a 5-foot wall.'

It cuts both ways: A Jew argues for child rights over religious circumcision

Matt · 29 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So, who's right? Those who say censuring circumcision is a manifestation of anti-Semitism, or those who say it's a necessary step in child protection?

I think the latter are right, but I also understand why some think it's anti-Semitic: Circumcision is a profoundly meaningful Jewish practice imbued with great cultural value. Consequently, attempts to limit it have sometimes been part of broader efforts to suppress Jewish practice. ...
...
Understandably, this has left its imprint on Jews' collective memory. It makes sense that the journalist Tanya Gold asked whether the recent motion is "an attempt to achieve with paper what other methods could not – the removal of Jews from Europe?"

These are grave concerns. But do they stand up to scrutiny? It seems ethnocentric given that two thirds of the world's circumcised males are actually Muslims and only 0.8 percent are Jewish. ...

Rather than prejudice against religion, I think it makes more sense to interpret criticism of circumcision as the consistent application of human rights to both boys and girls. ...

It's true that censuring circumcision could curtail the expression of an until-now definitional Jewish practice. But the right to manifest one's religion is not absolute – it is limited by the harm caused to others. In 2011, 11 boys under the age of one were treated for life-threatening hemorrhage, shock or sepsis relating to circumcision in Birmingham Children's Hospital in the United Kingdom. In the United States, it's estimated that 100 boys die as a result of circumcisions every year. Can religion per se justify this?

Supporters of circumcision also say it's an ancient, meaningful practice. But neither longevity nor meaning is usually accepted as sufficient moral justification to override individual rights. As one Orthodox Jewish father, Elie Jesner, puts it, "Mankind has been doing horrendous things for thousands of years: slavery, capital punishment, condemning homosexuals, oppressing women. That is not a club of actions I want to be part of."

From a Jewish perspective, there are other issues. First, circumcision does not confer Jewish status. As Shaye Cohen, professor of Hebrew literature and philosophy at Harvard University, explains, "Male and female offspring of a Jewish mother are Jewish by birth under Jewish law; the male offspring are Jewish by birth even if they are left uncircumcised." Second, biblical circumcision was not as extensive as today's variant, which is actually an innovation of rabbis in the Hellenic period trying to stop Jewish men from restoring their foreskins. Evidently, definitional Jewish practices can and have evolved.'

Professor demands ‘rape culture’ investigation over satirical article

Mastodon · 30 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A professor at the University of Alaska Fairbanks is demanding an independent investigation about two complaints she filed alleging sexual harassment by the school’s student newspaper.

The first article appeared in The Sun Star, the campus rag, on April 1, 2013. The April Fool’s Day piece heralded the construction of the “Kameel Toi Henderson Building,” which is “a new building in the shape of a vagina.”

The satirical piece suggested that the building would be a tribute to “UAF’s 59 percent female demographic.” “Courses such as Home Economics, House Cleaning 101 and the Perils of Feminism will be offered each semester.”

...

School officials also concluded that the article did not create a hostile environment on campus and does “not meet the definition of sexual harassment.” They further noted that the piece is protected under the First Amendment of the U.S. Constitution.

The Sun Star journalist who wrote the April Fool’s piece, Lakeidra Chavis, noted that her goal was to poke fun at the number of buildings at UAF shaped at least vaguely like penises.

...

Lakeidra Chavis is a female, according to her Facebook page.

A few days after filing her complaint about the April Fool’s Day piece, Anahita filed a second complaint. This one alleged “hate speech” and another hostile environment in a different Sun Star article about the UAF Confessions Facebook page.

Chavis noted that the newspaper did nothing illegal when it published screenshots of the Facebook page and reported on what was in it.

“It was a public Facebook page,” she said.

School officials again concluded that the newspaper did nothing wrong.

In at least one of the complaints, Anahita bizarrely charged that The Sun Star had violated Title IX, a federal law intended to thwart sex discrimination in schools. School officials determined that Title IX doesn’t apply to school newspaper articles.

...

The Poynter Institute notes that Anahita has some history of trouble with the student newspaper. In 2010, for example, the gender studies professor dispatched the manager of UAF’s women’s center to the offices of the paper after a photographer took pictures at a panel discussion in defiance of a request for privacy.

Anahita refuses to comment on the fracas she has created.'

Facebook: "Recovering Feminist Support Network"

Matt · 30 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

A MANN reader alerted us to this Facebook page:

https://www.facebook.com/pages/Recovering-Feminist-Support-Network/465210383598375

To make it easier to share around, this is the TinyURL re-direct link for the site page:

http://tinyurl.com/RecovFemSupptNetOnFbook

'Preferred' pronouns gain traction at US colleges

Matt · 30 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — The weekly meetings of Mouthing Off!, a group for students at Mills College in Oakland, Calif., who identify as gay, lesbian, bisexual or transgender, always start the same way. Members take turns going around the room saying their names and the personal pronouns they want others to use when referring to them — she, he or something else.

It's an exercise that might seem superfluous given that Mills, a small and leafy liberal arts school historically referred to as the Vassar of the West, only admits women as undergraduates. Yet increasingly, the "shes" and "hers" that dominate the introductions are keeping third-person company with "they," "ze" and other neutral alternatives meant to convey a more generous notion of gender.

"Because I go to an all-women's college, a lot of people are like, 'If you don't identify as a woman, how did you get in?'" said sophomore Skylar Crownover, 19, who is president of Mouthing Off! and prefers to be mentioned as a singular they, but also answers to he. "I just tell them the application asks you to mark your sex and I did. It didn't ask me for my gender."

On high school and college campuses and in certain political and social media circles, the growing visibility of a small, but semantically committed cadre of young people who, like Crownover, self-identify as "genderqueer" — neither male nor female but an androgynous hybrid or rejection of both — is challenging anew the limits of Western comprehension and the English language.'

Interview Q/A document

Matt · 30 November 2013 · Archived copy · Original

About a month ago, MANN was contacted by a college student requesting responses to a number of questions pertaining to the MR movement. Having written the reply and sending it back last month, I decided today to upload it to FileDropper and make it available for general review. Feel free to use some or part of it any way you see fit, if you think it worthwhile. In addition, if you think there is anything in it worth discussing, refuting, etc., please post in the comments. I like feedback, whether it be agreement or disagreement; I always learn something from it whether I concur or not. The document is here. Be sure to click the grey "Download This File" graphic under the "URL:" and "Embed:" boxes. (Clicking the green "DOWNLOAD" button will take you to another site that tries to get you to download some sponsored trialware.) You then have to type in the prove-you're-human characters, click "Download Now", and the file download box will appear. The questions include:

1. What are the focal topics of MensActivism?
2. Do you feel women do not have equal rights/are discriminated against in any way (in modern-day American society)?
3. Do you feel men do not have equal rights/are discriminated against in any way (in modern-day American society)?
4. What are your thoughts on feminism?
5. What laws exist that are discriminatory to men?
6. What is your perspective on the wage gap?
7. In what instances have you witnessed gender discrimination of either or both genders?
8. Do you believe that the double standards held by modern society should be removed? If yes, please explain which double standards.
9. Have you been a victim of gender discrimination? If so, may I ask about the details of this incident?
10. Which conflicts between feminism and the men's movement are avoidable, and which are bound to happen. Is there a way for them to coexist?
11. Since a lot of discrimination is not visible unless you're looking for it, how do you know where to look?
12. Do you feel male victims of domestic violence in the US are discriminated against because they are male?
13. Do you feel men and boys are targeted by perpetrators as victims of domestic violence or political violence because of their gender?
14. Do you consider men or women “privileged” in any way in regards to their gender?
15. In what ways can people work to end gender discrimination?

Canada: Soldier suicides raise concerns about mental-health services in the military

fathers4fairness · 1 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'OTTAWA — The government's ability to help soldiers with mental illness came under scrutiny for a second day after three Canadian Forces members apparently committed suicide this week.

Opposition parties targeted the Conservative government in question period Friday over whether it's doing enough to help struggling current and former soldiers.

NDP veterans affairs critic Peter Stoffer said he hopes the investigations into the deaths — launched as part of regular procedure — would be completed soon.

It can take up to five years to complete an investigation, although the military says results are often released after a year.

"That's far too long. They should be able to work with these families very, very quickly to determine what happened and what can be done to prevent these in the future," Stoffer said.
...
Military ombudsman Pierre Daigle is taking a fifth look at the issue — this time focusing on reservists — following up on a series of critical reports dating back to 2002.

The ombudsman's office noted the government made improvements and investments into the services it offers, but is still falling short.

Among the systematic problems are front-line mental-health workers struggling with too much work under difficult conditions.

Military statistics gathered between 1995 and 2009 show that every five years, about 50 active personnel commit suicide — a lower rate than the general population. Those numbers don't include reservists.

The suicide rate among veterans is 1 1/2 times that of the general population, according to Statistics Canada.'

Database of scholarships for men now open

TCM · 1 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Database here. Excerpt:

'Welcome to the database of college and university scholarships for men. It has been added under the “Help & Protection” menu above.

Although this database is incomplete, it is the most comprehensive and transparent list of such scholarships you will find anywhere. In light of this, I hope you’ll forgive the rather simple structure of the database for the present. As this site receives periodic upgrades, so too will this database.'

Gloria Steinem Represents the Worst of Modern Feminism

Mastodon · 2 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How does Steinem represent modern feminism's worst features? Let me count the ways.

Dogmatic denial of sex differences.

...

In 1997, interviewed for John Stossel's ABC News special, "Boys and Girls Are Different: Men, Women and the Sex Difference," Steinem derided scientific research on sex differences in brain functioning as "anti-American crazy thinking." She also suggested that upper-body strength tests requiring firefighters to lift heavy loads were sexist. What about situations when firefighters have to carry injured or unconscious people out of burning buildings? Steinem insisted, with a straight face, that it was better to drag them, since "there's less smoke down there." ...

...

Fixation on male villainy.

...

In her 1992 book, Revolution from Within: A Book of Self-Esteem, Steinem writes, "The most dangerous situation for a woman is not an unknown man in the street, or even the enemy in wartime, but a husband or lover in the isolation of their own home." She has also touted the long-discredited notion of a long prehistoric period of peaceful, benevolent, egalitarian "gynocentric" societies later displaced by violent, oppressive male rule.

Junk scholarship.

...

Thus, in a 1993 speech at Salem State College, Steinem rehashed not only the matriarchy theory but the myth that the witch-hunts in Europe were an effort to exterminate still-existing pagan religion and killed as many as nine million women. She also spun a fanciful "revisionist" history of Joan of Arc as a pagan worshipper who led French armies to victory but was executed as a witch once the war was won because she had grown too powerful.

...

Misinformation. Steinem's dissemination of faux facts is not limited to distant history. In Revolution from Within, she asserts that 150,000 women and girls in the United States die from anorexia every year -- multiplying the actual number by about 1,000. ...

...

The victimhood cult. In Steinem's case, the fixation on the sexual victimization of women and girls has led the activist into some strange places, such as the active promotion of "recovered memories" of sexual abuse. ...

...

Contempt for freedom of speech. Steinem was largely responsible for the women's movement's embrace of the divisive anti-pornography crusade; but her pro-censorship streak also extends to political expression. ...

...

Knee-jerk partisanship. Steinem's solidarity with women stops at the party line. In 1993, she flew to Texas to campaign against then-Senate candidate Kay Bailey Hutchison, a moderate pro-choice Republican, and slammed her as "a female impersonator." ...'

Boys take to reading - when it's on an iPad

Mastodon · 2 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Technology is helping to boost the appeal of reading for young boys, and they're getting smarter because of it, new research has found.

Primary school-aged boys with little interest in reading are finding that using iPads and netbooks in the classroom adds a touch of competition and fun.

Massey University researcher Jenny Poskitt studied two year 4 classes and two year 5 and 6 classes in Palmerston North this year to measure pupils' reading comprehension when using technology.

She said boys aged 10 and 11 made gains in their reading ability of six times the nationally expected average when using the devices.'

'The good, the bad, and the jelly'

Mastodon · 2 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I feel exceedingly intimidated stepping onto the tintack-strewn floor that is feminist debate in Cambridge today. This is not due to the complex nature of feminist issues, although that does of course raise a few challenges, but rather because of the hostility and anger which now surrounds them. Nevertheless, the perception of the CUSU Women's Campaign amongst students raises important questions which need to be addressed. Barefoot, I will attempt to wander through.

With a new wave of feminism breaking across some of the most important social and political topics of the moment, the Women's Campaign should be more popular than it has been for a long time. Despite this, when questioning some undergraduates for their thoughts on it, I was presented with a catalogue of looks of either total indifference or outright disdain.
...
Although very much a feminist, I feel incredibly conflicted when it comes to the Women's Campaign in Cambridge. I am only too ready to herald it as a super-power of Good through which we can fight forces of Evil and secure gender equality. In reality, I am often left dispirited and isolated by it.
...
This brings me to the exclusion of men from the Women's Campaign. It is indeed important for women's campaigns to be run by women, but this must not involve an 'us and them' attitude towards the opposite sex when what we are ultimately striving for is gender equality. Banning men from attending the CUSU campaign's bi-weekly meetings surely creates a monologue where there should be a dialogue.

On the Campaign's Facebook page, in a side list of posting rules, it is written: "0. [So important it is before point one.] THIS IS A WOMEN'S SPACE. Respect women's experience, respect women's lived experience, respect women's voices. Men are welcome to read and to listen, but if you decide to engage please keep your male privilege in check."'

Male contraceptive pill 'a step closer'

Matt · 2 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A male contraceptive pill has been the holy grail of fertility scientists, but one that has proved frustratingly elusive.

Compared with developing a female pill, designing a male version is a far more difficult process. Most approaches have relied on hormonal targets or rendering sperm dysfunctional. One major problem is ensuring that every one of the millions of sperm cells produced by a man is stopped from carrying out its job of fertilising the female egg, because it takes only one sperm to produce a baby.

...

The mice appeared normal and did not suffer any side-effects that would make such a treatment unthinkable for humans. They were also able to father normal offspring, after having sperm extracted from their testes and injected into female eggs.

Adrenoceptor-blocking drugs are already in widespread use as treatments for benign prostate hyperplasia (BPH) – non-cancerous prostate enlargement – and high blood pressure, the researchers pointed out.

"Development of only a suitable P2X1-purinoceptor antagonist [blocker] is required before this pharmacological strategy for male contraception can be trialled," they added.'

A woman's right to move

el cid · 3 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The story involves a pregnant woman who moved to New York from California and asked a New York judge to grant her sole custody of the child. The judge refused and sent the matter back to California, where custody of the child was given to the father. The woman who wrote the article claims this is taking fathers' rights "way too far, to the point of dangerousness." Excerpt:

'Here's one I haven't heard before: A woman gets pregnant in California by a famous athlete she is casually dating, decides to go to college in New York — tuition paid by the GI Bill — and after she moves there, before the baby is born, gets blasted by a New York judge for "her appropriation of the child while in utero," which the judge calls "irresponsible" and "reprehensible."

I understand that fathers have rights, and I'm all for that. But this ruling took those rights way too far, to the point of dangerousness. It treated a fetus as a child, for purposes of a custody battle. And in doing so, it threatened to limit the rights of a pregnant woman to move and travel.

A New York appeals court has already overturned the ridiculous initial judicial order in this fight between Sara McKenna, 27, a former Marine and firefighter now attending Columbia University, and Bode Miller, 36, an Olympic skier. But the case isn't over, and it's the latest fascinating entry in a series of legal challenges by fathers to traditional assumptions about parental rights and child custody. The old legal problem for single mothers was deadbeat dads. The new one is fathers who are so eager to assert themselves that they run roughshod over women's rights. As the adults clash, sometimes it even becomes hard to consider the child at the center.'

The Problem With Gender Quotas

Mastodon · 3 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nearly every day, an article pops up on Twitter stating, “We need more women to become [fill in the blank].” From engineers to CEOs, writers to philosophers, women are told there is such-and-such a position they must fill in order to bring balance to the galaxy. To further this goal, Germany has created a new plan:
...
To put it simply: these articles argue that there are no differences between men and women as such. They believe men and women only differentiate on an individual basis. But if this is true, one shouldn’t need gender quotas to help promote a “missing” element.

Now, if women are truly being discriminated against, then this is a problem. If women were failing the bar exam because of a discriminatory system, or if a company refused to hire women CEO’s simply because of their gender, it would be a serious problem. But this seems better remedied on a case-by-case basis than through a statewide quota.

Germany is a democratic country. If women aren’t vying for certain company positions, might it be because some don’t actually want those positions? According to Katrin Bennhold, that’s the problem: in a 2011 New York Times story, she said gender stereotypes (specifically, “the mother myth”) perpetuated throughout Germany’s history have deceived the female populace. She quotes Angelika Dammann, the “first and only female board member at software giant SAP”: “We are still very far from a situation where it’s as normal for women as for men to want both a career and family—even among young women. When you have children, you’re expected to stay home for a significant period; otherwise you are considered a bad mother.”'

Australia: Which jobs are becoming women-only?

Mastodon · 3 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you are a man at a senior level in marketing, public relations or human resources, hang onto your job like grim death. You may not get another one.

These jobs are fast becoming women-only.

Companies that have blithely operated as a boy's club at senior levels are coming under intense pressure to promote some women – but rather than doing the hard work to change blokey cultures, they are using a "quick and dirty" approach.
By hiring only women into the top roles in the traditionally female-dominated areas of marketing, HR and PR, they make an immediate impact on their gender balance performances.

You can understand why they are doing it, and achieving gender equity is complex and difficult stuff, but this approach is not helpful for a number of reasons.'

Australia: Clinical Research Fellowship - Testosterone for the Prevention of Type 2 Diabetes Mellitus, Adelaide Uni

Minuteman · 3 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'We seek a registered medical practitioner interested in acquiring or further developing clinical research skills. An opportunity exists to enrol for a higher degree and/or obtain clinical experience in a relevant specialty.

In this role you will participate in the screening, enrolment and supervision of participants in the NHMRC funded "Trial of Testosterone for the Prevention of Type 2 Diabetes Mellitus in at Risk Men (T4DM)". This trial will determine whether testosterone treatment, in addition to a lifestyle modification program, prevents progression of pre-diabetes to diabetes in overweight or obese men over the age of 50 years and with relatively low testosterone levels.

You will work in collaboration with other personnel involved in this trial, including the Clinical Trial Coordinator, and Chief Investigators.

Position Requirements

You should have:

A Medical degree;
Registration with the Medical Board of Australia.'

Petition: Don't Export Discrimination Against Male and LGBT Victims of Domestic Violence

DGAgainstDV · 3 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here.

Domestic violence is a problem throughout the world. A bill known as the International Violence Against Women Act (I-VAWA) has been introduced in Congress to combat domestic violence in other countries. But the bill is deeply flawed because it assumes that all abuse is male-on-female and ignores both men abused by women and LGBT victims. If the bill were to pass, large classes of victims would be silenced and denied access to services.

The Partner Abuse State of Knowledge Project (PASK) has looked at domestic violence in 85 countries around the world and that found men and women were equally likely to be abuse perpetrators in most cases. PASK also found that LGBT couples were at increased risk of domestic violence.

In order to stop domestic violence, it is crucial that our approach be based on sound science, not politically correct ideology. I-VAWA ignores the results of scientific research and the existence of large classes of victims. Please join us in calling on members of Congress to vote 'No' on the International Violence Against Women Act.

The hardwired difference between male and female brains could explain why men are 'better at map reading'

Matt · 3 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A pioneering study has shown for the first time that the brains of men and women are wired up differently which could explain some of the stereotypical differences in male and female behaviour, scientists have said.

Researchers found that many of the connections in a typical male brain run between the front and the back of the same side of the brain, whereas in women the connections are more likely to run from side to side between the left and right hemispheres of the brain.

This difference in the way the nerve connections in the brain are “hardwired” occurs during adolescence when many of the secondary sexual characteristics such as facial hair in men and breasts in women develop under the influence of sex hormones, the study found.

The researchers believe the physical differences between the two sexes in the way the brain is hardwired could play an important role in understanding why men are in general better at spatial tasks involving muscle control while women are better at verbal tasks involving memory and intuition.'

SAVE E-lert: Help Us Keep the Reform Train Moving

Matt · 3 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Today is #Giving Tuesday, a day when persons donate to the causes they find worthy. We hope SAVE is on your list. Let's take a look at our recent accomplishments.

SAVE had some successful campaigns this year. After we visited KFC restaurants complaining about their Hot Shot Bite commercial, they were so embarrassed they removed the video from their own website.

After we asked that Asst. DA Mary Kellett be investigated for her handling of Vladek Filler's case in Maine, she was found guilty of prosecutor misconduct.

This year SAVE established the Center for Prosecutor Integrity. We hired four law student interns, and have established the first ever registry of prosecutor misconduct.

In June, we had our annual conference in Washington, DC on false allegations. The reviews were fabulous. We keep awareness up on false allgations and other issues with press releases and radio interviews.

One of our volunteers started a petition opposing the International Violence Against Women Act. You can sign it here.

We still have a long way to go. (See the mention of I-VAWA above.) Please consider donating to SAVE, so we can keep this Reform Train moving.

You can donate HERE.

Thank you, from the bottom of my heart.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Female CEO: White males aren't 'protected class' and therefore can't be harassed

Mastodon · 4 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

"New Day Midday looks at a female CEO that says white men can't be harassed." Video here. If you're using a non-Flash-supporting device, you can see the video on YouTube here. Also see this article. Excerpt:

'The female CEO of Archie Comics accused by five employees of being sexually inappropriate said she can't possibly be guilty of harassment, since the people lodging complaints against her are all white men.

Nancy Silberkleit's lawyer argues that a gender discrimination lawsuit filed against her earlier this year by a group of employees should be thrown out because white males aren't members of "a protected class," the New York Daily News reported.

The lawyers for the plaintiffs, who include Archie president Mike Pellerito and editor-in-chief Victor Gorelick, claim Miss Silberkleit used the word "penis" arbitrarily and frequently, often shouting it at business meetings.

"[T]he word 'penis' became somewhat of a campaign slogan and her preferred method of referring to employees in lieu of their names," their filing says, the Daily News reported.

The plaintiffs also claim Miss Silberkleit stalked employees and their families. They seek $32.5 million in damages and a court order keeping her two miles away from the office.'

Make fatherhood a man's choice

Matt · 4 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite all of this and in complete keeping with my deep-seated feminism, I believe that making fatherhood optional—as motherhood is—and revamping the child support system to stop requiring financial support from noncustodial parents (usually men) who want to opt out early is good for women, men, and the kids in question. In addition, we should further our support of women who choose to opt out of motherhood via abortion or adoption as well. It's time to make parenthood a true choice, on every level.

...

Additionally, lack of access to abortion doesn't mean we should be unfair to men. We need to stand by women's reproductive freedom, no matter what choice a woman makes. And a woman who wants a child needs to be prepared to support that child even if the biological father is not willing. I don't believe that we will ever have true reproductive autonomy until men are offered the option, as women are, to opt out. We will never have full reproductive autonomy if we continue to put an asterisk next to "my body, my choice" and add the footnote "but if I decide to have a baby, pal, you have to pay."'

Mom sues judge over 3-year custody battle

Matt · 4 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Less a story specific to MR but certainly tangentially relevant. Justice delayed is justice denied, and plenty of NCPs (almost all dads) know this from experience. The divorce/child custody mill is just far too easy for the wrong kind of people to exploit. Excerpt:

'A Manhattan mom is fed up with all the delays in her three-year child-custody battle — so she's suing the judge.

Public-relations exec Maggie Rhee Karn claims in her $10 million federal lawsuit that Manhattan Family Court Referee Marva Burnett has been stringing out the case for more than three years, costing the mom more than $200,000 in legal fees while allowing her ex-husband to control major decisions about their 9-year-old's schooling and religion.

...

Kenneth was given temporary custody after a court-appointed attorney for the child expressed concern to the judge that Maggie would relocate to a third apartment, according to a partial transcript.

"This is the worst case I've ever seen," said Lask, a veteran family-law attorney.

A Westchester dad fighting for custody of his 2-year-old son sued Burnett this past March, claiming she left a motion pending for 474 days.

Maggie has been in court 40-plus times since 2009, when she filed for full custody and her husband countersued to have his daughter half of the time.

...

"This case has never been about the best interest of my child, but appears to be a financial profit to everyone Referee Burnett appoints," Maggie wrote in a letter last February to Administrative Judge Edwina Richardson-Mendelson.

Kenneth's attorney, Cheryl Solomon, told The Post that Maggie is partly to blame. Solomon noted that the mother has switched counsel twice and filed appeals that have slowed down the process.'

NPO: Are the Connecticut Alimony Laws Constitutional?

Matt · 4 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here:

'That is the issue raised by four plaintiffs in a lawsuit challenging Connecticut alimony laws. In a suit entitled John Doe et al vs. Dannel P. Malloy filed in the United States District court for the district of Connecticut, the plaintiffs seek a Declaratory Judgment that the alimony laws violate the due process requirements of the 14th Amendment of the U.S. Constitution, and further seek an injunction against the enforcement of the laws.

As the lawsuit points out, nowhere in the statute is the purpose of alimony set forth. Without a purpose the application of the alimony laws becomes unpredictable, both in amount and length of the award, bordering on arbitrary and capricious.

The 38-page complaint recites the various historical and statutory basis for alimony. It points out that in today's equality based society, the award of alimony may be a historical anachronism, dating back to a time when women were excluded from the workplace, and generally expected to be stay-at-home mothers.'

Cops: Woman Shoots Husband in Drive-By

Matt · 4 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WARREN COUNTY, Miss. - Sheriff Martin Pace said a man took a bullet to the abdomen on Monday during a drive-by shooting. The trigger man was not a member of any gang, but rather, the man's estranged wife. 58-year-old Mary Lou Neeley is accused of driving by the house of her husband, Billy Neeley, on Deer Circle on Monday. The latter was reportedly in the driveway working on his car when Mary Lou drove by and shot her husband in the stomach, according to Pace.

The wounded man was able to call 911 and give authorities a description of the car and his estranged wife, whom he identified as the shooter.

"She pulled up to the residence where he was working on his vehicle. It's believed that at this time she actually fired the shots from within her vehicle. He was struck at least once in the abdomen," Pace said.'

Woman who faked cancer stands trial for false rape claim

Mastodon · 4 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman accused of faking cancer is standing trial for falsely claiming she was raped by two men.

Sara Ylen, 38, of Lexington, Michigan, has admitted using make-up to make it look like she had been attacked.

James Johnson, a retired detective sergeant for the Sanilac County Sheriff Department, gave evidence yesterday at St Clair County Court, in Michigan, and said he had never heard a victim provide so much detail when he interviewed her after the alleged assault.
...
James Grissom, who spent 10 years in jail after being convicted of raping Ylen in 2003, was also present in court yesterday.

Grissom was released in November 2012 after new evidence showed Ylen had made other accusations of rape.
...
She also faces fraud charges in Sanilac County following an investigation by Michigan State Police who investigated Ylen's cancer claims in May 2012 and discovered none of the doctors she listed had diagnosed her with cancer.

Her trial related to fake cancer claims begins on February 4.

The trial related to false rape claims continues today.'

UK: Schoolboy, 16, found dead after false rape rumour circulates

Mastodon · 4 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Tom Acton, 16, died in hospital three days after being found in a critical condition in his bedroom having self harmed with a blade just days before he was due to testify at the trial of one of his tormentors.

The rumour began circulating in the local area and on Facebook and resulted in mobs of angry youths targeting him in the street and turning up at the family's front door saying they wanted to kill him and "get rid of the vermin."

Tom, from Poynton, Cheshire went to live with his grandmother temporarily but after he returned was beaten up and grabbed by a teenager who shouted at him: "Apparently you strapped someone to a tree and raped them and took pictures. You are dead."

...

He described the bullying campaign mounted by one of Greenwood's friends saying: "He started rumours that I'd raped girls. It boils down to the fact that I got on better with girls and he didn't like it.

"There were rumours that I had tied a girl to a tree, raped her and took pictures. As you can imagine I can no longer walk down the street as everyone calls me a rapist.'

Laws should reflect domestic violence against men

Mastodon · 4 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'Democrat Assemblyman Reed Gusciora shows his socialist, tyrannical big government tendencies. His sponsoring of legislation for a domestic violence registry is typical of tyrants acting for the “best interests” of the people, despite U.S. Supreme Court rulings that “the state owes no duty to protect residents from each other.”

His domestic violence registry to protect women is a farce and a fraud. More than 40 percent of domestic violence occurs against men, but the state Legislature is run by radical feminists, who criminally extort all taxpayers’ monies to fund their suspect domestic abuse programs. This is discrimination, Equal Protection violations, and taxpayer fraud.

In many divorce cases, men are falsely arrested and removed from their homes and children on false domestic violence because judges and police claim they have to “err on the side of caution” — and don’t want to see their names in the newspapers if something goes wrong. But, how many women go to jail for perjury for making false domestic abuse claims? Zero.'

Relatedly, also see this letter.

Topless Feminist Mob Attacks Cathedral In Argentina

Mastodon · 5 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mob of pro-abortion feminists attacked a Catholic cathedral in San Juan, Argentina, assaulting the men who stood in front of it praying, and finally burning an effigy of Pope Francis.

Citing Argentinian news sources, LifeSite News reported that video footage had been taken of a mob of angry women, many of them topless, harassing the men who stood in front of the cathedral to protect it, reciting prayers. The men did not retaliate as the women drew Hitler mustaches on their faces with marker, spray painted their faces, clothes and crotch areas, and sexually harassed them.
...
Police were not on hand at the time. They reportedly told media they couldn't intervene because the protesters were women.

The incident took place on Nov. 24, Argentina's National Women's Encounter, held annually to bring together Argentinean feminists. It is sponsored by the Department of Culture as a social interest event.'

Also see stories here and here [NSFW due to pics of topless women].

Femen members urinate on Ukraine leader's photo in Paris

Mastodon · 5 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Topless women from the Femen feminist movement* [NSFW] on Sunday urinated on photos of Ukrainian President Viktor Yanukovych in Paris to condemn a crackdown on protesters angry about his rejection of a key EU deal.

Five women from the group gathered in front of the Ukrainian embassy in the morning, bared their breasts and then took off their knickers to defile the photographs they placed on the sidewalk.

The slogan "Yanukovych piss off!" was painted on their torsos. They then left and there were no arrests.

The protest came after policemen armed with truncheons broke up a 1,000-strong protest in Kiev on Saturday calling for Yanukovych's resignation after he suspended work on a trade and partnership agreement with the European Union that had been years in the making.
...
Femen is a Ukrainian group whose members have drawn attention worldwide with nude stunts targeting a range of political and religious figures, including Italy's Silvio Berlusconi and Putin.'

---
* Link added. Note there are a few NSFW pics on the home page showing topless women with various messages painted on them.

Woman charged in alleged rapist's death

Matt · 5 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

'Charged with a felony murder count, Norma Patricia Esparza says she played no part in the killing of her alleged rapist.'

A story dated Nov. 23, 2013 also discusses the case. Excerpt:

'She was charged with one felony count of special circumstances murder, which carries a lifetime sentence without the possibility of parole. Her ex-boyfriend, Gianni Anthony Van and two others, Shannon Gries and Diane Tran, have also been charged. They have all pleaded not guilty.
...
Esparza claims she met Ramirez at a Santa Ana nightclub in March 1995 and the next morning he asked her to breakfast along with her sister and a school friend. After he drove her and her friend back to school, she says Ramirez raped her in her dorm room. Esparza, who was 20 at the time, didn't report the rape to authorities.
...
When she later told Van about the rape, he was "enraged." Van took her back to the nightclub to look for Ramirez. "[Van was] insisting, yelling, telling me that I had to point out the rapist," she testified.

Van, Gries, and Kody Tran (who died in a shootout with police last year), planned to beat Ramirez up and took him to a transmission shop owned by Tran while Esparza and Gries's then-girlfriend, Julie Ann Rojas, went to a bar and waited for an hour, according to Esparaza.

Esparza said that she later saw Ramirez tied and hanging from the ceiling in the shop.
...
Esparza married Van later that year, but she says she did it because she feared for her life and was told that if she married him she couldn't be forced to testify against him.
...
But after learning of their divorce in 2004, Santa Ana police pursued an arrest warrant, the San Luis Obispo Tribune reports.
...
But rape victims right groups believe Esparza is being punished for a crime she did not commit. "We are astonished that Norma Patricia, a rape victim, is now being treated as a criminal," reads a petition on change.org, which is seeking to have the charges against her dismissed. "In continuing to pursue her you are sending a troubling message to other rape victims who already have a sense that they will not receive justice within the legal system."'

Canada: Alberta school boys to get HPV-fighting vaccine fall 2014

fathers4fairness · 6 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'While Grade 5 girls in Alberta have had the option of recieving the HPV-fighting vaccine Gardasil since 2008 in school-wide immunization programs, boys will be included in Sept 2014.

Boys from Grades 5 to 9 will receive the vaccine in September — 32,000 Grade 5 students and 15,000 Grade 9 boys.

Gardasil, a vaccine touting protection against four strains of human papilloma virus — including two which account for 70% of cervical cancer — was approved in 2006.

At the time, it was given the green light for females ages nine to 26.

“Research suggests that immunizing both boys and girls against HPV will mean better protection for everyone,” said Dr. Joan Robinson, infectious diseases pediatrician with the University of Alberta.
...
In 2006 when the shot was approved, critics questioned why the vaccine was pushed through without long-term studies.'

Also see this article and this article.

Lexington woman guilty of reporting false rape, tampering with evidence

Mastodon · 6 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It took a jury less than 30 minutes to decide Sara Ylen is guilty of filing a false felony report and tampering with evidence.

The 38-year-old Lexington woman told police two men broke into her Lexington home and sexually assaulted her Sept. 18, 2012.

Witnesses testified to prior acts of false accusations of sexual assault by Ylen, as well as bruises that appeared to be made out of makeup.

James Grissom served nearly 10 years in prison after being convicted in 2003 of raping Ylen in a Meijer parking lot in 2001.'

Brazilian sues over women-only rating app

Mastodon · 6 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An online app that allows women to rate men anonymously has caused an outcry in Brazil, leaving one man so offended that he is suing the creators.

Lulu, a women-only app, was launched a fortnight ago and has already overtaken Facebook and the instant messaging service Whatsapp as the most downloaded app in Brazil.

Using Facebook to access men's profiles, it allows women to rate them on character, appearance and sexual performance using fixed hashtags.

There were one million ratings made in the first week alone.'

Hillary Clinton, Sheryl Sandberg on Why Empowering Women Boosts Families, Economy

Mastodon · 6 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sandberg, who is on the board of The Walt Disney Co., ABC's parent company, presented Clinton with the "Champion of Peace Award." Matching the evening's theme of Stronger Women, Stronger Nations, Clinton emphasized the impact of advancing the rights of women and girls around the world.

"You cannot have real peace and security if you marginalize and exclude women," said Clinton. "You cannot have decent, just societies if you abuse women. You cannot move on a path to democracy and open economies if you isolate and marginalize half the population. For some that was self-evident, others have had their eyes opened over the past 20 years."

WfWI's message to help women help themselves and their communities dovetails with Sandberg's own nonprofit movement, "LeanIn.org," which promotes women and girl in leadership. "When you give money to men, they spend it on whiskey and themselves…when you give to women, they spend it on their children," said Sandberg at the gala. "If women and girls everywhere were treated as equal to men in rights, dignity and opportunity, we would see political and economic progress everywhere," she added.'

Rally to urge men to help stop domestic violence

Mastodon · 6 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Gainesville-area men will be asked on Saturday to join efforts to eradicate domestic violence at a rally that also launches a group called M.O.B., or Men on Board Against Domestic Violence.
...
"If (most) domestic violence victims are women, that means the men are the perpetrators, so how do we stop this," Hickmon said. "We need men speaking men's language to talk about domestic violence."

Duncan said he is involved with M.O.B. because he knows there are a lot of young men who have been raised without fathers in the home and who have witnessed domestic violence and domestic abuse.

"As a result, they have patterned their behavior after that, and when they enter into relationships with young women, they don't know how to respect a woman and they resort to the behavior they are familiar with to resolve issues," Duncan said.

Duncan said some men need to be taught how to respect and honor women because they have never been taught to do so. He has a program called Innovative Dads at his church that teaches men how to love, respect and honor women.'

UK: Why are so many men becoming victims of domestic violence?

Mastodon · 6 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MIchelle Mills was as impeccably groomed as she was well mannered. Her nails were neatly manicured; her blonde hair sleek. Her gentle nature and diminutive, 4 ft 11 in stature seemed perfectly suited to her career as a children's nursery worker.

But Michelle's pleasant demeanour masked an altogether more disturbing personality. Behind closed doors she was a volatile character, prone to irrational behaviour and violent outbursts, as her boyfriend Edward Miller would discover.

Michelle subjected Edward to an onslaught of abuse. He was scratched, punched and screamed at until one morning Michelle, brandishing a kitchen knife, stabbed him to death in the living room of their picturesque cottage in the pretty village of Scalford, Leicestershire.

The attack was so ferocious that that the knife blade broke away from the handle. In April, Michelle was convicted of murder and sentenced to life in prison.'

Man With Serious Dislike of Circumcision May Have the Worst Custom License Plate in Arizona

Mastodon · 7 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Here's a guy who's not ashamed to let everyone know how he feels about penises.

This truck with the "NOCIRCM" license plate was spotted this morning in Phoenix, along the Loop 202 Red Mountain Freeway.

Adding to it all, the vanity license is on the "It Shouldn't Hurt to be a Child" plate.

And the guy driving had four anti-circumcision bumper stickers on his truck, featuring phrases such as, "Circumcision: A Cruel Ripoff."

(He was also driving about 60 miles per hour in the center lane of a 65 mph zone; what the hell, man?)

There's nothing wrong with having an opinion on circumcision, but there's a wonderful saying out there about some opinions being best kept to yourself.'

Temple University To Cut Baseball After 2014 Season

Mastodon · 7 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Citing costs and Title IX compliance, Temple [link added] announced Friday that it will cut seven sports—including baseball—after the 2013-14 academic year.

Five men's sports (baseball, crew, gymnastics, outdoor track & field and indoor track & field) plus two women's sports (softball and rowing) will be eliminated, bringing the school's total from 24 to 17 varsity sports. The decision is a result of a seven-month analysis of Temple's athletics situation.

"Temple does not have the resources to equip, staff and provide a positive competitive experience for 24 varsity sports," Temple vice president and director of athletics Kevin Clark said in a release. "We need to have the right-sized program to create a sustainable model for Temple University Athletics moving forward."

Team co-captain Matt Hockenberry, a senior righthander, tweeted after hearing the news, "I'm physically and emotionally shattered. Thanks for the support everyone."'

Also see:

Temple University Baseball Players Who Made it to the Major Leagues

Longtime Temple rowing coach stunned by news of cuts

Immigration activists team with women's movement in push for rights

Mastodon · 7 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Immigrant rights and feminist organizations are coming together in an attempt to reframe immigration as a women's issue, which they hope will redefine the fight over changing the nation's immigration laws.

So far, the groups have sought to influence immigration legislation in the Senate, undertaken large-scale demonstrations and united national women's groups.

And even as chances of an immigration overhaul have faded in recent weeks, their efforts have mobilized women across the country.

"When you ask people what images they think of when they think of immigration reform, (it's) often men, scary looking, scaling the border walls," said Pramila Jayapal, co-chair of We Belong Together, a national immigration campaign that focuses on women. "The idea that it's really women and children that are the majority of immigrants to the United States is completely lost."

...

According to advocates, more than a quarter of employment visas go to women as the primary holders, because the system prioritizes male-dominated industries such as technology; in addition, more visas are available for workers with higher skills and education, which many women cannot get in their countries of origin.

This means the majority of immigrant women rely on the family-based visa system and thus are disproportionately represented in the backlog of 4.3 million immigrants awaiting such visas.'

Former college student loses her gender bias lawsuit

Mastodon · 7 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A federal judge in Eugene ruled Thursday that Monica Emeldi hadn't provided enough evidence that sex discrimination and retaliation caused faculty to quit working with her, The Register-Guard reported.

The five-year case attracted national attention because the gender discrimination law known as Title IX was used in an academics case rather than athletics.

At the beginning of the lawsuit, a trial judge ruled Emeldi was not entitled to a trial, but an appeals court and then the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that she was.

A jury was seated Monday and heard Emeldi's case Tuesday and Wednesday. On Thursday, Judge Michael McShane ruled against her.
...
She said she complained in a 2007 memorandum and in a meeting about discrimination in the UO College of Education. There weren't enough high-ranking female professors, she contended, and her adviser seemed to favor male students.

The university asserted that professor Robert Horner didn't get Emeldi's memo and didn't hear about her complaints against him before he resigned as her adviser. Without an adviser, she couldn't finish her doctoral degree.

The reason for his resignation was academic differences with Emeldi, and not retaliation, according to the university's filings.'

UK: Can group therapy cure domestic violence?

Mastodon · 8 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mark Coulter, the manager of the programme, Strength to Change, describes the 87-point checklist that greets perpetrators at every meeting as "like looking in a mirror".

It details psychological abuse (threaten affairs, dictate what clothes she wears), financial abuse (make her beg for money), intimidation (threaten to hurt the children in front of her, destroy possessions she loves) and sexual abuse (force her to have sex with someone else, rape).

...

On the whole, we as a society concentrate on simply cleaning up the mess. The absence of men from the debate – and the solution – probably betrays the collective attitude we have towards domestic violence. As Coulter explains: "There is often a cynicism about the capacity of men to change – are they just pulling the wool over everybody's eyes? At a more fundamental level, there's also the reaction: why should we offer services to these animals?

"I think, morally, we have a duty to provide services and challenge the culture that accepts men's violence," he adds. "And we need many more early-intervention programmes. This is not to minimise or take away from the need for women's services. It's not an either/or, it's a both/and."

Coulter believes our attitudes to masculinity mean "men are set up to fail". "Even basic stuff around not expressing your emotions, not being able to be vulnerable. By the age of three or four, generally we learn: boys don't cry, it's embarrassing, it's weak, it's shameful. That doesn't make for a healthy man. That doesn't make for a healthy community. That certainly doesn't make for a healthy relationship. That's why two or three women a week die from domestic violence. What society does is it accepts it, it colludes with men's violence. If two to three women were dying a week because of flu, we would be talking about an epidemic or a pandemic."'

Male victims of domestic violence still under-reported

Mastodon · 8 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While most people are aware of the abuse some women face in domestic violence situations, perhaps not as well known is that men also experience this form of abuse.

Since Portage la Prairie's Real Men Live Abuse Free committee put up their banner at City Hall, the Portage Family Abuse Prevention Centre (PFAPC) has received a few calls from men asking where they can go in situations of partner abuse.

...

Although the PFAPC will offer resources and can facilitate aid to men facing domestic and family abuse, currently, there are no specialized centres for those men to go to in Portage. Schrader said the PFAPC will direct men to organizations in larger urban centres.

One of the organizations abused men can go to in Winnipeg is the Men's Resource Centre (MRC).

...

According to the 1999 Statistics Canada General Social Survey (GSS), almost equal proportions of men and women (seven per cent and eight per cent respectively) had been the victims of intimate partner physical and psychological abuse (18 per cent and 19 per cent respectively). The study also found that while men underreport the abuse they have sustained and inflicted, women underreport perpetrating abuse as their age and education increase.'

UK: Melanie Sykes arrested after assault

Mastodon · 8 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Melanie Sykes[1] has been arrested and cautioned by police after assaulting her husband, Jack Cockings.

The 43-year-old TV presenter was taken to a police station following the incident at their North London apartment, but she was later released.

Earlier this year we were shocked when news broke that 22-year-old actress, Emma Roberts[2], was also arrested for domestic violence. The star was turned over to police in Vancouver on 7 July after a fight with boyfriend Evan Peters turned nasty.

...
According to men's rights campaign group Parity, male victims of assault are ignored by police, have fewer refuges to flee too and often have to watch their attacker go free.

Campaigner John Mays, revealed, "Male victims are almost invisible to the authorities such as the police, who rarely can be prevailed upon to take the man's side. Their plight is largely overlooked by the media, in official reports and in government policy, for example in the provision of refuge places – 7,500 for females in England and Wales but only 60 for men."'

---
[1] http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Melanie_Sykes
[2] http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Emma_Roberts

Finland: Swimming hall rejects 3-year old boy: Not allowed during ladies-only sessions

Mastodon · 8 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The ladies-only swimming sessions have been available for one year at the Rantakylä swimming hall in Joensuu. Only women work at the facility during the two-hour swimming sessions on Saturday mornings.

"It's related to migrant integration and has received a positive reception. About 50 – 70 customers attend the sessions every week, and that's about half of our total visitor numbers," explained Pentti Ryhänen, Joensuu city facility manager.

However the popular swimming session has also caused some bewilderment. Some believe that the city should not segregate swimming times based on gender. One local mother was taken aback by the strict enforcement of the segregation rule when she tried to take her toddler son to the swimming class.

"I thought it would not be a problem because he's such a small boy. However when we got to the ticket kiosk they asked whether the child was a boy or a girl and they turned us away. Naturally I was upset," the mother said.

Facility manager Pentti Ryhänen said however that there has been little negative feedback over the single-sex swimming session. He noted that that it should be clear that boys are not allowed, even if they are very young.

"Parents are free to attend other sessions with their sons," he pointed out.'

10-Year-Old Boy Suspended From School For Imaginary Bow And Arrow

Mastodon · 8 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Johnny Jones, 10, was reportedly suspended from South Eastern Middle School in Fawn Grove, Pa. for "shooting" an imaginary arrow at a classmate.

The Rutherford Institute, which is defending Jones, claims the fifth grader was told he violated the school's zero tolerance policy on weapons when he drew back the strings of an imaginary bow and "shot" an imaginary arrow at a buddy.

That's when an unidentified girl in the class told the teacher, who referred the incident to the principal, claiming that "firearms" had been involved.

Jones was allegedly suspended for one day and threatened with expulsion for "making a threat" to another student using a "replica or representation of a firearm."'

From the "a girl would never do that" files

Matt · 8 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

'A disturbing video showing a teenager being punched and kicked in the face goes viral after it was posted online.'

It speaks volumes that some people have actually found this video "entertaining". Would they have done so if the assailant had been male? The take on this is hinging on race, but I rather think gender has more to do with it. While the assailant was female, the victim was also female, so only some viewers have found it "entertaining". Had the victim been male, I think many viewers would have thought it was "just ROTFL funny!" Yeah, ha ha. Right up there with the ol' groin kick.

In doubt: 40,000 convictions, thanks to police chemist's unbelievable fraud

Matt · 8 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Annie Dookhan, a chemist for the Massachusetts police, was sentenced to three to five years in prison after committing a fraud so extensive that her crimes call into question the validity of over 40,000 convictions.

Dookhan worked in a laboratory examining evidence in drug cases. She wa a go-to analyst for law enforcement and prosecutors, thanks to her rapid turnaround time and penchant for delivering much-needed drug evidence to score convictions.

Her record, however, was based on countless criminal fabrications. She falsified numerous reports, cut corners, forged signatures, inflated her credentials, lied about whether she was actually testing the lab samples she received and even tampered with evidence, according to NPR.

...

After pleading guilty to 27 counts of evidence tampering and falsifying reports, Dookhan was recently sentenced to three to five years in prison. Her lawyer had asked for a lesser sentence, given that Dookhan is the primary caretaker for her seven-year-old son, who is disabled.

The sentence, while not insignificant, seemed too forgiving to some commentators, who noted that Dookhan's criminal practices helped the government convict and sentence potentially innocent men and women to hundreds of years in prison.'

Judge sentenced to 28 years for selling kids into prison

Matt · 8 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The original sentencing was in 2011. It was appealed and upheld earler this year. So while this item is a bit dated, it's too significant not to run. It aptly points out that the rights if males are off-handedly sold away for profit, even if they aren't even adults yet. If male children can't see their rights protected in the legal system, who thinks male adults can expect any better?

'(Black News) Mark Ciavarella Jr, a 61-year old former judge in Pennsylvania, has been sentenced to nearly 30 years in prison for literally selling young juveniles for cash. He was convicted of accepting money in exchange for incarcerating thousands of adults and children into a prison facility owned by a developer who was paying him under the table. The kickbacks amounted to more than $1 million.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Court has overturned some 4,000 convictions issued by him between 2003 and 2008, claiming he violated the constitutional rights of the juveniles – including the right to legal counsel and the right to intelligently enter a plea. Some of the juveniles he sentenced were as young as 10-years old.

Ciavarella was convicted of 12 counts, including racketeering, money laundering, mail fraud and tax evasion. He was also ordered to repay $1.2 million in restitution.

His “kids for cash” program has revealed that corruption is indeed within the prison system, mostly driven by the growth in private prisons seeking profits by any means necessary.'

Avon Foundation willfully ignores male victims in latest DV awareness campaign

Matt · 8 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE via Men's E-News 12/5/13, item here:

Here's how the Avon Foundation explains its one-sided DV message: "The Avon Foundation for Women recognizes that both women and men can be domestic violence victims. For ease of communicating the signs to our .....social media audience -- which is 93% women -- the campaign positions the woman as the victim. This choice is in no way intended to indicate that abuse is limited to women."*

Do you agree? Tell Christine Jaworsky, (212) 282-5519 christine.jaworsky-at-avonfoundation.org

If you find that the listed number has been deactivated or the email address returns an error showing it no longer exists or is full, you can always contact Avon via the website here, which also lists its main tel. number. Either calling or emailing, please be polite and stick to the facts around the topic. State your case and no more. Don't expect anyone to whom you get through to agree with you or concede any points. It's enough to let Avon know they're being called on their willfull omissions of fact. They may not change the current campaign but objections to the exclusion of male victims this time may positively affect their next campaign. Also, you can take to Twitter to mention the omission of male victims from the campaign's consideration. Avon's main Twitter account seems to be @AvonInsider and the hashtag it's using for this campaign is #SeeTheSigns

*See their campaign brochure here.

Related: Avon Foundation Launches Campaign to Help People #SeeTheSigns of Domestic Violence During 16 Days of Activism Against Gender Violence

Canada: Woman Convicted of 7th hostage-taking - committed during trial of 5th and 6th

fathers4fairness · 9 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Serena Nicotine used pop cans, pens as weapons in prison hostage-takings.

...

On Friday, when the 31-year-old Nicotine pleaded guilty to her sixth and seventh hostage-takings.

Creagh handed Nicotine a 10-year sentence to run concurrent with the life term she is already serving. She also cautioned the Parole Board of Canada to "exercise their greatest care and concern for the risk (Nicotine) would pose to the Canadian public if she was ever to be released."

According to agreed facts of the case, Nicotine took fellow inmate Debbie Miller for nearly four hours on May 22, while both were both being held in cells at Edmonton's downtown Law Courts Building on May 22.

...

At the time, Nicotine was at the courthouse to appear on charges stemming from a Feb. 21 hostage taking at the Edmonton Institution for Women.

In that incident, Nicotine grabbed inmate Sonya McLeod in a reverse chokehold and held the exposed sharp edges of the woman's glasses to her neck.

As sheriffs tried to convince Nicotine to release McLeod, she repeatedly threatened to "cut her jug."

...

Court heard Nicotine has been convicted of five previous hostage-takings while behind bars, including three in Saskatchewan between 2000 and 2001, one in B.C. in 2010 and one in the Edmonton prison in 2004 where she held a piece of broken glass to the neck of a fellow convict.

...

Defence lawyer George Isshak described Nicotine as "creative and cunning" and called her a "troubled person" with "serious mental health issues."'

Canada: Bill C-560 - An Act to amend the Divorce Act (equal parenting)

fathers4fairness · 9 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Canadian Member of Parliament Maurice Vellacott has once again introduced a bill that would establish a presumption of equal parenting in child custody cases nationwide. Here's his press release on the bill.

Mr. Maurice Vellacott (Saskatoon—Wanuskewin, CPC) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-560, An Act to amend the Divorce Act (equal parenting) and to make consequential amendments to other Acts.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am quite honoured in these few moments to be introducing a private member's bill which would direct the courts in regard to divorce to make equal shared parenting the presumptive arrangement in the best interest of the child except in proven cases of abuse or neglect.

Fifteen years ago, a joint House-Senate committee presented to Parliament a report entitled: "For the Sake of the Children". That report urged Parliament to amend the Divorce Act to make equal shared parenting the normative determination by courts dealing with situations of divorce involving children.'

The bill's introduction is here. The bill's text is here. It is also possible to follow all related debate and legislative developments here.

Madison, Wisconsin asst. city attorney: "I don't know any man who wants to just snuggle"

Mastodon · 9 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Wisconsin's ultra-liberal capital city is a place where just about anything goes, from street parties to naked bike rides. But city officials say a business is pushing even Madison's boundaries by offering, of all things, hugs.

For $60, customers at the Snuggle House can spend an hour hugging, cuddling and spooning with professional snugglers.

Snugglers contend touching helps relieve stress. But Madison officials suspect the business is a front for prostitution and, if it's not, fear snuggling could lead to sexual assault. Not buying the message that the business is all warm and fuzzy, police have talked openly about conducting a sting operation at the business, and city attorneys are drafting a new ordinance to regulate snuggling.

"There's no way that (sexual assault) will not happen," assistant city attorney Jennifer Zilavy said. "No offense to men, but I don't know any man who wants to just snuggle."

Snuggle House owner Matthew Hurtado hasn't responded to multiple requests for an interview. His attorney, Tim Casper, said in an interview last month the business is legitimate and Hurtado has put precautions in place to protect clients and employees from each other.
...
Police in Rochester, N.Y., said they've had no complaints about The Snuggery, which offers overnight cuddle sessions. Be The Love You Are in Boulder, Colo., offers cuddles with "Snuggle Stars." Cuddle Therapy in San Francisco offers packages that "focus directly with your current needs around connection, intimacy and touch," according to its website. Police in San Francisco and Boulder didn't respond to The AP's inquires about those businesses.'

Closing Canada's tech gender gap, one line of code at a time

Mastodon · 9 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this fall, the seventh annual Global Gender Gap Report — an index of states that have best addressed gender inequality — ranked Canada 20, behind countries such as South Africa, Nicaragua and Cuba. Wage inequality and political empowerment for women were particular sore points, with Canada ranking 35 and 41, respectively.

To those areas of concern should be added another: entrepreneurship. The "entrepreneurship gap" between women and men in Canada is nothing short of "striking," according to a report from TD Bank showing Canadian women are only about half as likely as men to start their own business. This is despite the fact they make up half of the workforce and more than half of post-secondary students.
...
Or you can blame it on the obstacles to building a culture of entrepreneurialism among women: A recent Global Entrepreneurship Monitor report, found more than half of women doubt their abilities to start a business (despite that "women are rated higher in 12 of the 16 competencies that go into outstanding leadership," according to a 2012 Harvard Business Review study.)

Or there's the "old boys' club" argument: In the startup world, it's impossible to connect with the right mentors, advisors and investors without a strong network. If women are unable to tap into that male-dominated ecosystem, then they're at a marked disadvantage.

But closer to home, I see a slightly different issue in play. I'd like to think HootSuite, for instance, is anything but a stodgy old boys' club. As a social media company, the heart of our business is building relationships. Our employees are by and large young, progressive and open-minded.
...
HootSuite also hosts monthly meetups of Ladies Learning Code, a Toronto-based initiative that has introduced more than 4,000 women and girls to programming and technical skills since 2011. Approximately one Saturday a month in our office, a dozen mentors and about 40 attendees spend eight hours working together. Importantly, it's not just code: Mentors introduce themselves, share their personal stories and offer insight on how women can thrive in a male-dominated industry.

Creating supportive environments to learn computer science skills is a start. But truly narrowing the gender gap in the startup community comes down in large part to how we teach children. Providing better computer science education in public schools and encouraging girls to participate, is perhaps the only way to rewrite the stereotypes and break open the old boys' club.

To that end, Ladies Learning Code recently introduced Girls Learning Code, camps and workshops aimed at 8- to 13- and 13- to 17-year-old girls. With a focus on teamwork, creativity and technology, the program hopes to help girls see tech as a medium for self-expression and a means of changing the world, noted Emma Nemtin, marketing director for tech company Hubba and one of the organization's mentors, in a recent post for my company's blog.'

Guante - “Ten Responses to the Phrase ‘Man Up’ “

Matt · 10 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Caption:

'"We teach boys how to wear the skin of a man, but we also teach them how to raise that skin like a flag and draw blood for it."

Two-time National Poetry Slam champion Guante, performing at Madame in Minneapolis.'

Judge Orders Colorado Cake Maker To Serve Gay Couples (now how about women's gyms?)

Matt · 10 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. So if a bakery has to make wedding cakes for gay couples (i.e., they can't discriminate even in a private transaction based on sexual orientation), then tell me, how is it gyms, bars, hotels, etc., can discriminate based on gender? If "being gay" isn't a choice but an indelible characteristic of a person, isn't also a person's sex? Would we today expect a gay person to deny their sexuality to avoid "offending" others' sensibilities? Obviously, based on this ruling, no. So why does the law still support gender discrimination in situations arguably more significant in an ongoing sense, like access to hotel rooms, gyms, etc.? I am sure the baker had the same argument today's feminists who support single-sex facilities and women-only goodies do: gay couples can always go to another bakery, while feminists say men can always go to a different gym. Excerpt:

'DENVER (AP/CBS4) – A baker who refused to make a wedding cake for a same-sex ceremony must serve gay couples despite his religious beliefs or face fines, a judge said Friday.

The order from administrative law judge Robert N. Spencer said Masterpiece Cakeshop in suburban Denver discriminated against a couple “because of their sexual orientation by refusing to sell them a wedding cake for their same-sex marriage.”

The order says the cake-maker must “cease and desist from discriminating” against gay couples. Although the judge did not impose fines in this case, the business will face penalties if it continues to turn away gay couples who want to buy cakes.

...

“At first blush, it may seem reasonable that a private business should be able to refuse service to anyone it chooses,” Judge Spencer said in his written order. “This view, however, fails to take into account the cost to society and the hurt caused to persons who are denied service simply because of who they are.”

...

“But treating gay people differently because of who they are is discrimination, plain and simple,” she said.'

6-year-old boy suspended for kissing a girl on the cheek

Mastodon · 10 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The suspension of a 6-year-old boy for kissing a girl at school is raising questions about whether the peck should be considered sexual harassment.

The boy's mother said officials at Lincoln School of Science and Technology in Canon City, a southern Colorado city of 16,000, are over-reacting. Jennifer Saunders said her son was suspended once before for kissing the girl and had other disciplinary problems, and she was surprised to find out that he would be forced out of school again for several days.

First grader Hunter Yelton told KRDO-TV (http://tinyurl.com/lyhxh7l) that he has a crush on a girl at school and she likes him back.

"It was during class, yeah. We were doing reading group, and I leaned over and kissed her on the hand. That's what happened," he said.

Saunders said she saw nothing wrong with her son's display of affection. She said she punished him for other problems in school, including rough-housing. She was shocked when the school's principal brought up the term "sexual harassment" during a meeting.'

Hotels set aside floors for women

Mastodon · 10 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Book a room on the 11th floor of the Hamilton Crowne Plaza here, and you'll get special bath salts and body products, a magnifying mirror, nail polish, nail files and a curling iron.

In other words, you'll get pretty much anything you need to pamper yourself.

They're not exactly the types of amenities that men would go for, but that's the point.

The Hamilton Crowne Plaza is one of a small, but growing number of hotels offering floors dedicated to female travelers. These hotels are particularly trying to appeal to female business travelers, who are moving up the career ladder and hitting the road more often.

"Women are more influenced by their surroundings, and therefore, the ways in which hotels can accommodate them become important," says Judi Brownell, professor of organizational communication at the Cornell University School of Hotel Administration. "My research identified three things that are important to women business travelers and that influence their decision regarding where to stay: safety; empowerment; and pampering."

Hotels are responding by setting aside floors with special key access and amenities that women typically prefer.'

Barbara Kay: Yet more family law gender injustice

fathers4fairness · 10 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A year ago 19-year old Preston King was a light-hearted young Southern California man in love with his high school sweetheart. Her pregnancy changed their lives dramatically.

As the birth date approached, King was shocked to learn that the mother planned to give the baby up for adoption, whether or not he agreed to it. The adoptive couple had already been selected by the mother, and King was invited by an adoption agency – via text message – to meet them. King immediately petitioned the Orange County courthouse for paternity testing, and in the weeks leading to the birth, went to court several times to claim his paternal rights.

In spite of his best efforts, though, King was not allowed to sign a declaration affirming his fatherhood and was denied the right to paternal mention on the birth certificate. After King spent a mere 15 minutes alone with his baby, born September 7, the infant went home with his adoptive parents.
...
Observers of the family law system in Canada will be reminded of the quite similar 2007 case of Hendricks vs Swan in Saskatchewan. Saskatoon dad Adam Hendricks was in the same position as King. He was a willing father, whose girlfriend unilaterally adopted their baby out to well-off strangers.

What do these two cases tell us about the prevailing culture as filtered through the family law system? That mothers count in a child's life and fathers don't.

As the Hendricks and King cases make clear, our misandric family law systems routinely assign more importance to mothers over fathers. Yet decades of research unequivocally prove that children want to love and be loved equally by both their parents. These travesties of gender injustice must end. Equal parenting is equal gender justice.'

Story - http://www.dailymail.co.uk/news/article-2520039/The-baby-Veronica-Father-fights-reunited-son-secretly-adoption-mother-consent.html

Israeli mother pleads for help over court-ordered circumcision

Matt · 11 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Her request for help is here. Excerpt:

'"Help! I'm asking for the help of the public! I am a mother to a baby. The Rabbinical Court is forcing me to cut my year old son against my will (circumcise him) while subjecting me to heavy financial sanctions daily!

After my exposure to the information regarding circumcision, I refuse to mutilate my baby. I don't have the right and I do not agree! He was born whole and he will stay whole! His integrity is his full right! The Religious Court has no right to do that! No one in the whole world is authorized to force me to mutilate my son, to cut his penis!

What kind of a state is this?! What is this? Where do we live? Could the Religious Court force upon me anything during the divorce? In particular, religious oppression, unnecessary cutting of the penis of a helpless baby? A non-reversible surgical operation! A foreskin does not renew itself!
...
I am pleading for help! I love my son very much! I do not want to hurt him! Please pass this message on to anyone possible so it won't be a precedent for future divorce cases in the Rabbinical Court which authorizes itself to force religious oppression upon a nonreligious divorcing person! Why does the religious court take advantage of its monopoly on marriage?! It's a degrading abuse of power, used for religious oppression! Religion has to be voluntary from the heart, not by force and financial penalties!'

Related MANN item here.

"Men spend their money on whiskey"

ThomasI · 11 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

At a recent dinner for Hillary Clinton, Sheryl Sandberg said the following:

“When you give money to men, they spend it on whiskey and themselves…when you give to women, they spend it on their children."

See here.

So I wrote the following to leanin.org:

To: info@leanin.org
Cc: partners@leanin.org

'“When you give money to men, they spend it on whiskey and themselves…when you give to women, they spend it on their children,” said Sandberg at the gala.'

Is she really that nasty?

And then I received this response:

From: Andrea Saul

Hi Thomas,

Thanks for pointing this out — she was quoting an old saying from the World Bank (she didn't say it was true) and the context wasn't included. I've asked ABC to correct it.

Best regards,

Andrea

So I followed up with:

But she did not deny it, right? I think her nasty message is quite clear. And you work for her? Tell her to say it about her own dad-- or Nelson Mandela, or the guy who owns Facebook and employs her, OK?

So, you have Andrea's email. Let her know what you think about men "spending money on whiskey."

New study finds young women closing pay gap with men

Mastodon · 11 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young American women are increasingly likely to receive pay nearly equal to their male counterparts, with earnings at 93 percent of men, a new study finds. Still, those women remain as pessimistic as their mothers and grandmothers regarding gender equality.

A report for release Wednesday by the Pew Research Center paints a mixed picture.

While women under 32 now have higher rates of college completion than men that age, the analysis of census and labor data shows their hourly earnings will slip further behind by the women's mid-30s, if the experience of the past three decades is a guide.

That widening gap is due in part to the many women who take time off or reduce their hours to start families. Other factors cited in the report are gender stereotyping, discrimination, weaker professional networks and women's hesitancy to aggressively push for raises and promotions, which together may account for 20 percent to 40 percent of the pay gap.
...
The near-equal pay for young women is being driven in large part by their educational gains. Some 38 percent of women ages 25-32 now hold bachelor's degrees, compared to 31 percent of young men. As a result, 49 percent of employed workers with at least a bachelor's degree last year were women, up from 36 percent in 1980. That means more women in higher-skilled, higher-paying positions.'

Canada: Father's diet before conception may play role in health of offspring

fathers4fairness · 11 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's well-known that what a mother eats before and during pregnancy can affect fetal development, but research now suggests that a father's diet prior to conception may also play a critical role in a newborn's health.
...
But the way that a father's diet can influence the health and development of offspring has received little attention, said Sarah Kimmins, a specialist in reproductive biology at McGill University who led a study looking at the effects of paternal folate levels.
...
In a study of mice published in the journal Nature Communications, researchers found that a low-folate diet in males was linked to an increased rate of birth defects among their pups, compared to the rate among pups whose fathers were fed a folate-sufficient diet.

"When we looked at the offspring, when we looked at the fetuses, we were really quite shocked that we saw the birth defects," Kimmins said Tuesday from Montreal.

The birth anomalies, which occurred across the litters sired by folate-deficient mice, included spinal malformations, cranio-facial defects such as a shortened jaw, underdeveloped digits and club feet.'

"4 Reasons Women Are More Responsible Entrepreneurs Than Men"

Mastodon · 11 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women entrepreneurs tend to treat their employees better and give back to their communities, said Joy Anderson, President and Founder of Criterion Institute, which helps shape emerging financial markets and movements.
...
In general, women entrepreneurs are more altruistic and empathetic. Combined with their rising success, it's likely that small- and mid-sized company social responsibility efforts will increase and take on new forms,d which may well change the way we all think about business responsibility.'

'Women Make Science More Creative'

Mastodon · 11 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt;

'Female scientists are more receptive of abstract artworks than their male counterparts, suggesting that they are likely to be open to a more ‘anarchic, creative and radical’ approach to science, according to new research released today.

How Scientists Look At Art’, a study conducted by University of Reading and commissioned by Bayer to mark its 150th anniversary, suggests that women may bring added creativity and a more challenging approach to science, adding weight to the ongoing, global drive to encourage more women to enter the profession.'

Canada: Professor says killing can be justified in Domestic Abuse cases

fathers4fairness · 11 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Battered women are morally entitled to kill their abusive partners, even those who are passed out or asleep, says a respected University of Ottawa law professor.

Prof. Elizabeth Sheehy raises the provocative idea in her new book, eight years in the making, called Defending Battered Women on Trial. It will be published Dec. 15 by UBC Press.

"Why should women live in anticipatory dread and hypervigilence?" she writes in the book's concluding chapter. Would it not be just, Sheehy asks, "to shift the risk of death to those men whose aggressions have created such dehumanizing fear in their female partners?"
...
Sheehy likened women in abusive relationships to prisoners of war. "We would never say of a prisoner of war that it's not just that she or he kill their captor to escape. It is just to kill to escape that kind of enslavement."

Sheehy's book, which is written for a general audience, is built around the trials of 11 battered women, 10 of whom killed their partners. She draws heavily on trial transcripts to examine the evidence and the legal strategies of the defence lawyers.
...
To select those 11 trials, Sheehy studied 91 cases of battered women who killed their partners between 1990, when the Supreme Court of Canada recognized "battered women syndrome" as a legal defence, and 2005.'

Man who says rape confession beaten out of him freed after 30 years

fathers4fairness · 11 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt;

'CHICAGO — A man who says Chicago police tortured him until he confessed to a rape he didn't commit was expected to walk out of an Illinois prison Wednesday after 30 years behind bars.

Stanley Wrice's release from the Pontiac Correctional Center comes after Cook County Judge Richard Walsh overturned Wrice's conviction Tuesday, saying officers lied about how they treated him.

The ruling was just the latest development in one of the darkest chapters of Chicago Police Department history, in which officers working under former Lt. Jon Burge were accused of torturing suspects into false confessions and torturing witnesses into falsely implicating people in crimes.
...
With his release, Wrice will join a number of men who in recent years have been released from prison because they were tortured into confessing at the hands of Burge's men. Dozens of men — almost all of them black — have claimed that, starting in the 1970s, Burge and his officers beat or shocked them into confessing to crimes ranging from armed robbery to murder.'

Florida Circumcision Costs Skyrocket After State Stops Funding Procedure At Infancy

Mastodon · 11 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'This has to hurt: more and more older boys are getting circumcised in Florida.

After Florida terminated Medicaid funding for infant circumcision, circumcision costs to the state have skyrocketed to more than double previous levels.
...
Florida is among 18 states that ceased Medicaid funding for infant circumcision after a 1999 report by the American Academy of Pediatrics declared the procedure may not be medically necessary.

Now, Medicaid coverage is available in Florida only for older males for whom the procedure is deemed medically imperative, such as those who have suffered repeated infections.

But the procedure is far more cost-effective on babies, according to Dr. Islam. “The benefits are that the child does not have to undergo general anesthesia, there is much less cost to public monies, it’s safer for the kids to get it done and that’s the right age, as well,” Islam said in a statement.'

The 2014 Icelandic Presidency: focus on masculinity

Mastodon · 11 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Iceland takes over the Presidency of the Nordic Council of Ministers from next year, during which time the Council will focus on labour market issues, men and masculinity as well as ways of removing border obstacles between the Nordic countries.

The June 2014 conference on masculinity and the study of masculinity in the Nordic region should also be interesting. Two renowned masculinity and gender researches will deliver the conference keynote speeches; the Australian Professor Raewyn Connell from the University of Sydney and the American Professor Michael Kimmel from the State University of New York.'

Wikipedia on Raewyn Connell and also on Michael Kimmel.

UK: Father with no rights: Mother stops him seeing daughter for 12 years, despite 82 court orders

Matt · 12 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A father yesterday spoke of his anguish over an extraordinary £100,000 12-year court battle for the right to see his daughter.

The man, described as ‘irreproachable’ by a senior judge, has endured years of legal fighting with his ex-partner, who has refused to allow contact between him and their 14-year-old daughter.

Incredibly, the family courts have made 82 orders that he be allowed to see the girl, known only as M. But none was enforced by a system which senior judges agreed had ‘failed the whole family’.

‘My relationship with my daughter is slipping away,’ the man said. ‘Her childhood is disappearing.’

The Court of Appeal three months ago ordered that the case be resolved, saying the teenager’s childhood had been ‘irredeemably marred’ by years of litigation.'

