'What viewers witnessed in microcosm in those 12 minutes is the despotism of the left exercising its tyranny over straight white males, the only group in Western culture upon which any and all collective slanders may be heaped with impunity. If directed at women (except for Christian pro-lifers), blacks, aboriginals, Muslims, or gays, some of the erroneous claims Adam and Scaachi adduced as settled truth would be deemed hate speech.

The greatest whopper of the segment, responding to the issue of “due process” that men rightly feel is denied them by campus tribunals judging rape claims, was Scaachi’s airy denial that women ever lie about their victimhood. Women lie frequently, have been proved to lie frequently, and as Jon pointed out, Americans have seen a growing list of lawsuits — some successful ones resulting in seven-figure payouts by the respective universities — launched by young men whose education, future careers and social lives have been thrown into jeopardy by demonstrably false allegations of rape.'

Study shows female monarchs more likely to start wars than males

fathers4fairness · 14 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"People have this preconceived idea that states that are led by women engage in less conflict," says Oeindrila Dube, an assistant professor of politics and economics at New York University. But historically, that's just not true. Not only did queens fight more wars than kings, they were also more likely to start them, Dube and NYU Ph.D. candidate S.P. Harish show in research presentedSaturday at the American Political Science Association's 2015 annual meeting in San Francisco.

...

Overall, women are less violent than men—they commit fewer than 1/10th of the murders in the United States—and, when elected to office at the local level, enact different policies than their male counterparts. But on the global stage, perhaps women can be more aggressive—Margaret Thatcher and Indira Gandhicertainly were. But were Thatcher and Gandhi just particularly aggressive women who fought their way to power and then on to war? Or would many other women in power do the same thing?

To wade through the questions, Dube and Harish focused on a group of women who landed in power not through hard work or even by choice, but rather by birth: queens. If queens were less likely than kings to get involved in war, the researchers posited, then maybe getting more women in leadership positions today would reduce global conflicts.'

Don’t feel validated? Find a white male to blame

Mastodon · 14 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Much has been made, and will continue to be made, of the past week’s events at the University of Missouri and, closer to home, at Yale. These flashes in the pan do signal something important, but not what most folks think. What is at stake is the death of pluralism.

...

Here's how the new rhetoric works: If you are a person of color, a woman, Hispanic, gay, transgender, Indian - whether Asian or American - or otherwise simply feeling as though the world hasn't "validated" you, then demand recognition. If you don't get it, then find a white male to blame. Claim that you don't have all you want, or that all you think you should have is kept from you, because of "white male privilege."

White males, are, in this brave new era, the writers of "winner's" history: We oppress, enjoy the legacy of oppression and refuse - unless redeemed by identification with those claiming oppression - to make amends for having reduced the prospects of others. When a white male refuses to give another what they want, the accusation is simple, and damning, in the eyes of those hurling it: "White male privilege."'

Boston is offering free negotiation classes to every woman who works in the city

Mastodon · 14 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women here earn 83 cents for every dollar paid to men, 4 cents higher than the national statistic. Disparities persist across age groups, industries and companies, researchers have found — even when colleagues of the opposite sex hold identical education levels and job titles.

That's why Boston is offering free, two-hour salary negotiation classes to every woman who works in the city. They started in October, two years after former mayor Thomas Menino pledged that Boston would become the first U.S. city to achieve pay parity.

Think of it as an intimate conversation with 170,000 women.
...
'She warns students that bosses may discriminate against them, consciously or not, and emphasizes that such behavior isn't legal. A tip from Page 25 of the guide: "Employers cannot make stereotypical comments about women and their work habits or make assumptions about the work habits of women with children." It's just one insight from the American Association of University Women, which designed and funded the Work Smart curriculum, intended to reach 85,000 women over five years.

The program is projected to cost up to $1.5 million, not including marketing and community outreach from the mayor's office. Its teachers — city employees and local businesswomen — volunteer their time and personal anecdotes about wrangling more vacation days or, say, maternity leave.'

International conference on men's issues scheduled for July 2016 in London

Mastodon · 14 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Justice for Men and Boys, a British political party whose founder, Mike Buchanan, is a familiar face to those interested in men's affairs, is hosting an International Conference on Men's Issues in London in July.

I am not a men's rights activist, but I am keenly interested in men's affairs – and I don't just mean the married blokes I like to spirit away from their wives. I share something in common with the men's rights movement and the manosphere more generally, you see: a visceral loathing of vindictive, bullying and sociopathic third-wave feminists, whose ugly prescriptions are damaging men and women alike.

I would like to share with the world my tips for beating these dreadful people in debate, on the rare occasion they deign to emerge from behind their Macbooks. So I will be giving a short lecture at the conference provisionally entitled: How To Beat Feminists In Debates. I will endeavour to provide as many practical tips as belly laughs.

I am of course merely the light entertainment at this gathering. Erin Pizzey, a domestic violence campaigner and founder of the first battered women's shelter, will speak too. As will Paul Apreda, from Families Need Fathers, Canadian writer and blogger Janet "JudgyBitch" Bloomfield, Buchanan himself, YouTuber Karen Straughan and a number of other familiar faces to those who follow men's issues.'

Misandry an issue worth discussing

Mastodon · 14 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One day in the spring of this year I was engaged in conversation with two women. The subject turned to the suicide of a man only peripherally known to the two of them. It took place almost exactly one month after the sudden and unexpected death from natural causes of the man's wife.

The two women were discussing this situation and, on the basis of little if any personal information, concluded that the man could not face the continuation of his life without his wife because "men are weak and have to be taken care of." I found myself in the position of arguing that perhaps the relationship between the two of them had been so close and so loving that the man could not face the future without "the love of his life." There was no way that these women would consider this possible interpretation.
...
I did not use this word at the time, but feel certain that they would have been totally baffled and bewildered if I had labeled their interpretation as "misandric." But what they were doing was to negatively label the behaviour of all men – and this is "misandry."

In her article, Anna Leventhal writes: "It means: we live in a society where misogyny is deep and pervasive and sometimes very hard to see, so much a part of the scenery is it." But these very words could be said about misandry – "the teaching of contempt for men in popular culture." (This was the very subtitle of the 2001 book Spreading Misandry by Paul Nathanson and Katherine Young, two Canadian academics.)'

The gender card is a loser for Democrats

Mastodon · 15 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week Sen. Claire McCaskill, a Missouri Democrat and an eager Hillary Clinton surrogate, opened a new front against men — it's difficult to categorize this as a front for women — by ridiculing half of her constituents (and half of America) on national television.

Sitting in what appeared to be an office for a segment on “The Late Show With Stephen Colbert,” she urged women to run for office and told men to “shut the hell up.”

She was bristly, unfunny and strident. What was meant to be a parody of public-service announcements was, in truth, her attempt to hit the sweet spot that Hillary Clinton and Democrats are chasing to win the presidency next year: the female and millennial vote.'

No one is against equal pay for equal work, Hillary Clinton

Mastodon · 15 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During the Democratic debate on Saturday, Hillary Clinton claimed that Republicans were against equal pay or equal work.

This is false.

No one is against equal pay for equal work (it's also already the law). The problem for Clinton is that what she is referring to — the gender wage gap — is not about women making less money for doing the same job as men.

The wage gap compares the median salary of all women with the median salary of all men. But on aggregate, women work fewer hours than men, and take more time off from work. Women also tend to enter lower paying occupations than men. This is not a wage gap — it is more accurately described as an "earnings gap."'

UK: Universities step up drive to close gender gap

Mastodon · 15 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Almost a third of universities are now running outreach activities targeted at young men as they try to tackle the growing gender gap in student applications, according to the Office for Fair Access. They are being offered taster subject sessions, talks with role models and mentoring through local football clubs to encourage them to consider a university degree.

Young women were around a third more likely than men to enter university in 2014, according to Ucas, the universities admissions body, and female applicants dominate entrance to courses in medicine, law and biology.'

Also see: The gender gap at universities: where are all the men?

First-Grade Boy Gets 3-Day Suspension For Using Pretend Bow And Arrow At Recess

Mastodon · 15 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Catholic elementary school principal in Cincinnati suspended a 6-year-old boy for three days late last week because he used a pretend bow and arrow on the playground at recess.

The imaginative first grader attends Our Lady of Lourdes School, reports local NBC affiliate WLWT-TV.

The recess incident that led to the suspension occurred on Thursday. The unidentified boy drew back a bow he had invented purely in his mind. He took aim with this nothingness at a friend. He then released a completely nonexistent arrow from some make-believe quiver.'

Female students participate in girls-only robotics competition

Mastodon · 15 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Bloomfield Hills High School hosted an offseason FIRST Robotics Competition for girls on high school robotics teams Saturday afternoon.

Thirty-two all-female teams from across Michigan and one team that traveled from Indiana to participate.

Fans cheered for their classmates as robots went head-to head in the arena. The machines were designed, built and driven exclusively by female students.'

Please submit pro-PSA test comments to CMS

Matt · 15 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Believe it or not, in this week approaching Thanksgiving, we in the United States are faced with a second challenge to Prostate Cancer screening using the PSA test. Malecare wants you to know.

The Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services (CMS) is asking for pubic comment on a clinical quality measure that would probably lead to financial penalties for providers (your doctor) who order a PSA screening test. The measure is based on the PSA screening recommendations of the U.S. Preventative Services Task Force (USPSTF).

The USPSTF is the organization responsible for the recommendation against prostate cancer screening. Their May 2012 recommendation reads:

"The U.S. Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF) recommends against prostate-specific antigen (PSA)-based screening for prostate cancer."

This recommendation has caused massive controversy throughout our health care system.

Whether you agree with their 2012 finding or not, Malecare feels that our prostate cancer community needs to be heard. The potential for provider penalties for offering the PSA test for prostate cancer screening could hurt tens of thousands of men who might never know that they have advanced prostate cancer until they are months away from death.

Fortunately, the call for comments is a simple one, where you post your thoughts about PSA screening in just a few sentences.

Unfortunately, the method to post your comments will likely be the most complicated thing you ever do online. My hair is now fully gray after attempting to comment...but, I feel I have done something important in making my voice hear...I hope that you will feel the same.

Here are the step by step instructions for posting your comments:

Your goal is to post a comment for:

Electronic Clinical Quality Measures for Non-Recommended Prostate-Specific Antigen (PSA)-Based Screening

Go to: http://jira.oncprojectracking.org/login.jsp

(Select "Sign up" to set up a new account and log in to the JIRA tool.)

Once logged in, enter your comments by following these instructions:

1. Select "Projects" at the top middle of the home screen.
2. Select "View all Projects."
3. Under Quality-Measures, select "Comments on eCQMs under development" project.
4. To enter comments, select "Create issue" (orange button) at the top middle of the screen.
5. Select EP eCQM Logic/Intent/Data Elements from the "Issue type" drop-down menu.
6. Fill out the fields labeled "Summary," "Contact name," "Contact email," and "Contact phone."
7. In the "Summary" field, type in one of the following titles, based on the measure you are commenting on: "Comment-PSA Screening"
8. Enter your comments in the "Description" field.
9. Select "PSA_Screening" the "Draft measures" drop-down box
10. Select 'Create' at the bottom left to submit your comments.

To be considered, comments must be submitted by November 20, 2015, via the JIRA comment tool.

Please let us know if you commented and or if you have any questions. You can email me directly at darryl-at-malecare.org

Best regards,

Darryl Mitteldorf, LCSW

Executive Director
Malecare

Men fighting cancer, together.
www.malecare.org
darrylm@malecare.org

UK: Men are becoming 'disadvantaged group'

Mastodon · 16 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mary Curnock Cook, the head of the admissions service, Ucas, said she was “very worried” about the decline in the proportion of young men applying for places on degree courses.

The trend has significant implications for society because university graduates are expected to earn far more than workers without degrees, the Commons business select committee was warned.

Ms Curnock Cook intervened as it was disclosed that 14 universities had targets to recruit more men. The initiative is part of a drive to train more men as primary school teachers to provide role models for young boys.

So far this year 80,000 more women have applied to universities in the UK than men and the trend is likely to grow, according to Ucas figures.'

Here Is The $25 Million Lawsuit Against Rolling Stone Over Its UVA Rape Hoax Story

Mastodon · 16 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this month, the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity chapter on the campus of the University of Virginia filed a $25 million defamation lawsuit against Rolling Stone and its disgraced reporter Sabrina Rubin Erdely.

Here's the complete lawsuit — all 339 pages:

Phi Kappa Psi lawsuit against Rolling Stone'

A Smoking-Gun E-mail Exposes the Bias of The Hunting Ground

Matt · 17 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A so-called documentary about campus rape, The Hunting Ground, is set to air Thursday on CNN, which co-produced it. But a newly available e-mail from an investigative producer of the film spectacularly belies its pretensions to be honest, balanced journalism. Instead, the e-mail adds to the large body of evidence that that the film is highly misleading if not dishonest.

In the December 21, 2013, e-mail from Amy Herdy (billed in the film as working with independent director Kirby Dick and producer Amy Ziering), Herdy sought an interview with Erica Kinsman and her lawyer about her highly publicized rape accusation against Jameis Winston, the Heisman Trophy–winning, first-NFL-draft-pick former Florida State quarterback.

The Herdy e-mail, sent to Kinsman's then-lawyer, included this assurance: "We don't operate the same way as journalists — this is a film project very much in the corner of advocacy for victims, so there would be no insensitive questions or the need to get the perpetrator's side" (emphasis added).'

Also see: The Hunting Ground: Deny the Lie

‘Are you insane?’ Sen. Gillibrand: Reporting this to police is ‘wrong approach’

Mastodon · 17 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We must reform how colleges handle sexual assault cases but requiring survivors to report their assaults to police is the wrong approach.

— Kirsten Gillibrand (@SenGillibrand) November 16, 2015

Is it, Senator? Is it?

.@sengillibrand Exactly right. Accused rapists are best judged by a revolutionary tribunal of women's studies professors.

— Susan (@shoshido) November 16, 2015

@SenGillibrand FTR, if I'm ever murdered on a college campus, I want the student council to handle it instead of the police.

— Na[Cu(NT)2(H2O)] (@smittie61984) November 16, 2015'

Campuses Under Federal Review Over Sexual Assault Investigations

Mastodon · 17 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights has opened three investigations this year into Texas universities — Texas A&M University, the University of Houston and Trinity University — over how they handled allegations of sexual violence on their campuses, documents obtained by The Texas Tribune show.

Such federal inquiries have generally been spurred by accusations that universities didn't do enough to punish students accused of rape or harassment.

But at least one of the Texas campuses currently under review — Texas A&M — is being investigated for the opposite: a claim that administrators went too far when they suspended a male student accused of assaulting a female classmate.

...

The male student denied abusing the female student; a police investigation resulted in no criminal charges. But after a university disciplinary hearing, the male student was suspended for seven months. He complained to the school — and later to the Department of Education — that A&M's system for investigating allegations of sexual violence was "flawed" and that he was penalized based on "lies."

Those kinds of complaints from male students are increasingly common at universities, said Wendy Murphy, a professor at New England Law who specializes in sexual violence. Many men who have been suspended or kicked out of school over accusations of rape have sued their universities over claims of gender discrimination, she said.

"It's not rare for a man to claim discrimination," Murphy said. "It's not rare for them to say that they want some kind of redress because they did not feel they were treated fairly."'

White House Commits $100 Million to Empower Low-Income Women of Color

Minuteman · 18 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Thirty leaders from foundations across the U.S. gathered at The White House Friday for a daylong forum on “Advancing Equity for Women and Girls of Color.” The forum focused on issues that plague women and girls of color and highlighted the launch of “Prosperity Together,” a $100 million, 5-year funding initiative aimed at improving economic conditions for low-income women, specifically women and girls of color.

A report last year by the White House Council on Women and Girls identified issues for women of color including the lack of economic opportunities, vulnerability to violence, and health care disparities, which affects their well-being and quality of life. The council, along with Wake Forest University’s Anna Julia Cooper Center, unveiled a series of plans to resolve them.

...

In hopes to help the effort for women of color, The Anna Julia Cooper Center and 24 other American colleges and universities, seminaries, research programs, and institutions will conduct more research on women and girls of color. The director of the center, Melissa Harrris-Perry, said combined, these institutions made voluntary commitments of $18 million for the next 5 years to conduct and share this data.

...

The Council on Women and Girls also identified five data-driven issue areas where interventions can promote opportunities for success at school, work, and in the community. They include sponsoring/fostering school success and reducing unnecessary school discipline; meeting the needs of the vulnerable youth, improving on exclusive STEM education, sustaining and reducing rates of teenage pregnancies, and economic prosperity.'

UK: Row after University of York cancels International Men's Day event

Mastodon · 18 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A row has broken out at York University after plans to mark International Men's Day on Thursday were cancelled following an outcry from staff and students.

The university had signed up to the event, which aims to highlight issues affecting men and boys, including the high male suicide rate, men's shorter life expectancy and "the struggles that boys can face in getting an education".

It has since been cancelled at York after students, staff and alumni signed an open letter to the university objecting to the event. However, a number of students are campaigning to reinstate the day, and accuse the university of sending out a message that "men's rights are not important".

A petition has been launched, which states: "It is important that we recognise men's day just as much as women's day. True feminists should be fighting for gender equality for both men and women. To cancel men's day is simply hypocritical. Equality is not just for women and should concern both genders."'

Twitter backlash over University statement about International Men's Day

Mastodon · 18 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'York University statement:

Earlier today the University issued this statement.

"We have withdrawn the original statement about International Men's Day, and do not propose to mark this event formally. In gender equality, our main focus has been, and will continue to be, on the inequalities faced by women, such as under-representation in the professoriate. At the same time, we will not neglect other aspects of equality, and will take a balanced approach to all nine protected characteristics as defined in the 2010 Equality Act. Our overriding goal is to strive to treat every member of the University community with dignity and respect."'

University of York savaged for saying men are ‘under-represented’ in some academic fields

Mastodon · 18 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If women are dominant in certain academic disciplines, don’t call attention to it.

The University of York learned that gender equality is a one-way street, when it said in a press release last week that it would mark International Men’s Day this Thursday. (It’s cached on the Internet Archive.)
...
He went on to claim that “female candidates have a higher chance of being appointed than men” in academic staff appointments, as well as in professional support services and academic support staff, “with some departments [in the latter] employing no men at all in these roles”:
...
That provoked about 200 students, staff and alumni to sign on to anopen letter to the school excoriating it for pointing out the hardships of men:'

Teacher restricts Lego-play to her girl students in the pursuit of gender equity

Mastodon · 18 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In Karen Keller's kindergarten classroom, boys can't play with Legos.

They can have their pick of Tinkertoys and marble tracks, but the colorful bricks are "girls only."

"I always tell the boys, 'You're going to have a turn' — and I'm like, 'Yeah, when hell freezes over' in my head," she said. "I tell them, 'You'll have a turn' because I don't want them to feel bad."

Although her approach might anger some parents, Keller is sticking to her guns: It's all part of a plan to get girls building during "free choice," the 40 minutes of unstructured play time embedded at the end of every school day.'

Sexual Assault Inquiry Presents Conundrum for University

Mastodon · 18 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Experts say the differences between university sexual assault hearings and criminal trials are intentional. Forcing a student to testify in the same room as his or her attacker can be traumatic. It can also have a chilling effect on victims, who may be hesitant to report rape if they have to confront their attackers face-to-face.

"Whenever you are talking about something as sensitive and intimate as sexual violence, it behooves schools to be sensitive to their students, to make sure that the process is fair and comfortable and they are not putting victims in a position of feeling blamed and shamed and having to confront directly," said Neena Chaudhry, senior counsel at the National Women's Law Center.

Given that risk, said John Foubert, a professor in the school of educational studies at Oklahoma State University, many college administrators feel it’s unnecessary to match the protections given to a criminal defendant.

“I think you need less due process,” he said, adding that, unlike a criminal trial, an accused student isn’t at risk of incarceration. “There is a different set of consequences.”'

India: Man pushed to death for boarding women-only train

Mastodon · 18 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A forty-year-old man died after he was allegedly pushed off a running train by a woman constable of the Railway Protection Force (RPF) for boarding a women-only train, triggering a massive protests and rail blockade by fellow commuters.

The victim, identified as Dipak Sharma, a resident of Dwarik Jungle Road in Bhadrakali, was travelling in a local train for “women only”, said Railway police officers. As news of the death spread, angry commuters beat up the constable and blocked trains in protest. They also targeted two other trains and pelted stones, smashing window panes and damaging coaches.'

How bread-winning women are driving alimony reform

Mastodon · 18 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Alimony, otherwise known as spousal support or maintenance, is an ongoing payment by the higher-earning spouse to the lower-earning one. It has changed and shifted over the 40 years since the Supreme Court ruled that it had to be applied equally to both genders.

Yet it is still heavily weighted toward men paying women. Only 3 percent of around 400,000 alimony recipients are male, according to the 2010 census, up a half a percent since 2000. Recipients claimed $9.2 million in payments in 2013 on their tax returns.

...

Now that women are paying alimony more often, they are getting involved in advocating for change.

"It’s unfair for men to pay it, and unfair for women to pay it. But women are much more outraged by it," said Ken Neumann, a founder of the Academy of Professional Family Mediators.

Tanya Williams, who has been sending a check to her ex-husband for 13 years, is among those who do not understand the concept of "permanent" alimony - when one spouse pays the other indefinitely - and has joined the cause against it.

"There's no other contract where the liability continues after the contract ends," said the 52-year-old dentist who got divorced in Florida but now lives in North Carolina. "You can't leave your job and say, 'I still have a need so you have to continue to pay me.'"'

Groom discovers bride isn't a virgin, eats genitals of her rapist

Matt · 18 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The headline should read 'purported rapist' because there was no trial; he was simply murdered. And it sounds to me like she didn't want to tell her idiot new hubby the truth, i.e., that she simply wasn't a virgin. Instead she had to lie and say she was raped, leading to the idiot murdering someone. Excerpt:

'Two Indonesian newlyweds have been arrested on accusations they plotted to kill a man the woman said had raped her a week before her marriage, and police said Tuesday the couple ate the victim's genitals after the man was killed.

Lampung police spokeswoman Lt. Col. Sulistyaningsih said Rudi Effendi and his wife Nuriah were being held for further investigation after their arrests Sunday at their house in Tulang Bawang district in Sumatra's Lampung province.

Sulistyaningsih, who uses one name, said police found the victim's body in a burnt minivan Oct. 4. She said the monthlong investigation led to the conclusion that the couple had planned to kill the victim, who was a driver for a travel agency.

The couple had married in September and the husband found on the wedding night that his wife was no longer a virgin. She then said she had been raped one week before the marriage.

Police said Effendi, 30, asked his 20-year-old wife to arrange a meeting with the man she accused of raping her. Effendi stabbed the man to death and cut off his genitals before setting ablaze the car.

Effendi said he fried the severed genitals and ate them to cure his heartache over the rape.'

India: Four Arrested for Extorting Rs 20 Lakh From Doctor

Matt · 18 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Four persons, including two women, have been arrested for allegedly extorting around Rs 20 lakh* from a Delhi-based doctor after threatening him to get him implicated in a false rape case, police said today.

The accused were identified as Sweta Panchal, Kuldeep Kaur, Pradeep and Manoj Solanki. It was Panchal who headed the gang, said a senior police official.

According to police, it was Kaur who allegedly targeted the doctor and developed good contacts with him.

On the evening of October 19, she sent a woman patient to the doctor's residence at Pitampura for medical consultancy. The patient, identified as Rukhsar, requested the doctor to escort her to a nearby bus stand as she felt a little unsafe there.

The doctor agreed and when they reached the bus stand, Panchal and her husband Pradeep allegedly forced the doctor inside their car and thrashed him, they said, adding that they also threatened him that they would frame rape charges against him.'

--
*Rs 20 lakh is just over US$30,000.

India: Court acquits four in gang rape case

Matt · 18 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'A trial court has acquitted four men in a gang rape case, saying the woman had falsely implicated them and she seemed to have fabricated the charges against them in consultation with her in-laws.

"From the material on record, the view which points to the innocence and false implication of the accused ... seems to be more reasonable and probable ... I am of the opinion that all the accused are liable to be discharged," additional sessions judge Virender Bhatt said.

Acquitting the men of the charges, the court said there was no such allegations in the police complaint filed by the woman. Earlier, she had also not named the accused, who were her neighbours, the court said.

"There is no explanation from the side of the prosecution as to why names of accused and exact details of occurrence were not mentioned by her in the written complaint ... prosecution version appears to be doubtful at this stage itself. It appears that the occurrence has been fabricated later by the woman in consultation with her in-laws ...," it said.'

Discredited rape data overshadow what's accurate

Matt · 19 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Washington Times headline on Nov. 9 declared, "Pentagon 'gay' rape debacle: Report alleging male-on-male sexual trauma retracted." In an almost unprecedented move, the American Psychological Association (APA) retracted an article it had published a week earlier in its journal, Psychological Services. "Preliminary Data Suggest Rates of Male Sexual Trauma May be Higher than Previously Reported" had claimed that the rate of rape for military males might be 15 times higher than acknowledged. The media trumpeted the presence of another rape crisis.

Why were the data retracted? An APA press release explained, "Although the article went through our standard peer-review process, other scholars have ... raised valid concerns regarding the design and statistical analysis, which compromise the findings." Flawed methodology rendered useless results. This often occurs with rape research, whether it is conducted inside the military, at police stations or on campuses.

The most remarkable aspect of the APA retraction may be that it was mentioned by mainstream media. Most discredited assault studies are invisibly corrected, which allows the original, sensational conclusions to be repeated as fact. For example, the campus survey"Denying Rape but Endorsing Forceful Intercourse" exploded across the airwaves in early 2015. One in three male students would rape, researchers maintained, "if nobody would ever know and there wouldn't be any consequences." Activists cried out for tighter controls on campus.

A correction by the study's publisher went virtually unnoticed. It read, "[A]fter publication of the article, Dr. Edwards [the lead researcher] contacted the editorial office to explain that the data presented inadvertently duplicated a dataset that was previously published inProblems of Psychology in the 21st Century. Two similar datasets (the other focusing on rape perceptions and how they differ in individual vs. group judgments) were collected at the same time, but from different individuals."

The conclusions of "Denying Rape" are based on a different set of participants than researchers had surveyed. The massive error invalidates the results. But the publisher claimed, "The error does not affect the results or conclusions." Analyzing an entirely different population than the one surveyed does not "affect the results"?'

Feminist author argues against 'affirmative consent'

Matt · 19 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Well this does her in among the sisterhood. Excerpt:

'And now we get to the single thing that has most distressed me, as a feminist and a lawyer, about the affirmative consent bandwagon. The norm itself sounds great. I myself would never want to have sex with an unconsenting person, and I don't want you do so either. I also don't ever want to have sex that I haven't consented to, and I hope that never happens to you either. But using legal procedure to decide these cases is about far more than just the desirability of the norm. It's also about the desirability of putting the weight of the state and of punishment behind that norm. We have to want to put the norm into legal proceedings in the real world.

As I will argue here, affirmative consent requirements—in part because of their origin in a carceral project that is overcommitted to social control through punishment in a way that seems to me to be social-conservative, not emancipatory—will do a lot more than distribute bargaining power to women operating in contexts of male domination and male privilege. They will foster a new, randomly applied moral order that will often be intensely repressive and sex-negative. They will enable people who enthusiastically participated in sex to deny it later and punish their partners. They will function as protective legislation that encourages weakness among those they protect. They will install traditional social norms of male responsibility and female helplessness. All of these will be the costs we pay for the benefits affirmative consent requirements deliver. This essay asks feminists to engage in a robust debate about whether all of this what they want, and if it is not, whether it is worth it to get the upsides of the reform.'

'The Hunting Ground' filmmakers defend movie, insult critics

Mastodon · 19 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The filmmakers of "The Hunting Ground" have been called out for inaccuracies, distortions and false statistics, and for disregarding journalistic integrity in order to push propaganda.

Their response? To call their critics "misogynistic" and accuse them of victim-blaming.

Filmmakers Kirby Dick and Amy Ziering mischaracterized what 19 Harvard Law professors wrote when they criticized the film. The filmmakers claimed that the professor's reference to the Harvard accuser's inebriated state was "classic victim blaming and is exactly the kind of misogynistic, punitive and shaming attitude that helps perpetuate sexual assault on college campuses."'

Students call for punishment of campus rape suspect

Mastodon · 19 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'About a dozen UC Berkeley students and members of the group "By Any Means Necessary" loudly protested outside a hearing was to determine whether a student they say raped a co-ed last year should be punished.

The protesters want him expelled.

"We're building a student-lead independent movement to put the pressure not just on the administration, but on the rapist, and force them out and expel them. So survivors can go to college campuses without having fear about running into the rapist," said Angela Dancev of By Any Means Necessary.

Student Stephanie Garcia has publicly claimed the student raped her in a dorm room in October of 2014. Her supporters have posted flyers all over campus with the title rapist above the student's name and picture.

But the Alameda County District Attorney's office says it reviewed the case and declined to press any charges.

The university says the student was last enrolled in the fall of 2014, but that it is prohibited by law from commenting further.'

New Jersey to consider 'yes means yes' college policy

Mastodon · 19 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Unless New Jersey colleges and universities implement a yes-means-yes policy governing sexual conduct they could lose certain state funds under a bill being considered by lawmakers.

The state Senate Higher Education Committee is scheduled to review the legislation on Monday.

The proposal makes New Jersey among the latest states moving to require college campuses to define when "yes means yes" in an effort to stem the tide of sexual assaults.

The bill would withhold state funds from colleges and universities for certain programs unless they adopt a so-called affirmative consent standard.

Some critics of the policy change say it could be unfair to victims who have protections under Title IX, the law dealing with sexual discrimination.'

Gender Pay Gap Has Almost Nothing To Do With Discrimination, Says Top Economist

Mastodon · 19 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 17 percent gender pay gap is almost entirely due to age, marriage and the different hours worked by men and women, according to a top economist at the American Enterprise Institute (AEI).

The Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) annual report on the “Highlights of Women’s Earnings” shows women’s in full-time work median earnings were 83 percent those of men.

The National Committee on Pay Equity claims this pay-gap emerges “in part because many women and people of color are still segregated into a few low-paying occupations.”

But AEI economist Mark Perry says one reason the wage-gap appears is that men work more hours than women. More than quarter of men in full-time work clocked in 41 or more hours per week in 2014, whereas the same could be said for only 14.8 percent of women. On the more extreme end, men were two and a half times more likely than women to work 60 hour weeks.'

International Men's Day: Why the masculine 'gold standard' is harming men

Mastodon · 19 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To most people, holding high standards of personal achievement is considered only a good thing - yet the reality for many mid-life men is that pressures to achieve can cause unthinkable emotional and psychological pain.

In 21st Century Britain, the decline of typically male industry and a rise in family breakdown mean that all too many middle-aged men now believe that they fall short of the ‘gold standard’ of masculinity. They are neither the providers nor the protectors that traditional masculinity requires.'

Judge: Divorced California couple's embryos can be discarded

Matt · 19 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Wish the judges in the other states were as fair-minded. Excerpt:

'A woman must abide by an agreement with her ex-husband to destroy five frozen embryos if they got a divorce, despite her contention that they represent her last chance to have children, a California judge ruled Wednesday.

San Francisco Superior Court Judge Anne-Christine Massullo said in a tentative decision that the agreement trumps the woman's desire to now keep the embryos. The woman, Mimi Lee, had argued that cancer made it risky for her to get pregnant, so the embryos were her last chance to have her own genetic child.

Her ex-husband, Stephen Findley, wanted to discard the embryos in accordance with the agreement he and Lee signed while married. He worried in part that Lee would use any children to take financial advantage of him, according to the ruling.
...
Lee's attorneys said no California court had previously ruled in such a case. A Pennsylvania court three years ago awarded frozen embryos to a woman who also said they may be her only way to have a child because of breast cancer treatment despite the objections of her ex-husband. An Illinois judge last year also sided with a woman who was infertile in her fight over embryos with an ex-boyfriend.

Massullo said California law is clear that couples must decide what to do with embryos they create in case of separation or divorce.'

Are You Celebrating International Men's Day?

Matt · 19 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you are at all like me, your first reaction upon learning that this is a reality is that the holiday must be a joke, a smug retort to International Women's Day, which is observed on March 8, mostly in Russia, Eastern Europe, and Central Asia, although it actually began as a socialist celebration in New York. (If that was not your first response, congratulations on your light heart.) But it isn't. The day doesn't exist to celebrate machismo, or to ask why American women are whining about pay when women in other countries are worse off (sound argument), or to complain that women are confusing and/or overly sensitive (hey!).

On November 19 (if you're reading this on its day of publication, that's today), 60 countries—including the United States, apparently—observe International Men's Day. What is it? Why does it exist? And, in a world where, to quote Manuel Contreras-Urbina, who runs the Global Women's Institute at the George Washington University, "There is not one society that is not patriarchal" (disclaimer:there are six), do we need an International Men's Day?

Maybe, maybe not. We do, however, need to talk about men's issues.

But first, to briefly discuss the day: In 1999, Dr. Jerome Teelucksingh of Trinidad and Tobago began International Men's Day to improve gender relations and celebrate and support positive male role models. The day only reached a wider audience, however, in 2007, when Australia's Warwick Marsh, co-founder of the Fatherhood Foundation, and India's Uma Challa, founder and president of India's Men's Welfare Association, came together to promote the day.

"Right now," Challa said in an interview, "society is very anti-male … Boys are not given any kind of support. Boys are forced out of school. They aren't given any encouragement … there's no effort to keep them in school. Health—we have [this] national family health and welfare service. The only way men are mentioned is how they're going to be contributing. But not to their health and safety. Men are not considered part of the family, men and boys." Challa also noted, however, that she believes feminism is antithetical to her own society's values; her aim is not gender equality, as she she sees men and women "not as equal, but as equally powerful, complementing."'

Factual Feminist: Do men need to check their privilege?

Matt · 19 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Video here.

'Do men need to check their privilege? Gender activists tell us that men carry around with them an invisible knapsack of advantage. Well, is this true and is it the whole story? AEI Scholar Christina Hoff Sommers checks the facts.'

SAVE E-lert: CNN's Freshly Aired Lies

Matt · 19 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

This Sunday, November 22nd, CNN will be airing The Hunting Ground, a propaganda piece that includes blatant lie after blatant lie: http://www.saveservices.org/sexual-assault/hunting-ground/

SAVE held a National Press Club event to counteract the film back in March, and recently a group of Harvard professors have issued a press release against the film as well: https://kcjohnson.files.wordpress.com/2013/08/hls-pressrelease.pdf

Florida State University's President has also just denounced the film: http://deadline.com/2015/11/florida-state-president-cnn-hunting-ground-campus-rape-documentary-1201626249/

Help us contact CNN executive producer, Rebecca Kutler, and tell her to not allow CNN to be used as a propaganda vehicle for The Hunting Ground.

Email: rebecca.kutler-at-turner.com

Truly yours,

Gina Lauterio, Esq., Policy Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

'The Hunting Ground' crew caught editing Wikipedia to make facts conform to film

Matt · 19 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A crew member from "The Hunting Ground," a one-sided film about campus sexual assault, has been editing Wikipedia articles to make facts conform with the inaccurate representations in the film.

Edward Patrick Alva, who is listed on the film's IMDB page as part of the camera and electrical department, has been altering Wikipedia entries for months, in violation of the website's conflict-of-interest guidelines. Alva is the assistant editor and technical supervisor for Chain Camera Pictures, the production company associated with "The Hunting Ground" director Kirby Dick.

Wikipedia guidelines state: "Do not edit Wikipedia in your own interests or in the interests of your external relationships." As a member of the film's production team, Alva should not have been editing pages about the film or related to the film.'

Canada: Man on trial for three years for criticizing feminists

Mastodon · 19 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'His name is Gregory Alan Elliott. He has been on trial for three years, in a costly Canadian court battle with drastic implications for free speech. For two years, he was banned from the internet, where he previously earned much of his income. His artwork, hanging in a local coffee shop in Toronto, was recently defaced by a mob of enraged activists.

Crippled by loss of work and the ongoing court case, Elliott and his family have been forced to turn to an online crowdfunding campaign to cover their legal costs. What did he do to bring about such persecution? Did he kill someone? IS he a virulent white supremacist? A campaigner for pedophile rights?

No. Elliott criticised feminists on the internet.

The story begins in 2012, the heyday of online feminism, two years before GamerGate smashed the dominance of progressive activists on social media. Stephanie Guthrie, a young Toronto woman looking to raise her media profile, had a bright idea: she would lead a Twitter mob against a critic of professional feminist whingebag Anita Sarkeesian.'

UK: "Tory MP Philip Davies attacked for using International Men's Day debate to moan about 'militant feminists'"

Minuteman · 20 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A Tory MP has been criticised for complaining about 'militant feminists' as he led a debate to mark International Men's Day.

Philip Davies won the three-hour Commons session by saying women have plenty of special days - and men need an equivalent to talk about the fact more than three-quarters of suicides are by men .

During a 44-minute speech Mr Davies spoke up about male suicide, men's fight to win custody of their children and the lack of male primary school teachers.

But female MPs rounded on him after he accused 'militant feminists' of 'stirring up' division and championing 'equality but only when it suits'.

He also said it was time to end the 'stereotypical image' of all domestic violence being against women and condemned 'positive discrimination'.

Mr Davies declared: "I want to be very clear - I don't believe there is actually an issue between men and women.'

The Feminists Who Want To Silence Men

Mastodon · 20 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If there's one person who epitomises the University of York's notable alumni, it's Harriet Harman.

The Labour MP studied politics there in the early 1970s before becoming a lawyer and, subsequently, a politician who — not long ago — believed that touring Britain in a pink van might dismantle the 'patriarchy' (otherwise known as civilisation, to you and I; something men created, but women have long enhanced, benefited from and now co-own).

Needless to say, she was wrong. On paper her approach may have had all the hallmarks of a PR success story, but in today's climate it simply smacked of tired tactics. Still, by the University of York's standards, it was probably A-grade stuff. After all, stale with esoteric feminist professors and their wacky take on reality, they too remain locked in Harman's time-warped mindset.

Earlier this week, the college u-turned plans for a modest International Men's Day (IMD) meeting — even though it coincided with a parliamentary discussion on the 19 November event.

The reason? Melodramatic 'outrage' from the sisterhood.'

It's today's ads mocking men that are truly sexist

Mastodon · 20 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every so often comes a jolt to remind my generation of just how much times and attitudes have changed over the course of our lifetime, and how strange we must seem to our young.

Such a moment came for me yesterday when I opened the paper to see two pages of advertisements from the Seventies, headlined: ‘The ads that put the sex in sexism.’

Now, like many of my age (I’ll be 62 this month), I’ve always regarded the decade of my late teens and 20s as pretty modern times. True, men tended to wear their hair longer than today — and such fashions as sideburns, flared trousers and avocado bathroom fittings look decidedly dated in 2015.'

Student's robbery, sexual assault claims false, police say

Mastodon · 20 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Duquesne University student's claims that she was robbed and sexually assaulted last month were untrue, Pittsburgh police said Thursday.

The student told police three men approached her while she was walking behind the campus' Barnes & Noble bookstore, according to a crime alert released Oct. 28 by the university.

She told police they forced her to go with them to an apartment on Crawford Street, where they stole her money and a credit card and sexually assaulted her.

Police declined to say why the student told them she was assaulted. “I will only state that the investigation determined that the student's claims were untrue,” Public Safety spokeswoman Sonya Toler said.'

Student diversity officer who allegedly tweeted 'kill all white men' quits over claim she bullied union president

Mastodon · 20 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A student diversity officer arrested when she allegedly tweeted #KillAllWhiteMen has quit her role after being accused of bullying a colleague.

Bahar Mustafa - student union welfare and diversity officer at Goldsmiths University, London - announced today she was leaving her post.

Her resignation comes just 24 hours after union president Adrihani Rashid left her £22,000-a-year role claiming she was bullied by fellow sabbatical officers.

Ms Rashid said she was stepping down after being harassed by Alex Etches, the student union's Campaigns and Activities Officer, and Ms Mustafa.

Ms Mustafa today confirmed she would be resigning following the allegations.'

Men are not monsters

Mastodon · 20 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Last week three of my four boys were herded into school-sponsored assemblies and asked to stand, raise their hands and pledge to never, ever hurt a woman. While their female classmates remained seated, my boys faced intense pressure to say:

I promise
To never ever
Hit, hurt, or otherwise harm
A woman, girl, or child.
I understand
That I am bigger and stronger
Than many women, girls, and children.
Therefore it is my DUTY
To NEVER HARM them,
Protect, Respect, Honor, and Love them
No matter what.

Aghast, my 17-year-old son walked out. Less than two hours later, he went to choir practice, where he and his classmates practiced a parody of "Cell Block Tango" from the musical "Chicago" that features the “six merry murderesses of Cook County Jail” singing about killing their lovers. Here's one verse:

> Hah! He had it coming
> He had it coming
> He took a flower
> In its prime
> And then he used it
> And he abused it
> It was a murder
> But not a crime!

Ironic, eh?'

School district responds to Lego controversy

Mastodon · 20 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This morning, the Bainbridge Island School District announced that girls-only Lego play in Keller's classroom has ceased.

"Following the release of a recent news article, the Bainbridge Island School District (BISD) has received inquiries that reflect inaccurate perceptions about student access to Legos in Karen Keller's kindergarten classroom at Blakely Elementary School," wrote district spokeswoman Galen Crawford.

"In keeping with a science, technology, engineering and math (STEM) education grant, Ms. Keller gave girls a designated time to play with the building toys during a 30-minute 'free-choice' time block in September 2015. This isolated, short-term practice ended in October. All students in all classrooms have and will continue to have access to all instructional and noninstructional materials."'

Also see: No boys allowed: Bainbridge Island teacher imposes ban on popular activity

Student sues college after suspension due to woman's post-sexual regret

Mastodon · 20 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A student is suing a New York City drama school in federal court after the college suspended him for having what he claims was an entirely consensual threesome.

According to the New York Post, the lawsuit alleges the American Musical and Dramatic Academy told the plaintiff that he could not return for two semesters after the sexual encounter. The school also suspended a second male participant in the threesome.

The plaintiff, referred to as John Doe in court documents, is suing for damages.'

CNN owes answers on rape film

Matt · 20 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Thrasher, and many others in academia, are upset about a film called "The Hunting Ground" that CNN has scheduled to air Sunday at 8 p.m.

The film bills itself as a documentary on campus rape, an obviously complex and controversial subject worthy of impartial exploration.

But that's not what you'll get Sunday night if you tune in. Don't take our word for it. Take it from the horse's mouth, one of the film's producers.

"We do not operate the same way as journalism," wrote producer Amy Herdy, of Chain Camera Pictures. She made the statement in an email to Erica Kinsman, who in 2012 accused then-FSU quarterbackJameis Winston of rape. The producer's goal was to secure an interview.

"This is a film project that is very much in the corner of advocacy for victims, so there would be no insensitive questions or the need to get the perpetrator's side," Herdy wrote in the email, which FSU obtained through its litigation with Kinsman.'

Jameis Winston threatens to sue CNN over rape movie The Hunting Ground

Mastodon · 21 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tampa Bay Buccaneers quarterback Jameis Winston is threatening to sue CNN if the network airs a documentary on campus sexual assault that accuses him of rape, according to a letter obtained by the Hollywood Reporter.

The Hunting Ground, directed by Kirby Dick and producer Amy Ziering, debuted at the Sundance Film Festival in January and has since been screened on college campuses across the country, earning an endorsement from Barack Obama. CNN has announced plans to air a broadcast version of the film on Sunday.

"We are writing to formally caution CNN that the portions of the film The Hunting Ground pertaining to Mr Winston are false and defamatory to Mr Winston," states the letter from Winston's attorneys to CNN's Jeff Zucker. "We urge CNN to reconsider the reckless decision to proceed with the broadcast of this deeply-flawed documentary in the face of the overwhelming evidence the film's producers consciously and intentionally failed to adhere to any accepted journalistic standards."'

'The Hunting Ground' director claims film is 'completely accurate,' despite inaccuracies

Mastodon · 21 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The backlash against the inaccuracies in "The Hunting Ground" has apparently gotten to director Kirby Dick. On Wednesday, he defended the film to The Hollywood Reporter, which was reporting on the criticism.

Then on Thursday, Dickwrote his own op-ed for the Reporter to defend the film, which airs Sunday on CNN. In it, Dick tries to dispute the claim that "The Hunting Ground" followed the same journalistic practices (or lack thereof) as Rolling Stone when it reported a gang-rape hoax at the University of Virginia.

Dick claims that "not a single case that we featured in the film has been discredited as being untrue." I'm not sure there is such a thing anymore as discrediting a case. There are people to this day who claim that something must have happened to the Rolling Stone hoaxer, Jackie, to make her tell such a tale.'

Does Utah violate the rights of unwed fathers?

Matt · 21 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At dinner in his New Mexico home, Rob Manzanares looked every bit the quintessential dad, bantering with the three children he's raising with his fiancée. But there's an empty seat at the table that he's been fighting to fill for six years.

"It's state-sanctioned kidnapping," he said. "It's stealing of children."

Manzanares fathered a daughter in 2008 and claims his then-girlfriend gave her up for adoption in Utah without his knowledge or consent. He's been waging a legal battle to get full custody of the girl ever since.

In Utah, unwed biological fathers have few paternal rights. To have any say in an adoption, they must satisfy complicated criteria within 30 days of a mother's decision to give up the child. These requirements include signing a biological father registry in Utah, showing evidence of financial and material prenatal support to the expectant mothe,r and a detailed plan for supporting both the mother and child after the birth.'

How The Hunting Ground Blurs the Truth

Matt · 21 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The recent documentary The Hunting Ground asserts that young women are in grave danger of sexual assault as soon as they arrive on college campuses. The film has been screened at the White House for staff and legislators. Senate Democrat Kirsten Gillibrand, who makes a cameo appearance in the film, cites it as confirmation of the need for thepunitive campus sexual assault legislation she has introduced. Gillibrand's colleague Barbara Boxer, after the film's premiere said, "Believe me, there will be fallout." The film has received nearly universal acclaim from critics—the Washington Post called it "lucid," "infuriating," and "galvanizing"—and, months after its initial release, its influence continues to grow, as schools across the country host screenings. "If you have a daughter going to any college in America, you need to see The Hunting Ground," the MSNBC host Joe Scarborough told his viewers in May. This fall, it will get a further boost when CNN, a co-producer, plans to broadcast the film, broadening its audience. The Hunting Ground is helping define the problem of campus sexual assault for policymakers, college administrators, students, and their parents.'

UK: Philip Davies: 'politically correct males pander to militant feminists'

Mastodon · 22 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Division between men and women is stirred up by “militant feminists” and overzealous “politically correct males”, Conservative MP Philip Davies has said in a parliamentary debate to mark International Men’s Day.

The MP for Shipley said he had spent his political career campaigning against “the blight of political correctness, which is doing so much damage to our country”, and that its “most pernicious effects” were felt on the area of gender equality.

Speaking in a debate which focused on the issue of male suicide, Davies described the introduction of the select committee for women and equalities after May’s general election as “the most depressing thing to happen”.

“After everything else, in 2015 we have a separate committee to deal with women’s issues on top of the women’s minister, women’s question time and the many strategies in the country which only deal with women,” he said.

“The problem is virtually everything we do in this House and debate in this House seems to start with the premise that everything is biased against women and something must be done about it – never an appreciation that men’s issues can be just as important and that men can be just as badly treated in certain areas as women.”'

Coca-Cola CEO OK with "positive discrimination"

Mastodon · 22 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Coca-Cola CEO Muhtar Kent likes new Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau. A lot.

The chief of the beverage giant brought up the newly elected prime minister during a panel on women in corporate leadership at theWomen's Forum of New York's Breakfast of Corporate Championson Nov. 19. Later, Kent brought Trudeau up again in an interview, lauding the PM's insistence on a Cabinet that is 50% female. "I'm a big, big fan," Kent said. "He's my favorite feminist right now."

Kent, it seems, isn't shy with the f-word. "If you're a male and you're at the top, you have to be a feminist, and you have to be proud of being a feminist," he says. "Being a declared feminist— I'd even go as far as to positively discriminate, to put it in people's annual assessment."'

Think Mr. Kent is wrong in his support of "positive discrimination"? Let him know! He can be tweeted at https://twitter.com/muhtarkent and emailed at mukent-at-na.ko.com (source).

UVA Rape Hoaxster Refuses To Turn Over Emails And Phone Records

Mastodon · 22 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Jackie, the former University of Virginia student whose fabricated claims about being gang-raped by fraternity members in 2012 appeared in Rolling Stone exactly one year ago, is refusing to turn over emails and phone records of her correspondence with her friends and with the article's author, Sabrina Rubin Erdely.

The Richmond Times-Dispatch is reporting that Jackie's attorney, Palma Pustiknik, claimed in a recent court filing pertaining to a $7.5 million defamation lawsuit filed by UVA dean Nicole Eramo that Jackie's "privacy and dignity" will be violated and that she will be subjected to "extreme harm" if the records are provided.

Jackie is not a defendant in the lawsuit. Instead, Eramo is suing Erdely, Rolling Stone, and its parent company, Wenner Media, for $7.5 million in damages.'

A Man's World but Not a Boy's

Matt · 22 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I have high regard for Adam Grant, whose bestselling book, Give and Take: Why Helping Others Drives Our Success, shows how altruism can be a key to accomplishment. And perhaps I should focus on that when I think about his post on Psychology Today, whose title is not quite as gracious. It's "Dear Men: Wake Up and Smell the Inequality," and it talks about how women still do not have an equal opportunity in the workplace, and that it's time for men to work hard to change this.

But he is certainly not making it easy for me, a man, since not only the title, but the text itself addresses men in a condescending and patronizing way. Consider his two hypotheses as to why men don't recognize the fact that women still don't have the same opportunities to rise up as they do: First is "Men are stupid." Granted, he admits that "not all men are idiots," but this does set a tone.

His main hypothesis, however, is Number 2, "Men are blind." He writes, "Many intelligent men have a hard time stomaching the idea that the world of work still isn't fair. Not long ago, I was one of them.

As soon as I read Grant's piece, which was on the day it was published, I wondered, and wrote in my journal, "Does he have daughters?" So when I clicked on his link "I was one of them," and found that yes, he does -- I was not surprised.'

Bill Clinton accuser speaks out against Hillary

Matt · 22 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In one of her first media appearances in nearly a decade, Juanita Broaddrick, the woman who famously accused Bill Clinton of rape, is now speaking out against Hillary Clinton's candidacy for president.

"Shame on you, Hillary, that's disgusting," Broaddrick said of Clinton's attempt to run for high office in part on women's issues. "Shame on you, Hillary. It's time to be truthful," she added.

Broaddrick was speaking in an interview set to air Sunday night on "Aaron Klein Investigative Radio," the popular weekend talk radio program. An advanced copy of the audio interview was obtained exclusively by Breitbart.

During the exchange with Klein, the notoriously media-shy Broaddrick accused Clinton of complacency in covering up her husband's alleged sexual crimes and indiscretions.

"I think she has always known everything about him. I think they have this evil compact between the two of them that they each know what the other does and overlook it. And go right on. And cover one for the other," she said.

She recalled a personal meeting with Hillary in 1978, in which, Broaddrick believes, the future First Lady strongly implied the alleged rape victim must stay silent about her traumatic experience.'

Deluded feminists divide us and imperil basic freedoms

Mastodon · 22 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is a "trigger warning". Reach for the smelling salts, victims of the patriarchy. I intend to be offensive.

For the benefit of challenged readers, here is the Urban Dictionary's definition of the term: "A phrase [whose] purpose is to warn weak-minded people who are easily offended that they might find what is being posted offensive in some way due to its content, causing them to overreact or otherwise start acting like a dipshit."
...
It has been one of the joys of my life that mutual respect and easy friendship between men and women, which was unusual in Ireland and Britain in my youth, became a norm in these islands. My younger friends are unselfconsciously at ease with the opposite sex, and mutual teasing is a part of that. All this is undermined by the tiny minority of women who are helping the struggle for equality to mutate into the assault on free speech that is modern feminism.

In my lifetime, with the help of many sympathetic men, in the West, women achieved equality in education, employment, pay, marriage and pretty well everything that mattered. There were no issues outstanding that could not be worked through with persistence and goodwill.

And then, the grievance-mongers and seekers after victimhood took over, and, inevitably, academics got involved and made everything worse with intellectually contemptible theories and jargon.'

"Just another member of the patriarchy"

Mastodon · 22 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At about 6pm he discovered that she had gone ahead and had the abortion that morning. She had spent most of the day groggy in hospital, but he was angry because she also appeared to have spent much of the afternoon on Facebook, instead of telling him. I told him not to be angry – she was obviously feeling defensive and wanting distraction.
...
My thoughts are pretty simple. This is just another demonstration for me of what a wicked and insidious development abortion-on-demand is. There is no happy ending here. A baby has lost its life and a man is at home beside himself with grief. He says he hasn't been able to sleep or eat properly for weeks or concentrate on work. A formerly loving relationship is in tatters, with both parties harbouring feelings of anger and resentment. A mother has to deal with the repercussions of her decision while at the same time, caring for her living child.

Not once in this man's decision was there an element of patriarchy -- wanting to control her uterus or chain her to the kitchen sink. This guy realised that he loved his unborn baby and wanted them to live. The reality of abortion means that every single pregnancy becomes a lifestyle choice and children are given a specious right – to be meticulously planned and born into "perfect" circumstances which supersedes their basic right to life. Had abortion not been an option, he wouldn't have had his damaging wobble and would have stepped up to the plate sooner. But we are all now conditioned to think not of new life, not of a baby, but of choice.
...
I think the guy has been foolish, but I don't blame him for it; he is no different to most men in contemporary society. The feminists who would shout about their abortions would no doubt lynch both him and me for being manipulative, but I see no winners, no victory, no progress and certainly no joy in this woman having exercised her "reproductive right".'

Vigilante justice: Student turns to public shaming of her alleged rapist

Mastodon · 22 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than 100 posters plastered across the UC Berkeley campus Wednesday could not be more clear. “Rapist,” they declared in large, bold type, featuring a close-up photo of a young man above a caption with the word “rapist” also used as a title before his name.

The flyers were a call to action for Berkeley students to rally against the young man, who showed up on campus to appeal his August expulsion for violating UC’s sexual assault policy. As of this year, state law says all campuses must require affirmative consent between sexual partners. Students accused of sexual assault who can’t prove their partner said “yes” to sexual contact are subject to campus discipline.

And, in the case of the young man, subject to vigilante justice as well. Prosecutors never charged him.

“Just because the judicial system does not recognize that someone is a rapist doesn’t mean they’re not,” said Angela Dancev, a UC Berkeley alumna and activist from By Any Means Necessary, which printed the posters, organized a rally against the expelled student that drew some 50 people, and even held an “independent tribunal” that supported the student who accused her former friend of raping her on Oct. 2, 2014.'

UK: Campus zealots hound student with shouts of 'rapist' after questioning the effectiveness of rape 'consent workshops'

Mastodon · 22 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A student has been driven out of lectures and bars with shouts of ‘rapist’ after he dared to question the effectiveness of ‘consent workshops’.

Second-year George Lawlor, 19, fears for his future at Warwick University after being ostracised and bullied for challenging a student union drive to hold rape awareness sessions.

Writing in a blog, he argued that the overwhelming majority of people ‘don’t have to be taught to not be a rapist’ – and that men inclined to commit the crime would be unlikely to attend such a workshop.

He added that he found his invitation to one of the sessions ‘incredibly hurtful’.

But in the latest example of politically correct intolerance in universities, the student faced a fierce backlash from radical feminists. He was attacked on Twitter and Facebook by student activists branding him a ‘rapist’ and ‘misogynist’.

Mr Lawlor, who studies politics and sociology, fears the furore will affect his academic work – and his future career.

The abuse was so bad that he stopped going to lectures. He told the Daily Mail: ‘I was expecting a reaction, but I was not prepared for just how horrible it was. I remember putting it online and told a few people, who were ... saying there would be a backlash.”'

Today’s whiny feminism is killing sex

Matt · 23 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'These days, women are treated as perpetual victims. In need of safe spaces at their colleges so they dare not hear alternative opinions, suspicious of all men as predators and infantilized by people in power seeking to protect them.

We’ve gotten to a point where society accepts that sex isn’t an action between two equals — we treat the man as always in control of the encounter. A drunk woman is incapable of consent while a drunk man remains responsible for all of his actions.

This is somehow seen as “pro-woman” and not as a way of turning a grown woman into a child, which is what it actually is. In the last year, feeling that this type of infantilization didn’t go far enough, there’s been a growing movement for “affirmative consent” on college campuses. Now consent must be verbally granted at every step of a sexual encounter.
...
The grrrls of the ’90s have given way to the uptight millennial women waiting on men to make them happy. But the game isn’t rigged — women need to step up and take responsibility for their own pleasure, just as men do, and not wait for men to provide it for them.

To send young men the message of total female powerlessness and then complain that they feel disempowered just proves the fact that most men aren’t even aware they’re playing a game, much less rigging it. The young women are — and they’re losing.'

Campus Crazies: Women's Officers Who Have Gone Off The Deep End

Mastodon · 23 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You've probably heard of Bahar Mustafa, the diversity and welfare officer at Goldsmiths University in London. She shot into the limelight after tweeting in support of #KillAllWhiteMen and banning white males from a conference on – ironically – diversity.

Schadenfreude always catches up, and Mustafa last week resigned from her post – on International Men's Day, no less – after allegations of harassment and bullying from colleagues.

But Mustafa is not alone. Social justice warriors are deeply embedded in the hierarchy and structures of the British university system. As a public service, I've combed through the track record of women's officers in some of the top universities around the country, so that you don't have to. Thank me later.'

Evidence of employers paying women 23% less than men for doing the same work noticably absent

Matt · 23 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite the widespread acceptance of the “77 cents on the dollar for the same job” claim, there is rarely ever any specific evidence presented showing that specific firms are in violation of federal law by paying women 23% less than men for doing the same job. What Obama, Clinton and gender activists are really implying is that firms across the country are illegally violating the Equal Pay Act of 1963 by paying women 77 cents on the dollar for doing the same work as men, and those deliberate and ongoing violations are somehow going undetected. If there were such ubiquitous gender wage disparities in violation of federal law, why are there not extensive investigations by the Department of Justice or the Office of Civil Rights? And why isn’t there a cottage industry of law firms specializing in representing women who are victims of the supposed pervasive gender discrimination, the way there are hundreds of law firms representing mesothelioma victims who were exposed to asbestos on the job?
...
Unfortunately, the 23% gender pay gap for the same work claim is a statistical fraud that keeps getting recycled and promoted by politicians like Obama and Clinton because it apparently has a huge political payoff for uniformed voters. And it will continue to have a political payoff as long as average Americans, especially women, buy the statistical snake-oil promoted by Democrats that women are paid 23% less than men on average for doing the same job. Along with the myths of Bigfoot and the Loch Ness monster, the 23% wage gap claim is a myth that just won’t die, regardless, or maybe because of, the scant evidence.'

UK: Woman branded selfish and cowardly by judge for false rape claim

Mastodon · 23 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A WOMAN who invented a false rape claim against a wholly innocent businessman has been branded as selfish and cowardly by a Judge.

Sophie Tucker invited her fiancé's 50-year-old boss to her home and took part in a sex act with him and tried to lie her way out of trouble when her partner spotted him leaving the house.

She claimed he had grabbed her pony tail and forced her to have oral sex against her will. She repeated the lie at hospital and to the police in a 51-minute video taped interview.

The victim of her lies was Carl Williamson, who runs a company which organises medical training courses. He was arrested while working at North Devon District Hospital.
...
He told her the only reason she was not going straight to jail was for the sake of her two children, aged one and two.'

The Hunting Ground Uses a Striking Statistic About Campus Rape That’s Almost Certainly False

Mastodon · 23 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Hunting Ground, a documentary that aired on CNN Sunday night after garnering a great deal of publicity on the festival and campus circuits, tells some horrific stories about sexual assaults on college campuses, and in doing so it raises a number of important, damning questions about how campus administrators handle rape allegations. Unfortunately, it also presents some extremely questionable research about campus rape in far too credulous a light.
...
This gets to the heart of why Lisak's viral zombie statistic is so damaging: It simply leads people astray. No one is arguing that serial sexual predators don't exist in college settings. But there's startlingly little evidence for Lisak's claims that they commit the vast majority of rapes on campus. Rather, it appears that for whatever reason — and this is where further research is so crucial — many men in college are capable of committing rape in a "limited" (for lack of a less terrible term) manner. And yet for years, Lisak and Miller's paper has served as a flashing neon light pointing researchers and activists in what is very likely the wrong direction. This could go down as a major scientific misstep.

The Hunting Ground's producers aren't the first people to have become morbidly enamored with David Lisak's serial-rapist theory, but it's unfortunate, given the reach and influence of their film, that they did.'

The Government's War Against Men's Health Is About to Get Much Worse

Mastodon · 23 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Centers of Medicare and Medicaid services (CMS) is proposing using PSA screening as a quality metric for payments to providers. If enacted, your primary care physician will be monetized to not screen you for prostate cancer. This is an inevitable downstream effect of the largely discredited and intellectually lazy United States Preventive Task Force Recommendation (USPSTF) Grade D against screening for prostate cancer. That should scare you. That should scare everyone who loves men.

Prepare for the rates of metastatic prostate cancer to rise. The effect of widespread PSA screening in the 1980s was the immediate and rapid decrease in metastatic prostate cancer cases — the same cannot be said of screening for breast cancer (which has a Grade B recommendation). Intellectual consistency is not the USPSTF forte.
...
PSA screening has not been all sunshine and roses with a cup of tea on the side. The over-treating and over diagnosing of patients with low-risk prostate cancer has been appalling and self-defeating. I have been outspoken in my abhorrence of PSA screening at health fairs and its inappropriate advocacy by the NFL; as if promoting prostate cancer screening absolves its own misguided misogyny (ditto the bizarro Pink campaign).

Urologists have made important gains in active surveillance of prostate cancer (observing select low-grade disease). A recent analysis by Drs. Cooperberg and Carroll in JAMA outlines the increase use of active surveillance in low risk patients from 10% in 2009 to a current rate of 40% — a dramatic increase never seen before. In many countries, such as Australia, the active surveillance rates for low-risk prostate cancer are in the 90% range. That is where the United States should be and can be.'

UK: Woman hits man with ‘End Violence Against Women’ placard, man charged with Criminal Damage for breaking her placard

Matt · 23 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Following is a press release from Tom Martin of Sexism Busters:

The man claims several police officers and demonstrators witnessed him being assaulted but are all pretending he started the violence, in a case of mass deception - with the exception of one honest witness.

Tom Martin will appear in a central London court tomorrow, facing a charge of Criminal Damage following a fracas that took place at a Reclaim the Night rally in November 2014 on the Charring Cross Road, central London. Mr Martin, 44, explains: “I was window-shopping on Earlham Street in central London where I live, when I heard female screams coming up Charring Cross Road, so went over to find a women-only ‘Reclaim the Night’ rally in procession. As I object to their women-only domestic violence victim advocacy, and their use of inflated rape and domestic violence statistics, I approached the rally, informed a female police sergeant present that I was going to do “an impromptu counter-demonstration” and at a safe one metre distance, gave the passing crowd the thumbs down.

They looked a bit confused to be honest, so I started shouting “Stop sex-segregating. Stop sex-segregating”. One of the passing protesters hit me on the head with her “End Violence Against Women” placard, which I instinctively grabbed and tussled away from her. The female police sergeant shouted “Oi!”, immediately apprehended me, letting my attacker go, and then holding me in hand cuffs for one hour and 25 minutes, finally arresting and charging me with Criminal Damage because the flimsy handle fell off the placard in the struggle.

The arresting police sergeant, and three police officers present all claimed they didn’t see the protester hit me with her placard, only me grabbing her sign - even though I had alerted the sergeant 20 seconds before the incident that I was going to do an “impromptu counter demonstration”. When I got home, I checked http://twitter.com for tweets mentioning the fracas, and a few tweeters who had witnessed the event claimed that a man had run up and attacked them, and argued the incident proved the need for their women-only march ... https://twitter.com/HekateP/status/536251062785961986 ... https://twitter.com/oliviasinger/status/536240576069632000 ... so, everybody else had their story straight, except, I am very relieved to announce, for one tweeter, who had been marching that night and witnessed the event, and who tweeted in reply to a claim that I’d attacked the marchers, “not sure who u think was attacking whom for what?": https://twitter.com/roomso4own/status/536852784105406464

If the police persist with this false charge based on their wrongful arrest of me, then they can dig out the CCTV footage from the lamppost cameras either side of the fracas, which will further confirm whose lying, and who isn’t. So, ladies and gentleman of the media, we have a case of mob chivalry, and mass deception, by the police, and by the marchers (except one) - where a woman initiates violence against a man, but is given a pass for her violence, and where a man uses proportionate self defence against an assaulter - and is punished for it.

Here is the T shirt I will be wearing in court tomorrow: https://twitter.com/Sexismbusters/status/668563169300869120

The court case is at 10am tomorrow, Tuesday 24th November, 2015 - at Westminster Magistrates Court, 181 Marylebone Road, London NW1 5BR , in Court Room 8 - arrive at 9.30am to be assured entry. For further info on any of the above, email Tom: sexismbusters-at-hotmail.com.

Tom Martin is the man who in 2012 sued The London School of Economics for ignoring men's issues in its gender studies Masters programmes. Tom is currently shooting a documentary series called The Free Model "about getting women to pay half". His twitter bio has been retweeted 1232 times, Mr Martin admitting in it he is "currently single": https://twitter.com/James_v_S/status/659638183383183360

CNN Shows Sex Assault Film Despite Legal Threat

Matt · 23 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the face of threatened legal action from the football star Jameis Winston, CNN did not back away from broadcasting “The Hunting Ground,” a documentary about sexual assault on college campuses that has stirred controversy since its January debut at the Sundance Film Festival.

“CNN is proud to provide a platform for a film that has undeniably played a significant role in advancing the national conversation about sexual assault on college campuses,” the network said in a statement. The film was shown on the network at 8 p.m. Eastern time on Sunday.

Mr. Winston, a quarterback for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, is the focus of a segment in “The Hunting Ground.” While attending Florida State University in 2012, Mr. Winston was accused of sexual assault. He asserted his innocence, did not face criminal rape charges and was cleared of violating Florida State’s student code of conduct. The movie, directed by Kirby Dick and produced by Amy Ziering, asserts that Mr. Winston received preferential treatment from officials."'

North Dakota 'man camps' battle pending ban in oil capital

Matt · 24 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. You can be 1000% certain that if these were camps filled with women, the merest suggestion that they be evicted and made to pay for hotel housing instead of much more affordable employer-sponsored housing would be met with demands for the suggester's resignation followed by a "ribbon campaign" to raise money for the many "poor women" in need of whatever. Instead, men in this condition are met with rejection. Excerpt:

'Providers of temporary housing for North Dakota's oilfield workers are fighting a plan by the state's energy capital to evict their "man camps," fearing it could set an example for others and add to the sector's woes caused by a global commodity slump.

Earlier this month, the Williston City Commission voted 3-2 in favor of an ordinance that would deny "man camps" occupancy permit extensions beyond July 2016.

Should the ordinance pass in a final vote on Nov. 24, which appears likely, it would mark the first time since the U.S. shale boom began in 2008 that a community has evicted a "man camp," though other communities in Texas and North Dakota have blocked their arrival or expansion.

...

While the term "man camp" conjures up images of rootless single men carousing late into the night, the facilities are heavily patrolled by security guards, do not allow alcohol or overnight guests and feel as Spartan as hospital rooms.'

Feminist bullies and the pernicious myth that sexual morality is just about 'consent'

Mastodon · 24 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pity today's male undergraduate, tasked with navigating his way through the thorny thicket of university gender politics.

For surely Oliver Cromwell himself, history's most notorious puritan, would have admired the zeal of the new generation of self-styled feminist campaigners, with all their fury over perceived grievances.

The latest target of their rage is George Lawlor, a second-year politics and sociology student at Warwick University, who dared to question the effectiveness of sexual consent workshops run on his campus.
...
But those engaged at the forefront of gender politics do not tend to appreciate people challenging their viewpoint.

I am not remotely under-estimating the seriousness of rape and sexual assault. Apart from murder, they are among the darkest crimes known to humanity. But it is precisely because they are so serious that they should not be used as vehicles for doctrinaire point-scoring or political power games.

Sadly, that is what seems to be happening in this case.

For decades, the repugnant theory that 'all men are rapists' has lain at the heart of radical feminism, and statistics are quoted to support the tenor of that argument.'

Update on Tom Martin's hearing over "protestgate"

Matt · 24 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

The following is from Tom Martin at Sexism Busters. I've decided to coin this incident "protestgate", since the authorities have involved themselves in an apparent attempt to at least obscure the truth if not try to side-step it, despite some honest officers changing their initial accounts. From Tom:

I just attended court, where unbelievably, the Crown Prosecution Service decided to proceed with the case, despite the fact that the police now admit, in their OWN statement, that I was indeed hit with the placard first - something they had all previously denied witnessing. The police statement falsely claims that I was aggressive and had my finger in the protesters' faces beforehand, when in fact, I stood at a safe distance with my thumb down, shouting "Stop sex-segregating" as the crowd streamed by.

The police statements were submitted to the court outside the time limit, and not signed, so my court-appointed lawyer is pushing to get their case against me for Criminal Damage thrown out on this technicality - an outcome I believe the police are secretly hoping for as well - to save them the blushes of a court case that will established they wrongfully and maliciously arrested me on a trumped up charge.

CCTV was found by the police, but it mysteriously did not show the incident - another cause of concern for my lawyer. Criminal Damage cannot be brought against a case of self-defence, as the prosecution have to prove I had malicious intent to break the sign, when in reality, I was responding to an assault, removing the assault weapon (it doesn't matter how violent the assault was - unwanted contact of any degree is assault.)

The case has been adjourned until December 15th, at 9.30am - the National tabloid press photographers and journalists were there having read the above press release - they interviewed me and were very supportive.

Please go to my twitter: @sexismbusters and retweet this article, and keep spreading the word about this outrageous and ongoing abuse campaign against me for standing up against the sex-segregating man-blaming victim-feminist throng.

‘Drug-Dealing’ Sorority Girl Murdered, UCLA Faculty Blames Epidemic of Violence and Sexual Assault Against Women

Mastodon · 24 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The blonde, attractive, and seemingly-affable young senior was the model victim, according to American cultural consciousness; she was an older JonBenét Ramsey and received ample media attention as a result.

As reports surfaced about Del Vesco’s criminal allegations, the narrative of a feeble woman killed by a deranged male high off the drug of patriarchy became slightly complicated. “At the time of her death, Del Vesco was facing drug-related charges. On July 8, she pleaded not guilty to charges of possessing Ecstasy, LSD, methamphetamine and Psilocybin, officers said,” reports CBS Los Angeles News. "According to the Superior Court’s website, she was scheduled to appear in court [the following week].

A few days later, police arrested Alberto Hinojosa Medina, a student at Fresno State University, and Eric Marquez, a fifth-year biology student at UCLA for the young woman’s death. While prosecutors have yet to explicitly announce potential theories surrounding motive, “there has been media speculation that an alleged drug connection could have killed Del Vesco over fear over fear she would turn in a suspected source in a hypothetical attempt to make a deal with prosecutors,” according to LA Weekly.

The “rat” theory is, of course, plausible, and perhaps even likely, given Del Vesco’s alleged drug dealing with hard substances, such as meth and Ecstasy.

Rather than confronting and decrying drug-related violence and addressing students’ abuse and exploitation of hard drugs, putting the entire campus community at risk, UCLA faculty decided to double-down on gendered rhetoric and oppression politics.'

'I like this' button enabled on MANN

Matt · 24 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

OK, so it took me awhile. Like, 10 years. Or more. But finally, the brilliant idea occurred to me that maybe, just maybe, there is a "like" module for Drupal that I can implement quickly and easily that allows readers to indicate their appreciation of an article or other reader's comment without needing to log in and comment. And DUH!, a couple Google searches later, I done found something that'll work.

I could have set the "Like" feature to have a rating number system, which I thought was too much mental overhead for the casual reader. (I mean, it is for me. I don't want to think that hard, even about a good article. "Is it 5 stars? Maybe 4? Maybe it's really just 3? To hell with it!" Then not do anything.) I mean, life's hard enough, right? No need to spin one's wheels over rating a bloody Internet post. :)

So I settled on using the simple thumbs-up approach. I declined to provide a thumbs-down button because it allows fem-bot raiders of the site to swoop in and thumbs-down everything, and besides, if a reader, feminist or not, wants to pan a story, please log in and pan it, saying why. I like feedback, whether it be praise or condemnation; lets me know how my editing is doing, esp. around whether others think I published something germane to MRA issues or not. (Sometimes, I stray, and when it happens, I want to be told why you think I have.)

But back to the stars rating idea... if MANN regulars like the idea of using a star rating system instead of a simple thumbs-up system, then please comment to this post and say so. I can always change things easily enough; we can ex-shhhhperriment a bit if needed to see what suits us all best.

Thanks and enjoy the new thumbs-up feature!

Women's group can't accept that 'rape culture' just might not be a thing

Mastodon · 25 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When you're committed to perpetuating the myth of a rampant "rape culture" on college campuses, evidence to the contrary becomes baffling.

And so it goes for the American Association of University Women, which analyzed 2014 reporting data from colleges and universities across the country and found that 91 percent of schools had no reported incidents of rape. Most people would see that number and cheer. Hooray! College women aren't being raped in the U.S. at rates on par with the Congo!'

College under federal investigation for railroading student accused of rape

Matt · 25 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Obama administration's Department of Education is seesawing back toward sanity, after creating a reign of terror on campus in response to evidence-thin sexual-assault allegations.

Texas A&M University is under federal investigation following its suspension of a male student for sexual assault – allegations that went nowhere with law enforcement authorities, The Texas Tribune reports.'

Student sues college after expulsion for sexual misconduct

Mastodon · 26 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Georgia Tech student expelled in April after a sexual misconduct investigation has filed a lawsuit alleging that the review was unfair and violated his rights.

The lawsuit said the university's Office of Student Integrity found the student, identified as "John Doe" in the suit, responsible for non-consensual sexual and intercourse and coercion against a female student at an October 2013 event where they had been drinking. Doe received little information about witnesses' statements and couldn't defend himself, the lawsuit said.

The male student wants a judge to allow him to take spring classes and complete his degree on Georgia Tech's Atlanta campus while the suit is argued. The suit seeks unspecified punitive and compensatory damages and a jury trial.

The suit names the school's president, the dean of students and Director of the Office of Student Integrity Peter Paquette as defendants along with a board that oversees public colleges in Georgia.'

Rape culture and the problem with numbers

Mastodon · 26 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most mainstream news publications publish, you know, news. Except when it's about "rape culture" on campus, when no news is also considered news. Case in point: following a winter survey they initiated last year on campus sexual assault, CBC News this fall conducted a survey of 87 post-secondary institutions to investigate the reporting of sexual assaults in 2014 on and off their campuses.

Since the received activist wisdom on the subject assures us that one in four (or five, depending on the polemicist) women on campus will be sexually assaulted during her college tenure, the researchers were chagrined to find that the actual number of reports came to 700 – averaging out to 1.85 per 10,000 students – a figure that jibes with rates of sexual assault in the general population. In 16 schools – seven in Quebec and nine in western Canada – not a single sexual assault has been reported in the last six years.

To feminists, there can be only one explanation for the dearth of reports, and certainly not the explanation that sexual assaults are either rare or considered not worth reporting by those involved. "It's undercounting" is the immediate conclusion leapt to by University of Ottawa criminology professor and domestic violence researcher Holly Johnson. "It's not counting what is the true experience of students, because there is no campus in which this doesn't exist."'

College Title IX officer: Not feeling welcome on campus deserves same response as rape

Mastodon · 26 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When students of color don't feel welcome on campus, it's just as serious as rape.

That's the impression that Wesleyan University's Antonio Farias, vice president for equality and inclusion and Title IX officer, gave the campus community in his response to recent student protests.

Following up on President Michael Roth's promise to "communicate better" about the school's existing system for reporting incidents that are "concerning, harmful and/or contrary to" community standards, Farias wrote:

"We cannot fix what we cannot see, and it is apparent from the heartrending stories I've heard from marginalized students that our system of documenting and investigating instances of discrimination is not sufficiently understood and used across the campus. Reporting is an essential first step to get at the root causes of discriminatory behaviors that are caustic to the learning process."'

Lying Campus Feminists Report GamerGater To Police For Non-Existent ‘Threatening Comments’

Mastodon · 26 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A GamerGate supporter who snuck into an anti-GamerGate panel at Northeastern Illinois University and streamed it online was reported to campus p0lice and falsely accused of making “threatening comments.” He caught the whole thing on film.

Cristian Flores, who goes by the Twitter username “Experiment #626,” was roaming the corridors after the panel, at which feminists bemoaned the lack of “safe spaces” to “protect” them from gamers, when he was approached by a campus police officer and told that someone matching his description had been reported for making threats. As the video below clearly shows, he had done no such thing.

The GamerGate supporter, who identifies himself by name to the officer around 1 hour and 48 minutes into the footage, had been fooling around to amuse his viewers. He had picked up a packet of Ritz crackers and placed one of them on a sign, and turned a tap on and off again at the request of his fans.

At one point he is heard to call out “Big Milo!” after an entreaty from his followers, a reference to an eight-hour YouTube stream by this reporter that discussed freedom of speech and featured many prominent names in the GamerGate movement. But the allegations made against him that he made “threatening comments” appear to be entirely fabricated.'

"Tampon tax: men should share the burden of ending domestic abuse"

Mastodon · 26 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women's Aid is feeling extremely fortunate. The chancellor has just announced that we will be sharing a fund of £2m to work with another domestic abuse charity, SafeLives, to improve early intervention in domestic abuse: something we have long argued is essential.

This work is being funded through the proceeds of the tax on sanitary products. There is good in this, but questions are inevitable and we are glad the government will continue to work to get rid of this tax.

However, we must take every opportunity to loudly and clearly affirm that women alone are not responsible for ending domestic violence.'

--

NISVS Infographic

Mother who left newborn baby in church manger won't face charges

Mastodon · 27 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A mother who left her newborn baby in a Christmas manger inside a New York City church will not be prosecuted, authorities said Wednesday.

"After a full review of all the facts and circumstances surrounding the discovery of a newborn infant this past Monday in a creche inside of Holy Child Jesus Church in the Richmond Hill section of Queens County - including locating and interviewing the mother - my office has determined that no criminal prosecution of the child's mother is warranted," Queens District Attorney Richard Brown said in a statement.

It was around 11:30 a.m. when a custodian at the church left the empty chapel to get lunch. When he returned shortly after 1 p.m., he heard a baby crying, but saw no one else around.
...
New York has a so-called safe haven law that says a newborn can be dropped off anonymously at a church, hospital, police or fire station without fear of prosecution. But the law, known as the Abandoned Infant Protection Act, requires that the child be left with someone or for authorities to be called immediately.'

U.K. Parliament debate Male suicide and International Men's Day

Raymond Cuttill · 27 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

U.K. Parliament debates male suicide and International Men's Day

In case you missed it (most here probably didn't) Thursday 19 November 2015 was International Men's Day, A debate was had in Parliament in the London. It was proposed by MP Philip Davies and mocked by MP Jess Philiips saying “every day is International Mens’ Day”. If you’re not in the slightest worried about male suicide, men’s health, workplace deaths, treatment in the family courts or constant vilification of men then maybe you could agree with her. In spite of her objections it did go ahead. It was held in Westminster Hall, not in the main House of Commons where other debates were considered more important.

You can watch it here:
Westminster Hall
Thursday 19 November 2015 Meeting started at 1.30pm, ended 4.31pm
Parliament TV
or read the transcript here:
Hansard transcipt or download it here (read pages 71-94 (marked 241WH to 288WH at the top of the page):
Download PDF

You can see the comment by MP Jess Phillips.
27 October 2015: Jess Phillips MP mocks an application to debate men's issues on Intnl Men's Day

And other comments like:
From the Independent (UK newspaper)
Need some reasons why we don't need International Men's Day? Allow me to enlighten you

From the Guardian (UK newspaper):
Relax, guys – it’s International Men’s Day (the official one)

Male University of York Student Commits Suicide on Day His University Ditches International Men’s Day After Pressure From Feminists

For those who actually think there needs to be an IMD:
1. internationalmensday.co
2. ukmensday.org.uk/about-imd-uk/the-six-pillars-of-international-mens-day/

I also put it on my Facebook page.

UK: Wife who poisoned husband is foiled by spelling mistake

Matt · 28 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A British woman who tried to kill her husband by poisoning his Christmas drink of sparkling fruit wine with anti-freeze was jailed for 15 years on Monday after being undone by a spelling mistake and a trail of text messages.

Following family arguments, Jacqueline Patrick, 55, twice tried to kill her husband Douglas, 70, in October and on Christmas Day 2013, by spiking his cherry Lambrini, a drink favored by teenagers looking to get drunk on a low budget.

"Perhaps most shocking of all was the note she gave to the London Ambulance Service purporting to be from her husband, stating that he did not wish to be resuscitated," said Detective Inspector Tracey Miller, of London's Metropolitan Police, in a statement.

The forged note showed a misspelling of the word dignity as "dignerty". When police later asked her to write the word, Jacqueline Patrick made the same mistake.'

Poor boys are falling behind poor girls, and it’s deeply troubling

Mastodon · 29 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It’s become a fact of American life that girls are better than boys at school. They get better grades. They’re suspended less. For every generation since the boomers, women have been more likely than men to earn high school and college diplomas.

In fact, girls are pretty much the only reason the high school graduation rate went up in past 40 years, according to calculations by Harvard economist Richard Murnane. The male high school graduation rate has been stuck at 81 percent since the 1970s, while the female graduation rose from 81 percent to 87 percent.

Women have been so persistently superior it is perhaps time for a new stereotype about the sexes — girls as bookish mavens like Lisa Simpson; boys as goof-offs like Bart.

There are many theories for this widening academic achievement gap, but first, here’s another observation that might shed some light: The differences between boys and girls are largest among the most disadvantaged children. Socioeconomic status does not entirely explain the gender gap. Even well-off boys struggle to compare to well-off girls. But a tough upbringing sets boys back much farther.'

Loretta Lynch’s false claim on sex trafficking arrests

Matt · 30 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is a story about how the language regarding the crime of sex trafficking has become so fuzzy that even the nation’s top law enforcement officer can speak before an international audience and utter wildly inflated statistics.

Throughout 2015, The Fact Checker has dug into dubious statistics concerning sex trafficking, so this recent speech by Attorney General Lynch caught our eye. Lynch has taken a keen interest in sex trafficking, recently announcing more than $44 million in grant funding to combat human trafficking in the United States, including supporting law-enforcement task forces and victims services organizations. She devoted a significant part of her speech to Interpol to discussing sex trafficking.

But laudable efforts to help victimized children can be undermined when advocates resort to hyperbole to tout their success. Let’s explore how that happened here.'

Ireland: "Men should stop whining about gender quotas"

Mastodon · 30 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's something particularly annoying about male politicians giving out. Is it their voices? That high-pitched whining? Or is it just their general air of hysteria? I mean they sound pretty hysterical to me. I can't even understand what they're saying! It's their emotional nature I suppose, and their fragility.

I'm not sure how we expect these delicate creatures to make tough decisions. Particularly if it's that time of the month. They're probably more concerned about what they're wearing than actually being politicians. Let me tell you something, you have to be very wary about ambitious men. And don't they kill each other too with pure bitchiness? Sure they'd stab each other in the back before they'd shake a hand. You know what? Sometimes I think other men are men's own worst enemies.

The ear-piercing dog whistle-level of men whining ruptures ear drums when it comes to the discussion around gender quotas. On current affairs television programmes and radio shows, the merits of gender quotas in politics are still being debated. Why? Quotas for candidates in the next election are already in place. As much as the media may have a misplaced desire for a confrontational bunfight on this topic, the "debate" is an extinct one. It's already happening, and the reasons are pretty obvious.'

UK: Fathers' rights stunts aren't very clever, but we should take the message behind them very seriously

Matt · 30 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At the weekend, two desperate fathers once again risked their lives with the kind of publicity stunt we are now well accustomed to.

This time, Martin Matthews, 48, a represenative of fathers' action group Stop The War On Dads and Bobby Smith, 33, of New Fathers 4 Justice, scaled Buckingham Palace walls and climbed onto the top of the Queen's Gallery.

Like protesting dads dressed as Batman and Spiderman before them, they were calling for equal rights for fathers in divorce settlements, and for a reform of the family courts system which they feel is stacked against men, favouring mothers as sole custodians.

Holding a banner that read ‘I Am Harry’s Dad’ and referring to the recent ISIS atrocity in Paris, Mr Matthews said, “Obviously there were a few concerns. People are going to be nervous at the moment. But even if I had taken a bullet, it would have been worth the risk.”

So here we have a man who is willing to take a sniper bullet to the head in order to promote the cause of fathers' rights.'

Save the Date for SAVE

Matt · 30 November 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Tomorrow is Giving Tuesday. We know your shopping lists are already getting crowded with holiday gifts and chestnuts for roasting!

But please consider adding a donation to SAVE to the list. Here's why:

- We really care! We work hard to make sure that the laws in our country fairly get the right results, while making sure constitutional rights are protected.
- We work hard! In the past year we have tackled numerous legislative projects at both the state and federal level, with great successes! We've been racking up the trophies!
- Our 'we' is small! We are mighty, but small! This means every dollar makes a difference! Smaller nonprofits are often overlooked as larger nonprofits have bigger ad and fundraising campaigns.

Please consider contributing to SAVE on our website, here: http://www.saveservices.org/contribute

SAVE by donating tomorrow!

Thank you, and truly yours,

Gina Lauterio, Esq., Policy Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

What ‘The Hunting Ground’ gets wrong

Mastodon · 1 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A week ago, CNN aired “The Hunting Ground,” a documentary aimed at exposing the prevalence of rape in all too many college campuses. One of the many stories “The Hunting Ground” profiled was that of Erica Kinsman, a Florida State student who accused Heisman Trophy-winning quarterback Jameis Winston of raping her. In the film, Klinsman accuses Florida State and the Tallahassee Police Department of complicity because of her perception that they failed to thoroughly investigate her allegations despite the fact that Florida State hired a former State Supreme Court justice to arbitrate.

Florida State President John Thrasher blasted the film, saying that its depiction of the Winston case supported a “simplistic narrative” replete with “major omissions and glaring distortions.” Trasher’s point is a reasonable one: Because the film failed to interview a single university official, it left viewers with the facile impression that “colleges and universities are to blame for our national sexual assault crisis.”

Unfortunately, the statements of Thrasher were roundly criticized on social media. Thousands of advocates shared videos of Erica Kinsman’s story accompanied by the hashtag #StandWithErica and by invectives directed against Thrasher and the Florida State administration.'

For campus sexual assaults, false reporting is a false measure

Mastodon · 1 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The conversation about campus sexual assault lacks trust, most notably around the idea of false reporting. The wedge this issue drives between women and men has to be addressed when developing sexual assault legislation.

There are several numbers in circulation that claim to represent false reporting. One study often quoted by women's rights groups found only 2 percent to 8 percent of reports to be false. A different study, often quoted by men's rights groups, predicted that anywhere from 40 percent to 50 percent of cases are false.

Trying to put a number to false reports is pointless and even harmful. "False" report statistics can include not only the honest-to-God, outright lies that are provably false, but also cases that are dropped — a common occurrence in legal proceedings. A case can be dropped if there is a lack of evidence, the complainant tires of the reporting process or the case lacks a clear legal definition. At one university, this left only 35 percent of the cases viable for a day in court.'

Sex assault cases strain universities' discipline process, Christian says

Mastodon · 1 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The process Montana universities use to discipline students accused of sexual assault may not be the best system for adjudication, but it's the only tool the schools have, Commissioner of Higher Education Clayton Christian said Monday.

"The code of conduct was meant to expel students for cheating on a test, not where it's went," Christian said. "That's a challenge and limitation of it. But we've got to have some process until we come up with a better one."

The records produced from one such process, the University of Montana proceedings that found former UM quarterback Jordan Johnson raped a student and that led to his expulsion, are the subject of a lawsuit filed by author Jon Krakauer.

According to Krakauer's book "Missoula: Rape and the Justice System in a College Town," published in April, a University Court disciplinary hearing found Johnson raped a female student. Christian, according to Krakauer's book, later reversed the expulsion.'

Radical Feminists and White Racists

Mastodon · 1 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'My feminist colleagues have a lot of explaining to do. Despite clear evidence of his innocence, they are continuing to peddle propaganda suggesting that a black Harvard Law student named Brandon Winston is guilty of sexual assault. I'm referring to their shameful decision to show the film The Hunting Ground to their students. In the process, they are presenting the film as an accurate portrayal of rape on college campuses in general and of several discredited cases in particular.

Whether they realize it or not, these feminists have allowed their commitment to advancing feminism to trump their commitment to fighting racism. In fact, their recent actions in repeating false accusations against black college students promote racism in a way not unlike the infamous case of the Scottsboro Boys in the 1930s.'

Domestic Violence Is Gender Blind, Unlike the Activists

Mastodon · 1 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Aiola Virella, editor in chief of Metro Puerto Rico, is a strong advocate for the victims of domestic violence. Well, actually, she only seems to care about half of those victims.

As is often the case, this career journalist used her Twitter account on November 25 to share a video regarding domestic violence with the hashtag #PazParaMujeres (Peace for Women). I responded to her post by asking if it shouldn't instead be #PazParaTodos (Peace for All)

Apparently not. Virella disagreed and invited me to "study the topic more." So, I shared a few examples of source material that supported my point of view.'

The Timothy Hunt Witch Hunt

Mastodon · 1 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 1983, the British biochemist Timothy Hunt discovered cyclins, a family of proteins that help regulate the life of cells. Eighteen years later, in 2001, he was awarded the Nobel Prize in Physiology and Medicine. Between June 8 and June 10 of this year, the 72-year-old Hunt went from being a universally respected and even beloved figure at the top of the scientific establishment to an instant pariah, condemned everywhere for antiquated opinions about women's role in science that he does not, in fact, hold.

In only 48 hours, he found himself compelled to resign his positions at University College London and at the august Royal Society (where Isaac Newton and Robert Hooke once fought petty battles) after being told that failure to do so would lead to his outright firing.

The Timothy Hunt affair represents more than the gratuitous eye-blink ruination of a great man's reputation and career. It demonstrates the danger of the extraordinary, almost worshipful deference that academia, government institutions, and above all the mainstream media now accord to social media. It is yet more evidence of the way moral panic and (virtual) mob rule can be accelerated and intensified by the minimalism of Twitter, with its 140-character posts and its apparently inherent tendency to encourage snap judgments, prejudice, and cruelty.'

’44 boys is too many!’: Hillary Clinton’s new ‘gender war’ ad featuring children

Mastodon · 1 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton has a new web ad out titled, “44 boys is too many!” featuring young girls who’ve allegedly written notes to Clinton about why they want her to be president. We assume it’s supposed to be adorable, but it’s really kinda gross. Why use children like this?'

Ad here:

UK: Fathers4Justice founder agrees libel settlement with The Independent

Matt · 1 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The founder of Fathers4Justice, Matt O'Connor, has agreed a settlement with The Independent newspaper in libel proceedings.

O'Connor had instructed M Law to begin libel proceedings over an article in which Caroline Nokes MP made a series of false and libellous allegations about O'Connor, his wife and Fathers4Justice in the newspaper. The Independent agreed to publish a full response to the allegations and made a significant contribution to legal costs.

Said O'Connor, "This is the third settlement we have reached over false and defamatory allegations about Fathers4Justice and our family.

The first related to allegations made by Dame Elizabeth Butler-Sloss who falsely claimed F4J had issued death threats against her. She subsequently apologised to F4J in a live BBC broadcast in the House of Lords in 2013.

In April 2015, Prime Minister David Cameron falsely claimed Fathers4Justice had scaled the roof of his family home. He subsequently apologised in The Evening Standard, Telegraph and in writing to F4J on receipt of a letter before action.'

Swedish mag tweets job ad seeking anyone but white males

Mastodon · 2 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nöjesguiden the hip city magazine tweeted out their hunt for some new film & music reviewers here, archived here, adding "Note: white males declined".

Pretty blunt way to define the type of employee they were looking for, in fact some people called it discrimination and it has now been reported to the "Diskriminerings Ombudsman" in Sweden. In fact, at least fifteen people felt personally discriminated against as that's how many reports the Diskrimeringsombudsman has received so far according to Dagens Media. At least one of the complainers expresses that he feels discriminated against on the basis of ethnicity, as the company "writes explicitly that they do not want to hire people with certain skin color."

The tweet has been removed, and the wanted ad has been changed. Now on twitter you'll instead find this apology of sorts: "Sometimes even the PC-mafia* is interpreted wrong. As everyone knows, NG stands for everyones equal worth, and everyone are welcome to come and write for us." By "PC_mafia" they mean the Politically Correct 'mafia', a term often used for magazines like Nöjesguiden.'

The untold story of the campus 'rape crisis'

Matt · 2 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We've all heard about the "rape crisis" on our college campuses. We've heard that one in five young women are assaulted during their college years. It's a staggering number, one that hits home for parents of college-age kids. I was about to send a daughter off to school when I heard that statistic. I was horrified.

But other studies contradict that finding and claim the real number is far lower. No one really knows for sure. Another study claims that young women who do not attend college are more likely to be raped than those who do.

Still, many assaults go unreported, and – of course – one rape or sexual assault on any campus is too many. No one thinks this is not a serious issue. No one wants any college student to be assaulted or raped on campus.

But neither does anyone want a college student to be falsely accused in an effort to help the school look like it's taking the issue seriously. Lives are being ruined. Something must be done.

This weekend we will examine this case and more like it on a special report: Fox News Reporting – The Truth About Sex & College,airing Saturday and Sunday at 8 pm ET on the Fox News Channel.'

Underground at Brown

Matt · 3 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At Brown University, in Providence, R.I., there is a secret forum in which students may discuss potentially controversial issues freely. Let me say that again: At Brown, there is a secret forum in which students may discuss potentially controversial issues — or anything they want — freely.

Yes, there is an underground group whose purpose is to allow kids to say what they ought to be free to say above ground.

As David Frum remarked on Twitter, when he read the magazine piece, What is this? Warsaw 1983 or America 2015?

The group came about in this way: Last year, Brown was to host a debate on the issue of campus rape. In one corner was Jessica Valenti, a radical feminist, and in the other was Wendy McElroy, a radical libertarian. It was suspected that McElroy would deny there was a “culture of rape.” And this was intolerable to some students, who protested mightily — in advance, mind you.'

Defense Secretary orders all combat jobs open to women

Matt · 3 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The positions are open to women, but there's no mention of enacting the same policy of assigning women to combat roles whether they like it or not. (Hey, don't all rush to put in for an MOS change at once!) Excerpt:

'Defense Secretary Ash Carter on Thursday ordered the military to open all combat jobs to women, rebuffing requests by the Marine Corps to exclude women from certain front-line combat jobs.

Declaring that "we are a joint force," Carter said that while moving women into these jobs will present challenges, the military can no longer afford to exclude half of the population from grueling military jobs. He said that any man or woman who meets the standards should be able to serve, and he gave the armed services 30 days to submit plans to make the historic change.

Carter's order opens the final 10 percent of military positions to women, and allows them to serve in the military's most demanding and difficult jobs, including as special operations forces, such as the Army Delta units and Navy SEALs.'

Woman to Hillary: You Say Rape Accusers Should Be Believed, What About Your Husband's?

Matt · 3 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. And were those accusing Bill actually disproven, Hildebeast? Don't recall it. My how she changes her tune whenever it becomes convenient. Excerpt:

'During a campaign event in New Hampshire today, Hillary Clinton was asked about the women who accused her husband of rape and sexual assault.

The woman pointed out how Clinton recently said all rape victims should be believed, and then asked, "Would you say that about Juanita Broaddrick, Kathleen Willey, and/or Paula Jones?"
...
Clinton responded by saying, "I would say that everybody should be believed at first until they are disbelieved based on evidence."'

Court to hear whether women should register for draft

el cid · 4 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The White House announced Friday that it will consider making women eligible for the draft, one day after the Pentagon's historic decision to allow women in all combat roles.

White House spokesman Josh Earnest said officials at the Pentagon are deliberating on the change and will work with Congress on the review on the selective service law.

On Thursday, Defense Secretary Ash Carter announced that all military jobs will be opened to women, including the most dangerous combat posts.

The outcome of a federal lawsuit challenging male-only registration also could play a role in determining whether women will be required to register for the draft. The case, National Coalition for Men vs. the Selective Service System, will be considered Tuesday by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in Pasadena, Calif.

But Carter said the lawsuit won't stop the Pentagon from moving forward.'

Radical Feminism And The So-Called ‘Rape Epidemic’

Mastodon · 4 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“Innocent until proven guilty.” The serial killer. The terrorist. The pedophile. All are accorded the presumption of innocence with the exception of one: the college-age male accused of sexual assault. Unfortunately for him, it’s “guilty until proven innocent,” where the blameless are sacrificed at the ideological altar of radical feminism.

Devoid of facts and eager to add renewed vigor to their flailing movement, the rabid feminists loudly proclaim and denounce the so-called “rape epidemic” on college campuses, all the while ignoring the “justice epidemic” they have created. At the hand of feminists, college campuses are quickly becoming microcosms of injustice – where no rape accusation is a false accusation and all men are guilty by virtue of their gender.

At the helm of this mob justice is none other than Hillary Clinton, who issued a battle cry to her feminist sisters on Twitter last month: “Every survivor of sexual assault deserves to be heard, believed, and supported.”'

Rights group sends letter to Ed Dept. opposing affirmative consent

Mastodon · 4 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education has sent a letter to the Education Department formally opposing affirmative consent, or "yes means yes," policies at colleges and universities.

FIRE has written against the use of yes-means-yes policies previously, as the rules define nearly all sex as rape and provide little recourse for accused students to prove their innocence.

"Given [the Education Department's Office for Civil Rights'] repeated acknowledgment that colleges' and universities' implementation of Title IX should not impinge on students' due process rights, the agency should clearly and publicly censure any consent standard — including the 'affirmative consent' standard — that seriously undermines an accused student's ability to defend himself or herself in a fair hearing," wrote FIRE's senior program officer, Susan Kruth.'

‘Hunting Ground’ Filmmakers to Harvard Law Profs: Criticizing Our Film Could Create a ‘Hostile Climate’

Mastodon · 4 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last month, a group of 19 Harvard Law School professors issued a press release denouncing the film The Hunting Ground as “propaganda” and condemning its “unfair and misleading portrayal” of the case of Harvard Law student Brandon Winston. Winston was dismissed from the law school for an alleged sexual assault, but later reinstated after faculty reversed the decision.
...
In a statement emailed to The Harvard Crimson and reported yesterday, Hunting Ground director Kirby Dick and producer Amy Ziering suggest that the professors’ criticism of the film may constitute actionable sex discrimination in violation of Title IX:

`“The Harvard Law professors’ letter is irresponsible and raises an important question about whether the very public bias these professors have shown in favor of an assailant contributes to a hostile climate at Harvard Law,” Dick and Ziering wrote.`

To say this assertion is ludicrous is an understatement. Unfortunately, that doesn’t mean it isn’t worth taking seriously. After all, the Department of Education’s Office for Civil Rights (OCR) recently opened a Title IX investigation into the University of Mary Washington (UMW) in Virginia in part because students alleged that a letter from the university president defending UMW against allegations of discrimination constituted “retaliation” in violation of Title IX. Similarly, Northwestern University investigated Professor Laura Kipnis earlier this year for alleged Title IX violations after she wrote an essay for The Chronicle of Higher Education about what she called the “sexual panic” on campus.'

10 of 71 ISIS recruits arrested in U.S. are female

Matt · 5 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. And people still think mass murder/terrorism is a "man's game". Nothing "game" about it, and nothing all-male about it, too. Excerpt:

'Ten out of 71 recruits for the Islamic State terror group arrested in the U.S. since 2014 are women, according to a new report which demonstrates that the role of women in the extremist group's ranks is increasing.

Since March 2014, 71 individuals have been charged with Islamic State-related activities, 56 were arrested in 2015 alone, a record number of terrorism-related arrests for any year since 9/11 according to the report from George Washington University's Program on Extremism.

Although a majority of Islamic State recruits and supporters tend to be male, an alarming number of women are joining the extremist group and helping to carry out its jihadist agenda.

Researchers identified 300 American and/or U.S.-based Islamic State sympathizers who use social media to radicalize new recruits. About one third of those accounts were operated by women, according to the report.

"A handful of studies have attempted to identify the reasons why ISIS's ideology attracts a growing number of Western women. While some of these motivations are identical to that of their male counterparts (i.e. the search for a personal identity and the desire to build a strict Islamic society), others are specific to women," the report says.
...
It was revealed on Thursday that Malik, a Pakistani, pledged her allegiance to Islamic State leader Abu Bakr al-Baghdadi on Facebook as she and her husband, Syed Farook, carried out the deadly shooting, killing 14 people.

Authorities believed the couple may have been radicalized by Islamic extremists either in the U.S. or during trips to the Middle East, including to Saudi Arabia.'

DOD: Now That Women Can Serve in All Combat Roles They 'May' Need to Register for Selective Service

Mastodon · 5 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Following his announcement that he is opening all positions in the U.S. military--including all combat positions--to women who can meet the standards, Defense Secretary Ash Carter was asked on Thursday if that means women will have to register with the Selective Service, just as men must do.

"It may," he said.

A reporter asked Carter, "Mr. Secretary, does this decision now lead to a -- a greater debate about whether women need to register for Selective Service?"

"It may do that, Phil," Carter replied. "That is a matter of legal dispute right now, and in fact, litigation. So...I don't know how that will turn out."

Pakistan: Does feminism promote misandry?

Mastodon · 5 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism in many cases has done women proud, and eradicated gender based discrimination –but in some cases it contradicts the very essence of egalitarianism.

I have seen many women who paint men with the same brush and deem them – as a whole –too conservative and old fashioned. At times, I feel bad for my class fellows being shut down by female students while discussing feminism. Many of them, including my professor share a bigoted viewpoint regarding men.

I recently interviewed a few localities from my neighborhood and asked them the same question, whether feminism promotes hatred against men or not? I received varied responses.

“I think our country has outgrown women’s rights crisis. In my village, matriarchy is dominant,” said Hasan Jabeen, a local school teacher.

“I believe women do have a bias against men. I’ve seen it in public. I can hardly put into words the way they stare at men. It’s pretty bad. But above all, they make them doubt themselves as humans which is sad!” said Javeria Hussain, a graduate student.'

‘We Should All Be Feminists’ Manifesto to Be Distributed to Every 16-Year-Old in Sweden

Mastodon · 5 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Known primarily for three highly regarded novels, “Purple Hibiscus,” “Half of a Yellow Sun,” and, most recently, “Americanah,” Nigerian author Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie gave a 2013 TED Talk about the difficulties—and necessity—of being a feminist in Nigeria. The talk soon became a minor Internet sensation, amassing more than 2.3 million views to date.

Adichie has adapted the address into a 64-page book, called “We Should All Be Feminists.” Now the translated book is being distributed to every 16-year-old in Sweden by the Swedish Women’s Lobby and publisher Albert Bonniers. Launching the project at Norra Real High School in Stockholm this week, organizers said they hoped the book would “work as a stepping stone for a discussion about gender equality and feminism.”
...
"Some people ask: ‘Why the word feminist? Why not just say you are a believer in human rights, or something like that?’ Because that would be dishonest,” Adichie continues. “Feminism is, of course, part of human rights in general – but to choose to use the vague expression human rights is to deny the specific and particular problem of gender. It would be a way of pretending that it was not women who have, for centuries, been excluded."'

Tashfeen Malik 'wild card' in San Bernardino shooting: U.S. lawmaker

Matt · 6 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tashfeen Malik, the Pakistani woman involved in the California mass shooting last week, may have influenced her American husband toward violence, said Representative Michael McCaul, chairman of the House Homeland Security Committee, on Sunday.

Malik's relatives in Pakistan have said she appeared to have abandoned the family's moderate Islam and become more radicalized during years they spent in Saudi Arabia.

Malik, 29, and her U.S.-born husband, Syed Rizwan Farook, 28, stormed a gathering of civil servants in San Bernardino, California, on Wednesday, opening fire with assault rifles and killing 14 people.

The pair were killed two hours later in a shootout with police SWAT team members.'

Boys should have the right to say no to feminism

Mastodon · 7 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The evangelical drive to teach boys to be feminists reached a new high last week with the news that every 16-year-old in Sweden is to be given a free copy of the book “We Should All Be Feminists”.

The short essay, based on a 2013 TED talk by the Nigerian novelist Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie, has become a sacred text for those who share Yvette Cooper’s belief that “we need our sons growing up as confident feminists”.
...
However, as a straight, white male from working-class roots living a fairly middle-class lifestyle (a demographic one of my mates describes as “half-classed”), I’m left wondering if there is a stage anywhere in the world where a young man could be applauded for saying:

“I have chosen to no longer be apologetic for my maleness and for my masculinity and I want to respected in all of my maleness because I deserve to be!”

It may sound comical but in a truly egalitarian world we would welcome such declarations of male and female empowerment with parity. And yet my personal experience of the feminist worldview that dominates gender politics, is that rather than encourage the empowerment of men, it expects us to apologise for our maleness, our masculinity and our manhood.

So the day I gave up apologising for being my own man – both to socially-conservative traditionalists and to progressive, liberal feminists – was the day I became an unapologetic, card-carrying non-feminist.'

Australia: Position Vacant - "Senior Gender Equity Advisor", Adelaide Uni

Minuteman · 8 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. From the Position Description:

'Classification HEO8 {AU$88,126 per annum}

...

Scope

The scope of this role extends to all areas of the University and its activities aligned to achievement of gender equity. The role will connect with the Gender, Equity & Diversity (GED) Committee, faculty based gender equity roles and committees forming to support the Dornwell Framework. Planning and decision making will extend to the shaping the approach for both the Athena Swan application and the Employer of Choice for Gender Equality Citation, as well as the delivery of the annual WGEA Report. The opportunity to influence and guide direction in relation to gender equity matters will be significant.

Promote a strategic and coordinated approach to gender equity initiatives

* Connect with the GED Committee, the National Health & Medical Research Council, Administering Institution Audit, the Academic Women's' Forum, Women's' Professional Development Network, Male Champions of Change and any other networks and forums internal to the University to promote a wider understanding of the areas of focus and initiatives being undertaken with in the University.
* Work with University Engagement and Marketing staff to ensure our public narrative specifically celebrates and promotes the achievements of our female students, staff and alumni.'

White House petition to create office of men's health

Matt · 8 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'We are calling on all men—and those who love them—to urge the creation of a federal Office of Men's Health. This office would join existing federal offices tasked with safeguarding the health of women, children, and minorities. Men are in need of similar attention because of critical health issues specific to their gender: a higher risk of premature death from stroke, heart disease, and diabetes; heightened odds of addiction; and a higher risk of harming themselves and others. The Office could also create messaging about the importance of nutrition and physical fitness and address social issues such as men's access to paid family leave in the workplace. Addressing these problems will improve the lives of everyone, and the economy as a whole.'

Professors, rights groups write letter defending student due process rights

Mastodon · 10 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Professors from across the country, as well as several rights groups, have written a letter to the Senate Appropriations Committee condemning the evisceration of due process rights for college students.

The letter, addressed to Sens. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., and Barbara Mikulski, D-Md., describes the example of Northwestern University professor Laura Kipnis, who earlier this year faced a Title IX investigation for writing an article condemning current campus sexual assault policies. Title IX is the federal law that bans gender discrimination and has been used in recent years to justify adjudicating sexual assault as campus disciplinary matters.'

Court reviews all-male draft in wake of Pentagon women-in-combat decision

Mastodon · 10 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A panel of federal judges in California heard arguments Tuesday on whether the courts should weigh in on the male-only military draft now that the Pentagon opened all combat roles to women.

The case of National Coalition for Men vs. the Selective Service System had initially been dismissed because not all combat positions were open to women when it was first filed in 2013. Tuesday's hearing in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in Pasadena was originally set to discuss whether the 2013 dismissal had been appropriate.

However, Secretary of Defense Ash Carter on Thursday opened all remaining combat positions to women, in a move the Pentagon acknowledged "alters the factual backdrop" to the constitutionality of a male-only draft.'

Student group criticises Advocacy for Men & Boys group in open letter

Mastodon · 10 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Gender, Sexuality, and Women's Studies student union (GSWSSU) has published an open letter criticising SFU's Advocacy for Men & Boys (SFU AMB) club, a campus group focused on addressing men's issues, claiming that the club is "using men's issues as a way to attack feminism."

The letter was published on the union's WordPress page on Monday, and is addressed primarily in response to SFU AMB's November 8 event, "Toxic Masculinity & Toxic FEMININITY." The event was promoted with posters showing a biohazard sign over a venus symbol, a gesture the open letter alleges is "offensive, hostile, and aggressive." The main speaker for the event was Karen Straughan, a self-proclaimed "anti-feminist" and men's rights advocate. A video recording of Straughan speaking at the event can be found here.'

SAVE: Law Professors and Groups Call on Congress to Rein in OCR, Restore Free Speech and Due Process on Campus

Matt · 10 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Gina Lauterio
Telephone: 301-801-0608
Email: info@saveservices.org

WASHINGTON / December 9, 2015 – Today a group of law professors and leading organizations are releasing a letter that calls on Congress to require the federal Office for Civil Rights (OCR) to act in a lawful manner in its issuance of new regulations. Over the years the OCR has released numerous directives without seeking prior review and comment, as required by the federal Administrative Procedure Act.

The Department of Education's OCR has treated its directives as mandates, threatening universities with loss of federal funding if they did not comply. These directives, known as Dear Colleague Letters, have eroded free speech and due process on college campuses, the professors say.

In one celebrated case, Northwestern University professor Laura Kipnis published an article criticizing her school's sexual harassment policy. Ironically, Kipnis soon found herself the target of a sexual harassment complaint alleging her article could create a "chilling effect" on future complainants. Kipnis later described the college's full-scale probe a "Title IX Inquisition:" http://chronicle.com/article/My-Title-IX-Inquisition/230489

Northwestern University's months-long investigation of the Kipnis editorial was based on a previous OCR Agreement specifying that "the University has an obligation to consider the effects of off-campus conduct."

The professors and organizations expressed their "profound concern regarding the alarming erosion of free speech and due process on college campuses, which has arisen in response to the policies and actions of the Office for Civil Rights."

Law professors signing the letter include Nadine Strossen, former president of the ACLU and now with New York Law School, Stephanos Bibas of Penn Law, Elizabeth Bartholet of Harvard Law School, Richard Klein of Touro College, and others. Organizational signatories include the National Association of Scholars, Independent Women's Forum, and Families Advocating for Campus Equality.

A copy of the letter to Congress can be seen here: http://www.saveservices.org/sexual-assault/ocr/

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments is working to protect free speech on campus and promote effective solutions to sexual assault: http://www.saveservices.org/

India: Why freedom will mean little to this rape accused

Matt · 10 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'His dreams of making a mark as a teacher were shattered mid-way. His wedding, which was just a few days away, was called off. He lost his job which was the only means o sustenance for his elderly parents. A year after being labelled a rapist and locked up in jail for 95 days, 27-year-old Nagaraj, a school attender, is likely to be absolved for lack o evidence. But, the damage has been done and it's unlikely that a court order will be able to repair the young man's spirit or restore his mental health On November 26, 2014 Nagaraj was accused of sexually assaulting a three-year-old pre-nursery girl at a reputed private school off Old Madras Road. The graduate, who had taken up the attender's job to fulfill his ambition of becoming a teacher, was arrested on November 29.

He was subsequently released on bail and the police are now on the verge of letting him go by due to lack of sufficient evidence to convict him. As reported by BM on December 2 ('Child rape case closed: It was urinary infection'), the police are also planning to file a 'C' report which means that due to lack of evidence against the accused, in this case Nagaraj, they declare the `real' accused as `not traceable'. However, the case can be reopened as and when the real accused is traced or even if foolproof evidence against Nagaraj is established which means investigations in the case would continue.'

SAVE E-lert: Fox Goes After "The Hunt"

Matt · 10 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

You may have seen our previous emails denouncing The Hunting Ground, a fake documentary full of lies: http://www.saveservices.org/sexual-assault/hunting-ground/

Good news! This Saturday and Sunday, December 12-13th, Fox News is taking on The Hunting Ground. Fox will be airing a documentary on campus sexual assault.

Information to Know:
Fox News Reporting - The Truth About Sex & College
Anchored by Martha MacCullum
December 12 and 13th, 8 p.m. ET
Fox News Channel

We encourage you to watch this special report, and hope that it will bring to light the many egregious activities taking place on campus and within the federal government.

Gina Lauterio, Esq., Policy Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Sens. Gillibrand, McCaskill given super hero makeovers for fighting campus sexual assault

Mastodon · 11 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton campaigned heavily this fall on the one-in-five campus rape statistic, promising to take on the “epidemic” of campus sexual assault. President Obama has cited the statistic. The White House teamed up with College Humor to create a stupid bear attack skit to make young men aware of the one-in-five statistic. However, that statistic, based on a 15-minute online survey of two Midwestern universities in 2007, is heavily disputed, and schools are reporting much lower numbers.

It is in this environment that young men in college are found guilty of sexual assault without trial, which has led both the alleged rapist of “Mattress Girl” and the fraternity falsely accused of gang rape in a debunked Rolling Stone article to file lawsuits against their accusers.

This post isn’t an ad for MacCallum’s special, though: it’s meant only to introduce the latest heroes to be honored for their fight against the epidemic of campus sexual assault. espnW recently announced those women named to its annual IMPACT25 list of athletes and influencers “who have made the greatest impact for women in sports.” ESPN teamed up with Marvel, which rendered the women as super heroes.'

New UK health chief deliberately ignores men's health

Matt · 11 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. In a classic it's-only-a-problem-if-it-affects-women example of nymphotropism, the UK health chief declares obesity in women to be more dangerous to the UK than terrorism while deliberately ignoring it in men, who have a worse problem with it than women. Typical. Excerpt:

'Obesity poses as big a risk to the nation as terrorism, says the Chief Medical Officer.

Dame Sally Davies wants the obesity crisis in women to be classed alongside flooding and major outbreaks of disease – as well as the threat from violent extremism.

Her extraordinary claim comes as she warns today that being overweight affects all stages of women's lives – including in the womb.

It may lead them to being teased as teenagers, having higher-risk pregnancies and possibly developing breast cancer or heart disease after the menopause.

'Action is required across all of society to prevent obesity and its associated problems from shortening women's lives and affecting their quality of life,' she will say.
...
Obesity rates are actually higher in men – 72 per cent of those aged 35 to 44 are at least overweight rising to 80 per cent of the over 45s.'

The growing plight of the middle-aged white man

Mastodon · 11 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While many – myself included – applaud the rise of women as breadwinners and business leaders, the plight of the middle-aged male can't be ignored, specifically since recent data showa troubling spike in suicide rates for this demographic. It's what Salon magazine recently dubbed the "Willy Loman crisis."

The article characterizes this cohort of white, middle-class men as having once been masters of the universe – until they weren't. Forced to face challenging economic conditions as a result of the 2008 economic meltdown, many felt there was no alternative but to end their lives.

It's not just a U.S. problem. According to the Canadian Mental Health Association, men die by suicide at four times the rate of women and, in Ontario, over the past 10 years, more men died from suicide than car crashes.
...
It's also hard to draw attention to the plight of middle-class white males without falling into the open arms of the men's rights movement, a "manosphere" populated by misogynists who blame women and feminism for all of men's woes. Let's be clear: Feminism isn't to blame for this issue. In fact, it may be part of the solution.

"Women, and feminists in particular, have been saying for decades that they want men to be more open with their feelings and want men to abandon masculine ideas of rugged individualism, so it makes no sense for women to somehow be blamed when men fail to seek help," argued Cliff Leek, a Brooklyn-based doctoral candidate in the Department of Sociology at Stony Brook University and the managing editor of the research journal Men and Masculinities.

Men, he observed, need to adjust to a more equal work environment and that includes addressing their own assumptions that they are more entitled to positions or promotions than their female peers.

"The idea that men are being 'unfairly' overlooked for promotions and hiring is premised on the misguided idea that women who are hired are not qualified or are less qualified than men. This simply isn't the case," said Mr. Leek, adding that research shows women often need to have more experience than men in order to be seen as equally qualified.'

Rape Activist Threatens to Sue Newsweek For Publishing Accused Student's Side of the Story

Mastodon · 11 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When contacted for comment by Newsweek, anti-rape activist Emma Sulkowicz threatened to sue the paper if they published the story of the man she accused of rape.

Newsweek's front page story, titled "The Other Side of the College Sexual Assault Crisis," examines the surge in college students being falsely accused of rape after universities began lowering their evidentiary standards to crack down on rape. The centerpiece of the article is the story of Paul Nungesser, a Columbia University student who accused of rape by Sulkowicz.'

UK: Woman punished for making false rape claim

Mastodon · 12 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The 33-year-old falsely claimed she had been sexually assaulted in Barnsley town centre last weekend and was issued with a fixed penalty notice by police.

Barnsley Command Team Chief Inspector Mark James said: “A thorough investigation was immediately carried out from the initial report received and the woman was provided support from specially trained officers.

“However, as the investigation progressed, a number of discrepancies in the claim became apparent and there was no evidence to corroborate or substantiate the woman’s claims, with CCTV footage confirming beyond doubt that an attack had not actually taken place.

“False reports of rape or any sexual assault are not only are an incredible waste of police resources and time, as well as the significant cost involved, but it is detrimental to the actual victims of this type of crime.”'

Activists Might Be Gearing Up to Sic the Title IX Inquisition on The Hunting Ground's Critics

Mastodon · 12 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this week, I warned that the activist filmmakers behind The Hunting Ground appeared to be threatening their critics among the Harvard University Law faculty:

"The Harvard Law professors' letter is irresponsible and raises an important question about whether the very public bias these professors have shown in favor of an assailant contributes to a hostile climate at Harvard Law," Kirby Dick and Amy Ziering wrote in a statement to The Harvard Crimson.

That sure sounded to me like the prelude to a Title IX investigation. Sure enough, Harvard Law Professor Jeannie Suk writes in the New Yorker that "I've been told by a high-level administrator that several people have inquired about the possibility" of a Title IX inquiry:

`To my knowledge, no complaint of sexual harassment has been filed with Harvard's Title IX office—though I've been told by a high-level administrator that several people have inquired about the possibility—and I don't know if the school would proceed with an investigation. Precedent for such an investigation exists in the case of Laura Kipnis, a feminist film-studies professor at Northwestern University, who earlier this year wrote an article criticizing aspects of Title IX policies and culture and was accused of creating a hostile environment on campus; Northwestern conducted an investigation and ultimately cleared Kipnis of sexual-harassment charges. A handful of students have said that they feel unsafe at Harvard because of the professors' statement about the film. If a Title IX complaint were filed and an investigation launched, the professors wouldn't be permitted to speak about it, as that could be considered "retaliation" against those who filed the complaint, which would violate the campus sexual-harassment policy.`'

Meet The Taxpayer-Funded Administrator Who Thinks Title IX Supersedes The US Constitution

Mastodon · 12 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An administrator at Michigan Technological University is laboring under the impression that Title IX takes legal precedence over the United States Constitution. He also believes students violate Title IX when they make raunchy jokes about sexual harassment.

The administrator is Les Cook, the president for student affairs at Michigan Tech, a taxpayer-funded public school with an ugly campus in the frozen tundra of Michigan's Upper Peninsula.

Cook made his odd claim about the supremacy of Title IX earlier this month as he attempted to justify Michigan Tech's decision to place The Daily Bull, a satirical student publication, on probation for two years.'

Student claims women-only weight class is discrimination

Mastodon · 12 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A controversy has surfaced at Boise State University, over a weight-lifting class targeted for only women.

One male BSU student says because Boise State is a public university, they are breaking discrimination laws by having the class.

Former Idaho Attorney General, David Leroy, says merely granting exclusive use of a public facility to one group is not discriminating against all other groups.

Leroy added that not only does he think the student accusing BSU of discrimination doesn't fully understand the law, but furthermore, that same logic used in the accusation would give us bigger issues than a women-only weight class.'

'Things Have Changed,' U.S. Judge Says Of Case Over Men-Only Military Draft

Mastodon · 12 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One week after Defense Secretary Ash Carter announced women in the U.S. military can serve in any combat role, a federal appeals court is considering a lawsuit from a men's group that says a male-only draft is unconstitutional.
...
The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit in California will now decide "whether to dismiss the case or send it to a lower court for trial," member station KPCC reports.

Here's how KPCC summarized last week's hearing:

"'Things have changed,' Judge Marsha Berzon said at one point during Tuesday's proceedings. 'Right now the position is that all combat jobs are open to women, no?'

"Attorneys for the federal government said the case should still be thrown out arguing, in part, that because the named plaintiff, James Lesmeister, has registered for the draft, the point is moot.

"'There is no assertion in the complaint of any injury whatsoever,' Assistant U.S. Attorney Sonia McNeil said.

Berzon pushed back, saying: 'but they do have an assertion of an injury, i.e. "We have to register. If I were a woman, I wouldn't have to register."'"'

The men’s health gap: men must be included in the global health equity agenda

Matt · 13 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That men tend to be in worse health than women has now been made clear by robust evidence from various sources. The Global Burden of Disease study led by the Institute for Health Metrics and Evaluation in 2010 (GBD 2010 study) showed that throughout the period from 1970 to 2010, women had a longer life expectancy than men.1 Over that 40-year period, female life expectancy at birth increased from 61.2 to 73.3 years, whereas male life expectancy rose from 56.4 to 67.5 years. These figures indicate that the gap in life expectancy at birth widened between the sexes to men’s disadvantage over those 40 years.

By 2010, on the whole women were outliving men by an average of almost six years. In the region with the lowest life expectancy at birth – central sub-Saharan Africa – men were living 5.3 years less than women on average. Eastern Europe showed the biggest difference in life expectancy between men and women: women in the Russian Federation were outliving men by an average of 11.6 years. According to the Global health 2035 report, published in the Lancet in 2013, in countries classified as “least developed” and “less developed” by the United Nations adult mortality fell faster among women than among men between 1992 and 2012.'

Female Sam’s Club CEO takes action if suppliers send her all white male reps

Mastodon · 14 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sam’s Club black, female CEO Rosalind Brewer told CNN’s Poppy Harlow that she recently met with a supplier whose executive team was comprised of all white males.

“Just today we met with a supplier and the entire other side of the table was all Caucasian males,” she told Harlow who asked her what she said to them.

“I decided not to talk about it directly with his folks in the room because there were actually no female, like, levels down,” she said. “I’m gonna place a call to him.”

Wow.

She also said she uses her position to “nudge,” Sam’s Clubs partners and suppliers to hire more minorities and women for the top spots.

This philosophy is not discrimination how?'

Professors Threatened With Investigation For Questioning Rape Documentary

Mastodon · 15 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A group of Harvard professors who criticized the campus rape documentary “The Hunting Ground” are being menaced with the possibility of a Title IX sexual harassment investigation intended to silence their criticisms.

“The Hunting Ground,” released early this year, portrays American college campuses as hotbeds of sexual assault where administrators routinely allow perpetrators to get off scot-free. The film has attracted a great deal of criticism, though, both for the data it relies on and for the individual stories it uses to portray the campus rape epidemic.

Last month, a group of 19 Harvard Law School professors published an open letter denouncing it as a “propaganda” film in advance of its airing on CNN. In particular, the professors criticized the film for its treatment of Brandon Winston, a Harvard law student whom the film treats as almost certainly guilty of raping fellow student Kamilah Willingham. In fact, a criminal grand jury failed to even indict Willingham of a sex crime, indicating a severe lack of evidence against him.'

College Sex Crime ‘Courts’ Dismiss Due Process

Mastodon · 15 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Fox News Reporting: The Truth About Sex & College, host Martha MacCallum explores the so-called “rape epidemic” on college campuses that has been hyped by President Barack Obama, Vice President Joe Biden, and other political leaders such as Democrat presidential candidate Hillary Clinton and U.S. Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand (D-NY) – who invited mattress-carryingrape accuser and sex tape producer Emma Sulkowicz to the State of the Union address in January.

Militant feminist professors and administrators at schools such as Occidental College have used a “guidance” letter sent out by Obama’s Department of Education, which threatens to strip federal funding from colleges that do not treat accusations of sexual assault according to its own politicized perspective, to form their own tribunals. These “courts,” however, have charged the students facing them without allowing them the advice of counsel of their own and the opportunity to face their accuser or to introduce relevant evidence such as texts that suggest a consensual sexual relationship.'

Study: Young white men are the most derided group in Britain

Matt · 15 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Young, white men are the most derided group in Britain, according to a vast series of polls into the public's attitudes to each other.

British people expect young white men to get drunk, not work hard, be rude and to have several sexual partners.

They are also deemed to be the most likely British residents - alongside young black Caribbean men - to take drugs.

The YouGov poll asked people for their views on different groups of 48 differing groups - including ages, genders and ethnicities - and were asked to score them on specific positive and negative criteria.

These included how likely they are to be honest, to be intelligent, to work hard and to help others.'

Advert Against ‘Rape Culture’ Portrays Being a Woman as the ‘Greatest Danger of All’

Mastodon · 16 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Norwegian campaign to stop sexual violence against women has received criticism for being sexist against men.

The video, titled “#DearDaddy” and produced by CARE Norway, seeks to tackle “rape culture” as it shows the future life of the titular father’s unborn daughter asking him ”for a favour about boys.”

”By the time I’m 14, the boys in my class will have called me a whore, a bitch, a cunt and many other things,” the actress says. “By the time I’m 16 a couple of the boys will have stuck their hands down my pants when I’m so drunk I can’t even stand straight.”

“And when I say no, they just laugh. It’s funny right?” she asks.

She goes on to tell her father how she was raped at 21 by the son of a man he used to go swimming with, who would always make insulting jokes that he would laugh at.'

#DearDaddy video on YouTube here.

UK: Jilted secretary demanded £200k from ex-boss after making false rape claim

Mastodon · 16 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Dilrushi Mendis, 40, cheated on her husband with the married businessman until he sacked and dumped her.

But the mother-of-one refused to accept the relationship was over and launched a campaign against him, sending “revenge porn” to his relatives and turning up outside his home.

...

“She sent him a text which read, ‘If you do not come and see me I’ll do something terrible to you.’ She asked him — knowing he was a wealthy man — for £40,000 to £50,000 to open a hair salon.”

Around this time she reported him to the police, claiming he struck her. “She admitted to him she lied to the police,” Mr King said.

On the evening of March 2 last year she invited him to stay over. He arrived with a friend and still maintains they slept in a separate room.

Mendis, however, told police the men arrived with alcohol and she had two or three drinks before her former boss entered her room and raped her.'

Feminist Camille Paglia on Yes Means Yes: ‘Drearily Puritanical, Hopelessly Authoritarian’

Mastodon · 16 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ella Whelan: Are you therefore concerned by the push for affirmative-consent or, as they’re otherwise known, ‘Yes means Yes’ laws?

Paglia: As I have repeatedly argued throughout my career, sex is a physical interaction, animated by primitive energies and instincts that cannot be reduced to verbal formulas. Neither party in any sexual encounter is totally operating in the rational realm, which is why the Greek god Dionysus was the patron of ecstasy, a hallucinatory state of pleasure-pain. ‘Yes means Yes’ laws are drearily puritanical and literalistic as well as hopelessly totalitarian. Their increasing popularity simply demonstrates how boring and meaningless sex has become – and why Hollywood movies haven’t produced a scintilla of sexiness since Sharon Stone uncrossed her legs in Basic Instinct. Sex is always a dangerous gamble – as gay men have known and accepted for thousands of years. Nothing in the world will ever be totally safe, even the plushy pads of an infant’s crib, to which feminist ideologues would evidently wish to reduce us all.'

Ed Dept. just got more money to combat campus sexual assault

Mastodon · 17 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Education Department's Office for Civil Rights just received a 7 percent increase in its budget in the recently passed omnibus spending bill.

The House-passed bill includes a $7 million increase in funding for OCR, while the bill before the Senate includes a $6 million increase. Last year, OCR's budget was $100 million.

OCR had sought an additional $30 million in funding in part to help ease the burden of campus sexual assault investigations. OCR is currently investigating more than 150 schools for alleged violations of the anti-discrimination law known as Title IX. This is thanks in part to the office's 2011 "Dear Colleague" letter that forced schools to adjudicate sexual assault accusations under Title IX.
...
"Though OCR may claim to be under-funded, its resources are stretched thin largely because it has so often chosen to address violations it has made up out of thin air," members Gail Heriot and Peter Kirsanow wrote. "Increasing OCR's budget would in effect reward the agency for frequently over-stepping the law. It also would provide OCR with additional resources to undertake more ill-considered initiatives for which it lacks authority."'

Women's group complains about not enough women writing about rape

Mastodon · 17 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For further evidence that outrage feminists believe gender trumps all else, a new report from the Women's Media Center bemoans the fact that more articles about campus sexual assault in major newspapers were written by men than by women.

Forget the content of those articles — women should write about rape, and men should write about whatever the modern feminists tell them they can write about.

WMC limited their search of gender bylines to "top-circulation" U.S. newspapers and wire services. One wonders what the byline breakdown would be had they included other media outlets. The list did not include Slate (which discounts Emily Yoffe, who often writes on the topic), the Daily Beast (which discounts Cathy Young and Lizzie Crocker), Salon (which discounts Amanda Marcotte), Cosmopolitan (which discounts Jill Filipovic and several other women), Reason (which discounted Elizabeth Nolan Brown and Linda M. LeFauve), nor did it include the Washington Examiner, which discounts me.'

NPO: New Support for Shared Parenting

Matt · 17 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, I attended the second International Conference on Shared Parenting in Bonn, Germany. This was organized by the International Council on Shared Parenting (ICSP). (National Parents Organization has worked hard to foster the growth of this new Europe-based research organization.)

The conference was attended by about 120 people from 20 countries, from Malaysia to America. We learned, for instance, that shared parenting is favored by law in Switzerland, Sweden, Australia and Brazil, which also has an anti-parental alienation law. Moreover, as we have reported earlier, the Council of Europe has passed a resolution calling for shared parenting in the European countries in order to counter gender bias.

As one of the presenters, I gave evidence to support the idea that in most cases, the best interest of the child is best served with shared parenting.'

Bloodstained brothers

Matt · 17 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Four men stand on the corner of College and Chapel street in New Haven on Sat. Oct. 3, dressed head to toe in white Tyvek painter overalls, shivering. On the fabric below their waists, each man proudly sports a large, shocking red splotch.

The white jumpsuits certainly make a statement—“bloody crotches saying ‘J’accuse!’” as one man describes them later—but they aren’t windproof. It’s aWuthering Heights kind of day, the kind where the wind whips around the sides of buildings and under your hood; where the tips of your fingers get stiff around the pencil you’re clutching.

Or the “Stop Torturing Boys” sign you’re waving, in the case of the four men standing next to me. They call themselves the Bloodstained Men.

The Bloodstained Men are a 501(c)(3) non-profit recognized by the state of California and operate as an education and outreach organization within the intactivist movement. “Intactivists” advocate for ending male circumcision worldwide, arguing that it is a form of genital mutilation and therefore a human rights violation.
...
As a firm believer in bodily autonomy, I’m starting to feel a sense of alliance with the damaged guys. Pro-choice activists contend that women should have the right to choose what they do with their own bodies, and therefore that lawmakers cannot legally forbid them from getting an abortion. Intactivists contend that men should have that right to choose, too, and therefore that parents should not be legally allowed to make the decision to circumcise without a child’s consent. Maybe behind the bared teeth and violent imagery, the Bloodstained Men are onto something—their body, their choice. Right?'

New trial for man convicted after woman had 'rape dream'

mens_issues · 18 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

An appalling story here. Excerpt:

'A man imprisoned for 28 years after a woman said she dreamed that he raped her could be freed after a Denver judge overturned his conviction.

Denver District Judge Kandace Gerdes ordered a new trial for Clarence Moses-El, saying he would likely be acquitted after another man confessed to the crime.

Moses-El was convicted in 1988 of raping and assaulting a woman when she returned home from a night of drinking. He was sentenced to 48 years in prison.

His efforts to appeal were unsuccessful, in part because Denver police destroyed DNA evidence from the attack, despite a judge's order to preserve it.'

UK: Why today could be a turning point in the history of men's rights

Mastodon · 18 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The world may have been concentrating on the climate change conference in Paris, the EU renegotiation talks and Star Wars; but future historians may record this week as the moment the earth finally moved in social relations between women and men.

Today, for the first time, the Equalities and Human Rights Commission will be called upon to recognise formally that men and boys can be in positions of systemic disadvantage and inequality in British life - such as education and family life and law.

A tiny fissure will thus be driven into the unyielding concrete crust that has covered gender politics for the last half century. For the entire lifetimes of most people in this country, it has been a central, unquestionable article of faith that where inequalities pervade our society by gender, they must inhere exclusively to females.'

Sir Tim Hunt To Leave Britain: How Feminists Chased Away One of Britain's Geniuses

Mastodon · 19 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists have chased away one of Britain's finest scientific minds. Sir Tim Hunt, the Nobel prize-winning scientist who was forced to resign from an honorary professorship at University College London (UCL) after false allegations of sexism is now set to leave Britain for Japan.

Hunt was accused of sexism after aggrieved progressive journalists took Hunt's ironic, self-deprecating comments about being a "chauvinist monster" and presented them as genuine. One of the journalists, Connie St Louis, was later found to have a history of exaggerated claims – most notably on her CV.

A recording of Hunt's speech eventually exonerated him, revealing not only that his comments were a joke, but that he had also gone on to praise the achievements of women in science. The President of the Royal Society eventually conceded that Hunt should not have had to resign, and had been the victim of a "Twitter and Media storm."'

Analysis: NPR Talks About Women's Issues Five Times More Than Men's

Mastodon · 19 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Analysis of over 150,000 NPR stories has shown a clear bias against men at the network, with stories about women's issues covered far more frequently than men's.

Blogger Chris Mumford wrote a computer program that analysed hundreds of thousands of NPR's story "tags" – the metadata associated with articles that tells you which category of news the story is covering. The results, which covered stories from 2010 to 2015, were shocking.

Mumford found that there were only 45 tags related to men and men's issues, compared to 115 for women and women's issues. Furthermore, unlike the female tags, several of the male tags had negative connotations, including "black male privilege," "yes men," and the oddly specific "creepy men on motorcycles" tag.
...
Appallingly, but not surprisingly, there is also a "cancer gap." Stories about female cancers, such breast and ovarian cancer were 2.8 times more likely to appear on NPR's website than stories about male cancers, such as prostate and testicular cancer.'

UK: Oxford students shut down abortion debate

Matt · 19 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

This is dated but relevant to current events. (I found out about it from this article.) Excerpt:

'A few months ago I accepted an invitation by the Oxford Students for Life to debate Brendan O'Neill on the subject "This House believes Britain's Abortion Culture Hurts Us All". The setting was Christ Church College and around 60 people signed up to attend on Facebook. To be clear: this wasn't a pro-life demo and the subject wasn't whether or not women should have the right to choose abortion. Even though I was speaking for the proposition, my speech would've begun with noting that the motion has nothing to do with abortion rights per se and was simply a consideration of how having effective abortion on demand affects wider society. Brendan, speaking for the opposition, would've doubtless done a fine job and probably run rings round me. It was a fair and free debate that I half expected to lose.
...
The university's students' union also issued a statement that took aim at Brendan and me for being so offensively attached to our God-given genitals: "The Women's Campaign (WomCam) condemn SFL for holding this debate. It is absurd to think we should be listening to two cisgender men debate about what people with uteruses should be doing with their bodies." Next, the Christ Church Junior Common Room (posh talk for "the committee that run the students' bar") passed a motion asking their college to decline to room the debate. Eventually, the college caved-in on the grounds that, "there was insufficient time between today and tomorrow to address some concerns they had about the meeting"...
...
The arguments against hosting the debate were spurious. That only men were speaking was no reason to stop it. A) Anyone objecting to the subject matter or the virile masculinity of the speakers was free not to attend. B) A private society should be allowed to invite whoever they want to discuss whatever they want (providing it's legal and doesn't incite violence etc). C) The idea that an ethical issue can only be debated by the people directly affected by it is self-evidently unintelligent. And D) we weren't debating women's right to choose anyway but instead the effect of abortion on wider society, which does include a few men. Sorry, by "men" I mean "cisgendered heteronormative masculine pronouns in possession of a Hampton wick".'

Canadian Women's Mag Chatelaine discovers 68% of CAN Women are NOT Feminists

fathers4fairness · 19 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gloria Steinem — the grande dame of feminism herself — responded to the Chatelaine survey results on a visit to Toronto earlier this week. “Carefully nurtured stereotypes [are to blame]: Feminists have no sense of humour, they’re anti-men, they’re anti-sex. It’s all bullshit,” she said.

Perhaps the most heartening response came from the son of one of the women who participated in our This is 40ish video shoot last month.

“Just watched this video with my kids,” Jacki Yovanoff wrote on Facebook. “My 8-year-old son said “I’m a feminist!”'

[The rest of the article lectures women on why they should adopt the cliche.]

State lawmaker proposes bill that would make getting Viagra as hard as getting abortions

Mastodon · 19 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What if men seeking erectile dysfunction drugs in South Carolina had to go through the same process as women seeking abortions?

This is the novel question that state Rep. Mia McLeod (D) is exploring in a bill that she pre-filed last week in the South Carolina House of Representatives. While she doesn't expect it to pass in her "male-dominated" legislature, McLeod told NBC she hopes it will broaden the discussion surrounding abortion services in the state.

"I purposely tried to make it as invasive, as intrusive, as hypocritical and unnecessary as possible to make the point," she said.'

McCaskill and Gillibrand say they want fair hearings for the accused

Mastodon · 19 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'McCaskill: There are people who have legitimate concerns about false accusations and the impact that can have on a young person's life when they have been falsely accused. Kirsten and I are not unaware that that is an issue we need to be concerned about, and that's why we have made changes in the legislation to address not just the rights of the victim, the accuser, but also of the accused. And that's where you're seeing some of the pushback—from families who believe that a loved one was accused unfairly. But the truth is kangaroo courts don't help anybody. They don't help the accused. They don't help the accuser. We want to make sure there's no more of that. We want to make sure there's transparency and due process and fairness. Because that will benefit everyone.'

Upload of images enabled on MANN

Matt · 19 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

At a reader's suggestion I have enabled upload of images along with story content. Let's see how this works. Images will be scaled so that they are no larger than 640x640 pixels and limited in size to 1 MB, with 100 MB/user as the total upload limit. I don't imagine we will see too heavy usage of this feature but it's nice to have it when posting information better shown graphically, or when an original story depends on an image to make its point.

How to add an image to your submitted story? When creating a story, click "File Attachments" and use the "Browse..." button to browse to the image you want to attach and click "Attach" after choosing it. Obviously, all images should be 'G' rated and if for some reason you feel it necessary to post something NSFW (e.g.: original images of topless crazed feminists throwing pies at Vladimir Putin or something), please indicate such in the content. To demonstrate, attached is a screen cap of the "File Attachments" section of the content options found under the text area for a story. Should be easy enough to figure it out.

Enjoy the new feature.

Bernie Sanders can't close the gender wage gap, because it's due to choice

Mastodon · 20 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At Saturday night's Democratic presidential debate, Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders said he would fix the economy in part by closing the gender wage gap. Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton also brought up "equal pay for equal work," implying that is not currently the case and that there is some unspoken rule in business that women can be paid less.

The problem with this statement is that the gender wage gap is due to the choices women make and is therefore not fixableunless those choices are controlled — which is a ludicrous suggestion.

And it's not even properly called a "wage gap," it is more appropriately called an "earnings gap," because that is the claim that women earn 77 or 78 cents on the dollar compared to men.'

Fact checking the third Democratic debate

Mastodon · 20 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Next thing we do, pay equity for women workers. Women should not be making 79 cents on the dollar compared to that."

—Sanders

There is clearly a wage gap, but differences in the life choices of men and women — such as women tending to leave the workforce when they have children — make it difficult to make simple comparisons.

Sanders is using a figure (annual wages, from the Census Bureau) that makes the disparity appear the greatest—21 cents on the dollar.

But the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics shows that the gap is 18 cents when looking at weekly wages. The gap is even smaller when you look at hourly wages — 13 cents — but then not every wage earner is paid on an hourly basis, so that statistic excludes salaried workers.

In other words, since women in general work fewer hours than men in a year, the statistics used by Democrats such as Sanders may be less reliable for examining the key focus of legislation pending in Congress — wage discrimination. The weekly wage is more of an apples-to-apples comparison, but it does not include as many income categories.

Economists at the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis surveyed economic literature and concluded that "research suggests that the actual gender wage gap (when female workers are compared with male workers who have similar characteristics) is much lower than the raw wage gap." They cited one survey, prepared for the Labor Department under then-President George W. Bush, which concluded that when such differences are accounted for, much of the hourly wage gap dwindled, to about 5 cents on the dollar.'

Former university students file suit over arrests in alleged rape

Mastodon · 23 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Four former students of William Paterson University who were accused of raping a student on campus last year have filed a lawsuit against the school, alleging that they were falsely arrested, maliciously prosecuted and subjected to civil-rights violations that left them with ruined educational futures and permanently tarnished reputations.

The students, who were arrested and charged with aggravated sexual assault and numerous other offenses, were suspended from the school in November 2014. University President Kathleen Waldron at the time issued a statement in which she sympathized with the accuser and said she was “angry and dismayed that this crime was committed on our campus and allegedly by students.”

A few months later, however, a Passaic County grand jury refused to indict and all charges were dismissed against all five defendants: Noah Williams of Camden, Garrett Collick of Paterson, Darius Singleton of Jersey City, Termaine Scott of Vineland and Jahmel Latimer of Hoboken.'

Georgia Tech's flawed campus sexual assault procedures

Mastodon · 23 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Just days after a judge denied a Georgia Institute of Technology student's request for a preliminary injunction to halt an expulsion, another student has filed a gender discrimination claim against the school.

John Doe, as he is referred to in court documents, has filed a lawsuit against the university and the same administrators who failed to follow school procedures against the other complainant.

The twist in this case is that Doe is also bisexual, and is alleging that Georgia Tech has not only a bias against male accused students, but an exceptional bias against non-straight male accused students.'

The Gender Gap: What the World Economic Forum got wrong

Matt · 23 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'"Rwanda is beating the U.S. In Gender Equality" That is a headline from a recent news story in the Washington Post. Well, could it be true? Let's check the facts.'

Mother of Wrongfully Accused College Student Describes Trauma

Matt · 23 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In one part, the mother writes:

"I want to beg Senators [Claire] McCaskill and [Kirsten] Gillibrand to see the destruction of an innocent life, to feel his pain, to see his trauma, to know what it's like to pick up your child who is in a crumble on the campus lawn, to ask them why his life doesn't matter," she wrote, "but the silencing continues, and the war wages on."

It is doubtful that her pleas would have any effect on Senator McCaskill who has written this in an opinion piece in Time Magazine about her efforts to reform the UCMJ:

"As a former sex crimes prosecutor who's personally held the hands of victims and fought to put rapists behind bars, I've judged each policy idea with one yardstick: Will it lead to better protections for victims and more prosecutions of predators?"

Noticeably missing from her one and only yardstick is due process concerns for the accused. And, it isn't a stretch to imagine that she cares as little for falsely accused college students as she does for falsely accused Servicemembers who have no place on her yardstick.'

NPO: What is Christmas Without Children?

Matt · 23 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Artivle here. Excerpt:

'A few days ago, I saw one of those stories that keeps coming around. A mom was lamenting the emptiness of her empty nest after her last child went to college. And thinking about how happy she will be to see her children again at Christmas.

But for many of us, the empty nest happened when the children were six, not 17, and they will not be back home for Christmas. It is eternally amazing to me that the media never make the connection between these two stories, one a story of children naturally taking wing from the nest, and the other an unnecessary tragedy caused by the fecklessness of the family courts. The connection is the human heart.

So, for many of us, Christmas will not be the joyous celebration of faith and family that we see on television. The absence of those precious children will make Christmas more like the opening of a wound than the celebration of life and hope.

National Parents Organization exists to prevent this injustice, to exterminate the crime of carving loving and fit parents apart from their children, and to promote the healing of ruptured families through justice. The prophet said, “Justice, justice shall you pursue!” And that is what we do.'

Harvard Law dean puts ‘microaggressions’ in the same league as sexual assault

Mastodon · 24 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The common sense and resolve shown by several members of Harvard Law School’s faculty in responding to hot–button issues – notably fair treatment in campus sexual assault and harassment proceedings – hasn’t always been matched by their administrators.

Dean Martha Minow recently addressed graduating students at her alma mater, the University of Michigan, for the school’s winter commencement, The Harvard Crimson reported.

Telling students to be “upstanders” – those who intervene when they see injustice – Minow compared apartheid and forced segregation of public schools to … accidentally offending someone:

“Taking even seemingly small acts in one’s own school can build the culture that prevents violence, bullying, sexual assault, and racial microaggressions,” she said.

Seriously? Dean Minow cites three categories of intentionally threatening language and action andthen tags on a phenomenon that, by its very definition, is unknown to those who practice it.'

Rolling Stone Urges Court to Throw out UVa Grads' Lawsuit

Mastodon · 24 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Rolling Stone magazine is urging a judge to throw out a lawsuit filed by three former fraternity members at the University of Virginia who claim they suffered humiliation and emotional distress because of the magazine's debunked article about a campus gang rape.

George Elias IV, Stephen Hadford and Ross Fowler sued the magazine in July, claiming they were defamed by the November 2014 article written by journalist Sabrina Rubin Erdely, which described in chilling detail a student's account of being raped by seven men at the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity house in September 2012. The former Phi Kappa Psi members also sued Erdely and Rolling Stone's publisher, Wenner Media.

The men claimed the article "created a simple and direct way to match the alleged attackers" to them based on details provided in the story. For example, they said friends and family of Elias "would have reasonably concluded" that the incident happened in the man's room based on descriptions in the article.

But in court documents filed Wednesday, lawyers for Rolling Stone argue their lawsuit should be dismissed because the article never referred to the men by name and readers wouldn't have been able to link them to the alleged incident.'

Ending Title IX tyranny

Matt · 24 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Free speech and academic freedom are endangered species on American college and university campuses. Speech codes, trigger warnings, the heckler's veto and politically correct inquisitions have become the norm.

While there are many causes for this, the main culprit is Title IX, a federal statute enacted in 1972 that prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex in any federally funded education program or activity.

Title IX goes beyond merely prohibiting sex discrimination; it also requires that schools take proactive measures to eliminate any such discrimination.

Originally, the most visible effect of Title IX was a reduction in the number of scholarships given to participants in low-revenue men's sports such as wrestling and baseball — or, in some cases, elimination of those sports altogether — and an increase in women's athletic scholarships. The idea was to achieve parity, with the ratio of student-athletes in the school's intercollegiate athletic programs mirroring the male-female ratio of the school's undergraduate population as a whole.'

Wealthy men targeted in New York nightclubs by thieving women, police say

Minuteman · 26 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'A succession of high-wattage thefts in New York has uncovered a bizarre pattern involving women who target wealthy men at nightclubs, accompany them home and then disappear with tens of thousands of dollars in cash and jewellery.

...

In a separate case, a 19-year-old woman from New Jersey, Alexandra Martinez, was arraigned Wednesday in Brooklyn Criminal Court on grand larceny charges in two incidents in which she is accused of having accompanied men home from bars, mixed them drinks that made them lose consciousness, and stolen watches and cash, according to a criminal complaint.

...

The criminal complaint against Martinez says that in one incident, in September, she and another woman prepared a cocktail at a man's home that knocked him out.'

Special award: Bushels of bogus sex trafficking statistics

Matt · 26 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'No single issue earned more Pinocchios than dubious claims about sex trafficking.There are not 300,000 children at risk for sexual exploitation. There are not 100,000 children in the sex trade. Human trafficking is not a $9.5 billion business in the United States. Girls do not become victims of sex trafficking at an average age of 13 years.The federal government has not arrested hundreds of sex traffickers. These were all false claims made in 2015 by politicians, advocacy groups and government officials.'

Victims and Microaggressions: Why 2015 Was The Year Students Lost Their Minds

Mastodon · 27 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'2015 was the year that Emma Sulkowicz graduated from Columbia University carrying her mattress across the stage as the ultimate symbol the school had failed her as a sexual assault victim.

It was also the year that her accused rapist, Paul Nungesser, filed a federal complaint against the school, citing gender discrimination under Title IX for “condoning a hostile educational environment” against him, even after he was cleared of sexual assault charges.

The same Title IX protections that sexual assault victim advocates were using to create sweeping federal reforms began to be used by the (almost uniformly) male students who were expelled or suspended.

"I think that what’s happening is that the pendulum has swung so far over to the side of unfair campus proceedings that lawyers for some of the accused students are trying everything they can to get a fair hearing,” civil rights attorney Harvey Silverglate told The Daily Beast in April.

The sentiment that sexual assault reforms had gone too far and now violated the rights of the accused to a fair investigation and trial was voiced by a number of law professors in 2015.

In February, more than a dozen professors at the University of Pennsylvania publicly expressed their concern in an open letter. “Due process of law is not window dressing… All too often, outrage at heinous crimes becomes a justification for shortcuts in our adjudicatory process.”

“Yes means yes,” or affirmative consent, became an even more prominent objective.'

The Year We Wondered if Emotional Labor Should Come With a Price

Mastodon · 28 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In May, Judith Shulevitz wrote in the New York Times about how women are still responsible for most of the “worry work” in their homes—a type of labor that requires “large reserves of emotional energy to stay on top of it all.” Sociological research finds that moms continue to direct most or all of domestic and familial matters, even if fathers are increasingly helping in the execution of such tasks. “Whether a woman loves or hates worry work,” Shulevitz writes, “it can scatter her focus on what she does for pay and knock her partway or clean off a career path. This distracting grind of apprehension and organization may be one of the least movable obstacles to women’s equality in the workplace.”

That same month, activists Lauren Chief Elk, Yeoshin Lourdes, and Bardot Smith, started #GiveYourMoneytoWomen.* As Chief Elk explained in an interview with Vice, the hashtag was intended to call attention to all the emotional labor women do for men’s benefit as well as the emotional—and sometimes physical—abuse women experience in the company of men. In July, Jess Zimmerman wrote in the Toast about her many years providing counsel and support to her lovelorn male friends and questioning why her efforts aren’t valued as work (unlike activities such as editing her friends writing and taking care of their animals). In the Guardian in November, Rose Hackman asked, “What if much like childcare and housekeeping, the sum of this ongoing emotional management is yet another form of unpaid labor?” Hackman pointed to a 2005 study finding that women’s propensity to do emotional labor was linked to gender constructions, as opposed to biological sex, and ended on another question: Is it time to demand “adequate, formal remuneration for emotion work provided in the workplace as a skill?” If such a demand were met, Hackman added, it would “be a shake-patriarchy-to-its-core revolution.”'

Woman who failed FDNY physical test 6 times gets another chance

Mastodon · 28 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman who six times failed the physical test to become an FDNY firefighter is being given another chance — and this time, critics say, the fix is in.

“She’ll graduate, no question,” said an FDNY member. “The department doesn’t want another black eye.”

Wendy Tapia was allowed to conditionally graduate from the Fire Academy on May 17, 2013, even though she had failed the running test.'

"Men’s Rights Activists are cave dwelling idiots"

Mastodon · 28 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Men's Rights Movement begins and ends with the argument that there is no pre-existing imbalance between the rights of men and women, or that if there is any injustice it is an imbalance which prejudices men. This is dressed up in any number of concerns, some of which might seem entirely sensible, but which cumulatively amount to an activism which is hostile to women. Issues like the rights of fathers in family proceedings are used to prop up a nostalgia for a time when men had an easier time of it: a time when men could be assured of jobs, power and status, a time before feminism.

The aura of victimhood adopted by MRAs extends to criticising the extent of coverage of female genital mutilation at the expense of discussing male circumcision. MRAs routinely deny the existence of what many feminists call "rape culture" by suggesting that failures to prosecute sexual violence are the result of endemic false rape allegations, rather than societal attitudes towards consent. When the founder of MRA site "A Voice For Men" Paul Elam wrote a piece entitled "Bill Cosby's victims? Or just a bunch of drug whoring star fuckers?" he was displaying an overt hostility towards women that characterises the movement. Over 50 women have accused Bill Cosby of sexual assault. Yet Elam goes to bat for Cosby.'

U.S. gay sex slave trial exposes dilemmas faced by male trafficking victims

Matt · 29 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It's also easy to overlook male victims of such things if all anyone talks about or cares about involving the topic is females who may be getting trafficked. I wonder how the 1-in-10-victims-are-male stat would change if anti-trafficking efforts gave more thought to finding male victims. Excerpt:

'Three young Hungarian men have helped dismantle a U.S. gay prostitution ring that enslaved them, marking a victory for local prosecutors but highlighting the difficulty in reaching and helping male trafficking victims, campaigners said.

The men's accounts of being raped, locked up in windowless rooms, and their lives threatened led to the conviction this month of Andras Janos Vass, 26, for helping to operate a male prostitution ring of gay Hungarians in New York City and Miami.

...

More than 4,000 human trafficking cases were reported in 2015 in the United States with about one in 10 involving men, according to the National Human Trafficking Resource Center.

"Any type of outreach poster ... regarding trafficking is typically the teenage girl with pigtails," he said.

"Just seeing that formally encourages that stigma that you are weak, that you are effeminate if you are a victim. There is still such a stigma attached to male victimization."'

University sued over handling of sexual assault case

Mastodon · 30 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a federal lawsuit filed this fall against the University of Massachusetts Amherst and six of its officials, a male former student has joined other plaintiffs around the country in claiming that a school's disciplinary process for handling claims of sexual assault violated his civil rights.

Disciplinary proceedings against the plaintiff and former student, Kwadwo Bonsu, began after a female student accused him of sexually assaulting her at an off-campus Halloween party in 2014.

A UMass disciplinary board eventually found Bonsu "not responsible" for any sexual misconduct — but not before he was kicked out of his dormitory, barred from attending classes and prohibited from seeking the advocacy of a lawyer in his hearing, according to the suit. The board did find him responsible for breaking the terms of his pre-hearing probation — a violation that led to his suspension in April.

The suit, filed in U.S. District Court in Springfield in late September, comes at a time of increased scrutiny over the way colleges and universities handle allegations of sexual assault, including punishments handed down to students after they are found responsible, but not criminally guilty, for misbehavior. In Bonsu's case, the university investigation continued after Amherst police declined to pursue criminal charges against him.'

The New Standard for Campus Sexual Assault: Guilty until Proven Innocent

Mastodon · 31 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to due process on campus, Republicans in Congress, who campaigned on vows to rein in the Obama administration's abuses of executive power, have largely acquiesced in its bureaucratic imposition of quasi-judicial tyranny. For more than four years, the White House and the Education Department's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) have used an implausible reinterpretation of a 1972 civil-rights law to impose mandates unimagined by the law's sponsors. It has forced almost all of the nation's universities and colleges to disregard due process in disciplinary proceedings when they involve allegations of sexual assault. Enforced by officials far outside the mainstream, these mandates are having a devastating impact on the nation's universities and on the lives of dozens — almost certainly soon to be hundreds or thousands — of falsely accused students.

One might have expected an aggressive response by House Republicans to such gross abuses of power — including subpoenas, tough oversight hearings, and corrective legislation. Instead, most of them have been mute. In the Senate, meanwhile, presidential candidate Marco Rubio of Florida, Judiciary Committee chairman Charles Grassley of Iowa, and rising star Kelly Ayotte of New Hampshire have teamed with Democratic demagogues Kirsten Gillibrand of New York and Claire McCaskill of Missouri in co-sponsoring a bill that would make matters even worse.'

2015: A year of campus hysteria

Mastodon · 31 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This year may have brought about peak campus hysteria across the country. Microaggressions, safe spaces, sex assault accusations and protests made headlines around the world, often for their abject absurdity.

I've only been covering these issues since the summer of 2014, but this year I found it nearly impossible to write about anything else, since there was just so much happening on the nation's colleges.

The ridiculousness started in February when Northwestern University professor Laura Kipnis penned an article about "sexual paranoia" at colleges and universities. She bemoaned the campus climate of disregarding due process in favor of political correctness and the need to believe all accusers, regardless of the facts and evidence.'

Former Femen activist backflips, declares war on feminism

Mastodon · 31 December 2015 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'SHE was the pioneer of modern-day girl power, responsible for countless topless protests to highlight women's rights.

But now, Sara Fernanda Giromin has backflipped, declaring war on the ideals she once so proudly bared her breasts for, describing the feminist movement as "a completely toxic environment, filled with gossip, intrigue, humiliation and persecution".

Introducing herself to the world in 2012 under the alias Sara Winter, Ms Giromin was the founding face of Femen Brazil, a subsidiary of the Femen movement.

A group of topless activists who protest against sexism, religion, homophobia, and other social issues, the organisation says it is "fighting patriarchy in its three manifestations — sexual exploitation of women, dictatorship and religion".'

Pigs Without Blankets: The Penis Documentary Seeks Funding To Look At The Issues Surrounding Circumcision

Matt · 2 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a Brit I've often been slightly perplexed by America's attachment to circumcision, where the majority of young boys still have their foreskins removed as babies, despite the fact that for most of them there is no real religious, legal or culturally necessary reason to do so. As I live in a land where the prepuce largely remains intact (barring for medical or religious reasons), it's odd how passionate many Americans get about it. Indeed, when I've seen American doctors talking about why they still recommend it to their patients, the fact they so often seem to jump on the defensive suggests the may know it's not as clear cut as they suggest (pun intended).

The documentary Pigs Without Blankets: The Penis Documentary wants to take a look at the world of 'intactivists', who go against the grain of American culture and advocate against circumcision. However, to get it made the makers are hoping to raise $25,000 via Kickstarter.

As they say on the fundrasing page, 'Lots of people have a penis. And even more people are in some kind of relationship with one whether it's romantic or parental. If you ask a man to list the things more important to him than his relationship with his penis, you'll get a very short list. Yet, we don't talk about what happens to most American penises. The fact that we never discuss a surgical procedure done to millions of American baby boys moments after their birth is, well, weird, to some. The fact that people become enraged and often hostile when the subject of circumcision is discussed is even weirder. We want viewers to meet the group of people who fight against circumcision, discover what motivates them, and understand why they feel the best penis is the one left intact. Help us tell their stories, and help us shed light on a practice."

Appeals court: Terminate father’s parental rights

Mastodon · 2 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the login by Googling the first paragraph text and clicking the first result entry. Excerpt:

'The Pennsylvania Superior Court has ordered a Blair County judge to terminate a father's parental rights because the local man never had a relationship with his 4-year-old son.

In an opinion written by Judge Mary Jane Bowes, the state appeals court reversed an order by Blair County Judge Wade A. Kagarise that granted the father parental rights, ruling that the mother created "obstacles" to bar the father from the child's life.

The three-judge Superior Court panel that included Bowes, Judge Kate Ford Elliott and Senior Judge John L. Musmanno, summed up its argument by stating, "Here, our examination of the entire history of this case reveals the father failed to exercise reasonable firmness in order to overcome the obstacles he alleges that mother created, and he abdicated all parental responsibility with respect (to the child).'"

Study: Boys Affected More Than Girls By ‘Family Disadvantages’

Mastodon · 2 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“Family disadvantages” - including poverty, low education level of the mother, and not having a father in the house - affect boys more than their sisters, according to a recent study from the National Bureau of Economic Research.

Researchers from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT), Northwestern University, and the University of Florida analyzed ten years of administrative records for Florida students born between 1992 and 2002.

They found that boys in families facing adverse circumstances significantly underperformed their sisters in behavioral and educational outcomes despite the fact that they had similar upbringings.'

University under review for handling of three sexual assault complaints

Mastodon · 3 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A federal complaint against the University of Wisconsin-Madison about its handling of a sexual assault report — one of three such complaints filed against UW-Madison in 2015 — alleges the victim was subjected to a sexually hostile environment because the university failed to respond promptly and equitably.

When the woman "expressed her concern about the many inequalities in UW-Madison's procedure via her advocate, (redacted) explained: 'We are locked into a system based on the rights of the accused,'" says the heavily redacted complaint obtained by the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel through a Freedom of Information Act request.
...
Colleges need only a "preponderance of evidence" showing it's more likely than not that a crime occurred to justify meting out punishment. That's a lower standard than the burden of proof in a criminal court.

University officials in Wisconsin and elsewhere have raised concerns that they are being asked to determine guilt without the legal authority to compel evidence, and they could be sued by an accused student punished under the lesser burden of proof. Many have questioned whether disciplining students in cases of reported sexual assaults is the role of a university.'

A Frank Conversation About Campus Rape

Mastodon · 3 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Due process dominated the first part of their conversation. Gertner thought it was appropriate for Harvard to create an office to ensure it was complying with Title IX, but that the process created to adjudicate sexual-assault claims was flawed in these ways:

- “There were no lawyers—no opportunity fo the accused in particular to consult anyone.”
- “There was no hearing. Now hearings are difficult. A hearing doesn't have to be accused and accuser facing one another, her being ripped to shreds by his lawyer. It could be a situation where one side says x, one says says y, and you ask questions based on a written script—in other words, no one is directly confronted, there are questions in advance. But it's an opportunity to flesh out what happened.”
- “There had to be an appeal to someone other than administrators in the Title IX office … an adjudicator that is not in the Title IX office, in other words, that does not have an interest in seeing that the university's funds are protected.”
- With respect to intoxication, “the Harvard policy was explicitly uneven.” If someone had sex with a drunk victim, he was guilty of sexual assault, but if he were buzzed, “that didn't have any impact on his responsibility. We wanted to at least have a conversation about that. If both are impaired what should be done?”'

Public university could punish neck rubs as sexual battery under new policy

Matt · 5 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'East Carolina University students who are good at neck rubs could find themselves hauled before a sexual misconduct board under new rules approved by the board of trustees.

The new policy describes sexual battery as “the intentional or attempted sexual touching of another person’s clothed or unclothed body, including but not limited to the mouth, neck, buttocks, anus, genitalia, or breast, by another with any part of the body or any object in a sexual manner without their consent.”

The school described updates to nondiscrimination and Title IX policies in a press release dated Dec. 18, the same day as winter commencement.

Though it’s labeled “ECU News Services,” the release is nowhere to be found from the news portal. The school’s only apparent public communication of the changes appears to have been four days later on Twitter.'

The foreskin: Why is it such a secret in North America?

Matt · 6 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I was nineteen or twenty years old when a male friend of mine, we'll call him Bill, let me in on a most shocking fact: He was missing part of his penis, and so were almost all boys and men that I had ever seen in my entire life, as well as all the anatomical diagrams that I had ever seen. Ever.

Sure, I had heard of circumcision as a Jewish religious practice, but thought myself unlikely to ever see its results. Little did I know, all the male genitalia I had seen both in real life and as depicted in American anatomy books, had been edited in exactly the same way. The shock from this revelation overwhelmed me for weeks, especially since I considered myself to be fairly knowledgeable about anatomy. (My interests included biology and drawing biological structures.)

Why would anyone selectively remove foreskins, not just from real people but from scientific anatomical texts, which I had thought were meant to represent the natural human form? And why did no one ever tell me about this? It was as though a basic feature that males (of all mammals) are normally born with was not to be understood or even acknowledged.'

Sexist comments and the double standard

GaryB · 6 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

In Australia we've recently had a minor storm in a tea cup.

Chris Gayle, a cricketer, was interviewed by a female reporter. During the interview he made a 'pass' at her, saying she had lovely eyes and that maybe they could go for a drink together. Sleazy, in my opinion, but not exactly crime of the century. He has been hit with a $10,000 fine and has been hit with other sanctions such as being banned from interviews for the rest of the season. The backlash was instant.

But today the News.com.au dared to point out the double standard - a female reporter not so long ago propositioned a half naked man on the beach, and was reported as being 'brave' for doing so. No fine, no sanctions, no crime, no backlash. Excerpt:

'When Sunrise weather presenter Nuala Hafner openly hit on a semi-naked beachgoer during a live TV segment in December 2014, there was no such outrage. While presenting for the Channel Seven morning show from Sydney's Balmoral Beach, Hafner spotted a Speedo-clad man going about his morning exercise.

"Story of my love life, he would rather get wet than come over to me," Nuala joked with Kochie and co-host Natalie Barr back in the studio. "Is this some kind of mating display because I'm really enjoying it," She then interrupted her weather report to introduce herself to the man. "Hello extremely muscly, fit, agile man," she said as she approached him. "Hi how are you? I'm Nuala. Do you come here often?" When he told her he lived "up the road", she quickly asked if he was "single".
"No, I'm happily engaged," he said. "Anyway it was nice knowing you," the disappointed presenter said as she wrapped up her live cross to fits of laughter in the studio.'

Is this a double standard, they ask?

Sure, as always, it is. And, as always, few people care - because it's only men who are suffering, after all. Sleazy is sleazy - unless you're a woman.

SAVE: Georgia Tech Reinstatement is Evidence of Growing Public Alarm over Due Process and Free Speech on Campus

Matt · 6 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Gina Lauterio
Telephone: 301-801-0608

Georgia Tech Reinstatement is Evidence of Growing Public Alarm over Due Process and Free Speech on Campus

WASHINGTON / January 6, 2016 – The recent decision to reinstate a Georgia Tech student expelled for an alleged sexual offense marks a growing wave of popular concern over the erosion of due process protections and free speech rights on college campuses.

Earlier this week the Georgia Tech Board of Regents overrode the decision by a school administrator who had recommended the expulsion of a student accused of sexual assault. The Board reinstated the student when it learned that the investigator failed to interview witnesses provided by the defendant and gave him only one hour to review a 13-page, single spaced summary of the investigation (1).

Numerous other judicial decisions or legal settlements in recent months have overturned the findings of campus sex tribunals for due process violations. The decisions involved the University of California-San Diego, University of Tennessee-Chattanooga, Washington and Lee University, University of Southern California, and Middlebury College (2).

Concerns over the loss of free speech rights are being voiced, as well. President Obama has twice called for the restoration of open debate on campuses, first at a town hall meeting on September 15 and more recently during a November 15 interview with George Stephanopoulos (3).

Legislators have also taken up the cause of restoring free speech. On June 2, 2015 the U.S. House of Representatives Subcommittee on the Constitution held a hearing on the state of free speech on college campuses (4).

In Missouri more than 100 members of the state Legislature signed a letter to the University of Missouri's board of curators demanding the "immediate firing" of a professor who attempted to have a reporter forcibly removed during a student protest (5).

The American Civil Liberties Union of Missouri likewise urged the University of Missouri to not compromise the right to free expression in its efforts to fight racism, saying, "Mistakenly addressing symptoms — instead of causes — and doing it in a way that runs counter to the First Amendment is not the wise or appropriate response." (6)

"Due process and free speech are part of the American DNA," notes SAVE spokesperson Sheryle Hutter. "Lawmakers should not shrink from the challenge of restoring constitutionally-rooted rights and protections to college campuses."

1. http://www.washingtonexaminer.com/expelled-georgia-tech-student-reinstated/article/2579610

2. http://www.saveservices.org/2015/09/pr-due-process-gains-momentum-moves-to-center-stage-in-campus-sexual-assault-debate/

3. https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=8PlcALRh6Og

4. http://docs.house.gov/meetings/JU/JU10/20150602/103548/HHRG-114-JU10-20150602-SD003.pdf

5. http://www.foxnews.com/politics/2016/01/05/missouri-lawmakers-flex-muscles-in-call-for-professors-firing.html?intcmp=hpbt2

6. http://www.foxnews.com/us/2015/11/12/aclu-urges-university-missouri-to-better-protect-students-free-speech.html

‘Once a month my son takes me on a date’ — Mom’s Facebook post goes viral

Matt · 7 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Read the article and then again, inverting the genders. Imagine if a man talked about how he had his young daughter take him out on a date, hold doors open for him, pay for it, etc. This woman's training her son to be a servant to women. Imagine if a man did this to his daughter what the reaction would be? Excerpt:

'A young mother says she is teaching her son how to treat a woman right, and her Facebook post about it has gone viral.

Nikkole Paulun appeared on the MTV show “16 & Pregnant” and has been on the receiving end of some very negative social media posts. But this time, thousands of people are applauding her story.

Friday night she posted about a “dinner date” between she and her 6-year-old son. More than 2.7 million people have liked her story.'

Lawsuit: White Student Bragged About Sex with Black Athletes, Then Got Them Expelled for Rape

Mastodon · 7 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two black athletes have sued a private college in Ohio, the University of Findlay, for expelling them without even a semblance of due process after they were accused of rape by a white female student.

The lawsuit, filed by Justin Brown and Alphonso Baity, characterizes Findlay's investigation of the dispute—which was completed in just 24 hours—as a "sham." The university failed to interview witnesses who would have corroborated Brown and Baity's accounts, threatened other witnesses for failing to back up the accuser, and, most damningly, ignored considerable evidence that the accuser did not merely consent to sex—she bragged about it later, according to the lawsuit.

...

According to the lawsuit, the housemates were present in the common area and could hear some of the sexual activities. At least two other white female students were also present. All agreed that M.K. consented to sex, and could at times hear her consenting to sex. Brown and Baity maintain that M.K. was not just a willing participant, but the prime initiator, of their various encounters that night.

M.K. went home the next morning, and bore neither of the alleged perpetrators any ill will. According to the lawsuit, she explicitly told another student (J.F) that the sex was consensual—the lawsuit describes her as "bragging" about it. She also bragged about the encounter to a white female who lived on her floor.

Ten days after the encounter, M.K. filed a sexual assault claim with the university. Findlay administrators interviewed Brown and Baity—without telling them the specific nature of the charges against them—but did not speak to their black housemates because they merely presumed these men would defend their friends. Administrators did speak with the white women who were present (an example of racial discrimination, according to the lawsuit), and then, spectacularly, punished them when they disputed M.K.'s version of events. One of the women lost her work-study job, and the other was threatened with expulsion, according to the lawsuit.'

Feminists And Progressives Attack College Football With More Dodgy Rape Statistics

Mastodon · 7 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Liberal, mainstream journalists are currently wetting themselves over a new paper from the National Bureau of Economic Research, which purports to show that sexual assaults rise on college football game days. The article, entitled “College Party Culture And Sexual Assault,” cross-references big game days with reports of sexual assault in college towns, showing spikes in reports.

The media is lapping it up. “Reported Rapes Go Through The Roof On Game Day At Big Football Schools” screams the Huffington Post. “Report: Rape Rates At Big Football Colleges Spike On Game Day” warns CBS. “Rape Rates Spike On Game Day At Big Football Schools” agrees New York Magazine.

But guess what? The study is deceptive — and in several ways. Firstly, it purports to measure “college party culture” and sexual assault, yet the data the researchers use of rape isn’t confined to college campuses at all. The study conflates data from campus police departments, who have jurisdiction over sexual assaults and other crime on campus, and data from local law enforcement, who do not.'

My life was wrecked by a false rape allegation

Mastodon · 7 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Steve Proctor — who was cleared by a jury's unanimous verdict — called for anonymity of sex crime suspects until proved guilty, saying the unfounded claims cost him his job and the trust of friends and colleagues.
...
He said that the damage caused by wrongful accusations fanned by "no smoke without fire" rumours affects ordinary people as well as celebrities.

In the Eighties and Nineties Mr Proctor started the Balearic/acid house scene and as a DJ played Ibiza, the Shoom, the Hacienda and the Wag as well as the O2 and the Royal Albert Hall. But in May 2010 he was accused of raping a woman he knew. After being on bail for 13 months he was cleared by the jury's verdict.

However, he remains unemployed and suffers from depression and post-traumatic stress disorder. Now 56 and living on benefits in Crouch End, he said: "I was close to killing myself, this has destroyed my life. I felt the police's attitude was that I was guilty until proven innocent.'

Senator takes on federal education officials for 'threatening' letters to colleges, universities

Mastodon · 7 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'U.S. Sen. James Lankford is accusing the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights of overstepping its authority in confronting the issues of bullying, harassment and sexual violence on college campuses and becoming the bully itself.

Lankford, R-Oklahoma, is chairman of the Homeland Security and Governmental Affairs Subcommittee on Regulatory Affairs and Federal Management, which since September has been examining whether the Education Department and other federal agencies have been sidestepping the required regulatory process through the improper use of guidance letters.

In a letter being sent Thursday, Lankford said he wants the Education Department to prove its new mandates for "sweeping policy changes" on bullying, harassment and sexual violence at the nation's colleges and universities are actually rooted in federal statutes and regulation.'

Lawsuit: UVA Student's Crush On A Friend Was Root Of Fake Rolling Stone Gang Rape Story

Mastodon · 9 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The former University of Virginia student whose false claim about being gang-raped was published by Rolling Stone is a "serial liar" who– in addition to fabricating the rape story — made up a second identity and lied about having a terminal illness, all so that she could win the affections of a student she had a crush on, attorneys representing a dean at the school claimed in a recent lawsuit filing.

Jackie Coakley posed as her own suitor, a UVA student she called "Haven Monahan," in an elaborate catfishing scheme aimed at getting her friend and classmate, Ryan Duffin, to like her, attorneys for UVA dean Nicole Eramo asserted in court papers filed this week, according to The Washington Post.

She also told Duffin that she had a terminal illness and was "dying." But her biggest lies graced the pages of Rolling Stone in a Nov. 2014 article entitled "A Rape on Campus," which was written by Sabrina Rubin Erdely.'

General's 'greatest fear' that military might lower standards for women

Mastodon · 9 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The military will face pressure to lower standards in the future, if women are unable to meet the physical requirements to join front-line combat units or elite fighting forces, a ranking Marine Corps general said Friday.

Calling it his “greatest fear,” Gen. John F. Kelly, the commander of U.S. Southern Command who is slated to retire at the end of the month, predicted few female troops would be able to meet the physical demands in the traditionally all-male military occupations – primarily in the infantry, armor and special operations fields.

“There will be great pressure, whether it’s 12 months from now, four years from now, because the question will be asked whether we’ve let women into these other roles, why aren’t they staying in those other roles?” Kelly told reporters Friday at the Pentagon. “And the answer is … if we don’t change standards it will be very, very difficult to have any numbers – any real numbers – come into the infantry, or the Rangers or the SEALs.”'

Prominent feminist condemns circumcision, claims it's worse than clitoral piercing

Matt · 10 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The main reason for cutting little boy's penises given is that it reduces the instance of the transmission of STDs such as HIV. That may be true, and certainly the CDC and other secular medical institutions have made similar claims. However, the problem with this reasoning is that a more effective way of preventing the transmission of disease is the use of condoms, and condoms don't require you to be circumcised. In fact, even if you are circumcised, you STILL must use protection to avoid the spread of disease.

Another problem with the health benefits argument is that if the genders were reversed, there still would not be anyone advocating for it. If performing a clitorectomy were found to reduce instances of HIV, people would still be against it, no matter the health benefits. Why? Because people believe that women have a right to sexual pleasure derived from the clitoris. Does having an intact foreskin increase the amount of pleasure felt by boys? Yes, it does. Does removing it remove some of their sexual pleasure? Yes, it does.

Another argument in favor of circumcision that is often put forward is that it is cleaner. Of course, this is ridiculous on its face. Removing your ears would make it easier to clean. There are all manner of things that could be removed from the body at birth to increase hygiene. And of course, we live in a country with plenty of access to the materials we need to keep ourselves clean. Has anyone ever conducted a study on how much smegma is produced by vaginas with large labias? If removing the labia helped keep vaginas clean, would anyone argue in favor of it? Of course not.'

Celebrating Brit Shalom at Reform Judaism Conference

Matt · 11 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Reform Judaism, the branch of Judaism with which the most American Jews identify, is a progressive movement making tremendous efforts to be welcoming and inclusive. These efforts, which are widely perceived as strengthening the community, were to be the focus of the conference. So Rebecca and I created our display materials to tap into the theme of inclusion, with our own twist, of course: a call for open welcome of non-circumcising families in Jewish life.

With this as our premise, we were able to engage in many wonderful discussions and largely defuse those conversations that would otherwise have gotten heated and unproductive. Besides having our book available for sale, we had prepared a flyer laying out concrete steps that Reform clergy and institutions can take in order to send a clear message of inclusion to families opting out of circumcision. We gave out many dozens of these flyers (and gifted a number of books, too). Though a few visitors were less than friendly, the vast majority were respectful, and many were able to take part in thoughtful dialogue about the inclusion element and about our book. We were fortunate to have the help of the inimitable and tireless Martin Novoa, who added greatly to the conversation and was with us for most of the conference.'

UK: The trouble with boys

Mastodon · 11 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the mother of a boy and a girl, Helen Trussler has seen a stark contrast in their fortunes at school. While her 18-year-old daughter Beth has thrived, she feels that her once-confident son Harry, 12, has been crushed by a system that is biased against boys.

“He comes home from school in tears, tells me he’s stupid, dumb and should be in special needs,” said Trussler, 44, a home help from Guildford, Surrey.

Harry attends the same state school as Beth, who has similar intelligence — and a serious lung condition. Yet she achieved five Bs and three Cs at GCSE, while his academic prospects appear bleak.'

UK: Feminism has gone too far and we now need to help boys more, says uni admission boss

Mastodon · 11 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The head of UCAS, Mary Curnock Cook, has suggested that male students are having their progress impeded due to a lack of male teachers.

Her comments have been made on the same day as UCAS releasing data showing the widening gap between the sexes in higher education.

One of her suggestions to rectify the situation is to promote teaching to men, perhaps by advertising the profession more to male students.

She also would like to see more studies on how both male and female students learn following primary school, so the results may be used in the Government's education policy.'

Advocacy for Men & Boys club criticised as “anti-feminist” in open letter

Mastodon · 11 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The SFU Advocacy for Men & Boys (SFUAMB) club have become the centre of an ongoing controversy following an open letter penned by the Gender, Sexuality, and Women’s Studies student union (GSWSSU) claiming the club is “using men’s issues as a way to attack feminism.”

The letter was published on the union’s WordPress page on December 7, and was addressed primarily in response to SFU AMB’s November 8 event, “Toxic Masculinity & TOXIC FEMININITY.” The event was promoted with posters showing a biohazard sign over a venus symbol, a gesture the open letter alleges is “offensive, hostile, and aggressive.”

The main speaker for the event was Karen Straughan, a self-proclaimed “anti-feminist” and men’s rights advocate. Straughan is a prominent figure in the men’s rights activist community, as well as a well-known YouTube personality — her most popular video, “Feminism and the Disposable Male,” boasts over 1 million views.'

Say ‘NO’ to misandry

Mastodon · 12 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In an article she herself said would “make so many men so very angry,” Chelsea G. Summers described how misandry had, in 2015, become the new tool to further the feministic movement.

Summers stated that a woman now “looks around, and she fears every man, for every man feels implicated in the blank-faced denials of these famous men.” This fear then leads to the anger behind misandry.

The article has been getting mixed reviews since no one can tell if she is actually being serious. As I read through the article, I was waiting for the moment when she would turn it around, say she was joking, or something of the like. I was waiting for the point where I could tell that she is an extremely sarcastic person. That moment never happened.

Modern feminists have tried to separate themselves from the assumption that they hate men for the past few years. Fewer people have identified themselves as radical feminists, who believe they must reject and rage war on men to gain equality.
...
Misandry has never and will never be able to help feminists achieve their goals; it will only set them back. It is hypocritical to call out certain men for being misogynistic and hating women, and then turn around and hate men. The key to achieving equality is to raise up our voices in a positive, nondestructive way. You cannot hate all men, just because of the actions of a few.

So, Ms. Summers, if this article was written in all seriousness, I am truly sorry for whatever actions some men did to make you have the point of view that all men in the world are the spawn of Satan. I’d have to disagree with your opinion, though. Misandry will never be a large, beneficial presence in the campaign for equality.'

Letter: Better a false accusal than a rape

Mastodon · 12 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Excerpt:

'As many of this states' students return to their college campuses this week, many men leave the safety of their homes to enter into a world where they could be falsely accused of rape.

As I return to my college campus, I envy the luxury of these men. If the gravest danger I faced in this world was being falsely accused of rape, I would consider myself lucky. I would be much more fortunate than the countless women who have "walk me home apps" downloaded on their phones as a security blanket for any time they go out after dark. I downloaded one after a stranger attacked a classmate right outside my dorm last September.

I would consider myself luckier than the one in five college freshmen who will be sexually assaulted before they graduate. And if the greatest danger I faced in this world was someone falsely accusing me of rape for attention or one of the countless other denunciations I've heard, I would still never blame the victim.'

Jackie’s rape story was false so why hasn’t the media named her by now?

Mastodon · 12 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the 14 months since her story shocked the world, Jackie has been at the heart of a national debate about sexual assaults on college campuses, has become embroiled in a media scandal, and is the central figure in a series of defamation lawsuits.

Yet there’s one important fact missing about Jackie, the young woman who concocted a harrowing story about a gang rape at a University of Virginia fraternity: her full name.

News organizations have declined to reveal Jackie’s full identity since her now-discredited story appeared in Rolling Stone magazine in November 2014. Her single-name identity — just Jackie — is in keeping with a long-standing journalistic convention against identifying alleged victims of sexual crimes to protect the accuser’s privacy.'

Title IX

ThomasI · 13 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

As many know, OCR is investigating 50, 100, 1000, 10,000, no ONE BILLION sexual assault cases...

I have always wondered what are the results.

Well, The Chronicle of Higher Education is gathering them up, and you can find the cases here:

http://projects.chronicle.com/titleix/

In many of them, there was no guilt.

In almost all, there were 20 page letters sent in which the school was just told to speed things up.

In some, the schools were told to give the "alleged victim" money. Yes!

I think this should be spread far and wide and maybe someone can do an analysis of this colossal waste of time!

‘Jackie’ must turn over communications with ‘Rolling Stone’ in suit over discredited rape story

Mastodon · 13 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The source of Rolling Stone’s retracted story on gang rape at the University of Virginia, “Jackie,” will be forced to turn over some of her communications as part of a defamation lawsuit against the magazine.

Considering motions by Associate Dean of Students Nicole Eramo, a federal judge in Virginia said in court Tuesday that Jackie’s communications with Rolling Stone and “A Rape on Campus” author Sabrina Rubin Erdely “likely would be integral” to Eramo’s case, The Washington Post reported.

Judge Glen Conrad said he’s still mulling whether to require Jackie to turn over communications with her friends and family “related to the article,” the Post said.

Feminist organizations had earlier accused Eramo – and the university itself – of “victim blaming” for trying to force Jackie to turn over documents deemed by Eramo’s counsel to be “highly relevant” to her $7.5 million lawsuit.'

New Report Says UVA Rape Story Was All a Big Catfishing Scheme

Mastodon · 13 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Just when we thought the Rolling Stone-University of Virginia situation couldn't get worse, it turns out the entire 9,000-word article seems to have resulted from one student's unrequited romantic feelings toward one of her friends. The disastrous cover story recounted a college student, identified as "Jackie," being sexually assaulted by seven men during a hazing ritual at one of UVA's fraternities. However, because there was virtually no evidence that the rape actually occurred — and neither writer Sabrina Rubin Erdely nor the editorial staff at Rolling Stone fact-checked the piece's veracity — the story was quickly discounted, and cited by Columbia Journalism Review as one of the worst pieces of journalism of 2014. (Note: Rolling Stone asked the dean of Columbia University's Journalism School, Steve Coll, to investigate what went wrong in their reporting after the magazine was forced to retract the article when other publications, most notably The Washington Post, exposed glaring inconsistencies in the piece.) There have since been three defamation suits filed against Rolling Stone, including one by UVA associate dean Nicole Eramo, whose suit exposed the latest news out of this bizarre and damaging story.

In a new report by [The Washington Post], Eramo's defamation suit contains a series of text messages between one of Jackie's friends, and "Haven Monahan," the supposed instigator of the attack and a UVA junior, who we now know doesn't exist. For a while, however, it seemed like the story was an"embellishment" of an actual rape that had occurred. But now, evidence suggests that the story was entirely fabricated in an attempt to "catfish" a friend of Jackie's, Ryan Duffin, with whom she was infatuated.'

Teen girl was not kidnapped, may face charges

mens_issues · 14 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

This may have been just an alibi for something else. Excerpt:

'Parker police want the public to know they do not believe a teenage girl was kidnapped in September and the girl may face charges for lying.

Back in September, police asked the community for help finding a person who had kidnapped a 17-year-old girl from her home, put her in a vehicle, subjected to her to what police called "unlawful sexual contact" and released her in the Willow Park area.

Police now believe the girl lied.

"It is with great relief that we announce that there are no kidnapping suspects at large," Parker police said in a news release sent to Denver7. "No arrests have been made in this case. We have recommended to the District Attorney's Office that the individual be charged with False Reporting to Authorities."'

Girl planning high school shooting named targets in journal

mens_issues · 14 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

This is about one of two girls who planned a school shooting. Excerpt:

'The journal for one of the two girls accused in the Mountain Vista High School murder plot had the names of people she planned to target, prosecutors said in court Wednesday.

That information came out during a motions hearing for 16-year-old Sienna Johnson. Johnson has been charged as an adult with conspiracy to commit first-degree murder and conspiracy to commit first-degree murder after deliberations.

In court last week, prosecutors also said Johnson bought a BB gun to practice her shooting skills and mapped out plans to attack Mountain Vista High School in Highlands Ranch.'

Harvard prof takes down gender wage gap myth

Mastodon · 14 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I've written extensively on how the gender wage gap would be more accurately referred to as the "gender earnings gap," because the gap is due mostly to choices women make and not discrimination.

But now you don't have to take my word for it, you can listen to Claudia Goldin, an economics professor at Harvard University. Goldin spoke to Stephen Dubner, the journalist behind the popular podcast "Freakanomics," in a segment about what really causes the gap.

As one can imagine, Goldin comes to the same conclusion that I and many others have: That the gap is due mostly to choices men and women make in their careers and not discrimination.'

Law Professors Against Title IX: Faculty Worried About Due Process on Campus

Mastodon · 14 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was quite the packed panel discussion: a dozen mostly left-leaning speakers, each allotted 10 minutes to give their thoughts on a controversial topic, Grappling with Campus Rape. The venue was the American Association of Law Schools' 2016 meeting in New York City in early January. The lineup consisted primarily of actual law professors, and featured some undeniable heavy hitters on the subject of campus rape, including Michelle Anderson, dean of the City University of New York School of Law, and Mary Koss, a Regents' professor of health at the University of Arizona and the originator of the one-in-five statistic about rape prevalence.

The setup was predictable. The answers, on the other hand, were frequently shocking.

To be fair, many of the panelists expressed at least some enthusiasm for the federal government's recent efforts to compel universities to adjudicate rape—unsurprising, considering their liberal-leaning politics. But nearly all the speakers had something negative to say about the way anti-harassment guidance is being interpreted by government authorities, and many were openly hostile toward the idea that the prevention of rape was a campus matter. Several others were plainly disturbed by the pitiful state of due process rights on campus.'

Is This The Most Unfair Campus Rape Investigation Ever?

Mastodon · 14 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two black athletes have sued a private college in Ohio, the University of Findlay, for expelling them without even a semblance of due process after they were accused of rape by a white female student.

The lawsuit, filed by Justin Brown and Alphonso Baity, characterizes Findlay's investigation of the dispute—which was completed in just 24 hours—as a "sham."

The university failed to interview witnesses who would have corroborated Brown and Baity's accounts, threatened other witnesses for failing to back up the accuser and, most damningly, ignored considerable evidence that the accuser did not merely consent to sex—she bragged about it later, according to the lawsuit.'

Claim: Student accused of rape told not to seek counseling because his accuser had priority

Mastodon · 14 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A self-proclaimed feminist student at Michigan State University is blasting the administration for expelling her romantic partner after a 14-month discriminatory sexual-assault investigation.

In an open letter to Denise Maybank, vice president of student affairs and services, published in The State News, the unnamed author said her partner's accuser was the one who sexually assaulted him and that he was denied school resources simply because he's male.

"I write to you because this case has taught me that gender discrimination does exist," the letter says.

The author's claims mirror those in alawsuit against Amherst College by a male student who was expelled for rape despite evidence that his accuser had performed sex acts on him while he was "blacked out."'

Media Laps Up Another Panic-Fueled Survey on Sexism in Tech

Mastodon · 14 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yet another dubious report claiming to show widespread sexism in Silicon Valley has been published, and the tech press is characteristically lapping it up.

The survey, given the headline-friendly title “The Elephant in the Valley,” is scarcely academic, consisting of a collection of stories published on a purpose-built website. It nonetheless contains a number of eye-grabbing statistics: 90 percent of respondents claimed they had witnessed sexist behaviour at work, 87 percent reported demeaning comments from male colleagues, and 65 percent reported unwanted sexual advances.

Upon closer examination, however, the survey — and, by extension, its findings — is riddled with basic flaws.'

UK: Feminism To Be ‘Compulsory’ In Schools

Mastodon · 14 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The government has backtracked on plans to stop teaching feminism as a “major political philosophy” in A-level politics. Following a typically noisy online campaign, feminism “will now be compulsory” and the number of “female thinkers” on the syllabus will be greatly expanded.

Plans to drop the current section on feminism from the A-level politics course were revealed in proposals from the Department for Education in November 2015.

The section is not currently compulsory, but has proven a popular optional topic alongside environmentalism.

The topic included parts on sex/gender, gender equality and patriarchy. Last year, for example, the AQA politics and government exam paper asked students to: “Explain the term patriarchy in the context of feminism.”

However, ministers said they wanted politics students to focus on just three “key” strands of political theory – conservatism, socialism and liberalism. Instead, the department proposed that feminism be thought as part of the sociology A-level. The backlash was almost instantaneous.'

Hillary Clinton says she would govern differently than a man

Mastodon · 14 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In excerpts released Thursday, the Democratic presidential candidate suggested she believes women govern differently than men.

"I just think there are some areas where our own life experiences really prepare us to be more receptive," Clinton said. "I do think there is something in the governing or organizing approach. I just think women in general are better listeners, are more collegial, more open to new ideas and how to make things work in a way that looks for win-win outcomes."

...

Asked whether she has seen sexism change over the years, Clinton said it might be less pronounced but it's still "prevalent in our political scene."

"There still is a double standard, there's no doubt about that," she said. "I see it all the time where women are just expected to combine traits and qualities in a way that men are not. And it does make running for office for a woman a bigger challenge. It's hard for anybody, but I do think that women bear that extra burden."'

Women Arrested for Abusing Son So Badly He's Had Two Strokes

Mastodon · 15 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A pair of Oklahoma women have been arrested for allegedly beating and torturing a five-year-old boy so badly that he has had two strokes since being placed in the hospital.

Police in Muskogee, OK, arrested the boy's mother, Rachel Stevens, 28, and his "stepmother," Kayla Jones, 25, for what doctors say appears to be months of vicious child abuse.

The case ended up with the police after the child was transferred from a Muskogee clinic to St. John Medical Center in Tulsa because of lesions on his face and a series of seizures. But when he got to Tulsa, doctors became suspicious over his injuries and determined that he was abused and not just suffering some sort of ailment as claimed by the lesbian couple.

In court documents, the child indicated to police that he had been repeatedly tied up, confined with duct tape, locked in a small room for extended periods of time, and that both women would periodically beat him sometimes with a belt. He said his own mother once smashed his hand with a hammer and his "stepmom" kicked him in the groin hard enough to cause bleeding.

The women, though, have claimed that the abuse was somehow self-inflicted, that the boy was constantly "falling down" and getting hurt.

According to News On 6, the pair had even started a GoFundMe page dedicated to raising money to help pay their child's hospital expenses incurred because he was having "seizures" of an unknown cause.'

How 46 Title IX Cases Were Resolved

ThomasI · 15 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Two! Just Two. Yes, of the 46 cases so far investigated, there were two cases -- TWO -- where the OCR found there had been a hostile environment. And ONE of those two were UVA. So go figure that! And this does NOT mean there WAS a sexual assault that went unpunished. It just means that there was an ill-defined "hostile" environment AT THE TIME (which may very well have been fixed before OCR even got involved). In all the remaining of the 46... just form letters were sent. That is how your money is being spent. Excerpt:

'Since the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rightssignaled stricter enforcement of Title IX in April 2011, it has resolved 46 investigations of colleges for possible violations of the gender-equity law involving alleged sexual violence. You can explore all investigations in this wave of enforcement and learn morewith The Chronicle's Title IX investigation tracker.

Here we break down those 46 cases to see how they were resolved.'

Rubio and Title IX

Matt · 15 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Wielding irrelevant laws, spurious social science and financial coercion, the Obama administration is pressuring colleges and universities to traduce standards of due process when dealing with students accused of sexual assault. Claiming that a 1972 law prohibiting sex discrimination in education somehow empowers the government to dictate institutions' disciplinary procedures, the administration is dictating that a mere "preponderance of the evidence," rather than "clear and convincing" evidence, be used in determining a life-shattering verdict of guilt.

Stuart Taylor Jr. and KC Johnson — a lawyer and an academic, neither Republican — write that the administration justifies this by citing a single "resoundingly discredited" study purporting to prove an epidemic (involving 1 in 5 women) of campus sexual assaults. The administration opposes allowing accused students to cross-examine their accusers, and favors a form of double jeopardy — allowing accusers to appeal not-guilty findings.'

These Men's Rights Activists Are Suing Women for Meeting Without Men

Matt · 15 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In April 2014, Stephanie Burns' company, Chic CEO, was gearing up for a networking event at an Italian restaurant in San Diego. Chic CEO hosts online resources for women starting their own businesses, and this spring evening it had teamed up with a local networking group to throw a mixer at Solare Lounge, where women could mingle over cocktails and appetizers while talking business.

During the event, Rich Allison, Allan Candelore, and Harry Crouch appeared at the restaurant door. They had each paid the $20 admission fee, and they told the hosts they wanted to enter the event. Chic CEO turned them away, saying that "the event was only open to women," according to the men's version of events, explained later in a legal complaint. Within two months, the three men had filed a discrimination lawsuit against Burns and her company alleging that the event discriminated against men. They are each members of the nation's oldest men's rights group, the National Coalition for Men, and Crouch is the NCFM's president.'

"Men Have to Manspread Because of Science, Says Mansplaining Scientist"

Mastodon · 15 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Poor men. It was already difficult enough for them to accomodate their fellow subway riders, ostensibly because their balls need space (or something). Now they can't even spread their legs on public transit without being shamed for manspreading — by the transit authority, no less.

Well, one data scientist wants to put a stop to all the ladies nagging men for simply doing what they need to do for a comfortable train ride (i.e. sit with their knees as far apart from one another as possible, thereby ensuring strangers can't fit more than a single butt-cheek on the seat next to them).

According to Mark Skinner, an analyst at Roubini Global Economics, there's a very good reason why men manspread on public transit — and it actually has less to do with men being dicks, and more to do with the ratios of the average male body.

...

Skinner argues that if a male human were to sit with his legs together, "his torso likely won't fit on the top half of the seat" because his knees aren't at least shoulder-width apart.

The findings included another possible explanation for men taking up too much space on the train, which is that they're actually just trying to take up less room. Skinner claims that because men's knees tend to protrude more on average than women's, manspreading allows them to "avoid collisions in the aisles on crowded trains." (Skinner failed to mention the most likely reason why the trains are crowded in the first place: People are standing because there's not enough room to sit down.)'

"Men Mansplain Manspreading In New Data Analysis"

Mastodon · 16 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new data analysis from EconoMonitor is attempting to prove that men don't want to manspread -- they need to.

With the help of data scientist Mark Skinner, EconoMonitor writer Ash Bennington looked at the science behind why dudes manspread on public transit. "Manspreading" refers to when men take up more room than necessary on subways, buses and other types of public transportration.'

Girl, 19, found guilty of luring her teenage ex-boyfriend to a Florida home where he was beaten, shot, burnt and dismembered

Matt · 16 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Another example of a female getting a group of males to do her dirty work for her. And another lesson to would-be pseudo-chivalrous white knights, too. Excerpt:

'The woman accused of luring her ex-boyfriend to his death in 2011 has been found guilty of his gruesome murder.

Seath Jackson was tortured, beaten, shot and burnt in a Summerfield, Florida home before having his body broken into pieces to be put into paint cans that were thrown into a lime quarry.

His ex-girlfriend, Amber Wright, was 15 years old at the time of his murder. She was found guilty of first-degree murder after jurors deliberated for two hours in a Marion County courtroom, WESH reported.

This was Wright's second trial after her first conviction was overturned because she wasn't properly read her Miranda rights.

Four teenagers, a 20-year-old and one adult were all charged in Jackson's horrific murder. Wright's conviction is the latest step by prosecutors for holding those responsible for Jackson's murder.

Wright, 19, was used as 'bait' to bring Jackson to a gathering where his knees were broken so that his teenage body could be stuffed into a sleeping bag before it was burned, according to prosecutors.

During the trial, a tape played by prosecutors of her talking to her co-defendants after his murder showed Wright stating that Jackson cheated on her, hit her and nearly infected her with an STD during their relationship.

According to the Ocala Star-Banner, text messages showed Wright telling Jackson that they could work it out. But he was concerned about getting 'jumpt' (sic).'

"Between Wrongful Convictions and Rape Culture"

Mastodon · 18 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Defense lawyers in an evolving Brownsville rape case are now claiming that there's video that clears five young men of allegedly gang raping a young woman in a dark playground last week. The case has gripped the city's attention and there's a lot at stake in how it turns out.

The case has reminded some of the infamous 1989 Central Park 5 case, where young men were wrongfully convicted of brutally raping a jogger in Manhattan's Central Park. If you haven't seen Ken Burns' documentary or followed the story of how the young men fought for their freedom and ultimately sued the city, you really should. The story was in the headlines again recently when a teacher was allegedly fired for teaching her class about the case.

That case and story taught us all a lot about how the media and the criminal justice system can so willingly destroy the lives of young boys of color. Complicit in throwing those five boys under the bus was almost every major news outlet at the time, the mayor, the police department, prosecutors, a sizable portion of New York City and the current frontrunner for the Republican presidential nomination.'

Europe’s tragedy: Too much Angela Merkel, too little masculinity

Mastodon · 19 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After the incidents of sexual assault in Cologne, Germany on New Year’s Eve committed by Muslim refugees against German women, feminist apologetics have acquired renewed vigor in the European debate.

Pundits and politicians assure the public that refugee males now storming the gates of Europe from the Middle East, Northern Africa and Central Asia will be required to learn that Western women are independent and sexually liberated. Such arguments, however, are obviously too weak to have any impact on the male cultures representative of certain refugee groups.

To these individuals, strong European women are ‘easy’ and easy victims; they have respect only for strong men – and strong men aren't exactly thick on the ground in Europe.

The deficiency of masculinity in European culture renders it impotent in the face of the political and cultural chaos that has escalated along with growing immigration.'

Federal agency's actions may undermine students' rights

Mastodon · 19 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NO one wants sexual harassment or assault to be ignored. But the processes used to investigate related allegations on many college campuses increasingly resemble kangaroo courts.

It appears those potentially unconstitutional processes have been adopted due to pressure from the federal Department of Education through means that bypassed valid rule-making procedures.'

Students question their expulsions

Mastodon · 19 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Perhaps no school in the state has been as aggressive in punishing alleged sexual assailants in recent years as Georgia Tech.

With campus rape grabbing national headlines, Tech has expelled or suspended nearly every student it has investigated for sexual misconduct in the past five years, records show. And at Tech, officials finding a student responsible for “non-consensual sexual intercourse” must either expel the student or explain why they did not.'

Why Modern Feminism Does Nothing To Benefit Men

Mastodon · 19 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A few weeks ago, a video surfaced that made a few ripples around the internet, especially the various groups and pages I'm associated with that focus on gender issues. Not that that's anything new, but sometimes videos are released that ride a wave of popularity and are used by both sides of the 'gender war' to highlight their points of view. This one was no different, enticing cheers of 'totally' and jeers of 'absolutely not' in equal measure. It was titled 48 things women hear in a lifetime (that men just don't) and it was a video of various women saying 48 various sentences that, supposedly, men just aren't subjected to. A few weeks later, an equivalent video was released that followed the same format but was called 48 things men hear in a lifetime (that are bad for everyone). The intention was to promote how much we still 'need' feminism, even in 2015 (or 2016 now). Of course, as educational and insightful as both videos intended to be, it also gave us a couple of 'dafuq' moments, particularly as some of the things that men 'just don't hear' spouted in the women's video were, confusingly, repeated in the men's video. I'll get into the details a bit later but I want to look at the idea of 'things that (insert demographic here) hear that (insert equivalent demographic here) simply don't'.'

Brian Banks Lawsuit Seeks $219,000.00 Against State of California

Matt · 19 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a story here, wrongfully convicted high school football star Brian Banks is seeking $219,000.00 from the State of California for his imprisonment based on a wrongful conviction. California passed a statute that permitted exonerated convicts to be paid a maximum of $100 for each day they were wrongfully convicted and confined. You can read the horrific facts of his ordeal reported here.

What I find interesting is that the DA's office sought a conviction Banks without any physical evidence except Wanetta Gibson's word. You would think obtaining a rape conviction would be a tough case to prove, but the DA's office pursued charges against Brian Banks whose defense attorney talked him into a plea deal out of fear that a jury would assume Banks was guilty because he was a big black teeenager.

With regards to Wanetta Gibson's false statement in which she was paid $1.5 million?

Los Angeles prosecutors have said it is unlikely Gibson will be charged with making false accusations, saying it would be a tough case to prove.'

SAVE E-lert: "California Dreamin'" Up Some More Bad Policy

Matt · 19 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Once upon a time, California students could choose how to give consent to private sexual activity. Nowadays, the state has mandated affirmative consent, which means an accused student must show something like a sexual consent contract or video to prove consent existed.

But now, the University of California has stated that students may not videotape sexual activity without possible consent, which means that students are not able to prove that consent did occur: http://www.washingtonexaminer.com/california-colleges-to-make-proving-innocence-a-punishable-offense/article/2580663

This new policy is making it impossible to defend oneself against a sexual assault accusation.

Contact University of California President Janet Napolitano: president@ucop.edu and tell her that the school's new policy is dangerous for every student.

Let's not wait until innocent students are found guilty under it.

Very truly yours,

Gina Lauterio, Esq., Policy Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Study: Those Who Believe Feminism ‘Irrelevant’ Outnumber ‘Feminists’

Mastodon · 20 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More people believe that feminism is irrelevant than call themselves a feminist, a survey has revealed. However, two in three Brits say that more needs to be done for women’s equality in our society, leading to a feminist organisation declaring Britain a nation of ‘hidden’ feminists. The survey results don’t bear this conclusion out.

The results were revealed in a recentSurvation poll for The Fawcett Society, in which more than 8,000 British adults were quizzed on their attitudes to gender and feminism.

It found that, while seven per cent of Brits identify as a feminist, nine percent say they believe feminism to be irrelevant. A further 61 per cent believe in equality between the sexes, but say they are not a feminist.

The Fawcett Society has used these results to co-opt the vast majority of Britain into the ranks of the feminists. Chief Executive Sam Smethers said: “The overwhelming majority of the public share our feminist values but don’t identify with the label. However the simple truth is if you want a more equal society for women and men then you are in fact a feminist.”'

UK: Woman stabs man in eye with stiletto, sees no jail time

Matt · 20 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A student who stabbed a man in the eye with a Christian Louboutin stiletto heel leaving him with serious injuries has walked free from court.

Shadiya Omar, 22, of Clarendon Road, Whalley Range attacked Justin Lloyd, also 22, as they both waited for a taxi home after a night out in Manchester city centre.

Manchester Crown Court heard Mr Lloyd, from Blackley, approached Omar's friend outside the Mercure Hotel in Piccadilly Gardens on October 18 2014.

He offered the woman a crisp, but she knocked them out of his hand, so he attempted to pour them over her head.

The court heard Omar reacted by rushing to her friend's aid and struck Mr Lloyd in the eye with the designer shoe.

Prosecuting, Jonathan Savage, said: 'He was then struck a single blow to the left eye with an object.'

Dallas' Family Place plans to open first Texas shelter for battered men

el cid · 20 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Dallas family violence cases increased by 7 percent last year. But the most stark rise at one local shelter was in the number of battered men needing a temporary place to stay.

The Family Place nearly tripled the number of battered men it served last year compared with 2014. The 24 men assisted through November represented about 10 times the figure from just a few years ago, when the organization provided emergency shelter for two or three men annually.

In response to the escalating need, The Family Place plans to open a separate shelter for battered men early this year. Executive director Paige Flink said it would be the first in Texas and one of the first in the nation.

“Some people can’t believe me and others are saying, ‘Finally,’” Flink said about the new effort.'

"Lock Him Up! Feminists Call To Put Milo Yiannopoulos Behind Bars"

Mastodon · 20 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Self-proclaimed comedienne Kate Smurthwaite called for Yiannopoulos to be “locked up” on the BBC’s The Big Questionsyesterday, after having lost a debate to him previously by losing her temper.

Smurthwaite and Yiannopoulos had previously locked horns on the show last year, as her “institutionalised sexism” outburst was the source for theunforgettable “I’m talking about men, darling” viral video. For her disappointing performance, Smurthwaite received ridicule and criticism that she later sought to depict as “abuse” and “harassment.”

After complaining as to why Yiannopoulos,who refers to himself as a “Dangerous Faggot,” gets so much airtime, despite the fact his social media followings are over ten times the size of her own and probably more than the whole room combined, she argued that until we see some “high-profile individuals, perhaps including some in this studio, locked up, it’ll be time for other people to back off.”

This is not the first time feminists have called for Yiannopoulos and other free speech activists and writers critical of modern feminism to face criminal charges.'

Wikipedia on Milo Yiannopoulos

College student acquitted of rape re-enrolls, sues accuser

Matt · 20 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Roanoke College student who was accused of rape and found not guilty at trial and in a sexual misconduct hearing is back on campus this semester and is suing his accuser for $500,000 in damages.

Ezra Zigarwi, who was found not guilty on charges of rape and aggravated assault, has re-enrolled at Roanoke College this semester after he was found not guilty in a jury trial in November and at an on-campus sexual misconduct hearing in December.

The 19-year-old student from Zimbabwe, Africa, also has filed a civil lawsuit against the female student who accused him of rape. The lawsuit alleges the woman made false claims to campus and Salem police, and asks for $500,000 in compensatory and punitive damages.

The Roanoke Times does not name people who file sexual assault reports.'

Sorry, activists, another flawed survey doesn't prove rape culture

Matt · 22 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yet another sexual assault survey was released this week. Cue the usual media outlets predictably touting it as proof that America is in the midst of a "rape culture" and that college women are victimized at rates similar to that of the Congo.

The alarming statistics included in summaries make for good headlines. Huffington Post wrote: "There's no more denying campus rape is a problem. This study proves it." Media Matters went with: "New study once again debunks right-wing media's favorite myths about campus sexual assault statistics."

These outlets can claim that the survey proves the existence of a campus rape epidemic, but the data prove just the opposite.'

Prominent Medieval Scholar’s Blog on ‘Feminist Fog’ Sparks an Uproar

ThomasI · 22 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A months-old blog post written by a respected medieval scholar, Allen J. Frantzen, has gained a second life on social media — and whipped the discipline into a frenzy.

The post, entitled "How to Fight Your Way Out of the Feminist Fog" and published on Mr. Frantzen’s personal website, attacks feminism, alluding repeatedly to "anti-male" propaganda, paints men as victims, and offers advice on how they should "clear the fog." Mr. Frantzen retired in 2014, after more than 35 years at Loyola University Chicago.

The post borrows terminology often associated with men’s-rights activism, including encouragement for men to take the "red pill" of reality, not the "blue pill" of illusion, and to break away from the feminist fog. The fog, Mr. Frantzen explains, represents how feminism hangs over society — in a "sour mix of victimization and privilege" — and intimidates men into accepting its perspective.

Medieval scholars have widely condemned the post online as misogynistic, under the hashtag #femfog.'

Is Georgia Tech crossing a line on sexual assault, other cases?

Mastodon · 22 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Georgia Tech will face questions Monday from a state lawmaker looking at whether the school is doing enough to protect the rights of students accused of sexual assault and other wrongdoing.

State Rep. Earl Ehrhart, a Republican from Cobb County, said while he looking at due process rights across the state university system he is particularly concerned about Tech, which has moved to aggressively punish those facing sexual assault allegations.'

Campus sexual-assault hearing is ‘akin to a criminal prosecution,’ federal court says

Mastodon · 22 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sometimes when you lose the battle, you win a larger victory.

Critics of the typical college approach to sexual-assault investigations – treating male students as “responsible” while depriving them of basic due process – can take some comfort from a decision by the U.S. District Court in Lexington, Ky.

Male student “John Doe” preemptively sued the University of Kentucky after it put him through two hearings in the 2014-15 school year that were twice overturned by the University Appeals Board, which found gross due-process violations including the “withholding of critical evidence” by the student-conduct director. (The first punishment was a one-year suspension; the second, a five-year suspension.)'

Embrace feminism to improve decision-making, says Canadian PM

Mastodon · 23 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Justin Trudeau, Canada's prime minister, has called on men and women to embrace feminism to improve decision-making in politics and business.

Speaking on a platform discussing gender parity at the World Economic Forum inDavos on Friday, Trudeau said: "We shouldn't be afraid to use the word feminist. Men and women should use it to describe themselves whenever they want."

Trudeau appointed a gender-balanced cabinet after he became prime minister in November, made up of 15 men and 15 women. At the time, he explained his decision by saying: "Because it's 2015".'

UK: Family judge criticised for not naming council that breached father's rights

Mastodon · 23 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A family court judge has come under fire after refusing to name a council that violated a man's parental rights by taking his four-year-old daughter into care without a proper investigation.

Judge Heather Anderson said the council had admitted breaching the human rights of the man, who has a learning disability and is separated from the girl's mother.

Staff had not consulted him when temporarily placing the girl, who had lived with her mother, with foster carers after concerns emerged about her being neglected. He had not been asked if he could care for his daughter or suggest other possible carers, pending decisions about her long-term future.'

IOC to allow M-to-F transsexuals to compete as women

Matt · 23 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's great news for adventurous male Olympic hopefuls: if they declare themselves women and reduce their testosterone below 10 nmol/L for at least 12 months prior to competition, they can compete against ladies.

There's even better news for these men; according to transgender guidelinesapproved by the International Olympic Committee, genitalia does not serve as a prerequisite. The guidelines state: "To require surgical anatomical changes as a pre-condition to participation is not necessary to preserve fair competition and may be inconsistent with developing legislation and notions of human rights."'

Guilty no matter what

Matt · 24 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 19-year-old Roanoke College student was accused of rape in March 2015 by a college freshman. He was charged by the district attorney, but it took a jury just 25 minutes to find him not guilty at the end of a trial that lasted one day. A campus sexual misconduct hearing also found him not responsible.

Case closed, right? Wrong, of course.

When the student, who is from Zimbabwe, re-enrolled in Roanoke, campus activists started an online petition in an effort to bar him from campus, citing safety concerns. This just goes to show that students who are accused of sexual assault on college campuses are often considered guilty-until-proven-innocent, and even then are still considered guilty.'

"I hate to break it to feminists, but ‘white male privilege’ is a myth"

Mastodon · 24 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How’s this for dark irony: throughout 2015, ‘white male privilege’ was the buzzphrase on every rad tweeter and liberal hack’s lips, as they fumed against the easy, pampered lives allegedly enjoyed by human beings who had the fortune to be born with a penis and pale skin. Railing against ‘white men’ and their cushy existences has become the stock-in-trade of many feminists.

Yet towards the end of 2015 it was revealed that there’s a social group in Britain more derided and less successful than pretty much every other social group. Guess who? Yep, young white men. Especiallyyoung working-class white men. A large sector of the group that the new identity-politics mob loves to ridicule for sailing through life unmolested and unchallenged is actually having a rough time.

Consider this: 18-year-old women are35 percent more likely to attend university than 18-year-old men; and where 37 percent of black school-leavers go to university, only 28 percent of white school-leavers do. These stats were unveiled by UCAS in December, leading its chief executive to wonder if it isn’t time to initiate ‘outreach’ projects designed to get more white blokes into college.'

If 12% of campus sexual assaults are reported, then 1 in 39 women are sexually assaulted at U. of MN, not 1 in 5

Mastodon · 25 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This is an update of a post that appeared on CD last March.

In a January 2014 report titled “Rape and Sexual Assault: A Renewed Call to Action” (which led to the creation of the “White House Task Force to Protect Students from Sexual Assault” headed by Vice-President Joe Biden), the White House made the following two claims:

White House Claim 1. Sexual assault is a particular problem on college campuses: 1 in 5 women has been sexually assaulted while in college (pages 1, 2, 10, 14).

White House Claim 2. Reporting rates for campus sexual assault are also very low: on average only 12% of student victims report the assault to law enforcement (page 14).

I’ve reported previously on CD many times that there’s a huge, irreconcilable problem here. If the second claim about under-reporting of campus sexual assault is even close to being accurate, it means that nowhere near 1 in 5 women are sexually assaulted while in college. ...'

Lawmaker to spotlight Georgia Tech's treatment of accused students

Mastodon · 25 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Georgia Tech will face questions today from a state lawmaker looking at whether the school is doing enough to protect the rights of students accused of sexual assault and other wrongdoing.

The hearing could be the first time Georgia Tech president Bud Peterson speaks publicly about the institution's student discipline processes since recent reports about the impact of the school's aggressive disciplining.

Georgia Tech has expelled or suspended nearly every student it has investigated for sexual misconduct in the past five years, according to reports viewed by The Atlanta Journal-Constitution. The school has also handed down stiff penalties to fraternities, including one in which members were accused last summer of hurling racial slurs at a black female student.'

UK: Human Rights Committee seeking comments - "Appointment of Chair of Equality and Human Rights Commission hearing"

Minuteman · 25 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Link here.

'Hearing with Government's preferred candidate in March 2016. Deadline for written submissions is Thursday 18 February 2016.

Scope of the hearing

* Women and Equalities Committee
* Joint Committee on Human Rights

The Joint Committee on Human Rights holds a joint pre-appointment hearing of the Government's preferred candidate for the Chair of the Equality and Human Rights Commission (EHRC) with the House of Commons Women and Equalities Committee in March 2016. Ahead of this hearing, the Committees welcome submissions on the following:

* the effectiveness of the EHRC and the role of the Chair;
* the most important issues the Chair of the EHRC is likely to face during their term; and
* the most important qualities needed by the Chair of the EHRC

Guidance: Written submissions

Send a written submission'

How the Feds Use Title IX to Bully Universities

Mastodon · 25 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the login by Googling the first para. text and clicking the first result entry. Excerpt:

'In the past several years politicians have lined up to condemn an epidemic of sexual assault on college campuses. But there is a genuine question of whether the Education Department has exceeded its legal authority in the way it has used Title IX to dictate colleges' response to the serious problem of sexual assault.

When an administrative agency makes rules and regulations—which are a form of law every bit as binding as those passed by Congress—it must follow the requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act, the bible of the bureaucracy. The process most often used involves "notice and comment": The agency must publish the proposed regulation and respond to comments before issuing the final rule. This can take months or years, and at the end of the process parties affected by the new rule can challenge it in court.

There's a point to making the government jump through these hoops: By demanding transparency and facilitating public participation and judicial review, we can be more confident that the bureaucracy is up to good rather than ill.'

Professor Who Blocked Reporters From Protest Charged With Assault

Matt · 25 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'University of Missouri communications professor Melissa Click has been charged with third-degree assault -- a misdemeanor -- over an altercation with reporters on campus in November, the city prosecutor's office has confirmed. The prosecutor's office filed the charge Monday morning, after which the court is expected to issue a summons.

In a video that was widely shared online, Click was shown blocking reporters from a public space at the school's campus. Students, who had gathered following the resignation of the university's president over racial tensions at the school, declared the area a media-free "safe space."

Click can be heard telling a reporter to "go away" before grabbing his camera, then asking for backup. "Hey, who wants to help me get this reporter out of here? I need some muscle over here!" Click says on the video.'

There’s no glass ceiling. There’s just children and food.

Matt · 25 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The argument is unsustainable. “For all the talk over the past three years, the number of women at the World Economic Forum barely budged from 17% last year to 18% this week.”

What feminists see, but cannot face, is that most women don’t want what they want. What feminists have learned, but refuse to accept, is that you can’t legislate desire.

There is Zero. Evidence. that women are being discriminated against en masse or that they’re being forced into fields that allow more flexibility as opposed to freely choosing them.

Do you think so little of women that you assume they don’t know what they want? If so, why do you want them in the boardroom?

Clare Boothe Luce said it best: “It is time to leave the question of the role of women up to Mother Nature—a difficult lady to fool. You have only to give women the same opportunities as men, and you will soon find out what is or is not in their nature. What is in women’s nature to do they will do, and you won’t be able to stop them.'

Woman Battered Husband When He Declined Her Request To Have Sex

Matt · 25 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Iowa woman bit and scratched her husband when he declined to have sex with her, according to cops who arrested the suspect for domestic battery.

As detailed in a criminal complaint, when Rachel Butterbaugh, 33, arrived home from work around 10 PM Saturday night, her spouse was in bed inside the couple's North Liberty residence.

Butterbaugh, pictured at right, "said she wanted to have sex," police reported. But when her husband said no, Butterbaugh allegedly "became physical and began scratching and biting the victim."
...
Court records show that Butterbaugh's rap sheet includes two prior assault convictions.'

Canada: As many men as women are victims of domestic violence

Matt · 25 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article in French here. English translation here. Excerpt:

'Data made public by Statistics Canada this week come debunk some myths about domestic violence.

Thus, contrary to popular belief, the 2014 General Social Survey on victimization tells us that men are just as likely to be victims of spousal violence than women.

If this data does not surprise the experts, some are still surprised to see the fall of domestic violence, which fell by nearly half, and see the extent of violence against men.

According to the survey, a little more than 19 million Canadians who had a spouse or former spouse in 2014, about 4%, or 760,000 people, reported having experienced physical or sexual violence, or both, from their partner in the previous five years. However, the proportion of 4% is identical in men and women.

The good news is that the figure is well below the 7% recorded 10 years earlier, in 2004, a drop the magnitude of which surprised criminologist and specialist in domestic violence issues Stéphane Guay, University from Montreal.

"Let there be a decline is normal and you would expect because this is an issue that has been taken seriously and there were many actions that have been taken. But 3% difference? This is almost a 50% decrease. That I would not have you pledged $ 2 on it, "he told in an interview with The Canadian Press.'

Florida State Settles Suit Over Jameis Winston Rape Inquiry

Matt · 26 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Florida State University agreed on Monday to pay $950,000 to settle a lawsuit filed by a former student who accused the former Seminoles football star Jameis Winston of raping her in 2012.

The settlement also commits Florida State to five years of sexual assault awareness programs and to the publishing of annual reports on those programs, although the university did not admit liability. Winston was never criminally charged in the case, in part, the local prosecutor acknowledged, because a number of shortcomings in the police investigation left him without the evidence needed to sustain a charge of rape.

Because of the publicity it generated, the Winston case became a centerpiece for a national debate over two intertwined issues: how universities handle allegations of sexual assault, and whether colleges and the police afford special treatment to athletes accused of misconduct. A New York Times examination — based on police and university records, as well as interviews with people close to the case, including lawyers and sexual assault experts — found that Florida State and the Tallahassee police had done little to determine what happened in the Winston case.'

Irony alert: ‘rabid feminists’ want themselves removed from the Oxford English Dictionary

Matt · 27 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As if to make a massive display of their dearth of self-awareness, Twitter feminists have spent the past few days nagging the Oxford English Dictionary over its definition of the word ‘nagging’. They have also rabidly denounced its definition of ‘rabid’. And they have deployed shrill lingo to slam its definition of ‘shrill’.

To nag a dictionary in a shrill and rabid way over its entries for ‘shrill’, ‘rabid’ and ‘nag’ suggests feminists’ irony deficiency has reached life-threatening levels. Or maybe they’re having a cosmic laugh. Never have I been more tempted to view the new, media-led feminism as a Chris Morris-style send-up of buzz-killing liberals than I have while reading about Dictionarygate.

It started with some tweets by the Canadian anthropologist Michael Oman-Reagan (male feminists are often the worst). Demonstrating that anthropologists have way too much time on their hands, Mr Oman-Reagan complained to the OED – the default dictionary on Apple’s Mac OS X operating system – about the fact that its definition of the word ‘rabid’ — ‘having or proceeding from an extreme or fanatical support of or belief in something’ — contained the following example: ‘a rabid feminist.”

Due process advocates starting 2016 off strong

Mastodon · 27 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Advocates for due process on college campuses have come out in full force in the first months of 2016. Law professors, legislators, editorial boards and even a presidential candidate have stepped up to defend the constitutional rights of those accused of sexual assault on college campuses.

Stop Abusive and Violent Environments, an organization working to protect all students (both victims and the falsely accused), has detailed the advocacy in a press release sent Monday morning.
...
Last week, a federal court in Kentucky ruled that campus hearings are "quasi-criminal" in nature, which should make a good argument going forward that students deserve due process rights. Also last week, the Oklahoman posted an editorial about the need for reform in campus sexual assault policies, calling the current model a "constitutionally dubious regime."'

UK: Feminist celebrity advocates for 'euthanasia vans' to kill elderly

Mastodon · 27 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hopkins suggests that we create “euthanasia vans” that drives door-to-door and kills off the elderly.

“We just have far too many old people,” the feminist says. “It’s ridiculous to be living in a country where we can put dogs to sleep but not people.”

According to Hopkins, this can be carried out stylistically, you know, with a flair.

“Euthanasia vans — just like ice-cream vans — that would come to your home,” Hopkins says “It would all be perfectly charming. They might even have a nice little tune they’d play. I mean this genuinely. I’m super-keen on euthanasia vans. We need to accept that just because medical advances mean we can live longer, it’s not necessarily the right thing to do."'

Wikipedia on Katie Hopkins here.

Hillary's "blame-men-first" feminism may prove costly in 2016

Matt · 27 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During her two presidential campaigns, Hillary Clinton has consistently drawn greater support from women than men. Is this gender lag due to retrograde misogyny, or does Hillary project an uneasiness or ambivalence about men that complicates her appeal to a broader electorate?

As a career woman, Hillary is rooted in second-wave feminism, which began with Betty Friedan's co-founding of the National Organization for Women in 1967, while Hillary was in college. Friedan sought to draw men into the women's movement and to ally with mainstream wives and mothers. But after a series of ideological struggles, she lost her leadership role and was eventually eclipsed in media attention by the more telegenic Gloria Steinem, who famously said, "A woman needs a man like a fish needs a bicycle."

Hillary has unfortunately adopted the Steinem brand of blame-men-first feminism, which defines women as perpetual victims requiring government protections. Hillary's sometimes impatient or patronizing tone about men, which can perhaps be traced to key aspects of her personal history, may prove costly to her current campaign.'

State legislator: Adopt due process protections or forget about your budget

Matt · 27 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Georgia legislator responsible for appropriating state funds to colleges and universities is threatening to halt budget discussions with his state's schools unless they adopt basic due process protections for accused students.

State Rep. Earl Ehrhart, chairman of the Appropriations subcommittee on Higher Education, told college presidents in no uncertain terms to adopt such protections.

"You think you've got an issue with federal bureaucrats threatening your federal funds?" Ehrhart said at the close of a hearing on due process. "This committee controls your funds, Mr. President, and I want to see a clear statement from all of you — beyond what the [Board of] Regents is requiring — before I'm even going to have a conversation with you about your budgets, presidents."'

Professor involved in protests charged with assault, will keep job

Matt · 27 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'University of Missouri (Mizzou) Professor Melissa Click, who garnered national attention after attempting to remove a student journalist from a November protest, was formally charged with assault Monday morning,ABC 17 reports.

In November, Click was caught on video threatening a reporter who requested an interview with her during an on-campus protest at Mizzou. Click immediately turned down the reporter's request for comment and told him he needed to leave the protest. The reporter stood his ground causing Click to call out for "muscle" to forcibly remove the reporter from the protest. The video shows Click swinging at the reporter's camera, leading some to believe she assaulted a student.'

Sexual Assault: The Accused Speak Out

Mastodon · 28 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Matthew adored his small liberal arts college—until he was charged with and, ultimately, issued a semester-long suspension for non-consensual sexual intercourse with another male student.

“One of the key phrases was ‘We found you guilty. Plan on not booking a flight back.’ That still punches me in the stomach,” Matthew told The Daily Beast. “The following day, I had an 8 am flight, I was up ‘till 3 am. I had to pack up all of my room.”

His love and trust in his college completely changed when he was notified that school was “investigating two alleged incidents of nonconsensual sexual intercourse,” according to the letter Matthew received from the Office of Title IX Coordination, which he shared with The Daily Beast. (Title IX is a statute that prohibits sex-based discrimination in schools that receive federal funding, and it is often applied to enforce sexual assault reform.)'

Under Obama, federal investigations of campus sexual assault cases skyrocket

Mastodon · 28 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of universities accused of Title IX violations and subjected to federal investigations by the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights has skyrocketed in recent years, even as an increasing number of lawmakers and law professors accuse the office of abusing its power regarding how to lawfully interpret the gender-equity law.

Federal Title IX investigations into the mishandling of campus sexual assault cases stand at nearly 250 since 2011, according to The Chronicle of Higher Education, whichreleased an online database detailing the probes.
The Chroniclereports over the past year and a half, the number of pending cases nearly tripled — and today there are 197 open investigations targeting 161 institutions.

Meanwhile, as the Office for Civil Rights claims it needs to hire hundreds of new employees to handle its increasing backlog of nearly 200 unresolved cases, more observers have come out to say the office has vastly overstepped its authority.'

Subway Brawl Turns Into Debate Over Manspreading

Mastodon · 28 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, a fight broke out on a 5 train in the Bronx when a woman allegedly cursed & spit in a man's face during a verbal argument, and the man in turn pummeled the woman's boyfriend. The incident, which was captured on video, played out like a lot of other anonymous, violent, more-sad-than-anything-else subway fights. But a week later, both parties are talking about how a bare minimum of subway etiquette could have prevented the fisticuffs—because the fight, it turns out, was allegedly sparked by manspreading.

The incident happened around 3:30 p.m. last Wednesday on a northbound 5 train. Queen Muhammad, the woman who has been portrayed as initiating the fight, told the Newsthat she never spit on alleged attacker Patrick Crow. "This manspread thing is getting out of control," she told tabloid. "I was embarrassed but now I'm quite happy that this video came out and I hope that men are willing to respect women on the subway and buses more."

Crow counters that Muhammad was rude from the moment she got onto the train at 125th Street and Lexington Avenue, announcing that everyone should "respect the Queen" and cramming beside him on the seat: "She just dropped down on my leg," he said. "She started to nudge me over with her elbow," which the Daily News says made him decide to "spread his legs to prevent the takeover of his space."'

Crying Rape

Mastodon · 28 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'False rape accusations are a lightning rod for a variety of reasons. Rape is a repugnant crime—and one for which the evidence often relies on one person's word against another's. Moreover, in the not-so-distant past, the belief that women routinely make up rape charges often led to appalling treatment of victims. However, in challenging what author and law professor Susan Estrichhas called "the myth of the lying woman," feminists have been creating their own counter-myth: that of the woman who never lies.

More than a quarter-century ago, feminist legal theorist Catharine MacKinnon wrote that "feminism is built on believing women's accounts of sexual use and abuse by men"; today, Jessica Valenti urges us to "believe victims en masse," because only then will we recognize the true prevalence of sexual assault. But a de facto presumption of guilt in alleged sexual offenses is as dangerous as a presumption of guilt in any crime, and for the same reasons: It upends the foundations on which our system of justice rests and creates a risk of ruining innocent lives.

How frequent are false accusations? A commonly cited estimate, which may have originated with feminist author Susan Brownmiller in the 1970s, is that they account for only about 2 percent of rape reports. After the Oberst fiasco, feminist blogger Rebecca Watson posteda video asserting that, statistically, you will be wrong two out of 100 times if you presume a rape accusation to be true and 98 out of 100 times if you presume it to be false.'

‘Feminist’ PM Justin Trudeau Schools The World On How To Raise Boys In A Patriarchal World

Mastodon · 28 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“We shouldn’t be afraid of the word ‘feminist’. Men and women should use it to describe themselves anytime they want,” said Justin Trudeau, as the audience at Davos World Economic Forum broke into hoots and applause. We’ve heard this before, from Malala Yousafzai, from Emma Watson, Beyoncé, Ellen Page, Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie, Louise Brealy, and John Legend. Every time someone, as well-known as they are, has made this point, there’s a sizeable dent in the patriarchy-sized wall we’ve been trying to smash so long. But if I had a dollar – or a British Pound, I hear it’s doing better – for every time a politician made this statement, well, let’s say I’d be eating a cheap breakfast, because feminist politicians are hard to come by.

Trudeau’s election was a special one from the beginning. He kicked off his campaign at the Vancouver Pride Parade. And when he did win, he brought in an ethnically diverse and gender-balanced cabinet of ministers. And last Friday, he boldly embraced feminism, personally and politically. But what’s most important about his Davos speech is what came before that.

He talks about how he wants to raise his sons “to be feminists like dad,” and that it was his wife Sophie Gregoire-Trudeau, who brought up the issue in the first place. Feminist parent duo to raise feminist daughter and sons? Yes, please!

But can we just talk about feminist dads for a second. These are guys who are taking ‘fatherhood’ (which has stood at the helm of patriarchy for so long) by the lapels and saying “no, we won’t do it the old way anymore.” Male feminists (I use the prefix ‘male’ only to highlight an identity and experience that is different from women’s) recognize the privilegesthey hold over women as a violation of the principle of equality and justice, and who won’t stand for it. And feminist dads? Well, they’ll show their kids that another type of man is possible, another type of fatherhood is possible. They also show their kids how to be decent human beings, not because you’ll get a cookie for it, but because that’s who you should be.'

University men’s issues group fails to get ratified

mens_issues · 29 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Ryerson Students’ Union (RSU) rejected the last appeal by the Men’s Issues Awareness Society (MIAS) to become an officially sanctioned student group.

RSU president Andrea Bartlett said that the group cannot appeal any further.

MIAS, which styles itself as “a space for Ryerson students and affiliates to discuss the issues facing men and boys today,” first applied for campus group status in October. The RSU’s Board of Directors has consistently rejected the group — the latest attempt to establish a men’s issues organization on campus.

“What we’re doing is really raising issues that have never been [talked] about or usually disregarded,” said Kevin Arriola, MIAS’s president."'

Obama to announce new rules for closing gender pay gap

Mastodon · 29 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In his final year in office, President Barack Obama is returning to an issue that was at the heart of the first piece of legislation he ever signed at the White House: equal pay.

Obama on Friday unveiled new rules that would compel companies with more than 100 employees to provide the federal government annual data for how much they pay employees based on gender, race and ethnicity.

That information would be used to help public enforcement of equal pay laws while giving more insight into discriminatory pay practices, he said from the White House.

“What kind of example does paying women less set for our sons and daughters?” Obama asked.

The proposal would cover more than 63 million employees — potentially providing a new wealth of data for understanding the pay gap issue and determining whether certain workers are getting short-changed.'

The serious reason boys do worse than girls

Mastodon · 29 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's one of the biggest puzzles in education. Since the 1950s, boys in America been falling behind girls in school. They have more trouble graduating high school, and are less likely to get college diplomas.

Though there have been many theories for the gender gap in academic achievement, this remains a hotly debated issue. Is it the culture? Do girls get more encouragement to succeed in their studies? Is there something biological going on? Do boys mature too late? Are they just more fragile at young ages?

And what if this is the human race's destiny? "What if the modern, postindustrial economy is simply more congenial to women than to men?" Hanna Rosin wondered in her provocative Atlantic essay from 2010.'

Crystal Lake Dist. 155's STEM conference for girls only

Mastodon · 29 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jenny Morris had a "light bulb" moment teaching an Advanced Placement physics class at Prairie Ridge High School last year.

"I had 16 boys and zero girls," she said.

It prompted Morris to launch Crystal Lake High School District 155's first GEMS (Girls in Engineering, Math, and Science) Conference to be held Saturday.

Sixth- through eighth-graders from feeder schools in Cary, Crystal Lake, Fox River Grove, Prairie Grove, and a portion of Lake in the Hills are invited to attend the free conference and explore careers in science, technology, engineering and math (STEM).'

Lawmakers propose bill to close the wage gap for women in Oklahoma

Mastodon · 29 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Representatives Jason Dunnington and Emily Virgin want to make it illegal for an employer in Oklahoma to pay women less than men for comparable work.

The bill would allow female employees who feel they're being discriminated against to file a complaint with the Labor Department.

"The Labor Department would contact the employer and then would seek records and would do an investigation on whether that's the case and whether or not that employer was making a practice of paying females less for the same work as males," Dunnington said.

The bill would also make it illegal to fire a woman because she made a wage claim.'

“Toddler wage gap”: Sandberg says inequality starts with kids’ chores

Mastodon · 29 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists in the workplace just keep finding new issues to harp on. In her op-ed in Forbes, Sabrina Schaeffer, executive director of the Independent Women’s Forum, shares how “Success if Never Enough For Some ‘Feminists,’ Including Sheryl Sandberg.”

Schaeffer begins with a mention as to how “fascinated” Alexis de Tocqueville would be, if he were alive today, by “the rise of female entrepreneurs of the highest level, who lament inequalities facing women today and have made it their public purpose to push for women’s “success.””

She also mentions the regular gatherings and talks “about how women need to stand up to implicit (and explicit) bias in the workplace, resist the urge to fall into traditional roles, and better “embrace ambition.”” Why don’t we let women do so for themselves though, especially those who want “to fall into traditional roles,” and who know their situation and means better than those like Sheryl Sandberg.”'

Police Detective Arrested for Allegedly Making False Rape Claim

Mastodon · 29 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Los Angeles Police Department detective was arrested today on charges of threatening an ex-boyfriend and having him arrested by filing a false police report claiming she had been sexually assaulted.

Christine Wycoff, 44, was freed on $150,000 bond, and is scheduled to be arraigned Feb. 22 in downtown Los Angeles on charges of dissuading a witness and false imprisonment, according to the District Attorney's Office.

According to prosecutors, Wycoff met the alleged victim online in June 2014 and pair had a sexual relationship that lasted several months. When the relationship soured, Wycoff allegedly threatened the man, who reported it to the LAPD.

While the LAPD was conducting an internal investigation, Wycoff allegedly told the man that if he cooperated with the probe, she would accuse him of domestic violence, prosecutors said.'

NCFM Calls on Candidates to Stop Spewing Gender Pay Gap Myth

Mastodon · 29 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'The National Coalition For Men (NCFM) calls on Hillary Clinton, Bernie Sanders, and all other candidates to be honest about the gender "pay gap." Claiming that women "earn less" without explaining why is misleading and dishonest. The Department of Labor funded a study that showed the pay gap is mostly due to choices, not discrimination. http://commons.wikimannia.org/images/Gender_Wage_Gap_Final_Report_2009.pdf

Before women get married and have kids, they earn the same as men, and are also beneficiaries of quality of life choices that favor health and longevity as reflected by statistics on industrial deaths. After having kids, women make additional quality of life choices different from males, such as more flexible hours and less managerial positions. Women have more options than men when it comes to being primary parents. In fact, over half of female graduates of Stanford and Harvard left the workforce within 15 years of entry into the workforce. This is not an option for most men. http://edition.cnn.com/2005/BUSINESS/03/15/optout.revolution/

Rebranding Chauvinism as Misogyny Criminalises All Men

mistermisogynist · 29 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here . Excerpt:

'Former Australian Prime Minister Julia Gillard felt it was appropriate in 2011 to rebrand ‘Male Chauvinism’ as ‘Misogyny.’ The reasoning behind her decision was she did not think men took the term ‘male chauvinist’ seriously since its inception in the 60’s/70’s. She felt that the term had lost its bite.

The 1970’s man would have take offence to being called a male chauvinist pig. Through female overuse, the term has lost its punch to the point most men don’t even remember that Chauvinism was even a label, never mind a bad label.

Women are prone to demanding the redefinition of words because they feel that they are not inclusive enough to satisfy female emotional pride. Two recent examples:

A woman claims to have been ‘sort-of-raped’ because her partner ejaculated in her out of spite during anger sex. She states ‘Now that I’ve taken a small sip at the cup of rape, I understand just how terrible it is to have another human being rob me of my agency, and mark my body as their domain. It has taught me to look beyond troubled legal definitions of “rape” and instead focus on how victims feel.

Rape has a very specific legal definition. This is because it is a very very serious crime. Very specific words have very specific legal definition for a reason, people’s lives can be ruined if the words are misinterpreted. We can not change the meanings of words for the sake of emotional hysteria. Accusations of rape will put a man in jail. Sort-of-rape accusations will get thrown out of court. Prime example of this is UK dj Dr Fox who was taken to court for snog-rape of a 15 yr old girl who requested a snog, which is clearly not a crime. The case was thrown out.'

NPO: Nebraska Court Orders Disclosure of Judicial Training Materials

Matt · 30 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For many years, the social science on children's well-being as it relates to parenting arrangements post-divorce has been building up. By now it is clear that children do better with two parents involved in their lives. But judicial action on child custody and parenting time has changed little over the years, leaving millions of children with little or no contact with their fathers following divorce. Indeed, nationwide data indicate that about one-third of children of divorce have no contact with their father. In Nebraska, a 2013 survey of child custody cases revealed that children are granted just 17% of parenting time with their non-custodial parents, typically their father.

This extreme disconnect between what social science demonstrates is unquestionably in children's best interest and what judges order has led many to wonder what family court judges are being taught about the matter. Soon, the people of Nebraska will know the answer to that vital question.'

Rape and Retribution

Matt · 30 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Supreme Court Justice John Marshall Harlan II once observed that it is the task of the law to form and project as well as mirror and reflect—that is, to shape behavior while also expressing society's understanding of proper conduct. Over the last 40 years, American society has introduced dramatic changes in rape law, changes aimed at making criminal prosecutions and convictions easier. The reforms have succeeded in altering society's understanding of sexually motivated assault, but the revised law has not adequately mirrored and reflected society's views on the appropriate sanctions. The result has been a failure to increase in any significant way the number of prosecutions and convictions for rape, particularly alleged rape by an acquaintance of the accused. To summarize: reformers have captured the law and reshaped it to conform to their notions of right and wrong but failed to take account of the sentiments of the general public, which has sent the message that the reforms have gone too far.

This is not, however, the message of Jon Krakauer's Missoula, a highly readable if one-sided account of three sexual assaults in a university town. Krakauer clearly believes in the reform of rape law; his sympathies lie completely with the young female complainants and not at all with the young males who had sex with them. He wants these men expelled from college and imprisoned and is disturbed that only one of the three suffered that fate. What he does not adequately consider is why so few cases, including two of the three he chronicles, close without any criminal sanction. In fact, very few acquaintance rape cases get prosecuted. The explanation, I would suggest, is that the American public does not share Krakauer's view of the issues. Society does not consider date rape to be as morally reprehensible as classic forcible rape, and the public, which speaks through juries, will not support lengthy prison terms with all of their attendant consequences for young men who, despite otherwise spotless lives, engaged in conduct that, as the law now stands, merits some of the harshest sanctions available.'

Public funds used for single-sex fitness program - again

Minuteman · 31 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Ibrahim Mohamed discovered that Somali-American women in Shakopee had more challenges than most: they didn't know much about exercise and couldn't find a women-only environment to work out, which many Muslim women prefer.

...

Mohamed, president of the Shakopee Diversity Alliance, applied for and received the Neighborhood Health Connections grant from Allina Health and St. Francis Regional Medical Center. He used the $10,300, intended for health-related programming, to create the Somali Women's Exercise program, or Somali Jimisci.

...

The first group of 30 women graduated from the program last week. Participants tried Zumba, yoga and strength training classes at the River Valley YMCA in Prior Lake, and swimming lessons at the East Junior High pool in Shakopee. Both locations limited the classes to women only. The YMCA bought shades for the doors to keep spaces private, Mohamed said.

...

In Somalia, girls play sports like basketball at school and women walk outside for exercise, Mohamed said.

But in Minnesota, "It's difficult for a lot of us to do it," Sharif said. Weather is prohibitive, and gyms like the YMCA are coed, which makes many Somali women uncomfortable.'

Teenage girl 'made up' migrant rape claim that outraged Germany

Matt · 31 January 2016 · Archived copy · Original

More from the presume-male-guilty file here. Excerpt:

'A 13-year-old Russian-German girl has admitted making up a story about being kidnapped and raped by migrants in a case that triggered a furore in Germany and briefly embroiled Berlin police in a spat with the Kremlin, state prosecutors said.

The parents of the teenager, named only as Lisa, reported her missing on 11 January after she failed to appear at school in the Marzahn district of the capital. She reappeared 30 hours later with injuries on her face, and told her parents she had been attacked by men of Middle Eastern or north African appearance. News of the incident spread on social media, sparking outrage among Berlin's Russian-German community.

But when she was questioned by trained specialists three days later "she immediately admitted that the story of the rape was not true", said the spokesman for the state prosecutor, Martin Steltner.

He said the teenager had been scared of going home after the school had contacted her parents over an incident at school.'

Grad Files Title IX Investigation, Claims Wrongful Assault Accusation

Mastodon · 1 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An alumnus recently filed a Title IX investigation against Boston College through the Office for Civil Rights (OCR) after being found responsible for a sexual assault in 2012. The student served a three-semester suspension, but DNA evidence released the February following his suspension did not corroborate the student's guilt. The student maintains he was wrongly accused. As a result, the student filed a lawsuit against the University on Dec. 4, 2015, complaining that the school is in violation of Title IX, seeking damages and that BC be mandated to comply with Title IX.

Katie O'Dair, BC's Title IX coordinator, said that this lawsuit lands BC on the list of 161 institutions who are under review.

"This is the first time BC has been involved in an OCR investigation of a sexual violence complaint," O'Dair said in an email. "Boston College is fully cooperating with the OCR in its review."'

Judge: Coakley must turn over communications records

Mastodon · 1 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jackie Coakley gained infamy as the accuser at the center of a Rolling Stone story about rape at the University of Virginia that turned out to be fake, and now Coakley is under pressure from a Virginia court to reveal what she said to a reporter about the allegations.

This week, a judge overseeing a defamation case filed by the University of Virginia dean ordered Coakley to turn over communications relating to the alleged assault. The judge specifically asked Coakley for communication with Sabrina Rubin Erdely, the reporter who contacted Coakley and wrote the story.

Lawyers for Coakley tried to argue that the communications were privileged, Reason reported, but U.S. District Judge Glen Conrad rejected that argument.'

SAVE: In Maine Prosecutor Misconduct Case, Judge Orders Complaint to Move Forward

Matt · 1 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Gina Lauterio
Telephone: 301-801-0608
Email: info@prosecutorintegrity.org

In Maine Prosecutor Misconduct Case, Judge Orders Complaint to Move Forward

WASHINGTON / February 1, 2016 – In a case involving the first Maine prosecutor to be disciplined by the state bar disciplinary committee, United States District Court Judge John Woodcock largely denied the motion of the defendant, former Assistant District Attorney Mary Kellett, to dismiss, and ordered that the case could go forward.

In 2007, Vladek Filler was indicted on five counts of gross sexual assault and two counts of assault of his now former wife. After two trials and two appeals to the Maine Supreme Judicial Court, Filler was convicted of one assault charge. In 2015, Filler's attorney filed a motion to vacate and dismiss the misdemeanor conviction. The motion was granted on April 24, 2015 and the charge was dismissed: https://www.law.umich.edu/special/exoneration/Pages/casedetail.aspx?caseid=4694

The case resulted in an ethics complaint filed against ADA Mary Kellett. On December 5, 2012 a three-member panel found Kellett had violated seven ethical standards, including intentional concealment of exculpatory evidence, trying to mislead a jury, failing to employ reasonable skill and care, engaging in conduct prejudicial to the administration of justice, and engaging in conduct unworthy of an attorney: http://www.maine.gov/tools/whatsnew/index.php?topic=mebar_overseers_discipline&id=464815&v=article

Filler subsequently filed a 103-page civil action against Kellett and 17 other State Defendants, with Kellett then filing a motion to dismiss the Complaint. In last week's Order, with some exceptions, the Court denied Kellett's motions to dismiss the Amended Complaint.

The lawsuit was brought by Hallett, Zerillo & Whipple of Portland, Maine. The 78-page decision can be seen here: http://www.leagle.com/decision/In%20FDCO%2020160128E12/Filler%20v.%20Hancock%20County?utm_source=attorney_email&utm_medium=email&utm_term=ekst0Wdlit9UIBm7&utm_content=attid%3DjmVuxCeU2QJwAida&utm_campaign=attorney_email_M20160129&attn=TIMOTHY%20ZERILLO

More information about the ground-breaking case can be seen here: http://www.saveservices.org/camp/intolerable-injustice/

The Center for Prosecutor Integrity is a 501(c)(3) organization working to enhance prosecutorial ethics, curb over-criminalization, and end wrongful convictions.

India: Elderly couple seeks permission to commit suicide over false dowy accusation

Matt · 1 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dejected and traumatised after being caught in a protracted legal battle defending themselves against allegations of their daughter-in-law and her family, an elderly couple has sought mercy killing from the President.

The couple, retired central government employee DD Sharma and his wife Shakuntla who are both 68, is unable to meet their daily expenses, thanks to the court proceedings that have dragged on for a decade now.

"Please give me the permission for mercy killing or send me some poison so that I can free myself and my wife from the wrath of the draconian law of domestic violence," pleaded Sharma in a letter to the President and the Chief Justice of India (CJI). The couple wrote to the President on January 14 this year, but is yet to get a reply.

Sharma, a resident of Yamuna Vihar in Delhi, said he and his wife have been falsely implicated in the case. He said there has been no development in the case despite it dragging for 10 years. He further alleged that despite lodging a complaint with the National Commission for Women (NCW), nobody has come to their rescue.'

Boys Victims of Dating Violence, Too

Matt · 1 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Contrary to what many people may think, teenage boys commonly suffer dating violence -- including physical and emotional abuse, a new U.S. government study finds.

The study focused on teens considered to be at high risk for dating violence -- those who had suffered or witnessed violence at home or in their neighborhoods.

It turned out that boys were about as likely as girls to say they'd been victims of some form of dating violence. The pattern was also corroborated by girls' reports: They commonly admitted to being perpetrators.

"To the average person, this is probably surprising," said Monica Swahn, a professor of epidemiology at Georgia State University who has studied dating violence.'

Yahoo sued over employee rankings, alleged anti-male discrimination

Matt · 2 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A new lawsuit (PDF) filed against flailing tech giant Yahoo claims that company managers governing the "Media Org" were biased against men. It also claims that the company's Quarterly Performance Review (QPR) process favored female employees and that the company engaged in mass layoffs without proper warnings.

Gregory Anderson was editorial director of Yahoo's Autos, Homes, Shopping, Small Business, and Travel sections until he was terminated in 2014.

In his complaint, Anderson says that between 2012 and 2015, Yahoo reduced its work force by more than 30 percent to fewer than 11,000 employees. That constitutes a mass-layoff, which requires 60-day notice under state and federal law, he says.

In May 2014, Anderson was selected for a Knight-Wallace Journalism Fellowship at the University of Michigan. Two Yahoo executives signed off on his attending the fellowship, where he was "working on a documentary for Yahoo Autos about the toxic effects of leaded gasoline on children," according to the complaint.'

Shock probation granted for woman who assaulted elderly victims

Minuteman · 3 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Demesha Hicks is getting out of prison, six months into a 20-year sentence.

Hicks looked for senior citizens at grocery stores, followed them home, and robbed them, sometimes violently. This morning Judge Brian Edwards granted Hicks' request for shock probation after a hearing earlier in the week.

Attorneys say Hicks was a single mother, homeless and desperate when she committed the crimes, and this was her first arrest..

Family members of the victims voiced their opposition to shock probation during a hearing on Tuesday.'

Military Leaders Say Women Should Get Drafted

Mastodon · 3 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When answering a question from Senator Claire McCaskill in a Senate Committee on Armed Services hearing, Marine Corps Commandant General Robert Neller and Army Chief of Staff General Mark Milley did something no military leader has ever done before: They went on record saying that Congress should look into expanding the selective service to include women.

According to The Daily Caller, in the past, officials who have been asked this question declined to answer, claiming it would need further research. Now that combat roles have been opened to all genders, that research seems to have been concluded and conclusive. The mandate opening the roles to women was made last December and the hearing during which the question was asked took place to work out the best methods of implementation.'

‘She’s getting violent': Miami doctor suspended after attack on Uber driver

Mastodon · 3 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Florida doctor has been put on administrative leave after the emergence of a video that appears to show her hitting, kicking and screaming profanities at an Uber driver, a hospital spokeswoman confirmed to the Miami Herald.

Anjali Ramkissoon, a fourth-year neurology resident within the Jackson Health System, was removed from clinical duties following Sunday’s incident, and hospital officials have launched an internal investigation.

Police responded to the scene but did not file a report, Miami police spokeswoman Frederica Burden told the Miami Herald.

“We were called for a disturbance,” she told the newspaper. “There was no report written, and there will be no investigation.”

In the narrative that accompanied the video, the YouTube user wrote that the woman also allegedly became hostile with police officers at the scene, though authorities have not verified that claim.

“It was only when they put her in the police car that she started crying, apologizing and claiming that she would lose her medical license (she claimed to be a neurologist) if she got arrested,” according to the narrative. “The Uber driver was too good of a person and decided to take a cash settlement instead of pressing charges.”'

Canada: University Won't Recognize Men's Issues Group after Feminists Say it Makes Women Feel Unsafe

Mastodon · 3 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ryerson University has denied the final appeal to recognize a student group dedicated to addressing issues impacting men because feminists said its existence does not promote equality and would make women feel unsafe.

Ryerson's independent student newspaper the Eyeopener reports the Ryerson Students' Union (RSU) has "rejected the last appeal" to have the school sanction the Men's Issues Awareness Society (MIAS).

According to the group's president, Kevin Arriola, the point of the group is to raise "issues that have never been [talked] about or usually disregarded."

MIAS has received its major opposition from the school's Feminist Collective.

In November, Ryerson Feminist Collective organizer Arezoo Najibzadeh called the idea of the group "horrifying."

Najibzadeh said, "I think it's just horrifying. I don't see the benefit of having them on campus."

Alyson Rogers, another Feminist Collective organizer, said the group's connection with the Canadian Association for Equality has made women claim that "they don't feel safe on their campus and they don't want to come to their classes."'

Woman faces felony for falsely claiming rape

Mastodon · 3 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Taffy Wheeler, 31, arrested Tuesday after admitting to police she lied about being attacked and raped by four men on the beach Sunday morning

She told officers she actually had arranged to have an affair with a former co-worker that night

She said she lied to keep her husband from finding out, according to an incident report.'

College students given five-step checklist on how to kiss without committing sexual assault

Mastodon · 3 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The old adage “a kiss is just a kiss” may not stand up to scrutiny anymore.

On Thursday, the University of Southern California’s student government hosted a “Consent Carnival” that aimed to teach students how to properly hook-up under the “yes means yes” state law that requires so-called affirmative consent throughout any sexual encounter.

With that, a “Kissing Booth” at the event offered Hershey Kisses glued to little sheets of white paper that essentially explained how to properly kiss without committing sexual assault. The five-step checklist states on the front “what exactly does it mean to … ‘consent’ to a kiss?” ...'

Panels OKs polyparental offspring experimentation - on male fetuses only

Matt · 3 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It's fine -- provided you don't place female fetuses at risk, of course. Don't let the supposed "medical rationale" for it fool you. If the sexes were reversed in the so-called explanation, you can be sure the panel would not have approved. The closing article makes that clear to anyone paying attention. Excerpt:

'The 12-member panel, assembled by the National Academies of Sciences, Engineering and Medicine, released a 164-page reportWednesday outlining a plan for how scientists could ethically pursue the controversial research.

"The committee concludes that it is ethically permissible" to conduct such experiments, the report says, but then goes on to detail a long list of conditions that would have to be met first.

For example, scientists would have to perform extensive preliminary research in the laboratory and with animals to try to make sure it is safe. And then researchers should initially try to make only male babies, because they would be incapable of passing their unusual amalgamation of DNA on to future generations.
...
Nevertheless, the committee says the potential benefits make the work worth pursuing with careful oversight.

Moreover, the FDA could at some point even consider letting experiments proceed to try to create female babies if certain criteria are met, the report said, including the production of "clear evidence of safety and efficacy from male" experiments and signs that it would be publicly acceptable.'

Another pro athlete appears to have been falsely accused of rape

Matt · 3 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Giants defensive lineman Jay Bromley was accused of attempted rape and vehicular assault after engaging in sexual activity with a woman on Jan. 31. Police now believe he was falsely accused by a woman seeking money.

The woman claimed that after she told Bromley that she wanted to stop their sexual activity, he got angry and tried to rape her, then hit her with his car.

The two had met on Instagram and decided to meet up at a hotel. Bromley told police that he found the woman naked on the hotel bed after he came out of the bathroom. She performed oral sex on him, stopped, and demanded $2,000. Bromley said he didn't pay because he thought it was a date.'

The Yale Problem Begins in High School

Matt · 4 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'That night, after I gave a different talk to an adult audience, there was a reception at which I spoke with some of the parents. Several came up to me to tell me that their sons had told them about the day's events. The boys finally had a way to express and explain their feelings of discouragement. Their parents were angry to learn about how their sons were being treated and… there's no other word for it, bullied into submission by the girls.*

And Centerville High is not alone. Last summer I had a conversation with some boys who attend one of the nation's top prep schools, in New England. They reported the same thing: as white males, they are constantly on eggshells, afraid to speak up on any remotely controversial topic lest they be sent to the "equality police" (that was their term for the multicultural center). I probed to see if their fear extended beyond the classroom. I asked them what they would do if there was a new student at their school, from, say Yemen. Would they feel free to ask the student questions about his or her country? No, they said, it's too risky, a question could be perceived as offensive.

You might think that this is some sort of justice — white males have enjoyed positions of privilege for centuries, and now they are getting a taste of their own medicine. But these are children. And remember that most students who are in a victim group for one topic are in the "oppressor" group for another. So everyone is on eggshells sometimes; all students at Centerville High learn to engage with books, ideas, and people using the twin habits of defensive self-censorship and vindictive protectiveness.'

NFL Commissioner to require teams to interview women for executive jobs

Mastodon · 5 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell will implement a "Rooney Rule" requiring that women be interviewed for executive positions with teams around the league and in his own office, too.

Goodell made the announcement Thursday in his opening remarks at the first NFL Women's Summit, part of Super Bowl 50.

"We believe in diversity," Goodell said. "We believe we're better as an organization when we have good people at the table. We have great people at the table. We're also seeing it on the field. ...'

Reps introduce bill requiring women to register for draft

Mastodon · 5 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two Republican lawmakers introduced a bill Thursday requiring women to register for the draft – in a move meant to take the decision out of the hands of the military so it can be debated in Congress.

Reps. Duncan Hunter of California and Ryan Zinke of Montana said their joint legislation is aimed at provoking a fuller discussion of the Pentagon's decision to open all combat jobs to women. Top generals for the Army and Marines said earlier this week that women should be required to register for the draft now that combat jobs are being opened to them.

"If this administration wants to send 18, 20-year-old women into combat, to serve and fight on the front lines, then the American people deserve to have this discussion through their elected representatives," Hunter said in a statement.'

Politicians call for reform of sexual assault guidelines

Mastodon · 5 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Due to the lack a lack of due process rights, politicians and professors are calling for reform of the handling of sexual assault cases on college campuses, but some say the guidelines may not be the problem.

Some politicians like Marco Rubio have made public their belief that due process rights are not being upheld, some going as far as to say that the campuses are siding with the victim before the investigation is completed or even started in one reported case.

Rubio issued a statement about his belief that false accusations can “destroy lives."

“Certainly we should make additional efforts to protect due process on campus,” Rubio said.
Others like Bernie Sanders had strong statements on sexual assault being handled by campuses as well, as he called for reform on Jan. 11.

“Rape is a terrible crime, and the way it’s handled on campuses is insulting,” Sanders said.'

Asian American women are closing the gap with white men, but that’s not the point

Mastodon · 5 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Monday, an economist at the right-leaning American Enterprise Institute had something snarky to say about a new government report on the gap between men's and women's earnings.

Economist Mark Perry wrote that the median Asian American woman earns only about 3 percent less than the median American man, according to the latest Bureau of Labor Statistics data. The median Asian American woman also earns significantly more than the median black or Hispanic man in the United

"Do those pay disparities reflect gender discrimination against men? Or minority (Asian) privilege?” Perry quipped.

Perry was making a point about how statistics on the gender pay gap tend to be deployed in misleading ways. Full-time working women may earn 79 cents on the dollar compared to men, according to the Census, but that figure doesn’t take into account the gender differences in education and career choices, among other things.'

Exclusive New Docs Throw Doubt on Julian Assange Rape Charges in Stockholm

Matt · 5 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Ms. Ardin learned Mr. Assange had also slept with Ms. Wilen, and when he failed the golden rule of elemental post-coital communications, they locked arms and went to the police—not to charge him with rape, but to see if he could be compelled to take an HIV test, on a Saturday, in Stockholm.

The report contains several testimonies—Ms. Ardin, Ms. Wilen, two Swedish male journalists, Ms. Wilen's ex boyfriend, brother, and several friends and colleagues of the two women. Finally, Mr. Assange himself. It closes with grainy photographs of a broken condom, as well as a condom tip—and the forensic analysis of experts from "Staten's Kriminaltekniska Laboratorium" (The State's Criminal Technological Laboratory)—offering forensic results about the exact conditions along the broken edge of the condom. (Ruled not to have been broken by an "instrument," but to have failed by natural means.)

After the incidents for which he is wanted for questioning took place, in mid August, 2010, Mr. Assange remained in Sweden for five weeks, until September 27, during which time Swedish prosecutors once dropped the case altogether, only to re-open it days later. Prosecutor Marianne Ny was quoted in the Swedish newspaper Dagens Nyheter as having said: "Even if I'm wrong I won't give up."
...
Mr. Assange's first encounter was with Anna Ardin—an ardent feminist, Social Democrat, Christian, animal rights activist, pro-lifer, and scholar on Latin America. Ms. Ardin described herself online as somebody who, somewhat alarmingly, "burns for justice, solidarity, and equality," and she once wrote a paper on "The 7 Steps To Revenge," against men who "dump you."
...
Asked to elaborate, he goes on to give a halting, nervous monologue about what he's talking about:

`"I got…well, once again, like I said, I got strange vibes. It happens now and then especially in academic circles, that you run into…actually I don't know quite how to express this…but it happens that you run into young women who have taken like a…they've fulfilled a journey in the name of feminism, and become chauvinists, like the worst kind of chauvinism among men, but on the feminist spectrum. These young women speak of men as sexual tools, and they say they're not necessary for intellectual discussions…and that it's only women who need one another. Maybe it's more a matter of my generation, maybe you have never run into this. But I've encountered it often in academic circles. And I got this feeling among Anna's friends."' ...`'

Tech drops $47M building request after rebukes on students' due process

Matt · 5 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A week after state lawmakers reprimanded Georgia Tech for its due-process practices in punishing students accused of sexual assault and other violations, the university withdrew its request for a $47.4 million library complex renovation.

The Tech money, which was slated for the first phase of renovation of the Crosland Tower and Price Gilbert Library, known as Library East and Library West, was the largest construction project the state's university system requested in its budget proposal to lawmakers.

...

Ehrhart, R-Powder Springs, said he did not encourage Tech to withdraw its building request, but felt the withdrawal was a clear consequence of last week's hearing before lawmakers.

The Tech funding withdrawal came as state lawmakers questioned University System officials on their handling of sexual assault on Georgia's college campuses.'

Young Women in NH ‘Offended’ Clinton Using Gender as Political Tool

Mastodon · 6 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Young women in New Hampshire were offended by the way Hillary Clinton uses her gender to garner support, an MSNBC survey revealed Friday.

When MSNBC anchor Tamron Hall asked young female voters about Hillary Clinton’s claim on Wednesday that she is not an establishment candidate because she is a woman, they responded negatively.

One of the respondents said that she did not like how Clinton assumed that her feminism was identical to the feminism of all women.

“I also am a woman. I also face discrimination as being a woman. Her feminism does not represent my feminism, and I think it’s really important to differentiate that,” one young woman said. Her complaint is a common one among young women and reveals a generational divide within the Democratic Party.'

Hillary used to support registering women for the draft, now she's not sure

Mastodon · 6 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton, the ultimate girl-power activist, once backed registering women for the draft — but now she won't take a position on the issue.

At a town hall forum Wednesday night in New Hampshire, Clinton punted on a question from CNN host Anderson Cooper on whether she supports a recommendation this week from leaders of the Army and Marine Corps that women should register like men.

"I have to think about whether I think it's necessary to go as far as our military officers are recommending," Clinton responded.

"You know, from my perspective, the all-volunteer military has worked, and we should not do anything that undermines it because it has provided a solid core of people who are willing to serve our country. The idea of having everybody register concerns me a little bit, unless we have a better idea of where that's going to come out."'

Domestic violence allegations leave a tangled web

Mastodon · 6 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gordon Smith was at the lowest point of his life three years ago. He was divorced, had multiple restraining orders — called an Order of Protection From Abuse in Delaware — against him and one felony and seven misdemeanor charges pending.

Then, his ex-wife leveled another accusation of domestic violence. This time, the Dover Police Department found that his court-ordered GPS ankle monitor put him miles away from his ex-wife at the time she said the violence occurred, he said.

After an investigation, the police swiftly cleared him of all eight charges and instead charged his ex-wife with three counts of falsely reporting an incident and one count of providing a false statement.
...
Smith is part of a small but vocal group of men and women who say Orders of Protection From Abuse are being misused to unfairly sway divorce and child custody cases in Delaware Family Court, and give credibility to unsubstantiated or false allegations.

It's part of a national fathers' rights movement to reform child custody and spousal support laws and policies that are perceived as giving mothers an upper hand in Family Court. Their efforts have raised concerns from domestic violence advocates, who caution against letting rare stories of false allegations overshadow the more common struggle of women trying to escape violent relationships.'

UK: County struggles with DV vs. men

Mastodon · 6 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Authorities in an English county are desperately trying to tackle the country's highest rate of domestic violence against men.

Nationally, the number of women killed through domestic violence is more than double that of men.

But in Cornwall, men made up four out of the five most recent victims.

Authorities there said they have been working to tackle the issue after a review said there could be a "chink in the chain of support for males".

Nationwide, the majority of fatal domestic abuse cases are killings by current or former partners, including heterosexual and homosexual couples.

But the figures also include family members such as siblings and parents - in accordance with the government's definition of domestic abuse.

One of the few male-only refuges nationally was introduced in Cornwall just over a year ago, in a secret location.'

UK: Men who report domestic violence ‘at risk of being arrested themselves’

Mastodon · 6 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Male victims of domestic abuse often avoid reporting attacks because they fear being arrested themselves.

More than 700,000 men are thought to experience violence from a partner every year – but new research has shown that they risk counter-accusations.

Dr Jessica McCarrick, a senior lecturer in Counselling Psychology at Teeside University, carried out a study with male victims of abuse. Men are often treated with suspicion by the criminal justice system, she told the Telegraph.

‘To find the courage to speak out, only to be accused of violence themselves, is incredibly disheartening and ultimately prevents countless men from reporting intimate partner violence,’ she said.'

Court kills bid to reverse decision that made college co-ed

Mastodon · 6 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Saying they lack legal standing to contest the change, a Commonwealth Court panel Thursday dismissed a bid by four alumnae of Wilson College to reverse the decision that made the private school co-ed.

The state court ruling comes 2 1/2 years after the first male residential students started living and learning at the Franklin County school which had been a women-only institution for 144 years.

Paula Tishok, Gretchen Van Ness, Kendal L. Hopkins and Melissa Behm had appealed to Commonwealth Court to overturn approval the state Department of Education gave to allow the admission of men.

Theirs were not the only voices raised in protest after trustees of the Chambersburg school, citing declining enrollment and debt load, voted in January 2013 to begin accepting male students. The first three men moved into the dorms in August of that year.'

Gloria Steinem throws herself into the dustbin of history

Matt · 7 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

I knew eventually the insufferable old hag would shoot herself in the foot and with this, she's succeeded. She'll never live it down (like she hasn't the many other stupid things she's said) but this one limes the coconut with her own ideological great-grand-daughters. Hope they etch it on her gravestone as her epitaph, right next to the other ridiculous things she's blathered, so posterity can march past it, take a gander, and ask "Who was this nutcase and why did anyone ever put up with her in the first place?". Excerpt:

'Feminist icon Gloria Steinem has drawn the wrath of the Twitterverse for suggesting that young women supporting Bernie Sanders' presidential campaign are doing so to gain the attention of men.

"When you're young, you're thinking, 'Where are the boys? The boys are with Bernie,'" Steinem told Bill Maher Friday night on the comic's HBO show "Real Time."

Maher leapt right on her comment. "Now if I said that, 'Yeah, they're for Bernie because that's where the boys are,' you'd slap me," he said.
...
"Women are more for [Clinton] than men are," Steinem said. But when asked why millennials seem to support Sanders more, Steinem explained, "Women get more radical as we get older…. I don't mean to overgeneralize, I'm sure that you got more radical, but men tend to get more conservative because they gain power as they age and women get more radical because they lose power as they age."
...
Plenty of people online seemed willing to slap Steinem for implying that millennial women are fickle (or hormonal) for choosing to support Sanders instead of Clinton.'

More silliness, now from Madeleine Albright

Matt · 7 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Egad, it's a pandemic! Well, maybe it's not that bad, but the stench of feminist desperation is wafting madly from the Pro-Hildebeast crowd. Now, it's coming from a source I wasn't expecting (and someone who really ought to know better). Here goes:

'Democratic women are issuing every threat imaginable in their effort to save Hillary Clinton's candidacy in New Hampshire.

During an appearance with the candidate Saturday afternoon, former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright warned women of dire consequences if they don't support her preferred candidate.

Attempting to sway young women to support Hillary, Albright said, "We can tell our story about how we climbed the ladder and a lot of you younger women don't think you have to — it's been done — it's not done and you have to help. Hillary Clinton will always be there for you.

"And just remember: there's a special place in hell for women who don't help each other," she said.

Hillary burst out laughing as the audience cheered.

Albright didn't say what she thought of women who don't support another female candidate, Carly Fiorina. Probably because in progressive eyes, she's not really a woman.'

"Wanted in China: More Male Teachers, to Make Boys Men"

Matt · 7 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Seriously, puke. "Wanted: Teachers to teach girls that protecting/providing for men is womanly". No time soon. Excerpt:

'Lin Wei, 27, one of a handful of male sixth-grade teachers at a primary school here, has made a habit of telling stories about warlords who threw witches into rivers and soldiers who outsmarted Japanese troops. “Men have special duties,” he said. “They have to be brave, protect women and take responsibility for wrongdoing.”

Worried that a shortage of male teachers has produced a generation of timid, self-centered and effeminate boys, Chinese educators are working to reinforce traditional gender roles and values in the classroom.

In Zhengzhou, a city on the Yellow River, schools have asked boys to sign pledges to act like “real men.” In Shanghai, principals are trying boys-only classes with courses like martial arts, computer repair and physics. In Hangzhou, in eastern China, educators have started a summer camp called West Point Boys, complete with taekwondo classes and the motto, “We bring out the men in boys.”

Education officials across China are aggressively recruiting male teachers, as the Chinese news media warns of a need to “salvage masculinity in schools.” The call for more male-oriented education has prompted a broader debate about gender equality and social identity at a time when the country’s leaders are seeking to make the labor market more meritocratic.'

Lawsuits against uni allege bias against males in sex assault cases

Mastodon · 8 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two lawsuits have been filed against the University of Texas by plaintiff's who say they were expelled from the university after being accused in sexual assault investigations. They claim the university's Title IX investigators showed bias against male students by recommending their expulsion without giving them the proper due process.

A passage in the lawsuit says the university has sought publicity and prestige by portraying itself as a national leader in the effort to curb on-campus sexual assault, "The university has a vested interest in expelling as many male students for sexual assault as it can in order to maintain its appearance as a leader in this area."

Brian Roark is the attorney representing the male students in both lawsuits. In 2015, Roark successfully represented former Texas Longhorn football player Kendall Sanders in a sexual assault trial. During that trial, Roark highlighted shortcomings in the University of Texas Police Department investigation and a jury acquitted Sanders after four hours of deliberations. After the verdict, the Travis County District Attorney's Office dropped the case against co-defendant and Longhorn teammate Montrel Meander.'

Is It Too Late For Madeline And Gloria To Register For The Draft?

Matt · 8 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At Saturday's Republican debate, the presidential contenders found rare agreement among themselves: women should register for the draft. But draft registration ends at age 45. That rules out Hillary Clinton supporters Madeline Albright (79) and Gloria Steinem (82).

"We can tell our story of how we climbed the ladder, and a lot of you young women think it's done. It's not done," opined Madeline Albright, campaigning for Hillary in New Hampshire. "There's a special place in hell for women who don't help each other." Madeline (Hillary, Bernie: first names, please) suffered great discrimination as a woman, at least as she tells it, and things remain awful.

Too bad that as Bill Clinton's United Nations Ambassador and then Secretary of State (Hillary was the third woman to hold the post), Madeline did not confront Arab countries on their treatment of women. These same nations would later fund Bill and Hillary Clinton and the Clinton Foundation. Why rock the boat? Or the camel?'

SAVE: On the Heels of Judicial Reversal, Law Professors Assail Affirmative Consent

Matt · 8 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Following a landmark legal decision last summer, law professors across the country are criticizing affirmative consent policies as ineffective, unfair to defendants, and harmful to women. SAVE calls on lawmakers to focus on proven rape control strategies such as enhancing campus security measures, reducing alcohol-related assaults, and involving criminal justice authorities.

On August 4, 2015, judge Carol McCoy overturned a decision of the University of Tennessee at Chattanooga to expel a student on allegations of sexual assault. McCoy ruled the university's affirmative consent standard "improperly shifted the burden of proof" because the "ability of an accused to prove the complaining party's consent strains credulity and is illusory."

Following the judicial reversal, legal experts began to express a range of concerns with the standard, including the policy's unworkability, lack of effectiveness, curtailment of due process rights, wrongful convictions, constitutional problems, and broader social effects.'

This is the end of marriage, capitalism and God

Matt · 9 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

This is more tangentially related to MR issues, as it discusses the popularity of marriage among the Millenials. It speculates only briefly on why such things as marriage are no longer popular and then only relative to the status of women, ignoring men completely. So while not perhaps directly applicable to the MRM, it gives people involved with it some food for thought. Excerpt:

'The next big thing isn't a clever gadget or miracle drug—it's a way of life: not a breakthrough invention but a social innovation. And it's not so much a beginning as it as a series of endings.

Rising numbers of young people are now deciding to do everything their parents didn't. They're eschewing cultural and economic convention to challenge what we take to be civil society. They aren't marrying. They've become the refuseniks of our competitive corporate culture. And many of them have opted out of organized religion.
...
According to the New York Times, over half of all American women under 30 who give birth are unmarried. When adjusted for levels of education and economics, the numbers skew dramatically higher.

Of course there are an array of possible causes for this trend, including everything from the relative economic independence of educated women to a shift away from the cultural stigma of unwed parentage to even a latent reaction to the divorce of their own parents. This change brings a complex array of challenges. For example, marriage is a foundational element of our legal system connected to property, beneficiary and custodial rights and obligations. Some believe that the decline of matrimony has led to the increase of children living under the poverty level. These skeptics say that if we pull the thread of marriage from the fabric of our society, it is unclear what will unravel or remain intact. While societal norms may have changed, adjusting our legal system to protect unwed mothers and their children may still be far behind.'

Twitter Unveils New ‘Trust and Safety Council’ Featuring Feminist Frequency

Mastodon · 9 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Twitter has announced a new “Trust and Safety council” for the service comprised of fifty organisations, including controversial web series Feminist Frequency, with an overall goal purportedly to maintain an environment where people “feel safe expressing themselves” on the platform.

“To ensure people can continue to express themselves freely and safely on Twitter, we must provide more tools and policies,” states Twitter’s Head of “Global Policy Outreach” Patricia Cartes in an official blog post.'

U.S. State Dept.: "The Role of Women in Overcoming Egypt's Economic and Security Challenges in the 21st Century"

Minuteman · 10 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Remarks
Sarah Sewall
Under Secretary for Civilian Security, Democracy, and Human Rights
American University of Cairo
Cairo, Egypt
...
It was on that trip that I began to understand why Egyptians call their country Om al dunya – “mother of the world.” It is not simply because their country is such an important religious, cultural, and political force across the globe, but also because that power was, in interesting ways, defined by women.

Women ruled over many of the greatest civilizations – not only in Egypt but all of human history – from Nerfertiti and Cleopatra to the powerful queens of the Fatimid and Mameluke kingdoms. Here in Egypt, women struggled and marched against colonialism, sexism, and discrimination – winning the right to vote, go to school, and fully participate in public life. And here in Cairo in recent years, Egyptian women have taken to the streets alongside men to call for a new future for their country. Over the years, their leadership has inspired women across the region and shaped the course of history.

Their centrality to Egypt parallels the early role of women in Islam – the faith of most Egyptians. As many of you know well, the very first Muslim was a woman – the Prophet’s wife Khadija – and she was also a successful and independent businesswoman in her own right. And while Europe languished in the Dark Ages, Islam shone as a light to women. At that time, Islam offered women more rights and benefits than they could find in other contexts.

During my time here this week, I have met with inspirational women leaders in different facets of society. So I fully appreciate that independent and empowered women are found in both Egyptian and Islamic history, even as the majority of women here and across the globe continue to struggle for equality.

Women thrive when they enjoy freedom and opportunity, and of course this is precisely what institutions like AUC represent. In a few short years, AUC will celebrate its 100th anniversary. That achievement is also a testament to the enduring nature of ties between Americans and Egyptians.
...
But for women to fully contribute to a more prosperous and secure society – they need to feel secure in their day-to-day lives. According to many surveys, over 90 percent of Egyptian women have suffered from sexual harassment or sexual violence. Nine out of ten Egyptian women. Many of these crimes took place not in dark alleys, but in public streets, maydans, and prisons.

The U.S. continues to grapple with this issue as well, in our universities, within our military, and within homes. President Obama has made stopping sexual assault a top priority of our government. So many societies have work to do to ensure safety and freedom for women.'

There’s a Special Place in Hell for Feminism

Mastodon · 11 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'And by Hell, I mean the ideology ash heap, which might as well be a lake of fire and brimstone for all of its recovery potential. Once dead, ideologies stay dead; Eugenics, for instance. (I wish we could kill Marxism already.)

Forget for a moment the blatant arm-twisting of Madeleine Albright at a recent Hillary Clinton campaign stop where she threatened — literally t-h-r-e-a-t-e-n-e-d — young women who dare to think independently.'

How I Became a Feminist Victim

Mastodon · 11 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a female student in a nightclub, I expected to get some unwanted attention. What I didn't expect was for feminism to turn me into someone so terrified of unwanted attention I stopped going out.

In the past, someone groping me would only annoy me for a minute – that would be the extent of it. If they were being really pushy, I'd go to my male friends and stay with them, because they'd enjoy making it clear that the guy's attentions were unwelcome. And yes, other men were more likely to listen to my tall, imposing male friends than me – a shy, skinny 18-year-old. You could call it male privilege, I'd call it the benefit of self-confidence.

And that was all fine. No harm, no foul. That was, until I discovered the (now-infamous) Oxford feminist group Cuntry Living. It was a big thing in Oxford; everyone was talking about it and, curious, I joined. I read the posts, I contributed and I engaged in discussion about everything from rape culture to misogyny in our curriculum. I learned a lot, and, slowly, I transitioned from a nervous, desperate-to-please 'gender egalitarian' to a proud, full-blown feminist.

Along with all of this, my view of women changed. I stopped thinking about empowerment and started to see women as vulnerable, mistreated victims. I came to see women as physically fragile, delicate, butterfly-like creatures struggling in the cruel net of patriarchy. I began to see male entitlement everywhere.'

Woman unhappy with haircut tried to shoot stylist

Matt · 11 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. "Having a bad day"? Is he serious? Amazing what nymhotropism does to warp thinking. Excerpt:

'A woman unhappy with her haircut tried to open fire on the stylist who cut her hair, but he escaped unharmed after her weapon jammed, police said.

According to San Diego police, 29-year-old Adrian Blanche Swain received a haircut Wednesday morning at a hair salon in the 3900 block of 30th Street in North Park.

However, police said Swain returned to the business a few hours later to complain about the end result.

Swain tried to open fire at the stylist with a pistol -- pulling the trigger three times -- but police said the "gun had bullets but malfunctioned."

...

“She's probably just having a bad day. It was more mental with her. But the haircut, it’s a very stylish haircut though,” Cooper said.

Swain was expected to be booked on suspicion of attempted murder.'

Israel: Men legally harassed by women

Matt · 11 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description: "Israel, women fought long and hard for equal rights and have achieved success, they work, climb the career ladder and serve in the army, just like men. They also have strict laws protecting them from domestic violence and abuse. Many Israeli men though worry that the pendulum has swung too far and that what started as equality, is rapidly turning into all out repression.

The main complaint from Israeli men is the fear that too many women are using accusations of sexual harassment and even attempted rape as an instrument of manipulation and intimidation..."

Camille Paglia on Hillary Clinton, Gloria Steinem

Mastodon · 11 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

With Bernie Sanders' thrilling, runaway victory over Hillary Clinton in the New Hampshire primary, the old-guard feminist establishment in the U.S. has been dealt a crushing blow.

Despite emergency efforts by Gloria Steinem, the crafty dowager empress of feminism, to push a faltering Hillary over the finish line, Sanders overwhelmingly won women's votes in every category except senior citizens. Last week, when she told TV host Bill Maher that young women supporting the Sanders campaign are just in it to meet boys, Steinem managed not only to insult the intelligence and idealism of the young but to vaporize every lesbian Sanders fan into a spectral non-person.

Steinem's polished humanitarian mask had slipped, revealing the mummified fascist within. I'm sure that my delight was shared by other dissident feminists everywhere. Never before has the general public, here or abroad, more clearly seen the arrogance and amoral manipulativeness of the power elite who hijacked and stunted second-wave feminism.'

Woman made up sexual assault tale at nightclub, police say

mens_issues · 11 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Collinsville police charged a woman with obstruction of justice and disorderly conduct Wednesday for allegedly making up a violent sexual assault last week.

Police say Imperial resident Lisa Soest, 21, gave them “false information” when she claimed a man she did not know tried to kiss her, pulled her into a car, punched her and then sexually assaulted her outside the Wild Country night club last Thursday.

Collinsville Police Maj. Brett Boerm said police thought it was “suspicious” that such a violent assault would happen in a well-lit parking lot on a busy night, at 12:40 a.m., as was reported. The night Soest claimed she was assaulted, the Wild Country club was holding a weekly event where college students get in for free.

Boerm also said that sexual assaults involving strangers, like this one, are so uncommon in Collinsville that police were dubious.'

Title IX Investigations Are a Total Mess

Mastodon · 12 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let's get this out of the way early: anyone with a functional brain is in favor of equal treatment under the law and everyone is against rape. Just like everyone is against murder and assault and any other crime that injures another human being.

Now that this is out of the way, let's ask a big question that never gets asked: why are universities responsible for investigating rape accusations? The answer is because they're required to conduct investigations under the auspices of Title IX. It's a well intentioned application of federal law -- premised on the idea that sexual assault on campus is a problem that needs to be treated seriously -- but it creates as many, if not more, problems than it actually remedies. Because it sets up two different simultaneous investigations with different standards of proof and different consequences while also creating two divergent potential outcomes.
...
If a serious crime happens on campus just about everyone would say that it's the job of local police to investigate that crime. That's because we understand that conducting criminal investigations is time consuming, difficult, and freighted with the obligations to implement that investigation consistent with applicable state and federal law. No college or university has an adequate investigatory staff to determine who committed a murder and assess guilt or innocence. Moreover, the very idea of a college conducting a hearing based on whether a murder happened and applying its own standard of proof and rules of evidence and confrontation rules in that case is laughable.

So why is Title IX being applied to require colleges to conduct investigations into sexual assault?'

Australia: Minister accuses senator of sexist hypocrisy over 'mansplaining' criticism

Mastodon · 12 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Federal Government Minister accused of "mansplaining" in a Senate committee hearing has let rip, labelling it sexist hypocrisy from a Labor Senator.

Mansplaining — the 2014 Macquarie Dictionary word of the year — is a verb describing a man explaining something to a woman in a patronising way.

"I love the mansplaining," ACT Labor Senator Katy Gallagher told Communications Minister Mitch Fifield after a lengthy answer about Liberal party room processes.

"What's 'mansplaining', Senator?" Senator Fifield asked.

"It's the slightly patronising and condescending way that you're responding to my questions," Senator Gallagher replied.

This triggered a four-and-a-half minute exchange between the Liberal and Labor frontbenchers about "mansplaining", "womansplaining", sexism and hypocrisy.

"I would suggest, Senator, if you're putting the word 'man' in front of some description of what I'm doing, you're doing that — which I'm sure you're very much against — is making a sexist implication about how I'm conducing my role as a man. Is that what you're saying, Senator?" Senator Fifield asked.'

Feds to Spend $10 Million for ‘Gender Equity’ in Animal Testing

Mastodon · 12 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The National Institutes of Health is earmarking $10 million to ensure there is “gender equity” issue when using mice for medical research. Seriously.

There is a “gender bias” in medical testing, apparently.
...
The claim is that by conducting testing only on male rodents, the results potentially didn’t hold for female humans.'

Poll: Most Men Want Women To Sign Up For The Draft, Most Women Do Not

Mastodon · 12 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new Rasmussen Reports poll indicates 52 percent of women don't believe they should be subjected to the draft, but 61 percent of male voters are definitely interested in seeing women sign up for Selective Service.

Rasmussen found 49 percent of likely voters in the U.S. believe women should have to sign up for Selective Service, though 44 percent disagree.

As expected, when polling numbers are broken down by gender, significant differences emerge. For starters, 61 percent of male voters think women should have to sign up for the draft, but only 38 percent of female voters think the same, and 52 percent oppose the measure outright.'

Want Viagra? Get A Note From Your Wife, Kentucky Lawmaker Says

Mastodon · 13 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Call it the "What's good for the goose is good for the gander" bill.

A female Kentucky state legislator has introduced a bill that would require men who want to use erectile dysfunction drugs like Cialis, Viagra or Levitra to get a note from their wife first. Then they'd have to make two visits to a doctor and promise to only take the pills before sex with a spouse.

Kentucky Rep. Mary Lou Marzian (D) introduced the bill on Thursday as a way to protect men's health and ensure they are informed about a drug with potentially dangerous side effects, according to the Louisville Courier-Journal.

"I want to protect these men from themselves," said Marzian, a retired nurse.

Marzian told The Huffington Post that her proposed law is really a tongue-in-cheek way of pointing out how anti-abortion advocates want to involve the government in people's bedrooms. She said her legislation shows government needn't be involved in personal choices, "whether it be about abortion, erectile dysfunction or blood transfusions for Jehovah's Witnesses."'

A How-To Guide On Dealing With A 'Gunsplainer'

Mastodon · 13 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new campaign explaining the ways lenient gun laws impact women is taking on "gunsplainers," who are like mansplainers, but worse.

Everytown for Gun Safety, a movement dedicated to ending gun violence, has teamed up with Cosmopolitan for Singled Out, a campaign aimed at educating and empowering unmarried women about the dangers of guns. As part of the campaign, they have released a video featuring Gary, a "gunsplainer," who hits on a woman named Jessica, who is in the service, at a bar.

Gary's game falls short after calling her names like "schnookums" and "lady soldier" and insisting hammers are the weapons to really worry about. His "gunsplainer" efforts only make it worse.

"These guns are the only things standing between us and tyranny," he says after opening his jacket to reveal he's currently carrying multiple guns in the bar.'

Hillary’s New Hire Has Interesting Thoughts On Rape

Mastodon · 13 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Presidential candidate former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton’s campaign has expanded its team by bringing on a writer whose has previously written that those accused of sexual assault should automatically be treated as guilty, regardless of the actual evidence brought against them.

Late Thursday, news emerged Clinton’s presidential campaign hired writer and political analyst Zerlina Maxwell. Maxwell is intended to help the campaign with its digital outreach efforts on issues like feminism and gender equality.

But as was pointed out first by Jonah Goldberg of National Review, Maxwell has previously written sexual assault allegations should always be believed, regardless of the evidence, while downplaying any harm that may occur from false accusations.'

Actress' Diversity Solution: ‘Kill’ All the Old White Men

Mastodon · 14 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two-time Oscar-winning actress Emma Thompson weighed in on the #OscarsSoWhite controversy this week, and suggested the industry’s diversity issues could be remedied by “killing off” the Academy’s many older, white members.

...

In January, the controversy was renewed after the Academy announced its acting nominations included no people of color for a second straight year.

“It’s no change there. It’s not as if it’s ever been awash with people of color. Let’s face it, the Oscar membership is mainly old, white men,” Thompson noted of the issue of diversity within the Academy’s membership.

...

The membership changes will eventually remove voting privileges from many older, white Academy members; however, Thompson feels the process of purging the older white people could be expedited.

“That’s the fact of it. Either you wait for them all to die, or kill them off slowly. There’s so many options, aren’t there?” she said.'

The feminist case for naming names in sexual assault cases

Mastodon · 14 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Right now we wait in the wake of a report by the Home Affairs Select Committee, which recommended that suspects in sexual offence cases be given the same right to anonymity as complainants, unless or until they are charged. Highlighting the damageto individuals named in the media in such cases, the HASC report urged the legal system to ‘stop shaming suspects’. Yet despite agreeing with some of their findings, I think the Home Office recommendation is wrong. Those accused of sex crimes should not be granted anonymity, but neither should those accusing them.

There are strong arguments for preserving the anonymity of those accused of sex crimes. Publicly naming the accused in such cases not only risks defaming them, as their name and image is widely shared in the media, but more significantly impedes the presumption of innocence that should be rightly afforded everyone before trial.

We saw this in the case of 21-year-old Ben Sullivan. He was president of the Oxford Union when he was accused of rape and attempted rape; after his arrest, calls were made for speakers to boycott the union and a petition posted for his resignation. Subsequently he was proved innocent.'

SAVE: Title IX Administrator Group Wants to Abolish Presumption of Innocence

Matt · 15 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Title IX is the law that bans sex discrimination in schools. The Department of Education Office for Civil Rights requires all colleges to have a Title IX coordinator to establish policies and investigate complaints. Well and good.

But in recent years, the Office for Civil Rights has published a series of controversial Dear Colleague Letters that have expanded the definition of sexual harassment to include bawdy speech, unwanted flirting, off-color jokes, and the like. Expanded definitions translate in more complaints and eventually larger budgets for Title IX offices.

This has given rise to a shadow campus-based adjudication system that lacks transparency, accountability, or due process protections for the accused. This raises the specter of a Kangaroo Court, which the dictionary defines as a “mock court in which the principles of law and justice are disregarded or perverted.”'

Feminist says 'brutal' love machines will turn men into misogynist monsters

Mastodon · 16 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The arrival of sex robots will soon see men spurning real life partners and snuggling up to silicon instead.

But feminists fear the arrival of bonk bots could spark an explosion of sexism which will see men adopt dark age attitudes to real life ladies.

An activist from The Campaign Against Sex Robots has issued an urgent warning about the "brutal dehumanisation of women" which could take place when men begin to have sex with artificial love machines.

Researcher Lydia Kaye said sex robots will encourage men to think women are nothing more than objects designed exclusively for masculine sexual gratification.

"Sex robots will create another means through which women will be presented as objects to be used for sexual gratification and mistreatment," she wrote.'

State legislators announce proposal for new affirmative consent bill

Mastodon · 16 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two state legislators announced the proposal of a new affirmative consent bill at the University of Connecticut Women's Center Friday.

The bill, co-sponsored by state Sen. Mae Flexer, D-Killingly, and state Rep. Gregory Haddad, D-Mansfield, would require university disciplinary boards in Connecticut to determine if there was "unambiguous and voluntary agreement to engage in sexual activity" when trying sexual assault cases, according to a Feb. 12 press release. This would apply to both public and private institutions of higher learning.

Flexer said the new legislation is intended to build on the sexual assault awareness programs signed into law by Gov. Dannel Malloy in 2014 by standardizing colleges' definitions of consent.

"One of the really important things is the training around consent and talking with students when they initially come to campus, and during their time on campus, about what consent is and what it looks like," Flexer said. "A student who attends college in the state of Connecticut should have the same expectation of safety as a student who currently attends UConn."

Affirmative consent policies could also simplify the university court process by creating a "different measure" of consensual sex.'

The Gender Pay Gap Is Dead

Mastodon · 16 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The gender pay gap hit the headlines yet again last week. Government ministers announced plans for national league tables to show the difference in wages earned by male and female employees in any company with over 250 workers. Coverage of this latest attempt to crack down on the apparently blatant gender discrimination that blights the nation's labour market has been sympathetic. Articles have been accompanied by helpful infographics showing a blue figure atop a substantially larger pile of money than an equivalent pink figure. The intention is to illustrate the frequently referenced statistic that men earn roughly 20 per cent more than women.

Despite the simplicity of this stark inequality, such figures are misleading. The much-heralded 20 per cent pay gap is an 'on average' figure that is reached through combining part-time and full-time earnings, and takes no account of age or employment sector. As I have argued before on spiked, when we compare how much women and men are paid for doing the same job for the same number of hours each week, there is no pay gap. Not only is it illegal to pay men more, such a pay gap makes no economic sense. If bosses could really get away with paying women so much less, why would anyone ever employ a man?

In reality, the pay gap is far more complex than campaigners like to acknowledge. It is affected by age, occupation and hours worked. Today, women in their twenties earn more than men of the same age. Significantly, they earn more than men not just like-for-like, but also on average. This means that irrespective of job type or hours worked, young women are likely to take home higher wages. For women under the age of 40 and working full-time, the pay gap is negligible. As government equalities minister Nicky Morgan acknowledged when announcing the government's latest proposals: 'We've virtually eliminated the gap for full-time workers under 40 and the gap for the over-40s is shrinking too."

Women’s Center Holding “Healthy Masculinities” Event

Mastodon · 16 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In hopes of bringing attention to the stereotypes of masculinity and its negative effects, the next Brown Bag event from the Women’s Center will address the negative stereotypes of men and combat them through a discussion session.

The event titled “Healthy Masculinities” will be held Thursday in the Women’s Center.

The idea of society’s stereotype of masculinity and how it affects young boys and men is often a problem that goes unaddressed in the spectrum of gendered issues, Sarah Jenkins, the program coordinator of the Women’s Center, said.

“There’s been a lot of discussion about the ways that we raise boys and men that really could lead to a lot of emotional regression or stunting of emotion,” she said.'

Obama’s ‘diversity’ diktat is a giant gift to lawyers

Mastodon · 16 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you’re a white male looking for a job, your search just got harder.

Claiming women aren’t getting paid enough, President Obama wants to make it easier to accuse employers of gender discrimination and hit them with class-action lawsuits. A new regulation proposed on Friday will require all employers with 100 or more workers to report how much their workforce is paid, broken down by race and gender.

The rule, slated to go into effect in September 2017, will cause headaches for employers and anyone — man or woman — who works hard and expects to get ahead based on merit. The winners are federal bean counters, class-action lawyers and the Democratic Party, which is playing up the gender “wage gap” as usual during this election year.

Never mind that the gap is largely fiction. Or that Uncle Sam’s social engineers are foisting their cookie-cutter vision of a politically correct workplace on employers, denying them the freedom to hire and promote based on merit.'

Namibia: U.S Ambassador Advocates Male Circumcision

Mastodon · 16 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'United States of America Ambassador to Namibia Thomas Daughton says there is a need to promote, expand and sustain voluntary medical male circumcision services.

There is compelling medical evidence that male circumcision reduces the risk of HIV-infection by approximately 60 percent.

"The reason seems pretty straightforward, even to someone like me who's not a medical professional. Voluntary medical male circumcision has proven to be one of the most economical and effective methods of reducing HIV-transmission," said Daughton, who stressed that reducing transmission is a key component in controlling the spread of the HIV/AIDS epidemic.

"That's why it is so encouraging to see the government's proactive effort to scale up voluntary medical male circumcision here in Namibia," Ambassador Daughton said on Thursday.'

UN Fights to End Female Circumcision by 2030

Mastodon · 16 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The United Nations warned Monday that millions of girls remain at risk of Female Genital Mutilation (FGM).

The practice, which involves removing all or part of a girl's external genitalia, has no health benefit and can cause severe bleeding, infection, pain, and later, complications in childbirth. It is often performed in unsanitary conditions with unsterilized instruments.'

UN launches plan to accelerate male circumcision for AIDS prevention in Africa

"Those who deny that campus sexual assault is dire must misread the numbers"

Mastodon · 16 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Much as there are people who deny the existence of climate change, or the public health value of vaccines, there are those who have tried to cast doubt on the incontrovertible: sexual assaults are rampant on our college campuses.

Deniers insist that key statistics on campus sexual assault are inflated or indeterminate – and some journalists who should know better are buying into this myth. We saw this most recently in Alia Wong's article last month in the Atlantic, which claimed: "Every statistic about campus sexual assault seems to be contradicted or challenged by another one" as well as in a 2014 article by Emily Yoffe in Slate which alleged that "studies suggesting this [is an] epidemic don't hold up to scrutiny."

The truth is that studies over several decades have repeatedly confirmed that, though exact percentages may vary, there are extremely high rates of sexual assault on US campuses.

National studies – including one released this week by the Department of Justice – show as many as one in four women are sexually assaulted in college. This follows the Washington Post/Kaiser Family Foundation study from June of 2015 and the more than 150,000 students who responded last year to the Association of American Universities survey, both of which clearly established that sexual assault in college is a serious public safety problem.'

UAF, legislators: Focus on survivor support, not perpetrator protection

Mastodon · 16 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In light of all the available and alarming statistics on sexual assault in our state, it is frustrating to read articles such as the account of a Legislature committee meeting in Juneau as covered in Matt Buxton's article, "Legislators discuss UAF's policies on harassment, sexual assault." As reported, legislators spent the majority of their time discussing how to protect men who are falsely accused, despite the fact that research shows only 5 percent of reports are false.

It is important that community leaders educate themselves in order to understand the toll sexual violence takes on a community. There is a significant emotional toll: Sexual assault is linked to increased rates of post-traumatic stress disorder, depression and suicidal thoughts. There is an educational and societal toll: Imagine considering leaving an educational institution in which you have invested much because the alternative is sitting in a classroom with your rapist. University associate general counsel Mike O'Brien accurately stated during the meeting with legislators that women in particular leave the educational environment after being subjected to sexual misconduct and a university's poor response. Studies show that other marginalized populations, such as individuals identifying as non-heterosexual, transgender, genderqueer or noncomforming, experience sexual assault and harassment at even higher rates. Lastly, there is a significant financial toll to survivors and society, including lost income due to missed work, declining productivity, and costs related to medical care, social services, law enforcement and legal expenses.'

‘Yes means yes’ bills introduced in Hawaii because rapists have become ‘more clever,’ sponsor says

Mastodon · 16 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Hawaii Legislature is considering a pair of bills based on California’s affirmative-consent standard that would make it nearly impossible for accused University of Hawaii System students to prove they received consent in a sexual encounter.

Ka Leo, the student paper at the University of Hawaii-Manoa, reports that the House and Senate bills were introduced more than a year ago and are back up for consideration in the new session:

`“HB 1249 attempts to establish a clear policy of ‘yes means yes.’ This policy ensures that predators cannot take advantage of a victim’s incapacitated state,” said Rep. Sharon Har, co-author of House Bill (HB) 1249, in an email.
…

“The existing policy of ‘no means no’ has not brought an end to sexual assault on and off campus, it has only made sexual predators more clever to cover their tracks and avoid prosecution,” Har said.`'

Manning's Accuser has a Tendency for Suing Famous People

Mastodon · 16 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Profootballtalk outlined a Sports Illustrated article today that debunks many of the myths in the original Shaun King article. Mr. King took liberties with the facts he was given and stretched them to fit his narrative. Basically as we stated a few days ago, the article was extremely biased and one-sided.

However, we have since discovered that Jamie Naughright, Peyton Manning's accuser has had a history of filing lawsuits against A-listers and as one defense lawyer cited "(1) the litigant's history of litigation and in particular whether it entailed vexatious, harassing or duplicative lawsuits".

In 2010 Ms. Naughright filed a lawsuit against fashion designer Donna Karan and "Urban Zen" after allegedly receiving injury during a physical therapy session with a trainer Karan had suggested. The Urban Zen Website states affiliation with Naughright and that she even "introduced 35 students to the Urban Zen Integrative".

The lawsuit against Karan was eventually dismissed but has several nuggets worth mentioning. The court justified their decision via the defense's argument that "a history of litigation entailing vexation, harassment and needless expense to other parties and an unnecessary burden on the courts and their supporting personnel is enough" to warrant such a remedy."

"The Karan Defendants have asserted that Naughright has an extensive history of filing repetitive lawsuits against or involving public figures, apparently having "spent the majority of eight years [1998 through 2005] filing legal complaints against or about [Peyton] Manning… [some of which] had no basis in law or in fact and were fueled only by [plaintiff's] relentless search for revenge.""'

Tell the American Academy of Pediatrics to Stop Hurting Babies

DanBollinger · 16 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

The American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP) says babies shouldn't be subjected to unnecessary pain. But the AAP continues to promote "routine" infant circumcision, a painful, medically unnecessary surgery that removes a normal part of a baby's penis.

Help Intact America help baby boys – Sign the Petition!

Last month, the AAP published research showing that common medical procedures carried out on newborn babies are very painful, and that the effects of the pain can last many years. The procedures mentioned included heel sticks, insertion of IV needles, and circumcision. The AAP report also found that commonly used pain relievers are neither effective nor safe.

Infant circumcision differs from the other procedures discussed in the report in that it is an invasive surgery that neither tests for nor treats any illness, and permanently removes a natural and valuable part of a boy's sexual anatomy — the foreskin. The pain from circumcision is intense and continues for days or weeks after the surgery.

Circumcision, originally promoted in the 19th century as a way to prevent masturbation, has become part of American medical culture. Every year, a million baby boys in the United States are subjected to this surgery, although no medical association in the world recommends it.

Some of the falsehoods currently used to support circumcision include hygiene, disease prevention, and aesthetics.

The truth is:
The intact penis is easily cleaned throughout a boy's and man's lifetime.

Circumcision does NOT prevent sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV. European countries where fewer than ten percent of all men are circumcised have about the same STD rates as the United States, where circumcision is common.

Any preference expressed by men or women for the circumcised penis is a result of cultural conditioning. Besides, as the U.S. circumcision rate declines, and the number of intact boys and men grow, the intact penis will no longer seem strange or unattractive.

Many Americans also believe that circumcision is "just a snip" — a minor, brief, and painless procedure that babies will not remember. This is FALSE, and the new AAP article on pain proves it.

Because circumcision is NOT medically necessary, and because the pain it causes is unmanageable and harmful over the long term, Intact America demands that the American Academy of Pediatrics tell its doctors to end the pain and stop circumcising baby boys.

Intact America

Men accuse UT of unfairly punishing them for sex assault allegations

Matt · 17 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two men who University of Texas officials have recommended be disciplined after being accused of sexual assault are suing the school to prevent the punishment. They say the school is using them as scapegoats to build a reputation for being tough on sexual assault.

Neither of the men faces criminal charges, and they have denied committing sexual assaults. The men — each called “John Doe” in the lawsuits filed this month — are seeking an undetermined amount of money and list the university, UT President Gregory L. Fenves and two UT employees who investigated the allegations as defendants.

Their attorney, Brian Roark, also represented former Longhorn football player Kendall Sanders, who wasacquitted last fall of sexual assault but was expelled by UT before the trial. Sanders had sex with a female UT student; jurors said it was unclear whether the woman had given her consent.'

Montana to pay ex-quarterback $245K over rape investigation

Matt · 17 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Montana will pay a former University of Montana quarterback $245,000 to drop his claims that school officials mishandled a rape investigation against him that drew national attention, according to a settlement agreement approved Tuesday.

Jordan Johnson said that university officials predetermined his guilt after a female acquaintance accused him of raping her in 2012, then led a biased investigation against him, according to a statement released by his attorney, David Paoli.

A jury acquitted him in 2013.'

Campus rape dogma in the age of promiscuity

Matt · 17 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'According to campus rape dogma, one in five female undergraduates will be the victim of sexual assault during their college years.

Let's put this claim in perspective.

The violent crime rate in Detroit for all four violent felonies included in the FBI's crime index — murder, rape, robbery, and aggravated assault — is 2 percent. Detroit's rape rate is 0.05 percent. And yet, despite an alleged campus sexual-assault rate that is 100 times greater than Detroit's, female applicants are beating down the doors of selective colleges in record numbers.'

Christina Hoff Sommers takes on modern feminism and trigger warnings

Mastodon · 17 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Christina Hoff Sommers has encountered some resistance from campuses she's been to. Sommers said although she didn't feel scared, her visit to Oberlin last year was the first time she had been provided with security guards.

While her visit to Oberlin was contentious, Sommers was well received at Ohio University on Tuesday night.

Robert Ingram, the founding director of the George Washington Forum at OU, said he was initially approached about bringing in Sommers by Anna Lippincott, the president of OU College Republicans. The forum has, on occasion, worked with student groups to bring speakers to campus.

Sommers, a resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute and author of several books and articles, has been vocal about her stance on modern feminism throughout her career. Sommers said she identifies as an "equity feminist," which promotes equality between both men and women.

"She looks at the world a different way. She's definitely a non-conformist," Lippincott said. "She kind of expresses those grievances that the rest of us feel who maybe don't identify with that 'hardcore feminist movement' right now."'

Judge denies request to stop university sexual assault hearing

Mastodon · 18 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A federal judge on Tuesday rejected the request of six former University of Tennessee female students to stop the institution from using its current disciplinary process for students accused of sexual assault — allowing a campus hearing to go forward in Knoxville Wednesday to determine whether a male student accused of sexually assaulting a female student in October 2014 should be disciplined.

U.S. District Judge Kevin Sharp denied the women's request for a temporary restraining order, ruling they failed to show imminent irreparable harm if UT went to forward with such disciplinary hearings while the case challenging the campus process as "unlawful" goes forward.

The plaintiffs, named only as Jane Does, filed a sweeping lawsuit against UT last week alleging the university has enabled a campus culture that leads to sexual assaults and then utilized a biased hearing process that favors student-athletes accused of sexual misconduct over victims.'

University settles lawsuit by student expelled for sexual assault

Mastodon · 18 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Washington and Lee University has settled with a former student who filed a lawsuit alleging gender bias as the motivation for his expulsion over a sexual assault accusation.

The student, identified as John Doe in the lawsuit he filed in late 2014, was expelled after an investigation in which he was not allowed legal representation or cross examination, and which was conducted by an administrator who allegedly told his accuser that "regret equals rape."

John and the university have "compromised and settled all matters in controversy," according to new documents filed in the case. Terms of the settlement were not disclosed. Typically, accused students win very little in settlements; they might get their record cleared and a small amount of money that doesn't even cover their legal fees.'

UK: Police chief to meet widow and apologise over false rape claim

Mastodon · 18 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Metropolitan police commissioner, Sir Bernard Hogan-Howe, is to meet Lord Brittan's widow later this month to apologise for his force's handling of a false rape allegation [see footnote].

Hogan-Howe will visit Diana Brittan within weeks to discuss Scotland Yard's failure to confirm the former home secretary's innocence over the rape claim before his death last year.

An informed source confirmed on Thursday that the meeting would go ahead. The Met had concluded there was no charge to answer over a 45-year-old rape allegation four months before Brittan's death in January 2015 but failed to tell him. Lady Brittan was only informed in October.'

Female teacher dumbfounded by charges when caught in 'affair' with 15-YO boy

Mastodon · 18 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Toni Sutton, a well-liked, 37-year-old volleyball coach and Spanish teacher at Crawford High School in San Diego, California, finds herself behind bars this week after she was charged with two counts of having sexual intercourse with a minor — a male student reportedly just 15-years-old. She also faces nine more felony counts related to the allegation that she repeatedly had sex with the teen boy — charges that could land her in prison for almost 10 years, according to a report in the Times of San Diego newspaper.

In fact, prosecutors say, Sutton carried on a six-month sexual affair with the boy starting in June of last year. During that time, according to the accusations, the Spanish teacher and the boy — whose name has not been made public because he is a minor — performed sex acts in her classroom inside Crawford High, and in her car — as well as at her own home, a home she shares with her boyfriend who has two children from a previous relationship.
...
The defense attorney for Toni Sutton, Kerry Armstrong, painted a very different picture of the accused teacher, however, calling her “the nicest, sweetest lady you’ll ever meet in your life. You would never believe she would be charged with something like this.”

DV project director accused of harassment resigns

Mastodon · 19 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A domestic violence project director accused of harassing the president of the Beaverton Area Chamber of Commerce has resigned, officials said Thursday.

Tanya Curtis Richards, 58, had been leading the effort to open the Family Justice Center of Washington County, which would offer services and resources for victims of domestic violence in one location. She voluntarily stepped down as project director, said Hillsboro Police Chief Lee Dobrowolski, who serves as chairman of the center's board.

...

Richards had been pursuing a friendship with the Beaverton chamber leader, Lorraine Clarno, and contacted her repeatedly from April 2014 until Jan. 28 of this year, said Officer Mike Rowe, a Beaverton Police spokesman.

Clarno didn't want any contact with her, he said, and asked Beaverton Police Chief Geoff Spalding to tell Richards to stop. The chief did so in a meeting Nov. 25.

Later that same day, Richards contacted Clarno again, Rowe said. According to court records, the charges against Richards stem from the November contact she had with Clarno.

The Washington County Sheriff's Office investigated a similar case involving Richards and she was arrested in April 2011 on a stalking accusation, said Sgt. Bob Ray, an agency spokesman. Court records indicate she was never charged in that case.'

Milo Yiannopoulos: Feminists ‘Waging War on Working Class Men’

Mastodon · 19 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Milo Yiannopoulos attended the University of Minnesota on Wednesday to deliver a joint-talk with American Enterprise Institute scholar Christina Hoff Sommers, during which he dispelled the gender pay gap myth, debated sexual consent on campuses, and was protested by a group of the misinformed armed with air-horn sirens. Yiannopoulos also declared during the speech that third-wave feminists were waging war against working-class men.

“It’s as much a class war as it is a gender war” stated Yiannopoulos. “Much of it is perpetrated by white middle-class women who are the most privileged group in the history of our civilisation, of our species. They are the most privileged people ever to have lived[…] sort of waging war on working-class men. Now most of my readers fall into that second category, and I see the sort of injustice perpetrated on them and the sort of language used about them.”

...

“I see feminism in very much the same way,” he declared. “It is a sort of class hatred and class hostility perpetrated by well-fed, well-educated coastal bloggers on all the rest of us.”'

Rutgers Students Hold Group Therapy Session After Milo Yiannopoulos Visit

Mastodon · 19 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Students at Rutgers University were so traumatised by Breitbart Tech editor Milo Yiannopoulos' visit to their campus that they had to hold a group therapy session, campus newspaper The Daily Targum reports.

According to the paper, students and faculty members held a wound-licking gathering at a cultural center on campus, where students described "feeling scared, hurt, and discriminated against."

"A variety of different organizations and departments were present to listen, answer questions and show support" to the apparently weak and vulnerable students, who just a few days prior had disrupted Yiannopoulos' event by smearing fake blood on their faces and chanting protest slogans.
...
"It is upsetting that my mental health is not cared about by the University," said one student at the event. "I do not know what else to do for us to be heard for us to be cared about. I deserve an apology, everyone in this room deserves an apology."

A number of organizations were at the event to offer support to the poor, traumatised students. These included Psychiatric Services, the Office for Violence Prevention and Victim Assistance, and the Rutgers University Police. However, as far as we know, none of the protesting students were institutionalized, arrested for vandalism, or for assaulting the peaceful attendees of Milo's talk with red paint.'

Questioning Circumcision Is Common Among Young Jews in America

Matt · 19 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young Jewish parents in the USA are bucking historical trends on this questionable surgery. Articles about or mentioning Jewish opposition to circumcision have appeared recently in a variety of Jewish papers, websites, and blogs including the Jewish Daily Forward, JewSchool, Jweekly, TheJC.com,Jewish Journal, Jewish Business News(Israel) and Ynet Jewish World.

Young Jewish parents are working with supportive Jewish clergy to create ritual alternatives.'

Uni student assaulted, robbed by group of girls, and uni wants to help assailants with "programs"

Matt · 19 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Trinity Washington University graduate student is recovering after a group of teenage girls attacked her, according to school officials.

The school's president is speaking out and said violence involving young people across the city has to stop.
...
“We've been seeing it on Metro – several horrible stories about gangs of young kids on Metro terrorizing people,” said McGuire. “Elsewhere in the city, be aware of your surroundings. If you see a group of young people, unfortunately you have to be aware that maybe you need to protect yourself and we wish it weren’t that way.

“We are especially upset that it’s girls. We do women’s education here at Trinity. We want girls to grow up healthy and strong, so we would like to reach out to the school if we can find out what school to maybe help the school with some programs for those girls.”'

Education Dept. Defends Its Approach to Title IX in Face of Senate Pressure

Mastodon · 19 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Education Department is standing by its controversial guidance to colleges on sexual harassment and sexual assault in response to questions raised by a prominent Senate critic.

Catherine E. Lhamon, the department's assistant secretary for civil rights, defended her agency's actions in a letter on Wednesday to Sen. James Lankford, who, as head of the Senate's subcommittee on regulatory affairs and federal management, had accused the department of overreach in pressuring colleges to fight sexual discrimination to comply with the gender-equity law known as Title IX.
...
In a letter last month to John B. King Jr., the Education Department's acting secretary, Senator Lankford argued that the agency's "Dear Colleague" letters offering colleges guidance on how to comply with Title IX's ban on sexual discrimination "are not merely interpretive, but alter the regulatory and legal landscape in fundamental ways."

He said the department's 2010 guidance letter dealing with sexual harassment and its 2011 guidance letter on sexual violence have been decried by "legal scholars and academics across the political spectrum" as pressuring colleges to take steps that threaten students' free-speech and due-process rights.'

When a Campus Rape Expert Gets Accused of Sexual Assault?

Matt · 19 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jason Casares, the associate dean of students and deputy Title IX coordinator at Indiana University's flagship campus in Bloomington, has built a reputation as an expert on college sexual assault. He's well known enough among his peers to have been voted president, in November 2014, of the Association for Student Conduct Administration, a professional group of around 2,700 college officials. Last year, he helped write the curriculum for the group's training program for campus rape investigators.

For the ASCA's annual conference this month, Casares had planned to teach seminars on Title IX and on using a "trauma-informed approach" in sexual misconduct investigations. Then, during the conference keynote on February 3, ASCA board member Jill Creighton circulated a letter accusing him of sexual assault.

Creighton's letter described an evening last December when the two had drinks at a convention for fraternity and sorority advisers in Fort Worth, Texas. "I made the mistake of letting my guard down while socializing with Jason about Association business," Creighton wrote. "Jason took advantage of me after I had had too much to drink…I did not consent to sexual contact."

Casares declined to be interviewed, but a statement released by his lawyer says that he "categorically denies the false accusations of sexual misconduct leveled against him by a colleague."'

Court of Appeal reverses lower court's dismissal of NCFM v. Selective Service

Matt · 20 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

From NCFM:

Today the 9th Circuit Court of Appeal reversed the lower court's dismissal of NCFM v. Selective Service and remanded the case back down with instructions that the case is "not unripe" for review (in other words, they revived NCFM's lawsuit), and also rejected the Department of Justice's argument that NCFM and James Lesmeister lack standing to sue.

This is a victory for the plaintiffs, but it only revives the lawsuit after the lower court dismissed it.

Do Women Need Legislative ‘Protection’?

Mastodon · 20 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'These claims are not backed by evidence. But still the alarms ring, playing into our usual assumptions that the impulse to protect is benevolent and, perhaps, that women are especially deserving of solicitude. The association between “protection” and women is deeply embedded in culture. The image of the domestic-violence victim who receives a protective order is female, though men have the same right to go to court. Shakespeare described God’s protection of the king, but over the centuries, writers from E. M. Forster to Norman Mailer to Jonathan Franzen have rhapsodized about the male impulse to shelter women. Once in a while, a female character voices vexation. “I won’t be protected,” Lucy protests to her irritating suitor in Forster’s “A Room With a View.” “I will choose for myself what is ladylike and right. To shield me is an insult.”

There’s no phrase for men equivalent to “damsel in distress” and no such thing as “protective” legislation for men. “No one says anything about sending men to surgical centers for colonoscopies,” says Kessler-Harris, who submitted a brief in the Texas case, along with 15 other historians. (Colonoscopies have a mortality rate more than 30 times as high as the rate for abortion.) “Abortion is one of the safest medical procedures performed in the United States,” states another brief by the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists and the American Medical Association. The major medical groups were exceptionally blunt in disputing the protective rationale for the Texas law, saying there is “no medical purpose” for requiring abortion clinics to meet the standards for a surgical center. The admitting-privileges requirement for doctors “likewise does nothing to improve the health and safety of women.”'

Kenya: The Benefits of Circumcision Are Exaggerated, We Should End It

Mastodon · 20 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many years ago when I was seven or eight, I happened to be using the urinal at the same time as my friend Samuel.

A cursory glance his way revealed that we had differences in the trouser department that I hadn't expected. Small boys aren't all the same, as it turns out, when they get stripped down.
...
Circumcision of women is now called genital mutilation. It has become verboten, a crime now at par with murder, perhaps the only traditional African practice that White people can confidently condemn without being called racists.
...
For men, circumcision is tolerated, expected, and in some countries celebrated.

If it is an international scandal that the prepuce of a woman is removed to satisfy religious and cultural views, why is it okay to do the same to boys?'

Bernie Sanders declares he is a ‘strong feminist’ and ‘honorary woman’

Mastodon · 20 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At a Democratic town hall in Las Vegas, Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders declared himself not only a "strong feminist," but also an "honorary woman," a distinction given to him by feminist icon Gloria Steinem.

"I consider myself a strong feminist," Sanders told a young woman from the audience who asked the question. "And in fact, Gloria Steinem — everybody knows Gloria is one of the leading feminists in America -- made me an honorary woman many, many years ago."

"I don’t know exactly what that meant, but I accepted it when she came to campaign for me," Sanders added.'

Feminism speakers draw protesters to University of Minnesota

Mastodon · 20 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two outspoken opponents of contemporary feminism, British Breitbart.com technology editor Milo Yiannopoulos and American Enterprise Institute scholar Christina Hoff Sommers, spoke to a packed auditorium at the University of Minnesota Wednesday evening.

The Minnesota Republic, a conservative, student-run magazine at the U of M, invited Yiannopoulos to campus to debate a faculty member of the gender, women and sexuality studies department on the topic of feminism. When no professors agreed, the Minnesota Republic reached out to Hoff Sommers, whose speeches on college campuses often draw protesters.

“Part of our mission here is to encourage diverse political dialogue, so we think that a conservative viewpoint on feminism is kind of silenced on campus,” Minnesota Republic editor-in-chief Anders Koskinen said. “We felt that hosting Milo would be a good way to express a well-rounded campus political dialogue.”'

Get Someone To Bruise Your Face

Matt · 20 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even though I see the good, the bad and the ugly side of human behaviour on a daily basis, I am still a great believer in humanity. I refuse to buy into the belief that all people are bad or that the world is full of evil. Momentarily today, however, that sentiment was tested.

I was alerted to a conversation in a Facebook group of over 50,000 people, in which people are free to vent their frustrations away. While venting can be a good exercise for all of us, sometimes it will lead to incredibly bad and damaging advice – not to mention inciting someone to commit an illegal and utterly immoral act.

A woman complaining about her relationship disputes over child custody with her ex partner had quite innocently asked for advice. However, the advice she got was quite simply frightening.

On legal advice I am not using the name of the person involved, however her profile indicates she works for the Department of Education and has studied Psychology.'

"Artificial Intelligence Might Just Disrupt Know-It-All White Men"

Mastodon · 20 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'White male executives, long accustomed to their opinions becoming policy, may have the most to fear from artificial intelligence.

Seas of data analyzed by swift cognitive computing could make the gut instincts of the executives who dominate business obsolete, according to the lone woman on a five-person panel at the MIT Technology Conference at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology on Saturday.

“A lot of business is run by, no offense, smart white men,” said Amanda Kahlow, chief executive of the AI-driven marketing firm 6sense, as she turned to the four white men serving on the panel. “AI is going to take the ego out of the equation.”'

Congress May Finally Fight Obama’s Campus Sexual Assault Policies

Mastodon · 21 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Department of Education is defending a series of regulations it has imposed on American colleges and universities by claiming, in the face of substantial evidence, that they really aren’t regulations at all. Now, its defiance is setting up a potential clash with Congress.

Under the Obama administration, the Department of Education’s Office of Civil Rights (OCR) has used an 11-page “Dear Colleague” letter from 2011 to aggressively dictate how colleges handle sexual assault and sexual harassment on campus. The “Dear Colleague” letter draws authority from the federal Title IX law prohibiting sex discrimination in education, and lays down very specific requirements. For example, colleges are now required to adjudicate sexual assault allegations using a low “preponderance of the evidence” burden of proof and required to use a very broad definition of harassment.'

Milo Yiannopoulos at University of Minnesota - Male Feminists Edition

Mastodon · 21 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description: 'Quite possibly the most embarrassing 'protest' ever witnessed. On Feb 17, 2016 Milo Yiannopoulos gave a lecture on 3rd wave feminism with renowned feminist Christine Hoff Summers at the University of Minnesota. The talk was hosted and funded by The Minnesota Republic student group. Not even 5 minutes into the event, protesters started blasting air horns and calling him an asshole. Of the handful of protesters, only a single one appeared to be female.'

Problems With Paternity: Fraud To Securing Parental Rights

Matt · 21 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Paternity is a major problem area in family courts, whether you are talking about issues pertaining to fraud or biological fathers obstructed from having a relationship with their children. Unfortunately, there is little being done to fix these matters.

This leaves millions of men and children stuck in a legal rut, as courts require an inane number of hoops to be jumped when it comes to paternity law, oftentimes with scant hope of obtaining justice.

From fathers being required to pay support for children that DNA tests prove are not theirs to fathers blocked by the courts from being involved in their children's lives, family courts have much to do before the current system is fixed and justice is served.'

Slave Labor on the High Seas

Matt · 21 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Shocking revelations about the international fishing industry's reliance on slave labor have caused many people to question the origin of the shrimp or tuna they eat. The disclosures have also led the United States to take some important new steps to clamp down on the use of indentured workers and discourage other unlawful activities on the high seas.

President Obama is expected to signlegislation that effectively bans American imports of fish caught by forced labor in Southeast Asia. The bill, passed by Congress this month, would close a loophole in the Tariff Act of 1930 that prohibits imports made by convicts or forced labor but exempts such goods if American domestic production could not meet demand. Now that is expected to end. The president recently signed an agreement allowing officials to deny port services to foreign vessels suspected of illegal fishing.'

Buzzfeed Canada is Looking for Writers, White Males Need Not Apply

Mastodon · 22 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A senior writer for Buzzfeed Canada announced Thursday that the website was looking to hire freelance writers, but went out of her way to say they were not looking for white males.
...
White males, surprisingly, were less than happy with the announcement, which led Koul to go on the defensive.'

UofM Q&A #1 - Milo Yiannopoulos on Male Feminists

Mastodon · 22 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'Posting a few of my (all outstanding) Q&A responses from Christina H. Sommers and my talk at UofM - part of my Dangerous Faggot Tour. The first question was about male feminists, and I cucking nailed it.'

Woman killed boyfriend for spending too much time on Facebook

Matt · 22 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A British hairdresser was sentenced to life in prison last week after she plunged a knife into her boyfriend's heart — because she felt he spent too much time on Facebook.

Terri-Marie Palmer, 23, broke down in tears as she was convicted of 24-year-old Damon Searson's murder following a one-week trial, where the details emerged about the fatal end of their rocky relationship, according to multiple reports.

Moments before the killing, Palmer posted: "He p me off sitting on Facebook, completely blanking me when I'm talking to him," according to The Mirror Online.

She regularly posted on the social media site about how Searson would ignore her while scrolling through Facebook messages on his phone, adding random girls and posting shirtless photos of himself.'

Academics: Computer Science Needs To Be About Feminist Feelings

Mastodon · 22 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Computer scientists should be more in touch with their feelings and emotions, according to a peer-reviewed study by a Purdue University academic published last week.

The academic in question spent five years conducting an autoethnographic study on how introductory computer programming courses should be taught. Autoethnography is a form of “scientific” research that explores the researcher’s personal experiences and feelings. Official academic definitions claim that the method “treats research as a political, socially-just and socially-conscious act.” The method of research is closely tied to feminist thought and “queer-theory.”

The study’s abstract claims “autoethnographic method provides a new, credible way for educators to reflect and inform their practices.” Autoethnographery has been heavily criticized in by other academics for being overly concerned with “socially-just acts” over research accuracy.'

Should Colleges Still Punish Sex Assault Suspects – Even If They Weren't Convicted?

Mastodon · 22 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This month two male students filed separate lawsuits against the University of Texas at Austin. The men claim they were unfairly treated after allegations of sexual assault were made against them. Authorities never charged either student, but university officials have moved to expel both of them. The plaintiffs say the university is using them as scapegoats to demonstrate the school is tough on sexual assault.

This case has raised some questions: What can schools do in sexual assault cases? What rights do accused students have? How common are these lawsuits?

Samantha Harris, director of policy research for the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education, says everyone agrees universities and law enforcement should investigate sexual assault claims, but the problem is the kind of procedures adopted as a response to pressure from the federal government.'

Why Aren't We Discussing Fatherlessness?

Mastodon · 23 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fatherlessness is on the rise. It is causally linked to an array of social risk factors. While there are success stories in single-parent households, children raised without a father in the home are more at risk for dropping out of school, using drugs, having emotional problems, and becoming involved in crime, just to name a few.

Each of these individual risk trends can impact health care expenses, education, the budget and economy as well as public safety. Taken together they look like the root problem for many of our societal ills. The body of research confirming fathers' importance grows. We even have studies looking at the stunning public cost of fatherlessness. Yet our politicians do not discuss fatherlessness as a policy matter.

For the Republican side, I have a theory: the "War on Women" smear hovers ominously over all Republicans, especially men. Republican politicians have been threatened to within an inch of their funding if they mention anything that could be turned into a sexist trope. But claiming that dads matter isn't at risk of becoming a sexist trope, it is a favored sexist trope. Feminists have been turning dads into patriarchal, sexist abusers for decades. Granted, this is falling out of favor among younger feminists. Older, Boomer feminists hide their anti-male assumptions behind pro-woman rhetoric; only the younger feminists don't like the sleight of hand. Feminists as a group, however, are just realizing their gender gap and trying to come to terms with it. While they sort that out, our politicians remain cautious. They are too afraid to discuss fatherlessness beyond personal stories.'

'Yes Means Yes' Bill Would Eliminate Due Process on Campuses

Mastodon · 23 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the login by Googling the text of the first paragraph and then select the search result entry that reads "'Yes Means Yes' Bill Would Eliminate Due Process on ...". Excerpt:

'Rape is a very serious crime. It is a violation of another individual's body and mind in a way that is far worse than almost every other crime. Society must reject rape and find ways to foster a culture that does not promote rape or make it acceptable. To that end, we must reverse the presumption of innocence in cases involving sexual assault and make the accused prove that he did not, in fact, rape the victim.

At this point, you've realized that this is impossible to do and not I'm seriously suggesting it. So why then are our legislators proposing a similar idea, except limiting it to rape on campuses? Couched as the "affirmative consent" or "yes means yes" law, it is essentially a reversal of the presumption of innocence and an elimination of due process on college campuses.

What the bill before the General Assembly fails to recognize is affirmative consent standards on campuses won't eliminate campus rape. A rapist doesn't refrain from raping because it is illegal to rape. Why would that be any different on a college campus? What this bill does is take regular, consensual activity between adults on a college campus and shrouds it with a veil of impropriety.'

'Affirmative Consent' Law Unfair And Unconstitutional

Mastodon · 23 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the login by Googling the first paragraph text and click the first search result entry. Excerpt:

'Connecticut lawmakers are considering a bill that would significantly change college disciplinary proceedings in cases that involve allegations of sexual misconduct. Among other things, the bill would put the burden of proof upon the accused to establish their innocence. This is almost surely unconstitutional, and our legislature should decline to pass any law that contains such a provision.

Everyone knows that in a criminal case, the government must prove its case "beyond a reasonable doubt." The scales are tipped this way because the stakes for the defendant — possible incarceration, other restrictions on liberty, and the stigma of a criminal conviction — are so severe.

Somewhat less known is the standard of proof in most civil actions between private parties, lawsuits such as personal injury cases, contract cases and property disputes. In those cases, the plaintiff must prove his case by a "preponderance of the evidence." This means, in effect, "more likely than not," or 51 percent likelihood.

In between is an intermediate standard of proof, called proof by "clear and convincing evidence." This standard is considered roughly the midpoint between "beyond reasonable doubt" and "preponderance of the evidence." The Supreme Court has held that this standard is required by the Constitution "in government-initiated proceedings that threaten the individual involved with a significant deprivation of liberty or stigma." Examples include cases in which a defendant faces the termination of parental rights, involuntary civil commitment, deportation or denaturalization.'

UK: It's no surprise if men decide university isn't for them

Mastodon · 23 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Male students have become a rare breed in UK universities.

They were first outnumbered by women as far back as 1992 and, since then, the gender gap has increased annually.

Statistics released by Ucas last week show that this year almost 100,000 more women than men have applied for a university place. In England, women are 36 per cent more likely to submit an application than their male peers; among those from disadvantaged backgrounds this rises to 58 per cent.

Imagine for a minute what would happen if these figures were reversed. I have no doubt there would be panicked calls for an inquiry into what was causing such dramatic gender inequality. There would be demands for better outreach programmes, publicity campaigns and positive discrimination to get girls into higher education.

In reality, the news that boys are significantly less likely to apply to university has passed with little comment.

When the topic of gender and education first became a serious focus for research there was, quite understandably, a preoccupation with the under-representation of women in universities and the difficulties they encountered once there.'

"It's on us: Men need to hold themselves accountable for perpetuating rape culture"

Mastodon · 23 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What's preventing college-aged men from addressing their role in rape culture on campus? Mention rape and alarms set off in many male college students' minds. We, as males, must cut off the flashing red lights, silence the blaring sirens and recognize the issues that are staring right back at us in the mirror.

This may not come naturally to us because we live in a society that perpetuates rape culture and rape myths. We've all heard the statistic that one in five women is sexually assaulted while they attend college, but we've failed to make a concerted effort to reduce this rate. Instead, we brush sexual assault cases aside, encourage victim blaming and allow misconceptions surrounding gender-based violence to prevail.

As men, we must accept a great deal of responsibility for the perpetuation of rape myths. One of the most important to debunk is the assumption that rapists are predators hiding in the entrance of dark alleys, waiting for their next victim. In reality, the vast majority of survivors of sexual violence know the perpetrator. Women and men are surrounded by potential perpetrators, whether they realize it or not.

Men are beginning to find a great deal of utility in identifying as feminists in order to dodge the bullet of being labeled misogynists. They feel as though they're staring down the barrel of "radical feminism," and their most effective tool is the white flag of the "good guy." We think that, as gentlemen, we respect women, so there's no need to target us as the problem.'

It's time we stopped treating all men as sex pests

Mastodon · 23 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"The law is a ass – a idiot," declared Mr Bumble in Charles Dicken's classic novel Oliver Twist, which was released 178 years ago to the month.

Bumble would have no doubt have added some choice expletives to his observation if he'd been in Blackfriars Crown Court in London last week, to witness the unjust case brought against Mark Pearson.

Pearson, a 51-year-old artist, was tried for a sex crime simply because he brushed past a female film star during rush hour at Waterloo Tube station without even breaking his stride.

His accuser (who shall remain anonymous for life) claimed Pearson penetrated her with three fingers for "two or three seconds".

CCTV of the footage irrefutably backs Pearson's account; it took a jury of nine women and three men just 90 minutes to unanimously reject the accuser's version of events and find Pearson innocent.'

"Can men be true feminists?"

Mastodon · 23 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If this man were a true advocate for women's rights, he would give space to women in politics to express their viewpoints and then support them. He cannot successfully advocate for women because he is participating (with the best intentions) in an institution that has systematically oppressed women for most of history. He should be giving a seat at the table to a woman.

Feminism is about space for women, plain and simple. Feminists are used to not being taken seriously by the patriarchy, and I find that a man who uses his male privilege to speak on behalf of women is no better than someone who actively oppresses women. The voices of men in feminist activism do not count as much as the women's, even though they are greatly appreciated.

A man should never voice actively in feminist advocacy, but he can aid the feminist cause.'

Department of Education botches Title IX obligations in response to Congress, ex-official says

Mastodon · 23 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If the House Education Committee wanted advice on topics to bring up with acting Education Secretary John King at its Wednesday hearing on the department's "policies and priorities," it got a targeted list from a former Ed lawyer.

Hans Bader, who served in the Office for Civil Rights, wrote a blistering analysis of a letter sent by that office's chief to Sen. James Lankford, R-Okla., who heads the Regulatory Affairs Subcommittee and has asked what authority OCR has to issue substantive new regulations in everything but name.

OCR's Catherine Lhamon basically told Lankford that her office didn't need to go through a notice-and-comment proceeding before issuing its controversial "Dear Colleague" letters because they only purported to explain current law, not enforce new regulations.'

Woman at the center of controversial Rolling Stone UVA rape article to appear in court

Mastodon · 23 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The woman at the center of Rolling Stone magazine's now-retracted story about a rape at the University of Virginia has been ordered to appear in court to answer questions as part of a civil suit.

"The court believes that a one-day, seven-hour deposition will be sufficient," Judge Glen Conrad wrote in a court order this week, calling for the woman identified only as Jackie to appear in court on April 5, Newsweek reported.

Jackie will be deposed as part of an ongoing lawsuit filed by Nicole Eramo, an associate dean at the University of Virginia, against Rolling Stone, the magazine's owner, Wenner Media, and Sabrina Rubin Erdely, the writer of the controversial story "A Rape on Campus."'

University speech instructor allegedly calls student ‘cute’ for ‘mansplaining’

Mastodon · 23 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An “Introduction to Linguistics” instructor at the University of Maryland allegedly accused a male student of “mansplaining” after he questioned her claim about sexism in job titles.

“Look, it’s really cute that you, as a white male, would tell me what I’m not allowed to be offended by, as a minority female,” the instructor tells the unidentified student in an audio recording posted on Reddit over the weekend. “Thank you so much for doing that; that’s called ‘mansplaining,’ so stop.”

The rebuke was prompted by the student’s attempt to understand her assertion that the suffixes “–ette” and “–ess” are “diminutive,” and therefore “infantilizing,” which was made in relation to the term “poetess.” The student says he understands that “-ette” has a diminutive root in French, but questions whether the same is true of the other suffix.

“The point is: same job, same title,” the instructor replies. “If she’s writing those poems with her cunt, then it’s a difference, but she’s not; she’s writing poems based on the fact that she has fought in two wars, which is more than her fiancée has ever done.”

“But you shouldn’t have a problem, I guess, with two different, like, titles, because—” the student attempts to respond, only to be cut off and accused of “mansplaining” before he could articulate his point.

The student gamely continues, saying, “I’m curious as to why you take offense.”

“I think I just told you,” she says. “I think I just told you that you’re choosing not to agree with me, and through that, you’re choosing to explain why I should agree with you, coming from a position of privilege, having never experienced what I’ve experienced.

“That right there: excellent example of privilege,” she concludes.

The student points out that she still hasn’t answered his question, to which the instructor says simply, “I’ve explained it to you, and you’re choosing not to accept. We’re going to move on now.”'

"Controversial figures debate feminism and freedom of speech"

Mastodon · 24 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A debate featuring controversial public figures Julie Bindel and Milo Yiannopoulos took place Tuesday night in the ballroom of the Michigan League.

During the debate, the two speakers exchanged arguments about feminism, debating whether the feminist movement impedes an individual's freedom of speech.

Hosted by The Michigan Review, the event drew a crowd of several hundred people, some of whom drove across state lines to hear the pair.

Engineering senior Hunter Swogger, one of the event organizers, said the Review wanted to bring Bindel and Yiannopoulos' voices to the University's campus in order to expose the campus to new ideas.'

Judge rules gender-bias lawsuit can continue against Brown University

Mastodon · 24 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A federal judge is allowing to proceed a lawsuit accusing Brown University of gender-bias in its handling of a sexual assault investigation against a male student suspended by the Ivy League school following a probe.

U.S. District Chief Judge William E. Smith declined to dismiss a lawsuit brought by a former student, identified as John Doe, who alleges that Brown violated his rights and discriminated against him based on his gender in its handling of an alleged sexual misconduct complaint.

Doe filed suit in April after being suspended from Brown for 2½ years based on sexual misconduct allegations brought by a female student that he had fondled and kissed after meeting her at a dormitory party in October 2014. Doe was enrolled in the Class of 2017, earned straight A's his freshman year, and hoped to pursue a career in neuroscience, the lawsuit says.'

Harvard and Title IX: Survey results in hand, policy debate endures

Mastodon · 24 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harvard University remains at the forefront of the debate over campus sexual assault, even as a panel of Harvard students and professors meets to consider additional changes to the University's disciplinary procedures under Title IX, the federal law that prohibits sex discrimination by educational institutions that receive federal funding.

The committee, convened earlier this month and chaired by former interim Dean of the College Donald H. Pfister, is charged with examining data from the campus climate survey released September 21. That survey, conducted by the Association of American Universities on behalf of Harvard and 27 other colleges, sought to assess the level of reported and unreported harassment and assault on campus.'

GOP congresswoman questions Ed. Dept. nominee on campus sexual assault

Matt · 24 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'North Carolina Congresswoman Virginia Foxx questioned the Education Department's overreach when it comes to campus sexual assaultduring a hearing on Wednesday.

The congresswoman directed her question to Dr. John King, the acting secretary of the Education Department, who is currently going through the confirmation process to officially become head of the department.

"I'm very concerned about what's happening within your department's Office for Civil Rights and its impact on college campuses across the country," Foxx said. "For too long the OCR has gone around Congress by legislating a new mission and I'm deeply concerned about the office's legitimacy and effectiveness on these issues and the potential negative impact on students and institutions."'

Comedy Festival Will Charge White Men More To Fight The Wage Gap

Mastodon · 25 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An upcoming comedy festival in New York City is charging different rates for attendees in an apparent effort to check the privilege of straight white men.

The Cinderblock Comedy Festival will be held Sept. 15-18 in the hipster stronghold of Williamsburg, Brooklyn. With the festivities just seven months away, organizers are already urging potential performers to apply to perform.

But the festival has one very notable policy: Currently, only women, non-whites and those who identify as LGBT are allowed to apply for an early-bird price of $19.25. Straight white men, on the other hand, will only be allowed to apply starting March 15, and they'll have to pay $25 to do so.

Festival director Coree Spencer said the discount was intended to closely match the oft-quoted and oft-criticized statistic that women earn just 77 percent of what men earn.'

Colleges Warned They Will Lose Federal Funding For Botching Campus Rape Cases

Matt · 25 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Catharine Lhamon, Assistant Secretary for Civil Rights at the U.S. Department of Education, told a group of college administrators Monday that she would have no reservations about pulling a university's funding if it showed a pattern of mishandling cases of sexual violence on campus.

Lhamon was speaking at a summit on sexual assault hosted at Dartmouth College, one of the 67 colleges and universities currently under investigation by Lhamon's agency over concerns that they did not properly handle sexual violence cases. Colleges are required under the gender equity law Title IX to address sexual assault and harassment on campus. The ultimate punishment for a school violating Title IX is a complete loss of federal funding. No disciplinary procedure has ever gone that far, but Lhamon emphasized that the option is always on the table.

"Do not think it's an empty threat," Lhamon said Monday. "It's one I've made four times in the 10 months I've been in office. So it's one that's very much in use."

...

Lawmakers are considering adding more ways for the OCR to penalize a school for violating Title IX.

"It'd always be nice to have more tools. There's always more we can use," Lhamon said during the panel Monday. "Where I sit today, I think we have a set of very, very effective tools we can use."

Lhamon said the criticism of the OCR's effectiveness investigating colleges was due to a "lack of understanding" about the tools available to the office for sanctioning institutions.'

NPO: Florida Senate Passes Shared Parenting Bill

Matt · 25 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'By a 23 - 15 margin, the Florida Senate has passed Senate Bill 250 that would establish the presumption that equal parenting time is in a child's best interests. The bill, sponsored by Senator Tom Lee, allows deviation from the equal time standard in a number of different situations, including when parents agree to a different arrangement. Read about it here (Tampa Bay Times, 2/23/16).

"Under current law, judges are supposed to consider 20 criteria and "the best interests of the child" when they write an order. But Sen. Tom Lee, R-Brandon, who sponsored the legislation (SB 250) says the child's wellbeing is an end goal and that to accomplish that, it's in the best interests of kids to split time evenly with both parents whenever possible...

"As we look at other child welfare policies that we enact, we always start with the assumption that if it's in best interest of the child, we want both parents involved and that we want both parents to take responsibility," said Sen. Don Gaetz, R-Niceville."'

Students Wary of New Sexual Assault Law in Face of Increased Reports

Mastodon · 25 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New York is one of the three states — along with California and Michigan — that have passed these new consent laws. The law requires a clear, affirmative agreement between partners. By stating the consent, it creates a victim's bill of rights and boosts training for law enforcement, faculty and students.

However, students expressed concern that the new policy is ambiguous and makes it more difficult for those accused of sexual assault to defend themselves. While the legislation may have caused confusion among college campuses, experts say the increase in sexual assault reports reflect an increase in reporting incidents rather than a vague policy.

In many situations, sexual misconduct incidents occur when students do not give or obtain affirmative consent when engaging in sexual interaction. The affirmative consent is defined as a knowing, voluntary and mutual decision among all participants to engage in sexual activity. Affirmative consent can be given by words or actions, as long as those words or actions create clear permission regarding willingness to engage in the sexual activity.'

Accused students can be presumed guilty because high schools can ban long hair, university says

Mastodon · 25 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Cincinnati can discriminate against students accused of sexual assault because high schools can punish young men for growing long hair.

That's one of the claims the public university is making to dismiss an Oct. 19 lawsuit brought by two former students who say they were prejudged in separate proceedings that didn't follow UC's own policies.

The lawsuit by the anonymous students – one an undergraduate who has since transferred and the other a recently graduated law student – claims they suffered "sanctions" by the university before investigations even took place, under accuser-friendly "interim measures."

They said their cases were heard by a panel that received one-sided training by various officials, including the head of an organization "responsible for aiding alleged victims of sexual assault." Panel members were trained to believe accusers before hearing any evidence and to apply a "verbal consent" standard that was not in effect during one accused student's investigation.'

Professor fired after protest scuffles caught on video

Mastodon · 25 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The University of Missouri Board of Curators on Thursday fired a communications professor who was captured on video scrapping with a police officer and a student journalist during campus protests last year.

The board voted 4-2 in favor of firing Assistant Professor of Communication Melissa Click, who had been suspended with pay from the school since Jan. 27.

Click has the right to appeal the termination.

“The board respects Dr. Click’s right to express her views and does not base this decision on her support for students engaged in protest or their views,” said Chairwoman Pam Henrickson, who voted against Click’s termination, in a statement viewed by The Columbia Tribune. “However, Dr. Click was not entitled to interfere with the rights of others, to confront members of law enforcement or to encourage potential physical intimidation against a student.”'

Kesha Contradicts Rape Claims In New Deposition Video

Mastodon · 25 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Kesha Sebert [link added] said in a 2011 deposition that her producer never made sexual advances toward her or drugged her, which contradicts what she alleged in a 2014 lawsuit.

TMZ obtained a video of the deposition.

The 28-year-old singer, known simply as Kesha, accused her producer Lukasz Gottwald of emotional and sexual abuse, but a judge recently denied her request to break her contract with Sony that requires her to make four more albums with the label. Kesha alleged Gottwald drugged and raped her 10 years ago.

During a deposition in 2011, however, the singer swore under oath that her producer had never touched her.'

Rape culture and the problem with the 1 in 5 sexual assault statistic

Mastodon · 25 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last semester, Spectator reported on data suggesting that one in every five women on campus has experienced “sexual assault” since enrolling at Columbia. This statistic was derived from results of a survey conducted by the Association of American Universities, and was propagated alongside calls for additional support services for victims of rape.

In the wake of the Emma Sulkowicz mattress protest, this statistic seems to corroborate popular sentiments that Columbia is indeed a bastion of rape. But is it really?

A closer analysis of the AAU survey reveals several opportunities for misinterpretation of its data. For one thing, the survey uses a ridiculously wide definition of sexual assault that includes everything from penetration to unwanted groping. It also paternalistically decides whether women have been victims or not and treats the complicated situation of mutual intoxication in a way that is favorable to women.'

Zimbabwe: Three women rape man to steal sperm for witchcraft

Matt · 26 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Police fear a trio of female 'sperm collectors' are on the loose in Zimbabwe after they picked up a hitchhiker on a highway and raped him in order to 'harvest' his sperm.

The women, believed to be driving a white Toyota Cresta, offered him a lift along a main road in the city of Bulawayo, in the country's southwest.

But partway through the journey the women attacked him - forcing him to have sex with them and making off with his semen.

...

These attacks were fueled by a demand for men's semen in traditional luck-enhancing 'juju' rituals.

According to reports, victims of the freeway femme fatales are drugged or subdued at gun or knife-point - one man was even forced to perform at 'snake-point' when his rapists brandished a live snake.

The male victims are then given a sexual stimulant and forced to have sex repeatedly before being dumped on the side of the road.'

An Apology From A Dad To His Daughter, On Behalf Of Fathers Everywhere

Mastodon · 26 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Traditional gender roles are passed down through generations -- but a new commercial is proving that cycle can be broken if men step up.

Created by Indian detergent company Ariel, a video campaign called #ShareTheLoad highlights how traditional gender roles are passed down from generation to generation in households around the world. The campaign, which launched in 2015, shows the impact parents' behaviors and actions in the house have on their children and how men's participation in day-to-day chores can break down larger and problematic gender stereotypes.

Published on Feb. 19, the latest #ShareTheLoad commercial features a young Indian woman coming home from work to her husband on the couch and her father and her young son playing. The woman is on a work call while she gets dinner ready and cleans up the house. The father of the young mom sits and watches as his daughter runs her house, alone.

"I am so sorry. Sorry that you have to do this all on your own, sorry that I never stopped you while you were playing house," the dad says in a voiceover. "I never told you that it’s not your job alone… but your husband’s too."'

Joe Biden to Introduce Lady Gaga at the Oscars for Sexual Violence Presentation

Mastodon · 26 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vice President Joe Biden will introduce Lady Gaga this Sunday at the 88th Academy Awards.

The Los Angeles Times reports Biden, who will be in attendance for the ceremony with his wife Jill, will introduce the singer for a performance of her song “Til It Happens to You,” which will include a presentation aimed a combating sexual violence.

After introducing the singer, the vice president will reportedly ask viewers and members of the audience to visit ItsOnUs.org and take a pledge to intervene in cases of sexual assault.

Biden, who was main author of the 1994 Violence Against Women Act while he was in the Senate, has called for college presidents to help end campus sexual violence.

Lady Gaga’s song “Til It Happens to You” and an accompanying PSA aimed at warning young women of the dangers of campus sexual assault, was released last September.'

It's On Us PSA

Police Reports Lay Out Peyton Manning Accuser's Many 'False Accusations'

Mastodon · 26 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Dr. Jamie Naughright, the former University of Tennessee trainer who accused quarterback Peyton Manning of sexually assaulting her in 1996, made a series of bizarre and unfounded complaints to a Florida sheriff's department in 2014, according to police records obtained by The Daily Caller.

Naughright, who resides in Lakeland, Fla., made numerous calls to the Polk County sheriff's department between March and November of 2014, claiming that she was being stalked and threatened by various men that she knew. She also claimed that an associate and caretaker of hers had made a pornographic website with her pictures on it.

The Washington Post's Sally Jenkins first reported on the existence of the documents in a column on Thursday.

The records also show that in Nov. 2014, Naughright claimed that a man she met while receiving mental health treatment at a Florida hospital had threatened her after they got into a heated argument over the lawsuits she filed against Manning, who recently won the Super Bowl with the Denver Broncos.'

False allegations uncovered in race/gender-baiting accusations by college women

ThomasI · 26 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'But authorities now say there's no evidence any of that happened and that the women were the aggressors in the fracas, which was captured by cameras on the bus and other cameras in the hands of bus riders. All three defendants are charged with misdemeanor assault and are facing campus disciplinary proceedings.

The actual victim, police said, was a 19-year-old white woman from Congers, Rockland County, who also was a passenger on the late-night route known to students as the "drunk bus."

"The evidence shows that, contrary to how the defendants originally portrayed things, these three individuals were not the victims of a crime," University Police Chief Frank Wiley said in a statement. "Rather, we allege that they are the perpetrators."'

Lands' End Apologizes For Interviewing Gloria Steinem in Catalog

mens_issues · 27 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Apparently, Lands' End has become a feminist catalog as their CEO interviewed Gloria Steinem. Excerpt:

'Clothing retailer Lands' End is in hot water after it published an interview with political activist Gloria Steinem in its spring catalog, prompting outrage from some customers.

Steinem, a feminist icon, was interviewed by Lands' End CEO Federica Marchionni for the company's "Legend Series," which it says features people "who have made a difference in both their respective industries and the world at large."

The interview was removed from the Lands' End website after customers overwhelmed the company's Facebook page with complaints about interviewing an abortion rights supporter.

"Those of us who love family, love children, are completely puzzled why you would promote a very vocal pro abortion celebrity," one customer wrote. "Are you anti-child? You want to kill off possible future customers?"

In a statement emailed to NBC News, Lands' End said: "We greatly respect and appreciate the passion people have for our brand. It was never our intention to raise a divisive political or religious issue, so when some of our customers saw a recent promotion that way, we heard them. We sincerely apologize for any offense.'

Back in 2002, Lands' End published a story that I wrote about as "Lands' End prints "Rosie the Riveter" story with feminist twist. What I wrote is still available at Men's Issues Online at here.

Does The Word ‘Rape’ Really Carry Any Impact Anymore?

mistermisogynist · 27 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Essay here. Excerpt:

'You rape the soil. You rape conquests of war. You rape women. You sew rape. You snog-rape. You rape with your eyes. You date rape. The press rape you. Simulated rape-fucks. S&M porn stars accusing each other of rape. You Frape.

Does ‘rape’ really have the impact it used to have?

Rape is a word that women use a lot. Men don’t use the word as much outside of jocular jest, extreme insult and agriculture/logging. When women tend to use the word rape, it seldom refers to the definition of rape. Few women know what rape actually feels like. Yet women repeatedly refer to any annoyance or intrusion in their life as the feeling of being raped.

Charlize Theron reported feeling raped by the press. This was surprising, since having played the role of a rape victim in a film and won an Oscar for the role, Charlize still did not comprehend the difference between an actual violent sexual assault and a story in the press about her.'

Hillary Clinton Crashes Bachelor Party: ‘I Love Having Men at My Feet’

Mastodon · 28 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton dropped into a bar with her entourage and found herself crashing a bachelor party, a situation that turned into a photo op for the Democratic candidate for president.

Joe Schreck and his groomsmen were having a round of Bloody Marys to celebrate his upcoming wedding when Clinton and her campaign staff descended on Saffron, a café and bar in Charleston, South Carolina, reports the Washington Post.

“I love having men at my feet,” Clinton said, as her personal photographer, Barb Kinney, suggested some of the groomsmen kneel around Clinton for a photo.'

Gang rape charges dropped in New York after accuser recants

Mastodon · 28 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New York City authorities are dropping sexual assault charges against five teenagers after their accuser recanted her story.

The woman initially told police she was gang raped at gunpoint in a Brooklyn park on 7 January.

Police arrested five teens, but parts of the woman's story began to come under scrutiny as more details emerged.

Her father was said to have been chased off by the suspects, but it took him nearly 30 minutes to alert police.

The teenagers said the encounter was consensual. They told police when they entered the park they saw the woman and her father engaged in a sex act.

Prosecutor Kenneth Thompson said the 18-year-old woman provided "multiple inconsistent accounts" when detectives questioned her.'

More on slave labor in the worldwide seafood industry

Matt · 28 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Most of the enslaved are men. They leave this fact out, perhaps because if they keep the enslaved people's gender identity neutral, they will not trigger the "it's just men" response so many people have. Excerpt:

'Last year, the Guardian shed light on an uncomfortable — and unfortunate — truth about much of the shrimp sold in North America, Europe, Japan and elsewhere around the world. A six-month-long investigation revealed that torture, wage-theft, beatings and various other illegal practices were a reality in the production chain of the world's largest supplier.

"If you buy prawns or shrimp from Thailand, you will be buying the produce of slave labor," Aidan McQuade, director of Anti-Slavery International, told the Guardian at the time. And many countries do, including the United States, which imports about half of the shrimp Thailand harvests.

The investigation followed a 2013 report by the Environmental Justice Foundation, a nongovernmental organization, which chronicled the abuse in the Thai shrimp industry. It also spurred a flurry of corporate responses: Walmart said it was "actively engaged" in the issue; Costco said it was telling its suppliers "to take corrective action;" and Tesco, the largest supermarket chain in Britain, called it "completely unacceptable."

But almost two years later, the problem persists.'

The Consent Debate: College Students, Experts, Activists Discuss Sexual Consent

Mastodon · 29 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'C.D. Mock, a former head wrestling coach at the University of North Carolina, also shared his story and said he was there to represent the accused.

“Where does consent start and where does it end? I don’t know,” said Mock. “Let’s remember we are dealing with young people, many of whom are very inexperienced, there’s alcohol around without supervision.”

Mock has become a loud and vocal critic of the effectiveness of what some call the “Consent Movement” after his son was accused of sexual assault in his junior year of college. He explained that ever since the government cracked down on schools that did not comply with a federal mandate to more seriously address sexual assault complaints, that he believed over-correcting had been done in favor of accusers.

“We need to make sure that the solutions that we come up with are fair solutions to everyone. If we’re swinging the pendulum too far in one direction," Mock cautioned, “We’re in dangerous territory.”'

Man charged after his newborn tests positive for amphetamines and opiates

charlie · 29 February 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Drugs were found in the baby's system because mom was doing drugs during pregnancy. Dad tried to prevent her from using drugs. But now he is charged. Excerpt:

'A man was charged on Friday after his newborn tested positive for drug exposure in December.

Blue Earth County Human Services Child Protection reports that the child tested positive for amphetamines and opiates after birth and the mother tested positive for opiates. Authorities say 41-year old Daniel Gerald Sturdivant allegedly told them he was concerned about the woman's meth use and did not want her to use it while she was pregnant. County Officials say Sturdivant said he felt he could not control her since he was gone with work for a week or more at a time. Authorities say Sturdivant didn't do anything to stop the mother other than trying to limit the money she had available to spend on drugs. According to the report, the mother admitted to Health Officials in September that she had smoked methamphetamine in her second trimester of pregnancy.
...
Sturdivant is charged with Felony Exposure of Drugs to a Child, Child Endangerment and Child Neglect.

Blue Earth County Attorney Pat McDermott tells KTOE News that his office is considering charges against the mother.'

Lady Gaga pushes 'one in five' campus sex assault myth at the Oscars

Mastodon · 1 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Articel here. Excerpt:

'We knew the Oscars would be filled with propaganda, but before the awards show even started, singer Lady Gaga pushed a debunked statistic to scare viewers and make her appearance more powerful.

Gaga was there to perform her Oscar-nominated song called "Til It Happens to You," which appeared in the film "The Hunting Ground," which features still more dubious statistics and accusations of campus sexual assault.

"It's such an important song for me," Gaga said prior to the awards show. "One in five women will be raped before they finish college."

No, they won't.'

Uni seeks to expel male student for alleged off-campus sex assault with non-uni student

Mastodon · 1 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Texas at Austin has been sued for allegedly wrongly seeking to expel a male student over accusations that he sexually assaulted a non-UT student in her off-campus apartment.

No criminal charges were ever filed against the male student over the alleged assault. The alleged victim herself never filed an official complaint with campus or city police officers, according to the lawsuit.

But the University of Texas at Austin has recommended that the 21-year-old male student, who is one semester away from earning a degree in physics, be expelled for violating the institutional rules of the college, the suit states.

The attorney for the male student has asked a judge to stop UT-Austin from holding a planned disciplinary hearing at which Title IX investigators for the school have recommended his expulsion.

Court documents state the male student has not been afforded his Constitutional due process rights and that the allegations in question do not constitute sexual assault, among other protestations lodged by the plaintiff's attorney.'

Female student stands up to claims of 'rape culture'

Mastodon · 1 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's not brave to "speak out" on a topic that the media loves and will defend one on. It is brave to stand up for the truth despite what the media and activists claim is true.

That is the case of Toni Airaksinen, a Barnard College sophomore who penned an essay for the Columbia Spectator dismantling the claim that colleges across the country are fostering a "rape culture."

Airaksinen spends her essay informing readers how a study purporting to show that one-in-five women will be sexually assaulted while in college is misleading. For starters, the study — from the Association of American Universities — uses a "ridiculously wide definition of sexual assault," according to Airaksinen. This definition includes "everything from penetration to unwanted groping," she writes.'

UK company to introduce 'period policy' for female staff

Minuteman · 3 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Coexist, where 24 of the 31 staff are women, is no ordinary company. It manages Hamilton House in the city's bohemian Stokes Croft quarter, running the space for artists, activists and community organisations. There is a restaurant called The Canteen, and Banksy's Mild Mild West mural showing a teddy bear throwing a petrol bomb at riot police greets visitors.

Baxter said: "There is a misconception that taking time off makes a business unproductive – actually it is about synchronising work with the natural cycles of the body.

"For women, one of these is their menstrual cycles. Naturally, when women are having their periods they are in a winter state, when they need to regroup, keep warm and nourish their bodies.

The spring section of the cycle immediately after a period is a time when women are actually three times as productive as usual.
...
Baxter and her team plan to formulate the policy as part of a seminar at Hamilton House on 15 March called Pioneering Period Policy: Valuing Natural Cycles in the Workplace.

The seminar's leader, Alexandra Pope, believes "cycle awareness" helps both men and women become more productive at work.

Pope, who describes herself as a women's leadership coach and educator in the "field of menstruality", said: "In the past any proposal to allow women to, for example, have time off at menstruation has been derided by men and women alike. In this context menstruation is seen as a liability or a problem. Or as women getting special treatment.

"The purpose of this policy initiative is to create a positive approach to menstruation and the menstrual cycle that empowers women and men and supports the effectiveness and wellbeing of the organisation. To restore the menstrual cycle as the asset it is."

She says her seminar will "present a radically new model of the menstrual cycle as an asset for your entire organisation".'

Tina Fey Complains It is a ‘Terrible Time’ for Female Comedians

Mastodon · 3 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite her many recent successes, actress and comedian Tina Fey argues in a recent interview that now is a “terrible time” for women in comedy.
...
Added the Whiskey Tango Foxtrot star: “If you were to really look at it, the boys are still getting more money for a lot of garbage, while the ladies are hustling and doing amazing work for less.”'

"Finally, An App That Splits The Bill So That White Men Pay More"

Mastodon · 3 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the Institute of Women's Policy Research, women in America won't be paid as much as men for the same work for another 100 or so years. But thanks to a new app, we can even the playing field soon. That is, when we go out to eat.

The app, called Equitable, is designed to split group restaurant bills based on gender and racial wage gaps. So if you're a white man brunching with a black woman and a Latina, be prepared to pay a little extra for that avocado toast. Hey, it's not our fault! It's the patriarchy.

According to the app's website, "EquiTable helps you avoid the entrenched discrimination that exists in our society. It doesn't split the bill equally -- it splits it equitably. You pay what you should to balance out the wage gap."

The app uses Bureau of Labor Statistics data in order to calculate who should pay what at the end of dinner or brunch, ensuring that those with less privilege (anyone whose not white and male, basically) pay less to eat.

It's funny, but it's also kind of brilliant.'

University greek life talks feminism and gender roles

Mastodon · 3 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Greek life's strong systemic adherence to traditional gender roles can make feminism a difficult topic to approach, some University of Minnesota greek students said.

At a Wednesday discussion called, "Feminism is for Everyone," students explored their definitions of gender equity and dispelled common misconceptions about feminism to help promote it in an academic and social setting, said Jackson Ridl, a men's engagement student staff member for the Aurora Center.

...

Both women and male peers can help police masculinity in order to lessen the pressure of these societal and greek system expectations in romantic relationships and power structures, Kolb said.

Male allies serve an important role of furthering feminism's mainstream acceptance and presenting it as a universal discussion instead of a campaign against men, said Zack Gill, a graduate student in school counseling.

"Gender inequality is a man's problem to change," he said.'

Charges Now Dropped Against Father Who Turned in Mother for Doing Drugs While Pregnant

charlie · 3 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Charges against the father who turned in a pregnant mom for drug abuse have now been dropped. He had been charged for felony child abuse for not preventing the mother from using drugs. However, no charges will be made against the mother, even though she used drugs while pregnant. Excerpt:

'KTOE News asked Blue Earth County Attorney Pat McDermott about Felony charges filed Friday against 41-year old Daniel Gerald Sturdivant after his newborn baby tested positive for amphetamines and opiates.

McDermott says he reviewed the case and dismissed the charges against Sturdivant. McDermott says his office has also declined charges against the mother of the infant.

Blue Earth County Human Services Child Protection officials are working with the family.'

Yale students push for affirmative consent

Mastodon · 4 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But others expressed less positive views about the affirmative consent bill. Wilton, Connecticut resident Shelley Dempsey spoke against the bill after being introduced by her representative, Rep. Gail Lavielle GRD ’81, R-Wilton.

Dempsey, an attorney involved with due-process advocacy group Families Advocating for Campus Equality, said a false accusation of sexual assault against her son, then a Bucknell University student, led to his suspension from the university. He was ultimately reinstated after he was cleared of the charge. She said his situation was only one among many and that the affirmative consent legislation would shift the legal balance away from the accused.

For Dempsey, the bill undermines “innocent before proven guilty,” which she said is the fundamental principal of American justice. Dempsey was not, however, opposed to the idea of affirmative consent on principle: she said affirmative consent can be an effective learning tool and should be taught on campuses like it is taught at Yale, but should not become a judicial standard.

“The language of this bill ensures that wrongful accusations will continue and the accused will be specifically deprived of the protections afforded to them under the U.S. Constitution,” Dempsey said. “What the standard sets up is guilt before proving innocence. That I find disgraceful, as an attorney as well. It upends our system of justice.”'

Madonna using child abduction laws in an attempt to force Guy Ritchie to return Rocco to New York

Mastodon · 4 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Madonna is using child abduction laws in an attempt to force ex-husband Guy Ritchie to return their 15-year-old son to her in New York.

The singer, 57, is using the Hague Convention to bring to an end the bitter custody battle over Rocco.

The teenager is living with the Lock Stock and Two Smoking Barrels director in London and has so far ignored his mum's requests to go home.

Now Madge has launched a case against the film producer, 47, at the family division of the High Court under the Hague Convention on the Civil Aspects of International Child Abduction.

She has also brought a case at the Family Court in New York.

But sitting in the High Court in London yesterday Mr Justice MacDonald told the couple to sort out the problem themselves.

He said it was his "fervent hope" that the singer and film producer could have discussions and reach an "amicable resolution" without further use of the courts.'

On 'period leave': Ladies, suck it up and go to work

Mastodon · 4 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It sounds like an excuse a character from "Mad Men" would come up with to avoid hiring a woman: claiming she can't do the work because she would need several days off each month due to her menstrual cycle.

Yet that is precisely what a company in Bristol, U.K., is doing. The organization, called Coexist, which manages event spaces, isplanning to offer paid leavefor women who are on their periods. The company, which employs 24 women and seven men, believes that giving women the paid time off for their periods doesn't make a business unproductive, but allows women to "synchroniz[e] work with the natural cycles of the body," according to Company Director Bex Baxter.

...

Surely, informing other employers that women aren't very productive when it's that time of the month will be a major win for women's equality and advancement in the workplace.

And yet article after article has been written praising this policy. I feel like I'm taking crazy pills. Women complain of unequal treatment from their male colleagues, that they face discrimination in the workplace and that they can do anything that men can do. This strikes me as an acknowledgement that we can't.'

The six eye-watering reasons why you should never allow your son to be circumcised

Matt · 5 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most people would consider the bodies of men and women equally valuable.

But, when it comes to circumcision, that clearly isn't true - which is odd considering the procedure removes functional tissue, causes extreme pain, permanently disfigures and forever damages sexual response, regardless of gender.

Oh, and in most cultures where female circumcision is routinely performed, the male equivalent is also done with equally dirty, blunt apparatus.

Meaning it's less a competition of suffering and more a universal issue of genital integrity.

So, you can imagine my disdain when Dr Paul Turek, a private doctor from California, recently claimed that clamping a boy's foreskin and cutting it off with a scalpel is meritorious (although, with a lucrative clinic that charges handsome fees, he would say that…)

Fortunately, as someone with 30 years experience of having a penis, I'm more than qualified to explain why it's not OK to modify a person's body without consent.'

Woman sentenced to five years after biting off boyfriend's eyebrow

Matt · 5 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An Arkansas woman has been sentenced to five years in prison for slicing open her ex-boyfriend's hand with a knife and biting off one of his eyebrows when he tried to break off the relationship, law enforcement authorities said on Friday.

Latosha Wilbourn, 34, admitted to slashing her 55-year-old former companion during an argument in January 2015 at the home the two shared at Hot Springs, a resort city about 50 miles southwest of Little Rock, police said.

The victim in the attack, Charles Willis Jr., received more than a dozen stitches to his hand and treatment for a bruise to his head after being struck with a stick, police said.'

Feminist Internet: Men Proposing to Women Is Rape Culture

Mastodon · 5 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to a piece in the feminist blog Bustle, the tradition of men proposing women is “problematic” because it “perpetuates rape culture.”

Yes — not “problematic” because it perpetuates recklessly emotional social media posts, but because it “perpetuates rape culture.”

"The stereotype that men must get women to date them or marry them or sleep with them and that it’s up to women to respond can be problematic — not just because it discourages women from going after what they want, but also because it encourages men to pursue what they want at a woman’s expense,” Suzannah Weiss writes in a piece titled “6 Marriage Traditions That Reinforce Rape Culture.”

“Putting what men pursue over what women want perpetuates rape culture,” she continues.'

Australia: International Women's Day should be a holiday: activist

Mastodon · 5 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mother-of-three Juliana Nkrumah believes International Womens Day should be a national holiday.

The Quakers Hill resident believes that women deserve a day off from work to celebrate "sisterhood and the milestones achieved for women's rights".

...

"International Women's Day is a day that our forbearers made an effort to highlight the situation of all women in work and society, to really push and advocate for changes to bring rights to women," Ms Nkrumah said.

The day is celebrated as an official holiday in 27 countries and in the United States, the whole month of March is recognised as Women's History Month.'

Swedish group wants 'legal abortions' for men

Matt · 6 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men who don't want to become fathers should be permitted to have a "legal abortion" up to the 18th week of a woman's pregnancy, say the young liberals.

The cut-off date coincides with the last week in which a woman can terminate a pregnancy in Sweden.

"This means a man would renounce the duties and rights of parenthood," LUF Väst chairman Marcus Nilsen told The Local.

By signing up for a "legal abortion" then, a man would not have to pay maintenance for his child, but neither would he have any right to meet the child.'

Actress admits she wasn't 'almost raped' by Uber driver

Mastodon · 8 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Teen Mom OG" star Farrah Abraham, who last week claimed that an Uber driver "almost raped" her, now acknowledges that he never tried to lay a hand on her, but instead was just "looking at her lecherously" and that "it could have escalated into a rape situation."

Abraham now says, "I got into the car and the gentleman was looking me up and down."

Abraham described how in January 2015 she ordered an Uber to pick her up from a hotel in Jericho, LI. She claims the driver asked her to walk down the road to his car instead of picking her up front of the hotel, and then turned around to stare at her as she got in. She said she felt so uncomfortable that she immediately got out of the car.'

Senate chairman demands Department of Education ‘immediately rein in’ its Title IX ‘abuses’

Mastodon · 8 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lankford minced no words with King:

"I again call on you personally to clarify that these policies are not required by Title IX, but reflect only one of various ways schools may choose to develop and implement policies for the prevention and remedy of sexual harassment and sexual violence that best meet the needs of their students and are compliant with federal law. I further ask that you immediately rein in the regulatory abuses within the Department of Education and take measures to ensure that all existing and future guidance documents issued by your agency are clearly and firmly rooted in statutory authority."

The senator is greatly annoyed that the department keeps citing its own earlier guidance as justifying its later guidance.'

State University announces the planned elimination of 6 teams and roster caps on men's teams

Mastodon · 8 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Triggered by budget concerns, the plan to cut and cap teams will follow the proportionality playbook in order to comply with Title IX's gender quota.

Because St. Cloud State is cutting two women's teams with four men's teams, the only option the school has meet Title IX compliance standards is proportionality. Although there are technically three ways to comply with Title IX, only proportionality has protected schools when they face litigation.

St. Cloud State undergraduate student enrollment is almost 50%-50% with 4,492 male and 4,488 female students according to US Department of Education website http://ope.ed.gov/athletics/

The site shows gender ratio of 60% male to 40% female athletes for Saint Cloud State. According to reports, the program cuts will eliminate 24 female athletes and 92 male athletes. Roster quotas on baseball, football, men's swimming, and wrestling will eliminate more male players in order to bring the school to a 50-50% gender ratio.'

"Feminism has failed and needs a radical rethink"

Mastodon · 8 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We knew then that legal equality was only the starting point. We understood that real gender equity would require radical changes to macho cultural power structures. So we planned and discussed the ways we could revalue what matters and eliminate gender-biased, macho-designed cultural dominance.

Despite fixing most of the legal barriers, the cultural changes failed to follow. There were other changes happening. By the 1980s the arrival of neoliberalism as the dominant political paradigm slowed most social progress, as market models took over. These changed the political focus from progressive social change to market choices and individualised material success.
...
These necessary strengths are undermined by the macho tendencies in current political directions. We need to recognise the importance of social connections, cultural needs and care of others that economics doesn't cover; to balance material and social stability.

And, as de Beauvoir said, women need to decline to be the "other", to refuse to be a party to the deal. This would mean for women to renounce all the advantages conferred upon them by their alliance with the superior caste. That's feminism.'

Missouri professor refuses to accept firing

Mastodon · 8 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A University of Missouri professor who was fired for trying to block a journalist from recording a campus protest is fighting back.

Melissa Click appealed the decision and is now getting support from the American Association for University Professors.

The AAUP announced Monday that it would be investigating Click's firing.

Click, an assistant professor of communications, said she was pleased by the news. She maintains that she was fired without due process when the university's Board of Curators "overstepped their authority."

According to a university spokesperson, Click was fired for failing to meet the standards expected of faculty members.'

International Women’s Day Explained For Men

Mastodon · 8 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First up: What are women?

Long-standing assumptions about the difference between men and women have been eroded in recent decades, as we begin to understand how our traditional notions of both biological sex and social gender roles impose artificial binaries on a far more fluid reality.

However, as a broad rule of thumb: Women are like men, but with better personalities, deeper friendships, and structural disadvantage imposed by societal norms.

But wait: Why do they need a whole day to themselves?

This may seem like overkill! Why should just 49.6% of the world’s population get a whole 0.27% of the year’s days to themselves? Women can often be greedy in this way, like when they live to be older than men, hogging all the life.'

Valentine's Day kidnapping in Denver was fake

mens_issues · 9 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. One more for the false allegations file.

'Denver police say the report of a woman kidnapped in broad daylight, in the middle of the afternoon on Valentine's Day didn't happen.

Last month, the woman told police van pulled up to the corner of E. Hampden Ave. and S. Yosemite St. on February 14 and the men inside solicited her for sex. The victim told police that when she refused, the men forcibly kidnapped her, but she managed to escape.

"Through the course of the investigation, detectives determined there is no danger or threat to the community regarding this incident," Denver police said Tuesday.

When asked for more information, officials said, "After further investigation, the report was determined to be unfounded (the incident didn't occur)."

Denver police have not yet said if the woman will face charges.'

International Women’s Day isn’t the time to be pushing faulty pay gap statistics

Mastodon · 9 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'International Women’s Day is a time to celebrate the vast achievements of women worldwide, while acknowledging the real struggles and oppression millions of women and girls continue to face, including violence, inequality under the law and limited access to education.

It is not a time to push faulty pay gap statistics.

Yet that is exactly what happened yesterday. Ahead of International Women’s Day, Robert Half – a specialised recruitment agency – calculated that women in the UK will earn roughly £300,000 less than their male counterparts throughout their career, putting their estimated pay gap figure between men and women at 24%.

Robert Half’s estimation is wildly inflated compared to the Office of National Statistic’s calculations, which estimate the pay gap to be 9.4% (the lowest on record since these comparisons began). This huge differential boils down to the latter’s decision to control for as many mitigating factors as possible in an effort to come up with the most accurate figure. As such, the ONS compares the median salaries of men and women on an hourly basis (to control for hours worked), omits bonuses from its calculations (as additional pay often reflects the overtime an employee has put in), and conducts separate calculations for part-time and full-time employees (the former paying women more on average than men).'

If the punishment is a 500-word essay, then it probably wasn't sexual assault

Mastodon · 9 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Occam's Razor says that the simpler explanation is the preferred one.

Students seem oblivious to simple answers when it comes to anything involving sexual harassment and assault on campus, though.

That explains why they are rising up against a facially ludicrous punishment against an alleged rapist at Gustavus Adolphus College, Inside Higher Ed reports.

The Minnesota liberal arts college, which is affiliated with the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, required a student found responsible for sexual assault to write a 500-word essay, work "with a mentor" and abstain from "some campus activities," according to his accuser, Shentoria Cobbs.'