'Free Hunter Yelton'

Mastodon · 12 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hunter Yelton of Cañon City, Colo., is accused of sexual harassment. Hunter Yelton is 6 years old and in the first grade. "He has a crush on a girl at school, who likes him back," reports Colorado Springs' KRDO-TV. "It may sound innocent enough," the station intones. But in Barack Obama's America, even a small boy can become a sexual suspect.

...

In April 2011 Russlynn Ali, then assistant education secretary for civil rights, issued a directive in which she threatened to withhold federal money from any educational institution that failed to take a hard enough line against sexual misconduct to ensure "that all students feel safe in their school." The directive's preamble declared: "The sexual harassment of students, including sexual violence, interferes with students' right to receive an education free from discrimination and, in the case of sexual violence, is a crime."

...

As amusing as the story of Hunter Yelton is, however, it is an example of a dire and widespread problem. "Sexual harassment" rules are ostensibly sex-neutral, but in practice they are used primarily to police male behavior. Feminists like Hanna Rosin note with triumph that girls and women do better in school than their male counterparts. One reason is that normal female behavior is seldom stigmatized or punished in the name of "civil rights."

And while college "justice" is often downright oppressive, the excesses of contemporary feminism know no age limits. As the story of Hunter Yelton demonstrates, the war on men is also a war on little boys.'

Hunter Yelton Petition: Call the school and request them to revert their decision

Mastodon · 12 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'His action was 100% innocent. He is 6 year old kid, what else you want to know. The way school over reacted was that necessary, is that a mature decision, this is what we expect from schools & there teachers. Do we see the true values of carring, love and compassion that teachers should have.'

Please, think and decide. Your action and support will help.

Six-year-old's sexual harassment claim dropped: 'Why we should take elementary school harassment seriously'

Mastodon · 12 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Hunter Yelton, the six-year-old boy who's being portrayed as a "hopeless romantic" and "young Casanova" after his recent school suspension, will no longer have the offense of sexual harassment on his permanent record. Following negative press surrounding his two-day suspension from Lincoln School of Science and Technology in Colorado, the school reduced the offense on Hunter's permanent record from "sexual harassment" to "misconduct" Thursday. Hunter's seemingly innocuous crime? Kissing one of his classmates on the hand.

Jade Masters-Ownbey, the mother of the young girl Hunter kissed, felt his original punishment was appropriate. After all, this wasn't the first time Hunter had been reprimanded for violating his school's sexual harassment policy: he apparently had a history of pursuing this same girl, and had previously kissed her on the cheek. But Hunter's mother, Jennifer Saunders, thought the school's punishment was too harsh.

"This is taking it to an extreme that doesn't need to be met with a six-year-old. Now my son is asking questions. 'What is sex mommy?' That should not ever be said, sex. Not in a sentence with a six-year-old," Saunders said. Well, there's your first clue as to why this kid might be acting out. Clearly, he's curious about sex, and his mom would rather not talk about it.'

Man cleared, woman arrested in kidnapping, sexual assault case for false allegations

mens_issues · 12 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'WINDSOR, Colo. - A Fort Collins woman who told police that a former co-worker drugged and kidnapped her from a Windsor parking lot in November now faces charges of lying to police.

Katherine Bennett, 20, accused Dustin Toth of luring her to a Safeway parking lot by saying he needed a friend to talk to about his upcoming deployment.

Bennett said when she got in Toth's car, Toth pulled a knife and threatened her.

However, the Coloradoan reports that Toth has been cleared of all charges and Bennett was arrested on a charge of attempting to influence a public official.

Bennett's arrest affidavit highlights says she changed her story many times and made claims that police later found to be untrue.'

Colorado girl's mom applauds suspension of 6-year old boy who kissed her daughter

Mastodon · 12 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'DENVER, CO -- The mother of a girl involved in the case of a 6-year-old Colorado boy suspended for giving a classmate unwanted kisses says the school did the right thing.

The girl's mother, Jade Masters-Ownbey, told the Canon City Daily Record on Wednesday that the school district did a "great job" protecting her daughter from repeated harassment from the boy.
...
The boy's mother, Jennifer Saunders, insists the punishment was too harsh.

"He is 6 years old, and that is absolutely ridiculous for him to have 'sexual harassment' on his record, even it is (only on the district's) record," she said.'

Denver drops Aron Ralston case; girlfriend pleads not guilty

mens_issues · 12 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A judge dismissed charges Monday against adventurer Aron Ralston, who was jailed after a domestic dispute in Denver.

"In an evaluation of the case, we determined there was no likelihood of conviction," said Melissa Drazen-Smith, assistant director of prosecution for the Denver city attorney's office.

Prosecutors are proceeding with similar charges against Ralston's girlfriend, Vita Shannon, who was arrested with him late Saturday at her home in Denver."

...

"Ralston told police that Shannon hit him twice in the back of the head with her fists during an argument. Shannon told police Ralston shoved her on the shoulder as he left her home, according to the reports. Police noted that the couple's infant daughter was present during the fight.

In April 2003, Ralston was descending a slot canyon when a boulder he was climbing on dislodged, crushing and trapping his right hand against the canyon wall. After five days, he broke his arm and amputated the limb.'

Worst Cartoon: "Study: Women's Brains Are Different Than Men's"

charlie · 13 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Sorry, this is the only online image that I was able to find. It was published across the nation today and the the Mankato Free Press. You'll know which cartoon when you see it.

UK: Parental child abductions from UK 'double in a decade' - 70% of abductions are by mother

Matt · 13 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of parental child abduction cases has more than doubled in the last decade, new figures from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) suggest.

The FCO and charity Reunite say almost two children a day on average are taken out of the UK against a court order or without the consent of one parent.

There were 272 new parental child abduction and international custody cases in 2003-04, and 580 in 2012-13.

The FCO has released what is calls a "hard-hitting" film on the subject.

The film, Caught in the Middle, has been published on YouTube as part of a pre-Christmas awareness campaign to encourage parents to consider the "lasting damage" such abductions can do to children and families.

Reunite said it had already dealt with 447 new cases, involving a total of 616 children, in 2013 - with noticeable spikes after the Christmas and summer holidays.
...
The most common Hague Convention countries for parental abductions from the UK in 2012/13 were the USA (32), Poland (29) and the Irish Republic (28), while the top non-Hague countries were Pakistan (35), Thailand (17) and India (16).

The FCO said that - "contrary to popular opinion" - about 70% of abducting parents were mothers.'

NPO: Nebraska Limits State Bar Lobbying

Matt · 13 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Nebraska Supreme Court prohibits Nebraska State Bar Association from using mandatory dues for anything other than regulation of the legal profession. Thus it may not use mandatory dues for lobbying. Regulation of the profession is defined as:

- admitting qualified applicants to membership in the Bar Association,
- maintaining the records of membership,
- enforcing the ethical rules governing the Bar Association's members,
- regulating the mandate of continuing legal education,
- maintaining records of trust fund requirements for lawyers, and
- pursuing those who engage in the unauthorized practice of law.

The move to limit the Nebraska State Bar Association's ability to use dues for lobbying started with Senator Scott Lautenbaugh, Esq., who sued the Nebraska State Bar Association in federal court last October alleging violations of the United States Constitution and federal civil rights laws. Mr. Lautenbaugh believes, because he is required to be a member of the State Bar Association, the use of his dues for political and ideological purposes constitutes government-compelled speech and violates his First and Fourteenth Amendment rights. The lawsuit sought to have the Nebraska State Bar Association's lobbying and dues procedures declared unconstitutional.'

U.S. State Dept. - "Looking Ahead: Opportunities & Challenges for Women's Political Participation in 2014"

Minuteman · 13 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Catherine M. Russell
Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's Issues
National Democratic Institute (NDI) Offices
...
Let me commend specifically the important work that you are doing in the hard places. To IRI, thank you for the work you have done with your Women's Democracy Network — to build the capacity of Syrian women in negotiation, leadership, advocacy, and other skills at this critical time for their country.

To NDI, thank you for the work you are doing in Afghanistan to help Afghan women be competitive in the upcoming elections -- through women's campaign schools, one-on-one consultations with women candidates and developing policy working groups.

My job as Ambassador-at-Large for Global Women's issues is to promote the status of women and girls as a critical element of our diplomatic efforts. We believe that peace, security, prosperity, and economic growth cannot be achieved without the full participation of women, and that men and boys are important partners in this effort.
...
I've also just returned from a trip to Japan, where the current government is working to increase the percentage of women in leadership roles across society from single digits to 30 percent. There seems to be a growing recognition that the only way to ensure Japan's emergence from its decades long recession is to ensure that women are finally given the tools to participate in the political, economic and social spheres.'

Tell Hunter Yelton It’s a Man’s World

Mastodon · 13 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I agree with James Taranto that there is a war on men and it starts early, as he points out, as a war on boys. Christina Hoff Sommers has much to say about the topic from an educational standpoint in her revised edition of The War on Boys. Our schools keep boys confined, take away recess, and have adopted a feminized approach to schools to the point where it is mainly for those who conform, sit still, and like to follow rules.

Psychologically, I wonder what the culture is telling little six-year-old boys like Hunter Yelton when they accuse him of sexual harassment for kissing a girl. This used to be normal. Now, the PC police have taught him that girls are dangerous, that he is some type of pervert and that as a male, he is always suspect. This is a very bad lesson to learn. As boys grow up, more will opt out and decide not to get involved when women are present. I write about this opting out in my book Men on Strike and it takes the form of men not wanting to marry as often, go to college where they are seen as some type of rapist, or even stop to help a child for fear of being charged as a pervert.'

From weight loss to fundraising, 'ironic effects' can sabotage our best-laid plans

Matt · 13 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Not a direct MR matter but clearly relevant. A major challenge to MR is getting the word out and getting people, especially men, aware of these issues. This article points out how often the direct approach to any cause is often paradoxically counterproductive to advancing it. If nothing else, it's food for thought, and MRAs may find it useful. Excerpt:

'Awareness campaigns get forgotten by the people who need them most

"Motivated forgetting" is an especially galling species of ironic effect: when a message makes you feel vulnerable – for example, by reminding you of the ways in which your gender or ethnicity places you at a disadvantage – you're more likely to find ways, conscious or otherwise, to forget it, in order to retain a sense of self-control. In a study to be published in the Journal of Consumer Research, marketing experts found that students who were reminded of their university's poor performance were less likely to remember an advertisement offering a discount at the campus bookshop. "Consider an advertisement for breast cancer prevention," the researchers write. "If the ad makes … women’s vulnerability to the disease" salient in their minds, they could "feel threatened and exhibit defensive responses, such as decreased ad memory."

In short: if you're trying to change behaviour or beliefs – your own, or other people's – don't assume that the most direct, vigorous or effortful route is necessarily the most effective one. The human mind is much, much more perverse and annoying than that.'

State University Employee On Leave For Running Phone Sex Business at Work, Soft Core Videos

Matt · 13 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. If she were a he, he'd be fired immediately. And, why is there no mention of sexual harassment? Talking sexy even outside of earshot of anyone who cares, regardless of whether they object, is notoriously defined in campus "speech codes" as sexual harassment, punishable by dismissal. So what's the delay here? Excerpt:

'A veteran University of Colorado Denver administrator is under investigation and has been placed on paid administrative leave for apparently operating a phone sex business at the same time she has been getting paid by the university.
...
The prospect that the CU administrator has been engaging in paid phone sex at the same time she is being paid to work by taxpayers has administrators concerned.
...
According to the woman's daughter-in-law, there is good reason to be concerned.

"She does it while she is working at CU Denver," said Blair Cooper, the administrator's daughter-in-law.

Blair Cooper told CBS4 "she is taking calls at work. I've been in her office and she's said, 'Oh, let me be right back I have a phone call.' She takes them very discreetly, shuts her door takes phone sex calls on CU of Denver's pay."'

'My Son Is Mentally Ill', So Listen Up

Matt · 14 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Finally, a MSM article about boys and severe mental illness that isn't the typical lock-'em-up fare. Check out the stats re the number of boys in jail with mental health problems. Not only do men often get prisons while women get psychiatric commitments for the same offenses, but it looks like states also prefer to jail mentally ill boys instead of treat them. Excerpt:

'As the camera rolls, Stephanie calls psychiatric hospitals near her home in San Antonio. Repeatedly she is turned down. Nothing can be done for her son, she is told, unless "he is a danger to himself or others." It is December 2009, and Daniel's hallucinations last more than two hours.
...
Daniel is 14 now, and his mother no longer needs to convince doctors that he is mentally ill. He suffers from bipolar disorder with psychosis. In the past four years, he has been hospitalized more than 20 times.

But a diagnosis merely marks a beginning. Raising a child with mental illness is "a roller-coaster ride through hell," Stephanie says. She is engaged in an epic battle on multiple fronts.

What if Daniel has an outburst in public and is misunderstood? What if he succumbs to the voices? How can she help Daniel find joy?

And what about the rest of her family? They need her, too.
...
The only time mental illness dominates the national conversation is when something goes tragically wrong. But the dialogue doesn't last. It gets buried under arguments about gun control, video game violence and unheeded signs of trouble -- until there's yet another mass shooting.
...
She plays a video of Daniel enduring an episode of psychosis from May 1 of this year. His legs and arms shake while he sits on a picnic table in the backyard. He places his head between his knees. Then, he stands and paces. He swats the air. His head darts back and forth, as if trying to shake the demons he sees and hears.

"This doesn't happen all the time," she says. "It happens when he has something really stressful going on at school or he has a cycle. Sometimes, the cycle comes every two months; sometimes they're more frequent. I'm happy when they're gone for five months, but that hasn't happened for a while."

Stephanie's voice trembles. Some of the cadets cry. "You guys are my psychotherapists," she tells them. "Not a lot of people want to sit and hear you talk about mental illness."'

Topless FEMEN protesters storm German football TV show

Mastodon · 14 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.* Excerpt:

'Two topless women stormed the stage of a German talk show on Wednesday in protest against the conditions of workers in Qatar who are building facilities for the 2022 World Cup.

The FEMEN activists ran onto the stage of a live football debate during a show hosted by Markus Lanz .

Footballs dripping with blood were painted around the edges of the protesters' breasts. One of the women had also painted "Blut und Spiele" (Blood and games) on her body, while the other had "don't play with human rights" written in English across her stomach.

...

Bodyguards tried to remove the women but talkshow host Markus Lanz intervened, telling the security staff to leave them.

Lanz interviewed one of the male demonstrators who said they were protesting against the "slavery" of workers in Qatar. Following the discussion the presenter urged FIFA to put pressue on Qatar to improve working conditions.'

---

*"Sort-of NSFW": Err on the side of caution re watching the embedded video excerpt from the show while at work. The protesters, while their breasts were painted, were clearly naked from the waist up. Anyone with a chip on his/her shoulder who may happen to see you watch this video and see the video itself could get you into trouble with HR if they so desire.

Rob Okun: Masculinity question still missing post Newtown

Mastodon · 14 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As we arrive at the gut-wrenching first anniversary of Newtown Saturday, I teeter back and forth between sadness and anger. Sadness that 20 6- and 7-year-olds were murdered — along with a half-dozen Sandy Hook Elementary School educators — and anger that public officials and most of the media still largely ignore the missing component in the Connecticut tragedy: the gender of the shooter.

Don't get me wrong. It's urgent we implement gun control legislation and increase mental health services. Some states, including Colorado and Connecticut, have passed new gun laws, doing an end run around the National Rifle Association and their minions in Congress. And kudos to Vice president Joe Biden for shepherding $100 million in additional money for mental wellness programs. Still, like a two-legged stool, those efforts can't stand up to this type of violence if we don't add a third leg: male socialization.

Take this simple quiz. Don't worry; you're sure to get 100 since — spoiler alert — the answer isn't "woman." In the year since Adam Lanza began his rampage by murdering his mother, was it a man or a woman who killed innocent people at the Washington Navy Shipyard, the Boston Marathon, Santa Monica College, homes in Hialeah, Fla., Manchester, Ill., and Fernley, Nev.; a barbershop in New York's Mohawk Valley; and Los Angeles International Airport? Get it?

...

In the 1990s I facilitated batterers' groups working with lonely, isolated men who had been abusive to their spouses. While none was as mentally unstable as the mass shooters, all were products of the same male socialization.

Today no one may be shrugging, dismissively saying, "Boys will be boys" to explain away aberrant male behavior. Still, when "boys" kill their mothers, children, strangers — committing suicide by mass murder — isn't it time we took the crisis in masculinity seriously? If we care about the parents of Sandy Hook the answer to this quiz question must be yes.'

Reaching out to male rape victim

el cid · 14 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Here's commentary on a subject rarely discussed: the sexual assault of boys. The specific case involves a 13-year-old boy who was sodomized in a hazing incident. Many in the town tried to cover it up. The men who wrote the article were also victims of sexual assault. Excerpt:

'The sodomy hazing of a 13-year-old boy from Norwood is indeed indefensible. The boy and his family have run from Norwood as, by all accounts, the town and the school turned on him and his family. Fingers are pointing and debate is rightly raging on issues of hazing, rape and bullying.

Such debate is welcome, but we would like to step back for one minute and pause on behalf of the boy and his family.

We have no idea where that boy or his family are right now, but we reach out to them with great care, concern and optimism. We imagine he is bewildered and may not have the vocabulary to even begin to explain what happened in Norwood, or what is happening now. Tears may be falling or, conversely, he and his family may be too numb to actually shed tears. We understand the family's sense of abandonment and isolation. We worry they are feeling guilty for speaking out, as their courageous actions have led to their expulsion from the town they loved. Justice looks to be elusive.

We want the boy to know that he is the hero of this sad tale. He spoke up and out, and we admire him immensely for the strength he has shown. We do not know his mom and dad but we gather, from what we have read, that he might have special parents who will be essential to his healing, as he will be to theirs.

We reach out to the boy and his family as a group of proud men who, like you, have suffered the trauma of childhood sexual abuse. Our experiences are different, but we were all seriously traumatized by our experiences and the subsequent abandonment we felt as we tried to speak out. And we all have found unique and liberating paths to healing, as we believe he will.
...
We, and millions of other men and women who have walked similar paths, stand humbly with this boy, holding him deeply in our hearts. We admire him, and just want to plant a seed of hope with him that there is a path through this, and we believe he will find his, as we have found ours.'

UK: 4-YO boy has same IQ as Einstein

Matt · 15 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A four-year-old boy has stunned psychologists—after intelligence tests revealed him to have the same IQ as Einstein.

Sherwyn Sarabi has tested off the scale for intelligence—scoring an IQ of 160—the highest mark on the test.

It's the same score that experts believe scientist Einstein had, as well as being identical to that of Bill Gates and Stephen Hawking.

Sherwyn from Barnsley, Yorks, started school two years early and became a member of Mensa at the age of three.

He spoke his first words aged just 10 months and has been amazing his parents, teachers and doctors ever since.'

Related story: Boy genius diagnosed with autism has IQ higher than Einstein. Excerpt:

'As a child, doctors told Jacob Barnett's parents that their autistic son would probably never know how to tie his shoes.

But experts say the 14-year-old Indiana prodigy has an IQ higher than Einstein's and is on the road to winning a Nobel Prize. He's given TedX talks and is working toward a master's degree in quantum physics.

The key, according to mom Kristine Barnett, was letting Jacob be himself — by helping him study the world with wide-eyed wonder instead of focusing on a list of things he couldn't do.

Diagnosed with moderate to severe autism at the age of 2, Jacob spent years in the clutches of a special education system that didn't understand what he needed. His teachers at school would try to dissuade Kristine from hoping to teach Jacob any more than the most basic skills.'

Take that, Albert! =)

Student suspended for a year for hugging teacher

Matt · 15 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Remember: It's OK for female teachers to "have sex with" underage male students. However if one of those students hugs a teacher, it's curtains. Excerpt:

'A Duluth High School senior has been suspended for one year and won't graduate on time for hugging a teacher last month.

Sam McNair, 17, was suspended last week when a school hearing officer found he violated the Gwinnett County Public Schools' rules on sexual harassment.

"Something so innocent can be perceived as something totally opposite," said McNair.

A video of the hug, captured by a surveillance camera, shows McNair enter a room, place his arms around the back and front of the teacher and tuck his head behind her neck.

According to a discipline report, the teacher alleged McNair's cheeks and lips touched the back of her neck and cheek.

McNair denied he kissed his teacher or sexually harassed her.

McNair said he regularly hugs his teachers and has never been disciplined for it in the past.

According to the discipline report, the teacher alleged she warned McNair that hugs were inappropriate but he disputes that.'

"Censuring circumcision in Europe is about child protection, not anti-Semitism"

Matt · 15 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'(TEL AVIV) - Circumcision without consent violates a person's right to bodily integrity, a cornerstone of post-Holocaust human rights law.

Two years ago, in response to an article I wrote questioning circumcision, the British historian Geoffrey Alderman dedicated his column to my character assassination, describing me as "a leading anti-Jewish Jew of the younger generation." Though I appreciated the attention, I was disappointed – why not "the" leading anti-Jewish Jew? It would have brought my parents such nachas.

Still, I was luckier than the Council of Europe: After it passed a motion declaring the circumcision of young boys for religious reasons "a violation of the physical integrity of children," Israel's Foreign Ministry accused it of fostering "hate and racist trends in Europe." With accusations flying, the Council's special rapporteur, Marlene Rupprecht, countered that the "vote does not intend to stigmatize any religious community or its practices," but to reach "a wide consensus on the rights of children."

...

Rather than prejudice against religion, I think it makes more sense to interpret criticism of circumcision as the consistent application of human rights to both boys and girls. This is clear in the special rapporteur's Explanatory Memorandum. Concern about the genital cutting of children is best understood within thecontext of Europe's, especially Germany's, focus on human rights and medical ethics following the atrocities of the Holocaust.

Hard though it may be to hear, irreversibly removing a healthy body part – in this case, part of a boy's genitals – without consent, violates a person's right to bodily integrity, a cornerstone of post-Holocaust human rights law. It also undermines that child's right to an open future, since a boy who has been circumcised must live forever with his parents' choice.'

"Inside the British university where Muslims were segregated by sex"

Matt · 15 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. When the shoe's on the other foot, suddenly, it's bad. Meanwhile, is anyone in the MSM or on campuses protesting women-only events, spaces, etc.? Not that I've seen. Excerpt:

"With women obliged to sit yards behind chairs reserved exclusively for men, the photograph above shows the shocking reality of gender segregation at a British university.

It was taken earlier this year at a training course at Leicester University organised by its Islamic Society. The course was entitled Call Of Duty and it featured a guest speaker from a hardline Islamic group.

Rupert Sutton of campaign group Student Rights, which monitors campus extremism, said: ‘The obvious discrimination in this picture is what segregated seating can mean in practice – women pushed to the back of the hall, while men are given the best seats to see and hear the speaker.’"

Woman charged in stabbing death of husband

Mastodon · 15 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 30-year-old woman was booked Saturday on second-degree murder charges in the death of her husband, who was found stabbed to death Friday in the couple's Laurel home.

About 10:30 a.m. Friday, police were called to 8388 Frostwood Road, in Laurel, where they found Johnnie Sutton III, 38, suffering from multiple stab wounds, Anne Arundel County police said. Sutton was pronounced dead at the scene.'

The trouble with men: ‘We’re constantly competing, and we all lose’

Mastodon · 15 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

“Now that we’re men,” sing Spongebob Squarepants and his friend Patrick in a well-known animated movie, “we’re tough enough to save the day.”

In the real world, however – or at least, our bit of the western industrialised world – it’s becoming clear that while men may be tough, they’re also having a tough time. Rates of male graduation and employment are plummeting as fast as statistics for imprisonment, aggression and suicide are rocketing.

Can art play a part in changing this distressing pattern? The American actor, poet and activist Carlos Andrés Gómez is convinced that it can. Gómez has been described as Keats meets Bob Marley meets Tupac Shakur. He co-starred with Denzel Washington in the Spike Lee movie Inside Man, played a gay paramedic in ER and appeared in an episode of Friends.'

Dove for Men commercial shows man getting slapped

mens_issues · 15 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Dove for Men has an ad about the harsh conditions a man's face experiences, ending with "and four deserved slaps". Rather odd for a company trying to include men as their customers. The ad can be seen here.*

As with the KFC ad, violence against men such as this isn't deserved or funny.

You can contact Dove at http://www.dove.us/Contact-Us/.

---
*A woman's hand is seen slapping the man's face twice at the 00:15 mark in the ad.

UK: Harriet Harman and Patricia Hewitt linked to 1970s pro-pedophile lobby group

Matt · 16 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. When I saw the headline, I thought, "No way, this is jumping the shark." But then I started reading. Excerpt:

'But it doesn't take long for any right-minded person who flicks through The Magpie — dispatched quarterly in plain brown envelopes to up to 1,000 members — to realise that behind its matter-of-fact tone and appearance, something is terribly, terribly, amiss.

For the initials PIE stand for Paedophile Information Exchange. This turns out to be the name of a far-Left lobby group which spent much of the Seventies and early Eighties publicly calling for the legalisation of child sex — and the age of consent to be lowered to four.

...

Dig beneath the surface of this ugly scandal, however, and you will soon discover that Lord Rees — who died in 2006 — is a long way from being the only prominent Labourite whose good name may be tarnished by it.

For it also raises tricky questions for three of the most senior Labour figures of recent times: deputy leader Harriet Harman, former Health Secretary Patricia Hewitt, and shadow housing minister Jack Dromey, a former party treasurer and Harman's husband.

...

'The PIE somehow managed to convince feminists and the gay rights lobby that they had shared values and that we all belonged in the same club,' recalls one feminist writer whose magazine was lobbied for support by the PIE after the Exchange won NCCL affiliation.

...

Two years later, in 1978, Harriet Harman, then a newly qualified solicitor, became the NCCL's legal officer. She promptly wrote its official response to Parliament's Protection of Children Bill, which sought to ban child pornography.

Her letter claimed that such a law would 'increase censorship', and argued that a pornographic picture of a naked child should not be considered indecent unless it could be proven that the subject had suffered.

'Our amendment [to the proposed law] places the onus of proof on the prosecution to show that the child was actually harmed,' she wrote.

Such statements, from officials in what was (and is) a respected human rights organisation, may go some way towards explaining how the Labour-run Home Office of the era might have allowed public grants to be directed towards the PIE.

The NCCL presided over by Harman, Hewitt, Hodge and Dromey had, after all, helped foster an environment where woolly liberalism trumped child protection.

To many on the Left, promoting the 'rights' of paedophiles came to be regarded as a legitimate act of political subversion.'

The women behind the throne in North Korea's 'empire of horror'

Matt · 16 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. By no means do I suggest the regime leaders of N. Korea have merely been puppets of controlling mothers, wives, aunts, etc., any more than I'd suggest the Nazi leaders were being controlled by the infamous "women of the Third Reich". I am however pointing out that regimes of any kind, be they murderous dictatorships or relatively benign republics, require the active participation of everyone at or near the top-- regardless of sex. The impression that evil gov'ts are purely a consequence of the machinations of evil men isn't true. Evil women are also necessary. Excerpt:

'In the scant collection of carefully-staged photos that emerge from North Korea, Jang Song-thaek was everywhere.

At the funeral of Kim Jong-il, marching directly behind Kim Jong-un, the newly anointed Dear Leader; on an escalator, visiting a shopping centre to glorify the triumph of the regime; dressed in the uniform of a full general whispering words of wisdom into the ear of the world's youngest head of state.

Now Jang, Mr Kim's uncle and one of North Korea's most powerful men, has been erased.

The reclusive communist state confirmed his execution on Thursday. The 30-year-old Mr Kim, it appeared, was demonstrating in no uncertain terms who really ran the show.

But another tantalising suggestion is crystallising. Was Jang's death by firing squad a sign that the real power behind the throne lies with the two women in Mr Kim's life?

"The final decision on Jang Song-thaek was made by Kim Jong-un and Jang's wife, Kim Kyung-hui," said Lee Yun-keol, the head of the North Korea Strategic Information Service Centre, based in Seoul. "Jang was chosen as a prey by his wife and nephew to maintain the Kim dynasty regime."'

Female student charged with sexual assault for kissing male police officer

GaryB · 16 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

News.com.au is reporting this story from Italy. Excerpt:

'AN ITALIAN student is facing sexual assault charges for kissing a riot police officer in the middle of a protest.

Nina de Chiffre, 20, was demonstrating against the construction of a rail link in northern Italy when she came face to face with riot police. She decided to get a bit intimate with one of the officers, kissing and licking his helmet visor.

...

Then the Italian police union filed a complaint with a court in Turin, accusing Ms de Chiffre of sexual assault, La Repubblica reports.

"We have accused the protester of sexual violence and insulting a public official," said the union's general secretary, Franco Maccari.

"If the policeman had kissed her, World War III would have broken out," he said. "Or what if I had patted her on the behind? She would have been outraged. So if she does that to a man on duty, should it be tolerated?

"A kiss is a positive thing," he said. "But in this context, between these two people, it was just disrespect."

That sounds a bit cynical, but Ms de Chiffre's own words seem to back up Mr Maccari's argument. "No peace message," she wrote on Facebook. "I would hang all these disgusting pigs upside down."'

Let's see what happens - hopefully she'll keep on admitting this wasn't a harmless kiss and for once, a woman will be held as responsible as a man would be.

'It’s a Man’s World, And It Always Will Be'

Mastodon · 16 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If men are obsolete, then women will soon be extinct—unless we rush down that ominous Brave New World path where females will clone themselves by parthenogenesis, as famously do Komodo dragons, hammerhead sharks, and pit vipers.

A peevish, grudging rancor against men has been one of the most unpalatable and unjust features of second- and third-wave feminism. Men’s faults, failings and foibles have been seized on and magnified into gruesome bills of indictment. Ideologue professors at our leading universities indoctrinate impressionable undergraduates with carelessly fact-free theories alleging that gender is an arbitrary, oppressive fiction with no basis in biology.

Is it any wonder that so many high-achieving young women, despite all the happy talk about their academic success, find themselves in the early stages of their careers in chronic uncertainty or anxiety about their prospects for an emotionally fulfilled private life? When an educated culture routinely denigrates masculinity and manhood, then women will be perpetually stuck with boys, who have no incentive to mature or to honor their commitments. And without strong men as models to either embrace or (for dissident lesbians) to resist, women will never attain a centered and profound sense of themselves as women.
...
After the next inevitable apocalypse, men will be desperately needed again! Oh, sure, there will be the odd gun-toting Amazonian survivalist gal, who can rustle game out of the bush and feed her flock, but most women and children will be expecting men to scrounge for food and water and to defend the home turf. Indeed, men are absolutely indispensable right now, invisible as it is to most feminists, who seem blind to the infrastructure that makes their own work lives possible. It is overwhelmingly men who do the dirty, dangerous work of building roads, pouring concrete, laying bricks, tarring roofs, hanging electric wires, excavating natural gas and sewage lines, cutting and clearing trees, and bulldozing the landscape for housing developments. It is men who heft and weld the giant steel beams that frame our office buildings, and it is men who do the hair-raising work of insetting and sealing the finely tempered plate-glass windows of skyscrapers 50 stories tall.

Every day along the Delaware River in Philadelphia, one can watch the passage of vast oil tankers and towering cargo ships arriving from all over the world. These stately colossi are loaded, steered, and off-loaded by men. The modern economy, with its vast production and distribution network, is a male epic, in which women have found a productive role—but women were not its author. Surely, modern women are strong enough now to give credit where credit is due!'

College Men Accused of Sexual Assault Say Their Rights Violated

Mastodon · 16 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Across the U.S., female students have filed federal complaints that claim campus sexual-assault investigators lack training, fail to adequately probe incidents and treat the attackers with too much leniency.

Now, college men accused of sexual assault are protesting the same system. Taking a page from the women's complaints, men are citing violations under Title IX, the anti-gender discrimination law that women have used to demand equality in sports programming and education for 40 years.

Men are claiming the investigations are biased in favor of their accusers, who are most often women. Campus sexual-assault investigations represent a parallel criminal-justice system run by school officials without legal training in which evidence and the burden of proof are scant and punishments harsh, said Robert Shibley, senior vice president of the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education.
...
In the past two years, men either disciplined or expelled have filed discrimination cases against Xavier University in Cincinnati; Vassar College in Poughkeepsie, New York; Williams College in Williamstown, Massachusetts; Bucknell University in Lewisburg, Pennsylvania; St. Joseph's University in Philadelphia; and College of the Holy Cross in Worcester, Massachusetts.
...
Young men in college face a growing risk of being accused, said Nicole Colby Longton, an attorney who sued Holy Cross on behalf of a student accused of sexually assaulting a woman on campus.

"One sexual encounter that involves alcohol, and the next thing you know you're accused and expelled and branded for life," Colby said in a phone interview. "Schools are going to push kids to have signed waivers before they have intercourse."'

UK: Turkish football team bans men from attending game

Mastodon · 16 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'Turkish club Fenerbahce this week took the unusual step of banning all adult MALES from their Sukru Saracoglu stadium.

The Super Liga leaders refused to allow men in for one match after they came under fire for swearing in what is one of Europe's most hostile arenas.

However, the absence of testosterone from the stands didn't affect the home side.

Roared on by women and children, they ran out comfortable 4-0 winners against Akhisar Belediye on Friday.

And curiously, this isn't the first time they have gone down such a route. Back in 2011, Fener hosted Manisaspor and handed free tickets to women and children after the Turkish FA banned men following a pre-season match against Shakhtar Donetsk.'

Were Vassar hoax bias perps also involved in a false rape prosecution?

Mastodon · 16 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The two former Vassar College students who were expelled for creating hoax bias incidents and then filing false reports about them were also actively involved with the college's Sexual Assault and Violence Prevention committee, which currently faces a lawsuit for prosecuting a wrongful rape conviction.

The Daily Caller first reported that Genesis Hernandez, a transgendered student and vice president of the student government, had been named as one of two perpetrators in a string of hoax bias incidents on campus. The perpetrators wrote hateful messages on students' doors — including "Hey Tranny. Know Your Place" — and then filed false reports to the Bias Incident Response Team, of which Hernandez was the only student member. (RELATED: Shocking discovery in hoax bias incident at Vassar College)

Watchdog Wire recently reported that Henandez's partner in crime was her girlfriend, Imani Wong. Both were expelled, and could not be reached for comment because their university email addresses are no longer active.
...
Despite Yu's request to have a student sit on the adjudicating panel, his guilt was determined solely by three members of the faculty — a significant fact, given that Walker's father is a professor at the college.

As an adjudicative body at a private university, the IVP is not required to follow typical criminal court proceedings. It denied Yu the use of an attorney, prevented him from cross-examining Walker and utilized a "preponderance of evidence" standard rather than a "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard.

Yu has filed suit against Vassar for discriminating against men, breach of contract and intentional infliction of emotional distress.'

UConn Student Accused Of Making False Rape Complaint Has Charges Dropped

Mastodon · 16 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'VERNON — A University of Connecticut student accused of falsely claiming she was raped had her charges dismissed Wednesday in Superior Court in Rockville.

Isabella Himmel of Chicago was arrested in September 2012 and charged with second-degree falsely reporting an incident, second-degree making a false statement and second-degree breach of peace.

She was accepted into a diversionary program a year ago; the program required her to write a letter of apology to UConn's police chief, make a $500 charitable donation and do community service. If she completed the program successfully, she was told, the charges would be dropped.

"I was pleased today that the court did dismiss the charges against my client," her lawyer, Richard Brown, said Wednesday. "At no time did she make any admissions of any wrongdoing in the matter."
...
The university issued an emergency announcement to more than 30,000 students, faculty members and other staff warning that police were investigating a report of an aggravated sex assault.'

"Crimes Against Women Grossly Underestimated, Report Says"

Minuteman · 17 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Violence committed against women by men is vastly under-reported in many countries, a large new study finds.

Researchers analyzed data from more than 93,600 women in 24 countries who survived sexual or physical violence, often called gender-based violence. Only 7 percent of the survivors reported the incidents to legal, medical or social support services, and only 37 percent informed family, friends or neighbors.

In 20 of the 24 countries, the majority of women told no one at all, according to the study published online Dec. 12 in the American Journal of Epidemiology.

Based on their findings, the researchers concluded that reports of gender-based violence to officials may underestimate the number of actual cases by 11 to 128 times.'

Are men really that competitive?

ThomasI · 17 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Someone posted about how men should not compete so much with each other. However, I think men do know how to have fun and not compete. But the media only presents men one way.

I'd like to share a video of how some men learn compete AND have fun at the same time. (Why is it that I fully expect men to come up with stuff like this?) It is just a minute and thirty seconds, but reveals just one facet of good competition between men.

'womenshealth.gov' suddenly off-line

ThomasI · 17 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Just reporting... a few weeks ago, someone posted a link to a website called womenshealth.gov. I noticed there was no menshealth.gov. I got FEROCIOIUS AND FOCUSED.

I e-mailed all my representatives, "harassed" the Facebook page 'Democrats Abroad', e-mailed news agencies and even the White House, and e-mailed the NIH, the CDC, and other sites.

I would like to report that the web site womenshealth.gov has been non-responsive for four days now. No idea why. There is still no menshealth.gov. But I am forced to wonder what happened.

I am grateful to have met men like those I have found here. I just wanted to report this news to encourage all of you to fight the good fight. Our time is here.

Masculinity will not be feminized.

Richard Dawkins on 'Feminism invading science'

ThomasI · 17 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Just thought you might be interested in this speech excerpt (video) of Richard Dawkins.

Wikipedia on Dawkins here.

High-Ranking Women's Affairs Diplomat Allegedly Paid Nanny Only $3/Hour

Mastodon · 17 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A high-ranking Indian diplomat and women's rights activist is being accused of visa fraud and paying her children's nanny only $3.31 an hour for five months.

Devyani Khobragade, a 39-year-old mother of two, is the Deputy Consul General at the Indian Consulate in Manhattan. She's in charge of Political, Economic, Commercial and Women's Affairs, according to NDTV.

Yet from June until November of this year, Khobragade allegedly paid her family caretaker less than half of New York's $7.25 minimum wage. She's also been accused of encouraging the nanny — Indian native Sangeeta Richard — to lie on her U.S. visa application, saying she'd be making $4,500 a month rather than a measly $537.
...
They argue that her $4,000 per month salary makes it difficult to pay anything more for childcare. While Khobragade's alleged actions were totally illegal, her representation does make an interesting point about how far $4,000 goes in NYC. And for a three-person family nonetheless. The average monthly rent for a two-bedroom apartment in Manhattan is $3,923, leaving little room for food and transportation, much less an expensive babysitter.'

Teach our children well - about kissing in first grade

Mastodon · 17 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There was a lot of press last week about the 6-year-old first-grade boy who was suspended for a day from school for kissing a girl on the cheek and later on the hand after he had been told to stop kissing her. The media coverage takes the view that the administrative discipline in this case was too severe for the conduct, that boys are just being boys, and that talking about sexual harassment at that age is inappropriate and/or harmful to the children. Most of us probably would agree that both the words used and actions taken by schools in these situations need to be age-appropriate. At the same time, the idea that the underlying dynamics should be ignored, or seen as cute or natural, do all of us a great disservice.

It is precisely during these formative early years of childhood, indeed by kindergarten, that children are able to learn, and need to be taught, about respecting the boundaries of others - whether it be about toys, play areas or bodies. Additionally, these early years are critical to what girls and boys learn about sex roles and how to relate to the opposite sex.

It is not innocent play to the girl whose body is touched against her will by a boy, and then learns from either the inaction of, or trivializing by, administrators that she has no recourse and must put up with it. This can and often does create a sense of shame, fear and vulnerability in these girls that establishes a pattern for life.'

Santa's Reindeer

ThomasI · 18 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

It is the current vogue to claim Santa's reindeer are really all female since male reindeer drop the antlers in December. This is an urban hoax. Henceforth, I concede nothing to feminism. Excerpt:

'Analysis: Well, look. If we're really going to let science be our guide in this matter, the first thing we have to admit is that reindeer don't fly, let alone haul a jolly fat elf around in an airborne sleigh. And if we start down that slippery slope, there's only one conclusion we can possibly reach: Santa Claus doesn't exist. That way lies madness.

But there's a loophole.

...

The experts go on to explain that some younger bulls, depending upon hereditary and environmental factors, may keep their antlers well into spring — even as late as April.

So it is plausible to suppose that if, for the sake of argument, there were a Santa Claus, and if, for the sake of argument, he did circumnavigate the globe in a reindeer-powered sleigh every December 25th, then at least some of those reindeer — including one in particular with a shiny, red nose — could be males.

Chalk one up for tradition, if just barely.'

'Community Rewards Healthy Masculinity'

Mastodon · 18 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Thursday evening, December 12, 2013, Chad Borgen hoisted the first Healthy Man Beard Competition Trophy, donated by U.P. Laser Engraving, as the Copper Country Grand Champion.

The event was hosted to help bring awareness to the staggering extent and impact of violence against women, and to focus community attention on the transformative roles that men play in stopping this violence. According to the World Health Organization, one in three women (35.6 percent) experience sexual or physical violence worldwide, much of which occurs from their intimate partner. It is important to remember that most men are not violent; however, if this global epidemic is to ever be reduced or eliminated, it will require men to model and demonstrate healthy masculinity by stepping up, actively engaging issues of violence, and deeming it unacceptable in our society. It is not enough just to be a healthy man; earning this distinction requires courage and strength of character to stand up for others.'

In the U.K., Male Teachers Are Teaching Schoolboys the Art of Wooing

Mastodon · 18 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the Telegraph, schoolboys in parts of England have no positive male mentors and watch too much porn, and therefore, have no idea how to court a lady. To address the problem, school administrators have begun to implement a curriculum that sounds like a Dickensian version of Hitch meets Rodger Dodger.

"Young men have a skewed view of what a relationship is like because of the easy access to pornography. It's about improving self-esteem and helping them to grow up to be decent men," one administrator told the Telegraph.
...
But wait, who has mentored these mentors! Is a female teacher going to weigh in? This could all be a little blind-leading-the-blind here, if these schools aren't careful. Among those life skills already deemed crucial for the curriculum, we'd like to add the following: how to plan a date without a million texts back and forth, the proper time to play Sade during the seduction process, why you should wear deodorant, why calling your mom eight times a day is not a sexy quality, etc.'

Prisoner's sister seeks signatures for petition to allow him to see dying daughter

Matt · 19 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'My name is Jasmin Iglesia, sister of inmate #18498280 Junior Manuel Iglesias located at Wilaccy County Texas, Facility #278580, 1800 Industrial Drive, Raymondville, TX 78580. I launched this campaign on the behalf of my two nieces who need their dad during this family emergency. My brother Junior Manuel Iglesias has been held in Texas for over 5 years, 1,938 miles away from his daughters and family. He has yet to receive any visitation due to the distance and his families struggle because of their separation.

On Tuesday, November 19th, 2013 at approximately 9am his youngest daughter Yasmelin Iglesias, 16, was hit and ran over by a speeding van. Yasmelin received severe and critical injuries to her liver, brain, and lungs. She is now in ICU at a Nassau County hospital in New York. Every day since then has been a fighting struggle for her to stay with us, our prayers are the only thing we have to hold us up. Her father Junior, is in extreme emotional disbelief and pain, all he wants is the chance to hold is daughter's hand at this time.

Our family has tried to contact Willacy County Correctional Institution but have yet to make progress in moving forward with his Emergency Furlough. We ask that you help us approve his application and allow him to see his daughter during this fragile time. ...

My niece Yasmelin is unresponsive, but we feel as if her dad was to whisper in her ear she will come home to us. Their connection and love for one another is one that few have ever seen. We ask that you find it in your hearts to allow a father and a daughter to be together for what might be the final time.'

UK: Father climbs shopping centre in protest

Matt · 19 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Originally, this story was found here. But now mysteriously, it has vanished! It is not even in the Google cache indexed to the published URL. However it looks like it was snagged by at least one scrapers before it was pulled. Part of it can still be seen here. Bots and scrapers: The web's #1 defense against post-facto imposed- and self-censorship alike!

'A TUNBRIDGE Wells dad caused a stir this afternoon when he appeared on the top of a shopping centre.

Father-of-one Marcus Riley, of Rusthall, was protesting for the right to see his one-year-old daughter, Lacie.

Dressed as Father Christmas and waving a 'Fathers for Justice' banner, he scaled Royal Victoria Place's multi-storey carpark at 11:50 this morning.

At midday, he appeared on the roof at the entrance opposite coffee shop Pret A Manger.

During his demonstration, a woman stood in the road...'

SAVE E-lert: The Blithe Dishonesty of the Avon Foundation for Women

Matt · 20 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

To reduce domestic violence, we need to tell the truth about domestic violence.

Unfortunately, some Violence Against Women Act (VAWA)-funded DV organizations don't share this opinion. Or they are clueless.

One example is Avon Foundation. They claim that 85% of DV victims are female, even though the CDC National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey found that more men are victims of physical partner abuse than women.

The time has come to end the misinformation.

We have been polite long enough. Starting next year, when we see a lie, we'll call it a lie.

Help us expose the liars. Please make a tax-deductible donation HERE.

On behalf of the truth, thank you.

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Please lodge anti-circumcision replies with the U.S. State Dept re PEPFAR -- deadline is 23 December 2013

Minuteman · 20 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This is a response to the document "Proposals, Submissions, and Approvals: PEPFAR Program Expenditures" [Form Number: DS-4213, OMB Control Number: 1405-0208].

Due to a past lack of oversight by the CDC, the State Department is proposing to require recipients of PEPFAR funds to account for expenditures by program area. This response is in agreement with this requirement, also highlighting the lack of oversight and free-spending culture of the NIH at the time of sponsoring the circumcision trials in Africa, the adverse affects of funding circumcision in Africa (coercion of men and boys to be circumcised, misdirection of scarce medical resources from higher priority health areas), and continuing problems within the CDC raising questions about the capability of the organisation to oversee the activities of grantees inrecipients of federal funds.

The deadline for submissions is 23 December 2013.

This submission can be made by anybody from any country around the world.

Instructions:

Download and save the document from the following link (Click 'Download'):

http://www.2shared.com/document/xwCdzmSf/OMB_1405-0208_rev3.html

Go to the following regulations.gov submission page:

http://www.regulations.gov/#!submitComment;D=DOS_FRDOC_0001-2629

Click 'Choose files' to upload the saved document from your harddisk. Optionally, fill in the name fields. Click 'Continue'. On the preview screen click the checkbox next to 'I read and understand the statement above'. Click 'Submit'.

In case anyone experiences problems with the above 2shared link, the full-text of the response document is below, which you can copy/paste into the wordprocessor of your choice and upload to regulations.gov:

Response to “PEPFAR Program Expenditures” [Form Number: DS-4213, OMB Control Number: 1405-0208]

Thank you for the opportunity to provide feedback to “PEPFAR Program Expenditures” [Form Number: DS-4213, OMB Control Number: 1405-0208]. This response document will briefly address concerns about the ethical, legal and methodological flaws with past research informing aspects of present PEPFAR program areas; concerns about adverse consequences of PEPFAR program areas; and concerns about the absence of oversight of the activities of PEPFAR funding recipients.

Ethical, Legal and Methodological Flaws with Past Research informing present PEPFAR Program Areas

In 2011 and 2012, the Department of Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General [OIG] published a series of audit reports revealing that throughout fiscal years 2000-2010, the National Institute of Allergy and Infections Diseases [NIAID], did not comply with the time and amount requirements specified in appropriations statutes, in awarding several federal contracts to commercial partners, committing the federal government to tens of millions of dollars of expenditure ahead of appropriation of funds from Congress (OIG 2011a; OIG 2011b; OIG 2011c; OIG 2011d; OIG 2012a; OIG 2012b). During this time, NIAID also funded and sponsored research conducted abroad, that would be unlikely to receive ethical approval to be conducted in the United States, incorporating the excision of healthy tissue from subjects in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, specifically ClinicalTrials.gov registered trials NCT00059371 and NCT00425984 ['the African circumcision trials'] (NIH 2008; NIH 2007), the methodology, conclusions, ethics and legality of which have been questioned in the professional medical literature (Boyle & Hill 2011; Green et al 2010). In the years following publication of the African circumcision trials, regulatory agencies under the aegis of the Department of Health and Human Services have moved to strengthen protections afforded human research subjects and to increase the rigor with which trials conducted abroad are assessed as a basis for seeking approval of new drugs and medical devices in the U.S. market (FDA 2012; OHRP 2011), although concerns continue to be raised about the capability of National Institutes of Health [NIH] Data and Safety Monitoring Boards to ensure the safety of study subjects and validity and integrity of the data for clinical trials (OIG 2013a).

Adverse Consequences of PEPFAR Program Funding Areas

Despite the concerns identified above, the results of the African circumcision trials continue to be used to justify the en masse circumcision of men in Africa using PEPFAR funds and to justify the circumcision of boys and male infants - both in the United States and abroad - in the absence of clear and present immediate medical indications, and in the latter instance, with the tacit endorsement of U.S. government agencies in receipt of PEPFAR program funding (CDC 2011; Llewellyn 2012). In the wake of PEPFAR funding for mass circumcision programs in Africa, human rights organisations and local media in the region have reported coercion of men and boys to be circumcised (AFP 2012; Ahlberg & Njoroge 2013; Aluru 2013; Amnesty International 2013; Chibaya 2013a; Chibaya 2013b; Chirombo 2013; Dube 2012; Echwala 2013; Handable 2013; Hatyoka 2013; Langa 2012; Layoo 2013; Mbanje 2013; Mhlanga 2012; News24 2013; Ngwega 2012; Okwii 2013; Onyango 2012; Otieno 2013; Towindo 2012) and misdirection of limited medical resources from other priority areas to male circumcision (AHN 2012; Gonzalez 2012; ZimEye 2013).

Absence of Oversight

On the 15 June 2011, the OIG published a report critical of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's [CDC's] failure to oversee recipientss use of PEPFAR funds, concluding that the “lack of required documentation demonstrates that CDC has not exercised proper stewardship over Federal PEPFAR funds because it did not consistently follow departmental and other Federal requirements in monitoring PEPFAR recipients” (OIG 2011e). Further investigations by the OIG have also revealed specific failures of the CDC to monitor recipients use of PEPFAR funds in Namibia (OIG 2013c; OIG 2013d) and South Africa (OIG 2013b; OIG 2013e; OIG 2013f; OIG 2013g). In 2013, the OIG also published a report critical of the CDC's failure to oversee use of PEPFAR funds by the Vietnam Administration for HIV/AIDS Control (OIG 2013h), suggesting the possibility that more systemic problems may exist within the CDC, impacting the agency's ability to effectively oversee the activities of grantees in receipt of federal funds, and that this is not specific to difficulty with oversight of grantees in the African region.

Conclusion

Valid concerns exist about the ethical, legal and methodological flaws with past research informing aspects of present PEPFAR program areas; adverse consequences of PEPFAR program areas; and the absence of oversight of the activities of PEPFAR funding recipients. It is therefore imperative that full and complete disclosure and oversight in the proposed information collection activity take precedence over the CDC's and PEPFAR funding recipients' professed concerns for increased regulatory and administrative 'burden'.

References

AFP (2012) US urges circumcision for soldiers to fight HIV in Africa Yahoo! Health http://health.yahoo.net/news/s/afp/us-urges-circumcision-for-soldiers-to-fight-hiv-in-africa Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68Trj7ABp

Ahlberg BM, Njoroge KM (2013) 'Not men enough to rule!': politicization of ethnicities and forcible circumcision of Luo men during the postelection violence in Kenya Ethn Health. 2013 Oct;18(5):454-68. doi: 10.1080/13557858.2013.772326. Epub 2013 Jun 11 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/23758644

AHN (2012) HIV services in western refugee camps overwhelmed Gant Daily 29 March 2012 http://gantdaily.com/2012/03/29/hiv-services-in-western-refugee-camps-overwhelmed/

Aluru L (2013) Siaya County seeks forced male ‘cut’ law 2 October 2013 Standard Digital News http://www.standardmedia.co.ke/?articleID=2000094743&story_title=Kenya-county-seeks-forced-male-cut-law Accessed: 2013-12-15. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6LtnVPjiW

Amnesty International (2013) Kenya’s ICC trials Amnesty International website 16 September 2013 Amnesty International website http://www.amnesty.org/en/news/kenya-s-icc-trials-2013-09-16 Accessed: 2013-12-15. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6LtoCK3gQ

Boyle GJ, Hill G (2011) Sub-Saharan African randomised clinical trials into male circumcision and HIV transmission: methodological, ethical and legal concerns J Law Med. 2011 Dec;19(2):316-34 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/22320006

CDC (2011) Trends in In-Hospital Newborn Male Circumcision - United States 1999-2010 Prepared by Xinjian Zhang, PhD, Sanjyot Shinde, PhD, Peter H Kilmarx, MD, Robert T Chen, MD, Div of HIV/AIDS Prevention, National Center for HIV/AIDS, Viral Hepatitis, STD, and TB Prevention; Shanna Cox, MSPH, Lee Warner, PhD, Div of Reproductive Health, National Center for Chronic Disease Prevention and Health Promotion; Maria Owings, PhD, Div of Healthcare Statistics, National Center for Health Statistics; Charbel El Bcheraoui, PhD, EIS Officer, CDC. Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report (MMWR) Full-text available at http://www.cdc.gov/mmwr/preview/mmwrhtml/mm6034a4.htm?s_cid=mm6034a4_w

Chibaya, M (2013a) Resistance hinders circumcision programme The Standard Full-text available at http://www.thestandard.co.zw/2013/05/19/resistance-hinders-circumcision-programme/ Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6Ltky3cRF

Chibaya, M (2013b) Winky D tackles circumcision controversy New Zimbabwe 21 October 2013 Accessed: 2013-12-15. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6LtoaHGyi

Chirombo, S (2013) Malawi: Kasungu Registers Low Turnout for Male Circumcision allAfrica.com 5 July 2013 Accessed: 2013-07-08. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6HxNQ2VYn

Dube, C (2012) F/town adult males spurn circumcision The Monitor 21 May 2012 http://www.mmegi.bw/index.php?sid=1&aid=370&dir=2012/May/Monday21 Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68TqWHbxL

Echwala, E (2013) Zimbabwe's circumcision drive fails to take off IRIN News 9 July 2013 http://www.irinnews.org/report/98379/zimbabwe-s-circumcision-drive-fails-to-take-off Accessed: 2013-12-15. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6Ltn5kJBC

FDA (2012) FDA's HSP/BIMO Initiative Accomplishments: Update May 2012 Food and Drug Administration Full-text available at http://www.fda.gov/ScienceResearch/SpecialTopics/RunningClinicalTrials/ucm305275.htm Accessed: 2012-06-10. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68JLjWhEP

Gonzalez L L (2012) Africa: Less Global Funds, More Problems allAfrica 10 May 2012 Full-text available at http://allafrica.com/stories/201205110671.html

Green LW, Travis JW, McAllister RG, Peterson KW, Vardanyan AN, Craig A (2010) Male circumcision and HIV prevention insufficient evidence and neglected external validity Am J Prev Med. 2010 Nov;39(5):479-82 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/20965388

Handable, N (2013) Zambia: Women Should Encourage Their Partners allAfrica.com http://allafrica.com/stories/201211201412.html Accessed: 2013-12-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6LvIDW2pt

Hatyoka, B (2013) 'Sensitise subjects on male circumcision' Times of Zambia 22 May 2013 Accessed: 2013-12-15. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6LtlPFBWm

Langa, V (2012) 175 MPs to be circumcised News Day 18 May 2012 http://www.newsday.co.zw/article/2012-05-18-175-mps-to-be-circumcised/ Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68Tqz9L2u

Layoo, R (2013) Former inmates decry forced circumcision Daily Monitor http://www.monitor.co.ug/News/National/Former-inmates-decry--forced-circumcision/-/688334/2110502/-/1wm3ydz/-/index.html Accessed: 2013-12-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6Ltvm2Hi9

Llewellyn, E (2012) Infant Circumcision: A Tipping Point for HIV Prevention USAID Frontlines May/June 2012 Full-text available at http://transition.usaid.gov/press/frontlines/fl_may12/FL_may12_U5_SWAZILAND.html Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68U9lv9vt

Mbanje, P (2013) Zimbabwe government takes circumcision into the classroom The Standard http://www.thestandard.co.zw/2013/12/08/zimbabwe-government-takes-circumcision-classroom/ Accessed: 2013-12-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6LtvSfy7N

Mhlanga, P (2012) Govt sharpens knives for forced circumcision NewsDay 1 December 2012 Full-text available at http://www.newsday.co.zw/2012/12/01/govt-sharpens-knives-for-forced-circumcision/

News24 (2013) Minister urges MPs to get circumcised News24 website http://www.news24.com/SouthAfrica/Politics/Minister-urges-MPs-to-get-circumcised-20131022 Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6Ltunawpb

NIH (2008) Male Circumcision and HIV Rates in Kenya ClinicalTrials.gov website 28 May 2008 Full-text available at http://www.clinicaltrials.gov/ct2/show/NCT00059371

NIH (2007) Male Circumcision for HIV Prevention in Rakai, Uganda ClinicalTrials.gov website 23 August 2007 Full-text available at http://www.clinicaltrials.gov/ct2/show/NCT00425984

Ngwega, N (2012) Tanzania: Handeni Promotes Male Circumcision to Curb HIV Spread allAfrica.com 11 February 2012 Full-text available at http://allafrica.com/stories/201302110873.html

OHRP (2011) Regulatory Changes in ANPRM Comparison of Existing Rules with Some of the Changes Being Considered Office of Human Research Protections website Full-text available at http://www.hhs.gov/ohrp/humansubjects/anprmchangetable.html Accessed: 2012-01-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64jh4cWek

OIG (2011a) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract HHSN266-2006-00015C With NexBio, Inc. (A-03-10-03119) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 21 September 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003119.pdf

OIG (2011b) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract HHSN272-2008-00013C with the EMMES Corporation (A-03-10-03115) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 31 October 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003115.pdf

OIG (2011c) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract N01-AI-15416 With the University of California at San Francisco Audit (A-03-10-03120) on the Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 10 July 2011 Available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003120.pdf

OIG (2011d) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract N01-AI-3-0052 With Avecia Biologics Limited (A-03-10-03117) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 21 September 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003117.pdf

OIG (2011e) Review of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Oversight of the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds for Fiscal Years 2007 Through 2009 (A-04-10-04006) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 15 June 2011 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region4/41004006.pdf

OIG (2012a) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract HHSN266-2005-00022C With PPD Development, LP (Audit A-03-10-03118) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 14 September 2012 Full-text available at https://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003118.pdf

OIG (2012b) Appropriations Funding for National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases Contract N01-AI-30068 With PPD Development, LP (Audit A-03-10-03116) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 14 September 2012 Full-text available at https://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region3/31003116.pdf

OIG (2013a) Data and Safety Monitoring Boards in NIH Clinical Trials: Meeting Guidance, But Facing Some Issues (Report OEI-12-11-00070) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 28 June 2013 Full-text available at https://oig.hhs.gov/oei/reports/oei-12-11-00070.pdf

OIG (2013c) The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's Namibia Office Did Not Always Properly Monitor Recipients' Use of the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds Audit (A-04-12-04020) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 19 November 2012 Full-text available at https://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region4/41204020.pdf

OIG (2013d) The Republic of Namibia, Ministry of Health and Social Services, Did Not Always Manage the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds or Meet Program Goals in Accordance With Award Requirements (Audit A-04-12-04019) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 19 November 2012 Full-text available at https://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region4/41204019.pdf

OIG (2013b) The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's South Africa Office Did Not Always Properly Monitor Recipients' Use of the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds (Audit A-04-12-04022) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 12 February 2013 Full-text available at https://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region4/41204022.pdf

OIG (2013e) National Health Laboratory Service Did Not Always Manage President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds or Meet Program Goals in Accordance With Award Requirements (Audit A-05-12-00024) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 15 August 2013 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region5/51200024.pdf

OIG (2013f) The South African National Department of Health Did Not Always Manage President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds or Meet Program Goals in Accordance With Award Requirements (Audit A-05-12-00022) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 23 August 2013 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region5/51200022.pdf

OIG (2013g) Aurum Institute for Health Research Did Not Always Manage President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds or Meet Program Goals in Accordance With Award Requirements (Audit A-05-12-00021) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 23 August 2013 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region5/51200021.pdf

OIG (2013h) The Vietnam Administration for HIV/AIDS Control Did Not Always Manage the President's Emergency Plan for AIDS Relief Funds or Meet Program Goals in Accordance With Award Requirements (Audit A-06-11-00057) Health and Human Services Office of Inspector General website 10 June 2013 Full-text available at http://oig.hhs.gov/oas/reports/region6/61100057.pdf

Okwii, E (2013) Mbale Residents Flee Forceful Circumcision Uganda Picks 24 June 2013 http://www.ugandapicks.com/2013/06/mbale-residents-flee-forceful-circumcision-16457.html Accessed:

2013-06-26. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6HgAOPB1e

Onyango, H (2012) Kenya: The Cut for Boys to Tame HIV allAfrica http://allafrica.com/stories/201205111262.html 10 May 2012 Accessed: 2012-06-17. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/68TrTJpmb

Otieno, S (2013) Met to get cash, food prizes for circumcision The Star 22 July 2013 http://www.the-star.co.ke/news/article-129000/met-get-cash-food-prizes-circumcision Accessed: 2013-07-25. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6IMrKH0CD

Towindo, L (2012) Were we fooled? The Sunday Mail 13 July 2012 Full-text available at http://www.sundaymail.co.zw/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=29913 Accessed: 2013-12-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6LtwhZhpQ

ZimEye (2013) Zimbabwe Buys Into Controversial Israeli Style Circumcision ZimEye website http://www.zimeye.org/zimbabwe-buys-into-controversial-israeli-style-of-circumcision/ Accessed: 2013-12-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6LvHdFdC2

'Serial kissers: what you need to know about babies'

Mastodon · 20 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'People are up in arms that an adorable 6-year-old boy was suspended for sexual harassment after kissing a little girl he liked on the hand during reading group.

They say officials at Lincoln School of Science and Technology in Cañon City, Colorado took the discipline of first-grader Hunter Yelton too far even though the youngster admits his guilt.

...

As a society, we must fight nature at all costs and combat should begin before hand-kissing offenders reach the ripe old age of 6.

You've got to start these things young — like just out of the womb young.

Babies are the most dangerous serial kissers on the planet.

Stopping babies from kissing or showing any public or private affection is the only way we can live free of Hunter's brand of sexual harassment.

Nothing and no one is safe from these precious beasts.'

'Mary Poppins', just for sharing

ThomasI · 20 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Every now and then, I turn back to childhood and view a specific sequence of a specific movie: "Mary Poppins". Most people think it is about a magic lady.
Others think it is about women gaining suffrage (the wife in the story). But I have always felt the story comes to an emotional peak in this one sequence.

Sometimes men must learn what values most: their own families. Society expects and demands of men so much and many of my brothers let their lives pass them by. In this sequence, two men share the important lesson of life.

With that in mind, watch the sequence, note the return of the theme song "Spoonful of Sugar" and the recitative section without the accompaniment. Most of all, just watch the face of the father; the acting is perfection.

NPO: What Does Newtown Teach Us About Fatherhood? Last Year's Lesson Re-Learned

Matt · 21 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last year December, Ned Holstein wrote about the Newtown tragedy and Adam Lanza. With the continuing discussion and anniversary, we are running his article again. His points about fatherhood and family law reform remain pertinent to the discussion.

...

After our tears dry for the twenty little darlings and seven others who were mowed down by Adam Lanza, we begin to ask “Why?”

There is always a dominant narrative to explain the unthinkable. Now it is mostly about the absence of effective gun controls, or about mental illness. Or, we hear about the effects of violence on television and video games.

We don’t hear about the effects of fatherlessness, especially on young men. We don’t hear that the most reliable predictor of crime is neither poverty nor race but growing up fatherless. We don’t hear that a large majority of violent criminals were fatherless. We don’t even hear that young male elephants go on violent rampages unless they are kept in line by the old bulls. ...'

Math and science scores in highly feminist-influenced countries

ThomasI · 21 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This article shows the countries that score the hightest in math and science. Notice that so few -- hardly any -- are steeped in feminism. These are countries that value their men. Meanwhile, in the US, Sweden, Norway and so on, where they are no longer teaching rigorous math, where they are no longer teaching physics, where they are asking boys to study knitting, where they are devaluing the male gender... technology scores are dropping. I wonder if there is a connection? Countries that devalue men are fast losing their competitive edge. Excerpt:

'TOKYO -- The OECD's latest international student assessment shows that Asia continues to have some of the highest scoring students in the world when it comes to reading, mathematics and science.

Students in Shanghai topped all three rankings, while those in Hong Kong and Singapore ranked either second or third in each of the three categories, according to results of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development's 2012 Program for International Student Assessment, which was released Tuesday.'

Washington Post's 'Fact Checker' takes Eric Holder to task

Matt · 21 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

From SAVE:

We've found the domestic violence industry is riddled with a nearly endless assortment of half-truths, misleading claims, and outright falsehoods. See http://www.saveservices.org/camp/truth/

On Dec. 18, the Washington Post's Fact Checker Glenn Kessler reported that this claim by AG Eric Holder can now be consigned to the dustbin of "damned lies:"

“Disturbingly, intimate partner homicide is the leading cause of death for African American women ages 15 to 45.”

In 2014, SAVE will be working to expose many more of these "noble lies."

Barbara Kay: Battered women should not get away with statutory murder

Matt · 21 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a just-published book, Defending Battered Women on Trial, University of Ottawa law professor Elizabeth Sheehy argues that chronically battered women should have a “statutory escape hatch” if they kill their male abusers pre-emptively rather than “live in anticipatory dread and hypervigilance.”

That is, battered women should be allowed to get away with statutory murder — killing their abuser not in spontaneous self-defence during a crisis, say, but premeditatedly killing the man in his sleep, an action that would incur a murder charge for anyone else. A number of sympathetic Canadian courts have already exonerated such women de facto. Sheehy would like the practice to be entrenched de jure.

Sheehy not only approves of battered women taking matters into their own hands, she believes we should be “grateful” to them for ensuring they never harm any woman again. To those who argue that battered women should leave their abusers rather than kill them, Sheehy claims the women have no recourse, as full shelters often turn them away and police don’t take their complaints seriously. Many observers query such assertions, but if true, the answer is to improve services, not declare open season on men.'

‘Sexism’ charges prove bogus

Mastodon · 22 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is Harvard Law School — that liberal Utopia and bastion of political correctness — sexist?

A group of feminist students and alumni thinks so.

In a short film available online, a group calling itself the “Shatter the Ceiling” coalition claims that Harvard Law’s competitive climate is “hostile to women.”

“Hostile?” Maybe. But sexist or hostile to women, in particular? Please.

...

When I was at HLS in the early 1990s, enormous classes and campus political polarization contributed to a feeling of alienation among male and female students alike. Students were intellectually challenged, but unhappy.

Then came Dean Elena Kagan (now on the U.S. Supreme Court), and much of what made Harvard Law so miserable began to change.

Kagan reduced class size, modernized the curriculum, and dramatically upgraded the infrastructure. Most important, she personally hosted numerous community-building events and made scholars and students of all political perspectives feel welcome. Students were happier.

But although Kagan did much to improve morale, she did not sacrifice rigor. HLS remains a grind. It probably always will be.

Enter “Shatter the Ceiling” and its charges that HLS oppresses women.'

Pakistan: Yes, men face gender discrimination too

Mastodon · 22 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With feministic values seeping into the core of our society, unconstitutional ‘family only’ areas, no recognition of domestic violence against men and reserved seats for women in the assemblies, Pakistan seems to be a feminist’s dream.

Out of the total 269 elected National Assembly seats, only eight are occupied by women. Yet, 68 women sit in the assembly, thanks to the 60 seats reserved for women. The oft-cited reason for this quota is to ensure that the assemblies, both national and provincial, represent the actual population of the country.

... A 2006 study by the University of Florida, one of the first to include psychological abuse in their findings, revealed that “women are more likely than men to stalk, attack and psychologically abuse their partners”. While this may not entirely be true in Pakistan, where an overwhelming majority of domestic violence victims are indeed women, it is not uncommon for men in the country to suffer from domestic violence too.

Despite this, the recent Domestic Violence (Prevention and Protection) Bill passed in Sindh focuses only on women, failing to discuss, let alone deter, domestic violence against men.

‘Family only’ signs are common throughout the country, especially in shops, restaurants and parks. These signs are often interpreted as ‘accompanied by women’. While a group of men will be denied access to such places, a group of women will not be treated in a similar manner.

Gender discrimination is fast becoming the norm in Pakistan and if not checked, accepted sexism might soon become expected sexism. Discrimination is not the answer to inequality, it is the cause. Empower women and give them equality and respect but sexism in all shapes and forms is wrong, whether it targets men or women.'

European Central Bank fails to attract enough female applicants to fill own quota

Mastodon · 22 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The European Central Bank is struggling to attract enough women to meet its self-imposed quotas for female staff in the first round of a hiring spree as it prepares to take on supervision of the continent's largest banks next year.

The central bank has so far confirmed Daniele Nouy, previously in charge of France's prudential supervisor, as the head of its Single Supervisory Mechanism.

But applications from women in the first round of hiring have fallen short of the ECB's own targets for other senior and middle management positions, according to an official familiar with the hiring process, who did not specify by how much. Around 100 jobs have so far been advertised and have closed to new applications.'

Circumcision Failure Leads To Lawsuit: Botched Bris Caused 'Catastrophic' Injury

Mastodon · 22 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Pennsylvania rabbi has been sued by the parents of the baby boy he circumcised on April 28 in a botched ceremony that caused a "catastrophic and life-changing injury," reports Trib Total Media. Rabbi Mordechai Rosenberg, an Orthodox mohel, or ritual circumciser, acted "with a total disregard" for the child, alleges the civil lawsuit brought by parents identified only by their initials, in order to protect the identity of their son.

Attorney Neil Rosen called the accident "unimaginable" but declined to elaborate on the nature of the injury. However, the baby was rushed to a Children's Hospital for "emergency reconstructive surgery and leech therapy," according to the lawsuit. Clinical pharmacist Carrie Sorenson told Trib Total Media that "leeches help a body accept reattached parts by promoting blood flow and tissue regeneration." The infant required several follow-up visits to the hospital.'

Some UNLV faculty women say campus is stuck in 'Mad Men' days

Mastodon · 22 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women and minorities have been overlooked and underpromoted by the University of Nevada, Las Vegas, according to a letter written by eight faculty members who call for the return of former UNLV president Carol Harter as acting president because of her willingness to address these issues.
...
The letter noted Harter's "demonstrated commitment to forwarding the interests of women and other groups on campus whom we strongly believe have been largely overlooked in recent years, despite their increasing prominence in our student body and the larger community we serve."

Fifty-five percent of UNLV's students are women and 47 percent are minorities.

The letter stated that while the university has been designated a Minority-Serving Institution by the U.S. Department of Education, it has no ethnic studies department and the Afro-American Studies Program has been placed on hold. Though the majority of students are women, the women's studies department lost departmental status in 2011 and two of four faculty positions were eliminated.

"As or more importantly," the letter states, "the university has arguably lost rather than gained ground when it comes to hiring, retaining, and promoting faculty and administrators from traditionally under-represented groups and to achieving parity in pay when it comes to staff and faculty."'

Colorado school board member stands by castration remarks

Mastodon · 22 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A member of a rural Colorado school board isn't backing down from her comments at a recent meeting suggesting that transgendered boys should be castrated if they want to use the girls' restroom.

"I'm taking a stand," Delta School District 50J board member Kathy Svenson is reported as saying by the Denver Post. "It will not happen here without a change in plumbing."

Colorado made headlines several months ago when the state Civil Rights Division ruled that students could use the restroom for whichever gender they identified with. The ruling was in the case of a 6-year-old who was born a male but who identifies as female.

The Post reported that Svenson doesn't believe in homosexuality or people who are transgender, saying they're just confused. She told the Western Slope Watchdog website that she is more interested in protecting girls than in accommodating transgender students.'

Should false rape accusers be sued?

Mastodon · 22 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Eighty years -- that's about how long it took the state of Alabama to posthumously pardon the last three of nine men who were falsely accused and wrongly convicted of raping two white women on a train. They infamously were called the Scottsboro Boys, because the nine black men were just 12- to 19-years-old when they were arrested in 1931.

It turned out that the women, Ruby Bates and Victoria Price, had lied to police about the rapes. At one of the trials, Bates recanted her testimony, saying she had made it all up. Still, the all-white jury convicted the boys, one after another.

Forty-three years later, a similar story: This time it was Delbert Tibbs, who died recently of cancer. Tibbs spent nearly three years in prison in Florida after he was convicted in 1974 of a rape and murder that he had nothing to do with, according to the Florida Supreme Court.

Ancient history, you say? We've moved past those shameful days of unequal justice, you insist. Think again.

In 2012, according to the FBI, nearly 87,000 "forcible rapes" were reported. That's down 7% from the number of rapes reported in 2008. Law enforcement agencies estimate that the number of false rape accusations ranges from 2% to 8% annually, or between 2,000 and 7,000 cases each year.
...
It seems more men who insist they have been falsely accused of rape are trying a new tactic: suing their accusers in civil court, mostly for defamation. They are seeking to repair their ruined lives, save their careers and clear their names. Make no mistake, I could never defend men who rape and believe even harsher penalties are needed for rapists. But I can understand why some men are opting to fight back. And I even agree with this strategy in some cases.

TechCrunch founder Michael Arrington is fighting back. Arrington is suing his ex-girlfriend, Jennifer Allen, after she accused him in 2012 on Facebook and Twitter posts of physically abusing her and raping one of her friends (who later denied this). The case is pending.'

Woman who made false rape claim receives probation

Mastodon · 22 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Counseling requirements were included in the sentence a Mattoon woman received after she admitted making a false claim of being raped in Douglas County in October.

The counseling evaluation was one of the terms of the two-year probation sentence that Kimberly M. Binnion received for pleading guilty to a charge of disorderly conduct.

Binnion, 32, first claimed she was raped by a man after she picked him up while he was hitchhiking in a rural location between Mattoon and Arcola on Oct. 12, according to the Douglas County Sheriff's Office.

During the following week, the sheriff's office announced that investigation didn't support the her claims and she then admitted that she made the false report. Binnion was then charged with disorderly conduct, a felony offense, for allegedly making the false report of the crime.

With the terms of her probation, Binnion will have to undergo an evaluation to determine if counseling is necessary and follow the evaluation's recommendation. The sentence also included about two months in jail with day-for-day reductions possible.'

U of Maryland: Conduct evidence standard to remain

Mastodon · 23 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For most conduct code violations, the burden of proof falls to the plaintiff, who must offer “clear and convincing” proof of guilt. Sexual misconduct cases require a preponderance of the evidence for action, meaning “it is more likely than not that the incident occurred,” according to the committee.

The preponderance of evidence standard was introduced in 2011, after the federal Education Department’s Office of Civil Rights circulated a “Dear Colleague” letter asking universities receiving federal funds to do so. The 19-page letter said the human consequences of sexual assaults and their tendency to be “vastly under-reported” meant such cases should be treated differently.

“It was basically a federal mandate,” said Andrea Goodwin, director of the Office of Student Conduct. “You do it, or you risk losing federal funding.”

...

Rutgers University, Indiana University, the University of Wisconsin and the University of Michigan, Goodwin found, use preponderance standards for cases of sexual violence and violence against women and another standard for other infractions. More than half of the schools in the conference use a preponderance standard for all cases.'

An Education in College Justice

Mastodon · 23 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Both were underclassmen at Alabama's Auburn University when a common acquaintance introduced them. "We instantly became attached at the hip and did everything together," she recalled six months later. "I rather quickly moved into his place. . . . Everything was great until pretty much June 29."

That night, an intimate encounter in Mr. Strange's bed went wrong. She called police, who detained him for questioning. She said she had awakened to find him forcing himself on her; he said the sexual activity was consensual and initiated by her. There was no dispute as to the physical acts involved.
...
But the relationship soon disintegrated. Phone records show their communications ended in mid-August. In early September he was arrested again after she told police that two days earlier he had confronted her in a public place and struck her. He flatly denied it, saying he was 15 miles away at the time. This time she did press charges, for misdemeanor simple assault as well as for felony forcible sodomy in the June 29 incident.

Mr. Strange was cleared on both counts. On Feb. 3, 2012, a grand jury handed up a "no bill" indictment on the sodomy charge, meaning the evidence was insufficient to establish probable cause for prosecution. On May 24, when the simple-assault case went to trial, the accuser didn't show up. "I don't have a witness to go forward with, your honor," said city attorney Michael Short. Case dismissed.

So Mr. Strange got his day in court and was treated fairly. But he had already been punished for the unproven crimes. Auburn expelled him after a campus tribunal found him "responsible" for committing the catchall offense of "sexual assault and/or sexual harassment." A letter from Melvin Owens, head of the campus police, explained that expulsion is a life sentence. If Mr. Strange ever sets foot on Auburn property, he will be "arrested for Criminal Trespass Third," Mr. Owens warned.'

Alan Turing Pardoned: Man's Inhumanity To Other Men

redwoodwriter · 24 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Since when do women chemically castrate lesbians? Why are men so cruel to other men, especially those who don't fall into line with the traditional husband-supporting-a-woman arrangement? Excerpt:

'Dr Turing, who played a pivotal role in breaking the Enigma code, arguably shortening the war by at least two years, was chemically castrated following his conviction in 1952.

His conviction for "gross indecency" led to the removal of his security clearance and meant he was no longer able to work for Government Communications Headquarters (GCHQ) where he had continued to work following his service at Bletchley Park during the war.

Dr Turing, who died aged 41 in 1954 and is often described as the father of modern computing, has been granted a pardon - effective from today - under the Royal Prerogative of Mercy by the Queen following a request from Justice Secretary Chris Grayling.

He said: "Dr Alan Turing was an exceptional man with a brilliant mind. His brilliance was put into practice at Bletchley Park during the Second World War where he was pivotal to breaking the Enigma code, helping to end the war and save thousands of lives.
...
Iain Stewart, Conservative MP for Milton Keynes South, who was involved in the campaign to secure a royal pardon, said it was a "just reward for a man who was stripped of his honour, his work and the loyalty he showed his nation".'

Thirty circumcision deaths so far in Eastern Cape

Mastodon · 24 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Eastern Cape government has called an emergency meeting after 30 initiates were killed in the summer initiation season so far.

Eastern Cape government revealed on Monday that 30 initiates died in the province since the start of the summer initiation season.

Now the provincial government is calling on the police and the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) to prioritise the cases that have to do with the abuse and deaths of initiates at initiation schools.

On Monday, MECs of several departments – including those for local government, health, safety and liaison, social development, provincial police and members of Eastern Cape's house of traditional leaders – held an urgent meeting to discuss how to deal with the death of initiates in initiations schools in the province.'

Botched circumcision allegations against Quebec doctor grow

Mastodon · 24 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Montreal doctor accused of botching more than 30 infant circumcisions is facing another complaint about his medical conduct.

The investigative unit with Quebec's Collège des Médecins has already filed a complaint against the family doctor, documenting 31 cases in which boys who underwent circumcisions performed by Dr. Raymond Rezaie required corrective surgery.

The dates of the cases in that complaint range from July 2010 to October 2013. The matter is now before before the college's disciplinary council.'

Young Israeli Woman Puts Forward A Circumcision Without Surgeon Solution To Curb The Flow Of AIDS In Africa

Mastodon · 24 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The ongoing problem of the AIDS epidemic, which these days are centralized mostly around the African continent, is one that is of concern to millions.
While considerable strides have been made in finding a medical solution for at least curtailing the spread of AIDS, Tzameret Fuerst and her co-founders at Circ MedTech have followed an initiative instituted by the World Health Organization two years ago.

An initiative that recommended that if circumcision of males could be carried out inexpensively and effectively it would dramatically reduce the risk of being affected by the HIV/AIDS virus.

From that point onwards considerable research resources at Circ MedTech were extended to finding an inexpensive but highly effective device that would allow the male circumcision process to be carried out without the usual extensive loss of blood that typically occurs in such a situation.

The result of their research led to the development of PrePex, a simple medical device that allows male circumcision to be performed without a knife or a scalpel, or the need for any form of local anesthetic or for a physician to be present during the procedure.'

Bill Gates and the science of global health

Mastodon · 24 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Bill Gates makes big – $1.4-billion to date – donations to the Global Fund, the worldwide effort to combat and eradicate the triple scourge of HIV-AIDS, malaria and tuberculosis. Results have been remarkable. The Global Fund, operating in more than 140 countries, has 6.1 million people on antiretroviraltherapy for AIDS, has treated 11.2 million people for TB, and distributed 360 million insecticide-treated nets to protect families against malaria. But it's about far more than money and numbers.

...

"HIV is our toughest because we still have a lot of people who got HIV in the past who will progress to needing treatment. In the case of HIV a lot of the money goes to increase the number of people on treatment which avoids deaths. A fair bit of the money goes to HIV prevention, like scaling up circumcision and that will bring the numbers down. You know, we do have behavioural change … where we need to convince people not to do risky things, convince them to use condoms."'

Woman Tried to Frame Hubby in Horrendous Scheme Involving Child Porn

Mastodon · 24 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman in Pennsylvania who tried to frame her husband after she put explicit images of children on a computer has been arrested for the shocking crime.

State police arrested 42-year-old Meri Jane Woods, of Cherry Hill Township, while charging the western Pennsylvania woman with uploading explicit images involving children and also other material considered child pornography on a computer in an attempt to frame her estranged husband.

Records available online did not list and attorney for Woods and there was not a listed home phone number either.

Troopers from Indiana, Pa. say she started the investigation when she came to their barracks on Aug. 14 to report her husband sexually abused children and put images of same on their home computer, as reported by AP.

Police investigated and determined the images were put on the computer Aug. 11 but that Woods' husband left the residence July 23.

Woods is facing several charges including a felony count of sexual abuse of children related to the possession of child pornography as well as 40 counts of lying about alleged abuse incidents involving her husband.

This is not the only recent attempt of a wife trying to frame her estranged husband. A woman in Iowa was recently arrested and charged with trying to frame her husband with a gun.'

Female [athlete] participant numbers grow as Pennsylvania [school] officials wrestle with change

Mastodon · 25 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Melissa Mertz, Pennsylvania Interscholastic Athletic Association associate executive director, said the courts determined in 1975 that the PIAA could not prohibit girls from participating in boys sports or boys from participating in girls sports. Also, Title IX from 1972 states, "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving federal financial assistance," which includes athletic programs.

However, in early September, Commonwealth Court Judge Kevin Brobson ruled the PIAA can adopt a policy that bans boys from girls' teams, essentially reversing the 40-year ruling that allowed boys to compete against girls under the Pennsylvania Equal Rights Amendment.

Mertz said a survey of PIAA membership showed strong support of limiting boys on girls teams, but there has not been much discussion in limiting girls on boys teams.'

Female Integration into Combat Roles Could Harm National Security

Mastodon · 25 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'However, critics of the initiative say it comes with social and health costs that are counterproductive. And they say they are deeply skeptical of claims by military leaders that standards will not be altered.

“The Pentagon and the White House see this as being about equal opportunity—it’s not about that,” said retired Army Lt. Col. Robert Maginnis, author of the book Deadly Consequences: How Cowards Are Pushing Women into Combat, in an interview. “What kind of nation pushes its young women into direct ground combat? A nation that is willing to compromise security even more and a nation that will not survive in the long term.”
...
“If we do decide that a particular standard is so high that a woman couldn’t make it, the burden is now on the service to come back and explain to the secretary, why is it that high?” Dempsey said in January. “Does it really have to be that high?”
...
“The use of the term ‘gender-neutral physical standards’ raises questions depending on how it is defined,” the memo said. “A plain reading of the term suggests that men and women would be required to meet the same physical standards in order to be similarly assigned.”

“However, in the past, the services have used this and similar terms to suggest that men and women must exert the same amount of energy in a particular task, regardless of the work that is actually accomplished by either.”

A report released last month by the Center for Military Readiness (CMR) notes that the Marine Corps’ implementation plan for women in combat includes similar criteria. Scores for men and women on the Physical Fitness Test (PFT) and Combat Fitness Test (CFT) were “gender-normed” in 2009 in order to “account for physiological differences between genders,” according to footnotes in the plan.

For example, women receive higher scores on the CFT “Maneuver Under Fire” event—previously pass-fail—for completing it in the same time as men. A male trainee would earn the minimum of 60 points for completing it in 3 minutes and 58 seconds, while a female would earn 88 points for completing it in the same time.

As a result, a male would fail the CFT by accruing 189 points or less on three “gender-normed” exercises, while a woman with the same performances would earn a total of 247 points and qualify for the second-highest rating class.

“It is a way—whether deliberate or not—it is a way to give credit to women at a different rate than men,” said Elaine Donnelly, CMR president and former member of the Presidential Commission on the Assignment of Women in the Armed Forces, in an interview. “The problem is there is no ‘gender-norming’ on the battlefield. There is no ‘gender-norming’ when someone is in a burning vehicle.”
...
Maginnis added that female soldiers typically get promoted at equal or faster rates than men and are proficient in many positions. He is concerned about the small percentage in actual combat scenarios, he said.

“I’m only talking about the ‘tip of the spear,’ the people that are actually doing the killing,” he said. “If you are going to compromise those who are actually doing the jobs for political correctness, you could care less about the security of this country.”'

The Case for Female SEALs

Mastodon · 25 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So if the barrier to integrating women into the infantry isn't a physical one then what is it?

It's cultural. And that's why the infantry may not be the best place to start in military gender integration. Instead, as counterintuitive as it might sound, the military should begin with its Special Operations Forces: elite units such as the Green Berets and SEALs. Although not the obvious move, starting here would likely make for a smoother transition over all.

The infantry, our nation's foot soldiers, exist in a hyper-masculine culture, awash with 19-year old riflemen, "grunts" as they call themselves. For what the infantry does—combat at close quarters—that type of hyper-masculinity works. It creates an unshakable determination to accomplish the mission and to protect your friends. When fighting house-to-house in Fallujah, or valley-to-valley in Kunar Province, technology counts for very little. Culture counts for everything. That doesn't mean it can't be altered to accept women, but it will be different. Not better, not worse, but different.

So how do you responsibly alter the culture so women are accepted and the force remains effective?
...
If the military were to integrate elite formations such as the SEALs, Marine Special Operations and Army Special Forces, a few highly capable women in those communities would provide cultural proof that females can hang with "the toughest of the tough."

Instead of being dropped into the less nuanced and hyper-masculine infantry culture, these women would prove their mettle operating in a more liberal and flexible special operations culture—and one with more cachet when it comes to convincing infantrymen of their tactical prowess. Once their contributions have been made and seen, some 19-year-old grunt in the 2d Marine Division will have a hard time rationalizing how he's tougher than a female Captain whose seen active service as a Team Leader with 7th Special Forces Group.'

Merry Christmas from MANN

Matt · 25 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

For those who mark this day, MANN says "Merry Christmas!". And for those who don't, have a great day anyway!

If you are apart from loved ones, especially all you dads (and a few moms, too) out there separated from kids or your families in general due to divorce, work, or military service, an extra helping of good vibes your way.

Prof Urges White Male Students to Commit Suicide During Class

Mastodon · 25 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"If you are a white male, you don't deserve to live. You are a cancer, you're a disease, white 'males have never contributed anything positive to the world! They only murder, exploit and oppress non-whites! At least a white woman can have sex with a black man and make a brown baby but what can a white male do? He's good for nothing. Slavery, genocides against aboriginal peoples and massive land confiscation, the inquisition, the holocaust, white males are all to blame! You maintain your white male privilege only by oppressing, discriminating against and enslaving others!" Professor Noel Ignatiev [link added], a tenured professor at Massachusetts College loudly proclaimed to his class last Monday, his final teaching day before retirement.
...
Ivan Fernando: All whites, or just white males should commit suicide?

Prof. Ignatiev: Obviously, all whites need to be destroyed, but why not start with white males? They are behind most of history's greatest atrocities. Besides, some of the brothers like to bang white women. Eventually white women can breed out, but my feeling is that if you are a white male, you should kill yourself now. If you are a thoughtful person, with a social consciousness who considers himself white, you will consider suicide. It's the right thing to do. Let me read you an e-mail that I received today from a xenophobic white-supremacist.'

University Student Defends "White Male Lynching Art Project"

Mastodon · 25 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'An African American art student at Sacramento State University, Christina Edwards, is defending her art project, which features two white males dangling from a tree with nooses around their necks.

"The purpose of this performance was to bring to light social injustices and the issue of inequality that impact me and my community as a whole," Edwards said. The student used real men in her project, which divided opinions among fellow students.'

Councilwoman's comments on sexism stir up opinions in Hamilton

Mastodon · 26 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Hamilton councilwoman's comments about sexism at Tuesday's meeting have some politicians explaining, and one resident calling for her resignation.

While voting in favor of a salary ordinance that included a raise for newly elected Mayor Kelly Yaede, Councilwoman Ileana Schirmer said individuals who opposed the increase may be chauvinists because the mayor is a woman.

"When the previous mayor was there, Councilman Meara voted to give that mayor a raise, and then all that junk happened, and they rescinded it, rightfully so. If you go to the council meeting, you can see a pattern; everything the mayor proposes, Councilman Meara goes against," Schirmer said Wednesday.
...
The councilman said he is not opposed to pay increase ordinances, but that he didn't vote for this one because Yaede is newly elected and it is not during the budget process.

"She did it in the week before Christmas when no one is paying attention. For Bencivengo's, we did this in March, during the budget process," Meara said.

Former Councilman Vincent Capodanno, who was not in attendance for the comments but heard about them at a later date, is calling for Schirmer to either apologize or resign.

"She needs to apologize to the men of this town. It's a disturbing remark from someone who is supposed to respect all genders and all races. If that was me calling someone a feminist for questioning a male's pay increase, I would hear all about it," Capodanno said.'

French firms warned of fines for not complying with gender equality laws

Mastodon · 26 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The French government has warned 500 companies they face fines for failing to comply with gender equality laws.

Women's rights minister Najat Vallaud-Belkacem said the firms had been given an ultimatum to comply with anti-discrimination legislation dating back several years, but were still dragging their heels.

She said five companies were already being fined "penalties of several million euros for each month … until they bring themselves in line with the law".

"It is no longer a virtual sword of Damocles hanging over the heads of enterprises, but a real one. Suddenly the companies are sending us their professional equality plans. More than 4,000 have done so since January," Vallaud-Belkacem told Europe 1 television.

"But to be efficient, it [the legislation] has to be dissuasive and above all plausible," the minister, who has said that fining businesses who break the law is a "last resort".

French companies employing more than 50 people have been required to move towards equality in both seniority and salary since 2010, but many paid lip-service to the principle. However, in January 2012, financial penalties were introduced for non-compliance – legislation that allows the government to fine companies up to 1% of their total wage bill.

The gap between men's and women's salaries in private companies in France is estimated at 27%.'

Complaint alleges gender bias in U. Iowa track job

Mastodon · 26 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Qualified male candidates were repeatedly passed over for an assistant job in the University of Iowa track program after the athletic department quietly mandated that a woman be hired, a discrimination complaint alleges.

Track and field director Larry Wieczorek joked during the hiring process that then-assistant Mike Scott should consider having a sex change operation to improve his prospects, according to a complaint filed by Scott with the Iowa Civil Rights Commission.

In their quest to hire a woman, administrators rejected a committee's recommendation to offer the job to a highly qualified male candidate and twice rewrote the position description to try to attract female candidates, Scott alleges. After three postings spanning more than one year, the university hired Molly Jones for the position in September.'

Woman stabs fiance over wedding color scheme

Mastodon · 27 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A Richland County deputies say a 34-year-old woman stabbed her fiance on Christmas Day after they argued over what colors should be used in their wedding.

Investigators say the man was trying to leave a home near Blythewood after the argument when Krysta James attacked him around 8:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Deputies say the man was stabbed in the upper body, but his injuries weren't life threatening.

James is charged with criminal domestic violence of a high and aggravated nature. She remains in jail on a $10,000 bond and it isn't known if she has an attorney.'

Wage gap between men and women almost closed for Millennials

Mastodon · 27 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although the main reason the gap has closed is because women are earning more (they have risen by 25 percent over the last three decades), men are also bringing home less.

"This is a big part of the story," Parker says.

From 1980 to 2012, the median hourly wage for men has dropped 4 percent. For younger men, the drop has been 20 percent.

And it is even worse for young men without a college degree, Parker says.

"Young women are more likely to be enrolled in college," Parker says. "They are more likely to be getting bachelor's degrees. They're more likely to be getting many different types of graduate degrees."'

'Men Accused of Campus Rape Claim Title IX Violation, Really?'

Mastodon · 27 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nicole Colby Longton, an attorney who represented a student who sued Holy Cross for being accused of sexually assaulting a woman on campus, told Bloomberg News that young men face a “growing risk of being accused” on college campuses.

“One sexual encounter that involves alcohol, and the next thing you know you’re accused and expelled and branded for life,” she said. “Schools are going to push kids to have signed waivers before they have intercourse.”
...
Rape poses a real threat to women on college campuses, and even if these young men are innocent, their claims reveal a desire to maintain a status quo that makes it easy for men to perpetrate crimes and difficult for women to report them. It’s one thing to protest that you were wrongly accused. It’s another to suggest that universities are making it too easy for victims to report crimes and seek justice.'

Female Marines still not required to do pull-ups while males are

Mastodon · 28 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Females in the Marine Corps currently are not required to do even a single pull-up, and a deadline mandating that by Jan. 1, 2014, they be able to do at least 3 pull-ups as part of their training has been delayed for at least a year, the Corps quietly announced on social media.

Unlike their female counterparts, male Marines have long been required to do at least 3 pullups as part of the Physical Fitness Test (PFT). That's the minimum requirement for males.

...

Currently, “women aren’t able to make the minimum standard of three pull-ups,” Marine spokesman Capt. Eric Flanagan told CNSNews.com. Fifty-five percent of female recruits tested at the end of boot camp were unable to do three pull-ups (1 percent of male recruits also failed).

Marine officers told NPR off-the-record that, given the three-pull-ups rule, they were afraid of losing “not only new recruits, but also current female Marines who can’t pass the test.”'

Former Minneapolis mayoral candidate beaten by teen girls during robbery

Matt · 28 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Mark Andrew, 63, was at a Starbucks inside the mall at around 7 p.m. Thursday when a man grabbed his phone off his table and ran off.

When Andrew went after him, he was tackled by two teenage girls – aged 18 and 17 — one of which began beating him with a billy club. During the attack, they told Andrew, “We’re going to kill you,” police say.

Andrew was left with a large gash on his head that required nine stitches. He has since been released from the hospital.
...
The two women who attacked Andrew were arrested and are in custody. The 18-year-old was identified as Letajia Shapree Cutler-Cain, of Brooklyn Park. She is pictured above and is being held pending felony charges of aiding and abetting aggravated robbery.

Police are still searching for the male suspect.'

Camille Paglia: A Feminist Defense of Masculine Virtues

Mastodon · 28 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What you're seeing is how a civilization commits suicide," says Camille Paglia. This self-described "notorious Amazon feminist" isn't telling anyone to Lean In or asking Why Women Still Can't Have It All. No, her indictment may be as surprising as it is wide-ranging: The military is out of fashion, Americans undervalue manual labor, schools neuter male students, opinion makers deny the biological differences between men and women, and sexiness is dead. And that's just 20 minutes of our three-hour conversation.

When Ms. Paglia, now 66, burst onto the national stage in 1990 with the publishing of "Sexual Personae," she immediately established herself as a feminist who was the scourge of the movement's establishment, a heretic to its orthodoxy. Pick up the 700-page tome, subtitled "Art and Decadence From Nefertiti to Emily Dickinson, " and it's easy to see why. "If civilization had been left in female hands," she wrote, "we would still be living in grass huts."
...
For all of Ms. Paglia's barbs about the women's movement, it seems clear that feminism—at least of the equal-opportunity variety—has triumphed in its basic goals. There is surely a lack of women in the C-Suite and Congress, but you'd be hard-pressed to find a man who would admit that he believes women are less capable. To save feminism as a political movement from irrelevance, Ms. Paglia says, the women's movement should return to its roots. That means abandoning the "nanny state" mentality that led to politically correct speech codes and college disciplinary committees that have come to replace courts. The movement can win converts, she says, but it needs to become a big tent, one "open to stay-at-home moms" and "not just the career woman."'

Boys get cancer, too

Mastodon · 28 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So far in Canada, P.E.I. is the only province offering free vaccines for boys, with Alberta planning to follow suit in the fall.

Would such a vaccination program be expensive? Yes it would, but there are far greater costs at stake — we're talking about preventing human suffering and, in come cases, death.

This province vaccinates girls, which is important, since HPV causes cervical cancer. But it can also cause genital warts, and anal, penile and throat cancers in boys.

...

The Department of Health told The Telegram recently: "The high uptake of the HPV vaccine among girls has protected approximately 50 per cent of the population, which significantly lowers the possibility of contracting and transmitting the virus between sexes."

That's an awfully narrow view of the world.

What about males who have sex with males? What about males who travel and have sex with females who have not been vaccinated? Our young men are hardly living in a bubble; they can move about, after all.

The policy of vaccinating only girls discriminates against boys on a couple of levels — one, by suggesting that only girls deserve this measure of protection and two, by ignoring the fact that HPV can be transmitted between men.'

Is circumcision a right?

Mastodon · 28 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For the past two months, the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe (PACE) has been vilified as “anti-Semitic,” “anti-religious” and “insane” and has been accused of promoting “hate and racist trends in Europe ” for adopting, by overwhelming majority, a resolution on children’s right to physical integrity. As the head of the committee that unanimously approved the draft texts in June — after two parliamentary hearings and several committee discussions — I have been saddened by this reaction, much of which has been characterized by bad faith or ignorance about what we said. So I want to set the record straight.

...

The assembly has been criticized for including the circumcision of young boys for religious reasons in a list of violations of the physical integrity of children. Our resolution noted that “supporters of the procedures tend to present [it] as beneficial to the children themselves, despite clear evidence to the contrary.” This list also included female genital mutilation, early childhood medical interventions in the case of intersex children, and the submission to or coercion of children into piercings, tattoos or plastic surgery. All of these interventions permanently alter a child’s body in some form or another, only to very different degrees.

...

It is a basic tenet of human rights law that one right may well conflict with another. The classic case is the right to privacy vs. the right to free speech. Regarding the circumcision of young boys for religious reasons, children’s right to physical integrity conflicts with parents’ right to freedom of religion. As many of its resolutions show, the assembly has been a strong supporter of religious rights. But in this case, when considering the relative weight of the human rights in question, the assembly gave precedence to the rights of children.

...

There is not, and cannot be, a “right” to circumcise young boys. Children are not mini-beings with mini-human rights. By contrast, in an accompanying recommendation, our assembly invited European governments to consider making “children’s right to physical integrity” a continent-wide standard.

...

Religious practices deserve the most profound respect — but not when they result in irreversible harm to children.'

Fathers suffer under old domestic violence laws

Mastodon · 28 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the 1980s, laws were put into place nationwide to protect women and children from abusive relationships. However, now the laws that once were instituted for the purpose of protecting women and children from abuse have morphed into a giant loophole to allow fraud and gross abuse of power. These laws made no provisions for men or fathers who have been victimized by domestic violence. Domestic violence against men has been largely ignored and has radically increased. Case in point, the murder of Travis Alexander by his ex-girlfriend, Jodi Arias. This "loophole" has allowed vindictive women to use protective orders as a means to falsely report their child/ren's fathers accusing them of some form of domestic violence and/or falsely report allegations of sexual abuse.

Everyday there are good fathers who work hard and sacrifice for their children, yet they are experiencing one of the most tragic and heartbreaking injustices of our time. The mother's hatred for the child's father is far more powerful than the love for their children. This hatred is spiraling out of control in our family courts and thousands of men in our state and hundreds of thousands nationwide are being brought up against false allegations of abuse and losing their children. Family courts are overburdened and women are hell-bent on making sure the fathers of their children never have a relationship with their kids. This in itself is child abuse of the most tragic form. Even more tragically, the court system is helping this to happen and soon we will be a nation of fatherless children.'

Texas father reunited with 2-year-old son placed for adoption in Utah this summer

Mastodon · 28 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When Samuel Gerome Dye got the news, he says he went crazy with joy: He ran, he danced, he screamed, he sang in the street.

And then Dye made a beeline for Utah, driving nonstop from Dallas through a blizzard in New Mexico and arriving last Friday to retrieve his 2-year-old son, whom a judge in Utah's 4th District Court decided last week had been improperly placed for adoption here in July.

On Saturday, Dye and his son Samir traveled home together, putting miles and a nightmare behind them.'

Please lodge anti-circumcision replies with the FDA (Re: foreskin fibroblasts in medical products) - deadline is 3 Jan., 2014

Minuteman · 29 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

This is a response to the document "Human Tissue Intended for Transplantation" [OMB control number 0910-0302, Docket ID FDA-2013-N-0797-0003].

The deadline for submissions is 3 January 2014.

This submission can be made by anybody from any country around the world.

Instructions:

Download and save the document from the following link (Click 'Download'):

http://www.2shared.com/document/WX8SRAgQ/FDA-2013-N-0797-0003.html

Go to the following regulations.gov submission page:

http://www.regulations.gov/#!submitComment;D=FDA-2013-N-0797-0003

Click 'Choose files' to upload the saved document from your harddisk. Optionally, fill in the name fields. Check any boxes under the name field which apply to you and complete any required fields. Click 'Continue'. On the next page, click the box next to 'I read and understand the statement above' and then click 'Submit Comment'.

In case anyone experiences problems with the above 2shared link, the full-text of the response document is below, which you can copy/paste into the wordprocessor of your choice and upload to regulations.gov:

Response to "Human Tissue Intended for Transplantation" [OMB control number 0910-0302, Docket ID FDA-2013-N-0797-0003]

Thank you for the opportunity to provide feedback to "Human Tissue Intended for Transplantation" [OMB control number 0910-0302, Docket ID FDA-2013-N-0797-0003]. This response document will briefly address the ethical and safety concerns associated with utilitising foreskin-derived ingredients in medical and cosmetic products.

Ethical and safety concerns associated with utilitising foreskin-derived ingredients in medical and cosmetic products

Circumcision of male minors, in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, is a controversial practice within the medical profession (KNMG 2010; Smith 2011; Svoboda & Van Howe 2013). Despite this, more than 1.14 million circumcision procedures were performed on male infants in U.S. hospitals in the year 2010 (AHRQ 2013). Foreskins excised from minors in the absence of a clear and present immediate medical indication, almost invariably present in a normal healthy state, and as such their excision and preservation contributes little to the study of the pathology of disease.

Products derived from foreskins excised en masse from minors in the absence of clear and present immediate medical indications, are frequently utilised in the commercial medical product, and more especially cosmetics industries (Advanced Healing 2011; Ballantyne 2009; Business Standard 2013; LifeCell 2012; Organogenesis 2011; Pitman 2008; SkinMedica 2011). As observed by the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services Office of Human Research Protections, "Changing technology in the field of genomics has dramatically increased the amount and nature of information about individuals that can be obtained from their DNA" (OHRP 2011). Valid concerns therefore exist for the future privacy of children whose healthy tissues are likely to be acquired by commercial interests in the cosmetic and medical product industries - and may be retained indefinitely - due to presently unforeseeable technological advances in the field of genomics.

Doubts exist about the appropriateness of utilising products derived from foreskin and other healthy tissue excised from minors, in the cosmetic and medical product industries, on the basis of exculpatory consent forms signed by parents and legal guardians of minors, and whether it is appropriate for parents and legal guardians to give explicit consent for these purposes.

The provision of information to parents on circumcision consent forms about the storage, transfer, processing, sale or any other use of excised healthy foreskins is unstudied. However, a survey conducted by Schaefer et al (2011) of consent forms from U.S. in vitro fertilization clinics and the provision of information to egg donors of the potential for embryonic research using donated eggs, concluded that “egg donors in the United States, including some who may have a moral objection to research and stem cell research, are not being informed that embryos created with their donated eggs may in fact be used for these purposes”, suggesting the possibility that incomplete information is also being provided to parents about the use of foreskin and other healthy tissue excised from minors. Similarly, information about the original source of human skins cells used in cosmetic and medical products, has been ominously absent from the websites of some manufacturers who utilise foreskin-derived ingredients in their products (LifeCell 2012; SkinMedica 2011).

Cellulitis and osteomyelitis have been reported as complications in several studies drawn from the clinical literature for FDA regulated skin-substitute products incorporating foreskin-derived ingredients (AHRQ 2012). Further, as observed by Dr Ron Moy, a dermatologist at the David Geffen School of Medicine at the University of California, Los Angeles, foreskin cells can potentially carry viruses, and although foreskin fibroblasts may be screened for contamination, there is "no test that's perfect" (Ballantyne 2009).

Action Required

Future regulatory and policy decisions must address the ethical issues concerning the privacy of children whose healthy tissues are likely to be acquired by commercial interests in the cosmetic and medical product industries [due to presently unforeseeable technological advances in the field of genomics]; the extent to which parents and legal guardians can give consent for the use of foreskin and other healthy tissue excised from minors in the in the cosmetic and medical product industries; and the provision of information to parents and guardians in exculpatory consent forms. In the interim, safety concerns associated with utilitising foreskin-derived ingredients in medical and cosmetic products, mandate that full and complete disclosure in the proposed information collection activity take precedence over manufacturers professed concerns for increased regulatory and administrative 'burden'.

References

Advanced Healing (2011) Dermagraph Active Living Cells Overview Link http://www.dermagraft.com/about/overview/ Accessed: 2012-01-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64jhakjim

AHRQ (2013) Most Frequent Procedures Performed in U.S. Hospitals, 2010 Statistical Brief #149 prepared by Pfuntner, A (Truven Health Analytics), Wier, LM (Truven Health Analytics), Stocks, C (AHRQ) February 2013 Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, Rockville, MD Full-text available at http://www.hcup-us.ahrq.gov/reports/statbriefs/sb149.jsp Accessed: 2013-07-10. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6I0JloBRv

AHRQ (2012) Skin Substitutes for Treating Chronic Wounds Technology Assessment Report Project ID: HCPR0610 prepared by David L. Snyder, Ph.D. (ECRI Institute EPC), Nancy Sullivan, B.A. (ECRI Institute EPC), Karen M. Schoelles, M.D., S.M., F.A.C.P. (ECRI Institute EPC) 18 December 2012 Agency for Healthcare Research and Quality, Rockville, MD Full-text available at http://www.ahrq.gov/research/findings/ta/skinsubs/HCPR0610_skinsubst-final.pdf

Ballantyne, C (2009) A Cut above the Rest?: Wrinkle Treatment Uses Babies' Foreskins Scientific American 12 February 2009 [Epub] Full-text available at http://www.scientificamerican.com/article.cfm?id=a-cut-above-the-rest-wrin Accessed: 2012-01-18. Archived by

WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64mLMhvCA

Business Standard (2013) Circumcised foreskins may provide new baldness treatment Business Standard website 21 October 2013 Full-text available at http://www.business-standard.com/article/pti-stories/circumcised-foreskins-may-provide-new-baldness-treatment-113102100652_1.html Accessed: 2013-12-27. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/6MAiVH64J

KNMG (2010) Non-theraputic circumcision of male minors Royal Dutch Medical Association Full-text available at http://knmg.artsennet.nl/web/file?uuid=579e836d-ea83-410f-9889-feb7eda87cd5&owner=a8a9ce0e-f42b-47a5-960e-be08025b7b04&contentid=77976

LifeCell (2012) AlloDerm Tissue Matrix defined Full-text available at http://www.lifecell.com/alloderm-regenerative-tissue-matrix/95/ Accessed: 2012-01-18. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64mqrqxmQ

OHRP (2011) Regulatory Changes in ANPRM Comparison of Existing Rules with Some of the Changes Being Considered Office of Human Research Protections website Full-text available at http://www.hhs.gov/ohrp/humansubjects/anprmchangetable.html Accessed: 2012-01-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64jh4cWek

Organogenesis (2011) Apligraf: How Is It Made? Link http://www.apligraf.com/professional/what_is_apligraf/how_is_it_made/ Accessed: 2012-01-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64jhpT91Q

Pitman, S (2008) Babies' foreskin dubbed as new anti-aging treatment Cosmetic Design Full-text available at http://www.cosmeticsdesign.com/Formulation-Science/Babies-foreskin-dubbed-as-new-anti-aging-treatment Accessed: 2012-01-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64ji8mqbP

Schaefer GO, Sinaii N, Grady C (2011) Informing egg donors of the potential for embryonic research: a survey of consent forms from U.S. in vitro fertilization clinics Fertil Steril. 2011 Dec 22. [Epub ahead of print] Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/22196714

SkinMedica (2011) Key Ingredients Link http://www.skinmedica.com/skin-care-products/skin-rejuvenation/tns-recovery-complex#tab2 Accessed: 2012-01-16. Archived by WebCite at http://www.webcitation.org/64jiK7Gdx

Smith JF (2011) The professional imperative for obstetrician-gynecologists to discontinue newborn male circumcision Am J Perinatol. 2011 Feb;28(2):125-8. Epub 2010 Aug 10 Abstract available at http://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed?term=20700861

Svoboda JS, Van Howe RS (2013) Out of step: fatal flaws in the latest AAP policy report on neonatal circumcision J Med Ethics. 2013 Mar 18. [Epub ahead of print] Abstract available at https://www.ncbi.nlm.nih.gov/pubmed/23508208

Parents sue mohel after accidental penile amputation of infant

Mastodon · 29 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A local rabbi is being sued after allegedly botching a bris, the traditional Jewish circumcision ritual, and severing a newborn boy's penis.

The incident detailed in the lawsuit happened at the Tree of Life Synagogue in Squirrel Hill within the last year.

The Jewish circumcision ceremony was performed by Pittsburgh Rabbi Mordechai Rosenberg – who is also a mohel.

Sometime during the bris, according to the lawsuit, Rosenberg severed the baby boy's penis.

The baby was rushed to Children's Hospital, where doctors performed emergency microsurgery.

"If your finger, your thumb was cut off and was put back on, that is pretty exciting," said renowned UPMC plastic surgeon Dr. Joe Losee.

Dr. Losee was not involved in the boy's treatment and he can't talk specifics.

But our sources say it took eight hours. The baby needed six blood transfusions and was hospitalized for nearly two months. Sources describe the reattachment procedure as successful.
...
Rabbi Rosenberg told KDKA "I am trained in this." He also called the case a "tragic accident" and a "horrible situation." But also said he continues to perform circumcisions.

Sources close to the case say, while the baby is recovering, there's no way to know if he'll make a complete recovery. The incident happened about eight months ago.'

Woman beats and stabs man with ceramic squirrel for not bringing beer from store

Mastodon · 29 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'South Carolina authorities say a 44-year-old woman angry at a man for returning home without beer on Christmas beat and stabbed him with a ceramic squirrel.

The Charleston County Sheriff's office says in a report that deputies found a man covered with blood when they arrived at Helen Williams' North Charleston home early Wednesday. She told investigators the man fell and cut himself, but couldn't explain why her hands and clothes were also bloody.

Deputies say the man said Williams was so angry when he returned without beer because stores were closed on Christmas Eve that she grabbed a ceramic squirrel, beat him in the head, then stabbed him in the shoulder and chest.

Williams was in jail Friday and charged with criminal domestic violence. It wasn't known if she had a lawyer.'

"Bridging the Gender Gap: Encouraging Girls in STEM Starts at Home"

Mastodon · 29 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Aticle here. Excerpt:

'The 21st century has been defined by rapid innovation in the science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) fields -- a trend showing no signs of slowing down. In 2011, women surpassed men in attaining bachelor's and advanced degrees for the first time, according to the U.S. Census. Despite these developments, a gender gap persists in the STEM workforce and is only getting wider. In computer science, only 18 percent of American college majors are women, a number that has been declining over the last 30 years (National Center for Women & Information Technology, 2012). When it comes to university professors, just 17 percent of tenure-track faculty in mathematics are female, and a paltry 11 percent in engineering (National Science Foundation, 2008). Even with vast differences in the pursuit of STEM careers, it is notable that standardized measures of math performance show no meaningful differences between males and females from elementary school through college.
...
If we know that by kindergarten, boys and girls have different attitudes toward math, where did these ideas come from? With my colleagues Catherine Sandhofer and Christia Brown, I conducted an analysis of everyday speech between mothers and their preschool-aged children (toddlers, with an average age of 22 months). The findings were surprising. Even at this young age, mothers spoke to boys two to three times as often about numbers and quantities compared to girls. For example, phrases such as "he has two eyes" or "How many feet do you have?" appeared nearly three times more in mother-son conversations than mother-daughter ones. In line with previous work on gender socialization, the greater confidence that boys show by early elementary school might be influenced by early experiences at home with their parents.'

Closing the College Gender Gap

Mastodon · 29 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you have been following education hot button issues for any length of time, you've likely read about the nationwide push to better encourage girls in areas like science, technology, engineering and math (STEM). The thought is that by showing young women that these topics are just as appropriate for them as their male peers, more women will find lasting careers in these traditionally male-dominated fields.

I'm all for more women in the STEM workplace but with all this focus in one area, are educators neglecting an even larger gender gap issue?

Nationally, over 57 percent of college attendees are female when public and private school stats are combined. Females have been consistently edging ahead of their male classmates since the late 1970s when the percentages flip-flopped. Aside from all-female schools, there are others that have marked disproportionate numbers. Pacific Oaks College in Pasadena has nearly 96 percent females in attendance, and the University of Tennessee Health Sciences Center in Memphis has over 93 percent. At Indiana University Northwest, located just outside Gary, 67 percent of the student population is female.'

Wife Charged After Attempting To Blind Husband With Bleach In His Eye Drops

Mastodon · 29 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A woman in Canton admitted to police that she replaced the liquid in bottle of eye drops with bleach, knowing that her husband would use the drops.

He didn't suffer permanent injury, but his 35-year-old wife is facing domestic violence charges due to the incident which happened on October 12.

The couple apparently have ongoing domestic issues and it fairly certain this will not ease the road to wedded bliss.

Police also confirm that the woman admitted to placing an ad on Craigslist to pay someone to assault her husband.'

Female suicide bomber kills at least 16 at Russian train station

Mastodon · 29 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'VOLGOGRAD, Russia (Reuters) - A suicide bomber set off a blast in the entrance hall of a Russian train station on Sunday, investigators said, killing at least 16 people in the second deadly attack within three days as the country prepares to host the Winter Olympics.

Authorities said the attacker detonated a shrapnel-filled bomb in front of a metal detector just inside the main entrance of the station in Volgograd, a busy hub north of the violence-plagued North Caucasus region on Russia's southern fringe.

Islamist militants in the North Caucasus have carried out a long string of attacks since President Vladimir Putin came to power in 2000. They now confront him with his biggest security challenge, threatening to disrupt the Olympics that start in the Black Sea resort of Sochi in 40 days.

Footage shown on TV captured the moment of the blast, as a massive orange fireball filled the hall of the stately, colonnaded station and clouds of grey smoke poured out of shattered windows.
...
The federal Investigative Committee and other officials initially said a female suicide bomber had blown herself up after a police officer started to approach her near the metal detector because she looked suspicious.
...
It said authorities had identified her as a resident of Dagestan, the province adjacent to Chechnya and now the center of a long-running Islamist insurgency, and the widow of two militants who were both killed by Russian security forces.
...
Interfax cited law enforcement sources as saying authorities believed the attacker was a man who brought a bomb into the station with a rucksack. Some bombs carried by female suicide bombers have been set off remotely by male accomplices.

So-called 'black widows', seeking to avenge fallen husbands, were involved in a deadly Moscow theatre siege in 2002 and have been behind several bombings including twin suicide attacks that killed 40 on the Moscow subway in 2010.

"We can expect more such attacks," said Alexei Filatov, deputy head of the veterans' association of the elite Alfa anti-terrorism unit.'

Bills aim to ease adoption process in Ohio

Mastodon · 30 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'State lawmakers in both chambers are considering a plan to make the adoption process quicker and less expensive for adoptive parents, a goal anti-abortion advocates outlined earlier this year, but some involved in the process say the plan is unnecessary.

A pair of bills in the House and Senate would increase the state adoption tax credit to $10,000 from $1,500, shorten the time line for finalizing an adoption and give birth parents notice of their rights early in the process to help prevent birth parents from claiming children after the child has been placed with an adoptive family.
...
Both bills shorten the amount of time before an adoption is finalized to 60 days from one year and reduce the time a birth father has to register with the state and preserve his right to consent to the adoption to seven days from 30 days.

Sen. Shannon Jones, R-Springboro, said she introduced the Senate version after many discussions with adoption advocates. Jones said the one-time $10,000 tax credit is a small sum compared to the state fostering children at about $25,000 per child per year.
...
The Senate bill also requires birth mothers to send notice to the presumed father before birth, and the father must then register in a state database called the Putative Father Registry to receive future information about the adoption.

Smith, who attempted to register himself in the little-known database as an interested law school student, said seven days after birth is not enough time for a birth parent to hire a lawyer and get advice for how to proceed. About 60,000 unwed mothers give birth each year in Ohio, but only 538 men registered with the state from 2011 to September 2013.

“They want to make it easier to trip up fathers,” Smith said.'

"I cut my ex out of our daughter's life: Now I'm glad he fought tooth and nail to see her"

Matt · 30 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm so lucky to have a mummy and daddy,' she said, hugging me. As I cuddled her back, I felt a terrible stab of guilt in my stomach.

For Ruby nearly didn't have a daddy. For the first two-and-a-half years of her life, I did everything I could to scupper her relationship with her father.

In a fit of selfish pique, I attempted to come between them and deny them the right to love each other.

It was the most spiteful thing I've ever done.

Thank God her father, James, fought me all the way and dragged us through the hell of solicitors, legal bills and finally to the Family Court, where he won access to his little girl — access that was his by right.

He never gave up. Such is the testament of his love for Ruby. And for that, I will never be able to thank him enough.'

Woman Busted For Attacking Live-In Boyfriend When He Refused To "Cuddle" In Bed

Mastodon · 30 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Florida woman was arrested early Saturday for battering her live-in boyfriend after he refused to “cuddle” with her when they went to bed, police report.
...
The couple subsequently quarreled, a deputy reported, “over Henry refusing to ‘cuddle’ with Shavonna when they went to bed.” The argument “turned physical when Shavonna grabbed Henry by the shirt, causing it to tear.” Price then attempted to leave the couple’s Bradenton residence to “prevent any further argument and Shavonna didn’t want him to leave.”
...
Rumph, pictured above, was charged with misdemeanor domestic battery and booked into the county jail, from which she was released Sunday.'

How feminists and feminism has destroyed masculine and feminine roles

Mastodon · 30 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I regret not getting married when I was young. More specifically, I wish I had focused on the marriage factor, asking myself what I wanted more: a career or a family.

Unlike my mother's generation where gender roles were uniquely defined and respected in America, the 1960s feminist movement and the offspring of liberalism has led to the death of masculinity in America today.

Gender roles have eroded to non-existence.

Starting in elementary school, teachers are drowning boys in "sensitivity," turning men into little 'sissies'. "They are making a toxic environment for boys. Primary education does everything in its power to turn boys into neuters," asserts anti-feminist Camille Paglia in a recent interview.

She is absolutely correct. These same little boys grow into adults who suppress their manhood to live in a politically correct prison with "no models of manhood," adds Paglia.'

Ed. note: Kris, a new year's present for you. :)

Playing high school sports may be tied to older men's good health

Mastodon · 30 December 2013 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Playing varsity sports in high school appears to be an important link to health after age 70, according to a new study by Swiss and U.S. researchers.

Researchers examined the backgrounds, behaviours and personalities of a group of men over 70 who had previously passed a strenuous physical exam more than 50 years earlier when they were screened for military duty in the U.S.

Though the study is limited in variety — for example, the subjects are all men from the U.S. and from a narrow social and ethnic group — it marks what researchers say is the first long-term study of childhood exercise and its correlation to health over a long period of time.

...

In total, 712 Second World War veterans, averaging age 78, participated in the study. They had answered the survey back in 2000 but the data was not analyzed until 2012.

At the time the men were screened for military duty, 47 per cent of the U.S. population had been precluded due to malnutrition, physical problems or illiteracy. Those who did make it into the service were considered the cream of the crop, so to speak.

...

Researchers discovered a strong correlation between those who played high school sports and were non-smokers, and their good health later in life.

The study urges "school-based organized sports ... be preserved because they contribute to later physical activity levels" and better health.

They concluded that "relatively vigorous exercise and physical education classes could be promoted across grade levels [and] they need not concentrate on competition but rather on enjoyment."'

BBC Newsnight takes viewers inside Femen boot camp

Mastodon · 1 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. (Ed. note: NSFW, since it shows Femen members topless.) Description:

'The Paris-based sextremist group Femen says it's against the sexualization and objectification of women.

But to achieve this goal, its members go topless in front of the cameras and shout political slogans decrying organized religion, political tyranny, homophobia, and sexism.

So have Femen members become sex objects even though they so vehemently declare that they're opposed to patriarchy?

This is one of the questions explored in a BBC Newsnight documentary, which takes viewers inside a Femen boot camp.

Check it out by watching the video above. It's one of the more thought-provoking examinations of Femen that you'll find on the Internet.'

Dad files $130M lawsuit after son in Utah is given up for adoption

el cid · 1 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A dad whose newborn son was given up for adoption by the birth mother — without his knowledge — is seeking $130 million in a lawsuit testing the boundaries of a biological father's rights in Utah.

The adoption of Jake Strickland's son just after he was born Dec. 29, 2010, was illegal and done "through gross misdirection and … clandestine conduct," claims the suit filed Friday in the U.S. District Court of Utah.

Strickland alleges the mother, Whitney Pettersson, conspired with the adoptive parents, the adoption agency and attorneys to give up the boy — named "Baby Jack" in the suit — without allowing him to seek custody.

The complaint also strikes at Utah's parenting laws, accusing them of being "pro-adoption and anti-birth father."'

Why aren't men speaking up on gender issues?

Mastodon · 1 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mary Curnock Cook, the head of the university admissions service, Ucas, appeared to back Willetts, saying she was “very worried about the gap between males and females” and “beginning to look at men as looking more like the disadvantaged group”.

And it’s not just the world of education where men and boys are being attributed with minority status. The news that men are more likely to die from eight of the world’s top 10 most burdensome diseases was greeted by Dr Sarah Hawkes at the Institute of Global Health as more evidence that men are being ignored. According to Hawkes:

“When it comes to health, contrary to what most people would expect, men actually suffer at least equally and usually more from gender norms and gender behaviours than women do and have less access to the means to mitigate those norms.”

Meanwhile, Jane Powell, CEO of the UK’s only national male suicide prevention charity, CALM, told BBC Radio 4’s today programme that the Department for Health was failing to target suicide prevention work at men, because unlike other special interest groups, “we don’t really see men as needing help in anyway or as being vulnerable”.

Even the high-profile divorce lawyer Marilyn Stowe spoke up on behalf of men this year when she slammed the Ministry of Justice for excluding men from its legal aid guidance to victims of domestic violence.'

Unbelievably lenient sentence for cop who conducted illegal bodily-intrusive searches of black male suspects

Matt · 2 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Need I say what would have happened if he had done this to female suspects of any ethnicity? Excerpt:

'The end of 2013 brought a measure of closure to a long-running Milwaukee police scandal, though some say the officer — and his cohorts — who repeatedly and illegally shoved his fingers up black male suspects' anal cavities got off with a light sentence considering the flagrant nature of his abuses.

The ringleader was identified as officer Michael Vagnini, a white man who routinely targeted black males as young as fifteen for sadistic — and blatantly illegal — anal searches.

One victim said that another officer put a gun to his head while Vagnini administered a choke hold, touched his scrotum and fingered his anus. Another man was probed so violently that he bled.

Wisconsin law clearly prohibits police officers from administering cavity searches. Only medical professionals may do so, and only when authorized by a warrant.

But lack of a warrant or a medical degree did not stop Vagnini from sticking his fingers inside a 15-year-old boy's anus and touching his genitals during a traffic stop in December of 2011.'

Women Accused Of Using Stun Guns On Sacramento Shoppers During Robberies

Matt · 2 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Sacramento Police are trying to track down a group of women who they say are targeting shoppers and robbing them with stun guns.

Three unsuspecting women were attacked in two days—one in the Walmart parking lot on Truxel Road in Natomas, and two others at shopping centers on Florin Road.

Investigators say the attacks happen in shopping center parking lots as women walk to their cars.

In the first incident, police say a woman used a stun gun to knock an elderly woman to the ground and take her purse.

Not even an hour later, a female suspect assaulted a victim with a stun gun multiple times at a shopping center off of Florin Road.

Then, police say three teenaged girls used a stun gun to rob a woman in a Rite Aid parking lot off of Florin Road.'

Growing Number of Jews to End Religious Circumcisions

Matt · 2 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A KD investigation has sought strong reactions from many Jews to end religious circumcision ceremony. KDKA reported that an eight-year-old boy's penis was severed during a religious circumcision ceremony at a local synagogue.

The incident has led to growing concerns among Jews over the legitimacy of the ceremony that has severe risks. The boy was severely hurt during the ceremony after which he was taken to the hospital where he had to spend two months. Doctors performed microsurgery for eight hours on him to attach his dismembered penis. As many as six blood transfusions were also performed on the little boy.

Dr. Mark Weiss is also among growing number of Jewish leaders who firmly believe that circumcision should not be performed because of the complications it has.

He said, "There's no question. There is death from circumcision every year. And in the African countries, where medicine is much more primitive, the death rate is much higher".

Greg Hartley with Intact America said that children should not be deprived of their fundamental rights of keeping healthy body parts.'

NPO: Divorce Corp. - Powerful Cinematic Indictment of the Family Courts

Matt · 2 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Divorce Corp. (view trailor), the groundbreaking expose of the US Family Law System, premieres in theaters on January 10, 2014. It is possibly the documentary about your struggles that you have wanted to share with family and friends. Dr. Drew Pinsky, the host of “Dr. Drew” on HLN, narrates with interviews with fifty-four family law experts and people who share their stories.

The documentary opens in fifteen cities in: Arizona, California, Colorado, Florida, Illinois, Minnesota, Nevada, New York, Ohio, Texas, and Washington. If you live in or near one of the cities Divorce Corp. premieres, you can help shine a bright light on the appalling waste seen daily in family courts by seeing and promoting the movie. National Parents Organization recommends all members print and wear our label when you go to Divorce Corp. Print on stock, too, and hand out to promote National Parents Organization.

Ned Holstein, MD, MS, Founder and Chair believes, "This film has the potential to accelerate the family court reform movement. This is an opportunity for people of good faith to unite to save our children from the ravages of a morally corrupt system.We need to rally around this opportunity to tell the story so many of us know all too well.'

Chinese doctor admits selling patients' newborns

Mastodon · 2 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Chinese doctor has admitted in court that she stole babies from the hospital where she worked and sold them to human traffickers, state media and a court said.

Zhang Shuxia, a locally respected and soon-to-retire obstetrician, stood trial on Monday in northern Shaanxi province's Fuping county, according to online postings from the court.

Zhang told parents their newborns had congenital problems and persuaded them to "sign and give the babies up," the court postings said. Calls to the Weinan Intermediate People's Court and the local Communist Party propaganda department went unanswered.

The case exposed the operations of a baby trafficking ring that operated across several provinces centering on Zhang, who delivered babies at the Fuping County Maternal and Child Hospital.'

Marines delay female fitness plan after half fail

Mastodon · 2 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than half of female Marines in boot camp can't do three pullups, the minimum standard that was supposed to take effect with the new year, prompting the Marine Corps to delay the requirement, part of the process of equalizing physical standards to integrate women into combat jobs.

The delay rekindled sharp debate in the military on the question of whether women have the physical strength for some military jobs, as service branches move toward opening thousands of combat roles to them in 2016.
...
The decision to suspend the scheduled pull-up requirement "is a clear indication" that plans to move women into direct ground combat fighting teams will not work, said Elaine Donnelly, president of the conservative Center for Military Readiness and a critic of allowing women into infantry jobs.

"When officials claim that men and women are being trained the same, they are referring to bare minimums, not maximum qualifications that most men can meet but women cannot," Donnelly wrote in an email to The Associated Press. "Awarding gender-normed scores so that women can succeed lowers standards for all. Women will suffer more injuries and resentment they do not deserve, and men will be less prepared for the demands of direct ground combat."
...
Military testing for physical skill and stamina has changed over the decades with needs of the armed forces. Officials say the first recorded history of Marine Corps physical fitness tests, for example, was 1908 when President Theodore Roosevelt ordered that staff officers must ride horseback 90 miles and line officers walk 50 miles over a three-day period to pass. A test started in 1956 included chinups, pushups, broad jump, 50-yard duck waddle and running.

The first test for women was started in 1969: A 120-yard shuttle run, vertical jump, knee pushups, 600-yard run/walk and situps.'

The war against boys rages on

Mastodon · 4 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Submitted with this link to the Daily Caller, but the full article is here. Excerpt:

'Lost in all the noise about helping girls achieve their potential is a growing body of evidence that boys are in trouble. It's the real "gender gap." Consider this: A recent study by two MIT economists found that men, not women, are less likely to graduate from high school and finish college. As a result, the study said, "over the last three decades, the labor market trajectory of males in the U.S. has turned downward along four dimensions: skills acquisition, employment rates, occupational stature and real wage levels."

The authors say the declining economic value of men and the rise in women's achievement contributes to the breakdown of the American family by making marriage less valuable. Then, with more out-of-wedlock births and single-parent households headed by women, the lack of a male role model hurts boys in particular, both economically and academically.

This isn't a new finding: Multiple studies over the past 40 years have shown that boys suffer more than girls from divorce because they tend to externalize their reactions and act in ways that make them more likely to cause trouble at school or get arrested. Simply put: Boys need fathers to learn how to become men. And too many of them don't have one.

The social cost of this is not just the obvious burden from spiraling welfare and prison populations -- a 2008 study estimated that family fragmentation cost taxpayers more than $112 billion a year -- but in the lost potential as well.'

In Stockholm, a Proposal to Make Snow Plowing Priorities Better for Women

Mastodon · 4 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Stockholm, the depths of winter can stretch out over nearly half the calendar year. Last winter, the first reported snowfall came on October 25, and the last sighting wasn't until April 20.

With six months of potential snow, the task of keeping the city's commuters moving and working can be a real challenge for local government. At the moment, Stockholm uses a relatively standard snow-clearing strategy that differs little from what other harsh-winter cities have chosen to do. They focus their plows first on major thoroughfares, then on downtown areas close to major workplaces and construction sites, and finally move on to smaller roads, neighborhoods, and schools.

But some in Stockholm's city government have begun to suspect that these longstanding strategies may not best serve all of the city's residents. By focusing on city-center workplaces and construction sites, the Green Party's Daniel Helldén suggests, the city is implicitly ignoring the places that "vulnerable groups," including women and families, frequent most often. His solution? Something he's calling "gender-equal plowing."
...
The concept of this realignment is being sold as a sort of feminist proposal, but also as good overall public policy. "You have to look at how a modern city functions today. There are completely different transportation patterns around," Helldén told the Svenska Dagbladet (translation from Sveriges Radio). The changes, which would also include an emphasis on transit hubs and bike lanes, might make even more sense in a city where, as of 2006, less than half of the region's commuters drove a private car (and that proportion has since shrunk considerably)...'

Malaysia: Six-year-old boy accused of raping his cousin, aged five, while playing 'mummy and daddy game'

Mastodon · 4 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Malaysian boy aged six has been accused of raping his five-year-old cousin in a case believed to be the one of the first of its kind in the world.

Doctors discovered she had been sexually penetrated after a medical check-up - and despite initial scepticism a consultant urologist at the Kuala Lumpur Hospital said it was possible for a child that young to have an erection.

The extraordinary case came to light after the children's grandmother found them naked and playing 'mothers and fathers' at the family home in the town of Pendang, Kedah - a rural area covered with paddy fields
...
The doctor who examined the girl and found a minor tear in the hymen alerted the Malacca Action Group for Parents in Education.

Chairman Mak Chee Hin said: 'It is shocking that young children are capable of such acts.
...
This case, he added, could have happened due to exposure to pornographic materials.

'It could be due to witnessing an adult performing an intimate act or watching pornographic videos, said the urologist.

“Even if the child had an erection, it would have only lasted for a while and not to the extent of penetration.'

"Why Are Liberal Men Unhappy?"

Mastodon · 6 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last weekend AEI's Arthur Brooks published an interesting piece on happiness in the New York Times' Sunday Review. ...
...
"For many years, researchers found that women were happier than men, although recent studies contend that the gap has narrowed or may even have been reversed. Political junkies might be interested to learn that conservative women are particularly blissful: about 40 percent say they are very happy. That makes them slightly happier than conservative men and significantly happier than liberal women. The unhappiest of all are liberal men; only about a fifth consider themselves very happy."
...
A core component of modern leftism is its comprehensive attack (and accompanying redefinition) of masculinity. This attack poisons how men experience their own nature, relationships, and purpose.
...
Next, the liberal male often spends his relational life walking on eggshells, dating women and living in cultures that are constantly calling out any kind of behavior subjectively perceived as "male" or oppressive. So if a man gets angry at a woman, he's just "mansplaining." A man who asks for fidelity is "slut-shaming." Assertions of will are subject to "privilege checks." To enter the world of academia, for example, is to enter a world of social rules and customs that are impossibly complex because propriety is always dictated by the subjective feelings of the most traditionally powerless person in the room. The language of equality is a mere mask for a new hierarchy that explicitly seeks to place the male (especially the white male) at the bottom.'

Children (boys) murdered and coerced into military roles in the Central African Republic

Matt · 6 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The article refers to them gender-neutrally as "children" when in fact it's boys they are talking about. Would CNN be talking about them as "children" if they were girls? Excerpt:

'Escalating violence in the Central African Republic is posing a threat to children, with at least two beheaded and thousands recruited as soldiers, the United Nations said.

The United Nations says it verified the deaths of 16 children since violence broke out in the capital of Bangui on December 5. Dozens of others have been injured.

"We are witnessing unprecedented levels of violence against children. More and more children are being recruited into armed groups, and they are also being directly targeted in atrocious revenge attacks," said Souleymane Diabate, UNICEF representative in the nation.'

Let's Talk About Circumcision

Matt · 6 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Strange. According to Jewish law, a Jew is someone born to a Jewish mother and, according to a more progressive approach, anyone who sees himself as belonging to the Jewish people. There were periods and communities in Jewish history in which circumcision was not practiced – from the days of ancient Egypt up to the Communist bloc. Moses was opposed to circumcision and didn't circumcise his son, and the Children of Israel crossed the Jordan into Canaan uncircumcised.

Circumcision does not determine that a person is Jewish, and non-circumcision does not determine that a person is not Jewish. So to come and claim that the preservation of Jewish identity rises and falls with the cutting of the sexual organs of infants? That this is the most basic symbol that guarantees the survival of Jewish society? That this is the strongest tie connecting the Jewish people to itself and its God? More than faith? More than the Torah and the Ten Commandments? More than the State of Israel and the Land of Israel?

In light of such groundless claims, both religious and nonreligious Jews should start asking themselves questions.'

Why Should Fluid Sexuality Be Women-Only?

Matt · 6 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By now, there's an established celebrity "coming out" narrative. You sit down with a morning talk-show host or write a blog post saying that you're in love with someone who shares your gender. Your true fans profess their continued devotion, LGBT rights groups and opinion writers applaud you, and while you'll get some hate mail, most people are relieved to finally have you "figured out" — especially if your sexuality has been the subject of tabloid speculation.

This doesn't quite apply, however, when you reveal you're dating a man but insist you're still attracted to women. "Of course I still fancy girls," said British diver Tom Daley last week. "But, I mean, right now I'm dating a guy and I couldn't be happier." There were some standard-issue homophobic reactions (which Buzzfeed and HuffPost obligingly collected), but Daley also elicited a more specific sort of disapproval from certain fans — biphobia, the Advocate called it. These were the people who assumed Daley was gay but unable to fully admit it, or unwilling to relinquish the privileges of being straight. ...
...
When coming out as not-totally-heterosexual, the rules are different for men and women. Perhaps this is because we've had plenty of cultural cues — like chart-topping hit songs about girls kissing girls — and academic research to acclimate us to the idea of women's fluid sexuality.
...
Securing broad public approval for concrete rights like gay marriage is one thing, but ending pervasive cultural homophobia is quite a bit trickier. And sometimes those goals can seem at odds. It's hard to fight for the right to be openly gay — to argue that homosexuality is not a phase or a choice — while simultaneously acknowledging the people whose experiences defy easy categorization. But as gay rights slowly become mainstream, there's more room for not just women, but men, to proudly claim their undefinable sexual histories....'

Gender equality? A double standard for women in the military

Mastodon · 6 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last year military leadership lifted the ban on women in combat positions like the infantry and special operations without a clear pathway to successful integration. Physical standards and equality remain a primary issue of contention.

For decades, women and men have had ‘equal but different’ physical standards. The military recognized that men and women have different physical qualities which led to the generation of a separate physical grading scale. Correspondingly, women were also prohibited from the majority of combat roles including special operations, infantry, and other ground roles that required a higher level of physical performance. Now that women are able to pursue these combat arms-type positions within the military, the physical demand of the mission must be addressed.
...
Whenever compromise occurs in the ‘name of equality’ it only further perpetuates female stereotypes that women have spent years combating in the military. Military leaders must stand firm on equality and not buckle to the pressures of meeting a female quota at the expense of creating double standards of equality. We want the best and most qualified defending our freedoms and way of life. It doesn’t matter if they are pretty, ugly, male, female, tall, or short, as long as they are the best physically, mentally, and emotionally to accomplish the mission of defending our nation.
...
The bottom line is there must be a common standard. If you qualify for that standard, male or female, then you are eligible for that position. If you don’t meet the standard, you are ineligible. It is as simple as that. Specific military occupational specialties demand that the best candidates for the job, and only those should be eligible to occupy that position.'

"We need legislation to get more women into top jobs"

Mastodon · 6 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At a recent conference on gender equality, senior women agonised about whether quotas were a good or a bad thing.

But in private discussions later on, the overwhelming view was that quotas were needed because progress in gender equality remains very poor. This is not only in business but the public sector, politics and all other walks of life. The legal profession was singled out for special criticism, though there are same honourable exceptions among law firms.
...
Much more needs to be done. Initiatives such as the 30% club – chairs of organisations committed to achieving female board participation of at least 30% – are laudable and could make a difference. But overall progress in Britain is very slow. Foot-dragging in the UK is encouraging the European Commission's push to legislate in this area. EU directives would not be needed if national legislators took the need for fair treatment of women seriously.
...
One could dispute the way causality works – perhaps the companies that are already doing better are more relaxed about the risk on letting women loose on their boards. But more women makes economic and business sense.

The Moralistic Fallacy

Mastodon · 7 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'City Journal's Kay Hymowitz weighed in over the holidays with a response to our Dec. 16 column, in which we faulted the premise of her earlier article titled "Boy Trouble." She maintains that the main body of the article (which we described as "informative and important") is responsive to our criticism:

...

That said, Hymowitz's hypothesis that family breakdown causes "boy troubles" is an entirely plausible one. But there's still a problem with it: That framing makes the argument circular. Recall that she posed the question as (among other things) why "poor and working-class boys" fail to become "reliable husbands and fathers." She ends up concluding that the cause of fatherlessness is . . . fatherlessness.

... But identifying a causal cycle begs the question if the question is about the ultimate cause. If your child is sophisticated enough to ask how human beings came into existence, he won't be satisfied if you answer by explaining where babies come from.

...

The 2011 figures (which exclude Hispanics) were 29.1% for whites and 72.3% for blacks--a more than eightfold increase for whites and more than threefold for blacks. A cycle of fatherlessness operating over two to three generations cannot be sufficient to explain such an enormous rise.

So what does? In our view, a dramatic change in incentives owing to two major social changes that were just getting under way when Moynihan wrote.

...

That brings us back to the moralistic fallacy for which we faulted Hymowitz in our column last month. Completely absent from her analysis of why boys fail to grow up into "reliable husbands and fathers" is the crucial factor of female choice. If young women are less apt to marry because they are focused on education and career, and more willing to engage in sexual relationships unaccompanied by marriage or the expectation thereof, the incentives for young men are dramatically different.

...

Nonetheless, the vast majority of children who are growing up without fathers are doing so in large part because of their mothers' choices. In our column last month, we half-facetiously raised "the converse lament that young females are insufficiently interested in 'becoming reliable wives and mothers.' " Let us now raise it half-seriously. It is trivially true that an unmarried woman who bears a child is not a reliable wife. If Hymowitz is correct about the baneful effects of fatherlessness on boys, such a woman also is not a reliable mother, at least to her sons.'

The End of Men? Not Again!

Mastodon · 7 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'...This is not to say that Hanna Rosin is completely wrong. I think we are witnessing social changes in the economy that mean an end or change to certain kinds of masculinity.
...
The historical oddity period was the mythic age of roughly 1945-1975 when it was possible to have a good middle class life doing manual and largely unskilled labor. The reasons for whether this period was a historical oddity or not can fit a million books but there was a time when it seemed possible for a young man to graduate high school (or maybe not), walk down to the nearest factory (any of them), and get hired at a decent wage.
...
This is where Hanna Rosin's End of Men thesis makes sense and we should have sincere policy discussions. ...
...
There are real policy issues and problems in Hanna Rosin's thesis but I think they have more to do with socio-economics than gender and masculinity. ...
...
There is a real policy problem in getting more men to be the first in their families to attend college and/or care about academics but it cannot be solved by arguing that men are obsolete and that we are at The End of Men.'