Boy Takes Home Top Prize in Competition for Girls in STEM

Mastodon · 9 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pretty Curious, a U.K. program aimed at getting girls interested in STEM careers, asks on its website, “Why aren’t more girls pursuing science?” Some critics of the program think the answer may have something to do with Pretty Curious granting a 13-year-old boy the winner in a STEM competition this week.

Out of more than 100 entries, the boy’s game console that harnesses energy through thumb controls cinched the top prize for energy company EDF’s Pretty Curious Challenge. While the program was originally created to keep girls interested in STEM, the officials at Pretty Curious decided to open up the competition to all U.K. kids ages 11 to 16.

...

The irony of a boy winning a competition whose stated purpose is to “spark the imagination of 11- to 16-year-old girls, encouraging them to pursue science-based subjects at school and in their future careers” was quickly pointed out on social media.

...

EDF responded to the complaints by saying that the competition was gender-neutral, telling the BBC it was opened up to both boys and girls in an attempt to promote fairness.

...

“This is a fail on so many levels,” Suw Charman-Anderson, the founder of celebratory women in STEM event Ada Lovelace Day, wrote in a blog post on Saturday. “Extending participation to boys rather undermines [Pretty Curious’] message, and when a boy wins, it says, ‘Girls! You will always come second to boys!’"'

The Telegraph: "Seven things women are definitely better at than men"

Mastodon · 9 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

This article appears in the men's lifestyle section:

1. Multitasking
2. Job interviews
3. Driving
4. Empathising
5. Running successful businesses
6. Coding
7. Not being ill

In contrast, check out the seven things men are definitely better at than women. (written by a man)

1. Drinking
2. Going bald
3. Getting ready
4. Going to the toilet standing up
5. Shopping
6. Making it to the end of the street without being ogled
7. Ageing

Philosophical Society debates ethics of neonatal circumcision

Mastodon · 9 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Uriah Burke began his talk with a warning.

The Ph.D. philosophy student cautioned the audience that his lecture slides depicted “extraordinarily graphic” images of people in pain and invited those sensitive to such images to avert their eyes or leave the classroom.

The images in question did not depict battlefield carnage or grotesque violence, but a familiar and widespread surgical practice that several of the students gathered in Park Hall were likely to have experienced firsthand.

According to the National Hospital Discharge Survey, almost 70 percent of males born in the northeastern United States in 1994 underwent circumcision, the surgical removal of the foreskin.

The practice of female circumcision, the removal of all or part of the clitoris, is a far more controversial practice, practiced mainly in East Africa.

On Tuesday night, Burke presented to the Buffalo Philosophical Society that the widespread application of circumcision to young boys and girls alike is an unethical practice that violates an individual’s right to consent and autonomy. The debate sparked strong discussion from both sides and ran a half an hour past its 9 p.m. end time.

“Neonates [newborn children], uncontroversially, cannot consent to anything,” Burke said.'

$412,930 spent on relationship between gender and glaciers

Mastodon · 9 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Congratulations, taxpayers of America: You've just spent $412,930 on a "scientific" paper on the "relationship between gender and glaciers."

That's what the National Science Foundation dropped on "Glaciers, gender and science," 10,000-plus words of gobbledygook from University of Oregon prof Mark Carey.

Sure, that's roughly 40 bucks a word — but many of them are big words.

The study urges scientists to take a "feminist political ecology and feminist postcolonial" approach when studying melting ice caps and climate change. Hey, it's not really global doom unless it comes with full-bore cutting-edge social-justice buzzwords.

Another taste: "The feminist glaciology framework generates robust analysis of gender, power and epistemologies in dynamic social-ecological systems, thereby leading to more just and equitable science and human-ice interactions."'

"The Future of Men" explores evolving gender roles

Mastodon · 9 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With the role of men in society evolving, and a power shift toward women at work and home, the "traditional" male is dying out, according to author Jack Myers.

Myers argues men will "be increasingly defined, dominated, and controlled by women" in his new book, "The Future of Men: Masculinity in the Twenty-First Century."

"These young men are not their fathers, they're not their grandfathers. Young men who are growing up more and more in fatherless homes, growing up in homes where the woman is out-earning her husband, where they're both working -- they're not just defying traditional gender norms," Myers said Tuesday on "CBS This Morning."

Myers said younger men are "out-educated by women" and being "out-performed" by women economically, defining the last generation of "traditional" men as those in their late 20s.'

Canada Bankrolling More Female Directors to Close Gender Gap

Matt · 9 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Those urging Hollywood to close the pay and opportunity gap for women directors should cast an envious eye to Canada.

The National Film Board of Canada, the country's government-funded film producer, on Tuesday announced it will ensure at least half of its productions will be directed by women, and half of all production financing will go towards helping women tell their own stories.

"Today, I'm making a firm, ongoing commitment to full gender parity, which I hope will help to lead the way for the industry as a whole," NFB head Claude Joli-Coeur said in a statement. The public filmmaker backs auteur documentaries, animation, digital projects and feature films by homegrown filmmakers.'

NPO: Tipping Point in Massachusetts

Matt · 9 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Do you feel helpless to change the family courts of Massachusetts? Do you feel you can't fight the system? You've spent $80,000 on legal fees and all it got you was every other weekend?

This is the moment when you CAN change the system. Two critical issues hang in the balance this week in Massachusetts. If you call your legislators on Beacon Hill RIGHT NOW (details below) - and get a couple of friends or family to do the same - you can topple mountains. And you can support two crucial bills with one call!
...
S834 has a lot of support and momentum on Beacon Hill. But it is opposed by the bar associations -- the lawyers. And its fate hangs in the balance right now in the Judiciary Committee.

Please call your STATE SENATOR TODAY and ask him/her to support S834. You can find out the name and phone number of your senator HERE.'

Powerful state lawmaker calls for Georgia Tech president's ouster

Matt · 9 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The war between state Rep. Earl Ehrhart and Georgia Tech over how the way the school handles accusations of sexual assault just got kicked up a notch or two.

The Powder Springs Republican, who chairs the House committee in charge of funding Georgia universities, said Tech president Bud Peterson should resign over his school's sexual complaint process, which he said fails to give accused students due process. Ehrhart also said he tried to send Peterson a message by slashing the school's request for a $47 million building.

...

The legislator said Peterson needs to "clean house and recognize that people are innocent until proven guilty."

"We grant that to criminals, why not to students?" he asked.'

Rabbis, Cantors, and Other Jewish Leaders Perform New Type of Welcoming Rituals

Matt · 9 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many Rabbis are welcoming intact males into the Jewish community, and a growing number of Rabbis feel that surgical circumcision is no longer appropriate in the 21st century. perform covenant ceremonies without surgical circumcision, and many more will do so upon request. These include Rabbis in the Reform, Conservative, Reconstructionist and many other branches of Judaism.

Hundreds of thousands of Jewish males around the world remain intact. Most Eastern European and South American Jews remain intact, and many Western European Jews have ceased circumcision, seeing it as a barbaric remnant of pre-civilized times. Both Reform Judaism and Humanistic Judaism welcome intact Jews.

Increasingly young Jewish parents are choosing not to circumcise their newborn sons. Many of these parents want a welcoming covenant ceremony that affirms their Jewish faith without damaging their son's body. This movement exists in theUnited States, Israel, and around the world. Intactivists are those who believe that child circumcision is a violation of human rights and civil liberties, and a growing number of Jews are adopting this position. Jewish leaders, Rabbis, and scholars are evolving tradition to create a covenant without circumcision.'

ESPN To Air 30 for 30 "Fantastic Lies" on Duke Lacrosse Team

Matt · 9 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ESPN has released a new trailer for the next installment of its 30 for 30 series and it's set to be a doozy. "Fantastic Lies" is the story of the infamous Duke lacrosse team case, and was directed by Marina Zenovich, who is famous for her Emmy-winning documentary Roman Polanski: Wanted and Desired.
...
The film is set to debut exactly 10 years to the day from the night of the party that started the controversy, March 13, 2016.

For those not familiar with the case, on March 13, 2006 Duke's lacrosse team threw a party. In the aftermath, Crystal Gail Mangum – a student at North Carolina Central University who had been working part-time as a stripper – alleged that she had been raped at the party. On March 15 the rape investigation went public and on April 18, team members Reade Seligmann and Collin Finnerty were arrested and indicted on charges of first degree forcible rape, first degree sexual offense and kidnapping. Former team captain David Evans was indicted for the same offenses on May 15.'

Task Force Proposes Harvard Expel Students Who Join All-Male Clubs

Mastodon · 10 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A task force charged with examining sexual assault at Harvard University is recommending that the school bar students from joining its all-male final clubs, blaming the single-sex organizations for perpetuating a “harmful sexual culture” on campus.

The task force argued in a new report that the all-male organizations, which have no formal relationship with the university, should be forced to accept women in order to fix the problem of sexual assault on Harvard’s campus. The report, published this week, followed attempts by the Harvard administration to compel the all-male final clubs to accept women, an effort that the Washington Free Beacon previously reported has angered graduate members of the organizations and made current student members fear for their reputations.

The report from the Harvard Task Force on the Prevention of Sexual Assault was accompanied by several appendices, including one from the task force’s so-called “outreach and communications subcommittee” that presented a set of “ideas” for the administration to deal with the final clubs. One of the proposals suggested that the school threaten students with expulsion if they join an all-male final club.

“Either don’t allow simultaneous membership in final clubs and college enrollment; or allow clubs to transition to all-gender inclusion with equal gender membership and leadership,” the subcommittee wrote. The latter would involve the administration “provisionally register[ing] all-gender clubs for monitoring” and “requir[ing] they have ongoing sexual assault education and assigned sober bystanders at social events.”
...
“Cultures that reflect male control and exclusivity encourage the marginalization of women and assumptions about sexual entitlement. Inclusive membership would necessarily shift that culture at the same time that it would affirm fundamental principles of equity,” the report concluded. The task force encouraged the administration to work with the final clubs to accept women and, if such conversations should fail, “not rule out any alternative approaches.”'

Canadian university mandates 45 percent quota for ‘self-identified diversity categories’

Mastodon · 10 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Taylor says the program is completely missing the real minority among teachers:

As is common at teachers’ college across the country, there’s a distinct lack of men at the University of Manitoba. Enrollment in the faculty of education is 72 per cent female, and has been that way for decades. Across the country, 75 per cent of all education degrees are earned by women. If teachers’ colleges are meant to mirror society, it can’t be overlooked that half the population is male, especially given the well-established importance of male role models in combating high drop-out rates among boys.

This is how the university justifies the gender gap:

In explaining away its complete lack of interest in correcting a massive gender imbalance within its walls, the faculty of education’s website claims, “While classroom teachers are predominantly female, those in positions of power within the teaching force (principals and superintendents) remain predominantly male.”

The only place left for men is science, technology, engineering and math, and that’s under attack:

Countless scholarships, outreach programs and other special programs aim to lure, cajole and frog-march more female students into STEM degrees in the name of greater diversity. At the University of Waterloo, renowned for its high-tech success, administration has endorsed a United Nations Women campaign called HeForShe that aims to boost female enrollment in STEM subjects by, among other things, requiring “mandatory gender sensitization programs for first-year students;” male students will thus be informed they’re to blame for a lack of women in their courses.'

Barbara Kay: Flattening feminism's campus myths

Mastodon · 10 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On the occasion of a prestigious award in her field last month, associate professor Elena Bennett in McGill University's Natural Resources Sciences and School of Environment was interviewed by the Montreal Gazette on the subject of women and science.

Bennett focused on the well-documented post-undergrad career stall for women in STEM (science, technology, engineering and mathematics). She attributes the gender disproportion at the high end — U.S. women comprise about 20 per cent of tenure track positions in math, 12 per cent in physics and 10 per cent in electrical engineering — to systemic misogyny, high-intensity work environments and a lack of support for mothers. Her solution: more research grants for women, no late-afternoon meetings and fewer committee obligations.

Bennett's perspective is standard in doctrinaire feminist circles. Ideologues believe the obstacles to numerical parity for women in STEM fields are external, and can be overcome with affirmative action. Progressive politicians support them. In 2008 Hillary Clinton deplored the fact that "women comprise 43 per cent of the workforce but only 23 per cent of scientists and engineers," insisting that the government take "diversity into account when awarding education and research grants." To suggest that women self-select out of STEM careers for the same reason men self-select out of early childhood education — because it is less appealing to them than other careers — has become politically incorrect.'

India: Man implicated twice in rape case by lover set free

Matt · 10 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The court while acquitting Pheruddin in its judgement mentioned that the complainant had given different statements that had numerous contradictions and inconsistencies, which remain unexplained. The court also observed that considering the veracity of such cases, men implicated in false cases be called "rape case survivor".

Judge Nivedita Anil Sharma while acquitting the man said, "No one discusses the dignity and honour of a man. All are fighting for the rights, honour and dignity of women. Laws for protection of women are being made, which may be misused by a woman but where is the law to protect a man, where he is being persecuted and implicated in false cases. Perhaps, now is the time to take a stand for a man."

Pheruddin, who runs a business of construction material, says he faced heavy financial losses, besides having to deal with the dent on his reputation. His family, who stood with him also suffered in his absence. "My wife had to take a loan of Rs 6 lakh to meet daily expenses. My family had to sell off land to carry out the legal expenditure. Now that I am back, my focus is on repaying the loans and getting back my life on track."'

Former faculty member admits to fabricating physical assault

Mastodon · 11 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former fixed-term faculty member pleaded guilty in January to falsely reporting a misdemeanor, after telling police she was physically assaulted because of her sexual orientation. She was sentenced last month.

Mari Poindexter, who is on leave from Central Michigan University, posted a detailed account of being assaulted for her sexual orientation on Facebook in August 2015. On Aug. 20, Poindexter told police she was harassed at a Toby Keith concert at Soaring Eagle Casino by a man who called her homophobic slurs. She is charged with two counts of falsely reporting a misdemeanor and sentenced to six months of probation.

On the night she said she was assaulted, she was at the Cabin when she said she saw the man again. Poindexter told police she left the bar to drop a friend off, then headed back to look for her keys. At this time, the man confronted her in the parking lot, she said, and punched her in the eye.'

University System of Georgia gives students accused of rape a slightly more fair process

Matt · 11 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Georgia State Rep. Earl Ehrhart, who holds the power of the purse over public universities in the state, is getting some results from hiscrusade to protect due process for accused students.

The University System of Georgia Board of Regents voted Wednesdayto slightly improve the prospects for accused students in disciplinary proceedings for sexual assault (one policy) and other conduct violations (another policy) across the system.

The changes are described as a streamlining of disparate policies at each institution, and will take effect July 1. Some provisions:

“Institutions may not allow their investigators to train student conduct panels.” This appears to be a response to complaints from accused students that investigators are essentially serving as judge and jury, overriding any sort of checks and balances.'

Student’s Family Harassed over Milo Yiannopoulos Event, Administration Silent

Mastodon · 11 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'University of Pittsburgh student Doug Steeber has been harassed by his classmates following an event the College Republicans club hosted with Breitbart Tech editor Milo Yiannopoulos.

Over the past week, Steeber has been on the receiving end of a vicious campaign that has involved students calling Steeber’s parents at their home late at night. Despite the threats against Steeber and his family, the University has yet to make a statement condemning the behavior.

Yiannopoulos spoke at the University of Pittsburgh on February 29th at the invitation of the school’s College Republicans club in an event that stirred significant controversy on the campus. Although tensions were high in the days leading up to Yiannopoulos’ lecture, the event went smoothly with the exception of a few interruptions from student protesters.'

Men’s issues not an attack

mens_issues · 12 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Nice article in The Advocate. Excerpt:

'Do men need rights? The right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness? Do you advocate for men’s rights?

The first standard argument against men’s human rights is that men have no problems and should check their privilege. Second, addressing men’s problems is a misogynistic attack on women. Third, men’s problems are real, but feminism is for men too, so men’s advocacy is redundant. Fourth, women’s problems are worse, so men’s should be ignored.

Shouting “bigot” is easy. Bigots do so frequently. If you convince people your foe eats kittens you’ll trick them onto your side, but opinion isn’t everything. Ad hominem can’t turn right into wrong.

The men’s rights movement is worse than misogynist; it’s competition. If their gender relations monopoly breaks, feminists may have to start keeping their promises, or even share their countless billions in donations and government funding.

Most men like helping women. It appeases that cloud of hormones our brains release at the sight of a neotenous face. But when suicide is the leading killer of men under 50 in the U.K. it’s time to rethink things.'

Canadian PM: 'We Men Have To Be Feminists Too'

Mastodon · 12 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Canadian Prime Minister Justin Trudeau said Friday that gender equality is a central part of his agenda -- and if it's to succeed, men need to chip in more.

"It can't just be women who are feminists. We men have to be feminists too," he said. "And it's about time we said that more often."

Trudeau has been in Washington this week for a state visit with President Barack Obama. On Friday, he spoke to a progressive audience brought together by the nonprofits Center for American Progress and Canada 2020.

When Trudeau took office in November, women made up half his Cabinet -- a higher proportion of women than in Obama's administration.'

'Mattress Protest' lawsuit dismissed

Mastodon · 12 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A United States District Court judge dismissed Paul Nungesser's Title IX lawsuit against Columbia University on Friday, saying his allegations did not constitute sex-based discrimination in a way that violated federal law.

Nungesser, who was accused of sexual assault by Emma Sulkowicz and other Columbia students, filed the lawsuit against Columbia, its trustees and President Lee Bollinger and an art professor last April. Nungesser alleged that by allowing Sulkowicz to carry her mattress in protest of his being on campus after the school found him not responsible for sexual misconduct, the school was complicit in her sex-based harassment of him.

Title IX is the federal law that prohibits sex-based discrimination in federally funded educational programs. Until recently, it was mainly the accusers in campus sexual assault cases who filed Title IX complaints against their schools, primarily with the U.S. Department of Education Office for Civil Rights. When accused male students sued their schools, they did so for lack of due process or breach of contract claims.'

Harvard economist says closing the US gender wage gap isn't as simple as 'equal pay for equal work'

Mastodon · 12 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"What economists do is they use data to figure out whether the individuals are the same; they try to make them comparable as possible; they squeeze out these differences and productive attributes; they look for individuals who have the same education, the same labor-force participation rates over their life cycle, etc.," Goldin explains to Freakonomics Radio host Stephen J. Dubner.

When doing this, we still see a gender wage gap. But as Goldin ponders, "does that mean that women are receiving lower pay for equal work? That is possibly the case in certain places, but by and large, it's not that. It's something else."

When looking at gender earnings gaps by occupation, Goldin found something that might surprise people.

By comparing the 469 occupations in the US Census, she found that women disproportionately holding certain jobs only accounted for about 25% of the difference in earnings between men and women. Factors within each occupation overwhelmingly accounted for differences in pay.'

Feminist Glacier Guy: You’re Not Educated Enough To Get My Research

Mastodon · 13 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Oregon historian who wrote a study claiming glaciers are sexist said in an interview Friday that the general public isn’t educated enough about feminism to understand his research.

In the interview, Dr. Mark Carey claims that when his studies are “described to nonspecialists, the research can be misunderstood and potentially misrepresented.”

“People and societies impose their values on glaciers when they discuss, debate, and study them—which is what we mean when we say that ice is not just ice,” Carey said in the Friday interview with Science Magazine. “Glaciers become the platform to express people’s own views about politics, economics, cultural values, and social relations (such as gender relations).”

Carey’s original study concluded glacier research is intertwined with gender relations, masculine culture, geopolitics, institutional power and racism — these apparently led to to glacier-related academic and governmental jobs being predominantly filled by men. The academic complained “how men’s voices have dominated the research” and lamented that “power and colonialism have shaped the science” when discussing the research on the university website.'

UK: Women-only in a bid to end culture of 'too male and too pale' MPs

Mastodon · 13 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Liberal Democrats plan to introduce all-women, gay and disabled shortlists at the next election to reduce the culture of ‘too male and too pale’ MPs.

Potential seats will also be earmarked for Asians, blacks and other ethnic minorities, as part of sweeping changes to the social make up of the party.

The party - which was almost wiped out at the last General Election - currently has no women and all of its MPs are white.

Its leader, Tim Farron, hopes to impose-all women shortlists on seats currently held by their eights MPs should they choose to step down in 2020.

He also wants it to become the first party to have disabled-only shortlists for candidates in winnable seats.

Mr Farron will take a motion to the party’s spring conference in York this weekend designed to broaden its representation in Parliament.'

Actress Banned From Uber After Making False Rape Claims About Driver

Mastodon · 13 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Farrah Abraham [link added] might want to stick to carpooling from now on.

The Teen Mom OG star was banned from using Uber after admittedly lying about getting “almost raped” by one of the car service’s drivers.

On a recent episode of her podcast, Farrah & Friends, the 24-year-old alleged that she was almost sexually assaulted by a driver while being picked up from a Long Island hotel in January 2015.

“An Uber driver almost raped me,” she revealed on the show, claiming that on-and-off boyfriend Simon Saran and the driver got into an argument afterward.

“My non-boyfriend threw him in the window and almost broke his car window,” she claimed. “The Persian dude ran after me. The cops were like, ‘You’re harassing her’ and I was like, ‘See I told you!’ and then I went to bed.”'

Duke President on False Rape Accusations: 'Distracting,' 'I don't spend my time looking back on this.'

Mastodon · 13 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"None of the campus administrators who branded the young men as rapists before the evidence was collected ever faced consequences, and it appears they have no remorse for their actions.

Richard Brodhead is still president of Duke, and in an interview with the Duke Chronicle, said he was "certainly at ease in my conscience" regarding the way he and his administration treated the innocent students who were falsely accused. Brodhead also said "I don't spend my time looking back on this" and said the whole incident "was distracting."

Oh, so sorry that forever tarnishing the reputations of innocent students was "distracting" for you, Mr. president.

In 2007, Brodhead showed a little more remorse, calling his actions "a mistake" and apologizing for what he had done. Yet now, Brodhead appears to be just fine with what he had done to the students and their families.

K.C. Johnson, who co-wrote the book on the case, pointed to a statement Brodhead made in 2006, in the heat of the accusation, where he presumed the guilt of his own students and blamed them for possibly being falsely accused.

"If our students did what is alleged, it is appalling to the worst degree," Brodhead said back then. "If they didn't do it, whatever they did is bad enough."

Brodhead isn't the only administrator who seems to have no remorse for his actions. Members of the "Group of 88" – faculty who distributed advertisements asking "what does a social disaster sound like?" and quotes from students condemning the lacrosse players as if they were guilty – have tried to rewrite history regarding their actions. At least 50 members of the 88 are still employed by Duke, and many others have gone on to other schools.

One former Duke lecturer, Christine Beaule, claimed to the Duke Chronicle that the flyer "wasn't about the kids at all." Sure it wasn't, Beaule, sure it wasn't; it just included comments from students claiming "the kids" were racists and rapists."'

University of Texas ‘Blueprint’ for Campus Police Raises Fairness Concerns

Matt · 13 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As Inside Higher Ed reported last week, the University of Texas System has come out with a manual aimed at training UT campus police officers to respond to reports of sexual assault in a more “victim-centered” way:

`Police officers at all 14 University of Texas campuses will soon be trained to follow new investigative protocols aimed at changing how campus law enforcement officers interview and support victims of sexual assault, the system announced today. A new 170-page manual, called “The Blueprint for Campus Police: Responding to Sexual Assault,” instructs the system’s 600 sworn police officers to replace “tradition with science” when investigating sexual violence.`

It is important that UT envisions a substantial role for law enforcement in responding to and investigating claims of sexual assault on campus. Sexual assault is a serious crime, andFIRE has long argued that campus judiciaries are ill-equipped to handle it alone. We are happy to see that UT recommends memoranda of understanding (MOUs) between universities and law enforcement, which would “set forth a shared understanding about the roles and responsibilities” of each entity. (Of course, whether an MOU is helpful or insufficient depends on the content of the document, which cannot be evaluated until it is presented.)'

SAVE: Lawmakers Double-Down on Campus Due Process Abuses

Matt · 14 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'In an effort to restore due process rights on campuses, state and federal lawmakers have taken determined steps in recent weeks to press college administrators and a federal oversight agency to uphold constitutionally based rights for students accused of sexual assault.

In the most dramatic development, Georgia Rep. Earl Ehrhart, chairman of the House appropriations committee, disapproved a $47 million funding request for Georgia Tech University over due process concerns for accused students.

Ehrhart then called out the Georgia Tech administrators. “The president and the administration are just clueless when it comes to due process on that campus and protecting all those kids. If I have to talk to another brokenhearted mother about their fine son where any allegation is a conviction and they toss these kids out of school after three and a half years, sometimes just before graduation, it’s just tragic,” Ehrhart charged (1).'

'Manspreaders' in San Francisco could face $500 fines

Mastodon · 14 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'People who take up more than one seat on trains in San Francisco could be fined up to $500, in a plan that could be see 'manspreaders' targeted.

The director of Bay Area Rapid Transit (BART), a rail system that serves San Francisco's Bay Area, proposed the penalties for anyone using an extra seat for a reason other than their body size or a medical condition.

Joel Keller said they should initially be fined $100, with $200 fines for their second offence - with repeat offenders facing charges of up to $500.

It follows a statement from San Francisco Municiple Transport Agency in January that promised to work on solving the rising problem of 'manspreading': the male practice of sitting with legs spread widely, in a position that occupies a lot of room.'

Actor sees sexism 'double standards' in street propositions

Mastodon · 14 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Henry Cavill, the Superman actor, believes women exhibit double standards in sexism when it comes to strangers propositioning him in the street.

The star of Batman v Superman also experiences a “deep and nasty backlash” levelled against his partners because of his fame.

Cavill, who is dating Tara King, a 19-year-old Bristol University student, has questioned how women would feel if they were the targets of the same propositions they fire at him.

He told the Sunday Times: “I do think there’s a bit of a double standard, you know.

“I mean, if a girl shouts something like ‘Oi, love, fancy a shag?’ to me as I walk past I do sometimes wonder how she’d feel if a builder said that to her.'

Dad orders DNA test, finds out he's the father of only one twin

Mastodon · 14 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vietnam has identified an extremely rare case of bi-paternal twins - twins with different fathers.

A set of twins born to a Vietnamese couple, whose names have not been released, were recently taken for testing because of stark differences in the children's appearances, according to local reports.

"Our Centre for Genetic Analysis and Technology lab has tested and found a pair of bi-paternal twins," Le Dinh Luong, president of the Genetic Association of Vietnam, told AFP.

"This is rare not only for Vietnam, but for the world," he said, explaining that the two children had different fathers but the same mother.'

The Triggering: A powerful defence of free speech against the professionally offended

Mastodon · 14 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In September last year, I came up with an idea. What if there was a day solely dedicated to annoying cultural authoritarians across the world? What if we all came together and collectively posted offensive content in defence of free speech? A day when media feminists and social justice warriors would be triggered 69 times a second – a day of "Triggering", if you will.

I jokingly tweeted out my master plan, not expecting anything to come of it. However, a screenshot of the tweet was shared all over Facebook and other realms of social media.

The reaction was overwhelmingly positive. With threats to our freedom of expression coming thick and fast both online and in the real world, I knew we had to go through with it.'

"The Feminist Cult Will Tolerate No Dissent"

Mastodon · 14 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you criticize feminism, feminists will label you as sexist and use unethical tactics to prevent your opinion from being heard.

This mentality is not unique to North Dakota State; in fact, it is the defining characteristic of feminism at academic institutions all over the world.

Feminists have a warped sense of ethics that leads them to believe their actions are justified.

They believe the world is ruled by the patriarchy, which is a series of social systems that benefits men at the expense of women. To feminists, the patriarchy represents the source of all evil in the world, and by fighting the patriarchy they are essentially working to create a utopia.'

Expelled Student Says He Will Sue Yale Over Dismissal

Matt · 14 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The lawyer for a Yale student expelled for sexual misconduct said he plans to sue the university.

Jack Montague, captain of the basketball team, was dismissed from Yale for unspecified reasons. The university has declined to comment and Montague has not been charged with a crime. Yale and New Haven police are not investigating.

"We strongly believe that the decision to expel Jack Montague was wrong, unfairly determined, arbitrary, and excessive by any rational measure," said Max Stern, lawyer for Montague, in a statement emailed to media Monday morning. "Yale has been oblivious to the catastrophic and irreparable damage resulting from these allegations and determinations."

"The expulsion not only deprives Jack of the degree which he was only three months short of earning, but has simultaneously destroyed both his educational and basketball careers," Stern said.'

Shaped by False Rape Case, Former Duke Lacrosse Player Becomes Lawyer

Mastodon · 15 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last night, ESPN aired the latest episode in its “30 for 30” documentary series, taking a close look at a 2006 case in which the U.S. justice system nearly fell down, when three members of Duke University’s men’s lacrosse team were wrongly accused of raping a stripper.

A prosecutor withdrew the case against all three defendants, and recently, one has pursued a career in the law: In 2014, Reade Seligmann joined the New Jersey law firm Connell Foley as an associate, after receiving his J.D. from Emory University School of Law.

The other two accused have since found jobs in finance: Collin Finnerty is an equity sales trader for Deutsche Bank in New York City, while David Evans is a senior associate at the consumer team at Apax Partners in New York.

The law firm Seligmann joined is the same firm that conducted an investigation into Rutgers University over its handling of former basketball coach Mike Rice, who resigned in 2013 after a video was released that showed him verbally attacking his players. Founded in 1938, Connell Foley has more than 140 lawyers and seven U.S. offices. It specializes in litigation, corporate law, intellectual property, construction law, real estate, bankruptcy, insurance and environmental law.'

Open your eyes, ladies, girl power is not about demonising men

Mastodon · 15 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If a non-gender-specific fairy offered me a wish it would be that we abandon the type of helpless feminism that seems to be emerging. This kind of feminism enshrines victimhood and men as perverts, bullies and misogynists. This kind of feminism thinks that the simplistic answer is that men are wrong and women are right, and allows women to whine and exaggerate wrongs. The current policing of sex, the hysteria that male students are pillaging university campuses and the demand for consent workshops, rest on the assumption that all men are potential rapists and therefore women are doomed to live as victims. Some modern feminists also don't want to engage in aspects of life they disagree with. Instead, they want to silence what they don't like through censorship and criminalisation. They avoid debate and launch Twitter wars on anybody with diverging views. They want the entire world to be their own 'safe space' and it's a sad departure from what real girl power should be about.'

Men Dress As Sex Slaves To Support Sexual Assault Survivor

Mastodon · 15 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'During her freshman year at Wesleyan University, Karmenife Paulino was raped in the basement of the Psi Upsilon fraternity. Up until her junior year, Paulino said nothing of the assault, feeling that, as a woman of color, the attack on her body and mind would go unrecognized.
...
For the resulting photo series, titled "Reclamation," Paulino collaborated with friend and photographer Tess Altman to reclaim her campus, her body and her life. In the images, Paulino dons dominatrix attire -- "something I feel powerful and really beautiful and confident in" -- and revisits both Psi Upsilon and Eclectic House, assuming positions of authority and control.'

"I'm Broken": The Duke Lacrosse Rape Accuser, 10 Years Later

Mastodon · 15 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'You know who Crystal Mangum is, even if you don't know her name.

Ten years ago, on the night of March 13, 2006, Mangum and another woman were hired by members of the Duke Lacrosse team to dance and strip at a house party. Early the next morning, she reported to Durham police that she had been sexually assaulted by some of the lacrosse players.

Mangum lives on in the public consciousness as one of America's most infamous rape accusers. She is aware of this even though she's currently serving a minimum 14 year, 2 month prison sentence for second-degree murder in an unrelated case.

"It's so hard for me to share my story with strangers," Mangum said over the phone from the North Carolina Correctional Institution for Women. "I've had so many times… where I share my story and it got misconstrued or people made up what they wanted to believe out of the story."

She maintained that she was assaulted on the night of March 13, 2006. She said that the incident was "humiliating" and she "was violated, and then there was nothing that could be done about it."

Mangum also doesn't believe she is to blame for the second degree murder of her boyfriend, Reginald Daye, for which she was convicted in 2013. The state, she said, has "not [been] sympathetic to my experience of violence and the things that I've been through."'

"A Marine's Convictions"

Mastodon · 15 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Innocent.

That's what Marine Maj. Mark Thompson declared the first time we met.

He'd been fighting to prove it ever since two young women accused the former history instructor at the U.S. Naval Academy of having sex with them while they were students. One of the women said the 2011 liaison — amid a drunken night of strip poker at his Annapolis home — was consensual and part of an ongoing relationship. The other called it rape.

None of it was true, Thompson said as we sat at a quiet table inside the Hay-Adams hotel bar called Off the Record — ironic, considering how eagerly he wanted The Washington Post to write about the way the military had handled his case.

"They railroaded me," he would say later.'

Psychology Today: The Big Stall

mens_issues · 16 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

What is your opinion of this article? It does make some good points, but leaves out some as well. Excerpt:

'As women advance, however, men are stalling in their development, increasingly stuck in place and even backsliding as postindustrial American culture fractures along educational, economic, and behavioral fault lines. Almost daily, reports announce that men are lagging by almost every measure there is—school enrollment rates (71 percent of female high school graduates enrolled in college in 2012 versus 61 percent of males, according to the Pew Research Center), number of graduate degrees (women earned 61 percent of master's and 51 percent of doctor's degrees in 2012–2013, finds the National Center for Education Statistics), and labor force participation. As Princeton economists Anne Case and Angus Deaton report in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, data now show that, uniquely among advanced countries, the physical and mental health of American men has begun to decline, seen especially in rising rates of suicide and accidental death due to substance abuse among white middle-aged men.'

U of Texas tells its police to hide evidence that favors students accused of rape

Matt · 16 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Advocates for due process in campus rape adjudications have long sought to remove college officials from investigations because their various conflicts of interest render them unable to provide basic fairness to either party. (See this recent column by Barnard College student Toni Airaksinen on her involvement in sexual-misconduct cases.)

That's why it's troubling those advocates to see how the University of Texas-Austin is attempting to turn a neutral institution – its campus police – into an advocate for one party.

Its new "blueprint," flagged by Inside Higher Ed, tells campus police to conduct worseinvestigations. UT-Austin's Institute on Domestic Violence and Sexual Assault developed the manual, which tells police to ignore contradictions and inconsistencies in rape accusers' allegations because they must be the result of "trauma":

"While conducting research on why so few incidents of sexual assault are prosecuted, Rebecca Campbell, a psychology professor at Michigan State University, interviewed police officers to learn more about how they perceive victims they interview. "The stuff they say makes no sense," she quoted one officer as saying. "They can't get their story straight," said another. "No way it's true. No one would act like that if it's true.""'

Why Husbands Need Respect

Mastodon · 16 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Want to experience a happier relationship with the man in your life? Well, hear this: Your love is not enough for him. Your RESPECT is really what he is after.

When polled, men said they would rather feel alone and unloved than inadequate and disrespected. (It is the opposite for women. Most women would put up with feeling inadequate and disrespected over feeling alone and unloved.)

While men and women are created equally, and made to be partners that sail through life together, we are also created differently. And what helps a woman feel love does not usually translate for men. If you want to love your man in the way he needs and wants to be loved, then you need to ensure he feels your respect.'

Former Basketball Players Accused Of Sexual Assault Sue University

Mastodon · 16 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three days before the University of Oregon's basketball team opens play in this year's NCAA Tournament, two former Ducks players who were kicked out of school after being accused of an off-campus sexual assault have filed a $20 million lawsuit against the university.

The suit filed Tuesday in Lane County Circuit Court by former Ducks Dominic Artis and Damyean Dotson comes five months after a third former player, Brandon Austin, filed a $7.5 million lawsuit against the UO.

All three players allege university officials violated their due process rights and ruined their chances at professional basketball careers. The suits assert the players were treated unfairly when they were issued long-term suspensions after Lane County prosecutors declined to prosecute them in connection with the off-campus incident.

A female student accused the three players of raping her at a party in Eugene in March 2014. The players have acknowledged a sexual encounter occurred but say the woman consented to it.'

Connecticut Mulls Legislation To Dilute Due Process on Campus

Mastodon · 16 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Liberalism in Connecticut used to stand for due process of law, but not anymore. Increasingly liberalism in Connecticut stands instead for mere political correctness, as signified by two liberal causes advancing through the General Assembly. They could result in the Constitution State weakening the constitutional guarantee of due process.

The first is legislation to require colleges to expel male students who can't prove themselves innocent of non-criminal accusations of sexual assault made by female students — can't prove that their sexual relations were entirely consensual. This is being called "affirmative consent." Under "affirmative consent" such innocence is unlikely to be proved without sworn and notarized receipts from the sexual partner or comprehensive video-recording.'

"Fake claims, real consequences"

Mastodon · 16 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We all love attention. If you think I don't love to see my name in the newspaper every week then you are mistaken. I long for the Wednesday night meetings at the Torch where my coworkers clap upon my arrival. But just how far will people go to get their much needed attention?

You might remember getting a text or email from Ferris about an assault that happened on campus. According to the student, she was grabbed by a man while walking in the dark. That is one of the more unsettling things to hear about on your campus.

Well hold on, because it turns out it was all false. The student admitted to lying about the incident. I don't know what her motives were, but I think it's a safe assumption she did it for attention. This kind of thing goes beyond just "not cool." There are serious consequences to making a false report of this kind.

The police allocated time to this, Ferris administration gave it their attention, and the student body was put on edge, all because one person needed someone to pat her on the back and call her brave. Not to mention the permanent water mark on our school. Picture this conversation, "Hey mom , should I go to Ferris?" "The school where all the assaults happen? No, you should go to Central."

These incidents happen all the time, not just at Ferris, and a lot of the time they have even more serious outcomes. A couple of years ago, a woman claimed she was sexually assaulted at a fraternity house at the University of Virginia. All Greek life at the school was suspended, the fraternity house was vandalized and nearly destroyed and members of the fraternity received death threats. As it turns out, the "victim" made it all up. The assault never happened.'

India: Rape accused kills self after ‘victim’ admits false charges

Matt · 16 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A man facing a rape trial committed suicide in Indore days after the complainant reportedly admitted that he had only tried to hold her hand after a fight over money.

Roopkishore, 53, was found dead in his home in Palasia locality on Sunday, four days after the woman, 33, admitted during trial that she had falsely charged him with rape to avoid repaying the money her husband owed him.

The woman, who is Roopkishore’s tenant, had accused him of raping her on December 26. The police booked him under Section 376 of the IPC and arrested him.

In his defence, Roopkishore, a moneylender, said he had lent some money to the woman’s husband for buying a vehicle, and she had framed him to avoid repaying it.'

Affirmative Consent Proposal Would Give Accusers "Qualified Privilege"

Mastodon · 17 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Maryland House committee could vote as early as today on a bill that would establish "affirmative consent" standards regarding sexual assault on most college campuses in the state. It comes as one in four women report being sexually assaulted during their time in college nationally.

"Affirmative consent" would make anyone seek verbal or non-verbal approval for any sexual act.Under the bill sponsored by Del. Marice Morales (D-Montgomery), incapacitation, silence, being asleep, unconsciousness, or lack of protest and/or resistance could not be considered consent for a sexual act. Supporters say that's very important since alcohol is involved in many campus sexual assaults, where a victim may have passed out or been to intoxicated to prevent an assault from occurring.

The House Judiciary Committee will decide whether to move the bill forward to a full vote on the floor of the House of Delegates. Members of the committee heard from supporters and opponents last week.'

Former Air Force Informant Who Made False Rape Charge Loses Appeal

Mastodon · 17 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Keesler Air Force Base enlisted woman in Mississippi who was covertly recruited as a Biloxi-area informant and then pleaded guilty to falsifying rape claims has lost a key appeal.

Capping a knotty chapter in military law enforcement, the Air Force Court of Criminal Appeals rejected the claims of Airman Basic Jane M. Neubauer, while also shedding light on what happened after her April 2013 recruitment by the Air Force Office of Special Investigations.

"Her primary role was to collect information regarding drug use and distribution by other airmen," the court noted in its decision issued March 10.

Besides highlighting the Air Force's use of enlisted personnel as informants, Neubauer's case illuminates, as well, the military's intense focus on combating sexual assault. Neubauer's false claims sparked a severe reaction in part because officials feared they could undermine their anti-assault campaign.

"What are all the airmen who have heard her claims, her false statements, what are they going to think the next time they receive a report of sexual assault?" an Air Force prosecutor asked at Neubauer's 2015 court-martial.'

NPO: Betrayal on Custody Reform in Massachusetts - Urgent Action

Matt · 17 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Massachusetts Bar Association, the Boston Bar Association, and the Women's Bar Association, together with a couple of influential Senators on the Judiciary Committee, have succeeded in gutting the proposed reforms of custody law that were fought out over two years ago by Governor Patrick's Working Group.

As a result, National Parents Organization must do a U-turn and oppose the passage of S834, also known as H1207. You MUST call your Senators and Representatives today or tomorrow to urge them to amend or defeat this bill, since I do not think it is likely that we can get it changed enough in the committees it must go through before it gets to the floor of the House and of the Senate.

In a classic double-cross, three representatives of bar associations who served on the Working Group pretended to support the bill when we finished our 18 months of work and sent it to Governor Patrick. Then, once the bill got into the Judiciary Committee, they went behind closed doors to do their bloody work.'

Connecticut State Senator: "Scores" Of Men On College Campuses Ready To Assault Women

Mastodon · 17 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Opponents of the bill, including Shelley Dempsey, who is part of a group called Families Advocating Campus Equality (FACE), told the committee Tuesday that the bill will unfairly shift the burden of proof onto the accused student. Dempsey's son was accused of and cleared of sexual assault at Bucknell University.

In her testimony, Dempsey cited examples of similar cases in California and Tennessee where students were improperly expelled because of "yes means yes" regulations at universities.
...
"I know hundreds of young men who have been falsely accused of sexual assault," Dempsey testified. "Or where a night of drinking has been recast as an assault."
...
Sen. Mae Flexer, D-Danielson, who introduced the legislation, said "the fact is there are."

"If one in five women who go to college are raped or sexually assaulted, there clearly are scores of men on college campuses who are ready to assault them," Flexer said. "That is a fact."

Flexer quoted statistics from a 2007 study funded by the U.S. Department of Justice to support her point.

"There are, in fact, people on college campuses who are, in fact, predators," Flexer said.

Dempsey disputed the statistics that it's one in five women who are raped or sexually assaulted on college campuses.

The exchange between Flexer and Dempsey over the merits of the legislation was heated.'

Connecticut State Senator, Mae Flexer

President Obama Applauds Every Brave Woman Speaking Out Against Online Harassment

Mastodon · 17 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The president highlighted how many women are speaking out against this online harassment every day — and why their activism is so important:

What's brought these issues to light is that there are a lot of women out there, especially young women, who are speaking out bravely about their experiences, even when they know they'll be attacked for it — from feminist bloggers who refuse to be silenced, to women sports reporters who are opening up about the extreme safety precautions they need to take when traveling for work. Every day, women of all ages and all backgrounds and walks of life are speaking out. And by telling their stories, by you telling your stories, women are lifting others out of the shadows and raising our collective consciousness about a problem that affects all of us.
...
Obama said that while it's important for women to continue to speak up about online harassment, it's also integral that men join in. "This is not just the role for women," he said. "It's about men speaking up and demanding better of themselves and their peers, their sons, their friends, their coworkers. Because we're all in this together.'

UK: Why female violence against men is society's last great taboo

Mastodon · 17 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's time for us to face up to an ugly truth: it's not just men who can be murderers and violent, abusive attackers of the opposite sex.

This was brought into grim focus last week with the horrific case of Sharon Edwards, 42, who brutally murdered her husband, David, 51, by stabbing a 13-inch carving knife through his heart.

A serial man-abuser, Mrs Edwards inflicted 60 stabbing and prodding wounds to her husband. While in court, Sharon brazenly lied that David "walked into" the knife. She is currently serving at least 20 years in jail for murder.
...
But politically the system is stacked against men. While ending violence against women and girls (VAWG) has rightly been a governmental priority, there is not only no specific strategy to end violence against men. Attempts to modify the VAWG strategy to include male victims have been actively resisted.

As a direct consequence, while last week Nicky Morgan pledged another £80 million to end VAWG, the ManKind Initiative – one of only two UK charities that specifically helps male victims of domestic violence – will close its helpline in May as it couldn't raise a comparatively modest £45,000.

By so clearly intimating that victims don't matter if they are men, it can only further add to male victims' reluctance to come forward.'

SAVE: ‘Victim-Centered’ Investigations

Matt · 18 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On March 14, 2006, Crystal Mangum reported to the Durham, North Carolina police that she had been gang-raped by a group of Duke University lacrosse players. Over the ensuing months, Mangum gave a dozen different accounts of the incident, changing her stories of the number of assailants (from 20 to three), nature of the attack (raped, penetrated with an object, or groped), physical description of the assailants, and much more.

Many campus rape activists would try to explain away the inconsistencies in Mangum’s accounts by saying she was traumatized by the attack, resulting in what they call “tonic immobility.” But laboratory analyses proved none of the DNA specimens obtained from Mangum came from any of the Duke players, revealing her claims to be baseless.

Advocates of “victim-centered” investigations claim that they are merely seeking to assure fairness in the investigative process. But they have a tendency to only use the word “victim” — even though no legal determination has been reached – revealing their own biases.

One of the leading proponents of the “victim-centered” approach is Rebecca Campbell, psychology professor at Michigan State University. A perusal of Dr. Campbell’s resume reveals she minored in Women’s Studies, her research focus includes “Violence against Women,” and her teaching interests encompass the “Psychology of Women.” In a recent four-minute videotape, she used the word “victim” or “survivor” 15 times – not once did she say “complainant” or “accuser.” And Campbell never admitted that false allegations do happen, as occurred in the Duke lacrosse case.'

Yale Basketball Player Case: Why Title IX Should Be Nullified

Mastodon · 18 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Due process of law. The presumption of innocence until proven guilty. The right to confront your accusers. The exercise of the general police power by the states — not the federal government, which may only exercise those powers delegated to it by the Constitution.

All of these important legal principles — and more — are at stake in the case of an expelled Yale basketball player, which is only one of many examples stemming from federal Title IX statutes.

Yale faced highly-ranked Baylor in the first round of the NCAA basketball tournament — their first appearance in the “Big Dance” since 1962. Missing was their captain, Jack Montague (shown), who was expelled from the Connecticut Ivy League school in February. The expulsion followed the decision of a five-person panel that Montague had “unconsented sex” with a female student.'

Exposing rank injustice in the Columbia ‘mattress girl’ case

Mastodon · 18 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The saga of Columbia University’s “mattress girl” Emma Sulkowicz, who famously carried a mattress on campus to protest the non-expulsion of her alleged rapist, and Paul Nungesser, the accused man who says he is the real victim, is not quite over a year after both graduated.

Last week, a federal district judge threw out Nungesser’s Title IX lawsuit against Columbia, which charges that the school abetted his gender-based harassment by Sulkowicz. But attorney Andrew Miltenberg vows to continue to “pursue justice” for Nungesser, by filing either an appeal or an amended complaint.

Having reported on this story, I hope the lawsuit goes forward — not only on Nungesser’s behalf, but for the sake of truth-seeking about a tangled case that raises important issues.

Nungesser is one of over 100 men who have sued colleges and universities for what they allege is unfair treatment in the handling of sexual-assault accusations. Many of these lawsuits have been dismissed, others settled.'

Tennessee says women in Title IX lawsuit made 'salacious' claims

Mastodon · 18 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Tennessee accused the plaintiffs in their Title IX lawsuit of repeatedly publishing "irrelevant and incorrect (if salacious) allegations intended to inflame the passions of journalists and sports fans alike."

UT's filing came in a memorandum last week in support of the university's motion to dismiss the lawsuit or transfer the case to federal court in Knoxville instead of Nashville.

Eight Jane Doe plaintiffs are accusing UT of creating a hostile sexual environment that led to assaults and then using an adjudication process that is biased in favor of athletes. UT pushed back in a 68-page memorandum and asked federal Judge Aleta Trauger to either transfer the venue to the Eastern District of Tennessee of throw out the case entirely.'

Commentator Gripes Only Women Voters Labeled, But Cited 'Angry White Men' Last Week

Mastodon · 18 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There was a serious case of selective amnesia induced by liberal bias on Thursday's CNN Newsroom as host Carol Costello oddly complained about women voters having labels like "soccer moms" and "welfare queens" applied to them while men supposedly escape such labeling.

But just barely a week ago on her show, Costello herself asked about "angry white men" supporting Donald Trump as she declared that it would be "kind of fun" to ask race-obsessed CNN liberal Marc Lamont Hill about this "voting block."'

The War Against Boys and the Myth of ADHD

Mastodon · 18 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The United States and Britain are experiencing a masculinity crisis. From as early as 4 years old, girls begin to think they are superior to boys, and not long after, boys begin to accept the inferior role. In nearly every area of society, the role of the male is being undermined. What triggered this dangerous trend, and what effects will it have on society?

Recent studies have discovered that attention deficit/hyperactivity disorder is vastly over-diagnosed. Scientists say many children are just immature. In the United Kingdom, nearly 1 million children have prescriptions for drugs like Ritalin to combat the supposed “disorder.” In the United States, the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention says the number is somewhere over 6.4 million. The drugs come with serious side effects, which is a big price to pay to combat a disorder that may not even be there. What can parents do to solve this problem?'

University disciplinary hearing different process than criminal hearing

Mastodon · 19 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to attorney Brian Lowder a university disciplinary hearing on the campus of WKU is a very different process than a criminal hearing in a traditional courtroom.

Lowder has represented several WKU students, including WKU swimmers, at disciplinary hearings.

"In the criminal justice system you're afforded due process. You also have the presumption of innocence. You have to be proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. None of those rights are afforded to a student going through Western Kentucky University or I think most other universities' disciplinary process."

According to Lowder, a student isn't given detailed notice of the accusation until the day of the hearing. They then take questions from a group made of students and staff.

"The disciplinary committee. That's comprised of students as well as faculty members that hear and are involved with those proceedings."'

The "Madonna double-standard"

Mastodon · 19 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine if YOU were a high profile celebrity involved in a custody battle over your 15-year-old son?

Court proceedings are on-going, emotions are high, lawyers are engaged in furious exchanges and the world's media is salivating over every spit, cough and titillating claim.

The boy himself is confused, upset and incredibly embarrassed over all his family's dirty linen being washed in public.

What would YOU do in that situation?

I'd hazard a guess that pretty much bottom of your list of sensible responses would be to drag a 17-year-old girl up on stage in front of thousands of people and deliberately expose her breast, right?

Or to declare to the crowd that she was 'the kind of girl you just want to slap on the ae'.
...
Now imagine if you were a male celebrity in that position?

What do you think would happen to you?

First, there would be universal revulsion.

Second, there would be global media fury.

Third, you would almost certainly face arrest for lewd conduct and/or sexual abuse.'

Reexamining Our Sexual Assault Investigative Process

Matt · 19 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Though the John Doe case was settled months ago and he is no longer enrolled at Middlebury, I nonetheless feel compelled to weigh in. I empathized with Doe. I'm not saying he is innocent, but I'm not calling him guilty either. I, too, was accused of sexual assault (and cleared after an extensive investigation, more on that later). There is a myriad of ways a rape investigation can go wrong. There are several factors that can adversely affect alleged perpetrators, alleged victims and the integrity of the investigation.

We have evolved as a society. Student activists have fought for the rights of silenced voices. Now, previously marginalized voices are heard, and this has changed how we view some of the most painful experiences these individuals go through. Nowhere is this clearer than in conversations regarding sexual violence. I would like to believe that we are slowly moving away from victim-blaming and that we take any allegation of sexual violence with the seriousness it deserves. On this campus, I feel that it is unthinkable to stand in front of someone who claims to be a victim of sexual violence and dare ask: "are you sure?" Anyone who questions a victim publicly would be shamed and ostracized.

Yet in academics, skepticism is the defining trait of a good learner. We are taught to inquire and doubt everything that surrounds us. And so it is striking when we are prevented from doing so in cases involving sexual violence. This "always believe the victim" mentality implies that the person at the other end of the accusation must be guilty. He's being accused ergo, he must have done it. The presumption of innocence goes out the window, along with due process. How does this affect someone? People might be reluctant to be seen with or talk to the accused. Who wants to be associated with someone who has been called a rapist? As a consequence, the person who has been accused is left isolated and confused, all because of one person's testimony.'

It's time we recognised that a father's love is just as important as a mother's

Mastodon · 19 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As we approach Father's Day, it's refreshing to see the public display of affection between Guy Ritchie and his son Rocco – albeit one expressed in unhappy circumstances.

Both are at the centre of an ongoing court case, with Rocco's mother, Madonna,having filed papers attempting to force him to live with her in the United States. Rocco currently lives with his father in England – an arrangement we are led to believe he wishes to continue.

The case is courting attention because of the high profile nature of those involved. But on a more fundamental level, it's noteworthy because we aren't accustomed to seeing things this way around. Normally, it is the father fighting for access to his child, not vice versa.

As a society, we often forget that a father’s love is just as precious and just as important as a mother's. And we also overlook the sheer tragedy that any family – be they famous or not – have to battle to resolve their problems in a secretive, abusive and failing family justice system that is not fit for purpose.'

Former DOJ Lawyer Explains Why Jack Montague Case Got Where It Is

Mastodon · 19 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A lawyer who once prosecuted sex crimes for the U.S. Department of Justice stated the Jack Montague case represents the thin line many schools have to walk when investigating campus sexual assault. A female student at Yale University said she had non-consensual sex with Montague, who argued the contrary and was expelled following an investigation.

Jack Montague, the former captain of the Yale men's basketball team, responded to his expulsion by suing the school, all while the Bulldogs were on the verge of their first NCAA Tournament berth in 54 years. But no matter what Yale administrators decided for Montague, the school was destined to be criticized.

Shanlon Wu, a former DOJ prosecutor who specialized in sex crimes, wrote in an op-ed that school's in Yale's position run the risk of "overcorrecting" and being too harsh on the accused. The other avenue is well documented, as the U.S. Education Department has investigated more than 100 schools for allegedly mishandling sex crimes on campus, thus violating the federal Title IX law.

While the White House has prioritized Title IX enforcement, Wu wrote, schools are implementing policies that "pose grave dangers to accused students." In other words, the schools have the right intentions but are reacting to the ED's crackdown more than they are proactively protecting students.'

Draft debate: Should women be required to register?

Mastodon · 21 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Not everyone is enthusiastic about women — or men — having to register for the draft.

Sava Shoemaker, 22, Pottsville, a senior at Kutztown University, recalls registering for the Selective Service in high school.

"I think the draft worked well during World War II, but military service should be an option today," he said.

Victoria Stanfield, Royersford, a sophomore at Kutztown, said it's scary to register for the draft.

"I would not want to be required to do it," she said. "I do know people who would want to sign up voluntarily. I would just not want to be required to do it."

Jenna Sillaman, 21, Lancaster, a Kutztown senior, said women should be allowed to enroll on a voluntary basis.

"I still think that women are looked down upon in the military," she said.'

Father of 5-year-old boy shot by his mother feared son was not safe

Mastodon · 21 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The father of a 5-year-old Denver boy shot by his mother in his sleep while visiting Montana last weekend says he had tried for months to convince Denver County child welfare workers the woman was paranoid and his son was not safe.

...

"She had threatened to do it before," Kreuscher said. "She said, 'I'm going to kill myself. I'm going to take him with me.' "

The parents had 50-50 custody of Kenny, and Kreuscher said he blames child welfare officials for not taking his concerns seriously enough.

Denver County child welfare officials would not talk about the specifics of the case, citing privacy laws.'

Yale prevented accuser from recanting claim that got hoops star expelled

Mastodon · 21 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A female Yale University student whose rape accusation against Jack Montague, a senior and the captain of the men's basketball team, resulted in his expulsion last month reportedly told a friend she wanted to recant the claim but wasn't allowed to take it back.

The potential bombshell report, published late Thursday in the U.K. by the Daily Mail newspaper, is the latest in a saga that has already seen Montague issue a statement through his Boston-based lawyer in which he vowed to sue the famed Ivy League institution over a procedure he claims was "wrong, unfairly determined and arbitrary."

Montague's lawyer, Max Stern, on Friday declined to comment through Montague's spokeswoman, Karen Schwartzman of Polaris Public Relations in Boston.'

All Marines to Get 'Unconscious Bias' Training as Women Join Infantry

Mastodon · 21 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marines across the Corps will be challenged on their unconscious prejudices and presuppositions as women get the opportunity to become grunts for the first time.

The Marine Corps is rolling out mandatory training for all Marines before the first future female rifleman hits boot camp, aiming to set conditions for a smooth transition and head off cultural resistance.
...
Topics include unconscious bias, which focuses on how people prejudge others based on factors such as race and gender, and principles of institutional change. The seminar will also walk officers through the elements of the Corps' plan for opening ground combat jobs to women and include vignettes featuring challenges units might encounter.'

"Straight, white men don’t deserve sympathy"

Mastodon · 21 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first couple paragraphs, then click the likeliest search result(s). Excerpt:

'I see them on the weekends. Playing golf, usually. Or else cycling, or surfing, while their wives are busy, still being Mum.

I see how they have children, without having to carry or deliver them. Or feed them, or find the child care centre, or the school (unless it’s the old, all-boys school, with the stunning facilities.)

I see how their heads aren’t filled with shopping lists, the week’s family dinner menu, lunch box ideas, what day is Jane’s dance class, and her teacher’s name. I see how they don’t have to worry about getting the kids to parties this weekend, or if they do, only after they’ve been told where exactly to go, and who to take, at what time, for what purpose.

How Christmas would still happen, even if they didn’t lift a finger, not even to buy presents for their own mothers.
...
How they could always vote, always work, always go into the bank and get a loan; always go to school to learn to read; work in any profession; and how easy it’s always been for them to get promoted, and then become the boss, and I think: oh, bless them for feeling like victims. Really, that takes some hide.'

Wikipedia on the author here.

UK: The Real Epidemic a UCD? Lad-Bashing

Mastodon · 21 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The #UCD200 hashtag has become synonymous with victim feminism and lad-bashing in Ireland's largest university. On 2 February, the College Tribune, one of two student newspapers at University College Dublin (UCD), published an article claiming that 200 male students had been sharing naked photos of their female colleagues and rating their attractiveness in a secret group.

The article was borne out of conjecture and hearsay, relying for evidence on the musings of bored students posting anonymously on popular social network Yik Yak. In the weeks following the article's publication, numerous national news reports emerged. Outlets such as the Irish Times, the Irish independent andJournal.ie whipped up a frenzy, demonising the male student population of UCD with flimsy journalism and a distinct lack of fact-checking.'

Woman Kills 8 Puppies In Front Of Their Mother Just To Teach The Dog A Brutal Lesson

Matt · 21 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Ever notice how people tend to assume otherwise unidentified animal abusers are male and sooo shocked to discover a female was the perp? Excerpt:

'The intermittent wails of four-year-old Ammu, a female stray dog that grew up among the residents of Lane No. 3, Krishnanagar, off Tumkur Road, have cast a pall of gloom over this locality of mostly ex-servicemen.

Residents are haunted by the memory of the dog digging her 15-day-old puppies out of their graves and trying to nurse them.

On March 15, her litter of eight was mercilessly flung onto the boulders, allegedly by Ponnamma, the wife of an ex-honorary flight lieutenant, a resident of this Jallahalli West neighbourhood. This she did reportedly to "teach the dog a lesson", who had dared to have puppies in a drain under her gate.

When we reached her doorstep to enquire about the incident, she refused to comment.

The ghastly incident has outraged the neighbourhood which has always been compassionate toward its stay dogs. It isn't uncommon here to spot a pet dog sharing a meal with a stray — such is the residents' love for their animals.'

UK: Hire more women or lose your bonus, senior bankers are told

Mastodon · 22 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Senior bankers could see their bonuses slashed if they fail to appoint enough women to top jobs.

A series of proposals to stamp out inequality in the workplace will be announced by a Government-backed task force today.

The report found that women occupy only 14 per cent of top financial service jobs. The sector employs more than two million people.

A key recommendation is that financial services firms such as banks and insurance companies link the bonuses of bosses to the number of women they appoint in senior roles.

Companies will also be asked to sign up to a voluntary charter, pledging to promote ‘gender balance’.

They will have to commit to putting one senior executive in charge of gender diversity, setting internal targets and publishing their progress on an annual basis.

Four firms, Lloyds, Barclays, HSBC and Royal Bank of Scotland have already signed up.'

'Guilty until proven innocent': life after a false rape accusation

Matt · 22 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jay Cheshire was cleared of rape in June. Allegations made against the 17-year old were withdrawn by the complainant just weeks after being filed, resulting in the investigation being closed. Yet, two weeks after the teenager was acquitted of the charge - and with his adult life still ahead of him - Jay was discovered hanging from a treein his local park.

According to coroner Grahame Short, Jay was a sensitive young man who had "found it difficult to cope with the police investigation" - a conclusion reiterated by the boy's mum, Karin, who said of the accuser: "She accused him of rape and said he was a sexual offender. He was absolutely distraught."

To prosecute an individual for rape - or indeed sexual harassment of any type - is notoriously difficult. However, since the tragic events surrounding the death of Jay Cheshire, thoseopposed to the current laws and practices concerning sexual harassment have become increasingly active in voicing their criticism of the system.

James* was falsely accused of rape three ago. Like Jay, his life fell apart, but, amidst his broken family and shattered social life, James managed to find solace by creatingaccused.me.uk, a forum for victims of false accusations to share stories and lend each other support.'

Cleared in Campus Rape, Student Files False Arrest Suit

Matt · 22 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Plaintiff Samy Jecrois was arrested Nov. 12, 2014, two days after a sexual encounter in his dorm room with a female student, the complaint says. He was held in the Hudson County Jail until Dec. 2, 2014, because he could not make the $250,000 bail, the suit claims. The prosecutor's office administratively dismissed his charges Dec. 22, 2014, before the case could be submitted to a grand jury.

The alleged victim, identified in the complaint as S.S.D., described to investigators multiple versions of what happened during the encounter with Jecrois, according to the suit. Inconsistencies in her account demonstrated that she could not tell a credible story in an interview with investigators, that she described an event that "could have been viewed as a consensual sexual encounter" and that the problems with her story should have alerted detectives that her allegations were insufficient to establish probable cause, the suit claims.

In Jecrois v. Sojak, the plaintiff describes three versions of the encounter that S.S.D. gave during an interview with investigators, each providing different details. In one version, she said she was afraid of him, and in another, she claimed she was saying "no, no" when he attempted to have intercourse with her.

"As described by S.S.D., this encounter should have alerted a reasonable law enforcement officer that what happened was a truly awkward instance of consensual sex rather than a forceful, involuntary sexual assault," the suit claims.'

No charges against Tennessee football player accused of sexual assault

Matt · 22 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Knox County district attorney last year determined that "no sustainable prosecution exists" to pursue sexual assault charges against a former UT football player — an incident that is briefly cited in asexual assault lawsuit brought against the University of Tennessee by eight former students.
...
one of the plaintiffs is a former roommate of a woman who reported being sexually assaulted who said she felt forced to leave the school after intimidation by football players.

In at least five cases, the university's own disciplinary process found, by a preponderance of evidence, that athletes referenced in the lawsuit had violated student codes of conduct by engaging in non-consensual sex, according to the lawsuit.'

Four GOP lawmakers reject bills to promote women in science

Mastodon · 23 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yet Republican Reps. Justin Amash (Mich.), Louie Gohmert (Texas) and Thomas Massie (Ky.) voted against both bills. Rep. Glenn Grothman (R-Wis.) supported the science mentorship legislation but opposed the other measure.

Gohmert addressed his vote during a House floor speech later Tuesday afternoon, saying he was concerned the legislation he described as “incredibly well intended” might shortchange some people.

“We want to take time from our $19 trillion in debt to demand that the National Science Foundation discriminate based on gender. There may be some young boy [who] needs encouragement from a tough family situation, but this program is designed to discriminate against that young poverty-stricken boy and to encourage the girl. Forget the boy, encourage the girl,” Gohmert said.

The Texas Republican suggested that forcing the government to prioritize recruiting women could potentially result in a reversed gender gap down the road.'

Female researcher: Make STEM ‘less competitive’ to ensure it’s inclusive to women

Mastodon · 23 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A doctoral candidate at the University of North Dakota recently published a research paper that argued one way to make Science, Technology, Engineering and Mathematics more inclusive for women is to make it “less competitive.”

Laura Parson suggests that females enrolled in such studies suffer from “the masculine nature of STEM education” in her research paper “Are STEM Syllabi Gendered? A Feminist Critical Discourse Analysis.” To rectify the issue of reinforced gendered messages, Parson essentially proposes that STEM courses could offer “less competitive teaching methods.”

“Although the corpus of syllabi explored was small, the findings from this exploration support the view of STEM courses as chilly,” Parson posited in her paper. “This suggests that there is an opportunity for STEM courses to reduce the perception of courses as difficult and unfriendly through language use in the syllabi, and also as a guide for how to use less competitive teaching methods and grading profiles that could improve the experience of female students.”'

Colleges slammed with lawsuits from men accused of sex crimes

Mastodon · 24 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'U.S. colleges trying to respond decisively to complaints of sexual assault are getting slammed with lawsuits from men who say they've been unfairly suspended or otherwise punished.

At least 75 men have sued their schools since 2013, complaining largely of reverse discrimination and unfair disciplinary proceedings.

Most of the men were never charged with a crime because the accuser didn't go to police or authorities decided there wasn't enough evidence.

Schools say they feel caught in the middle.'

College: Finding key evidence in sex assault cases is expecting 'perfection'

Mastodon · 24 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amherst College, which is in the midst of one of the most egregious sexual assault lawsuits I've ever seen, is now defending itself against a lawsuit by claiming it can't be expected to find key evidence.

I've written about this case previously, and though it seems like an article from The Onion, it's real. A male student was blacked out (as in, a blackout state, notpassed out) and received oral sex from a female student, who happened to be his girlfriend's roommate. The ordeal cost the female student her friends, and 18 months later (and after befriending some victims' advocates) she accused the male student of sexual assault.

So, to briefly recap: A male student is blacked out, receives a sex act, and is then accused of sexual assault.'

Title IX as a Threat to Academic Freedom

Mastodon · 24 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Education Department's Office for Civil Rights brought needed attention to the problem of sexual assault and harassment on college campuses with its 2011 letter telling institutions to enforce the law. But in so doing, the office has created a slew of new problems with implications for free speech and academic freedom. That's the premise of a lengthy new report from the American Association of University Professors.

Drawing on the history of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, which prohibits gender discrimination in education, the report argues for a more judicious application of the law across academe. The report is an attempt to reshape discussion of Title IX -- to put substantially more emphasis on due process.

Predictably for so controversial a topic, "The History, Uses and Abuses of Title IX" is earning praise and criticism from those on all sides of the argument.

"Success stories about compelling universities to address problems of sexual assault, such as those recounted by student campus groups, are matched by reported cases in which university administrators fail to punish gross and repeated sexual harassment, or where Title IX administrators from the [Education Department] and within the university overreach and seek to punish protected academic speech," reads "Uses and Abuses."'

Professors' Group Says Efforts to Halt Sexual Harassment Have Stifled Speech

Mastodon · 24 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The growing federal emphasis on combating sexual harassment on campus, along with universities' broadening definitions of inappropriate sexual behavior, has had a chilling effect on academic freedom and speech, especially on female professors in areas like gender studies, a report released Thursday by the American Association of University Professors said.

The report says that in the last few years, the government has been regulating not just sexual conduct but also sexual speech, and that the emphasis on complying with federal law has led to some professors being investigated by universities for making statements that some students find offensive but that the report says should be protected. A heightened focus on speech, the report said, has led to episodes like one in which students demanded trigger warnings before being exposed to graphic lesbian sex in "Fun Home," the memoir by the cartoonist Alison Bechdel.

"We need to protect academic speech and the freedom that goes with academic speech, as well as due process," Risa L. Lieberwitz, general counsel of the association and chairwoman of the subcommittee that drafted the report, said in an interview Wednesday. "Universities are acting in a way that is overly precipitous as well as applying overly broad definitions of sexual harassment because they are afraid of scrutiny."'

Woman used rubber penis to pretend to be a man to lure girls into sex

Matt · 24 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A woman has been jailed for over three years after she admitted to tricking girls into having sex using a rubber penis.

Jennifer Staines, 23, groomed her victims online under the name Jason Spiller saying she was looking for love.

She even went on holiday with the girls and one relationship lasted for more than a year, convincing entire families that she was a man.

She wouldn't let her victims – aged between 12 and 17 – touch her body and used condoms on the rubber penis. One of the girls went to her doctor believing she might be pregnant and so convincing was her deceit that one of her victims still struggles to believe she was in a relationship with a woman, not a man.'

"Marriage Is Declining Because Men Are Pigs"

Mastodon · 25 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Why has marriage declined in America? Here's my dorm room bull theory: it's because men are pigs.

I know, I know: #NotAllMen blah blah blah. That said, let's unpack this a bit. Basically, an awful lot of men are—and always have been—volatile and unreliable. They drink, they get abusive, and they do stupid stuff. They're bad with money, they don't help with the kids, and they don't help around the house. They demand subservience. They demand sex. And even on the one dimension they're supposedly good for—being breadwinners—they frequently tend to screw up and get fired.

In other words, marriage has been a bad deal for women pretty much forever. But they've been forced into it by cultural mores and economic imperatives, and that's the only reason it's been nearly universal in the past.

Nothing has changed much about that. It's still a bad deal for an awful lot of women, but cultural mores and economic imperatives have changed, and that means more women can afford to do what's right for themselves and stay unmarried these days.'

UN Women condemns sexism against Brazil's president

Mastodon · 25 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The United Nations office on women's rights in Brazil said Thursday that President Dilma Rousseff has been the victim of "sexist political violence" by opponents seeking to oust her.

Rousseff, Brazil's first woman president, is battling impeachment proceedings and mass protests calling for her departure.

The leftist leader's popularity has tumbled in the face of a recession and an explosive corruption scandal, but UN Women said underlying sexism is fueling the increasingly vitriolic movement against her.

"As a defender of women's and girls' rights around the world, UN Women condemns all forms of violence against women, including the political violence of a sexist nature directed against President Dilma Rousseff," Nadine Gasman, head of UN Women in Brazil, said in a statement.
...
Some three million Brazilians took to the streets on March 13 calling for her departure.

The impeachment case against her revolves around accusations she manipulated the government's accounts to boost public spending during her 2014 re-election campaign and hide the magnitude of the recession last year.'

New Service Offers Rides For Women Only

Mastodon · 25 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Ride share services are convenient and popular. However, some riders think it may not always be the safest option.

“I’ve questioned who is driving me around,” explains car service rider Lindsay Roth of Brighton.

Chariot for Women is a new Massachusetts-based company that will soon offer rides nationwide from an app, similar to Uber, but this service is for women with vehicles only driven by women.'

NZ: HRC Agrees Men's Rights are Important Too

Mastodon · 25 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chief Human Rights Commissioner David Rutherford has emphasized that human rights for males are as important as those for women and other groups.

A meeting in December 2015 between Mr Rutherford and representatives of NZ men's groups and services identified areas in which men's human rights have been neglected in NZ. The meeting recognized that in the drive to improve rights for women and other groups traditionally seen as disadvantaged, men's welfare has been forgotten.

At a follow-up meeting in February 2016 plans were considered to include men's issues in future reports to the UN about New Zealand's human rights record.

Spokesman for one of the groups involved, Hans Laven from community group the Ministry of Men's Affairs (MoMA) described the meetings as "historic".

"It's reassuring that our HRC through Mr Rutherford has acknowledged that men and boys are in trouble as shown by high suicide and imprisonment rates, and that gender equity is as much a human right for men as for women" Mr Laven said.

Other men's issues seen as needing attention included gender inequality in sentencing and treatment under our justice system and family court, gender-specific laws that disadvantage men, the provision of refuge and other support services for men, and the need to evaluate new laws for their impact on men's rights and welfare as much as women's.'

Sexual assault survivors rarely lie about violence

Mastodon · 25 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a 26-page decision handed down Thursday morning, Ontario Court Justice William Horkins found former CBC radio host Jian Ghomeshi not guilty of three counts of sexual assault and, while doing so, suggested that not all sexual assault survivors are telling the truth.

Among the many reasons for the verdict was the “inconsistencies” and “demonstrably false” nature of some of the witnesses’ testimony, he wrote.

He also wrote that the complainants’ evidence “illustrates the need to be vigilant in avoiding” the idea that all sexual assault survivors are telling the truth.

“However, the twists and turns of the complainants’ evidence in this trial, illustrate the need to be vigilant in avoiding the equally dangerous false assumption that sexual assault complainants are always truthful,” he wrote.

“Each individual and each unique factual scenario must be assessed according to their own particular circumstances.”'

Survey on female on male violence

mistermisogynist · 25 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

We are conducting a survey on female perpetrated violence and male response to it.

The results so far have been shocking and we would like a broad a base as possible for comparison.

Poll: Women Support the Idea of Women in the Military, But Not if They're Drafted

Mastodon · 25 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Although a majority of women believe that women should, theoretically, be allowed to serve in the military, less than half of women support the idea of women actually having to be forced to serve if there is a draft.

A YouGov poll asked 1,000 Americans, including approximately 500 women, what they think about women serving in the military.

The poll found 68 percent of women support the idea of women being allowed to serve in combat roles in the military (40 percent "strongly support" the idea while 28 percent "somewhat support" it), while 87 percent of women support the idea of women being allowed to serve in non-combat roles (61 percent "strongly support" the idea while 26 percent "somewhat support" it).

However, despite the poll showing 75 percent of women believe men and women are equal, only 46 percent of women said women should be able to be drafted along with men.

Asked, "If the military draft were reinstated, would you favor or oppose drafting women as well as men?" only 19 percent of women claimed to "strongly favor" the idea while 27 percent said they "somewhat favor" the idea.'

"Men Think They're Too Tough and Manly for Doctors, So It's No Wonder They Die First"

Mastodon · 25 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hey, men: Ever wonder why your life expectancy is shorter than women's? It could be because you're too busy chugging whiskey, chopping firewood and doing other tough man stuff to go to the goddamn doctor.

Men who subscribe to traditional notions of masculinity are less likely to go to the doctor. They're more likely to downplay their symptoms. They also tend to experience worse overall health than people who don't hold those beliefs, according to new research.

Tradition-bound dudes are also more likely to choose male doctors — but they're less likely to open up to them about health issues than they are with female doctors.

Psychologists at Rutgers University say their findings could help explain why men tend to die earlier than women.

"Men can expect to die five years earlier than women, and physiological differences don't explain that difference," Diana Sanchez, associate professor of psychology at Rutgers' School of Arts, said in a press release.'

Harvard Editorial Executive: Due Process Supporters Are ‘Rape Apologists’

Mastodon · 25 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An editorial executive at the Harvard Crimson is decrying all people who believe in due process as “rape apologists.”

In an article on the Harvard Crimson, Nian Hu laments over the allegedly “stymied” progress for alleged sexual assault survivors.

While admitting, “practically everyone agrees that rape is bad,” Hu writes those who believe in due process for individuals accused of rape are “rape apologists”:

"Who is upholding this broken system, and protecting sexual assault perpetrators at the expense of survivors?

Rape apologists are. The problem is, they don’t consider themselves defenders of rapists. Instead, they call themselves defenders of liberty and due process before the law. They are the self-proclaimed champions of “innocent before proven guilty.” All they want is fairness and equality—that is, for the men who are accused of rape."'

College student works to move past false sexual abuse accusation

Matt · 26 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Going away for college is a dream for most young people, but for a local teen it turned into a nightmare.

Instead of starting fall semester, he spent the first day of school in jail for a crime he didn't commit.

"It's just I was the wrong guy," Elijah Bethel said. "That's all that really happened. They just picked the wrong person."

Bethel was a star in the classroom and on the football field. But the hit he didn't see coming happened last Fall when he enrolled at SUNY Buffalo State.

At 3:21 a.m. on August 28, 2015, campus police were called to Porter Hall where a young woman had been groped in her sleep. The attacker fled and dropped cigarettes and a lighter.

"She was sleeping, and it was very difficult for her to make an identification," attorney Paul Michalek said.

She said it was a short, black man in black shorts.

Nineteen minutes later at 3:40 a.m., police see Bethel in black shorts with three friends on the other side of campus.

"He was interviewed, the other gentlemen were interviewed," Michalek said. "They told the officer where they were, and they were let go."

The four said they were together all night and just came from an off-campus restaurant, Jim's Steakout. According to documents obtained by NEWS10 ABC, three of the men are carrying food with them from the restaurant. Bethel also had a receipt for what he ate still in this pocket.

Police let them go.

But 20 minutes later at 4 a.m., police knocked on Bethel's door and asked him to come downtown.'

Feminist chickens come home to roost at the Ghomeshi trial

Matt · 26 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Ghomeshi trial has to have been a giant embarrassment for Ottawa law professor and hard-core feminist Elizabeth Sheehy. In 2013, Sheehy published a book, Defending Battered Women on Trial. In it, Sheehy proposed that women who experience extreme abuse from their male partners should have the right to kill them pre-emptively – in their sleep, say – without fear of being charged with murder.

According to Sheehy, women in abusive relationships are like prisoners of war, for whom it is a duty to kill their captors. To be sure, Sheehy's target group would not include the three women who made such a hash of their testimonies at the Ghomeshi trial, since they were not in any way captive to Ghomeshi as the women she envisages are, nor did they experience extreme abuse.

But that hardly matters, because Sheehy's thesis rests on the same foundational articles of faith regarding all women victims, of all male abuse, that the Ghomeshi trial has taken a jackhammer to: namely, that women never lie about abuse and that the justice process is biased toward men.

She has been proved wrong on both counts.

To begin with the second myth: Handbooks for police across the country reflect the feminist vision of women that Sheehy embraces. In fact a decade ago some lawyers launched a human rights complaint against Alberta Justice over their "Handbook for police and prosecutors" dealing with domestic violence (the twin gender crime to sexual assault) because it portrayed men always as perpetrators and women always as victims throughout its 160 pages, and because the concepts of "innocent until proven guilty" and "proof beyond a reasonable doubt" didn't make a single appearance in all those pages.

The guiding principle of the handbook was that women must be believed and supported. Even in cases where abuse was known to be bilateral, the Handbook insisted that – contrary to the law – the police must charge the "dominant aggressor" – i.e. lay charges against the man.'

'Macho' Marine Corps Ordered to Implement Revolutionary Changes to Accommodate Women

Matt · 26 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Marine Corps commandant has laid out a campaign to impose “cultural change” in macho ground combat units to make sure warriors display no resistance to accepting and mentoring women.

The “Marine Corps Force Integration Campaign Plan,” approved by Gen. Robert B. Neller, sparks a revolution in training and education as the 182,000-strong expeditionary force prepares for the Obama administration’s April 1 deadline to start the process of putting women in infantry, armor and artillery units.

It contains a new curriculum of sensitivity training.

“The purpose of gender integration education is to support leadership efforts to facilitate the cultural change necessary to ensure the integration of female Marines into ground combat arms MOSs [military occupational specialties] and units is successful,” the document states. “In most cases, the introduction of new players to a team disrupts unit cohesion.”

The commandant’s new curriculum will include courses titled “Unconscious Bias,” “Interpersonal Communication” and “How to Lead a Guided Discussion.”'

Corporate Benefits of Gender Diversity a Myth

fathers4fairness · 27 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. There has been a determined push by Feminist Advocacy groups in the UK and America to claim that research supports the theory that better gender and racial diversity on Corporate Boards improves decision-making and hence financial performance. Unfortunately - as explained by Prof. Alice Eagly, Professor of Psychology and Professor of Management and Organizations at Northwestern University - that is not supported by research. Excerpt:

'You'd be forgiven for assuming a quick and sure way to multiply profits and amplify organizational success is to increase the gender and racial diversity of any group. According to claims in the mainstream media, the effects of gender and racial diversity are universally favorable. News stories tend to mirror this 2014 Washington Post article's claim that "researchers have long found ties between having women on a company's board of directorsand better financial performance."

And as Nicholas Kristoff wrote in The New York Times in 2013:

Scholarly research suggests that the best problem-solving doesn't come from a group of the best individual problem-solvers, but from a diverse team whose members complement each other. That's an argument for leadership that is varied in every way — in gender, race, economic background and ideology.

The truth is there's actually no adequate scientific basis for these newsworthy assertions. And this lack of scientific evidence to guide such statements illustrates the troubled relations of science to advocacy and policy, that I have analyzed in an article in the current Journal of Social Issues.'

County judge rules domestic violence law discriminates against men

Mastodon · 27 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A prosecutor is appealing a Gallatin County Justice Court judge's ruling that says portions of a Montana law about domestic violence arrests are discriminatory toward men.

In a March 18 ruling, Judge Rick West dismissed a misdemeanor partner family member assault charge against a Big Sky man, saying that a section of Montana statute is unconstitutional and violates the man's equal protection under state and federal law.

The law at the center of the case says that when law enforcement officers responded to a potential partner or family member assault case where there had been "mutual aggression," the officer can evaluate the situation to determine the predominant aggressor.
...
Defense attorney Al Avignone filed a motion seeking to dismiss the charge, arguing that the criteria officers use to determine who the predominant aggressor is in a domestic violence situation is unconstitutional.

The wife was the aggressor in this situation, Avignone said, saying that she could be heard hitting her husband on the recording. She also grabbed and twisted her husband's testicles, causing him to react in self-defense, Avignone argued.

The choice to charge the man was "the very definition of discriminatory enforcement," Avignone argued in court briefs.

"That statute is problematic because it is gender-based," Avignone told the Chronicle on Thursday.

In his dismissal of the case, West wrote the criteria asking officers to consider the size and strength of people involved "predisposes the officer to arrest the male individual in almost all cases."

And that factor might have nothing to do with who the predominant aggressor was, "yet it directs a law enforcement officer to arrest and charge the male individual."'

Canada: Special law bails women out of evil acts. Where's the male privilege?

Mastodon · 27 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Supreme Court of Canada has ruled that a woman who threw two babies in the garbage, killing them, is not guilty of second degree murder.

Meredith Borowiec was originally convicted of second degree murder in the deaths of her two babies in 2008 and 2009. Her original conviction was overturned and she has now been found guilty of the lesser crime of infanticide.
...
But this theme of women getting lesser sentences for the same crimes as men doesn't stop at mothers who murder their children. Women generally spent less time in jail for the same crimes.

Where is that male privilege the feminists keep telling me is out there? Because if a woman can kill two babies and nearly kill a third and get off with a mere 18 months jail time using a special law just for women, then I'd say she's pretty privileged.'

Misandry – The Anti-Male Equivalent of Misogyny

Mastodon · 27 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Are men dealt an unfair hand? Dr. Katherine Young, the co-author of a series of books on “misandry”—the anti-male equivalent of misogyny—thinks so. In her latest book, Replacing Misandry, Young and her co-author, Dr. Paul Nathanson, argue that the disparagement of boys and men in modern culture is undeniable. Dr. Young joins Andrew to discuss her research.'

Here’s Exactly How The Military Could Lower Standards For Women In Combat

Mastodon · 28 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Since Defense Secretary Ash Carter announced in December that all combat positions must open up to women across the services, military officials have insisted standards for mental and physical fitness will not lower to accommodate women, but countless experts and former military servicemembers consider all such promises to be little more than empty words.

Here’s exactly how a shift in standards in the infantry and elite special operations could happen.

Back on January 24, 2013, during a Pentagon news conference, then-Army Gen. Martin Dempsey, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, planted the seeds for a future downward trajectory in standards. His revealing statement has become known as the “Dempsey Rule.”'

SAVE: Affirmative Consent for Sex Gets ‘Thumbs-Down’ from Lawmakers, Legal Defense Group, and Harvard Professors

Matt · 28 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Polices designed to require explicit and ongoing agreement, often referred to as “affirmative consent,” experienced three setbacks during the past week. These developments signal broader concerns about the effectiveness, workability, and constitutionality of these policies, sometimes referred to as “yes means yes.”

Last Monday, members of the Maryland House Judiciary Committee declined to take a vote on HB 1142, a bill that would have required students at all Maryland colleges to give their “ongoing,” “clear, unambiguous, knowing, informed, and voluntary” agreement before engaging in sexual activities. Monday was the deadline for Maryland Delegates to approve a bill in order for it to advance to the Senate. Since no vote was taken, the affirmative consent bill is now considered “dead.”'

How the Government Stole Sex

Mastodon · 28 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fornication. Sodomy. Adultery. Not so long ago, the U.S. criminalized pretty much all sex outside of marriage. As these laws have been struck down by courts or allowed to settle into obsolescence, it would seem that sexual liberty has been vindicated as an important American value. But while the courts have been busy ushering the government out of our bedrooms, it's been creeping right back in under new pretenses. Gone is the language of morals, tradition, and order—the state now intervenes in our sex lives bearing the mantles of safety, exploitation, and sex discrimination.

We are living in a new sex bureaucracy," warn Harvard Law School professors Jacob Gersen and Jeannie Suk in an upcoming paper for the California Law Review. Contra court decisions such as Lawrence v. Texas—which decriminalized sodomy in Georgia and affirmed a constitutional right to sexual privacy—"the space of sex" is still "thoroughly regulated" in America, they write. And "the bureaucracy dedicated to that regulation of sex is growing. It operates largely apart from criminal enforcement, but its actions are inseparable from criminal overtones and implications."

Gersen and Suk's paper, titled "Bureaucratic Sex Creep," is mostly focused on federal overreach with regard to colleges and student sex lives, though they say this is only one realm of such regulatory creep. In great detail, the authors trace the roots of how the feds came to be in the business of encouraging "enthusiastic" sexual communication between teenagers and how everything from forcible rape to unwelcome comments between students became the prerogative of Washington paper-pushers and campus "Title IX coordinators." This "bureaucratic turn" may be "counterproductive to the goal of actually addressing the harms of rape, sexual assault, and sexual harassment," they warn, while also depriving due process to the accused and encouraging bizarre new sexual norms overall.'

Facebook’s Feminist-In-Chief Had Direct Contact With SecDef On Women In Combat

Mastodon · 29 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Newly released emails from Defense Secretary Ash Carter’s private email account show detailed correspondence with Facebook Chief Operating Officer Sheryl Sandberg, who pressured an enthusiastic and receptive Carter to give preferential treatment to women in the military.

The Pentagon released a huge tranche of Carter’s emails Friday as a result of several Freedom Of Information requests.

As head of the non-profit organization Lean In, whose goal it is to push women into key leadership positions in different sectors of American public life, Sandberg corresponded with Carter on May 31, 2015, well in advance of his Dec. 3 decision to open all combat roles to women.'

On campus, women outnumber men more than ever

Mastodon · 29 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many more women than men will be opening acceptance letters and e-mails this spring and enrolling in college in the fall, in a trend that holds for both institutions in Massachusetts and nationwide.

Women accounted for 55 percent of undergraduates enrolled at four-year colleges in the United States as of fall 2014, according to the most recent data available from the federal education department.

It’s not a new phenomenon. Women have outnumbered men on college campuses in the US by a widening margin since the late 1970s, and the gap will continue to grow in coming years, according to some projections.

But it hasn’t always been this way.

In the late 1940s, men accounted for more than 70 percent of college students.'

The fourth branch of government is out of control

Matt · 29 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'America has witnessed a massive shift in government authority, says George Washington University law professor Jonathan Turley — one that “has occurred without a national debate and certainly not a national vote.” That shift has led to the de facto creation of a “fourth branch of government containing legislative, executive and judicial components but relatively little direct public influence.”

Turley made those remarks in recent testimony before a House Judiciary subcommittee. His talk waded deeply into the weeds of legal history and precedent, but the upshot was this: By failing to rein in regulatory agencies when they overstep their bounds, the Supreme Court and Congress have allowed those agencies not merely to administer law, but to create it — and run roughshod over the public in the process.
...
The very day Turley was making that case, the Justice Department was taking steps to prove him right. It sent a “Dear Colleague” letter to state courts in all 50 states lecturing them about the harm done by the imposition of fines and fees on poor defendants, especially when those fines and fees become a source of revenue for local governments.

The letter laid out seven principles to guide the behavior of courts, and urged court officials “to review court rules and procedures within your jurisdiction to ensure that they comply with due process, equal protection, and sound public policy.”

Let’s stipulate right away that such practices are highly dubious and ripe for reform. That said, on what authority does an arm of the executive branch presume to dictate the activity of the judiciary — not only with regard to issues that are constitutional, such as due process and equal protection, but also with regard to those that aren’t, such as public policy?'

Malecare.org: CDC Prostate Cancer 2017

Matt · 29 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The USA federal Fiscal Year (FY) 2017 Budget eliminates funding ($13.2 million) for the entire Prostate Cancer program at the Centers for Disease Control (CDC). Malecare asks for your advocacy for restoring that funding.

The CDC has produced dynamic prostate cancer research, particularly focused on underserved populations such as African American men, and on improving doctor – patient communication. However, you should also be aware that the CDC, just like other federal agencies, follow the prostate cancer screening recommendations set forth by the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force, which recommends against PSA based screening for men who do not have symptoms.

Malecare feels that the benefits of the CDC Prostate Cancer program are worthy of continued funding.

Below, you will find a sample letter, which you are welcome to copy. Representatives hear from very few prostate cancer survivors and family members so your letter will be surprisingly powerful. Include a sentence or two stating your personal interest in prostate cancer. For example, start the letter by saying, “I am a prostate cancer survivor,” or “My father has prostate cancer.”

Thank you!'

India: Court acquits man in false rape case

Matt · 29 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New Delhi, A Delhi court has acquitted a man of the charge of raping a woman in his car after intoxicating her, as the alleged victim confessed lodging a false rape case under pressure from her parents.

Additional Sessions Judge Praveen Kumar let off the man, a west Delhi resident, of charges of rape and poisoning, saying the alleged victim, being the “star witness”, has not supported the prosecution case at all.

“She has deposed that she came to know the accused through social networking. They became friends. They wanted to marry but her parents were against the marriage due to difference in their castes.

“She has further deposed that she lodged false complaint of rape as she was pressurised by her parents. She has categorically deposed that accused neither administered any intoxicating substance in the cold drink nor raped her,” the judge said.'

NPO: Calls and Letters to Massachusetts Legislators Cause Major Tremors

Matt · 29 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Massachusetts members of National Parents Organization flexed their muscles and the Legislature responded. Members in other states should take note. Meanwhile, here is the update.

About 10 days ago, we informed our Massachusetts members that SB834, a bill that encourages shared parenting as well as other useful reforms, had been torpedoed in the Judiciary Committee by the bar associations. We asked members to tell their legislators that we now had to switch position and oppose the bill. They responded with a deluge of phone calls and emails to their reps and senators.

And it worked. Within days, we received word that the Judiciary Committee wanted to meet with us again. I and others had such a meeting last week.

To the credit of the Judiciary Committee, they expressed flexibility and the desire to work with us to fix the bill. More discussions will follow. During these discussions, confidentiality is requested, and we will honor that request.'

9 signs you're a man-hater

Mastodon · 30 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When hearing from women about dating and relationship challenges, I'm often stunned at all the man-hating out there. Lots of women HATE dudes. When confronted, most insist they do not. But you do. You totally do!

Why does it matter? Because you're full of hate. It's not like hate for trans fat, or public smoking or even Republicans, because you have a choice about how you vote. This is hating half of the human race. It is hating half of your own DNA. It is hating all of your male relatives and friends and any man you may consider. This means you even hate Tom Hanks and nobody hates Tom Hanks. Except there is something he shares with half the population– and that is his manhood.

...

1. You speak about men in gross generalizations — and it's always super-negative.
2. You hate all your exes.
3. All your breakups were his fault.
4. You lecture your son on how to be a better man.
5. You lecture your daughter on what to avoid in a man — ad nauseam.
6. When you spend time with a man you spend the while time nitpicking, correcting and insist on doing everything yourself.
7. You have a feminist chip on your shoulder.
8. Your favorite way to flirt with a man is to argue with him.
9. You can't let him lead.'

Uber, but for women? Probably illegal, experts say

Mastodon · 31 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It seems like a promising way to fill a market niche: an Uber-like service that aims to give female passengers peace of mind by ensuring that another woman is always behind the wheel.

But there is potentially a big problem. Civil rights lawyers say the new service being touted by local entrepreneurs, Chariot for Women, would probably conflict with Massachusetts' antidiscrimination laws.

"This company sounds great. Whether it's legal or not is a different question," said Joseph L. Sulman, an employment law specialist based in West Newton.

SheTaxis representatives did not return messages seeking comment. But the company has previously said it would address gender-discrimination questions by routing ride requests from men to alternate car-service providers.

Chariot for Women said it aims to ensure the safety of both riders and drivers by leaving adult men out of the equation — women drivers don't have to worry about physically threatening fares, the company said on its website, because Chariot allows only women and children as passengers.'

Woman caught on tape attacking Uber driver

Attorneys for ‘Jackie’ in Rolling Stone lawsuit protest under-oath deposition, say it could ‘re-traumatize’ her

Matt · 31 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lawyers representing a former University of Virginia student who claimed she was the victim of a gang rape in a discredited Rolling Stone story have asked a judge to cancel her scheduled deposition in a lawsuit against the magazine, arguing that she would be “re-traumatized” if she is compelled to recount her ordeal in proceedings under oath.

The former student — who in court papers is referred to only by her nickname, Jackie — became the central figure in a 2014 Rolling Stone article that described her account of a vicious sexual assault during her freshman year, an attack she said was carried out over several hours by seven men in a fraternity house bedroom. The 9,000-word exposé highlighted Jackie’s case as a devastating example of rape on a college campus and the struggles she faced while seeking help from members of the U-Va. administration, including the associate dean responsible for handling sexual assault allegations.'

The Sex Bureaucracy

Matt · 31 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Paper here. Abstract:

'We are living in a new sex bureaucracy. Saliently decriminalized in the past decades, sex has at the same time become accountable to bureaucracy. In this Article, we focus on higher education to tell the story of the sex bureaucracy. The story is about the steady expansion of regulatory concepts of sex discrimination and sexual violence to the point that the regulated area comes to encompass ordinary sex. The mark of bureaucracy is procedure and organizational form. Over time, federal prohibitions against sex discrimination and sexual violence have been interpreted to require educational institutions to adopt particular procedures to respond, prevent, research, survey, inform, investigate, adjudicate, and train. The federal bureaucracy essentially required nongovernmental institutions to create mini-bureaucracies, and to develop policies and procedures that are subject to federal oversight. That oversight is not merely, as currently assumed, of sexual harassment and sexual violence, but also of sex itself. We call this “bureaucratic sex creep” — the enlargement of bureaucratic regulation of sexual conduct that is voluntary, non-harassing, nonviolent, and does not harm others. At a moment when it is politically difficult to criticize any undertaking against sexual assault, we are writing about the bureaucratic leveraging of sexual violence and harassment policy to regulate ordinary sex. An object of our critique is the bureaucratic tendency to merge sexual violence and sexual harassment with ordinary sex, and thus to trivialize a very serious problem. We worry that the sex bureaucracy is counterproductive to the goal of actually addressing the harms of rape, sexual assault, and sexual harassment. Our purpose is to guide the reader through the landscape of the sex bureaucracy so that its development and workings can be known and debated.'

Senators want more money for campus sex police

Matt · 31 March 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Several Democratic senators are requesting additional funds for the Education Department to continue policing the sex lives of college students.

Sens. Kirsten Gillibrand, Tim Kaine, Claire McCaskill and Mark Warner have written a letter calling for increased funding for the Department's Office for Civil Rights, which has been investigating schools for alleged violations of the anti-sex discrimination law known as Title IX. The senators are requesting a budget of $137.7 million for OCR. Last year, the office's budget was $100 million, which means the senators are asking for a nearly 40 percent increase in funding for this one department.

Here's how we got to this point, put as simply as possible: In 2011, OCR sent out a "Dear Colleague" letter that vastly expanded the definition of Title IX and what schools needed to do in order to comply with the statute. Because of the broadening of the statute, schools have been accused of violating students' rights under Title IX and have come under investigation by OCR. Now OCR is requesting more money to investigate these schools because it has become overwhelmed.'

Female domestic violence arrests up

Mastodon · 1 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tuolumne County Sheriff's Office arrest records from 2011 to 2015 show that while the number of male arrests for domestic violence charges hovers between 60 and about 75 a year, the number of female arrests has doubled.

In 2011, there were 20 women arrested for domestic violence. In 2015, there were 42.

Sheriff's Office Lt. Eric Erhardt said there's not enough data to say this is a trend or if it's just random.

However, he said societal opinions on domestic violence have shifted dramatically since the 1970s and 1980s and it is now comprehensible that a woman could be the aggressor.

In eras past, no one would believe it or a man would never come forward to admit being victimized.

Regardless of who is the aggressor, if it's not dealt with, domestic violence escalates over time, Erhardt said.

Sonora Police Chief Mark Stinson said the cycle of male versus female arrests increasing is hard to follow, track and explain one way or another.

About six or seven years ago, the SPD saw a huge, really noticeable spike in the number of women arrested for domestic violence.'

Addressing campus rape culture with the Core

Mastodon · 1 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yes, the title is an exercise in hyperbole. Explaining campus rape culture goes far beyond the musings of a college junior. It is rooted in social structures that perpetuate sexism, in a culture that promotes the mistreatment of women, and can never be fully solved with a simple solution. Regardless, the administration seems to have overlooked a fairly obvious solution that could mitigate, though not end, the rape culture that afflicts our campus—adding a women and gender studies course as either a stand-alone requirement in the Core Curriculum or as an option to fulfill the Global Core.

...

On campus, women's socialization to take up less space—physically and in conversations—has manifested itself in some female students and faculty feeling an obligation to minimize their presence. In our classes, female teachers who are stricter are more harshly judged by students than their male counterparts, and female students are less likely to speak up, due to a lifetime of conditioning to be more complacent. In our hookup culture, women who are sexually active are referred to as "sluts," while men are "players." In cases of sexual assault, while students may not obviously blame victims, they do often insinuate how the victim's poor decision-making may have resulted in their rape—how dressing too tightly, drinking too much, or staying out too late should be avoided to not get raped. Rape culture is ultimately not a Columbia-specific issue, but it is a problem that Columbia has a responsibility to address.

...

Adding a mandatory women and gender studies course to the university's Core Curriculum could help address the ignorance that often underlies rape culture. A long-standing criticism of the Core has been that the classes are often limited in scope, lack literary diversity, and fail to account for the female voice. In our classes, women are expected to read the works of men and learn something from them. Now, let's give all students the opportunity to read works about and by women and learn something from us. Together, we can build a foundation that addresses campus rape culture.'

The Ghomeshi Trial and the Cult of #IBELIEVEWOMEN

Mastodon · 1 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Judge Horkins delivered his verdict last week in the high-profile trial of R vs Ghomeshi in Toronto. He acquitted Jian Ghomeshi, a high-profile radio presenter for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation (CBC), of four charges of sexual assault and one charge of choking involving three complainants, between December 2002 and July 2003. He also tore into the complainants' evidence, leading to an animated debate about whether the criminal-justice system oppresses victims of sexual violence.

Ghomeshi was sacked by CBC in 2014 following an allegation that he had injured a woman. Perhaps unwisely, Ghomeshi posted a self-justificatory Facebook article after his sacking, insisting that, while he liked rough sex, his encounters had always been consensual.

The floodgates opened. Various women used the media to accuse him of past sexual misconduct, and he became the subject of a social-media witch-hunt. Bill Blair, chief of the Toronto Police Service, then made a bizarre public appeal to women to report Ghomeshi, stating that the police's hands were tied unless women complained to them. Predictably, some women then went to the police.'

Trio of bikini-clad women charged in brutal beach brawl

Matt · 1 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Pretty faces, ugly souls. Further proof that one need not be big, strong, or male to seriously hurt others. Tell feminists that, though. Bet they do no time for it, too. Excerpt:

'Three brawling babes in bikinis were collared in South Carolina for a riverside beach fight.

Arlinda Craft, 18; Anns Leigh Hill, 19 and Megan Williams, 20, were charged with second-degree assault and battery by a mob after they allegedly beat a female victim on a Columbia river beach, according to police.
...
The victim told police that one assailant pulled her by her hair and threw her down on river rocks before she passed out.

Her coworker said that two of the women held her down while the other pummeled her.
...
The 20-year-old victim of the latest attack, whose name has not been released, suffered a concussion, two black eyes, a bloodied face and a shattered nose.'

Due process on campus ‘will get worse before it gets better,’ Cardozo law students told

Mastodon · 1 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What if due process of law as guaranteed by the U.S. Constitution ceased to exist the moment that students stepped foot on college campuses?

Practically speaking, it stopped existing on campus several years ago, according to legal experts who spoke to the Cardozo School of Law chapter of the Federalist Society on Tuesday.

The systems in place to evaluate accusations at most colleges and universities are severely limited, and arguably unlawful, they told law students: Mere accusations are leading to expulsions and career-stunting social stigma for students who find themselves in the cross hairs of campus sexual-misconduct investigations.'

Federal judge rebukes lack of due process in campus sex assault procedures

Matt · 1 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Finally, a federal judge has strongly condemned the lack of due process and fairness that students accused of sexual assault face on college campuses.

Judge F. Dennis Saylor IV, a George W. Bush appointee, ruled that Brandeis University "failed to provide a variety of procedural protections to [the accused student], many of which, in the criminal context, are the most basic and fundamental components of due process of law."

In his 89-page decision, Saylor criticizes Brandeis for a number of due process violations, including denying the accused student access to the evidence against him or even a detailed explanation of the charges against him.

For example, Brandeis' "special examiner," who investigated the accusation, determined that the accuser, known as J.C. in the lawsuit, was more credible than the accused, because he provided consistent statements while the accused couldn't remember certain events. Saylor concluded that the discrepancy between the two parties was "exactly what one would expect where one party is fully informed of the subject matter of the inquiry and the other remains ignorant, and has to surmise the specifics of the charges over the course of the investigation."'

Turkey: 'Campus Witches' beat up a male student over sexual assault allegations

Mastodon · 1 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The "Campus Witches," a feminist group at the Ankara University Faculty of Languages, History and Geography, has suddenly garnered newfound popularity after video footage showing female students from the group physically assaulting a male student and accusing him of sexual abuse went viral.

As the video posted on the Campus Witches' Facebook page on March 29 shows, security officers came to rescue the male student after members of the group began to physically assault him.

Another student addressed the crowd watching the scene, elaborating on the reason for the reaction to the male student, identified as E.Ç.

The group accused him of writing insulting messages addressed to his ex-girlfriend on his Twitter account and sexually assaulting her. The group also hung printouts of the messages.

"What did I do? Explain it to me," the male student said. "We still have the messages you've sent on the phone," the group replied.
...
"We waited for him to come to the campus. Since he ignored the verbal warnings, we beat him up," Çelik said, while emphasizing they used their right of self-defense against the male student.
...
A similar incident happened last year in November at Akdeniz University, where a group of feminist students broke into a class in order to find an alleged sexual abuser. The male student, identified as S.D., was found in the cafeteria and exposed by the feminists.

S.D. later tried to commit suicide and was taken to the hospital.'

College sued for Title IX investigation against student

Mastodon · 1 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Macalester College was sued last February by a former student who accused the college of violating his right to due process and failing to provide him reasonable accommodations for his disabilities. The student, Alec Scott Jackson ’18, was being investigated by the college for an alleged case of sexual assault, and the lawsuit charged Jackson’s rights were violated during that disciplinary process. Jackson’s appeal for a restraining order against Macalester, which would have prevented them from carrying out his investigation while the suit was pending, was denied, and Jackson withdrew the lawsuit a few days later. Jackson no longer attends Macalester College.

The claim of sexual assault stemmed from an alleged incident that took place off-campus against a non-Macalester student in early October. Jackson requested “reasonable accommodations,” which would have allowed him to have full attorney representation throughout the investigation. Jackson’s lawyers argued that his disabilities would prevent him from effectively participating in the disciplinary process, and that both he and the college would benefit from that accommodation. Macalester denied that request.'

UK: Drunk woman dialled 999 with a false rape claim to get a lift home

Mastodon · 1 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A drunk woman dialled 999 with a false rape claim because she wanted a LIFT HOME, a court heard.

Claire Hollins picked up the phone and asked a Derbyshire Police call handler if she could be driven from Derby to her home in Stoke.

The 22-year-old was hung up on - but called back a second time to say she had been raped.

However when officers spoke to her she admitted nothing had happened and that she "just wanted a lift home".

Hollins was pointed in the direction of a Derby taxi firm, but when the driver refused her fare, she caused £500 of damage to his cab.

Hollins pleaded guilty to a public order offence and to criminal damage and was handed a 12-month community order. She was also ordered to pay £85 prosecution costs and a £60 victim surcharge.'

'Women want to have baby girls, not boys, as their lot in life is much better'

Mastodon · 2 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'She may be 84, but Fay Weldon's work as a novelist, playwright, TV dramatist and scriptwriter still sparks debates in many a book club and beyond. Weldon, whose work includes the hit series The Life And Loves Of A She-Devil and The Cloning Of Joanna May, has lived long enough to be confident in her views on contemporary life, and today talks airily in detached tones about what "one" does and what "one" thinks.

Her outspoken opinions on feminism have often courted controversy, but after a lifetime spent people-watching, three marriages, four children, four stepchildren and a clutch of grandchildren, she's come to the conclusion that men are now under the cosh. Both men and women may have suffered as feminism has evolved, she reflects.
...
"Feminism has certainly undermined men," she continues, "if only because women now want to have girl babies, not boy babies, because their lot in life is better."'

"The Current Depiction of Masculinity Isn’t Cutting It"

Mastodon · 2 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The definition of masculinity is fairly straightforward — the possession of qualities appropriate to or usually associated with a man. However, society has shifted its collective perception of what it means to be masculine. Nowadays, there’s no ennobling, culturally accepted role for men; males are cast as either historical villains or self-abasing sinners begging for the collective forgiveness of their gender.

The notion that men must atone for the sins of their forefathers leaves them with little room for a socially acceptable alternative. Essential, formerly valued masculine traits have now — mostly — become unacceptable and discouraged outside the entertainment industry.

...

These images fuel the fantasies of many frustrated young men who not only lack guidance from healthy role models, but are also occasionally chastised for their natural exuberance. Instead of being appreciated for their male qualities, boys and men are asked to swap their natural gender traits for a watered-down, more politically correct version of masculinity.'

Judge Sides with Gay Brandeis Student Guilty of 'Serious Sexual Transgression' for Kissing Sleeping Boyfriend

Matt · 2 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A judge rebuked Brandeis University for denying fundamental due process rights to a student who was found guilty of sexual misconduct for a variety of non-violent offenses: most notably, because he had awakened his then-boyfriend with nonconsensual kisses.

The process that Brandeis employed to investigate the matter was "essentially secret and inquisitorial," according to Dennis Saylor, a federal judge who ruled that the accused student's lawsuit against Brandeis should continue.

This is a significant victory for advocates of due process in campus sexual misconduct investigations. It's also an implicit skewering of affirmative consent as official policy. The accused, "John Doe," was found responsible for stolen kisses, suggestive touches, and a wandering eye—all within the context of an established sexual relationship. His former partner and accuser, J.C., did not file a complaint with the university until well after the incidents took place. In fact, J.C.'s participation in Brandeis' "sexual assault training" program caused him to re-evaluate the relationship.'

Policing Students' Sex Lives Costs Colleges Millions, But Nobody's Happy With Results

Matt · 3 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In order to fall into compliance with federal anti-discrimination law, the University of Kansas (KU) should segregate male student athletes to special dorms and immediately suspend anyone accused of sexual assault, argue the lawyers of a former student who says she was raped in the KU dorms. The young woman, Daisy Tackett (who has chosen to be public with her name and identity), is now suing the university in federal court.

According to Tackett's claim, the school's failure to take reasonable steps to prevent the assault and to adequately address the situation afterward created a "hostile" educational environment, in violation of the federal statute known as Title IX. The original aim of Title IX was to combat institutional sex discrimination in education, but has since morphed into "a lever by which the federal bureaucracy monitors schools' policies and procedures regulating sexual behavior," as Harvard law professors recently put it. These days, schools are increasingly finding themselves under investigation by the Education Department's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) and on the receiving end of student lawsuits over perceived inadequacies in addressing sexual harassment and assault on campus.

Tackett's lawsuit against KU epitomizes the shortcomings of this system. But that isn't a condemnation of Tackett nor her parents, who have also filed their own suit against KU under Kansas consumer protection law. Tackett has provided no reason to disbelieve her accusations against "John Doe G," a fellow student and member of the KU football team who was expelled from KU this March. It's understandable for Tackett and her family to feel upset, betrayed, or whatever emotions are motivating their current actions. And while I think the Title IX lawsiut is misguided, I'm not here to judge or express scorn toward people trying to handle a tough situation in the best way they see available. No, the problem is with the options and incentives that are available to begin with.'

Department of Education to be sued by due-process group for bogus Title IX threats

Mastodon · 4 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you've ever wanted to see your name memorialized in an important legal precedent, here's your chance.

The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education said Monday it "aims to challenge" the Department of Education's use of unenforceable guidance to threaten colleges into changing their Title IX procedures around alleged sexual misconduct – and it needs a student or institutional plaintiff:

FIRE has made arrangements to secure legal counsel for a student or institution harmed by [Office for Civil Rights'] mandates and in a position to challenge the agency's violation of the Administrative Procedure Act (APA). In keeping with FIRE's charitable mission to advance the public interest, representation will be provided at no cost to the harmed party.

"In the five years since its issuance, OCR has acted as though the 2011 Dear Colleague letter is binding law—but it isn't," said FIRE Executive Director Robert Shibley. "By circumventing federal law, OCR ignored all stakeholders: victims, the accused, civil liberties advocates, administrators, colleges, law enforcement, and the general public. Real people's lives are being irreparably harmed as a result. It's time that OCR be held accountable."'

Feminism: Why I'm campaigning for UK schools to teach boys and girls all about it

Mastodon · 4 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Articl here. Excerpt:

'Now aged 14, this thought process led me to start a petition, “A In Equality”, because I think that feminism should be on the PSHE (personal, social, health and economic) curriculum in all schools. In order to achieve equality on every front, we need to start by educating the future generation on the rights that will affect every single person every single day.

If gender equality is formally put on the curriculum, it may not eradicate the major feminist issues in our society today, but it may, in the longer term, have a positive impact on attitudes towards feminism, and its importance in daily life.

PSHE covers lots of difficult subjects - such as mental health and bullying - which is why I believe it would also be a perfect place to learn about gender equality for both girls and boys.'

After 800 Years, Oxford Theology Students to Swap Christianity for Feminism

Mastodon · 4 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oxford University is deviating from its 800-year-old tradition to remain relevant to "the dramatic change" in the U.K., by allowing its undergraduate theology students to skip studying Christianity after the first year of their degree, and choose instead subjects like "Feminist Approaches to Theology and Religion" and "Buddhism in Space and Time."

...

From September 2017, theology students will have to study Christianity only in their first year, and can opt for other areas, including feminism, Buddhism, Islam and mysticism, from second year onwards. A result of seven years of consultation, the new course will be called "theology and religion" for the first time.

"If you have a very rigid curriculum, there will be an increasing mismatch between what lecturers are doing in their research time and what they're having to teach," Zachhuber seeks to explain.'

UMass updates Title IX websites with provisions inspired by Survivor's Bill of Rights

Mastodon · 4 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Massachusetts updated the My Rights section of their Title IX website to specify provisions from the Coalition to End Rape Culture's Survivor Bill of Rights.

The My Rights section, which CERC President Priya Ghosh said has been consistently revised by UMass since the winter break, contains nine bullet points and is prefaced with a statement acknowledging the influence of the Survivor's Bill of Rights, which specifically applies to survivors of sexual assault.

"I discovered yesterday that many of the parts of the nine major clauses were adopted from the Survivor's Bill of Rights," said Ghosh, a public health sciences major.

The updated My Rights section emphasize many points from the Survivor's Bill of Rights, such as the assurance that students' Title IX rights will be protected if they study abroad, that students have the right to choose whether or not to seek a disciplinary hearing if they become a survivor of sexual misconduct and that students have the right to withdraw a Title IX complaint at any point.'

A broader role for women in the military, Selective Service

Mastodon · 5 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some members of Congress, the Marine Corps commandant and the Army's chief of staff have proposed that women register for the draft. If the proposal is approved, women will join men ages 18 to 25 years in being required to register with the Selective Service System.

No one has been drafted in the United States since 1973, but a list is kept to help hedge against unforeseen threats. The government further explains that, "By registering all eligible men, Selective Service ensures a fair and equitable draft, if required."

...

If specific roles require abilities that only one sex possesses, it makes sense to limit those roles to the appropriate sex. But how many such roles are there? Women can fly planes, guide drones, target enemies, analyze strategy and perform almost any task required by the military. In fact, in matters of endurance, for example, or in the capacity for detail work, they may on average surpass men. Hence, the refusal to treat women and men equally with respect to a military draft is but a hangover from our historical practices of gender discrimination.'

Campus rights group to challenge federal sexual assault mandate

Matt · 5 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Colleges and universities may one day be freed from the requirement to adjudicate felonies, if this campus rights group gets its way.

The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education plans to officially challenge the Education Department's mandate that schools adjudicate campus sexual assault. Currently, the agency's Office for Civil Rights, through a 2011 "guidance" document — known as a "Dear Colleague" letter — requires schools to create pseudo-court systems to determine whether students have committed sexual assault.

FIRE is seeking "a student or institution to challenge OCR's abuse of power" and has offered to pay the legal fees of whoever takes on this task.'

SAVE E-lert: Let's Rescind the Dear Colleague Letter Used to Bully

Matt · 5 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

This week marks the five year anniversary that the Department of Education released a Dear Colleague Letter, directing colleges to handle campus sexual assault cases far beyond their expertise.

Moreover, this letter never went through the required channel to become a proper regulation: http://www.washingtonexaminer.com/campus-rights-group-to-challenge-federal-sexual-assault-mandate/article/2587605.

This is dangerous for students and for police investigations.

Contact your federal legislators now and tell them to help us get the Office for Civil Rights, April 4, 2011 Dear Colleague Letter to universities rescinded.

Find your federal legislators here: https://www.usa.gov/elected-officials

Let's make a statement that the government cannot bully universities unlawfully!

Thank you!

Gina Lauterio, Esq.
Policy Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Spain: German retiree 'fed to dog' by Russian wife

Matt · 5 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Svetlana Batukova, 46, is in police custody after she was found next to the bloody corpse of her husband named locally as Horst Hans Henkels on Friday.

A post mortem on Saturday revealed that the German had bled to death after being repeatedly stabbed with a kitchen knife.

Flesh from his arms had reportedly been cut off and fed to the couple's dog, an American Staffordshire bull terrior, according to the online Periodistadigital.

Initial findings widely reported in local media on the Balearic Islands indicated that the victim had been drugged before being repeatedly stabbed and had bled to death on the floor of their flat in Sant Llorenç.'

The Federal Government's Sexual Reign of Terror on College Campuses

Mastodon · 5 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new "sex bureaucracy" is attempting a full takeover of young people's sex lives through moral strictures that trample free speech and the due process of law. In only the most recent symptom of this disease, a court recently ruled that George Mason University wrongfully expelled a student in 2014 -- for engaging in consensual sex with his girlfriend.

That student, who is anonymously referred to as "John Doe," won a federal lawsuit against George Mason after administrators ignored evidence that he had been in a consensual relationship for over one year. After the break-up, the ex-girlfriend told school officials and police about what she considered in hindsight to be sexual assaults. This girl's reaction follows a recent totalitarian trend on college campuses. In seeking to prevent "sexual violence," schools have taken to regulating students' behavior and even attitudes about sex to absurd levels.

A forthcoming paper to appear in the August issue of the California Law Review outlines "The Sex Bureaucracy," which Harvard Law School professors Jacob Gersen and Jeannie Suk argue is thoroughly regulating "the space of sex" in America. The "bureaucracy dedicated to that regulation of sex ... operates largely apart from criminal enforcement, but its actions are inseparable from criminal overtones and implications."'

UK: Outrage at Feminist Week bake sale plan to charge men more than women for cupcakes to highlight gender salary gap

Mastodon · 5 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bake sale at a university feminist week has caused outrage due to its plans to price items based upon the pay gap between men and women.

The University of Queensland Union is holding Feminist Week from April 4-8 and at the associated Gender Pay Gap Bake Sale on Tuesday, items will cost a proportion of a dollar compared to men who will pay $1 for each item.

A website for the event states: 'For example, if you are a woman of colour in the legal profession, a baked good at the stall will only cost you 0.55 cents!'.
...
'I get pretty frustrated when I hear people saying 'What about the men, isn't that discriminatory, isn't it reverse-sexism?,' she said.

'Many men generally speaking have the extra pay as an unearned privilege while women are disadvantaged and people of colour are disadvantaged and minority groups and people who don't conform to binary genders are disadvantaged.

UQU women's officer Madeline Price helped organise the Feminist Week and said the about of anger about the issue was interesting.'

‘Jackie’ must testify in lawsuit over Rolling Stone rape story

Mastodon · 5 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Virginia judge has ruled that the woman at the center of Rolling Stone’s discredited story about an alleged frat house gang rape must testify as part of a lawsuit against the magazine.

The woman identified only as “Jackie” will be deposed on Thursday by attorneys representing Rolling Stone and Nicole Eramo, the University of Virginia administrator who is suing the magazine and the author of the now-retracted article, Sabrina Rubin Erdely.

Erdely’s 2014 piece, “A Rape On Campus,” featured Jackie’s graphic claim to have been raped by a group of fraternity members during her freshman year at UVA.

Eramo, an associate dean of students at UVA, is suing Rolling Stone and Erdely for defamation over what she says was an unfair portrayal of her as an insensitive campus bureaucrat in the story. She is seeking $7.85 million in damages.'

Teen falsely accused of Brooklyn gang rape to sue the city

Mastodon · 5 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the five Brooklyn teens who faced, and then were cleared of, accusations they gang-raped a drunk 18-year-old girl — who was later revealed to have been having sex with her long-lost father before engaging in consensual acts with the boys — plans to sue the city and the NYPD, The Post has learned.

“Onandi [Brown] is deserving of recompense for what happened to him,” the 17-year-old’s attorney, Spencer Leeds, said on Monday.

“It is clear that the city is legally obligated to compensate Onandi for the damages that he has suffered, and likely will continue to suffer,” the attorney said.

Leeds filed a notice of claim on behalf of his client late Monday, indicating his intention to sue the city.'

The New World of Campus Sexual Assault

Mastodon · 6 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The President portrays colleges and universities as centers of sexual assault where men routinely escape responsibility for their actions. Twenty eight Harvard Law School professors decry campus adjudications “stacked” against young men. No wonder college age women and men (and their parents) look at this aspect of college life with trepidation.

Two powerful themes contend. On the one hand, victims of sexual assault present a civil rights issue: the right of young women to have their claims taken seriously and redressed. On the other, young men face the potential for limited due process and unjust outcomes.

Just five years ago, campus sexual assault was a matter of state criminal law, assigned to criminal prosecutors, defense lawyers, judges, and juries, in a system heavily stacked against the victims. Since then, states have begun to implement “Yes Means Yes” laws, while federal law has created a parallel universe where educational institutions must venture into the business of justice — and administer it pursuant to federal standards.

Critics of the new federal framework question the requirement that academic institutions (rather than police, prosecutors and courts) determine claims of sexual violence, and they question their expertise to conduct the necessary investigations and adjudications. They also note substantial limitations on the role of counsel, including on cross-examination, and the use of a preponderance of the evidence standard, instead of a requirement of proof by clear and convincing evidence or beyond a reasonable doubt.'

University professors claim Title IX abuse in new report

Mastodon · 6 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The professors have their own complaint about violation, and it goes like this: in too many cases, Title IX investigations are trampling due process and free speech rights.

"From trigger warnings to tweets. . ." the report says, "When Title IX concerns play out as hostile environment sex panics within the corporate university, academic freedom is threatened."

Harassment was not even mentioned in the Title IX legislation, AAUP notes. But by the 1980s, courts and the federal government had expanded the concept of discrimination in the workplace to include sexual harassment—which was then defined as quid pro quo demands for sexual favors and/or "verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature" that creates a "work environment" so hostile or offensive that it interferes with the affected person's ability to function.'

Court: Student Punished for USC Sex Assault Didn't Receive Due Process

Mastodon · 6 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Wading into the fraught issue of sex crimes on college campuses, a state appeals court has reversed the suspension of a male USC student accused of participating in a group sexual assault against a female student.

The Second District Court of Appeal held that the male student, a USC football player referred to only as John Doe, wasn't given sufficient notice of the allegations against him or a fair hearing by the school before being suspended.

The ruling highlights the difficult task universities have in balancing accused students' due process rights with the concerns of victims and federal officials who have urged schools to adopt procedures to keep campuses safe.

Justice Audrey Collins acknowledged in Tuesday's unanimous panel decision "that universities need adequate tools to address the very serious and sensitive problem of sexual assault on campus." Still she wrote that "it is not too heavy a burden to require that students facing disciplinary action be informed of the factual basis for the charges against them."'

Is masculinity a problem to solved?

Mastodon · 6 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is masculinity a problem to be overcome?

That's what you might believe after hearing what some academics and filmmakers are claiming about the character traits of most men.

The documentary, The Mask You Live In, which was recently shown at a forum on men's issues at the University of B.C., pictures masculinity as the driving force behind virtually all that is wrong with North American culture.

"Be a man!" "Don't be a girl!" "Stop crying!" "What a fag." "Grow some balls!" "Don't let a woman run your life." "Get laid." "Stop with the emotions!"

These male rebukes are spat out at the beginning of The Mask You Live In. They're part of the catalogue of stereotypical admonitions that the filmmakers claim compose the hidden social rules that forge the grim "mask" of masculinity.

The documentary argues these values cause widespread violence, abuse, addiction, crime and war — and it implies they need to be replaced by more feminine values, such as those related to sharing feelings, empathy, co-operating and nurturing.'

White House Targets Toys And Media To Attract More Girls To STEM Careers

Mastodon · 6 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's an ambitious goal. The White House aims to "break down gender stereotypes in media and toys so that our children can explore, learn and dream without limits," as stated in a press release earlier today. From retail to media, organizations like Netflix and Discovery Communications are coming on board, pledging to take new action to break down gender stereotyping in toys and media. The audacious aim is to get more girls interested in STEM (science, technology, engineering and math) careers, and more boys interested in fields like nursing and teaching.

Unfortunately, there's not a lot of scientific evidence supporting the idea that men are pursuing STEM careers, because they were more likely to play with techie, science-oriented toys when they were young. Instead, there's evidence that a large part of the gender difference in pursuit of STEM careers boils down to women's preference for more people-oriented careers. It's also why women are more likely than men to be nurses or teachers. Some may be surprised to learn that women and men perform equally well in science and math courses through high school, and enroll in high school calculus courses in basically the same numbers. Yet, when it comes time to choose a profession, women tend to choose more people-oriented career paths.'

"The Dinah" and double-standards

Matt · 7 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Nothing wrong with a women-only event like this one, not in my opinion, anyway. What's wrong is the double-standards the article inadvertantly points up. Imagine a similar multi-day party that is all-gay-male and celebrates free, casual sex and womanlessness? Imagine how feminists would condemn it as misogynistic if also at the same time it being politically correct because it's a "queer event"? Count the double-standards and marvel. Excerpt:

'Every year at the end of March, 20,000 lesbians from around the world fly into the Californian desert for five days of debauchery, and I'm one of them. It's my second time at the Dinah, also known as the largest girl festival in the world. I'm staying at the Hilton in Palm Springs, which is hosting the famous Dinah pool parties, and the hotel feels like a homosexual harem.

It's a surreal experience: for a few days the world is turned upside down, the minority is suddenly the majority. Everywhere you look, lesbians are smiling, drinking, dancing, kissing. There are a few men around – staff working the event and guys who have been dragged along by lesbian friends – but they are hard to spot. It's basically entirely queer women in attendance.

The party is named after the Dinah Shore golf tournament, started in 1972 by the eponymous entertainer. Dinah Shore wasn't a lesbian (she'd be doing somersaults in her grave if she knew what her moniker was attached to now), but golf seems to attract a lot of lesbians. A sapphic scene sprouted up around the golf tournament, and the Dinah was born. It's now in its 26th year.'

Feds Spend $548,459 Studying Male Students' 'Microaggressions' Towards Women

Mastodon · 7 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The National Science Foundation is spending over $500,000 to videotape male engineering students while they work in labs to see if they are causing women to experience "microaggressions."

The University of Michigan received the funding for a three-year project that is studying whether male college students ignore their fellow female classmates' work.

"Because engineering is cast as a masculine field, women engineering students can experience subtle yet pervasive stereotypic messages in their learning environments that can negatively influence their experiences," according to the grant for the study. "This early stage research project will identify specific behavioral manifestations of gender stereotypes—microaggressions—and their cumulative effect on learning, performance, and persistence in introductory engineering course teamwork."

"Such microaggressions may cause the climate of the team to become less welcoming to women," the researchers warn. "The proposed research unites two areas of strong research interest (social science research on gender stereotypes and engineering education on teamwork and climate) to advance understanding of women's underrepresentation in engineering as compared to men."'

Student Suspended for Rape Because He Didn't Stop Friends from Slapping Girl's Butt

Mastodon · 7 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Southern California found a male student, "John Doe," responsible for sexual assault and suspended him for two years. But his alleged victim, a female student, "Jane," maintained that the sex between them was consensual.

Doe was ultimately punished, not because he hurt Jane, but because he did nothing to prevent two other males from having rough sex with her—from slapping her on the buttocks—during an orgy.

...

The incident took place at an off-campus fraternity party in January of 2013. Doe was a member of the fraternity: the two other males who attended the part and were involved in the incident, "Student 1 and Student 2," were students at a different university. Jane attended the party with a group of friends.

After dancing together, Jane, Doe, and Student 1 went off to a bedroom together to have sex. All agree that this encounter was consensual, according to the court's decision.

Later that evening, Jane and Doe returned to the bedroom to have sex again. Jane maintains that their sexual activity remained consensual, but other men—likely including Students 1 and 2—entered the room and also began performing sexual acts on Jane. These activities became rough, and culminated in one or two of the men—not Doe—slapping her butt.

At no point did Jane tell any of the men to stop, but she did begin to cry after the slapping. All sexual activity then ceased. Jane later texted Doe that she had a good time with him, but "your friends suck though." She approached him again at a party some weeks later, but he declined to dance with her.

Months later, in August of 2014—after discussing her "confidence issues" with a counsellor—Jane decided that the incident constituted sexual assault and filed a complaint. Still, she maintained that she had consented to sex with Doe: it was the other men who had violated her.'

Sen. McCaskill: Sanders' Attacks On Clinton Could Be Gender-Based

Mastodon · 8 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Clinton supporter Sen. Claire McCaskill suggested that Bernie Sanders' attacks on Hillary Clinton are gender-based because "women who have succeeded in male-dominated fields have been used to being marginalized."

In an interview on MSNBC's "Andrea Mitchell Reports" on Thursday, Mitchell asked if "gender is involved" in Sanders' criticism of Clinton and McCaskill replied, "Well, I just think it's one of those things that — maybe it's not right — but I think women who have succeeded in male-dominated fields have been used to being marginalized about whether or not they are truly qualified."'

The Big Stall: Men are sliding back

fathers4fairness · 8 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With their greater education, women are now getting more jobs and more management jobs than men, and closing in on the earnings of males; economists report that their wages are rising faster than those of men. According to the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, among recent college graduates, women earn 97 percent of what their male peers earn. “At the start of their careers, women actually out-earn men by a substantial margin for a number of college majors.”

As women advance, however, men are stalling in their development, increasingly stuck in place and even backsliding as postindustrial American culture fractures along educational, economic, and behavioral fault lines. Almost daily, reports announce that men are lagging by almost every measure there is—school enrollment rates (71 percent of female high school graduates enrolled in college in 2012 versus 61 percent of males, according to the Pew Research Center), number of graduate degrees (women earned 61 percent of master’s and 51 percent of doctor’s degrees in 2012–2013, finds the National Center for Education Statistics), and labor force participation. As Princeton economists Anne Case and Angus Deaton report in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, data now show that, uniquely among advanced countries, the physical and mental health of American men has begun to decline, seen especially in rising rates of suicide and accidental death due to substance abuse among white middle-aged men.'

Reject feminist calls to ban anonymous speech on campus, broad coalition tells regulators

Mastodon · 9 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A broad coalition of groups has asked the Department of Education to reject calls from feminist groups to ban anonymous speech on campus under an extremely loose interpretation of Title IX – and to revise its own definition of harassment.

The National Coalition Against Censorship, American Association of University Professors, Foundation for Individual Rights in Education and Student Press Law Center are defending student use of apps including Yik Yak, which lets students share their thoughts anonymously in a campuswide feed.

The letter responds to an effort by dozens of feminist and civil rights groups to punish the University of Mary Washington for not monitoring, identifying and punishing students who post offensive content on apps like Yik Yak, saying it constitutes harassment under Title IX.'

Settlement Reached In Litigation Between Alan Dershowitz, Paul Cassell, And Bradley Edwards

Matt · 9 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Welcome celebrated lawyer and law professor Alan Dershowitz back to the headlines — and not because of his role in The People v. O.J. Simpson: American Crime Story. We have a Friday night news dump on our hands.

The defamation case filed against Dershowitz by two other prominent members of the legal community, high-profile Florida lawyer Brad Edwards and former federal judge Paul Cassell, just settled. As you may recall, Edwards and Cassell sued Dershowitz for defamation last year in Florida state court. The two lawyers alleged that Dershowitz defamed them when he claimed that they knowingly filed a lawsuit containing falsehoods about him or at least failed to properly investigate their client's allegations that Dershowitz had sexual relations with her when she was a minor. Settlement talks in the defamation case have been going on for months, and the two sides just reached agreement.'

NPO: Florida Bar’s Family Law Section Skirts Truth About Opposition to Shared Parenting

Matt · 9 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Alimony and custody reform in Florida hang in the balance at this very moment. The Legislature has passed a good bill, and now we wait to see if Governor Scott will sign it.

This may be your last, best chance to get meaningful reform in Florida. The only question is who is more motivated: the people of Florida or the special interests and their high-paid lobbyists. Make no mistake, the lobbyists are leaving no stone unturned to kill this bill. If we cannot muster the energy to make one simple phone call, we don't deserve to get reform. But how about the kids -- don't they deserve your phone call?'

Teacher Repeatedly Slaps Student, Calls Him ‘Idiot Ass’

Mastodon · 10 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A high school teacher in east Texas was arrested and charged with misdemeanor assault on Friday after cellphone video allegedly shows her repeatedly slapping a student on the head.

According to the Jefferson County Sheriff’s Office, the incident took place at Ozen High School near Beaumont, Texas. The teacher, Mary Hastings, was arrested on Friday and charged with misdemeanor assault. She immediately posted the $2500 bail and was released, pending her next court appearance.

A brief video of the alleged incident was posted on Twitter on Friday and appears to show the teacher swipe some items off the student’s desk before repeatedly slapping him on the head. She then appears to mock his response to the incident. It is not clear what lead up to this incident but it seems the teacher is frustrated about something the student did which she thinks is “stopping [the other students] from graduating.” She also can also be heard apparently refer to the student as an “idiot ass.” Regardless of what the student may have done, based on the video, it seems to safe to say the teacher appears to have lost her cool.'

Uber for women is a great idea—except for one thing

Matt · 10 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new women-only ride-sharing service, Chariot for Women, is set to launch April 19 in Boston, Massachusetts.

Surprisingly, its founder is not a former female passenger who felt unsafe in an Uber—as many of us have—but Michael Pelletz, an Uber driver who had a revelation when he felt threatened by a passenger.

“What if I was a woman?” Pelletz, wrote on the company’s website. In fact, worries about safety are why his wife Kelly—who is now Chariot for Women’s president—decided not to drive for Uber, he said.

Scores of women have reported rapes and assaults by Uber drivers, while, anecdotally, countless others have felt threatened. In March, Uber’s safety issues were thrown into the spotlight when Uber driver Jason Brian Dalton allegedly shot and killed six people in Kalamazoo, Michigan. Dalton continued to pick up Uber passengers in between his shooting rampages. Just yesterday, Uber agreed to pay up to $25 million to settle with prosecutors for misleading passengers about the thoroughness of its background checks.
...
That all sounds great. But “whether it’s legal or not is a different question,” Joseph L. Sulman, an employment law specialist, told the Boston Globe. According to civil rights lawyers, Chariots for Women’s female-only policies could put it squarely in the crosshairs of gender discrimination lawsuits, which would be difficult to win.'

Revenge porn case sees first woman convicted for victimising male partner

Matt · 10 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Despite the severity of her insane behavior, the female discount is applied and she gets a suspended sentence. Justice denied - again. Excerpt:

'A JILTED lover has become the first woman to be convicted of victimising a man by using revenge porn after posting explicit images of him online without his consent.

Saleswoman Ellie Melaugh, 20, was said to have turned her ex's life into a 'nightmare' after uploading the pictures to his Facebook and Twitter.

She is believed to be the first female found guilty of a crime under revenge porn legislation introduced a year ago.

The images were posted alongside his name and full address and were seen by the victim's mother and grandparents as well as countless online strangers.

She also set up a fake profile on dating site Plenty of Fish to humiliate him as well as calling him hundreds of times.

He was forced to repeatedly change his number to avoid contact from her and others.

The offences were so serious she was given a suspended jail sentence when she admitted to harassment and posting the revenge porn at Wimbledon Magistrates' Court.'

‘Equal pay day’ this year is April 12; the next ‘equal occupational fatality day’ will be in the year 2027

Matt · 10 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Every year the National Committee on Pay Equity (NCPE) publicizes its “Equal Pay Day” to bring public attention to the gender pay gap. According to the NCPE, “Equal Pay Day” will fall this year on April 12, and allegedly represents how far into 2016 women will have to continue working to earn the same income that the men earned last year, supposedly for doing the same job. Inspired by Equal Pay Day, I introduced “Equal Occupational Fatality Day” in 2010 to bring public attention to the huge gender disparity in work-related deaths every year in the United States. “Equal Occupational Fatality Day” tells us how many years into the future women will be able to continue to work before they will experience the same number of occupational fatalities that occurred for men in the previous year.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS) released data last fall on workplace fatalities for 2014, and a new “Equal Occupational Fatality Day” can now be calculated. As in previous years, the chart above shows the significant gender disparity in workplace fatalities in 2014: 4,320 men died on the job (92.3% of the total) compared to only 359 women (7.7% of the total). The “gender occupational fatality gap” in 2014 was considerable — more than 12 men died on the job last year for every woman who died while working.'

Should universities police sexual assault?

Matt · 10 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fifty years ago, life on campus was pretty dull. Student behaviour was tightly (if not always successfully) regulated by curfews, single-sex dorms and no-alcohol rules. All these prohibitions were meant to ensure that immature young adults wouldn't get into too much trouble.

My generation got rid of all that. We insisted on autonomy. We did not want authorities regulating our conduct. Social norms changed dramatically. The culture became hypersexualized. Casual sex on campus, once uncommon, is now no big deal. Alcohol is ubiquitous. And now, students (as well as parents, activists and governments) are demanding that universities once again take up the burden of providing for their charges' mental, emotional and physical welfare – without the former restrictions on sex, booze and behaviour, of course.'

Facebook banning anti-feminist pages

Matt · 11 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Facebook have been throwing the ban hammer and banning several pages that are against feminism.

Last week our page “Anti-Feminism Australia” (45,000 likes) was unpublished by Facebook with an “appeal” button. I appealed it and waited patiently for a day. The next day I woke up to find that the page had been completely deleted without any notice or warning from facebook. It was just lucky that I had managed to backup all the photos containing our memes before the page vanished. I believe this was a result of feminists mass reporting all pages against feminism. It appears as though facebook are now siding with feminists in censoring anything that goes against their ideology.

Today I received some news that the popular page “Exposing Feminism” had also been unpublished by facebook. At the time of writing this, they are currently waiting the appeal, but knowing what happened to Anti-Feminism Australia, its unlikely they will be successful.'

Are 1 in 5 Women Raped at College?

Matt · 11 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'Is it true that 1 in 5 women are raped on America's college campuses? If so, what does that say about our universities and the people who run them? If not, how did that statistic get into the mainstream? Caroline Kitchens, Senior Research Associate at the American Enterprise Institute, looks at the data and explains the very significant results.'

India: Freed after 4 years, rapist tag still haunts Delhi man acquitted of rape

Matt · 11 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'He was arrested on charges of raping a Chinese national days after the December 16 gangrape. However, it took for him over four years to prove his innocence and walk out of jail but not without the stigma of being a rapist.

The 28-year-old was acquitted by a Delhi court in March but the case has left a deep scar on him as he faced the wrath of the raging furore of the Nirbhaya rape.

Working as an event organiser and with a career in modeling, the man had met a Chinese national through a contact, who had come to Delhi for an internship through a non-profit organisation.

"I was 25 years old when I met the girl through a friend in an event. She from then on began pursuing me to help her get some part-time work so that she could bear her expenses during her stint. On the day of the incident, she accompanied me to a meeting and on our way back, we went to my apartment in south Delhi along with my two other friends. We partied and then she was dropped home by a friend. The very next day she texted me and enquired about her lost earring. I do not what happened after that. On February 5, 2013 an FIR was lodged against me accusing me of raping her," he told MAIL TODAY.

The girl in her complaint at Hauz Khas police station stated that she was raped by the accused on January 30 at his brother's house, where they had stopped for some work while on their way back from a party.

She told the court, that the accused forced himself on her five times before he raped her.'

Woman Threatens to Cut Off Pro Basketball Player's Penis If He Ever Cheats

Mastodon · 11 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So... don't even think about it! Iggy Azalea directly addressed her fiancé Nick Young's high-profile cheating scandal in an interview this past weekend, and threatened to take drastic measures against the NBA player if he was unfaithful to her.

The host of Wild 94.1's Orlando & The Freakshow explained to Azalea that there are two different kinds of basketball wives: those who spy on their superstar athlete husbands and those who are fine with their significant others sleeping with other women. Azalea quickly placed herself in the former category.

"No, I'm not cool with it," Azalea, 25, told the show. "Like, you'll have half a penis."
...
"I already said, 'One more video, just one more thing and you will lose a quarter of your meat,'" Azalea told Wild 94.1 on Friday. How the video was leaked remains unknown, but Azalea acknowledged that she didn't even know if it was true that Young had cheated. "Well, that's why he got to slide this time," she said. "I was like, 'Just let me get some real evidence, and you're gonna lose half an inch.'"'

Feminist Group Demands Amazon Remove Campaign Items For Candidate They Disagree With

Mastodon · 12 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'More than 13,000 Amazon customers are calling on Amazon CEO Jeff Bezos to 'Dump Trump,' signing a petition that requests Amazon stop carrying the GOP frontrunner's Donald J. Trump menswear collection.

A women's rights organization, UltraViolet, created the petition.

"As an Amazon customer, I am deeply disappointed that you have yet to sever your business relationship with Donald Trump," the letter reportedly states. "His hatred should have no place in the Amazon marketplace."

After discussing crime caused by illegal immigrants during his presidential announcement, Trump suffered backlash from several companies that broke business ties with the billionaire.

KCPQ notes that even if Amazon stopped carrying Trump's products, the retailer would still make a profit from other Trump campaign merchandise.

"A search for 'Trump' on Amazon's website yields more than 44,600 results. About 15% of the listings are Prime eligible," KCPQ reports. "A red baseball cap with Trump's campaign slogan — "Make America Great Again" — is the first result."'

UK: Woman Only Dates Married Men Because No Man Can Be Trusted

Mastodon · 12 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"A mother-of-two has revealed she has chosen to only date married men - not to wreck marriages but because she feels no man can be trusted.

Jenny Hendle, 36, from Tunbridge Wells, Kent, is a serial dater with a difference - she refuses to give single guys the time of day.

Twice-divorced Jenny has already dated nine married men - and says she feels no guilt about seeing other women's husbands.

The bakery worker said: 'I believe there are no loyal and honest men, they don't exist. I have no interest in dating single men who will promise me the world then cheat on me.

'When I start to date a married man there is never any pretense of falling in love or long-term commitment."
...
She said: 'As a teenager I saw my dad persistently cheat on my mum. It was heartbreaking. We all knew it was happening and it broke my mum's heart.

'The confrontations it caused were awful. I grew up accepting that this is how men behave."

"Training" men to be better dads

Mastodon · 12 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If we want men to become better fathers, why not help them learn how they can be?

And why not do it before they fall into the very traps that produce countless bad fathers?

Those two concepts seem pretty logical, especially in a city like Jacksonville. But historically they are concepts that have rarely been embraced by many local programs that have been launched to foster better fatherhood in our community.

Too often these programs are only available to men after they've been in jail and released. Or they're offered only after men have become entwined in the court system for failing to provide child support.'

The Powerpuff Girls' Newest Villain Is a Terrifying..."Men's Rights" Activist

Mastodon · 12 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Superpowers aside, the Powerpuff Girls are a lot more relatable than you think. They bicker just like you and your sisters do, and they also have to stand up to some pretty terrifying foes. No, we're not talking about evil, radioactive monkeys. We mean overgrown misogynists. Meet Townsville's newest villain. His name is, aptly, Manboy.

In the newest clip for the show, our tiny antagonist reveals that he has, "all the power of a man in the body of a boy." Sounds about right. Though his most impressive evil skill is the ability to grow a beard on command, that isn't quite a match for our girls. Nor should it be. If you had any doubts as to whether Blossom, Bubbles, and Buttercup could be feminist icons for a new age, please take a seat before they kick your butt, too.'

Milo Yiannopoulos lecture sparks controversy

Mastodon · 12 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Young Conservatives of Texas at Texas Tech and the Young Americans for Liberty have teamed up to host a Milo Yiannopoulos lecture from 7 to 8 p.m. today in the Red Raider Lounge in the Student Union Building.

Yiannopoulos is a man who has become known for his opinions on what some call controversial topics. Many people have become angered or offended by what he said both on Twitter and on Breitbart, a conservative news website Yiannopoulos writes for.

He is currently on a speaking tour called the “Dangerous Faggot Tour,” where he covers topics such as gay rights, feminism and conservatism.'

Equal Pay Day: What's really causing the gender wage gap, and how to fix it

Matt · 12 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's that time of year again when gender activists claim women are discriminated against en masse by employers and paid less than men as a result. These activists will refer to this alleged discrimination as the gender wage gap.

There is a gap between men and women, but it is not a wage gap — it is an earnings gap. Working women earn less on average than working men, but it is not due to some widespread discrimination or the elusive, conniving patriarchy.

Rather, the gap is due to the different choices men and women make during their education years and careers. The current gap — estimating that women earn 79 cents to the dollar that men earn — is a two-cent improvement from when I first started writing about the topic two years ago. But the real issue is not what the number is, but the misleading methods by which it is derived. In order to calculate a 21-cent earnings gap, one must overlook that the average working woman works in a lower-paying field and works fewer hours each week than the average working man.'

Obama to designate a national monument in D.C. to honor women’s equality Tuesday

Matt · 12 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'President Obama will pay homage to women's equality Tuesday, designating the Sewall-Belmont House and Museum, a historic house in the District that has housed the National Woman's Party since 1929, as a national monument.

The site, to be named the Belmont-Paul Women's Equality National Monument, honors both Alva Belmont, the National Woman's Party benefactor, and Alice Paul, who founded the party and served as its chief strategist. Obama will deliver remarks at the house, which served as the party's fifth headquarters and is on Capitol Hill, on Equal Pay Day, an annual commemoration that aims to highlight economic disparities between men and women. The date marks how many extra days a woman would have to work to make as much as a typical man would have made in the previous calendar year.'

Humanistic Judaism and Anti-Circumcision Intactivism

Matt · 12 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Humanistic Jewish movement is a quickly growing denomination in Judaism and the closest to Jewish Intactivism. The movement contains over 30,000 members and has over 50 active synagogues in the United States and Israel. There are a variety of active Humanistic Jewish journals and a group of thriving associations and communities connected to the movement. The focus of Jewish Humanism is on Judaic culture and society while embracing Humanistic ethics.

Most of the official Humanistic Jewish organizations do not distinguish between bris shalom (welcoming ceremony without circumcision) and hospital circucmcision, but there is a growing tendency to oppose circumcision altogether in favor of the new peaceful welcoming ceremonies. Humanistic Rabbis do not perform ceremonies in conjunction with circumcision. All Humanistic Jewish Rabbis officiate at peaceful welcoming and naming ceremonies such as Brit Shalom, Brit Chyam, and Brit B'lee Milah (covenant without cutting). Many Humanistic Rabbis are listed as celebrants of Brit Shalom and Brit B'lee Milah naming ceremonies that exclude circumcision.'

Man-Free Uber Alternative Hits The App Store This Month

Mastodon · 12 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new women-only ride share app is launching in an effort to offer a safer transportation alternative for women.

Chariot for Women launches on April 19, and will work in the exact same way as GPS-based ride shares like Uber and Lyft — with one major difference: only women will be able to drive, and only women and children are able to be passengers.

The app was created by Michael and Kelly Pelletz, a married couple whose income depended on Michael's driving for Uber after the crumbling of his family business. According to the Chariot for Women website, as a driver, one experience left Michael particularly unsettled: He picked up a young man in his 20s, who he soon realized was seriously inebriated and who became somewhat aggressive. Michael nervously sought help from a police officer.

"How would a woman handle that situation, especially when I was so nervous myself?" Michael wrote.'

UK: Girls sentened to life for beating woman to death

Matt · 13 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A rare case where the female discount was not applied in sentencing. Excerpt:

'But when he went to return them to her the next morning, the landlord found Wrightson dead — battered, bleeding and nude from the waist down.

Her killers, authorities said, were two of Wrightson's young friends.
...
The 15-year-old girls, who cannot be publicly named due to their age, were convicted in Wrightson's murder earlier this week after authorities said the pair beat her to death with items they found around her house: a shovel, a wooden stick filled with screws, a TV set.

The BBC reported that a mirror was smashed over the woman's face.

During an hours-long torture session, authorities said, the girls goofed around on social media — posting pictures to Snapchat — and left for a "time out" before they returned to finish the job, according to the Guardian.'

How America's sexual extremists took over the public square

Mastodon · 13 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is, first of all, the way sexual assaults are being handled on college campuses. The increased focus on such assaults over the past few years may well be justified, but the overwhelmingly bureaucratic response favored by both universities themselves and the U.S. Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights is not. If college administrators wanted to do a better job of protecting female students from various forms of sexual assault, especially rape, you might think they would do things like — oh, I don't know — crack down on Greek life, enforce the legal drinking age on campus, and make clear to students that all accusations of assault will be turned over to local law enforcement.

Instead, growing numbers of universities are choosing to fight sexual assault by establishing offices to oversee the creation and enforcement of regulations, under Title IX, covering every imaginable form of sexual or quasi-sexual conduct, ensuring that in all cases such conduct conforms to legalistic norms of consent. Thinking of coming up behind an attractive sophomore and planting a surprise kiss on the back of his neck? Think again. That kind of reckless behavior could carry consequences, including a sexual misconduct complaint.

The result is a supremely creepy combination of liberalism, Puritanism, and the infrastructure of a police state. In addition to stifling free speech and the free exchange of ideas on campus, such regulations go well beyond punishing bad behavior to require a transformation in the way people relate to one another at an individual level. Ruling common forms of flirtation and seduction out of bounds, they aim to remake romantic and sexual interactions on the model of contractual negotiations among business partners.'

Men Are Creepy, New Study Confirms

Matt · 13 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While researchers also asked about physical characteristics such as long fingers, greasy hair, "peculiar smiles," being too thin, and dressing weird, McAndrew says that physical characteristics alone do not a creep make. "If people have very unusual physical characteristics, that kind of magnifies any creepy vibes they're sending out," he says, "but there isn't any particular physical characteristic that we look at and say, 'Aha! A creep!'"
...
In recent years many-a thinkpiece has been written about "the politics of creep-shaming" after men's rights activists took issue with what they deemed a misandrist term. As McAndrew's study shows, however, there is some truth to the idea that all creeps are dudes. While there is no creep checklist, no set of behaviors that definitively marks one as "creepy" or "cool," over 95 percent of respondents said creepy people were more likely to be men than women. Women were also more likely to associate creepiness and sexual threat. While the study didn't differentiate between what men found creepy and what women found creepy, "women were more likely to think that the person had some sort of sexual interest in them," McAndrew says.'

Women and competition in the workplace

Matt · 13 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. What, it's not the evil Patriarchy doing it? Excerpt:

'Competing with female co-workers could be bad for business, especially if you're a woman.

A new study has found that women might be held back in the workplace because of competition from other women.

Women who take competition with female co-workers too seriously might actually be damaging their careers by causing rifts and isolating themselves from the rest of the office.

According to the study from researchers at University College London's School of Management, the effect may be driven by fundamental differences between male and female culture values.

Dr Sun Young Lee, an assistant professor at UCL, found women experience competition with co-workers of the same gender more negatively than men do because female peer culture values harmony and equality.'

Students' Open Letter Calls on Senate to End Dept of Education Overreach

Mastodon · 13 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Students around the country have signed an open letter calling on the U.S. Senate not to increase the budget of an Education Department Office that has been at the forefront of efforts to promote censorship, speech codes, and the whittling down of due process for students accused of sexual harassment.

The Senate is currently deliberating on whether or not to allocate additional funding to the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR). This is an office that has pressured colleges to adopt a range of disastrous policies, from stifling campus speech codes to poorly-disguised racial quotas in disciplinary policies.

Most notoriously, the OCR is responsible for the 2011 "Dear Colleague" letter, which threatened universities with the loss of federal funding if they did not accept responsibility for sexual assault on their campuses. This letter played a major role in the factually baseless panic over sexual abuse on campus, which led to students effectively losing their due process rights when accused of sexual assault or harassment.'

Male Student Urges Circuit to Revive His Bias Suit

Matt · 13 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A male student who claims he was wrongly disciplined by Columbia University for a nonconsensual sexual encounter that he says was consensual should be allowed to sue school officials under federal anti-discrimination laws, his lawyer told the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit Tuesday.

Attorney Philip Byler said his client was the victim of an administration bowing to public pressure to stop sexual predators and believing that all misconduct allegations against male students are true.

He said his client "was made an example of for no other reason than political correctness."

Byler was asking the court to reverse a lower court's dismissal of his lawsuit, brought under Title IX, which bars colleges and universities that receive federal funds from discriminating based on gender.'

Military May Force Commanders To Interview More Women For Promotions

Mastodon · 14 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. military is considering a version of the NFL's "Rooney Rule" in order to achieve more diversity among its high-level officers, USA Today reports.

The NFL's "Rooney Rule" (named for Pittsburgh Steelers owner Dan Rooney) requires all teams to interview at least one minority candidate for senior positions such as head coach or general manager. The rule is credited with increasing the number of black head coaches in the NFL.

Now the military is considering going the same way, according to documents obtained by USA Today. Under the proposed rule, which has already been forwarded to Secretary of Defense Ash Carter for approval, the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps would all be required to consider minorities and women for positions such as aide-de-camp that often serve as a springboard to higher ranks. In recent years, the military has received negative attention for allegedly not doing enough to diversify its upper ranks. In the Air Force, for instance, less than 10 percent of general officers are non-white.'

Navy Secretary to Marines: Women in Combat Is Irreversible

Mastodon · 14 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Four of the seven questions that Mabus took were about women in combat. Others were more interested in his thoughts on Iraq and the future size of the Marine Corps.

One questioner asked for his thoughts on drafting women. He said he supports the idea but it's a decision for Congress. Another wanted to know how quickly women would be fully integrated into combat jobs.

"I think it won't happen all in one day," Mabus said. "It'll be relatively gradual but the decision's been made."

Gunnery Sgt. Janet Marrufo, 31, said Mabus' simple message was effective.'

Adding men's varsity programs tougher, but not impossible, thanks to Title IX

Mastodon · 14 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Artice here. Excerpt:

'Almost 60 percent of UNC's undergraduates are women, making the chances of adding another men's sport low because Title IX compels universities to create more opportunities for women, who are considered underrepresented, in order to achieve gender equality.

"Since our undergraduate student body is primarily women, men are already overrepresented for participation opportunities," said Barbara Osborne, a UNC exercise and sports science professor specializing in sports law. "Title IX is not measured on a sport by sport comparison. You're comparing all of the opportunities men have to participate against all of the opportunities women have."

While it would be difficult for UNC to add another men's sport, athletic departments at other universities have chosen to goes as far as cutting money for men's sports in order to make funding more proportional between men's and women's athletics.'

Men’s Rights Group Says Facing Discrimination in Lawsuit Against Student Union

Mastodon · 14 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Toronto men's rights group at Ryerson University is suing the student union for allegedly discriminating against the group's right to free speech.

First reported by The Eyeopener, the lawsuit was launched by the Ryerson Men's Issues Awareness Society (MIAS) founder Kevin Arriola and social media coordinator Alex Godlewski last week. It cites how the Ryerson Student Union (RSU) denied legitimacy to the men's right group as reason for concern, and it also asks that the university give the group official status on campus.

"As members and executives of MIAS and students of Ryerson University, we feel excluded from the Ryerson community. The allegations levelled against us by RSU have caused us to be ostracized by fellow students and have sabotaged our confidence and desire to engage with our fellow students," an affidavit from Arriola reads.

"We feel marginalized and discriminated against by RSU simply because we want to host discussions about issues affecting men and boys."

The Ryerson Men's Issues Awareness Society (MIAS) has been embroiled in a battle for recognition and approval as a legitimate student group by the university's student union since being rejected as group last October. MIAS filed an appeal to be reexamined, but was rejected again in January.'

Woman charged with filing a false rape report

Mastodon · 14 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman has been charged in Great Falls after she allegedly filed a false rape report because she was angry at her boyfriend.

According to court documents, Jennifer Rima True claimed that on March 9 she had gotten out of her boyfriend's vehicle near the Frontier Inn and when her boyfriend left two men pulled up in another vehicle and tried to "pick her up."

She said that she then ran across the railroad tracks and fell and hit her head, and the men tried to force prescription pills into her mouth.

She claimed that one of them had a knife and cut her numerous times. She also said that her purse, which contained her prescription medicine, was stolen.'

Harvard Social Clubs Reject Women

ThomasI · 14 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Members of the oldest all-male club at Harvard have almost never spoken publicly about the organization since its founding in 1791. This week, that silence was broken when an official with the group, the Porcellian Club, said that admitting women could increase the chances of sexual misconduct.

“Forcing single-gender organizations to accept members of the opposite sex could potentially increase, not decrease, the potential for sexual misconduct,” Charles M. Storey, the president of the club’s alumni group, wrote on Tuesday in a letter to The Harvard Crimson, the student newspaper.

As news of the comments, which came in the midst of an effort at Harvard to prevent sexual assault, spread around campus on Wednesday, so did criticism and satire, including an article titled “Club of Wealthy White Men Comes Out in Support of Status Quo.”'

Feds Fuel Anti-Sex Inquisition on Campus

Mastodon · 15 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A male student scored a major victory in his lawsuit against the University of Southern California, which kicked him off campus for a remarkable non-crime: failing to de-escalate an orgy. This was a crazy case, and the decision in his favor impugns not just USC, but the federal government's entire strategy to combat rape by making colleges deal with it.

Over the past five years, the Obama administration's Education Department has instructed universities to take sexual harassment and violence more seriously as part of their obligation to obey Title IX, a little-known gender equality law. While that all may sound like a good thing, the policies universities have been forced to put in place are shockingly illiberal, leading to routine violations of students' due process rights, their right to free expression, and even their right to sleep together.

The student who filed the lawsuit against USC—"John Doe"—was suspended for allegedly sexually assaulting a female victim, Jane. He denies the assault took place. That's hardly surprising. But what's notable about this case is that Jane actually agreed. She consistently described their sex as consensual in interviews with USC investigators.'

Jackson Katz addresses sexual assault on college campuses

Mastodon · 15 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jackson Katz, educator, filmmaker and creator of the gender violence prevention program, Mentors in Violence Prevention, spoke to students about gender violence in society Thursday evening at the University of Wisconsin Chemistry Building.

In the talk called “The Macho Paradox: Why Some Men Hurt Women and How All Men Can Help,” Katz discussed many topics such as a man’s role in gender violence, the use of language when addressing gender and the role of bystanders and media in gender violence.
...
Katz first focused on sexual assault as a problem for men and women in society. He said men’s lives have been vastly improved by the leadership of women. Gender violence also affects men who have experienced domestic violence when they were young, which then perpetuates a cycle of abuse, Katz said.

Katz said the language society uses when talking about assault is important in the victim-blaming phenomenon today. Language like “alleged victim” and “accuser” puts the fault of sexual assault on the victim and not the perpetrator, Katz said.'

Wikipedia on Katz here.

Women-only car services fill niche, but legal?

Mastodon · 15 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ride-hailing companies catering exclusively to women are cropping up and raising thorny legal questions, namely: Are they discriminatory?

In Massachusetts, Chariot for Women is promising to launch a service featuring female drivers picking up only women and children. Drivers will even have to say a “safe word” before a ride starts.

Michael Pelletz, a former Uber driver, said he started the company with his wife, Kelly, in response to instances of drivers for ride-hailing services charged with assaulting female passengers.

He believes their business plan is legal, and he’s prepared to make his case in court, if it comes to that. The couple had planned an April 19 launch but now say they’re pushing it back to the summer to make sure their app can handle demand they say has exceeded expectations.

“We believe that giving women and their loved ones peace of mind is not only a public policy imperative but serves an essential social interest,” Pelletz said. “Our service is intended to protect these fundamental liberties.”'

Police: High school teacher had sex with student during fiancé's bachelor party

Matt · 15 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Wisconsin high school teacher allegedly had sex with a student on the night of her fiancé's bachelor party, according to a news report.

Sara Domres — a 28-year-old former teacher at New Berlin West High School — has been charged with two counts of sexual assault of a student by school staff, Waukesha County court records show.

Domres pleaded not guilty to the felony charges on Friday, according to court records.

The teacher has been charged in two incidents in March 2015 and October 2015, court records show.

News station WISN reports that the male student, 16 at the time of the incident, told police that he and Domres had sex at least 10 times.

The pair had sex several times in a parking lot and a motel during a period in which Domres and her now-husband were planning their wedding, according to the news station.

On one occasion, Domres had sex with the teenager while her then-fiancé was at his bachelor party, the news station reported.'

It’s Time To Defund The Out-Of-Control War On Due Process For College Students

Matt · 15 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Since 2011, the Department of Education’s Office for Civil Rights has blatantly violated college students’ rights to free speech and due process. Congress has done nothing to fix this abuse of power. Its members are, in fact, currently entertaining President Barack Obama’s proposal to increase OCR’s budget by $137.7 million of funding for the 2017 fiscal year.

When do we, as students, say enough is enough?

The Education Department’s Office for Civil Rights is responsible for enforcing Title IX at federally-funded colleges and universities. Title IX is a federal statute that prohibits discrimination on the basis of gender in educational programs that receive federal funds. The Office for Civil Rights has authority over almost all of the nation’s colleges and universities because almost all of them receive federal funds for their educational operations.

The Office for Civil Rights often gives schools guidance on how to maintain compliance with Title IX’s mandates. In years past, such guidance properly balanced prohibiting acts of harassment with protecting the free speech and due process rights of students. In 2001, for example, the office’s guidance adhered to the Supreme Court’s legal definition of sexual harassment. In an effort to defend students’ rights to due process, the 2001 guidance also granted schools the ability to develop their own specialized procedures for handling sexual misconduct disciplinary hearings. The 2003 guidance explicitly separated Title IX enforcement policies from protected speech.'

Feds Fuel Anti-Sex Inquisition On Campus

Matt · 17 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A male student scored a major victory in his lawsuit against the University of Southern California, which kicked him off campus for a remarkable non-crime: failing to de-escalate an orgy. This was a crazy case, and the decision in his favor impugns not just USC, but the federal government's entire strategy to combat rape by making colleges deal with it.

Over the past five years, the Obama administration's Education Department has instructed universities to take sexual harassment and violence more seriously as part of their obligation to obey Title IX, a little-known gender equality law. While that all may sound like a good thing, the policies universities have been forced to put in place are shockingly illiberal, leading to routine violations of students' due process rights, their right to free expression, and even their right to sleep together.

The student who filed the lawsuit against USC—"John Doe"—was suspended for allegedly sexually assaulting a female victim, Jane. He denies the assault took place. That's hardly surprising. But what's notable about this case is that Jane actually agreed. She consistently described their sex as consensual in interviews with USC investigators.'

Police: Mother leaves infant in hot car for strip club audition, 2 arrested

Matt · 17 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two women face charges after an infant was left in a hot car outside of a strip club in Tennessee as the child's mother was onstage for an audition, according to multiple reports.

Kelsey McMurtry, 24, was auditioning at Deja Vu Showgirls in downtown Nashville while her daughter sat outside in a car with the windows rolled up around 4 p.m. Thursday, police told WKRN. Passersby noticed the girl and called authorities.

In a warrant, officials said it was 72 degrees outside when officers arrived and temperatures inside the car had likely topped 100 degrees. The girl was wearing a heavy coat and drenched with sweat, WKRN reported. Witnesses estimated she spent at least 30 minutes in the car.

She was taken to a hospital for treatment, where the Tennessee Department of Children's Services responded to care for her.

At the scene an officer spoke with McMurtry's friend, 19-year-old Summer Taylor, who said she had an eye on the child while her mother auditioned, according to WSMV. However, witnesses told police she never left the strip club in the 30 minutes the child was outside.'

Restaurant Acknowledges Pay Gap By Charging Women Only 79% of Their Bills

Mastodon · 17 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'April 14 is Equal Pay Day — a day devoted to raising awareness of the pay gap between men and women — and one restaurant is making efforts to narrow the disparity. In response to the troubling statistic that women earn just 79 cents to every dollar a man earns, a New Hampshire restaurant called The Works is only charging women 79 cents to the dollar, or 79% of their total bills. (Men will pay full price.)

New Hampshire Public Radio reports that women who visit the chain's locations in Concord, Keene, Portsmouth and Durham today will receive this cheeky 21% discount.

"It's been a problem that's been around for a really long time, decades I would say," Don Brueggemann, manager of The Works in Concord, told NHPR. "And I think many of us thought it would kind of work itself out but it has been very persistent over the years. We're feeling like this is a way to highlight that issue."'

College Paper Ad Warns Prospective Students That Rape Could Be Part Of The Price Of Admission

Matt · 17 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A print ad appearing in Harvard University's student newspaper on Saturday has a controversial message for students: The trauma of trying to get school administrators to take sexual assault seriously is becoming a routine part of the collegiate experience.

The ad buy is timed to coincide with the school's accepted students weekend, when many high school seniors who are considering attending Harvard in the fall visit the campus. Styled like an acceptance letter that lets a prospective student know they've been admitted, the ad makes the case that sexual assault may be one of the college memories in store for them.

"We know that you will make lifelong friends and memories here on campus," the mock letter reads. "We're sorry that one of these memories will include being raped by someone you thought you could trust… The claims you will make against your rapist will be ignored, much like your right to feel safe at school."'

Florida Governor vetoes alimony reform bill that would have helped families and small business

Matt · 17 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Siding with a minority of liberal Democrats, Florida Governor Rick Scott (R) yesterday vetoed alimony-reform legislation that Florida's GOP-controlled legislature had passed by a margin of nearly two-to-one, even though it was supported by 70% of Floridians. Scott's veto was unfair, anti-family, and anti-small-business. But it thrilled some wealthy divorce lawyers, who hired high-paid "lobbyists with close ties to Scott" to lobby him to kill the bill.

Scott vetoed the bill even though sponsors of the legislation removed the very provision in it that led Scott to veto an earlier version of the bill in 2013 (the fact that it would have applied to pre-existing alimony awards, rather than just those set in the future). The bill would have "eliminated permanent alimony," replacing it with a more nuanced "formula, based on the length of marriage and the combined incomes of both spouses, for judges to use when setting alimony payments."

Under existing Florida law, people can be forced to pay alimony even when they are blameless and their adulterous ex-spouse has moved in with a lover. For example, in Baxter v. Baxter (1998), the wife "fell in love with a woman friend and moved with her to a mountain top in Puerto Rico. Although the wife's friend ha[d] an income of over $100,000 a year," the wife sought and obtained "$860 per month" in alimony. In Heilman v. Heilman (1992), the state appeals court reversed the denial of an adulterous wife's request for alimony after she moved in with her lover, rejecting the argument that "the family's emotional devastation at the news of the extra-marital affair" weighed against alimony. No innocent spouse should be forced to pay permanent alimony in such circumstances.'

SAVE: Colleges Grapple with Wave of Sexual Assault Lawsuits

Matt · 18 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Following a recent California ruling in favor of a student accused of sexual misconduct, state lawmakers and college administrators are beginning to consider the budgetary implications of these claims. On April 5 the California Second Appellate District Superior Court overturned a University of Southern California decision that found a male student responsible because he allegedly “encouraged or permitted” other students to slap a female student on her buttocks. The Superior Court explained, “it is not too heavy a burden to require that students facing disciplinary action be informed of the factual basis for the charges against them."

The University of Southern California decision is the eighth ruling in 2016 in which a court found in favor of a student accused of sexual assault. The other rulings involved lawsuits against Brandeis University, Brown University, Cornell University, George Mason University, Indiana University, James Madison University, and Pennsylvania State University.'

CNN Commentator on Hillary's High Unfavorables: 'A Lot of This is Sexism'

Mastodon · 18 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'CNN political commentator and NY1 host Errol Louis said during a Monday morning discussion that the reason Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton has such high unfavorability numbers in most polls was because of unconscious sexism on the part of respondents.

New Day host Chris Cuomo asked Louis about a recent Wall Street Journal/NBC poll that found that even among Democrats, Clinton had a 56% unfavorable rating. "Let me suggest, because some of her strategists have said this kind of quietly, it's not really a big thing on this campaign trail: a lot of this is sexism," he responded

"It's buried so deep that people just say, 'I don't trust her, she doesn't keep her word,'" he said. "And then you turn it around and say, 'What politician does?""'

Sen. Kristen Gillibrand: "I'm making everything a woman's issue"

Mastodon · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'Sen. Kristen Gillibrand (D-NY) told Politico's Glenn Thrush that the debate over gun control should be reframed as a "women's issue" and that "nothing in this debate has to do with the Second Amendment rights."

"This debate is relegated to the men. It's about hunting? It has nothing to do with hunting," she said on Thrush's Off Message podcast released Monday. "Nothing in this debate has to do with hunting, and nothing in this debate has to do with the Second Amendment rights. Nothing. … I think — I see the world in the lens of women's issues. I'm making everything a woman's issue. I want guns to be a woman's issue."

Gillibrand is supporting Hillary Clinton, who has been hitting Bernie Sanders for his record on guns. Sanders, she said, "doesn't have the sensitivity he needs to the horror that is happening in these families. I just don't think he's fully getting how horrible it is for these families [affected by gun violence.]"

Misleading Viral Ad Campaign Tells College Students: Prepare to Be Raped

Mastodon · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Are you a high school senior, recently admitted to the college of your choice? Congratulations, you are about to be raped. Probably.

That's according to a new viral awareness campaign launched by members of the creative team behind The Hunting Ground. That film, like the new, short videos, relies on misleading statistics and thinly-veiled junk science to create a public panic about sexual assault on campuses.

This new ad campaign is, if anything, even more alarmist. The videos, "Unacceptable Acceptance Letters," show high school students joyously reading college admissions letters. Eventually, the letters turn to the subject of rape, and matter-of-factly inform students there is a good chance they will be abused. Prettybird, the production company behind the videos, also purchased ad space in The Harvard Crimson. ...'

‘No Men Beyond This Point’ Imagines A World Without Dudes & Somehow, It Looks Pretty Bad

Mastodon · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We’re all for a good misandry joke, but No Men Beyond This Point looks like a “Funny or Die” video stretched into 80 minutes. Sony just released the trailer for this sci-fi-ish mockumentary, which premiered at the prestigious Toronto Film Festival last year, and it’s somewhat dire. In the film, 37-year-old Andrew Myers (Patrick Gilmore) is the protagonist; he’s the youngest dude in the world, as well as the housekeeper for an all-female family.

The trailer itself doesn’t give away much of the narrative; for that, we had to turn to the official TIFF guide, which actually makes the movie sound slightly more interesting. Women have evolved to reproduce asexually, and a new world order is in place that outlaws sex (between men and woman, obvs) and sends men off to so-called sanctuaries. When Andrew starts hooking up with one of the women he nannies for, it wreaks havoc on the household and could spell trouble for the female-only future.'

No Men Beyond This Point - OFFICIAL TRAILER

Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand: Bernie Sanders Not Qualified for Gun Control Advocacy Because He's a Man

Mastodon · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gillibrand wants the debate over gun control to be refashioned into a "women's issue," instead of a complicated dispute related to hunting or the Second Amendment.
...
She suggests Sanders' maleness prevents him from relating to mothers who have lost loved ones to gun crime. She also states that he "doesn't have the sensitivity he needs to the horror that is happening in these families," adding, "I just don't think he's fully getting how horrible it is for these families."'

In Marines' new fitness plan, pullups for women won't be mandatory

Mastodon · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marine leaders have proposed a new physical fitness test that would still allow women to do the flexed-arm hang — but they're not likely to earn a first-class score without pullups.

A new plan for the PFT would require most women to do between eight and 10 pullups to net a max score on that portion of the test.

The potential change is in response to a fitness review ordered by Commandant Gen. Robert Neller. Marine leaders found that “some current [fitness] standards are either not relevant, not challenging or not attainable,” according to a briefing obtained by Marine Corps Times. The plan was presented to Marine leaders last week.'

India: Five years of pain: Man acquitted of molestation charges narrates ordeal

Matt · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A molestation case that dragged on for five years took a toll on Percy Joseph's life, and the lives of his family members. On Friday, finally, it turned out that the case was a false one.

The Thodupuzha First Class Magistrate Court in Idukki district acquitted Percy, Chief Manager of Union Bank's Hyderabad branch, of all charges filed against him in a case that dated back to 2011. A woman named Prameela Biju had accused him of molesting her when he was a manager with Union Bank.

In the order, judge Jomon John said: "The accused was taken into custody by the police even before an FIR was registered against him. Later, police fabricated a story against him and subsequently registered the arrest. The prosecution's case appears to be false and fabricated. The evidence of the victim is highly unreliable and unbelievable."

Prameela Biju, who was a "woman civil police officer, according to court documents, visited Percy to talk about a loan for a two-wheeler.'

To Prevent Spike In Domestic Violence Around Soccer Game, Scottish Police Remove Abusers From Homes

Mastodon · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last weekend, police in Scotland prepared for the Old Firm soccer match between Glasgow football clubs Celtic and Rangers in an unusual way — by removing serial domestic abusers, who were potentially a risk to their partners, from their homes. Officials described the plan as a preventative effort aimed at reducing the spikes of domestic violence that have been associated with Old Firm games in the past.

Due to increased alcohol consumption, strong emotions, and at-home viewing, there is often a direct correlation between major sporting events and an increase in violence against women. This has been particularly true in the intense Old Firm rivalry.

...

"Those being targeted could be awaiting trial for assault or have been released from prison on licence with strict conditions attached. Any breach could mean a return behind bars.

Officers aim to detain potential abusers from tomorrow, when they can be held over the weekend before appearing in court or being returned to prison. Warnings are also being issued to discourage other serial abusers from lashing out."'

Woman faces 3 domestic violence counts

Mastodon · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 44-year-old Clemont woman was charged with three counts of domestic violence for allegedly attacking her boyfriend, her teen daughter and her boyfriend's mother on Saturday, the Lake County Sheriff's Office said.

Dawn Marie Colucci remained jailed Tuesday in lieu of a $10,000 bond.

The boyfriend said he and Colucci had been arguing for two days at their home on Pink Grapefruit Trail when he told her to leave and take their 12- and 15-year-old daughters with her. She then reportedly scratched his face, hit the 12-year-old in the face for refusing to give up her cell phone and pushed her boyfriend's mother when she tried to get involved.'

Singapore appeal on sex assault acquittal due to 'men only law'

Mastodon · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Singapore state prosecutors on Monday appealed against a high court decision acquitting a woman of sexually assaulting a 13-year-old girl because the law applied only to men, citing public interest.

Zunika Ahmad, 40, a woman who lives as a man, was acquitted last week of six counts of sexual assault despite pleading guilty to the charges, sparking strong reaction from women's and gay rights activists.

Judge Kan Ting Chiu said he threw out the guilty plea and acquitted Zunika because the law on which the charges were based relates only to men with a penis.'

Watch 'Today' segment on how Fitbit helped expose woman's false rape claim in Lancaster County

Mastodon · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman's false rape report in Lancaster County recently made national news in a segment on NBC's Today morning show explaining how investigators used technology to discredit the claim.

The segment featuring Lancaster County District Attorney Craig Stedman and East Lampeter Township police Detective Chris Jones aired Tuesday morning to explain how a Fitbit wearable fitness device helped prove Jeannine Risley fabricated a rape claim last year.

"It sealed the deal for us," Stedman tells Today's investigative correspondent,Jeff Rossen, noting the inconsistencies in other evidence.'

'Bones' Season 11, Episode 12 Spoilers: Brennan Loses Her Cool In 'The Murder Of The Meninist'

Mastodon · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dr. Temperance Brennan (Emily Deschanel) is, arguably, the most calm and cool person on this planet. She uses science and rational thinking to make decisions, whether it's in her professional or personal life. However, the upcoming "Bones" episode is going to see this character lose her cool and assault a political activist.
...
According to the episode's synopsis (via SpoilersGuide), the Jeffersonian investigates a murder when a body is found in a car crash. This body belongs to a founder of a men's rights organization who may have been the victim of domestic abuse.

In order to conduct this investigation, Brennan must learn about the tenets of the victim's organization. She learns that the organization's members believe that middle-aged white men are oppressed in society and that feminists are, essentially, man-haters. This certainly does not go down well with Brennan. In fact, she loses her cool during an interrogation and assaults the organization's co-founder.'

Female student realized her gender privilege ‘once I took off my feminist blinders’

Mastodon · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If women are really treated as badly in America as feminists say they are, why do they seem so... privileged?

That’s the question posed by Toni Airaksinen, a student at women’s college Barnard, which is affiliated with Columbia University.

Airaksinen writes in Quillette, a magazine that promotes “free thought,” that her Barnard peers often “display conspiratorial glee when they make fun of and delegitimize men’s issues” such as academic underachievement, to say nothing of male-heavy psychological problems and social ills.

She was “seduced by feminist ideology” when she started taking women’s studies classes, but “real life taught me” that men suffer more than women in many ways – much higher rates of suicide, schizophrenia, autism and alcoholism, not to mention incarceration:'

Female Student Said, 'I'm Fine and I Wasn't Raped.' University Investigated, Expelled Boyfriend Anyway

Matt · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Colorado State University-Pueblo suspended a male athlete for years after he was found responsible for sexually assaulting a female trainer. But the trainer never accused him of wrongdoing, and said repeatedly that their relationship was consensual. She even stated, unambiguously, "I'm fine and I wasn't raped."

That's according to the athlete's lawsuit against CSUP, which persuasively argues that the university not only deprived him of fundamental due process rights, but also denied sexual agency to an adult woman. Taken at face value, this case appears to represent one of the most paternalistic, puritanically anti-sex witch hunts ever reported on a college campus.

But that's not the only reason this case is interesting. The student-athlete, Grant Neal, has named the Education Department's Office for Civil Rights as a co-defendant. OCR's Title IX guidance to universities "encourages male gender bias and violation of due process right during sexual misconduct investigations," according to a statement from Neal's legal team.'

Wrongfully accused student sues Obama administration

Matt · 19 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:
April 19, 2016
CONTACT: Jeanette Hoffman (908) 418-0859

IN FIRST-OF-ITS-KIND LAWSUIT, STUDENT ATHLETE WRONGFULLY ACCUSED OF SEXUAL ASSAULT SUES OBAMA ADMINISTRATION AND CSU PUEBLO FOR VIOLATING TITLE IX GENDER DISCRIMINATION LAW

PUEBLO, CO— Grant Neal, a prominent student athlete at Colorado State University Pueblo (CSU Pueblo), has filed a first-of-its-kind lawsuit against the Obama Administration's Department of Education Office of Civil Rights (OCR) and CSU Pueblo for violation of Title IX in a wrongful sexual assault investigation. Neal is being represented by Andrew T. Miltenberg, one of the nation's preeminent attorneys specializing in campus assault due process.

The complaint states that in October of 2015, Grant Neal, a talented football player with a 3.67 GPA, was wrongfully accused of non-consensual sexual contact and suspended from school following a rejected appeal. His accuser is not the alleged victim, but a friend of the alleged victim who presented a second-hand account of an incident between two consenting adults to the athletic training director, who then presented this account to the Title IX director at CSU Pueblo. In the lawsuit, the plaintiff contends that CSU's wrongful investigation was caused by a directive of the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR), which encourages male gender bias and violation of due process rights during sexual misconduct investigations.'

Feminists: Coming soon to a bill in your wallet

Matt · 20 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Harriett Tubman, fine. But keep reading:

'Lew is expected to roll out a set of changes that also include putting leaders of the women's suffrage movement on the back of the $10 bill, and incorporating civil rights era leaders and other important moments in American history into the $5 bill. Also, Jackson isn't getting completely booted off the $20 bill. He's likely to remain on the back.'

Given the unabashed racism and for some suffragettes, their female supremacy beliefs, I think the idea of putting early suffragettes on a bill around the same time Tubman gets placed on one is enough to make her spin in her grave.

Can't beat these times we live in.

Yiannopoulos causes campus controversy with lecture

Mastodon · 20 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Milo Yiannopoulos, British technology journalist and entrepreneur, spoke in Laurie Auditorium last Sunday on microaggressions. The lecture was organized by Tigers for Liberty. In a response to a March 22 discussion regarding microaggressions organized by the Trinity Progressives, the Black Student Union and the Trinity Diversity Connection.

Manfred Wendt, the president of Tigers for Liberty, said the event was meant to encourage free speech on campus.

“We want Trinity to be a free marketplace of ideas, where contentious topics can be discussed intellectually and civilly. While not everyone at Trinity or everyone in Tigers for Liberty may agree with what the speaker has to say— it is important that we address these ideas head on in the pursuit of truth,” Wendt said.

In his lecture, Yiannopoulos said that microaggressions are good news for Americans.

“The idea is that you could be racist without even knowing it. It’s completely bullocks. Microaggressions [are] good news. The fact that the left has had to come up with microaggressions—these tiny things that you do [that] might be sending signals that you’re racist, sexist or homophobic—this a symbol that racism, sexism and homophobia [are] gone,” Yiannopoulos said. “If you have to look that hard for it, then it ain’t around anymore.”'

I Was Falsely Accused Of Rape: ‘Victim-Centered Investigations’ Are A Travesty Of Justice

Matt · 20 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I was in the middle of my summer class when my phone went off around 11:40 am on Thursday, July 18th, 2013. It was my ex-girlfriend. As I answered, I heard her voice insisting that I admit to perpetrating an incident of sexual misconduct against her. I was puzzled by her request and did not know how to respond.

A few minutes later I received a call from Darrin DeCoster, a Fairfax County, Virginia detective, who revealed the phone call was being recorded. Ordering me to not hang up, he threatened to arrest me on a “slew” of charges if I did not cooperate. As a 20-year-old in college, I was scared beyond imagination.

I was instructed to appear for an interview the next day at the Fairfax County Police Station. Since I was completely innocent, what did I have to fear? I assumed the police would conduct an unbiased investigation of the matter. That was before I heard about “victim-centered” investigations.

The interrogation consisted of repeated attempts to get me to confess to something that I had supposedly done. The detective hinted that the charge had something to do with sexual assault, but he refused to tell me any details. He said that he could work out a deal with me and convince the district attorney to reduce the punishment.'

Malecare.org: Two new support groups available

Matt · 20 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Everyone is loving our new online advanced and newly diagnosed prostate cancer support groups. They're useful online sources of information. It's easy to use and can be totally anonymous, if you wish. Please join.

There are two groups..you can join one or both.

The advanced prostate cancer group at: https://healthunlocked.com/advanced-prostate-cancer and the more general prostate cancer group for newly diagnosed and general information: https://healthunlocked.com/prostate-cancer-community

Here are some unique feature of our new online prostate cancer support platform.

* You can delete any or all of your information, permanently, at any time
* Direct message to other members
* Post your photo's with ease
* Member profiles (up to you how much info you want to include)
* Connect with other members in person (up to you)
* Start your own local support meet-ups
* Connect globally about treatments locally
* Follow all posts or just the ones you are interested in.
* No more endlessly long emails containing copies of other people's emails
* BETTER SEARCH of past topics and emails.
* Easy to read and post on mobile phones and tablets

Please feel encouraged to contact me if you have any questions or comments.

Darryl
darryl@malecare.org
Malecare Cancer Support
Men fighting cancer, together.

Pro vs con: Ryerson students debate validity of men's issues groups on campus

Mastodon · 20 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'They say that freedom of expression is dead on campus, and we've witnessed it first-hand.

We're trying to seek justice, as we believe it is our right to contribute to the campus culture, and our responsibility to talk about men's issues.

This is larger than our group.

Today, boys are failing in school and literacy rates are dropping. Men are committing suicide at disproportionate rates, dissuaded by the lack of support available to them. Other issues that often affect men and boys include homelessness, workplace injuries and death, lack of parental rights, and the increase in children being raised without fathers. Why is our attempt to explore these valid issues met with such hostility?

Our group started as a response to the lack of attention that these issues garner, from society and from institutions like Ryerson. We wanted to create a safe environment for open and honest discussion of men's issues, but our student union has succeeded in silencing our voices, under the pretense that we are creating an unsafe environment for women on campus. We believe that actions speak louder than words, and our actions have done nothing to justify these claims.'

Has the federal government ever had sex?

Matt · 21 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The act of sex is not illegal. But if two members of the American Law Institute have their way, it will be — unless you follow their rules.

Law professors Stephen J. Schulhofer and Erin Murphy are trying to update the criminal code when it comes to sex offenses, believing current definitions of rape and sexual assault are antiquated. The focus of their draft is on what constitutes consent. It adopts the "yes means yes," or "affirmative consent" model that was passed in California last year.

The California law applies only to college campuses, however. Schulhofer and Murphy aim to take that definition of consent — which says that before every escalation of a sexual encounter, clear and convincing consent must be given — to the state or federal level. No one actually has sex this way, requesting permission and having it granted perhaps a dozen times in a single encounter.'

Transgender Marijuana Farmer: Cis Males ‘Don’t Show The Plant Respect’

Mastodon · 21 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It’s 2016, folks. Why are white heterosexual cis men still allowed to grow weed? I mean, come on.

That’s just a few steps away from the opinion of Zooey Zachrow, a male-to-female transgender and marijuana farmer discovered by Mitchell Sunderland of Vice. Zachrow told Sunderland that cisgender men who ran weed dispensaries “didn’t treat the plant with respect” — hence the decision to start her own business.

“[Weed] saved my life,” she says. “I absolutely wouldn’t have survived the years [after the army] without cannabis.” Because of her religious upbringing, she feared telling her mom about her new friend. One day, she sat her mom down to tell her she was coming out of the “cannabis closet.” Zachow says her mom started crying. “Whatever you’re doing, it works,” Zachow recalls her mom saying. She had seen pot calm Zachow, and she was happy she had found something to help treat the PTSD.

Weed also helped Zachow go through her gender and sexual awakening. “Cannabis is a countercultural thing,” she says. First, she came out as bisexual. She struggled to afford cannabis, so she started volunteering at dispensaries to get the drug for free. But she hated the “cis white men” who ran the businesses. “They didn’t show the plant respect,” she says.'

Ehrhart vs. Dept. of Education

Matt · 22 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Georgia state Rep. Earl Ehrhart and Mrs. Ehrhart have sued the US Dept. of Education over the infamous 2011 Dear Colleague letter. The lawsuit is available from the SAVE site here. Excerpt:

'The Dear Colleague Letter has aggressively dictated how colleges and universities handle sexual assault and sexual harassment on campus, by laying out specific requirements that schools must adopt and utilize, causing schools to brand more students “rapists” based on the excessively low “preponderance of the evidence” standard (equating to a mere 50.01% probability that the alleged misconduct occurred) as opposed to the “clear and convincing evidence” standard traditionally used in college disciplinary hearings, allowing accusers to appeal not guilty findings by disciplinary panels, and preventing accused students from challenging their accusers, even in cases in which the only witness is the complainant, out of concern that cross-examination “may be traumatic or intimidating” to the “victim,” all of which violate an accused student’s fundamental rights to due process.'

Georgia Lawmaker Targets Guidelines on Campus Sexual Assault

Mastodon · 23 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Georgia state lawmaker and his wife have filed a lawsuit against the U.S. Department of Education and its Office for Civil Rights, alleging that it is trying to "micromanage student sex lives" with its regulations on how colleges and universities should handle allegations of sexual assault and harassment.

The lawsuit filed by State Rep. Earl Ehrhart and his wife, Virginia, on Thursday claims that a 2011 letter the department's civil rights arm sent to schools has effectively imposed binding regulations without going through the necessary administrative procedures.

The letter was meant to help schools understand their obligations under federal law to prevent and respond to sexual violence. Instead, it has imposed burdensome requirements on schools that accept federal funding "in what is essentially an attempt to micromanage student sex lives," the lawsuit says.'

Op-Ed: Absurdity reigns in campus sexual assault trials

Mastodon · 23 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's an old legal adage that good facts make good law, and bad facts make bad law. In the case of campus sexual assault, it may be that absurd facts will — eventually — make good law too.