UK: Nurse jailed for ‘despicable’ false rape claim against her grandad

Mastodon · 7 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Gordon Ritchie’s life was left in tatters after scheming Natalie Mortimer lied to police, claiming he had subjected her to sexual abuse when she was a child.

But her mother, Susan Simpson, began to have doubts about the story and Mortimer, 25, eventually admitted that the allegations were false.

Mortimer had previously been told that she and her younger sibling would be entitled to a share of inheritance money from Mr Ritchie.

But she believed that she would get all the cash if her grandfather was sent to prison. Mortimer admitted wasting 175 hours of police time – at a cost to taxpayers of more than £3,000 – when she appeared at Aberdeen Sheriff Court.

Jailing her yesterday, Sheriff Graeme Buchanan said she had committed a “truly evil” crime.'

Former teacher charged with criminal sex acts with minor while still a teacher

Matt · 7 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Monroe #1 BOCES employee is facing charges after sheriff's deputies say she engaged in criminal sex acts with a 15-year-old student.

Rachel Santora, 31, of Brighton, is charged with second-degree criminal sex act and endangering the welfare of child.

Sheriff's deputies say Santora engaged in criminal sex acts with a 15-year-old male student last summer while she was employed as a teacher at the Rush-Henrietta School District. Sheriff's deputies say the incidents occurred at Santora's home on Brooklawn Drive residence where she was tutoring the student.

Santora is currently employed with Monroe #1 BOCES. She was sent to the Monroe County Jail in lieu of $20,000 cash bail.'

Woman accused of having sex with underage boys

Mastodon · 8 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'JAMESTOWN, N.D. – A 26-year-old woman faces criminal charges after allegedly having sex with a series of boys ages 14 to 17 she met by using a smartphone app.

Trisha Lynn Bliss of Jamestown pleaded not guilty in Stutsman County District Court on Thursday to two counts of gross sexual imposition, a Class AA felony. She also was charged Friday in Stutsman County with an additional charge of corruption of a minor, a Class C felony.

...

She also told Gross she had sex with another juvenile boy the month before. Police say she claimed the boy told her he was 18, but after sex he told her he was in middle school.

Bliss told the detective she was in special education beginning in seventh grade and was diagnosed with bipolar disorder and attention deficit hyperactivity disorder. But she also told police she isn't stupid, knows it was wrong to have sex with minors and regrets it.

One of the boys, who is 17, told police he had sex with Bliss eight times. A 14-year-old boy told Gross he had sex with Bliss twice, the first time after drinking vodka with Bliss at her home after school. Both times, he allegedly told police, he didn't want to but was pressured by Bliss.

Bliss, who was released from jail on her own recognizance, is set for her next court date on Jan. 15.'

Competitiveness and Overconfidence Help Explain Why Men Earn More Than Women

Mastodon · 8 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The gender wage gap in the United States is one of the biggest problems in the workplace. Despite the fact that women comprise nearly half of the labor force, they earn significantly less than their male counterparts, making about 80 cents for every dollar earned by men. That's true even when you control for demographic differences, such as the income and education of people's parents, and is consistent among high-ability people.
...
But women's earnings are lower even within majors, according to the paper, because men are twice as likely as women to overestimate their true ability level, and twice as likely to pick a competitive compensation scheme. Those factors explain between 17 percent and 19 percent of the gap in earnings expectations within majors.
...
The findings are based on high ability students from an elite university, who likely have a good chance of getting to the top of their professions, and "provide a possible explanation for the glass ceiling phenomenon," according to the authors.'

Woman charged with criminal domestic violence, child neglect

Mastodon · 8 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Woodruff woman is accused of leaving her husband on the side of the road and later abandoning her daughter and nephew in her car Monday.

Spartanburg County Sheriff's deputies charged Krystal Kay Cannon, 25, of 542 Green St., with criminal domestic violence and child neglect.

According to an incident report, Cannon's husband called 911 after she left him on the side of the road at Interstate 26 and Highway 221 around 3:30 p.m.

He told deputies he pulled the car over and Cannon scratched his face, pulled his hair and got into the driver's seat and drove away after he got out of the car, according to the report.

Their 3-year-old daughter and mentally disabled nephew were still sitting in the back seat of the vehicle.'

Novelist's Ex In Bizarre Handgun Threat Arrest

Mastodon · 8 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A domestic dispute over space aliens escalated Saturday morning when a lingerie-clad New Mexico woman allegedly pointed a silver handgun at her boyfriend, a weapon she retrieved from her vagina, where it had been placed while the accused was performing a sex act, police allege.

To make matters more strange, the arrested woman is the most recent ex-wife of Pulitzer Prize-winning novelist Cormac McCarthy, author of “The Road” and “No Country for Old Men.”

As detailed in a probable cause statement, Jennifer McCarthy, a 48-year-old artist, argued about space aliens with her 53-year-old beau, whose name was redacted from the document released by the Santa Fe County Sheriff’s Office. When questioned by deputies, McCarthy reportedly acknowledged that she “did have a gun at the time” the couple was yelling at each other.

...

After removing the gun from her vagina, McCarthy pointed it at her boyfriend’s head, investigators charge. Fearing that he could get shot, the man grabbed the weapon from McCarthy and put it in the toilet.'

Men Are 'On Strike' Throughout The U.S.: What Are The Causes?

Mastodon · 8 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I haven't seen my copy of Men On Strike for several weeks. I kept careful watch on the book until I finished interviewing her, but after that it disappeared into the Bowyer-Family-Book-Sharing Vortex from which it has not yet emerged. That's because it is an easy read about a topic which is interesting in both a social science theory way, and in a figuring out how to get by in the current world kind of way.

Men on Strike is pretty much what the title says it is, a book about how many men have decided not to participate in certain areas of life, most notably in school, family, and increasingly in work. What separates the work of Helen Smith, a psychologist who deals with men like the ones she writes about in her book, is the lack of scoldiness that you might find in the similar work of say Kay Hymowitz' Manning Up. For Smith, the men are in large part acting rationally. They're more John Galt than they are Peter Pan. The book could as well have been titled Andros Shrugged, if ancient Greek titles sold books.

...

"Boys and young men are no less rational, or capable of adapting to incentives, than girls and young women are. They are, in fact, adapting very well to the incentives for female power and independence–which inevitably also serve as disincentives to male reliability and self-sacrifice."'

Israel: Fathers' Activist Suing Haaretz over 'Defamation' by Feminist MK

Mastodon · 8 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Israeli fathers' rights activist, Sharon Ben-Haim, is taking legal action against left-wing newspaper Haaretz for publishing what he claims are defamatory statements made by MK Orly Levy-Abekasis (Likud-Beytenu) in a recent Knesset session, against another prominent men's rights activist, Amir Shipperman.

The Knesset session was a stormy one, in which feminist MKs fought tooth and nail against a fellow feminist, MK Gila Gamliel (Likud-Beytenu), and fathers' activists, regarding initiatives to cancel the Tender Years' Doctrine that grants divorcing mothers automatic preference in child custody disputes.

According to the letter sent by Ben-Haim to Haaretz, MK Levy-Abekasis said during the public session, which was aired live on the Knesset Channel, that Shipperman had sent her an email containing a picture of a gun, and that she was frightened by this. Haaretz's reporter published an article stating that MK Levy-Abekasis is “frightened” because she received an email from a father with a picture of a gun, and that MK Aliza Lavie (Yesh Atid), who co-chaired the session with Levy-Abekasis, was also scared because she saw a picture of herself in a bikini on the internet.'

Also see a related story: MK Tells Fellow Feminists: Equality Costs -- Dep. Min. Gila Gamliel was shocked to find feminist MKs oppose equality when it comes to custody in divorce.

There's Something Absolutely Wrong With What We Do To Boys Before They Grow Into Men

Matt · 9 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Intro text;

'"Be a man" is something we've all heard at one time or another, even a few of the women reading this right now. Being a "man" in that sense means something completely different to me (and maybe you, too) than what that phrase implies.

I can't even begin to describe the toll that the concept of masculinity has taken on my life. And it's felt everywhere. It's time we make changes, starting from within ourselves.'

"Greater Health Spending Helps Men More Than Women, Study Finds"

Minuteman · 9 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Increased health spending in developed countries tends to benefit men more than women, a new study finds.

Researchers analyzed data from 27 developed nations to determine the efficiency of health care spending, and found that men had greater gains in life expectancy than women in nearly every country.

"We were surprised to find a large gender gap in spending efficiency throughout the industrialized countries of the world," study author Douglas Barthold, a doctoral candidate in the economics department at McGill University in Montreal, said in a university news release. "The average life expectancy of women rose from 75.5 to 79.8 between 1991 and 2007, while that of men rose from 72.5 to 77.1."
...
It's not clear why increased health spending has benefited men more than women in most of the countries included in the study, the investigators said. They called for further research into the issue.'

Bridget Anne Kelly Is First Casualty Of ‘Bridgegate’

StayingFit · 9 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Bridget Anne Kelly, Deputy Chief of Staff to NJ Governor Chris Christie, orchestrated severe traffic problems on the George Washington Bridge in order to punish a mayor who did not endorse Christie for re-election. Giving further evidence, if such was needed, that women in leadership positions can be just as vindictive as men. Remember this the next time that someone tells you that the world would be different if only women held more power. Excerpt:

'Bridget Anne Kelly is being fired by Gov. Chris Christie in the scandal now being termed “Bridgegate”.

N.J. Governor Christie says he was misled by staff, and he was firing Deputy Chief of Staff Kelly “because she lied to me.”

On Thursday, he apologized to his constituents, saying he was “embarrassed and humiliated” by his staff, and he had no idea his aides may have closed highway lanes to exact political retribution.

Kelly is in the center of a widening scandal that is a potential threat to Christie’s second term, and his presidential aspirations for 2016. Documents are alleged to show that she arranged traffic jams to punish the mayor, who didn’t support Christie’s re-election.'

SAVE: Warning! False Domestic Violence Information

Matt · 10 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Recently, Washington Post's Fact Checker reported that U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder's claim that "intimate partner homicide is the leading cause of death for African-American women ages 15 to 45" was so outrageous it could qualify for their notorious "Four Pinocchios" rating.

The misinformation doesn't end there. Over the last few months, we have reviewed the Fact Sheets of seven leading domestic violence organizations for accuracy and completeness. They have all failed.

We also looked at the Findings in the recently introduced International Violence Against Women Act. Of the 16 findings, only 3 could be verified to be truthful. The rest were one-sided, misleading, or false.

Sheryle Hutter of Colorado said it best when she said, "Victims of partner abuse are not served when domestic violence groups knowingly disseminate one-sided and false information. Lawmakers should assure that anti-abuse programs are based on reason and science, not a biased gender ideology."

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Miriam Pollock on circumcision

Matt · 10 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here (.pdf file), p. 7 of the file. Excerpt:

'Growing up Jewish, I assumed that circumcision was not only harmless, but also essential and beneficial. Only after I had witnessed a few of these events, did these lifelong assumptions and beliefs become shaky. More than anything, it was the raw terror, shrieking pain and inconsolable cries of the babies struggling against the hands of a loving relative restraining their otherwise flailing limbs for this "sacred" event, which shattered my equanimity about the holiness and necessity of circumcision.

But it would be many years, nearly a decade, before I would dare to explore the long-term consequences of the anatomical, physiological, psychological and sexual damage that circumcision invariably affects. These revelations were unveiled at the Second International Symposium on Circumcision, which I attended in 1991 in San Francisco. From that point forward I began to write, determined to expose circumcision, both religious and medical, for the scandalous human rights violation it inflicts and fraudulent religious obligation it is purported to be.

It is more obvious than ever that circumcision has nothing to do with protecting our innocent male babies, nor of elevating their spirituality, nor securing their tribal membership. Ablating, crushing and cutting the foreskin of helpless newborns constitutes nothing less than sexual torture. The true function of circumcision is to deny and decrease the sexual sensitivity, aliveness and control that men have over their sexuality, break the maternal infant bond by traumatizing the newborn, tame a newly birthed mother's instinctual passion to protect her baby at all costs, and mark the baby as a member of the male community. This primitive rite, be it religious or secular, has no place in a humane society, nor in a religion or culture, such as Judaism, that emphatically values the protection of the helpless, the pursuit of justice, and reverence for life.'

SAVE: In Wake of NY Times Editorial, CPI Unveils Registry of Prosecutorial Misconduct

Matt · 10 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / January 8, 2014 – Today the non-profit Center for Prosecutor Integrity (CPI) announces the launching of the new Registry of Prosecutorial Misconduct. The unveiling comes three days after a New York Times' editorial charged ethical violations by prosecutors have become "rampant" across the nation: http://nyti.ms/1hu7K7V

The Registry is the first publicly available national online database to catalog judicial or legal disciplinary committee findings of prosecutorial misconduct. The Registry of Prosecutorial Misconduct will allow lawmakers, researchers, legal organizations, criminal justice reform groups, and others to identify common types of misconduct, assess trends, and compare jurisdictions.

The database includes over 15 fields such as Crime, State, Prosecutor Name, Trial Year, Misconduct Type, and Sanction Type. The Finding field features the opinion or determination by a disciplinary body or by a trial, appellate, or supreme court.'

Canada: Female cops charged with DUI

fathers4fairness · 10 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A city cop with eight years of service has been charged with impaired driving while off-duty.
...
Const. Kelly Fradley has been charged with impaired operation of a motor vehicle and impaired operation of a motor vehicle with a blood alcohol content over 80 mg%.
...
Fradley isn't the only Edmonton police officer to face such a charge.

In 2010, Sgt. Cheryl Wallin was charged with impaired driving and operating a vehicle with a blood alcohol level over the legal limit.
...
Wallin was suspended without pay to the tune of $4,000 and granted an absolute discharge, thus ending up with no criminal record.'

Feminist Film: Violence Caused by (Surprise!) Masculinity

Mastodon · 10 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite skinny jeans, mocha latte and Chris Hayes, U.S. males still haven't been adequately feminized. The tragic result: continued bloodshed in American society.

That's the gist of a new documentary called "The Mask You Live In," by feminist filmmaker Jennifer Siebel Newsom. The focus of "The Mask" is the male population's place in and relationship to American culture. Predictably, judging from the trailer and the film's enthusiastic reception in left-leaning media, traditional masculinity is a leading cause of murder and mayhem.
...
The film also sites Michael Kimmel, left-wing author of "Angry White Men," the latest in a long line of "scholarly" works that seeks to explain why white guys tend to be conservatives and why they're prone to the kind of bigotry and violence they rarely end up actually being guilty of.'

School cafeteria worker charged with raping friend’s 15-year-old son

Mastodon · 10 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A married mother of four who works at a Massachusetts middle school cafeteria has been charged with raping a teen.

Janelle Foley, 36, allegedly repeatedly had sex with her friend's 15-year-old son during the winter vacation.

She's also under investigation for allegedly having sex with a second victim, who is understood to be a juvenile relative of hers.

The food service staffer, who works at Chapman Middle School in Weymouth, was arrested at her home on Wednesday night.

...

But Foley's attorney, William Sullivan, argued that the lifelong Weymouth resident, who has four children between 7 and 15 years old, was not a flight risk.

He also said Foley had substance abuse and depression issues that could have resulted in the "lapse in judgment."

The judge ordered that Foley be held on $5,000 cash bail with GPS monitoring and that she must undergo mental health counseling.'

NPO: Parent to Parent Launches: Discuss Divorce Corp

Matt · 11 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'National Parents Organization is proud to announce our launching of Parent to Parent, where Parents of all types, and other family members, can go to discuss issues and seek resources. In the discussion groups you can expect to find other Parents, and other family members, that have gone through the same situation or know others that have. This is a safe, friendly resource to parents, from other parents, from other family members, that is monitored and promoted by National Parents Organization.

Our first major topic is Divorce Corp. See the movie. Wear your National Parents Organization label to the showing. Post your review to Parent to Parent.

Divorce Corp., the groundbreaking expose of the US Family Law System, premieres in theaters, January 10, 2014. It is the documentary about family law that you have been seeking.'

Cocoon of Dishonesty: SAVE Warns Lawmakers about False Information from Domestic Violence Groups

Matt · 11 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / January 6, 2014 – A leading victim-advocacy organization is advising lawmakers to be wary of claims made by domestic violence groups seeking to enact new laws. Stop Abusive and Violent Environments – SAVE — is issuing the warning after the Washington Post's Fact Checker reported that a claim made by U.S. Attorney General Eric Holder turned out to be based on a false statement made by a leading domestic violence researcher.

In 2009, Holder made the startling claim that "intimate partner homicide is the leading cause of death for African-American women ages 15 to 45." Holder's statement was taken word-for-word from a 2003 study published by Jacquelyn Campbell, a well-known researcher at the Johns Hopkins University School of Nursing.

But Campbell's statement turned out to be wrong, leading the Washington Post to say the claim could qualify for its notorious "Four Pinocchios" rating: http://www.washingtonpost.com/blogs/fact-checker/wp/2013/12/18/holders-2009-claim-that-intimate-partner-homicide-is-the-leading-cause-of-death-for-african-american-women/'

Jewish Psychologist to Debate Circumcision in Europe

Matt · 11 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ronald Goldman, Ph.D., Executive Director of the Circumcision Resource Center, a nonprofit educational organization in Boston, has been invited by the Council of Europe to participate in an interdisciplinary dialogue about circumcision at a meeting in France on January 28.

There is a growing European debate about circumcision. In October the Council of Europe, an organization of 47 member States, overwhelmingly passed a non-binding resolution that called circumcision, among other procedures, a violation of the physical integrity of children according to established human rights standards. Circumcision is uncommon in Europe except among Jews and Muslims.

As the only non-European invited to this meeting, Dr. Goldman said, “I look forward to contributing to the effort to raise awareness about circumcision in Europe in light of its physical, sexual, and psychological harm.” He is the author of Circumcision: The Hidden Trauma and Questioning Circumcision: A Jewish Perspective.'

UK: One in three mothers say father should not have say in children's upbringing post-divorce

Matt · 11 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One in three separated mothers think their children's fathers should have no say in their upbringing, according to a report yesterday.

It found that 32 per cent of separated mothers thought that they alone had the right to make decisions about their children's future.

The high proportion found by a survey implies that more than one in 10 of all the families in the country include mothers who do not want the fathers of their children to have a say over the future of their children.

The findings were revealed in a survey carried out for the counselling group Relate.'

Author seeking interviewees for book on men's and fathers' issues

Matt · 11 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Professor Kenedy of York University in Toronto, Canada has been researching the fathers' rights, mens' rights, and shared parenting movement since 1990. He has written a book, academic articles, and presented various academic papers (see references below) on these social movements. He is working on a new book about the global fathers' rights, men's rights, and shared parenting movements and is interested in interviewing fathers, mothers, grandparents, adult children, and others who have been through separations and divorces. He would especially like to interview those who have been through the family law system and discuss the impact it had on them such as mental health, physical health, or other issues/consequences.
...
He will be in San Diego from Feb 16-18, 2014 and in Los Angeles from Feb 19-24, 2014. If you are interested in being interviewed for his book please e-mail him at rkenedy-at-yorku.ca.'

Canada: West End Fitness World closes women's-only space

Mastodon · 11 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gyms and weight rooms haven't always been the most welcoming, comfortable place for women.

But over the last 30 years, health clubs worldwide introduced women's-only section to cater to their expanding clientele and induce new members to adopt a healthier lifestyle that included weights and treadmills.

But now a West End Fitness World is eliminating the section used exclusively by women to accommodate the neighbourhood's gay, male demographic and because clients have complained the gym should be completely co-ed.
...
In an angry rant she posted Wednesday on her blog Tank's Travels, Tankard said Fitness World was deceiving the female members who'd bought passes in order to use the women's-only section.
...
"Lots of women don't want to work out in the company of men, their sweat and their grunting," she wrote. "Sorry guys, you're not always the best workout partners."

Colleen Kirk, a spokeswoman for Fitness World, said the gym is responding to requests from what it considers the changing needs of its clients.

"That part of the women's-only location is not used a lot and our members have come to us and said, 'We want more space that is gender-neutral.'"

She said the dozen other Fitness World locations, including Kitsilano, have dedicated women's sections and there are no plans to eliminate them.
...
In 2005, a Burnaby man took the private gym Just Ladies Fitness to the B.C. Human Rights Tribunal after staff refused to sell him a membership.

He lost his case. Not only was he not prevented from working out at other affordable fitness centres near his home, but the ruling also determined women should have the option to exercise "free of the male gaze" or otherwise might not exercise at all.'

Rabbis to court: Uncircumcised boy will suffer 'serious psychological damage’

Mastodon · 11 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The legal adviser to the rabbinical court submitted Thursday its ruling on the appeal by a mother who is opposed to having her son circumcised. “On the altar of the petitioner’s right to freedom of religion, she is suggesting that she will ignore the irreversible psychological damage that is liable to be caused to the child due to his being an exception in the society of the children around him...'

Ed. note: If anyone has a sub'n to this site, feel free to post as a comment to this item what you feel is a relevant and informative excerpt or excerpts from the source article. But since it's clearly a paywall site, make sure to limit the amount of text to fair use levels. If it seems too much, I'll edit it down. Thanks in advance!

Bill Limits How Much Child Support Divorced Fathers Must Pay

Mastodon · 11 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A father's rights group is backing a bill that would place a limit on how much money a divorced father would have to pay in child support.

The limit on child support would prevent courts from calculating a parent's monthly payments on any income above $150,000.

Steve Blake of the group Dads of Wisconsin says the original purpose of child support laws was to make sure that kids don't end up on welfare – that "they're not on the dole and they're still being fed, clothed, housed healthy, [and] go to school."

"Beyond that, redistributing wealth from one parent to another is not really a state function," says Blake.

But Blake says he's less concerned with the financial issues in the bill than he is about another provision in the bill, one that would require judges to make it a priority to allow each parent equal time when placement decisions are made.

"It's not so important how much money you spend on a kid as it how much time you spend with a kid," says Blake. "That's what we're looking for – dads who want to be able to be a parent on an equal basis to the mother."'

Boy describes being locked up, starved by father and his girlfriend

Mastodon · 11 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Just a few minutes before he arrived in court Wednesday for the trial of a woman accused of starving him nearly to death, the state laid out evidence against her. A Titusville investigator held up the tiny Spiderman pajamas he was wearing when he was found — boys size 8. Prosecutors showed photos of how he looked at the time. Intense light blue eyes. Gaunt cheeks. Skeletal ribs.
...
He spoke softly as he recounted his time with Sharon Glass, who faces multiple felony charges, including aggravated child abuse. Police said she and Michael Marshall were caregivers for the boy and other children. Marshall is in jail awaiting trial on similar charges.

On the stand, the boy gave short answers to the prosecutor's questions. He first met Glass in 2009, when he was in the third grade. She was dating Marshall, his father. Soon, they were living together. Soon, he called her "mom."

Soon, he started getting in trouble.

The first time he recalled in court was when Glass accused him of stealing an iPod. He testified he didn't take it. He was later accused when other things went missing. He was punished for taking fruit off a tree and for stealing food.
...
The most serious punishment came in the house on Barna Avenue.

"I was constantly locked up," he told prosecutors.

When he was put in his room, the boy would escape. When he did, Glass told Marshall she'd leave him if he didn't lock the boy up.
...
On Christmas 2011, he was let out of the bathroom to watch other children open gifts. He was put back in the bathroom and given a stocking full of coal.'

"How Can We Help Men? By Helping Women"

Mastodon · 12 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THIS week Maria Shriver brings together a star-studded cast of celebrities, from Hillary Rodham Clinton to Beyoncé, to call attention to the economic plight of American women and demand that women's needs be put "at the center of policy making.

But is this really the time to focus on women? For nearly four decades, feminists have decried "the feminization of poverty." However, since the 1980s there has been a defeminization of poverty, as a growing proportion of men have fallen on hard times. In recent years men have experienced especially significant losses in income and job security.

Although women are still more likely to be poor than men, on average women's income and labor-force participation have been rising since the 1970s. By contrast, between 1970 and 2010 the median earnings of men fell by 19 percent, and those of men with just a high school diploma by a stunning 41 percent. And while women have regained all the jobs they lost during the recession, men have regained just 75 percent.

Since about 1980 the percentage of men and women in middle-skill jobs has declined. But for women, nearly all of that decline was because of increased representation in higher-skill jobs. Women's employment in low-skill jobs increased by just 1 percent. By contrast, for men, half the decline in middle-skill jobs was a result of increases in low-skill jobs.

The most urgent issue facing working Americans today is not the glass ceiling. It is the sinking floor. So wouldn't it make more sense to focus on gender-neutral economic policies?

...

Today, however, becoming a "never-never" employee is increasingly a gender-neutral fate. Millions of men face working conditions that traditionally characterized women's lives: low wages, minimal benefits, part-time or temporary jobs, and periods of joblessness. Poverty is becoming defeminized because the working conditions of many men are becoming more feminized.

Whether they realize it or not, men now have a direct stake in policies that advance gender equity. Most of the wage gap between women and men is no longer a result of blatant male favoritism in pay and promotion. Much of it stems from general wage inequality in society at large.

...

Another source of the gender pay gap is the lack of reliable, affordable child care, which forces many mothers to stay home or work part time even when they need and want full-time work.

Prioritizing child care would not just be a boon for mothers but for millions of fathers as well. The highest proportion of stay-at-home moms is found among women married to men in the bottom 25 percent of the country's income distribution. Most of these women cannot afford to work because of the high cost of child care, even though their partners and children would benefit from the increased income.

...

Putting women's traditional needs at the center of social planning is not reverse sexism. It's the best way to reverse the increasing economic vulnerability of men and women alike.

Given the increasing insecurity of many American men, they have good reason to back feminist policies. And if those policies alienate some women in the upper echelons, then maybe feminism isn't for every woman, and doesn't need to be.'

Father pays outstanding child support due to terms modification he was never informed of and still gets jail time

Mastodon · 12 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Clifford Hall says he's more than happy to pay child support for his 11-year-old son.
...
But Hall says when the amount of child support was modified no one told him.
...
When Hall and his ex were in Judge Lisa Millard's court last November he owed nothing.

"Opposing counsel testified twice that he's all paid up," says Elam.

But the attorney representing the child's mother wanted Hall to pay her three grand in attorney fees and Judge Millard agreed.

Court documents also reveal Hall wasn't following the court's scheduled times to pick his son up for visitation.

Another modification Hall says he knew nothing about.
...
"This entire situation is shocking to me," says community activist Quanell X. "I've never seen one like this."

Quanell X wants the state's judicial board to investigate.
...
Judge Millard tells Fox 26 after she found Hall in contempt he walked out of the courtroom which she says is a big no no.

Judge Millard says Hall's attorney could have filed a motion for reconsideration which would have given her an opportunity to hear from both sides again and reevaluate the situation.

Hall's attorney is now working on an appeal.

Hall says in a few days he will turn himself in to the jail.'

Also see:

1. Father sentenced to 6 months in jail for paying too much child support
2. Snopes.com has commentary on this story here.
3. There is a change.org petition currently active seeking the judge's removal from the bench.

USAID.gov: "Masculinity and Violence in Conflict"

Minuteman · 12 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Posted by Daniel Sheehy, Office of the Senior Coordinator for Gender Equality and Women's Empowerment, USAID on Monday, December 9th 2013

...

Why does masculinity devolve into madness in the face of violence? Why is it that we time and time again see a marked increase in the horrific misdeeds committed by men toward women when conflict arises? Throughout history, including up to this very day, a consequence of large-scale violence and war is a significant increase in the rate of gender-based violence that women experience in the form of rape and specific targeting by combatants. During widespread conflict, the breakdown of society and normalization of violence that extends from war into broader society is a commonly used explanation for rampant gender-based violence. Hypermasculinity, a term used to describe an increase in aggressive and misogynistic masculine traits, is also used in explaining why gender-based violence is practically treated as a given component of war. Even after a conflict has been politically resolved, the impact that widespread violence and societal conflict has on the people that experience it and live through it is profound, traumatizing, and proves difficult to overcome.

...

We need to help, but how? How do we recover from war and the cycle of violence that it fuels? How do we help women who experience violence during war, for that matter? Trauma from violence exposes everybody to the after-effects of war, but providing support through empowering and providing social services to both men and women can help with moving away from a violent society and contribute toward peacebuilding and maintaining stability. Politically empowering women and other marginalized populations, spreading awareness of the specific kinds of violence women experience while holding those responsible accountable for their crimes, and bringing women to the negotiation table needs to happen if we hope to distance ourselves from the ugliness of history. We also need to focus on a positive form of masculinity to contribute toward a peaceful and prosperous society, and move away from the hypermasculinity that pushes men and boys towards violence during times of conflict and disaster. While we have a long way to go, these steps will help us move towards gender equality and a more prosperous society.'

War on sex or just colleges gone crazy?

el cid · 12 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Another story on lowered college standards for finding male students guilty of sexual harassment. Excerpt:

'What allowed Adler to extract herself from this absurd charge of sexual harassment was her status as a faculty member with the shields of tenure and academic freedom to protect her. Ponder for a moment, though, that, without those formidable defenses, she might have ended up like many college students today who find themselves thrown under the bus by their University's Offices of Sexual Harassment with no due process and no chance for redress.

Take for example Joshua Strange at Auburn University who in 2011 was accused by a girlfriend of forcing himself upon her. However, the alleged incident had occurred after they had been dating for several months and she didn't make a formal accusation until after their acrimonious breakup months later. Strange was fully cleared through the legal system -- the accuser never even showed up in court. Even so, Auburn kicked him out of the university and will arrest him for setting foot on campus again.

How did that happen? Like CU, Auburn conducts "trials" of sexual harassment in secret without rules, procedures, nor accountability. However, in an audio recording of the Strange trial obtained by the Wall Street Journal, the lack of fair treatment and due process was frighteningly apparent. Standards of proof were arbitrarily changed and then summarily ignored. Strange's lawyers were forbidden to speak, much less question the accuser. No qualified legal experts were involved -- the committee was chaired by a librarian and included students, a staffer from the College of Liberal Arts and a fisheries professor. Strange got crushed.

There's a reason for this absurd level of paranoia about sexual harassment at American colleges. In April 2011, the Assistant Education Secretary for Civil Rights in the Obama administration, Russlynn Ali, threatened to withhold federal money from educational institutions that failed to take a hard line against sexual misconduct so that "all students feel safe in their school." Losing federal money is a death sentence to most universities, so they can't let that happen. Instead, it's much safer, not to mention easier, to find a student or faculty member guilty of sexual harassment regardless of the truth. Welcome to this new reality, Adler and Strange.

Make no mistake, sexual harassment happens and, when it does, people should be held accountable for their bad behavior. But, setting the bar so low that "unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature" gets people kicked out of college is a formula for unfairly ruining peoples' lives. And, that is exactly what is happening in American higher education today.'

New report says millions of women at risk of falling into poverty, economic ruin

el cid · 12 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Another sad story about how women have it bad and we need to do more to empower and help women. Men, not so much. Excerpt:

'Although in recent decades women have made historic advances in nearly all areas of American public life, a staggering number of women across the country are still teetering on the verge of poverty and economic disaster, a new report released Sunday shows.
...
And yet despite the discouraging signs of economic gender inequality, "The Shriver Report: A Woman's Nation Pushes Back from the Brink" features a wide range of potential remedies — from prospective policy initiatives to community programs. The authors of the report say that turning away from historical injustices and embracing a more equitable future will boost the U.S. economy.

One such recommendation that Shriver highlighted on Meet the Press on Sunday was for women to think of themselves “as providers, not being provided for.

”Many women who responded to the poll said they wished they had stayed in school longer and Shriver said fathers and husbands need to reinforce the mindset that women can set themselves up to be breadwinners.
...
"Leave out the women, and you don't have a full and robust economy. Lead with the women, and you do," Shriver wrote in the report. "It's that simple, and Americans know it."
...
"I have always believed that women are not victims," Clinton wrote. "We are agents of change, we are drivers of progress, and we are makers of peace. All we need is a fighting chance."
...
Shriver said that since women make up 54 percent of voters, “women are at the center of our country,” and Democrats and Republicans need to work together “to modernize our relationships to women.”“When women do well, men do well and the nation does well,” Shriver said.'

Australia: Men's course about health, not anti-feminism: UniSA

Mastodon · 13 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE University of South Australia says its new course on male health has nothing to do with so-called extreme anti-feminist views, and contradicts claims in The Advertiser newspaper that two US-based men's rights advocates are involved in the course.

A spokeswoman for the university said a suite of male studies courses potentially involving both US advocates had been proposed by university staff in 2012, but had been rejected by the university in September that year following an academic review.

“Any future courses would need to go through the same formal approval process, in accordance with university policy, that involves consideration of academic merit and quality, and community benefit and viability,” the spokeswoman said in a statement to the HES.

...

The $1800 online certificate course in 'male health and male health promotion' is aimed at health and allied health professionals.

“Contrary to its description in some media reports, the certificate is framed for people already working in the health and allied health sectors, and has been developed by and will be taught by University of South Australia staff only,” UniSA said.'

'Masculinity Is More Than a Mask'

Mastodon · 13 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Are school shooters and mass murderers born out of an aggressive emphasis on masculinity in our society? The trailer for filmmaker and feminist activist Jennifer Siebel Newsom's new documentary, "The Mask You Live In," would have us think so.

The recently released trailer has attracted 1 million views on YouTube. It argues that American boys are captive to a rigid and harmful social code of masculinity. From the earliest age, they are told to "Be a Man!" "Don't Cry!" "Stop with the emotion!" and "Man up!" This "guy code" suppresses their humanity, excites their drive for dominance, and renders many of them dangerous. The trailer features adolescent men describing their isolation, despair, and thoughts of suicide, artfully interspersed with terrifying images of school shooters and mass murderers.

I admire Newsom for using her considerable talent to advocate for boys. But I worry that she is less concerned with helping boys than with re-engineering their masculinity according to specifications from some out-of-date gender studies textbook. The trailer is suffused with "males-are-toxic" ideology but shows little appreciation for how boys' nature can be distinctively good. "The Mask You Live In" is scheduled to be released later this year. Let's hope there is still time for edits.'

'Set to Explode: On masculinity and death'

Mastodon · 13 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My best friend died at twenty years old. He, like so many males, was set to explode; a bomb of manhood with a wick as short as impulse. He was taught only one game: breaking boundaries. In the end he broke his own. Game over.

Masculinity is killing us all. In men's endless drive to prove themselves as real men, they must break boundaries as a matter of course. "Don't do that" is simply an invitation. Each inhibition crossed is a further affirmation of manhood. There's a reason why a certain major firearm company's main marketing ploy revolves around convincing men that, without these guns, their "manhood cards" will be revoked. Like bombs, men don't simply hurt themselves when they explode, but also whoever happens to be nearby. That's the point.

Power is addictive. The more men taste it, the more they grasp for it and the more they cling to it. But masculinity kills them just as surely. Beneath the toxic exterior of ego, men need what all humans do: communion. There is no communion in violation. After all that can be violated is, what remains?

Yet, some men are different. Some men want back the empathy that was long ago stolen from them by the cult of masculinity.
...
My best friend died from manhood, as so many others do. Some die from abiding by it, but more die from it being used like a weapon against them (and too often, this is no metaphor). My friend ran his course of a fast and dangerous life, hurting others, but killing himself. There are many more like him out there, hurting and hurting just to try to feel alive. Those who could, rarely tell them to stop. Those who could, rarely show them another way.
...
Ours is a culture of violation. Women, children, other cultures, and other species pay for the exploits of the dominators. Men—like my old friend—serve simply as masculinity's foot soldiers. They may think they are benefiting as individuals, but in the end, they are slaves to a force that kills their empathy, kills their loved ones, and eventually, kills them.'

University of South Australia distances itself from males studies proposals

Mastodon · 13 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

The University of South Australia has distanced itself from a proposal for a series of male studies courses, some of which were to be taught by hardline anti-feminist advocates.

The university has approved one of four proposed graduate courses, a certificate in male health and health promotion, which will begin online next month.

But an original proposal by one of the university's academics outlined three further certificates, including a course called "males and sexism", which named lecturers who have been published on radical men's rights websites.
...
But National Union of Students president Deanna Taylor said it was concerning that the academic who founded the course, Associate Professor Gary Misan, was linked to the controversial Americans.

"It's a slippery slope once you open the door to people with these views and give them a platform … it's not long before proposals like the ones that were rejected actually get approved," she said.'

Schools in Houston, Texas provide opportunities for men to read with kids

TCM · 13 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Men from varied backgrounds and ages volunteer one hour a month to do something that at first took them out of their comfort zone – entertaining a roomful of youngsters at Elrod Elementary School by reading books aloud. Part of a program called “Real Men Read,” the eight men are among 300 who read to kids in the second, fifth and seventh grades in selected schools in Houston Independent School District.

As skeptical as I am of the phrase “real men” given its frequent abuse by those more interested in controlling men than helping them, Real Men Read is a good initiative. Also, they are deliberately turning a gendered phrase on its head. Due to various reasons, reading has become seen as something “feminine,” something “real men” don’t do. They are flipping the script to tell the world that they do.
...
These HISD staff members would have to work very hard to accommodate over 44 schools and 9,000 students in this program. I encourage you to send a word of thanks to Liz Philippi and Linda Bellard for their great work. Here is their contact information:'

[See actual article for contact info.]

Maria Shriver to Meet With Obama on Tuesday

Mastodon · 13 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'The White House says Maria Shriver on Tuesday will present President Barack Obama with a copy of her report on the economic status of women.

The report, "A Woman's Nation Pushes Back from the Brink," tells the story of the financial insecurity of America's families through the eyes of women. It finds that one-third of women are living near the brink of poverty despite making up half the U.S. workforce and two-thirds of the primary or co-breadwinners in their families.

Obama has been pressing Republicans to agree to extend unemployment insurance as he prepares to highlight income inequality in his State of the Union address on Jan. 28.

Shriver is a niece of President John F. Kennedy. She also is the wife of former California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger.'

'The war on men'

Mastodon · 13 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Guys, we need to stop being ashamed of being men. Virtually every behavior that is natural to a man is now being criticized and we are made to feel ashamed about being our gender. Perhaps if we spent more time uplifting men instead of trying to annihilate masculinity, we'd have better men.

I recently posted this comment on a social network site. Not a huge fan of Men's Health Magazine, but this ain't bad advice: "You can't be a topnotch man unless you're deeply grateful. For what? Glad you asked. For the gift of your gender. For those muscles in your back. For those neurons in your brain. For your mirth. Your lust. Your courage. For your possibilities. A man in full appreciates the twist of fate that made him so strong, so cunning, so stalwart, so alert, so sexually skilled, so fully equipped, so good to go. Live the appreciation, by using it all."

The point was that men should have an attitude of gratefulness. Is there anything wrong with a man being grateful? Hardly—I'd say it's one of the foundations of authentic masculinity. Men were almost embarrassingly silent regarding the post, but a number of women responded with snarky comments like, "so humble" or "vain," or "very prideful."

Really? Are we so threatened by passionate, proud masculinity that we (as a culture) are programmed to immediately take steps to keep it squashed down. After all, if we can keep men ashamed of themselves, we can keep them docile. And docile men are easy to control. We've raised a generation of docile sons and we now call them slackers. If I had posted a note encouraging women to be proud of how they were created I'd have been lauded as an enlightened and highly intelligent human being.'

Canada: University students debate women-only gym times

Mastodon · 13 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An initiative by the Ryerson Students' Union (RSU) pushing for women-only hours at one of the two on-campus athletic facilities has some students worked up about working out.

In a Facebook post last month, the RSU laid out its case for women-only workout slots. They wrote that many women feel uncomfortable exercising in the co-ed space for reasons ranging from Muslim women who will not remove their head scarves in front of men to women who the RSU argued have to endure "societal standards of beauty."

The campaign prompted anger online. "I've never even stepped foot in the Ryerson gym, but this still pisses me off. What's next, women only library hours?" wrote one commentator on Facebook.

"We all pay the same amount... so we should all have the same opportunities to use it and all be given the same amount of available time," wrote another on the social news website Reddit.

It's not an entirely new idea. There is already women-only gym time at the University of Toronto, York University, Memorial University and at Ryerson's campus pool. Ryerson already offers women a small private gym space restricted to a single studio that is sometimes booked out for other uses. The RSU would like to see a totally women-only space for regular time slots in one of two gyms.'

Sheryl Sandberg To Re-Release Lean In For Graduates So Men Can Lean In

Mastodon · 14 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Facebook COO told USA Today: "I never imagined in a billion years (the book) would spark this amount of conversation ... The energy around college campuses is exciting -- it gives us hope for the future." Sandberg will visit many of the 200 schools in 17 countries with on-campus "Lean In" discussion circles to promote the second edition of the book, which features six additional chapters, including advice for "how millennial men can lean in." Welcome, fellas.

Sandberg's original book sparked a national conversation about whether workplace feminism is a luxury of the upper-middle class -- and we're thrilled she is now addressing the message to a demographic that can get a headstart engaging in a dialogue on these issues.'

UK: Labour NEC: No women-only Aberdeen North shortlist

Mastodon · 14 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The decision by the party's UK national executive committee (NEC) means Labour MSP Richard Baker, who is reported to have expressed an interest in Aberdeen North, will be free to seek selection in the constituency as a potential MP.

Scotland on Sunday revealed this week that North East MSP Baker, a director of anti-independence campaign Better Together, was considering leaving Holyrood for Westminster.

A meeting of Labour's NEC in London today said that Aberdeen North, where sitting MP Frank Doran is retiring at the 2015 General Election, would be open to male and female candidates.
...
However, Labour is expected to select its candidate to fight the election in the constituency before the summer.

Labour's NEC decided to make five of seven Westminster candidate selections all-women shortlists, including Glenrothes where the sitting MP Lindsay Roy is standing down next year.

Party members will have to select their candidates from all-women shortlists in Blackburn - the seat represented by former foreign secretary Jack Straw, who is retiring.

Labour will also select a candidate from an-women shortlist in Dulwich and West Norwood, which is represented by former cabinet minister Dame Tessa Jowell.'

Maria Shriver book gives Obama new prop for ‘War on Women’

Mastodon · 14 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama has set aside time Tuesday to personally endorse a new feminist agenda backed by noted Democratic policy experts Beyoncé, Jada Pinkett Smith, LeBron James and Eva Longoria.

They’re listed as contributors to the 391-page apocalyptic-sounding report entitled “A Woman’s Nation Pushes Back from the Brink,” drafted by lead author Maria Shriver, a member of the Kennedy clan and ex-wife of former California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger.

Shriver’s progressive analysis and government-centered recommendations aren't nearly as important as the document’s ability for Democrats to boost women’s turnout in the 2014 election.

...

“The ‘War on Women’ is just about the only tool in the Democratic arsenal for 2014,” IWF director of cultural programs Charlotte Hays told TheDC, because the crash of Obamacare and Obama’s lousy economy has done so much damage to women, men and families.

...

The report calls for government to become a caregiver for women, by providing employer-paid leave for women, paid sick days for minimum-wage workers, uniform pay for men and women in similar jobs, and free child-care so that fatherless mothers can work minimum-wage jobs at $7.25 per hour instead of taking care of their children.

The report offers only a marginal role for men and boys, no support for marriage, and little or no role for the independent family that can birth and raise new Americans with minimal government participation.

The report begins by dismissing men; “In August 2012, my marriage ended suddenly after 25 years. It was a shock, but also a relief, because my husband had been angry for years. After he left, it was amazing how there was peace in our house again,” says the opening anecdote, which is followed by repeated demands that society be organized around the needs of women.

...

Later the report cites a survey of mothers and kids, but not fathers. it even recommends to female readers that they tip waitresses. It says nothing about tipping waiters.

...

Boys must be taught their place, Beyoncé insists. “We have to teach our boys the rules of equality and respect… and we have to teach our girls that they can reach as high as humanly possible,” says the very wealthy and successful female singer, who seems unaware that more women graduate from college than men.

“Women are more than 50 percent of the population and more than 50 percent of voters. We must demand that we all receive 100 percent of the opportunities,” says Beyoncé, who can sing better than 99.9999 percent of the population.'

Change.org petition: Drop charges against transgender teen defending herself

Matt · 15 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Really, if this had been a case of a female-to-male transgendered person being attacked by three boys, or if the attackers in this case were boys and not girls, does anyone imagine for a moment the DA would not be on them like white on rice? I sure don't. At the very least, defending oneself from street-thugs regardless of said thugs' gender is no offense -- unless of course said thugs are female and you have a penis, regardless of how you are dressed. Is to too much though to ask the question: "Why the hell are the attackers not being prosecuted?" Or is that just too radical an idea? Excerpt:

'My sister, Jewlyes Gutierrez, is a 16 year old teenager, who identifies as a transgender female. Her gender identity has caused her to be a victim of taunting, harassment, and bullying by her peers. On November 13, 2013, Jewlyes defended herself against three girls who were tormenting and then physically attacked her. This was captured on video and you can see Jewlyes trying to run away. The students involved were suspended but to our disbelief, District Attorney Daniel Cabral then filed charges against Jewlyes for battery - she's the only one charged.

Jewlyes should not be charged criminally. Rather, this altercation should be the responsibility of the school district, who should take proper action and implement the necessary resources to prevent incidents like these from happening again.

One of the girls who attacked Jewlyes had repeated bullied her - even spitting gum in her face. Jewlyes sought help from the assistant principal in fear of her physical safety but the issue was not properly addressed, no necessary action was taken by the administration. The bullying continued.
...
Violence towards transgender and queer youth is a serious problem. Recently in Oakland, CA, a transgender teen was lit on fire. What message is the District Attorney's Office sending when they prosecute a transgender teen who school officials labeled as the victim in this incident?'

Circumcision, cultural bias, and the question of consent

Matt · 15 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'...Small children -- let alone infants -- have no capacity to consent to the surgical removal of sound body parts. Secondly, there is no compelling medical need to cut off healthy genital tissue. The cutting of male or female genitals is a socially constructed practice often linked to group identity or religious doctrine.
...
Many Americans think of male circumcision as an issue of hygiene. Yet, this is not the case. The vast majority of men throughout human history have kept their intact penises clean without any extraordinary effort. Many Americans think that the foreskin, which is removed in a circumcision surgery, is useless skin. This is also untrue. It seems that with the acceptance of the routine cutting of infant penises, we also have cut the function of the foreskin from our consciousness. In an intact adult male, the foreskin is the most sensitive and erogenous 12-15 square inches of his body and it contains 10,000-20,000 fine touch nerve endings. It is not useless skin.
...
One can learn a great deal about cultural bias when comparing the traditions of male and female genital cutting.

Imagine an infant girl placed onto a cold, hospital table specifically designed to restrain her small body. She is naked. Her flailing arms and legs are strapped down. A medical professional places a sharp tool to the girl's genitals and prepares to cut off her labia or clitoris. The practice is said to keep her vulva clean and reduce the spread of HIV and other sexually transmitted diseases. The tissue is cut. The infant girl's face contorts with pain. Blood. Shrill screams pierce the room. She is given sugar water in an attempt to pacify. Later, parents are provided careful instructions as to how to care for the wound. They are told their daughter won't remember the event. They are told that no harm was done. Following the procedure, hospitals sell the discarded tissue for profit commercially. Imagine that this occurs every 30 seconds in America.

Now, imagine that the baby is a boy.'

Nigeria begins arresting homosexuals (i.e., male ones) after anti-homosexuality law passed

Matt · 15 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nigerian authorities today began arresting gay men after legislation was quietly approved criminalising homosexuality and imposing prison terms up to 14 years for breaking the new law.

Several gay couples were taken into custody in the country's majority-Muslim north, and rights groups feared that others would be targeted across the West African country.

Goodluck Jonathan, Nigeria's president, signed the Same Sex Marriage Prohibition Act into law on January 7, but there was no public report of the new law until journalists obtained a copy of the act on Monday.

It prohibits homosexuals from even meeting in groups of two or more, bans marriage or civil unions between people of the same sex, and criminalises gay clubs and events.

Reuben Abati, the presidential spokesman, said Nigerians were happy with the new law. It makes Nigeria the 38th African nation to enact legislation persecuting gay people.'

Everything you need to know about Japan's population crisis

Matt · 15 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'he Japanese now have one of the lowest fertility rates in the world, and at the same time, one of the highest longevity rates. As a result, the population is dropping rapidly, and becoming increasingly weighted toward older people. After peaking seven years ago, at 128 million, Japan's population has been falling — and is on a path to decline by about a million people a year. By 2060, the government estimates, there will be just 87 million people in Japan; nearly half of them will be over 65. Without a dramatic change in either the birthrate or its restrictive immigration policies, Japan simply won't have enough workers to support its retirees, and will enter a demographic death spiral. Yet the babies aren't coming.

...

There are both cultural and economic barriers. In Japanese tradition, marriage was more about duty than romantic love. Arranged marriages were the norm well into the 1970s, and even into the 1990s most marriages were facilitated by "go-betweens," often the grooms' bosses. Left to their own devices, Japanese men aren't sure how to find wives — and many are shying away from the hunt, because they simply can't afford it. Wages have stagnated since the 1990s, while housing prices have shot up. A young Japanese man has good reason to believe that his standard of living would drop immensely if he had to house and support a wife and children — especially considering that his wife likely wouldn't be working.

...

In Japan, marriage usually ends a woman's working career, even though most women are well educated. Once they have a child, women face strong social pressure to quit their jobs and assume very traditional roles, serving both the husband and the child. Mothers who want to keep working are stigmatized and usually find that employers won't hire them. Child care is scarce and expensive, while Japan's brutal work culture often demands that employees work more than 50 hours a week. Japanese husbands aren't much help either — they spend an average of one hour a day helping with the children and household chores, compared with three hours for husbands in the U.S. and Western Europe. "You end up being a housewife with no independent income," bank worker Eri Tomita told The Observer. "It's not an option for women like me."

...

For years, Takeshi hid from the world, playing video games all night and sleeping all day, eating from a tray his mother left outside his room. He was a hikikomori, one of an estimated 1 million Japanese teens and young men who have become shut-ins, with virtually no human contact beyond their parents. Some of the hikikomori first withdraw because of some social embarrassment — bad grades, or a romantic rejection. The longer they drop out, the more shame they feel in a society where one's status and reputation are paramount and hard to change. Parents, and especially mothers, often enable the withdrawal. "In Japan, mothers and sons often have a symbiotic, codependent relationship," says psychiatrist Tamaki Saito, who first identified the disorder in the 1990s. Takeshi re-entered society after four years, thanks to a government program that sends female outreach counselors known as "rental sisters" to coax the hikikomori out of the house. But that program doesn't always work. As one shut-in of 15 years said, "I missed my chance."'

Teen Boys Who Think They're Skinny May Be at Higher Risk for Depression

Minuteman · 15 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Teen boys who think they're too skinny are at increased risk for depression, and they're more likely to be bullied and use steroids, two new studies suggest.
...
Teen boys who believed they were overweight but were actually a healthy weight were also more likely to be depressed than those who believed they were of average weight. However, they were not as likely to be depressed as those who believed they were very underweight, the study found.

In the second study, researchers analyzed data from a 2009 survey of more than 8,000 boys in grades nine through 12 across the United States. The study found that those who believed themselves to be underweight were more likely to have depression than those who were average weight or overweight.

Boys who believed they were underweight were more likely to be victims of bullying and more likely to use steroids, according to the second study, which was published online recently in the journal Psychology of Men & Masculinity.
...
"These studies highlight the often underreported issue of distorted body image among adolescent boys," Aaron Blashill, who led both studies, said in a journal news release.

"Teenage girls tend to internalize and strive for a thin appearance, whereas teenage boys tend to emphasize a more muscular body type," said Blashill, a staff psychologist at Massachusetts General Hospital and a faculty member at Harvard Medical School. "We found that some of these boys who feel they are unable to achieve that often unattainable image are suffering and may be taking drastic measures."

Blashill said doctors treating depressed teen boys -- particularly those who believe they are underweight or bullied -- should be aware of the possibility of steroid use.'

All Of the 74,000 Job Gains in December Went to Women

Mastodon · 16 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The news: December 2013 was the month the economy decided to say hello, ladies.

Oh, and fellas? Apparently the economy wouldn't hire you if you were the last man ... in the economy. According to new data from the the Bureau of Labor Statistics, every single one of the paltry 74,000 jobs created in December went to women.

...

Women gained a net 75,000 jobs in December, while men lost 1,000 net jobs. And even though women haven't been the sole beneficiaries of job growth in a single month since December 2007, they claimed 56% of all new jobs over the past 12 months.

Men also fared far worse during the recession, thanks in large part to their concentration in male-heavy industries like construction, manufacturing, and chopping down trees using only your teeth. Meanwhile, women are concentrated in recession-safe industries like health care and government.

Girl power? Ladies, you're not really gonna like this part. The report isn't necessarily great news for women, either. Most of the jobs created weren't good ones.

Just 15,000 of the positions that went to women were in the professional and business services sectors, which tend to be higher-paying positions. But 39,000 were in retail, and 18,000 were in leisure and hospitality. If you've ever worked in either industry, you probably didn't enjoy the low pay, long hours, and dealing with customers, and it's not likely the women filling many of those positions will either.

Meanwhile, the 74,000 jobs created are far short of the 196,000 jobs Wall Street expected. It was a sour month for the economy, and many economists say that the official 6.7% unemployment rate is actually underestimating how many people are seeking work.'

For some, the 'war on women' never ends

Mastodon · 16 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton, who just wrapped up a four-year stint as secretary of state after eight years as a U.S. senator, reportedly will write in a new book that "the clock is turning back" for women in America.

It's a striking, if unsurprising, statement from the presumptive Democratic nominee for president who, by the way, is a woman. Things seem to be going well for Clinton, despite her gender.

Clinton's proclamation is nothing unusual, though. If you get your news from liberal women seeking elective office, you might never know the extent of academic and professional gains women have made in the past 40 years.

Women have attended college in greater numbers than men since the late 1970s, and 60 percent of students at private universities today are female. In graduate school, women outnumber men, according to the American Enterprise Institute. Almost 60 percent of all master's degrees awarded in the United States in 2012 went to women. Pay equity for millennial women stands at 93 percent, and that gap is narrowing, fortunately, according research data.

But the "war on women" never gets old with female Democratic politicians, including Clinton, who is gearing up for another White House run. The clock must always be turning back because the "war" pays perpetual political dividends, so long as it is never won.
...
At the same time, dissatisfaction among women continues to grow, paradoxically, according to the highly regarded University of Chicago General Social Survey, which has been keeping a happiness index for women since 1972. The better women have done professionally over the past 41 years in which the survey has been done, the unhappier they have reported being.
...
I'm all for equal rights for women. I'm just saying that in any other industry, we'd call this a scam.'

"Want Better Hedge Fund Returns? Try One Led by a Woman"

Mastodon · 16 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the world of hedge funds, a relative few have a woman at the helm. And yet, these funds may be the standouts from the bunch, a new report argues.

In the years since the financial crisis, hedge funds managed by women performed better than a broader index that reflects the performance of the industry, according to a report released on Wednesday by the professional services firm Rothstein Kass. The report seeks to show that this “alpha” – superior returns, in Wall Street speak – is no mere fluke.

“There is meaningful alpha to be gained from investing in women-owned and -managed funds,” Meredith Jones, a director at Rothstein Kass who wrote the report, said in an interview. “There appear to be both behavioral and biological factors that impact women’s ability to manage money and make them consistent.”'

Letter: "Radical response to Kristof column"

Mastodon · 16 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here.

'Re: “A birth-control suggestion,” by Carol Kelly, Friday Letters.

Carol Kelly’s letter attacking columnist Nicholas Kristof is as off the rails as any recent letter to the DMN.

Use of terms such as “typical man” and “irresponsible, unloving man-father” and suggesting “snip-snip of the male reproductive organs” can only be described as extreme misandry (male hatred).

While I rarely agree with Mr. Kristof, he does have a proven track record of bringing issues such as human trafficking and social injustice to light. His suggestion was that birth control be more readily available to avoid unwanted Third World births, which often lead to human trafficking. Hardly radical.'

Ref.: "A birth-control suggestion"

Maria Shriver's Rehash of Feminist Whines

Mastodon · 16 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'IN her nearly 400-page feminist screed about the plight of women in America, “A Woman’s Nation Pushes Back from the Brink,” Maria Shriver and the Center for American Progress have fired the first volley in the pivotal campaign of 2014 that will determine whether the President’s leftist agenda will proceed forward unimpeded or whether the Constitution and common sense will prevail. It is no small matter that the document also propels Hillary Clinton’s goals forward and seeks to revive a moribund feminist movement’s struggle for relevance. Served with a dollop of celebrity and a high-powered roll-out — including President Obama promoting the report with Shriver at the White House — the skill of the marketing effort greatly exceeds the heft of the report. It is long on glamour and glitz and short on substance and scholarly depth.
...
... The publication seems designed to mobilize the single-women voters essential for the Left’s future. It is, bottom-line, a political document, an ideologically slanted report that sees the world purely through a feminist lens. The degree of its bias can be measured by the fact that it glosses over two of the most serious issues of the day — the rise of female-headed households that predictably are dependent upon taxpayer largess (the report calls this “the adverse economic impact of motherhood”) and their father-absent children who predictably are at risk of a wide range of undesirable outcomes that threaten the nation’s schools and streets. It is a marvel the way the report dances around the fact that single motherhood is so often a pathway to poverty and that the poverty rate of children living in mother-only families is five times that of children in married-couple families. Promoting feminist myths is a lot easier than addressing real problems.

Feminists are obviously hoping to revive the dying embers of feminism and ignite a new generation who are, at best, apathetic to the claims of oppression and lack of opportunity for women. Sadly, the essays exacerbate rather than help resolve the growing divides between men and women (caused, in large measure, by feminist rhetoric and attitudes toward men) as well as the societal divides stemming from bad economic policies that have dramatically decreased the male labor force participation while precipitously increasing food stamp and disability payments.'

Upcoming Documentary Sparks Debate: Is Masculinity Bad for Boys?

Mastodon · 17 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"The Mask You Live In," a new documentary that will be released this year, explores the many difficulties boys are having in American society today. One scholar, though, is concerned that its critique of masculinity will go too far.

"We've constructed an idea of masculinity in the United States that doesn't give young boys a way to feel secure in their masculinity, so we make them go prove it all the time," Dr. Michael Kimmel, a sociologist and educator, says in the trailer, which has nearly 1.5 million views at press time.

The film is made by Jennifer Siebel Newsom, who made "Miss Representation," which looked at how the media represents, or misrepresents, women. In a July interview with The Huffington Post, Newsom explains that it was during the making of that film, while she was pregnant with her son, that she began thinking about the difficulties that boys face.

"At the time I was pregnant with my son, Hunter, and increasingly sensitive to the extremes of masculinity that would be imposed on my own son," she said.
...
Christina Hoff Sommers, a resident scholar for the American Enterprise Institute and author of The War Against Boys (2001), watched the trailer and voiced some concerns that "The Mask You Live In" (intentionally sounds like "masculine") may be missing the real problem.

"I admire Newsom for using her considerable talent to advocate for boys," Sommers wrote Monday for TIME. "But I worry that she is less concerned with helping boys than with re-engineering their masculinity, according to specifications from some out-of-date gender-studies textbook. The trailer is suffused with males-are-toxic ideology, but shows little appreciation for how boys' nature can be distinctively good."

For that op-ed, Sommers has five suggestions for Newsom as she makes her final edits for the film. One of those suggestions is to "appreciate the difference between healthy and pathological masculinity."'

UK: There Is A Danger This Feminism Thing Is Getting A Bit 'Ludicrous', Warns Lord Hurd

Mastodon · 17 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is a "ludicrous" obsession with ensuring there is equal representation of men and woman in parliament and other areas of public life, a former Conservative cabinet minister has said.

Lord Hurd, who served as home secretary and foreign secretary under Margaret Thatcher and Sir John Major, also said if voters did not like having a "good looking chap from a public school" as prime minister they would stop choosing them.

...

During a discussion on the lack of high profile female political leaders, Lord Hurd said Thatcher had always been "impatient" with the focus on her as the first women prime minister.

"She was the prime minister because she was the best person available regardless of gender, that was her firm belief," Lord Hurd said.

He added: "I think, therefore, the danger of feminism, the danger of constantly putting near the top of agenda that there ought to be more women and more women in this and that sphere of our life, is that you balance over and you become slightly ludicrous."

The Conservative peer also said all-women shortlists for parliamentary constituencies were "deeply undemocratic and will fail".

He noted that selection panels, the party members who pick the candidates, were "not just largely men, but women who choose men".'

Canada: OSC to require companies to outline efforts to add more women to boards

Mastodon · 17 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Ontario Securities Commission has proposed a new rule that would require companies to report annually on their policies to add more women to their boards and executive ranks.

The new rules unveiled Thursday will also require companies to report on their term limits for directors, which would bring Canada in line with many other countries that have also required companies to disclose whether they have term limits for their boards. Proponents argue term limits help ensure there is more board turnover so new directors -- including women -- can be added to the mix.

Companies are also being asked to report on whether they have voluntarily adopted targets for women on their boards or in executive roles.

The new rules follow a “comply or explain” model that the OSC indicated last year it favours for its gender diversity standards. Such a model does not require companies to add women to their boards or adopt a diversity policy, but requires them to explain why they have opted not to comply with the recommendation.'

UK: Female serial killer trial: Dennehy admitted stabbing three men in the heart

Mastodon · 17 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A man from Peterborough accused of helping serial killer Joanna Dennehy had warned she may murder one of her victims, a court has heard.

Dennehy, 31, has admitted stabbing three men in the heart and dumping their bodies in ditches in Cambridgeshire.

Two men, Gary Stretch and Leslie Layton, are accused of helping her dispose of the bodies and cover up the killings.

Giving evidence at Cambridge Crown Court, Carla White, who lived in the same house as Stretch, said Dennehy had seemed "rude and arrogant".

She said people had been intimidated by the killer - also known as Star because of her facial tattoos - and described how she had once grabbed her around the throat for no reason.

Ms White recalled a conversation with Stretch in the days leading up to Good Friday, when Dennehy's final victim, Kevin Lee, was killed.'

Will Male Circumcision be Banned in 2014?

Matt · 17 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As momentum continues to build against male circumcision, intactivists from around the USA have flooded Congress and 10 state legislatures with proposed legislation to ban genital cutting of boys. If enacted, the Male Genital Mutilation (MGM) Bill would amend existing female genital mutilation laws by making them gender neutral.

Asa Rubin, director of MGMbill.org's Massachusetts state office in Brookline, feels that all boys need to be protected from what is increasingly being referred to as genital mutilation. "It is simply immoral to surgically remove any healthy, natural, normally functioning tissue from a human being without their consent," said Rubin. "The fact that the law only forbids such barbarism for females is discriminatory and downright unconstitutional. Genital integrity is a human right that should apply equally to both sexes."

A young mother from central Vermont has also joined the grassroots intactivist movement. “I have been against circumcision since researching it six years ago when my first son was born,” said Amanda Fortier, who serves as MGMbill.org’s state office director in the city of Barre. “I try to educate everyone I know about the harm circumcision causes and that especially includes lawmakers, because they are in a position to stop it from happening. It should be obvious that healthy baby boys don’t need surgical correction. The foreskin performs important functions, just like our eyelids and earlobes.”'

United We Stand – Divided We Fall

Matt · 17 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Agreed; the idea of a truly united MRA-FRA movement may be the only concept that truly scares the hell out of feminists, since that is the only thing that is likely able to stop them.

'I´ve been thinking about how many years the Fathers´ Rights Movement have lost because of territorial pissing between different groups - all claiming to have the universal solution to the problem.

It´s misguided nationalism to believe that children and fathers are only affected by the court system in custody cases in one´s own country. And calling other father groups ”copycats” doesn´t help much either – does it?

Some father groups have received a lot of media coverage. But the situation hasn´t really changed that drastically to the better for the majority of the children and their fathers, neither nationally nor globally.

If some kind of a Global Father Alliance would be formed, we would actually have a chance of making a real change. All right, if the world is too big to take on at once, let´s start with Europe.

Just imagine what an impact the national father groups would have in their parliaments if they were to be represented by a lobby group in the European Parliament.

Read it and weep, and next time you say that custody cases are a structural problem created by society (which is true), think about what the father groups around the world could have achieved if they were united.'

Mother abused twin children over homework, police say

Matt · 17 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Titusville woman was arrested on aggravated child abuse charges for allegedly abusing her fraternal twin children, arrest documents show.

...

Police say Victoria Williams, 26, hit her 7-year-old boy and girl in the head with a belt and slammed their heads onto a table because they didn't get a homework problem correct.

Williams posted bond and was released from jail Tuesday and Local 6 went by her Titusville apartment Wednesday but all she said was, "No questions."

According to the arrest report, the boy had abrasions and contusions on his face and head. Police say when they asked him what happened, he said he was holding a pencil when his mother pushed his head against the table.

...

According to the arrest report, the father of the twins called police when he noticed his kids had "injuries consistent with excessive corporal punishment."

Police tell Local 6 the 7-year-olds didn't go to school Friday because of the swelling on their faces. However, they were told by Williams not to tell anyone about how they sustained the injuries, if anyone asked.'

Woman strangled newborn son, tossed him in trash: police

Matt · 17 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Texas woman arrested on suspicion of killing her newborn son and dumping him in the trash told detectives she "strangled the baby and watched him die," according to an arrest affidavit released by San Antonio police on Wednesday.

The body of the infant, likely less than a week old, was found stuffed in a duffel bag on the intake conveyor belt of a Waste Management recycling center in San Antonio two days before Christmas.

Nidia Alvarado, 25, was taken into custody on Tuesday night without incident at her home and charged with capital murder, which carries the possibility of the death penalty, police said.

"It's believed that the suspect gave birth to that baby boy, and shortly thereafter murdered him by strangulation," police Sergeant Javier Salazar told reporters.
...
Under Texas law, a child under 60 days can be left in the care of an official employee at designated safe places, such as hospitals, fire houses or police stations.

A person who drops off an unharmed infant will not be prosecuted for neglect or abandonment under the "Baby Moses Law," named for the biblical figure. The law is aimed at providing desperate parents with a responsible alternative and protects them from criminal prosecution.'

NPO: Virginia Bill Would Increase Excessive Child-Support Obligations by Ignoring Economic Realities

Matt · 17 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The bill, HB 933 introduced in Virginia's House of Delegates would increase the state's child-support schedule, would further increase child-support obligations that are already excessive for many (but not all) non-custodial parents. The "bill is a recommendation of the Child Support Guidelines Review Panel," whose proposed child-support increase ignores basic economic realities and overestimates the cost of raising children. It also appears to double-count expenses and make non-custodial parents pay custodial parents for costs that custodial parents have indirectly been reimbursed for by federal and state tax codes. It would force some low-income parents to pay what they cannot possibly pay, and substantially increase high-income parents' obligations based on a misreading of Virginia child-support history and a likely failure to consider tax increases recently imposed on upper-income households.

(Before I proceed any further, I should note that I have no conflict of interest here: I am not divorced, and do not owe, pay or receive child support, and am raising my daughter with my wife, to whom I remain happily married. And although I am a lawyer, I don't practice family law in Virginia. So I will not be affected by the proposed child-support increase.)'

"The Hunt" nominated for an Oscar

Matt · 17 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Auto-translated article here.

'I've blogged about this movie before, and here is a quote from the post:

I can start by saying that the film hardly had a sportkepa of a chance of being produced in Sweden. For who would even try to apply for grants and funding for a film about a man who works at the kindergarten and who innocently gets singled out as a pedophile??

If the movie had been about to catch and convict the perverted bastard to life for the sexual abuse so the film had guaranteed to become produced in Sweden, but now it's about the witch trials that Lucas is exposed, and as I said the part has not really come to Sweden than. Taking hold of the false allegations of sexual abuse that men accused are notified, prosecuted and convicted for.

I am happy to Swedish media writes about the nomination and I hope they continue to write about the movie, because although it has been reviewed and you have not highlighted the film. It can be said that due to the film's theme.'

Original article here.

Are We Lazy in Our Approach to Educating Boys?

Mastodon · 17 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When we're walking home after school, I often hear stories about how the boys in our daughters' classroom misbehaved in this way or that way. I've read a lot about how classrooms are geared towards girls, who are more likely to sit quietly for long periods of time doing detailed work. I've wondered how this focus on girls has affected the boys in their school. The article below answers many of my questions, and gives me a lot to think about as we enter a new year. I hope it inspires you to reconsider how we educate our kids -- both boys and girls.
...
A recent study from researchers at the University of Georgia, which followed 10,000 students as they moved from kindergarten to eighth grade, indicates that though boys scored well on tests, indicating mastery of material, girls got better grades. Researchers account for higher scores in girls because they comported themselves better than boys while in the classroom.

“I think that, by now, most academics have accepted that boys and girls have fundamentally different learning needs; girls are better at sitting still and listening, whereas boys learn better via kinesthetic learning, which involves more physical activity,” says Dixon, who has more than three decades experience as a teacher and is a parent of boys, and is the author of “Helping Boys Learn: Six Secrets for Your Son’s Success in School,” (HelpingBoysLearn.com). He also has a teacher’s edition titled “Helping Boys Learn: Six Secrets for Teaching Boys in the Classroom.”

“There are many other studies, however, showing boys underperforming in school; now, it’s a matter of what we’re going to do about it.”'

Woman gets prison for false rape report on heels of no-contest plea for fraud

Mastodon · 17 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A judge sentenced a "tormented and disturbed" Michigan woman to at least five years in prison Friday for falsely accusing two men of rape, a punishment that came just days after she pleaded no contest to a cancer scam in a separate case that also challenged her credibility.

St. Clair County Judge Daniel Kelly exceeded the guidelines, saying it would be a "travesty of justice" to sentence Sara Ylen to less.

In December, Ylen, 38, was convicted of making up a story about two men attacking her at her Lexington home, 80 miles northeast of Detroit. The jury also convicted her of tampering with evidence by using makeup to create what looked like bruises.

Ylen's integrity has been shattered after years of being considered a sympathetic figure in eastern Michigan.

She accepted thousands of dollars from supporters and was treated by a hospice service for two years after claiming to have end-stage cervical cancer that had spread throughout her body. But state police found no evidence confirming a cancer diagnosis, and Ylen on Monday pleaded no contest to fraud in Sanilac County.'

UK: Vince Cable calls on leading companies to appoint more women as directors

Mastodon · 19 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The business secretary, Vince Cable, has called on Britain's biggest companies to increase the number of women on their boards this year.

In a letter to the chairmen of the top 350 listed companies, Cable urged them each to appoint an extra female director in 2014 and to let two senior female managers serve as non-executive directors at another company.

The letter, written jointly with Lord Davies, who champions women on boards, also called on chairmen to publish targets for female representation at board and senior management level and to say how they would achieve them.