About five years ago, the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights issued a letter that would change the face of campus sexual misconduct proceedings at colleges across the country.

The letter directed university administrators to judge allegations according to the lowest burden of proof available: the preponderance of the evidence, a mere 50.01% certainty that whatever the accuser claimed actually happened. It also highly discouraged cross-examinations, suggesting they might violate federal anti-discrimination law.'

Miranda Devine: Stop telling boys to act like girls

Mastodon · 23 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'IN this era of women-only parking, women-only trains, women-only apartments and transgender bathrooms, it seems the only acceptable man is a man who wants to be a woman.

The job of pathologising masculinity continues apace.

There's the government's new domestic violence campaign which portrays little boys as aggressive misogynists.

There's the undergraduate newspaper Honi Soit, which claims that rugby teams at private boys' schools foster a "rape culture".

Or what about the Sydney preschool which bans four-year-old boys from dressing up as Batman for fear superhero costumes will make them "violent"?

Yes, the only way men can find forgiveness for their dark, brute natures is to denounce other men, or otherwise to swap sexes, a la Caitlyn Jenner.'

‘He did it because he likes you’: Confronting ad addresses domestic violence at the start

Mastodon · 23 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WE OPEN on a young girl at a family gathering. A young boy, aged 10, rushes past with two friends — the girl follows.

As he walks through a doorway with two other young boys, he lets them pass through first before slamming it closed on the girl behind him, spilling her food.

Through a window in the door we see the boy smile cheekily. This girl’s mother helps her pick up her plate and consoles her.

“You’re OK, he just did it cause he likes you,” mum says.

This is the opening scene of the first video advertisement in the government’s new media blitz to combat disrespect towards women.

The one minute clip shows a series of scenes demonstrating accepted and casual sexist behaviour.

In one scene a boy’s father is seen to shout to his son not to “throw like a girl”. In another a trio of male teens snigger at a photo they take of a woman’s breasts.

The hard to watch ad ends with the same 10-year-old boy from the first scene as a grown man committing full blown domestic assault.'

Connecticut cops to walk a mile in red stilettos for domestic violence awareness

Mastodon · 23 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Six Connecticut police departments will “Walk A Mile In Her Shoes” on April 30 to bring awareness to domestic violence.

Event chairman and Fairfield Police Chief Gary MacNamara joined affiliate News 8’s Stephanie Simoni wearing high heels on their morning show. He plans to walk a mile in red peep-toe stilettos.

MacNamara says even though many women have brought awareness to the domestic, it’s important men also lead the conversation and be responsible role model for young boys.'

Preferring to watch men’s sports over women’s is indicative of a ‘societal, cultural bias’

Mastodon · 23 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you’re a sports fan (like me) who likes to watch the very best athletes engaged in the highest level of competition, then Daniela Brighenti’s recent article in the Yale Daily News won’t make a lot of sense to you.

Desiring to watch the best sporting events, you see, is merely a “societal (and cultural) bias” against women.'

Justice Department demands censorship at the University of New Mexico

Matt · 24 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'On April 22, the Justice Department ordered the University of New Mexico adopt an unconstitutional speech code. It is demanding that the University label as “sexual harassment” all “unwelcome” sexual conduct, including “verbal” conduct (that is, speech). The university must encourage students to report it as such; and investigate it when it is reported.

Thus, if a student is offended by a professor’s comment in a lecture about how AIDS is transmitted through anal sex, or by another student’s sexual joke, it would be deemed “sexual harassment.” So would politely asking a student out on a date, if that offends her. This definition of “sexual harassment” as including any “unwelcome” sexual speech is vastly broader than the definitions struck down as unconstitutionally overbroad by the federal appeals court rulings in DeJohn v. Temple University (2008) and Saxe v. State College Area School District (2001). Those decisions ruled that even unwelcome, “hostile or offensive” speech about sexual issues is generally protected speech unless it “objectively denies a student equal access to a school’s education resources.”'

Employee Free Speech Rights Endangered

Matt · 24 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Not directly MRM-related, but tangential and relevant. Excerpt:

'Social media and activism are intrinsic parts of many Americans' lives. But what if the cause an employee espouses is one which the employer disagrees with, or has concerns that it may interfere with business prospects? In the past, an employee's private life may never have come to the attention the company. But with the rise of social media, few activities are truly private.

To be clear, the issue does not involve what an employee does while at work. It only concerns what the employee does in his own time and off company premises.
...
Concerns about employee free speech extend beyond examples where there may be a business interest involved. According to the National Center for Public Policy Research (NCPPR), much of the interest in employee free speech arose in April of 2014, when:

"the CEO of Mozilla, Brendan Eich, was forced out of his job simply because he had donated to a 2008 California referendum that defined marriage as between one man and one woman."
...
NCPPR has met with some success, convincing Visa Inc. to provide free speech protections to its employees.'

Rape Culture Hysteria: Fixing the Damage Done to Men and Women, Kindle Edition

Matt · 24 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

E-book on Amazon here. Description:

'Rape Culture Hysteria: Fixing the Damage Done to Men and Women offers a comprehensive overview and debunking of the "rape culture" myth that has devastated campuses and is spilling into Main Street America. An ideological madness is grotesquely distorting North America's view of sexuality. The book applies sanity to the claims that men are natural rapists and our culture encourages sexual violence.

Written by a libertarian feminist and rape survivor, Rape Culture Hysteria opens with a highly personal appeal to depoliticize rape and treat it instead as a crime. Victims need to heal. Politicizing their pain and rage is a callous political maneuver that harms victims, women and men.
...
Defend yourself and your children against rape culture zealots. Demand sanity.'

At Milo Yiannopoulos Protest, Prof's Hassling of Journalists Backfires After She Calls Cops

Matt · 24 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An American University faculty member attempted to make life difficult for journalists covering a campus protest last night, but her plan went awry after she called the police.

The Washington Examiner's Ashe Schow was at AU last night reporting on Breitbart tech editor Milo Yiannopolous' visit to campus. (Schow tells me she was there on behalf of a forthcoming documentary, Thought Police, and was not representing The Examiner.) Yiannopoulos is a deliberately controversial figure, and his presence on campus prompted a student protest.

A female faculty member—now dubbed Melissa Click 2.0--tried to interfere, telling Schow and her camera crew that they were required to accompany her inside. They had to follow "certain regulations that the university is guided by" because AU is providing "a safe space for everybody who works or studies on this campus," she claimed.'

India: One booked after man kills self over ‘false’ rape bid charge

Matt · 25 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'After a 70-year-old man committed suicide by consuming poison in police custody, police Saturday lodged a case of abetment to suicide against the man who allegedly lodged against him a “false” case of rape attempt on his minor daughter.

Om Prakash’s family has alleged that the “false” FIR was a fallout of a monetary dispute between him and the girl’s father, Addl SP Pankaj Kumar said, quoting from the complaint filed by Prakash’s son Manoj.

He added that they were yet to lodge a complaint against the officers whose “dereliction” resulted in the man’s death in custody. “The decision in this regard will be taken by the SSP, who is not in the district now,” he said.

Prakash’s family has said the girl’s father had “threatened” to lodge a “false” complaint against him. Prakash, a farmer, had reportedly replied that he would consume poison if any “false charge” was levelled against him.'

Anti-Male Bias Alleged in Education Office

Mastodon · 25 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Colorado State student who claims he was falsely accused of rape says a "Dear Colleague" letter from an assistant secretary of the Department of Education encourages colleges to deny male students due process.

As universities' responses to rapes, sexual assaults and harassment have become nationwide news, increasing numbers of young men have sued their colleges, claiming they have been suspended or expelled, though the women acknowledged that the sex was consensual.

Colorado has seen at least two such discrimination lawsuits in the past three years.

In 2015, Colorado University at Boulder paid a student $15,000 in a settlement after he was found guilty of sexual assault in 2013.'

Student accused of rape files federal lawsuit

Mastodon · 25 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Excerpt:

'Suspended CSU-Pueblo football player Grant Neal speaks out in a 'Kelly File' exclusive.'

Rihanna’s music videos are a master class in misandry

Mastodon · 25 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This isn’t Rihanna’s first murder. She walks through a strip club’s red velvet curtains in her new (and NSFW—again, this is a strip club) music video “Needed Me,” holding a gun with a silencer. She has a practiced hand. In the backroom, she hits her mark, a man who throws a wad of cash towards her. One shot and he crumples. Two, he falls to the floor. She fires a third for good measure.
...
Though these depictions of murder are the most explicit crimes against men committed therein, Rihanna’s entire visual discography is actually a master class in misandry. Not in how to hate men, per se (and certainly not in how to literally murder them), but in how to act like they really, truly could not matter less to you. If there’s anything Rihanna doesn’t give a fuck about in her videos, it’s men.

From the very beginning of Rihanna’s career, misandry has bubbled under the surface. In her first music video, “Pon de Replay,” Rihanna is the boss. The first words out of her mouth are “I’ll make him turn it up.” Rihanna, rebuking a man for doing his job poorly. She then finds a raised platform in the middle of the dance floor and dances alone for the rest of the song. Some men can be seen in the shadows beneath her, but that’s as close to the spotlight as they’ll ever get.
...
One of Rihanna’s greatest acts of misandry is that she sometimes excises men from her story entirely. If she allows them to remain, they function as little more than props, like in the 2006 video for “SOS,” in which a man passively allows Rihanna to grind up against him and use his arm for balance while she spins.

In 2010’s “Only Girl in the World,” Rihanna is singing—presumably to a man—about how lucky she is. But there are no men in the video. “No men here,” she seems to say. “I am the only girl in the world and there are no men and everything is just dancing in my personal desert utopia!”'

South Africa: Academic programme at Rhodes resumes amid talks about rape culture

Mastodon · 25 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'RHODES university returned slowly and "sensitively" to its academic programme on Monday, although the rape culture on campus remained the subject of campus debate and protest.

Last week's High Court interdict against unlawful activities on the campus remained in place, despite heated argument from campaigners and an intervention from 36 Rhodes academics, who urged that the restraint be lifted as an "act of good faith".

...

The problematic issue remains the activists' demands that any student accused of rape or sexual assault be evicted from a residence and classes during the investigation, and that investigations proceed immediately against students named on the so-called reference list.

The SRC said vice-chancellor Sizwe Mabizela would not accede to this demand because he was not prepared to defy section 35(3) of the South African constitution, which stated that a person was innocent until proven guilty.'

San Francisco Declares War on Manspreading

Mastodon · 25 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'The manspreading menace is sweeping the nation, and threatens to cripple our already crumbling infrastructure, which is why officials in California are taking decisive action to eradicate it.

Men (or women) with problematically wide stances could face hefty fines after the San Francisco transit board approved a strict “one ticket, one seat” policy. Los Angeles transit officials will consider a similar measure in the coming months.

Offenders will be fined $100 for the first violation, $200 for a second offense within a 12-month period, and $500 for each repeat violation within five years. It is unclear how the new rule will be enforced.

Manspreading is real, and can happen to you and your loved ones.'

Canada: Women-only ride services are fully legal, despite naysayers

Mastodon · 25 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women-only ride-sharing services certainly seem to make sense following a spate of reports in which female passengers have been allegedly attacked, sexually assaulted and discriminated against by both Uber and traditional taxi drivers.

But how can a segregated ride service exist today at the exclusion of men? Isn't that discriminatory?

"In the context of a women-only ride share program I don't think it would breach the human rights code," says Nicole Simes, an employment and human rights lawyer at MacLeod Law Firm in Toronto. "Presumably the purpose is to reduce sexual violence and harassment against women which is a justifiable reason for the differential treatment."

The Ontario Human Rights Code protects people against discrimination on several grounds, one of which is gender, and there is a legal test to determine if, in fact, discrimination occurred. One of the determining factors looks at whether there was a justifiable reason for the unfair treatment and Simes believes in this case there is.'

Why Do Only Girls Get the HPV Vaccine?

Mastodon · 25 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ontario just announced that, starting in September, boys in the province will get the HPV vaccine, a cancer-fighting shot that's been publicly funded and available to girls in the province since 2007. Across Canada, girls have been getting HPV shots for years, but in most places, boys still aren't vaccinated. In fact, just three provinces include boys in their school-based programs: Alberta, PEI, and Nova Scotia. Manitoba and Quebec are going to start vaccinating boys soon, too.

But even then, there will be four provinces, and two territories, where only girls get a publicly funded HPV shot. In those places, most boys won't get vaccinated. The human papillomavirus is the most common sexually transmitted infection in Canada, and around the world. So why is it still seen as a female problem?

In a new article in the Canadian Medical Association Journal, published April 25, experts argue that it's time to systematically vaccinate all boys in Canada against HPV, just like girls. It's time to stop thinking of HPV as a female virus, and on depending on females getting immunized to protect the whole population.

Pretty much everyone who has sex will get an HPV infection at some point in their lives, according to the US Centers for Disease Control, and most infections will clear on their own. But the virus is still worth protecting against. It's associated with anogenital warts, cancers of the penis, anus, oral cavity, vulva, vagina, and oropharynx. According to the CMAJ paper, men are now reporting more HPV-associated cancers, like anal and oral ones. It says, "some argue that the risk of HPV-related cancer is similar in both sexes."'

Lena Dunham would kill herself if she woke up a man

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lena Dunham, creator of “Girls,” is very glad to be, well, a girl.

At the New York Women in Communications organization’s annual Matrix Awards luncheon on Monday, she revealed her true feelings during a game of “Plead the Fifth” with host Andy Cohen and the crème of media executives and influencers onstage. For the game, participants may choose not to answer some provocative questions. (A sample: “Which of your clients is the biggest PR nightmare?”) Dunham took no such easy route when Cohen asked what she would do if she woke up one day as a man.

“Kill myself,” she replied, laughing.

Actor and activist Gloria Steinem later introduced Dunham onstage with a reminder that the writer-director-producer’s response was completely in character.'

How to Femsplain Man-Bashing

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of the more irritating aspects of the current feminist revival is the steady stream of nasty commentary about men and male behavior, often on a very personal level -- often accompanied by the use of "man-" as a derogatory prefix ("manspreading," "mansplaining," even "manslamming" -- thankfully that one didn't take). The latest addition to the genre comes from New York Times op-ed contributor Julia Baird, who proposes "manologue" as a term for the (alleged) tendency of male speakers to hog the floor and go on and on and on.

I'll readily concede that pontificating is a behavior more commonly found in men, whether due to innate personality differences or cultural norms. It's the flip side of the positive trait, also more common in men, of having confidence in one's opinions. (Of course, tendencies are only tendencies; one of the worst monologuers I've ever seen at public events was female.) But at least some of the research Baird cites to show that men talk more than women "in almost professional setting" doesn't quite confirm her claim. For instance: "The larger the group, the more likely men are to speak (unless it is in a social setting like a lunch break)."'

Cannes Artistic Director on Festival's Lack of Female Directors: "Do Not Blame Cannes"

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rose McGowan shared an idea for the rest of the lineup. "Those 17 who are not women should be forced to walk down the red carpet in high heels," she told The Hollywood Reporter, referencing the fest's "flatgate" controversy last year, during which it was rumored that women would be required to wear heels on the Croisette. "There are so many levels of embedded misogyny that people don't even realize; it starts with, 'You have to wear high heels,' and goes to 'We don't accept you as a filmmaker.'"

"The reality is, most of these men are not great," McGowan continued. "What's good now is considered 'great,' and what's mediocre is considered 'good.' That has to change."

With a hopeful smile, she added, "I figure, if the boys aren't doing it right, step aside."'

Gun Control Is Not A “Women’s Issue” As Senator Gillibrand Claims

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Love guns? Enjoy hunting or target practicing? Are you a concealed carry permit holder? Watch out! You just may be Senator Gillibrand’s (D-NY) latest target. Gillibrand told Politico’s Glenn Thrush that gun control is, in fact, a “women’s issue” and should be rebranded as such.

“This debate is relegated to the men. It’s about hunting? It has nothing to do with hunting,” Gillibrand explained on Thrush’s podcast. “Nothing in this debate has to do with hunting, and nothing in this debate has to do with the Second Amendment rights. Nothing… I think – I see the world in the lens of women’s issues. I’m making everything a woman’s issue. I want guns to be a woman’s issue.”

Yes, you heard that right. If you’re a man and you have a firearm, then you should have little to no say in what happens with gun-related legislation.

The Senator’s understanding of the gun industry – or lack thereof – is disheartening, not only for gun owners, but for women across the nation. Every issue, including gun control, is a woman’s issue. If a legislative decision impacts society as a whole, how can someone claim this is a women’s only issue?'

Half of women on boards like quotas but male colleagues say no - survey

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Half of women sitting on corporate boards of directors around the world support quota systems to fix stubborn gender imbalances in the boardroom, but less than 10 percent of their male colleagues agree, said a study released this week.

Female directors are also more likely than men to approve of term limits and mandatory retirement ages to change corporate board membership, said the survey by Harvard Business School researchers, the WomenCorporateDirectors (WCD) Foundation and Spencer Stuart, a consulting firm.

Asked how they arrived in their board appointments, 39 percent of women said their gender was a significant factor.

Just 1 percent of men said the same, said the survey released on Wednesday.

Men and women were divided as well on the reasons that female board membership remains low, said the survey, which culled responses from more than 4,000 male and female directors from 60 nations.

Male directors, particularly older men, say there is a "lack of qualified female candidates," it said.

But female directors say diversity is not a board priority and traditional networks tend to be male-dominated, it said.'

A quota for women in office: New York gains when government looks like us

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So what are we going to do about it? There's a possible solution that may sound outlandish — even sexist — that nonetheless deserves consideration: quotas.

The term "quota" smacks of negative connotations and is badly in need of a rebranding, but let's put that aside and focus on substance.

According to the nonprofit organization Representation2020, about 110 countries around the world employ some sort of quota in an effort to elect more women, including Argentina, Sweden, Mexico, Spain, Senegal, Nepal, the Philippines and Australia.

The design of the models varies broadly. In some countries gender quotas are constitutionally enshrined; in others they are established by election law. In some places they apply only to sub-national elections, while in others political parties voluntarily adhere to quotas in selecting their candidates.

The Quota Project reports that 12 nations have 40% female representation or greater in at least one chamber of their legislature, and two countries have over 50% representation. By comparison, the 114th U.S. Congress, which took office in 2015, was 19.4% female.

The arguments against quotas are clear: They discriminate against men, reduce voter choice and can discredit female candidates by emphasizing their gender over their qualifications.'

Australia: Police officers have rejected a new 50-50 gender recruitment quota

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph and clicking on the first result entry. Excerpt:

'POLICE officers have rejected “rigid” gender recruitment quotas amid claims they will compromise public safety by lowering standards.

The Police Association has criticised the imposition of a 50-50 recruitment policy it says dictates gender is more important than ability when selecting new officers.

Opposition to the quota — introduced on January 1 this year — comes as new figures reveal 22 per cent fewer men would be recruited as police officers because of their gender.

Police have denied excluding men or lowering standards, saying the 50-50 recruitment policy is a “win-win situation” for the community and people wishing to become officers.

It says recruiting equal numbers of men and women is part of a plan to promote a modern, professional workforce.

But Police Association president Mark Carroll told The Advertiser: “The goal is to be an employer of choice.”'

DOD Official on Women in Combat: ‘Numbers May Be Very, Very Small Or None At All’

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Defense Department (DOD) official said on Friday that for the number of women who want to fill combat posts heretofore not open to them, and then being able to meet the standard set for those posts, the number who actually serve will be “very, very small or none at all.”

“There’s a full recognition that the numbers may be very, very small or none at all,” Juliet Beyler, principal director, force resiliency in the Office of the Under Secretary of Defense for Personnel & Readiness, said at a discussion at the Council on Foreign Relations in Washington, D.C.

“And that’s what the secretary said – that equal opportunity does not mean equal participation,” Beyler said.

As one of the panelists at the discussion, Beyler was asked if the military had a quota for how many women would fill these newly available military posts.

Beyler said there are no quotas and that any post across all military branches requires meeting a certain standard, regardless of gender. Beyler said Secretary of Defense Ash Carter’s decision in December to open all military positions to women sparked a review of the standards required for each post.'

More than 300 pre-teen boys go under the knife on school tables in a mass circumcision in the Philippines

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In the Philippines circumcision is a tradition for boys who are just about to enter their teenage years. Uncircumcised boys often end up being teased by their peers but as these images show, the price of social acceptance is a painful one.

Circumcision is traditionally associated with Muslim and Jewish culture but the ritual of 'tuli' is common in the Philippines, where the majority of people are Roman Catholic.

This week 300 boys began the traditional journey into adulthood in a single mass circumcision exercise at a school in Marikina City, east of the Filipino capital Manila.'

Slideshow: 10 Celebrities Who Are Anti-Circumcision

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Another subject famous folks have been piping up about: Choosing not to circumcise a baby boy. Here, 10 celebs who disagree with circumcision and what they've said about their decision to opt out of the practice ...'

1. Alicia Silverstone
2. Howard Stern
3. Russell Brand
4. Mario Lopez
5. Sara Gilbert
6. Cameron Diaz
7. Ben Affleck
8. Princess Diana
9. Roseanne Barr
10. Gerard Butler

Andrea Tantaros blasts feminism in new book

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Relations between men and women in America have never been more dysfunctional," writes Ms. Tantaros, the co-host of "Outnumbered" on the Fox News Channel who takes on the "commandments of feminism" with vigor. Those edicts demanded women act, work and party like men. When all the squawking was through, however, women have little to show for it, she says.

"Everyone always hears about the benefits of feminism, but nobody talks honestly about the downsides," Ms. Tantaros tells Inside the Beltway. "If women are more empowered than ever, why are they more unhappy than ever? The book looks at the lies women were sold by the feminist movement: that we don't need men — but that we should emulate them in our professional and personal lives — and the havoc this groupthink has wreaked upon the genders ultimately destroying respect, discretion, monogamy, decency and intimacy."'

Wikipedia on the author here.

Senators Fight For A Vote On Campus Rape Bill

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A bipartisan group of senators tried to generate momentum Tuesday for a vote on their legislation reforming how colleges handle sexual assault.

The Campus Accountability and Safety Act, or CASA, would dramatically change how sexual assault is handled on college campuses. It has 36 co-sponsors, but senators are waiting on the GOP-controlled Senate Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions to bring the bill up for a vote.

CASA would allow the Department of Education to fine schools up to 1 percent of their operating budget for violations of Title IX, the gender equity law requiring schools to handle sexual assault and harassment reports. Currently, the Education Department can either reach an agreement with universities outlining reforms a school will make to comply with Title IX, or withhold all federal funding from the school, including student loans. The department has never withheld funding, and activists say the fines are simply a slap on the wrist for schools.

CASA would also require a standard, uniform survey of every college and university to gauge students' experiences with assault and harassment, and whether they sought services from any agency.'

Students Falsely Accused of Sex Assault Sue Dept. of Education for Encouraging Colleges' Denial of Due Process

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Colorado State student who claims he was falsely accused of rape says a "Dear Colleague" letter from an assistant secretary of the Department of Education encourages colleges to deny male students due process.

As universities' responses to rapes, sexual assaults and harassment have become nationwide news, increasing numbers of young men have sued their colleges, claiming they have been suspended or expelled, though the women acknowledged that the sex was consensual.

Colorado has seen at least two such discrimination lawsuits in the past three years.

In 2015, Colorado University at Boulder paid a student $15,000 in a settlement after he was found guilty of sexual assault in 2013.'

Feds May Force Universities To Violate The First Amendment

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Department of Justice's recent interpretation of Title IX after its investigation into the University of New Mexico's (UNM) sexual discrimination policies will require colleges and universities to violate the First Amendment, according to a free speech advocacy group.

The DOJ found the UNM improperly defined sexual harassment, and declared in its findings letter that sexual harassment is "(u)nwelcome conduct of a sexual nature" including "verbal conduct" –- "regardless of whether it causes a hostile environment or is quid pro quo."

"The Department of Justice has put universities in an impossible position: violate the Constitution or risk losing federal funding," said Greg Lukianoff, the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) president and CEO, in a statement.
...
The DOJ's interpretation leaves open the possibility that every student is a sexual harasser with its broad definition. Any speech deemed offensive of a sexual nature — whether it be a joke overheard between two students by another student who finds it offensive or a lecture by a professor on how one could contract AIDs — could all be defined as sexual harassment.'

Students throw temper tantrum at free speech event

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Students at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst set a new high for hysteria Monday night at an event featuring Christina Hoff Sommers, Milo Yiannopulous, and Steven Crowder.

The event was intended to be a forum and discussion about the use of political correctness on campus, but degenerated into a shouting match as protesters sought to drown out the speakers with cries of “hate speech” and, less imaginatively, “fuck you.”

One of the protesters took it upon herself to pass out literature expressing her concern for the “triggering” event, claiming the speakers “all demonstrate either that you don’t give a shit about people’s trauma and pain and think it’s funny to thrust people into states of panic and distress OR that you fundamentally do not understand what a trigger is, what it means to be triggered, and what a trigger warning is meant to prevent.”'

Protesters go crazy during The Triggering event at UMass

Social Justice Warriors Get Owned In Epic Rant By Comedian

Mastodon · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. (NSFW) Description:

'Joining Milo Yiannopoulos and Professor Christina Hoff Sommers at an event called "The Triggering: Has Political Correctness Gone Too Far", Crowder gives his opening statements to the students at UMass College.'

Well meaning, but out of control

Matt · 26 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 22 senators say in their letter to the Senate Appropriations Committee that OCR has gotten busier, with a lot of complaints to investigate. Of course it has.

After one investigation, OCR told the University of Montana that sexual harassment should be more broadly defined as “any unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature.” The university’s requirement that the conduct create a hostile environment, OCR said, was too limiting: the university ought to intervene, OCR said, before a hostile environment appears.

What?

A preemptive strike against harassment? You cannot get broader than that.

If we take seriously the idea that all unwanted speech with a possible sexual implication is harassment, anyone who asks a classmate on a date runs the risk that the invitation will be defined as harassment.

In just the past two months, four students who sued their universities over the way they treated them when they were accused of sexual misconduct have won victories at one stage or another in their cases, according to Inside Higher Ed. And now, Reason magazine reports, a student who received a multiyear suspension for what his “victim” consistently said was consensual sex has sued not only his school, but OCR too.

In its well-intentioned zealotry to defend women not only against real threats but against potential ones, the OCR has abandoned the concept of due process of law. It needs to be reined in.'

"The Title IX Juggernaut"

Mastodon · 27 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Major miscarriages of justice often stem from unsound judicial and administrative procedures. Consider the story of Grant Neal, a student on an athletic scholarship at Colorado State University–Pueblo. Neal was suspended for sexual assault after he had consensual sexual intercourse with an unnamed woman. He has now filed suit to challenge that suspension, both against the CSU–Pueblo and the United States Department of Education and its Office for Civil Rights.

He should win, and for good reason. All legal actions begin with complaints, usually from a purported victim. But Neal's case was different. The charge was brought against him by a "peer" of the woman involved, who, according to the allegations in the complaint, denied that she had been raped. The purported victim told the school investigator: "He's a good guy. He's not a rapist, he's not a criminal, it's not even worth any of this hoopla." That should have put an end to the entire matter. Nonetheless, CSU–Pueblo has suspended Neal as long as his alleged victim remains on campus. The stigma of the sanction makes it impossible for him to transfer anywhere else. It is a classic case of defamation by public action, for which recourse is all too difficult to obtain.'

Terrible, awful campus sex assault bill is back

Mastodon · 27 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An awful, reality-denying campus sexual assault bill is being pushed for in the Senate for the third year in a row, and there is much in the bill that should give congress pause.

The deceptively titled Campus Accountability and Safety Act would create new resources on campus for accusers, ensure minimum training standards for campus personnel who deal with accusations, require a memorandum of understanding with law enforcement, require schools to survey students annually about their experiences with sexual violence and create harsher penalties for schools that don't comply.
...
Expecting a frightened 19-year-old who had a drunken one-night stand with a woman a year ago who is now claiming it was rape to be able to act as a trained and adequate attorney is absurd. Activists would like to brand this young man a rapist just because he has been accused — and that is exactly why the truth in these cases is so important and the ability to defend oneself is essential.

The "minimum training standards" alluded to by CASA's sponsors are "victim-centered" training standards, which presuppose all accusations as true and seem designed to ensure the accused is found responsible — no matter what the evidence shows.

Activists can claim that's not the case, but when "investigators" are taught that false accusations are so rare that they shouldn't be considered, a perfect atmosphere for false accusations is created. At the University of Texas, police officers were taught "victim-centered" approaches to investigating that involved conducting interviews in such a way as to ensure the accused has no exculpatory evidence — like failing to keep reports of follow-up interviews so that it can't look like accusers are contradicting themselves.'

Hillary Clinton: Women and prison -- the cost in money and lives

Mastodon · 27 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mass incarceration has torn families apart, impoverished communities, and kept too many Americans from living up to their God-given potential. But mass incarceration's impact on women and their families has been particularly acute — and it doesn't get the attention it deserves. I learned about Alice and Tanya's experiences through a nonprofit organization that works with women in the justice system. (Both women's names have been changed to protect their privacy.)

The United States' prison and jail population includes 215,000 women — nearly one-third of all female prisoners worldwide, and 800% more women than were in prison four decades ago. African-American women are more than twice as likely to be in prison than white women.

But women aren't the only ones affected when they are sent to prison. The high number of women in prison — and the long lengths of their sentences — destabilizes families and communities, especially their children. Since 1991, the number of children with a mother in prison has more than doubled. Mothers in prison are five times more likely than fathers in prison to have to put their children in foster care while they serve their sentences.
...

And third, we need to be deliberate about understanding the different paths that can land women in prison, be more attentive to women's unique needs while they are incarcerated, and do more to support women and their families once they are released. I will institute gender-responsive policies in the federal prison system and encourage states to do the same—because women follow different paths to crime than men, and face different risks and challenges both inside and outside the prison walls, and every part of the justice system, from sentencing to the conditions of confinement to re-entry services, should reflect women's unique needs.'

Men Sentenced To Longer Prison Terms Than Women For Same Crimes, Study Says

Stanford student accused of sexual assault fires back at university in federal lawsuit

Mastodon · 27 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A male Stanford University student found responsible for sexual assault in 2014 has fired back at the university in a lawsuit that alleges Stanford, motivated by gender bias and a "discriminatory zeal to prosecute sexual assault claims," violated his rights under federal gender-equity law Title IX.

The lawsuit, filed Monday in the U.S. District Court, Northern District of California, only identifies the man as "John Doe" and the female Stanford student his lawyers say falsely accused him of sexual assault as "Jane Smith," but the details of the suit mirror a very-public case that sparked a firestorm of publicity and student activism around the topic of sexual violence at Stanford.

...

Doe's lawsuit alleges that the combination of a flawed disciplinary process and a university under public pressure to protect its "purported prestige and reputation against criticism that Stanford fails to adequately address alleged sexual assaults of women by men" led to violations of his right to a fair process. The suit also maintains that the sexual contact between Doe and Francis was consensual, and that Stanford wrongly concluded that he sexually assaulted her.'

"From manspreading to mansplaining – here's some other skills for dudes to master"

Mastodon · 27 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Manambling
The footpath is yours to own. Pitch yourself riiight in the middle, gear down to an amble, swing those arms and watch everyone struggle to overtake. The public space is your dominion so go full Gandalf on the operation. You shall not pass. Extra points if you lead with your crotch like it's an icebreaker. A big sexy icebreaker.

Manopolising
Get yourself all up in that party's business by manopolising the music. Without asking just unplug the host's gadget and link up your Android phone with a "lemme tell you why this kicks an iphone's ass (or vice versa)…". Now for the next four hours force your playlists onto (into?) everyone else. Extra points for actively minimising the presence of female artists on said playlist.'

India: Husbands presumed guilty under law when wife dies

Matt · 27 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In December last year, 27-year-old Venkatajagadish Kintali, a city-based software engineer, spent a month in jail after his wife committed suicide and his in-laws cried "dowry harassment". The devastated Kintali came out on bail and decided to find out what led his wife of mere 10-months to take the drastic step. At the root of it, he soon found out, was a relationship he was kept in the dark about - not only by his wife but by his in-laws too.

When Kintali and Jyothsna Vysyaraju had an arranged marriage last year, the young man had no reason to doubt his wife's affections. About 10 months later on December 4, Jyothsna committed suicide at their Mahadevapura house allegedly due over a "heart ailment". The shocked Kintali soon had a dowry harassment case slapped against him too by the in-laws.

He languished in jail from December 7 to January 7, and when he got out on bail, Kintali decided to do his own digging. What he discovered were shocking chat messages, photographs, and videos that clearly pointed to an illicit relationship his wife was having with a senior from college, Girish Patnaik Rajamohanthy.'

Dowry prohibition laws and British Indians: Some reflections

NPO: Why Florida Is a Victory

Matt · 28 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some of our members think we lost when SB 668 in Florida, a good alimony and shared parenting bill, was vetoed by Republican Governor Rick Scott.

They are wrong. We simply took another step toward winning.

Here's how you can tell when a social movement is on the road to victory:

1. The Legislature passed alimony reform and shared parenting not once, but twice by healthy margins.

2. Like most US men and women, Floridians overwhelmingly support shared parenting as the usual outcome if both parents are fit. They demonstrated this with thousands of emails, calls and letters in support of SB 668. Calls to the Governor's office ran five to one in favor.'

House committee votes to require women to register for draft

Mastodon · 28 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The House Armed Services Committee approved a measure Wednesday requiring women to register for the military draft, a move that comes just a few months after the Defense Department lifted all gender-based restrictions on front-line combat units.

In a twist that presages how contentious further debate may be, the author of the amendment voted against his own measure. It passed the committee by a vote of 32-30.

Rep. Duncan Hunter, R-Calif., a former Marine who served three combat tours in Iraq and Afghanistan, doesn't support drafting women into combat and he's opposed to opening infantry and special operations positions to women. He said he offered the measure to trigger a discussion about how the Pentagon's decision in December to rescind gender restrictions on military service failed to consider whether the exclusion on drafting women also should be lifted.'

“Bones” Just Defended Men’s Rights Activists

Mastodon · 28 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In this week’s muddled episode of Bones, forensic anthropologist Brennan (Emily Deschanel) and her team investigate the murder of the male founder of men’s rights group Men Now. Although the series centers on a female murder-solving scientific genius, the feminists the victim feuded with are presented in the episode as more frightening and violent than the men’s rights activists themselves, despite one male activist advocating rape in the show, and the threats and murders spawned by the real-life men’s rights movement.

Instead of focusing on the hateful rhetoric of the male activists, Bones introduces a series of contemptible women starting with a vapid narcissist and ending with an iron-wielding murderess. “The Murder of the Meninist,” as the April 21 installment is titled, seems to argue that men’s rights activists — who say in the episode that a woman who dresses “like a slut” deserves to be raped — make some valid points.'

Parenting Tips: 3 Effective Tips on How To Turn Boys Into Men

Mastodon · 28 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Exhibit Unbiased Chivalry

Boys should be thought to acknowledge the difference between men and women. At this point, their female counterparts are shooting for equality, but it does not mean they should stop opening the doors.

"We need to teach boys that chivalrous behavior is an acknowledgment of difference-not inequality-between the sexes," Dorothy Dorfman, a psychotherapist, tells Parenting. "Convey sentiments of politeness and civility, not a perception of weakness. Chivalry and girls achieving great things are separate issues."'

Author advocates for "meternity" leave for women without children

Matt · 28 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It's one thing to advocate for more time off for workers in general. It's another thing to do so only for some workers based on their sex. This is what this woman is doing. Words jump to mind: sexist, entitled, and the "p" word: privileged. This is one example of the product of feminist indoctrination. Excerpt:

'“You know, I need a maternity leave!” I told one of my pregnant friends. She laughed, and we spent the afternoon plotting my escape from my 10-hour days, fake baby bump and all.

Of course, that didn’t happen. But the more I thought about it, the more I came to believe in the value of a “meternity” leave — which is, to me, a sabbatical-like break that allows women and, to a lesser degree, men to shift their focus to the part of their lives that doesn’t revolve around their jobs.

For women who follow a “traditional” path, this pause often naturally comes in your late 20s or early 30s, when a wedding, pregnancy and babies means that your personal life takes center stage. But for those who end up on the “other” path, that socially mandated time and space for self-reflection may never come.'

Free speech on campus? Not if it's 'unwelcome'

Matt · 28 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Title IX's ban on sexual speech harassment trumps the First Amendment on college campuses, according to an April 22 Justice Department letter. "Unwelcome" conduct or speech of a sexual nature is sexual harassment — and must be investigated — "regardless of whether it causes a hostile environment," the letter told the University of New Mexico.
"The Department of Justice has put universities in an impossible position: violate the Constitution or risk losing federal funding," said Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) President Greg Lukianoff.

"An enormous amount of everyday speech" would be sexual harassment under this definition, writes Joseph Cohn on FIRE's site.

Did you overhear someone retelling an Amy Schumer joke about sex that you found unpleasant? According to the DOJ, that makes them a harasser—even if they only did it once and didn't do it again after you asked. If that's harassment, the term is devoid of meaning.

If a professor argues for transgender restroom access, conservative students might complain ze has made unwelcome comments about a sexual issue. Is Camille Paglia a sexual harasser? "Leaving sex to the feminists is like letting your dog vacation at the taxidermist" must be unwelcome to somebody.'

Malecare: USPSTF Changes Research Plans

Matt · 28 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

April 28, 2016
Malecare is mostly pleased with the latest response of the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force to change it's research plan on screening for prostate cancer. We hope that this new research project will lead to change of the USPSTF "D" recommendation for PSA screening to more useful and lifesaving criteria.

Regarding the spcific changes, we are distressed that sexual identity as a criteria for subpopulation, especially in light of recent research showing that Gay and Straight men have significantly different pathways to advanced stage prostate cancer.

However we are pleased that the disparity of African American men is noted and we will advocate for even more inclusion of subpopulations as this study progresses.

Below is a statement of the changes the USPSTF made directly as a result of Malecare's and other organization's advocacy and the advocacy of prostate cancer patients. I also have included a link to the finalized research plans, for your interest.

"The draft Research Plan was posted for public comment on the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF) Web site from October 29 to November 25, 2015. In response, the USPSTF clarified (through the addition of sub-KQs [e.g., 1a, 2a]) that the review of the effectiveness and harms of PSA-based screening and treatment of screen-detected or early-stage prostate cancer will assess for differences within patient subpopulations at higher risk of prostate cancer. The USPSTF also clarified that the harms of PSA-based screening will encompass the harms of diagnostic followup (e.g., biopsy). Contextual Question 2 (originally about treatment preferences) was replaced with a question about the use of informed and shared decisionmaking tools to guide screening and treatment decisions. To further explore the evidence presented by screening and treatment models, the USPSTF added Contextual Questions 4 and 5 to provide context for how the benefits and harms of PSA-based screening may vary under different clinical scenarios. Most of the remaining comments were addressed through minor revisions and by providing further details on the interventions, comparators, and outcomes as outlined in the Research Approach. The USPSTF made no major changes to the scope of the review or the approach to synthesizing the evidence."

Read the final research plans, here.

Dr. Siu from the USPSTF replies to Malecare, here.

MALECARE EMAIL OF OCTOBER 29, 2015 RE-POSTED, BELOW:

The U.S. Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF) posted a draft research plan on screening for prostate cancer. The draft research plan is available for review and public comment from October 29, 2015 to November 25, 2015. To review the draft research plan and submit comments, go to: http://bit.ly/1LEu5g3

The USPSTF is the organization responsive for the recommendation against prostate cancer screening. Their May 2012 recommendation reads:

The U.S. Preventive Services Task Force (USPSTF) recommends against prostate-specific antigen (PSA)-based screening for prostate cancer.

This recommendation has caused massive controversy throughout our health care system. We ask you to post your comments on the USPSTF website, at: http://bit.ly/1LEu5g3

Whether you agree with their 2012 finding or not, our prostate cancer community needs to be heard. This new research project gives all of us an opportunity to influence the outcome of prostate cancer screening in the United States.

Even if you don't know anything about research or the PSA test, it will be helpful to let the USPSTF know that prostate cancer patients and family members like you are keeping a watch on their work.

There are ten questions for you to comment on, spread over ten pages. For example, on page three, you are asked to comment, What are the harms of PSA-based screening for prostate cancer?

You can select a multiple choice response and have the option to write one or several sentences with your personal thoughts. It takes about ten minutes or less to run through the pages, so please go to: http://bit.ly/1LEu5g3

Please let us know if you commented and or if you have any questions. You can email me directly at darryl@malecare.org

Best regards,

Darryl Mitteldorf, LCSW

Executive Director
Malecare
Men fighting cancer, together.

Hillary offers ‘woman card’ to supporters as campaign focuses on gender

Mastodon · 28 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton wants Americans to vote for her because she’s a woman and her campaign is increasingly embracing the female mantle.

A campaign email sent today offered supporters their very own “woman card” after they claimed, “We’ve been hearing from supporters all over the country that they’d like a ‘woman card’ of their very own — to display proudly on a fridge or pull out of their wallet every time they run into someone who says women who support Hillary must not be using our brains…”

The campaign asks supporters for a donation so they can get their own “woman card”. “…you’ll be able to play the woman card anytime you want,” the email reads.

Clinton has frequently used her gender as a weapon — and a shield — on the campaign trail.'

Male Suicide Rates Massively Increase

Mastodon · 28 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What if I told you that the percentage of men taking their own lives had, in the past fifteen years, soared to unprecedented heights, increasing 62% faster than the percentage of women doing the same?

According to a recent report by the CDC detailing changes in suicide rates from 1999 to 2014, that is precisely the case. Of course, if you read only media outlets obsessed with “war on women” talking points, you could be forgiven for missing it. “Suicide Rates Climb In U.S., Especially Among Adolescent Girls” reads an NPR headline, in an article that goes on to focus almost exclusively on the fairer (and less suicidally depressed) sex. The article even includes a graph of female suicides, declaring “Women’s Suicide Rates Increase For All Age Groups Under 75,” while neglecting to include the same information for men. Had it been included, it would have shown even larger numbers.

The CDC report states that the female suicide rate has increased from 4.0 women per 100,000 in 1999 to 5.8 in 2014. Meanwhile the male suicide rate, already at 17.8 per 100,00 in 1999, has increased to 20.8 in 2014. In other words, female suicide rates have increased by 1.8 women out of 100,000, while men’s have increased by 2.9 — 62% faster!'

American University Will Stop Making Sexual Assault Victims Sign Confidentiality Agreements

Mastodon · 28 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'AU also agreed to consider input from accusers when deciding punishment for offenders. Further, the school will not allow students on disciplinary probation to study abroad in an AU-sponsored program or participate in fraternity or sorority membership recruitment. The school said it would consider using Skype to hold “timely hearings” and avoid long delays.

The school also said students on probation will not be allowed to serve in student government or as elected Greek life officers, though they can belong to a fraternity or sorority.

Prior to Ferber’s federal complaint, AU was already the subject of a U.S. Department of Education Office for Civil Rights investigation over its handling of sexual assaults. That review began in March 2015.'

"How feminism has harmed women"

Mastodon · 28 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'She has said feminism was vital in the 1970s due to the ‘ridiculous state of affairs’ women found themselves in.

But author Fay Weldon has now declared that the movement did some women more harm than good and has “undermined men” too much.

She believes women should not try to balance “a family, a career and a love life” as they will be too busy. It is harder than ever to be a mother as women pile pressure on each other, the writer believes.

Miss Weldon, 84, whose books include The Life And Loves Of A She-Devil, said women have suffered as they now have to go out to work when many might not want to.

She said: “Feminism probably suited one woman in three. And one woman in three would rather stay home, look after the children and had no ambition.'

Wikipedia on the subject here.

USC Cancelled Video Game Panel for Including Too Many Men

Mastodon · 29 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Southern California cancelled its planned "Legends of the Games" event after the lone female participant signaled that she wouldn't be able to attend. Administrators made the determination that an all-male panel was unacceptable, and killed the event—a mere four hours before it was supposed to start.

"In the interest of promoting diversity and inclusion within the USC Games family, tonight's "Legends of the Game Industry" Event in SCI 106 has been canceled," wrote a university spokesperson on Facebook. "A new event will be arranged over the coming weeks, and we dearly hope you will join us then."

That's probably little consolation to the graduating seniors who will miss out on meeting some major players in the gaming industry, even if the university is actually able to reschedule the event, Campus Reform notes.'

Campus rape bill draws doubts over accountability

Mastodon · 29 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Campus Accountability and Safety Act, being billed as a bipartisan response to rape on college campuses, is drawing doubts over the matter of “accountability and safety” — for whom.

At a press conference this week, Sen. Lindsey Graham of South Carolina, one of 12 Republican co-sponsors, said the bill is aimed at ensuring “students and parents [have] a safe place to go to school where they will be fairly dealt with.” Another Republican, Sen. Joni Ernst of Iowa, said the bill is “about doing what is right for young men and women out there on campuses all across the United States.”

But the “young men” who say they have been falsely accused of sexual assault on college campuses may be wondering how CASA ensures that they are “fairly dealt with.”
...
She said provisions like those in CASA are a “laudable attempt to increase protections for alleged victims of sexual misconduct,” but neglect the emotional trauma suffered by men falsely accused with paltry means to defend themselves.

“We have had many accused men in extensive therapy or hospitalized for suicidal behavior, and know of at least two suicides in the U.S.,” Ms. Garrett said.'

Connecticut House overwhelmingly adopts affirmative-consent bill

Mastodon · 29 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The House of Representatives overwhelmingly approved a bill late Thursday that requires colleges and universities in Connecticut to use a standard of “affirmative consent” when developing policies on sexual assault.

Institutional policies also must include clear statements advising students and employees of the affirmative-consent standard. The measure, which passed 138-7 and now heads to the Senate, only applies to institutional disciplinary matters and not to criminal cases.

“It clarifies that a yes-means-yes policy will be the policy for the state of Connecticut for all public and private colleges,” said Rep. Gregory Haddad, D-Mansfield, who serves on the legislature’s Higher Education Committee and who introduced the bill. “The presence of ‘yes’ is required rather than just the lack of ‘no’ ” in determining consensual sexual activity.

One in five women nationally, and one in 16 men, are assaulted during their college career, Haddad said, adding that while affirmative-consent-based policies are in place at most colleges and universities in Connecticut, they vary considerably in scope.
...
Rep. Gail Lavielle, R-Wilton, told the story of a constituent wrongfully accused of sexual assault and later exonerated, adding that false claims leave lasting problems for the accused. “There are also those who can be wrongfully accused, and we owe them the same concern, and I hope we will be dealing with it in the future,” she said.'

Suing the Office for Civil Rights

Matt · 29 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The prospect of the Office for Civil Rights (OCR) being sued has been much in the news lately. Talk began with an announcement from FIRE—on the fifth anniversary of the issuance of the “Dear Colleague” letter—that it was soliciting an accused student to sue OCR. Attorney Andrew Miltenberg then filed two such suits, on behalf of an accused student from Colorado and a state legislator from Georgia.

In a break from the past, the Dear Colleague letter reinterpreted Title IX to grant the federal government authority to order colleges to enact specific disciplinary procedures for handling sexual assault (and sexual harassment) complaints filed by one student against another. Each of the changes ordered or strongly urged by the administration increased the likelihood of a guilty finding; the best-known change required colleges to use the lowest burden of proof, preponderance of evidence (50.01 percent), to determine guilt.
...
Republicans control 34 of the nation’s 50 governorships; many of these states have been under GOP control for more than a decade. Every state’s higher-ed law is different, but all give at least some control (usually through appointment of trustees) to a governor. Any of these 34 state education boards would have had standing to challenge OCR’s new mandate. Yet none have—a reminder that campus due process has no constituency, and with the exception of Lamar Alexander and James Lankford, the Republican record on this issue is very poor.

Any lawsuit coordinated by FIRE—or the two Miltenberg lawsuits already filed—first will need to survive a challenge on standing that a university threatened by OCR would not face. But the “Dear Colleague” letter not only lowered the evidentiary standard, but also mandated the right of accuser to appeal, pressured colleges to accelerate their adjudication processes, and discouraged cross-examination. So for standing purposes, the likeliest case would involve a student—as in the recent cases at James Madison and George Mason—whose not-guilty finding got overturned on appeal.'

TV Personality Judge Judy lambasts family court

Matt · 29 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Judge Judy, whose full name is Judy Sheindlen, wrote a book in 1996 titled “Don’t Pee on My Leg and Tell Me It’s Raining,” and it includes a chapter called “Custody Wars are Battles Without Winners.” Here were some of her observations long before there was a strong family court reform movement. Pay special attention to her last comment.

"American fathers are led down a primrose path every day in our family courts, often with disastrous legal results. They wind up in the Land of Gender Bias, where they are systematically stripped of their rights, often without the slightest idea of why it is happening to them."

"If you think the mother-father disparity is outrageous, consider the sexual abuse syndrome, and how it affects visitation and custody disputes. Here, the judicial impotence and chronic blindness to men's rights would appall you."

"Courts are supposed to approach cases of child custody, support payments, and visitation rights in what we call a gender-neutral posture. It sounds fair, and it is fair. But it is a myth. Judges are not enforcing these gender laws fairly, and few seem to care."

"We will see more of these problems until fathers organize to demand fairer treatment. So get it together dads: You have a legitimate legal beef and you need to make this a public issue. Right now the courts don't hear you."'

The Title IX Juggernaut

Matt · 29 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Major miscarriages of justice often stem from unsound judicial and administrative procedures. Consider the story of Grant Neal, a student on an athletic scholarship at Colorado State University-Pueblo. Neal was suspended for sexual assault after he had consensual sexual intercourse with an unnamed woman. He has now filed suit to challenge that suspension, both against the CSU-Pueblo and the United States Department of Education and its Office for Civil Rights.

He should win, and for good reason. All legal actions begin with complaints, usually from a purported victim. But Neal's case was different. The charge was brought against him by a "peer" of the woman involved, who, according to the allegations in the complaint, denied that she had been raped. The purported victim told the school investigator: "He's a good guy. He's not a rapist, he's not a criminal, it's not even worth any of this hoopla." That should have put an end to the entire matter. Nonetheless, CSU-Pueblo has suspended Neal as long as his alleged victim remains on campus. The stigma of the sanction makes it impossible for him to transfer anywhere else. It is a classic case of defamation by public action, for which recourse is all too difficult to obtain.

The university's actions were heavily influenced by the Kafkaesque rules announced in the well-known and highly controversial Dear Colleague letter issued by the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) in 2011 (I have sharply criticized its procedures for dealing with cases of sexual harassment elsewhere). The letter uses shaky data to claim that sexual harassment is a serious problem on campus, and it insists that schools handle cases of it aggressively. But the OCR's guidance violates the fundamental tenets of due process that are urgently needed in a criminal or administrative enforcement proceeding, where state power is at its greatest. Due process guarantees are far older than our country, and they were put into place to check overweening executive power. The standard rules require at a minimum that people be given notice of the charges that they face, and an opportunity to defend themselves against those charges before a neutral tribunal. The OCR, however, advocates that a mere preponderance of evidence—rather than clear and convincing evidence—is all that is required to impose heavy sanctions on an alleged aggressor after a hearing. And during such hearings, cross-examination is discouraged.'

Father jailed for non-payment of support for kids he supports and lives with

Matt · 30 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'On Friday, April 29th, parents from across New Jersey will join together in Hackensack to show support and solidarity for Henry Peisch, a 56-year-old Bergen County Father of seven children. Henry Peisch has been incarcerated in the Bergen County Jail since April 8th for failure to pay court ordered child and spousal support.

A march for Henry will be held across from the Courthouse steps around the 'Green' on Court Street at 3:30pm. The march coincides with the Bergen Vicinage's celebration of Law Day.

What is most concerning about the case of Henry Peisch is that only one child currently lives with the Mother, yet Henry is ordered to pay his ex-wife support for four children plus $581 per week in spousal support.

Over the years that have passed since Henry was divorced, the court has one-by-one reversed its custody ruling - removing the children from the Mother and granting custody to Henry. The stories of how this came to pass are heart wrenching and the emotional toll that process has taken on the family immeasurable. The court, however, now has turned a blind eye and is seeking only to enforce an outdated order that fails to reflect the reality this family faces.'

Hillary: I handle men who "get off the reservation"

mens_issues · 30 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Hillary Clinton has managed to make a statement that's not only misandrist, but offensive to Native Americans. Excerpt:

'Did Hillary just admit that her husband, former President Bill Clinton, has been a bit of a handful, considering his extracurricular activities with other women, and given her “a lot of experience” dealing with male misbehavior?

“Remember, I have a lot of experience dealing with men who sometimes get off the reservation in the way they behave and how they speak,” Clinton told CNN’s Jack Tapper Friday.

Her eyebrow-raising comments came during an interview discussing GOP front-runner Donald Trump attacking her as “Corrupt Hillary.”

...

As for men in Hillary’s life going off the reservation, WND has reported extensively on Bill Clinton’s sexual exploits through the years and how the couple even threatened women to stay silent about alleged sexual assaults at the hands of her husband.'

Native Americans have already reacted to Hillary's offensive use of words.

Out of Control

Matt · 30 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, the California Court of Appeals ruled against the University of Southern California in a lawsuit brought by a student suspended for allegedly sexually assaulting a woman during group sex.

The encounter had started as consensual, the woman told the university, but soon became violent. The accused student violated Southern California's sexual misconduct policy, the university argued, not by harming the woman himself, but by failing to stop the other men from slapping her and for later leaving her alone with them.

The accused student, according to the court's decision, was not "provided any information about the factual basis of the charges against him," was not able to examine the evidence supporting the victim's statements and was not allowed to appear before the panel deciding his case.

The case joins three other legal wins for accused students in the past two months, and at least 10 in the last year. Some legal experts, including the federal and state judges deciding the cases, say the flurry of recent successes for disciplined students may show how some colleges and universities are eliminating "basic procedural protections" in an attempt to combat campus sexual assault.

"In over 20 years of reviewing higher education law cases, I've never seen such a string of legal setbacks for universities, both public and private, in student conduct cases." Gary Pavela, editor of the the Association of Student Conduct Administration's Law and Policy's Report and former president of the International Center for Academic Integrity, said. "Something is going seriously wrong. These precedents are unprecedented."'

Former college basketball star sues over investigation

Matt · 30 April 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Former ISU basketball player and 2014 graduate Bubu Palo, who faced rape allegations while in college, is suing Iowa State and the Iowa Board of Regents for what he says was a mishandling of his case.

Iowa State or the Iowa Board of Regents hadn't filed a response to the petition, which was filed March 21, as of Wednesday.

Palo is claiming that ISU officials found him guilty despite insufficient evidence and used the disciplinary system to not give Palo the chance to transfer to another school, according to a petition obtained from the Story County District Court.

Palo also claims in the suit that the wrongful ruling handed down by the university "destroyed" his opportunity to play professional basketball because he was suspended and later benched during his junior and senior years, according to the petition.'

The Dr. Jekyll To Mr. Hyde Transformation Of Title IX

Matt · 1 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Title IX has now become a “juggernaut” in the words of NYU law professor and Forbes contributor Richard Epstein. He explains in this Hoover Institution article that extremely zealous bureaucrats have abused the law (specifically, the Administrative Procedure Act) to impose their own ideas of what the language “be subjected to discrimination” means. They have managed to turn it into a justification for federal intervention into every aspect of college life that somehow involves sex.

Epstein highlights the case of Colorado State – Pueblo student Grant Neal, who was suspended by the school after a consensual sexual relationship. The woman who was supposedly victimized by him actually decries the case and says “He’s a good guy.” But she isn’t the one who made the complaint. Another woman did. Despite the weakness of the case against Neal, the school decided to punish him anyway because, Epstein points out, that’s the way to avoid trouble with the aggressive federal bureaucrats in the Education Department’s Office for Civil Rights (OCR).'

Title IX order on campus ‘harassment’ violates rights, free speech advocates say

Mastodon · 2 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Several free speech advocacy groups are concerned about a Justice Department order that they say forces colleges and universities to violate the First Amendment.

Justice sent a letter to the University of New Mexico in late April concluding an investigation into the school’s sex discrimination policies and practices. In the letter, the agency said the university’s policies failed to account for “unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature,” including “verbal conduct,” in violation of Title IX.

According to the letter, federal law defines sexual harassment as “unwelcome conduct of a sexual nature includ[ing] unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, and other verbal, nonverbal, or physical conduct of a sexual nature, such as sexual assault or acts of sexual violence.”'

Conference debates occurrence of sexual assault on campus

Mastodon · 2 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some statistics say sexual assault is so common on college campuses that one in four women become victims. That's a number that those at UT's sexual assault conference are debating.

“We are trying to put those statistics in some context. A lot of what is being called sexual assault is not necessarily rape as traditionally defined. Much of this includes things like an unwanted kiss or unwanted touching or definitions of sexual assault that really do not in any way meet the legal definition,” said UT Professor Thomas Hubbard.
...
“A lot of these are resulting in procedures that are very unfair to the accused and we've heard of a number of cases where universities have in turn been sued by male students who were expelled based on investigations that were deeply flawed or failed to take into account key evidence,” said Hubbard.'

Debunking the Wage Gap: We Are Not Victims

Matt · 2 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For women, this has been particularly difficult because of the claim that we are underpaid compared with men and the notion that we have to work twice as hard to get to a level playing field. The ubiquitous statistic that women earn 77 cents for every dollar men earn is a compelling story that points to systemic discrimination against women.

The problem is that it's untrue. In reality, in our 20s women are paid better than men—by 8 cents on the dollar. And overall, 72 percent of women say they have about the same opportunities to advance to top executive and professional positions in their companies as men. We are now as likely as men to be company managers.
...
Overall, the insistence on a wage gap and on widespread discrimination against women is sometimes used by feminists to perpetuate the notion that patriarchy prevents us from attaining career success and equity with men. Victim bating is politically profitable for feminists, but it simply doesn't hold up. While choices we make about motherhood, work hours, and industry sectors may hinder our corporate-track momentum or stall our wages for a period of time, they are also opening up avenues to a work-life balance that is manageable and allows us to flourish.'

Prediction: No commencement speaker will mention this – the huge ‘gender college degree gap’ favoring women

Matt · 2 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now that we’re at the beginning of college graduation season, I thought it would be a good time to show the updated chart above of the huge college degree gap by gender for the upcoming College Class of 2016 (data here). Based on Department of Education estimates, women will earn a disproportionate share of college degrees at every level of higher education in 2016 for the eleventh straight year. Overall, women in the Class of 2016 will earn 139 college degrees at all levels for every 100 men, and there will be a 610,000 college degree gap in favor of women for this year’s college graduates (2.195 million total degrees for women vs. 1.585 million total degrees for men). By level of degree, women will earn: a) 154 associate’s degrees for every 100 men (female majority in every year since 1978), b) 135 bachelor’s degrees for every 100 men (female majority since 1982), 139 master’s degrees for every 100 men (female majority since 1987) and 106 doctoral degrees for every 100 men (female majority since 2006).

Over the next decade, the gender disparity for college degrees is expected to increase according to Department of Education forecasts, so that by 2025, women will earn 147 college degrees for every 100 degrees earned by men, with especially huge gender imbalances in favor of women for associate’s degrees (170 women for every 100 men) and master’s degrees (145 women for every 100 men).'

Bloomberg Booed For Blasting ‘Safe Spaces’ During College Commencement Speech

Mastodon · 2 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former New York City Mayor Michael Bloomberg may not have been terribly popular in his hometown back when he was touting the importance of a soda ban, but now he has taken his act on the road.

The one time possible Presidential contender gave a commencement address this weekend to the University of Michigan and was faced with boos and jeers from the audience at the frail suggestion that so-called college “safe spaces” are a bad idea. In his address, Bloomberg blasted the PC culture on many campuses, telling the crowd, “Keeping an open mind to new ideas is essential to your professional success — just as it’s crucial to our collective future as a democratic society.”

...

While some in the Ann Arbor crowd supported the former Mayor’s assertions, many can be heard booing loudly at the suggestions for broad-mindedness and receptivity to contrary ideas. Bloomberg said at one point, “We are witnessing a disturbing change in the nature of American politics: a rise in extreme partisanship and intolerance for other views.”'

Trump is Right: Hillary Really is Playing the ‘Woman Card’

Mastodon · 2 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I won’t spend too much time laying out all the times Clinton and her campaign have implied or stated outright that people should vote for her because she was a woman, because a) there are waaaaay too many examples, and b) I already did that when Bernie Sanders supporter Killer Mike laid similar charges at her door. Here’s just the instance I consider the most egregious, an Clinton ad entitled “44 Boys Is Too Many” (https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=-GzGAW7k2V8)

There’s nothing sly about this. There’s no dog whistle or subtext. The Clinton campaign cut an ad that explicitly tells people they should vote for her because she’s a woman, and otherwise little girls would cry.

If Clinton’s appeal to her gender had been isolated to eyeroll-inducing pandering, it would be merely irritating. But she also doesn’t shy away from appealing to her gender to shut down serious questions about her qualifications. Here’s an attack from Sanders in the last MSNBC debate, and Clinton’s response.

> SANDERS: …Secretary Clinton has the support of far more governors, mayors, members of the House. She has the entire establishment or almost the entire establishment behind her. That’s a fact. I don’t deny it…
>
> So, Rachel, yes, Secretary Clinton does represent the establishment. I represent, I hope, ordinary Americans, and by the way, who are not all that enamored with the establishment, but I am very proud to have people like Keith Ellison and Raul Grijalva in the House, the co-chairmen of the House Progressive Caucus.
>
> CLINTON: Well, look, I’ve got to just jump in here because, honestly, Senator Sanders is the only person who I think would characterize me, a woman running to be the first woman president, as exemplifying the establishment. And I’ve got to tell you that it is… (APPLAUSE) It is really quite amusing to me.'

Students Warned: Police Only Exist To Protect White Male Privilege

Mastodon · 2 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A poster campaign at Missouri State University sought to privilege-shame students for being straight, white, male, Christian or able-bodied (among other characteristics) and informed students that the police only exist to protect white men.

The posters were sponsored by the university's student government and Residence Hall Association (RHA) and reportedly went up inside a dorm Saturday morning before being removed on Sunday night in the face of backlash from students on Twitter. The Daily Caller obtained pictures of six of the posters from an MSU student before they were taken down.

Each poster included an example of "privilege" above the phrase "Check your privilege" and a checklist of different categories of privilege, including: Christian privilege, class privilege, white privilege, male privilege, able-bodied privilege, cisgender privilege and heterosexual privilege.

Each poster also included a definition of privilege in the lower right-hand corner: "unearned access to social power based on membership in a dominant social group."

"If you're confident that the police exist to protect you, you have white male privilege," one poster read. Beneath it, "white" and "male" were both checked off in the list of privileges.'

New ‘Mattress Girl’ Lawsuit: Obscene Drawing of Cleared Man ‘Displayed on Campus’

Mastodon · 2 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While Columbia University’s “mattress girl” Emma Sulkowicz—who carried a mattress on campus to protest the non-expulsion of her alleged rapist—is long past her fifteen minutes of fame, the story isn’t over. Now it’s the turn of the accused man, Paul Nungesser, who is pursuing a lawsuit against Columbia.

He claims that, despite being exonerated, his academic experience was ruined because the university enabled Sulkowicz’s protest, effectively denying him equal educational opportunity on the basis of sex. Last month, a federal court dismissed the suit for lack of sufficient evidence. But last Monday, the case was back with an amended complaint which seeks to demonstrate that Nungesser was indeed a victim of anti-male bias—and paints a stark picture of the harassment he says he endured due to Sulkowicz’s campaign.

The lawsuit makes some claims that are likely to invite feminist derision and raise eyebrows in the legal community—for instance, that calling a (presumptively) innocent man a rapist is a “gendered slur,” since the term is almost exclusively directed at males and evokes the stereotype of male sexual brutishness. It’s a radical argument. But if it works, it could be a trailblazing victory for male students suing colleges—most unsuccessfully, so far—over being expelled on what they say are wrongful charges of sexual misconduct.'

Prime Minister Justin Trudeau tells men not to interrupt women

Mastodon · 2 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Prime Minister Justin Trudeau continues his crusade in raising the equality bar.

On Saturday, he met the four millennial men behind Generation Y Not for an interview on feminism, and specifically how men can be more effective at it.

As part of it, Trudeau was asked to answer, in 10 seconds or less, what advice he would give men to become better feminists.

"There's lots of things you can do to be a better feminist as a man but here's a simple one: don't interrupt women, and notice every time women get interrupted in conversation," the PM said in a Snapchat video.

...

Trudeau introduced a gender-balanced cabinet last year, and has stated he would prefer there was actually no response to the fact that he's a feminist.

"I'm going to keep saying loud and clearly that I am a feminist until it is met with a shrug," he said during a discussion on gender equality at the United Nations in New York last month.'

Lawsuit Takes Aim at Education Dept.’s Title IX Guidance

Matt · 2 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A student at Colorado State University at Pueblo sued the university and the federal government this week, contending that he had been suspended indefinitely for a sexual act that he says both he and his partner considered consensual.

Grant Neal, a sophomore who was attending Colorado State on football and wrestling scholarships, was found responsible for sexual misconduct in a case with an unusual twist: the accuser was a third party who didn’t witness the alleged assault but who believed the act was coerced.

Mr. Neal joins the growing list of accused rapists who are suing their colleges. His case, however, is among the first to also take on the U.S. Department of Education’s Office for Civil Rights over the guidance it has issued to colleges on how they should handle sexual-assault complaints.'

Ed. note: This story is paywalled. But if you have a sub, share it around. Sounds like it's too important to not mention.

Justice Dept. wants universities to police and prohibit sexualized speech that anyone objects to

Matt · 2 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Justice Department is telling universities that they have the obligation to investigate and prevent even individual instances of:

1. saying “unwelcome” “sexual or dirty jokes”
2. spreading “unwelcome” “sexual rumors” (without any limitation to false rumors)
3. engaging in “unwelcome” “circulating or showing e-mails of Web sites of a sexual nature”
4. engaging in “unwelcome” “display[] or distributi[on of] sexually explicit drawings, pictures, or written materials”
5. making “unwelcome” sexual invitations, and likely
6. making sexist statements that some listeners or readers find “unwelcome.”

This is not limited to material that a reasonable person would find offensive. Nor is limited to material that, put together, creates a “hostile, abusive, or offensive educational environment.” (I think even speech codes that would have these requirements are unconstitutional, but the speech codes that the government is urging would in any event not have these requirements.) Every instance of such speech of a “sexual nature,” under the government’s approach, would be “sexual harassment,” and would have to be investigated when a complaint is filed, and prevented for the future. And the same logic, if accepted, will likewise extend to racially themed speech that some people find offensive, plus probably also anti-gay speech and the like.'

Student sues over long suspension but no charges in sexual encounter

Mastodon · 3 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A University of St. Thomas student was not charged in a sexual encounter with a fellow freshman in her dorm room, but the private Catholic school, after its own investigation, suspended him for more than a year.

Now the student is suing.

The suit, filed Friday in U.S. District Court in St. Paul, alleges that the male student was subjected to "a rigged and unfair disciplinary process put in place to reach a predetermined result … in violation of both state and federal law."

The school denies the allegations and says it adheres to a different standard of evidence than in a criminal prosecution. In a statement issued Monday, St. Thomas said it is legally required to investigate sexual harassment and assault claims made by students, and emphasized that its investigations are "thorough and impartial."'

"This is not a police state. It's a university"

Mastodon · 3 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In recent years, the Department of Education (DOE) has chosen to send several "dear colleague" letters to all universities in the United States whereby it has presumed to progressively redefine Title IX to include three troubling new directives under the auspices of the 1972 law.

The first directive sets forth the "transgender accommodation" mandate. It specifies that any male student who declares himself to be female must now be given full access to all female facilities and programs.

The second directive specifies how colleges must investigate and adjudicate allegations of sexual harassment or sexual assault. It actually requires a process that often circumvents local law enforcement and its corresponding constitutional protections of all involved parties.

A third directive, defines any unwelcome "verbal conduct of a sexual nature" as "sexual harassment." It, thus, requires a university to investigate and discipline student speech in a manner deemed acceptable to the DOE. Failure to measure up to any of these directives could result in a university being cited as "out of compliance" and, therefore, subject to Title IX penalties.
...
Oklahoma Wesleyan will not comply with any mandate that compromises the privacy of a woman's locker room, bathroom and shower. We will not deny our students their right to due process when they are accused of a crime or when they suffer as its victim. Finally, we will not accept the arrogance of any state official trying to tell us what we can and cannot think or say on our campus or in our classrooms.

The DOE's overreach in these matters is about as unconstitutional and anti-liberal as you can get. This is a university, my land. It is not a police state or a kangaroo court.

Everett Piper is president of Oklahoma Wesleyan University.'

Five Ways Feminism Has Made Women Miserable

Mastodon · 3 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MIA: Men. Feminism told them we didn't need them. Then we were told to emulate them. On top of it all, we've emasculated them, and now men are fighting back… quietly. American society has become increasingly anti-male. Men are sensing the backlash and are consciously and unconsciously going 'on strike.' Breitbart has dubbed this "equal but separate misery" between the sexes a "sexodus" where men are giving up on women altogether and stepping back from society. Statistics are showing that men are increasingly choosing not to get married, and I can see why. With the rise of technology men can outsource everything women were traditionally known for to their iPhone apps. If they're hungry they can use seamless, if they're horny they can use Tinder. The only thing they still need us for? Babies.

"My generation of boys is f*cked," one man commented. "Marriage is dead. Divorce means you are screwed for life. Women have given up on monogamy, which makes them uninteresting to us for any serious relationship or raising a family." Maureen Dowd once famously asked, "Are men necessary?" Now it's the men asking that about women—and, more importantly, about commitment. This isn't political, this is critical. It's time for both genders admit we need each other, start treating each other with respect and concede that we're equal, but equal doesn't mean the same and embrace the differences in our wiring.'

Foreign student expelled and deported — for kissing another student

Matt · 3 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'South African native Bongani Radebe came to America with the dream to be the first person in his family to get an education in the U.S.

...

But a few months into his U.S. education at Edmonds Community College outside of Seattle, Wash., Radebe learned the hard way that American college students are not only sensitive, but that college men have few rights and receive no benefit of the doubt when accused of sexual assault.

Radebe met his eventual accuser — a 17-year-old high school student in a program that allowed her to earn college credits — at a bus stop near campus. Two weeks later he invited her to his dorm room after the two had exchanged texts. She came over and the two talked for awhile. Radebe claims he asked her to come to him and she did. He said he held her hand and complimented her eyes. He says she thanked him. Radebe says he asked if he could kiss her.

The woman would then accuse him of sexual assault. She told police, according to Radebe's account of the police report, that she consented to the kiss, but she told college administrators that he forcibly kissed her, pushed her to the bed and tried to undress her.

...

When the woman reported their encounter to school officials, Radebe was removed from his dorm and placed in a hotel. Five days later he was informed that he was in violation of the anti-gender discrimination statute known as Title IX and could appeal. Radebe's appeal was denied and he was suspended for three years. This meant his visa would be revoked, essentially expelling him from the school and causing him to be deported back to South Africa, where he had to tell his family what he had done to lead to such an extreme situation.'

"Ineffective" sexual harassment training's cure: zero-tolerance, presumed guilt, and affirmative action

Matt · 3 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Yes indeed. OK, sexual harassment training has the opposite effect on MEN (always and only men), or so they say, so the fix is to come down HARD on any man accused of it and aggressively advance women to higher positions. Predictable. Excerpt:

'Sexual harassment courses aimed at preventing workplace discrimination can have the opposite effect, making men less capable of perceiving inappropriate behavior and more likely to blame victims, according to academic studies that cast doubt on traditional training programs.

One researcher who has questioned the effectiveness of harassment prevention classes is Lauren Edelman, a professor of law and sociology at the University of California Berkeley, the prestigious school that has been at the center of a series of high-profile faculty misconduct scandals in recent months.

“Sexual harassment training may, in fact, make it less likely that males will recognize situations that are harassing,” said Edelman, a faculty member in the renowned UC Berkeley law school, where Sujit Choudhry resigned as dean after he was found to have sexually harassed his executive assistant. “Sexual harassment training may provoke backlash in males.”

...

The questionable research makes clear that universities should not only study the effectiveness of training, but should also prioritize other mechanisms to promote prevention, professors said.

“The university should focus more on having a much clearer zero-tolerance policy with very clear sanctions that are very consistently carried out,” said Edelman.

Tinkler said the best way to combat workplace sexual harassment is to reduce gender inequality and promote women in leadership positions.

“It really requires changing workplaces that have gender inequality structured into the way that they are organized,” she said.'

Fifty Shades of Red Tape: When Bureaucrats Regulate Your Sex Life

Matt · 4 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Remember when liberals used to say, “Just keep the government out of the bedroom?” Who would’ve thought those were the good ol’ days? Out-of-control government bureaucrats are regulating more and more as they strangle the freedom out of every aspect of life.

Now, liberals are teaming up with two of their favorite groups – bureaucrats and trial lawyers – to try to pass regulations that could make every single one of us a rapist in the eyes of the law.

That’s right – the regulations are now coming to bedrooms across America. In just a few weeks, the American Law Institute – an organization of lawyers who lobby federal, state, and local governments to pass their model laws – will vote on whether to make “affirmative consent” laws a part of the model penal code.

So what are “affirmative consent” laws? These laws require you to explicitly ask and receive clear consent before engaging in every step of sexual activity. Thus far, they’ve only been passed in coastal states and only apply to college students. But the American Law Institute is dangerously flirting with the idea that these laws should apply to everyone, everywhere.'

Hurricane Mizzou – Enrollment Plummets, Jobs Cut, Buildings Shutter

Matt · 4 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It all started when a feminist prof (who was eventually fired for it) decided that a man didn't have the right to report on a protest. She sought to have him forcibly removed from the protest because he was taking pictures. One thing led to another. Such are the wages of sin, as it were. Excerpt:

'After raucous protests last fall, the University of Missouri has “a dark cloud hanging over the institution—we can’t sugarcoat that,” vice chancellor of operations Gary Ward told faculty this week.

The university’s grave outlook became clearer Monday, as the data rolled in on freshman enrollment for the Fall 2016 semester, showing steep declines.

Compared to last year, 1,470 fewer students had paid their $300 enrollment fees by the May 1 deadline—and with cancellations rolling in over the weekend, the numbers may be even more grim, the local TV station KMIZ reports. That’s a drop of about 25% from last year’s freshman class of about 6,200.

Mizzou also reported a three-year low in grad-school applications, down 1,140 from two years ago. The number of new students shrunk even as the university has embarked on an aggressive effort to drum up interest in the school, using text messages and Skype and deploying more out-of-state recruiters.
....
The steep dropoff in enrollment appears to directly traceable to the events of last fall. During October and November, the university found itself in the national spotlight after reports emerged of several racist incidents on campus. Protests erupted, forcing the cancellation of classes. In solidarity with a graduate student who went on a hunger strike, the university’s football team refused to play until the demands of one organization, #ConcernedStudent1950, were met. As the protests raged, a video went viral portraying one of the university’s communications professors, Melissa Click, calling for “muscle” against a student journalist covering the controversy.'

The men America has left behind

Mastodon · 4 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nearly one-quarter of white men with only a high school diploma aren't working. Many of these men, age 25 to 64, aren't just unemployed ... they aren't even looking for a job, according to federal data.

Their college-educated peers, however, have fared much better. Only about one in 10 isn't working.

The plight of these blue collar workers is now in the national spotlight. The 2016 presidential election has awakened their political power and reshaped the course of the campaign.'

White Men Should Stop Running For Office, Colorado Group Says

Mastodon · 4 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new political action committee has one question for straight white men with political aspirations.

"Dude, can you not?"

It's a question embedded in the name of the organization. The Can You Not PAC plans to discourage straight white men from running for office in Colorado's diverse districts. The hope is that will clear the lane from female, minority and LGBTQ candidates.

Democratic activists Jack Teter and Kyle Huelsman registered the organization last month. So far they've raised $120 from six donations.

...

But some progressive activists aren't laughing.

"I always take the approach that it would be better to be pro- something rather than anti-something," says Halisi Vinson, president of Colorado Black Women For Political Action. "It appears they are taking a negative approach and that's never the way to create a movement."

Huelsman admitted they've gotten pushback from white males who are eyeing a future in politics. But he called that a "positive first step" of starting conversations about privilege.'

Due Process 101 As Taught by Uncle Sam

Mastodon · 4 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The principle that every person in the United States is entitled by right to “due process of law,” is so firmly embedded in the legal and cultural fabric of our society, that it hardly bears reminding. Yet, if you happen to be a male student at any college or university that receives federal funds, and an allegation of sexual misconduct has been levelled against you, you quickly realize that “due process” is a luxury you no longer enjoy.

Thanks to the Obama Administration’s effort to institutionalize political correctness throughout our nation’s education system, “due process” for male college students has been redefined out of the college curriculum. Now, according to Due Process 101 as taught by the United States Department of Education, male college students are no longer “innocent until proven guilty”; they are simply “guilty if accused,” and “due process” is a one-way street favoring the accuser not the accused.'

The basics: Bill shifting consent standard in campus sex assaults wins final passage

Mastodon · 5 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The state Senate gave final passage Monday to a bill that establishes an affirmative-consent threshold in cases of sexual assault on all college and university campuses in Connecticut. The bill now heads to Gov. Dannel P. Malloy's desk. If he signs it, Connecticut would be the fourth state to adopt such a standard.

...

When adjudicating complaints of sexual assault among college students, determining whether there was consent is crucial.

Too often, proponents of the legislation say, victims are asked, "What did you do to say 'no'?" instead of asking the accused perpetrator, "How do you know the act was consensual?"

Essentially, the burden shifts from the accuser having to prove an assault took place and to the accused having to explain how they knew they had permission for a sexual encounter.

...

Flexer said the legislation is about changing the mentality of college students. "We are teaching college students that you need to ask permission before you have sex with someone," she said.

Sen. Joe Markley, the lone vote against the bill in the state Senate, said it oversteps.

"I've never seen a policy that gets government more in the bedroom," Markley, R-Southington, said on the Senate floor before the vote.

The consent standard will be limited to discipline on college campuses – such as expulsion or suspension – and will not be the standard for criminal prosecutions.'

War on College Men: Fraternity Supports Women – Feminists Freak Out

Mastodon · 6 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Northwestern University fraternities thought they were doing the right and noble thing, hanging banners off the sides of their houses reminding students that it was Sex Assault Awareness Month.

But not only was the move not enough to satisfy campus social justice warriors, some SJWs forced the fraternities to issue a blanket apology for their effort, because their signs might have “triggered” some students.
...
But apparently, simply recognizing sexual violence as a problem and informing your fellow students about the dangers of campus sexual assault—something campus feminists have been exhorting (and, in some ways, extorting) their fellow college students to do ad nauseum —is not enough to silence the clamoring harpy hordes.

Campus feminists published an op-ed, chastising the fraternities for their lack of self awareness in daring to address a “rampant” problem head on, and calling the banners nothing more than a “cruel reminder” that fraternities are cesspools of male privilege and impropriety. Activists even gave interviews to Northwestern’s student newspaper. “To display a banner [saying] that ‘We support survivors’ is really something you have to earn by actually walking the walk,” one student told the Daily Northwestern.'

False rape charge: Court orders woman’s prosecution

Matt · 6 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Accused of rape, 26-year-old Ravi found himself among the category of accused held guilty by society till proven innocent. To make the matters worse for him, the Rewari district resident had to remain in the custody during the period of trial.

Coming to his rescue, a Rewari court has not only acquitted him of the charges but also ordered prosecution of the woman complainant. The judgment, expected to act as a deterrent against false rape cases, was pronounced by Rewari Additional Sessions Judge Phalit Sharma.

Taking up the matter, the Judge asserted the court was convinced that the prosecution had told a bundle of lies to the police and the court. It warranted her prosecution in accordance with law for letting the police to prosecute accused Ravi on wrong facts and false deposition before the court.

Ravi was booked for rape, criminal intimidation and other offences after an FIR was registered in February last year at Rampura police station in Rewari.'

Harvard president to ban members of single-sex groups from campus leadership in 2017

Matt · 7 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. So, the groups in question aren't barred from existing at Harvard. And yet, members thereof are to be institutionally discriminated against because they are merely members of them? This is what happens when you let SJWs and feminists push you around. Excerpt:

'Students who join Harvard's male-only social clubs won't be able to serve as sports captains or leaders of other campus groups starting in fall 2017.

The new policy, announced Friday by Harvard's first female president, also applies to other unofficial single-gender groups on campus, including fraternities and sororities. Top officials at the university have been pushing those groups to stop excluding students based on gender even though they aren't officially recognized by the school.

Harvard President Drew Faust said in a statement that while the school has opened its doors to women and minorities, the campus culture has lagged behind.

"A truly inclusive community requires that students have the opportunity to participate in the life of the campus free from exclusion on arbitrary grounds," Faust said.

Under the new policy, students who join single-gender groups will also be prohibited from getting the dean's endorsement for scholarships. The rule will apply to all new students starting with the freshman class entering in the fall of 2017. It won't affect the 10,000 undergraduates already on campus or those coming this fall.'

State imposes misleading ‘affirmative consent’ requirement on campus sex, equating consensual sex with rape

Matt · 7 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“If you’re a college student in Connecticut and want to have consensual sex, you might want to leave the state to do it,” reports The College Fix. The state’s left-leaning “legislature approved an ‘affirmative consent’ bill Wednesday night that now goes to Democratic Gov. Dannel Malloy, a proponent of the idea that sex is rape if one partner does not get the other partner’s repeated and mutually-agreed upon consent throughout the act.” All Democrats voted in favor of the bill; only a handful of Republicans like Senator Joe Markley voted against it, citing its meddling in college students’ consensual sex lives. As we’ve previously explained, “affirmative consent” bills misleadingly define consent so narrowly as to brand many welcome, mutually enjoyed consensual encounters as “sexual assault.”'

A Confession of Liberal Intolerance

Matt · 7 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'WE progressives believe in diversity, and we want women, blacks, Latinos, gays and Muslims at the table — er, so long as they aren't conservatives.

Universities are the bedrock of progressive values, but the one kind of diversity that universities disregard is ideological and religious. We're fine with people who don't look like us, as long as they think like us.
...
"Outside of academia I faced more problems as a black," he told me. "But inside academia I face more problems as a Christian, and it is not even close."

I've been thinking about this because on Facebook recently I wondered aloud whether universities stigmatize conservatives and undermine intellectual diversity. The scornful reaction from my fellow liberals proved the point.
...
Jonathan Haidt, a centrist social psychologist at New York University, cites data suggesting that the share of conservatives in academia has plunged, and he has started a website, Heterodox Academy, to champion ideological diversity on campuses.

"Universities are unlike other institutions in that they absolutely require that people challenge each other so that the truth can emerge from limited, biased, flawed individuals," he says. "If they lose intellectual diversity, or if they develop norms of 'safety' that trump challenge, they die. And this is what has been happening since the 1990s."

Should universities offer affirmative action for conservatives and evangelicals? I don't think so, partly because surveys find that conservative scholars themselves oppose the idea. But it's important to have a frank discussion on campuses about ideological diversity. To me, this seems a liberal blind spot.'

Australia: Teacher warns men not to join the profession after two-year investigation

Mastodon · 7 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'A TEACHER of 35 years experience has warned young men against joining the profession after enduring an investigation into an alleged incident with a student that lasted close to two years and left him mentally scarred.

The southern suburbs man has detailed the isolating and humiliating “farce” he was put through when investigated by the Education Department, which has revealed it finalised 80 disciplinary matters involving teachers and other staff last year.

“It goes from zero to psycho in an instant,” the teacher said of the investigation into whether he inappropriately touched a student, which he estimated would have cost taxpayers $250,000.

“I am so pissed off because of the indignity of what I had to go through.

“It must cost (the department) millions each year chasing frivolous or vexatious complaints that should be at least attempted to be resolved at the local level.

“I would discourage any young guy from going into teaching.”'

Men accused of sex crimes striking back at colleges

Mastodon · 7 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After years of complaints that they weren't taking sexual assault reports seriously, colleges are finally doing so, and finding themselves slammed with lawsuits from men who say they were unfairly suspended or otherwise punished.

The schools are feeling caught in the middle.

"We're trying to walk the razor's edge between being more attentive to the issue but still being fair to all our students," said Dana Scaduto, general counsel at Dickinson College in Carlisle, Pennsylvania, who has testified before Congress on the issue.

At least 75 men have sued their schools since 2013, complaining largely of reverse discrimination and unfair disciplinary proceedings. Most were never charged with a crime because the accuser didn't go to police, or authorities decided there wasn't enough evidence.'

How feminism attacks masculinity

Mastodon · 7 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism today seeks to promote gender equality by eradicating these practices and doing away with traditional gender. In reality, there is little work to be done in terms of gender equality. However, with the angst of feminism still pulsing through society's bloodstream, and no further work to be done, feminism has set its sights on masculinity — a reminder of the past oppression of women in America. When feminists talk about eliminating societal gender roles, what they're really talking about is eliminating the presence of masculinity.

This sentiment is clear when participating in a conversation about gender and consequently feminism. I, as a woman, can engage in these conversations freely. On the other hand, I've witnessed my male counterparts attempting to participate in these conversations countless times, only to have their point completely invalidated with the slick, P.C. phrase, "Says the straight male." Notice how someone with an alternate sexuality would not face the same criticism. That's because it's not men that new age feminists oppose, it's the masculinity.

It's the very existence of masculinity that is perceived as a threat to gender equality. By keeping the masculine voice boxed out of the conversation surrounding gender, women control the gender narrative and maintain their place in society. The consequence of this is that there is really no other group that is marginalized and invalidated more acceptably than the straight (often white) male.

The idea that feminism is used to help men is total crap. Feminism today not only attempts to silence masculinity, but to eradicate it's role in society. This is due to a sense of insecurity women feel in terms of their new place in the world. Historically, our country has been a patriarchy run by masculinity. That's an intimidating concept considering the fact that women have only recently reached a role equal with men in society. However, we can still have these traditional cultural practices and include the male perspective without inequality. The existence of masculinity is not an inherent threat to the advancement of women. We need to be able to appreciate the progress women have made and release insecurity of losing it.'

More details on the wage gap fiction

Matt · 7 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The recruitment consultancy Robert Half decided to get some early PR out of International Women's Day this Tuesday. It published an analysis of salary rates in the UK for men and women concluding that women will earn £298,064 ($422,267) less than men over their lifetimes, a gender pay gap of 24%.

The press release has already been written up by the Evening Standard, The Guardian, and here at Business Insider.

The problem with this statistic is that ... it's rubbish.

The gender pay gap in the UK is just 9.4% and getting smaller every year, according to the Office for National Statistics, which does an annual survey of men's and women's wage rates specifically to monitor discriminatory pay.

And yet, the media persistently reports that women earn 20% or 30% less than men. The BBC made this exact claim as recently as February.

...

The obvious trend in the chart is that once you hit your 30s, men start getting paid more. "From 40 upwards, the gap is much wider, with men being paid substantially more on average than women," the ONS says. The main reason: "This is likely to be connected with the fact that women who have children often take time out of the labour market."

It's not just that having kids hurts your earnings in later life, either. It's the work you choose to do, the ONS says. "It should be noted that the figures do not show differences in rates of pay for comparable jobs, as they are affected by factors such as the proportion of men and women in different occupations. For example, a higher proportion of women work in occupations such as administration and caring, that tend to offer lower salaries."

The overall point here is that yes, men do earn more than women. A lot more: Men get an average of £567 a week in Britain compared with £471 for women. That is, actually, a 20% pay gap. But men get that extra money because they don't work part time as much, because they work more overtime, because they don't take time off to have children, and because they tend not to work lower-paid jobs as much as women do.'

Harvard already hit with petition campaign to dump its new rules against single-sex clubs

Matt · 8 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harvard has awoken a tiger with its new rules that ban fraternities, sororities and “final clubs” from leading athletic teams, holding leadership positions and even getting endorsements for top fellowships.

The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education has started a petition campaign against Harvard’s “blacklist” of students in single-sex organizations, asking President Drew Faust to “restore freedom of association” for Harvard students:

"All of these organizations have been independent of Harvard since 1984, operate as off-campus entities, and do not receive any recognition or benefit from the university.

Harvard’s stunning attack on its students’ right to freedom of association directly undermines its core values, categorically denying students important benefits and opportunities on the sole basis of their maintaining officially disfavored private associations."

FIRE also said it is “preparing a formal response.”'

Georgia Lawmaker Sues DOE to Guard Rights of College Students Accused of Sexual Assault

Mastodon · 9 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Georgia Rep. Earl Ehrhart has challenged the Obama administration's orders on how to handle allegations of sexual assault on college campuses for the same reason he threatened to stop Georgia Tech's state funding over the school's policy on investigating allegations of student wrongdoing.

"Even third graders know you're innocent until proven guilty" is how the longest-serving Republican in the Georgia State House explained his legal theory to the College Fix.

Ehrhart and his wife have filed suit against the U.S. Department of Education and the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights on behalf of Virginia Ehrhart's son, who is a student at Georgia Tech.

Ehrhart said he and his wife are afraid her son, and other male students, could be hurt by what he described as an unconstitutional policy on the investigation of alleged campus sex crimes.

The Ehrharts' suit calls out the DOE's "Dear Colleague" letters that Ehrhart said could result in male college students being "wrongly accused and found responsible" of sexual misconduct.'

UK: Judge rules in favor of students accused of rape

Mastodon · 9 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A senior judge has today agreed four students falsely accused of gang rape can pursue £221,000 costs as he criticised police for 'cherry-picking' evidence to help the complainant.

Judge Jamie Tabor QC told Gloucester Crown Court that Detective Constable Ben Lewis, who is still on active duty, got too close to the woman and did not understand his job properly.

Thady Duff, Leo Mahon and Patrick Foster, all 22, and James Martin, 20, were arrested after a group sex session at a summer ball at the Royal Agricultural University in Cirencester.

The case against the students fell apart before trial after it emerged the woman, who cannot be named, had given 'different accounts' as a witness in another rape case.

Texts she sent on the night were not revealed and the court heard there were suggestions she had previously shown an interest in group sex.'

Woman draws suspended 10-year sentence for "sex" with 15-YO boy

Matt · 9 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kaylyn Huval is a 28-year-old middle school teacher who found herself in some major hot water when she was accused of having sex with one of her students.

The Louisiana teacher admitted it in court, pleading guilty to one count of carnal knowledge of a juvenile.

Huval was sentenced to 10 years in prison for having sex with a 15-year-old student.

The judge, however, suspended that sentence.

Guess how long she'll actually be spending behind bars?

She won't be spending any time in jail.'

Why men won't marry you

Matt · 9 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What exactly does marriage offer men today? “Men know there’s a good chance they’ll lose their friends, their respect, their space, their sex life, their money and — if it all goes wrong — their family,” says Helen Smith, Ph.D., author of "Men on Strike." “They don’t want to enter into a legal contract with someone who could effectively take half their savings, pension and property when the honeymoon period is over.Men aren’t wimping out by staying unmarried or being commitment phobes. They’re being smart.”

Unlike women, men lose all power after they say “I do.” Their masculinity dies, too.

What’s left of it, that is. In the span of just a few decades, America has demoted men from respected providers and protectors of the family to superfluous buffoons. Today’s sitcoms and commercials routinely paint a portrait of the idiot husband whose wife is smarter and more capable than he.

There was a time when wives respected their husbands. There was a time when wives took care of their husbands as they expected their husbands to take care of them.

Or perhaps therein lies the rub. If women no longer expect or even want men to “take care of” them — since women can do everything men can do and better, thank you very much, feminism — perhaps the flipside is the assumption that women don’t need to take care of husbands, either. And if no one’s taking care of anyone, why the hell marry?'

CBO: Nearly 1 in 6 young men in jail or jobless

Matt · 9 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nearly one in six young men (between the ages of 18-34) in the U.S. were either jobless or incarcerated in 2014, according to a new government report. It details a striking amount of male alienation that has been on the rise since the 1980s.

According to the Congressional Budget Office (CBO), out of the 38 million young men in the U.S. in 2014, 16 percent were jobless (5 million or 13 percent) or incarcerated (1 million or 3 percent). The share of young men without a job or in prison has increased substantially since 1980, when just 11 percent of young men fit into either category.

CBO highlights that the level of joblessness and incarceration varies based on young men's educational attainment. The less they have, the more likely they are to be jobless or incarcerated. The rates also varied among racial and ethnic groups. In 2014 young black men were about twice as likely to be jobless or incarcerated than white or Hispanic young men were. The disparity was largely due, however, to higher rates of incarceration among young black men.

Economic, policy, and skill-set changes contributed to the the large increase in joblessness and incarceration from 1980 to 2014, CBO said.

On the economic side in particular, CBO pointed to the recent recession, technological advances, more women entering the workforce and such debate-inspiring issues as outsourcing and low-skilled immigration.'

Woman Arrested For In-Flight Molestation

Matt · 9 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. And airlines are afraid to seat single men next to women and children. Maybe nobody should be allowed to sit next to anyone. Ever. Excerpt:

'An Oregon woman flying home last night from Las Vegas allegedly molested another female passenger, according to police who arrested the suspect on a sex abuse charge.

Cops allege that Heidi McKinney, 26, was en route to Portland when she touched the breasts and genitals of a woman who told investigators that the alleged contact was not consensual.

McKinney and the victim were traveling on an Alaska Airlines flight that arrived late Sunday in Portland. Alerted by airline personnel, police met the aircraft upon landing and took McKinney into custody after interviewing the other passenger.'

Male student files gender discrimination suit against Stanford

Mastodon · 10 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The male student accused of sexually assaulting Leah Francis ’14 two years ago has filed two separate suits against the University, claiming gender discrimination under Title IX during the review process that led to his suspension. The student, who has elected to remain unnamed, is filing the case as John Doe.

The assault of Francis was the first sexual assault case in three years at Stanford to lead to disciplinary action when it occurred in 2014.

This case was the center point of the “Stand with Leah” movement, which demanded that Stanford change its sexual assault policies and provide more support for victims of assault, as well as harsher punishments for those found guilty of sexual assault.
...
Doe is pursuing damages in the federal case on the basis that he was unfairly discriminated against because he was a male student and the University wished to appear tough on sexual assault.

Doe’s suit alleges a multitude of problems with the University’s handling of the case and how it reached its conclusions. These include issues during the review process and during the appeals process, when Vice Provost of Student Affairs Greg Boardman’s office both decided against Doe and increased the sanctions against him.'

Men Charged Almost Double for Concert

Mastodon · 10 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Scottish music star Calvin Harris is selling tickets for his new concert at the Omnia in Las Vegas, but if you're a man, you're in for some bad news — you have to pay $75 for a standard ticket, whereas women only have to pay $40.

No one knows yet whether Harris is trying to fix the mythical feminist "wage gap" by slapping men with a higher fee (a common tactic at feminist bake sales), or whether he's going for the old nightclub-owner's trick of letting the women in for free to make his show seem cooler.

Of course, surely a smart marketer would claim to be doing the former to disguise the fact that he's doing the latter.

Harris' mysterious pricing policy has already got commentators talking. The Daily Telegraph straightforwardly accuses the singer of being sexist and points out that the practice of charging men and women different prices for the same product has been banned in a number of US states.

New York magazine's Jessica Roy is more confused, but is convinced gender politics is involved somehow. That's accurate, but precisely how is, at this point, anyone's guess.'

"Harvard wants secretive male clubs to go co-ed. All-female groups are being punished in their wake."

Mastodon · 10 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While the recommendations appear to condemn the exclusivity for which all-male final clubs are known, the new guidelines also apply to fraternities, sororities and the more recently formed five all-female final clubs — none of which are recognized by the university.

The unexpected consequence of the penalties, then, is to prevent women from associating under their gender as well, prompting all-female groups to ask the administration to consider them in a different vein from their all-male counterparts.

“Basking in the praise of the national press for its efforts to make all-male final clubs go co-ed, Harvard has left out an important piece of the story: female final clubs,” three female students wrote in an op-ed for the Harvard Crimson.

They argued that while women would remain disenfranchised within the hierarchies of historically male clubs, the act of making historically female clubs go co-ed would effectively cause them to “die out,” as they lack the resources to compete.'

Donald Trump: “All of the men, we’re petrified to speak to women anymore”

Mastodon · 10 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"If [Clinton] didn't play the women's card, she would have no chance, I mean zero, of winning," Trump said. "She's playing the women's card. She's going — " [here Trump's voice drips with sarcasm] "'Did you hear that Donald Trump raised his voice while speaking to a woman?' Oh, I'm sorry!"

And then: "I mean. All of the men, we're petrified to speak to women anymore. We may raise our voice. You know what? The women get it better than we do, folks. They get it better than we do. If she didn't play that card, she has nothing."

Women in the audience started cheering at this.

Trump's "women get it better than we do" line could mean two things. It could mean that he thinks women have an easier lot in life than men — partly because men now have to be constantly "petrified" of being labeled sexists.'

Students who falsely reported racial attack, bragged about "beating up a boy" expelled

Matt · 10 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Expelled, is that all? Evidence of race- and gender-based motivation for violence and they were only expelled? Excerpt:

'In a rare act, a university has expelled students who allegedly perpetrated a race hoax that brought negative attention to the school.

Two women who were involved in the alleged hoax have been expelled from the State University of New York at Albany, while a third student was suspended for two years. The disciplinary action comes after the students were arrested and charged with 10 misdemeanor charges, including assault and false reporting.

The three women — who are black — accused a bus full of white people of attacking them and using racial slurs. After police investigated the incident, it was determined that the three accusers were not the victims but in fact the aggressors.

Audio and video collected from the attack showed one of the accusers throwing the first punch and another using a racial slur while white bus riders tried to break up the fight. When one of the accusers called 911 after the fight to report a race-based crime, she bragged about "beat[ing] up a boy."'

India: Dowry harassment case: Retired armyman pleads for mercy killing

Matt · 10 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A retired army man on Tuesday submitted a petition to the President of India seeking mercy killing, apparently annoyed at the slow progress of justice after being "falsely implicated" by his son's in-laws in a dowry case.

A distressed Ramnath Das, who was employed with the mechanical wing of the Electronic Mechanical Engineering Corp of the Army, appealed to Pranab Mukherjee to ensure early justice to him or permit him to end the life willingly. "The agony of this dowry case has troubled my family to such an extent that in the last two years most of the members of the family have gone into depression and are ailing from various psychological problems," the letter addressed to the President reads.

A resident of Gadra in Pursudih, Das said his 30-year-old son Praveen, who is employed with Navi Mumbai-based JSW Ispat Ltd , had married Vibha of Kasidih on November 23, 2010. "From the early days of the marriage, her (the daughter-in-laws') family has been pressuring Parveen to stay with them, much to the opposition of my son," the 57-year-old said which, according to him, prompted the woman's family members to plot schemes to harass them.'

University Recommends ‘Safe Zone Training’ To Prepare For Milo Event

Mastodon · 11 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Posters for an upcoming event featuring Breitbart Tech editor Milo Yiannopoulos at The University of California, Irvine, have prompted the university to encourage students to attend “Safe Zone training.”

The posters in questions were peppered with provocative quotes from previous speeches by Yiannopoulos in order to promote his speech. Members of the campus chapter of Young Americans for Liberty (YAL) and the College Republicans were responsible for placing the posters around the campus, and as such received considerable backlash from classmates via social media along with harsh words from the university itself.
...
Whilst the university did not call for the event to be shut down, Dr Douglas Haynes, the UCI Vice Provost for Academic Equity, Diversity, and Inclusion, sent an email to the campus community on Monday night, denouncing the language used in the posters as “offensive”, and recommending that students participate in “Safe Zone training”, to ensure they become an “ally” to the LGBT community, as Haynes declared himself to be.

“Homophobia—as well as other forms of bias—contradicts our campus’ enduring commitment to inclusive excellence,” Haynes wrote. The posters were “all the more distressing” because “it occurred a day after the … Equity Games,” an annual event dedicated to “learning about and appreciating the richness of our campus diversity, including the [LGBTQ] community.”'

These High School Kids Created An Awesome Prom Photo. Then The Left Stepped In.

Mastodon · 11 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of adorable high school boys wore superhero t-shirts under their tuxes on prom night, matching their date's dress. A photo was taken of the girls smiling back at the camera as they open their date's vests to reveal the superhero logo on their t-shirts. The sweet photo that no one could possibly be offended by--or so one would think--was posted to Twitter.

Then a social justice war-waging Leftist came in to suck the fun right out of the awesome prom photo by railing against its "sexist" undertones and comparing it to a lynching done by the KKK.
...
Apparently, young high school boys and girls consensually posing for a cute superhero-themed prom picture is abundantly sexist. If only Superman or Batman were in a dress, then modernity would have won and sexism would have been defeated. Damn archaic gender roles!

The video game designer further explained the blatant sexism: "The men as heroes, the women as subservient. Not a single female hero. The men serious/in thought, the women only all smiles," he complained.'

The End of Men (In Literature)

Mastodon · 11 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The undergraduate course "Men in Literature" was taught eight times from 2005 to 2015 at Springfield College in Massachusetts. It drew healthy enrollments and was reviewed favorably by a large majority of the students who took it. In 2010, the course was formally approved by the college curriculum committee as an addition to the offerings of the humanities department.

But in fall 2013, trouble began—not yet for "Men in Literature," but for the man who devised and taught it, tenured English professor and South African expatriate Dennis Gouws. He had become interested in the emerging field of "men's studies," and had helped to found a Springfield College men's group. The group created a Facebook page that irritated some campus feminists. Gouws had gone further by replying to the proliferation of feminist anti-rape posters on his colleagues' office doors. He put on his own office door flyers that presented statistics on rape that contradicted the widespread claim that one in five women are raped during their undergraduate years. His materials were torn down by a departmental colleague, and later, his door was vandalized.

Gouws was called to a meeting by Springfield's director of human resources and subjected to a harangue by a group of college officials. At the meeting one of the college officials complained that the posters created a "hostile environment," and the dean of his college called the organizations that had produced the flyer "a hate group." Thus began Springfield College's campaign to suppress Professor Gouws's freedom of expression on the topic of how men are treated in contemporary higher education.'

The Problem With Sheryl Sandberg's Ivory Tower Feminism

Mastodon · 11 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's nothing more insufferable than an ivory tower feminist who insists on forcing the world into a box — her box. Facebook COO-turned social justice warrior Sheryl Sandberg is on a mission. Sandberg made clear her feminist agenda several years ago, when she announced this to a group of college graduates (and later reiterated in her Lean In campaign): "A truly equal world would be one where women ran half our countries and companies and men ran half our homes."

A lofty goal, indeed — one that demands a complete restructuring of the way America operates. And so began Sandberg's true occupation (because clearly, running Facebook isn't it): to upend human nature and to change the world, one campaign at a time.

To begin, she insists that girls who are bossy — as Sandberg says she once was (and hello, still is) — are misunderstood. Parents and teachers should encourage these girls' obnoxious behavior because curbing it will stifle their leadership spirit and keep them from being successful like Sandberg. Hence, Sandberg, in her infinite wisdom, began a campaign to ban the word "bossy."

That wasn't enough, though. Sandberg then went on to insist that America has a "toddler-wage gap," what with the gender-stereotyped manner in which we parents raise our kids. It seems parents are part of the reason there's a pay differential between women and men. How so? We're teaching our boys to take out the trash and teaching our girls to set the table. And since the former takes longer than the latter, parents are sending a message to boys that they don't have to work as hard as girls do on the home front. Clearly, this leads to women dropping out of the workforce later in life to tend to matters at home.

Which is a problem, since home is the last place feminists want women to be. Women should be out running the world instead because, clearly, men suck at it.'

Wife Battered Husband Over Candy, Flowers

Matt · 11 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Incensed that her husband got her “the wrong flowers and candy” for Mother’s Day, a Florida woman allegedly pummeled her spouse, according to cops who arrested her for domestic battery.

Investigators allege that Virginia Stewart, 42, attacked her spouse during an argument early Sunday in their family’s Holmes Beach residence. Cops arrived at the house in response to a 911 hangup call.

As detailed in a probable cause affidavit, Stewart quarreled with her husband about “the victim getting her the wrong flowers and candy for Mother’s Day.”

After Stewart “did throw cups around the room and break them,” she allegedly attacked her spouse, punching him several times while also striking the man in the head with a coat hanger.'

ACLU: The Federal Government Is Investigating Sexism Against Directors in Hollywood

Mastodon · 11 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two federal government agencies have launched an investigation into discrimination against female directors in Hollywood, the American Civil Liberties Union announced Wednesday. The news comes a year after the civil rights organization requested that the government look into hiring practices at studios.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and the Office of Federal Contract Compliance Programs have been working on a wide-ranging investigation, according Melissa Goodman, a lawyer with the ACLU. The investigation was prompted by an ACLU report after the organization conducted its own two-year audit into discriminatory practices. The ACLU collected testimonials from over 50 female directors who reported sexist practices like studio-compiled “short lists” of potential directors that were almost exclusively male. In October, the Los Angeles Times reported that several female directors received surveys from the EEOC regarding gender discrimination in Hollywood.'

Hundreds of Harvard Women Protest to Keep Same-Sex Clubs

Mastodon · 11 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than two hundred members of the Crimson Women's Coalition demonstrated in Harvard Yard on Monday against a new policy that bans undergraduates from joining same-sex organizations like fraternities, sororities and especially elite "final clubs."

The rally, called "Hear Her Harvard," was organized by women, primarily students, who feel that the university's new policy will destroy social spaces that women have created for mutual support on campus.
...
Dean Rakesh Khurana, who has been responsible for much of the politically-correct upheaval at Harvard — including the end of the term "master" for faculty members supervising undergraduate dormitories, lest the term evoke slavery — called same-sex clubs "rife with power imbalances."'

At Harvard, All-Female Groups Claim Collateral Damage in Crackdown on Final Clubs

Mastodon · 11 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The university released a report in March saying that final clubs "have a disproportionate influence on campus culture — and, more importantly, one that is in many respects negative and helps perpetuate an environment where sexual assault occurs." Since then, the university has faced intense pressure to do something about the groups.

The report takes aim at "a strong sense of sexual entitlement" in the male clubs but also zeroes in on the apparent effect of that on the female clubs. According to the report, female seniors who are members of final clubs are much more likely to have been sexually assaulted than female seniors not in the clubs.

To current and former members of female clubs, targeting their groups along with the male ones seemed excessive.

Morgan Arenson, a 2006 Harvard graduate and graduate board member of the Sablière Society, an all-female final club, said she first thought that since her group did not share the problems of men's final clubs — like a misogynistic culture and sexual assaults — any policy changes wouldn't affect it.'

Feminists Want Harvard’s All-Male Clubs Punished—But Not All-Women’s Clubs

Mastodon · 11 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With campus feminists, you simply can’t win.

Last week, Harvard announced that they were cracking down on “privilege” within their student community by banning members of single-gender organizations from holding school leadership positions.

But when Harvard announced its new policy, it stressed that the sanctions applied to both male and female single-gender organizations equally, since both male and female single-gender organizations thrived on their “privilege.”

Harvard’s resident feminists claim that all-female organizations, while just as gender-biased, are beneficial to the school’s community, whereas all-male organizations are merely breeding grounds for the present and future perpetrators of sexual crime.

On Monday, they demonstrated, accusing Harvard of, among other things, perpetuating the marginalization of female voices. “My women’s organization has been more than a social organization,” one student told the Boston Globe. “It has been a mental health respite, a place to discuss sexual assaults . . . where I became a feminist, and where I refound my voice.”'

A rift at the American Law Institute

Matt · 12 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A large group of member of the American Law Institute have written a letter in opposition to an upcoming vote that would vastly expand the definition of sexual assault in the legal system.

The letter, signed by nearly 120 members, including lawyers, judges and law professors, highlights several concerns regarding a draft model penal code that ALI members will vote to adopt on May 17. I previously wrote about issues with the draft, but was assured by an ALI member that many of my concerns have been addressed in the current version.

The ALI members who signed this letter have copies of the draft that will be voted on this month, and it turns out there are still dangerous issues that have not been addressed that will turn every sexually active American into a criminal overnight.

For starters, the draft has rebranded the "affirmative consent" standard previously criticized as "communicated willingness." Whatever you want to call it, it requires each person involved in sexual activity to essentially treat sex like a question-and-answer session, with each party asking question after question and receiving a clear reply before escalating the activity. This is not how sex works, and the signers of the opposition letter write that such language creates a starting presumption that sex is a crime.'

Stop complaining about wearing heels at work

GaryB · 13 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

This article appeared in Australia today, after a story yesterday. A woman was sent home from work because she refused to wear high heels to her temp job, as per the dress code she'd agreed to. That story raised the ire of many and was widely criticised with the woman receiving lots of support. From today's opinion piece:

'WHEN I read the story about Nicola Thorp being sent home on her first day at PricewaterhouseCoopers, all because she refused to wear high heels for her job as a receptionist, a familiar feeling came over me.

Anger and annoyance, but not in the way you might think — I'm a man.

Women's attire in the workplace can be a hot topic when it comes to gender discrimination discussions. This often leaves women feeling angry and upset, typically at men, for what they "have to go through". However, I couldn't disagree more.

Men have always been held to a higher standard when it comes to workplace attire. I remember reading the 44 page dress code for bank employees at UBS, the Swiss Bank. Men with a thin jawline should have Single Windsor tie knots, while guys with wider jaws should use a double.

Just two years ago, I would wear my suit on the train from north west Sydney to the CBD and home each day. The walk from the station on hot days would leave me sweaty and uncomfortable by the time I got to the office. When I arrived, I had to choose between keeping the coat off and letting everyone see me perspire through my shirt, or leave the jacket on to keep up appearances and turn myself into a walking sauna.

Even my first job, I was required to wear both a tie and have a clean shaven face. This often led to my tight collar rubbing against my freshly shaven, sensitive skin and leaving a big patch of red irritated skin. How professional.

Men have the same issues as women when it comes to workplace attire — if not worse. Nothing is more fun than being looked down upon when you forget to wear a tie, only to have a woman in the office walk past in a bright pink skirt.'

Nice work!

Senate Panel Calls for Women to Sign up for Military Draft

Mastodon · 13 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The GOP-led Senate Armed Services Committee has seconded a call by its counterpart in the House to require women to register for a military draft, setting the stage for a significant cultural change triggered by the Pentagon's decision to lift all gender-based restrictions on front-line combat units.

Any justification for barring women from draft registration was erased last year when the Pentagon announced all military jobs would be open to women, the committee said late Thursday in a summary of its annual defense policy bill. Women must begin to sign up with the Selective Service beginning in January 2018, according to the committee's measure.

The committee added that the top officers in each of the military branches also expressed their support for including women in a potential draft during testimony before Congress.'

"Harvard Heard Women, Alright"

Mastodon · 13 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Harvard administration's recent decision to sanction unrecognized single-gender social organizations—including sororities and women's final clubs—is not the result of Harvard somehow not listening to women.

It is the result of the Harvard administration after decades—after centuries—finally hearing feminist critique.

For generations, Harvard feminists and activists have advocated for the sanctioning or disbanding of final clubs. Now that we have it, new debates on gender and inclusiveness have come to the fore.

This debate recently took to the streets—or the Yard, where around 200 students, mostly women, protested the recent decision under the banner #hearherharvard. These women claim that sororities and female final clubs are spaces of female empowerment, and that pressuring them to go co-ed along with their male counterparts will exacerbate the problems of sexism the administration is trying to combat.

To many of us who have long been part of the struggle against clubs, these arguments are wrong-headed, to say the least, and at worst blatantly reactionary. Let's walk through a couple of them to come to a deeper understanding of gender and of what it means to create inclusive spaces. I'm confident that when we do, we'll find that this decision can only improve women's and marginalized people's experiences on campus.'

Susan Rice: U.S. Security Agencies Have Too Many White Males

Mastodon · 13 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During the commencement address for Florida International University, Obama national security advisor Susan Rice said that there were not enough minorities in high-ranking positions and too many elite white men.

“Minorities still make up less than 20 percent of our senior diplomats, less than 15 percent of senior military officers and senior intelligence officials,” Rice said according to prepared remarks released by the White House. ” Too often, our national security workforce has been what former Florida Senator Bob Graham called ‘white, male, and Yale.’”'

Federal Reserve is too ‘white and male’, say Democrats

Mastodon · 13 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'More than a hundred Democratic party lawmakers have written to Federal Reserve chair Janet Yellen complaining of a lack of diversity within the central bank system and a leadership that is “overwhelmingly and disproportionately white and male”.

The letter, signed by 11 senators and 116 representatives, calls on the Fed to do more to ensure its senior ranks reflect the country’s make-up in terms of gender, race and ethnicity, economic background and occupation. It also demands that the Fed place greater priority on securing full employment for minorities as it pursues its economic goals.'

Male Teachers Claim Wage Discrimination

Mastodon · 13 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Nine male teachers are suing their Pennsylvania school district, claiming they're victims of an unfair and gendered pay scale that favors their female counterparts.

The federal lawsuit, filed on May 2, alleges that the Moon Area School District, located about 13 miles northwest of Pittsburgh, failed to comply with the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, the Equal Pay Act of 1963, and Section 1 of the Civil Rights Act of 1871.

The plaintiffs have accused the school district of hiring female teachers at higher pay levels while also giving them more credit for their prior teaching experience. The men claim their prior teaching experiences were not recognized at the same salary level.
...
According to the civil complaint, all nine plaintiffs appear to have transferred from outside districts, where they worked for a varying number of years.

"We do not discriminate against anybody for any reason," Testa said. "We categorically deny any sort of discrimination as a district and we will defend the lawsuit vigorously."'

UK: Rise of women teachers 'turning boys off education' as report reveals girls born this year will be 75% more likely to go to university

Mastodon · 13 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An admissions tsar has claimed a fall in boys going to university is due to the rise of female teachers in Britain's schools.

The 'dominance' of women taking classes is contributing to male students ending their academic careers early, says Ucas chief Mary Curnock Cook.

Ms Curnock Cook made the controversial comments in the foreword of a study that says girls are 75 per cent more likely to go on to university.
Currently there are 455,000 teachers at state schools across the country and 74 per cent are women.'

A Challenge to Clinton: Show More Than Your ‘Woman Card’

Mastodon · 14 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So here’s my challenge to Hillary Clinton: Give one speech; one, single speech without mentioning you’re a woman, or that you’re running to be the first female president. This challenge also forbids taking a non-women’s issue, like criminal justice reform, and turning it into a women’s issue because that’s really the only thing you know how to do.
...
Mr. Trump also pointed out something that shows some of the privilege women in America have. He said men are now “petrified” to speak to women. This is becoming increasingly true, as the “woman’s card” gives one the right to call anyone a sexist for saying anything they find objectionable.

Men are becoming afraid to open doors for women for fear of being called a sexist, male employers are afraid to close the door when speaking to female employees for fear of being accused of harassment, and god forbid a man say “good morning” to a woman on the street…

The problem is especially bad on college campuses, where normal human interaction is being redefined as sexual assault or harassment just because a woman decides later she didn’t like it. That’s the kind of fear and frustration Mr. Trump is channeling when he talks about men being “petrified” to speak to women.'

Due process is still being kicked off campus

Matt · 14 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Academia's descent into perpetual hysteria and incipient tyranny is partly fueled by the fiction that 1 in 5 college students is sexually assaulted and that campuses require minute federal supervision to cure this. Encouraged by the government's misuse of discredited social science (one survey supposedly proving this 1-in-5 fiction), colleges and universities are implementing unconstitutional procedures mandated by the government.

The 2006 Duke lacrosse rape case fit the narrative about campuses permeated by a "rape culture." Except there was no rape. In 2014, the University of Virginia was convulsed by a magazine's lurid report of a rape that buttressed the narrative that fraternities foment the sexual predation supposedly pandemic in "male supremacist" America. Except there was no rape. Now, Colorado State University at Pueblo has punished the supposed rapist of a woman who says she was not raped.
...
Title IX of the Education Amendments enacted in 1972 merely says no person at an institution receiving federal funds shall be subjected to discrimination on the basis of sex. From this the government has concocted a right to micromanage schools' disciplinary procedures, mandating obvious violations of due process.
...
Although a "dear colleague" letter is supposedly a mere "guidance document," it employs the word "must" in effectively mandating policies. While purporting to just "interpret" Title IX, these letters shred constitutional guarantees. And the letters evade the legal requirement that such significant rulemaking must be subject to comment hearings open to a properly notified public. Even were CSU Pueblo inclined to resist such dictates — academic administrators nowadays are frequently supine when challenged — it would risk a costly investigation and the potential loss of the 11 percent of its budget that comes from Washington.'

India: Woman fakes gang rape to extract seven lakh

Matt · 15 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here.

'An FIR filed by a woman against five persons, including her husband and brothers-in-law, for holding her hostage and repeatedly raping her, was proved false during investigation. Police said she had cooked up the entire story to extract Rs 7 lakh* from those named in the complaint.

The woman in question was found allegedly in an unconscious state with her clothes askew on NH-24 in Bareilly's Fatehganj (west) on June 12 at around 5 am. In her complaint, she claimed that her in-laws physically assaulted her over dowry and hence, she left their home and filed a case in December 2013. But, she had to withdraw it after her in-laws started threatening her. On March 21, her in-laws kidnapped her on her way to the market by dragging her into a car. She told police that they held her after her kidnapping, she was held hostage and repeatedly gang-raped her.

However, probe exposed that the woman was staying in Moradabad with her sister's boyfriend, Lalit Tiwari, and also working in a beauty parlour, during the time she claimed her in-laws held her captive. On June 11, her mother made injury marks on her body using bangles. "The woman's sister, a friend Chandani and Tiwari dropped her at NH-24 early in the morning and went back to Moradabad. The woman consumed sleeping pills," said Sudhir Pal Dhama, SHO, Fatehganj (west). Medical reports also ruled out rape.

"We have arrested Tiwari who has confessed. The woman had faked her gang rape to extract Rs 7 lakh which her in-laws had denied her after she filed the dowry case. We would take action against them for faking the case," said Dhama.'

---
* about €10,000

Ten Male "Privileges"

Matt · 15 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. A must-see and highly bookmark-able and share-able.

SAVE E-lert: Law Profs Tell OCR To Stop Breaking the Law

Matt · 16 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Experts in the law across the country have joined together.

Leading law professors have released a group letter, telling the Office for Civil Rights in the Department of Education (OCR) to stop its hinderance of free speech and due process: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/Law-Professor-Open-Letter-May-16-2016.pdf

The group letter is believed to be the first time that professors from numerous law schools have publicly chastised the federal Office for Civil Rights.

Now is the time to join with them.

Contact Catherine Lhamon at Catherine.Lhamon@ed.gov - tell her to stop breaking the law.

Let's let OCR have a flood of push-back and get a response.

Thank you!

Gina Lauterio, Esq., Policy Program Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments
www.saveservices.org

Attorney's Tactic In Yale Sexual Misconduct Case Raises Questions

Mastodon · 17 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the eyes of Justin Dillon, a Washington, D.C., attorney who has handled campus misconduct cases nationwide, the case "perfectly captures the hysterical campus climate these days. Highly ambiguous situations are put through an incredibly one-sided process in which the accused are presumed guilty from the start, and the results are sadly predictable."

Stern is "doing what any good defense attorney with a high-profile case would do," Dillon said, "getting the counter-narrative out there to show there are very much two sides to this story. ... There is nothing to lose when your name is out there and everybody is assuming you are guilty. He has nowhere to go but up."

But Colby Bruno, who represents those filing complaints as a lawyer for the Victim Rights Law Center in Boston, said Stern's action is reflective of a pushback from those accused of sexual assault.

"Perpetrators are fighting back as a way to kind of punish survivors," Bruno said. "They are saying you were better off when you were silent because now I'm going to go out there and just give one side of the story."

For a lawyer to go public with confidential details of such a case is a breach of privacy, Bruno said, that reopens trauma for a victim and "significantly contributes to the unwillingness of victims to report."

Montague plans to file a lawsuit against Yale over his expulsion around the end of the month, a spokeswoman for Stern and the family said. Yale University has declined to comment about the case.'

Should men fight back?

mistermisogynist · 17 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

We are seeing a huge surge in female led domestic and non-domestic violence. Is it time we stopped conditioning our sons that's it's all right for just over half the world's population to physically batter them, and that we should feel too ashamed to even defend ourselves from sustained and unprovoked onslaught?

We really need to redefine what a 'real man' is and establish just how far we as males should go to physically protect ourselves from 'empowered women with stiletto heels'. These creatures are not as weak as they make out to be.

Did you know that Chris Brown was punished for smacking Rhianna after she had just violently attacked him with a 6 inch stiletto heel? Just something to ponder upon.

https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=z0IP0sS8Ew4

Qatar: No-go times and places against "unaccmpanied" men

Matt · 17 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Yes, a "male-dominated" Middle Eastern country (supposedly) is restricting when and where "unaccompanied men" can go in terms of even public places. Well, precedent exists. I wonder how much longer they'll put up with it? Just the kind of thing western feminists want to see here. Excerpt:

'So-called "bachelor bans" that bar lone men from entering malls and parks on certain days of the week and from living in residential neighborhoods are a common, often loosely-enforced, practice in the conservative Muslim Gulf.

Local authorities say the measure, enforced by businesses and municipalities, allows families and women who live in crowded and male-dominated cities space to enjoy public facilities.

But a recent ramping up of family-only rules in Qatar is excluding the country's vast South Asian workforce, mostly young men who live as temporary residents away from their families, and cutting them off from society, rights groups say.

"I wanted to visit the park but I was turned away," said Hader. "This says to me I am not welcome."'

The Line Between Professor and Predator Isn't Always So Clear

Matt · 17 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Before I completed my degree, he recommended me for a coveted position at The New Yorker, which I took, finishing my thesis by night. I told myself I'd landed the full-time gig because I'd aced their editorial test and hit it off with my fascinating female boss, who'd been there since World War II. But without my professor's referral, I may have landed next to my classmate as an assistant at Soap Opera Digest.
...
Wounded by my cold response, he took off, refusing to return my calls. He was mortified. While I'd put the brakes on a serious commitment, I hadn't meant to end everything. I was confused. If he saw me in our shared neighborhood, he'd rush to cross the street. I felt guilty and grief-stricken. Yet completely ghosting me — not even returning a phone call — seemed cruel. Wasn't he supposed to be the mature one? I'd never felt more alone or vulnerable. Breakups were bad enough, but I was afraid this split would exile me from my newfound colleagues and the literati crowd.
...
Now, after two decades in a happy union, I've learned I can be a feminist who loves men and marriage. This involves not lumping all men into the enemy camp, or labeling someone "sexist" or "predatory" just because they express desire.

In retrospect, my professor was not a Svengali seducing an innocent rube — or a skirt chaser abusing his position, like other infamous men in the news. I was never victimized. He was a gentleman who'd postponed our romance until I was no longer in his class. I'd been a consenting adult who'd actually initiated the relationship. I'd wanted him, went for him, got him — and his connections. When he'd pushed for more, I set the limits I needed to, and not all that gently. Then I published a book telling my side of the story.

Ultimately, he might have been more of a victim than I was.'

Due Process and Sex Assaults

Mastodon · 17 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Citing an erosion of free speech and due process on college campuses, a group of 21 law professors on Monday released an open letter alleging that the U.S. Department of Education has unlawfully expanded how colleges must define and respond to allegations of sexual assault and harassment.

The same argument has been made frequently in recent months by Republican lawmakers who say that the department's Office for Civil Rights illegally created new regulations through a series of documents instructing colleges how to handle cases of sexual misconduct. Monday's letter comes at a time when the department is also facing two lawsuits making the same claim. And a third lawsuit is on the way. The legal argument is an important one, because many colleges revised procedures based on the Education Department guidance -- sometimes saying that they had no choice but to do so.

"OCR needs to clarify which directives it considers to be guidance documents vs. regulations," the professors wrote. "Directives that are guidance documents need to be revised to eliminate provisions containing obligatory wording, unless these provisions are expressly supported by prior legislation or regulation. Directives that are deemed to be regulations need to be brought into compliance with requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act."'

Rape culture is not real

Mastodon · 17 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Rape Culture" is one of the biggest lies told by the modern feminist movement.

The idea that we live in a society that glorifies, accepts and celebrates rape is not only ridiculous, it is a lie.

I am not saying that rape does not happen, it does and it is awful.

What I am arguing in this article is that the idea of our society glorifying rape is false.

The word culture is defined as "The arts and other manifestations of human intellectual achievement regarded collectively," according to the English Oxford Dictionary.

The feminist ideas of rape culture do not fit the definition of what culture is.'

No, there is no such thing as ‘mansplaining’

Mastodon · 17 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. To jump the paywall, Google the third paragraph. Excerpt:

'ATTN has released a video explaining what “mansplaining”’ is, along with a call for men to stop talking over women.

The opening slide greets you with the sterling words of wisdom “Talking over women is not OK.”

It is unfortunate for the 9,870,000 people who have watched it to date that there is no such thing as “mansplaining”. The uncomfortable truism is that plenty of people talk over others. It’s called bad manners.

Plenty of people talk in a patronising fashion. The word you’re looking for is inconsiderate. There are a plethora of other words you could choose from if you flick through the existing dictionary such as insulting, ignorant or discourteous.

Neither good nor bad manners are gender exclusive and suggesting that this is the case certainly doesn’t inspire progress and integration.
...
For healthy debate to flourish and tackle the important issues facing society isn’t it correct that members of both sexes are represented? Don’t you lose half your support by making critical issues “the other side’s problem”? No man can freely express themselves if they speak in fear of being accused of mansplaining which is, I would suggest, as prevalent as femsplaining. In the real world however, the word for both is patronising. If you can’t handle someone impassioned of the opposite sex speaking to you, stay home.'

Facebook Exec Sheryl Sandberg’s Wacky 1991 Feminist Thesis

Mastodon · 18 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the thesis, Sandberg uses bizarre, discredited statistics and fashionable but shaky arguments about the “pervasive influence of the patriarchy” to explain domestic violence. The full thesis can be read below.

The Facebook COO appears to have wholly bought in to feminist pseudo-statistics, making the extraordinary claim that 95 percent of domestic violence victims are female. The true ratio of male to female domestic violence victims is now known to be far more even, with meta-analyses of over 200 studies showing a rough gender symmetry in domestic violence.

Sandberg can’t be excused by the date of publication (1991). By then, researchers had long been aware that men and women abused each other on a roughly equal basis. By 1988, this research had already been published in mainstream journals.

At one point in the thesis, Sandberg does acknowledges male victims, noting that she does “not mean to imply that men are not also subjected to acts of violence by their partner,” but later goes on to approvingly cite an argument from two academics – without evidence – that “by and large” most women who attacked men did so “to defend themselves.”'

Sheryl Sandberg's 1991 Harvard Thesis

U.S. House Drops Military Draft Requirement For Women

Mastodon · 18 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The House of Representatives stripped a requirement that women register for the military draft from a sweeping annual defense policy bill on Tuesday, but supporters of the provision said they would keep pushing for its passage.

Democrats accused the committee's Republican leaders of using an underhanded ploy to undercut the House Armed Services Committee, which had approved the amendment, and avoid what could be a difficult vote for some party members.

"They don't want to subject their members to a vote on equality for women," Representative Steny Hoyer, the No. 2 House Democrat, told reporters.

Republican Representative Mac Thornberry, chairman of the House Armed Services Committee, said the amendment was removed because it violated House budget rules due to the cost of registering women. He said it was replaced with an amendment calling for a broad review of the Selective Service.'

American Law Institute rejects affirmative consent standard in defining sexual assault

Mastodon · 18 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt'

'In a rebuke to a feminist idea that has migrated from college campuses to mainstream culture, an influential legal group overwhelmingly rejected Tuesday a provision that would have endorsed an “affirmative consent” standard for the purpose of defining sexual assault.

In a voice vote at the American Law Institute’s 93rd annual meeting at the Ritz-Carlton, Washington, D.C., the vast majority of an estimated 500-member crowd declined to amend the Model Penal Code to define sexual consent on an affirmative basis.

The MPC is a leading guide for state legislatures to follow when standardizing their penal codes. One of the items up for debate at the annual meeting was how to define “consent” in the context of sexual assault.

Standards of affirmative consent, which generally require parties to affirmatively and continually vocalize their willingness to participate in a sexual encounter, have mostly germinated on college campuses, as well as in a few states in some contexts, including California and New York.
...
A group of 120 members wrote a public letter denouncing the proposal, arguing affirmative consent improperly shifts the burden of proof onto the accused when charges of sexual assault are levied. By forcing the accused to prove the near-impossible — that a sexual encounter was vocally agreed upon at each stage — affirmative consent standards deny the accused due process rights, the letter said.'

Harvard Law profs challenge federal sex-assault ‘guidance’

Mastodon · 18 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A collection of prominent law school professors, including Harvard’s Alan Dershowitz, shot back at President Barack Obama’s Education Department over its practice of using “Dear Colleague” letters to lay down policy mandates that ride roughshod over Americans’ constitutional rights.

A letter from the educators dated Monday asserts that the department’s civil rights office “has unlawfully expanded the nature and scope of institutions’ responsibility to address sexual harassment” through its directives regarding Title IX, the 1972 law that bans discrimination on the basis of sex in providing access to education. Most people know of Title IX through its effects on women’s collegiate athletics, but it has been applied more recently to things like sexual assault and gender-based issues such as access to sex-segregated facilities.

The professors cite “guidance” issued in 1997 that put sexual harassment under the actions barred by the 1972 law, and say that since then the department “has steadily expanded the definition of sexual harassment and imposed a growing range of responsibilities on colleges to curb such conduct. As a result, free speech and due process on campus are now imperiled.”'

India: Court acquits dowry accused, highlighting plight of men in such cases

Matt · 18 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A sessions court acquitted accused Deeptanshu Shukla of all charges in an unusually lengthy order, running into 70 pages, with several adverse comments on his wife and her family.However, more surprisingly, Shukla, who is an IIT (Kanpur) topper, discovered that not only was he harassed, but his entire family was "wilfully disturbed" in a plan involving a senior Congressman, a member of his wife's family.

Days after an FIR was filed against Deeptanshu in November 2012, his father, a senior scientist with the Geological Survey of India (GSI), was transferred from Indore to Bhubaneswar, sans any explanation.
...
On May 6, 2016, an Indore Sessions Court acquitted him of all charges. Deeptanshu claims the police also acted in a biased manner.

"On the night of November 14, I was picked up from a private hospital where my mother had undergone a surgery and was in ICU. Then my residence, where my 70 year-old nana and nani (grandparents) were sleeping, was raided without any search warrant. They ransacked everything, from almirahs to cupboards."

Mail Today tried to get in touch with Deeptanshu's wife and her family repeatedly, but the contact numbers made available to us were all out of service.

The couple was married through a matrimonial website. Deepanshu says, "I used to stay abroad mostly. So my parents found her profile online and we didn't do much of a background search.

However, it is only after I was framed under Section 498A that I realized how dangerous such things can be."'

"As a Black Woman, I Think ‘White Male’ Bashing is Dangerous"

Matt · 19 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This phenomenon — white male bashing — seems to be on the rise. Forty years since the end of the civil rights movement, concepts of race and ethnicity have evolved, our attitudes have shifted: it’s no longer acceptable to make jokes about women, mental ability or fatness. No gay jokes, no black jokes. The only demographic that has escaped this trend — being the only “non-minority” group, and therefore de facto oppressor in Western society — and for whom it’s okay to spit on if you’d like is the straight, able white man.

Nowadays, we see countless examples of white folks (mostly male) being degraded on television and in commercials, or being told to “shut up” in online conversations simply because they’re white. The Daily Show host Trevor Noah has made it its credo: take a social issue, throw in a couple of knowing jabs at racial clichés, finish on a joke about white people. The whole thing often comes across as deliberate race-baiting. Recently, he even managed to take a story about Google’s robotics division and shoehorn the words “fuck white people, imma right?”'

Daily Caller News Foundation UVA Jackie May Have Just Been Caught In Another Big Lie

Matt · 20 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New evidence submitted in an ongoing lawsuit against Rolling Stone suggest that the legal team of Jackie Coakley, the University of Virginia (UVA) student responsible for a massive gang rape hoax, has been withholding evidence from an ongoing lawsuit. The withheld evidence offers strong evidence of what has long been suspected: That Coakley's infamous fake gang-rape was concocted as part of a convoluted catfishing scheme to win a boy's affection.

The new evidence is part of the ongoing defamation lawsuit filed by UVA dean Nicole Eramo against Rolling Stone magazine. While Eramo is not suing Coakley directly, she has played a major role in the case, as Eramo's lawyers argue Coakley is an egregious serial liar Rolling Stone should have known not to trust. As part of their suit, Eramo's attorneys have successfully subpoenaed Coakley for all the relevant communications she made during the fall of 2012, when her alleged rape supposedly occurred.'

UK YouGov poll: Only Two Percent Of Men Aged 18-24 Feel Masculine

Mastodon · 20 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Young men in Britain are reluctant to identify as “masculine” and think the term has “negative connotations”, a YouGov poll has revealed.

According to the survey, only two per cent of male respondents aged between 18 to 24 described themselves as “completely masculine”, compared to 56 per cent of over 65s.

The results come at a time when, despite the fact women vastly outnumber men at universities, feminists are demanding male students sign pledges to tackle “laddish” behaviour.

Wales Online last year reported on a campaign by police, councils and universities to “crack down” on behaviour deemed “laddish.” Feminist Vicky Chandler called for “lad culture” to be tackled in children as young as those in primary school.
...
Unlike with masculinity, there has not been a concerted campaign over the years to stigmatise femininity; it is unsurprising that responses to the concept were more positive.

Seventy-four per cent of Conservative voters said they felt positively about the concept of femininity compared to 76 per cent of Liberal Democrat voters, 64 per cent of Labour voters and 68 per cent of UKIP voters.'

Canada: Does elbowgate hysteria undermine feminism?

Mastodon · 20 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The memes have circulated social media, the hashtags have emerged, and the Internet has had its say.

But as the dust settles over the infamous 'elbowgate' incident — during which Prime Minister Justin Trudeau accidentally elbowed NDP MP Ruth Ellen Brosseau as he took Conservative Party whip Gordon Brown by the arm in the House of Commons on Wednesday — a very real political debate has emerged between Canada's three major parties.

The altercation was provoked by a government motion to limit debate on Bill C-14 on assisted dying. NDP MPs deliberately blocked Brown from moving forward to proceed with the vote, prompting an impatient Trudeau to walk across the aisle and guide the Tory through the gaggle of New Democrats that were trying to delay proceedings.

By the time the dust settled, NDP MP Niki Ashton characterized the elbowing as "the furthest thing from a feminist act," and reason for any woman who sits in the Commons to feel "unsafe and deeply troubled."'

Justin Trudeau Accidentally Elbows Female Politician, All Hell Breaks Loose

U of Melbourne mathematics school advertises women-only positions

Mastodon · 20 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Australian university will only accept applications from women for three senior, full-time positions currently advertised within its department of mathematics.

The job advertisement for roles in applied mathematics, pure mathematics and statistics at the University of Melbourne states: “The school is seeking to lift the representation of women and therefore will only consider applications from suitably qualified female candidates for these three positions.”

The head of the school of mathematics and statistics, Prof Aleks Owczarek, said it was the first time the university had taken such a step. But with only 9% of mathematics professors in Australia women, it was necessary, Owczarek added.'

Only 25% Believe There's A Political 'War on Women'

Mastodon · 20 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Many politicians and activists claim there is a political “war on women” in America today, but voters are even more convinced that isn't true.

A new Rasmussen Reports national telephone survey finds that just 25% of Likely U.S. Voters believe there is really a political “war on women.” Sixty-five percent (65%) think instead that it’s primarily a slogan used for political purposes. That's up from 59% when we first asked this question in September 2014.
...
The survey of 1,000 Likely Voters was conducted on May 17-18, 2016 by Rasmussen Reports. The margin of sampling error is +/- 3 percentage points with a 95% level of confidence. ...'

Holly Madison's Biggest Fear About Having A Son Brings Up An Important, Modern Question

Mastodon · 20 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to motherhood, it is natural for there to be certain fears associated with certain things. And while motherhood might not be so scary itself, the little details that go into it can be the worst part of all. For reality star and New York Times Best Seller Holly Madison, her fear is justified. And Holly Madison's biggest fear about having a son brings up a very important question.

...

Despite having a little more knowledge during her pregnancy, Madison does have one fear about the birth of her baby boy. What is that fear? In a recent interview with People Now, Madison said her biggest fear with a new son was circumcision. Yes, circumcision — which is a very justified fear.

"I tell my husband, 'You have to do it! You have to handle that!'"

But Holly's fear about having a boy is completely warranted. Circumcision is now a very important and modern issue for pregnant mothers nowadays, bringing up the question of whether or not it is necessary for a baby. Any Google search about circumcision will bring up multiple answers — that circumcision is both good and bad — and should be heavily researched before parents come to a conclusion.'

Mizzou Women's Softball Team Says Title IX Is Killing the Sport

Mastodon · 20 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The purpose of Title IX—the federal statute wreaking havoc on campus free expression and due process—is to ensure equality between male and female students. You would therefore expect female student-athletes to be grateful that the law protects their rights and guarantees them equal access to school resources.

But the University of Missouri women's softball team is currently staging a rebellion against the administration—because they think Title IX is destroying their sport.

The situation at Mizzou is complicated, and involves considerable ill will between some members of the softball team, other members, the coaching staff, and the university administration. But the gist of the problem is Title IX. Female athletes essentially claim that university administrators, citing Title IX, have forced the team to bring on under-qualified players. This has in turn reduced the amount of game time enjoyed by more skilled players.

Why is Title IX the culprit? Administrators don't want the federal government to accuse Mizzou of violating federal law, so they have to make sure the softball team is big enough. They don't want it to look like the school is giving more support to the boys' team than the girls' team.'

"Activists Combatting Sexual Assault Make Strides as Semester Concludes"

Mastodon · 20 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It has been three weeks since 19 women protesting sexual assault disrupted the April 29th Board of Trustees meeting. In the time since, significant progress has been made in resolving the three demands they posed at the meeting. These included the creation of additional positions to combat issues of sexual violence, and the cancellation of off-campus fraternity trips.

The group of activists are now working under the name the Vigilante Feminists. They have met with President Murray twice, spoken with Greek leaders, and have held open meetings with students to brainstorm ideas for a new Gender & Sexuality Coordinator position. Though the semester is winding down, Vigilante Feminist leaders are encouraged by the progress they have made.

“We've gotten President Murray's attention and we've established credibility,” said senior Katy Wills, who spearheaded the protest. “But we still have a long way to go.”'

Too many ‘dead white dudes’? Seattle U students protest program’s curriculum

Mastodon · 20 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For seven days and counting, dozens of Seattle University students have been holding a sit-in in the lobby of a university administrative building, demanding an overhaul of one of the university’s elite programs and the resignation of a college dean.

At issue, they say, is a classical curriculum that focuses on Western ideas and history, in part through the teachings of philosophers such as Plato and Aristotle.

...

In a letter to the university community this weekend, Seattle University President Stephen Sundborg said the students have raised serious issues, and that the university will address them.

“I cannot pretend to know how deep their pain goes, the amount of harm it has caused or the extent of our own shortcomings as educators and administrators,” wrote Sundborg.

Matteo Ricci’s dean, Jodi Kelly, has said she will do a comprehensive review of the college’s curricula, hire a consultant to assess the college’s culture and climate, and train faculty and staff in racial and cultural literacy.

But students say there’s only one thing that will end the sit-in: Kelly’s resignation.'

Dershowitz and Other Professors Decry ‘Pervasive and Severe Infringement’ of Student Rights

Matt · 21 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of law professors are accusing the civil rights office of the U.S. Education Department of taking “unlawful actions” that have led to “pervasive and severe infringements” of speech rights and due-process protections on college campuses.

An open letter signed by Harvard University professor Alan Dershowitz and 20 other legal scholars blasts a series of directives issued by the federal office to schools on dealing with sexual misconduct and harassment complaints from students.

The policies and procedures circulated in recent years are part of an Obama administration campaign to curb harassment at universities and combat a campus climate that it said too often treated victims unfairly. The professors say the government overreached. ...'

The Counter-Feminist Cyclopedia

Matt · 21 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Blog here. Very bookmarkable. Excerpt:

'We set out to write a dictionary of useful terminology for people who oppose feminism. We were unable to keep the entries brief, and quickly found ourselves writing paragraphs and short articles. So we decided to call this a "cyclopedia" rather than a dictionary. As we see it, a cyclopedia is a cross between a dictionary and an encyclopedia: too fat to be a dictionary but too skinny to be a proper encyclopedia. Hence, a cyclopedia - a compromise solution.

The purpose here is not to convince or convert any feminist, but to foster a linguistic understanding among those who oppose feminism.

Some of these words are old familiar friends that have been around for years. Others are entirely new.'

Campus Sexual Assault: Who Should Be the Judge and Jury?

Mastodon · 21 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's an unfortunately familiar and complicated story, fraught with the personal, the political and the historical.

The controversy over the new era of Title IX enforcement regarding sexual assaults on college campuses is playing out at universities across the nation and increasingly spilling over into the courtroom, only serving to fan the flames of an already strident debate about how to best address the problem.

A spate of lawsuits filed by individuals claiming schools mishandled investigations and judiciary hearings related to campus sexual assault call into question whether universities or colleges should adjudicate sexual assault allegations or whether the issue is best left to the criminal justice system.'

Student Group Questions Validity of Campus Rape Statistics

Mastodon · 21 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A guest speaker for the UCSB Young Americans for Liberty (YAL) on Wednesday spoke against commonly held beliefs regarding sexual assault on college campuses.

Guest Speaker Andrew Cavarno, a fourth-year history major and member of Young Americans for Liberty, argued that a frequently referenced statistic of one in four women being sexually assaulted on college campuses is heavily inflated and lacking in evidence.

“There is absolutely no evidence of a rape epidemic on college campuses,” Cavarno said. “The word epidemic implies that there’s a sudden wave of sexual violence, or that things are getting worse – this is just not the case.”

YAL originally intended the event to be a panel discussion featuring speakers from differing sides of the argument. Pointing to an empty chair beside him, Cavarno emphasized that no one with an opposing view was present to make the case for the statistic, even after having sent out “hundreds of emails.”
...
Cavarno argued that while sexual assault on campuses is an important issue, the current system infringes upon due process rights.'

Midway University to accept men as undergrads (sort of)

Mastodon · 21 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'For the first time in nearly 170 years, Midway University will start accepting men as full-time undergraduates, the Board of Trustees has decided in a step aimed at keeping the small Woodford County school open.

Men can apply as full-time undergraduates starting this fall; they can apply to live in residence halls starting in spring 2017. Men are currently accepted into online and graduate programs.

“Today is yet another historic moment in the life of an institution that has always transformed itself to remain relevant,” President John Marsden said in a news release Monday. “Our founding mission was to provide young women with access to education at a time when education was mainly available to men. We have fulfilled that mission for 169 years and this decision will ensure that we continue to do so.”'

UK: Sex crimes committed by women at record high

Matt · 22 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Alarming figures uncovered in a Daily Star Sunday investigation reveal offences by females have rocketed in five years.

Greater Manchester Police has seen a 270% rise.
...
The Met revealed that 235 sexual offences were committed by females in 2011 to 2012, soaring to 473 by 2015 to 2016.

Greater Manchester Police saw the number of crimes rise from 45 to 174 over the same period.

The statistics, released under the Freedom of Information Act, include all types of sex crimes – from indecent exposure to sexually abusing someone with a mental disorder.'

Georgia offers Prostate Cancer license plate

mens_issues · 22 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Good news from Georgia about their blue ribbon license plate for prostate cancer. If only other states would follow their example!

'Prostate Cancer is the second-most common cancer in American men. The American Cancer Society estimates 220,8000 new cases of prostate cancer were diagnosed.

The Georgia Prostate Cancer Coalition and ProstAware have partnered to spread awareness with a dedicated license plate.

The $22 used to purchase each license plate will go towards funding cancer screenings in Georgia and prostate research at Georgia hospitals and universities. For more information about how to get your Georgia Prostate Cancer license plate, you can contact Frank Catroneo at (770) 619-0710.'

"'Censorship' just evens the playing field"

Mastodon · 23 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pity the poor university student. Thanks to ‘safe spaces’ and ‘trigger warnings’, ‘no platforming’ and PC hogwash, they’re being turned from rigorous intellectual thinkers into delicate hothouse flowers - and, in doing so, they’ve been barred from a grand tradition of academia that stretches back for centuries: free speech.

Yes, the very same freedom women have only been enjoying for little over a century.

According to newly published research from the Higher Education Policy Institute, more women then men think universities should safeguard people of a particular gender, race or sexuality against offensive views.

Or, depending on where you get your news, ‘female students are pro-censorship.’

There’s an ugly subtext to this argument – that all the people complaining about the right to a safe space just don’t understand what university is about. After all, it wasn’t designed for them.'

An Assault on Due Process at UC Berkeley

Mastodon · 23 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Choudhry's acceptance of Berkeley's proposed settlement came at a cost. He waived his right to appeal the university's findings, challenge the sanctions, and seek vindication in a full-blown university disciplinary procedure. The benefit Choudhry reasonably relied on was resolution of the case.

Although Andrea LeCampagne's OPHD report declared that "the Complainant has no motive to exaggerate," on March 8, Tyann Sorrell filed in Alameda County Superior Court a potentially multimillion-dollar lawsuit against Choudhry and Berkeley, alleging, among other things, that he sexually harassed her and that the university failed to protect her.

Napolitano, speaking to the Sacramento Bee's editorial board but apparently unfamiliar with the facts, accused Choudhry of "groping," a significantly more serious charge than any found in the university's OPHD report. Two days later Napolitano, herself the target of harsh criticism for mishandling a number of high-profile sexual misconduct cases having nothing to do with Choudhry, directed UC Berkeley Chancellor Nicholas Dirks to "institute disciplinary proceedings against Mr. Choudhry through the Privilege and Tenure process."

Choudhry's grievance contends that the "initiation of a second disciplinary process is unfair, unjust, and contrary to the University's own policies." His arguments are compelling.'

The 'agony' of being a 50/50 mother?

Mastodon · 23 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Just when you think the modern gender debate can't descend any further into toe-curling incredulity, something else emerges to surprise you.

So you can imagine my delight when I read yesterday's article in FEMAIL about the 'agony' of women having to consider their children's fathers as equal parents.

No doubt struggling to be heard over the swell of sympathy violins, three mothers all bemoaned the inconvenience of 50/50 access, implying that dads should be neither seen, nor heard - except when coughing up child support, of course.

...

My response? BOO-HOO. Not just because their grievances were focused on themselves, rather than their own kids, but 'cos men have been dealing with this crap for decades without any sympathy from the sisterhood.'

Women-only gyms are a world away from boys' clubs such as Muirfield

Mastodon · 23 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Muirfield golf club has lost the right to host the prestigious Open championship after taking the stunningly regressive step of voting against reversing its ban on female members. In fairness, Muirfield members seem to have some very real concerns – a letter circulated by those campaigning against the change revealed the terrifying prospect that "lady members" may pose a threat to such noble traditions as "our foursomes play, our match system … our lunch arrangements". Quelle horreur.

The news has prompted intense debate about male-only spaces and whether or not they should still be allowed, with one major argument cropping up again and again in most of the discussions I have heard. "Why shouldn't men be allowed their own space, when women have women-only gym and swimming sessions? Isn't that sexist?"

The answer is that these two things are not the same. In fact, they couldn't be more different.

You want to know why we have women-only gym and swimming sessions? It's not some shiny, special privilege bestowed on us lucky women because we just deserve nice things. It is a direct result of the male harassment, sexism and sexual violence that has driven a quarter of women to give up exercising outside altogether and countless others to abandon the gym in frustration.

Sexual Assault Rally Prompts Counter-Protest

Matt · 23 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'About a dozen University of California, Santa Barbara students gathered on the lawn between the Arbor and library on Monday to call for hastened fulfillment of all 13 demands issued to the university administration last year after a 13-hour sit-in in Chancellor Henry Yang's office. The peaceful demonstration also drew a few counter-protesters with objections to the university's jurisdiction over sexual assault cases in the first place.
...
Shortly after Yang's appearance, three members of UCSB's Young Americans for Liberty crossed the walkway from where they'd been sitting near the Arbor store to occupy an adjacent portion of the library lawn. Fifth-year history major Andrew Cavarno and fourth-year political science major Jason Garshfield held printed signs disputing the right of universities to adjudicate sexual assault cases, Garshfield's reading: "Pro-Due Process ≠ Pro-Rape."

YAL President Dominick DiCesare, a second-year computer science major, told The Bottom Line that the group takes issue with the preponderance of evidence standard used in university courts to determine academic sanctions. The standard requires that 51 percent of the evidence presented to a judicial body favor a complainant's claim before a ruling is made against the respondent, according to the Legal Information Institute.'

Test developed to warn men of dementia risk

Mastodon · 24 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A simple blood test to identify if men have lost crucial genetic material in later life could finally close the gap in life expectancy between men and women, scientists believe.

New research shows that when men lose their Y sex chromosome they are hundreds of times more likely to develop Alzheimer's disease.

Previous research has shown that smoking hugely increases the risk of losing the Y chromosome, suggesting that the missing genetic material may also be linked to cancer.

It is thought that Y chromosome is crucial for the normal function of the immune system and without it the body struggles to eliminate cancerous cells, and amyloid plaques in the brain which cause Alzheimer's disease.

Now scientists at Uppsala University in Sweden have found it is possible to test for loss of the chromosome in a breakthrough which could lead to widespread screening which could pick up which men are at risk so that early health interventions could be made.

"The addition of testing in the general population could give medical practitioners the possibility of using preventive strategies in men at risk," said lead author Prof Lars Forsberg of Uppsala University.'

Protesters shut down Yiannopoulos speech

Mastodon · 25 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Protesters disrupted an event that featured a controversial speaker Tuesday, causing the Student Center to be shut down and attendees to march throughout DePaul's Lincoln Park campus afterwards.

Milo Yiannopoulos, a technology reporter for Breitbart and a self-proclaimed "internet supervillain," visited DePaul in an event held by DePaul's College Republicans. The event, held in the Student Center, hit max capacity of 550 attendees, most of them supporters of Yiannopoulos' outspoken conservative message.

But during the rally, a group of protesters stormed the stage and interrupted Yiannopoulos, riling up the crowd. One of the protesters was Ed Ward, a DePaul alum who founded Men of Vision and Empowerment, who ran up on stage about 15 minutes after Yiannopoulos began speaking.

Ward stormed the stage with a whistle and yelled "this man's an idiot!" while members in the crowd yelled "get a job!" Shortly after, Ward was joined onstage by an unidentified protester — who had climbed onstage and been removed before the event began — and the noise from the crowd and the protesters drowned out Yiannopoulos.'

Also see Milo Mayhem: Activists Storm Stage, Threaten Milo at DePaul Event

Student cannot get anyone to debate him about campus rape statistics

Mastodon · 25 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Andrew Cavarno is on a mission.

The 23-year-old history major and labor studies minor is about to graduate from UC Santa Barbara, and then it's off to pursue a law career. A self-described progressive with some libertarian leanings, his time as an undergrad has been spent hanging with frat brothers, pitching in with the UCSB Students for Bernie club, and enjoying studies and life on the coastal campus, where it's nearly always in the 70s and surf's up.

Yet his final semester at UCSB has taken something of an activist turn. It wasn't something he really planned, but it grew out of his frustration that campus rape statistics have been blown wholly out of proportion and too many professors and peers refuse to see the truth — or even debate the issue.

He should know — he recently asked dozens of feminist professors, student activists and rape advocates to debate him publicly on campus about the claim that one in five coeds are raped or sexually assaulted while in college. No one said yes. Not one.'

Student accused of sexual assault sues Cornell

Mastodon · 25 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ballinger's lawsuit, filed in Tompkins County Court, alleges he was suspended, barred from campus and denied the ability to continue his education before being found guilty of any misconduct.

The suit alleges Cornell University's Policy 6.4 is in violation of Education Law 6444(5). The policy, passed in 2012, addresses the university's obligations under Title IX, in accordance with guidance from the Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights. However, the policy has been criticized for going overboard and creating a "process fraught with inequities," according to a report completed by the university's own Judicial Codes Counselor in 2015, obtained by The Cornell Daily Sun.'

Gaming Journos Throw Temper Tantrum over ‘Minecraft’ Creator Notch Arguing with Feminists

Mastodon · 25 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The creator of Minecraft is currently under fire for disagreeing with feminists on Twitter.

No fewer than four separate online news outlets have decided to publicly deride Markus “Notch” Persson for his extremely controversial stance that “women and men have equal worth and should be treated as such.” Unfortunately for the enraged hordes, he does not believe that includes perpetuating terminology like “manspreading,” or “mansplaining.” For these crimes against humanity, the courageous reporters at Destructoid, Vice, Point&Clickbait, and We Hunted The Mammoth have decided that he must be shamed.

The argument continued for hundreds of tweets from countless people for and against each respective statement, including dozens of replies from Persson himself, further explaining his position and asserting that “no one should EVER ‘shut up and listen.’” In a movement ostensibly dedicated to end the silencing of people based on blanket judgments and assumptions about their character based on their gender or the color of their skin, you’d be forgiven for thinking that is a point on which they could find common ground. But you’d be very, tragically, wrong.

Let’s be clear: This simple exchange has prompted ugliness from all sides, because this is the internet. Yet it’s the core of the exchange that has prompted Notch’s increasingly derisive and sarcastic responses, and it’s hard to blame him when faux-journalists have initiated — albeit clumsily — an attempt to humiliate him for his point of view.'

India: Man commits suicide, wife files dowry harassment case against him

Matt · 25 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Anand Pilania's 30-year-old son committed suicide, alleging harassment by his wife and her relatives, but this is not the end of the ordeal for the 54-year-old man.

Faced with dowry allegations within two months of his son's death, adding to Pilania's woes is his daughter-in-law's complaint to the police that his son subjected her to unnatural sex.

...

Anand Pilania, father of 30-year-old deceased Rakesh Pilania, claims that his daughter in-law has been trying to entangle them in legal hurdles and is making a mockery of her husband's death.

Rakesh Pilania, a banker and an IIT alumni, had committed suicide on October 5 last year. He jumped from his apartment's balcony located in an upscale locality in Gurugram.

His family alleges that he committed suicide out of fear of being implicated under Section 498A of the IPC (cruelty against wife by husband or his relatives).'

University Admins Surrender to Violent Protesters, Shutter Event

Matt · 25 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Until yesterday, for example, I never realized that forcibly shutting down a private speaking event was considered free speech. I was also surprised to learn that assaulting a police officer is now a form of protest. It certainly never occurred to me that making violent threats towards a speaker was a constitutionally protected right. In fact, I was pretty confident all three of these acts were illegal...highly illegal.

Yet, yesterday I saw radical protestors do all three of these things, without consequence. DePaul University administrators looked on dispassionately, as if this was an every-day occurrence. Watching this all unfold, I had to wonder for a moment whether DePaul administrators were defending some bizarre form of free speech I had never heard of.

...

Years of inaction by university administrators has left radical student activists feeling they are immune from the law. Free from consequences, or dissenting opinions, endowed with a feeling of moral high-ground, students have taken increasingly drastic steps to suppress other opinions, and conservative opinions in particular.

...

I talked to a few of the dozen Chicago police officers eventually called into the building, and they were irate. They were well-trained, and well-equipped to handle scenarios such as this. They wanted to do their job, and remove the protesters, but administrators demanded they stand passively and watch. Once again, violence prevailed over free speech on a liberal college campus, and the administration was 100% complicit.'

Minnesota Faculty Considers Tough New Free Speech Protections

Mastodon · 25 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The faculty of the University Of Minnesota At Twin Cities is considering a motion that would make free speech the college's "paramount value." If passed, it would, according to Inside Higher Ed, represent "the strongest such affirmation seen on any campus."

One of the primary aims of the motion is to make it easier for controversial speakers to come to campus without being "shouted down." As we reported in March, Professor Dale Carpenter, a faculty member who is championing the proposal, specifically cited the fraught visit of Breitbart Tech editor Milo Yiannopoulos and American Enterprise Institute scholar Christina Hoff Sommers as a catalyst for the motion.

The faculty's proposed statement contains four key principles in defence of free speech, including a specific protection for speech that may be considered "hateful."'

Woman in "Stop DV" T-shirt arrested for DV

Matt · 25 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

File this under "irony in motion". Excerpt:

'A woman wearing a “Stop Domestic Violence” t-shirt was arrested on domestic violence charges after firing a gun during an argument with her husband inside the couple’s Maine home, police report.

Emily Wilson, 38, was collared last week following a confrontation with her spouse Kyle over whether he was having an affair. During the argument, investigators allege, Wilson waved a handgun and fired a shot into the couple’s bed.

Wilson, a high school teacher, was subsequently arrested when police responded to a 911 call placed by her husband.'

App for young boys aims to prevent domestic violence

Mastodon · 26 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A concept for an app aimed at engaging boys aged 10 to 15 to teach them respectful relationships with girls has been developed by a QUT social marketing expert as "another part of the jigsaw" to prevent domestic violence against women.

The app, however, never mentions the words "domestic violence" or "violence against women," says social marketing expert Professor Rebekah Russell-Bennett from QUT Business School's School of Advertising, Marketing and Public Relations, who developed the concept with Logan-based (Brisbane) non-profit community organisation YFS.

"Interventions at this stage of life can change young people's personal and relationship trajectories, preventing problems in adulthood," Professor Russell-Bennett said.

"However, we are careful to steer clear of using the words 'domestic violence' anywhere in the app because, at that age, many young boys would not find it relevant. This may deter them from downloading and using the app.

"Instead the app focuses on what they do want to know: about how to talk to girls, dating, having respectful relationships and supporting their friends, in order to promote health relationships among young people and positive male attitudes.'

Australia: Rise in men taking out domestic violence orders against mothers and partners at Southport Court

Mastodon · 26 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'GOLD Coast men are taking out domestic-violence orders against their mothers, partners and relatives but support workers are sceptical of the applications' legitimacy.

About 30 per cent of domestic-violence and family protection orders at Southport Magistrates Court in the first three months of this year were to men, rather than women.

...

Director of the Gold Coast Domestic Violence Prevention Centre Amy Compton-Keen said male perpetrators of domestic violence were known to take out orders against women as a means of control.

...

"That's one of the dynamics of domestic violence, that the man comes off looking like he is a perfectly great guy but is often the perpetrator and uses the system to control the woman and she ends up taking the rap for stuff he has done."

Despite this, Buckland Allen Criminal Lawyers partner Jodi Allen said courts could order cross protection orders between parties, and women could still lodge an application against a man, even if he had been awarded a protection order against her.

...

Assistant Commissioner Brian Codd said there were genuine instances of domestic violence against men.

"Yes, there are examples of it, but women committing domestic violence against men are definitely in the minority," he said.'

'Hate speech' and college campuses

Matt · 27 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists deserve some of the blame for normalizing the aggrieved fragility of students. Rape and sexual harassment are real problems on campus, as they are in the rest of the world. But just as there is a “rape culture,” there is also a campus rape victim culture that tends to treat all young women as “survivors.” Accusers who say they have endured any sort of unpleasant incident with a male—from having to turn down a date request to deciding, the morning after getting naked and in bed with a man, that they wished they had not—are deemed as deeply damaged as child pedophile victims, battered women and rape survivors.

Colleges and universities, and their fraternities and athletic departments, need to do a better job of monitoring and weeding out the men who are rapists or potential rapists. Instead of focusing on that, colleges and universities—encouraged by feminists and women’s studies departments, and in many cases ordered to do so by various Department of Education edicts—have inserted themselves as referees into the messiest and most emotionally complicated and intimate entanglements human beings are capable of creating. Their rulebook is called Title IX, the federal law requiring that colleges ensure women get an equal education. It was originally applied to sports teams and funding but has been expanded to cover how universities handle claims of sexual assault and harassment. Acting in loco parentis and under orders from the federal government, administrators form de facto star chambers that act as judge, jury and executioner, without adhering to legal rules of evidence or due process.

The rape victim services on many campuses, intended to protect young victims from further emotional and psychological damage, have evolved into cults of coddling in which no one dares question a “survivor’s” account. Good intentions have gone so awry that young men are routinely labeled rapists without due process.

The presumption of female victimhood inherent in many campus sexual harassment codes prompted Northwestern University feminist film and culture professor Laura Kipnis to pen an essay in The Chronicle of Higher Education headlined “Sexual Paranoia Strikes Academe.” She ridiculed campus sexual harassment guidelines as “feminism hijacked by melodrama” and identified an “obsession with helpless victims and powerful predators” behind the new policy. “Students were being encouraged to regard themselves as such exquisitely sensitive creatures that an errant classroom remark could impede their education, as such hothouse flowers that an unfunny joke was likely to impede their education.”'

Young Men Are Facing a Masculinity Crisis

Mastodon · 27 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We are at a historic moment in gender relations. The women's movement can move ahead with the active support, involvement and encouragement of men, or fall behind as men—especially young men—take up arms behind the quiet, but active, angry men's movement. This conflict is playing out in politics right now.

Donald Trump and Bernie Sanders are tapping into what I'm calling a "Lean Out" generation of young, discouraged and angry men—men who are feeling abandoned by the thousands of years of history that defined what it meant to be a real man: to be strong; to be a provider; to be in authority; to be the ultimate decision maker; and to be economically, educationally, physically and politically dominant. A growing percentage of young men are being out-earned by young women, as women capture 60% of the higher education degrees required for success in today's economy.

The future of men is women.

I believe women and the women's movement can be at the center of a new narrative and national conversation focused on developing positive male role models for future generations. Focusing on better men, dads, husbands, boyfriends and sons does not come at the expense of the rightful attention to women's rights and equality.
...
Just as it's no longer acceptable to educationally, economically and politically restrict women, it is no longer acceptable to disregard men's issues. When we bring men into the conversation, we further gender equality for everyone.'

Opinion Journal: Killing Due Process on Campus

Mastodon · 27 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'Editorial Board Member Joe Rago on the Department of Education's latest regulatory overreach.'

Woman wins permission to remove her dead partner's testicles in the hope of using his sperm to get pregnant

Mastodon · 27 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman has won a legal battle to remove her late partner's testicles from his dead body in the hope of using his sperm to have a child.

The Toowoomba woman was granted permission to remove his testicles in the Queensland Supreme Court.

The woman lodged an urgent application to perform the procedure the day after her fiance died unexpectedly in April, the ABC reported.'

Johnny Depp's estranged wife gets TRO after accusing him of DV

Matt · 27 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amber Heard showed up in court with a bruise on her face claiming Johnny Depp physically assaulted her and she's the victim of repeated domestic violence ... and the judge issued a restraining order requiring Johnny to stay 100 yards away from her.

Sources connected to Johnny are calling BS, saying Amber "is an affront to real victims of domestic violence."

The judge also gave Amber the right to live in the family home, but rejected a request to protect at least one of their dogs from Johnny. Amber asked for $50k a month in spousal support, but the judge rejected that request. And the judge declined to order Johnny into anger management.

Heard showed up with her lawyer, Samantha Spector, armed with photos showing various bruises ... she claims Depp inflicted various times during their marriage.
...

Amber claims during the alleged attack, Johnny shattered various objects in the apartment. She says she was on the phone with a friend during the fight, and when Johnny grabbed her phone she screamed to her friend, "Call the cops!" The friend called 911 and cops came to the residence.

Amber says when cops arrived Johnny had already fled, so they took a report.

We're told cops told Amber they would find Johnny and arrest him if she gave a statement about the alleged violence, but she refused. Officers told her if she changed her mind she could call them.
...
Amber says she has video of one of the beatings.

It's interesting ... she's asking for a temporary restraining order claiming there's an immediate threat of harm, but Depp has been out of town since Wednesday promoting his new movie. Depp's lawyer, Laura Wasser, appeared on his behalf.

TMZ broke the story ... 3 days after Depp's mom died, Amber filed for divorce. And one week after his mom died, she's claiming domestic violence.

As for why Depp and his people are calling BS ... first she never filed a police report, and she posted Instagram pics after the alleged beating and never showed any injury.'

Racist Chinese laundry commercial sparks outrage

Mastodon · 27 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the viral ad for Qiaobi, an Asian woman is doing laundry before she is joined by a young black man leaning by the doorway. He has white paint splattered on his face, arms and pants, and wears a brown-stained white shirt. He walks towards the woman, exchanging flirtatious advances as she motions him to come closer. Once she lures him in close enough for a kiss, the woman shoves a detergent pod into his mouth and forces him head-first into the washing machine.

Smiling, she hops on top of the rumbling machine while muffled pleas are heard from inside.

Much to many upset viewers' surprise, an Asian man emerges from the machine in the same outfit - clean white shirt included. The commercial ends with the woman delighted with the new development and the closing voiceover, "Change, it all starts from Qiaobi laundry detergent pod."'

DePaul Sociology Professor Angrily Resigns Over Milo Visit

Mastodon · 27 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dr. Shu-Ju Ada Cheng, an Associate Professor of Sociology at DePaul University has announced her intention to resign from her post, accusing the University President of “reinforcing existing inequalities” due to his support for the free and equal exchange of ideas.

In a message posted on Facebook, Dr. Cheng claimed free speech is a “delusional” idea rooted in “market ideology.” She said “incidents over the past two days” — a reference to Breitbart Tech editor Milo Yiannopoulos’ chaos-stricken visit to campus earlier this week — were a “symptom of historical institutional racism."

Following the disruption of Milo’s event, University President issued a lukewarm statement, slamming Yiannopoulos’ political views but apologizing to the College Republicans, who hosted the speaker, for the disruption to their event caused by threats of violence and protests. It appears this apology is what has upset Dr. Cheng.'

Female student expelled for rape claims

Matt · 28 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Washington State University expelled a freshman female student two years ago after finding her responsible for sexually assaulting a male – and she claims that the complaint was driven by the man's embarrassment.

BuzzFeed unearthed the 2014 case, which involves drinking games, an affirmative request for a condom and a host of people eavesdropping outside the room where the sex happened.

The teasing of the man and rumors that he didn't want to have sex with "Rose" – the expelled student's middle name – reached a resident adviser, who reported the incident for a Title IX investigation.

Rose filed a "countercomplaint" against the man, but the school shot it down:

"Who was most in control in the situation? Was one party engaging in isolating behavior? Who was less intoxicated?" are the main questions investigated, [WSU Title IX Coordinator Kimberly] Anderson said. It often comes down to small actions and text messages or photos. …'

Students Accused in Campus Sex Assaults Target Federal Rules

Mastodon · 28 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As colleges face increasing pressure to aggressively investigate reports of sex assaults, some critics say the rights of the accused are being trampled. Now they want federal guidance on the issue to be tossed out.

Their target: a "Dear Colleague Letter" issued by the U.S. Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights in 2011 that laid out specific requirements for dealing with sexual violence under Title IX, a federal civil rights law that prohibits sex discrimination in education.

Schools that don't comply risk losing federal funding.

Critics say the letter unlawfully imposed binding regulations, with severe consequences for the accused, without going through the public notice and comment process required by federal law. The letter should therefore be withdrawn and schools should review any resulting punishments of students, they say.'

Cuckold Your Husband: The Raw Marriage Deal For Men

Mastodon · 28 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Marriage is in decline throughout the West, so should we be surprised cuckolding your husband is now just thing a woman might have to do?

New York magazine's "Beta Male" fully lived up to its pegged name Thursday when it released an article entitled, "Women Are Now Cheating As Much As Men, But With Fewer Consequences." The piece, written by a woman, aims to answer the question as to why this phenomenon is occurring in the most sympathetic light possible.

The takeaway from this article is that men, upon entering marriage, should be fully ready for the chance that if they fail to satisfy their wives, she will cheat, and there's nothing wrong with that.
...
According to the experts consulted by the article, the cuckold is desperate to try to make things work out after finding out about his partner's infidelity. The examples given by the article of men clinging to their two-timing wives are, like the previous anecdotes, males of an inferior status to their wives.'

Critics questioning role of universities in Title IX case

Mastodon · 30 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'College and university disciplinary boards used to deal with accusations of academic fraud or plagiarism. In the last two decades, administrations have been forced to handle a far more difficult and complex problem: sexual assault.

Universities today find themselves in a bind — administrators may or may not want to be involved in sexual assault adjudication, but federal law requires them to provide victims with a disciplinary reporting process. That way, victims can be protected from alleged perpetrators even if the case isn't prosecuted in a criminal court.

But a growing chorus of critics is asking whether universities actually have the means to deal fairly with sexual assault — and dozens of students accused of sexual assault on campus are now alleging that their due process rights were violated.

"Disciplinary panels were set up for things like cheating, plagiarism and other things for which there is no central process outside of the school," said Andrew Miltenberg, an attorney who has earned a reputation for representing students accused of sexual assault or misconduct.

"Schools shouldn't be dealing with this issue just like they shouldn't be dealing with a shooting," he added.'

Campus Is a Poor Court for Students Facing Sexual-Misconduct Charges

Mastodon · 30 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As student-conduct administrators nationwide know all too well, the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights required in a letter issued last April that institutions adopt our judiciary's lowest standard of proof—the "preponderance of evidence" standard—for use in campus sexual-misconduct hearings, which handle allegations ranging from sexual harassment to sexual assault and rape.

Under the new standard, if it is determined that an accuser's claims are a fraction of a percent more likely to be true than false, the accused may be subjected to discipline, including expulsion.

Unfortunately for students' rights, a long line of institutions have adopted this low standard under federal pressure. In fact, a review of policies at 198 of the colleges ranked this year by U.S. News & World Report reveals that 30 institutions—including Yale University, Stanford University, and the University of Virginia—have changed their standards of proof following OCR's mandate.

That's too bad, because colleges should be free to grant their students more robust due-process rights—and the federal government should not stand in their way.'

Has Political Correctness In Australia Gone Mad?

Mastodon · 30 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here's what happened…

Aitken sent an email around saying the appointment of ANZ's new Chief Financial Officer was one of the dumber appointments he'd seen. He went on to point out that former investment bankers don't usually transition to life at a listed company too well.

He also mentioned that the last deal this person advised on was the purchase by legal firm Slater and Gordon of the UK-based Quindell for $1 billion. Thanks to that deal, Slater and Gordon is now in tatters.

That's hardly the fault of an investment banker. The decision and responsibility rests with the board of the acquiring company — in this case Slater and Gordon. But still, as a broker, Aitken is entitled to his opinion.

The problem for Aitken is that the person he criticised is a woman. Despite making no reference to her personally, or her gender, ANZ didn't see it that way.

ANZ's head of 'corporate communications', Paul Edwards, sent a tweet, with Aitken's email attached, saying, 'Sexism alive + well in stockbroking?'

It's a ridiculous assertion, and now Aitken has lost his job. This is pure censorship by ANZ, and shows how political correctness has gone mad in this country.'

Danish government wants harsher punishments for false rape accusations

Mastodon · 30 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Parliament is voting today on a governmental proposal that is expected to increase the length of time sentenced rapists spend in prison, while also introducing harsher penalties for those who make false rape accusations.

Currently the sentence typically handed down in rape cases is two and a half years – in particularly violent cases, longer sentences are possible. The new proposal would increase the standard sentence by a year.

A parliamentary majority agrees that punishments for the sexual abuse of adults and minors need to be stiffened. However, they would like to see the false rape accusations issue debated separately.'

Rape Culture is a ‘Panic Where Paranoia, Censorship, and False Accusations Flourish’

Mastodon · 30 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On January 27, 2010, University of North Dakota officials charged undergraduate Caleb Warner with sexually assaulting a fellow student. He insisted the encounter was consensual, but was found guilty by a campus tribunal and thereupon expelled and banned from campus.

A few months later, Warner received surprising news. The local police had determined not only that Warner was innocent, but that the alleged victim had deliberately falsified her charges. She was charged with lying to police for filing a false report, and fled the state.

Cases like Warner’s are proliferating. Here is a partial list of young men who have recently filed lawsuits against their schools for what appear to be gross mistreatment in campus sexual assault tribunals: Drew Sterrett—University of Michigan, “John Doe”—Swarthmore, Anthony Villar—Philadelphia University, Peter Yu—Vassar, Andre Henry—Delaware State, Dez Wells—Xavier, and Zackary Hunt—Denison. Presumed guilty is the new legal principle where sex is concerned.'

Julie Bindel: "Women, face it: marriage can never be feminist"

Mastodon · 30 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Excerpt:

'The institution of marriage has curtailed women's freedom for centuries, says Julie Bindel. So why are so many feminists trying to reclaim the tradition as a subversive act? If you want to get married, she says, just get on with it - but please don't pretend that being a feminist changes its meaning.

Feminist research fellow: Put all men 'in some kind of camp'

'In an interview with the website radfem collective, founder of the group Justice for Women and research fellow at the University of Lincoln Julie Bindel says that she would "put … all [men] in some kind of camp where they can all drive around in quad bikes, or bicycles, or white vans."'

Gender Pay Gap: Study Reveals Why Women Earn Less

Mastodon · 31 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New research suggests women earn less than men because they opt for jobs with more flexibility but less pay.

From the White House to feminist lobby groups, a chorus of voices claims the gender pay gap is due to rampant sexism in the workplace, with women earning just 78 cents on the dollar to what men earn.

This figure is a statistical sleight of hand. The 78 cents figure, or anything like it, can only be reached by adding up all the money men earn and all the money women earn, and looking at who is earning more on average.

The figure doesn't represent women earning less than men working the same jobs, the same hours, in the same roles. Nevertheless, the Obama administration is proposing costly rules that mandate companies with 100 employees or more to include more information on annual reports of employees' pay and sex.'

Campus Censorship is Holding Women Back

Mastodon · 31 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A survey has revealed that female students are more likely to support campus censorship than their male peers. Keeping Schtum, a report by the Higher Education Policy Institute, found that 16 per cent more women support Safe Space policies and the banning of tabloid newspapers than men. Men are more likely to support unfettered freedom of speech on campus.

That a significant proportion of female students is willingly supporting censorship is very depressing. But it's hardly surprising. The vast majority of censorship on campus is aimed at protecting women from offence. spiked's 2016 Free Speech University Rankings (FSUR) found that almost a third of UK universities banned the Sun and the Daily Star, as part of the No More Page 3 campaign, and 25 banned the controversial pop song 'Blurred Lines'. All of this is done in the name of cleansing campus of 'demeaning' representations of women.
...
These protective measures treat women like children, incapable of handling the trials and tribulations of adult life by themselves. And all of it has been fuelled by contemporary feminism, which paints campus as a uniquely dangerous place for women and promotes the bizarre idea that the first step towards gender equality is women insisting they are vulnerable. This is, of course, nonsense. For all the fearmongering about campus rape culture, universities are among the safest places in the country. But in a climate where cat-calling is conflated with sexual assault, and rude jokes are considered traumatising, female students are constantly being encouraged to see themselves as perennial victims.'

Twitter abuse - '50% of misogynistic tweets from women'

Mastodon · 31 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Half of all misogynistic tweets posted on Twitter come from women, a study suggests.

Over a three-week period, think tank counted the number of uses of two particular words as indicators of misogyny.

It found evidence of large-scale misogyny, with 6,500 unique users targeted by 10,000 abusive tweets in the UK alone.

Twitter boss Jack Dorsey has said that tackling abuse is a priority.

The research comes as UK MPs - Yvette Cooper, Maria Miller, Stella Creasy, Jess Philips - alongside former Liberal Democrat minister Jo Swinson, launch their Reclaim the Internet campaign, in response to growing public concern about the impact of hate speech and abuse on social media.'

GOP senators move to keep women out of military draft

Mastodon · 31 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of Senate Republicans wants to remove a controversial provision from the Senate's annual defense policy bill that would require women to register for the draft.

Sen. Mike Lee (R-Utah) has filed an amendment to the National Defense Authorization Act (NDAA) that would remove the provision and block any court, including the Supreme Court, from hearing cases about who must register with the Selective Service System.

The debate over requiring women to take part has split Congressional Republicans, and opponents argue that Congress needs to spend more time studying the issue.

Lee's amendment would add a section into the defense bill expressing the "sense of Congress that the decision of the secretary of Defense to open all military occupational specialties to women raises important legal, political and social questions about who should be required to register for the military selective service."

Secretary of Defense Ash Carter announced in December that the Pentagon would open all combat roles to women.'

"We Need To Stop Protecting Famous Men"

Mastodon · 31 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Tuesday morning, Amber Heard released a statement concerning her domestic violence allegations against ex-husband Johnny Depp. A rep for the actress addressed the “years of psychological and physical abuse” Heard says she experienced, and the fact that many victims of abuse fail to come forward immediately.

“As the result of Amber’s decision to decline giving an initial statement to the LAPD, her silence has been used against her by Johnny’s team,” the statement read. “Amber did not provide a statement to the LAPD in an attempt to protect her privacy and Johnny’s career.”

The fact that Heard had to release such a statement at all, a statement vehemently defending herself in the “Court of Public Opinion,” is a testament to the consistently messed up way we approach the actions of famous men.

In the media circus that’s enveloped Heard and Depp’s very public split, there has been a general sense of incredulity, a disbelief that Depp could ever or would ever hurt his wife.'

UK: The new underclass: Working class white boys now most likely to fail in school

Mastodon · 31 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Only 10 per cent of white British males from the most disadvantaged backgrounds go onto higher education, according to a new report.

By stark contrast, 20 per cent of men from black Caribbean heritage, 50 per cent of males from Indian backgrounds and more than 60 per cent of boys from Chinese heritage are keen to take their education further.

The startling statistics are contained within a report from the Higher Education Policy Institute.

The figures highlight how young white men are less likely to achieve, prompting fears they could get trapped in a life-cycle of failure where they are left behind while others flourish.'

Meet The Social Justice Foundation That Pays For Censorship And Lies

Mastodon · 31 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent report alleges that the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation aims to censor and control society for the purpose of advancing progressive ideals.

According to the report, which has been published at The Capital Research Center, the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation advocates for the censorship of politically incorrect and anti-feminist views on social media. In addition, the foundation has partnered with Microsoft in an effort to replace standardized testing with an educational video game system that would likely bring a progressive message to millions of American students.

"The free speech-averse John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation aspires to leverage social media and educational testing in order to strengthen elite control of all aspects of society and culture. The philanthropy promotes politically correct censorship on popular websites like Twitter and Facebook, but for more insight into the organization, focus on the left-wing MacArthur board chairman who has long been a heavy-hitter in textbook publishing."'

Here is my #MessageToFeminists

Mastodon · 31 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There has been a recent rise of an online stronghold of cultural libertarianism, which has been deemed by some to be a reactionary movement against the regressive left. Classically liberal and conservative figures are breaking down the barriers between the political left and right, and are coming together to discuss a multitude of ideas including free speech, political correctness, censorship and 'safe spaces' in the university scene, and cultural relativity.
...
It was only a matter of time until something so contentious as a #MessageToFeminists campaign would arise. The hashtag, created by one Taleed Brown on his Youtube channel That Guy T, aimed to stimulate debate on the current feminist movement by giving a voice to its most common critiques. Originally devised as a Youtube challenge, the hashtag is now making rounds on Twitter, drawing attention to the need for an actual intellectual conversation and free exchange of ideas, which many believe has failed to take place in a monotonic, stifling PC culture.'

Fathers' rights: 'We're dads, not visitors'

Mastodon · 31 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Joseph Fernandez, 47, of Warwick, along with a growing number of men, feel like they are at a disadvantage as fathers when it comes to custody over their child. Together, they are the Rhode Island Fathers' Rights Movement and advocating for family court reform as well as for equal parenting to be the standard in custody cases.

"Sometimes I feel there is this assumption within the court that as a dad I don't want to be in the picture," Fernandez said. "We love our children, we want to be in their lives, we shouldn't have to beg to be parents."

Fernandez has been fighting for more time with his 4-year-old daughter since 2012 and, finding he wasn't the only one struggling with custody issues, began the Rhode Island Fathers' Rights Movement, which has connected with likeminded groups from across the country, a movement that is now "38 states strong."

The group acts as a supportive community for fathers to discuss their own experiences as well as sharing best practices and advice. The group has helped to reunite some fathers with their children

The initiative is not trying to "bash women" or take children away from mothers – they even have female members. Rather, the group wants their fair share of parenthood, with equal custody being the norm without "extraneous circumstances" and reform in family court, Fernandez said.'

Illinois state legislator seeks to modernize child support laws

Mastodon · 31 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Senator Michael Hastings (D-Tinley Park) sponsored legislation to modernize the state's child support laws, by requiring both parents' income to be considered in determining child support.

"Illinois has a lot of archaic laws. The child support laws on the books do not consider the modern family when determining the necessary child support for many families," Hastings said.

House Bill 3982 would update a portion of Illinois Marriage and Dissolution of Marriage Act for the first time since 1984.

The new model is called the "income shares" model. It would consider the income of both parents and what it would be if they were living together. It also would modernize the costs of raising a child in Illinois.'

Today’s Faux Feminism

Mastodon · 31 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But while the issue of sexism is now on the back burner, this epic presidential campaign has already exposed modern feminism as disingenuous. From playing the “woman card” to fighting for “women’s issues,” it is clear that feminism is now misunderstood by its own advocates who no longer want equal treatment, but instead demand special treatment.

Consider the campaign rhetoric itself. Like many Americans, I have found it distasteful. The personal insults have been cringe-worthy but anyone who has been following knows the charade has left no one — male or female — unscathed.

On both the left and the right, women have stood alongside men on debate stages in front of millions of people to compete for the job of president of the United States. But while Carly Fiorina held her own, drawing on her business experience and knowledge of the issues to win over voters, Hillary Clinton time-and-time again seeks an edge for simply being a woman. What could possibly be sexist about Bernie responding to her interruption in the March debate with “Excuse me, I’m talking”? It looks to me like Bernie is treating Clinton has a formidable competitor – isn’t this what the feminist movement sought?'

Tyler Kost Update: Judge Approves Social Media Release

Mastodon · 31 May 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tyler Kost has been in the Pinal County jail for over 550 days on what looks more and more like an “anti male hate crime”. A growing body of evidence suggest Tyler was set up on false rape and sexual assault allegations by a group of high school girls.

Fortunately, a Pinal County Superior Court Judge has allowed and agreed all social media will be released by the female accusers from Poston Butte High School in San Tan Valley.

These girls, now young women, were inspired by the movie “John Tucker Must Die”.

Tyler’s attorney is lobbying for his release until his trial that is scheduled to begin late 2016. No word yet as to the status of the request.

If Tyler is found innocent we hope the family will seek justice by filing a civil lawsuit against the Sheriff’s Department, Poston Butte High School and the now adult women in this case.'

UK: Lesbian couple guilty of toddler murder

Matt · 1 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The mum of tragic Liam Fee and her lesbian partner have been found guilty of murdering the toddler and falsely blaming his death on another child.

Rachel Fee, 31, and Nyomi Fee, 29, were convicted today of killing two-year-old Liam by inflicting severe blunt force trauma to his body at a house in Fife, Scotland.

The youngster, who had been subjected to a life of pain and neglect, suffered a ruptured heart after sustaining injuries similar to those seen in car crash victims.'

Teacher pregnant with 13-YO student's baby

Matt · 1 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'An arrest warrant has been issued for a teacher in the Aldine Independent School District who is accused of having a sexual relationship with a 13-year-old student.

Prosecutors said Alexandria Vera had a sexual relationship with one of her students and also got pregnant by the eighth-grader.
...
Vera, an English teacher, admitted to conducting a sexual relationship with the student since last September, authorities said. A report said the student was in her eighth-grade English class. The DA's office said the officer received school records showing the student to be younger than 14 when Vera began the sexual relationship.
...
Vera said the student's parents not only knew about the relationship, they approved of it and allowed the teen to spend the night at Vera's home in Spring, where they engaged in sex on a regular basis, according to court documents. She told an investigator that she would drop him off at home in the morning so he could catch the bus to Stovall Middle School, prosecutors said.'

Also see:
http://www.breitbart.com/big-government/2016/06/01/teacher-impregnated-by-13-year-old-student-turns-herself-in/

Milo event ends with bomb threat

Matt · 1 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Remember: If you can't shut someone up, threaten to blow them up! Yeah, that makes sense... not. Excerpt:

'The latest stop on Milo Yiannopoulous's "Dangerous Faggot Tour" at the University of California Los Angeles (UCLA) was blocked by protests at the beginning, and evacuated by a bomb threat at the end.

Before the event started, groups of protesters gathered outside of the Broad Art Building, where Milo was to speak. A large banner was hung from the third story of a neighboring building, which read: "Bruins Against Hate." Groups of women and men stood outside holding pro-feminism signs — with black duct tape over their mouths (above).
...
Fights began to break out when the back doors, which organizers had been using to usher people into the event, were also blocked by protesters who refused to let people in.
...
Finally, after the feminists were removed from the auditorium, Milo and David were able to resume their talk. After the show was over, however, and most of all the people in the auditorium had left, a large group of UCLA police came in and told those left in the room that they had to leave immediately because of a bomb threat.

Soon thereafter, the Los Angeles Police Department (LAPD) arrived on campus with bomb-sniffing dogs. After a sweep of the auditorium, the all-clear was given.'

UCLA Protesters Spit at Milo Yiannopoulos and Hilarity Ensues

Mastodon · 1 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dozens of destinations into Milo Yiannopoulos's "Dangerous Faggot Tour," livid feminist protesters have learned how to make the most of what little time they get with the notorious provocateur. The dozens of protesters—including at least two professors—stood outside spitting at Yiannopoulos as he entered the Broad Art Center at the University of California, Los Angeles.