In 2011, Davies, the former trade minister and boss of Standard Chartered bank, set FTSE 100 companies the goal of increasing female board membership to 25% by 2015, from 12.5% at the time. The next biggest 250 companies were also encouraged to employ more female directors.'

How Can We Help Women? By Helping Men

Mastodon · 19 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In her thoughtful op-ed in the New York Times, family historian Stephanie Coontz answered the question "How can we help men?" with a ringing endorsement of gender equality: "By helping women," she answered.

I'd like to suggest the converse is equally true. How can we help women? By helping men.

Women's progress towards equality is incontestable; it seems obvious that we are, today, more gender equal than we have ever been in our history (I hasten to point out that we are not "there" yet, that we have not fully achieved gender equality, just that we are closer than we have ever been.) But progress towards greater equality has slowed: Women have pushed the glass ceiling higher on the corporate ladder, but all that leaning in has not crashed through to the board room. Girls and women compose half of all students in our law, medical and business schools, and have made enormous strides in STEM courses, yet working mothers are doing more housework and child care than they did 30 years ago. Every day, we read stories of sexual assault -- in our schools, homes, at parties and in our military.

...

In reality, much of the cause of the "boy crisis" in education lies with the definition of masculinity held by the boys themselves -- the notion that academic disengagement is proof of masculinity. Helping boys to engage academically requires that we recognize different learning styles along an array of measures -- which in turn leads to recognizing diverse aptitudes and competencies, enabling everyone, girls and boys, to better achieve to their potential.'

Cops: Mom kills 2 kids in exorcism try

Matt · 19 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'(CNN) - A second Maryland woman has been charged with murder in connection with the Friday stabbing deaths of two children during an exorcism attempt, authorities said.

Two children died of multiple stab wounds and two others are hospitalized with undisclosed injuries, police said.

Monifa Denise Sanford, 21, was charged with two counts of first-degree murder and two counts of attempted first-degree murder, Montgomery County Police said.

Earlier, authorities announced that the children's mother, Zakieya L. Avery, 28, also faces the same charges. Police said Saturday that Avery stabbed two of her children to death and wounded two others while attempting an exorcism.'

Canada: Foreskin advocate speaks at University

Matt · 20 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It's a rare thing to meet an activist who manages to remain persuasive and credible when naked from the waist down.

Judging by the audience's reaction to children's rights activist Glen Callender's presentation at UBC [University of British Columbia] on Friday, he pulled it off.

The talk, hosted by UBC Freethinkers in the Buchanan building, was part of a larger effort founded by Callender, the Canadian Foreskin Awareness Project, or CAN-FAP. Its purpose is to advocate for the right of male, female and intersex children to grow up with intact genitals.
...
CAN-FAP's primary objective is the legal protection of a child's right to choose whether or not to be circumcised. Callender said that female circumcision is particularly harmful because one can't cut off as much of a boy's genitals without restricting his ability to reproduce later in life.

"We use the term 'female genital mutilation' to talk about what people do to girls," Callender said. "Circumcision is what we do to our children with their best interests in mind. Mutilation is what other people do to their children with bad intentions." Callender thinks this is a double standard — a claim not without its critics.
...
"There is a 2000-year body of Jewish writing and a 200-year body of medical writing that openly acknowledges that a primary purpose of infant circumcision is to permanently damage the penis so the boy, and the man he becomes, will never be able to fully enjoy sex," said Callender.'

Australia: "More Help For Blue Mountains Women After Fires"

Minuteman · 20 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Women in the Blue Mountains will have better access to drug and alcohol treatment programs as a result of additional funding being provided by the Australian Government.

Assistant Minister for Health, Senator Fiona Nash, said today the Government would provide immediate additional funding to the Blue Mountains Drug and Alcohol Recovery Service, to help it to meet increased demand.

“The recent devastating bushfires have impacted heavily on many Blue Mountains people,” Senator Nash said.

Member for Macquarie Louise Markus MP welcomed the additional funding.'

Australia: "Females in Financial Planning Evening – you're invited!"

Minuteman · 20 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Do you think about ways of improving the quality of life for yourself and everyone around you?

If you answered yes, then maybe you should consider a career in financial planning.

We recognise that women are known for their strong interpersonal skills, empathy for others and passion for performance, and these are the traits of successful financial planners.

If you want to find out more about this rewarding career, then come along to one of our special 'Females in Financial Planning' evenings being held across the country.'

Single Teen Mom? Texas' Wendy Davis Lied About Life Story

Matt · 20 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Well at least it's more entertaining than the whole "born in a log cabin" routine. But it does show that feminists' insistence that female pols make categorically "better" political leaders because they're less likely to lie, be corrupted, etc., is hogwash. Excerpt:

'Wendy Davis, the Texas state senator whose filibuster for abortion rights made her a Democratic superstar and launched her campaign for governor, has admitted to the Dallas Morning News that she lied about key events in her life, including her first divorce. Davis may even have lied under oath, testifying in a federal lawsuit over redistricting that "I got divorced by the time I was 19 years old," when in fact she was divorced at age 21.

Other missing details have included: her second husband paid her way through law school and she divorced him the day after the last payment was made; her ex-husband accused her in initial court filings of adultery, and was awarded custody of their two daughters; and she first ran for city council in Fort Worth as a Republican.

"My language should be tighter," she said, admitting her campaign biography has been less than truthful.

It is not clear whether the article in the Dallas Morning News, by senior political writer Wayne Slater, is meant to be an exposé or a defense, presenting embarrassing details in the best light possible to present an overall picture of competence. One unidentified source, who said that Davis is "going to figure out a way to spin herself in a way that grabs at the heart strings," is also quoted as saying that "she'd be a good governor."'

Woman conceived with anonymous donor sperm discusses importance of children knowing both biological parents

fathers4fairness · 21 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Alanna Newman was conceived via sperm from an anonymous donor and now as an adult she wants to share her opinions and observations on the importance of biological fathers. In particular, she feels it is wrong to deliberately deny a child their relationship with a biological parent. Her web sites:

http://www.AlanaNewman.com/http://www.anonymousus.org/

'Wendy Davis, unmasked'

Mastodon · 21 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is not exactly a surprise that the latest feminist political icon, Texas state Senator Wendy Davis, turns out to be a phony and an exploiter. Davis, you may recall, rocketed to progressive superstardom by conducting an ultimately futile filibuster on a bill tightening health regulations on abortions after 20 weeks of gestation when the life of the mother is not in peril. The fact that Davis is an attractive blond and speaks fairly well in public was enough to gladden the heart of the pro-abortion faction, eager to find a champion who can be packaged as an inspiring profile in courage. She has already raised $12 million for her campaign for governor, tapping into the victimology cult among wealthy feminist women.
...
Single mother Wendy enrolled in a community college, and then won a scholarship to Texas Christian University, and married Jeff Davis, a man 13 years older than she and a successful lawyer. He paid her tuition at TCU, and then supported her at Harvard Law School, and raised their two daughters, who remained in Ft. Worth with him, while she immersed herself in the world of high powered elites in Cambridge.

Now here comes the really, really unsavory part:

> Over time, the Davises' marriage was strained. In November 2003, Wendy Davis moved out.
>
> Jeff Davis said that was right around the time the final payment on their Harvard Law School loan was due. "It was ironic," he said. "I made the last payment, and it was the next day she left."

Nice! Dump the kids on hubby, get him to pay for her education, and then dump him as soon as the last bill is paid. She's a user, and exploiter of men.

But it gets worse:

> In his initial divorce filing, Jeff Davis said the marriage had failed, citing adultery on her part and conflicts that the couple could not overcome. The final court decree makes no mention of infidelity, granting the divorce solely "on the ground of insupportability."
>
> Amber was 21 and in college. Dru was in ninth grade. Jeff Davis was awarded parental custody. Wendy Davis was ordered to pay $1,200 a month in child support.

Wendy is a piece of work. And those who know her well are on to that:

> A former colleague and political supporter who worked closely with Davis when she was on the council said the body's work was very time-consuming.
>
> "Wendy is tremendously ambitious," he said, speaking only on condition of anonymity in order to give what he called an honest assessment. "She's not going to let family or raising children or anything else get in her way."

On the downside, we have seen another feminist phony, Elizabeth Warren, get herself elected to the United States Senate, so we can't rule out Wendy as a rising force. But Texas ain't Massachusetts. My guess is that Wendy's campaign will crash and burn. But there will be ample time for us to have fun poking holes in her story.'

Wendy Davis's Defenders

Mastodon · 21 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Following revelations that Wendy Davis fudged some of the details of her personal background and life story — a centerpiece of her long-shot gubernatorial campaign — the Left is rallying to her defense.

Predictably, rather than address the actual discrepancies in Davis's "rags to riches" narrative, her liberal supporters have devoted most of their energy to blasting her critics as sexist foot-soldiers in the Republican party's "war on women."

...

A ThinkProgress blogger charged that the attacks on Davis were drawn from a "classic sexist playbook," and seemed to find hidden malice in Morning News reporter Wayne Slater's innocuous statement that, owing to the admitted discrepancies in Davis's personal narrative, "Some will question how much of her success was her own doing, and how bad her circumstances were to start." The left-wing blogger argues that such questions are clearly absurd, citing as evidence the fact that Davis herself insists that such questions are, in fact, "absurd."'

Feminist writers such as Jessica Valenti went after the Morning News for "trying to paint Wendy Davis a bad mother & gold-digger," and presumably for quoting Davis's second husband, Jeff Davis, who noted that their relationship ended almost immediately after he made the final payment on her Harvard Law School loan. "It was ironic," he said. "I made the last payment, and it was the next day she left." "Give me a [fing] break," Valenti rebutted. She later wrote that she "look[s] forward to the day a male politician is criticized for having a spouse that supported his career."

Woman confronts female teacher who abused her in middle school

mens_issues · 22 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who says a female teacher from middle school sexually abused her for years decided to confront the teacher -- and post video of the exchange on YouTube.

Within hours, the educator resigned from her job at another school in California. Police launched an investigation. And the former student, who once felt powerless, now says she feels vindicated knowing the ex-teacher is no longer working with children.

...

"I am 28 years old and have been waiting years to get up enough courage to report a teacher for sexually abusing me for years," Jamie's caption on her YouTube video states.

"When I finally got up enough courage to report her, I found out that the statute of limitations was up and she will never have to pay for the things that she did to me."

So she decided to expose the teacher on the Internet.

"I decided I'm going to call her to get some answers from her," Jamie said to a camera in her home.

After the woman identified as the teacher picked up the phone, Jamie asked, "So what happens when a student comes in and says that they're having (a) sexual relationship with a teacher?"

"I would involve law enforcement," the woman said.

"So how is that any different from what you did" years ago, Jamie said.

"It's not," the woman replied.

"Do you realize that you brainwashed me, and you manipulated me, and that what you did was wrong?" Jamie asked.

"Yes. And I regret it," the woman responded.'

Australia: Woman who claimed abduction bid charged

Minuteman · 22 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A woman who claimed she narrowly escaped being abducted by a group of men in a red hatchback in Sydney's southwest has been charged with making it all up.

The 29-year-old, named only as Ada, appeared in television news reports last week after claiming a man grabbed her on Railway Street in Liverpool and tried to drag her to the car.

She said that when she started shouting and screaming, the man let go and fled in the car.

The woman said no one came to her aid, though there were lots of people around, and she questioned whether she would ever feel safe.

Her complaint sparked a police investigation and an appeal for witnesses to the alleged abduction.'

SAVE: Tell the DOJ to Stop the Racist Stereotypes

Matt · 23 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Three years ago Attorney General Eric Holder let loose with this humdinger: "intimate partner homicide is the leading cause of death for African-American women ages 15 to 45."

For nearly three years persons have been calling for a correction, including Christina Hoff Sommers, Mark Perry, and the Washington Post Fact Checker Glenn Kessler: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/stereotypes/

On January 17, changes were made to the DOJ website. But instead of removing the inaccurate information, they just added this to the bottom of the page:

'PLEASE NOTE: These remarks, as originally delivered in 2009, cited a statistic naming intimate partner homicide as the leading cause of death for African-American women ages 15 to 45. This statistic was drawn from a range of reputable sources, including a 2003 study by the National Institute of Justice. However, recent figures indicate other causes of death-including cancer and heart disease-outrank intimate partner homicide for this age group.'

But this "clarification" actually implies the claim was once true: "This statistic was drawn from a range of reputable sources"!

Tell the Department of Justice to stop its portrayal of Black men as abusers!

- Email: askdoj-at-usdoj.gov
- Phone: 1-202-353-1555

Thank you,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Open letter from Jewish intactivist to Chief Rabbi of Denmark

Matt · 23 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'It is important to understand that for many Jews this pact, this covenant of blood, is so strongly rooted in their minds that it is perceived as being the central pillar of Judaism. For some, circumcision is practically equal to being human and certain interpretations of scripture actually state that a boy is a real human being only after circumcision has taken place, because boys are born imperfect and with uncontrollable sexual impulses. Thus, circumcision is considered a correction commanded by the Lord himself, a fleshly and symbolic ”opening toward God” undertaken with surgical instruments. In some Jewish circles the ritual is considered of such importance that dead men with intact foreskin are circumcised before burial. I’ll allow this to speak for itself.

...To speak as I do here: straight and directly into Judaic assumptions, immediately prompts the inner Jewish gatekeeper to exclaim: ”Nothing is wrong with Judaism, how dare you!”. One could take this at face value and just walk away. However, there are people (myself for instance) who disagree with this claim. Now the question is: can we have a conversation during which objections to circumcision may be seriously considered without any of the fierce attacks usually triggered by the mere sound of the word on the person presenting them? Is it possible together to explore whether some aspects of Judaism could possibly be flawed? To an open, interested, exploring and truth seeking person there can hardly be any harm in that.
...
The case is this: if you are able to listen, dare listen, and you are willing to listen to what is clear and obvious: of course you do not need to cut your newborns to win Gods acceptance, a horrifying question emerges from the mists: does this mean that something is wrong in Judaism? The answer is, yes. Of course it is wrong to maintain a practice which involves that one – unnecessarily – cuts parts from small children’s small bodies. Imagine if our neighbors – for religious reasons – had the habit of cutting their earlobes, the outer joint of their little finger or the nipples of their babies. Just like that, off with them. We would never allow that to happen. Nevertheless we accept something even worse: the cutting into and cutting off parts of children’s private and intimate sexual organs.

The consequences are many and ramified but they may be difficult to see until the horror dawns on you. The foreskin tissue contains an enormous amount of receptors which makes it the most highly sensitive area of the entire male body. Several studies show how infants are highly sensitive, they feel pain, and research is constantly extended with more knowledge about how important the first months and years are for a baby’s healthy development. Reports from circumcisions relate of children lapsing into traumatic shock during the procedure – being unable to make a sound. By some this is interpreted to mean that the mutilation does not inflict pain – in reality the opposite is true. Jewish mothers and fathers who have regretted the procedure tell how the special intimacy and (until then) unbreakable bond between child and parents is ripped even more violently apart than the way in which the foreskin is torn from the glans before it is cut off. The child loses the most important part in its relation with its parents: the trust that mother and father will always act in its best interest and defend it – also against religious practice.'

Obama implements Task Force on Protecting Students from Sexual Assault

Mastodon · 23 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Obama and Vice President Joe Biden met with top Cabinet members on the heels of the publication of a new report showing one in five college women, or 22 million, have been victims of sexual violence. The president then signed a new memorandum that established the White House Task Force on Protecting Students from Sexual Assault.
...
According to the report, “Rape and Sexual Assault: A Renewed Call to Action,” almost half of the women survivors were raped before the age of 18. More than a third of those who were raped as minors were also assaulted as adults, the analysis found.

Most women victims know their perpetrators, who are 98% men, according to the report.

“Freedom from sexual assault is a basic human right. No man has a right to raise a hand to a woman for any reason, for any reason, other than self-defense,” Biden said prior to Obama’s remarks.

But men are also victims. More than one-quarter of men survivors were raped before they were 10 years old. And 1 in 71 men, or about 1.6 million, have been victims of sexual violence during their lives.

Additionally, 93% of men survivors also report their assailants are of the same gender.'

New White House sexual assault task force could result in conviction quotas

Mastodon · 23 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The report also declares that the criminal justice response to sexual assault is too often inadequate and lays out a goal of increasing arrest, prosecution and conviction rates without any specific targets. The report blames police bias and a lack of training to investigate and prosecute sex crimes for low arrest rates and says the federal government should promote training and help police increase testing of DNA evidence collected from victims.

The report mentions the wave of sexual assault in the military - Obama last month gave the Pentagon a year to better prevent and respond to the crime within its ranks or face further reforms. White House officials say they want to set the example by turning around the sexual assault epidemic in the military.

Obama is bringing Attorney General Eric Holder, Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel, Education Secretary Arnie Duncan and Health and Human Services Secretary Kathleen Sibelius to the Oval Office on Wednesday to press them to work on the problem. Then he plans to join an ongoing meeting of his Council on Women and Girls attended by more Cabinet members in the East Room, where he is to sign the memorandum creating the task force. Vice President Joe Biden, who wrote the Violence Against Women Act and has led other efforts to reduce sexual assault, also plans to attend.'

Median male worker hasn't seen a raise in 30 years

Mastodon · 23 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For all the advances since the era of teased-out rocker hair, one thing hasn't changed for America's average working man: the amount of bacon he brings home.

So says Rana Foroohar, a CNN global economic analyst and Time magazine assistant managing editor (who, by the way, snagged the first interview with new Federal Reserve chair Janet Yellen). Appearing on CNN's The Situation Room with Wolf Blitzer, Foroohar brought up the point during a general discussion about the country's economic woes.

...

His 2012 study found real earnings of median males actually dropped by 19 percent since 1970, he found. "This means that the median man in 2010 earned as much as the median man did in 1964 — nearly a half century ago."

The reasons for the trend are complex, Greenstone told us. Yes, there have been sweeping changes in technology, machinery and trade over the last 30 or 40 years that have had some effect. More striking, he said, is that educational attainment among men, which used to climb with each generation, has dropped off.

"The decline in working is concentrated among the men who have lower levels of education," Greenstone said. "It's not concentrated among the college-grad guy who is married to a super successful woman."

...

Foroohar said, "the median male worker in this country has not seen a raise, inflation-adjusted, for 30 years, basically."

Federal data for 1982-2012 shows a slight increase, though the numbers show the real value of median male earnings have been in the range of $46,840-$51,670 for about 40 years. We found another point of view that says the real median income has declined significantly once men without jobs are factored in. We also found a broader definition of income that changes the dynamic.

Still, Foroohar clearly has a point. We rate her claim Mostly True.'

11-year-old boy suspended over Miami Heat haircut

Mastodon · 23 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'11-year-old Danny Valdes is a huge Miami Heat fan. He loves the two-time defending NBA champions so much that he recently had their logo and the Miami skyline shaved into his head by his stepfather, who owns a barbershop. Unfortunately, his new cut didn't fly with school officials, and a counselor shaved Valdes' head with a pair of clippers before returning him to class.

According to NBC Miami, school officials believed the haircut to be distracting and gang-related.

"While the school counselor followed the wishes of the student and instructions of the student's stepfather that were provided over the phone in the presence of several witnesses, the district acknowledges the action taken by personnel were not appropriate," the school district said in a statement. NBC also reports that Valdes' mother is transferring him to another school'

Texas cops handcuff man after he gave change to homeless person

Mastodon · 23 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'You may want to think twice next time you consider giving a homeless person some change, if one Texas man's experience is any indication.

Houston resident Greg Snider claims he was arrested and held for more than an hour after local police mistakenly targeted him as a criminal, all for giving a homeless man a few quarters.

Snider said he had pulled into a local parking lot in order to make a phone call when a homeless man came up to him and asked for some spare cash. Snider claims he gave the man 75 cents and left to continue on his way.
...
Prosecution of the drug war has come under scrutiny lately as more Americans question the overall effects of police behavior. In two particularly disturbing cases, New Mexico men were pulled over and suspected of carrying drugs in their anal cavities. The men were then taken to hospitals outside of police jurisdiction where doctors performed invasive medical procedures that failed to turn up any drugs.

One man, David Eckert, was subjected to multiple enemas and rectal finger examinations. This week, he was awarded $1.6 million as the city and county involved settled their portions of the lawsuit.'

Australia: Anger after circumcision rite ends with three boys airlifted to hospital

Mastodon · 23 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

There is still anger in a remote Northern Territory community after three teenage boys had to be medically evacuated following an Indigenous initiation ceremony which went horribly wrong.

The boys were part of a group of about 20 who were circumcised two days before Christmas near the small Gulf of Carpentaria town of Borroloola, 700 kilometres east of Darwin.

They were so badly cut during the procedure that they had to be taken to Darwin for urgent treatment.

Local ambulance driver William Miller arrived at the ceremony to find his 17-year-old grandson Bryce severely injured.

"I took one look at him and he was sitting in a pool of blood ... and that really hurt me, that did," he said.
...
The Northern Territory Government says it is aware of the case, and so far its investigators have found the injuries do not constitute child abuse.

The NT Child Abuse Taskforce received two notifications about the incident, leading to an investigation by two police officers and the Department of Children and Families.

But their enquiries found that the children had not been harmed as defined by the Care and Protection of Children Act.
...
The circumcision ceremony dates back thousands of years and is common practice in traditional and remote communities across northern Australia.

Elders say the ceremony is a critical cultural step where boys become men.

The elders who supervised the circumcision said the injuries were likely caused by a visiting family member who is still learning the ritual.
...
Bryce Miller has recovered from his injuries and says he has no regrets participating in this initiation into manhood.

His grandfather William, on the other hand, says no other family members will ever take part again.

Others in the community, including Garrawa man Gadrian Hoosen, say the ceremony will continue.

"[There's] no point talking about our ceremony because that's not going to stop us from carrying that culture," he said.

"We're going to carry it on."'

Judge rules Kansas sperm donor must pay child support

Mastodon · 23 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A man who provided sperm to a lesbian couple in response to an online ad is the father of a child born to one of the women and must pay child support, a Kansas judge ruled Wednesday.

Topeka resident William Marotta had argued that he had waived his parental rights and didn't intend to be a father. Shawnee County District Court Judge Mary Mattivi rejected that claim, saying the parties didn't involve a licensed physician in the artificial insemination process and thus Marotta didn't qualify as a sperm donor, The Topeka Capital-Journal reported.

"In this case, quite simply, the parties failed to perform to statutory requirement of the Kansas Parentage Act in not enlisting a licensed physician at some point in the artificial insemination process, and the parties' self-designation of (Marotta) as a sperm donor is insufficient to relieve (Marotta) of parental right and responsibilities to the child," Mattivi wrote.

The Kansas Department for Children and Families filed the case in October 2012 seeking to have Marotta declared the father of a child born to Jennifer Schreiner in 2009. The state was seeking to have Marotta declared the child's father so he can be held responsible for about $6,000 in public assistance the state provided, as well as future child support.'

Barbara Kay: State supports mothers who want the child, but not the costs

fathers4fairness · 24 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2009 lesbian Jennifer Schreiner bore a baby girl with the aid of sperm from a certain William Marotta. In 2012 the Kansas Department for Children and Families sought to have Marotta declared the father of the child. Not, you understand, for reasons having to do with actual fatherhood – I mean, fatherhood in the sense of acting as a parent – but fatherhood in the "ATM" sense of the word, which is the way social service agencies and, all too often, courts view men when issues of child support come up.

Marotta feels that since his arrangement with Schreiner never envisaged him being involved in the child's life, and since he had signed a contract waiving his parental rights at the time of donorship, he should not have to pay child support. And so say all reasonable people. But, according to the court, since a licensed physician was not involved in the artificial insemination process, Marotta is more than a sperm donor. Perhaps legally. But to call him a "father" is surely a stretch for any fair-minded observer.

This was a bad decision. The court has hooked their fish on a technicality. The judge has shown his disdain for the spirit of the arrangement between the two parties, which is what courts should be adjudicating. Schreiner exploited Marotta in order to have a child for whom no real father was ever intended. That was their contract, and that was the contract that should have been assessed.

The state will exploit any angle to ensure that somebody else – almost invariably the father if they can get hold of him – pays the child support.
...
But what the decision does serve to illustrate is how cynically and mercilessly social and legal institutions view men. The state encourages single motherhood in all kinds of ways, because the state (see under Obama's campaign gyndroid, Julia) believes a woman can bring up a child as effectively alone as with a father in the picture, and that – in the teeth of overwhelming evidence to the contrary – children suffer no special harm growing up fatherless.

So the state has no problem with lesbians having children via a syringe. What it does have a problem with is paying for that child to be raised if she can't or won't. The state will exploit any angle to ensure that somebody else – almost invariably the father if they can get hold of him – pays the child support. The state does not care if the man never intended to be a father, as in this case, or if he was tricked into being a father ("of course I took my pill today"), or if he has been denied the right to actually father his own child (about 90% of litigated custody battles end with children in the sole custody of the mother), or if he is denied court-ordered access to his children (mothers who deny access are virtually never punished). He must still pay for that child to be raised by someone other than himself.

As for Ms Schreiner, here is an illustration of a sense of entitlement writ breathtakingly large. Where did she get the idea that she had the right to a child, but not the responsibility to raise it herself or with a partner? Why, from the cultural air she breathes, that's where.'

"Fox News Wages War On Feminism, Guest Calls ‘Wussification’ Of Men Threat To National Security"

Matt · 24 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Report here. He seems to have annoyed someone anyway. :) Excerpt:

'In what might be the most offensive Fox broadcast yet, the “news” channel recently aired a segment entitled the “Wussification of Men.”

Throughout the excruciating three minute clip, author of “American Boomerang” (don’t buy this book) Nick Adams accuses feminism of creating a breed of “angry women” (oh no he didn’t) and “feminine men,” which has apparently endangered not just our perfect American lifestyles (which I’m assuming refers to 1919, the year before women won the right to vote), but also our national security.
...
In his book, Adams unintelligently equates “just being a male” with watching football on Sundays and “shooting some guns,” then later accuses society of deeming this type of “masculinity” as “a very dangerous thing.” No, we just think shooting guns is a very dangerous thing. And that you’re stupid.'

NPO: The Value of Shared Parenting and How Mothers and the Courts Thwart It

el cid · 24 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Provides a summary of recent research on how father-daughter relationships are damaged by the current divorce system. It also shows the value of shared parenting. Excerpt:

'This summary of research compiled by the excellent Dr. Linda Nielsen is a must read. No family court judge should be allowed to be a judge, no family lawyer should be allowed to practice family law and no elected officeholder should be allowed to vote on family legislation without reading it and being able to demonstrate a thorough knowledge of its contents

...

In a nutshell, up-to-date research shows that during marriage, but particularly during and after divorce, the legal system and mothers' anti-father bias leads to a drastic breakdown in father-daughter relationships. That breakdown leaves fathers emotionally shattered and daughters struggling long into adulthood and often unsuccessfully to establish stable, trusting romantic relationships with men. Read the first eight pages of Nielsen's summary of the scientific literature, and a clear picture emerges of a system that could well be called a "perfect storm" of social dysfunction. There's a kind of evil genius at work that alienates children from their fathers and results in daughters growing up to be suspicious of men and fathers; they go on to have children themselves, get divorced and repeat the cycle. Meanwhile, girls growing up without fathers (or those insufficiently involved in their lives) demonstrate all the usual anti-social behaviors we've come to know go hand in hand with fatherlessness.

So, in the United States, 80% of the children of divorce spend only 10% - 15% of their time with their fathers, a fact that happens to have been borne out by the recent data out of Nebraska I've reported on. Some 25% spend none at all.'

Why Do Some Falsely Claim to Be Victims?

Mastodon · 24 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Morales story has strong parallels to the case of a Michigan woman, Sara Ylen. Ylen falsely accused an innocent man of sexually assaulting her in 2003, and he spent nearly a decade in prison before his conviction was overturned. Ylen had gone so far as to use makeup to add fake bruises on her body, as evidence of her claims. Ylen also said that she had cancer, though police who investigated her claims discovered that her doctors had never even diagnosed her with cancer. Ylen is currently on trial for lying about her sexual assault.

While the public may associate lying and deception with common criminals and petty crime, many people who make false reports have professional status, including high-profile careers and doctorate degrees.

New York City meteorologist Heidi Jones reported to police on Dec. 1, 2011, that a man had stalked and sexually assaulted her twice, once while she jogged in Central Park. Police investigated the matter thoroughly and even arrested a suspect before determining that her story was a lie.
...
When these false reports are eventually exposed, it's not uncommon for the alleged victim's supporters to justify the hoax by saying that it was done for a greater good, and that it doesn't matter whether the specific incident actually happened, because it represents many undoubtedly true and valid similar events. Police who diligently spend dozens or hundreds of hours — not to mention thousands of taxpayer dollars — on a lie understandably do not feel the same way. And, of course, the time and effort spent on false victims is time that could have been devoted to helping real victims or real crimes.'

Bias clouds campus assault solutions

Mastodon · 25 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of course a woman's intoxication is not license for assault. But the very serious crimes of rape and sexual assault should not be lumped together with what may be regrets about doing something stupid under the influence, a common experience for young people of both sexes.

At many schools, training for administrators, faculty, and students involved in the handling of sexual assault complaints often amounts to indoctrination in the politically correct version of gender bias. In 2011, the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education publicized Stanford University's reading materials for student jurors, which warned that acting "logical and persuasive" in one's defense was typical of an abuser and that one should be "very, very cautious" in accepting a man's claim of innocence since "the great majority of allegations" are truthful.

In recent years, the Obama administration has pressured colleges to take a tougher stance on alleged sexual offenses — notably, to lower the standard of proof for sexual assault complaints from "clear and convincing evidence" to a "preponderance of the evidence" (which means the believable evidence tips slightly in the claimant's favor). The government's new campaign is likely to exacerbate the biases against the accused.

The prevalence of reckless, alcohol-fueled sex on many college campuses is certainly cause for concern. But the answer is to promote responsible behavior for both sexes — not label all such encounters as sexual assault, placing the entire burden on men while encouraging women to see themselves as victims.'

False abduction and sexual assault claimant sentenced to probation

Mastodon · 25 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Clarke University student who told police she was abducted from campus and sexually assaulted was sentenced to probation Thursday for making the story up.

Robin A. Levitski, 19, of Warren, Ill., received a deferred judgment after pleading guilty to filing a false report. Dubuque District Court Judge Robert Richter sentenced her to one year of probation and fined her $315 plus court costs.'

12-YO reports rape attempt to avoid saying she missed school bus

Mastodon · 25 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 12-year-old Streator girl could face punishment after making a false report Wednesday of an attempted sexual assault.

The girl reported Wednesday about 3 p.m. that she was approached by a white male as she was walking home from school near North Wasson Street. She said the man pulled down her pants and she ran several blocks to get away.

Streator police reported the girl and her mother came to the police station Thursday morning to confess the report was made up by the girl, for fear of getting in trouble for missing the school bus.'

Twisting Sexual Assault Statistics

Mastodon · 25 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is estimated that one in five women on college campuses has been sexually assaulted during their time there — one in five," President Obama said on Wednesday. The occasion for this lecture: He was announcing the creation of a White House Task Force to Protect Students from Sexual Assault.

...

But is it accurate? While estimates in this range have been reported since the '80s, the report released in conjunction with the president's creation of the task force cites a pair of more recent studies for the figure. One of them, "The Campus Sexual Assault Study," prepared for the National Institute of Justice in 2007, found that 19 percent of women reported "experiencing completed or attempted sexual assault since entering college." The number who experienced a completed sexual assault was 13.7 percent; 4.7 percent of respondents experienced "physically forced" assaults (3.7 percent of these physically forced assaults were rapes). Eleven percent of women were assaulted while incapacitated by alcohol or drugs.

...

To understand how this works, consider another study to which the president's report points, finding that 20 percent of women are raped in their lifetimes. In its definition of rape, the CDC's "National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence" survey includes sex that occurred when the victim was drunk or high, regardless of whether she was incapacitated or unable to give consent. Participants were asked to respond to the question: "When you were drunk, high, drugged, or passed out and unable to give consent, how many people ever had vaginal sex with you?" A woman could list instances of consensual sex she had while intoxicated that she did not consider to be rape — that were in fact not rape — and the researchers would nonetheless classify her as a rape victim.

...

Then again, to justify the sweeping federal response that the president has ordered to address the problem, he probably needs a bit of hyperbole.'

SAVE: "White House Report Downplays False Allegations of Rape, Artificially Inflates the Numbers, SAVE Asserts"

Matt · 25 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / January 24, 2014 – A leading victim-advocacy group is charging the recent White House report, Rape and Sexual Assault: A Renewed Call to Action, ignores the growing problem of false allegations and relies on inflated rape statistics. Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) calls on the Obama Administration to fulfill its promise of policymaking based on science, not ideological persuasion.

Three peer-reviewed studies have found the rate of false accusations of rape ranges from 41% to 60%. A recent study of prisoners convicted on sexual assault charges found 15% of the cases lacked a DNA match to the victim.
...
More worrisome is the fact that nearly half of the “rape” victims were involved in what the report terms “alcohol/drug facilitated completed penetration.” This broad category encompasses consensual intercourse following a carefree New Year’s Eve celebration, and could even apply to a newly married couple consummating their vows. With such broad definitions, most American adults could become classified as a “rapist” or “rape victim,” SAVE worries.
...
Knowing that half of the cases in the CDC report do not meet any common-sense definition of rape, and about half of all rape allegations turn out to be false, the actual incidence of rape is closer to 5%, not 20%.'

Circumcision divide between Denmark and Israel

Matt · 25 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the Israeli media, readers have repeatedly been told that the widely-held European stance against ritual circumcision is rooted partly in anti-Semitism, and partly in fear of an expanding Muslim population in Europe. Such anti-religious rhetoric is unjustified. The vast majority of Europe's opponents of ritual circumcision are religiously tolerant, but consider cutting off an important part of a non-consenting, healthy child's genitals to be contrary to modern ethics. This view was clearly expressed in September 2013 in a common statement of the ombudsmen and spokespersons for children in Norway, Sweden, Finland, Iceland, Greenland and Denmark. To most Europeans circumcision is an ethically problematic ritual that is intrinsically harmful to children: every child has the right to protection of his or her bodily integrity and the right to explore and enjoy his or her undiminished sexual capacity later in life.

...

Although religious proponents of circumcision often claim otherwise, the growing European opposition to ritual circumcision of boys is by no means a movement against Judaism, Islam or religiosity in general. It reflects instead an increasing awareness that children are humans, and that all humans have inalienable rights from day one, a view that is supported by a growing number of Jews in Israel, the US and elsewhere around the world. As pointed out in a recent article by Jewish scientist and blogger Rebecca Steinfeld, under Jewish law a boy with a Jewish mother is a Jew, whether he is circumcised or not: circumcision does not confer Jewish status.'

NPO: "2013: A Good Year for Dads in Ads"

Matt · 25 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Once again, Zach Rosenberg provides THE analysis of how advertisers treat Dads. According to Rosenberg, 2013 was a pretty good year. 121 of the 140 commercials that he watched and analyzed fall into the neutral-to-good categories for treatment of dads.

Of course it helps that Kimberly-Clark — for Huggies — and Clorox spoke with dad bloggers. They listened; they learned. Oscar Meyer listened to dad tweets, then apparently ignored. The standout is Unilever's Dove Men + Care with an ad campaign featuring the Miami Heat's Dwyane Wade and the positive contributions of fathers. On the other hand, Procter & Gamble continues to give moms all the credit for our Olympic Athletes. You can enjoy this throughout the winter games.'

Editorial: The war on young boys

Mastodon · 25 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Obama Administration, through Secretary of Education Arne Duncan and U S. Attorney general Eric Holder, have issued new guidelines designed to end or at least restrict "zero tolerance" disciplinary policies in schools.
...
About every month some story surfaces in "The Week" or "Reason" magazines, detailing how some young child is tossed out of school for a minor offense. A kindergartener kisses a girl on the hand and gets disciplined for sex abuse. A plastic two-inch ultra-small toy gun in the paws of a stuffed bear gets the owning student punished. And so on.

Why have schools gone this way? Well, parents and administrators overreact and codes are drawn up that allow no wiggle room. It's like mandatory sentencing in courts. It mostly works, but not always. It used to be, a generation ago, that the teacher's word was law. Now, one of the staples, in many school districts, is the appeal of discipline to the school board. The board had better be "lawyered up" and better have a written policy covering the transgression.

But the Obama administration policy is designed to stop what they call the "school-to-prison" pipeline. The immediate target was to show concern about the high numbers of African-American students who get expelled. In Chicago, for example, African-American students make up 80 percent of all expulsions. That seems both incredible and unfair.
...
Moreover, race is not the real key here. Gender is the key.

That's gender as in fathers and gender as in sons. Watch "Raising Cain."

In schools today, boys constitute two-thirds of "special education." A boy is five times as likely to be diagnosed as "hyperactive." A boy is 30 percent more likely to flunk out of school.

The Fatherhood Coalition says that a fatherless boy is 10 times more likely to wind up in the juvenile justice system. Ouch. And what happens when these boys with no men at home get into the public schools system? They enter an environment where 91 percent of the teachers are women. They only men they may see are often the janitors and the gym teachers.'

White House Faking Rape Statistics?

Mastodon · 25 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Obama's latest attempt to shine brightly before America's college students may be losing some of its luster.

A victim-advocacy group is crying foul over the administration's latest crisis in need of intervention, claiming the White House's new campaign to combat sexual assault on campus is touting trumped up statistics for "ideological" reasons.

But an organization called Stop Abusive and Violent Environments, or SAVE, is warning the statistics – notably that one in every five women experiences rape or attempted rape in their lifetime, often on college campuses – are artificially inflated and actually do more harm than good.

"SAVE calls on the Obama Administration to fulfill its promise of policymaking based on science, not ideological persuasion," the organization asserts. "No woman should have to fear rape, [but] inflating the numbers only invites ridicule and doubt."

SAVE notes Jarrett's numbers are based on Center for Disease Control, or CDC, studies that have been widely criticized.

The CDC, for example, claimed that in 1.3 million American women were raped in 2010, with an additional 12.6 million women and men victimized by sexual violence, but the Bureau of Justice Statistics reports only 188,380 rapes and sexual assaults for the same year.

Why the discrepancy?

There appears to be a significant problem in defining what does and doesn't constitute "sexual assault."
...
Even by multiplying the number of victims by 10 (in order to factor in the common notion that 90 percent of such assaults go unreported) and accounting for a single woman to spend five years at the university, Hermann calculated only somewhere between 1 in 130 and 1 in 925 Pitt students would experience sexual assault.

SAVE, which advocates both for victims of sexual assaults and for victims of false sexual-assault charges, also noted the government's statistics fail to take into account the frequency of false accusations in rape cases.'

Suit: Utah adoption laws permit ‘legalized fraud and kidnapping’

Mastodon · 26 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Twelve biological fathers whose children were placed for adoption in Utah without their knowledge or consent have filed a federal lawsuit against the state, alleging Utah laws permit "legalized fraud and kidnapping."

The fathers, represented by West Jordan attorney Wes Hutchins, allege that despite knowing about the "gross adoption infirmities" of Utah’s laws, two former attorneys general "did nothing for more than a decade to correct the fraud and deception" that led to their children being placed with adoptive families in Utah.

What happened to their sons and daughters was essentially "kidnapping and highly unethical and disruptive placement into adoptive homes without the knowledge or consent of their biological fathers," the lawsuit states.

Utah’s laws have created a "confusing labyrinth of virtually incomprehensible legal mandates and nearly impossible deadlines" that amount to unconstitutional violations of the rights of unwed fathers, it states.'

Australia: DHS wants teen returned to mum who held him down while circumcised by witchdoctor

Minuteman · 26 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'THE Department of Human Services is trying to force a 14-year-old boy who was pinned down by his mother while he was forcibly circumcised by an international witchdoctor to return to live with her.

The teen remained conscious throughout the procedure.

The boy has told authorities he was one of 13 young boys across Melbourne to experience similar backyard procedures by the visiting witchdoctor on Boxing Day, in line with his mother's South Pacific culture.
...
The move is being opposed by the boy's father, who made a complaint to police after learning about the procedure.
...
Victorian Opposition spokeswoman for children Jenny Mikakos called on the State Government to explain if this had happened before and if it could happen again.

"How can the department allow this invasive procedure to occur when one parent and the child himself are vehemently against it?" Ms Mikakos said.

Australasian Institute for Genital Autonomy chairman Paul Mason called for moves to ban circumcision.
...
"In this country we've outlawed female circumcision, but for some reason it's still OK to circumcise a boy. I can't see why it's better to cut a boy than to cut a girl. There's no logic."'

Jerusalem Post: "Circumcision – defending the indefensible"

Matt · 26 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. To be clear: This article is not an op-ed by The Jerusalem Post; it just appears in it. Excerpt:

'I am a Jewish filmmaker and I have been invited by the Council of Europe to its Parliamentary Assembly next week. By screening my television documentary It's a Boy! for European parliamentarians I aim to help shore up their commitment to protection of children's right to physical integrity – a key step toward ending ritual circumcision of boys. Yet there is a struggle underway.
...
Parents like me know from our remorse that it was wrong to make such an irreversible, painful and dangerous decision for our children. We owed our children protection, and we owe it to our communities not to be silenced when we have erred as parents.

But the fear of being cast out from our tribes remains an intense pressure. Fear cows individuals who wish to dissent publicly. Fear cows parents who want to reject circumcision. That's why boys from all backgrounds need the protection of the rule of law – secular law – wherever they may live. The necessity for this now in Israel is obvious.

To deprive children of Jewish and Muslim descent in any country of full legal protection because of their lineage amounts to a most perverse kind of prejudice against those children.

As for any attempt by real anti-Semites to latch onto this issue, that would be denounced publicly.

But then real anti-Semites are not usually the people keen to protect Jewish children from harm, and real anti-Semites would probably like nothing better than continuance of a practice that stokes anti-Jewish feelings and for generation after generation inflicts suffering on Jewish boys.'

"I Look Down On Young Women With Husbands And Kids And I'm Not Sorry"

Mastodon · 26 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every time I hear someone say that feminism is about validating every choice a woman makes I have to fight back vomit.

Do people really think that a stay at home mom is really on equal footing with a woman who works and takes care of herself? There's no way those two things are the same. It's hard for me to believe it's not just verbally placating these people so they don't get in trouble with the mommy bloggers.

Having kids and getting married are considered life milestones. We have baby showers and wedding parties as if it's a huge accomplishment and cause for celebration to be able to get knocked up or find someone to walk down the aisle with. These aren't accomplishments, they are actually super easy tasks, literally anyone can do them. They are the most common thing, ever, in the history of the world. They are, by definition, average. And here's the thing, why on earth are we settling for average?
...
You will never have the time, energy, freedom or mobility to be exceptional if you have a husband and kids.

I hear women talk about how "hard" it is to raise kids and manage a household all the time. I never hear men talk about this. It's because women secretly like to talk about how hard managing a household is so they don't have to explain their lack of real accomplishments. Men don't care to "manage a household." They aren't conditioned to think stupid things like that are "important."

Women will be equal with men when we stop demanding that it be considered equally important to do housework and real work. They are not equal. Doing laundry will never be as important as being a doctor or an engineer or building a business. This word play is holding us back.'

UK: Student who falsely claimed rape has jail-sentence appeal rejected

Mastodon · 28 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A student whose false rape claims resulted in one of the Thames Valley Police force's most expensive investigations has been told by top judges she deserved to be sent to prison.

The former Reading University student, who cannot be identified, cried rape after some friends found her looking dishevelled when returning from a night out.

Although the 21-year-old, originally from Birmingham, did not point the finger directly at anyone, the thorough police investigation which followed her claim led to a man being arrested and held overnight until he proved he was elsewhere at the time of the alleged rape.
...
Last Thursday she challenged her jail term, with her lawyers arguing it should be suspended in light of her troubled history and evidence which had recently surfaced.

But her appeal was dismissed by top judges, who said that, barring "exceptional circumstances", anyone committing an offence involving a false allegation of rape must go to prison as their lies undermined justice, wasted police time and risked innocent people being prosecuted.'

Rand Paul: "If There Was A War On Women, I Think They Won"

Mastodon · 28 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Video and transcript here. Excerpt:

'SEN. RAND PAUL: Well, you know, I think we have a lot of debates in Washington that get dumbed down and are used for political purposes. This whole sort of war on women thing, I'm scratching my head because if there was a war on women, I think they won. You know, the women in my family are incredibly successful.

I have a niece at Cornell vet school, and 85% of the young people there are women. In law school, 60% are women; in med school, 55%. My younger sister's an ob-gyn with six kids and doing great. You know, I don't see so much that women are downtrodden; I see women rising up and doing great things. And, in fact, I worry about our young men sometimes because I think the women really are out-competing the men in our world.'

India: NGOs demand separate ministry, panel to protect men's rights

Mastodon · 28 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kolkata: A forum of NGOs working for men's rights has demanded that the party forming government after the Lok Sabha polls create a separate ministry and a national commission for the protection of men's rights in the wake of "misuse" of dowry laws and registration of "false" sexual harassment cases.

The National Coalition for Men (NCM), a coalition of about 50 organisations fighting for men's rights, has released a 10-point charter of demands to be considered by political parties for the Lok Sabha election.

NCM said they wanted to highlight the increasing rate of "innocent married and unmarried men" falling prey to "gender biased" laws.

Besides a ministry and a commission for men, the NCM's charter, named 'Men-I-Festo', included converting 'gender biased laws' to gender neutral ones, forming a task force to probe suicide by married men and a helpline number for men in distress, NCM president Amit Gupta told a news agency.'

Do sexual assaults on campuses require a federal response?

Mastodon · 28 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Be wary of the claim that one in five students has been sexually assaulted or raped at some point in their college careers. In an era of declining violent crime rates, the statistic is remarkably resilient.

The U.S. Bureau of Justice Statistics reports a sharp drop in total rapes and sexual assaults nationwide — down 38.7 percent between 2008 and 2009, which are the most recent years for which data are readily available. Yet the White House stubbornly repeats the one-in-five claim, a number that has circulated since at least 2000.

As my Manhattan Institute colleague Heather Mac Donald noted in 2011 — the last time the White House touted the campus rape issue — there were 36.8 rapes per 100,000 residents of Detroit, a city with one of the worst violent crime rates in America. That's a rate of 0.037 percent.

"If 18-year-old girls were in fact walking into such a grotesque maelstrom of sexual violence when they first picked up their dormitory room key," Mac Donald observed, "parents and students alike would have demanded a radical restructuring of college life years ago." Obviously, that hasn't happened.
...
What's really happening here? The latest White House report offers a hint, noting how sexual assaults are "fueled by drinking and drug use." The supposed epidemic of sexual violence on college and university campuses is really an epidemic of binge drinking, drug abuse and pervasive hookups.

Changing the "rape culture" really requires cracking down on the party culture that permeates too many colleges today. But don't expect administrators to reimpose the old "in loco parentis" system that went out 40 years ago. Instead expect more demands for greater funding, and endless cries to "take back the night."'

UK: Anne-Marie Slaughter's plan to close the 'gender gap' will take us right back to where we started from

Mastodon · 28 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Slaughter believes that the best way to reduce the disparity between men and women is to encourage the greatest number of women to reach the highest positions of influence. She believes that to make this a reality more men must stay at home. "It is far, far easier to be at the top of a major organisation if you have a primary or full-time caregiver at home," she wrote.

Slaughter wanted to conduct a poll at Davos to find out how many participants had a life partner who is either at home full time or works outside the house but is the primary caregiver. "If the numbers are, say, 80 per cent or higher," she wrote, "then future Forum gender equality polls should assume that women will only achieve parity with breadwinning men when men achieve parity with care-giving women."

Slaughter recognises the importance of the primary caregiver. But her argument is not advanced in order to find a way of balancing being a mother with being a worker – the real problem woman face today. The Princeton professor is, instead, trying to find a way of balancing family and career in order to have the best career possible. That is a very worrying, masculine approach. Perhaps when the world is eventually ruled by women, men will then press for equality – and we will be right back where we started from.'

Ed. note: Anne-Marie Slaughter is not to be confused with Louise Slaughter, the Congressional representative (House) from upstate New York.

Ritual Circumcision Ban Recommended In Sweden And Denmark By Medical Associations

Mastodon · 28 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Medical associations in Sweden and Denmark have strongly recommended a ban on the non-medical circumcision of boys, reports the Jewish Telegraphic Agency.

The Sweden Medical Association, which counts 85% of the country's physicians as members, recommended setting twelve as the minimum age for the procedure and requiring a boy's consent in a resolution which was unanimously passed by the ethics council, reported the Svenska Dagbladet.

The Danish College of General Practitioners, a group with 3,000 members, made a statement that ritual circumcision of boys was tantamount to abuse and mutilation, according to Danish newspaper BT. They polled their readers and found that 87% were in favor of a ban on non-medical circumcision.'

Graphic circumcision website irks critics

Mastodon · 28 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Chilling images of deformed penises on a website slamming botched traditional circumcisions in South Africa have raised the ire of cultural commentators who called on Monday for the site to be shut down.

Dutch doctor Dingeman Rijken set up the webpage www.ulwaluko.co.za after scores of boys and young men died last year when the initiation ceremony into manhood went wrong. But critics say it betrays their culture and should have been handled differently.

“That website must be shut down with immediate effect,” said Nkululeko Nxesi from the local Community Development Foundation of South Africa (Codefsa).
...
By mid-2013, more than 50 boys and young men had died from infection, exhaustion and dehydration during the weeks-long initiation ceremony in the bush, while over 300 were taken to hospital, according to official figures. Graphic images show severely disfigured, infected or amputated genitals on the website, named for the Xhosa word for initiation into manhood, which Rijken encountered while working in the rural Eastern Cape province.

“If you see so many boys dying, at some point you have to talk about it. Why do we sustain a ritual that slaughters boys in their prime or... scars many others for life?” Rijken told the local Daily Dispatch newspaper.'

Religious circumcisions not subject to Pennsylvania oversight

Mastodon · 28 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than half of male newborns in America are circumcised before they leave the hospital. As with any medical procedure, if it results in injury, the medical professional involved could face discipline by licensing authorities in Pennsylvania and other states.

No comparable state oversight, however, governs the same procedure when it's conducted by a religious practitioner with no medical license. And that, says a Pittsburgh lawyer suing over a catastrophic injury suffered by a newborn in April 2013, needs to change.

The lawsuit, pending in the Allegheny County Court of Common Pleas, is seeking damages from Rabbi Mordechai Rosenberg for alleged negligence and inflicting of emotional distress on the boys' parents, who witnessed what the lawsuit called a "gruesome and torturous event." Rabbi Rosenberg has since 1990 worked as a mohel, the traditional term for one who performs circumcisions as part the traditional Jewish rite of passage.

"I think that mohels or any non-medically trained individual who is going to do a circumcision should be regulated by the state in terms of their competence, their education, their technique, their sterility, everything you do during a circumcision," said attorney Neil R. Rosen, representing the injured boy's parents.'

Criminal Law and the Moral Panic on Campus Rape

Mastodon · 29 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the Obama Administration steps up the federal effort against an alleged epidemic of campus rape, some states are contemplating measures of their own. A recent Newsweek story on a bill pending in the California State Assembly, discussed by K.C. Johnson on Minding the Campus, raises a number of troubling issues: among them, potential spillover from the campus crusade into the criminal justice system and actual spillover from the radical feminist blogosphere into the mainstream media.

he legislation, AB 1433, introduced on January 6 by Southern California Assemblyman Mike Gatto, requires colleges and universities to promptly bring to local law enforcement all campus reports of violent crimes (homicide, rape, robbery or aggravated assault) and hate crimes--unless the complainant requests anonymity. Federal law--the 1990 Clery Act, named after Jeanne Clery, a 19-year-old Lehigh University (Pennsylvania) student who was raped and murdered in her dorm in 1986--already requires colleges to record all crimes reported to campus authorities in a public log and in an annual security report, and to disclose them to the U.S. Department of Education.
...
The problematic nature of the bill is compounded by the fact that, due to input from campus activists whom Newsweek describes as "sexual assault survivors," accusers will be allowed to decide whether their charges should be reported to the police or not. (The alleged survivors told Gatto, and Newsweek, that they would not have gone to the campus authorities if they knew they would have to deal with actual law enforcement as well.) Not only does this leave the universities' "shadow justice system" entirely intact, it also underscores the extent to which feminist activism is pushing to make sexual assault or rape a subjectively defined offense.

As K.C. Johnson notes, the Newsweek article describes this situation entirely from the accusers perspective, uncritically repeating a Department of Justice report claiming that "college women are four times more likely to be sexually assaulted than the rest of the population" and "95% of rapes on campus will never be reported." But, actually, it's worse than that: the article by Katie J.M. Baker also cherry-picks the evidence from that report.
...
If this looks like deliberate bias rather than sloppy one-sidedness, perhaps that's because it is. Several Twitter users have brought attention to the fact that Baker came over to Newsweek from Jezebel.com, a leading website in the radical feminist blogosphere. A look at her past work for Newsweek reveals that she began to write for the magazine last October; her debut was an essay responding to Emily Yoffe's much-debated article on Slate.com arguing that advising college women to avoid heavy drinking should be a part of sexual assault prevention. The tenor of Baker's riposte can be gleaned from its title: "No. 1 Surefire Rape Prevention Tip For Ladies: Don't Exist."'

Daddy Track: The Case for Paternity Leave

Mastodon · 29 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Paternity leave has also begun to enter the corporate and cultural mainstream. According to a study by the Boston College Center for Work and Family, which surveyed men in a number of Fortune 500 companies, most new fathers now take at least some time off after the birth of a baby, though few depart the workplace for more than two weeks. In England, Prince William took two weeks' leave from his job as a military search-and-rescue helicopter pilot when his son, George, was born. Even Major League Baseball has formalized paternity leave—albeit three days' worth—for players, partnering with Dove's line for men in a pro-fatherhood campaign called Big League Dads.

...

The genius of paternity leave is that it shapes domestic and parenting habits as they are forming. While most mothers in the United States now work, many women still see their careers suffer after they became parents, in part because they end up shouldering the bulk of the domestic load—a phenomenon the sociologist Arlie Hochschild has dubbed the "second shift." A 2007 study found that 60 percent of professional women who stopped working reported that they were largely motivated by their husbands' unavailability to share housework and child-care duties. Paternity leave is a chance to intervene at what one study called "a crucial time of renegotiation": those early, sleep-deprived weeks of diaper changes and midnight feedings, during which couples fall into patterns that turn out to be surprisingly permanent.

...

The brilliance of "daddy days," as this solution came to be known, is that, rather than feeling stigmatized for taking time off from their jobs, many men now feel stigmatized if they don't. The economist Ankita Patnaik, who has studied Quebec's implementation of such a policy, told me that "families felt they were wasting something" if the father didn't take leave. In 2006, Quebec increased the financial benefits for paid leave and offered five weeks that could be taken only by fathers. "That's what really made a difference," Patnaik told me. "Now dads might feel bad for not taking leave—your baby loses this time with parents." Since then, the percentage of Quebecois fathers taking paternity leave has skyrocketed, from about 10 percent in 2001 to more than 80 percent in 2010.

...

In another sign of how paternity leave can narrow the gap between working mothers and fathers, more than one man I spoke with had made a decision long familiar to mothers who find themselves trapped in the office after bedtime too many nights. Upon the birth of his first child, Lance Somerfeld planned to take paternity leave from his teaching job at a big elementary school in the Bronx. He looked forward to being home, and his wife's career was going well. As they thought about the future, they reckoned that child-care costs would eat up most of his after-tax salary, so he decided to extend his leave indefinitely. When Somerfeld informed the school that he would not be returning, at least not anytime soon, his principal went on the PA system and announced, "Mr. Somerfeld will be leaving us next year to become a modern man!"'

Bill could let men sever child support with DNA test results

Mastodon · 29 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A female lawmaker from Port Orchard says men in Washington are being unfairly forced to pay child support for children who aren't theirs, and the state should let them escape that burden.

A measure introduced by state Sen. Jan Angel, R-Port Orchard, would allow a man to challenge his status as a child's legal parent in court if genetic tests prove he is not the father.

Current law in Washington generally only gives fathers four years to challenge a child's parentage, and assumes a man is the father if he was married to the child's mother close to the child's birth date.

Angel's bill would let a man try to sever his legal ties to a child at any time within two years of learning he is not the child's biological father — whether the child's age is 5 or 15.

If a man's request to sever paternity were granted by a judge, he would no longer have to pay child support for the child, even if he previously acknowledged himself to be the parent or was married to the mother at the time of the child's birth.

...

Some committee members questioned the wisdom of letting parents bow out of parenthood at any point in a child's life. Sen. Adam Kline, D-Seattle, said that if a 7-year-old child has grown up calling someone Dad, it could be damaging to the child if that person simply disappears. A man can be a child's "psychological parent" even if he and the child are not biologically related, Kline said.

"Have you considered the difference this makes to the child as opposed to the difference this makes to the father?" Kline asked Angel.'

Obama Goes Full Feminist: ‘Time To Do Away With Workplace Policies That Belong In A ‘Mad Men’ Episode’

Mastodon · 29 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Obama let his feminist flag fly during his State of the Union address on Tuesday night. Citing pay disparity and paid leave policy, he argued — to loud applaude — that women are still unequal in the United States, and that there are policies that can change that:

> Today, women make up about half our workforce. But they still make 77 cents for every dollar a man earns. That is wrong, and in 2014, it’s an embarrassment. A woman deserves equal pay for equal work. She deserves to have a baby without sacrificing her job. A mother deserves a day off to care for a sick child or sick parent without running into hardship – and you know what, a father does, too. It’s time to do away with workplace policies that belong in a “Mad Men” episode. Let’s work together – Congress, the White House, and businesses from Wall Street to Main Street – to give every woman the opportunity she deserves. Because I believe when women succeed, America succeeds.

Democrats' ‘Paycheck Fairness Act’ will set women back decades

Mastodon · 29 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an editorial coined by New Hampshire Senator Sylvia Larson (D-Concord) today, she makes the already disproven claim that there is a ‘wage gap’ between men and women in the workforce. Larson is so hell bent on believing the studies that have been proven false, she’s willing to hurt women in the workforce by passing an unnecessary bill. The wage gap that Larson speaks of is a myth. In the past, women indeed were paid less than men but it has been proven over and over again that women earn the same or more than men if all things are equal (experience, education, time on the job etc.). What Larson’s ill-conceived bill (the same bill that failed in Washington D.C. previously with a Democrat controlled Senate) will do is set women back decades despite the great strides they have made since entering the workforce.

How will the Paycheck Fairness Act hurt Granite State women? Simple, it will put employers in a position of either paying women less than they negotiate for when seeking a new job or it will take away women’s flexibility in negotiating for a lower salary for more flexible hours. ...
...

- If a man is currently working at a job and a woman applies for the same job but is smart and negotiates for a higher salary than the man is currently making, the employer is not going to offer her what she wants (and/or deserves), they are going to have to pay her the lower salary that the man is making. Why? If the man finds out she’s making more than him for the same job (despite the fact she was simply a better negotiator) the man can turn around and sue the employer for discrimination!
- If a woman applies for a job and decides she wants more flexible hours in order to spend more time with her family, the employer will not be able to allow her that flexibility because if the woman finds out the man is making more money, she can sue the employer for discrimination!
- If a man and woman are making equal pay for doing the same job but the woman goes above and beyond, the employer will not be able to give her a bigger raise because if the man finds out, he can sue for discrimination!

Tom Martin video on Youtube at risk of being taken down

Matt · 29 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tom Martin, a student at the London School of Economics, filmed a series of interviews with other students, addressing his lawsuit against the school, for teaching a sexist, bigoted ideology. One of those students, who participated in the interview knowing it would be uploaded is now trying to censor this video by having it taken down from Youtube (on Tom Martin's channel, this is a mirror).

While this is annoying, it also suggests that the student has matured, and now recognizes their own point of view, as expressed during the interview, is in fact ignorant and bigoted. Unfortunately, they're still evidently immature enough to believe censorship is a good path to pursue to cover up their bigotry.'

Canada: Calgary woman who left three of her infants in a dumpster, killing two, sentenced to 18 months jail

fathers4fairness · 29 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Meredith Borowiec has given birth to four children.

The first was born in a panic and left in a dumpster next to her Calgary home. A second baby a year later was similarly discarded; neither body was ever found.

Her third child was born in October, 2010. Borowiec, again, hid the child in the trash. But this time, the infant was rescued after its cries were overheard by a man named Ian Turnbull — Borowiec's long-time boyfriend and the baby's father. He had been unaware of her pregnancy.

On Wednesday, Borowiec was sentenced to 18 months in jail. The judge condemned her actions, but resisted a prosecution recommendation that she be sentenced to as many as 12 years.

"This is a terrible case," Judge Peter McIntyre told Borowiec. "You've shocked the community and you've shamed yourself. I have to remind myself to be dispassionate about this case."'

Canada: Supposed teen ringleader of Ottawa prostitution ring found guilty on 30 of 33 charges

fathers4fairness · 29 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Ottawa girl has been found guilty of 30 of 33 charges against her in connection with a prostitution ring involving teenaged girls.

Court heard the girl, identified as the ringleader of the group, used physical violence and verbal threats to force other teenaged girls into prostitution.

She pleaded not guilty in April 2012 to the 33 charges including assault, human trafficking, robbery and making and distributing child pornography.

A sentencing date has yet to be set and the Crown says it will seek an adult sentence.

Two other teens accused in the case pleaded guilty to several charges in September in a surprise about-face after having pleaded not guilty earlier last year.

The three girls, whose identities are protected under a publication ban were arrested in June 2012 in the Ottawa area.'

Star Tribune Calls for Action on Women's Issues

charlie · 29 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The Minneapolis Star Tribune never fails when it comes to parroting issues brought forward by women's lobbying groups. No exception here. Missing of course are any issues faced by men in the workplace, such as the fact that 90% of workplace fatalities are males, or a decent explanation of the so-called "wage gap." Excerpt:

'After nearly three dark years, the lights are back on at the Office on the Economic Status of Women in the Minnesota State Office Building. It's co-convening the first Minnesota Women's Economic Security Summit in a long while Thursday in St. Paul, and several hundred participants are expected.

Among the presenters will be House Speaker Paul Thissen, armed with an ambitious package of 17 bills comprising the Minnesota Women's Economic Security Act of 2014. The speaker's personal stamp on a set of initiatives is rare, and should serve to raise the package's visibility and chances for enactment.

These are hopeful signs for working Minnesotans — of both genders — and for the children and elders who depend on them. Economic fairness and opportunity for the female half of the population should be a priority in every legislative session. When women climb economically, unimpeded by outdated thinking about roles and responsibilities, the whole state benefits.

But state leaders' willingness to address Minnesota's persistent gender gap in wages, educational attainment, housing, poverty and more has waxed and waned through the years. The 38-year-old Office on the Economic Status of Women — a terrific source of data, research and nonpartisan guidance to legislators — was left in limbo from mid-2011 until a few weeks ago, when former lobbyist and public policy specialist Barbara Battiste took the office's solo staff job.'

Why Masculinity Is More Than a Mask

Matt · 30 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I admire Newsom for using her considerable talent to advocate for boys. But I worry that she is less concerned with helping boys than with re-engineering their masculinity according to specifications from some out-of-date gender-studies textbook. The trailer is suffused with males-are-toxic ideology but shows little appreciation for how boys' nature can be distinctively good. The Mask You Live In is scheduled to be released later this year. Let's hope there is still time for edits.

Here are a few suggestions:
1. Recognize that masculinity is more than a "mask"
The title and content of the film suggest that masculinity is a cultural creation. That is only marginally true. A lot of typical boy behavior, such as rough-and-tumble play, risk taking and fascination with gadgets rather than dolls, appears to have a basis in biology. ... A recent study on sex differences by researchers from the University of Turin, in Italy, and the University of Manchester, in England, confirms what most of us see with our eyes: with some exceptions, women tend to be more sensitive, esthetic, sentimental, intuitive and tender-minded, while men tend to be more utilitarian, objective, unsentimental and tough-minded. We do not yet fully understand the biological underpinnings of these universal tendencies, but that is no reason to deny they exist.
...
The Australians are now developing male-specific mental-health protocols. A 2012 Australian study, for example, found that large majorities of young men associate the term mental health with insanity and straightjackets. Mental fitness seems to go over better with men. The Australians recently launched a mental-fitness app for guys. The focus is on acquiring "skills," developing "strengths" and achieving "self-mastery." But doesn't that reinforce traditional narratives of masculinity? It certainly does — that's the point, and the key to its promise.

The energy, competitiveness and corporal daring of normal males are responsible for much good in the world. No one denies that boys' aggressive and risk-taking tendencies must be socialized and channeled toward constructive ends. But the de–Tom Sawyering of the American boy should not be anyone's agenda. I am sure it is not Newsom's. Yet her film in progress suggests otherwise.'

NPO: Give Washington Children Their Real Father: Pass SB5997

Matt · 30 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, Brandon Jones, Chair, Executive Committee, National Parents Organization of Washington testified in front of the Washington Senate Committee on Law & Justice in support of SB 5997, an act relating to authorizing the termination of all legal responsibilities of a nonparent if genetic testing shows by clear and convincing evidence that a man is not the genetic father of a child. Senator Jan Angel is sponsoring the legislation on behalf of Washington's children and National Parents Organization of Washington.

Help our Washington affiliate pass this important legislation for children and fathers in Washington. On the Washington State website you may support this legislation, whether or not you live in Washington. Your message will be sent to every state legislator.

Use this opportunity to commend Senator Jan Angel for giving Washington children access to their actual paternal fathers and extended Families and providing them an accurate Family medical history when the genetic paternal fathers are known, thus allowing physicians to better treat acute illnesses and prevent or prepare for genetic illnesses and conditions.'

Boy who died in fire while saving family members buried with firefighter's honors

Mastodon · 30 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Local firefighters have adopted as one of their own a 9-year-old boy who died saving six relatives from a fire that destroyed his grandfather's upstate New York home.

A stream of cars and fire vehicles made its way Wednesday to St. John of Rochester Catholic Church for a funeral service for Tyler Doohan. The boy died trying to rescue his grandfather, who also died, along with another relative.

Tyler's mother, Crystal Vrooman, said her son was a "sweet boy" whose sense of humor made everyone smile.

"I wish you were here for me to hold you one more time," Vrooman said, choking back tears. "Rest in peace my beautiful angel. You're a hero, baby. You made me the proudest mother I could be."'

From: Is masculine culture toxic for boys?

'A popular trailer for a new documentary by filmmaker Jennifer Siebel Newsom portrays boys as isolated, violent and depressed. According to the film, boys are driven to violent and destructive behavior by societal pressure to conform to a rigid code of masculinity. In this video, Christina Hoff Sommers responds to Newsom’s documentary and offers a defense of healthy masculinity.

Rather than seeking to reengineer their masculinity, Sommers argues that we should appreciate boys’ distinctive traits and encourage them to channel their maleness towards constructive ends.'

Psychologist: Colleges foster environments ‘actively hostile’ toward men

Mastodon · 30 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The college environment is “actively hostile towards men,” psychologist and author Dr. Helen Smith explained in a Tuesday interview with Forbes.

Smith has authored the book “Men on Strike: Why Men Are Boycotting Marriage, Fatherhood, and The American Dream — And Why It Matters,” and discussed the effect that overreaching feminism has on men with reporter Jerry Bowyer.

Bower stated that groups who see themselves as oppressed since the 19th century have blazed past a goal of equality to exact “comeuppance” on their oppressors, and American men bear the brunt of this attack. Smith agreed, recalling how she was taken aback by the modern feminist movement’s animosity toward men.

"I thought feminism was supposed to be about equality,” Smith said. I was somewhat of a feminist, or I was very much a feminist when I was younger, because I had this idea — naively — that it was about equality, that we wanted to see men and women as equals. Instead, women today want special privileges and no responsibilities or very little, and they want men to have the responsibilities but none of the privilege. As you point out, there’s the problem.”'

Australia: Rape charge dropped as "new evidence" introduced

fathers4fairness · 30 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ben Kooy, 34, was arrested last Wednesday and charged with dragging a 17-year-old girl off a train around 1pm and into a toilet block where he allegedly sexually assaulted her.

...

The Kellyville man was initially refused bail and spent four nights in custody but police found fresh evidence at the weekend and released him ahead of an appearance at Burwood Local Court on Wednesday.

The matter was adjourned for three weeks on Wednesday morning but later in the day the charge of sexual intercourse without consent was dismissed and an AVO* for the victim was withdrawn.

Mr Kooy's legal aid solicitor, Patricia Lyden, said fresh evidence “changed the situation dramatically”. It is understood new footage discredited the girl’s story.

...

It is not clear if the girl will be charged with making false representations to police.

Friends said she gave several different stories of her ordeal. She told friends that she was on her way to her boyfriend’s house or on her way to college where she studies a business degree.'

---

*AVO: Apprehended Violence Order: "In the Australian State of New South Wales, a court may grant an apprehended violence order (AVO) to a person who fears violence, harassment, abuse, or stalking.[6] A court may issue an AVO if it believes, on the balance of probabilities, that a person has reasonable grounds to fear personal violence, harassing conduct, molestation, intimidation, or stalking. A defendant's non-compliance with the order may result in the imposition of a fine, imprisonment, or both."

Boy-shaming "sex education" planned for UK schools

TCM · 31 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We need to be careful when we start singling out only one group of people based on their genetic code and demanding that they “respect” another entire group of people. The reasoning is quite simple: it’s mindlessly discriminatory. It also has the potential to turn into a condescending shamefest.

1. Not everyone in one group needs to be taught to respect others because they already do.
2. If we single out only one group to respect other groups, no one is teaching the others to respect that group.
3. Not every individual in any birthgroup is entitled to respect.

Of course, no one should disrespect someone based solely upon their being men, or women, or white, or black, and so forth. But teaching such values doesn’t mean we have to single out any of those groups, either.'

UK: False rape allegation led man to assault innocent bystander

Mastodon · 31 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'AN innocent man was attacked because his clothes matched the description a woman had made-up about her alleged rapist.

Johnathan Smith's ex-girlfriend told him she had been raped and gave a description of her supposed attacker of the man's clothes.

Smith then attacked a man he saw in the same clothes but she admitted she had made up the allegation.

Smith left her house around 1am on January 12, went onto Carmarthen Road and Smith, from Penrhiw Road, in Morriston, saw his victim with two friends waiting at a bus stop.

As he approached, his friends ran away, leaving the victim alone and he then also ran off, but Smith used a pedal bike to chase after him.

Smith caught him and punched him, leaving him with a bloody nose.

...

"The defendant needs to understand that any decision he makes will have a reaction to other people and he must take into account their feelings and thoughts before he makes a decision to stand his ground or and try deal with matters outside the lawful way," he said.

Chairman of the bench, Phil Llewellyn said: "Whatever the reason you had to be out at that time of the morning and to carry out the assault that you did, you didn't think about it".

He was given a 12 month community order and told to complete 100 hours of unpaid work.

He was also told to pay £200 compensation to the victim.'

The importance of credibility in domestic violence cases

Mastodon · 31 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It has been in all the recent news--New Jersey Assemblyman Reed Gusciora (D-Mercer) has announced a bill that would create a publicly accessible registry containing all the names of individuals who have been found to have committed an act of domestic violence. Gusciora believes that a public registry would reduce the number of instances of domestic violence by repeat offenders. The registry would be similar in nature to the sex offender registry established under Megan's Law.
...
But while not diminishing the seriousness of the issue, false accusations do happen. False accusations of domestic violence can be used as revenge, as a weapon in divorces, child custody, support and visitation battles. The consequences can be devastating, ruining a life, being evicted from one's home, losing custody, heavy fines, attorney's fees, and in some cases, jail. In many cases, the question of whether domestic violence has actually occurred comes down to he said/she said, and that frequently hinges on the credibility of the accused and the accuser. ...'

Ed. note: This is an item written and released by a law firm in New Jersey, so the authors likely have a business interest in the topic. While that may be the case, it doesn't mean what they are saying isn't true. And as for what lawyer one chooses to hire for whatever reason, it's up to them. Just wanted to make it clear this item is here due to its content, not because of who wrote it or any reason other than its relevance to men's rights and the crucial but often ignored presumption of innocence that all people facing charges in a US criminal court are supposed to have.

UK: Women are now a third more likely than men to opt to go to university

Mastodon · 31 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men will soon become the most disadvantaged group in the country when it comes to going to university, the head of UCAS predicts today.

Figures show that the gap between applications from women and men is rising sharply - while that between rich and poor students is narrowing.

The 15 January deadline for applications for university this autumn showed over 87,000 more women than men had applied, increasing the gap by 7,000 compared to January 2013. Women are now a third more likely than men to opt to go to university.

Meanwhile, applications from would-be students in disadvantaged areas are rising - with those from poorer families twice as likely to apply as a decade ago.

...

Professor Smithers put forward three main reasons why the number of applications from girls is soaring:

- their GCSE and A-level results are better.
- teacher and nurse training, which largely attract females, now takes place in universities.
- boys may be more attracted to apprenticeships and jobs, rather than incur debts from the £9,000 a year fees regime.

“Apprentices is a possible explanation,” he said. “Certainly men have tended to be in the majority when it comes to vocational qualifications.

“It could be that more men are attracted to entering employment. Some of the subjects men are attracted to, like engineering, are the ones that are struggling to fill places.”

‘Toaster Pastry Gun Freedom Act’ bill revived in Florida

Mastodon · 31 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Florida state lawmakers are proposing what has been called the “Toaster Pastry Gun Freedom Act” in an effort to protect schoolchildren from harsh punishment for fashioning their fingers or food objects into toy guns, the Orlando Sentinel reports.

The Florida proposal asserts that “simulating a firearm or weapon while playing or wearing certain clothing or accessories is not grounds for disciplinary action or referral to the criminal justice or juvenile justice system.”

Among the actions that the Florida law aims to protect is “Brandishing a partially consumed pastry or other food item to simulate a firearm or weapon.”'

Contrast: School rules against Md. second-grader suspended for gun-shaped Pop-Tart

Baby Infected With Herpes After Metzitza B'peh Circumcision Rite

Mastodon · 31 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A baby boy has been infected with neonatal herpes following a Jewish ritual circumcision in New York — the third such infection in two years tied to a controversial rite that involves the direct application of the ritual circumciser's mouth to the baby's genitals to suction blood from the wound.

The baby was treated for a genital rash five days after he was circumcised, according to a January 28 health alert issued by New York City's Department of Health and Mental Hygiene. He is still undergoing treatment and his current condition is unclear.

The department attributed the rash to the controversial circumcision technique, known as metzitzah b'peh, or MBP, which some ultra-Orthodox mohels, or ritual circumcisers, say is an essential component of the ancient religious ritual.

Fourteen babies have contracted herpes following MBP since 2000, according to New York City's Department of Health and Mental Hygiene. Two of those babies died and two more suffered brain damage.

In this case, the baby's rash spread despite being treated with cream. He was later admitted to a hospital, the department said.

Because of the risks of MBP, New York City instituted a consent form in January 2012. Mohels were directed to ask parents to sign the form, which spells out the risks of MBP before it is performed.

A department of health spokeswoman declined to say whether a consent form was signed in this latest case. "We are currently investigating the case and won't discuss its details," the spokeswoman said.'

UK: Boy, six, suspended from school for four days after he was found to have a packet of Mini Cheddars in his lunchbox

Mastodon · 31 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"A six-year-old boy who went to school with a bag of Mini Cheddars in his packed lunch has been suspended for four days after teachers said it contravened its healthy eating policy.

Riley Pearson, from Colnbrook, near Slough, was excluded from Colnbrook C of E Primary School after teachers discovered the snack and called in his parents.
After a meeting with headmaster Jeremy Meek, they were sent a letter telling them Riley would be excluded from Wednesday until Monday because he had been 'continuously breaking school rules'.
...
His mother, who lives with his father, airport worker Tom Pearson, said the 3ft 9ins tall schoolboy who weighs 3st 2lbs, eats home-cooked meals and plenty of fruit and vegetables at home.

Miss Mardle said: 'I would understand the exclusion if he was constantly throwing tables around or bullying other children, but it is just ridiculous for a packet of Mini Cheddars.
...
'We cannot talk about individual circumstances, but there is one family who are not prepared to support the policy.

'We are in discussions with them about how we move it forward. We have excluded [the pupil] for four days due to lack of support for the policy.

'It is to avoid putting the children in a difficult situation. If the policy is not being abided by, then that potentially harms that pupil.'"

Calgary court ruling on mom who dumped her babies means open season on unwanted infants

fathers4fairness · 31 January 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Well-know Canadian journalist Barbara Kay's scathing criticism is aimed at Calgary Judge Peter McIntyre, who did not take the Crown prosecution's advice of 12 years and instead awarded only 18 months for murdering her two newborn children and attempting to murder a third. Excerpt:

'Cultural observer Joseph Epstein wrote a wonderful satirical column in the Wall Street Journal a few weeks about the “Good Intentions Paving Company,” a riff on the old cliché, “The road to hell is paved with good intentions.”

The Good Intentions Paving Company does not confine its activities to the U.S. In fact, it had one of its representatives in Calgary this week, Judge Peter McIntyre, handing a sentence of 18 months in prison and three years’ probation to Meredith Borowiec, who admitted to throwing three newborn babies, successively over several years, into dumpsters immediately after birth. (Two died, the third was rescued alive).

“This is a terrible case,” Judge McIntyre told Borowiec. “You’ve shocked the community and you’ve shamed yourself. I have to remind myself to be dispassionate about this case.” The judge then proceeded to be anything but dispassionate – dispassion would have had him accepting the prosecution’s demand for at least eight more years in prison on top of 18 months served in custody – as he reflexively adopted a compassionate default attitude to Borowiec’s case that should have been jettisoned decades ago.
...
But the judge bought Borowiec’s story. He said: “All three offences were committed while your mind was disturbed while giving birth.” If this decision stands, it’s open season on unwanted infants. Let’s hope this precedent is overturned on appeal by a court that doesn’t set its moral compass according to the Good Intentions Paving Company handbook.'

Registered nurse accused of attempted murder 'for injecting feces into husband's IV

Mastodon · 1 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Arizona woman has been charged with attempted murder after police say she injected fecal matter into her hospitalized husband's IV line.

Rosemary Vogel, of Sun Lakes, was arrested Thursday after a nurse caught the 65-year-old handling her husband's IV line, which was found to contain a brown substance, police said.

A hospital lab test identified the matter in the IV line as feces, and a trace amount of the same brown substance also was found in the needle of an otherwise empty syringe found in Vogel's purse, according to police.

When it was searched in the hospital, Vogel's pocketbook contained a total of three syringes, including two with a clear liquid, police said.'

Military's Progress on Women in Combat Criticized

Mastodon · 1 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A year after the Pentagon opened combat jobs to female servicemembers, plans for integrating women into these jobs remain problematic, women's advocates said this week.

The Marine Corps and the Army, which have the largest number of military occupational specialties still closed to women, have, according to critics, unclear and inconsistent approaches to integrating women fully into the forces by January 2016, the deadline set by former Defense Secretary Leon Panetta.

The Marines have made little progress in integrating women into jobs they already qualify for, and the purpose of a proposed physical screening test is questionable since it focuses on strength-based measures and not skills actually needed for the work, according to Greg Jacob, a former Marine and policy director of the Service Women's Action Network.

...

The critics, which included veterans and members from the ACLU, National Women's Law Center and Women's Research & Education Institute, have called for more transparency into the research and progress the military has made.

The Army has yet to open 100,000 positions in 14 specialties and the Marines still have to open 70,000 positions in 32 specialties, said Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand, D-N.Y., who has spearheaded efforts highlighting issues females face in the military.

...

"We need to be able to hold them accountable for preventing the best-qualified individuals from competing for these positions," Gillibrand said. "Integrating women into combat strengthens our country both morally and militarily."'

SAVE: Tell President Obama: Stop Politicizing the Rape Issue

Matt · 1 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

A few days ago President Obama announced the creation of a White House Task Force to Protect Students from Sexual Assault. During this announcement, he offered this piece of misinformation: "It is estimated that one in five women on college campuses has been sexually assaulted during their time there."

That statistic comes in part from the National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence study.

There is a very serious problem with the way this study's questions are worded. Example: "When you were drunk, high, drugged, or passed out and unable to give consent, how many people ever had vaginal sex with you?" Someone who purposely gets drunk with their partner and willingly participates in a sexual encounter is counted as a rape victim!

To learn more, see Katherine Connell's National Review article.

We believe that policies on sexual assault and rape should be based on accurate facts, not fear-inducing hyperbole.

Ask President Obama to stop politicizing the rape issue.

- Phone: 202-456-1111
- Email: http://www.whitehouse.gov/contact/submit-questions-and-comments

Thank you,

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Military tests sabbaticals to keep women in ranks

Mastodon · 1 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Navy Cmdr. Valerie Overstreet wanted to start a family, but her job as a Navy pilot and the fact that she and her husband, a naval officer, were stationed in different parts of the country made it complicated.

So she decided to take advantage of a fledgling Navy program that allowed her to take a year off and return to duty without risking her career.

Three years later, she has a 2-year-old daughter and a 9-month-old son, she's back at work at the Naval Academy in Annapolis, and her promotion to captain has been confirmed.

For Overstreet, the year off gave her time to have her daughter and get started on her master's degree, and it allowed the Navy to keep an officer it considers promising without requiring her to sacrifice her family life.

Across the military services, leaders are experimenting with sabbatical programs that give valued officers and enlisted troops the incentive to stay in the service.'

Fiancee Accused in 2-Year-Old’s Death

Matt · 1 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who was engaged to the father of a toddler found unconscious at her North Texas home earlier this month has been arrested in connection with the 2-year-old's death.

On Tuesday afternoon, Plano police arrested 25-year-old Melinda Lynn Muniz. Muniz is charged with capital murder in the death of Lillian Grace Ford.

Plano police said Muniz is the fiancee of Ford's biological father and lived at the home where the toddler was found unconscious.

...

The affidavit states that the girl's father unlocked the apartment door and officers found Muniz face down on the floor of the apartment with her mouth duct taped. She claimed she had been sexually assaulted by an unknown man.

Police officers found Ford unconscious in the bedroom, her mouth had also been duct taped. She was taken to Children's Medical Center in Dallas for treatment and three days later, on Jan. 12, she was pronounced legally dead.

...

According to the warrant affidavit, investigators found several inconsistencies in Muniz's recollection of the events on the day of Ford's death and lab results showed she was never sexually assaulted.

...

The affidavit states that investigators traced Muniz's activities that day including a trip to a Dollar Tree store and obtained surveillance video from the store showing Muniz purchased duct tape similar to the tape found covering her mouth and Ford's mouth. According to the affidavit, Grace Ford was with Muniz at the store while the duct tape was being purchased. According to the affidavit, "This purchase was made 40 minutes before Muniz made the phone call to Ford in which Muniz claimed that she was attacked."

Muniz is being held in the Collin County Jail on $1 million bond.'

Teen pleads guilty to murdering friend, sentenced to life in prison ("with mercy")

Matt · 1 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A West Virginia teenager who confessed to stabbing her best friend to death stood silently in court as she was sentenced to life in prison, refusing to apologize to the family she tore apart.

Sheila Eddy, 18, pleaded guilty to luring her classmate and one-time best friend Skylar Neese into the woods and stabbing her to death on Friday, but declined to say anything else to those inside the Morgantown courthouse, including the victim's father, David Neese.

The grief-stricken father said it was "unacceptable" that Eddy refused to address the court or say she was sorry for the July 2012 murder.
...
Skylar's aunt, Carol Michaud, also addressed the court, calling Eddy "evil," the Observer-Reporter said. "She came and acted as if she knew nothing… She stayed with us and comforted us and swore she had no idea what was going on," Michaud said, according to the paper.

Judge Russell Clawges sentenced Eddy to "life with mercy" for pleading guilty to first-degree murder, meaning Eddy will be eligible for parole after serving 15 years behind bars, and the orange jumpsuit-clad Eddy — wearing glasses and her hair in a ponytail — was escorted out of the courtroom by two court guards.
...
Eddy and Neese had been friends since grade school, Monongalia County Prosecutor Marcia Ashdown told the court on Friday, but in the weeks preceding the murder, Eddy and Shoaf kept their distance from the unwitting victim.

The prosecutor said that after a countdown, the two girls stabbed Neese with kitchen knives and "stood over her until her last breath," then failed to bury their friend — instead covering her with branches — and left her.'

Veterans group says military suicide rate is 'out of control'

Mastodon · 1 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rieckhoff: The suicide rate is out of control. We're losing roughly 22 veterans per day to suicide. On my way over here today, I got another note from a military family that is struggling with a suicidal veteran. We are losing more people now to suicide than to combat.
...
Gillibrand: We are going to focus our next hearing on how many of these suicides are sexual assault-related. How many are caused by rape and sexual trauma that goes unreported because of the stigma and the fear of retaliation.'

Knox judge says he suffered over guilty verdict

Matt · 1 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Short version: Guilty->the convicts appeal->convictions overturned->prosecutor appeals->high court overturns the overturning and orders new trial->guilty. Net result: male convict was in Austria when this latest conviction was announced and voluntarily returned to Italy to surrender to the Italian authorities. Female convict is in the US and states she has no intention of surrendering to the Italian authorities here (e.g.: the embassy in D.C. or nearest consulate) for extradition to Italy. And there you have it. Whether the US will arrest and extradite her, I dunno. Personally, I don't know how they couldn't, but she's a photogenic young (white) woman who's "been through so much already, the poor dear...", so who knows. Excerpt:

'The judge who presided over Amanda Knox's second murder conviction says he suffered over the verdict, but that he and the jury reached agreement that she was guilty in the death of British student Meredith Kercher.
...
Nenci, another judge and six lay jurors reinstated the guilty verdicts on Thursday against Knox and Sollecito that were first handed down in 2009, sentencing Knox to 28 ½ years and Sollecito to 25 for the murder. An appeals court had acquitted the pair in 2011 and ordered them freed from prison, but Italy's supreme court threw out the acquittals and ordered a third trial, in Florence.

Lawyers for both Knox and Sollecito have said they would appeal, saying there was no proof that the two had committed the crime. Knox has said she will never willingly return to Italy to serve any sentence if the verdict is upheld.
...
A third person, Rudy Guede, was convicted in a separate trial and is serving a 16-year sentence.
...
Sollecito had attended the morning session of Thursday's court hearing but then drove to Italy's northern frontier with Austria and Slovenia. While the judges and jury deliberated, he and his girlfriend visited Austria, but came back to Italy to spend the night.

In an interview with U.S. broadcaster NBC News on Friday, Sollecito said he wasn't trying to flee Italy by going to Austria. He said he had been planning to take a trip outside Italy if acquitted, but turned back as soon as he learned he had been convicted.

"I didn't want to flee, or to get away because I actually went back," he said.

He said he checked into the first hotel once back in Italy because he was tired. Police found him there Friday morning, and confiscated his passport and ID papers, as mandated by the court, but then set him free.'

Forgiveness, no jail for woman who struck, killed girls in leaf pile

Mastodon · 1 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The woman who killed two Forest Grove girls when she hit them with an SUV in October was sentenced to 3 years probation and 250 hours of community service in a courtroom packed with the victims' emotional friends and family Friday morning.

Cinthya Garcia-Cisneros, 19, was found guilty Jan. 15 on two counts of failure to perform the duties of a driver. She will be released from the Washington County Jail within 48 hours and taken into federal custody on an immigration hold. Her lawyer, Courtney Carter, said Garcia-Cisneros is in "grave danger of being deported."
...
Garcia-Cisneros testified that she heard about the deaths later and panicked. She confessed when police showed up at her door the next day.

"You made a choice not to come back and that greatly impacted how I got to say goodbye to my daughters. You were one block away, and I'm sure, scared," Dieter-Robinson said to her.
...
Her boyfriend, 18-year-old Mario Echeverria, was sentenced to 13 months in prison for hindering prosecution after the crash. Instead of going to police, investigators said he took the SUV to a car wash to destroy evidence.'

Betty Friedan's second-wave hypocrisy

Mastodon · 2 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The stereotypes upon which Friedan based her claim revels in the kind of ignorance common among upper middle class white women who could afford to be bored at home. Women composed over 1/3 of the workforce in 1960; contrary to Friedan's audience, 19 million women were active in the labor force in 1964. When commenting on why black women by and large never read Friedan's book, Michelle Bernard observed that most black women "…believed that Friedan's work spoke only to a privileged class of white women who had nothing better to do than whine about how difficult life was as a stay at home mother."

It becomes obvious reading The Feminine Mystique that Friedan never intended to market to an audience of working women who would've appreciated the technological innovations entering the home. Friedan loaded her book with (now disputed) academic citations that would only have been recognizable by her fellow Smith College graduates and their educated, upper-class compatriots. This nomeklatura-style intellectualism comes as no surprise when Friedan's communist past and Marxist agenda is taken into account:

"…under her maiden name, Betty Goldstein, she was a political activist and professional propagandist for the Communist left for a quarter of a century before the publication of "The Feminist Mystique" launched the modern women's movement.'

Woman accused of killing, dismembering adult son

Mastodon · 2 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A suburban Detroit woman was being held in connection with the death of her adult son, whose dismembered remains were found dumped in trash bags along the sides of roads, police said.

The names of the 59-year-old woman and the 32-year-old victim were not released, but St. Clair Shores police Sgt. Jay Cohoe told the Times Herald of Port Huron that they were mother and son.

The Associated Press couldn't reach Cohoe for comment Saturday.

The woman, who lives in St. Clair Shores just east of Detroit, faces murder and dismemberment charges. She hasn't been officially charged. Police said prosecutors in Macomb County are expected to review a warrant with the charges Monday.'

Welcome To "Girlington": Helen Smith On How College Is Becoming A Hostile Working Environment For Men

Mastodon · 2 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recently I sat down with psychologist Dr. Smith across a Skype connection (one set up by her tech-savvy husband, Glenn Reynolds, who also writes a popular blog) for a delightful conversation about her new book Men On Strike. The first half of the interview certainly generated a strong reaction (just look at the comments section), but I think the second half found below is even more provocative.

Listen to the whole thing here.

...

... but I think that actually what's happening is that not only is the [college] commodity much less desirable to men but I think that the environment itself is actively hostile towards men. So I think you've got two things going on there: you've got a commodity college which isn't to men as important as it used to be, and there are other things that men are finding to do; and at the same time I think that the discrimination against men in these diversity-field, women-dominated schools is also acting as a kind of barrier to men. A lot of men don't want to put up with it and a lot of people think, "Of course that's not really happening," but people have no idea what men face in our colleges today. For example, they can go into a college today and be charged with any type of sexual harassment or sexual abuse and there doesn't have to be really proof shown that they've done something.'

Minnesota: Women's Economic Security Act of 2014 unveiled at Women's Economic Security Summit

Mastodon · 3 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'...The Women's Economic Security Act aims to address a range of these economic barriers by:

- Closing the gender pay gap, requiring private businesses that contract with the state to report on pay equity within their workforce.
- Increasing income for working women and their families by increasing the minimum wage to $9.50.
- Expanding access to high-quality, affordable childcare.
- Expanding family and sick leave for working families, including paid sick and safe leave and expanding unpaid leave under the Minnesota Parental Leave Act.
- Enhance protections for victims of domestic violence.
- Encouraging women in non-traditional, high-wage jobs and support growth for women-owned small businesses.'

Femen protesters besiege bishop in Spain

Mastodon · 3 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Five topless protesters swooped on Cardinal Antonio Maria Rouco Varela as he got out of a car to attend an evening mass at a church in central Madrid.

They hurled red-stained knickers at the cardinal, who they say is one of the forces behind the conservative government's planned abortion reform.

Clerics and worshippers rushed out of the church to fend off the protesters, who fled before the police were called, an AFP photographer at the scene said.'

UK: Male earnings 'hardest hit' after the financial crisis

Mastodon · 3 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men have seen their earnings hit the hardest in the pay squeeze after the financial crisis – but still earn 20 per cent more than women, according to new analysis.

The average male worker has seen his pay fall by 9 per cent in today's prices - from highs of £14.24 an hour in 2009 to £12.97 in 2013, research by think tank Resolution shows.

Female pay has fallen less steeply, declining by 6 per cent over the same period, from £11.03 in 2009 to £10.33 an hour today.

"Male pay has fallen faster from a higher starting point," Matthew Whittaker, senior economist at Resolution, told the Sunday Times.'

Domestic violence Super Sunday myth

Mastodon · 3 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This weekend, it's likely you will hear or read someone stating a commonly accepted "fact" that more incidents of domestic violence are reported on Super Bowl Sunday than on any other day of the year. It will be stated with great authority and you'll likely think, "How awful."

But that's a myth, and one that needs clearing up because it puts the focus in the wrong place. Reports of domestic violence do increase as January turns into February, but for other reasons.

Credit card bills for holiday purchases are arriving, just as heating costs are increasing due to colder weather. Bills are a stressor in any household and in a family facing violence they also become a reason for the abuser to exert the control that's at the heart of domestic violence.'

Hair stylists taught "to spot domestic violence"

Mastodon · 3 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ryan told the Elizabeth Grady students that because of the personal nature of their work, beauticians are in a unique position to spot signs of violence that many people wouldn't notice, including bumps or scars on the scalp, missing or damaged hair, red marks or bruising on the neck, as well as missed appointments, nervousness or anxiety. They were advised to be supportive and nonjudgmental and to gently refer the woman to brochures or cards in the salon containing information about local groups that can help.'

I need feminism because women shouldn't be punished like men for their crimes

Mastodon · 3 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Item here. Another way of saying it: "I need feminism because women shouldn't be punished like men for their crimes."

Image URL: http://i.imgur.com/JC4W1Ei.jpg

Wikipedia is ‘very masculine,’ so feminists pledge to fix it

Matt · 4 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminist groups at more than a dozen universities are planning to participate in another mass “edit Wikipedia day,” because the free, volunteer encyclopedia website is obviously horribly sexist.

Sarah Stierch, a Wikipedia contributor and researcher for the Wikimedia Foundation, said the problem isn’t just that most Wikipedia user are male. The layout of the website is itself “very masculine,” she said.

“It’s aesthetically very masculine in its design,” said Stierch in a statement to The Daily Dot, also noting that, “The average Wikipedia editor is a well-educated white male. Well-educated white males have been writing history and the story of the world since ancient times.”'

U.S. State Dept.: "TechWomen Delegation in Rwanda To Expand Network of African Women in Science, Technology, Engineering, and Mathematics (STEM) Fields"

Minuteman · 4 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Fusing technology with efforts to empower women and girls, the U.S. Department of State announced today that a delegation of 30 U.S. TechWomen mentors is meeting in Rwanda February 2-7 to collaborate and connect through workshops and visits with local organizations. An innovative public-private partnership, TechWomen pairs emerging women leaders in technology from the Middle East and Africa with American women mentors from the greater Silicon Valley area.
...
The U.S. TechWomen mentors traveling to Rwanda represent 23 companies in Silicon Valley and the Greater San Francisco Bay Area including: Blackberry, Calix, Citrix, Cisco, EMC, Ericsson, Fairrer Samani Group Ventures, Families Without Borders, Genentech, Intel Corp., Juniper Networks, Katy Dickinson Consulting, Law Offices of Patricia Bovan, NestGSV, Nisum Technologies, Salesforce.com, Santa Clara University, Sf.citi, Shakour Marketing, Sun Run, Symantec, and Twitter.'

Is There a Cyber War on Women?

Matt · 4 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last month, freelance journalist Amanda Hess, in a lengthy feature in Pacific Standard, declared that women are not welcome on the Internet. After describing her own frightening experience of online stalking, Hess lists other ugly incidents and cites statistics and studies arguing that women on the Internet—journalists, bloggers, and general users—are routinely terrorized solely because of their sex. New York Times conservative columnist Ross Douthat called the article “a candidate for the most troubling magazine essay of 2014.”

...

As evidence of the perils of being a woman online, Hess states that, “of the 3,787 people who reported harassment incidents from 2000 to 2012 to the volunteer organization Working to Halt Online Abuse, 72.5 percent were female.” This is an average of 288 women per year and these numbers hardly indicate an epidemic. Moreover, only a minority of the reports involved threats of violence (20 percent on average, and as few as seven percent in 2011-2012).

It’s important to note that men make up a nontrivial percentage of the victims of online harassment. Some of the disparity is likely due to self-selection; men who are harassed may be less inclined to complain than women. When American Internet users in a random survey by the Pew Research Center last year were asked if they had ever been stalked or harassed online, 13 percent of the women said yes—but so did 11 percent of the men. This is a surprisingly small gap within the poll’s margin of error.

Hess’s article does not include these statistics, but cites another finding from the same study: “A Pew survey reported that five percent of women who used the Internet said ‘something happened online’ that led them into ‘physical danger.’” For men that figure was three percent. Again, a gender gap so trivial it wasn’t even mentioned in the Pew report on the survey, which gave a combined figure of four percent for both sexes.

...

Just as the victims of cyber-warfare are not always female, the offenders are not always male. On average, about a third of the reports of online harassment to Working to Halt Online Abuse identify the aggressor as female (with the perpetrator’s gender unknown in another one-fifth of the incidents).'

Canada: Mother asks judge to jail babysitter who molested daughter

fathers4fairness · 5 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Only by careful reading will it be clear the babysitter was female. These lines show it: "She had pleaded not guilty and said the girl invented the story." and "...said the babysitter “broke a strong bond between a mother and daughter.”" Makes sense as it was a female babysitter. Excerpt:

'The mother of a young girl sexually assaulted by her babysitter told an Ottawa court Monday that the assault has condemned her daughter to a life of struggle.

The 27-year-old babysitter was convicted of the 2009 assault in October and will be sentenced next month.

According to evidence, the babysitter performed oral sex on the girl, who was five years old at the time of the offence.

She had pleaded not guilty and said the girl invented the story.

Justice Catherine Kehoe rejected the babysitter’s version of events, which she said was “full of inconsistencies that were unexplained and made no sense. It is obvious (the babysitter) had lied so often that she could not keep track of what she had said. I find that (the babysitter) will lie when it suits her to get herself out of trouble.”'

Sadly:

'The child, now 10, is in the care of the Children’s Aid Society in what her mother describes as an “open adoption.”

Her mother told the court she is allowed to see her twice a year.'

Intact News: Jewish Intactivists Increasingly Vocal in Israel

Matt · 5 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Intactivism—the movement to end circumcision—continues to win social acceptance worldwide, including in the Jewish state of Israel. Jews in the holy land are increasingly open to questioning circumcision, much more so than in the United States. In recent years, Jewish Intactivists have published articles and essays in some of Israel's largest papers including Haaretz (Israel's largest and most influential daily paper), 927mag, and the Jerusalem Post. A variety of active Intactivist groups such as Gonnen (Protect the Child), The Israeli Organization Against Genital Mutilation/Intact Son, and Kahal (a community group for parents of intact sons) have sprung up. The leaders of Kahal say that thousands of Israeli Jews are choosing to keep their sons intact.

We are Israeli Jews who are proud of our heritage and religion, and who see a need to make adjustments to protect the well-being of our sons. Judaism is a religion of constant evolution and ethical advancement. Early in Judaism animal sacrifice was abandoned, and Rabbis chose to abolish capital punishment. Many Jews and Israelis recognize that it is time that circumcision shift into a symbolic ritual such as the well-popularized Brit Shalom. Over 100 Rabbis are willing to do a Bris ceremony without circumcision, and this includes some Rabbis in Israel.'

Documentary crew call: Are women less funny, and more sexist, than men?

Matt · 5 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Request for crew here.

'Contract type: Temporary

Controversial documentary feature film, Laughing with Women, seeks all crew - including researcher/presenters, camera-owner/operators and marketers - for the next phase of shooting - a four day experiment, to be filmed on the streets of central London, to measure which sex is the funnier, and which sex uses more sexist jokes about the other.

From similar pre-research, we expect to find that women's jokes are slightly less funny than men's, and massively more sexist - women typically calling men "pigs", "pervs", "weirdos", "idiots" or "helper dogs".

- just a joke?

Is sexist prejudice spread by laughter in particular?

Our findings will be edited into a short film, and used as part of a kickstarter campaign to raise further funds for future filmed experiments, to discover if people who laugh at sexist jokes then go on to physically discriminate against the joked about sex or not.

Is it possible to make really funny jokes about the other sex without being really sexist?

This project has already caused widespread controversy, and is not for the faint-hearted. If you have a genuine interest in and are truly motivated by gender equality work, and comedy, then consider applying.

Shooting dates: 5th and 6th April, and 12th and 13th April, 2014.

Please send your show-reels and CVs, along with a short paragraph or two explaining why you are interested in this subject - and precisely what you think you can offer.

Meanwhile, please follow @sexismbusters on twitter and youtube for all the latest.'

Going uncut: It’s humane and European

Matt · 5 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I don’t have brothers or sons, and I certainly don’t have a penis, so I recognize that I may not be the world’s foremost authority on circumcision. But I’d like to make an air-tight argument for the uncut penis, which the vast majority of men in the world possess.

Michael Fassbender in Shame.

Wait, I’m serious. Fassbender was born in Germany, where the circumcision rate is less than 10 percent, and over 60 percent of parents equate the procedure with genital mutilation. Efforts to ban non-medically necessary circumcision have gained traction in Germany, Denmark, England and even California, though advocates for parental and religious rights have managed to keep them at bay. Still, circumcision rates are down in the U.S., and the tide is turning. Like the death penalty, universal healthcare and the metric system, this is yet another issue where our country is the slowest to leave the dark ages.

Adult circumcised men tend to take arguments against circumcision very personally, simply because it implies that what their parents did to them was unnecessary and even wrong. I can understand this. But the discussion of this archaic and very brutal procedure should not be about adult men.
...
I get the problems that arise with interfering with someone’s religious beliefs, but at some point, children deserve to be protected from harm. Oregon has been a leader in convicting parents who cause injury and death to their children by rejecting modern medicine because of religious beliefs, and is this issue really that far off?

Circumcision is extremely painful. Trust me, if you find a video of it online, don’t watch. Sure, your baby probably won’t be traumatized for life, but over half of circumcisions are performed without anesthesia as the foreskin is separated from the glans and then crushed. Why would you do this to a baby with no decent reason?'

There is no ‘rape culture’ at British universities

Mastodon · 5 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"Before the First World War, those who wanted to scare bright women away from universities described an ‘infidel’ environment that would leave female students ‘barren’ and destined only for a life of ‘spinsterhood’. ...
...
A recent Guardian blog describes university as a ‘toxic environment’ for women, dominated by an ‘insidious rape culture’; a ‘world of sexual assault, objectification and harassment’. Reports of vulnerable young women having to run the gauntlet of a university campus rife with ‘rape culture’ abound in both the UK and America.

But there’s one big difference from a century ago: today’s panics over rape ‘epidemics’ are not promoted by Victorian fathers but by female students. Being a feminist on campus in 2014 seems to mean calling for university managers to intervene in intimate relationships and to curtail free speech in the name of protecting delicate women from sexual threats.

Let’s be absolutely clear: there is no epidemic of rape in universities. Very few articles cite any statistics to support the assertion that rape is prevalent on campus. Those that do rely on national crime statistics; recently released data suggests that in the UK in the year 2012-13 there were, on average, 22 recorded incidents of rape per 100,000 members of the adult population. This would equate to just over four recorded rapes at a typical university. This is obviously four too many, but it is hardly testament to any sort of widespread ‘rape culture’. Rape Crisis, a UK charity that supports women and girls who have suffered from sexual violence, claims that in 90 per cent of rape cases women know their attackers, and that 52 per cent of women suffering serious sexual violence were attacked by their partners. The validity of applying such national statistics to a student population, which is generally young and living away from old networks of family and friends, needs to be questioned.'

“Boys don’t cry” stereotypes harm masculinity

Mastodon · 5 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

“Man up” is a phrase some men, and even some women, have heard in their lifetime.
The Baylor Lariat sat down with Dr. Mark Morman, director of graduate studies, who researches male/male friendships to identify how masculinity affects men and women.
...
Q: How are boys forced to prove their masculinity in today’s society?

A: The obvious is control your emotions, don’t be seen as emotional, don’t be seen as open, vulnerable, keep it under control. Again, I think it goes back to the activities and jobs we pursue as men as a way to reinforce and identity with those kind of masculine things. I’m doing a study of firefighters right now, and 98 percent of firefighters in America are men. So, “I want to show my manhood, there’s an occupation that will prove it to everyone.” What’s more manly then these firefighter guys that go into burning buildings and save people and rescue and do CPR and it’s an incredibly manly, masculine sort of job. That’s how people are forced, or I would say allowed.'

Heart Awareness Month: For Women Only?

Mastodon · 5 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If that wasn't enough celebration jammed into the shortest month of the year, February is also American Heart Month. Twenty-eight days or so designated in 1964 by President Johnson's signed decree to commemorate the organ that tirelessly pumps every red-blooded American's American red blood. On top of that, someone recently decided that was too general, and now this is also "Women's Heart Awareness Month." Females from sea to shining sea are urged to be aware of their heart.

Guys… We're on our own. Of the 700,000 or so deaths each year in this country attributed to heart disease, two-thirds of them are men. And yet women's hearts get all the awareness. Guys have hearts. Their hearts need awareness, too. I'm aware of my heart, acutely aware… Every twinge, every cramp or pain. I feel my pulse six, seven times a day.

Maybe they figure guys have other organs we'd rather be aware of. I hate to think it's because guys're considered expendable… Work thirty, forty years if you're not laid off. Then keel over in a heap at our desk, unaware of your heart the whole time. Thank you, next! Slide him over; we need the chair.'

Students film feminist porno in Columbia University library

Matt · 6 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Columbia University and Barnard College students filmed a feminist pornographic film in Columbia's Butler Library to fight what they see as “gender tension” at the school.

The NSFW film, titled "Initiatiøn," was filmed as a feminist statement exploring "the rituals of American Ivy League secret societies, to the point of hysteria, highlighting our culture's perception of female desire,” according to an article published on Gawker.

It begins with a group of girls sitting around a library table taking their shirts off. As the film progresses, the girls engage in activities including kissing, rubbing eggs on their bodies and twerking around chicken carcass.

One of the film’s creators, Columbia art and history major Coco Young, told the IvyGate blog that the library itself represented sexism at the school because only male author’s names are on the facade of the building.
...
“I haven’t made a video for Purple in a while,” Sciortino’s blog post introducing the film stated.

“If you’re in the mood for a #throwback, the most recent was a blow-job instruction video that I made with Sandy Kim last May.”'

Christina Hoff-Sommers: No, Women Don’t Make Less Money Than Men

fathers4fairness · 6 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It’s the bogus statistic that won’t die, and the President deployed it during the State of the Union — but women do not make 77 cents to every dollar a man earns.

President Obama repeated the spurious gender wage gap statistic in his State of the Union address. “Today,” he said, “women make up about half our workforce. But they still make 77 cents for every dollar a man earns. That is wrong, and in 2014, it’s an embarrassment.”

What is wrong and embarrassing is the President of the United States reciting a massively discredited factoid. The 23-cent gender pay gap is simply the difference between the average earnings of all men and women working full-time. It does not account for differences in occupations, positions, education, job tenure, or hours worked per week. When all these relevant factors are taken into consideration, the wage gap narrows to about five cents. And no one knows if the five cents is a result of discrimination or some other subtle, hard-to-measure difference between male and female workers. In its fact-checking column on the State of the Union, the Washington Post included the president’s mention of the wage gap in its list of dubious claims. “There is clearly a wage gap, but differences in the life choices of men and women… make it difficult to make simple comparisons.”'

Barbara Kay: Ryerson drags men's issues group through the wringer

Matt · 6 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

UPDATE: Ryerson administration has confirmed that the university will be absorbing the cost of the additional security for the February 6 CAFÉ event. According to a staffer who communicated with this newspaper on Monday afternoon, after this article had been published, Ryerson president Sheldon Levy now has decided that the cost was a barrier to freedom of expression.

Excerpt:

'It's happening again. Yet another Canadian university is making life extremely difficult for a group that brings awareness of men's issues to institutions of higher learning.

The Canadian Association for Equality (CAFÉ) organized a talk to be held at Toronto's Ryerson University Thursday, Feb. 6, entitled "Are Men Obsolete? Feminism, Free Speech and the Censorship of Mens Issues," to be delivered by Karen Straughan, famous as the YouTube sensation GirlWritesWhat. ...

The event will go ahead, but at a high cost to the group. On January 31, representatives of CAFÉ were called to a meeting by the Ryerson University Office of the Vice Provost Students and campus security, who informed them that if the event was to go forward, CAFÉ must pay $1,600 in security fees (+HST) and change the lecture's venue from the advertised Mattamy Athletic Centre to the less central G. Raymond Chang School of Continuing Education.

This is outrageous. The demand for a security fee, which most groups cannot afford to pay, is almost invariably a transparent strategy to force the group to withdraw their event. It is the university's obligation to ensure the security of bona fide speakers – and this one certainly is; Straughan's talk, like all CAFÉ talks, will be a responsible, thoughtful dissertation on an objective situation, and the opposite of incendiary – and to impose such a hardship on a group in anticipation of irresponsible and bigoted behavior by intolerant activists is to blame and punish the victim.'

The Feminist Mystique

Mastodon · 6 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism is not an idea or a collection of ideas but a collection of appetites wriggling queasily together like a bag of snakes. Feminism has nothing to do with the proposition that women should be considered whole and complete members of the body politic, though it has enjoyed great success marketing itself that way. (Virginia I. Postrel recently denounced me as a “creep” for suggesting that the substance of feminism, if indeed there is any, differs rather radically from its advertising campaigns.) A useful definition is this: “Feminism is the words ‘I Want!’ in the mouths of three or more women, provided they’re the right kind of women.” Feminism must therefore accommodate wildly incompatible propositions — e.g., (1) Women unquestionably belong alongside men in Marine units fighting pitched battles in Tora Bora but (2) really should not be expected to be able to perform three chin-ups. Or: (1) Women at Columbia are empowered by pornography but (2) women at Wellesley are victimized by a statue of a man sleepwalking in his Shenanigans. And then there is Fluke’s Law: (1) Women are responsible moral agents with full sexual and economic autonomy who (2) must be given an allowance, like children, when it comes to contraceptives.

Feminism began as a simple grievance, mutated into a kind of conspiracy theory (with “patriarchy” filling in for the Jews/Freemasons/Illuminati/Bohemian Grove/reptilian shape-shifters/the fiendish plot of Dr. Fu Manchu/etc.), spent the 1980s in grad school congealing into a ridiculous jargon, and with the booming economy of the 1990s was once again reinvented, this time as a career path.'

UK: Wife cried rape to keep years-long affair secret a month after wedding

fathers4fairness · 6 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Further anecdotal evidence of how widespread and facile false accusations are in the West - yet nothing is done to the malfactors. Excerpt:

'A cheating wife who cried rape in a bid to keep a six-year affair secret from her husband just a month after their wedding has avoided jail.

Unfaithful Jessica Gore, 32, had only been married to partner Darren, 41, for four weeks when she arrived home later than expected last September.

The newly-wed mother-of-two claimed she had been attacked by a stranger as she walked home from babysitting for a friend.

Her worried husband immediately told her to contact police and report the crime.'

Members of Congress push for sexual assault reform on campuses

Mastodon · 7 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The letter lays out various requests. “We urge (the Department of Education) to be more transparent about its own investigations and enforcement actions against colleges and universities regarding campus sexual harassment and sexual assault,” wrote Maloney and Speier in the letter. They urge the Department to push for a centralized database of all universities’ records. As of today, they argue, students and their families have a difficult time accessing information on a school’s safety, including the campus history of Title IX-related compliance issues, sexual assault incidents, statistics and policies.

The representatives also seek to require schools to conduct surveys and exit interviews regarding campus safety. These surveys could provide a more accurate picture of the scope of sexual assault on campuses, giving students a better idea of how safe their school is.

In addition, the Congressional letter requests that Title IX be expanded to include protections for transgender students and address issues of same-sex violence on campuses. It cites a study by the American Association of University Women, claiming that over 70 percent of LGBT students are confronted with some form of sexual harassment while in college.'

The War On Women And The War On The Family

Mastodon · 7 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Democratic Party has found what seems to be a winning formula in both state and national elections – a “War on Women” being waged by the Republicans.

The “War on Women” is based on the premise that women are oppressed if they do not 1) have access to free birth control, 2) have unlimited access to abortion, 3) receive “equal pay for equal work” based on credentials rather than performance, and 4) have the support of the state if they have a child out of wedlock.

On closer examination, however, this “War on Women” turns out to be something very different. It is a feminist-and-Democratic-Party-led “War on the Family” that is threatening the very foundations of American society.'

India: Only women cops to probe rape cases in Haryana

Mastodon · 7 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Haryana Police declared on Thursday all cases of sexual violence will from now be investigated by woman cops.

The decision, the police said, was taken on the basis of recommendations by the Centre for sensitive and effective policing after Nirbhaya's gang-rape in New Delhi.

Haryana reported 927 rape cases in 2013 while the numbers were 686 in 2012 and 733 in 2011.

Implementing this move is, however, likely to be difficult as women form a small percentage of the total strength of the police force in Haryana. In Gurgaon, for instance, where the ratio of women cops to men is almost 1:10, the order from DGP S N Vashisht led to a reshuffle across the ranks.'

Response: I am not a feminist

Mastodon · 7 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Tuesday's piece "Feminist? You better believe it," a number of claims were made that I don't agree with.
...
I feel that your postulations against the male population are not only wrong, but also sad. They assume the worst in society, for both men and women. And they assume that feminism is the only solution to the make the world a better place.

But feminism is an inexhaustible ideology that will forever see women as the victims, and men as our tyrants; there will never be a sufficient outcome.

As Barbara Kay said in the best anti-feminism essay every written, "scapegoating an entire group to explain the unachieved goals of its own members … always ends in grievance."

Men don't walk around searching for promiscuously dressed women to take advantage of. Rape is not a mainstream thought for the common man.

I wish you wouldn't define a gender based on an act performed by sick individuals, both men and women.'

For Policies That Are Fair to Both Men and Women

Mastodon · 7 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here.

Re "How Can We Help Men? By Helping Women" (Sunday Review, Jan. 12):

'Stephanie Coontz proposes a number of excellent ideas to make our society friendlier to women and rightly recognizes that addressing these issues would likely benefit men as well. We would do well to seriously consider putting her ideas into practice. But there is no reason this should be to the exclusion of directly addressing issues faced by men.

The Great Recession has left many more men than women out of work, and with men being substantially less likely than women to pursue higher education, this gap is expected to persist for the foreseeable future.

The fact that most Fortune 500 executives and members of Congress are men does not in any way negate the fact that the majority of the unemployed and the homeless are also men, especially when so many of our politicians are more interested in fighting over which party is waging a "war on women" than in creating jobs for their brothers who are in need.

We will not solve these problems by "putting women first" and naively expecting that things will work out for men. Instead of ignoring the interests of half the population, we should give adequate attention to the needs of both men and women and work to craft policies that are fair to everyone.'

Problems of boys, men show no sign of improving

Mastodon · 7 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 1980, just 12 percent of boys said they did not like school very much at all, according to a study by the Institute of Social Research at the University of Michigan. By 1991, the percentage of boys who disliked school doubled, zooming to 24 percent.

Schools come down hard on boys who are often rambunctious, messy, disorganized, and enjoy activity and competitive games. Yet many schools are cutting back on recess and are eliminating games that boys enjoy. “Since the 1990s, many schools have done away with games like dodgeball, red rover, and tag,” finds researcher Christina Hoff Sommers. Some schools even label “tug of war” as “tug of peace.”

As I listened at the restaurant to the guy who dropped out of college, I wondered if his reason for leaving college had a lot to do with boredom and low academic skills. The problems of boys become problems for girls, who find it hard to meet mates who match their educational backgrounds. His girlfriend sure didn’t look happy.'

Scientific American blogger mocks men mutilated

DutchO · 7 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Ask yourself would this "humor" be posted on Scientific American's blog if the victims had been women with their vaginas cut out? Then why is it "funny" when the victims are men? Please post your thoughts on the blog. Excerpt:

'This is one of the ones for the IgNobels that really is only funny because, well, it's about penises. Getting eaten by ducks sometimes. But otherwise, it's actually quite a serious subject, and the paper itself has important implications for surgery in…delicate areas.

It turns out, during the 1970s, Thailand had an epidemic. Not an epidemic of cholera or polio or something (though it may have had those, too). No, this was an epidemic of revenge. A particular type of revenge, by women on their philandering husbands.

This type of revenge stemmed from (or so the authors' hypothesize), the Thai concept of a "cool heart," to suppress anger and avoid confrontation. This apparently work pretty well some of the time, but has its limits, when wives, confronted with cheating spouses, come up while they are sleeping…and cut off their penises.'

Over 10 Million Men of Prime Working Age Are Unemployed in the US and Experts Think It's Causing Declining Marriage Rates

Mastodon · 8 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than 10 million men, or one out of every six in the 25 to 54 age bracket, are unemployed in the United States, and only about one third of them say they are actively seeking jobs. Experts believe this dire condition could also be causing declining marriage rates.

"Some of them are looking for jobs. Two-thirds say they aren't. Some are supported by families or friends; men without jobs are far less likely to be married than men with jobs. About 2 million of these prime-age men are on Social Security Disability Insurance," said David Wessel, director of the Hutchins Center on Fiscal and Monetary Policy at the Brookings Institution in a report Thursday.

...

"The costs of having so many prime age men on the sidelines of the economy can be measured in lost wages, the rising tab for government benefits, foreclosures and bankruptcies. But the costs go beyond dollars and cents. As my Brookings colleague Ron Haskins has noted, the decline in the share of men who are working might be one reason behind the fall in marriage rates. Men without jobs don't make very attractive mates," said Wessel.

He pointed out that a big portion of unemployed men are unskilled with lower levels of education, but said a better economy with higher wages being paid for low-skilled jobs could entice men to get off the couch.'

The UK Economy Needs More Women Scientists

Mastodon · 8 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'British MPs have just made public an extensive report into the status of women in scientific careers, and it's full of well-considered insights. First up: it recognises that women are really, actually, needed in STEM fields.

When discussing the role of women in science and what we can do to improve the ridiculous gender gap in senior science positions (the word used in the report is "astonishing"), people often act as if helping women into the field is somehow doing them a favour. But giving women the same opportunities as men to advance in scientific careers isn't just good for equality; it's necessary if we're to meet the country's demand for scientists and engineers, and reap the resulting economic benefits.

...

The MPs then looked at why women are so poorly represented in STEM jobs, and their conclusions were obviously made up of many different points. It's worth reading the full report if you're interested, but their key observation was the "leaky pipeline" effect. While girls are successfully encouraged to get into science, they're not making it to the top levels. On average, only 17 percent of professors across STEM fields are female.

The reasons for this are multiple, but one obvious one is systematic discrimination. We've seen study after study on gender bias in the scientific community—from rates of publication, to funding, to job opportunities—and the report thankfully doesn't pussyfoot around the issue. Scientists both male and female, it explains, are susceptible to gender bias just like anyone else.

In fact, it even suggests that their bias is only made worse because scientists tend to see themselves as objective, which prevents them from recognising and accepting that they might subconsciously discriminate against women. "Scientists are susceptible to the same unconscious gender biases as the rest of the population and it is unfortunate that some are unwilling to accept this simply because their professional research requires them to be objective," the committee writes.

Maternity leave is another big issue, and one that is by no means exclusive to the scientific community. The scientific career ladder doesn't allow much for breaks to be taken, and as women almost always take more leave than men to care for children (indeed, the report found they're often encouraged to as paternity leave is restricted), they're left having to try to fit having a family around unsuitable working patterns. One female academic described it as "an unpleasant choice: risk not having children or risk having to restart my career in my mid-thirties."

...

The MPs also suggested more flexible working hours, better career advice, and greater support for those returning from career breaks. While many will probably see these measures (which are only suggestions for now) as "concessions" to women, the female scientists looking to progress up the career ladder don't need to be thankful. They're the ones fighting against a biased system, pushing research beyond its current boundaries—and contributing to an economy that needs them.'

Teen who fathered his teacher's baby sues school district over negligence after his molester is released from jail six months early

Mastodon · 8 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A California teen who fathered a baby with his high school teacher has filed a civil lawsuit against the convicted child molester and the school district where she worked.

The lawsuit filed Wednesday on behalf of the now 18-year-old student alleges that the Redlands Unified School District and Citrus Valley High School were negligent and complicit in the victim's abuse at the hands of 29-year-old Laura Whitehurst.

'Children in California, children in Redlands should not be a sex toy for their teacher,' said one of the boy's attorneys, John Manly.
...
Faced with a 29-year prison sentence, the former AP English teacher pleaded guilty to four counts of unlawful sex with a minor and two counts of oral copulation with a minor in exchange for the dismissal of the other charges against her.

Whitehurst was sentenced to a year in prison in August, but was released last month after serving only six months.

She will remain on probation for five years and must register as a sex offender for life. The plea deal also mandates that Whitehurst undergo counselling.

The 29-year-old former educator gave birth last June to a daughter fathered by her student, who shares custody with her.

In the 40-page lawsuit unveiled this week, the attorneys for the victim, named John BB Doe in the complaint, claim that Whitehurst's superiors had reason to believe that the woman was sexually abusing her students, but failed to alert their families and police, Courthouse News Service reported.

The suit also alleges that Whitehurst's colleague, soccer coach Sarah Seevers, knew about her illicit affair with the 16-year-old but kept mum.'

If men and women work the same amount of hours, what is so unfair?

Mastodon · 8 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yet, says Senior, women are still cranky about this because they believe men don't do their share of the household tasks. She makes no mention of the idea that women should pick up more paid hours to compensate, or to allow their husbands to work less. Nope, it's just about hubby working more so that the wife feels better.

How about instead, women say, "Gee, honey look at this! We're both working equally hard!"?

Senior notes that women's work is difficult because it requires multitasking. We have to do things that have to be done now. "Complicating matters,"she writes, "mothers assume a disproportionate number of time-sensitive domestic tasks, whether it's getting their toddlers dressed for school or their 12-year-olds off to swim practice."

But I think some of this time pressure is overdone. Getting a toddler dressed is a pain in the neck, but no toddler ever died from going to pre-school in pajama pants or mismatched socks. In fact, my 5-year-old is wearing mismatched socks today, as he does 90 percent of the time. His kindergarten teacher hasn't commented. In fact, I doubt she notices because she has 23 other kindergarten children to worry about.
...
If it's making me too stressed out, the solution isn't to dump more stress on my husband (who probably puts in 50-60 hours of paid work per week). It's for me to realize that keeping score and trying to categorize tasks is adding to the stress instead of alleviating it.

I think commentary like Senior's can contribute to what may be a false perception of unfairness on the part of some women. Worse, they could conclude that the answer is to make things more unfair for men. Everyone is working. Let's just be nice to each other.'

Norway: Push to change circumcision laws

Mastodon · 8 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Centre Party (Senterpartiet, Sp) politician Jenny Klinge wants to ban circumcision in Norway, or bring the penalty for a boy's circumcision-related death in line with laws governing female genital mutilation. Health minister Bent Høie criticized Klinge for comparing the two practices on Wednesday, and said while laws are being developed to regulate male circumcision it won't be outlawed.

"It can not be such that when a boy dies, then it's not punished at all, while if a girl dies it's punishable by up to 10 years," said Klinge, reported Norwegian Broadcasting (NRK). She wants the act of removing part of the male foreskin banned in Norway, like female circumcision is.

"But if the government doesn't have enough guts to forbid that, and would rather regulate the practice, then they must go into the legislation and criminal law to find out how they can give the same legal protection to boys in the event of injury or death," said Klinge. She was also concerned male circumcision is still lawful even when practiced outside the health system.

...

When the former government first released proposals for regulation in 2011, several heavyweight medical bodies including the medical, nursing and children's associations, human ethics groups, men's resource centres and the Oslo University medical faculty supported banning male circumcision.'

Wikipedia on Jenny Klinge here.

D.R. Congo film and publication board rules that website has right to publish circumcision photos

Mastodon · 8 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The FPB ruled that the website, ulwaluko.co.za, run by Dutch doctor, Dingeman Rijken was a "bona fide scientific publication with great educative value," the City Press newspaper said.

The FPB stipulated that the website -- which shows photographs of the penises of initiates who are suffering from deformities, wounds, infections and amputations after undergoing botched traditional circumcisions -- must place an age restriction warning that its contents are only suitable for those over the age of 13.

The Community Development Foundation of SA initially lodged the complaint, suggesting the images were pornographic and that they broke doctor and patient confidentiality.

However, Rijken said he had obtained informed consent for each photograph.'

No exceptions in German proposal for boards' gender quotas, says minister

Mastodon · 8 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'German listed companies will be granted no exceptions to a 30 per cent women's quota for supervisory boards by 2016, said Manuela Schwesig, the minister responsible for drafting the legislation.

Schwesig, 39, a Social Democrat and the youngest member of Chancellor Angela Merkel's third-term cabinet, dismissed industry pleas for exemptions in fields that are a traditional preserve of men, such as metalworking or engineering.

"It's an argument often advanced that certain sectors don't have enough women available to fill the supervisory-board posts," Schwesig said last week. "I don't buy it."'

Babies Born, Raised Behind Bars May Keep Mothers From Returning to Prison

Mastodon · 8 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After serving nine months in prison for stealing, Jacqueline McDougall's future was on the line. A parole board would decide whether she would be locked up for an additional three years.

But her fate was not the only one hanging in the balance. If denied parole, McDougall's young son Max, who grew up behind bars with her, would be sent home if he became too old.

"Nightline" spent a year following McDougall and Max at Bedford Hills Correctional Facility for Women in Bedford Hills, N.Y. They are part of the small, but growing number of inmates raising their babies behind bars.

The vast majority of the 2000 or so inmates who give birth in American prisons are separated from their babies shortly after birth. Bedford is one of the handful of women's prisons that allow some incarcerated moms to keep their newborns with them, in some cases until the babies are 18 months old.'

‘Believe The Victim’? Maybe — But Protect The Rights Of The Accused, Too

Mastodon · 9 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“Nearly one in five women have been raped in her lifetime,” according to the White House Council on Women and Girls. Is that a fact? Or is it allegation or an estimate based on self-reporting surveys?

Interestingly, the White House asserts that the same number of women, one in five, “has been sexually assaulted while in college.” Is that a fact? Not exactly: It’s a statistic derived from “a web-based survey of undergraduates,” which means that one in five women has reported suffering a sexual assault. Maybe their reports are absolutely, unassailably accurate. Maybe not.

I wouldn’t be surprised to learn that one in five women has been sexually assaulted on campus or “in her lifetime,” and I shouldn’t be surprised that the administration, with its dismal record on civil liberty, is oblivious to the difference between allegations, estimates and facts. Still it’s a little shocking to read a White House report that effectively assumes all accusations or reports of rape are true, and all of the accused are guilty.

These assumptions are implicit in the language of the report: “Despite the prevalence of rape and sexual assault,” (“apparent prevalence,” I’d have written) “many offenders are neither arrested nor prosecuted.” Then how can we be sure they were offenders? All we can say with certainty is “many alleged offenders are neither arrested nor prosecuted.” In fact, since only 36 percent of sexual assaults are reported to the police (according to a National Crime Victimization Survey) and since reporting rates on campus are described as “very low,” we can’t even talk about “alleged offenders,” while so many remain unidentified.
...
Considering its record, the administration seems unlikely to consider this essential perspective on justice in devising its promised recommendations on sexual violence on college campuses. The White House has reached out to anti-violence activists, who are understandably pleased with the latest initiative: Michelle Obama’s chief of staff and executive director of the White House Council on Women and Girls reportedly called a student activist when the council’s report was released to congratulate and thank her for her work. Civil libertarians concerned with the rights of the accused don’t need to be stroked (and shouldn’t wait by the phone), but they do need to be consulted and had better demand to be heard. Justice isn’t a zero sum game.'

SAVE: Innocence Summit 2014

Matt · 9 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

We hope to see you at our June conference.

We're sure you'll enjoy keynote speakers Jim and Nancy Petro. Jim, former attorney general of Ohio and Nancy are authors of False Justice: Eight Myths that Convict the Innocent.

Back by popular demand, Gordon Smith. You can expect a riveting presentation by Gordon, who was falsely accused, wrongfully arrested, and recently exonerated.

We also have U.S. Senate candidate Erick Bennett. Erick, victim of a falsely allegation, founded the Maine Equal Rights Center to raise awareness on the loss of our Constitutional rights and liberties,

More speakers: http://www.prosecutorintegrity.org/schedule/

Register today for early bird pricing.

See you in June!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

One family's Brit Shalom

Matt · 9 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Just as I was feeling defeated, I found a website that lists over 100 rabbis and celebrants who perform brit shalom, an alternative to brit milah. (Brit shalom contains the symbolic elements of the covenant ceremony, but without circumcision.) At the time, there was only one rabbi listed for all of British Columbia… but he just so happened to be in my city, Vancouver! I later discovered his name had been added about three weeks before I'd found it. I believe this was the universe rewarding us for following our hearts.

I connected with Rabbi David Mivasair in such a deep, meaningful way. I grew up going to Jewish school, attending synagogue--and yet I had never met a rabbi whose words inspired me the way his did. If I wasn't convinced before that we had made the right decision, I was now.

After meeting with the rabbi three or four times, it came time for the ceremony. On the eighth day of my son Kai's life, we had a ceremony across the street from our house, right by the Pacific ocean. We had our good friend playing guitar while we all sang in Hebrew. Rabbi Mivasair explained to everyone the meaning behind what we were doing in an eloquent and meaningful way.'

NPO: Ohio House Moves to Limit Birth-Parents' Rights

Matt · 9 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By a 77-14 vote, the Ohio House passed a bill (HB 307) designed to ease adoptions in Ohio. Unfortunately, HB 307 not only doesn't adequately protect the rights of birth parents, it significantly curtails the rights that birth parents currently have in Ohio.

Children deserve loving parents and adoption is often the best option. But children deserve first to be raised by their biological parents if those parents are fit and willing. Streamlining the process for adopting newborns is not necessary to ensure that all newborns who are put up for adoption find good homes. There is already more demand than supply for healthy newborn adoptees. And streamlining the adoption process in ways that curtail the rights of biological parents to raise their children is wrong. HB 307 is a flawed bill.

There are a number of changes that HB 307 will make if it were passed by the Ohio Senate and signed by the Governor in its present form.'

Update on the Jewish Intactivist Movement in Israel

Matt · 9 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kahal, a community group for Israeli parents with intact sons is active and counts thousands of Israeli Jews among it's members.

Intactivism—the movement to end circumcision—continues to win social acceptance worldwide, including in the Jewish state of Israel. Jews in the holy land are increasingly open to questioning circumcision, much more so than in the United States. In recent years, Jewish Intactivists have published articles and essays in some of Israel's largest papers including Haaretz (Israel's largest and most influential daily paper), 927mag, and the Jerusalem Post. A variety of active Intactivist groups such as Gonnen (Protect the Child), The Israeli Organization Against Genital Mutilation/Intact Son, and Kahal (a community group for parents of intact sons) have sprung up. The leaders of Kahal say that thousands of Israeli Jews are choosing to keep their sons intact.

We are Jews who are proud of our heritage and religion, and who see a need to make adjustments to protect the well-being of babies. Judaism is a religion of constant evolution and ethical advancement. Early in Judaism animal sacrifice was abandoned, and Rabbis chose to abolish capital punishment. Many Jews and Israelis recognize that it is time that circumcision shift into a symbolic ritual such as the well-popularized Brit Shalom. Over 100 Rabbis are willing to do a Bris ceremony without circumcision, and this includes some Rabbis in Israel.'

Filmmaker premieres work about violence of fatherless sons

Mastodon · 10 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kenneth Braswell shot his documentary, "Spit'in Anger," an examination of the violence spawned by fatherless sons, with inexpensive equipment and a shoestring budget.

He buttonholed experts on adolescent anger during breaks at conferences he attended around the country. He poured his own painful life experiences into the project.
...
Braswell will premiere the one-hour independent film Thursday at Spectrum 8 Theatres, followed by a question-and-answer period. He hopes to generate a constructive conversation about a contentious topic in the African-American community: that absent fathers are exacting a terrible toll on black youngsters, whose deep sorrow causes them to act out in destructive ways.

"I'm not being critical of black men as much as urging accountability and trying to get them to recognize a problem, to step up and to tell their story as a way of being able to release the pain and begin to forgive and to heal," he said.

There is a confessional tone to the film, in addition to the testimony of experts. Braswell said he has learned from the anger he felt over the abandonment of his own father. He was raised in Brooklyn by a single mother and managed to break the cycle by acknowledging and repairing his own lack of involvement with his daughter after a split with her mother.'

Hey! Fathers are nurturing parents, too

Mastodon · 10 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Maybe I'm misremembering, but I don't think so. I still recall the spew of misandry and the cold, machine-like chewing out I received from family court judges who had little if any use for divorced dads. Mine was a mild dressing-down by comparison. As a trustee for my children's estate I was only reprimanded with a black glare and a coarse word or two for not filling out my guardianship papers properly, or for daring to (gasp!) question a judge's faultless insight.
This went on for 10 years, my annual accounting sandwiched between heated child custodial battles and sad fathers pleading for time with their children. There was always a sense of utter powerlessness in the courtroom, a creepy sense of resigned doom that came from the judge's sharp-edged, vitriolic comments. Like the other men, I was just another untrustworthy dad who needed to be taken down a few notches.

I always left the courthouse feeling torn apart, as though I had just tussled with a school of sharks.

Here's the problem: There is a distinct pro-mother bias in our family law system. Fathers have little if any rights. They are blindsided by the courts on a daily basis. It's a cruel and painful cycle that deters many good would-be fathers from ever trying.

It's 2014 and men are still considered to be unqualified and unfit to care for their children. They are the acceptable casualties of divorce, the collateral damage. It's falsely believed that when a man loses a child, his life doesn't change at all. Not one bit. Dads are discriminated against in custody decisions across the nation. It even carries over into their jobs. Corporate America frowns upon fathers taking paternity leave./

Guidelines urge women to monitor stroke risks more closely than men

Mastodon · 10 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women of all ages should pay more attention to the risk of stroke than the average man, watching their blood pressure carefully before they think about taking birth-control pills or getting pregnant, according to a new set of prevention guidelines released Thursday.

Women are also more likely to have risk factors associated with stroke, such as migraines, depression, diabetes and the abnormal heart rhythm known as atrial fibrillation.

The guidelines from the American Heart Association and American Stroke Association were the first such recommendations aimed at preventing strokes in women. Stroke is the fourth-leading cause of death for all Americans and a leading cause of disability. It’s the third-leading cause of death for women, after heart disease and cancer.'

Australia: Security guard smashes car window to free baby

Minuteman · 10 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A shopping centre security guard has been hailed as a 'hero' after smashing the window of a car to rescue a baby locked inside during scorching heat.
...
Onlookers called police who arrived and spoke with a woman who claimed full responsibility for locking the baby in the car.

Police said the woman had taken the baby out because the boy's mother was at home ill.

The boy was taken to Lyell McEwin Hospital for a check-up but was unharmed.

No charges have been laid against the woman.'

Female Marine: Military Sex Assault Issue 'Exaggerated'

Mastodon · 10 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marine Corps Officer Captain Lindsay Rodman is a lawyer for the Pentagon and questions their "2012 Annual Report on Sexual Assault in the Media" survey saying it is replete with "bad math," according to a Navy Times story.

Capt. Rodman, a Harvard-educated lawyer, penned an op-ed for The Wall Street Journal in 2013 questioning the Pentagon's survey. In her piece, Capt. Rodman said she received an email request to take the online survey, as did most of the other females in her office, but curiously, none of the males did. She said the exact number of male and female respondents to the survey can't be known, but what is known is that only one out of five responded at all.

Even though the Pentagon's official report has the term "sexual assault" in its title, Capt. Rodman said the survey used the wording "unwanted sexual contact" -- which could include touching or attempted touching. She admits that either is wrong, but as a lawyer, she says those things would not fall under the Uniform Code of Military Justice's definition of sexual assault.'

Proposed California legislation details new campus sexual assault standards

Mastodon · 10 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Highlighting the need for a culture change, Sen. Kevin de León and Legislative Women's Caucus chairwoman and vice chairwoman, Assemblywoman Bonnie Lowenthal and Sen. Hannah-Beth Jackson, announced Senate Bill 967, which will require California colleges and universities to address campus sexual violence by requiring them to adopt consistent victim-centered sexual assault response policies and protocols that follow best practices and professional standards.

Sarah Yang, co-founder and president of the Women's Health Initiative at UC Davis, said: "In some cases, students do not even know what campus resources exist or where to turn for help. Student activists, like me, can help change the culture on campus, but the schools, themselves, must support student survivors."
...
SB 967 Legislative Proposal

» Require California colleges and universities, as part of their policy regarding campus sexual violence, domestic violence, dating violence and stalking, to include all of the following:

— An affirmative consent standard in the determination of whether consent was given by a complainant.
— Prohibition on an accused perpetrator using self-intoxication or recklessness as a defense. It would also not be a defense if the accused failed to take reasonable steps to ascertain consent.
— An explicit provision that an individual is unable to give consent for sexual activity if the individual is asleep or unconscious; incapacitated due to drugs and/or alcohol; or unable to communicate due to a mental and/or physical condition.
— A preponderance of the evidence standard in the determination of disciplinary action.'

UK: Woman who made false rape allegation is fined £90 (US$147)

Mastodon · 10 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who cried rape has been handed a fixed penalty notice for wasting police time.

She had claimed two men had grabbed her and dragged into a house in Moss Side in broad daylight before being sexually attacked.

It prompted a huge police investigation and patrols were increased in the area.

But police have now confirmed the incident she described at a house on Adscombe Street on May 14 last year never happened.

The three men who were arrested on suspicion of rape have now been released without charge.

And the woman who had made the allegation has been handed a fixed penalty notice for wasting police time.'

Opinion: Combat integration: Not bad, not good enough

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The physical standards portion of the Army's approach is just one part of the deliberate effort to expand women's participation in the Army. The second component of the Army's process is a gender integration study of "institutional and cultural factors" and seems to be composed of a series of surveys being administered to service members. This is where the Army's approach becomes even less clear. In October, all infantrymen were asked to complete an online survey regarding their "thoughts" on the possibility of opening the infantry to women. The survey asked infantrymen to agree or disagree with such statements as:

- Female soldiers expect special consideration for "female problems."
- Fraternization is unavoidable when a unit includes both male and female soldiers.
- My unit's ability to coordinate effectively to accomplish our goals will decrease with the integration of female infantry soldiers.
- I believe that some female soldiers in my unit have or would use pregnancy to avoid deploying.
- In your opinion, will most female soldiers be able to perform the following tasks associated with the 11B MOS? (while wearing a minimum of 75 pounds of uniform and individual equipment) Engage targets with a .50-caliber M2 machine gun. Lift 153 pounds and carry 10 meters.'

Women pay a steep price for their more flexible work schedules

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One big reason women make less than men is because they tend to demand more flexible schedules. And new economic research shows that if more workplaces adopted a more team-oriented, job-sharing approach—like physicians in a group practice—the cost of flexible work would dissipate and the premium for long hours would too.

"That's how physicians have been able to not be 24/7, not be on call all the time, to have lives of their own," says Claudia Goldin, a Harvard professor of economics. Her new paper, A Grand Gender Convergence: Its Last Chapter (pdf), is to be published soon in the American Economic Review, and explores the reasons behind pay differential between genders even as women have caught up with men in education, experience, and other measures.
...
She asks: Why should someone who works 80 hours a week be worth more than two people who work 40 hours a week?

"It isn't quote a women's issue," says Goldin in an interview with Quartz. The pay disparity shows up equally when male MBAs need reduced schedules or time off for personal or family needs.'

Why women can’t sleep peacefully

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'London - It seems the stresses and strains of the day do not end upon going to bed – if you’re female, that is.

A study has revealed that while women spend longer under the covers than men, they actually get less sleep.

And researchers suggest that the problems of juggling work and family life may by why they are left tossing and turning.

...

Dr Neil Stanley, a sleep expert, said women may be more willing than men to sacrifice sleep for their other half.

“There’s the idea that the man is the breadwinner, he’s the one who fought woolly mammoths and all that sort of thing, and therefore his sleep needs to be preserved and a woman will forgo sleep for him.

“A woman will let a man snore away noisily, whereas a man will instantly wake a woman if she dares to make any noise.

“Women are also more prone to worry about all kinds of things – from whether they’ve got the kids’ clothes ready, to ‘will he still love me tomorrow’.”'

Chairwoman of UK's biggest developer advocates mothers should have 6 year break

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The only FTSE 100 woman chairman has urged employers to allow women to take up to six years off to focus on raising their families. She says retaining the best staff is cheaper than training new recruits.

“Employers have to learn to accommodate you through the mid-life piece,” Dame Alison Carnwath, the chairwoman of the Land Securities property group said in an interview with the Financial Times.

“If you want to spend, say, six years having children and getting them off to school before you come back and do full-time work, [companies] have to look upon it as not wanting to lose somebody.”'

Sexual harassment: Punjab edu min bars male teachers in girls' school

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chandigarh, Feb 6: Its strange, but true. The Punjab government has ordered that no male teachers would will teach in government girls' school. In fact, all of them have been shifted to different other schools in the district, much to the anger of the teachers' union.

After this move, Punjab would be the first in India to have no male teachers in girls' school.
...
Students and teachers both condemn the move saying that the state government is humiliating the male teachers with the order, implying that all men are rapists.