Yiannopoulos, accompanied by his usual Twitter entourage (including @bakedalaska), waved at the protesters. Certainty getting threatened with violence at DePaul last week must have desensitized Yiannopoulos from being too shocked by the protesters' signs and spit.

When I spoke to the protesters before the event, they seemed divided as to what exactly they were trying to accomplish.'

Blocked entrance, shouting matches, apathetic cops and angry women at Milo's UCLA stop

Mastodon · 1 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A horde of student protesters crowded in front of UCLA's Broad Art Center on Tuesday to prevent hundreds of Milo Yiannopoulos fans from entering the venue and hearing the conservative-gay firebrand speak.
...
Although many guests had lined up hours before the event's start, police officers manning security did not appear to attempt to disperse the eclectic crowd of student protesters blockading the main entrance so guests waiting could go inside.

Asked to move, protesters simply said "no."

Meanwhile, shouting matches ensued between the hundreds waiting in line and the 75 or so protesters lining the entrance and flanking the building.'

Ryan Gosling Thinks ‘Women Are Better Than Men’

Mastodon · 1 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Attention, ladies. Ryan Gosling thinks you’re pretty amazing and don’t you forget it.

In an interview with Evening Standard Magazine, the star of “The Nice Guys” (and the internet’s bae) shared his admiration for women in what might be the most straightforward compliment ever:

“I think women are better than men,” he said. “They are stronger, more evolved.”

Gosling, who has two daughters with Eva Mendes, explained that he’s noticed this strength and resilience at home with his own kids.

“You can tell especially when you have daughters and you see their early stages,” he said. “They are just leaps and bounds beyond boys immediately.”'

Lawyers for 'Jackie' tacitly admit she invented her pretend rapist

Mastodon · 1 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lawyers for "Jackie," the woman who claimed to Rolling Stone that she had been gang-raped at a University of Virginia fraternity party have finally acknowledged that their client created the fake rapist alleged to have orchestrated the attack.

Jackie's lawyers, in new court documents filed Tuesday, acknowledged that they had accessed an email account connected to the fake rapist in mid-March. The email account for "Haven Monahan," the name Jackie gave as her alleged rapist, had been created days after the alleged gang-rape had occurred and a day before the email account sent a love letter to a young man whom Jackie had a crush on.'

EU referendum: Old white men are the problem for the Remain campaign, says Labour's shadow Europe minister

Mastodon · 1 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pat Glass, who has already apologised earlier in the campaign after calling a voter a 'horrible racist', made the remarks as she spoke alongside shadow chancellor John McDonnell, Wolverhampton South West MP Rob Marris and Guardian columnist Owen Jones at Wolverhampton Grand Station.

Taking questions from a 200-strong audience of Labour supporters, Ms Glass was responding to a question about encouraging voters to support the Remain campaign.

She said women and young people were 'key' to a successful Remain vote in the referendum before adding: "Go and speak to your mother, your grandmother. Don't speak to your grandfather, we know the problem are older white men."

The comments were met by muted laughter.'

UK: Top Labour MP accused of 'disdain' for voters after branding older white men a 'problem'

Mastodon · 1 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Mr Nuttall, MEP for North West England, told Express.co.uk: “Once again Pat Glass provides us with a window into the true soul of the Labour Party.

"They treat British voters and their views with utter disdain. Anyone who doesn’t fit their mould is considered to be less of a person.

"It´s in the same vein as shadow defence secretary Emily Thornberry´s scornful tweet about a so-called ´white van man´ in Rochester in 2014.

"I find it quite incredible that a politician would be rude towards people who vote. That´s certainly not my idea of respecting the electorate.

"In terms of the EU referendum campaign, however, Pat Glass is the gift that keeps on giving."'

CPI Launches New Program to Curb Wrongful Convictions of Sexual Assault

Matt · 1 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Today the Center for Prosecutor Integrity is launching a new initiative designed to address the over-criminalization of sexual conduct and to end wrongful convictions of sexual assault. The new program comes on the heels of a recent report on sex offender registries that concludes, “Black men are being convicted of sex crimes in alarming numbers.”

The Wrongful Convictions of Sexual Assault Program features informational resources for attorneys, researchers, policymakers, and concerned citizens. The resources address Prosecutorial Misconduct in Sex Crime Cases and the American Law Institute Model Penal Code, and features an Exoneree Honor Roll that lists the names of hundreds of persons exonerated of sexual assault. The online resource also provides a compilation of law review articles, empirical research studies, and other resources.'

"To curb prostitution, punish those who buy sex rather than those who sell it"

Mastodon · 2 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is disturbing that some human rights and public health organizations are advocating the full legalization of the sex trade, including its most abusive aspects. I agree with Amnesty International, UNAIDS and other groups that say that those who sell sex acts should not be arrested or prosecuted, but I cannot support proposals to decriminalize buyers and pimps.

Some assert that this “profession” can be empowering and that legalizing and regulating all aspects of prostitution will mitigate the harm that accompanies it. But I cannot accept a policy prescription that codifies such a pernicious form of violence against women. Normalizing the act of buying sex also debases men by assuming that they are entitled to access women’s bodies for sexual gratification. If paying for sex is normalized, then every young boy will learn that women and girls are commodities to be bought and sold.'

"Funny or Die brutally skewers male feminists in this hilarious video"

Mastodon · 2 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Excerpt:

'There is a difference between men who are good allies to women just by the very nature of how they live their lives, and those 'feminist men' who insist on taking the spotlight & inserting themselves into feminist spaces in order to get props and praise. '

Milo Yiannopoulos: UCLA protests by campus loonies

Mastodon · 2 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'I'm not great at reading people, but I'm pretty sure this means they love me.
See the full talk here [https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=cK8SsvNKef0]'

Hillary Clinton: People Tell Me They Won't Vote For Me Because I'm A Woman

Mastodon · 3 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton portrays herself as the victim of sexism, explaining during an interview that she suffers from it at her own campaign rallies.

She said that people would come up to her on the rope line and say, "'I really admire you, I really like you, I just don't know if I can vote for a woman to be president,'" she said in an interview with New York Magazine. "I mean, they come to my events and then they say that to me."

She added she thinks Americans are afraid that a woman's ambition would crowd out relationships, marriage, children, family, and home making.

"We're so accustomed to think of women's ambition being made manifest in ways that we don't approve of, or that we find off-putting."

She said that Americans viewed a woman's ambition as "dangerous" and that men were "100 percent" afraid of the competition.

"That level of visceral … fear, anxiety, insecurity plays a role," she said.'

SJW outcry prompts Fox to apologize for ‘offensive’ X-Men: Apolocalypse poster

Mastodon · 3 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From the Hollywood Reporter:

As 20th Century Fox’s X-Men: Apocalypse stormed theaters over the long weekend, critics took aim at billboards featuring Oscar Isaac’s Apocalypse choking Jennifer Lawrence’s Mystique.

Among them was Rose McGowan, who elaborated on a May 25 Facebook post to THR: “There is a major problem when the men and women at 20th Century Fox think casual violence against women is the way to market a film. There is no context in the ad, just a woman getting strangled. The fact that no one flagged this is offensive and frankly, stupid. The geniuses behind this, and I use that term lightly, need to to take a long hard look at the mirror and see how they are contributing to society. Imagine if it were a black man being strangled by a white man, or a gay male being strangled by a hetero? The outcry would be enormous. So let’s right this wrong. 20th Century Fox, since you can’t manage to put any women directors on your slate for the next two years, how about you at least replace your ad?”'

Center for Prosecutor Integrity fights back against false sexual assault allegations

Matt · 3 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Center for Prosecutor Integrity on Wednesday launched an initiative to combat false reports of sexual assault and the overcriminalization of sexual conduct.

The Wrongful Convictions of Sexual Assault Program aims to protect the due process rights of the accused, which are on shaky footing nationwide.

The program aggregates research on the rate of false accusations of sexual assault, noting that it is the second-most-common crime of which people are wrongfully convicted. The National Registry of Exonerations found that more than 270 people were exonerated last year after being wrongfully convicted of sexual assault.'

NPO: Hillary Clinton's foray into child custody cases reveals "best interests" facade

Matt · 4 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Judges are elected in Arkansas. Obviously, the judge, who would eventually have to stand for re-election, chose to go totally counter to the practices of the day to do a favor for a politically important father by giving him joint custody. This is not the decision that a 1978 judge who was interested only in the best interest of the child, as it was then understood, would have made. Politics came first, just as considerations other than best interest of the child continue to come first today. For instance, the money and power of the bar associations continue to dominate the family courts and legislatures today, standing in the way of shared parenting in state after state despite the now-overwhelming evidence that it serves the best interest of children in most cases, and despite overwhelming popular support.

But Beshear was not satisfied with his extraordinary joint custody result and wanted more. Six months later, with 30 year old Clinton now as his lawyer, he sought sole custody of Bethany before Judge Royce Weisenberger.

Why did Beshear choose Clinton as his attorney? Is it because she was a proven winner? This seems unlikely. Although she was known as well educated and smart, and was a new associate attorney at the prestigious Rose Law Firm in Little Rock, she “had little expertise” in family law, according to the Globe. Is it because, as Beshear now claims, she was a woman, which might be helpful in a custody dispute? That is a convenient thing to say in today’s climate. But having a female lawyer was a novel thing in 1978, of highly uncertain benefit. Much more likely is that Bill Clinton had just won the Democratic primary for governor and was certain to be elected governor in November. Beshear chose Clinton because an elected judge would not want to antagonize both the powerful Beshear in his home county, and also the new governor.'

Police determined the rape accusation was 'unfounded,' but school punished him anyway

Mastodon · 4 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Lynn University student is suing his school after he was suspended for one year for allegedly sexually assaulting a female student.

The suing student, identified in court documents as John Doe, attended a party while a freshmen where underage drinking was occurring. There he met a female student (who I'm not naming because she's not being sued and I'm not naming the accused) and the two began talking. Doe's lawsuit contends that she "showed no signs of being intoxicated."'

"It doesn't hurt men if I hate them"

Mastodon · 4 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Zara Larsson is not afraid to tell you that she's a man-hater; in fact, she wears it as a badge of honor. For the budding pop star and Fuse First artist, feminism is a no-brainer issue, but calling for equal rights between men and women has somehow earned her a lot of Internet hate worldwide.

"It’s actually crazy how people can be so upset about something so basic when it comes to human rights,” the "Never Forget You" singer notes.'

Poll finds women not at ease with the idea of being drafted

Mastodon · 4 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An actual military draft has been out of commission for 43 years. But draft registration is still a stark reality for American men, who must sign up with the federal government like clockwork.

“The draft itself may never be reinstated, but men are still required to register for its possible use when they turn 18. Americans think women should do that too. By 50 percent to 35 percent they agree that women should also be required to register with the Selective Service System,” says Kathy Frankovic, an analyst for YouGov, which queried some 2,000 people on the issue.

Women, however, are not so keen on the idea. The survey found only 40 percent agreed they should be in the national pool for potential troops. Some demographics were all for it: 64 percent of Democratic voters who plan to vote for Sen. Bernie Sanders approve, along with 61 percent of men, 58 percent of liberals, 53 percent of Democrats in general and 52 percent of voters who favor Hillary Clinton. Fifty-two percent of Republican voters who prefer Donald Trump, 48 percent of Republicans and 45 percent of conservatives also agree.'

Glastonbury 2016: There's going to be a women-only venue called The Sisterhood

Mastodon · 4 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a historic move, this year's Glastonbury Festival will feature a venue open only to women.

Named The Sisterhood, the spot will be hidden in the site's renowned Shangri-La area and is billed as an "intersectional, queer, trans and disability-inclusive space open to all people who identify as women".

Described as a "revolutionary clubhouse," the venue's staff, performers, and security will all be women.
...
"The producers of The Sisterhood believe that women-only spaces are necessary in a world that is still run by and designed to benefit mainly men," the venue's organisers said. "Oppression against women continues in various manifestations around the world today, in different cultural contexts.'

University lets rape accuser bring experienced lawyer, won’t let accused bring one

Mastodon · 4 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lynn University let a sexual-assault accuser bring her lawyer and repeatedly “intervene” in a conduct hearing, while the accused student’s adviser – his mother – had to remain silent, according to a federal lawsuit filed against the South Florida school last week.

The accused student, whose athletic and academic scholarships were revoked, said Lynn yanked him off the baseball team several weeks before his hearing. It then suspended him after ignoring its own policy on incapacitation.

In an unusual move for a due-process lawsuit, “John Doe” identifies his accuser by her real name, though it appears to be misspelled. He also identifies several student witnesses by their real names.'

Former secret service agent's book alleges DV by Hillary

Matt · 6 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton has a “Jekyll and Hyde” personality that left White House staffers scared stiff of her explosive — and even physical — outbursts, an ex-Secret Service officer claims in a scathing new tell-all.
...
The book claims she repeatedly screamed obscenities at her husband, Secret Service personnel and White House staffers — all of whom lived in terror of her next tirade.

Secret Service agents had discussions about the possibility that they would have to protect Bill from his wife’s physical attacks, Byrne writes, and the couple had one “violent encounter” the morning of a key presidential address to the nation.
...
Byrne describes arriving for work one day in 1995 following a loud fight between the Clintons the night before.

The dust-up, he says, left a light blue vase “smashed to bits” and Bill sporting a “real, live, put-a-steak-on-it black eye.”
...
"I don’t recall Mr. Trump ever screaming at the Secret Service, calling them pigs, throwing vases across the room and clawing the face of his spouse, which Hillary Clinton has been reported to do,” she told CNN.'

New York Times Reporter Asks Sanders If He’s Sexist For Continuing To Run Against Hillary

Mastodon · 6 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A New York Times reporter asked Bernie Sanders on Monday if it is sexist for him to continue running for president against what could be the nation’s first female president in Hillary Clinton.

Sanders bristled at the question but also laughed and asked if the reporter, Yamiche Alcindor, was being serious.

The exchange occurred after Sanders opened up his press conference in Emeryville, Calif. to questions from reporters. He pointed to one member of the press in the audience, but Alcindor appears to have jumped in with a question. Sanders attempted to cut her off, saying “excuse me” several times.'

"Life extension technology gives us a bleak future: more white men"

Mastodon · 7 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I was raised in a household in which my mother, a divorced old-school feminist, openly hoped for the day when the “racist, angry old white men,” who keep our country in sociopolitical purgatory, would die. In my youth, her mantra made me optimistic that the passing of time alone might alleviate some of our country’s most persistent conservative tendencies: hostility towards reproductive rights, demonization of the poor, environmental recklessness. But almost 30 years later, she’s still saying it, and given the United States’ (and the world’s) increasing population of old folk—where whites continue to outlive people of color and education access creates huge gaps in life expectancy—she might be saying it until she dies.
...
I first heard of the life extension movement more than a decade ago, when I met a fervent practitioner who took hundreds of vitamins and supplements each day. His behavior seemed eccentric and harmless at the time, but as more members of our country’s .01%—almost always male, and almost always white—become engaged in the attempt to draw out life spans, the potential dystopian consequences are harder to ignore. While people of color, trans folks and the poor struggle to live within the timespan they’re allegedly already allotted by virtue of living in an industrialized nation, a handful of powerful white guys promote themselves as humanitarians for trying to extend the already long lives of the favored few. There aren’t many futures more chilling to me than one in which not even the march of time can free us from our oligarchs.'

Punishment Without Evidence on Campus

Mastodon · 7 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Google the first para. to jump the paywall. Excerpt:

'The Education and Justice Departments have already gone far to subvert the norm that students accused of sexual assault retain individual rights. Now they are targeting the few rights that are left. Under new standards promulgated this spring, students can be punished before any disciplinary hearing has been held, and sometimes after anonymous allegations.
...
For the first time, the Justice Department has also explicitly introduced a “responsibility to investigate complaints of sexual harassment to determine whether a hostile environment exists that requires further action,” even if accusers remain anonymous.

This matters because a hostile environment can exist independently of the details of a specific case, and thus can be established by complaints that haven’t been corroborated and don’t qualify as traditional proof. Justice invokes “perceptions” as much as facts.'

Due-process group launches campaign against ‘victim-centered’ rape investigations

Mastodon · 7 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even as critics of college sexual-assault investigations say that law enforcement should be more involved in the process, police themselves are adopting some of the more questionable recommendations of anti-rape activists, particularly that accusers should face little scrutiny and officers should limit their collection of evidence to stymie the accused.
...
The new program offers resources on “prosecutorial misconduct,” the effort within the American Law Institute to make rape a presumed-guilty crime, and an “Exoneree Honor Roll” of accused people who were exonerated of rape.'

Canada: This Politician Quit His Job to Help Make Room For Women

Mastodon · 7 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Ontario cabinet minister announced on Monday that he would be stepping aside in order to make room for women, in an attempt to help his premier meet gender parity in her government.

But given that Ontario's cabinet is just 25 percent female, there's still a long way to go.

Ted McMeekin, a longtime provincial politician and currently the minister of municipal affairs and housing, made the announcement on Facebook, ahead of an anticipated cabinet shuffle in Canada's largest province.

"Like our Prime Minister, I've never been afraid to call myself a feminist. In fact, I've always been proud of being an honorary member of the Women's Caucus, and working for equality," he said in the statement. "But sometimes the best way for a man to advance the equality of women may be to step back and make room at the table. For me, this is such a time."'

UK: Straight White Men Banned From Equality Conference

Matt · 7 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'News that a university lecturers' union has banned straight, white men from attending their equality conferences in a bid to create "safe spaces" is deeply depressing.

University and College Union equality conferences are held exclusively for women, LGBT, ethnic minorities or disabled people, and members must declare their "protected characteristic" when applying to attend.

Surely UCU can see the irony of hosting an equality conference where – as George Orwell wrote – some are more equal than others?'

SAVE: Add Your Voice to the Call for Free Speech

Matt · 7 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Right now, the Office for Civil Rights is stifling student and professor free speech, due process, and liberty rights in order to enforce a policy agenda.

This has to stop.

Fortunately, the Senate Homeland Security Committee is holding an oversight hearing on agency overreach this Thursday, June 9th, at 10:45 a.m.
EST: http://www.hsgac.senate.gov/hearings/revisiting-the-appropriate-use-of-agency-regulatory-guidance

But let's not wait until then for your voice to be heard-- free speech is too important.

This moment, call the U.S. Capitol Switchboard at (202) 224-3121 and ask to speak to your federal representatives. Tell them the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) is a loose cannon that needs to be reigned in immediately.

Please call now and help protect the Constitution, in crisis on our campuses.

Very best,

Gina R. Lauterio, Esq.
Policy Project Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE)

Amber Heard arrested on suspicion of domestic violence in 2009 case against former girlfriend

mens_issues · 7 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Apparently women can be violent in relationships too! Excerpt:

'Actress Amber Heard, who filed for divorce from Johnny Depp last month, alleging verbal and physical abuse, herself was arrested on suspicion of domestic violence in 2009.

The King County, Washington, court clerk confirmed to People magazine Tuesday that Heard, 30, had appeared before a judge on Sept. 15, 2009, for what records call a “probable cause assault, domestic violence” hearing.

TMZ.com had reported earlier Tuesday that Heard and her then-domestic partner, photographer Tasya van Ree, argued on Sept. 14 at Seattle-Tacoma International Airport. Heard allegedly grabbed and struck van Ree on the arm, and was arrested and booked, the website said. No charges were filed.'

Former linebacker's wife arrested for domestic violence

Mastodon · 7 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former New York Giants linebacker Lawrence Taylor's wife has been arrested for domestic violence after a physical altercation in Florida, according to TMZ Sports.

Lynette Taylor, 42, was arrested Thursday on a count of domestic violence and a count of resisting arrest.

According to the report, Lawrence Taylor told police that Lynette hit him in the back of the head, leaving him with a minor laceration.

"That's a lie. My husband is a 300 pound linebacker,' she told authorities after the incident. A judge has ordered the two to stay at least 500 feet from each other.

Lynette Taylor has been arrested at least three times for violent crimes, though most of the charges were later dropped. The couple has been married for nine years and has two children together.'

Jessica Valenti Confirms Feminism Is Now Just About Whining

Mastodon · 8 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Modern feminism encourages women to complain about men, the wage gap, and just about everything else as an attempt to somehow be taken seriously. In other words, modern feminism creates a complex relationship with men. Feminists love to hate men—and to hate when men respond with scorn.

Both are addressed in this essay, published Sunday in the New York Times, an excerpt from Jessica Valenti's new memoir, "Sex Object," which is out today. It reveals why the modern feminist movement has reached its peak and will soon plummet.

Valenti, The Guardian's self-described feminist columnist, is so whiny she's difficult to take seriously. It's even more difficult to understand how an entire book on this topic is being published. In the excerpt, "What Does a Lifetime of Leers Do To Us?" the 37-year-old author says she has spent her whole "lifetime" being treated like a sex object and now, as a grown woman and a feminist, she wonders how women cope.'

Woman admits she sabotaged fiance's kayak before he drowned, authorities say

Matt · 8 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A New York State Police investigator says a woman accused of fatally sabotaging her fiancé's kayak on the Hudson River told an investigator she removed a plug on his kayak and manipulated his paddle.

Authorities say Angelika Graswald removed a drain plug from Vincent Viafore's kayak in April 2015 and pushed a floating paddle away from him after his kayak capsized.

A Cornwall police officer testified Monday that Graswald appeared calm and emotionless after she was rescued.

State Police Senior Investigator Aniello Moscato also testified Graswald told another investigator she had pulled a plug on the kayak and manipulated the ring on Viafore's paddle.'

Stanford sex assault case: Sentence was too short — but the system worked

Mastodon · 8 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week, a California judge sentenced former Stanford swimmer Brock Allen Turner to six months in jail for a horrifying sexual assault on an unconscious, alcohol-impaired woman. The resulting uproar over the sentence's undue leniency risks missing the most important lesson of the case.

Contrary to current campus conventional wisdom, the Turner case shows that the best way to deal with a campus sexual assault problem is to rely on law enforcement professionals to protect women and to pursue justice, not on campus disciplinary systems run by amateur sex bureaucrats.

The backlash against Turner's sentence is being exploited by a powerful but misguided movement to delegitimize law enforcement as the best way to handle campus sexual assaults. The accusers' rights group Know Your IX has claimed that even reporting an assault to police could harm campus victims. "#copsoffcampus," the group recently tweeted.

A myth that our universities are mired in an epidemic of sexual violence fuels this movement. Campus activists, the Obama administration and many in the media have used discredited surveys claiming that there are hundreds of thousands of campus sexual assaults annually to degrade due process protections for accused students.'

Daily Beast's Kohn Excoriates The "Men's Rights" And "Conservative Movement" For Denying Rape Culture

Mastodon · 8 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'KOHN: And I have to say, this was also where I -- her part about how she blamed political correctness for sentencing him. Come on. Brock Turner is to blame for what happened here. And if his swimming career, if his steak time with his dad has suffered, well boo-hoo, shouldn't have done what he did. And this sort of notion that we should sort of pity him, it's related to, it is very much related to the men's rights and by extension the conservative movement in general for the last several years has attacked this notion that there is rape culture, has attacked this idea that we're getting too politically correct on campuses by trying to educate boys and girls about sexual assault and safety and responsibility, and said, 'Oh no, no, no, we're turning boys into -- they're too careful now, and everything is rape now, blah, blah, blah.' You know what? This is what happens. This is what happens.'

UK: "Teach children about sexism to stop 'ticking timebomb' of sexual bullying in schools"

Mastodon · 8 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Children as young as four should be taught in school about sexism and harassment to tackle the “ticking timebomb” of sexual bullying in classrooms, a Commons select committee has been told.

Experts working within schools and with young girls who suffer sexual violence and abuse inside and outside the classroom, were unanimous on Tuesday in calling for the mandatory teaching of issues around sexism.
...
“We need to make schools teach about sexism and about feminism, talk to children about how women have changed history, how women are inventors and scientists, so that they start to see that women are not just sexual objects.”'

France considers cracking down on sexism in video games

Mastodon · 8 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The French government is considering several measures aimed at combating sexism in video games, according to a report published this week by Le Figaro. Axelle Lemaire, the French Minister of Digital Affairs, met with representatives from the French video game industry last month to discuss the set of measures, Le Figaro reports, which include financial incentives and labels for games that give a "positive image of women."
...
Catherine Coutelle, a socialist deputy of the National Assembly, proposed legislation last year that would have excluded games that portray a "degrading image of women" from receiving government tax credits. The amendment was met with opposition from some industry groups, and was withdrawn in January. But in a response to Coutelle's proposition published on Tuesday, Lemaire signaled that her ministry still aims to "encourage the production of video games that promote equality between men and women," and to address "topics related to sexism and violence against women."

Among the proposals currently under consideration are bonuses or other financial incentives for video games that promote a positive image of women, as well as a label that would distinguish such games to consumers. Sweden considered a similar labeling system, based on the Bechdel test, in 2014.'

UK: Head STYC training criticised for warning against the dangers of “mansplaining”

Mastodon · 8 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A recent Head STYC* training event has been criticised by a number of students present as bringing up “irrelevant and confusing concepts” in a “condescending manner”, as officers in charge were accused of demonstrating sexism towards men and alienating the male audience.

The criticism is aimed mainly at the YUSU Women’s Officers and their choice to include an explanation of ‘mansplaining’ in their section of the training. ‘Mansplaining’ is a relatively new and controversial term which is broadly defined as ‘to explain something to someone, typically a man to a woman, in a manner regarded as condescending or patronising’. The term was brought up in a list of ‘dos and dont’s’ which were featured alongside topics such as manhandling and calling out sexism and homophobia.

In conversation with future Head STYCS-to-be Nouse learned of how many students were left feeling somewhat ‘patronised’ by the officers. One student who attended the training and who wished to remain anonymous, stated how “mansplaining itself is clearly a sexist term and there is simply no need to create a gender-specific term for simply being patronising, we already have a word for that”.'

---

* Second and Third Year Contacts - students who act as advisors to incoming students at university.

Meet ‘Generation Snowflake’ – the hysterical young women who can’t cope with being offended

Matt · 9 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Claire Fox, head of a thinktank called the Institute of Ideas, has penned a coruscating critique of “Generation Snowflake”, the name given to a growing group of youngsters who “believe it’s their right to be protected from anything they might find unpalatable”.

She said British and American universities are dominated by cabals of young women who are dead set on banning anything they find remotely offensive.

“It makes me sad that these teens and 20-somethings have become so fearful that they believe a dissenting opinion can pose such a serious threat,” Fox wrote in an article for Mail Online.

This hyper-sensitivity has prompted the University of East Anglia to outlaw sombreros in a Mexican restaurant and caused the National Union of Student to ban clapping as “as it might trigger trauma”, asking youngsters to use “jazz hands” instead.'

UK: Equality Conference Tries To Defend ‘No Straight White Men’ Policy

Mastodon · 10 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A university lecturers’ union has tried to defend its controversial decision to exclude straight, white men from equality conferences.
...
Today, a spokesman for UCU attempted to explain the decision – despite the blatant irony in banning a select group from the next equality summit.

The spokesman told Heat Street: “[Our] members voted to continue the convention whereby different groups of people meet at a conference to discuss unique obstacles they face in the workplace. This is standard practice throughout the trade union movement, and certainly not a new initiative.”

They added: “Anyone can attend the plenary sessions and there is also an equality reps conference that anyone interested in equality can attend. It is the specific four equality conferences (Black members, women, disabilities and LGBT) that are for people within those groups.”'

Trump and his 'angry white men'

Mastodon · 10 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The other day, I was trying to think of the last time I heard the words “white men” uttered in a positive way. I came up blank.

The context for those two words is just about always negative. Sometimes people who think white guys are the problem—no matter what the problem might be—throw in the word “angry.” And “angry white men” then becomes an easy way to dismiss even legitimate concerns and grievances by white men.

A female Rutgers professor once wrote that mass murder was the result of “white male privilege.” The website Gawker once composed a list of the “worst 100 white men.”

Barack Obama said of Judge Merrick Garland, his nominee to the Supreme Court, “Yeah, he’s a white guy, but he’s a really outstanding jurist. Sorry.”

OK, he was kidding. But imagine if some chucklehead came up with a list of the “Worst 100 Black Men.” Or if some white male conservative politician nominated a like-minded African-American to the bench and said, “Yeah, he’s a black guy, but he’s a really outstanding jurist.”

This is not a woe-is-me sob story. I understand that the history of white men in America is vastly different from the history of black men or women of any color. And taking shots at rich white guys is like throwing spitballs at a battleship.'

The dangerous irony of rape accusation culture

Mastodon · 10 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you don't recognize rape accusation culture, look up what happened at Vassar, where a freshman was expelled after being accused of rape a full year after having sex with a woman who'd given no indication at the time that the encounter was anything but consensual. Look up what happened at Brandeis, where a student accused his former boyfriend of sexual misconduct over their two-year relationship, including good morning kisses that were deemed nonconsensual because the kissed party was half-asleep.

These might sound like extreme examples, but to some activists these days, any unwelcome sexual behavior is tantamount to assault, and such reasoning is given a shocking amount of credence. So when an unambiguous case of sexual assault comes along, as in the attack at Stanford, it serves to underscore the shoddiness of that reasoning. It shows the counterproductive and even dangerous consequences of turning the notion of consent into such a murky question that it can undermine the campus anti-rape movement and even prompt the ridiculous assertion that "rape on campus isn't always because people are rapists."'

Expelled Basketball Player Sues Yale

Mastodon · 10 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Yale basketball player who was expelled in February after a university committee found that he had raped a fellow student sued the university on Thursday, accusing it of a “deeply flawed process.”

In the lawsuit and an accompanying statement released by a public-relations firm, the player, Jack Montague, who was once the team captain, suggested that Yale had chosen to make an example of him because of public criticism over its handling of the hot-button issue of campus sexual assault.'

"The Rise of the New Patriarchy and Title IX"

Mastodon · 10 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A teen boy runs, and wins, against teen girls in a high school level competition. The winning part is not surprising. Men have some biological reasons for being physically superior to women. Testosterone increases their muscle mass, lung capacity, and upper body strength. Then there are all the subtle ways that make a boy/man faster and stronger: smaller Q-angles, denser bones, more efficient oxygenation.
...
The politically correct, confusing nonsense will end up depriving girls of opportunities. They'll lose to boys who compete as girls. Title IX was meant to correct sex discrimination. With the Obama administration and the feather-brained school administrators across the country, Title IX is going to cause sex discrimination because gender identity is being willfully confused with biological sex. Women and girls with female DNA and biology will be pushed out by biological boys.'

Occidental College Mostly Cleared In Federal Sexual Assault Investigation

Mastodon · 10 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A federal investigation found that, contrary to complaints from current and former students, Occidental College did not mishandle cases of sexual assault, except for delays in several cases during the 2012-13 school year.

But the report from the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights did find that the campus climate may be leading some students not to report sexual assaults they experience.

Occidental's investigation started in 2013, at the beginning of a wave of activism around campus rape. The private liberal arts college in Los Angeles entered into a voluntary resolution this week with the Education Department to measure the climate on campus as it relates to sexual violence and to improve the speed with which the college investigates assault reports. The agreement ends the investigation, allowing the government to release its findings.

As more and more universities are put on notice about how they handle sexual assault, the results of investigations such as this can provide insight into what federal officials expect from institutions.'

Woman admits to killing her two babies, gets probation

Mastodon · 10 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 35-year-old Charlotte, North Carolina woman is not going to spend a day in jail – despite the fact that she ADMITTED to killing both her babies.

Katherine Anne Jennings, the mother of two babies who died under questionable circumstances in 2012 and 2013, has been sentenced to five years of probation. She plead guilty to involuntary manslaughter in the second baby's death. Prosecutors did not charge her in the death of Katherine's first baby.

On Dec. 13, 2013, 8-month-old Luke Stephen Phillips was sleeping with his mother on the couch. He was later found DEAD – the cause of death is suffocation.

The same thing happened to his brother James Robert Phillips, who was 4 months old when he died in June 2012. A medical examiner found that he had suffocated while sleeping with his mom.'

Woman won't spend any time in prison after admitting to sex crimes against multiple children

Mastodon · 10 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Jefferson City woman won't spend any time in prison after admitting to sex crimes against multiple children. Misti Fitzwater pleaded guilty to five different felonies Thursday.

A judge suspended Fitzwater's sentence and placed her on parole. Judge Robert Schollmeyer was very clear that he did not want to have to revisit the issue with her, saying "If there is a violation that is alleged, you and I will see each other again. You do not want that to happen."

Judge Schollmeyer went on to say, "If you and I see each other in this setting again, I assure you that I will do everything that is necessary to see that these sentences will be actually executed."

Fitzwater pleaded guilty to one charge of statutory rape, two of statutory sodomy and two counts of endangering the welfare of a child.

She was charged after having sex with two separate underage partners and allowing them to smoke marijuana in her car.'

"Rape culture is a man problem. Why aren't more men speaking up?"

Mastodon · 10 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I'm not suggesting that women give up the fight. But I realize now that no woman can change how little our lives matter in this system. It's up to the men who created that system — and who don't see all rape as real and "legitimate" — to create a better system. Women are most at risk from men, and particularly the men they know and love. Men should be appalled by their complicity in a legal system that revictimizes their sisters, mothers and daughters. Men should be lining up in the streets to protest a system that prioritizes their futures over our lives.
...
Rape culture hasn't changed because most men don't want it to. Like Turner, men benefit from the presumption of their innocence. When rape culture tells men that violating an unconscious woman's body is just another part of college life, it excuses them from those questionable moments in their own college memories. It whispers in their ear that those times she was too drunk, or said no, or tried to back away weren't rape or sexual assault. Rape culture manufactures gray areas where none existed and hands the power to determine what constitutes rape to the perpetrators rather than the victims.'

Ex-High School teacher gets 7 days in jail for sex with student

Mastodon · 10 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Marysville High School teacher who admitted to a sexual relationship with an 18-year-old student was sentenced to seven days in jail.

Stacy McConoughey, 36, faced a maximum 20 years in prison on four counts of sexual battery, but Union County Common Pleas Court Judge Don Fraser, while chiding her, noted that she was contrite and cooperative throughout the investigation and hearing Monday.

"You should have taken steps to distance yourself from the young man rather than repeatedly encouraging his lust," Fraser wrote in a sentencing entry he read in court.'

"Men who want sexbots are sociopathic rapists"

Matt · 10 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Looks like some people find the idea of sexbots most threatening indeed! Excerpt:

'There is nothing less erotic than someone believing or insisting that whatever else might be going on in another person's mind – even "I do not want this" – they still have the right to have their "sexual needs" met. The people who are attracted to the idea of sex robots are the people who look at women and sex in this way. The idea that business and technology are so keen to oblige such narcissistic and sociopathic individuals is repellent.
...
There's always been a bit of sniggering about men who use prostitutes (though real contempt, counterintuitively, is directed at the women involved), or who "can't get a girlfriend". Blow-up dolls have always been a joke, as have "wankers". This too is pitiless, petty stuff. Maybe it's time to take misogynistic sexual dysfunction more seriously. Maybe people who want to buy sex robots need to present the agreement of a couple of doctors, before they are judged emotionally restricted enough to need to retreat to such an inhuman fantasy. Or maybe, out of respect for women, this technology should just be rejected.'

How to Use The Chronicle's Title IX Tracker

Matt · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But despite the high-profile crackdown, how those investigations come to be, and how they play out, isn't always clear. The civil-rights office is opening investigations much faster than it's resolving them: So far this year, 46 cases have been opened and only two resolved (one by the Department of Justice).

The Chronicle wants to shed light on the federal-enforcement process. We introduced a Title IX tracker in January, including all investigations in this wave of enforcement — since the civil-rights office issued a "Dear Colleague" letter, in April 2011, putting colleges on notice — and this week we added several new ways to use it. Our goal is to let people keep up with the process and other developments on campuses under review.'

Malecare: Your advocacy restored Federal Prostate Cancer Research Funding

Matt · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

June 9, 2016 - The Senate Appropriations Committee voted to approve its FY17 Labor-HHS Appropriations bill earlier today, with only one senator, Bill Cassidy (R-LA), voting against the bill. Funding for the Centers for Disease Control's Prostate Cancer activities program was restored!!! Thanks to all of Malecare's Patient Advocacy Leaders and ALL of You who sent emails and made phone calls to the Senate Appropriations Committee.

Malecare was the lead organization in fighting for the restoration of CDC Prostate Cancer program funding. Which means, you made this happen!

While the full Senate must vote it's approval, it is entirely unlikely that anyone will actually stand up in the Senate and speak specifically to remove CDC prostate cancer funding. Since we have won this battle in the Senate Appropriations Committee, we have won this battle overall. I mention this in case, as happened in previous years, some self proclaimed advocates or organizations try to confuse you by saying the battle is not yet over. That is akin to saying the presidential election is not decided in November, but rather when the electoral college meets in January. Don't be fooled or frightened. Please feel encouraged to email me if you have any concerns or questions. Meanwhile, lift a glass of cheer .... your advocacy has been effective and important prostate cancer research will continue to be funded.

With pride and gratitude,

Darryl Mitteldorf
darryl@malecare.org

The Brock Turner case: Sexual assault, mob justice, and the war on "rape culture"

Mastodon · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I think the victim's statement was moving and compelling. I also understand the disgust and anger at the attitudes exhibited in the statements submitted to the court by Turner's father (who infamously lamented that his son's life was being ruined for "20 minutes of action"), by his friends and other character witnesses who seemed to see him as an equal victim, and by Turner himself. While his statement makes several brief references to the pain and trauma his actions caused the victim, most of is steeped in self-pity and shows little accountability; he clearly sees himself as a victim of "the party culture" at Stanford.

But I have other concerns, too. I think this case is clearly being used to whip a new moral panic about campus rape and "rape culture," which will be used to step up the policing of consensual sex and punish innocent people (most but not all of them men). Whatever one thinks of the sentence, letting self-righteous outrage mobs and ideological zealots such as Stanford law professor Michele Dauber shape law and policy is extremely dangerous.
...
6) The Turner case should not become a political vehicle for curtailing the rights of the accused or boosting campus kangaroo courts. The people driving this crusade, such as Dauber, are quite explicit about holding the rights of the accused in extremely low regard. (Several people who attended a recent Stanford seminar on campus rape have told me that Dauber's demeanor during a talk by attorney Andrew Miltenberg, who represents students accused of sexual misconduct in campus cases, was so openly contemptuous -- with conspicuous eye-rolling and grimacing -- as to be unprofessional.) Dauber is also a strong proponent of having sexual assault cases handled by campus tribunals, which, despite the light sentence, would have served the victim in this case far worse than the real justice system did.'

Civil Liberties on Campus | Sexual Misconduct: Procedures

Mastodon · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'Tino Cuellar (moderator), Supreme Court of California Michele Dauber, Stanford Law School Jacob Gersen, Harvard Law School Andrew Miltenberg, Nesenoff Miltenberg Goddard Laskowitz, LLP Deborah Rhode, Stanford Law School.'

Don’t allow mob rule to influence judges’ rulings

Mastodon · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Of course, not every unpopular judgment is a fair one. But if we make judges political animals who pander to popular opinion, what would happen to the rights of citizens who are not the most vocal, the most powerful or the most organized? To quote Justice O’Connor, “The founders realized there has to be some place where being right is more important than being popular or powerful, and where fairness trumps strength. And in our country, that place is supposed to be the courtroom”.

Judge Persky is not the only one facing the fury of the online mob. Leslie Rasmussen, a musician who had written a character letter in support of Turner, became one of the most hated persons on social media — her band was forced to shut down its social media accounts. Cyberbullies unwittingly sent thousands of hateful messages to an unrelated woman who shared a last name with the musician.'

Many accusations of sexual misconduct on college campus are arbitrated by on-campus administrative hearings. Under pressure from the federal government and student activists seeking to eliminate sexual assaults on college, these campus “courts” have been quick to do away with due process and adopt a “guilty if accused” mentality.'

Charen: Hookup culture and the campus rape hysteria

Mastodon · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The case should remind us of something important: Don't think in categories. The left slips into this all the time: Men are guilty; women are victims. The right has its own categories: Campus rape is ginned-up hysteria based on missed signals and regretted sex. Both sides need to remove their blinders.

Many on the right have noted — correctly — that the left has gone berserk on the subject of what it calls "rape culture." According to the left's overwrought account, 1 in 5 female college students is the victim of "sexual assault." The solution, imposed by the Obama Justice Department and endorsed by the bien pensant, is a massive sexual adjudication bureaucracy that dispenses with centuries-old protections for the accused, like the presumption of innocence and the right to confront witnesses, while denying that women ever make false accusations. Many innocent young men have faced star chamber disciplinary proceedings; one young man was banned from certain parts of campus because he resembled a man who had raped a student.

But any insight can be ridden into the ground, and the Stanford case is a reminder that the right's perception of what's happening has limits, too. In my research, I have met too many students who recount rapes and sexual assaults for all of it to fit within the category of morning-after regrets. Women have been assaulted by men they'd just met, by men they thought were friends, by men who slipped drugs into their drinks and by multiple men at once. It's not all the Duke lacrosse case and "Jackie" from the University of Virginia.'

Actress: White Male Actors Should ‘Shut Up and Sit in the Corner’

Mastodon · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Oscar-nominated actress Patricia Clarkson sounded off on sexism in Hollywood, the gender wage gap and the backlash against the upcoming all-female Ghostbusters reboot in an interview, explaining that women are “still underpaid” and are still “a vast minority” in the entertainment industry.
...
“There are still so many movies made starring 50 men and one woman!” Clarkson told the paper. “A white male actor should never be allowed to complain about anything. Shut up and sit in the corner. I mean, seriously!”
...
“Men make bad movies that bomb all the time but they’re like, ‘Oh well, we didn’t do the marketing right.’ Eat me!” Clarkson told the paper.

Clarkson, who’s gearing up for the release of her latest film, Learning to Drive, also challenged comments made recently by Game of Thrones star Kit Harrington, who said that men also experience sexism in the entertainment business.

“He’s a sex symbol. Get over it,” Clarkson said of Harrington, who plays Jon Snow in the hit HBO fantasy drama. “You have an amazing career and you’re on a hot show. Take your shirt off.”'

When Did White Men Become The Bad Guys in America?

Mastodon · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here in America, there are no massacres happening and white men are certainly not a minority, but white men are regularly passionately smeared, attacked and degraded in our country. White people (men included) are the only group in the country that is discriminated against via Affirmative Action by official government policy. In all fairness, Asians are also discriminated against by universities that often wave them off in favor of less qualified applicants from different racial groups, but there's no widespread cultural assault against Asian Americans. To the contrary, when it comes to white men, outright hatred based on our skin color is commonplace. Just look at some of the stories we've covered at Right Wing News over the last couple of months.
...
It's not like we're looking for these stories or covering every one that comes down the pike; there are just so many hateful attacks aimed at whites in general and white men in particular that they're bleeding into the news.

When you've spent your whole life believing that everyone should be judged by the content of his character and the merit of his actions, not the color of his skin, it's a little shocking to find out that almost no one seems to believe in this idea any more except for mostly white conservative Americans.'

The frenzy over ‘campus rape culture’ is hurting real victims

Mastodon · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you want to know the difference between someone who is a victim of rape and someone who is a victim of the “rape culture,” you could do worse than compare the recent cases at Stanford and at Columbia.

In the case of the former, two graduate students came upon a young woman, unconscious, on the ground behind a trash bin as a man was assaulting her. She awoke in the hospital to find, by her own account, “fingers had been jabbed inside me along with pine needles and debris.”

In the case of the latter, a young woman (now widely known as “Mattress Girl” because she carried a mattress around campus to symbolize her plight) claimed that a man with whom she’d previously had consensual sex, assaulted her in her bed and then left.'

UVA Dean Defamed In Rolling Stone Article Takes On Major Feminist Organization

Mastodon · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Virginia dean who is suing Rolling Stone for defamation has asked a federal judge to force the National Organization for Women (NOW) to turn over its correspondence with lawyers for the woman whose false rape claims are the centerpiece of the debunked article, “A Rape on Campus.”

Attorneys for the dean, Nicole Eramo, allege that NOW, the largest feminist group in the U.S., and the lawyers for the false rape accuser, Jackie Coakley (“Jackie”), engaged in a “publicity stunt” by jointly crafting a Jan. 6, 2016 open letter criticizing Eramo for “re-victimiz[ing]” the fabulist.

Defendants in the $7.5 million lawsuit — which include Rolling Stone and its reporter, Sabrina Rubin Erdely — have indicated that they plan to introduce the letter as evidence in the case.'

Hillary's #WomanCard Is Over Its Limit

Mastodon · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Someone needs to remind Hillary she is running for president of a country with a population of both women and MEN. If you read her Twitter feed, or listen to her speak, you would think she only cares about the female vote. It's a little bit like she's trying to get elected on Paradise Island, Wonder Woman's birth place, but instead of an island full of gorgeous Amazons it's a commune full of angry women who own a bunch of cats, demanding abortions.
...
Here we have her tired talking point about women's rights somehow being different from men's; we still can't seem to find that one amendment in the Constitution that speaks specifically of women's rights.
...
If only Hillary herself treated women with respect this tweet might actually mean something. And there's the issue with her "we are women hear us roar" agenda, Hillary's own record with women is not great. But hey, she's a woman, so what difference does it make?'

Congress still sending mixed signals on women in the draft

Mastodon · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite key votes in Congress, it remained unclear Friday whether the United States is closer to an historic move requiring women to register for the military draft.

The Senate was wrapping up an annual defense bill that calls for opening the Selective Service to women despite opposition from some conservative lawmakers. Meanwhile, the House reached an opposite outcome in May when Republicans successfully blocked a measure integrating the draft.

Lawmakers on both sides of the aisle cried foul, claiming the issue did not get adequate debate. Now, as Congress pushes ahead with its annual defense budget, the House and Senate face brokering a compromise between lawmakers who are deeply divided over requiring women between 18-25 years old to register with Selective Service -- and potentially forcing them to the front lines of future wars.

“I am the father of two daughters. Women can do anything they put their minds to … But the idea that we should forcibly conscript young girls into combat to my mind makes little to no sense,” said Sen. Ted Cruz, R-Texas. “I could not vote for a bill that did so, particularly a bill that did so without public debate.”'

With Women in Combat, Taking the 'Man' Out of Job Titles

Mastodon · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Engineman? Yeoman? Not so fast. Now that women will be allowed to serve in all combat jobs, the U.S. Navy and Marine Corps are dropping "man" from some of their job titles to make them inclusive and gender-neutral.

Much like the term "fireman" has evolved to "firefighter" and "policeman" to "police officer," an engineman could be called an engine technician and a yeoman could be called an administrative specialist.

"This is one more step in how our force has changed," Secretary of the Navy Ray Mabus said in an interview Friday. "Our force has evolved, our force is different. And I believe it's stronger and better."

Some Army and Air Force titles end in "man," too, but the services aren't considering changing them. The names are historically significant, and the focus now is on bringing women into the jobs rather than on what to call them, both services said.'

UK: Couple ordered to compensate men forced to work as slaves

Matt · 11 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A British couple are faced with paying a bill of hundreds of thousands of pounds to victims of modern slavery in the first case of its kind to come to court.

Six Lithuanian men were trafficked to the UK and severely exploited by the gangmaster company that employed them, DJ Houghton Chicken Catching Services Ltd, based in Kent.'

Study shows white males underrepresented at UK colleges

Matt · 12 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The UK university admissions service UCAS “for the first time” has put out data regarding the likelihood of college acceptance “based on gender, ethnicity and the social background of applicants.”

And guess what — “Women were found to attend university 90 per cent more than men,” and “disadvantaged groups, young men and the white ethnic group are the most under-represented in higher education.”

UCAS Chief Executive Mary Curnock Cook said “Girls are doing better throughout primary, secondary and higher education than boys; poor, white boys are the most disadvantaged group in entry to higher education and the gap is getting bigger.”'

This is what happens when a university prosecutes an alleged rape

Matt · 12 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you were charged with a heinous sex crime, you would assume that the investigation of the allegation would be impartial and fair. Indeed, the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights Revised Sexual Harassment Guidance mandates that universities undertake "adequate, reliable, and impartial investigation of complaints." Likewise, the OCR's 2011 Dear Colleague Letter on campus violence instructed that, "a school's investigation and hearing processes cannot be equitable unless they are impartial."

But what if it turned out colleges were ignoring the OCR's impartiality requirement, and instead training investigators to adhere to "victim-centered" approaches, which in practice means "always believe the victim"?
...
Two days later the Montana District Court ruled against the request on technical grounds. But Judge Dana Christensen sharply criticized the university's adjudication procedures, explaining:

"Indeed, from a normative perspective, the process applied to Plaintiff Doe and the behavior of University officials in investigating and prosecuting this matter offends the Court's sense of fundamental fairness and appears to fall short of the minimal moral obligation of any tribunal to respect the rights and dignity of the accused." (p. 208)."'

Planned Parenthood Blames ‘Toxic Masculinity’ for Orlando Attack

Mastodon · 13 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Planned Parenthood Action’s black community outreach arm is blaming the Orlando terrorist attack on “toxic masculinity.”

Shortly after the terrorist attack at the Pulse nightclub, a popular gay bar, the Twitter account claiming to represent Parenthood Black Community tweeted its own theories about the motivation behind the attack. Planned Parenthood Black Community alleged the attack was due to “toxic masculinity” and “imperialist homophobia,” while simultaneously claiming it has nothing to do with Islam:
...
Planned Parenthood Black Community explained, stating, “Toxic masculinity enables rapists & rape culture, violent heterosexism & attacks on reproductive freedom”:'

India: Woman held for filing fake rape case

Matt · 13 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 21-year-old woman was arrested on Monday for filing a fake abduction-cum-sexual assault case against three men in Delhi last week, police said.

Investigators said the woman, a resident of Jagatpuri in east Delhi, had demanded Rs 10 lakh extortion money from the three persons to withdraw her rape complaint against them.

Police have seized Rs 9.5 lakh from her possession.

The woman had on Saturday filed a case against the three persons at a south Delhi police station alleging that they abducted her in a car and sexually assaulted her.'

Men ‘more likely to be sacrificed for the benefit of others’ than women – study

Mastodon · 14 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'People generally think that women’s welfare should be preserved over men’s, according to a new study published in the journal Social Psychological and Personality Science.

Researchers conducted a series of experiments in which subjects were presented with scenarios in which their choices could lead to a (real or hypothetical) person being harmed in some way.
...
Subjects were also asked questions such as: “On a sinking ship, whom should you save first? Men, women, or no order”; and “According to social norms, how morally acceptable is it to harm men/women for money?”

Overall, the answers of both female and male respondents suggested that social norms account for greater harming behavior toward a male than a female target.'

Can we change your mind about Men's Rights Activists?

Mastodon · 14 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Are Men's Rights Activists (MRAs) a necessary force for good, or harmful and unnecessary?

According to entrepreneur and Telegraph Men columnist Alex Proud, groups identifying themselves as such are "deluded conspiracy nutjobs" who ought to be ignored at every turn.

"In MRA circles, you'll hear a lot about the feminisation of society, but when pressed on specifics, MRAs either dissemble or offer up examples where women are moving towards the same deal men have enjoyed for years. You do start to wonder if it's all just nostalgia for a time when boys ruled the world without having to try," Proud wrote.

Others, however, see the existence of organised communities speaking out for male issues a natural and necessary antidote to feminism.'

Local men spending Father's Day protesting custody laws

Mastodon · 14 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the login by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'A group of local fathers said they would love to spend Father's Day celebrating with their children.

Instead, they'll be protesting at the Rock County Courthouse against what they see as gender inequality in the child custody decisions of courts. The protesters, who are part of the Wisconsin Fathers' Rights Movement, will carry banners, and a podium will be available for anyone who wants to speak.

In divorces, mothers receive custody of children 80 percent of the time, said Janesville father and rally organizer Jeremiah Jacobs.

“That's not OK,” he said. “It's the children who suffer. Fatherless children is the cause of a lot of problems in our society.”'

Orlando shooter's wife knew of plans, aided and abetted

Matt · 14 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Let me be real clear: the nutcase Islamist homophobic bigot who apparently was himself gay, or if not, then inclined that way, is the murdering piece of shit who killed all those people. No reducing or denying it in any way. In the rush to assign blame let's not forget that planning a crime like this on the down-low is next to impossible. His wife KNEW he planned the attack and by her own admission helped him plan it by taking him to the club to case it. Then she stayed quiet about his plans. This is called guilt by complicity and by her own admission she admits her role in the attack: aiding and abetting. Damn right she needs to be charged and locked up for life. Will she be? No. Because she's female. Excerpt:

'The Orlando gunman's wife has told federal agents she tried to talk her husband out of carrying out the attack, NBC News has learned.

Omar Mateen's wife, Noor Zahi Salman, told the FBI she was with him when he bought ammunition and a holster, several officials familiar with the case said. She told the FBI that she once drove him to the gay nightclub, Pulse, because he wanted to scope it out.

Mateen opened fire at Pulse early Sunday, leaving 49 dead and 53 injured. Twenty-seven victims remained hospitalized Tuesday. Six were in critical condition, according to hospital officials who said the death toll was still at risk of rising because one or two of those patients were "profoundly ill."'

"We are the United State of Women, hear us complain, bicker and whine"

Mastodon · 14 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There's this summit thing happening today called the United #StateofWomen that is supposedly talking about how far women have come but with a focus on how far we have to go. You know, that traditional leftist nonsense of segregating women from men and pretending we have super special rights because the Constitution spoke specifically about vaginas making a difference with individual liberties.

Pretty sure it's the XX Amendment, definitely not the XY Amendment because evil men or something. Here is our First Lady making some commercial with other self-important ladies...
...
Going through the list of speakers for the two-day summit reads a little bit like a Marxist phone book, with Valerie Jarrett, Cecile Richards and other "I am woman hear me roar" types.'

UK: 'Penny Dreadful' Is Proving That Misandry In Feminism Can Be Fun

Mastodon · 14 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism fueled by anger isn't sexy or fun. These days, it's all the rage to ask celebrities if they identify with the F-word. Regardless of whether they have any background in the subject, we treat their fame like it gives them cultural authority and condemn them when they give the wrong answer. Many dance around it, because a wrong answer is all too easy: If you shy away from it, you're sexist, but if you embrace it too wholeheartedly, you're an angry, shrill, unchill feminist.
...
In Season 3, she uses her new immortality to recruit women who are in the same position she once was — whores — and incite them to rise up. Her methods are unconventional. They're a mixture of her own seduction, as she invites them into bed with her male partner, and encouragements of brutality. "Go now to those dark streets you know so well," she tells them. "Find me a bad man, a faithless husband, a cruel lover… Find him and bring me his right hand. Cut it off."

This is not pleasant, easy-to-swallow feminism. It's not politically correct. It's everything other shows and celebrities reject when they shrink from the label of "feminism." It's bra-burning and violently rejecting the male presence and sticking it to The Man and maybe even murdering him. It's extreme. But it's a mindset so many shows avoid like the plague, convinced it can't be fun for all viewers to watch. Lily and Penny Dreadful prove that notion is silly.'

Biden Says College Men Who Listen to Rape Jokes and Do Nothing Are “Accomplices” to Actual Rape

Mastodon · 14 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In Biden's view, America's own culture is to blame for allowing women to go on feeling unheard. Even more directly, he reminded the audience of a simple, too-often-forgotten fact: "Sex without consent is rape. Period. And if you can't consent because you are unconscious, it is rape."

But Biden reserved some of his harshest words for "regular" guys who put up with "the locker room talk, the bar banter, the rape jokes," any of the "sexist talk [that] perpetuates the idea that women are less deserving of basic human dignity than men." Drawing upon Dante’s classic argument that the deepest circle of hell is reserved for those who remain silent "in times of moral crisis," Biden argued that it isn't merely an act of passivity to ignore these (wildly unfunny) "jokes." In fact, he said, "If you let it pass…you become an accomplice."'

India: Man held for rape under false promise of marriage

Mastodon · 14 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Vizhinjam police on Monday arrested a 38-year-old man on charges of sexually exploiting a widow under the false promise of marriage. The police identified the accused as Saju of Sisilipuram. He has been booked for rape.

The police said that a case was registered against the accused after the victim attempted suicide on last Tuesday by swallowing excess numbers of sleeping pills. The victim was a mother of two. She was discharged from the hospital a day later following which the cops recorded her statement and registered a case.

According to the complainant, her husband had died three years ago following which Saju developed a relationship with her. However, recently Saju tried to distance himself from her as he wanted to marry another woman. She was heartbroken and hence tried to commit suicide.'

‘Feminist’ Obama: We Need To Change The Internet To Protect Women

Mastodon · 14 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama says that it’s up to Americans to make changes to the internet to protect women from social media harassment.

“We need to change an internet where women are routinely harassed and threatened when they go online,” he said during the White House United State Of Women conference in Washington D.C. organized by his senior adviser Valerie Jarrett today.

Obama took the podium, declaring that he is a feminist.

“I may be a little grayer than I was eight years ago, but this is what a feminist looks like,” he said proudly, as the the audience cheered wildly.'

India: ‘Rape survivor’ is kingpin of gang, held for extortion

Matt · 14 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three days after a 25-year-old woman filed an FIR and accused two youths of allegedly abducting, drugging and gang-raping her in their moving Swift Dzire car, the police on Monday arrested the woman and her live-in partner on the charges of extorting money from the youths.

Police said all the charges the woman allegedly made against the two youths, who are pursuing their MBA courses from different universities in Australia and India, were false and premeditated with the intention to extort money from their families. The arrested live-in partner of the woman, identified as Kishan Kumar, is a resident of Jagatpuri in east Delhi.'

Michelle Obama urges men at women's summit to 'be better'

Mastodon · 15 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was a summit on the "United State of Women," but Michelle Obama had advice for the men in the audience: Be better.

"Be better at everything. Be better fathers," she said during a conversation with one-time talk-show host Oprah Winfrey. "Just being good fathers who love your daughters and are providing a solid example of what it means to be a good man in the world. That is the greatest gift that the men in my life gave to me."

She urged the men who were among the estimated 5,000 people who attended the daylong, White House-organized conference to be part of their family's lives, to do the dishes and not "babysit" their children.

"Be engaged. Don't just think going to work and coming home makes you a man," Mrs. Obama said.

"Be better. Just be better. I could go on, but I'm not. You get the point, fellas," she said.'

Why The White House Wants You To Live In The United State Of Women

Mastodon · 15 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'More than 5,000 powerful women from across the country and around the world met in Washington, DC for the first-ever United State of Women summit on Tuesday. With an ambitious agenda to tackle the biggest issues holding women back from total equality, leaders from the White House, Hollywood, major corporations, and civil society gathered together in one room to propose solutions.'

Senate passes bill including women in Selective Service

Matt · 15 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The United States Senate voted to pass a defense bill today that would require young women to sign up for a potential military draft for the first time in U.S. history. The vote was 85-13 in favor of the National Defense Authorization Act, a $600 billion defense spending bill that had a host of other controversial provisions in it, including prohibiting the closure of Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, and denying the Pentagon's attempt to close military bases.

Republicans were divided about whether the U.S. should require women to register for the draft when they turn 18. Sen. Ted Cruz told Politico it was a "radical change that is attempting to be foisted on the American people," while Sen. John McCain said "a large bipartisan majority on the Armed Services Committee agreed that there is simply no further justification to limit Selective Service registration to men."'

Saudi Arabia Has Funded 20% Of Hillary's Presidential Campaign, Saudi Crown Prince Claims

Matt · 15 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Ever wonder why supposedly feminist Hillary stays quiet about how women in the ME are treated? Here's your answer. Excerpt:

'In what may be the pinnacle of hypocrisy, moments ago Hillary Clinton, while speaking live on national security and addressing the Orlando shooting took some time from her constant bashing of the Second Amendment and calling for a ban on assault rifles, to say some less than kind words about Saudi Arabia whom it accused of supporting radical organizations...
...
There is nothing wrong with that statement, as it is the whole truth - Saudi Arabia's involvement in supporting terrorism stretches from Sept 11 all the way through to ISIS - however, where there is a big, and potentially law-breaking, problem is what Jordan's official news agency, Petra News Agency, reported on Sunday citing the Saudi crown price, namely that Saudi Arabia is a major funder of Hillary Clinton’s campaign to become the next president of the United States.

As MEE notes, the Petra News Agency published on Sunday what it described as exclusive comments from Saudi Deputy Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman which included a claim that Riyadh has provided 20 percent of the total funding to the prospective Democratic candidate's campaign.'

Fathers4Justice storms Loose Women studio forcing show to briefly go off air

Matt · 15 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. The author tries to conflate an unrelated erroneous bomb scare previously with this protest, but it's a pretty transparent effort. Still, not unexpected given how the MSM hates the MRM. Excerpt:

'Loose Women was forced to go briefly off air today after a 'peaceful protest' was made by Fathers4Justice.

Three male audience members of the group interrupted a segment in which Coleen Nolan was discussing her weight loss journey with guest Dan Hooper.

A man's voice could be heard shouting what sounded like "Father4Justice no kids, no cash".
...
The interruption comes just months after the ITV Southbank studios had to be evacuated when two controlled explosions took place in the car park after a suspicious vehicle was found.

Loose Women was mid-air during the moment an announcement was made that the incident was happening and being dealt with.'

Twitter suspends Milo over tweets

Matt · 15 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The controversial conservative flame-thrower was booted off the social networking site Wednesday for reasons that have yet to be determined, though Milo has been under fierce attack from Muslims for his criticism of the left for “choosing Islam over gays.”

Milo told Heat Street on Tuesday: “I saw the shootings happen and realized this has been something I’ve been speaking about for a very long time and although I’m constitutionally opposed to saying, ‘I told you so,’ this did strike me as an illustration of something I’ve been warning against for quite some time.”'

"Rape Culture Hysteria" now out in book and electronic formats

Matt · 15 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Via email:

"Rape Culture Hysteria: Fixing the Damage Done to Men and Women" has come out in print: https://www.createspace.com/6307304

E-book at: http://www.amazon.com/Rape-Culture-Hysteria-Fixing-Damage-ebook/dp/B01EENF4HW. Description:

'Rape Culture Hysteria: Fixing the Damage Done to Men and Women offers a comprehensive overview and debunking of the "rape culture" myth that has devastated campuses and is spilling into Main Street America. An ideological madness is grotesquely distorting North America's view of sexuality. The book applies sanity to the claims that men are natural rapists and our culture encourages sexual violence.

Written by a libertarian feminist and rape survivor, Rape Culture Hysteria opens with a highly personal appeal to depoliticize rape and treat it instead as a crime. Victims need to heal. Politicizing their pain and rage is a callous political maneuver that harms victims, women and men.'

Sorry men, Michelle Obama just doesn’t think you’re good enough

Mastodon · 15 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Excerpt:

'Michelle Obama hosted a “United State of Women” summit Tuesday at the White House. The schedule featured an interview with the First Lady conducted by Oprah Winfrey.

At one point, Winfrey asked Obama if she had any advice for men. “What can men do, leaving here?” the former talk show host asked.

Obama’s response was pretty telling.

“Be better,” the First Lady replied. As Winfrey screeched (literally) with laughter and the attendees of the women’s summit reacted with rousing cheers and applause, Obama reiterated, “Be better at everything.” And, the audience, along with Oprah shriek, howl and cheer some more.

This offers some great insight into Mrs. Obama’s view of men, as well as the overall agenda at this summit. The one message the First Lady can provide to American men is that they’re just not good enough? That men aren’t living up to her, Oprah and the audience’s expectations of what a man should be bringing to the table for these perfect women.'

State of Smug: Notable Dumb Comments from the United State of Women Conference

Mastodon · 15 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Next, actor Matt McGorry, the token man at the gathering, stated that to help feminism succeed, men should “have [women’s] backs and listen.”

This is what men can do to help women. Shut up and don’t dare try to “mansplain” anything. Even though it seems to me, since men hold the majority of offices in all three branches of government, it would appear that men could affect actual change through legal action. But that’s just my poor attempt at “mansplaining.”'

Justice’s War on the Law and Y Chromosomes

Mastodon · 15 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Letter here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'The Journal is right to criticize the Obama administration’s attack on due process on campus (“Punishment Without Evidence on Campus,” Review & Outlook, June 7). Constitutional violations will result from its pressure on colleges to impose “provisional suspensions for [those] accused” (of sexual assault) before anyone has even “examined the evidence.”

The Obama Justice Department also wrongly demanded “interim measures” against students who were accused of sexual harassment, but had not been found guilty of anything, such as barring them from libraries and dining halls where they might encounter an accuser. If exclusion from key areas on campus can be triggered by a harassment complaint over nothing more than a dirty joke or a criticism of feminism, the chilling effect on speech will be huge. Yet the Justice Department demanded that the University of New Mexico investigate as “harassment” all “unwelcome” sexual speech, even though many examples of such speech are protected by the First Amendment under court rulings like D eJohn v. Temple University (2008).'

"Toxic masculinity: The Stanford rapist and the Orlando shooter are two sides of the same bent coin"

Mastodon · 15 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Brock Turner, the Stanford rapist, and the Orlando shooter (I do not want to type his name; he has had enough publicity) are the flip sides of the same bent coin. I am not claiming that their crimes are equivalent. But I am saying that both men, in their twisted way, represent the poisonous levels at which toxic masculinity operates in our culture. Fundamentalism shores up masculinity. While male insecurities are present in Catholic church documents in the 13th century, they go back further. Anywhere that one reads about the regulation of women — their bodies, their reproductive capabilities, their abilities to speak, to think, to live independently — there you will find a fragile masculinity asserting power over the gender that does not have the physical power to fight back.
...
So, in looking at the Orlando shooter and Brock Turner, we have two examples of how young men's understandings of what it means to be male in this culture have led to death and destruction.'

Canada: Status of Women committee calls on feds to introduce legislation by next summer

Mastodon · 16 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Prime Minister Justin Trudeau has proudly declared he is a feminist, but now his Liberal government is being urged to back up those claims by considering how each of its decisions affects women and girls.

The Status of Women committee is recommending that gender-based analysis -- a tool that helps government study how policy, legislation and program decisions might impact women and men in different ways -- be mandatory across all government departments and agencies.

...

If the analysis then reveals one gender will experience disproportionately negative impacts, policy-makers have the opportunity to make adjustments or otherwise mitigate those effects.

For example, Fraser said, applying gender-based analysis to the billions in infrastructure spending the Liberal government has promised would show that while the money could lead to a boost in employment, the jobs would be in skilled trades that disproportionately employ men.

"We should be using this information to encourage more women to get involved in the skilled trades, so when the government makes a massive investment in infrastructure, the benefits are shared equally between different genders," he said.'

‘Sex-obsessed’ teacher is back in school

Mastodon · 16 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Long Island teacher who was accused of sexually harassing male colleagues and students last year is back in the classroom, The Post has learned.

Cecilia Sanossian, 52, a married mother of two, referred to male underlings as “FILFs,” or “fathers I’d like to f--k,” and called one a “hot fudge chocolate (sundae) that students want to eat,” her accusers at Valley Stream North High School alleged last year.

Despite 10 members of the social studies department signing a letter condemning her, an internal investigation found the complaints unsubstantiated and Sanossian resumed teaching last week.

“When I saw her at school, I couldn’t believe it,” said one teacher. “It’s unbelievable that they would allow this to happen. It’s a cover up of her actions, plain and simple. People – teachers, students – are just in shock.”
...
Two teachers, Al Daddino and John Brennan, filed with the state Division of Human Rights after they said their complaints about Sanossian were ignored last year by school brass.

A source said the two married men plan on pursuing a civil rights claim against Sanossian.'

Biden Ready to Freeze Funds For Schools That Don’t Comply with Anti-Sexual Assault Initiative

Mastodon · 16 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Biden and his team reached out to colleges across the country to get feedback on how they could change this dangerous culture. The top thing they heard from students, he said, was to get men involved. So, they started the It’s On Us initiative.

“The answer isn’t to shame women for drinking,” he said. “Consent isn’t ‘well I didn’t hear no.’ Sex without consent is rape.”

“Everyone has a responsibility,” he continued, particularly school administrations. “There is no excuse” for an institution of higher learning to put its reputation above students’ respect.

He and his staff are studying the results of hundreds of colleges across the country to determine if they have followed the It’s On Us guidelines.

If not, they can expect to be stripped of some important funding.'

‘Below Deck’ star arrested and charged with domestic violence

Mastodon · 16 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While passion and volatility can lead to reality TV fame, Kate Chastain is learning that those traits have very different consequences in the real world.

The “Below Deck” star, 33, was arrested for biting and choking her girlfriend in Melbourne Beach, Fla., on Monday, Page Six has confirmed.

Earlier that day, a domestic violence investigation was launched after the reality star’s girlfriend, Ro Hernandez, showed up to work with bruises on her arm. After looking into the matter, police found that Chastain had bit and choked her girlfriend while trying to kick her out of their home, according to TMZ, which first reported the arrest.'

A little humor from Dilbert

charlie · 16 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Scott Adams provides us with commentary from Dilbert to add a little humor to men's issues.

http://dilbert.com/strip/2016-06-16

NPO: Missouri Rally, Hopes for Strong Shared Parenting Law

Matt · 16 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Attend the Fatherless Day Rally in Jefferson City this Friday -- tomorrow -- June 17, from noon to 3 PM in the Capitol Rotunda to support House Bill 1550. Governor Nixon has been invited. Major print and television media are expected to attend, as they did last year, so we need to show a good crowd!

Will Missouri Governor Jay Nixon sign the shared parenting bill HB1550?

This is the most important question in the family court reform movement at this exact moment. It is a good bill, with strong protections for shared parenting. The Missouri legislature passed it almost unanimously. We are hoping that he will sign it either on Friday, June 17 -- National Fatherless Day -- or on Monday June 20, in honor of Fathers Day.'

Culturally-sanctioned boy-rape makes trouble worse in Middle East

Matt · 16 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Taliban are using child sex slaves to mount crippling insider attacks on police in southern Afghanistan, exploiting the pervasive practice of "bacha bazi" -- paedophilic boy play -- to infiltrate security ranks, multiple officials and survivors of such assaults told AFP.

The ancient custom is prevalent across Afghanistan, but nowhere does it seem as entrenched as in the province of Uruzgan, where "bacha bereesh" -- or boys without beards -- widely become objects of lustful attraction for powerful police commanders.
...
Some policemen, they said, demand bachas like a perk of the job, refusing to join outposts where they are not available.

Horrifying abuse at checkpoints makes the boys, many unpaid and unregistered, hungry for revenge and easy prey for Taliban recruitment -- often because there is no other escape from exploitative commanders.'

Washington Post Study Finds Zero Rapes on Campuses, and They Claim That's a Bad Thing

Matt · 16 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Washington Post on Wednesday reported that it conducted a review of federal campus safety data from over 2,220 colleges in the United States that offer bachelor's or advanced degrees. The results of the newspaper's analysis showed that over 1,300 those colleges had zero reported rapes on campus in 2014. After having the controversial "one in five" or "one in four" college women are the victim's of sexual assault stat drilled into our heads over the last several years, one might think the results of the The Post's study are welcomed news. Nope, at least not to The Post — in fact, the newspaper dedicates the remainder of the article explaining why its own study must be wrong.

It starts with the article's headline: "Hundreds of colleges had zero rape reports in 2014. And that could be worrisome."

And continues on from there.'

Feminist Doesn’t Feel Bad About Toddler Alligator Death Because Father Was ‘White’

Mastodon · 17 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'So one Twitter user has apparently come to regret her series of tweets. ‘Brienne of Swarth,’ who goes by the Twitter handle @femme_esq, tweeted out a couple of very offensive tweets about the child who was dragged into the water by an alligator near the Disney World lagoon. After a fury of backlash, ‘Brienne of Snarth’ appears to have deleted her twitter account. However, HeatStreet documented some of her tweets below. The website characterized the user as a Chicago-based “social justice warrior” with more than 11,000 followers. Her real identity is unknown.'

Another Lawsuit Is Coming After Obama's Sexual Assault Policies

Mastodon · 17 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The country's biggest advocate for civil liberties on U.S. campuses has filed a lawsuit that could blow up a key plank in the Obama administration's campaign against college sexual assaults.

The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) is backing a lawsuit by John Doe, an anonymous former University of Virginia (UVA) law student who in January 2016 was found responsible for assaulting a female student during an alcohol-fueled sexual encounter back in 2013. Doe contends that the encounter was perfectly consensual and that his female counterpart showed no signs of being impaired by alcohol, let alone incapacitated.

While Doe was still allowed to receive his law degree, his degree was held up for a year, he has been banned from UVA's campus for life, and his sexual assault finding is included on his school transcript. Instead of suing UVA, Doe and FIRE are going after the Obama administration, arguing that illegal Department of Education policies are responsible for damaging Doe's legal career.'

Obama's next project should be fatherhood: Column

Mastodon · 17 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"By almost every measure, the group that is facing some of the most severe challenges in the 21st century in this country are boys and young men of color," President Obama said in 2014 when he launched My Brother's Keeper, an initiative to help black and Latino boys. The president went on to note that compared with young white men, young minority males are less likely to graduate from high school, less likely to be gainfully employed and more likely to be poor.

A new round of social science confirms the president's observations and indicates they apply not just to young men of color but also to young men from lower-income homes generally. Indeed, what is striking about today's trends is that poor boys, as well as Latino and African-American boys, are often doing worse than their female peers when it comes to a range of outcomes in young adulthood, from educational attainment to incarceration to employment as young adults. For instance, today, less than 40% of Latino and black college graduates are male.

In trying to account for the falling fortunes of young men from disadvantaged backgrounds, scholars, policymakers and journalists have tended to focus on factors such as poverty and racial and income segregation. These structural factors matter, to be sure, but so too does an oft-neglected factor — missing fathers. A series of new studies confirms a time-tested truth: Dads matter, and their absence from the home is a major reason why poor and minority males are floundering.'

Bill Moyers goes off deep end in feminist tirade against Trump

Mastodon · 17 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It'd be funny if there weren't so many idiots ready to believe it. I actually LOL'd as I read it. Excerpt:

'So how does a Controlling Man operate? First, according to Amnesty International's chart on the "methods of coercion," he isolates the victim. That's easy enough to do if the victim is a prisoner or wife. You'd think it would be harder if the controlling figure is running for president and targeting millions of voters, but television reaches into homes, in effect isolating individuals. Each of them voluntarily attends to the words and antics of the clownish performer who, with his orangey bouffant do and dangling red tie, stands out so flamboyantly from all the bland suits. Those prospective voters may have tuned in seeking information about the candidates (or even for entertainment), but what they let themselves in for is a blast of head-on Trumpian coercion.
...
All of this Trumpianism can be electrifying, exhausting and undoubtedly mentally debilitating, which not so coincidentally is the third coercive tactic on Amnesty International's list. The relentlessness and incoherence of the controller's harangues tend to weaken a victim's (or viewer's) will to resist, and thanks to the media, Trump is everywhere — the big man at the podium always talking at us, always looking at us, always watching us.'

Students protest 'toxic rape culture' on campus where 97% of undergrads are female

Matt · 18 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I've said it before: the goal of campus feminists is the elimination of men from higher education. Feeling a bit like Salem during the witch trial era? Yep. Excerpt:

'St. Catherine University has cut ties with an event organizer, Heartland Inc., after protesters accused both the school and the company's owners of being insensitive to rape survivors.

On Monday, student demonstrators denounced what they called a "toxic rape culture" at the St. Paul campus, where 97 percent of the undergraduates are women.

About two dozen protesters marched on the main gate with signs saying "Rape culture is here" and "We will not be silenced." They demanded, among other things, that the school distance itself from Heartland and its founders, Craig and Patricia Neal, whose son is in prison for rape.

Initially, the university released a brief statement expressing compassion for all sides in the Neal case. But after an outcry from students, Sister Andrea Lee, the president of the Catholic university, issued another statement vowing "unwavering support for victims of sexual violence," and announcing that "we have discontinued our association with Heartland."'

Republicans Should Man Up On Fatherlessness

Mastodon · 18 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Leslie Loftis recently asked "Fatherlessness: What are Republican's Doing About It?" which decried the existence of "Court created Fatherlessness." Historically, between 33 percent and 50 percent of children whose family experiences divorce lose complete contact with one parent within 3 years. Using the low estimate, U.S. Family Courts create a fatherless child every single minute of every single day.

These laws also contribute to the decline in marriage rates. As Dr. Helen Smith told Fox & Friends, the out of balance risk has caused some men to walk away from marriage altogether. These men then share their horrific experience in family courts with their sons who are justifiably worried about what divorce might do to them. Is it then surprising, men view marriage as less important?
...
Yet national politicians have no understanding. Former U.S. Representative George Radanovich wrote in 2014:

"0 percent of the 537 elected federal officials in Washington D.C. fully understand the relationship between the fatherless child and government costs; that dedicated parenting is essential to the pursuit of happiness and the lack thereof is the common denominator of the runaway cost of government"."'

Author Vows To End Rape Culture ‘Hysteria’ With New Book

Mastodon · 18 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Articles about “rape culture” are proliferating on the internet and in magazines, with the most notable example being the debunked Rolling Stone article “A Rape on Campus.”

But feminist and author Wendy McElroy argues in her new book, “Rape Culture Hysteria: Fixing the Damage Done to Men and Women,” that claims about rape culture are exaggerated and, in fact, hurt both men and women.

According to McElroy, rape culture has become “a very dominant issue—it’s really taking over campuses—largely because of the backing of the office of civil rights of the Department of Education and the ‘Dear Colleague’ letters they send out.”

The Department of Education will say that if colleges don’t want to lose their funding, they have to comply with their demands [about how sexual assault is addressed].” She also says that there is a “rape culture dogma on campuses” that is “starting to spill out into the mainstream.”'

Columbia Student: The Damage Done By ‘Mattress Girl’

Mastodon · 18 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It’s been roughly a year since Emma Sulkowicz, a.k.a. “mattress girl,” graduated from Columbia University. While it’s unclear whether undergrads are any safer today, as a rising senior at Columbia, I can testify to the alarmism around sex on campus that has emerged as an unintended consequence of the recent activism.

...

While Schwartz’s perspective must be taken into account, so must the concerns of her peers. Competing tensions that make men feel endangered and women silenced have created a climate that has actually quieted discourse about how to improve sexual assault prevention and enforced antagonisms that perpetuate gender-based misconduct instead of prohibiting it. Men are scared of women on campus now, and fear breeds anger and prejudice. Women are frustrated by men, which inspires a lack of desire to collaborate for solutions.

...

Most men who are frightened of being falsely accused probably wouldn’t have perpetrated sexual assault in the first place. Meanwhile, 98 out of 100 accused rapists never serve a day in prison, and the activism from last year didn’t change that — nor did it enlighten the public about who victims are and how to help. Instead, it inspired impractical laws with unintended consequences, isolating potential allies and enforcing a new sexual stigma that’s essentially foreclosed productive dialogue about assault on college campuses and beyond.'

Judge Upholds Suspension Of Boy In Pastry Gun Incident

Mastodon · 19 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A major blow for a father trying to clear his son's name. The suspension for a seven-year-old boy has been upheld after he chewed his breakfast pastry into a gun.

The story stirred up controversy nationwide, WJZ's Rick Ritter explains, while his parents demanded the suspension be taken off his record.

"It was blue and it was a rectangular one, a cherry one," Josh Welch said.

It's the world's most controversial pastry — one that ripped through national headlines.

"It wasn't a big deal to him. He figured it could go bang bang and he was just playing around," his father, B.J. Welch, said.

In March of 2013, second grader Joshua Welch chewed his breakfast pastry into the shape of a gun and pretended to fire it. Park Elementary School suspended him for two days, leaving his parents outraged.'

"In praise of fathers, mostly"

Mastodon · 19 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Father's Day is on Sunday. "So what?" I hear some overstretched mothers out there muttering. For fathers can feel like something of an optional extra nowadays. Once, the place of fathers was at the apex of the familial pyramid. The justification was that they earned the money, often in dangerous, miserable or physically demanding jobs. If there was a war, they fought it. They made some sort of compensation for the fact that they did not give birth or look after children, by sometimes putting their life on the line – just as women did when they went into childbirth.
...
One or two things still spring to mind. They are most uncontroversially and empirically valuable when it comes to parenting boys. Survey after survey has shown that families with boys who lose the male role model after separation tend to have behavioural and educational difficulties. Fathers are crucial role models in teaching boys how to be good men.

Fathers have also had to adapt to one of the most rapid and singular shifts in social organisation ever – the just and overdue rise of feminism. There are a few men who complain that this has gone too far – that despite all the real and thankless privations of childrearing, the commonality and companionship some modern stay-at-home mothers enjoy at the playground, school gates or coffee shop is denied to most working fathers (who may be sweating it out a windowless office somewhere). Yet most haven't chosen to sulk – they have got on with it without much fuss.
...
So let's hear it for fathers. They have been asked to learn a new way of being in the world and by and large most of them have risen to the challenge with some aplomb. For one day a year at least, a celebration is surely not too much to ask. In return, for the other 364 days of the year, we'll shut up and carry on apologising. But every dog has its day – and Father's Day is ours. I, for one, am damn sure I'm going make the most of it.

If it's OK with my wife and kids, that is.'

Married with children: America's invisible men

Mastodon · 19 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Married man with children? Dude, in America, you were somebody once upon a time. A cultural phenom. Ward Cleaver. Mike Brady. Cliff Huxtable. Father always knew best.

Times change. Culture, too. You are America's forgotten man now, largely invisible, often risible and, in certain quarters, completely contemptible.

In the early 21st century, no one writes tender novels or screenplays about you and what you do for your wife and kids. There are no sitcoms or major motion pictures or binge-watched HBO series where you shine. There are no invitations to "The View" to discuss how you made it to your tenth or 20th or 25th wedding anniversary, or how you put your kids through college on a working man's salary.

Your role as father has been deemed unnecessary, or at least clouded in doubt. Any number of pieces published in the mainstream press say so.'

Due Process Legal Update: Complaints Keep Rolling In

Matt · 19 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yesterday, in a lawsuit sponsored by FIRE, a former University of Virginia School of Law student challenged the Department of Education's unlawful "preponderance of the evidence" mandate. While that suit has made big news for its direct challenge to the federal government, it is far from the only lawsuit that has been filed recently in response to the due process crisis on college campuses. In fact, more than ten new complaints have been filed in the past two months alone.

Last week, former Yale University basketball captain Jack Montague made good on his promise to sue Yale over alleged procedural unfairness in the sexual misconduct proceedings that led to his February 2016 expulsion. Montague's complaint alleges he was "denied the most rudimentary elements of faimess promised to him by Yale." According to Montague, Yale even breached its own confidentiality requirements by disclosing to his accuser the fact that Montague had previously been involved in another student conduct proceeding—a disclosure which, the complaint alleges, led to the accuser's decision to participate in a formal conduct process. Montague also alleges that he was insufficiently informed of the details of the allegations against him until late in the disciplinary process, and that no one at Yale told him or his hearing advisor that he was expected to prepare and present an opening statement at the hearing.'

Michelle Obama’s Father’s Day Message: ‘Be Better’

Mastodon · 19 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Despite what you’re seeing on every cable network, on the cover of every newspaper, and as the lead story on every website, the White House has an important message for women and it isn’t about terrorism and radical Islam. It’s about “gender inequality” in America.

Last week, professional whiners and women’s rights activists (but I repeat myself) gathered in Washington D.C. for the United State of Women Summit. Guest speakers included First Lady Michelle Obama, multi-billionaire Oprah Winfrey, Academy Award-winning actress Patricia Arquette, White House senior advisor Valerie Jarrett and other women who are totally in tune with the struggles of everyday women.
...
Like most “empowerment” efforts by feminists, the United State of Women Summit quickly became a parade of victimhood and man-bashing. Actress Patricia Arquette continued spreading the myth of the wage gap. Since her scatter-brained speech at the Oscars, she’s been christened an expert on the matter. ...'

Former Secret Service Agent Claims They Were Prepared To Deal With Hillary's 'Domestic Violence' Against Bill

Mastodon · 19 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Secret Service agent claims that things got so heated during Bill Clinton's presidency over his affairs that the Secret Service discussed the prospect of "domestic violence" between Hillary and her husband.
...
According to Byrne, the former First Lady is a self-centered, tantrum-throwing, physical abuser who also knew how to use a gun.

With those things in mind, Byrne claims that the Secret Service was prepared to deal with any "domestic violence" between the Hillary and Bill. The agency tasked with protecting the president even became concerned that they would have to protect Bill from his "volcanic — and occasionally violent — wife."'

SAVE: Campus Equality, Fairness, and Transparency Act

Matt · 19 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SAVE has developed a model bill designed to bring fairness to the campus sexual assault issue. Titled the Campus Equality, Fairness, and Transparency Act (CEFTA), the model bill supports the rights and interests of both the complainant and accused student, and encourages the involvement of local criminal justice authorities. CEFTA can be modified for introduction at the state level, as well.

The Campus Equality, Fairness, and Transparency Act consists of eight sections:

Sec. 161: Provides definitions for a range of sexual offenses and codifies the U.S. Supreme Court definition of sexual harassment (Davis v. Monroe, 1999).

Sec. 162: Requires universities to implement policies to reduce the incidence of sexual conduct violations associated with alcohol and drug abuse.
...
The Campus Equality, Fairness, and Transparency Act can be viewed HERE.'

Father’s Day a reminder to act against domestic abuse

Mastodon · 19 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Father’s Day is a time to celebrate the invaluable role fathers play in the lives of their children. As a father of five, this holiday is undeniably special to me. It provides an opportunity to appreciate the incomparable bond between my children and me.

Father’s Day is a rare occasion when your kids have your undivided attention, so it’s important to make intentional use of the quality time.

A father’s role extends far beyond playing pitcher for the tee-ball team, or chasing monsters from the closet. Because children are so easily molded by the behavior around them, a father is responsible for telling and showing his children how to respect, communicate and empathize with others.

As your children get older, Father’s Day becomes an opportunity to start important conversations about issues they will be exposed to in the coming years. Unfortunately, domestic violence is one of those issues.

Men are the most common perpetrators of domestic violence. Nationally, one in four women will experience domestic violence. That number is more than a startling statistic. It’s an alarming reality.'

"Fathers Can’t End Violence In A Day, But There Is No Better Day To Start"

Mastodon · 19 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This month, the public expressed justified outrage that a 20-year-old Stanford student received a 6-month sentence for raping an unconscious girl. The most disturbing thing about the light sentence should not be how grossly out of the norm it was, but just the opposite; that it is all too normal. The judge’s June 2 sentence tracked a probation officer’s recommendation that the rapist should get 4-6 months, because — in the department’s view — the perpetrator had been drinking, had not committed other crimes, and had otherwise been an upstanding student-athlete with his whole life ahead of him.

...

Between the two of us, we have three sons and three daughters, and it’s our responsibility to make sure our boys know that it is never okay to assault a girl, or to look away as another boy does. It’s also our responsibility to make sure our daughters know that it is never okay for them to be assaulted, and that we will have their back if and when they choose to speak out. If a parent, or coach, or mentor, or teacher, or a judge does not know how to start, there is a manual to help: http://teachearly.org'

What Should the Standard of Proof Be in Campus Rape Cases?

Mastodon · 19 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A college student is accused of rape or sexual harassment by a classmate and denies the allegation. A campus investigation follows. At the end of the process, the presiding administrator must judge whether the charges against the accused have merit.

What standard of proof should be used?

That's one of the key questions posed in Doe v. Lhamon, a federal lawsuit filed by a former University of Virginia law student and the Foundation of Individual Rights in Education.

The lawsuit seeks to overturn recent efforts by the Department of Education to lower the standard of proof in sexual-misconduct cases, forcing institutions of higher education to determine culpability based on a "preponderance of the evidence." Under that standard, students are found culpable and punished if the chance that sexual misconduct occurred is even slightly more likely than that it did not occur.'

Harvard: ‘Presumption of Innocence’ Used to Silence Rape Survivors

Mastodon · 19 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Administrators at Harvard University argue that the criminal justice system’s principle of the presumption of innocence is sometimes invoked to silence rape survivors.

Harvard’s Office of Sexual Assault Prevention and Response offers a slew of definitions for vocabulary related to sexual assault on its website. One definition explains that the phrase “innocent until proven guilty” can be used to “silence” survivors of rape.

“This principle ideally protects those who are innocent and is of particular significance to minority populations disproportionately targeted for arrest, prosecution, and imprisonment or other consequences,” the website reads, as first reported by Campus Reform.

“In the context of sexual assault, ‘innocent until proven guilty’ is sometimes invoked to silence survivors; when a survivor’s experience is validated through measures that either protect or provide care, it is assumed that there is an infringement on the liberties of the person who has caused harm, as well as a presumption of their guilt.”'

Has the ‘War on Boys’ Entered the Workforce?

Mastodon · 20 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This morning The Washington Post reported on a growing problem afflicting the American workforce: fewer men are participating.

The Post explains:

“The [workforce downturn] problem is particularly pronounced among men between the ages of 25 and 54, traditionally considered the prime working years. Their participation rate has been declining for decades, but the drop-off accelerated during the recession. The high mark was 98 percent in 1954, and it now stands at 88 percent. A new analysis from the White House’s Council of Economic Advisers, slated for release Monday, found that the United States now has the third-lowest participation rate for ‘prime-age men’ among the world’s developed countries.”

According to The Post, this drop-off in men in the workforce is largely attributable to poor education and high rates of incarceration, two facts which the White House’s Council of Economic Advisers believe can be solved by “raising the minimum wage and expanding the earned-income tax credit.”

But instead of treating the symptoms of this problem, perhaps we should consider the fact that declining male workforce participation might be a direct result of what has been called the “war on boys.”'

"Cruelty & the scourge of masculinity"

Mastodon · 20 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When I hear about acts of cruelty — at either small or large scale — my first reaction is anger: how could someone do that? How was such a person raised? Doesn't this person know the harm being done?
...
Many have noticed that perpetrators of severe violence — be it a mass shooting or individual assault of some kind — are typically men. This is no coincidence. Males are raised to embrace aggression and relinquish emotion — including compassion and empathy — at young ages. These "lessons in manhood" are perpetuated in college and corporate America. Thus, when a man is hurting on a psychological or emotional level, he may fall back upon all he knows, all that has been rewarded by his male role models, his male peers, and even females who have bought into this version of masculinity. He may fall back upon aggression.
...
So, what now? How do we deal with the causes of such violent outbursts? Perhaps both adult males and females can make a concerted effort to model healthy behavior and encourage students to not fear emotions. Perhaps we can make respect for women and others a systemic part of education. Maybe we can listen to young boys when their inability to process their emotions manifests in outbursts and tantrums. Maybe we can explicitly discuss the merits of compassion and empathy on a regular basis.'

Review of "Rape Culture Hysteria"

Matt · 20 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

It is a very refreshing feeling when common sense, sanity, fairness and a sense of justice is applied to a subject which has defied rationality. In today's world, it feels like these occasions are less and less frequent.

In "Rape Culture Hysteria: Fixing the Damage Done to Men and Women", Wendy McElroy has succeeded nobly where others have failed. People of good will and rational minds sometimes shy away from taking up arguments against people who are not employing reasonable thought and analysis to a problem simply because they don't want to be victims of one kind of phenomenon that McElroy describes in her book. Arguing with people who believe presumed guilt is not only justifiable but desirable even in the absence of any evidence that wrongdoing has occurred is in no small way like arguing with the village idiot. People avoid doing so because they don't want people wondering who is the idiot. After all, taking up an argument with someone who is not using common sense is unpleasant and usually a waste of time.

Yet, it is such people who have managed through screaming, protesting, demanding, and threatening, to get their way of looking at the matter of rape on college campuses through the lens not just of presumed guilt, but imputed guilt: guilt regardless of facts. Guilt not by association, unless that association be by being a member of the male sex, but guilt by accusation. Like in a "star chamber", an accusation is sufficient for a conviction and no other opinions or evidence is deemed necessary nor relevant; in fact, in the twisted view of today's anti-rape social justice warriors, to even suggest that there may be exculpatory facts around a rape accusation is tantamount to participating in the rape itself, whether it ever occurred or not being irrelevant. Rarely in the history not just of higher education but of America have such depths of civic depravity been reached. The last time it came close was the Red Scare of the 1950s and the House Un-American Activities Committee's wild-eyed accusations of association with the Communist Party, wherein a subpoena to testify would often result, prior to any testimony made, in a person's termination from employment and being branded a "red", all without any time or opportunity for a hearing or investigation. Alas, it is to such depths of civic depravity the American collegiate world has sunk, with a great deal of active and enthusiastic assistance from the Obama administration.

McElroy first discusses her perceived place in the argument as a self-described feminist and rape survivor. She discusses the problems associated with being a dissident voice among feminists and the particular barriers she has had to face in an effort to introduce rationality into the debate. She then proceeds to identify the phenomenon of rape hysteria on college campuses, pointing out the reasons why it can accurately be referred to as hysteria, and then she painstakingly deconstructs the arguments, if they can be called that, that modern college feminists/social justice warriors give in favor of their particular point of view on campus rape and why it needs to be handled at the campus rather than formal legal level. The many ethical and moral hazards associated with this approach are reviewed and arguments are made not just against them but in favor of presumed innocence and the full scrutiny of the US legal system, with its collection of evidence, right of cross-examination, presumption of innocence, and provision of actual legal recourse.

McElroy's conclusion sums up the consequences of rape culture hysteria aptly, in part as follows:

"The rape culture is not only a myth but also a barrier to preventing rape. Adherents show a disregard for victims whenever they excoriate crime-prevention advice and conflate it with slut-shaming. They destroy the reality of rape by substituting highly-flawed studies for facts and character assassination for arguments. By constructing unjust procedures to address reports of sexual assault on campus, they destroy public confidence in rape accusations and the women who make them. False accusations encourage a cynicism that no genuine victim should ever have to face.

The rape culture hysteria has been wildly successful within academia partly because it wears a mask of benevolence and justice. In reality, rape culture politics expresses intolerance and a dogmatic disregard for fairness. Political correctness is the opposite of what it purports to be. It does not champion human rights; it destroys them. It does not express morality; it converts morality into a mockery imposed by government. It destroys the goodwill that naturally flows between free individuals who are equal.

The rape culture does so through a war on ideas, attitudes and words.
...
With a bitter irony, PC feminism and the rape culture hysteria on which it thrives is destroying the basis of feminism itself. The freedom of women has always rested on one thing: the ability to say “no,” the ability to say “I disagree.” Without being able to dissent, there is no freedom, no justice, no color to life. There is only 1984. Welcome to the true rape culture – the rape of human freedom."

But do not allow a book review and quotation from the conclusion to lead you to believe that such is sufficient to appreciate the degree of effort and soundness of discourse found in McElroy's book. I can't recommend it enough to those who see the trends that have taken hold of college campuses today and find them disturbing, and also to those that may have bought into this new trend and actually believe that by discarding legal protections and eliminating fair shake standards in the name of ideology, a greater kind of justice is somehow served. It isn't. If after reading McElroy's book one still believes that presumed guilt is defensible, then I can only refer such people to history books and a review of what happened in countries where there is no presumption of innocence and accused parties are not given a chance to defend themselves against criminal or criminal-like accusations. I have only this to say to such people: What if it's at YOU the next time the fingers start pointing?

Pakistan: Troubled dads in Hyderabad fight for visitation rights

Matt · 20 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While children across the world are preparing to celebrate Father's Day on Sunday, a few fathers in Hyderabad are fighting to simply meet their children.

Fathers who are victims of dowry harassment and maintenance cases and who want a hand in raising their children, allege that their wives do not even allow them to meet their children despite crystal clear court orders that support meetings.

Our society, which responds immediately when a woman faces trouble from her husband, turns a blind eye on such husbands, who are deprived of their basic right to meet their children at least once a week — which is crucial if the fathers want to develop a bond with their children.

Around 50 fathers under Share-A-Childhood foundation staged a two-hour-long protest at Basheerbagh on Saturday. The members said that parental alienation had become a big concern as more than 1,000 divorce cases were being filed in city courts every month.'

Secret Service Agent Book: Raging Hillary Clinton Threw Bible at Agent's Colleague

Mastodon · 20 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton once threw a Bible at the back of a Secret Service agent's head, part of a pattern of unhinged rage that the now-presumptive Democratic nominee exhibited, as exposed for the first time in former Secret Service agent Gary Byrne's grueling insider account of Hillary Rodham Clinton.

Byrne's forthcoming book Crisis of Character—in which he details how the Clintons operated during his time in the U.S. Secret Service, where he protected the first couple for eight years in the White House in the 1990s. During three of those years, he was posted right outside the Oval Office. The book comes out next week.

"The First Lady had a different sort of liveliness," Byrne writes in an excerpt obtained exclusively by Breitbart News. "She once threw a Bible at an agent on her detail, hitting him in the back of the head. He bluntly let her know it wasn't acceptable. He told me that story himself."'

Feminist Professor Blasts Trigger Warnings

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A University of Connecticut professor has threatened to stop teaching if the university ever requires her to use trigger warnings in class.

In an op-ed for The Hartford Courant, English professor Gina Barreca, who specializes in women's writing and feminist literary theory, slams the pervasiveness of trigger warnings on college campuses, likening the practice to "stick[ing] your fingers in your ears and say[ing] 'nyah nyah nyah' if you're hearing something you don't like.

"The day I'm forced to offer 'trigger warnings' before teaching is the day I stop teaching."

"To insist that I, or any other teacher, warn students that the material in a class might upset them defeats the purpose of education," she contends. "Colleges and universities must remain institutions that inflame curiosity and, by their very existence, disturb those who enter their gates … The day I'm forced to offer 'trigger warnings' before teaching is the day I stop teaching."'

10-year-old boy working to end domestic violence

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A young Calhoun County boy has a very big goal - he wants to see an end to domestic violence.

Izaak Oldenburg is not your typical 10-year-old. Most kids are spending the summer riding bikes and playing games. Izaak is a man on a mission.

"I'm gonna try to keep 'em open forever," Izaak said.
For the last seven years Izaak's been doing his part to make sure S.A.F.E. Place - a Battle Creek shelter for abused women - stays open.

It's a big task, one Izaak started tackling when he was just three. His great-grandmother says he pushed some of his girl cousins at a family function. They decided to use the moment as a teaching tool.'

WWE Superstar Paige reportedly arrested for domestic violence

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. No mention if Paige was suspended by the WWE. Excerpt:

'In a bizarre turn of events, WWE Superstar Paige was arrested last night, shortly after the Money in the Bank PPV. Paige, along with her new boyfriend Alberto Del Rio, was reportedly involved in a domestic violence incident and was subsequently arrested for it.

A fan at the scene has captured the following photos of Paige getting arrested after a big quarrel with Alberto Del Rio. He tweeted the below on the incident.'

WWE Personality Jerry Lawler Suspended After Domestic Violence Arrest

‘Yes means yes’ makes no sense to college kids — and other fast takes

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Have the proponents of “yes means yes” rules for college kids ever actually, you know, had sex? Harvard grad Molly Roberts says the rules simply aren’t practical. “According to an affirmative consent rule, each step along the way to intercourse requires a question and a positive answer,” Roberts writes in The Washington Post. “Can I kiss you? Can I touch your breast? Can I put my fingers there, or my — well, you get the point. If only we college students and recent graduates did approach sex with that kind of openness and clear communication. But have you ever been 21?” More should be done to protect women on campus, she says, but “affirmative consent policies create problems of their own.”'

This Georgia Lawmaker Is a Champion for College Men Accused of Rape

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earl Ehrhart is worried about his sons. Both boys attend Georgia public universities, and Ehrhart, a state representative from the Atlanta suburbs, has heard all about the college sexual-misconduct hearings in which young men are presumed guilty until proven innocent. The proceedings are flawed, he says, they're like "kangaroo courts." And their rulings are so biased against the accused, Ehrhart fears that his boys—as with male students across the state—could end up expelled based on a false accusation of rape.

That's why, in April, the Republican lawmaker and his wife sued the US Department of Education and its Office for Civil Rights, arguing that federal guidelines for how colleges should adjudicate sexual assault cases are biased against men. According to the Ehrharts, the guidelines have made it easy for universities to "micromanage student sex lives" and "brand more students 'rapists.'" The result? "Severe, unwarranted and permanent damages to male students." If either of the boys were to be accused of sexual assault, they said, the consequences for their family could be dire: "The money [the Ehrharts] have saved for college tuition and expenses could be lost, and their son's reputation and career prospects irreparably damaged."'

Denmark defends circumcision as a human right - even though 75% are against it

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even though a large majority of Danes are against the circumcision of boys, and even though the circumcision of girls is strictly prohibited in Denmark, the government has now officially accepted that it's a human right for parents to circumcise their sons.

The Local reports that a YouGov survey from 2014 showed that 74% of Danes were against the circumcision of boys, while only 10% supported the practise. Despite that, about 1000-2000 boys ar circumcised each year in Denmark, according to the CPH Post.

Since 2014, the matter has been reviewed but without much to show for it.

In 2015, Denmark decided to delete its registry of circumcised individuals, reports the Local. Now, in a report to the United Nations the Danish government officially accepts an Egyptian convention which recognizes circumcision as a human right, writes CPH Post.

The basis is that circumcision of boys is rarely associated with medical complications, when performed under medical supervision, and that it's viewed as a religious expression and therefore falls under the freedom of religion right.'

"Father's Day should be reserved for real men only"

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Father's Day should be reserved for real men only. I won't waste my time bashing deadbeat dads who are scum but for some of us, they helped create us. Unlike Mother's Day, Father's Day is a somber time for most. It is a somber time because most fathers are not involved with their children.

This may be reluctantly or due to incarceration. Death can be an instance as well, although some have such a bad experience with their fathers that they may as well be dead. What's worse is when you have a father in the home who is not living up to the role that God gave him.

A real father loves his children unconditionally and does his very best to make sure they are provided for. A real father provides emotional support for his children by being that non-judgmental listening ear. What puts the icing on the cake is when a real father is not biologically related to the children, exemplifying these qualities.'

Men face bias at women's prison, too, lawyer says

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's not just female corrections officers who are being discriminated against at Michigan's only women's prison, according to those pressing a class action on behalf of male corrections officers at Women's Huron Valley prison.

On June 13, the U.S. Justice Department filed a federal lawsuit against the Michigan Department of Corrections, alleging the department discriminates against female corrections officers at the prison near Ypsilanti by designating too many positions as "women only." As a result, officials "required female employees at Huron Valley to work excessive overtime hours at a cost to their health," the suit alleges.

There's a flip side to that claim, said Tom Nowacki, a corrections officer at Women's Huron Valley since 2004 and the lead plaintiff in a class action by about 90 current and former male corrections officers at the facility: men have been unfairly excluded from certain jobs and denied overtime opportunities.'

The number of men behind bars in the US is mind-boggling

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The number of men behind bars in the US is mind-boggling.

In a hefty report on the long-term decline in the prime-age male labor-force participation, the White House's Council of Economic Advisers shared a few charts that showed just how stunning America's incarceration rate is.

The US has the highest incarceration rate out of any OECD country at about 700 inmates per 100,000 residents, according to data from the World Prison Population List - which is about as much as five times the OECD average. By comparison, the next closest state is Israel, whose incarceration rate is about 250 inmates per 100,000. The OECD is the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Moreover, the number of men incarcerated has increased dramatically over the last 25 years. Data from the US Bureau of Justice Statistics shows that the rate has grown from 564 per 100,000 in 1990 to 890 per 100,000 in 2014. Notably, this spike is correlated with the War on Drugs.'

Australia: Domestic violence levy: Canberra sets an absurd precedent

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'Canberra is the first place in Australia, probably in the world, to have introduced a domestic violence levy on all ratepayers. Canberrans who own property now will have to pay a special flat tax in what is already the highest taxed jurisdiction in Australia.

...

Issues such as this become sacrosanct. Thus in a place and time where girls have better school and tertiary results, more economic power and generally better lives than before, feminism is running out of issues. But the feminist flame has to be kept burning, so domestic violence has become the issue du jour. No one is allowed to question money spent in the name of the cause.

How bad domestic violence is in Australia is a moot point. The statistics on violence show that actual assaults on women haven't increased, although reports have. Certainly, the use of apprehended violence orders has increased to the point where they are used in everything from disputes with your neighbour to a threat of serious assault.

Expanding the definition of domestic violence to include all sorts of subtleties is simply feeding into the victim industry — great for social workers, but no wonder the police can't distinguish between an incident likely to escalate into serious violence and a basically frivolous complaint.'

No to making ‘yes mean yes’ the standard for determining rape

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Changing the definition of rape, though? That’s trickier. Because while affirmative consent might be a nice idea, it’s just not how kids have sex.

According to an affirmative consent rule, each step along the way to intercourse requires a question and a positive answer. Can I kiss you? Can I touch your breast? Can I put my fingers there, or my — well, you get the point.

If only we college students and recent graduates did approach sex with that kind of openness and clear communication. But have you ever been 21? Sex at college tends to happen in the heat of the moment, quickly and with subtle signals guiding both participants. There’s no step-by-step road map to intimacy.'

UK: Universities minister promotes ideas for increasing boys' academic success

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When you think of campaigning for equality, what comes to mind? Equal rights for women, an end to discrimination against ethnic minority groups, opposing homophobic bullying?

Probably all of the above – and they should, rightly, be priorities – but an equally pressing priority when it comes to educational achievement is campaigning to improve the performance of boys, particularly white boys from disadvantaged communities.

David Willetts first put his finger on the problem, in his role as universities minister, in an interview with The Independent four years ago. When it came to widening participation in higher education, he argued, white working-class boys should be treated as a disadvantaged group.

The evidence is incontrovertable, and growing with time. The latest manifestation of it comes in a pamphlet published by the Higher Education Policy Institute entitled "Boys To Men – the underachievement of young men in higher education and how to start tackling it".'

Christina Hoff Sommers and Camille Paglia on the state of contemporary feminism

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'AEI resident scholar and Factual Feminist Christina Hoff Sommers interviews Camille Paglia, professor at the University of the Arts, on the state of contemporary feminism and how it has evolved over the last three decades.'

UC Irvine Suspends College Republicans For A Year Following Milo Event

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The UC Irvine Republicans have been suspended for an entire year after they informed the administration of their plans to schedule another event on campus with Breitbart senior editor Milo Yiannopoulos.

Nearly a month after their initial event with Milo, entitled “Social Justice is Cancer,” the College Republicans were asked to attend a debriefing with the Director of Student Life & Leadership, Darlene Esparza, and Associate Dean of Students, Sherwynn Umali, to discuss the planning process of the event. During the meeting, College Republican President Ariana Rowlands raised the possibility of Milo’s return to campus.

Just four hours after the meeting, a UCI administrator sent the group an email to inform them they had suspended the club for an entire year.'

Karate instructor arrested for sending nude photos to 11-year-old student

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Florida karate instructor is in big trouble after allegedly sending nude photos of herself to an 11-year-old student.

Stephanie Figueroa, 21, is the face of Next-Gen Xtreme Martial Arts Studio in Orlando.

She was arrested and was taken into custody at the Orange County Jail last week after the mother of one of her martial arts students found sexually explicit messages from Figueroa on her son's phone.

She is accused of using the social app, Kik, to solicit the student for sex and send him nude photos.

Figueroa is now facing several charges, including solicitation of a minor, child abuse, showing obscene material to a minor and unlawful use of a two-way communication device.'

"Every Woman Needs A Male Nemesis At Work"

Mastodon · 21 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some time ago, I started keeping a tally of all the men I consider my enemies. Any glance at an Us Weekly story about Jeremy Renner, or an advertisement in a magazine where John Mayer sullenly cradles a watch, would be enough to remind me, Oh yeah, those men, they are my enemies. Never forget the wrong they have done in this world. I check the list every few months to make necessary additions and add scientific footnotes. My list of male enemies is currently 18 men long and always open to new members.

The crimes men like Mayer and Renner have committed are commonplace and fairly easy to forget: Renner called a fictional character a slut, Mayer wrote a Grammy-winning (!) song professing to know how mothers should treat their daughters. One guy is on my list because he broke a close friend's heart. Another has a lifetime membership for being a complete unforgivable shitbird. These men remain my eternal and everlasting adversaries. But none are more important than the men on my list who work in my industry. These male enemies are the ones who fuel me every single day.'

The Campus Rape Lawsuit That Could Destroy Title IX Has Finally Arrived

Mastodon · 22 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A University of Virginia law student who was accused of sexual misconduct and banned from campus—years after the alleged incident—is suing the U.S. Education Department for giving UVA no choice but to rule against him.

His lawsuit is a direct challenge to the legality of the campus kangaroo courts the federal government claims are required under Title IX. Lawyers representing the student, John Doe, argue persuasively that he would have been found innocent of wrongdoing if not for the Obama administration's insistence that universities adjudicate sexual assault under the preponderance of evidence standard.

This makes Doe's lawsuit the strongest legal assault on Title IX to date. If successful, it could undo some of the damage wrought by OCR's crusade to remove elements of due process from campus rape trials.

"This lawsuit is targeting the cause, and not just the symptoms, of the complete lack of due process on campus," Justin Dillon, legal counsel for Doe and a partner at the firm KaiserDillon PLLC, told Reason.'

"A Woman President Will Expose the Ugly Underbelly Of Blatant Sexism In A Whole New Way"

Mastodon · 23 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If Hillary Clinton wins in November, incidents of sexism and misogyny will not fall by the wayside; they'll ascend to new heights (or descend to new depths). And the funny-not-funny thing of it is the sexist misogynists will insist that there's no more sexism and misogyny. They'll be more than happy to explain it to you, too. They'll beat you over the head with it until you want to fucking scream. And that's their goal. They want you to scream and yell; and then they'll call you hysterical and unreasonable. Because in their archaic minds, their male-dominant superiority will be confirmed.

The sexists will make any and every attempt to quell the feminist army, who will refuse to live under the mistaken belief that everything is 100 percent equal. And when I say feminist army, I'm not describing an army of women; I'm describing an army of women and men who get it. We get that rape culture exists, and it needs to be eradicated. We get that women (and men) do not have constitutional protection against gender discrimination. We get that a woman president won't mean automatic gender equality — in fact, we get that it will agitate the sexists just as much as a black president agitated racists. And the sexists will protest. They'll be loud, obnoxious and they'll firmly believe they have the moral high ground. In other words, America will begin to resemble a feminist Facebook page, complete with brigades of trolls, mansplainers and mansplaining trolls.'

Freshman sues Clemson to overturn sex misconduct suspension

Mastodon · 23 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A federal civil rights lawsuit was filed against Clemson University last week by a freshman who is seeking to overturn a one-year suspension that he received for sexual misconduct and other infractions.

The student, identified only as John Doe, contends that he had consensual sex last October with another Clemson student who later filed a complaint claiming that she was a victim of sexual misconduct, according to the suit.

After an administrative hearing, Clemson officials found that "complainant was incapacitated during the incident and unable to give consent," according to the suit. The suit says that the male student was suspended for six months and evicted from his dormitory for violating university rules involving alcohol, disorderly conduct, harm to person and sexual misconduct.

The male student appealed the ruling, according the suit. On May 27, university Chief of Staff Max Allen upheld the ruling and increased the student's suspension to one year, the suit says.

The suit lists a series of alleged "wrongful actions" by the university. They include failure to conduct a thorough and impartial investigation, improperly advising and advocating on behalf of the female accuser, gender bias, failure to provide the male student with a presumption of innocence and an unilateral and arbitrary increase of unwarranted sanctions.

The suit also claims that there is no indication that the incident involving the two students was reported to the Clemson University Police or the Clemson Police Department.'

Feminists Refuse To Suspend Man-Shaming For Father's Day

Mastodon · 23 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In essence: Happy Father's Day, dads. You suck at doing all the things women do so well as moms and as employees. This tweet sums up everything wrong with sexist modern feminism and illustrates virtue signaling at its worst.

Slaughter is, of course, a former Princeton University professor whose 2012 piece in The Atlantic, "Why Women Still Can't Have It All," became a kind of guidepost for discussing how difficult work-life balance really is for working mothers to achieve, especially in advocating that working dads need to step up and do more household chores and parenting.

Slaughter's tweet did not go over well, and not just because of the timing (is Father's Day really the time to nag dads that they just don't "do enough" around the house?). The premise was way off, and people caught that, too.'

Hungary: Public Outrage at Anti-Father UNICEF Videos

Matt · 24 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Hungarian unit of UNICEF, the United Nations Children's Emergency Fund, has launched a campaign to persuade Hungarians to donate 1 per cent of their personal income tax to the office. UNICEF says it will use the support to fight against family violence and child abuse in Hungary. In order to prove that UNICEF have published three scandalous videos recently, in which Hungarian children, probably child actors, explain how they protect themselves from their own fathers, "providing ideas" for fellow child victims. (In the beginning videos were also shown in cinemas, forcing people to watch them before movies. As a result of the scandal, they have been removed later.)

The videos have triggered harsh reactions in Hungary, many say they are "extremist", "misleading", "harmful", "anti-father", and "anti-family". In one of the videos, Luca, a 10-year old girl, explains how she used to lock the door of the room after her Mum leaves home and before her father pays a "visit" to his daughter. Luca also says that she used to hide in a closet from his father instead of " just waiting for him" in the bed. In another video a small kid, Benji, explains how to cover furniture with clothes in order to protect himself from serious injuries he would otherwise suffer when his father beating him.'

Model legislation would restore due process to campus rape investigations

Matt · 24 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Colleges and universities would have to tell their students in writing that they are presumed innocent when accused of sexual misconduct, under a sweeping model bill offered by a due-process advocacy group.

Dubbed the Campus Equality, Fairness, and Transparency Act (CEFTA), the bill would largely overturn the regulatory apparatus that has governed campus sexual-misconduct proceedings since the Department of Education's 2011 "Dear Colleague" letter, now the subject of litigation.

Though CEFTA is written for introduction in Congress, its author – Stop Abusive and Violent Environments – wrote that it could be modified for the state level as well.'

NPO: Major Media Round-up of Father’s Day Coverage

Matt · 24 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Fathers Day, American dads are in good company. From Argentina to Russia, from Kenya to Japan, most nations seem to set a day to celebrate fatherhood.

The first US "Father's Day" was 1908, when a West Virginia mining community was mourning the Monongah Mining Disaster. 361 men were killed, 250 of them fathers, leaving around a thousand fatherless children.

I surveyed the Boston Globe, Washington Post, Chicago Tribune, and the Los Angeles Times to find out the current meaning of Father’s Day in the U.S.'

Video shows people do nothing when they see men abused

Matt · 25 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. The video shows how people readily intervene when a man abuses a woman but do nothing when the genders are flipped. And feminists say there's no problem with double-standards here.

Mother warns college-bound sons: "There will be no mercy for you"

Matt · 25 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Again, I reiterate: Men should not attend co-ed colleges until or unless the insanity stops. Consider only men's colleges if you value getting a degree. Excerpt:

'An increasing portion of the college experience for men is staying on top of the ever-shifting expectations of behavior toward women, through the curriculum, seminars and campus activism.

Ignore all of it and watch your back.

That's the clear-eyed and urgent message from Tina McCormick, the Danish-born publisher of NewBostonPost and Harvard Ph.D., in an open letter to her four sons who will be "off to college in a snap."

Their schooling thus far has taught them to "see the relationship between girls and boys mostly in physical terms" and pursue "emotion-free sex" devoid of love and respect:
...
"What our present day culture teaches you about equality and sexual liberation is a dangerous trap. Should you buy into it, your life may be ruined forever. No matter how kind and decent, how talented and giving a person you have always been, there will be no mercy for you."'

India: The gang-rape that never was

Matt · 26 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Several questions are being raised over the veracity of the alleged gang rape in Bihar's Motihari district. The case is being termed as the 'Nirbhaya' episode of Bihar and seen as yet another proof of the deteriorating law and order situation in the state.

...

According to the accusations levelled by the victim's family, the protestations of girl's mother infuriated Samiullah. He came to the victim's house with five other men of his family, dragged her out of the house and gang-raped her. The accused also allegedly forced a homemade gun into girl's private parts.

...

However, a ground investigation by Catch indicates there is more to the case than meets the eye.

"There are no marks on the victim's body suggesting rape. She does not suffer from internal injuries," claims Dr Prashant Kumar, Civil Surgeon, Motihari.

...

Kumar argues that gang-rape victims don't normally heal within a week or 10 days. According to him, the victim had come to the hospital in 'normal condition' and walked on her own feet. She complained only of pain in the stomach and backache, according to Kumar.'

Sommers-Paglia Full Interview Now Available

Matt · 26 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'What would happen if Based Mom sat down with Based Goddess for an hour to discuss modern-day feminism? No need to speculate—here's the full one-hour interview (with bonus content!) featuring Christina Hoff Sommers and Camille Paglia where they break down #Gamergate, intersectional feminism, the "male gaze", and much, much more.'

Woman facing murder of husband charge sees her parrot as witness against her

Matt · 27 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. A case could be made that the parrot has acted as a tape or other recording device. Interesting to see how this goes. Excerpt:

'A Sand Lake couple's pet parrot could be used as evidence to prove Glenna Duram murdered her husband Martin.

Fourteen months after Martin Duram was found dead from multiple gunshot wounds in his Sand Lake home, Glenna Duram, 48, is in jail and accused of his murder.

His family thinks the couple quarreled over unpaid bills, foreclosure on their home and her gambling debts.

They believe she killed him and tried but failed to kill herself.

A few weeks after his death last May, the couple's parrot started repeating a loud, profane argument between a male and a female:'

Why Women Should Support Due Process for Male College Students

Matt · 27 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a female college student, the Title IX industrial-complex and the draconian investigation guidelines that it produced is absurd. Men accused of misconduct should have a fair trial, shouldn't they?

Thus, I applaud the former UVA student's lawsuit. Here's why:

The crusade against due process already has produced many victims. There have been at least 140 lawsuits brought against colleges by men who suffered an unfair trial. Amherst College, Swarthmore College, and St. Joseph's University have all settled such suits. No doubt, a costly process for both parties.

Administrators will never be able to never fairly investigate rape and sexual assault allegations. No number of Title IX lawsuits will change that. Colleges have capricious rules of evidence, no subpoenas. No neutral judge, either.

Expulsion from college is no small matter, especially for underprivileged students. Low-income and first-generation students often lack the cultural and financial capital to obtain legal help. Racial minorities, particularly black men, are uniquely susceptible to facing a trial despite lacking legal counsel, and being found guilty in the absence of evidence.

Due process safeguards are not merely a matter of legal justice, but of racial and economic justice as well.'

Marine Corps To Remove ‘Man’ From 19 Job Titles To Make Women Feel Included

Mastodon · 28 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After months of deliberation, the Marine Corps has decided to remove the word “man” from 19 job titles, in an effort to make the service more inclusive now that all combat roles are open to women.

The review, mandated by Secretary of the Navy Ray Mabus in January, will soon wrap-up and post the changes publicly in several days, according to an anonymous Marine official who spoke with Marine Corps Times.

Although many old titles will no longer exist, as they’ll be made gender neutral, some iconic titles still remain, such as “rifleman” and “mortar man.” This is unlikely to satisfy many Marines, who believe that political correctness has gone completely out of control.'

SAVE petition: Stop the Attack on Free Speech and Due Process on Campuses

Matt · 28 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Petition here. Excerpt:

'OPEN SOCIETIES NEED OPEN CAMPUSES. But right now, free speech and due process are under assault. The vast majority of universities now have “speech codes” and “free speech zones,” and persons accused of sexual misconduct no longer receive basic due process protections.

Laura Kipnis and Grant Neal are two recent examples of this attack on our basic rights:'

Title IX and College Rape: A Series of Injustice, Part 1

Matt · 29 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. And in the HuffPo, too! Excerpt:

'When any injustice occurs a victim is created. This series will tell you stories you may not have heard about, or may not have known that these victims even existed. Please keep in mind, that is not the basis for this series. This series is intended to show readers how incredibly inept colleges and universities are when it comes to rape complaints on their campuses. Also, hopefully sharing these stories will bring enough light to the severity of the issue, that a change might be inspired.

Title IX and Rape. I am sure there are some people reading this who had no idea it was even an issue. I mean Title IX is supposed to ensure that sexual discrimination is prohibited in any federally funded education program or activity, right? Why is the word rape even associated with Title IV? In 2011, The Office for Civil Rights put into place a “Dear Colleague Letter“ which explains that discrimination includes the following, “Sexual harassment of students, which includes acts of sexual violence, is a form of sex discrimination prohibited by Title IX.” The letter also states:
...
However, at the school level he was immediately suspended and kicked off campus. According to the complaint, no real investigation was done. No one was allowed to testify on his behalf, the school would not take his statement, allow the private investigator or attorney to speak or introduce the evidence. He had been suspended from school pending the outcome at the same time his due process rights were stripped. He had no way to prove his innocence without the facts of the case being presented.'

UC-Irvine restores College Republicans club after suspending it over Milo event

Matt · 29 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The College Republicans at the UC Irvine are claiming victory, following the reversal of a decision by administrators to suspend them for a year. “It’s a huge victory for freedom of speech and assembly, and I think this move proves that there is bias to political ideologies in this administration,” said Ariana Rowlands, President of the UCI College Republicans.

The disciplinary action was imposed after a June 2nd event hosting the controversial right wing speaker Milo Yiannopoulos. He visited the students as part of his “Dangerous Faggot Tour.” The administration based the action on a contractual insurance violation at the event. However, the University changed course following a social media firestorm and national petition supporting the students. First administrators temporarily lifted the ban pending an appeal, and now have permanently lifted the suspension and cancelled the appeals process.'

Woman assaults man with hatchet after refusing sex

Matt · 29 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'After her repeated demands to have sex were rebuffed, a Florida woman grabbed a hatchet and began beating on the locked door of the bathroom where her beau had sought refuge, police report.

According to police, Leslie Mills, 26, returned home early Thursday after a drinking binge and began badgering the victim to “engage in sexual activity with her.” The man--who said he was awoken by the persistent Mills--told cops that he moved from the Ocala home’s bedroom to the couch in a bid to escape her.

However, Mills followed him to the living room, where she climbed atop the victim, “still asking for him to have sex with her,” according to an Ocala Police Department report. After again declining to have sex, the man went into the bathroom and locked the door.'

The hickey police: Petition asks lawmakers to ‘rein in’ agency that micromanages campus sex

Mastodon · 29 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Give your girlfriend a hickey, get expelled.

The fact that this outlandish scenario is the subject of a federal lawsuit shows what’s wrong with the federal Office for Civil Rights (OCR), according to a new petition to Congress.

The petition asks the leaders of the Senate committee that oversees the Department of Education to “rein in” its civil-rights unit, whose guidance documents for the past several years have forced colleges to treat subjectively offensive speech as sexual harassment and eliminate due process for accused students.'

False rape reports make victims ‘more silenced, more reluctant’

Mastodon · 29 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It’s estimated that only 2 percent to 10 percent of rape reports are false allegations or are recanted, but they can cause “collateral damage,” according to law enforcement and sexual assault experts.

Butler County Prosecutor Michael Gmoser said his office takes all false reports — not just rape cases — seriously. But false rape reports create “a disservice to the legitimate claims,” he said.
“If a woman hears about a false report, another woman who was raped may ask, ‘Will they think the same thing about me?’ ” Gmoser said.
...
Jane Conn, executive director of Abuse and Rape Crisis Center of Warren County said when a false report is filed, it taints the credibility of future victims.'

Accusation of rape doesn't make it so

Mastodon · 29 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In her Thursday letter “Helping young woman could prevent a rape,” Holly Richard’s "if they say they have been raped they have been raped" line of reasoning is faulty but, more importantly, it is dangerous to the foundation of the American justice system.

It shows a lack of knowledge of the research on the subject. There are so many documented cases of false rape charges that the system is bogged down trying to deal with them all. The Cincinnati Enquirer reported that “the number of false rape cases ranges in studies from 2 percent to 90 percent of reported rape cases,” depending on which study you read. (“False accusations bog down real rape cases,” April 10, 2011)

There can be numerous motivations for a false rape allegation. Charlie Rubenstein, former chief criminal prosecutor for Cincinnati, said that oftentimes a false allegation is made to cover being out late or a pregnancy. False allegations could be made to cover a consensual relationship that the accuser is afraid will ruin her reputation when it becomes public knowledge.'

Mom fatally shot daughters to punish her husband

Mastodon · 29 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Texas mom from hell blew away her two daughters in front of her shocked husband — because she wanted to punish him, according to a new report.

Deranged killer Christy Sheats called her husband's bluff during a nasty confrontation that culminated in the murders of her two daughters on Friday, family friend Madison Davey told KTRK.'

Equal Pay For Less Work? Every Day Men Work 42 More Minutes Than Women

Mastodon · 29 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men work more hours than women in both full-time and part-time jobs, while women still shoulder most of the housework, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics (BLS).

The BLS study, using data from 201,5 shows employed men, on average, work 42 minutes more per day than women. While that figure is partially attributed to women working more part-time jobs than men, among full-time employees, men worked 8.2 hours per day compared to women's 7.8 hours.

One of the biggest reasons why the much-cited gender pay gap, often described by economists as a gross simplification, amounts to an average of 79 cents on the dollar, is because men undertake more paid work than women. The principle reasons a wage gap appears between men and women is because of life choices such as having children and balancing work with other priorities.'

A Travesty Of Justice: Collateral Charges In Military Sexual Assault Cases

Mastodon · 29 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In case after case, we are seeing collateral charges being “stacked” on top of sexual misconduct charges to ensure that the accused is found guilty of “something.” The attitude seems to be, “if we can’t get you for rape, we’ll get you for not turning in that old pair of boots six years ago.”

In order to bolster the charges, investigators contact women who had a prior relationship with the accused and implore them to get a “rapist off the streets.” These women include former wives, girlfriends, or any other female with whom the accused service member had an intimate relationship. This practice has been documented in recent Army cases involving Sergeant First Class Kelly Stewart, Major Christian “Kit” Martin, Major Eric Burris, and Air Forces cases involving Master Sergeant Michael Silva and Major Michael Turpiano.

Military investigators are known to incentivize these “victims” with the prospect of receiving transitional compensation payments. The women may be advised of the possibility of receiving Veterans Administration disability payments based on claims of PTSD as a result of Military Sexual Trauma. In many cases, the alleged incident occurred many years previously and there is no corroborative evidence of misconduct. Nonetheless, benefits may be conferred following a diagnosis of PTSD due to Military Sexual Trauma based on the existence of depression, marital problems, or other life disruption.

Now a male service member who is accused of any type of sexual misconduct, whether it be assault, harassment, or “unwanted sexual contact,” will also face collateral charges. These charges involve previously ignored or unenforced violations, minor peccadilloes, or violations that arose during the course of the inquiry. In the end, there is a near-certainty that the accused will be convicted of something. This allows the Defense Secretary to proclaim to members of Congress that the military is in fact obtaining “convictions” in military sexual assault cases.

Rolling Stone wins dismissal of defamation lawsuit over rape article

Mastodon · 29 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A federal judge on Tuesday dismissed a lawsuit by three former University of Virginia fraternity members who accused Rolling Stone magazine, its publisher Wenner Media and a journalist of defamation over a since retracted article describing a gang rape.

U.S. District Judge Kevin Castel in Manhattan said details about the attackers in the November 2014 article by Sabrina Rubin Erdely were "too vague and remote" to make readers, family and friends believe that the plaintiffs George Elias IV, Ross Fowler and Stephen Hadford had a role in the alleged rape.

"In the plaintiffs' own words, any 'apparent connection between the plaintiffs and the allegations is an (unfortunate) coincidence,'" Castel wrote.'

Research finds link between father absences and declining male college enrollment

Mastodon · 29 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Absent dads may be contributing to the growing male gender gap in higher education, according to research published by a professor at Brigham Young University.

Brian Willoughby, an assistant professor in the School of Family Life, was one of three authors that recently published a study in the journal “Family Relations” looking at whether the declining rate of males enrolling in college has been influenced by nonmarital birth rates and father absences.

What they found was that the gender gap opened up about 18 years after family structure changes in the late 1960s.

“I think we need to continue to talk about fathers and talk about their importance in our culture as we get more and more messages that they don’t matter,” Willoughby said.

Men now make up 43 percent of postsecondary enrollment, according to the National Center for Education Statistics. A co-author noticed that the gender gap was opening up about 18 years after the trend of increasing father absences started, which led the researchers to think it was about more than just an increase in women’s rights.

“The strength of the correlation and the strength of the association surprised us,” Willoughby said. “We went in thinking maybe we’ll find something pretty weak.”'

Same behavior problems hinder boys more than girls

Mastodon · 29 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the past several decades, women have not only caught up to men in earning college degrees, they have surpassed them.

Men made up 43 percent of the students enrolled in college in 2015, and were awarded 40 percent of bachelor's degrees, according to federal data cited in a new study that traces the gender gap all the way back to preschool.

The study, done by the American Sociological Association, finds that boys start kindergarten with fewer of the behaviors that teachers want — such as paying attention, controlling emotions and playing nice with others, and that difference partly accounts for higher high school and college completion rates for women.

The study also finds that schools respond more harshly to boy's transgressions and that difference also contributed to men not getting as far in their educations.'

Desperately holding on to the debunked idea of gender wage gap

Matt · 30 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even though economist after economist has debunked the gender wage gap over and over again (it's more accurately referred to as an "earnings gap"), some in the media just can't let it go.

Enter Danielle Paquette of the Washington Post, who wrote an article on the website's "Wonkblog" section titled "Men say they work more than women. Here's the truth."

Paquette attempts to explain away the fact that the Department of Labor repeatedly finds men who work both full-time and part-time are working more hours than women in the same categories. Her assertion is that the statistics only show reported hours.

"Let's start with a few massive caveats in the Labor Department's report. First, the researchers asked each respondent to log their own time. Nobody submitted manager-approved work hours, and research tells us one of the sexes generally tends to overestimate," Paquette wrote. "Secondly, the survey didn't measure productivity or efficiency. Workaholism isn't necessarily a sign of value."'

NPO: Nebraska, Legislators Blame Courts and Courts Blame Legislators for Unequal Parenting

Matt · 30 June 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Is the worm starting to turn in Nebraska? All of a sudden it appears that the Legislature may be pointing the finger of blame at the courts and the courts are pointing it right back.

The question arises from a couple of adoption cases that the Nebraska Supreme Court decided on June 24th. The exact nature of the companion cases is too complicated to go into here, but the high points are these:

A woman had a child in Ohio. She and her paramour signed an acknowledgement of paternity that, under Ohio law, resulted in his being legally established as the child's father. The two lived together for a while and the man cared for the child. Eventually the mother took the child to Nebraska and placed her for adoption. The man objected saying that, under Ohio law, since he was officially the child's father, his consent to the adoption was required. The Nebraska court ignored its obligation to give full faith and credit to Ohio law and the results of that law in the given case. The Nebraska Supreme Court ruled that was error, so the man's consent to the adoption was required.'

California university seeks to ‘deconstruct’ masculinity

Mastodon · 1 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To increase male student retention and combat sexual violence, one California university is offering a “safe space” for male-identifying students to discover their authentic masculinity.

“Dudes Understanding Diversity and Ending Stereotypes (DUDES) is a traveling Men’s Center, housed in the Campus Diversity and Inclusion Center for students who identify as Men, as well as women, transgendered students, and male allies,” the University of Redlands states on its website.

The DUDES Resource Center, the description elaborates, “provides support for students who would like a safe space to talk about men’s issues, get involved on campus, and discuss issues regarding masculinity, media, gender roles, etc.”

DUDES is one of five “Gender Programs” at Redlands that are designed to supplement the work of the Women’s Center and the Women’s Gender and Sexuality Studies Department. The other initiatives include a “Masculinity Discussions” series, as well as three programs that provide resources and support for victims of sexual assault and domestic violence.

The “Masculinity Discussion” series provides students with alternative views of masculinity, because according to the website, “We believe it is crucial to deconstruct our societal understanding of masculinity and establish more inclusive definitions of manhood as part of the effort to reduce violence in our communities.”'

Feminists treat men badly. It’s bad for feminism.

Mastodon · 1 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminist male-bashing has come to sound like a cliche — a misogynist caricature. Feminism, its loudest proponents vow, is about fighting for equality. The man-hating label is either a smear or a misunderstanding.

Yet a lot of feminist rhetoric today does cross the line from attacks on sexism into attacks on men, with a strong focus on personal behavior: the way they talk, the way they approach relationships, even the way they sit on public transit. Male faults are stated as sweeping condemnations; objecting to such generalizations is taken as a sign of complicity. Meanwhile, similar indictments of women would be considered grossly misogynistic.

This gender antagonism does nothing to advance the unfinished business of equality. If anything, the fixation on men behaving badly is a distraction from more fundamental issues, such as changes in the workplace to promote work-life balance. What’s more, male-bashing not only sours many men — and quite a few women — on feminism. It often drives them into Internet subcultures where critiques of feminism mix with hostility toward women.'

"There’s No Hiring Bias Against Women In Tech, They Just Suck At Interviews"

Mastodon · 2 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The tech industry is plagued by guilt about the lack of women in its technical teams — and everywhere else. But new data suggests that there’s no hiring bias against them. Women might just suck at job interviews, according to a new report by an interview matchmaking service.

Interviewing.io, a service which allows interviewers and interviewees to match up online and conduct interviews based on their communication skills recently set out to fix the “gender gap in tech” by creating a voice changer that would allow interviewees to mask their voice, and in turn their gender, in an attempt to tackle bigoted interviewers.

What the study revealed – to the shock of the feminists who organized it – was that women underperform in job interviews even when the interviewer believes them to be male.'

Colleges Are Likely Underreporting Sexual Assaults, Senators Warn

Mastodon · 2 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The senators noted that only 9 percent of some 11,000 schools reported any occurrence of sexual assault, domestic violence, dating violence and stalking, according to the most recent data provided under the Clery Act.

The reports that there were no incidents of sexual assault on 9-in-10 campuses “directly conflict” with a swath of peer-reviewed research that show around 1-in-5 female students will experience sexual assault by the time they graduate college.'

Title IX and College Rape: A Series Of Injustice Part 2

Mastodon · 2 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The number of victims on campus continues to rise as not much is actually done about it. There is a pool of knowledge around the topic of Title IX and campus rape, but no one is really providing any actions. Victims of sexual assault are courageously speaking up, the Vice President has provided verbal support for one particular rape victim; yet no one is moving closer to action. No one is even discussing reforming the power to prosecute or not prosecute given to college administrators. The consequences are sexual predators remaining on college campuses, and lives of those who haven't done anything wrong absolutely destroyed.

Please keep in mind, this series is not to showcase "his word against hers," this series is not about rape victims, nor is it about other people who pay the price when colleges fail. This series is intended to bring light to a different fact base. Colleges are ruining the futures of young adults through their mandated responsibility, but total lack of ability to adjudicate campus sexual assault cases.'

India: Men’s rights activists troll National Women’s Policy, say it will end the 'existence of Indian men'

Mastodon · 2 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An army of men’s rights activists are outraging over the Ministry of Women and Child Development’s latest draft on the National Women’s Policy. With the ministry inviting suggestions, men’s rights activists have taken it upon themselves and over the comments section to vehemently oppose the draft policy.

...

50% of reservation for women in local bodies election means, the percent of elected women in local bodies will be between 50% to 100% whereas men will have 0% to 50% only. There is a probability of 0% place for men in local civic bodies governance. This is against the Constitution right of equality,” writes Sahayaselvam.'

"This Is How Men Can Become Better Feminist Allies"

Mastodon · 2 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'4. Support feminist and female media.

Is your iPod comprised of primarily male artists? Diversify, dude! Open yourself up to new perspectives by watching films written and directed by women, read articles written by female writers, listen to music performed by female artists and appreciating the artwork of female artists, like Jeanette Hayes or Grace Miceli.

...

6. Believe the victim.

This is pretty straightforward. Instead of assuming the accused is innocent until proven guilty, support the victim. While it's true that women have falsely accused men of such allegations, these cases are an extreme rarity so make the smart decision and favor the likely truth.

...

10. Be responsible for contraception.

When in a relationship with a woman, don't make contraception something she's solely responsible for. Wear a damn condom and don't complain about it. If she prefers a particular method of contraception, let her choose that method.

Female contraception is a lot more complicated than yours, so make sure you support the decisions she makes. Birth control can be expensive, so if you're in a relationship and that's her preferred method, offer to split the bill. After all, she's doing this to keep you both from becoming unexpected parents.'

A letter to my wife, who won’t get a job while I work myself to death

Matt · 2 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I started my career with the gruelling hours and high stress that are traditionally visited on young lawyers. You were unexpectedly ambivalent about finding a good job – or any job. After gentle pressure from me, and more from the student loan payments, you puttered around in some non-legal positions more suited for someone with half your education and intelligence, and which offered commensurately low pay.
...
I’ve climbed the professional ladder reasonably well. We have the trappings of middle-class success – a nice house in a safe, quiet neighborhood; annual holidays; happy, healthy children; money saved for their college years. But it has come at enormous personal cost to me. My stress level has increased dramatically with added responsibilities at work and my health has deteriorated. People who haven’t seen me for years flinch when we meet again and I’ve attended more than one event at which I have overheard someone remarking on how much I’ve aged.

I don’t think I can do this for another 25 years. I often dream of leaving my firm for a less demanding position, with you making up any financial deficit with a job – even a modest one – of your own. I’ve asked, and sometimes pleaded, for years with you to get a job, any job. Many of my free hours are spent helping with the house and the kids, and I recognise that traditional gender roles are often oppressive, but that cuts both ways. I would feel less used and alone if you pitched in financially, even a little.'

‘She wanted him to suffer’: Sheriff explains why Texas mom killed two daughters in front of husband

Matt · 4 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nearly a week ago, on June 24 , his 45th birthday, Jason Sheats gathered with his family in the living room of their Houston-suburb home about 5 p.m. Beside him were his daughters, Taylor, 22, and Madison, 17. His wife, Christy, had called a family meeting.

After years of challenges with Christy’s mental health, her struggles with depression and anxiety, her suicide attempts, Jason told authorities that he thought perhaps she was going to announce she had decided to file for divorce. The couple had talked about separating.

But instead, police said, the 42-year-old mother pulled out a .38 caliber handgun, a gift from her late grandfather, and pointed it at her screaming children. Then she shot them, inside the house and out in the street, where the girls collapsed and stopped moving. When law enforcement arrived, they watched Christy fire a final bullet into her eldest daughter, then a police officer shot the mother dead.'

White House Task Force Member Gunned For Fraternity Smeared In Rolling Stone Article

Mastodon · 4 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former White House college sexual assault task force member appears to have been gunning for a University of Virginia fraternity smeared in a Rolling Stone article about a now-debunked campus gang rape, newly released emails show.

“I want to see these guys gone and I want to keep it as legally sound as possible,” UVA alum Emily Renda wrote to Rolling Stone reporter Sabrina Rubin Erdely in July 2014, several months before the Rolling Stone article “A Rape on Campus” was published.

At the time, Renda was working in a gender-based violence prevention program at the school. That spring she had served on the White House Task Force to Protect Students from Sexual Assault.

Renda appeared concerned that publishing the name of the fraternity, Phi Kappa Psi, would “create a credibility issue” and hurt the effort to have it removed.'

Obama to bypass colleges dismissive of campus rape, newpaper says

Mastodon · 5 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Reinforcing a key White House policy initiative, President Obama, Vice President Joe Biden and other top administrators will no longer visit colleges and universities they deem too lenient on sexual assault, according to federal officials cited by The Washington Post.

Obama, Biden, their wives and cabinet members are among those who will avoid academic institutions "whose leaders they consider insufficiently serious about pursuing sexual-assault allegations and punishing perpetrators."

The new policy forms part of a major, multifaceted campaign by the White House to render college campuses free from sexual assault.'

Mother Dodges Jail Time for Hosting ‘Naked Teen Twister Party’

Mastodon · 5 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A Georgia mother was convicted after hosting a party for her 16-year-old daughter and her friends, where she reportedly joined the kids for a game of naked Twister, according to WJBF. Police reports indicate that Rachel Lehnardt, 36, also allowed the teens to smoke marijuana and drink alcohol in her home. The reports also say that Lehnardt admitted to having sex with her daughter’s 18-year-old friend at the party.

The party was reported to authorities after Lehnardt discussed details of the incident with her Alcoholics Anonymous sponsor back in April 2015, and the sponsor then told the Columbia County Sheriff’s Office, WJBF reported. After her arrest, Lehnardt’s attorney issued a statement saying that the allegations were exaggerated, but that “she engaged in several acts of inappropriate conduct,” as a result of alcohol abuse.

Lehnardt was convicted of six counts of Contributing Delinquency of a Minor, and was sentenced to 12 months of probation and a $100 fine for each count, for a total of six years of probation and $600. In addition too that, Lehnardt has to undergo mandatory drug and alcohol treatment and testing.'

"Mocking masculinity isn't mean, it's purposeful (and fun!)"

Mastodon · 5 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yes, the personal is political, but the ongoing criticisms of male behaviour do not equate to personalized "misandry" any more than criticisms of corporate power equate to an irrational hatred of white men who just happen to be very, very rich at the expense of pretty much everyone else.

Beyond that, mocking men and men's socialized behaviour is something that actually makes having to live with the everyday violence and supremacy of men tolerable. We joke so that we don't lose our shit every time we have to balance half a butt cheek on a seat because otherwise we'll be sitting in some dude's lap on the bus.

It seems Young's greatest fear is not, in fact, that "equality" won't be achieved because women are just so mean to the group of people who have subjected them to violence and oppression for centuries now, but that, in fact, the righteousness of manhood might dissolve. Trying to pressure feminists into softening their response to masculinity will always prove to be fruitless because, as feminists, we have nothing to prove to men -- this movement is not for them.'

Hillary Clinton bids farewell to the Toast

Mastodon · 5 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Recent media stories about Hillary Clinton have centered on her avoidance of press conferences and her campaign's efforts to prevent reporters from getting close enough to ask questions. So just consider, for a moment, how notable it is that the presumptive Democratic presidential nominee would volunteer her time to a media outlet.

It happened Friday. Clinton apparently made an unsolicited offer to write a farewell post for the Toast, the feminist literary website that built a loyal — but unsustainably small — audience. Friday marked the last day of publishing for the Toast, which was founded in 2013 by Mallory Ortberg and Nicole Cliffe.
...
Clearly Clinton was a fan of the Toast, which has been described by one critic this week as a "gleeful kneecapper of high culture, omphalos of cheerful misandry and habitat of the rare courteous and informative comments section." What's also clear is that she was a fan of the Toast's readership and didn't want to miss her last opportunity to address its members.'

"Feminists Are Not Mistreating Men"

Mastodon · 5 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But, gentlemen, we all need to realize something. Women didn't create the unfairness; we did. We did it when we threatened them with violence. We did it when we refused to take no for an answer. We did it every time we tried to make them feel safe by being kind and friendly only to then become hostile if they didn't reciprocate our interest. We convinced them that kindness and friendliness are just a facade we use to get what we want. Is there any reason they should trust us?

I'd like you to take a moment and contemplate the horror of that. Imagine that just about every time someone showed you kindness, you later found out that they had an ulterior motive. Worse yet, kindness turned to cruelty and aggression once their true motivations became clear. You've come to associate kindness with pain, with betrayal. How do you ever trust again after that? The very thing that is supposed to cement a bond between two human beings is itself viewed with suspicion. That is what we did to women. That's why they don't trust us.

“But, Rich, if that's true, how do we regain their trust?”

We don't.

You can't regain trust through a series of gestures; you have to try to be the kind of person who is trustworthy, and hope for the best.'

"In the Face of a Huge Gender Gap with Trump, It's Time for Progressive Men to Get Behind Hillary"

Mastodon · 5 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the election between Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump shapes up, we continue to see Clinton and the women who are supporting her exiled (with apologies to Liz Phair) in Guyville. As presumptive Democratic nominee Clinton says about this historic election, “This campaign is about making sure there are no ceilings, no limits on any of us and this is our moment to come together.”

Yet, we are not all coming together. Bernie Sanders has not withdrawn, despite Clinton’s securing the delegates to win the nomination. Twenty-two percent of Sanders supporters say they’d rather vote for Trump than Clinton. Male Sanders supporters continue to troll and threaten Clinton supporters and the media covering her.

Clinton’s imminent nomination is a huge step for women and for feminism, and feminism is part of a progressive agenda. But you wouldn’t know it in Guyville, where white men continue their long history of failing to fight for feminist advances. Even among those white men who do support Clinton, there is a pronounced lack of enthusiasm and activism. Hillary seems to be left to be elected by everyone but them.'

Ask Amy: How can my son escape his abusive marriage?

mens_issues · 5 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dear Amy: My 40-year-old son is in an abusive marriage. His wife hits him, locks him out of the house, calls him humiliating names, has alienated him from his friends and family, etc.

He has lost 70 pounds and developed dangerous stress-related symptoms. He's a shell of what he once was. He acts confused and disoriented, rather than our smart, capable and popular son. It's heartbreaking.
...
They have two small children who witness this abuse. He's very worried about the kids, but is so broken down he doesn't feel capable of caring for them on his own. We've told him we will care for them, but he tells us it's too much of a burden.
...
It's hard for us to be good in-laws when we're aware of this. She often blows up at us if we try to talk about it. We are sick with worry about our son.

Dear Mom: According to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, one in seven men (over the age of 18) in the U.S. has been the victim of severe physical violence by an intimate partner.

Your focus should be on your son's health and self-esteem, and on providing a safe place for the children. His weight loss and other symptoms are alarming, and you should encourage him to get a thorough physical checkup and mental health screening. If he isn't making progress in therapy, you should help him to find one that specializes in working with abused men.'

Wife runs down husband with car

mens_issues · 5 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Yavapai County Sheriff's deputies arrested 32-year-old Jennifer Fletcher for assaulting her estranged husband with her car.
The incident happened Tuesday around 6:30 a.m. in Chino Valley.

According to deputies, Fletcher pinned the man between her 2010 Toyota Prius and his truck following a discussion between the two.

After he was able to get away and into the house, Fletcher drove into the home, striking the front door area.

The couple's three children were in the living room of the home at the time.'

Here's the moment a Rolling Stone author knew her gang-rape story was complete bull

Mastodon · 5 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Originally, Rolling Stone was going to issue a statement in response to questions and doubts over the validity of Jackie's story.

"Obviously, we regret any factual errors in any story," the statement was supposed to read. "But Rolling Stone believes the essential point of Jackie's narrative is, in fact, true: A young woman suffered a horrific crime at a party, and a prestigious university reacted with indifference to her claim."

"This happens too often at college campuses all over America," the statement continued. "Any mistakes we made were honest ones, trying hard to create a narrative and an investigation that would improve the prevention, investigation and prosecution of sexual violence. For that we would never apologize."

Note the insistence that the narrative was more important than the facts when it comes to combating campus sexual assault. Forget the fact that continually covering hoaxes makes the public less likely to believe the next accuser.'

No Men Beyond This Point – Mockumentary Debuts on DVD July 12th

Mastodon · 5 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The festival favorite NO MEN BEYOND THIS POINT debuts on DVD and digital July 12 from Samuel Goldwyn Films and Sony Pictures Home Entertainment. The film was written and directed by award-winning filmmaker Mark Sawers (Camera Shy) and stars Rekha Sharma ("The 100"), Ben Cotton (Battlestar Galactica: Blood & Chrome), Patrick Gilmore (Cabin in the Woods), Hilary Jardine ("Van Helsing"), Tara Pratt ("Standard Action") and Bruce Harwood ("The X Files"). NO MEN BEYOND THIS POINT took home awards for Best Feature Audience Award, Best Feature Actor (Patrick Gilmore), Best Script (Mark Sawers) and Best Feature Editing at the 2015 Other Worlds Austin Sci-Fi Film Festival and Best Supporting Actress in a Canadian Film (Tara Pratt) from the Vancouver Film Critics Circle.'

Shooting the Feminist Sheriff

Mastodon · 5 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sometimes one is tempted to shoot the sheriff. When we take note of what is going on in the town -- the moral degeneracy of its affairs, the raging puritanism that has installed itself as a twisted form of prurience, cruel punishment for perceived sexual misconduct and natural behavior meted out under cover of the law, and indeed, the wielding of the law as an instrument of repression -- the sheriff can no longer be respected or obeyed. Defiance of an entrenched administration that wears the badge of cultural authority and determines the politics and mores of our lives becomes a duty.

...

The feminist attack on a nebulous entity called the “patriarchy” asserting its putatively illegitimate sexist power over the female half of humanity is a paranoiac absurdity, a pathological misandry masking as a cultural verity. The feverish fixation on male sexual “perversion” and on the need for “liberating” alternatives can only lead to social confusion and mental derangement. As C.S. Lewis wrote in The Abolition of Man, “There has never been, and never will be, a radically new judgement of value in the history of the world,” a truth rejected by the sexual vigilantes of the day pushing a distorted system of sexual values -- really a system of anti-values -- at the cost of cultural sanity.'

Cokie Roberts Blames Sexism for Clinton's Poor Polling on Leadership

Mastodon · 5 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'ABC News panelist Cokie Roberts cited sexism for Hillary Clinton's poor polling on leadership questions during a Sunday appearance on This Week, saying that was "all about being a woman."

Discussing potential vice-presidential picks for Clinton with the national convention less than a month away, Roberts said choosing Sen. Elizabeth Warren (D., Mass.) could pose problems for her candidacy.

"I think Elizabeth Warren is the real problem," Roberts said. "Not only does she not need her in terms of the Democrats—Hillary Clinton in our last ABC poll had 88 percent of the Democratic vote. Barack Obama got 89 percent of the Democratic vote when he won in 2008. It's fine. Having two women on the ticket is a real issue. We have looked at implicit bias, and you look at the polling where you see that Hillary Clinton is losing on leadership. That's all about being a woman."'

Cops: Mother Swung Her Baby "Like A Bat"

Matt · 6 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Swinging her five-month-old son like a baseball bat, a Florida woman yesterday struck her boyfriend with the infant before dropping the child face first into the sand on Daytona Beach, police charge.

Cops allege that Tatyana Allen, 18, initially hit her 19-year-old beau “several times in the face with a closed hand” before using her baby “as a weapon.” Allen, witnesses said, swung the infant “like a bat” before “the baby was dropped in the sand, face down.”

Allen’s boyfriend, the child’s father, quickly flipped the infant upright since he was unable to turn over on his own. Witnesses told cops that Allen subsequently “snatched” her son from the man’s arms and walked away with the child “dangling,” without his head being supported.'

Didn't feminism promise to eliminate women's need for prostitution?

Matt · 7 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

One argument feminism made for itself was that due to its effects, women would not have to turn to prostitution, and indeed, would not want to. Apparently someone forgot to tell the younger generation. Read it here. Excerpt:

'Her adventures in “sugaring” started three years ago when she got hit on by an older guy and rebuffed him, saying, “Look, I’m not interested, so unless you’re offering to pay my student loans,” and he said, “Well . . . ?” After that, “he paid for stuff. He gave me money to help out with my living expenses.”

It ended when she went on a school year abroad and started meeting men on Seeking Arrangement, the Web site and app which match “sugar daddies” with “sugar babies,” whose company the daddies pay for with “allowances.” Now, she says, she has a rotation of three regular “clients”—”a top Austin lawyer, a top architect, and another tech guy,” all of them married. She adds, “Their relationships are not my business.”
...
“While in college,” she goes on, “I’ve had the ability to focus on developing myself because I’m not slaving away at a minimum-wage job. I reject it when people say I’m oppressed by the patriarchy. People who make seven dollars an hour are oppressed by the patriarchy.”

“She’s in control of the male gaze,” says another woman at the table, Erin, 22.
...
The most surprising thing about Miranda’s story is how unsurprising it is to many of her peers. “Almost all of my friends do some sort of sex work,” says Katie, 23, a visual artist in New York. “It’s super-common. It’s almost trendy to say you do it—or that you would.”

“It’s become like a thing people say when they can’t make their rent,” says Jenna, 22, a New York video-game designer. “ ‘Well, I could always just get a sugar daddy,’ ‘I guess I could just start camming,’ ” or doing sexual performances in front of a Webcam for money on sites like Chaturbate. “And it’s kind of a joke, but it’s also not because you actually could. It’s not like you need a pimp anymore. You just need a computer.”
...
As the debate over whether the United States should decriminalize sex work intensifies, prostitution has quietly gone mainstream among many young people, seen as a viable option in an impossible economy and legitimized by a wave of feminism that interprets sexualization as empowering. “People don’t call it ‘prostitution’ anymore,” says Caitlin, 20, a college student in Montreal. “That sounds like slut-shaming. Some girls get very rigid about it, like ‘This is a woman’s choice.’”'

UK: Removing a privilege for women that men pay for is unfair

Matt · 8 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If there are any female Guardian Money readers born on 5 March 1953, then congratulations (or commiserations): you officially reached state pension age on Wednesday 6 January, and can start claiming your basic state pension of up to £115.95 a week.

But if you are a woman born exactly one year later, on 5 March 1954, then you won't hit state pension age until July 2019 – ie, not for another three-and-a-half years. By that time the woman born in 1953 will arguably be in a much stronger financial position because she will have received well in excess of £20,000 of basic state pension (assuming she is entitled to the full amount), purely because she happened to arrive in the world 12 months before you did.

If anyone is looking for reasons why many women are up in arms about "unfair" changes to the state pension age, then the weird quirk in the UK pension rules outlined above is just one.

...

Clearly there was a lack of fairness – so we equalised the SPA at 65 for men and women. As with any change in policy, one group will always be affected first. In this case, women born in 1950 were the first to see an increase in their SPA. Due to further sharp rises in life expectancy, we then had to make the difficult decision to speed up the rises to 65 and 66.

The government listened to concerns, and introduced a measure to ensure that the maximum change to SPA that anyone would face is 18 months rather than two years. This concession means that it will reach 66 by October 2020, rather than April 2020, and is worth more than £1bn.

It is important to remember that those affected by faster equalisation will reach state pension age after the introduction of the new state pension which will be more generous for many women. Forecasts show that 10 years after implementation, over 650,000 women will benefit – receiving on average £8 a week more.'

"The Western World's In Crisis. Bring In The Women."

Mastodon · 9 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As political and social turmoil rocks the Western world, we're increasingly looking to women to clean up the mess — the U.S., the U.K., Germany, the IMF and the United Nations may all be run by women come January.

At least one woman isn't the least bit surprised, but she is worried: Are the coming leaders facing down impossible situations? Are we setting up women to fail, discouraging a generation of women from vying for leadership roles?

More than a decade ago, Michelle Ryan, an organizational and social psychologist at the University of Exeter, along with a colleague, coined a term — the Glass Cliff — to describe the situation when women, and sometimes minority men, ascend to power during times of organizational decline, crisis and turmoil. It's the natural corollary of the "glass ceiling," the invisible barrier women face when trying to make it up the top of the ladder. Those who crack the ceiling, the reasoning goes, step out onto a fragile ledge at the top and face down various crises.'

"Law? We Don't Need No Stinkin' Law"

Mastodon · 9 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This week, the president and vice president revealed plans to intensify their personal crusade against campus "rape culture." President Obama and Vice President Joe Biden will "put the pedal to the metal," per the Washington Post: They, their wives, and cabinet members won't set foot on college campuses where officials don't adjudicate sexual assault cases to the White House's liking, thus denying students the privilege of a snoozing through a commencement address delivered by Dr. Jill Biden.

Rape being a crime, some colleges defer to the police, but in so doing, these schools, it is now claimed, violate federal guidance on how to enforce the Education Act of 1972's Title IX—which states, "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance."

Under Obama, the Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights defined sexual assault as a form of sex discrimination that colleges must address according to its particular rules. These rules amount to a federal "guidance" without the strength of law, but they might as well be law: Disregarding guidance, a school risks the denial of government funding, which nearly all schools—public and private—depend on in some part. And indeed, the executive posse reiterated its aim to punish schools who don't handle these cases by White House rules: The Post has Biden saying he'd like to "take away their money."'

How gullible journalists do harm to rape victims

Matt · 10 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Unfortunately, when you start out committed to a narrative, you tend to be looking for reasons to believe, instead of reasons to doubt.

Journalists are not the only ones who want to believe. There were powerful voices saying rape was a special sort of crime, one that must be treated very differently from other sorts of crimes. Rape is, unfortunately, a difficult crime to prosecute: There are generally only two witnesses, sometimes one or both of whom are often impaired by intoxicants, and even if you think that the rate of false accusations is “only” 8 percent . . . well, an 8 percent chance that any given rape accusation is false gets you at least a big start toward “reasonable doubt.”

This enrages a lot of activists, as well it should; every rape left unprosecuted is a tragic injustice. But activists pushed the notion that the answer was to use weaker standards of evidence, to refrain from questioning victims’ stories, to err on the side of believing accusers rather than giving the accused the benefit of the doubt. They weren’t very successful in the criminal justice system, but they were successful in campus judiciary proceedings — and perhaps they also succeeded in getting journalists like Erdely to change the standards they used to evaluate rape accusations.'

Men’s Rights Facebook Page A Voice For Men Removed On Day Of Annual Conference

Mastodon · 10 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Speaking to a crowd at the International Conference on Men’s Issues in the ExCel Centre in London, Paul Elam revealed that the Facebook page for “A Voice For Men,” one of the organising groups for the event, has been unpublished by the social network on the second day of the conference.

The timing for the unpublishing could not be any worse for the group, as they are now unable to publish post-conference articles and summaries of the event. It may have just be a coincidence, but a co-ordinated mass reporting operation could also have been the cause – so far, no group has come forward to take responsibility for the removal of the page.

After having amassed around 35,000 likes on the social media platform, the page was deleted for having “violated community standards” – it was not revealed what exact regulation was violated, and Elam was adamant that they had done nothing wrong.

This follows a series of other conservative, right-leaning, or otherwise anti-social justice or “offensive” pages being unpublished by Facebook. The Meninist page was removed this week, with the eventual reason given being that their profile photo somehow violated standards that the website had set, even after the administrators of the page had removed all of their content as a defence against such action from the company.'

Falsely Accused Teen Finally Gets Bail After 801 Days in Jail

Matt · 10 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Men's Rights Group of Arizona LLC has been following the Tyler Kost case for some time and attended at least one court hearing in 2015. This case has rocked Arizona for over two years and just recently new information has emerged leading many to believe as many as 13 teen girls lied to put him in jail under false pretenses. If you haven't heard about the allegations against Tyler Kost let me give you a brief summary up to two days ago.

Tyler was a 18 year old teenager attending Poston Butte High School just outside of Florence Arizona. One day many of Tyler's ex girlfriends allegedly plotted to seek revenge against him for being "a player" and felt justified in their own brand of revenge according to news reports.'

When Women Take Power, It's Usually Because Men Have Made a Big Mess

Mastodon · 11 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is now absolutely certain that Britain's next prime minister will be a woman. Every male candidate for party leader was eliminated after Conservative members of Parliament voted to narrow the field to two nominees. Grass-roots party members will decide between Home Secretary Theresa May and Energy Secretary Andrea Leadsom in an election that will last until September. Elsewhere in Britain, the Scottish National Party, the Green Party, Welsh nationalist party Plaid Cymru, Northern Ireland's Democratic Unionist Party, and the Scottish Labour and Conservative parties are all led by women. The left-wing Labour Party has never had a female leader, but Angela Eagle is expected to challenge Jeremy Corbyn if he ever opens his eyes, takes his fingers out of his ears, and stops saying, "I'm not stepping down! I'm not stepping down! I'm not stepping down!"

It's hard not to notice that this blossoming of female political power comes at a time when British politics is in a stonking great mess. The June 23 referendum vote to leave the European Union means that the next prime minister will spend half her time negotiating with Europeans who want to boot the ungrateful Brits out of their union and the other half calming down Brits who want to kick Europeans out of their not at all united kingdom. In other words, the gig is a poisoned chalice. And that list of women-led U.K. political parties is less impressive when you realize that with the notable exception of the SNP's Nicola Sturgeon (and possibly the Greens, who have had more than one female leader), the women took the top spots when their parties were in crisis.'

What you didn't know having a father was saving you from

Mastodon · 11 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2014, 17.4 million children lived in a fatherless home. Every year there are more single moms raising children on their own. Despite the trend that seems to be rapidly increasing, there have been numerous studies that prove how essential a dad is to a child's success and overall happiness.

Here are some of the facts:

1. Children with fathers are less likely to live in poverty

In 2011, it was reported that fatherless homes were four times more likely to suffer from poverty. Single mothers work hard to provide for their families; but having a working father significantly reduces chances of poverty.

2. Children with fathers are less likely to experiment with drugs and alcohol

In the "Journal of Marriage and Family," it was reported that adolescents without a solid family structure or a working man in the home are much more prone to experiment with drugs and alcohol.

3. Girls without fathers are 3.5 times more likely to experience teenage pregnancy

A study of 264 adolescent women seeking psychological services found that the rate of pregnancy among those in a father-absent home was 17.4 percent, compared to 4 percent in a two-parent household.'

India: Most rape accusations in Mumbai are based on marriage promises

Matt · 12 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As much as 71.9% of the accused facing rape charges in Mumbai are alleged to have lured their victims on the pretext of marriage, according to a review of such cases reported till October this year. Data compiled by police shows that of the 542 rape cases filed so far in Mumbai this year, 389 offences (71.9%) were committed by "boyfriends" of the victims after they had promised marriage, Police Commissioner Rakesh Maria said today.

He added that while 6% of the sexual assault cases involved unknown persons, the accused in the rest were either relatives or immediate siblings of the victims. Maria was responding to queries by journalists on the increasing number of rape cases in the metropolis.

Of the 542 cases lodged till October 31, 477 have been solved. Of the 333 cases which were registered during the same period last year, 316 were solved, police added. "We have been exhorting people to come forward and lodge complaints. Hence, women who faced sexual assault are approaching us without any fear," Maria added. He said that more victims approaching police was one of the reasons why the registration of rape cases had seen a jump in the metropolis.'

University faces civil rights complaint over women-only lounge

Matt · 12 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A professor has filed a complaint with the Michigan Department of Civil Rights against Michigan State University because the taxpayer-funded school features a women's study lounge in its main student union — in which male students may not trespass.

The professor is Mark Perry, a member of the economics faculty at the University of Michigan–Flint, about an hour down the road.

"The women's study lounge is a gender-exclusionary space that blatantly discriminates against men," Perry told The Daily Caller.'

GOP Platform Set To Criticize Obama Administration Crackdown On Colleges Mishandling Rape

Mastodon · 13 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The current draft of the Republican party platform will demand that only courts determine if a college student accused of sexual assault is guilty, and criticizes federal efforts to make sure universities are not mishandling reports of rape.

Delegates met Monday evening in Cleveland, and considered language in the draft of the platform that condemned the Obama administration's "distortion of Title IX to micromanage" how colleges handle sexual assault cases, and that it "contravenes our country's legal traditions."

"Whenever reported, it must be promptly investigated by civil authorities and prosecuted in a courtroom, not a faculty lounge," the draft platform reads. "Questions of guilt or innocence must be decided by a judge and jury, with guilt determined beyond a reasonable doubt. Those convicted of sexual assault should be punished to the full extent of the law."'

Cathy Young: Rape Culture in the West is as Real as ‘Witchcraft in Salem’

Mastodon · 13 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Late last month, Emma Sulkowicz (aka Mattress Girl) was given the Woman of Courage award by the National Organization of Women. I discussed the case and the general effect of “rape culture” hysteria recently with Cathy Young, whose article “Columbia Student: I Didn’t Rape Her” was one of the first to cast doubt on the Mattress Girl’s narrative.

...

It's an extremely circular argument, and it reminds me a little bit of arguments that were being made during the Salem Witch Hunts. The idea was that if you denied the existence of witchcraft, that inherently made you a suspect. Because, you know, why would anyone deny the existence of witchcraft unless they were with the witches and wanted to help them get away with it? So it is really a very similar argument.

I know that we can all say that, well, rape really exists. And we know today that witches did not exist, but rape does. To which I would say yeah, absolutely, rape exists. But I don’t think “rape culture” in modern Western society is any more real than witchcraft was in Salem.'

UK: Nottinghamshire Police records misogyny as a hate crime

Mastodon · 13 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harassment of women is to be recorded as a hate crime in a bid to tackle sexist abuse.

Nottinghamshire Police said it would expand its categories to include misogynistic incidents.

It means abuse or harassment which might not be a crime can be reported to and investigated by the police, and support for the victim put in place.

Nottingham Women's Centre said it hopes it will help give more victims the courage to report incidents.

Chief Constable Sue Fish claimed it will make the county a safer place for women.'

Domestic Violence Using A Pink Razor

Mastodon · 13 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A domestic disturbance Saturday night resulted in a College Station man being treated for several cuts with a pink razor and his girlfriend being arrested for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon.

28 year old Cecilia Blum was released from jail Tuesday morning after posting bond.

Her boyfriend was treated for three cuts, including one on his left thigh that was six inches long and deep enough to expose the fatty tissue.

According to the arrest report from College Station police, she was on the phone when she swung the razor in an attempt to get the boyfriend away from her.'

Cartel hitwoman confesses to bathing in victims' blood and having sex with dead men

Matt · 13 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Ever hear someone say, "No woman would EVER do THAT!", or thought it to yourself? Sure you have. But reality and prejuduces often clash. This is one time:

'A hitwoman for one of Mexico's most notorious cartels has made a stunning confession from her California jail cell: she claims to have had intercourse with beheaded corpses and drank their blood.

Mexican media reports that 28-year-old Juana – also known as 'La Peque' (the little one) – of the ruthless Zetas cartel made the admission from a Baja, California prison.

Juana said: 'Ever since I was a little girl I was a rebel, and then became a drug addict and an alcoholic.'
...
Local news site Denuncias claims Juana began to 'feel excited by it, rubbing myself in it and bathing in it after killing a victim.'

'I even drank it when it was still warm,' she alleged.

Denuncias said Juana 'insinuated' at having 'had sex with the cadavers of those decapitated, using the severed heads as well as the rest of their bodies to pleasure herself'.'

Campus Sexual Assault Adjudication: Why Universities Should Reject the Dear Colleague Letter

Matt · 13 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Paper here. Abstract:

'This Article contends that although well intentioned, the mandates of the Dear Colleague Letter (DCL) are not the best way to handle campus sexual assault. Universities should have a number of different options available, from restorative justice processes to a full-blown adjudicatory hearing. When suspension or expulsion may result, the respondent should have the right to an adjudicatory hearing with robust procedural rights. More controversially, this Article argues that despite the DCL, universities are legally entitled to make these changes.

This Article begins by situating university disciplinary proceedings legally and historically. It then turns to the DCL. It discusses whether OCR violated the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) by not going through notice and comment. After determining that the DCL is procedurally invalid, the Article discusses how universities can and should handle these cases while still remaining in compliance with Title IX. The Article concludes by acknowledging that even if schools would be allowed to make these changes they are unlikely to do so because of the considerable social (and indirect economic costs) in challenging the Department of Education.'

Stop Attacking The Education Department For Enforcing Title IX, 80 Advocacy Groups Say

Mastodon · 14 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A coalition of 80 organizations representing women, the LGBT community and minority groups issued a letter Wednesday defending the U.S. Department of Education's increased Title IX enforcement efforts.

Led by the National Women's Law Center, the groups argue that critics of how the Education Department's Office for Civil Rights is enforcing Title IX are wrong to say students accused of sexual assault are being denied due process rights. The letter further insists the Education Department did not violate administrative law when it issued guidance on how schools should handle sexual assault cases, as three federal lawsuits filed this year argue.

"Unfortunately, the Department is facing unwarranted criticism for doing its job," says the letter, which was sent to Education Secretary John B. King Jr. on Wednesday and obtained by The Huffington Post. "Some advocacy organizations, law professors, and legislators claim that the Department violated the Administrative Procedure Act (APA) by issuing the above guidance documents without going through a formal notice and comment process. They also allege that grievance procedures outlined in the 2011 sexual violence guidance violate due process rights of students accused of sexual assault. Both of these arguments are without merit."'

City Changes Rules to Keep Women-Only Swim Hours at Pool

Mastodon · 15 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Parks Department will keep the controversial women-only swim hours that cater mostly to Orthodox Jewish women at the Metropolitan Recreation Center's indoor public pool following a revision of gender discrimination policy by the city Human Rights Commission, they announced Wednesday.
...
The Human Rights Commission also softened its stance, stating that gender-separate hours could benefit some women.

“Everyone in New York City should have an equal opportunity to enjoy recreation centers," HRC spokesman Seth Hoy said. "After weighing the Parks Department’s request for an exemption for limited women-only swimming hours at two Brooklyn pools and balancing the impact on the broader community, the Commission has granted a limited exemption. Maintaining limited women-only swim hours at these pools will allow all women to enjoy the pool without being asked to compromise their religious beliefs or affiliations and will have a minimal impact on other community members’ ability to access the pool."'

Teen spends year in prison for false rape accusation

Mastodon · 15 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Jump the paywall by Googling the text of the first two paragraphs. Excerpt:

'A Jefferson County teen has been released from prison after a jury returned a verdict of not guilty on Wednesday for two felony counts of second-degree sexual assault.

Jordan Berry, 18, was released after serving more than a year in prison for a crime he did not commit.

After an hour and a half of deliberation, the seven male and five female jurors returned a not guilty verdict on all counts against Berry.

"Justice has been served," said Brenda Williams, Berry's mother. "I knew he was innocent from the beginning."

In November 2014, Berry, then 16, was arrested after a girl he had multiple prior relations with, accused him and another teen of raping her.

Berry spent more than a year waiting for his name to be vindicated and his friend, Josh Jenkins, must wait another month before he can have his trial.

"This was horrifying for my family. It destroyed our lives," Williams said.

Berry's future may have been changed by the court-appointed attorney provided to the family.

Berry was represented by defense attorney Stephanie Scales who said, "I think the jury got it right."'

Dads play key role in child development

Matt · 16 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers play a surprisingly large role in their children's development, from language and cognitive growth in toddlerhood to social skills in fifth grade, according to new findings from Michigan State University scholars.

The research provides some of the most conclusive evidence to date of fathers' importance to children's outcomes and reinforces the idea that early childhood programs such as Head Start should focus on the whole family, including mother and father alike. The findings are published online in two academic journals, Early Childhood Research Quarterly and Infant and Child Development.

"There's this whole idea that grew out of past research that dads really don't have direct effects on their kids, that they just kind of create the tone for the household and that moms are the ones who affect their children's development," said Claire Vallotton, associate professor and primary investigator on the research project. "But here we show that fathers really do have a direct effect on kids, both in the short term and long term."'

Research finds link between father absences and declining male college enrollment

Matt · 16 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Absent dads may be contributing to the growing male gender gap in higher education, according to research published by a professor at Brigham Young University.

Brian Willoughby, an assistant professor in the School of Family Life, was one of three authors that recently published a study in the journal “Family Relations” looking at whether the declining rate of males enrolling in college has been influenced by nonmarital birth rates and father absences.

What they found was that the gender gap opened up about 18 years after family structure changes in the late 1960s.

“I think we need to continue to talk about fathers and talk about their importance in our culture as we get more and more messages that they don’t matter,” Willoughby said.'

Pakistan: Social media star murdered by brother in "honor killing", feminists stay silent

Matt · 16 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Hundreds of women are murdered in Pakistan yearly, thousands in total there and in other Muslim countries, in "honor killings" done because they had the temerity to try living their lives without being coerced into compliant submission. Yet supposed feminists like Hillary Clinton, et al, remain utterly silent. They're more obsessed with a mythical wage gap and imaginery "microaggressions". Priorities are non-existent, it seems. Excerpt:

'A Pakistani social media celebrity whose selfies polarised the deeply conservative Muslim country has been murdered by her brother in a suspected honour killing, officials said Saturday, prompting shock and revulsion.

Qandeel Baloch, praised by many of the country's youth for her willingness to break social taboos but condemned by conservatives, was strangled near the city of Multan, police said.

"Qandeel Baloch has been killed, she was strangled to death by her brother. Apparently it was an incident of honour killing," Sultan Azam, senior police officer in Multan, told AFP.

Baloch, believed to be in her twenties and whose real name was Fauzia Azeem, had travelled with her family to Muzzafarabad village in central Punjab province for the recent Eid holiday.

She was killed there Friday, police said, adding that the brother, Wasim, was now on the run.

Up to 100 officers were gathered outside her family's home in Muzzafarabad, an AFP reporter there said. Five ambulances were also parked nearby.'

College urged to hire 'case manager' for sexual misconduct complaints

Mastodon · 17 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An advisory group is urging St. Olaf College to hire a full-time case manager just to handle complaints of sexual misconduct on the campus of 3,000 students.

That is one of the key recommendations in a lengthy report released Thursday in response to campus protests this spring.

St. Olaf commissioned the report in April after a group of students accused the liberal arts college in Northfield of mishandling allegations of campus rape, which has become a growing nationwide issue.

Thursday's report, by a group of students, faculty, staff and outside experts, concluded that the college needs someone to devote full time to managing complaints filed by or against students.

Over the past school year, St. Olaf received 14 reports of sexual misconduct, which can range from unwanted fondling to stalking to rape, according to Carl Lehmann, the college's attorney and a member of the advisory group.
...
But the advisory group declined to embrace some of the changes demanded by student protesters, including a proposal to require "verbal affirmative consent" to prove that a sexual encounter was not sexual assault. The report concluded that verbal consent is preferable, but that such a definition "would be problematic and lead to a host of unintended and negative consequences."'

The U.K. Police Force That Sees Misogyny as a ‘Hate Crime’

Mastodon · 19 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last week’s news that Nottinghamshire Police in the UK now classifies misogyny as a hate crime was praised by feminist bloggers in the U.S., eager to move to the utopian county where relentless catcallers are thrown behind bars.

The Huffington Post and the Guardian both praised Notts Police.

“Literally why isn’t this a thing everywhere?” asked one writer at Self magazine, thrilled that any Nottinghamshire “asshole who whistles at you every morning needs to think twice before doling out another cat-call. That’s criminal now, sucker.”

Well, not necessarily.

In a statement announcing the initiative, a collaboration with the Nottingham Women’s Centre, the police department has broadened its definition of a ‘hate crime’ to include misogyny and harassment of women.

Obliquely worded, a misogyny hate crime is “simply any incident, which may or may not be deemed as a criminal offense, which is perceived by the victim or any other person, as being motivated by prejudice or hatred,” the statement reads.

...

The emphasis here is mine, as Nottinghamshire’s police force is setting new precedents in law enforcement by prioritizing feelings over evidence when reporting a misogyny hate crime.'

Professor targets MSU in civil rights complaint

Matt · 19 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A University of Michigan-Flint professor has filed a civil rights complaint against Michigan State University over its women's study lounge.

But the lounge, located on the first floor of the MSU Student Union, won't be restricted when it reopens later this summer, according to MSU spokesman Jason Cody. The lounge is currently being converted into an all-purpose quiet study area, accessible to all students.

But that doesn't mean MSU is off the hook, said Mark Perry, the University of Michigan-Flint economics professor who filed the complaint in July.

"I think MSU owes an apology to the thousands of men whose civil rights have been violated," Perry said, noting that men were previously not allowed to use the public space.'

University finds student not guilty in "blackout" case

Matt · 19 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Haley Lind was found alone in a stranger's bathroom, she was naked and in a drunken stupor, barely able to stand or speak, a raucous party raging around her. She awoke in her bed hours later, her head pounding, leaves in her hair, soaked in her own urine.

"I think I got assaulted last night," she texted a friend the morning after the annual welcome-back-to-school Block Party at the University of Virginia. "Something just feels very wrong."

In a dorm room about a mile away, a freshman athlete got up that same morning with a clear memory of his first college party, just days into his U-Va. career. At an off-campus residence where athletes lived, there had been the cups of a potent liquor drink and crowds of sloshed students. An alluring, petite blonde had led him into an upstairs bathroom for sex, a rash decision that would end up haunting him.'

SAVE: Campus Sexual Assault: Lawmakers Abandon Affirmative Consent, Turn to Traditional Law Enforcement Approaches

Matt · 19 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Responding to high-profile cases at Stanford University, Vanderbilt, Baylor, and elsewhere, Democratic and Republican legislators are beginning to enact laws that emphasize traditional criminal justice approaches to curbing campus rape. Lawmakers have largely abandoned consideration of affirmative consent policies, which require intimate partners to indicate agreement at every step of sexual activity.

In the wake of the Stanford rape case, California lawmakers have begun debating whether to expand the definition of rape and establish minimum sentencing requirements. In Missouri, a bill was enacted on July 1 that directs universities to enter into a memorandum of understanding with law enforcement on sexual assault policies (SB 921). Laws designed to strengthen the reporting of sexual assault cases to local law enforcement were enacted earlier this year in Hawaii and Virginia.'

Milo Suspended Permanently by Twitter Minutes Before ‘Gays For Trump’ Party At RNC

Mastodon · 20 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Breitbart Tech editor Milo Yiannopoulos has been suspended from Twitter once more just 20 minutes before his “Gays for Trump” event takes place at the Republican National Convention.

The justification for the suspension is currently unknown, although it could be as a result of Milo’s run-in with Ghostbusters actress Leslie Jones on the site. Twitter CEO Jack Dorsey publicly reached out to Jones late on Monday evening after she complained about “abuse” on the platform. Milo was suspended despite the fact that he sent no abusive tweets to the actress.

BuzzFeed gleefully reported that the suspension is permanent, citing a statement from Twitter promising a clampdown on “targeted abuse.” Milo has also received a message from Twitter confirming that that his ban is permanent, copied below.'

5 Cases That Could Shape Campus Sexual Assault Investigations

Mastodon · 21 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'After Yale University expelled Jack Montague, a former basketball team captain determined by school officials to have sexually assaulted a female student, his lawyers went out on the offensive.

Employing an increasingly common strategy for male college students accused of sexual misconduct, Montague's lawyers sued Yale in June, accusing the school of violating the former basketball star's due process rights. The suit claims Yale railroaded Montague to counter criticism that it hasn't reacted strongly enough to reports of sexual assault.

The case comes as universities are amping up their response to sexual assault allegations. Those efforts have gained steam as reports of campus assaults have grown more widespread, and following a U.S. Department of Education threat, in a 2011 directive, to withhold federal funding under Title IX of the Civil Rights Act to schools that don't adequately respond to sexual violence.

As some schools have attempted to address the issue, however, their actions have led to court disputes. Some come from men who claim that they were unfairly disciplined in connection with an alleged assault. Others are advanced by female students who allege that their schools didn't do enough when they stepped forward to report themselves the victim of an assault.

Yale, represented by Connecticut's Donahue, Durham & Noonan, has yet to answer Montague's suit.

Here's a look at five other pending cases that may provide guidance on how universities should handle sexual misconduct inquiries.'

Should schools punish in sex cases when there's no accuser?

Mastodon · 21 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The expulsion of two college athletes on sexual misconduct grounds highlights a little-known facet of the latitude schools are given when investigating such cases: They can mete out punishment even in the absence of a complaint from the alleged victim.

Former Yale University basketball captain Jack Montague and former Colorado State-Pueblo football player and wrestler Grant Neal both filed federal lawsuits this year over their expulsions, alleging their schools mishandled information that originated with someone other than the alleged victim.

"There is no real complainant," said attorney Andrew Miltenberg, who represents Neal and has been the lawyer for about 100 men accused of sexual assaults on campuses. "There is no victim making the charge. There is the school acting on some sort of hearsay or information."

...

Beth Hamilton, the director of prevention and programs at the Connecticut Alliance to End Sexual Violence, defends the "preponderance" standard as appropriate in a college setting.

Schools don't have the forensic tools and other resources necessary to conduct a police-style investigation of every report and can't force people to testify, she said.

Discipline from a school is often appropriate, she said, whether the conduct rises to the level of a crime or not.

"The worst that a university can do is expel a student from their institution," she said. "The criminal justice process should have a higher standard, because the worst thing that can happen is you can incarcerate somebody."

But Johnson points out that being expelled could cost Montague millions of dollars over the course of his life, prevent him from getting a job and leave him labeled for life as a rapist.'

Male DNC delegates barred from seating due to gender

Matt · 21 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

It's Hillary's Democrat Party! Brace yourself, as this is just the beginning! Story here. Excerpt:

'A complaint to the Democratic National Convention says two male Vermont delegates were replaced by women in the name of "gender balance" and without adequate due process.

The complaint, filed by 21 Vermont Democrats, says the national party this month ordered the state party to replace Vermont Sen. Tim Ashe and party stalwart Ken Dean although Dean and Ashe were elected June 11.

Dean told The Associated Press on Wednesday about the complaint. It was filed with the DNC credentials committee.

Executive director Conor Casey of the Vermont Democratic Party said Thursday the state party was trying to follow national party requirements. A national party spokesman didn't immediately reply to a request for comment.'

You Can Now Look Up ‘Manspread’ In The Dictionary

Mastodon · 21 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Readers can now look up the definition of manspreading on Dictionary.com.

On Tuesday the online dictionary added over 300 new words and definitions to make sure the publication is keeping up with the times. Among the words is one of our all-time favorite love-to-hate terms: manspread.'

‘Hysterical feminism’ isn’t helping our fight against domestic violence

Mastodon · 21 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fuming feminists are leading Australia on a terrifying hunt for scapegoats.

How many innocent men are we going to see sent to the desert before we acknowledge our nation’s domestic violence problem doesn’t — and shouldn’t — rest on any individual’s shoulders?

The last couple of weeks haven’t demonstrated impressive progress toward tackling domestic violence — or having calm debate. Rather, they are cheerless affirmation of how frenzied and dangerously controlling the modern feminist movement is becoming. The hunt is on — and heading in the wrong direction.

Those who aren’t fierce feminists want unity and equality between the sexes — not incensed war. Domestic violence is a serious, challenging issue running rife. Statistics are well known, but our strategy in dealing with that data is taking a hysterical feminist lead rather than calm yet urgent action.'

Lutheran Church Votes to Protect Women from the Draft, But Not Men

charlie · 22 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The Lutheran church votes overwhelmingly to protect women from the draft, but not men. As men flee churches, it becomes abundantly clear that churches really don't care about men. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'For its modest size and relatively apolitical ethos, the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod seems to be having more than its share of days in court. Three years ago the Supreme Court unanimously vindicated one of its congregations in Hosanna-Tabor v. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, which recognized that churches have broad autonomy over whom they hire. This fall the justices will take up Trinity Lutheran v. Pauley, a dispute over whether states can deny funds to schools with religious affiliations.

Now the synod's two million members may have reason to anticipate yet another day in court. Last week in Milwaukee the church's triennial convention passed a resolution, by a 946-89 vote, committing to support "those who have a religious and moral objection to women participating in the selective service system and being subject to a possible draft." The text of the final resolution built on proposals by more than three dozen congregations, circuits, districts, or commissions of the synod.

That such a measure was even brought to a vote indicates how swiftly the country's legal and political culture has been changing. A similar proposal mooted only three years ago was dismissed as unnecessary. Undoubtedly, some delegates even thought it paranoid posturing.'

UK: Teenage boys in school skirt protest over hot weather

Matt · 23 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Four teenage boys have worn skirts to school in protest at being disciplined for wearing shorts on the hottest day.

The year nine students at Longhill High School in Rottingdean, East Sussex, were among about 20 boys who wore PE shorts instead of trousers on Tuesday.

Some were sent home, and others kept in isolation and excluded the next day.

When the four boys turned up in school skirts on Thursday, head teacher Kate Williams said they could "wear any part of the agreed school uniform".

The mother of 14-year-old Michael Parker, who was one of the group, said three of the boys were initially told to remove the skirts, but all four of them kept them on.'

Patents, Not Sexism, May Be Reason Women Lag in Venture Capital

Mastodon · 23 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While women own more than a third of all businesses in the U.S., companies run by them get only about 3 percent of venture capital funding. Is that one more example of sexism in Silicon Valley?

Maybe not, according to a new study by the Institute for Women's Policy Research, which found that the lack of funding may be partly explained by what it calls a gender patent gap.

For entrepreneurs and venture capitalists, patents are a bellwether of innovation. If a firm has a patent-worthy invention, it's far more likely to get financing. Managers of startups reported that more than three-quarters of venture capital investors consider whether a firm has patents when deciding whether to fund it, according to the study.
...
Women participate in teams that obtain just 18.8 percent of all patents, according to the Washington-based IWPR. While those numbers are up substantially from the 1970s, the change is proceeding at such a glacial pace that it will take until 2092 for women to catch up, the study said.'

New Ride-Sharing App Will Cater to Women Only

Mastodon · 23 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new ride-sharing company is hiring female drivers only, with plans to cater to only woman and children.

"She Drives Me" will match women drivers with women passengers who may fell less comfortable with a man behind the wheel.

The company also plans to do extensive background checks and drug testing.

It's set to launch this fall in Dallas, Texas, and several other cities nationwide. You'll be able to book a ride through an app.'

Column: The sad demise of MSU's women-only lounge

Mastodon · 23 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The end of an era is near, and it's a little sad. Michigan State University says it will reopen the now-closed women's lounge at the MSU Union as a generic space for both sexes.

University of Michigan-Flint professor Mark J. Perry, like a skunk at a lawn party, has filed a civil rights complaint, saying that men's rights were violated when the university spent money on a space that doesn't welcome the guys.

Though the university says the lounge was being converted before the complaint was filed, Perry has been beating this drum for awhile.

Perry, who blogs for American Enterprise Institute, has a point. We wouldn't tolerate, nor should we, an enclave that served only men. So how can we flip the script and use different rules when it comes to a special lounge for women?'

Court Docs: Rolling Stone Author Was Too Lazy To Fix Bogus Gang Rape Article

Mastodon · 23 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New court documents filed in the defamation lawsuit against Rolling Stone reveal that disgraced reporter Sabrina Erdely knew her story about a gang rape at the University of Virginia (UVA) was deeply flawed, but refused to change it because improving it would simply be too much work. They also reveal that Rolling Stone attempted to stem a rising tide of bad press by seeking a “sympathetic” MSNBC reporter who would let Erdeley defend herself without pushing back too much.