One of the members said "why should all men be generalized as perverts. These children are like our own kids. This decision of the government of shifting male staff is not a practical solution to solve the problem. If any school has faced such problem then the guilty should be punished or he should be shifted".'

High school teacher admits to classroom sex with two students

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Another American teacher-student sex romp is making worldwide headlines.

This time, the educator is Meredith Powell, a 24-year-old math teacher at Lincoln High School in Tacoma, Wash.

Powell stands accused of engaging in oral sex and other sexual acts behind the locked door of her classroom with two different male students, reports local CBS affiliate KIRO-TV.

The students were either 15 or 16 year of age.

Police say she also sent at least one racy Snapchat photo of herself lounging in the bathtub to a third underage male student.'

French far-right group rallies against FEMEN

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Hundreds of demonstrators organized by a far-right group protested in Paris on Saturday demanding the dissolution of FEMEN. They called for the feminist organization, which is headquartered in the French capital, to "go back to Ukraine."

The General Alliance Against Racism and for the Respect of French and Christian Identity (AGRIF) says FEMEN provokes the Christian community in France, Ruptly news agency reported.
...
In December, FEMEN staged an action at Madeleine Church in Paris, holding pieces of meat in each hand, representing the fetus of Jesus.

The controversial feminist organization says it is "fighting patriarchy in its three manifestations - sexual exploitation of women, dictatorship and religion." It is mostly known for staging topless protests as well as other provocative moves like burning Islamist flags.'

Topless Femen member allegedly tosses Molotov cocktail at Russian embassy in Berlin

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Warning: NSFW due to nudity in video. Excerpt:

'Russian president Vladimir Putin has long been a target of Femen, the militant feminist group whose members remove their tops to protest against patriarchy and organized religion, and for LGBT rights.

Three members doffed their shirts in front of the Russian embassy in Berlin to reveal the slogan "Gulag Games" on their backs.

One of them left a lit torch on the sidewalk and threw a bottle at it.

She has been arrested, allegedly for "throwing a Molotov cocktail at the Russian embassy".'

Please lodge anti-circumcision comments with the CDC (Re: Surgical Site Infections) - Deadline 28 February 2014

Minuteman · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) is accepting public comments on the Draft Guideline for the Prevention of Surgical Site Infections until 28 February 2014, presenting an opportunity for opponents of circumcision in the U.S. to archive practical arguments against continuation of the practice in the Federal Register.

The online comment box is limited to 5000 characters, but you can upload larger documents.

Doctors Opposing Circumcision (DOC) produced an excellent document about the risk to newly circumcised boys from Methicillin-Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus, here (scroll down to 'Statements'), which unfortunately hasn't been updated since 2008, but is still better than nothing.

We have some threads over at F-R.net tagged MRSA and hospital infections, which might be good starting point for readers interested in updating the DOC statement, or researching and drafting their own submission from scratch.

Meretricious Meets Meddlesome

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Typical of all such churnings of the advocacy-government complex, the school-discipline and sexual-assault initiatives are drearily familiar, representing longstanding bureaucratic obsessions. But Obama's announcement of his overstuffed sexual-assault task force for once did contain something new and noteworthy: a brief invocation of the chivalric ideal. Before examining that break from tradition, it's worth reviewing the boilerplate that preceded it.

The materials accompanying the new sexual-assault task force recycle the usual feminist claims about campus rape: an "estimated 1 in 5 women is sexually assaulted at college," proclaims a White House press release. Such an assault rate would represent a crime wave unprecedented in civilized history. By comparison, the 2012 rape rate in New Orleans and its immediately surrounding parishes was .0234 percent; the rate for all violent crimes in New Orleans in 2012 was .48 percent. According to the White House Council on Women and Girls, "survivors" of this alleged campus sexual-assault epidemic "often" experience a life of depression, chronic pain, diabetes, anxiety, eating disorders, and post-traumatic stress disorder.'

Midshipman's lawyers say academy superintendent was pressured in assault case

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Attorneys for a Naval Academy midshipman accused of sexually assaulting a classmate argued Monday that the academy's superintendent was pressured to prosecute the case — one of several claims the legal team is making in an effort to have the case dismissed.

Midshipman Joshua Tate is awaiting trial on charges of aggravated sexual assault and making false statements, stemming from an alleged assault at an April 2012 off-campus party.

The case has gained national attention, and at a motions hearing in military court at the Washington Navy Yard, Tate's attorneys said academy Superintendent Vice Adm. Michael H. Miller was influenced by military and political pressure when he made the decision to prosecute the midshipman.

Jason Ehrenberg, a civilian attorney for Tate, cited updates Miller sent to his superiors on the case, comments made by President Barack Obama at graduation in 2013 regarding sexual assault in the military, and letters from Sen. Barbara A. Mikulski to top military leaders urging more action on such cases. In one of her letters, Mikulski asked how academy superintendents are hired and fired.
...
"Sure, outside pressure exists in this case … but that goes with the territory," said Lt. Cmdr. Phil Hamon, a Navy attorney. Miller "simply made a tough call, and that is what commanders are paid to do."

In addition to saying Miller was unduly pressured, Tate's team is asking military judge Col. Daniel Daugherty to dismiss the case because, they say, Tate was selectively prosecuted while others who drank or lied about the party had lesser punishments. They also contend that there's insufficient evidence and a lack of specificity in the charges.'

In our opinion: Saving American men

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What is happening to young men?

The question may take you by surprise. Indeed, few things have been as under-reported as the way a rising generation of American men is failing in every important measurement, from obtaining a higher education to establishing a foothold in the labor market and taking responsibility for the children they father.

In his recent State of the Union Address, President Barack Obama spent a bit of time decrying a well-worn statistic that reportedly shows women in America earning 77 cents for every dollar earned by a man. This, he said, “is an embarrassment.”

But while it is true that women ought to be paid equally for the same work as men, the real embarrassment may be that the 77-cent figure is misleading.

If you account for differences in education levels and the choices people make to pursue lower-paying professions, the wage gap closes to about 91 cents on the dollar. But if you look closer, the gap may not only disappear, it may exist in the other direction. A number of factors indicate trends will put males, not females, in danger in the workforce of the future.'

Girls' High is a living monument to gender discrimination

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Philadelphia High School for Girls -- with its 1,100-plus spaces reserved for academically talented young women -- stands as a living monument to institutional sex discrimination. While former Superintendent Arlene Ackerman repeatedly professed her commitment to "ending inequity" in Philadelphia's public schools, she, incongruously, turned a blind eye to the manifest inequity of the District's operating a special admission, academically superior high school for girls without an equivalent school for boys. In its continued operation of Girls' High, the District is promoting a gender-based double standard of educational opportunity.

Moreover, in denying male students equal educational opportunity, the District egregiously violates federal and state anti-discrimination laws. These include Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, the Equal Protection Clause of the federal constitution and, more significantly, the Pennsylvania Equal Rights Amendment, which has been the law of the Commonwealth for more than four decades. That amendment provides that "equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania because of the sex of the individual." As has been observed by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania:
...
That no other school district in Pennsylvania has a special all-boys or all-girls high school like Philadelphia High School for Girls, without a corresponding, equivalent school for students of the other sex is not surprising. Such asymmetry in educational opportunity is clearly unlawful. As indicated above, the Equal Rights Amendment of the Pennsylvania Constitution flatly prohibits discrimination "because of the sex of the individual" and will not countenance special benefits being conferred by a school district, or by any other governmental entity, based on gender.'

Students collect signatures to save BU Wrestling

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Members of the Boston University community collected over 1,000 signatures for a petition to defend BU's wrestling program in a Save BU Wrestling cross-campus campaign Friday.

Since BU Athletics officials announced that the wrestling program would be cut after its 2013-14 season, BU students, alumni and supporters of the program across the country have banded together to protest the decision. The "Save BU Wrestling" Facebook page now has over 7,000 members.

"[The decision] has had a devastating impact on our current students, their families, but also 50 years of [wrestling program] alumni. It's been extremely difficult to deal with," said BU coach Carl Adams. "If you pick one program out of 24 and you single that one program out [to be cut], you need to have a really, really good reason."
...
"They [the administration] say that wrestling does not fit the strategic direction for the future of the athletic department at BU," said wrestling team member Brad Lewis, a College of Arts and Sciences senior. "That's a very political kind of response that they're giving because it doesn't actually say anything or give anyone any real reasons."

Alumni have been investigating the decision since April and believe that the program is being cut to meet Title IX requirements, Lewis said.'

Utah's first shelter for male domestic violence victims under way

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A male client of Your Community Connection recalls realizing his marriage was over.

That decision came after he was beaten with a pipe in front of his young son.

The middle-aged man said the most difficult part was turning to police and then to YCC for help because he was embarrassed for many reasons, including that he had allowed the situation to escalate.

Last week, YCC announced it is nearly two-thirds of the way to its goal of raising $1.5 million to add a separate wing, creating the state's first designated space as a domestic violence shelter for men.

"It is important that we get the message out that NO ONE should be abused," said Julee Smith, executive director of YCC. "I think those men that have asked for help are courageous. They know that something is wrong and needs to change."'

Arizona lawmaker seeks state law against FGM, dismisses MGM as a "cleanliness" issue

Minuteman · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Calling the practice a “war on women,” a female legislator wants to make what’s been called “female circumcision” a state crime.

...

Her legislation would make a felon [sic] of anyone who not only performs the procedure on a girl younger than 18 but also anyone who tries to take a girl out of Arizona to have that done. SB 1342 would carry a presumptive prison term of seven years for a first offense and nearly 16 years for someone with two or more prior felony convictions.

And the measure, set for debate today before the Senate Judiciary Committee, includes a mandatory fine of at least $25,000.

...

Burges said any comparison of the practice with more routine male circumcision, a practice mandated under Jewish law, is invalid.

“That usually is for cleanliness issues,” she said. “This is not.”

A 1996 federal law already makes the practice illegal when performed in the United States. But it took until last year for Congress to include a provision in the National Defense Authorization Act to make it a crime to take a girl to another country to have the procedure done.

Nearly two dozen other states already have such laws.'

The Feminist Has Two Faces

Matt · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Given that zero allegations have been brought against Justice Thomas in his 23-year tenure on the Supreme Court and positive endorsements from his female staff, including Laura Ingraham, I think the Senate deeming Hill's testimony "inconclusive" was the appropriate decision. The released phone records indicating Anita Hill had, in fact, called Thomas several times after departing the EEOC raises the biggest doubt for her side of the story.

On March 14 of this year, nearly 23-years after the hearings, and 33-years after the alleged offense, the Tinseltown feminist elite will release a new documentary called Anita that will undoubtedly present Anita Hill as an unrequited saint, sacrificed before an altar of male dominance. The film's trailer and poster accompanied by the tagline "Speaking Truth to Power" confirms that speculation. ...
...
By attempting to downplay the film's obvious mission of discrediting the only black conservative Justice to ever serve on the Supreme Court, the feminist left has billed this "documentary" as an exposé on the hardships women face when bringing sexual harassment charges to light, as stated by Eboni Williams on Fox's Megyn Kelly last Thursday.

There is cause for skepticism. After all, these are the same women who howl at the moon over invisible "glass ceilings" of male hegemony and then proceed to railroad Sarah Palin and Michelle Bachmann in their run for higher office. Anita stems from their two-faced modus operandi - seeking to consolidate power for the feminist elite by libeling their (right-wing) male counterparts as "sexist" for defending and applauding men like Clarence Thomas. "Raise awareness for sexual harassment" usually means "raise awareness for sexual harassment by conservatives."
...
The feminist Tinseltown elite will never commit such boorish treatment of women to celluloid. Just as long as the above men in question willingly inculcate the masses into voting on such meaningless, empty-headed slogans like "equal pay for equal work," "78 cents for every dollar," and "reproductive rights." This, of course, being the same feminist elite who felt not the slightest queasiness giving Oscar accolades to known sexual predators Roman Polanski and Woody Allen.

The feminists' about-face portrayal as moral crusaders against patriarchal oppression while caring nothing for a woman's sanctity and much for cementing totalitarian rule reminds me of an illustration by C. Allan Gilbert called All is Vanity, in which, the viewer's eyes immediately discern a drawing of a beautiful young woman admiring herself in the mirror before the viewer realizes the artist's visual trickery at work as the woman fades into the haunting, ghostly image of a hollowed skull... The face of modern feminism.'

Woman caught by boy's mother in son's bedroom jumps naked from window

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Arizona woman jumped from the second-floor bedroom of a 15-year-old boy after his mother caught her cavorting naked with the teen last month, investigators report.

Keri Gonzalez, 34, broke her ankle when she crashed to the ground outside the residence in Marana, a town 30 miles northwest of Tucson.

...

After gathering her clothes, Gonzalez exited via the window. The boy's mother spotted Gonzalez "limping as she walked down the street away from the home," deputies noted.

After fleeing the home, Gonzalez later returned to report to the boy's mother that she had broken her ankle. The teen's mother recognized Gonzalez as a "family acquaintance" whom she had previously caught "flirting" with her son.

...

During a January 25 police interview, Gonzalez, who had a cast on her ankle, provided a deputy with "information which helped to verify what the mother and victim had said occurred." She was later arrested for sexual misconduct with a minor and providing false information to police, and booked in to the county jail, where the above mug shot was taken.'

Drunkenness and Double Standards

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education notes, at some campuses the accuser's having had one drink is sufficient to establish the defendant's guilt:

Stanford's definition of consent to sex imposes a concept that is foreign to most people's idea of adult consent and inconsistent with California state law. Stanford policy states that sexual assault occurs "when a person is incapable of giving consent. A person is legally incapable of giving consent . . . if intoxicated by drugs and/or alcohol." In other words, any sexual activity while intoxicated to any degree constitutes sexual assault. This is true even if the activity was explicitly agreed to by a person capable of making rational, reasoned decisions, and even if the partners are in an ongoing relationship or marriage.

In theory that means, as FIRE notes, that "if both parties are intoxicated during sex, they are both technically guilty of sexually assaulting each other." In practice it means that women, but not men, are absolved of responsibility by virtue of having consumed alcohol.

That is self-evidently unjust, yet it turns out to be a matter of high principle for many feminists. Last fall Slate's Emily Yoffe, the mother of a college-age daughter, was the target of a Two Minutes Hate for a post titled "College Women: Stop Getting Drunk," even though she offered the same advice to college men: "If I had a son, I would tell him that it's in his self-interest not to be the drunken frat boy who finds himself accused of raping a drunken classmate."'

Wall Street Journal Writer James Taranto's Rape Column Draws Outrage

Mastodon · 11 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Wall Street Journal columnist James Taranto is under fire after his latest piece about rape on college campuses.

In a column on Monday entitled "Drunkenness and Double Standards," Taranto suggested the female college students are as guilty as their aggressors if they are sexually assaulted while intoxicated.

"If two drunk drivers are in a collision, one doesn't determine fault on the basis of demographic details such as each driver's sex," Taranto argued. "But when two drunken college students 'collide,' the male one is almost always presumed to be at fault. His diminished capacity owing to alcohol is not a mitigating factor, but her diminished capacity is an aggravating factor for him."'

‘I Don’t Need Feminism’ Signs

Mastodon · 12 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'We might be unsure if there’s a real war on women occurring today, but there is definitely some fighting over the ill-understood “feminism.”

Although many feminists have come out on the defensive about the inclusivity of the word/movement/whatever you want to call it, other women (let alone men) remain unconvinced.

So much so that young women have recently taken to various social media channels to declare: “I don’t need feminism.” The reasons are numerous, including:

“Because I believe in equality not entitlements and supremacy”

“Because I don’t think being a woman is a disadvantage”

“Because I respect men. I refuse to demonize them and blame them for my problems”

Maybe it’s the feminist in me, but I just don’t see any of these admonitions as something that would or should exclude a female from adopting the feminist title.

Third-wave feminism would likely applaud these individuals’s efforts in establishing their own personal beliefs, outside of any pre-determined system.

So we’ve coming to a point where being anti-feminist is actually feminist? My head hurts.'

Woman Goes On Bloody Rampage After Boyfriend Refuses To Have Sex

Matt · 13 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Arizona woman went on a naked rampage early Monday after her live-in boyfriend refused to have sex with her, police report.

Ashley Marie Prenovost, 24, was already intoxicated when her beau returned to the Glendale residence the couple shares with their four-month-old daughter. Prenovost, according to a court filing, “wanted to have sex with him and got naked.”

When her boyfriend declined to have sex, Prenovost became enraged, according to police. She allegedly punched two holes in a bedroom wall, and “punched a picture hanging on the wall in the hallway, causing glass to break and causing injuries to both of suspect’s hands.”
...
Pictured in the above mug shot, Prenovost was arrested on a variety of charges, including assault, disorderly conduct, and criminal damage. She was also hit with several child abuse counts since, during her tirade, she raced around the home with her baby in her arms. At one point, the child’s head struck a bedroom dresser.

Prenovost was freed from custody yesterday. She is scheduled for a February 24 court appearance.

Why, yes, this has happened before, before, before, before, and before.'

Notice: MANN Site Maintenance This Weekend

Matt · 13 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

The MANN site may be intermittently available over this coming weekend due to platform maintenance. If at some point you see "Site Unavailable" messages or even DNS "Host Not Found"-type errors, don't sweat it. Just a typical day in cyberspace during a significant maintenance job. We should be done by some time on Sunday.

Also, new story submissions will not be posted after 5:00 PM Eastern Time (US) on Friday Feb. 14 (tomorrow). The expected resumption time for new posts is Sun. Feb. 16 at 3:00 PM ET. If anything about this changes, I'll post updates. I'll also post when it's known the site is fully stable.

NPO: Shared Parenting Introduced in South Carolina

Matt · 14 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a bold move, National Parents Organization of South Carolina introduces National Parents Organization shared parenting model legislation. South Carolina is the latest state to join National Parents Organization. It is also the first state to take our recently developed model shared parenting legislation and work with a legislator to introduce some of the language and ideas. While it stops short of a presumption of shared parenting, it does introduce shared parenting to South Carolina family law and provide it as an additional option.

Senator Katrina Frye Shealy (R-23), the only woman in the South Carolina senate, is the lead sponsor for S. 905, Child Custody Orders. She is joined by Senators Ross Turner (R-8), Shane R. Martin (R-13), and Lee Bright (R-12). The bill is now in the Judiciary Committee.

If you are a South Carolina member, now is the time to join our South Carolina Affiliate and Chair Joe Carter. Please contact him to learn how you can educate your legislator about why your children and every child in South Carolina needs shared parenting.'

Student group decides saying "yes" to sex isn't enough

Mastodon · 14 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the hazards of youthful idealism is that one can easily verge over into naive self-righteousness. So I should have been prepared for the latest project of StudentsNS, a collection of Nova Scotia university student associations, around sexual consent.

But this new initiative is so overflowing with gormless self-congratulation that even I was stunned.

Embarrassed by the national attention gained during last year's Saint Mary's frosh debacle, where students eagerly indulged in a chant making light of sex without consent, advocacy group StudentsNS has determined that its position on consenting to sex will be so clear and unambiguous, they have inadvertently jettisoned all sense of logic. From now on, according to their new site morethanyes.ca it is no longer enough for a sexual partner to agree to sex. Even clear consent is not enough. No, from now on the standard is—I can still scarcely believe it—enthusiasm. In a jaw-dropping graphic on its homepage, the campaign proudly asserts that "Sex without enthusiastic consent is not sex at all. It is sexual assault or rape.'

UK: 'Evil' serial killer sorry she didn't kill more

Minuteman · 15 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A twisted UK serial killer has smiled and laughed in court saying she is "not sorry" for stabbing three men to death.

Joanna Dennehy, who has been dubbed "evil" by the English press, reportedly grinned her way through a pre-sentencing hearing at Cambridge Crown Court on Friday.

The 31-year-old broke into laughter as prosecutors revealed a photo of one of her victims, John Chapman, lying on a bed with five stab wounds, the Mirror reports.

Dennehy has admitted to murdering three men in Petersborough and dumping their bodies in ditches during a 12-day spree last March.'

Suicide on the rise for young U.S veterans

fathers4fairness · 15 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The January 2014 Suicide Data Update has been released by the Department of Veterans Affairs, and the news is not good. Suicides are up in two groups of veterans who utilized the VA health system: young males (ages 18-24) and women. The rate of female veterans' suicides has climbed 31.2 percent for VA users. Does that not pierce your heart?

There are pockets of positive news. Taken in an overall trend, the rate of suicide among male veterans aged 35-64 who utilize VA hospital programs has decreased by 30 percent, and is down 16 percent for all ages. (The overall rate among those who don't use the VA for help has increased by 60 percent.)

One thing is clear based on the figures for all male veterans: Getting help at the VA does work. If you've had thoughts of suicide, call this hotline number 1-800-273-8255 and press 1. Or send a text message to 38255. If you have access to a computer, go to veteranscrisisline.net and you can chat online. ...'

Nine Articles

Mastodon · 15 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

1. UK: Universities struggling to cope with 'lad culture'
2. Exposed: Obama Blocks White House Council on Boys and Men
3. Nicki Minaj apologizes for using Malcolm X, racial slur in cover art
4. The (Silent) War On Men
5. What would life be like if women really did rule the world?
6. NOW Demands Wall Street Journal Fire Columnist James Taranto for Promoting 'Rape Culture'
7. At least 9 penis amputations after traditional circumcision
8. Parents raise their son as a boy AND a girl so he won't 'grow up aggressive'
9. There’s no excuse for anti-feminism

Hillary Clinton Found Murderer of 14-Year-Old Boy Very “Charismatic”

Mastodon · 16 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From the Blair papers: “May 15 – HC enthralled by S. Afr. investiture; discussed characters there like Arafat, Aristide, how charismati Winnie is.”

How charismatic was Winnie Mandela [link added]? Someone ought to ask Stompie Moeketsi.

'Stompie Seipei was killed on Winnie Madikizela-Mandela’s instructions to prevent the Mandela “crisis committee” discovering how badly the Mandela United Football Club had assaulted four youths they had abducted from the Soweto Methodist Manse, the Truth and Reconciliation Commission heard on Wednesday.

Former club “coach” Jerry Richardson testified that Madikizela-Mandela decided to kill Seipei to cover up what had happened.

The Mandela crisis committee, made up of church, community and ANC leaders, was formed to secure the release of four boys, including Seipei, who were abducted from Methodist minister Paul Verryn’s manse in late December 1988.

“I slaughterd him (Seipei) like a goat,” Richardson said, as Seipei’s mother, Joyce, left the hearing hall in tears.

Richardson said he abducted Seipei on Madikizela-Mandela’s instructions after Verryn was falsely accused of sodomising the boys.'

MANN Maintenance Complete

Matt · 16 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

We're done! I'll get to posting new submissions shortly. Thanks for your patience.

Petition: Support Mother Who Resists Court Order to Circumcise Son

Matt · 17 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Text:

'The Jewish Circumcision Resource Center represents Jews around the world who question circumcision and choose not to circumcise their sons.

An Israeli religious court has fined a woman for refusing to circumcise her infant son. The matter is part of an ongoing divorce case. In Israel, religious courts have authority over various family matters like marriage, divorce, and child welfare. Circumcision is viewed as a requirement among religious Jews. Israel has struggled for generations to reconcile its religious and secular traditions.

The woman has said that she does not wish to harm her son. Circumcision has been shown to result in physical, sexual, and psychological harm.

As the caretaker and mother, she has the right to forgo circumcision like thousands of other Israeli parents. No civil law requires circumcision in Israel. When parents disagree, as in this instance, the default position is to let the child decide about circumcision when he is older.

The Jewish Circumcision Resource Center represents Jews around the world who question circumcision and choose not to circumcise their sons.

An Israeli religious court has fined a woman for refusing to circumcise her infant son. The matter is part of an ongoing divorce case. In Israel, religious courts have authority over various family matters like marriage, divorce, and child welfare. Circumcision is viewed as a requirement among religious Jews. Israel has struggled for generations to reconcile its religious and secular traditions.

The woman has said that she does not wish to harm her son. Circumcision has been shown to result in physical, sexual, and psychological harm.

As the caretaker and mother, she has the right to forgo circumcision like thousands of other Israeli parents. No civil law requires circumcision in Israel. When parents disagree, as in this instance, the default position is to let the child decide about circumcision when he is older.

She appealed the case to the Israeli Supreme Court, a civil court, which issued a temporary injunction (restraining order), freezing the rabbinical court's decree. The father's response was due in the Supreme Court on January 2, 2014.

We urge you to sign this petition to ask the Israeli Supreme Court to issue its final ruling in favor of this mother's right to protect her son.

For more information about circumcision, see Jewish Circumcision Resource Center and Circumcision Resource Center.'

JWeekly: Choosing not to circumcise — last frontier of Jewish inclusion?

Matt · 17 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How can synagogues make their members — and prospective members — feel more welcome?

Some synagogues send a message of inclusion, stating on their websites that they welcome gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgender Jews, Jews of color, disabled Jews and interfaith families. But there's one Jewish minority that's rarely, if ever, mentioned: the growing number of Jewish parents who choose not to circumcise their newborn sons.

Although circumcision is but one ritual choice, it would be easy for a family to get the idea that congregational Judaism expects — or demands — circumcision. Even the most liberal synagogues don't say on their websites that keeping one's baby boy intact (not circumcised) is a valid option.
...
Reiss is the originator of Brit Shalom Celebrants, a Web page that lists more than 150 rabbis, cantors and lay leaders who openly perform brit shalom ceremonies (http://www.tinyurl.com/britshalom). The officiants operate on a fee-for-service basis.

Not all rabbis who do brit shalom ceremonies want to be openly associated with it. Although the page makes it clear that many of the listed officiants also do traditional circumcisions, the page is perceived by some as an "anti-circumcision" list.

If noncircumcising families are welcome in Jewish congregational life — indeed, if rabbis are already performing alternative ceremonies when asked — why not let parents know this? I invite congregations everywhere to adopt the win-win policy of openly welcoming brit shalom families.'

Police charge Calgary teacher with sexual assault

Matt · 17 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'CALGARY – A teacher with the Calgary Catholic School District is facing a number of serious charges related to the alleged sexual assault of a 16-year-old boy.

The 30-year-old woman is accused of carrying on a sexual relationship with the boy, who is a former student at the school where she teaches.

Police say a member of the public alerted officers after he spotted what he believed to be 'suspicious activity' in a vehicle in northwest Calgary.

...

Jennifer Mason is charged with sexual assault, invitation to sexual touching, sexual exploitation and sexual interference.

To protect the identity of the victim, details about the school have not been released, but police say parents have been notified.'

Accused Craigslist Killer Admits To Slaying 22 People As Part Of Satanic Cult

Matt · 17 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Pennsylvania woman charged along with her newlywed husband in the murder of a man they met through Craigslist admitted to the slaying in a jailhouse interview with a newspaper and said she has killed more than 20 others across the country, claims police said they are investigating.

In an interview with the Daily Item in Sunbury, Pa., 19-year-old Miranda Barbour said she wants to plead guilty to killing Troy LeFerrara in November. She also said in the interview that she has killed at least 22 other people from Alaska to North Carolina in the last six years as part of her involvement in a satanic cult."I feel it is time to get all of this out. I don't care if people believe me. I just want to get it out," Barbour told the newspaper for a story published Saturday night (http://bit.ly/1gN81z3).
...
She said in the interview that she doesn't want to get out of jail and that she would kill again if she were released.

Miranda Barbour offered little detail on the murders she claimed to have participated in in Alaska, Texas, North Carolina and California. She claims she joined a satanic cult in Alaska when she was 13 before moving to North Carolina. Online records for the woman that the newspaper identified as Barbour's mother show her as having lived in both Alaska and North Carolina.'

False allegations of rape and the law

Mastodon · 17 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Letters here. Excerpt:

'I strongly disagree with the suggestion that William Roache and Dave Lee Travis have been properly brought to trial (Comment, 14 February). Keir Starmer is betraying whatever legal education he received by his partisan views. Limitation periods under the law of England and Wales are laid out by the Limitation Act 1980, and are the periods of time during which an individual can bring a private (civil) claim, or else lose the right to bring it. The reasoning behind this, which has its origins in Roman law, is that firstly someone with a good cause of action should pursue it with reasonable diligence; secondly that a defendant might have lost evidence to disprove a stale claim; and thirdly that long-dormant claims have more "cruelty than justice" in them (Halsbury's Laws of England, 4th edition). So English law says that it is contrary to "public policy" for people to be perpetually exposed to litigation for allegedly wrongful acts. As time passes, witnesses' memories may fade, or become distorted, and documentary evidence available to do justice to the case is less likely to be available, or in certain cases even exist. It is recognised this may prevent justice being done, and for a great many years it has been accepted that it is in the public interest that claims become barred by statute after a certain period of time has elapsed – usually six years.
...
• Keir Starmer's response to the acquittal of Dave Lee Travis is simply inadequate. False allegations of sexual offences cause both the innocent victim and their family untold and lasting hurt, emotional, financial and physical. Worse, every false allegation contributes to discrediting women who have suffered real attacks. The police and the Crown Prosecution Service must reconsider their actions in the interests of all women who have been assaulted, subjects of false allegations and all their families.'

Florida woman faked rape after skipping work: authorities

Mastodon · 17 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

A Florida woman wasn't raped after all — she just didn't want to get in trouble for missing work, authorities said.

Alexandra Westover, 21, of Boca Raton, had reported a frightening, broad-daylight attack to the Palm Beach Sheriff's Office.

The tale, which authorities now say is fake, was full of details.

She told detectives she had a flat tire about 9 a.m. on Tuesday and pulled over in the side of the Florida Turnpike.
...
Crime fighters launched a full-scale search for the phantom rapist, wasting more than 100 man hours before Westover finally admitted the hoax, according to a sheriff's office statement.
...
A deputy followed up and Westover admitted she lied because she didn't want to get in trouble for skipping work at her great-uncle's house, the paper reported.

Westover didn't respond to phone calls from the Daily News.

She was arrested on Thursday on a charge of falsely reporting a crime and a misdemeanor perjury count.

She was released Friday on her own recognizance, according to jail records.

Female high school teacher accused of "having sex" with male student

Minuteman · 18 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Meghan Eagan, a 25-year-old physical education teacher at Crosby High School in Connecticut, was charged with four counts of sexual assault after turning herself into police on Saturday afternoon, reports WFSB News.

She allegedly had sexual contact with the student four times between December and January at her home close to the school.

None of the alleged sexual contact took place on school grounds.

Police would not reveal how old the student is.

Eagan posted US$100,000 ($110,800) bail and is due back in court on February 25.'

UK: Policewomen get £35k over big guns

Minuteman · 18 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Two British policewomen have won sex discrimination payouts after their handguns were deemed to be too big for their hands.

Victoria Wheatley and Rachael Giles had both asked for smaller guns because their department-issued Glock 17s were too big for them to reach the triggers.

The officers, described as "petite" at an employment tribunal, both received a £35,000 ($64,500) payout but it is expected this will be appealed.

They also argued a wooden barricade where officers were expected to rest their guns was built too high for them, and that their heads and legs were too small for their protective gear.
...
Both women worked for the Civil Nuclear Constabulary, which is responsible for protecting atomic power plants across the United Kingdom.'

Watch DOGS (Dads of Great Students): An excellent program promoting father involvement/male rolemodels in school

TCM · 18 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Watch DOGS (Dads of Great Students) is a national program promoting father involvement and positive male role-models in elementary schools. It is sponsored by the National Center for Fathering and has been active since 1999. According to their official website there are over 3,793 active Watch DOGS programs in 46 states as of the date of this posting.

This is an excellent program for those who are interested in getting involved at the local level. If promoting positive role-models and connecting with children is your passion, I encourage you to either join a nearby group, or create one.

Some key resources:

- You may find a nearby group to volunteer at here at Volunteer Spot.
- Official training for the program is available free via conference call here.
- Here is a downloadable handout listing the benefits, goals, nature, and public recognition of the program.
- For more information, email the program at watchdogs@fathers.com. A program director can be contacted at 1-888-540-DOGS (3647).'

Whitehouse.gov: "Progress Made on the Intersection of HIV/AIDS, Violence against Women and Girls, and Gender-Related Health Disparities"

Minuteman · 19 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Today, the Office of the Vice President, the White House Council on Women and Girls, and the White House Office of National AIDS Policy welcomed community leaders and Federal colleagues to celebrate progress to date by the President's Working Group on the Intersection of HIV/AIDS, Violence against Women and Girls, and Gender-Related Health Disparities. It is timely that we gather at the White House during Teen Dating Violence Awareness Month. As the President proclaimed, girls and young women ages 16 to 24 are at the highest risk for dating violence, and this February, "we renew our commitment to preventing abuse, supporting survivors, holding offenders accountable, and building a culture of respect." The recommendations for action in the White House Working Group report, Addressing the Intersection of HIV/AIDS, Violence against Women and Girls, and Gender-Related Health Disparities, build on this commitment.

...

We are working to improve health and wellness for women by screening for both intimate partner violence(IPV) and HIV. Key Federal agencies are working with large clinical providers to inform physicians, nurse practitioners, and community health care providers about screening recommendations for HIV and IPV. Partnering agencies include the HHS Office on Women's Health, the Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA), and the Administration for Children and Families' Family Violence Prevention and Services Program.

...

The workgroup is also addressing certain contributing factors that increase the risk of violence for women and girls living with HIV. The National Resource Center on Domestic Violence, supported by the Family Violence Prevention and Services Program, will host online trainings this Spring for domestic violence service providers. The training will focus on the health implications of sexual decision-making in relation to IPV and HIV/AIDS'

On philosophy and sexual harassment

el cid · 20 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. It concerns a report recently issued by the American Philosophical Association that male professors at the University of Colorado Philosophy Department engaged in widespread sexual harassment. The first story concerns the response by female staff members, who say the report may hurt innocent male graduate students from their department. The second is an opinion piece arguing that the reported facts are too vague to reach any definite conclusions. Both articles touch on a common feminist principle: if one man is guilty, all men are guilty. Excerpt:

'Six women with ties to the department released a joint statement Tuesday that describes the negative impact the report's release has had on male philosophy faculty members and graduate students.

"We are all distressed that the report may damage the reputations of male colleagues who are completely innocent of sexual misconduct," the statement's authors wrote. "It could also harm the prospects of our male graduate students currently on the market."'

An opinion article here. Excerpt:

'It is hard to know just what to make of the contretemps over the University of Colorado Philosophy Department that broke a couple of weeks ago. But from the publicly available information (and I have no other), there should be serious misgivings about the narrative. The determination of what occurred in the Philosophy Department deserves more transparency that it received, and it is possible that the sweeping characterizations of the department are unfair and unjust, and some of the remedies disproportionate. And I say this of a department faculty whose political outlook mostly differs from mine.'

The War On Men: 10 Ways Masculinity is Under Attack

Mastodon · 20 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are facing a full frontal assault on their rights, health and culture like never before. The war on masculinity has never been so brutal – but it's not a war being waged by women. The attack is coming directly from the top, as the establishment desperately attempts to emasculate and disempower men in order to force women to be more dependent on the state, thereby enabling more power to be centralized and aiding the growth of big government.

Here are ten ways in which the state has declared war on men and masculinity:

...

8) The Legal System Discriminates Against Men

In both divorce and child custody proceedings, it is widely acknowledged that courts heavily favor women and discriminate against men. Men are routinely hit with onerous alimony payments even if women are capable of working and earning a good paycheck. Men only receive custody of their children in around 10 per cent of divorce cases in the United States. The ironic thing about this system is that it has primarily been instituted by other men, emphasizing again how the war on men is being waged not by women, but by the primarily male-dominated establishment itself.'

Teacher Arrested For Forcing Child To Clean Dirty Urinal

Mastodon · 20 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Broward County charter school teacher is facing battery charges after she allegedly forced a 10-year-old student to clean a dirty urinal that she thought the student clogged, according to the Coral Springs Police Department.

Jennifer Forshey, who teaches third grade at Broward Community Charter School West, according to the school's website, is accused of battery on a child by exposing the child to urine.

According to the arrest report, Forshey accused a 10-year-old boy of clogging the drain in a urinal in the boys bathroom on day last week. Police say she ordered the boy to use his hands to remove the paper towels filled with urine from unknown students.

"Victims hands were saturated in what smelled like urine from the urinal and the paper towel that was in the urinal," the police report reads.'

Military Women Get Helping Hand In Transition to Civilian Life

Mastodon · 20 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From hair and makeup to resumes, today military women got a great big help from the National Charity League.

"Sometimes translating those military skills to civilian can be a little confusing and we have all kinds of people here to help with that transition process," states Julie Ballard, President of the Hills of Austin Chapter, Charity League.

Local employers were on hand to help women transitioning out of the military hone in on their work skills.

Along with several businesses they received assistance on writing resumes and how to network in today's tech savvy world.

The women were also given hair and makeup tips and a chance to pick some new work wear.'

Activists include immigration in ‘war on women’

Mastodon · 20 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A coalition of advocacy groups wants to make the next front in the “war on women” all about immigration reform.

The new strategy, unveiled Wednesday, is yet another tactic from pro-reform groups to pressure House Republicans to pass immigration reform this year — and punish them if they don’t. And the activists believe that focusing on the influence of female voters could crack the Capitol Hill stalemate on immigration reform.
...
The women’s strategy is threefold: A series of protests and fasts involving more than 5,000 women nationwide timed to International Women’s Day on March 8; mobilizing female voters to the polls in the midterm elections; and building a base of female activists among immigrant and nonimmigrant women alike.'

Student Senate fights to eliminate Title IX and non-revenue sports fee

Mastodon · 20 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

University of Kansas students are required to pay the semesterly $25 student fee to offset travel expenses for women's and non-revenue sports. Students pay between $1.2 and $1.3 million annually to the athletic department fund through the current fee.

The Senate's responsibility to help finance Title IX, a federal law, was a main question of senators. Tetwiler pointed to the Senate's earlier decision to forgo funding a federally required accessibility ramp at Strong Hall. The Senate questioned if students should pay for the University to meet government standards.

"Our opinion is that that's not a responsibility of student fees," Tetwiler said.

The committee recommended two different options to a separate Student Senate Fee Review Committee: That the student fee be eliminated entirely, or that the fee be lowered from $25 a semester to $20.'

The Vetting of Hillary Already Labeled ‘Sexist’ in the Media

Mastodon · 20 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was bound to happen sooner rather than later. MSNBC host Mika Brzezinski issued on Monday what might be the most full-throated attack on Hillary Clinton’s opponents yet over what she considered their appeals to misogyny and sexism.

Sen. Rand Paul (R-KY) recently embarked on a campaign designed to make Democrats think twice about labeling Republican opposition to late-term abortions and contraception coverage mandates as offensives in the “War on Women.” Paul noted that the party attacking the GOP also lionizes a man who engaged in sexual activity with a subordinate in the workplace. The mere mention of this incontrovertible fact has worked Clinton’s supporters up into a fury.
...
“There’s a gender element here,” said University of Texas professor Victoria DeFrancesco Soto. “If a guy has a list of people he’s not too keen on, no big deal, but if a woman does, then that is a big deal and it becomes juicy.”

To discuss Clinton like she was any other politician, and not just a female politician, is now defined as sexist. DeFrancesco Soto’s critique would be poignant if she could point to an instance where a male politician maintaining an “enemies list” was dismissed as commonplace. But exacting political retribution against ideological opponents has never been shrugged off as just something boys are wont to do.'

Innocent Man Gets 25 Years, Corrupt Prosecutor 10 Days

mens_issues · 21 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

Ten days in jail—not prison, only jail—for engineering the wrongful murder conviction of an innocent man who languished in prison nearly 25 years is the state of Texas' idea of justice. That was the sentence handed down on former Williamson County, Texas, district attorney Ken Anderson, who will also surrender his law license and perform 500 hours of community service to settle allegations that he hid favorable evidence from Michael Morton, who was convicted of killing his wife in 1987.

Anderson avoided felony charges of tampering with evidence and pleaded only to contempt of court for lying to the judge during a pre-trial hearing by affirming that he no exculpatory evidence to hand over to Morton's attorneys. In fact, Anderson had a transcript of a police interview with the victim's mother, who said that the Mortons' 3-year-old son had witnessed the killing, described the attacker as a monster and said that Michael Morton was not there at the time, and a police report that neighbors had seen suspicious behavior by an unknown driver of a green van who had parked and walked into the woods behind the Morton house several times before the crime.'

Scienctific American does it again: "Are Men the Weaker Sex?"

DutchO · 22 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Here another female writer for Scientific American divulges her "scientific" proof that men are "inferior". Her conclusion? "While not forgoing the push for fairness and equality, it seems wise to accept the scientific reality of male weaknesses." Excerpt:

'We can, thankfully, remove one threat to the future existence of the human male from our worry list: The male Y chromosome, after dwindling from its original robust size over millions of years, apparently has halted its disappearing act.

But don't start cheering yet. Contrary to cultural assumptions that boys are stronger and sturdier, basic biological weaknesses are built into the male of our species. These frailties leave them more vulnerable than girls to life's hazards, including environmental pollutants such as insecticides, lead and plasticizers that target their brains or hormones. Several studies suggest that boys are harmed in some ways by these chemical exposures that girls are not. It's man's fate, so to speak.

First of all, human males are disappearing. Mother Nature has always acknowledged and compensated for the fragility and loss of boys by arranging for more of them: 106 male births to 100 female newborns over the course of human history. (Humans are not unique in this setup: Male piglets, as an example, are conceived in greater proportion to compensate for being more likely than female piglets to die before birth.) But in recent decades, from the United States to Japan, from Canada to northern Europe, wherever researchers have looked, the rate of male newborns has declined. Examining U. S. records of births for the years between 1970 and 1990, they found 1.7 fewer boys per 1,000 than in decades and centuries past; Japan's loss in the same decades was 3.7 boys.'

SAVE: Campus ‘Rape Culture’ Crusade: Fueled by Emotion and Myth

Matt · 22 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Wellesley College in Massachusetts has become embroiled in controversy over a statue – an artistic rendition of a sleep-walking man clad in his underwear (shown on the right). Hundreds of frightened students have signed a petition demanding removal of the sculpture because they say it conjures up fears of sexual assault.
...
The Wellesley incident is one of many across the nation where accusations of “rape culture” are having the effect of stripping due process protections from the accused. In California, a bill has been introduced that would require both partners to affirmatively consent before having sex. One Dartmouth administrator went so far as to ask, “Why could we not expel a student based [solely] on an allegation?”

Much of the frenzy can be traced to a White House Council on Women and Girls report that claims one in five women are raped sometime in their lives. But this factoid doesn’t stand up to scrutiny.
...
Crime rates for rape, robbery, and assault have fallen dramatically in the past two decades. Still, sexual assault is a problem on our campuses.

But inflating the numbers, inducing a state of near-panic, and ignoring the problem of false allegations only serves to waste scarce criminal justice resources and harm the credibility of real victims.'

SAVE E-lert: Dartmouth U. Administrator Flirts with Soviet-Style Justice for Sex Allegations

Matt · 22 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Things are getting a little crazy on college campuses these days. The "rape culture" mantra has taken hold, and people are doing and saying ridiculous things in the name of helping victims.

We want to reduce rape and sexual assault, too. But we also want to make sure that the accused are considered "innocent until proven guilty."

Dartmouth College administrator Amanda Childress, speaking about alleged sex offenses on campus, said: "Why could we not expel a student based on an allegation?"

And Dartmouth is defending the comment!

A spokesman said, "[S]he was not suggesting policy, but was asking a question-a provocative one-meant to generate dialogue around complex issues for which answers are necessary to continue to strengthen and promote fair and equitable processes at all colleges and universities,"

It's time to end the hysteria. This is not the time or place to be provocative.

Please contact Dartmouth president Philip J. Hanlon. Demand that the president affirm Dartmouth's commitment to due process and the presumption of innocence:

- Email: President's.Office-at-Dartmouth.edu
- Phone: 603-646-2223
- Fax: 603 646-2266

Thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Harvard Feminist Says Academic Freedom Should Be Abolished

Mastodon · 22 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Harvard University feminist student writing in the campus newspaper The Crimson recently posited this:

“If our university community opposes racism, sexism, and heterosexism, why should we put up with research that counters our goals simply in the name of “academic freedom”?

The column was titled "The Doctrine of Academic Freedom – Let’s Give Up On Academic Freedom in Favor of Justice.”

Its author, senior Sandra Y.L. Korn, a joint history of science and studies of women, gender and sexuality major, called for the end of academic freedom and in its place “a more rigorous standard: one of ‘academic justice.’”

“When an academic community observes research promoting or justifying oppression, it should ensure that this research does not continue,” she wrote. “The power to enforce academic justice comes from students, faculty, and workers organizing together to make our universities look as we want them to do.”'

Prominent nursing professor accused of fabricating DV stats

Mastodon · 23 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jacquelyn C. Campbell, a professor in the Johns Hopkins University School of Nursing, is accused of fabricating "key statements [about domestic violence] and then representing the statements as findings of a government survey." On January 14, the victim-advocacy organization Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE) filed a formal complaint with the Office of Research Integrity of the Department of Health and Human Services. SAVE wants the unit to "investigate these allegations of research misconduct by Dr. Campbell and colleagues, and take appropriate corrective action." (As of January 31, the complaint has been rejected and the rejection is being appealed.)

In two highly respected journals, Campbell and various colleagues claimed that "the leading cause of death in the United States among African American women aged 15 to 45 years" was homicide. In the American Journal of Public Health Vol. 93, No. 7, 2003, page 1089, the deaths were described as "femicide, the homicide of women." In the National Institute of Justice (NIJ) Journal 2003, page 18, the deaths were ascribed to "intimate partner violence" or domestic violence homicide.

Attorney General Eric Holder repeated the domestic violence version of the statistic in a 2009 speech; he stated, "Disturbingly, intimate partner homicide is the leading cause of death for African-American women ages 15 to 45." The statistic was posted in at least two places at the Department of Justice (DOJ) website. The conservative feminist Christina Hoff Sommers took exception. In USA Today (Feb. 4, 2011), she wrote, "That's a horrifying statistic, and it would be a shocking reflection of the black family, and American society generally, if it were true. But it isn't true."

...

Where did Holder get such a dramatically inaccurate statistic? Kessler fast forwarded to the 2003 studies in which Campbell was the principal researcher. The American Journal of Public Health study was published earliest, and it referred to "femicide" as the leading cause of death for African-American women aged 15 to 45. The later NIJ study stated "intimate partner violence" was "the leading cause of death." The 1998 BJS study was cited as a source in both cases but, as Kessler commented, "these facts cannot be found in the original BJS report."

...

Mike Perry is not surprised at the DOJ's failure to make a genuine correction. Perry is an economics professor at the Flint campus of the University of Michigan and a scholar at the American Enterprise Institute (AEI). The Washington Post fact checking occurred only because Perry pursued that avenue as a last resort. In an AEI article (Dec. 5, 2013), Perry stated that the false data was "being extensively quoted by universities, journalists, in books and YouTube videos, and by the American Bar Association." Perry called the DOJ failure especially disturbing in light of Obama's 2009 declaration, "Under my administration, the days of science taking a back seat to ideology are over... To undermine scientific integrity is to undermine our democracy."

Christina Hoff Sommers is also unsurprised. For years, Sommers has been battling bad data produced by politically correct feminism. She is perhaps best known for constantly correcting statistics which exclude men and boys or inaccurately represent them.

...

As Sommers notes, PC feminism approaches males as perpetrators and women as their victims. The data frowns on this interpretation. The CDC's 2010 Summary Report of the National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey reported the rates at which men and women had been victims of physical violence during the preceding year. The rate of male victimization was 6.5 percent; the rate of female victimization was 6.3 percent.

...

Research misconduct includes the fabrication or falsification of research or in the reporting of research results. The SAVE complaint alleges that Campbell and her colleagues “made up key statements, presented them as the results of a prior Bureau of Justice Statistics survey, and then reported them in two journal articles. In the American Journal of Public Health report, the fabricated claim appears in the first sentence of the article and sets the tone for the remainder of the discussion.”

Intentional falsification is a key aspect of research misconduct. But outright fabrication can be difficult to prove because it requires a judgment about the researcher’s inner motives. In the presence of Campbell's silence, such a judgment must be based on the preponderance of evidence. The evidence includes: the lack of correction to debunked statistics; the absence of supporting data in the BJS report she cited; and, Kessler's observation that “[l]ogically, Holder’s statement does not make much sense.” Kessler continued, “Intimate-partner homicide is the leading cause of death? At the very least, intimate-partner homicide is a subset of all homicides, so one can easily see that a broader category of murder would be even higher. And, then, what about diseases?”
...
Another reason that academics have falsified data is to gain more grants and academic respectability or power.

Whether intentionality can be proven in regard to the black “femicide” claim may be irrelevant in the end. SAVE clearly wants to shine a bright light on bad data upon which government policies and programs are based. The complaint and the appeal could accomplish this in and of itself. The respect for truth in domestic violence research will depend on the same factor that allowed falsehood to flourish: the media. Will the truth have the same media appeal as sensationalized falsehoods? Will cancer as a leading cause of death be reported with the same breathlessness as domestic-violence homicide? It remains to be seen. Perhaps the media can be shamed into valuing the truth.'

Shine the light on university's Office of Discrimination and Harassment

el cid · 23 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This piece is critical of Colorado University's Office of Discrimination and Harassment for its lack of transparency and for lowering the standard of proof for sexual assault cases from "reasonable doubt" to "preponderance of evidence." Similar policies are found at other universities, primarily at the Obama administration's request. In my view, these policies institutionalize a "hostile environment" for men. Excerpt:

'We Coloradans love transparency in our public institutions. Take our sunshine laws — two members of any Colorado government body can't have coffee together to discuss the affairs of state without breaking the law. We wanna watch if they're gonna to talk about us. Boulderites' demand for a clear view into public decision making was obvious during the recent fuss over the 50-year contract to manage U.S. 36. Even though the negotiation was conducted within the law, we wanted to see it and have someone explain to us why it was such a good idea. Good for us. We expect our public institutions to be accountable to those of us they are supposed to be serving.

That is, of course, unless it involves charges of sexual harassment or discrimination at public universities. Then, public officials can make decisions that ruin peoples' lives with little or no accountability. Somehow, this part of American society, including our very own University of Colorado, has decided that, in this case, slanted justice behind closed doors is okay.

....

How and why have universities decided to treat harassment and discrimination charges so differently from what we all expect of American judicial institutions? One problem seems to be the desire of colleges to shield people who make accusations of sexual misbehavior. In most cases, this means shielding a woman accusing a man of sexual harassment from having to face her accuser, though Adler demonstrated that this is not a one-way street.

For example, the Guidelines for CU's Office of Discrimination and Harassment states the following:

"In CU-Boulder's process, the complainant and respondent will not be permitted to directly question each other and are not required to be present together at any point."

It's hard to see any justice system as fair when the accused cannot ask questions of the accuser — a simple concept enshrined in the Magna Carta that has since been a bedrock of our sense of justice. However, many universities, including ours, somehow see it differently.'

Woman suspected of fraud kills 4 in eviction dispute

mens_issues · 23 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

This woman shot and killed 4 people at an Indian tribe headquarters last week after she and her son were evicted from the reservation. Warning: her mug shot is scary. Excerpt:

'CEDARVILLE, Calif. (AP) — Practically everyone in this tiny town in the high desert of northeastern California's Surprise Valley knew Cherie Lash Rhoades.

A leader of the Cedarville Rancheria, she worked in the tribe's gas station and convenience store and wore brightly colored tank tops that showed off her tattoos.

But it is tough to find anyone with a kind word to say about her.

"She bullied her way through life," said Sandra Parriott, a lifelong resident of Cedarville and owner of two downtown markets. "But I would never think she would start blowing people away in a meeting."

Police arrested Rhoades on suspicion that she did just that Thursday in Alturas, leaving four dead and two wounded in a gun and knife attack at a meeting on whether to evict Rhoades from one of the nine little houses on the rancheria.

Eviction from tribal housing is among the most serious punishments for American Indians. Though police have said they are still working on a motive, a nephew who lived with her, Jacob Penn, said she snapped under the pressure of her brother trying to evict her. The brother, Rurik Davis, who lived down the street on the Rancheria, had apparently taken over as tribal chairman and was among the dead.

Investigators had been looking into whether Rhoades took federal grant money meant for the rancheria she once led, a person familiar with the tribe's situation told The Associated Press. The person spoke only on condition of anonymity.

Alturas Police Chief Ken Barnes said they were looking into whether the embezzlement allegations spurred the tribe's efforts to evict Rhoades but they had not established any definitive motive.'

Femen eyes U.S. branch as relevance fades

Mastodon · 24 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Ukraine-born leader of the radical feminist organization Femen, famous for its topless protests around the world, is planning to open an American branch. Inna Shevchenko's announcement comes as the group's reception in France, where the Femen leader sought and received political asylum in 2013, has cooled considerably.

Shevchenko and eight fellow Femenites were called before a Paris tribunal Wednesday on charges of damaging bells and religious articles at the Notre Dame Cathedral last year to mark the resignation of Pope Benoit XVI; the trial will formally begin on July 9. Another Femen activist will go on trial March 14 for simulating abortion in the famed Eglise de la Madeleine. The pending trials mark the end to a brief period of adulation, which saw France welcome Femen's move from its headquarters in Kiev to Paris. Fascination with the charismatic Shevchenko extended even to the country's national stamp – the Femen leader played the muse for the newest depiction of France's cultural symbolic Marianne, which was approved by President Francois Hollande. Now, conservative lawmakers are calling for Femen to be labeled a sect (and thereby illegal).
...
Shevchenko has shrugged off Femen's recent bad press, noting, "We are not a rock band. We're a bunch of angry women." But with Pussy Riot still making waves two years after its infamous "punk prayer" – minus the questions of credibility and relevance plaguing Femen – Shevchenko's feminist group would be well served to take a cue from Russia's most notorious "rock band."'

Gillibrand pushes STEM education for girls, minorities

Mastodon · 25 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand met with student robotics enthusiasts at John F. Kennedy High School in Plainview Monday, touting two initiatives to boost interest and participation in science, technology, engineering and math, particularly among girls and minorities.

Gillibrand (D-N.Y.) said it would take "a long time" to close the gap between boys and girls in those fields of study, but that it could be narrowed by providing female students and minorities with hands-on learning experiences. She is lobbying for passage of two pieces of legislation that would promote science, technology, engineering and math, or STEM, education, which she introduced last year.

...

Matthew Coleman, 17 and a senior, said he's glad to see the number of girls rise in recent years. "When I was a freshman, there were two female members of our club," said Coleman, the club's president.

When his team competed against other schools, some had all-girl teams or at least 50 percent female membership. POBOTS beefed up its recruitment and has benefited greatly from the addition of young women, he said.

"It seems like a different way of thinking and a different dynamic in the room," he said. "When we are brainstorming and coming up with ideas . . . it's significantly better. There's a different mindset."'

Canada: Parents starve 15-YO son to death in their home

fathers4fairness · 25 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. 15-year-old Alex Redita was found starved to death in a home he shared with his parents and 7 siblings. The boy suffered from diabetes and the family immigrated from Romania a number of years ago but moved from Calgary to Surrey, BC two years ago. While in Calgary the parents were found guilty of child neglect and Alex was transferred into foster care. The parents have been charged with 1st degree murder. A sad, sad case with many points of failure.

How Anti-Poverty Programs Marginalize Fathers

charlie · 25 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is story on how welfare programs marginalize fathers. Major media is just starting discover the unintended consequences of government payments. Excerpt:

'U.S. government programs designed to help such families, however, haven't evolved with the population. Based on decades-old stereotypes that single mothers are raising children alone and single dads are "deadbeats," the majority of United States anti-poverty programs almost exclusively serve women and children, said Jacquelyn Boggess, co-director of the Center for Family Policy and Practice, a Wisconsin-based think tank that focuses on supporting low-income parents. The welfare system, as a result, can become a muddled mess of rearranging rather than relieving poverty. Single, non-custodial fathers bear the brunt. But dads don't suffer alone. Because the poor pull together to support one another, everyone absorbs the pinch.

"It's like seven people in bed together, sharing a very small blanket," Boggess said. "If you move the blanket over to cover up one person who's chilly, someone else is going to get cold."
...
Historically, funding for both government and nonprofit programs to help men has been scarce, said Joy Moses, a senior policy analyst at the Center for American Progress. A recent survey from the Center for Family Policy and Practice shows the top two ways that nonprofit service providers connect with men is through parole and child support enforcement programs. "As a low-income man, you almost have to get in trouble to get help," Moses said.
...
Many noncustodial fathers in his situation aren't so lucky. More aggressive child support enforcement was a key component of welfare reform in the 1990s, said Boggess, of the family-policy center. Because the welfare system was designed to act as a sort of "surrogate husband" to single mothers, the government looked to fathers as a way to get people off the dole, she said.

Now, men across the country owe $111 billion in unpaid child support, according to the Office of Child Support Enforcement. Many have racked up debts in the tens of thousands, Boggess said. But most, like Frandy, make less than $10,000 a year. "These men can't pay," she said.

Even if a man can come up with the cash, it may not benefit his children, said Kristin Harknett, a sociologist at the University of Pennsylvania. If a woman receives government cash assistance under the Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program, any money her children's father contributes is earmarked to pay back the government.

In some ways, child-support enforcement is actually having a negative effect on children, Harknett said. Mothers often keep fathers from spending time with their children to encourage them to pay up. Many fathers go underground to avoid doing jail time for falling into arrears. Often, as in Frandy's case, other impoverished family members pick up the bill. "Basically we give money to one poor person, and then we find the nearest poor person connected to that child and ask for it back," Harknett said.'

The War on Men's Wages

Mastodon · 26 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A market economy is absolutely the worst system in the world — except for all the rest. This isn't just a play on Winston Churchill's quip about democracy, it's also true. Pity that we have to rely on those vice-ridden, flighty creatures called human beings to make decisions about what products and services we'll enjoy. The only thing worse is having those decisions made by the subset of human beings called bureaucrats or politicians.

"Study: Hollywood execs have own 'war on women,' choking off major roles, salary from women," reads the headline at Washington Examiner. At issue is a new report by the Women's Media Center (WMC) — arch-feminista Gloria Steinem's group — showing that in terms of warm-body count and amount of cold cash, women lag behind men in all corners of media and entertainment. We're to find these data troubling and, as Time magazine wrote in a headline, "depressing." In perhaps some comic relief, Time followed that note with the subtitle, "Jennifer Lawrence makes $11 million less than Adam Sandler." Yeah, hey, pass the Prozac.

I don't know, is it depressing that men do more dangerous jobs and suffer vastly more work-related injuries and deaths? Is it depressing that the whole workaday world, so unjustly dominated by men, was created by them in the first place? Is every difference among demographics that doesn't happen to benefit "victim" groups to be thought depressing?

...

But complaints about intersex wage gaps have always been nonsense. Consider the oft-cited statistic that women make 77 cents on a man's dollar. This has nothing to do with unjust discrimination. Rather, women choose less lucrative fields (e.g., the social sciences as opposed to harder ones), statistics show that "full-time" men work more hours than "full-time" women, and women are more likely than men to decline promotions and choose flexibility over income when seeking employment. In fact, as the documentary The Gender Equality Paradox points out, the sexes choose more stereotypical jobs in highly egalitarian nations such as Norway than in more patriarchal countries such as India. Why? Because people in rich nations have the luxury of following their hearts — and men's and women's hearts lead to very different places.

Unfortunately, peddling wage-gap lies will instigate social engineering in the area of the sexes' pay. We're already seeing this in certain hard sciences, where entry-level women command more than their male counterparts because employers fear costly discrimination lawsuits. The problem with this is that if you give women greater pay, then men are going to be paid less to compensate. This means it will be more difficult for men to provide for their wives and children as sole breadwinners. So wage-gap propaganda isn't just a war on the market, but also on the nuclear family.

Of course, though, if like feminist Simone de Beauvoir, you believe that a woman "should not have that choice ... to stay at home to raise her children ... because if there is such a choice, too many women will make that one," this is exactly what you want.

So much for the pro-choice Left.'

Hillary Clinton: Men also responsible for women's rights

Mastodon · 26 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Hillary Rodham Clinton says that men are also responsible for advancing rights and opportunities for women around the world.

The former secretary of state says "it's not a women's issue" but, in her words, "a responsibility that we all share."

On Tuesday, Clinton presided over Georgetown University's annual Hillary Rodham Clinton Awards for Advancing Women in Peace and Security. She says it's not a mistake but a message that all three winners are men.

Clinton is contemplating a run for the Democratic presidential nomination in 2016.

The former first lady says that everyone suffers when women are marginalized and that everyone benefits when women and girls have a chance to participate fully alongside men and boys in all facets of life, including politics.'

Boy Suspended From School For Voluntarily Turning In Toy Gun To School Security

Mastodon · 26 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An 11-year-old boy, Caden Cook, was suspended from school for voluntarily turning in a non-firing plastic toy gun to school personnel.

Fredrick Funston Elementary School in Chicago instituted a random pat-down screening procedure as part of its security at the beginning of the school year, reports The Rutherford Institute, which has come to Cook's defense in the matter.

All students are physically separated from their bags and randomly chosen for pat-downs before going through metal detectors. Bags are also searched at random.

Caden Cook, a sixth-grader, had forgotten he held a plastic toy gun he had played with the previous night in his sweater pocket while waiting in line at school security. He alerted school security personnel, explained he accidentally brought the toy gun to school and relinquished it to security.

Cook was doing the right thing, but the school did not see it that way.

School officials allegedly subjected Cook to intimidation tactics, interrogation, accusations of lying, and threats. His mother was not present, nor had she been informed of the incident. When she did arrive, she was allegedly berated and criticized for allowing her son to play with toy guns, reports The Examiner.

"This case speaks volumes about what's wrong with our public schools and public officials: Rather than school officials showing they are capable of exercising good judgment, distinguishing between what is and is not a true threat, and preserving safety while steering clear of a lockdown mindset better suited to a prison environment, they instead opted to exhibit poor judgment, embrace heavy-handed tactics, and treat a toy gun like a dangerous weapon," said John W. Whitehead, president of The Rutherford Institute [link added]. "In the process, school officials sent a strong, chilling message to this child and his classmates that they have no rights in the American police state."'

UK: Mum loses custody to father: Judge attacks her 'permissive parenting' style

Matt · 26 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The article opens in the typical nymphotropic way, but then you get into more of the nuts and bolts of the decision. It sounds like at least in view of the PAS the judge says the mom has been inflicting on her kids and her complacency around looking after them, it's certainly the right thing to do. Mom does sound depressed though, and so it's not something to be discarded from consideration; still, if indeed it's all supposed to be about the 'best interests of the child', then there has to be a line drawn someplace. However you'll see judges be a lot faster to draw that line in front of a dad than a mom. Excerpt:

'A mother said to have harmed her two sons by ‘permissive parenting’ has been stripped of the right to bring them up.

The brothers, 11 and 14, will now live with their father so they will be given ‘the guidance and boundaries appropriate for teenage boys’.

A judge made the order after hearing that the boys, who lived with their mother after their parents’ break-up, were staying up late, missing school, late for classes and neglecting their homework.

The mother spent much of the day in bed while her sons were left to play computer games, Judge Laura Harris heard. She said the mother was ‘complacent about the educational issues and minimised concerns about lateness, homework and general progress’.
...
She was awarded custody in 2002, and in 2004 a court ruled that the children should live with their mother while having weekend contact with their father.

In 2012, the father asked a court for custody after repeatedly complaining that he had been denied contact with them. Judge Harris said the father ‘has, in my view, demonstrated far better insight into the needs of his boys’.

‘He is much more in favour of structure, boundaries and discipline, and I can understand why the boys might baulk at that.’

Judge Harris said the mother had manipulated the boys into hostility towards their 43-year-old father and that her hatred of him was ‘almost pathological’.

‘So preoccupied is she with her own sense of grievance that she completely overlooks the effect of her behaviour on her children. In my judgment, she has prioritised her own needs and feelings at the expense of the needs of her children.”

NPO: Follow the Research... to Shared Parenting

Matt · 26 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"A broad consensus of accomplished researchers and practitioners agree that, in normal circumstances, the evidence supports shared residential arrangements for children under 4 years of age whose parents live apart from each other."

It is rare that you have a single article that reports the consensus of such a large group of social scientists. The article, Social Science and Parenting Plans for Young Children: A Consensus Report, focuses on living arrangements for young children (under 4 years of age). The focus is on young children not because the research shows something different for older children but because opponents of shared residential arrangements have focused their attention on these cases, arguing that it is vital for the children to develop a strong bond with one parent and that requires a sole-custody/visitation living arrangement.

Richard A. Warshak, PhD, a prominent American clinical and research psychologist and author, prepared the draft of this consensus document. He is best known for his work on divorce, child custody, and parental alienation. The 110 endorsers are an international group of highly accomplished researchers and practitioners, including prominent representatives from the fields of early child development, clinical and forensic psychology, psychiatry, sociology, social work, and counseling.'

Letourneau: I wouldn’t want my daughters dating their teacher

Matt · 26 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Well of course not. But for her, that isn't the question. It's more like would she be the teacher who is "dating" the student? We already know the answer to that and so does her husband: the boy she started "having sex with" when he was only 12. Excerpt:

'It’s been more than 13 years since former Seattle schoolteacher Mary Kay Letourneau made international headlines when it was revealed that she was having a sexual relationship with her 12-year-old student Vili Fualaau — a relationship that netted her a seven-year prison sentence for child rape.

Today she’s 48-year-old Mary Fualaau: married to that former student, raising two daughters, and she recently greeted her first grandchild, a girl. And she has a word of advice for her daughters: “Wait.”

“You want your children to wait,” Letourneau told TODAY’s Meredith Vieira in an exclusive interview Friday. “You want them to be productive adults, to get an education first, and experience all sorts of actual fun.” And that’s especially true if those children are girls, she said (hers are 12 and 13).

It’s not that Letourneau, who was a married mother of four when she became pregnant in 1997 with the child of Vili Fualaau, who had by then turned 13, believes it’s appropriate for underage boys to be sexually active. “In an ideal world, nobody would say that’s OK,” she said.'

Modern War Wounds Can Devastate Vets' Sexual, Emotional Health

Minuteman · 26 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The tools of war have changed. With the increased use of powerful explosive devices, men and women patrolling on foot in bomb-laced areas of combat are increasingly suffering traumatic injuries to the groin and genitals, experts say.

Those injuries can pose complex long-term sexual and psychological challenges.

It is hard to even imagine having your genitals crushed, burned or ripped off in a blast by a makeshift bomb, said Dr. Chris Gonzalez, the lead author of a new review article published recently in The Journal of Men's Health. "For some, it's even worse than losing a limb," he said.

The impact of so-called "improvised explosive devices" (IEDs) is different from gun fire encountered in earlier combat, explained Gonzalez, who is a professor of urology at Northwestern University Feinberg School of Medicine, in Chicago.

"The energy comes from the ground up, so the first thing that gets hit is in the perineal [groin] area," he said.'

UK: Britain's male suicide rate is a national tragedy

fathers4fairness · 26 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 1981, 2,466 women in the UK took their own lives. Three decades later, thanks to improvements in psychiatric and emergency care medicine, to a range of suicide prevention barriers and policies and, perhaps, to gradual social, political and personal empowerment, the number in 2012 had almost halved to 1,391.

In 1981, 4,129 men in the UK took their own lives. Three decades later, despite improvements in psychiatric and emergency care medicine, a range of suicide prevention barriers and policies and, arguably, some degree of social, political and personal empowerment, the number in 2012 had risen to 4,590.

The latest suicide statistics from the ONS show the greatest gender gulf since records began. The suicide rate for men is now three and a half times that of women. Breaking down the statistics, the most worrying trend is a rise in the rate among men aged 40-44. It is striking too that whereas 30 years ago the risks for men were greatest in London and the south-east and lowest in the north, the picture has now entirely reversed. This tallies with research by Samaritans, who have found that men at the bottom of the socioeconomic pile are at greatest risk. Clare Wyllie, its head of policy and research, was quoted as saying: "They will grow up expecting by the time they reach mid-life they'll have a wife who will look after them and a job for life in a male industry. In reality they may find that they reach middle age in a very different position. Society has this masculine ideal that people are expecting to live up to. Lots of that has to do with being a breadwinner. When men don't live up to that it can be quite devastating for them."'

The Atlantic: Why Dads Matter

fathers4fairness · 26 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. [Ed.: Submitter's comments placed in first comment for story.] Excerpt:

'Jordan Ott was the third of his mother's six children, born over the course of four marriages.

By age 8, he'd had two step-dads; his brothers and sisters had more or fewer based on birth order. Each child also had different numbers of siblings, depending on whether their own dads fathered other children. Ott has one full sister, four half-siblings and at one point had three step-siblings "that I know of," he said. His own father has mostly lived far away.

His story is not uncommon today. More than half of babies of mothers under 30 are born to unmarried parents. The divorce rate among those who do marry exceeds 40 percent, according to the 2012 State of Our Unions report.

These statistics play out most often in the form of absent fathers—or the arrival and departure of serial father figures involved in romantic relationships with a child's mother. (Moms still usually retain custody in a breakup or divorce.) Twenty-four million American children—one in three—are growing up in homes without their biological fathers, the 2011 Census says. Children in father-absent homes, it notes, are almost four times more likely to be poor.
...
Most children weather family turmoil and wind up OK, said Cherlin, who coined the term "family churn" to describe what happens to families as couples split, often moving dad out of the home and a new man in. A study in the Journal of Marriage and Family said children in such homes experience an average of more than 5.25 partnership transitions. That's tough for kids who are used to having their own fathers within reach.

"Dad also helps with impulse control and memory and enhances a child's ability to respond effectively to new or ambiguous situations, for boys and girls," said Warren Farrell, author of Father and Child Reunion. Children who are close to their fathers tend to achieve more academically, while kids with absent fathers are more likely to drop out. Fathers are the biggest factor in preventing drug use, Farrell said.'

Masculinity Under Fire: ‘Real’ Men are Disappearing

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The most insidious attacks are not happening to men though, they are being executed on boys. Little boys are energetic, rambunctious, enthusiastic and easily the root word for “boisterous.” Little boys and little girls, despite all of the populist arguments to the contrary, are not the same. A typical toddler girl, if separated from her mommy by a baby gate, will eventually sit down and cry if her mommy does not pay her attention. A typical toddler boy however, while he too might cry, will also attempt to break down the gate or scale it. The relative advantage of either approach is worth debating, but it is the difference which needs to be addressed.

In school, much of the modern American curriculum is geared towards the strengths of girls. Math class involves a lot of word problems these days, while science classes lean heavily on written reports. But it gets worse; should little boys today have the impertinence to act like little boys of yesterday, they are almost immediately put on drugs. Recess, a wonderful tool for allowing children to burn off the excess fidgeting energy of their youth, has all but disappeared from public schools. Juxtapose those heavy doses of Ritalin for little boys, against a teaching environment which encourages little girls to “be empowered.” Whatever that means.'

Groups prepared to fight for the life of baseball, other sports as Air Force considers cuts

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The future of America's national pastime is apparently in serious jeopardy at Air Force.

Budget cuts are expected to come down as early as March 4, and The Gazette has confirmed that sports may be eliminated. With baseball high on that list, a group of former players are doing all they can to proactively prevent it.
...
"We are experiencing unprecedented budget challenges over the next several years and have to make some very difficult decisions."

Title IX will be a factor when determining cuts. Since the academy's gender breakdown is roughly 80 percent male, male athletes must be offered about 75 to 85 percent of the intercollegiate athletic opportunities. So if baseball is cut, a corresponding women's team would likely have to go as well.

This may end up saving some men's sports, which flips the original impact of the law as many schools around the nation had to cut men's sports like wrestling and baseball to even out opportunities between genders.'

Democrats resurrect War on Women messaging

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At the upcoming Working Families summit at the White House and in speeches around the country, Obama will expand the economic argument focused on women to stress workplace protections, expanded pregnancy leave and strengthening leave policies to allow for care of sick children. The DCCC and the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee are preparing to mount efforts focused on pay equity as the centerpiece of a larger economic argument targeting women.

...

The logic is simple: Democrats tend to win elections when more women vote, and women tend not to vote as much in midterm years. Those numbers are even higher, in both respects, among unmarried women, who also tend to respond the most strongly to the economic appeal. With Democrats trying to hold onto the Senate, make gains in the House and win several key governor's races, they need women showing up at the polls and voting for them in numbers that defy those trends.

...

Of course, the president's aides are aware of the politics, too: This is a proven, persuasive argument for them, and the messaging heading into the midterms isn't a mistake. They eagerly point out that the section of his State of the Union built around the line, "I believe when women succeed, America succeeds," received the most sustained applause of his whole speech and acknowledge that he's not ad-libbing every time he's included a mention of what his agenda means for women in nearly every speech since.'

Hollywood couple causes uproar with photos from son's circumcision ceremony

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Jason Biggs and wife Jenny Mollen may have enjoyed sharing joyous photos from their son's circumcision ceremony, but it seemed to anger fans.

"Today was not a good day to be Sid's penis," Mollen captioned a photo on Instagram of her kissing her newborn's head as dad stands by smiling. "#babybiggs #circumcision"

The first-time parents were immediately criticized for their lighthearted approach to the situation.

"He has to live with a mutilated penis because his parents are ignorant," one critic with the handle "Ianbrayamia" wrote in response to their photo.

Another, named "Floppymagma," wrote, "Wasn't a good day for poor Sid either! Poor baby. It's amazing that a country so advanced in so many ways is still so backdated."'

Wikipedia on Biggs and Mollen, here and here.

State of Arizona Senate approves bill banning female circumcision

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'The Arizona Senate has approved a bill outlawing female genital mutilation that's known as female circumcision.

The Senate unanimously approved the bill on Monday. The bill bars genital mutilation on girls under 18 and would make a first-time violation and conviction punishable by five to 14 years in prison and a minimum $25,000 fine.

Bill sponsor Republican Sen. Judy Burges of Sun City West says female genital mutilation is a problem that's beginning to appear in the United States.

The bill will now go the House of Representatives.'

Survey Says 54% of American Women Prefer Circumcised Penis

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article and video here. (NSFW: The recorded discussion among the women is explicit.) Excerpt:

'Pro-circumcision groups got a boost with the results of a survey made by AdamAndEve.com on female preference in terms of having the foreskin of their male partners cut or not.

The study found 54 per cent of American women favoured a circumcised penis, 33 per cent don't have any preference, 3 per cent opted for an uncircumcised dick and 10 per cent did not reply.

The survey has 1,000 adult female American respondents from age 18 and above.

Explaining the results of the study, Dr Kat Van Kirk, resident sexpert of AdamAndEve.com - vendor of adult products - said, quoted by Digital Times, "Circumcision is largely a cultural choice. With circumcision prevalent in the U.S. (as well as the Muslim world, Africa and Israel), many American women have never been exposed to an uncircumcised penis."'

"Men's Rights" Activists Are Trying to Redefine the Meaning of Rape

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'They claim that rape statistics are overinflated, that female-on-male sexual assaults are ignored or sneered at, and—above all—that false rape reports are a far larger problem than we acknowledge. And they're taking action. In Canada this past summer, a men's rights group plastered the city of Edmonton with posters aimed at young women. "Just because you regret a one-night stand doesn't mean it wasn't consensual," the posters read. This fall, members of a MRM website took online vigilante justice against an Ohio University student they believed was falsely crying rape. (It turned out she was the wrong woman altogether.) The Occidental incident has sparked other, similar actions—this month, MRM websites called for a mass spamming of Dartmouth's anonymous online sexual assault reporting form.

To dismiss the MRM as merely misogynist and extreme would be to ignore the fact that their beliefs are shared by a troublingly large percentage of the American population. And while the MRM's rhetoric is ugly and often sophistic, they have identified a number of issues—consent, victim-blaming, and legal standards of proof—that have too often been presented in black and white terms, when the reality is much more complicated.'

Report Says Few Army Women Want Combat Jobs

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Only a small fraction of Army women say they'd like to move into one of the newly opening combat jobs, but those few who do say they want a job that takes them right into the heart of battle, according to preliminary results from a survey of the service's nearly 170,000 women.

That survey and others across the Army, publicly disclosed for the first time to The Associated Press, also revealed that soldiers of both genders are nervous about women entering combat jobs but say they are determined to do it fairly. Men are worried about losing their jobs to women; women are worried they will be seen as getting jobs because of their gender and not their qualifications. Both are emphatic that the Army must not lower standards to accommodate women.

Less than 8 percent of Army women who responded to the survey said they wanted a combat job. Of those, an overwhelming number said they'd like to be a Night Stalker - a member of the elite special operations helicopter crews who perhaps are best known for flying the Navy SEALS into Osama bin Laden's compound in 2011.
...
Army officials also polled men and women on their concerns about the integration. And they asked senior female leaders to say whether they would have chosen combat jobs if they'd been given that chance 10 or 20 years ago.

All agreed the physical standards for the jobs should remain the same.

"The men don't want to lower the standards because they see that as a perceived risk to their team," David Brinkley, deputy chief of staff for operations at the Army's Training and Doctrine Command, told the AP. "The women don't want to lower the standards because they want the men to know they're just as able as they are to do the same task."'

"For women only: Get free screenings, hear renowned cardiologist at heart health forum at Staten Island University Hospital"

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Announcement here. Excerpt:

'Plenty of poetry and song have been dedicated to a woman's heart, but a little science is needed, too, because her heart is also at the center of the number one cause of death for women.

According to the American Heart and Stroke Association, heart disease, disease, stroke, and other cardiovascular diseases (CVD) are the No. 1 cause of death in American women, claiming over 400,000 lives each year, or nearly one death each minute.

In 2009, one in 30 female deaths was from breast cancer, but one in three was from cardiovascular disease.

Staten Island University Hospital will help women "Give Your Heart a Hand" at its women's heart health forum Thursday from 5 to 9 p.m. in the Regina McGinn MD Education Center. The event will provide the opportunity for a number of important screenings and the chance to hear a nationally known cardiologist and author.
...
Screenings will include blood pressure, cholesterol, blood sugar, and body mass index (BMI).

Women taking advantage of the screenings will receive EKG, echocardiograms and ankle pulse ultrasounds if one of their screenings show they are at risk for heart attack or cardiac disease.

Nicotine patches will be available for free and activities will include stress reduction techniques. Healthy refreshments and raffles and prizes will also be part of the festive and informative night.'

UK: Family courts: women and children first

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For years family lawyers have known it to be true: men get a raw deal when they divorce in this country. And by this country, I mean England and Wales rather than the UK as a whole. Scotland has a very different approach to money in divorce and women rarely get the joint lives order (aka ‘meal ticket for life’) that we still see here.

And the prejudice against men is not confined to finance. More important, perhaps, is the way in which there is still no level playing field when it comes to deciding whether children should have their primary homes with their mothers or fathers.

‘There is no evidence of bias in the courts in favour of one parent,’ according to Baroness Butler-Sloss, ex-president of the Family Division, speaking during the committee stage of the Children and Families Bill in October. And apparently, the NSPCC, the Justice Select Committee and the children’s minister all agree with her. Who knew? Certainly none of my family lawyer colleagues. Where are these courts? Not in this jurisdiction. Maybe the baroness and her friends were muddling us up with, say, France or Sweden, where the field is considerably more level.

...

I base this observation on years of dealing with the family courts, almost exclusively in London, and witnessing countless examples of courts treating women and men in entirely different ways. I have acted for several fathers, for example, who have unarguably been the primary carers of their children but have seen their contribution undervalued almost as a matter of course, with the court deciding the children should live with their mothers after divorce. And when it comes to spending time with their children, the message is clear: women and children first.'

Utah Supreme Court reverses decision about father's rights in adoption case

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Supreme Court of Utah ruled Tuesday that a district court judge should not have dismissed a biological father's challenge to the Utah Adoption Act.

Christopher Carlton, of Pennsylvania, filed the suit in his quest to find his daughter, now 3 years old, after the baby's mother told Carlton the child was a boy and had died shortly after birth, according to court documents.

The mother, Shalonda Brown, later revealed she had put the baby up for adoption, and Carlton tracked the case to the Adoption Center of Choice in Orem.

In early 2011, Carlton began challenging the constitutionality of the Utah Adoption Act, which prevents him from contesting the adoption because he hadn't acceptably established parental rights.

Judge Steve Hansen of Provo's 4th District Court ruled in favor of the Adoption Center of Choice in November 2011, dismissing all of Carlton's claims.
...
Tuesday's decision called the lower court's reasoning circular and erroneous because it dismissed Carlton's claims based on the very law he argued was unconstitutional. The decision also ruled that Carlton should have been allowed to file an amended petition naming the baby's adoptive parents in the case, adding that until they have been named in the case, a court can't decide whether to grant Carlton custody.

Hansen was also incorrect in dismissing Carlton's claim that the adoption center intentionally inflicted emotional distress, according to the ruling.

However, the court upheld the 4th District Court's decision to dismiss Carlton's claims against the adoption center and Brown claiming fraud, tortious interference with parental rights, pattern of unlawful activity, civil conspiracy and negligent infliction of emotional distress.'

Also covering this development: Army veteran closer to winning custody of child his ex-girlfriend secretly gave up for adoption

Australia: Women filmed abusing man on Gold Coast bus

Minuteman · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A 13-year-old girl has filmed two women racially and physically abusing a male passenger on a Gold Coast bus.

The mobile phone vision, filmed by a girl only known as Rebecca, shows the women hurling abuse at the man before assaulting a fellow passenger.

The teenager filming can be heard frantically pleading with someone on the bus to stop the women as the man tries to retaliate.

Ms Little also defended the bus driver for not stepping in to break up the feud.

"The girls also attacked the driver. Then they were standing right next to him while they were arguing with the Aboriginal man, Paul, so the driver couldn't get out of his seat," she said.

Ms Little said the video fails to show the moment the man continued to "hit" the two women even as they were getting off the bus.

"That was when the other passenger jumped up and just pushed them off," she said.

Queensland Police have confirmed that they have located Paul, who is well known in the area, and say he sustained "bruising to his arms" in the attack.'

My Brother's Keeper: A New White House Initiative to Empower Boys and Young Men of Color

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Today, from the East Room of the White House, President Obama will launch a new effort aimed at empowering boys and young men of color, a segment of our society which too often faces disproportionate challenges and obstacles to success. These obstacles are found in our schools, our communities, our criminal justice system, our families, and even in the minds of our young people themselves. The president is committed to build a broad coalition of backers to help break down barriers, clear pathways to opportunity, and reverse troubling trends which show too many of our boys and young men of color slipping through the cracks in our society.

To launch the "My Brother's Keeper" initiative, the president will be joined by local and national leaders in philanthropy, business, government, faith communities, and media. The challenges facing boys and young men of color are broad and multidimensional, and so must be the team we bring to the table to begin fostering solutions.'

Don’t make boys ashamed of their masculine side

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two weeks ago I wrote an article about the brilliant new film “The Mask You Live In,” a documentary about the pressures boys face growing up.

After my article was published, a reader wrote in with some thought-provoking points. Here is an excerpt from their email: “How about we allow boys to be boys and not emasculate them? By nature, they are rough and tumble, loud, and sometimes will push boundaries. Unfortunately, they receive labels like behavior disorder, ADD, ADHD and so on because most teachers are women and feel intimidated by their actions.”

The reader makes some interesting observations that bear examination. In creating a society that is more empathetic and gender-neutral, it’s crucial that we still allow children to express traits typically associated with masculinity. There is nothing wrong with characteristics such as boisterousness and a love for exploration, but it’s important that we realize that these aren’t just “male” qualities. And, just as boys require the freedom to express their emotions, girls need the freedom to express their wild side — including allowing them to be loud and rough-and-tumble just as we allow boys to be.'

Fear boys falling behind nothing new

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Growing gender enrolment [sic] gaps at universities and poor male test scores in reading and writing have a lot of commentators saying boys are being left behind in schools and workplaces increasingly shaped for women to succeed.

These concerns are nothing new according to University of Windsor education professor Christopher Greig. His recently published book, Ontario Boys: Masculinity and the Idea of Boyhood in Postwar Ontario, 1945—1960, argues that concerns about boyhood identity have been big issues in the past.
...
“Any time you have significant economic and societal changes you see gender roles can become threatened and you see that now also,” Greig said. “Today men continue to see women take on roles (men) used to dominate and succeed in fields they were not around in before, especially at universities.”
...
Greig says he hopes his book will help readers look at the bigger picture of how gender roles play a role in performance by boys at school and elsewhere.

“I hope readers will learn that the concerns we have for boys today are not new,” he said. “Rather than blame schools or parents, we should have a deeper conversation about gender roles and how they influence how boys are raised.”'

Head to Head: Third-wave feminism requires inequality

Mastodon · 27 February 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The problem today is that instead of fighting for equality, third-wave feminists seem to be fighting for superiority. This group of women cannot accept the fact that females are genetically different than males, that they pursue different careers and lead different lives. They aren't satisfied with women being able to vote, run for public office, go to college, work in their desired field, etc. Instead, feminists want women to get the jobs over men, get paid more than men, be accepted into colleges over men and more. That's not equality, that's dominance and a complete abuse of affirmative action. It should not be gender that decides things for a person. It should be personal drive, grades, achievement and capability.
...
There is no doubt that, at times, men get picked over women because of their sex. But there are also times that women are picked over men. Not every job gets the same pay. A teacher does not make the same as an engineer; an engineer does not make the same as a nurse. Are we supposed to close the pay gap and have everyone paid the same? Sure, if you want socialism.

Life isn't fair, but having women try to dominate does not make it fair either. People should not be hired based on meeting standards the government has laid out because of gender or race. People should be hired based on the quality of work that they perform.

Equality is a good thing, but when women start demanding to be chosen for a job over a man simply because of her gender, she is no longer being treated with equality; she is being acknowledged solely because of her gender, and that is detrimental to women's long-fought fight for equal treatment.'

SAVE: Abuse Myths: Numerous, Pervasive, and By Design

Matt · 1 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Intimate partner violence is the leading cause of death for African-American women aged 15-45." – Attorney General Eric Holder, Oct. 19, 2009

A.G. Holder's statement turned out to be wrong. So wrong, in fact that the Washington Post's Fact-Checker said the claim qualified for his notorious Four-Pinocchio rating: http://wapo.st/19Gxb1x

Holder's faux pas illustrates how even high government officials can be fooled by zealous advocates who dole out incredulous factoids.
These factoids are numerous, pervasive, and made by design:

Numerous

Have you noticed all the jaw-dropping abuse claims are out there?

- The Super Bowl is the biggest sex trafficking event in the United States
- 95% of domestic violence victims are female
- One in four college women has been a victim of sexual assault

One report examined 50 different domestic violence claims – and every one of them turned out to be false. That's a lot of misinformation! http://www.mediaradar.org/docs/RADARreport-50-DV-Myths.pdf'

Oklahoma father dies in police encounter after mother slaps daughter

Matt · 1 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A woman gets into an argument with her daughter and slaps her. The police show up and immediately confront the woman's husband, and somehow it leads to him dead on the ground. Imagine if the sexes had been totally reversed: Man gets into argument with son and slaps him. Police show up and confront the man's wife, and she is dead on the ground a few minutes later. That'd be weird, but this? How weird does it feel? If your intellectual reaction is that it's outrageous but emotionally it's... well, meh... then that's the degree to which you've been conditioned to accept male disposability and anti-male injustice. And tell me, we still live in a "patriarchy"? Excerpt:

'It was supposed to be a fun family outing to the movies, but Nair Rodriguez's 19-year-old daughter got under her skin. They fought, she said, and she slapped her daughter.

Moments later, police arrived on a domestic dispute call at the Moore, Oklahoma, theater and did not confront Nair Rodriguez but rather her husband, Luis. They took him down, and after the encounter on February 15, he was dead.

Cell phone video taken by Nair Rodriguez and released this week shows the final minutes of the takedown.

Nair Rodriguez accuses officers of brutality. Police say they were following protocol and used no undue force, although three officers have been suspended with pay.'

SAVE: "The Truth: Cure for Rape-Culture Hysteria"

Matt · 1 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Like we mentioned last week, things are getting a little crazy when it comes to rape prevention.

From female students being afraid the statue of a man in underwear might come to life and sexually assault them, to a college administrator suggesting we hang every student who is accused of rape, just because he's been accused. Okay, I may have exaggerated about the hanging.

We want to stop rape hysteria because we don't think it's helping one bit. In fact, it's making it more difficult to promote evidence-based solutions. One way to end the hysteria is with facts. So here you go:

FACT: Each year, similar percentages of men and women (Men: 5.3%; Women: 5.6%) experience sexual violence other than rape.

That shows me that sexual assault is not a "gender crime."

FACT: The number of rapes of females has fallen dramatically in the United States, from 402,000 in 1995 to 143,300 in 2010.

That shows me that while radical anti-rape activists are screaming about a rape epidemic, the opposite is actually true. We have been successful at reducing rape.

You can find seven more facts in our handout: "Nine Key Facts About Sexual Violence and Rape"

Please take a look, and feel to print it. Arm yourselves with accurate facts to counter the hysteria you come across.

ACTION: Pick one fact, and post it online today, with the fact-sheet URL:
http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/Nine-Facts-About-Sexual-Violence-and-Rape1.pdf

Thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Study: ‘Global Warming Will Cause 180,000 More Rapes by 2099’

Matt · 1 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How to prevent crime? 'Rein in the greenhouse gas emissions that are causing global warming in the first place.'

Controversial new research predicts that over the coming century, rising temperatures will result in more violent crime...'Police have long operated with the understanding that 'the summer is more dangerous than the winter,' explains Roman. 'To the extent that climate change causes people to be out and interacting more, there will be more crime.'

'Global warming isn't just going to melt the Arctic and flood our cities—it's also going to make Americans more likely to kill each other. That's the conclusion of a controversial new study that uses historic crime and temperature data to show that hotter weather leads to more murders, more rapes, more robberies, more assaults, and more property crimes. "Looking at the past, we see a strong relationship between temperature and crime," says study author Matthew Ranson, an economist with policy consulting firm Abt Associates. "We think that is likely to continue in the future."

Climate Depot Response:

If warm weather cases more rape, why the significant 'drop; in US rape rate since the 1970s cooling scare?

UK: Female serial killer becomes first woman told by judge to die in jail

Matt · 1 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Hey, welcome to the club. Male convicts not only get mandatory life sentences/death sentences for less (sometimes, a lot less, depending on the country) but people regularly state that they hope such men "rot to death," are raped/murdered while in jail, etc. So a mandatory life sentence handed out without further comment for a sadistic serial-murdering sociopath qualifies, IMO, as better treatment than is typical. Men so sentenced for similar (or lesser) acts are often also denounced by the judge at sentencing with all manner of more-polite ways to render the phrase "mass-murdering subhuman scumbag". And well-deserved. Just also well-deserved for female ones, too. Excerpt:

'Joanne Dennehy has become the first woman ordered to die behind bars by a judge, who told the murderer of three men she was "a cruel, calculating, selfish and manipulative serial killer".

Mr Justice Spencer decided on Friday that Dennehy's crimes were so exceptionally serious, that he became the first judge to sentence a woman to serve a whole-life term [link added], following a dramatic hearing at the Old Bailey in central London.

But during the hearing Dennehy smiled and chatted to some of the three accomplices sat in the dock with her who were also sentenced.

The judge revealed the 31-year-old had told a psychiatrist that she killed "to see if I was as cold as I thought I was. Then it got moreish and I got a taste for it".

The mother of two was driven by a "sadistic lust" for blood, stabbing three men she knew to death within 10 days in Peterborough last March, before travelling to Hereford where she knifed two men at random in broad daylight within nine minutes of one another as they walked their dogs.'

Teenage girls sentenced to life, 30 years for murder of "friend"

Matt · 1 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A West Virginia teenager has been sentenced to 30 years in prison for her role in her friend's death.

Seventeen-year-old Rachel Shoaf apologized before being sentenced Wednesday in Monongalia County Circuit Court. She pleaded guilty last May to second-degree murder in the July 2012 death of 16-year-old Skylar Neese.

Media outlets report that Judge Russell Clawges ordered Shoaf to serve her sentence in a state prison. She'll remain in a juvenile facility until her 18th birthday.

Co-defendant Shelia Eddy* was sentenced Jan. 24 to life in prison with the possibility of parole for first-degree murder.

Neese was lured from her home, stabbed to death and her body left in the woods. Prosecutors never divulged a motive. Shoaf told police the girls no longer wanted to be friends with Neese.'

---
* Eddy was 18 at the time of the murder. Shoaf dodged life by less than a year's worth of hanging out and doing whatever it is murderous teenage girls do to pass their time until reaching 18. Ahh, the justice system. Well at least they got some serious time for the serious crime. Guess we'll see how long they actually remain behind bars. Would they have gotten these sentences if their "friend" had had a penis? Probably not.

City's YMCA and police dept. start girls-only swim class

Minuteman · 2 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Special considerations have to be made to address modesty concerns so that the Muslim girls can swim and not reveal too much of themselves.

During the hourlong swim practice, all other swimmers are cleared out of the pool. The men's locker room is locked. Female life guards are brought in. The pool, which is on the building's third floor, has no windows so they don't have to worry about prying eyes from outside.

St. Paul Police Chief Tom Smith had discussions with Britts to let the Y know that, through the department's connections with the Somali-American community, they had learned that such a group was needed.
...
"We have to have privacy," said Ubah Ali, Dhamuke's mother.

For years, Ali said she has been trying to find a place where her daughter could swim, but nothing seemed to work. Not knowing how to swim is a safety risk, especially in the state of 10,000 lakes, Ali said.

Hani Hussein, who volunteers at the Al-Ihsan Islamic Center in St. Paul, said she looked into reserving public pools for girls, but it was too expensive.
...
Other metro YMCAs have water safety programs, but they don't specifically cater to the needs of Somali girls. However, Britts recalled that a YMCA in north Minneapolis did have a Somali girls swim group about a decade ago.

Funding for the group comes from two metrowide water safety grants from Hawkins Inc. and Abbey's Hope Charitable Foundation. The police department helps provide transportation for the girls to the YMCA.'

Barbara Kay: Rape culture and the delusions of the feminist mind

fathers4fairness · 2 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The fact is that “rape culture” is a form of popular mania like so many others before it. It does not exist. Or if it does, nobody has yet brought forward evidence of it. What we have seen is ideology attached to a great deal of personal narrative regarding unwanted or regretted sex. Some of those narratives have been compelling, but unsupported by evidence. Some have been compelling and found to be false allegations. Many of the narratives are based in recollection hazed over by alcoholic smog. And most of them would not stand up for two minutes in a criminal court of law.

Many observers have become more, not less skeptical with the mounting hysteria. One such observer has done something useful to validate our skepticism. Chad Hermann, a writer and management communication professor at Carnegie Mellon University’s Tepper School of Business, has published an article in communityvoices.post-gazette.com assessing both the claims and the actual statistical evidence for rape culture, in which he illuminates some glaring contradictions.

Hermann set the typical projected figure of 20-25% of women as victims of forced sex against the reported sexual assault offenses over three years at Pittsburgh’s three largest residential universities: the University of Pittsburgh (UP), Carnegie Mellon University (CMU) and Duquesne University (DU). In 2009: At UP, with 14,800 female students, four sexual assaults were reported. At CMU, with about 3,900 female students, six sexual assaults were reported (a three-year high). At DU, with 5,700 females, three were reported.

But wait: We “know” (we don’t really) that 90% of rapes go unreported! Okay, Hermann adjusts the numbers to reflect that, giving UP 40 assaults, CMU 60 and DU 30. Are we at one-in-four yet? Hardly. We’re at one-in-185 (average of the three). That was in 2009. Over three years, 2007-9, women’s chances of being sexually assaulted average out for the reported cases to one in 1,877. If you factor in the 90% allegedly unreported, you get a maximum of only one in 188.

So relax ladies. Although there should never be sexual assaults on any woman on campus, there is no need to panic. Moreover, it is fair comment to observe that those women students who do not drink to excess, who are prudent about the kind of parties they attend, and who are selective about their sexual partners in general will doubtless reduce their odds much further, down to statistically nugatory levels.'

Canada: Girls top boys in literacy

fathers4fairness · 3 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Girls are better than boys -- in literacy, at least. And the gender gap keeps getting wider.

Males have been doing worse compared to their female classmates when taking the Grade 10 Ontario Secondary School Literacy Test (OSSLT) during the last five years -- from 6.6% below the girls in 2009 to 9% last year, according to this year's Fraser Institute Secondary School Report Card.

"That's a fair increase -- almost 50% increase from where it was before," said the Fraser Institute's Peter Cowley.

Meanwhile, the Grade 9 math gender gap favoured boys at 45% of schools across the province. The sexes performed evenly at 32.4% of schools.
...
Education research analyst Terri Thompson said girls seem to be doing better in all academic areas except math. The reading gap between boys and girls has been a long-standing issue for the past few decades.

"One of the reasons why girls are starting to do better in science is because literacy is becoming more embedded in the curriculum across the board," she said. "Narrative fiction is what girls tend to enjoy, whereas boys often don't enjoy that as much," she added. "But they have a wide range of material they often do enjoy, but are often not represented in schools -- like non-fiction and some graphic novels."'

Sweden: Children of older men at greater risk of mental illness

fathers4fairness · 3 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Or perhaps it is equally due to older mothers - or the increased incidence of diagnosing psychiatric illnesses. Excerpt:

'Children born to fathers over the age of 45 are at greater risk of developing psychiatric problems and more likely to struggle at school, according to the findings of a large-scale study.

The research found that children with older fathers were more often diagnosed with disorders such as autism, psychosis, attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD), schizophrenia and bipolar disorder. They also reported more drug abuse and suicide attempts.

"We were shocked when we saw the comparisons," said Brian D'Onofrio, the first author of the study at Indiana University in the US. But he added that it was impossible to be sure that older age was to blame for the problems.

Researchers at Indiana University and the Karolinska Institute in Stockholm studied medical and educational records of more than 2.6 million babies born to 1.4 million men. The group amounted to nearly 90% of births in Sweden from 1973 and 2001.
...
Ryan Edwards, who studies the economics of health and ageing at the City University of New York, said the study revealed "some evidence that paternal age may worsen children's psychiatric, behavioral and educational outcomes."

But he warned that the results hinged on the scientists' comparisons between siblings. "In that setting, it is difficult to separate the overlapping effects of paternal age, children's age, and birth order in a convincing way," he said.

Jennifer Roff, also at the City University of New York, had similar reservations. "I'm not saying that there is no possible genetic role for paternal age. I simply think that this could be confounded with other environmental factors like birth order. The extent of the problem will vary. I can imagine that for things like cognitive scores, this could be a larger problem than for things like schizophrenia."'

US: Mandatory domestic violence arrests raise death rate 400%

fathers4fairness · 4 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A shocking illustration of unintended consequences -- the long-term analysis of 1200 domestic violence cases in Milwaukee marks the greatest challenge yet to the “mandatory arrest” policies that were adopted across North America and Britain in the 1980s. Those policies, for domestic assault without serious injury, came after years of police minimizing domestic violence as a private family matter, and are broadly supported as key to reducing harm.
...
Based on an experiment in Milwaukee, it shows a four-fold increase in early death for victims who were employed at the time of the violence, with an even stronger effect among African-Americans. The findings are to be presented jointly in the U.S. and at a policing conference in the U.K.

“It remains to be seen whether democracies can accept these facts as they are, rather than as we might wish them to be,” writes Lawrence W. Sherman, a criminologist at Cambridge University, in an article co-authored with Edward Flynn, Milwaukee’s chief of police.
...
“It should be a warning to Canada, where there’s never been this kind of experiment,” Prof. Sherman said, but added neither the Canadian government nor police “have shown any interest in using rigorous testing methods to develop evidence about the effects of police decisions, or to compare the effects of two possible ways of dealing with a policing situation.”'

"Women Still Left Out of Medical Research: Report"

Minuteman · 4 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Two decades after the passage of a landmark law mandating that women be represented in government-funded medical research, a new report reveals that the world of science is still ignoring women's unique health issues far more than it should.

...

While women are now more routinely included in clinical trials and an entire field of women's health has emerged beyond reproductive health, "there are still enormous gaps in the scientific process as it relates to women," said Johnson, who is executive director of The Connors Center for Women's Health at Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston.

...

However, Gordon said, a lot of researchers don't want to do studies on women of childbearing age due to their monthly hormonal fluctuations, for example.

"When you're doing animal studies, you want to make things as standardized as possible," she explained. "If you add in gender, how do you standardize, especially considering the hormone issues," but that doesn't excuse the disparity, Gordon noted.

Gordon said pregnancy and safety to unborn children are concerns, too. "Again, I'm not excusing it or saying it's an appropriate reason, but it is a concern investigators have," she pointed out.

...

Women need to drive the conversation, said Dr. Eve Higginbotham, vice dean for diversity and inclusion at the Perelman School of Medicine at the University of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia.

"We still have a lot of bias embedded in academic medicine, and certainly it comes down to the people actually doing the studies," said Higginbotham. "Women are still struggling to get to the highest levels of academic medicine. In many cases, women are not the primary drivers in many of these studies."

Higginbotham noted that the highest levels of academia in medical schools are still slim on women -- women only represent 5 percent of medical professors in the United States.'

Suicide in the military: Army-NIH funded study points to risk and protective factors

Minuteman · 4 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The largest study of mental health risk and resilience ever conducted among U.S. military personnel today released its first findings related to suicide attempts and deaths in a series of three JAMA Psychiatry articles. Findings from The Army Study to Assess Risk and Resilience in Servicemembers (Army STARRS) include: the rise in suicide deaths from 2004 to 2009 occurred not only in currently and previously deployed soldiers, but also among soldiers never deployed; nearly half of soldiers who reported suicide attempts indicated their first attempt was prior to enlistment; and soldiers reported higher rates of certain mental disorders than civilians, including attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD), intermittent explosive disorder (recurrent episodes of extreme anger or violence), and substance use disorder.

...

The articles reflect different strategies to evaluate information on suicide risk and potentially protective factors. An article by lead author Michael Schoenbaum of NIMH examined the suicide and accident death rates in relation to basic socio-demographic and Army experience factors in the 975,057 regular Army soldiers who served between Jan. 1, 2004 and Dec. 31, 2009. This study found that the suicide rates increased during this time period, even among those who had never deployed, and also found that being deployed increased suicide risk for women more than it did for men. However, suicide risk still remained lower for deployed women than for deployed men.

...

Although the root causes for the rise in Army suicides still remain unknown, these three studies point to risk factors, which may help identify potential protective factors, focus existing prevention programs, and foster the development of novel efforts to reduce suicide and suicidal thoughts and actions among service members at higher risk.'

NY Times: Democrats Try Wooing Ones Who Got Away: White Men

fathers4fairness · 4 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is a challenge that runs throughout the nation's industrial heartland, in farm states and across the South, after a half-century of economic, demographic and cultural shifts that have reshaped the electorate. Even in places like Michigan, where it has been decades since union membership lists readily predicted Democratic votes, many in the party pay so little attention to white working-class men that it suggests they have effectively given up on converting them.

...

No Democratic presidential candidate has won a majority of white men since Lyndon B. Johnson in 1964. Jimmy Carter, Bill Clinton and Barack Obama all prevailed with support of the so-called rising electorate of women, especially single women, and minorities. But fewer of those voters typically participate in midterm elections, making the votes of white men more potent and the struggle of Democrats for 2014 clear.

...

Democrats generally win the votes of fewer than four in 10 white men. But they win eight of 10 minority voters and a majority of women, who have been a majority of the national electorate since 1984, while white men have shrunk to a third, and are still shrinking.

...

Some white men have proved to be within reach: single men, college students and graduates with advanced degrees, the nonreligious, and gay men. But working-class married men remain hardest to win over and, unless they are in unions, get the least attention — to the dismay of some partisans.

...

Democrats' gloom about white men was eased temporarily by Mr. Obama's 2008 election when he won 41 percent of white male voters — the first time a Democrat exceeded 40 percent since Mr. Carter in 1976. But their support for his re-election fell to 35 percent, roughly what Democrats have gotten since they lost to Richard Nixon.'

Boy suspended for pointing finger "like a gun"

Mastodon · 4 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A central Ohio principal says she suspended a 10-year-old boy from school for three days for pretending his finger was a gun and pointing it at another student's head.

The boy's father says it's the adults who are acting childish for suspending the boy from Devonshire Alternative Elementary School in Columbus last week.

The fifth-grader said he was "just playing around." But district spokesman Jeff Warner told The Columbus Dispatch (HTTP://BIT.LY/1JO1RL7*) that Devonshire Principal Patricia Price has warned students about pretend gun play numerous times this year, and everyone should know the rules by now. He said warnings have been included in three newsletters sent home with kids.

Warner says the boy put his finger to the side of the other student's head and pretended to shoot "kind of execution style."

"The kids were told, `If you don't stop doing this type of stuff, there would be consequences,'" Warner said. "It's just been escalating."'

---
*Ed.: The shortcut link as cited in the original article is not re-directing correctly. The source article of reference for the shortcut link is:
http://www.dispatch.com/content/stories/local/2014/03/04/boy-who-used-finger-like-gun-suspended.html

How Colleges Could Get Rid of Fraternities

Mastodon · 4 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fraternities offer their members opportunities for community service, friendship, and leadership. They also create environments that seem to breed hazing, binge drinking, and sexual assault. Universities have struggled to harness fraternities' power for good and diminish their capability for evil, but so far little has worked. So what can universities do to stem the flow of fatalities, injuries, and sexual assaults at fraternities? Instead of threatening fraternities with everything from limited rush week activities to double secret probation, some think the solution is to end the reign of fraternities on American campuses altogether. Last month, Bloomberg's editors called for college administrations to abolish fraternities. Caitlin Flanagan called for the "shuttering" of fraternities in a 2011 Wall Street Journal piece. Other writers have penned similar pieces.

These articles take for granted that Greek life can be dethroned, but the reality is more complicated. It would take more than angsty editorials to push fraternities off of the American college campus. Fraternities and universities share a centuries-long history, a student body eager to find the collegiate promise land of keg-fueled parties, and a relationship that is, in many ways, mutually beneficial. If deaths, binge drinking, and sexual assault haven't been enough to bring them down, what would have to happen to dismantle fraternities? Here are some possible scenarios:'

Somaliland leaders want female genitals to be cut

Matt · 5 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Rightfully, we read this article, and think it's incomprehensible, especially as it says the girls who had it done to them think it was good for them. Sound familiar? Switch the genders and most people in western countries would be "meh..." about it. Religion's no excuse when it comes to FGM, right? So why is it when it comes to MGM? Excerpt:

'The 30 Somali teenagers - both boys and girls - all agreed: Female genital mutilation is harmful and the practice should be abandoned. But what they really meant, they revealed moments later, is that girls should have their genitalia cut - just not sewn shut.

"It's our tradition and if the girls are not subjected to suna(cutting) she will not be accepted for marriage," said Asthma Ibrahim Jabril, 17.

The students, who are part of an afterschool club in Somaliland which the U.N. children's agency helps fund, discuss issues like child labor, early marriage, and female genital mutilation in a classroom with several large hearts scrawled along the walls.

...

All 15 girls sitting opposite the boys at Sheik Nuur Primary school have undergone suna_the removal of the clitoris and the labia minora. They all said it was the right thing to do.

Female genital mutilation comes in many different forms. The other form known by the Somali teens is sewing the vagina shut until marriage. Everyone agreed that this should be ended.

...

Female genital mutilation can cause severe bleeding and problems with urination, cysts, infections, infertility and complications with childbirth, including an increased risk of newborn death. More than 125 million girls and women alive today have been cut in 29 African and Middle Eastern countries, the World Health Organization says.

In Somalia, the cultural expectation for girls to undergo genital mutilation comes down to sex and marriage. Men expect to marry a virgin. If a girl has not undergone female genital mutilation, she is considered unclean.'

SAVE: Affirmative Consent: Exercise in Parody

Matt · 5 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The National Intimate Partner and Sexual Violence Survey found that each year, nearly identical percentages of men and women experience sexual violence other than rape (men: 5.3%; women: 5.6%). And rapes have plummeted to their lowest levels in decades—see graph on the right. Still, campus extremists insist our society is permeated with what they call “rape-culture.”

Their solution? Affirmative Consent, which the U.S. Department of Education describes as persons’ “affirmative, unambiguous, and voluntary agreement” for any sexual encounter.

Advocates like to brandish the slogan, “Consent is Sexy.” In reality, Affirmative Consent is the latest example of government bureaucrats and university administrators trying to micro-manage the most intimate details of citizens’ lives.'

BBC: Psychological abuse 'should be a made crime'

jkmerr · 5 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Psychological abuse should be made a crime in England and Wales in order to save more victims of domestic violence, campaigners have said.

The groups, including Women's Aid, say current legislation focuses too much on specific incidents, such as an assault.

They say the law fails to take into account power and control, which are the essence of domestic abuse.

The Home Office said it would carefully consider the idea after a police review of domestic abuse was completed.

Women's Aid, the Sara Charlton Charitable Foundation and stalking advice service Paladin have urged the government to criminalise "coercive control", patterns of abusive behaviour and causing psychological harm, in order to make it easier to prove long-running abuse.'

UK official: All-women shortlists could be allowed in FTSE 100 companies

Mastodon · 5 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Business Secretary Vince Cable has backed recommendations which could see headhunters draft women-only shortlists for board-level posts, eliminating men entirely from the recruitment process.

All-women shortlists are not currently used in the private sector because they are fraught with legal difficulties and leave companies open to sex discrimination claims from men left out of the hiring process.

But Mr Cable has asked the UK's equality body, the Equalities and Human Rights Commission, to create guidance for headhunters on when and how women-only shortlists could be used in accordance with the law, free from the threat of litigation.

A source close to the Department for Business said the Government had not ruled out the possibility of changing the law to make all-women shortlists legal "without grey areas".

...

Employment experts said that all-women shortlists are unlawful unless companies can demonstrate in a court of law that there are no men of equal merit for the job - which they point out would be largely impossible.

Meanwhile, a former FTSE 100 chairman, who preferred to remain nameless, said: "Is this really going to work anyway? At the end of the day, women won't be appointed on merit – making their appointments tokenistic – and it actually sets women up for failure.'

Swedish firm defends 'ladies only' job ad

Mastodon · 5 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Malmö start-up Brisk.io, which creates tools for sales organizations, recently advertised two positions within their company. The firm has been on the lookout for a blogger/marketing position and an outbound sales junior role, and stated in the job listings that they had a preference for female candidates.

"The position is in Malmö (Sweden) and you are fluent in English and are proficient with the technical tools. Preferably you are a woman. Yes, we are biased to hiring women for all positions," stated the advert.

At present, Brisk.io employs one woman in its 10-strong workforce. Co-founder and CEO Hampus Jakobsson told The Local that the lack of females in the office had been the motivation for the biased job posting.

"The idea behind the advert was a collective one. I wouldn't say that it is a policy but a philosophy as we want to create a non-homogeneous work environment," said Jakobsson.
...
"When an employer wants to hire a specific person for a job they need to state that preference in the advert. In this instance it could be that the company is mainly made up of men and they want it to be more gender balanced," a spokesman said.

"However, an employer cannot discriminate on grounds on ethnicity or race as that would illegal."'

"Women’s Jobs Are More Stressful And Less Flexible Than Men’s"

Mastodon · 5 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 27 developed countries, women’s jobs are not just lower paid than men’s, but they also offer less flexibility and fewer advancement opportunities while inducing more stress, according to a new study from SAGE and the British Sociological Association.

The researchers, Professor Haya Stier of Tel Aviv University and Professor Meir Yaish of the University of Haifa, looked at survey data from 8,500 working men and 9,000 women in a wide swath of countries, including the United States. They found that on a scale of one to five, men’s answers were 8 percent more positive than women’s when it came to their income and their opportunities for promotion.

Men were also much more likely to report flexibility and independence: they scored 15 percent higher when it came to whether their employers decide start and end times, how their schedule is organized, and whether they can take time off, and they scored 2 percent higher in terms of how independently they can work, their ability to improve their skills, and how interesting their work is. Meanwhile, they scored 5 percent lower than women when it came to stress levels. They also report more job security.'

Female candidate for city council office mails out 'women are more honorable and ethical' fliers to voters

Mastodon · 5 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A candidate for the Santa Fe City Council has mailed a flier urging voters to support her in a race against two men, because, she says, women make better public servants.

Mary Bonney, an art gallery owner on trendy Canyon Road and a candidate for District 2 in the state capital, cites five reasons to vote for women, including: They are “more responsive to constituents,” “more focused on cooperation” and “have proven to be more honorable and ethical.”
...
The flier also quotes Margaret Thatcher, who said, “If you want something said ask a man; if you want something done, ask a woman.”

When asked if the flier may alienate men in her district, Bonney said, “It certainly wasn’t meant to intend to offend men, for sure.”

But if a man sent out a flier saying men are more responsive to constituents, more focused on cooperation and are more honorable and ethical, wouldn’t that risk the ire of women voters?

“I don’t agree it’s sexist,” Bonney told New Mexico Watchdog. “I don’t agree with it, but I don’t think it would be seen as sexist. I think you’re reading way too much into this, into the gender part of it.”

On the front of the flier, Bonney attacks opponents Rad Acton and Joe Maestas, labeling them as “Bad Boys.”
...
Update 3/5: Bonney ended up finishing fourth in a field of five candidates.'

Mother drives carload of children into ocean

Minuteman · 5 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The amateur vision shows a group of men rushing over to the black vehicles as it slowly edges further out into the ocean with a family inside.

Using the car's boot and doors to access the stricken children the men pluck the kids to safety as their 31-year-old mother walks away from the vehicle in a daze.

Mr Tesseneer said the impromptu heroes thought their work was done when one of the children told them there was still someone trapped in the car.

"The kids are like, 'No there's a baby. There's a baby,'" Mr Tesseneer said.

"She (the mother) wouldn't say a word. She didn't tell us nothing about a baby."
...
Their mother was taken to a local hospital for a psychiatric assessment.

She has refused to speak to police investigating the incident.'

"World’s biggest-ever survey on violence against women"

jkmerr · 5 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

The European Union's Agency on Fundamental Rights has conducted interviews of approximately 42,000 women and concluded at 1/3 of European women are victims of violence.

A BBC News story on the survey here. The survey's main report is here.

Perhaps most importantly, the actual content of the survey is here. From this, it appears that if a woman has ever had an "offensive comment" posted about her on the Internet, or she has ever felt that her partner was suspicious about her sexual fidelity she may have been considered a victim of violence for purposes of this survey.

SAVE E-lert: Ask DED Sec'y Duncan: "Do You Abide by Affirmative Consent Mandates?"

Matt · 6 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Here we go with more craziness around preventing sexual assault on campus.

The Dept. of Education (DED) wants college students to follow Affirmative Consent requirements, which they describe as persons' "affirmative, unambiguous, and voluntary agreement" for any sexual encounter.

And, lawmakers in California claim that Affirmative Consent mandates that both partners give their explicit, verbal consent on a repeated basis throughout the process of having sex.

Now you can't ask, "Do you want me now?" to be sexy, you have to ask and get an answer, over and over again. And if anti-rape policies keep getting crazier, you better get it on audio tape, with a date and time stamp.

Let's ask DED Secy. Arne Duncan if his lovemaking sessions include this type of ongoing verbal exchange. Ask him, "The last time you had sex, did you follow Affirmative Consent requirements?"

Here's Arne Duncan's email: arne.duncan-at-ed.gov

And here's the info on Affirmative Consent. Check it out: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/affirmative-consent/

Thank you!

Teri Stoddard, Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Podcast: Should men be exempt from paying child support?

el cid · 7 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Podcast here. In brief, a discussion between two men who believe men should be exempt from paying child support because men have no reproductive rights.

China: "Wife cuts off husband's penis, again"

Minuteman · 7 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The Bobbitting started when a man, identified as Han Mou, asked his wife for a divorce, EChinacities.com reports.

The wife, named Zhang, believed her husband was seeking a divorce because he was in a relationship with at least one other woman.

Seeking to put an end to his suspected extra-marital rendezvous Zhang drugged him with sleeping pills, cut off his penis and flushed it down the toilet.

She was arrested but later bailed and continued to live with her genitally challenged husband and their children.
...
With his newly reclaimed manhood Mr Han set out on the quest for a new wife once again, expecting Zhang would be jailed, leaving him to raise his children alone.

Unimpressed with her husband's antics Zhang dusted off her sleeping pills and drugged a glass of his milk.

Mr Han later woke up in agony and screamed that his wife had cut off "everything".

Zhang called an ambulance and police to give herself up.

Castration has been referred to as Bobbitting in popular culture since 1993 when John Wayne Bobbitt's wife Lorena cut off his penis while he slept.'

Title IX gives women opportunities at men's expense

Mastodon · 7 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Are men's rights being taken away when women are granted more? In most situations, such as equal pay and equal treatment in the workforce, the answer is no. The case of Title IX, however, is more complicated. Title IX sets criteria for universities to ensure that "sex discrimination [is banned] in educational institutions receiving federal funds." The legislation has many benefits. For example, it prevents women from being harassed, abused or treated differently in an academic setting. When it comes to athletic opportunities, however, a lot of men are losing out. Because Title IX requires equal funding for both men's and women's teams, many universities have cut men's programs, claiming they are unable to raise the budget for women's sports without cutting from men's. Is this necessarily the truth? No, because there are several other options available. Women in sports are gaining more opportunities while men are losing out for no clear or real reason.'

Student-teacher sex: Are more female teachers being charged?

Mastodon · 8 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Mobile math teacher is convicted of having sex with a teenager. A fifth-grade teacher is implicated in Pell City. A foreign language teacher is charged in Tuscaloosa. A Sheffield Junior High School teacher, in a car, having sex, with a 15-year-old.

All of the accused are women. In fact, about one-third of the cases of possibly inappropriate relationships investigated by Alabama education officials in 2013 involved women.

"It may not be happening more, but now there's more punishment," said Josh Klapow, a clinical psychologist and associate professor at UAB's School of Public Health. "We don't know those incidents that aren't being caught and aren't being reported."'

Sweden: Greens propose Women's Day as holiday

Mastodon · 8 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sweden's Green party have proposed turning the annual International Women's Day (IWD) into a public holiday and said that gender equality has gone backwards under the current government.

In an op-ed published in Swedish daily Svenska Dagbladet on IWD the party's spokesperson Gustav Fridolin said it should become a red day on the calendar. The editorial was co-signed by Green party politicians Åsa Romson and Gunvor G Ericsson.

"Sweden continues to be an unequal country. On the boards of listed companies it is still more common to be called Johan than to be a woman. We still have not, unlike all the other Nordic countries, had a woman as the head of government," wrote the Green party members in the op-ed.
...
The Greens also made calls for changes to the justice and education systems and for Sweden to be an example for equality in the world.
...
For the Green Party's proposal to become a reality an existing public holiday would have to be scrapped from the calendar and become a regular work day. The party declined to suggest which day should be removed and replaced with International Women's Day.

"This probably means that one of the existing public holidays would become a working day," they wrote in the concluding paragraph.'

Swedish man ruled legal father of unwanted twins

Mastodon · 8 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An older Swedish couple with one child decided to seek help conceiving another, but were forced abroad as embryo donations - where both the egg and the sperm come from third parties - are not legal in Sweden. The man, however, claimed he was clear about wanting just one child, partly because he and his wife are both in their fifties, and the couple ticked a box stating so on the consent form.

The first attempt did not work, but the wife travelled abroad again for a second try, this time leaving her husband at home. At the clinic, she amended the consent form to allow the staff to implant two embryos at once. She did not tell her husband. The second attempt failed too, but the woman persisted, again travelling abroad for a third procedure. Yet no matter her desire for another child, the news that she was expecting twins would cost her her husband.

"They were so at odds over this that they agreed to no longer live together," the 56-year-old's lawyer Ulf Bjermer told The Local on Thursday. "She said in court that she acted against her husband's wishes, but said that she so desperately wanted a child."

While there could be legal implications to her lying on the consent form, Bjermer was quick to point out that the ex-husband did not take her to court for any criminal offence. Rather, he simply wanted the court to recognize that he had consented to one child only, and that he therefore legally should not be considered the father to both children.

The district court disagreed. It ruled that the man was both twins' legal father.

"If you look past the family law aspects, this case is important when it comes to the content and the actual meaning of giving consent," said Bjermer, whose client has instructed him to appeal the verdict.'

Tammy Bruce: War on boys an attempt to create fearful populace

Mastodon · 8 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

We asked her, "So many times we hear about 'the war on boys'--of a boy fashioning his hand or breakfast pastry into the shape of gun, then being suspended. What are we to think of this?"

Bruce responded:
Look, there is a culture through the left that wants to emasculate the nation as a whole. It's through the military, of course, you see Obama trying to do that, as well. We see it through what's happening in education. Political correctness itself was meant to end the notion that we could have direct conversations, that we could be ambitious, that we could be our own people.

Men are seen, of course, by the feminist movement and by the left who are led by the same individuals as those with the feminist-movement mentality. And they see the best way to emasculate the nation--certainly to cut it off at its knees--is to start with the children. And the biggest threat there are little boys.

If you can change the mentality of little boys, train them from an early age to not be who they are--and that's, of course, what the left's general attitude is for everyone in this country... Ironically, I think the most difficult people to train in that way are little boys.'

Wikipedia on Tammy Bruce here. Note she used to be the head of LA's NOW chapter and after clashing with their national leadership, went her own way. I've noticed that happens a lot with them.

Cheap shot: Cops say Wisconsin woman offered $1,000, sex to kill fiance

Matt · 9 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Wisconsin woman offered a hitman $1,000 — and sex — to kill her fiance, cops say.

Jessica Strom, 33, of Wausau, was arraigned Monday on a charge of conspiracy to commit to first-degree homicide.

Late last month she hatched her plan to kill her beau, John Schellpfeffer, according to court documents posted to The Smoking Gun.

Strom allegedly met with an acquaintance who she knew through Northcentral Technical College on Feb. 26, telling him she had a “business proposal.”

“Would you ever kill anybody?” she asked, according to documents.

Cops said the friend, whose name was redacted from court papers, replied he could never do that.
...
“Don’t tell anyone about this,” she allegedly said. “I don’t want to have to kill you too.”

That’s when the acquaintance decided to alert cops.

Cops said it never became clear why Strom wanted Schellpfeffer dead, only saying her fiance was “a really bad person who has done bad things.” She said she’d plotted the murder for two years, according to cops.
...
He could simply “blow his brains out and walk out,” Strom said, according to police.

The next time they met the informant asked for $50,000 to do the job — but then was talked down to $1,000, according to documents.

“It’s better than nothing, I guess,” the informant said.

“And some sex!” Strom said, according to papers. After the murder she allegedly pledged to meet with the informant and “pay you and f--- you and whatever.”

She is being on $250,000 bond and faces up to 60 years behind bars.'

Civil Rights Lawsuit Alleges Deputies Burned Man's Genitals With Taser

Matt · 9 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. I do not think for a moment that if this is true, any given police officer of either sex would have treated a female this way -- not that a police officer ought to be treating anyone this way no matter what. Excerpt:

'A Southern California man is accusing Los Angeles County Sheriff's deputies in a federal civil rights lawsuit of attacking him and using a Taser on his genitals while his mother watched.

Daniel Johnson, 26, filed the lawsuit in January against the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department after deputies allegedly threw him to the ground and attacked him for asking if he could pick up his father's cigarette to avoid a fine.

Johnson was cooking dinner at his mother's Altadena home on Dec. 26, 2012, when a man knocked on the door to tell Johnson his father was being ticketed outside for putting out a cigarette on the ground, according to the filed complaint.

he complaint describes Johnson's father as a 58-year-old disabled man who walks with a cane and often drops things because of nerve damage in his hands.

LA Sheriff's "Deputy Abdulfattah," as named in the complaint, explained to Johnson he was giving his father a $1,000 ticket and community service for littering.

Johnson offered to pick the cigarette up from the ground, when Abdulfattah told Johnson, "I can write you a ticket too if you want," according to the complaint.
...
Russell, according to the complaint, allegedly put Johnson in a "full nelson hold" with his arms under Johnson's armpits and hand behind Johnson's head.

At the same time Russell then allegedly took Johnson to the ground, Abdulfattah allegedly hit Johnson's father in the face, according to the complaint.

While Johnson was held to the ground by Russell, Abdulfattah used a Taser on Johnson's genitals multiple times, the complaint stated.

"He was definitely point blank," Johnson said. "He was right above me as he Tased me, so there's no mistake that he was trying to Tase me in my genitalia."

His mother said the deputy stared at her while she screamed.

"He's looking directly at me every time he pulls that trigger, and at one point my son says, 'Mom, I'm OK," Johnson's mother, Rose Gonzales, told NBC4. "So at that point, I realize this guy is doing this because I am reacting."

Johnson could "smell his flesh burning from the tases" and was screaming in pain, according to the complaint.

Johnson told NBC4 he begged the deputies to stop and repeatedly told them he was not resisting. He was eventually arrested for battery on a police officer, though he maintains in the complaint he never engaged in any physical contact with the deputies.

Abdulfattah allegedly told Johnson to "shut up" when Johnson said his father needed his inhaler, the complaint stated.

LA County Sheriff's Department officials would not comment on the case except to describe one of the deputies in question as "the best deputy in the division."

Johnson, a graduate of University of California, Berkeley with no criminal history, said the battery charges were never filed and the case was dropped. He said he just hopes audio recordings or video exist of the confrontation.'

Mandatory arrest in domestic violence call-outs causes early death in victims

Matt · 9 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New research from a major 'randomised' arrest experiment 23 years ago finds that domestic violence victims whose partners were arrested on misdemeanor charges – mostly without causing injury – were 64% more likely to have died early, compared to victims whose partners were warned but not removed by police.

Among African-American victims, arrest increased early mortality by a staggering 98% – as opposed to white victims, whose mortality was increased from arrest by just 9%. The research also found that employed victims suffered the worst effects of their partners' arrests. Employed black victims with arrested partners suffered a death rate over four times higher than those whose partner received a warning at the scene. No such link was found in white victims.

The study's authors say that causes are currently unknown but such health impacts are consistent with chronic stress that could have been amplified by partner arrest. They call for a "robust review" of US and UK mandatory arrest policies in domestic violence cases.

"It remains to be seen whether democracies can accept these facts as they are, rather than as we might wish them to be," said Professor Lawrence Sherman from Cambridge University's Institute of Criminology, who authored the study with his colleague Heather M. Harris from University of Maryland.'

NPO: Let's Debate — Determining Custody

Matt · 9 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some people argue that determining custody is fairly simple — in their view, that parent who provided the primary care during the marriage should be awarded primary custody subsequent to divorce.

This argument recently surfaced in response to National Parents Organization's founder and chair Ned Holstein's interview on National Public Radio. An Indiana attorney who Blogs for Babble, a website sponsored by Disney wrote this:

"In Indiana, the judges will look at a series of factors in determining which parent should be the primary custodian of the children. What it basically boils down to is which parent has been acting as the primary custodian of the children? Which parent has been changing the kids' diapers? Which parent helps the kids with their schoolwork? Which parent gets up in the morning and gets the kids off to school? Which parent spends the most time with the kids? Which parent does the kids' laundry?"

Did you get that judges? The primary caregiver gets the primary custody. Done. Next case...

Now I'm not sure what century this guy is living in... but in this century women work outside of the home and men take care of children. Now what? He continues:

"When the father has been the parent who has been changing the diapers and helping the kids with their schoolwork, the court will award dad custody without hesitation."'

Police: Mother Assaulted Girl, 3, For Microwaving Cellphone

Matt · 9 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A mother was arrested this week, on charges that she assaulted her 3-year-old daughter after the child destroyed her cellphone by cooking it in the microwave oven.

Police sources told CBS 2 that Krystle Reyes, 28, was arrested at her apartment on West 49th Street in Hell's Kitchen at 5 p.m. Thursday, after neighbors called 911 to report a commotion.

When officers arrived, they found the girl in the bathtub with a cut below her right eye, as well as bruises on her back, right arm, left ear and neck, sources said.

Reyes told police she grabbed the girl by the arm, placed her in the tub and smacked her, sources said.

The child was hospitalized and the city Administration for Children's Services was notified, sources said.

Reyes was charged with assault of a child less than 7 years old and reckless endangerment, police said.'

Nearly half of women in Massachusetts experience some kind of sexual violence?

Mastodon · 9 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'It's White Ribbon Day on Beacon Hill. 22News spoke with lawmakers, men and boys throughout Massachusetts about their vow to end violence towards women.

One in seven women in Massachusetts has experienced rape in their lifetime. Now, men from Beacon Hill and around the state pledge to lower that statistic.

"I take the pledge because I said the women in my life deserve better. They deserve to be safe. If I can feel safe, they should be able to feel safe," said University of Massachusetts Amherst student, Scott Greene.

The issue hits close to home; nearly half of all women in Massachusetts have experienced some type of sexual violence other than rape. The White Ribbon Day Campaign hopes to change that statistic by urging men and boys to take a stand and help end violence towards women.'

UK: CBI: universities should set 'diversity targets' to get more women into science

Mastodon · 9 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Universities should be required to set “diversity targets” to recruit more women into traditional subjects to address a gender divide at the heart of the education system, according to Britain’s biggest business group.

A major report from the Confederation of British Industry will call for drastic measures to boost the number of girls studying disciplines such as physics and maths to a high standard.

The study – to be released this week – will say that all school sixth-forms, colleges and universities should draw up recruitment targets designed to create a more balanced intake on A-level and degree courses.

Girls currently outperform boys at A-level and are more likely to go to university and graduate with a good degree.

But the CBI claim that too many are being shunted onto traditionally “feminine” subjects such as the arts and insist changes are needed to reverse long-standing gender stereotypes among teachers, pupils and parents.'

Women of Congress Promote STEM Education, Careers

Mastodon · 9 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"All I could visualize, to be perfectly honest, was being a teacher, a social worker and a secretary," said Rep. Susan A. Davis, D-Calif.
The women of Congress are working to change that dynamic and empower young women to see themselves in STEM — science, technology, engineering and mathematics — careers.

The women of Congress are working to change that dynamic and empower young women to see themselves in STEM — science, technology, engineering and mathematics — careers.

The congresswomen joined leaders from businesses, nonprofits and global corporations for a luncheon Wednesday hosted by the nonpartisan Million Women Mentors. The almost 150 people in attendance dined together to celebrate MWM's efforts to promote mentoring young women in STEM fields.
...
To bridge the gender gap and bolster the U.S. labor force, female leaders say young girls need to see STEM careers as an option through mentorships and exciting hands-on education.

"When you give a girl a chance to build a robot when she's 5 or build a rocket when she's 10, she will have the inspiration and the know-how to become interested in those fields and see her future in those fields," said Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand, D-N.Y.
...
The representatives praised their fellow women, saying they can bring different skills to STEM careers compared with their male counterparts. "Women work twice as hard," said Rep. Grace F. Napolitano, D-Calif. And Rep. Tammy Duckworth, D-Ill., an Iraq War veteran, elicited applause from the audience when she said, "If you need someone who can multitask in an aircraft . . . you need a woman to do that."'

Australia: MP Sharman Stone says party needs mandatory female quotas

Mastodon · 9 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Victorian Liberal backbencher Sharman Stone has suggested her colleagues should look to Labor for ideas about how to get more women into politics.

"I'm beginning to think very seriously that really, the Liberal Party, we have to do more," Dr Stone told AM.

The Labor Party has long had a quota system in place, although it is yet to achieve its target of getting women into 40 per cent of its seats.

The Liberal Party is opposed to the Labor model of quotas, arguing candidates should be preselected on merit rather than gender.

Prime Minister Tony Abbott has been criticised for the make-up of his cabinet because it includes only one woman, Foreign Minister Julie Bishop.

Dr Stone, speaking ahead of today's International Women's Day celebrations, said she was very disappointed to see her Liberal colleagues recently dump Mary Wooldridge from the safe Victorian state seat of Kew.

She said the Liberal Party needed to do more to ensure women are preselected in winnable seats.'

Los Angeles marathon's "gender challenge" bonus

Mastodon · 10 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amane Gobena of Ethiopia won the women's race and Gebo Burka of Ethiopia won the men's race in the 29th Asics L.A. Marathon.

Gobena, 31, won in 2 hours 27 minutes 37 seconds, collecting $25,000 for the victory.

Burka, 26, clocked a 2:10:37 to win a marathon for the first time. He also won $25,000.

Gobena won $50,000 for winning the gender "challenge." The women were given a 17:41 head start and Gobena finished 41 seconds ahead of Burka.

Joshua George won the men's wheelchair race in 1:33:11.

Tigist Tufa of Ethiopia was second in 2:28:04 and Lauren Kleppin of the United States was third in 2:28:48 in the women's race.'

Wake up to the cold, hard facts of rising worldwide misogyny

Mastodon · 10 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Increasingly, sexism, if not downright misogyny, is so endemic in society that many of us barely register it. But when we do – when a report like the EU one wakes us up to the hard, cold facts – we have to be very, very careful how we phrase our outrage. God forbid we may upset people. Or be called muck-raking cranks. Some people are very sensitive, we may hurt their feelings (they may sue!), so we have to be very clear and say, "not all men, only some men hate women", and only the "odd man" is actually a "real" misogynist. And of course, we understand and acknowledge that "men suffer from domestic violence too". And of course, we should be talking about women who are violent to their partners as well.

Pretty soon, we're apologising for saying that we live in a sexist world (we do) which overwhelmingly benefits the male sex (it does) and that we're concerned about the level of violence directed against women (we are). Soon after that, we're agreeing that yes, men certainly do terrible things to women, but women can be just as bad, if not worse, and before you know it, the discussion is no longer about endemic societal misogyny and violence against women but about the dubious effects of feminism, and whether militant 'feminazis' are destroying society as we know it.

I noticed this in many of the comments about articles on the EU report: "Why is this report only about one gender?" "Surely men suffer more violence than women?" (Eh, not at the hands of women.) "Why does female violence go almost unreported?"

And of course, most blokes are lovely guys; they are our fathers, brothers, husbands, partners and sons. And it's not their fault that the world is a horribly sexist place with such terrible levels of violence perpetuated by one gender on another. But that doesn't mean they can ignore it. It doesn't mean they have no responsibility to act. Individually, most men do not hate women. But as a group? Look at the facts. Men have dominated and controlled women for centuries.'

Barbara Kay: ‘Rape culture’ fanatics don’t know what a culture is

fathers4fairness · 10 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

In today’s National Post, there is a very thoughtful and serious discussion of whether the phenomena of “rape culture” even exists. It will no doubt receive the usual stream of invective — accusations of trivializing rape, denying that sexual assaults occur, implying that women who drank too much deserved to be raped. Hardly real criticisms in any intellectual sense, but they will come.

These critics — that seems almost too kind a descriptor for them, but alas — don’t seem to understand that a denial of rape culture is not a denial that rape exists or an expression of indifference to the pain it causes its victims. The world is imperfect. Bad or disturbed people commit crimes, including rape; good, well-adjusted people don’t. My heart breaks for children killed by their guardians, and in a perfect world none ever would be, but even 100 children dead at the hands of their parents does not make Canada a child-killing culture, or anyone who’d say so a child-murder denier.

...

Here, where women are socially and legally equal to men, official sympathy for rape victims at every institutional level has created a climate so overwhelmingly sympathetic to female victims of sexual abuse that the emerging cultural danger is injustice to falsely alleged perpetrators. We are gripped by a baseless, but pandemic, moral panic in which significant collateral damage is beginning to pile up.

Moral panic fuelled by ideology and righteous indignation quickly corrodes the critical faculties and blinds even otherwise intelligent people to objective facts. The numbers on campus rape don’t even come close to the famous “one in four” [women on campus are victims of rape or attempted rape], even taking into consideration unreported rates (i.e. multiplying reported rapes by 10, or even 100).

Where did that figure come from anyway? From bowdlerized research.

It began in1982, when Mary Koss, then a professor of psychology at Kent State University in Ohio, published an article on rape in which she expressed the orthodox — and remarkably misandric – feminist theory that “rape represents an extreme behavior but one that is on a continuum with normal male behavior within the culture.”'

NPO: Gilbert Tso's Case: For States, Child Support Is All About The Money From Uncle Sam

Matt · 10 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Would you like to know just how dogged states are when it comes to collecting child support? Gilbert Tso's story offers a good illustration of exactly that. In his case, an Illinois court that plainly has no jurisdiction of the case went ahead and issued a child support order anyway, plus hefty arrearages just so, if it collects anything from Tso, it can chalk it up as another "success" and get paid by the federal government's Office of Child Support Enforcement. Maybe the Illinois court is onto something. After all, if a court doesn't have to have jurisdiction of a case to issue a support order, why not issue more of them? Why not pick fathers in Alaska, Maine, Florida, or anywhere else? Hey, you might get lucky, and every time you do, Uncle Sam sends the state more money.

It's not like states haven't been in that racket before. It doesn't happen as much anymore, but it used to be that, when states wanted to "establish paternity" for a child, they would simply give notice to any man with a name the same as - or similar to — that of the man named by the mother as the father of her child. So, if she named John Smith or Jose Rodriguez, the state could send out a letter announcing to the man that he'd been named as father. Of course if they sent the letter to the wrong man, he'd likely take the attitude that he'd never heard of the mother, much less had sex with her, so the court hearing didn't apply to him. Then, when he didn't show up for the hearing, he'd be adjudicated the father and a support order would be issued against him. When he protested he'd be told, "You had your opportunity to contest the matter but failed to do so. The matter is now res judicata. Pay up. For the next 18 years." Meanwhile, the actual dad — the one with half the responsibility for bringing the child into the world, the one whose DNA the child carries, the one who might want to know about and care for his son or daughter — would never be the wiser and neither would the child.

That system of tagging any man who was stupid enough to believe the child support system wanted only actual fathers to pay support for children who were actually theirs so infuriated one California judge that he risked his job by simply refusing to go along with what was plainly a scam.'

Mother arrested in stabbing deaths of 3 children

Matt · 11 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. So tell me Col. Italiano, what would have had to have been the case for the girls' mother to justify stabbing them all to death? Excerpt:

'Authorities in the northern Italian city of Lecco say they have arrested a mother who confessed to stabbing to death her three young daughters.
...
Italiano said the parents had just separated, the father had departed Saturday for Albania, and the mother had no job. Italiano said, "There were economic difficulties, but not serious enough to justify this."'

Norway: Mother allegedly drowns baby following lover's online instructions

Matt · 11 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Norwegian woman pleaded not guilty to murdering her 22-month-old daughter Monday at the opening of a trial where she is accused of drowning the child while following live online instructions.

The woman's British lover, accused of giving instructions for the murder via an online video service, also pleaded his innocence in Oslo District Court.

Yasmin Chaudhry, 28, and Ammaz Omer Qureshi, 35, are accused of drowning the woman's daughter from another relationship by plunging her head into a bucket of water in October 2010.
...
The man, who was in London at the time, allegedly told the woman to "discipline" the child and issued instructions which led to Chaudhry plunging the child's head under water until she lost conciousness.

Chaudhry then called emergency services and reported the incident as an accident. The child died in hospital the following day.

On Monday she pleaded not guilty to first degree murder but admitted to assaulting the child. Her lover denied any involvement in the crime.

In addition to the murder, the duo are accused of "regularly" torturing the girl over a six-month period -- the mother allegedly received online instructions from Qureshi who also witnessed some of the abuse via the Internet.

During the assault the child was forced to swallow a spoon of chili powder, was gagged with adhesive tape, given cold showers and was slapped around the face.'

University of Quebec study contradicts conventional wisdom re women's co-operativeness

fathers4fairness · 11 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Contrary to claims from feminist groups pressing for greater numbers of women on corporate boards, article here. Excerpt:

'They may lack the competitive streak of their male colleagues but women are loath to work together.

A study found two women are less likely to co-operate than two men when one is more powerful than the other.

Similarly, two females of different rank are less likely to work together than a man and a woman.

The finding contradicts the widely held belief that women's nurturing nature makes it natural for them to help each other out, while men are too competitive to have time for each other.

Researchers said that men may be wired to put their differences aside in order to form alliances. Women, however, are most comfortable with people who are on the same level as them.

Richard Wrangham, of the University of Quebec at Montreal, said: 'The question we wanted to examine was: Do men or women co-operate better with members of their own sex?

'The conventional wisdom is that women co-operate more easily but when you look at how armies or sports teams function, there is evidence that men are better at co-operating in some ways."

"Second wife" stops children's contact with ill/failing dad

fathers4fairness · 11 March 2014 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Children are being denied contact with famous father who is quite ill in hospital with Parkinson's Disease by step-mom Jean. However the "Dad" in this case is formerly well-known radio personality Casey Kasem who hosted a weekly national program called "American Top 40" until he retired in 2009. The now-adult children simply wish to see their father before it is too late and are lobbying for legislation that would allow this to happen. For more information go to http://www.kasemcaresfoundation.org/. Excerpt:

'But the courtroom stirred and the spectators sat forward when Case No. BP145805 was called, and no fewer than six attorneys lined up before the judge in the matter of Julie Kasem et. al., petitioner, v. Jean Kasem, respondent, in respect to a "conservatorship of person" -- that absent person being 81-year-old Casey Kasem, the radio legend. For decades, Kasem counted down the weekly hit singles on American Top 40 and its spinoffs, exhorting his listeners to "Keep your feet on the ground and keep reaching for the stars." Several generations of kids also knew him as the voice of the teenage Shaggy on the Scooby-Doo series. He had taped his last broadcast in 2009, then quietly retired.