The revelations comes in a court filing made Friday by by attorneys representing UVA dean Nicole Eramo. Eramo is suing Rolling Stone for $25 million, claiming the magazine’s 2014 article “A Rape On Campus” defamed her by portraying her as indifferent towards the gang rape of student Jackie Coakley and unwilling to take her claims seriously.'

Court Docs: Rolling Stone Recently Fired Author Of Debunked Campus Gang Rape Article

Mastodon · 24 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rollings Stone recently “terminated” its contract with Sabrina Rubin Erdely, the reporter who wrote the debunked article about the gang rape of a University of Virginia student.

Erdely’s status with Rolling Stone has been kept under wraps since UVA dean Nicole Eramo sued the magazine for defamation because of its reporter’s Nov. 2014 article “A Rape on Campus.” In previous disclosures Erdely appeared to still be employed by the magazine.'

Failed Turkish coup prisoners being tortured, raped

Matt · 24 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. If these were women being treated this way, it'd be front page news. Excerpt:

'Turkish troops imprisoned after the failed military coup are being raped, starved and left without water for days, it is claimed.

Many of the 10,000 detainees are locked up in horses' stables and sports halls - some hogtied in horrific stress positions, according to human rights campaigners.

Amnesty International has called for immediate access to prisoners after the coup a week ago which sparked a brutal crackdown and a three-month state of emergency.

More than 200 died in the uprising which aimed to topple dictatorial President Recep Erdogan - and 1,500 were injured.

Amnesty says it has 'credible evidence' Turkish police are holding detainees in stress positions for up to 48 hours, denying them food, water and medical treatment and in the worst cases some have been subjected to severe beatings and torture, including rape.'

Teachers counter-sue teen's parents over selfie taken during statutory rape

Matt · 24 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. So the teachers stat. rape a minor, then sue him over the selfies of them he took, or allegedly so. Stranger than fiction. Remember: Nymphotropism knows no bounds. Excerpt:

'In response to a lawsuit by the parents of a male high school student over their son's alleged 9-hour threesome with a pair of English teachers, one of the teachers has fired back with shocking allegations of her own.

The teacher, Shelley Dufresne, taught at Destrehan High School in Destrehan, La., about 20 miles from New Orleans.

Police say the ménage à trois featuring Dufresne, the other teacher, Rachel Respess, and the unidentified, then-16-year-old male student occurred in the fall of 2014 at Respess's apartment.

Dufresne, a married mother of three, was 32 at the time.'

New domestic violence law gives convicted murderer a shot at freedom

Mastodon · 25 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to SB0209, the mitigating factor can be that "at the time of the offense, the defendant is or had been the victim of domestic violence and the effects of the domestic violence tended to excuse or justify the defendant's criminal conduct."

Lillian Cartwright, training and court-watch project manager for the Chicago Metropolitan Battered Women's Network, told me this nonprofit, which oversees all other domestic violence providers, helped get this law passed because 77 percent of incarcerated women are victims of abuse and are dramatically underserved when it comes to addressing this issue.

Aiardo's case is one of the first, if not the first, to take advantage of the new law, Cartwright said, and it speaks to the larger issue of "assisting these victims who live at the margin of society, including those who are incarcerated."'

NOW Calls Girl Who Falsely Cried Rape an ‘Inspiration’ to Real Rape Victims

Mastodon · 25 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Emma Sulkowicz, the performing artist best known for falsely accusing a man of rape and then turning her experience into art projects, received the National Organization for Women’s “Woman of Courage Award” for being an “inspiration” to rape victims.

Sulkowicz, also known as “Mattress Girl,” was made famous after she accused a fellow Columbia University student of rape. In order to protest the school’s alleged mishandling of her case, Sulkowicz promised to “Carry That Weight”—by carrying a mattress around campus—as a performance art piece until her alleged rapist was expelled or pressured to leave. The school eventually found the student Sulkowicz accused “not responsible.”

Sulkowicz’s plight gained support from self-proclaimed anti-rape activists, including New York Senator Kirsten Gillibrand, who invited Sulkowicz to be her guest at the 2015 State of the Union.
...
Despite the lack of evidence showing Sulkowicz was ever raped and Sulkowicz using her alleged rape as a way to promote her career, NOW is praising Sulkowicz for being an “inspiration” to real rape victims.'

Clinton Complains About Unfair ‘Hillary Standard’

Mastodon · 25 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Presumptive Democratic nominee Hillary Clinton said that she faced an elevated “Hillary standard” on trust and honesty in a Sunday interview on CBS’ “60 Minutes.”

“People are very willing to say things about me, to make accusations about me that are — I don’t get upset about them anymore, but they are very regrettable,” she told CBS host Scott Pelley. “There’s the Hillary standard and then there’s the standard for everyone else.”

Clinton explained by citing “unfounded, inaccurate, mean-spirited attacks with no basis in truth” occurring at the Republican National Convention, where attendees repeatedly chanted “Lock her up” in response to the private email server scandal.'

DNC Interim Head: Don’t Let ‘White Boys’ Win

Mastodon · 25 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The new interim head of the Democratic National Committee (DNC) has a colorful history, which includes demanding former President George H.W. Bush confess to an extramarital affair and a belief that “white boys” shouldn’t be allowed to win.

...

“[It’s not a] gender or race, it’s an attitude. A white-boy attitude is ‘I must exclude, denigrate and leave behind,” Brazile told the Post in 1999. “They don’t see it or think about it. It’s a culture.”

Brazile talked up her ability to be blunt and rude if necessary.

“I had to decide if I’d be a bitch or a whore. I chose bitch,” she told the Post. “I’d have to be strong, tough, abrasive. But I also knew I could be fair.”'

"This Tool Can Help You Prove This Common Sexist Problem Exists"

Mastodon · 25 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The timer — designed by software developer Cathy Deng — clocks the duration that a man or woman is speaking to "check who's dominating the conversation."

Deng discussed the difficulty of fostering diversity, using the tech industry as an example, on her site, AreMenTalkingTooMuch.com:

"When people talk about diversity and inclusion in tech, they often count bodies: What [percent] of women [are] at this company, what [percent of] women [are] at an event, etc. But ... inclusion is more than who's in the room. Often, in rooms that seem diverse, men still dominate conversations to a large extent.'

University creates sex-assault panel to weigh in on discipline

Mastodon · 27 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Minnesota is creating a special panel of students, faculty members and staff to decide if students accused of sexual assault should be disciplined.

Officials said they plan to train a pool of 35 volunteers to preside over hearings, as part of an effort to cope with an upsurge in complaints about sexual misconduct on campus.
...
The new panel will get 20 hours of training, compared with five hours in past years, according to Eichele. The training will include, for example, why trauma victims — especially rape survivors — often delay coming forward, as well as how to weigh the credibility of witnesses.'

Georgia Tech settles two lawsuits involving sexual assaults

Mastodon · 27 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University System of Georgia has settled two lawsuits by Georgia Tech students who claimed they were expelled unfairly after being wrongly accused of sexual assault.

The settlements, released through an open-records request, were completed in June and July.

In the first case, system officials agreed to pay a male student $125,000 to settle a case in which he had been accused by another male student of sexual assault. In January, the school was ordered to reinstate the student after it had found him responsible for non-consensual sexual intercourse.'

Student-athlete acquitted of rape says university won’t give him his degree

Mastodon · 27 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former University of Alaska Fairbanks hockey player who was charged with and then acquitted of rape claims in a recently filed lawsuit that his university will not hand over his degree.

Allegations lodged by the former student-athlete in the suit, which also seeks $100,000 in damages, paint campus officials as somewhat vindictive in their effort to deny Nolan Youngmun his petroleum engineering bachelor’s degree even though the young man has completed all the requirements for graduation, Alaska Dispatch News reports.'

Pelosi: White men don't like Clinton 'because of guns, because of gays, and because of God'

Mastodon · 27 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Republican Donald Trump leads Democrat Hillary Clinton 56 percent to 25 percent among white men, according to a recent survey — and House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi (D-Calif.) believes she knows why.

"So many times, white — non-college-educated — white males have voted Republican," she said in an interview with PBS on Tuesday. "They voted against their own economic interests because of guns, because of gays, and because of God, the three G's — God being the woman's right to choose."

Pelosi advised Clinton to attract more white male voters to her campaign "with an economic agenda to create jobs" because, for this demographic, "it's about the economy."'

UK: Woman makes a false rape allegation so police can give her a lift home

Mastodon · 29 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Judge Patrick Durcan made the comment about 47-year-old Christina Dowie after finding her guilty of making a false report of rape in two phone calls to the emergency services on March 18 last year.

Describing her actions on the night “reprehensible” Judge Duncan gave Ms Dowie a suspended six month jail term.

She made the calls in order for Irish police to give a lift back to her home in Shannon, Ireland from Sixmilebridge – five miles away, the Irish Mirror reports.

The judge said: “All she wanted was to use the Garda as a cheap mode of transport.”

Ms Dowie – who had been drinking to celebrate St Patrick’s Day – made two false rape claims in calls to emergency services.'

UK: Mother of teen who killed himself after false rape allegation found hanged

Mastodon · 29 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The heartbroken mum of a teenager who took his own life after being falsely accused of rape was found hanged in her family home.

The family of grief-stricken Karin Cheshire, 55, said she 'could not see a future' without son Jay Cheshire, 17, who took his own life after allegations of rape were made against him.

The complaint was withdrawn after two weeks but were said to have deeply affected Jay.

Karin had vowed to investigate the police's handling of the case but her family said she became 'vacant' and 'zombie-like' after his death.

The mum-of-two was found at her home in Southampton, Hampshire, on July 18 and an inquest into her death heard she had died in the same way as her son - asphyxiation as a result of hanging.'

Cornell’s kangaroo court for accused men

Mastodon · 29 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For several years we have been covering the near elimination of due process rights for men accused of sexual misconduct on campuses.

Universities, compelled by a directive from the Obama Department of Education under threat of loss of federal funding, have combined with toxic radical feminist “rape culture” warriors to create tribunals in which men are presumed guilty in what amount to Kangaroo courts for men on campus.

These campus tribunals have turned our traditional notions of justice around. While we used to hold to a standard that better 10 gulity men go free than 1 innocent man be convicted, now it’s Better 10 Innocent Men Suffer, Than 1 Guilty Man Escape.'

I’m a feminist — and I’m tired of Hillary’s sexist campaign

Mastodon · 29 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some glass ceilings should never be cracked.

Hillary Clinton’s massive head beamed onto a video screen in the main hall of the Democratic National Convention in Philadelphia Tuesday night, as if the Joker had escaped from a “Batman” movie and dived into a mosh pit of leftist celebrities.

...

And there you have it, estrogen fans. Hillary’s long, exhausting quest to assume the role of Leader of the Free World was never based on her smarts, skill, experience or fitness for the enormous undertaking.

Hillary is playing the chick card from the bottom of the deck.

We were reminded, ad nauseam, that her selection as the Democratic Party’s standard-bearer has made her the first female ever to be nominated as a presidential candidate by a major political party.'

Under Title IX, a kiss isn't always just a kiss

Mastodon · 29 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Under Baylor's Title IX guidelines, even a stolen kiss could trigger a process in which the accused may be presumed guilty from the start, a local defense attorney says.

Title IX, which is at the center of the sexual assault scandal that engulfed Baylor's football program earlier this year, is part of a more than 40-year-old law aimed at ensuring equal rights for those participating in educational programs that receive federal financial assistance.

It applies to all facets of a school's environment.

It has been interpreted to mean that sexual harassment of students including sexual violence interferes with the right to receive an education free from discrimination, and requires schools to take immediate action to end harassment and sexual violence.

Under Baylor's policy, even kissing could be considered "non-consensual sexual contact."

The university said in March it is spending $5 million to prevent and respond to acts of interpersonal violence.'

Appeals Court Reinstates Accused Male Student's Title IX Lawsuit Against University

Mastodon · 29 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a significant ruling on the issue of Title IX in campus sexual assault investigations, the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit today vacated a district court decision and will allow a male student's lawsuit against Columbia University to proceed. The Second Circuit clarified the standard for accused students pleading a violation of Title IX, and suggests the possibility of a Title VII framework, which would be much better for males suing schools due to alleged sexual discrimination.

The student claims Columbia University violated his due process rights and discriminated against him based on his gender in a wrongful sexual misconduct investigation that resulted in his suspension. The plaintiff is represented by attorney Andrew Miltenberg, who specializes in Campus Assault Due Process, and the appeal was argued by Philip A. Byler, of Nesenoff & Miltenberg, LLP.

"From the outset, Columbia University manipulated this investigation and engaged in gender bias against the accused, ignoring evidence and conflicting accounts presented by witnesses; motivated, in part, by public pressure," said Miltenberg. "This case illustrates the critically flawed process by which sexual misconduct investigations are handled at many colleges and universities, including Columbia, where there is an inherent bias against the accused male students, and recognizes that public criticism of Columbia University policies as not being aggressive enough towards men, provided a plausible inference of discriminatory bias against males."'

Court complicit in paternity fraud

Mastodon · 29 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Shortly after Chris Atkins began dating Lori Lonnquist, she informed him that she was pregnant. As Atkins tells Fox 31 Denver, he “tried to do the right thing,” and the two Colorado residents got married.

When their daughter was two-and-a-half years old, the pair split up, after which Atkins paid child support and enjoyed visitation rights.

Eight years later, Lonnquist decided she wanted to change their daughter’s last name. When Atkins refused, Lonnquist informed him that the child — whom he had been supporting for the past eleven years — was not his, and a DNA test confirmed her assertion.
...
While declining to enforce visitation rights, the court continues to require Atkins, pictured below, to pay child support, even though the child is not biologically his, and despite his not being allowed to see her for the past four years.'

Sexism’s secret gift to Hillary Clinton

Mastodon · 30 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yet women like Hillary Clinton also get big benefits from their gender, too. In fact, one of the main reasons Democrats wanted Hillary Clinton as their candidate is because of the belief that it’s important and appealing to put the first woman in the White House.

Her primary campaign had a notoriously hard time generating much enthusiasm, but to the extent that she did have fervent backers, they were overwhelmingly from the left’s feminist movement and from organizations specifically focused on electing women.

If Clinton were simply a former senator and secretary of state — with a lackluster record of achievement, scandal-plagued past and poor campaigning skills — and not also the first woman running for the presidency, she would at a minimum have had a lot more competitors for her party’s nomination, and likely would have been an early also-ran.'

Hillary Clinton’s Faulty Numbers on Equal Pay Would Backfire on Women

Mastodon · 30 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At the Democratic Convention on Monday night, Senators Elizabeth Warren and Cory Booker lamented that American women do not earn “equal pay for equal work.” A Hillary Clinton administration, they promised, would right this wrong.

The latest U.S. Department of Labor data show that women working full-time make 81 percent of full-time men’s wages. But this figure is both inaccurate and misleading. This statistic looks only at raw averages and does not take into account factors such as education, skills, and hours worked. After controlling for other factors, the gender pay gap practically disappears. Indeed, among single, childless workers under 30, women earn more than men. Legislation to close the gender “wage gap” is misguided: in reality, there is no gap to close.'

Bogus ‘sex offender’ labels are ruining lives

Matt · 30 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What’s the most common age of sex-offenders?

It’s not a trick question, but unless you follow this stuff closely you’ll almost certainly answer wrong.

In fact, most people are shocked to learn that the most common age of people charged with a sex offense isn’t a creepy 39, or 51.

It’s 14.

That’s right. As the US Bureau of Justice reports: “The single age with the greatest number of offenders from the perspective of law enforcement was age 14.”

Why so young? Because people tend to have sex with people around their own age, which means young people tend to have sex with other young people. And much under-age sex is illegal.'

Joe Biden pushes debunked 'one in five' sex assault statistic at Democratic convention

Mastodon · 30 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Even though Democrats, activists and the media insist campus sexual assault is such an "epidemic" we have to eviscerate due process rights to solve it, there has been little mention of the issue at the Democratic National Convention.

Even the biggest campus sexual assault fearmonger of them all, Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand, ignored the issue during her convention speech. There's hardly any mention of it in the Democratic Party platform.

But Vice President Joe Biden, one of the other peddlers of the alleged epidemic, did mention the issue in a video that played prior to his convention speech. The video pushed the debunked statistic that one in five women will be sexually assaulted in college campuses. Anyone who's looked into the statistic beyond the talking points of the biased people who crafted the survey it's based on will see that it is nonsense.'

Belinda Brown: Women exploit men’s chivalrous instincts

Matt · 30 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Psychologists recently established, for the benefit of those too blinkered to know already, that society perceives harming women as less morally acceptable than harming men.

This was in the past deeply beneficial to evolution. A society’s survival would have depended on the number of mature females able to reproduce and the degree to which their children could be nurtured, nourished and protected to maturity. Both of these processes would have required adaptations where women’s interests and wellbeing were prioritised over those of men.

Sadly, the way women have in recent times exploited this pivotal position means the benefits that accrued from this sort of behaviour are being reversed.

There are two consequences that flow from this greater concern for women. Firstly, what has been dubbed “The Empathy Gap”; a lack of empathy, and understanding when it comes to the problems facing men.

For example academic literature explains male suicide as a result of the male urge for power. When this is thwarted, suicide becomes a way of re-establishing control. It is not just Labour MP Jess Phillips who laughs at male suicide. I was recently at a lecture at LSE where the subject came up. When a member of the audience said that the higher rate of male suicide was a result of them being more effective at using weapons, the audience simply laughed.'

The 'Dad' Documentary released

Matt · 31 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'In Australia, 1 in 6 children don't live with their biological Dad and in the UK and USA it's 1 in 3...

Everyday, 261 Divorce cases are lodged in our Australian Federal Circuit Court and it's estimated that at least 3 dads take their lives due to family related issues. The rate of suicide and depression with both dads and children are at there highest level ever.

Since the first screening of this film back in November 2014, Karen and her team have presented the film in Parliament, Canberra after being personally invited by two politicians to open discussions into reforming the Australian Family Court system.

Karen also spoke at the Men's Family Law/Violence Conference Victoria. More recently at Senator John Madigan's campaign dinner and a Family Court rally event of over 200 people in Fitzroy Town Hall.'

"Feminists and Other Politically Correct Tyrants Are Taking over the World"

Mastodon · 31 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to hypocritically extolling the virtues of tolerance and falsely presenting themselves as defenders of free speech, collectivist feminists are true experts. They claim that they fight to liberate and empower women, but any time a woman dares to say something that bothers them, they try to censor her in hordes.

Last week, I published a video in which I spoke of “the tyranny of collectivist feminism.” Naturally, the video was online for less than one day because the social medium in which I had published it decided to delete my account due to “massive complaints” about my viewpoint. The feminists who argue that I’m wrong and that they want to establish no kind of tyranny managed to remove my video from the air simply because they didn’t like it.

This incident is a small sample of feminists’ great intolerance and their constant struggle against freedom of speech. Recently, a Mexican singer called Gerardo Ortiz was arrested for “advocating crime.” The arrest warrant was issued because hundreds of women accused Ortiz on social media of “promoting femicide” in one of his music videos. Both Ortiz and the video’s producer were found guilty and even the property in which the scenes were filmed is under the authority’s custody.'

Australia: It’s time to fight back against feminism

Mastodon · 31 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Radical feminism shouldn’t be allowed to hijack our fight against domestic violence.

I recently asserted DV isn’t a male problem, it’s society’s problem; I was called a “misogynist”, “traitor” and “disgrace”.

Believing in equality doesn’t make anyone a misogynist. Contrary to a harmful, brainwashing feminist TV advertising campaign, men aren’t born evil perpetrators.

Bullying is never excusable, despite your cause. Clearly, feminism only cares about women who agree with their agenda.

Both men and women are capable of domestic violence.

The Queensland Government Department of Communities report found that more than one in three domestic and family violence protection orders issued by the Magistrate Court were issued to protect men.

And one in three victims of current partner violence during a 12 month period were male, according to the Australian Bureau of Statistics.

Scientists expose major differences between boys and girls in shock study

Mastodon · 31 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminists have spent years campaigning against “sexist” children’s toys which allegedly promote gender stereotypes.

Now researchers have shown that baby boys and girls naturally choose to play with the sort of gender-specific toys which many campaigners find offensive.

A team from City University, London, found that baby girls tended to enjoy interacting with faces and practising “fine motor skills”, whilst boys used their increased “interest and ability in spatial processing” whist playing.
...
The research flies in the face of feminists who believe kids’ playthings promote “harmful and limiting stereotypes”, because it suggests kids have a natural tendency to play in different ways.

Dr Brenda Todd, a senior lecturer in psychology at City University said: “Biological differences give boys an aptitude for mental rotation and more interest and ability in spatial processing, while girls are more interested in looking at faces and better at fine motor skills and manipulating objects.'

PBS Indicts White Men on Hillary: Guilty of 'Ambivalent or Benevolent Sexism'

Mastodon · 31 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Liberals are unhappy at this point that Hillary Clinton isn't trouncing Donald Trump, so there must be an obvious culprit: Sexism. Especially among white males, the most likely Republican voters. On Thursday night's PBS NewsHour, they interviewed their own correspondent Daniel Bush on their question "Does gender bias explain why Hillary Clinton has fared so poorly with white male voters?"

Bush wrote an article for the NewsHour website titled "The hidden sexism that could sway the election." He interviews people who say they can't trust her, citing the fiasco in Benghazi. Bush isn't convinced. Say she's not trustworthy? It's because she's a woman. White males who won't vote for Hillary and deny thinking women aren't suited for the presidency are in denial, suggests PBS.

...

Brangham ended the interview with an atta-boy: "Thanks for this. Great reporting." If we were playing at this game, we could suggest that subconsciously, these two white men loathe both their whiteness and their maleness, which would explain this segment.

The PBS lesson? Don't vote for Hillary because she's a woman. Vote for Hillary so you're not accused of subconsciously loathing females doing anything but making you breakfast.'

Men need not apply: Meet See Jane Go, a startup ride service for women only

Mastodon · 31 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For men hoping to hail a female driver, See Jane Go redirects them automatically to Uber or Lyft through its app, which avoids any discrimination claims. The company will not allow male passengers unless accompanied by a female.

“We didn’t want to completely cut men out because we want our women to have maximum flexibility using the app,” said Toonen. “As long as the woman is the account holder and is the one who hailed the ride, he can come along. She’s informally saying, ‘He’s OK, he’s with me.’”

She added, “There will never be a situation with a female Jane driver alone with a man in the car.”'

Mom beats daughter live on Facebook, faces no charges

Matt · 31 July 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video report here. Description:

'A video on Facebook that shows a mother beating her 16-year-old daughter has sparked a debate online about discipline and public shaming.'

Malecare seeks survey responses

Matt · 1 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Please take the short Prostate Cancer and Sleep survey.

http://prostatecancersurvey.org

Sleep is an under researched quality of life issue for men diagnosed with prostate cancer. Help us find ways to help all of us around sleep and prostate cancer. The survey is anonymous and takes less than 7 minutes to complete.

The data gathered will be used to create a peer reviewed journal article and, possibly, a presentation to the American Society of Clinical Oncology. The study is entirely financed by individual donations to Malecare Cancer Support.

http://prostatecancersurvey.org

Thanks!

Darryl Mitteldorf, LCSW
Malecare Cancer Support
darryl@malecare.org

Cal Poly ‘Men and Masculinity’ position emphasizes sexual assault

Mastodon · 2 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'California Polytechnic State University is looking for a new “Men and Masculinity Coordinator” whose primary responsibility will be to address issues of sexual assault on campus.

The job will consist of, among other things, “increasing education and awareness and lowering incidents of sexual assault, dating violence, domestic violence, and stalking,” and the preferred applicant for the job will have a “65 hour California State Certification as a Rape Crisis and Domestic Violence Crisis Counselor.”

Additionally, all eligible candidates for the job must have a “working knowledge of the practices, procedures, and activities of gender-based violence prevention education and outreach efforts.”'

Former Ivy League athlete suspended for alleged sexual assault wins important — and surprising — court victory

Mastodon · 2 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Can a male student held responsible by a university for an alleged sexual assault successfully make the case that his fate was the result of sex discrimination against him?

Many have tried and many have failed. Indeed, some have been all but laughed out of court.

But now the Second Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals has opened the door to just such a scenario. Reversing a U.S. District Court decision, the panel ruled Friday that a former athlete's suit against Columbia University, which suspended him for a year for "sexual assault: nonconsensual sexual intercourse," may go forward based on his claim that university officials acted with anti-male bias, in violation of Title IX, the federal education law that bars discrimination by schools receiving federal funds.'

"Togetherness Fest": For women only

Matt · 2 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Togetherness Fest: Where everyone is welcome to come together, so long as "everyone" has a vagina. Excerpt:

'If you ask San Francisco DJ Ms. Jackson, electronic music has been traditionally dominated by men for too long.

Fed up with the glaring lack of inclusion, Jackson opted to make a change. She teamed up with her friend Audrey Joseph, the San Francisco Armory's director of events, to launch Together Fest, an all-women electronic music festival to debut Oct. 8.

"We asked, 'How do we highlight some of these artists that should be getting headlining spots at festivals but aren't because of their gender?'" Jackson says. "We know that there is an incredible amount of female talent in electronic music, in hip-hop, in house music. There should be a mainstream music festival that has an all-female lineup."

The event will take place across two stages in the 4,000-person music venue at the Armory, only a few weeks after the space's final touches are complete. It will also include a silent disco, games, food trucks and "chill zones."'

UK: Lawyer argues woman should not be sent to jail for molesting child as 'shame' of being paedophile enough

Matt · 3 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A judge has rejected the claim of a lawyer defending a woman who was convicted of a string of sexual offences against a nine-year-old girl that she should not face jail time because the “shame” brought on herself and her family is punishment enough.

Raheelah Dar, 43, from Middlesborough, was convicted of three counts of indecent assault and two of indecency with a child, which she denied. She was jailed for seven years at a sentencing hearing on Tuesday.

She was accused of isolating, manipulating and molesting the girl, who is now an adult and cannot be named for legal reasons, in a case of abuse that spanned four years, Gazette Live reported.'

Bret Ellis on SJWs/political correctness

Matt · 3 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oh, clearly you didn't think the little snowflake justice warriors everywhere, from the LAist to Flavorwire to Jezebel to Teen Vogue to Vulture, were going to let this innocuous piece go unnoticed without having a hissy fit? Oh yes, most deliciously, the little snowflakes got so pissed off and were just sooo unbelievably offended by this piece, that they had to denounce it. Oh, little snowflakes, when did you all become grandmothers and society matrons, clutching your pearls in horror at someone who has an opinion about something, a way of expressing themselves that's not the mirror image of yours, you snivelling little weak-ass narcissists? The high moral tone from social justice warriors is always out of scale with what they are indignant about. When did this hideous and probably nerve-wracking way of living begin transforming you into the authoritarian language police, with your strict set of little rules and manufactured outrage, demanding apologies from every sandwich or salad you didn't like?

Teen Vogue, of course, found the use of "boobs" and "knockers" as yes, "misogynistic", and started a very tired complaint about 'the male gaze' - that's g-a-z-e, listeners. When I hear self-proclaimed feminists complaining about the male gaze yet again and hoping that it will - what, go away? be rerouted, contained? - I'm thinking, are these women so deluded that they are bordering on insanity, or have they just not gotten laid in the last four years? The writer piping up in Teen Vogue about the insensitive misogyny of the Ferreira piece, and how women need to be respected and not judged by their looks - and yes, the irony is delicious coming from Teen Vogue - seemed so childish along with all the idiots tweeting out their hate, that Tavana quote-unquote "reduced a woman's art to whether you want to fuck her or not, you're trash", is indicative of the moment we are in.'

Obama Writes For Glamour: All Men Should Be Feminists

Mastodon · 4 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama penned a column for Glamour magazine declaring that he is a feminist, and urging all men to join him.

Citing his own two daughters, Obama explained that it was important for them to see their dad as someone who supports them in the face of challenges that they face as women.

"Yes, it's important that their dad is a feminist, because now that's what they expect of all men," he wrote in an essay running more than 1,500 words.

Obama complained that there were still so many "gender stereotypes" in today's culture, an issue that he grew more sensitive about as a father.

"[Y]ou become even more aware of how gender stereotypes pervade our society," he said. "You see the subtle and not-so-subtle social cues transmitted through culture."'

Breitbart: The Men's Rights Movement - a smart necessary counterweight to man-hating feminism

mens_issues · 4 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

A nice article in Breitbart. Excerpt:

'At the start of July, the second International Conference on Men's Issues was held at the ExCel centre in London, two years after the inaugural conference in Detroit. Jointly hosted by A Voice for Men and the British political party Justice for Men and Boys, men from all around the world flocked to the centre to hear people discuss real issues that affected them.

The ICMI is one of the only places where issues that affect men and boys are even recognised as being legitimate – it is safe to say that the wider society has no real grasp of the seriousness of such pressing issues as male suicide, domestic violence against men, false rape accusations and many others.

Men's Rights Activists (more commonly known as MRAs) have an undeserved reputation in mainstream society; they are commonly portrayed as misogynists, bigots, and generally strange individuals, who sit at home in their mothers' basements fawning over anime characters in their fedoras and trenchcoats.

Yet pretty much every conference attendee looked just like every other human being on this planet – they are not the monsters that the media makes them out to be, just ordinary, normal men who are passionate about the issues discussed.'

Billboard campaign asks men to do more to prevent domestic violence

Mastodon · 5 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Pennsylvania Coalition Against Domestic Violence (PCADV) has placed billboards around the state, including two in the Harrisburg area, to raise awareness.

The billboards are located on 322 near Mushroom Hill Road, and another along Jonestown Road. The goal is to engage men to become more active in the prevention of domestic violence.

PCADV is asking men to initiate conversations with children, especially with boys about healthy relationships.

According to the PCADV, 1 in 3 women and 1 in 4 men will be a victim of domestic violence, sexual assault or stalking. One in 3 teens will be a victim of dating violence.'

How American College Campuses Have Become Anti–Due Process

Mastodon · 5 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On April 4, 2011, the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) released a document dramatically reinterpreting Title IX, the federal law that prohibits gender discrimination in colleges and universities that receive federal funds. The document issued by the OCR was a "Dear Colleague" letter, an allegedly informal agency guidance that Department of Education officials claimed did not need to follow notice-and-comment rulemaking pursuant to the Administrative Procedure Act.

The "Dear Colleague" letter specified the procedures that the OCR believed colleges and universities should follow in sexual assault cases in order to comply with Title IX. Although two Department of Education officials have publicly noted that the letter does not have the force of law, this concession does not change its practical effect, which is to coerce universities into compliance. Moreover, each change in Title IX requirements found in the letter increases the likelihood of a guilty finding in a campus sexual assault case.'

Minnesota further erodes due process for accused students

Mastodon · 5 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'College students accused of sexual assault in Minnesota — most of whom are male — have something new to fear besides false or exaggerated accusations: Anonymous reporting.

A new law taking effect this week requires all colleges and universities in the North Star State to allow students to anonymously report sexual assault. The intentions are noble — many victims of sexual assault are naturally afraid to come forward, so allowing them to do so anonymously through the Internet could be helpful. But as with many good intentions, the consequences (which were probably not even considered) can be awful.
...
And that's bad for the accused, who already have limited to no due process rights on a college campus. Now they can be accused and have no idea, and potentially be investigated without ever knowing the identity of their accuser, giving them no ability to properly defend themselves or confront their accuser.'

The Left’s Grandstanding on Sexual Assault

Mastodon · 5 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In light of the Rolling Stone-University of Virginia libel lawsuit and other rape hoaxes across the U.S., The Women Against VAWA Excess (known as WAVE) issued a brief directed towards Democratic Senator Kirsten Gillibrand (D-NY) and her rhetoric on sexual assaults.

In their brief, WAVE noted, “Gillibrand has no regard for the presumption of innocence and has repeatedly misrepresented the facts surround the issue.” Additionally, Wave pointed out how the criminal justice system’s purpose is to “reach a reliable determination of innocence and guilt,” while the Left’s rhetoric is to mostly ignore the due process rights of the accused. Gillibrand also called Columbia University student Emma Sulkowicz a “survivor,” whereby WAVE countered and said, “the accused student had been cleared by the campus committees and the local DA refused to take on the case.”'

"Five Ways Men Can Be Feminists At Work"

Mastodon · 5 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'But sexism and sexist discrimination still happens in every workplace, every day, and it's mostly men who lead on making it happen. We can see this in terms of representation and organisational norms or practices. The numbers, still, very obviously point to the need for action—here are just a few, for the record. In the City of London 41 percent employees are women, but only around 5 percent of FTSE chief executives are women; only 26 percent of FTSE 100 board members are women (better than 1999, admittedly, when it was 0.2 percent, but still far from equal).

...

1. Take responsibility for the patriarchy

All men at work benefit from what Australian sociologist Raewyn Connell has named the "patriarchal dividend."This is the unearned social or professional capital that men accrue, in that colleagues tend to assume men are somehow naturally more suited to being or just are better doctors, lawyers, academics, or politicians. This dividend doesn't just happen—it has to be reproduced and maintained for future generations. If men recognize this and take responsibility for it, then we can start to make positive changes to workplaces.'

‘Intersectional’ atheism campus speaker threatens to sue after sexual harassment claims

Mastodon · 5 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Atheist social-justice activist Richard Carrier believed the survivor – until the survivors and their allies in the atheism movement accused him of sexual harassment.

Now he’s threatening legal action against his accusers, his former blog network and the conference that banned him in the wake of allegations by Arizona State University student Amy Frank.

A former speaker to Secular Student Alliance chapters before that organization began investigating Frank’s claims, Carrier describes himself as a feminist and promotes an “intersectional” strain of atheism. Before the allegations, he was perhaps best known for arguing against the existence of an historical Jesus Christ.'

Feminist scholar’s research finds that ‘yes means yes’ sex policies don’t work in practice

Mastodon · 5 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'New York, California, Connecticut and Illinois all expect college students to get the “affirmative consent” of their partners before having sex. Otherwise, it’s sexual assault under state law.

Many other colleges have voluntarily implemented “yes means yes” policies that automatically judge a student (usually male) responsible for sexual misconduct if his partner (usually female) says later that her apparent consent was not valid.

Those laws and rules badly misunderstand how students actually approach sex, according to research by a self-proclaimed feminist scholar at San Francisco State University’s Center for Research and Education on Gender and Sexuality.

Prof. Jason Laker and his research partner, Santa Clara University’s Erica Boas, have spent the past four years interviewing students about how they initiate and agree to engage in sexual activity – and it’s nothing like affirmative consent requires, Inside Higher Ed reports.'

USC Campus Rape Lawsuit: This Title IX Official's Vulgar Response Is Unbelievable

Mastodon · 5 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A male University of Southern California student expelled for sexual assault appealed the decision on grounds that the adjudication process was wholly inadequate and stacked against him from the start. USC's Title IX coordinator responded with shocking hostility—bureaucrats don't like when their authority is questioned, it seems.

"Does that college motherfucker know who I am?" USC Title IX Director Gretchen Dahlinger Means asked Title IX Investigator Patrick Noonan, after a conference call during which the student, "John Doe," had explained his intention to appeal. It was a hot mic moment: Dahlinger and Noonan thought the student and his lawyer had already exited the call.

That was not the only outburst. Means also said, "Who do those motherfuckers think they are?" in reference to the student and his lawyer, who had asked for USC to release the identities of the panel members who had voted to expel Doe. The administrators did not merely refuse this request; they were apparently incredulous that such a request had been made at all—that a student could possibly have the gall to ask for some basic transparency with respect to the Kafka-esque procedure that ruined his life.'

Title IX is killing men’s teams at historically black colleges and universities

Mastodon · 5 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What happens when women represent 7 out of every 10 students across an entire class of colleges?

Men’s athletics get the ax – or more accurately, they get clear-cut.

...

It’s emblematic of schools in predominantly black conferences, where more than a dozen sports – “mainly of the nonrevenue variety” – have been dropped or suspended in the past five years.'

India: High court sets aside rape-of-minor conviction

Matt · 6 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Setting aside the conviction and life sentence imposed on a farmer by a trial court on the charge of raping a minor girl, the Madurai Bench of Madras High Court observed that the prosecution should be vigilant enough to conduct the investigation in a right manner and bring home the guilt of the accused in a flawless way.

This is imperative, as “any failure on the part of the prosecution would definitely go to the benefit of the accused,” said Justice B. Gokuldas. Allowing a criminal appeal filed by farmer Chellappan from Gandarvakottai village in Pudukottai district, a division bench comprising Justices K.K. Sasidharan and Gokuldas said that the medical officer who issued the certificate of the minor girl had very clearly mentioned that there was neither external injury on the private part nor any internal injury in the form of tearing of hymen.

The judges observed that Mahila Court in Pudukottai district imposed life sentence to the appellant under the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act, 2012 on the charge of raping a 11-year-old girl in a cashew grove in Pudukottai on June 2, 2013, without cross-examining the evidences submitted by the police properly.'

NPO Victory: Shared Parenting is Now the Law in Missouri

Matt · 6 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three years ago, Linda Reutzel, Chair of the National Parents Organization chapter of Missouri, decided to take matters into her own hands. Her son had received the usual treatment in family court, and Linda was rarely able to see her own grandchild. So she decided to get the custody law changed.

Now, three years later, she can point with pride to the near-unanimous passage of a strong shared parenting law in Missouri, which was signed into law by Governor Jay Nixon a few weeks ago!'

CDC seeking comments on the "Well-Integrated Screening and Evaluation for Women Across the Nation (WISEWOMAN)" program

Minuteman · 6 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The WISEWOMAN program (Well-Integrated Screening and Evaluation for Women Across the Nation), sponsored by the CDC, was established to examine ways to improve the delivery of services for women who have limited access to health care and elevated risk factors for cardiovascular disease (CVD). The program focuses on reducing CVD risk factors and provides screening services for selected risk factors such as elevated blood cholesterol, hypertension, and abnormal blood glucose levels. The program also provides women with referrals to lifestyle programs and medical care. The WISEWOMAN program provides services to women who are jointly enrolled in the National Breast and Cervical Cancer Early Detection Program (NBCCEDP), also administered by CDC.
...
CDC will continue to use the information collected from WISEWOMAN awardees to support program monitoring and improvement activities, evaluation, and assessment of program outcomes. The overall program evaluation is designed to demonstrate how WISEWOMAN can obtain more complete health data on vulnerable populations, promote public education about disease incidence, cardiovascular disease risk-factors, health promotion, improve the availability of screening and diagnostic services for under-served women, ensure the quality of services provided to underserved women, and develop strategies for improved interventions.'

UK: Scientists recommend HPV vaccine for boys

Mastodon · 7 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Boys should be given the HPV jab alongside girls to prevent cancer and not doing so is ‘discriminatory’, scientists claim.

The vaccine protects against the Human Papilloma Virus, which triggers a range of cancers including cervical in women and head, throat and neck.

It is already offered to 12 and 13 year old schoolgirls and is estimated to protect against 70 per cent of cervical cancers but the Government is reluctant to roll it out to males.

The Department of Health is currently overseeing a pilot which launched last month to test the cost and effectiveness at offering the jab in some clinics.

But growing numbers of academics say it should be given to adolescent boys at the same time as girls to prevent cancers of the throat, head and neck.'

Law Professors Defend Use Of Preponderance Standard In Campus Rape Cases

Mastodon · 7 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of more than 90 law professors from at least three dozen different universities signed onto a white paper, to be released Sunday, defending the U.S. Department of Education's guidance on how colleges should handle sexual assault cases.

...

The preponderance standard is used in civil lawsuits. In criminal courts, there's a higher standard to establish someone's guilt: "proof beyond a reasonable doubt," meaning there's hardly any chance the accused person isn't guilty.

...

"There is a mistaken tendency to assume that the Department of Education is policing rape on college campuses and should therefore use the background norms of criminal law as an appropriate model for adjudication procedures," Baker told The Huffington Post. "In fact, the department is responding to the overwhelming evidence that a culture of male sexual entitlement permeates college campuses and that women suffer disproportionately from having to live, study, and try to learn in that environment."'

Colleges Embrace Online Anonymous 'Snitching' to Fight Sexual Violence

Mastodon · 7 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now, states like Minnesota and Connecticut have enacted laws requiring their colleges to implement websites where students can make anonymous complaints about sexual assault and harassment. An investigation is only launched when an official report is filed.

Some say these laws and other attempts to allow anonymous "snitching" go too far, opening the door to false accusations and recriminations.

"It's Orwellian," said John F. Banzhaf, III, professor of public interest law at George Washington University Law School. "They don't even have to tell you a complaint was filed."

The person reported may never have a chance to defend himself, he said, jeopardizing a student or faculty member's reputation and career. Banzhaf says he was falsely accused of harassment under an anonymous hotline reporting system that was set up at GWU in 2002.

"I found out when I was vacationing and got a long-distance call saying I had to get right back," he told NBC News. "I was informed a high official received a complaint about me."'

Study: College students' realities don't align with schools' affirmative-consent standards for sex

Mastodon · 7 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Non-verbal cues figure in frequently with sexual consent among college students, and that may not comport with schools' affirmative-consent rules, say two academics who spent one year interviewing a sample of northern California freshmen.

"The idea of affirmative consent has resulted in progressive advancement of college policies. But just because you make it clearer what we expect in terms of consent from a legal or policy standpoint, that doesn't change the fact that people are limited in their ability to meet those expectations," Jason Laker told Inside Higher Ed. A counselor education professor at San Jose State University, he worked on the study with Erica Boas, an adjunct lecturer at Santa Clara University.

More than 800 universities have adopted an affirmative-consent standard, according to a 2014 article. Also, California in 2015 passed a law requiring universities to adopt a standard of affirmative consent in their discipline policies. The policy changes followed more attention to campus sexual-misconduct issues, and a 2011 "Dear colleague" letter from the U.S. Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights. It stated that sexual violence is among the offenses banned by Title IX, and also directed schools to use a preponderance-of-evidence standard, rather than a burden-of-proof standard, in sexual-misconduct hearings.'

Discipline or domestic violence? Watch teacher drag daughter by the neck at school

Mastodon · 7 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hoover High School surveillance video shows PE teacher Lori McCombs grab her teen daughter by the neck and drag her while the pair was inside the school.

McCombs is charged with third-degree domestic violence in the 2015 incident. AL.com obtained a copy of the videotape today. The attack happened at the school on Aug. 27, 2015 and reportedly followed a discussion where the teen daughter told her mother she wouldn't be able to compete in a track meet the following day because of an injury.

McCombs in May was arrested in the parking lot of the Hoover City Schools' central office on the domestic violence charge. Hoover police investigated the incident when it happened, and the teen victim in May completed the necessary paperwork to have McCombs charged. McCombs is no longer the legal guardian of her daughter, and remains on the 2016-2017 schedule.'

Feminism: Why I'm campaigning for UK schools to teach boys and girls all about it

Mastodon · 7 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was seen as normal that boys could tell me girls had evolved to have 'smaller brains than them' - so we should stay at home. Or not be a part of the football team.

When I started secondary school these issues became more apparent to me as I began to think properly about the things that were going on around me.

Now aged 14, this thought process led me to start a petition, “A In Equality”, because I think that feminism should be on the PSHE (personal, social, health and economic) curriculum in all schools. In order to achieve equality on every front, we need to start by educating the future generation on the rights that will affect every single person every single day.'

Fathers' rights activists push for change after toddler's death

Mastodon · 7 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Fathers' rights activists hope that the recent death of a Grimes toddler while in his mother's care can help spur changes to the state's child custody laws, saying that could help prevent tragedies.

The boy's father said he tried to alert authorities to the mother's mental health issues, fearing that they might pose a danger to their child.

Bryan Iehl, founder of the group IowaFathers, said he has worked to pass legislation for the past 10 years that would require courts to grant joint physical care of children in divorce proceedings unless there's evidence it wouldn't be in the child's best interest. Last session, the bill passed the Iowa House but did not advance in the Senate.'

"The challenge of convincing white men they're not as meritorious as they think"

Mastodon · 8 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The makeup of Australia's new federal Parliament has finally come together, and with it comes some joyous news: a whopping 73 of our 266 parliamentarians are now women, or 32.3 per cent. That puts us in the illustrious company of countries like Laos, Guyana and Nepal, and even sees us inch ahead of Afghanistan, that renowned stronghold of women's rights.
...
But an outfit in the US is pushing back against that dynamic. Most American political action committees (or PACs for short) are little more than fundraising avenues for Presidential and Congressional candidates, but the delightfully named Can You Not PAC has a different goal: to discourage straight white guys from running for office and throw their support behind women, people of colour and LGBTQ people instead.

Started in 2014 by co-founders Jack Teter and Kyle Huelsman – two college-educated white guys themselves – the PAC's target audience isn't the under-represented groups it's trying to empower. Rather, Can You Not direct their message at "egregiously overconfident white men" who are so convinced of their own unique ability to solve all the world's problems, they run for office despite being manifestly unqualified.
...
"We challenge brogressives and others to reject any notion that they are uniquely qualified or positioned to seek political office in districts that don't need them," Can You Not's website explains. "As well-represented white dudes, we feel it is our obligation to know when to shut up and Not."

Besides the obvious point that the world doesn't need any more starry-eyed white boys living out their West Wing fantasies on the taxpayer dime, one of the main reasons Can You Not asks left-leaning white men in particular to step aside is that progressive policies are more likely to become reality in legislatures with significant female, non-white and queer presences.'

No Harassment, No Victim, No Investigation. Expelled Anyway.

Matt · 9 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'One of our classes involved training on deadly force, which covers the protective procedures utilized when an officer is under attack. One student, playing the perpetrator, crouches over another student, playing the officer, and pretends to strike the officer in the face. In self-defense, the officer rolls the perpetrator over, changing positions to neutralize the threat.

For purposes of this training exercise, I was the designated “perpetrator” and a female student in the class the designated “officer.” The demonstration proceeded uneventfully and the class dismissed.

But at the next class, I was called out of the room and escorted to the administrator’s office. At that time, I was accused of “inappropriate contact” with the female cadet during the training demonstration.

Oddly, the complaint was not filed by the female student who had participated in the training exercise, or by any of the three instructors who closely observed our every move. Instead, the complaint came from another student who claimed he witnessed this “inappropriate” contact. None of the other 25 students watching the demonstration noticed anything out of the ordinary.

Adding to the irony was the fact that this female classmate and I were friends. She often solicited my help with her classwork. Just 20 minutes before I was summoned to the office, she had joined me and another student for lunch.

Now, I found myself being escorted out of the building.

Three days later the Investigator sent me a text message informing me that I was being terminated from the school. Three weeks the Termination Letter arrived. The letter contained accusations of actions that had never occurred and for which no substantiation was provided. The letter concluded with these blunt words: “No Appeal.”'

Expelled student sues university after rape charge dismissed

Mastodon · 9 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Augustana University student who was expelled after being charged with rape has filed a federal lawsuit against the school after prosecutors dismissed the case.

Koh Evan Tsuruta filed the lawsuit against the university seeking damages for loss of educational opportunities, emotional injury and future income. No specific amount of damages was listed.

The lawsuit states that the university employees handling his case weren't properly trained in investigating and adjudicating allegations of rape.

This, he said, resulted in failing to consider factors he claims could have worked in his favor, including interviewing witnesses who could have balanced the account and the alleged victim, who threatened to make a false rape allegation against a former boyfriend.'

As tales of campus 'rape culture' rage, justice goes missing

Mastodon · 9 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I told my son that he should include that warning in his speech to his oldest boy, who is heading to college as a highly recruited athlete. A prominent criminal attorney in his community, my son quickly agreed, having on occasion defended young clients against serious allegations of rape and assault stemming from too much partying.

The slightest sexual inference can now be wind up being classified as unwanted, possibly resulting in severe reaction from college officials pressed by authorities all the way to the White House. Male students are particularly vulnerable to accusations that can leave them without normal legal protections and scarred for life. In he-said-she-said accusations, there is a tendency to take precipitous action immediately against the accused. The infamous and ultimately discredited Rolling Stone article about fraternity gang rapes that actually never took place is dramatic evidence of that. It was all made up, apparently in an attempt by an activist to promote her agenda.'

Joe Biden Calls on University Presidents to Address Sexual Assault: ‘You Can’t Pretend You Don’t Know’

Mastodon · 9 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vice President Joe Biden called on university presidents Monday to help “change the culture” on campuses in terms of responding to reports of sexual assault.

“That message starts from the president on down at the university,” Biden said in a conference call with university officials. “It really, really matters.”

Biden said there is no justification for students to be sexually assaulted on campus and that schools must do a better job of responding to sexual assault complaints. He said universities must gather their own information through surveys to understand the specific issues on their campus.'

How Would Trump Change Higher Education Policy?

Matt · 9 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last month I looked at Hillary Clinton's higher education proposals in this Clarion Call, and found nothing to praise in them. They merely deepen the already ruinous federal involvement in subsidizing college.

Now it's time to take a look at the higher education ideas that have been advanced by Donald Trump and the Republicans.

I will start with the Republican Platform even though it's not clear how much the nominee is committed to it. Several pages are devoted to higher education.

The first issue raised is the problem of Title IX and its abuse by federal bureaucrats. "We emphatically support the original, authentic meaning of Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972," the platform states.

That provision, it continues, was intended to ensure that girls and women would have the same educational opportunities as males, but has been perverted to "impose a social and cultural revolution upon the American people by wrongly defining sex discrimination to include sexual orientation and other categories."'

Resolving conflict: men vs. women

Matt · 10 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Guess you can file this one under "stereotype busters". Excerpt:

'It's not exactly front-page news that when it comes to conflict, men and women usually behave very differently. The way they resolve those conflicts also tends to differ.

While men can be aggressive and combative, a new study shows that, from the tennis court to the boxing ring —modern equivalents of one-on-one conflict — men are more likely than women to make peace with their competitors after the competition ends.

Using videos of four sports in 44 countries, Joyce Benenson, an associate of Harvard's Human Evolutionary Biology Department and a professor of psychology at Emmanuel College, and Richard Wrangham, the Ruth B. Moore Professor of Human Evolutionary Biology, found that men are far more likely to engage in friendly physical contact — handshakes, back pats and even hugs — following competition than women are. The study is described in the journal Current Biology.

Importantly, Benenson said, the study also lends credence to what researchers call the "male warrior hypothesis," the notion that men broker good feelings after conflict to ensure they can call on allies to help defend the group in the future.'

‘Hottest Olympic Dudes’? ‘Ab Appeal’? It’s objectification when it’s about women. What about men?

Mastodon · 10 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One decries the way analysts focus on the appearance of female Olympians, not their athletic accomplishments. The other features a slideshow of mostly shirtless, nearly naked men, with an invitation to “Come, join us on the official horndog tour of Rio.”

...

In sports, as in the workplace, men have been privileged, their athletic prowess not slighted in favor of commentary about their bodies. “When we objectify men, their economic and professional power isn’t reduced or threatened,” writes Daisy Buchanan in Marie Claire UK.

...

After Cosmopolitan magazine found itself under fire in 2014, when they posted an Olympic bulge breakdown that drew criticism, it defended the compilation of not-safe-for-work images: “Athletes and performers’ bodies are their tools, so I’m not calling for everyone to suddenly stop judging them on their looks or physique. But it’s only fair that both sexes are objectified equally.”'

UK: Report Claiming Half Of Women Harassed At Work Involved Hardline Feminist Group

Mastodon · 11 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Trades Union Congress (TUC) report which claims workplace sexual harassment is on the rise was produced with “destructive” feminist campaign the Everyday Sexism Project, which critics say risks “making all sexual advances ‘misogynist’”.

TUC General Secretary Frances O’Grady and Laura Bates, founder of Everyday Sexism, have today hit the media circuit to publicise the report, which alleges that the majority of women have been sexually harassed at work.
...
The main finding of the study, entitled “Still just a bit of banter?” was that 52 per cent of women reported having experienced sexist harassment while at work.

Employing a loose definition of sexual harassment, the report notes that respondents’ most common complaint was “hearing comments of a sexual nature about other women”. Thirty-five per cent of women reported having heard such comments.'

CPI Calls on Candidates Clinton and Trump to Renounce 'Victim Centered Investigations' as an Affront to Justice

Matt · 11 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Chris Perry
Telephone: 301-801-0608
Email: cperry@prosecutorintegrity.org

CPI Calls on Candidates Clinton and Trump to Renounce 'Victim Centered Investigations' as an Affront to Justice

WASHINGTON / August 11, 2016 – Today the Center for Prosecutor Integrity (CPI) is calling on presidential candidates Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump to issue a call for the end of victim-centered investigations (VCI) in sexual assault cases. Victim-centered investigations represent an biased approach to sexual assault investigations that openly favors the accuser and eliminates the presumption of innocence, SAVE charges.

Both the Democratic and Republican political platforms, approved last month, specifically call for fairness in handling criminal offenses. The Democratic platform highlights the need to "ensure a fair process for all on-campus disciplinary proceedings and in the criminal justice system." (1)

The current regime of campus adjudications "contravenes our country's legal traditions and must be halted," according to the Republican platform, and "prevents the proper authorities from investigating and prosecuting sexual assault effectively with due process." (2)

Victim-centered investigations emphasize the collection of evidence supportive of the complainant and discourage the collection of exculpatory evidence, thereby increasing the likelihood of a guilty verdict. Victim-centered investigations represent a departure from ethical standards of investigative impartiality, neutrality, and objectivity.

Proponents of victim-centered investigations openly urge investigators to "start by believing" and assume the complainant's account is true until proven otherwise (3). As a result, justice is compromised and the potential for wrongful conviction increases, CPI believes.

In one case, a Virginia college student was arrested and jailed for six days based on an uncorroborated allegation of sexual assault. The student had never been to the city where the assault alleged took place and the accuser's account contained numerous inconsistencies. The case was eventually dropped after the student produced over 40,000 emails and other documents that proved his innocence. The student was saddled with over $60,000 in legal fees to defend himself against an accusation that had no basis in reality. (4)

CPI urges both presidential candidates to endorse a "justice centered" approach which protects due process, preserves the presumption of innocence, and utilizes an impartial evaluation of all evidence. While complainants must be treated with respect and taken seriously, investigators must always remain impartial and follow the evidence.

The Center for Prosecutor Integrity works to enhance prosecutorial ethics, reduce over-criminalization, and end wrongful convictions. More information on victim centered investigations can be viewed at http://www.prosecutorintegrity.org/sa/investigations/

Citations:

1. https://www.demconvention.com/wp-content/uploads/2016/07/Democratic-Party-Platform-7.21.16-no-lines.pdf, Page 38.

2.

https://prod-static-ngop-pbl.s3.amazonaws.com/media/documents/DRAFT_12_FINAL[1]-ben_1468872234.pdf

3. https://www.hrw.org/sites/default/files/reports/improvingSAInvest_0.pdf

4. http://dailycaller.com/2016/04/20/i-was-falsely-accused-of-rape-victim-centered-investigations-are-a-travesty-of-justice/#ixzz4Gn3Bqr3B

Rights group calls on presidential candidates to denounce 'victim-centered investigations'

Mastodon · 11 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An organization dedicated to overturning and preventing wrongful convictions is calling on presidential candidates Hillary Clinton and Donald Trump to denounce "victim-centered investigations."

The Center for Prosecutor Integrity works with prosecutors, defense attorneys, law enforcement and the falsely accused to prevent wrongful convictions and over-criminalization. The group says victim-centered investigations have led and will lead to more wrongful convictions and false accusations.

"Victim-centered investigations emphasize the collection of evidence supportive of the complainant and discourage the collection of exculpatory evidence, thereby increasing the likelihood of a guilty verdict," the group wrote in a press release. "Victim-centered investigations represent a departure from ethical standards of investigative impartiality, neutrality and objectivity."'

Canadian University Student Convicted of Rape, But Was the Judge Biased Against Men?

Mastodon · 11 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Concerns that the crusade against "rape culture" is creating an accusation-equals-guilt mindset in sexual assault cases have been mostly aimed at colleges. It's campuses that employ extralegal tribunals to settle rape disputes—tribunals where the accused often do not have the right to an attorney, to cross-examine their accusers, or to examine the evidence against them. But the latest contentious rape case comes from a real court—albeit in Canada, where feminist activism has been much more successful in influencing the justice system than in the United States.

On July 21, Mustafa Ururyar, a 29-year-old York University graduate student, was found guilty of sexually assaulting fellow grad student Mandi Gray, 28. The verdict was handed down by Ontario Court Judge Marvin Zuker in a non-jury trial. The alleged rape—and I say "alleged," because after reading the 180-page judgment I see no grounds for a finding of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt—happened in the early morning hours of January 31, 2015.

The case is a classic he sad/she said. Ururyar and Gray, who had been casually involved for two weeks—he told her he was in an open long-distance relationship with his girlfriend—had spent the evening drinking with friends. It was Gray who had invited Ururyar to join them with a text that said, "Come drink and then we can have hot sex." When they were leaving the bar around 2:30 a.m., Ururyar asked another woman in their group to come with him and Gray to his apartment, but she refused and left in a taxicab.'

The naked truth about sexism is it transcends gender

Mastodon · 12 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Earlier this week, the National Post's Jen Gerson suggested "setting men up to unrealistic standards of beauty" is "fair play." She called it "turnabout," which sounds harmless, but sexism would have been more accurate.

Gerson used the recent shirtless photographs of Prime Minister Justin Trudeau to establish criteria, not unlike a judge in a beauty pageant, placing the PM in that category of men she calls "attractive in a stereotypically placid way. Baby-cheeked and fit without being distractingly muscular."

Maybe Gerson's detached assessment of the PM's physique wasn't as demeaning as measuring the gap between a woman's thighs, but in terms of objectification it was in the same ballpark.

To make matters worse she dragged Stephen Harper into the mix (and he wasn't even a contestant this year!) judging him, not just for a dad bod -- urban dictionary says "more a grazing manatee than a speedy dolphin" -- but a "dowdy dad bod," which is probably a grazing manatee in a frumpy cardigan.
...
The naked truth about sexism is it transcends gender. Men and women, by virtue of our humanness, are equally capable of failing to be fair and respecting one another's dignity. And if we can't talk about that openly we will only intensify the gender polarity that, I fear, has begun to define the age in which we live.'

Book reviews

Matt · 12 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Please enjoy these two book reviews by J Steven Svoboda. In these, Steve covers The Empress is Naked: From Female Privilege to Gender Equality and Social Liberation and The Dadly Way: 10 Steps to More Active Fatherhood and Equal Parenting.

Review: Empress
Review: Dadly

"Juries have no place at rape trials – victims deserve unprejudiced justice"

Matt · 13 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Almost a decade ago I wrote that rape might as well be legal. I feel the same way today. In 2013-14 in England and Wales, about 16,000 rapes were recorded by police, but only a third of these cases were sent to the Crown Prosecution Service. Approximately 15% of the recorded offences resulted in a charge. The actual attrition rate – meaning from reporting to conviction – is estimated at about 6%.

One potential solution to this worrying state of affairs is to do away with jurors in sex crime trials, and appoint a specially trained judge. I am wholly in favour of our jury system, but even more in favour of ensuring that rapists and other sex offenders do not walk free. New Zealand could be the first country to rid sex crime cases of jurors if one key recommendation from a recently published report by its Law Commission is implemented. The commissioners have suggested that there is a case for having sexual violence trials decided by a judge, either alone or with two expert “lay assessors”.'

Hope Solo, tolerated and excused in victory, exposes herself in Olympic defeat

Matt · 13 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's called composure, and Hope Solo's never been overburdened with a lot of that, or grace either. The U.S. women's soccer team had their temperaments tested by a savvy, conservative Sweden in the Olympic quarterfinals and lost. Solo has spent years undermining their collective equilibrium, and this one's on her.

She's a chronically rattled and rattling soul, the American goalkeeper. Let's face it: For every shiny marketing moment and big victory she's been a part of, she's given the U.S. a nasty unwanted drama. The victories usually smoothed over her behavior. Not this time. This time she went pure loser and lout.

After giving up the winning penalty kick to Sweden, Solo called her opponents "a bunch of cowards" for their conservative game plan. Now, who is the real coward here? Solo gave up three regulation goals in the past two games, between a draw with Colombia and this loss. She tried to ice Lisa Dahlkvist on the final kick by changing her gloves, and then couldn't lay a hand on the ball. And she couldn't take responsibility for any of it; she could only lash out.'

New video by Family Reunion about paternity fraud

Matt · 13 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'Paternity fraud, is when a mother names a man to be the father of their child, when she knows or suspects that he is not the biological father. This video addresses the issue of Paternity Fraud and the devastating effects it has (not only on men) but the women in their lives; their spouses, girlfriends, mothers, aunts, grandmothers, relatives, and especially on children.

In a world where divorce and separation have become the norm, it is more important than ever to make sure that children remain the center of our lives and the top of our priorities.

Separate yet together, families are forever.'

Angry feminist Julie Bindel: All men are rapists and should be shot

Mastodon · 15 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Wow. Julie Bindel is an angry feminist. If it looks like hate speech and sounds like hate speech there's a good chance it's hate speech. Tweet:

"Dear misogynist trolls I'm going to make things easier for you - save u some time. All men are rapists and should be put in prison then shot" (Julie Bindel)

Cops: Woman, 34, Repeatedly Kicked Boyfriend In Face After He Refused To Have Sex With Her

Matt · 15 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'When her boyfriend refused to have sex with her, a Florida woman repeatedly kicked him in the face, an attack that has landed her in jail for battery, cops say.

According to an arrest affidavit, Jennifer Furguson, 34, sought a 6:30 AM tryst Wednesday with her beau inside the couple's Port St. Lucie residence.

The victim, who has been in a relationship with Furguson for two years, told police that "Jennifer became upset at him when he refused to have sex with her this morning."'

'You have right to be believed' edited out of Clinton website

Matt · 15 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton's campaign reportedly made some edits to the campus sexual assault page on its website shortly after a viral tweet from Juanita Broaddrick, Buzzfeed News reported.

The Democratic nominee's campaign deleted the line, "You have the right to be believed," from the page on its site. The website originally read: "I want to send a message to every survivor of sexual assault: Don't let anyone silence your voice. You have the right to be heard. You have the right to be believed, and we're with you," quoting Clinton.

The last part of the quote has since been removed.

Clinton tweeted in September that every sexual assault survivor had "the right to be believed."

She was later asked at a campaign event if the women who had accused her husband of sexual harassment and assault, including Broaddrick, deserved to be "believed" also.'

Woman gets 13 years after shooting man in face at Kent Starbucks fibtastic · 15 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Surveillance footage showed Fermina Bertos, then 24, walking with Madrigal toward the coffee shop in July 2014 before pulling her gun from her purse as he opened the door for her.

Now, a woman who aspired to become an advocate for sexual assault and human trafficking victims is headed to prison for 13 years.

Bertos was sentenced in King County Superior Court's Kent courthouse Friday, where friends and family members of both Bertos and Madrigal packed the courtroom. Several attested to Bertos's standing as a kind friend, responsible employee, good daughter and star student.
...
But Bertos's promising future is on hold after the uncharacteristic shooting of a man she believed raped her the night before.

Bertos and Madrigal began to see each other less than two weeks before the shooting. One night, they had a sexual encounter that she believed was rape, but Madrigal told police she did nothing to indicate it was not consensual, according to court records.

The next day, Bertos went to work at the Courtyard Marriott hotel in downtown Tacoma. Soon after leaving work that morning, she texted Madrigal indicating she wanted to meet with him. She picked him up at his home in Kent, where they went to pump gas before heading for Starbucks.

Madrigal would later tell Kent police that as he was opening the door, he heard a loud noise, hit his head against the window and fell to the ground, coughing and seeing blood, Detective Steven Kelly wrote in the police reports.'

Research finds that as a group, only men pay tax

Matt · 16 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With the exception of the age group between 45-59 (a 15 year span) years old, women cost more to the state than the tax they provide. In contrast, men generate more tax revenue than they cost between 23 and 65 (a 43 year span). In the brief period in which women generate more or as much tax money than they consume, men outscore them by at least 3 times.

By the end of her life, the average woman will have a negative fiscal impact of $150,000.

By large, the cumulative tax money given to women outweighs the tax money generated by women. The short period of positive impact of women between 45 and 59 is countered by 65 other years in which their allocated tax expenditure is more than what they supply the state.'

Australia: $13 million in funding for services for male victims

Matt · 16 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'NSW Government has committed to providing $13 million over four years for Victims Services to pilot new responses for male victims of domestic and family violence, through expert NGO support (you can find details of the Tender process here).

This rollout is a historic Australia-first initiative and hopefully the first of many. It is the first step towards gender equity for family violence victims. It comes after 7 years of lobbying by the One in Three Campaign alongside other individuals and organisations.

The funding for these services is a new stream, and has NOT been taken out of the budget for women's services. Nevertheless we expect Minister Pru Goward to receive a great number of angry letters dismayed at her decision to support male victims.'

Harvard blesses women-only club that promises to go ‘gender neutral’ but not admit men

Mastodon · 16 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Let’s see whether the Harvard administration really cares about getting rid of single-sex clubs as a matter of equity, or whether it just wants to demonize men.

Facing the same pressure as so-called final clubs to open their membership to the opposite sex or get hit with sanctions by Harvard, the all-female Seneca organization has promised to become “gender neutral.”

What it hasn’t promised is that it will ever admit men.'

UK: MP Who Wants Tory Sacked For Condemning Feminism Attends Gender Segregated Muslim Events

Mastodon · 16 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Labour MP calling for Philip Davies MP to be sacked for addressing a men's right's group has attended gender segregated Muslim events and was selected to stand for parliament on a discriminatory all-woman shortlist.

Angela Rayner, the hard left, "feminist" MP for Ashton-under-Lyne failed to condemn or speak out against the blatant gender discrimination committed at a Labour Friends of Bangladesh in November last year, despite sitting in the segregated audience, as Guido Fawkes reported.'

Anti-Feminism: The New Heresy

Mastodon · 16 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Tory MP Philip Davies is being threatened with suspension from his own party. No, he didn't fake his expenses or get caught in flagrante, wearing nothing but a replica Chelsea top. All Davies did was criticise feminism.
...
Many have praised Rayner for calling out Davies' putative sexism, most notably Labour leader Jeremy Corbyn. Tweeting his support for Rayner's call for a party suspension, Corbyn said Davies' comments 'show utter contempt for women'.

Yet is Davies really deserving of this scorn? For a start, as most women will no doubt be aware, men's rights activists meetings are pretty lame affairs. The comments made at such gatherings are scarcely interesting enough to be considered threatening. But Rayner seems to think differently. '[Davies] endorses and legitimises the inflammatory and toxic rhetoric of groups who are misogynistic to their core', she writes. Davies' speech, she is saying, actually poses a threat to women's safety and wellbeing.'

UK: Girl uses Fifty Shades of Grey as basis for false rape claims against her father

Mastodon · 16 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a tearful courtroom confession, a daughter has admitted using the best-selling sadomasochistic sex novel Fifty Shades of Grey as the basis for a series of false rape claims against her father.

Defence barrister Cathy McCulloch had, she said, never read the novel until she was called in late to defend the father, who was accused of eight incestuous rapes over a six-year period.'

Woman, 72, arrested for assaulting 90-year-old husband, sheriff's deputy

Matt · 17 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In Rochester Hills, a 72-year-old woman -- accused of beating up a 90-year-old man and that's not all.

Police say she also got into a fight with a deputy, sending him to the hospital.

Darlene Stolaruk is in trouble with the law, because of what happened at Star Bat Inc. Leasing, the business she shares with her husband in Rochester Hills.'

Women in jails are the fastest growing incarcerated population, study says

Matt · 17 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women held in local jails represent the fastest growing population of incarcerated people in the US, according to a new study. The researchers found that trauma, sexual violence and mental health issues were all closely wrapped up with the swelling numbers.

“While we started to see a decline in the incarceration and jailing of men, we haven’t seen a comparable kind of trend for women,” said Laurie Garduque, director of Justice Reform for the MacArthur Foundation, which co-published the report with the Vera Institute. Since 1970, the number of women in US jails has increased by 14 times, far outstripping the growth in the male prison population, even though in raw numbers there remain many more men locked up.

The majority of those women entering jail are black and Hispanic, mirroring demographic trends that cross gender lines. Women, however, tend to enter jails in more vulnerable situations than men, as a higher percentage of women in jail were using drugs, unemployed or receiving public assistance at the time they were arrested.'

Time: Internet trolls are MRAs

Matt · 18 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Indeed. All Internet trolling comes from MRAs. And vice versa? Really, Time. Stupid even for you. Excerpt:

'But trolling has become the main tool of the alt-right, an Internet-grown reactionary movement that works for men's rights and against immigration and may have used the computer from Weird Science to fabricate Donald Trump. Not only does Trump share their attitudes, but he's got mad trolling skills: he doxxed Republican primary opponent Senator Lindsey Graham by giving out his cell-phone number on TV and indirectly got his Twitter followers to attack GOP political strategist Cheri Jacobus so severely that her lawyers sent him a cease-and-desist order.

The alt-right's favorite insult is to call men who don't hate feminism "cucks," as in "cuckold." Republicans who don't like Trump are "cuckservatives." Men who don't see how feminists are secretly controlling them haven't "taken the red pill," a reference to the truth-revealing drug in The Matrix. They derisively call their adversaries "social-justice warriors" and believe that liberal interest groups purposely exploit their weakness to gain pity, which allows them to control the levers of power. Trolling is the alt-right's version of political activism, and its ranks view any attempt to take it away as a denial of democracy.'

Princeton HR department: Don’t use word ‘man’

Matt · 18 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Princeton University HR department has largely wiped the word “man” from its vocabulary.

The relatively new policy in effect at the Ivy League institution spells out the directive in a four-page memo that aims to make the department more gender inclusive.

Instead of using “man,” employees are told to use words such as human beings, individuals or people.'

UK: Women have won the fight for equality. Now they should use their power to help the boys

Matt · 18 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This year, girls are 30 per cent more likely than boys to win a university place – a figure that is being celebrated because it's down on last year's 31 per cent. The gap is narrowing, but this is not progress worthy of the name.

This trend is at its most pernicious at the bottom end of the income scale, and worse still when you strip out ambitious immigrants and their children. Poor white children always fare worse under the state school system, but poor white boys do worst of all. It's the inequality that dare not speak its name.
...
Mary Curnock Cook, the head of Ucas, has worried aloud about all of this: surely, she says, such a huge gender imbalance at school will lead to gender imbalance later on? On current trends, she says, girls born today will be 75 per cent more likely to go university than boys.

Not that anyone has been terribly interested in her warnings. The Department for Education recently states, almost with pride, that it doesn't fund any research looking at male underachievement; it is "gender-blind".

Yet the Government's own research shows the graduate earnings premium is significantly higher for women than men; that men are not just less likely to apply to university but less likely to graduate and (if they do) to end up with worse grades; that if you're a white boy poor enough to qualify for free school meals, you're likely to do worse in school (and, ergo, at work) than almost anyone else.'

Title IX helps girls, but leaves boys behind, women's advocate contends

Mastodon · 18 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An official for a national women's advocacy group claims that Title IX is used "almost exclusively as a tool for advancing women's interests," rather than for promoting true gender equality.

Independent Women's Forum (IWF) Managing Director Carrie Lukas argues in a recent op-ed for Acculturated that an excessive focus on the areas in which males outperform females has led society to overlook the many areas in which the opposite imbalance holds sway.

Citing a study featured in Education Week asserting that struggles with calculus cause women to drop out of science, technology, engineering, and math (STEM) fields at higher rates than their male peers, Lukas said she finds "frustrating" the study's implication that "systematic sexism" is to blame whenever women lag behind men.'

Comedic writer endures backlash for suggesting anonymous accusers may be lying

Matt · 18 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former "Inside Amy Schumer" contributor generated a social-media firestorm by calling out some women for making allegations of sexual assault about a fellow comedian but not reporting them to police.

"Guys I have just heard some disturbing news, this guy Jiff Dilfyberg is a rapist!" writer-comedian Kurt Metzger wrote on Facebook over the weekend after learning that the New York-based Upright Citizens Brigade banned comedian Aaron Glaser — the target of the anonymous accusers. "I know because women said it and that's all I need! Never you mind who they are. They are women! ALL women are as reliable as my bible! A book that, much like a women, is incapable of lying!"

Metzger then sarcastically argued that the alleged rape victims are afraid to report the assaults to authorities because they are "too brave" and that would be "tooooo rapey."

Now Metzger is being accused of victim-blaming the women in a series of social-media posts.'

University Sues Obama Over Sexual Assault Cases Directive

Mastodon · 19 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Oklahoma Wesleyan University recently agreed to join a lawsuit against the Obama Administration over campus sexual assault case standards, arguing that they violate student rights to due process.

The Christian school filed the suit Monday, becoming the first and thus far only higher education institution to challenge a 2011 mandate from the federal government regarding campus sexual assault cases.

In a statement released Monday, Oklahoma Wesleyan President Dr. Everett Piper declared that "OKWU will always defend our students' constitutional rights."

"We also refuse to accept any government intrusion that would require OKWU to teach the antithesis of our Christian beliefs concerning sexual behavior," said Piper.

"Finally, all of our students should have the legal right to avail themselves of local law enforcement without their petition being compromised by the intrusion of an OCR-mandated committee of amateurs that contravenes the due process and confidentiality of the legal process."'

UK: "Young men should turn their backs on pointless university degrees"

Mastodon · 19 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is ironic that this female domination of campus comes at time when the feminists are still trying to sell us the lie that there is a ‘rape culture’ on aforementioned campus. I wonder how long they will be able to keep it up as some universities become women-only domains?

Perhaps, just perhaps, young men think they have better things to do with their time than study an arts degree for which they will be made to endure a compulsory consent workshop at the beginning of university. Perhaps young men do not want to be accused of rape before they set foot on a feminist-dominated campus. And all for the princely sum of £40,000 per degree, for which there is no guarantee that you will out-earn your non-graduate friends.
...
Mark my words, in 20 years time the feminists will be moaning that somehow, even though women ‘dominate university’, men still out-earn them. That is because men flock to STEM subjects, which do lead to higher paying degrees. In addition, some men will turn down an offer of a degree and accept an apprenticeship at PwC or an engineering apprenticeship with BT.'

UK: Teacher, 27, charged with rape after ‘sex with two 16-year-old male students’

Mastodon · 19 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Kasey Warren, 27, a former tutor within the Carlisle County Schools District, Kentucky, US, allegedly had sexual contact with two pupils aged just 16.

One boy was said to have been attacked at the beginning of June while the other was attacked about two weeks later.

Police say Warren met the pair while working in the district in the latter half of the 2015-2016 term, but did not disclose which school the boys attended.

Officers say the alleged attacks took place in neighbouring McCracken County, but did not give any further details.

Cops say they received a report of the attacks on June 28, and a grand jury indicted Warren on Friday last week.'

Justices reinstate father’s parental rights

Mastodon · 19 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A trial court’s findings do not “clearly and convincingly support” its decision to terminate a father’s parental rights to his son based on it being in the best interests of the boy. In fact, the findings show that the father and son have a bond and often spend time together, the Indiana Supreme Court found Tuesday.

Father R.S. had a no contact order between himself and R.S.’s mother and was incarcerated for a Class B felony. While in prison, he stayed in contact with his son by writing him letters on a weekly basis. A year after father was released on probation in 2013, R.S., now 10, was found to be a child in need of services as to his mother and father based on his mother’s drug use and his father’s lack of involvement. R.S. began living with his maternal grandmother.'

UK: New guidelines make criticisms or being too quiet a DV offense

Mastodon · 19 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The first national guidelines for the judiciary on domestic violence has urged judges to look at traits beyond physical violence when granting a restraining order, such as 'mind games'.

The bench guide book states that domestic violence does not just include physical attacks but can include verbal abuse, criticism of their partner's physical traits or refusing to show affection.
...
The guide said social abuse could include criticism of their partner's obsessive housework duties and emotional and psychological abuse included 'angry verbal outbursts, staring, silence, ignoring and withdrawal of affection'.

It warned the judiciary to focus on all elements of family abuse, including a 'complex pattern of violent or abusive behaviours' which could be physical or psychological.'

Anti-DV organization under fire over claims of bullying, financial mismanagement

Mastodon · 19 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now 40 years later, the coalition is under fire amid reports of mismanagement. The Department of Human Services, which has funding oversight of the coalition, earlier this year released the results of an audit that found poor financial controls and questionable expenditures by the organization.

A program that once directed to local programs the money collected in canisters placed in convenience stores, was found by auditors to have hundreds of thousands of dollars in questionable costs. They ranged from inappropriate payroll adjustments to the billing of questionable expenditures, including tickets to a baseball game.

In May, the Department of Human Services extended only a three-month funding stream — out of its $28 million annual allotment — to the organization, pending the resolution of the audit.

The attorney general's office also has launched an investigation into possible criminal wrongdoing, according to a source within the office who asked not to be named because the source is not authorized to speak. A spokesman for the attorney general's office would neither confirm nor deny the investigation.

The DHS report also raised concerns about the coalition work environment, based on frustration expressed by many of the current and former employees interviewed.

"Staff reported management yelling at them, slamming doors, throwing objects and other actions they thought were designed to minimize complaints or pressure staff into actions they felt were questionable," the report said.

Three Important Facts About Domestic Violence

Mastodon · 19 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First, IPV occurs across all age groups and ethnic, racial, and cultural backgrounds. Secondly, men and women show near-equal rates of IPV perpetration with women perpetrating at slightly higher rates.

It is important to note that counseling for IPV perpetrators is widely available, with well over 1000 programs in the US. Most of these programs, however, predominantly serve court-mandated populations and are focused on men who have assaulted women. While men cause the bulk of physical injury, many men are unwilling to come forward for fear of stigma.

Although clinical approaches based on long-standing models of IPV intervention have modest efficacy, there is a solid conceptual rationale for several alternative strategies for IPV perpetrators.'

Woman stabs boyfriend, puncturing his lung in domestic violence attack

Mastodon · 19 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Harrisburg police are looking for a 28-year-old woman they say stabbed her boyfriend in the shoulder early Sunday, puncturing his lung.

Police charged Catherine L. Boykin, 28, with three felonies and a misdemeanor in connection with the 4 a.m. attack in the 2200 block of North 5th Street. Boykin was charged with attempted homicide, aggravated assault, burglary of a home with someone present and possession of an instrument of crime.'

India: Uni student charged with extortion over false rape claim

Matt · 19 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 19-year-old BSc student of Maharani's College was arrested by Galta Gate police for allegedly blackmailing a 47-year-old Gurgaon businessman after threatening to lodge a rape case against him. Police also recovered Rs 27 lakh* from the teen, given to her by the businessman following the blackmail.

The girl allegedly was not happy with the Rs 27 lakh given to her and demanded a further Rs 18 lakh or his SUV from the victim. The victim had, meanwhile, recorded the conversation with the blackmailer and her promise to not lodge a rape case against him after receiving the money. Following her new demand, the victim approached the police who finally arrested the girl late on Tuesday for extortion and cheating.'

*About US$40,200.

Hillary's bestie despises feminism

Matt · 21 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This one leaves me speechless. It's the classic man-bites-dog story. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton's top campaign aide, and the woman who might be the future White House chief of staff to the first female US president, for a decade edited a radical Muslim publication that opposed women's rights and blamed the US for 9/11.

One of Clinton's biggest accomplishments listed on her campaign Web site is her support for the UN women's conference in Bejing in 1995, when she famously declared, "Women's rights are human rights." Her speech has emerged as a focal point of her campaign, featured prominently in last month's Morgan Freeman-narrated convention video introducing her as the Democratic nominee.

However, soon after that "historic and transformational" 1995 event, as Clinton recently described it, her top aide Huma Abedin published articles in a Saudi journal taking Clinton's feminist platform apart, piece by piece. At the time, Abedin was assistant editor of the Journal of Muslim Minority Affairs working under her mother, who remains editor-in-chief. She was also working in the White House as an intern for then-First Lady Clinton.

Headlined "Women's Rights are Islamic Rights," a 1996 article argues that single moms, working moms and gay couples with children should not be recognized as families. It also states that more revealing dress ushered in by women's liberation "directly translates into unwanted results of sexual promiscuity and irresponsibility and indirectly promote violence against women." In other words, sexually liberated women are just asking to be raped.'

Canada: B.C.'s domestic-violence programs based on 'false' theory

Matt · 22 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of North America's leading scholars on domestic violence is trying to persuade the B.C. government that it has adopted a failing approach to a serious problem.

UBC psychology professor Don Dutton, who has studied domestic violence for 40 years and written eight books, has told the B.C. Liberal government it has adopted a "false" premise that will do little to diminish partner-on-partner violence.

"It is understandable how an uninformed observer in British Columbia would tend to believe that family violence perpetrators are male and victims are female," Dutton wrote in a recent letter to Premier Christy Clark.

"But that assumption could not be more incorrect," Dutton said, objecting to the way virtually all B.C. government documents describe domestic violence as being perpetrated by men, with women as the victims.'

Germany: Model who made false rape allegations ordered to pay fine

Mastodon · 23 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lohfink, who became a popular media personality after appearing on the show "Germany's Next Top Model," said she was forced to have sex with two men, who filmed the act and later posted it online.

A Berlin court on Monday dismissed her rape claims, however, deciding that the sex was consensual and that her objections, heard on the video, were to it being filmed. The model will be forced to pay 20,000 euros ($22,600).

In her final statement to the court, the 29-year-old model repeated her claims that she didn't give her consent to the two men, a soccer player identified as Pardis F. and a former party promoter named Sebastian Pinto.

Lawyers accused Lohfink of defaming the men. "Ms. Lohfink is not the victim of sexual assault. She lied and deliberately misled investigators," said state prosecutor Corinna Goegge.'

Girls Prove Crime Has No Gender

Mastodon · 23 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Crime has no gender and we cannot reiterate this fact more. While the whole world fights women empowerment, men are increasingly being targeted by women who misuse the law and the feminism. And the only way it can be stopped is if we take it upon ourselves to expose every such woman.

Because, yes, women have been oppressed for ages but in no way does that make it okay for innocent men to be falsely accused of rape and molestation. Something similar happened to this user on Imgur. Here's what he wrote.

The Modern Feminist Rejection of Constitutional Government

Mastodon · 23 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Progressives and feminists alike largely advocate the goal of ensuring that men and women enjoy equal opportunity and treatment under the law, a goal that resonates overwhelmingly with the American public. Modern feminism, however, has strayed from this narrow mission, embracing instead a far more radical agenda. In the name of promoting “equality,” it has become a movement that seeks to promote women’s full autonomy by eliminating gender distinctions and forcing gender parity (statistical proportionality of males and females) in every area of academic, economic, social, and political life. Achieving these ends requires the vast expansion of centralized government, the redefinition of freedom, and the preferential application of the law to women based on their identity as a specially protected class.

On these grounds, the modern feminist movement is interested in fundamental social transformation rather than the mere protection of individual freedom and opportunity. Its agenda is openly hostile to the American constitutional system, which is based on limiting the scope and character of the law in order to protect the individual rights and equal opportunity of both men and women.'

S. Africa: More circumcision propaganda

Mastodon · 23 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Cervical cancer is the most common female cancer in women aged 15 to 44 years in South Africa, and while vaccines will go a long way in protecting women against the Human Papillomavirus (HPV) – the cause of almost all cervical cancer cases – studies reveal that male circumcision too has an important role to play in curbing the incidence of this life-threatening illness in women.
...
All women should encourage their male partners to undergo circumcision as it not only reduces a women's risk of contracting HPV and cervical cancer, but also reduces the risk of genital warts and other common sexually transmitted infections (STIs) in men and women. It also reduces a man's risk of contracting HIV by up to 60%, and lowers his risk of penile cancer," concludes Rawlinson.'

Deputies: Mom Killed Infant By Putting Him In Refrigerator

Matt · 23 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A South Carolina mother charged with killing her newborn son by putting him in the refrigerator was expected to appear before a judge on Tuesday.

Angela Blackwell was expected to have a bond hearing at 2 p.m. at the Chester County jail, according to Sheriff's Chief Deputy Robert Sprouse.

Blackwell, 27, was arrested by State Law Enforcement Division agents on Monday on a charge of homicide by child abuse after a lengthy investigation. She could face life in prison if convicted. Sprouse said he didn't know if she had an attorney.

Deputies said Blackwell put her 4-day-old son in her refrigerator and shut the door for three hours before taking him out and seeking medical attention on February 27.'

India: Paternity leave will be just a holiday for men, says Maneka Gandhi arindamp · 24 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the clamour for enhanced paternity leave grows stronger after the recent passage of the maternity leave bill in Rajya Sabha, Women and Child Development Minister Maneka Gandhi has said that such a legislation will have little impact in India, where men do not even avail their existing leave entitlements to share the responsibility of child care.

Speaking to The Indian Express, Maneka said, “Paternity leave can be considered only if, once the woman goes back to work after her 26 weeks of leave, we find that men are availing their sick leave for a month to take care of the child. Let me see how many men do that. I will be happy to give it but for a man, it will be just a holiday, he won’t do anything.”

It was on Maneka’s insistence that the Ministry of Labour and Employment mooted the Maternity Benefit (Amendment) Bill, 2016, which increases the period of leave for new mothers from the existing 12 weeks to 26 weeks in the organised sector. It also allows 12 weeks of leave to mothers going in for adoption or commissioning a child through surrogacy, and encourages employers to facilitate ‘work from home’ for new mothers.'

UK: University Gender Gap Reaches Record High

Matt · 24 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The gender gap between female and male students attending university is at a record level and "needs addressing", according to the head of the university admissions body.

Women currently outnumber men in almost two-thirds of degree subjects in the UK, and females are now 35% more likely to go to university than their male counterparts, widening the gender gap to a record level.

UCAS, which operates the application process for universities in the UK, says its figures show over 90,000 more women than men in the UK applied for a university course this year.

The number of male applicants went down for the first time since 2012, its figures show.'

Recent news belies myth that female CEOs are more philanthropic than males

Matt · 24 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Feminists like to make the argument that female CEOs are less greedy than male ones. Really? No one told this CEO. Excerpt:

'The pharmaceutical CEO whose company raised the price of EpiPens by more than 400% was rewarded with a 671% raise.

Heather Bresch and other executives at Mylan Pharmaceuticals have been criticized for increasing the price of the devices to prevent fatal allergy reactions from less than $100 for a pair in 2007 to more than $500 today.

Bresch, who was president in 2007 and has since become chief executive of the global pharma giant, went from making $2,453,456 nine years ago to $18,931,068 last year, according to filings from the company.'

Woman Gets 50 Years for Murdering Olympic Medalist Husband Who She Accused of Beating Her

Mastodon · 25 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The widow of a 1984 Olympic medalist was sentenced Tuesday to at least 50 years in prison for his 2009 murder, PEOPLE has confirmed.

The sentence came nearly five months after Jane Laut, 59, was found guilty in March of the first-degree premeditated murder of her husband, Dave Laut, who was found shot to death in the yard of their Oxnard, California, home on Aug. 27, 2009.

Dave Laut, a 52-year-old athletic director at Hueneme High School in Oxnard and a bronze medalist in shot put, was shot five times with a .22 caliber handgun, authorities have said. The last bullet was fired into the back of his head.

"The People are pleased the jury was able to see through the defendant's uncorroborated claims of domestic violence and find her guilty of premeditated murder," Ventura County Senior Deputy District Attorney Rameen Minoui tells PEOPLE in an email.'

"Men should step up, embrace feminist values in college"

Mastodon · 25 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Joining the fight means being an active advocate for the cause and educating those around you so that the message is heard. Some fraternities at the University of Maryland, have shown their solidarity with women by educating their members on consent and making it clear that they do not tolerate sexual assault. By supporting legislation such as the “Yes Means Yes” law, men can begin to change the conversation from “not all men” to “no men at all”.

These efforts take place on our very own campus with organizations like A Men’s Issue that work to spread awareness of sexual and relationship violence. As a former three-term president of A Men’s Issue, 2016 SU graduate Anthony McGriff is a prime example of why it’s vital that men use their voice to bring light to these issues.

“As an outspoken, male feminist, you get to see how male privilege allows me to move in this work,” said McGriff. “I’d tell men to embrace it: feminism leads to a healthier masculinity.”

It’s not that women haven’t been preaching these ideas for decades, but the importance of these beliefs are more likely to be heard by the masses when it’s brought up by men — who have the privilege of their gender to give them a different reason for speaking up.'

College Coach: I Was Fired for Reporting Campus Rape to Police

Mastodon · 25 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Wisconsin wrestling coach says he was fired for reporting sexual assault allegations to police—rather than telling the university first.

Timothy Fader, former head coach at the University of Wisconsin-Whitewater, has filed a federal lawsuit against the school's athletic director and former chancellor alleging retaliation, wrongful termination, and defamation.

It wasn't the only sexual assault claim Fader reported. The first time he reported such allegations to the university on behalf of a woman, in January 2013, officials failed to document it, he claims.'

Nate Parker's Critics Are Convinced He's a Rapist, But It's More Complicated Than That

Mastodon · 25 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The public seems to be turning against Nate Parker, a celebrated black filmmaker and actor whose forthcoming movie about an 1831 slave rebellion—The Birth of a Nation—is now besieged by bad press. Critics, including many from within the black community, are vowing not to see the film.

...

But the public debate over whether audiences can still appreciate The Birth of a Nation if its creator raped a woman actually misses a more important point: Parker was found not guilty by a jury, and there is at least some chance that verdict was the correct one. Given this, the people who refuse to see The Birth of a Nation don't even know for sure that they are punishing an actual rapist.

...

Parker, Celestin, and the victim were all drinking. Whether the victim drank too much to be capable of consenting is in dispute. She may have been completely unconscious, which would make both Parker and Celestin rapists. Or she may have appeared conscious, but was unable to give the kind of affirmative consent now required by colleges, though still unheard of it 1999. Or she may have been sober enough to consent, but too drunk to remember later that she had done so—alcohol lowers people's inhibitions, and people consent to things when they are drunk that they wouldn't have consented to otherwise. It could be the case that Parker had consent, but Celestin did not—if this were so, it would mean the courts actually got it right (at least the first time). Or it could be the case that the encounter was fully consensual and the woman later re-contextualized it as rape because she was ashamed of having sex with two black men.'

Stop calling Nate Parker a rapist

Matt · 26 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The much-anticipated October opening of “The Birth of a Nation,” the story of Nat Turner’s 1831 slave rebellion, is now clouded by past rape allegations against director, writer and star Nate Parker. Already, critics are lined up against the film. In a New York Times op-ed, Roxane Gay declared she won’t see it; a black popular culture site refused to review it. A blogger for the Seattle alternative paper, the Stranger, has called for the studio to “pull the plug” on the movie altogether.

The twist: Parker was actually tried, and acquitted, on the rape charge 15 years ago.

For many, it seems, an accusation of rape now equals guilt not only before there is a conviction but even after a not-guilty verdict. This may look just to those for whom “believe the survivors” is an article of faith. But such “justice” will inevitably shatter lives — and may hurt victim advocacy by lending credence to fears that rape accusations are a danger to the innocent.'

India: Girl weaves fake kidnap-rape story, Youth faces humiliation

Matt · 26 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The incident in which a girl who went missing since Monday evening last and came back in bad shape on Tuesday evening is gaining new twists with each passing day. The police have learnt that the girl's complaint that Rajesh, a car driver from Kollur, had abducted her, raped and posed death threat to her, was a concoted story and there is not even an iota of truth in her narration.

The 20-year-old lady from Yalur, Kollur, had stated before the police here that she had been abducted by the accused, who also raped and threatened of killing her. The police had taken into custody the car driver in question. The statements given by the lady and Rajesh widely differed from one another. During verification of location of cellphones of Rajesh and the lady, and also calls made from these numbers, further gave clue that the two had nothing to do with each other.'

"Hope Solo's punishment shows that women are judged more harshly"

Matt · 27 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Like clockwork. After beating up her family members, et al., she should have been suspended. Better late than never, if even for a different reason. Excerpt:

'Two weeks ago, the US women's soccer team crashed out of the Olympics. Now their controversial goalkeeper, Hope Solo, has been suspended for six months.

"The comments by Hope Solo after the match against Sweden during the 2016 Olympics were unacceptable, and do not meet the standard of conduct we require from our national team players," said US Soccer president Sunil Gulati, in announcing her suspension.

After the defending world champions exited in the quarter-finals on penalties, Solo offered some colorful commentary on opponents Sweden, now led by former USWNT coach Pia Sundhage. Solo emphatically defended the tactical integrity of her team and said: "I think we played a bunch of cowards." It can, of course, be argued that winning on penalties hardly qualifies as cowardly, but that isn't the point. Some of her team-mates, including the highly respected Megan Rapinoe, were thoroughly unimpressed.'

Where feminism went wrong

Mastodon · 28 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'No one suggests men and women shouldn't have equal rights. So by the textbook definition, we should all be feminists.

Why then, do so many women — especially young women — refuse the label?

Feminism has gotten a reputation in the past few decades of being less about equal rights and more about crushing men in order to raise women up. A new report from the Heritage Foundation (a conservative think-tank and my former employer) suggests modern feminism (and some of second-wave feminism from the 1960s) no longer views the movement as being about erasing inequalities in opportunity, but about enforced parity.

"The dilemma for contemporary feminists is that although American women have gradually overcome the formal legal and informal cultural barriers that previously prevented them from participating in certain occupations and professions, this achievement has not led to statistical parity between the sexes in all areas of social, economic, and political life," wrote Christina Villegas.'

Coffee shop offers women-only discount

Mastodon · 28 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Friday marks Women's Equality Day to commemorate the 19th amendment, and one Highlands coffee shop is celebrating by offering women discounted drinks.

Day's Espresso and Coffee, 1420 Bardstown Road, is offering women every item on the menu for just 78 cents on the dollar all day Friday, according to a public post on its Facebook page. The amount is representative of the full-time wage gap for women compared to men.

The business initially posted the promotion on Aug. 14 before sharing it again on Friday. It had been shared more than 700 times, as of Friday afternoon.'

Believe it or not, women are doing better

Mastodon · 28 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's easy to get the impression, as the U.S. celebrates the 45th annual Women's Equality Day on Friday, that the march toward equality has slowed to a crawl. Allow me to disagree.

True, the usual statistics tell a story of stalled progress. Women's labor force participation stands at less than 57 percent, down from a peak of 60 percent in the late 1990s. The rapid improvements in the gender wage gap that occurred in the 1980s and early 1990s show little sign of returning. And mothers — particularly the large number who are single — still shoulder most of the burden of child-rearing.

A deeper look, however, suggests more fundamental change in women's experiences as equals at home and in the workplace.

Despite slow progress in earnings on average, more women are out-earning their husbands. Men, for their part, are increasingly recognizing the importance of making a contribution at home: They are now more likely than women to say that work is interfering with their family life, and are increasingly seeking out employers that offer paternity leave and workplace flexibility.
...
In the workplace, women are more likely to be in positions of leadership. They are now the majority of workers in management, professional, and related occupations — which shouldn't come as a surprise, given their dominance in higher education. Glass ceilings are breaking, and not only in the presidential race: In 2015, 28 percent of all CEOs were women, up from 23 percent in 2008. Females own 38 percent of all businesses, compared with 29 percent in 2007.'

Women thrive as the primary breadwinner while men suffer, study finds

Mastodon · 28 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men often take on, and even embrace, the role of primary breadwinner for their families—but a new study suggests that too much pressure to bring home the bacon is bad for their physical and mental health. For women, the study found the opposite: The more economic contributions they made to their families, the better their psychological well-being.

The results, to be presented at the American Sociological Association's annual meeting, suggest that some men see breadwinning as a stressful obligation, while many women may approach it as an opportunity or a choice.

To examine the effects of household income dynamics on health and well-being, researchers looked at data from heterosexual married people across the U.S. who were between the ages of 18 and 32. Their most significant finding was somewhat surprising, said lead author Christin Munsch, PhD, an assistant professor of sociology at the University of Connecticut: As men took on more financial responsibility in their marriage, their psychological well-being and physical health both tended to decline.'

Back to Campus, Where Due Process Is a Myth

Mastodon · 28 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Colleges are supposed to be places of learning. However, many argue they've become liberal indoctrination centers, dedicated to churning out legions of progressive zombies who can parrot the Democratic Party's platform verbatim -- yet can't actually do anything useful to support themselves, or society.

Liberals, unsurprisingly, deny this.

However, there appears to be a movement afoot on college campuses that should alarm liberals, conservatives, and libertarians alike.

By now, most readers of this site are bound to be familiar with the persecution of men suspected of sexual assault on campuses throughout the nation. And yes, using "persecution" rather than "prosecution" is intentional. Prosecution implies they will be put through the unalienable rights-based American legal system. That isn't true anymore.'

UK: GCSE Results: White, Working-Class Boys Got Shafted Again – But Nobody Cares

Mastodon · 28 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today's GCSE results revealed that boys still lag behind girls dramatically in many subjects – with girls having an 8% lead on boys in getting A*-C grades.

This is nothing new – girls have been steamrolling the boys years at GCSE, A-Level and in university admission.

Even in "male" subjects that few girls take, like computing, they have 2 per cent lead.

It's clear – British girls are achieving while British boys, mostly are not – and nothing is being done to help them catch up.

The Government tried minimising coursework, which they felt gave girls an edge, but the gap increased further.'

Why don’t men’s rights activists fight for men’s rights?

Mastodon · 28 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men’s Rights Activists (MRAs) are a vocal bunch. They’ve got websites and social media accounts and YouTube channels, all dedicated to what they misname as activism for men’s rights.

But when their activism is only discussing men’s rights and masculinity in reference to feminism or violence against women, it’s not acting for men, it’s acting against women.

And men are in desperate need of help, so why are they being let down by the advocates who are supposed to be acting on their behalf?

MRA websites, and the comments sections on almost every article about violence against women, are full of men angrily disputing the irrefutable data on the disproportionate number of female victims in domestic violence. This is not activism centred on establishing services for issues that affect men, this is resentment that people believe women when they talk about the violence they’ve suffered at the hands of men, and anger that women are given the assistance they need to escape it.'

Comedy relief: The "vagenda"

Matt · 28 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Personally, I always have "Oppress women and minorities" on my MANgenda every morning. Excerpt:

'My to-do list usually includes some combination of meetings, interviews, deadlines, events, household chores, drinks with friends and, like all women, the next phase in my mission to eliminate men. That last task is apparently called “manocide,” and women’s pursuit of it? Well, that’s our “vagenda.”

If you’ve seen these words floating around the internet, it’s because a right wing gun shop used them to warn the world about the true intentions of “Hildabeast,” who most of us refer to as Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton.

A picture of the sign in front of the Raymond, Maine shop made its way to Twitter and inspired women everywhere to start tweeting their own vagendas. In these satirical to-do lists, women casually list “manocide” in between tasks like meetings, laundry and fitness classes. Others swap out the term for phrases like “oppress men” and “crush a man’s soul.” Many next-level trolls are including other tasks everyone assumes feminists prioritize day to day, such as “eat kale” and “queer stuff.”'

Huma Abedin’s mom linked to shocking anti-women book

Matt · 28 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. It all just gets weirder and weirder. Excerpt:

'As secretary of state, women’s-rights champ Hillary Clinton not only spoke at a Saudi girls school run by her top aide Huma Abedin’s anti-feminist mother, but Clinton invited the elder Abedin to participate in a State Department event for “leading thinkers” on women’s issues.

This happened despite evidence at the time that Saleha M. Abedin had explored the religious merits of sexual submissiveness, child marriage, lashings and stonings for adulterous women, and even the circumcision of girls.

The elder Abedin, whose daughter helps run Clinton’s presidential campaign, did take a pro-gender-equality stance on at least one issue: Muslim women’s right to participate in violent jihad alongside men.
...
Saleha is paid by the Saudi government to advocate and spread Sharia in non-Muslim countries like America.

In 1995, less than three weeks before Clinton gave her famous women’s-rights speech in Beijing, Saleha headlined an unusual Washington conference organized by the Council on American-Islamic Relations to lobby against the UN platform drafted by Clinton and other feminists. Visibly angry, she argued it runs counter to Islam and was a “conspiracy” against Muslims.
...
Asked if Clinton regrets honoring the Islamist mother and bestowing legitimacy on her extreme views, Merrill had no comment.'

More comedy relief: Giving up alcohol opened my eyes to the infuriating truth about why women drink

Matt · 28 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Unintentionally funny article here. And all this time, I thought it was because most people like to get a good buzz on. Excerpt:

'Instead, I round up some girlfriends and we spend hundreds of dollars in a hipster bar, drinking rye Manhattans and eating tapas and talking about the latest crappy, non-gender-blind things that have happened to us in meetings and on business trips and at performance review time. They toast me for taking one for the team. And when we are good and numb we Uber home, thinking Look at all we've earned! That bar with the twinkly lights. That miniature food. This chauffeured black car. We are tough enough to put up with being ignored and interrupted and underestimated every day and laugh it off together. We've made it. This is the good life. Nothing needs to change.

Do you remember the Enjoli perfume commercial from the 1970s? The chick who could bring home the bacon, fry it up in a pan, and never let you forget you're a man?

I blame that bitch for a lot. For spreading the notion that women should have a career, keep house, and fuck their husbands, when the only sane thing to do is pick two and outsource the third. For making it seem glamorous. For suggesting it was going to be fun. And for the tagline she dragged around: "The 8-Hour Perfume for the 24-Hour Woman." Just in case you thought you could get one fucking hour off the clock.'

America's Universities Become Man-Hater Clubs

Mastodon · 29 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Over the past several years a popular, often media-driven narrative has developed at universities and colleges across the nation — that of the campus “rape” culture. Various university campuses aiming to clean up and rid the school of this “rape” culture have developed procedures establishing university tribunals designed to police and deal with misconduct. But many of these tribunals seem to harbor an “anti-male” bias. Over the years, numerous male students found guilty by these tribunals were disciplined by the university even though no criminal charges were ever brought or even pursued.

The Second Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals ruled against a lower court that had dismissed a student’s claim that Columbia University had violated federal anti-discrimination laws when the school found him responsible for sexual assault. The suit brought by the student was based on the Title IX federal statute, which bans sex discrimination in education. The student’s claim was that Columbia University had engaged in an anti-male bias when it had found him responsible for sexual assault.'

‘Toxic environment’ for sons accused of campus sex offenses turns mothers into militants

Mastodon · 29 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the course of a year, Sherry Warner-Seefeld went from high school teacher to activist promoting fairness for students accused of sexual misconduct. Explaining why, for her, means revisiting a night of shock and a phone call she will never forget.

She was grading social science papers on a cold, late January evening in Fargo, N.D., when her cellphone rang, she told The Washington Post.

It was her son, Caleb Warner, calling to tell her he had heard from a dean at the University of North Dakota in Grand Forks. A woman with whom he had had a short sexual relationship, the dean told him, had accused him of sexual misconduct, of nonconsensual sex, that she alleged had occurred on the night of Dec. 13, 2009.

The charge was filed after the winter break in January 2010, his mother said, after he had “made it clear to her that he was not interested in having a boyfriend-girlfriend relationship.” Then out of the blue this notice arrives, with its intimidating legal language.

She stopped grading papers and paced the room as she listened to him.'

Fordham Law Review: Are Campus Sexual Assault Tribunals Fair?: The Need for Judicial Review and Additional Due Process Protections

Matt · 29 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article .pdf file here. Excerpt:

'Disciplinary proceedings at public colleges must afford students limited procedural due process rights under the Fourteenth Amendment. As public schools are considered state actors for purposes of the Fourteenth Amendment, any action by a school that deprives a student of “life,” “liberty,” or “property” without due process of law is a due process violation. The Fifth Circuit first recognized the procedural due process rights of public school students in the landmark case of Dixon v. Alabama State Board of Education. In Goss v. Lopez, the Supreme Court further recognized that students must be afforded due process before they are deprived of their education, in which they have a property interest. The Court also found that students have a “liberty” interest in their education because expulsion or suspension from school threatens a person’s “good name, reputation, honor, or integrity.” Any deprivation of a student’s “property interest in educational benefits . . . [or] liberty interest in reputation” without due process is therefore unconstitutional. Although the Court in Goss was faced with the disciplinary proceedings of a secondary school, courts have extended the holding in Goss to higher education institutions, including public colleges. Goss recognized that the process owed to the accused depends on the circumstances of each case and involves balancing the parties’ interests. Due process requires, at a minimum, the opportunity to be heard “at a meaningful time and in a meaningful manner.” However, courts have not uniformly recognized what process is owed to public school students in disciplinary proceedings.'

Watch SJW Woman Berate Lyft Driver Over His Dashboard Hoola Girl Until He Kicks Her Out

Mastodon · 29 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rebel Media commentator Lauren Southern uploaded a video she was anonymously sent showing an insane Social Justice Warrior (redundant) laying into her driver for having a classic dashboard hoola girl displayed in his car.

The "vocal-fried" SJW in question is a woman named Annaliese Nielsen, the founder of "Girls Night In," a secretive and selective women's community which she described to ABC News as an exclusive online sorority. Apparently these women enjoy going out, having a few cocktails, and then hunting for males who will undoubtedly offend them in some SJW rage-inducing way.

In the video (below), which she recorded herself, Nielson begins her self-righteous rant on the evils of hoola girl knickknacks by telling the driver, "You thought that was adorable? You didn't think about the pillaging of the like, continent of Hawaii?"

...

Eventually another passenger in the car calls Nielson's over-blown reaction pathetic, which only fires her up more to argue with the driver, calling him a "selfish dumbass idiot."

Finally, the driver's patience runs out, he boots her from the car, and speeds away like the Road Runner from Wile E. Coyote.'

Video here.

Australia: White men are being blamed for everything

Mastodon · 30 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph. Excerpt:

'WE used to be known as Australian citizens. But now, in the age of identity politics, we have our own special category: the white male. This is the new trend at the ABC and Fairfax Media — to judge people, not by the quality of their character or their contribution to society, but by the colour of their skin and the shape of their genitals.

Unsurprisingly, in this world of reverse racism, white men are being blamed for the whole shebang.

According to the Left's propaganda, we are good for nothing and responsible for everything.

We made the Islamic terrorists take up arms and slaughter innocent people (even though the radical preachers promoting the caliphate are Arabic and African Muslims).

We made Aboriginal men record the highest rates of family violence in Australia (even though it's usually white policemen who have to sort out the mess). We made Australia's female population suffer (even though women now receive 60 per cent of the nation's university degrees, enjoying higher-than-male remuneration in start-up jobs). We made the country abandon its fair-go principles (even though Australia now has 100,000 more welfare-dependent men than women).'

"Feminist Cringe Collection"

Mastodon · 30 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'Welcome to the channel that provides everything CRINGE worthy. I will be uploading the most cringiest compilations every other day. So sit back, Subscribe, and get your daily dose of cringe.'

"Freshman Orientation"

Mastodon · 30 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'A quick look at the insanity that is affecting our campuses.'

The rise of the anti-feminist

Mastodon · 30 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the developed world of the 21st century, I see the role of feminism as addressing those with the attitude that a woman's place should be in the home, those who promote a society in which a woman's work is undervalued, and those who treat women as objects at the disposal of men's desires. To reverse the centuries of gender roles that have solidified this mentality is no small feat in itself. But to the mission of feminism has been added a new hurdle: the anti-feminist.

Meet the anti-feminist: the immature, smug, self-righteous, yet deeply insecure individuals who on the street might look completely unassuming, but on the internet they take on a new ego with which they insult, mock and attack feminism. Anti-feminists share one particularly cementing belief of who the stereotypical feminist is – angry women with unshaved armpits wearing t-shirts branded with aggressive messages screaming "free the nipple". This binding misconception has allowed anti-feminists to turn feminism into something of a caricature, and given them the fuel with which to exploit the feminist movement for the purpose of a joke.'

Man shot and killed for not holding the door open for woman at a McDonald's

Matt · 30 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. And feminists insist there's no such thing as female privilege. Excerpt:

'An argument outside a North Las Vegas McDonald's turned deadly for a 31-year-old man.

Family members of Mohammad Robinson say he died Saturday night after he mistakenly did not hold the door open for a woman.

...

North Las Vegas police say Saturday night just before midnight a man shot Robinson outside the McDonalds near Pecos and Las Vegas Boulevard.

"It was a stupid reason honestly, irrelevant. It doesn't make any sense why would you actually take someone's life over not opening a door," said Sampson.'

Woman killed husband in hospital bed, police say

Matt · 30 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A Palm Coast woman is charged with second-degree murder after police said she killed her husband in his hospital bed at Florida Hospital Memorial Medical Center.

Daytona Beach police said 62-year-old Jan Sochalski stuck by her husband's bedside from April 7 until his death on May 19. Police arrested her on Monday.

"He just went in there for back surgery and he was not expected to succumb to those injuries," said Jimmie Flynt, of Daytona Beach Police Department.

Sochalski, a retired nurse who practiced for more than 40 years is the prime suspect. An arrest report showed her husband, Henry, was hooked up to a pain-medication machine when Jan Sochalski pressed the button 264 times in an eight hour period. Police said the button should have only been pressed six times an hour.'

Mother Accused Of Murdering Daughter Goes Before Judge

Matt · 30 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Juanita Gomez, 49, of Oklahoma City stands accused of First-Degree Murder in the death of her 33-year-old daughter, Geneva.

A judge denied her bond, but she had a lot to say to the judge during her video arraignment, Monday afternoon.

Gomez spent her time before the judge complaining about the jail conditions and also spoke up about not needing a public defender - claiming she already had a lawyer.

“Yes sir he believes in God like me,” said Juanita Gomez during her video arraignment. “Yes he's the best in town.”

Over at the Gomez home near NW 15th and McKinley, friends and family have left behind candles and flowers and rosaries to honor the life and tragic death of Geneva Gomez.

Neighbors News 9 talked to did not want to talk on camera, but say the mother and daughter seemed to have a good relationship.'

Woman who accused millionaire ex-fiancé of abuse revealed lying by security tapes

Matt · 30 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'However, since the violent allegations were made, Scott's attorney unveiled some new evidence, which suggests Mary is lying about how her bruised eye came to be.

Home security footage shows Mary screaming hysterically in the bedroom, slapping and punching herself in the head and face:
...
Earlier in the year, Scott filed a lawsuit against Mary and her parents, Linda and Michael Hunt, claiming they helped Mary steal 99 diamond necklaces, 147 gold rings, and 172 loose diamonds.'

Australia: Domestic violence: data shows women are not the only victims

Matt · 30 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Eva Solberg is a Swedish politician, a proud feminist who holds an important post as chairwoman of the party Moderate Women. Last year she was presented with her government's latest strategy for combating domestic violence. Like similar reports across the world, this strategy assumes the only way to tackle domestic violence is through teaching misogynist men (and boys) to behave themselves.

The Swedish politician spat the dummy. Writing on the news site Nyheter24, Solberg took issue with her government's "tired gendered analysis", which argued that eradicating sexism was the solution to the problem of domestic violence. She explained her reasoning: "We know through extensive practice and experience that attempts to solve the issue through this kind of analysis have failed. And they failed precisely because violence is not and never has been a gender issue."

Solberg challenged the government report's assumption that there was a guilty sex and an innocent one. "Thanks to extensive research in the field, both at the national and international level, we now know with great certainty that this breakdown by sex is simply not true."'

"A Title IX for Women in Politics"

Mastodon · 31 August 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The 2016 Olympics in Rio were both a triumph for American athletes and a tribute to the lasting impact of Title IX, the 1972 law that set out to equalize educational and athletic opportunities for the nation's women and girls. Women made up a majority the 554 American athletes at this year's Olympics, and brought home fully half of the 121 medals won by U.S. competitors.

For women seeking parity in the United States, particularly in the political sphere, Title IX offers an important road map. Female athletes were not told to change their attire, behavior, or strategy, as women in politics are constantly advised to do. They were materially helped by legal protections and systemic policy changes. As the nation gears up to vote in a presidential election featuring the first woman ever nominated by a major political party, female politicians in America need a Title IX of their own.

The story of Title IX's origins is an inspiring one. In response to being passed over for a full-time teaching position because she "came on too strong for a woman," then-University of Maryland lecturer Bernice Sandler helped to organize 350 sex discrimination complaints at academic institutions. Congressional hearings concluded that the inequality that girls and women were experiencing merited a comprehensive structural remedy in the form of federal intervention.

The result was Title IX, which banned sex discrimination in federally funded educational programs. The law has delivered concrete results. Women now earn degrees at a higher rate than men in traditionally male fields. One of its most important impacts has been in athletic programs, which were required to offer men and women equal access to sports resources and opportunities. Despite initial controversy and male backlash on college campuses, Title IX was widely credited this year for cultivating women's Olympic triumph—and the nation's—in Rio.'

Debunking the feminist wage gap myth...in 60 Seconds

Matt · 1 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'Is there any truth to feminists' assertion that women make less money than men in the same jobs? Factual Feminist and AEI Resident Scholar Christina Hoff Sommers sheds some light on the gender wage gap controversy.'

Germany to force women to name biological father of 'cuckoo children'

Matt · 1 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women in Germany could be forced to reveal the names of the biological fathers of their children under a proposed new law.

The controversial measure will force women to divulge acts of adultery or infidelity during a relationship.

It has already been dubbed the “Cuckoo Kids’ Law” by the German press, after the German phrase for children concieved in adultery, Kuckuckskindern — the equivalent of “milkmen’s kids” in English.

Heiko Maas, the justice minister, said the law, which will be presented to Angela Merkel's cabinet on Wednesday, would make it easier to resolve who was responsible for paying child support.'

The Idle Army: America's Unworking Men

Matt · 2 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'Labor Day is an appropriate moment to reflect on a quiet catastrophe: the collapse, over two generations, of work for American men. During the past half-century, work rates for U.S. males spiraled relentlessly downward. America is now home to a vast army of jobless men who are no longer even looking for work—roughly seven million of them age 25 to 54, the traditional prime of working life.

This is arguably a crisis, but it is hardly ever discussed in the public square. Received wisdom holds that the U.S. is at or near "full employment." Most readers have probably heard this, perhaps from the vice chairman of the Federal Reserve, who said in a speech last week that "it is a remarkable, and perhaps underappreciated, achievement that the economy has returned to near-full employment in a relatively short time after the Great Recession."

Near-full employment? In 2015 the work rate (the ratio of employment to population) for American males age 25 to 54 was 84.4%. That's slightly lower than it had been in 1940, 86.4%, at the tail end of the Great Depression. Benchmarked against 1965, when American men were at genuine full employment, the "male jobs deficit" in 2015 would be nearly 10 million, even after taking into account an older population and more adults in college.'

Misusing Data On Campus Rape

Matt · 3 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Students across the country have just started the fall semester, and undoubtedly some parents are worried. Perhaps they heard of the Department of Education's 2011 Dear Colleague Letter, which called the statistics on sexual violence, "deeply troubling and a call to action for the nation." Or maybe they read Vice President Joe Biden's recent letter stating that 1 in 5 women are sexually assaulted on college campuses. If those numbers were true then we would have a crisis of terrifying proportions. As it turns out, that epidemic is false.

A 2014 Department of Justice study found just 6.1 per 1000 (.61%) women in post-secondary institutions were the victims of rape or sexual assault between 1995-2013. While any sexual assault is to be abhorred, these findings do not support claims of rampant sexual abuse. A few weeks ago, ninety law professors issued a white paper in support of the Dear Colleague Letter. Neither the Department of Education, nor Vice President Biden, nor the authors of the White Paper bothered to mention the Department of Justice figures. Instead they point to a 2007 National Institute of Justice study that looked at just two large public universities. The lead researchers were so troubled by the misuse of their findings that they "felt the need to set the record straight" and published a piece in Time Magazine stating "(t)he 1-in-5 statistic is not a nationally representative estimate of the prevalence of sexual assault..." Another oft-cited study is the 2015 Association of American Universities Campus Climate Survey, which found 1 in 4 women surveyed from 27 Institutes of Higher Education had been raped or sexually assaulted while in college. Once again, the authors explicitly wrote that the results were not nationally representative and stating otherwise, "is at least oversimplistic, if not misleading." The authors also acknowledged that because they had such a low response rate their results were likely biased and thus their estimates of sexual assault too high.'

Judge Rejects Rolling Stone’s Plea to Throw Out UVA Defamation Case

Mastodon · 3 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to NBC News, a judge has rejected Rolling Stone‘s request to throw out a defamation case brought by the accused students in the now-debunked University of Virginia rape case.

In a statement made on Thursday, a circuit court judge in Charlottesville, Virginia, held that Rolling Stone magazine’s article on an alleged gang rape at the University of Virginia could reasonably be considered defamatory. This followed a request by the magazine’s attorney for the court to dismiss the case.'

Senator: Questions About Hillary Clinton's Health Are 'Quite Sexist'

Mastodon · 3 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Friday on MSNBC's "Andrea Mitchell Reports," Sen. Amy Klobuchar (D-MN) said the questions surrounding Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton's health were "quite sexist."

Klobuchar said, "Hillary Clinton has put out her medical records. I have seen her personally. You've seen her personally, Andrea. She is in shape. She is strong. She's just has a ton of energy. And I find this actually quite sexist when these guys are saying this. I think that that is not an issue at all and the American voters know that. And the fact that she's going to be out there again and she's been out here for the whole year. I find that just such a non-issue."'

'Healthy outrage' fuels attorney suing universities on behalf of men accused of sexual assault

Mastodon · 3 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Andrew Miltenberg insists he's not fighting for men's rights.

The New York City attorney says he's not an activist, nor does he mean to discount the pain and the trauma that sexual assault victims feel.

Miltenberg, a 51-year-old New York City attorney who has spent much of his career in business litigation, describes himself instead as a champion for civil rights and due process.

That's why he's become the go-to lawyer for male college students who claim they've been falsely accused of sexual assault and say their universities are treating them unfairly for the sake of appearing tough on campus sexual violence.'

Rape charges dropped, but university expels male student anyway

Mastodon · 3 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The student, identified in a federal lawsuit against Rider only as “John Doe,” was disciplined in December after a campus administrative panel found him at fault for an alleged sexual assault of two females student in a dorm room.

The student, however, was never prosecuted, despite an investigation by campus and municipal police and the Mercer County Prosecutor’s Office.

The lawsuit says the female students gave conflicting and contradictory statements to police, with their stories going from a kissing and heavy petting incident to one of forced penetration and attempted oral sodomy.

The lawsuit says the school, “in a rush to convict” the freshman student and “brand him a sexual predator,” didn’t allow his attorney to ask the victim any questions during the disciplinary hearing and considered him “guilty until proven innocent.”'

Male student at University accused twice of sexual assault claims school violated Title IX in lawsuit

Mastodon · 3 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A University of Chicago male student from New York accused twice of sexual assault slammed the school's conduct in a new lawsuit, charging that "UC routinely portrays a large portion of their male students as sexual predators."

The student, named as John Doe in the lawsuit, claims the university violated Title IX with its unfair treatment. He was subjected to a "fundamentally unfair, arbitrary and capricious disciplinary procedure that violates both Title IX and UC's policies and/or procedures related to allegations of sexual misconduct," according to the lawsuit obtained by the Chicago Maroon, a student newspaper at the school.

Title IX is in place to ensure that universities don't discriminate against students and faculty based on gender.

The male student, from Somers, N.Y., charges that two women, named as Jane Doe and Jane Roe, falsely accused him of sexual assault. Jane Doe is also being sued, according to the Maroon.'

Suzanne Moore: Why I was wrong about men

Mastodon · 5 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men. You can't live with them. You can't shoot them. Well, you can, but this is the New Statesman. And modern feminism spends most of its life not just bending over backwards, but in the doggy position, saying how much it likes men. "I'm a feminist but... I love men." Obviously I'm being a bit binary here, and when I write "men", I mean women, blokes, anyone fluid enough basically to be in charge.

I once adhered to this. I didn't want to put anyone off. I used to call feminism "sexual politics", because that sounded way more sexy. Hey, I'm no man-hater – on the contrary. Look at me. Men? Can't get enough of them, the poor, damaged critters. It's not their fault. They're as screwed up by the patriarchy as ordinary women, probably even more so.
...
You know what? I can. Please don't confuse that with bitterness. I am in touch with my emotions enough to know the difference between personal hurt and class hatred. As a class, I hate men. I've changed my mind. I am no longer reasonable.

I want to see this class broken. There can't be even basic equality for women without taking away the power of men – and by that I don't mean feeling sorry for them because they have no friends or suggesting that they have small genitals. I mean the removal of their power.'

Wikipedia on the author here.

Men devaluing men's lives: the smoking gun

Matt · 5 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is hardly news to MRAs who watch male feminists do their thing. Excerpt:

'Killing someone in order to save several lives seems more morally acceptable to men than to women. We suggest that this greater approbation of utilitarian killings may reflect gender differences in the tolerance to inflicting physical harm, which are partly the product of sexual selection. Based on this account, we predicted that men may be less utilitarian than women in other conditions. In four studies, we show that men are more likely than women to make the anti-utilitarian (hypothetical) choice of causing three same sex deaths to save one opposite sex life; and that this choice is more likely when there are fewer potential sexual partners, more likely for heterosexual men and less likely if the female character to be saved no longer has reproductive value.'

Christina Hoff Sommers on how academic feminism hurts women

Mastodon · 6 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Modern academic feminism is hurting women by teaching them to see themselves as victims rather than empowered individuals, according to American Enterprise Institute scholar Christina Hoff Sommers.

Hoff Sommers, in an interview with Clay Routledge of Psychology Today, argued that women in academia are being treated like children.

"Women are not children. We are not fragile little birds who can't cope with jokes, works of art or controversial speakers," Hoff Sommers said. "Trigger warnings and safe spaces are an infantilizing setback for feminism — and for women."

Routledge, too, brought up this notion of "women as victims," suggesting that the narratives being pushed by feminists in academia (most notably through women's studies programs) is a form of "benevolent sexism." That is, "the idea that women need to be cherished and protected, that they are innocent, precious and perhaps childlike."'

Australia: Aurizon cops heat on women-only job ad

Mastodon · 7 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Australia's largest rail freight operator has defended a polarising job advertisement for "female only" positions.

The women-only jobs of diesel fitters and electricians with Aurizon in central Queensland were advertised as "targeted" positions last Friday.

The ads have sparked strong debate on social media, some labelling it as "reverse discrimination".

Aurizon said in a statement it was seeking to recruit more women to even up the company's gender imbalance. More than 80 per cent of Aurizon workers are men.'

Title IX And College Rape: A Series Of Injustice, Part 4

Matt · 7 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine you were blackout drunk. Not just incapacitated and unable to clearly give affirmative consent, but intoxicated to the point of absolutely no memory. Envision yourself then hearing about what happened the night before via text messages and campus chatter, and discovering that oral sex was performed on you while you were blacked out. Then imagine, two years later, being expelled from school with a giant black mark on your future.

Wait, what? Why would the victim of a sexual assault be expelled?

Because being impaired is “never an excuse.” Because the “victim” of the sexual assault was a young man who later became the accused.

John Doe was a student at Amherst College in Massachusetts. After a night of drinking, a female student named as Sandra Jones helped Doe back to his room. Once they arrived, she proceeded to perform oral sex on him, and left when she was done. According to court documents, nearly two years later, at the urging of an on-campus victims advocate, Jones filed her sexual misconduct complaint with the school.'

SAVE: Federal Directive Triggered Spurt of Lawsuits Against Universities For Alleged Mishandling of Sexual Assault Cases, Report Says

Matt · 7 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / September 7, 2016 – A report released today reveals a 2011 U.S. Department of Education sexual harassment directive led to a dramatic increase in the number of lawsuits alleging mishandling of allegations of sexual assault on campuses. Titled “Lawsuits Against Universities for Alleged Mishandling of Sexual Misconduct Cases,” the report found that the number of lawsuits by students tripled over an eight-year period.

During the period 2006-2010, a leading insurance company received an average of 52 claims per year from alleged victims of sexual assault and from students who asserted they were wrongfully expelled for sexual assault. By 2013, the number increased to 154 claims. Claims by students alleging lack of due process increased at an even higher rate, increasing from 10 lawsuits in 2013 to 53 in 2015.

These claims represent a growing liability risk for colleges and universities. During the period 2006 to 2010, payments to accused students represented 72% of all expenses for legal fees and payments to persons alleging mishandling of sexual assault cases by campus disciplinary committees, according to a leading insurance company. In July, Georgia Tech officials agreed to pay a male student $125,000 to settle a case in which he had been accused of sexual assault. Earlier this year, a former University of Montana quarterback received a $245,000 settlement for the university’s “unfair and biased” rape investigation.'

Illegal immigrants make up rape and sex assault claims 'to stay in the U.S. longer'

Mastodon · 8 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A series of false rape allegations have been made by illegal immigrants awaiting deportation at detention centers, DailyMail.com can reveal.

Thirty-six claims were found to be false in just one year, the figures, released under Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) rules disclosed.

The scale of the false allegations was described as a concern by a watchdog group, who said it raised questions over whether illegal immigrants were trying to delay or dodge deportation by making untrue rape or sexual assault claims.

The allegations proven to be false were all made to Immigration and Customs Enforcement by people held in their detention facilities.'

UK: National Men's Rights Working Forum slated for Oct. 28-30, 2016

Matt · 8 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Flyer with details here. Excerpt:

'The aims of the Forum are (i) to identify activities that would eradicate male inequalities, (ii) to build a national network of male activists based upon social interaction between, and personal knowledge of, individual members, and, (iii) to help the Men's Movement project a more professional public and political front.'

NPO: Another Victory for Shared Parenting: Nevada Makes the Grade

Matt · 8 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In 2014, NPO's Shared Parenting Report Card evaluated each state's child custody statutes (not case law or the actual behavior of courts!) on the degree to which the laws promoted shared parenting. At that time, Nevada was near the bottom of the pack. It received only a 'D', a barely passing grade. To be fair, it had a lot of company at the bottom of the class. Twenty-three states received 'D's and two received failing grades.

But Nevada's Parental Rights Protection Act of 2015 brought about dramatic changes that will greatly benefit Nevada's children. Attorney Keith Pickard (Henderson, Nevada), who was the principal architect of the bill, brought these changes to NPO's attention. The changes bring NPO's grade for Nevada's child custody statutes from a miserable 'D' to a 'C+'. A 'C+' on the NPO Shared Parenting Report Card might not seem like anything to brag about. But only eight other states received a 'C+' and only eight states received grades higher than a 'C+'. None received an 'A.' So, in a single legislative act, Nevada has moved from being among the worst states for shared parenting laws to being in the top third.'

France: All-female ISIS terror cell foiled

Matt · 9 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. So much for the notion that mass violence is limited to male machinations. Excerpt:

'A FRENCH teenager shot by cops was part of France's first ever all-female ISIS terror cell which planned to attack the Gare du Nord train station in Paris this week, it was alleged today.

Ines M. – whose full surname has not been revealed – was one of three women suspected of setting up a terror cell in Boussy-Saint-Antoine, south of the French capital.

The dramatic revelation came as the packed Gare du Nord was evacuated this evening as a bomb squad detonated a suspicious package with the city on high alert.'

Female Student Admits to Incredible Lie That Got Auburn Football Player Kicked Off Team

Matt · 9 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Auburn University dismissed running back Jovon Robinson—formerly the No. 1 junior college player in the country—after a female student accused him of assaulting her.

"He did not meet my expectations of what it takes to be an Auburn Tiger football player," said head coach Gus Malzahn, according to al.com.

But Robinson never assaulted anyone. His purported victim made it up entirely. The woman now readily admits to fabricating the allegation out of spite—she was angry at Robinson for making her leave his room.

It's an astonishing, malicious lie that might have factored into Auburn's decision to release Robinson, though the university maintains that it had other issues with him. It's also a powerful repudiation of the leftist-feminist idea that victims of assault and sexual assault deserve to be automatically believed.'

UK: Why does the CPS report on violence against women include men in the stats?

Matt · 10 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Male violence against women is both a cause and a consequence of gender inequality, in this country and across the world. It is right and essential that official bodies strive to reduce and eliminate such offences, as an end in itself and as part of a broader strategy to combat gender-based injustice.

The Crown Prosecution Service has just published its annual performance review titled Violence Against Women and Girls: Crime Report. This year, for the first time, tucked away in parentheses on the front page, are seven new words: “(Inclusive of data on men and boys.)”

Readers might wonder how crimes against women and girls can include men and boys. The answer lies in a curiously bureaucratic definition. Violence Against Women and Girls (VAWG) doesn’t necessarily mean violence against women and girls. It means a subset of criminal offences that have been categorised as VAWG crimes – rape and sexual assault, domestic violence, human trafficking, forced marriage, etc – and the victims of these crimes are not all female. As the introduction makes clear, one in six victims described in the report are in fact men and boys. In the largest category, domestic abuse, exactly 16.7% of victims (where gender was recorded) are male. Elsewhere, the figures are higher; almost a quarter of victims of so-called “honour crimes” are male, and in the category of trafficking and prostitution, a full 40% of victims are men and boys.

But it is in the most sensitive areas of sexual violence and child abuse where the situation is most troubling. Here, the CPS’s data collection is so inadequate that it is impossible to officially state the gender ratio of victims, they are simply assumed to be female. In fact, the limited data that is available in the appendix shows one in eight rape victims and more than a quarter of child abuse victims to be male.

Those who work with male survivors of these crimes testify that issues of gender and sexuality are often central to trauma and recovery, with survivors dealing with a sense of emasculation or isolation, feeling that due to being the “wrong” gender, they barely exist as victims. It is not difficult to see how government bodies categorising these (often young and deeply vulnerable) men as “women and girls” is tantamount to another abusive act. Furthermore, male survivors’ charities and campaigns are desperately frustrated by the lack of reliable data, which they urgently need to make a fair and compelling case for funding, support and donations.'

Hillary Tells Yet Another Self-Aggrandizing Feminist Lie

Mastodon · 10 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Hillary told another whopper today, one of her typical I am a heroic woman who has stood up to bullies my whole life lies.

Speaking to a blog called “Humans of New York” on Thursday, Hillary shared a “rare personal message” – as Politico put it. She claimed that when she took the LSAT during her senior year of college, men taking the test shouted at her, saying her admission to law school could cost them their draft deferments, forcing them to go to Vietnam, where they would die. The moral of the story was that she had to “learn as a young woman to control my emotions.” Brave Hillary!

...

The problem with this corny story that only stupid 20-year-old girls would believe is: Hillary graduated from Wellesley in 1969. Remember? That’s when she gave that speech insulting the first black senator since Reconstruction. So her senior year began in autumn, 1968. She says she was a senior during this harrowing experience, which is when the LSAT is normally taken. But the LBJ administration ended all graduate school deferments on February 16, 1968, except for medical, dental and divinity students, when Hillary was still a junior in college.'

The feminists who are turning British justice against men

Mastodon · 11 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Crown Prosecution Service is meant to be one of the guardians of the British public. Its duty is to tackle criminality without bias, regardless of the background of either perpetrator or victim.

Its guiding spirit should be the famous, blindfolded figure of Justice that stands on top the Old Bailey, reflecting the ideal that we're all equal before the law.

But, as a barrister myself, I fear the service is sliding towards the status of a noisy pressure group in the grip of feminist dogma.'

"Boys and Girls Together..."

Mastodon · 11 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Into the educational vacuum of moral relativism radical feminists have now poured a witches' brew of politics and tyrannical control over both thought and action. In her later book, The War on Boys, Mrs. Sommers notes that those feminists everyone assumed simply hated men have now turned on a more vulnerable target: boys. She exposes what the terrifying techniques and purposes of feminist reeducation are doing to boys. The catechism, she says, is more or less simple: "Girls, good; boys, bad."

In many schools, even the propensity of boys to run and jump and engage in rough-and-tumble play is now being suppressed. This radical educational change has actually evolved into a movement to abolish recess at the very time when health activists are railing about overweight and inactive American children. If sedentary and junk-food-nourished children must be denied free outdoor exercise, says Mrs. Sommers, there must be some powerful reason for doing so.

The reason is that boys behave differently from girls. This cannot be allowed. Feminists insist that boys should be raised like girls – indeed, should be like girls. More active male behavior or interests – once considered normal for boys – are considered the spawn of "patriarchy" and must be treated as deviant expressions that will lead directly to rape, mass murder, and capitalism. They must be stamped out with every means possible.

Day in and day out, too many boys are hearing a steady drumbeat telling them that they are class enemies, responsible for all the evils of the world. Mrs. Sommers notes that when these doped-up, denigrated, and sexually confused boys hit adolescence, "…hormonal rockets are lit off, and we find resentful, angry, and unsocialized youth bouncing around the landscape." This, then, is taken as additional evidence that more vigorous non-sexist reeducation must be instituted. Fewer young men going to college is only one symptom of a poisonous institutional bias that must be disclosed and dealt with.'

World premier of The Red Pill announced

Matt · 11 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

Coming: OCTOBER 2016

http://www.theredpillmovie.com/

Thanks to the thousands of people who supported our Kickstarter campaign in Oct-Nov 2015, we are now able to complete "The Red Pill" documentary! COMING OCTOBER 2016.'

Screen time and ticketing information here.

'Epic' bar mitzvah party produces epic trial and bizarre defense

Matt · 12 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"On Saturday, March 21," it said, "a bar mitzvah was held at a North Scottsdale home. … One of the guests at the party, whose name is Lindsey Radomski (32 years old), recently had breast augmentation surgery. At one point, Radomski exposed her breasts to a group of 5 adults at the party. The adults admonished her not to expose herself again. Later, Radomski exposed her breasts to a group of juveniles by the pool. Radomski was told to 'sleep it off' in one of the bedrooms of the home."

But she didn't. And so, the statement continued:

"In the early morning hours of Sunday March 22nd, most of the party guests had gone home or were asleep. Radomski invited 7 juvenile boys, ranging in ages from 11 to 15, into a bedroom where she allowed the boys to fondle her breasts. Later, all of the boys left the bedroom except for one 15 year old boy. Radomski then performed oral sex on the 15 year old boy."
...
So her lawyers' defense is built around an unusual theory but not one uncommon in cases involving sex: The alleged victims did it.
...
Someone — her lawyers contended during the trial that it was an 18-year-old at the party who was never identified — slipped into one of her drinks the "date rape" drug GHB. She blanked out, they argued, and the boys took advantage. At one point, one of her lawyers blurted out that she had been "raped," although there is no evidence of that.

Although that may sound far-fetched, so do lots of theories presented by good defense lawyers. All they need to do, remember, is raise doubt in the minds of the jurors.
...
In addition to earlier testimony from each of the boys, prosecutors have countered with, among other things, the results of blood tests taken after the party showing no more GHB than would naturally occur in a person's body.'

Canadian PM accused of being a fake feminist

Matt · 13 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If you lie with dogs, senor, expect to awaken covered in fleas. Excerpt:

'But nothing truly wonderful can last forever, and this week, the influential Canadian media outlet MacLeans declared Justin Trudeau a “fake feminist” and a gender equality fraud.

Apparently, according to MacLeans, while Trudeau has been winning their hearts in public, he’s been waging a quiet war against everything feminists hold dear in private. His first offense: putting Canadian economic stability over the whims of social justice warriors. His further offenses: not giving in to feminist demands.

“‘Feminist’ Justin Trudeau delivers a deeply un-feminist first budget,” wailed “women’s rights blog” Rabble after Trudeau had the nerve to increase funding to infrastructure and construction, where employment is 88% male, instead of a more “female-focused” profession. Trudeau refused, they said, to “drill down” to the “intersections and injustices” that define female inequality, though they didn’t quite define exactly what that meant.'

Guy Asks Chelsea Clinton A Question ... Apologizes For Being A Man

Mastodon · 13 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A man asked Chelsea Clinton a question at a campaign event for her mother Hillary in Winston-Salem, N.C. on Tuesday.

But not before apologizing for his biology. Link

“I saw your hand first, so, yes. Hello,” Clinton told the soon-to-be-emasculated bro. “And maybe just share your name.”

“Yes, ma’am,” the guy answered, to which Clinton stated, “oh gosh called me ma’am. That makes me feel so old.”

“Well, first off, I’d like to state that this is a great idea,” the questioner continued. “Sorry that the first person to get the mic is a man.”

“I do apologize for that. I do think it’s important to encourage women’s voices in every aspect of life.”'

Why Feminists Are So Cagey About Class

Mastodon · 13 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

Interestingly, the report did not include information on boys' quality of life. The report claims it is 'unapologetic in its focus on girls and their lives'. But it is still ignoring the elephant in the room. The fact that girls in Waverley enjoy higher quality of life than those in Salford has nothing to do with the fact that they're girls and everything to do with the fact that, in comparison, Salford is a much poorer, working-class area.

Indeed, the researchers seem to be well aware that their stats alone don't point to any clear gender disparity. So, in order to make up for this, they've conducted interviews with 103 girls about their life experiences. The authors conclude: 'Girls are facing daily harassment in school, in the classroom and on the way to and from school. They need to use technology, but they don't always feel safe to do that. They're scared every day on the street.' Based on a few conversations with a few young girls, Plan UK is claiming that there is real gender inequality in Britain today.

This is absolute nonsense. As spiked has often argued, girls in the UK have never had it so good. The old barriers are gone: it's illegal to discriminate on the basis of sex, and society's view of women's freedom and capabilities has changed enormously over the past few decades.'

Obama Administration Attacks 'Reasonableness' and 'Common Sense' in Sex Harassment Investigations

Matt · 13 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This letter has been criticized by education reporters for ignoring the law and attacking common sense. Reason magazine's Robby Soave writes that "In holding 'common sense,' 'reason,' and 'reasonable persons' in contempt, OCR is effectively saying that colleges should base their decisions on the perspective of an unreasonable person."

This letter's extreme position is at odds with OCR's past position when I worked there in its national headquarters. But it reflects the position of left-wing women's groups whose staff frequently end up working for the Office for Civil Rights and the Civil Rights Division under Democratic Presidents. In court briefs, these groups have argued that women should be able to sue over sexual discussions or relationships among co-workers that only an unreasonable person would view as sexual harassment. For example, in the Supreme Court case of Harris v. Forklift Systems (1993), the National Women's Law Center, "joined by the Women's Legal Defense Fund, demanded that women be allowed to sue employers for sexual remarks by co-workers even if no 'reasonable woman' would find the remarks offensive. This demand was so extreme that it was rejected by the Supreme Court and condemned as biased by the Legal Times." In 2001, the Supreme Court overturned a ruling against the Clark County School District, ruling that a "reasonable person" could not "have believed that [a] single incident" of offensive remarks amounted to harassment.'

SAVE: Most College Rapists Never Spend a Day in Jail

Matt · 13 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'Two weeks after former Stanford University student Brock Turner was released from jail after serving a 3-month sentence for raping an unconscious woman, members of the public continue to express outrage and concern that campus rape is not being taken as a serious problem.

SAVE urges lawmakers to consider the lessons of the Turner case:

1. Rape is a heinous offense, and needs to be treated that way.

2. Local criminal justice authorities – not the Stanford University disciplinary committee – were the appropriate persons to handle the case.

3. Alcohol abuse is a major contributor to sexual assault, and binge drinking needs to be addressed.

Unfortunately, few of the bills debated in state legislatures in 2016 addressed any of these factors. Instead, most bills espoused unproven approaches such as affirmative consent, evoking concerns about the erosion of the presumption of innocence.'

SAVE: Contact state legislators about CEFTA

Matt · 13 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Are you a teacher? You can be. Your state legislators handle many, many issues, and there are many areas of the law that they can't always keep up-to-date on.

Because today is the official launch date for SAVE's new campus sexual assault bill, the Campus Equality, Fairness, and Transparency Act (CEFTA), many legislators may not yet have had a chance to read the bill.

We ask that you please email your state legislator a link to our bill and tell them in your own words why you would like to see them introduce CEFTA.

Our bill can be found here: http://www.saveservices.org/sexual-assault/cefta/

Let's get this bill introduced and passed in all 50 states! Starting with yours, today!

Thank you!

Very best,

Gina R. Lauterio, Esq.
Policy Project Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE)

UK: No, it's not ridiculous to call misogyny a hate crime

Mastodon · 13 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women have very little idea of how much men hate us, wrote Germaine Greer, and the criminal justice system has hardly gone out of its way to disabuse us. Hate crime monitoring by the police covers disability, race, religion, sexual orientation and gender identity, but astonishingly, not sex. While the police have all-too-slowly come to recognise the systemic underpinnings of violence when it affects male victims, the targeting of women because they are women has been left behind. If you want to find out how much men hate women, you won't find the answer in the official statistics. Until now, because a successful pilot by Nottingham Police to record misogyny as a hate crime is now being considered for adoption by forces across England and Wales.

The Nottingham experiment inevitably attracted derision on its launch in July, with multiple snickering headlines about the prospect of wolf-whistling becoming a crime – the implication being, of course, that this would be inherently absurd. What actually happened was different: under the Nottingham scheme, police have dealt with more than 20 incidents, "all of which required some form of police action", according to Dave Alton, hate crime manager for Nottingham Police. Two men have been arrested for public order offences and actual bodily harm.'

Motherless babies possible as scientists create live offspring without need for female egg

Matt · 13 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Motherless babies could be on the horizon after scientists discovered a method of creating offspring without the need for a female egg.

The landmark experiment by the University of Bath rewrites 200 years of biology teaching and could pave the way for a baby to be born from the DNA of two men.

It was always thought that only a female egg could spark the changes in a sperm required to make a baby, because an egg forms from a special kind of cell division in which just half the number of chromosomes are carried over.
...
But now scientists have shown embryos could be created from cells which carry all their chromosomes which means that, in theory, any cell in the human body could be fertilised by a sperm.

Three generations of mice have already been created using the technique and are fit and healthy and now researchers are planning to test out the theory using skin cells.'

UK: By making misogyny a crime, we are sleepwalking into tyranny

Matt · 14 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Should it be a crime to hate women? This unfortunate question is thrown up by the news that misogyny might soon become a hate crime across England and Wales. Two months ago, Nottingham Police launched a trial 'crackdown on sexism', investigating cases of, among other things, 'verbal harassment' and 'unwanted advances' towards women. Now top coppers from across the country are looking into criminalising misogyny elsewhere.

I find this terrifying. Misogyny is vile and ridiculous and I feel privileged to live in an era when, in the West at least, it is in steep decline; an era in which women work, run things, outdo lads at school, and no one bats an eyelid (except men's rights activists who physically live in their mum's basements and mentally live in the 1950s). But I am as opposed to the criminalisation of misogyny as I am delighted by its decline. For the simple reason that the state has no business policing people's thoughts, even their dark thoughts. Have we forgotten this basic principle of the free society?

Imagine the potential for miscarriages of justice in this Orwellian experiment which would investigate people for what they feel (in this case, alleged contempt for women) alongside what they do. Short of inventing a machine that can measure wicked thinking, how does one prove that an individual's mind is a murky swirl of anti-woman hatefulness? How do we know that the man who engages in an 'unwanted advance' towards a woman is driven by 'ingrained prejudice against women'? He might simply be motivated by attraction to one woman, not hatred for all.'

NPO: Survey: Strong Support in Maryland for Shared Parenting

Matt · 14 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The news out of Maryland is good. It's actually better than good because it corroborates what we've long known - that We the People avidly support equal or nearly equal parenting post-divorce. John Chick of the Maryland chapter of National Parents Organization personally commissioned and paid for a survey on Marylanders' attitudes toward shared parenting. It was conducted by the highly reputable polling organization, Public Policy Polling, from August 5 - 7 of this year. A total of 580 voters were polled. Unsurprisingly, the results strongly support changing state law to promote shared parenting.'

Arizona yoga instructor acquitted of teen sex charges at party

Matt · 15 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An Arizona yoga instructor accused of letting boys as young as 11 fondle her breasts at a bar mitzvah party was acquitted of all charges on Wednesday, court officials said.

Lindsey Ann Radomski, 33, was found not guilty of 18 misdemeanor charges in Scottsdale, Arizona, city court stemming from the incident involving seven boys at a suburban Phoenix home in March 2015.

The six-member jury deliberated for three hours before issuing the not guilty verdict on 10 counts of public sexual indecency and indecent exposure following a seven-week trial, officials said.

A judge then immediately cleared Radomski of the remaining counts of contributing to the delinquency of a child and disorderly conduct. In Arizona city courts, those misdemeanor accusations are handled by judges, not juries.'

See related post here.

Social Work’s Gender Problem

Matt · 15 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Social work's diversity problem may be even worse than law enforcement's. While minorities make up more than 27 percent of police departments nationwide, men make up barely 16 percent of the ranks of social workers, according to federal data. And a look at social-work education suggests that the trend continues in the wrong direction: According to the Council on Social Work Education, just 13.3 percent of the recipients of master's degrees in social work in 2015 identified as male. In 1964, the figure was 42.1 percent.

So, ironically, a field that loudly proclaims its commitment to diversity and inclusiveness lags far behind one that is often thought to be insular, secretive, conservative and hidebound. Law enforcement is taking concrete, meaningful action to address its diversity problem. Social work is doing nothing of the sort.

The result is that the field of social work does a poor job of dealing with family issues in ways that take into account the needs of both men and women -- and the children they parent. As a 2015 study of social-work practices in Connecticut reported, some fathers complained that "being male put them at a disadvantage and that case workers often took the side of the mother before initial contact with the father was made." Nearly two decades ago, Harvard sociologist Orlando Patterson wrote that "the far greater crime rate among Afro-American men must in great part be explained by their unmarried and largely unpartnered existence." In 2013, British researchers found that while "friends are equally important to men and women … family matters more for men's well-being."'

Woman puts lit cigarette in man's eye during argument

Matt · 16 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Meet Cindy Jean Underwood.

The 39-year-old West Virginian is locked up on $10,000 bail after she allegedly put out a cigarette in her boyfriend's eye, according to court records.

The attack, cops say, occurred Monday as Underwood and Jeremy Hughes were arguing in the home they share in St. Albans, a city in Kanawha County.

As the pair squabbled, Underwood jammed a lit cigarette into her beau's eye, police charge. When cops arrived at the residence in response to a destruction of property complaint, they summoned an ambulance, which transported Hughes to a local hospital for treatment of an injury to his left eye.'

Milo advocates for circumcision of boys

Matt · 18 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The MRM has a wide range of issues. Not all MRAs will agree on specific issues. In this case, Milo is not in agreement with the circumcision issue. Possibly this is because he has not heard the argument. So please, politely contact him and make the case. Flaming the guy will not be constructive. Excerpt:

'Your penis is not a perfect, special snowflake. There are objective standards of beauty for men, just as there are for women. For the edification and enjoyment of your female partners, not to mention the quality of oral sex you'll get throughout your life, you should get circumcised. And you should do it to your newborn sons, too, as early into their lives as possible.
...
This shouldn't be a surprise to us. Circumcision isn't a recent invention of misandrists, sadists or religious nuts: 15,000 years ago, men realised that making their wieners more attractive improved their chances of oral sex. Perhaps as a gay man I'm biased, but aesthetics matter. And let me tell you – sorry if this veers into "TMI" territory – that I'm infinitely more likely to make you happy down there if you're cut.

Then there's the medical stuff. Getting circumcised reduces the risk of urinary tract infections, some sexually transmitted diseases, including HIV and penile cancer and cervical cancer in female sex partners. It prevents a whole galaxy of hideous illnesses that come from having a turtleneck: balanitis, balanoposthitis, phimosis and paraphimosis. (I won't spell them all out, but they're all horrible and, more to the point, avoidable.)

It drops the risk of heterosexual HIV acquisition by about 60 per cent. It drops the risk of HPV, herpes and other stuff by similar amounts. And the risk of urinary tract infection in the first year of life goes down by an astonishing 90 per cent. The Mayo Clinic and the NHS both list huge advantages, together with the obligatory, diplomatic disadvantage list.

The American Academy of Pediatrics agree that the health benefits of newborn male circumcision outweigh the risks, but the benefits are not great enough to recommend universal newborn circumcision. Fine, but that's because it's not the AAP's job to consider the sexual or aesthetic benefits of getting it done. Take it from me: your penis is 200 per cent more attractive to a potential blowjob-giver if you have the snip.'

UK: Domestic violence against men soars to record levels as number of cases treble in past decade

Matt · 18 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DOMESTIC violence against men has trebled in the past decade, shocking official figures reveal.

A record 5,640 wives and girlfriends were convicted of assaulting their male partners last year — up from 1,850 in 2007.

The issue has become a taboo because victims are often too ashamed to talk about their experiences.

But an MP is now calling for action after evidence emerged the problem is growing at an alarming rate.

Stats released by the Attorney General show 177 women are convicted of domestic abuse EVERY WEEK.'

UK: MPs call for end to abusive men using courts against families

Mastodon · 18 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The government must carry out a full review of family courts to stop them being used by violent men to perpetuate abuse against their partners and children, MPs have said.

They called on the justice secretary, Liz Truss, to act swiftly to tackle deep-seated cultural attitudes among family court judges which put the rights of abusive men over the safety of women and children.

MPs were debating research by Women's Aid which revealed that between 2005 and 2015, 19 children in 12 families were killed by violent fathers who had been allowed to see them through formal and informal child contact arrangements.

The debate focused on many personal stories of women who had been subjected to violence and coercive control by their partners, only to have to face them again in the family courts when the men fought for child contact.

MPs said the family court system was allowing violent men to re-victimise women. Increasing numbers of men were representing themselves and re-traumatising their victims when they made repeated and often spurious applications for access, they said.'

Men perform better in bed when put under the spotlight, study finds

Matt · 18 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Exposure to bright light - similar to daylight - boosts levels of the male hormone testosterone and can triple sexual satisfaction, the new research found.

Low sexual desire affects significant numbers of men after the age of 40.

According to some studies, up to a quarter of men report problems depending on age and other factors.

Because sexual interest varies with the seasons, scientists have suspected that it might be influenced by ambient light levels.

To test the theory a team of Italian researchers from the University of Siena recruited 38 men diagnosed with low libidos and treated half of them with daily doses of bright light.'

Obama Blames American Sexism for Hillary Clinton's Low Poll Numbers

Mastodon · 19 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Barack Obama suggested at a New York fundraiser that American society is sexist, which is why Hillary Clinton is struggling to beat Donald Trump in the polls.

"There's a reason why we haven't had a woman president–that we as a society still grapple with what it means to see powerful women," Obama said during a speech on Saturday evening. "And it still troubles us in a lot of ways, unfairly, and that expresses itself in all sorts of ways."

Obama pointed out that the presidential election will be close, but that it should not be, and he took time to defend Clinton's qualifications to serve as president.

"She's been in the room where it happens, repeatedly," Obama said. "And her judgment has been unerring, and she has been disciplined, and she has been extraordinarily effective in every job that she's had."'

Female teacher goes unpunished for multiple violations of conduct

Mastodon · 19 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jennifer Elizabeth Green-Johnson, who is listed on the Dunnville Secondary School's website as an English teacher, Grades 10 through 12, allegedly instructed one of her students: "Why don't you lick me where I fart?"

That suggestion is included in two sets of charges before the Ontario College of Teachers, with Green-Johnson's date for hearings to be set next Friday.

Some teachers we remember for the rest of our lives, because they had a profound effect on shaping young minds or instilling a love of learning or helping us navigate the curriculum. I doubt Green-Johnson's students will ever forget her, if only for the purported yips and confirmed yaps she brought into the classroom.

This is not Green-Johnson's first disciplinary rodeo.
...
In one, relating to the 2015-16 academic year, Green-Johnson is alleged to:

Have told a student who brought coffee to class: "Get that f---king thing out of here."

Called a student a "bloody pedophile."

Told a student: "I have never said this to a student before but f--k you."

Told another: "It sounds like your ass cheeks are too close together," after the student a made a noise by pressing his lips together.

Told a student who'd offered to buy her muffins in exchange for a passing grade: "You mean a bribe? I'd be able to shit for a week."

Told a female student she "looked like a frumpy old lady today."'

Men with anxiety have higher cancer risk, says study

Matt · 20 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men who suffer from severe anxiety are twice as likely to die from cancer than men who do not, a study has found.

But women with the mental health condition were at no greater risk, researchers said.

They suggest anxious men may be more likely to ‘self-medicate’ their anxiety by drinking and smoking more than women, both factors that increase the likelihood of getting cancer.

Women may also be quicker at going to the doctor – allowing the cancer to be detected earlier, making it easier to treat.

A study of 15,938 Britons looked at those who had also been diagnosed with generalised anxiety disorder. The disorder is characterised by excessive, uncontrollable worry about many areas of life, the researchers said.'

Romeo and Juliet and Sexting: 17-Year-Old Faces Child Porn, Assault Charges for Consensual Sex with Girlfriend

Mastodon · 20 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"After being arrested, I was suicidal and hopeless," Austin Yabandith, a 17-year-old from Superior, Wisconsin, recalls. "As of right now, I am just hoping for the best and preparing for the worst."

The "worst" would be pretty bad. After discovering indecent photos of Austin's 15-year-old girlfriend on his cell phone—as well as a video of the couple having sex—authorities charged him with sexual assault of a child, sexual exploitation, and possession of child pornography. The sexual assault charge is considered a Class C felony, and carries a maximum (though unlikely) sentence of 40 years in prison.

One might argue that a sexual predator deserves such a fate. But Austin isn't a sexual predator. He didn't assault anyone, or send child porn. By one important measure, he is a child himself: the age of consent in Wisconsin is 18, which means Austin is technically under-age, just like the girlfriend he is accused of exploiting.'

Will We Ever Notice Boys' Struggles?

Matt · 21 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I am obsessed with gender issues, and thus am constantly surfing the Internet, using various Google combinations to see what goodies I can find. My main problem is that after years of being a strong supporter of feminism, I discovered, nearly 25 years ago, that it was boys much more than girls who were struggling in school, not to mention in other even more significant ways – for example, committing suicide at around four times the rate that girls were. Having three sons (the youngest of whom was 12 when I made this discovery), I realized that my children were being ignored. Having later been blessed by the birth of four grandsons, my concern about boys as a group has only increased.

But the concern of our country hasn't.

For example, in spite of data overwhelmingly showing the problems that boys struggle with, there is no White House Council on Boys and Men to parallel the one established for women and girls very soon after President Obama took office — this in spite of years of hard work by a bipartisan network of experts who have pushed for one (for full disclosure, I am part of this group). And the situation I wrote about here more than six years ago, in piece titled "Boys and Young Men: A New Cause for Liberals," has barely changed. If you do see an article or book in support of boys or men, it is usually by someone known to be a conservative or it is on a conservative website. Consider the first well-known book on this issue, The War Against Boys, in 2000, by Christina Hoff Sommers (now with the American Enterprise Institute). Or a 2015 article in the National Review, titled "Why Do More Women Than Men Go to College?" My fellow liberals continue to focus almost exclusively on women and girls.'

SAVE: Alma Mater Matters -- Contact Your School Today

Matt · 21 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

A new trend called "victim-centered investigations" is troubling us at SAVE.

The gist of the new investigatory approach is to start from believing the complainant and to continue the investigation from the complainant's perspective--thus ending the police's role as neutral fact-finder: http://www.saveservices.org/sexual-assault/investigations/

Colleges are starting to look into using this technique, and we need stop it.

We are asking you to contact the university or college where you attended school, and ask them to continue implementing fair investigative procedures.

Tell them to preserve the presumption of innocence on their campus.

Thank you!

Very best,

Gina R. Lauterio, Esq.
Policy Project Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE)

Feminist Mother Publicly Shames Her Teenage Boys—With The Help Of The Media

Mastodon · 21 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On September 14, The Washington Post published what can only be described as a public display of child abuse. In an article entitled “My teen boys are blind to rape culture,” feminist writer Jody Allard chastises her sons for questioning the propaganda she feeds them.

“They’ve been listening to me talk about consent, misogyny and rape culture since they were tweens. They listened to me then, but they are 16 and 18 now, and they roll their eyes and argue when talk to them about sexism and misogyny.”

That Allard’s boys won’t take up their mother’s fight makes them “part of the problem,” writes Allard. They’ve “dipped their toes into toxic masculinity,” she adds. Toxic masculinity is a favorite feminist term. It means the more masculine a man is, the more vile he is. Nice, huh?'

SAVE: How ‘Victim-Centered’ Investigations Undermine the Presumption of Innocence and Victimize the Innocent

Matt · 22 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'A national teleconference will be held on the topic, “How ‘Victim-Centered’ Investigations Undermine the Presumption of Innocence and Victimize the Innocent.” The event will address how “victim-centered” investigations remove the presumption of innocence and greatly increase the risk of a wrongful finding of guilt. The teleconference will be held on October 4 at 1:00 to 4:00 pm, Eastern time.

The Department of Education has repeatedly issued directives calling for equitable campus investigations. In 2001 the Office for Civil Rights issued its Revised Sexual Harassment Guidance mandating that universities undertake “adequate, reliable, and impartial investigation of complaints.” Likewise, the OCR’s 2011 Dear Colleague Letter on campus violence explained, “a school’s investigation and hearing processes cannot be equitable unless they are impartial.”

In contrast, victim-centered investigations are based on the assumptions of “start by believing” and “always believe the victim.”'

Rolling Stone Headed to Trial Over Campus Rape Story

Mastodon · 22 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A jury will decide whether Rolling Stone defamed the University of Virginia's dean in its since-retracted article about a gang rape at a campus fraternity, after a federal judge on Thursday denied summary judgment on key issues in the lawsuit.

Nicole Eramo sued Rolling Stone in May 2015, claiming the story cast her as the chief villain and painted the school as one that is indifferent to rape on its campus.

During the time of the alleged incident, Eramo was in charge of performing intake of sexual assault complaints, providing support to victims and participating in panels and conferences related to the issue. She claims the November 2014 article destroyed her reputation as a supporter of sexual assault victims and triggered hundreds of threatening messages from the public.'

UK: Conservative party conference, ICC (Birmingham) – anti-MGM protest, 3/4 October

Matt · 23 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At last year's Conservative party conference in Manchester, we created quite a stir with our Male Genital Mutilation ('MGM') protests, handing out leaflets, and engaging with a considerable number of conference attendees. A video (3:14) is here.

We plan to make an even bigger impact at the next conference, in Birmingham, in less than two weeks' time. Some of our placards and leaflets will feature the image at the start of this post, of a distressed (and restrained) baby boy, about to suffer the excruciating (and illegal) assault of genital mutilation.'

UK: Mike Buchanan to plead ‘Not Guilty’ to the charge of obstructing the highway – Hammersmith Magistrates’ Court, 12 October

Matt · 23 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I spent most of today in Westminster Magistrates’ Court. Last Saturday I received a summons to appear in the court at 09:30 today – giving me just two working days to obtain legal advice – in connection with my alleged obstruction of the highway during our anti-MGM protest in Parliament Square on 1 June. A video (14:52) is here, my arrest by a (Kiwi) policeman takes place soon after 13:30.

I registered my presence with the relevant person, and it was immediately clear something was amiss. At 11:30 – two hours after my arrival – I was informed the police / CPS hadn’t submitted any papers. Responding with lightning speed, at 15:30 the papers were made available, and I duly explained I’d be pleading ‘Not Guilty’ at the trial, and went through some tedious related form-filling.

Starting at 16:00 I spent some 10 minutes with the magistrate, the CPS prosecutor, and a legal expert. It surely goes without saying that no apology was forthcoming from the CPS for wasting most of my day.'

SAVE: How ‘Victim-Centered’ Investigations Undermine the Presumption of Innocence and Victimize the Innocent: Upcoming Teleconference

Matt · 23 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'A national teleconference will be held on the topic, “How ‘Victim-Centered’ Investigations Undermine the Presumption of Innocence and Victimize the Innocent.” The event will address how “victim-centered” investigations remove the presumption of innocence and greatly increase the risk of a wrongful finding of guilt. The teleconference will be held on October 4 at 1:00 to 4:00 pm, Eastern time.

The Department of Education has repeatedly issued directives calling for equitable campus investigations. In 2001 the Office for Civil Rights issued its Revised Sexual Harassment Guidance mandating that universities undertake “adequate, reliable, and impartial investigation of complaints.” Likewise, the OCR’s 2011 Dear Colleague Letter on campus violence explained, “a school’s investigation and hearing processes cannot be equitable unless they are impartial.”

In contrast, victim-centered investigations are based on the assumptions of “start by believing” and “always believe the victim.”'

Canada: Woman ordered to pay father $135,000 for false sexual abuse allegation

Matt · 24 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman from the Fraser Valley is being ordered to pay her father $135,000 in damages after she made a post online alleging he had sexually abused her daughter.

The B.C. Supreme Court judgement was issued yesterday and comes 19 months after the defendant, Tammi Sylvia Janet Zall, made the allegations on GoFundMe against her father, John Macdonald Zall.

"Just under two weeks before Christmas my daughter came to me and told me some inappropriate things that were apparently happening to her at my dad's. Upon hearing that I removed her from the house with the company of the RCMP," she wrote in her post, adding her daughter required additional counselling.'

Five Signs Your Story Is Sexist – Against Men

Matt · 24 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Good article if you can filter out the "patriarchy" claptrap. Why people who can identify these stereotyping problems against men continue to cling to the belief, nontheless, that our society is "patriarchal", I can't say, except to observe that nymphotropism knows no limits. Excerpt:

'You'd think patriarchy would be good for men, but it isn't. Patriarchy enforces strict standards of masculinity that are impossible to meet. But because masculine traits are glorified, it's easy to lose sight of how toxic they are to men. As storytellers, we may think we've created strong central characters when really we've brought destructive stereotypes to life. Here are five signs you're stuffing your male characters in the "man box."
...
In season 3 of The 100, John Murphy finds himself held captive by a powerful Grounder leader. After putting a chain and collar around his neck, she strips off all of her clothes and states her desire to sleep with him. He declines her aggressive advances, saying that he's staying faithful to another woman. Then this exchange happens.

Her: Would [your girlfriend] kill you if you ever lied to her, did anything to break her trust, or upset her in even the slightest way?

(She uses the chain to pull him closer.)

Him: (smiling) Oh, the things I do to survive.

This is clearly rape, yet it's treated in the show like a kinky sex scene. John smiles, and somehow that makes being coerced into sex okay. It's impossible to imagine this scene would have been written that way if the characters' genders were reversed.'

Lads! Britain needs you to do your duty and get flirting

Matt · 25 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. More from the Damned If You Do Dept. After decades of being told to "leave the girls alone," now under threat of arrest, a clueless woman says she can't understand why the guys aren't chatting her up. No winning for losing. Excerpt:

'And I don't want to stereotype them all, so let me be more specific: I refer to those my own age, who have forced me to bookmark a cattery website. In the romantic arena, trying to meet a man sometimes makes me feel like David Attenborough, stepping into the jungle to locate a Jesus Lizard (a real thing).

Finding Mr Dreamy is difficult because the main strategies a girl can use are wrought with danger. Number one is proactivity: in 2016, it seems fair that a woman can approach a chap she fancies. This sometimes works, but generally does seem to make the man's insides shrivel up when asked "having a good night?" or something equally menacing.
...
British men need some encouragement, maybe even government intervention, to be more forward. In 2015, Denmark released an advert called "Do It For Mom", to encourage its nationals to have more babies. Maybe we need an equivalent: "Do It For The Girls". For if British men don't make the moves, we almost certainly will be joining the Danes in the birth rate stakes.'

UK: Ex-husband of Labour's domestic abuse Minister 'still has nightmares about her' after attack during divorce

Matt · 25 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Labour's Shadow Minister for domestic violence was an 'abusive bully' who terrified her former husband and cost him £200,000 in their divorce settlement, a friend claimed last night.

Sarah Champion admitted yesterday that she was arrested and cautioned by police after attacking explorer Graham Hoyland during their 'very acrimonious' divorce in 2007.

But the Rotherham MP – who faced calls to resign last night – told a national newspaper the violent bust-up came after she had been 'provoked for years' by Mr Hoyland.

Miss Champion, 47, who had ended up in a police cell, claimed the altercation was over who would keep a valuable painting. She said: 'I'm not proud of what happened and I accept I was in the wrong, but I have nothing to hide."

Colleges' crackdown on sex assaults provokes questions of fairness

Mastodon · 25 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was nearly midnight on a crisp Friday in December, the week before finals, when a young man walked a young woman home to her dorm in St. Paul.

The pair, both students at the University of St. Thomas, had started flirting at a campus party where the alcohol was flowing freely. After several drinks, they made their way to a dorm lounge, where a security camera kept watch. Then they retreated to the most private of spaces — a small bathroom.

What happened there would haunt them both, and draw St. Thomas into a legal battle and a divisive national debate over the role of colleges in policing accusations of sexual violence.

This spring, the young man, identified only as “John Doe,” sued the university, saying he was suspended for sexual assault without a fair hearing or even a lawyer to present his side of the story. It’s one of a flood of lawsuits across the country asserting that colleges are trampling the rights of the accused in a rush to crack down on campus rape.

St. Thomas denies any wrongdoing. But increasingly, colleges and universities are finding themselves in the awkward position of trying to ferret out what really happened between students behind closed doors, often in alcohol-fueled encounters. And the stakes for getting it wrong have never been higher.'

Mother turns sex-assault case against son into national campaign

Mastodon · 25 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Parents are often terrified when they call Sherry Warner Seefeld.

They've just learned that a son — or daughter — has been accused of sexual assault at college. And they're deathly afraid of what may happen next.

Seefeld, a Minnesota native and the mother of four sons, knows what they're going through. Six years ago, she was one of those parents. Now she's on a mission to help other families in that same "horrific" spot, as the co-founder and president of Families Advocating for Campus Equality (FACE), a support group for the accused.

"Everybody wants to stop sexual assault, you know, everybody does," says Seefeld, 60, a retired high school teacher in Fargo, N.D. But on college campuses today, she says, the innocent have as much to fear as the guilty.

In the midst of a national outcry over campus rape, she says, students are being labeled sex offenders based on little more than an accusation.'

Amid tougher repercussions for campus sex assault, more men sue accusers

Mastodon · 25 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As Yee Xiong prepared to leave the sentencing hearing for a man she said sexually assaulted her at an off-campus apartment when they were students, she felt ready to finally put the case behind her after four years. Then, she was handed a $4 million defamation lawsuit.

The lawsuit from Lang Her, who pleaded no contest to felony assault, stated that Xiong and three of her siblings colluded to alienate him from the close-knit ethnic Hmong community and called him a rapist on Facebook.

In an interview with the Associated Press, Xiong said it was like a “slap to the face,” what she saw as a way for Her to “continue to harass my family and me.”

While such lawsuits have long been a legal strategy, experts say, some of the accused may feel they must seek to clear their names in court at a time of increased focus on campus sex assaults and more serious consequences at schools.

“Being labeled ‘rapist’ now has more power than it did 10 years ago,” said Emily Austin of the California Coalition Against Sexual Assault. “The impact could be, if these become more common, that survivors are going to double-think reporting, afraid anything they’re saying could be grounds for a lawsuit against them personally.”

Eric Rosenberg, an Ohio lawyer who has represented clients suing their accusers and universities, said many of the accused suffer damaged reputations and lost educational and career prospects.

“There is no bigger stain on a person in this culture than being labeled as a sexual assailant, and that’s what they’re labeled as,” said Rosenberg, who has filed or acted as a consultant for more than half a dozen such lawsuits in the past five years.'

"Let’s Stop Helping Terrible Men Go Viral"

Mastodon · 26 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you’re on Twitter, it seems you always find out the same way. You see a new hashtag trending, and a few friends tweet things along with the hashtag that seem vaguely funny but also confusing out of context. Another friend tweets: “I won’t do it. I won’t read the article.” And then you know: Another Terrible Man has gone viral.

These articles by Terrible Men rarely seem to come from any publication with name recognition. They often show up on sites we’ve never heard of. And I’m always left scratching my head: How were they ever found in the first place?

However it happened, we all direct our rage at these men who don’t acknowledge boundaries, men who don’t understand headphones, men who tell women not to wear their engagement rings to interviews, men who would never, ever date feminists, and then we dissect their terrible opinions line by line. Their pieces provide endless content for tweets, rebuttals, and memes. In fact, these writers have already meme’d themselves. We crack our knuckles and begin crafting our own takes; it’s almost an art, at this point, and provides a convenient and understandable outlet for our frustrations. We get a whole flood of reaction articles, wherein awful opinions by Terrible Men from the darkest corners of the internet are posted with additional commentary in order to share and prolong the outrage.'

'Effeminism' and the War on Boys

Mastodon · 26 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Today I'm coining a new term: effeminists. These are misguided (if not malicious) women who have an agenda to emasculate men and erase masculinity from our culture. They have progressed beyond "feminism" and into "effemininazation" of what historically and culturally had always been sacrosanct: little boys being nurtured and encouraged to develop and grow into well-rounded and healthy men. It was always the job of mothers to makes sure their baby boys left the nest in 18 years and made their way in the world as men they could be proud of.

Not anymore. Some moms seem preoccupied with scoring political points by turning their little boys into little girls and cutting them off from masculinization.

In our politically correct and increasingly totalitarian society, where anyone who chides such developments or steps outside the ideological left's approved talking points, we as individuals are never allowed to voice any opposition to the transforming of little boys into little girls, but it is worth risking the ire of the social justice warrior hordes to push back against the effeminists.'

Men’s rights group met with criticism at city hall

Mastodon · 26 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Sept. 17, the Canadian Association for Equality (CAFE) hosted their first national conference at the Ottawa city hall, where they were met with opposition from the Revolutionary Student Movement (RSM).

CAFE is a non-profit group that seeks to promote awareness of issues affecting the status, health, and general well-being of men and boys. CAFE believes that these issues have been overlooked due to a bigger emphasis being put on female equality and women’s rights, leading to an indifference towards the unique problems that affect men.

Some of the issues discussed at the conference were high suicide rates among men, domestic violence, work-related deaths, and what they believed to be discriminatory treatment against fathers in the family court system.

“For the past two years we have been providing support to men and their families through legal aid, peer support, counselling, and through the first ever abuse program for male domestic violence victims,” said CAFE CEO Justin Trottier.'

Acceptance for Boys Dropping Out

Matt · 26 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a new study at The Choice Lab, Ranveig Falch, Alexander W. Cappelen and Bertil Tungodden show that men are held accountable for their poor achievements to a greater extent than women are.
...
We do not support men when they do poorly. However, we do support women.

If one has a positive attitude about helping capable women through gender quotas, one will perhaps also be more positive towards supporting women who do poorly than men who do poorly, Ranveig Falch, a doctoral student at NHH contends.

“It is women and supporters of gender quotas who are responsible for the skewed distribution,” says Ranveig Falch. She presented the study at the Economic Science Association European Conference, which was recently hosted by The Choice Lab.'

Human Rights Watch Report Will Worsen Racial Disparities in Criminal Justice System, CPI Charges

Matt · 27 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Gina Lauterio
Telephone: 301-801-0608
Email: glauterio@prosecutorintegrity.org

Human Rights Watch Report Will Worsen Racial Disparities in Criminal Justice System, CPI Charges

WASHINGTON / September 27, 2016 – A leading criminal justice reform organization is today calling on Human Rights Watch, an international rights group, to remove its report, "Improving Police Response to Sexual Assault." The non-profit Center for Prosecutor Integrity charges the report serves to bias the investigation, undermine the presumption of innocence, and harm the civil rights of persons accused of crimes, especially African-American men.

The Human Rights Watch report contains a series of recommendations that would severely distort the investigative process, CPI alleges. For example, the report urges investigators to assume that "all sexual assault cases are valid unless established otherwise by investigative findings."

The HRW document uses the word "victim" 350 times. Neutral words such as "complainant," "accuser," or "alleged" do not appear even once in the 40-page report. This reveals an unmistakable, even intentional bias because it presumes a crime has occurred before the investigation begins. These concerns were delineated in September 9, 2016 letter to Human Rights Watch director Kenneth Roth: http://www.prosecutorintegrity.org/wp-content/uploads/2016/09/Human-Rights-Watch-Ltr.pdf

Joseph Roberts is an example of a person who was harmed by a "victim-centered" approach. Roberts, formerly a student at Savannah State College in Georgia, was expelled on an allegation of sexual harassment. Investigators did not interview Roberts before his expulsion was announced in a campus-wide email blast. http://www.ifeminists.net/e107_plugins/content/content.php?content.1360

Roberts will be one of the featured speakers at an upcoming national Forum titled, "How 'Victim-Centered' Investigations Undermine the Presumption of Innocence and Victimize the Innocent." The teleconference will be held on October 4, 1:00 to 4:00pm, Eastern time.

The teleconference is offered at no cost, and is being held in observance of Wrongful Conviction Day. Dial-in and other information is available here: http://www.prosecutorintegrity.org/wrongful-conviction-day/forum/

Victim-centered investigations are based on the notion of "always believe the victim." In his acclaimed book, Jerrold Packard described justice in the Jim Crow era: "Blacks were found guilty upon mere accusation, with no substantive evidence offered, no adequate counsel granted, and no real attempt on the part of the courts to provide evenhanded justice." (Jerrold Packard, American Nightmare: The History of Jim Crow. 2003. Page 133)

Colleges mistreat men accused of sex assault

Mastodon · 28 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Now that another college year has begun, students beware. It seems nearly every week the U.S. Education Department announces another university is under investigation for at least one incident of sexual assault on campus. An alarming feature of present-day life on campuses of colleges and universities in this country is that students — almost always men — find themselves in the midst of a veritable minefield where due process protection is almost always conveniently overlooked.

And even when DOE isn't making demands of colleges, school administrators often ignore due process, as is claimed in a lawsuit I filed against Columbia University on behalf of a male student facing disciplinary action. The U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals recently allowed the accused student's lawsuit against Columbia to move forward, stating that there was sufficient plausibility of a Title IX violation in the university's mishandling of the investigation.

Certainly, victims of sexual assault have too often been ignored or worse, so the Obama administration was right to insist on more serious attention being paid to the issue. But it has overreached with disastrous results for those accused, who have little legal protection on campus.'

Clinton cares about the rights of only some young men

Mastodon · 28 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During the debate, while speaking about race relations and criminal justice reform, Democratic presidential nominee Hillary Clinton discussed ensuring rights to young men. She wouldn't say "due process," but she was referring to those rights.

...

It's shocking that Clinton would discuss the "rights of young men," considering the language she uses to talk about campus sexual assault. When Clinton says we must "listen and believe" to accusers, she's saying we shouldn't consider whether the accusations might be false (well, except when the accusations are against her husband).

That's a dangerous policy that has lead to dozens of lawsuits against universities who have denied due process rights to male students accused of sexual assault.'

Men are increasingly invading feminism – excluding them isn't 'man hating'

Mastodon · 29 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In recent years, the cry of 'we need more men in feminism'. and 'we must include men' has been creeping in. To counter the accusations of man-hating that feminists like me face all the time, many of the more liberal, 'fun' feminists' bend over backwards to tell men that feminism will fail without their intervention. But the whole point of the women's liberation movement is that is challenges and seeks to overthrow male supremacy, and to liberate women from the shackles of patriarchy. it goes without saying that most men will take exception to this. We wish to remove the privilege they are granted at birth. Feminism is a threat to men, and so it should be.
...
Domestic violence, rape, child sexual abuse and exploitation, are all men's issues. Men, in the main, commit these crimes against women and girls. It is down to them to choose not to commit such crimes, and to call other men to task when they do so. I hear you cry, 'women do it too', and 'men suffer domestic violence'. Despite the irrefutable fact that the vast majority of these crimes are carried out by men, there are those that will fight tooth and nail to argue the opposite.

Feminism does indeed need men. We need them to support our efforts, and not take over. We need men to educate other men in how to be decent human beings, and not for them to don a Batman outfit and save us from danger. Feminism needs men to support us in our efforts, not to colonise it for their own benefit.'

Doe v. Brown decision released

Matt · 29 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Decision here. Excerpt:

'Although a very close call, for the reasons explained below, the Court finds that certain procedures Brown employed in conducting Doe's hearing fell outside of a student's reasonable expectations based on the Code of Student Conduct at Brown University 2014-15 (the "2014-15 Code"), and that these procedural errors likely affected the panel's decision in Doe's case.2 Accordingly, Doe is entitled a new hearing that remedies these infirmities. Pursuant to Rule 52(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the Court makes the following findings of fact and conclusions of law. To the extent that any finding of fact reflects a legal conclusion, it should be to that extent deemed a conclusion of law, and vice versa.'

Feminists caught vandalizing Sommers lecture signs

Matt · 29 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Thursday morning, members of the Young Americans for Freedom (YAF) chapter at California State University-Los Angeles (CSULA) caught a pair of disgruntled feminists on camera tearing down flyers advertising the group's lecture with Christina Hoff Sommers scheduled for Oct. 4.

...

After being confronted by a CSULA YAF student, the vandal repeatedly insisted the fliers were "offensive."

One of the feminists claimed removing the fliers was her First Amendment right.

"This is my freedom of speech," she said.

"So it's freedom of speech to infringe on our freedom of speech?" the YAF student responded.

He didn't get an answer.'

Women Accused Of Having Sex With 15-Year-Old At Pizza Party

Matt · 29 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two women have been accused of having sex with a 15-year-old boy at a pizza party in Derry Township.

Tonia M. Simms, 37, and Melissa E. Weaver, 26, are charged with statutory sexual assault, involuntary deviate sexual intercourse, corruption of minors and indecent assault.

The 15-year-old boy involved told police he met Simms and Weaver through an acquaintance on July 8 and was invited over for pizza at Simms' apartment in the Holiday Acres complex.'

‘Victim-Centered’ Investigations Imperil the Presumption of Innocence, CPI Alleges

Matt · 29 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Gina Lauterio
Telephone: 301-801-0608
Email: glauterio@prosecutorintegrity.org

‘Victim-Centered’ Investigations Imperil the Presumption of Innocence, CPI Alleges

WASHINGTON / September 29, 2016 – A leading criminal justice reform organization is today calling on criminal justice officials and law school professors to speak out in opposition to so-called “victim-centered” investigations, and in support of the legal precept of the presumption of innocence. The Center for Prosecutor Integrity believes “victim-centered” investigative methods, which are based on the notion of “start by believing” and “always believe the victim,” are becoming more commonplace.

The Center for Prosecutor Integrity presents five examples of documents that promote the “victim-centered” approach:

1. The Human Rights Watch report, “Improving Police Response to Sexual Assault” urges investigators to assume that “all sexual assault cases are valid unless established otherwise by investigative findings.” The HRW document uses the conclusory word “victim” 350 times, while factually neutral words such as “complainant,” “accuser,” or “alleged” do not appear once. https://www.hrw.org/sites/default/files/reports/improvingSAInvest_0.pdf

2. A document from the Department of Justice and Police Executive Research Forum instructs investigators to hand “control of the process back to the victim” and allow the complainant “to request certain investigative steps not be conducted.” Such actions are likely to bias the investigation and render its conclusions inaccurate. http://ric-zai-inc.com/ric.php?page=detail&id=COPS-W0796

3. A recent report urges investigators to “Start by Believing” the accuser, but acknowledges that the “Start by Believing” approach may “compromise the ability of police and prosecutors to remain objective, potentially opening them up to attacks by defense counsel and/or losing cases at trials.” https://www.evawintl.org/Library/DocumentLibraryHandler.ashx?id=789

4. A training program by the consulting firm Margolis Healy & Associates instructs college investigators to “Always approach a case believing that ‘something’ occurred” (slide 26) and to “Focus on offender behavior – not victim behavior” (slide 28). http://www.slideshare.net/margolishealy/mha-title-ix-investigations-2012-legal-issues-in-higher-education

5. The University of Texas' Blueprint for Campus Police is unique in its repeated recommendations that investigators should not only presume the truthfulness of the accuser, but also seek to anticipate and counter defense strategies (Table 7.4). https://utexas.app.box.com/blueprintforcampuspolice

The Center for Prosecutor Integrity will be hosting a national teleconference titled, “How ‘Victim-Centered’ Investigations Undermine the Presumption of Innocence and Victimize the Innocent.” The teleconference will be held in conjunction with Wrongful Conviction Day on October 4, 1:00 to 4:00pm, Eastern time. The teleconference is free of charge. Dial-in and other information is available here: http://www.prosecutorintegrity.org/wrongful-conviction-day/forum/

The Growing Case for Shared Parenting After Divorce

Matt · 29 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For decades, there was a widely held belief they should have one home with the primary caretaker, often the mother. But that status quo is changing. Absent some mitigating factor, such as an abusive mom or a mentally ill dad, many experts now agree that kids are happier and healthier when they can “maintain and build on meaningful relationships with both of their parents,” says Michael Lamb, who teaches psychology at the University of Cambridge. More often than not, that requires living under the same roof as each parent for significant periods of time–which is possible only under joint, not sole, custody.

These claims are supported by reams of data, but the reasoning behind them is mostly commonsense: when it comes to parenting, two minds are better than one. “One might be better for a particular age or a particular kid or a certain type of problem,” explains Linda Nielsen, a psychology professor at Wake Forest University, who has studied custody arrangements. Dads, for example, are more likely to engage kids in physical play, which helps kids learn how to handle their bodies (no hitting!) and their emotions on and off the field. Moms, meanwhile, are more likely to reason with and socialize kids, which helps them understand how their actions affect others. And even if parents don’t occupy traditional gender roles–or are in a same-sex relationship–depriving a kid of one of them can have devastating long-term effects. A 2007 study found that kids who lived with each of their parents at least 35% of the time were less depressed and had fewer health problems and stress-related illnesses than those who lived with just one parent.'

Navy Removes All Historic Job Titles After Study On Gender Neutrality

Mastodon · 30 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Navy announced Thursday that it's removing all historic job titles and replacing them with occupational specialty codes, as opposed to direct titles, effectively removing the word "man" from job titles in a roundabout way.

According to Navy Times, what this decision means in practice is that "Fire Controlman 1st Class Joe Sailor…would be Petty Officer 1st Class Joe Sailor."

"We're going to immediately do away with rating titles and address each other by just our rank as the other services do," Chief of Naval Personnel Vice Adm. Robert Burke told Navy Times. "We recognize that's going to be a large cultural change, it's not going to happen overnight, but the direction is to start exercising that now."'

"The truth about the military gender integration debate"

Mastodon · 30 September 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Most reasonable people support equal opportunity for women. Often, they are women themselves, or are men with mothers, sisters, daughters, or wives. But once in a while, the push for equality has unforeseen and unpleasant consequences. In the case of opening restricted military occupations, American women are now vulnerable to involuntary military service that will without question subject them to unequal danger and suffering.'

UK: BBC sacked me for being a white man

Matt · 2 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The BBC was at the centre of a damaging diversity row last night after one of its top radio stars was sacked for being 'white and male'.

Bafta award-winning comedian Jon Holmes was axed from The Now Show – the hit Radio 4 programme he has appeared on for 18 years – when bosses told him 'we're recasting it with more women and diversity'.

Last night, leading figures from the world of entertainment and across the political spectrum reacted with fury to the BBC instigating a policy in which it was now choosing performers based on their gender or skin colour, instead of their talent.

Mr Holmes revealed that since his sacking he has heard from other stars who have been rejected by broadcasting bosses because of 'positive discrimination'. He told how one woman presenter was given a job only later to be told 'we can't have you, because you are too white and middle class'.'

US university offers course for men to 'deconstruct toxic masculinities'

Mastodon · 2 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A university in the United States has begun offering classes in “constructive male allyship,” providing a space where male students are able to “question and deconstruct toxic masculinities.”

Duke University, based in the city of Durham, North Carolina, held its first Learning Community session last week. The women’s centre has organised a nine-week series of seminars, as part of the Duke Men’s Project.

And, with sexual harassment and sexism remaining hot topics on American university campuses, the university has created the seminar series under the banner of the Men’s Project.

“Our purpose is twofold: to foster constructive male allyship, and to question and deconstruct toxic masculinities,” the Men’s Project says on its website.

“We also understand how masculinity in its normative form alienates most – if not all – men, and recognise the part normative masculinity plays in alienating men and reproducing violence.'

UK: Students Walk Out of ‘Patronising’ Sexual Consent Class

Mastodon · 3 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The Women’s Officer at the University of York has labelled students “dangerously naive” after they protested the institution first ever sexual consent classes, walking out en mass as they felt “patronised”.

The Union officers argued the “gender neutral” lessons were necessary to protect first-year students’ “wellbeing, physically and mentally”, following the nationwide moral panic concerning a supposed campus “rape crisis”.

However, around a quarter of the 5,000 youngsters summoned defiantly decided to leave the event, arguing that they did not need the lecture or wish to be framed as “potential rapists” by the feminist Women’s Officer.

“We’re Women’s Officers at the University of York. Earlier this year, we were elected after a cross-campus ballot in which we pledged to run consent talks. On Tuesday 27 September, we did just that”, wrote furious Student Union official Lucy Robinson, responding to the protest.'

Police Forum Report Undermines Impartial Investigations, Promotes Wrongful Convictions, CPI Claims

Matt · 4 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE
Contact: Chris Perry
Telephone: 301-801-0608
Email: cperry@prosecutorintegrity.org

And join us at today's Wrongful Conviction Day Forum, 1-4pm ET:
http://www.prosecutorintegrity.org/wrongful-conviction-day/forum/

Police Forum Report Undermines Impartial Investigations, Promotes Wrongful Convictions, CPI Claims

WASHINGTON / October 4, 2016 – In observance of Wrongful Conviction Day, a leading criminal justice reform group is calling on the Police Executive Research Forum to remove a recent report that promotes "victim-centered" investigations. The PERF report, titled "Identifying and Preventing Gender Bias in Law Enforcement Response to Sexual Assault and Domestic Violence," describes the "victim-centered" approach as handing "control of the process back to the victim" and asserts the complainant has a "right" to "request certain investigative steps not be conducted." (1)

The non-profit Center for Prosecutor Integrity believes that allowing the claimant to dictate the investigative process irresponsibly precludes investigators from following ethical requirements to conduct investigations that are impartial, objective, and fair. A detailed critique of the Police Executive Research Forum report is available (2).

"Victim-centered" proponents advise investigators to assume that "all sexual assault cases are valid unless established otherwise" and to "start by believing" the complainants' allegations. Such investigations are likely to be biased in favor of the complainant, resulting in wrongful convictions (3).

The New York Times recently highlighted the case of Wayne Martin who served almost nine years in prison for a double homicide. The District Attorney later learned that exculpatory evidence had been withheld from the defense -- the key sentences in the case summaries that pointed to a different suspect had been intentionally deleted by a law enforcement officer. The Brooklyn DA moved to dismiss all charges against Martin early last month (4).

Wrongful Conviction Day is being observed in dozens of locations across the United States and internationally. The Center for Prosecutor Integrity is today hosting a national teleconference titled, "How 'Victim-Centered' Investigations Undermine the Presumption of Innocence and Victimize the Innocent." The teleconference will be held 1:00 to 4:00pm, Eastern time. The teleconference is free of charge. Dial-in and other information is available (5).

Links:

1. http://ric-zai-inc.com/Publications/cops-w0796-pub.pdf
2. http://www.prosecutorintegrity.org/wp-content/uploads/2016/09/COPS-and-PERF-Ltr.pdf
3. http://www.prosecutorintegrity.org/sa/investigations/
4. http://www.nytimes.com/2016/09/09/nyregion/a-false-conviction-is-overturned-but-the-system-that-allowed-it-remains.html?emc=edit_th_20160909&nl=todaysheadlines&nlid=58186502&_r=1
5. http://www.prosecutorintegrity.org/wrongful-conviction-day/forum/

The Center for Prosecutor Integrity works to strengthen prosecutorial ethics, restore the presumption of innocence, and bring an end to wrongful convictions.

Head To Head: Is there a feminist issue in college enrollment? Obviously.

Mastodon · 5 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The gender enrollment gap is not a problem that only faces Transylvania University, but instead, it is a nationwide problem. Roughly 58% of the students enrolled in college in the United States are female. Is this an issue that should concern feminists? A feminist issue is an issue that concerns feminists ideologically; what then is the ideology of feminism?

The most agreed upon definition of feminism is “the belief that men and women should have equal rights and opportunities.” Due to the universal and egalitarian nature of feminism’s goals, feminists have often involved themselves in other movements, such as the anti-slavery movement over one hundred years ago and the LGBT rights movement of today. For the very same reasons that slavery and LGBT rights became feminist issues, the gender gap in college enrollment should be a feminist issue as well. This is especially true considering this inequality is gendered, and feminists tend to focus on problems concerning the opportunities afforded to men and women.

Given that the seemingly appropriate response from the feminist perspective is to be concerned with the inequality posed by the disproportionate number of women that go to college and receive a higher level education, it is worth noting that this is not a topic feminists discuss often if at all. This points to a key problem within the modern third-wave feminist movement. It shows very little concern for true equality and instead picks and chooses what groups they will concern themselves with and the groups that they won’t.'

Request for comments: Voluntary Paternity Acknowledgment

Matt · 5 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Request for comments here. Excerpt:

'Dear Colleague:

Section 466(a)(5) of the Social Security Act (the Act) requires a state to have procedures for a voluntary paternity acknowledgment process. In addition, section 452(a)(7) of the Act requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services to specify the minimum requirements of an affidavit to be used for the voluntary acknowledgment of paternity.

In compliance with the requirements of section 3506(c)(2)(A) of the Paperwork Reduction Act of 1995, the Administration for Children and Families is soliciting public comment on the Voluntary Acknowledgment of Paternity and Required Data Elements for Paternity Establishment Affidavits. A notice for public comment was published in the Federal Register, on page 66285, Volume 81, Number 187, on September 27, 2016.

Please send your comments and suggestions to Debbie Ward. When commenting, please be sure to reference OMB control number 0970–0171. Consideration will be given to comments received by November 25, 2016.'

Lawsuit Claims Yahoo’s Marissa Meyer Led ‘Purge’ of Male Employees

Mastodon · 7 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A federal lawsuit filed this week by Scott Ard, editor-in-chief of the Silicon Valley Business Journal, claims that Yahoo CEO Marissa Mayer led an illegal “purge” of male employees from the company. Two other female executives are also named as defendants in the suit.

“Mayer encouraged and fostered the use of (an employee performance-rating system) to accommodate management’s subjective biases and personal opinions, to the detriment of Yahoo’s male employees,” the lawsuit claims, according to the East Bay Times. Ard is a former Yahoo employee.
...
Yahoo has not yet responded to the lawsuit, except to defend its policies and performance reviews as fair, the East Bay Times reports.'

Frat cams give NC State intimate view of bros

Matt · 7 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'At the start of the 2016 academic year, North Carolina State University installed surveillance cameras inside select fraternity and sorority houses.

The cameras were ostensibly there to monitor entrances for security purposes, but Campus Reform has learned through multiple sources that they were set up in a manner conducive to monitoring student behavior in their personal living spaces.

...

While both cameras are pointed towards nearby doorways, it was discovered after installation that the cameras were zoomed out to a degree that allowed for the observation of students in their living space, which university officials acknowledged in an email exchange obtained by Campus Reform.

...

When pressed on whether or not cameras are installed in the common areas of all fraternities and sororities, Hartman simply reiterated the school's prior defense, saying "security cameras are installed at entrances and exits, pointed at entrances and exits," and cited the school's policy on closed-circuit cameras.

After nearly a month of delay, and just one day after Campus Reform first reached out to the school for comment on the matter, the source reported that university officials finally adjusted the zoom of the cameras on Wednesday.'

‘Long overdue’: Colleges needed lower standard of evidence in sexual assault cases, an advocate says

Mastodon · 8 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Vice President Biden and U.S. Department of Education officials announced in 2011 landmark Title IX guidance dealing with how colleges and universities handle sexual assault, I had the incredible honor of being a guest along with my colleague Laura Dunn as we both provided input on the Dear Colleague letter. The vice president’s call to action got the attention of higher education focused on this issue like it had never been before, something that was long overdue and resonates to this day.

...

The Education Department, for example, had applied a “preponderance of the evidence,” commonly referred to as “50 percent plus one,” standard in Title IX cases dating back at least as early as 1991.

Schools, however, had only been notified on a case-by-case basis about this expectation.

Upholding this standard is proper, because unlike criminal proceedings, colleges and universities are not determining whether someone can be imprisoned, but whether they violated school policies.

For most institutions this was not a radical departure from their normal procedures.

Russlynn Ali, head of the Education Department’s Office for Civil Rights who signed the 2011 letter, estimated at the time that “about 80 percent of colleges were already using the preponderance standard.”'

It’s time we talked about male-only universities

Mastodon · 8 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Male numbers at universities across the English-speaking world are in decline. An independent commission in the U.K. found in 2013 that young women were a third more likely than their male peers to apply to university. The latest Statistics Canada figures reveal that women aged 25-34 earned 59.1% of university degrees. Moreover, a 2013 report by two economics researchers at MIT found that the decline in male higher education in the United States has been paralleled by a marked decline in male wages, employment, and occupational stature.

For some, this news may not seem disturbing. Men have dominated higher education and elite occupations for a long time—so the thinking goes—and it is women’s time to flourish now.

But as the authors of the MIT study point out, the ramifications of male under-achievement are disastrous not only for men themselves, especially for poor and racial minority men, but for their potential mates and their children, leading to the decline of stable, two-parent households for raising a family.

The reasons for decreased male participation in post-secondary education are undoubtedly complex, but an anti-male atmosphere may play a role. Whether intentionally or not, recent campus initiatives on sexual consent—which place even the most well-intentioned men in the role of potential rapists—and on encouraging men to own their purported “privilege” have led some men to perceive that their needs and feelings are less worthy of concern than those of female students.

It’s not pleasant to sit through classes, especially in the humanities and social sciences, where the male sex is singled out for its role in violence and inequality. And as more schools seek to implement what they call “victim-centered” policies for complaints of sexual misconduct, young men worry with good reason that an unfounded complaint can smash their educational dreams.

Perhaps it’s time to consider male-only post-secondary institutions.'

How the feminist rule on campus hurts men

Mastodon · 8 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The call for women's equality has been achieved at American universities. In fact, the feminist movement has been so successful that it is young male students, and not young women, who lose out.

The modern college is a man's world no longer.

Now, women make up the majority of the student body on campus. They also lead in graduation rates, too. According to data from the federal government, women gained majority status in college enrollment in 1979. Since then, the gap between men and women has gotten wider, and women now are the majority of the student body at roughly 57 percent.

At some colleges, women outnumber men in even higher rates. For example, at Framingham State, a public university in Massachusetts, women make up 63 percent of the student body, the Boston Globe recently reported.

And in June, Dartmouth College announced that 54 percent of its undergraduate engineering degrees were awarded to women, "making it the first national research university to award more bachelor's degrees in engineering to women than men."'

Feminism is fuelling depression in men

Mastodon · 8 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling a couple paragraphs. Excerpt:

'While it is important that men reveal their emotions and be honest to their feelings, it's also true that courage and resilience are important.

The unfortunate reality, since the publication of Germaine Greer's The Female Eunuch in 1970, is that the feminist movement has undermined such manly virtues and attributes.

In addition to labelling men as misogynist and sexist, feminists argue that male characteristics such as being physically active and showing courage are negative and counter-productive.

The American feminist Camille Paglia, and much to the disgust of the sisterhood, in a 2013 interview condemns the feminist movement for emasculating boys and men and for undermining the status of the US military service.

For Paglia, the problem starts early when she argues: "Primary school education is a crock, basically. It's oppressive to anyone with physical energy, especially guys" and "They're making a toxic environment for boys. Primary education does everything in its power to turn boys into neuters."

Examples in Australia include mothers not letting their sons play war games with swords and pistols, schools banning superhero costumes like Spiderman and Batman and not keeping the score in junior soccer and football. Not surprisingly, advocates of what is known as the Men's Movement, such as the American author of Iron John, Robert Bly, argue that undermining traditional characteristics associated with manliness has led to generations of men unable to be resilient and to cope with adversity.'

Racial profiling study reveals gender disparity is greater than racial

Matt · 9 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Chief among these mechanisms, according to a new report from Yale University's Child Study Center, are racial preconceptions that shape the way the teachers view black boys in particular. These preconceptions were found to exist in black as well as white preschool teachers.

In the study, the Yale researchers showed teachers a dozen brief video clips of four well-behaved preschool-aged children, two boys, one black and one white, and two girls, one black and one white, working and playing together in a classroom. Though the children were behaving calmly, the teachers were asked to look for signs of behavior that might become problematic.

A computer program that tracked the eyes of the teachers as they watched the video showed that both black and white teachers watched the black children, especially the boys, longer when looking for signs of trouble. And when the researchers asked teachers which child had commanded the most attention, 42 percent of them chose the black boy, 34 percent the white boy, 13 percent the white girl and 10 percent the black girl.

In other words, the black boy in this study received far more scrutiny from teachers than his behavior warranted. This brings to mind the "driving while black" phenomenon, in which police officers stop African-American motorists without cause, or stop-and-frisk practices that predominantly single out blacks.

The Yale study is consistent with previous research suggesting that teachers tend to see "acting out" by black children as more threatening than similar behavior in white children, and thus deserving of disproportionately harsher punishments.'

India: Tortured by daughter-in-law, five members of a family end life in a ‘suicide pact’

Matt · 9 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a shocking incident, five persons of a family of a retired Army doctor were found dead at a relative’s flat in Kokar area on Sunday afternoon. The condition of the Army doctor, who also stabbed himself several times, was highly critical and he was admitted to Medica. The police said that chances of his survival were less.

The police said that, prima facie, it seemed to be a case of suicide pact between the family members, who were feeling tortured and threatened by the daughter-in-law of the former Army doctor. His son and his wife were having troubled marriage and there was dispute over custody of their seven-year-old girl, one of the five victims.

The retired Army doctor, identified as Dr Sukanto Sarkar, in his late 60s, was admitted to Medica Hospital.

The police said that family was staying in a flat on 10th floor of Rivisera Apartment in Kokar area, which is owned by their relative, Dr S Chaudhary, a popular doctor in the city. They had come from Noida to Ranchi a couple of days ago.

The incident came to light when Dr Chaudhary called up the family members around noon for a meeting, but nobody picked up the call. He reached the flat in the afternoon and opened the door using a duplicate key. Finding five bodies and Dr Sukanto still breathing, he informed the police.'

The Red Pill now playing

Matt · 9 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Film site here. From About The Film:

'When feminist filmmaker Cassie Jaye sets out to document the mysterious and polarizing world of the Men's Rights Movement, she begins to question her own beliefs. Jaye had only heard about the Men's Rights Movement as being a misogynist hate-group aiming to turn back the clock on women's rights, but when she spends a year filming the leaders and followers within the movement, she learns the various ways men are disadvantaged and discriminated against. The Red Pill challenges the audience to pull back the veil, question societal norms, and expose themselves to an alternate perspective on gender equality, power and privilege.'

UK: Arlene Foster 'ignoring male victims of domestic violence' says men's rights group

Mastodon · 10 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A men's rights group has accused Arlene Foster of unintentionally snubbing men affected by domestic violence.

The First Minister last week endorsed the White Ribbon campaign, signing a personal pledge "never to commit, condone, or remain silent about men's violence against women in all its forms".

But Gary Quinn, of Men's Aid Northern Ireland, criticised the pledge for "promoting the myth that men are always the perpetrators and never the victims of domestic violence".

He said it ignored the fact that women could also be the aggressors and that there had been a huge increase in the number of reported incidents of violence against men in the home.

"I don't believe Arlene set out to cause offence, but by signing that pledge she is ignoring male victims of domestic violence," he said.

"The White Ribbon campaign is based on the outdated stereotype that men are always the violent ones in the home and women are always the ones on the receiving end of abuse.

"All the statistics and research in recent years challenge that perception. Domestic violence against men has increased 40% in the past decade."'

Milo: Even If You're Acquitted Of Rape, Feminists Can Still Ruin Your Life

Mastodon · 10 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In the speech Milo focused on how feminists can continue to ruin your life, even if you've been acquitted of a false rape claim and how this has driven many men to celibacy.

"Affirmative consent, for those who don't know, is the idea that if you don't consent at every stage of a sexual encounter, it's rape. That means asking for every kiss and asking for every boob squeeze. It's almost as if feminists want everyone to remain celibate." said Milo to a packed auditorium. "Just because they can't get any sex, they want the rest of us to have deserts down there too."

"Men won't even get a fair trial. If they're accused of sexual assault on a college campus, they'll be hauled before a group of college administrators for a "tribunal," in which they will be denied legal representation and face a lower standard of evidence than in a criminal court. Even if they somehow beat this rigged system, like Emma Sulkowicz's victim did, they can still have their lives ruined in the media."

"When men are being told that they'll be labelled "harassers" for making an awkward advance, and "rapists" for bad drunken sex or not getting consent for the fifth make-out session, there's only one logical course of action: retreat."

"The rise of feminism has fatally coincided with the rise of video games, internet porn, and, sometime in the near future, sex robots. With all these options available, and the growing perils of real-world relationships, men are simply walking away."

"Men who retreat aren't necessarily the biggest victims here. They can function without real-world relationships much better than women. The real catastrophe is what it's doing to society as a whole. Birth rates are collapsing. If you took away immigrant communities, who tend to have higher birth rates, many western countries would have birth rates approximating those of Japan."'

India: Anyone can be tried for domestic violence

Mastodon · 10 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a landmark verdict, the Supreme Court has widened the scope of the Domestic Violence Act by ordering deletion of the words “adult male” from it, paving the way for prosecution of women and even non-adults for subjecting a woman relative to violence and harassment.

The apex court has ordered striking down of the two words from Section 2(q) of the Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act, 2005, which deals with respondents who can be sued and prosecuted for harassing a married woman in her matrimonial home.

Referring to earlier verdicts, the apex court said: “the microscopic difference between male and female, adult and non-adult... is neither real or substantial, nor does it have any rational relation to the object of the legislation.” Section 2(q) of the Act reads: “‘respondent’ means any adult male person who is, or has been, in a domestic relationship with the aggrieved person and against whom the aggrieved person has sought any relief under the DV Act.”'

IMF’s Largarde suggests sexism is at play in Wall Street’s criticism of Yellen

Mastodon · 10 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some of the criticism from Wall Street aimed at Federal Reserve Chairwoman Janet Yellen is due to sexism, International Monetary Fund managing director Christine Lagarde suggested Sunday.

“[Yellen] receives a lot more criticism, in my view, than many of her predecessors in many ways, given the great job she is doing,” Lagarde said during in a conversation with author Michael Lewis before a large audience at IMF headquarters.

Many on Wall Street have said the Yellen Fed lacks a clear road map for interest-rate policy and has suffered from poor communication.

Lewis had started the conversation by saying that whenever he sees a woman given a position of prominence in finance, he has a sense that “she was there for one reason — to take the fall if things go wrong.”'

The Red Pill: the movie about men that feminists didn't want you to see

Matt · 10 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A feminist filmmaker has re-ignited the gender war by daring to make a controversial movie about the Men Right's Movement.

As part of her research for The Red Pill, American film maker Cassie Jaye spent hundreds of hours with the internet's most notorious Men's Rights Activists (MRAs) over a two-and-a-half year period. For balance, she also interviewed some of their fiercest critics – such as Katherine Spillar, Executive Director of the Feminist Majority Foundation.

Jaye began the process as a feminist, but she ended up not only sympathising with the MRAs, but fundamentally questioning the "aggressive" ethos of modern feminism.

For her efforts, she says she has been smeared, threatened with "career suicide" and even saw her funding dry up – to the point where the movie was unlikely to see the light of day.'

"I'm Against Sexual Assault...and Third-Wave Feminism"

Mastodon · 11 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I despise feminists for the same reason that I despise people who engage in sexual discrimination and sexual assault. In my experience, discrimination is exactly what feminism is meant to foster. The problem is that the sexual harasser and the feminist are always in cahoots, whether we know it or not. Anybody who just wants to be treated fairly based on individual merit does not have a chance with either one. It's like trying to choose between Hillary Clinton or Donald Trump. It's a no-win situation.

In the latest shouting match between the two establishment contenders, I am shocked by how many women are now either excusing the sexual assaults committed by Bill Clinton and condoned by Hillary, or applauding Donald Trump's bragging about sexually assaulting women. The feminists think that Hillary is entitled to claw her way up to the top by hook or by crook, because, after all, everything is stacked up against women in our society, so that makes any crime committed for the sake of advancement just fine. And the anti-feminists are saying that anyone who condemns Trump must be a hypocrite, because, after all, men are just like that.

No, men are not all just like that. Lots of men aren't. Unless you grew up among trash, then you must know many men who are not like Donald Trump and Bill Clinton. And no, whoring your way to the top is not the only career path open to women. Not unless all the feminists win!'

SoHo Pharmacy Charging 'Man Tax' To Raise Awareness Of Gender Price Discrimination

Mastodon · 11 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SoHo pharmacy Thompson Chemists has instituted a 7 percent "man tax" for male customers in an effort to raise awareness of gender pricing discrimination.

On Monday, two signs went up in the store's front windows announcing the new policy. A pink sign in one window reads, "New store policy: All Female Customers Shop Tax Free," while a blue sign in the other window, reads "All Male Customers Are Subject To A 7% Man Tax."

Jolie Alony, who has owned the pharmacy for 22 years and lives in SoHo, said she wants men who shop at her store to understand the extra costs that women bear when they shop.

"We want to bring awareness on how it feels to be a woman, so the men actually get to feel it," she said.

Last year, the New York City Department of Consumer Affairs released a study on gender pricing that found that products marketed to women in New York cost on average 7 percent more than equivalent products marketed to men. That effective mark-up covers everything from pink scooters and razors to shampoos and deodorants to canes and adult diapers.
...
The policy is being run as a promotion—Alony said she'll see how the day goes and decide if she wants to keep it in place.

Online bulk retailer Boxed announced a similar promotion last week.

Thus far, Alony's policy hasn't raised hackles. "So far, the women are very, very happy," she said. "Men haven't complained yet, they've just laughed."

Update: After this story was published, NYC Department of Consumer Affairs wrote back to Gothamist to explain that there's no legal issue with the Thompson Chemist promotion, as there isn't a prohibition on price discrimination for goods. It is illegal, however, to discriminate in the pricing of services.'

SAVE: Expert Panel Calls on Lawmakers to Bring an End to Campus ‘Kangaroo Court’ Investigations

Matt · 11 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Gina Lauterio
Telephone: 301-801-0608
Email: glauterio@saveservices.org

Expert Panel Calls on Lawmakers to Bring an End to Campus ‘Kangaroo Court’ Investigations

WASHINGTON / October 11, 2016 – Warning “victim-centered” investigations are “inconsistent with basic notions of fairness and justice,” an Expert Panel has issued a report calling on lawmakers to end such approaches in campus sexual assault cases (1). The Expert Panel was convened in observance of Wrongful Conviction Day on October 4 and addressed the growing problem of “victim-centered” investigations at colleges and in the criminal justice system.

“Victim-centered” methods abandon traditional notions of impartiality and objectivity, and instead call on investigators to presume that “all sexual assault cases are valid unless established otherwise by investigative findings,” as one report enjoins (2). Such recommendations represent a negation of the long-held tenet of the presumption of innocence, and are likely to lead to wrongful determinations of guilt.

One of the expert panelists was Michael Conzachi, a former homicide detective and police academy instructor. Conzachi sharply criticized the University of Texas-Austin document Blueprint for Campus Police, saying its recommendations to remove inconsistent statements and exculpatory information from investigational reports represent a potential violation of laws that bar evidence concealment and tampering.

E. Everett Bartlett, president of the Center for Prosecutor Integrity, reported that many lawsuits by accused students against universities now include allegations of investigational impropriety. He identified nine categories of investigational biases claimed in campus lawsuits such as Overt bias/Predetermination of guilt and Inadequate investigator qualifications.

Joseph Roberts, a former student at Savannah State University who was falsely accused of sexual harassment, revealed the absence of basic due process protections such as proper notice and a hearing. Roberts advised other students facing such claims to “keep your head and stay in control of your emotions.”

SAVE has developed a model bill titled the Campus Equality, Fairness, and Transparency Act (CEFTA). The bill mandates the use of “justice-centered” investigations that would require campus investigators to “discharge their duties with objectivity and impartiality” (3).

Citations:

1. http://www.prosecutorintegrity.org/wrongful-conviction-day/victim-centered-investigations-undermine-the-presumption-of-innocence-and-victimize-the-innocent-report-of-an-expert-panel/

2. https://www.hrw.org/sites/default/files/reports/improvingSAInvest_0.pdf

3. http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/CEFTA-7.14.2016.pdf

SAVE is working for effective and fair solutions to campus sexual assault: www.saveservices.org

Australia: Position Vacant - "Women's Safety Contact Officer"

Minuteman · 12 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Applicants must be prepared to travel intrastate

We have both a full time position - commencement ASAP and a 0.7 FTE, replacing staff on Parental Leave - commencement early January 2017. All positions with WSSSA are dependent on ongoing funding.

Key Functions of the Position include:

Promote and implement quality service responses

Plan, develop and implement client focused interventions using a feminist framework

Identify and develop formal partnerships that enable referral pathways to increase the safety of women and children'

Here’s what men actually talk about in a locker room

Matt · 12 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Funny. Excerpt:

'As a general rule, I do not do a lot of on-the-ground reporting from inside men’s locker rooms. Call me old-fashioned, but when it comes to news, I prefer more traditional locales: press conferences, courtrooms, artisanal doughnut shops.

However, given Republican presidential nominee Donald Trump’s recent insistence that the lewd comments he was recorded making in 2005 were nothing more than “locker-room talk,” I decided it might be worthwhile to check in on the current state of the American locker room.

Having last spent time in one more than a decade ago — back when conversation among my high school cross-country teammates centered primarily on the best way to eradicate Cheetos from one’s braces — it seemed a lot had changed.

And so, around 11 a.m. on Monday, I headed over to the Boston Sports Clubs gym on Boylston Street, finagled a free one-day pass, and made my way through the maze of workout equipment to the men’s locker room, ready to see what I could discern.'

SoHo pharmacy's man tax: Time for action

Matt · 13 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Recent story on MANN here. Does this annoy you? It does me. The store owner says that men find it "funny" and if it works as a promotion, maybe she'll keep the "man tax" as a permanent thing.

Their phone number is here. To save you the trouble, it's 212-598-9790, fax: 212-674-6980. Especially if you live in the area, call them. But even if you don't, they need to hear from you. What to say? Tell them that the market determines prices, not gender. Further, that while discriminatory pricing may for some weird reason be legal, it is very bad P/R. Remind her that men's money is as green as women's and despite the fact that her male customers do not seem openly unhappy with this "promotion", it is hard to see how anyone can stay happy with paying above-market prices for things for too long. Also tell her that sexism is indeed vile, which is why sexists like her are. You may also want to suggest she reduce the prices on "feminine products" to match prices on similar "men's products" rather than try to gouge men and alienate them. Wonder why she didn't think of doing that?

"Vile". Use the word "vile".

Remember: In the heat of the moment, passion can move people to say things they otherwise may not. Don't let things slip out that are unwarranted. Anything that can be interpreted as threatening, even if not meant so, must be avoided. And, avoid swear words. It distracts from the message you are delivering.

Men (and women) in NYC: Maybe there is a picketing opportunity here?

College expels student for sex misconduct without bothering to interview him, draws sharp government rebuke

Matt · 13 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lawsuits are accumulating across the nation brought by students who say they were unfairly disciplined for sexual misconduct by colleges and universities. And increasing numbers of judges are finding their complaints sufficiently valid to move forward.

But few, if any, of the alleged violations of a student's rights compare in egregiousness to what happened at Wesley College in Delaware, as described in findings by the U.S. Department of Education's Office of Civil Rights (OCR) made public Wednesday.

What makes the case so unusual, compared to others that have come before the courts and are public, is the sheer number of important procedural protections denied to the accused. In most cases, courts have found one or two things wrong, for example, inadequate access to witnesses or a failure of a school to adhere to the letter of its own written procedures.

In this case, the OCR found virtually everything wrong and, therefore, a violation of Title IX's protections against discrimination.'

Australia: Marxist agenda in anti-violence campaign

Mastodon · 14 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'AFTER losing her son to domestic violence in 2014 it's understandable why Rosie Batty continues to campaign so vigorously on the issue. As someone who, as a child, saw my mother violently beaten by my alcoholic father I understand the urgency of the problem.

At the same time, it is vital not to let the campaign against domestic violence be captured by the sisterhood to force a radical feminist agenda where men and boys are portrayed as misogynist and always guilty.

And this is just what is happening with the Resilience, Rights & Respectful Relationships program being implemented south of the border.

Hot on the heels of the Marxist-inspired Safe Schools Coalition program, which also originated in Victoria and has gone national, primary children as young as seven and eight are being taught domestic violence always involves women as the victim and that the primary cause is because men are guilty of "hegemonic masculinity". This is described as the dominant form of masculinity requiring "boys and men to be heterosexual, tough, athletic and emotionless, and encourages the control and dominance of men over women".'

Op-Ed: If we really want women in combat, men must do more

Mastodon · 14 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We can’t merely open the door to women, we need to help them walk through it with recruitment campaigns to encourage the most qualified to apply, specific messages that explain why they are needed on the battlefield, and special programs to help them prepare physically. Female mentors are important, but experience and common sense indicate that male soldiers and senior leaders have to engage women, face-to-face, if the military is going to be fully integrated.

...

My experience training women confirms this, and what I tell them about the infantry is that average women shouldn't apply but the above average should: those who are strong both physically and mentally and those who want to lead infantry soldiers in combat. Because it’s crucial to maintain the same physical standards for men and women in close combat assignments, the military should put into place long-term physical training programs to help women develop the abilities to meet those requirements.'

British PM targets finance industry for failing to promote women

Mastodon · 14 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Prime Minister Theresa May criticized Britain's finance industry for failing to promote and retain women on Tuesday as the government revealed that some of the biggest players have committed to having at least 30 percent in senior roles by 2021.

The Treasury said that for every pound earned by a man in the male-dominated financial services industry - the highest paid sector in Britain - a woman earns just over 60 pence, while women account for only 23 percent of boards and 14 percent of executive committees.

"The UK is a world-leader in financial services, but the sector could do even better if it made the most of many talented women who work in finance. Too few women get to the top and many don't progress as quickly as they should or they leave the sector completely," May said in a statement.'

Inside The Wing, a women-only coworking space and social club in NYC

Mastodon · 14 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new women's-only workspace and social club in New York City, created to offer like-minded members a place to network and connect, seeks to offer an alternative to standard coworking spaces and their sometimes "bro-centric" culture, and tap into the "magic that's created when women gather together."

The Wing —the brainchild of 29-year-old Audrey Gelman, a PR specialist who was the inspiration for the Marnie character on Girls, and her friend and partner Lauren Kassen, previously a director at ClassPass—came out of a desire to create a women's-only space that offers the flexibility of coworking spaces and the community of social clubs without being too stuffy. The name itself is a play off the wing of a home, a reference to a space of one's own.'

Mother fights boys-only corporal punishment policy

Mastodon · 14 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Middle Tennessee mother is fighting a corporal punishment policy at her son's high school.

She said it's not the hitting she's concerned with, but who is receiving the punishment.

Misty Kilburn said her son came home from Lawrence County High School with a letter stating the teacher in his construction trade class was going to reinstate corporal punishment due to misbehavior.

Kilburn said she was about to sign it until she learned it only applied to one gender.

The note reads in part: "Due to interruptions and discipline problems in trade classes, we are going to reinstate corporal punishment."

Kilburn didn't have a problem with the note, but then her son told her something else.

"The girls were sent into another classroom and the boys were the ones who had to write this out, and the girls were not to be included on the corporal punishment," she said.'

Houston’s Coach Pecks Away at Football’s Macho Culture, a Kiss at a Time

Matt · 15 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Nice to see it. Excerpt:

'When the University of Houston’s football players arrive for a game, they know what to expect as a prelude to the coming hours of brutality as they file into the stadium: a kiss on the cheek from their head coach, Tom Herman.

It is an unusual ritual in a sport that embodies America’s most rigid ideals of manhood.

“A kiss on the cheek is when he shows his love for us,” Houston safety Garrett Davis said, adding, “No one here is thinking, ‘Oh, I shouldn’t let him kiss me.’”

Physical expressions of affection certainly exist in big-time sports. Nothing says “Good job!” in baseball like a firm pat on the behind from a coach, and in international soccer it is not uncommon to see teammates peck each other on the cheek after a big play.'

Why do women's groups treat Bill Clinton and Donald Trump differently?

Matt · 15 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Groups that advocate for women's rights are lashing out at Donald Trump for allegations of groping women and bragging about sexual assaults.

But some of those same groups did not think former President Bill Clinton's allegations of sexual misconduct nearly two decades ago were disqualifying in the same way.

At least three women – Juanita Broaddrick, Paula Jones and Kathleen Willey – accused Clinton of unwanted sexual advances. Another five, including White House intern Monica Lewinsky, said they had had consensual affairs with him. Clinton was impeached on charges of lying about the Lewinsky affair before a grand jury and of obstruction of justice, but was acquitted and served his full presidential term.

Women's groups largely stayed supportive.

"Feminists have, all along, muffled, disguised, excused and denied the worst aspects of the president's behavior with women," said a lengthy Vanity Fair article from 1998.

"Feminism sort of died in that period," New York Times columnist Maureen Dowd told Yahoo recently. "Because the feminists had to come along with Bill Clinton's retrogressive behavior with women in order to protect the progressive policies for women that Bill Clinton had as president."'

UK: Domestic violence against men soars to record levels as number of cases treble in past decade

Matt · 17 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'DOMESTIC violence against men has trebled in the past decade, shocking official figures reveal.

A record 5,640 wives and girlfriends were convicted of assaulting their male partners last year — up from 1,850 in 2007.

The issue has become a taboo because victims are often too ashamed to talk about their experiences.

But an MP is now calling for action after evidence emerged the problem is growing at an alarming rate.

Stats released by the Attorney General show 177 women are convicted of domestic abuse EVERY WEEK.'

Family Reunion releases video on false accusations

Matt · 18 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'False Accusations are allegations that are made against a person that are unproven and untrue, usually causing irreparable damage to the reputation, character, or integrity to person falsely accused.

False accusations are an effective way of reversing the prevailing direction of custody cases and are often made to gain the "upper hand" during custody battles, to put the opposition at an immediate disadvantage, to tie up the other party with additional litigation, and to hurt the other party out of hate, fear, or spite.'

Students told term ‘be a man’ represents toxic masculinity

Matt · 18 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Gettysburg College freshman James Goodman began his first moments of higher education by being lectured by campus leaders about “toxic masculinity,” he tells The College Fix in an interview.

Students who “identify as male” were shown a docudrama film about masculinity. The film, titled “The Mask You Live In,” was part of the lessons warning students that the notion of masculinity comes with harmful side effects, he said.

According to the trailer of the film, it teaches that the “three most destructive words” a boy can hear growing up is “be a man.” Experts quoted therein also suggest that violent outbursts are prompted by masculinity pressures because “respect is linked to violence.”'

Malecare releases app to help track prostate cancer

Matt · 18 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Malecare recently launched Cancergraph - an iPhone application that tracks cancer symptoms. It's free and ready for you to download, today.

Designed by prostate cancer survivors and caregivers, Cancergraph focuses on the unique experiences faced by those who are diagnosed with one or more cancers.

Cancergraph serves as a memory tool, giving patients and their doctors reliable reports about day-to-day cancer-related experiences. With an easy-to-navigate interface, patients can choose from a list of over 200 symptoms and side effects, and have the option to include cancer types, medications and concerns. Cancergraph then distills the data into a report that patients can view on their phone or email to doctors.

Patients can also take disease- and symptom-related photos to be added to a secure photo storage area on their mobile device. Additionally, Cancergraph has a journal feature so patients can document their experiences in more detail.

"For anyone who is going through prostate cancer this is an invaluable tool," said Darryl Mitteldorf, Director of Malecare, "The ability to accurately keep track of symptoms and side effects changes cancer care for both the patient and doctor."

Cancergraph is free to download and is currently available on iOS. Android will be available in November.

About Malecare

Founded in 1997, Malecare is America's leading men's cancer survivor support and advocacy national nonprofit organization. We are a dynamic, nimble and cutting-edge company, striving to be first in understanding and implementing new technology in service to our cancer survivor population. Malecare is a horizontally organized nonprofit, managed by oncologists, psychologists and social workers. We are known for our men's health programs for underserved populations. All of our services are provided without cost to the patient and their family.

Please feel encouraged to contact me with any questions.

Sincerely,

Darryl Mitteldorf, LCSW
Malecare Cancer Support
darryl@malecare.org

"Martyrs of Marriage" released

Matt · 18 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Trailer here. Description:

'Martyrs of Marriage is a documentary film that documents the injustice that has been perpetrated on people because of misuse of section 498A of Indian Penal Code commonly known as the Anti Dowry law in India. A feature length, first person account of those who have suffered at the hands of abuse of this provision, the film delves deep into the problem, the reasons behind it and the repercussions of the same.

For long, people have believed that it is only women who suffer or give up their lives because of harassment by her husband and in-laws. But there's an other side of the story as well. The film intends to wake up the society to the fact that “men” can be victims too in marital relationships and that the laws that have been made for protection of women have been and are being misused to harass men, women and their families too.'

Victoria, a misandrist state of child indoctrination

Mastodon · 18 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'Daniel Andrews' government is either so asinine that it is being led by the nose by far-Left social engineers or it is consciously pursuing an agenda most Australians would recognise as harmful and sinister. Either way, it's time the Victorian community and the state's opposition declared: "enough!" Imagine the uproar if preschoolers were indoctrinated with propaganda that set them on guard against their mothers, grandmothers, female teachers or other women. That is precisely what the state's preschoolers will be subjected to in a new program — though it should surprise nobody that the "villains" they will be warned against are men.

As Rebecca Urban reports today, the Resilience, Rights and Respectful Relationships program, to be rolled out next year, will associate masculinity with dominance, control and violence against women. It is misnamed. But children will need to be resilient to withstand it, and it shows little respect for families' rights or children's relationships with their fathers and other men.

In primary school, the misandry introduced in preschool will be followed up with ideology as doctrinaire as Orwell's "four legs good, two legs bad" Animal Farm mantra.The messagewill boil down to "men bad, women victims". Given Australia's poor results in literacy and numeracy, authorities are wrong to divert time and resources from the basics. By Year 7, when children's attention should be shifting to more advanced maths, science, English and humanities subjects, the program will introduce the concept of "male privilege", emphasising men as the perpetrators of violent acts. Such brainwashing could harm some children, either fostering stereotypes or provoking a backlash. Others, including many from stable, loving families, will probably ignore it.'

Why some men are opting out of life and escaping into digital media

Mastodon · 18 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'University of Notre Dame anthropologist Michael Jindra first noticed in the late 1990s that more and more, his students, particularly the young men, seemed less invested in their studies.

“It’s hard to describe. It just seemed like their heads were someplace else,” Jindra said. “More than in the past.”

Jindra talked to some of his struggling students and found various reasons for their academic performance, but one thing stood out: all-night video game marathons.

A theory took root that Jindra's been studying ever since — a cultural shift is under way, a kind of escapism where a growing number of young people, especially men, are becoming more invested in recreational pursuits to “escape” their traditional social roles, like being fathers or career-driven providers.'

The new trend: parents who hope for girls, not boys

Mastodon · 18 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The toxic poison of feminism has caused a lot of damage to society, devaluing and degrading men. Is it any surprise, then, that brainwashed women and even some brainwashed men are hoping to only give birth to daughters and not sons?

...

Congratulations to feminists! Years of browbeating men as hostile, brute oppressors of women have paid off. Not only have you convinced some women that men are the enemy, but you have even got some men hating themselves, to the point that they do not wish to see more of their kind populate the earth.'

QP Tuesday: The middle class and 'mansplaining'

Mastodon · 18 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Shannon Stubbs, the Conservative party's deputy critic for natural resources, accused Canada's finance minister of "mansplaining" today.

Stubbs, who represents the riding of Lakeland in Alberta, rose this afternoon to call into question the Liberal government's treatment of Albertans during an economically difficult time.

In response to her question, Morneau pointed to federal government's tax cuts for middle-class Canadians.

"We have lowered taxes on Albertans this year, so we've made sure they have more money in their pocket this year than they did last year," he said.

Stubbs was not impressed.

"Well, thanks for the mansplain," she said, before continuing onto her second question.

Yikes.'

Accused student sues university for not letting him cross-examine accuser

Matt · 18 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Cincinnati suspended a male student accused of sexual assault “in order to look good for the Department of Education” and campus advocates who believe there’s a “rape culture” at the school, according to a lawsuit by the student.

The Cincinnati Enquirer reports that it couldn’t find a Title IX complaint filed against the student from its review of university records, suggesting that a campus official initiated disciplinary proceedings, not the accuser.

The lawsuit says “John Doe” has been suspended until January 2018 in response to allegations from September 2015, following a Tinder date with another student. That female reported him to campus police about a month later, but Doe claims the sex was consensual:'

Rolling Stone Deletes Article About the Derrick Rose Rape Case

Mastodon · 18 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last Wednesday, Rolling Stone's website published an article titled: "Why Derrick Rose Rape Trial May Wreck NBA Commissioner Adam Silver's Legacy." Friday, Rolling Stone deleted the article from its site. (An archived version can be found here.)

Politico reports that Rolling Stone was contacted by the NBA, which had a number of objections to the story. Rolling Stone subsequently issued two corrections.

Deadspin reports that Rolling Stone sports editor Jason Diamond was going back-and-forth on the corrections with the NBA before unnamed superiors on the masthead got involved, and apparently made the decision to take the piece down Friday morning.'

Columbia threatens to punish students who take notes during sexual-misconduct proceedings

Matt · 19 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Columbia University is making it harder for students to hold it accountable for how the Ivy League school runs “gender-based misconduct” proceedings.

It has previously banned students from bringing a recording device into the proceedings, and now Columbia has stopped accusers and accused students from even “transcribing” what happens during proceedings.

The restrictions are being criticized by both a victim-rights group at Columbia and a lawyer for accused students.

Andrew Miltenberg, who has sued several colleges including Columbia on behalf of students found responsible for sexual assault, told The College Fix that college officials “want the ultimate discretion without having to answer for it.”'

Rolling Stone Writer Testifies in Defamation Trial Over 'A Rape on Campus' Story

Mastodon · 20 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sabrina Rubin Erdely, the reporter behind the now-retracted Rolling Stone article "A Rape on Campus," defended her integrity as a journalist on the stand today as she and the magazine face a nearly $8 million defamation lawsuit.

The defamation suit was filed by Nicole Eramo, the former associate dean of students at the University of Virginia, who is suing Erdely and Rolling Stone over her portrayal in the article.

In the article, a University of Virginia student identified only as "Jackie" described a brutal gang rape at a fraternity party in 2012. "Jackie" was described as facing callous indifference from college authorities, including Eramo.

Rolling Stone ultimately retracted the 2014 story after other media outlets pointed out troubling issues with the story. A police investigation into Jackie's allegations of being raped by seven men failed to uncover any sort of evidence of the alleged assault ever taking place.

Eramo's attorneys are trying to paint Erdely as a reporter with a motive -- one who has a history of framing stories of sexual assault to fit a specific "vision," and they say that she was seeking to intentionally highlight institutions that demonstrate indifference toward victims of sexual assault.'

Jury Clears Knicks' Derrick Rose of Liability in Rape Suit

Matt · 20 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Knicks guard Derrick Rose was cleared on Wednesday in a lawsuit accusing him and two friends of raping a woman who had had a relationship with him. The verdict, from an eight-member jury in a federal civil trial, absolved Rose of wrongdoing, although the damage to his reputation remains to be seen.

The trial began Oct. 4, Rose's 28th birthday, and the jury started deliberations Wednesday morning. Less than four hours later, it had a verdict.

Just before the decision was read, the woman, 30, who was seeking $21.5 million, bowed her head and hid her face in her hands. She displayed no emotion, although her lawyer, Waukeen McCoy, later described her as devastated.

Referring to some of the arguments Rose and his legal team had made about the woman, McCoy called it "a shame" that a celebrity could claim in court that an accuser was simply seeking money.'

USA Today: I'm the victim says Female Teacher who had sex with 17-YO student

fathers4fairness · 20 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Of course she is - women are never responsible for their actions. Excerpt:

'A substitute teacher accused of having sex with a 17-year-old high school student in Cedar Rapids claims the student seduced her.

Mary Beth Haglin was charged in July with sexual exploitation by a teacher. On Monday, she appeared on Dr. Phil, accusing the student of seducing her and sharing sexy photos with his friends.

“Many people see him as the victim and me as the perpetrator. From a psychological standpoint and from every other standpoint, I feel like I am the victim,” Haglin said on the Dr. Phil show, citing the student's intelligence and “elevated vocabulary” as part of the seduction.'

Rolling Stone reporter admits errors in retracted gang rape story

Mastodon · 21 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The author of a now-retracted Rolling Stone article about a brutal gang rape at the University of Virginia on Thursday acknowledged Thursday that she made mistakes while reporting the story of the woman identified only as "Jackie."

Sabrina Rubin Erdely took the stand in the defamation trial against the magazine over its 2014 story about a woman identified only as "Jackie." University administrator Nicole Eramo is seeking $7.8 million from the magazine for its portrayal of her in the story.

Libby Locke, an attorney for Eramo, quizzed Erdely about her reporting errors, including her decision not contact the Jackie's friends who went to her aid the night of the alleged assault and failure to raise concerns about changes in Jackie's account over time. Erdley said in her earlier deposition that she was aware that Jackie had initially told her roommate she was attacked by five men, but later said it was seven men.'

Feminists: The Misandrists of Marxism

Mastodon · 21 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"To call a man an animal is to flatter him; he's a machine, a walking dildo." ~Valerie Solanas,, American radical feminist, best known for writing the SCUM Manifesto

Radical feminism is an oppressive and rather brutal ideology that has vast cultural implications. With a goal of control, radical feminism focuses on destroying traditional relationships using shaming, violence and misrepresentation of facts. And there is nothing feminine about radical feminism or feminists. Celebrating your birthday naked while on a toilet in a public restroom? How lady like.

Women have the power to forge unbreakable family and community ties—or they can use their power for destructive purposes. Women have the power to be encouraging, nurturing, positive and productive; or harmful, lethal and cancerous.

Today's liberal women are destructive, antagonistic women, devoted to their own misery in undermining traditional institutions crucial for a healthy, dynamic society: marriage, motherhood, and fatherhood.'

Shannon Stubbs To Bill Morneau: 'Thanks For The Mansplain'

Mastodon · 21 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Conservative MP Shannon Stubbs wasn't pleased by Finance Minister Bill Morneau's suggestion she doesn't talk to her constituents, so she called him out for his tone.

"Thanks for the mansplain," Stubbs said in question period in the House of Commons on Tuesday.

A "mansplanation" is a portmanteau of "man" and "explanation." It's loosely defined as a condescending or patronizing remark a man says to the woman under the presumption she is ignorant about a topic.'

HPV cancer rising in men, Cancer Society wants boys vaccinated

Mastodon · 21 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Canadian Cancer Society is warning the Newfoundland and Labrador government that it's no longer enough to vaccinate only girls for the human papillomavirus (HPV).

New statistics suggest boys need the vaccine too.

A report released by the Canadian Cancer Society says the number of Canadian men with HPV-related mouth and throat cancer is rising, and could surpass the rate of cervical cancer caused by HPV.

The study says between 1992 and 2012, the number of men with HPV mouth and throat cancer rose by 56 per cent.'

Columbia University Student Forced To Attend ‘Re-Education’ For Saying He’s Handsome

Mastodon · 21 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Columbia University student Benjamin Sweetwood recently wrote a piece for The Tab discussing the “re-education” he received from the gender-based misconduct office for daring to refer to himself as “handsome” in class.

Sweetwood was attending a Chinese language class in the fall of 2014. Naturally part of this class was using the vocabulary and grammar learned to create sentences. During one class Sweetwood referred to himself as handsome using the Chinese phrase, “Wǒ hěn shuài”. Sweetwood thought nothing of this, finished the class and went home. The next day however Sweetwood was asked to stay after class by his professor, in Sweetwood’s own words, this is how the exchange went.

“She mentioned I had called myself handsome and alluded to my joking personality in general. She also told me she was not offended at all. She said she thought it was funny, but that she didn’t want to get in trouble herself. She told me if I want to make those jokes, I should come to her office hours to do so. I assumed it’s because my sick mind needed to be contained in a space where other students were not at risk of harm. I felt bad for the teacher as she seemed to be in a tough situation, where she had no choice but to scold me.”

Sweetwood received an email from Columbia University’s dean later in the day informing him that he had been reported to the “Gender-Based Misconduct Office” and would need to meet with the dean as soon as possible. Sweetwood did meet with the dean who attempted to make him admit fault in the situation, Sweetwood refused.

“My dean tried to make me agree that I would never do this again. I flat out refused. I laid into her about how upset I was about the situation and I said something along the lines of: ‘If you’re asking me to not be myself, then I guarantee I will end up back in your office again.’”

The Dean did however seem to concede that the reaction to Sweetwoods comments may have been over the top, at one point saying, “Even if I agree with you, I obviously couldn’t say anything…”.'

Rolling Stone Trial: UVA Jackie Invented Rumor Her Friend Had Syphilis

Mastodon · 21 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'She even revealed additional falsehoods by Coakley, such as an invented rumor that a friend of hers had contracted syphilis, reports The Daily Progress. Erdely was the author of the November 2014 article “A Rape on Campus,” which recounted Coakley’s claim that she was savagely gang-raped by seven men at a UVA fraternity during a party. The article sparked a massive wave of outrage, but was quickly retracted after Coakley’s account was exposed as a series of spectacular lies. Now, Rolling Stone is battling a $7.5 million lawsuit by UVA dean Nicole Eramo, who says the magazine defamed her by portraying her as callously indifferent to UVA students who claimed they were raped.
...
That wasn’t the only strange syphilis-related revelation. Erdely testified that she was told by Coakley prior to the article’s publication that Coakley acquired syphilis from her gang rape. Yet, Coakley never supplied any medical documents to back up the claim, and instead repeatedly concocted new excuses for why she couldn’t show them. Rather than take this as an indication Coakley was being less than honest with her, Erdely simply deleted the syphilis claim from the story.'

Masculinity is not to blame for domestic violence

Mastodon · 22 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We need to be careful about the messages we send to young men about masculinity.

This week, it was revealed that students in Victoria, from primary school onwards, will be taught about “hegemonic masculinity”.

Don’t know what that is? Well, that state’s new respectful relationships curriculum defines it as the dominant form of masculinity in society that “requires boys and men to be heterosexual, tough, athletic and emotionless, and encourages the control and dominance of men over women”.

In other words, the uncommunicative Aussie bloke who sits in front of the footy on a Saturday arvo and only acknowledges his wife when he’s asking her to grab him another beer from the fridge, is the pinnacle of hegemonic masculinity.

These young Victorian school kids will also be introduced to terms such as heteronormativity, or the normalisation of heterosexual relationships in society at the expense of other relationships, and cisgender — the name given to someone whose gender identity aligns with their biological sex, unlike those who identify as transgender.

I’ll make a disclaimer: I was an enthusiastic student of gender studies at university. I lapped up feminist, post-structuralist, and Marxist gender theory because it was radical and fascinating, and it suddenly opened up almost limitless possibilities when it came to discussing portrayals of gender in literature, history, and popular culture.

But I wasn’t a Year 4 boy at a state school coming to terms with my own identity.'

Data Reveals Women Overwhelmingly Choose Lower-Paying College Majors

Mastodon · 22 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Research on the gender pay gap from the American Enterprise Institute reveals that women overwhelmingly choose less-lucrative university majors.

The research, conducted by AEI scholar Mark J. Perry who is a professor at the University of Michigan in Flint, argues that any gap in earnings between American men and women are the result of the different career field choices rather than employer discrimination.

According to Perry's research, American women received 57% of all bachelor degrees granted in 2014, which equated to nearly 200,000 more degrees granted to females than to males. Despite this disparity, the degrees granted to women came overwhelmingly in lower-paying majors, such as Nursing, Journalism, and English.'

Mother confesses to suffocating her three young children

Matt · 22 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Three-month-old Niall was the first to die, on July 22, 2014.

His brother, 4-year-old Gavin, died nine months later, on April 6, 2015.

Noah was next: He was born just after Gavin's death — and died on Aug. 18, 2015.

The mother of all three children, Brittany Pilkington, confessed to killing them over a 13-month period, Ohio prosecutors say. The same day her third son died, the 24-year-old mother from Bellefontaine told police that she put a blanket over all three of the children's faces and placed her hand over their noses and mouths.

Pilkington's videotaped confession was played in court this week. Her attorneys argued that the confession was coerced and, therefore, unconstitutional; it shouldn't be used at trial, they say.

Pilkington was indicted on three counts of aggravated murder. If found guilty, she could face the death penalty.'

Male Pill moves a step closer: British scientists discover way to stop sperm swimming

Matt · 23 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'British scientists have made a breakthrough in the search for a male contraceptive pill – which could transform the sex lives of millions of couples.

For decades, researchers have tried to produce a reliable alternative to condoms or a vasectomy, but there has been little progress.

Now UK scientists have found the secret of making men temporarily infertile – by ‘switching off’ sperm’s ability to swim.

They have made tiny ‘designer compounds’ which smuggle themselves into sperm, and stop their tails from wiggling. If a sperm can’t swim, it has no chance of naturally fertilising a woman’s egg.'

New Film ‘The Red Pill’ Asks Whether Men’s Rights Activists Have a Point

Matt · 23 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men’s rights activists, or “MRAs,” have long been among the progressive community’s favorite whipping boys — reviled, deplored and mocked as angry, whiny losers pining for their bygone privilege. Right now, they make especially convenient bogeymen in the ugly gender wars of Election 2016. A few days ago, a New York Times article on supposedly resurgent misogyny in American culture singled out the “manosphere” — the male-focused sector of the Internet that includes MRA websites — as a toxic swamp of woman-hating.

Yet at this very moment, a new documentary called The Red Pill takes a mostly sympathetic look at the dreaded MRAs — and it’s made by a woman who began the project as a committed feminist.

The Red Pill (the title, a popular manosphere term, refers to the reality-revealing pill in The Matrix) first sparked controversy a year ago. Filmmaker Cassie Jaye, then 29 and the author of acclaimed, award-winning documentaries on abstinence education and same-sex marriage, lost her potential producers and even some crew because they didn’t like where her new movie was going. After two years of work, the film was in jeopardy; rescue came from a Kickstarter fundraising effort led by men’s groups and by right-wing icon Milo Yiannopoulos. Jaye’s critics were not amused. Anti-MRA blogger David Futrelle accused her of throwing objectivity to the winds and “pandering” to her subjects.'

College Sex Meets the Star Chamber

Matt · 23 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yale University's motto is Lux et Veritas, light and truth. But at Yale today, bureaucrats charged with investigating and punishing alleged sexual misconduct seem less interested in truth or fairness than in scoring political points.

To start, they have expanded the terms harassment and assault beyond traditional legal definitions. Under Yale's sexual misconduct policy, sexual harassment includes verbal statements that have the "effect" of creating an "intimidating" environment. Sexual assault includes any contact without "positive, unambiguous, and voluntary" consent. According to Yale, consent must be "ongoing" at each stage of an encounter but "cannot be inferred from the absence of a 'no' " or presumed from "contextual factors."

With these expanded definitions in hand, "independent investigators"—eager to justify their employment by a university desperate to appear tough on sexual misconduct—rush off to find evidence of violations. They build dossiers on professors' offhand comments made decades earlier. They probe the murky "he said-she said" of drunken hook-ups seeking to prove that consent was not freely given, irrespective of whether a crime has been committed. Administrative tribunals, lacking due process protections provided in a court of law, determine guilt and mete out punishments that forever label people misogynists, harassers, or perpetrators of sexual assault.'

It’s Time to End ‘Rape Culture’ Hysteria

Matt · 23 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The nation's largest and most influential anti-sexual-violence organization is rejecting the idea that culture — as opposed to the actions of individuals — is responsible for rape.

“Rape is as American as apple pie,” says blogger Jessica Valenti. She and her sisters-in-arms describe our society as a “rape culture” where violence against women is so normal, it’s almost invisible. Films, magazines, fashion, books, music, humor, even Barbie — according to the activists — cooperate in conveying the message that women are there to be used, abused and exploited. Recently, rape-culture theory has migrated from the lonely corners of the feminist blogosphere into the mainstream. In January, the White House asserted that we need to combat campus rape by “[changing] a culture of passivity and tolerance in this country, which too often allows this type of violence to persist.”

Tolerance for rape? Rape is a horrific crime, and rapists are despised. We have strict laws that Americans want to see enforced. Though rape is certainly a serious problem, there’s no evidence that it’s considered a cultural norm. Twenty-first century America does not have a rape culture; what we have is an out-of-control lobby leading the public and our educational and political leaders down the wrong path. Rape-culture theory is doing little to help victims, but its power to poison the minds of young women and lead to hostile environments for innocent males is immense.'

Milo Yiannopoulos appearance at NYU scrapped due to ‘security concerns’

Mastodon · 23 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The ‘ol “security concerns” excuse has popped up again, this time regarding an appearance by conservative provocateur Milo Yiannopoulos at New York University.

The Wall Street Journal reports that NYU officials sent a letter to the school College Republicans informing them that “physical altercations had broken out at previous stops” of Milo’s college tour, and as such his event next month at NYU was canceled.

The letter pointed out that Milo was to appear at a site “near student groups at NYU’s Manhattan campus ‘that are subjects of Mr. Yiannopoulos’ attacks.”’

“Garbage,” Yiannopoulos responded. “The only person really at risk at any of my talks is me,” he said.'

MILO Event at The University of Maryland Cancelled Due to Security Fee Censorship

Mastodon · 23 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A scheduled event on MILO's "Dangerous Faggot" tour at the University of Maryland was cancelled after university administrators hit students with a massive increase in security fees just days before the event.

After a bomb threat, which occurred during the tour's stop at Florida Atlantic University, administrators at the University of Maryland increased security fees from $4,500 to $6,500. In response, the student group responsible for organizing the event created a GoFundMe page to raise the remaining funds.
...
This event's cancellation is yet another causality in the new censorship war that university administrators have begun to wage on conservative and libertarian students. Both the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE) and Breitbart Tech have addressed the increasing concerns regarding "security fee censorship" or the willingness of university administrators to allow excessive security fees alter or cancel events.'

The trouble with the “You go girl” culture

Mastodon · 23 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two recent films, Deepwater Horizon with Mark Wahlberg and Sully starring Tom Hanks, represent something of a breath of fresh air, for both movies feature men who are intelligent, virtuous, and quietly heroic. If this strikes you as a banal observation, that just means you haven’t been following much of the popular culture for the past twenty years.
...
If you think this male-bashing is restricted to cartoons, think again. Ray Romano’s character in Everyone Loves Raymond, Ed O’Neill’s hopeless father in Married With Children, and Ty Burrell's hapless goofball in Modern Family—all are variations on the Homer Simpson theme. Add to all this the presentation of fathers as not just inept, but horrific in Game of Thrones, and the absent, indifferent fathers of Stranger Things.

And I wonder whether you’ve noticed a character that can be found in practically every movie made today? I call her the “all conquering female.” Almost without exception, she is underestimated by men and then proves herself more intelligent, cleverer, more courageous, and more skilled than any man. Whether we’re talking about a romantic comedy, an office drama, or an adventure movie, the all conquering female will almost inevitably show up. And she has to show her worth in a domineering way, that is to say, over and against the men. For her to appear strong, they have to appear weak. For a particularly good case in point, watch the most recent Star Wars film.

Now I perfectly understand the legitimacy of feminist concerns regarding the portrayal of women in the media as consistently demure, retiring, and subservient to men. I grant that, in most of the action/adventure movies that I saw growing up, women would typically twist an ankle or get captured and then require rescuing by the swashbuckling male hero—and I realize how galling this must have been to generations of women. And therefore, a certain correction was undoubtedly in order. But what is problematic now is the Nietzschean quality of the reaction, by which I mean, the insistence that female power has to be asserted over and against males, that there is an either/or, zero-sum conflict between men and women. It is not enough, in a word, to show women as intelligent, savvy, and good; you have to portray men as stupid, witless, and irresponsible. That this savage contrast is having an effect especially on younger men is becoming increasingly apparent.

In the midst of a “you-go-girl” feminist culture, many boys and young men feel adrift, afraid that any expression of their own good qualities will be construed as aggressive or insensitive. If you want concrete proof of this, take a look at the statistics contrasting female and male success at the university level. And you can see the phenomenon in films such as Fight Club and The Intern. In the former, the Brad Pitt character turns to his friend and laments, “we’re thirty-year-old boys;” and in the latter, Robert De Niro’s classic male type tries to whip into shape a number of twenty-something male colleagues who are rumpled, unsure of themselves, without ambition—and of course under the dominance of an all conquering female.'

Masculinity in Peril on Gender-Bending Campuses

Mastodon · 24 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Students at the college who “identify as male” were shown a docudrama about masculinity recently. The film, entitled “The Mask You Live In,” was part of a lesson warning students that the notion of masculinity comes with harmful side effects, as freshman James Goodman told The College Fix.

A young woman in the Boston area — a high school senior — reacted to all of this. “It’s weird that confusion is kind of sought-after in today’s modern world, as if you’re more evolved if you have confusion about your gender or your masculinity,” she told LifeZette. “It’s as if confusion and not knowing who you are is a positive thing now.”
...
Some progressive cultural initiatives embraced by U.S. colleges are silly — think micro-aggressions — and can be laughed off. This one can't. This is using the violent deaths of innocent Americans to push an agenda already wildly supported by the cultural elite. It's the erasure of gender.

Is this what caring, thoughtful parents want their students to be exposed to at institutions of higher learning? If not, they would be advised to investigate the "gender agenda" of their student's potential colleges during the application process.'

Anti-Milo Protester: Would Donate Bail to Anyone Who ‘Put a Bullet in Milo’s Head’

Mastodon · 25 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To protest Milo Yiannopoulos’ October 18 speaking event at Clemson University, a professor and a number of Left-leaning students and their respective organizations created the “Anti-Milo Event Committee” to plan a demonstration against the conservative speaker, according to audio recordings gathered undercover.

I spent several weeks infiltrating the group of activists, a combination of left-wing Clemson professors and activists from Students for a Democratic Society (SDS). Students were caught on tape referring to Milo as “someone I would like to punch in the throat.”'

6 things a rape hoaxer said in interview with Rolling Stone author

Matt · 25 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jackie, the woman who made up a frightening story about being gang raped at the University of Virginia as a freshman, was really committed to her lie when talking to a Rolling Stone reporter.

The taped interview between Jackie and Rolling Stone author Sabrina Rubin Erdely was made public by CBS19 on Saturday, and professor and author K.C. Johnson posted what he believed were the best excerpts. Knowing that the gang rape didn't occur makes Jackie's comments in the tape all the more astounding. Here are some of her oddest remarks:

1. Jackie claimed to see one of her attackers everywhere

"I see him all the time. And I was like, you know, I was like, even places like — I saw him at Barracks Road shopping center," Jackie said. "I was like, that's way off grounds. I've seen him in Wal-Mart before when I'm shopping. Like, I was like, why is it this one guy that I see everywhere?"

Keep in mind this gang rape didn't occur. Police found no evidence to support her claim, the fraternity in question didn't hold a party the night she claimed she was raped, and, oh yeah, the man she claimed took her to the party and orchestrated the gang rape didn't exist.'

Railroading the Innocent: SAVE Calls on University Administrators to End ‘Victim-Centered’ Investigations

Matt · 26 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'PRESS RELEASE

Contact: Christopher Perry
Telephone: 301-801-0608
Email: cperry@saveservices.org

Railroading the Innocent: SAVE Calls on University Administrators to End ‘Victim-Centered’ Investigations

WASHINGTON / October 26, 2016 – A report issued today probes a recent spate of lawsuits against universities, and calls on college administrators to stop the use of so-called “victim-centered” investigations to probe allegations of campus sexual assault. The report concludes such methods are “inconsistent with the most basic notions of fairness, repudiate the presumption of innocence, and are likely to lead to wrongful determinations of guilt, thereby increasing schools’ liability exposure.”

Titled “Victim-Centered Investigations: New Liability Risk for Colleges and Universities,” the report analyses 18 lawsuits filed by students who had been accused of sexual misconduct, and in which the judge ruled in favor of the accused student. In all 18 cases, students alleged the university committed investigational improprieties. The paper classifies the investigational flaws into categories such as “Incomplete/Inadequate Collection of Evidence” and “Overt Bias/Predetermination of Guilt.”'

The Red Pill and censorship

Matt · 26 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Via Fathers and Families - NY:

'Take a Stand Against Censorship

Several weeks ago, we informed you of a new film, “The Red Pill,” exploring many of the issues that FAFNY members care about and profiling the activists working to raise awareness of them. Now, it has come to our attention that an extremist group has exerted pressure on the movie theater in Melbourne, Australia, where the film was scheduled to be screened, causing them to cancel the screening. We cannot allow this to happen. We’ve all worked so hard and waited so long for an opportunity like this to have our views get a fair hearing in the mainstream culture. They know that they can’t allow this film to become widespread because it’s simply too powerful. Only the most closed-minded people could watch it without being moved.

A petition on Change.org to reinstate the screening has already gathered over 6,000 signatures, more than double the count on the extremists’ petition calling for the movie to be censored. We urge our supporters to support this effort to protect free speech around the world and allow the other side of gender politics to be heard as well.'

Student accused of sexually assaulting woman in her dorm sues over suspension

Mastodon · 27 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A suspended St. John's University student is alleging gender bias and is suing his school and an affiliated college, claiming they falsely found that he probably sexually assaulted a female student after an evening of Halloween partying last year.

Aaron Wildenborg, of Red Wing, Minn., on Tuesday sued St. John's and the neighboring College of St. Benedict in federal court, alleging that school officials erred in determinations of whether he had consent for sex and whether the woman was vulnerable because she was drunk.

Wildenborg also contends that the investigation was biased against him because he was prevented from fairly challenging her contentions of what happened that night and that she retreated from her initial allegations.

The suit further characterizes the St. Benedict student as being more of the sexual aggressor, noting that she did not request his consent for sexual acts she performed on him and notes that she was not subject to the same school investigation as he was for her actions that night.'

Title IX-Style Campus Rape Investigations Are Coming to the UK

Mastodon · 27 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A wave of university rape investigations echoing those brought in under Title IX in the USA is due to be rolled out in Britain.

New guidelines published last week recommend that universities investigate and punish students over alleged sexual offences – even if they are cleared by a court.

A lengthy report by the Universities UK and law firm Pinsent Masons said that institutions should appoint their own investigators and carry out extra discipline after the legal process has ended.

It recommends using a significantly lower standard of evidence than criminal courts, and specifically advises universities to pursue proceedings both when the alleged victim has dropped the case, when prosecutors have dropped it through lack of evidence, and even if the accused stood trial and was cleared.

The report admits that internal university processes will inevitably have less information to go on than a criminal proceeding – and also recommends a lower standard of proof ("51%" instead of "beyond all reasonable doubt").'

'See Jane Go' rideshare app focuses on safety, comfort of women

Mastodon · 27 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's not your ordinary rideshare pick-up. 'See Jane Go' is the first ever rideshare app in the country for women only.

The drivers are women, picking up female passengers with 'See Jane Go' accounts. It's all an effort to make women safer.

Savannah Jordan says, "I don't have to have that little voice in my head saying maybe you shouldn't do this maybe you shouldn't get into this car." The 19-year old says there are plenty of horror stories out there with other rideshare companies.'

South Australian Office for Recreation and Sport Female Facilities Program" grants

Minuteman · 27 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Overview
The Female Facilities Program helps eligible organisations to develop sustainable, functional, inclusive and fit for purpose female change room facilities that meet the current and future needs of the South Australian sporting community.

Annual budget

2016-17 - $4 million

Eligible organisations

State Sport and Active Recreation Organisations, Industry Representative Bodies, Local Government, Community Groups, Incorporated Sport or Active Recreation Clubs that do not hold a gaming machine license.'

This Scientist Says Feminism Is ‘Incompatible With Science’

Mastodon · 28 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Modern feminism isn’t compatible with science, a biologist wrote on a science blog Wednesday.

Dr. Alex Berezow, a biomedical scientist with a doctorate in microbiology writing on the blog of the American Council on Science and Health, found that much of mainstream feminist theory directly conflicts with modern biology, as it is inherently built on ideas which cannot be proven or refuted.

“Ideology is a double-edged sword. Dedication to a set of beliefs can be admirable, but when it leads to inflexibility and obstinance in the face of overwhelming evidence to the contrary, it is a dangerous thing,” Berezow said. “[F]eminism has been built upon ideas that can neither be proven nor refuted, precisely the sort of evidence-free groupthink that typifies unscientific thinking.”

Berezow noted that many feminists “deny the prominent role of biology in our lives” allowing instead for the promotion of ideas that are “dangerous nonsense” on college campuses, which should be unbiased sources of truth.'

We Created 'Rape Culture.' Now We Get To Live With It.

Mastodon · 28 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Traumatic. For her. But what about those whose reputations have been dragged through the mud by Rolling Stone's libelous “report”? Nicole Eramo, UVA’s former dean of students, is fighting for damages in court right now after she received hundreds of defaming emails and letters calling her a “rape apologist” and a “disgusting, worthless piece of trash” following the article’s publication. While the magazine may have retracted its story, who repairs the damage done?

The answer: no one. And the reason? Because this is the society we created.

It’s the society that demonizes a man for simply being a man, unless he renounces everything male and begs the Holy Vagina to forgive him his natural trespasses. A guy accused of rape is a villain even when his accuser is proved a flat-out liar, so long as she carts a mattress around campus and voluntarily films her own porno afterward.

It’s the society in which casual sex is worth the cost of the cheap beer it takes to get you there, and in which a female college student can’t be held accountable for her promiscuity when she’s drunk – but a guy sure as hell can.'

Canada: Doctor sues gay friend for child support, 16 years after he first donated sperm to her

fathers4fairness · 28 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'In 2000, a gay man donated sperm to help a friend from medical school conceive one child, and then another.

Now, 16 years later, the mother, a medical doctor, is suing him for child support using a loophole in Ontario law that means known sperm and egg donors can be held liable for child support based on biology alone.

“He’s really being punished for the fact that he’s a known donor,” and that she didn’t buy sperm from an American bank, said Shirley Levitan, the lawyer for Michael Ranson. Canadians can legally buy sperm from American banks.

A bill before the provincial legislature to amend the Children’s Law Reform Act could close the loophole, but it could be too late for Ranson — or other donors who stay involved in their biological children’s lives and don’t know the law, Levitan said.'

Woman allegedly locked 11-year-old son in closets for three years before he died

fathers4fairness · 28 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The last time anyone saw Yonatan Daniel Aguilar in public was in the spring of 2012.

Teachers at his elementary school in Los Angeles were worried about him. One said Yonatan appeared to be hoarding food. Another said he came to school with a black eye. They filed their concerns with county social workers, who in turn alerted police, according to the Los Angeles Times. After interviewing people close to him, authorities found no cause for alarm — school officials told social workers he lived in a safe household.

Not long after, Yonatan vanished.

He did not return to class, nor to his after school program. Although his family had been the subject of a half-dozen reports by the Los Angeles County Department of Children and Family Services, social workers had no legal ability to inquire about him, the Times reported.

Yonatan's stepfather, Jose Pinzon, believed the boy was living in Mexico. The boy's mother, Veronica Aguilar, allegedly told him so, and said the same to other people who wanted to know his whereabouts.

That was the story until August 2016, when Aguilar came to Pinzon with tragic news: Yonatan had died. Pinzon, who said he had not seen the boy in several years, figured she would be going to Mexico for the funeral.

Instead, she opened the closet door.

Inside was the 11-year-old's body, wrapped in a blanket and surrounded by medicinal cups. His hair was falling out, his nose was plugged with foam, and pressure sores covered his tiny frame. He weighed just 34 pounds.'

"Toxic masculinity and us"

Mastodon · 29 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There is an obvious lethal combination: easy access to guns, obvious hatred and extreme views and mental health issues. There are troublesome questions lurking beneath the surface. What has happened to these young men who are entering what is supposed to be the prime of their lives? Did people close to them miss the warning signs? Are these murderous incidents reflective of cultural, political, or socio-economic cross currents? And does our country accept and tolerate more mass shootings because of the relatively easy access to guns with greater killing capacity?

We may never find all the answers as to how to prevent mass murders and very public suicides, but I do believe we need to dig deeper as a community and ask better questions about what is happening and why. Perhaps we can start by looking inward to family and home and see what can be done to improve the health of our communities.

For example, we can ask if young men have positive role models in their lives. Have we made it too hard for men to ask for help? Are we assisting them in developing better coping skills as societal changes relentlessly come? The unmet needs of our returning veterans and other young men, have pushed male suicide rates to epidemic levels.
...
“I would ask that each and every one of you consider taking a young man and consider being his mentor. The women we so want to support need not just strong women and moms at their sides, but partners in the men they often choose to be with. That young man you take under your wing could make a difference – just as all of you have.”

Bowed and nodding heads validated a collective understanding of what needs to be done for both young women – and men.'

Cassie Jaye’s Red Pill too truthful for feminists to tolerate

Mastodon · 29 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'“The Red Pill: The movie about men that feminists didn’t want you to see.” This was the provocative headline that ran in Britain’s The Telegraph last November, a teaser for a documentary made by a feminist filmmaker who planned to take on men’s rights activists but was won over and crossed to the dark side to take up their cause.

Despite a ferocious campaign to stop the movie being made, it’s finally been released and the Australian screening was due next week in Melbourne. However the gender warriors have struck again, using a change.com petition to persuade Palace Cinemas to cancel the booking. Palace took the decision after being told the movie would offend many in its core audience but by yesterday 8000 had signed petitions protesting the ban. Organisers are now scrambling to find another venue.

Clearly this documentary has the feminists very worried — with good reason. Cassie Jaye is an articulate, 29-year-old blonde whose previous movies on gay marriage and abstinence education won multiple awards. But then she decided to interview leaders of the Men’s Rights Movement for a documentary she was planning about rape culture on American campuses. As a committed feminist, Jaye expected to be unimpressed by these renowned hate-filled misogynists, but to her surprise she was exposed to a whole range of issues she came to see as unfairly stacked against men and boys.

As news of this very public conversion started to leak out, Jaye came under attack. She was smeared, told she was committing “career suicide” and saw her funding dry up to the point where it looked as if the movie would never be made. Prominent feminists she had planned to interview refused to participate; none of the “human rights” funding she hoped to attract proved available for a documentary on men’s rights.'

Security guards hired for Melbourne screening of The Red Pill

Mastodon · 29 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'SECURITY guards will be hired to help protect attendees at a controversial men's rights movie.

Men's rights advocates have secured a new venue allowing The Red Pill to premier in Melbourne as planned.

The documentary was to have screened at the Kino theatre on November 6 but this week opponents launched a petition and convinced parent company Palace Cinemas to cancel the private screening.

The Red Pill is feminist filmmaker Cassie Jaye's exploration of the men's rights movement.

She said it changed her thinking, but she has received a backlash from feminist critics.'

Vandals destroy Hoff-Sommers fliers for opposing trigger warnings, victimhood culture

Mastodon · 31 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Thursday, students hosting an upcoming talk by scholar Christina Hoff Sommers put up roughly 50 flyers promoting the event on four different campus buildings at Columbia University and Barnard College. Within 24 hours, most had been torn down.

The flyers advertised Sommers' scheduled appearance at Columbia University on Nov. 1 titled "Victims, Victims Everywhere: Trigger Warnings, Liberty, and the Academy." Flyers advertising Columbia and Barnard's politically liberal and neutral events were left unharmed.

Sommers is known for her critique of contemporary feminism, arguing it can be faulted for its "irrational hostility to men, its recklessness with facts and statistics, and its inability to take seriously the possibility that the sexes are equal—but different."'

Australia: Lessons on ‘male privilege’ in $21.8m Victorian schools program

Mastodon · 31 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'Victorian students will be taught about “male privilege” and how “masculinity” encourages “control and dominance” over women, as part of a mandatory new school subject aimed at combating family violence.

The Victorian government will push ahead with the rollout of its $21.8 million respectful relationships education program, despite claims the program fails to consider the multiple and complex drivers of family violence, ignores male victims and amounts to the brainwashing of children.

Evidence has emerged the program risks alienating men — by presenting all men as “bad” and all women as “victims” — a point highlighted in a report evaluating a pilot of the program in 19 schools last year.

As part of its broader campaign against family violence, the Andrews government has released a series of new resources aimed at kindergarten through to Year 12 classes designed to complement a “whole-of-school” approach to violence prevention.'

TIME Op-Ed: Criticism of Hillary Clinton's Email Is 'An Attack on Women'

Mastodon · 31 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to an op-ed published by TIME Magazine Monday, attacking Democratic presidential candidate Hillary Clinton's handling of her private email server is an attack on womankind itself.

"I am mad," writes Robin Lakoff, a professor of linguistics at UC Berkeley. "I am mad because I am scared. And if you are a woman, you should be, too. Emailgate is a bitch hunt, but the target is not Hillary Clinton. It's us."

"The only reason the whole email flap has legs is because the candidate is female," Lakoff continues. "Can you imagine this happening to a man? Clinton is guilty of SWF (Speaking While Female), and emailgate is just a reminder to us all that she has no business doing what she's doing and must be punished, for the sake of all decent women everywhere."'

‘The Red Pill’: The Movie Feminists Tried to Ban Gets UK Premier – on International Men’s Day

Mastodon · 31 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Red Pill – the inflammatory movie about Men’s Rights Activists that feminist protesters tried (and failed) to ban from Australia – is coming to the UK.

Heat Street has exclusively learned from the movie’s sole UK distributor that its British premiere is planned for November 19th – International Men’s Day – at London’s Soho Hotel.

This comes after three other London venues pulled the plug on The Red Pill after venue owners got cold feet about its “misogynistic” content.'

Dear feminists, please stop telling us what to do

Mastodon · 31 October 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From our early years of mastering how to walk and talk, we learn how to think and begin honing our decision-making process. So why is our personal responsibility being censored?

Functioning adults should be allowed to decide what they eat, drink, wear, watch and how they choose to feed their mind in their spare time. Those who don't enjoy watching violence or horror may sensibly opt to steer clear when selecting a movie rather than complaining at the end.

I enjoy watching insightful, thought-provoking documentaries and on my list was The Red Pill by award-winning filmmaker Cassie Jaye. The title is a reference to the reality revealing pill in The Matrix. According to Red Pill's website it "chronicles Cassie Jaye's journey exploring an alternate perspective on gender equality, power and privilege". Through men's personal stories, it gives voice to various little aired issues, backed up by statistics and studies.'

"Sexism at its finest: male birth control trial stopped due to side effects"

Mastodon · 1 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The male injection has been found to be effective in studies involving around 270 men. During the trial only four pregnancies happened among the partners. Because quite a few of the men experienced side effects, including depression, other mood disorders and acne, the study was stopped due to safety reasons. Researchers have been trying to discover a male #contraceptive for the last 20 years. This makes the burden of birth control normally fall onto women's shoulders.
...
Many of us women who are on the pill have to experience and get over any side effects including, weight gain, depression, migraines and many more. However there are very few advertised options for women and the pill seems the most suitable for many of us.'

President Obama: "My wife is not just my equal but my superior"

Mastodon · 1 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here's what he said, in case you weren't lucky enough to catch it live:
"And I know that my wife is not just my equal but my superior. And, I want us, I want every man out there who's voting to kinda look inside yourself and ask yourself, well, if you're having problems with this stuff, how much of it is, you know, that we're just not used to it? So, you know, like, when a guy's ambitious and out in the public arena and working hard, well that's OK. But when a woman suddenly it, suddenly you're like, why is she doing that? I'm just being honest. I want you to think about it because she is so much better qualified than the other guy."'

Sassy misandry is good for business – but assault on men is never funny

Mastodon · 1 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Does the empowerment of women need to take the form beating up on men? And isn't it anyway something of self-defeating strategy?

These are the questions often lurking in the back of my mind when I read one of those sassy columns that seem to be a list of insults hurled at men – or MEN! – as a sex. But I usually think twice about voicing them.

Apart from anything else, even though it's almost never stated, it's straight men as a sex that are in the crosshairs. Since I'm not terribly straight, and thus not exactly a fully paid up member of the patriarchy, it's generally wise for me to keep my head, er, down in the (hetero)sex war.

But then I saw this 'Own the Day' TV ad for women's clothing chain Bonmarché, currently airing on UK primetime, which seems to go one sassy step further – suggesting that casual assault on men by women is "bloomin' awesome!". And funny.

...

I'm not suggesting the ad should be protested or banned – though there would be with enormous kerfuffle if the genders were reversed. But I would suggest that the ad is an indication that sassy misandry, once justified as a 'necessary corrective' to the patriarchy and women's subjugation, is so common these days it has become a corporate cliché.

Which in turn would suggest that it's no longer quite so necessary – that instead it's shaded into abuse. And that's not very empowering. Or 'bloomin' awesome'. Whatever that is.'

UK: "MP Delivers Spectacular Putdown Over International Men's Day"

Mastodon · 1 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Minister for Women and Equalities shot back at a Tory MP when he asked about plans to commemorate International Men's day

In the debate in the Commons, Caroline Dinenage said: "Women could be forgiven for thinking every day is International Men's Day".

Tory backbencher Philip Davies has been caught up in rows over whether MPs should devote attention to International Men's day before.

In 2015 Davies said it was not fair that MPs have a debate to mark International Women's Day but not one to debate International Men's Day.

In a spat over the matter, Labour MP Jess Phillips dismissed Davies as "very basic".

Philips had been subject to online abuse, including rape threats, for her role in the argument.

"It seems like every day to me is International Men's Day," she told the Tory MP at the time.

But Davies won his battle, and in November MPs discussed the higher rates of suicide and lower life expectancy among men as well as male victims of domestic abuse.'

UK: Time To Change Our Attitudes To Men And Boys

Mastodon · 1 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last month the Time to Change campaign released findings showing that if fathers talked about their own mental health problems it would encourage 70% of teenagers to feel able to do so themselves. Their research showed that a quarter of 16-18 year old young men experience mental health issues on a weekly basis. Later this month, as part of CALM's work with the Huffington Post series 'Building Modern Men' throughout November, we'll be releasing details of our own Masculinity Audit, which shows that men who've been very depressed are less likely than women to talk to anyone about it (55% of men compared to 67% of women).

Scarcely a week passes without a great article about male mental health, and the call for men to talk has been now been adopted by every major mental health charity, alongside LADbible, (#UOKM8? campaign) and UNILAD who have all taken to encouraging men to talk and seek help when they need to. And Men's Sheds have taken off. What's all the fuss?

Official UK figures for suicide in 2015 aren't due for release until 2017, but the Campaign Against Living Miserably, for the second year running, has pulled together ONS figures for England and Wales together with Northern Ireland and Scotland. These show that suicide remains the single biggest cause of death for men aged under 45 in the UK.

The detail is shocking. In Northern Ireland 48% of all deaths of males aged 15-24 were suicide, and that rose to 51% for men in the 25-34 age band. With all the post-vention work and recent money put into suicide prevention there, such figures are dreadful - and lead me to ask again, why no research into why do more men take their lives than women? The rest of the UK isn't great either. Suicide accounted for 29% of all 15-24 year old male deaths in Scotland and 27% of the deaths of young men in England and Wales. So, tough times for young men.'

Female care workers had sex with child migrants on camera in Danish asylum centre

Mastodon · 1 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Shocking footage and photographs emerged of an employee at the Børnecenter Tullebølle children's asylum centre having oral sex and full intercourse with at least one child refugee.

Now the head of the Denmark-based refugee centre, Sisi Eibye, has been turfed out of office, although there is no suspicion she engaged in sexual activity with the children.

Officials believe the female employee involved in the sex scandal had inappropriate relationships with at least three boys at the centre, while two other women are understood to have engaged in sexual activity with the minors.

Police are investigating the reports and two of the women involved have lost their jobs.

The Danish Immigration Service also announced it would close down the centre amid the fallout from the claims.'

Michael Douglas, Val Kilmer, and the alarming rise of oral cancers in men

Mastodon · 2 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The more hopeful prognosis likely matters to a lot of people at a time when oral cancer is on the rise in American men. Health insurance claims for the condition jumped 61 percent from 2011 to 2015, according to a report by FAIR Health, an independent nonprofit. The most dramatic increases were seen in throat and tongue cancer, which were three times more common in men as in women during that same period.

Changing sexual habits are now seen as a frequent culprit for oral cancers caused by human papillomavirus (HPV). That's why health experts are so interested in the success of the HPV vaccine.'

Also see The startling rise in oral cancer in men, and what it says about our changing sexual habits

What the Feds Have Done to Colleges and Schools

Matt · 2 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Obama administration has repeatedly violated civil liberties on campus. The Education Department's Office for Civil Rights (OCR) has been the chief culprit, but the Department of Justice has played a role too. They have attacked free speech, demanding that school officials censor politically-incorrect speech. They have also pressured colleges to stack the deck against students accused of sexual harassment or assault by denying them the right to due process. The Obama administration has violated the Constitutional guarantee of equal protection by demanding racial quotas in school discipline and turning a blind eye to campus racial violence against whites. It also has shown a contempt for religious freedom and the due process rights of colleges themselves.
...
The Administration has also stacked the deck against people accused of sexual harassment or assault in campus disciplinary proceedings. For example, in Title IX investigations, it has required that colleges impose "interim measures" against accused students before they ever receive a hearing on the charge against them, measures that can include expulsion from a dorm and classes shared with the accuser. It perversely faulted Michigan State for not investigating a false complaint fast enough, even though the complainant didn't want a college investigation at all, and it suggested the University might have to offer the false accuser academic "remedies."

In its April 4, 2011 Dear Colleague letter to the nation's colleges, OCR instructed to colleges to restrict cross-examination, even though the Supreme Court has declared that cross-examination is the "greatest legal engine ever invented for the discovery of truth." It also ordered colleges to abolish the clear-and-convincing standard of evidence that was once the norm in college discipline, recommending instead the far weaker "preponderance of evidence standard (50.001 percent certainty).

OCR also has recently required some investigated colleges (such as Harvard and SUNY) to conduct "individual complaint reviews" for all allegations in past academic years to see if the college "took steps" against harassment in each case. That creates the risk of students being investigated all over again for an offense the college previously found them not guilty of, much like double jeopardy.'

UK: Men urged to speak out on domestic violence after woman tortures partner

Mastodon · 2 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are being urged to “break the taboo” and speak out if they are involved in an abusive relationship.

It comes after Michelle Williamson was jailed after subjecting partner Ian McNicholl to a catalogue of torture and abuse.

During the 18 months of sickening abuse, Ian suffered cracked ribs, a fractured skull, broken cheekbones and a smashed nose.

He was tortured and branded with a red-hot iron by his partner when he refused his abuser sex.

Businessman Ian has been praised for speaking out against the shocking violence he suffered at the hands of his female partner.

Abu Hasnayn Haidari wrote on the Birmingham Mail’s Facebook page: “If a man beats a woman or woman beats a man, either way its still unacceptable.'

Universities work to purge male students of their ‘toxic’ masculinity

Matt · 2 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Universities across the nation are taking steps to actively purge male students of what’s been labeled “toxic masculinity.”

Examples abound of campuses hosting training sessions, group meetings, lectures and other programs to effectively cleanse what many campus leaders and left-leaning scholars contend is an unhealthy masculinity in young men today.

On campus, toxic masculinity is often blamed for sexual violence, body shaming, a “hyper-masculinized sporting culture,” acts of domestic terrorism and much more.
...
Various promotional videos promoting health masculinity advocate challenging “the traditional norms of what we envision masculinity to be” by recognizing “male privilege.” Goals touted through the education include undoing a legacy of “harm, oppression and dominance.”

This trend did not emerge over night. Last year, Vanderbilt University hosted “Healthy Masculinities Week,” led in part by Jackson Katz, the first man to minor in women studies at the University of Massachusetts Amherst.'

Suspended Former State Prosecutor sued for misconduct

fathers4fairness · 2 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's rare for prosecutors to face real scrutiny. "Absolute immunity" allows them to pretty much skate away after maliciously prosecuting an innocent person.

And even when prosecutors are held accountable for their actions, the punishment is minuscule compared to what their victims endure. Take, for instance, Mike Nifong, the prosecutor who went after the Duke Lacrosse team in order to get re-elected. When the case fell apart, Nifong was disbarred and spent one day in jail. That, compared to the scorn, threats and condemnation of the lacrosse players he maligned.

Now we have Mary Kellett, the former assistant district attorney for Hancock County in Maine. In 2007, a man named Vladek Filler was accused of and charged with beating and sexually assaulting his then-wife for the previous two years. The two were locked in a bitter divorce when she made the accusation. She also claimed he molested their children.

Kellett prosecuted the case, and edited video of Filler's wife admitting she only made the accusations to get custody of the children in the divorce.'

See Hancock County prosecutor admits violating bar rules in sexual assault trial.

Cops: Mom texted video of dead toddler during fight with dad

fathers4fairness · 2 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman jailed on charges she killed her toddler son sent a video of the boy's apparently lifeless body to his father in a jealous, vengeful rage during a text-messaged argument that lasted more than two hours, police said in a criminal complaint.

Christian Clark, 21, of McKeesport, was jailed without bond after being arraigned on charges of criminal homicide in the death of 17-month-old Andre Price III and attempted homicide of his 2-year-old sister, Angel. Clark doesn't have an attorney listed in online court records.
...
"Ya kids ain't safe here I don't want them here" and "Answer me or im going to jail for child endangerment" were two of the dozens of texts listed in the criminal complaint. Then came a message at 10:01 p.m. that said, "I'm killing them" — followed by a laughing emoji with tears coming from its eyes, police said.'

Smashing the Silicon Valley patriarchy: anti-Lean In strategy puts onus on men

Mastodon · 3 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

"It's a Friday afternoon at a tech startup in downtown San Francisco, and Valerie Aurora is arming men with phrases they can use to try to make their Silicon Valley environment less sexist: "Not cool." "We don't do that here." "Awkward!"

She wants them to use them against other men when they encounter biased comments or actions aimed at women, and tells them not to worry if they freeze the first time. "Just keep practicing and wait for the next time. I guarantee it will happen again."

Aurora is a feminist activist and founder of Frame Shift Consulting, a tech diversity and inclusion firm. She has come to the company to run a three-hour training session for a group of men and women, teaching them how to use their societal privilege – whether male, white, straight or able-bodied – to benefit people who do less well in Silicon Valley.'

We still don't have male birth control — but no, it's not because men are wimps

Mastodon · 3 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'There’s a new study making the rounds about a seemingly effective male birth control. The hormonal injection, designed to slow or block sperm production, had a 96 percent success rate at preventing pregnancy among couples who completed the study.

There was just one problem, according to some media reports: The new method won't be available anytime soon because the men in the study were wimps. They couldn’t handle side effects — moodiness, acne — that women on birth control deal with all the time, and so the study had to be terminated.

"Male birth control study nixed after men can't handle side effects women face daily," read the USA Today headline. Similar stories appeared at the Atlantic and Cosmopolitan.

These stories are wrong and misleading.

The study was halted, but it wasn't because the men who participated in it were wimpy. It was halted because one of the two independent committees that were monitoring the trial's safety data was concerned about the high number of adverse events the men reported. And, yes, the rate of side effects in this study was higher than what women typically experience using hormonal birth control.'

International Men’s Day not to be marked by University of York

Mastodon · 3 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of York has confirmed that it will not be commemorating the upcoming International Men’s Day on the 19th November.

The announcement comes after the university cancelled events last year due to comments made by an equality and diversity committee member on the gender imbalance in the assignment of academic postings. Dr Adrian Lee’s remarks concerned what he described as the adverse effect on male equality in the increasing appointment of women. An open letter of complaint, addressed to the University of York’s Registrar David Duncan and containing just under 200 signatures, then finally brought about the cancellation.

International Men’s Day is aimed at addressing issues that affect men and boys, specifically concerning itself with high male suicide rates and both male mental and physical health generally, the challenges of education amid negative perceptions of men and boys, as well as the treatment of men on the fringe of society.'

Teacher Charged for Punching 2nd Grader in Face

Mastodon · 3 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One Texas teacher lost her cool in a Houston-area elementary school when dealing with a purportedly unruly second grade student. Now, she stands accused of punching the child in the face and sitting on him in a hallway. School surveillance cameras apparently captured the incident.
...
While the surveillance system did not capture anything that occurred within the classroom, it recorded the incident that ensued in the school's hallway. The security camera footage purportedly showed Allison following the boy from the classroom to the hallway where she grabbed him by the hand. Reportedly, the two struggled. When he yanked his hand away, Allison pulled him by the back and punched him "with a closed fist," to the right side of his face, KPRC reported.

The video also allegedly showed Allison forcing the boy to the floor and sitting on top of him. School administrators found her and ordered her to get off the student. They called police and opened an investigation.'

Lena Dunham Posts Video Celebrating the ‘Extinction of White Men’ on Twitter

Mastodon · 3 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Both Lena Dunham and her father, Carroll Dunham, expressed their support for “the extinction of white men” in a bizarre video posted to Dunham’s Twitter account on Wednesday.

“How are you feeling about the extinction of white men?” Lena asks her father in the video.

“Well, white men are a problem. Straight white men are a big problem, that’s for sure,” declared Carroll.

“But I actually feel pretty good about it,” he continued. “I think straight white guys have been screwing things up for long enough. High time for straight white males to step back and let some other people do it.”
...
In her post, Lena also claimed that the extinction of white men is “not the end of men, it’s the evolution of men into better men.”'

CVS will stop selling important Prostate Cancer drug in two months

Matt · 3 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

From Malecare.org:

CVS Pharmacy is hurting millions of cancer patients by refusing to sell dozens of cancer treatment drugs, like leukemia drug Tasigna, prostate cancer drug Xtandi and chemotherapy treatment drug Neupogen, starting in 2017. CVS claims these drugs cost too much. Go ahead and tell that to my insurance provider and Medicare but don't stop selling these drugs to me and millions of cancer patients.

CVS is putting profit above the care of cancer patients. If CVS can make money by selling cheap cosmetics and imported cookies, then CVS can make money off of lifesaving drugs.

CVS says there are other drugs that work just as well for most patients. But "most" is not "all patients." That's why doctors prescribe different drugs to different patients.

CVS Pharmacy is currently the largest pharmacy chain in the United States. For millions of American's, CVS is the only pharmacy for miles around. By hurting millions of cancer patients, CVS has become a face of evil. Now, it's up to us to make phone calls, write letters or send emails to change the course of this wrongheaded move.

Tell CVS' Medical Director to sell all FDA approved cancer drugs, not just the ones that give CVS the most profit:

Send your email to:

troyen.brennan@cvshealth.com

You can also telephone him at:
401-770-4801 and 401-651-3137

Troyen Brennan, MD, MPH
Chief Medical Director
CVS Health
One CVS Drive
Woonsocket, Rhode Island 02895

Please feel encouraged to share your comments with me.

Darryl Mitteldorf, LCSW

Executive Director
Malecare
darryl@malecare.org

Ex-inmate claims he was 'sex slave' to prison counselor

Matt · 4 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former state prison inmate who fathered a child with a prison counselor while serving time in a Jackson-area prison is suing the Michigan Department of Corrections and state officials, saying he was forced into sex and officials should have known what was happening.

Steven Moerman of Grand Rapids alleges prison counselor Susan Lee Clingerman used him as "a virtual sex slave, demanding sexual gratification at her whim," while he was imprisoned at Parnall Correctional Facility on a drug charge in 2014 and receiving counseling for mental illness.

In a lawsuit filed in September in Jackson County Circuit Court, Moerman alleges prison officials knew or should have known what was happening because another prison counselor acted as a lookout for Clingerman.

The suit, which names Gov. Rick Snyder, the corrections department and current and former prison officials as defendants, alleges sexual assault, emotional distress and inadequate hiring, training and supervision, among other counts. It seeks unspecified damages.

"Defendants failed to provide Mr. Moerman humane conditions of confinement by knowingly, voluntarily, recklessly, and with willful disregard to Mr. Moerman's personal safety, allowing him to be sexually assaulted and raped," according to allegations in Moerman's lawsuit filed by Okemos attorney Sterlin Mesadieu.'

It’s time we started celebrating masculinity

Mastodon · 4 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Masculinity has become an unfashionable concept of late, called into question by Grayson Perry – who, recently examined its purpose for his book The Descent of Man. Earlier in the year on Channel 4, he said it was “decorative” and “counterproductive”, before adding that Bear Grylls “celebrates a masculinity that is useless”.

Such snobbery against machismo is commonplace now. From the playground to modern life, expressions of testosterone are frowned upon. “Lad culture“ is dirty and dangerous; physical fighting practically banned, with men told to "walk away" from conflict and “be the bigger man”. Now we must solve all our problems through a chat and cup of tea.

But the truth is that masculinity is useful. This primitive instinct has a protective function and – this year alone – I’ve never been more grateful for the very trait that has, and will, help nations battle against evil forces. Masculinity has, arguably, inspired immense bravery from the public.'

Dispirited Men

Matt · 5 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last night, I saw a pre-release screening of the movie, The Red Pill. It was created by self-described fervent feminist filmmaker Cassie Jaye, who planned on it being a hit piece on the men's movement.

Indeed, the movie begins in that vein. For example, she interviews Katherine Spillar, Executive Editor of Ms. magazine and Executive Director of the Feminist Majority Foundation, and raises no questions about Spillar's contentions that "it's still a man's world."

But the film then moves to documenting Cassie's painful, conflict-inducing journey toward understanding men's perspectives. The movie shows her many interviews with men and women in the men's movement juxtaposed against its most credible female and male opponents, including SUNY Stony Brook sociology professor Michael Kimmel.

Periodically through the movie, we see Cassie's growing uncertainty about the validity of the radical feminist narrative versus that of the little-known men's movement. Speaking into the camera, we see her struggling to figure out if the men's advocates statements were true when feminists, colleges, and media relentlessly assert "male privilege." Also, she expresses fear that if she softened her feminism, she'd lose the support network she felt was so important to her. Indeed, during the movie's filming, as it became clear it wouldn't end up as another male basher, some crew members and potential funders backed out, and Cassie needed to rely on Kickstarter to get the money to finish the film.'

Jury finds reporter, Rolling Stone responsible for defaming U-Va. dean with gang rape story

Matt · 5 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A federal court jury decided Friday that a Rolling Stone journalist defamed a former University of Virginia associate dean in a 2014 magazine article about sexual assault on campus that included a debunked account of a fraternity gang rape.

The 10-member jury concluded that the Rolling Stone reporter, Sabrina Rubin Erdely, was responsible for defamation, with actual malice, in the case brought by Nicole Eramo, a U-Va. administrator who oversaw sexual violence cases at the time of the article's publication. The jury also found the magazine and its parent company, Wenner Media, responsible for defaming Eramo, who has said her life's work helping sexual assault victims was devastated as a result of Rolling Stone's article and its aftermath.'

Man’s conviction for sex assault against ex-wife tossed over seven-year-old Facebook message

Matt · 5 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A seven-year-old Facebook message has scuttled a conviction against a man accused by his ex-wife of sexually assaulting and threatening to kill her.

In a decision released Friday, Ontario’s top court said evidence about the message, had it been allowed at trial, could have affected the guilty verdict handed down to the man, who can only be identified as A.B.

“The message was allegedly sent about midpoint in the time frame of the sexual assault allegations,” the Appeal Court said in its decision. “It would not be unfair to say that the message recounted several incidents of sexual activity between the appellant and complainant, and made it clear that the sexual activity was consensual on the complainant’s part.”

Police charged A.B. with sexually assaulting the woman after they had separated and he was living with a new partner. The complainant said her ex had forced himself on her three times, but he insisted the sex was entirely consensual.

To bolster his position, he raised the issue of the Facebook message sent in February 2009, which he said was sent by his former spouse to his new partner and now wife.'

NY Times: The Men Feminists Left Behind

mens_issues · 6 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The latest anti-male feminist rant from the NY Times. Condescending articles like these that demean men and further the antagonistic relationship between the sexes are what alienated me from the MSM many years ago. Excerpt:

'On Nov. 8, Americans may elect our first female president. While many of us are exhilarated at the idea of this feminist victory, the toll we've paid for coming so close to that historic barrier has been the most graphically sexist election in living memory.

What this campaign has shown us is that while feminism has transformed American culture, our politics and the lives of women, men haven't evolved nearly as rapidly. Women changed. Too many men didn't. What happens next?

For all of American history, white men have been both the dominant group and the default one: It was mostly white men in charge, and it was white male experiences and norms against which all others found themselves contrasted and defined. When Hillary Clinton started at Yale Law School in 1969, there was only one woman in the United States Senate. It was legal for a man to rape his wife, but abortion was mostly outlawed. Mrs. Clinton graduated as one of just 27 women in a class of 235, after being explicitly told that if accepted into law school, she would take the rightful place of a man.'

NYT on the NY Marathon: Every year, the women win

ThomasI · 6 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Once again, the NY Times repeats the news headline. A woman won the race. But the man only won the men's race. Excerpt:

'In an extraordinary race of one, Mary Keitany of Kenya ran to her third consecutive victory on Sunday in the New York City Marathon, finishing completely out of sight of the rest of the field, in 2 hours 24 minutes 26 seconds. Pulling away from her rivals before the 10-mile mark and never needing to look back, she covered more than half of the course entirely alone.

The men’s race was won by a 20-year-old Eritrean, Ghirmay Ghebreslassie, who pulled away from a tight pack of three at Mile 20 and blew kisses to his onlookers as he won in 2:07:51. He is the youngest winner in race history.

Ghebreslassie was followed by Lucas Rotich of Kenya in second (2:08:53). Abdi Abdirahman, a Somali-born American who is based in Arizona, finished in third (2:11:23). Abdirahman, 39, is almost a generation older than Ghebreslassie.'

Louis C.K., Michael Moore, Hillary Clinton, and the rise of benevolent sexism in liberal men

Mastodon · 7 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'C.K. obviously means well. He's trying to compliment mothers in general and Hillary in particular, and to reframe the political liability of her gender into an asset. But he's playing into a very old and unpleasant narrative that's become weirdly popular among liberal men this election cycle: the idea that we need women in government because they are intrinsically morally superior to men. Women should be represented in our government, this story goes, not because they are people, but because they are better than people: They are angelic; they are virtuous; they are pure.

That's the story Michael Moore was telling when he tweeted a few days ago that women have not, historically, committed atrocities, implying that women have the kind of moral purity we need in our elected representatives.

As Jessica Ellis pointed out on Twitter, Moore's assertion is historically inaccurate: Women worked on the Manhattan Project, were instrumental Nazi leaders, and have shot up schools. Women have committed all sorts of atrocities — it's just that most of them have been erased from history, in the same way that most of women's more positive accomplishments have been erased.'

SAVE: Rolling Stone Verdict Highlights Need for State Lawmakers to Bring an End to Campus Rape Vigilantism

Matt · 7 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'A federal jury decided on Friday that Rolling Stone magazine was responsible for libel and acted with “actual malice” in its reporting of an alleged gang rape at the University of Virginia. Later this week the jurors will decide on UVA dean Nicole Eramo’s $7.5 million lawsuit demand.

Thousands of news accounts and internet sites have now identified the UVA rape accuser as Jackie Coakley of Charlottesville, Virginia.

Coakley alleged that a student named “Drew” brought her to the fraternity house where she was led upstairs and brutally raped by seven men. When the assault was reported to Nicole Eramo, head of UVA’s Sexual Misconduct Board, Coakley alleged Eramo was more interested in protecting the university’s reputation than helping sexual assault survivors.'

University expands policies with new consent definition, Va. transcript law

Mastodon · 7 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'University policies on sexual assault and acts of violence were updated last week to feature broadened definitions of sexual assault crimes and reflect new laws about how those crimes are reported.

These changes include a more detailed definition of consent and new guidelines on how sexual assault accusations and records should be marked on transcripts. Experts on campus sexual assault said it is important for these policies to be constantly updated because the documents are resources for survivors of violence.

The definition of consent in the Threats and Acts of Violence Policy was broadened to explain that an individual's voluntary words or actions do not necessarily mean that future sexual activity is consensual.

University spokeswoman Maralee Csellar said the definition of consent was revised with guidance from the Office of Civil Rights in the Department of Education, according to University obligations under Title IX.

And a new section was added to that policy to demonstrate GW's adherence to a new Virginia law, which requires higher education institutions to mark a student's transcript if that student was found guilty of a sexual violence crime.

...

A new Virginia law that came into effect Oct. 1 requires educational institutions to place notations on the transcripts of students who are taking or have taken courses in Virginia, who are suspended or expelled for sexual assault or who withdrew while under investigation for an offense involving sexual assault.

The new Virginia law included in the updated policy requires a university's review committee to notify state law enforcement in cases of felony sexual violence involving Virginia students. The information disclosed may also include personally identifiable information of the accused to protect the health and safety of a student or others.'

Jury awards $3 million in damages to U-Va. dean for Rolling Stone defamation

Matt · 9 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A federal jury has awarded $3 million in damages to a former University of Virginia associate dean after finding that a Rolling Stone magazine article sullied her reputation by alleging that she was indifferent to allegations of a gang rape on campus.

The 10 jurors heard arguments for damages in the case Monday, determining that Nicole Eramo's suffering should cost a reporter and Rolling Stone multiple millions as a result of the article, which was retracted after its serious flaws were exposed. Eramo testified during the trial that after the article published, she faced threats, lost her ability to pursue her life's work as a sexual assault prevention advocate, and took a major hit to her professional credibility.

On Friday, the same jury found that the magazine and one of its journalists, Sabrina Rubin Erdely, was liable for defaming Eramo in a 9,000-word account of sexual assault published in November 2014. The magazine in December amended the article online to say that it had lost faith in the source of its most shocking allegations, and it later fully retracted the article after a Charlottesville police investigation and a report by the Columbia University School of Journalism found that aspects of the account were false.'

Feminist PhD Candidate: Science Is Sexist Because It’s Not Subjective

Matt · 9 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. To be fair, this is feminist larva here, and the product of our "modern" academy. Her elders in the sisterhood may find her work as ludicrous as we do. Still, these younger people, feminist or not, are the future, for right or wrong. God help the future. Excerpt:

'College science classes are hostile to women and minorities because they use the scientific method, which assumes people can find reliable truths about the natural world through careful and sustained experimentation, concludes a recent dissertation by a doctoral candidate at the University of North Dakota.

Laura Parson, a student in the university’s education department, reviewed eight science class syllabi at a “Midwest public university” and said she discovered in them a hidden hostility to women and minorities:

"Initial exploration of the STEM syllabi in this study did not reveal overt references to gender, such as through the use of gendered pronouns. However, upon deeper review, language used in the syllabi reflects institutionalized STEM teaching practices and views about knowledge that are inherently discriminatory to women and minorities by promoting a view of knowledge as static and unchanging, a view of teaching that promotes the idea of a passive student, and by promoting a chilly climate that marginalizes women."'

Millennial Men Rush to Restore Their Foreskins, ‘Feel Whole Again’

Matt · 10 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A few years ago, Robbie Boucher (now a 32 year old father of two) noticed the sensitivity of his penis was dropping dramatically. Turning to the Internet for answers, it wasn’t long before he came across an uncomfortable idea: what if the reason he was losing sensitivity was a result of being circumcised as an infant? The theory went this way: had the exposed glans of his penis built up extra layers of tissue over the years, much as a foot would get calluses after walking barefoot? Had Robbie’s penis been surgically de-sensitized?

Robbie felt cheated and left reeling from a deep sense of loss. So he joined the growing ranks of American men attempting to restore their foreskins. We’ve witnessed some of Robbie’s journey, and his quest to create the ultimate tugger, in this short documentary produced with our partners at FreeMedia.

There are no official numbers, but online forums and sales figures suggest there are tens of thousands of men currently “restoring”. For instance, the largest online community, RestoringForeskin.org, has more than 16,000 members. And Ron Low, maker of the popular ‘TLC Tugger’ has seen his business grow steadily over the past decade, with around 5,000 new customers each year.
...

Skeptical? There are plenty of time lapse videos online (major NSFW) that show it is indeed possible to create the appearance of a new foreskin, however no official studies have been done to test whether this new skin coverage actually makes the penis more sensitive. The American Urological Association does not have a position on the practice and there is nothing in the medical literature. Robbie says he doesn’t care if the physical improvements are all in his head – he will continue restoring because it brings him an enormous amount of satisfaction and relief.'

"Memo to White Male America"

Mastodon · 10 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I am angry.

You want my skills, my experience, my heart, my patience, which you demand from me so that I can keep my health insurance? You're going to have to earn it back, White Male America. I'm done being patient with your ignorance, your microaggressions, your smug superiority. There will be no more smiling when you say, "Smile, it's not that bad!" I'm not going to do you any favors that do not compensate me for my time and effort, but "look good on a resume." And, from now on, you're getting out of the elevator first so that I can be the threatening presence behind you. And, boy, can I be a menace when I want to be.

...

You just created some wild new monsters. The only way you can silence us is with your stockpile of guns, but I assume you'll still go to jail for that.'

Due Process Legal Update: Filings, Rulings, and a Kangaroo

Matt · 10 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It has been a while since my last due process legal update, and there are some new developments to report.

First of all, the complaints continue to roll in. Since I last wrote in late September, at least five new lawsuits have been filed. Students at Albany Medical College, the College of Saint Benedict & Saint John's University, Shenandoah University, the University of Cincinnati, and the University of Maryland have all filed new federal lawsuits alleging that they were unfairly treated in campus sexual misconduct proceedings.

On Monday, in an important ruling, an Ohio federal judge allowed several of an Ohio State University (OSU) student's due process claims to survive a motion to dismiss, even holding that several OSU administrators might not be entitled to qualified immunity on those claims.'

She wanted more attention from a top football player, so out came boiling water

Matt · 11 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The college career of FIU senior tight end Jonnu Smith, the team's premier offensive player over his four seasons and easily the Panthers' best 2017 NFL Draft prospect, ended on Halloween when his girlfriend doused him with boiling water. According to the arrest affidavit, Smith suffered severe burns on his head, neck, back, a shoulder and an arm.

Miami Gardens resident Mary Gaspar, five months pregnant with Smith's child, was charged with aggravated battery. Gaspar entered a not guilty plea. She's been released on a pretrial release order.

The early 2017 NFL Draft projections have Smith as a late-round pick or undrafted free agent. He made the midseason John Mackey Award (best college tight end) watch list in 2014 and 2015, and the preseason Mackey Award watch list in 2015 and 2016.

According to the arrest affidavit, Gaspar gave this account at Florida International University police headquarters:

The two argued through the day over the attention Smith was paying to her and their relationship. While in Smith's dorm room and "feeling extremely emotional and stressed," she told police, she boiled a pot of water. Then, she walked over to Smith and poured it on him.'

Hillary Clinton’s Celebrity Feminism Was a Failure

Mastodon · 11 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Clinton’s campaign strategy, especially when it came to appealing to white women, indicates that she and her staffers didn’t quite grasp these dynamics. Her campaign employed a candy-colored brand of female empowerment seemingly based on the assumption that white women’s political priorities are influenced by the pop culture they consume. White working-class women weren’t going to vote for Clinton just because Lady Gaga, Katy Perry, Lena Dunham, and Sheryl Sandberg were.

These celebrity overtures were out of step with the priorities and concerns of white working-class women. How can you “lean in,” as Sandberg implores working women to do, when it’ll cost you your minimum-wage job? And if you can’t afford HBO, how likely is it you even know who Lena Dunham is, much less care about her political opinions?

Yet Clinton’s campaign relied heavily on these endorsement gimmicks. It saturated its messaging with the same superficial celebrity feminism that anoints everyone from Taylor Swift to Madeline Albright as role models for would-be girl bosses. It assumed that this branding, and Clinton’s bid to make history, would be enough to attract the white women she needed to win. Not only did this tactic fail in that regard, but it alienated some queer women, women of color, and even millennials.'

Sweden’s ‘Gender-Equal’ Snow Clearing Approach Ends In Chaos

Mastodon · 13 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Politicians blame a new “gender equal” snow plowing policy for the Swedish capital of Stockholm’s failure to clear roads during the season’s first snow fall.

Stockholm’s center-left government introduced a new “gender equal” approach to clearing the roads of snow last year. The policy states that sidewalks, public transport and bicycle lanes should be cleared before turning attention to the roads. The reason is that women are more likely to use sidewalks while men are overrepresented among commuters driving to work.

When the first major snow storm swept the capital last week, traffic went into a standstill as no one cleared the streets. People couldn’t get to work, schools had to close and commuters were stuck in traffic for hours without moving.'

Congress May Not Require Women to Register for Draft

Mastodon · 13 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'While U.S. Defense Department officials have made clear it has no problem with requiring women to register for the draft, lawmakers in Congress appear poised to dodge the issue in the upcoming battle over the defense policy bill.

House and Senate negotiators plan to shelve the provision in the Senate version of the National Defense Authorization Act in favor of ordering up a study of the issue, sources told Politico and the Washington Examiner.

"Neither majorities support it," a source told Politico. "There's bigger things to worry about" in the $602 billion defense bill proposed by the Pentagon and the White House.'

Working Class Women Realized Hillary's 'Form of Feminism Discriminates Against Their Sons'

Mastodon · 14 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Monday's Breitbart News Daily, University of Maryland business Professor Peter Morici told SiriusXM host Alex Marlow that Democrats' constant allegations of racism and sexism – while they, and institutions they dominate, systematically discriminate against white males – were a major reason Donald Trump was able to defeat Hillary Clinton.

"The Democratic Party – and Hillary Clinton, a great champion of this – has been advocating that every group in America practice identity politics, except white heterosexual males," said Professor Morici.
...
"That's why she didn't get those women voters among folks that had not graduated college in those parts of the country. Her form of feminism discriminates against their sons. It's racist. It's sexist. My university practices it. Just about every university in the country practices it," Morici lamented.

"For example, do you know that 60 percent of the college graduates are females? Now, if we just had wrapped up eight years of Donald Trump and that was the case [in reverse], they'd be screaming bloody murder that he wasn't using the Department of Education to level the playing field," he contended.

"Instead, the Department of Education is systematically pushing universities to further bias the system against boys, and it does it very, very well. More boys drop out of high school, fewer go to college, fewer graduate, and so it goes," Morici said.'

DOJ: Va. driver's license suspension law unconstitutional

Matt · 15 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S. Department of Justice is siding with a lawsuit challenging Virginia's practice of suspending the driver's licenses of people who can't pay court costs and fines.

Media outlets report a team of DOJ civil rights lawyers filed a brief last week supporting the class-action lawsuit against the Virginia Department of Motor Vehicles, saying the practice violates the U.S. Constitution's due process guarantee.

The Legal Aid Justice Center filed the lawsuit in July on behalf of low-income drivers who lost their license for failing to pay court debts. The suit said the state's failure to take into account people's financial circumstances unfairly punishes the poor.'

Swedish women get hotline to report mansplaining

Mastodon · 15 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Women who have things mansplained to them in the workplace can now report it to a dedicated hotline.

Unionen, Sweden's largest union, is encouraging members to call up when male colleagues give them unsolicited lectures on things they already understand.

The organisation, which represents 600,000 private sector workers, launched the advice line on Monday and said it will be open from 10am to 4pm everyday for a week as part of a campaign to highlight and stamp out the insidious and damaging practice.'

Let's Talk About Misandry, The Silent Hatred For Men That We Brush Off As Innocent "Male-Bashing"

Mastodon · 16 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Male-bashing" is a term I grew up hearing often, and not just by women, but also brothers, fathers and uncles around me. No one took it seriously, but everyone of the second sex did it... the hormonal teenaged girls who were just entering the world of boys, 20-somethings who had boyfriends and ex-boyfriends, the middle-aged married women who were struggling to find the balance between husbands, kids, parents, in-laws, and work, as well as the elderly women who spent their evenings in the park, giggling over the daily spats they had with their husbands. It was all in jest, taken as a frivolous activity that women indulged in. Until, of course, a couple would break into a fight, and the husband, in a fit of anger would spew out the blasphemous words, "God knows what kind of ideas your female friends are feeding you!" It was in statements like this, that the innate misandry in this innocent act of “male-bashing” would be exposed.

A few weeks ago, a male friend noted, "This is the opposite of misogyny. Wait, is there even a term in feminism, for all this hate toward men?" There is, and it is, "misandry." It is a sadly under-recognised, and not a very well-understood phenomenon. But, the concept somewhere floats in the background of debates about equality. It gets overshadowed and silenced, because we focus more on male-supremacy and entitlement. But, at the root of it all, there is a dislike for men which drives us to fight them.'

In bold new step, Dutch science academy holds women-only elections

Mastodon · 16 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'AMSTERDAM—Sorry guys—this time it's women only. That's the message the Royal Netherlands Academy of Arts and Sciences (KNAW) here has for male researchers during two special elections. In order to reduce its perpetual gender imbalance—87% of its 556 members are men—the academy seeks to recruit 10 new members in 2017 and six more in 2018, all with two X chromosomes.

It's about as bold a step as any science academy has taken to address the underrepresentation of women—and for some it raises concerns. "I don't think we would do that," says Marcia McNutt, a geophysicist who became the first female president of the U.S. National Academy of Sciences (NAS) in Washington, D.C., earlier this year. "Other people might feel that women elected this way somehow did not meet the same standards as their male counterparts, or even other women elected through the regular process," McNutt says. But KNAW President José van Dijck says the process will be "just as rigorous as always."
...
The plan "does not come at men's expense," Van Dijck stresses, because regular election rounds, which allow 16 members annually into the pinnacle of Dutch academe, will continue. The proposal was approved by a 73% majority during an academy-wide vote earlier this year.'

Mom who fled to England pleads guilty in kidnapping

fathers4fairness · 16 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This is justice in America for mothers who deny fathers their kids. Excerpt:

'Two decades ago, a Placitas woman left her husband and took their three children with her to England.

Eileen Clark faced a judge and the man she left on Wednesday, pleading guilty in the kidnapping case. In exchange for the plea, she will not face jail time and will be allowed to return to England to her children, who are now adults.

"What she did to me was deny me my parental rights to have an opportunity to grow up and be in their life, to build memories with them. She took all that away from me," said John Clark.

Eileen Clark's attorneys said she regrets leaving the way she did, but took off to get out of an unhappy marriage.'

UK: Philip Davies accused of "mansplaining" during International Men's Day debate

Mastodon · 18 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Tory has been accused of “mansplaining” in the UK after he became embroiled in a row with a female MP during a controversial Commons debate to mark International Men’s Day.

Philip Davies accused the SNP’s justice spokeswoman Joanna Cherry of failing to prepare for the debate after she questioned his claims that fathers were wrongly being denied access to their children.

It came after Davies accused “politically motivated people” of wanting to conduct “a war on gender”.

During the debate Cherry, a QC who has taught law at the University of Edinburgh, challenged Davies over if he was aware of any “empirical research which shows that the legal system in either Scotland or England is biased against fathers, because I’m not”.'

Woman Creates Registry For White Men (Until We Figure Out What's Going On)

Mastodon · 19 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Amongst all of the talk about forcing Muslim immigrants to register in a national database, it seems we've forgotten who the actual threat to our safety really is: white men.

That's right. Unlike Muslims in the U.S., white men are demonstrably more likely to commit a mass shooting than any other group and they are the majority of rape perpetrators. So in the spirit of registries, one Brooklyn-based woman, Candace Thompson, created a tongue-in-cheek registration form for members of this most dangerous demographic.

"Forget the nation of Islam, our most immediate threat to domestic security is and always has been white, straight men," she wrote in a Facebook post on Thursday. "That is why I have decided to do my part as a Red Blooded Patriot by creating The White Male Registry. It is a simple google form complete with questions that will help identify just how much of a threat to American security any individual white male may pose to the general public."'

Lawsuit: Cornell refused to investigate rape alleged by male against female sex partner

Matt · 19 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Reverse Title IX discrimination got a boost when the Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights – not known for caring about the rights of accused males – found that Delaware's Wesley College had given the kangaroo-court treatment to males accused of sexual misconduct.

Cornell may be the next on the department's list, at least under a Trump administration.

The Cornell Daily Sun reports that a male student has sued the school because it allegedly refused to investigate his complaint that a female sex partner had sexually assaulted him.'

UK: Patronising 'mansplaining' in Whitehall could be a thing of the past as civil servants fear offending Theresa May

Mastodon · 19 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It is the bane of women across the country - men 'mansplaining' things to them or talking over them in a patronising manner.

And it appears that even senior politicians aren't immune, as civil servants are reportedly now watching their step around Theresa May.

Whitehall is said to be concerned of committing the faux pas when dealing with Britain's second ever female prime minister and her colleagues, after one of Britain's senior security officials, Sir Mark Lyall Grant, was said to have displeased the Prime Minister with his conduct during a meeting, according to The Times.

Sources have apparently said that male officials are now "hyper-aware" of the need to behave appropriately around senior female politicians.

One said of his meetings with Theresa May's largely female team: "I maintain eye contact, ensure I offer only what's wanted and definitely do not talk over them to avoid causing offence."'

Infuriated by condescending men? Call the Australian Mansplaining Hotline today

Mastodon · 19 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I for one will wait not a moment longer to fight mansplaining on my own doorstep. Today I launch the Australian Mansplaining Hotline, and I am ready to take your calls.

What sort of services will I be providing on the AMH?

Well, first of all I will listen. You can be certain that in me you will find a sympathetic and patient ear.
...
Has a colleague given you a detailed explanation of why your work-life balance problems are overstated? Pour your heart out to me.

Did your barista just explain why the wage gap is illusory? Pick up that phone!

I will listen, and I will keep listening. When you call the AMH, never will you be told "I'm too busy", or "I really have to go in a minute", or "Jesus Christ, are you still going?"
...
And here is my guarantee: should your mansplaining issues persist even after the AMH has done its work, I will, at no extra cost, come to your workplace to personally analyse the situation and draw up a plan of action to put an end, once and for all, to your problem, by showing you logically how it isn't actually a problem anymore and it's time for you to get over it.

The Australian Mansplaining Hotline. Real solutions, for real problems, experienced by real Australians, who maybe just need to be a bit less emotional about everything.'

If you're against International Men's Day, you're not a true feminist

Mastodon · 20 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The question shouldn't be whether we need an International Men's Day but how we can respect the issues and challenges faced by men, so that they in turn show the same respect for their female counterparts. How we can lead and fight by example, not alienate a whole sex.

International Men's Day doesn't take away from the issues facing women; we don't have a monopoly on suffering.

Feminists cannot insist that society listen to the problems women face and take them seriously if they are then going to go out of their way to sneer at a day that is discussing how to combat male suicide. It is contradictory, and just downright unfair on the relatives and friends of those who have lost a son, father, husband or a brother to suicide.'

South Africa: Students post pictures of alleged rapist on social media

Mastodon · 20 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yesterday the students, frustrated by the perceived lack of action from Wits University management to the alleged rape, accused it on social media of protecting the "perpetrator", who is also a student, and posted pictures of the man.

Gender-based violence researcher Lisa Vetten warned the students of a potential defamation lawsuit.

"Our law protects the identity of both parties. If the case is still pending and no criminal charges have been laid, the students who posted those pictures could be sued for defamation of character.

"I know they might feel frustrated. In most cases when people name and shame it is because they feel that justice was denied."

Criminal lawyer Ulrich Roux said even if the person had not been charged one could not reveal his identity until he was given a fair chance in a court of law.

"Society cannot pass judgment or try him on social media."'

Police: Woman upset over election makes false rape claim

Mastodon · 20 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who said she had been sexually assault told police that she made up the claim because she was upset over the election.

Police heard about the claim on Nov. 11. The department got an email from someone who had seen a Facebook post in which a woman said she had been assaulted in Kirkland. The post also said Kirkland police responded, but didn't investigate or file a report.

Police began investigating but couldn't find any sort of call matching the woman's claim in the dispatch center.

The identifying information on the Facebook post had been marked out on the email, so investigators couldn't identify the woman.'

Athletes demand compensation from false accuser

Mastodon · 20 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Derrick Rose is demanding tens of thousands of dollars in damages from the woman who accused him of rape after he was cleared in his civil trial.

In a papers filed to a California court, the New York Knicks star claims that he and his fellow defendants are 'entitled' to 'expenses they necessarily incurred in defending themselves against…false claims' brought by the woman.

In 2013 she accused Rose, his manager Randall Hampton and childhood friend Ryan Allen of drugging and raping her.

She claims the three defendants gang raped her without her consent, but while they three men admitted to having sex with the woman, they maintain the act was consensual.'

Student charged with making false rape report

Mastodon · 20 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An 18-year-old University of Alabama student has been charged for falsely reporting she was raped in a parking lot near campus on Sunday, Tuscaloosa County Metro Homicide investigators announced on Friday.

The student, Emma Katherine Mannion, is charged with filing a false report, a Class A misdemeanor, Captain Gary Hood said.

The student told police she was forced into a red Jeep Cherokee and sexually assaulted around 2 a.m. Sunday, Nov. 13. She said it happened in Solomon's parking lot near 6th Street and Wade Wallace Boulevard, near the northwest corner of Bryant-Denny Stadium.'

Stockholm defends 'gender-equal' snow-clearing

Mastodon · 20 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Gender equal snow-cleaning is not to blame here," Daniel Helldén, the city's Green Party transport head told the Expressen newspaper, stressing that the policy, which prioritises cleaning pavements and cycle lanes over roads, did not even appear to have even been followed.

"There is a lack of gender equal snow-clearing now, according to the reports I'm getting," he said. "It's still difficult to walk on the pavements — and it is important that snow-clearing prioritises walkways, public transport and cycle paths."

Stockholm's municipal government, a coalition of the Social Democrats and the Green Party, brought in gender equal snow cleaning last year, pledging to make moving around the city on icy winter days just as safe for women as it is for men.

...

But on Thursday and Friday, the policy came under renewed criticism after the city was thrown into chaos by the unusually heavy snow dump, with buses and trains cancelled, and major motorways blocked.

The policy's apparent failure was celebrated with glee by anti-feminists on Twitter, with even the liberal Dagens Nyheter newspaper running a light-hearted article, titled "Nine alternatives to gender-equal snow-cleaning".'

Texas teacher pleads guilty to sexually assaulting 13-year-old student 'on almost daily basis'

Matt · 20 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former middle school teacher in Texas pleaded guilty to sexually assaulting a 13-year-old student before becoming pregnant as a result.

Police say 24-year-old Alexandria Vera, 24, allegedly sexually assaulted the child “on almost a daily basis”, according to KTRK. She faced federal charges of continuous sexual abuse of a child.

Vera taught eighth grade English at Stovall Middle School in Houston before surrendering herself to authorities for the alleged sexual assault in May.

...

The teacher became pregnant in January 2016, but said she had an abortion after Texas Child Protective Services showed up to the school in February to question her about the relationship.

Investigators found evidence of the relationship on her cell phone, despite her initial denial of any wrongdoing.'

How All-Female ISIS Morality Police 'Khansaa Brigade' Terrorized Mosul

Matt · 20 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Battle-hardened militants were far from the most terrifying thing for many women living under their harsh rule in the ISIS-conquered city of Mosul.

"I was much more afraid of women," said Umm Fatma, referring to female members of the terror organization's morality police, known as the Hisbah.

"The women would beat you for the smallest thing — how you looked or how you wore your headscarf, " the 28-year-old mother of three who arrived at the Khazer Camp last week told NBC News. "They used whips and metal sticks."

Restricted in where they could go and what they could wear while in Mosul, refugees described living in fear of the Khansaa Brigade, the all-female ISIS Hisbah units who patrolled the streets tasked with enforcing an extreme version of Shariah law.'

Lawsuit Alleges Bias in University Sexual Assault Investigation

Matt · 20 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Already in the midst of five open Title IX investigations, Cornell is now facing a lawsuit alleging that the University's Title IX coordinator, Sarah Affel, neglected to investigate a complaint by a student who was involved in a sexual assault.

The lawsuit states that two students — referred to as John Doe and Jane Roe — accused each other of sexual assault and says the University opened investigations into both complaints.

However, according to the lawyer behind the suit, Alan Sash, Cornell's investigators only considered Roe's complaint and ignored Doe's on the basis of his gender.

He said that Cornell violated its own policy 6.4 — the University's guidelines for investigating discrimination, sexual harassment, sexual assault and violence — which was revised in August in order to be more fair to both parties involved in assault investigations.'

SJW & Feminist Cringe Compilation [Election Edition] 2016

Mastodon · 21 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. From the description:

'My main goal of this channel is to expose the truth about modern feminism and what it is doing to our society of Westernized culture as a whole. In order to display this message a large amount of my content is based on articles, compilations, interviews etc from around the internet which provide content and proof of said issues. If you have genuine evidence that you have full rights to any of the content provided and are unhappy with it being displayed, please contact me via private message and I will be more than happy to co-operate with your wishes, by either deleting any said videos, or alternatively working out an agreement that will benefit both parties. Thanks for your support everyone and lets work together to get this message out there!'

Milo Yiannopoulos Lecture Shut Down After Pressure From U.K. Government

Mastodon · 21 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A lecture by controversial Breitbart editor and “alt-right” personality Milo Yiannopoulos at Canterbury’s Simon Langton Grammar School for Boys was shut down after pressure from the United Kingdom’s Department of Education.

Yiannopoulos is an alumnus of Langston, but was expelled for what he has characterized as “absolutely outrageous behavior.” Nonetheless, the school’s leadership have expressed disappointment at the cancellation, saying that opposition came entirely from outside the school.

“This decision was taken following contact from the Department For Education’s counter extremism unit, the threat of demonstrations at the school by organised groups and members of the public and our overall concerns for the security of the school site and the safety of our community,” said head teacher Matthew Baxter in a statement.'

Feminism Makes Weak Women

Mastodon · 22 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminism claims to stand for two things above all: women's equality and enabling women to be strong.

Regarding the first aim, no decent man or woman opposes the concept of equality of the sexes. But people who do not call themselves feminists have a problem with the feminist notion of equality: Most feminists have conflated equality and sameness. And that's a huge mistake; the sexes are equal, but they are different.

A second major problem regarding the feminist claim of aspiring to women's equality is that feminists frequently provide false evidence to prove that women are not treated as equals.

The best-known example is the false statistic that American women earn about 25 percent less than men when they do the same work for the same amount of time.'

Safe Space Movement Breaks Into Astronomy

Mastodon · 22 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Astronomers who work for the Australian government are demanding “safe workplaces for scientists” that are free of alleged bullying and sexist comments.

The academics demand a safe space from the Commonwealth Scientific and Industrial Research Organisation (CSIRO), Australia’s state science research organization, because they allege it is “failing to address a culture of bullying and sexual harassment in its astronomy department.”

CSIRO has conducted only 16 investigations into alleged professional misconduct in the department since 2008. None of these investigations led to any legal action and only one involved police.

The academics claim that this extremely low number of investigations is evidence that the Australian government “may suppress reporting of harassment.” The only evidence of harassment provided by the academics demanding a safe space was a statement that their “pain was evident.”

Very little information has been published about the sole case involving police, and the only legal action that occurred was the perpetrator being counseled and having an “adverse finding” placed on their file, indicating that the situation wasn’t serious.'

Malecare: Cancergraph Free on Android & iOS

Matt · 24 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Cancergraph is now a free download for Android and Apple iPhone's, worldwide.

Download Android Here
Download iPhone Here

Cancergraph tracks your cancer symptoms and side effects over days, months and years. Designed by cancer survivors and caregivers, Cancergraph focuses on the unique experiences we face with cancer.

Cancergraph saves time and prevents confusion during your doctor meetings.

Cancergraph serves as a memory tool, giving you and your doctors reliable reports about your day-to-day cancer-related experiences. It's easy to set up: choose from a list of symptoms and side effects, and you're done. Cancergraph creates a report that you can view on their phone, print out or email to doctors.

You can also take disease- and symptom-related photos to be added to a secure photo storage area on your phone. All data is under your control. You can delete your entire Cancergraph at any time.

Cancergraph was created by the national men's cancer survivor nonprofit, Malecare. It was funded entirely by individual donations.

Please download Cancergraph now and see for yourself how easy and useful it is.

Please feel encouraged to email your comments and questions.

Very best regards,

Darryl Mitteldorf, LCSW

Executive Director
Malecare Cancer Support
darryl@malecare.org

SAVE: Important New Dept. of Education Case Summary

Matt · 24 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

About one month ago, the Department of Education, Office for Civil Rights (OCR) made a landmark finding: for the first time ever, OCR concluded that a college had violated the Title IX rights of a student accused of sexual assault.

SAVE has compiled a summary of the government's settlement and findings with the school, Wesley College. This six-page summary is available here: http://www.saveservices.org/wp-content/uploads/Wesley-College-2016-Determination-and-Agreement-Summary.pdf

SAVE hopes that you will find it useful for your work on campus sexual assault and due process issues.

This crucial case lays the groundwork that procedural protections are needed for each student in a hearing. SAVE is working to ensure this happens!

Thank you!

Very best,

Gina R. Lauterio, Esq.
Policy Project Director
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE)

The Obama Administration Remade Sexual Assault Enforcement on Campus. Could Trump Unmake It?

Mastodon · 26 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'And feminist legal theorist Janet Halley, their colleague who has contested the OCR's process in the Harvard Law Review, describes the “Dear Colleague” letter as a case of “administrative overreach.”

Halley, who has participated in sexual-violence cases at Harvard, has had concerns about their fairness from the beginning.

She took pains to say that she cares deeply about sexual assault, but she worries about an overcorrection, prompted by OCR, that moves universities from ignoring the rights of accusers to trampling on those of the accused.

“Just imagine if you were asked to go in to explain why you didn’t commit a sexual assault,” Halley said. With no information as to what you’re accused of, who’s accusing you, or when it allegedly happened, “you’re required to start explaining yourself. And you’re 18 years old, and no one is helping you."

Halley describes the new system as all but designed to produce “false positives” — innocent students wrongfully punished — both because of the looser evidentiary standard and because of Title IX officers’ desire to produce numbers that show they're taking sexual violence seriously.

In her own experience, Halley says, that has meant that a disproportionate share of those accused, and those punished, are men of color and those who have less access to family resources and legal help.'

S Africa: Male rape survivors excluded from 16 Days of Activism

Matt · 26 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Friday marks the start of the 16 Days of Activism for No Violence Against Women and Children but male rape and sexual abuse support groups have spoken out that the campaign is not inclusive of male victims of abuse.

There are many stigmas surrounding sexual crimes against men. This is according to Oliver Meth who is part of a support group called the Rape Survivors Network.

He was brutally gang-raped by three men in a graveyard at the age of 16. Meth is unhappy with the campaign as he believes it further fuels the stigmatisation of male rape survivors by excluding them.

“It stigmatises men to say that men will always be seen as the perpetrator and not seen as the victims of sexual violence or violence. That’s why the 16 days of activism campaign needs to drop gendered language, suggesting that only women and children are victims of sexual violence and abuse; we need to make this campaign much more inclusive so that we can include men.”'

Women Against Paternity Fraud Submits Paternity Acknowledgment Program Recommendations to HHS

Matt · 28 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In-hospital paternity acknowledgements are a cornerstone of government policy and a requirement for any state seeking TANF funds. Establishing paternity is important in knowing what name should be placed on a child's birth certificate, for financial support, access to family medical records, social security and veterans benefits, inheritance, custody and visitation, and the emotional advantage of building a relationship with both parents and extended families.

The current procedure is an example of good intentions gone badly. If the program was designed to do DNA testing prior to asking a man to sign a "paternity acknowledgment form" then this program would be workable.

However, a program that fails to screen out false paternity establishments scores a temporary statistical victory for states seeking TANF funds, but causes enormous enforcement burdens and emotional costs to the victims of false establishments.'

UK: Married teaching assistant jailed for two years for sex acts with 15-YO

Matt · 29 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A MARRIED teaching assistant who admitted performing a string of sex acts on a schoolboy whilst on a plane home from a school trip has been jailed for more than two years.

Jill Meldrum-Jones, 37, met the pupil at a school where she assisted in PE, science and humanities subjects.

The mum-of-two from Kineton, admitted to performing various sex acts on a 15-year-old boy, including performing oral sex, masturbating him and allowing him to perform sex acts on her.

She was forced to sign the sex offenders' register after pleading guilty to the incidents, which happened on a school trip after she met the pupil at the school she worked at in Warwickshire.

The court heard the pair became close during a school trip to South Africa last year and started going for walks alone together.

Meldrum-Jones first performed a sex act on the boy while on a minibus with other pupils.
...
"Her victim has struggled to come to terms with what happened and it is vital that children who are subjected to sexual misconduct, get the necessary support to move forward with their lives."'

Canada: Prof accused of harassing female students for being straight

Mastodon · 29 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The lesbian academic who accused Toronto free speech advocate Jordan Peterson of hate speech taught a course full of “misandry,” or hatred of men, according to a former student.

The student who took a fourth-year course at the University of British Columbia from Mary K. Bryson in 1991 told National Post columnist Christie Blatchford she had taken other women’s studies courses but never been in a class “where misandry was taught to you.”

Bryson, a senior associate dean and professor of education at the University of British Columbia, was one of two people brought in for a forum this month at the University of Toronto to challenge psychology professor Jordan Peterson’s claims that federal and provincial human rights legislation and U of T anti-discrimination measures were dangerous attacks on free speech.

The other opponent to Peterson’s actions confined herself to trying to prove that Bill C-16, which would protect transgender and gender-fluid persons from hate speech, was a reasonable measure. But Bryson engaged in ad hominem attacks on Peterson for using his privileged position to attack “the precarious minority” of “transgender and gender-fluid’ persons. He did this, she said with assertions that had never been submitted to the scrutiny of “peer reviewed journals,” and was therefore “in total dereliction of his academic duty.”'

Canada: Famous Authors Sign Letter Questioning Due Process For Campus Sexual Assault Cases

Mastodon · 29 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Was novelist Steven Galloway's dismissal from his university position justice for women, or a modern Salem witch hunt?

The former chair of the creative writing program at the University of British Columbia was fired in June following an investigation into multiple allegations of sexual harassment and other improprieties. This week, the Canadian literary world has been wracked with discord over the case following the publication of a scathing open letter to UBC signed by dozens of authors including Margaret Atwood, Yann Martel, Madeleine Thien and Michael Ondaatje.

The letter, reportedly circulated by author Joseph Boyden, calls attention to "growing evidence that the University acted irresponsibly in Professor Galloway's case" and argues that as the case was widely publicized, "the situation requires public clarification." The statement has drawn an explosive response, with many arguing it shows little concern for alleged victims and complainants.

Galloway had been publicly suspended in November 2015 for what the dean of arts termed "serious allegations." News reports from the past year indicate allegations that include sexual assault, sexual harassment, inappropriate relationships with students, bullying, and even an incident in which he slapped a student, though the details remain fuzzy. The open letter argues that the university's public memo and actions following his suspension created "a cloud of suspicion over Professor Galloway [...] severely damaging Professor Galloway's reputation and affecting his health."

The statement also criticizes UBC for a lack of transparency regarding the specific charges and notes that criminal charges have not been brought. Furthermore, the statement maintains, UBC has failed to make public the results of an independent investigation conducted by former BC Supreme Court Judge Mary Ellen Boyd, although "[b]oth a statement from the UBC Faculty Association and the report of an independent journalist who had access to the Boyd report have since revealed that all but one of the allegations investigated, including the most serious one, were unsubstantiated."'

Woman gets 18 months for false rape report

Mastodon · 29 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A woman who falsely accused a man of raping her was sentenced to 18 months in prison Wednesday.

Katheran M. Lindell, 20, previously pleaded guilty in Muskingum County Common Pleas Court to falsification, a first-degree misdemeanor, and tampering with evidence, a third-degree felony.

Muskingum County Assistant Prosecutor Ron Welch argued that even though Lindell has no prior felonies, she should serve the maximum allowed sentence, which was three years in prison, because of the seriousness of the crime.

What she has done makes it harder for actual rape victims to receive justice, Welch said, which is already a difficult process. And the victim in this case, the man she accused, was the subject of an investigation for no reason.

"There is an individual who did absolutely nothing wrong and had his life turned upside-down," Welch said.'

Canada: Students' campaign for women-only gym hour gains support, opposition

Mastodon · 29 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A student-led campaign at Carleton University to reserve one hour of gymnasium time for women only is gaining supporters, and some detractors.

The campaign was launched in early November by the Carleton University Students' Association (CUSA) Womyn's Centre, in partnership with the campus Muslim Students' Association, the Graduate Students' Association and a campus residence association.

Program co-ordinator Sydney Schneider said a survey circulated on campus generated 1,200 responses, most of them "overwhelmingly positive," but the campaign is meeting with its share of detractors as well.

A counter-petition on Change.org has garnered 130 signatures, and some students on campus have expressed their dissent in other ways, with several reports of campaign posters being vandalized and torn down. Schneider called that response "disheartening."

"The concept of segregating men and women in any way is inherently sexist," states the petition, posted two weeks ago by a user named Candice Smith, who claims the student activists behind the campaign are using "twisted statistics in order to manipulate the student body."'

For Women, a Cheaper, Better Alternative to Prison

Mastodon · 29 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As a country, we've chosen the expensive option: rather than treat addicts, we incarcerate them. When they reoffend, we incarcerate them again — and again and again and again.

Luckily, the inexpensive solution is also the humane solution. When we talk about female drug addicts, more often than not, we're talking about women who were molested or beaten in childhood and self-medicated the only way they knew how. The path for them to get clean is to address the traumas that drive their addictions.

In Tulsa, Okla., I visited a female-only drug treatment center called Women in Recovery. Of their patients, 65 percent had been victims of childhood sexual abuse.
...
Across the country, more than 215,000 women are incarcerated, and women are the fastest-growing segment of the incarcerated population — due in large part to the war on drugs. Diversion programs like Women in Recovery have sprung up in order to address the issues at the root of drug-related crimes.

Smith says that unlike prison, the best diversion programs are gender-specific, address trauma and aim to keep families intact. "Generally speaking, these programs are amazingly effective," she said.

Most diversion programs cost less than prison, according to Smith, and provide further savings because they lower recidivism rates and decrease the chances that children will become criminals, too. In other words, everybody benefits.'

‘No-Shave November’ Now Under Attack

Mastodon · 29 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For about a decade, men across the globe have forgone shaving in November to raise awareness about men’s health issues, from prostate cancer to male suicide.

The tradition had a good run, but now, suddenly, No-Shave November (also known as Movember) is apparently problematic.

Social-justice warriors worldwide have rushed to point out how the month-long event, regardless of its good intentions, is too gendered. In a nearly unintelligible sentence published by Sydney’s Daily Telegraph this month, one critic wrote: “It’s disappointing that what could’ve served as a much-needed dialogue about the many ways in which men, trans men included, can express their masculinity without resorting to chauvinist caricatures is in danger of devolving into at best a pissing contest between bros about who can grow the most facial hair to prove their manliness and at worst an implicit endorsement of 1950s-style gender norms, complete with transphobia.”'

Men to America — Thanks for nothing

Mastodon · 29 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Back during the election campaign, a Fiscal Times columnist warned that even as Hillary Clinton played the woman card, more men were being dealt out of American society:

A key indicator of American male decline is the gender ratio at U.S. colleges. According to the National Center for Education Statistics, women accounted for 43% of enrollees in degree-granting postsecondary institutions in 1972. The other 57% were men. Forty years later, the ratio had flipped. In 2012, the latest year for which actual data were reported, women made up 57% of the college population, with men representing the remaining 43%. Further, NCES projects that the gap will widen by 2022, when women are expected to reach 61% of the college population. If that projection holds, America will have roughly 14 million female college students and only 10 million male college students.

If men are underrepresented in college, they're overrepresented in prison, the column continued: "At the end of 2014, almost 93% of inmates in state and federal correctional facilities were male. There were over 1.4 million male prisoners compared with 113,000 female inmates." State and local prisons are also overwhelmingly filled by men.'

A Young Feminist's Compassionate View of Men

Matt · 29 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For nearly 25 years I have been concerned about an issue that has received scant attention in the academy or the media: the problems faced by boys and men in our society. My own work on this started with a piece I wrote in 1993, titled “Loving Pale Males,” which talked about the dilemma I found myself in, as the liberal father of three boys, when men—especially white men, but really men in general—were being attacked by a growing feminist movement.

The piece came very close to being published in the New York Times magazine, but didn’t, and I couldn’t find a publisher elsewhere. Naively, I didn’t realize that with so much attention being paid to girls and women and their struggles, there was little room for anything dealing with concerns about males of any age.

In the years since, while I have found that I have a lot of company in my concerns, they have not hit the mainstream. But finally that may all be changing, with the release of a documentary by a young and courageous filmmaker named Cassie Jaye. The Red Pill is a look at the men’s rights movement by a self-identified feminist, who started out wanting to do a documentary about “rape culture,” but found herself suddenly listening to the voices of men talking about their pain. (The movie’s title comes from the 1999 feature film, The Matrix, where taking the red pill meant that you would now be able to see the unvarnished truth. It’s a term that has been widely used by men’s rights activists (or MRAs).)'

Canadian military prioritizing female recruiting after report

Mastodon · 29 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Canada's military is moving women to the top of the recruiting line as part of its effort to bring more gender balance to its uniformed ranks.

The announcement came Tuesday after the auditor general concluded that the military's aspiration of having women make up 25 per cent of its personnel within the next decade appeared to be just that — a dream with no strategy to actually accomplish the goal.

...

But a report by the auditor general of Canada found that the military lacked a strategy to actually achieve that target.

...

But on Tuesday, the general in charge of military personnel said there was a strategy ready to recruit more women and improve recruiting overall.

"To increase the representation of women in the (Canadian Armed Forces), women applicants who meet the required entry standards will go to the head of the queue," Lt.-Gen. Christine Whitecross, commander of Military Personnel Command, said in a statement.

That move also includes the two military colleges, where young officers began their careers.'

College Bathroom Graffiti Campaign Tars Students as ‘Perpetrators of Rape Culture’

Mastodon · 29 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Twice in the past month, graffiti appeared in three bathrooms on Pitzer College’s campus, naming students who were allegedly “perpetrators of rape culture” and “perpetrators of sexual assault.”

The first time the names appeared on the bathroom walls, on Oct. 26, administrators painted over them — but the next day, the graffiti was back.

Pitzer has been unable to identify which students or student organizations are behind the bathroom-writing campaign, though an investigation is ongoing.

The Pitzer Advocates for Survivors of Sexual Assault, a student organization, wrote in a campus-wide email that the graffiti was potentially deeply triggering.

“The danger of being confronted with the name of a past assaulter in this manner has the potential to be extremely re-traumatizing, and we want to encourage cognizance of this reality,” they said.

In response to the graffiti, Pitzer’s Title IX office sent a campus-wide email informing students about how to report a sexual assault, as well as resources for victims.

But administrators also noted that Title IX protects all students from gender-based discrimination and harassment, so “the email also offered support and resources to those named in the writings and is reaching out individually to all students affected by the writings,” says Title IX coordinator Corinne Vorenkamp.

Not everyone was pleased with the Title IX office’s outreach to students named and shamed on the bathroom walls. The student newspaper reported that some on campus found the Title IX office’s email “triggering in its defense of perpetrators of rape culture.”'

Woman stabs man after bizarre vampirism experiment

Matt · 30 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. I couldn't make this up if I wanted to. Excerpt:

'It all started with a conversation about vampires.

A man was curious about sucking someone's blood, so Victoria Vanatter, 19, allegedly gave him permission to cut her arm with a razor and drink some of her blood in the kitchen of a Springfield home.

The blood sucking, police say, was followed by arguing.

Court documents say there was some yelling and slapping before Vanatter grabbed a knife and stabbed the man several times.

Vanatter then "came to" and called 911, according to court documents.

Vanatter has been charged with first-degree domestic assault and armed criminal action in connection with the events that occurred Wednesday afternoon in Springfield.
...
Vanatter said at one point she tried to prevent the man from leaving the home because she was worried about going to jail, but she eventually realized she would go to jail anyway so she called 911, according to the statement.

Vanatter and the man were each treated at the hospital and received stitches for their cuts. Vanatter is now being held at the Greene County Jail on $150,000 bond.'

Judge rules sperm donor not on hook for child support

Matt · 30 November 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Topeka man who answered a Craigslist ad to donate sperm so two women could have a baby together is not legally the child's father and isn't required to provide financial support, a Kansas judge has ruled.

The state Department for Children and Families had not decided as of Tuesday whether it would appeal last week's ruling by Shawnee County District Judge Mary Mattivi. The department sought to force William Marotta to pay child support for the girl born in December 2009.

Mattivi last year required Marotta to submit a DNA sample to confirm that he was the girl's biological father and declared he was not "a mere donor of sperm." But the judge's Nov. 22 ruling concluded that birth mother's former partner should be considered the child's second parent rather than Marotta, in part because he has had minimal contact with the girl.

The department filed a petition in 2012 to have Marotta declared the child's legal father and require him to pay child support after the women, birth mother Jennifer Schreiner and Angela Bauer, separated and Schreiner received assistance from the state. The department initially sought to reclaim about almost $6,100 in expenses associated with the child's birth.'

New court ruling recognizing a due process right to cross-examination at a public institution

Matt · 1 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Ruling here. Excerpt (pp 10-11):

'Defendants maintain that the UC disciplinary process does not prohibit cross-examination. Instead, parties are able to submit questions to the ARC Chair who may in his or her discretion, ask those questions to the witnesses at the hearing. Defendants explain that the reason cross-examination was unavailable in this case was because Jane Roe did not attend the disciplinary hearing. The Court acknowledges that in some cases, this format of cross-examination may not constitute a due process violation. However, in this case, Plaintiff was effectively denied the right to cross-examination because he was not notified in advance of the hearing that Jane Roe would not be present at the ARC Hearing. It was plain at the hearing that Plaintiff intended to ask certain questions, but because Jane Roe was not present at the hearing, he was not able to ask those questions. While this is not to say that UC's procedures must require the complainant to be present, at the very least, Plaintiff should have had the opportunity to submit written cross-examination questions to the ARC Chair in accordance with the Student Code of Conduct.'

University declares ’emotional manipulation’ to be rape

Matt · 3 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A private Massachusetts university considers coercion to be a form of rape, according to its website.

A part of Clark University’s guide for sexual survivors, “A Definition of Rape, Sexual Assault and Related Terms,” breaks down consent, sexual abuse, stranger rape and heterosexism, among other things.

Coercion, as defined by the university, “is considered rape/sexual assault.”

“Coercion is the use of emotional manipulation to persuade someone to something they may not want to do — like being sexual or performing sexual acts,” the college’s website states.

“Being coerced into having sex or performing sexual acts is not consenting to having sex and is considered rape/sexual assault,” it continues.'

Fatherhood: the antidote to the poverty problem

Mastodon · 4 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'According to the World Bank, in the year 2015 the extreme poverty rate (less than $2/day) around the world allegedly dropped below 10% for the first time. Although this is good progress, extreme poverty, for 702 million people, remains an international crisis. We know that women and children are deeply impacted socially and academically by living in poverty.

Politicians, economists and other organizations have many ideas for solving this crisis. United Nations officials, for example, have set a noble goal “to end poverty in all its forms everywhere by 2030”—also known as Sustainable Development Goal #1.2 Is this goal well intentioned? Indeed. Is it attainable? That depends on how one makes sense of the problem. Misdiagnosing the source of this poverty problem can lead to the wrong prescribed solution—no matter how well-intentioned.
...
Current social science research powerfully asserts: “...there is a Father-Factor in our [world’s] worst social problems. In other words, for many of our most intractable social ills affecting children, father absence is to blame.” In the United States over 24 million children are growing up without their biological father; in the year 2014 nearly a quarter of children lived in father-absent homes. Dr. Pat Fagan writes: “The Index of Family Belonging for the United States is now just above 45%, which means that 45% of U.S. children on the cusp of adulthood have grown up in an intact married family.”

This is, in large measure, due to the rise of divorce rates and out-of-wedlock births over the past 50 years. In 1960 only 6% of babies were born to unwed mothers in the United States. Thanks to the sexual revolution of the 1960’s and the passing of no-fault divorce laws in many countries, that number has risen to over 40% today and continues to increase. Similar trends can be seen in countries around the world. Creating a worldwide culture that teaches sex is a deserved commodity and marriage is based in adult desires and emotions has done more damage to the family structure than almost anything else.

In the overwhelming majority of divorce cases in many countries, custody of the children is given to the mother. Although children who are victims of divorce still have a father, the severing of their parents’ marriage often severs the consistent influence from the father. This has had devastating effects—especially in the economic realm, as we will see in the next section.'

Woman arrested after threatening coworkers, store with a rifle, a knife, and a torch

mens_issues · 5 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

A bungled case of attempted workplace violence, here. Excerpt:

'A Prescott woman is facing attempted homicide and arson charges after she returned to work following a dispute armed with a knife, a rifle and a torch.

Around 6:28 a.m. on Saturday, Dec. 3, Prescott police responded to the Wal-Mart store at 3050 Highway 69 in Prescott, after the manager of the store called 9-1-1 to report a disorderly woman in the parking lot with a rifle.

Officers found 24-year-old Ebonice Johnson, Prescott, near the back of the store and took her into custody without incident.
...
Detectives served a search warrant at Johnson's home and located evidence related to her intentions and plans to harm her co-workers. At this point it appears Johnson was motivated by her dissatisfaction at work and the investigation is not revealing any other cause for her extreme behavior. Johnson was booked into the Yavapai County Jail on charges including four counts of attempted homicide (pre-meditated), arson of an occupied structure, and weapons misconduct-all are felony charges.

Johnson lawfully purchased the rifle a year and a half ago and had no previous convictions related to weapons misconduct.'

How to make feminism great again

Mastodon · 5 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First of all, it’s time to stop calling the United States a patriarchy. A patriarchy is a system where men hold the power and women do not. Women do hold power in the United States — they lead major universities and giant corporations, write influential books, serve as state and federal judges and even manage winning presidential campaigns. American women, especially college-educated women, are the freest and most self-determining in human history. Why pretend otherwise?

Feminism is drowning in myth-information. Advocates never tire of telling us that women are cheated out of nearly a quarter of their salary; that one in four college women is sexually assaulted, or that women are facing an epidemic of online abuse and violence. Such claims are hugely distorted, but they have been repeated so often that they have taken on the aura of truth. Workplace discrimination, sexual assault and online threats are genuine problems, but to solve them women need sober analysis, not hype and spin. Exaggerated claims and crying wolf discredit good causes and send scarce resources in the wrong direction.

Today’s women’s movement also needs to reckon with the fact that men struggle just as much as women. Modern life is a complicated mix of burdens and advantages for each sex. Too often, feminism focuses on gender inequities among elites: CEOs, MIT astrophysicists, U.S. senators. It is true that there are too few women in those positions, but we need to consider the entire workforce for context. Most backbreaking, lethally dangerous jobs — roofer, logger, roustabout and coal miner, to name a few — are done by men. It is men — especially working-class men — who are disproportionately crushed, mutilated, electrocuted or mangled at work. Activists lament the dearth of women in the Fortune 500, but they fail to mention the Unfortunate 4,500 — the approximate number of men killed on the job every year.'

Two Female Students In Legal Trouble After False Rape Reports

Mastodon · 6 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female students at two separate universities faced legal repercussions last month after they reported sexual assaults that police say never happened.

In mid-November, a Missouri circuit court judge ordered two years of probation for a Lindenwood University student who pleaded no contest to making a false report, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch reported this week after reviewing the court records.

In 2014, when Joanna Newberry was 21, she told police she had fought off a man who attacked her in the basement of the university's library; he had jumped out of the stall where he was hiding, she claimed, and tried to pull off her leggings as she kicked and struggled, she said.'

Why an Ottawa Theatre Pulled a Screening of a Men’s Rights Documentary

Mastodon · 7 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A documentary about men's rights activism will be screening in Ottawa today, but not at the venue organizers originally intended. Ottawa's city hall has picked up the booking, but a theatre owner says that hasn't stopped an army of online trolls from insulting staff and declaring rights have been violated.
...
The documentary follows filmmaker Cassie Jaye as she listens to men inside the movement, some of whom compare feminism to white nationalism. MRA leaders tell her about health and domestic abuse issues from the perspective that men face greater discrimination than women, and are punished and ridiculed for voicing those concerns. The film shares a name with a Reddit forum in which men vent rage against women and discuss strategies for pushing women into submission.

Jaye told CBC venues in Australia also canceled the film. "I've noticed that most of us are very quick to laugh and scoff at men's issues but if the genders were reversed that would be hateful, hate speech, sexist, misogynist," she said.
...
Demarbre said he even felt physically intimidated when he returned the film to CAFE members. He stressed the film itself was not part of his reason for canceling the screening.

"This whole decision had nothing to do with the movie, and everything to do with the CAFE society,"he said. "I don't want those guys in my building."'

Also see: Mayfair Theatre cancels showing of men's rights documentary The Red Pill

Feminist Filmmaker: ‘Women’s Rights Movement Undermines Gender Equality’

Mastodon · 7 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A feminist filmmaker has sparked a worldwide backlash by highlighting the extent to which the women’s rights movement undermines gender equality and prevents men from having a voice.

Cassie Jaye has been deeply involved in the feminist movement for over a decade. But when she stumbled across the men’s rights website A Voice for Men in 2013, while researching rape culture, what she found shocked her.

Far from being privileged by their place in the patriarchy, men in Western societies are twice as likely as women to be murdered, twice as likely to be homeless, three times more likely to take their own lives, and ten times more likely to be jailed.

Jaye decided to follow the men’s rights movement, which she admits to assuming was a “misogynistic hate group” at first thanks to “mainstream media”. Three years later, she no longer calls herself a feminist.'

Socialite in court after assaulting boyfriend with scissors

Matt · 8 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The New York City socialite whose many plastic surgery operations have earned her the nickname 'catwoman' was arrested by police early Wednesday following a fight at her Trump World Tower apartment.

Jocelyn Wildenstein, 76, is accused of clawing her designer boyfriend Lloyd Klein and then slashing his chest with a pair of scissors after flying in to a violent rage at around 1:30am, a source tells Page Six.

Klein, 49, was then forced to shove the 'Bride of Wildenstein' into a closet to prevent another attack according to sources, before police arrived to take her in.

Wildenstein was arraigned in a Manhattan courtroom on Wednesday night, where she spoke with her boyfriend for 20 minutes before appearing in front of the judge.'

Police: Motorist Tried To Run Over Ex As He Put Up Lights

Matt · 8 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'State police say holiday music was blaring from a western Pennsylvania woman's car as she tore up the yard of her ex-boyfriend's home, nearly running the man and his family over.

Forty-seven-year-old Mary Jo Smith was charged Tuesday with multiple offenses stemming from Monday's incident.

Alan McCutcheon says he was setting up a Christmas light display outside of his Fayette County home when Smith yelled "Merry Christmas" and made several passes through his yard.'

Why we need to reclaim masculinity from 'men's rights activists'

Mastodon · 9 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Masculinity is having a good old time of it in 2016, and the recent International Men's Day was a timely reminder of how diverse the approach to issues facing men is. The question of whether we really need an International Men's Day ought to be easily dismissed – yes, should be the answer, as there are a lot of problems being left unsaid, and the theme of this year's IMD was about stopping male suicide.

...

This is why the Daily Mail's articles centred on crying men are not only harmful, but are part of the murderous system that make men feel like they must act a certain way, or consider themselves to be lesser.

It promotes a stoicism that leads to the bottling up of emotions and lack of emotional ties between men that would allow them to open up and communicate when life gets too much.

These articles are often ignored by the misogynistic men's rights activists, too. Due to their focus on attacking women, they have sullied any conversation about issues facing men, thanks to how vocal and vicious they are.'

Don't Think You're Sexist? Sorry, We All Are

Mastodon · 9 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The words of my doctor from earlier that morning were still ringing in my ears when I found myself slamming the breaks of my car to avoid a nasty collision. An incompetent driver was cutting across two lanes at a roundabout just in front of me. Still perspiring somewhat I carried on to drop off my screaming child with the nanny. It was a hectic morning.

Now let's stop to take a breath and ponder on this story. Was the doctor you imagined male? Was the bad driver female? And what of the nanny and the narrator? Females too? If so, you have just experienced unconscious gender bias. You are not alone. Even the almighty Google image search "thinks" 75% of doctors are male but in reality women make up just over half of GPs in the UK. In fact Google has been accused of unconscious bias in its own operations, as over 79 percent of its managers and engineers are male. Apple, Facebook, Twitter and Yahoo are not far behind.'

Congressional rep proposes bill requiring rape charges to appear on college transcripts

Mastodon · 9 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rep. Jackie Speier (D-Calif.) on Thursday proposed the Safe Transfer Act, a bill that would require a student's rape charges to appear on their college transcript for five years following the resolution of their disciplinary hearings. If a student transfers schools while their case is still pending, the case would still remain on their transcript for a year.

If the legislation succeeds, it would be a huge victory for those fighting to end campus sexual assault, as only two states — Virginia and New York — currently require colleges to indicate a student's rape charges on their transcript.

Many people have slammed the disciplinary process of campus assault cases, maintaining that it favors accusers and destroys the lives of young men. But Speier pointed out that, in truth, many students facing sexual assault allegations will walk away relatively unscathed — even if they are found guilty.'

Men are now the downtrodden sex: Feminist reluctantly admits women's fight for equality has gone too far

Mastodon · 9 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Looking back, I can pinpoint the precise moment I became a feminist. I was 17, a bright-eyed student at Warwick University, with a well-thumbed copy of The Female Eunuch clutched in my hand.
...
During the years that have passed since — some of them spent as the editor of Cosmopolitan magazine — the advances made by the women's movement have been extraordinary.
...
But the fact is, in some crucial areas, they are. Take, for example, the fact that, according to the Higher Education Policy Institute, 'a boy born in 2016 will be 75 per cent less likely to attend university than his sister if the present trends continue'.

That's no feminist victory, it's a terrifying prediction which will have widespread ramifications, not just for men in the workplace, but for relationships between men and women as well.
...

Here's another disturbing statistic: across the UK and Republic of Ireland, men are three times more likely to take their own lives than women, according to the Samaritans.

And yet women are twice as likely to be diagnosed with depression.
...
The perceived silencing of and unfairness meted out to men, particularly when it comes to parental access and financial support after divorce, has led to an increasingly vociferous alliance of men who blame a conspiracy of vengeful women, bias in the courts and feminist-dominated social services for ruining their lives and their relationships with their children after separation.

The battle lines are being drawn, and it's only going to get uglier.'

Why It’s Dangerous To Claim Domestic Violence ‘Spikes’ Over The Holidays

Mastodon · 12 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It’s a claim boldly asserted in local news stories each year: Domestic violence spikes during the holiday season. On the surface, the concept sounds plausible enough — for many people, holidays are associated with family tension, crowded homes and copious amounts of alcohol. It follows that violence might increase under such stressful circumstances.

Yet, domestic violence experts say there’s no evidence to back that up, according to interviews conducted by The Huffington Post.

“This is a myth that has been debunked pretty well,” said Monica McLaughlin, deputy director of public policy at the National Network to End Domestic Violence.

She pointed to a 2010 report released by the National Resource Center on Domestic Violence, which was not able “to find any reliable, national study linking the holidays with an increase in domestic violence.”'

UK: Girl gang in sex assault on footballer: Sick women stripped star and filmed ordeal

Matt · 14 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'The trio met the stranger on a night out before luring him back to one of their homes.

They plied him with vodka until he passed out and then sexually assaulted him in a bizarre attack.

Footage shot by the trio showed them dancing as they molested their victim.

A judge warned Brogan Gillard, 26, Paige Cunningham, 22, and Shannon Jones, 20, they faced jail after they admitted sexual assault at Preston Crown Court.

...

The court heard the clip showed the 20-year-old victim, who cannot be named for legal reasons, on the floor as Gillard cut his hair and sliced vegetables over him.

Gillard brandished scissors and asked: “Put in his bum?” before parting the cheeks of his bottom.

Though he felt pain, there was no serious injury.

...

All three, from Barrowin-Furness, Cumbria, will be sentenced in January and were told to sign the sex offenders’ register.

Gillard also admitted unrelated child cruelty charges.'

Trump’s presidency could radically change colleges’ response to sexual assault

Mastodon · 14 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A radically different legal landscape for campus sexual assaults likely awaits colleges and their students after the winter holidays.

The outgoing Obama administration devoted considerable resources to raising awareness about campus sexual assaults and forcing compliance with Department of Education guidelines by opening up more than 200 investigations of schools for possible violations of Title IX – the federal law that prohibits discrimination in education on the basis of gender – over the schools’ handling of campus sexual assaults.

But the incoming Trump administration is likely to rein in what many see as overly aggressive enforcement actions that have produced unfair results for accused students.'

County Schools considering adding 'affirmative consent' to sex ed curriculum

Mastodon · 14 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Middle and high school students in Montgomery County may be in for a change when it comes to sex education. A new proposal would add a tool called "affirmative consent" to the curriculum and would teach students more about consent instead of conflict.

We have heard the phrase “no means no” when it comes to sexual assault. But now, Montgomery County Public Schools are one of the first school systems in the country to consider this change when it comes to teaching students about sex education.

Maryland Del. Ariana Kelly (D-Montgomery) recently spoke to other local lawmakers about a bill that would teach Montgomery County seventh and tenth grade students in the classroom more about saying "yes" when it comes to sex.
...
However, the Montgomery County Board of Education is opposed to the bill, saying in part:

“All health curriculum is aligned and guided by research done by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, National Health Education Standards and the Health Education Curriculum Content and Standards … Based on the research and guidelines, Grade 7 health education curriculum as it related to sexual activity, focuses on waiting to engage in sexual activity, peer pressure and the potential consequences of sexual activity. At the 10th grade level, a large section of the curriculum is dedicated to sexual aggression and consent.”
...
Del. Kelly said they are even looking at how to incorporate age-appropriate affirmative consent curriculum for students as young as fifth grade.'

Woman made up assault by men over "family problems"

Matt · 15 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. "Family problems"? Sorry dear, strict parents are no excuse to promulgate racism and sexism. Aside from the bias in the MSM news plain as day, add the presumption of guilt whenever a woman alleges an assault by a man and you have fertile ground for false accusations. Excerpt:

'New York City college student Yasmin Seweid who claimed to be the victim of a hate crime by Trump supporters is under arrest and charged with filing a false report, a police source told The New York Daily News.

The 18-year-old Seweid caused quite the media stir with her sensationalized account of Trump supporters attacking her on the subway. She claimed three men attempted to pull off her hijab while calling her a terrorist and yelling Trump's name. All this happened, she said, while New Yorkers sat idly by and watched her get assaulted.

The police source told The News that police gave Seweid numerous opportunities to recant her story but she kept sticking to it. Finally, on Wednesday, she admitted she made the whole thing up, citing "family problems."'

In lawsuits, men called sex assault investigations flawed

Mastodon · 16 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The U.S Department of Education's Office for Civil Rights found last year that MSU failed victims by taking too long to investigate reports of sexual misconduct, a position echoed by a growing number of women who say they were assaulted on campus.

The men in these three cases argued that the process doesn't serve the accused well, either.

Each of these students alleged MSU was too eager to cast them out and too lax in its investigation of the claims against them, that witnesses were not placed under oath, attorneys' participation in disciplinary hearings was severely curtailed and even MSU's own investigators failed, in some instances, to follow internal policies.

"With all due respect to Michigan State, the reality here is they haven't caught up to the sanction they are imposing," George Brookover, the East Lansing attorney who represented all three students, told Ingham County Judge Clinton Canady III on Jan. 6.'

College football players to boycott activities over sexual assault suspensions

Mastodon · 16 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The entire Minnesota football team says it is boycotting all football activities until it gets satisfactory answers from the university about the suspension of 10 players this week.

The school suspended the players after an internal investigation into a sexual assault case. Police declined to charge any of the players, but the school suspended them based on internal regulations involving sexual assault allegations.
...
Wide receiver Drew Wolitarsky, with his team members standing behind him, made the announcement at the Gibson-Nagurski Football complex, CBS Minneapolis reports.

“Effective immediately, we will boycott all football activities,” Wolitarsky said. “The boycott will remain in effect until due process is followed, and the suspensions for all 10 players … are lifted.”

Wolitarsky says the decision was made after a “disappointing meeting” with Athletic Director Mark Coyle.

“We are concerned that our brothers have been named publically with reckless disregard in violation of their constitutional rights,” Wolitarsky said. “We are now compelled to speak for our team and take back our program.”'

Arizona urges law enforcement to avoid program that prejudges people accused of rape

Mastodon · 16 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last year, Arizona State University's campus police force was the first in the state to support the "Start by Believing" campaign, in which law enforcement pledges to uncritically accept any allegation made by a rape accuser to facilitate more reports.

Republican Gov. Doug Ducey's administration doesn't want others to follow ASU's lead, however.

The Phoenix New Times reports that Youth, Faith and Family Director Debbie Moak asked prosecutors to stay clear of the nationwide nonprofit Start by Believing campaign in a letter last month.

What's wrong with the program? It could ruin their rape investigations even if they run them by the book, says Moak, relaying the findings of a workgroup that studied the program:

`Over the past few months, however, critics have lobbied against the program, claiming that it can create "confirmation bias" — a concept in which investigators go into a case with a pre-existing belief, resulting in an ensuing investigation that's likely to confirm that belief — and that a suspect's defense lawyer could undermine a prosecution by injecting the possibility that confirmation bias was at work.

"The concern is that the interjection of 'belief' into the law enforcement investigation creates the possibility of real or perceived confirmation bias," Moak writes. "While investigations and interviews with victims should always be done in a respectful and trauma-informed manner, law enforcement agencies, and other agencies co-located in advocacy centers, are strongly cautioned against adopting Start by Believing."`'

College coach tweets support of players following boycott announcement

Mastodon · 16 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Minnesota seniors Drew Wolitarsky and Mitch Leidner spoke to the media, announcing the Gophers would “cease all football activities.” The boycott stems from 10 players being suspended following a university investigation into a sexual assault report.

University president Eric W. Kaler and athletic director, who were both called out by the players, released a statement after the boycott was announced.

Claeys wasn’t the only coach to voice his support for the players. Linebackers coach Mike Sherels did as well.'

"Minnesota football players have chosen the wrong issue on which to make a stand"

Mastodon · 17 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A college football team finally has recognized its power and leverage over campus administrators but for a queasy-making cause: solidarity over an unprosecuted allegation of multiple sexual assaults. The Minnesota Gophers are demanding that 10 accused “brothers” who have been suspended by the university for misconduct be reinstated or they will sit out the Holiday Bowl on Dec. 27. There is something jarring about this, some missing sensibility.

What’s missing is any recognition that campus officials have the right to hold students to a higher standard than simply being non-felons.

Anyone who follows news about sexual assaults on campuses is surely frustrated by the extreme pendulum swings between inaction and false accusation. The Florida State, Notre Dame, Tennessee and Baylor administrations reportedly discounted victims’ stories and sheltered athletes from consequences, while at Duke and Virginia false accusers and botched investigations tarred the innocent. It’s extraordinarily difficult to know where the Minnesota case falls, for the simple reason that these cases are a nightmare to adjudicate. On those grounds alone, the Gophers get an F in civics for their boycott.

What’s known is this: Police and prosecutors decided that the case did not meet the burden of criminal proof, but the campus Office of Equal Opportunity and Affirmative Action investigators nevertheless recommended discipline against 10 players for violating student conduct standards, and the players were suspended by Athletic Director Mark Coyle and President Eric Kaler.'

Ex-Baylor player in limbo months after Title IX complaint

Mastodon · 17 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Former Baylor football recruit Jeremy Faulk, who was kicked off the team at the height of the school's sexual assault scandal before the 2016 season ever started, remains uncertain about his future, even though a Title IX investigation involving him at Baylor has been suspended, and apparently will never see resolution.

The defensive tackle has just been named the Junior College Defensive Player of the Year after winning a national championship at Garden City Community College in Garden City, Kan., but his brief stay at Baylor may have made him untouchable as far as major universities are concerned.

Faulk re-enrolled at Garden City, from which Baylor recruited him, after he was dismissed from the team and lost his scholarship, at least temporarily, after a report of a sexual assault that was never proved and never prosecuted.

Faulk's coach at Garden City, Jeff Sims, told KWTX that the staff had hoped Faulk would be able to transfer to another major college program, but said no one will touch him because "the name Baylor is scary to schools."

Faulk had NFL aspirations when he arrived at Baylor in January as an All-American junior college transfer.'

Title IX tales: Uneven gender justice

Mastodon · 17 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A male student from Williams College in Massachusetts accused his ex-girlfriend of sexual assault. A month later, she made a counterclaim against him. Guess whose accusation was taken seriously.

John Doe, as he is identified in his lawsuit against the university, had been dating Susan Smith (not her real name) for two years between fall 2013 and winter 2015. In spring 2015, Smith graduated and took a job with the college, where she worked until June 30, 2016. Doe was still a student at the university when Smith became an employee, and they continued to date.

(This report is based on court documents from the U.S District Court in Massachusetts, including Doe's lawsuit against the university and supplemental materials that include email exchanges, phone records, investigative materials and attorney letters. None of the participants would speak on the record for this story. Watchdog was unable to locate the female accuser, and colleges and attorneys involved are unable to comment on the specifics of any case because of federal law protecting student records.)'

UK: Men's rights MP Philip Davies: Gender must be irrelevant

Mastodon · 17 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Conservative MP Philip Davies told the BBC that men should not "be excluded from having their views" heard.

He was elected to the committee in a ballot of party colleagues.

But Green Party MP Caroline Lucas said there should be a "proper hearing" before the MP for Shipley, West Yorkshire, can take his place.

Asked on BBC Two's Daily Politics about his nomination, Mr Davies said: "The committee's there whether I like it or not, so if I can bring some common sense to the committee that's surely a good thing.

"Just in the same way that UKIP used to take their seats in the EU Parliament - not because they were fans of the EU Parliament or everything that it represented, but because they hoped to hold it to account."

He added: "I'd prefer if it was just called the equalities committee. I don't see why it needs to be called the women and equalities committee. You can still look at women's issues on a committee that's just called equalities.'

Why Modern Feminism Is Illogical, Unnecessary, and Evil

Mastodon · 18 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'First, modern feminism is illogical because, as Pinker points out, it is based on the vanilla assumption that, but for lifelong gender socialization and pernicious patriarchy, men and women are on the whole identical. An insurmountable body of evidence by now conclusively demonstrates that the vanilla assumption is false; men and women are inherently, fundamentally, and irreconcilably different. Any political movement based on such a spectacularly incorrect assumption about human nature – that men and women are and should be identical – is doomed to failure.

Further, modern feminism is unnecessary, because its entire raison d'être is the unquestioned assumption that women are and have historically always been worse off than men. The fact that men and women are fundamentally different and want different things makes it difficult to compare their welfare directly, to assess which sex is better off; for example, the fact that women make less money than men cannot by itself be evidence that women are worse off than men, any more than the fact that men own fewer pairs of shoes than women cannot be evidence that men are worse off than women. However, in the only two biologically meaningful measures of welfare – longevity and reproductive success – women are and have always been slightly better off than men. In every human society, women live longer than men, and more women attain some reproductive success; many more men end their lives as total reproductive losers, having left no genetic offspring.'

State Office Assails 'Start by Believing' Advocacy Program for Rape Victims

Matt · 18 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A popular, nationwide program that encourages police and others to treat rape victims with more sensitivity is under fire from the Arizona Governor's Office of Youth, Faith and Family.

In a recent letter to elected prosecutors around the state, Youth, Faith and Family director Debbie Moak admonishes Arizona law-enforcement authorities to rethink their support of Start by Believing, a nonprofit initiative aimed at removing obstacles to the reporting of sexual violence. Statistics show that many women decline to report sexual attacks, sometimes out of fear that investigators won't believe them.

Launched in 2011, Start by Believing is an offshoot of the Washington-based nonprofit End Violence Against Women International.

When the Arizona Legislature adopted a resolution in 2014 supporting Start by Believing, it became the first lawmaking body in the nation to do so. Three other states have since followed — as have Arizona communities including Fountain Hills, Surprise, Apache Junction, and the Prescott Police Department. Several colleges around the state have signed up. In March, the Arizona State University Police Department renewed its support for the initiative; the year before, it became the first campus police force in the state to support it. According to the Start by Believing website, more than 130 communities in the United States and internationally have adopted the program.'

Sweden's "feminist foreign policy"

Mastodon · 19 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Margot Wallstrom, Sweden's top diplomat, has sought to advance what she calls a feminist foreign policy. What does that mean?

She says it is a way to use the usual tools of diplomacy to address three questions: Do women have equal rights? Are women at the decision-making table? And, are resources equitably distributed to women?

"A feminist foreign policy," she said, "is an analysis of the world."'

Don't spread 'straight-man cancer', China feminist warns Trump

Mastodon · 19 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'One of China's most prominent feminists has a message for the US president-elect: "Hey Trump, feminists are watching you."

Zheng Churan, who has been supported by Hillary Clinton for her advocacy, wrote a letter to Trump warming him of the perils of chauvinism as he prepares to take office.

Trump famously boasted about using his fame to have sex with women and grope them without prior consent, saying: "When you're a star they let you do it."

In 2015 Zheng was one of five feminist activists detained by police for more than a month after the group planned a peaceful protest against sexual harassment.

Zheng, who is also known as Datu or Big Rabbit, wrote to the president-elect: "Even across the Pacific, in the faraway land of China, there are constantly reports of you and your government's involvement in sexual discrimination.

...

"We wish you to watch out, the feminists worldwide are speaking, and we are watching you."

Zheng called on Trump to respect women's rights, warning him not to use his position to spread "straight-man cancer".'

Title IX is 'bureaucratic sex creep' gone wild

Mastodon · 19 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you want to see how the federal bureaucracy can mess things up, and create huge new areas of overburdening regulation, just look at what it's done with Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972.

Title IX simply reads: "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance." That's all.

But from this small, simple statement — there shall be no discrimination on the basis of sex — has been created a regulatory Tower of Babel governing sports teams, student discipline and even, and most dubiously, sexual consent.'

Gabor's misandry

Matt · 19 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

As the entertainment world marks Zsa Zsa Gabor's passing, they completely fail to call out her misandry. She speaks for herself here. Society may think it's cute, but I don't. Imagine if a man proudly said similar such things. Excerpt:

Hopeless Afghan struggle to save boy sex slaves

Matt · 19 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. If these were girls, you can bet Obama and the UN would be all over it. Excerpt:

'Shirin is among 13 families AFP traced and interviewed across three Afghan provinces who said their children were taken for the pervasive practice of "bacha bazi", or paedophilic exploitation, in Western-backed security forces.

Their testimonies shine a rare spotlight on the anguished, solitary struggles to free sons, nephews and cousins from a tradition of culturally-sanctioned enslavement and rape.

Shirin recalled how his 13-year-old brother-in-law screamed and writhed as he was taken from his home earlier this year by a police commander in southern Helmand.

"When I begged for his release, his men pointed their guns and said: 'Do you want your family to die? Forget your boy'," Shirin told AFP in Lashkar Gah.

"Our boys are openly abducted for bacha bazi. Where should we go for help? The Taliban?"'

Manthreading, mansplaining, manflu - man I'm sick of this misandrist nonsense

Mastodon · 20 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'We all accept that gendering negative behaviour traits like "nagging" or being "bossy" is an unacceptable double standard when the same is celebrated when exhibited by men. So why do we allow some behaviour in men to be deemed negative or problematic, while ignoring it in women?

Last week Alana Hope Levinson wrote for Gizmodo, which has a Twitter audience of 2 million. Alana used this audience to highlight a new form of oppression: manthreading.

Manthreading - or as it's also known, "threading" - is linking together a series of tweets, when you want to say something in more than 140 characters. Threads are usually signposted - "this is a thread". Sometimes they're numbered.
...
There's no problem with having an issue with threads, but there is with gendering the phenomenon. Is this manthreading? Is this? No. It's sexist to problematise behaviour in one sex and not the other.'

Women really are better doctors, study suggests

Mastodon · 20 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If male doctors were able to do as well as their female counterparts when treating elderly patients in the hospital, they could save 32,000 lives a year, according to a study of 1.5 million hospital visits.

A month after patients were hospitalized, there was a small but significant difference in the likelihood that they were still alive or had to be readmitted to the hospital depending on the gender of the doctor who cared for them, according to the study published in JAMA Internal Medicine. Although the analysis can't prove the gender of the physician was the determining factor, the researchers made multiple efforts to rule out other explanations.'

Girls in juvenile justice: Treating the victim as a criminal

Mastodon · 20 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Too often, girls end up in Maryland's juvenile justice system not because they are a danger to society but because society is a danger to them. The are far more likely to have suffered physical, sexual or emotional abuse than boys who are committed to juvenile facilities, yet they tend to receive harsher punishments for lesser offenses — and get fewer chances for rehabilitation and education. When they act out in anger, fear or frustration at circumstances they did not create and cannot control, they are too often treated as criminals, not victims, a self-fulfilling prophecy that puts them at even greater risk.

...

This is not just a Maryland problem, and it is not new. Girls have been treated unequally in the juvenile justice system for generations, whether because of sexist notions about appropriate behavior or the greater attention that has been focused on rehabilitation for boys. The result too often has been to criminalize victimhood, to punish those who have already suffered the most. It cannot continue.'

Meet the 'Mistress Killer' making her fortune catching scorned wives' love rivals and battering them in the street

Matt · 20 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Imagine if a group of men were doing this, either to unfaithful women or men. The police would end it immediately. Even in China, nymphotropism knows no limit. Excerpt:

'A scorned woman set up a business catching the mistresses of men who have strayed - and then beating them up in the street.

The 'Mistress Killer', aka Zhang Yufen, is well known in Henan Province, China, for her very unusual private eye agency.

She spies on the mistresses of her clients' husbands and collects information on their cheating behaviour.

Zhang then confronts the 'other women' in the act - earning her title after a string of vicious, and often humiliating, attacks.

She set up the agency after finding out that her husband had played away.'

Minnesota’s failed football boycott was a blow to fairness in campus sexual assault hearings

Matt · 21 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Minnesota football team’s recent failed boycott of their upcoming bowl game represents a terrible blow to those who care about due process on campus.

For a brief, shining moment, it seemed that finally, someone with a measure of power would be willing to stand up to what is often a deeply unfair sexual misconduct process on college campuses.

It was exciting to hear student athletes talking about due process. If the boycott had succeeded, it could have emboldened other students, whether bowl-bound athletes or people of similar stature, to consider standing up for their friends next time something like this happened.

Many schools advocated “bystander awareness” — basically the idea that when something bad is happening, good people should object to it and try to stop it. Being an active participant in what happens in the world around us is important; we all have an obligation to stop bad things when we can. That’s true whether the thing being stopped is a sexual assault or violation of someone’s rights by the government.

The problem with the Minnesota boycott isn’t really that the boycott failed. It’s that the Minnesota football players did not realize they’d picked the wrong case to stand up for.

There is a widely known phrase in the law that essentially defines this case: “Bad facts make bad law, and good facts make good law.” Having defended students at more than 50 colleges across the country and reviewed the extraordinarily detailed 80-page investigative report prepared by the university’s Title IX office, the facts described there were uniquely horrifying.'

Children Don’t Exist to Advance Your Politics

Mastodon · 24 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'`There were two parts to the feeling: I had to mourn the life I thought I was supposed to have, the elder daughter of my two girls (why do we plan things we cannot control?!), and I had to come to terms with having a relationship with a son that I had never really considered. There were dark moments in the middle of the night (when all those dark thoughts come), when I felt sick at the thought of something male growing inside me.`

And looking to the future, the anxiety grew: How do you raise a white, middle-class boy not to think his own experience is the default experience of the world?

`How do you counter a society that makes things easier for him than for others, and make him see it? See how it is for women, for people of colour?`

But all was not lost. Dunning, refusing to bend to the patriarchy, decided to embrace the opportunity. “I will raise a feminist boy,” she declares.

`I will point sexism out to him at every turn, and he will never get away with it without being called out. I will show him that girls are just people like him and that products and art targeted at them are no less valuable or enjoyable. He will be immersed in feminism by a family who models it in their everyday life.`

She will, she says proudly, “do feminism a great service.”

The last hundred years are stocked to excess with the utterances of the apparatchiks of totalitarian ideologies: the brainwashed praise of “comrades” and “Dear Leaders.” But sinister ideologies don’t always take the form of men in boots and epaulets. Sometimes they are soft, even cooing.
...
It’s a delicate matter to question someone else’s child-rearing, but it seems that a boy should be brought up not to be a good feminist, or a good Communist, or a good Republican, but to be a good man.'

"Homo Obnoxious: Is Toxic Masculinity Really Taking Over the Country?"

Mastodon · 26 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yikes. But before we concede that toxic masculinity has suddenly reasserted itself as the dominant force in the cultural universe, let's pause to take a breath. Let's admit, for example, that although arenas of male experiences differ depending on where you live and how much money you have, Homo Obnoxious was never just a creature of any one party, class or region. The truth is that he is nurtured at every stage of an American boy's journey into manhood, and without trying to understand what our society does to promote his development and how boys and men might be persuaded to reject his allure, he will continue his rampage across the land.

...

Teaching kids the value of creative collaboration and offering rational guidance on sexuality or gender relations at school has to be a part of cultivating a different path to manhood. American sex education, for example, if it is taught at all, often consists of either shaming abstinence lessons or alarming medical discussions of STDs and pregnancy, with little acknowledgment of the need to develop compassionate ways to express sexuality or the importance of challenging sexual stereotypes in media and culture. It doesn't have to be that way; in a New York Times op-ed, Pamela Druckerman highlighted how topics like the complexity of love are openly discussed in French sex-ed, while Dutch teachers work to inculcate respect for people who don't fit traditional sexual and gender molds.

...

College men — and young men who don't go to college —need to have positive narratives that allow them to feel good about being men and being men together. Challenging sexual assault is important, but they need to learn much more than "no means no": they need guidance in emotional honesty and intimacy, the challenges of navigating relationships and masculine ideals to strive for in which cultivating large numbers of women as hookups and drinking into oblivion are not the marks of masculine status. Beyond this, they need to see that life offers them more than the prospect of being a loser in the workforce that awaits them when schooling is done, and they also need opportunities to see that work in areas like caregiving, for example, are rich in positive masculine values. When a male nurse can be viewed as stronger and sexier than a Wall Street parasite, we will have gotten somewhere.

Popular culture reflects a hunger for a vision of masculinity that rejects Homo Obnoxious. Jesse Pinkman, the young meth cook in the TV series Breaking Bad, illustrates the despair of recession-era young men without decent job prospects who search for status, meaning, and self-worth. There's a lot wrong with Jesse, but in his evolution as a character we see his growing resolve to form intimate, caring bonds with the women in his life and the men in his posse, too. The blockbuster franchise Fast and Furious shows the need for even the most testosterone-driven men — racecar drivers in this case — to develop respect and lasting relationships with the men and women in their social group.

...

Unfortunately, much in the manosphere openly promotes the far more noxious stuff, like sexual predation in the pickup community, where guys give each other creepy tips on "mind-controlling" women and duping them into sex. Other sites, like Mensactivism, boil with anger at feminists and take a paranoid stance against what they imagine is an epidemic of false rape claims and women who will take advantage of them at every opportunity. Mensactivism buzzes with articles like "Men are the downtrodden sex" and blogs expressing hope that a Trump presidency "could radically change colleges' response to sexual assault." In these sites, loneliness and fear are vented as rage — the rage that comes when people don't know what to do with their suffering.

...

Men are confused, and how could they not be? Ever since the 1950s brought women into the workforce en masse, and the Pill released them from reproductive shackles in the ‘60s, a profound change in human relations has been happening in painful fits and starts. In the grand scheme of history, a few decades is an incredibly short amount of time to adjust to such a cataclysm. No wonder we’re still flailing about trying to figure out how to cope. Identity, expectations, culture and hormones are a complex dance. Social construction is a dynamic process, and hardly linear.'

Former student accused of rape sues school, accuser for defamation

Mastodon · 27 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former Indiana University student is suing the university, saying it gave preferential treatment to a female student who accused him of rape and makes "numerous mandates to make it more difficult for males accused of sexual misconduct to defend themselves."

Aaron Farrer, a 21-year-old from Lafayette, was accused of rape in September 2015 after a female student said Farrer took advantage of her drunken state. The woman showed police a text message she received from Farrer the next day apologizing for the incident. Farrer told police the woman consented to sex, and initiated the act.

That November, Farrer was expelled from school, according to court documents. The case against him was dismissed in September 2016 in Monroe Superior Court because of insufficient evidence.

This week, Farrer filed the federal lawsuit in U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Indiana, saying he was defamed and was a victim of intentional infliction of emotional distress. He also alleges his constitutional rights were violated.'

Myanmar men may face jail for not marrying pregnant women

Matt · 28 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The anti-DV laws and making gang rape a capital offense... if they have actual presumed innocence in their courts, not so bad. The capital punishment might be controversal some but you can see why they'd do it. But enforced marriage? Yikes! Let's hope they come to their senses soon. Excerpt:

'Myanmar's government is drafting a law that could see men jailed for up to seven years for getting a woman pregnant but not marrying her, a senior official said on Wednesday.

The provision is part of tough new legislation designed to strengthen women's rights as the country opens up after half a century of military rule.

Director of the social welfare department Naw Tha Wah said the new law would criminalise domestic violence for the first time and make gang-rape a capital offence.

If passed in parliament, the law would also carry a penalty of up to five years in prison for any man who refuses to marry a woman after they have lived together, and up to seven if she is pregnant.

"We are now drafting a bill to protect women and prevent violence against them," Naw Tha Wah told AFP.'

Fathers Not Included in Minnesota Grants Program for Mothers

charlie · 28 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Grants have been made available to single mothers, but not fathers in a Minnesota grant program for single mothers. No justification is given for excluding fathers. Excerpt:

'New grant money is being used by a dozen organizations in Minnesota to help pregnant and parenting women face and conquer their substance-abuse problems. Just over $4 million has been distributed by the Minnesota Department of Human Services, and the same amount has been approved for the next two years as well.

Clair Wilson with DHS says the Women's Recovery Services grants allow groups to provide comprehensive, family-centered services that are specific to high-risk women. Since the program began in 2011, she says, "We've seen women being less likely to use substances, more likely to stay in recovery, more connected to community support, more likely not to experience homelessness, more likely to be employed."'

Time to Reform the Kangaroo Courts on Campus

Mastodon · 29 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'The University of Minnesota football team's dramatic walkout in protest of what they saw as unfair treatment of 10 fellow players in a campus sexual-assault investigation came to an end on Dec. 17. But it made national headlines for imperiling the team's trip to the Dec. 27 Holiday Bowl and for the players' demands that their accused teammates receive a "fair hearing" with a "diverse review panel."

The solidarity shown by the University of Minnesota players and the attention the team's protest drew could prove a powerful blow to the Education Department's efforts to regulate sex and speech on campus through the abuse of Title IX, the federal law against sex discrimination in education.

In September, following allegations that Minnesota football players had sexually assaulted another student, Minneapolis law enforcement investigated and declined to charge any player with a crime. Yet the university's Title IX investigation into the same incident—which lacked full access to some video evidence used by police—resulted in 10 players' suspensions from the team, angering members and inspiring the walkout.'

India: False marriage proposals lead to a quarter of registered rape cases in Delhi

Mastodon · 29 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Delhi Police data has revealed that a quarter of the total rape cases registered in the national Capital this year belong to accusations of sex under 'false promise of marriage'.

The annual figures also show a marginal dip, 1.93 per cent, in the total rape cases reported.

In 2015, Delhi recorded 2,069 rape cases, the highest in previous 15 years.

Just as promises of marriage can be fraudulent, legal experts say certain grey areas in Section 375 of Indian Penal Code, 1860, allow a complainant to take advantage of the situation when a relationship turns sour and ends.

A few recent observations of higher courts across the country in this regard substantiate this belief.'

Woman who allegedly filed false rape complaint with police put in program

Mastodon · 29 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Danbury woman accused of filing a false rape complaint against a man in Bristol has been granted a program that could allow her to elude a conviction.

Mercedes Testone, 21, was granted the Supervised Diversionary Program Tuesday at her hearing in Bristol Superior Court. Judge Richard Dyer, who OK'd the program, said she will get treatment for an "emotional disability" — the details of which were not disclosed.

Dyer made a ruling that Testone's disability had a "substantially adverse" effect on her behavior and could have contributed to her allegedly making a fake rape story up.

If Testone is successful in treatment, her case will be dismissed on June 19, 2018. She was arrested Sept. 29 and charged with second-degree falsely reporting an incident and second-degree false statement.'

American Colleges Are Approaching a Constitutional Crisis

Mastodon · 29 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Intent on establishing progressive utopias, universities and federal bureaucrats are together systematically violating the constitutional rights of students and professors. The stories are legion, the legal standards are unconscionable, and it's past time for other branches of American government to step in and set things right.
...
Then consider this legal complaint, directed at Indiana University. It is simply astounding. The university expelled a male student for sexual misconduct even though the female student allegedly admitted that she invited the male student into her bedroom, asked him to retrieve a sex toy, and asked him to have sex with her. She told the Bloomington police department, "I was, like, telling him, like, to have sex with me."

The resulting university proceedings were allegedly a due-process horror show, featuring university hearing officers trained by an official "who admits that he starts each case believing the [defendant] is guilty." The lawsuit points to news reports where this same official admitted to trying to "break" another defendant.'

Feminists Lash Out At Steve Martin For Calling Carrie Fisher ‘Beautiful’

Mastodon · 29 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Twitter users are outraged on with Steve Martin for the tribute he paid to Carrie Fisher.

News broke of the iconic actress’ tragic death on Tuesday, prompting reactions from fans and colleagues all around the entertainment industry.

“When I was a young man, Carrie Fisher was the most beautiful creature I had ever seen. She turned out to be witty and bright as well,” Martin wrote in a since-deleted tweet.
...
“Princess Leia’s status as the catalyst of male sexual awakening has been alluded to countless times in pop culture,” says The Cut. “And on Tuesday, Steve Martin helpfully reminded us of this fact in a now-deleted tweet when he said that for him as a young man, ‘she was the most beautiful creature I had ever seen.’”

Martin’s tweet objectified the actress and Fisher herself would be offended by the tweet, the feminist author Claire Landsbaum argues.

"That characterization of Leia — as a wet dream for prepubescent men — is something Fisher spoke out against her whole career,” Landsbaum shrieked.'

Chicago Review Of Books Boycotts Simon & Schuster Over Milo Deal

Mastodon · 30 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Chicago Review of Books tweeted today that they would not be reviewing any books published by Simon and Schuster in 2017, calling the publishing of Breitbart Senior Editor MILO's book, DANGEROUS, a "disgusting validation of hate."

The Chicago Review of Books tweeted from their official Twitter account today, retweeting Judd Legum, the editor of Thinkprogress who falsely slandered MILO by referring to him as a "white supremacist". The Review stated, "In response to this disgusting validation of hate, we will not cover a single @simonschuster book in 2017."

When asked for comment on the Chicago Review of Books' anti-intellectual boycott of Simon and Schuster books, MILO said "Contrary to rumor, I didn't give the Chicago Review of Books my $250k in exchange for this, the sort of free publicity about which every controversial author dreams."'

Also see: Sarah Silverman and Judd Apatow Join Movement to Stop Publication of Milo's Book

Congressman Wants To Throw Out Campus Rape Rule He Says Is Unfair To The ‘Often-Innocent Accused’

Mastodon · 31 December 2016 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rep. Mark Meadows (R-N.C.) is urging President-elect Donald Trump to repeal certain campus sexual assault guidelines because he believes they deny the “often-innocent accused” their rights.

Meadows is targeting specific standards championed by Vice President Joe Biden and advanced by the Department of Education’s Office for Civil Rights in 2011.

Under Title IX, a federal civil rights law that prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex in education programs and activities, university investigations into sexual assault must be based on a preponderance of evidence — unlike in criminal courts, which require proof beyond a reasonable doubt.

Meadows, the incoming House Freedom Caucus chairman, wrote in his report about his targeted rules that “[Title IX procedure] virtually dictates one-size-fits-all procedures which provide less protection to the accused, and deny the often-innocent accused basic due process rights.”'

Male college students to undergo ‘critical self-reflection’ of masculinity

Mastodon · 3 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Wisconsin-Madison is currently taking applications for its “Men’s Project,” a six-week program that aims to counter the alleged harmful effects of society’s masculinity paradigms and pressures and empower participants to promote “gender equity.”

“Men’s Project creates a space for critical self-reflection and dialogue about what it means to be a man and how masculinity impacts us and those around us,” organizers state in promoting the effort.

“The experience focuses on the examination of societal images, expectations, and messages around masculinity to empower men to better understand themselves, promote the advancement of gender equity, and raise consciousness in their communities,” organizers add.'

Cancer death rates decline, but still higher for men

mens_issues · 5 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Cancer death rates have declined since 1991, but are still higher for men. I wonder which gender gets most of the healthcare funding. Excerpt:

'The cancer death rate in the United States has dropped by 25 percent since its 1991 peak, resulting in 2 million fewer cancer deaths than if the rate had stayed the same, the American Cancer Society said Thursday in a new report.

The group attributed the decrease largely to reductions in smoking and improvements in the early detection and treatment of cancer. But a significant gender gap remains: The cancer death rate is 40 percent higher for men than women, and the incidence of cancer is 20 percent higher in men.

That gender disparity reflects differences in the kind of cancers that men and women develop. For example, liver cancer, which is often lethal, is three times more common in men, largely because of their higher rates of hepatitis C infection, smoking and excess alcohol consumption. The largest gender disparities are for cancers of the esophagus, larynx and bladder; incidence and death rates are four times higher in men, the report said.'

Police: Teacher accused of sex acts with student fled country

Matt · 8 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An arrest warrant has been issued for a Franklin High School teacher after detectives found that she engaged in sex acts with a student, Baltimore County police said.

Police said Ekatherine Pappas, 24, of Nottingham, started teaching Spanish at the school on Nov. 16.

A school resource officer became aware Thursday of a video showing a female teacher engaged in a sex act with a male student, police said.

"He came across a student who actually had a copy of the video on their phone," Baltimore County police Officer Jennifer Peach said.

Detectives confirmed the existence of the video and the teacher's involvement in sex acts with the 16-year-old student on two occasions, once on Dec. 21 and again on Dec. 22. The incidents were not committed on school property, police said.'

Single Mom January Jones: Father Figure Would Be Toxic For My Son

Mastodon · 9 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Toxic masculinity is a very real problem. Just ask January Jones.

The former Mad Men actress says she's a proud single mom whose son doesn't need a father because she doesn't want a man around the house to teach him "shty things."

Speaking to Red magazine, the actress best known for her role as Betty Draper says that she prefers to parent her five-year-old son Xander without any dad figures in his life. She believes having a strong male influence would do the boy more harm than good.

"It's good to have strong women around a man. To teach him to respect women," she said. "He doesn't have a male person in his life saying 'don't cry' or 'you throw like a girl.' All those shty things dads accidentally do."'

Denying due process for campus sex assault cases

Mastodon · 9 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'No longer content to deny due process to accused university students in the wake of often unsubstantiated and frequently false charges of sexual harassment and assault, there is now a movement toward destroying any hope for these students to transfer to other colleges and universities. On Dec. 8, Rep. Jackie Speier, California Democrat, introduced a bill requiring transcript notation for those students who try to transfer to other colleges or universities after being found “responsible” for violations of Title IX policies on sexual harassment and assault.

Creating a new “check the box” requirement specifically for the transcripts of the (mostly) male students who have become ensnared in Title IX’s ever-expanding net for campus “sex crimes,” Ms. Speier issued a press release to introduce the Safe Transfer Act, which would require a posting or a warning on the academic transcript of any student found by a college or university to have violated the school’s rules or policies with regard to Title IX’s policies on sexual harassment and assault.'

Senators Ask Trump to Keep Federal Campus-Sexual-Assault Guidelines in Place

Mastodon · 9 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Shortly after a Republican lawmaker recommended that President-elect Donald Trump roll back federal campus-sexual-assault guidelines, two Democratic senators sent a letter to Trump on Thursday urging him to keep the rules in place, BuzzFeed News reports.

In a letter obtained by BuzzFeed, Democratic senators Patty Murray and Bob Casey asked Trump not to rescind a 2011 Dear Colleague letter that was issued by the Department of Education, which clarified how schools must respond to sexual violence under the Title IX gender-equality law. Yet, in December, Republican representative Mark Meadows included the letter in a report on regulations he wants to see repealed or changed during Trump's first 100 days. According to USA Today, Meadows believes the campus-sexual-assault guidelines are "one-size fits all" and "deny the often-innocent accused basic due process rights."

Casey and Murray pointed out in their letter that the Education Department laid out "preponderance of evidence" standards for campus-sexual-assault investigations. Under the standard, school officials have to decide if they're more than 50 percent certain of someone's guilt. That standard is lower than the "beyond a reasonable doubt" standard used in criminal court, but still "well established" for civil-rights violations and civil-court proceedings.'

Joe Biden Says He’s Working to Convince the Trump Administration to Prioritize Sexual Assault Prevention

Mastodon · 9 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vice President Joe Biden said Thursday that he is working to convince President-elect Donald Trump’s administration to prioritize the issue of sexual assault on campus.

“I’m no longer going to be Vice President, but I’m going to be associated with several major universities and have a significant staff,” Biden said, hinting at his post-White House plans. “I’m going to be setting up a foundation that is going to devote the rest of my life to dealing with violence against women.”

Biden made the remarks at the White House’s It’s On Us Summit, an event aimed at preventing sexual assault on college campuses.'

In campus rape cases, colleges to learn sexual advances go both ways

Mastodon · 9 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Aaron Farrer was expelled from Indiana University in Nov. 2015 for allegedly sexually assaulting a female student. Farrer is now suing the university for violating his rights and suing his accuser for defamation and intentional infliction of emotional distress.

Farrer said in his lawsuit that he met his accuser when he moved into an off-campus apartment complex. She was his neighbor.

Farrer's lawsuit alleges that it was the female student who began "aggressive(ly) flirting" with him, even though her roommates claimed she had boyfriends in two different states. Farrer's lawsuit includes text messages from his accuser that were sent to him while he was patrolling an IU football game as an IU Police Department cadet.'

"No Touching"

Mastodon · 9 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If you’re male and 18 and waiting anxiously for your acceptance at a prestigious coastal liberal arts college or university, the authors of The Campus Rape Frenzy would undoubtedly have two words of advice: Don’t go. That is, if you plan on any sexual M.O. other than abstinence.

If you do go and then have sex, your partner (let’s say ze is a she) can, under current rules, accuse you of sexual assault or rape if you kiss her or reach for her hand without her permission, can say that she was afraid of you when she did give permission and so was coerced, can claim that after a single drink she was under the influence of alcohol and therefore unable to give consent (you can be way drunker, but that doesn’t matter), and can make these claims months after the fact without you being aware that she has made them.

Think that’s scary? What happens next is even worse. Following guidelines from the Obama administration Office of Civil Rights, you will likely be denied representation by a lawyer, forbidden from presenting exonerating evidence or asking questions of your accuser (who will invariably be referred to as the “victim” or the “survivor”), be subject to the decision of a college administrator who is under pressure to show that her (as it almost always is) institution is eagerly working with the federal government’s esoteric understanding of Title IX, and found guilty if there is a 50.01 percent chance you failed to get consent, or lost it at some point unbeknownst to you. The press will rake you over the coals and your future, now that you’re expelled and branded a sexual malefactor, will be compromised.'

Obama undermines Trump on civil rights with last-minute appointments

Mastodon · 9 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Obama appointed the Education Department's assistant secretary for civil rights, Catherine Lhamon, and defense attorney Debo Adegbile to be commissioners on the Civil Rights commission. Most of the media has simply ignored the appointments, the Left has praised them and right-leaning outlets have focused heavily or exclusively on Adegbile. While Adegbile certainly has his share of problems, I can say that at the very least the man likely believes in due process.

The same cannot be said of Lhamon, who has been instrumental in eroding due process protections on college campuses. Lhamon co-authored the infamous 2011 "Dear Colleague" letter from the Education Department's Office for Civil Rights, which severely limited accused students' due process rights when suspected of sexual assault or harassment. This letter is not legally binding, but it effectively carries the force of law because if schools don't comply they face being named publicly as under investigation for not creating safe environments for students, and risk losing federal funding if they refuse to change their policies. (Other departments' investigations are not so public, and no school has dared risk a loss of funding).'

Trump nominee criticized over FIRE donations

Matt · 11 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Republican megadonor Betsy DeVos has given thousands of dollars to an advocacy group that is seeking to overturn an Obama administration policy that made it easier to discipline college students accused of sexual harassment or assault.

The donations, totaling $10,000, by Donald Trump's Education secretary pick have prompted criticism from Democrats and women's groups in the run-up to her confirmation hearing next week.

DeVos has not spoken publicly about the Education Department's aggressive approach to campus sexual assault, but women's groups and Democrats say her donations to the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education send a troubling signal. FIRE has sued the administration to raise the standard of proof for victims of sexual assault in university administrative hearings contending it is unfair to the accused.

The donations are "a red flag," said Lisa Maatz, the top policy adviser at the American Association of University Women, which advocates for strict enforcement of Title IX, the federal law that governs sex discrimination, harassment and sexual assault on college campuses. "In the absence of an actual record … I think these kinds of donations take on even greater importance, because we have to rely on her contributions to inform us on particular issues."'

Politico’s misleading article on Betsy DeVos and campus sexual assault

Mastodon · 11 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Politico has published an article attempting to make Donald Trump’s pick for Education Secretary, Betsy DeVos, look like she’s against victims of campus sexual assault.

The very first sentence of the article, written by Benjamin Wermund, makes this bias clear: “Education secretary pick Betsy DeVos has given thousands of dollars to an advocacy group that wants to raise the burden of proof for campus sexual assault victims.”

Right off the bat, Wermund is referring to accusers as “victims,” a common tactic for activists who want people to believe that no one would ever lie about sexual assault. Colleges and universities (and lawmakers like Sen. Kirsten Gillibrand) do this too. By calling accusers “victims,” activists can make it seem like it is already a fact that they have been sexually assaulted, and therefore any attempt to advocate for due process rights or an investigation makes someone anti-victim.'

No Boys Allowed: The New Rule of Co-Working Spaces

Mastodon · 11 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's 11 a.m. on a recent Friday, and 29-year-old Audrey Gelman—public-relations powerhouse, former Hillary Clinton press aide, longtime friend of Lena Dunham's—is sitting on a pink couch at the Wing, the co-working space and social club she co-founded this October in New York. A man walks through the elevator doors, and Gelman throws him a friendly wave. "That's our AV guy," she says. "He's basically the only man that comes through here."

That's because the Wing—so-named because, like the wing of a house, it's a separate space—is just for women. Co-working is hardly new; industry trade magazine Deskmag estimated there would be 10,000 co-working spots worldwide by the end of 2016. But female-focused spaces have become a niche in the industry as a response to contemporary feminism and a reaction against fratty venues that advertise kegs and pingpong. "Women are craving community, connection, and confidence, and that's what we're going to give them," says Stacy Taubman, 38, founder of Rise Collaborative, which is set to open in St. Louis this month and will offer members networking events, a book club, and a chance to mentor teens. Then there's SheWorks Collective, also in Manhattan; New Women Space, in Brooklyn, N.Y.; and Hera Hub, in Phoenix, Southern California, Washington, D.C., and Stockholm.
...
In addition to a pastel-and-gold-tinted communal workspace and a library with books (yes, there's a copy of Virginia Woolf's A Room of One's Own) arranged by color, the Wing provides its 400 members with on-demand blowouts, a lactation room, and vanities stocked with trendy beauty products from partners including Glossier, Diptyque, and Ouai Haircare. Membership is $1,950 a year or $185 a month, plus a one-time registration fee of $100—and whatever extra you spend on hair and makeup services or soba noodles and lattes. Subscriptions have doubled since the club opened, Gelman says, and the Wing's Instagram account has more than 45,000 followers. "Part of that is having a personality and a distinct point of view," she says, "which means not being everything to everyone."'

Bustle Writer Womansplains How to Womansplain to Mansplainers

Mastodon · 11 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Think it's obnoxious when men hold forth? The feminist response is to one-up them by giving them condescending reading assignments, argues Sadie L. Trombetta of the women's website Bustle.

One way mansplaining manifests itself, Trombetta complains, is "a man proclaiming a woman is misinformed because she disagrees with him."

Annoyed by this phenomenon, Trombetta has chosen not one but five books "to give the men in your life so you don't have to keep explaining [mansplaining]." Those book recs, together, constitute more than 1,500 pages of reading.

We'd wager a hefty sum that no man who considers Trombetta misinformed has ever given her five books to remedy her supposed lack of knowledge.

Trombetta unintentionally reveals her double standard, in part by womansplaining mansplaining.

One of Trombetta's recommendations is Men Explain Things to Me. The title is pretty self-explanatory, but Trombetta womansplains to her presumably female readers that it "sheds light on the phenomenon that is now commonly referred to as 'mansplaining.'"'

Anti-Free Speech Professors Demand Milo Ban Ahead of Show

Mastodon · 12 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A group of UC Berkeley professors have demanded that Breitbart Senior Editor MILO be banned from the campus ahead of his show on February 1st, prompting the college's chancellor to defend MILO's constitutional right to speak.

In their letter to UC Berkeley Chancellor Nicholas Dirks, the professors falsely accuse MILO of advocating "white supremacy" and claim that though they allegedly support free speech and academic freedom, MILO should be counted as an exception.

"We are writing to implore you to cancel a planned speaking engagement by Milo Yiannopoulos, who has been invited by Berkeley College Republicans for February 1, 2017," wrote the professors in the letter. "We support both freedom of speech and academic freedom on campus and realize that controversial views must be tolerated in any campus community dedicated to open debate and opposed to censorship. Although we object strenuously to Yiannopoulos's views – he advocates white supremacy, transphobia, and misogyny – it is rather his harmful conduct to which we call attention in asking for the cancellation of this event."'

Also see:

- Fake News: UC Davis Leftists Post Anti-MILO Posters Featuring Fake Rape Quote
- Milo invite sparks 'malicious attack' on Berkeley College Republicans; private info leaked

Judge rejects subpoena on rape accuser who admitted she violated blacked-out student

Matt · 13 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'She admitted in text messages to performing oral sex on her blacked-out sex partner, but she won't have to submit to a deposition in that student's lawsuit against Amherst College for expelling him as a rapist.

In a little-noticed order in the long-running due process and Title IX lawsuit, issued shortly after the November election, a federal judge refused to grant a subpoena on student "Sandra Jones" sought by plaintiff "John Doe."

Because Jones has since moved to Washington state, the ruling on the subpoena was made in the U.S. District Court in Seattle.'

Mom gets probation for rape of 13-year-old boy

Matt · 14 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 46-year-old woman was put on probation after pleading guilty to having sex with her daughter's 13-year-old boyfriend.

Elaine B. Goodman of Dover, Del., faced up to 15 years in prison when she pleaded guilty in November in Kent County Superior Court, but Thursday the Honorable Robert B. Young took into account that this was "an aberration" and that Goodman has shown compassion not only in taking care of her elderly parents but also to others in the community.

"This came out of the blue," Young said. "The crime is egregious and affected the victim and his family, which was taken into account. But incarceration is not the answer."'

Milo UC Davis Event Cancelled After Leftists Tear Down Barricades, Engage In Violence

Mastodon · 14 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'MILO's event at the University of California, Davis has been cancelled after protesters tore down barricades and engaged in scuffles outside the venue. A camerman for ABC10 was also attacked with hot coffee.

MILO and his co-speaker, entrepeneur Martin Shkreli are both reportedly unharmed. Arrests have reportedly been made.

Shrekli was videoed outside the venue, where he explained his plans to explain third-wave feminism to MILO.'

Man Ordered To Pay Child Support Despite Not Being Father

Mastodon · 14 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A man in Oklahoma is hoping to change the law after he has to continue to pay child support for a baby that is not his, according to our affiliate KOTV.

When Thomas' high school girlfriend got pregnant, he married her. Five months later she had a little boy and he believed he had a son, but their marriage fell apart.

Thomas decided to take a paternity test when the boy was three years old.

"It comes back zero percent. I was in my office and I saw that. I should've expected it but I didn't and it hit me. I'm telling my co-worker how shocked I am that someone could do this to someone," he said.

The judge ordered Thomas to take another DNA test and he got the same result. The judge first ruled that Thomas was off the hook financially, but then reversed the decision because Oklahoma law says men must question paternity within two years of the child's birth.

Thomas said that he had no reason to question it before he did, but, because he missed the deadline, the judge ordered him to pay around $500 a month in child support and nearly $15,000 in back support – for a child that is not his.'

Feminists Against Due Process

Mastodon · 14 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Yesterday Politico reported on the latest attack against Betsy DeVos, Donald Trump's nominee for secretary of education. DeVos and her husband donated $10,000 to the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education (FIRE), a nonpartisan organization that defends free speech, religious liberty, and due process on college campuses.

Some people, however, don't much care for due process — especially when young men are accused of serious offenses like rape or sexual assault. FIRE opposes lawless Obama administration guidelines that mandate low burdens of proof for campus sexual-assault tribunals without also mandating proper due-process protections for the accused. In other words, it opposes the amateurish kangaroo courts that pass for "campus justice" in the age of Obama.'

Kangaroo courts won’t solve campus sexual assault problem

Mastodon · 14 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dear Betsy: Even students who’ve been accused of sexual assault deserve the chance to defend themselves.

Betsy DeVos is President-elect Donald Trump’s pick for secretary of education. This past week, groups such as End Rape on Campus launched a #DearBetsy social-media campaign urging DeVos to continue the Obama administration’s policies, under which schools across the country have defined sexual assault in expansive terms and scaled back protections for students accused of it.

Meanwhile, the American Association of University Women, among other organizations, has zeroed in on the $10,000 that DeVos gave to the Foundation for Individual Rights in Education, an ACLU-like outfit that, among other things, supports due-process rules.

You might not like DeVos’s financial conflicts or her family’s record on LGBT issues — I don’t — but the #DearBetsy campaign and the controversy over her FIRE donations show how ideological and unmoored the campus rape debate has become.'

Feminists: Man Clubs Are Sexist, But Woman Clubs Are Awesome Sauce

Mastodon · 14 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Imagine, if you will, the most oppressive, retrograde fictional male executive you can possibly cook up. Perhaps he looks like Don Draper, but with terrible clothes and an impressive gut. Maybe he's Alec Baldwin in "Glengarry Glen Ross." If you're a more winsome, youthful sort, your favorite imaginary oppressor might be the brawny, clueless Gaston from "Beauty in the Beast."

Whatever form your chosen theoretical corporate bad guy may take, get ready for some shocking news: Odds are, he wouldn't get the heaps of glowing coverage recently dished out to a hip circle of New York feminists and their new women-only "work and social space."

"No Boys Allowed: The New Rule of Co-Working Spaces," declared the title of a BloombergBusinessweek profile on January 4. Here's the lead: "It's 11 a.m. on a recent Friday, and 29-year-old Audrey Gelman—public-relations powerhouse, former Hillary Clinton press aide, longtime friend of Lena Dunham's—is sitting on a pink couch at the Wing, the co-working space and social club she co-founded this October in New York."
...
"Taking up space can be a profound act in a society where men have the power and the prestige," The Wing's website says, apparently unaware it is already becoming slightly insufferable. "At The Wing, all the rules are written by women." One of those rules, in case you're wondering, is that there are no books written by men, at least not in the club's library. (You'll be heartened to learn that Maureen Dowd's masterpiece "Are Men Necessary?" pluckily makes an appearance.)'

Dear men: Here is your engraved invitation to join the Women's March on Washington

Mastodon · 14 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Dear men of America: If you have been waiting for your engraved invitation to participate in this march, please consider it delivered. Imagine me slipping an envelope under your door late at night, like a bid to an exclusive social club instead of a public protest. There are conditions on this invitation, however. You will not automatically be put in charge, which might be a shock to some of your systems. You are being invited instead to do what women have done for generations: Show up and ask "What can I do?" You will be put to work.

I am truly sorry that our culture has conditioned you to automatically reject anything branded as a "woman thing," out of fear of violence and/or social rejection. But now is not the time to be a quiet and passive supporter of women. Perhaps after this march you can have your own painful and necessary dialogues about why you waited for women to organize a powerful show of resistance and then, instead of being grateful for the opportunity to participate, some of you pouted about not having a seat at the planning table. Perhaps you can have your own painful and necessary dialogues about being in thrall to superficial branding over substance, because this march and the movement it is galvanizing are about women's lives, not our lifestyles, and deserve to be treated with accordant gravity.'

Brief video on male DV victims

Matt · 15 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. This is a good, brief video on male DV victims and the problems they face getting help for it.

Teacher gets ten years for sex with 13-YO

Matt · 16 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A former Texas middle-school teacher who was impregnated by a 13-year-old student has been sentenced to 10 years in prison.

Alexandria Vera, 25, was facing up to 30 years behind bars after pleading guilty to aggravated sexual assault of a child in November. She admitted to police that a relationship that started with Instagram messages between her and the boy blossomed into a romance — one that the boy's family approved of.

A judge in the 209th District Court in Houston said during Vera's sentencing hearing on Friday that he does not believe the former English teacher is a danger to children or a classic pedophile, the Houston Chronicle reported. But Judge Michael McSpadden said he wants to send a message to the community by giving Vera some prison time.'

Schools offer ‘safe spaces’ to combat ‘toxic masculinity’

Mastodon · 17 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Several universities are taking advantage of the new year to renew their efforts against “toxic masculinity,” with some schools hosting events that will “construct new futures for masculinities.”

At Oregon State University, for instance, students are invited to attend a “healthy masculinities conference” where they will “engage in collective imagining to construct new futures for masculinities, unrestricted by power, privilege, and oppression.”

...

Duke University’s “Men’s Project,” meanwhile, is looking for applicants for a “nine-week long discussion group” that will also “examine the ways we present—or don’t present—our masculinities, so we can better understand how masculinity exists on our campus—often in toxic ways—and begin the work of unlearning violence.”

“We want to explore, dissect, and construct an intersectional understanding of masculinity and maleness, as well as to create destabilized spaces for those with privilege,” a description of the program explains. “Duke is an environment where some are rarely made uncomfortable while others are made to bear the weight of their identities on a daily basis—we aim to flip that paradigm.”'

Bill would restrict colleges' response to sexual assault reports

Mastodon · 17 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A key state lawmaker wants to limit the ability of Georgia's public colleges to investigate and discipline alleged campus rapists.

A bill introduced this week from state Rep. Earl Ehrhart, R-Powder Springs, would prevent schools from investigating campus sex abuse claims unless police were also involved.

It highlights a central question in such cases: should they be handled by colleges or law enforcement?

Currently, schools handle many of the cases through a secretive campus judicial process. Such involvement is mandated by federal Title IX law, although the details are largely left up to individual schools.

Many sexual assault allegations never make it to law enforcement because victims are reluctant to come forward. Campus tribunals provide a measure of accountability and require a lower burden of proof. But critics — including some students who have been kicked out of school after facing allegations of sexual assault — say the proceedings are deeply flawed and lack adequate protections for the accused.'

Abortion Activist: Men Attending Anti-Trump March “Have to be Okay With Being Led by Women”

Mastodon · 17 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to men voicing their opinions about abortion, pro-abortion feminists’ position basically boils down to this: If you’re a man and you’re pro-life, you’d better shut up about it; if you’re a man and pro-choice on abortion, you’re welcome to tag along.

That, in not so blunt terms, appears to be the position of women organizing the Women’s March on Washington on Jan. 21, the day after the presidential inauguration.

“This is a movement that is led by women, but it is not just for women. It’s for all people,” Linda Sarsour, one of the march’s lead organizers, told the Washington Post.

The newspaper reported:

One caveat: “You have to be okay with being led by women,” she said.

“A lot of men are quiet supporters of women,” said Jackson Katz, author of “Man Enough? Donald Trump, Hillary Clinton, and the Politics of Presidential Masculinity.” Millions of men voted for Clinton and support women’s rights both politically and personally, he said, but they don’t have a powerful voice.

… Katz said these men will need to speak out if they don’t want to see abortion outlawed, given Trump’s pledge to appoint antiabortion judges to federal courts.

“That means taking some risks in challenging other men, and literally standing up to the bullying that comes from the right about masculinity,” Katz said.'

Protesters Scream at Cops, Attack Cameraman at UC Davis Milo Event

Mastodon · 17 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A 40 minute video posted by a pro-free speech cameraman shows protesters hitting his camera and screaming at police officers during Breitbart Senior Editor MILO's event at UC Davis on Friday.

Student protesters and "anti-fascists" can be seen in the video screaming "move cops get out the way," at the line of police officers attempting to protect the venue and those inside, before the cameraman gets attacked, with numerous protesters hitting his camera, pushing him away, throwing up their signs in front of his face, and shouting at him.'

‘Ice cream killer’ is so dangerous, she’s headed to a men’s prison

Mastodon · 17 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A Spanish murderer dubbed the “ice cream killer” is so dangerous, she’s being moved to an all-male prison to serve out her life sentence, according to a new report.

Estibaliz Carranza, 38, earned the chilling nickname after she shot her boyfriend and ex-husband to death in 2008, cut up their bodies with a chainsaw and hid them in the freezers of her ice cream store in Vienna, Austria.

The Mexican-born Spanish national stored the body parts in ice cream tubs filled with concrete and disguised the smell with air fresheners.

Now, she’ll spend the rest of her life in an all-male prison in Asten, Austria, because she shows an “advanced reduction of the relevant dangerousness,” according to the Mirror.

The prison, which houses 91 men, allows inmates to freely move around and cook their own meals together. Prisoners can also use a lounge area with a TV.

Carranza is one of 13 women to be transferred to the prison.

She carried out the crimes because the men failed to get her pregnant.'

Brown University: Unlearning Toxic Masculinity

Mastodon · 17 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rigid definitions of masculinity are toxic to men's health. Even the World Health Organization (WHO) has recognized that men's tendency to die at younger ages may correlate to the harmful ways that masculinity has been defined in society and the ways that men have been conditioned to practice it.

“In 2000, the World Health Organization (WHO) acknowledged the need to pay greater attention to the shorter life expectancy of men and identified a lack of understanding of the role of ‘masculinity’ in shaping men’s expectations and behaviours as a primary causative factor for the health disparity between men and women” (Evans, Frank, Oliffe and Gregory, 2011).

They determined that risk-taking behaviors and lack of willingness to seek help were among the reasons for negative health outcomes that men experience (Baker et al., 2014). This lack of willingness to seek help is not limited to physical injury and illness. The American Foundation for Suicide Prevention reports that the suicide rate for men is about four times higher than it is for women (“Facts and Figures, date unknown).

How men are socialized plays into the type of violence that exists in college communities. The harm and violence that men inflict is not strictly contained to the self-harm mentioned previously. Men will often resort to violence to resolve conflict because anger is the only emotion that they have been socialized to express. Unfortunately, the way that young men are conditioned to view sex and their need to be dominant and have power over others also contribute to instances of sexual assault and other forms of interpersonal violence on college campuses.'

Grandfather fights off woman trying to kidnap granddaughter in Northern California park, police say

Matt · 18 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A grandfather was credited with fighting off a woman who tried to kidnap his 3-year-old granddaughter on Saturday at a Northern California park.

Lindsay Frasher, 28, was arrested on suspicion of kidnapping and is being held on $200,000 bail in the Placer County jail, according to the Auburn Police Department.

Police Sgt. Gary Hopping told KTXL-TV that the man and his two grandchildren were visiting Ashford Park in Auburn, about 35 miles northeast of Sacramento, at 1:42 p.m. when Frasher approached them.

She then grabbed one of the children, a 3-year-old girl, and tried to pull her from her grandfather, police said.'

Police: Daughters taken 3 decades ago found, mom arrested

Matt · 18 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two sisters who disappeared from Rhode Island with their mother in 1985 have been located in the Houston area, and their mother was charged with snatching them, police announced Tuesday.

An anonymous tip two days before Christmas led police to Kimberly and Kelly Yates and their mother, Elaine Yates, state police Lt. Col. Joseph Philbin said. Elaine Yates, who had been living in Houston under the name Liana Lynn Waldberg, was arrested Monday and faces arraignment Wednesday in Rhode Island.

Kelly Yates was 10 months old and her sister was 3 years old when they disappeared. Kelly Yates, now 32, and Kimberly Yates, now 35, weren't living with their mother, who's 69, but are in the Houston area and are in good health, Philbin said.

The girls' father, Russell Yates, was told of the arrest immediately after it happened and is relieved, Philbin said. His contact information was given to his daughters.'

Dear Feminists, ‘Male Vulnerability’ Isn’t a Virtue

Mastodon · 18 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Indeed, traditional concepts of masculinity, which asked men to cultivate physical and mental toughness, to assume leadership roles in the home, in business, and on the battlefield, and to become guardians and protectors, became the “trap” or “man box,” to quote the University of Richmond’s ridiculous “authentic masculinities” site. The most destructive words a boy can hear? “Be a man,” at least according to the mandatory freshman orientation at Gettysburg College.

But here’s the problem — vulnerability isn’t a virtue. It’s a morally neutral characteristic at best and a vice at worst. Yes, some men are more naturally sensitive than others, but we now ask — no, beg — men to indulge their emotions, as if the antidote to awful male aggression is a good cry.
...
We are failing in that key task. Feminism has infected child-rearing and modern education so thoroughly that legions of parents and teachers are adrift and clueless. They have no idea what to do with their sons, and absent fathers compound the confusion and create yawning cultural voids. Yes, there are some pajama boys out there, the guys who embrace the feminist project (truthfully in part to hook up with feminist women), but there are countless others who reject feminism’s version of a “man box” and are instead adrift in purposeless masculinity.'

Senators Push DeVos to Commit to Debunked Campus 'Rape Culture' Narrative

Mastodon · 18 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Tuesday night, two Democrat senators pressured President-elect Donald Trump's nominee for secretary of Education, Betsy DeVos, to embrace a debunked college campus "rape culture" narrative on sexual assault. Specifically, they asked her to commit to enforcing Title IX regulations which have deprived hundreds of students of their due process rights under the Constitution.

The issue of campus sexual assault is more complicated than Democrats like to admit. While such assault is a heinous crime and should be dealt with seriously, every case should be examined on its own merits, without preconceived judgements on either side. Much of the rhetoric involving such cases is one-sided, and it pressures colleges to find the accused guilty, even in the face of exonerating evidence.

The Obama administration has enshrined in law a false narrative that destroys lives, and Democrats defend it in the name of prosecuting sexual assault. Here is U.S. Senator Patty Murray (D, Washington state), questioning DeVos:

"Murray: President-elect Trump was recored bragging about kissing and groping and trying to have sex with women without their consent. ... If this behavior, kissing and touching women and girls without their consent, happened in a school, would you consider it sexual assault?

DeVos: Yes.

Murray: One in five young women will experience sexual assault while in college. ... Can you promise them and me that you will not, as has been in the press, consider "reining in the Office for Civil Rights" in the Department's work to protect students from campus sexual assault?"

There are multiple problems with Murray's remarks and question.'

Republican Men Say It’s a Better Time to Be a Woman Than a Man

Mastodon · 19 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To be a woman in the United States is to feel unequal, despite great strides in gender equality, according to a wide-ranging poll about gender in postelection America released Tuesday. It’s catcalls on the street, disrespect at work and unbalanced responsibilities at home. For girls, it’s being taught, more than boys, to aspire to marriage, and for women, it’s watching positions of power go to men.

Men, however, don’t necessarily see it that way.

Those are some of the findings from the poll, by PerryUndem, a nonpartisan research and polling firm whose biggest clients are foundations. It surveyed 1,302 adults in December via the National Opinion Research Center at the University of Chicago’s AmeriSpeak panel.

Eighty-two percent of women said sexism was a problem in society today, and 41 percent of women said they had felt unequal because of their gender.

Men underestimated the sexism felt by the women in their lives, the survey found. And while most respondents agreed it’s a better time to be a man than a woman in our society, only Republican men thought it was a better time to be a woman than a man.'

The (very) mixed messages of the Women's March against Trump

Mastodon · 19 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Washington Post reports, "Of the 175,000 people who indicated they are going on the march's Facebook page, just a fraction appear to be men," which makes sense; it is the "Women's March," after all. But in this day and age, that which makes sense is usually problematic.

According to the Post, it's "the same test that played out when Americans went to vote for the nation's first female president," and American men are once again failing.

...

Men are understandably confused. Esquire's Luke O'Neil is here to help. O'Neil explained what men should do:

"Anyone with any degree of self-awareness may be hesitant to blunder his way into areas he wasn't explicitly invited into, and there has been the regrettable emergence of a reviled archetype in recent years of the performative male feminist who espouses feminist talking points to enhance his own status . . . As a modest suggestion, men simply need to do two things at once: Speak up and keep your mouth shut."'

Airline Debuts Female-Only Seating to Combat In-Flight Sex Attacks

Mastodon · 19 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Air India is set to launch women-only seating to protect female fliers from sexual harassment after a number of women were allegedly groped by male passengers.

Starting January 18th, these seats will be made available on Airbus A320 aircrafts to women who travel alone and do not wish to be seated next to men, and will see the first two rows sectioned off.

Air India general manager-revenue management Meenakshi Malik told The Hindu that the company would not be charging any additional fee for blocking these seats as the move is meant to enhance female safety.

“We feel, as national carriers, it is our responsibility to enhance comfort level to female passengers. There are a lot of female passengers who travel alone with us and we will be blocking a few seats for them.”

The women-only seats will be available on domestic flights but may be extended to other flights in the next few months.

By Nahema Marchal | 7:25 am, January 17, 2017

Air India is set to launch women-only seating to protect female fliers from sexual harassment after a number of women were allegedly groped by male passengers.

Starting January 18th, these seats will be made available on Airbus A320 aircrafts to women who travel alone and do not wish to be seated next to men, and will see the first two rows sectioned off.

Air India general manager-revenue management Meenakshi Malik told The Hindu that the company would not be charging any additional fee for blocking these seats as the move is meant to enhance female safety.

“We feel, as national carriers, it is our responsibility to enhance comfort level to female passengers. There are a lot of female passengers who travel alone with us and we will be blocking a few seats for them.”

The women-only seats will be available on domestic flights but may be extended to other flights in the next few months.

...

But the move hasn’t been welcome by all.

Former Air India Executive Jitendra Bhargava also told The Hindu: “To my knowledge, this happens nowhere in the world. Planes are not unsafe for women passengers.'

Man Convicted of Rape After Removing Condom During Sex Without Consent

Mastodon · 19 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a landmark legal case, a Swiss man has been convicted of rape after secretly removing a condom during sex without his partner's consent.

The Independent reports the 47-year-old man (who has not been named publicly) met his partner on Tinder and they began to have consensual sex with a condom. Afterwards, the woman realized he had removed the condom at some point without her knowledge or approval.

Now, the Federal Supreme Court in Lausanne—the highest court in Switzerland—has judged that such actions do constitute rape, passing down a one-year suspended sentence. In comments to news agency RTS, the victim's lawyer described it as "a first in Switzerland."

Our understanding of consent has evolved hugely in recent years, thanks largely to the dedicated work of feminist activists and anti-sexual violence campaigners. However, for many a question mark hovers over whether removing a condom during sex is legally the same as rape. For the avoidance of any doubt: under UK law, it is.'

Along With Beer, Toronto Bars Offer Lessons in Consent, Sexual Violence

Mastodon · 19 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Order a beer, get a lesson about consent, gender-based violence and sexual harassment– at least in Toronto through Jan. 22.

On Monday, at least 15 of the city's bars kicked off the "On the Table" campaign, where they'll distribute 10,000 message-bearing coasters.

Funded in part by the City of Toronto's Arts Council, the project was created by Aisle 4, a "curatorial project that initiates and promotes socially engaged artwork."'

Revealed: The Gender Pay Gap Feminists Don't Want to Talk About

Mastodon · 19 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To little fanfare from the usual trumpeters of pay inequality, figures released last week highlighted a new, and growing, gender pay gap.

Perhaps we can gain some insight into why the usual suspects lay silent when the latest tranche of data emerged from one of the few headlines it did garner: Earnings inequality among men soars.

...

Twenty years ago only 1 man in 20 aged 25-55 with low hourly wages worked part-time. Today the figure is one in five.

Furthermore, while 95% of top-earning men normally work full-time, 20% of the lowest-paid are now part-timers.

That means wage inequality for men has risen over two decades, while for women the opposite has been true.

Indeed, women in their 20s now earn more than men, a trend that will surely continue, since a girl born in 2017 is 75% more likely to go to university than a boy.

These women with better educations will be more likely to move into full-time work and have less incentive to leave it, further widening the gap.

...

Firstly, this clearly shows more than half of men in part time work are underemployed: they want to work more, but can't.

For gender pay gap zealots this is deeply problematic on two counts. One, it shows the overriding majority of women who are working part time are are happy about it.

Two, those part time workers, when put into the overall salary pot, drag women's average pay down, helping to create the mainstream gender pay gap.

So we can see with total clarity that the gender pay gap exists not because of sexism (it's been illegal to pay women less for the same work since 1970), but women's lifestyle choices, both in choosing to work part time and choosing full-time jobs with less pay.'

'Gender aware and gender sensitive': European bank's new lending criteria

Mastodon · 19 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The European Investment Bank (EIB), the money-lending arm of the EU, is to launch a new gender strategy to increase women's participation in global economies.

From 1 January the bank will implement new rules designed to ensure its lending will help women and men equally, following growing evidence of the economic advantages of female equality.

According to the bank, up to $12tn could be added to global GDP by 2025 by advancing women's equality. It says the public, private, and social sectors need to act to close gender gaps in work and society, and acknowledges that it, along with other multilateral development bank, has a seminal role to play in making this happen.

Eleni Kyrou, senior social development specialist at the EIB, said the bank wanted to be "gender aware and gender sensitive", so that its investments benefit women and men equally. "We are saying let's have the gender lens, be aware of gender structural dynamics on the ground and really try to invest cognisant of this," she said.'

Some states pushing for free vasectomies

el cid · 19 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Call it contraception equality.

Vasectomies, which are not covered under President Barack Obama's health care law, are increasingly being included in state measures that would require insurers to provide cost-free coverage of birth control.

Backers of laws and proposals in such states as Illinois, Vermont, Maryland and most recently New York say that if women can get tubal ligations with no out-of-pocket costs, men should be able to get their surgical sterilization covered cost-free as well. Such state measures are seen as a key backup if the federal mandate is repealed.

"What we have are couples facing a decision about which birth control method to use and they see that methods used by women have no out-of-pocket cost while there would be a cost, in some cases a fairly substantial cost, for men's," said Adam Sonfield, a policy analyst for the Guttmacher Institute, which studies reproductive health issues.'

Agenda for Women's March has been hijacked by organizers bent on highlighting women's differences

Mastodon · 20 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The controversy surrounding the exclusionary identity politics unsettling what should be a unifying event — Saturday's Women's March on Washington — shows that the fractures underpinning Hillary Clinton's devastating election loss have not healed.

Unfortunately, the activist wing of the Democratic Party and many leading progressives are clinging to a profound disconnect with the broader mass of Americans, both women and men.

I live in Washington and plan to attend the protest because Donald Trump's presidency, and what it portends for America and the democratic world, demands such action. A commander-in-chief who revels in grabbing women "by the pussy," myriad insults to women, cozies up to a Russian dictator who hacked the U.S. election, spews contempt for our allies including Angela Merkel, wants to build a wall to keep out Mexicans, or target people because they are of the Muslim faith, merits a strong collective response.

But the attempted hijacking of the march's agenda and all the nasty tit-for-tat between white versus black/queer/Muslim/trans and other identities tells a very disturbing story about the divided state of feminism today. The separatist, inward-looking politics that helped drive Trump to power and Clinton into oblivion is not going away — in fact it is becoming more entrenched, and all for the better, say organizers bent on highlighting women's differences rather than their commonality as American and international citizens.'

Protest at Milo Yiannopoulos Event at University of Washington Ends in Gunfire

Mastodon · 22 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A protest outside of a Milo Yiannopoulos event this past Friday at the University of Washington in Seattle turned violent after a scuffle erupted between anti-Trump protesters and prospective event attendees in the Red Square area of the campus. The protest ended in gunfire.

A previous event at UC Davis with Yiannopoulos, the alt-right provocateur, and Pharma Bro Martin Shkreli was canceled last week amid a storm of protest and warnings by campus police that it could turn violent.

Anti-Milo protesters from various groups—including student activists, anarchists and Antifa (self-styled anti-fascists)—were on site before the start of the event and formed a human wall in front of the police barricade. Many wore masks and covered their faces with hoodies and bandanas. Police were forced to push them away from the barricade while prospective event attendees made their way in.'

'It is impossible for women to be sexist towards men'

Mastodon · 22 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'People often quote the dictionary at me - “Sexism is discrimination on the basis of one’s sex” - because, as we know, all complex ideologies are easily explained in one sentence.

This definition would seem to imply that either gender can be sexist but I’m going to make a rather bold assertion today. That isn’t true. It is impossible for women to be sexist towards men.

Women can, as Melissa A. Fabello writes in her excellent essay, Why Reverse Oppression Simply Cannot Exist, make stereotypical assumptions about men, they can be prejudiced towards men, they can discriminate against men based on those prejudices.

“However,” she writes, “only oppressed people experience all of that and institutionalised violence and systematic erasure... That’s why it’s not possible to be sexist against men.”

This isn’t to say that it’s morally right for women to be prejudiced against men. Making cursory assumptions about people based on their sex, race, religion, or sexuality is a ludicrous approach to take in any situation.

But to say that women can be sexist about men, that it’s ‘the same’ when a woman makes an offensive joke about a man as when the situation is reversed, is to be wilfully blind to the deeply imbalanced world that we live in.'

Malecare: Petition for Office of Men's Health

Matt · 24 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Our best chance for establishing an Office of Men's Health in the USA is now, in the early days of this new administration. Our Petition at whitehouse.gov is a first and important step. Please sign and spread the word. This effort is entirely up to us. We can do this!

Click and Sign here: http://bit.ly/2iWgnQG

Here is the text of the petition:
We petition for the establishment of an Office of Mens Health at the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. This office would mirror the work of the existing Office of Womens Health, which has helped to save thousands of lives and has improved the lives of many more. Men die 6 years younger than women and suffer higher mortality rates for the top 10 causes of death. The lives of hundreds of thousands of men will continue to be threatened unless immediate action is taken to combat this growing crisis. The Office of Mens Health will coordinate the fragmented mens health awareness, prevention, and research efforts now being conducted by federal and state government. An Office of Mens Health will help our economy and provide needed resources as health care moves to local management.

Wishing you action, health and hope,
Darryl
Darryl Mitteldorf, LCSW
Executive Director
Malecare
darryl@malecare.org

Attacks on Betsy DeVos Reveal ‘How Ideological’ the Campus Rape Debate Has Become

Mastodon · 24 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An editorial from The Boston Globe argues that the intense reaction to Betsy DeVos, Donald Trump’s nominee for the Secretary of Education, reveals “how ideological and unmoored” the debate on campus rape culture has become.

...

Many students accused of sexual assault aren’t given legitimate legal hearings. Rather, schools investigate incidents internally, often times not telling offending students the details of the accusations against them.

In the 2012 handbook, ‘there was no requirement that copies of any ‘substantiating materials’ submitted by the accuser, or the names of any witnesses, be shown or provided to the accused any time,’ wrote Judge F. Dennis Saylor, who reviewed Brandeis’s procedures in connection with a lawsuit in federal court. Saylor went on, ‘The accused had no right to confront or cross-examine the accuser, no right to call witnesses, and no right to confront or cross-examine the accuser’s witnesses. The accused had no right to review all the evidence.”

Here are 3 ways Trump can Make College Great Again for young men

Mastodon · 24 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'During the Obama administration, colleges have become increasingly hostile to young men.

Their free speech is under fire, their access to due process is being whittled away, and they are often forced into curricula that pathologize their masculinity.

Young women are often spared from this administrative overreach, and it may partly explain why they attend college in far greater numbers than men and also drop out less frequently.

President-elect Donald Trump promises to Make America Great Again, which begs the question: Will he Make College Great Again, as well?

Here are three ways young men could have better college experiences under Trump.

1) Recentering the due process rights of the accused
...
2) Free speech protections
...
3) Less political indoctrination at universities
...
The University of North Carolina, Duke University, Dartmouth College, Gettysburg College and Vanderbilt University all have social justice programming of some sort dedicated to purging male students of their toxic masculinity.'

New ABA task force will consider due process rights in college sexual-misconduct cases

Mastodon · 24 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The ABA's Criminal Justice Section has formed a task force to develop guidelines and best practices for the handling of sexual misconduct cases on college campuses.

The guidelines are intended to ensure due process for both the victim and the accused, according to an ABA press release.

The ABA Task Force on College Due Process Rights and Victim Protections will be led by Andrew Boutros, co-chair of Seyfarth Shaw's white collar, internal investigations and False Claims Act practice.

Standards for deciding sexual misconduct cases have been dividing victim advocates and defense lawyers. Some lawyers have complained that accused students can't ask questions in hearings, and aren't allowed to learn the name of their accusers.'

Attempted Murderer ‘So Proud of Herself’ After Randomly Stabbing Nurse 21 Times

Matt · 25 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. That face. Excerpt:

'A Texas woman who wrote that she got a “high unlike any other” from stabbing another woman 21 times has been sentenced to prison, PEOPLE confirms.

Pearl Moen, who was 17 at the time of the seemingly random November 2015 attack in Austin, Texas, will serve 15 years behind bars, the Travis County District Attorney said in a news release. She was sentenced on Friday.

Prosecutors said Moen’s diary entries show she stabbed her 23-year-old victim, a nurse, because she wanted to see what it would feel like to kill someone. Moen has a history of drug use and psychological issues but no previous criminal record, the DA’s office said.

“I stabbed an innocent woman to death earlier today … It was absolutely fantastic,” Moen wrote in her diary, according to prosecutors. “Murder gives me a high unlike any other, it feels like this crisp unreality, flashing and sparkling, adrenaline and shock.”

“How do I even go about describing it. The whole thing was unreal,” she added. “I’m so proud of myself."'

SAVE Calls for End of Campus 'Kangaroo Courts'

Matt · 26 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

For many years now, SAVE has focused on restoring due process rights at colleges across the nation and putting a stop to the mistreatment of students by campus tribunals. Today, we continue to read horrific stories of colleges fumbling campus proceedings and putting the education of our students at risk.

That's why SAVE is proud to announce the launch of our new campaign "End Kangaroo Courts," calling for an end to the unfair campus proceedings that all too often put the complainant and the accused in compromising situations.

To find out more about our new campaign, please visit http://www.saveservices.org/camp/kangaroo-courts/

Thank you!

Very best,

Jonathon P Andrews
Project Coordinator
Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE)

Sperm theft lawsuit leaves appeals court weighing how much a life is worth

Matt · 26 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How much is a life worth?

That was the crux of the argument between a Louisiana man and the woman who gave birth to his son in 2010 after taking his sperm without permission from a fertility clinic and being artificially inseminated.
...
"The (judge) decided, in his opinion, that the law didn't allow those damages, which leaves a gap," said David Bernsen, an attorney for Layne Hardin. "We, as a society, have to decide whether this type of behavior is acceptable in Texas and I don't think it is."
...
Hardin won a lawsuit in 2015 against his former girlfriend, Tobie Devall, and Texas Andrology, the sperm bank that gave Devall two samples without Hardin's permission.

She gave birth to Hardin's son, then refused to allow any custodial rights with the boy, now 6. The two had a long custody battle in Louisiana, where Hardin lives.'

Campus civil rights groups begin making case to Trump administration

Matt · 27 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two organizations dedicated to students' rights have begun lobbying the Trump administration and lawmakers to correct what they see as years of over-reaching by the Obama administration.

The Foundation for Individual Rights in Education sent an open letter to President Donald Trump on Inauguration Day, offering advice on how the new administration could "help protect free speech, academic freedom and due process on college campuses."

FIRE President Greg Lukianoff included a description of the major culture problems facing today's campuses, and provided a solution for each.

The first problem noted by Lukianoff was the lack of free speech on college campuses. To combat this problem, Lukianoff suggested issuing a "stern reminder" to administrators that they risk personal liability for violating the First Amendment by controlling what their students say.'

Women’s March Featured Speaker Who Kidnapped And Tortured A Man

Mastodon · 27 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The Women’s March on Washington last week featured as a speaker convicted felon Donna Hylton who, along with several others, kidnapped a man and then tortured him to death.

Hylton’s name is listed on the Women’s March website alongside prominent liberals like Planned Parenthood president Cecile Richards, actress Gloria Steinem, filmmaker Michael Moore and CNN commentator Van Jones.

Hylton, along with three men and three other women, kidnapped 62-year-old real-estate broker Thomas Vigliarolo and held him for ransom, before eventually killing him. As noted in a 1995 Psychology Today article, when asked about forcibly sodomizing the victim with a three foot steel pole, one of Hylton’s accomplices replied: “He was a homo anyway.”

Speaking about Hylton, New York City Detective William Spurling told Psychology Today: “I couldn’t believe this girl who was so intelligent and nice-looking could be so unemotional about what she was telling me she and her friends had done. They’d squeezed the victim’s testicles with a pair of pliers, beat him, burned him.”'

Lawyer: This ride-for-hire may prove discriminatory

Mastodon · 28 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new ride-for-hire app catering to female drivers and passengers may run afoul of discrimination laws and new state regulations.

Safr, which will begin an invitation-only launch next week and a public launch March 1, will employ all female drivers and only accept ride requests from women — though if a woman is with a man, he can ride, the company said.

“There’s a big hole in the ride-sharing economy right now, especially for women and families,” said Safr spokeswoman Joanna Humphrey Flynn. “A lot of women don’t feel safe driving.”

And though Safr’s unique approach to the ride-sharing industry could be a million-dollar idea, Duane Morris discrimination attorney Bronwyn Roberts said the business model runs counter to a state law requiring companies to adhere to anti-discrimination policies and a decades-old Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination decision. In 1983, commission members ruled a taxi company was a “public accommodation” and was therefore prohibited from discriminating against anyone on the basis of gender, religion or race.'

Oxford college debates merits of women-only principals

Mastodon · 28 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Somerville College JCR is discussing whether gender should be taken into account in the selection of the next principal.

Dr Alice Prochaska, Somerville's current principal, announced in October 2016 that she will be stepping down after a seven-year term at the end of the academic year. The college is due to announce her successor some time this year.

Alex Crichton-Miller, president of the Somerville JCR, told Cherwell: "Given that there are several colleges in Oxford that have only ever been led by men, there were some members of the Common Room who felt strongly that Somerville ought to continue to have a female principal.

"This point was made, clearly, on the basis that the proposed female candidate possesses all other required qualities for the leadership role.

...

Whilst positive action is lawful under the Equality Act, Somerville's Equality and Diversity Policy states: "In respect of staff, ensure that entry into employment and progression within employment are determined solely by criteria which are related to the duties of a particular post."

In December 2016, released National Archive files revealed Margaret Thatcher's attempt to fight the admission of male fellows at her alma mater, Somerville. This resistance came at odds with directives of the European Commission's equality legislation.'

Drunken girl gang jailed after posting sex attack of amateur footballer on Snapchat

Matt · 28 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A drunken gang of girls who took Snapchat photos and videos of a "ritualised humiliation" sex attack on an amateur footballer has been jailed.

Brogan Gillard, the 26-year-old ringleader of the group, was filmed dancing around the victim's naked body as she cut his hair, sliced onions over him and sexually assaulted him with a pair of scissors.

Paige Cunningham, 22, and Shannon Jones, 20, also posed for "trophy photographs" with the unconscious 19 year old victim and a Snapchat post showed one girl holding the man's penis.

The video was shared on social media and was seen by their victim's girlfriend, Preston Crown Court heard. Gillard then joked about using carrots and onions in the sex assault on Facebook.

Judge Graham Knowles QC said he sentenced as if it had been three men on a female.
...
The court heard in his victim impact statement that he has flashbacks and suicidal thoughts and feels anxious.

Gillard has a string of previous convictions, including arson, false benefits claims, harassment of a neighbour, theft, and drink driving. Cunningham, a mother of two, has previous for battery, theft, shoplifting and assaulting a police officer.

All three pleaded guilty to sexual assault. Gillard also pleaded guilty to unrelated child cruelty charges.

Mitigating for Gillard, Sharon Watson, said her client had been drunk and did it as a joke, but admits it is "deeply unpleasant, disturbing and upsetting". Two of her children have now been adopted, it was added.'

Toxic masculinity: Will the 'war on men' only backfire?

Mastodon · 28 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The term 'toxic masculinity' has crept into the lexicon in the past 12 months, having appeared in mainstream news articles, popular feminist blogs and, as of November, the crowd-sourced online repository of slang words, Urban Dictionary.

Generally used to denote how some aspects of masculinity — such as entitlement, homophobia and sexual aggressiveness — can harm women and families and cripple men's own health, toxic masculinity, at its most extreme edges, has been linked with acts of violence like mass shootings and university campus sexual assault.

(For this reason, some US colleges have recently introduced 'toxic masculinity' courses, in which male students can reflect on topics like rape culture, machismo and pornography.)
...
And at the recent Women's March on Washington, a rally for which hundreds of thousands of demonstrators gathered to express their concern that women's and other minority groups' rights will be eroded under President Trump, many carried placards emblazoned with references to 'toxic masculinity'.

"I came here to march against a toxic masculinity and years of misogyny," Washington DC resident Andrew told TIME of his motivation for marching.
...
"The first is emphasising how masculinity is patriarchal — based on entitlement, based on power, based on dominance — and fuels some men's violence and mistreatment of women or indeed other men," said Dr Flood.
...
"To say 'toxic masculinity' — it does imply ... that all men are toxic.

"Clearly there is such a thing as toxicity in some of the ways that men are socialised, but to suggest that all masculinity is toxic and that all men are violent is completely wrong."'

Will the extreme feminists please sit down

Mastodon · 28 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Buckle in everyone, we're going for a rocky ride on the social justice roller coaster.

A few months ago, Buzzfeed released a video called: "Women Try Manspreading for a Week." I've never been a huge fan of Buzzfeed, but this video has scraped the bottom of the barrel of petty complaints.

In the video, several women explain what manspreading is—basically men spreading their legs into a large V-shape when they're sitting—and then try doing it for a week themselves. Apparently, these women think that men should sit more like women tend to, with their legs closed. They think that men take up too much space when they sit down in crowded places like city busses.

Some of them do. I'm 100 percent aware that there are some jerks out there that sit in an obnoxious position and take up more room than necessary when there are other people looking for a seat. There are even people that will lay down across two to three bus seats. Most of the time, however, men just sit with their legs apart because it's the most comfortable way for them to sit. In the words of my brother, "It's uncomfortable to sit that way [with your legs closed]." It's not rocket science to figure out why.

The women in this video don't really care about that, but they certainly care about the amount of space that they think they are allowed to have on busses and the like. No one ever told these women that they aren't allowed to take up more than one seat on a bus, so the fact that this is an assumed rule is ridiculous.
...
This manspreading idea is taking the brilliant movement of feminism too far. Bringing justice to victims of sexual harassment and assault is an important feminist issue. Equal career opportunities for both men and women are an important feminist issue. Manspreading is just whining that is being labeled as a feminist issue.'

Woman at center of Emmett Till case tells author she fabricated testimony

Matt · 28 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was the lynching that outraged African Americans, spurred the civil rights movement and etched the victim's name in history: Emmett Till.

The 14-year-old Chicagoan was visiting relatives in the cotton country of the Mississippi delta on 24 August 1955 when he allegedly wolf-whistled at a white woman.

Three days later his body was found in the Tallahatchie river. Till had a bullet hole in the head, an eye gouged out and other wounds. The murderers had wrapped barbed wire around his neck and weighted him down with a cotton gin fan.

It was a ghastly crime that changed the United States but the woman at the center of it, Carolyn Bryant, long remained an enigma.'

Feminism and gaslighting

Matt · 28 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Good article on gaslighting here. I read it and realized this is modern feminism's playbook. Excerpt:

'Gaslighting is a tactic of behavior in which a person or entity, in order to gain more power, makes a victim question their reality. It works a lot better than you may think. Anyone is susceptible to gaslighting. It is a common technique of abusers, dictators, narcissists, and cult leaders. It is done slowly, so the victim doesn't realize how much they've been brainwashed. In the movie Gaslight (1944), a man manipulates his wife to the point where she thinks she is losing her mind.

People that gaslight use the following techniques:

1. They tell you blatant lies.
...
2. They deny they ever said something, even though you have proof.
...
3. They use what is near and dear to you as ammunition.'

Title IX Investigations in Need of Reform

Mastodon · 28 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'How much of the failure to grasp current controversies over campus Title IX investigations come from seeing two sides even though they are demanding similar measures? Many from both camps, seemingly in frustration, suggest all campus Title IX investigations should be delegated to local police and prosecutors. That approach is not consistent with Title IX, but support for it suggests concerns with the current tools for addressing on-campus sexual violence.

The criminal justice system gives both victims and defendants lots of information about what is going to happen, when and why, what will be required of them and what protections will be afforded to them. Local police and prosecutors are bound by centuries of common law, codified in a relatively simple format, and must act in very consistent and predictable ways. Attempts to graft portions of criminal law into a campus Title IX jurisprudence come from a desire that all parties have access to a fair, predictable and open system. Although a wholesale grafting of criminal law and procedure into Title IX proceedings is inappropriate given the very serious differences in context, all students deserve reliable procedures consistent with due process.'

America overdue for an end to circumcision

Mastodon · 28 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Ritual circumcision is a common practice for Jews and Muslims around the world. It is a legacy of God's commandment to Abraham to circumcise his penis as a sign of their special bond, as chronicled in the Book of Genesis, and it persists as a kind of tribal marking.

In America, even irreligious Jews still embrace this initiation rite. Some blame peer pressure: "I didn't want him to look weird," my brother-in-law explained about his newborn son. Others take comfort in the fact that this tradition has also been blessed by the American medical establishment. Neonatal circumcision has been the most common surgery in America for over a century. Nearly six out of ten newborns are released from hospitals foreskin-free. The practice is so widespread, in fact, that one study of 90 active American medical textbooks and models found that less than a third featured a penis with foreskin intact.
...
Because male circumcision is so common in the states, few Americans realize how rare it is most everywhere else. The practice has fallen by the wayside in Australia, Canada, Britain and New Zealand, and fewer than one-fifth of all male Europeans are circumcised. In December, the Danish Medical Association recommended ending the practice for boys, arguing that because it permanently alters the body it should be "an informed, personal choice" that young men make for themselves.

In Germany, a district judge ruled in 2012 that ritual circumcision of juveniles is a crime that violates "the fundamental right of the child to bodily integrity." South Korea is the only Asian country to embrace the procedure, as a kind of physiological souvenir of America's occupation following World War II. But there, too, circumcision rates are declining fast, as the adolescent boys who would otherwise go under the knife (as per local custom) gain access to research about its purported benefits online.'

Then And Now: The Men's Rights Movement

mens_issues · 29 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Wisconsin Public Radio published an article about an interview with Warren Farrell. They talk a lot about MRAs as "misogynists" etc., but at least Warren is able to give a more reasonable perspective. Excerpt:

'Warren Farrell, a prominent men's rights activist, is often cited in online forums where men complain about their legal and cultural disempowerment.

Farrell's 1993 book "The Myth of Male Power" is considered the guiding text for these aggrieved men, a kind of male counterpart to Betty Friedan's 1963 "The Feminine Mystique."

Parts of the men's movement are filled with anti-feminist diatribes and denunciations against women seen as manipulative and emasculating. So it may come as a surprise to meet Farrell, a soft-spoken man in his early seventies who once worked closely with Gloria Steinem, a prominent women's rights activist.

Farrell is aware of the misogyny and violent rhetoric that ripples through the men's rights movement, but he said there's tremendous pain beneath this anger, pain we must acknowledge to draw out the venom of toxic masculinity from our culture. '

Trump Can Help Debunk Alleged College "Rape Culture"

Mastodon · 30 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Due process protections for the accused in campus cases alleging sexual assault have been under attack for decades. In the guise of enforcing Title IX—a 1972 federal law prohibiting educational institutions that receive federal funds from discriminating on the basis of sex—the Obama administration intensified the attack.

Restoring due process on campuses does not seem to be a top priority for President Trump and congressional Republicans. If they wish to uphold the rule of law—for men and for women—it should be.

Sexual assault is a grave crime. It ought to be promptly reported to the police. Perpetrators should be punished to the full extent of the law. But stripping the accused of due process rights—shared with those accused of murder, assault and battery, and other violent crimes—violates the promise of equality under the law and undermines the most effective means available for pursuing the truth about claims of serious criminal wrongdoing.

University administrators and professors, politicians, and many journalists who write about this issue believe that an allegedly pervasive college “rape culture” justifies university authorities taking the law into their own hands and, in righteous pursuit of the monsters roaming our campuses, sweeping the innocent away with the guilty.'

How Did Feminism Get Hijacked by Man-Haters

Mastodon · 31 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It seems that feminism has taken a much more intense pendulum swing in a direction that means that I no longer feel comfortable calling myself a feminist. It's gotten that bad. We have various feminists now calling for "the end of the patriarchy" and some others still are saying in varying states of hysteria: "I hate men!"

Many of us look at these extremes and think it's only a few who feel this way, but tragically that side of extreme male-hating feminism is on the rise and has been for some time. It is no longer about equal pay, equal opportunity, respect and equal rights. It is now about "women first" and screw the men (not in the good way!)

A video went viral recently featuring a woman, Jenny McDermott, stating "kill all male babies." I actually feel sorry for her.'

College leaders ponder future of Title IX under Trump

Mastodon · 31 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'As the Trump administration begins its term in office, college leaders remain unsure about how the new White House will regulate institutions' approaches to campus sexual assault. A briefing Wednesday on Capitol Hill reflected that anxiety, with college presidents calling on institutions to continue the Obama administration's increased focus on protecting students while urging the Trump administration to provide more clarity and to take a less adversarial stance.

"My hope is that whatever Congress or the administration does in terms of peeling back federal regulations, that the universities in this country do not step away from this issue," said Diane Harrison, president of California State University, Northridge. "There are rumors that they're going to lessen what we have to do. So we are potentially going to need to be far more assertive and far more vocal."
...
College presidents at Wednesday's briefing were in agreement that they would continue to use the preponderance of evidence standard, even if the 2011 guidance were to be reversed. The majority of colleges were already using the standard prior to the Dear Colleague letter. Alisa White, president of Austin Peay State University, in Tennessee, said the lower standard is appropriate because a campus disciplinary decision does not involve "a loss of liberty."

"I think the preponderance of the evidence standard should be one that would stand," White said, while adding that colleges should not rush to judgment on a student's culpability. "It's important to us and will be important to us regardless of what guidance and policies change."

The presidents disagreed, however, on whether students suspended or expelled over sexual assault allegations should have the charge noted on their transcripts. Last month, Representative Jackie Speier, a California Democrat, introduced a bill that would require academic transcripts to show that a student had violated campus policies involving sexual violence. Speier said at the time that colleges and universities currently have no way of knowing if a student transferring to their campus has committed a sexual assault at a previous institution.'

Also see: Campus sexual assault panel offered good, bad and ugly for due process

DeVos will restore due process on campus assault

Mastodon · 31 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The contentious confirmation hearing of Betsy DeVos, President Trump's nominee for Education secretary, revealed just how difficult it will be to restore a degree of fairness in how the nation's colleges and universities handle sexual assault allegations.

Even before the hearing commenced, Democratic senators Patty Murray of Washington and Bob Casey of Pennsylvania issued a letter wildly describing campus sexual assault as "affecting millions of college students." (According the most recent federal Clery Act data, from 2014, there were 5,178 rape reports on campus that year.) The senators demanded the new administration retain guilt-presuming policies adopted in April 2011 by the Education Department's Office for Civil Rights (OCR).

OCR has forced thousands of universities to change their procedures in sex cases, in each case increasing the chances of a guilty finding. These procedures include the lowest possible burden of proof (a 50.01% probability) ; a virtual ban on meaningful cross-examination, long seen by the Supreme Court as the law's best truth-finding tool; letting accusers appeal not guilty findings, a form of double jeopardy; a process so rushed that many accused students lack time to prepare a defense; and "interim" punishments before any investigation.'

Meet Whistle: The App That Lets You Report Sexism Whenever You See It

Mastodon · 31 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When it comes to dealing with sexism, women are being more outspoken than ever before. Whether you tweet out a shady experience for all your followers to read or call into the mansplaining hotline to report an incident, now is very much a “see something, say something” sort of era. If you want to know more about where sexism is happening and do your part to raise awareness, there’s a new app you need to DL. Introducing: Whistle.

Whistle is a newly released app for iPhone (and soon Android) users that enables women to anonymously identify and call out sexism over the course of their daily lives — not just at work, but while they are out, exercising, shopping and more.

How it works is super simple: Open up the app on your phone and you’ll be prompted to either “whistle” or see what women have been whistling about most recently or nearby. If you decide to send out a whistle, you first place it in one of six categories: work, public, home, school, online or in the media. From there you’ll select what type of sexism you’re experiencing. Of the 10 choices, you can pick from options like “boys club behavior” and “mansplaining.” After that, you’ll have 200 characters to explain what happened. Then, send it out to the network where other members can view and comment. If you don’t have anything to report but you want to see what sort of sexist acts are happening in your area, you can check out the “nearby” tab to view whistles that have recently been sent out in your area.'

Uni Accused of Sexism for Gym Dress Code That's Exactly the Same for Men as for Women

Mastodon · 31 January 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Two Rhode Island School of Design students were kicked out of Brown University's gym for wearing midriff-baring gear, and now they're insisting that the dress code is sexist — even though the rules are exactly the same for men as they are for women.

...

The Herald reports that although both women consider the policy to be "sexist and discriminatory towards women," school officials have insisted that that's not the case. In fact, Nelson Fitness Center manager Jason Bishoff told the publication that if an employee really did tell Karayiannis that the reason she had to cover up was to avoid making other people uncomfortable, then that employee simply did not understand the real reason for the rule — which he said is "to reduce skin contact with workout equipment."

"We don't want anybody to feel that this is targeted at them," Bishoff said. "These rules apply to all genders, all ages, all populations."

That's right: According to Bishoff, the reason behind the rules is not to maximize the power of the patriarchy, but to minimize the amount of sweaty, germ-covered skin that will be touching the equipment. Still, both Dimitroff and Karayiannis insist that — gender-neutral or not — the rules are clearly rooted in a misogynistic desire to police women's bodies.'

The woman who fights for men's right

Matt · 1 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In India, where crimes against women are rampant, a female activist and documentary filmmaker stands out for being a rare voice for abused men. The BBC's Geeta Pandey in Delhi profiles Deepika Narayan Bhardwaj as part of a series on the Asian women likely to make the news in 2017.

India regularly gets hauled over the coals for its shabby treatment of women. And rightly so.

Every 15 minutes a rape is recorded, every five minutes an incident of domestic violence is reported, a bride is killed for dowry every 69 minutes and every year hundreds of thousands of female foetuses are aborted and infant girls are killed, leading to an appallingly skewed gender ratio. Girls and women also have to battle lifelong discrimination, prejudice, violence and neglect.

In a climate like that, 31-year-old Deepika Narayan Bhardwaj knows she sticks out like a sore thumb, but she has some questions that are reasonable enough: "Are men not vulnerable? Do they not face discrimination? Can they not be victims?"

And she goes on to add: "Just as you don't have to be a woman to fight for women, similarly, you don't have to be a man to fight for men. I don't talk about atrocities against women because there are millions who are talking about it."'

Cops: Woman Stabbed Beau Over Threesome

Matt · 1 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Seriously. I mean, like, seriously. Guilty, Not Guilty, Unproven, and Stupid. These are the four verdicts I'd like to see available in our courts. In this case I am not sure exactly how I'd rule. Guilty? Not Guilty By Reason of Stupidity? Or Guilty And Stupid? That last fits. Excerpt:

'An Arizona woman stabbed her boyfriend with a pair of scissors after he declined her request to engage in a threesome with a woman that the alleged assailant had met at a local dog park, police charge.

According to cops, Teresa Gillard, 42, is facing felony aggravated assault and disorderly conduct charges stemming from a confrontation earlier this month at a residence in Lake Havasu City that she shares with the victim.
...
As detailed in a police report, Gillard told cops that she wanted to invite her new female acquaintance over for a threesome, which she and the victim “have always talked about doing.” But, Gillard added, her boyfriend “did not want to have a threesome because he wasn’t feeling well.”

The couple--who have dated, on and off, since 2008--began quarreling after the threesome proposal was rejected by the victim. A verbal argument between the pair eventually turned physical, investigators allege.

As first reported in Today’s News-Herald, as the dispute escalated, Gillard allegedly stabbed the victim several times in the arm and abdomen with a pair of scissors. The man, cops say, suffered only minor lacerations during the January 12 fracas.
...
Cops responded to the Lake Havasu City home after Gillard called 911 to claim that she had been beaten up by the victim. The man, however, was not charged by police.'

Misandry and Child Abuse Flourish Among 'Elites' Who Want Revenge

Mastodon · 1 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Have you noticed more and more insults and abusive verbal language being directed towards young boys recently? Paula Bolyard here at PJM has a post on Bollywood star Shah Rukh Khan, who says he will "behead his young sons if they 'mistreat' a woman":

`He's also adamant that his sons not mistreat women. "And I know that if either of my sons ever misbehaves with a woman, I'd behead him," he said. SRK didn't define what he meant by "misbehaves.'

The actor's views stem from his belief that women are superior to men. "From creating life to taking so much sh*t in your daily life and using it as your strength—the simple act of boarding a local train, being leched at, not getting a job because of your gender—it's shocking how much a woman has to take every day," he said. "As men, we should all experience what it is like and still stay strong."

"I'd like to be a woman," SRK told Femina. "Physically, I'm not. Mentally and emotionally, I'd like to be one. Sometimes there is a part in me that when I see feminists becoming aggressive, I want to step up in their support. I don't think women are weak but I'm the kind of guy who would take off my jacket and put it across a puddle for a woman to walk."`

His sons are 16 and 3. Okay, great parenting skills there, "dad." You have a fetish to be a woman now and you're willing to sacrifice your sons' lives to fulfill your thrill, or at least to unleash abusive, threatening language their way in order to get them to "respect women." Yeah, that will work. Teach that 3-year-old that his own father thinks beheading him is somehow justified if he mistreats a woman, whatever that means. There are better ways to show a young boy how to treat people (not just women) in ways that promote equality than threatening to kill him.'

India: Another example of male bashing? Guy labelled molester at Atif Aslam's concert claims he was the victim

Mastodon · 1 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Looks like there are many layers to the whole incident of singer Atif Aslam stopping his concert midway to save a girl from molestation. The boy who was alleged to misbehave with girls at the concert has now revealed his side of the story in an interview with a Pakistan daily. The boy claimed he was a student of Institute of Business Administration (IBA) and was responsible for the security management.

Sharing his side of the story and claiming that he was misjudged, the guy said he was the victim. Speaking on his responsibilities, he told it was his job to ensure people from non-VIP sections didn't go to the VIP section. He alleged of seeing two girls accompanied by a guy, crossing the non-VIP section and surging ahead towards the stage. The IBA student said he asked them politely to either show their VIP passes or go back to their seats, whilst adding that there was a huge rush which organizers were unprepared for.

But, apparently, things took an unpleasant turn for him soon after. He said the girls started getting violent with him and the boy who was with them punched him in the face. That was exactly when Atif Aslam saw them and halted the performance to 'rescue these girls'. He said:

'Instead of trying to understand the real story, Atif Aslam blamed me, the actual victim. Nobody listens to men in our society especially when a woman has said anything against him – it doesn't matter true or false. When Atif Aslam said 'rescue these girls,' everyone thought I was molesting them and a huge mob started beating me up for no reason. I have never been beaten so badly in my entire life, and that too for just doing my job."'

Expert: Title IX Guidance Exists to Deprive Accused Male Students of Fair Hearings

Mastodon · 1 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'With that in mind, consider some rather stunning admissions from Morse, an expert on governmental anti-sexual assault policy who is asked here to defend extra-legal, university-based adjudication systems for sexual crimes. I have bolded the most relevant passages:

`And so, the aims of the court system are completely different than those of the campus-conduct system. A finding of responsibility on the part of the assailant in a campus-conduct system might mean that they are removed from the campus. It doesn't mean that they're going to prison, and it doesn't also prevent that individual from seeking further study elsewhere after a period of time, perhaps.

But the point about the need for federal law and regulation that is trauma-informed and fair is that it can protect the rights to all parties involved in the adjudication process following a claim. … The lower threshold as articulated in guidance in 2011 by the Office for Civil Rights provides the foundation for a likely outcome of responsibility that will protect survivors of sexual violence while still not prohibiting the individual found responsible for seeking educational opportunities later. The point of campus-adjudication processes is to affirm the rights of individuals to educational opportunities. And the reason we need federal laws and regulations to protect that structure, is that absent federal law and regulation, there isn't an established process to do that across the states.`'

Campus rape statistics 'misleading,' says author of new book

Mastodon · 1 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The co-author of a new book about campus rape says that while the problem of sexual assault and rape on campus is real, the numbers have been inflated.

Stuart Taylor Jr., who wrote "The Campus Rape Frenzy: The Attack on Due Process at America's Universities" with KC Johnson, told CNN's Michael Smerconish that although there is a "serious rape problem on campus," the statistics are "highly misleading."

According to a large scale study by the Association of American Universities, 23% of female students have experienced some form of unwanted sexual contact while attending college.

Taylor disputes these often-cited numbers. For instance, President Obama said, while launching an awareness campaign in 2014, that one in five students will be sexually assaulted. Taylor said the figure was "absolutely false."

"Frankly I'm surprised that a man as smart as former President Obama, and as careful a politician, would say something so wildly inaccurate, something that had already been totally discredited at the time he said it," Taylor said.'

Federal suit seeks ‘due process’ in university student discipline

Mastodon · 1 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Appeal hearings are underway for suspended University of Minnesota football players, KSTP reports.

A three-person panel, consisting of at least one student, selected from the Student Sexual Misconduct Subcommittee will hear the appeals from the players, some of whom were expelled, others suspended for their alleged part in what a woman claims was a sexual assault.

No criminal charges were filed against the men, but the university disciplined them under Title IX rules.

The University of Minnesota football team boycotted activities prior to their bowl game, saying the men didn’t get due process.'

Student Expelled for Sexual Misconduct Can’t Defend Himself—It Would ‘Impose Psychological Trauma’ on Accuser

Mastodon · 1 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Remember Amherst College student "John Doe," who was expelled for sexual misconduct, even though he had good reason to believe that his accuser had actually assaulted him? A judge recently blocked Doe's attempt to subpoena his female accuser's text messages on grounds that re-litigating the matter "would impose emotional and psychological trauma" on her.

Consider the implications of this decision. According to Seattle District Judge James Robart, a student who believes Amherst violated his due process rights, wrongfully expelled him, and ignored subsequent evidence that his accuser, "Sandra Jones," was the actual violator of the college's sexual misconduct policies, does not deserve the opportunity to make his case because someone else's feelings are more important.

Whatever happened to believing the victim?

The incident in question took place years ago, during the late night / early morning hours of February 4-5, 2012. Jones was Doe's girlfriend's roommate at the time. Jones went to Doe's dorm room and sexual activity ensued: Jones performed oral sex on Doe.

But Doe was blackout drunk at the time—a detail that Amherst administrators deemed "credible," on subsequent review. Of course, it's questionable whether a blackout drunk student can actually provide the level of consent that Amherst's sexual misconduct policy requires.

Other factors cast doubt on the idea that Jones was the victim and Doe the perpetrator. After leaving Doe's dorm room, Jones texted another male student and asked him to come to her dorm room for sex. She also texted a residential advisor about her "stupid" decision to engage in sexual activity with her roommate's boyfriend. In these text messages, Jones admitted that she was "not an innocent bystander." She also complained about how long it was taking this second male student to do anything sexual with her. She did not file a complaint against Doe until two years later.'

Teacher jailed for 30 years for sexual misconduct denied parole

Matt · 2 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A SEX-CRAZED teacher jailed for romping with three pupils has lost her bid for freedom.

Brianne Altice, who was caged for up to 30 years, blamed “self-esteem issues” for her crimes.

And the mum-of-two, 37, claimed she had taken responsibility for what she did and was “extremely remorseful”.

But a parole board has refused to let her out of prison until at least another hearing in April 2019.

She has also been ordered to complete a two-year sex offender treatment programme and pay £600 towards counselling for her victims.

Altice was described by one of her teen lovers as a “teacher with benefits” as they continued sessions AFTER she had already been arrested for under-age sex.

Romps behind her husband’s back included one in a church car park.'

Helpline for Indian men gets 100 calls to report abuse daily

Matt · 2 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'He was gang-raped, filmed nude, thrashed with belts, and objects were inserted into his private parts.

"Then they urinated on me," the 19-year-old (name withheld) broke down, narrating his story to a helpline recently.

Given that Delhi is widely touted as the rape capital, this should have been just another statistic. But there's a catch. The caller's alleged tormentors were women, and all nearly twice his age.

In spite of being from an influential political family, the caller had no legal remedy. Counsellors had a tough time trying to figure out how courts could help him. To their dismay, they found that the Indian rape laws did not recognise a man as a victim. Being an adult, he could not have sought help under the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences (POCSO) Act either.

The 19-year-old isn't alone. Overcoming their male ego, stigma and conditioning, hundreds of men across the country are making that call to the helpline with trepidation, alleging that they were harassed, abused and victimised by women.'

As A Mother Of A Son, Kellyanne Conway Gets Why Feminism Has Become Toxic

Matt · 2 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'All women in public life have to answer the question, “Are you a feminist?” After becoming the first female campaign manager to win a U.S. presidential campaign, Kellyanne Conway drew that question in an interview with the Washington Post:

`You don’t consider yourself a feminist?

I don’t consider myself a feminist. I think my generation isn’t a big fan of labels. My favorite label is mommy. I feel like the feminist movement has been hijacked by the pro-abortion movement or the anti-male sentiments that you read in some of their propaganda and writings. I’m not anti-male. One does not need to be pro-female and call yourself a feminist, when with it comes that whole anti-male culture where we want young boys to sit down and shut up in the classroom. And we have all of these commercials that show what a feckless boob the man in the house is. That’s not the way I see the men in my life, most especially my 12-year-old son. I consider myself a postfeminist. I consider myself one of those women who is a product of her choices, not a victim of her circumstances.`

Her answer is typical from Gen X women who refuse to call themselves feminists, and I’ll wager a dime that most of those objections will center on women seeing themselves as products of their choices, not victims of their circumstances.
...
Like Conway, I have a son and three daughters. My son is 13 and thus Conway and I have seen what boys endure in today’s society. Feminism as currently practiced lies to us and our daughters, telling us that our worth is tied to our career and our sex life. But it tells our sons they are worthless.

These realizations sneak up on us. When we have our baby sons in our arms, we do not connect that all those horrible things feminists say about men apply to our tiny sweet bundle. The first whispers start in nursery school. The need to have day care mean something more than child minding has sprouted testing for all manner of things, from scissor skills to sight reading. General rambunctiousness or later verbal and fine motor skills common in males mean that the boys fall behind before they even really start school.'

"Protests" at Milo UC Berkeley event

Mastodon · 3 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Wednesday night at UC Berkeley, anti-free speech rioters arrived on the scene to shut down an event hosted by Breitbart's Milo Yiannopoulos.

Kleptomania and a mother's love: The five-finger discount is my personal rebellion against inequality

Mastodon · 5 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'From my perspective, stealing is also an attempt to rewrite or get outside those laws that create a sense of normalcy in society. A society that allows certain children access to the healthiest foods, that underpays and therefore undermines the work of certain people, and that holds competition and economic inequality as givens, rather than culturally constructed ways of life. It comes over me when I think about the endless turnover of paper, the endless struggle we all undergo every day, just to get dinner on the table.
...
Kleptomania shows us that we too often privilege property over the mental and emotional well-being of women. For his part, Stekel favors reports of women stealing pencils, or a scarf after an incident with a cigar. From this perspective, women's sexual excitations, rather than the work of love, can be blamed for every transgression of the law a woman carries out.'

Audi Outed for Promoting Fake Equal Pay Nonsense

Mastodon · 5 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Audi of America is jumping on the politically correct bandwagon and running a Super Bowl ad that pushes the “equal pay” lies we hear too often.

The car company’s “Equal Pay” commercial flies in the face of the facts, creates divisions between the sexes, and fails to do what an advertisement should do—make people want to buy the product.

The commercial shows a feisty girl in a drag race with boys as the father narrates, spewing nonsense about how women are devalued in our society.

"What do I tell my daughter? Do I tell her that her grandpa’s worth more than her grandma, that her dad is worth more than her mom? Do I tell her that despite her education, her drive, her skills, her intelligence, she will automatically be valued less than any man she ever meets? Or maybe I’ll be able to tell her something different."

The commercial ends with “Audi of America is committed to equal pay for equal work. Progress for everyone.”'

Audi #DriveProgress Big Game Commercial – “Daughter”

Also see: Audi, Your 'Empowering' Super Bowl Ad Is Terrible for Girls: Here's Why

The Women's March organizers are planning a massive 'day without women' strike

Mastodon · 6 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The organizers of the Women's March on Washington — the protest that drew an estimated half a million people in Washington, DC, alone — are now planning a mass strike.

"The will of the people will stand," the organizers posted on Twitter. The date of the strike is still to be determined.

The announcement follows two New York City strikes from groups affected by President Donald Trump's executive order temporarily barring immigrants from seven majority-Muslim countries and all refugees from entering the US (the order was placed on a temporary hold on Friday).

On January 28, members of the New York Taxi Workers Alliance went on a one-hour strike in solidarity with protesters at JFK airport. Uber, however, was still servicing riders, which prompted the #DeleteUber hashtag that led to 200,000 deleted accounts, according to The Verge.

A week later, members of New York City's Yemeni-American community closed hundreds of their markets and protested in Brooklyn.'

Woman pleads guilty to killing husband with antifreeze

Matt · 7 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'A 47-year-old woman has pleaded guilty to second-degree murder for poisoning her husband to death with antifreeze, according to the Department of Justice.

Jamie L. Baker of Smyrna entered her plea in Superior Court in Dover on Monday morning.

Her husband – 42-year-old James D. Baker II –was found dead on the bedroom floor of their home by his wife on Sept. 16, 2013, according to police.

An autopsy determined that his kidneys contained a substance suspected to be ethylene glycol, a chemical found in antifreeze. If taken in small dosages, ethylene glycol will crystallize in the kidneys and eventually kill a person, police said in court records.

The medical examiner ruled his death a homicide by poisoning after bottles of steroids found at the scene were tested at a laboratory and found to also contain ethylene glycol, police said.
...
According to James Baker's obituary, Baker worked as an environmental specialist for 22 years at the DuPont Experimental Station. He had been married to his wife for 21 years and had two daughters.

His wife is expected to be sentenced in late March and faces 15 years to life in prison.'

Successful male contraceptive gel trial brings new form of birth control closer

Matt · 7 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A male contraceptive gel has been found to work reliably in a trial in primates, bringing the prospect of an alternative form of birth control for humans closer.

The product, called Vasalgel, is designed to be a reversible and less invasive form of vasectomy and in the latest study was 100% effective at preventing conception. A blob of the gel is injected into the sperm-carrying tube, known as the vas deferens, and acts as a long-lasting barrier.

Previous tests in smaller animals showed the procedure could be easily reversed by breaking up the gel using ultrasound.

Catherine VandeVoort, of the California National Primate Research Centre and the study's lead author, said: "Men's options for contraception have not changed much in decades. There's vasectomy, which is poorly reversible, and condoms. If they knew they could get a reliable contraceptive that could also be reversed I think it would be appealing to them."

The Parsemus Foundation, a non-profit organisation that funded the work, said it plans to start a human trial as soon as funding is secured, based on the promising monkey results.

"One of the great things about the monkey model is that the male reproductive tract is very similar to humans and they have even more sperm than humans do," said VandeVoort. "Chances are, it's going to be effective in humans."'

Hillary Clinton says 'future is female' in new video

Mastodon · 7 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Hillary Clinton made her first public remarks on the state of women's issues since President Trump's inauguration and the Jan. 21 Women's March on Washington.

"Despite all the challenges we face, I remain convinced that YES, the future is female," Clinton said in a videotaped message to the 2017 Makers Conference in California. Makers is a storytelling platform for raising issues impacting women.

"We need strong women to step up and speak out. We need you to dare greatly and lead boldly. So please, set an example for every woman and girl out there who's worried about what the future holds and wonders whether our rights, opportunities and values will endure," Clinton said.

"Remember, you are the heroes and history makers, the glass ceiling breakers of the future. As I've said before, I'll say again, never doubt that you are valuable and powerful and deserving of every chance and opportunity in the world," Clinton said.'

University Accused of Sexism For Offering Preference to Men for Veterinary Scholarship

Mastodon · 9 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The University of Sydney in Australia has come under fire after giving preference to male students in a scholarship of nearly $30,000 to study at female-dominated veterinary medicine course, accusing the institution of sexism.

The Prof Marsh Edwards AO scholarship, offered for the first time this year, will award one successful applicant $6,750 a year for four years to students enrolled in the postgraduate doctor of veterinary medicine degree at the University of Sydney, The Guardian Australia reports.

In the press release, the scholarship claims that it will give preference to “male applicants who are from rural and regional areas with an interest in large animal practice and intended to work in rural veterinary science”.

This has sparked accusations of sexism, despite the fact that the veterinary medicine course is dominated by women and, according to the university spokeswoman, “over 90%” of new students in the course are expected to be female.

The university’s Women’s Collective has urged the university to drop “male” from the eligibility requirements to “send a clear message to all students that sexism and discrimination on campus is unacceptable”.
...
The University administration also pointed out that numerous scholarships were offered exclusively for women, aimed at increasing the participation of women in subjects where they are underrepresented.'

Does India have a problem with false rape claims?

Mastodon · 9 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After the infamous 2012 gang rape of a student on a bus in Delhi, the number of rape cases reported to police in India rose sharply. But one survey concluded that in Delhi, in 2013-14, more than half of these reports were "false" - fuelling claims by male activists that women are alleging rape in order to extort money from men.

Yogesh Gupta always knew he had evidence that could prove, indisputably, he was not a rapist, but getting the police to recognise his innocence was another matter.

The 44-year-old Delhi estate agent's troubles began after he caught an employee embezzling money and threatened to go to the police.

The employee reacted by coercing a woman to pose as a potential house buyer who, after viewing a property, asked Gupta for a lift to the local metro station. She later accused him of driving her to an empty fourth floor apartment and raping her.

"Thankfully I had CCTV installed in my office," he says.

"The whole process of taking the stairs to the fourth floor, opening the flat, taking her inside, then getting out and dropping her at the metro station would have taken at least 37 - 40 minutes.

"I could prove I was back in my office within 11 minutes."'

Trump faces uphill battle undoing campus rape scares inherited from Obama

Mastodon · 9 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'President Trump's Education Department can easily revoke mandates compelling colleges and universities to take due process rights away from students accused of sexual assault — but undoing practices institutionalized by the Obama administration and backed by feminist factions on campus will require greater effort.

Stuart Taylor Jr., a former non-resident fellow at the Brookings Institution, said incoming Education Secretary Betsy DeVos should repeal orders threatening to pull federal funds from universities that fail to adopt adjudication processes that increase the likelihood that male students accused of sexual misconduct will be found guilty.

"What they can and should do, very easily and very fast, is revoke all of the various orders that the Obama administration issued to colleges," said Mr. Taylor, who co-wrote "The Campus Rape Frenzy" with K.C. Johnson. "These orders have been couched as guidance, and they don't have the standing of regulations because they did not go through the necessary notice and comment rule-making process, so that means Trump and his people can make them disappear with the stroke of a pen."

In response to what the Obama administration described as an epidemic of campus rape, the Education Department's Office for Civil Rights in 2011 began issuing "Dear Colleague Letters" that invoked Title IX to force colleges to establish disciplinary procedures for resolving sexual assault allegations between students.'

Campus sex assault bill would codify standards in Mississippi that might be on the way out in D.C.

Mastodon · 9 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Legislation that would add a contentious Obama administration mandates on campus sexual assault procedures to Mississippi law is still alive in the state Legislature, even if they are tottering at the Department of Education.

The bill was approved Tuesday by the House Judiciary B Committee and is already on the House calendar.

The measure, sponsored by state Rep. Angela Cockerham, D-Magnolia, would require the state institutions of higher learning to implement a comprehensive policy toward allegations of sexual violence, domestic violence and stalking that goes a step beyond one proposed by the federal government in 2011.
...
Critics say the policy has reduced due process rights for the accused and compromised the impartiality of investigators. It also restricts an accused's right to counsel and doesn't require that the accuser be present at a hearing.'

Woman attacks man over faint praise

Matt · 9 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. "No thanks dear, I'll do dinner myself. No problem. Really." Excerpt:

'A police standoff began in Merrimack after a boyfriend told his girlfriend that the spaghetti dinner she made was "OK," according to police paperwork.

Police responded to Webster Green Condominium Complex for a domestic disturbance Saturday at about 2:35 p.m. Officers met with a resident of the complex who said that his girlfriend, Jodi Ecklund, was in the apartment and damaging property.

The boyfriend told police that Ecklund had made him a spaghetti dinner and asked him how it was. He replied with "OK," and said Ecklund then went "bipolar" on him.

Ecklund allegedly assaulted the boyfriend by punching him in the face, punching him in the arm and scratching his hand. He left the apartment and heard Ecklund lock the door, according to court documents.

Two firearms - a Glock 9mm and a M4 rifle - were in the apartment, the boyfriend told police.'

India: Man consumes poison fearing arrest in dowry harassment case, dies

Matt · 10 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'A 32-year old man committed suicide by consuming poison fearing arrest in a dowry harassment case. He died while recuperating at a hospital in Panvel on Wednesday afternoon.

Sachin Ashok Chetre, a resident of Karanjade in Panvel, died in Paramount Hospital at around 2.30pm on February 8. Police have sent the body to JJ Hospital in Mumbai for the postmortem.

Pretisha Chetre, 26, had lodged a complaint against her husband on February 4 for allegedly being harassed for dowry. Sachin then reportedly assaulted his wife and threatened that he would commit suicide if she did not take back her complaint.

After the assault, Pretisha's family again approached the police and demanded immediate action. Police then arrested Sachin from his home and when he was taken for a medical test, he told police that he had consumed poison at 11 pm on February 5, fearing arrest. "We took them to the government hospital but he insisted to go to a private hospital. He was then admitted at Paramount Hospital in Panvel where doctors started his treatment," said an official from Panvel City police station. However, he died at around 2.30pm on February 8.'

Woman busted for livestreaming rape of 4-year-old boy

Matt · 10 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Stor here.

'An Ohio woman who reportedly livestreamed footage of her raping a 4-year-old boy has been arrested.

India Kirksey, 20, has been charged with felony rape, news station WCPO reported. She was arraigned Monday in court, and is being held on a $350,000 bond.

Harrisburg County authorities in Ohio received a tip from someone who saw the footage online. Earlier this year, the video allegedly had been shared on the livestreaming app Periscope.

In an interview with police, Kirksey confessed to performing oral sex on the toddler.'

Convicted Palestinian Terrorist Among Feminist Activists Calling on American Women to Join March 8 International Strike

Mastodon · 10 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A convicted Palestinian terrorist was among the eight feminist activists who called earlier this week on American women to join a March 8 international strike — which organizers are calling a protest “against male violence and in defense of reproductive rights.”

Rasmea Odeh served time in Israeli prison for her involvement — as a member of the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine (PFLP) — in a pair of 1969 terrorist bombings in Jerusalem, one of which killed two Hebrew University students at a supermarket. She was freed in 1980 as part of a prisoner exchange, and moved to the US in the mid-1990s. More recently, Odeh has been in the headlines due to charges of immigration fraud filed against her and a subsequent ongoing court case.

In a Guardian op-ed published on Monday — attention to which was brought on social media by investigative journalist and author Gary Weiss — Odeh, joined by Linda Martín Alcoff, Cinzia Arruzza, Tithi Bhattacharya, Nancy Fraser, Barbara Ransby, Keeanga-Yamahtta Taylor and Angela Davis, wrote that the goal of the planned protest is to “mobilize women, including trans women, and all who support them in an international day of struggle — a day of striking, marching, blocking roads, bridges, and squares, abstaining from domestic, care and sex work, boycotting, calling out misogynistic politicians and companies, striking in educational institutions…Let us use the occasion of this international day of action to be done with lean-in feminism and to build in its place a feminism for the 99%, a grassroots, anti-capitalist feminism — a feminism in solidarity with working women, their families and their allies throughout the world.”'

Australia: Engineering internships for women only

Minuteman · 11 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The National Association of Women in Operations (NAWO) and PATH4 Graduates have teamed up to launch the first paid Internship and Graduate Programs for female university students who are in their final year of study.

This initiative is called Project I. It is a paid project-based program aimed at providing female talent with an insight into careers available in operational work environments. The intent of this program is to attract more women to operational careers, increasing the number of graduates joining operational companies and developing a future pipeline of female talent to ultimately achieve greater gender diversity in operational leadership positions

We are inviting only female university students to apply as a special measure under Section 12 (1) of the Equal Opportunity Act.'

Boy Scouts Face Renewed Push to Let Girls Join the Ranks

Mastodon · 11 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After many years of divisiveness, the Boy Scouts of America have opened their ranks to gay and transgender boys. Yet a different membership dispute persists: a long-shot campaign to let girls join the BSA so they have a chance to earn the prestigious status of Eagle Scout.

Just last week, after the BSA announced it would admit transgender boys, the National Organization for Women issued a statement urging the 106-year-old youth organization to allow girls to join as well. NOW said it was inspired by the efforts of a 15-year-old New York City girl to emulate her older brother, who is an Eagle Scout.

"Women can now hold all combat roles in the military, and women have broken many glass ceilings at the top levels of government, business, academia and entertainment," said NOW President Terry O'Neill. "It's long past due that girls have equal opportunities in Scouting."
...
While the Boy Scouts have established several coed programs, including Venturing and Sea Scouts, the Girl Scouts remain girls-only.'

Australia: Position Vacant - "Gender Equality Policy and Data Analyst"

Minuteman · 11 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'The Gender Equality Policy and Data Analyst is responsible for the development and provision of integrated policy and data analysis and advice relating to gender equality issues of interest to the Premier and/or Cabinet. Key characteristics required for this role: a high level of understanding of data analysis and experience translating data; high level understanding of social policy, specifically in relation to gender equality; demonstrated experience in advising on strategic responses to complex policy problems.
...
Applications from those wishing to work part-time or full-time hours will be equally considered.'

Audi: The Car for the Unhappy Woman

Matt · 11 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If there was ever a more mendacious or socially destructive ad during the Super Bowl, let alone on television, I am unaware of it.

As a believer in the free market and the free exchange of ideas, I have rarely advocated for or participated in a boycott of a company for the political positions of its owners or directors. I eat Ben & Jerry's Ice Cream despite the fact that I have opposed every left-wing political and social position Ben and Jerry have ever advocated. It's a free country. And I want to keep it free.

But Audi crossed a line. It should pay an appropriate price.

First, we need to stop the politicization of everything in America. We need to be able to watch sports, for example, without the intrusion of left-wing propaganda. I would feel the same about right-wing propaganda, but the right believes in allowing people to enjoy life without injecting politics wherever possible.

Second, the ad sent the false and debilitating message to every girl that being born in America is to be born oppressed and persecuted. "I am a woman, therefore I am a victim," it says.'

‘It’s Relentlessly Anti-Men’: Domestic Violence Campaign Set for Valentine’s Day Sparks Battle

Mastodon · 11 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To raise awareness about domestic violence, an Australian nonprofit has encouraged women to use the hashtag #IGotFlowersToday on Valentine’s Day in reference to a poem about a battered woman.

The poem, written by Paulette Kelly, “chronicles the life of an abused woman with the gift of flowers used as an apology for a torturous life, rather than a symbol of love and affection,” explained Karen Willis, executive director of the Full Stop Foundation, the group behind the campaign.

But the Full Stop Foundation’s campaign was met with backlash as a Daily Telegraph columnist denounced it as “savage, relentless anti-men messaging.”

“It’s not enough that some poor guy has schlepped to the florist or sweated over which flowers to pick online and poured over poignant words for the card,” wrote Corrine Barraclough. “ These infuriating feminist fools now want his motives to be questioned too. So, in addition to your colleagues’ ‘Nice flowers,’ comments, if you get a dozen long-stemmed you can now presumably look forward to comments such as, ‘Is everything OK?’ and ‘What did he do?’”

Barraclough also writes that the campaign focuses only on abuse perpetrated by men against women, though she says “domestic violence is not—and has never been—a gendered issue.”'

Why college guys should be terrified of campus hookups

Mastodon · 12 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'"Men need to feel a cold spike of fear when they begin a sexual encounter." Those were not the words of a nun at your local Catholic high school 50 years ago. They were written in 2014 by the progressive Ezra Klein, editor of Vox, in explaining the importance of California's "affirmative consent" law.

Passed in 2015, the law requires that students at the state's colleges must obtain "affirmative, conscious and voluntary agreement to engage in sexual activity" from their partners. If not, they could be subject to disciplinary procedures for sexual assault.

It is one of the astounding ironies of our current era that universities, which have long been billed as havens of sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll, places to experiment and rebel before you grow up, now employ armies of bureaucrats to regulate the sex lives of their students. These administrators hand out condoms and invite students to lectures by professional dominatrixes, while at the same time holding secret tribunals to punish men who engage in what can best be described as regrettable drunken hookups with their female classmates.'

Hillary Clinton Spearheads War On Men

Mastodon · 13 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In a new video produced ahead of the 2017 Makers Conference – an invitation-only feminist leadership retreat held in California – Hillary Clinton boosted the feminist movement with a rallying call for girls and women to be “the glass-ceiling breakers of the future.”

“Despite all the challenges we face, I remain convinced that yes, the future is female,” Clinton said. “Just look at the amazing energy we saw last month as women organised a march that galvanised millions of people all over our country and across the world.”

So why can’t the future be male? Answer: because today’s men are under a full frontal assault by feminists like Clinton who are doing their utmost to erase the concept of masculinity and maleness.

When male babies grow into little boys, they cannot act like boys, dress like boys or feel like boys because feminists have stamped the very concept of masculinity with the word “toxic” and “misogynistic” all over it. Because of the conditioning they grow up with in the public education system and the dinosaur media, it is little wonder that boys grow up to be so effeminate, emasculated and disempowered. This misandrous assault is beyond nauseating to say the least.'

Woman, 28, accused of sex with boys in public bathroom

Mastodon · 13 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Baker, who was listed as homeless, had been arrested last month on disorderly conduct and trespassing, was adjudicated guilty on those charges and spent 15 days in the Marion County Jail. Baker declined to speak to the Star-Banner on Saturday.

According to police officials, Baker called the agency on Friday night to snitch on the juveniles before they told on her. Baker, however, did not tell officers what the boys had supposedly done.

An officer went to West Silver Springs Boulevard and Martin Luther King Jr. Avenue, where Baker and another woman were arguing. The woman told the officer that she had evidence Baker was having sexual encounters with boys.

The woman showed the officer a video of Baker having sex with a boy. The officer detained her, and Baker told the officer that she was going to jail anyway so he should arrest her, according to OPD.

Buetti learned that Baker was having sex with two 12- to 14-year-old boys inside a bathroom at the War Memorial, 1501 W. Silver Springs Blvd., according to OPD officials.'

UK: Iain Duncan Smith thinktank in ‘fatherless society’ warning

Mastodon · 14 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Britain is facing a “crisis of fatherlessness” in which almost half of all children born today will not be living with both parents by the time they are 15, the new chief executive of the thinktank founded by Iain Duncan Smith has warned.

Andy Cook, who runs the Centre for Social Justice, which is chaired by the former cabinet minister, argued that regular contact with a father figure reduced criminal behaviour in children and boosted cognitive skills including reasoning and language development.

Cook claimed there was too much of a “throwaway culture” to parenting, adding: “Over the last 40 years, the meteoric rise in family breakdown has blighted the lives of the poorest children the most. The relationship children have with their father affects their self-esteem, how well they do at school, even whether they are able to form happy, long-lasting relationships as adults.”'

UK: Kids Attending Fathers' Rights Protests Could be Referred To Government Prevent De-Radicalisation Programme

Mastodon · 14 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Children who attend Fathers4Justice and anti-badger cull protests have been considered for the government's anti-radicalisation programme, Prevent, set up to deter "violent extremism" and terrorism, an MP has claimed.

Conservative MP Lucy Allan said teachers are under increasing pressure to refer children to the Prevent Strategy, for reasons other than radical Islam, to please government inspectors.

...

Matt O'Connor, founder of Fathers4Justice, told Breitbart London: "A teachers job is to teach, not act as Orwellian thought police.

"We now live in a country where militant feminists are lauded in the mainstream media for protesting at the Women's March, yet protesting dads campaigning for parental equality are linked to extremism."

...

In one case, a 15-year-old schoolboy, who thought "Muslim women shouldn't be allowed to wear the niqab", was identified as a potential terrorist and put through Prevent's most strict de-radicalisation programme, Channel.'

Florida man fights for paternity rights of son over mother’s husband

Mastodon · 14 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here.

'After losing contact with his 3-year-old son when he broke off a relationship with the mother, a Florida man is fighting for paternity rights to his son, WPTV reported.

John Karpinski's legal fight is complicated by the fact that the mother of his child was legally married when the boy was born. Florida law gives all paternal rights to her husband.

The boy's mother says she and her husband recognize the child as their own, and they plan to raise him together, WPTV says.

"Mr. Karpinski was a great dad and was doing all of the things that are expected of a father and then to have that ripped away from him is certainly a different circumstance that even this law ever contemplated," said his attorney, Shaun Plymale.

"I will never stop as long as there is breath in my body," Karpinski told WPTV. "I want my boy home."

Similar battles over fathers' custody and paternity rights have made headlines in recent years. Most state laws tend to favor the mother in a custody battles, but there's been a growing movement over the rights of fathers.'

The Failures of Mainstream Feminism

Mastodon · 14 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On paper, at least, 2016 looked to be a banner year for feminism. As the GOP primary field succumbed to Donald Trump's insurgency, Hillary Clinton's march to the White House seemed all but inevitable. Discussions about rape on college campuses, workplace harassment, pay disparity, and other feminist issues finally broke through to the mainstream. A-list celebrities began embracing the word feminism—a significant shift after decades when feminists were little more than pop-culture punch lines, derided for their humorlessness, earnestness, and ideological single-mindedness. Seemingly overnight, feminism had become fashionable. Pop stars used the word to sell records, guys used it to get laid, models used it to push product, writers used it to advance their brand.

Like all fashions, it passed. And like all fashions, it turned out to be a frivolous, cosmetic change, completely divorced from the actual lived experience of most women. Instead of the first female president, we now have an accused sexual predator in the highest office in the land and a proud misogynist homophobe as his deputy and de facto head of domestic policy. Even more startling, in a way, are the exit polls showing that 53 percent of white women voted for Trump—and that many of those same women consider themselves feminists.

How did we get to this point? How could a majority of white women choose Trump over the first woman to serve as the presidential standard-bearer for a major political party—and call themselves feminists while doing so?'

Feminists wage war against romance on Valentine's Day

Mastodon · 14 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Valentine's Day, we are told by a feminist blogger, is "a consumerist holiday, personified by patriarchal and heteronormative traditions which reinforces sexist stereotypes." The anonymous 25-year-old assures her readers that she is "a strong, independent woman who doesn't need a man." This is fortunate because, apparently, no man needs her. She is alone and unloved, eating chocolate and watching Netflix while scrolling through profiles on the Tinder dating app — and this is what feminist "success" looks like.

An entire vocabulary of jargon phrases has been created by feminists to express their contempt for all things male and/or heterosexual. It is "sexist" to believe that women enjoy romance — cards and gifts, flowers and candy, etc. — and it is "heteronormative" to think that any woman might actually desire male companionship. Because the feminist is a "strong, independent woman," she must regard males as utterly useless, insofar as she does not actively hate males as evil oppressors. "We identify the agents of our oppression as men," Shulamith Firestone and her comrades in the feminist Redstockings collective declared in 1969: "All men receive economic, sexual, and psychological benefits from male supremacy. All men have oppressed women."

Heterosexual romance is harmful to women, according to feminist theory: "In terms of the oppression of women, heterosexuality is the ideology of male supremacy." Feminism has produced a thesaurus of phrases — "misogyny," "objectification," "harassment," "rape culture," etc. — which are more or less interchangeable as pejorative synonyms for normal male attitudes and behaviors. "Hegemonic masculinity," for example, was coined by an Australian professor, Robert Connell, in his 1987 book, Gender and Power, in which he confessed he had "been uneasy with conventional masculinity almost as long as I can remember." Connell was married to a feminist organizer, but he subsequently got a sex-change operation and became known as "Raewyn" Connell. "Hegemonic masculinity," we are informed by Wikipedia, is "the culturally idealized form of manhood… socially and hierarchically exclusive."'

Flowers = domestic violence

Mastodon · 14 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph. Excerpt:

'The day every woman who works in an office dreads because of Flower-Gate. Who gets the first bunch? The biggest bunch? Who gets balloons — and who gets sweet nothing? Such are the awkward highlights of office life for the working girl.

If you thought it couldn't get any worse, you can now tip your love heart-sequined beret to our good friends at the feminist domestic violence industry.

Apparently their savage, relentless anti-men messaging on every other day of the year isn't enough. Now they want to cast suspicion on those pesky perennials you see being delivered to your colleague in the corner.

The Full Stop Foundation, which perhaps should literally have stopped there, is now sending out free guilt trips for Valentine's Day. You're welcome. Look forward to a balloon pumped full of doubt to burst any hope of enjoying your bouquet when it's delivered.

In an attempt to "reframe the national conversation", the organisation is using Valentine's Day to launch its "I Got Flowers Today" campaign. It asks all Australians to ponder who got flowers because of love, and who received them as an apology for violent behaviour.

Give. Me. Strength.'

SAVE: ‘Kangaroo Courts’ on the Loose: SAVE Urges Lawmakers to End Campus Rape Tribunals

Matt · 15 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'WASHINGTON / February 14, 2017 – Recent reports at Baylor, Stanford, and Tufts universities reveal campus disciplinary committees lack competent staff, adhere to flawed policies, and suffer from severe conflict of interest problems. As a result, sexual assault victims and accused students alike are being shortchanged.

In late January, lawsuits were filed by two former female students against Baylor University. The women charged school coaches were inappropriately involved in disciplinary and criminal matters for sexual assault cases, among other allegations. http://www.espn.com/college-football/story/_/id/18569197

Last week, the Editorial Board of the Stanford Review issued a strongly worded verdict on its college’s sexual assault policies: “At Stanford, we have seen firsthand what many students and faculty are recognizing nationally: the reforms have failed. Sexual assault investigations usually fail to secure both relief for victims and civil liberties for the accused.” https://stanfordreview.org/dear-betsy-restore-justice-to-title-ix-c7c72df7616c#.kihodp3vw

On February 9, an exposé strongly critical of the Title IX policies at Tufts University was released. The report charged sexual assault investigators possessed far too much discretionary power and were not held to proper standards of impartiality. The report also revealed that Title IX training materials were being kept secret. http://www.sa4s.org/single-post/2017/02/09/Tufts-University%E2%80%99s-Title-IX-Policies-Inadequately-Protect-Victims'

Toxic Femininity — A Male Perspective

el cid · 15 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Branding men with undesirable character traits has turned into a popular sport. Men are considered by some—a vocal few, at least—to be competitive, aggressive, and violent, while women are thought of as passive and more inclined to collaboration. As an unrepentant male, I take umbrage at the increasing references to “toxic masculinity.” There are two reasons. First, I believe this is pure sexism driven by a small but angry cadre of power-hungry radical feminists. I can see no earthly reason that would require me to defend the values and behavior of my sex. Second, my basic sense of fairness resents the fact that men are often demonized while women get a free pass. If we are going to have a conversation about toxic masculinity, equal time should be devoted to “toxic femininity.”

What is toxic femininity? Does our typical female bear the burden of undesirable character traits? “Sentimental insistence on female innocence,” suggests The New York Times, “does no service to women, who should be treated as human beings with a capacity for aggression and held equally accountable for their actions.” Here are ten characteristics of toxic femininity:'

Chilling PSA Features Men Discussing ‘The One That Got Away’

Mastodon · 16 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'“Who’s the one that got away for you?”

That’s the question asked in a new PSA to three men. Instantly, each man remembered the “one that got away” and all three began reminiscing. While it sounds like three broken-hearted men, this PSA is about a much darker side of love and relationships.

Created by Canadian ad agency Union, the PSA was published on Valentine’s Day for Interval House, the first shelter for abused women and children in Canada. The haunting video slowly shows how possessiveness can actually be a subtle sign of abuse.

Each actor’s description of “the one that got away” starts out romantic and then becomes more and more controlling. “I miss her smile, I miss her friendship,” one man said, with another adding: “I couldn’t eat, couldn’t sleep” when they broke up.'

End Federal Micromanagement of College Discipline Under Title IX

Matt · 18 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Vice President Pence said that he and President Trump “believe that education is a state and local function that should be controlled by” states, not the federal government. A great way to restore local control would be rescind the Obama administration’s federal micromanagement of college discipline. Under Obama, the Education Department sometimes pressured colleges to do things that could lead to lawsuits being filed against them by their students.

For example, the Education Department’s April 4, 2011 “Dear Colleague” letter urged colleges to restrict cross-examination in sexual harassment and assault cases. As its Office for Civil Rights (OCR) put it in that letter, “OCR strongly discourages schools from allowing the parties personally to question or cross-examine each other during the hearing.” When schools take that advice, it can violate a student’s rights under a state’s Administrative Procedure Act (APA). Under many state APAs, students have a right to cross-examine their accuser, as courts have made clear in cases such as Arishi v. Washington State University, 385 P.3d 251 (Wash. App. 2016) and Liu v. Portland State University, 383 P.3d 294 (Or. App. 2016).'

Suspended student apparently called feminism a cancer

Mastodon · 21 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A video of a student making inflammatory comments about feminism has surfaced after he was suspended from Orange Coast College for recording his instructor making her own controversial comments about President Donald Trump.

Caleb O'Neil, a 19-year-old business major, apparently could be seen wearing Trump's signature Make America Great Again hat and a Hillary for Prison shirt in a video shared on Facebook Thursday. The video, originally posted April 20 on Instagram, showed O'Neil in a crowd yelling "feminism is cancer."

The video resurfaced a day after his Wednesday press conference in which he and his lawyer, William Becker, announced their intent to sue OCC should his suspension not be reversed. O'Neil was officially suspended on Feb. 9 for filming his human sexuality instructor, Olga Perez Stable Cox, calling Trump's election an "act of terrorism."
...
"They were relentlessly demeaning, calling out the girls for their clothes, appearances, party affiliation and being feminists," Lu said. "The boy that yelled 'feminism is cancer' was the most harassing of all."'

A ‘factual feminist’ critiques modern campus activism and feminism

Mastodon · 21 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An American author, former philosophy professor, and a resident scholar at the conservative think tank American Enterprise Institute (AEI), Christina Hoff Sommers also considers herself a “factual feminist” who actively speaks on college campuses nationwide regarding her unique perspective on political activism, free speech, and “campus feminism.” She made her most recent appearance at the University on Feb. 9 when she was invited to speak by the Bucknell University Conservatives Club (BUCC).

Sommers is best known for her public critique of contemporary feminism in her books, including “Who Stole Feminism?” (1994) and “The War Against Boys” (2000). Her writing has also been featured in a variety of media outlets, including The New York Times, Time, and The Atlantic.

Sommers was introduced by Tom Ciccotta ’17, whose remarks mainly focused on an event that transpired in February 2016 when Milo Yiannopoulos was brought by BUCC to speak on campus. This controversy recently resurfaced after Professor of Economics Marcellus Andrews identified Ciccotta as needing to take responsibility for bringing a provocative conservative speaker to campus.'

"Beware white male pushback"

Mastodon · 21 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'To my beautiful, treasured granddaughter, it's official. The future is female. I encourage you to become knowledgeable about the positive changes rapidly developing in our world. The vast majority of straight white American males deplores and dreads this change.

The males will continue to defy our progress with every weapon they can muster. I encourage you to connect with progressive women. Males fear us, and they want you to fear us, too. We threaten their sweet white empire. We are everywhere.

Our numbers are exponentially rising. As typical of males in "Red" American states, I surmise that at the core, all or most of the males in your life morbidly fear and despise the following: self-assured, male-BS-intolerant women and supporters of women; non-whites (unworthy, nefarious, did not earn America's goodies); non-straight males (pervert sissies).'

Aggressive campus anti-rape laws proposed for Texas colleges in wake of Baylor scandal

Mastodon · 22 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'He also wants Texas to join California, New York and the handful of other states that have passed “affirmative consent” laws requiring colleges to tell students their sexual partner must indicate — either through words or actions — that they are OK with sexual contact before initiating it.

...

Watson is also co-sponsoring a bill with Sen. Joan Huffman, a Houston Republican and former judge, that would put in place some of the most stringent rules against rape on campus in the country.

Senate Bill 576 would require any school employee, and some student leaders, to report instances of “sexual harassment, sexual assault, family violence or stalking” to the campus president within 48 hours of becoming aware of the incident, or else face serious consequences.

People who fail to report could be charged with a Class A misdemeanor — punishable by up to $4,000 in fines and a year in jail — if they were found to have intentionally concealed information about an assault. Students who are "the highest-ranking member" of a club recognized by the school would be subject to these same penalties.'

Male student sues Allegheny College after ‘false accusation’ of sexual assault

Mastodon · 22 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A former male student from Allegheny College is suing after he was expelled for what he and his attorneys claim was a false accusation of sexual assault.

The student, identified only as John Doe in court documents, alleges that he attempted to present evidence that made it clear his accuser was only angry because they were no longer speaking and wanted him expelled out of spite. He says this evidence and witness testimony was ignored by Allegheny.

The incident that led to John’s accusation occurred in late September 2014. John and some of his track teammates had gathered to celebrate their recent time trials. John’s accuser, listed in court documents as Jane Doe, attended the celebration. John alleges that Jane brought a bottle of tequila with her to the party but says she did not consume any alcoholic beverages and was sober.'

Teen charged with lying about being raped by college football players

Matt · 22 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Two college football players who were suspended from their team last year and saw their scholarships revoked after rape accusations have been cleared by police after authorities say their accuser recanted her story.

Nikki Yovino, 18, of South Setauket, NY, has been charged with second-degree falsely reporting an incident and tampering with or fabricating physical evidence in connection to an incident at a Sacred Heart University football party in October, the Connecticut Post reports.

When pressed about inconsistencies in her original statement, Yovino admitted that she made up the rape allegations against the two football players in hopes of gaining sympathy from another man — a prospective boyfriend, according to an arrest warrant affidavit.'

‘No Campus for White Men’ — new book details the harsh reality in higher education today

Mastodon · 23 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A new book by Daily Caller writer Scott Greer, “No Campus for White Men,” sums it up pretty succinctly.

“The problem is not just overgrown crybabies and helicopter parenting, but an extreme version of identity politics, which encourages students to demand power and privilege on the sole basis of their race, gender, or sexual orientation,” Greer writes. “The flipside is that they want to disenfranchise and humiliate everyone who is not part of their designated victim groups—especially straight, white men.”

With chapters titled “Political Correctness in the Age of Microaggressions,” “Guilty of Being White,” “Greeks under Siege” and “Art of the Hoax,” Greer offers a summary of the campus craziness that has seized higher education over the last several years.

To be sure, the sickness eating away at the heart of higher ed is nothing new — but it is as bad as ever, Greer said in an interview with The College Fix.'

The 'Factual Feminist' debunks stats about sexual assault and the wage gap

Matt · 24 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'When Christina Hoff Sommers, a “former ’60s flower child” turned philosophy professor, began investigating academic feminism, she discovered numerous “mistakes, half-truths and untruths.”

“As a feminist and an academic, I felt the need to set things right,” she told USA TODAY College.

Hoff Sommers is now a resident scholar at the American Enterprise Institute, where she produces the Factual Feminist video series, where she gives talks on topics such as “The top five feminist myths of all time” and “The real reason there aren’t more female scientists.”

The theme in Hoff Sommers’ work is that academic feminism — the type of feminism taught to students in the university environment — exaggerates the plight of women while ignoring the plight of men.

For example, take the oft-repeated gender wage-gap statistic that women make 23 cents less on the dollar than men do for the same job. Last July, for example, Pew Research Center reported that women’s earnings were 83% of men’s.

“That claim is decisively refused by economists, including feminist economists. The 23-cent gender pay gap is simply the difference between the average earnings of all men and women working full time,” Hoff Sommers argues.'

Judge Sees Bias in College Action Against Alleged Rapist

Matt · 24 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A federal judge refused to dismiss most claims from a former Colorado State student who accuses the school of gender bias in suspending him and stripping him of his athletic scholarships after what he calls a false accusation of rape.

Grant Neal sued Colorado State University, Pueblo in April last year on eight causes of action, including breach of contract, breach of faith, violations of Title IX and due process, and procedural matters. The school had suspended him and took away his wrestling and football scholarships.

On Thursday, U.S. Magistrate Judge Craig Shaffer wrote in a 58-page recommendation that the school's investigation was wrought with "bias and inaccuracy."

Shaffer recommended allowing six claims to proceed against the CSU board of governors, dismissing all the individual administrators as defendants, dismissing the U.S. Department of Education as a defendant, and giving Neal leave to amend if he can cure the deficiencies.'

Woman Charged With Making False Rape Accusation That Got Two Men Kicked Out Of School

Mastodon · 24 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An 18-year-old New York woman has been charged with two criminal counts after allegedly making false rape accusations that led to two men leaving Sacred Heart University.

Nikki Yovino, in an attempt to get empathy from a guy she liked, reportedly made up a rape hoax against two Sacred Heart football players she had sex with last October.

She was charged on Wednesday with “second-degree false reporting of an incident and tampering with or fabricating physical evidence,” CTPost reports.

Yovino claimed she was forced into a bathroom where the two men, whose names are not being released, took turns assaulting her. The men admitted that sex occurred, but maintained it was consensual.

After Yovino reported the rape, the two men agreed to leave school after their scholarships were revoked and would have to face a disciplinary board.
...
One of the men has now been readmitted to Sacred Heart.'

Police: Football players falsely accused of rape

Mastodon · 24 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It was another harrowing case of an alleged rape occurring at an off-campus drinking party of underage college students.

In this instance, a teen claimed she was repeatedly raped by two Sacred Heart University football players in a tiny basement bathroom while the party raged on.

But months after the players were dismissed from the team and had withdrawn from the school 18-year-old Nikki Yovino confessed she had made the rape allegations up to gain the sympathy of a prospective boyfriend, police said.

On Wednesday, Yovino, of South Setauket, N.Y., was charged with second-degree false reporting of an incident and tampering with or fabricating physical evidence.

The tampering charge is a felony punishable by up to five years in prison.

After surrendering to police here, Yovino was released after posting $150,000 bond. She is scheduled to be arraigned in Superior Court on March 3.'

This Almost Famous Actor Says a False Rape Allegation Hurt His Career

Mastodon · 24 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Clifton Powell‘s acting catalogue is pretty impressive.

The actor played notable roles in everything from Next Friday to Ray, but he stopped acting and disappeared from Hollywood altogether. TMZ caught up with Powell at LAX and he spoke about trying to put his old rape allegations behind him, which he claims costed him his acting career.

Powell got emotional after explaining that the 4-year-old civil rape case against him has been thrown out, but not without causing tremendous collateral damage. He revealed, “It’s been the worst time of my life, Joe. I have a 22-year-old daughter, I would never hurt anyone. I’m just glad that my friends, family, TMZ, my attorneys have supported me through this whole ordeal. It’s been the most emotional ordeal I had to deal with since my father died in the 80’s”

But don’t let the emotion fool you — he’s not giving up on himself anytime. Powell says that now he’s trying to mend fences in Hollywood. He revealed, “I feel like some jobs just went away. My reputation has been basically ruined and now I have to go about the business of fixing my reputation.”'

Pamela Anderson will campaign for men falsely accused of rape because of Julian Assange friendship

Mastodon · 24 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Pamela Anderson has revealed she wants to start campaigning for men who have been falsely accused of rape.

The former Baywatch actress and glamour model is now an activist, and she has criticised Sweden for its "almost paralysing" laws against sexual crimes.

Speaking on RT's Going Underground, she said: "Sweden has these very progressive laws against sexual crimes, whatever you want to call it. It's almost too progressive, it's almost paralysing.

"I'm going to actually start campaigning for men who have been victims of being accused of rape when they haven't actually done anything."

The star - who has previously campaigned for women's rights, and against domestic violence - insisted that Sweden as a nation "doesn't really know what to do".

She added: "We all of course gravitate towards vulnerable people and we consider that to be women and children first and foremost which is important but there's also a lot of men who are in a vulnerable situation."'

Bette Midler: It's 62 Degrees in NY! Global Warming! Blame Men!

Mastodon · 24 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Thursday, Bette Midler, who uses so much hair spray she has personally engendered global warming, was panicked in New York as the temperature rose to a balmy 62 degrees in the middle of winter.
...
Certainly the problems of global warming weigh on Midler like a Beast of Burden, but she would likely claim that the unusual climes of New York would be “All I Need To Know” that men had, through their fecklessnes(s), malevolence and greed, destroyed the earth, as evidenced by the warm wafting breezes she is experiencing whistling through her ears.

Man-hating and global-warming fear-mongering. What song should she be singing now?'

Why I won't let any male babysit my children

Matt · 24 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. The comments are a bit heartening, though. Excerpt:

'When our first daughter was born my husband and I made a family rule: no man would ever babysit our children. No exceptions. This includes male relatives and friends and even extracurricular and holiday programs, such as basketball camp, where men can have unrestricted and unsupervised access to children.

Eight years, and another daughter later, we have not wavered on this decision.

Group slumber parties are also out. When there is a group of excited children it is far too easy for one of them to be lured away by a father or older brother without being noticed.

When my daughter goes on play dates I make sure that she will be supervised by a woman at all times. So far she has only slept at one friend's house. Beforehand I spoke to my friend about our rule and clarified that if she's going to pop out to shops for example and intends to leave our daughter in the care of her husband or another man then the sleepover cannot happen.'

By teaching children to fear men, we are letting our kids down

Mastodon · 25 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A lot of people, upon reading an article like Kasey Edwards' Why I won't let any male babysit my children, would probably react with anger.

I know I did. It's hard to be told that you've been classified as a potential predator – that, without knowing anything about you, someone has already decided that their children need to be protected from you – without feeling pretty offended.

I never have and never will abuse a child, and, on a base emotional level, it's hurtful to hear that the probability of my doing so is too great to allow me to be alone with kids. But as Edwards says, the protection of children is not secondary to men's right not to be offended, so it's worth trying to go beyond that initial visceral anger, and examine a little closer the idea of forbidding men from taking care of your children.'

'Day Without A Woman' details released

Mastodon · 25 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'For those looking to participate in the upcoming "A Day Without A Woman" strike, organizers of the Women's March on Washington have released additional information on how to observe the day.

Three action items are listed on the Women's March website for "anyone, anywhere," including:

1. Women take the day off work.
2. Exclusively shop at "small, women- and minority-owned businesses."
3. Wear red "in solidarity."

The strike is scheduled for International Women's Day, March 8, and is meant to recognize "the enormous value that women of all backgrounds add to our socioeconomic system, while receiving lower wages and experiencing greater inequities, vulnerability to discrimination, sexual harassment and job insecurity," according to the Women's March website.'

Judge rules San Diego State railroaded accused student by denying him adequate defense

Matt · 25 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'San Diego State University violated “procedural fairness” by refusing to let a student accused of rape have an advocate “with the same or substantially similar skills, training and experience” as his accuser’s advocate, a California court ruled.

Judge Joel Wohlfeil ordered the university to “dissolve the finding” by Dr. Lee Mintz, who also served as the school’s investigator, that “John Doe” did not stop having sex with “Jane Roe” when she asked.

It also must take back its finding that Roe “became incapacitated” and Doe “continued to have sex with her.” Mintz characterized those findings as “sexual assault” and “rape.”

Doe did not contest findings that “may support the sanction of expulsion” that he received before filing suit, so the California Superior Court judge declined to overturn his expulsion.'

Meet the terrorist behind the next women's march

Mastodon · 27 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Here's the left's next great idea for bringing down President Trump: another women's march. Which means another public instance of Trump haters shouting slogans to one another and mistaking it for constructive politics. What progressives need to defeat Trump is outreach, but all they have is outrage.

On March 8, organizers seem to be aiming for a different vibe than the librarians-in-pussy-hats element that made the first women's march after Trump's inauguration so adorable.

Instead of milling around Washington, organizers have in mind a "general strike" called the Day without a Woman. In a manifesto published in The Guardian on Feb. 6, the brains behind the movement are calling for a "new wave of militant feminist struggle." That's right: militant, not peaceful.

The document was co-authored by, among others, Rasmea Yousef Odeh, a convicted terrorist. Odeh, a Palestinian, was convicted in Israel in 1970 for her part in two terrorist bombings, one of which killed two students while they were shopping for groceries. She spent 10 years in prison for her crimes. She then managed to become a US citizen in 2004 by lying about her past (great detective work, INS: Next time, use Google) but was subsequently convicted, in 2014, of immigration fraud for the falsehoods. However, she won the right to a new trial (set for this spring) by claiming she had been suffering from PTSD at the time she lied on her application. Oh, and in her time as a citizen, she worked for a while as an ObamaCare navigator.'

SAVE: Following Reports of Continued Abuses, SAVE Proposes Stronger Campus Sexual Assault Legislation

Matt · 27 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Press release here. Excerpt:

'In the wake of ongoing reports of campus proceedings that shortchange sexual assault victims and the accused, SAVE is releasing a stronger version of its Campus Equality, Fairness, and Transparency Act. The revised bill enhances the involvement of local law enforcement agencies for allegations of sexual violence. The CEFTA bill also strengthens due process protections and the presumption of innocence for accused students.

The revised model bill follows last week's revelations that the University of Alaska signed a settlement agreement with the federal Office for Civil Rights agreeing to reinvestigate 23 cases of alleged sexual assault. In many cases, the university did not provide complainants temporary relief, like classroom changes or new living situations while the cases were investigated.'

Theresa May's top security advisor quits after being accused of 'mansplaining' to the PM and annoying Donald Trump

Mastodon · 27 February 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Theresa May's top security advisor has quit after being accused of 'mansplaining' to the Prime Minister and irritating Donald Trump.

Sir Mark Lyall Grant has resigned as Mrs May's national security advisor after less than two years in the role.

The resignation comes after Sir Mark was accused of 'mansplaining' - or talking in a condescending manner to women - by multiple sources at Number 10.

The source said the Old Etonian, who was a UK ambassador to the UN before taking over the national security adviser role, spoke over the Prime Minister during a meeting at Downing Street.

It is also claimed that Sir Mark did not hit it off with President Donald Trump during a recent visit to Washington and riled the leader with his manner.'

Here’s What’s Wrong With The Claim That Female Reporters Make 26% Less Than Male Counterparts

Mastodon · 1 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Female journalists are paid 26 percent less than their male counterparts, says a new study, but that claim is deeply misleading according to the study’s own data.

A study published Tuesday surveyed journalists in New Zealand, and claims the median after-tax salary of women is 26 percent lower than that of men of equivalent rank and experience.

The study’s claim ignores much of its own data.

Its data clearly suggests the salary gap is because female journalists are, on average, six years younger than their male colleagues, and have 5.3 less years of work experience. They are also less likely to work full time and hold management positions.'

Rights group updates model legislation for campus sexual assault

Mastodon · 1 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Last year, a group dedicated to ensuring all students have rights on college campuses proposed model legislation that detailed how universities should handle accusations of sexual assault. Now, eight months later, the group has revised the model legislation following recent events surrounding the issue.

The group, known as Stop Abusive and Violent Environments (SAVE), has been advocating protection of due process rights for accused students for years, and have most recently pushed Gail Heriot, a member of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, to lead the Education Department's Office for Civil Rights, which oversees sexual assault policies.'

He Said, She Accused

Mastodon · 1 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Men are very dangerous," the radical feminist Andrea Dworkin declared at a 1983 meeting of the National Organization for Changing Men, an "anti-sexist" group with an apparent shortage of gender-based rah-rah male self-esteem. Readers of The Campus Rape Frenzy, the sobering new book by KC Johnson and Stuart Taylor Jr., will pick up a distinctly different impression: On many of today's angst-filled college campuses, it seems the tables have turned.

"Casual sex with women you barely know is especially dangerous," notes Taylor at the book's close, cautioning future generations of college-bound young men. It almost sounds quaint, echoing warnings once dispensed to young women about men in the supposedly retrograde days of yore. But as The Campus Rape Frenzy documents, at colleges across America, innocent male students are increasingly railroaded, scapegoated, and victimized. They are learning the hard way that sex with the wrong girl might just ruin your life.

Colleges, particularly those of the elite variety, are in the "grip of a moral panic about students' sexual behavior," Johnson and Taylor write. Thanks to a 2011 "Dear Colleague" letter to universities from the Obama administration's Office of Civil Rights, college campuses are increasingly taking sexual-assault adjudication into their own hands. The results are disastrous, following a formula that is perfect, as Johnson and Taylor point out, "for judging innocent male students to be sex offenders," using standards that turn both "civil liberties and centuries of common law upside down."'

UK: University bans lecturers from using series of phrases that could be deemed sexist

Mastodon · 3 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Lecturers have been banned from using the phrases ‘mankind’ and ‘man-made’ as part of a university’s clampdown on ‘gendered language’.

Cardiff Metropolitan University says the ‘politically correct’ words should be used to ‘promote an atmosphere in which all students and staff feel valued’.

The rules are laid out in the institution’s Equal Opportunities Policy, which warns contraventions could result in disciplinary action.

It says ‘inclusive language’ must be used throughout all academic programmes to comply with the Equality Act as gendered words could be considered discriminatory.'

‘The MANologues,’ a Performance About Toxic Masculinity

Mastodon · 3 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'This weekend in Atlanta, theatergoers can see not only Eve Ensler’s Vagina Monologues but also The MANologues, a new performance about “toxic masculinity.”

“The MANologues will explore themes such as masculinity, white male privilege, everyday sexism, war, patriarchy, socialization to gender and race, intersectionality, bystander intervention, allyship, PTSD, porn addiction, mansplaining, police brutality, and more,” according to Atlanta’s Creative Loafing.

HuMAN UP, an “intersectional feminist” organization focused on gender-based violence and men, is producing the performance along with the Atlanta chapter of One Billion Rising, which was founded by the Vagina Monologues author.

Once hailed as a feminist masterpiece, the Vagina Monologues has come under fire in recent years, especially on college campuses. Critics have complained the show is insufficiently inclusive of transgender people.'

Memo to Our Sons and Grandsons: The Future Is Female

Mastodon · 3 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I must say that when I read of Hillary Clinton's recent video proclamation to MAKERS (an AOL-sponsored group where trailblazing women tell their stories) that "the future is female," my mind immediately raced to my four grandsons, ages 3, 7, 10, and 11. What would the two older ones think if and when they heard or read of this statement, which emanated from someone who came very close to being our president (and for whom I had voted)? In fact, what does this say to Clinton's own grandson, Aidan, who is now eight months old? The message to her granddaughter, 2-year-old Charlotte is clear and encouraging. But what about Aidan? And all his baby boy peers?

I suspected I was not alone with these feelings, and when read this, I knew it:

"Imagine, if you will, an audience of little boys—let's pretend they're second- and third-graders—forced to sit in an auditorium and listen to Hillary Clinton's short speech. They swing their legs. They fidget a bit. 'The future is female,' Clinton declares, beamed in on a giant screen. What are they supposed to think, other than that girls matter more than they do?"'

Teacher who stalked pupils for sex by sending raunchy texts and half-naked selfies jailed for three years

Matt · 5 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'AN ENGLISH teacher who stalked pupils for sex behind her husband's back has been jailed for three years.

Allison Marchese, 39, from Connecticut in the United States, sent two teenagers winking emojis, saucy texts and half-naked selfies, a court heard yesterday.

The mum-of-two cried in court as relatives of the boys told of the impact her actions have had on their lives.

One parent said: "The actions done by this woman has caused immeasurable damage to my son."

Judge Melanie Cradle told Marchese: "You were a teacher and you were in a position of trust. And the bottom line here is the victims are kids and were their teacher.'

This Bernie supporter, now out of college, continues fighting for due process on campus

Mastodon · 7 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'If 1 in 5 college females is raped or sexually assaulted, Andrew Cavarno says American universities would be one of the most dangerous places in the world for young women.

In fact, the 2016 UC-Santa Barbara graduate argues the figure would make colleges more dangerous than inner-city Chicago, prison or the war-torn Congo. However, campuses aren't that treacherous.

That's because the oft-touted 1-in-5 figure just doesn't hold up, Cavarno told attendees during a recent presentation at UC-Irvine. His presentation, "Campus Rape Hysteria: False Stats and the Assault on Due Process," debunked such statistics and pushed for robust due process in campus rape proceedings.'

Accused Student Sues UCSB in Assault Case

Mastodon · 7 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A UCSB freshman is suing the school after being indefinitely suspended following an incident that occurred last August. About a month before he was scheduled to begin classes, UCSB student John Doe, as he is identified in court files, was arrested in San Diego for allegedly hitting his girlfriend. All criminal charges were dropped shortly after, and the woman told authorities her accusation was false, court files state.
...
In early January, Robert P. Ottilie, Doe's attorney, took the issue to Santa Barbara County Superior Court. He argued the school has well surpassed the 60-day maximum that Title IX law allots for these cases. (Ottilie has also filed a claim at the 2nd District Court of Appeal.) Meanwhile, Doe remains unable to begin his freshman year at UCSB.

This incident, which occurred in San Diego, involved an edited video posted to Twitter by Doe's former girlfriend, in which it appears that Doe hits her as the video goes dark, according to court files. The footage was sent to UCSB's Office of Student Affairs, which forwarded it to the UCSB Police Department. It is unclear who sent in the video, but Ottilie claimed it was not Doe's ex-girlfriend.
...
The complicated thing about Judicial Affairs cases is that they operate behind closed doors – there is no public record. This administrative process has received widespread scrutiny in recent years after sexual assault victims contended university administrators essentially swept their cases under the rug. At the same time, accused students — charged with anything from plagiarism to assault — have argued Judicial Affairs offices denied them their due process.

By mid-January, Ottilie claimed UCSB had yet to conduct a single interview with any third party witness involved in the case. Determined to begin his education, Doe expressed desire to attend community college until this investigation was complete, but UCSB administration told him that to do so, he would have to give up his admission to the university, Ottilie said. Currently, Doe is living in San Diego.

"These undisputed facts could lead a reasonable person to conclude the suspension without charges has encouraged certain kids to give up and leave," Ottilie said. Doe grew up sleeping in storage closets and on couches in a San Diego deli, Ottilie explained. His father, who is black, is serving a life sentence in prison. His mother, a Mexican immigrant, has a fourth grade education. In high school, he worked three jobs. Ottilie said he is examining whether race and socio-economic status played a role in "the handling of this case."'

Students accused of campus sexual assault are now guilty until proved innocent

Mastodon · 7 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'After a wave of activism created a frenzy over campus sexual assault, the Obama administration twice rewrote federal rules governing how allegations must be handled at colleges and universities. In response to this movement, too many schools have adopted procedures that force accused students to turn to the courts for any hope of justice.

In particular, since 2011, when the Department of Education reinterpreted Title IX to require that sexual assault cases be judged by a “preponderance of the evidence” — a lower burden of proof than is used in criminal cases — more than 100 accused students have sued their schools. In most of these recent cases the colleges have lost, as they should have.

Our close examination of court records shows how the new mandates and procedures amount to a de facto presumption of guilt. It also shows that colleges are at best incapable of adjudicating allegedly criminal conduct, and at worst hopelessly biased.

The recent cases can be divided into two groups. In the first are colleges that considerably broadened the definition of sexual assault and, in some instances, applied the new definition to students who did not violate the rules in place at the time of their alleged misconduct.'

When did men (particularly dads) become so idiotic?

Mastodon · 7 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'OPINION: It's a wonder they have managed to survive to adulthood, a miracle they could negotiate procreation.

I'm talking about men depicted in advertising, dolts so dumb they can't feed themselves or work an appliance without a smug woman rolling her eyes at their clueless stupidity.

You know who I am talking about: the dropkick who uses his girlfriend's pads as make believe robot armour; the manic moron who stays up all night searching for the best holiday deal while his partner is all over it in a click; the old guy who thinks his missus says he's the best lover when she's talking about insurance cover; the panicking man child left to cook the kids a healthy meal; the goose trying to work out how an air freshener can randomly squirt; the bloke who thinks tampons are cat toys; the baffled dad who explains to his kid the Great Wall of China was built to keep out rabbits…

Some women might find these depictions of men as a long time coming, considering how their sex has been used and abused over the years to sell practically everything and anything – well, our boobs and butts have anyway. But 40 years on, advertisers are slightly more careful about how they depict women, fearful of feminists' wrath if they're seen to be sexist or patronising. Not that it has stopped them completely – that's never going to happen when the first rule of advertising is sex sells.'

Isn’t every day International Women’s Day?

Mastodon · 7 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Jump the paywall by Googling the first paragraph text. Excerpt:

'Right now, thousands of deluded feminists are clearing their throats ready to start bleating about the oppression of the patriarchy, squawking about the fantasy gender pay gap and banging on drums to the rhythm of “poor me”. Wide-eyed, eager-to-please young minions will be directed to ensure #BeBoldForChange trends on Twitter all day long. If you were planning a digital detox, may I suggest tomorrow.

What exactly would they like to change? Perhaps they could start with their own heinous narrative?

Let’s be clear: in the Western world, every day is International Women’s Day. What precisely is this current redundant wave of feminism trying to achieve? Women already get equal pay for equal work.

Countless organisations have entirely rewritten recruiting policies to hit aggressive gender targets. Westpac is reportedly targeting 50 per cent women in leadership roles. It’s been entirely forgotten that capability is more important than gender.

While fem-folk busy themselves crowing about workplace equality and demanding the right to have babies, a career and earn a fulltime salary, they won’t dare venture into the woods to tackle real oppression oozing from Islam.

Where are the fem-bots slamming unacceptable comments about domestic violence being an acceptable “last resort” from Keysar Trad, president of Australian Federation of Islamic Council?

Instead, criticism fell at the feet of Immigration Minister Peter Dutton for daring to call feminists “hypocrites”. He’s right: how can anyone call themself a feminist and support sexist sharia law? Illogical.

In an interview with The Dartmouth Review last week, Christina Hoff Sommers said: “Girls and women are the privileged sex in education. From preschool to graduate schools, and across ethnic and class lines, women get better grades, they win most of the honours and prizes, and they’re far more likely to go to college.”

One gender gap has closed — and the other has opened up. Sweden has commissioned research into the so-called “boy crisis”.

...

Last week, the misandry merchants at anti-domestic violence organisation Our Watch circulated a meme saying, “Let’s stop framing victims as daughters and sisters and start framing rapists as brothers and fathers”.'

Australia: Why the ABC's International Women's Day stunt is wrong

Mastodon · 7 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'THE ABC is kicking its men off the airwaves tomorrow because it wants to promote equality of the sexes.

Do you want to read that sentence again?

Yes, in some misguided gesture to mark International Women's Day our national taxpayer-funded broadcaster is replacing all its male television and radio hosts with women.

Who knew gender apartheid was in its charter.

Obviously wherever the ABC goes, others follow and so the The Hit Network has announced it will deliver a national breakfast show, hosted by Fox FM's Fifi Box and 2 Day FM's Em Rusciano, and featuring only women.

If I was a male host I'd be insulted and if I was a female host I'd feel patronised for a panoply of reasons.

Firstly, women don't need men to be displaced so we can be elevated. We're perfectly capable of driving our own agendas and garnering our own status through talent and hard work not via some muddle-headed stunt that draws headlines but not change.'

On March 8, remember victims of #DayWithoutAWoman co-organizer Rasmea Odeh

Mastodon · 7 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'March 8 is being organized as “A Day Without A Woman,” and promoted by the people behind the highly-organized Women’s March.

The March 8 protest asks women not to work and to otherwise go on strike.

It was conceived by a small group of radicals, including convicted terrorist murderer Rasmea Odeh.

Rasmea was one of the first female military members of the marxist terrorist group the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine.

The evidence is overwhelming of Rasmea’s involvement in the February 21, 1969 bombing of the SuperSol supermarket in Jerusalem that killed to Hebrew University Students, Edward Joffe and Leon Kanner.

Rasmea’s defense, that the only reason she was convicted was that she gave a false confession after 25 days of sexual torture by the Israelis, is demonstrably false. In fact, Rasmea confessed in writing just one day (not 25 days) after arrest and there were multiple independent sources of evidence of her involvement, including bomb-making material found in her bedroom.'

UK: Grad student cleared of rape in changed-mind case

Mastodon · 7 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'A graduate wept as he was cleared of raping a university student who 'changed her mind' during a drunken one-night stand.

Lewis Tappenden, 24, was 'pulled' by the 18-year-old first year on a night out and taken back to her student accommodation for sex.

But the York St John University scholar changed her mind halfway through and later accused him of rape, a court heard.

A jury took less than two hours to clear Mr Tappenden after a five day trial at York Crown Court, and the ordeal left him 'feeling suicidal'.

Outside court his father Rob Tappenden, 51, said: 'We are not happy, it's not a celebration, it's not a victory.

'We have not won anything. We have lost 18 months of our lives really. I never doubted Lewis, but we've had this cloud over us.'
...
The defendant, who broke down in tears at the not guilty verdicts, is currently working in a bar in Peterborough, Cambridgeshire.'

Woman Charged With Making False Rape Accusation That Made Two Men Leave School

Mastodon · 7 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'An 18-year-old New York woman has been charged with two criminal counts after allegedly making false rape accusations that led to two men leaving Sacred Heart University.

Nikki Yovino, in an attempt to get empathy from a guy she liked, reportedly made up a rape hoax against two Sacred Heart football players she had sex with last October.

She was charged on Wednesday with “second-degree false reporting of an incident and tampering with or fabricating physical evidence,” CTPost reports.

Yovino claimed she was forced into a bathroom where the two men, whose names are not being released, took turns assaulting her. The men admitted that sex occurred, but maintained it was consensual.'

Woman facing jail for false rape allegations against her ex

Mastodon · 7 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Jade Morgan, 25, wanted to end James Grogan's relationship with his new girlfriend so she started harassing him.

At one point she was sending him 60 messages a day via email, Snapchat and WhatsApp, and on one occasion he had 27 missed calls from her.

Morgan told him she was pregnant and that he was the father, sending him a baby scan she downloaded from Google.

She also sent nude pictures and asked him for sex before making the rape allegation. She was given a restraining order forbidding her from contacting Mr Grogan.'

A Bookstore Is Displaying All Books By Men Backwards

Mastodon · 8 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'On Mar. 1, the bookstore turned around all books authored by men to illustrate how much more prominent men are in the written world than women, just in time for Women's History Month.
...
"I want people to think: Is the gender gap really this uneven, and why? What does my personal library look like? What can be done to change this imbalance? And then go find a title by a female author you may or may not be familiar with — it's easy to find them — and give it a try," she said.'

Feminist Author To Young Girls: Don't Read Books By Men

Mastodon · 8 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Caitlin Moran, the feminist author of How to Be a Woman, is now insisting that girls eschew reading books by male authors until the girls have become women.

Moran, writing an International Women's Day article written for the publishing house Penguin, first innocuously lauds feminist icon Gloria Steinem for saying Louisa May Alcott's Little Women was the book that most changed her life. Then she gets down to feminist business:

Oh man, she's right - so right I yelped when I read it. Because if I had one piece of advice for young girls, and women, it would be this: girls, don't read any books by men. Don't read them. Stay away from them. Or, at least, don't read them until you're older, and fully-formed, and battle-ready, and are able to counter someone being rude to you, in conversation, not with silent embarrassment, or internalised, mute fury, but a calm, "Fuck you very much, and goodbye."

Because if there's one thing that has made me, perhaps, happier in myself, and more confident about writing the truth, and less apt to run myself down for my appearance, weight, loudness and unusualness than many, many other women, it's that I never read books by men when I was younger.'

A Day Without Women, A Defamation of Men

Mastodon · 8 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Historically Americans have held some significant marches to protest wide-spread injustices and inequalities. The Suffragette Movement and the March in 1913 protested women's disenfranchisement and inequality under the law. Martin Luther King and the March on Washington demanded a reversal of the institutionalized racism that persisted well into the 1960s. "A Day without Women", however, – a protest to spotlight the "economic injustices" against women – does not follow suit.

Today women will gather in cities around the country to "call attention to" issues such as pay equity, gender discrimination, sexual harassment, and job insecurity. We are certain to hear about the grossly overstated wage gap, the need for mandated paid leave, and government funded childcare, among other things.

Of course, this "woman-as-victim" narrative is nothing new. For years progressives have worked to convince Americans that women are victims of a relentless sexist society and therefore in need of constant special attention from government. Feminists on the left increasingly act as if women don't have choices; and too often they (re)fashion women as objects rather than agents.'

'Women's March' feminists want entitlements, not equality

Mastodon · 9 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It's the new wave of militant feminism. Like the January march, this latest demonstration is seeking to capitalize on the trendy protests that garner media attention and assert the liberal narrative that Trump's administration does not value "women's rights."

This is absurd. Nothing about the Trump administration or its policies to date have remotely suggested that women are valued less or do not have the same rights or legal protections as men. In fact, Trump's own campaign manager was the first woman to manage a winning presidential campaign and his cabinet and group of advisors include multiple successful women. So why the outrage over women's rights?

As a woman myself and someone very concerned about preserving and protecting fundamental rights, I have to ask, what exactly defines "women's rights?" Historically, this meant that women should have the same legal, social, and governmental privileges as men. This is what women traditionally meant by equality — literally, having equal status. But in the past few decades, this idea of women's rights has evolved to mean some sort of additional, special rights or privileges that position us above men, categorically.

Though feminists won't admit it, this isn't actually equality. It's playing governmental favoritism and demanding to in fact not be equal. Feminism has gone from demanding equality to demanding entitlements.'

What rights do women not have compared to men?

Mastodon · 9 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Apparently on March 8th, women nationwide will be walking out of their jobs or not even showing up to work in honor of this “A day without Women” movement. It all started with the women’s march on Washington D.C., which occurred the day after President Trump’s inauguration. I honestly think that anyone who took part in that and thought wearing a vagina shaped hat on their head was a good idea, is really not the brightest crayon in the box. Nor was it a good idea to trash the Nations Capitol in spite of yourself. If you really wanted to protest for women’s rights, you would do so without clothes and fully embrace your womanhood. But then again, we have the same rights as men don’t we? We can vote, as per the 19th amendment to the U.S. Constitution. So what else is there? I asked and I was given a few answers.

Apparently women want equal pay, more representation in congress and Planned Parenthood services.

Hate to break it to you ladies, but if you want equal pay, do the same work as men in all aspects. Don’t use your “monthly friend” as an excuse. Woman up and deal with it. If you want more representation in congress, VOTE for women. That’s the only way that will happen and at one point in recent Maine history, we had three women in congress, Representative Chellie Pingree, Senator Olympia Snow and Senator Susan Collins, so please don’t try to feed that bullshit about women representation. It was there, but money speaks more than sisterhood.'

Judge: Male student expelled for sexual assault may have been victim himself

Mastodon · 9 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In one of the most absurd cases of campus sexual assault to date, a male student was expelled after he “blacked out” and had oral sex performed on him.

The woman who performed the act would, nearly two years later, accuse him of sexual assault, even though the evidence heavily suggested it was the male student who was the victim.

Now a U.S. district court judge in Massachusetts has vindicated this expelled student, an Asian-American student known only as John Doe in court documents. Judge Mark Mastroianni upheld numerous key claims in Doe’s lawsuit against Amherst College in Massachusetts and some of its employees. Most notably, Mastroianni upheld Doe’s claim that the school breached its contract with him by discriminating against him based on sex.'

Australia: Position Vacant - "Women Leaders in STEM Careers Program Coordinator"

Minuteman · 9 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Working under general direction the Women Leaders in STEM Careers (WLSC) Program Coordinator will coordinate and implement in conjunction with the Associate Dean for Diversity and Inclusion and the Marketing, Engagement and Recruitment Manager a new 2 year initiative for female students studying science, technology, engineering or mathematics at university.
...
The University of Adelaide is an Equal Employment Opportunity employer. Women, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people who meet the requirements of this position are strongly encouraged to apply.'

Australia: Position Vacant - "Gender Equity Advisor", Adelaide University

Minuteman · 9 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Link here. Excerpt:

'Human Resources partners with the University to enable and support a culture of high engagement, commitment and performance. The branch provides recruitment, superannuation and promotions support and advice to the University community and manages payroll, staff records, and workforce planning. Human Resources also encompasses the Health, Safety and Wellbeing unit, with responsibility for occupational health and safety programs and training.

The Gender Equity Advisor is responsible for providing specialist advice, coordination and support to facilitate the development, engagement and implementation of key gender equity improvement strategies and initiatives. The role will raise awareness of gender equity (GE) initiatives and provide expert advice and review on policies and procedures to ensure Equal Opportunity principles are embedded.

Salary: (HEO7) $80,684 - $90,516 per annum.
...
The University of Adelaide is an Equal Employment Opportunity employer. Women, Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander people who meet the requirements of this position are strongly encouraged to apply.'

Why Is the NEA Funding Discrimination?

Mastodon · 9 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Some might think that the theater world would be an unlikely place to find racial or gender discrimination, but a call to action named “Jubilee 2020” from Howlround, a nonprofit “knowledge commons by and for the theatre community,” is a direct plea for discrimination. Howlround has asked theater companies to pledge that in the year 2020 they will produce no plays written by straight white men. Thus far, 70 theater companies around the country have signed the pledge, and the number is growing.

...

Jubilee 2020 is divisive, illiberal, and dangerous. All of us, and especially our government, must make it clear that there is no place for racial or gender discrimination in art. It is my hope that theater companies in the United States will reject this pledge. It is already the law, as set forth in the Civil Rights Act of 1964, that companies signing the pledge may not receive a single penny from the government of the United States.'

‘Day Without Women’ Was A Bit Of A Bust

Mastodon · 9 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Nearly everyone tells pollsters they believe in the equality of the sexes, while small minorities — 18 percent last year — say they’re feminist. In most media outlets, that percentage seemingly skyrockets.

Despite the heavy amount of coverage feminist activism receives, it remains a fringe factor in much of society.

Still, women and men should remember that women who are angry or otherwise moved to political action frequently have had negative experiences with men. In the same way, some men who are angry about the relationship between the sexes have had negative experiences with women. The best antidote to grievance marches is for men and women to treat each other well.

Now, even if you haven’t been treated well by the opposite sex, you should not lose hope. But women who have been treated well by men don’t tend to riot over the treatment of women. Men who have been treated well by women tend not to wreak havoc in others’ lives.

Now get out there and treat your fellow man and fellow woman well, learning the joys that come from cooperation rather than competition between the sexes.'

This App Uses AI To Track Mansplaining In Your Meetings

Mastodon · 9 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Studies have shown that women face bias when they speak up in the workplace. Regardless of whether it's conscious or unconscious, that bias has real consequences. For instance, in a study in which Yale psychologist Victoria L. Brescoll asked male and female employees to evaluate executive performances, she found that female executives who spoke frequently were given 14% lower ratings of competence. Their chatty male peers, meanwhile, were rewarded with 10% higher ratings.

It's no wonder, then, why women on average speak less than men in meetings: These risks aren't just perceived, they're proven. The Stockholm-based design firm Doberman believes the first step toward erasing gender bias in the workplace is making it known. For that, it designed an app called GenderEQ that monitors and evaluates meetings based on voice recognition, then analyzes the data to show the percentage of time taken up by male and female speakers.
...
The app does bring up a few obvious questions, though: Does grouping voices into male and female voice based on the frequency and tone reinforce certain stereotypes, even as the app seeks to do away with others? And what about people who don't identify with either symbol on the screen? "We are very aware that gender identity is a much more complex subject than this," says Lars Ericsson, head of technology at Doberman. "We don’t think that this will solve the question around gender identity or gender equality. That’s definitely an important point to make. What we hope to achieve is to raise the awareness and fuel the discussion around how we interact and behave."'

Yet Another College Loses a Due Process Case

Mastodon · 9 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'I missed this news last week, but it's certainly worth highlighting. Another college has lost another due process case after railroading a male student in a campus rape tribunal. The College Fix reprints the opinion and summarizes the case:

"San Diego State University violated "procedural fairness" by refusing to let a student accused of rape have an advocate "with the same or substantially similar skills, training and experience" as his accuser's advocate, a California court ruled.

Judge Joel Wohlfeil ordered the university to "dissolve the finding" by Dr. Lee Mintz, who also served as the school's investigator, that "John Doe" did not stop having sex with "Jane Roe" when she asked.

It also must take back its finding that Roe "became incapacitated" and Doe "continued to have sex with her." Mintz characterized those findings as "sexual assault" and "rape.""

Without getting too far into the weeds of the case, the accuser claims that she asked the accused to stop having sex with her after she says she felt sick after ingesting edible marijuana. The male student claimed the sex was over before the marijuana could have taken effect and that text messages, phone records, and a polygraph backed his version of the events.'

States consider stacking the deck against accused students as Trump administration pulls back

Mastodon · 10 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Maine, Maryland and Texas lawmakers are looking to codify affirmative consent, “an extreme set of rules for engaging in sexual activity that are almost impossible to follow,” Schow says. Here are the conditions under which a student can be found at fault for not getting affirmative consent:

Not obtained at “every step” of the sexual encounter

Sexual activity after drinking any amount of alcohol

Accuser “felt pressured into having sex or was too afraid to leave”

California, Connecticut and Mississippi are looking to codify parts of the 2011 “Dear Colleague” letter from the feds, which “threatened to remove federal funding if schools didn’t comply” and incentivized false accusations, Schow says.

California: “all forms” of “sexual violence” (including rebuffed sexual requests) are harassment under Title IX

Connecticut: Multiple stats on sexual-assault reports and adjudication results, the better to shame schools with few reports or few harsh penalties on accused students

Mississippi: No right to cross-examination but a higher evidence standard (“clear and convincing”) than imposed by Obama’s department'

Sheryl Sandberg: Women work more hours than men

Mastodon · 10 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Sandberg also discussed the wage gap: "Even though women work more hours per day and more days per year than men, we earn only a small percentage of the world's income and own even less of the world's property."
...
It's not clear whether Sandberg is striking or taking action today. "If people want to support the strike, we support them. We support our employees' rights and freedoms to express their beliefs," Joe Benarroch, communication manager at Facebook, told CNNTech.'

What is the Average Hours Per Week Worked in the US?

'Gender
Men worked an average of 41.1 hours per week. Woman worked an average of 36.4 hours per week in paid employment.

Marriage
Married men worked 5.1 hours more per week than men who were never married. Married women worked 1.7 hours more than women who were never married.'

What if Donald Trump and Hillary Clinton Had Swapped Genders?

Matt · 10 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Salvatore says he and Guadalupe began the project assuming that the gender inversion would confirm what they'd each suspected watching the real-life debates: that Trump's aggression—his tendency to interrupt and attack—would never be tolerated in a woman, and that Clinton's competence and preparedness would seem even more convincing coming from a man.
...
We heard a lot of "now I understand how this happened"—meaning how Trump won the election. People got upset. There was a guy two rows in front of me who was literally holding his head in his hands, and the person with him was rubbing his back. The simplicity of Trump's message became easier for people to hear when it was coming from a woman—that was a theme. One person said, "I'm just so struck by how precise Trump's technique is." Another—a musical theater composer, actually—said that Trump created "hummable lyrics," while Clinton talked a lot, and everything she was was true and factual, but there was no "hook" to it. Another theme was about not liking either candidate—you know, "I wouldn't vote for either one." Someone said that Jonathan Gordon [the male Hillary Clinton] was "really punchable" because of all the smiling. And a lot of people were just very surprised by the way it upended their expectations about what they thought they would feel or experience. There was someone who described Brenda King [the female Donald Trump] as his Jewish aunt who would take care of him, even though he might not like his aunt. Someone else described her as the middle school principal who you don't like, but you know is doing good things for you.'

Swedish Woman of the Year Runner-Up Advocates Banning Men from Television

Mastodon · 10 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Feminist writer and professor of literature Ebba Witt-Brattström, who recently came second in Sweden's "Woman of the Year 2017", has advocated getting rid of all men on Swedish television.

Feminist Ebba Witt-Brattström claims there are far too many men on Swedish television and that not only should there be more women on programmes, but men shouldn't be allowed on TV at all. After coming second in the Swedish woman of the year competition, the writer said she wants a "brilliant culture of women" on Swedish television in an interview with Swedish paper Expressen.

Ms. Witt-Brattström singled out Swedish painter and author Lars Lerin and musician Karl Anders "Kalle" Moraeus saying she would like to see far less of them. "We may as well remove them all," she said referring to men on television. "We can take them all away and add a brilliant culture of women instead."'

Study: Circumcision makes sex better for men

Mastodon · 10 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Check out the comments. Excerpt:

'Circumcision is the answer, according to a team of experts at the University of Chicago.

They found the simple op made sex more enjoyable for two thirds of blokes.

The researchers were tasked with looking at a man's sexual pleasure, and function in the bedroom – as well as the risk of injury during sex.

The 362 men taking part were quizzed six and 24 months after having their circumcision.

The researchers said: "The study confirmed men's long-term satisfaction with the outcome of their voluntary medical male circumcision.

"It improved sexual pleasure and function for most men and significantly decreased coital injuries."

Of the 362 circumcised men taking part, 98 per cent reported being happy with their op.

Most, 95 per cent, told researchers their female partners were satisfied after the procedure.'

Circumcision should be delayed to adulthood for informed consent

Mastodon · 10 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The conversation regarding whether babies born with male genitalia should be circumcised has resurfaced recently with more urgency due to the renewed public vigor about personal bodily autonomy and consent.

It is expected that parents make most decisions regarding their child's health and happiness during infancy. While babies are limited to crying to communicate their needs, parents are left to make major life decisions for the child that bypass the usual realm of what they should wear or what they should eat.

A parent piercing their child's ears so they look "pretty," for example, is a contested issue. This issue pales in comparison, however, to the irreversible practice of penile circumcision. Many are starting to see circumcision as a question of bodily autonomy and as a form of bodily mutilation. At the very least, information about the concerns of circumcision should be available to parents.

Because a child cannot give a form of consent on a permanent cosmetic procedure, the practice of penis circumcision in infancy or in childhood should be stopped.'

‘Toni the Tampon’ Teaches Children Men Can Menstruate

Mastodon · 13 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The author of a children’s coloring book has invented a character named “Toni the Tampon” to instruct children that men can menstruate.

Cass Clemmer, the author of The Adventures of Toni the Tampon, has been using her coloring book character to “destigmatize” menstruation. Now, however, she also wants to “de-gender” the female biological process and to persuade children that men get periods too.

Clemmer’s latest adventure of Toni the Tampon is one aspect of the progressive campaign to blur the differences between male and female, and to ultimately create a “genderless” society which bars the commonplace civic distinctions between biological males and biological females in a heterosexual society.'

Camille Paglia Discusses Her War on 'Elitist Garbage' and Contemporary Feminism

Mastodon · 14 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'What I'm saying in Free Women, Free Men is that women can never be truly free until they let men too be free—which means that men have every right to determine their own identities, interests, and passions without intrusive surveillance and censorship by women with their own political agenda. For example, if there is an official Women's Center on the Yale University campus (which there is), then there should be a Men's Center too—and Yale men should be free to carry on and carouse there and say whatever the hell they want to each other, without snoops outside the door ready to report them to the totalitarian sexual harassment office.
...
It is an absolute outrage how so many pampered, affluent, upper-middle-class professional women chronically spout snide anti-male feminist rhetoric, while they remain completely blind to the constant labor and sacrifices going on all around them as working-class men create and maintain the fabulous infrastructure that makes modern life possible in the Western world. Only a tiny number of women want to enter the trades where most of the nitty-gritty physical work is actually going on—plumbing, electricity, construction. Women have played virtually no role in the erection of those magnificent towers in every major city in the world. It's men who operate the cranes or set the foundations or wash windows on the 85th floor. It's men who troop out at 2:00 AM during an ice storm to restore power to neighborhoods where falling trees have brought down live wires. It's men who mix the stinking, toxic cauldrons to spread steaming hot tar on city roofs. Last year in a nearby town, I drove by a huge, chaotic scene where emergency workers in hazmat suits were struggling with a giant pipe break, as raw sewage was pouring into the street. Of course all those workers up to their knees in a torrent of thick brown water were men! I've seen figures indicating that 92 per cent of people killed on the job are men—and it's precisely because men are heroically doing most of the dangerous jobs in modern society. The bourgeois blindness of feminist leaders to low-status working-class labor by men is morally corrupt!'

"What Men Need to Know During Their Divorce"

Matt · 15 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

An original piece by a MANN reader. About the author:

Tabitha Geller is a writer based in Dallas. She loves reading, writing, and skateboarding. She loves to learn new things especially when it's centered on law, technology, and medicine. Tabitha loves to share her learnings and experiences through writing.

Rebecca Solnit, Who Helped Popularize ‘Mansplaining,’ Is the Queen of Fakery

Mastodon · 16 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Rebecca Solnit, a writer, culture critic and activist with a long list of books and several literary awards, is indisputably one of the intellectual matriarchs of modern American feminism. Among other things, she gets much of the credit—or blame, if you prefer—for the now-ubiquitous term “mansplaining.”
...
Solnit’s new essay collection, The Mother of All Questions—already hailed as a shining light in the post-election Dark Ages—celebrates the feminist revival that she pinpoints as starting in 2014, with the #YesAllWomen campaign in response to Elliot Rodger’s shooting spree fueled by rage at female rejection. #NotAllWomen, however, are quite as excited by a feminism that treats a mentally ill man’s homicidal rampage as emblematic of male-female relations and compares men to a bowl of M&Ms in which some are poisoned (a metaphor decried as “dehumanizing” and “morally bankrupt” when it’s Skittles and Syrian refugees). In fact, Solnit’s book is a pretty good summation of what some of us have dubbed “fauxminism”: the gender warfare, the wallowing in victimhood, the fake facts. Oh, and one of the essays in it is quite literally based on a falsehood. More on that later.

Solnit paints a hellish picture of female life under modern-day American “patriarchy”: misogyny and “rape culture” are rampant; women face constant danger of “humiliation, harm, and maybe even death” because of their gender and are silenced by everyone from GamerGate nerds to wife-beaters. The only good men are feminist allies ashamed of the horrors perpetrated by their fellow males.'

Woman becomes man for 18 months, makes surprising discoveries

Matt · 18 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

This video tells the story. From 2016 but still very worth the watch. Description:

'Vincent's status as a woman is what makes her observations of male behavior fresh - introducing herself to some guys in a bowling league, she's touched by the ritual howyadoin', man-to-man handshake, which, "from the outside . . . had always seemed overdone to me," but from the inside strikes her as remarkably warm and inclusive, worlds away from the "fake and cold" air kisses and limp handshakes exchanged by women. But in its best moments, "Self-Made Man" transcends its premise altogether, offering not an undercover woman's take on male experience, but simply a fascinating, fly-on-the-wall look at various unglamorous male milieus that are well off the radar of most journalists and book authors.'

How Title IX Sexual Assault Injustice Operates

Mastodon · 19 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'In his Commentaries on the Laws of England, William Blackstone declared, "It is better that ten guilty persons escape, than that one innocent suffer." In an 1785 letter, Benjamin Franklin was even more exacting: "That it is better 100 guilty Persons should escape, than that one innocent Person should suffer, is a Maxim that has been long and generally approv'd, never that I know of controverted."

In 2011, the U.S. Department of Education took a different position.

That was the year the department's Office of Civil Rights sent a "dear colleague" letter reinterpreting Title IX of the Education Amendments Act of 1972. That section reads: "No person in the United States shall, on the basis of sex, be excluded from participation in, be denied the benefits of, or be subjected to discrimination under any education program or activity receiving Federal financial assistance." The OCR's letter declared that sexual assault is "a form of sex discrimination prohibited by Title IX." (Sexual violence is a great deal more than discrimination, of course, but set that aside for the moment.) Afraid of losing their federal funding, colleges then set about devising grievance procedures to address complaints of sexual harassment and sexual assault on their campuses.'

UK: False rape claim costs police nearly £20,000

Mastodon · 19 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. Excerpt:

'Chelsea Mackie told officers she had been dragged down a street and had clothing ripped before she was attacked.

However, months later she admitted she had invented the claim and confessed to ripping her own clothes as part of her ruse.

The 23-year-old appeared at Aberdeen Sheriff Court yesterday.

Fiscal depute Kelly Mitchell told the court Mackie had been out with her borther [sic] and boyfriend in the city's George Street on January 17, 2014, where they saw three men.

Mackie told her brother one of them had previously offered to sell her the date rape drug GHB, this led to a disturbance and police were called.

Officers spoke to Mackie and shortly after saw her walking behind the three men.

Mackie then turned up at a block of flats to see her mother-in-law.

Miss Mitchell said: "She heard her banging on the door, and heard the accused shouting 'I have just been raped'. She did not believe this to be true and ignored the accused who continued to shout and swear for five minutes."

Mackie then went outside and told a resident she had been attacked.

She claimed that one of the men had tried to rip her clothes off before raping her, while the other two men stood by.

Two of the men were cautioned, detained and interviewed, and denied raping Mackie.

It was also found there were no marks on Mackie's clothing – which did not match her description of being dragged.'

Scholars: ‘Infect’ White Men With The ‘Virus’ of Feminism

Mastodon · 19 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'It starts tamely enough. Someone talks passively about the wage gap over dinner. The next week, they retweet J.K. Rowling taking a stab at Piers Morgan. A few months later, suddenly, they’ve changed their major to gender studies and are talking about how men owe them money. The worst part? People around them start to suddenly do the same thing. Anyone who doesn’t is summarily cut out of their life, a relic from their past lives where they lived in ignorance.

If it sounds like succumbing to an illness, right down to the different stages, that’s the point. A 2016 paper that’s currently making the rounds on social media from the Multidisciplinary Journal of Gender Studies, titled “Women’s Studies as Virus: Institutional Feminism and the Projection of Danger,” hypothesizes that women’s and gender studies has an “infectious” structure marked by its ability to “infect, unsettle, and disrupt traditional and entrenched fields.”

Penned by Breanne Fahs and Michael Karger, the essay uses the metaphor of the virus as an “ideal” for feminist pedagogy, and investigates how both gender studies and the spread of actual viruses like HIV and Ebola “produce similar kinds of emotional responses in others.”

The paper looks at gender studies as an “infectious, insurrectional, and potentially dangerous field of study,” and goes on to suggest ideas on how to train male students on college campuses as viruses and reframe the negative stereotypes of feminist professors into positive ones to embrace.

Most of the paper consists of a straightforward retelling of the history of feminism and core feminist theory, highlighting the debates by academics on how to spread their ideology. It describes how gender studies programs were allowed to settle into corporate universities and regenerate themselves through the education of students who manipulate the academy to come under their control.

To counter the struggles feminists face in propagating the ideology, the ideas the authors propose are alarming.'

UK: Rape victims to be spared ordeal of cross-examination in court

Mastodon · 19 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'The victims' commissioner, Lady Newlove, welcomed the news that the government is to strengthen the support available to victims in the courtroom. "Prerecorded cross-examination allows vulnerable victims and witnesses to give evidence in a safe environment and I hope these long-awaited measures will provide the protection and reassurance they need to seek justice," she said.

However, some questioned whether the new measures would place the defendant in rape trials at an unfair disadvantage.

James Conte, who founded the website Accused.me.uk, a support group for victims of false allegations, said: "Whilst we would welcome measures that would increase the rape convictions of people who really have committed rape, if you are wholly innocent of someone trying to frame you, you will not welcome these changes because they will increase your chances of being wrongfully convicted."'

Feminist "Mansplaining" Video Goes Wrong

Mastodon · 20 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Video here. Description:

'This feminist sets out to prove that mansplaining is a serious issue- and accomplishes the opposite.'

Sexual-Harassment Claims Against a ‘She-E.O.’

Mastodon · 21 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Miki Agrawal, the co-founder of Thinx — a company that makes “period underwear” — doesn’t think much of boundaries. “I just love the taboo space,” she told New York last year, of her mission to (profitably) destigmatize menstruation. And in a promotional video for the product, she said, “My favorite thing to talk about are the things you’re not supposed to talk about.” According to a complaint filed late last week by a former employee (and echoed in interviews with multiple current and former employees), those things have included: the size and shape of her employees’ breasts, an employee’s nipple piercings, her own sexual exploits, her desire to experiment with polyamory, her interest in entering a sexual relationship with one of her employees, and the exact means by which she was brought to female ejaculation. Her alleged boundary-breaking in the workplace isn’t just verbal. Per the detailed complaint, filed with the City of New York Commission on Human Rights, Agrawal also touched an employee’s breasts and asked her to expose them, routinely changed clothes in front of employees, and conducted meetings via videoconference while in bed, apparently unclothed. (She also is said in the filing to have shared nude photos of herself and others — “including but not limited to her fiancé” — with staff.) At least once, she supposedly FaceTimed into a meeting from the toilet.

The complaint, brought by Chelsea Leibow, the 26-year-old former head of public relations at the company — whose distinctive Thinx PR emails acquired some renown — also describes a culture of fear and a pattern of ageism, in which members of the mostly female, mostly 20-something staff were routinely referred to as “children,” with the few employees in their 30s tagged “nannies.” The filing — which also names the company’s COO and CFO, for their failure to address repeated complaints about Agrawal’s behavior — comes on the heels, just over a week ago, of Agrawal’s leaving from her post as CEO (as first reported in Jezebel) and the publication of an article in Racked that made clear that, despite the company’s feminist branding and mission, the women who worked there felt exploited by low pay and substandard benefits. The complaint notes that the only two employees who had evidently successfully negotiated higher salaries were men. Per Racked, 10 of the company’s 35 employees have left since January (a Thinx spokesperson says the number is lower but declined to specify); several others departed either voluntarily or were fired last year by Agrawal, whom staffers described as erratic, retaliatory, and extraordinarily difficult to work for.'

India: Barber kills self over dowry case, blames in-laws in suicide note

Matt · 22 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Five days after an NRI committed suicide over a dowry death case filed against him, a 23-year-old barber hung himself to death on Sunday in Ghaziabad. In his suicide note, the deceased accused his in-laws of harassing him after filing a dowry case.

The man has been identified as Monu, a barber. He was a resident of Madhuban Bapudham housing society in Kavinagar. Police said Monu hung himself from a ceiling fan around 12.30pm on Sunday.

"Monu got married in July last year and was depressed as he had a strained relationship with his wife. The husband-wife duo often fought, and they had been living separately for months," said Hemant Kumar Rai, SHO, Kavinagar police station.'

American College of Trial Lawyers releases white paper on campus sex assault hearings

Matt · 23 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

White paper here. Excerpt:

'ACTL recognizes, and is deeply concerned by, the problem of sexual assaults on college campuses. ACTL believes in the importance of protecting all students from sexual misconduct and ensuring that they are provided an educational environment free of sexual harassment.

ACTL also believes that it is important to ensure that students investigated for, or charged with, sexual assault or misconduct violations be afforded basic fairness and due process.'

Death Rates Rise for Wide Swath of White Adults, Study Finds

Matt · 23 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. They are of course failing to point out it's really white men they are talking about. Excerpt:

'In 2015, two Princeton University economists published a landmark paper showing that mortality was rising for white middle-aged Americans after decades of decline, a startling development for an economically advanced nation.

Now a new analysis from the same pair, released Thursday by the Brookings Institution, paints an even bleaker picture of the nation's largest-population group.

Mortality has been rising since the turn of this century for an even broader swath of white adults, starting at age 25, the researchers found, driven by troubles in a hard-hit working class. Death rates for white non-Hispanics with a high-school education or less now exceed those of blacks overall, the pair said—and they're 30% higher for whites age 50 to 54 than for blacks overall of that age.'

12-Year-Old Booked For Impregnating A 17-Year-Old, Becomes The Youngest Father In India

Matt · 23 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Story here. In certain countries where Sharia is law, girls get stoned to death in essence for being rape victims. While he is at least nit being stoned to death, the idea is the same. Excerpt:

'India is swamped with the human crisis- rapes, molestation, child marriages, gender issues have become an everyday thing.

Recently, a 12-year old boy has been booked under the POCSO Act after a teenaged girl, who gave birth to a baby girl, claimed that he had impregnated her, police said on Monday.

Both the boy and the 17-year old girl are relatives and the case under the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act had been registered on the basis of a statement given by her, they said.

Police said they have decided to conduct a DNA test to verify the claim of the girl, who delivered the baby girl in a private hospital recently, that the boy is the father of the child. He would be prosecuted as per the Juvenile Justice Act.'

PH Cosmo: Why I No Longer Call Myself A Feminist

el cid · 24 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. This article was published in the Filipino edition of Cosmopolitan. It's long but definitely hits some nails on their heads. Excerpt:

'"Being a feminist doesn't mean the person hates men—it means the person is for gender equality!" So the line goes, which I've said countless times over the past few years as I called myself a feminist and believed that others—everyone—should too. But in the past year, it dawned on me how insidious feminism is and can be. Feminists mock boys or men, in spite of their saying they're not man-haters. They rally for their cause and ask others to do too, but they support it with false information.

It's easy to say that feminism has imperfections like any other movement does and leave it at that. I'd rather not.

My critique of the feminism many Internet users are exposed to will be divided into: 1) that feminists can be sexist, 2) that feminists today spread false information as they fight for "equality" in society, and 3) that feminism affects or neglects men and their rights. I'll get ahead of myself and say I don't approve of any of that because none of those help create a fair society. And if being a feminist today means doing any of those three, I'm out.'

Boy Positive Shirts

mens_issues · 25 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

From Dr. Helen at:

https://pjmedia.com/drhelen/2017/03/02/boy-positive-shirts/

'Imagine that instead of negative t-shirts that say "Boys Stink" or "Throw Rocks at Them," there were boy positive shirts that had kind messages. Here is a boy positive site selling shirts that say, "Strong Like Dad" or "Boys Rock." I normally don't like these message t-shirts but nowadays, who cares? It's better to send a good message to boys than sit back and let all the haters have their say.

Update: You can also get them on Amazon.com'

USA: TX Teen staged kidnapping, caused her own injuries

fathers4fairness · 25 March 2017 · Archived copy · Original

Article here. Excerpt:

'Police now believe a kidnapping and sexual assault case that rattled the small North Texas town of Denison earlier this month was a hoax.

Breana Harmon Talbott confessed to investigators Tuesday night and admitted she staged the attack. She also admitted the injuries to her body were self-inflicted, the Denison Police Department said.

Police say shortly after the 18-year-old turned up at a church cut and partially dressed, her story started to unravel. But not before it spun out of control on social media, sparking outrage and fear in the community.

The story made headlines after Talbott's then-fiancé, Sam Hollingsworth, reported her missing on March 8. He told FOX 4 he asked a neighbor to check on her and that neighbor found her keys and a shoe on the ground outside her apartment.

Hollingsworth says he is now moving on after the terrible betrayal. He said he and Talbott had an argument the day she turned up at the church about the couple moving after he joined the army but can't explain why she'd allegedly stage a rape.

"I was hurt. It was hard to take in whenever I found out about everything," he said. "Somebody that I actually trusted and was planning on spending the rest of my life with could do something like this to me and everybody else in this community."

Police got involved with the search. Dogs and officer were out searching until someone from a nearby church called to report that a woman had disrupted their service to ask for help. She was wearing only her shirt, bra and underwear.

"She was in bad shape. She was bleeding. They had to bring some sheets to cover her up and try to calm her down," said Saul Marquez, the pastor of the New Creation Church. "As a church, we're here for a reason. It's a good thing she found some refuge here."

According to police, Talbott's told witnesses at the church that she had been kidnapped and sexually assaulted in the woods behind the church. She told detectives three black males wearing ski masks had kidnapped her near her vehicle outside her apartment. She said they took her in a black SUV to a wooded area where one suspect held her down while the other two raped her.'

